I. INTRODUCTION

Faced with evaluating a settlement for an all-cash, no-reversion fund of $576,750,000, by all accounts the second-largest indirect purchaser settlement ever, it is tempting to wave a broad brush of approval over the terms and to humbly bless counsel's request for fees. Instead, the Special Master has required extensive briefing, conducted oral argument, and reviewed hundreds of pages of fee and expense billings. Faults were found, and these recommendations reflect both the features of this settlement to be applauded and those to be criticized.

Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs ("Plaintiffs" or "IPPs") in this matter are seeking an order approving class action settlements with the Phillips,[1] Panasonic,[2] Hitachi,[3] Toshiba,[4] Samsung SDI[5] and Thomson and TDA Defendants[6] (the "Settling Defendants") totaling $541,750,000 pursuant to Rule 23(e) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (the "Proposed Settlements"), which states:

> "(e) SETTLEMENT, VOLUNTARY DISMISSAL, OR COMPROMISE. The claims, issues, or defenses of a certified class may be settled, voluntarily dismissed, or compromised only with the court's approval. The following procedures apply to a proposed settlement, voluntary dismissal, or compromise: [*176]
> "(1) The court must direct notice in a reasonable manner to all class members who would be bound by the proposal.
> "(2) If the proposal would bind class members, the court may approve it only after a hearing and on finding that it is fair, reasonable, and adequate.
> "(3) The parties seeking approval must file a statement identifying any agreement made in connection with the proposal.
> "(4) If the class action was previously certified under Rule 23(b)(3), the court may refuse to approve a settlement unless it affords a new opportunity to request exclusion to individual class members who had an earlier opportunity to request exclusion but did not do so.
> "(5) Any class member may object to the proposal if it requires court approval under this subdivision (e); the objection may be withdrawn only with the court's approval."

Fed.R.Civ.P. Rule 23(e). Plaintiffs filed a Motion for Preliminary Approval of Class Action Settlement on May 29, 2015, which the Court granted on July 9, 2015.[7] Docket Nos. 3861, 3906. Specifically, the Court granted Plaintiffs' motion for preliminary approval of the settlement, it preliminarily certified the Settlement Class, it preliminarily found that the prerequisites to a class action under Rule 23 were satisfied, it preliminarily [*177] approved the plan of distribution, and it approved the form of notice. Plaintiffs then filed a Motion for Award of Attorneys' Fees, Reimbursement of Litigation Expenses, and Incentive Awards to Class Representatives on September 23, 2015. Docket No. 4071.

[2] The settling Panasonic entities include Panasonic Corporation (f/k/a Matsushita Electric Industrial Co., Ltd.), Panasonic Corporation of North America, and MT Picture Display Co., Ltd.

[3] The settling Hitachi entities include Hitachi, Ltd., Hitachi Asia, Ltd., Hitachi America, Ltd., Hitachi Electronic Devices (USA), Inc., and Hitachi Displays, Ltd. (n/k/a Japan Display Inc.).

[4] The settling Toshiba entities include Toshiba Corporation, Toshiba America, Inc., Toshiba America Information Systems, Inc., Toshiba America Consumer Products, L.L.C., and Toshiba America Electronic Components, Inc.

[5] The settling Samsung entities include Samsung [*178] SDI Co. Ltd., Samsung SDI America, Inc., Samsung SDI Brasil, Ltd., Tianjin Samsung SDI Co. Ltd., Shenzhen Samsung SDI Co., Ltd., SDI Malaysia Sdn. Bhd., and SDI Mexico S.A. de C.V.

[6] The settling Thomson and TDA entities include Technicolor SA (f/k/a Thomson SA) and Technicolor USA, Inc. (f/k/a Thomson Consumer Electronics, Inc.) and Technologies Displays Americas LLC (f/k/a Thomson Displays Americas LLC).

[7] This motion and court order did not include the Thomson and TDA settlement since that settlement was not entered into until June 10, 2015, after the motion for preliminary approval was filed.

If approved, these settlements will resolve all federal and state-law claims against the Settling Defendants of all indirect purchasers of CRTs in the United States during the period March 1, 1995 through November 25, 2007. These claims stem from an alleged conspiracy to fix prices for CRT products indirectly purchased from Defendants. CRT products are defined in the Settlement Agreements to mean cathode ray tubes of any type, (i.e., color display tubes, color picture tubes and monochrome display tubes) and products containing cathode ray tubes. A CRT is a display technology used in televisions, [*179] computer monitors and other specialized applications. Color display tubes ("CDTs") were used to manufacture computer monitors while color picture tubes ("CPTs") were used to manufacture televisions.

The Proposed Settlements are contingent upon the certification by the Court of a Settlement Class, which, as proposed by Plaintiffs, includes a "Nationwide Class" of indirect purchasers of CRT products and "Statewide Damages Classes" of indirect purchasers of CRT products seeking money damages under the laws of 21 states and the District of Columbia (collectively the "Settlement Class"). Approval of the Proposed Settlements also involves approval of the IPPs plan of allocation.

II. REFERENCE TO THE SPECIAL MASTER

On September 24, 2015, the Court, pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 53, appointed the Special Master "to supervise and preside over all 'designated post-trial matters,'" including "assisting the Court with the approval of the pending settlements in the Indirect-Purchaser Cases, the determination of a fair, reasonable, and adequate aggregate award of attorneys' fees and the reimbursement of expenses to all plaintiffs' counsel, a fair and reasonable division of the aggregate award among plaintiffs' counsel, [*180] and service awards to the named plaintiffs, including any objections to these matters, and dealing with any other matters that the Court may direct him to undertake." Order Appointing Special Master, pp. 2, 3 (Docket No. 4077) ["Appointment Order"]. In the Appointment Order, the Court provided the Special Master with the following authority under Rule 53(c): setting "the date, time and place for all hearings, [] presid[ing] over hearings (whether telephonic or in-person), [] tak[ing] evidence, [] conduct[ing] telephonic conferences to resolve disputes arising during depositions, [] recommend[ing] contempt sanctions to the Court, and [] issu[ing] orders awarding non-contempt sanctions, including, without limitation, the award of attorneys' fees, as provided by Rules 37 and 45." Id., p.5. The Court also ordered that the Special Master "file any written orders, findings, and/or recommendations with the Court via the Court's Electronic Case Filing ('ECF'), and that such filing "shall fulfill the Special Master's duty to serve his orders on the parties." Id., p.6.

III. SUMMARY OF CONCLUSIONS

1. The Court should approve certification of the settlement class.
2. The compensation to the class is fair, reasonable and adequate.

3. The Plan of Allocation is fair, reasonable and adequate [*181] as to class members in the Statewide Damages Classes.
4. The Plan of Allocation is fair, reasonable and adequate as to class members in the Nationwide Class from non-repealer states even though they receive no monetary compensation.
5. The Plan of Allocation is fair, reasonable and adequate as to class members in the Nationwide Class from the three omitted repealer states (Massachusetts, Missouri and New Hampshire) even though they receive no monetary compensation.

6. The Plan of Allocation is not fair, reasonable and adequate insofar as it fails to address satisfaction of the terms of the Chunghwa settlement. Lead Counsel is directed to submit a plan that addresses how to correct the identified due process problem, what, if any, additional notice may be required, and a timeline for the Court to address this problem.
7. Notice to the class was reasonable, appropriate under the circumstances, and met due process standards.

8. All objections other than those with respect to the treatment of the Chunghwa settlement are overruled.

9. Attorneys' fees should be awarded to IPP counsel in the amount of $173,250,000, which is equal to 30% of the settlement fund. Class counsel's lodestars should be [*182] computed at current billing rates which total $90,075,076.90. Their lodestars should be reduced by 10% across-the-board to account for inefficiencies and work that did not benefit the class, which results in an adjusted lodestar of $81,067,569. The resulting lodestar multiplier is just under 2.14.

10. The request for approval of litigation expenses in the amount of $7,634,372.50 should be approved.

11. Incentive awards should be approved in the amounts of $15,000 for the 25 court-approved Class Representatives and $5,000 for an additional 15 persons who were not approved by the court but acted as state representatives for a period of time.

IV. FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL HISTORY[8]

A. Litigation History

Plaintiffs filed their original complaints in various federal courts throughout the country in late 2007 and early 2008. The Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation transferred all related indirect purchaser actions to the Northern District of California, where they were consolidated with similar class actions by direct purchaser plaintiffs. On [*183] May 9, 2008 the Court appointed Mario N. Alioto of Trump, Alioto, Trump & Prescott, LLP as Interim Lead Counsel. Docket No. 47.

The United States Department of Justice ("DOJ") intervened early in the case and requested a stay of all merits discovery pending its criminal investigation. The parties negotiated a Stipulated Order with the DOJ that provided for a stay of all merits discovery until September 12, 2009. Docket No. 379. Pursuant to the DOJ's requests, this stay was extended on several occasions. Docket Nos. 425, 590, 798.

Plaintiffs filed their consolidated amended complaint on March 16, 2009. Docket No. 437. The Defendants filed motions to dismiss that were denied in part and granted in part, with leave to amend certain state law claims. Docket No. 665. On May 10, 2010, Plaintiffs filed their Second Consolidated Amended Complaint. Docket No. 716. Defendants filed a joint motion to dismiss on various state-law grounds that was denied in part and granted in part, with leave to amend certain state law claims. Docket No. 799. On December 11 , 2010, Plaintiffs filed their Third Consolidated Amended Complaint. Docket No. 827. Defendants answered Plaintiffs' complaint on January 26, [*184] 2011. Plaintiffs filed their Fourth Consolidated Amended Complaint on January 10, 2013. Docket No. 1526.

On April 20, 2011, Defendants and Plaintiffs filed a stipulation providing that Plaintiffs would withdraw the finished-CRT-products-conspiracy allegations from their complaint. Docket No. 895. The Court entered an order to that effect on April 22, 2011. Docket No. 904.

The DOJ's stay of merits discovery was partially lifted on March 8, 2010 and Defendants began their rolling production of documents. Most of the Defendant groups comprise multiple entities located around the world. Because many of the Defendants are no longer involved in the CRT business, Plaintiffs traveled to several storage facilities both in the United States and abroad to manually search Defendants' paper records for relevant documents and employed technical experts to restore backup tapes and servers containing relevant information. Plaintiffs also subpoenaed documents and data from the U.S. and Dutch bankruptcy trustees of a former manufacturer of CRTs — LG Philips Displays. In addition, Plaintiffs subpoenaed and negotiated productions of documents and data from over 50 third party retailers, distributors and [*185] CRT television and monitor manufacturers. (Alioto Decl. dtd. 5/29/15 in Support of Motion for Preliminary Approval of Settlements, ¶ 11, Docket No. 3862) ["Alioto Decl. I"]

[8] The following factual and procedural recitation is relevant to the discussion of both approval of the settlement and the request for fees and expenses.

In response to discovery requests, Defendants produced millions of documents and voluminous data sets. These were loaded into a web-based electronic database and reviewed and analyzed by a team of over 50 attorneys, including attorneys fluent in Korean, Chinese, Japanese and Dutch. In order to use these foreign language documents in the litigation, Plaintiffs obtained certified translations and addressed Defendants' objections to the certified translations. Plaintiffs also retained economists to review and analyze the documents and data and prepare expert reports in support of class certification, liability and damages. Alioto Decl. I, ¶ 12.

Plaintiffs filed their motion for class certification, along with the Declaration of Janet S. Netz, Ph.D., on October 1, 2012. Docket No. 1388. The Special Master held a hearing on the motion and recommended that the Court grant Plaintiffs' motion for class certification and deny Defendants' motion to strike Dr. Netz' expert report. Docket Nos. 1742, 1743. On September 24, 2013, [*186] the Honorable Samuel Conti adopted the Special Master's Reports and Recommendations and certified 22 state-wide classes of indirect purchasers of CRTs. Docket No. 1950. The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals denied the Defendants' petition to appeal the District Court's order. Docket No. 2283.

Merits depositions began in December, 2012. Each of the 24 class representatives was deposed by Defendants, and Plaintiffs took over 30 depositions of Defendants under F.R.C.P. 30(b)(6) as well as over 70 merits depositions of defense witnesses. Several of these depositions took place in Taiwan, Korea, Mexico and England. There have also been numerous other depositions of expert witnesses, third party resellers of finished products containing CRTs and witnesses for the Direct Action Plaintiffs ("DAPs").[9] Dr. Netz, Plaintiffs' expert economist, was deposed five times during the course of the litigation. Alioto Decl. I, ¶ 15.

Plaintiffs [*187] thereafter began preparing for trial, which was originally scheduled to begin on March 9, 2015.[10] The parties exchanged expert reports on liability and damages starting in April, 2014 and continuing through September, 2014. These included opening, opposition, rebuttal and sur-rebuttal reports from 17 expert witnesses, all of whom were deposed, some multiple times, regarding their reports. Merits discovery closed on September 5, 2014 but some discovery continued after that cut-off date.

On November 7, 2014, the Defendants filed 36 motions for summary judgment. Eleven of those were directed specifically at Plaintiffs' claims. These motions were fully briefed before the Proposed Settlements were executed. The motions have been withdrawn in light of the Settlements.

The parties then also exchanged trial exhibit lists, witness lists, deposition designations, jury instructions and special verdict forms. They also filed 64 motions in limine and other pretrial motions. These motions were briefed in varying degrees before the Proposed Settlements were executed. Pursuant to the Proposed Settlements, the Settling Defendants [*188] have provisionally withdrawn all of the motions pending against Plaintiffs. Docket Nos. 3801, 3802, 3812, 3851, 3852. Alioto Decl. I, ¶ 16-19.

B. Department of Justice Activity

The purported underlying global conspiracy that formed the basis of the Proposed Settlements was investigated by the Antitrust Division of the United States Department of Justice ("DOJ"). On February 10, 2009, a federal grand jury in San Francisco issued a two-count indictment against C.Y. Lin, the former Chairman and CEO of Defendant Chunghwa Picture Tubes, Ltd., for his participation in a global conspiracy to fix the prices of CRTs used in computer monitors and televisions. That was the first indictment to be issued in the DOJ's investigation into the CRT industry.

The Department of Justice also entered into a criminal plea agreement with Samsung SDI that resulted in a $32 million criminal fine. This agreement encompassed only one type of CRT, however (CDTs for monitors), that was sold to four U.S. customers during a portion of the alleged class period.

[9] The DAPs are another group of plaintiffs in this case that purchased CRT Products directly from defendants. They include computer and television manufacturers such as Dell and Sharp and retailers such as Target, Best Buy and Costco. The DAPs joined this litigation between 2011 and 2014.

C. Other Regulatory Action

A multinational investigation into defendants' purported price fixing also commenced in November 2007. For example, on November 8, 2007, [*189] antitrust authorities in Europe, Japan and South Korea raided the offices of manufacturers of CRTs as part of an international investigation of alleged price fixing. And MT Picture Display Co., Ltd., the CRT unit of Defendant Panasonic, was raided by Japan's Fair Trade Commission in November, 2007. Defendant Samsung SDI Co., Ltd. was also raided by South Korea's Fair Trade Commission, which started an investigation into Samsung's CRT business. On November 21, 2007, Defendant Royal Philips publicly disclosed that it too was subject to one or more investigations into anticompetitive conduct in the CRT industry.

In its 2008 Annual Report, Defendant Toshiba reported that "[t]he Group is also being investigated by the [European] Commission and/or the U.S. Department of Justice for potential violations of competition laws with respect to semiconductors, LCD products, cathode ray tubes (CRT) and heavy electrical equipment." And on May 6, 2008, the Hungarian Competition Authority ("HCA") announced its own investigation into the purported CRT cartel.

On October 19, 2013, the European Commission issued findings in a Summary Decision pertaining to its CRT price fixing investigations. These findings [*190] were made available to the public on December 23, 2014.

D. Settlement Activity

Throughout the litigation, the parties engaged in settlement negotiations. On April 18, 2011, Plaintiffs entered into a settlement with Chunghwa Picture Tubes, Ltd. for $10,000,000 cash. The Court granted Preliminary Approval of this settlement on August 9, 2011 and Final Approval on March 22, 2012. Docket Nos. 992, 1105. Pursuant to this settlement's terms, Chunghwa's counsel provided IPP Counsel with information regarding the conspiracy during a series of in-person meetings in February, 2009. Alioto Decl. dtd. 9/23/15, Docket No. 4071-1, ¶ 101 ["Alioto Decl. II"]

On May 18, 2013, Plaintiffs entered into a settlement with LG Electronics, Inc. and LG Electronics USA, Inc. for $25,000,000 cash. The Court granted Preliminary Approval of this settlement on December 9, 2013 and Final Approval on April 18, 2014. Docket Nos. 2248, 2542. Pursuant to this settlement, LG's counsel provided IPP Counsel with an oral proffer of evidence. In addition, IPP counsel interviewed two cooperating LG witnesses. Alioto Decl. II, ¶ 105.

Plaintiffs then entered into settlements with additional Settling Defendants as follows: Phillips [*191] on January 26, 2015 for $175,000,000, Panasonic on January 28, 2015 for $70,000,000, Hitachi on February 19, 2015 for $28,000,000, Toshiba on March 6, 2015 for $30,000,000, Samsung SDI on April 1, 2015 for $225,000,000, and Thomson and TOA on June 10, 2015 for $13,750,000. The specific terms of each of these settlements will be discussed in more detail below.

These settlements were reached in a year of negotiations commencing in early 2014. Two skilled mediators assisted the parties - the Honorable Vaughn Walker (Ret.) and the Honorable Fem Smith (Ret.). The total Settlement Fund recovered on behalf of the IPP class members is $576,750,000 plus accrued interest. There are no coupons or vouchers and there will be no reversion or refund to any defendant under any circumstances. In addition, no cy pres distribution is contemplated. Alioto Decl. II, ¶ 107-112.

IPPs filed their motions for preliminary approval of the Proposed Settlements on May 29, 2015. Docket No. 3861. The Court granted preliminary approval on July 9, 2015. Docket No. 3906.

Notice was thereafter published in accordance with the Preliminary Approval Order, which consisted of the following actions:

Direct mailed/emailed notice [*192] to more than ten million unique addresses;
Publication notice in magazines and newspapers;
Digital notice via paid advertisements on Google, Facebook, and other popular websites;

English and Spanish press releases carried by almost 300 domestic and foreign websites;
Notice to the Attorney General of the United States and the Attorneys General of all 50 states;
Publication on the CRT settlement website. Alioto Decl. I, ¶ 38-42, Exh. F & G.

E. Procedures Before the Special Master

As noted, supra, the Special Master was appointed on September 24, 2015. Thereafter, multiple iterations of scheduling orders were set forth, but the following schedule for filing motions, objections, responses thereto, the Special Master's Report and Recommendation, and other pleadings was ultimately stipulated to and approved:

(1) October 6, 2015: all objections to Proposed Settlements and attorneys' fees to be submitted to the Court
(2) November 20, 2015:[11] submission of all briefs in opposition to the objections
(3) December 9, 2015: submission of all Objectors' reply briefs to opposition[12]
(4) December 22, 2015: submission of Lead Counsel's response to Objectors' reply briefs[13]

(5) December 29, 2015: submission of Lead Counsel's [*193] response to California Attorney General's Supplemental Statement of Interest
(6) January 4, 2016: submission of California Attorney General's reply to Lead Counsel's response to Supplemental Statement of Interest
(7) January 5, 2016 at 10:00 a.m.: oral argument before Special Master at the San Francisco office of JAMS
(8) January 13, 2016 at 12:00 p.m.: submission of briefs pertaining to issues concerning the Chunghwa settlement and other issues raised at and after the January 5, 2016 hearing
(9) January 29, 2016: deadline for the Special Master to file Report & Recommendation
(10) February 12, 2016: deadline for objections to Report & Recommendation
(11) February 23, 2016: Deadline for oppositions to objections
(12) March 15, 2016: hearing on final approval of settlement and aggregate attorneys' fees/costs and incentive awards.[14]

Eleven objections were filed with regard to the Proposed Settlements and attorneys' fees as was one supplemental objection. Docket Nos. 4099, 4101/4125, 4106, 4111, 4112, 4113, 4115/4116, 4119, 4120, 4128, and 4144.[15] Two objectors later moved to withdraw their objections. Docket Nos. 4130, 4165.[16]

[11] On November 18, 2015, the Court issued an order reminding the parties that, pursuant to the Court's previous order at page 6 of Docket No. 4077, "motions and other papers directed to the attention of the Special Master are to be served on him but not, in the first instance, to be filed with the Court." Docket No. 4195. Following that Order, the Special Master arranged [*194] for all communications, other than routine e-mails about ministerial matters, to be filed with him using the JAMS Electronic Filing System called "Case Anywhere." Docket No. 4201.

[12] On December 11, 2015, objectors Josef Cooper and Francis Scarpulla filed a motion with the Court asking to be appointed Co-Lead Counsel in this case to represent all consumers with claims in the "non-repealer" states. Docket No. 4241. At the January 5, 2016 hearing, when asked about this motion and whether it could render the Special Master's Report and Recommendation moot if granted, Messrs. Cooper and Scarpulla represented that this should not be the case since, if their request is granted, they envisioned only making the same arguments that they have made here in the context of their objections but now they would merely be making those arguments in their new capacity. The Court is scheduled to hear this motion on February 18, 2016.

[13] Reply briefs from Lead Counsel were not considered in the Court's original scheduling order. See Docket No. 4185. However, Lead Counsel requested the opportunity to file a reply briefs on December 13, 2015 because the Objectors' reply briefs had gone "far beyond replying to the [*195] IPP's initial submissions and raise[d] a number of new matters." The Special Master granted Lead Counsel's request on December 14, 2015, permitting Lead Counsel to file responsive briefs, not to exceed 20 pages, by December 23, 2015. In that order, the Special Master delineated the five specific issues that Lead Counsel could address in his responsive briefing. On December 14, 2015, Mr. Scarpulla requested that he be allowed to file a sur-reply if Lead Counsel were to be permitted to submit further reply briefs. The Special Master denied Mr. Scarpulla's request.

[14] The Special Master reserved jurisdiction on the issue of allocation of attorneys' fees to decide after the Court issues its final award on approval of the settlement and attorneys' fees/costs and incentive awards.

On November 20, 2015, IPPs submitted two briefs: (1) IPP's Motion for Final Approval of Settlements; and (2) IPP's Reply Re: Motion for Award of Attorneys' Fees, Reimbursement of Litigation Expenses and Incentive Awards to Class Representatives, in which Counsel for the IPPs seeks to reduce the Proposed Settlements by $192,250,000 for payment of attorneys' fees, $7,670,525.57 for payment of litigation expenses, and $450,000 for payment of incentive awards to the Class Representatives and additional named plaintiffs. No cy pres payments are contemplated in the Proposed Settlements. Each of these briefs was accompanied by various declarations and exhibits.

Multiple reply briefs were filed by the Objectors on December 9, 2015 as was a Supplemental Statement of Interest by the California Attorney General seeking to, inter alia, move the deadline for filing claims in IPP settlement from [*197] December 7, 2015 to June 30, 2016. One late reply brief was filed on December 15, 2015, but the Special Master denied this objector's motion for leave to file this late reply. Docket No. 4263, affirmed by the Court at Docket No. 4274. As noted, supra, because some of the replies raised new issues that were not raised in the previously-filed objections, the Special Master permitted Lead Counsel to file a responsive brief on December 23, 2015 pertaining to the following five specific issues: (1) the release without compensation of class members in certain states (section II of the Cooper/Scarpulla brief)[17]; (2) issues relating to the Chungwa settlement (section III of the Cooper/Scarpulla brief, and section B.2 of the St. John brief); (3) alleged defects in notice (section IV in the Cooper/Scarpulla brief); (4) the disproportionate size of the Samsung and Phillips settlements (section C of the St. John brief); and (5) the failure to pursue claims of class members in Massachusetts and Missouri (section II.C of the Moore brief). Lead Counsel was also permitted to respond to the California Attorney General's Supplemental Statement of Interest on December 29, 2015. On January 4, 2016, the [*198] Attorney General filed a Reply and a supporting supplemental declaration.

On January 5, 2016, the Special Master heard oral argument on the pending motions and objections. At that argument, several new issues were raised and various issues were complicated by new and additional argument. The Special Master therefore requested that Lead Counsel and some of the objectors make certain submissions in order to supplement the record.

All proceedings before the Special Master have been filed on Case Anywhere, the JAMS e-filing program, in accordance with the Court's order, with a few inadvertent immaterial exceptions and routine e-mails about scheduling and other ministerial matters. The Special Master's orders have also been filed on the Court's ECF system. The Special Master has had conversations with Lead Counsel, the California Attorney General's counsel

[15] One Supplemental Objection was filed at Docket 4144 by the same objectors who filed an objection at Docket 4119.

[16] One objection, by Objector [*196] Johnson (Docket No. 4128), was received on 10/16/15 after the 10/9/15 deadline. The Special Master has considered it notwithstanding the late filing. The objection of Saik (Docket No. 4140) was filed late, on 10/24/15, but admissible evidence confirmed that it was delivered to the Clerk's office on 10/9/15.

[17] Lead Counsel contends that Messrs. Scarpulla and Cooper lack standing to object to the Proposed Settlements since they are not members of the class and they are bringing the objections on behalf of the IPPs as a whole rather than on behalf of an individual class member client. Messrs. Scarpulla and Cooper contend that as class counsel they have standing in light of their fiduciary duty to act in the best interests of the class. *See In re TracFone Unlimited Serv. Plan. Litig., 112 F. Supp. 3d 993, 2015 WL 4051882, at * 11 (N.D.Cal. July 2, 2015)* (objector has no legal standing to object to a settlement unless he can demonstrate that he is an aggrieved class member); but see Staton v. Boeing Co., 327 F.3d 938, 960 (9th Cir. 2003) ("class counsel ultimately owe their fiduciary responsibility to the class as a I whole and are therefore not bound by the views of the named plaintiffs regarding any settlement"). The Special Master concludes that the proper approach is to consider the arguments set forth in their briefs in furtherance of the Court's fiduciary duty to the class to assure that the settlement is fair. See Rodriguez v. Disner, 688 F.3d 645, 656 (9th Cir. 2012); In re Pet Food Products Liab. Litig. 629 F.3d 333, 349 (3d Cir. 2010) ["trial judges bear the important responsibility of protecting absent class members," and must be "assur[ed] that the settlement represents adequate compensation for the release [*199] of the class claims."]; Ehrheart v. Verizon Wireless, 609 F.3d 590, 593 (3d Cir. 2010) [stressing that "[t]he purpose of Rule 23(e) is to protect the unnamed members of the class," and that a "district court acts as a fiduciary" for absent class members].

and certain objector counsel concerning such issues as scheduling, procedures, and supplying material for the Special Master's review.

v. TERMS OF SETTLEMENT AGREEMENTS

The Proposed Settlements resolve all federal and state-law claims [*200] brought by Plaintiffs against the Settling Defendants stemming from the Settling Defendants' alleged conspiracy to fix prices for CRT Products indirectly purchased from them. The Proposed Settlements would obligate the Settling Defendants to pay a total of $541,750,000. If approved, these six Proposed Settlements — along with the two previously-approved settlements— would result in the Defendants making total settlement payments of $576,750,000 to indirect purchasers of CRTs.[18] Most of the Proposed Settlements also contain cooperation provisions. These provisions would require Settling Defendants to provided specified cooperation to IPPs in the prosecution of any continuing litigation.

The Proposed Settlements are contingent upon the certification by the Court of a Settlement Class, which, as proposed by Plaintiffs, includes a "Nationwide Class" of indirect purchasers of CRT Products and "Statewide Damages Classes" of indirect purchasers of CRT Products seeking [*201] money damages under the laws of 21 states and the District of Columbia (collectively the "Settlement Class").

Specifically, the Proposed Settlements defines the Settlement Classes as follows:[19]

> NATIONWIDE CLASS
> All persons and or entities who or which indirectly purchased in the United States for their own use and not for resale, CRT Products manufactured and/or sold by the Defendants, or any subsidiary, affiliate, or alleged co-conspirator thereof, at any time during the period from March 1, 1995 through November 25, 2007. Specifically excluded from this Class are claims on behalf of Illinois persons (as defined by 740 ILCS 10/4) for purposes of claims under 740 Ill. Comp. Stat§ 10/7(2), Oregon natural persons (as defined by ORS 646.705 (2)) for purposes of claims under ORS § 646.775(1), and Washington persons (as defined by RCW 19.86.080) for purposes of claims under RCW 19.86.080 (1). Also specifically excluded from this Class are the Defendants; the officers, directors or employees of any Defendant; any entity in which any Defendant has a controlling interest; and, any affiliate, legal representative, heir or assign of any Defendant. Also excluded are named co-conspirators, any federal, state or local government entities, any judicial officer presiding over this action and the members [*202] of his/her immediate family and judicial staff, and any juror assigned to this action.[20]
> INDIRECT PURCHASER STATE CLASSES:[21]
> All persons and or entities in Arizona, California, District of Columbia, Florida, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, South Dakota, Tennessee, [18] The Settlement Amounts have been deposited into an escrow account and invested. If the Settlements are finally approved, any interested earned thereon (together with the Settlement Amounts) will become part of the Settlement Fund.

[19] It should be noted that the Proposed Settlement Class is identical to the class preliminarily approved by the Court with respect to the settlements at issue here (Docket No. 3906) as well as the Settlement Class finally approved by the Court in conjunction with IPP's settlement with LG (Docket No. 2542). The LG Court-approved settlement also involved an identical release of all claims nationwide.

[20] Residents of [*204] Illinois, Oregon and Washington are excluded from the Nationwide Class because the Attorneys General of those states are suing the Defendants on behalf of residents of those states.

[21] All of the Indirect Purchaser State Classes are the same except that three states — Hawaii, Nebraska and Nevada — have slightly shorter damages periods because the statutes allowing indirect purchasers to bring an antitrust claim for damages in these three states were enacted after March 1, 1995, the beginning of the alleged Class Period. The Court dismissed claims based on purchases made prior to the enactment of these statutes on the grounds that the state legislatures did not intend the statutes to apply retroactively. See In Re: Cathode Ray Tube (CRT) Antitrust Litig., 738 F.Supp.2d 1011, 1025-26 (N.D.Cal. 2010).

> Vermont, West Virginia, and Wisconsin who or which indirectly purchased for their own use and not for resale, CRT Products manufactured and/or sold by the Defendants, or any subsidiary, affiliate, or alleged co-conspirator thereof, at any time during the period from March 1, 1995 through November 25, 2007.
> All persons and entities in Hawaii who or which indirectly purchased for their own use and not for resale CRT Products manufactured and/or sold by the Defendants, or any subsidiary, affiliate, or alleged co-conspirator thereof, at any time from June 25, 2002 through November 25, 2007.
> All persons and entities in Nebraska who or which indirectly purchased for their own use and not for resale CRT Products manufactured and/or sold by the Defendants, or any subsidiary, affiliate, or alleged co-conspirator thereof, at any time from July 20, 2002 through November [*203] 25, 2007.
> All persons and entities in Nevada who or which indirectly purchased for their own use and not for resale CRT Products manufactured and/or sold by the Defendants, or any subsidiary, affiliate, or alleged co-conspirator thereof, at any time from February 4, 1999 through November 25, 2007.
> Specifically excluded from these Classes are the Defendants; the officers, directors or employees of any Defendant; any entity in which any Defendant has a controlling interest; and, any affiliate, legal representative, heir or assign of any Defendant. Also excluded are named co-conspirators, any federal, state or local government entities, any judicial officer presiding over this action and the members of his/her immediate family and judicial staff, and any juror assigned to this action.[22]

Plaintiffs propose to compensate members of the Indirect Purchaser State Class from the $541,750,000 Settlement Fund according to the proposed plan of distribution under which qualifying claimants are eligible to receive a distribution from the Settlement Fund based on the number and type of CRT Products purchased, as documented in the proposed claim form. In exchange for this compensation under the Proposed Settlements, IPPs agreed to the following global release:

> "Any and all claims, demands, judgments, actions, suits, causes of action, whether class, individual, or otherwise (whether or not any Class Member has objected to the settlement or makes a claim upon or participates in the Settlement Fund, whether directly, representatively, derivatively, or in any other capacity) that Releasors, or each of them, ever had, now has, or hereafter can, shall, [*206] or may have on account of, or in any way arising out of, any and all known and unknown, foreseen and unforeseen, suspected or unsuspected injuries, damages, and consequences thereof in any way arising out of or relating in any way to any act or omission of the Panasonic Releases (or any of them) or any other entity concerning the manufacture, supply, distribution, sale or pricing of CRT Products up to the date of execution of this Agreement, including but not limited to any conduct alleged, and causes of action asserted or that could have been alleged or asserted, in complaints filed in this Action, including those arising under any federal, state, or foreign antitrust, unfair competition, unfair practices, price discrimination, unitary pricing, unjust enrichment, contract, or trade practice law (the "Released Claims")."

Thus, IPPs and class members will release all federal and state-law claims against a Settling Defendant whose settlement becomes final, "concerning the manufacture, supply, distribution, sales or pricing of CRT Products...", although the release does not include claims for product defect, personal injury or breach of contract. Class members release their claims for [*207] injunctive relief through the Execution Dates of the Proposed Settlements Agreements only. And as will be discussed in more detail, members of the Nationwide Class who are not also members of any Statewide Damages Class will not receive any monetary compensation.

[22] It should be noted that the Court has already certified 22 indirect purchaser state classes which are defined similarly to the Indirect Purchaser State Classes proposed here (Docket Nos. 1742 and 1950). The Settlement Class proposed here is different in that the Class that was already certified: (1) requires that the Indirect Purchaser State Class Members be residents of the respective States, whereas here, the Settlement Class requires only that the purchase was made in one of [*205] the States; (2) is limited to televisions and monitors containing CRTs, whereas the Settlement Class here includes CRTs, televisions and monitors containing CRT and other products containing CRTs; and (3) consists of the Indirect Purchaser State Classes defined above, whereas the Settlement Class here also includes the Nationwide Class.

Plaintiffs also propose that notice to Class members would be accomplished by a notice program designed by Joseph Fisher ("Fisher") of The Notice Company. The notice program includes direct mail and e-mail notice to millions of corporations and individual consumers, as well as published notice in newspapers, magazines and online. The notice also directs interested persons to the website, www.CRTclaims.com, where they can find additional detailed information. See, infra at VIIC, for detailed description of Notice Program.

VI. CERTIFICATION OF SETTLEMENT CLASS

Before deciding whether the Proposed Settlements should be approved, the Court must first decide whether to finally certify the Settlement Classes. In order to certify a class, the proposed class and proposed class representatives must meet the four prerequisites listed in Rule 23(a) — numerosity, commonality, typicality and adequacy of representation. They must also meet one of the [*208] three requirements set forth in Rule 23(b).

There is a key difference in this Rule 23 evaluation when certifying a class for the purpose of litigating claims and when certifying a class for purposes of settlement, as is the case here. As was pointed out in the Report and Recommendation in In re Dynamic Random Access Memory (DRAM) Antitrust Litigation, Master File No. M-02-1486-PJH (MDL No. 148), DRAM Docket No. 2132, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 188116 (N.D.Cal. January 8, 2013):[23]

> Because of the pivotal role and ensuing consequences of the class certification decision, trial courts must conduct a "rigorous analysis" of Rule 23 's prerequisites. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Dukes, 564 U.S. 338, 131 S.Ct. 2541, 2551-52, 180 L.Ed.2d 374 (2011); In re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litig., 552 F.3d 305, 315-21 (3d Cir. 2008); In re Initial Pub. Offering Sec. Litig., 471 F.3d 24, 31-42 (2d Cir. 2006). The same analytical rigor is required for litigation and settlement certification, but some inquiries essential to litigation class certification are no longer problematic in the settlement context. A key question in a litigation class action is manageability—how the case will or can be tried, and whether there are questions of fact or law that are capable of common proof. But the settlement class presents no management problems because the case will not be tried. Conversely, other inquiries assume heightened importance and heightened scrutiny because of the danger of conflicts of interest, collusion, [*209] and unfair allocation. See Amchem, 521 U.S. at 620, 117 S.Ct. 2231 ("[O]ther specifications of the Rule [23]—those designed to protect absentees by blocking unwarranted or overbroad class definitions—demand undiluted, even heightened, attention in the settlement context.").

Id. at p.59 (quoting Sullivan v. DB Investments, Inc., 667 F.3d 273, 334-35 (3d Cir. 2011).

None of the objectors, except Donnie Clifton, (Docket No. 4099, pp.5-7), directly challenges the first three prerequisites set forth in Rule 23(a). Indeed, there is really no legal basis for such a challenge since (1) it is undisputed that millions of people in the United States purchased CRT Products during the class period; thus, the Class readily satisfies the numerosity requirements of Rule 23; (2) there are undeniably questions of law and fact common to the Class, including whether the Defendants engaged in a price-fixing conspiracy that injured Plaintiffs when they paid more for CRT Products than they would have absent the alleged price-fixing conspiracy; thus, the commonality prong of Rule 23(a) has been satisfied; and [*210] (3) it is clear that the claims of the representative Plaintiffs are typical of the claims of the class members because they all indirectly purchased CRT Products at supra-competitive levels as a result of the alleged price-fixing conspiracy during the relevant time period. In fact, the Special Master has already found as much in his previous Report and Recommendation to the Court on class certification, which involved classes similar in composition to the Settlement Class, and the Court subsequently adopted that Report on Recommendation on September 19, 2013. See Class R&R, pp. 15-17, 19, Docket No. 1742; see also Docket No. 1950 (Order adopting Class R&R).

[23] Neither the Report & Recommendation in DRAM nor the Court's approval of that Report & Recommendation can be found on Westlaw. The Special Master will therefore cite directly from the docket version of this document throughout this Report & Recommendation.

Some objectors have directly challenged the fourth prong of Rule 23(e) — adequacy of the representation. These objectors are not arguing that there was any collusion in reaching the Proposed Settlement, but, for example, in their objections, Rockhurst University, Gary Talewsky, and Harry Garavanian contend that Class Counsel "failed to adequately represent the Nationwide Class's interests in securing any value for the release of their claims, and in fact seems to have had a conflict with multiple states, or with at least the Massachusetts [*211] and Missouri classes." Docket No. 4113, p.7. Laura Townsend Fortman and John Finn also argued in their objections that there is a conflict of interest between Lead Counsel and the Nationwide Class because Lead Counsel settled claims on behalf of the damages states but then agreed to a broad release of the claims of class members in non-damage states who receive no consideration. (Docket No. 4111); see also Clifton Reply to Opposition to Objections, p.2 ("class counsel abandoned all efforts to represent them [all class members] in the settlement negotiations").

While these objections will be addressed in more detail below, it is at least worth briefly mentioning at this juncture that the Special Master has seen nothing in the abundance of evidence that has been introduced in these approval proceedings or through his copious interactions with Class Counsel to indicate that Class Counsel, and in particular Lead Counsel, has failed to provide all Class Members adequate representation, that Class Counsel has any conflict of interest, or that the Class Representatives are not part of the class or that they do not possess the same interest and suffer the same injury as the class members. [*212] See Amchem Products, Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 594-95, 117 S. Ct. 2231, 138 L. Ed. 2d 689 (1997). Indeed, as noted, supra, the representative plaintiffs' interests are directly aligned with those of other members of the Class — the representative plaintiffs were damaged as a result of defendants' allegedly unlawful conduct, and the plaintiffs would have had to prove the same wrongdoing as the absent class members to establish liability. See Pet Food, 629 F.3d at 349.

The mere fact that "relief varie[s] among the different groups of class members [does] not demonstrate ... conflicting or antagonistic interests within the class" or adequacy of representation issues. In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 579 F.3d 241, 272 (3d Cir. 2009). Nor does the fact that the settlement fund allocates a larger percentage of the settlement to certain class members. "Instead, the different allocations reflect the relative value of the different claims." See Pet Food, 629 F.3d at 347. The Special Master is therefore satisfied that this prerequisite has been met. The objectors have failed to demonstrate inadequate representation or any conflict of interest.[24]

IPPs have also satisfied Rule 23(b)(3)'s predominance and superiority criteria. The Rule 23(b) predominance inquiry is "readily met in certain cases alleging violations of the antitrust laws." Amchem, 521 U.S. at 615 (quoting Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(b)(3)). Indeed, "[i]n price-fixing cases, courts repeatedly have held that the existence of the conspiracy is the predominant issue and warrants certification even where significant individual issues are present." Thomas & Thomas Rodmakers, Inc. v. Newport Adhesives and Composites, Inc., 209 F.R.D. 159, 167 (C.D.Cal. 2002).

Such is the case here where the existence of an alleged CRT conspiracy and defendants' [*214] acts in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy are the predominant common questions. The existence of potential individualized damage issues does not alter this fact since courts in this district have recognized that "classes were certified ... regardless whether some members of the class negotiated price individually, or whether — as here — differences among product type, customer class, and method of purchase existed." *In re Dynamic Random Access Memory (DRAM) Antitrust Litig., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 39841, 2006 WL 1530166, at 9 (N.D.Cal. June 5, 2006). This is true even if there are individual state law issues, as long as the common issues still outweigh the individual ones. Waste Mgmt. Holdings, Inc. v. Mowbray, 208 F.3d 288, 296 (1st Cir. 2000); see also Sullivan, 667 F.3d at [24] Objectors Scarpulla and Cooper point to language in Lead Counsel's November 19, 2015, motion brief in which Lead Counsel stated that "Lead Counsel was appointed to represent the interests of purchasers in the 22 indirect purchaser state classes. He has no duty to represent [*213] purchasers in other states." Motion for Final Approval, p. 43, n.71. Objectors take this quote out of context. Lead Counsel was not stating that he never advanced the interests of the Nationwide class in this litigation. Instead, he was merely explaining that, during the litigation phase of the case, he had "no duty to represent" members of the Nationwide Class for purposes of approaching attorneys general about pursuing potential parens patriae actions. Lead Counsel sufficiently explained this distinction in his Reply brief. There, he notes that at the settlement stage, he had a duty to represent all members of the proposed settlement class vigorously which, as the Special Master has observed, is exactly what Lead Counsel did.

301, 303 ("predominance is not considered deficient merely because claims were subject to the [varying] laws of fifty states..."; instead, "in the settlement context, variations in state antitrust, consumer protection and unjust enrichment laws did not present the types of insuperable obstacles that could render class litigation unmanageable ... since a settlement would eliminate the principal burden of establishing the elements of liability under disparate laws." (internal quotations omitted).

Here, issues that are common to the class predominate — all IPPs are alleged to have paid overcharges that were caused by the defendants' alleged price-fixing [*215] activities. This militates in favor of final certification of the Settlement Class.

With regard to superiority, there is no doubt that the damages of most individual class members are relatively small compared to the cost of litigation, making it difficult for individual class members to adjudicate their claims individually. And even if plaintiffs were to individually proceed to litigation, the court system would then be overwhelmed by the burden of hundreds of thousands of separate actions. IPPs, therefore, have met their burden with regard to the requirements of Rule 23(b).

In light of the above, the Special Master recommends that the Court finally approve the Settlement Classes. All of the prerequisites to a class action under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23 are satisfied for settlement purposes.

VII. APPROVAL OF PROPOSED SETTLEMENTS

A. Fairness of Compensation to Class

A class action may not be dismissed, compromised or settled without the express approval of the Court. Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(e). Approval is a three-step process: (1) certification of a settlement class and preliminary approval of the Proposed Settlements; (2) notice to the class; and (3) final approval at a Fairness Hearing, following notice, left to the sound discretion of the trial [*216] judge. See Nat'l Rural Telecomms. Coop. v. DIRECTV, Inc., 221 F.R.D. 523, 525 (C.D.Cal. 2004); Ellis v. Naval Air Rework Facility, 87 F.R.D. 15, 18 (N.D.Cal. 1980) aff'd, 661 F.2d 939 (9th Cir. 1981). The Court may issue final approval of a class settlement "only after a hearing and on finding that it is fair, reasonable, and adequate." Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(e)(2); In re Bluetooth Headset Prods. Liab. Litig., 654 F.3d 935, 946 (9th Cir. 2011). Rule 23(e)'s primary concern is "the protection of those class members, including the named plaintiffs, whose rights may not have been given due regard by the negotiating parties." Officers for Justice v. Civil Serv. Comm'n of the City and Cnty. of San Francisco, 688 F.2d 615, 624 (9th Cir. 1982).

In considering final approval of a proposed settlement the Court's discretion is guided by the following factors: (1) the strength of the plaintiffs' case; (2) the risk, expense, complexity, and likely duration of further litigation; (3) the risk of maintaining class action status throughout the trial; (4) the amount offered in settlement; (5) the extent of discovery completed and the stage of the proceedings; (6) the experience and views of counsel; (7) the presence of a governmental participant; and (8) the reaction of class members to the Proposed Settlements. Churchill Vill., LLC v. Gen. Elec., 361 F.3d 566, 575 (9th Cir. 2004). "This list is not exhaustive, and different factors may predominate in different factual contexts." Torrisi v. Tucson Elec. Power Co., 8 F.3d 1370, 1376 (9th Cir. 1993). Indeed, the Ninth Circuit has observed that the district court's determination in approving a settlement is nothing more than "an amalgam of delicate balancing, gross approximations and rough [*217] justice." Officers for Justice, 688 F.2d at 625. But in general, there is a strong judicial policy favoring class settlements. Class Plaintiffs v. Seattle, 955 F.2d 1268, 1276 (9th Cir. 1992). Voluntary conciliation and settlement are the preferred means of dispute resolution. Officers for Justice, 688 F.2d at 625.

Looking at the Proposed Settlements through this legal lens, the Special Master is satisfied that they meet these standards.

1. Strength of IPP's Case

While a proposed settlement is not to be judged against a hypothetical or speculative measure of what might have been achieved by the negotiators in this case, see Officers for Justice, 688 F.2d at 625, there is no doubt that the IPPs would have faced substantial hurdles had the parties not agreed to settlement. Not only would IPPs have had to prove that certain Defendants participated in the conspiracy, they would have also had to prove injury and damages on a class-wide basis. In addition, IPPs would have had to prove that the conspiracy had an impact in the United States; they would have had to show application of the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act of 1982; and they would have had to address withdrawal and statutes of limitations defenses. Many of these issues are unsettled and contested. This is not to say that the IPPs would not have prevailed, but their burden would have been an onerous [*218] one, to say the least. This factor, therefore, weighs strongly in favor of approving the Proposed Settlements.

2. Risk, Expense and Complexity of the Litigation

The record is clear that this antitrust litigation, which has spanned eight years and several continents, alleging a global conspiracy that began more than 20 years ago, has required great effort, expense and risk to the IPPs and their counsel. As noted, supra, class counsel engaged in extensive discovery efforts at both the class certification and merits stages. These efforts included ongoing meet and confers, expert discovery involving 17 expert witnesses, and the review of millions of pages of documents, many of which were in Korean, Japanese or Chinese and required certified translations.

Class certification was also quite arduous, complex and time-consuming, taking more than two years. And not only did Class Counsel have to take depositions, review documents and work with experts during this time frame, they also had to defend against Defendants' Daubert motion to strike IPP's expert reports.

And finally, at the summary judgment stage, the IPPs had to respond to the eleven motions (out of 36) that Defendants had filed against [*219] them, and they had to coordinate with other plaintiff groups on responses to the other motions that remained. These motions raised difficult and complex legal and factual issues regarding the FTIA, antitrust standing, withdrawal from the conspiracy and other dispositive issues.

There was obviously great risk to IPPs in continuing with this litigation. "Antitrust litigation in general, and class action litigation in particular, is unpredictable." In re NASDAQ Mkt.-Makers Antitrust Litig., 187 F.R.D. 465, 475 (S.D.N.Y. 1998). "The 'best' case can be lost and the 'worst' case can be won, and juries may find liability but no damages. None of these risks should be underestimated." In re Superior Beverage/Glass Container Consol. Pretrial, 133 F.R.D. 119, 127 (N.D.Ill. 1990). IPPs faced the risk of losing this litigation since proving liability was going to be complicated. This amplified the risk that IPPs might not recover anything for their efforts.

"Generally, unless the settlement is clearly inadequate, its acceptance and approval are preferable to lengthy and expensive litigation with uncertain results." *Ching v. Siemens Indus., Inc., 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 89002, 2014 WL 2926210, at 4 (N.D.Cal. June 27, 2014). Immediate receipt of money through settlement, even if lower than what could potentially be achieved through ultimate success on the merits, has value to a class, especially when compared to risky and costly continued litigation. See *LaGarde v. Support.com, Inc., 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42725, 2013 WL 1283325, at 4 (N.D.Cal. Mar. 26, 2013).

While collection [*220] may not have been as high a hurdle here given the size and wealth of the Settling Defendants, they are foreign companies against whom collection efforts may be complex and expensive.

The Special Master is satisfied that the factor of risk and complexity weighs in favor of settlement.

3. Amount Offered in Settlement

This factor is generally considered the most important because the critical component of any settlement is the amount of relief obtained by the class. *Bayat v. Bank of the West, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50416, 2015 WL 1744342, at 4 (N.D.Cal. Apr. 15, 2015).

Here, as cash consideration for the Proposed Settlements, Defendants have deposited $541,750,000 into an escrow account. The Chunghwa and LG settlements bring that total to $576,750,000. No objector has disputed that this may well be the second largest cash recovery ever obtained on behalf of indirect purchasers. In addition, IPPs obtained valuable cooperation from Defendants, in varying degrees, that will potentially enable them to prosecute the action against, and obtain higher recoveries from the remaining Defendants. This factor favors approval of the Proposed Settlements considerably.

Objector Douglas W. St. John argues that the "vastly disproportionate size of the Samsung and Philips settlements," demonstrates that the [*221] smaller settlements against other defendants were unfair. St. John Reply in Support of Objection, pp. 9-11. While St. John attempts to cast this argument in terms of the settlement's fairness, it is really a challenge to Lead Counsel's request for attorneys' fees and is addressed head-on infra at VIII.B.3. To the extent that this objection challenges the adequacy of the settlement, the Special Master rejects it. Lead Counsel has provided evidence that the market shares of both Samsung and Philips increased during the litigation and that their settlement amounts are roughly proportionate to their market shares, their core roles in the conspiracy and the evidence against them. IPP Reply re Final Approval of Settlements, dtd. 12/23/15, p. 17. (filed on Case Anywhere).

4. Extent of Discovery and Stage of Proceedings

This factor "evaluates whether 'the parties have sufficient information to make an informed decision about settlement.'" *Larsen v. Trader Joe's Company, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 95538, 2014 WL 3404531, at 5 (N.D.Cal. July 11, 2014). Formal discovery is not a requirement for final settlement approval; "[r]ather, the court's focus is on whether the parties carefully investigated the claims before reaching a resolution." Bellinghausen v. Tractor Supply Co., 306 F.R.D. 245, 257 (N.D.Cal. 2015).

Here, significant discovery was already completed by the time the parties [*222] reached their settlement agreements. IPPs and their experts had already searched, reviewed and analyzed millions of pages of documents and voluminous data sets produced by defendants, the DAPs and third parties, and various parties to the litigation had already taken over 250 depositions. In addition, the parties had already exchanged expert reports on liability and damages, including opening, opposition, rebuttal and sur-rebuttal reports from 17 expert witnesses, all of whom were deposed, often multiple times, regarding the reports that they had prepared.

In anticipation of trial, the parties had also exchanged trial exhibit lists, witness lists, deposition designations, jury instructions and special verdict forms. They had also filed 64 motions in limine and other pretrial motions. These motions were briefed in varying degrees before the Proposed Settlements were executed.

In light of this extensive discovery (and preparation for trial), IPP counsel were in a solid position to assess the value of the case. This factor weighs heavily in favor of settlement.

5. Experience and Views of Lead Counsel

"Parties represented by competent counsel are better positioned than courts to produce a [*223] settlement that fairly reflects each party's expected outcome in litigation." Rodriguez v. West Publishing Corp., 563 F.3d 948, 967 (9th Cir. 2009). Consequently, "'[t]he recommendations of plaintiffs' counsel should be given a presumption of reasonableness.'" In re Omnivision Techns., Inc., 559 F.Supp.2d 1036, 1043 (N.D.Cal. 2008); Ellis, 87 F.R.D. at 18 ("[T]he fact that experienced counsel involved in the case approved the settlement after hard-fought negotiations is entitled to considerable weight" when approving a settlement agreement); see also In re Paine Webber Ltd. Partnerships Litig., 171 F.R.D. 104, 125 (S.D.N.Y.) aff'd sub nom. In re Paine Webber Inc. Ltd. Partnerships Litig., 117 F.3d 721 (2d Cir. 1997).

Here, it is undisputed that Lead Counsel and counsel for Defendants are experienced litigators, that Lead Counsel oversaw and was involved in every aspect of this litigation and that Lead Counsel had a thorough understanding of the evidence and all of the claims and defenses involved in this case. See Docket 4073-1 (Lead Counsel CV). It engenders further confidence that Hon. Vaughn Walker and Hon. Fem Smith provided their experienced input into the parties' settlement negotiations.

This factor therefore militates in favor of approval of the Proposed Settlements.

6. Government Participation

The Class Action Fairness Act, or "CAFA," requires that notice of a settlement be given to state and federal officials and provides those officials a window of time to comment. 28 U.S.C. § 1715(b). "Although CAFA does not create [*224] an affirmative duty for either state or federal officials to take any action in response to a class action settlement, CAFA presumes that once put on notice, state or federal officials will raise any concerns that they may have during the normal course of the class action settlement procedures." Garner v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Ins. Co., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 49477, 2010 WL 1687832, at *14 (N.D.Cal. Apr. 22, 2010).

Here, the Department of Justice and all state attorneys general received CAFA notices of these settlements from each of the settling defendants. Other than the California Attorney General, who filed a Statement of Interest asserting various conditional objections, no other governmental official has raised any concern regarding the settlements. This fact favors approval of the Proposed Settlements. See In re LinkedIn User Privacy Litig., 309 F.R.D. 573, 2015 WL 5440975, at *1 (N.D.Cal. Sept. 15, 2015).

With regard to the California Attorney General's Statement of Interest, which the Attorney General supplemented on December 9, 2015, the Attorney General raised the following concerns: (1) the notice program that IPPs implemented was insufficient to assure that California natural persons had a fair and equitable opportunity to claim from the Proposed Settlements, particularly since the notice program did not utilize television advertising; (2) reimbursement on claims should be capped at single [*225] rather than trebled damages; (3) a residual cy pres fund should be established for the benefit of natural persons in the state-specific damages classes; and (4) the final date for filing claims should be extended to June 30, 2016 in order to increase claims from natural persons and efficiently coordinate California state and federal proceedings.

With regard to extension of the claim deadline, the Special Master issued a Report and Recommendation on January 6, 2016 (Docket No. 4281), recommending that the Court extend the claim deadline for California natural persons only to June 30, 2016, and that Lead Counsel for the IPP's give notice of such extension on the IPP claim website. With regard to the concerns about the adequacy of notice, at the January 5, 2016, hearing the Special Master ordered Lead Counsel to produce data concerning claims that have been received to date.

The Special Master rejects the requests of the Attorney General as to inadequacy of notice, establishment of a cy pres fund, and applying a damage cap based on single rather than treble damages. As to notice, the Attorney General acknowledges that the notice program satisfied due process and Rule 23. While the Attorney General [*226] advocates for a more "optimal" notice program that would have included television advertising, the Attorney General has cited no persuasive authority for the proposition that television advertising is required, particularly when the rest of the notice program had a sufficiently expansive reach. See In re Google Referrer Header Privacy Litig., 87 F.Supp.3d 1122, 1138 (N.D.Cal. 2015).

As to cy pres the Second Circuit in Masters v. Wilhelmina Model Agency, Inc., 473 F.3d 423 (2d Cir. 2007) rejected an approach similar to the Attorney General's proposal. The Second Circuit found that the district court had erred in allowing a cy pres distribution without considering a distribution of excess funds as treble damages to the class. Id. at 436. The Attorney General has cited no case that holds that cy pres should take precedence over treble damages.

As to capping claims at single rather than treble damages, the Attorney General relies on In re Lupron Mktg. & Sales Practices Litig., 677 F.3d 21, 26 (1st Cir. 2012) but Lupron is plainly distinguishable. In Lupron, the court approved the district court's decision to make a cy pres distribution instead of using the residual funds to award treble damages. Id. at 34. But in that case claimants had already received distributions of 167% of their damages. In the end, whether to pay residual funds as treble damages to claimants, or to create a cy pres fund, is within the discretion of class counsel [*227] and ultimately the Court. Where in doubt, it is proper to favor payment of residual sums to class members. Masters, 473 F.3d at 436.

7. Reaction of Class Members to the Proposed Settlements

IPP's Notice Program reached millions of consumers who purchased CRT televisions and computers. See Fisher Decl., ¶ 18. Only 11 objections (with a total of 22 individual objectors) and five requests for exclusion were received.

Two objections have since been withdrawn, and two of the requests for exclusion were by DAPs that are already pursuing their own cases. Moreover, two of the objections — those from Paul Palmer (which was withdrawn) and Douglas St. John — are directed at fees only; they do not challenge the sufficiency of the settlement.

These numbers strongly favor approval of the settlement. While a settlement may be approved even if a large number of class members object, when objections come from only a smattering of class members this provides strong support for the fairness of its terms. See Ellis, 87 F.R.D. at 18; see also Nat'l Rural Telecomm. Coop., 221 F.R.D. at 529 ("It is established that the absence of a large number of objections to a proposed class action settlement raises a strong presumption that the terms of a proposed class settlement action are favorable to the class [*228] members."). Further, when the class involves large corporations that are intimately familiar with civil litigation, the inference of class support when there are only a few objectors is enhanced. See In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., 321 F.Supp.2d 619, 629 (E.D.Pa. 2004).

8. The Proposed Settlements are Fair, Reasonable and Adequate

In summary, the Special Master is satisfied that all criteria for evaluating the Proposed Settlements have been satisfied, and concludes that the terms of the Proposed Settlements are fair, reasonable and adequate. The proposals were not hastily arrived at and there is not a shred of evidence in the record suggesting the existence of collusion between the negotiators. See Officers for Justice, 688 F.2d at 627. Further, the Proposed Settlements have been reached after meaningful discovery and after arms-length negotiations that were conducted by capable counsel. They are, therefore, presumptively fair. *See In re Heritage Bond Litig., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13555, 2005 WL 1594403, at 9 (C.D.Cal. June 10, 2005); In re Tableware Antitrust Litig., 484 F.Supp.2d 1078, 1079 (N.D.Cal. 2007) (quoting In re General Motors Corp., 55 F.3d 768, 784 (3d Cir. 1995) ("This preliminary determination establishes an initial presumption of fairness.") Therefore, objectors bear the burden of establishing that the settlement is not fair, reasonable and adequate. See United States v. Oregon, 913 F.2d 576, 581 (9th Cir. 1990). Objectors have not come close to carrying that burden.

B. Fairness of Allocation Plan [*229]

Approving a plan for the allocation of a class settlement fund is governed by the same legal standards that apply to approving the settlement terms: the distribution plan must be "fair, reasonable and adequate." In re Citric Acid Antitrust Litig., 145 F.Supp.2d 1152, 1154 (N.D.Cal. 2001) A plan of allocation that reimburses class members based on the type and extent of their injuries is generally reasonable. See id.; Omnivision, 559 F.Supp.2d at 1045. Indeed, in this District, a "pro-rata [plan] for allocation has been used in many antitrust cases." *In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 154288, 2011 WL 7575004, at 4 (N.D.Cal. Dec. 27, 2011); *see also In re Vitamins Antitrust Litig., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8931, 2000 WL 1737867, at 6 (D.D.C. Mar.31, 2000); *In re Lloyds' Am. Trust Fund Litig., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22663, 2002 WL 31663577, at 19 (S.D.N.Y. Nov.26, 2002); PaineWebber, 171 F.R.D. at 135.

1. Summary of Allocation Plan

IPP class members will of course obtain compensation only for the overcharges they paid on CRT products, not for the entire purchase price. IPPs propose to compensate members of the Indirect Purchaser State Class according to a plan of distribution that allows qualifying claimants to claim their pro-rata share of the Settlement Fund based on the total number of valid claims filed and on the number and type of CRT Products that each claimant purchased during the class period.[26] For example, the Settlement Administrator will initially compute the straight pro-rata distribution of the available Settlement Fund among all claims product purchases, with claims for Standard CRT Televisions (televisions with a [*230] screen size of less than 30 inches) receiving a weight of 1, Large CRT

[26] All Statewide Damages class members will be required to complete a claim form containing: (i) contact information; (ii) verification of membership in one of the Statewide Damages Classes; (iii) the number and type of each CRT Product purchased during the class period; and (iv) an attestation under penalty of perjury that the information provided is accurate. All claimants will be subject to auditing and requests for documentation of purchases by the Settlement Administrator.

Televisions (televisions with a screen size of 30 inches or larger) receiving a weight of 4.3, and CRT Computer Monitors receiving a weight of 3. As Lead Counsel explains, the weighting of the different CRT Products in this manner is necessary to reflect the relative harm to purchasers of those products as set forth by the data produced by Plaintiffs' expert, Dr. Janet Netz. Alioto Decl. I, ¶ 44-45.

For example, the data produced in this case shows that the CRTs used in televisions with a screen size of 30 inches or larger were significantly more expensive than the CRTs used in televisions less than 30 inches. Id., ¶¶44, 45. It therefore became [*231] necessary to create two categories for CRT televisions (Standard CRT Televisions and Large CRT Televisions) to ensure that purchasers of Large CRT Televisions are properly compensated. Id., ¶45. In addition, based on Dr. Netz' findings that the overcharge on monitor tubes was more than twice the overcharge on television tubes, it is appropriate to give greater weight to CRT Computer Monitors than Standard CRT televisions. Id., ¶46. However, the data produced in this case also shows that Large CRT Televisions contain the largest, most expensive CRTs. On average, they are approximately twice the size and four times the price of CRTs used in monitors. So, even though Dr. Netz found the overcharge percentage on television tubes to be less than for monitor tubes, the average dollar overcharge is greater for Large CRT Televisions than for CRT Computer Monitors. Id., ¶47.

When allocating the settlement funds, the Settlement Administrator will also determine a minimum payment amount. Lead Counsel contends that, based on historical claim rates, it is expected that there will be sufficient funds to distribute a minimum payment of at least $25 to eligible class members who submit a valid claim [*232] form. This will incentivize small purchasers to file a claim despite the fact that their straight pro-rata distribution amount would be relatively small and will ensure that small claimants (i.e., most individual consumers) receive meaningful compensation for their participation in the claims process. Lead Counsel contends that he will seek the Court's approval for the minimum payment amount when the data from the actual claims process is available. Id., ¶48.

The Settlement Administrator will also apply a maximum payment amount of three times the estimated money damages per claimant, thereby recognizing the potential that the IPP class may have obtained an award of treble damages.

Upon final approval, none of the Settlement Fund will revert to any defendant. And as discussed further below, members of the Nationwide Class who are not also members of any Statewide Damages Class will not receive any monetary compensation. Id., ¶50.

2. Treatment of Class Members in the Non-Repealer States

Basically, only claimants from the 21 states and District of Columbia in the Indirect Purchaser State Classes will get money. Members of the Nationwide Class who are not also members of the 22 State Classes [*233] will release their claims for injunctive relief, equitable monetary relief and damages without obtaining any monetary consideration. Several objectors contend that this arrangement is not fair, reasonable and adequate. See Docket No. 4111 (Fortman/Finn objection), pp.2-6; Docket No. 4112 (Williams), pp.11-12; Docket No. 4116 (Cooper/Scarpulla objection), pp.2-5; Docket No. 4144 (Gianasca, et al objection), pp.3-5. Lead Counsel maintains that releasing these claims is appropriate because they are either completely speculative or have absolutely no value. This is a highly contentious issue that warrants significant attention.

As the Court well knows, non-repealer states are states that have failed to enact repealer statutes to reject the holding of Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977). In Illinois Brick, almost 40 years ago the Supreme Court prohibited the "offensive" use of pass-on evidence to establish antitrust liability, which has effectively barred a downstream customer from showing under federal law that he had paid an illegal overcharge passed-on to him by an upstream purchaser of the defendants' product. Following Illinois Brick, approximately half the states by either statutes or court decisions re-conferred on [*234] indirect purchasers the right to recover for pass-on overcharges under state antitrust laws and/or consumer protection statutes. States that have passed such laws are known in the trade as "repealer" states, while the remaining states are known as "non-repealer" states. Here, 26 of the 29 states that are excluded from the Indirect Purchaser State Classes are non-repealer states. The other three states — Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Missouri — are repealer states that were omitted from the State Classes for various reasons. They will be addressed separately.

a. Claims raised in the operative Fourth Consolidated Amended Complaint

Objectors contend that Class Counsel made but failed to pursue claims for various kinds of relief on behalf of class members in non-repealer states. Lead Counsel responds that claims for monetary compensation for non-repealer states were never asserted. Thus, we begin by examining the claims actually asserted.

Plaintiffs representing the 22 Indirect Purchaser State Classes filed their consolidated amended complaint on March 16, 2009. On May 10, 2010, Plaintiffs filed their Second Consolidated Amended Complaint, and on December 11, 2010, Plaintiffs filed their [*235] Third Consolidated Amended Complaint. Plaintiffs filed their Fourth Consolidated Amended Complaint on January 10, 2013, the currently operative complaint.

In their Fourth Consolidated Amended Complaint, Plaintiffs brought the following claims on behalf of themselves, the Indirect Purchaser State Classes, and the Nationwide Class. Docket No. 1526, ¶¶243-244. (1) Violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, seeking injunctive relief pursuant to Section 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 26 on behalf of Plaintiffs and the Nationwide Class, id., ¶¶247-256; (2) Violation of State Antitrust Statutes, seeking "all forms of relief available" under each state's statute for Plaintiffs and the members of each State Class, id. ¶¶257-278; (3) Violation of State Consumer Protection and Unfair Competition Statutes, seeking relief for (a) Plaintiffs and members of the Indirect Purchaser Class from Florida, Hawaii, Nebraska, New Mexico, North Carolina and Vermont for "all relief available" under these state's statutes, id. ¶¶282-285, 287-288; (b) equitable relief, such as restitution and disgorgement, for California plaintiffs and the members of the California Indirect Purchaser Class, id., ¶281; (c) "actual damages" for injuries to New [*236] York plaintiffs and members of the New York Indirect Purchaser Class, id., ¶286; and (4) Unjust Enrichment and Disgorgement of Profits, seeking disgorgement of profits resulting from overpayments and establishment of a constructive trust for plaintiffs and members of the Indirect Purchaser Class from Arizona, California, District of Columbia, Iowa, Maine, Michigan, New Mexico and South Dakota. Id., ¶¶289-292.

The prayer for relief seeks to "recover damages, as provided by the state antitrust, consumer protection, and unfair competition laws alleged herein, and that a joint and several judgments in favor of Plaintiffs and the Classes be entered against the Defendants in an amount to be trebled in accordance with such laws." Id., p.95.C. "Plaintiffs and the Classes" also seek to "be awarded restitution, including disgorgement of profits obtained by Defendants as a result of its acts of unfair competition and acts of unjust enrichment." Id., p.96.E.

The parties dispute whether the Fourth Amended Consolidated Complaint alleged a nationwide disgorgement and unjust enrichment claim. Plaintiffs point to the specific language in the Fourth Claim for Relief that limited such relief to class members from the enumerated [*237] eight states. See id., ¶¶289-292 . Objectors Scarpulla and Cooper, however, point to the broader language in the prayer for relief, which states that "Plaintiffs and the Classes" seek restitution, including disgorgement of profits..." Id., p.96.E (emphasis added). The Special Master concludes that the better reading of these conflicting allegations is to allow the specific to govern the general — the intent of the pleaders seems clearly to have been to limit the equitable relief to the eight listed states, but by mistake they did not conform the broad language of the prayer accordingly. However, as shown below, this argument is unimportant because, whether or not claims for equitable monetary relief were asserted on behalf of class members in non-repealer states, such claims are valueless.

b. Release of injunctive relief claims

The Proposed Settlement releases all claims for injunctive relief on behalf of the Nationwide Class. Thus, class members in the 26 non-repealer states (and the 3 omitted repealer states discussed below) release their injunctive relief claims for no consideration.

The Special Master notes out of the box that the Court has already approved an identical release of all claims [*238] nationwide in connection with the earlier IPP settlement with LG. See Docket Nos. 2542, 2511. No objections were raised to that release. This precedent is certainly instructive.

Lead Counsel argues that the release of non-repealer state class members' injunctive relief claims without payment is fair, reasonable and adequate since those claims are not viable. The Special Master agrees. As IPPs explain, "[n]o one disputes that the CRT market is dying and almost all manufacturers, including all of the alleged conspirators, have left the market, making it very unlikely that the alleged conduct could recur in the future." Motion for Final Approval of Settlements, p.32. The unlikelihood of future violations makes an injunction basically worthless, and probably impossible to obtain. See Parker v. Time Warner Entm't Co., L.P., 631 F.Supp.2d 242, 262 (E.D.N.Y. 2009) ["A claim which cannot be proven is worth essentially nothing. Consideration of nothing for releasing a worthless claim is therefore fair, reasonable, and adequate."]; *Nguyen v. Radient Pharmaceuticals Corp., 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 63312, 2014 WL 1802293, at 7 (C.D.Cal. May 6, 2014) [approving plan of allocation in a securities class action over objection that certain claims were released without compensation]. As this case progressed it became clear that (1) the conspiracy was no longer in effect, and (2) the conduct was [*239] unlikely to recur because Defendants no longer made or sold any meaningful volume of CRT products in the United States. An antitrust injunction, therefore, would have had little or no practical value to class members. Moreover, an antitrust injunction would have been difficult to obtain since IPPs could not show a likelihood of future harm. See United States v. Or. State Med. Soc'y, 343 U.S. 326, 333-34, 72 S. Ct. 690, 96 L. Ed. 978 (1952) ["The sole function of an action for injunction is to forestall future violations ... We agree with the trial court that conduct discontinued in 1941 does not warrant issuance of an injunction in 1949."] Although the injunctive relief claims here were essentially valueless, defendants are legitimately entitled to a global release from any potential injunctive relief-styled "nuisance" claim. See Sullivan, 667 F.3d at 310.

Messrs. Scarpulla and Cooper also suggest that, as in DRAM, Lead Counsel could have sought an injunction requiring Defendants to establish a compliance program for their officers and employees regarding U.S. federal and state antitrust laws. See Scarpulla/Cooper 12/9/15 Reply Br., p. 12 (citing DRAM, Docket No. 2132, supra, pp. 32-33). Such an education program 20 years after this conspiracy began would have been of little practical value to the class. Class Counsel [*240] here did not seek such transparently useless relief, and under the circumstances — particularly since the Court has already approved without objection a settlement on the same terms — release of such claims for non-repealer state class members without monetary consideration was fair, reasonable and adequate.

c. Release of claims for equitable monetary relief

As discussed above, the Special Master thinks that a fair reading of the Fourth Complaint is that it did not assert a claim for restitution or disgorgement under state laws on behalf of the non-repealer states. But whether the Fourth Complaint asserted such claim or not, the same question remains: Is it fair to have not asserted or released such claims on behalf of the non-repealer states without monetary compensation? The answer turns on whether such a state law claim would have been viable in light of Illinois Brick and its progeny.

Everyone here agrees that "the effect of Illinois Brick was to eliminate federal antitrust recovery for the vast majority of indirect purchasers of price-fixed goods and services." See Scarpulla/Cooper Reply in Support of Objections, p.16; see also DRAM, Docket No. 2132, p.82. The issue is whether a [*241] state law claim for equitable relief can replace the federal claim barred by Illinois Brick.

The case law is clear and consistent in holding that such state law claims are not permissible in indirect purchaser cases. In re Digital Music Antitrust Litig., 812 F.Supp.2d 390, 412 (N.D.Cal. 2009) [unjust enrichment claims under Arkansas, Virginia, Montana and Puerto Rico law barred]; *In re K-Dur Antitrust Litigation, No. CIV.A. 01-1652 (JAG), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 71768, 2008 WL 2660780, at 5 (D.N.J. Feb. 28, 2008) [unjust enrichment claim barred because it was based on the same facts and as the state antitrust claims which were not permitted under Pennsylvania, New Jersey or Delaware law]; Aikens v. Microsoft Corp., 159 Fed. Appx. 471, 477 (4th Cir. 2005) [unjust enrichment claim barred as attempt to circumvent the prohibition against indirect purchaser claims under Louisiana antitrust law]; Sickles v. Cabot Corp., 379 N.J. Super. 100, 877 A.2d 267, 277 (N.J.Super.Ct. 2005) ["[T]o permit an indirect purchaser ... to recast his antitrust claim as a consumer fraud violation would undermine the standing requirements of the AT A and would ' essentially permit an end run around the policies allowing only direct purchasers to recover under the Antitrust Act.'"]. Finally, in In re New Motor Vehicles Canadian Export Antitrust Litig., 350 F.Supp.2d 160 (D.Me. 2004), the court opined: "For those states that have maintained the Illinois Brick prohibition on indirect purchaser recovery, I conclude that it would subvert the statutory scheme to allow these same indirect purchasers to secure, for the statutory violation, restitutionary relief [*242] at common law (or in equity).")." Id. at 211.

Scarpulla and Cooper contend that there is a "growing body of law recognizing the viability of Clayton Act equitable monetary claims for indirect purchasers arising from violations of Section 1 of the Sherman Act." However, their "growing body" of law consists of two cases that are plainly distinguishable and a misreading of a Special Master's report in DRAM.

In United States v. Keyspan Corp. , 763 F.Supp.2d 633 (S.D.N.Y. 2011), the Department of Justice was permitted to seek disgorgement of revenues as a remedy for Sherman Action violations as part of a consent decree because "absent disgorgement, the Government is without recourse to remedy Keyspan 's anticompetitive conduct." Id. at 638-640. And in *TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig., No. C 10-4346 SI, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 76562, 2011 WL 2790179, at 4 (N.D.Cal. July 12, 2011), the court, relying on Keyspan, concluded that disgorgement was available to the State of Oregon in its indirect purchaser case given "the expansive grant of authority to seek equitable relief under the Oregon Antitrust Statute." Both these cases involve governmental enforcement efforts and are thus distinguishable from the private indirect purchaser action here. Objectors' reliance on these cases is therefore unpersuasive.

In DRAM, Special [*243] Master Renfrew concluded that "the presence of purchasers with claims arising under both repealer and non-repealer state antitrust and consumer protection statutes presents no impediment to a finding that common questions predominate and the Indirect Purchaser Settlement Class satisfies the requirements of Rule 23(b)(3)." DRAM, Docket No. 2132, p.84. Special Master Renfrew did not analyze whether non-repealer state consumer protection claims for equitable relief were viable. He merely said that lumping together claims of class members from both repealer and non-repealer states did not destroy predominance. Objectors' reliance on Judge Renfrew's allusion to Illinois Brick in DRAM, therefore, assumes too much and is unpersuasive.

As with the injunctive claims, the LG settlement released without monetary compensation any equitable monetary relief claims for non-repealer state class members. No objection was raised. Docket Nos. 2542, 2511. This strongly supports the appropriateness of the same ruling with respect to the Proposed Settlements.

Faced with the overwhelming case law barring state law claims for equitable relief that attempt to evade Illinois Brick and state laws barring such antitrust claims, [*244] Class Counsel reasonably concluded that actively pursuing such a claim would have been quixotic. If such claims were worth little or nothing, releasing them without compensation does not render the Proposed Settlements unfair, unreasonable or inadequate. Parker, 631 F.Supp.2d at 262 ["A claim which cannot be proven is worth essentially nothing. Consideration of nothing for releasing a worthless claim is therefore fair, reasonable, and adequate."]; Omnivision, 559 F.Supp.2d at 1045 ["It is reasonable to allocate the settlement funds to class members based on the extent of their injuries or the strength of the claims on the merits."]; *Booth v. Strategic Realty Trust, Inc., No. 13-cv-04921, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 140723, 2015 WL 6002919, at 7 (N.D.Cal. Oct. 15, 2015) (Tigar, J.) (same). See also Nguyen, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 63312, 2014 WL 1802293, in which the court approved a plan of allocation although certain claims were released without compensation, noting: "It is reasonable to allocate the settlement funds to class members based on the extent of their injuries or the strength of their claims on the merits. The record shows that it is very unlikely that the in-and-out traders could have proved recoverable damages." (internal citations omitted). As the Nguyen court explained:

> "Counsel has also litigated this case thoroughly and aggressively from the start and utilized [*245] expert input to determine the extent of damage and calculation of the instant settlement. The Court sees no reason to disagree with their judgment of their own case on this record, and finds it is highly unlikely the in-and-out traders could prove any damages caused by Radient's alleged misrepresentation. The Objector is correct that proving in-and-out claims is not impossible, but there is no evidence that the in-and-out traders in this case could have done so. On this basis, the plan of allocation reasonably does not include values for in-and-out shares. The plan of allocation reasonably and fairly represents injuries and claims on the merits."

*2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 63312, [WL] at 8 (emphasis added)

For these reasons the Special Master concludes that Class Counsel made a justifiable decision to exclude or at least not to actively pursue claims of equitable monetary belief on behalf of non-repealer state class members. The Nationwide Class' release of these claims is fair, adequate and reasonable.

d. Release of claims for damages

Objectors also challenge Lead Counsel's valuation of the damage claims of the purchasers in the non-repealer states. They argue that, "[n]ot only do these class members have standing to assert that their [*246] claims fall into an exception to Illinois Brick, they also have standing to argue that Illinois Brick should be reconsidered in light of 38 years of developments in the law, economic theory and the analytical tools available to demonstrate pass-on damages." Id.

Objectors' position fails for two reasons. First, they do not explain, or cite to any persuasive legal authority that explains, what an "exception" to Illinois Brick would be. Second, assessing value to a claim based on the hope that the Supreme Court may reverse 38 years of jurisprudence is to chase an illusion. Lead Counsel had no duty to assert frivolous, hypothetical claims foreclosed by existing law because someday maybe the law will change. As was noted at the January 5, 2016 hearing, while Objectors' arguments provide fascinating speculation for a law review article,[27] they do not realistically inform the very practical decision in a class action which claims have merit. The Nationwide Class' release of claims for monetary damages is fair, reasonable and adequate.

3. Treatment of Class Members in Omitted Repealer States: [*247] Massachusetts, Missouri, New Hampshire

Various Objectors challenge the fairness of the Plan of Allocation because Nationwide Class members from Massachusetts, Missouri and New Hampshire were not included in the Indirect Purchaser State Classes. The situation in each state is now addressed.

a. Massachusetts

Massachusetts plaintiffs were initially part of the State Damage Class. They asserted a claim under the Massachusetts Consumer Protection Statute, Mass. Gen. Laws Ch. 93A. However, on February 5, 2010, Special Master Legge found that plaintiffs had failed to plead an essential element of prior notification of defendants, and dismissed the claims with leave to amend. Docket No. 597, pp.29-30. Class Counsel's Second Amended Complaint again failed to plead this element (presumably because no notification had been given), and Special Master Legge dismissed the claim with prejudice in October 2010. Docket Nos. 716, 768, pp.12-14, 796. Massachusetts was omitted from subsequent complaints. Docket Nos. 827, 1526.

Attorneys Bonsignore and Moore, on behalf of their Objector clients, contend (1) that Lead Counsel should have advised potential Massachusetts plaintiffs that their claims had been [*248] dismissed so they could file Direct Action Suits, and (2) that they represented Massachusetts clients who could have served as class representatives. As to notice, Lead Counsel did provide adequate notification in the settlement notices that were sent for both the Chunghwa and LG settlements. See Docket Nos. 1063-1, 1063-2, 2511, 2512. As to potential clients who did not assert claims, nothing prevented Mr. Bonsignore or Ms. Moore from proffering fully vetted and qualified plaintiffs to serve as class representatives. If Lead Counsel failed to include their proffered clients, they could themselves, within the almost two years remaining in the limitations period, have initiated direct actions that could have been joined with the MDL. Mr. Bonsignore claims that his client Gianasca was truly "vetted [and] ready to serve" as a representative plaintiff. Docket No. 4144, p.4. Mr. Alioto swears that he "never refused to add a viable plaintiff to this case. I have never excluded a viable plaintiff from this case. I have never committed to add a viable plaintiff to this case and then not done so." Alioto Decl in Support of IPP Motion for Final Approval, dtd. 11/19/15, ¶28 (filed on Case Anywhere.) [*249] ["Alioto Decl. III"] Having reviewed the documents claiming to show that Mr. Bonsignore proffered a viable plaintiff, the Special Master concludes that Mr. Alioto's version of the facts is more credible.

[27] See, e.g., Objectors' law review-styled discussion at pages 18-20 of their December 9, 2015 Reply brief.

Since Massachusetts claims are now barred by the applicable statute of limitations, no claims can now be added.

b. Missouri

In Missouri, IPPs never asserted a claim because, according to Lead Counsel, no Missouri plaintiff came forward to represent a Missouri class. Special Master Legge had already ruled that each state-specific class must have a named plaintiff in order to proceed. See Docket No. 768, pp.5-6; Docket No. 799 (Order adopting R&R). Mr. Bonsignore again claims that he presented Lead Counsel with a viable Missouri class representative in March 2012. Lead Counsel states that he has no record of these communications. Alioto Decl. III, ¶40. Mr. Bonsignore's supplemental filing attached an e-mail purporting to offer a Mr. Perriman as a client. But the document was not authenticated and lacks any indication that Perriman ever purchased any CRT products. Docket No. 4144-5. Once again, the Special Master concludes that Lead Counsel's recitation is more credible.

c. New Hampshire

[*250] As with the Missouri claim, IPPs never asserted a New Hampshire claim because no New Hampshire plaintiff came forward to represent a New Hampshire class. See Docket No. 768, pp.5-6; Docket No. 799 (Order adopting R&R). Moreover, another e-mail that Mr. Bonsignore provides to demonstrate that he notified Lead Counsel of a viable New Hampshire class representative contains no showing of when the possible client bought a CRT product or that she had proof of purchase. Docket No. 4144-3. Moreover, the e-mails are dated March, 2012 by which time the 3-year statute of limitations on the New Hampshire Consumer Protection Act (N.H. Rev. Stat. § 358-A:2) had run.

d. Summary

In the end, it is hypothetically possible that Lead Counsel could have scoured these three states to dredge up a plaintiff, although the Special Master does not believe that was his duty. But the explanation of the difficulties of locating viable plaintiffs is plausible, and counsel for Objectors do not explain why they did not institute direct actions if Lead Counsel indeed failed or refused to join viable plaintiffs. The objections to the settlement on this basis are without merit.

4. The Plan of Allocation with Regard to the Members of the Nationwide Class Who Are Not Members of the Indirect Purchaser State Classes is Fair, Adequate and Reasonable

This plan of allocation is fair, reasonable and adequate as to these members of the Nationwide Class who are not eligible for monetary compensation because Lead Counsel made reasonable, rational, good-faith valuations of the strength of potential claims in non-repealer states based on governing law, and as to the omitted repealer states Lead Counsel did not fail in [*251] his responsibilities to pursue any viable claims from those states. This plan of allocation was already approved by this Court without objection in the LG settlement. Class members in these categories who are unsatisfied with the Proposed Settlements had the opportunity to opt out and pursue their own legal remedies. Courts routinely hold that the opt-out remedy is sufficient to protect class members who are unhappy with the negotiated class action settlement terms. *Klee v. Nissan N. Am., Inc. , 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 88270, 2015 WL 4538426, at 8 (C.D.Cal. July 7, 2015).

5. Objections to Plan of Allocation Based on Chunghwa Settlement

Plaintiffs entered into a settlement with Chunghwa Picture Tubes, Ltd. for $10,000,000 cash. The Court granted preliminary approval of that settlement on August 9, 2011 and final approval on March 22, 2012. Docket Nos. 992, 1105. Although the Chunghwa settlement constitutes a tiny percentage of the total settlement funds in this case, Objectors have raised two troublesome due process issues as to whether the terms of the Chunghwa settlement conflict with the current proposed Plan of Allocation. Cooper/Scarpulla Reply in Support of Objections to IPP Plaintiffs' Motion for Approval of Settlements, dtd. 12/9/15, pp. 24-27 (filed on Case Anywhere). The two purported [*252] conflicts are: (1) the Chunghwa settlement permits resellers of CRT products to recover damages but the current Plan of Allocation does not, and (2) the Chunghwa settlement distributes the net settlement proceeds to 24 states pro rata in accordance with their respective populations in 2000, but the current Plan of Allocation distributes funds pro rata to all eligible claimants without regard to state populations.

Lead Counsel's motion for preliminary approval of the Chunghwa settlement "propose[d] that distribution of settlement funds be deferred until the termination of the case" and that Lead Counsel would "address any allocation issues which arise at that time as well." Docket No. 884, at 18. The preliminary approval Order for the Chunghwa settlement states that "[t]he distribution of the Net Settlement Fund shall be deferred until a later date" and that "Plaintiffs shall propose a method of distribution at that time, which shall be subject to court approval." Docket No. 993, at ¶11. The long form notice of the Chunghwa settlement under heading 10 ("When can I get a payment?") reads as follows:

> "No money will be distributed to Settlors yet. The lawyers will pursue the lawsuit against the Non-Settling [*253] Defendants to see if any future settlements or judgments can be obtained in the case and then be distributed together to reduce expenses. It is possible that money will be distributed to organizations who are, as nearly as practicable, representatives of the interests of indirect purchasers of CRT Products instead of Settlors themselves if the cost to process claims would result in small payments to Settlors."

Chunghwa Notice, p.4, Q.10.

Notice was duly given to the Chunghwa Class that stated, as detailed below, that the net funds after payment of attorney's fees and costs would be distributed to all indirect purchasers, including resellers, and to the states pro rata based on their populations. Ultimately, the Final Judgment confirmed the terms of the settlement and stated,

> "Without affecting the finality of this Judgment in any way, this Court retains continuing jurisdiction over: (a) implementation of this settlement and any distribution to Class Members pursuant to further orders of this Court; and (b) disposition of the Settlement Fund..." Docket 1106, ¶10.

The currently proposed settlements define members in the Nationwide Class and in the Indirect Purchaser State Classes as indirect [*254] purchasers who purchased CRT Products "for their own use and not for resale. (emphasis added)". Chunghwa, however, negotiated a release on behalf of a Nationwide Class of indirect purchasers that includes resellers as well as end-buyers. Docket No. 884-1 at Ex. 1, ¶1; see also Long Form of Notice at Exhibit A, Fisher Chunghwa Notice Declaration, p. 4:

> "7. How do I know if I am one of the Settlors? The Settlement Class ('Settlors') includes any person or business that indirectly bought in the U.S. (excluding claims under the Washington Unfair Business Practices and Consumer Protection Act) from March 1, 1995 through November 25, 2007, any CRT Product made by the Defendants. Both consumers and resellers are included in the Settlement Class ... (emphasis added)."

Long and Short Forms of Notice at Exhibits A & B of Fisher Chunghwa Notice Declaration, Docket No. 1063.

In addition, the current proposed Plan of Allocation compensates class members using a pro-rata approach per claim. That is, class members in the 22 Indirect Purchaser States will all be treated the same when it comes to distributing the settlement money. However, in Chunghwa funds will be distributed on a pro rata basis to " [*255] [e]ach State listed in the operative complaint for which damage claims are being asserted, plus the states of Illinois and Oregon." Docket No. 993, ¶10, Chunghwa Preliminary Approval Order. The Order continues, stating: "[e]ach state's pro rata share will be determined by computing its population as a percentage of the total population of all states," and "[e]ach of the states shall receive its allocable share at a future date to be approved by the Court." Id. The Order contains a chart listing the percentage of the Net Settlement Fund to be distributed to each state.[28] Similarly, the Chunghwa Notice to class members explains the following: "Regardless of whether the money is distributed to organizations or the Settlors themselves, the money will first be allocated amongst the 24 states listed on page 1 of this notice, so that each state receives its pro rata share. Each state's pro rata share shall be determined by computing its population as a percentage of the total population of all 24 states using census figures from the year 2000." Long Form Notice, Ex. A, Fisher Chunghwa Notice Declaration, at 4, Docket No. 1063.

In contrast, the current Plan of Allocation makes no such geographical distinctions. Rather, it provides that "qualifying claimants will be eligible to claim their pro-rata share of the Settlement Fund based on the number of valid claims filed, and the number and type of CRT Products each claimant purchased during the class period." Lead Counsel's Memo, pp.22-23. Further, the current settlement excludes payment of the claims of Illinois, Oregon and Washington on behalf of their residents, but in Chunghwa the Court ordered that the states of Illinois and Oregon are to be allocated 8.59% and 2.37% of the Chunghwa Net Settlement Fund. Docket No. 993, at ¶10.

[28] The Net Settlement Fund consists of the $10 million total, less 25% for attorneys' fees, [*256] litigation expenses, notice and claim expenses. The Net Settlement Fund is to be a minimum of $5 million.

These apparent inconsistencies are relevant to the question of whether the plan of allocation satisfies due process concerns. The Court has finally approved and entered final judgment on the Chunghwa settlement that provides approximately $5,000,000 in compensation, in part for resellers and pursuant to a state-by-state pro rata distribution. Notice has been given of that settlement. IPP counsel now ask the Court to approve a settlement [*257] that pays nothing to resellers and distributes all funds, including the Chunghwa Net Settlement Fund, pro rata to all claimants. This discrepancy raises due process concerns as to both the Chunghwa class and the current Settlement class. The Chunghwa class has been told that their settlement funds will be distributed in part to resellers and pro rata by state. But if the current Plan of Allocation is adopted, the Chunghwa notice will have been inaccurate. The current Proposed Settlement class has been told that all $576,750,000, net of fees and expenses, will be distributed to them pro rata by claimant. Thus, it will contradict that notice if, as Lead Counsel may be proposing (see below), $5 million or any sum were carved out of the $576,500,000 to compensate the Chunghwa class.

Lead Counsel contends there is no fatal inconsistency between the two settlements. First, he notes that the last sentence of the Chunghwa Long Form Notice tells Chunghwa class members that they may ultimately receive nothing. ("It is possible that money will be distributed to organizations who are, as nearly as practicable, representatives of the interests of indirect purchasers of CRT Products instead of Settlors [*258] themselves if the cost to process claims would result in small payments to Settlors.") But that sentence clearly contemplates that class members would receive nothing if a cy pres distribution were made. No cy pres payment is currently contemplated. Therefore, that sentence cannot be considered adequate notice to the Chunghwa class that their distribution scheme may simply change.

Second, Lead Counsel notes that resellers along with everyone else got notice of the current settlement but that no resellers (who tend to be large, sophisticated corporations) have objected to the current settlement. That is a fair point, but the absence of an objection does not cure a due process problem if one exists.

Third, Lead Counsel seems to intend somehow to carve out funds from the current settlement to comply with the terms of the Chunghwa settlement. In briefing on this issue, he states,

> "Once the final Chunghwa Net Settlement Fund is known, the money will be allocated amongst the 24 states in accordance with Paragraph 10 of the Chunghwa Preliminary Approval Order. The Illinois and Oregon AGs will receive their states' pro rata shares (based on a Net Settlement Fund of $5 million, their shares will [*259] be $429,500 and $118,500 respectively). The other 22 states will receive their pro rata shares as part of the pro rata distribution to claimants in those states." Alioto ltr. of 1/13/16 to Special Master, p. 5, fn. 12 (filed on Case Anywhere)

But this falls well short of providing a satisfactory solution. It does not address the problem that the current settlement class will be shortchanged by whatever amount is carved out to satisfy the Chunghwa settlement terms. And it is unclear as to whether there is to be a carve out for the 22 states other than Illinois and Oregon, or whether their Chunghwa compensation will be deemed to have been received by the contemplated pro rata distribution to all claimants. More clarity is needed.

The Special Master has tried hard to find a solution to these Chunghwa issues that will not disrupt approval of this settlement. It is absurd to allow a $5,000,000 tail (the Chunghwa Net Settlement Fund) to wag a $576,750,000 dog. After all, we are talking about .8% of the current settlement fund. However, due process is due process, and final judgments cannot simply be ignored. One approach would be to rely on the language in the Chunghwa final judgment in which [*260] the Court reserved jurisdiction to order how the Chunghwa settlement funds are to be distributed. However, the Special Master cannot in good conscience recommend that the Court rely on this linguistic wiggle room to simply wipe out significant features of the Chunghwa allocation plan. Another approach would be to rely on the case law that permits a district court to make de minimis alterations in a class settlement allocation plan without providing additional notice. In re Groupon Mktg. Sales Practices Litig., 593 Fed. App. 699,701 (9th Cir. 2015) [court permitted to eliminate a $75,000 cy pres contribution from an $8.5 settlement fund without further notice]. However, again the Special Master does not think that disregarding material terms of a prior noticed and finally approved settlement can fairly be termed de minimis, even though the amount at issue here is small in relation to the total settlement.

Accordingly, the allocation plan must be disapproved until the Chunghwa problem is corrected. Lead Counsel is directed to propose a detailed plan to correct the due process problems discussed above: a plan that makes crystal clear how he proposes to satisfy the terms of the Chunghwa [*261] settlement, what (if any) corrective notice he intends to provide and to whom, and a timeline for the Court to deal with this problem.

C. Reasonableness of Notice Plan

Objectors raised several issues with regard to the notice program, including (1) the age and income profile of recipients (Cooper/Scarpulla — Docket No. 4115, Gianasca, et al — Docket No. 4119, Rockhurst University, et al — Docket No. 4113); (2) notice to foreign residents (Cooper/Scarpulla — Docket No. 4115, Gianasca, et al — Docket No. 4119, Rockhurst University, et al; (3) notice to non-English speakers (Cooper/Scarpulla — Docket No. 4115, Gianasca, et al — Docket No. 4119); (4) the supposed need for televised notice (Cooper/Scarpulla — Docket No. 4115, Gianasca, et al — Docket No. 4119, Rockhurst University, et al — Docket No. 4113); and (5) the terms of the notice provided to the nationwide class (Rockhurst University, et al — Docket No. 4113, Johnson — Docket No. 4128). The California Attorney General also raised a concern about the adequacy of notice to California natural persons, which was discussed at VII.A.6 above.

Rule 23(c)(2)(B) requires "the best notice that is practicable under the circumstances, including individual notice [*262] to all members who can be identified through reasonable effort." Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(c)(2)(B). Such notice must "clearly and concisely state in plain, easily understood language," the nature of the action, the class definition, and class members' right to exclude themselves from the class, among other things. Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(c)(2)(B). Further, before granting final approval to a proposed class settlement, the court must "direct notice in a reasonable manner to all class members who would be bound by the proposal." Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(e)(1). While Rule 23 requires that reasonable efforts be made to reach all class members, it does not require that each individual actually receive notice. Silber v. Mabon, 18 F.3d 1449, 1454 (9th Cir. 1994); see also Rannis v. Recchia, 380 Fed. Appx. 646, 650 (9th Cir. 2010). The Notice Program for the Proposed Settlements meets these standards.

Credible evidence demonstrates that older individuals, those with lower incomes, non-English speakers, foreign residents, non-Internet users, residents of states excluded from the damage recovery, etc. — were not ignored by the Notice Program. Lower-income and/or older class members were notified by way of newspapers, magazine, and website announcements. Joseph Fisher specifically explains how publications that were included in the Notice Program have significant low-income readership. Fisher Decl., [*263] ¶5b (TV Guide where 30% of readers have incomes less than $30,000 and Parade Magazine, where 21 % of readers have incomes less than $30,000). Non-Internet users were also sufficiently notified by publishing in TV Guide, Parade, American Profile, The Wall Street Journal, USA Today, The New York Times, San Francisco Chronicle, El Nueva Dia, People, Time, and Sports Illustrated. Fisher Decl. Reporting on Class Notice, pp. 8-9.

Foreign residents who were in a position to purchase CRT products in the United States during the Class Period fall squarely within the notice efforts. The Summary Notice was published as a press release in 78 foreign-based media outlets in 15 countries, including Canada and Mexico. See Fisher Decl., ¶3. Nonresidents living in border regions — particularly those capable of entering the United States for purposes of purchasing a television or computer — are likely to use the internet just like everyone else; thus, they were subject to digital outreach. The impact of these efforts is demonstrated by the fact that claims have already been submitted in this Proposed Settlements by non-U.S. persons with addresses in numerous foreign countries including Canada, Costa Rica, [*264] Germany, Great Britain, Israel, Iceland and Spain. Id., ¶3c.

Specific efforts were made to notify non-English speaking class members. A Spanish language version of the Summary Notice just discussed was disseminated and picked up by 81 media outlets in the United States and abroad. Id., ¶5d. And over 33 million impressions were generated across the Google ad-serving network from advertisements on Google Spanish. Id.

Objectors also criticize the lack of televised notice. However, IPPs explain there was good reason to forego television advertising. "As television viewership becomes increasingly fragmented over hundreds of alternative television stations, with many viewers 'cutting their cords' to cable altogether and downloading their television content commercial free via the internet, the choice to use alternative forms of media to reach indirect purchasers of CRT Products is an entirely defensible decision." IPPs Response to Cal. Att. Gen., p.4. In short, on a cost-benefit basis the decision to replace television ads with alternative effective methods was entirely defensible. See U.S. v. Oregon, 913 F.2d at 581.

Courts acknowledge that, while there will always be alternative ways to provide notice to a class, all methods [*265] of notice are not required in all cases. See Google Referrer Header Privacy Litig., 87 F.Supp.3d at 1138. Thus, Rockhurst University's belief that "a New Media notice campaign may not be the appropriate manner to notice the claimant class herein" does not mean that its proposed "Old Media" campaign is better or legally required. See id. Perfection is not the standard when it comes to delivering notice of a class action settlement. Rather, Rule 23 merely requires "reasonable efforts to reach as many class members as possible through either individual or publication means." Silber, 18 F.3d at 1454.

This was accomplished here. As the Fisher Declaration explains, CRT class members were notified through a carefully designed combination of (1) direct mailed/emailed notice to more than ten million unique addresses (including many of the largest institutional end-users of CRTs) (Fisher Decl., ¶¶8-9; (2) publication notice in magazines and newspapers with collective readership of more than 150 million (id., ¶10); (3) digital notice via paid advertisements on Google, Facebook, and other popular websites (id., ¶¶ 11-12); (4) English and Spanish press releases carried by almost 300 domestic and foreign websites with a total potential audience of over 72 million; and (5) the CRT settlement [*266] website, which has received more than 537,000 unique visitors. Collectively, these efforts reached an estimated 83% of class members with an estimated frequency of 3.1 (id., ¶18d), which is well-within the acceptable range. See "Judges' Class Action Notice and Claims Process Checklist and Plain Language Guide," Federal Judicial Center (2010) at 3 (available at http://www.fjc.gov/public/pdf.nsf/lookup/NotCheck.pdf/$file/NotCheck.pdf (explaining that a court should consider "whether all the notice efforts together will reach a high percentage of the class.").

Objectors Scarpulla and Cooper challenge Fisher's contention the notice campaign reached approximately 83% of class members. They claim that the paid print-media portion of the notice plan would reach only 58% of the target group of potential class members. But Mr. Fisher persuasively explained that his reach and frequency calculations for print media were based on survey data from GjK MRI, and for digital media were based on survey data from comScore. Fisher Decl., ¶3. No legitimate argument has been proffered that challenges the legitimacy of these two data sources. Moreover, Fisher explains that his calculation properly adjusted for the estimated overlap between print and digital media. The estimated reach for the class demographic [*267] for print media was 57% and the estimated reach for digital media was 61%. The two percentages were not added together as objectors maintain. Rather, the overlap between print and digital was eliminated, resulting in a net reach of 83%. Id.

Cooper and Scarpulla also asked the Special Master to engage a neutral expert to report on the effectiveness of the notice given in this litigation. The Special Master finds this unnecessary in light of the persuasive evidence before him to conclude that the Notice Program that has been implemented is fair, adequate and reasonable under the tenets of Rule 23. Objectors could have, but did not, submit any contrary expert evidence. "In all cases the court should strike an appropriate balance [in determining the type of notice] between protecting class members and making Rule 23 workable." In re Domestic Air Transp. Antitrust Litig., 148 F.R.D. 297, 335 (N.D.Ga. 1993). The notice program appropriately achieved that balance.

Rockhurst University and Johnson challenge the clarity of the notice's wording. Docket Nos. 4113 and 4128. The Special Master finds these objections unpersuasive. The notice clearly explained (1) the class definitions for both the "Statewide Damages Classes" and the "Nationwide Class"; (2) the nature of the "release [of] [*268] the injunctive relief claims of consumers ... [in] the Nationwide Class; and (3) that "[o]nly members of the Statewide Damages Classes are eligible to receive a payment." See Notice at 1, 6, 7. Therefore, Rockhurst University's objection is without merit. Johnson's complaints that the notice did not adequately set forth with precision every mechanic of the claims process and state exactly how much money each class member would receive are misplaced. Rule 23 requires only that notice provide sufficient detail "to alert those with adverse viewpoints to investigate and to come forward and be heard." In re Online DVD-Rental Antitrust Litig., 779 F.3d 934, 946 (9th Cir. 2015). The Detailed Notice here accomplished that. Section 9 of the Detailed Notice states:

> "Payments will be determined on a pro rata basis. This means that payment amounts will be based on the number of valid claims filed, as well as on the number and type of CRT Product(s) purchased: Standard CRT Television (screen size of less than 30 inches); Large CRT Television (screen size of 30 inches or larger); or CRT Computer Monitor."
> "At this time, it is unknown how much money each Class Member will recover. It is expected that a minimum payment of $25 will be made to all Statewide Damages Class Members who submit a valid claim. [*269] The maximum payment will be three times the estimated money damages for each claimant."

The settlement website — www.CRTclaims.com — questions 12 and 13 of the "Frequently Asked Questions" state:

> FAQ 12: "Do I need to supply documentation or proof of what I purchased?"
> Answer: "Not with your original claim submission, but the Settlement Administrator may request it at a later time, so save any documentation/proof of purchase."
> FAQ 13: "What if I don't have any documentation?"
> Answer: "You don't need any documentation to file your claim. So don't let that stop you. Only if the Settlement Administrator ever asks for documentation will you need to provide it. The Settlement Administrator understands the difficulty of maintaining records from more than a decade ago. If the Settlement Administrator does request documentation, you can send a letter explaining what proof if any you have of the purchases you've claimed and it will be reviewed on a case-by-case basis. There is a chance that you may still get paid even if you don't have any documentation."

The Special Master recommends that all notice objections be overruled.

D. Other Objections to Approval

1. Objection Based on Perceived [*270] Strength of State Laws

Objector Clifton argues that the settlements are unfair because they fail to give preference to class members residing in states with strong consumer protection laws, such as California. He argues that the settlement fund should be distributed not pro rata, but instead "should be allocated in a way that tracks the differences in various states' consumer protection and antitrust laws," citing In re Relafen Antitrust Litig., 231 F.R.D. 52 (D.Mass. 2005). Docket No. 4099, pp.3-4.

The problem with Clifton's objection is that this approach was expressly rejected in Sullivan, 667 F.3d at 327-28. There, the Third Circuit agreed that there would be substantial imprecision "in weighing class member claims based on the relative strength of different state law claims." Id. (internal quotations omitted). The court added: "[i]t may be entirely reasonable to apply the same damages calculation to claimants from all states because ... it is purely speculative that claimants from indirect purchaser states could anticipate a greater recovery than claimants from other states." (Id. (internal quotations omitted). "We can find no support in our case law for differentiating within a class based on the strength or weakness of the theories of recovery." Id.

Moreover, as in Sullivan [*271] , each class member here suffered the same injury (i.e. overcharging), so a pro rata distribution makes sense. See also DRAM, Docket No. 2132 ["any weighted distribution plan may ultimately tum on subjective views as to the relative merits and relative importance of aspects of the totality of a class member's released claims, and spawn an ancillary round of litigation among class member objectors about who should get how much and on what basis."].

Clifton also asserts that the state-specific class representatives did not advocate for compensation based "on the relative strengths of their states' consumer protection laws." Docket No. 4099, p.5. But he does not dispute that every class representative was represented by counsel whose adequacy he does not challenge. Clifton has not met his burden of proving his assertions challenging the reasonableness of this class action settlement. See Oregon, 913 F.2d at 581.

In light of the above, the Special Master recommends that Clifton's objections relating to the perceived strength of various States' laws be OVERRULED.

2. Objections based on Inadequate Representation

Various objectors argue that the Indirect Purchaser State Classes and the Nationwide Class were not adequately [*272] represented by the class representatives and IPP Counsel. See Docket No. 4113 (Rockhurst Univ., et al Objection, pp. 3-7); see also Scarpulla/Cooper Reply, 12/9/15. However, evidence and persuasive legal authority in support of their position is lacking.

To satisfy constitutional due process concerns, absent class members must be afforded adequate representation before entry of a judgment that binds them. Hanlon v. Chrysler Corp., 150 F.3d 1011, 1020 (9th Cir. 1998). The fulcrum of the adequacy requirement is an alignment of interests and incentives between the representative plaintiffs, counsel, and the absent class members. See *Hopson v. Hanesbrands Inc., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 33900, 2009 WL 928133, at 4 ["Representation is adequate if: (1) the class representative and counsel do not have any conflicts of interest with other class members; and (2) the representative plaintiff and counsel will prosecute the action vigorously on behalf of the class."].

For the reasons stated, the Special Master concludes that Class Counsel and the class representatives all provided adequate representation, and there was no conflict of interest requiring the creation of subclasses or separate counsel. The Special Master recommends that all objections to the Proposed Settlements on these grounds be OVERRULED.

VIII. APPROVAL OF REQUEST FOR [*273] ATTORNEYS' FEES

A. Request for Attorneys' Fees

IPP class counsel ask the court to follow a percentage-of-the-fund approach and approve an award of $192,250,000, which is one-third (33%) of the $576,750,000 settlement fund. They have incurred a lodestar at historic billing rates of $83,753,999.05 ($90,075,076.90 at current billing rates). Therefore, the requested fee award represents a multiplier of approximately 2.3. [IPP Fee Motion, p. 1 [Dkt. 4071]; Compendium of IPP Counsel Declarations, pp. 1-2 [Dkt. 4073]

The following objections were made to the fee request: (1) Docket No. 4099 — objection by Donnie Clifton; (2) Docket No. 4106 - objection by Douglas St. John; (3) Docket No. 4111 — objection by John Finn and Laura Townsend Fortman; (4) Docket No. 4112 — objection by Dan L. Williams & Co.; (5) Docket No. 4115: -- objection by Francis Scarpulla and Josef Cooper; (6) Docket No. 4119 — objection by Anthony Gianasca, et al; (7) Docket No. 4128 — by Elizabeth Kimberly Johnson; (8) Docket No. 4140 — by Josie Saik.

B. Methodology for Reviewing Request

The "common fund doctrine" permits attorneys who recover a fund for the benefit of the class to obtain "a reasonable attorney's fee from the [*274] fund as a whole." Boeing Co. v. Van Gemert, 444 U.S. 472, 478, 100 S.

Ct. 745, 62 L. Ed. 2d 676 (1980). The court has the independent obligation to ensure that the award of fees, as well as the settlement itself, is reasonable. In re Bluetooth. 654 F.3d at 949.

In the Ninth Circuit a court may apply either a lodestar or a percentage-of-the-fund method in calculating the appropriate fee award. Vizcaino v. Microsoft Corp., 290 F.3d 1043 (9th Cir. 2002); In re Bluetooth, 654 F.3d at 942; McGee v. China Electric Motor, Inc.,812 F.3d 734, 2016 U.S. App. LEXIS 679, No. 13-56903, 1/15/2016. In common fund cases there are cogent advantages to using the percentage-of-the-fund method in view of the subjectivity of a lodestar and the tendency of a pure lodestar approach to create incentives for counsel to spend unnecessary time on a case. The lodestar figure is calculated by multiplying the reasonable number of hours spent and adequately documented by prevailing counsel times a reasonable hourly rate. Using the percentage calculation, the court typically begins with the 9th Circuit "benchmark" of 25%, and then explains what special circumstances justify a deviation upward or downward from that benchmark. In re Bluetooth, 654 F.3d at 942; Six Mexican Workers v. Ariz. Citrus Growers, 904 F.2d 1301, 1311 (9th Cir. 1990); Keirsay v. eBay, Inc., 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21371, 2014 WL 644738 (N.D.Cal. Feb. 18, 2014) [Tigar, J.] Courts are further encouraged to guard against unreasonable results by cross-checking the method used against a second method. Vizcaino, 290 F.3d at 1050; In re Bluetooth, 654 F.3d at 944. The Ninth Circuit has repeatedly approved beginning [*275] with a percentage analysis and cross-checking it against a lodestar with a multiplier if appropriate. Online DVD-Rental Antitrust Litig., 779 F.3d 934, 955 (9th Cir. 2015); Vizcaino, 290 F.3d at 1050.

Objectors Scarpulla and Cooper (Docket No. 4115 and Reply dtd. 12/9/15, e-filed with JAMS] argue that the court should apply a pure lodestar approach because there are "serious problems with time and expenses." They make four arguments. First, they maintain that a percentage approach will unduly reward inefficient counsel and those who lack experience in antitrust class actions, while a lodestar approach will properly reward skilled firms and penalize those who were "learning on the job" or did not put funds at risk to cover ongoing expenses. Second, they argue that the billing records here show sloppy and potentially inaccurate timekeeping practices (e.g., block billing, use of minimum quarter-hour increments, handwritten entries), which call for an across-the-board reduction in the lodestar. Third, they argue that Lead Counsel used poor judgment in engaging three firms in Fall 2014 as special trial counsel to prepare and try the case commencing in March 2015. Fourth, they argue that Lead Counsel wasted time and resources in an unnecessary dispute with the California Attorney General [*276] regarding discovery and the settlement with Phillips in California's parens patriae case in state court.

None of the Scarpulla/Cooper objections are a basis to employ a pure lodestar approach. Indeed, if their criticisms of billing practices in this case were correct, the court should be reluctant to rely entirely on allegedly inaccurate and padded billing records that contain charges for unproductive time. Their objections are, however, a good reason to use a lodestar as a check against a percentage of the fund - with appropriate scrutiny of the billing records. As discussed in detail below, the Special Master agrees that the total lodestar and the requested percentage should be adjusted downward because of various factors. Moreover, when it comes to allocating the total approved fee among the various class counsel firms, more meticulous scrutiny to each firm's billing will take note of a particular firm's inefficiency, inexperience or bad judgment.

Therefore, the Special Master concludes that the proper approach to assessing the total attorney's fee award in this case is to begin with the 9th Circuit benchmark of 25%, to determine whether there are grounds to adjust it upwards as IPP [*277] Counsel request, or downward based on Objectors' criticisms, and to cross-check the resulting percentage against the lodestar after adjusting it for any factors such as inefficiency. The Special Master also follows the Ninth Circuit's direction to apply current, not historic, rates in order to account for the delay of up to eight years for some firms in receiving payment. Fischel v. States Life Assur. Soc., 307 F.3d 997 (9th Cir. 2002); McGee at p. 10.

C. Legal Standards for Approval

Although expressed in different terms in various 9th Circuit cases, it is accepted that a court should employ the following criteria to determine the fairness of a requested fee award in a common fund case: the results achieved for the class; the complexity of the case and the risk and expense to counsel of litigating it; the skill, experience and performance of counsel, both plaintiff and defense; the contingent nature of the fee and the fees awarded in comparable cases. Vizcaino, 290 F.3d at 1048-1049; In re Bluetooth, 654 F.3d at 942; see also Kerr v. Screen Actors Guild, Inc., 526 F.2d 67, 70 (9th Cir. 1975) [listing the "Kerr factors"] Failure to consider the Kerr factors, which are the same as those in Vizcaino and Bluetooth in different words, is an abuse of discretion. McGee at p. 9. The most critical factor in evaluating the reasonableness of a fee request is the degree of success in achieving results for the class. [*278] Hensley v. Eckerhart, 461 U.S. 424, 434-436, 103 S. Ct. 1933, 76 L. Ed. 2d 40 (1983); In re Bluetooth, 645 F.3d at 942. The Special Master now examines how each of those factors weighs in this case with respect to a deviation from the 25% benchmark.

1. Results Achieved for the Class, Including Non-Cash Benefits

IPP counsel note that the settlement amount of $576,750,000 is the second-largest monetary recovery in any indirect purchaser price fixing case (after the LCD case). No one disputes that characterization. This entire sum, net of fees, incentive payments and expenses, will be paid pro rata to class members filing proper claims. There will be no reversion of surplus funds to defendants. There will be no cy pres distribution. The settlement also provides for non-monetary compensation in the form of cooperation agreements which will assist IPP counsel in concluding their actions against remaining defendants. Alioto Decl. II, ¶31

Three benchmarks offer enlightening comparisons to the result obtained by IPP counsel. First, the settlement amount is about 20% of the potential damages of $2.78 billion as estimated by plaintiff's expert, Dr. Netz. It is approximately nine times the $61 million estimate by one defense expert. (The other defense experts estimated damages at zero.) Alioto Decl. II, ¶34. [*279] Given the risks and the complexity of the case (see VIII.C.2 below and VII.A.1 & 2 above), and in particular the challenge of formulating a credible calculation of pass-through overcharges, the settlement represents an extraordinary achievement. Second, the settlement amount dwarfs the $32 million criminal fine obtained by the Department of Justice against Samsung, the only party against whom DOJ brought a criminal proceeding. Third, the settlement measures up well against the $1.1 billion settlement achieved by the IPP's in the LCD case, where the conspiracy was of more recent origin, not decades old, and the DOJ obtained criminal fines of about $894 million against many defendants who pleaded guilty.

Certain objectors are critical of the settlement amount. They note that it is only 20% of the damage estimate by IPP's expert, and only about 7% of that amount trebled. They compare that result to the $1.1 billion IPP settlement in LCD which was closer to 50% of its expert's damage figure. But LCD and this case are only partially comparable. The LCD conspiracy was much more recent, so proof problems were far easier. And the Justice Department obtained dozens of guilty pleas, which eased [*280] the path to finding of liability for the IPP's. In the end, the $576,000,000 figure speaks for itself. Only one other price fixing case has settled for more.

Objector St. John belittles the result on two grounds: first, the result was in large part attributable not to the efforts of IPP counsel, but to the Chunghwa settlement, the Samsung guilty plea and factual findings entered by the European Commission, and second, the very large settlement obtained from Samsung and LPD (a combination of Philips and LG) shows that the settlements with other defendants for much lower amounts were inadequate. St. John Objection Docket No. 4106, and Reply, e-filed with JAMS 12/9/15, pp. 4-11.

Chunghwa: The IPPs settled with Chunghwa in April 2009 for $10 million in cash. Alioto Decl. II, ¶10. In moving for approval IPP counsel represented that Chunghwa's agreement to cooperate was of great value, and St. John argues that IPP counsel is judicially estopped from claiming that Chunghwa's cooperation was of minimal help. St. John's position is without merit. IPP counsel persuasively demonstrated that, while it appeared in 2009 that the cooperation might be of great help, circumstances changed as discovery [*281] progressed. Chunghwa could provide little information about large CPTs or about the circumstances of the conspiracy in the United States, and many of the Chunghwa meeting reports proved unhelpful. IPP Reply II, e-filed with JAMS 12/23/15, pp. 13-14. It is noteworthy that it took four years after the Chunghwa settlement for IPPs to obtain another settlement, which suggests that Chunghwa's cooperation was not of overwhelming assistance.

Samsung guilty plea: Samsung pled guilty in 2011. This plea established the existence of the conspiracy. But it did nothing to lessen IPP's challenges to obtain class certification, obtain, translate and organize evidence from many foreign defendants, beat back repeated legal motions, and prove pass-through and a credible damage claim. To suggest that the Samsung guilty plea meaningfully detracts from the quality of IPP counsel's efforts to produce the settlement is ludicrous.[29]

European Commission: St. John argues that the European Commission's adoption of a Statement [*282] of Objections in 2009 and its Summary Decision in 2013 provided the real impetus for defendants to settle. He argues that a 2014 Delaware state court decision, Vichi v. Koninklijke Philips Elec., N.V., 85 A.3d 725 (Del.Ch. 2014), accepted EC findings as preclusive. IPP counsel cogently refute this argument. The evidentiary value of a Statement of Objections is highly debatable, and the Summary Decision which might have been of value was not made public until December 2014, only a few months before the conclusion of the settlements. Moreover, IPP counsel correctly note critical distinguishing factors in Vichi: it was a fraud case not an antitrust case; it involved conduct in Europe not the United States.

In summary, in any long complex litigation each day brings either good news — and surely the Chunghwa settlement, the guilty plea and the EC rulings count as good news for the IPP's — or bad news. But such news, good or bad, rarely replaces or significantly detracts from the effort and skill that litigation counsel must employ to produce an extraordinary result. It is the height of Monday-morning quarterbacking, not sound legal analysis or common sense, for St. John to suggest that IPP's result was generated in a meaningful way by these three factors [*283] as opposed to counsel's eight-year sustained efforts.

Disproportionate Samsung/Philips Settlements: Samsung settled for $225,000,000; Philips[30] settled for $175,000,000. The remaining defendants settled for amounts between $10-70 million. Lead Counsel responds to this objection by pointing to the market shares of Samsung and Philips. By 2004 Samsung held 29% of the CRT market and 42% of the CDT market. Philips/LPD's market share was 27% for CRTs and 32% for CDTs. Their shares of the U.S. market were even higher," and lead Counsel believes there was strong evidence of their conspiratorial activity within the U.S. These factors account for the higher settlement amounts.

There is no evidence that, because whopping settlements were obtained against two defendants, Class Counsel sold out the class by agreeing to lowball settlements with the others. Class Counsel would have no incentive to act in such a fashion. The settlements were mediated by two respected experienced mediators who were former federal judges. St. John's objection lacks any factual basis or common sense. [*284]

Given the extraordinarily large settlement amount, this factor weighs heavily in favor of an upward adjustment of the Ninth Circuit 25% benchmark for attorneys' fees.

2. Risk, Expense and Complexity of Case

No objector seriously questions the risk and complexity of the IPP case. Most notably, the alleged conspiracy was 20 years old, which greatly complicated the obtaining of evidence. Storage facilities with paper documents had to be searched in a number of countries; backup tapes had to be restored; witnesses were dead or unavailable; one defendant had been in bankruptcy. Since most of the evidence consisted of foreign language documents, IPP's had to arrange for certified translations. Each deposition of a foreign language witness was twice as long as normal because of the need for translation.

Class certification, particularly given recent appellate decisions[31], is a severe hurdle. Demonstrating that the IPPs' expert had a valid methodology for proving overcharges generally, and pass-through damages in particular, on a class-wide basis is fraught with risk. Several class actions in the Northern District have failed to obtain certification

[29] IPP counsel notes correctly that a DOJ prosecution of one defendant actually helps other defendants who argue that their non-prosecution demonstrates their innocence. Alioto Reply Decl. ¶4.

[30] The settling entity was actually LPD, a combination of Philips and LG, whom the IPPs held responsible for Philips's liability.

based on comparable problems, two of them rejecting [*285] the analysis of Dr. Janet Netz, IPPs' expert in this case.[32]

IPPs faced also a Daubert motion that challenged the methodology of their key expert, Dr. Netz. Although they prevailed, doing so was far from certain. The Special Master recalls well the briefing and hearing of that motion, during which defendants made exceedingly persuasive arguments for disallowing the testimony.

Litigation involving international price-fixing cartels has become more challenging in light of the FTAIA, which has also been the subject of recent appellate rulings not favorable to plaintiffs.[33]

IPPs took about 100 depositions of defendants and defended 24 depositions of their class representatives. Millions of pages of documents were produced.

As trial approached, defendants filed 36 summary judgment motions, of which 11 were directed at the IPP case. All motions had to be coordinated with other MDL plaintiffs. Dozens of motions in limine were filed.

As for expense, 28 class counsel firms paid assessments to the fund for managing the case. [*286] Objector Scarpulla notes that they also made use of funds from the Chunghwa and LG settlements that occurred early on. Nonetheless, $2,405,000 was contributed from the pockets of class counsel to litigate the case, every dollar of which was at risk if they were unsuccessful.

Some of the risk and complexity here go with the territory in any price-fixing class action. However, given the age of the conspiracy and the recent unfavorable appellate precedents, this factor weighs slightly in favor of an upward adjustment of the 25% Ninth Circuit benchmark for attorney's fees.

3. Quality of Representation, Plaintiff and Defense

Notwithstanding the criticisms leveled at Lead Counsel by several objectors, the Special Master concludes that the entire record of the litigation viewed fairly demonstrates that Class Counsel managed this case diligently and efficiently for the benefit of the class, with the exceptions noted below.

Several objectors claimed that Lead Counsel, Mario Alioto, lacked experience as a lead counsel and had never tried an antitrust case. Mr. Alioto provided ample evidence of his 30 years of experience in antitrust cases, including acting as lead counsel and in trials. Alioto Decl. [*287] II, 11/19/15, ¶21. There is substantial evidence, most persuasively from the other highly experienced class counsel who worked with him for eight years, that Mr. Alioto managed the case effectively.

The prosecution of the case was divided in a sensible way among class counsel firms, both by defendant and by task. A few examples will suffice. Straus & Boies led the foreign language team to organize the translation and review of the thousands of foreign language documents and also was responsible for discovery against Samsung. Kirby McInerney defended all discovery against class representatives, as well as taking 12 Samsung depositions and leading discovery against Direct Action Plaintiffs. Zelle Hofmann managed discovery against Panasonic/MTPD. Andrew Anderson handled Hitachi discovery; Bramson Plutzik managed Toshiba discovery; Cooper & Kirkham managed Philips discovery; Glancy Prongay & Murray handled LG Electronics discovery. Document review was similarly coordinated among a number of firms. (Alioto Decl. III, ¶8-14). And so on. As much as is reasonably possible in such a complex case, this division of labor tended to reduce duplication.

The ability to lead a cohesive and collaborative team is the single most important attribute of a Lead Counsel in a huge MDL litigation. Lead Counsel need not be Clarence Darrow reborn — [*290] plenty of skilled courtroom lawyers will step forward to try the case. Lead Counsel must instead embody General Eisenhower who succeeded at Normandy because he could shape the disparate American, English, French and other forces and huge egos into a cohesive force with a common objective. The evidence is overwhelming that Lead Counsel pulled this off.

Before addressing the Objectors' criticisms, the Special Master notes that three troublesome issues have arisen with Class Counsel's plan of allocation: the limitation of monetary compensation to class members from Illinois Brick repealer states; the failure to obtain class representatives from three repealer states, Massachusetts, Missouri and New Hampshire; and disparities between the allocation plan for these Proposed Settlements and the Chungwa allocation plan. The Special Master has concluded that the first two problems are surmountable. But the Chunghwa situation needs to be corrected. It is hard to avoid the conclusion that more attention to detail and foresight on the part of Lead Counsel might have averted or mitigated at least some of these problems. No one is perfect, particularly with the clarity of hindsight looking back over [*291] eight fraught years of difficult litigation. The Special Master has been clear that the fact these issues arose does not mean that the representation of the IPP class was ineffective or infected with conflicts of interest. It was not. But these factors do tarnish somewhat the glow of success that Lead Counsel might otherwise bathe in.

Objectors criticize the quality of the representation for the following basic reasons: Lead Counsel engaged three "trial" firms in the last months of the case to lead the trial team; Lead Counsel wasted time arguing with the California Attorney General; monetary compensation was restricted to the Statewide Litigation class of 22 states; too many class counsel firms were joined.

Three "Trial" Firms

In approximately October 2014 Lead Counsel engaged three very experienced antitrust trial counsel: Freedman Boyd et. al.; Fine Kaplan and Black; and Hulett Harper Stewart. Joe Goldberg of Freedman Boyd had just completed his work as lead trial counsel in the Urethanes Antitrust Litigation, one of the very few price fixing cases to go to trial, which brought home a verdict of over $1 billion. Fine Kaplan was co-lead counsel in that case. Alioto Decl. III, ¶22. Mr. [*292] Alioto states that he made "a reasoned judgment" that additional trial expertise was needed, that he saved money by engaging the firms only in the last five months before trial, and that doing so enhanced settlement leverage with defendants who could see that Class Counsel would be ready for trial. (Alioto Decl. III, ¶22-23). Objector Scarpulla is highly critical of this decision, noting that other experienced trial counsel were on the team and that getting the three new firms up to speed wasted money.

The Special Master has examined the time records of the three "trial" firms. The records, both the summaries attached to their declarations and the raw contemporaneous billing entries, do not exhibit undue wasted or unproductive time.

Freedman Boyd: 88% of the time was recorded by Joe Goldberg himself (42% of the time @ $425/hr.), two other lawyers (28% of the time @ $275 and $250/hr.), and one paralegal (18% of the time @ $100/hr.). The total time was 1,734 hours at a total charge of $554,666, at an average billing rate of $319/hr. Mr. Goldberg worked basically full time (734 hours) for 4 months, with support from two other lawyers and a paralegal. Getting the full attention of a senior [*293] courtroom trial lawyer with part-time support of two other lawyers and a paralegal is as efficient as legal staffing gets.

Fine Kaplan: Staffing here was broader: about 5 partners billing $450-750/hr, two associates billing $250/hr. and a paralegal. They recorded 5,382 hours at a charge of $2.625 million at an average billing rate of $487/hr. This firm did the workhorse part of trial preparation: selecting exhibits, motions in limine, assembling deposition testimony, and the like.

Hulett Harper: Very lean staffing: one partner at $675/hr. and one associate at $475/hr. recorded 80% of the time. The total time was 1,141 hours at a total charge of $634,696, at an average billing rate of $556/hr. The work focused on selecting deposition excerpts and preparing legal briefs.

The trial preparation that these three firms did would have had to be done by some other lawyers had they not been on board. And their "getting up to speed" recorded time was actually quite minimal. The firms each started working about October 10, 2014, and by early to mid-November they were performing hard-core trial preparation, not "getting up to speed." A reasonable estimate would be that each of the firms expended [*294] about 50-7 5 hours in "getting up to speed." Given the added focus, intensity and recent trial experience they brought to the potential trial, the Special Master concludes that Mr. Alioto's "reasoned judgment" was appropriate. After all, no one would accuse British barristers who practice in precisely this model — entering a case near trial with their sole obligation being to prepare the case for courtroom presentation — of "wasting" resources.

Dispute with California AG

Objector Scarpulla is also critical of Lead Counsel for an overall failure to cooperate with the California Attorney General, and specifically for a dispute that arose over the California AG's settlement with Philips in the state court parens action. As to the purported broader breakdown in cooperation, Mr. Scarpulla provided no details except to refer to Special Master Vaughn Walker's suggestion that Mr. Scarpulla try to mediate the relationship between Mr. Alioto and the California AG. Neither Mr. Scarpulla nor Asst. Attorney General Varanini provided any further details. So the Special Master cannot give credence to a criticism that is not backed up by factual detail in the record.

The dispute over the Philips settlement [*295] was real, but it demonstrates appropriate caution rather than incompetence or poor judgment by Lead Counsel. Philips took the position that its settlement in the state parens case would estop California members of the IPP class from obtaining relief against it in the federal case. No one — not Lead Counsel nor the California AG — thought this position had any merit. The California AG promised to represent in court that no estoppel would result. But Mr. Alioto concluded he needed to file a formal objection in state court to the Philips settlement to obtain a ruling from the California court that no estoppel would result. In the end, the state judge refused to issue such an "advisory opinion," and the federal case proceeded without disruption to settlement against Philips for the second largest amount of all the defendants.

In hindsight, could this dispute have been avoided or handled more adroitly with some saving of attorney time? Perhaps. But facing a potential loss of any damages attributable to California purchasers from a key target defendant, Lead Counsel acted prudently in taking every step to avoid an estoppel result. Whether this was "belt and suspenders" activity, or legitimate [*296] prudence, falls under the heading of reasonable litigation judgment. The Special Master will not engage in 20-20 hindsight to criticize Lead Counsel's actions here.

No monetary compensation to Nationwide Class

For the reasons discussed in detail, infra. at VII.B.2, the Special Master concludes that Lead Counsel made a legitimate decision, solidly based in law, to limit monetary compensation to class members from Illinois Brick repealer states. Certainly it is possible for an adroit legal mind to concoct a legal pathway for class members in non-repealer states to recover some claim for monetary relief. Certainly it is possible that, if pressed harder, defendants might have agreed to larger settlements to effectuate a nationwide monetary recovery. But relying on abstract legal ingenuity unsupported by existing case law and second-guessing settlement negotiations are not solid bases on which to criticize a perfectly well-founded decision by Lead Counsel that non-repealer class members had no viable claim. The Special Master concludes this was not a failure of effective representation, and it did not create a conflict of interest for Lead Counsel.

Too many class counsel

There were about 50 [*297] class counsel firms in this case. In LCD there were 116 firms. A large number were basically local counsel for class representatives from the 22 repealer states and District of Columbia. The rest were an assortment of the country's leading antitrust firms who commonly appear in MDL price fixing cases. As noted above, regardless of the number of firms, the case was managed efficiently and cost-effectively. This criticism of Lead Counsel's representation has no merit.

This factor does not weigh in favor of an increase or decrease from the Ninth Circuit 25% benchmark for attorney's fees.

4. Contingent Nature of Fees

There is no dispute that IPP counsel's compensation for eight years of work on this case was entirely contingent. They received not a dollar of compensation in the interim for 183,000 hours of work, and they were at continuous risk of receiving little or nothing had the result proved unfavorable. As a reminder, in the LCD case direct action plaintiff Best Buy went to trial against Toshiba and recovered a small verdict which was entirely offset by Toshiba's prior settlements. Thus, Best Buy recovered nothing and its counsel's fees were dramatically reduced by the court to a figure [*298] far below their lodestar. Alioto Decl. I, ¶93. This same risk of a zero recovery was borne for up to eight years by IPP counsel here.

The Ninth Circuit has directed courts to account for the delay class counsel experience in receiving their fees. There are two methods of doing this: (1) apply current rather than historic billing rates, or (2) apply historic rates with a prime interest rate adjustment. McGee at p. 11. Here the Special Master elects to apply current billing rates. Therefore, the applicable lodestar requested by class counsel is $90,075,076.90.

Not only did IPP counsel risk receiving no compensation for many years, but they put at risk $2,405,000 of their own money in assessments paid to the Litigation Expense Fund to cover the enormous expense of experts, translation and the like. See Section IX below.

Courts have repeatedly recognized that to induce attorneys to accept the risk of little or no recovery it is appropriate to award reasonable fees that often include a multiplier over their lodestar. Omnivision., 559 F.Supp.2d at 1047.

Given the 8-year duration of the case, the significant out-of-pocket expense at risk, and the risks of non-recovery noted above, this factor weighs strongly in favor of an increase from the [*299] Ninth Circuit 25% benchmark for attorney's fees.

5. Fees Awarded in Comparable Cases

Comparing the percentages and the lodestar multipliers awarded to counsel in other cases turns out to be far less useful as a metric than one might imagine. Plaintiffs such as class counsel here can list a number of cases with awards in the 25-35% range with multipliers all over the lot. *In re Vitamins Antitrust Litig., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25067, 2001 WL 34312839, at 10 (D.D.C. July 16, 2001) [34.06% of $359,438,032]; In re IPO Secs. Litig., 672 F.Supp.2d 467, 516 (D.Del. 2009) [1/3 of $510,253,000); In re Checking Account Overdraft Litig., 830 F.Supp.2d 1330, 1367 (S.D.Fla. 2011). And objectors have their own list of cases with awards being reduced to 6-12%. E.g., Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 396 F.3d 96 (2d Cir. 2005) [reduced fee from 18% to 6.5%]; Domestic Air Transport, 148 F.R.D. 297 [6-10% appropriate in megafund case]. Both sides cite to scholarly studies of fee awards. Brian T. Fitzpatrick, An Empirical Study of Class Action Settlements and Their Fee Awards, 7 J. Empirical L. Stud. 811, 838-839, 842-844 (2010) ["Fitzpatrick"]; Theodore Eisenberg & Geoffrey P. Miller, Attorneys Fees and Expenses in Class Action Settlements: 1993-2008, 7 J. Empirical L. Stud. 248 (2010) "["Eisenberg"]. IPP's expert, Richard Pearl, has offered his opinions. Decl. of Richard Pearl, ¶21. Docket No. 4071-15. Upon close examination, many of the cases are significantly distinguishable on their facts from this case. Some of the decisions that are trotted [*300] out repeatedly are now 10-15 years old or from other jurisdictions with differing perspectives toward fee awards. Therefore, the Special Master has endeavored to focus on decisions from the Ninth Circuit and when possible from the Northern District, in reasonably similar cases from fairly recent years.

This case presents the familiar problem of how to determine a reasonable fee award in a megafund case, that is one with a recovery of $100 million to over $1 billion. Some cases, though not in the Ninth Circuit, prescribe the use of an inverse scale: the higher the megafund, the lower the percentage for the fee. However, the Ninth Circuit has expressly rejected any hard rule that megafund cases are to be treated differently, although size of the fund is one factor the court should consider. Vizcaino, 290 F.3d at 1047 [declining to accept the principle that the award decreases as the fund increases]. The most effective way to control a percentage recovery in a megafund case is to compare it to the lodestar multiplier that it would generate. For example, in Gutierrez v. Wells Fargo Bank, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 67298, 2015 WL 2438274 (N.D.Cal., C-07-5923, May 21, 2015), Judge Alsup reduced a fee request from 25% of the $203 million fund to 9% because the 25% benchmark percentage would have [*301] yielded a multiplier of 10.38, which Judge Alsup termed "ridiculous." The result was to approve a 9% award that gave the two class firms multipliers of 2 and 5.5. Similarly, in Wal-Mart Stores 396 F.3d 96, the court reduced an award from the requested percentage of 18% to 6.5% on a $3.05 billion fund, largely because the 18% fee would have represented a multiplier of 9.68, which the court found excessive. The resulting 6.5% fee produced a 3.5 multiplier, which the Second Circuit concluded compared favorably with other awards, citing In re Cendant Corp PRIDES Litig., 243 F.3d 722, 742 (3d Cir. 2001) [multiplier of 1.35-2.99 common in megafunds] and NASDAQ Market-Makers, 187 F.R.D. at 489 [multipliers of 3-4.5 are common].

The recent thorough discussion of fee awards by Judge Koh in In re High-Tech Employees Antitrust Litig., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 118052, 2015 WL 5158730 (N.D.Cal. No. 11-cv-2509, Sept. 2, 2015) is highly instructive. The settlement in that case produced a common fund of $415 million, plus $20 million in prior settlements. Two groups of law firms together asked for an award of $90.6 million in fees (including $5 million awarded from prior settlements). The requests together amounted to 20.8% of the total $435 million in settlements. The lodestar was $18.2 million, so the fee request would have produced a 4.97 multiplier. Judge Koh decided to use a lodestar approach, with a percentage cross-check. [*302] [34] She reasoned that anything close to the 25% benchmark would grant the lawyers a multiplier at levels above 4 which she found to be "unusual" and "far from the norm". 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 118052, [WL] at *8. Also, having supervised the case for four years Judge Koh was in a good position to examine and adjust the billings as appropriate.

Judge Koh ultimately adjusted billings, and allowed a fee of $45 million, which produced a 2.5 multiplier. She noted that was well within the range of 1-4 in which 83% of the 24 class settlements discussed in Vizcaino fell. See Vizcaino, 290 F.3d at 1051 n. 6; High-Tech, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 118052, 2015 WL 5158730, at *11. She then proceeded to perform a percentage check. The approved fee amounted to 10.5% of the settlement, which Judge Koh found to be within the reasonable ranges calculated by the two leading academic studies, Fitzpatrick [mean and median percentages for $250-500 million settlements were 17.8% and 19.5%] and Eisenberg [mean and median figures were 12% and 10.2].

Closer to home Judge Tigar has just approved an award of fees to the Direct Purchaser [*303] class counsel in this very case that represents 30% of the settlement amount. [Dkt. 4311].

In summary, there is solid authority that a 25% award is presumptively reasonable; that many cases — including megafunds — award fees in the 25-33% range; that many others award fees in the 8-12% range; and that academic studies show mean and median ranges of 10-20%. Here three factors point strongly in favor of a fee somewhat in excess of the 25% benchmark: the 8-year duration of the case, the extraordinary risk undertaken by any group of indirect purchaser class counsel in the present uncertain state of antitrust and class action law, and the unarguably superb result of recovering for the indirect purchasers the second largest indirect purchaser price fixing settlement in history. Having performed the required analysis and considered the relevant authorities, the Special Master concludes that a fee award of 30% of the settlement fund, or $173,025,000, is appropriate.

D. Lodestar Comparison

1. Billing Rates

The average billing rate for all class counsel at current rates is $492/hr. ($90,075,076 / 183,000 hrs.). The billing rate would be $450 at historic rates.[35] After the recommended lodestar 10% [*304] adjustment, infra at pp. 73-74, the billing rate would be only $443 at current rates ($81,067,569.20 / 183,000 hrs.) and $412 at historic rates ($75,378,559 / 183,000 hrs.).

Lead Counsel arbitrarily capped the rate for document review at $350 per hour and $400 for foreign language documents. Alioto Decl. I, ¶118.

It requires little discussion to conclude that these billing rates are reasonable and responsible. Lead Counsel began billing at $875 in 2015, but from 2007 forward he billed at $750/hr. Compared to the rates charged by counsel for defendants (e.g., Gibson Dunn, White & Case, Sheppard Mullin, Baker Botts, Winston & Strawn, Cooley), Lead Counsel's rates were low. Pearl Supp. Decl., dtd. 11/6/15, ¶10, 11. With the exception of a very few lawyers, class counsel's billing rates did not exceed $800, and never exceeded $1,000. Courts in the Northern District have repeatedly approved billing rates in the range seen in this case. O'Bannon v. Natl. Collegiate Athletic Assn., 114 F. Supp. 3d 819, 2015 WL 4274370 [approving rates of $370-985 for attorneys]; Wynn v. Chanos, 2015 U.S. Dist. Lexis 80062 (N.D.Cal. June 19, 2015) [approving rates of $570-1085 for attorneys]; Banas v. Volcano Corp., 47 F.Supp.3d 957 (N.D.Cal 2014) [approving rates of $355-1095]; TFT-LCD, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 49885, 2013 WL 1365900, at *7 (N.D.Cal. Apr. 3, 2013) [approving rates of [*305] $417-1000]. See Pearl Decl., ¶28-37, surveying cases and firms.

The Special Master recommends that the objections to the billing rates of Class Counsel be overruled.

2. Hours

[35] Objector Westfall said that the average billing rate of $879 was excessive, but he used the wrong number for total recorded hours.

IPP counsel recorded 183,000 hours in this case through May 2015. Although Lead Counsel and a handful of other firms have and will invest many hundreds of uncompensated hours after May 2015 in obtaining approval of the settlement, administering the distribution of funds, dealing with objectors, and other post-settlement tasks, Lead Counsel determined to request fees only through May 2015. Providing compensation adequate to cover hours after May 2015 is necessary in determining a fair fee.

All 183,000 hours are detailed in declarations submitted by each of the 50 class counsel firms. Those declarations break down the hours by year, by timekeeper, and into 12 categories I of activities (research, motions, depositions, trial preparation, etc.) In addition, the Special Master has been provided the raw billing entries for every firm. The Special Master has carefully reviewed every declaration, and has reviewed a sample of about 50 months of contemporaneous billing entries from a range of about eight class counsel firms. [*306]

Objectors assert without much in the way of evidence or authority that 183,000 hours was excessive for a case that settled on the courthouse steps after eight years. Lead Counsel has explained in convincing detail the effort necessary. Alioto Decl. I. This explanation is supported by the lists of 11 motions to dismiss, 51 third-party subpoenas, 21 discovery motions, 25 class representative depositions, 72 percipient defendant depositions, 68 third-party and DAP depositions, 31 expert depositions, 32 Rule 30(b)(6) depositions, 36 summary judgment motions, 64 motions in limine, 17 experts, four groups of plaintiffs (IPP, DPP, Attorney General, and Direct Action). Alioto Decl. II, Exs. 1-12. In comparison, counsel in LCD expended 313,000 hours over six years, or about 70% more time. [Alioto Decl. I, ¶16]

The Special Master concludes from his review of declarations and time entries that time was recorded in a professional, detailed manner by almost all lawyers. One does observe that, as the age of the lawyer increases (and approaches the age of the Special Master), the time recording habits deteriorate. Thus, almost every entry for one respected senior attorney reads merely "trial prep." Another lawyer [*307] with many decades of experience made handwritten time entries which appear a trifle haphazard. However, these are isolated cases, and the Special Master has no reason to believe that there was any widespread padding of time or failure to keep contemporaneous records. Objector Bonsignore has offered unsupported hearsay that Mr. Alioto told him that he did not keep contemporaneous records. Mr. Alioto has denied this (see Alioto Supp. Decl. in Support of IPP Motion for Award of Fees, dtd. 11/19/15, ¶27), and his daily billing entries, albeit handwritten, give every impression of having been made contemporaneously.

Lead Counsel appointed an Audit Committee of a few leading class counsel to review the time of every firm. As a result, the time of some firms was reduced. The Special Master deems it unnecessary to review the work of the Audit Committee since he reviewed declarations and raw billing records.

Lead Counsel gave direction that lawyers were not to record time for in-house multi-lawyer conferences. Alioto Decl. II, ¶118. However, many of the billing records contain entries for just such conferences. It is simply unreasonable to expect a case of this nature to be litigated for eight [*308] years without conferences among counsel, and there is no reason to think such conferences did not generally benefit the class. Nonetheless, class counsel on occasion clearly did not follow this rule.

In evaluating attorney time entries, the two most telling factors are the number of attorneys from a single firm performing the majority of the work, and the evidence of unnecessary duplication of effort (multiple lawyers attending a deposition, excessive number of document reviewers, etc.). The billing entries here showed that for the most part the case was staffed in a reasonably "lean and mean" manner. For most firms, 75% or more of the work was performed by 2-3 lawyers consistently over the eight years. As noted above, Lead Counsel divided tasks so that each of the core firms had responsibility for a defendant or for an activity (e.g., foreign language translation). Duplication of efforts was thus minimized. Thirteen firms did virtually nothing, billing less than $75,000 each. Another nineteen firms billed less than $1 million. Thus, the real work of the case was limited to about sixteen firms that billed over $2 million. This management of attorney time compares favorably with the [*309] division of labor in LCD based on the Special Master's involvement in that case.

Objector Williams criticizes the lodestar because depositions were stayed for about two years at the request of the Department of Justice. Docket No. 4112. The time records show a significant drop in billings during the stay, in many firms to almost nothing, so there is no indication that counsel were padding their bills while the case was stayed. Also, the stay ultimately increased the challenges of obtaining documents and finding witnesses who could remember anything.

Objector Scarpulla maintains that the categories into which time entries were broken down are too broad. But the exact same categories were used in LCD where Mr. Scarpulla was co-lead counsel.

Objector Scarpulla also criticized the use of block billing[36] and quarter-hour increments to record time. As to block billing, the Special Master's review of actual billing entries shows that this occurred but not to any egregious extent. Having himself recorded time for almost 50 years, the Special Master is aware how silly it is to insist (as insurance companies sometimes do) on showing a specific amount of time on each action taken during a day. See [*310] *O'Bannon, 114 F. Supp. 3d 819, 2015 WL 4274370, at 6-7 [refusing to reduce fee for block billing, noting that "[b]lock billing is a typical practice in this district, and blocked bills have been found to provide a sufficient basis for calculating a fee award."] As to quarter-hour increments, this is also a common practice that O'Bannon said had been allowed by courts in the Ninth Circuit. *114 F. Supp. 3d 819, [WL] at 7-8

Objector St. John criticized billing contract attorneys at market rates applicable to permanently hired attorneys, the application of a multiplier to their time, and the lack of resumes for some contract attorneys at Lead Counsel's firm. [Docket No. 4106, at 19]. Lead Counsel responded adequately to these points. First, contract attorneys on this case were largely fluent in Chinese, Japanese or Korean and were essential for reviewing and selecting documents and providing backup translation at depositions. In any event, the legal community now commonly uses contract attorneys. There is not the slightest justification to downgrade their billing rates or not apply a multiplier to them. Lead Counsel [*311] has provided the missing resumes for contract lawyers from his firm. Alioto Decl. III.

In summary, the Special Master finds that class counsel's billing records appear highly reliable and detailed and that the time spent and the rates charges were reasonable for a case of this complexity. However, in any case of this length and magnitude there are bound to be inefficiencies and wasted time for which it is appropriate to make an across-the-board reduction to the lodestar. (IPP counsel in the LCD case self-imposed a 20% reduction across-the-board.) Moreover, as noted above, some criticism is merited for a rocky relationship between IPP counsel and the California Attorney General and for features of the allocation plan that have provoked controversy. Accordingly, to ensure that the lodestar truly represents hard compensable time expended for the benefit of the class, the Special Master concludes that an across-the-board reduction of 10% should be applied. This reduces the lodestar at current rates from $90,075,076.90 to $81,067,569.20.

The resulting multiplier ($173,250,000 / $81,067,569) is just under 2.14. It is below the 2.5 multiplier approved by Judge Koh in High-Tech. It is also well [*312] within the 1-4 range in the Vizcaino survey of 24 decisions. 290 F.3d at 1052-1054. It is within the range of the 2 and 5 multipliers used by Judge Alsup in Gutierrez. And most importantly, this multiplier represents a fair but not a windfall return for the generally superb job done by IPP counsel in this case.

IX. APPROVAL OF REQUEST FOR LITIGATION EXPENSES

IPP's ask for approval of reimbursement to counsel of $7,634,372.50. This total consists of three categories: $2,405,000 contributed to the Litigation Expense Fund by assessments on class counsel, $733,494.48 in individual firm unreimbursed expenses, and approval of the expenditure of an additional $4,495,878.02 from settlement proceeds placed in the Future Expense Fund. IPP's original request for reimbursement was reduced by the elimination of $36,153.07 of unreimbursed expenses claimed by class counsel pursuant to a recent re-audit of those expenses as described below. The amounts spent and to be spent from the Litigation Expense Fund and the Future Expense Fund cover expert fees, reporter fees, translation costs and the like. Reimbursable expenses incurred by class counsel consist of copying charges, travel expenses, legal research, etc.

No one has [*313] objected to approval of these expenses. Notwithstanding the absence of objection, the Special Master has performed a sufficient review to satisfy himself of the appropriateness of the request.

The categories of expenses are listed in detail. Compendium of Attorney Declarations, Docket No. 4073; Alioto Decl. II, ¶130, 134.

Lead Counsel appointed an Audit Committee of several firms to review and verify the expenses, assisted by an accounting firm Alioto Decl. IV, ¶27.

More recently, now cognizant of the scrupulous review that the court gave to the expense request of Direct Purchasers, Lead Counsel conducted another review of all the expense requests of every class counsel firm and eliminated questionable items. Examples of those are: first and business class airfare, charges for more leg room on a flight, alcoholic beverage charges, amounts with no backup invoices, copying charges exceeding $.20/page, amounts not matching invoices. It appears to the Special Master that the review was meticulous and conservative — more conservative, in fact, than he would have been in assessing the same expenses. Alioto ltr. dtd. 1/7/16 to Special Master, e-filed at JAMS.

Lead Counsel have offered to provide [*314] the Special Master with all the backup expense invoices, or to sample them. But given the review conducted by Lead Counsel, the lack of any objection and the cost-benefit calculation of investing that time, the Special Master declined to conduct a more in-depth review.

The Special Master recommends that the request to approve reimbursement to counsel and the expenditure of settlement proceeds for legitimate litigation expenses be approved.

X. APPROVAL OF INCENTIVE AWARDS TO CLASS REPRESENTATIVES

IPP's request incentive awards of $15,000 to all 25 court-appointed Class Representatives[37], and $5,000 for an additional 15 named plaintiffs who were not appointed by the court but acted as state representatives for a period of time[38]. The total requested incentive award is $450,000, which is .07% of the settlement fund.

No one has objected to this request.

These requested awards are within the range commonly approved in this District. See *Moore v. Verizon Communications, Inc., 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 122901, 2013 WL 4610764, No. C-09-1823 SBA, at 15 (N.D.Cal. Aug. 28, 2013) ["[i]n this district, a $5,000 payment is presumptively reasonable."] The non-appointed state representatives maintained claims for several years until they were replaced for strategic reasons. Some (e.g., Frank Warner and Samuel Nasto) were deposed, and all searched for documentation and worked on discovery responses. See, *LCD III, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 49885, 2013 WL 1365900, at * 17* [granting incentive payments of $7,500 to non-appointed representatives]. The Court-appointed representatives, both individuals and small businesses, all gave depositions, all produced documents, all responded to written discovery, some submitted declarations, and some worked with counsel to prepare trial testimony. A $15,000 award is entirely reasonable.

XI. CONCLUSION

Good cause appearing, the Special Master recommends that the Court order as follows:

1. Approve certification of the settlement class.
2. Find that the compensation to the certified IPP class is fair, reasonable and adequate.
3. Find that the plan of allocation is fair, reasonable and adequate as to class members in the Statewide Damages Classes.
4. Find that the plan of allocation is fair, reasonable and adequate as to class members in the Nationwide Class from non-repealer states even though they receive no monetary compensation.
5. Find that the plan of allocation is fair, reasonable and adequate as to class members in the Nationwide Class from the three omitted repealer states (Massachusetts, Missouri and New Hampshire) even though they receive no monetary compensation.

6. Find that the plan of allocation is not fair, reasonable and adequate insofar as it fails to address satisfaction of the terms of the Chunghwa settlement. Direct Lead Counsel to submit a plan that addresses how to correct the identified due process problem, what, if any, additional notice may be required, and a timeline for the Court [*317] to address this problem.
7. Find that notice to the class was reasonable, appropriate under the circumstances, and met due process standards.
8. Overrule all objections other than those with respect to the treatment of the Chunghwa settlement.
9. Award attorneys' fees to IPP counsel in the amount of $173,250,000, which is equal to 30% of the settlement fund. Compute class counsel's lodestars at current billing rates which total $90,075,076.90. Reduce class counsel's lodestars by 10% across-the-board to account for inefficiencies and work that did not benefit the class, which results in an adjusted lodestar of $81,067,569 and a multiplier of just under 2.14.
10. Approve the request for approval of litigation expenses in the amount of $7,634,372.50.
11. Approve incentive awards in the amounts of $15,000 for the 25 court-approved Class Representatives and $5,000 for an additional 15 representatives who were not approved by the Court but acted for a period of time.

Opinion

REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION

Each of the Defendants filed Motions to Dismiss raising the same defenses and arguments under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b). The Defendants urge the Court to dismiss pro se Plaintiff Sandra C. K. Van Ornum's claims. Based on the Motions, the undersigned[1] RECOMMENDS the Court dismiss Ms. Van Ornum's claims against the Defendants without prejudice because the Court appears to lack personal jurisdiction over any of the Defendants. The Complaint fails to state facts sufficient to allege either general or specific personal jurisdiction over any of the Defendants.[2] The undersigned LIFTS the stay in this case upon the filing of this Report and Recommendation. (See ECF No. 62.)

BACKGROUND

On December 22, 2014, Ms. Van Ornum filed a pro se complaint against the American Medical Association (AMA), American Dental Association (ADA), American Hospital Association [*3] (AHA), Monsanto Company (Monsanto), Eli Lily and Company (Eli Lily), Pfizer Inc. (Pfizer), Abbott Laboratories (Abbott), Allergan Inc. (Allergan), Hawaii Pacific Health System, Kuakini Health System, and Dr. William Goodhue. (ECF No. 1.) On March 24, 2015, Ms. Van Ornum filed an Amended Complaint prior to service of any Defendant. (ECF No. 4.) A few days later, Ms. Van Ornum filed a Motion for Leave to File Amended Complaint, (ECF No. 5), which the undersigned granted, (ECF No. 6). Following that order, Ms. Van Ornum filed the Amendment to Amended Complaint (hereinafter, "Complaint"). (ECF No. 7.) The undersigned deems this filing the operative Complaint.

Ms. Van Ornum alleges that the Defendants collectively violated the First and Fourteenth Amendments, along with the following statutes: 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb-1 (Religious Freedom Restoration Act (RFRA)); 42 U.S.C. §§ 1983 &

[1] On January 5, 2015, District Judge Robert J. Shelby referred this case to the undersigned Magistrate Judge under 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1)(B). (ECF No. 3.)

[2] Pursuant to DUCiv R 7-1(f), the undersigned finds oral argument unnecessary and will make its recommendation based on the Complaint and written memoranda.

1985(3) (Civil Rights Act); 18 U.S.C. § 1595(a) (Trafficking Victims Protection Act (TVPA)); 18 U.S.C. § 3663A (Mandatory Victims Restitution Act (MVRA)); 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2 & 3 (Sherman Antitrust Act); 15 U.S.C. § 15(a) (Clayton Act); 42 U.S.C. § 2000d, et seq. (Title VI of the Civil Rights Act); and Hawaii Rev. Stat. § 28-94 (remedies for elder abuse). (See Compl. 49-50, ECF No. 7.) The Complaint opens with seven pages of abbreviations that Ms. Van Ornum uses as shorthand for terms, parties, and concepts [*4] central to her case. (Compl. 2-8, ECF No. 7.) Unfortunately, Ms. Van Ornum's copious use of these abbreviations makes her Complaint extremely difficult to understand.[3] From what the undersigned can glean from the Complaint, Ms. Van Ornum appears to allege that the Defendants — who Ms. Van Ornum abbreviates as "Ds" and defines as "M&D: licensed hospitals, et seq. physicians, surgeons, nurses & dieticians, assistance [sic], persons who hold the authority & title of HCP" — have collectively interfered with her practice of "primitive nutritional wisdom," abbreviated by Ms. Van Ornum as "PNW," through "science, education, welfare & human service in all State & US Territory [sic]." (See id. at 4, 7, 13-14.)

Ms. Van Ornum further defines "M&D" as "'Medical & its Dentistry' trade & commerce," and "HCP" as

> 'Health care provider' a person who have [sic] the knowledge of the science of DW&FC, REH; (1) C&B from DW&FC, REH; (2) provide their patients & caregivers w/ the knowledge of the SCI; (3) establish orchards, [*5] vineyard, & herbs grown in EWE; (4) quality distillers at any person's affordable means; (5) establish sufficient number of HCP or caregiver for public "health", education, welfare & human service[.]

(Id. at 4-6.) Ms. Van Ornum defines "DW&FC" as "'Distilled water & FC': (1) distilled water; (2) a carbohydrate food w/in the MEL; (3) a protein food w/in the MEL; (4) a fat foods [sic] w/in the MEL; & (5) 'Microorganisms' chemically changing: (a) (SP2) to 'monosaccharide'; (b) (SP3) to , amino acids; (c) (SP4) to fatty acids." (Id. at 4.) "FC" signifies "Food combining a meal w/in the metabolic enzyme limitation," and "MEL" means "'Metabolic enzyme limitation', DW&FC 'microorganism' chemically changing CC into its SC, part 1 of 'metabolism.'" (Id. at 4, 6.) Ms. Van Ornum defines "REH" as "'Recognized emergency herbs', herbs grown in an EWE," with "EWE" signifying "Earthworm environment." (Id. at 7, 4.) "C&B" means "'Choice & benefits': 'metabolism', NF, 'physiologic', PNW, LE," (id. at 3), and "SCI" refers to

> 'Substantive content of information': the knowledge of (1) patient's 'health keys'; (2) RDX& RX history: (3) NF; (4) the actions of Hg, AM against NF & AR; (5) 7ET; (6) the actions of IS against 'immunologic' response; (7) the science [*6] & art of DW&FC, REH, its C&B; (7) 'metabolism'; (8) the differences between: (a) TS from SC&MN; (b) LSN from MN; (b) REH from 'pharmaco' or surgical TP; (c) calcium carbonate from fluoride carbonate TBG; (d) EWE from CA: (e) MN composition ratio of human from animal; (f) raw from cook food; (g) HCP from Ds; (h) et seq., respectively;

(Id. at 7-8.) Ms. Van Ornum uses "SP" to signify "Subparagraph." (Id. at 8.) "CC" means "'Complex compound' of either Protein food, Carbohydrate food, Fat food." (Id. at 3.) "SC" means "'Simpler compound' (1) monosaccharide; (2) amino acids, (3) fatty acid." (Id. at 7.) The definitions continue on and on.

The majority of Ms. Van Ornum's allegations consist of chronological notations on Ms. Van Ornum's physical conditions and medical treatment, as well as those of her parents and her children. Starting in 1900 and continuing through 2013, Ms. Van Ornum recounts the alleged medical treatment (or mistreatment) she and her parents received in Hawaii, Guam, the Philippines, and Vietnam. (See id. at 18-48.) Starting in 1987, Ms. Van Ornum also recounts episodes of medical treatment in Provo, Utah and California. (See id. at 28-30.) In 2004, Ms. Van Ornum moved with her children to Provo, Utah, (id. at 36), but the vast majority [*7] of the alleged medical treatment, even after 2004, occurs in Hawaii, where Ms. Van Ornum was born and raised. (See id. at 18-48.) Ms. Van Ornum's parents have both died, (see id. at 27, 46), and Ms. Van Ornum attempts to bring claims on their behalf. (See id. at 49-50.) Though Ms. Van Ornum does connect some factual statements to specific Defendants at times,[4] Ms. Van

[3] To assist the Court and the parties in fully comprehending her claims, the undersigned suggests Ms. Van Ornum use complete words and sentences instead of acronyms to articulate her allegations in the future.

Ornum directs the bulk of her allegations and claims for relief at the Defendants collectively. (See, e.g., id. at 30, 38-42, 49-51.)

Essentially, Ms. Van Ornum alleges that the Defendants, as nationwide organizations engaged in commerce and state-based healthcare providers, have acted "under color of authority and color of the law" in interfering with Ms. Van Ornum's practice of primitive nutritional wisdom, part of her and her family's religion. (See id. at 13-14.) Furthermore, Ms. Van Ornum seems to allege that the Defendants have orchestrated her family's poor health outcomes and committed various crimes as a result, [*8] including kidnapping, elder and child abuse, exploitation, murder, human trafficking, and abuse of the law and legal process. (See id.)

DISCUSSION

Each Defendant moved to dismiss Ms. Van Ornum's Complaint. The Defendants argue variations of five defenses: (1) that Ms. Van Ornum fails to meet Rule 8(a)'s pleading requirements; (2) that the Court should dismiss Ms. Van Ornum's claims for lack of personal jurisdiction; (3) that Ms. Van Ornum failed to state any claim upon which the Court can grant relief; (4) that Ms. Van Ornum did not properly serve process; and (5) that venue is improper in Utah. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(2), (6), (5), & (3).

Defendants Eli Lilly and Pfizer filed the first Motion to Dismiss on April 30, 2015. (ECF No. 9.) On May 20, 2015, Ms. Van Ornum filed a "Motion with Particularity" that responded to the points in Eli Lilly and Pfizer's Motion. (ECF No. 16.) On June 8, 2015, Eli Lilly and Pfizer replied with a Notice to Submit and opposed all other relief Ms. Van Ornum sought in her Motion with Particularity. (ECF No. 28.) Eli Lilly and Pfizer also opposed Ms. Van Ornum's Motion directly. (ECF No. 27.) The undersigned regards the Motion with Particularity not as a motion but rather as a timely filed Opposition [*9] and finds Eli Lilly and Pfizer's Motion became fully briefed on June 8, 2015. (See ECF No. 28.)

On May 15, 2015, Defendant Hawaii Pacific Health System ("Hawaii Pacific") filed the next Motion to Dismiss, arguing only that the Court should dismiss Ms. Van Ornum's claims for insufficient service and lack of personal jurisdiction. (ECF No. 14.) Ms. Van Ornum failed to respond to this Motion within the twenty-eight days provided by the local rules. See DUCiv R 7-1(b)(3)(A) ("A memorandum opposing motions filed pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b) . . . must be filed within twenty-eight (28) days after service of the motion or within such time as allowed by the court.") Therefore, the undersigned finds that Ms. Van Ornum waived her opportunity to contest Hawaii Pacific's arguments and RECOMMENDS granting Hawaii Pacific's Motion to Dismiss (ECF No. 14) without prejudice. See DUCiv R 7-1(d).

The AMA, ADA, and AHA jointly moved to dismiss Ms. Van Ornum's claims on May 29, 2015. (ECF No. 23.) During June 2015, Allergan (ECF No. 29), Kuakini Health System (ECF No. 36), Abbott (ECF No. 45), and Monsanto (ECF No. 46) also filed Motions to Dismiss. Each Motion argued, among other things, for dismissal of the claims under [*10] Rule 12(b)(2) because Ms. Van Ornum failed to plead sufficient facts to support personal jurisdiction over the respective Defendants. (See Eli Lily & Pfizer Mot. 6-7, ECF No. 9; AMA, ADA, & AHA Mot. 7-8, ECF No. 23; Allergan Mot. 5, ECF No. 29; Kuakini Health System Mot. 3-4, ECF No. 36; Abbott Mot. 6-7, ECF No. 45; Monsanto Mot. 7-8, ECF No. 46.) Each of the Defendants, except for the AMA, ADA, and AHA, also argued that Utah is not the proper venue for this action because the majority of the alleged events occurred in Hawaii. (See Eli Lily & Pfizer Mot. 7, ECF No. 9; Allergan Mot. 5, ECF No. 29; Kuakini Health System Mot. 4, ECF No. 36; Abbott Mot. 7, ECF No. 45; Monsanto Mot. 8, ECF No. 46.)

On July 1, 2015, Ms. Van Ornum responded to all of these Motions in one Opposition. (Pl.'s Opp'n to Defs.' Mot. to Dismiss ("Opp'n"), ECF No. 51.) Ms. Van Ornum alleges that the Defendants have conspired to restrain Ms. Van

[4] See, e.g., Compl. 18 ("5. Ds #3 D/p: w/ ETYK;..."). Ms. Van Ornum uses these acronyms to refer to Defendant #3, the AHA, in a "doctor patient relationship, direct, indirect & consequential" with Ethel T. Y. Kurihara (ETYK), Ms. Van Ornum's mother. (See Compl. 4, 9, ECF No. 7.)

Ornum's free exercise of primitive nutritional wisdom, and she attempts to supplement her Complaint with facts in her Opposition to demonstrate that the Court has jurisdiction over the Defendants and that venue properly lies in Utah. (See Opp'n 3-18, 24-26, ECF No. 51.) The AMA, ADA, AHA, [*11] Allergan, Kuakini Health System, Abbott, Eli Lily, and Pfizer timely replied reiterating the same dismissal arguments. (See AMA, ADA, & AHA's Reply 3-4, ECF No. 52; Allergan's Reply 3, ECF No. 56; Kuakini Health System's Reply 4-5, ECF No. 57; Eli Lily, Abbott, & Pfizer's Reply 4-5, ECF No. 61.)

On July 17, 2015, Ms. Van Ornum filed a surreply, entitled "Memorandum in Opposition to Defendants [sic] Motion to be Dissmiss [sic]." (ECF No. 59.) However, the Rules do not provide for surreplies, absent the Court's permission. DUCiv R 7-1(b)(2)(A). Ms. Van Ornum failed to seek leave of the court to file a surreply; therefore, the undersigned disregards this filing.

On July 20, 2015, the undersigned entered a stay to allow the undersigned to address the outstanding Motions. (ECF No. 62.) After the stay, Ms. Van Ornum served the final Defendant, Dr. William Goodhue. (ECF No. 65.) On August 20, 2015, Dr. Goodhue filed a Motion to Dismiss on the same bases as the other Defendants. (ECF No. 66.) Ms. Van Ornum has not had an opportunity to oppose that Motion, but the ruling on the fully briefed Motions to Dismiss applies with equal force to Dr. Goodhue's Motion. Ms. Van Ornum will have the opportunity [*12] to raise any novel issues regarding Dr. Goodhue in any Objection she may file to this Report and Recommendation.

I. Personal Jurisdiction

"Because a court without jurisdiction over the parties cannot render a valid judgment, [the Court] must address Defendants' personal jurisdiction argument before reaching the merits of the case." OMI Holdings, Inc. v. Royal Ins. Co. of Canada, 149 F.3d 1086, 1090 (10th Cir. 1998).

Ms. Van Ornum proceeds pro se; thus, the Court must liberally construe her pleadings. Dudnikov v. Chalk & Vermilion Fine Arts, Inc., 514 F.3d 1063, 1073 & n.7 (10th Cir. 2008). However, the Court cannot act as an advocate for a pro se litigant, who must comply with the fundamental requirements of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Kay v. Bemis, 500 F.3d 1214, 1218 (10th Cir. 2007).

As the Plaintiff, Ms. Van Ornum "bears the burden of establishing personal jurisdiction over the defendant[s]." Kuenzle v. HTM Sport-Und Freizeitgerate AG, 102 F.3d 453, 456 (10th Cir. 1996) (quotation omitted). To meet this burden on a motion to dismiss where the Court receives only affidavits and written materials, Ms. Van Ornum need only make a prima facie showing of personal jurisdiction. Id. (citation omitted). "The plaintiff may make this prima facie showing by demonstrating, via affidavit or other written materials, facts that if true would support jurisdiction over the defendant[s]." OMI Holdings, 149 F.3d at 1091. The undersigned takes as true all "plausible, non-conclusory, and non-speculative" facts and resolves factual disputes in [*13] favor of Ms. Van Ornum. Dudnikov, 514 F.3d at 1070 (citation omitted).

A federal court considering whether it has personal jurisdiction over a defendant must determine "'(1) whether the applicable statute potentially confers jurisdiction by authorizing service of process on the defendant and (2) whether the exercise of jurisdiction comports with due process.'" Trujillo v. Williams, 465 F.3d 1210, 1217 (10th Cir. 2006) (quoting Peay v. BellSouth Med. Assistance Plan, 205 F.3d 1206, 1209 (10th Cir. 2000)). As discussed above, Ms. Van Ornum pleads causes of action under the First and Fourteenth Amendments of the United States Constitution as well as a number of federal laws — including RFRA, the Civil Rights Acts, TVPA, MVPA — and a claim under Hawaii Rev. Stat. § 28-94. None of these statutes confers nationwide service of process in this context. See Trujillo, 465 F.3d at 1217 (noting that § 1983 does not provide for nationwide service of process); 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000bb to 2000bb-4; 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000d to 2000d-4a; 18 U.S.C. §§ 1589-1594; 18 U.S.C. § 3663A; Hawaii Rev. Stat. § 28-94; Marsh v. Kitchen, 480 F.2d 1270, 1271-73 (2d Cir. 1973) (noting no nationwide service where not explicitly set forth, including Bivens-type actions).

However, Ms. Van Ornum also seeks relief from all of the Defendants under the Sherman and Clayton Acts, for which 15 U.S.C. § 22 confers nationwide service of process and thus potentially personal jurisdiction upon federal district courts to adjudicate antitrust claims. (Compl. 50-51, ECF No. 7; 15 U.S.C. § 22.) Therefore, the undersigned will first analyze personal jurisdiction arising from Ms. Van Ornum's antitrust claims.

A. The Sherman [*14] and Clayton Acts

Ms. Van Ornum seeks treble damages under the antitrust laws for injuries she sustained in her "business" and "property." (See Compl. 49-50, ECF No. 7.) 15 U.S.C. § 15(a) provides:

> [a]ny person . . . injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages . . . sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

To facilitate enforcement of the federal antitrust laws, 15 U.S.C. § 22 authorizes expansive venue and service of process on a corporate defendant:

> Any suit, action, or proceeding under the antitrust laws against a corporation may be brought not only in the judicial district whereof it is an inhabitant, but also in any district wherein it may be found or transacts business; and all process in such cases may be served in the district of which it is an inhabitant, or wherever it may be found.

Thus, the Clayton Act provides for nationwide service of process against defendant corporations in private civil antitrust suits. See, e.g., [*15] Phone Directories Co. v. Contel Corp., 786 F. Supp. 930, 942 (D. Utah 1992) ("[S]ervice of process is authorized by the nationwide service of process provision at § 12 of the Clayton Act."); In re Auto. Refinishing Paint Antitrust Litig., 358 F.3d 288, 293 (3d Cir. 2004) ("It is undisputed that the second clause authorizes nationwide, indeed worldwide, service of process on a defendant corporation in federal antitrust litigation."); Daniel v. Am. Bd. of Emergency Med., 428 F.3d 408, 422 (2d Cir. 2005); GTE New Media Services Inc. v. BellSouth Corp., 199 F.3d 1343, 1350, 339 U.S. App. D.C. 332 (D.C. Cir. 2000); Go—Video, Inc. v. Akai Elec. Co., Ltd., 885 F.2d 1406, 1413 (9th Cir. 1989).

However, 15 U.S.C. § 22 only applies to corporations, not individual defendants or "other entities that simply share common attributes with corporations," such as unincorporated or voluntary associations. World Skating Fed'n v. Int'l Skating Union, 357 F. Supp. 2d 661, 664 (S.D.N.Y. 2005); see California Clippers, Inc. v. U.S. Soccer Football Ass'n, 314 F. Supp. 1057, 1061, 1065 (N.D. Cal. 1970) (interpreting earlier version of statute noting that the Clayton Act's service of process provision does not apply to unincorporated associations); McManus v. Tato, 184 F. Supp. 958, 959 (S.D.N.Y. 1959) (interpreting earlier version of statute finding the Clayton Act's "specificity necessarily excludes individuals and voluntary associations from those amenable to extraterritorial service"). Therefore, the Court cannot obtain jurisdiction over Dr. Goodhue, an individual, through the antitrust nationwide service provision.

Of the remaining Defendants, Monsanto, Eli Lilly, Pfizer, Allergan, Abbott, and Kuakini Health System are domestic corporations amenable to service of process under this provision. (See Monsanto Mot. 2, ECF No. 46; Eli Lilly & Pfizer Mot. 7, ECF No. 9; [*16] Allergan Mot. 5, ECF No. 29; Abbott Mot. 6, ECF No. 45; Kuakini Health System Mot. 4, ECF No. 36.) However, the corporate status of the AMA, ADA, and AHA do not appear on the face of the pleadings or written memoranda. In her Complaint, Ms. Van Ornum describes the AMA, ADA, and AHA as representing all licensed providers in their respective professions (medicine, dentistry, and hospitals and healthcare networks) and alleges that each has its headquarters in Chicago, IL. (See Compl. 9, ECF No. 7.) In her Opposition, Ms. Van Ornum further characterizes the AMA, ADA, and AHA as lobbying organizations and membership associations. (See Opp'n 9-11, ECF No. 51.) Meanwhile, the AMA, ADA, and AHA identify themselves as professional membership organizations in their Motion to Dismiss and state that neither the AMA, ADA, nor AHA is incorporated in Utah or has its principle places of business in Utah. (See AMA, ADA, & AHA Mot. 5, 8, ECF No. 23.) In making all inferences in favor of the Plaintiff, Ms. Van Ornum, the undersigned will assume the AMA, ADA, and AHA are corporations and will continue the jurisdictional analysis under the nationwide service of process provision as to them as well as Monsanto, [*17] Eli Lilly, Pfizer, Allergan, Abbott, and Kuakini Health System (the "corporate Defendants").

The federal antitrust laws allow a plaintiff to serve process in any district a defendant corporation inhabits or may be found. See 15 U.S.C. § 22. Currently, a circuit split exists regarding how to interpret section 22. See 1B Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 271d (4th ed. 2013) (discussing circuit split); Robert L. Haig, Bus. & Commercial Litig. in Fed. Cts. § 67:57 (3d ed. 2011) (same). The D.C., Second, and Seventh Circuits have taken the position that because the venue clause in section 22 comes before the service of process clause, a court must read the nationwide service of process clause as limited to those actions having proper venue as defined by section 22. GTE New Media Servs., 199 F.3d at 1351; Daniel, 428 F.3d at 423-24; KM Enters., Inc. v. Glob. Traffic Techs., Inc., 725 F.3d 718, 730 (7th Cir. 2013). The Third and Ninth Circuits hold that venue and jurisdiction represent two separate inquiries that Congress did not intend to merge and therefore read the nationwide service of process clause as a stand-alone proposition. In re Auto. Refinishing Paint Antitrust Litig., 358 F.3d 288, 294-97 (3d Cir. 2004); Action Embroidery Corp. v. Atl. Embroidery, Inc., 368 F.3d 1174, 1178-80 (9th Cir. 2004). The Tenth Circuit has not weighed in on this debate. Rather than attempt to determine which interpretation of section 22 the Tenth Circuit would adopt, the undersigned will proceed to the jurisdictional analysis as if Ms. Van Ornum had pled [*18] venue sufficiently, making the remainder of the analysis the same under either interpretation.

Even assuming nationwide service of process over the corporate Defendants, the Court must determine whether suing the Defendants in Utah "accords with the minimal constitutional requirements of due process" under the Fifth Amendment. Klein v. Cornelius, 786 F.3d 1310, 1318 (10th Cir. 2015). Where a plaintiff brings a federal question under a statute providing nationwide service of process,

> "the Fifth Amendment requires the plaintiff's choice of forum to be fair and reasonable to the defendant." To defeat federal jurisdiction, a defendant must establish that the "chosen forum will make litigation ... gravely difficult and inconvenient" or, in other words, the forum district burdens the defendant with "constitutionally significant inconvenience." We look to non-exclusive factors in considering whether defendants have met this burden, such as (1) the extent of contact with the forum state, (2) the inconvenience of having to litigate in a foreign jurisdiction, (3) judicial economy, (4) the probable situs of the discovery proceedings, and (5) the nature of the defendant's activities and its impact beyond his state's borders.

Id. (quoting Peay, 205 F.3d at 1212) (emphasis added). In this case, the corporate [*19] Defendants have simply asserted a lack of jurisdiction without addressing these factors. In fact, no Defendant even mentioned the issue of jurisdiction under the antitrust laws. The Defendants may have neglected this analysis because of their assessment of the merits of the antitrust claims and/or the case generally. (See Eli Lily & Pfizer Mot. 4-5, ECF No. 9; AMA, ADA, & AHA Mot. 4-6, ECF No. 23; Allergan Mot. 3, ECF No. 29; Kuakini Health System Mot. 3, ECF No. 36; Abbott Mot. 5-6, ECF No. 45; Monsanto Mot. 4, ECF No. 46.) However, the Court must address jurisdiction before reaching the merits of a claim even in cases where the Court could more easily resolve the merits question. Montoya v. Chao, 296 F.3d 952, 955 (10th Cir. 2002).

Based on the undersigned's limited understanding of Ms. Van Ornum's claims and the memoranda submitted, litigating this case in Utah would appear to burden the corporate Defendants with "constitutionally significant inconvenience." Neither the Complaint nor the Opposition alleges meaningful contact with Utah by the corporate Defendants. Discovery will likely occur primarily in Hawaii or perhaps in districts where the corporate Defendants have their headquarters, none of which includes Utah. Because the [*20] corporate Defendants do not have their headquarters or base of operations in Utah according to the Complaint, they will have to find counsel from Utah to litigate on their behalves, having had no alleged prior dealings in the state. If the corporate Defendants wish to participate or attend the judicial proceedings, they will need to send people from Illinois, Washington, D.C., Missouri, Indiana, New York, Texas, New Jersey, and Hawaii. (Opp'n at 9-16, ECF No. 51.) As to judicial economy, Ms. Van Ornum attempts to tie all of these Defendants and claims together and bring them in one district. However, the unification of all of these Defendants and claims seems to create further problems for the Court in understanding who did what to whom when and with what consequences. Thus, the unification appears to diminish judicial economy. With the exception of Kuakini Health System, all of the other corporate Defendants engage in activities with impacts throughout the United States. Nonetheless, without more understanding of how each Defendant connects to Ms. Van Ornum and Utah, the undersigned doubts the existence of personal jurisdiction. Thus, the undersigned finds that exercising antitrust [*21] jurisdiction on this record likely does not comport with the Fifth Amendment Due Process Clause.

B. Utah's Long Arm Statute

Additionally, the Court could have jurisdiction under the other federal statutes pled that do not, by themselves, confer nationwide service of process, pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 4(k)(1)(A) and Utah's long-arm statute. See Dudnikov, 514 F.3d at 1070 (noting where federal statutes at issue do not provide nationwide service of process, the court considers the law of the forum state). Because Utah's long-arm statute confers the maximum jurisdiction allowed by due process of law, Utah Code Ann. § 78B-3-201(3), "the first, statutory, inquiry effectively collapses into the second, constitutional, analysis." Dudnikov, 514 F.3d at 1070. Thus, whether the Court has personal jurisdiction over any of the Defendants turns on whether the exercise of jurisdiction over each Defendant comports with the Fourteenth Amendment's Due Process Clause. See Klein, 786 F.3d at 1318 (distinguishing 14th Amendment analysis from 5th Amendment analysis).

For jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant to comport with due process, "minimum contacts between the defendant and the forum State" must exist. Trujillo, 465 F.3d at 1217-18 (quoting Intercon, Inc. v. Bell Atl. Internet Solutions, Inc., 205 F.3d 1244, 1247 (10th Cir. 2000)). "Because a state's sovereignty is territorial in nature, a defendant's contacts with the forum state must be sufficient such that, notwithstanding its lack of physical presence in the state, the state's exercise [*22] of sovereignty over it can be described as fair and just." Dudnikov, 514 F.3d at 1070. A plaintiff can show the case meets the Fourteenth Amendment minimum contacts standard in either of two ways:

> First, a court may exercise specific jurisdiction if a defendant has purposefully directed his activities at residents of the forum . . . and the litigation results from alleged injuries that arise out of or relate to those activities. Second, a court may exercise general jurisdiction where the defendant's contacts, while not rising to the level of the traditional notion of presence in the forum state, are nonetheless continuous and systematic.

Kuenzle, 102 F.3d at 455 (emphasis in original) (citations and quotations omitted). If the Court finds it has either specific or general jurisdiction over a Defendant, the case against that Defendant satisfies the "minimum contacts" standard. See OMI Holdings, 149 F.3d at 1091. Yet even where a court finds that the defendant meets the minimum contacts standard, the court must still inquire as to whether the exercise of personal jurisdiction over the defendant comports with "'traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice.'" Id. (quoting Asahi Metal Indus. Co., Ltd. v. Superior Ct. of Cal., 480 U.S. 102, 113, 107 S. Ct. 1026, 94 L. Ed. 2d 92 (1987)).

1. Specific Jurisdiction

A court may assert specific jurisdiction over a defendant where "the defendant [*23] has 'purposefully directed' his activities at residents of the forum, and the litigation results from alleged injuries that 'arise out of or relate to' those activities." Burger King v. Rudzewicz, 471 U.S. 462, 472, 105 S. Ct. 2174, 85 L. Ed. 2d 528 (1985) (quotations omitted). In deciding whether a defendant has minimum contacts sufficient to create specific jurisdiction, courts apply a two-part test. "[F]irst . . . the out-of-state defendant must have 'purposefully directed' its activities at residents of the forum state, and second . . . the plaintiff's injuries must 'arise out of' defendant's forum-related activities." Dudnikov, 514 F.3d at 1071 (citing Burger King, 471 U.S. at 472). In analyzing a defendant's "purposefully directed" activities, the Court looks for allegations showing (a) an intentional action by the defendant, (b) expressly aimed at Utah, (c) with the defendant's knowledge that the brunt of the injury would be felt in Utah. Id. at 1072; see accord Walden v. Fiore, 571 U.S. ___, 134 S. Ct. 1115, 188 L. Ed. 2d 12 (2014). In addition, a plaintiff's allegations must demonstrate that the alleged injuries "arise out of" the defendant's forum-related activities by showing a causal link between the defendant's contacts and the injuries at issue. Dudnikov, 514 F.3d at 1078-79.

Here, Ms. Van Ornum has not alleged any facts in the Complaint or her Opposition suggesting that any one of the Defendants has [*24] expressly aimed actions at Utah or that such intentional actions caused Ms. Van Ornum's alleged injuries.

As to the associations, Ms. Van Ornum alleges that the AMA "represent[s] all license doctor [sic] of medicine & surgeon (MD), osteopathic doctor (DO), optometrist, nurses, dietitian, et seq." (Compl. 9, ECF No. 7.) In her Opposition, Ms. Van Ornum adds that the AMA represents members licensed in Utah "to delivery [sic] health and human services," publishes a weekly journal, and maintains a website with contact information accessible from Utah. (Opp'n 9, 25, ECF No. 51.) Next, Ms. Van Ornum alleges that the ADA "represent[s] all doctor [sic] of dental surgeons (DDS), et seq.," and that during 2006, in either Hawaii or Utah, the ADA "removes most of the amalgam & substantive amount of enamel, dentin, pulp, physically restraining SCK [Ms. Van Ornum] to dentistry reconstruction." (Compl. 9, 37, ECF No. 7.) Ms. Van Ornum elaborates in her Opposition that the ADA maintains a website with contact information accessible from Utah. (Opp'n 25, ECF No. 51.) Finally, Ms. Van Ornum alleges that the AHA "represents defendants' hospitals, health care networks." (Compl. 9, ECF No. 7.) In her Opposition, Ms. Van Ornum [*25] states that the AHA "communicates with state hospital associations" and that the AHA maintains a website with contact information accessible from Utah. (Opp'n 11, 25, ECF No. 51.)

Ms. Van Ornum also claims, "AMA, ADA, AHA members or partnership with Intermountain Health Care Inc, have events to demonstrate in section H, among the other times, in consequential of the accident effecting the State of Utah." (Opp'n 19, ECF No. 51; see Compl. 28-29, 36-37, ECF No. 7.) Ms. Van Ornum's Opposition claims the "accident" occurred in Utah. (Opp'n 18 ("The accident effected the State of Utah in 1953;"), ECF No. 51.) The Complaint never describes the alleged accident, and instead the Opposition refers the Court back to the Complaint paragraphs describing medical events allegedly occurring in Utah. (Opp'n 19, ECF No. 51.) Neither the Complaint nor the Opposition says who or what the accident involved or how Ms. Van Ornum's claims arise from any actions in Utah by the Defendants.

These allegations do not provide grounds for finding that the AMA, ADA, or AHA purposefully directed activities toward Utah related to the alleged injuries in this case. Nor does the AMA, ADA, and AHA's maintenance of their [*26] respective websites with contact information accessible in Utah constitute action expressly aimed at Utah. While the existence of a website can confer jurisdiction over a defendant, "[c]ourts analyze the level and type of activity conducted on the website in question to determine jurisdiction." iAccess, Inc. v. WEBcard Techs., Inc., 182 F. Supp. 2d 1183, 1186 (D. Utah 2002). "A passive website that does no more than make information available cannot by itself form the basis of jurisdiction." Id. at 1187. Rather, "[c]ourts require 'something more' than a website's existence that indicates the defendant purposefully directed its activities in a substantial way toward the forum state," such as entering into contracts with residents in the forum. Id.; see Soma Med. Int'l v. Standard Chartered Bank, 196 F.3d 1292, 1299 (10th Cir. 1999) (finding a passive website does not demonstrate purposeful availment). Here, Ms. Van Ornum simply states that people can access the websites in Utah and that the websites contain contact information for the AMA, ADA, and AHA. Without any further evidence as to the activities conducted through the websites, let alone any allegations that connect the AMA, ADA, or AHA's internet activity to the claims in this case, the allegations fail to establish specific jurisdiction over the AMA, ADA, or AHA. Ms. Van Ornum has not alleged the websites [*27] provide anything more than passive information. Soma, 196 F.3d at 1299.

While Ms. Van Ornum does not specifically connect allegations in the Complaint to Monsanto, Eli Lilly, Pfizer, Allergan, or Abbott, Ms. Van Ornum does make general observations in her Opposition about those companies' national presence and specific businesses. (See, e.g., Opp'n 12 (alleging "[Monsanto] products are used in hospitals, et seq., the only produce available in food stores, including health food stores, farms, et seq;"), 13 (alleging "[Eli Lilly] products are used in hospitals, et seq., physicians offices or prescribe [sic] and provided by the members of the American Pharmacist Association;"), 14 (alleging Pfizer sells numerous medications as "one of the world's largest pharmaceutical companies"), 15 (alleging Allergan, another pharmaceutical company, "promote [sic] their product on Cable by fraud and provide AAA members business;"), ECF No. 7.) These broad allegations, lacking a direct tie to Utah, fail to show that Monsanto, Eli Lilly, Pfizer, Allergan, or Abbott purposefully directed any activities relevant to this case toward Utah.

Ms. Van Ornum further alleges that Kuakini Health System (Kuakini) is a "health care provider" [*28] in Honolulu, Hawaii. (Compl. 9, ECF No. 7.) At various points in her Complaint, Ms. Van Ornum alleges Kuakini gave her and her family medical treatment (or mistreatment), though all of Kuakini's actions appear to have occurred in Hawaii. For example, Ms. Van Ornum recounts medical treatment by Kuakini in 1984 in Oahu, Hawaii, referring to Kuakini as "D10," herself as "SCK," and her parents as "RYK" and "ETYK," (see Compl. 8, 7, 4 (defining acronyms), ECF No. 7):

> (24) RX: emergency medical services transport RYK to D10 & follow D10-ERRX instructions: (25) Mar 31st, Ds D/p w/ ETYK & RYK; RDX: OA; Diagnostic tests; (26) D10-RX: blood transfusion, cytosar 20mg; (27) Apr 1st D10-RX: cytosar 20mg discontinue; (28) D10-RX: Decadron at high doses IV, IP; 010-RDX: code-2 status; (29) Apr2nd Ds JSS cause RYK's intra cerebral hemorrhages; acute mycloblastic, leukemia; severe thrombocytopenia death; (30) DPEP denied for RYK; ETYK, her parents, SCK & posterity's "serious harm" continues;

(Compl. 25-27, ECF No. 7.) In 2010, Ms. Van Ornum recounts further treatment by Kuakini in Oahu, Hawaii:

> (17) May15th ETYK's "anxiety" become SCK's concern; (a) SCK, ETYK & siblings go to D10 w/ SCK's DGPOA to obtain [*29] the knowledge of ETYK's SCI: (b) D10 refuse; (c) After D10 learns that ETYK & SCK had stopped OO-M&D & is complying w/ "metabolism" & restoring NF; (d) D10-RDX: low LSN sodium; (e) RX: create a hostile environment against SCK's w/ held consent to RX: (f) D10-RX: from 2:08 am to 6:45 am, HIPAA-IV-RX; (g) refused to stop; (h) disclose ETYK's "healthy key" after HIPAA-IV-RX; (18) 2012 D10 release medical records w/o the knowledge of ETYK's "health keys", justification of their conduct . . .
> . . . .
> . . . (24) May 19th D10 report to APS & diagnose "DW&FC, REH, C&B" is a neglect treatment/maltreatment; (Compl. 42-44.)[5] Ms. Van Ornum also alleges Kuakini caused her paternal grandfather's stroke in 1944 in Hawaii. (Compl. 18, ECF No. 7.) These allegations do not provide any basis for finding Kuakini purposefully directed activity toward Utah, or even that any of Kuakini's alleged treatment occurred in Utah.

Ms. Van Ornum alleges that Dr. Goodhue, D #11 or D #12, is "a citizen & resident of Honolulu Hawaii, defendants' medical [*30] examiner, contracted with the City and County of Honolulu, Hawaii." (Compl. 1, 10, ECF No. 7.) In her Opposition, Ms. Van Ornum states further allegations as to Dr. Goodhue that occurred in Hawaii:

> (1) in 2011 [Dr. Goodhue] was a contracted deputy chief medical examiner for the Department of Medical Examiner, (A) acting under authority and under color of the HRS §841-3, §842-14 laws, until 2015, (B) fully aware that her 2010 medical records is where to find the cause of Nov. 6th, 2010th [sic] fall and 2011th [sic] death; (C) fully aware of the constitution, nature and usage of HPH, KHS, paramedics (Nov. 6th, 2010, Jan. 6th, 2011) HIPAA treatments or procedures, from May 10, 2010 (Section H, paragraphs 74 and 75, subparagraph (A)(16);

(Opp'n 17, ECF No. 51.) The allegations as to Dr. Goodhue's position as a medical examiner in Hawaii and action under Hawaiian law fail to show that Dr. Goodhue purposefully directed any activities toward Utah.

Finally, Ms. Van Ornum notes that Monsanto, Eli Lilly, Pfizer, Allergan, Abbott, Kuakini Health System, and Dr. Goodhue each maintain their respective websites with contact information accessible from Utah. (Opp'n 25, ECF No. 51.) However, as discussed above, Ms. Van [*31] Ornum has not pled any facts showing that the websites provide anything more than passive information. Soma, 196 F.3d at 1299.

[5] The undersigned notes that these excerpts typify Ms. Van Ornum's allegations, both against individual Defendants, such as Kuakini, as well as against the Defendants generally.

Overall, Ms. Van Ornum's Complaint contains vague and often confusing or unintelligible allegations of actions and medical statuses. (See, e.g., Compl. 18-49, ECF No. 7.) Most of the actions appear to have occurred in Hawaii, not Utah, over the course of many decades, and Ms. Van Ornum does not tie the factual allegations to any actions by the Defendants directed at Utah. Rather, Ms. Van Ornum speaks of the disparate corporate and individual Defendants as a whole, using the abbreviation "Ds" to make general allegations of conduct as to all of the Defendants at once. (See, e.g., Compl. 13-14, ECF No. 7.) Ms. Van Ornum recounts some healthcare-related events that occurred in Utah in her Complaint at pages 28 to 29 and 36 to 37, in paragraphs 41 to 43, 47, 66, and 69. These allegations do not clearly relate to any actions by the Defendants purposefully directed at Utah.

Again, an example of Ms. Van Ornum's allegations illustrates the problem the Court faces in understanding Ms. Van Ornum's claims:

(See Compl. 3-8 for definitions of acronyms, ECF No. 7 (lacking a definition of TS).) While these events may have occurred in Utah, the undersigned cannot determine how they relate to any of Ms. Van Ornum's claims.

Ms. Van Ornum's allegations of an accident in Utah also lack any context or description and do not show that any of the Defendants purposefully directed activities at Utah or that Ms. Van Ornum's injuries arise from that accident. (See Opp'n 18-19, ECF No. 51.) Thus, Ms. Van Ornum's Opposition does not assist the Court in finding specific jurisdiction over the Defendants.

In addition, Ms. Van Ornum mistakenly states that the Court will have personal jurisdiction over the Defendants when she serves them with a copy of the Complaint and waiver of service. (See Compl. 11, ECF No. 7.) A defendant's waiver of service of a summons does not waive any objection to personal jurisdiction or venue by that defendant. Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(d)(5). Therefore, mere service does not necessarily establish personal jurisdiction.

Because Ms. Van Ornum does not set forth facts alleging how each [*37] Defendant purposefully directed its actions at Utah and how those actions connect to her alleged injuries, Ms. Van Ornum fails to make a prima facie showing of specific jurisdiction over the Defendants.

2. General Jurisdiction

In the absence of specific jurisdiction, a plaintiff can attempt to assert general jurisdiction over an out-of-state defendant; however, the court must find greater contacts with the forum state than those required for specific jurisdiction. Kuenzle, 102 F.3d at 458 (citation omitted). "[B]ecause general jurisdiction is not related to the events giving rise to the suit, courts impose a more stringent minimum contacts test, requiring the plaintiff to demonstrate the defendant's 'continuous and systematic general business contacts.'" OMI Holdings, 149 F.3d at 1091 (quoting Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Robertson-Ceco Corp., 84 F.3d 560, 567 (2d Cir. 1996)) (internal quotation marks omitted); see Helicopteros Nacionales de Colombia v. Hall, 466 U.S. 408, 416, 104 S. Ct. 1868, 80 L. Ed. 2d 404 (1984).

The Supreme Court's recent holding in Daimler AG v. Bauman clarified the parameters of general jurisdiction. 571 U.S. __, 134 S. Ct. 746, 187 L. Ed. 2d 624 (2014); see *Parlant Tech. v. Bd. of Educ., No. 2:12-CV-417-BCW, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 139064, 2014 WL 4851881, at 4 (D. Utah Sept. 29, 2014). The Supreme Court noted that courts exercise general ("all-purpose") jurisdiction paradigmatically in those forums where a court would fairly regard an individual or corporate defendant as "at home," such as an individual's state of domicile or a corporation's [*38] state of incorporation or principal place of business. Daimler, 134 S. Ct. at 760 (quotations omitted). Beyond the "paradigm bases" for general jurisdiction, the Court clarified that to assert general jurisdiction over an out-of-state corporate defendant, the corporation must have affiliations with the forum state "so continuous[ly] and systematic[ly] as to render [the corporation] essentially at home in the forum State." Id. at 761 (quotations omitted). Courts appropriately require significantly more contacts before finding general jurisdiction than specific because general jurisdiction allows any plaintiff to sue a defendant in that forum for all claims where subject matter jurisdiction exists. See id. at 751 (noting "a court may assert jurisdiction over a foreign corporation 'to hear any and all claims against [it]' only when the corporation's affiliations with the State in which suit is brought are so constant and pervasive 'as to render [it] essentially at home in the forum State.'" (quoting Goodyear Dunlop Tires Operations, S.A. v. Brown, 564 U.S. 915, 131 S. Ct. 2846, 2851, 180 L. Ed. 2d 796 (2011))).

In considering whether a defendant's contacts with the forum suffice to create general jurisdiction where the defendant does not reside, the Tenth Circuit, prior to Daimler, considered the following factors:

> "(1) whether the corporation solicits business in the [*39] state through a local office or agents; (2) whether the corporation sends agents into the state on a regular basis to solicit business; (3) the extent to which the corporation holds itself out as doing business in the forum state, through advertisements, listings or bank accounts; and (4) the volume of business conducted in the state by the corporation."

Kuenzle, 102 F.3d at 457 (quoting Trierweiler v. Croxton & Trench Holding Corp., 90 F.3d 1523, 1533 (10th Cir. 1996)). This list is non-exhaustive. See Trierweiler, 90 F.3d at 1533 ("In assessing contacts with a forum, courts have considered such factors as . . .") (emphasis added) (citation omitted); Wise v. Lindamood, 89 F. Supp. 2d 1187, 1193 (D. Colo. 1999) (citation omitted) ("[T]he Trierweiler factors are neither exhaustive nor necessarily determinative of the general personal jurisdiction inquiry.").

Ms. Van Ornum has not alleged the paradigm bases of general jurisdiction. Dr. Goodhue lives in Hawaii, not Utah. Meanwhile, none of the corporate defendants is incorporated in Utah or has its principle place of business in Utah. Nor has Ms. Van Ornum presented factual allegations suggesting that any of the Defendants' affiliations with Utah qualify as "so continuous or systematic" as to render the Defendants "at home" in Utah. See Daimler, 134 S. Ct. at 761 n. 19 ("It is one thing to hold a corporation answerable for operations in the forum State . . . quite [*40] another to expose it to suit on claims having no connection whatever to the forum State.").

In her Opposition, Ms. Van Ornum states that the "Court has general, general personal, specific, long-arm or personal jurisdiction" over each of the Defendants, (Opp'n 9-17, ECF No. 51), and attempts to add more jurisdictional facts to her pleadings, such as including the websites of each Defendant and alleging that people can access the websites from Utah. (Id. at 25.) These details do not suggest business activities "so constant and pervasive" as to make the corporations "at home" in Utah. See Daimler, 134 S. Ct. at 751 (quoting standard). Thus, on this record, the undersigned cannot conclude this Court has general jurisdiction over any of these Defendants.

In sum, Ms. Van Ornum has failed to plead facts establishing that the Court could exercise either specific or general personal jurisdiction over any of the Defendants. Finding no basis to exercise personal jurisdiction, the undersigned need not address the potential for supplemental jurisdiction over the Hawaii statutory claim.

RECOMMENDATION

For the reasons stated above, the undersigned RECOMMENDS the Court dismiss Ms. Van Ornum's claims against the Defendants without prejudice, [*41] granting Defendants' Motions (ECF Nos. 9, 14, 23, 29, 36, 45, 46, 66). Based on Ms. Van Ornum's pleadings and supporting materials, the Court lacks personal jurisdiction over the Defendants in this case. The undersigned further RECOMMENDS that the Court find as moot Defendant Hawaii Pacific's second Motion to Dismiss, (ECF No. 39), due to the undersigned's prior recommendation that the Court grant Hawaii Pacific's first Motion to Dismiss, (ECF No. 14). The undersigned also RECOMMENDS that the Court terminate Ms. Van Ornum's Motion for Particularity because it functions as an Opposition and not a Motion. (ECF No. 16.)

The Court will send copies of this Report and Recommendation to the parties who the Court hereby notifies of their right to object to the same. The Court further notifies the parties that they must file any objection to this Report and Recommendation with the clerk of the court, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 636(b) and Fed. R. Civ. P. 72(b), within fourteen (14) days of service thereof. Failure to file objections may constitute waiver of objections upon subsequent review.

[*1051] ORDER GRANTING DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO DISMISS WITH PREJUDICE

Re: Dkt. Nos. 110, 137, 138

Plaintiffs Greg Garrison ("Garrison"), Deborah Van Vorst ("Van Vorst"), and Sastry Hari ("Hari") (collectively, "Plaintiffs") bring this putative class action against Defendant Oracle Corporation ("Oracle") for alleged violations of federal and California antitrust laws. ECF No. 105 (Second Amended Complaint, or "SAC").[1] Before the Court is Oracle's motion to dismiss. ECF No. 110. Having considered the parties' submissions, the relevant law, and the record [3] in this case, the Court hereby GRANTS Oracle's motion to dismiss with prejudice.

I. BACKGROUND

A. Factual Background

1. The Parties

Oracle is a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business in Redwood Shores, California. SAC ¶ 22. The world's second-largest software producer by revenue, Oracle specializes in developing and marketing computer hardware systems and enterprise software products, including its own brands of database management systems. Id. ¶ 23.

Plaintiffs are former employees of Oracle. Id. ¶¶ 16, 18, 20. Garrison worked for Oracle as a senior account manager from [*1052] "approximately December 2008 to June 2009." Id. ¶¶ 16-17. Van Vorst worked for Oracle as a sales operations manager and business analyst from "approximately 2009 to August 2012." Id. ¶¶ 18-19. Hari was a senior manager of quality assurance at Oracle from "approximately the middle of 2012 to November 2013." Id. ¶¶ 20-21.

Plaintiffs seek to represent the following classes:

> All natural persons who were employed by Oracle on a salaried basis in the technical, creative, and/or research and [4] development fields in the United States from May 10, 2007 to the present. Excluded from the Class are: retail employees, corporate officers, members of the boards of directors, and senior executives of Oracle.
> All natural persons who were employed by Oracle on a salaried basis in a manager level or above position, for product, sales, or general and administrative roles in the United States at any time from May 10, 2007 to the present. Excluded from the Class are: retail employees[,] corporate officers, members of the boards of directors, and senior executives of Oracle.

Id. ¶ 64.

2. In re High-Tech Employee Antitrust Litigation

Here, Plaintiffs allege that Oracle conspired with Google, Inc. ("Google"), Intuit Inc. ("Intuit"), Adobe Systems, Inc. ("Adobe"), International Business Machines Corp. ("IBM") and "various other technology companies," as well as with non-technology based companies and recruiting companies, to fix and suppress employee compensation. SAC ¶¶ 2-3. As the factual and procedural history of In re High-Tech Employee Antitrust Litigation ("High-Tech"), No. 11-CV-02509, as well as the U.S. Department of Justice's ("DOJ") investigations and complaints, are relevant to this [5] action, the Court briefly summarizes the background of that litigation below. See SAC ¶¶ 48, 50-53 (discussing DOJ investigation).

From 2009 to 2010, DOJ's Antitrust Division investigated the employment and recruitment practices of various Silicon Valley technology companies, including Adobe, Apple Inc. ("Apple"), Intel Corp. ("Intel"), Intuit, and Google. See High-Tech, 856 F. Supp. 2d 1103, 1109 (N.D. Cal. 2012). DOJ filed its complaint against Adobe, Apple, Google, Intel, Intuit, and Pixar on September 24, 2010. Id. On December 21, 2010, DOJ filed another complaint against Lucasfilm Ltd. ("Lucasfilm"). See No. 11-2509, ECF No. 93-4. The defendants in these two lawsuits stipulated to proposed final judgments in which they agreed that DOJ's complaints had stated claims under federal antitrust law and agreed to be "enjoined from attempting to enter into, maintaining or enforcing any agreement with any other person or in any way refrain from . . . soliciting, cold calling, recruiting, or otherwise competing for employees of the other person." High-Tech, 856 F. Supp. 2d at 1109-10 (quoting Adobe Proposed Final Judgment at 5). The U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia entered the stipulated proposed final judgments on March 17, 2011, and June 2, 2011, respectively. Id. at 1110.

Private plaintiffs filed five separate [6] state court actions between May and July 2011. Following removal, transfer to San Jose to the undersigned judge, and consolidation as In re High Tech Employee Antitrust Litigation, the High-Tech plaintiffs filed a consolidated amended complaint on September 13, 2011. Id. at 1112-13. In their complaint, the High-Tech plaintiffs alleged antitrust claims against their employers, claiming that the defendants had conspired "to fix and suppress employee compensation and to restrict employee mobility." Id. at 1108. More specifically, the High-Tech [*1053] plaintiffs alleged a conspiracy comprised of "an interconnected web of express bilateral agreements." Id. at 1110. One such agreement, the "Do Not Cold Call" agreement, involved one company placing the names of another company's employees on a "Do Not Cold Call" list and instructing its recruiters not to cold call the employees of the other company. Id. In addition to the "Do Not Cold Call" agreements, the High-Tech plaintiffs alleged that Pixar and Lucasfilm entered into express, written agreements (1) not to cold call each other's employees; (2) to notify the other company whenever making an offer to an employee of the other company; and (3) not to engage in "bidding wars." Id. at 1111.

On [7] May 17, 2013, the High-Tech plaintiffs publicly filed a number of documents in support of their supplemental motion for class certification. No. 11-2509, ECF Nos. 418, 428. One of those documents was an internal Google memo describing Google's hiring protocols and practices as of "1.7.2008." No. 11-2509, ECF No. 428-10 at GOOG-HIGH-TECH-00059839. At one point, the Google memo refers to certain companies on the "'Restricted Hiring' list," including Microsoft, Novell, Sun Microsystems, and, as relevant here, Oracle. Id. Although DOJ began investigating Oracle with the High-Tech defendants in 2009, DOJ concluded its investigation into Oracle without filing a lawsuit on October 29, 2014. SAC ¶ 53.

3. Alleged Conspiracy in the Instant Lawsuit

Plaintiffs allege a conspiracy among Oracle, other technology companies, the technology departments of non-technology-based companies, and recruiting companies "to fix and suppress employee compensation, and impose unlawful restrictions on employee mobility." SAC ¶¶ 2-4, 9. As part of this conspiracy, Oracle allegedly entered into a series of anti-solicitation "Secret Agreements." Id. ¶ 2. Other than the senior executives who "actively managed and enforced" [8] the Secret Agreements, Oracle employees "were not apprised of any of these Secret Agreements and did not consent to this restriction on their mobility of employment." Id. ¶¶ 34, 57.

Plaintiffs allege three types of Secret Agreements. First, Oracle allegedly established a "no hire" list, on which Oracle placed companies that entered into a reciprocal agreement with Oracle not to solicit each other's employees. Id. ¶¶ 26-27. Plaintiffs do not further define the terms of the "no hire" agreements, so it is unclear whether the "no hire" agreements alleged here include all of the activities alleged in High-Tech: (1) not to cold call each other's employees, (2) to notify the other company whenever making an offer to an employee of the other company, and (3) not to engage in "bidding wars." See High-Tech, 856 F. Supp. 2d at 1111.

Second, Plaintiffs allege that Oracle formed "gentlemen's agreements" when the CEOs of "certain companies" would agree orally not to solicit one another's employees. SAC ¶ 6. According to Plaintiffs, "gentlemen's agreements" were often not added to the "no hire" list. Id. ¶ 31. Third, Plaintiffs allege a "Restricted Hiring Agreement" between Oracle and Google. Id. ¶ 5. The Restricted Hiring Agreement [9] between Oracle and Google was the sole Secret Agreement alleged in Garrison's original complaint. See *Garrison v. Oracle Corp., No. 14-CV-04592-LHK, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 53653, 2015 WL 1849517, at 2 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 22, 2015).

Now, the SAC specifically identifies the following Secret Agreements:

• In an email dated March 30, 2006, Oracle's Director of Recruiting stated that Oracle had a "gentleman's agreement with IBM whereby both companies would not solicit each other's [*1054] consultants." SAC ¶ 30; see also id. ¶ 44 (January 16, 2008 email from Oracle's Director of Recruiting, who told an Oracle recruiter to stop soliciting employees from IBM). The SAC does not allege the date that Oracle entered into the agreement with IBM.

• In May 2007, Oracle and Google entered into a Restricted Hiring Agreement: "Not to pursue manager level and above candidates for Product, Sales, or [General and Administrative] roles—even if they have applied to [any of the other companies who are parties to the Restricted Hiring Agreement]." Id. ¶ 32 (second alteration in original). A Google employee confirmed the Restricted Hiring Agreement in an October 9, 2007 email: "I would like to make sure there is no confusion around our Restricted Hiring Rule: We are not to pursue any PSG&A [Product, Sales, [10] General, and Administrative] candidate at the manager level or above from Microsoft, Novell, Oracle, or Sun." Id. ¶ 33 (alteration in original) (emphases omitted).

• In a June 4, 2007 email, Oracle's Director of Recruiting memorialized an agreement with Deloitte: "Please get a note out to our team that no emails of this kind and no solicitation voicemails should be left for Deloitte candidates or to any other candidates who we have no-hire agreements with." Id. ¶ 40.

• In an email dated November 30, 2007, a VP at Oracle contacted Oracle's HR department and stated "pls confirm that we can put Micros on a no hire list." Id. ¶ 42. The SAC does not specify whether Micros was added to the "no hire" list.

• By March 19, 2009, Oracle and Adobe came to an agreement "not to directly or indirectly solicit employees from any company on the 'no hire' list." Id. ¶ 47. Plaintiffs allege that Adobe was not added to the "no hire" list but had a "gentleman's agreement" with Oracle. Id. ¶ 28.

• On December 29, 2009, Oracle added CoreTech, Inc. ("CoreTech") to the "no hire" list. Id. ¶ 49. Plaintiffs allege that CoreTech's inclusion on the "no hire" list was scheduled to end on September 4, 2012. Id.

• At [11] unspecified dates, Oracle added Texas Instruments, Honeywell, Novell, and Novartis to the "no hire" list. Id. ¶ 27.

• At an unspecified date, Oracle and recruiting company Riviera Partners agreed that Riviera Partners would "not perform job placement services for Oracle employees." Id. ¶ 55. This agreement was in place at least in 2014, when Riviera Partners told a former Senior Director at Oracle that Riviera Partners could not place the former Oracle employee due to Riviera Partners's agreement with Oracle. Id.

• At an unspecified date, Oracle added Intuit to the "no hire" list. Id. ¶ 27. In an undated email, an Intuit recruiting employee expressed concern about hiring a consultant, asking "can we make an offer to him after he signs on as a consultant and not be in violation of non-solicitation clauses from Oracle (where he is employed)?" Id. ¶ 29 (emphases omitted).

• Hewlett-Packard and Xerox were "part of the conspiracy at some time from 2007 through 2015." Id. ¶ 75. Plaintiffs do not allege when Oracle entered into an agreement with either Hewlett-Packard or Xerox, or the content of any such agreements.

Altogether, Plaintiffs identify around 15 companies with which Oracle allegedly [12] entered [*1055] into a Secret Agreement. Plaintiffs further point to "scores and scores" and a "plethora" of other companies with Secret Agreements with Oracle. Id. ¶¶ 7, 27. Plaintiffs do not identify these companies, or the content or date of these companies' Secret Agreements with Oracle. Plaintiffs allege that "Oracle continued to enter into new Secret Agreements with companies" and to ratify the Secret Agreements "well into 2012." Id. ¶ 49. However, the last year that Plaintiffs allege that Oracle entered into a specific Secret Agreement is 2009. See generally SAC.

Plaintiffs additionally allege that Oracle ensured that its employees and other companies adhered to the "no hire" list. For example, internally, Oracle disseminated the "no hire" list to "key human resource and recruiting personnel" in June 2007. Id. ¶ 31; see also id. ¶ 41 (June 8, 2007 email from Oracle's Director of Recruiting to the "recruiting team," stating, "While we have no written policy concerning non-solicitation of our partners' employees; our policy is and continues to be that we do not directly solicit from our partners. . . . Our partners have the same arrangement with Oracle"). Externally, Oracle could allegedly [13] fine other companies for violating a Secret Agreement. Id. ¶¶ 35-36. Additionally, Oracle allegedly threatened companies with baseless lawsuits "as a means to punish them for breaching the Secret Agreement." Id. ¶¶ 37-39.

According to Plaintiffs, the effect of the Secret Agreements was to depress the salaries of "all employees of participating companies." Id. ¶ 60. In a restricted hiring market, Oracle and the other companies with Secret Agreements faced decreased pressure to match or better a rival's employment offer to an employee. Id. Thus, the Secret Agreements "fix[ed] the compensation of the employees of participating companies at artificially low levels." Id. ¶ 61. Moreover, depressing the wages of "top tier employees" also allegedly suppressed the wages of all employees underneath the top tier employees. Id. ¶ 60.

4. Statute of Limitations Allegations

The SAC adds a new section titled "Statute of Limitations," which alleges that Plaintiffs' claims were timely filed for two reasons: (1) Oracle's conspiracy was a continuing violation of the antitrust laws until at least 2013; and (2) Oracle fraudulently concealed the conspiracy from Plaintiffs until 2013. Plaintiffs' specific allegations [14] as to each theory follow.

a. Continuing Violation

Plaintiffs allege that "Oracle's conspiracy was a continuing violation through which Oracle repeatedly invaded Plaintiffs' and Plaintiff Class' interests by adhering to, enforcing, and reaffirming the anticompetitive" Secret Agreements. SAC ¶ 73. First, Plaintiffs allege that "Oracle continued to enter into new Secret Agreements with companies . . . well into 2012." Id. ¶ 49. Second, Plaintiffs allege that, during their collective employment with Oracle from 2009 to 2013, neither Plaintiff Van Vorst nor Plaintiff Hari was solicited by any technology company with which Oracle had a Secret Agreement. Id. ¶¶ 18, 20, 77, 80. Third, all Plaintiffs were unable to find employment in the technology industry after leaving Oracle, allegedly due to the Secret Agreements. Id. ¶¶ 74-81. Plaintiff Van Vorst specifically alleges that, during the end of her employment with Oracle, she applied to "technology companies, including those with which Oracle had entered a Secret Agreement," and was not hired by said companies. Id. ¶ 78.

b. Fraudulent Concealment

Plaintiffs allege that Oracle fraudulently concealed the conspiracy in two ways, which prevented Plaintiffs [15] from filing their claims on time. First, Plaintiffs allege that Oracle affirmatively aimed "to [*1056] avoid dissemination of the [S]ecret [A]greements and restrict the knowledge to the smallest possible group within Oracle." Id. ¶ 101; see also id. ¶ 109 (knowledge of the Secret Agreements was allegedly "confined to only the most senior executives and the most senior employees from its human resources and recruiting departments"). As "representative" of this corporate policy, Plaintiffs highlight a January 17, 2008 email by Oracle's Director of Recruiting telling an Oracle recruiter, "DO NOT email any employees of our partners or employees on our no-hire list—period." Id. ¶ 98, 101. Plaintiffs also point to a February 12, 2008 email by an Oracle employee to "the HR department" allegedly "attaching a 'No Hire' list, and directing them to not forward, but to call if they have any questions." Id. ¶ 100. Additionally, Plaintiffs allege that Oracle required DOJ to redact any publicly filed or disclosed documents that Oracle produced during the DOJ investigation, "so as not to publicly reveal the substance of the Secret Agreements and the specific companies involved." Id. ¶ 104. Because of Oracle's active concealment [16] of the Secret Agreements, Plaintiffs allegedly received notice of the Secret Agreements only when certain documents were unsealed during the High-Tech litigation on May 17, 2013. Id. ¶¶ 105-106.

Second, Plaintiffs allege that Oracle misled Plaintiffs into believing their compensation was competitive. Plaintiff Garrison alleges that "an Oracle human resource employee" falsely informed Garrison that "Oracle's commission structure was competitive with other technology companies." Id. ¶ 90. Plaintiff Hari alleges that he was "directed by a senior executive to inform his team of subordinates that their compensation levels at Oracle were highly competitive and that they should be very pleased with the level of compensation Oracle offered." Id. According to Plaintiff Hari, the statement was false because Oracle was actively suppressing compensation levels by way of the Secret Agreements. Id. Further, Plaintiffs allege that "Class members repeatedly asked Oracle about how compensation was determined," but Oracle responded misleadingly that compensation was "competitive." Id. ¶ 97. According to Plaintiffs, in these conversations about compensation Oracle "never once admitted that it had any [17] agreements with any other company not to solicit one another's employees." Id. ¶ 103.

In addition to these alleged misrepresentations, Plaintiffs claim that Oracle's public filings with the Securities and Exchange Commission ("SEC") have been misleading. Id. ¶¶ 92-94. For example, Oracle's 2008 filing stated "We may be unable to hire enough qualified employees or we may lose key employees. . . . In the software industry, there is substantial and continuous competition for highly skilled business, product development, technical and other personnel. . . . We may also experience increased compensation costs that are not offset by either improved productivity or higher prices." Id. ¶ 93 (emphases omitted). Plaintiffs aver that Oracle made substantially identical statements in Oracle's 10-K SEC filings from 2010 to 2013. Id. ¶ 94. Plaintiffs also highlight Oracle's employee handbook, which from 2008 to 2014 stated, "Oracle commits rigorously to observing applicable antitrust or competition laws of all countries or organizations." Id. ¶¶ 85-87.

B. Procedural History

In light of the relationship between the instant case and High-Tech, the Court briefly summarizes the relevant procedural history [18] in High-Tech before turning to the instant case.

1. High-Tech

The High-Tech defendants removed the first state court action on May 23, 2011. [*1057] No. 11-2509, ECF No. 1. The last state court action in the High-Tech litigation was removed on July 19, 2011. No. 11-2509, ECF No. 41. The High-Tech cases were reassigned to the undersigned judge on August 5, 2011. No. 11-2509, ECF No. 60. The High-Tech cases were consolidated on September 12, 2011. No. 11-2509, ECF No. 64. The First Consolidated Amended Complaint was filed on September 13, 2011. No. 11-2509, ECF No. 65. On April 18, 2012, the Court granted in part and denied in part the High-Tech defendants' joint motion to dismiss and denied Lucasfilm's motion to dismiss. No. 11-2509, ECF No. 119. On April 5, 2013, the Court granted in part and denied in part the High-Tech plaintiffs' motion for class certification with leave to amend. No. 11-2509, ECF No. 382. The Court granted the High-Tech plaintiffs' supplemental motion for class certification on October 24, 2013. No. 11-2509, ECF No. 531. On November 13, 2013, the High-Tech defendants filed a Rule 23(f) petition before the Ninth Circuit, requesting permission to appeal this Court's October 24, 2013 [19] class certification order. No. 13-80223 (9th Cir.), ECF No. 1. The Ninth Circuit denied the defendants' petition on January 14, 2014. No. 13-80223 (9th Cir.), ECF No. 18.

In the interim, three of the High-Tech defendants—Intuit, Lucasfilm, and Pixar—reached an early settlement with the plaintiffs. On September 21, 2013, the High-Tech plaintiffs filed a motion for preliminary approval of a proposed class action settlement as to defendants Intuit, Lucasfilm, and Pixar. No. 11-2509, ECF No. 501. On October 30, 2013, the Court granted preliminary approval. No. 11-2509, ECF No. 540. The Court granted final approval as to that settlement on May 16, 2014. No. 11-2509, ECF No. 915. The Court entered a final judgment with regards to Lucasfilm, Pixar, and Intuit on June 9, 2014. No. 11-2509, ECF No. 936. At the request of Intuit, the Court entered an amended final judgment on June 20, 2014. No. 11-2509, ECF No. 947.

The remaining High-Tech defendants—Adobe, Apple, Google, and Intel—filed individual motions for summary judgment, and joint motions for summary judgment and to strike certain expert testimony on January 9, 2014. No. 11-2509, ECF Nos. 554 (Intel), 556 and 557 (joint motions), 560 (Adobe), [20] 561 (Apple), 564 (Google). The Court denied the High-Tech defendants' individual motions for summary judgment on March 28, 2014. No. 11-2509, ECF No. 771. On April 4, 2014, the Court granted in part and denied in part the High-Tech defendants' motion to strike, and denied the defendants' joint motion for summary judgment. No. 11-2509, ECF No. 788.

On May 22, 2014, the High-Tech plaintiffs filed a motion for preliminary approval of class action settlement as to the remaining defendants. No. 11-2509, ECF No. 920. On August 8, 2014, the Court denied the High-Tech plaintiffs' motion for preliminary approval and concluded that the proposed settlement did not fall "within the range of reasonableness." No. 11-2509, ECF No. 974 at 30. On September 4, 2014, the High-Tech defendants filed a petition for a writ of mandamus with the Ninth Circuit. No. 14-72745 (9th Cir.), ECF No. 1. On September 22, 2014, the Ninth Circuit found that the petition "raises issues that warrant a response," and ordered briefing. No. 14-72745 (9th Cir.), ECF No. 2. On January 13, 2015, the High-Tech defendants filed correspondence with the Ninth Circuit referring to a new proposed settlement agreement. No. 14-72745 [21] (9th Cir.), ECF No. 21. On January 30, 2015, the defendants filed an unopposed motion to dismiss the petition, which the Ninth Circuit granted on February 2, 2015. No. 14-72745 (9th Cir.), ECF Nos. 23, 24.

[*1058] On January 15, 2015, the High-Tech plaintiffs filed a motion for preliminary approval of class action settlement as to the remaining defendants. No. 11-2509, ECF No. 1032. In this second proposed class action settlement, the parties had reached a settlement amount exceeding the previously rejected settlement by approximately $90.5 million. Id. at 1. Following a fairness hearing on March 2, 2015, the Court granted preliminary approval to the January 2015 settlement agreement on March 3, 2015. No. 11-2509, ECF Nos. 1051, 1054. The Court held a final approval hearing on July 9, 2015. No. 11-2509, ECF No. 1096. Plaintiffs' counsel completed their supplemental briefing on attorney's fees and potential opt outs on July 24, 2015. ECF Nos. 1108, 1109. On September 2, 2015, the Court granted final approval of the class action settlement and entered final judgment with regard to Adobe, Apple, Google, and Intuit. No. 11-2509, ECF Nos. 1111, 1113.

2. Instant Lawsuit

Plaintiff Garrison filed the class action [22] complaint on October 14, 2014. ECF No. 1. On October 22, 2014, the Court related this action to High-Tech. ECF No. 6. After initially answering the complaint on November 10, 2014, ECF No. 9, Oracle filed an amended answer on December 1, 2014, ECF No. 12.

On January 5, 2015, Oracle filed a motion for judgment on the pleadings, ECF No. 17, which the Court granted on April 22, 2015, ECF No. 72. The Court found that Garrison's claims were time barred under the applicable statutes of limitations, and that Garrison had failed to adequately plead a "continuing violation" or "fraudulent concealment" theory to toll the statutes of limitations. See *Garrison, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 53653, 2015 WL 1849517, at 9. The dismissal was without prejudice, as the Court determined that Garrison might be able to allege sufficient facts to support his continuing violation or fraudulent concealment theories. Id.

On May 22, 2015, Garrison filed an amended complaint. ECF Nos. 98 (conditionally sealed); 102 (unredacted). After the Court approved a stipulation for Garrison to file a second amended complaint, ECF No. 104, Garrison, along with additional plaintiffs Van Vorst and Hari, filed the SAC on June 5, 2015, ECF No. 105. The SAC asserts causes of action under the following [23] statutes: (1) Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1; (2) California's Cartwright Act (the "Cartwright Act"), Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720 et seq.; (3) California's Unfair Competition Law ("UCL"), Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.; and (4) California's Business & Professions

Code § 16600 et seq. ("Section 16600"). SAC ¶¶ 111-142. Plaintiffs seek damages, pre- and post-judgment interest, attorneys' fees and expenses, and a permanent injunction. Id. at 29.

Oracle filed the instant motion to dismiss on June 25, 2015. ECF No. 110 ("Mot."). Oracle renews the argument that Plaintiffs' claims are untimely, and also moves to dismiss for failure to state a claim on the merits. See id. Oracle also filed a request for judicial notice. ECF No. 111. On July 15, 2015, the Court granted a stipulation to strike one paragraph of the SAC. ECF No. 113. On July 22, 2015, Plaintiffs opposed the motion to dismiss, ECF No. 114 ("Opp."), and filed a request for judicial notice, ECF No. 114-1. Oracle replied on August 13, 2015. ECF No. 125 ("Reply"). On December 4, 2015, Plaintiffs filed an ex parte motion to supplement the record and to stay proceedings pending Plaintiffs' anticipated motion to compel compliance with a subpoena. ECF No. 138. Plaintiffs also filed a motion to seal materials associated with the motion to supplement the record. ECF No. 137. Although [*1059] Oracle [24] was not served with the ex parte motion, Oracle filed an opposition on December 7, 2015. ECF No. 139. As of the date of this order, Plaintiffs have not filed the anticipated motion to compel.

On December 17, 2015, the Court ordered the parties to file supplemental briefing. ECF No. 144. The Court noted that the parties, in the original briefing, did not dispute that Plaintiffs' claims accrued under the default accrual rules by 2009, at the latest, and thus that Plaintiffs' claims were untimely absent an exception to the default accrual rules or a tolling doctrine. Id. The Court asked the parties to address whether Plaintiff Hari's employment at Oracle impacts the statutes of limitations analysis. Id. On January 5, 2016, the parties filed simultaneous briefs in response to the Court's order. ECF Nos. 148 (Oracle's supplemental brief); 149 (Plaintiffs' supplemental brief). Plaintiffs filed an administrative motion to file Plaintiffs' supplemental brief and associated documents under seal. ECF No. 150. On January 15, 2016, the parties filed simultaneous reply briefs. ECF Nos. 153 (Oracle's reply); 155 (Plaintiffs' reply).

II. LEGAL STANDARD

A. Rule 12(b)(6)

Rule 8(a)(2) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure requires a complaint to include "a short and [25] plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." A complaint that fails to meet this standard may be dismissed pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6). Rule 8(a) requires a plaintiff to plead "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). "The plausibility standard is not akin to a probability requirement, but it asks for more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully." Id.

For purposes of ruling on a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, the Court "accept[s] factual allegations in the complaint as true and construe[s] the pleadings in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party." Manzarek v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 519 F.3d 1025, 1031 (9th Cir. 2008). The Court, however, need not accept as true allegations contradicted by judicially noticeable facts, see Shwarz v. United States, 234 F.3d 428, 435 (9th Cir. 2000), and it "may look beyond the plaintiff's complaint to matters of public record" without converting the Rule 12(b)(6) motion into a motion for summary judgment, Shaw v. Hahn, 56 F.3d 1128, 1129 n.1 (9th Cir. 1995). Nor must the Court "assume the truth of legal conclusions merely because they are cast in the form of factual allegations." Fayer v. Vaughn, 649 F.3d 1061, 1064 (9th Cir. 2011) (per curiam). Mere "conclusory allegations of [26] law and unwarranted inferences are insufficient to defeat a motion to dismiss." Adams v. Johnson, 355 F.3d 1179, 1183 (9th Cir. 2004).

B. Rule 9(b)

Claims sounding in fraud or mistake are subject to the heightened pleading requirements of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b), which require that a plaintiff alleging fraud "must state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud." Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b); see also Kearns v. Ford Motor Co., 567 F.3d 1120, 1124 (9th Cir. 2009). To satisfy the heightened standard under Rule 9(b), the allegations must be "specific enough to give defendants notice of the particular misconduct which is alleged to constitute the fraud charged so that they can defend [*1060] against the charge and not just deny that they have done anything wrong." Semegen v. Weidner, 780 F.2d 727, 731 (9th Cir. 1985). Thus, claims sounding in fraud must allege "an account of the time, place, and specific content of the false representations as well as the identities of the parties to the misrepresentations." Swartz v. KPMG LLP, 476 F.3d 756, 764 (9th Cir. 2007) (per curiam) (citation omitted). "A plaintiff must set forth what is false or misleading about a statement, and why it is false." In re GlenFed, Inc. Sec. Litig., 42 F.3d 1541, 1548 (9th Cir. 1994) (en banc), superseded by statute on other grounds as stated in SEC v. Todd, 642 F.3d 1207, 1216 (9th Cir. 2011). However, "intent, knowledge, and other conditions of a person's mind" need not be stated with particularity, and "may be alleged generally." Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b).

C. Leave to Amend

If the court concludes that the complaint should be dismissed, [27] it must then decide whether to grant leave to amend. Under Rule 15(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, leave to amend "shall be freely given when justice so requires," bearing in mind "the underlying purpose of Rule 15 . . . [is] to facilitate decision on the merits, rather than on the pleadings or technicalities." Lopez v. Smith, 203 F.3d 1122, 1127 (9th Cir. 2000) (en banc) (citation omitted). Nonetheless, a district court may deny leave to amend a complaint due to "undue delay, bad faith or dilatory motive on the part of the movant, repeated failure to cure deficiencies by amendments previously allowed, undue prejudice to the opposing party by virtue of allowance of the amendment, [and] futility of amendment." See Leadsinger, Inc. v. BMG Music Publ'g, 512 F.3d 522, 532 (9th Cir. 2008).

III. DISCUSSION

Oracle moves to dismiss Plaintiffs' complaint on four grounds: (1) all of Plaintiffs' claims are barred by the applicable statute of limitations; (2) Plaintiffs fail to state a Sherman Act claim because Plaintiffs fail to adequately allege an agreement between Oracle and Google or a conspiracy among Oracle and other companies; (3) Plaintiffs are ineligible for restitution or disgorgement under the UCL; and (4) Plaintiffs, as former Oracle employees, lack standing to seek injunctive and declaratory relief. Mot. at 7-25. As the Court concludes below that [28] Plaintiffs' claims are time barred, the Court need not reach the remainder of Oracle's arguments.

As a preliminary matter, the Court addresses the parties' requests for judicial notice and Plaintiffs' ex parte motion to supplement the record and to stay the ruling. The Court then turns to the statutes of limitations applicable to Plaintiffs' claims. Next, the Court considers Plaintiffs' arguments that an exception to the default accrual rules or a tolling doctrine renders Plaintiffs' claims timely.

A. Motions for Judicial Notice, to Supplement the Record, and to Stay the Ruling

1. Judicial Notice

Although a district court generally may not consider any material beyond the pleadings in ruling on a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, the Court may take judicial notice of documents referenced in the complaint, as well as matters in the public record, without converting a motion to dismiss into one for summary judgment. See Lee v. City of L.A., 250 F.3d 668, 688-89 (9th Cir. 2001), overruled on other grounds by Galbraith v. Cty. of Santa Clara, 307 F.3d 1119, 1125-26 (9th Cir. 2002). In addition, the Court may take judicial notice of matters that are either "generally known within the trial court's territorial jurisdiction" or [*1061] "can be accurately and readily determined from sources whose accuracy cannot reasonably be questioned." Fed. R. Evid. 201(b).

Oracle requests [29] that the Court take judicial notice of documents incorporated by reference into the SAC, including emails quoted or relied upon in SAC ¶¶ 29, 33, 36, 40, 45, 47, 49, 98-100; Oracle documents quoted or relied upon in SAC ¶¶ 84-110; and deposition testimony relied upon in SAC ¶ 54. Oracle also requests judicial notice of matters of public record (complaints and final judgments in federal district courts), and a newspaper article. Plaintiffs request the Court take judicial notice of certain matters of public record (an official government document in a DOJ file, and complaints and final judgments in federal district courts). These documents are appropriate for judicial notice. See Coto Settlement v. Eisenberg, 593 F.3d 1031, 1038 (9th Cir. 2010) (materials incorporated by reference into the complaint); Von Saher v. Norton Simon Museum of Art at Pasadena, 592 F.3d 954, 960 (9th Cir. 2009) (the fact that information was published in news articles); Lee, 250 F.3d at 689-90 (matters of public record). Accordingly, the Court GRANTS the parties' unopposed requests for judicial notice. See ECF Nos. 111, 114-1.

2. Plaintiffs' Ex Parte Motion to Supplement the Record and to Stay the Ruling

On Friday evening, December 4, 2015—almost four months after the completion of briefing in the instant motion—Plaintiffs filed an ex parte motion to supplement the record and to stay [30] the Court's ruling on the instant motion pending an anticipated motion to compel documents from the defendants and the counsel for the plaintiffs in the High-Tech litigation. ECF No. 138 (noting the motion to compel is "set to be filed next week"). Plaintiffs seek to supplement the record with numerous documents allegedly discovered after the completion of the briefing on the instant motion, which Plaintiffs claim demonstrate Oracle's alleged antitrust violations and fraudulent concealment. Plaintiffs filed a corresponding motion to file the documents under seal. ECF No. 137. Although Oracle was not served with Plaintiffs' filings, and did not have access to the documents that Plaintiffs filed conditionally under seal, Oracle filed an opposition on December 7, 2015. ECF No. 139. As of the date of this order, Plaintiffs have not filed the anticipated motion to compel documents from the parties involved in the High-Tech litigation.

Civil Local Rule 7-10 provides that a party may file an ex parte motion "only if a statute, Federal Rule, local rule or Standing Order authorizes the filing of an ex parte motion," unless otherwise ordered by the Court. Civ. L.R. 7-10. The Rule also provides that the ex parte motion [31] "must include a citation to the statute, rule or order which permits the use of an ex parte motion to obtain the relief sought." Id. Plaintiffs' ex parte motion does not cite to any authority permitting the filing of an ex parte motion. Nor does Plaintiffs' motion provide any reason for filing ex parte. Accordingly, the Court STRIKES Plaintiffs' motion. See Civ. L.R. 7-10; cf. *Bertuccio v. San Benito Cty., No. 13-CV-01339-LHK, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 69356, 2013 WL 2147421, at 3 (N.D. Cal. May 15, 2013) ("None of Plaintiffs' motions identified any authorization for her ex parte communications. This alone would justify denial . . . ."). The Court DENIES as moot Plaintiffs' corresponding motion to file under seal.[2]

[*1062] Even if the Court were to consider Plaintiffs' motion, however, the Court would decline to supplement the record or stay the instant ruling. First, the proffered documents would not alter the Court's statutes of limitations analysis. The proffered documents all refer to conduct from 2006 to 2009. However, as discussed below, Plaintiffs' claims are untimely unless Plaintiffs allege actions by Oracle after October 14, 2010—i.e., within four years of the filing of the complaint on October 14, 2014. Additionally, the documents do not show fraudulent concealment by

[2] The Court notes that Plaintiffs also apparently failed to comply with the Court's local rules when filing the motion to seal. When seeking to file under seal a document designated as confidential by the opposing party or a non-party, Civil Local Rule 79-5(e) requires Plaintiffs to file a declaration identifying the document sought to be sealed and the designating party. Civ. L.R. 79-5(e). Plaintiffs did not identify non-parties Google or IBM in Plaintiffs' required declaration. See ECF No. 137-1. However, on December 9, 2015, Oracle informed the Court that Plaintiffs sought to seal documents designated [32] as confidential by Google and IBM. ECF No. 141. On December 14, 2015, Google filed a declaration stating that Plaintiffs sought to seal documents designated as confidential by Google, and that Google was informed by Oracle's counsel that Plaintiffs sought to seal these documents. ECF No. 143. IBM has not filed a response to Plaintiffs' motion to seal, and it is not clear to the Court whether Plaintiffs informed IBM that Plaintiffs sought to file documents designated by IBM as confidential.

Oracle. Rather, the documents are consistent with the fraudulent-concealment allegations and judicially-noticed documents already in the record. [33] Thus, the proffered documents would not render Plaintiffs' claims timely.

Second, on a motion to dismiss, the Court does not look beyond the pleadings to evidence presented by the parties, and Plaintiffs do not assert that the proffered documents are proper subjects of judicial notice. See Manzarek, 519 F.3d at 1030-31 (noting that on a motion to dismiss, the district court may "generally consider only allegations contained in the pleadings, exhibits attached to the complaint, and matters properly subject to judicial notice"). There is therefore no basis for the Court to consider the proffered documents.

Third, the majority of "newly discovered" documents proffered by Plaintiffs were, according to a declaration by Oracle, produced by June 2015, a month before Plaintiffs filed their opposition to the instant motion. See ECF Nos. 140, 141. Plaintiffs offer no reason for their multiple-month delay in seeking to supplement the record or to stay the case to conduct further discovery. See generally ECF No. 138. It appears that Plaintiffs' motion was not triggered by new discovery in this case, but by the Court's November 23, 2015 dismissal of virtually identical allegations brought by the same Plaintiffs' counsel against [34] Microsoft. See Ryan v. Microsoft ("Ryan II"), No. 14-CV-04634-LHK, 147 F. Supp. 3d 868, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 158944, 2015 WL 7429495, at *18-19 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 23, 2015). Additionally, Plaintiffs offer no authority that discovery from a third party, sought after briefing on a motion to dismiss was completed, justifies a stay of that motion. Nor have Plaintiffs filed the anticipated motion to compel that forms the basis of Plaintiffs' motion to stay, although Plaintiffs have had over two months to do so. Accordingly, Plaintiffs have not shown good cause to supplement the record or to stay the instant ruling.

B. Four-Year Statute of Limitations

Plaintiffs do not dispute that Plaintiffs' claims under the Sherman Act, Cartwright Act, UCL, and Section 16600 are all subject to a four-year statute of limitations. See Garrison, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 53653, 2015 WL 1849517, at *6 (applying-four year statute of limitations) (citing 15 U.S.C. § 15b (Sherman Act); Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16750.1 (Cartwright Act); Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17208 (UCL); Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 343 (catch-all limitations statute applicable to Section 16600); see also Ryan v. Microsoft [*1063] Corp. ("Ryan I"), No. 14-CV-04634-LHK, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47753, 2015 WL 1738352, at *10-12 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 10, 2015) (concluding that these four statutes are each subject to a four-year limitations period). Because the original complaint was filed on October 14, 2014, see ECF No. 1, Plaintiffs must allege either that the causes of action accrued after October 14, 2010, or that the statutes of limitations were tolled until at least October 14, 2010, in [35] order to plead timely claims.

C. Accrual of Plaintiffs' Claims under the Default Accrual Rules

The parties agree that all of Plaintiff Garrison's and Plaintiff Van Vorst's claims accrued under the default accrual rules by 2009, at the latest. See, e.g., ECF No. 148, at 1 (Oracle claiming that the "statute of limitations began to run no later than 2009 and expired in 2013"); ECF No. 150, at 3 (Plaintiffs stating that Garrison's and Van Vorst's claims accrued when Garrison and Van Vorst were injured by Oracle's alleged misconduct between 2007-2009). Accordingly, an exception to the default accrual rules or a tolling doctrine must apply in order for Garrison's and Van Vorst's claims to be timely.

The parties dispute when Plaintiff Hari's claims accrued under the default accrual rules, and thus whether an exception to the default accrual rules or a tolling doctrine is necessary to render Hari's claims timely. In order to determine the accrual of Hari's claims under the default accrual rules, the Court must first review the history of the parties' dispute over the accrual of Hari's claims.

In briefing Oracle's motion for judgment on the pleadings, the parties did not dispute that, for Garrison's [36] federal Sherman Act claim and three California state law claims, under the default accrual rules, "the applicable statutes of limitations began to run in May 2007 (i.e., when Plaintiff alleges Oracle and Google entered into the Agreement)." Garrison v. Oracle Corp., No. 14-CV-04592-LHK, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 53653, 2015 WL 1849517, at *6 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 22, 2015). Accordingly, the parties agreed that an exception to the default accrual rules or a tolling doctrine was necessary for all of Garrison's claims to be timely. Id.

In the SAC, Plaintiffs allege new Secret Agreements, in addition to the alleged 2007 agreement between Oracle and Google. The SAC also adds Hari as a named plaintiff. ECF No. 105. Highlighting the new Secret Agreements, Oracle argues in the instant motion to dismiss that, according to the default accrual rules, Plaintiffs' Sherman Act and state law claims accrued by 2009, which is the latest date that Plaintiffs allege that Oracle entered a specific Secret Agreement. Mot. at 7; Reply at 2. Thus, according to Oracle, the statutes of limitations for all of Plaintiffs' claims expired in 2013 absent an exception to the default accrual rules or a tolling doctrine. Reply at 2.

In Plaintiffs' opposition to the instant motion to dismiss, Plaintiffs do not [37] dispute Oracle's contention that Plaintiffs' Sherman Act and state law claims accrued in 2009, at the latest. See generally Opp. Nor do Plaintiffs analyze when Plaintiffs' claims accrued according to the default accrual rules. Rather, Plaintiffs assert that an exception to the default accrual rules or a tolling doctrine applies and thus renders Plaintiffs' claims timely. See id.

Neither party separately addressed Hari's claims in the briefing on the instant motion to dismiss. Thus, the Court requested supplemental briefing on whether Hari's employment at Oracle, which began in 2012, impacts the statute of limitations analysis. ECF No. 144. In the order requesting supplemental briefing, the Court summarized its understanding of the parties' positions on the accrual of Plaintiffs' [*1064] claims under the default accrual rules. First, the Court noted that the parties agreed, in the briefing for the motion for judgment on the pleadings, that the federal and state statutes of limitations began to run in May 2007. See id. Next, the Court noted Plaintiffs' failure to dispute Oracle's contention, in the instant motion to dismiss, that Plaintiffs' Sherman Act and state law claims accrued by 2009. [38] See id. Finally, the Court noted that the parties have not disputed that Plaintiffs' claims are untimely absent an exception to the default accrual rules or a tolling doctrine. See id.

In the requested supplemental briefing, the parties do not contest the Court's understanding of the parties' positions. See generally ECF Nos. 148, 150, 153, 155. However, Plaintiffs now argue that Hari's claims are timely under the default accrual rules, without any exceptions to the default accrual rules or tolling. According to Plaintiffs, Hari's claims did not accrue until 2012, when Hari was hired by Oracle and injured through the receipt of an artificially depressed salary from Oracle. ECF Nos. 150, 155. Specifically, Plaintiffs state that Hari began working for Oracle in 2012 when Oracle acquired the company for whom Hari worked. See ECF No. 150, at 2. As in Plaintiffs' original briefing, Plaintiffs' two supplemental briefs fail to address the state law default accrual rules. Instead, Plaintiffs' supplemental briefs focus entirely on the federal default accrual rule for Hari's Sherman Act claim, and cite only federal case law. See ECF No. 150, at 2-3; ECF No. 155. Similarly, Oracle's two supplemental [39] briefs focus on the accrual of Hari's Sherman Act claim. See generally ECF Nos. 148, 153. Oracle argues that Hari's Sherman Act claim accrued by 2009, when Oracle allegedly committed the anticompetitive conduct that depressed the labor market in which Hari participated. Oracle asserts that Hari's state law claims accrued at the same time as Hari's Sherman Act claim. See ECF No. 148, at 4 n.2.

Accordingly, in four rounds of briefing—the opposition to the motion for judgment on the pleadings, the opposition to the instant motion to dismiss, and the two supplemental briefs—Plaintiffs assume that Plaintiffs' state law claims accrue at the same time as Plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims. Plaintiffs have never distinguished the accrual of Plaintiffs' state law claims from the accrual of Plaintiffs' Sherman Act claim under the default accrual rules. By contrast, Oracle has repeatedly asserted that Plaintiffs' Sherman Act and state law claims accrue at the same time. In the supplemental briefing, both parties focus on the federal default accrual rule for Sherman Act claims to determine the accrual of Hari's state law and Sherman Act claims.

Under California law, the general accrual rule is the "last [40] element rule," where a claim accrues "'when [it] is complete with all of its elements'—those elements being wrongdoing, harm, and causation." Pooshs v. Philip Morris USA, Inc., 51 Cal. 4th 788, 797, 123 Cal. Rptr. 3d 578, 250 P.3d 181 (2011) (quoting Norgart v. Upjohn Co., 21 Cal. 4th 383, 397, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 453, 981 P.2d 79 (1999)). The California Supreme Court has held that federal interpretations of the Sherman Act are instructive in interpreting California's Cartwright Act. Aryeh v. Canon Bus. Solutions, Inc., 55 Cal. 4th 1185, 1195, 151 Cal. Rptr. 3d 827, 292 P.3d 871 (2013). Given the Aryeh court's guidance and the parties' exclusive focus on the default accrual rule for Hari's Sherman Act claim, the Court addresses Hari's Sherman Act claim to resolve when Hari's Sherman Act and California law claims accrued under the default accrual rules. See In re Animation Workers Antitrust Litig. ("Animation Workers I"), 87 F. Supp. 3d 1195, 1208 n.10 [*1065] (N.D. Cal. 2015) (considering timeliness of Sherman Act claim to resolve both Sherman and Cartwright Act statutes of limitations); *GSI Tech., Inc. v. Cypress Semiconductor Corp., No. 5:11-cv-03613 EJD, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 93888, 2012 WL 2711040, at 8 (N.D. Cal. July 6, 2012) (interpreting Sherman Act and Cartwright Act claims together for statutes of limitations purposes); *Stanislaus Food Prods. Co. v. USS-POSCO Indus., No. CV F 09-0560 LJO SMS, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 92236, 2010 WL 3521979, at 13 (E.D. Cal. Sept. 3, 2010) (applying same accrual rules to Sherman Act and Cartwright Act claims).

Plaintiffs contend that, under the default accrual rule for a Sherman Act claim, Hari's [41] claims accrued at the time Hari experienced injury from Oracle's anticompetitive conduct. ECF No. 150, at 2-3. According to Plaintiffs, Hari was not injured until 2012, when Oracle paid Hari an artificially depressed salary. Id. Oracle counters that Hari's claims accrued at the time of the anticompetitive conduct, and thus Hari's claims accrued in 2009, at the latest, when Oracle entered into the last alleged Secret Agreement. ECF No. 148, at 2-5. Oracle also argues that Hari was injured in 2009, at the latest, because Hari was in the allegedly affected labor market working at another technology company that was acquired by Oracle in 2012, and thus received a depressed salary prior to Hari's employment with Oracle. Id.; ECF No. 150, at 4 (referring to Hari's LinkedIn account to confirm Hari's previous employment). Finally, Oracle claims that Plaintiffs "have consistently alleged that they suffered an injury and their claims accrued at the time of Oracle's allegedly anticompetitive conduct." ECF No. 148, at 4.

The Court agrees with Oracle that Hari's Sherman Act claim accrued by 2009 under the default accrual rule. The Court finds the Ninth Circuit's recent decision in Samsung Elecs. Co. v. Panasonic Corp., 747 F.3d 1199, 1202-03 (9th Cir. 2014), cert. denied [42] , 135 S. Ct. 1157, 190 L. Ed. 2d 912 (2015), to be instructive. In Samsung, Panasonic Corporation, Panasonic Corporation of North America, and SD-3C, LLC (collectively, "Panasonic") allegedly entered into anticompetitive agreements in 2003 and 2006 to charge a royalty for certain manufacturers producing SD cards. Id. at 1201. When Samsung Electronics Company ("Samsung") began to manufacture SD cards in 2006, Samsung paid the requested royalty to Panasonic. Id. at 1202. Samsung filed suit in 2010 and alleged that Panasonic's agreements violated the Sherman Act. Id.

Samsung was not in the SD market at the time of Panasonic's initial anticompetitive agreement, and thus "the harm to Samsung challenged in this suit was speculative at the time of the initial wrong." Id. at 1204-05. However, the Ninth Circuit did not find that Samsung's claim accrued, under the default accrual rules, when Samsung began to pay royalties in 2006. See id. at 1202-05. Rather, the Ninth Circuit held that the continuing violation and speculative damages exceptions to the default accrual rules were necessary to render Samsung's claims timely. Id. at 1203-05 (noting that the 2006 agreement was a continuing violation, and that the speculative damages exception applies when damages are not clear at the "time of the initial [43] act"). Under the Ninth Circuit's reasoning, Samsung's claim accrued—absent an exception to the default accrual rules—at the time of Panasonic's anticompetitive conduct in 2003. See id. at 1203-04. Therefore, in the Ninth Circuit, Sherman Act claims accrue under the default accrual rules at the time of the alleged anticompetitive conduct. See id.; see also Pace Indus., Inc. v. Three Phoenix Co., 813 F.2d 234, 237 (9th Cir. 1987) ("A cause of action in antitrust accrues each time a plaintiff is injured by an act of the defendant and the statute of limitations runs from the commission of the act." (emphasis added) (citing [*1066] Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 401 U.S. 321, 338, 91 S. Ct. 795, 28 L. Ed. 2d 77 (1971))); Oliver v. SD-3C LLC, 751 F.3d 1081, 1087 (9th Cir. 2014) (noting that, under the Clayton Act, "the limitations period may start to run after the defendant's initial violation of the antitrust law," if an exception applies).

The Court acknowledges that some courts, including this Court, have stated that Sherman Act claims accrue "at the time of injury." See Animation Workers I, 87 F. Supp. 3d at 1216; see also Detrick v. Panalpina, Inc., 108 F.3d 529, 538 (4th Cir. 1997) (noting that "under the antitrust accrual rule, the statute of limitations is triggered by the date of the injury alone"). However, these courts were determining whether to apply a discovery rule of accrual to the plaintiff's claims. See Animation Workers I, 87 F. Supp. 3d at 1208 (rejecting argument that accrual began "at the time that Plaintiffs discovered, or reasonably [44] should have discovered[,] their injuries"); Detrick, 108 F.3d at 538 (discussing the "injury discovery" rule applied by the Ninth Circuit in RICO actions). In neither case did the timeliness of the plaintiff's claims turn on whether accrual began at the time of injury or the time of the alleged anticompetitive conduct, and thus the courts were not presented with the arguments made by the parties in the instant case. Additionally, this Court is bound by the Ninth Circuit's decision that, absent an exception, a Sherman Act claim accrues at the time of the anticompetitive conduct. See Samsung, 747 F.3d at 1202-05.

In the instant case, Oracle's alleged anticompetitive conduct is entering into the Secret Agreements. See SAC ¶¶ 2-6, 113-116, 120-121, 124. Plaintiffs allege that Oracle first entered into a Secret Agreement in 2006. Id. ¶ 30. This Secret Agreement, and others later formed by Oracle, allegedly depressed compensation in the labor market for technology and management employees. SAC ¶¶ 9, 60-61. If each subsequent Secret Agreement entered into by Oracle constituted a new antitrust violation, then Hari's Sherman Act claim could have accrued as late as 2009, the last year in which Plaintiffs allege that a specific new Secret Agreement [45] was entered into by Oracle. See generally SAC. Accordingly, the statute of limitations for Hari's Sherman Act claim began to run, under the default accrual rules, by 2009. See Samsung, 747 F.3d at 1202-05. As noted above, the Court finds that—in light of Plaintiffs' assumption that Hari's California law claims and Sherman Act claims accrue at the same time—Hari's California law claims also accrued by 2009. The statutes of limitations expired four years later, in 2013, a year before the complaint was filed on October 14, 2014. Thus, as with Garrison's and Van Vorst's claims, Hari's claims are untimely unless an exception to the default accrual rules or a tolling doctrine applies.

In hopes of avoiding the time bar, Plaintiffs offer the following five arguments: (1) Plaintiffs are entitled to statutory tolling under 15 U.S.C. § 16(i); (2) Oracle committed a "continuing violation"; (3) Oracle fraudulently concealed Oracle's anticompetitive conduct; (4) the California "discovery rule" applies to the UCL claim; and (5) the California "continuous accrual" rule applies to the California claims.[3] The Court addresses each argument in turn.

[*1067] D. Tolling under Section 16(i)

Plaintiffs contend that the statutes of limitations are tolled by four past DOJ proceedings: (1) the DOJ investigation into Oracle, from 2009 until October 2014; (2) and (3) the DOJ's lawsuits against Adobe and Lucasfilm, which Plaintiffs treat collectively, from September 24, 2010 to June 3, 2012; and (4) the DOJ's lawsuit against eBay, from November 16, 2012 to September 2, 2014.[4] Plaintiffs rely on 15 U.S.C. § 16(i), which provides:

> Whenever any civil or criminal proceeding is instituted by the United States to prevent, restrain, or punish violations [47] of any of the antitrust laws, but not including an action under section 15a of this title, the running of the statute of limitations in respect to every private or State right of action arising under said laws and based in whole or in part on any matter complained of in said proceeding shall be suspended during the pendency thereof and for one year thereafter: Provided, however, That whenever the running of the statute of limitations in respect of a cause of action arising under section 15 or 15c of this title is suspended hereunder, any action to enforce such cause of action shall be forever barred unless commenced either within the period of suspension or within four years after the cause of action accrued.

[3] The Court notes that Plaintiffs do not argue that the speculative damages exception, discussed by the [46] Ninth Circuit in Samsung, applies to Plaintiffs' claims. In the instant case, after Plaintiffs have twice amended the complaint and had multiple opportunities to brief the issue, "[t]he Court is not inclined to manufacture arguments on Plaintiff[s'] behalf." *Kiland v. Boston Scientific Corp., No. C 10-4105 SBA, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35901, 2011 WL 1261130, at 7 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 1, 2011) (citing Indep. Towers of Wash. v. Washington, 350 F.3d 925, 929 (9th Cir. 2003) ("Our adversarial system relies on the advocates to inform the discussion and raise the issues to the court.")). Accordingly, the Court addresses only the exceptions to the default accrual rules and the tolling doctrines raised in Plaintiffs' original and two supplemental briefs.

[4] In Plaintiffs' brief, they argue that the eBay litigation tolls their claims until September 2, 2014. However, the DOJ proceeding against eBay ended on September 2, 2014. Section 16(i) provides that the statute of limitations is "suspended during the pendency thereof and for one year thereafter." (emphasis added). Oracle suggests that Plaintiffs seek to toll the statutes of limitations until September 2, 2015. See Reply at 5.

In other words, to receive tolling under § 16(i) a private plaintiff must show that the plaintiff's [48] antitrust suit is "based in whole or in part on any matter complained of" in a government antitrust proceeding. Id.; see also Charley's Tour & Transp., Inc. v. Interisland Resorts, Ltd., 618 F. Supp. 84, 86 (D. Haw. 1985) (noting "[t]he plaintiff bears the burden of showing that the two suits are based in whole or in part" on the same matter) (citing Akron Presform Mold Co. v. McNeil Corp., 496 F.2d 230, 233 (6th Cir. 1974)). To determine whether a private suit is "based in whole or in part on any matter complained of" in prior government action, the Court is "limited to a comparison of the two complaints on their face." Chipanno v. Champion Int'l Corp., 702 F.2d 827, 832 (9th Cir. 1983) (quoting Leh v. Gen. Petroleum Corp., 382 U.S. 54, 59, 86 S. Ct. 203, 15 L. Ed. 2d 134 (1965)).

A private plaintiff "is not required to allege that the same means were used to achieve the same objectives of the same conspiracies by the same defendants." Leh, 382 U.S. at 59. However, there must be a "real relation" between the government and private causes of action. Id. "The real relation test is met where the conspiratorial acts of the defendants are intertwined with and fundamentally the same" as those alleged in the government's filed lawsuits. See Charley's Tour, 618 F. Supp. at 86. Factors that courts have considered to assess a "real relation" include the "substantial identity of parties," Leh, 382 U.S. at 63, whether Plaintiffs have alleged "a conspiracy that included the objectives, means, time span, and geographic scope of [*1068] the conspiracy alleged in the government suit" and whether [49] "evidence adduced in the trial of the government suit would be of practical assistance to plaintiffs," Chipanno, 702 F.2d at 832. For example, § 16(i) "tolls the statute of limitations against all participants in a conspiracy which is the object of a Government suit, whether or not they are named as defendants or conspirators therein." Zenith Radio Corp., 401 U.S. at 336.

Plaintiffs first contend that the DOJ investigation into Oracle tolls the statutes of limitations. According to Plaintiffs, DOJ opened an investigation into Oracle in 2009 when DOJ began investigating other technology companies for unlawful recruiting practices. Opp. at 3. DOJ informed Oracle that DOJ would not pursue a case against Oracle on October 29, 2014, more than two weeks after Plaintiffs filed the instant action. ECF No. 114-1 Ex. A.

At the outset, the Court notes that Plaintiffs spend only a single sentence arguing that the DOJ investigation into Oracle tolls the statutes of limitations. Opp. at 7-8. Plaintiffs rely solely on Dungan v. Morgan Drive-Away, Inc., 570 F.2d 867, 871 (9th Cir. 1978), in which the Ninth Circuit noted that "[t]he initiation of an investigation or a decision to prosecute more comfortably fits the statutory language than does empanelling the grand jury." However, the Ninth Circuit proceeded to say that to begin tolling upon the initiation [50] of an investigation or upon a decision to prosecute "would introduce great uncertainty in fixing the time at which the suspension period commences" and "would frustrate the statute-of-repose purpose of section 16(i)." Id. The Ninth Circuit therefore declined to select the initiation of a government investigation as the trigger for the start of § 16(i) tolling. Id.

Instead, courts have used the date on which the government filed a complaint as the date on which statutory tolling began. See Leh, 382 U.S. at 59-63 (giving tolling effect from the time that the government filed a complaint); Minn. Mining & Mfg. Co. v. N.J. Wood Finishing Co., 381 U.S. 311, 313, 85 S. Ct. 1473, 14 L. Ed. 2d 405 (1965) (giving tolling effect from the date Federal Trade Commission filed a proceeding); Chipanno, 702 F.2d at 832-33 (giving tolling effect from the date government filed a complaint); *In re Scrap Metal Antitrust Litig., No. 1:02 CV 0844, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 75873, 2006 WL 2850453, at 22 (N.D. Ohio Sept. 30, 2006) (noting "more than a government investigation is needed to activate § 16(i)"); see also Areeda and Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law: An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and Their Application, § 321 (2014) (stating that § 16(i) "is not triggered by . . . government proceedings falling short of the filing of a complaint"). This view is consistent with the instruction of the U.S. Supreme Court and the Ninth Circuit that the private and government proceedings are to be [51] compared by examining "the two complaints on their face." Chipanno, 702 F.2d at 832 (emphasis added) (quoting Leh, 382 U.S. at 59). In 2014, DOJ "closed its investigation of [Oracle] relating to potential agreements among certain firms regarding employee recruiting," without filing a complaint. ECF No. 114-1 Ex. A. Because DOJ never filed a complaint against Oracle, Plaintiffs are not entitled to § 16(i) tolling based on the DOJ's investigation of Oracle.

Plaintiffs additionally seek tolling under § 16(i) for the pendency of three government-filed lawsuits: United States v. Adobe Sys., Inc., No. 10-CV-1629 (D.D.C.), United States v. Lucasfilm, Inc., No. 10-CV-2220 (D.D.C.), and United States v. eBay, Inc., No. 12-CV-5869 (N.D. Cal.). To receive statutory tolling for the pendency of these lawsuits, Plaintiffs must show that these lawsuits are "based in whole or in part on the same matter" as the instant [*1069] lawsuit. Charley's Tour, 618 F. Supp. at 86. Plaintiffs argue that the three government-filed lawsuits and the instant lawsuit have many similarities: the agreements alleged in each of the lawsuits seek wage suppression; the "means" of each of the lawsuits were non-solicitation agreements implemented in part through "no hire" lists; Google, Adobe, and Intuit, which allegedly [52] entered anti-solicitation agreements with Oracle, were defendants in Adobe; and there is an overlap in time between the alleged conspiracies. Opp. at 9. However, Plaintiffs do not point to specifics in any complaint and do not conduct a "comparison of the [] complaints on their face." Chipanno, 702 F.2d at 832.

The Court first notes that there is no overlap between the parties in the government-filed lawsuits and the instant lawsuit. The Adobe defendants were Adobe, Apple, Google, Intel, Intuit, and Pixar. ECF No. 111-11. The sole defendant in Lucasfilm was Lucasfilm. ECF No. 114-1 Ex. B. The sole defendant in eBay was eBay. Id. Ex. E. Oracle was not a defendant in any of the three government-filed lawsuits.

Moreover, not one of the complaints in the three government-filed lawsuits mentions Oracle. The Adobe complaint alleges five substantially similar agreements, each between two companies: (1) Apple and Google, (2) Apple and Adobe, (3) Apple and Pixar, (4) Google and Intel, and (5) Google and Intuit. ECF No. 111-11. The two companies in each agreement agreed not to "cold call" each other's employees. Id. The Adobe complaint does not mention any other technology company. Oracle was not a party to any of these agreements, [53] and none of the alleged agreements restricted any of the named companies from hiring employees from Oracle. Id.

Similarly, the Lucasfilm complaint alleged an agreement between Lucasfilm and Pixar "not to cold call, not to make counteroffers under certain circumstances, and to provide notification when making employment offers to each other's employees." ECF No. 114-1 Ex. B. The Lucasfilm complaint does not mention any other technology companies.

Likewise, the eBay complaint alleges that eBay and Intuit "agreed not to recruit each other's employees" and "eBay agreed not to hire Intuit employees, even those that approached eBay for a job." Id. Ex. E. The complaint further alleges direct communications between eBay CEO Meg Whitman and Founder and Chairman of the Executive Committee at Inuit Scott Cook. See id. The eBay complaint does not mention any other technology companies.

Because the conspiracies alleged in the Adobe, Lucasfilm, and eBay complaints do not involve Oracle, Plaintiffs' allegations of misconduct by Oracle in the instant lawsuit are not "intertwined with and fundamentally the same as those alleged in the government action[s]." Charley's Tour, 618 F. Supp. at 86. As noted, the government-filed lawsuits and the instant [54] lawsuit lack "substantial identity of the parties." Leh, 382 U.S. at 63. Additionally, Plaintiffs have not shown that "evidence adduced in the trial of the government suit would be of practical assistance to plaintiffs," as there is no need for Plaintiffs to prove the existence of any of the agreements in Adobe, Lucasfilm, or eBay. Chipanno, 702 F.2d at 832; see also In re Coordinated Pretrial Proceedings in Petroleum Prods. Antitrust Litig., 782 F. Supp. 481, 486 (C.D. Cal. 1991) (finding no factual overlap from the government lawsuit when the government lawsuit was based on anticompetitive conduct in different geographic area than that alleged in the private lawsuit).

Plaintiffs rely heavily on the similarity between the kinds of alleged anticompetitive behavior, namely the existence of anti-solicitation agreements in both the [*1070] instant lawsuit and the three government-filed lawsuits. However, "the pendency of separate and distinct actions that the government filed against other [related companies] that were never alleged to be a part of a conspiracy" does not toll the statute of limitations for a private suit against a related company. See Aurora Enters., Inc. v. Nat'l Broad. Co., 688 F.2d 689, 693 (9th Cir. 1982); see also Chipanno, 702 F.2d at 830, 833 (finding § 16(i) applied when plaintiffs sued three of the four defendants in prior government proceeding and alleged a conspiracy that included the objectives, means, time span, and geographic scope [55] of the conspiracy alleged in the government suit); see also Novell, Inc. v. Microsoft Corp., 505 F.3d 302, 322 (4th Cir. 2007) (rejecting application of § 16(i) when some of the private suit's counts alleged a different market than the government suit). Oracle was not a "participant[] in a conspiracy which is the object of a Government suit." Zenith Radio Corp., 401 U.S. at 336. Consequently, Plaintiffs have not met their burden of showing a "real relation" between the three government-filed lawsuits and the instant lawsuit, and are not entitled to statutory tolling. See Leh, 382 U.S. at 59; Novell Inc. v. Microsoft Corp., 505 F.3d 302, 322 (4th Cir. 2007) ("[W]e do not believe § [16(i)] should be construed to permit private plaintiffs to 'sit on their rights' and to assert, years after the traditional statute of limitations has run, 'claims so much broader than those asserted by the government that they open entirely new vistas of litigation.'").

E. Continuing Violation

Under the "continuing violation" theory, "each overt act that is part of the [antitrust] violation and that injures the plaintiff . . . starts the statutory period running again, regardless of the plaintiff's knowledge of the alleged illegality at much earlier times." Klehr v. A.O. Smith Corp., 521 U.S. 179, 189, 117 S. Ct. 1984, 138 L. Ed. 2d 373 (1997) (internal quotation marks omitted); see also Pace, 813 F.2d at 237 ("A continuing violation is one in which the plaintiff's interests are repeatedly invaded and a cause of [56] action arises each time the plaintiff is injured."). In the Ninth Circuit, an overt act restarts the statute of limitations in an antitrust action if it: (1) is "a new and independent act that is not merely a reaffirmation of a previous act"; and (2) "inflict[s] new and accumulating injury on the plaintiff." Samsung, 747 F.3d at 1202 (internal quotation marks omitted).

The Court previously determined that Plaintiff Garrison's original complaint failed to allege a continuing violation because "the bald assertion that '[Oracle's] conspiracy was a continuing violation through which [Oracle] repeatedly invaded Plaintiff and Plaintiff Class' interests by adhering to, enforcing, and reaffirming the anticompetitive agreements described herein' is insufficient to show a continuing violation." *Garrison, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 53653, 2015 WL 1849517, at 7. The Court noted, "the complaint is largely bereft of any dates or details with regards to Oracle's specific conduct" and "there are no allegations of any new or independent actions taken by Oracle after October 14, 2010—i.e., within four years of the filing date of this complaint—that caused Plaintiff any new or accumulating injury." Id. The Court further explained, "Plaintiff has simply failed to allege any facts indicating when the [57] supposed continuing violations took place, let alone that they took place on or after October 14, 2010." Id. The Court cautioned Plaintiffs that "failure to cure the deficiencies identified" would result in a dismissal with prejudice. *2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 53653, [WL] at 9.

Plaintiffs assert that the SAC fixes the deficiencies in the original complaint by alleging: (1) Oracle entered new Secret Agreements and added companies to the [*1071] "no hire" list "well into 2012," SAC ¶ 49; (2) Oracle adhered to, enforced, and reaffirmed the Secret Agreements, id. ¶ 73; and (3) Plaintiffs were not solicited by other companies while working at Oracle and could not find employment outside of Oracle until 2015, id. ¶¶ 74-81.[5]

A review of the allegations in the SAC again fails to reveal any specific conduct by Oracle during the limitations period. Although Plaintiffs allege that Oracle continued to enter into new Secret Agreements and add companies to the "no hire" list "well into 2012," Plaintiffs fail to identify a single new agreement after 2009. See generally SAC. Although the Court accepts "factual allegations in the complaint as true," Manzarek, 519 F.3d at 1031, the Court need not accept as true "allegations that are merely conclusory," In re Gilead Scis Sec. Litig., 536 F.3d 1049, 1055 (9th Cir. 2008). The Court's order granting Oracle's motion for judgment on the pleadings found that "the complaint is largely bereft of any dates or details with regards to Oracle's specific conduct," and explicitly warned Plaintiffs that they must allege details regarding "any new or independent actions taken by Oracle after October 14, 2010" in order to plead a continuing violation. See *Garrison, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 53653, 2015 WL 1849517, at 7. Nonetheless, Plaintiffs' SAC—which is [59] the third complaint filed in this case—does not identify any information as to an agreement entered into by Oracle after 2009, including the companies involved or the dates of formation. Plaintiffs' conclusory allegations are insufficient to allege that Oracle formed a new Secret Agreement after 2009. See In re Gilead Scis, 536 F.3d at 1055 (noting courts do not need to accept allegations that are "merely conclusory").

[5] Plaintiffs expressly disclaim that Oracle's hiring of Hari in 2012 constitutes a continuing violation. See ECF No. 155, at 3. The Court agrees that Oracle's hiring of Hari is not an "overt act" sufficient to trigger the continuing violation theory. Even if Oracle hired Hari at an artificially depressed salary, the salary was based on alleged anticompetitive actions taken by Oracle prior to the limitations period. See In re Multidistrict Vehicle Air Pollution, 591 F.2d 68, 71-72 (9th Cir. 1979) (holding that the defendants' refusal during the limitations period to purchase afterburner devices from [58] a particular company did not constitute an overt act because the defendants' refusal was based on an agreement entered into prior to the limitations period). Thus, Oracle's hiring of Hari is not "a new and independent act that is not merely a reaffirmation of a previous act." See Samsung, 747 F.3d at 1202.

Similarly, all of Plaintiffs' allegations about Oracle's enforcement of the Secret Agreements are undated or pre-date 2009. See SAC ¶¶ 26, 31, 41, 43 (discussing Oracle's dissemination of the "no hire" list and adherence to the Secret Agreements in 2007 and 2008); id. ¶¶ 35-39 (discussing Oracle's enforcement of the Secret Agreements in 2007 and 2008). Plaintiffs do allege that the 2009 "no hire" CoreTech agreement, for example, was not set to terminate until 2012. Id. ¶ 49. However, Plaintiffs need to do more than merely allege a continuing violation—they must also allege an overt act:

> A continuing violation is one in which the plaintiff's interests are repeatedly invaded and a cause of action arises each time the plaintiff is injured. However, even when a plaintiff alleges a continuing violation, an overt [60] act by the defendant is required to restart the statute of limitations and the statute runs from the last overt act.

Pace, 813 F.2d at 237 (emphasis added) (citations omitted); see also Samsung, 747 F.3d at 1202-03 (explaining that an overt act must be "a new and independent act that is not merely a reaffirmation of a previous act"). Merely carrying out during the limitations period a final, binding decision [*1072] made prior to the limitations period does not qualify as a new overt act. See In re Multidistrict Vehicle Air Pollution, 591 F.2d 68, 71-72 (9th Cir. 1979) (holding that the defendants' refusal during the limitations period to purchase afterburner devices from a particular company did not constitute an overt act because the defendants' refusal was based on an agreement entered into prior to the limitations period). Plaintiffs fail to allege any new and independent actions by Oracle to enforce the 2009 CoreTech agreement—or any other agreement—during the limitations period.

In opposition, Plaintiffs rely on Samsung, 747 F.3d 1199, Columbia Steel Casting Co. v. Portland Gen. Elec. Co., 111 F.3d 1427, 1444-45 (9th Cir. 1996), and Hennegan v. Pacifico Creative Serv., Inc., 787 F.2d 1299, 1300-01 (9th Cir. 1986). Opp. at 10. From these cases, Plaintiffs argue that each act by Oracle to enforce, renew, or expand the Secret Agreements was an overt act that restarted the limitations period. Id. at 10-11. However, Plaintiffs' argument misses the fact that Plaintiffs have simply failed to allege any acts of enforcement, renewal, [61] or expansion after 2009.

Lastly, the Court turns to Plaintiffs' allegations that they were not solicited by other companies while working at Oracle and were unable to find meaningful employment after leaving Oracle. SAC ¶¶ 74-82. Plaintiffs argue that they "are entitled to the inference at the pleading stage that this was because of those agreements." Opp. at 11. Plaintiffs additionally point to the experience of one former Oracle employee, who was told by the recruiting company Riviera Partners that it could not place the former employee because Riviera Partners had an agreement with Oracle not to perform job placement services for Oracle employees. Id. ¶ 55. Oracle counters that the failure of other companies to solicit, hire, or place Plaintiffs cannot be an overt act by Oracle. Mot. at 10; Reply at 8 n.9.

The Court agrees with Oracle that Plaintiffs have not alleged any overt acts by Oracle after 2009, as required by Ninth Circuit law. See Pace, 813 F.2d at 237 (holding that "even when a plaintiff alleges a continuing violation, an overt act by the defendant is required to restart the statute of limitations" (emphasis added)). Plaintiffs contend that any overt act by co-conspirators should be imputed to Oracle, [62] and cite two cases holding that co-conspirators may be held jointly and severally liable for damages caused by violations of the antitrust laws. Opp. at 11 (citing Beltz Travel Serv., Inc. v. Int'l Air Transp. Ass'n, 620 F.2d 1360, 1367 (9th Cir. 1980); In re K-Dur Antitrust Litig., 338 F. Supp. 2d 517, 538 (D.N.J. 2004)). However, these cases do not address the continuing violation theory nor what constitutes an "overt act," and Plaintiffs offer no substantive argument to apply these cases to the continuing violation context. As Plaintiffs have provided no basis for the Court to conclude that Oracle committed an overt act, the Court concludes that Oracle has not committed a continuing violation based on the acts of other companies.

Because Plaintiffs do not allege an overt act by Oracle during the limitations period, the Court finds that Plaintiffs have failed to plead a continuing violation—namely, that Oracle engaged in a "new and independent act that is not merely a reaffirmation of a previous act," which "inflict[ed] new and accumulating injury" on Plaintiffs.[6] See Samsung, 747 F.3d at 1202.

[*1073] F. Fraudulent Concealment

The purpose of fraudulent concealment is to prevent a defendant from "concealing a fraud . . . until such a time as the party committing the fraud could plead the statute of limitations to protect it." *In re Animation Workers Antitrust Litig. ("Animation Workers II"), No. 14-CV-04062-LHK, 123 F. Supp. 3d 1175, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 111262, 2015 WL 4974343, at 13 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 20, 2015) (quoting Bailey v. Glover, 88 U.S. (21 Wall.) 342, 349, 22 L. Ed. 636 (1874)). Thus, "[a] statute of limitations may be tolled if the defendant fraudulently concealed the existence of a cause of action in such a way that the plaintiff, acting as a reasonable person, did not know of its existence." Hexcel Corp. v. Ineos Polymers, Inc., 681 F.3d 1055, 1060 (9th Cir. 2012). The plaintiff bears the burden of pleading and proving fraudulent concealment. Conmar v. Mitsui & Co. (U.S.A.), Inc., 858 F.2d 499, 502 (9th Cir. 1988). To plead fraudulent concealment, the plaintiff must allege that: (1) the defendant took affirmative acts to mislead the plaintiff; (2) the plaintiff did not have "actual or constructive knowledge of the facts giving rise to [his] claim" as a result of the defendant's affirmative acts; and (3) the plaintiff acted diligently in trying to uncover the facts giving rise to his claim. Hexcel, 681 F.3d at 1060.

Moreover, allegations of fraudulent concealment must be pled with particularity. Conmar, 858 F.2d at 502. Although "it is generally inappropriate to resolve the [64] fact-intensive allegations of fraudulent concealment at the motion to dismiss stage," In re Rubber Chemicals Antitrust Litig., 504 F. Supp. 2d 777, 789 (N.D. Cal. 2007), Plaintiffs nevertheless must allege specific factual allegations of fraudulent concealment to survive a motion to dismiss, *In re Transpacific Passenger Air Transp. Antitrust Litig., No. C 07-5634 CRB, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 49853, 2011 WL 1753738, at 20-21 (N.D. Cal. May 9, 2011). "Conclusory statements are not enough." Conmar, 858 F.2d at 502.

In granting Oracle's motion for judgment on the pleadings, the Court rejected Plaintiff Garrison's argument that Oracle had an affirmative duty to disclose Oracle's participation in the alleged conspiracy. The Court then identified two deficiencies in Garrison's allegations of affirmative acts. First, the Court found that Garrison failed "to allege sufficient facts showing the 'who, what, where, when, and how' of Oracle's alleged fraudulent concealment." See *Garrison, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 53653, 2015 WL 1849517, at 8. Specifically, the Court explained that Garrison's allegation about Oracle's "pretextual, incomplete, or materially false and misleading explanations for hiring, recruiting, and compensation decisions made under the conspiracy" was "conclusory," "devoid of factual content" and did "not satisfy Rule 12(b)(6)'s pleading standard, much less Rule 9(b)'s heightened pleading standard." Id. Second, the Court found that Garrison alleged only passive concealment, not "affirmative acts" of concealment. Id. Because [65] the Court found that Plaintiffs failed to allege affirmative acts, the Court did not have to reach whether Garrison had "actual or constructive knowledge" or "acted diligently."

Plaintiffs now concede that Oracle did not have a duty to disclose its allegedly illegal behavior. See Opp. at 13-15. Thus, Plaintiffs acknowledge that they must plead "affirmative acts to mislead" by Oracle. Plaintiffs contend that they have alleged four categories of "affirmative acts" sufficient to demonstrate fraudulent concealment: (1) "efforts by Oracle to limit access to and circulation of documents reflecting its secret agreements"; (2) "attempts [*1074] by Oracle in the DOJ proceedings and follow-on private litigation to conceal portions of key documents from public scrutiny through excessive redactions and overbroad confidentiality agreements"; (3) individual conversations about compensation where "Oracle misled the Plaintiffs themselves"; and (4) "misleading oral and written statements issued by Oracle during the limitations period," including Oracle's employee handbook and SEC filings. Opp. at 13-14. Oracle counters that (1) the allegations are insufficient under Rule 9(b); (2) Plaintiffs have pled passive and not active concealment; and [66] (3) Plaintiffs did not rely on any misleading statements by Oracle. Mot. at 13-18; Reply at 9-11. The Court addresses Oracle's arguments in turn.

[6] The Court reiterates that this result is the same even if the Court were to consider the documents submitted by Plaintiffs in their procedurally improper ex parte motion to supplement the record. See ECF No. 138. None of the proffered documents reveal specific Secret Agreements, or actions by [63] Oracle to ratify existing Secret Agreements, after 2009.

1. Rule 9(b)

Having reviewed the SAC, the Court finds that the allegations for two categories of "affirmative acts" fail to meet the heightened pleading standard of Rule 9(b). First, Plaintiffs fail to sufficiently allege affirmative acts of concealment during the DOJ proceedings. Second, Plaintiffs fail to sufficiently allege misleading conversations between Oracle personnel and Plaintiffs. After addressing these two categories, the Court will then address Plaintiffs' remaining two categories of overt acts: efforts by Oracle to maintain secrecy and the public statements by Oracle about compensation.

a. DOJ Proceedings

Plaintiffs argue that Oracle's conduct during the DOJ investigation was an affirmative act of fraudulent concealment because "Oracle refused to produce any documents without first securing agreements that the document production would not be publicly filed or disclosed, including requiring that any documents that were publicly filed or disclosed would be heavily redacted so as not to publicly reveal the substance of the Secret Agreements and the [67] specific companies involved." SAC ¶ 104.

Plaintiffs do not cite, and the Court is not aware of, any case holding that agreements with DOJ to redact the public versions of documents properly produced during a government investigation are acts of fraudulent concealment. Furthermore, Plaintiffs do not provide the "who, what, where, when, and how" for any of the alleged document production or related agreements. See Swartz, 476 F.3d at 764. Plaintiffs point to no specific document or set of documents that was improperly withheld or redacted. Instead, Plaintiffs make only the conclusory allegation that Oracle took these actions "between 2009 and 2013, all with the intent of preventing the disclosure of its Secret Agreements." Id. Plaintiffs also fail to "set forth what is false or misleading" about the redactions. GlenFed, 42 F.3d at 1548. Here, Plaintiffs fail to allege any facts that could lead this Court to conclude that Oracle redacted documents during the DOJ investigation in a fraudulent or misleading way, let alone facts that could pass muster under Rule 9(b). See *Garrison, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 53653, 2015 WL 1849517, at 8 ("This conclusory allegation devoid of factual content does not satisfy Rule 12(b)(6)'s pleading standard, much less Rule 9(b)'s heightened pleading standard.").

b. Misleading Conversations with Plaintiffs [68]

Similarly, the Court finds insufficient under Rule 9(b) Plaintiffs' allegations that Oracle's misleading statements on compensation to Plaintiffs and class members constitute affirmative acts of fraudulent concealment. For instance, Plaintiff Garrison alleges that "an Oracle human resource employee" falsely informed Garrison that "Oracle's commission structure was competitive with other technology companies." SAC ¶ 90. Plaintiff Hari alleges that he was "directed by a senior executive [*1075] to inform his team of subordinates that their compensation levels at Oracle were highly competitive and that they should be very pleased with the level of compensation Oracle offered." Id. Plaintiffs further allege that, "many times" during the class period, "Class members repeatedly asked Oracle about how compensation was determined," but Oracle responded misleadingly that compensation was "competitive" without admitting the Secret Agreements. Id. ¶¶ 97, 103. The SAC provides no further information about to whom Plaintiffs spoke at Oracle, where these conversations took place, the date or time of the alleged conversations, or the content of the conversations.

The Court previously admonished Plaintiffs that, to [69] plead fraudulent concealment in accordance with Rule 9(b), Plaintiffs must allege "an account of the time, place, and specific content of the false representations as well as the identities of the parties to the misrepresentations." *Garrison, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 53653, 2015 WL 1849517, at 8 (quoting Swartz, 476 F.3d at 764). However, the SAC still fails to allege the "who, what, where, when, and how" of Oracle's allegedly misleading conversations with Plaintiffs and class members. For example, the SAC does not specify the identity of the parties who allegedly made false representations to Plaintiffs, beyond broad descriptors like "an Oracle human resource employee," a "senior executive," and "Oracle." SAC ¶¶ 90, 97. Plaintiffs additionally do not specify the time, date, or place of the allegedly misleading conversations. See Neubronner v. Milken, 6 F.3d 666, 672 (9th Cir. 1993). ("The complaint must specify such facts as the times, dates, places, benefits received, and other details of the alleged fraudulent activity."). Without more specific information as to who spoke to Plaintiffs when, Plaintiffs have not given Oracle sufficient notice of what conversations Plaintiffs allege were fraudulent. As such, Oracle is hindered in its ability to adequately defend against the accusation through the testimony of the Oracle employees [70] involved. See Swartz, 476 F.3d at 764 ("To comply with Rule 9(b), allegations of fraud must be specific enough to give defendants notice of the particular misconduct which is alleged to constitute the fraud charged so that they can defend against the charge."); see also Das v. WMC Mortg. Corp., 831 F. Supp. 2d 1147, 1166 (N.D. Cal. 2011) ("Plaintiffs, for instance, did not plead with the requisite particularity the name of the AmNet employee who concealed material facts . . . . As such, Plaintiffs have failed to sufficiently allege the circumstances constituting the alleged fraudulent concealment."). As this Court stated in its previous order, such conclusory allegations are insufficient to pass muster under Rule 9(b). See Garrison, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 53653, 2015 WL 1849517, at *8.

2. Allegations of Oracle's Efforts at Secrecy

Plaintiffs allege that Oracle's efforts to maintain the secrecy of the Secret Agreements constitute affirmative acts of fraudulent concealment. Specifically, Plaintiffs allege that Oracle aimed "to avoid dissemination of the [S]ecret [A]greements and restrict the knowledge to the smallest possible group within Oracle." SAC ¶ 101. Plaintiffs additionally allege that knowledge of the Secret Agreements was "confined to only the most senior executives and the most senior employees from [Oracle's] human resources and recruiting departments." Id. ¶ 109. [71] Oracle counters that Plaintiffs' factual allegations reveal "that Oracle's hiring policies and agreements, as well as its 'no-hire' list, were disseminated broadly to Oracle's human resources and other employees, and were anything but secret." Mot. at 13. Oracle also argues that Plaintiffs' secrecy allegations amount to passive concealment, at most. Id. at 13-14.

In this circuit, "affirmative acts" must consist of more than mere passive [*1076] concealment. See Volk v. D.A. Davidson & Co., 816 F.2d 1406, 1415-16 (9th Cir. 1987). Affirmative conduct need not be "separate and apart" from acts in furtherance of the underlying conspiracy, but plaintiffs must plead more than acts that "by nature are self-concealing." Id. (citing Conmar, 858 F.2d at 505) (brackets omitted). Thus, the mere "failure to own up to illegal conduct" in response to an inquiry about whether the defendant engaged in illegal antitrust activity is not sufficient for fraudulent concealment, and to find otherwise "would effectively nullify the statute of limitations in these cases." Pocahontas Supreme Coal Co. v. Bethlehem Steel Corp., 828 F.2d 211, 218-19 (4th Cir. 1987); see also Conmar, 858 F.2d at 505 (citing favorably Pocahontas, 828 F.2d at 218).

In reviewing the SAC, the Court agrees with Oracle that Oracle's alleged efforts at secrecy do not plead fraudulent concealment. Plaintiffs' specific factual allegations contradict Plaintiffs' general allegations about [72] Oracle's efforts at secrecy. In the SAC, Plaintiffs excerpt over a dozen emails from Oracle employees discussing the "no hire" list or alleged Secret Agreements. These emails reveal that Oracle employees spoke openly about the "no hire" list and the gentleman's agreements, both within Oracle and with other companies. Id. ¶¶ 30-31, 36, 40-47, 98-100; see also id. ¶ 26 (noting HR webpage lists "works for company on the Do Not Hire List" as a reason for rejecting a candidate). For instance, as "representative" of Oracle's "corporate policy" of secrecy, Plaintiffs highlight a January 17, 2008 email by Oracle's Director of Recruiting ordering an Oracle recruiter, "DO NOT email any employees of our partners or employees on our no-hire list." Id. ¶¶ 98, 202. In another email, the Director of Recruiting writes "to her recruiting team" that "our policy is and continues to be that we do not directly solicit from our partners. What this means is that we do not send email solicitations; we do not solicit by phone." Id. ¶ 41 (emphases in original).[7] Plaintiffs do not explain how these emails fraudulently concealed the Secret Agreements from Plaintiffs. If anything, these emails suggest the opposite—namely, [73] that Oracle openly spoke about the Secret Agreements to ensure that Oracle employees adhered to the "no hire" list. See Garrison, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 53653, 2015 WL 1849517, at *9.

[7] Oracle denies that the "no hire" list is unlawful, and argues that the identified non-solicitation agreements are either unilateral policies by Oracle not to hire from its business partners or are narrowly tailored and ancillary to legitimate business interests.

Moreover, the emails in the SAC reveal that, rather than restrict knowledge of the Secret Agreements to a limited number of employees, Oracle shared the "no hire" list with numerous people: at least the "HR department," "key human resource and recruiting personnel," the "recruiting team," and Oracle's Director of Consulting. SAC ¶¶ 31, 41, 100; ECF No. 111-5. Of the dozen emails in the SAC, only one email was marked do not forward. Id. ¶ 100.[8] The [*1077] "do not forward" email was not confined to a limited group of senior executives, but rather was sent "to the HR department" by an "Oracle employee." Id. (February 12, 2008 email allegedly [74] "attaching a 'No Hire' list, and directing them to not forward, but to call if they have any questions"). Thus, Plaintiffs' allegations show that Oracle did not limit knowledge of the Secret Agreements "to only the most senior executives and the most senior employees from [Oracle's] human resources and recruiting departments" as Plaintiffs allege. Id. ¶ 109

By comparison, in Animation Workers II, the Court found that the plaintiffs had alleged affirmative acts to keep the conspiracy secret. The Animation Workers II plaintiffs alleged that the defendants took efforts to avoid sending emails related [75] to the non-solicitation agreements, to avoid writing down the details of the non-solicitation agreements, and to eliminate any paper trail relating to the agreements by using a code name for the agreements. *Animation Workers II, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 111262, 2015 WL 4974343, at 19. These allegations of secrecy in Animation Workers II detailed the specific conduct taken by the defendants to disguise the conspiracy. For example, the complaint in Animation Workers II alleged that one of the defendants, Lucasfilm, "made affirmative efforts to eliminate a paper trail regarding its code-named 'DNR' agreements. In an October 2009 'Recruiting Staff Meeting Summary,' Lucasfilm staff emphasized in bolded, all-caps lettering that all discussions of 'DNR' needed to be conducted over the phone: 'DNR questions CALL Steve. If you see an email forward to Steve and one of our lawyers.'" Animation Workers II, Second Consolidated Amended Class Action Compl., ECF No. 121 ¶ 138.

Similarly, in Lithium Ion a district court found fraudulent concealment when defendants took affirmative steps to destroy evidence of the conspirators' secret meetings, avoided memorializing conversations, and used secret codes to refer to coconspirators and topics. See *In re Lithium Ion Batteries Antitrust Litig., No. 13-MD-2420, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7516, 2014 WL 309192, at 16 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 21, 2014). [76] The Lithium Ion plaintiffs supported their allegations by quoting specific examples of the defendants' affirmative acts to keep the conspiracy secret, such as an email in which the representative of one of the defendants "asked that the recipients of his email . . . 'destroy this e-mail immediately.'" No. 13-2420, Second Consolidated Amended Compl., ECF No. 415 ¶ 219.

Here, by contrast, Plaintiffs fail to allege affirmative acts of concealment. Unlike the Animation Workers II and Lithium Ion plaintiffs, Plaintiffs put forth no specific factual allegations that Oracle took steps to keep employees from discussing the Secret Agreements, that Oracle attempted to eliminate a paper trail for the Secret Agreements, that Oracle avoided memorializing the Secret Agreements in writing, that Oracle used code names, or that Oracle employees avoided discussing the "no hire" list orally or in writing.

Additionally, Plaintiffs have not alleged that Oracle instructed supervisors or Human Resources personnel to respond to inquiries about compensation with a misleading, fraudulent, or pretextual response. At best, Plaintiffs allege only that Oracle's senior executives and members of the [77] human resources and recruiting departments did not disclose the Secret Agreements to Plaintiffs. That is insufficient to allege "affirmative acts" of concealment.

Mot. at 4, 20-22. Oracle further argues that the "no hire" list reflects the tracking of permissible non-solicitation agreements that DOJ requires of the Adobe and eBay defendants. Id. at 3-4.

[8] Plaintiffs also allege that an Adobe employee sent an email about a "no hire" agreement to an Oracle employee from the Adobe employee's private email account. SAC ¶ 47. However, Plaintiffs do not argue that the Adobe employee's act should constitute fraudulent concealment by Oracle. Additionally, Plaintiffs fail to allege that the use of a private email account was unusual at Adobe. See *Animation Workers II, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 111262, 2015 WL 4974343, at 8 (plaintiffs averred that the defendants "sometimes communicated about the conspiracy over personal email accounts instead of employer accounts," which was a "sharp deviation from standard business practice").

Animation Workers I, 87 F. Supp. 3d at 1216 ("That Defendants did not affirmatively disclose the details of their allegedly unlawful conspiracy to Plaintiffs is neither surprising nor sufficient to constitute 'affirmative [*1078] steps to mislead.'" (citing Conmar, 858 F.2d at 505)).[9]

3. Reliance on Misleading Statements

The Court turns to Plaintiffs' remaining allegations, that Oracle made misleading public statements in Oracle's employee handbook and its SEC filings.[10] In the annual employee handbook, for example, Oracle stated that "Oracle commits rigorously to observing applicable antitrust or competition laws of all countries or organization." SAC ¶ 85; see also id. ¶¶ 84, 86, 89-91 (discussing employee handbook). In Oracle's annual SEC filings, Oracle stated, "In the software industry, [79] there is substantial and continuous competition for highly skilled business, product development, technical and other personnel. . . . We may also experience increased compensation costs that are not offset by either improved productivity or higher prices." Id. ¶¶ 93-94 (emphases omitted). Plaintiffs allege that the SEC filings were false or misleading because Oracle was committing antitrust violations that enabled Oracle to reduce compensation expenses. Id. ¶ 95-96.

The Court recently found that similar allegations were insufficient to establish fraudulent concealment. See Ryan II, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 158944, 2015 WL 7429495, at *18-19. The Court is not aware of, and Plaintiffs do not cite, any case [80] finding that a defendant's statements in routine public filings that the defendant obeys antitrust laws and participates in a competitive market alone suffice to show fraudulent concealment, absent other evidence that the defendant attempted to conceal its alleged antitrust behavior. Id. Rather, in the Ninth Circuit an affirmative act of denial of wrongdoing constitutes an affirmative act of fraudulent concealment only "if the circumstances make the plaintiff's reliance on the denial reasonable." Conmar, 858 F.2d at 505.[11]

[9] In Plaintiffs' procedurally improper ex parte motion to supplement the record, and in Plaintiffs' supplemental briefing on the accrual of Hari's claims, Plaintiffs argue that the Court should find fraudulent concealment based on the actions of Google. See ECF No. 138 Ex. B; ECF No. 149, at 6-7. Plaintiffs appear to argue that, even in the absence of sufficient allegations that Oracle itself fraudulently concealed the Secret Agreements, the Court may find fraudulent concealment based entirely on actions of concealment taken by Google. As noted above, the Court struck Plaintiffs' ex parte motion. However, even if the Court were to consider, and accept, Plaintiffs' argument, the Court would find that Plaintiffs' ex parte motion does not sufficiently allege fraudulent concealment by Google that may be imputed to Oracle. [78] The documents attached to Plaintiffs' ex parte motion reveal Google employees openly discussing a restricted hiring policy. See ECF No. 138 Ex. B. The documents do not reveal that Google took steps to keep employees from discussing the restricted hiring policy, that Google sought to destroy evidence of the restricted hiring policy, or that Google avoided discussing the restricted hiring policy in writing. There are also no allegations about fraudulent concealment by Google in the SAC. Accordingly, the Court's conclusion that Plaintiffs have not sufficiently pled fraudulent concealment would not be altered were the Court to consider the documents from Plaintiffs' ex parte motion.

[10] Plaintiffs also allege that Oracle continues to mislead the public about the Secret Agreements because an Oracle spokeswoman stated on October 14, 2014 that "Oracle was deliberately excluded from all prior litigation filed in this matter because all the parties investigating the issue concluded there was absolutely no evidence that Oracle was involved." Id. ¶ 108. Regardless of whether this statement misleads the public, the statement was made after Plaintiffs filed the instant action and thus could not have fraudulently concealed Plaintiffs' claims.

[11] Other courts have found that misleading statements constitute affirmative acts of fraudulent concealment only if Plaintiffs allege actual reliance upon the allegedly misleading statements. See Block v. Toyota Motor Corp., 5 F. Supp. 3d 1047, 1061 (D. Minn. 2014) (finding no fraudulent concealment based on allegedly false public statements where plaintiffs did not show that they were aware of the public statements); In re Magnesium Oxide Antitrust Litig., Civ. No. 10-5943 (DRD), 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 121373, 2011 WL 5008090, at *23 (D.N.J. Oct. 20, 2011) ("Implicit in the notion that a plaintiff's inquiry was misled or relaxed by an act of concealment is that the plaintiff relied on that act of concealment. . . . Here, Plaintiffs make no allegations that they were misled by Defendants' concealment of the alleged conspiracy and therefore have failed to meet the second element of fraudulent concealment."). [81] The Court observes that Plaintiffs do not allege that they ever read, let alone relied on, Oracle's SEC filings. See Animation Workers I, 87 F. Supp. 3d at 1217 (noting "Plaintiffs simply offer no factual allegations

[*1079] Plaintiffs here rely solely upon Lithium Ion, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7516, 2014 WL 309192, to support the argument that Oracle's allegedly misleading public statements constitute affirmative acts of fraudulent concealment. However, Lithium Ion did not hold that the defendants' public, putatively false statements were sufficient on their own to support an allegation of fraudulent concealment. Instead, "[i]t was the combination of those misleading, pretextual statements and the affirmative efforts taken to destroy evidence of the conspiracy or otherwise keep the conspiracies secret that supported the respective plaintiffs' fraudulent concealment allegations." *Animation Workers II, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 111262, 2015 WL 4974343, at 18. Specifically, the allegations in Lithium Ion that the defendants attempted to conceal their conspiracy by destroying documents, instructing employees not to memorialize conversations, and [82] using code names constituted circumstances that rendered the plaintiffs' reliance on the defendants' public statements reasonable. See *Lithium Ion, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7516, 2014 WL 309192, at 16 (describing how the Lithium Ion defendants "instruct[ed] the recipient of documents or emails to destroy, delete, or discard them after reading, instruct[ed] personnel to refrain from memorializing conversations, and used code to refer to particular entities or topics"); see also Conmar, 858 F.2d at 505 (denial of antitrust violations is an affirmative act of fraudulent concealment only "if the circumstances make the plaintiff's reliance on the denial reasonable").

Similarly, in Animation Workers II, the plaintiffs made ample allegations of affirmative acts of fraudulent concealment that rendered reliance upon the defendants' allegedly misleading public filings with the SEC reasonable. *2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 111262, 2015 WL 4974343, at 10. These included allegations that the Animation Workers II defendants' Human Resources departments were exchanging voluminous information about salary ranges and bonuses and colluding to fix compensation. *2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 111262, [WL] at 6-7. For example, the Animation Workers II plaintiffs alleged that the defendants held meetings at which they "set the parameters of a compensation survey" that "provides wage and salary ranges for the studios' technical [83] or artistic positions, broken down by position and experience level." *2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 111262, [WL] at 6. The Animation Workers II plaintiffs further alleged that after participating in these meetings fixing compensation, Pixar circulated annual "talking points" memos instructing managers on how to explain compensation. *2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 111262, [WL] at 9. These "talking points" memos allegedly did not mention Pixar's agreements colluding with Pixar's competitors to fix salary ranges, and the 2007 "talking points" memo specifically instructed managers to explain that "one of the main reasons" compensation increases were low was in order to "fund additional benefit programs." Id. The plaintiffs alleged that Pixar's president similarly sent a company-wide email justifying the modest compensation increases [*1080] as a result of the company's construction of a new child-care center. Id.

The Animation Workers II plaintiffs additionally alleged that they had discussed their compensation with specific, named individuals, and provided the dates, method of communication, and content of these conversations. Id. The Animation Workers II plaintiffs alleged that in these specifically identified conversations, the individuals with whom they spoke did not mention the collusive [84] salary agreements. Id. The Animation Workers II plaintiffs also alleged that the defendants took efforts to avoid sending emails related to the non-solicitation agreements, to avoid writing down the details of the non-solicitation agreements, and to eliminate any paper trail relating to the agreements by using a code name for the agreements. *2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 111262, [WL] at 8. Further, the Animation Workers II plaintiffs alleged that the defendants made affirmative misrepresentations in their public statements and filings during the DOJ investigations and made unjustified or misleading sealing motions in order to improperly seal documents that did not satisfy the requirements for sealing. *2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 111262, [WL] at 10-11. On top of all of these allegations, the plaintiffs alleged that the defendants falsely stated in their public filings that they engaged in competitive hiring. *2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 111262, [WL] at 10. This Court found that the plaintiffs' allegations in combination were adequate to render reliance upon the allegedly misleading SEC filings reasonable. Id.; see also In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig., 586 F. Supp. 2d 1109, 1119 (N.D. Cal. 2008) (defendants provided "numerous specific pretextual reasons for inflated prices" and also kept conspiracy secret).

In the instant case, on the other hand, Plaintiffs have not alleged circumstances that would [85] render their reliance on Oracle's allegedly misleading public statements reasonable. Plaintiffs' allegations of allegedly with regards to . . . Plaintiffs' reliance on such information"). Though the Court need not resolve whether Plaintiffs must allege actual reliance, the Court is skeptical that Plaintiffs could satisfy any actual reliance requirement.

misleading conversations with Oracle employees and of efforts by Oracle to conceal the conspiracy during the DOJ investigation do not satisfy Rule 9(b), and Plaintiffs' allegations of efforts to keep the conspiracy secret by avoiding disseminating information about the Secret Agreements is contradicted by the numerous emails quoted by Plaintiffs in which Oracle freely discussed the "no hire" list and gentleman's agreements. Unlike the plaintiffs in Animation Workers II and Lithium Ion, Plaintiffs here have not alleged that Oracle used a code name to refer to the alleged anti-solicitation agreements or that Oracle instructed employees not to discuss the anti-solicitation agreements by email. Plaintiffs provided just a single example of an Oracle email that was labeled do not forward. Additionally, Plaintiffs have not alleged that Oracle instructed supervisors or Human Resources personnel to respond to inquiries about compensation with a misleading, fraudulent, or pretextual response.[12] Plaintiffs have not alleged that [*1081] Oracle intentionally provided a false justification for [86] why compensation was not higher, or that Oracle's supervisors and Human Resources personnel would have known about the effect of the anti-solicitation agreements on compensation.

Thus, Plaintiffs are left solely with the allegation that Oracle falsely represented in public filings that it abides by antitrust laws and engages in a competitive market. However, absent any evidence of pretextual justifications for compensation or of steps taken by Oracle to conceal the agreements, the public filings are inadequate, on their own, to satisfy Plaintiffs' burden to show that Oracle took affirmative acts to fraudulently conceal the alleged conspiracy. See Hexcel, 681 F.3d at 1060 ("[The plaintiff] carries the burden of pleading and proving fraudulent concealment; it must plead facts showing that [the defendant] affirmatively misled it, and that [the plaintiff] had neither actual [88] nor constructive knowledge of the facts giving rise to its claim despite its diligence in trying to uncover those facts." (emphasis omitted) (alterations in original)); see also Retail Wholesale & Dep't Store Union Local 338 Ret. Fund v. Hewlett-Packard Co., 52 F. Supp. 3d 961, 970 (N.D. Cal. 2014) (noting, in securities regulation context, that "a code of ethics is inherently aspirational; it simply cannot be that every time a violation of that code occurs, a company is liable under federal law for having chosen to adopt the code at all"). Accordingly, Plaintiffs have failed to plead fraudulent concealment.

G. Discovery Rule

Plaintiffs contend that the discovery rule applies to delay the accrual of their UCL claim. Opp. at 9. The UCL prohibits "any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200. Plaintiffs allege that Oracle violated the UCL by entering into "illegal Secret Agreements to suppress wages of their respective workforce by restricting the ability of its managerial employees from attaining employment with the other technology companies." SAC ¶ 129. Plaintiffs further allege that these acts "were unfair, unlawful, and or unconscionable, both in their own right and because they violated the Sherman Act and the Cartwright Act." Id. ¶ 130.

In California, the discovery rule postpones accrual of [89] a claim until the plaintiff discovers, or has reason to discover, the cause of action. Clemens v. DaimlerChrysler Corp., 534 F.3d 1017, 1024 (9th Cir. 2008). Thus, [12] Plaintiffs argue that the documents submitted with Plaintiffs' procedurally improper ex parte motion reveal Oracle exchanged compensation information with competitors. First, Plaintiffs include an email from an Adobe employee asking Oracle and other technology companies to participate in a survey regarding the equity options given to employees. See ECF No. 138 Ex. B. However, the email itself indicates that Oracle had not responded to the request for information. See id. Second, Plaintiffs point to a document listing compensation information for Director and Vice President positions at four companies that Oracle received from a "confidential source." Id. Given that the proposed class excludes corporate officers and senior Oracle executives, it appears that this compensation information is not relevant to Plaintiffs' allegations. See SAC ¶ 64 (providing class definition). Moreover, Garrison, Van Vorst, and Hari were not corporate officers or senior executives, and thus this compensation information would not [87] apply to them. Further, Plaintiffs fail to allege that Oracle used this information to create pretextual reasons for Plaintiffs' compensation, or to conceal the Secret Agreements. Plaintiffs thus fail to explain how Oracle fraudulently concealed the Secret Agreements or why Plaintiffs' reliance on Oracle's SEC filings was reasonable. Accordingly, even if the Court were to consider the documents submitted in Plaintiffs' ex parte motion, the Court would not find that Plaintiffs adequately alleged fraudulent concealment.

according to Plaintiffs, their UCL claim did not accrue until Plaintiffs "discovered" the claim on May 17, 2013, when Plaintiffs gained access to documents from the High-Tech litigation that allegedly indicated that Oracle was party to Secret Agreements. Opp. at 9. Plaintiffs acknowledge that this Court determined in Animation Workers I and Ryan I that the discovery rule does not apply to UCL claims that arise purely out of anticompetitive conduct, like Plaintiffs' claim here. Id. at 9 & n.2. The Court dismissed as time barred the complaints in both Animation I and Ryan I, yet Plaintiffs rely on the same arguments that the Court rejected in both of those cases. See Opp. at 9-10; see also Ryan II, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 158944, 2015 WL 7429495, at *20-21 (rejecting application of discovery rule to UCL claim). The Court remains unpersuaded.

[*1082] Plaintiffs argue that Aryeh v. Canon Bus. Solutions, Inc., 55 Cal. 4th 1185, 151 Cal. Rptr. 3d 827, 292 P.3d 871 (2013), calls for the application of the discovery rule here. However, Aryeh does not require the application of the discovery rule to all UCL claims. See Aryeh, 55 Cal. 4th at 1196. Rather, the Aryeh court explained that the "UCL is a chameleon," and whether the discovery rule may apply is determined by "the nature of the right sued upon." See id. Under Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 338(d), "the discovery rule [90] applies to fraud actions." See E-Fab, Inc. v. Accountants, Inc. Servs., 153 Cal. App. 4th 1308, 1318, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 9 (2007) (citing Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 338(d)). Thus, the Aryeh court held that the discovery rule might be appropriate for UCL claims based on allegations of fraud, but the discovery rule does not apply to UCL claims based purely on allegations of unfair competition. See Aryeh, 55 Cal. 4th at 1196 (citing approvingly M&F Fishing, Inc. v. Sea-Pac Ins. Managers, Inc., 202 Cal. App. 4th 1509, 1531-32, 136 Cal. Rptr. 3d 788 (2012) (nature of UCL unfair competition claim rendered discovery rule inappropriate)).

Applying Aryeh, this Court has already concluded that the discovery rule does not apply to UCL claims similar to the UCL claim alleged here. See Animation Workers I, 87 F. Supp. 3d at 1210-11. In Animation Workers I, the plaintiffs based their UCL claim on the defendants' "efforts to limit competition for and suppress compensation of their employees" and the defendants' agreement "to restrict competition for class members' services through anti-solicitation agreements and agreements to set and fix the compensation of class members." See No. 14-4062, Consolidated Amended Class Action Compl., ECF No. 63 ¶ 143. The Court concluded that these allegations were allegations purely of anticompetitive conduct and not allegations of fraud. Animation Workers I, 87 F. Supp. 3d at 1210-11. Therefore, the Court held that the discovery rule did not apply to the Animation Workers I plaintiffs' UCL claim. Id.; see also *Ryan II, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 158944, 2015 WL 7429495, at 20-21 (declining [91] to apply the discovery rule to similar allegations of anticompetitive conduct).

In the instant case, the conduct alleged as the basis for Plaintiffs' UCL claim consists of Oracle's attempts to suppress the wages of Oracle employees by entering into non-solicitation Secret Agreements with other companies. SAC ¶ 129. These allegations are equivalent to the allegations in Animation Workers I that the Animation Workers I defendants took "efforts to limit competition for and suppress compensation of their employees" and "agreed to restrict competition for class members' services through anti-solicitation agreements and agreements to set and fix the compensation of class members." No. 14-4062, Consolidated Amended Class Action Compl., ECF No. 63 ¶ 143. Like the allegations in Animation Workers I, Plaintiffs' UCL claim allegations are purely of anticompetitive behavior.

Although elsewhere in the SAC Plaintiffs allege that Oracle engaged in fraudulent concealment, Plaintiffs' UCL claim does not mention fraudulent concealment or any alleged act of fraudulent concealment by Oracle as a basis for the alleged UCL violation. See SAC ¶¶ 126-133 (Plaintiffs' UCL claim). Indeed, Plaintiffs do not specify [92] any fraudulent conduct by Oracle that violates the UCL. Moreover, the Court concludes above that the SAC does not sufficiently allege fraudulent concealment. See supra. Thus, the SAC does not include allegations of fraud sufficient to support application of the discovery rule to Plaintiffs' UCL claim. Because Plaintiffs' UCL claim is based solely on Oracle's [*1083] alleged anticompetitive conduct, the discovery rule does not apply. See *Ryan II, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 158944, 2015 WL 7429495, at 20-21 (rejecting application of discovery rule to UCL claim similar to the one in the instant case); Animation Workers I, 87 F. Supp. 3d at 1210-11 (same).

H. Continuous Accrual

The Court turns to Plaintiffs' argument that the Court should apply the California "continuous accrual" rule to Plaintiffs' state law claims. Under "continuous accrual," "a series of wrongs or injuries may be viewed as each triggering its own limitations period, such that a suit for relief may be partially time-barred as to older events but timely as to those within the applicable limitations period."[13] Aryeh, 55 Cal. 4th at 1192. "[S]eparate, recurring invasions of the same right can each trigger their own statute of limitations." Id. at 1198. "Generally speaking, continuous accrual applies whenever there is a continuing or recurring obligation: 'When an obligation or liability arises [93] on a recurring basis, a cause of action accrues each time a wrongful act occurs, triggering a new limitations period.'" Id. at 1199 (quoting Hogar Dulce Hogar v. Cmty. Dev. Comm'n, 110 Cal. App. 4th 1288, 1295, 2 Cal. Rptr. 3d 497 (2003)).

Accordingly, California courts have held that disputes regarding monthly billing and payments qualify for continuous accrual, with each month triggering a new limitations period. See, e.g., id. at 1200-01 (allegations of unlawful charges in monthly bills were recurring obligations); Tsemetzin v. Coast Fed'l Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 57 Cal. App. 4th 1334, 1344, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 726 (1997) (monthly rent payments owed were a recurring obligation); Armstrong Petroleum Corp. v. Tri-Valley Oil & Gas Co., 116 Cal. App. 4th 1375, 1388-89, 11 Cal. Rptr. 3d 412 (2004) (monthly payments on a gas and oil lease created a recurring obligation). However, if the alleged recurring injuries during the limitations period "arose out of a single transaction" that occurred before the limitations period, the continuous accrual rule does not apply. State ex rel. Metz v. C.C.C. Info. Servs., Inc., 149 Cal. App. 4th 402, 418, 57 Cal. Rptr. 3d 156 (2007). Thus, allegedly fraudulent statements and admissions [94] following an inaccurate valuation in an insurance claim did not trigger new limitations periods under the continuous accrual rule because all of the false statements arose out of the same insurance valuation, which occurred before the limitations period. Id.

In the instant case, Plaintiffs contend that Oracle had a "continuing obligation not to collude with competitors to restrict free competition for engineers and managers that was susceptible to being breached each time a Secret Agreement was entered into or renewed or reaffirmed." Opp. at 13. The Court first observes that the SAC fails to allege this continuing duty. See generally SAC. Additionally, Oracle's duty "not to collude with competitors" bears little relation to the monthly payments or monthly bills that California courts have found to be periodic, recurring obligations warranting continuous accrual. See Metz, 149 Cal. App. 4th at 418 (holding that continuous accrual [*1084] does not apply where "[the plaintiff's] action does not involve a recurring obligation or any such period payment obligations"); see also Aryeh, 55 Cal. 4th at 1200-01 (applying continuous accrual to dispute over monthly bills); Tsemetzin, 57 Cal. App. 4th at 1344 (applying continuous accrual to dispute over monthly rent payments); Armstrong Petroleum, 116 Cal. App. 4th at 1388-89 (applying continuous accrual [95] to dispute over monthly lease payments). The SAC contains no allegations of unlawful behavior by Oracle about any similar periodic transactions. See generally SAC.

More importantly, even if Oracle breached a continuing duty each time that Oracle "entered into or renewed or reaffirmed" a Secret Agreement, Plaintiffs have failed to allege that Oracle took any of these actions during the limitations period. Although Plaintiffs allege that Oracle continued to enter into new Secret Agreements and add companies to the "no hire" list "well into 2012," Plaintiffs fail to identify a single new agreement after 2009. See generally SAC. As discussed above, in the section on the continuing violation theory, although the Court accepts "factual allegations in the complaint as true," Manzarek, 519 F.3d at 1031, the Court need not accept as true "allegations that are merely conclusory." In re Gilead Scis, 536 F.3d at 1055. Here, Plaintiffs offer no facts about what companies formed post-2009 Secret Agreements with Oracle, much less when those Secret Agreements took place. Similarly, all of Plaintiffs' allegations about Oracle's "reaffirmation" or enforcement of the Secret Agreements are undated or pre-date 2009. This includes Plaintiffs' allegations that Oracle [96] disseminated the "no hire" list and abided by the Secret Agreements internally, see SAC ¶¶ 26, 31, 41, 43 (listing dates in 2007 and 2008), and that Oracle threatened other companies with fines or lawsuits to ensure adherence to the Secret Agreements, id. ¶¶

[13] The continuous accrual rule is similar to the continuing violation theory. "However, unlike the continuing violation doctrine, which renders an entire course of conduct actionable, the theory of continuous accrual supports recovery only for damages arising from those breaches falling within the limitations period." See Aryeh, 55 Cal. 4th at 1199. Whether Plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged a continuing violation is discussed above. See supra.

36-39 (listing dates in 2007 and 2008). Thus, Plaintiffs have failed to identify any "separate, recurring invasions" of Plaintiffs' rights after 2009, and the continuous accrual rule does not apply. See Aryeh, 55 Cal. 4th at 1198.

I. Leave to Amend

As Plaintiffs have failed to allege any applicable exception to the default accrual rules or tolling doctrine, the Court concludes that Plaintiffs' claims are time barred. Under Rule 15(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, leave to amend "shall be freely given when justice so requires," bearing in mind "the underlying purpose of Rule 15 to facilitate decisions on the merits, rather than on the pleadings or technicalities." Lopez, 203 F.3d at 1127 (alterations omitted). The Court may deny leave to amend due to "undue delay, bad faith or dilatory motive on the part of the movant, repeated failure to cure deficiencies by amendments previously allowed, undue prejudice to the opposing party by virtue of allowance of the amendment, [and] futility of amendment." See Leadsinger, 512 F.3d at 532.

In the instant case, the [97] Court's April 22, 2015 order dismissed Plaintiffs' claims as untimely and noted that "the complaint is largely bereft of any dates or details with regards to Oracle's specific conduct." See Garrison, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 53653, 2015 WL 1849517, at *9. The Court's April 22, 2015 order stated that "failure to cure the deficiencies identified in this Order will result in a dismissal with prejudice." Id. Plaintiffs then filed a first amended complaint on May 28, 2015, ECF No. 102, and the SAC on June 5, 2015, ECF No. 105. The SAC has failed to cure the timeliness deficiencies—even after Plaintiffs had months of discovery, received all of the documents that Oracle [*1085] produced to DOJ during the DOJ investigation, filed an opposition to the motion to dismiss, submitted additional evidence in a procedurally improper ex parte motion, and filed two supplemental briefs. The Court finds that permitting further amendment would be futile. The Court also finds that giving Plaintiffs yet another opportunity to amend their complaint to address the statutes of limitations would cause undue delay and would unduly prejudice Oracle by requiring Oracle to file repeated motions to dismiss. Therefore, the Court's dismissal of Plaintiffs' SAC is with prejudice. See Leadsinger, 512 F.3d at 532.

IV. [98] CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court GRANTS Oracle's motion to dismiss with prejudice.

MULTIDISTRICT LITIGATION

MEMORANDUM

PRATTER, J.

I. INTRODUCTION

In September 2015, the Court granted in part the Motion for Class Certification by a putative class of direct purchasers of eggs ("Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs"—referred to frequently as "Plaintiffs" in this memorandum) who alleged that the nation's major egg producers conspired to control and limit the supply of eggs in order to increase egg prices. In re Processed Egg Products Antitrust Litig., 310 F.R.D. 134, 2015 WL 5610834 (E.D. Pa. 2015), opinion amended and superseded by In re Processed Egg Products Antitrust Litig., No. 08-MD-2002, 312 F.R.D. 171, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 152967, 2015 WL 7067790 (E.D. Pa. Nov. 12, 2015) (hereinafter "Class Cert. I at __").[1] The Court granted the Plaintiffs' motion as to a subclass of purchasers of shell eggs and denied as to a subclass of purchasers of egg products. *Class Cert. I, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 152967, [WL] at 29. At that time, however, the Court required additional briefing in order to determine the appropriate cut-off date for the shell egg class. Both the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs and the Defendants submitted simultaneous briefing on October 16, 2015. (Doc. Nos. 1333 & 1334). The Court has reviewed this briefing, [*2] as well as the record excerpts submitted by both sides, and now returns to address the limited issue of the proper cut-off date for the Direct Purchaser Plaintiff Shell Egg Class.

For the reasons outlined below, the Court holds that the proper cut-off date for the Shell Egg Class is December 31, 2008.

II. DISCUSSION

A summary of the relevant factual background and the class certification standard under Rule 23 appears, in detail, in the Court's Class Cert I opinion. It is not necessary to rehash that information here, except to the extent that specific issues may bear upon the Court's holding.

The parties were asked to provide support for the length of their respective proposed class periods for the shell egg class. *Class Cert I., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 152967, [WL] at 29. Having reviewed the submissions, the Court perceives that the parties appear to dispute two specific issues: (1) whether the record supports an inference that the conspiracy continued after the lawsuit was filed in 2008 and (2) whether the impact of certain [*3] events which took place after 2008 would prevent issues of fact and law common to the class to continue to predominate over individual issues. Given the Court's holding in Class Cert I analyzing the Rule 23 factors, and given the limited scope of the apparent dispute as to the class period, the Court will incorporate its analysis from the prior opinion and address only these two disputed issues in determining the proper length of the class period.

1. Length of Conspiracy

The alleged conspiracy to increase egg prices artificially by reducing the supply of shell eggs came to light in late 2008. Def. Memo at 1 (Doc. No. 1333); see John R. Wilke, Federal Prosecutors Probe Food-Price Collusion, Wall Street Journal, Sept. 23, 2008 at A1. The Plaintiffs contend, however, that the Defendants continued to conspire, even in the face of numerous lawsuits, until at least December 31, 2013. Pl. Memo at 2 (Doc. No. 1334).

The Plaintiffs' position is that, once a conspiracy has been shown to exist, each participant's involvement in the conspiracy continues until such time as the participant can prove it has withdrawn. Each participant seeking to prove withdrawal must show that he or she "took affirmative action [*4] to defeat or disavow the purpose of the conspiracy" and without such action "liability continues for all action in furtherance of the conspiracy by other conspirators." Pl. Memo at 6 (citing United States v. Cont'l Grp., 603 F.2d 444, 466-67 (3d Cir. 1979); United States v. Mayes, 512 F.2d 637, 642 (6th Cir. 1975); United States v. Brown, 332 F.3d 363, 374 (6th Cir. 2003)). The Plaintiffs argue that the evidence presented by the Defendants in conjunction with their opposition to the class certification motion fails to show any such affirmative withdrawal. Consequently, they argue, the Court must assume the conspiracy continued even long after the lawsuit was filed.[2]

[1] The Court filed an Amended Memorandum and Order on November 12, 2015 (Doc. Nos. 1346 & 1347) to correct certain typographical errors. This Amended Memorandum and Order did not alter the substance of the Court's earlier ruling.

[2] The Plaintiffs, in their supplemental briefing, cite to a number of cases for support of this argument. In United States v. Con'l Grp., the Third Circuit Court of Appeals held that evidence of certain competitive activity among alleged co-conspirators does not prevent the court from finding the existence of a conspiracy. 603 F.2d at 467 (citing United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co.,

At this stage of the litigation, the Court need not delve into determining whether [*5] any of the Defendants have adequately shown they are entitled to an affirmative defense of withdrawal, or whether a conspiracy has been proven to actually exist. See Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Dukes, 564 U.S. 338, 131 S. Ct. 2541, 2551, 180 L. Ed. 2d 374 (2011). Rather, the task is to determine whether the requirements of Rule 23 have been satisfied and, by extension, whether proof of the existence of the alleged conspiracy after 2008 is a question appropriate for class treatment. While the rigorous analysis required under Rule 23 will frequently require some overlap with the merits of the underlying claim (thus challenging judicial line-drawing capacities), the Court is prohibited from engaging in a "free-ranging" merits inquiry and should consider merits questions at this stage only to the extent they are relevant to determining whether the prerequisites of class certification have been met. *See Class Cert I, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 152967, [WL] at 3; Wal-Mart, 131 S. Ct. at 2551, n. 6; Amgen Inc. v. Connecticut Ret. Plans & Trust Funds, 133 S. Ct. 1184, 1194, 185 L. Ed. 2d 308 (2013). The focus of the Rule 23 analysis is determining the existence of common questions, rather than determining the answers to those questions. In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., 305 F.3d 145, 152 (3d Cir. 2002) ("[A]t the class certification stage, 'the Court need not concern itself with whether Plaintiffs can prove their allegations regarding common impact; the Court need only assure itself that Plaintiffs' attempt to prove their allegations will predominantly involve [*6] common issues of fact and law.'") (quoting Lumco Indus., Inc. v. Jeld-Wen, Inc., 171 F.R.D. 168, 174 (E.D. Pa. 1997)).

In order to determine whether there are such common questions, the Court must analyze the relevant elements of the underlying offense which the plaintiff would need to establish in order to prove the existence of an antitrust conspiracy post-2008. See Amgen, 133 S. Ct. at 1195. "The gist of the crime of conspiracy to violate the Sherman Act is the agreement itself." United States v. U.S. Gypsum Co., 600 F.2d 414, 417 (3d Cir. 1979). To determine whether the scope of a conspiracy is continuing, one must look to whether the agreement allegedly entered into "contemplates bringing to pass continuous results that will not continue without the continuous cooperation of the conspirators to keep it up." Id. (citing United States v. Kissel, 218 U.S. 601, 607, 31 S. Ct. 124, 54 L. Ed. 1168 (1910). A conspiracy "to maintain high and stable prices" has been found to satisfy that requirement. Id.

The Third Circuit Court of Appeals' Gypsum decision is instructive. There, the appeals court considered whether the United States could establish the existence of a continuing antitrust conspiracy to fix the price of gypsum. The conspiracy itself was alleged to have started prior to the relevant statute of limitations cut-off but then to have continued into the statutory period. 600 F.2d at 417. The Court ultimately determined that there were [*7] sufficient acts in furtherance of the conspiracy during the statutory period to allow a jury to conclude the conspiracy continued in the statutory period. Id. at 418. The Court noted that "there is no requirement that the Government prove a new agreement in the statutory period." Id. at 418.

As in Gypsum, the object of the Defendants' alleged conspiracy here was to maintain high and stable prices of shell eggs. See Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' Memorandum in Support of Motion for Class Certification, 9-12 (May 30, 2014) (Doc. No. 979) (hereinafter "Motion for Class Cert. at __"). In order to accomplish this, the participants are alleged to have agreed to suppress egg production through a variety of means, including the UEP Certified Program. Motion for Class Cert. at 16. The Plaintiffs argue (and Defendants do not dispute) that the UEP Certified Program continued after the lawsuit at issue was filed in 2008. Pl. Memo at 6; Def. Memo at 6. Despite the fact that the Court did not require fact discovery after 2008, the Plaintiff's briefing and exhibits do indicate that the UEP Certification program continued through 2013 and included the same types of instrumentalities as are alleged to have characterized the [*8] conspiracy pre-2008. See Animal Husbandry Guidelines for U.S. Egg Laying Flocks, 2014 Edition, United Egg Producers.[3] As this Court pointed out in its prior opinion, the Plaintiffs have shown that the existence and impact of the instrumentalities of the conspiracy can be issues appropriate for class certification. *See Class Cert I, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 152967, [WL] at 10-11. The Defendants here have provided no basis for arguing that the question of the existence of a conspiracy or the implementation of the UEP Certified Program, post-2008, cannot be treated on a class wide basis.

310 U.S. 150, 225 n.59, 60 S. Ct. 811, 84 L. Ed. 1129 (1940)). Similarly, the mere cessation by a co-conspirator of activity in furtherance of the conspiracy is not sufficient to establish withdrawal. Id. Withdrawal is an affirmative defense, and the defendant must prove that it "took affirmative action to defeat or disavow the purpose of the conspiracy." Id. 466.

The Defendants' principle counter argument revolves around the assertion that the initiation of the lawsuit in 2008 fundamentally altered the nature of the conspiracy.[4] Def. Memo at 7. The Defendants argue that "a conspiracy should not be presumed to continue when the surrounding circumstances have changed significantly. Def. Memo at 7 (citing Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law*: An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and Their Application* at ¶ 1421b3, 164 (3d ed. 2010)). Absent secrecy, they argue, no such conspiracy could have survived.

As a preliminary matter, while an antitrust conspiracy's success frequently depends [*10] upon the conspirators' ability to conceal the conspiracy itself, secrecy is not an element of the antitrust claim and the Defendants do not provide any authority that the initiation of a lawsuit, without more, is sufficient to terminate a conspiracy. *See In re Magnesium Oxide Antitrust Litig., No. CIV. 10-5943 DRD, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 121373, 2011 WL 5008090, at 21 (D.N.J. Oct. 20, 2011) (citing *In re Aspartame Antitrust Litig., No. 06-1732, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16995, 2007 WL 5215231, at 5 (E.D.Pa. Jan.18, 2007) and In re Mercedes—Benz, 157 F. Supp. 2d at 372). The simple fact that the conspiracy was uncovered in 2008 would not prevent the Court from finding that the conspiracy continued post-2008 for purposes of class certification.

The Court also finds that the parties have failed to establish that the initiation of the lawsuit in 2008 alone constitutes a sufficiently significant changed circumstance in order to justify holding that the conspiracy necessarily terminated at that point. Professors Areeda and Hovenkamp, cited in the Defendants' brief, note that some positive evidence of abandonment is necessary to find that an antitrust conspiracy had ceased. Def. Memo at 7; see Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra. And while Professors Areeda and Hovenkamp suggest that in certain instances significant changes to the circumstances of the conspiracy can create [*11] the presumption that an ongoing conspiracy, once proven, has terminated, they do not propose a rule that is applied. Indeed, they note that in any event such circumstances would need to be "very significant." See Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra; Basle Theatres, Inc., v. Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Corp., 168 F. Supp. 553 (W.D. Pa. 1958).

In Basle, the exemplar case that Areeda and Hovenkamp describe in their treatise, the court held that a variety of changes to the motion pictures market over the course of an alleged 20-year conspiracy among Pittsburgh-area film distributors to maintain a uniform system of movie first runs did not serve to create a presumption that the conspiracy had terminated. Basle, 168 F. Supp. at 558. These changes in the market included increases in admission prices at Pittsburgh area theaters, increases in the length of time movies were shown during initial runs, the prices of films, closures of certain theaters, population shifts in the area, declines in theater attendance, and even one of the defendants leaving the industry altogether. Id.

The Defendants here have not articulated why the post-2008 events would have sufficiently altered the market or the conspiracy so as to create a presumption that the conspiracy terminated in 2008 for purposes of the Rule 23 analysis.

This, however, does not end the analysis. Even [*12] if common evidence can show the continued existence of the alleged conspiracy, the Plaintiffs must also establish that issues of fact or law applicable to their proposed shell egg subclass predominate over individual issues after 2008.

[4] The Defendants also argue that the Plaintiffs are unable to rely on record [*9] evidence to support the existence of a conspiracy extending past 2008. The lawsuits which make up this current multidistrict litigation were filed at the end of 2008. In 2009, the Court issued a case management order which relieved the parties of an obligation to preserve documents generated after December 31, 2008 pending the parties' joint proposal regarding preservation of documents. (Doc. No. 24). The parties attempted to provide a joint proposal as to their respective preservation obligations, but ultimately this proved unsuccessful and the Court appointed a special master to review the parties' respective positions and issue a report and recommendation. (Doc. No. 63). This was filed on March 9, 2009 (Doc. No. 71) and subsequently adopted (Doc. No. 83). The report stated that the parties had no obligation to preserve records created before January 1, 1999 and after December 31, 2008. (Doc. No. 83 at 9.) In 2013, however, the parties agreed to exchange post-2008 transactional data and supplement it on an ongoing basis. (Doc. No. 829). This data was used by Dr. Rausser in his model, discussed infra.

2. Predominance Post-2008

At the class certification stage, it is the plaintiff's burden to show that all the requisite elements of Rule 23 have been met. In re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litig., 552 F.3d 305, 311 (3d Cir. 2008), as amended (Jan. 16, 2009). The Court has already found that the Plaintiffs have put forward sufficient evidence to establish the requisite elements of Rule 23 for the shell egg subclass for the period 2004 through 2008. See *Class Cert I, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 152967, [WL] at 25. The Plaintiffs' argument in their supplementary memorandum is that the analysis applicable to evaluating the class from 2004 through 2008—principally the analysis of Dr. Rausser—is equally applicable post-2008. For the reasons discussed above, the Court does not disagree that common evidence conceivably could show the existence of a conspiracy existing after 2008. The Defendants, however, have raised two issues in their supplemental memorandum disputing predominance of class issues after 2008.

First, the Defendants argue that certain Plaintiffs continued to purchase UEP Certified Eggs after [*13] they became aware of the alleged conspiracy and, in certain circumstances, even required any eggs they purchased be UEP Certified. The Defendants argue that the fact that Plaintiffs continued to purchase UEP eggs after the conspiracy came to light compels the Court to engage in an individual analysis of the motivations of these Plaintiffs and that such an individualized inquiry would overwhelm any common class issues. The Court, however, does not find these arguments, in and of themselves, compelling.

As noted above, a plaintiff's ignorance or awareness of the existence of a conspiracy is not an element that need be proven in order to establish that conspiracy's existence. See generally Angelico v. Lehigh Valley Hosp., Inc., 184 F.3d 268, 275 (3d Cir. 1999) (listing the elements of a Section 1 violation under the rule of reason test). To the extent that the Defendants argue that their liability for post-2008 purchases depends in some way upon a determination of the Plaintiffs' awareness of the conspiracy—and in turn that this defeats predominance—they are mistaken as to the requirements of the law.

On the other hand, however, the fact that certain Plaintiffs required UEP Certified eggs during the 2008 to 2013 period, could raise individualized issues of fact or [*14] law as to whether those Plaintiffs suffered cognizable antitrust injuries. See Def. Memo at 10 (Doc. No. 1333) (citing Columbia Broad. Sys. Inc., v. Am. Soc. of Composers, Authors & Publishers, 620 F.2d 930, 936 (2d Cir. 1980) (noting that in the context of non-per se violations of §1 of the Sherman Act, customer preference in favor of an allegedly trade-restraining practice may indicate no violation)). The factual showing by the Defendants, however, is somewhat thin. For example, the Defendants' briefing has not provided the Court with any indication of how many Plaintiffs had such requirements. See Def. Memo at 6. In fact, the brief references only a single instance where Plaintiff Purchasers affirmatively required UEP Certified eggs over cheaper alternatives post-2008. See Def. Memo at 9.

The fact that certain Plaintiffs may have required producers supply them with UEP certified eggs does not, on its own, alter the underlying nature of the conspiracy or its alleged impact on supply and prices. Rule 23(b)(3) contemplates that certain individual issues may exist among class members, despite a court finding that class issues predominate. See Neale v. Volvo Cars of N. Am., LLC, 794 F.3d 353, 371 (3d Cir. 2015) ("[T]he presence of individual questions does not per se rule out a finding of predominance."); 7AA Fed. Prac. & Proc. Civ. § 1778 (3d ed.) (explaining that the Court may find [*15] that class issues predominate even if certain issues remain to be tried separately or individual affirmative defenses exist). At this point, the Defendants have merely raised the possibility that a subset of one of the Plaintiff's damages may need to be reduced to account for the fact that this Plaintiff may not have suffered antitrust injury for the entire conspiracy period. "Although the calculation of individual damages is necessarily an individual inquiry, the courts have consistently held that the necessity of this inquiry does not preclude class action treatment where class issues predominate." In re Cmty. Bank of N. Virginia, 418 F.3d 277, 305-06 (3d Cir. 2005); In re Prudential Ins. Co. Am. Sales Practice Litig. Agent Actions, 148 F.3d 283, 315 (3d Cir. 1998) (citing Eisenberg v. Gagnon, 766 F.2d 770, 786 (3d Cir.1985)) ("While individual questions may arise during the course of this litigation, we agree with the district court that the presence of individual questions does not per se rule out a finding of predominance. In particular, the 'presence of individual questions as to the reliance of each investor does not mean that the common questions of law and fact do not predominate.'") In light of the Court's analysis in Class Cert I, the Court cannot conclude that this argument by the Defendants, on its own, defeats a finding that class issues predominate post-2008.

There is another—and in [*16] the Court's view, more compelling—issue raised by the Defendants in their supplemental briefing, however. Defendants argue that, starting in 2008, state regulatory regimes governing cage space limitations began to be implemented in certain egg producing states.[5] The existence of such regulatory regimes would have an impact on the ability of Dr. Rausser's model to accurately calculate damages for the entire class, should the Court extend the class through 2013, as Dr. Rausser would contend.

In Class Cert I, the Court analyzed whether Dr. Gordon Rausser's damages model supported a finding that class issues predominate with respect to whether the alleged conspiracy had an impact on all members of the shell eggs subclass and consequently whether the requirements of Rule 23(b)(3) had been satisfied. Ultimately, the Court determined that the Plaintiffs could use common evidence to demonstrate that "(a) Defendants made efforts to reduce the supply of eggs and thereby raise the price of eggs; (b) the egg market was structured so that the alleged conspiracy to restrict the supply of eggs, if successful, would have caused all, or virtually all, Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs to pay higher prices than they would have absent the conspiracy; and (c) the conspiracy was successful in raising prices." *Class Cert I, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 152967, [WL] at 9. Based upon its review of Dr. Rausser's model, the Court found that the [*18] Plaintiffs could show, using evidence common to the class, that shell egg prices were higher as a result of the conspiracy than they would have been otherwise. *Class Cert I, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 152967, [WL] at 16. In order to show this, Dr. Rausser, performed a regression analysis where he attempted to identify, and control for, all the relevant factors influencing the price of shell eggs over time. Having done so, he determined that the amount of price increases he was unable to control for were the result of the alleged conspiracy. *Class Cert I, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 152967, [WL] at 16-17. In Class Cert I, we noted that the Defendants had not "quibbled" with the logic of Dr. Rausser's theory. *Class Cert I, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 152967, [WL] at 17. Rather, they argued that under Comcast Corp. v. Behrend, 133 S. Ct. 1426, 1428, 185 L. Ed. 2d 515 (2013), the Plaintiffs must first show the decrease in egg production and then measure this decrease on the price of eggs.

Given the arguments raised by the Defendants regarding Dr. Rausser, in Class Cert I the Court analyzed the requirement of Comcast in detail in order to determine whether Dr. Rausser's model sufficiently measured the extent to which the alleged conspiracy caused an antitrust impact on all the alleged class members. *Class Cert I, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 152967, [WL] at 17. The Court ultimately determined that Dr. Rausser's model proposed in this matter was distinguishable from the model at issue in Comcast—specifically [*19] because none of the pre-2008 modes of conduct challenged by the Defendants here were alleged to be lawful. *2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 152967, [WL] at 18. The Court noted, however, that Dr. Rausser could face a Comcast problem if "(a) certain conduct [was] found to have occurred; and (b) that conduct had an impact on the price of eggs; but (c) that conduct was not legally cognizable vis-à-vis the class." *2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 152967, [WL] at 18 n. 15.

While the Court found no Comcast problem as to the pre-2008 class, the Defendants' supplemental briefing in opposition to class certification appears to have raised such an issue with regards to the post-2008 conspiracy. Def. Motion Opposing Class Cert at 3-4 (Doc No. 1333). The Defendants argue that from December 2008 onward, a number of different egg producing states passed legislation which had the effect of legislating minimum cage size requirements. The Defendants, in their supplemental briefing, have pointed to at least four separate state legislative schemes that were on the books between 2008 and 2013 which provided minimum cage space requirements for eggs either produced or sold in state. The Defendants have also pointed to one additional state—California—which was phasing in cage space requirements during this period. This presents [*20] a substantially different question vis-à-vis predominance post 2008 than what was discussed in the Defendants' initial round of briefing.

[5] While this issue was alluded to in the initial briefing, the Court did not incorporate it into the analysis of the class pre-2008 because there did not appear to be any substantial regulatory regimes in place. The Defendants' initial round of briefing regarding class certification only made reference to legislation passed in California in 2008. Def. Memo Opposing Class Cert at 34 (citing prop 2, Cal Health & Safe Code Ann. 25990). Notably, however, this argument focused on challenging the adequacy of Dr. Rausser's model to show the conspiracy's impact on the egg market. Given this single example, the Court did not find that Dr. Rausser's failure to incorporate it into his model was sufficient to defeat predominance. *Class Cert I, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 152967, [WL] at 21, n. 17. The Defendants' [*17] supplemental briefing on this issue, however, is substantially more comprehensive as to post-2008 legislative action and indicates that multiple state legislatures were pursuing—and implementing—separate legislative schemes regarding laying hen welfare which would have had the effect of reducing the size of flocks. Def. Memo at 7.

The Defendants' have identified the following state legislative schemes germane to this issue. In 2009, Arizona became the first state to require compliance with UEP guidelines, followed in 2012 by Oregon and Washington. See Arizona Admin. Code § R3-2-907 (effective Oct 2009); Or. Rev. Stat § 632.840(1)(c) (effective Jan. 2012) and Or. Admin R. 603-018-0005-0010 (2012); Wash. Rev Code § 69.25.065 (1)(a) (effective Aug. 2012). In 2011, Ohio, the second largest egg producing state, formally enacted a moratorium on the construction of new egg production facilities housing layers in battery cages, Ohio Admin. Code 901:12-9-03 (F)(6) (effective September 2011), required farms provide 57 square inches per laying hen and prohibited food-withdrawal molting, Ohio Admin Code 901:12-9-03(C) (effective September 2011). Finally, in 2008, California passed Proposition 2, which prohibited any cage which prevented hens from "[l]ying down, standing up, and fully extending [their] limbs" or "turning around freely." This requirement had an effective date of January 2015. Legislation passed in 2010 extended the Prop 2 requirement to all eggs sold within California. Michigan passed similar restrictions on eggs produced in-state in [*21] 2009. Mich. Comp. Laws § 287.746(2) (passed October 2009; effective March 31, 2010).

The significance of such legislation to the class certification analysis was previewed in the Court's discussion of Comcast in Class Cert I. See *2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 152967, [WL] at 18 n. 15. The Court found that there was no indication that the Defendants engaged in conduct which had an impact on the price of eggs but which was not legally cognizable vis-à-vis the class prior to 2008. The existence, however, of multiple state legislative schemes in place after 2008, mandating producers impose cage-space limitations, would create the possibility that the effect of the Defendants' conduct post-2008 could not be measured using Dr. Rausser's proposed model.

As a preliminary matter, the existence of multiple state legislative schemes impacting a proposed class is certainly a means of defeating predominance. See e.g. Amchem Products, Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 624, 117 S. Ct. 2231, 138 L. Ed. 2d 689 (1997). Typically, however, the significance of such multiple schemes relates to choice of law questions, such as when a proposed class involves application of state law to claims of members from a number of different jurisdictions. See Newberg on Class Actions § 4:61 (5th ed.). While the Court here does not face a choice of law problem, the existence of multiple state legislative [*22] schemes in place between 2008 and 2013 could have had the effect of decreasing flock size, but for reasons unrelated to the conspiracy. The Defendants argue that such issues would operate to reduce supply in a manner indistinguishable from the effect of the UEP guidelines. Dr. Rausser's model, however, does not control for the impact of state legislative schemes on the impact of egg prices post-2008.

Dr. Rausser performed a regression analysis using the Defendants' transactional data from February 1997 to December 2013 to measure the effect of anticompetitive behavior on the price of shell eggs. Rausser Report at 91. He concluded that the price of shell eggs between September 2000 and December 2013 was "significantly elevated" due to the anti-competitive behavior of the Defendants. In order to discern this correlation, he employed the concept of "ceteris paribus" or "holding all other relevant factors fixed" in order to determine the relation between the hypothesized causal variable and the effect. See Rausser Report at 88, n. 312. The salient factors which he identified included "product characteristics, product packaging, supply costs, customer size, custom type, brand label, and [*23] seasonability." Rausser Report at 82-83. Based upon his analysis, Dr. Rausser determined that between 65% and 66% of the price variability of shell eggs could be attributed to changes in these identified variables. Id. at 84. The other 34% to 35% of price variation, Dr. Rausser concludes, must be due to the supply reducing behavior of the conspirators.

This model does not, however, account for changes in regulatory requirements imposed by state governments upon producers. As discussed above, these began to be passed in 2008. While Dr. Rausser's decision to leave out a variable to account for state regulatory activity may not have impacted his regression analysis for the period between 2000 and 2008, his decision presents a problem for the Court when attempting to apply his analysis to the period from 2008 to 2013. As in Comcast, the Plaintiffs here would only be entitled to recover damages resulting from the antitrust impact of the alleged conspiracy. Comcast, 133 S.Ct. at 1433. Once states began passing regulations imposing cage space limits on producers, it can no longer be said definitively that the 34% to 35% of price variation Dr. Rausser cannot control for using his common factors analysis, must be attributed to [*24] conspiratorial behavior. The model fails to specify, after 2008, what component of the alleged price increase is attributable to unlawful antitrust behavior as opposed to imposition of lawful state regulatory schemes. In much the same way the Supreme Court found impermissible in Comcast, the price variance Dr. Rausser attributes to the conspiracy intermingles lawful and unlawful behavior between 2008 and 2013. See id. at 1434.

For this reason, the Court finds that while the Plaintiffs have established that the Rausser Model is capable of quantifying the damages attributable to Defendants' anticompetitive behavior for 2004 through 2008, the model cannot adequately quantify damages for 2009 through 2013.

III. CONCLUSION

For the reasons outlined above, the Court finds that the Rausser Model fails to take into account the effect of state legislative schemes instituted after the lawsuit was filed which regulate animal welfare standards in the shell egg industry. Given that the Rausser Model cannot reliably show damages resulting from the alleged conspiracy on a class wide basis after December 31, 2008, the Court finds that the proper class cutoff date for the shell egg subclass is December 31, 2008.

[*25] Therefore, based upon the reasoning articulated in Class Cert I, as well as the reasoning articulated above, the Court will certify the following class of shell egg purchasers:

> All individuals and entities that purchased shell eggs produced from caged birds in the United States directly from Defendants during the Class Period from September 24, 2004 through December 31, 2008.
> Excluded from the Class are the Defendants, their co—conspirators, and their respective parents, subsidiaries, and affiliates, as well as any government entities. Also excluded from the Class are purchasers of "specialty" shell eggs (such as "organic," "certified organic," "free range," "cage free", "nutritionally enhanced," or "vegetarian fed") and purchasers of hatching eggs, which are used by poultry breeders to produce breeder stock or growing stock for laying hens or meat.

PER CURIAM.

Plaintiff Manitou North America, Inc. (Manitou NA), appeals as of right a judgment entered by the trial court, pursuant to a jury-trial verdict, awarding defendant McCormick International, LLC (McCormick), $1.3 million in damages on McCormick's counterclaim under the Michigan Farm and Utility Equipment Act (MFUEA), MCL 445.1451 et seq., and $3.85 million in damages on McCormick's counterclaim under the Michigan Antitrust Reform Act (MARA), MCL 445.771 et seq. We affirm the verdicts to the extent that they found MFUEA and MARA violations, and we affirm the damage award with respect to the MARA violation. However, we vacate and remand for remittitur proceedings in regard to the damage award relative to the MFUEA violation, as it was based on an overly speculative claim of lost profits.

This case concerned the manufacture, distribution, and sale of telescopic handlers, or telehandlers, which look like forklifts and perform similar functions, but are more versatile in that they have a telescopic boom that can be extended forward and upward. Manitou NA distributed telehandlers designed and manufactured by its parent company, [*2] Manitou BF S.A. (Manitou France), to a network of dealers throughout the United States.[1] On October 19, 2000, McCormick and Manitou NA entered into a dealer marketing agreement, making McCormick an authorized dealer of Manitou NA products, including telehandlers. Pursuant to a side agreement dated October 24, 2000, which was signed by Mr. Denis McCormick[2] and Manitou NA's regional sales manager, McCormick became an exclusive dealer of Manitou telehandlers in a territory spanning the state of Michigan, northern Indiana, and the greater Toledo, Ohio area. Mr. McCormick testified at trial consistently with this document, as did Manitou NA's regional sales manager during his deposition, which was read into the trial record. Additionally, at summary disposition, McCormick presented an affidavit by a former dealer representative for Manitou NA who averred that "it was [his] understanding that McCormick had an exclusive territory for the sale of Manitou telescopic handler and forklift products comprised of Michigan, northern-Indiana and northwest-Ohio." With respect to the October 24, 2000 exclusivity or side agreement, it provided that "McCormick must achieve at least a 2 1/2 [percent] market [*3] share by the end of the year 2001 and increase sales by at least 10 [percent] each year after that." Mr. McCormick testified that sales and any increases were to be measured in terms of revenue generated by the sale of telehandlers. He further testified to having to commit to an initial purchase of 42 telehandlers from Manitou NA at a cost of $2 million.

There was evidence that McCormick achieved a market share of five percent in 2001, doubling the 2 1/2 percent requirement, on telehandler revenue of $1.69 million (profit of $404,375 after costs). In 2002, McCormick had telehandler revenue of only $755,780 (profit of $141,968 after costs), thereby failing to increase sales by at least 10 percent from the 2001 level and instead losing sales. In 2003, McCormick had telehandler revenue of $804,724 (profit of $160,063 after costs), which, while representing a small increase from 2002, was still less than half of the telehandler revenue generated in 2001. McCormick specifically attributed the decrease in sales in 2002 and 2003, as [*4] compared to those in 2001, to Manitou NA directly providing telehandlers to Osentoski Farm Equipment, Inc., in Bad Axe, Michigan,[3] and to a 2002 agreement between Manitou France and competitor OmniQuip. Under this agreement, OmniQuip began distributing certain Manitou telehandlers, described by Mr. McCormick as his "bread and butter" models, to OmniQuip dealers in Michigan who competed against McCormick. The arrangement between Manitou France and OmniQuip ended in 2004. In 2004, McCormick rebounded and had telehandler revenue of approximately $1.6 million (profit of $303,862 after costs). Mr. McCormick testified that sales in 2004 would have been higher and would have eclipsed the 10-percent mark, the base of which was set in 2001,[4] except that OmniQuip was clearing out its inventory and selling telehandlers at reduced prices. McCormick's counterclaim under the MFUEA was based on an alleged change in competitive circumstances, absent good cause, from those circumstances that existed under the 2000 McCormick-Manitou NA agreement, which change was caused, in part, by the improper deals with OmniQuip and Osentoski.[5]

[3] There was evidence showing that McCormick had been selling telehandlers to [*5] Osentoski at a lower than normal profit margin, with Osentoski then selling the telehandlers to consumers. McCormick viewed Osentoski as a sub-dealer of telehandlers. However, Osentoski subsequently began purchasing telehandlers directly from Manitou NA for resale, cutting McCormick out of the picture.

[4] Using the $1.69 million revenue figure from 2001 as the base, a 10-percent upward progression, had it been met, would have produced $1.85 million in revenue for 2002, $2.04 million in revenue for 2003, $2.24 million in revenue for 2004, $2.47 million in revenue for 2005, and $2.72 million in revenue for 2006. Mr. McCormick's testimony supported these calculations.

[5] MCL 445.1457a(1), which is part of the MFUEA, provides, in pertinent part, that "[a] supplier shall not terminate, cancel, fail to renew, or substantially change the competitive circumstances of an agreement without good cause." Mr. McCormick testified that two or three other dealers were also apparently selling Manitou telehandlers within McCormick's exclusive territory.

In July 2004, an OEM Supply Agreement was executed by Manitou NA, Manitou France, and Gehl Company, forming a strategic alliance between Manitou and Gehl.[6] We shall discuss in [*6] detail below the substance of this agreement, which McCormick claimed violated the MFUEA by increasing telehandler competition against McCormick in its contracted-for exclusive territory via numerous Gehl dealers now being able to sell Manitou designed or manufactured telehandlers, while also preventing McCormick from purchasing and reselling Gehl telehandlers or acting as a Gehl dealer in violation of the MARA. In 2005, McCormick had telehandler revenue of nearly $2.3 million (profit of $442,328 after costs). However, Mr. McCormick testified that he still did not meet the 10-percent sales increase requirement (see footnote 4), that nearly half of its 2005 sales were permissibly made outside of McCormick's exclusive territory in response to Hurricane Katrina, and that there were actually significantly fewer telehandler sales in 2005 than in 2004 with respect to McCormick's exclusive territory, which reduction Mr. McCormick blamed on the 2004 OEM Supply Agreement.[7] And in 2006, McCormick had telehandler revenue of only $606,983 (profit of $186,050 after costs), which decrease was also attributed to the 2004 agreement. The 2004 agreement between Manitou NA, Manitou France, and Gehl served, [*7] in conjunction with the earlier OmniQuip deal and Osentoski arrangement, as additional support for McCormick's MFUEA counterclaim, and the 2004 agreement was the sole basis of McCormick's MARA counterclaim.

In early 2007, McCormick terminated the 2000 dealer agreement with Manitou NA, complaining about the negative impact of the 2004 OEM Supply Agreement on sales and the failure of support from Manitou NA in connection with telehandler parts, service, and pricing. [*8] In July 2007, Manitou NA filed suit against McCormick, seeking declaratory relief with regard to the parties' rights and obligations under the MFUEA, mainly on the question whether McCormick's inventory had to be repurchased by Manitou NA, and alleging breach of contract for nonpayment with respect to one telehandler that McCormick had acquired from Manitou NA in 2006.[8] In September 2007, McCormick filed its MFUEA counterclaim and, on leave to amend granted by the trial court, McCormick added the MARA counterclaim in September 2010.[9] The trial court entertained a slew of motions for summary disposition, denying most of them, and the case subsequently went to trial on McCormick's MFUEA and MARA counterclaims, where the jury found in favor of McCormick on both counts. Judgment on the jury verdict was later entered by the trial court on March 31, 2014. McCormick was awarded $1.3 million in damages on the MFUEA counterclaim, $3.85 million in damages on the MARA counterclaim, $175,980 in attorney fees, $73,469 in taxable costs, and $527,667 in judgment interest. The trial court denied Manitou NA's motions for new trial, judgment notwithstanding the verdict, and remittitur.

Manitou NA argues on appeal that McCormick's MARA counterclaim was time-barred, that the MARA counterclaim should have been analyzed under the rule of reason, that the MARA counterclaim failed as a matter of law given that McCormick did not adequately plead or prove an antitrust injury, that McCormick's evidence on damages should have been excluded as a discovery sanction, that the MFUEA lost-profit damages were too speculative to support the $1.3 million award, that there was no loss associated with the MARA counterclaim, and that the trial court, minimally, should have granted Manitou NA's post-trial motion for remittitur.

[6] The agreement indicated that "Manitou France is a world-leading company in the field of designing, manufacturing and marketing telescopic handlers for the construction, agricultural and industrial markets, and Manitou N.A. is its subsidiary responsible for the distribution of such products in the US market." The agreement identified Gehl as "a leading company in the field of designing, manufacturing and marketing compact equipment, including telescopic handlers, for the construction and agricultural markets[.]" Gehl had hundreds more authorized dealers in the United States than Manitou.

[7] Mr. McCormick testified that it was in the second half of 2005 that the full implementation of the 2004 agreement started impacting his business.

[8] The breach of contract [*9] claim was eventually settled by the parties, and in November 2008, the trial court granted summary disposition in favor of Manitou NA on its request for declaratory relief, concluding that Manitou NA had no obligation under the MFUEA to repurchase inventory from McCormick.

[9] McCormick went out of business in 2008, allegedly due to the unlawful conduct and actions by Manitou NA.

We shall initially address Manitou NA's arguments that the MARA counterclaim should have been analyzed under the rule of reason and that it failed as a matter of law given that McCormick did [*10] not adequately plead or prove an antitrust injury. MCL 445.772 provides, in pertinent part, that "[a] contract . . . between 2 or more persons in restraint of . . . trade or commerce in a relevant market is unlawful." A "person threatened with injury or injured directly or indirectly in his or her business . . . by a violation of [the MARA] may bring an action for . . . actual damages sustained by reason of a violation of this act, and, as determined by the court, interest on the damages from the date of the complaint, taxable costs, and reasonable attorney's fees." MCL 445.778(2). MCL 445.784(2) states that "[i]t is the intent of the legislature that in construing all sections of [the MARA], the courts shall give due deference to interpretations given by the federal courts to comparable antitrust statutes, including, without limitation, the doctrine of per se violations and the rule of reason." Comparable to § 2 of the MARA (MCL 445.772), the Sherman Act, 15 USC 1 et seq., provides, in relevant part, that "[e]very contract . . . in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 USC 1. Accordingly, we must give due deference, in construing MCL 445.772, to federal court decisions interpreting 15 USC 1.

In United States v Topco Assoc, Inc, 405 U.S. 596, 607-608; 92 S Ct 1126; 31 L Ed 2d 515 (1972), the United States [*11] Supreme Court, construing § 1 of the Sherman Act, observed:

> The history underlying the formulation of the antitrust laws led this Court to conclude . . . that Congress did not intend to prohibit all contracts, nor even all contracts that might in some insignificant degree or attenuated sense restrain trade or competition. In lieu of the narrowest possible reading of § 1, the Court adopted a "rule of reason" analysis for determining whether most business combinations or contracts violate the prohibitions of the Sherman Act. An analysis of the reasonableness of particular restraints includes consideration of the facts peculiar to the business in which the restraint is applied, the nature of the restraint and its effects, and the history of the restraint and the reasons for its adoption.
> While the Court has utilized the "rule of reason" in evaluating the legality of most restraints alleged to be violative of the Sherman Act, it has also developed the doctrine that certain business relationships are per se violations of the Act without regard to a consideration of their reasonableness. . . . .
> It is only after considerable experience with certain business relationships that courts classify them [*12] as per se violations of the Sherman Act. One of the classic examples of a per se violation of § 1 is an agreement between competitors at the same level of the market structure to allocate territories in order to minimize competition. Such concerted action is usually termed a "horizontal" restraint, in contradistinction to combinations of persons at different levels of the market structure, e.g., manufacturers and distributors, which are termed "vertical" restraints. This Court has reiterated time and time again that horizontal territorial limitations . . . are naked restraints of trade with no purpose except stifling of competition. Such limitations are per se violations of the Sherman Act. [Citations, quotation marks, and parenthetical omitted; emphasis added; final ellipsis in original.]

Here, the July 2004 OEM Supply Agreement between Manitou NA, Manitou France, and Gehl Company, as relevant to the MARA counterclaim, provided:

> Non-Solicitation. During the term of this Agreement and for a period of two years thereafter, neither party shall either solicit any then still authorized dealer that is handling products manufactured by the other party on the date of this Agreement to begin handling [*13] competing telescopic handlers manufactured by the former party or enter into any agreement under which such dealer would begin to do so; provided, however, that nothing herein shall preclude either party from entering into any such agreement with any authorized dealer that on the date of this Agreement is handling products manufactured by both of the parties. [Emphasis added.]

This contract provision clearly constituted a horizontal restraint on trade and per se violation of the MARA, entailing an agreement between manufacturers/distributors at the same level of the market structure not to compete against each other relative to certain telehandlers and particular dealers, including McCormick, which was a Manitou NA, but not a Gehl, authorized dealer, thereby reducing telehandler competition at various business sites. See United States v Coop Theatres of Ohio, Inc, 845 F2d 1367, 1373 (CA 6, 1988) ("In sum, we find that the so-called 'no-solicitation' agreement [between movie theater booking agents] . . . is undeniably a type of customer allocation scheme which courts have often condemned in the past as a per se violation of the Sherman Act.").[10] Accordingly, contrary to Manitou NA's argument, the rule of reason was not implicated in this case. However, establishment [*14] of a per se violation of the MARA does not mean that an antitrust injury was shown. In Atlantic Richfield Co v USA Petroleum Co, 495 U.S. 328, 344; 110 S Ct 1884; 109 L Ed 2d 333 (1990), the United States Supreme Court held that proof of an antitrust injury and of a per se violation are distinct matters that must be established independently. The Court elaborated:

> Conduct in violation of the antitrust laws may have three effects, often interwoven: In some respects the conduct may reduce competition, in other respects it may increase competition, and in still other respects effects may be neutral as to competition. The antitrust injury requirement ensures that a plaintiff can recover only if the loss stems from a competition-reducing aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior. The need for this showing is at least as great under the per se rule as under the rule of reason. Indeed, insofar as the per se rule permits the prohibition of efficient practices in the name of simplicity, the need for the antitrust injury requirement is underscored. Procompetitive or efficiency-enhancing aspects of practices that nominally violate the antitrust laws may cause serious harm to individuals, but this kind of harm is the essence of competition and should play no role in the definition of antitrust [*15] damages. [Id. at 343-344 (citation, quotation marks, and alteration bracket omitted).[11]]

To show an antitrust injury, a party must prove that the claimed loss flowed from an anticompetitive aspect of the contract or conspiracy, not aspects that were neutral or beneficial to competition, even if there was a per se violation of the antitrust laws. Pool Water Prod v Olin Corp, 258 F3d 1024, 1034 (CA 9, 2001). "'It is well established that the antitrust laws are only intended to preserve competition for the benefit of consumers.'" Id. (citation omitted); see also King Drug Co of Florence, Inc v Smithkline Beecham Corp, 791 F3d 388, 405 (CA 3, 2015) ("Antitrust law is designed to protect consumers from arrangements that prevent competition in the marketplace."). The antitrust laws were enacted to protect competition, not competitors. Brunswick Corp v Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc, 429 U.S. 477, 488; 97 S Ct 690; 50 L Ed 2d 701 (1977).[12]

Manitou NA contends that McCormick failed to adequately allege an antitrust injury in its amended counterclaim. We disagree. In regard to its MARA restraint-of-trade counterclaim, McCormick alleged, in pertinent part, as follows:

> 47. At the time of the Agreement [2004 OEM Supply Agreement between Manitou and Gehl], Manitou sold telescopic handlers in Michigan.
> 48 At the time of the Agreement[,] Gehl sold or was preparing to sell telescopic handlers in Michigan.
> 49. At the time of the Agreement, McCormick was an authorized dealer of Manitou equipment, including telescopic handlers.
> 50. Through . . . the Agreement, Manitou and Gehl Corporation sought to restrain one another from entering into relationships with then existing authorized dealers of the other party.
> 51. As a direct result of the Agreement, McCormick was prohibited from becoming an authorized dealer or reseller of Gehl telescopic handlers.
> WHEREFORE, McCormick requests judgment in its favor and against Manitou for all damages allowable pursuant to the [MARA] . . . .

These allegations [*17] reflected a claim by McCormick that the 2004 agreement caused it to suffer an antitrust injury, given that the non-solicitation aspect of the agreement, which constituted a per se violation of the MARA and

[10] Although Coop Theatres was a criminal case brought under the Sherman Act, the conclusion that the booking agents' "no-solicitation" agreement was a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act would be equally applicable in the context of a civil action. The MARA also contains criminal penalties for violations of § 2 of the MARA. MCL 445.779.

[11] The jury here was instructed in accordance with the antitrust-injury principles enunciated in Atlantic Richfield.

[12] Given the precedent, we reject McCormick's argument, which does not allude to any [*16] supporting authority, that the relevant consumer or marketplace pertained to telehandler dealers, not consumers purchasing telehandlers from dealers.

was thus inherently anticompetitive, precluded McCormick from purchasing Gehl telehandlers and reselling them to patrons, resulting in MARA damages. Under the 2004 agreement, consumers seeking to purchase telehandlers who visited or made inquiries through either Manitou-only or Gehl-only authorized dealers were limited in their selection because of the non-solicitation component of the agreement that effectively allocated markets/dealers. For example, consistently with the agreement, if a prospective customer seeking a certain type of telehandler that was manufactured and distributed by both Manitou and Gehl ("competing telescopic handlers") went to a Gehl-authorized dealer, who was not authorized to also sell Manitou telehandlers, the customer would not be able to purchase a Manitou telehandler at that location; this would be reflective of reduced competition. And, here, McCormick's claimed injury, at least for purposes of its MARA claim, stemmed from this competition-reducing aspect [*18] of the 2004 agreement — Gehl telehandlers could not be purchased by McCormick and then resold to McCormick's patrons; McCormick could not become a Gehl dealer. This bar to having a business relationship with Gehl directly and negatively impacted McCormick's sales and its ability to survive in the marketplace. While perhaps McCormick's MARA counterclaim could have provided some further elaboration in describing the antitrust injury, the specific allegations that were included reasonably informed Manitou NA of the nature of the claim that Manitou NA was called on to defend. MCR 2.111(B)(1).[13]

Manitou NA next contends that McCormick's MARA counterclaim should have been summarily dismissed because of a failure to submit documentary evidence sufficient to create a genuine issue of material fact relative to showing an antitrust injury. Manitou NA had argued that McCormick conceded at the summary disposition stage that the 2004 agreement injected additional competition into the marketplace. We initially take note of some relevant procedural history in this case. In September 2010, Manitou NA filed a motion for summary disposition with respect to McCormick's MARA counterclaim,[14] arguing, in part, that McCormick had failed to allege an antitrust injury, MCR 2.116(C)(8). The trial court rejected that argument and denied the motion in March 2011. In May 2011, McCormick filed a motion for partial summary disposition, arguing that the 2004 Manitou-Gehl [*20] agreement constituted a per se horizontal restraint of trade in violation of the MARA and should be recognized as such as a matter of law. In response to McCormick's motion, Manitou NA argued that McCormick had conceded in answers to interrogatories, which were attached to Manitou NA's brief, that the 2004 agreement had increased competition in the marketplace to McCormick's detriment. We shall momentarily discuss the interrogatory answers. On the same day in May 2011 that McCormick filed its motion for partial summary disposition, Manitou NA filed a new motion for summary disposition relative to McCormick's MARA counterclaim, this time arguing under MCR 2.116(C)(10) that McCormick had failed to create a genuine issue of material fact in regard to showing an antitrust injury. McCormick filed a response brief and attached documentary evidence, contending that an antitrust injury had been sufficiently shown for purposes of surviving summary disposition under MCR 2.116(C)(10). We shall address McCormick's argument and evidence below. The trial court denied both motions.[15]

With respect to the answers to interrogatories, McCormick indeed indicated, when asked to identify and describe its MARA injury, that the 2004 agreement "injected additional competition into McCormick's marketplace." However, [13] We would also point out an interesting distinction between the MARA and the Sherman Act. As indicated above, MCL 445.778(2) authorizes an action for damages when a person is "injured directly or indirectly in his or her business . . . by a violation of [the MARA]." (Emphasis added.) Section 15 of the Sherman Act authorizes an action for damages when a person is "injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws." 15 USC 15(a). The Sherman Act does not reference indirect injuries. To the extent that the anticompetition or competition-reducing aspect of the 2004 agreement, i.e., the non-solicitation provision, [*19] indirectly caused injury to McCormick, the MARA would appear to provide relief in the form of damages. However, the jury was ultimately instructed, on the basis of federal law, that McCormick had to establish a direct injury to its business. There is no issue on appeal concerning the instruction, and our analysis does not rely on an indirect antitrust injury.

[14] McCormick had also pursued a "monopoly" counterclaim under the MARA, MCL 445.773, which was eventually dismissed and never resurrected, and our discussion in this [*21] opinion regarding McCormick's MARA counterclaim pertains solely to the MARA restraint-of-trade claim alleged by McCormick and presented to the jury.

[15] During the trial, the trial court altered its decision in regard to whether the 2004 agreement constituted a per se horizontal restraint of trade in violation of the MARA, concluding that it did as a matter of law.

McCormick further stated in its answer that the 2004 agreement also "prevent[ed] McCormick from seeking competitive trade advantage in the marketplace on its own through Gehl." It is important to understand and grasp that the 2004 Manitou-Gehl agreement had language that was anticompetitive or competition-reducing in nature — the non-solicitation provision discussed above — and language that could be viewed as injecting or increasing competition in the marketplace, which served, in part, as the basis of McCormick's MFUEA counterclaim. Aside from the non-solicitation clause, the 2004 agreement also provided:

> [Each] of [*22] the parties wishes to expand the scope of the line of telescopic handlers that it can offer to its customers by purchasing from the other certain telescopic handlers that differ from those currently in its line of telescopic handlers . . . .
> [Manitou] France and Gehl have contemporaneously entered into a Manufacturing License, Technical Assistance and Supply Agreement . . . under which Gehl has acquired the right to manufacture in the U.S. two models of telescopic handler families designed by Manitou . . . for sale by Gehl under its own trade names and trademarks . . . .

The 2004 agreement called for Manitou to manufacture products and parts for sale to Gehl and for Gehl to manufacture products and parts for sale to Manitou under various parameters set forth in the agreement. The agreement also essentially required any products and parts designed or manufactured by one of the parties, but ultimately destined for distribution by the other party to its dealers, to be painted and labeled in accordance with the demands of the receiving or distributing party, subject to the requirements of federal law and regulations concerning the identification of a manufacturer, although "no more conspicuous [*23] than required." For example, a telehandler manufactured by Manitou, or a telehandler designed by Manitou but manufactured by Gehl, which was to eventually be distributed by Gehl to dealers, had to be painted yellow, which was Gehl's color, while, flipping the scenario, a telehandler to eventually be distributed by Manitou had to be painted red. These contractual provisions in the 2004 agreement effectively opened the door for at least ten Gehl dealers in McCormick's Manitou-exclusive territory to begin selling, at a substantially lower price given various incentives offered to Gehl dealers, certain Gehl-branded telehandlers that were actually designed and/or manufactured by Manitou, destroying McCormick's competitive edge and injuring its business. The theory underlying McCormick's MFUEA counterclaim was based, in part, on these competition-injecting or competition-enhancing provisions of the 2004 agreement that substantially changed the competitive circumstances enjoyed by McCormick under its 2000 dealer marketing agreement with Manitou NA; these provisions could not, however, support the MARA counterclaim. But the MARA counterclaim was based on the separate non-solicitation provision [*24] found in the 2004 agreement.[16]

In its brief opposing Manitou NA's motion for summary disposition under MCR 2.116(C)(10) relative to the MARA counterclaim and the antitrust injury issue, McCormick argued that the non-solicitation clause in the 2004 agreement prevented "retail dealers such as McCormick from entering into any agreements to sell the competing party's telescopic handlers." McCormick also maintained that it suffered a direct injury as a result of the non-solicitation clause, where McCormick was not given the opportunity to purchase and resell Gehl telehandlers. In the affidavit by the former dealer representative for Manitou NA, he averred that in or around the summer or early fall of 2005, "McCormick needed inventory of telescopic handlers and . . . attempted to purchase ten (10) such units from Gehl . . ., as the units were the same as those provided by Manitou . . . ." The former representative further averred that he had [*25] personal knowledge that Manitou NA contacted a Gehl representative "and instructed Gehl that it could not make any such sale of telescopic handler[s] . . . to McCormick[,]" and that, "[a]s a result, Gehl refused to sell the telescopic handlers to McCormick, and subsequently, McCormick had no inventory for resale to customers." An affidavit by Mr. McCormick was also submitted for purposes of summary disposition, and he averred that he "contacted Gehl in or around 2005/6 to purchase telescopic handlers for resale[,]" that it was his "understanding from Gehl that Manitou . . . had contacted [Gehl] to prevent any sale of units to [McCormick] because [he] was a Manitou dealer[,]" and that, as a result, McCormick "lost [a] 10 unit sale to a prospective customer." This evidence was sufficient to create a genuine issue of material fact regarding whether McCormick suffered an antitrust injury arising out of or stemming from the non-solicitation clause in the 2004 agreement, which clause was an anticompetitive provision and a per se violation of the MARA.[17] We note that at trial, Mr. McCormick testified that he attempted to purchase telehandlers from Gehl and to become a Gehl dealer, but he was blocked by Manitou [*26] NA in light of the 2004 agreement. When Mr. McCormick was asked what kind of effect this had on his overall business, he responded, "It destroyed it."

Manitou NA's arguments effectively confuse and blend together the two different claims raised by McCormick, one under the MARA and one under the MFUEA. Although McCormick could not compete, in part, because the 2004 agreement essentially allowed Gehl dealers in McCormick's territory to start selling Manitou designed or manufactured telehandlers that were branded as Gehl telehandlers, resulting in increased competition and lower prices in the marketplace from a consumer's perspective, this aspect of the 2004 agreement served to support the MFUEA claim. On the other hand, McCormick's inability to compete as caused by the MARA violation resulted from the non-solicitation clause in the 2004 agreement, where McCormick was prevented from purchasing and reselling Gehl telehandlers and from becoming a Gehl dealer. And the non-solicitation clause did not increase competition in the marketplace from a consumer's perspective; rather, it decreased [*28] competition, as explained earlier in this opinion, and McCormick's MARA injury stemmed from the non-solicitation clause. In sum, we reject Manitou NA's arguments that the rule of reason applied and that McCormick had failed to adequately allege and factually support an antitrust injury.

Next, with respect to whether the MARA counterclaim should have been dismissed on the basis of the four-year statute of limitations governing the action, MCL 445.781(2), which had indeed expired by the time McCormick amended its counterclaim in September 2010 to add the MARA allegations, we find it unnecessary to delve into the arguments regarding whether a discovery rule applied. We conclude that the amendment of the counterclaim to add the MARA count related back to the date of the original filing of the counterclaim, September 2007, at which time the limitations period had not elapsed relative to a MARA claim.

Although the relation-back issue was not reached by the trial court given its conclusion that the discovery rule applied to toll the limitations period, McCormick nevertheless did raise the issue at oral argument on its motion to amend the counterclaim, and Manitou NA argued in its summary disposition brief [*29] that the amended counterclaim could not relate back to the filing of the original counterclaim. We find that the issue was adequately preserved for appellate review.[18] MCR 2.118(D) provides, in pertinent part:

[17] We review de novo a trial court's ruling on a motion for summary disposition. Loweke v Ann Arbor Ceiling & Partition Co, LLC, 489 Mich 157, 162; 809 NW2d 553 (2011). With respect to the well-established principles governing the analysis of a motion for summary disposition brought pursuant to MCR 2.116(C)(10), this Court in Pioneer State Mut Ins Co v Dells, 301 Mich App 368, 377; 836 NW2d 257 (2013), stated:

> In general, MCR 2.116(C)(10) provides for summary disposition when there is no genuine issue regarding any material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment or partial judgment as a matter of law. A motion brought under MCR 2.116(C)(10) tests the factual support for a party's claim. A trial court may grant a motion for summary disposition under MCR 2.116(C)(10) if the pleadings, affidavits, and other documentary evidence, when viewed in a light most favorable to the nonmovant, show that there is no genuine issue with respect to any material fact. A genuine issue of material fact exists when the record, giving the benefit of reasonable doubt to the opposing party, leaves open an issue upon which reasonable minds might differ. The trial court is not permitted to assess credibility, weigh the evidence, or resolve factual disputes, and if material evidence [*27] conflicts, it is not appropriate to grant a motion for summary disposition under MCR 2.116(C)(10). A court may only consider substantively admissible evidence actually proffered relative to a motion for summary disposition under MCR 2.116(C)(10). [Citations and quotation marks omitted.]

[18] We also note that "this Court may overlook preservation requirements if the failure to consider the issue would result in manifest injustice, if consideration is necessary for a proper determination of the case, or if the issue involves a question of law and the facts necessary for its resolution have been presented[.]" Smith v Foerster-Bolser Constr, Inc, 269 Mich App 424, 427; 711 NW2d 421 (2006). All three of these bases support examining and resolving the relation-back issue, even had the matter been unpreserved.

> An amendment that adds a claim or defense relates back to the date of the original pleading if the claim or defense asserted in the amended pleading arose out of the conduct, transaction, or occurrence set forth, or attempted to be set forth, in the original pleading.

In Doyle v Hutzel Hosp, 241 Mich App 206, 215; 615 NW2d 759 (2000), this Court, quoting LaBar v Cooper, 376 Mich 401, 406; 137 NW2d 136 (1965), observed:

> "The amendment relates back to the date of the original pleading and, therefore, is not barred by limitations, whenever the claim or defense asserted in the amendment arose out of the conduct, transaction, or occurrence set forth or attempted to be set forth [*30] in the original pleading. It is thus beside the point that the amendment introduces new facts, a new theory, or even a different cause of action, so long as it springs from the same transactional setting as that pleaded originally. The new test satisfies the basic policy of the statute of limitations, because the transactional base of the claim must still be pleaded before the statute runs, thereby giving defendant notice within the statutory period that he must be prepared to defend against all claims for relief arising out of that transaction." [Quotation marks omitted; emphasis in LaBar.]

Here, the transaction from which McCormick's MARA counterclaim arose was the 2004 OEM Supply Agreement, which also served as the transactional setting, in part, for the MFUEA counterclaim that was filed back in September 2007. Thus, while being a different cause of action or new theory, the MARA counterclaim nevertheless sprung from the same transactional setting as that pleaded originally relative to the MFUEA counterclaim. Accordingly, the filing of the amended counterclaim adding the MARA count in September 2010 related back to the original filing of the MFUEA counterclaim in September 2007, [*31] rendering the MARA counterclaim timely under the applicable four-year statute of limitations. The MARA counterclaim was not time-barred.

We now address the various arguments posed by Manitou NA challenging the damages awarded by the jury and the trial court's rejection of its post-trial motions attacking the damage awards. Manitou NA first argues that the award of $1.3 million in damages on the MFUEA counterclaim was based on an overly speculative claim of lost profits. McCormick's theory of damages was predicated on alleged lost profits for the years 2002 through 2006, as calculated by determining the profit that annually would have been earned had McCormick increased its sales by 10 percent each year as required by the 2000 exclusivity or side agreement. Mr. McCormick testified that, but for the improper agreements or arrangements between Manitou and Osentoski, OmniQuip, Gehl, and possibly two or three other dealers, McCormick would have indeed increased its sales by 10 percent each year. The heart of Manitou NA's appellate argument is that there was no foundation for Mr. McCormick's testimony that sales would have increased by 10 percent annually. Manitou NA complains that McCormick [*32] failed to present evidence showing actual lost telehandler sales to competitors in an amount necessary to support the claim that the 10-percent mark would have been reached in the years at issue. In an associated remittitur argument, Manitou NA maintains that there was evidence that Osentoski purchased nine telehandlers directly from Manitou NA during the relevant timeframe, which would have garnered $45,000 in profits for McCormick had McCormick dealt the telehandlers to Osentoski, and that McCormick lost only two Manitou telehandler sales to OmniQuip dealers, which cost McCormick $24,000 in lost profits.[19] And Manitou NA contends, accurately so, that there was no evidence of particular lost telehandler sales to Gehl dealers. Therefore, according to Manitou NA, McCormick had, at most, $69,000 in lost-profit damages relative to the MFUEA counterclaim. Additionally, Manitou NA contends that McCormick's telehandler business was a new business and that projecting future lost profits based solely on the excellent sales figures for 2001 was entirely speculative.[20]

[19] The record, and specifically the trial testimony of Mr. McCormick and Timothy Osentoski, supports Manitou NA's contentions. There [*33] was evidence that McCormick had made $5,000 in profit per telehandler sale to Osentoski and $12,000 in profit per telehandler sale to others.

[20] Manitou NA accepts the proposition that, in certain circumstances, a business owner can testify and establish lost profits with respect to the business, but only where there is a proper foundation and an adequate sales history.

In Health Call of Detroit v Atrium Home & Health Care Servs, Inc, 268 Mich App 83, 96; 706 NW2d 843 (2005), this Court discussed damage principles:

> The general rule is that remote, contingent, and speculative damages cannot be recovered in Michigan in a tort action. A plaintiff asserting a cause of action has the burden of proving damages with reasonable certainty, and damages predicated on speculation and conjecture are not recoverable. Damages, however, are not speculative simply because they cannot be ascertained with mathematical precision. Although the result may only be an approximation, it is sufficient if a reasonable basis for computation exists. Moreover, the law will not demand that a plaintiff show a higher degree of certainty than the nature of the case permits. [L]ost profits are recoverable as damages on proper proof. . . . [W]hen the nature of a case permits only an estimation of damages or a part of the damages with certainty, [*34] it is proper to place before the jury all the facts and circumstances which have a tendency to show their probable amount. Furthermore, the certainty requirement is relaxed where damages have been established but the amount of damages remains an open question. Questions regarding what damages may be reasonably anticipated are issues better left to the trier of fact. [Citations and quotation marks omitted.]

"In order to recover prospective profits, a plaintiff must establish proof of lost profits with a reasonable degree of certainty." Joerger v Gordon Food Serv, Inc, 224 Mich App 167, 175; 568 NW2d 365 (1997). "[E]ven if lost profits are difficult to calculate and speculative to some degree, they are still allowed as an item of loss." Health Call, 268 Mich App at 104.

While Mr. McCormick testified that the reason McCormick did not hit the annual 10 percent increase in sales was the infringement upon its exclusive territory by Osentoski, OmniQuip, Gehl, and others, as permitted and authorized by Manitou under agreements or arrangements with those dealers, the only evidence specifically identifying actual "lost" sales of Manitou telehandlers by the competing dealers during the relevant timeframe revealed that Osentoski purchased nine telehandlers directly from Manitou and then sold them to customers [*35] and that OmniQuip dealers sold two Manitou telehandlers to customers.[21] And these lost sales fell woefully short of supporting the claim that McCormick would have increased its sales by 10 percent each year but for Manitou NA's unlawful conduct.[22] There was no evidence whatsoever of the number of sales made by Gehl dealers relative to Manitou designed or manufactured telehandlers, let alone evidence that McCormick lost particular customers and sales to Gehl dealers. Mr. McCormick did not testify that he had personal knowledge of specific lost sales that, if added to actual sales, would have amounted to a 10 percent increase in annual sales for the years at issue. Instead, Mr. McCormick's testimony about lost sales and the 10-percent figure was framed in generalities and was vague and anecdotal.

Absent testimony by Mr. McCormick or another witness alluding to personal knowledge of particular lost [*36] sales or the specific number of Manitou telehandler sales actually made by the competing dealers, it was paramount for McCormick to present, minimally, some type of documentary evidence showing telehandler sales transacted by Gehl and OmniQuip dealers and Osentoski sufficient to support the 10-percent-increase theory. While there was general testimony by Mr. McCormick about the sale of Manitou manufactured or designed telehandlers by competing dealers within McCormick's exclusive sales territory, there was ultimately only evidence showing, with particularity, 11 sales of Manitou telehandlers by competitors. In its appellate brief, McCormick fails to direct our attention to evidence in the record showing actual sales beyond those 11. It was wholly inadequate to rely on evidence that simply referred to sales by competitors, such as Gehl dealers, without providing details and particulars regarding, at a minimum, the number of sales. There was no foundational support for McCormick's assertion that telehandler sales would have increased by 10 percent annually but for Manitou NA's violation of the MFUEA. The $1.3 million damage award was ultimately predicated on an overabundance of conjecture [*37] and speculation and not established by a reasonable certainty. The award did not constitute permissible approximation, as there was no reasonable basis for the computation. Our ruling does not demand mathematical precision; rather, it demands the presentation of some minimal evidence on actual lost sales.

[21] On cross-examination, Mr. McCormick testified that, as to OmniQuip, he was only personally aware of two lost sales to OmniQuip dealers and that there were no McCormick business documents showing lost sales to OmniQuip dealers.

We agree with the general proposition that, given the fluctuations in revenue as viewed in correlation with the 2002 and 2004 agreements that violated the MFUEA, it is reasonable to infer that McCormick's sales were probably negatively affected by the injection of competition concerning the sale of Manitou telehandlers. However, the true or reasonably certain extent of that impact, i.e., the true or reasonably certain amount of the lost profits, could only be measured by evidence reflecting or revealing the number of actual lost sales or the number of Manitou manufactured or designed telehandlers sold by competitors in McCormick's exclusive sales territory. For example, had McCormick submitted evidence that Gehl dealers within McCormick's exclusive territory had sold 50 Manitou designed or manufactured telehandlers during the pertinent timeframe comparable to those sold by McCormick, [*38] one could reasonably surmise, when considered in conjunction with Mr. McCormick's testimony, that McCormick was deprived of revenue and profits on the sale of those 50 telehandlers. But no such evidence was presented.

McCormick argues that the $1.3 million verdict should stand because Manitou NA failed to present an expert on damages to counter McCormick's damage request and because Manitou NA engaged in only cursory cross-examination of Mr. McCormick. These arguments lack merit, as it was McCormick that had the burden of establishing lost-profit damages, not Manitou NA. Health Call, 268 Mich App at 96. McCormick also contends that Manitou NA's "complaints about the lack of specific evidence about lost sales should [be] rejected outright as sheer chutzpah." McCormick presents this argument on the basis that it had made discovery requests to Manitou NA seeking the production of reports of telehandler sales in McCormick's exclusive territory for 2001 through 2007, but Manitou NA responded that it did not possess any such documents. And the trial court denied McCormick's motion to compel production. McCormick further argues that, in a second effort, it attempted to subpoena such documents shortly before trial; however, [*39] Manitou NA again indicated that it did not possess the reports.[23] We fail to see the relevancy of McCormick's argument, especially given that McCormick never appealed the denial of the motion to compel production or challenged the response to the subpoena; McCormick does not contend that the reports actually existed. Moreover, Manitou NA was certainly not the only source or avenue relative to obtaining information regarding Manitou telehandler sales by competitors in McCormick's exclusive territory. See MCR 2.310(B)(1) and (D) (discovery document requests to nonparties). Finally, McCormick maintains that, under the 2000 exclusivity or side agreement, Manitou NA expected that McCormick would increase its sales by 10 percent each year. First, this was not an expectation, but a requirement. And regardless of whether it was an expectation or a requirement, the provision, in and of itself, certainly did not establish and was not evidence that the 10-percent threshold was actually met.

MCR 2.611(E)(1) provides:

> If the court finds that the only error in the trial is the inadequacy or excessiveness of the verdict, it may deny a motion for new trial on condition that within 14 days the nonmoving party consent in writing to the entry of judgment in an amount found by the court to be the lowest (if the verdict was inadequate) or highest (if the verdict was excessive) amount the evidence will support.

Remittitur is justified when a jury verdict is excessive, i.e., when the amount awarded is greater than the highest amount supported by the evidence. Heaton v Benton Constr Co, 286 Mich App 528, 539; 780 NW2d 618 (2009). The $1.3 million damage award on the MFUEA counterclaim was greater than the highest amount supported by the evidence, and the trial court abused its discretion in denying Manitou NA's motion for remittitur relative to the MFUEA damages. Id. at 538. At most, the evidence [*41] supported an award based on the lost profits associated with the 11 telehandler sales discussed above, $69,000. Accordingly, we vacate the $1.3 million damage award and remand for remittitur proceedings consistent with our ruling and MCR 2.611(E)(1).

[23] We note that Manitou NA did provide McCormick with information regarding the number of telehandlers that Manitou NA shipped to the state of Michigan for each of the years spanning 2000 through 2009 and the total dollar amount [*40] of those sales. McCormick, however, did not utilize this information at trial. In seeking to quash the subpoena, Manitou NA did indicate that if its computer system were mined or explored, the information on territorial sales could probably be pieced together, but there were no existing or prepared reports as characterized by McCormick in its subpoena. McCormick did not pursue the matter.

Next, Manitou NA challenges the $3.85 million award in damages with respect to the MARA counterclaim, arguing that the award bore no conceivable relationship to a MARA violation. We disagree. "[A]n antitrust plaintiff's damages should reflect the difference between its performance in a hypothetical market free of all antitrust violations and its actual performance in the market infected by the anticompetitive conduct." Nat'l Farmers' Org, Inc v Associated Milk Producers, Inc, 850 F2d 1286, 1306 (CA 8, 1989). In Brunswick Corp, 429 U.S. at 489, the United States Supreme Court stated:

> Plaintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation. It should, in short, be the type of loss that the claimed violations would be likely to cause. [Citation, quotation marks, and ellipsis omitted.]

The anticompetitive conduct here arose [*42] from the non-solicitation clause in the 2004 agreement and precluded McCormick from participating in the sale of Gehl telehandlers. The $3.85 million award was based on lost business income, which was reflected, at least to the extent of $3.82 million, on the 2008 tax return for Mr. and Mrs. McCormick. More specifically, Schedule C (Profit or Loss from Business), as attached to the return, indicated that there was business income of $1,555,700, that the cost of goods sold was $4,434,339, and that there was "other income" of $10,316. Adding together the income and subtracting the cost of goods resulted in a negative gross income of $2,868,323. Next, total business expenses amounted to $951,793, which was added to the negative gross income of $2,868,323, resulting in a business loss of $3,820,116. Mr. McCormick testified that the $1,555,700 amount represented the income generated by selling the equipment in McCormick's inventory after the bank called in the note on McCormick's line of credit that had financed the purchase of the equipment. Mr. McCormick further testified that the $4,434,339 amount represented the cost of the liquidated equipment. Mr. McCormick testified that the MARA [*43] violation absolutely destroyed the business.

The jury was instructed that "[b]usiness valuation is not an acceptable measure of damages in this case[,]" which was consistent with a pretrial decision made by the trial court in which the court ruled that McCormick would not be "permitted to introduce any evidence of damages concerning the value of its business[.]" In its order denying Manitou NA's motion for remittitur, the trial court rejected Manitou NA's argument that the $3.85 million award effectively constituted business-valuation damages. The court found that the dollar amounts in the 2008 income tax return "provided an appropriate basis for the [j]ury's verdict." We agree with this assessment; the loss from liquidation of McCormick's inventory was not the same as damages predicated on a business valuation.[24] Furthermore, we conclude, contrary to Manitou NA's appellate argument, that there was a sufficient correlation or causal connection between the MARA violation and the business loss attributable to the liquidation of McCormick's equipment. Absent the ability to engage in the telehandler marketplace through the sale of Gehl telehandlers, many of which were now being manufactured or designed by [*44] Manitou, as precluded by the non-solicitation provision in the 2004 OEM Supply Agreement, McCormick could no longer carry on business and was forced to liquidate its inventory. Mr. McCormick's testimony, along with the testimony of others, supports this conclusion. McCormick's actual performance in the market, as infected by the anticompetitive conduct, was to cease performance. And the business-loss injury was of the type that the MARA was intended to prevent and flowed from Manitou NA's unlawful acts.

Manitou NA argues that there was only evidence that Gehl would not accept McCormick's request [*45] to purchase 10 telehandlers, which was entirely insufficient to support the $3.85 million award, and which would only have supported an award of lost profits on 10 unconsummated sales. This argument misses the whole point with respect to the relevance of the rejected purchase of 10 telehandlers from Gehl. The evidence helped establish that the non-solicitation provision in the 2004 agreement was indeed going to be honored by Manitou NA and Gehl, making it futile for McCormick to attempt any more purchases of Gehl telehandlers or to become a Gehl dealer, leading McCormick to close down its shop and liquidate its inventory.

[24] Moreover, the trial court ultimately allowed the jury to consider the business loss identified in the 2008 tax return in assessing damages, and, except for a discovery-sanction argument, Manitou NA has not challenged that decision on appeal, nor does it argue that the 2008 tax return was irrelevant and thus should not have been admitted into evidence. We do agree with Manitou NA that the business loss reflected in the 2008 tax return did not represent lost profits, but, despite the mischaracterization at times by McCormick's counsel, the loss was nonetheless a proper measure of MARA damages.

Manitou NA complains that the $951,793 in business expenses listed in the 2008 tax return, which amount increased the overall business loss, had no connection to the MARA violation, as it simply pertained to ordinary expenses that would have been incurred regardless of any MARA violation. First, examination of the tax return does not necessarily support this proposition. And Mr. McCormick did testify that the total loss identified on the tax return was tied to the liquidation of the inventory. Moreover, Manitou NA's argument would not justify vacating the entire award, [*46] and Manitou NA does not argue that remittitur is necessary relative to the business expenses. Likewise, Manitou NA does not contend that remittitur is necessary on the basis that the $3.85 million award exceeded the $3.82 million amount reflected in the 2008 tax return. Instead, Manitou NA's remittitur argument is based solely on the 10 lost telehandler sales. However, as discussed earlier, this is not a valid ground to reduce the damage award, as those lost sales revealed that McCormick would not be able to sell telehandlers through Gehl under the 2004 agreement, creating a loss that went way beyond the lost profit on those 10 telehandlers.

In sum, we affirm the verdicts to the extent that they found MFUEA and MARA violations, and we affirm the damage award with respect to the MARA violation. However, we vacate and remand for remittitur proceedings under MCR 2.611(E)(1) in regard to the damage award relative to the MFUEA violation, as it was based on an overly speculative claim of lost profits.[25]

Affirmed in part, vacated and remanded in part. We do not retain jurisdiction. Neither party having fully prevailed on appeal, we decline to award taxable costs under MCR 7.219.

End of Document

[25] With respect to Manitou NA's argument that the trial court should have excluded McCormick's evidence on damages as a discovery sanction, given its last minute change in its approach to damages, including discarding [*47] the employment of its expert and his damage computations, the argument was not preserved below and we need not address it. Booth Newspapers, Inc v Univ of Mich Bd of Regents, 444 Mich 211, 234; 507 NW2d 422 (1993) ("Issues raised for the first time on appeal are not ordinarily subject to review."). Moreover, on examination of the record and contemplation of the pertinent factors, exclusion of the evidence as a discovery sanction would not have been justified. Dean v Tucker, 182 Mich App 27, 32-33; 451 NW2d 571 (1990). That said, our ruling should not be viewed as approving of McCormick's actions. Additionally, with regard to the damages related to McCormick's MFUEA claim and Manitou NA's assertion that the jury improperly awarded gross lost profits instead of net lost profits, the issue has been rendered moot in light of our ruling on the MFUEA damages. Further, this issue was also unpreserved below.

Introduction

As a general rule, leave to amend should be freely given. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a). But when an amendment would be futile, as demonstrated by repeated failure to cure deficiencies, then it is within the Court's power to dismiss a claim with prejudice. See Foman v. Davis, 371 U.S. 178, 182, 83 S. Ct. 227, 9 L. Ed. 2d 222 (1962). This is such a case. A motion to dismiss is particularly sensible in an antitrust case because the costs of discovery can be prohibitive. Rutman Wine Co. v. E. & J. Gallo Winery, 829 F.2d 729, 738 (9th Cir. 1987). Despite several opportunities to plead a plausible antitrust violation, Plaintiffs have failed to do so. A plaintiff "simply cannot turn what amounts to an employment grievance by a single doctor into a federal antitrust claim by alleging that he was excluded from the market." *Rowell v. Valleycare Health Sys., No. C 10-02816 CRB, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 113213, 2010 WL 4236797, at 4 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 21, 2010).

Background

On December 11, 2014, plaintiffs Hrayr Shahinian ("Shahinian") and Skull Base Medical Group, Inc. ("SBMG") (collectively, the "Plaintiffs") filed a complaint against the Los Robles Regional Medical Center ("LRRMC"),[1] its medical staff, its board of trustees, and three individual [*2] physicians (collectively, the "Defendants"). See Compl.

In Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint ("FAC"), they alleged four claims: (1) intentional interference with economic relations; (2) negligent interference with economic relations; (3) violation of common law right to fair procedure; and (4) unreasonable restraint of trade in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. See FAC. On October 8, 2005, the Court dismissed Plaintiffs' Sherman Act claim, finding that Plaintiffs did not plead sufficient nonconclusory facts to render their Sherman Act claim facially plausible. See Dkt. 33. The Court granted Plaintiffs leave to amend, and they duly filed a second amended complaint, alleging the same claims and adding a claim for violation of California whistleblower laws. See SAC.

On December 14, 2015, Defendants brought a motion to dismiss the SAC under Rule 12(b)(6). Dkt. 38. Defendants argue that Plaintiffs fail to state a claim under federal antitrust law for a host of reasons and also request that the Court dismisses Plaintiffs' state law claims See id.

For the reasons stated below, the Court grants the motion to dismiss with respect to Plaintiffs' Sherman Act claim and dismisses Plaintiffs' state law claims [*3] pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c)(3).

Legal Standard

A motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) challenges the legal sufficiency of the claims stated in the complaint. See Fed. R. Civ. Proc. 12(b)(6). To survive a motion to dismiss, the plaintiff's complaint "must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (quoting Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678. A complaint that offers mere "labels and conclusions" or "a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Id.; see also Moss v. U.S. Secret Service, 572 F.3d 962, 969 (9th Cir. 2009) (citing Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678).

In reviewing a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, a court "must accept as true all factual allegations in the complaint and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the nonmoving party." Retail Prop. Trust v. United Bhd. of Carpenters & Joiners of Am., 768 F.3d 938, 945 (9th Cir. 2014). Thus, "[w]hile legal conclusions can provide the complaint's framework, they must be supported by factual allegations. When there are well-pleaded factual allegations, a court should assume their veracity and then determine whether they plausibly give rise to an entitlement to relief." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 679.

Where a complaint is dismissed, "leave to amend should be granted 'unless the court determines [*4] that the allegation of other facts consistent with the challenged pleading could not possibly cure the deficiency.'" DeSoto v. Yellow Freight Sys., Inc., 957 F.2d 655, 658 (9th Cir. 1992) (quoting Schreiber Distrib. Co. v. Serv-Well Furniture Co., 806 F.2d 1393, 1401 (9th Cir. 1986)). "In the absence of any apparent or declared reason—such as undue delay, bad faith or dilatory motive on the part of the movant, repeated failure to cure deficiencies by amendments previously allowed, undue prejudice to the opposing party by virtue of allowance of the amendment, futility of amendment, etc.—the leave sought should, as the rules require, be 'freely given.'" Foman v. Davis, 371 U.S. 178, 182, 83 S. Ct. 227, 9 L. Ed. 2d 222 (1962); see also Sharkey v. O'Neal, 778 F.3d 767, 774 (9th Cir. 2015) (abuse of discretion to not apply Foman factors).

A district court's supplemental jurisdiction over state law claims is governed by 28 U.S.C. § 1367. Turner v. Hawaii First Inc., 903 F. Supp. 2d 1037, 1048 (D. Haw. 2012). Supplemental jurisdiction exists when there is a claim conferring federal jurisdiction and the state claims form part of the same case or controversy. See § 1367(a). The ultimate lack of merit of the federal claim does not preclude a federal district court from hearing supplemental claims Brady v. Brown, 51 F.3d 810, 816 (9th Cir. 1995). When a court dismisses federal claims for failure to state a claim, it retains subject-matter jurisdiction and discretion to exercise supplemental jurisdiction. Arbaugh v. Y&H Corp., 546 U.S. 500, 514, 126 S. Ct. 1235, 163 L. Ed. 2d 1097 (2006).

But under § 1367(c)(3) a district court may decline supplemental jurisdiction when it "has dismissed all claims over [*5] which it has original jurisdiction." § 1367(c)(3). And the court should usually decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction when all the federal claims are dismissed before trial. Gini v. Las Vegas Metro. Police Dep't, 40 F.3d 1041, 1046 (9th Cir. 1994). "To decline jurisdiction under § 1367(c)(3), the district court must first identify the dismissal that triggers the exercise of discretion and then explain how declining jurisdiction serves the objectives of economy, convenience and fairness to the parties, and comity." Trs. of Constr. Indus. & Laborers Health & Welfare Trust v. Desert Valley Landscape & Maint., Inc., 333 F.3d 923, 925, 64 Fed. Appx. 60 (9th Cir. 2003). If the court determines that it should not retain supplemental jurisdiction, the court should dismiss the state claims without prejudice. Gini, 40 F.3d at 1046.

Statement of Facts

Dr. Shahinian

The allegations in the SAC largely mirror those in the FAC. Dr. Shahinian is a licensed physician, experienced in advanced methods of endoscopic skull base surgery.[2] See SAC ¶¶ 1, 11-20. He has pioneered new techniques in treating skull base disorders, is nationally and internationally recognized as one of the first surgeons in the world to use endoscopic skull base surgery, and founded SBMG. Id. ¶¶ 11, 16.

In 1996, Cedars-Sinai Medical Center recruited Shahinian to establish and head its Division of Skull Base Surgery and to direct its Skull Base Institute. Id. ¶ 17. After he relocated to California, [*6] he also helped to establish the Skull Base Institute, one of the country's largest practices specializing in minimally-invasive endoscopic skull base and brain tumor surgery. Id.

Shahinian Recruited to the Division of Skull Base Surgery

In around 2008, Shahinian started practicing skull base surgery exclusively at Thousand Oaks Surgical Hospital. Id. ¶ 21. In around 2012, LRRMC purchased Thousand Oaks Surgical Hospital and insisted that Shahinian transfer his practice and his entire team to the Los Robles Hospital main campus. Id. LRRMC recruited Shahinian to head the Division of Skull Base Surgery, within its Department of Surgery (the "Division"). Id. Under his agreement with LRRMC, Shahinian would also assist with the design, development, and promotion of a surgical program for treating skull base disorders. Id.

Defendants failed to implement proper cleaning and sterilization protocols for the LRRMC staff. Id. ¶ 26. From late May of 2013 to June 27, 2014, Shahinian performed skull base surgery exclusively at LRRMC. Id. ¶ 22. While Shahinian was performing surgeries at LRRMC, the LRRMC staff was responsible for sterilizing his instruments and maintaining a clean environment. Id. ¶ 26. [*7] The risk of infection to patients increases significantly if surgery and recovery take place in unsterile environment. Id. ¶ 24. And cleanliness is of particular importance in brain surgery. Id. Nonetheless, Defendants did not take the proper precautions to prevent patient infections. Id. ¶ 26.

[2] Skull base surgery, with its minimally invasive and endoscopic approaches, typically results in a third to a quarter of the complication rates of traditional neurosurgery. SAC ¶ 23.

Surgical Site Infections Increase Due to Inadequate Cleaning and Sterilization

Starting in 2013, Shahinian began to notice an unusual increase in surgical site infections ("SSI") in his patients. Id. ¶ 27. The historical average for SSI was approximately 1%. Id. The SSI rates reached their highest levels in January 2014, with six SSIs from twelve surgeries. Id. This corresponded with LRRMC's decision to dramatically cut back on the hours of its housekeeping staff. Id. Because Shahinian did not experience similar rates of SSI at Thousand Oaks Surgical Hospital, and because the processes, procedures, protocols, equipment and instruments that he and his personal staff utilized at LRRMC were identical to those used at Thousand Oaks Surgical Hospital, Shahinian suspected that the cause of the increase in SSI was a failure of the LRRMC staff to properly and adequately clean and sterilize the pre-surgical, [*8] surgical and post-surgical environments, including instruments, equipment, operating rooms and intensive care unit rooms. Id.

Defendants Refuse to Implement Proper Cleaning and Sterilization Protocols

Once Shahinian became aware of the increased rate of SSIs, he repeatedly voiced his concerns to the staff and leadership at LRRMC that cleaning and sterilization were inadequate. Id. ¶ 28. He offered on several occasions to have his own staff take over the responsibility of cleaning and sterilizing the pre-surgical, surgical, and post-surgical environments from the LRRMC staff. Id. His complaints and offers were ignored or met with hostility. Id. In particular, after confronting the chief executive officer for LRRMC on multiple occasions, she became irate. Id. Finally, after weeks of pressure, LRRMC purported to conduct a "root cause analysis" that was supposedly aimed at determining the cause of the increase in SSI. Id. ¶ 29. He was told by the LRRMC staff that the results of the "root cause analysis" were somehow inconclusive. Id. He did not accept this answer and continued to urge the LRRMC staff and leadership to recognize that the underlying cause of the SSI was a failure to provide [*9] clean and sterile pre-surgical, surgical, and post-surgical environments. Id.

Inadequate Cleaning and Sterilization Caused SSI Rate Increase

In late January 2014, Shahinian convinced LRRMC to permit him to create a protocol for his own team, as well as the LRRMC staff, to clean and sterilize the pre-surgical, surgical and post-surgical environments. Id. ¶ 30. His rigorous cleaning and sterilization protocols were implemented in February 2014. Id. From early February to late June 2014, the rate of SSI was dramatically reduced. Id. ¶ 31. This demonstrated that the SSI rate could be brought to within an acceptable range if LRRMC followed Shahinian's cleaning and sterilization protocols. Id. Shahinian reported the cessation of the SSI issue to the LRRMC staff and leadership in May and June 2014 and told them that it was clear that the problem had been the dirty pre-surgical, surgical, and post-surgical environments. Id. ¶ 32.

Retaliation

LRRMC terminated the Division in June 2014. Shahinian was never advised of any concerns about the Division aside from the SSI rates for his patients. Id. ¶ 33. But in the middle of June 2014, Shahinian was notified for the first time that the LRRMC staff was [*10] recommending that the Division be closed and that the Board of Trustees ("BOT") would soon be holding a special meeting to vote to close the Division based on this recommendation. Id. ¶ 34. He was not present at the time the LRRMC staff reached its recommendation, nor was he at all notified about or involved with that decision. Id. He was also not provided with any information about the basis for the Staff's supposed recommendation. Id. Shahinian was not invited to participate in the BOT meeting and insisted that he be permitted to address the BOT. Id. Shahinian drafted a short letter to the BOT which he read at the meeting and left for their further review. In the letter Shahinian tried to address what he thought was the purported basis for the LRRMC staff's recommendation to close the Division — i.e. the temporary increase in SSI rates in his patients. Id. ¶ 35.

Nonetheless, on or around June 27, 2014, Shahinian received a letter from the CEO of LRRMC informing him that the Division was being closed immediately, which would result in the termination of his skull base surgical privileges. Id. ¶ 36. Subsequently, the Division was in-fact closed and Shahinian's skull base surgical privileges [*11] revoked. Id. Defendants have not restored Shahinian's member and clinical privileges. Id.

Injury to Shahinian's Patients

The termination of the Division has been an extremely difficult experience for Shahinian, his patients, and his staff. Id. ¶ 37. At the time the Division was closed he had a pipeline of approximately ninety-two patients that required surgical intervention. Id. Some of them travelled all the way to California only to be told that the Division had been abruptly shut down and others were reluctantly referred to other institutions where much more invasive and less effective approaches were being practiced. Id. His staff's compensation at the Skull Base Institute had to be substantially reduced due to the Division's termination and, as a result, several of them quit and found jobs elsewhere. Id.

Exclusion from the Market for Skull Base Surgery

After the closure of the Division, Shahinian applied for privileges at over thirty other medical institutions. Id. ¶ 38. Because of the closure of the Division, all of his applications were declined. Id. In fact, even hospitals where Shahinian had maintained privileges for almost a decade, declined to allow him to continue to practice. [*12] Id. Meanwhile, LRRMC negotiated with two separate neurosurgical practices to provide services at LRRMC, including one which also performed minimally invasive skull surgeries. Id.

Discussion

Antitrust Standing

A party wishing to bring a private antitrust action must establish antitrust standing. American Ad Mgmt., Inc. v. Gen. Tel. Co. of Cal., 190 F.3d 1051, 1054 & n.3 (9th Cir. 1999). Section 1 of the Sherman Act does not provide a private right of action, see 15 U.S.C. § 1, so private parties wishing to bring a claim under the Sherman Act must do so pursuant to the authorization in section 4 of the Clayton Act. Under § 4, "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor . . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 15(a). Read literally, this would provide an expansive private right of action but courts have limited the scope of § 4 through the doctrine of antitrust standing. See Amarel v. Connell, 102 F.3d 1494, 1507 (9th Cir. 1997). Thus, courts balance at least five factors to determine whether a plaintiff has antitrust standing:

> (1) the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury; that is, whether it was the type the antitrust laws were intended to forestall;
> (2) the directness of the injury;
> (3) the speculative measure of the harm;
> (4) the risk of duplicative recovery; and

American Ad, 190 F.3d at 1054. Generally, [*13] "[n]o single factor is decisive." R.C. Dick Geothermal Corp. v. Thermogenics, Inc., 890 F.2d 139, 146 (9th Cir. 1989) (en Banc). But a plaintiff must make a showing of antitrust injury to establish standing. Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 110 n.5, 107 S. Ct. 484, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986).

A plaintiff must adequately allege antitrust injury to have antitrust standing. See, e.g., American Ad, 190 F.3d at 1055. "Plaintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977). The Ninth Circuit holds that a plaintiff must plead sufficient facts to establish five elements of an antitrust injury:

(1) unlawful conduct;
(2) causing an injury to the plaintiff;
(3) that flows from that which makes the conduct unlawful;

(4) that is of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent; and

See Somers v. Apple, Inc., 729 F.3d 953, 963 (9th Cir. 2013).

Section 1 of the Sherman Act

Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides in part that "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. "Thus, to establish a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, the plaintiff must show 1) that there was a contract, combination, or conspiracy; 2) that the [*14] agreement unreasonably restrained trade under either a per se rule of illegality or a rule of reason analysis; and 3) that the restraint affected interstate commerce." Bhan v. NME Hosps., Inc., 929 F.2d 1404, 1410 (9th Cir. 1991).

Plaintiffs' Antitrust Theory

Plaintiffs allege that Defendants contracted, combined and conspired with one another and others to terminate the Division and withdraw Shahinian's privileges. SAC ¶ 62. Defendants purportedly took this action to exclude Shahinian from the market for "minimally invasive endoscopic skull base surgery" by "effectively preventing" Shahinian from offering his services in Los Angeles and across "several states." Id. ¶ 63. These actions have harmed Shahinian personally and "[m]ore importantly, Defendants have deprived the public of free and open competition for minimally invasive, endoscopic skull base surgery services." Id. ¶ 64. Plaintiffs argue that Shahinian was such a significant participant in the market that his exclusion necessarily inflicted harm to competition in the market. Id. ¶ 65. Shahinian's ability to practice has been harmed because his ability to practice in Los Angeles has been "restricted" by Defendants. Id. ¶ 66. After LRRMC terminated his privileges, other medical institutions "followed [*15] LRRMC's example" and refused to grant or renew his privileges after the closure of the Division. Id. ¶ 38.

Analysis

Plaintiffs fail to allege a plausible antitrust theory. As Defendants argue, Plaintiffs lack antitrust standing because they have not sufficiently pled an antitrust injury. It is axiomatic that the Sherman Act protects competition, not competitors. See Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962). Plaintiffs attempt to argue around this difficulty with the conclusory finding that Shahinian was a "major participant" in the relevant market. But if the purported antitrust injury is the loss of Shahinian's privileges, Plaintiffs must also be able to allege why that loss was significant to the competition within that market.

Indeed, "a section one claimant may not merely recite the bare legal conclusion that competition has been restrained unreasonably." Les Shockley Racing, Inc. v. Nat'l Hot Rod Ass'n, 884 F.2d 504, 508 (9th Cir. 1989). In order to sufficiently allege antitrust injury a plaintiff must "sketch the outline of the antitrust violation with allegations of supporting factual detail." Id. Thus, typically a plaintiff must offer "proof of the relevant geographic and product markets and demonstration of the restraint's anticompetitive effects within those markets." Id. A plaintiff may avoid market [*16] analysis where the plaintiff offers "proof of actual detrimental competitive effects such as output decreases or price increases." Id.; see also Perry v. Rado, 504 F. Supp. 2d 1043, 1047 (E.D. Wash. 2007) aff'd, 343 F. App'x 240 (9th Cir. 2009) ("In the absence of a showing that the market as a whole has been affected, the fact one competitor must practice elsewhere is not an antitrust injury.").

Plaintiffs cannot plead cognizable market harm.[3] Plaintiffs allege that relevant market is the market for "minimally invasive endoscopic skull base surgery." The geographic scope of the market is ill defined, but Plaintiffs allege that over ninety percent of Shahinian's patients do not reside in California, much less the Los Angeles area. See SAC ¶ 62. In fact Plaintiffs suggest that the market may actually be global in scale.[4] See id. ¶¶ 63. As in Perry, "Plaintiffs offer no particular factual allegations that other [skull base surgeons], besides [Dr Shahinian], have been excluded from the relevant market; that patients in the relevant market are unable to find alternatives to the Defendants for [skull base surgery] needs; that Plaintiffs are incapable of competing in the relevant market; or that there has been an anticompetitive increase in the price of [skull base surgery] services [*17] in the relevant market " 504 F. Supp. 2d at 1049. Further, Plaintiffs do not allege that patients were unable to obtain surgical intervention or that the price of surgery increased. See SAC ¶ 37. Even accepting that some patients chose "more invasive and less effective" alternatives in the immediate aftermath of the closure of the Division, there is simply no allegation of competitive harm to the "minimally invasive endoscopic skull base surgery" market.

Further, Plaintiffs do not allege that Shahinian was unable to perform skull base procedures at another facility in the region or that he is not currently performing skull base surgery at another facility.[5] The fact that some other institutions "followed LRRMC's example" is too attenuated from Defendants' alleged conspiracy to be attributable to their conduct. See, e.g., In re WellPoint, Inc. Out-of-Network UCR Rates Litig., 903 F. Supp. 2d 880, 904 (C.D. Cal. 2012) ("Injuries that are derivative from the alleged conduct or where causation is highly speculative are not an appropriate basis for an antitrust claim."). Thus, Shahinian cannot state an antitrust injury on the basis of his inability to perform endoscopic skull base surgeries at LRRMC.[6] See *Rowell, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 113213, 2010 WL 4236797, at 4. Accordingly, the Court finds that Plaintiffs lack antitrust standing.

Even if Plaintiffs [*18] had antitrust standing, they fail to plausibly allege a conspiracy to exclude Plaintiffs from the market. A plaintiff's § 1 complaint must "answer the basic questions: who, did what, to whom (or with whom), where, and when?" Kendall v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 518 F.3d 1042, 1048 (9th Cir. 2008). This is because a naked assertion of conspiracy "gets the complaint close to stating a claim, but without some further factual enhancement it stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility . . . ." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557. The SAC does not identify which of the Defendants allegedly contracted, combined, or conspired to exclude Plaintiffs from the relevant market. At most, Plaintiffs offer in their opposition that lain agreement to conspire was reached among and between the Defendants, [3] While the Court assumes that Plaintiffs can prove the facts that they have alleged, it does not assume that Plaintiffs can prove facts or theories that they have not alleged. See Jack Russell Terrier Network of N. Ca. v. Am. Kennel Club, Inc., 407 F.3d 1027, 1035 (9th Cir. 2005).

[4] Plaintiffs make no effort to define the relevant market with the specificity required even at this stage of litigation. See Tanaka v. Univ. of S. California, 252 F.3d 1059, 1063 (9th Cir. 2001).

[5] Plaintiffs alleged that many medical institutions have denied Shahinian's applications for privileges since the closure of the Division and some institutions where he previously held privileges have also revoked his privileges. Shahinian has not alleged that he holds no privileges in the Los Angeles area, much less in the surrounding states or elsewhere within the geographical scope of the relevant market.

[6] Plaintiffs have not alleged facts that demonstrate Defendants are a participant in the same market. Plaintiffs have only alleged that Defendants were negotiating with two neurosurgical practices to provide services at LRRMC, and one of those potential partnerships was with a group that performed "minimally invasive skull surgeries." SAC ¶¶ 38, 66. Even assuming that if Defendants eventually contracted with these providers to provide a service within the relevant market, Plaintiffs do not allege that Defendants actually retained either of these practices. See generally SAC. Thus it is far from clear that LRRMC was actually in the relevant market.

roughly sometime between 2008 and 2014, under which they would exclude Plaintiffs from this market in order to reduce or eliminate competition when they entered the skull base market on their own." Dkt. 41, 6. This showing does not offer the "factual enhancement" necessary to push an allegation from possible to plausible. See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557.

Finally, Plaintiffs have not alleged that any of the Defendants have the divergent interests necessary to have the capacity to conspire under the Sherman Act. Whether [*19] different defendants are separate entities within under § 1 of the Sherman Act depends on "whether the entities alleged to have conspired maintain an 'economic unity,' and whether the entities were either actual or potential competitors." Jack Russell Terrier Network, 407 F.3d at 1034. Plaintiffs assert that whether Defendants have the capacity to conspire together "could perhaps be interesting in a summary judgment setting." Dkt. 41, 6. But this misconstrues their burden. The Court need not accept Plaintiffs' legal conclusion simply because it must accept their factual assertions. Here, Plaintiffs plead no facts that are probative of an independent economic incentive. E.g. Oltz v. St. Peter's Cmty. Hosp., 861 F.2d 1440, 1450 (9th Cir. 1988) (finding that "anesthesiologists were independent contractors pursuing their personal economic interests"). Because nothing in Plaintiffs' SAC supports the conclusion that any of the Defendants acted with an independent economic incentive, Plaintiffs "have articulated a claim that only involves activity occurring within a single enterprise" and does not state a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act.[7] Jack Russell Terrier Network, 407 F.3d at 1036.

Having found that Plaintiff cannot plead a plausible antitrust claim, despite multiple opportunities to do so, the Court also finds [*20] that retaining supplemental jurisdiction is not appropriate. The state law claims in this case require significantly different legal and factual determinations than were implicated by Plaintiffs' Sherman Act claim. Given that a state court would be more familiar with Plaintiffs' state law claims and the early stage in the proceedings, the Court finds that these matters are better suited to state court.

Order

For the aforementioned reasons, the Court GRANTS Defendants' motion to dismiss [38] with respect to Plaintiffs' Sherman Act claim WITH PREJUDICE.

Plaintiffs' state law claims are dismissed WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

Defendants' special motion to strike [40] is DENIED AS MOOT.[8]

The hearing scheduled to take place on February 9, 2016 is VACATED and OFF-CALENDAR.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

[7] The Court also finds that Plaintiffs' § 1 theory does not make economic sense. *See, e.g., Universal Grading Serv. v. eBay, Inc., No. C-09-2755 RMW, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2325, 2012 WL 70644, at 5 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 9, 2012). Plaintiffs' theory appears to revolve around LRRMC's parent company's ability to implement identical programs across their facilities in twenty states. See SAC ¶¶ 66; Dkt. 41, 6. Plaintiffs offer no rationale as to why "restricting" Shahinian's ability to practice at LRRMC would plausibly allow Defendants to increase profits in a manner that they could not have done with Shahinian in place at LRRMC. If Defendants had designs to create copycat Divisions in other locations throughout the United States, it would have been far easier for Defendants to retain Shahinian at LRRMC. At LRRMC, Defendants could have used Shahinian's expertise in this rapidly developing technique. Instead, by suspending his privileges and dissolving the Division, it appears more likely that Defendants created a potential competitor.

[8] It is appropriate to dismiss a pending anti-SLAPP motion as moot when a court dismisses state law claims under § 1367(c). *See, e.g., Sikhs for Justice "SFJ", Inc. v. Facebook, Inc., 144 F. Supp. 3d 1088, 2015 WL 7075696, at 7 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 13, 2015); *Gingery v. City of Glendale, No. CV 14-1291 PA (AJWX), 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 107598, 2014 WL 10987395, at *6 (C.D. Cal. Opinion

[*230] MEMORANDUM AND ORDER ON MOTION TO DISMISS

SAYLOR, J.

This is a qui tam action alleging the submission of false claims to government [2] health-care programs for a defective hip-replacement device. Relators Dr. Antoni Nargol and Dr. David Langton, who are expert witnesses in a related products-liability case involving the same device, have brought suit against defendants DePuy Orthopaedics, Inc., DePuy, Inc., and Johnson & Johnson Services, Inc.[1] DePuy manufactured and sold, among other hip-replacement devices, the Pinnacle metal-on-metal total hip-replacement device ("Pinnacle MoM"). The second amended complaint alleges that DePuy directly submitted and indirectly caused third parties to submit false claims for payments to government health-care programs for the Pinnacle MoM. According to the second amended complaint, the claims were false because DePuy made numerous misrepresentations to the FDA and surgeons concerning, among other things, the Pinnacle MoM's failure rates.

The relators filed the original complaint in this action under seal on May 18, 2012. On December 2, 2013, the relators filed a first amended complaint. The government declined to intervene on July 29, 2014. On June 5, 2015, the Court granted the relators' [*231] request to file a second [3] amended complaint ("SAC"). Although the 168-page SAC alleges that DePuy made numerous misrepresentations about two of their devices——the ASR device and the Pinnacle MoM device——the specific counts in the SAC seek damages only as to the latter device. The SAC alleges claims of (1) causing false or fraudulent claims for payment to be presented to the United States in violation of 31 U.S.C. § 3729(a)(1)(A) (Count One); (2) knowingly making, using, or causing to be made or used false records or statements material to a false or fraudulent claim paid by the United States in violation of 31 U.S.C. § 3729(a)(1)(B) (Count Two); (3) conspiracy to violate the FCA in violation of 31 U.S.C. § 3729(a)(1)(C) (Count Three); and (4) violations of various state and municipal analogues to the Federal FCA (Counts Four through Thirty-Seven).

DePuy has moved to dismiss the SAC under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted and under Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) for failure to satisfy the heightened pleading requirements for fraud. The relators have since moved to unseal the SAC, and DePuy has assented to that motion while requesting that documents concerning the motion to dismiss also be unsealed. Finally, while they have not formally filed a motion to amend the SAC, the relators contend [4] in the conclusion of their opposition memorandum, sur-reply, and a post-hearing supplemental filing that they should be granted leave to amend and file a third amended complaint.

The essence of a False Claims Act violation is making, or causing the making, of one or more false claims—that is, claims for payment—against the United States. The statute provides large awards to qui tam relators as an incentive to bring such cases. The prospect of such an award may also, however, provide an incentive for individuals to try to convert virtually any set of allegations arising out of a defective product or faulty service into an FCA case. That is particularly true in the medical field, where the government purchases medical supplies and services on a large scale through Medicare, Medicaid, the VA, and other health-care programs. Normally, it requires no great leap of logic to conclude that if a medical device or a pharmaceutical is defective, the government must have purchased that product in great quantities, and therefore the manufacturer must have caused, directly or indirectly, the submission of false claims.

In order to avoid so-called "parasitic" claims, and to try to guard against misuse [5] of the FCA, the First Circuit has construed the statute fairly strictly. In doing so, the court has emphasized that the statute "attaches liability, not to the underlying fraudulent activity or to the government's wrongful payment, but to the claim for payment." United States v. Rivera, 55 F.3d 703, 709 (1st Cir. 1995). Among other things, FCA complaints must satisfy the particularity requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). The law requires relatively specific allegations of false claims, rather than generalized allegations based on supposition and logic; the relator must set forth with particularity the "who, what, when, where, and how" of actual claims that are alleged to be false. United States ex rel. Ge v. Takeda Pharm. Co., 737 F.3d 116, 123 (1st Cir. 2013).

Here, the SAC includes hundreds of paragraphs of allegations, covering dozens of pages, of claimed fraudulent activity by DePuy. That satisfies one of the components of an FCA claim, but it does not satisfy them all. As set forth below, the allegations as to specific claims for payment for the specific device actually at issue in this case are sparse indeed. For [*232] that reason, and the other reasons set forth below, DePuy's motion to dismiss will be granted.

The relators' request for leave to amend the SAC and file a third amended complaint will be denied. The present case is nearly [6] four years old, has had three iterations of the complaint, and has seen the desks of three judges in this district. The relators have had ample opportunity to file a complaint that complies with the requirements of Rule 9(b), and have failed to do so. Finally, the parties' motions to unseal the SAC and other filings related to the motion to dismiss will be granted.

I. Background

The facts summarized below are set forth in the SAC unless otherwise noted.

A. Factual Background

1. The Parties

Relator Dr. Antoni Nargol is an orthopedic surgeon residing in the United Kingdom. (SAC ¶ 63). In 2003 he became one of the earliest British adopters of the Pinnacle MoM device, and DePuy invited him to be on its "Pinnacle user group team." (SAC ¶ 66). Dr. Nargol served as a testifying expert for the plaintiffs in Strum v. DePuy Orthopaedics, Inc. and Premier Orthopaedic Sales, Inc., No. 2011 L 009352 2404 (Cook Cty., Ill., Cir. Ct.) ("Strum litigation"). (SAC ¶ 68). Dr. Nargol also provided expert assistance to the plaintiffs' executive committee in Kransky v. DePuy, Inc., No. BC 456086 (Cal. Sup. Ct.), in which the plaintiffs' allegations focused on perceived design defects in the "ASR," a device that is similar [7] to the one at issue in this case, the Pinnacle MoM. (SAC ¶ 68). Dr. Nargol also served as a fact witness in Herlihy-Paoli v. DePuy Orthopaedics, Inc., No. 3:11-CV-04975-K (N.D. Tex.) ("Herlihy-Paoli litigation"). (SAC ¶ 68).

Relator Dr. David Langton is an orthopedic surgeon residing in the United Kingdom. (SAC ¶ 69). Dr. Langton has performed research on failed hip-replacement surgeries and devices, including the Pinnacle MoM device. (SAC ¶ 70). The United States Food and Drug Administration ("FDA") has retained Dr. Langton as a consultant regarding "failure rates and dimensions of MoM products sold in the United States, including the Pinnacle." (SAC ¶ 72). Dr. Langton served as an expert witness in the Strum litigation and as a fact witness in the Herlihy-Paoli litigation. (SAC ¶ 72). According to the SAC, both the relators had personal experience in implanting the Pinnacle MoM device in their patients and began to alert defendants of the device's defects in 2009. (SAC ¶ 24).

Defendant DePuy Orthopaedics, Inc. is a designer, manufacturer, and distributor of orthopedic products that is based in Warsaw, Indiana. (SAC ¶ 73). DePuy Orthopaedics manufactured the Pinnacle MoM device. (SAC [8] ¶ 73). DePuy Orthopaedics is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Delaware-based DePuy, Inc., which in turn is a subsidiary of New Jersey-based Johnson & Johnson Services, Inc. (SAC ¶¶ 75-77).

2. Government Health-Care Programs

Medicare is a health-insurance program administered by the United States Department of Health and Human Services ("HHS"). (SAC ¶ 85). Medicare provides payment for, among other things, medical services and equipment to persons over 65 years of age and those who are 18 years of age or older and are eligible for disability benefits. (SAC ¶ 82). For inpatient treatment, Medicare reimburses hospitals and other treating facilities through Medicare Part A. (SAC ¶ 83). For outpatient treatment, Medicare reimburses physicians and health-care providers through Medicare Part B. (SAC ¶ 83).

[*233] Under the Medicare program, "no payment may be made under Part A or Part B for any expenses incurred for items or services which . . . are not reasonable and necessary for the diagnosis or treatment of illness or injury or to improve the functioning of the malformed body member." (SAC ¶ 84) (citing 42 U.S.C. § 1395y(a)(1)(A)). To satisfy that standard, providers must provide, among other things, economical medical services, [9] along with evidence that the service will be of a quality that meets professionally recognized standards of healthcare and will be supported by evidence of medical necessity and quality. (SAC ¶ 84) (citing 42 U.S.C. § 1320c-5(a)(1-3)). The SAC alleges that Medicare reimbursed qualified individuals for the purchase of the Pinnacle MoM device and the surgical procedures necessary to implant the device. (SAC ¶ 99).

Medicaid is a health-insurance program administered by HHS jointly with agencies in each state. (SAC ¶ 100). It is designed to assist states in providing medical services, medical equipment, and prescription drugs for low-income persons who qualify for the program. (SAC ¶ 100). The SAC alleges that Medicaid, like Medicare, reimbursed qualified individuals for the purchases of the Pinnacle MoM device and the surgical procedures necessary to implant the device. (SAC ¶ 104).

The United States Department of Veterans Affairs ("VA") provides medical assistance, including comprehensive coverage for hip replacement, to military veterans. (SAC ¶ 105). The SAC alleges that DePuy "sold its Pinnacle hip implants directly to the VA." (SAC ¶ 106). The National Contract Service ("NCS)" provides the VA with acquisition [10] support for medical equipment and pharmaceuticals. (SAC ¶ 112). According to the SAC, "NCS is also responsible for national committed-use contracts and standardized blanket purchase agreements established against the Federal Supply Schedule Program." (SAC ¶ 112). Medical equipment and supplies contracts are governed by the Federal Supply Schedule Group 65 Part II Section A. (SAC ¶ 115). That contract states that a "[c]ontractor warrants and implies that the items delivered hereunder are merchantable and fit for use of the particular purpose described in this contract," and that "[a]ll offerors must be in compliance with Section 510(k) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act for those medical device products intended to be delivered to the Government." (SAC ¶¶ 116-17).[2] The 65 II A contract also requires the contractor to notify the Assistant Director of the National Acquisition Center and various other officials if it sells a VA facility a product that "(1) requires modification, (2) is removed or recalled by the contractor or manufacturer due to defects in the product or potential dangers to patients, or (3) is subject to a suggested or mandatory modification, removal, or recall by a regulatory or official agency." [11] (SAC ¶ 120).

The Civilian Health and Medical Program of the United States, now known as TRICARE, provides benefits for health-care services furnished to members of the U.S. military and their family members. (SAC ¶ 124). TRICARE pays for medical devices and surgeries for its beneficiaries, including total hip-replacement devices like the Pinnacle MoM. (SAC ¶ 125).

[2] The 65 II A contract further states that the general controls of the FD&C Act controlling medical devices "are the baseline requirements that apply to all medical devices necessary for marketing, proper labeling and monitoring [ ] performance once the device is on the market." (SAC ¶ 119).

3. FDA Regulations Governing Medical Devices

The SAC contains significant detail concerning the FDA regulations governing [*234] medical devices that need not be fully detailed here. (See generally SAC ¶¶ 127-66). The FDA, which protects and promotes the public health through regulation of medical devices and pharmaceuticals, has three risk-based regulatory classifications for medical devices. (SAC ¶¶ 127-28). The Pinnacle MoM device was a Class III device and subject to the most stringent level of regulation imposed by the FDA. (SAC ¶¶ 129-30). There [12] are only two ways by which a manufacturer can seek FDA approval for a new Class III medical device: the premarket approval ("PMA") process and the "510(k)" clearance process. (SAC ¶ 131). The "more onerous" PMA process requires, among other things, a full report of all information known to the manufacturer concerning investigations into the device's safety. (SAC ¶ 131). In contrast, under the 510(k) process, the manufacturer is required to demonstrate only that the device is "substantially equivalent in terms of safety and effectiveness to an existing FDA-approved device." (SAC ¶ 131) (citing 21 C.F.R. § 807.92(a)(3)). A device is substantially equivalent if, when comparing it to the predicate, it has both the same intended use and the same technological characteristics as the predicate. (SAC ¶ 133). A device with different technological characteristics can be considered substantially equivalent only if the information submitted to the FDA does not raise new questions of safety and demonstrates that the device is at least as safe and effective as the predicate device. (SAC ¶ 133).

4. The Pinnacle MoM Device

Before the alleged defects in DePuy's Pinnacle MoM device came to light, another DePuy hip-replacement [13] device, the ASR, suffered from alleged defects and was the subject of many products-liability lawsuits. (SAC ¶¶ 56-57). Those actions were ultimately the subject of an MDL proceeding in the Northern District of Ohio. (SAC ¶¶ 56-57). The SAC includes numerous references to ASR defects and allegedly fraudulent behavior by DePuy in connection with that device. (See, e.g., SAC ¶¶ 15, 24, 31-33, 35, 37-39, 42, 45, 47, 54-58, 64-66, 68, 71-72, 130, 184, 189, 190-91, 199, 238, 246, 262, 327). Those allegations, however, are not particularly relevant to the relators' claims in this case, which is solely focused on the Pinnacle device——and more specifically, the Pinnacle MoM device comprised of a metal head and metal liner, as explained below.

Hip-replacement devices replace the bone components of a hip joint, including the ball (femoral head) and socket (acetabulum). (SAC ¶¶ 167-69). A hip-replacement device generally includes four components: (1) a femoral stem; (2) a femoral head; (3) an acetabular cup; and (4) a liner that fits inside the cup and interacts with the head. (SAC ¶ 170). In metal-on-metal hip-replacement devices, the head, cup, and liner are all metal; MoM devices are expected [14] to last longer than devices comprised of ceramic or polyethylene. (SAC ¶ 169). The space between the head and cup is referred to as "diametrical clearance." (SAC ¶ 179). Bodily fluid fills in the diametrical clearance between the head and cup to prevent friction and wear caused by the two pieces rubbing together. (SAC ¶ 180).

Under the brand of "DePuy Orthopaedics Pinnacle Hip Solutions," DePuy marketed three head-on-liner categories of Pinnacle devices: "metal-on-metal, ceramic-on-polyethylene, and metal-on-polyethylene." (SAC ¶ 176; Def. Mem. Ex. C at 5).[3] [*235] DePuy offered three types of Pinnacle heads: (1) aSphere M-Spec and M-Spec (both metal); (2) Standard Metal (metal); and (3) BIOLOX delta (ceramic). (Def. Mem. Ex. C at 3). DePuy offered three types of Pinnacle liners: (1) Ultamet and Ultamet XL (both metal); (2) Marathon (polyethylene); and (3) AltrX (polyethylene). (Def. Mem. Ex. C at 3). The Standard Metal head was not compatible with Pinnacle metal liners; it could be used only with polyethylene liners. (Compare Def. Mem. Ex. C at 8, with Def. Mem. Ex. C at 10, 16). Thus, there was one combination of Pinnacle components that combined to create a Pinnacle MoM device: an aSphere [15] M-Spec or M-Spec metal head with an Ultamet or Ultamet XL metal liner. (SAC ¶ 176; Def. Mem. Ex. C at 3). The Pinnacle device——consisting of a head, cup, and liner——could be used with a variety of separate DePuy femoral stems, including the CORAIL stem, the SUMMIT stem, the AML stem, the TRI-LOCK stem, and the S-ROM stem. (See Def. Mem. Ex. D at 29). But those stems were not part of the Pinnacle MoM device, as they could be used with other DePuy hip-replacement devices, such as the ASR. (Id.).

[3] The Court will consider two sets of DePuy marketing materials along with the facts as alleged in the SAC. First, it will consider Exhibit C attached to DePuy's motion to dismiss: the 2011 "Pinnacle Hip Solutions Compatibility Guide," a marketing document that DePuy provided to health-care providers. Second, the Court will consider Exhibit D attached to DePuy's motion to dismiss: the 2008 "Design Rationale" for Pinnacle products. On motions to dismiss, courts can properly take into account (1) documents the authenticity of which are not disputed by the parties; (2) documents that are official public records; (3) documents central to plaintiffs' claim; or (4) documents sufficiently referred to in [16] the complaint. Watterson v. Page, 987 F.2d 1, 3 (1st Cir.

As alleged in Counts One through Thirty-Seven of the SAC, the relators seek recovery under 31 U.S.C. § 3729(a)(1)(A)-(C) for claims involving only DePuy's Pinnacle MoM device (which must use an M-Spec head and an Ultamet liner).

On December 13, 2000, the FDA approved the Pinnacle Ultamet 36mm metal liner as part of the 510(k) approval process, based on "substantial equivalence with the DePuy Ultima Unipolar Adapter Sleeves ("Ultima"), cited as the Ultamet's predicate device." (SAC ¶ 177). The diametrical clearance set forth in the Ultamet's 510(k) application was in the "40-80 [17] micron tolerance band." (SAC ¶ 181).[4] According to the SAC, DePuy purposely manufactured the Pinnacle MoM device with a lower diametrical clearance than other devices. (SAC ¶ 183). It marketed the Pinnacle MoM's lower diametrical clearance under the theory that as diametrical clearance decreases, the volume of fluid lubricating the joint increases. (SAC ¶ 183). The SAC alleges that when diametrical [*236] clearance is small, "the consequences of any deformation of the cup, even if slight, are dire for the patient." (SAC ¶ 183). When DePuy added the 36mm Ultamet liner to its Pinnacle product line in 2005, DePuy advised the FDA that the diametrical clearance dimension was not 40-80 microns, but was in fact 80-120 microns. (SAC ¶ 186). The SAC alleges that the FDA, upon learning of the inaccuracy, "specifically advised DePuy that, had it known that the 36mm liner's dimensions were not as DePuy had represented, the device would not have been granted a 'substantial equivalence' waiver . . . . Instead, DePuy would have had to make a full application for PMA." (SAC ¶ 187).

5. DePuy's Allegedly Fraudulent Acts Involving the Pinnacle Device

The relators allegedly learned of the defects in the ASR and Pinnacle MoM devices through their own work with the hip implants. (SAC ¶¶ 24, 47). They began reporting those defects to DePuy in 2007, and continued to do so through 2011. (SAC ¶¶ 24, 47). Those defects included (1) surface wear resulting in metal ion exposure causing patient necrosis (tissue death), metallosis (metallic staining of tissues), and osteolysis (degradation of the bone) (SAC ¶ 29); (2) "diametrical clearance" and "taper trunnion" defects causing high device-failure rates (SAC ¶ 42); and (3) femoral neck fractures at high rates. (SAC ¶ 45).

1993); see also Romani v. Shearson Lehman Hutton, 929 F.2d 875, 879 n.3 (1st Cir. 1991) (considering securities-offering documents submitted by defendants with motion to dismiss for claim of securities fraud); Fudge v. Penthouse Int'l, Ltd., 840 F.2d 1012, 1014-15 (1st Cir. 1988) (considering allegedly libelous article submitted by defendants with motion to dismiss).

Here, the SAC refers to DePuy's "marketing materials" and other documents that it provided to health-care providers numerous times. (See, e.g., SAC ¶¶ 9, 165, 183, 232, 252, 419). Moreover, the documents were publicly-distributed marketing materials. Accordingly, Exhibits C and D are documents whose authenticity is not disputed, are central to the relators' claims, and are sufficiently referred to in the SAC.

[4] DePuy manufactured liners and heads at a specified "nominal" size. (SAC ¶ 182). Along with a nominal size, each component was [18] assigned an upper and lower tolerance, representing the "permissible diametrical clearance measurements of the manufactured component." (SAC ¶ 182). The acceptable range of diameter measurements for each component is plus or minus 10 microns (0.010 millimeters) from the nominal size; accordingly, "the complete range of acceptable deviation [for a device] is 20 microns for each component." (SAC ¶ 182).

The SAC includes nearly fifty pages detailing DePuy's allegedly fraudulent actions in concealing those defects [19] while pursuing FDA approval for the Pinnacle MoM device, marketing the device to surgeons, and selling the device to government health-care programs. (See generally SAC ¶¶ 201-412). The Court will not detail every allegation of DePuy's claimed improper conduct, many of which are irrelevant to the Pinnacle MoM device and the present FCA claims. The Court will, however, attempt to summarize the allegations, which fall into two broad categories.

First, the SAC alleges that DePuy knowingly made material false statements and omissions to the FDA and to medical providers about the "specifications, manufacturing process, safety, and failure rates" of its Pinnacle MoM device. (SAC ¶ 201). Those false statements, according to the SAC, "armed and induced surgeons to make similar certifications when seeking reimbursement from the [g]overnment" and "had a natural tendency to influence the [g]overnment's payment for the Pinnacle devices." (SAC ¶ 203). The SAC identifies nine sub-categories of materially false statements that DePuy made to the FDA and surgeons. The SAC alleges that but for those false statements, the FDA would not have approved the device and "surgeons would not have utilized Pinnacle hip replacements or [20] certified them to government health programs as reasonable and medically necessary." (SAC ¶ 256).

1. The SAC alleges that "in official communications with the FDA, DePuy falsely represented that Pinnacle implants had a 96 percent to 96.5 percent success rate." (SAC ¶ 204). Specifically, it alleges that on June 27, 2012, a DePuy director gave a presentation to the FDA's Orthopedic and Rehabilitation Devices Panel of the Medical Devices Advisory Committee. (SAC ¶ 205). The purpose of that meeting was to "seek expert scientific and clinical opinion on the risks and benefits of these types of devices based on available scientific data." (SAC ¶ 205). At the meeting, the DePuy director told the panel that "Ultamet metal-on-metal articulation is performing consistent with or better than other metal-on-metal products: 4 to 4.5 percent cumulative revision rate at five years, regardless of head size." [*237] (SAC ¶ 206). According to the SAC, as of February 29, 2012, DePuy's own internal database showed that "metal Pinnacle hips" had a cumulative revision rate of 15 percent after five years of use. (SAC ¶ 207). The SAC alleges that "had DePuy truthfully stated its internal results indicating a 15 percent [21] revision rate at five years, the FDA would likely not have continued to clear the product for the market . . . [and] the government would likely have discontinued use of the Pinnacle device for government health-care recipients." (SAC ¶ 210). When the FDA approved the Pinnacle for implantation in patients, the FDA stated "[i]t is, however, [DePuy's] responsibility to determine if the change [or] modification to the device or its labeling could significantly affect the device's safety or effectiveness and thus require submission of a new 510(k)." (SAC ¶ 211).

2. The SAC alleges that "DePuy made false statements to surgeons claiming that Pinnacle boasted a 99.9 percent success rate" and that those statements caused surgeons to submit false claims to the government. (SAC ¶ 212). Specifically, it alleges that DePuy began circulating marketing materials in 2007 that touted a 99.9 percent success rate for "Pinnacle products" based on data and research that was "conducted and written up by DePuy itself and funneled to a third-party author to create the appearance of impartiality." (SAC ¶¶ 212-13). It alleges that DePuy continued to advertise this false figure until 2013, even though its internal [22] data showed a 15 percent cumulative revision rate as early as February 29, 2012. (SAC ¶¶ 228-29).

3. The SAC alleges that DePuy made false statements to surgeons "claim[ing] that the Pinnacle device's low diametrical clearances created a benefit to patients that distinguished the devices from competing products." (SAC ¶ 233). Beginning in early 2010, the relators conducted research on a "large volume of failed Pinnacle . . . implants" and concluded that the device suffered from a "diametrical clearance defect" such that "the diametrical clearance of the [ ] device was considerably lower than the specification required by the FDA." (SAC ¶ 238). After the research, the relators repeatedly alerted DePuy executives about the improper clearances. (SAC ¶¶ 245-48). DePuy, in apparently undated marketing materials to surgeons, touted that the Pinnacle's "cup-to-head bearing clearance, enhances the potential for fluid lubrication and minimizes wear to maximize survivorship." (SAC ¶ 250). According to the SAC, "DePuy knew that patients were not obtaining the purported benefits of Pinnacle's low diametrical clearances" and "was fully aware that many patients and surgeons——most notably Dr. Nargol——were complaining [23] of high ion rates and high failure rates." (SAC ¶ 255).

4. The SAC alleges that even though "DePuy knew that its devices were responsible for dangerous concentrations of metal ions in the bloodstreams of patients," it told the FDA that "metal ions were not a source of concern for metal-on-metal patients." (SAC ¶ 257). In the June 2012 presentation to the FDA, the DePuy director said that the Pinnacle generated "metal wear debris" in patients' bloodstreams in "low amounts." (SAC ¶ 258). The SAC alleges that surgeons began notifying DePuy "as early as 2001 that metal ions generated [*238] by metal-on-metal implants were a cause for concern." (SAC ¶ 260).

5. The SAC alleges that DePuy made false statements to surgeons about the causes of the Pinnacle MoM's high failure rates. Specifically, "[b]eginning in 2009, Dr. Nargol repeatedly contacted DePuy to warn it of explosive growth in the number of Pinnacle hip revision surgeries he was performing." (SAC ¶ 269). According to the SAC, DePuy told Dr. Nargol that the "problems resulted from his implantation technique." (SAC ¶ 270). At the time, "DePuy knew . . . that the problems in Dr. Nargol's patients stemmed from device defects, not from [his] surgical methods" [24] because, in part, other surgeons were "experiencing and notifying DePuy of widespread failures with the Pinnacle implant." (SAC ¶¶ 271-72).

6. The SAC alleges that DePuy made false statements to surgeons about the Pinnacle MoM's angle of inclination in its use instructions. (SAC ¶ 276). It cites an internal DePuy e-mail written by an engineer expressing confusion about the proper angle of inclination for the Pinnacle's cup positioning. (SAC ¶ 277). Accordingly, the SAC alleges, "DePuy did not know the proper angle of implantation for Pinnacle hips, and [ ] any recommendation it made in its manuals disseminated to hospitals and surgeons was therefore false." (SAC ¶ 278).

7. The SAC alleges that DePuy "intentionally withheld disclosure of the Pinnacle's diametrical clearance manufacturing defects to [the] FDA, contrary to its FDA-mandated obligation to report them in an updated 510(k) application." (SAC ¶ 280). In 2000, DePuy submitted its 510(k) application along with various certifications that it "conducted a reasonable search of all information known or otherwise available about the types and causes of safety and effectiveness problems that have been reported for metal-on-metal hip [25] systems." (SAC ¶ 282). On July 26, 2005, a DePuy regulatory-affairs associate wrote to the FDA attaching a chart "replac[ing] the chart originally included as Exhibit 4 of the submission, which contained a miscalculation." (SAC ¶ 286). The SAC alleges "[o]n information and belief, the 'corrected' 2005 table contained measurements or analysis of measurements of DePuy's devices that DePuy learned were not accurate." (SAC ¶ 287).[5] On August 5, 2005, a member of the FDA cautioned DePuy that it would be the company's "responsibility to determine if the change or modification to the device or its labeling could significantly affect the device's safety or effectiveness and thus require submission of a new 510(k)." (SAC ¶ 291). According to the SAC, that notification "imposed an affirmative obligation on DePuy to provide the FDA with updated information," and even when the relators notified DePuy of the Pinnacle diametrical clearance issues beginning in [*239] 2008, "[o]n information and belief, DePuy never corrected its July 26, 2005 submissions to reflect Relator Langton's measurements." (SAC ¶¶ 292-96).

8. The SAC alleges that DePuy "intentionally withheld disclosures of the Pinnacle device's taper trunnion and surface [26] roughness defects in presentations to the FDA." (SAC ¶ 300). The alleged "taper trunnion" defect concerns the area where the end of the femoral stem (the trunnion) is inserted into the area of the head (the taper); that taper trunnion "is not meant to move and thus should not generate any wear." (SAC ¶¶ 188-89). However, the SAC alleges that the relators discovered a defect in the Pinnacle device where, due in part to the large head size of the Pinnacle, the "taper toggles against the trunnion, causing the release of metal debris." (SAC ¶ 190). The alleged "surface roughness" defect also concerns the taper trunnion area of the device, but involves friction between the trunnion, which is designed to be rough, and the taper, which is designed to be smooth. (SAC ¶ 195). The SAC alleges that the relators discovered a defect in many Pinnacle devices where the surface of the taper was rough and created friction with the trunnion, which in turn caused friction and release of metal debris. (SAC ¶ 197). The relators allege that they notified DePuy of the two defects beginning in 2011 and continued to do so into 2012. (SAC ¶¶ 305-06). The SAC alleges that DePuy willfully omitted any discussion [27] of the reported taper trunnion and surface roughness defects during the June 2012 meeting with the FDA. (SAC ¶¶ 307-10).

9. The SAC alleges that "DePuy intentionally failed to disclose adverse events to the FDA." (SAC ¶ 312). On June 7, 2011, following an Establishment Inspection of DePuy's Indiana facility, the FDA issued a report concluding that DePuy had "delayed reporting adverse [Pinnacle] MoM events by five months to three-and-a-half years, well beyond the acceptable timeframe under FDA regulations." (SAC ¶ 314). The report also noted that DePuy failed to investigate complaints involving the possible failure of its device to meet production specifications; a DePuy employee stated that the company received approximately 450 complaints per month about hip-replacement devices but that DePuy assigned only one employee to investigate them. (SAC ¶ 315).

Second, the SAC alleges that DePuy knowingly caused the submission of direct claims for "medical devices with dimensions materially different than those the government bargained for." (SAC ¶ 201). The SAC identifies three sub-categories of DePuy's allegedly materially false statements or omissions that caused the government to pay for "nonconforming, nonfunctioning, and unsafe devices that would not have been purchased but for DePuy's fraudulent conduct." (SAC ¶ 325).

1. As detailed above, the SAC alleges that DePuy knowingly or recklessly disregarded evidence, allegedly first provided to it by the relators, that the Pinnacle MoM's nonconforming diametrical clearances were causing device failures. (SAC ¶¶ 327-32). It alleges that DePuy was on notice of the Pinnacle MoM's improper measurement testing procedures as early as 2009, when it acquired a competitor and began to use its own "state-of-the-art measuring equipment." [*240] (SAC ¶ 335). In June 2010, after the relators notified DePuy of the Pinnacle's improper clearance measurements, a DePuy employee e-mailed Dr. Langton, [29] stating that if DePuy concluded from the relators' research that its MoM parts "were out of specification," the company would "need to notify patients if [DePuy] had made a serious manufacturing error." (SAC ¶ 338). In its 2011 report, the FDA found that "33 Pinnacle metal liners were out of conformance" because they "fell below the lower specification limit" for diametrical clearance. (SAC ¶ 342). The FDA report notified DePuy that "[t]he production capabilities for the Pinnacle MoM liners and MoM femoral heads at the Leeds facility should be reviewed." (SAC ¶ 343). According to the SAC, "DePuy continued to manufacture Pinnacle components with full knowledge that the manufacturing process was producing yet more parts with the same conformance issues." (SAC ¶ 343). The SAC also alleges "on information and belief" that DePuy provided the FDA with statistical analyses about the failure rates of its Pinnacle device that excluded "critical analyses [that] relators provided to DePuy." (SAC ¶ 345). After the FDA expanded the scope of its request to include data back to January 2007, the SAC alleges that DePuy "responded by producing very little data." (SAC ¶ 348). According to the SAC, "DePuy's [30] failure to conduct and report such statistical analyses violated 21 C.F.R. § 820.250, which requires statistical analysis to assess trending." (SAC ¶ 350). It also alleges that because DePuy employed only one person to "review and analyze the approximately 450 complaints received per month," it "willfully ignored and mischaracterized the causes of the[ ] complaints in order to avoid its obligation to adequately verify and validate its manufacturing processes." (SAC ¶¶ 355-56). It alleges that DePuy's "failure to respond to relators' complaints regarding the clearance deformities" violated 21 C.F.R. § 820.198(a), which establishes a duty to "maintain adequate procedures for receiving, reviewing, and evaluating complaints." (SAC ¶ 357).

2. The SAC alleges that beginning in 2005, DePuy "knowingly or recklessly failed to adopt adequate process validation methods" that were "necessary to consistently manufacture [ ] Pinnacle devices within specification." (SAC ¶ 358). It alleges that the "relators, with additional expert assistance, have determined that DePuy's inspection and testing procedures were unable to verify whether DePuy's Pinnacle devices [were] manufactured within their required specifications," both for diametrical [31] clearance and surface roughness. (SAC ¶¶ 359-60). It alleges that DePuy, by failing to ensure that its manufacturing process was capable of producing devices within required specifications, "produced, marketed, and sold . . . a device that [was] different than the subject of the 510(k)" and caused the government to purchase devices that it would not have otherwise purchased without 510(k) approval. (SAC ¶¶ 363-65).

3. The SAC alleges that "DePuy's failure to implement validation procedures necessary to ensure consistent manufacture of products confirming to their specifications was material to the government's purchase of DePuy's Pinnacle devices." (SAC ¶ 397). Specifically, [*241] it alleges that the "FDA premised its post-market approval of the Pinnacle's diametrical clearance dimensions upon DePuy's representation that the Pinnacle's failure rates were comparable to those of its competitors," and without that approval, the government would not have approved the device for reimbursement. (SAC ¶ 397). When the FDA learned in 2005 that DePuy's 510(k) application in 2000 for the Ultamet 36mm liner contained incorrect diametrical clearance dimensions, it stated that "given this new information, [32] the Pinnacle 36mm system would not have been cleared in 2000." (SAC ¶¶ 399-400). According to the SAC, the FDA "nevertheless did not require DePuy to file a supplemental 510(k), much less obtain PMA, expressly because DePuy represented that the device's failure rates were within industry standards." (SAC ¶ 401). But the SAC alleges that DePuy "was aware [at that time] that the Pinnacle substantially deviated from specifications and had disproportionately high failure rates," and "[i]n order to maintain FDA approval and continue to sell the Pinnacle, DePuy obscured this information from the FDA, medical providers, and the public for several years." (SAC ¶ 403).

In May 2013, DePuy announced that it would stop selling the Pinnacle MoM device as of August 2013. (SAC ¶ 55). More than 5,000 personal injury lawsuits involving the Pinnacle MoM device were eventually transferred to an MDL proceeding in the Northern District of Texas. (SAC ¶ 58).

The SAC alleges that "all claims made to the government for costs associated with the Pinnacle device at any time from DePuy's 510(k) application to the date the Pinnacle was withdrawn from the market constitute false claims under the FDA." (SAC ¶ 412).

Finally, [33] the SAC twice refers to 42 U.S.C. § 1395y(a)(1)(A), which prohibits Medicare payments for treatments that are not "reasonable and necessary." The SAC alleges:

> Hospital certifications involving claims for Pinnacle hip implants were false because claim reimbursements for these products constituted payment for services which were "not reasonable and necessary for the diagnosis and treatment of illness or injury," in violation of 42 U.S.C. § 1395y(a)(1)(A). By marketing these products as safe, effective, and medically appropriate, and concealing overwhelming evidence to the contrary, DePuy willfully caused hospitals to file such false certifications when seeking Medicare reimbursement.
> DePuy caused physicians, hospitals and other providers to submit false certifications on all these forms concerning claims for Pinnacle hip surgery procedures. Surgeries to implant these irredeemably faulty devices were not "reasonable and necessary for the diagnosis and treatment of illness or injury," within the meaning of 42 U.S.C. § 1395y(a)(1)(A).

6. Alleged False Claims

The SAC alleges that "the government directly purchased or reimbursed hundreds of thousands of Pinnacle products." (SAC ¶ 7). It alleges that DePuy made false statements that caused [34] health-care providers to submit indirect false claims for the Pinnacle MoM to Medicare and Medicaid, and that DePuy itself also submitted direct false claims to the VA.

[*242] a. Alleged Indirect False Claims

The SAC alleges one representative indirect false claim and then supports that claim with statistical evidence of the Pinnacle sales to Medicare and Medicaid patients. (See SAC ¶¶ 413-72). As to the indirect claim, the SAC alleges:

> One such device was implanted into patient "F.I.". On or about November 12, 2007, patient F.I. was implanted with a DePuy Pinnacle hip implant by a surgeon at Stony Brook University Medical Center, 10 I Nicolls Road, Stony Brook, New York 11794. The surgeon was, upon information and belief, Dr. "J.N.". In November 2007, Mr. F.I. received Medicaid insurance through HealthFirst, a managed care organization that provides government-sponsored health insurance plans in New York.
> On information and belief, DePuy's surgical instructions and materials provided to Dr. J.N. regarding implantation of F.I. with the Pinnacle device represented that the device was a safe and effective hip implant device when implanted in accordance with such instructions.
> DePuy's product label [35] accompanying the Pinnacle device stated that the product was indicated for use as the acetabular component in total hip-replacement procedures. On information and belief, under the heading "Information for Use," the product label stated that an "instrumentation system, as well as a system of trial components, is available to assure proper fit and alignment of the prosthesis" and that physicians should refer to the surgical technique manual on their use.
> Within the Pinnacle's packaging, DePuy provided surgeons with Instructions for Use ("IFU") of the product. The IFU contained numerous false statements regarding the safety and efficacy of the Pinnacle MoM. The IFU stated, "An instrument system, as well as system of trial components, is available to assure proper fit and alignment of the prosthesis." The IFU also instructed the surgeon to "refer to the appropriate surgical technique manual on the use of the instrument system." In reality, surgeons could not achieve a proper fit and alignment of the prosthesis by using DePuy's tools and instructions.
> Around the time of Mr. F. I.'s surgery, DePuy widely distributed the Ultamet Technical Monograph, a Pinnacle marketing material, throughout [36] the United States. This pamphlet falsely stated that the Pinnacle MoM implants experienced reduced wear as compared to competing devices because of the purported benefit of their low diametrical clearances.
> At the time of Mr. F.I.'s surgery, other safe and effective alternatives were widely available on the market. As alleged above, DePuy's marketing materials and device operating instructions claimed that the ASR and Pinnacle's lower failure rates and diametrical clearance specifications were superior to those competing products[.]
> On information and belief, but for DePuy's false statements, Dr. J.N. would have chosen a different available device for the hip-replacement surgery he performed on Mr. F.I.
> As with Mr. F.I.'s ASR XL hip prosthesis, Mr. F.I's Pinnacle device quickly failed, as a result of manufacturing defects in the device, including nonconforming diametrical clearance dimensions. The failures resulted in great pain and suffering to F.I. and posed the possibility of additional revision surgery.
> Mr. F.I's implantation with a Pinnacle device was neither medically reasonable nor medically necessary, because of the unreasonably high possibility that the [*243] device would fail [37] and release metal ions into Mr. F.I.'s blood stream. No reasonable physician would implant a hip-replacement device with a failure rate of 15 percent at five years.
> In order to obtain Government reimbursement in connection with the procedure, Stony Brook University Medical Center and Dr. J.N. certified that Mr. F.I.'s Pinnacle device was reasonable and medically necessary for his treatment under 42 U.S.C. § 1395y(a)(1)(A). This certification was false as the implantation of a defective device is not a medically reasonable treatment.
> Upon information and belief, on or about November 2007, Stony Brook University Medical Center submitted a claim to Medicaid for Mr. F.I.'s Pinnacle hip device and implant surgery. Medicaid paid for Stony Brook's hip device and implant surgery.
> New York Medicaid reimbursed approximately $34,000 in costs for the implantation of Mr. F.I.'s Pinnacle device.

> Without DePuy's false representations and warranties, Mr. F.I. would not have received a DePuy implant and the Government would not have expended funds on the device. If Dr. J.N. had been provided appropriate information showing the truth about the Pinnacle, Dr. J.N. would not have selected the Pinnacle implant for F.I's [38] procedure. Similarly, had DePuy divulged what it knew about the Pinnacle, the Government would not have approved any claim for reimbursement for the costs of the system.

According to the SAC, "over one million MoM hips were sold worldwide" during the times relevant to the complaint. (SAC ¶ 434). "Amongst the models manufactured at DePuy plants, the Pinnacle MoM Hip was one of the most widely used hip-replacement systems that remained in the international market place." (SAC ¶ 434). The SAC alleges that the United States "constitutes almost two-thirds of the world's orthopedic device market." (SAC ¶ 435). Over 300,000 hip-replacement surgeries were performed in the United States in 2010. (SAC ¶ 436). The SAC alleges that, "[a]ccordingly, it follows that hundreds of thousands of Pinnacle products were implanted in government health-care recipients and reimbursed by the government during the lifespan of the product." (SAC ¶ 437).

The SAC alleges that between 2005 and 2010, New York Medicaid paid for an average of approximately 1,280 claims each year for total hip-replacement devices. (SAC ¶ 438). New York State Medicaid paid approximately $52 million to cover its [39] total cost for inpatient visits for those 1,280 claims, or $40,625 per claim. (SAC ¶ 439). In 2010, New York State's Federal Medical Assistance Percentage ("FMAP") was approximately 50 percent. (SAC ¶ 440). The SAC alleges that "[t]herefore, the United States paid an additional $52 million to cover its total cost for each inpatient visit for those 1,280 claims, or $40,625 per claim." (SAC ¶ 441). New York State Medicaid covers approximately 8 percent of all Medicaid beneficiaries in the United States; therefore, according to the SAC, "thousands more Medicaid patients received total hip-replacement devices in 2010, at a cost of hundreds of millions of dollars to the Plaintiff States and the United States." (SAC ¶ 442).

The SAC alleges that "[a]lthough the proportion of MoM hip-replacement devices on the United States market had begun to decline by 2010, according to the FDA, in 2010, a full 27 percent of all total hip-replacement surgeries were MoM device [*244] surgeries." (SAC ¶ 443). "During relevant periods, DePuy's two MoM hip implant products (the Pinnacle and the ASR XL) had captured 75 percent of the Metal on Metal hip-replacements market. Prior to 2010, the Pinnacle constituted roughly 50 percent of DePuy's [40] MoM hip-replacement sales." (SAC ¶ 444). The SAC alleges that "[g]iven the August 2010 recall of the ASR, the Pinnacle would have constituted at least 70 percent of DePuy's Metal on Metal hip-replacement sales." (SAC ¶ 445). Therefore, according to the SAC, "between 2005 and 2010, nearly 850 Pinnacle devices were purchased by New York State Medicaid." (SAC ¶ 446). The relators estimate that the diametrical clearance defect affected 14.93 percent of "explant head[s]" and 50.41 percent of "explant liner[s]." (SAC ¶ 447). Thus, "relators estimate that nearly 425 Pinnacle devices bearing the diametrical clearance manufacturing defect would have been paid for by New York State Medicaid between 2005 and 2010." (SAC ¶ 448). Based on the alleged 14 percent five-year failure rate in Pinnacle's internal system, the relators allege that between 2005 and 2010, "nearly 130 Pinnacle devices paid for by New York State Medicaid would have failed in patients at [five] years." (SAC ¶ 451).

b. Alleged Direct False Claims

The SAC alleges that the VA entered into two contracts with DePuy "that include the sale of the Pinnacle hip implants." (SAC ¶ 474). The SAC alleges:

> On February 21, 2006, DePuy was awarded an Orthopaedics Implant [41] contract worth $8,042,500 by the VA National Acquisition Center with the Procurement Instrument Identifier V797P-9 I 88. The VA Point of Contact for the contract was Deborah Koval.
> On April 29, 2011 DePuy entered into another Indefinite Delivery contract with the VA National Acquisition Center with the Procurement Instrument Identifier VA-797P-0263. The VA NAC Point of Contact was Timothy > Richards and the DePuy Contract Point of Contact was Michelle Roberts. Since 2011, this contract has involved payment for dozens of Pinnacle components.

The SAC then alleges that the following twelve "purchases" by the VA are "representative claims" for purposes of the False Claims Act. (SAC ¶¶ 479-90).

> 480. On January 30, 2011, Lax ordered a "SUMMIT FEMORAL STEM" and "ARTICUL/EZE METAL ON METAL FEMORAL HEAD" from DePuy. This order obligated the VA to pay $3,358.38.
> 481. On February 27, 2011, Lax ordered a Pinnacle product from DePuy. This order obligated the VA to pay $4,779.50. [42]
> 482. On June 1, 2012, VA employee Scott Delancey from Grand Junction ordered a Pinnacle product from DePuy. This order obligated the VA to pay $3,967.00.
> 483. On September 29, 2011, VA employee Loretta Henry McLain from Los Angeles ordered a Pinnacle product from DePuy. This order obligated the VA to pay $8,712.14.
> 484. On September 27, 2012, VA employee Kami Wiggins from Martinsburg ordered a Pinnacle product from DePuy. This order obligated the VA to pay $15,228.50.
> 485. On September 28, 2007, Naval Medical Center employee Jojie Urrete from San Diego, California ordered a "Pinnacle [*245] metal on metal" device from DePuy. This order obligated the Navy to pay $8,000.00.
> 486. On February 22, 2008, Urrete ordered a "Summitt (sic) Pinnacle metal on metal" device from DePuy. This order obligated the Navy to pay $13,000.00.

B. Procedural Background

On May 18, 2012, the relators filed the original complaint in this case under seal.[6] The complaint alleged, among other things, violations of the False Claims Act. The FCA claims were pursued by the relators on behalf of the United States as a qui tam action. The Court granted the relators' motion to file an amended complaint on December 2, 2013. On July 29, 2014, the government filed a notice declining to intervene in this case. On August 13, 2014, the case was partially unsealed. On May 4, 2015, the relators [44] filed under seal a motion to file a second amended complaint. DePuy opposed that motion on May 26, 2015. On June 5, 2015, the Court granted the relators' motion to amend the complaint and deemed the SAC, effectively the relators' third complaint, as the operative complaint.

[6] The case was initially assigned to Judge O'Toole, then was reassigned to this judge on August 10, 2012, then was reassigned to Judge Talwani on June 26, 2014, and finally reassigned back to this judge on October 8, 2014.

The SAC, which remains sealed, alleges claims of (1) causing false or fraudulent claims for payment to be presented to the United States in violation of 31 U.S.C. § 3729(a)(1)(A) (Count One); (2) knowingly making, using, or causing to be made or used false records or statements material to a false of fraudulent claim paid by the United States in violation of 31 U.S.C. § 3729(a)(1)(B) (Count Two); (3) conspiracy to violate the FCA in violation of 31 U.S.C. § 3729(a)(1)(C) (Count Three); and (4) violations of various state analogues to the FCA (Counts Four through Thirty-Seven).

On June 29, 2015, DePuy filed a motion to dismiss. DePuy contends that the relators' FCA claims fail to state a claim for which relief can be granted under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), and that they also fail to satisfy the pleading [45] requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). DePuy also contends that [*246] the conspiracy and state-law FCA claims should be dismissed for the same reasons.

On August 24, 2015, the relators moved to unseal the SAC. DePuy assented to that motion on September 2, 2015, but requested that other documents also be unsealed, including (1) the relators' motion to unseal the SAC, their accompanying memorandum of law and exhibits, and DePuy's response and accompanying exhibits; and (2) all documents and filings related to DePuy's motion to dismiss.

II. Legal Standard

On a motion to dismiss, the Court "must assume the truth of all well-plead[ed] facts and give . . . plaintiff the benefit of all reasonable inferences therefrom." Ruiz v. Bally Total Fitness Holding Corp., 496 F.3d 1, 5 (1st Cir. 2007) (citing Rogan v. Menino, 175 F.3d 75, 77 (1st Cir. 1999)). To survive a motion to dismiss, the complaint must state a claim that is plausible on its face. Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). That is, "[f]actual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level, . . . on the assumption that all the allegations in the complaint are true (even if doubtful in fact)." Id. at 555 (citations omitted). "The plausibility standard is not akin to a 'probability requirement,' but it asks for more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556). Dismissal is appropriate [46] if the facts as alleged do not "possess enough heft to show that plaintiff is entitled to relief." Ruiz Rivera v. Pfizer Pharms., LLC, 521 F.3d 76, 84 (1st Cir. 2008) (alterations omitted) (internal quotation marks omitted).

III. Analysis

A. Counts One and Two: Federal FCA Claims

Counts One and Two of the SAC allege violations of the FCA. Under the FCA, it is unlawful for a person or entity to (1) knowingly present, or cause to be presented, a false or fraudulent claim for payment or approval to the United States, (2) knowingly make, use, or cause to be made or used, a false record or statement material to a false or fraudulent claim; or (3) conspire to commit a violation of the statute. 31 U.S.C. §§ 3729(a)(1)(A)-(C). To be actionable under the FCA, a false statement must be material to a false claim——that is, the false statement must "hav[e] a natural tendency to influence, or be capable of influencing, the payment or receipt of money or property." United States ex rel. Loughren v. Unum Grp., 613 F.3d 300, 307 (1st Cir. 2010) (quoting 31 U.S.C. § 3729(b)(4)).

Private persons, known as relators, can file civil qui tam actions on behalf of the United States against persons or entities who violate the act. 31 U.S.C. § 3730(b). The government can intervene in a qui tam action and assume primary responsibility over it. Id. §§ 3730(b)(2), (b)(4), (c)(1). The relator is eligible to collect a portion of any damages awarded in a qui tam [47] action, whether or not the government intervenes. Id. § 3730(d).

1. Rule 9(b)

DePuy contends that the FCA claims should be dismissed because the SAC does not satisfy the pleading requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). That rule requires that "[i]n alleging fraud or mistake, a party must state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake." Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). The heightened pleading requirements of Rule 9(b) apply to claims brought under all three subsections of the FCA. United States ex rel. Ge v. Takeda Pharm. Co., 737 F.3d 116, 123-24 [*247] (1st Cir. 2013).[7] The First Circuit explained the reasoning for applying those requirements to FCA claims in United States ex rel. Duxbury v. Ortho Biotech Products, L.P. ("Duxbury II"): "Although [the FCA's] financial incentive encourages would-be relators to expose fraud, it also attracts parasitic relators who bring FCA damages claims based on information within the public domain or that the relator did not otherwise discover." 719 F.3d 31, 33 (1st Cir. 2013) (citations and internal quotation marks omitted). "For those reasons, there are a number of limitations on qui tam actions, including the particularity requirements of Rule 9(b)." Ge, 737 F.3d at 123 (citing Duxbury II, 719 F.3d at 33).

a. Direct Claims

For allegations of direct false claims under 31 U.S.C. § 3729(a)(1)(A), "[r]elators are required to set forth with particularity the 'who, what, when, where, and how' of the alleged fraud." Ge, 737 F.3d at 123 (quoting United States ex rel. Walsh v. Eastman Kodak Co., 98 F. Supp. 2d 141, 147 (D. Mass. 2000)). "Because FCA liability attaches only to false claims, merely alleging facts related to a defendant's alleged misconduct is not enough. Rather, a complaint based on § 3729(a)(1)(A) must 'sufficiently establish that false claims were submitted for government payment' as a result of the defendant's alleged misconduct." Id. at 124 (emphasis in original) (quoting United States ex rel. Rost v. Pfizer, Inc., 507 F.3d 720, 733 (1st Cir. 2007)). Indeed, "[e]vidence of an actual false claim is the sine qua non of a False Claims Act violation." United States ex rel. Karvelas v. Melrose-Wakefield Hosp., 360 F.3d 220, 225 (1st Cir. 2004) (internal citations omitted), abrogated on other grounds by Claudio-De Leon v. Sistema Universitario Ana G. Mendez, 775 F.3d 41 (1st Cir. 2014); see also United States v. Rivera, 55 F.3d 703, 709 (1st Cir. 1995) ("[T]he [FCA] statute attaches liability, not to the underlying fraudulent activity or to the government's wrongful payment, but to the claim for payment.").

As the First Circuit explained in Ge concerning the particularity requirement for pleading false claims:

> A relator must provide details that identify particular false claims for payment that were submitted to the government. In a case such as this, details concerning the dates of the claims, the content of the forms or bills [49] submitted, their identification numbers, the amount of money charged to the government, the particular goods or services for which the government was billed, the individuals involved in the billing, and the length of time between the alleged fraudulent practices and the submission of claims based on those practices are the types of information that may help a relator to state his or her claims with particularity. These details do not constitute a checklist of mandatory requirements that must be satisfied by each allegations included in a complaint. However, we believe that some of this information for at least some of the claims must be pleaded in order to satisfy Rule 9(b).

737 F.3d at 124 (internal quotation marks and alterations omitted) (quoting Karvelas, 360 F.3d at 232-33); see also United States ex rel. Escobar v. Universal Health Servs., 780 F.3d 504, 515 (1st Cir. 2015) (noting that while there was no "mandatory checklist" [*248] to satisfy the particularity requirement, relators "succeeded in linking their allegations of fraud to specific claims for payment" because the complaint "allege[d] twenty-seven separate dates on which claims were submitted in connection with Yarushka's care, each time including the relevant billing codes, amount invoiced, and the name of the [ ] staff member who provided the treatment for which reimbursement [50] was sought"), cert. granted, *136 S. [7] "We recognize that . . . the 'presentment' requirement applies only to . . . subsection (a)(1)(A) claims and not . . . subsection (a)(1)(B) or subsection (a)(1)(C) claims. However, Rule 9(b)'s particularity requirement applies with full force [48] to all three subsections [of the FCA]." Ge, 737 F.3d at 124-25 n.5.

Here, the SAC alleges that the VA purchased twelve hip devices directly from DePuy pursuant to two procurement contracts. (SAC ¶¶ 473-90). Those alleged false claims, however, do not satisfy Rule 9(b)'s heightened pleading requirements.

First, ten of the twelve alleged claims do not allege with sufficient particularity that the VA purchased the specific DePuy product that is the sole focus of this action: the Pinnacle MoM hip-implant device. (See SAC ¶¶ 494, 500). As described above, DePuy manufactured Pinnacle devices that had various combinations of head, liner, and cup materials, including "metal-on-metal, ceramic-on-polyethylene, or metal-on-polyethylene." (SAC ¶¶ 176-77; Def. Mem. Ex. C at 5). The alleged defects concern the interaction of a metal head with a metal liner in a Pinnacle device. There was only one head and liner combination of Pinnacle parts that produced a Pinnacle metal-on-metal, or MoM, device: a M-Spec or aSphere M-Spec head with an Ultamet or Ultamet XL liner. (SAC ¶¶ 176-77; Def. Mem. Ex. C at 3).

Before turning to the specific alleged false claims, the Court notes that the SAC uses the terms "Pinnacle" and "MoM" inconsistently. In paragraph [51] 6, the SAC states that "Relators Antoni Nargol and David Langton——world-renowned experts on hip-implant products——allege that DePuy submitted false claims for payment for one of DePuy's MoM devices: the Pinnacle Acetabular Hip System ('Pinnacle')." (SAC ¶ 6). It is unclear whether the relators intended to define "Pinnacle" to mean "the Pinnacle Acetabular Hip System" (which comprises metal, ceramic, and polyethylene products) or to mean the metal-on-metal subset of Pinnacle devices. Seven paragraphs later, relators use the specific term "MoM." (See SAC ¶ 13) ("In one June 2010 email, a top DePuy executive admitted to Dr. Langton that, were DePuy to conclude from Relators' research that its MoM parts 'were out of specification,' the Company would 'need to notify patients if we have made a serious manufacturing error.'"). And in the 200-paragraph section detailing the alleged DePuy misrepresentations, relators use the term "MoM" consistently. (See, e.g., SAC ¶¶ 201, 248, 259, 273, 277, 279, 307, 310-11, 314, 316, 319-20, 334, 338, 340, 343-44, 348-49, 351-52, 361, 379, 395-96). The complaint thus seems to make clear that the only relevant fraudulent activity involved Pinnacle metal-on-metal [52] devices. But in the section that alleges the proposed false claims, the relators use vague terms such as "Pinnacle products" or refer to products that are not a part of the Pinnacle system at all.

i. Paragraphs 479-480

> 480. On January 30, 2011, Lax ordered a "SUMMIT FEMORAL STEM" and "ARTICUL/EZE METAL ON METAL FEMORAL HEAD" from DePuy. This order obligated the VA to pay $3,358.38.

Depuy's marketing materials demonstrate that the "Summit femoral stem" is [*249] not a Pinnacle product, and even the relators appear to concede that it is not part of the Pinnacle MoM device. (See SAC ¶ 396) ("[T]he surface roughness manufacturing defect also affects devices other than the Pinnacle MoM . . . . These affected devices include DePuy's S-ROM, SUMMIT, CORAIL, and AML hip replacement products." (emphasis added)). The "Articul/eze metal-on-metal femoral head" does not appear to be a Pinnacle component because the only Pinnacle metal heads were the "aSphere M-Spec," the "M-Spec," and the "Standard Metal." [53] (Compare SAC ¶¶ 176-77, and Def. Mem. Ex. C at 3, with SAC ¶¶ 479-80). Furthermore, neither paragraph mentions a DePuy Pinnacle liner, much less an Ultamet metal liner. Thus, even assuming the Articul/eze head is metal and part of the Pinnacle device——which it is not——those paragraphs allege only part of a MoM device and ignore the liner. Finally, paragraphs 479 and 480 allege only "orders." They do not allege that those orders formed the basis of any actual claims that were presented to the VA.

ii. Paragraphs 481-484

> 481. On February 27, 2011, Lax ordered a Pinnacle product from DePuy. This order obligated the VA to pay $4,779.50.
> 482. On June 1, 2012, VA employee Scott Delancey from Grand Junction ordered a Pinnacle product from DePuy. This order obligated the VA to pay $3,967.00.
> 483. On September 29, 2011, VA employee Loretta Henry McLain from Los Angeles ordered a Pinnacle product from DePuy. This order obligated the VA to pay $8,712.14.
> 484. On September 27, 2012, VA employee Kami Wiggins from Martinsburg ordered a Pinnacle product from DePuy. This order obligated the VA to pay $15,228.50.

A "Pinnacle product" could refer to any combination of DePuy's three Pinnacle heads and three [54] Pinnacle liners. (Def. Mem. Ex. C at 3). Only a "M-Spec" head and "Ultamet" liner combined to create the Pinnacle MoM device. It is therefore unclear whether any of the products in question are even metal-on-metal devices. Also, the prices alleged in paragraphs 481 through 484 vary significantly. If those four "Pinnacle products" were all Pinnacle MoM devices, one would expect the prices to be at least somewhat similar. And as noted above, paragraphs 481 through 484 allege only "orders," not claims.

iii. Paragraphs 487-490

Confusingly, paragraphs 487, 489, and 490 allege that the Summit femoral stem is part of the "Pinnacle Hip replacement system." But as noted above, even the relators allege elsewhere in the SAC that the Summit stem is a different product from the Pinnacle MoM device. (See SAC ¶ 396). In fact, Summit stems could be used with entirely different hip-replacement systems, such as the ASR. (Def. Mem. Ex. D at 29). Paragraph 488 alleges an order of a S-Rom metal femoral head and alleges that the S-Rom was part of the "Pinnacle Hip replacement system." But DePuy's marketing materials, which the SAC incorporates, show that S-Rom heads were not part of the Pinnacle system. (Def. Mem. Ex. C at 3).

Thus, paragraphs 479 through 484 and 487 through 490 do not even allege that DePuy presented false claims to the VA for the only device relevant [56] to this action, nor do they plead those "orders" with sufficient particularity to satisfy Rule 9(b). Only two of the twelve direct orders alleged in the SAC actually refer to a Pinnacle MoM device—the two alleged in paragraphs 485 and 486. (SAC ¶¶ 485-86).

iv. Paragraphs 485-486

> 486. On February 22, 2008, Urrete ordered a "Summitt (sic) Pinnacle metal on metal" device from DePuy. This order obligated the Navy to pay $13,000.00.

To plead direct false claims pursuant to 31 U.S.C. § 3729(a)(1)(A), a complaint must allege at least some hallmarks of particularity. The First Circuit has provided a non-exhaustive list, including > details concerning the dates of the claims, the content of the forms or bills submitted, their identification numbers, the amount of money charged to the government, the particular goods or services for which the government was billed, the individuals involved in the billing, and the length of time between the alleged fraudulent practices and the submission of claims based on those practices . . . .

Karvelas, 360 F.3d at 228; see [57] also Ge, 737 F.3d at 124. Following the decisions in Karvelas and Ge, several judges in this district have held that "[i]n cases where the defendant directly presents the claim to the government, the plaintiff must provide details identifying particular false claims submitted, including who filed the claims, the content of the claims, when such claims were submitted, where such claims were submitted, and how much it sought in payment." United States ex rel. Westmoreland v. Amgen, Inc., 738 F. Supp. 2d 267, 275 (D. Mass. 2010) (citing Karvelas, 360 F.3d at 225); see also United States ex rel. Nowak v. Medtronic, Inc., 806 F. Supp. 2d 310, 352 (D. Mass. 2011) (noting that relators must plead "which [of defendant's] personnel engaged in [the] conduct, where such conduct took place, which VA personnel were involved, [and] any specific fraudulent statements made to personnel at the Veterans Administration"). The two descriptions of "orders" set forth in paragraphs 485 and 486 fail to allege with sufficient particularity that DePuy presented false claims to the VA.

First, the allegations focus entirely on the actions of a Naval Medical Center employee and do not specifically allege any actions by DePuy concerning the orders. The SAC lists orders by the employee requesting a Pinnacle MoM product, but it [*251] does not include any details about alleged claims or any actions by DePuy employees in relation to the orders. [58] Paragraphs 485 and 486 do not even allege that DePuy in fact filled the orders and delivered the devices to the Naval Medical Center. Nor are there any allegations that DePuy invoiced the VA for the ordered products or requested payment, other than the broad allegation that the orders "obligated the Navy to pay" certain amounts. The paragraphs do not allege an order number or any other source-identifying information about any particular claim. There is no indication that any DePuy employee solicited, processed, or even knew about those alleged orders.

Second, the allegations fail to allege any details about the products themselves and how they caused the claim in question (if there was a claim) to be false. There is no allegation, for example, that those two specific products actually failed, had to be replaced, or were otherwise defective. Indeed, paragraphs 485 and 486 do not even allege that the ordered products were in fact implanted in a patient, or when, where, and by which doctor. In short, the SAC pleads no specific details that would suggest that the two orders resulted in false claims.

The relators rely on United States ex rel. Rodwell v. Excelitas Technologies, Corp., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 78508, 2015 WL 3766866 (D. Mass. June 16, 2015), in support of their contention that the complaint is sufficient. In [59] Rodwell, the court denied the defendant's motion to dismiss on Rule 9(b) grounds even though the relator "d[id] not identify any particular claim or invoice submitted to the government." *2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 78508, [WL] at 6. But in Rodwell, the relator identified specific contracts that the defendant had with the government, the specific terms of those contracts, and three batches of product orders that the government placed pursuant to those contracts, including the specific models of products ordered, specific quantities of each model ordered (more than one thousand in total), and the specific costs to the government. Id.

Here, however, the relators' allegations about DePuy's two alleged contracts are vague as to what products they covered, what their terms were, and whether DePuy presented the VA with any false claims for Pinnacle MoM devices pursuant to those contracts. Notably, the SAC does not connect the two contracts to any of the twelve alleged orders in paragraphs 479 through 490. The SAC generally describes the Federal Supply Schedule Service ("FSS") and Federal Supply Schedule Group 65 Part II Section A ("65 II A contract"). (SAC ¶¶ 114-15). But although the SAC describes the two VA contracts, it never actually alleges [60] that DePuy had an FSS contract with the VA. (SAC ¶ 474). The SAC does not allege that either the 2006 "Orthopaedics Implant contract" (SAC ¶ 476) or the 2011 "Indefinite Delivery contract" (SAC ¶ 477) were FSS 65 II A contracts that would be governed by FDA regulations. Nor does the SAC include the contracts as attachments or quote relevant content from their terms. In fact, the SAC does not cite any terms of those specific alleged contracts at all. And finally, unlike in Rodwell, the SAC here contains no allegations about the specific products purchased pursuant to the contracts. In Rodwell, the relators included specific product models and quantities. Here, the SAC vaguely alleges that DePuy sold an unknown number of "Pinnacle Hip Implant products" under the contracts, without alleging that the contracts covered the sale of the Pinnacle MoM device. (SAC ¶ 478).

In sum, the SAC spends more than two hundred paragraphs detailing misrepresentations and false statements that DePuy [*252] allegedly made to the FDA and surgeons, including the relators themselves. (See SAC ¶¶ 201-412). It alleges in general terms that "the government directly purchased . . . hundreds of thousands of Pinnacle products." [61] (SAC ¶ 7). But ten of the twelve allegedly false claims do not even refer to the only product relevant to this suit: the Pinnacle metal-on-metal device. For the two remaining "orders," the SAC fails to plead with sufficient particularity the who, what, when, where, and how of a single false claim that DePuy presented to the VA. Accordingly, the relators' claims pursuant to 31 U.S.C. § 3729(a)(1)(A) will be dismissed for failure to meet the heightened pleading requirements of Rule 9(b).

b. Indirect Claims

The SAC alleges that DePuy is liable under 31 U.S.C. § 3729(a)(1)(B) because it made false statements and omissions that were material to the claims of third-party surgeons to government health-care programs such as Medicare and Medicaid. DePuy contends that the claim should be dismissed under Rule 9(b) because the SAC fails to allege any specific false claims and because it fails to suggest an inference of fraud beyond a mere possibility.

The First Circuit has distinguished pleading standards for direct claims, or sales to the government, which are governed by 31 U.S.C. § 3729(a)(1)(A), from indirect claims to the government where a defendant causes third-parties to submit false claims, which are governed by 31 U.S.C. § 3729(a)(1)(B). See United States ex rel. Duxbury v. Ortho Biotech Prods., L.P., 579 F.3d 13, 29 (1st Cir. 2009) ("Duxbury I"). "In a qui tam action in which the defendant is [62] alleged to have induced third parties to file false claims with the government, a relator can satisfy this requirement by 'providing factual or statistical evidence to strengthen the inference of fraud beyond possibility without necessarily providing details as to each false claim.'" Ge, 737 F.3d at 123-24 (quoting Duxbury I, 579 F.3d at 29). Thus, a qui tam complaint alleging that a defendant induced a third party to submit false claims to the government for reimbursement must allege two things to satisfy Rule 9(b): (1) particular details of a scheme to cause the submission of false claims to the government; and (2) factual or statistical evidence that strengthens the inference of fraud on the government beyond a mere possibility. Duxbury I, 579 F.3d at 29.

The SAC pleads a single representative indirect claim in paragraph 414. The relators contend that, even standing alone without further support, the allegation is sufficient to defeat DePuy's motion to dismiss. Specifically, the SAC alleges that on November 12, 2007, patient "'F.I.' was implanted with a DePuy Pinnacle hip implant" by a surgeon in New York. (SAC ¶ 414). For the reasons explained above, such a claim does not meet the requirements of Rule 9(b); it does not identify the specific Pinnacle MoM device that is [63] the subject of the present controversy. Put another way, the SAC does not allege that the surgeon presented a claim to Medicaid for a Pinnacle MoM device, as opposed to a Pinnacle device with a ceramic head or a polyethylene liner.

Accordingly, without alleging any details as to a specific false claim for the relevant DePuy Pinnacle device, the relators must rely on the SAC's other factual and statistical evidence to strengthen the inference of fraud beyond a mere possibility. That evidence, however, fails to satisfy the requirements of Rule 9(b) as described by the First Circuit in Ge and Duxbury I.

In Ge, the relator's complaint alleged that the defendant pharmaceutical company had failed to file accurate and timely adverse event reports with the FDA, and [*253] that if it had done so, numerous claims for those pharmaceuticals would not have been submitted to the federal government. 737 F.3d at 119-21. The FCA claim was dismissed because the relator "made no attempt in her complaints to allege facts that would show that some subset of claims for government payment for the four subject drugs was rendered false as a result of [defendant's] alleged misconduct." Id. at 124 (emphasis in original). "What is missing are any supporting [64] allegations upon which her conclusion rests and any particulars." Id.

In contrast, the court in Duxbury I found that the complaint sufficiently alleged factual evidence to sustain an inference of fraud. 579 F.3d at 30. The relator alleged that kickbacks provided by the defendant resulted in the submission of false claims by eight named health-care providers in the state of Washington. Id. The court concluded that those eight specific allegations were sufficient factual support to satisfy the requirements of Rule 9(b), although it described the matter as "a close call." Id.; see also Ge, 737 F.3d at 124 (referring to the allegations in Duxbury I as "barely adequate").

In Duxbury I, the First Circuit quoted one of the specific allegations the plaintiff made in that case:

> In 1997-98 Western Washington Treatment Center in Olympia, Washington, received more than $5,000 of free commercially packaged ProCrit from [defendant] under the direction of Robert Ashe so that Western Washington could submit the free product for reimbursement to Medicare under the false and fraudulent certification that the provider had paid for the product. [Defendant] intended the free commercially packaged ProCrit to be a "cash equivalent" "kickback" to Western [65] Washington in order to induce the provider to purchase ProCrit and to administer ProCrit at the "off-label" once a week dosing regiment. Western Washington was reimbursed by Medicare for the free commercially packaged ProCrit. As a result, [defendant] knowingly caused the presentation by Western Washington of these false claims to the United States Government.

579 F.3d at 30. The court concluded that the complaint's collection of eight specific examples of similar specificity, along with other allegations of the defendant's fraudulent scheme, were adequate (if "barely" so) to satisfy the requirements of Rule 9(b). Id. As the court noted, the plaintiff "identified, as to each of the eight medical providers (the who), the illegal kickbacks (the what), the rough time periods and locations (the where and when), and the filing of the false claims themselves." Id.

This Court has recently addressed another FCA case that presented a close call and found that the complaint satisfied the standards set forth in Duxbury I because the relator identified "one of defendants' sales representatives, the doctor, and the patient (the who), the specific misrepresentations made by the defendants (the what), time periods and locations [66] (the where and when), and the filing of the false claims themselves." See United States ex rel. Leysock v. Forest Labs., Inc., 55 F. Supp. 3d 210, 219 (D. Mass. 2014).

Here—setting aside for the moment the SAC's statistical allegations—the factual allegations in the SAC more closely resemble those rejected in Ge than those that were acceptable in Duxbury I and Leysock. In Duxbury I, the relator alleged that specific employees of the defendant received kickbacks from specific health-care providers and that the kickbacks resulted in a false claim. In Leysock, the relator alleged that specific physicians were the targets of defendants' off-label marketing and relied on that marketing, and alleged [*254] the specific dates that the physicians filled the prescriptions. The SAC here fails to connect the multiple allegations of DePuy's misrepresentations and omissions to any specific claims for payment. Nor does the SAC appear to identify a single physician who was a target of allegedly false DePuy marketing, identify a single physician who relied on that marketing, or identify a single physician who filed a false claim for the DePuy MoM device. The closest that the SAC comes to such specificity is "Dr. J.N." and "patient F.I.", but the SAC does not identify the specific representations or [67] materials that the doctor received and relied upon, nor does it allege the specific DePuy device for which the doctor filed a claim. (See SAC ¶¶ 414-24).[8]

Furthermore, the SAC's unfocused and imprecise statistical evidence adds little to establish DePuy's fraud beyond a mere possibility. The SAC alleges that more than one million metal-on-metal devices were sold worldwide "[d]uring the times relevant to this complaint," and that in 2010, more than 300,000 "hip-replacement surgeries were performed in the United States." (SAC ¶¶ 434, 436). Therefore, according to the SAC, because "the Pinnacle MoM hip was one of the most widely used hip-replacement systems that remained in the international marketplace," as a matter of logic "it follows that hundreds of thousands of Pinnacle products were implanted in government healthcare recipients and reimbursed by the government during the lifespan of the product." (SAC ¶¶ 434, 437). Those statistical allegations are not sufficiently precise or consistent as to the geographical scope, time period, or product type to maintain an inference [68] of fraud. The broad statistical claims made here could be made about virtually any successful medical device or product.[9]

Finally, to the extent that the relators contend that every indirect claim for reimbursement of the Pinnacle MoM device was false because the device's defects made [69] it "not reasonable and necessary" under 42 U.S.C. § 1395y(a)(1)(A), such an argument must fail. Surely to survive a motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 9(b) and Rule 12(b)(6), the relators must do more than allege that a product's alleged defects automatically make it unreasonable and unnecessary. Such a theory of liability, if allowed to proceed, would convert almost any product-liability suit into one that also states a claim under the False Claims Act.

In short, the SAC is slightly more detailed than the complaint in Ge, which the First Circuit found to be inadequate under Rule 9(b). It contains, however, almost no specific allegations as to actual false claims in comparison to the detailed eight claims in Duxbury I, which the First Circuit said was "barely adequate" and where dismissal was considered a "close call." Accordingly, DePuy's motion to dismiss will be [*255] granted as to the federal FCA claims (Counts One and Two) for failure to comply with the requirements of Rule 9(b).

2. Rule 12(b)(6)

DePuy also contends that the relators' federal FCA claims pursuant to § 3729(a)(1)(A)-(B)) should be dismissed for failure to state a claim under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). Specifically, DePuy contends that the SAC fails to state a claim because even if it made misstatements about the Pinnacle MoM device, the relators [70] fail to allege that those misstatements resulted in any claims that were actually "false" as the First Circuit interpreted the meaning of the term in United States ex rel. Escobar v. Universal Health Services, 780 F.3d 504, 512 (1st Cir. 2015).[10]

[8] It is also noteworthy that the allegations with regard to that order are based on mere "information and belief." (SAC ¶¶ 414-24).

[9] If the rule were otherwise, virtually any claim of misrepresentation or a product defect involving medical devices, pharmaceuticals, or other medical products could be brought as a qui tam action. Government health-care programs such as Medicare and Medicaid represent a huge portion of health-care expenditures in the United States. As a matter of logic, any scheme that causes unreasonable or unnecessary purchases of a product or service will almost certainly result in the submission of some false claim, by someone, somewhere, to the federal government. Rule 9(b), however, requires something more than conclusory allegations that false claims must have resulted from the misconduct. See Ge, 737 F.3d at 124 (stating that the court "reject[s] [the] approach" sought by the relator, which was "a per se rule that if sufficient allegations of misconduct are made, it necessarily follows that false claims and/or material false information were filed").

[10] DePuy also contends that the SAC fails to allege that DePuy made any false statements in submitting or causing third-parties to submit false claims that were "material" to the government's decision to reimburse the claim. In most cases, materiality issues are not appropriate for resolution on the pleadings because the element, as defined by the First Circuit, is highly dependent on the facts. See, e.g., Loughren, 613 F.3d at 308 (noting that "materiality in the FCA context involves a factual determination of the

After the Court held a hearing on DePuy's motion to dismiss, the Supreme Court, on December 3, 2015, granted a petition for review of the First Circuit's decision in Escobar. See Universal Health Servs., Inc. v. United States, 136 S. Ct. 582, 193 L. Ed. 2d 465. As explained more fully below, a complicated circuit split on the issues [71] of (1) implied certification and (2) conditions of participation versus conditions of payment will continue to affect FCA cases until the Supreme Court issues its ruling in Universal Health Services. It does not appear that the Supreme Court has set a briefing schedule or argument date, and the Court very well could resolve some issues while reserving others for remand to the First Circuit. Thus, it appears unlikely that the FCA issues presented by Escobar and related cases in other circuits——namely, what suffices as a "false" claim——will be resolved within the next year. In any event, the Court has already reached a resolution of the relators' federal FCA claims on the independent grounds of Rule 9(b). Accordingly, the Court will defer ruling on the Rule 12(b)(6) issues.

As noted, the False Claims Act proscribes "knowingly present[ing], or caus[ing] to be presented, a false or fraudulent claim for payment or approval" and "knowingly mak[ing], us[ing], or caus[ing] to be made or used, a false record or statement material to a false or fraudulent claim." 31 U.S.C. § 3729(a)(1)(A)-(B). To be actionable, a false or fraudulent claim or statement must also be material to the government's decision to pay a claim. See Loughren, 613 F.3d at 307 ("We have long held that the FCA is subject to a judicially-imposed [72] requirement that the allegedly false claim or statement be material.").

As one judge in this district has recently noted since the First Circuit's decision in Escobar, "[f]alse statements come in the full spectrum of shades of gray, and the False Claims Act provides little help to courts attempting to separate actionable ones from permissible ones." *United States ex rel. Bierman v. Orthofix Int'l, N.V., 113 F. Supp. 3d 414, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 91692, 2015 WL 4197551, at 3 (D. Mass. July 1, 2015) (Zobel, J.). Some circuits have announced fixed rules to determine whether a claim is actionable by separating various types of false claims into categories. One such categorization divides claims and statements [*256] that are factually false (such as when a contractor does not provide the product for which reimbursement is sought) from those that are legally false (such as false certifications of compliance with statutes or regulations). See, e.g., United States ex rel. Conner v. Salina Reg'l Health Ctr., Inc., 543 F.3d 1211, 1217 (10th Cir. 2008); Mikes v. Straus, 274 F.3d 687, 696-97 (2d Cir. 2001).

But the disagreement among the circuits about the meaning of a false claim exists at two further levels of categorization. First, one categorization divides legally false statements into groups based on theories of "express" certification and "implied" certification. See United States ex rel. Wilkins v. United Health Grp., Inc., 659 F.3d 295, 305-06 (3d Cir. 2011) (collecting cases). Under the theory of express certification, a company faces liability under the FCA by fraudulently and expressly [73] certifying compliance with a statute, regulation, or contractual provision when submitting a claim for payment. Id. Under the theory of implied certification, a company may face liability even if it did not certify compliance with a statute or regulation when submitting the claim, but instead made an earlier, more general certification. Id. The Seventh Circuit has recently adopted only express certification and rejected all theories of implied certification. *See United States v. Sanford-Brown, Ltd., 788 F.3d 696, 2015 WL 3541422, at 12 (7th Cir. 2015) ("Although a number of other circuits have adopted the so-called doctrine of implied false certification . . . we decline to join them . . . ."). Other circuits however, including the First Circuit, have accepted, to varying degrees, the theory of implied certification.[11]

Second, the circuits that have accepted the implied certification theory are further divided. Every circuit to accept implied certification requires that compliance with a statute, regulation, or contractual provision that is allegedly violated must [74] be a condition of payment by the government payor. There is disagreement among the circuits, however, as to whether a condition of payment must be expressly identified as such, or whether a statute, regulation, or contractual provision can be a condition of payment if it does not state that payment is conditioned on compliance. The Second and Sixth Circuits fall into the former category, concluding that a company impliedly weight that the decisionmaker would have given particular information"). Because the Court has resolved the present motion on the narrower issue of Rule 9(b)'s pleading requirements——along with the fact that Escobar would need to be resolved by the Supreme Court—— the Court will not address DePuy's second argument.

[11] Although the First Circuit has "eschewed distinctions" used by other circuits in describing types of FCA claims, as discussed below, it appears that the court in Escobar applied a theory of implied certification. 780 F.3d at 512.

certifies compliance with a statute, regulation, or contractual provision for purposes of FCA liability only if the government expressly conditions payment on compliance. See Chesbrough v. VPA, P.C., 655 F.3d 461, 468 (6th Cir. 2011); Straus, 274 F.3d at 700-02. In other words, according to those circuits, the legal obligation in question must be explicitly designated as a condition of payment. Conversely, the First, Fourth, and D.C. Circuits do not require a legal obligation to be expressly identified as a condition of payment; instead, those circuits have found "implied conditions of payment"——sometimes referred to as conditions of participation——without explicit language in the relevant statute, regulation, or contract. See Escobar, 780 F.3d at 513-14; United States v. Triple Canopy, Inc., 775 F.3d 628, 636 (4th Cir. 2015); United States v. Science Apps. Int'l Corp., 626 F.3d 1257, 1269, 393 U.S. App. D.C. 223 (D.C. Cir. 2010) ("SAIC").

In Escobar, the First Circuit declared that it had "eschewed distinctions between factually and legally false [75] claims, and those between implied and express certification theories, reasoning that they 'create artificial barriers that obscure and distort [the [*257] statute's] requirements.'" Escobar, 780 F.3d at 512 (quoting United States ex rel. Hutcheson v. Blackstone Med., Inc., 647 F.3d 377, 385 (1st Cir. 2011)). Instead, the court wrote that it takes "a broad view of what may constitute a false or fraudulent statement to avoid 'foreclos[ing] [False Claims Act] liability in situations that Congress intended to fall within the Act's scope,'" United States ex rel. Jones v. Brigham & Women's Hosp., 678 F.3d 72, 85 (1st Cir. 2012) (quoting Hutcheson, 647 F.3d at 387), "ask[ing] simply whether the defendant, in submitting a claim for reimbursement, knowingly misrepresented compliance with a material precondition of payment." Escobar, 780 F.3d at 512. As interpreted by the First Circuit, "preconditions of payment, which may be found in sources such as statutes, regulations, and contracts, need not be 'expressly designated.'" Id. (quoting Hutcheson, 647 F.3d at 387-88). "Rather, the question whether a given requirement constitutes a precondition to payment is a 'fact-intensive and context-specific inquiry,' involving a close reading of the foundational documents, or statutes and regulations, at issue." Id. at 512-13 (quoting New York v. Amgen Inc., 652 F.3d 103, 110 (1st Cir. 2011)).

In Escobar, the relators' daughter died while receiving treatment from unlicensed providers at a Massachusetts counseling center owned by Universal Health Services. Id. at 509. The relators alleged [76] that the treatment facility violated the FCA because it, in submitting claims for payment, impliedly falsely represented that it had complied with various state regulations, including regulations concerning the licensing and supervision of providers. Id. at 510-11. The district court dismissed the complaint in its entirety for failure to plead the requisite element of falsity. United States ex rel. Escobar v. Universal Health Servs., Inc., 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 40098, 2014 WL 1271757, at *7 (D. Mass. Mar. 26, 2014). The district court drew a distinction between requirements that MassHealth imposed on providers as conditions of payment, and those imposed as conditions to participation in the program in the first instance. 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 40098, [WL] at *6 ("Violations of only a condition of participation will not suffice."). The district court concluded that only one of the regulations cited by the relators was a condition of payment, and for that regulation, it concluded that the relators had not plausibly alleged that the defendant had violated the provision. 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 40098, [WL] at *11-12. The First Circuit reversed, finding that a regulation that the district court did not address was a condition of payment, and held that "[b]ecause [First Circuit] case law makes clear that a healthcare provider's noncompliance with conditions of payment is sufficient to establish the falsity of a claim for reimbursement, [77] we need not address here whether the False Claims Act embraces a distinction between conditions of payment and conditions of participation." Escobar, 780 F.3d at 517. Nonetheless, the court further stated that "express certification" of compliance with a condition of payment is not required under the FCA. Id. at 514 n.14.

Thus, even though the First Circuit indicated that it would not entertain distinctions between express and implied certification, the defendant filed a petition for a writ of certiorari asking the Supreme Court to address issues of implied certification and conditions of payment. The Supreme Court granted review on two questions:

> (1) Whether the "implied certification" theory of legal falsity under the FCA—— applied by the First Circuit below but recently rejected by the Seventh Circuit——is viable; and
> (2) Whether, if the "implied certification" theory is viable, a government contractor's reimbursement claim can be legally "false" under that theory if the provider failed to comply [*258] with a statute, regulation, or > contractual provision that does not state that it is a condition of payment, as held by the First, Fourth, and D.C. Circuits; or whether liability for a legally "false" reimbursement claim requires [78] that the statute, regulation, or contractual provision expressly state that it is a condition of payment, as held by the Second and Sixth Circuits.

Universal Health Services, Inc. v. United States, 136 S. Ct. 582, 193 L. Ed. 2d 465 (2015).

Here, taking all of the SAC's allegations as true, it appears that DePuy's motion to dismiss on Rule 12(b)(6) grounds depends on the resolution of those two issues by the Supreme Court. Liberally construed, the SAC alleges that DePuy had two contracts to sell DePuy Pinnacle devices to the VA; that the contracts at least implicitly certified that the devices were sold pursuant to Federal Supply Schedule Group 65 Part II Section A, which requires that items are "merchantable and fit for use of the particular purpose described in th[e] contract" and "in compliance with Section 510(k) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act"; and that the MoM device did not comply with those implied certifications. (SAC ¶¶ 117, 281-99, 474-78).

Thus, it appears that in order to address DePuy's motion to dismiss on Rule 12(b)(6) grounds, the Court would need to await a decision from the Supreme Court about the viability of the implied-certification theory——and in particular, the theory of implied certification adopted by the First Circuit in Escobar. Accordingly, the Court will reserve judgment as to [79] those issues.

B. Count Three: FCA Conspiracy Claim

Count Three alleges that DePuy violated the FCA by conspiring with its own employees to defraud government health-care programs. The SAC alleges that "[a]s set forth above, all named defendants have conspired with its officers, agents, and employees to defraud the United States government by presenting false or fraudulent claims for payment in violation of 31 U.S.C. § 3729(a)(1)(C)." (SAC ¶ 506). The SAC further alleges that "defendants conspired with its officers, agents, and employees authorizing them to take and conceal the actions set forth above." (SAC ¶ 507). DePuy contends that the conspiracy claim should be dismissed because a corporation cannot conspire with its officers and employees to violate the FCA.

Pursuant to 31 U.S.C. § 3729, "any person who—(A) knowingly presents, or causes to be presented, a false or fraudulent claim for payment or approval; (B) knowingly makes, uses, or causes to be made or used, a false record or statement material to a false or fraudulent claim; [or] (C) conspires to commit a violation of subparagraph (A) [or] (B) . . . is liable" for a violation of the FCA.

Of course, a corporation can only violate the FCA through the actions of its agents [80] and employees. If DePuy is violating the FCA, there is no meaningful distinction between the relators' claims in Counts One and Two for false or fraudulent claims, statements, and records and Count Three for conspiracy to defraud the government health-care programs.

It therefore does not make sense to permit a conspiracy claim under the FCA to proceed on the theory that DePuy has conspired with its officers and employees. This concept has been endorsed by the Supreme Court in antitrust law. See Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 769, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984) (explaining that "officers [*259] of a single firm are not separate economic actors pursuing separate economic interests, so agreements among them . . . do not provide the plurality of actors imperative for a" conspiracy under section 1 of the Sherman Act). Multiple courts have found that companies cannot conspire with their employees or agents in the FCA context. See, e.g., United States ex rel. Ruhe v. Masimo Corp., 929 F. Supp. 2d 1033, 1037-38 (C.D. Cal. 2012) (holding that conspiracy claim failed to state a claim because a corporation cannot conspire with its own employees or agents); United States ex rel. Head v. Kane & Co., 798 F. Supp. 2d 186, 201 (D.D.C. 2011) (finding that a company could not have conspired with its employees to violate the FCA); *United States ex rel. Loughren v. Unumprovident Corp., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 123382, 2008 WL 4280133, at 3 (D. Mass. Sept. 15, 2008) (dismissing FCA conspiracy claims during periods when defendants were corporate affiliates because parent and subsidiary [81] corporation cannot conspire as a matter of law); United States ex rel. Brooks v. Lockheed Martin Corp., 423 F. Supp. 2d 522, 528 (D. Md. 2006) (finding that parent company and its two wholly-owned subsidiaries could not conspire among themselves to violate the FCA); United States ex rel. Reagan v. East Tex. Med. Ctr. Reg'l Health-care Sys., 274 F. Supp. 2d 824, 856 (S.D. Tex. 2003) (finding that a parent corporation cannot conspire with various components and subsidiaries to commit a conspiracy in violation of the FCA).

In short, although corporate employees could conspire with outside individuals, such as physicians, the conspiracy cannot be between the corporations and their officers and employees. Accordingly, DePuy's motion to dismiss the conspiracy claim (Count Three) will be granted.

C. Counts Four through Thirty-Seven: State FCA Claims

Counts Four through Thirty-Seven of the SAC allege violations of various state and municipal analogues to the federal FCA.[12] DePuy contends that those claims should be dismissed for the same reasons the federal FCA claims should be dismissed.

The First Circuit has noted that "[g]iven the substantive similarity of the state FCAs . . . and the federal FCA with respect to the provisions at issue in this litigation, the state statutes may be construed consistently with the federal act." Amgen, 652 F.3d at 109. Thus, [82] Rule 9(b)'s heightened pleading requirements apply equally to allegations made pursuant to violations of a state FCA. See, e.g., Nowak, 806 F. Supp. 2d at 357 ("In order to satisfy Rule 9(b), [relator] must allege some specificity with respect to each asserted state and cannot rely upon generalized pleadings.").

Here, with two exceptions, the SAC's state FCA allegations do not even come close to satisfying the pleading requirements of Rule 9(b). For 33 of the state-law FCA counts, the SAC contains identical language that "repeat[s] and reallage[s] each and every allegation contained in the paragraphs above as though fully set forth herein." (See, e.g., SAC ¶ 509). With the exceptions of California[13] and New York, the SAC contains no allegations of fraudulent conduct or false claims for the Pinnacle MoM device beyond the repeated [*260] conclusory allegations found in the specific counts.

Moreover, the SAC's allegations concerning California are limited to a San Diego patient who allegedly ordered a Pinnacle MoM device and a "Summitt Pinnacle metal on metal" device through the VA on September 28, 2007. (SAC [83] ¶¶ 485-86). For the reasons discussed above, those allegations are insufficient to meet the requirements of Rule 9(b). Finally, the SAC's allegations about the one New York Medicaid patient who received a "Pinnacle hip implant"—— along with the related New York statistics——are insufficient to survive Rule 9(b) because they do not refer to the Pinnacle MoM device that is the subject of this litigation and do not raise an inference of fraud beyond mere possibility. (SAC ¶¶ 414-28, 438-55).

Accordingly, DePuy's motion to dismiss will be granted as to the state and municipal FCA claims (Counts Four through Thirty-Seven) for failure to comply with the requirements of Rule 9(b).

D. Motion to Unseal

On August 24, 2015, the relators moved under seal to unseal the SAC. DePuy assented to that motion on September 2, 2015, but requested that certain other documents also be unsealed: (1) the relators' motion to unseal the SAC, the accompanying memorandum of law and exhibits, and DePuy's response and accompanying exhibits; and (2) all documents and filings relating to DePuy's motion to dismiss.

[12] For these purposes, the District of Columbia will be considered a "state."

[13] California is the only state among the alleged false claims in paragraphs 479 through 490 where the SAC alleges an order of a Pinnacle MoM device. (See SAC ¶¶ 479-90).

Under the FCA, a qui tam relator must comply with the following pre-suit requirements:

> A copy of the complaint and written disclosure [84] of substantially all material evidence and information the person possesses shall be served on the Government . . . . The complaint shall be filed in camera, shall remain under seal for at least 60 days, and shall not be served on the defendant until the court so orders. The Government may elect to intervene and proceed with the action within 60 days after it receives both the complaint and the material evidence and information.

31 U.S.C. § 3730(b)(2).

The relators filed the initial complaint under seal on May 18, 2012. Judge Talwani partially unsealed the case on August 12, 2014, but the complaint remained under seal. This Court denied a renewed motion to unseal the case on March 18, 2015, without prejudice. The SAC and documents relating to DePuy's motion to dismiss have remained under seal since.

The case has reached a point where unsealing the complaint and related documents is appropriate. Accordingly, both parties' motions to unseal certain documents will be granted and the Court directs the clerk to unseal the following docket number entries, including exhibits: Docket Nos. 145, 146, 152, 153, 159, 166, 172, and 177.

E. Leave to Amend

The relators filed the initial complaint in this case on May 18, 2012. [85] The relators filed an amended complaint on December 2, 2013. On June 5, 2015, the Court granted, over the objection of DePuy, the relators' motion to amend the first amended complaint and file a second amended complaint. On June 29, 2015, DePuy filed its motion to dismiss. The relators have not filed a formal motion for leave to amend the SAC. However, in the conclusion section of their opposition to DePuy's motion to dismiss, filed on July 13, 2015, the relators conclude: "For all the foregoing reasons, defendants' motion to dismiss the SAC should be denied. In the alternative, relators should be granted leave to amend [*261] insofar as it may be necessary to plead additional facts to meet the standards of Rule 12(b)(6) and/or 9(b)." (Relators' Mem. Opp. 30).[14]

The SAC will be dismissed with prejudice and the relators' request to file a fourth complaint will be denied. Relators filed their original complaint in 2012, three years after Duxbury I firmly established the FCA pleading requirements in the First Circuit. After amending their complaint twice, relators opposed DePuy's motion to dismiss instead of filing a request to amend the complaint a third time. Hedging their bets, at the very end of their opposition, relators requested leave to amend using boilerplate language. See Ge, 737 F.3d at 128 ("[W]here, as here, a request to file an amended complaint consists of nothing more than 'boilerplate sentences stating the well-settled 'freely given' standard under which a request for leave to amend is generally analyzed,' a district court 'acts well within its discretion when completely disregarding the request.'" (quoting Silverstrand Invs. v. AMAG Pharms., Inc., 707 F.3d 95, 107-08 (1st Cir. 2013))). Moreover, as the First Circuit has held in the context of post-judgment requests to amend a complaint, allowing relators to file a fourth complaint here after fully litigating the issues "would allow plaintiffs to pursue a case to judgment and then, if they lose, to reopen the case by amending their complaint to [87] take account of the court's decision. Such a practice would dramatically undermine the ordinary rules governing the finality of judicial decisions, and should not be sanctioned in the absence of compelling circumstances." James v. Watt, 716 F.2d 71, 78 (1st Cir. 1983) (Breyer, J.).

[14] The relators made similar requests in their sur-reply brief and post-hearing supplemental filing. (Docket Nos. 166, 179). The relators also contend that leave to amend should be granted because DePuy did not move to dismiss the SAC with prejudice. But DePuy explicitly did so, as noted on the first page of its motion to dismiss, filed on June 29, 2015. (Docket No. 145) ("Pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 9(b) and 12(b)(6), Defendants . . . respectfully move to dismiss the relators' second [86] amended complaint with prejudice.").

Despite full awareness of Rule 9(b)'s pleading standards, the relators—who are expert witnesses in related products-liability lawsuits against DePuy—have failed to plead with requisite particularity even a single false claim for the Pinnacle MoM device in their 168-page second amended complaint. The Federal Rules call for courts to "freely give leave [to amend] when justice so requires." Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a)(2). Justice would not be served by granting relators' request to file a third amended complaint; rather, such a grant would prejudice the defendants and incentivize future unfair amendment tactics.

Accordingly, relators' request to file a third amended complaint is denied on the grounds of undue delay. See Foman v. Davis, 371 U.S. 178, 182, 83 S. Ct. 227, 9 L. Ed. 2d 222 (1962) (noting that amendments may be denied on the basis of "undue delay, bad faith or dilatory motive on the part of the movant, repeated failure to cure deficiencies by amendments previously allowed, undue prejudice to the opposing party by virtue of allowance of the amendment, [and] [88] futility of amendment"); United States ex rel. D'Agostino v. EV3, Inc., 802 F.3d 188, 195 (1st Cir. 2015) (noting that, even though the Rule 15 standard applied——instead of the Rule 16 good cause standard——to a relator's request to amend a qui tam complaint, "[l]et us be perfectly clear. We do not suggest that the district court will be compelled to grant the motion to amend on remand. After all, there are myriad reasons that might justify the denial [*262] of a motion for leave to amend, including undue delay, repeated failure to cure deficiencies, or futility." (citing Foman, 371 U.S. at 182)). "When 'considerable time has elapsed between the filing of the complaint and the motion to amend, the movant has [at the very least] the burden of showing some valid reason for his neglect and delay.'" In re Lombardo, 755 F.3d 1, 3 (1st Cir. 2014) (internal quotation marks omitted) (quoting Stepanischen v. Merchants Despatch Transp. Corp., 722 F.2d 922, 933 (1st Cir. 1983)). The First Circuit has "previously labeled as 'considerable time' warranting explanation, periods of fourteen months, fifteen months, and seventeen months." Id. (citations omitted) (citing Grant v. News Grp. Bos., Inc., 55 F.3d 1, 6 (1st Cir. 1995) (fourteen months); Acosta-Mestre v. Hilton Int'l of P.R., Inc., 156 F.3d 49, 51-52 (1st Cir. 1998) (fifteen months); Stepanischen, 722 F.2d at 933 (sixteen months)). The First Circuit has "also held that in assessing whether delay is undue, a court will take account of what the movant 'knew or should have known and what he did or should have done.'" Id. at 3-4 [89] (quoting Invest Almaz v. Temple-Inland Forest Prods. Corp., 243 F.3d 57, 72 (1st Cir. 2001)). Delays for periods as short as eleven months, four months, and less than three months have been found to constitute undue delay. See Calderón-Serra v. Wilmington Trust Co., 715 F.3d 14, 19-20 (1st Cir. 2013) (eleven-month delay); Villanueva v. United States, 662 F.3d 124, 127 (1st Cir. 2011) (four-month delay); Kay v. N.H. Dem. Party, 821 F.2d 31, 34 (1st Cir. 1987) (less than three-month delay).

Here, the relators filed their original complaint in 2012, when they should have already been aware of the First Circuit's Rule 9(b) pleading standard in FCA cases. Since that time, they have amended the complaint twice. At the very latest, they should have been aware of the SAC's deficiencies when DePuy filed its motion to dismiss in June 2015. Instead, the relators vigorously litigated the motion, including the filing of a sur-reply and multiple post-argument supplemental briefs. Now, they wish to amend the complaint a third time. Considerable time has passed since the filing of the original complaint and since the relators were put on notice of the defects in the complaint, and the relators have not demonstrated a legitimate reason for their neglect and delay. Accordingly, the relators' request for leave to amend the SAC and file a third amended complaint will be denied.

IV. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, DePuy's motion to dismiss the second amended complaint with prejudice is GRANTED, and the clerk is hereby directed to unseal the docket entries indicated above. Relators' request for leave to amend its second amended complaint is DENIED.

ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO DISMISS

I. INTRODUCTION

Plaintiff G.U.E. Tech, LLC ("G.U.E.") brings this action against Defendant Panasonic Avionics Corporation ("PAC") for (1) violations of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1; (2) violations of the Cartwright Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16700, et seq.; (3) trade libel; (4) product disparagement under the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a)(1)(B); (5) fraud and deceit; (6) intentional interference with prospective economic relations; (7) violations of the California Unfair Competition Law ("UCL"), Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200, et seq.; and (8) restitution. After the Court granted in part and denied in part PAC's motion to dismiss the complaint, G.U.E. filed a First Amended Complaint. Currently before the Court is PAC's [*2] motion to dismiss the First Amended Complaint for failure to state a claim. (Dkt. 31.) For the following reasons, that motion is GRANTED IN PART AND DENIED IN PART.[1]

II. FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

G.U.E. is a software company that produces and licenses video games that airline passengers can play on in-flight entertainment ("IFE") systems installed in commercial aircraft. (Dkt. 25 ("First Amended Complaint" ("FAC")) ¶ 2.) PAC is the largest producer of those IFE systems, allegedly controlling approximately 75% of the IFE market (the "Systems Market"). (Id. ¶ 3.) G.U.E., by contrast, is one of a handful of significant companies in the market for games playable on IFE systems (the "Games Market"). (Id. ¶ 11.)

PAC maintains a content database—accessible to airlines that are customers of its IFE systems—which contains a list of video games compatible with PAC IFE systems. (FAC ¶ 204.) The only games included in the database are ones from PAC's "preferred," "authorized," or "approved" vendors. (Id.) To become such a vendor and have its games listed, a video game company must agree to give PAC 30% of its video game sales revenue, regardless of whether that revenue is derived from PAC-facilitated [*3] sales. (Id. ¶ 10.) A number of G.U.E.'s competitors—fellow video game producers and designers—have agreed to this arrangement and have their games listed in PAC's content database in exchange for surrendering 30% of their sales revenues to PAC (the "30% Agreement"). (Id. ¶ 13.) PAC has offered to sign a similar arrangement with G.U.E. twice, but G.U.E. has refused. (Id. ¶¶ 28; 31.) As a result, G.U.E.'s games are not listed in PAC's content database, and G.U.E. pursues alternative avenues for selling its games to airlines that use PAC's IFE systems. (Id. ¶ 31.)

Separately, G.U.E. alleges that PAC embarked on a "campaign to injure G.U.E. Tech's prospective business." (FAC ¶ 197.) G.U.E. claims that after it entered into negotiations with airlines interested in purchasing its games, PAC published "false or misleading representations" to those airlines in an attempt to sink the prospective deals. (Id. ¶ 221.) Specifically, PAC falsely represented to a number of potential G.U.E. customers that G.U.E.'s games would require very extensive testing before implementation on PAC's systems, or that the customers were only permitted to install games from PAC's approved list on their PAC IFE systems [*4] without extensive technical changes. (See FAC ¶¶ 285; 303.)

Based on these factual allegations, G.U.E. filed its complaint in May 2015. The initial complaint alleged a monopoly maintenance claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act, trade libel, intentional interference with prospective economic relations, violations of the UCL, and unjust enrichment. (See Dkt. 1.) PAC moved to dismiss for failure to state a claim, (Dkt. 16), and the Court granted its motion in part and denied it in part, (Dkt. 24.) The Court dismissed with leave to amend G.U.E.'s monopoly maintenance cause of action because G.U.E. failed to allege that it and PAC operated in the same market, or that it had suffered antitrust injury in the market PAC had monopolized. (See Dkt. 24 at 4-8.) It also dismissed G.U.E.'s unjust enrichment cause of action because unjust enrichment is not a standalone cause of action in California. (Id. at 14.) The Court denied PAC's motion, however, as to G.U.E.'s claims for trade libel, intentional interference with prospective economic relations, and violations of the UCL, ruling that those causes of action had been adequately pleaded to survive a motion to dismiss. (Id. at 9-14.) Subsequently, G.U.E. filed its First [*5] Amended Complaint. (See generally FAC.)

The FAC expands on G.U.E.'s factual allegations—it is 139 pages—and makes a number of important legal pivots. Most importantly, G.U.E. dramatically reworks its antitrust allegations by asserting two separate causes of action under the Sherman Act. First, it brings a group boycott/concerted refusal to deal claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, alleging essentially that PAC conspired with G.U.E.'s competitors to deny it access to the Games Market. (FAC ¶¶ 429-45.) Second, G.U.E. asserts another monopoly maintenance claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act. But rather than allege that PAC leverages its monopoly of the Systems Market to maintain a monopoly in the Games Market, as it did in its original complaint, G.U.E. instead posits the existence of a "Distribution Market." The "Distribution Market" is just another name for PAC's content database, to which G.U.E. does not have access. (Id. ¶¶ 554-64.) G.U.E. alleges that PAC's exclusion of it from the Distribution Market permits it to maintain its monopoly in that market. G.U.E. also alleges that these actions violate the Cartwright Act, California's antitrust statute.

[1] Having read and considered the papers presented by the parties, the Court finds this matter appropriate for disposition without a hearing. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 78; Local Rule 7-15. Accordingly, the hearing set for February 8, 2016 at 1:30 p.m. is hereby vacated and off calendar.

Next, the FAC adds a cause of action for [*6] product disparagement under the Lanham Act, as well as a cause of action for fraud/deceit, based on a handful of particular misrepresentations. Finally, G.U.E. reworks what was originally its "unjust enrichment" claim as a claim for restitution, as well as re-asserting the claims which were not dismissed from its original complaint (for trade libel, intentional interference with prospective economic relations, and violations of the UCL).

On November 16, 2015, PAC again moved to dismiss for failure to state a claim. It argues that G.U.E.'s state and federal antitrust claims are untenable for a number of reasons, that its new fraud claim is improperly pleaded, that it has not pleaded facts to support a Lanham Act claim, and that it cannot seek restitution. Finally, PAC argues that G.U.E.'s trade libel, UCL, and intentional interference with prospective economic relations claims should be dismissed insofar as G.U.E. seeks to expand them through the FAC. G.U.E. opposed the motion, (Dkt. 32), and PAC filed a reply, (Dkt. 33).

III. LEGAL STANDARD

A motion to dismiss under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) tests the legal sufficiency of the claims asserted in the complaint. The issue on a motion to dismiss for failure to state [*7] a claim is not whether the claimant will ultimately prevail, but whether the claimant is entitled to offer evidence to support the claims asserted. Gilligan v. Jamco Dev. Corp., 108 F.3d 246, 249 (9th Cir. 1997). Rule 12(b)(6) is read in conjunction with Rule 8(a), which requires only a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2). When evaluating a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, the district court must accept all material allegations in the complaint as true and construe them in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. Moyo v. Gomez, 32 F.3d 1382, 1384 (9th Cir. 1994). However, "the tenet that a court must accept as true all of the allegations contained in a complaint is inapplicable to legal conclusions." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009); see also Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (stating that while a complaint attacked by a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss does not need detailed factual allegations, courts "are not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation" (citations and quotes omitted)). Dismissal of a complaint for failure to state a claim is not proper where a plaintiff has alleged "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570. In keeping with this liberal pleading standard, the district court should grant the plaintiff leave to amend if the complaint can possibly be cured by additional factual [*8] allegations. Doe v. United States, 58 F.3d 494, 497 (9th Cir. 1995).

IV. ANALYSIS

A. Sherman Act

1. Section 1 Claim

Section 1 of the Sherman Act bans "contract[s]" and "conspirac[ies]" that unreasonably restrain trade. See 15 U.S.C. § 1. Among the proscribed agreements are "[g]roup boycotts, or concerted refusals by traders to deal with other traders," which have "long been held to be . . . forbidden" by the Sherman Act. Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 212, 79 S. Ct. 705, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741 (1959). Such agreements may be horizontal, vertical, or a combination of the two. Horizontal refusals to deal—i.e., agreements among competitors to boycott a particular firm or firms—are "inherently anticompetitive" and "violate the Sherman Act per se." In re Musical Instruments and Equipment Antitrust Litig., 798 F.3d 1186, 1191 (9th Cir. 2015). Vertical refusals to deal—for example, between a manufacturer and a retailer—do not per se violate the Sherman Act and are instead subject to the "rule of reason," which examines an agreement for its anticompetitive effects. Id. at 1191-92. But, as the Ninth Circuit clarified, "the line between horizontal and vertical restraints can blur," and a single conspiracy to restrain trade "can involve both direct competitors and actors up and down the supply chain." Id. at 1192. Such conspiracies are sometimes describes as "hub-and-spoke" conspiracies. A hub-and-spoke conspiracy has three elements: "(1) a hub, such as a dominant purchaser; (2) spokes, such as competing manufacturers [*9] or distributors that enter into vertical agreements with the hub; and (3) the rim of wheel, which consists of horizontal agreements among the spokes." Id. Although the analogy to a wheel is useful, "homespun metaphors for complex economic activities only go so far," and § 1 "prohibits agreements that unreasonably restrain trade, no matter the configuration they take or the labels we give them." Id. Accordingly, even a hub-and-spoke conspiracy may be "broken into its constituent parts," and the resulting vertical and horizontal agreements can be analyzed either under the rule of reason (for the vertical ones, generally) or as violations per se (for the horizontal ones, generally). Id.

G.U.E. alleges that a number of its competitors—fellow game vendors—have entered into 30% Agreements with PAC, and that these agreements constitute a "concerted action among PAC and its co-conspirator 'preferred,' 'approved,' and 'authorized' vendors to eliminate pricing competition" and exclude G.U.E. from the Games Market. (FAC ¶ 432.) The result, G.U.E. argues, is that airlines face higher prices for video games than they would otherwise have to pay in a competitive market. (FAC ¶ 433.)

As an initial matter, [*10] G.U.E. lacks antitrust standing to challenge higher prices faced by airlines. Because it sells games to airlines, it stands only to benefit from the "price floor" that it alleges exists in the market for IFE video games. See Atl. Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 337, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990) (plaintiff lacked standing to sue over elevated prices because, as a competitor in the market, "higher . . . prices would have worked to [its] advantage . . . [a] competitor may not complain of conspiracies that . . . set minimum prices at any level") (emphasis in original).

But more fundamentally, G.U.E. has failed to allege any concerted action that could serve as the factual basis for the concerted refusal to deal claim that it asserts. Group boycotts or concerted refusals to deal involve "joint efforts by a firm or firms to disadvantage competitors," Nw. Wholesalers Stationers Inc. v. Pac. Stationery and Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 294, 105 S. Ct. 2613, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1985), and not "case[s] of a single trader refusing to deal with another," Klor's, 359 U.S. at 212. There are no facts in the FAC that suggest that PAC agreed with individual game vendors to disadvantage G.U.E. Instead, the FAC makes clear that each individual vendor who accepted the 30% Agreement was incentivized to do so on its own terms; G.U.E. alleges that vendors "stood to benefit financially" from accepting the Agreement and that it would [*11] be "ruinous" not to do so. (FAC ¶¶ 11-12.) Indeed, the FAC pleads no facts suggesting that the vendors' decision to accept the 30% Agreement had anything to do with G.U.E. or its prospects at all. In other words, G.U.E. had not pleaded that it was actually boycotted by a group, or that its competitors concertedly refused to deal with it. This defect is fatal to its § 1 claim. PAC—and PAC alone—essentially offered G.U.E. inclusion in its customer Rolodex for a price. G.U.E. declined. G.U.E may not now convert its unwillingness to take PAC's deal into a claim under the federal antitrust laws by arguing that its competitors were in on the fix.[2]

One more issue requires resolution. Although the FAC clearly pleads a multiparty conspiracy under § 1, G.U.E. again shifts tack in its briefing papers and argues that PAC sells video games, and therefore that PAC's decision not to deal with G.U.E. is unlawful on its own terms as a horizontal agreement in restraint of trade. PAC, for its part, disputes that G.U.E. has actually pleaded that PAC sells games. In fact, G.U.E.'s representations on this issue are inconsistent. The FAC alleges, for example, that PAC "d[oes] not itself develop or even license video games." [*12] (FAC ¶ 204.) Instead, G.U.E. explains, PAC only distributes games designed by others. (Id. ¶ 554 ("Although PAC does not develop its own games, it distributes games to airlines using its proprietary software platform.") This telling of the facts is consistent with other allegations in the FAC, which basically argue that although PAC does not make or sell its own games, it maintains an "IFE content database" which contains games developed by "preferred" or "approved" vendors, who pay for the privilege of having PAC promote their games. (Id. ¶ 556.)

[2] Nor has G.U.E. alleged a vertical refusal to deal. On the contrary, G.U.E. clearly pleads PAC's eagerness to enter into a 30% Agreement with G.U.E. PAC is not refusing to deal with G.U.E.; it is simply insisting that it deal with G.U.E. and its competitors on equal terms. That is not an antitrust violation.

Yet elsewhere in the FAC (and its briefing papers) G.U.E. backtracks and instead insists that PAC sells its own games. In ¶ 76 of the FAC, for example, G.U.E. alleges that PAC "publicly states . . . that it sells 'the [IFE] industry's broadest selection of next-general video games' playable on its gaming-capable systems, including 'over 200 [game] titles.'" As support for this allegation, G.U.E. offers two facts. The first is an attached printout of PAC's website. The website in fact states that PAC "offers the industry's broadest selection of next-generation video games." (Dkt. 32-2 at 2 (emphasis added).) And elsewhere the website clarifies [*13] that PAC is "building an ecosystem of developers" to develop "thousands of unique application[s]," including "content such as games," that would function on PAC's IFE systems. (Id. at 2-3.) These representations are consistent with G.U.E.'s allegations of a content database for which PAC charges for access. They are not consistent with the position that PAC develops or sells its own games, or even that it licenses them.

The second fact G.U.E. relies on for its allegation that PAC sells its own games is that in 2010, PAC and G.U.E. entered into a "Game Licensing Agreement," or "GLA." (FAC ¶ 124.) The GLA granted an exclusive license of G.U.E.'s video games to PAC, and while under license, the games were apparently to be promoted as "PAC Premium Games." (Id. ¶ 126.) Yet G.U.E. then explains that in September 2011, PAC terminated the GLA and instead offered G.U.E. a chance to enter into a 30% Agreement, which G.U.E. declined. (Id. ¶¶ 139; 150.) G.U.E. has not pleaded that PAC has licensed any video games since 2011, and none of the allegations underpinning its claims for relief date to the time period when PAC's model was to license other vendors' games rather than just manage a content database of selected games. [*14]

In sum, G.U.E. had not adequately pleaded that PAC sells its own games—and therefore that PAC competes in the Games Market with G.U.E. The facts alleged in the FAC are consistent with G.U.E.'s alternative story—that PAC only maintains a database of games, and that if it once licensed others' games, it stopped when it switched to its current database model. Accordingly, G.U.E. cannot assert a § 1 claim based on PAC's refusal to give G.U.E. free access to its content database.

Because G.U.E. has not alleged any facts indicating a concerted refusal to deal, and because it would not have antitrust standing to challenge elevated prices in any event, PAC's motion to dismiss its § 1 claim is GRANTED.

2. Section 2 Claim

G.U.E.'s original § 2 claim failed because it did not adequately allege that it and PAC competed in the same market, and the Court rejected G.U.E.'s argument that PAC should be considered a competitor in the Games Market because it acted as a "gatekeeper" to that market.

G.U.E. attempts to remedy this defect by alleging an entirely new market—the "Distribution of PAC-compatible IFE video games market" (the "Distribution Market"). (FAC ¶ 556.) G.U.E. is trying to "distribute" video games to airlines, [*15] it argues, and PAC uses its content database to "distribute" games to airlines, so G.U.E. and PAC are in the same market after all, and G.U.E. can properly assert a § 2 claim. G.U.E. completes the claim by arguing that PAC has co-opted the Distribution Market through its content database, which G.U.E. alleges is now the "de facto" market for the distribution of IFE video games. Because G.U.E. is unwilling to pay for access to the content database, the argument goes, it has effectively been precluded from participation in the Distribution Market.

The alleged Distribution Market is a somewhat awkward attempt to define a market that contains both G.U.E. and PAC. As a result, the contours of the market are not entirely coherent. At one point, the FAC alleges that the Distribution Market is distinct from the Games Market "because access to airlines, rather than development or licensing of video games, was its critical focus." (FAC ¶ 209.) Yet if "access to airlines" is what is being sold in the Distribution Market, G.U.E. is not a participant at all—it sells games, not access. And, importantly, G.U.E. actually alleges facts that undercut this definition of the Distribution Market in the first [*16] place. According to the FAC, vendors "distribute" games to airlines in a number of different ways: through presentations at trade shows, (FAC ¶ 111), the use of third party sales agents, (FAC ¶ 110), and invitations from airlines, (FAC ¶ 113). The factual premise of the FAC is not that G.U.E. was precluded from access to airlines. Indeed, G.U.E. documents in considerable detail the access it had to airlines, including "demonstrations or presentations" to no fewer than 34 airlines, (FAC ¶ 214), an occasion on which it exchanged drafts of contracts with an airline, (FAC ¶ 294), and customer requests from three airlines for G.U.E. games to be added to their systems, (FAC ¶ 341). The actual factual premise of the FAC is that G.U.E. was able to distribute games to airlines but that PAC thwarted G.U.E.'s opportunities by lying about its games. That might be actionable misconduct, but it does not violate § 2's ban on monopoly maintenance.

Ultimately, the problems with G.U.E.'s attempted "Distribution Market" are fatal to its § 2 claim. When alleging the relevant market, a plaintiff asserting a § 2 claim must plead that "there are no other goods and services that are reasonably interchangeable with" [*17] the goods and services offered in the defined market. Big Bear Lodging Ass'n v. Snow Summit, Inc., 182 F.3d 1096, 1105 (9th Cir. 1999). The "Distribution Market" clearly fails to meet this standard. Even if it is true that G.U.E. and PAC compete in a market to distribute games to airlines—a proposition that is somewhat doubtful in its own right—G.U.E. has not adequately pleaded that distribution of video games to airlines can only happen through PAC's content database. The numerous contacts it had with airlines, including contracts that were nearly consummated, allegedly but for PAC's misrepresentations, are in fact good evidence to the contrary. Having not alleged a relevant market, G.U.E.'s § 2 claim fails at the threshold, and it is DISMISSED.

G.U.E. has now had two different opportunities to plead an antitrust claim and has failed to do so, despite trying two significantly different § 2 claims and a § 1 claim that alleged a conspiracy absent any factual background. G.U.E.'s increasingly creative—and sometimes contradictory—market definitions and antitrust allegations persuade the Court that there is no Sherman Act claim to be found here. Amendment of these claims would therefore be futile, and they are DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.

B. Cartwright Act

G.U.E.'s claim under the [*18] Cartwright Act—California's state antitrust law—is premised on the same alleged conspiracy among PAC and individual game vendors who accepted the 30% Agreement. It therefore falls victim to the same problems highlighted above: G.U.E. has not actually pleaded any concerted action on the part of PAC and the individual game vendors, and even if it had, it lacks antitrust standing to sue based on elevated prices. See Lorenzo v. Qualcomm, Inc., 603 F. Supp. 2d 1291, 1302 (S.D. Cal. Mar. 3, 2009) ("In order for a private plaintiff to have standing to sue under the Cartwright Act, the plaintiff must prove antitrust injury."); see also Atl. Richfield, 495 U.S. at 337 (competitor who complained of higher prices from which it would benefit lacked antitrust injury).

C. Lanham Act

The Lanham Act prohibits making "false or misleading misrepresentation[s] of fact . . . in commercial advertising or promotion" which "misrepresent[] the nature, characteristics, qualities, or geographic origin of his or her or another person's goods, services, or commercial activities." 15 U.S.C. 1125(a). For misrepresentations to be wrongful under the Lanham Act, they must be:

> 1) commercial speech; 2) by a defendant who is in commercial competition with the plaintiff; 3) for the purpose of influencing consumers to buy defendant's goods or services[; and] 4) . . [*19] . disseminated sufficiently to the relevant purchasing public to constitute advertising or promotion within that industry.

Rice v. Fox Broadcasting Co., 330 F.3d 1170, 1181 (9th Cir. 2003).

G.U.E. identifies four statements allegedly made by PAC or its employees which G.U.E. believes plead a Lanham Act claim. They are:

1. That "G.U.E. Tech's video games require significant operating system upgrades or changes just to run properly on PAC's gaming-capable IFE systems";

2. That "G.U.E. Tech's video games take 30 weeks or more to be integrated into and run on PAC's gaming-capable IFE systems";

3. That "[t]he integration of G.U.E. Tech's video games requires airlines to pay 'integration fees' to PAC that could total tens of thousands of dollars over and above the price of the games bought"; and

4. That G.U.E. Tech was not a 'preferred,' 'approved,' or 'authorized' IFE video game vendor for games playable on PAC's gaming-capable IFE systems."

(FAC ¶ 479.) But none of these allegations plead any of the requirements for a Lanham Act product disparagement claim. As an initial matter, "[t]he core notion of commercial speech is speech that does no more than propose a commercial transaction." Rice, 330 F.3d at 1181. But none of the alleged disparagements that G.U.E. identifies can reasonably be [*20] said to propose a commercial transaction at all, much less do no more than propose a commercial transaction. G.U.E. complains—perhaps with good reason—that PAC was telling airlines falsehoods about its games. But because PAC was not itself proposing a commercial transaction with those airlines, the cited statements do not qualify as commercial speech for the purpose of a Lanham Act claim. See id. (statements not made in "promotion or marketing" were not commercial speech).

But even if G.U.E. had adequately pleaded the commercial speech requirements, its Lanham Act claim would flounder on the remaining three requirements. For the reasons discussed above, G.U.E. has failed to plead facts plausibly suggesting that it and PAC were actually competitors in any relevant market, so PAC cannot be "a defendant who is in commercial competition with the plaintiff," Rice, 330 F.3d at 1181. Moreover, G.U.E. does not allege that any of the above statements were made in an effort to persuade the airlines to buy PAC's services—again, because PAC did not provide any competing services. See id. (requiring that statements be made "for the purpose of influencing consumers to buy defendant's goods or services" (emphasis added)). [*21] And finally, G.U.E. has only identified private statements made by PAC or its representatives to a handful of individual airlines. These statements do not qualify as misrepresentations that have been "disseminated sufficiently to the relevant purchasing public to constitute advertising or promotion." Id. Indeed, G.U.E. does not plead that any of the statements were public at all, rather than private communications.

Ordinarily, an initial failed attempt to plead a cause of action would be met with leave to amend. However, because G.U.E. did not even allege its Lanham Act claim until its amended complaint (despite alleging the relevant statements in its initial complaint), and because G.U.E. has failed to plead even one element of a product disparagement claim, the Court concludes that amendment of this claim would be futile. Accordingly, G.U.E.'s Lanham Act claim is DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.

D. Fraud and Deceit

Next, G.U.E. advances a claim for fraudulent deceit under Cal. Civ. Code §§ 1709 and 1710. The elements of that claim are "(1) misrepresentation (false representation, concealment or known disclosure); (2) knowledge of falsity (scienter); (3) intent to induce reliance; (4) justifiable reliance; and (5) resulting [*22] damage." *Beijing Tong Ren Tang (USA) Corp. v. TRT USA Corp., No. C-09-00882 RMW, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20510, 2010 WL 890048, at 2 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 8, 2010). "Making a promise without any intention of performing it constitutes deceit and satisfies the misrepresentation and scienter requirements." Id. Like all claims arising in fraud, claims for fraudulent deceit must be pleaded to the specificity requirements of Rule 9(b). Id.

G.U.E.'s allegations underlying its fraud and deceit claims arise from something the parties refer to as "customer requests," or "CRs." Evidently, when an airline wanted to include a set of games on its PAC IFE systems, it would submit a CR to PAC. PAC would then send back a "CR quote," or estimate of how much the requested games and integration would cost. In 2014, G.U.E. and PAC initiated testing of G.U.E.'s games that would determine how compatible the games were with PAC IFE systems. (See, e.g., FAC ¶ 275.) On three occasions, G.U.E. alleges, PAC personnel falsely represented to G.U.E. that once the relevant testing was complete, PAC would update its CR quotes to the airlines—i.e., provide the airlines with updated estimates of how much it would cost to integrate G.U.E. Tech's games, based on the results of the testing. (FAC ¶ 500.) Each time, G.U.E. [*23] alleges, PAC personnel actually had no intention of providing updated CR quotes, and were actually engaged in a campaign of misinformation behind the scenes to prevent G.U.E. from securing contracts with the airlines. (Id. ¶ 501.) G.U.E. provides detailed information on who made the relevant statements, and when. (FAC ¶ 500.) PAC concedes that this information means that the claim is adequately pleaded under Rule 9(b). (Def.'s Mot. at 22.)

PAC moves to dismiss the deceit claim on two substantive grounds, however. First, PAC says, although G.U.E. has alleged that PAC never intended to fulfill its promise to update the CR quotes, G.U.E. fails to allege that PAC did not in fact update those CR quotes. In other words, PAC says, G.U.E. has failed to allege a misrepresentation at all. This argument both reads the FAC too narrowly and misunderstands the case law regarding how a plaintiff can plead a misrepresentation in the context of deceit. As explained above, alleging that a promise was made without any intention to perform "constitutes deceit and satisfies the misrepresentation and scienter requirements." *Beijing Tong Ren Tang, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20510, 2010 WL 890048, at 2. G.U.E. has therefore adequately pleaded those elements of its claim.

PAC adds, however, that [*24] G.U.E. has failed to plead that it justifiably relied on PAC's statements. Instead of taking it at its word, PAC says, G.U.E. should have communicated directly with its customers to ensure that the CR quotes were sent along, and that having failed to do so, G.U.E. "dropp[ed] the ball." (Def.'s Mot. at 22.) Not so. G.U.E. explains that it had no reason to believe PAC would lie about its willingness to update the CR quotes. It was justified in relying on PAC's alleged promise to convey the relevant information to the airlines, at least for the purposes of pleading the claim in the first place. As a result, PAC's motion to dismiss is DENIED as to G.U.E.'s fraud and deceit claim.

E. Restitution

G.U.E.'s next claim is a "quasi-contract" claim seeking restitution. As PAC points out, claims for restitution are appropriate when "the parties had an express contract, but it was procured by fraud or is unenforceable or ineffective for some reason," or when "the defendant obtained a benefit from the plaintiff by fraud, duress, conversion, or similar conduct." Durell v. Sharp Healthcare, 183 Cal. App. 4th 1350, 1370, 108 Cal. Rptr. 3d 682 (Cal. Ct. App. 2010). The trouble is that neither of those things is alleged to have occurred here. G.U.E. alleges neither the existence of an express contract nor that [*25] PAC obtained some benefit from G.U.E. (Instead, G.U.E.'s complaint is essentially that PAC did not give it the benefit of "preferred" status, for free.) Rather than respond to this argument in its opposition, G.U.E. said nothing at all about its restitution claim. That claim has therefore been abandoned and is DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.

F. Remaining Claims

G.U.E.'s remaining claims are for trade libel, intentional interference with prospective economic relations, and violations of the UCL. PAC moved to dismiss these claims previously, but the Court determined that the claims were adequately pleaded and denied PAC's motion to dismiss them. PAC advances no new ground for dismissal, but instead complains that G.U.E. is attempting to "cast a broader net" and sweep additional factual allegations into those claims. (Def.'s Mot. at 23.) The Court finds no reason to believe that this is the case. The claims are adequately pleaded. PAC's motion to dismiss is therefore DENIED as to G.U.E.'s claims for trade libel, intentional interference with prospective economic relations, and violations of the UCL.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, PAC's motion to dismiss is GRANTED IN PART AND DENIED [*26] IN PART. G.U.E.'s Sherman Act claims, its Lanham Act claim, and its quasi-contract claim are all DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.

Summary judgment is justified if there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a). In reviewing a motion for summary judgment, the court must draw any permissible inference from the underlying facts in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion.

HN2[] Actual Monopolization, Claims

The definition of a relevant market is a threshold issue for monopolization claims under 15 U.S.C.S. § 2. Appreciable economic power in the tying market is a necessary feature of an illegal tying arrangement. In the absence of a plausible market definition, courts are hard pressed to discern the nature or extent of any anticompetitive injury that the plaintiff and other similarly situated parties may be suffering.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Geographic Market Definition

HN3[] Relevant Market, Geographic Market Definition

The relevant geographic market in antitrust cases is defined by the area within which the defendant's customers can practicably turn to alternative supplies if the defendant were to raise its prices.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

HN4[] Relevant Market, Product Market Definition

Whether a product commands a distinct market depends on whether it is reasonably interchangeable with other products or the extent to which consumers will change their consumption of one product in response to a price change in another, i.e., the cross-elasticity of demand.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements

HN5[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

A tying arrangement is defined as an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product. Tying suppresses competition in two ways: First, the buyer is prevented from seeking alternative sources of supply for the tied product; second, competing suppliers of the tied product are foreclosed from that part of the market which is subject to the tying arrangement. What causes these anticompetitive harms and distinguishes tying from ordinary market behavior is not the mere bundling of two products together but rather the coercion of the consumer. The crux of tying lies in the seller's exploitation of its control over the tying product to force the buyer into the purchase of a tied product that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms. No tie exists unless the customer was "coerced" into taking both products. If instead the buyer is free to decline the tied product or to purchase the two products separately, then by definition there is no unlawful tying.

HN8[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Procedural Matters

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

HN12[] Tying Arrangements, Sherman Act Violations

In outlawing tying arrangements, Congress and the U.S. Supreme Court were originally concerned with egregious forms of leverage, such as tacking superfluous goods onto a patented product. That leverage was understandably seen as an unfair way for monopolists in one market to invade related markets. Yet even as the Court recognized that evil, it hastened to stress the value of offering "package sales" of multiple goods, conduct that is entirely consistent with the Sherman Act. What buyers often want is the purchase of several related products in a single competitively attractive package, especially where each component alone would hold comparatively little value.

Big is not invariably bad. An outsized market position may reflect nothing more than business success achieved through superior effort and sound strategy. After all, the purpose of antitrust law is to penalize anticompetitive practices, not competitive success. Even monopoly power, long considered a red flag in antitrust law, can under certain circumstances be a legitimate advantage: Firms may acquire monopoly power by establishing an infrastructure that renders them uniquely suited to serve their customers. Compelling such firms to share the source of their advantage is in some tension with the underlying purpose of antitrust law, since it may lessen the incentive for the monopolist, the rival, or both to invest in those economically beneficial facilities.

[*680] WILKINSON, Circuit Judge:

Plaintiff It's My Party, Inc. (IMP) contends that defendant Live Nation, Inc. (LN) has violated the Sherman Antitrust Act by engaging in monopolization, tying arrangements, and exclusive dealing in the music concert industry. The district court granted summary judgment to defendant LN. Because plaintiff has failed to define the relevant markets or to demonstrate any anticompetitive conduct, we affirm.

IMP and LN are competitors in the live music industry. Both promote concert [2] tours and operate concert venues, but they differ in geographic reach. Plaintiff IMP is a regional player that promotes concerts and works with venues in the Washington, DC and Baltimore, MD area. Defendant LN is a national promoter that provides services to artists throughout the country. It owns, leases, or holds exclusive booking rights at venues across the United States. LN has expanded over time by acquiring other concert promoters as well as Ticketmaster, a major ticket sales and distribution company.

In addition to promoting concerts, IMP and LN both operate outdoor amphitheaters. IMP manages and operates Merriweather Post Pavilion in Columbia, Maryland, and LN owns Nissan Pavilion (now called Jiffy Lube Live) in Bristow, Virginia. Merriweather has a seating capacity of roughly 19,000 with 5,000 fixed seats, while Nissan has a capacity for 25,000 with 10,000 fixed seats. Concert venues range in size from small clubs with a capacity of about 1,000 to sports stadiums seating over 60,000.

Artists select venues based on their capacity, revenue potential, and the option of playing outdoors. The Washington-Baltimore area has a number of concert venues other than Merriweather and Nissan. [3] Among the other venues are the Filene Center at Wolf Trap (7,000 person amphitheater), the First Mariner Arena (14,000 person arena), the Patriot Center (10,000 person arena), the Pier Six Pavilion (4,200 person amphitheater), and the Verizon Center (19,000 person arena). J.A. 1516. Notwithstanding the abundance of options, Merriweather has more than held its own. Between 2006 and 2012, it hosted an impressive line-up of prominent artists, including Bob Dylan, John Legend, Maroon 5, Nickelback, Nine Inch Nails, Sheryl Crow, Taylor Swift, The Black Eyed Peas, and The Fray. J.A. 827-40.

The basics of the music concert industry are easily described. IMP and LN compete for the business of artists, vying to promote their concerts and showcase them in their venues. Promoters, in negotiation with artists, work on financing concerts, arranging dates and locations, securing venues, and advertising. In terms of compensation, the artist typically receives either a minimum guaranteed payment or an agreed-upon percentage of the gross ticket sales.

Artists have two main options for organizing the individual concerts that make up their tours. One approach is to use a different local promoter for each [4] location and secure venues through the promoters. Alternatively, an artist can work with a national promoter such as LN for most or all of the tour. The two options frequently offer different modes of compensation. "Artists who contract with one or a few national promoters to organize their tours often receive a guaranteed payment from the promoter based on the number of shows organized by that promoter. Artists who contract 'locally' and book with several promoters in various parts of the country will often receive instead a percentage [*681] of the gross ticket sales from each concert." It's My Party, Inc. v. Live Nat., Inc., 88 F. Supp. 3d 475, 481 (D. Md. 2015).

B.

IMP was dissatisfied with the workings of the industry as described above. Plaintiff brought suit on March 5, 2009, alleging that LN had violated § 1 and § 2 of the Sherman Act and parallel Maryland antitrust law through monopolization, tying arrangements, and exclusive dealing. The result of LN's conduct, claims IMP, was the foreclosure of competition in the concert promotion and venue markets. The district court denied LN's motion to dismiss in July 2009 and an initial motion for summary judgment without prejudice in August 2012. Following briefing and argument, the court granted summary judgment in LN's [5] favor in February 2015.

In a careful opinion, the district court declined to adopt IMP's definition of the promotion market and excluded the portion of its expert analysis defining the venue market. It's My Party, 88 F. Supp. 3d at 485-88, 490-92. The trial court also found insufficient evidence that LN had engaged in monopolization, tying, or any other anticompetitive behavior. Plaintiff's state law claims were deemed to fall in tandem with its federal ones. IMP now appeals.

Our standard of review is well settled. HN1[] Summary judgment is justified if "there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a). "In reviewing a motion for summary judgment, the court must 'draw any permissible inference from the underlying facts in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion.'" Sylvia Dev. Corp. v. Calvert County, Md., 48 F.3d 810, 817 (4th Cir. 1995) (quoting Tuck v. Henkel Corp., 973 F.2d 371, 374 (4th Cir. 1992) (citation omitted)).

II.

Plaintiff faces here the initial challenge of identifying exactly what market defendant is accused of monopolizing. Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 455-56, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993) (discussing HN2[] the definition of a relevant market as a threshold issue for monopolization claims under § 2); Eastman

Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 464, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992) (treating "appreciable economic power in the tying market" as a "necessary feature of an illegal tying arrangement"). In the absence of a plausible [6] market definition, courts are hard pressed to discern the nature or extent of any anticompetitive injury that plaintiff and other similarly situated parties may be suffering.

This case involves two separate but related markets: the market for concert promotion and the market for concert venues. In both, the relevant consumers are performing artists, who contract with promoters and venues to put on concerts. In its market definition analysis, IMP characterized the promotion market as national rather than local and restricted the venue market to major amphitheaters to the exclusion of other venues. As the district court recognized, these definitions were plainly designed to bolster IMP's monopolization and tying claims by artificially exaggerating LN's market power and shrinking the scope of artists' choices.

To support its claims that LN was monopolizing the concert promotion market and tying promotion services to its venues, IMP had to first define the promotion market and demonstrate LN's market power therein. According to IMP, [*682] promoters compete nationally for contracts to promote performances anywhere in the country. By defining the market as national, IMP could more easily construe [7] LN's nationwide network of promoters and venues as evidence of market power. In contrast, IMP could portray itself as a modest regional outfit whose resources pale in comparison. If instead the market were defined locally and narrowed to just the Washington-Baltimore area, then IMP would appear more evenly matched against LN's regional capacity. Unfortunately for plaintiff, its market definitions are blind to the basic economics of concert promotion.

HN3[] The relevant geographic market in antitrust cases is defined by the "area within which the defendant's customers . . . can practicably turn to alternative supplies if the defendant were to raise its prices." E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. v. Kolon Indus., Inc., 637 F.3d 435, 441 (4th Cir. 2011). Applied to this case, that inquiry focuses on the area within which artists can find alternative promoters if any one promoter were to increase its prices. The goal of concert promotion is of course to boost ticket sales. Therefore, artists' demand for promotion services is derivative of the public's demand for concert performances. Concertgoers will typically not travel out of their region to attend a concert in response to higher ticket prices in their area. Heerwagen v. Clear Channel Commc'ns, 435 F.3d 219, 228 (2d Cir. 2006). Because the demand for concerts is local, promoters need to target their [8] advertising to the area surrounding a particular venue. As the district court found in reviewing the record, "promoting shows is highly localized, and . . . most promoters promote in specific locations." It's My Party, 88 F. Supp. 3d at 492. "For example, Live Nation books the majority of its television advertising locally, with only about five percent spent on national advertising." Id. at 491.

These market dynamics favor promoters familiar with local media outlets and the local audience. An artist is unlikely to switch to a promoter based in Miami simply because a Baltimore promoter demands a bigger cut of the ticket sale proceeds. IMP sidesteps this point by focusing on the feasibility of promoting concerts from anywhere using modern technology. That technological capacity is useless, however, without the relevant local knowledge and local contacts. Indeed, IMP itself must be aware of that reality since it does not attempt to promote beyond its Washington-Baltimore base. Even a national promoter like LN is almost exclusively focused on local advertising and operates its promotion services through regional offices rather than a central hub. J.A. 2427. The ability of national promoters to coordinate cross-country tours does not [9] change the fact that they provide services and compete for business on a local basis. Heerwagen, 435 F.3d at 230. In short then, the market for concert promotion is local, and the relevant competition in this case is between IMP and LN for the Washington-Baltimore area. The battle, in other words, is on IMP's own turf.

B.

IMP's definition of the venue market is similarly defective. It first confined the market to "major amphitheaters," large outdoor spaces suitable only for popular artists, while excluding clubs, arenas, stadiums, and other venues. Not content with that narrow definition of the venue market, IMP further specified that the amphitheaters must have a capacity of 8,000 or more, actually sell 8,000 or more tickets, and be in use only from May to September. Only two venues in the entire [*683] Washington-Baltimore area meet IMP's specifications -- the very two venues featured in this case, Merriweather and Nissan. IMP's approach is akin to defining a market to include tennis players who have won more than three Olympic gold medals and finding that only Venus and Serena Williams fit the bill.

This exercise in precise line-drawing "suits the needs of plaintiffs," as the district court observed. It's My Party, 88 F. Supp. 3d at 488. LN's market [10] power appears magnified when the relevant market contains only two competitors, and any business taken away from Merriweather seems to flow directly to Nissan. But in its haste to stage this one-on-one showdown, IMP again casts sound economics aside.

HN4[] Whether a product, in this case amphitheaters, commands a distinct market depends on whether it is "reasonably interchangeable," United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 395, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956), with other products or the "extent to which consumers will change their consumption of one product in response to a price change in another, i.e., the 'cross-elasticity of demand.'" Eastman Kodak Co., 504 U.S. at 469 (citations omitted) (quoting E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. at 400). Here, IMP has not pointed to any record evidence demonstrating that artists are so likely to stick to amphitheaters in the event of a price increase that amphitheaters comprise their own market. Artists who prefer amphitheaters may nonetheless turn to a lower-priced substitute, which, after all, allows the show to go on. There is therefore an insufficient basis for excluding "reasonably interchangeable" venues such as similarly sized arenas or stadiums from the market definition.

Plaintiff has simply not carried its burden of showing that amphitheaters are the only place certain artists are willing [11] to perform, irrespective of the monetary or logistical advantages of other concert locations. As the district court noted, "artists regularly perform at both amphitheaters and non-amphitheaters," and any "artist dissatisfied with Live Nation's conditioning of amphitheaters could simply perform at another venue." It's My Party, 88 F. Supp. 3d at 497. IMP's key evidence supporting its venue market definition -- a statistical analysis that purportedly shows that some artists prefer either amphitheaters or arenas -- fails to adequately consider cross-elasticity of demand between the two types of venues. IMP's reliance on this evidence is akin to claiming that Pepsi and Coke are in different markets because consumers generally prefer one or the other. Mere consumer preference does not indicate what Pepsi enthusiasts would do in response to an increase in its price. Similarly, a particular artist's preference for amphitheaters or arenas does not reveal what the artist would do if the cost of performing in an amphitheater began to rise.

In defending its market definition, IMP chides the district court for rigorously challenging its expert's analysis. But that court was not required to accept uncritically two market definitions [12] -- a sweeping national promotion market and a cramped amphitheater-only venue market -- that coincidentally fit plaintiff's precise circumstances. No party can expect to gerrymander its way to an antitrust victory without due regard for market realities. See E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 637 F.3d at 442.

III.

Lacking sound market definitions, IMP's monopolization and tying claims are left in [*684] a weakened state. Even assuming the plausibility of those definitions, however, plaintiff's allegations of anticompetitive conduct fail of their own accord. The bulk of IMP's case hinges on two closely related tying claims. First, plaintiff argues that artists who hire LN for its promotion services are compelled to perform at its Nissan venue. Second, LN allegedly will give artists access to its amphitheaters in other locations only if they choose Nissan for their Washington-Baltimore date. In these two claims, the tying products used to lure artists are promotion services and amphitheaters in other areas, whereas the tied product forced upon artists in both instances is Nissan. We will address the venue-to-promotion and venue-to-venue tying claims in that order.

HN5[] A tying arrangement is "defined as an agreement by a party to sell one product [13] but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product." N. Pac. Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 78 S. Ct. 514, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1958). Tying suppresses competition in two ways: "First, the buyer is prevented from seeking alternative sources of supply for the tied product; second, competing suppliers of the tied product are foreclosed from that part of the market which is subject to the tying arrangement." Advance Bus. Sys. & Supply Co. v. SCM Corp., 415 F.2d 55, 60 (4th Cir. 1969).

What causes these anticompetitive harms and distinguishes tying from ordinary market behavior is not the mere bundling of two products together but rather the coercion of the consumer. As the Supreme Court put it, the crux of tying lies in "the seller's exploitation of its control over the tying product to force the buyer into the purchase of a tied product that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms." Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 12, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 (1984), abrogated on other grounds by Ill. Tool Works Inc. v. Indep. Ink, Inc., 547 U.S. 28, 126 S. Ct. 1281, 164 L. Ed. 2d 26 (2006) (emphasis added); accord Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law: An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and Their Applications ¶ 1700i (3d ed. 1995) (deducing from longstanding case law that "no tie exists unless the customer was 'coerced' into taking both products"). If instead the buyer is free to decline the tied product [14] or to purchase the two products separately, then by definition there is no unlawful tying. See Times-Picayune Pub. Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 614, 73 S. Ct. 872, 97 L. Ed. 1277 (1953) (stressing the importance of a "forced purchase"); Stephen Jay Photography, Ltd. v. Olan Mills, Inc., 903 F.2d 988, 991 (4th Cir. 1990) (same). That is precisely the case here.

While paying lip service to the tying case law, IMP proceeds to strip the doctrine of its core element of coercion. By its proffered definition, IMP argues that tying occurs any time a seller who has market power over product A offers it for sale together with product B. But HN6[] merely offering two products in a single package, allowing each to enhance the appeal of the other, is not itself coercive. Otherwise, the seller would be guilty of anticompetitive conduct even if buyers in fact preferred and freely chose to buy product A and product B together and competitors were not foreclosed from selling alternatives to product B. Without the element of coercion, IMP's version of tying targets none of the anticompetitive harms animating the doctrine. Advanced Bus. Sys. & Supply Co., 415 F.2d at 60 (outlining the [*685] harms to competitors and consumers). Without coercion -- i.e., without requiring the customer to buy product B when buying product A -- selling products A and B as a unit is simply one strategy for gaining an edge in a free marketplace. To allow [15] tying doctrine to swell to the point of prohibiting such legitimate means of competition would make antitrust law its own worst enemy.

B.

A review of the facts in this case reveals IMP's reason for excising coercion from tying doctrine: plaintiff has no prospect of satisfying that element here. The record contains little basis for concluding that artists were coerced into taking the tied product, performances at Nissan, with the tying product, LN's promotion services. IMP cherry-picks excerpts of LN's communications, mostly internal emails, that discuss its negotiations with artists over concert tours and the Nissan venue. In no instance, however, did LN convey that an artist could not receive its promotion services unless it appeared at Nissan. In fact, several agents specifically denied being forced to put their artists in LN venues as part of their agreements with LN. J.A. 6556-57, 6580-82. In response, IMP conjectures that the "agents shaded their testimony for an entity who dictates whether their clients 'work.'" Appellant's Br. at 44-45. But if pure speculation by a competitor were enough to prove the opposite of what consumers describe is happening in the market, then antitrust [16] defendants should surrender every time a rival files a complaint.

There is, moreover, ample evidence suggesting the exact opposite of what IMP seeks to prove, namely the absence of coercion and tying. Plaintiff's own analysis reveals that the tying product was sometimes sold without the tied product. Artists on LN-promoted national tours, the very artists who were supposedly strong-armed into performing at Nissan, in fact chose IMP-owned Merriweather fourteen percent of the time. J.A. 4630-31. Ten percent has been cited as the minimum benchmark for separate sales sufficient to rebut any inference of tying. 10 Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, at 328, ¶ 1756b2. Without adopting that particular figure as the definitive baseline, we note that non-tied sales in this case exceed it sufficiently to cast doubt on any allegation of tying.

HN7[] Even without direct evidence, a plaintiff could still prove coercion circumstantially. See Serv. & Training, Inc. v. Data Gen. Corp., 963 F.2d 680, 688 (4th Cir. 1992). Here, IMP relies on a regression analysis purporting to show that artists on national tours promoted by LN disproportionately perform at Nissan rather than Merriweather.

From that analysis, IMP infers that LN must be tying Nissan to its promotion services. For plaintiff, there could be no other reason for the [17] artists' choice to pair an LN venue with LN promotion.

But that supposition likewise falls short. HN8[] To prove an antitrust violation, a plaintiff must present evidence that "tends to exclude the possibility" of independent conduct consistent with competition. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986) (quoting Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984)). A successful tying claim in particular needs to rule out alternative market-based explanations for why the consumer might prefer to purchase the tied product along with the tying product. See Serv. & Training, Inc., 963 F.2d at 687-88. In this case, IMP ignores a host of independent reasons that could have led [*686] artists on LN tours to freely choose Nissan.

One obvious explanation is that LN simply outcompeted IMP and gave artists better compensation to appear in LN venues. In one case, two artists declined Merriweather only after LN offered 100% of the gross ticket sales (minus expenses) to perform at Nissan and another LN amphitheater. J.A. 2716. In another instance, LN enticed a band to play at Nissan by adding $150,000 to the guaranteed payment for a slate of performances around the country. J.A. 6447-48. These differences in artist compensation offered by IMP and LN, clearly signs of competitive negotiations, were curiously missing from IMP's regression analysis. [18]

Plaintiff also ignores the simple fact that it could have been more efficient for artists already on LN tours to work with the same concert promoter and venue operator for their Washington-Baltimore date. The artist may have dealt with LN on other occasions and come to appreciate the working relationship. More broadly, the national promoter holds distinct advantages over its regional competitor: it can offer tour packages combining a series of venues with promotion services in multiple locations. By contrast, IMP is limited to the Washington-Baltimore area, most likely a single stop on any given tour. Accepting a comprehensive and cost-effective package that happens to include Nissan is not tying -- it is simply a good deal for the consumer.

The final and perhaps most salient factor is that Nissan may be a superior venue to Merriweather. IMP scoffs at this idea, boasting that "Merriweather is an iconic amphitheater in a bucolic setting," whereas "Nissan is a concrete shell with horrific parking problems." Appellant's Br. at 42. Setting aside IMP's potential bias for its own venue, Nissan possesses at least some advantages. It carries the prestige and name recognition of being affiliated [19] with a top-flight concert promoter. Nissan also holds over 5000 more seats than Merriweather, nearly all of which are fixed seats that command a higher ticket price than open lawn space, giving Nissan significantly greater earning potential. As the Supreme Court reminds us, HN9[] "intrinsic superiority of the 'tied' product would convince freely choosing buyers to select it over others" without any coercion from the seller. Times-Picayune, 345 U.S. at 605; accord Serv. & Training, Inc., 963 F.2d at 687-88. Yet IMP fails to account for Nissan's or LN's inherent advantages, or indeed any explanation of artists' preference for that venue other than an illicit tying arrangement.

Not only did artists have various reasons to choose Nissan of their own accord, but they were also equally free to turn down that venue or LN's entire package deal of venues and tour promotion. Artists have always had two options for structuring their tours. Instead of contracting with a single national promoter for all concert dates, performers can work with local promoters on a concert-by-concert basis and pick any venue they want for a specific date. If at any point LN tried to tie Nissan to its promotion services, the artist could book its tour "locally," use another promoter for the Washington-Baltimore [20] area, and opt for Merriweather instead. HN10[] When promotion and venues "may be purchased separately in a competitive market, one seller's decision to sell the two in a single package imposes no unreasonable restraint on either market." Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 11. In other words, LN's combined but non-coercive offer of promotion and venues would not foreclose artists from choosing Merriweather over Nissan or other venue operators [*687] like IMP from competing for that business. If, however, LN happened to out-bargain IMP with better package deals, better compensation, and a better venue, then an antitrust lawsuit would not be the answer to plaintiff's troubles.

C.

IMP's venue-to-venue tying claim is largely a repetition of its claim of venue-to-promotion tying. The key difference is the tying product. Plaintiff argues that LN leveraged its market power in areas where it controlled the only amphitheater to force artists to perform at Nissan. Again, IMP presents no direct evidence that LN withheld access to amphitheaters in LN-controlled areas unless artists chose Nissan over Merriweather. Nor does its circumstantial evidence manage to rebut the myriad reasons discussed above for why artists would independently make that choice [21] of venue. The mere fact that artists sometimes took a package deal of multiple LN venues for a given tour does not prove tying. At the same time, the record shows a proportion of non-tied sales that far exceeds the ten-percent benchmark: twenty-six percent of artists who performed at an LN amphitheater in a locality where it owned the only such venue ended up choosing Merriweather, not Nissan, for its Washington-Baltimore show. J.A. 5529-30. With one in four consumers buying the tying product without the tied product, it becomes hard to accept a story of LN strapping Nissan to its other venues and forcing artists to perform there.

The change in the tying product thus makes no difference to plaintiff's case. IMP still fails to prove anything more than, as the district court found, "vigorous competition by Merriweather and Nissan in negotiating with artists to perform at their respective venues." It's My Party, Inc., 88 F. Supp. 3d at 495. In a world of robust market competition where artists were free to take a package deal of promotion and venues, free to purchase those products separately, free to turn down both, and where they in fact exercised all those options to their advantage, the strands of IMP's reasoning begin to [22] resemble the invisible ropes allegedly tying LN's products together.[*]

IV.

Quite beyond the specifics of market definitions and product tying, IMP levies a more general attack. Its brief stresses LN's market position as "the largest promoter in the world, larger than all other promoters combined." Appellant's Br. at 63. Size and scope, in IMP's eyes, are cause for suspicion. LN's nationwide reach, "1,000 artist relationships," id., and exclusive access to venues are apparently so dominant that the network itself deters entry into the industry and unfairly disadvantages localized competitors like IMP. Id. at 63-65. According to plaintiff, "attempting to replicate LN's network and promotion relationships would cost 'billions.'" Id. at 63.

The sweeping attack upon LN's size in this action cannot without more suffice to prove an antitrust infraction. Upon further [23] inspection, what plaintiff characterizes as illegal conduct turns out to be lawful pro-competitive behavior. To hold otherwise would have the most serious implications. Carried to their logical end, plaintiff's arguments would cast a pall over all manner of packaged deals, free contractual [*688] negotiations, and any endeavor to become the dominant player in an industry. To do so would undermine the very competition that antitrust law was designed to encourage. See Verizon Commc'ns Inc. v. Law Offices of Curtis V. Trinko, LLP, 540 U.S. 398, 407, 124 S. Ct. 872, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823 (2004) (HN11[] "The mere possession of monopoly power, and the concomitant charging of monopoly prices, is not only not unlawful; it is an important element of the free-market system.").

The word "tying" at the core of plaintiff's claims carries a sinister connotation, evoking the image of an unwelcome parasite tightly bound to the desired product with the helpless consumer unable to take one without the other. HN12[] In outlawing tying arrangements, Congress and the Court were originally concerned with egregious forms of leverage, such as tacking superfluous goods onto a patented product. Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, at ¶ 1700d. That leverage was understandably seen as an unfair way for monopolists in one market to invade related markets. Erik Hovenkamp & Herbert Hovenkamp, [24] Tying Arrangements and Antitrust Harm, 52 Ariz. L Rev. 925, 931 (2010).

Yet even as the Court recognized that evil, it hastened to stress the value of offering "package sales" of multiple goods, "conduct that is entirely consistent with the Sherman Act." Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 12; see also Serv. & Training, Inc., 963 F.2d at 688. What buyers often want is "the purchase of several related products in a single competitively attractive package," especially where each component alone would hold comparatively little value. Phillips v. Crown Cent. Petroleum Corp., 602 F.2d 616, 628 (4th Cir. 1979) (giving the example of a restaurant franchise as a packaged product desired by restaurateurs). Offering an "attractive package," however, becomes indistinguishable from anticompetitive conduct under IMP's conception of coercion-less tying. If that view carries the day, no seller could combine related goods or leverage its competitive advantage in related markets without risking antitrust charges.

The real loss would be the productive synergies created when sellers package complementary products. LN's business model serves as an example. When LN bundles promotion, including financing and advertising, and a series of concert venues together, it becomes a one-stop shop for touring artists. In such a case, the practice of "[b]undling obviously saves distribution and consumer [25] transaction costs . . . [and] can also capitalize on certain economies of scope." United States v. Microsoft Corp., 253 F.3d 34, 87, 346 U.S. App. D.C. 330 (D.C. Cir. 2001). Artists do not have to seek out and transact with separate sellers for each of the services offered by LN.

The whole thereby becomes greater than the sum of its parts as LN is able to offer advantages only made possible by selling distinct but complementary products together. As one example, managing concerts in multiple locations allows LN to "cross-collateralize" its tours. It's My Party, 88 F. Supp. 3d at 481. The national promoter can "cover losses from concerts that underperformed with revenue from concerts that met or exceeded expectations," thereby reducing the overall risk for itself and for the artists. Id. A local promoter responsible for a single concert in a single location lacks this risk-pooling ability. It is likely one reason why national promoters are often able to attract artists with a higher guaranteed payment, while their local counterparts can only offer a cut of the ticket sales for a particular show. Id. If, however, the packaging inherent in coordinating concert tours were deemed unlawful tying, for instance of one [*689] venue to another, then this synergy and its attendant benefits would be at risk.

Of course, the idea [26] of synergy is not unique to the live music industry. It, and thus the potential for tying, is present whenever products or production processes fit naturally together. A prime example is vertical integration, where a firm houses multiple stages of the production and distribution process for a single good or related goods. Andy C. M. Chen & Keith N. Hylton, Procompetitive Theories of Vertical Control, 50 Hastings L.J. 573, 578 (1999). Take a computer manufacturer, for example, that "makes its own steel, types its own documents, creates and places its own advertising, transports the finished product to dealers, or repairs the product in the hands of consumers. To that extent it 'forecloses' independent makers of steel or suppliers of typing, advertising, transportation or repair services." Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, at ¶ 1700j1. One could conceivably accuse the vertically integrated manufacturer of tying those goods and services together in selling the end product, the computer.

And yet it is no surprise that vertical integration has generally been permitted despite its apparent similarity to tying. See id. (noting antitrust law's tolerance of vertical integration); Roger D. Blair & David L. Kaserman, Vertical Integration, Tying, and Antitrust Policy, 68 Am. Econ. Rev. 397 (discussing the functional similarities [27] between tying and vertical integration). A single firm incorporating separate but closely related production processes can often be far more efficient than various independent entities transacting to produce the same good or bundle of goods. See Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 41 (O'Connor, J., concurring in judgment) (quoting Fortner Enters. v. U.S. Steel Corp., 394 U.S. 495, 514 n.9, 89 S. Ct. 1252, 22 L. Ed. 2d 495 (White, J., dissenting) (1969)). With advances in modern technology comes even greater potential for efficient integration, increased compatibility among products, and ties that are technological as much as or more than contractual. See Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, at ¶ 1701d. It would be unfortunate if an overly aggressive tying doctrine were to impede that innovation.

Because concert venues and promotion are not technically part of the same production process, this may not be a case involving vertical integration per se. Nonetheless, one can see how IMP's expansive tying definition could chill constructive forms of integration. Unable to sell goods and products as a single unit, businesses may have little reason to consolidate underlying production processes and promotional strategies no matter how efficiently they fit together. The eventual outcome would be a strange world in which sellers go out of their way to isolate [28] their own products and different components of their production and promotion processes from one other.

The ultimate victim in that scenario would be the consumer and his ability to freely contract for desired goods and services. So long as a transaction is free from coercion, the consumer has every right to walk away from package deals or demand more from the seller. It is paternalistic for either a competitor or the court to just assume that taking two products together is not the result of independent decision-making. See Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 87-88 (reiterating consumer choice as the touchstone of tying doctrine and the need to assess whether consumers prefer to buy products together).

From its market definitions to its descriptions of anticompetitive conduct, IMP's entire case sets up a David-and-Goliath battle between an industry behemoth and its regional challenger. The tying [*690] argument in particular is predicated on the fact that LN can leverage its sprawling national network of promoters and venues to oblige artists to perform at Nissan. At certain points, the whole argument seems to turn on LN's dominant market position, on what LN is rather than what it did. It may be understandable as a matter of strategy [29] for antitrust plaintiffs to target industry giants. Certainly, many such cases do require a finding of market power, and the evidence may show what it fails to show here, namely that the dominant player in an industry used that very domination for anticompetitive ends. See E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. at 389-90 (focusing monopolization doctrine on the exercise of market power to foreclose fair competition).

And yet HN13[] big is not invariably bad. An outsized market position may reflect nothing more than business success achieved through superior effort and sound strategy. See United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966). After all, the purpose of antitrust law is to penalize anticompetitive practices, not competitive success. Even monopoly power, long considered a red flag in antitrust law, can under certain circumstances be a legitimate advantage:

> Firms may acquire monopoly power by establishing an infrastructure that renders them uniquely suited to serve their customers. Compelling such firms to share the source of their advantage is in some tension with the underlying purpose of antitrust law, since it may lessen the incentive for the monopolist, the rival, or both to invest in those economically beneficial facilities.

Trinko, 540 U.S. at 407-08. LN invested heavily in developing just such an [30] infrastructure, expanding beyond its core promotion business to acquire exclusive booking rights at concert venues nationwide and merging with a leading ticket vendor, Ticketmaster. The synergies among promotion, venues, and ticket sales, all of which serve to bring live music to the public, should be obvious.

In a world where the "big is bad" mantra reigns unquestioned, we would be left with separate tour promoters, separate venue operators, and separate ticket vendors, each with little incentive to interact or join with the others despite their natural affinities. See Fed. Trade Comm'n v. Proctor & Gamble Co., 386 U.S. 568, 597-98, 87 S. Ct. 1224, 18 L. Ed. 2d 303 (1967) (Harlan, J., concurring) (considering the possible efficiencies created by merging producers of complementary goods in adjacent markets). IMP's tying allegations thus threaten in the end to bring us three forms of strict economic segregation, first of products, then of production processes, and finally of producers in adjoining markets. It is not wholly fantastical to wonder if even ketchup and mustard, salt and pepper, forks and knives will have to bid each other adieu, doomed to solitary existences along the grocery aisle.

The Davids of the world need not hope for such a marketplace in order to thrive. Just as big [31] is not necessarily bad, small is not necessarily weak. Even though national firms undoubtedly have an edge over smaller competitors and David may not triumph over Goliath everywhere, he can certainly hone his home court advantage. While LN was busily spreading its operations all over the country, IMP could have focused instead on branding itself as a uniquely attractive local outfit, striving to know the Washington-Baltimore audience better than any other promoter and deepening its relationships with local clubs, businesses, and media. As it is, IMP has in fact enjoyed much success at its Merriweather venue, hosting scores of major artists and doubling its revenue [*691] from $11.8 million in 2006 to $22.5 million in 2012. J.A. 827-40, 4908.

IMP's distortion of tying doctrine serves in fact as a potential template for any local business wishing to drive a national competitor out of its regional market. That template would prove particularly useful when, as in this case, the competition is on a local basis and the competitors are a mix of national and local players. If offering products or services across a particular field is tying and if a national network is itself suspect when compared [32] to the resources of a regional contender, then businesses have much less motivation to operate in multiple geographic markets. Why shoulder the costs of expansion when the specter of antitrust liability awaits?

Cornering the local Washington-Baltimore market may not have been far from IMP's mind. Seth Hurwitz, IMP's principal, has protested that "the scourge of the [live music] industry is too many shows." J.A. 1566. According to Hurwitz, LN was "paying way too much money just to keep [a] show away from [IMP]," and the bidding process for concerts -- the key mechanism for price competition among promoters -- made it "prohibitive to actually do a show and make money." J.A. 1560, 1562. To ease what it considered an excess of competition, Hurwitz sought to eliminate its archrival. He suggested either that LN "sell the Nissan/Jiffy Lube property" or that the two promoters "work together" to stop bidding against each other when bringing artists to the Washington-Baltimore area. J.A. 1560-62, 1570. After failing to collude with LN or expel it from the market, plaintiff turned to the next best option -- antitrust law.

This case thus captures the anticompetitive effects and consequences that [33] can ironically arise from antitrust lawsuits. See Matsushita Elec. Indus., 475 U.S. at 594 (warning against allowing antitrust doctrine to "chill the very conduct the antitrust laws are designed to protect"); William J. Baumol & Janusz A. Ordover, Use of Antitrust to Subvert Competition, 28 J.L. & Econ. 247 (1985). This can be a special hazard in antitrust litigation brought by competitors of the defendant. See Edward A. Snyder & Thomas E. Kauper, Misuse of the Antitrust Laws: The Competitor Plaintiff, 90 Mich. L. Rev. 551 (1991). If abused, such suits can ineluctably lead to an environment of commercial parochialism. By cutting ties among related products and related producers, IMP's view of economic activity, if allowed to take hold, would box firms both into their own product markets and into their own geographic locales. That tendency toward isolationism has more in common with the market squares and horse-drawn buggies of the nineteenth century than with the interconnected and technology-driven contemporary world. The loser in all this is of course the consumer, left with a patchwork of localized monopolies and one-product wonders flourishing at the expense of larger and more diverse competitors. To help prevent antitrust law from being hijacked for such anticompetitive [34] ends, we join the district court in sending this tussle between two rivals back to the marketplace from whence it came. The judgment is hereby AFFIRMED.

OPINION & ORDER

WILLIAM J. MARTINI, U.S.D.J.:

This is an antitrust action in which Plaintiffs accuse The Dow Chemical Company ("Dow") of colluding with other businesses in order to artificially inflate the prices of urethane chemicals. This matter comes before the Court on several motions in limine filed by both parties. The Court writes for the benefit of the parties and assumes familiarity with both the facts of the case and the issues presented in the instant motions.

I. DISCUSSION

The Court will now address twelve of the motions in limine filed in this action.[1]

1. Dow's Motion in Limine to Preclude References to Other Anti-Trust Cases [ECF 114]

Dow seeks to preclude admission of references to various categories of antitrust cases. First are references to other anti-trust cases involving entities other than Dow and industries other than the urethanes market. Second are references to a rubber chemicals cartel anti-trust case that [*4] did allegedly involve Dow, as well as alleged co-conspirator Bayer. Third are references to price-fixing raids on Bayer and subsequent investigations into the chemicals and urethanes industry.

Dow's motion will be GRANTED IN PART. With respect to the first category of references (anti-trust cases that do not involve urethanes or Dow), the Court will allow such testimony only if Dow challenges Dr. Marx by arguing that a cartel will exist only where price increases stick. If Dow opens that door, Dr. Marx is entitled to respond by referencing other anti-trust cases that, in her opinion, rebut Dow's assertion. However, the Court reserves the ability to limit the scope of such testimony if it becomes apparent that Dr. Marx's references will cause a mini-trial regarding other cartels that have nothing to do with this case. With respect the second category, Plaintiffs are prohibited from linking Dow to other price-fixing cases. The prejudice that would result from such testimony substantially outweighs any probative value. See FRE 403 (court may exclude relevant evidence if its probative value is substantially outweighed by a danger of unfair prejudice).[2] Therefore, to the extent that Dr. Marx wants [*5] to describe price-fixing cases in a way that links those cases to Dow, those references will be precluded. With respect to the third category, the Court will allow references to the Bayer raids if Dow opens the door by accusing Dr. Marx of excluding 2004 conspiracy period solely in order to increase Plaintiffs' damages. If Dow opens the door, Dr. Marx can argue that she excluded 2004 from the conspiracy period because Bayer decided to withdraw from the urethane conspiracy in 2003 after a 2002 government raid. Dow cannot challenge Dr. Marx's decision to exclude 2004 and then expect the Court to prohibit Dr. Marx from explaining the rationale behind her decision. It will therefore be up to Dow to make a tactical decision as to whether to challenge Dr. Marx's alleged conspiracy period.

[1] The parties have filed a total of 16 motion in limine. Two of those motions have been already decided. See ECF Nos. 224 & 229.

[2] Similarly, Plaintiffs will be excluded from introducing any evidence concerning government raids on Dow or Dow's alleged involvement in any other price-fixing conspiracies. Plaintiffs have not shown that such evidence is needed to bolster Stephanie Barbour's credibility, and the prejudicial effect would substantially outweigh any probative value.

2. Dow's Motion in Limine Concerning Antitrust Compliance Policies [*6] [ECF 116]

Dow seeks to exclude evidence regarding its interpretation of the antitrust laws and its internal advice to employees on how to avoid conduct that could be misconstrued as a violation of those laws. The Court agrees with Dow's position.

Dow's motion will be GRANTED. This case turns on whether Dow violated antitrust laws. Thus, whether Dow employees believed they violated Dow's antitrust policies is irrelevant. FRE 401. It therefore also follows that the manner in which Dow interpreted its own antitrust policies is irrelevant. See id. Even if such evidence were relevant, it would be substantially be outweighed by prejudice because the testimony could confuse the jury on what the governing law was. See FRE 403. While Plaintiffs propose that any confusion can be cured an additional jury instruction, the Court finds that a barrage of evidence concerning internal antitrust policies (as opposed to antitrust law) will create prejudice too great to be cured by a limiting instruction.

3. Dow's Motion in Limine to Preclude Reference to the Urethane Class Action [ECF No. 118]

Plaintiffs do not plan to affirmatively raise the class case (or class verdict) during trial; however, they intend (1) to cross-examine [*7] Dr. Elzinga or Dr. Ugone with the verdict in the class trial, and (2) to have their own expert characterize the class verdict as a basis for her opinions. Notwithstanding Plaintiffs' representations, Dow's motion will be granted.

Dow's motion will be GRANTED. While Dow's expert, Dr. Kenneth Elzinga, plans to testify that the economic evidence is inconsistent with the existence of a conspiracy, such testimony does not somehow "open the door" to Plaintiffs introducing the class verdict. There is no way of knowing why the jury rendered its verdict; indeed, it is possible that the jury agreed with Dr. Elzinga regarding the economic evidence, but nonetheless found that the non-economic evidence supported the finding of a conspiracy. Moreover, as the MDL Court noted, "the jury [in the class case] might have found a conspiracy limited in scope in such a way that it would not fall within the particular claim alleged by any particular direct-action plaintiff." MDL Court Order dated December 16, 2013, ECF No. 3111. And even assuming the class verdict was probative in that it may undermine Dr. Elzinga's testimony, any probative value would be substantially outweighed by unfair prejudice and jury [*8] confusion. See Coleman Motor Co. v. Chrysler Corp., 525 F.2d 1338, 1351 (3d Cir. 1975) ("The admission of a prior verdict creates the possibility that the jury will defer to the earlier result and thus will, effectively, decide a case on evidence not before it."). These determinations with respect to the cross-examination of Dr. Elzinga apply equally to the cross-examination of Dr. Ugone.

Dr. Marx will also not be permitted to testify regarding the class case. Under Federal Rule of Evidence 703, an expert can form his opinion by relying on facts that would otherwise be inadmissible. However, if the expert plans to introduce those facts to the jury, their probative value in helping the jury evaluate the opinion must substantially outweigh their prejudicial effect. With respect to Dr. Marx's testimony, it is undisputed that Dr. Marx's report does not reference the class verdict. The Court is therefore skeptical of the class verdict having any probative value with respect to Dr. Marx's testimony. Consequently, the requirements of FRE 703 have not been met.

4. Dow's Motion in Limine to Preclude References to Former Defendants as "Defendants" [ECF 120]

The following entities were formerly named as defendants, but have since settled: BASF SE, BASF Corporation, BASF Coordination Center Comm. V., [*9] Bayer AG, Huntsman International LLC, Lyondell Chemical Company, Jeanne-Pierre Dhanis, and Uwe Hartwig. Dow has moved to preclude Plaintiffs from referring to those entities as "defendants" or "co-defendants." Dow recognizes that the deposition video testimony will sometimes refer to these entities as defendants, and does not argue that the videotapes should be edited to remove those references. Instead, Dow proposes that a jury instruction be used to correct any confusion regarding references to defendants in the video deposition testimony. However, Dow argues that, with the exception of the video deposition testimony, Plaintiffs should be precluded from referring to those entities as defendants or co-defendants.

Dow's motion in limine will be GRANTED. Referring to former defendants as "defendants" or "co-defendants" would prejudice Dow because it would potentially cause the jury to infer that the former defendants were already held liable. It also may lead the jury to conclude that the former defendants entered into settlements with plaintiffs and therefore Dow should be required to pay too. Moreover, Plaintiffs fail to demonstrate how using the terms "defendants" or "co-defendants" [*10] would have any probative value whatsoever. With respect to the use of those terms in video deposition testimony, the Court will provide a jury instruction in order to clear any confusion.

5. Dow's Motion in Limine to Preclude Plaintiffs' Expert from Offering Opinions Outside Her Expertise [ECF 121]

The question presented by this motion is whether Plaintiffs' experts may offer opinions concerning the credibility of witnesses or whether a particular event actually occurred. According to Dow, Dr. Raiff testified in a deposition that in reaching his damages estimates, he relied on his own evaluation of other witness testimony, including his assessments regarding credibility. Also according to Dow, Dr. Marx later testified that she concurred with Dr. Raiff's assessment of the evidence. Consequently, Dow contends that Dr. Marx should be precluded from offering opinions concerning the credibility of witnesses or whether a particular event actually occurred. Plaintiffs, however, assert that Dr. Marx does not plan to offer any testimony regarding those issues.

This motion will be DENIED WITHOUT PREJUDICE. Dr. Marx will be a live witness at trial. If Plaintiffs' counsel begins to veer into areas [*11] concerning witness credibility or whether an event actually occurred, Dow will be permitted to object on the grounds that such testimony is inadmissible. If Dr. Marx's testimony does not touch upon those areas, no objection will be necessary.

6. Dow's Motion in Limine to Exclude Evidence Relating to Allegations of Document Destruction [ECF 125]

The Court is faced with determining whether Plaintiffs should be precluded from introducing evidence related to allegations that Dow destroyed documents revealing conspiratorial activity. This issue concerns documents belonging to three former Dow employees: Stephanie Barbour, David Fischer, and Bob Wood.

Because of the fact-specific nature of this motion, the Court will provide a brief background. Stephanie Barbour was terminated from Dow in 2004. Shortly thereafter, Barbour alleged that she was terminated in retaliation for reporting wrongdoing on the part of her supervisor, David Fischer. Because of her claims of retaliation, Dow issued a litigation hold on Barbour's documents. Dow contends that when her allegations were being investigated in 2004, Barbour did not accuse any Dow employees of engaging in price-fixing. However, in 2010 Barbour [*12] testified that she was aware of price-fixing at Dow and that she took notes regarding price-fixing while she was a Dow employee. Plaintiffs never received those notes and therefore contend that Dow destroyed them in order to cover-up the conspiracy. Barbour's deposition was again taken in 2013. According to Dow, in her 2013 deposition, Barbour admitted that her notes may have been lost or deleted due to a technical malfunction. Consequently, Dow argues, there is no basis for any conclusion that Dow destroyed her notes.

In addition to evidence concerning Barbour, Plaintiffs argue that they should be able to introduce evidence concerning the destruction of documents belonging to Dow employees David Fischer and Bob Wood. Fischer served as Barbour's supervisor at Dow, while Wood was supervisor to Fischer. Dow explains that, consistent with Dow's document retention policies, Fischer and Wood's documents were destroyed 35 days after Fischer and Wood were terminated in 2004. Plaintiffs maintain that they will not introduce this evidence for spoliation purposes. Rather, this evidence will support Plaintiffs' allegations that Dow engaged in a cover up of the conspiracy.

Dow's motion will be [*13] GRANTED IN PART AND DENIED IN PART: the proposed testimony from Barbour, Fischer and Eberhart will be ruled admissible, while the proposed testimony from Wood will be ruled inadmissible. Acts of concealment, including document destruction, are relevant for determining whether a conspiracy existed. United States v. Smith, 294 F.3d 473, 479 (3d Cir. 2002). Barbour has testified that as a Dow employee she took notes concerning price-fixing activities at Dow. Moreover, Barbour at one point testified that the relevant notes were still on her work computer the day she left Dow. Finally, Dow admits that it retained Barbour's documents as part of a litigation hold. Taken together, there is a plausible theory that the price-fixing documents should have still been on her computer after she departed. During cross-examination, Dow of course may seek to undermine Barbour's testimony by testing her recollection or pointing to what she stated on the record in 2013. But this does not preclude Plaintiffs from introducing her testimony. Similarly, Plaintiffs have presented evidence showing that Dow was looking into allegations that Fischer engaged in improper activities with competitors. Dow's investigation into Fischer occurred against the backdrop of government [*14] investigations concerning price-fixing in the chemicals market. Consistent with this view, testimony from Rule 30(b)(6) witness Arthur Eberhart regarding Dow's document retention policies will also be admissible. However, Plaintiffs have not sufficiently demonstrated that Fischer's supervisor, Bob Wood, could have been in possession of documents concerning price-fixing. Therefore, Plaintiffs will not be allowed to introduce document destruction evidence with respect to Bob Wood. To be clear, Plaintiffs are not permitted to introduce this evidence in order to support any spoliation arguments. Instead, they can seek to use such evidence to support the allegation that Dow engaged in a cover-up of the conspiracy.[3]

7. Dow's Motion in Limine to Exclude Evidence Related to Bayer's Internal Investigation [ECF 127]

The issue here is whether Plaintiffs should be permitted to introduce evidence concerning Bayer's internal investigation into alleged price-fixing discussions that occurred between Bayer and [*15] Dow. Specifically, the issue is whether such evidence should (1) be admissible for its truth; or (2) be admissible as material on which Plaintiffs' experts relied.

Because the issues presented by this motion are fact-specific, the Court will provide a brief background. Bayer is a urethane producer that settled with Plaintiffs out of court. As part of the settlement agreement, Bayer agreed to have its counsel provide Plaintiffs with information regarding price-fixing discussions that allegedly occurred between Bayer and Dow. The Bayer employees who relayed the information to Bayer's counsel have since plead the Fifth Amendment. The evidence can be broken into two categories: (1) testimony from Dr. Marx regarding conversations she had with Bayer's counsel; and (2) documents created by Dr. Marx, Dr. Raiff (Plaintiffs' former expert), and Plaintiffs' counsel, concerning conversations they had with Bayer's counsel. Plaintiffs argue that despite involving multiple layers of hearsay, the evidence should be admissible for its truth because (1) it falls within the statement-against-interest exception; and/or (2) it falls within the "residual" hearsay exception. Plaintiffs further argue that even if the evidence [*16] is inadmissible for its truth, it should be admissible as evidence that Dr. Marx relied upon when forming her opinion.

Dow's motion will be GRANTED IN PART. The Court concludes that the evidence concerning Bayer's investigation is inadmissible for its truth. However, the Court will reserve on whether it is admissible as evidence upon which Dr. Marx relied when forming her opinion. The evidence will not be admitted for its truth because it is inadmissible hearsay not subject to any hearsay exceptions. First, the statements made by Bayer's counsel were not statements against interest. See FRE 804. Instead Bayer agreed to provide Plaintiffs with that information in connection with a settlement agreement. American Auto Accessories, Inc. v. Fishman, 979 F. Supp. 706, 707 (N.D. Ill. 1997) (statement-against-interest exception inapplicable where statements were made in connection with settlement agreement and defendants were seeking to "curry favor" with plaintiffs). Nor does the "residual" hearsay exception apply. The residual hearsay exception is to be used only in exceptional circumstances. Bohler-Uddeholm America, Inc. v. Ellwood Group, Inc., 247 F.3d 79, 112 (3d Cir. 2001). Additionally, it is to be applied only where the offered testimony contains circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness. See FRE 807. Here, the evidence is not particularly trustworthy because [*17] it does not involve direct statements made by Bayer employees; rather, it consists solely of notes and summaries prepared by Plaintiffs and their experts. Barry v. Trustees of Int'l Ass'n of Full-Time Salaried Officers & Employees of Outside Local Unions & District Counsel's (Iron Workers) Pension Plan, 467 F.Supp. 2d 91, 102 (D.D.C. 2006).

The Court will reserve on whether Dr. Marx will be permitted to testify as to how she relied on conversations with Bayer when forming her expert opinion. Whether Dr. Marx may refer to those conversations will depend on a number of factors that are presently unknown. For example, Dow may open the door to such testimony if it challenges Dr. Marx's setting of the benchmark and conspiracy periods for her regression models.[4]

8. Plaintiffs' Motion in Limine to Preclude Evidence and Argument Related to Fifth Amendment Invocations [ECF 95]

Plaintiffs seek to preclude Dow from introducing evidence related to Plaintiffs' employees' invocation of their Fifth Amendment rights at depositions. Specifically, certain Carpenter, Vitafoam, and Woodbridge employees [*18] invoked their Fifth Amendment right not to answer any questions at their depositions, including questions about their employers' allegedly anticompetitive conduct in the downstream foam market.

First, the Carpenter employees later revoked their Fifth Amendment invocations and answered questions at subsequent depositions. Dow did not designate for use at trial any of the Carpenter employees' deposition testimony at issue. Dow now seeks to introduce the later-revoked Fifth Amendment invocations as impeachment evidence against the Carpenter trial witnesses. Second, Plaintiffs presented, pursuant to Rule 30(b)(6), other Vitafoam and Woodbridge corporate designees to answer questions on the deposition topics. The Vitafoam and Woodbridge witnesses are not on either party's witness list, but Dow now requests a jury instruction explaining that Dow was denied the opportunity to gather evidence relevant to its defense because of the Vitafoam and Woodbridge employees' Fifth Amendment invocations.

The Court will GRANT Plaintiffs' motion. First, any "potential probative value of [the Carpenter employees'] invocation of the Fifth Amendment is further reduced by the fact that [they] subsequently answered all of the questions," and "the potential prejudice . . . is high," such that it [*19] substantially outweighs any probative value. See Harrell v. DCS Equipment Leasing Corp., 951 F.2d 1453, 1464-65 (5th Cir. 1992); see also FRE 403 (court may exclude relevant evidence if its probative value is substantially outweighed by a danger of unfair prejudice). Second, during discovery, Dow did not challenge the adequacy of the Rule 30(b)(6) designations as a substitute for Vitafoam and Woodbridge employees' testimonies. And the MDL Court ruled that Dow had received all the discovery it was due. Dow may not now argue for a jury instruction to the contrary. Lastly, the Court has already precluded Dow from introducing evidence related to Plaintiffs' conduct in the downstream market; arguably, evidence of the Fifth Amendment invocations fall within the scope of that order.

9. Plaintiffs' Motion in Limine to Preclude Evidence and Argument Relating to the DOJ Investigation and Result [ECF 97]

Plaintiffs move to preclude Dow from introducing evidence relating to the DOJ's 2005 criminal investigation into Dow's pricing conduct in the urethane market, and the DOJ's ultimate decision not to prosecute Dow. Plaintiffs

[4] Plaintiffs have also indicated that Dr. Marx may refer to her conversations with Bayer's counsel when explaining why she attributes the variances detected by her models to the existence of a conspiracy. However, the Court has also reserved on whether Dr. Marx may attribute the variances to any particular cause. See ECF No. 229.

argue that the evidence should be categorically excluded because: (1) that fact that the DOJ chose not to prosecute Dow is not relevant to the issue of whether Dow actually committed antitrust [*20] violations; and (2) the evidence is unfairly prejudicial because it would tempt the jury to conclude that Dow is innocent in this case. Dow opposes, arguing that it seeks to introduce the evidence to impeach certain witnesses, including Lawrence Stern, the former head of Bayer, who received prosecutorial immunity in exchange for cooperating with the DOJ.

Plaintiffs' motion in limine will be GRANTED IN PART AND DENIED IN PART. Dow is not permitted to present evidence of the DOJ's investigation or its result as part of its case-in-chief, as the risk of prejudice substantially outweighs any probative value. See Am. Home Assurance Co. v. Sunshine Supermarket, Inc., 753 F.2d 321, 325 (3d Cir. 1985) (stating that the "higher burden of persuasion" in a criminal case makes "evidence of non-prosecution . . . of very limited probative value" in a subsequent civil case, and such evidence is "highly prejudicial" if it relates to a principal issue in the civil case.). However, to the extent that Dow wishes to introduce impeachment evidence of an agreement between Stern and the government that resulted in Stern's prosecutorial immunity (insofar as it does not contain references to the DOJ's investigation into Dow's conduct), Dow may do so. See United States v. Murray, 468 F. App'x 104, 107-08 (3d. Cir. 2012) (stating that immunity agreements properly [*21] "inform the jury's assessment of witness credibility and bias."). However, the Court advises Plaintiffs that, should they reference the DOJ investigation at trial, they could potentially open the door to the Court permitting Dow to offer evidence regarding said investigation.

10. Plaintiffs' Motion in Limine to Preclude Testimony that Violates the MDL Court's Discovery Order [ECF 99]

Plaintiffs seek to preclude Dow from introducing portions of the deposition testimonies of former Dow attorneys Lynn Schefsky and Tom McCormick that, according to Plaintiffs, "exceed the scope" of discovery permitted by the MDL Court's July 2013 discovery order.

As described in more detail in the portion of this Opinion and Order addressing Dow's Motion to Exclude Evidence Relating to Allegations of Document Destruction, Stephanie Barbour was terminated from Dow in 2004. Barbour alleged that she was terminated in retaliation for reporting wrongdoing on the part of her supervisor, David Fischer, to Lynn Schefsky. Dow subsequently directed Tom McCormick to conduct an internal investigation into Barbour's claims ("Dow's 2004 investigation"). During Barbour's 2010 deposition, she testified that she was aware [*22] of price-fixing at Dow and that she took notes regarding price-fixing while she was a Dow employee. In July 2013, after the class action trial had concluded, the MDL Court modified a scheduling order to allow Dow to conduct new discovery regarding Dow's 2004 investigation. The MDL Court reasoned that good cause existed to reopen discovery because Plaintiffs had indicated an intent to pursue two new theories at trial: (1) Dow's destruction of Barbour's notes; (2) Dow's failure to investigate Barbour's antitrust allegations. The multi-district litigation court ruled that limited discovery could be conducted as to Dow's 2004 investigation, but did not "set stringent limits on the means and manner." The court directed the parties to file a motion if either side felt the other was abusing the limited extension of the discovery deadline. Neither party did so. Plaintiffs now argue that Dow violated the July 2013 discovery order by delving into topics beyond the scope of the discovery order (such as Dow's antitrust compliance program generally and Barbour's previous reports of antitrust violations) and, therefore, Dow should be precluded from using portions of the Schefsky and McCormick depositions [*23] at trial.

Plaintiffs' motion in limine will be DENIED. The challenged deposition testimony is well within the scope of discovery contemplated by the MDL Court in its July 2013 order: the testimony directly relates to Dow's 2004 investigation into Barbour's antitrust allegations. Moreover, if Plaintiffs believed that Dow's deposition designations violated the July 2013 discovery order, they should have filed a motion with the MDL Court at the time, as prescribed by the July 2013 order.

11. Plaintiffs' Motion in Limine to Preclude Reference to How Plaintiffs Became Involved in the Case, Plaintiffs' Knowledge of the Litigation or the Case Being Lawyer Driven [ECF 103]

Plaintiffs seek to preclude Dow from introducing evidence related to: (1) the manner in which Plaintiffs became involved in this litigation; (2) Plaintiffs' knowledge of the details of the lawsuit itself; and (3) this case being "lawyer-driven" by Plaintiffs' counsel.

Plaintiffs' motion in limine will be GRANTED. First, the evidence is irrelevant. See FRE 401. How Plaintiffs became involved in the litigation, the extent of Plaintiffs' employees' knowledge of the details of Dow's alleged price-fixing conspiracy, and who "drove" the [*24] litigation do not tend to prove or disprove whether Dow engaged in conduct that violated the Sherman Act. Second, such evidence is prejudicial: it carries a great risk that the jury will become distracted from the key issues in the case and decide the case on improper grounds (such as a sense that Plaintiffs were manipulated into filing suit by lawyers looking to profit from a big class action lawsuit). See FRE 403.

12. Plaintiffs' Motion in Limine to Preclude Evidence Regarding Plaintiffs' Financial Condition [ECF 105]

Plaintiffs seek to preclude Dow from introducing evidence regarding Plaintiffs' revenues, assets, profits (derived from their sales in the downstream foam market), or net worth. Plaintiffs argue that this evidence is not relevant and prejudicial. Dow argues that profitability is relevant to determining Plaintiffs' injury under Section 4 of the Clayton Act.

Plaintiffs' motion in limine will be GRANTED. First, evidence of Plaintiffs' financial position is irrelevant to the question of whether Dow violated antitrust laws. See Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Mach. Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 489, 88 S. Ct. 2224, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231 (1968) (noting "as long as the seller continues to charge the illegal price, he takes from the buyer more than the law allows" and "whatever price the buyer sells, the price [*25] he pays the seller remains illegally high"). Second, such evidence carries a substantial risk of unfair prejudice: the jury may conclude that Plaintiffs don't really "need" the recovery because the companies are profitable. See FRE 403.

II. CONCLUSION

Consistent with the above determinations, IT IS on this 8th day of February 2016, hereby ORDERED that

1. Dow's Motion in Limine to Preclude References to Other Anti-Trust Cases [ECF 114] is GRANTED IN PART, with Dr. Marx retaining the right to testify regarding anti-trust cases/investigations not involving Dow in the event that Dow challenges her testimony by (1) arguing that a conspiracy will exist only if prices stick; and (2) challenging her decision to exclude 2004 from the conspiracy period.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Ambiguities & Contra Proferentem

HN3[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Under California law, the general rule is that if the relevant contractual language is ambiguous, such that either side's interpretation is potentially reasonable, the dispute must be resolved by a jury. But even if disputed language might appear ambiguous when read in isolation, where the context reveals that the language is susceptible to only one reasonable interpretation, the ambiguity can be conclusively resolved in favor of that interpretation as a matter of law. This is true even on a motion to dismiss: if the allegations in the complaint, viewed with other materials properly considered at the pleading stage, conclusively show that only the defendant's interpretation of the disputed contractual language is reasonable, the complaint must be dismissed.

On a motion to dismiss, a court may consider documents which are not physically attached to the complaint but whose contents are alleged in the complaint and whose authenticity no party questions.

Contracts Law > ... > Affirmative Defenses > Coercion & Duress > Economic Duress

HN8[] Coercion & Duress, Economic Duress

If a party to a contract signs it under economic duress, a court has discretion to rescind it. The doctrine of economic duress can apply when one party has done a wrongful act which is sufficiently coercive to cause a reasonably prudent person, faced with no reasonable alternative, to agree to an unfavorable contract. A wrongful act does not necessarily mean a tortious or unlawful act but encompasses a greater range of unethical behavior. In addition to showing that the wrongful act was objectively coercive, the party seeking rescission must also show that it actually was coerced, i.e. that it had no reasonable alternative but to agree. California courts have held a person had no reasonable alternative when the only other alternative is bankruptcy or financial ruin. The doctrine does not allow for rescission of contracts that are merely the result of hard bargaining, as opposed to the kind of extreme financial coercion that leaves a person with no real choice but to agree.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Quasi Contracts

HN9[] Types of Contracts, Quasi Contracts

There is no standalone cause of action for unjust enrichment in California. However, when a plaintiff alleges unjust enrichment, a court may construe the cause of action as a quasi-contract claim seeking restitution.

Torts > ... > Invasion of Privacy > Appropriation > Elements

Trademark Law > Subject Matter of Trademarks > Particular Subject Matter > Right of Publicity

HN10[] Appropriation, Elements

California recognizes both a statutory and common law right of publicity. To state a claim for common law misappropriation in violation of the right of publicity, plaintiffs must allege (1) the defendant's use of the plaintiff's identity; (2) the appropriation of plaintiff's name or likeness to defendant's advantage, commercially or otherwise; (3) lack of consent; and (4) resulting injury. For a claim under Cal. Civ. Code § 3344, plaintiffs must additionally allege (1) a knowing use; (2) for purposes of advertising, and (3) a direct connection between the use and the commercial purpose. Both the common law and statutory causes of action for misappropriation require lack of consent.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN11[] Sherman Act, Claims

To state a valid claim under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., a plaintiff must allege that the defendant has market power within a relevant market, and must provide a facially plausible definition of that market. Defining the relevant market requires plausibly alleging both a relevant product market and a relevant geographic market. The relevant product market must encompass the product at issue as well as all economic substitutes for the product. That is, the market must include all products for which there is reasonable interchangeability of use or cross-elasticity of demand. If a plaintiff alleges a proposed relevant market that clearly does not encompass all interchangeable substitute products even when all factual inferences are granted in plaintiff's favor, the relevant market is legally insufficient and a motion to dismiss may be granted. This threshold requirement exists to prevent the antitrust laws from applying too broadly.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

HN12[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

Antitrust law is not intended to reach all potentially objectionable conduct by economic competitors; it is intended to protect consumers from the anticompetitive effects of wrongful monopolization or restraints of trade. The theory is that in a functioning competitive market, if one seller raises the price of its product, consumers will turn to other sellers of similar products to avoid paying the higher price. The conduct of a seller (or group of sellers) only implicates the antitrust laws if it allows the seller (or group of sellers) to charge artificially high prices in a scenario where consumers have no reasonable opportunity to turn to another product. To determine whether that kind of harm is likely to happen or has happened, it is necessary to examine the entire product market, i.e. all products a consumer would consider reasonably interchangeable and would turn to if there were a significant price increase in the original product. If consumers are not precluded from responding to the defendant's conduct simply by turning to reasonable alternatives in the market, the conduct of the defendant (even if otherwise wrongful) was not meant to be covered by the antitrust laws.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Unfair Competition > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Designation of Origin

The Lanham Act creates a cause of action against a defendant who, in connection with any goods or services uses in commerce any word, term, name, symbol, or device, or any combination thereof, or any false designation of origin, false or misleading description of fact, or false or misleading representation of fact, which is likely to cause confusion, or to cause mistake, or to deceive as to the affiliation, connection, or association of such person with another person, or as to the origin, sponsorship, or approval of his or her goods, services, or commercial activities by another person. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125(a)(1)(A).

HN15[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

California's unfair competition law (UCL), Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200, allows a cause of action for any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice and unfair, deceptive, untrue or misleading advertising. The California Supreme Court has held that a practice may be deemed unfair even if not specifically proscribed by some other law. However, where the same conduct alleged to be unfair under the UCL is also alleged to be a violation of another law, the UCL claim rises or falls with the other claims. That is because to permit a separate inquiry into essentially the same question under the unfair competition law would invite conflict and uncertainty.

[*902] ORDER GRANTING MOTION TO DISMISS, DENYING MOTION TO STRIKE

Re: Dkt. Nos. 79, 80, 82

This case is about the "bibs" caddies wear during golf tournaments sponsored by the PGA Tour. These bibs display the name of the golf tournament, the name of the golfer for whom the caddie works (on the back), and often corporate logos. [4] The bibs generally look like this:

SAC ¶ 1.

Recently there has been great strife between the caddies and the Tour, with caddies complaining that their working conditions are poor and that the Tour does not treat them with common human decency. To use one high-profile example, at a tournament in February 2015, play was suspended because of a thunderstorm with high winds. Players and other people were permitted to go indoors, while caddies were left to seek refuge under an open metal shed or in their vehicles. This prompted ESPN analyst Scott Van Pelt to opine that the PGA Tour "treats its caddies like outside dogs."[1]

Caddies are now fighting back. As part of this fight, 168 caddies have sued the PGA Tour in federal court. The lawsuit is a proposed class action, in which the caddies [*903] seek to represent themselves and all other similarly-situated caddies. They contend that the Tour may not require them to wear the bibs during tournaments, or at least that the Tour must compensate them for wearing the bibs because of the publicity they provide for the Tour and its sponsors. Specifically, the caddies assert that the bib [5] requirement violates the contracts they signed with the Tour, violates their "right of publicity," and violates the federal antitrust and trademark laws.

But caddies have been required to wear the bibs for decades. So caddies know, when they enter the profession, that wearing a bib during tournaments is part of the job. In other words, the bib is the primary part of a caddie's uniform. And the contracts the caddies signed with the Tour require them to wear the uniforms prescribed by the Tour. For that reason, there is no merit to the caddies' contention that the contracts somehow prevent the Tour from requiring them to wear bibs. Nor does the bib requirement implicate federal antitrust or trademark law. The complaint is therefore dismissed. Dismissal is with prejudice, because the caddies have been unable to identify a way (and the Court is unable to think of a way) they could cure the defects in their complaint, despite multiple rounds of briefing and a lengthy hearing on the Tour's most recent motion to dismiss. Northstar Fin. Advisors, Inc. v. Schwab Invs., 781 F. Supp. 2d 926, 931 (N.D. Cal. 2011).

I. CONTRACTUAL CLAIMS

[1] SAC ¶ 17 (quoting Scott Van Pelt, Scott's "One Big Thing", ESPN Radio, http://espn.go.com/espnradio/play?id=12409670).

For each pro golf tournament in which caddies participate, they must sign a form contract with the Tour.[2] The contract contains language [6] imposing dress and uniform requirements on the caddies for each tournament. But the language about dress and uniform requirements does not explicitly mention bibs. The caddies seize on this silence to argue that the contract does not allow the Tour to make them wear bibs. And they argue that the bib requirement interferes with their right to make money off endorsements, because the bib covers space on their shirts that could otherwise display endorsements. The question, therefore, is whether the general contract language imposing dress and uniform requirements on the caddies at each tournament can be reasonably understood as precluding the Tour from requiring the caddies to wear bibs at those tournaments.

As a preliminary matter, it bears noting that the caddies signed these form contracts in the forty-two different states where the Tour's tournaments are held. Although one might assume that interpretation of each contract should be governed by the law of the state in which it was signed, the parties agree that California law governs the caddies' breach of contract claim. HN2[] "[P]arties may, in absence of strong contrary public policy, choose which forum's law will govern an action," *Dimidowich [904] v. Bell & Howell, 803 F.2d 1473, 1477 n.1 (9th Cir. 1986) (citing Lauritzen v. Larsen, 345 U.S. 571, 588-89, 73 S. Ct. 921, 97 L. Ed. 1254 (1953)), including by agreement during litigation, see id. at 1477; see also *Isofoton, S.A. v. Giramberk, No. CV-04-0798-PHX-ROS, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35805, 2006 WL 1516026, at 2 (D. Ariz. May 30, 2006). Moreover, the parties both assert that there is no material difference between the laws of the forty-two states on this issue. The Court will therefore apply California law.

HN3[] Under California law, the general rule is that if the relevant contractual language is ambiguous, such that either side's interpretation is potentially reasonable, the dispute must be resolved by a jury. See Requa v. Regents of Univ. of Cal., 213 Cal. App. 4th 213, 152 Cal. Rptr. 3d 440, 449 (Ct. App. 2012); Aragon-Haas v. Family Sec. Ins. Servs., 231 Cal. App. 3d 232, 282 Cal. Rptr. 233, 238 (Ct. App. 1991); Marina Tenants Ass'n v. Deauville Marina Dev. Co., 181 Cal. App. 3d 122, 226 Cal. Rptr. 321, 324 (Ct. App. 1986). But even if disputed language might appear ambiguous when read in isolation, where the context reveals that the language [8] is susceptible to only one reasonable interpretation, the ambiguity can be conclusively resolved in favor of that interpretation as a matter of law. See Kashmiri v. Regents of Univ. of Cal., 156 Cal. App. 4th 809, 67 Cal. Rptr. 3d 635, 660 (Ct. App. 2007); Boeing Co. v. Cont'l Cas., 157 Cal. App. 4th 1258, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 322, 326-27 (Ct. App. 2007). This is true even on a motion to dismiss: if the allegations in the complaint, viewed with other materials properly considered at the pleading stage, conclusively show that only the defendant's interpretation of the disputed contractual language is reasonable, the complaint must be dismissed. See Skilstaf, Inc. v. CVS Caremark Corp., 669 F.3d 1005, 1017 (9th Cir. 2012); see also Boeing, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d at 326; Lee v. City of L.A., 250 F.3d 668, 688 (9th Cir. 2001).

As mentioned, the question here is whether the language of the form contract imposing dress and uniform requirements on caddies can be reasonably interpreted as not authorizing the Tour to require them to wear bibs. The pertinent paragraph states:

> Caddies shall wear uniforms and identification badges as prescribed by the host tournament and PGA TOUR. All caddies are required to wear solid-colored, Khaki-style long pants, which touch the top of the shoe, or solid-colored, knee-length, tailored shorts or skorts and a collared shirt while on club property. T-shirts, jeans, culottes, skirts, capris, cut-off shorts and cargo-style shorts are not permitted. Acceptable colors shall be determined at the discretion of the Tournament [9] Director.

[2] The Court grants the Tour's request for judicial notice of Exhibits A-R. HN1[] "The Court may take judicial notice of documents which are referenced in but not appended to the pleadings, and whose authenticity no party disputes." Northstar Fin. Advisors, Inc. v. Schwab Invs., 781 F. Supp. 2d 926, 942 (N.D. Cal. 2011) (citing Branch v. Tunnell, 14 F.3d 449, 454 (9th Cir. 1994), overruled on other grounds by Galbraith v. Cty. of Santa Clara, 307 F.3d 1119 (9th Cir. 2002)). The complaint references these documents — form caddie registration agreements, caddie application forms, and player handbooks and regulations — and the caddies have stipulated that they do not contest the authenticity [7] of these documents. See Dkt. No. 78, at 2. The caddies' motion to strike, Dkt. No. 82, is accordingly DENIED.

Dkt. No. 80 Ex. F. Although the caddie registration agreement has changed over time, the first sentence of this provision has remained identical since at least 2010, and is apparently used at all events in all three of the Tour's pro golf tours. Dkt. No. 80 Exs. A-R. The remaining language has remained almost identical as well. See id.

In isolation, this language might appear ambiguous. On the one hand, a person might understand the first sentence of the paragraph to mean that caddies must wear whatever "uniforms" the host tournament and the Tour decide to "prescribe," without limitation. That would, of course, include bibs. On this interpretation, the second sentence would mean that, in addition to whatever uniform the host tournament and the Tour prescribe, caddies must limit themselves to wearing certain kinds of clothing (for example, solid-colored pants or knee-length shorts).

[*905] On the other hand, one might understand the second sentence of the paragraph to be modifying the first one, so that the kinds of "uniforms" a host tournament and the Tour may "prescribe" include the type and color of the pants and shirts caddies may wear, and nothing more. On this interpretation, [10] the paragraph does not authorize the Tour to require caddies to wear bibs.

But even if this contract language might appear susceptible to two different interpretations when considered in isolation, there is only one reasonable interpretation when the language is considered in the context of this case. As the plaintiffs themselves concede in their briefing, "the PGA Tour has required caddies to wear bibs for decades."[3] Dkt. No. 98 at 6. Moreover, each caddie is, according to the complaint, "forced to wear identical bibs during a given tournament." SAC ¶ 103. In other words, for decades, the bib has been the primary part of the "uniform" that the Tour requires caddies to wear. This context, which is established by the allegations in the complaint and facts that the caddies have conceded in their papers, shows that the caddies' proposed interpretation is not reasonable, because no reasonable person signing the contract after 2010 could believe he retained the right not to wear a bib during a tournament. The only reasonable interpretation of the contract is that the caddies agreed the Tour could make them wear bibs.

It follows that the caddies have no claim for breach of contract. See, e.g., Burke v. TV Guide Magazine Grp., Inc., 442 F. App'x 356, 358 (9th Cir. 2011) (unpublished) HN5[] (no breach where "the conduct of which [a] plaintiff complains . . . is specifically authorized by the contract"). And by definition, by consenting to wear bibs, the caddies relinquished any right they otherwise would have had to display endorsements on the parts of their shirts covered by the bibs. Their lawsuit therefore does not state a claim for breach of contract.

The only remaining question is whether the caddies should be given leave to amend their breach of contract claim. The only conceivable way the caddies could state a claim for breach of contract in the face of this language permitting the Tour to require them to wear bibs would be through a plausible allegation that the Tour had somehow relinquished this contractual right. Cf. Waller v. Truck Ins. Exch., Inc., 11 Cal. 4th 1, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 370, 900 P.2d 619, 637 (Cal. 1995). Although the caddies make an ephemeral assertion that the Tour has at times "suggested that caddies are not actually required to wear the bibs," SAC ¶ 12, every concrete factual allegation they make on this issue [12] is to the contrary and indicates that the Tour has regularly enforced its contractual rights. For example, the caddies allege the Tour "has fined Plaintiff Steve Williams numerous times for removing bibs," and that "Local Hosts have similarly forced caddies to wear the bibs . . . by threatening to report caddies to [the Tour] for discipline, by not permitting a caddie to participate in a tournament and carry out his duties for his professional golfer, and by threatening to prohibit the caddie from participating in a tournament unless the caddie wears the bib." Id. The caddies also complain the Tour has "obstinately refused to change its practice" of requiring them to wear bibs. SAC ¶ 11. And plaintiff James Edmonson declared under oath, in support of an earlier-filed [*906] motion for a preliminary injunction: "During my career, [the Tour] has always threatened to exclude caddies from working at a tournament if they refuse to wear the bibs." Dkt. 3 Ex. 1 at ¶ 12 (emphasis added).[4] Given these allegations, it is clear amendment would be futile. See, e.g., Stone v. Travelers Corp., 58 F.3d 434, 437 n.1 (9th Cir. 1995) HN6[] (leave to amend need not be given where a plaintiff cannot cure defects in his complaint without alleging facts inconsistent with prior [13] iterations of the complaint). The caddies' breach of contract claim is therefore dismissed with prejudice.

[3] HN4[] A concession like this is appropriately considered on a motion to dismiss. [11] See *Scognamillo v. Credit Suisse First Bos. LLC, No. C03-2061 TEH, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20221, 2005 WL 2045807, at 9 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 25, 2005); see also Brown v. Philip Morris Inc., 250 F.3d 789, 795, 797 (3d Cir. 2001); cf. Soto-Negron v. Taber Partners I, 339 F.3d 35, 38 (1st Cir. 2003) (quoting Chongris v. Bd. of Appeals, 811 F.2d 36, 37 (1st Cir.1987)).

B. DURESS

Perhaps anticipating the conclusion that the language of the contract allows the Tour to require them to wear bibs, the caddies alternatively argue they agreed to this contract language under duress. SAC ¶ 155. The caddies note that they are employed by the individual golfers who participate in Tour events, not by the Tour itself. Id.; see also id. ¶¶ 6, 69. The caddies allege that the Tour "threatened to and attempted to interfere with [the caddies'] business relationships with their respective [14] players and individual sponsors" if they would not agree to wear the bibs. SAC ¶ 155. The Tour also allegedly "threatened to or did in fact preclude caddies from working for their golfer [at Tour events] if they refused to" wear the bibs. Id. The caddies assert that, because they "lack viable alternative employment," they had no choice but to agree to wear the bibs at the Tour's insistence. Id.

HN8[] If a party to a contract signs it under economic duress, a court has discretion to rescind it. Rich & Whillock, Inc. v. Ashton Dev., Inc., 157 Cal. App. 3d 1154, 204 Cal. Rptr. 86, 89 (Ct. App. 1984). "The doctrine of 'economic duress' can apply when one party has done a wrongful act which is sufficiently coercive to cause a reasonably prudent person, faced with no reasonable alternative, to agree to an unfavorable contract." CrossTalk Prods., Inc. v. Jacobson, 65 Cal. App. 4th 631, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 615, 622-23 (Ct. App. 1998). A wrongful act does not necessarily mean a tortious or "unlawful act" but encompasses a greater range of unethical behavior. Tarpy v. Cty. of San Diego, 110 Cal. App. 4th 267, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 607, 614 (Ct. App. 2003) (citing CrossTalk Prods., 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d at 622-23). In addition to showing that the wrongful act was objectively coercive, the party seeking rescission must also show that it actually was coerced, i.e. that it had no reasonable alternative but to agree. CrossTalk Prods., 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d at 623. California courts have held a person had no reasonable alternative "when the only other alternative is bankruptcy or financial ruin." [15] Rich & Whillock, 204 Cal. Rptr. at 89. The doctrine does not allow for rescission of contracts that are merely the result of "[h]ard bargaining," as opposed to the kind of extreme financial coercion that leaves a person with no real choice but to agree. Id.

[*907] The allegations in this lawsuit cannot support a theory of economic duress. It might be one thing if someone became a professional caddie in reliance on the notion that a significant portion of his income would come from logos displayed on shirts he wore during tournaments, only later to be forced to choose either to stop making that money or to stop practicing his trade. It is another thing for someone embark upon a profession whose practitioners have long been required to wear bibs, and who therefore have not been able to display logos on the part of the shirt covered by the bib. The caddies allegation that they were coerced into this arrangement on threat of extreme economic hardship is not plausible, and this claim is dismissed with prejudice.

C. UNJUST ENRICHMENT

HN9[] There is no "standalone cause of action for 'unjust enrichment'" in California. Astiana v. Hain Celestial Grp., Inc., 783 F.3d 753, 762 (9th Cir. 2015) (citing Durell v. Sharp Healthcare, 183 Cal. App. 4th 1350, 108 Cal. Rptr. 3d 682, 699 (Ct. App. 2010)). However, "[w]hen a plaintiff alleges unjust enrichment, a court may 'construe the cause of action as a quasi-contract claim [16] seeking restitution.'" Id. (citing Rutherford Holdings, LLC v. Plaza Del Rey, 223 Cal. App. 4th 221, 166 Cal. Rptr. 3d 864, 872 (Ct. App. 2014)). In this case, because the caddies agreed to wear the bibs in an express contract and the complaint does not plausibly allege the contract was procured by fraud or duress or is otherwise unenforceable, even if the Court were to construe the caddies' unjust enrichment claim as a claim for restitution, that claim would fail as a matter of law. See Durell, 108 Cal. Rptr. 3d at 700. It is therefore dismissed with prejudice.

[4] The complaint expressly references exhibits attached to Edmondson's declaration, and impliedly incorporates the substance of Edmondson's declaration itself. HN7[] "[A] court may consider documents which are not physically attached to the complaint but 'whose contents are alleged in [the] complaint and whose authenticity no party questions.'" Van Winkle v. Allstate Ins. Co., 290 F. Supp. 2d 1158, 1162 (C.D. Cal. 2003) (quoting eCash Techs., Inc. v. Guagliardo, 127 F. Supp.2d 1069, 1074 (C.D. Cal. 2000) (second alteration original)). Because the plaintiffs offered Edmondson's declaration themselves and the defendant does not dispute its authenticity, the Court will consider the declaration in ruling on the motion to dismiss. See Appling v. Wachovia Mortg., FSB, 745 F. Supp. 2d 961, 968 (N.D. Cal. 2010).

II. RIGHT OF PUBLICITY

The caddies also allege the Tour is violating their "right of publicity" by using them as "human billboards." They contend the Tour makes money by requiring the caddies to wear bibs, because the bibs display corporate logos and the names of corporate sponsors.

HN10[] California recognizes both a statutory and common law right of publicity. Cohen v. Facebook, Inc., 798 F. Supp. 2d 1090, 1093 (N.D. Cal. 2011). "To state a claim for common law misappropriation [in violation of the right of publicity], plaintiffs must allege '(1) the defendant's use of the plaintiff's identity; (2) the appropriation of plaintiff's name or likeness to defendant's advantage, commercially or otherwise; (3) lack of consent; and (4) resulting injury.' For a claim under Civil Code § 3344, plaintiffs must additionally allege '(1) a "knowing" use; (2) [17] for purposes of advertising, and (3) a direct connection between the use and the commercial purpose.'" Id. at 1093-94 (quoting Newcombe v. Adolf Coors Co., 157 F.3d 686, 692 (9th Cir. 1998)).

Both the common law and statutory causes of action for misappropriation require lack of consent. Id. As previously explained, the contracts the caddies sign before participating in tournaments allow the Tour to require them to wear bibs. By definition, therefore, the caddies have consented to the use of their images at tournaments to display what is on the bibs. Further, in that same agreement, the caddies granted and assigned to the Tour their "individual television, radio, motion picture, photographic, electronic, . . . and all other similar or related media rights with respect to" their participation in Tour events. Dkt. No. 80 Ex. F. It is therefore implausible that the caddies did not consent to the Tour's commercial use of their likenesses in televising and otherwise depicting the caddies participating in Tour events wearing the bibs.

[*908] The caddies note that the Tour's player handbook distinguishes between "media rights" and "marketing rights," and that the provision on "marketing rights" expressly protects the players' right to seek endorsements. Dkt. No. 3 Ex. 1-A [18] at 150-51. Then they argue that this distinction should be read into their contract as well, even though their contract says nothing about "marketing rights." Even assuming they are correct, it does nothing to save their "right of publicity" claim. There is no inconsistency between consent by a caddie to wear a bib and retention by the caddie of "marketing rights." The caddies can still seek to promote or endorse products, regardless of whether they also consented to allowing the Tour to use their likenesses in the limited manner described by the contract (i.e. to depict the caddies participating in Tour events while wearing the bibs).

The caddies' right of publicity claims are dismissed with prejudice.

III. ANTITRUST CLAIMS

The caddies assert various claims under Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2. As a threshold matter, HN11[] "to state a valid claim under the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must allege that the defendant has market power within a 'relevant market,'" and must provide a facially plausible definition of that market. Newcal Indus., Inc. v. Ikon Office Sol., 513 F.3d 1038, 1044, 1045 (9th Cir. 2008); see also id. at 1044 n.3; Tanaka v. Univ. of S. Cal., 252 F.3d 1059, 1063 (9th Cir. 2001); Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 556, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). Defining the relevant market requires plausibly alleging both "a relevant product market and a relevant geographic market." Sidibe v. Sutter Health, 4 F. Supp. 3d 1160, 1174 (N.D. Cal. 2013); see also Newcal, 513 F.3d at 1045 n.4. The relevant product [19] market "must encompass the product at issue as well as all economic substitutes for the product." Newcal, 513 F.3d at 1045. That is, the market must include all products for which there is "reasonable interchangeability of use or . . . cross-elasticity of demand." Id. (quoting Brown Shoe v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962)). If a plaintiff "alleges a proposed relevant market that clearly does not encompass all interchangeable substitute products even when all factual inferences are granted in plaintiff's favor, the relevant market is legally insufficient and a motion to dismiss may be granted." Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d 430, 436 (3d Cir. 1997).

This threshold requirement exists to prevent the antitrust laws from applying too broadly. HN12[] Antitrust law is not intended to reach all potentially objectionable conduct by economic competitors; it is intended to protect consumers from the anticompetitive effects of wrongful monopolization or restraints of trade. See, e.g., NCAA v. Bd. of Regents of Univ. of Okla., 468 U.S. 85, 107, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1984). The theory is that in a functioning competitive market, if one seller raises the price of its product, consumers will turn to other sellers of similar products to avoid paying the higher price. The conduct of a seller (or group of sellers) only implicates the antitrust laws if it allows the seller (or group of sellers) to charge artificially [20] high prices in a scenario where consumers have no reasonable opportunity to turn to another product. See id. To determine whether that kind of harm is likely to happen or has happened, it is necessary to examine the entire product market, i.e. all products a consumer would consider reasonably interchangeable and would turn to if there were a significant price increase in the original product. If consumers are not precluded from responding to the defendant's conduct simply [*909] by turning to reasonable alternatives in the market, the conduct of the defendant (even if otherwise wrongful) was not meant to be covered by the antitrust laws. See Adidas Am., Inc. v. NCAA, 64 F. Supp. 2d 1097, 1101-02 (D. Kan. 1999).

The caddies allege there are two relevant product markets in which the Tour has committed antitrust violations: the "Endorsement Market" and the "Live Action Advertising Market." SAC ¶ 82. In these markets, the caddies allege, advertisers of certain products seek the attention of pro golf fans. With regard to both markets, the caddies allege that pro golf fans are unique — that they tend to be older, wealthier, and more privileged than fans of other sports. Therefore, according to the caddies, it is not merely companies that advertise golf-specific products [21] that wish to reach golf fans in particular. It is also companies that advertise luxury goods and services that fans of other sports will be less interested in, or less able to purchase. SAC ¶ 95.

The caddies describe the endorsement market as "the national market for the endorsement of products and services by participants in professional golf tournaments." SAC ¶ 84. According to the lawsuit, endorsements by pro golfers and caddies displayed during golf tournaments are not reasonably interchangeable with other forms of advertising to golf fans, such as television ads, magazine ads, internet ads, or posters displayed at golf course clubhouses. SAC ¶ 85. This is so, the caddies allege, because golf fans cannot ignore, say, a Nike hat worn by a golfer during a tournament in the same way they could ignore a Nike ad in a magazine. Id. And this is true, the caddies allege, even if the Nike ad has a picture of the same golfer wearing the same hat. Id. In other words, the caddies allege that the in-tournament endorsement market is distinct from all other forms of advertising to golf fans, including but not limited to other ways of communicating to golf fans that a player or caddie endorses [22] a product.[5]

The caddies describe the live action advertising market as "the national . . . market for in-play or in-action commercial advertising at professional golf events between commercial breaks." SAC ¶ 88. This is different from the endorsement market in one sense: with the live action advertising market, it does not matter whether the advertisement of a product comes in the form of an endorsement. But it is similar to the endorsement market in another sense: the live action advertising market is limited to things people see when they're watching the golf "action" on TV. Beyond a display on the shirt or hat of a golfer or caddie, this might include the display of a sign on a bridge on the golf course, or the display of a logo on a graphic that appears on screen during tournament play (like when the leaderboard is shown). The caddies allege that these advertisement opportunities are sold to sponsors, whose logos "are inserted subtly but effectively in the [23] field of play where they can be viewed by the live golf tournament audience and by the broadcast audiences between commercial breaks." Id. As with the endorsement market, the caddies allege that these forms of advertisement are unique and not reasonably interchangeable with other forms of advertising to golf fans, because broadcast viewers can fast-forward through commercials, or ignore magazine ads or posters, but cannot readily avoid [*910] observing a logo that appears on screen during tournament play. SAC ¶ 90.

[5] The Court assumes, for the sake of argument and for purposes of this motion to dismiss only, that fans of pro golf are uniquely attractive to certain advertisers in a way that fans of other sports (such as tennis) are not. Cf. NCAA v. Bd. of Regents of Univ. of Okla., 468 U.S. 85, 111, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1984).

These allegations — that advertising in the "Endorsement Market" and the "Live Action Advertising Market" is meaningfully distinct from other forms of advertising to golf fans — are not plausible. Companies that wish to advertise things like golf balls or luxury watches to fans of pro golf can do so in a variety of ways: television ads, magazine ads, internet ads, posters at golf course clubhouses, and more. To be sure, not all forms of advertising are the same, and some forms have benefits that others don't. For example, with a television ad, a company can communicate a detailed verbal and visual message about its product (including but not limited to an endorsement by a golfer, [24] or an actor, or a caddie, or some other figure). With a magazine ad, the company cannot communicate verbally, but it can communicate visually, and the ad might be hard to ignore if it appears on the page opposite an article someone is reading. With a logo being worn by a caddie or a golfer during a tournament, the company's communication capabilities are far more limited, but perhaps the communication is more likely to catch someone's eye. However, it's not enough to allege that these forms of advertising have differences. See, e.g., United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 394, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956). To implicate the antitrust laws, the caddies must allege facts from which one could plausibly conclude that these different methods of advertising to golf fans are not reasonably interchangeable, such that even if the price of one advertising method went up in a meaningful way, companies would not switch to another method of advertising. The caddies have alleged no such facts. Even assuming the caddies are correct that an endorsement of a product by a golfer or caddie is sufficiently different from an advertisement without an endorsement, the endorsement market cannot be so narrowly defined as to include only in-play endorsements and not also endorsements [25] communicated via other media, because it isn't plausible that an increase in the price of in-play endorsements would have no effect on the demand for other types of endorsements, or vice versa. Likewise, with respect to the live action advertising market, while it may be true that the advent of DVRs has rendered in-play advertisement opportunities more attractive than they previously were, it does not plausibly follow that a price increase in in-play advertisement opportunities would have no effect on the demand for other forms of advertisement to golf fans. If it became too expensive to put a logo on a bridge, there is no logical reason a company wouldn't decide instead to put its logo on a magazine ad, or on a wall in golf course clubhouses, or any number of other places.

In sum, the product markets proposed by the caddies are not natural. They are artificial, contorted to meet their litigation needs. Cf. Adidas Am., 64 F. Supp. 2d at 1102. Nor have the caddies been able to explain how they could state an antitrust claim using a plausible product market definition. Accordingly, their Sherman Act claims are dismissed with prejudice.

IV. LANHAM ACT

HN13[] The Lanham Act creates a cause of action against a defendant who, "in [26] connection with any goods or services . . . uses in commerce any word, term, name, symbol, or device, or any combination thereof, or any false designation of origin, false or misleading description of fact, or false or misleading representation of fact, which . . . is likely to cause confusion, or to cause mistake, or to deceive as to the affiliation, connection, or association of such person with another person, or as to the origin, [*911] sponsorship, or approval of his or her goods, services, or commercial activities by another person." 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a)(1)(A).

The caddies' Lanham Act claim is essentially a false endorsement claim: they allege the Tour "used the likenesses and images of Plaintiffs to endorse the products and services of bib sponsors," thereby misleading golfing audiences into believing that the caddies themselves endorse those products and services. SAC ¶¶ 150, 151. But HN14[] a plaintiff can only state a "false endorsement claim" if the use of his identity is "unauthorized." Waits v. Frito-Lay, Inc., 978 F.2d 1093, 1110 (9th Cir. 1992), abrogated on other grounds by Lexmark Int'l, Inc. v. Static Control Components, Inc., 134 S. Ct. 1377, 188 L. Ed. 2d 392 (2014); see also Abdul-Jabbar v. Gen. Motors Corp., 85 F.3d 407, 410 (9th Cir. 1996). As previously explained, the only plausible interpretation of the parties' agreements is that the caddies consented to the very thing they now complain of — namely, the Tour's right [27] to make the caddies wear bibs at tournaments and to televise and otherwise accurately depict the caddies participating in those tournaments. The caddies' Lanham Act claim therefore also fails as a matter of law and is dismissed with prejudice.

V. UNFAIR COMPETITION

Finally, the caddies allege that the Tour's conduct violates HN15[] California's unfair competition law ("UCL"), Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200. Section 17200 allows a cause of action for "any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice and unfair, deceptive, untrue or misleading advertising." The California Supreme Court has held that "a practice may be deemed unfair even if not specifically proscribed by some other law." Cel-Tech Commc'ns, Inc. v. L.A. Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527, 540 (Cal. 1999). However, where the same conduct alleged to be unfair under the UCL is also alleged to be a violation of another law, the UCL claim rises or falls with the other claims. DocMagic, Inc. v. Ellie Mae, Inc., 745 F. Supp. 2d 1119, 1146 (N.D. Cal. 2010). That is because "[t]o permit a separate inquiry into essentially the same question under the unfair competition law would . . . invite conflict and uncertainty." Chavez v. Whirlpool Corp., 93 Cal. App. 4th 363, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 175, 184 (Ct. App. 2001). Because the conduct the caddies assert is unfair under the UCL overlaps completely with the allegations the Court has held fails to state a claim for breach of contract, misappropriation of likeness, and antitrust [28] violations, the caddies' UCL claim fails as a matter of law too. See DocMagic, 745 F. Supp. 2d at 1146; Chavez, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d at 184. This claim is therefore also dismissed with prejudice.

VI. CONCLUSION

The caddies' overall complaint about poor treatment by the Tour has merit, but this federal lawsuit about bibs does not. The complaint is dismissed with prejudice.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Opinion

Defendants and appellants BB&T Insurance Services of California, Inc., aka BB&T-John Burnham (collectively BB&T) and at all times relevant its agent/employee, Masoud Shahri (Shahri) (sometimes collectively defendants), appeal a jury verdict of about $140,000 in compensatory and $600,000 in punitive damages in favor of plaintiffs and respondents Razmco & Associates, Inc., dba Nova Insurance Services (collectively Nova) and its principal, Bahman Bitaraf (Bitaraf) (sometimes collectively plaintiffs), on plaintiffs' cause of action for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage (IIPEA).

Defendants raise a series of contentions on appeal, including the trial court prejudicially erred in instructing the jury it consider the alleged violation of a third party insurer's private [*2] "tenets," which were adopted merely as guidelines to prevent a handful of independent insurance brokers/agents from gaining a competitive advantage over one another, in determining whether defendants engaged in independently wrongful conduct as required in an IIPEA cause of action.

As we explain, we conclude the court erred in ruling the insurer's tenets could be used as the basis to establish independently wrongful conduct for purposes of this tort. We further conclude there is no other basis in the record to establish this element. We thus reverse the judgment in favor of plaintiffs and order the trial court to enter judgment in favor of defendants.

FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL SUMMARY

Bitaraf was an experienced taxi driver and road supervisor who in 1988 became a licensed insurance broker. Bitaraf, as noted, at all times relevant was the owner of Nova. He specialized in writing commercial transportation insurance.

At issue in this case was the placement of automobile liability insurance for the large taxi cab fleets of United Independent Taxi Drivers, Inc. (UITD) and San Gabriel Transit, Inc. (SGT). Typically, taxi companies like UITD and SGT needed insurance for automobile liability; general [*3] liability; accidental insurance, which Bitaraf described as being similar to worker's compensation for drivers; and comprehensive and collision. Bitaraf began writing insurance for SGT in 1989. Between 2002 and 2007, Bitaraf also wrote automobile liability coverage insurance for UITD.

Plaintiffs' operative complaint[1] alleged that defendant BB&T was also in the business of providing commercial transportation insurance and was a direct competitor of plaintiffs; that neither plaintiffs nor BB&T provided "insurance to their clientele directly, but rather through broker agreements between their clientele and various insurance providers"; that both plaintiffs and BB&T generally offered "insurance from common insurance providers, subject to those insurance providers' premium rates for commercial vehicles garaged in different geographic locations and various discounts allowed for among other things, mounted cameras"; and that because of the "relatively small number of insurance brokers dealing in the public livery insurance business [i.e., commonly known as the commercial transportation business], [d]efendants . . . were aware at all times relevant . . . of [p]laintiffs' existing and prospective economic relationships [*4] with various taxi cab companies subject to this lawsuit."

Plaintiffs' operative complaint alleged that in 1999, plaintiffs entered into a "Producer Agreement" with American Business Insurance Services, Inc.—an authorized agent of Mercury Insurance Company—and related entities (Mercury). Pursuant to the terms of that agreement, plaintiffs placed coverage for large taxi cab fleets, including, as relevant here, SGT.

In 2005, plaintiffs entered into a "Consultant Agreement" with Ken Spiker Associates, Inc., another authorized agent of Mercury. The complaint alleged that as a producer through Ken Spiker Associates, Inc., plaintiffs [*5] placed coverage with Mercury for other large taxi fleets, including, as relevant here, UITD.

The complaint alleged that when Mercury implemented its public livery coverage, it established guidelines or "basic tenets" that it expected brokers and agents to follow, including, as relevant here: "Mercury will offer the same quote, given equal documentation, to a prospect not currently a Mercury policyholder. The company will not allow the agent/broker a competitive advantage over another Mercury producer by relinquishing commission for a reduced rate over another Mercury quote" (hereafter the commissions tenet); and "Mercury will not condone special monetary, gift or favors incentivizing arrangements outside of the premium quote to attract the business in competition with another Mercury [a]gent/[b]roker. Discovery of any of these types of incentives by the Company will be grounds for discipline which may include termination of the [agency] contract" (hereafter the incentives tenet). (Original emphasis omitted.)

[1] The record shows the court granted summary adjudication in favor of defendants on plaintiffs' causes of action for intentional and negligent interference with existing economic relationships. The court also separately granted without leave to amend defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings on plaintiffs' cause of action for negligent interference with prospective economic relationships. Neither ruling is at issue in this appeal. At trial, plaintiffs had two remaining causes of action against defendants: IIPEA and unfair competition (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200 et seq.; hereafter UCL or Act).

The operative complaint further alleged that insurance providers' premium rates are "generally determined by the location in which the commercial vehicles are kept or 'garaged' in the normal course [*6] of business"; that the premium rates for vehicles garaged in the City or County of Los Angeles were typically higher than the rates for vehicles garaged in the City of Palm Springs or San Bernardino County; and that Shahri, on behalf of himself and BB&T, "misrepresented to existing clients [i.e., SGT] and potential new clients of BB&T . . . that he could offer them insurance policies for their commercial vehicles fleets garaged in the City of Los Angeles and/or Los Angeles County at the same rate as for those commercial vehicles fleets garaged in Palm Springs and/or San Bernardino County."

The operative complaint alleged Shahri also misrepresented to Mercury "where the clients' vehicles were actually garaged (e.g., Palm Springs or Riverside instead of Los Angeles) in order to get a lower premium rate quote from the insurance provider than the actual garaging location would have obtained, and then offered that rate to the client [i.e., SGT] or potential client. Based on these false pretenses, [d]efendants were able to acquire more business from existing clients than they normally would have, as well as acquire business from new clients that they had not previously serviced."

In addition to other [*7] material misrepresentations made by Shahri, the operative complaint alleged that defendants paid "'kickbacks' of insurance premiums and/or subsidizing the insurance premiums paid by the large taxi cab fleets"; that they paid "substantial sums of money (a.k.a. bribes) to large taxi cab fleets, disguised as 'Risk Management Incentives,' anniversary gifts or other 'authorized' discounts"; and that they offered loans to large taxi cab fleets at below market interest rates among other allegedly improper payments.

The record shows Bitaraf on behalf of Nova and Shahri on behalf of BB&T separately made presentations to the UITD board during its August 2007 meeting in an attempt to obtain UITD's insurance business for the next policy period. The operative complaint alleged Mercury, in response to a complaint by plaintiffs and others in the "fall of 2007," conducted an internal investigation and concluded its authorized agent Shahri, on behalf of BB&T, had not engaged in any wrongdoing in connection with his August 2007 presentation to the UITD board. As such, plaintiffs alleged they reasonably relied on Mercury's conclusion, as Mercury was in a superior position than plaintiffs to conduct an [*8] investigation and plaintiffs "had no reason to disbelieve" Mercury's findings and conclusions as a result of that investigation.

However, the record shows that "[i]n or around January 2011," plaintiffs "further heard through rumor" that defendants had engaged in misconduct during the August 2007 UITD board meeting. The operative complaint alleged that plaintiffs sought to conduct discovery to obtain the records of UITD, but that defendants consistently objected to this discovery and that it was not until the "spring of 2012[] when Nova learned through formal [sic] the eventual production of the audio recordings of UITD's [August 2007] board meetings that contrary to representations made by BB&T, Shahri and [d]efendants . . . during Mercury's investigation, . . . [defendants] had in fact made material misrepresentations and engaged in wrongful conduct and unfair business practices to obtain the [UITD] account. Shahri is recorded in these minutes as stating among other things: [¶] ['']. . . In addition to all the services that I offered, sometime ago I received a letter from UITD for celebration of your 30th anniversary, you guys were looking for sponsors, a lot of people talk, I put my money where my [*9] mouth is . . . Mercury has a funny way of saying . . . we cannot contribute toward the policy, but nobody in this country can tell me that . . . I cannot contribute money, that is my right . . . The check is already here. A lot of people talk, I walk the talk. What I can put on the table . . . I can put lines of credit . . . and all sorts of banking . . . your credit cards will be cheaper. . . . I have to put a lot of things on the table not just insurance.['] "

DISCUSSION

A. Mercury's "Tenets" Do Not Constitute a "Determinable Legal Standard"

1. Additional Background

Before trial and in response to defendants' motion to strike, the trial court ruled that Mercury's tenets could be used as a basis to establish wrongful conduct separate and apart from the interference itself for purposes of an IIPEA cause of action.

The author of the tenets and Mercury's head of agent relations, Richard Wolak, testified at trial that shortly after the August 2007 board meeting he investigated complaints by Bitaraf and others that Shahri had improperly given checks to UITD. Wolak then found Shahri had done nothing wrong.

After UITD voted to purchase automobile liability insurance through BB&T, Mercury again [*10] received complaints about Shahri and how defendants had violated Mercury's tenets in connection with Shahri's pitch to the UITD board. Wolak reopened the investigation.

Wolak testified that he wrote the tenets. At least with respect to UITD, as noted plaintiffs in large part relied on defendants' violation of the commissions and incentives tenets to show defendants' conduct was independently wrongful. Wolak testified that, at all times relevant, a "small club of agents and brokers," perhaps about five or six, were in the business of placing commercial transportation insurance in Southern California and that offering commercial transportation insurance was then a new venture for Mercury.

Wolak further testified he used the word "tenet," and specifically avoided the word "rule," because "my [i.e., Wolak's] whole purpose here was to create, like, a gentleman's agreement, something like a guideline. Not a strict and hard[-]fast law, but I wanted to give it some meaning. So I used the words that you [sic] thought would bring some strength to it and hopefully everyone could adhere to."

He testified that if the tenets were violated, Mercury "didn't promote any remedy" and instead, "would take [*11] under advisement whatever the violation would be"; that the tenets were not binding but rather were "just suggestions"; that he "absolutely" did not intend the tenets to have "any legal effect," or to use them to set up some sort of "legal structure"; that he never used the tenets to take any disciplinary action against a "single person"; that the purpose of the tenets was "to keep the Mercury agents from fighting with each other while [Mercury] tried to get [its commercial transportation insurance] business off the ground"; and that he unilaterally withdrew the tenets in March 2008.

As noted, Wolak further investigated whether any of the tenets were violated by Shahri in connection with the August 2007 board meeting after Wolak received new complaints in October 2007. Wolak again determined there was no such violation, a conclusion he reiterated at trial. In fact, at trial Wolak testified that, when Shahri offered through BB&T (which was owned by a bank) to provide UITD various additional services, including cheaper credit cards and lines of credit, Shahri was merely engaging in healthy competition where one independent agent/broker was seeking to "get a competitive advantage over [*12] another Mercury agent[/broker]."

Specifically, Wolak testified Shahri was not "rebating money. He's creating a better price as far as the insurance product is concerned. This is something in the banking business, whatever other things that a brokerage has to offer. That is what they're offering. This has nothing to do with the — playing with the rates and commissions to overcome the competition."

When asked if offering such services violated the incentives tenet, Wolak testified, "Again, going back to this: This is a guideline. Gifts mean[] tickets to the Super Bowl, not things that they can do in terms of what brokers do: adding products and services to a client's repertoire to help them better cover their business."

With respect to the anniversary "gift," Wolak testified when he initially investigated the matter some numbers regarding the amount of the "gift" were "bantered about," but he then did not have specific knowledge about what Shahri had offered the UITD board. Nonetheless, he found nothing wrong with making such a "gift," noting: "Again, the guidelines were for the surreptitious payment, meaning that — we're going to sneak this money to you under the table or however they're [*13] going to do it — give you a rebate, and that's how we're going to get money back to you because I can't do it any other way. But it's common for contributions to be made to a fund — anniversary fund that paid for their — they can solicit that from any broker. They can solicit the taxicab people and say, Hey, all you four brokers in the business, would you like to contribute to our anniversary fund?"

With respect to the 30th anniversary "gift," the record shows BB&T conducted an internal audit and learned in May or June 2007 that UITD initially was owed about $161,000 in refunds on prior UITD polices placed by BB&T and issued by one or more liability insurers that had gone into liquidation. Shahri testified that in mid-July 2007, before the UITD board meeting, he delivered a refund check in this amount to the president of UITD, as also reflected by an accompanying cover letter drafted by Shahri explaining the audit and how the majority of the refund was due to the insolvency of Insurance Co. of New York. The letter stated the return of such funds was "perfect timing for your 30th anniversary celebration."

The record shows a further audit by BB&T uncovered an additional $13,000 and change [*14] in refund owing as returned premium. Shahri again met with, and delivered a check in this amount to, the president of UITD before Shahri's August 2007 presentation. According to Shahri, the president of UITD stated during these meetings that a portion of the money refunded by BB&T would be used to cover the costs of a party celebrating UITD's anniversary and to purchase and install cameras in certain vehicles, which would result in lower premiums.

The record also shows both before and during his August 2007 presentation to the board, Shahri told UITD it was entitled to a 5 percent renewal discount from Mercury, a statement which turned out to be incorrect. As discussed in more detail post, plaintiffs rely on this statement among others to show Shahri made material misrepresentations during his August 2007 presentation in order to gain an unfair competitive advantage over plaintiffs.

In any event, the record shows UITD was not entitled to a 5 percent renewal discount because UITD was going into its third year with Mercury, whereas the renewal discount only applied after three years for renewing customers like UITD. Shahri testified he misread a Mercury worksheet when he offered the 5 [*15] percent renewal discount, which Wolak agreed was an "easy" mistake to make because the renewal discount actually began in year four of the renewal, although the Mercury worksheet suggested the discount was available in year "3." The record shows BB&T subsequently made up the difference in the down payment of the policy and covered the loss by submitting a claim on its separate errors and omissions policy.

After receipt of the checks, the record shows there is a conflict in the evidence regarding whether the UITD board conducted its own investigation regarding the propriety of the checks, inasmuch as Bitaraf had subsequently complained to the UITD board during a second presentation held on September 4, 2007 that the checks from BB&T were "going to be a problem." The testimony shows the money initially was placed in a trust account. One board member testified UITD did not conduct any form of investigation regarding the two checks, including determining whether the checks were a premium refund or a gift. Instead, according to this board member, UITD just blindly accepted the checks, although this member did recall a company attorney met with the board regarding the checks.

However, another [*16] board member in attendance at the August and September 2007 presentations by Shahri testified the board consulted its corporate attorney, who concluded there was no problem with the two checks because, after investigation, it was determined they were merely "premium refund[s]," and, thus, it was "[UITD's] money."

2. Guiding Principles

The elements of an IIPEA claim are: """(1) an economic relationship between the plaintiff and some third party, with the probability of future economic benefit to the plaintiff; (2) the defendant's knowledge of the relationship; (3) intentional acts on the part of the defendant designed to disrupt the relationship; (4) actual disruption of the relationship; and (5) economic harm to the plaintiff proximately caused by the acts of the defendant.' [Citations.]" [Citation.]"' (Winchester Mystery House, LLC v. Global Asylum, Inc. (2012) 210 Cal.App.4th 579, 596, 148 Cal. Rptr. 3d 412.)

Particularly relevant to the case at issue, the interference also must amount to "independently actionable conduct." (Korea Supply Co. v. Lockheed Martin Corp. (2003) 29 Cal.4th 1134, 1159, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 29, 63 P.3d 937 (Korea Supply).) For an act to be sufficiently independently wrongful, it must be "unlawful, that is, if it is proscribed by some constitutional, statutory, regulatory, common law, or other determinable legal standard." (Ibid., fn. omitted & italics added.) Accordingly, the [*17] alleged interference must have been "wrongful by some legal measure other than the fact of interference itself." (Della Penna v. Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A., Inc. (1995) 11 Cal.4th 376, 393, 45 Cal. Rptr. 2d 436, 902 P.2d 740.)

"The independently wrongful act [for purposes of IIPEA] must be the act of interference itself, but such act must itself be independently wrongful. That is, '[a] plaintiff need not allege the interference and a second act independent of the interference. Instead, a plaintiff must plead and prove that the conduct alleged to constitute the interference was independently wrongful, i.e., unlawful for reasons other than that it interfered with a prospective economic advantage. [Citations.]' (Stevenson Real Estate Services, Inc. v. CB Richard Ellis Real Estate Services, Inc. (2006) 138 Cal.App.4th 1215, 1224, 42 Cal. Rptr. 3d 235 [(Stevenson)].)

"It is the plaintiff's burden to plead and prove that the defendant's conduct is independently wrongful in order to recover. The fact that the defendant's conduct was independently wrongful is an element of the cause of action itself. (Bed, Bath & Beyond of La Jolla, Inc. v. La Jolla Village Square Venture Partners (1997) 52 Cal.App.4th 867, 881, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 830.)

"The question has arisen as to whether, in order to be actionable as interference with prospective economic advantage, the interfering act must be independently wrongful as to the plaintiff. It need not be. There is 'no sound reason for requiring that a defendant's wrongful actions must be directed towards the plaintiff seeking to recover [*18] for this tort. The interfering party is liable to the interfered-with party [even] "when the independently tortious means the interfering party uses are independently tortious only as to a third party."' (Korea Supply Co. v. Lockheed Martin Corp., supra, 29 Cal.4th at p. 1163.)" (Crown Imports, LLC v. Superior Court (2014) 223 Cal.App.4th 1395, 1404-1405, 168 Cal. Rptr. 3d 228, fn. omitted.)

The Stevenson case informs our analysis on this issue. There, the plaintiff sued the defendants for IIPEA after the plaintiff '"expended hundreds of hours of time"' identifying rental properties at the request of a third party. (Stevenson, supra, 138 Cal.App.4th at p. 1218.) Ultimately, the plaintiff located a suitable property for the third party and provided the third party with "substantial information" regarding that particular property. (Ibid.) After the plaintiff commenced negotiations for the lease of the property, the third party demanded defendant Insignia negotiate the lease on its behalf. Plaintiff in response informed Insignia that its conduct violated the Rules of Professional Conduct of the American Industrial Real Estate Association (Association), which applied to the property because it was listed for lease with Association member defendant CB Richard Ellis, the successor-in-interest to Insignia. (Id. at pp. 1218-1219.) Eventually, the third party leased the property for 66 months, and Insignia, rather than [*19] the plaintiff, received a 3 percent commission. (Id. at p. 1219.)

A key issue in Stevenson was whether "a trade association's written rules are sufficient to constitute a 'determinable legal standard,' as required by Korea Supply, supra, 29 Cal.4th at page 1159." (Stevenson, supra, 138 Cal.App.4th at p. 1222.) In analyzing this issue, the Stevenson court noted as follows: "No California case has addressed this issue. Several states that require or permit a showing of wrongful conduct for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage permit a cause of action based upon a violation of established industry, trade or professional rules or standards." (Ibid., fn. omitted.)

Although the Stevenson court recognized that reliance on "industry, trade or professional rules or standards" to support an interference claim was "not without criticism" (Stevenson, supra, 138 Cal.App.4th at p. 1223), it nonetheless concluded that "a violation of well-defined, established rules or standards of a trade, association or profession may constitute the type of wrongful conduct that will support a cause of action for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage. The conclusion is based primarily upon the language used in Korea Supply. The California Supreme Court held an act was 'independently wrongful if it is unlawful, [*20] that is, if it is proscribed by some constitutional, statutory, regulatory, common law, or other determinable legal standard.' (Korea Supply, supra, 29 Cal.4th at p. 1159, fn. omitted.) The specified sources—constitution, statute, regulation and common law—account for virtually all sources of legal restrictions imposed upon a party's conduct. 'Other determinable legal standard' necessarily refers to some other source of limitations upon behavior by which conduct could be assessed. Given the prevailing rule in other states, . . . in an action between competitors, who are bound by well-defined, established rules or standards of a trade, association or profession, those rules may constitute 'a determinable legal standard' within the scope of Korea Supply. If particular rules or standards unduly restrict free competition, it may be inappropriate to permit a plaintiff to base an interference with prospective economic advantage upon them.

"Korea Supply also required, however, that the defendant's conduct amount to 'independently actionable conduct.' (Korea Supply, supra, 29 Cal.4th at p. 1159.) This necessarily requires that the rules or standards provide for, or give rise to, a sanction or means of enforcement for a violation of the particular rule or standard that allegedly [*21] makes the defendant's conduct wrongful. Seldom are the rules or standards of associations, trades and professions likely to give rise to legal causes of action. However, internal remedies available within the association, such as a right of arbitration between the aggrieved members, should suffice to establish 'independently actionable conduct.'" (Stevenson, supra, 138 Cal.App.4th at pp. 1223-1224.)

In reaching its decision, the court in Stevenson, supra, 138 Cal.App.4th at page 1222, distinguished this court's opinion in Gemini Aluminum Corp. v. California Custom Shapes, Inc. (2002) 95 Cal.App.4th 1249, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 358 (Gemini), which also informs our decision in this case. In Gemini, the plaintiff subcontracted with the defendant to "power coat" aluminum parts in connection with a contract between the plaintiff and a third-party manufacturer. After a dispute arose between the plaintiff and the defendant in connection with the subcontract, a principal of the defendant instructed one of his salespersons to "'go get the [third party's] business.'" (Id. at p. 1254.) The plaintiff sued the defendant for IIPEA among other causes of action after the defendant was successful in providing the third party the same services/materials previously provided by the plaintiff.

In affirming the judgment in favor of the defendant, this court in Gemini concluded opinion testimony proffered by the plaintiff [*22] to the effect that that it would be "'unethical,' 'really bad business' or not 'customary in the industry'" for the defendant "to solicit the account of a company with which [the plaintiff] was [then] doing business" was insufficient to establish independently wrongful conduct for purposes of IIPEA. (Gemini, supra, 95 Cal.App.4th at pp. 1257-1258.) In so concluding, this court noted that relying on opinions applying a "nebulous 'industry standards' test . . . would create uncertainty and chill, not maximize, competition." (Id. at p. 1258.)

As noted, Stevenson distinguished Gemini from its facts, concluding: "Unlike the opinion testimony relied upon by the plaintiff in Gemini, the Association's Rules are written and presumably made available to all Association members. The Rules therefore cannot be deemed nebulous. Any Association member and anyone with access to the Rules could easily refer to the written rules to discover what the Rules permitted, required and prohibited. The Rules therefore do not implicate the concerns regarding uncertainty and chilling competition expressed by the court in Gemini." (Stevenson, supra, 138 Cal.App.4th at p. 1222.)

3. Analysis

We independently conclude Mercury's tenets do not constitute a "determinable legal standard" as required by our Supreme Court. [*23] (See Korea Supply, supra, 29 Cal.4th at p. 1159.) Indeed, as noted by their author Wolak, the tenets were not intended to be "rules" but rather a "gentlemen's agreement" between Mercury and its independent agents/brokers; they applied only to a handful of agents/brokers then placing commercial transportation insurance with Mercury, which was seeking to enter the commercial transportation market; they were enforced rarely if ever by Mercury; and they were ambiguous regarding what Mercury permitted, required, and prohibited, including with respect to incentives and/or refunds, as aptly demonstrated by Wolak's testimony in this case.

As such, we conclude the tenets were not "well-defined, established rules or standards" on which to base an IIPEA claim (see Stevenson, supra, 138 Cal.App.4th at p. 1223, italics added) but rather were "nebulous" guidelines that "would create uncertainty" (see Gemini, supra, 95 Cal.App.4th at p. 1259).

However, even if the tenets constituted a "determinable legal standard" for purposes of an IIPEA cause of action, we conclude they nonetheless unduly restricted free competition. (See Stevenson, supra, 138 Cal.App.4th at p.

1223; see also Gemini, supra, 95 Cal.App.4th at p. 1258.) Indeed, our own independent research suggests it is not unlawful for an agent/broker to obtain a competitive advantage by offering incentives, including reducing his or her commission or [*24] offering rebates, when placing insurance.[2] Although former Insurance Code section 751[3] prohibited "unlawful rebates" in connection with the procurement of insurance, this anti-rebating statute was repealed in 1988 by the passage of Proposition 103. (Repealed by Initiative Measure (Prop. 103, approved Nov. 8, 1988, § 7).)

As such, it appears Mercury's incentives tenet, which as noted prohibited "incentivizing arrangements outside of the premium quote [*25] to attract . . . business," was an invalid restraint on competition. (See Antitrust Guidelines for the Insurance Industry (Cal. Dept. of Justice, 1990) at p. 59 (Antitrust Guidelines) [noting the "repeal of the anti-rebating statute necessarily affects the antitrust context by giving legal recognition to the entrepreneurial freedom of agents to compete by reducing their commissions" and further noting "coercive arrangements [by insurers] to prohibit agents from granting or advertising rebates are unlawful"].)

We reach the same conclusion with respect to the commissions tenet. As noted, that tenet provided: "The company [Mercury] will not allow the agent/broker a competitive advantage over another Mercury producer by relinquishing commission for a reduced rate over another Mercury quote." Again, after repeal of the anti-rebating statute in 1988, an agent/broker may properly exercise his or her "entrepreneurial freedom" and compete for business by "relinquishing" commission in order to offset premiums. (See Antitrust Guidelines, at p. 59.)

In sum, we independently conclude Mercury's tenets cannot be used as a "determinable legal standard" for purposes of plaintiffs' IIPEA claim. The tenets [*26] were not rules, much less "well-defined" rules (see Stevenson, supra, 138 Cal.App.4th at p. 1223), but were rather merely guidelines that were intended by their drafter to be a "gentlemen's agreement" between Mercury and a few independent agents/brokers to discourage infighting when competing for business.

However, even if such tenets constituted a "determinable legal standard," we further conclude it would be "inappropriate to permit a plaintiff to base an interference with prospective economic advantage upon them" (see Stevenson, supra, 138 Cal.App.4th at p. 1223) because, at a minimum, they unduly restricted lawful competition among agents/brokers when placing insurance. (See Antitrust Guidelines, at p. 59.)

B. Other Bases to Establish a "Determinable Legal Standard"

1. The UCL Claim

Plaintiffs contend that even if Mercury's tenets do not constitute a "determinable legal standard" for purposes of their IIPEA cause of action, they nonetheless established this element of the tort based on the jury's finding that defendants committed an "unfair, fraudulent or unlawful business practice in regard to either the [UITD] or the [SGT] accounts."

a. Additional Background

The record shows that with respect to plaintiffs' UCL claim, the jury was instructed as follows:

[2] We note Insurance Code section 750 prohibits offering any "rebate, refund, commission, or other consideration . . . as compensation or inducement" in connection with the "processing, presenting, or negotiating claims, including claims under policies of insurance." (Italics added.) This statute has no application to the case at bar, which does not involve an insurance claim.

[3] Insurance Code former section 751 provided: "An insurer, or an insurance agent, broker, or solicitor, personally or otherwise, shall not offer or pay, directly or indirectly, as an inducement to enter into an insurance contract, any valuable consideration which is not clearly specified, promised or provided for in the policy, or application for the insurance, and any such consideration not appearing in the policy is an unlawful rebate."

"Question No. 1 [*27] : Did Defendants commit an unfair, fraudulent or unlawful business practice in regard to either the [UITD] or the [SGT] accounts?"

Because the jury answered this question "yes," they were instructed to go to Question No. 2, which asked:

"Question No. 2: Did Defendants give rebates, give up commissions, provide unearned discounts or credits to either [UITD] or [SGT] that were not given to other taxi cab companies purchasing insurance on like terms and conditions?"

Because the record shows the jury again answered this question "yes," they were instructed to go to Question No. 3, which asked:

"Question No. 3: Did the payment of money, allowance for unearned credits or discounts, or giving up of commissions have a tendency to destroy competition?"

Because the jury also answered "yes" to this question, it was instructed to answer Question No. 4, which provided:

"Question No. 4: Was Defendants' conduct a substantial factor in causing Plaintiffs' harm?"

The jury again answered this question "yes" but found plaintiffs' "out-of-pocket expenses . . . as a result of the unfair, fraudulent, or unlawful business practice" by defendants was "$0.00." The record also shows the jury was given other instructions [*28] regarding plaintiffs' UCL claim, including defining "business act or practice," "unfair," "fraudulent," and "unlawful" among others.

b. Guiding Principles and Analysis

The UCL defines "'unfair competition' as 'any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice and unfair, deceptive, untrue or misleading advertising.'" (Zhang v. Superior Court (2013) 57 Cal.4th 364, 370, 159 Cal. Rptr. 3d 672, 304 P.3d 163.) A UCL action "'is not an all-purpose substitute for a tort or contract action.' [Citation.] Instead, the [A]ct provides an equitable means through which both public prosecutors and private individuals can bring suit to prevent unfair business practices and restore money or property to victims of these practices. . . . [T]he 'overarching legislative concern [was] to provide a streamlined procedure for the prevention of ongoing or threatened acts of unfair competition.'" (Korea Supply, supra, 29 Cal.4th at p. 1150.) As a result, the remedies available to private individuals for violation of the UCL are limited to restitution and injunctive relief. (Id. at p. 1144.) Because the statute "'is written in the disjunctive, it establishes three varieties of unfair competition—acts or practices which are unlawful, or unfair, or fraudulent.'" (Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Co. (1999) 20 Cal.4th 163, 180, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (Cel-Tech).)

A business act or practice is "unfair" under the UCL when the conduct "threatens [*29] an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." (Cel-Tech, supra, 20 Cal.4th at p. 187, fn. omitted.) A business act or practice is "unlawful" when it violates a predicate law. (Id. at p. 180; see also CADC/RAD Venture 2011-1 LLC v. Bradley (2015) 235 Cal.App.4th 775, 793, 185 Cal. Rptr. 3d 684 [noting the "standards applicable to a UCL unfairness claim are something of a moving target"].)

"Finally, a fraudulent business act or practice is one in which members of the public are likely to be deceived. [Citation.] Thus, in order to state a cause of action based on a fraudulent business act or practice, the plaintiff must allege that consumers are likely to be deceived by the defendant's conduct. (Committee on Children's Television, Inc. v. General Foods Corp. (1983) 35 Cal.3d 197, 211, 197 Cal. Rptr. 783, 673 P.2d 660.)" (Prakashpalan v. Engstrom, Lipscomb & Lack (2014) 223 Cal.App.4th 1105, 1134, 167 Cal. Rptr. 3d 832 (Prakashpalan).)

Here, the special verdict required the jury in Question Nos. 2 and 3 to determine whether defendants engaged in conduct that had a "tendency to destroy competition" as a result of defendants' giving "rebates" or giving up "commissions . . . or other credits" to UITD or SGT. Although the jury answered both questions "yes," as noted ante we independently conclude that after repeal of Insurance Code former section 751 in [*30] 1988, defendants' conduct as so described in Question Nos. 2 and 3 was not unlawful and, thus, cannot be used as a basis to show unfair competition. (See Antitrust Guidelines, at p. 59.)

That is, offering rebates or giving up commissions is not "unfair" within the meaning of the UCL because such conduct does not "threaten[] an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violate[] the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threaten[] or harm[] competition." (See Cel-Tech, supra, 20 Cal.4th at p. 187.) Rather, as noted, such conduct actually encourages lawful competition.

Such conduct, again as specifically described in Question Nos. 2 and 3, is also not "unlawful" within the meaning of the UCL because it does not result in the "violation of another law" that can be used as a predicate under this prong. (See Smith v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Ins. Co. (2001) 93 Cal.App.4th 700, 718, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 399; see also Antitrust Guidelines, at p. 59.) Nor is such conduct "fraudulent"; not only is there no evidence in the record to support the finding that the public was likely to be deceived by defendants offering UITD, SGT or both, a rebate of commissions but, as was the case with respect to the "unfair" and "unlawful" [*31] prongs of the UCL, such conduct (as specifically described in the special verdict form) is not unlawful or deceitful. (See Prakashpalan, supra, 223 Cal.App.4th at p. 1134.)

In sum, we independently conclude that the conduct defined in Question Nos. 2 and 3 of the special verdict cannot be the basis for a finding of an "unfair," "unlawful" or "fraudulent" act or practice under the UCL, as such conduct as a matter of law is not "unlawful competition." As such, we further conclude this conduct cannot be the basis to establish a "determinable legal standard" for the tort of IIPEA.

Plaintiffs nonetheless contend that defendants' conduct of "[d]efrauding insurance companies out of premiums, placing cabs in wrong zip codes and selling phony insurance coverages" established the "unlawful" prong for purposes of the UCL because such conduct separately violates various provisions of the Insurance Code. But, as noted ante, the jury was specifically instructed with respect to the conduct that was deemed actionable under the UCL claim, which did not include any alleged Insurance Code violation.

In any event, we note from the record that plaintiffs did not allege in their operative complaint, or argue in their opposition to defendants' motion to strike portions [*32] of that complaint, that defendants' conduct violated Insurance Code sections 780,[4] 781[5] and/or 790.03, subdivision (a)[6] in order to show such conduct was "unlawful"

[4] Insurance Code section 780 provides: "An insurer or officer or agent thereof, or an insurance broker or solicitor shall not cause or permit to be issued, circulated or used, any statement that is known, or should have been known, to be a misrepresentation of the following: [¶] (a) The terms of a policy issued by the insurer or sought to be negotiated by the person making or permitting the misrepresentation. [¶] (b) The benefits or privileges promised thereunder. [¶] (c) The future dividends payable thereunder."

[5] Section 781 of the Insurance Code provides: "(a) A person shall not make any statement that is known, or should have been known, to be a misrepresentation (1) to any other person for the purpose of inducing, or tending [*33] to induce, such other person either to take out a policy of insurance, or to refuse to accept a policy issued upon an application therefor and instead take out any policy in another insurer, or (2) to a policyholder in any insurer for the purpose of inducing or tending to induce him or her to lapse, forfeit or surrender his or her insurance therein. [¶] (b) A person shall not make any representation or comparison of insurers or policies to an insured which is misleading, for the purpose of inducing or tending to induce him or her to lapse, forfeit, change or surrender his or her insurance, whether on a temporary or permanent plan."

[6] Insurance Code section 790.03 defines "unfair methods of competition and unfair and deceptive acts or practices" to include: "(a) Making, issuing, circulating, or causing to be made, issued or circulated, any estimate, illustration, circular, or statement misrepresenting the terms of any policy issued or to be issued or the benefits or advantages promised thereby or the dividends or share of the surplus to be received thereon, or making any false or misleading statement as to the dividends or share of surplus previously paid on similar policies, or making any misleading representation [*34] or any misrepresentation as to the financial condition of any insurer, or as to the legal reserve system upon which any life insurer operates, or using any name or title of any policy or class of policies misrepresenting the true nature thereof, or making any misrepresentation to any under the UCL.[7] "'[I]t is fundamental that a reviewing court will ordinarily not consider claims made for the first time on appeal which could have been but were not presented to the trial court.' Thus, 'we ignore arguments, authority, and facts not presented and litigated in the trial court. Generally, issues raised for the first time on appeal which were not litigated in the trial court are waived.'" (Newton v. Clemons (2003) 110 Cal.App.4th 1, 11, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 90, fns. omitted.)

And, assuming without deciding defendants' conduct of "[d]efrauding insurance companies out of premiums, placing cabs in wrong zip codes and selling phony insurance coverages" violated Insurance Code sections 780, 781 and/or 790.03, subdivision (a), as plaintiffs now claim, we nonetheless conclude such violations do not establish as a matter of law unfair competition for purposes of the UCL. "[N]either the Insurance Code nor regulations adopted under its authority provide a private right of action." [*35] (Rattan v. United Servs. Auto. Ass'n (2000) 84 Cal.App.4th 715, 724, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 6.) As such, in order to state a claim under the UCL based on an agent/broker's conduct, a plaintiff must allege something more than a mere violation of the Insurance Code. (See Raisin Bargaining Ass'n v. Hartford Cas. Ins. Co. (E.D. Cal. 2010) 715 F.Supp.2d 1079, 1091; see also Maler v. Superior Court (1990) 220 Cal.App.3d 1592, 1598, 270 Cal. Rptr. 222 [noting a plaintiff cannot circumvent the ban on a private action for damages under Insurance Code section 790.03 "by bootstrapping an alleged violation [of that statute] onto [the UCL] so as to state a cause of action [under a different provision of the Insurance Code]"].) Thus, even assuming defendants violated one or more of these (or other) provisions of the Insurance Code, we conclude such violations do not establish as a matter of law unlawfulness under the UCL.

2. Intentional Misrepresentation

Although plaintiffs' operative complaint did not assert a cause of action for intentional misrepresentation, we note from the record the jury was instructed with respect to this common law tort ostensibly because it too potentially could serve as a basis to establish a "determinable legal standard" for plaintiffs' IIPEA claim. (See Korea Supply, supra, 29 Cal.4th at p. 1159 [noting an "act is independently wrongful if it is unlawful, that is, if it is proscribed by some constitutional, statutory, regulatory, common law, or other determinable legal standard" (italics added [*36] & fn. omitted)].)

With respect to "intentional misrepresentation," the jury was instructed as follows:

"1. That Defendants represented to Mercury, to [UITD] or to [SGT] that a fact was true; [¶] 2. That Defendants' representation was false; [¶] 3. That Defendants knew that the representation was false when it was made, or that the representation was made recklessly and without regard for its truth; [¶] 4. That Defendants intended that Mercury, UITD or [SGT] rely on the representation; [¶] 5. That Mercury, UITD or [SGT] reasonably relied on Defendants' representation; [¶] 6. That Plaintiffs were harmed; and [¶] 7. That Mercury's, UITD's or [SGT's] reliance on Defendants' representation was a substantial factor in causing Plaintiffs' harm."

The jury was also instructed as follows on the meaning of "reliance":

"Mercury, [UITD] or [SGT] relied on Defendants' misrepresentation if the misrepresentation substantially influenced Mercury, UITD or [SGT] to take action in a certain manner.

"With respect to UITD, UITD would likely have renewed its policy with Plaintiffs had Defendants not made misrepresentations of returned premiums as a gift for UITD's 30th anniversary, or had not misrepresented that [*37] UITD was entitled to a 5% credit and paid 5% of UITD's premium in violation of Mercury's written guidelines.

policyholder insured in any company for the purpose of inducing or tending to induce the policyholder to lapse, forfeit, or surrender his or her insurance."

[7] We note that in connection with the UCL claim, the special verdict also did not require the jury to specify which of the "three varieties" of unfair competition defendants' conduct violated (see Cel-Tech, supra, 20 Cal.4th at p. 180), as the special verdict merely asked whether defendants committed "an unfair, fraudulent or unlawful business practice." (Italics added.)

"Or

"With respect to [SGT], Mercury would not have offered the policy for the amount of premium quoted to Defendants without Defendants' misrepresentation regarding the location of [SGT's] taxi cab units.

"Or

"UITD would likely have renewed its policy through Plaintiffs without the misrepresentations of Defendants.

"Or

"[SGT] would likely have renewed its policy through Plaintiffs without the misrepresentations by Defendants regarding the lower premium based on the incorrect garaging locations or areas of operation of [SGT's] taxi cabs, or Defendants' misrepresentations regarding the policy's $1 million in uninsured motorist (UM) coverage, or that [SGT] did not have to pay premiums for its spare taxis.

"It is not necessary for Defendants' misrepresentations to be the only reason for the conduct by Mercury, SGT or UITD."

Finally, the jury was instructed as follows on the meaning of "reasonable reliance":

"In determining whether UITD's, Mercury's, or [SGT's] reliance on the misrepresentation was reasonable, Plaintiffs must first prove that the matter was material. A matter is material [*38] if a reasonable person would find it important in determining his or her choice of action.

"If you decide that the matter is material, you must then decide whether it was reasonable for UITD, Mercury, or [SGT] to rely on this representation. In making this decision, take into consideration UITD's, Mercury's, or [SGT's] intelligence, knowledge, education, and experience.

"However, it is not reasonable for anyone to rely on a misrepresentation that is preposterous. It also is not reasonable for anyone to rely on a misrepresentation if facts that are within UITD's, Mercury's, or [SGT's] observation show that it is obviously false."

Here, plaintiffs contend there is substantial evidence showing Shahri on behalf of BB&T made myriad false representations.[8] However, assuming some or all of such representations were false and assuming plaintiffs can rely on the representations of defendants to others to establish an intentional misrepresentation cause of action,[9] we conclude under the circumstances of this case that such misrepresentations do not constitute a "determinable legal standard" for purposes of plaintiffs' IIPEA claim.

[8] Such misrepresentations included among others Shahri's statement during [*39] the August 2007 UITD board meeting that the returned premiums already given to UITD were a "gift" for UITD's 30th anniversary; his statement both before and during that same meeting that UITD was entitled to a 5 percent renewal credit when in fact UITD was not entitled to such a credit; his statement that SGT's taxi cab units were operated and/or garaged in certain locations, when in fact those units were actually operated and/or garaged in a different location that subsequently required an upward adjustment of SGT's premiums; and his statement that SGT was not required to pay a premium on 75 of its "spare" cabs, which were operated when a "regular" cab was out of commission, which turned out not to be correct.

[9] We note the jury was instructed it could find intentional misrepresentation based on defendants' conduct directed at UITD, SGT and/or Mercury. We note none of these entities were a party to the lawsuit, and it is not altogether clear that plaintiffs had "standing" to assert a misrepresentation claim involving conduct not directed at them. California Civil Jury Instruction (CACI) No. 1900, the standard jury instruction for intentional misrepresentation, teaches that the misrepresentations [*40] must have been directed to the plaintiff and that the plaintiff must have relied on such misrepresentations. (See CACI No. 1900, which provides in part that defendant represented to plaintiff a fact that was true that turned out to be false; that defendant intended plaintiff to rely on the representation and plaintiff did so rely; and that plaintiff's reliance on the representation was reasonable.) In light of our decision in this case, we decline to reach the standing issue or address any other issues in connection with the intentional misrepresentation jury instructions, including the (confusing) instruction regarding "reliance."

Indeed, as the jury instructions illustrate, to state a valid cause of action for intentional misrepresentation plaintiffs were required to prove, and the jury to find, several elements other than whether defendants' various representations to UITD, SGT and/or Mercury were false. We note plaintiffs have not argued in their brief that there is substantial evidence in the record to support findings with respect to these additional elements, including that UITD, SGT and/or Mercury relied on such misrepresentations and/or whether their reliance was reasonable. We further [*41] note there is no finding by the jury in the special verdict form that defendants actually committed the tort of intentional misrepresentation.

We therefore conclude on this record that plaintiffs' failure to address this issue on appeal and to provide evidence from the record—which also must be substantial—to establish all the elements of intentional misrepresentation, if such evidence even exists, results in a forfeiture of the issue on appeal. (See Tiernan v. Trustees of Cal. State University & Colleges (1982) 33 Cal.3d 211, 216, fn. 4, 188 Cal. Rptr. 115, 655 P.2d 317.) As such, we further conclude plaintiffs cannot use the tort of intentional misrepresentation to establish the element of "determinable legal standard" for purposes of IIPEA.

C. Plaintiffs Cannot State a Cause of Action for IIPEA or for the Violation of the UCL

We conclude as a matter of law plaintiffs cannot state a cause of action for IIPEA because they did not prove conduct that is independently wrongful separate from the interference itself, which is a required element of this tort. (See Korea Supply, supra, 29 Cal.4th at p. 1159.) We reach this conclusion because Mercury's commissions and/or incentives tenets do not constitute a "determinable legal standard" for purposes of this tort; because these two tenets, in any event, "unduly restrict[ed] free competition" (see Stevenson, supra, 138 Cal.App.4th at p. 1223); and because neither [*42] plaintiffs' UCL claim nor an intentional misrepresentation cause of action based on defendants' misrepresentations to UITD, SGT and/or Mercury satisfy the independently wrongful standard under the circumstances of this case.

We further conclude plaintiffs cannot state a UCL claim because, as noted, the conduct set forth in Question Nos. 2 and 3 of the special verdict, on which this claim is expressly based, does not constitute "unfair competition" as a matter of law.[10]

DISPOSITION[11]

The judgment is reversed. The trial court is ordered to enter judgment in favor of defendants. Defendants to recover their costs of appeal.

[10] In any event, we note the jury awarded plaintiffs "$0.00" for out-of-pocket expenses on their UCL claim. We also note that plaintiffs were not entitled to an award of damages or punitive damages even if successful on this claim. (See Clark v. Superior Court (2010) 50 Cal.4th 605, 610, 112 Cal. Rptr. 3d 876, 235 P.3d 171 [noting "damages, including punitive damages and increased or enhanced damages" are not recoverable for a violation of the UCL].)

HN1[] Agriculture & Food, Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

Under the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (FDCA), manufacturers that create a new drug must obtain approval to sell the product by filing a New Drug Application (NDA). 21 U.S.C.S. §§ 301-392. An NDA must include specific data concerning the safety and effectiveness of the drug, as well as information on applicable patents. 21 U.S.C.S. § 355(a), (b). When the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) approves a brand manufacturer's NDA, the manufacturer may list in the Approved Drug Products with Therapeutic Equivalence Evaluations (commonly known as the Orange Book) any patents that the manufacturer believes could reasonably be asserted against a generic manufacturer that makes, uses, or sells a generic version of the brand drug. 21 U.S.C.S. § 355(b)(1). When a brand manufacturer wishes to make changes to a drug that already has an approved NDA, the brand manufacturer must submit a supplemental new drug application (SNDA) to the FDA. A SNDA is required when a brand manufacturer wishes to change a drug label, market a new dosage strength, or change the way the drug is manufactured.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

HN2[] Agriculture & Food, Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

The Hatch-Waxman Act, enacted in 1984, simplified the regulatory hurdles for prospective generic manufacturers by eliminating the need for them to file New Drug Application (NDA). Under the Act's abbreviated regulatory approval process for generic drugs, a generic drug manufacturer may file an Abbreviated New Drug Application (ANDA) relying on the scientific findings of safety and effectiveness in the brand drug's NDA, and demonstrating that the proposed generic is pharmaceutically equivalent and bioequivalent (together therapeutically equivalent) to a brand drug. 21 U.S.C.S. § 355(j)(8)(B).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

HN3[] Agriculture & Food, Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

To obtain Food and Drug Administration (FDA) approval of an Abbreviated New Drug Application (ANDA), a manufacturer must also certify that the generic drug will not infringe any patents listed in the Therapeutic Equivalence Evaluations (commonly known as the Orange Book). Under the Hatch-Waxman Act, the ANDA must contain one of four certifications: (I) that there are no patents listed in the Orange Book that cover the brand drug; (II) that any Orange Book listed patents have expired; (III) that the generic is not seeking approval before the expiration of any unexpired patents listed in the Orange Book; or (IV) that any unexpired patents listed in the Orange Book are not infringed, are invalid, and/or are unenforceable (this is commonly referred to as a Paragraph IV certification). 21 U.S.C.S. § 355(j)(2)(A)(vii).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

HN4[] Agriculture & Food, Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

A generic manufacturer must serve notice to the brand company of a Paragraph IV certification because such a certification creates an artificial act of patent infringement, permitting the brand company to file a patent infringement suit against the generic manufacturer. 35 U.S.C.S. § 271(e)(2)(A). If the brand company files suit within 45 days of receiving the Paragraph IV certification, final Food and Drug Administration (FDA) approval of the generic manufacturer's Abbreviated New Drug Application (ANDA) is automatically stayed until the earlier of (i) 30 months, or (ii) entry of a district court judgment finding patent invalidity or non-infringement. 21 U.S.C.S. §

355(j)(5)(B)(iii). During this stay, the FDA may grant tentative approval of the generic manufacturer's ANDA if it determines that the ANDA would otherwise qualify for final approval absent the stay. 21 U.S.C.S. § 355(j)(5)(B)(iv).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

HN5[] Agriculture & Food, Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

As an incentive for generic pharmaceutical companies to challenge suspect patents listed in the Orange Book, the Hatch-Waxman Act grants the first company to file a Paragraph IV Abbreviated New Drug Application (commonly known as the first-filer) a 180-day period of generic marketing exclusivity during which time the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) will not approve a later-filed Abbreviated New Drug Application (ANDA) for the same brand drug. 21 U.S.C.S. § 355(j)(5)(B)(iv). During the 180-day period of market exclusivity, the first-filer only competes against the brand manufacturer and potentially any Authorized Generic (AG) marketed under the brand manufacturer's New Drug Application (NDA). The start of the 180-day exclusivity period is triggered by the earlier of two events: (1) the first-filer's commercial marketing of a drug product, or (2) a court decision of noninfringement or patent invalidity. Only the first-filer can trigger its 180-day exclusivity period via the commercial-marketing trigger. 21 U.S.C.S. § 355(j)(5)(B)(iv)(I). However, a subsequent Paragraph IV ANDA filer can trigger the first-filer's 180-day exclusivity period via a successful court judgment. This 180-day period of exclusivity can prove valuable, possibly worth several hundred million dollars to the first-filer.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

HN6[] Agriculture & Food, Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

Generic drugs that are therapeutically equivalent to their brand counterpart receive an "AB" rating from the Food and Drug Administration (FDA). This means that the generic and brand drugs have the same active ingredient, form, dosage, strength, and safety and efficacy profile. An AB-rated generic may be automatically substituted at the pharmacy counter for the brand drug. Today, all 50 states and the District of Columbia have drug substitution laws to further encourage generic competition. Although the specific terms of these laws vary by state, drug substitution laws either permit or require pharmacists to dispense an AB-rated generic drug in place of a brand drug, absent the prescribing physician's contrary instructions. Because an AB-rated generic drug may be automatically substituted for the brand drug, once the generic drug hits the market, it quickly captures sales from the brand drug, often capturing 80% or more of the brand sales within the first six months.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN7[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) challenges the legal sufficiency of a complaint. A complaint must contain enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. When considering a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, the court accepts the plaintiff's allegations as true, and analyzes those facts in the light most hospitable to the plaintiff's theory, drawing all reasonable inferences for the plaintiff.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN8[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Stating a Sherman Act claim merely requires enough facts taken as true to suggest that an agreement was made. Asking for plausible grounds to infer an agreement does not impose a probability requirement it simply calls for enough facts to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of an illegal agreement. But in analyzing a motion to dismiss, the court need not accept as true legal conclusions, or threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements

HN9[] Sherman Act, Remedies

A reverse settlement payment, that is, a payment by a patentee to a claimed infringer, may be a restraint of trade under a rule of reason analysis when the payment is large and unjustified. The likelihood of a reverse payment bringing about anticompetitive effects depends upon its size, its scale in relation to the payor's anticipated future litigation costs, its independence from other services for which it might represent payment and the lack of any other convincing justification.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation

HN10[] Contracts Law, Contract Interpretation

A "payment" is defined as the performance of an obligation by the delivery of money or some other valuable thing accepted in partial or full discharge of the obligation.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation

HN11[] Contracts Law, Contract Interpretation

A large payment is anything more than the value of the avoided litigation costs plus any other services provided from the generic to the brand manufacturer. A payment is justified when it reflects traditional settlement considerations, such as avoided litigation costs or fair value for services. Such payments do not raise the concern that a patentee is using its monopoly profits to avoid the risk of patent invalidation or a finding of noninfringement. The burden is on the defendant to show in the antitrust proceeding that legitimate justifications are present, thereby explaining the presence of the challenged term and showing the lawfulness of that term under the rule of reason. Thus, at the motion to dismiss stage, a plaintiff need only plausibly plead that a large payment was made and that any such payment is not explained by traditional settlement considerations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies

HN12[] Sherman Act, Remedies

When a plaintiff has met their prima facie burden on a reverse settlement payment, the burden shifts to the defendant to offer pro-competitive justifications for the reverse payment. But such justifications, as with any affirmative defense, cannot be resolved on a motion to dismiss unless the facts establishing the defense are clear on the face of the plaintiff's complaint.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements

Patent Law > Remedies

HN13[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

It is normally not necessary to litigate patent validity to answer the antitrust question. An unexplained large reverse payment itself would normally suggest that the patentee has serious doubts about the patent's survival. And that fact, in turn, suggests that the payment's objective is to maintain supracompetitive prices to be shared among the patentee and the challenger rather than face what might have been a competitive market — the very anticompetitive consequence that underlies the claim of antitrust unlawfulness. The anticompetitive harm is not that the patent surely would have been invalidated if not for the settlement, and that a generic therefore surely would have entered the market at an earlier date. If that were the standard, a determination of a patent settlement's lawfulness under antitrust law would require the very same patent litigation that the settlement avoided. The anticompetitive harm is that the reverse-payment settlement seeks to prevent the risk of competition. A plaintiff must plead facts sufficient to infer (and they must ultimately prove, within the rule-of-reason framework) that a large and otherwise unjustified reverse payment was made as part of the settlement in order to shore up some perceived risk of competition.

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > Elements

HN14[] Standing, Elements

To establish standing under Article III of the United States Constitution, a plaintiff must show (1) that he has suffered (or is imminently threatened with) a concrete and particularized injury in fact, (2) that is fairly traceable to the challenged conduct, and (3) that is likely to be redressed by a favorable judicial decision. But Article III's injury-in-fact requirement has nothing to do with the text of the statute relied upon. As long as one member of the class has a plausible claim to have suffered an injury that is fairly traceable to the challenged conduct and likely to be redressed by a favorable decision, the requirements of Article III standing are satisfied.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action

HN15[] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

Whether the named plaintiffs may assert the rights of absent class members is neither a standing issue nor an Article III of the United States Constitution case or controversy issue but depends rather on meeting the prerequisites of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 governing class actions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Damages

HN16[] Remedies, Damages

Only the overcharged direct purchaser, and no one else in the chain of distribution, can recover damages under federal antitrust law. The indirect-purchaser rule does not prevent indirect purchasers from recovering damages under state antitrust laws where the state laws otherwise allow it.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships

HN17[] Preliminary Considerations, Federal & State Interrelationships

State procedural rules control in federal court when they are part of a State's framework of substantive rights or remedies.

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > Prospective Operation

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > Retrospective Operation

HN18[] Effect & Operation, Prospective Operation

Statutes and their amendments are presumed to apply prospectively. Only when it appears by clear, strong language or by necessary implication that the legislature intended a statute to have retroactive application will the courts apply it retrospectively.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Business & Corporate Compliance > Antitrust

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions

HN19[] Antitrust & Trade Law

Mississippi does not provide for class actions in its State courts as a matter of State procedure. Its antitrust law states that it shall be the duty of the district attorneys to enforce the civil features of the antitrust laws of the State, but it does not expressly State that antitrust class actions are prohibited. Miss. Code Ann. § 75-21-37. Mississippi's procedural rule banning class actions is not part of the State's framework of substantive rights or remedies, and therefore does not control in federal court.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

HN20[] Statute of Limitations, Time Limitations

Kansas and Mississippi provide that antitrust claims are subject to a three-year limitations period. Kan. Stat. Ann. § 60-512; Miss. Code Ann. § 15-1-49.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Tolling

HN21[] Statute of Limitations, Tolling

The continuing violation doctrine — an exception to the statute of limitations, advises that each time a plaintiff is injured by an act of the defendants a cause of action accrues to him to recover the damages caused by that act, and as to those damages, the statute of limitations runs from the commission of the act. The federal courts routinely apply the continuing violation doctrine in the context of federal antitrust law. But the doctrine has received mixed treatment by state courts deciding state antitrust claims.

[*710] MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

This lawsuit is one of many in the federal courts involving the application of the Supreme Court's decision in FTC v. Actavis, Inc., 133 S.Ct. 2223, 186 L. Ed. 2d 343 (2013), to settlements between branded and generic pharmaceutical manufacturers. In this case, [5] Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs ("DPPs") have brought claims under the Sherman Act, and Indirect, or End-Payor Purchaser Plaintiffs ("EPPs") have brought claims under state antitrust, consumer protection, and unjust enrichment laws. DPPs and EPPs (collectively, the "Plaintiffs") allege that Endo Health Solutions Inc., Endo Pharmaceuticals Inc., Penwest Pharmaceuticals Co. (collectively, "Endo"), and Impax Laboratories, Inc. ("Impax") (collectively, the "Defendants") delayed the entry of generic versions of Opana ER to the Oxymorphone ER Market by entering into an illegal reverse payment agreement to settle ongoing patent infringement litigation between Endo and Impax.

Currently before the Court are two Motions to Dismiss. The Motions seek dismissal of DPPs' First Amended Consolidated Complaint [ECF No. 118], and EPPs' First Amended Consolidated Complaint [ECF No. 121] under FED. R. CIV. P. 12(b)(6). For the following reasons, the Motion to dismiss DPPs' First Amended Consolidated Complaint is denied, and the Motion to Dismiss EPPs' First Amended Consolidated Complaint is granted in part and denied in part.

I. BACKGROUND

Except where noted, the following facts are contained in both DPPs' and EPPs' Complaints, documents [6] attached to the Complaints, and documents that are referenced in, and critical to, the Complaints. Geinosky v. City of Chicago, 675 F.3d 743, 745 n.1 (7th Cir. 2012) (In resolving a motion to dismiss, the court must consider "documents attached to the complaint, documents that are critical to the complaint and referred to in it, and information that is subject to proper judicial notice."). Plaintiffs' factual allegations are accepted as true for purposes of deciding the motions to dismiss.

[*711] A. Hatch-Waxman Regulatory Framework

HN1[] Under the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act ("FDCA"), manufacturers that create a new drug must obtain approval to sell the product by filing a New Drug Application ("NDA"). 21 U.S.C. §§ 301-392. An NDA must include specific data concerning the safety and effectiveness of the drug, as well as information on applicable patents. Id. at § 355(a), (b). When the Food and Drug Administration ("FDA") approves a brand manufacturer's NDA, the manufacturer may list in the "Approved Drug Products with Therapeutic Equivalence Evaluations" (commonly known as the "Orange Book") any patents that the manufacturer believes could reasonably be asserted against a generic manufacturer that makes, uses, or sells a generic version of the brand drug. Id. at § 355(b)(1). When a brand manufacturer [7] wishes to make changes to a drug that already has an approved NDA, the brand manufacturer must submit a supplemental new drug application ("sNDA") to the FDA. An sNDA is required when a brand manufacturer wishes to change a drug label, market a new dosage strength, or change the way the drug is manufactured.

HN2[] The Hatch-Waxman Act, enacted in 1984, simplified the regulatory hurdles for prospective generic manufacturers by eliminating the need for them to file NDAs. Under the Act's abbreviated regulatory approval process for generic drugs, a generic drug manufacturer may file an Abbreviated New Drug Application ("ANDA") relying on the scientific findings of safety and effectiveness in the brand drug's NDA, and demonstrating that the proposed generic is pharmaceutically equivalent and bioequivalent (together "therapeutically equivalent") to a brand drug. Id. at § 355(j)(8)(B).

HN3[] To obtain FDA approval of an ANDA, a manufacturer must also certify that the generic drug will not infringe any patents listed in the Orange Book. Under the Hatch-Waxman Act, the ANDA must contain one of four certifications: (I) that there are no patents listed in the Orange Book that cover the brand drug; (II) that any Orange Book [8] listed patents have expired; (III) that the generic is not seeking approval before the expiration of any unexpired patents listed in the Orange Book; or (IV) that any unexpired patents listed in the Orange Book are not infringed, are invalid, and/or are unenforceable (this is commonly referred to as a "Paragraph IV certification"). Id. at § 355(j)(2)(A)(vii).

HN4[] A generic manufacturer must serve notice to the brand company of a Paragraph IV certification because such a certification creates an "artificial act" of patent infringement, permitting the brand company to file a patent infringement suit against the generic manufacturer. 35 U.S.C. § 271(e)(2)(A). If the brand company files suit within 45 days of receiving the Paragraph IV certification, final FDA approval of the generic manufacturer's ANDA is automatically stayed until the earlier of (i) 30 months, or (ii) entry of a district court judgment finding patent invalidity or non-infringement. 21 U.S.C. § 355(j)(5)(B)(iii). During this stay, the FDA may grant "tentative approval" of the generic manufacturer's ANDA if it determines that the ANDA would otherwise qualify for final approval absent the stay. Id. at § 355(j)(5)(B)(iv).

HN5[] As an incentive for generic pharmaceutical companies to challenge suspect patents listed in the [9] Orange Book, the Hatch-Waxman Act grants the first company to file a Paragraph IV ANDA (commonly known as the "first-filer") a 180-day period of generic marketing exclusivity during which time the FDA will not approve a later-filed ANDA for the same brand drug. Id. at § 355(j)(5)(B)(iv). During the 180-day period of market exclusivity, the [*712] first-filer only competes against the brand manufacturer and potentially any Authorized Generic ("AG") marketed under the brand manufacturer's NDA. Id. The start of the 180-day exclusivity period is triggered by the earlier of two events: (1) the first-filer's commercial marketing of a drug product, or (2) a court decision of noninfringement or patent invalidity. Id. Only the first-filer can trigger its 180-day exclusivity period via the commercial-marketing trigger. Id. at § 355(j)(5)(B)(iv)(I). However, a subsequent Paragraph IV ANDA filer can trigger the first-filer's 180-day exclusivity period via a successful court judgment. Janssen Pharmaceutica, N.V. v. Apotex, Inc., 540 F.3d 1353, 1357 (Fed. Cir. 2008). This 180-day period of exclusivity "can prove valuable, possibly worth several hundred million dollars" to the first-filer. Actavis, 133 S.Ct. at 2229.

B. AB-Rated Generic Drugs

HN6[] Generic drugs that are "therapeutically equivalent" to their brand counterpart receive an "AB" rating from [10] the FDA. This means that the generic and brand drugs have the same active ingredient, form, dosage, strength, and safety and efficacy profile. An AB-rated generic may be automatically substituted at the pharmacy counter for the brand drug. Today, all 50 states and the District of Columbia have drug substitution laws to further encourage generic competition. New York ex rel. Schneiderman v. Actavis PLC, 787 F.3d 638, 644-45 (2d Cir. 2015). Although the specific terms of these laws vary by state, drug substitution laws either permit or require pharmacists to dispense an AB-rated generic drug in place of a brand drug, absent the prescribing physician's contrary instructions. Id.

Because an AB-rated generic drug may be automatically substituted for the brand drug, once the generic drug hits the market, it quickly captures sales from the brand drug, often capturing 80% or more of the brand sales within the first six months. DPP Complaint ("DPC") ¶ 46; EPP Complaint ("EPC") ¶ 36. Within a year of a generic drug's entry in the market, on average, the generic obtains about 90% of the brand drug sales, and the price of the drug typically drops by 85%. DPC ¶ 46; EPC ¶ 38.

C. Endo-Impax Patent Litigation

Until early spring of 2012, Defendant Endo manufactured Opana ER, an extended [11] release form of oxymorphone hydrochloride marketed for the relief of moderate to severe pain. DPC ¶ 73; EPC ¶ 1. Endo's NDA for Opana ER was approved by the FDA on June 22, 2006, and Endo launched the product the following month. DPC ¶ 74; EPC ¶ 84. At the time, Endo only had three years of regulatory protection from generic competition for Opana ER because the patent on the active ingredient in Opana ER (oxymorphone hydrochloride) had expired decades earlier. Knowing this, Endo purchased the rights to four patents — U.S. Patent No. 5,128,143 (the "143 patent"), No. 5,958,456 (the "'456 patent"), No. 5,662,933 (the "'933 patent"), and No. 7,276,250 (the "'250 patent") (collectively, the "Penwest Patents") — that could be used to block generic entry beyond those three years. DPC ¶¶ 70, 71, 76; EPC ¶¶ 79, 80. Endo then listed the '143 patent in the Orange Book as covering Opana ER, and later added the '456 and '933 patents. DPC ¶¶ 85, 87; EPC ¶ 87.

In November of 2007, Impax filed an ANDA seeking to market a generic version of Opana ER, and submitted a Paragraph IV certification stating that the Penwest Patents were not valid and/or would not be infringed by Impax's generic. DPC ¶¶ 40-44, 88, 93; EPC ¶ 92. On January 25, 2008, Endo sued Impax over the 456 and 933 patents, triggering [12] the 30-month stay. DPC ¶¶ 39, 92, 156; EPC ¶¶ 51, 94. Other generic companies later filed ANDAs seeking [*713] to market generic versions of Opana ER before the expiration of the Penwest Patents, and Endo sued each for alleged patent infringement. DPC ¶¶ 99-125; EPC ¶¶ 101-127. Because Impax was the first-filer for the 5, 10, 20, 30, and 40 mg strengths of Opana ER, it was entitled, upon obtaining FDA approval, to 180 days of exclusivity for those strengths as against the other ANDA filers. DPC ¶¶ 40-44, 93, 96; EPC ¶¶ 53, 95, 98. Thus, by filing suit and delaying Impax's entry for 30 months, Endo delayed all generics from launching 5, 10, 20, 30 and 40 mg strengths of generic Opana ER.

On May 13, 2010, a month before the 30-month stay was set to expire, the FDA tentatively approved Impax's ANDA for all strengths of Opana ER. DPC ¶¶ 39, 212; EPC ¶¶ 51, 133. This meant that, upon the expiration of the 30-month stay on June 14, 2010, Impax was free to make an "at-risk" launch of its generic without waiting for the trial court's final ruling in the Impax patent litigation. But, for whatever reason, Impax agreed not to launch its generic through the last day of trial. DPC ¶ 214; EPC ¶ 135. The [13] trial began on June 3, 2010, and proceeded for two days. DPC ¶ 129; EPC ¶ 138. On June 8, 2010, Endo and Impax settled. DPC ¶ 131; EPC ¶ 141.

D. Endo-Impax Settlement

The Endo-Impax Settlement consisted of two agreements entered into simultaneously: (1) the Settlement and License Agreement ("SLA"), and (2) the Development and Co-Promotion Agreement ("DCA"). DPC ¶ 132; EPC ¶¶ 148, 150. Under the SLA, Impax agreed to delay its launch of generic Opana ER until the earlier of: (i) January 1, 2013, (ii) thirty days after a non-appealable federal court decision finding that Endo's patents were invalid or not infringed, or (iii) Endo's withdrawal of its patents from the Orange Book. SLA § 3.2. Impax further agreed to refrain from challenging the validity or enforceability of the '933 and '456 patents, as well as the '250 patent, which Endo had not even accused Impax of infringing. SLA § 3.3. In return, Endo covenanted not to sue Impax on, and granted Impax a license as to, any then-existing or subsequently obtained patents relating to Opana ER. Id. at § 4.1(a),(b). Additionally, Endo agreed to refrain from launching an AG version of Opana ER during Impax's 180-day exclusivity period ("No-AG Agreement"). Id. at § 4.1(c).

The SLA was also structured so that, depending [14] on the volume of Opana ER sales at the time Impax's generic entered the market, one of three things would occur. First, if at the time Impax entered the market, sales of Opana ER had declined below a certain threshold defined in the SLA, Endo was required to pay Impax under the "Endo Credit" provision. Id. at § 4.4. The amount of the Endo Credit payment depended on the amount of decline in Opana ER sales — the greater the decline in sales, the larger the payment required under the Endo Credit provision. Id. Second, if Opana ER sales exceeded a certain threshold defined in the SLA by the time Impax entered the market, then Impax was required to pay Endo a 28.5% royalty on Net Sales of Impax's generic under the Royalties provision. Id. at § 4.3. Finally, if sales of Opana ER remained somewhere between the Endo Credit and the Royalties threshold amounts, neither party was required to pay anything.

The other aspect of the Endo-Impax Settlement was the DCA, which resulted in a $10 million cash payment from Endo to Impax. DCA § 3.1. Under the DCA, Endo and Impax agreed to work together on the development and promotion of a drug for the treatment of Parkinson's disease. Id. at § 2.1. Among other things, Endo agreed to support the [15] product's development through a $10 million up-front [*714] payment, and to make additional future payments to Impax if Impax successfully completed various clinical and commercial milestones. Id. at §§ 3.1, 3.2, 3.3. In return, Endo received an exclusive license to promote the product to non-neurologists in the United States. Id. at §§ 2.1, 2.2. Endo also received the right to keep between 75% and 100% of the profits from the sale of the drug to non-neurologists in the United States. Id. at § 3.4. Endo paid Impax the $10 million cash payment, but no other payments have been made pursuant to the DCA. DPC ¶ 152; EPC ¶ 152.

E. Aftermath

One month after Endo settled with Impax, on July 7, 2010, Endo filed an sNDA for the approval of a crush resistant formula of Opana ER ("Opana ER CRF"). DPC ¶¶ 176-77; EPC ¶¶ 145-46. Endo purportedly made this switch to Opana ER CRF for patient safety reasons, because the crush resistant formula was less prone to abuse. DPC ¶ 182; EPC ¶ 170. But the FDA found insufficient evidence to conclude that Opana ER had an increased potential for abuse compared to Opana ER CRF. DPC ¶ 182; EPC ¶¶ 173-178. Plaintiffs allege that Endo made this switch in anticipation of the market erosion for branded [16] Opana ER that would result from the ultimate launch of Impax's generic.

Despite the lack of evidence supporting Endo's purported reasons for the switch to the new crush resistant formula, the FDA nonetheless approved Endo's sNDA for Opana ER CRF on December 9, 2011. DPC ¶ 179; EPC ¶ 147. By May 2012, Endo had ceased manufacturing Opana ER and shifted its marketing efforts to Opana ER CRF. DPC ¶ 180; EPC ¶ 169. Opana ER CRF sales quickly replaced the vast majority of the sales of Opana ER. DPC ¶ 186; EPC ¶ 183. By July of 2012, Endo publically reported that 90% of Opana ER sales had moved to Opana ER CRF. DPC ¶ 146 n.30; EPC ¶ 183.

Because of Endo's market shift from Opana ER to Opana ER CRF, by the time Impax's generic entered the market in line with the terms of the Endo-Impax Settlement Agreement, in January 2013, sales of Opana ER had declined below the threshold defined in the SLA, triggering the Endo Credit provision. The amount Endo was required to pay Impax under the Endo Credit was determined based on the sales of Opana ER in the quarter immediately prior to the launch of Impax's generic — the lower the brand Opana ER sales, the higher the Endo Credit payment. SLA §

1.1; DPC ¶ 140; EPC [17] ¶ 184. Ultimately, in April of 2013, Endo paid Impax $102,049,000 pursuant to the Endo Credit provision. DPC ¶ 7; EPC ¶ 184. Moreover, because the FDA did not determine Opana ER and generic versions thereof to be AB-rated equivalents of Opana ER CRF, generic versions of Opana ER, like Impax's generic, were not automatically substitutable, and were therefore unable to capture the sales of Opana ER CRF. DPC ¶¶ 178, 189; EPC ¶¶ 167, 211. Without generic competition, Endo was able to sell Opana ER CRF at supracompetive prices. DPC ¶ 185; EPC ¶¶ 8, 10.

II. LEGAL STANDARD

HN7[] A motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim under Rule 12(b)(6) challenges the legal sufficiency of a complaint. Hallinan v. Fraternal Order of Chi. Lodge No. 7, 570 F.3d 811, 820 (7th Cir. 2009). A complaint must contain "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). When considering a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, the Court accepts the plaintiff's allegations as true, and analyzes those facts in the light most hospitable to the plaintiff's theory, drawing all reasonable inferences for the plaintiff. *Camasta [715] v. Jos. A. Bank Clothiers, Inc., 761 F.3d 732, 736 (7th Cir. 2014).

"Asking for plausible grounds to infer an agreement does not impose a probability [18] requirement . . . it simply calls for enough facts to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of [an] illegal agreement." Id. But in analyzing a motion to dismiss, the Court need not accept as true "legal conclusions, or threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements." *Brooks v. III. ANALYSIS

Plaintiffs' claims arise out of the Supreme Court's opinion in FTC v. Actavis, which decided whether it is illegal for a brand-name company to provide a payoff to a potential generic competitor, to keep it from entering the market earlier than it otherwise might have. FTC v. Actavis, 133 S.Ct. at 2223. In Actavis, a pharmaceutical company, Company A, had FDA approval to market a brand name drug, and held the related patent. Id. at 2229. Two other pharmaceutical companies, Companies B and C, filed ANDAs containing Paragraph IV certifications suggesting that the generics Company B and Company C intended to market did not infringe Company A's patent. Id. A fourth would-be generic manufacturer, Company D, agreed with Company C to share certain litigation costs and related profits. Id. Predictably, Company A initiated patent [19] infringement litigation against Companies B and C, triggering the 30-month stay under the Hatch-Waxman Act. Id. Later, Companies A, B, C and D entered into a settlement agreement. Id. Pursuant to the agreement, Companies B, C and D agreed to delay the market entry of their generics for approximately nine years. Id. In exchange, Company A paid Companies B, C and D several hundred million dollars. Id. The Federal Trade Commission ("FTC") brought antitrust claims against all four companies, alleging that they had conspired to restrain trade when Companies B, C and D agreed to share in Company A's monopoly profits by accepting payment in exchange for agreeing not to compete.

The district court dismissed the FTC's antitrust claims on grounds that the agreement between Companies A, B, C and D did not exceed the scope of the underlying patent and therefore could not be treated as an agreement to restrain trade. In re AndroGel Antitrust Litig. II, 687 F.Supp.2d 1371, 1377-79 (N.D. Ga. 2010). The district court reasoned that Company A's patent gave Company A the exclusive right to manufacture and sell the product in question, and the agreement merely prohibited the generic manufacturers from marketing an identical product. Id. at 1377. The Eleventh Circuit affirmed on the same grounds. [20] F.T.C. v. Watson Pharms., Inc., 677 F.3d 1298, 1312 (11th Cir. 2012) ("[A]bsent sham litigation or fraud in obtaining the patent, a reverse payment settlement is immune from antitrust attack so long as its anticompetitive effects fall within the scope of the exclusionary potential of the patent.").

The Supreme Court reversed the Court of Appeals. The Court noted that it is unusual for the patentee to pay a purported infringer when the latter has no pending damages claim, and concluded that settlement agreements structured in this manner may raise antitrust concerns. See, 133 S.Ct. at 2237-38. Specifically, the Court held that HN9[] a reverse settlement payment, that is, a payment by a patentee to a [*716] claimed infringer, may be a restraint of trade under a "rule of reason" analysis when the payment is large and unjustified. Id. at 2230, 2237-38. In so holding, the Court rejected the lower courts' "scope of the patent" test, which immunized reverse payments from antitrust challenge so long as the settlement allowed generic entry before the expiration of the challenged patent. Id. at 2230. Instead, the Court explained that the "likelihood of a reverse payment bringing about anticompetitive effects depends upon its size, its scale in relation to the payor's anticipated future litigation costs, its independence from other [21] services for which it might represent payment and the lack of any other convincing justification." Id. at 2237.

This decision, the Court made clear, was not intended to disturb other well-recognized forms of settlement. For example, antitrust concerns do not arise from settlements where the patentee simply allows the claimed infringer to enter the market before the patent expires and where the patentee pays the litigation costs of its adversary. Id. at 2237. Nonetheless, under Actavis, a reverse payment that is large and unjustified — when analyzed with reference to traditional settlement considerations — may have the potential to work anticompetitive harm. Id. at 2237.

Following the Court's lead in Actavis, Plaintiffs allege that the Endo-Impax Settlement contained a large and unjustified reverse settlement payment that satisfies a "rule of reason" analysis. Defendants, in their Motions to Dismiss DPPs' and EPPs' Complaints, make four broad arguments: (1) the Endo Credit and the No-AG Agreement were not reverse payments; (2) the Endo Credit and No-AG Agreement were not large; (3) the DCA payment was not large or unjustified; and (4) Plaintiffs have failed to allege antitrust injury. Additionally, Defendants argue that [22] EPPs' state law allegations should all be dismissed for failure to state a claim. The Court will discuss each argument in turn.

A. Reverse Payments

The first inquiry under Actavis is whether Plaintiffs have sufficiently pleaded that the consideration paid by Endo to Impax constitutes a "reverse payment." If they have not done so, their antitrust claims fail, and the Court need not go any further. Plaintiffs allege that the Endo-Impax Settlement included a reverse payment — which was made up of the Endo Credit, the No-AG Agreement, and the DCA — for Impax's agreement not to introduce its generic into the market until January 1, 2013 (32 months after the FDA tentatively approved Impax's ANDA).

Defendants argue that the Endo Credit was not a reverse payment because: (1) no money was exchanged at the time the SLA was signed; (2) the Endo Credit provision did not require Endo to pay Impax at a future date; (3) under the Royalties provision, there was a chance Impax would be required to pay Endo; and (4) the type and amount of payment to be made under the SLA was conditioned on future events unknown at the time the Settlement Agreement was entered. Defendants also argue that the No-AG Agreement [23] was not a reverse payment to Impax because Endo did not agree under this provision to refrain from competing with Impax, and therefore the No-AG Agreement did not have value to Impax.

Plaintiffs urge the Court to look at the agreement as a whole and acknowledge the economic reality of the relevant transaction. In this regard, Plaintiffs argue that the contingency of the payment does not insulate it from antitrust scrutiny. Specifically, Plaintiffs allege that the economic reality of the SLA was plain: it insured that Impax would receive a large reverse payment in exchange for staying off the market either through the Endo Credit if [*717] sales of Opana ER dropped, or through the No-AG Agreement if sales of Opana ER remained steady after two-and-one-half years. Plaintiffs argue that even if Impax had been required to pay Endo under the Royalties provision, Impax would still have received significant value through the Settlement. This is because the Royalties provision was only triggered if sales of Opana ER rose by a predefined amount. If this rise in sales occurred, then when Impax entered the market with its generic, there would be more Opana ER sales for it to capture, and Endo's promise [24] not to compete through an AG during Impax's 180-day exclusivity period would become even more valuable.

The Court agrees with Plaintiffs that it is improper to view the components of the Endo-Impax Settlement in isolation. See, e.g., In re Niaspan Antitrust Litig., 42 F.Supp.3d 735, 752 (E.D. Pa. 2014) ("[T]he Licensing Agreement must be read in conjunction with the Co—Promotion and Manufacturing Agreements executed that same day."). When looked at from this perspective, Plaintiffs' allegation that the Endo Credit and No-AG Agreement were "Two Sides of the Same (Reverse Payment) Coin" is plausible and persuasive. Plaintiffs allege that Endo and Impax drafted a sophisticated agreement, and acknowledging that the future was largely unpredictable, included multiple contingencies to account for possible market changes and ensure that Impax received payment for delaying the entry of its generic into the market. Although the form and amount of that payment were contingent on future occurrences, taking the Plaintiffs' allegations as true, it was certain at the time of the Endo-Impax Settlement that Impax would receive anywhere from $33 to $49 million under the No AG-Agreement and an additional $10 million under the DCA.

Moreover, the Court finds Defendants' argument [25] regarding the No-AG Agreement unpersuasive. Although it may be true that Endo was free to compete with Impax in other areas of the market, that does not change the fact that the No-AG Agreement was a payment, possibly of great monetary value to Impax as the first-filing generic.

HN10[] A "payment" is defined as the "[p]erformance of an obligation by the delivery of money or some other valuable thing accepted in partial or full discharge of the obligation." Black's Law Dictionary (10th ed. 2014). In Actavis, the Supreme Court recognized generally that the 180—day exclusivity period is "possibly 'worth several hundred million dollars,'" and may be where the bulk of the first-filer's profits lie. Actavis, 133 S.Ct. at 2229 (quoting C. Scott Hemphill, Paying for Delay: Pharmaceutical Patent Settlement as a Regulatory Design Problem, 81 N.Y.U. L.Rev. 1553, 1579 (2006)). At the same time, Endo's commitment not to produce an AG means that it gave up the valuable right to capture profits in the new two-tiered market. As such, the No-AG Agreement transferred the profits Endo would have made from its AG to Impax — plus potentially more, in the form of higher prices, because it enabled Impax to have a generic monopoly instead of a generic duopoly. See, King Drug Co. of Florence v. Smithkline Beecham Corp., 791 F.3d 388, 405 (3d Cir. 2015). Thus, even though [26] Endo was free to compete with Impax in other areas, by agreeing not to launch an AG during Impax's 180-day exclusivity period, Endo conveyed significant value to Impax.

Therefore, Plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged that the Endo-Impax Settlement contained a reverse payment. The Court now considers whether this reverse payment was large and unjustified.

B. Large and Unjustified

Defendants argue that (1) Plaintiffs fail to establish that the Endo Credit and the [*718] No-AG Agreement were large payments, and (2) the $10 million up-front payment under the DCA was neither large nor unjustified. Again, Defendants choose to assess the components of the Endo-Impax Settlement in piecemeal fashion and argue that each individual payment fails to rise to the level of a large and unjustified payment. The Court disagrees with this approach. Instead, the Court must determine whether, when taken as a whole, the total payment Impax received under the SLA, No-AG Agreement and DCA was large and unjustified.

HN11[] A "large" payment is anything more than the value of the avoided litigation costs plus any other services provided from the generic to the brand manufacturer. In re Lipitor Antitrust Litig., 46 F.Supp.3d 523, 543 (D.N.J. 2014). A payment is justified when it reflects "traditional [27] settlement considerations, such as avoided litigation costs or fair value for services." Actavis, 133 S.Ct. at 2236. Such payments do not raise the "concern that a patentee is using its monopoly profits to avoid the risk of patent invalidation or a finding of noninfringement." Id. The burden is on the defendant to "show in the antitrust proceeding that legitimate justifications are present, thereby explaining the presence of the challenged term and showing the lawfulness of that term under the rule of reason." Id. Thus, at the motion to dismiss stage, a plaintiff need only plausibly plead that a large payment was made and that any such payment is not explained by traditional settlement considerations. Id.

Defendants note correctly that Plaintiffs have not attempted to assign dollar values with significant precision to the various provisions of the Settlement Agreement. This is among the stronger of Defendants' arguments. Some other courts interpreting Actavis have held that pleading an estimate of the total monetary value and a reliable foundation for that value are necessary to establish the plausibility required by Rule 12(b)(6). See, e.g., In re Effexor XR Antitrust Litig., No. 3:11—CV—5479 PGS, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 142206, 2014 WL 4988410 (D.N.J. Oct. 6, 2014); Lipitor Antitrust Litig., 46 F.Supp.3d at 542. While sharing the concerns expressed [28] by those courts and agrees that a plaintiff must provide at least a rough estimate of the value of the reverse payment and anticipated litigation costs, the Court is also aware that a precise valuation may require discovery, as it will likely depend on evidence in Defendants' exclusive possession and on expert analysis. In re Aggrenox Antitrust Litig., 94 F.Supp.3d 224, 244 (D. Conn. 2015).

That being said, Plaintiffs have provided an estimate of the total monetary value of the Endo-Impax Settlement and some basis for this valuation. Specifically, DPPs estimate that the minimum cash value of the Settlement Agreement was approximately $59 million — $49,067,032 for the No-AG Agreement plus an additional $10 million under the DCA. DPC ¶ 148. To reach this estimate, DPPS rely on the formula in the SLA used to calculate the payment under the Endo Credit provision, which they contend was designed to capture the value to Impax of the No-AG Agreement during the 180-day exclusivity period, based on peak Opana ER sales. DPC ¶¶ 140-148. EPPs estimate the value of the No-AG Agreement to be between $33 and $49 million, plus the additional $10 million under the DCA, making their total estimated value of the Settlement Agreement between $43 and $59 million. EPC ¶ 155. [29] EPPs rely on IMS data to approximate Opana ER sales over the 180-day exclusivity period, and then estimate that the value of the No AG-Agreement was a fraction of that amount "depending on reasonable assumptions and methodologies used." EPC ¶ 155.

[*719] Although not perfect, the Court cannot conclude simply from the absence of precise figures that the pleadings represent formulaic recitations of elements and allegations that fail to rise above the speculative. On the contrary, the complaints make specific allegations about the terms of the settlement and their relative value that are plausible on their face. Whether Plaintiffs can substantiate those allegations may be an issue for summary judgment or trial, but for purposes of the motions to dismiss, the allegations are sufficient.

DPPs allege that the median cost of an entire patent litigation with more than $25 million at stake is approximately $5 million. DPC ¶ 149. Plaintiffs allege that the amount of litigation costs saved by Endo would have been a small fraction of this since the litigation had already proceeded to trial before ultimately reaching settlement. DPC ¶ 149; EPC ¶ 161. Thus, even the most conservative estimate of the value [30] of the reverse payment in the Endo-Impax Settlement — $33 million — is large in comparison to the value of the avoided litigation costs. Therefore, the Court concludes that Plaintiffs sufficiently pleaded the existence of a large reverse payment under Actavis.

Plaintiffs allege that this large payment was unjustified because it did not reflect traditional settlement considerations. Specifically, Plaintiffs argue that the payment was much larger than any saved litigation costs and was not in exchange for other services. As discussed above, Plaintiffs' allegations, if taken as true, support the conclusion that this payment was significantly larger than any litigation costs Endo and Impax may have saved by settling so late in the game. Moreover, despite their attempts, Defendants cannot justify the $10 million upfront payment under the DCA as being made in exchange for "other services provided from the generic to the brand manufacturer." This is because the DCA guaranteed Impax the $10 million payment even if Impax did not manufacture the drug or the drug did not gain FDA-approval.

HN12[] Thus, Plaintiffs have met their prima facie burden, and going forward, the burden shifts to Defendants to [31] offer pro-competitive justifications for the reverse payment. Id. at 245. But such justifications, as with any affirmative defense, cannot be resolved on a motion to dismiss unless the facts establishing the defense are clear on the face of Plaintiffs' Complaint. Cf. Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 215, 127 S. Ct. 910, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798 (2007); *In re Solodyn (Minocycline Hydrochloride) Antitrust Litig., No. CV 14-MD-02503-DJC, 2015 WL 5458570, at 7 (D. Mass. Sept. 16, 2015).

Defendants argue that the Endo Credit and No-AG Agreement were a "carrot" and "stick" intended to reasonably balance the parties' economic incentives by (1) enticing Endo to continue making robust sales of Opana ER prior to Impax's licensed entry date and (2) disincentivizing Endo from taking actions that could lead to a significant decrease in sales of Opana ER before Impax launched. This justification is certainly plausible, but the facts establishing it are not clear on the face of Plaintiffs' Complaints or from the SLA itself. Essentially, Plaintiffs and Defendants have raised two starkly contrasting characterizations of the provisions of the SLA, both of which are believable. But to find Defendants' justification to establish conclusively that the payment under the SLA was made for procompetitive reasons, the Court would need to make inferences [32] from the allegations in the complaints in Defendants' favor, which is contrary to the motion to dismiss standard. See, Phelan v. City of Chicago, 347 F.3d 679, 681 (7th Cir. 2003) (In reviewing a motion to dismiss a court "must draw all reasonable inferences [*720] in favor of the non-movant."). Therefore, the Court concludes that Plaintiffs have pleaded sufficiently that the reverse payment was large and unjustified.

C. Antitrust Injury

Defendants contend that even if Plaintiffs have alleged sufficiently the existence of a large and unjustified reverse payment from Endo to Impax, the Complaints must still be dismissed because Plaintiffs have failed to allege plausibly that this reverse payment caused injury to competition and to Plaintiffs themselves. Defendants argue that there is no allegation of actual injury, because there is no plausible allegation of actual delay of the entry of a generic into the Oxymorphone ER Market. Specifically, under Defendants' theory, Plaintiffs must allege facts to show that, but for the Endo-Impax Settlement, Impax would have lawfully launched a generic version of Opana ER before January 1, 2013. However logically compelling that argument may be in isolation, it is at odds with the Supreme Court's reasoning in Actavis [33] .

By requiring Plaintiffs to plead that Impax would have been able to lawfully launch its generic, Defendants essentially contend that Plaintiffs must plead that the Endo patents would ultimately have been invalidated or found uninfringed. In doing so, Defendants favor a rule that requires litigating the patents' merits — at least in some abbreviated fashion — in order to determine whether the settlement violates antitrust law. But the Supreme Court in Actavis expressly disclaimed this line of analysis:

> HN13[] [I]t is normally not necessary to litigate patent validity to answer the antitrust question . . . . An unexplained large reverse payment itself would normally suggest that the patentee has serious doubts about the patent's survival. And that fact, in turn, suggests that the payment's objective is to maintain supracompetitive prices to be shared among the patentee and the challenger rather than face what might have been a competitive market — the very anticompetitive consequence that underlies the claim of antitrust unlawfulness.

Actavis, 133 S. Ct. at 2236. The Court made clear that the anticompetitive harm is not that the patent surely would have been invalidated if not for the settlement, and that a generic therefore [34] surely would have entered the market at an earlier date. If that were the standard, a determination of a patent settlement's lawfulness under antitrust law would require the very same patent litigation that the settlement avoided.

Instead, the anticompetitive harm, under Actavis, is that the reverse-payment settlement "seeks to prevent the risk of competition." Id. Plaintiffs need not plead (or prove) the weakness of the Endo patents, because the patent's ultimate validity is not at issue. Rather, "they must plead facts sufficient to infer (and they must ultimately prove, within the rule-of-reason framework) that a large and otherwise unjustified reverse payment was made as part of the settlement in order to shore up some perceived risk" of competition. Aggrenox Antitrust Litig., 94 F.Supp.3d at 240.

Plaintiffs contend that Endo used this large payment to buy itself freedom from generic competition. Plaintiffs allege but for Endo's unlawful and large reverse payment, Impax would have launched its generic earlier than it finally did either: (a) "at-risk" (that is, while the patent litigation was still pending); (b) after winning the patent suit; or (c) via a lawful settlement agreement that provided for an earlier Impax entry date [35] without a large reverse payment from Endo to Impax. Instead of this occurring, Plaintiffs contend that Endo and Impax — competitors — conspired to allocate the Oxymorphone ER Market [*721] in a manner that gave each company more exclusivity than it was lawfully entitled to in order to maximize profits at the expense of Plaintiffs and consumers.

Plaintiffs further allege that Endo used that market exclusivity to further stifle generic competition by switching the market to its new formulation, Opana ER CRF. Plaintiffs allege that the reverse payment was designed to, and did in fact: (a) delay the entry of Impax and other less expensive, AB-rated generic versions of Opana ER; (b) fix, raise, maintain or stabilize the price of brand and generic versions of Opana ER; (c) allow Endo to make Opana ER CRF, and to make sales that otherwise would have gone to less expensive generic Opana ER; and (d) allocate nearly 100% of the Oxymorphone ER Market to Endo for at least two and one-half years. Finally, Plaintiffs contend that Impax ensured it received full compensation for agreeing not to compete and ceding most of the sales to Endo's new formulation. Plaintiffs allege that the Endo-Impax Settlement [36] Agreement worked to guarantee that Impax would get paid for staying off the market, whether or not Endo switched the market to Opana ER CRF: if Endo did not switch the prescription base, Impax would get paid through the valuable No-AG Agreement; if Endo did switch the prescription base, Impax would get cash plus the less valuable No-AG Agreement.

These allegations, if true, raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal sufficient evidence to prove the large reverse payment was made to prevent competition on various fronts. Aggrenox Antitrust Litig., 94 F.Supp.3d. at 245-46. Therefore, the Court concludes that Plaintiffs have stated a viable claim under Actavis. The Court denies Defendants' Motion to Dismiss DPPs' Complaint.

For the same reasons, the Court also denies Defendants' Motion to Dismiss EPPs' Complaint for failure to state an antitrust cause of action under Actavis. The Court now turns to Defendants' Motion to Dismiss EPPs' various state law claims.

D. EPPs' State Law Claims

EPPs have brought state antitrust claims under the laws of 28 jurisdictions, EPC ¶¶ 256, 265, 273, state consumer protection claims under the laws of four additional jurisdictions, id. at ¶ 279, and unjust enrichment claims in the combined 32 [37] jurisdictions, id. at ¶¶ 93-94. Defendants contend that all of EPPs' state law claims must be dismissed because: (1) EPPs lack Article III standing to bring state law claims in ten jurisdictions; (2) EPPs lack standing under Illinois Brick to bring antitrust claims in three states; (3) the claims under ten state antitrust laws are defective for various other reasons; (4) EPPs have failed to state valid claims under state consumer protection laws; and (5) EPPs have failed to state a valid claim for unjust enrichment. The Court will address briefly each argument.

1. Article III Standing

Defendants argue that EPPs' claims in District of Columbia, Maine, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oregon, Puerto Rico, South Dakota, Utah, and Vermont must be dismissed because EPPs have failed to allege any connection whatsoever with those jurisdictions, and therefore lack standing to bring those claims under Article III of the Constitution. Plaintiffs argue that Defendants are attempting to create a class action standing barrier that exceeds the requirements of Article III.

HN14[] To establish standing under Article III, a plaintiff must show (1) that he has suffered (or is imminently threatened with) a concrete and particularized [38] "injury in fact," (2) that is fairly traceable to the challenged conduct, and (3) that is [*722] likely to be redressed by a favorable judicial decision. Johnson v. U.S. Office of Pers. Mgmt., 783 F.3d 655, 660 (7th Cir. 2015) (citing Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560-61, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351 (1992)). Essentially, Defendants argue that because EPPs have not established that the named plaintiffs have a connection with these ten jurisdictions, they have failed to allege injury-in-fact as to those claims. It is true that injury is a prerequisite to standing. But Article III's injury-in-fact requirement "has nothing to do with the text of the statute relied upon." Steel Co. v. Citizens for a Better Environment, 523 U.S. 83, 97, 118 S. Ct. 1003, 140 L. Ed. 2d 210 (1998). As long as one member of the class has a plausible claim to have suffered an injury that is fairly traceable to the challenged conduct and likely to be redressed by a favorable decision, the requirements of Article III standing are satisfied. Kohen v. Pac. Inv. Mgmt. Co. LLC, 571 F.3d 672, 676 (7th Cir. 2009).

EPPs have satisfied the requirements of Article III. EPPs contend that Defendants alleged anticompetitive conduct caused EPPs injury by delaying market entry of generic Opana ER and forcing plaintiffs to pay supracompetitive prices. Further, EPPs seek damages for their state law claims, so a favorable decision will redress their injury. A greater showing is not required at this stage of the proceedings. HN15[] Whether the named plaintiffs "may assert [39] the rights of absent class members is neither a standing issue nor an Article III case or controversy issue but depends rather on meeting the prerequisites of Rule 23 governing class actions." Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 395-96, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606 (1996) (Souter, J., concurring in part, dissenting in part, and concurring in the judgment) (alterations and internal quotation marks omitted); Arreola v. Godinez, 546 F.3d 788, 795 (7th Cir. 2008) (analyzing named plaintiff's standing as a separate inquiry from his entitlement to relief or ability to satisfy the criteria of Rule 23). The Court denies Defendants' Motion to Dismiss EPPs' claims for lack of standing. The suitability of the named plaintiffs as representatives of the class will be addressed at the class certification stage.

2. Illinois Brick

This case is rendered much more complicated by the rules of Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977), and California v. ARC America Corp., 490 U.S. 93, 109 S. Ct. 1661, 104 L. Ed. 2d 86 (1989). In the former case, the Supreme Court held that HN16[] only the overcharged direct purchaser, and no one else in the chain of distribution, can recover damages under federal antitrust law, Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 746; in the latter, the Supreme Court held that the "indirect-purchaser rule" does not prevent indirect purchasers from recovering damages under state antitrust laws where the state laws otherwise allow it, ARC America, 490 U.S. at 101. Many states have passed so-called "Illinois Brick repealer statutes" [40] in response to the Court's decision in ARC America Corp. Other states continue to follow the rule of Illinois Brick, and deny recovery to indirect purchasers under their states' antitrust laws. Defendants argue that Illinois and Puerto Rico are Illinois Brick jurisdictions, and that Rhode Island was too until it passed an Illinois Brick repealer statute in 2013, which Defendants argue should not be applied retroactively. EPPs dispute Defendants' interpretation of the laws of these states.

a. Illinois

Defendants argue that under the Illinois Antitrust Act only the Illinois Attorney General may bring a class action asserting [*723] indirect purchaser antitrust claims. See, 740 ILCS 10/7(2). Defendants note that courts have dismissed indirect purchaser class action claims asserted in federal court under Illinois law for this reason. See, e.g., In re Nexium Antitrust Litig., 968 F.Supp.2d 367, 408-09 (D. Mass. 2013) (applying the attorney general restriction to bar an indirect purchaser class action in federal court); In re Flonase Antitrust Litig., 692 F.Supp.2d 524, 539 (E.D. Pa. 2010) ("In this case, Plaintiffs are prohibited from asserting claims under the Illinois Antitrust Act, because the Act does not provide relief to indirect purchasers through class actions.").

EPPs rely on Shady Grove Orthopedic Assocs., P.A. v. Allstate Ins. Co., 559 U.S. 393, 130 S. Ct. 1431, 176 L. Ed. 2d 311 (2010), to argue that Illinois cannot limit Rule 23's class action procedure. But [41] this argument has been repeatedly rejected by the courts. See, e.g., In re Wellbutrin XL Antitrust Litig., 756 F.Supp.2d 670, 677 (E.D. Pa. 2010) ("The Illinois restrictions on indirect purchaser actions are intertwined with Illinois substantive rights and remedies . . . [such that] application of Rule 23 would 'abridge, enlarge or modify' Illinois' substantive rights, and therefore Illinois' restrictions on indirect purchaser actions must be applied in federal court."). The Court agrees with the analysis in Wellbutrin. Under Shady Grove, HN17[] state procedural rules control in federal court when they are "part of a State's framework of substantive rights or remedies." Shady Grove, 559 U.S. at 419 (Stevens, J., concurring). That is the case here. Therefore, the Court must apply the Illinois Antitrust Act and dismiss with prejudice EPPs' indirect purchaser antitrust claim brought under Illinois law.

b. Puerto Rico

Puerto Rico has not passed an Illinois Brick repealer, and its territorial courts have not addressed the issue directly. Other federal district courts have concluded that Illinois Brick applies and bars indirect-purchaser actions in Puerto Rico. See, e.g., United Food & Commercial Workers Local 1776 & Participating Emp'rs Health & Welfare Fund v. Teikoku Pharma USA, Inc., 74 F.Supp.3d 1052, 1085-86 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 7, 2014); Nexium Antitrust Litig., 968 F.Supp.2d at 409-10; In re Digital Music Antitrust Litig., 812 F.Supp.2d 390, 413 (S.D.N.Y. 2011) (citing In re TFT—LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig., 599 F.Supp.2d 1179, 1185-87 (N.D. Cal. 2009)). Despite the overwhelming authority to the contrary, EPPs argue that [42] Puerto Rico liberally construes its antitrust laws to permit suit by "[a]ny person" injured by acts prohibited by the statute, including indirect purchasers.

The case relied upon by EPPs, Rivera—Muñiz v. Horizon Lines Inc., 737 F.Supp.2d 57 (D.P.R. 2010), cites as support for its conclusion Pressure Vessels of Puerto Rico, Inc. v. Empire Gas de Puerto Rico, 137 D.P.R. 497, 509-18, 1994 Juris P.R. 144 (1994). Pressure Vessels did not address indirect purchaser standing or the rule of Illinois Brick. See, generally, Pressure Vessels, 137 D.P.R. at 497. Therefore, the Court does not find Rivera—Muñiz persuasive. Absent an interpretation by the courts of Puerto Rico allowing antitrust recovery by indirect purchasers or an express Illinois Brick repealer statute enacted by the legislature, the Court concludes that EPPs' indirect purchaser antitrust claim is barred in Puerto Rico and must be dismissed with prejudice.

c. Rhode Island

Rhode Island was an Illinois Brick state until its legislature enacted a repealer statute on July 15, 2013. See, R.I. Gen. Laws § 6-36-7(d). Although enacted after the Endo-Impax Settlement was entered, EPPs argue the statute should apply [*724] to their claims because it was in effect when they filed their first complaints in June of 2014. "It is well established, however, that HN18[] statutes and their amendments are presumed to apply prospectively . . . . Only when 'it appears by clear, strong language or by necessary [43] implication that the Legislature intended' a statute to have retroactive application will the courts apply it retrospectively." Hydro—Mfg. v. Kayser—Roth Corp., 640 A.2d 950, 954-55 (R.I. 1994) (quoting VanMarter v. Royal Indemnity Co., 556 A.2d 41, 44 (R.I. 1989)). Here, the statute provided that it shall "take effect on passage." 2013 R.I. Pub. Laws 365, § 2. Therefore, EPPs' Rhode Island indirect purchaser antitrust claim is not saved by the later-enacted repealer statute, and must be dismissed with prejudice.

3. State Law Antitrust Claims

a. District of Columbia, Hawaii, Mississippi, New York, Oregon and West Virginia

Defendants argue that the antitrust laws of District of Columbia, Hawaii, Mississippi, New York, Oregon and West Virginia "limit claims to anticompetitive conduct that takes place solely or predominantly within the jurisdictions' borders." None of the cited states' laws contain so categorical a limitation, however. Moreover, although EPPs' claims allege national anticompetitive conduct, they also claim that the unlawful Endo-Impax Settlement affected commerce in each state and resulted in overcharges to end-payors in each state. EPC ¶ 233; *In re Auto. Parts Antitrust Litig., No. 12-md-2311, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 80338, 13 WL 2456612, at 20-21 (E.D. Mich. June 6, 2013) ("[T]he price-fixed products entered into the stream of commerce in these states and caused [44] injury, thereby triggering the antitrust laws of the states."). The Court does not see why the intra state effect of the *inter*state anticompetitive conduct would not be reached by the laws of these states; therefore, the Court declines to dismiss EPPs' claims on this basis.

b. Illinois and Mississippi

Defendants next argue that EPPs cannot maintain indirect purchaser claims in Mississippi or Illinois because: (1) "Mississppi does not permit class actions of any kind"; and (2) the Illinois Antitrust Act "requires that all indirect purchaser class suits be brought by the Illinois Attorney General." Having previously addressed Defendants argument, and dismissed EPPs' claims under the Illinois Antitrust Act, the Court will focus on the argument in regards to Mississippi law.

HN19[] Mississippi does not provide for class actions in its state courts as a matter of state procedure. Its antitrust law states that "[i]t shall be the duty of the district attorneys . . . to enforce the civil features of the antitrust laws of this state," but it does not expressly state that antitrust class actions are prohibited. Miss. Code Ann. § 75-21-37. Under the Shady Grove analysis discussed previously, Mississippi's procedural rule banning class [45] actions is not "part of [the] State's framework of substantive rights or remedies," and therefore does not control in federal court. Shady Grove, 559 U.S. at 419 (Stevens, J., concurring); cf. In re New Motor Vehicles Canadian Exp. Antitrust Litig., 241 F.R.D. 77, 83 (D. Me. 2007) vacated on other grounds, 522 F.3d 6 (1st Cir. 2008). As such, the Court must apply Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 and decline to dismiss EPPs' indirect purchaser antitrust claim brought under Mississippi law.

c. Kansas, Mississippi, and Tennessee

Defendants argue that EPPs' statutory claims based on Kansas, Mississippi, and Tennessee law should be dismissed because these claims are barred by the statutes [*725] of limitations in those states. HN20[] Kansas and Mississippi provide that antitrust claims are subject to a three-year limitations period. See, Kan. Stat. Ann. § 60-512; Miss. Code Ann. § 15-1-49. But Tennessee law in this area is not settled. Compare State ex rel. Leech v. Levi Strauss & Co., No. 79-722-III, 1980 WL 4696 (Tenn. Ch. Sept. 25, 1980) (applying three-year limitations period to state antitrust claim), *with Stratienko v. Chattanooga-Hamilton Cnty Hosp. Auth., No. 1:07-CV-258, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21683, 09 WL 736007, at 12 (E.D. Tenn. Mar. 17, 2009) (declining to apply three-year limitations periods to state antitrust claim). The Court is reluctant to decide an unsettled area of state law; therefore, the Court declines to dismiss EPPs' indirect purchaser antitrust claim brought under Tennessee state law.

Turning to the claims under the [46] laws of Kansas and Mississippi, EPPs argue that their claims are not barred under HN21[] the "continuing violation" doctrine — an exception to the statute of limitations. This doctrine advises that "each time a plaintiff is injured by an act of the defendants a cause of action accrues to him to recover the damages caused by that act," and as to those damages, "the statute of limitations runs from the commission of the act." Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 401 U.S. 321, 338, 91 S. Ct. 795, 28 L. Ed. 2d 77 (1971). EPPs argue that Defendants' sale of Opana ER and its generic equivalents at supracompetitive prices throughout the Class Period triggered application of the "continuing violation" doctrine and tolled the statute of limitations on their state antitrust claims in Kansas and Mississippi.

The federal courts routinely apply the "continuing violation" doctrine in the context of federal antitrust law. But the doctrine has received mixed treatment by state courts deciding state antitrust claims. Compare, McKinnon v. Honeywell Intern., Inc., 2009 ME 69, 977 A.2d 420, 425 (Me. 2009) ("[W]e have never adopted the continuing violations doctrine as a means of tolling the statute of limitations . . . [and] [w]e decline to [do so] in this case."), with Medicare Rentals, Inc. v. Advanced Servs., 119 N.C. App. 767, 460 S.E.2d 361, 365 (N.C. Ct. App. 1995) ("Under [North Carolina law], each subsequent [antitrust] violation is a separate offense for the purpose of the statute [47] of limitations."). EPPs do not point to, and the Court has not found, a single case from Mississippi or Kansas expressly adopting the "continuing violation" doctrine in the antitrust context. In light of the unsettled nature of this doctrine, and the absence of guidance from the states in question, the Court declines to toll the statute of limitations for EPPs' antitrust claims under Kansas and Mississippi law. These claims are therefore dismissed with prejudice.

d. Utah

Utah has passed an Illinois Brick repealer statute, and its antitrust statute therefore does grant indirect purchasers the right to bring antitrust damages claims, but only if they are citizens or residents of Utah. See, Utah Code § 76-10-3109. EPPs appear to be asserting claims under that law on behalf of residents of Utah, but they do not claim that any of the named plaintiffs are such residents. Although, as stated earlier, this deficiency does not prevent EPPs from establishing Article III standing, it does prevent them from bringing an indirect purchaser claim under the laws of Utah. Therefore, the Court dismisses this claim with leave to replead.

4. Consumer Protection Claims and Unjust Enrichment Claims

Defendants argue that EPPs' claims [48] under the consumer protection laws of Florida, Massachusetts, Missouri, and Pennsylvania [*726] and all of EPPs' unjust enrichment claims should be dismissed because the Complaint is devoid of factual allegations sufficient to show that Defendants have violated these laws. Specifically, Defendants contend that EPPs fail to set forth the elements of the claims under each state's laws, much less plead facts sufficient to establish that those elements have been met.

The Court agrees with Defendants. EPPs have listed claims under various state laws, but they have not truly pleaded claims under those laws sufficient to show their entitlement to recovery under them, as required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 8. See, Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678 ("A pleading that offers labels and conclusions or formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do."). Rather, they have pleaded antitrust claims and the factual foundation for them, and have merely alleged that those claims are also actionable under state consumer protection laws and as unjust enrichment.

EPPs' pleadings on their consumer protection and unjust enrichment claims fail to account for any consequential differences that may exist among the undifferentiated state-law claims. The [49] bald assertion that the alleged antitrust conduct violates dozens of non-antitrust laws, or the implication that there are no consequential differences between those laws, is not entitled to deference, because "the tenet that a court must accept as true all of the allegations contained in a complaint is inapplicable to legal conclusions." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678.

The Court need not rule on the many specific arguments Defendants make regarding the individual state claims, because EPPS have not pleaded state law consumer protection or unjust enrichment claims sufficient to satisfy Rule 8 under Twombly and Iqbal. Therefore, the Court dismisses EPPs' consumer protection and unjust enrichment claims, and grants leave to replead in a non-conclusory fashion.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated herein, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss DPPs' First Amended Consolidated Complaint [ECF No. 118] is denied. Defendants' Motion to Dismiss EPPs' First Amended Consolidated Complaint [ECF No. 121] is granted in part and denied in part. EPPs' antitrust claims under the state laws of Illinois, Puerto Rico, Rhode Island, Kansas, and Mississippi are dismissed with prejudice. EPPs' antitrust claims under Utah state law, and all of their [50] consumer protection and unjust enrichment claims are dismissed with leave to replead within twenty-one (21) days from the date of this memorandum opinion and order.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

ORDER

On February 10, 2015, Plaintiff Macario Ignacio Marruffo, who is confined in the Pinal County Jail, filed a pro se civil rights Complaint pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and an Application to Proceed In Forma Pauperis. In a March 23, 2015 Order, the Court denied the Application to Proceed with leave to refile. On April 22, 2015, Plaintiff filed another Application to Proceed In Forma Pauperis. In a June 17, 2015 Order, the Court denied that Application to Proceed with leave to refile On July 8, 2015, Plaintiff informed the Court that he was no longer in custody. In an August 17, 2015 Order, the Court instructed Plaintiff to either pay the filing and administrative fees or file a nonprisoner Application to Proceed In Forma Pauperis.

On September 21, 2015, Plaintiff [*2] filed a Motion for Appointment of Counsel and a non-prisoner Application to Proceed. In an October 21, 2015 Order, the Court granted the Application to Proceed, denied the Motion for Appointment of Counsel, and dismissed the Complaint with leave to amend. The Court gave Plaintiff 30 days to file an amended complaint that cured the deficiencies identified in the Order and warned Plaintiff that his case would be dismissed without further notice if he failed to timely file an amended complaint.

In a November 30, 2015 Order, the Court noted that Plaintiff had failed to comply with the October 21, 2015 Order and dismissed the action. The Clerk of Court entered Judgment that same day.

On December 2, 2015, Plaintiff filed a Motion for Request for Complete Change of Venue with Housing Relocation and a Protective Order. In a December 29, 2015 Order, the Court vacated the November 30 Judgment, denied Plaintiff's requests for a transfer and a protective order, and granted his request for an extension of time to file a First Amended Complaint.

On January 21, 2016, Plaintiff filed a First Amended Complaint. On February 4, 2016, Plaintiff filed a second "First Amended Complaint" (Doc. 21). The Court [*3] will screen the February 4, 2016 First Amended Complaint and will dismiss it with leave to amend.[1]

Also pending before the Court are Plaintiff's Motion for Disclosure/Motion for Protective Order (Doc. 17), "Motion of Notice to Denied Legal Services" (Doc. 19); and "Motion to Dismiss Criminal Case for Lack of Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Improper Venue and Statute of Limitations" (Doc. 20). The Court will deny these Motions.

I. Statutory Screening of Prisoner Complaints

The Court is required to screen complaints brought by prisoners seeking relief against a governmental entity or an officer or an employee of a governmental entity. 28 U.S.C. § 1915A(a). The Court must dismiss a complaint or portion thereof if a plaintiff has raised claims that are legally frivolous or malicious, that fail to state a claim upon which relief may be granted, or that seek monetary relief from a defendant who is immune from such relief. 28 U.S.C. § 1915A(b)(1)-(2).

A pleading must contain a "short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2) (emphasis added). While Rule 8 does not demand detailed factual allegations, "it demands more than an unadorned, the-defendant-unlawfully-harmed-me accusation." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). "Threadbare recitals of [*4] the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice." Id.

"[A] complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Id. (quoting Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). A claim is plausible "when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id. "Determining whether a complaint states a plausible claim for relief [is] . . . a context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense." Id. at 679. Thus, although a plaintiff's specific factual allegations may be consistent with a constitutional claim, a court must assess whether there are other "more likely explanations" for a defendant's conduct. Id. at 681.

[1] An amended complaint supersedes previously filed complaints. Ferdik v. Bonzelet, 963 F.2d 1258, 1262 (9th Cir. 1992); Hal Roach Studios v. Richard Feiner & Co., 896 F.2d 1542, 1546 (9th Cir. 1990). Accordingly, Plaintiff's February 4, 2016 First Amended Complaint supersedes the January 21, 2016 "First Amended Complaint," and the Court will treat the February 4, 2016 document as the operative pleading.

But as the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit has instructed, courts must "continue to construe pro se filings liberally." Hebbe v. Pliler, 627 F.3d 338, 342 (9th Cir. 2010). A "complaint [filed by a pro se prisoner] 'must be held to less stringent standards than formal pleadings drafted by lawyers.'" Id. (quoting Erickson v. Pardus, 551 U.S. 89, 94, 127 S. Ct. 2197, 167 L. Ed. 2d 1081 (2007) (per curiam)).

If the Court determines that a pleading could be cured by the allegation of other [*5] facts, a pro se litigant is entitled to an opportunity to amend a complaint before dismissal of the action. See Lopez v. Smith, 203 F.3d 1122, 1127-29 (9th Cir. 2000) (en banc). Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint will be dismissed for failure to state a claim, but because it may possibly be amended to state a claim, the Court will dismiss it with leave to amend.

II. February 4, 2016 First Amended Complaint

Plaintiff names the following Defendants in the February 4, 2016 First Amended Complaint: Narcotics Detective Brian McCloskey; Pinal County Jail Paralegal Loretta Valdez; Pinal County Sheriff's Office (PCSO) Commander Terry Johnson; Commander Cathy Vangordon; Detention Officer Leider; Detectives Ramon Salinas and Brian Ramirez; Probation Officer Nancy Rivera; Prosecutor Jill Sosin; County Attorney Lando Voyles; Pinal County Sheriff Paul Babeu; Lieutenant Gilberto Hoyos; Commander Terry Johnson; Sergeant Street; Lieutenant Scott Arnold; County Public Defender James Mannatto; Attorney James Soslowsky; Attorney Tina Talkington; Paralegal Peter Gambino; Paralegal Patricia Armamant; Sergeant E. Delgado; Prosecutor Jason Johannes; Prosecutor Kathryn Pierce; PCSO Sergeant Tanya Delgado; Judge Dwight Callahan; "Public Snitches" Matthew Daniel [*6] Garcia and Lisa Garcia; Former Police Officer Dallin Gonzalez; Deputy Sheriff Steve Henry; and Administrative Director Tim Gaffnay.

Plaintiff raises 18 claims for relief and states that he wants "to amend under [the] Racketeering Influenced Corruption Organization Act." (Doc. 21 at 1.)

In Count One, Plaintiff claims his civil rights and rights under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) were violated when, while arresting Plaintiff, Defendant McClosky threatened Plaintiff with "a fatal accident" if Plaintiff did not dismiss his civil cases against Defendants Salinas and Brown. Plaintiff claims Defendants Valenzuela and Hoyos similarly threatened him. Plaintiff alleges that on November 22, 2015, he was shot in the back of the head by Defendant Street "while already on the ground." (Id. at 4.)

In Count Two, Plaintiff alleges his Eighth Amendment rights were violated when Defendant Valdez and other PCSO staff members "wrote him up" for "disrespecting staff." (Id. at 5.) Plaintiff claims this was in retaliation for Plaintiff filing lawsuits. Plaintiff further claims Defendants Tanya Delgado and E. Delgado threatened him if "he does not stop." (Id.)

In Count Three, Plaintiff claims his First Amendment rights are [*7] violated because Defendant Valdez "continues to deny [him] legal services." (Id. at 6.) Plaintiff claims he brought the issue to Defendants Johnson, Vangordon, and Henry, "but they did not help."

In Count Four, Plaintiff alleges his Fourteenth Amendment rights were violated when, on January 19, 2016, his state criminal trial was postponed for a psychological evaluation.

In Count Five, Plaintiff claims his Eighth Amendments are violated because Defendants Johnson, Vangordon, Arnold, Hoos, and Valdez are embezzling or misappropriating inmate and public funds by "charging 100% on any debt owed to the Pinal County Jail." (Id. at 8.) Plaintiff claims this violates antitrust laws and RICO.

In Count Six, Plaintiff alleges his Fourteenth Amendment rights are violated because Defendant Babeu is violating RICO and "is showing extreme discrimination upon [Plaintiff] as well as county attorney Lando Voyles and Jill Sosin." Plaintiff further claims that "for this particular reason Loretta Valdez does not want to send out [his] civil amended complaints." (Id. at 9.)

In Count Seven, Plaintiff claims his Fourteenth Amendment rights are violated because Pinal County Sheriff's Office is a corrupt organization. Plaintiff further claims that after Plaintiff informed Defendants he was filing RICO charges [*8] against them, Defendant Georgini,, "out of retaliation" ordered a psychological evaluation of Plaintiff and delayed Plaintiff's trial. (Id. at 10.)

In Count Eight, Plaintiff alleges his Fourteenth Amendment rights were violated when Defendant Georgini did not remove Plaintiff's public defender from Plaintiff's case.

In Count Nine, Plaintiff claims that on December 4, 2015, he returned from court and Defendant Valenzuela told Plaintiff that he would kill Plaintiff if Plaintiff did not drop his lawsuits. Plaintiff further states that on November 22, 2015, an "ERT" crew came into his unit, yelled for everyone to get on the floor, and, while Plaintiff was on the floor, shot Plaintiff with a 12-gauge shotgun in the back of the head with a "less than lethal round." (Id. at 12.)

In Count Ten, Plaintiff alleges his civil rights and RICO were violated when Defendants McCloskey, Ramirez, and Salinas "committed an overt act of kidnapping by illegally without consent having imprisoned a 75 year old woman in her room by having pushed her wheelchair into the bedroom while they illegally conducted [their] search at the residence of . . . ., where Defendant probation officer Nancy Rivera also participated in the search." (Id. at 13.) Plaintiff alleges [*9] Defendants McCloskey, Ramirez, and Salinas "instigated those criminal activities and under RICO [he] can bring a case upon [Defendant Prosecutors]." (Id.)

In Count Eleven, Plaintiff claims that on January 29, 2016, Defendant Valdez refused to send out "the amended civil complaint [Plaintiff] has been attempting to send out." (Id. at 14.)

In Count Twelve, Plaintiff alleges his "equal clause right to protection of personal safety" was violated and he states that he will not "forfeit" his civil suits. (Id. at 15.)

In Count Thirteen, Plaintiff claims that on January 21, 2016, his "fast and speedy trial due date was up but court appointed public defender Joshua Wallace . . . told Joseph R. Georgini to order a psychological evaluation be done." (Id. at 16.) Plaintiff claims his due process and Sixth Amendment rights are being violated.

In Count Fourteen, Plaintiff alleges he was harassed in violation of "the 1992 civil rights act and federal antitrust law." (Id. at 17.) Plaintiff claims that on September 24, 2015, Defendant Street shot him in the back of the head with a less than lethal round from a 12-gauge shotgun. Plaintiff further claims Defendant E. Delgado told several inmates that "if the activist does not stop he is going to get his! [*10] Now that is clearly organized harassment through organized violent measures since I didn't get shot and threatened to forfeit civil complaints." (Id. at 17.)

In Count Fifteen, Plaintiff claims money was wrongfully taken from his inmate account. Plaintiff claims Defendant Vangordon told him that he is "being sanctioned for fighting and medical bills." (Id. at 18.) Plaintiff contends generally that Defendants Valenzuela, Voyles, and Babeu mishandle county and public funds.

In Count Sixteen, Plaintiff claims Defendant Georgini allows Defendant Sosin to extend Plaintiff's incarceration, in violation of his due process rights, "due to politically motivated reasons." (Id. at 19.)

In Count Seventeen, Plaintiff alleges Defendant Georgini "has been ignoring to grant [him] change of counsel and Joshua Wallace is working with the state and against [him], he has not answered any of [Plaintiff's] letters." (Id. at 20.)

In Count Eighteen, Plaintiff claims he was accused of killing Defendant Matthew Daniel Garcia. Plaintiff further claims Defendant Wallace tried to make him sign a plea bargain, Plaintiff fired him three times, but "he is like a bad habit hard to get rid of." (Id. at 21.) Plaintiff claims he was incarcerated until he was forced [*11] to enter a plea bargain.

Plaintiff seeks criminal prosecution of Defendants and $45 million in monetary damages.

III. Failure to State a Claim

A. RICO

Plaintiff has failed to state a claim under RICO, 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961-1968. In a civil action brought under RICO, the plaintiff must allege sufficient facts to establish a "pattern of racketeering activity," which must include at least two "predicate acts," a criminal enterprise in which the defendants participated, and a causal relationship between the predicate acts and the harm suffered by the plaintiff. 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961-68, 2314 and 2315; Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., 473 U.S. 479, 496-97, 105 S. Ct. 3275, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346 (1985); River City Markets, Inc. v. Fleming Foods West, Inc., 960 F.2d 1458, 1464 (9th Cir. 1992). "Racketeering activity" means "any act or threat involving murder, kidnapping, gambling, arson, robbery, bribery, extortion, dealing in obscene matter, or dealing in a controlled substance or listed chemical," acts indictable under specified federal statutes, and certain offenses involving fraud. 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1). Claims that defendants conspired to violate an individual's civil rights do not fall within the statutory definition of "racketeering activity." Bowen v. Oistead, 125 F.3d 800, 806 (9th Cir. 1997) (citing Sun Savings & Loan Assn. v. Dierdorff, 825 F.2d 187, 191 (9th Cir. 1987)). Finally, to allege a RICO claim, a plaintiff must also allege an impact on interstate commerce or an injury to his business or property. Sedima, 473 U.S. at 495-96.

Plaintiff alleges violations of his civil rights; this does [*12] not constitute racketeering activity. Further, Plaintiff's claims demonstrate no impact on interstate commerce. Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint is therefore not properly brought under RICO. Similarly, Plaintiff's claims in Counts One and Five, which are based solely on alleged violations of RICO, fail to state a claim.

B. Claims Related to Plaintiff's Criminal Trial: Counts Four, Seven, Eight, Ten, Thirteen, Sixteen, Seventeen, and Eighteen

Even if the Court construes Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint as brought pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983 (the appropriate statute under which to raise claims for violations of individual civil rights), Plaintiff fails to state a claim for relief.

In Counts Four, Seven, Eight, Ten, Thirteen, Sixteen, Seventeen, and Eighteen, Plaintiff raises multiple claims related to his ongoing criminal trial in state court. As the Court explained in its original screening Order, the trial judge and prosecutors are immune from suit under § 1983 for their role in prosecution of criminal cases. See Buckley v. Fitzsimmons, 509 U.S. 259, 270, 113 S. Ct. 2606, 125 L. Ed. 2d 209 (1993) (Prosecutors are absolutely immune from liability under § 1983 for their conduct in "initiating a prosecution and in presenting the State's case" insofar as that conduct is "intimately associated [*13] with the judicial phase of the criminal process."); Stump v. Sparkman, 435 U.S. 349, 356-357, 98 S. Ct. 1099, 55 L. Ed. 2d 331 (1978) (Judges are absolutely immune from § 1983 suits for damages for their judicial acts except when they are taken "in the clear absence of all jurisdiction.").

Moreover, Plaintiff's claims challenge the validity of his arrest and ongoing criminal proceedings. The abstention doctrine set forth in Younger v. Harris, 401 U.S. 37, 91 S. Ct. 746, 27 L. Ed. 2d 669 (1971), prevents a federal court in most circumstances from directly interfering with ongoing criminal proceedings in state court. The Younger doctrine espouses a "strong federal policy against federal-court interference with pending state judicial proceedings, absent extraordinary circumstances." Middlesex County Ethics Comm. v. Garden State Bar Association, 457 U.S. 423, 431, 102 S. Ct. 2515, 73 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1982). "The policy rests on notions of comity and respect for state functions and was born of the concern that federal court injunctions might unduly hamper state criminal prosecutions." Champion Int'l Corp. v. Brown, 731 F.2d 1406, 1408 (9th Cir. 1984) (citing Younger, 401 U.S. at 44).

In deciding whether Younger abstention applies, the Ninth Circuit applies the three-pronged test outlined by the Supreme Court in Middlesex: (1) the state proceedings are ongoing, (2) the proceedings implicate important state interests, and (3) the state proceedings provide an adequate opportunity to raise federal questions. Fresh Int'l Corp. v. Agric. Labor Relations Bd., 805 F.2d 1353, 1357-58 (9th Cir. 1986) (citing Middlesex, 457 U.S. at 432).

In this case, each of the three requirements [*14] are met: Plaintiff's criminal proceedings are ongoing; the proceedings implicate important state interests in the prosecution of criminal activity; and Plaintiff has ample opportunity in his state criminal proceedings to challenge alleged police misconduct, the sufficiency of the evidence against him, and the alleged illegal search of his home. Accordingly, abstention in this case is appropriate and the Court will dismiss Counts Four, Seven, Eight, Ten, Thirteen, Sixteen, Seventeen, and Eighteen, without prejudice. See Beltran v. California, 871 F.2d 777, 782 (9th Cir. 1989) (Younger abstention requires dismissal of the federal action).

C. Retaliation: Counts Two and Nine

A viable claim of First Amendment retaliation contains five basic elements: (1) an assertion that a state actor took some adverse action against an inmate (2) because of (3) that prisoner's protected conduct, and that such action (4) chilled the inmate's exercise of his First Amendment rights (or that the inmate suffered more than minimal harm) and (5) did not reasonably advance a legitimate correctional goal. Rhodes v. Robinson, 408 F.3d 559, 567-68 (9th Cir. 2005); see also Hines v. Gomez, 108 F.3d 265, 267 (9th Cir. 1997) (retaliation claims require an inmate to show (1) that the prison official acted in retaliation for the exercise of a constitutionally protected right, and (2) that the action "advanced [*15] no legitimate penological interest"). The plaintiff has the burden of demonstrating that his exercise of his First Amendment rights was a substantial or motivating factor behind the defendants' conduct. Mt. Healthy City School Dist. Bd. of Educ. v. Doyle, 429 U.S. 274, 287, 97 S. Ct. 568, 50 L. Ed. 2d 471 (1977); Soranno's Gasco, Inc. v. Morgan, 874 F.2d 1310, 1314 (9th Cir. 1989).

Although pro se pleadings are liberally construed, Haines v. Kerner, 404 U.S. 519, 520-21, 92 S. Ct. 594, 30 L. Ed. 2d 652 (1972), conclusory and vague allegations will not support a cause of action. Ivey v. Bd. of Regents of the Univ. of Alaska, 673 F.2d 266, 268 (9th Cir. 1982). Further, a liberal interpretation of a civil rights complaint may not supply essential elements of the claim that were not initially pled. Id.

In Count Two, Plaintiff claims that Defendant Valdez "wrote him up" for disrespecting staff after she saw that Plaintiff had filed lawsuits against jail staff and that Defendants Tanya Delgado and E. Delgado told him if he does not stop, "he will get his." Plaintiff does not state what sanctions, if any, he received as a result of the writeup, nor does he allege that Defendants T. Delgado and E. Delgado did more than verbally threaten him. "'Verbal harassment or abuse . . . is not sufficient to state a constitutional deprivation under 42 U.S.C. ' 1983.'" Oltarzewski v. Ruggiero, 830 F.2d 136, 139 (9th Cir. 1987) (quoting Collins v. Cundy, 603 F.2d 825 (10th Cir. 1979)); see also, McFadden v. Lucas, 713 F.2d 143, 146 (5th Cir. 1983) (mere threatening language and gestures do not, even if true, amount to constitutional violations); Johnson v. Glick, 481 F.2d 1028, 1033 n.7 (2d Cir. 1973) (the use of words, no matter how violent, does not comprise [*16] a § 1983 violation). Accordingly, Plaintiff has not demonstrated that he suffered more than minimal harm.

In Count Nine, Plaintiff claims that on December 4, 2015, he returned from court and Defendant Valenzuela told Plaintiff that he would kill Plaintiff if Plaintiff did not drop his lawsuits. Plaintiff further states that on November 22, 2015, an "ERT" crew came into his unit, yelled for everyone to get on the floor, and, while Plaintiff was on the floor, shot Plaintiff with a 12-gauge shotgun in the back of the head with a "less than lethal round." Plaintiff has not demonstrated that the incident with the shotgun was in retaliation for his filing lawsuits because the incident occurred before his encounter with Defendant Valenzuela. To the extent Plaintiff claims Defendant Valenzuela verbally threatened him, he has not demonstrated that he suffered more than minimal harm, as required to state a claim for retaliation.

Plaintiff has therefore failed to state a claim in Counts Two and Nine of the First Amended Complaint.

D. Access to Courts: Counts Three and Eleven

In Count Three, Plaintiff claims Defendant Valdez denied him legal services and that he complained to Defendants Johnson, Vangordon, [*17] and Henry, but they did nothing to help. In Count Eleven, Plaintiff claims Defendant Valdez refused to send his amended civil complaint.

The right of meaningful access to the courts prohibits officials from actively interfering with inmates' attempts to prepare or file legal documents. Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 350, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606 (1996). The right of access to the courts is only a right to bring petitions or complaints to federal court and not a right to discover such claims or even to litigate them effectively once filed with a court. Id. at 354. The right "guarantees no particular methodology but rather the conferral of a capability-the capability of bringing contemplated challenges to sentences or conditions of confinement before the courts." Id. at 356.

As a matter of standing, for an access-to-courts claim, a plaintiff must show that he suffered an "actual injury" with respect to contemplated litigation. Id. at 349. To show actual injury with respect to contemplated litigation, the plaintiff must demonstrate that the defendants' conduct frustrated or impeded him from bringing to court a nonfrivolous claim that he wished to present. Id. at 352-53.

Plaintiff's allegations in Count Three are too vague to state a claim. Plaintiff does not describe what legal service Defendant [*18] Valdez denied him, nor does he allege that the denial resulted in an actual injury.

In Count Eleven, Plaintiff claims that on January 29, 2016, Defendant Valdez refused to send his amended civil complaint. The Court notes Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint is signed January 27, 2016, two days before the alleged refusal to send the amended complaint. Moreover, the only case Plaintiff presently has pending in this Court is the present case. The Court received a "First Amended Complaint" from Plaintiff on January 21, 2016, and a second "First Amended Complaint" on February 4, 2016. Accordingly, Plaintiff's claim that Defendant Valdez refused to mail his amended complaints appear to be incorrect. Plaintiff has failed to state a claim in Counts Three and Eleven.

E. Equal Protection and Discrimination: Counts Six and Twelve

In Count Six, Plaintiff alleges his Fourteenth Amendment rights are violated because Defendant Babeu is violating RICO and "is showing extreme discrimination upon [Plaintiff] as well as county attorney Lando Voyles and Jill Sosin, Terry Johnson, Cathy Vangordon mainly paralegal Loretta Valdez." Plaintiff further claims that "for this particular reason Loretta Valdez does not want to send out [*19] [his] civil amended complaints."

Plaintiff characterizes Count Twelve as an "equal clause right" claim and states that he will not "forfeit" his civil rights suits.

Plaintiff's allegations in both Counts Six and Twelve are too vague to state a claim. Generally, "[t]o state a claim . . . for a violation of the Equal Protection Clause . . . [,] a plaintiff must show that the defendants acted with an intent or purpose to discriminate against the plaintiff based upon membership in a protected class." Barren v. Harrington, 152 F.3d 1193, 1194 (9th Cir. 1998). Plaintiff has not alleged he is a member of a protected class, nor has he alleged that any Defendant acted with the intent or purpose to discriminate against him based upon his membership in a protected class. Plaintiff has therefore failed to state a claim in Counts Six and Twelve of the First Amended Complaint.

F. Count Fourteen

In Count Fourteen, Plaintiff claims that on September 24, 2015, Defendant Street shot Plaintiff in the back of the head with a "less than lethal round" from a 12-gauge shotgun. In other portions of this Complaint, Plaintiff describes the same incident but states it occurred on November 22, 2015. Plaintiff further alleges that he was "roughed up" by Defendant Johnson and that Defendant E. [*20] Delgado threatened him.

The Fourteenth Amendment's Due Process Clause, and not the Eighth Amendment, applies to the use of excessive force against pretrial detainees that amounts to punishment. Kingsley v. Hendrickson, U.S. , , 135 S. Ct. 2466, 2473 192 L. Ed. 2d 416 (2015); Gibson v. County of Washoe, 290 F.3d 1175, 1197 (9th Cir. 2002). Force is excessive if the officers' use of force was "objectively unreasonable" in light of the facts and circumstances confronting them, without regard to their mental state. Kingsley, 135 S. Ct. at 2472-73; see also Graham v. Connor, 490 U.S. 386, 397, 109 S. Ct. 1865, 104 L. Ed. 2d 443 (1989) (applying an objectively unreasonable standard to a Fourth Amendment excessive force claim arising during an investigatory stop). In determining whether the use of force was reasonable, the Court should consider factors including, but not limited to > the relationship between the need for the use of force and the amount of force used; the extent of the plaintiff's injury; any effort made by the officer to temper or to limit the amount of force; the severity of the security problem at issue; the threat reasonably perceived by the officer; and whether the plaintiff was actively resisting.

Kingsley, 135 S. Ct. at 2473.

Because officers are often forced to make split-second decisions in rapidly evolving situations, the reasonableness of a particular use of force must be made "from the perspective of a reasonable officer on the scene, including what the officer knew at the time, not with the 20/20 vision of hindsight." [*21] Id. at 2473-74 (citing Graham, 490 U.S. at 396). Further, "[n]ot every push or shove, even if it may later seem unnecessary in the peace of a judge's chambers," violates the Constitution. Graham, 490 U.S. at 396 (citation omitted).

Plaintiff's claims in Count Fourteen are too vague to state a claim. Plaintiff provides no details regarding the circumstances of the shotgun incident and it is therefore impossible to determine whether the use of force was "objectively unreasonable." Further, Plaintiff does not describe the nature or severity of his injuries. Plaintiff has failed to state a claim in Count Fourteen.

G. Count Fifteen

In Count Fifteen, Plaintiff appears to claim that his Eighth Amendment rights are violated because money is being wrongfully taken from his account. Plaintiff appears to claim that he was charged multiple times for "destruction of county property" for a plastic bracelet. Plaintiff states that "at one time I broke it used to cost $5.00 but Paul Babeu keeps taking away all of the money that gets sent to me." (Doc. 21 at 18.) Plaintiff further states that Defendant Vangordon told him that he is being financially sanctioned for fighting and is being charged for medical care.

A pretrial detainee's claim for unconstitutional conditions of confinement [*22] arises from the Fourteenth Amendment Due Process Clause rather than from the Eighth Amendment prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 535, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447 and n.16 (1979). Nevertheless, the same standards are applied. See Frost v. Agnos, 152 F.3d 1124, 1128 (9th Cir. 1998).

To state an Eighth or Fourteenth Amendment claim, plaintiffs must meet a two-part test. "First, the alleged constitutional deprivation must be, objectively, sufficiently serious" such that the "official's act or omission must result in the denial of the minimal civilized measure of life's necessities." Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 834, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811 (1994) (internal quotations omitted). Second, the prison official must have a "sufficiently culpable state of mind," i.e., he must act with "deliberate indifference to inmate health or safety." Id. (internal quotations omitted). Deliberate indifference is a higher standard than negligence or lack of ordinary due care for the prisoner's safety. Id at 835. In defining "deliberate indifference" in this context, the Supreme Court has imposed a subjective test: "the official must both be aware of facts from which the inference could be drawn that a substantial risk of serious harm exists, and he must also draw the inference." Id. at 837 (emphasis added).

Plaintiff has not alleged how the withdrawal of funds from his account has resulted in a substantial risk of serious harm to his health or safety, nor [*23] has he alleged facts showing that the withdrawals were not the result of negligence or administrative errors. Accordingly, Plaintiff has failed to state an Eighth or Fourteenth Amendment claim in Count Fifteen.

IV. Leave to Amend

For the foregoing reasons, Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint will be dismissed for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted. Within 30 days, Plaintiff may submit a second amended complaint to cure the deficiencies outlined above. The Clerk of Court will mail Plaintiff a court-approved form to use for filing a second amended complaint. If Plaintiff fails to use the court-approved form, the Court may strike the second amended complaint and dismiss this action without further notice to Plaintiff.

Plaintiff must clearly designate on the face of the document that it is the "Second Amended Complaint." The second amended complaint must be retyped or rewritten in its entirety on the court-approved form and may not incorporate any part of the original Complaint or First Amended Complaint by reference. Plaintiff may include only one claim per count.

For each count, Plaintiff must write short, plain statements telling the Court: (1) the constitutional right Plaintiff believes was [*24] violated; (2) the name of the Defendant who violated the right; (3) exactly what that Defendant did or failed to do; (4) how the action or inaction of that Defendant is connected to the violation of Plaintiff's constitutional right; and (5) what specific injury Plaintiff suffered because of that Defendant's conduct. See Rizzo v. Goode, 423 U.S. 362, 371-72, 377, 96 S. Ct. 598, 46 L. Ed. 2d 561 (1976).

Plaintiff must repeat this process for each person he names as a Defendant. If Plaintiff fails to affirmatively link the conduct of each named Defendant with the specific injury suffered by Plaintiff, the allegations against that Defendant will be dismissed for failure to state a claim. Conclusory allegations that a Defendant or group of Defendants has violated a constitutional right are not acceptable and will be dismissed.

A second amended complaint supersedes the original Complaint and First Amended Complaint. Ferdik v. Bonzelet, 963 F.2d 1258, 1262 (9th Cir. 1992); Hal Roach Studios v. Richard Feiner & Co., 896 F.2d 1542, 1546 (9th Cir. 1990). After amendment, the Court will treat the original Complaint and First Amended Complaint as nonexistent. Ferdik, 963 F.2d at 1262. Any cause of action that was raised in the original complaint or first amended complaint and that was voluntarily dismissed or was dismissed without prejudice is waived if it is not alleged in a second amended complaint. Lacey v. Maricopa County, 693 F.3d 896, 928 (9th Cir. 2012) (en banc).

V. Motions

A. Motion [*25] for Disclosure/Protective Order

In his Motion for Disclosure/Protective Order, Plaintiff seeks an order requiring "Defendants Salinas, Ramirez, Sosin, and Georgini to stop harassment and to step down from pending case." As the Court explained in its earlier discussion of Plaintiff's trial-related claims, the Court will not intervene in Plaintiff's ongoing criminal trial. The Court will deny this portion of the Motion.

Plaintiff further seeks disclosure of various documents and other items of evidence. Because the Court will dismiss the First Amended Complaint, and Defendants have not been served, the Court will deny as moot this portion of the Motion. If Plaintiff files a second amended complaint and the Court determines service is appropriate, the Court will issue a formal scheduling order setting the time for the parties to conduct discovery.

B. "Motion of Notice to Denied Legal Services"

In his "Motion of Notice to Denied Legal Services," Plaintiff reiterates his claims regarding Defendant Valdez and the alleged denial of access to the courts. Plaintiff also states that he unable to make copies of his filings. To the extent that Plaintiff is attempting to raise additional claims regarding [*26] denial of access to the courts, a Motion is not the proper method for doing so. Plaintiff must raise new claims for relief in a second amended complaint.

With respect to his complaints regarding photocopies, Plaintiff should note that the District Court does not require that copies of the documents filed in a civil case be photocopied. Handwritten copies of filed documents are acceptable. Therefore, Plaintiff's access to this Court is not dependent on Defendants' provision of photocopies. See Sands v. Lewis, 886 F.2d 1166, 1169 (9th Cir. 1989) (rejecting any constitutional right to free and unlimited photocopying) (citing Jones v. Franken, 697 F.2d 801, 803 (7th Cir. 1983) ("[B]road as the constitutional concept of liberty is, it does not include the right to xerox.")).

The Court will therefore deny Plaintiff's "Motion of Notice to Denied Legal Services."

C. Motion to Dismiss Criminal Case

Plaintiff requests that the Court dismiss his ongoing state criminal case. First, this Court lacks jurisdiction to dismiss state criminal charges against Plaintiff. Furthermore, for the reasons discussed earlier in this Order, this Court will not intervene in Plaintiff's ongoing state criminal proceedings. The Court will deny the Motion to Dismiss.

VI. Warnings

A. Address Changes

Plaintiff must file and [*27] serve a notice of a change of address in accordance with Rule 83.3(d) of the Local Rules of Civil Procedure. Plaintiff must not include a motion for other relief with a notice of change of address. Failure to comply may result in dismissal of this action.

B. Copies

Plaintiff must submit an additional copy of every filing for use by the Court. See LRCiv 5.4. Failure to comply may result in the filing being stricken without further notice to Plaintiff.

C. Possible "Strike"

Because the First Amended Complaint has been dismissed for failure to state a claim, if Plaintiff fails to file a second amended complaint correcting the deficiencies identified in this Order, the dismissal may count as a "strike" under the "3-strikes" provision of 28 U.S.C. § 1915(g). Under the 3-strikes provision, a prisoner may not bring a civil action or appeal a civil judgment in forma pauperis under 28 U.S.C. § 1915 "if the prisoner has, on 3 or more prior occasions, while incarcerated or detained in any facility, brought an action or appeal in a court of the United States that was dismissed on the grounds that it is frivolous, malicious, or fails to state a claim upon which relief may be granted, unless the prisoner is under imminent danger of serious physical injury." 28 U.S.C. § 1915(g).

D. Possible Dismissal [*28]

If Plaintiff fails to timely comply with every provision of this Order, including these warnings, the Court may dismiss this action without further notice. See Ferdik, 963 F.2d at 1260-61 (a district court may dismiss an action for failure to comply with any order of the Court).

IT IS ORDERED:

(1) The First Amended Complaint (Doc. 21) is dismissed for failure to state a claim. Plaintiff has 30 days from the date this Order is filed to file a second amended complaint in compliance with this Order.

(2) If Plaintiff fails to file a second amended complaint within 30 days, the Clerk of Court must, without further notice, enter a judgment of dismissal of this action with prejudice that states that the dismissal may count as a "strike" under 28 U.S.C. § 1915(g).

(3) Plaintiff's January 11, 2016 "Motion for Disclosure/Motion for Protective Order" (Doc. 17) is denied.

(4) Plaintiff's "Motion of Notice to Denied Legal Services" (Doc. 19) is denied.

(5) Plaintiff's February 4, 2016 Motion to Dismiss Criminal Case (Doc. 20) is denied.

(6) The Clerk of Court must mail Plaintiff a court-approved form for filing a civil rights complaint by a prisoner.

Dated this 11th day of February, 2016.

The Tunney Act applies to any proposal for a consent judgment submitted by the United States for entry in any civil proceeding brought by or on behalf of the United States under the antitrust laws. 15 U.S.C.S. § 16(b). First, the Act provides for disclosure of certain information pertaining to the settlement and for an opportunity for public comment. It requires that the government file a proposed consent judgment with the district court and publish it in the Federal Register at least 60 days prior to the effective date of such judgment; that any written comments and responses to them also be filed and published within 60 days; that materials considered determinative in formulating the proposed judgment be made publicly available; that the government, unless otherwise instructed by the court, file with the court and publish in the Federal Register a competitive impact statement reciting various information about the proposal; and that a summary of the proposal and the competitive impact statement be published in specified newspapers, § 16(c).

HN2[] Settlements, Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

The Tunney Act requires a defendant in a proposed consent judgment under the antitrust laws to disclose to the court any lobbying contacts with the government—that is, any and all written or oral communications by or on behalf of such defendant with any officer or employee of the United States concerning or relevant to such proposal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 16(g). In addition, it requires that the Attorney General receive and consider any written comments and, at the close of a 60-day period, publish a response to them. § 16(d). Finally, the court must ultimately determine that the entry of such judgment is in the public interest before entering the proposed consent judgment, and the Tunney Act provides procedures for making that determination. § 16(e)-(f).

The HSR Act also exempts an array of transactions, including the acquisition of voting securities solely for the purpose of investment. § 18a(c)(9). Courts, of course, have a duty to construe statutes, not isolated provisions.

HN6[] Legislation, Interpretation

Under the ratification doctrine, Congress is presumed to be aware of an administrative or judicial interpretation of a statute and to adopt that interpretation when it re-enacts a statute without change. This rule applies when Congress re-enacts a provision in the face of a consensus as to its interpretation so broad and unquestioned that the court must presume Congress knew of and endorsed it.

[*37] MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

This matter is before the Court on the Government's Motion for Entry of Final Judgment. Dkt. 1-4. The United States and Defendant Len Blavatnik have stipulated to entry of a Final Judgment providing for the payment of a civil penalty of $656,000 by Defendant pursuant to Section 7A(g)(1) of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18a(g)(1), the premerger notification provision of the Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Improvements Act of 1976 ("HSR Act"). Dkts. 1-2, 1-3. In its motion, the Government asserts that the procedures for reviewing proposed consent judgments under the Antitrust Procedures and Penalties Act of 1974 ("APPA"), also known as the Tunney Act, 15 U.S.C. § 16(b)-(h), do not apply to this case because the proposed consent judgment seeks only monetary penalties, rather than injunctive relief. Dkt. 1-4 at 3. On October 19, 2015, the [2] Court ordered supplemental briefing regarding whether the Tunney Act is indeed inapplicable, Dkt. 2, as the Government's motion included only a single paragraph on the matter, Dkt. 1-4 at 3, and no case law addresses the issue in any depth. In light of the apparent agreement of the Government and Defendant that the Tunney Act is inapplicable, the Court's October 19, 2015 Order invited interested amici, if any, to file briefs addressing the matter. Dkt. 2 at 3. The Government filed a supplemental brief further elucidating its position on November 20, 2015, Dkt. 3, with which Defendant Blavatnik summarily concurred, Dkt. 4. No amicus briefs were filed. The Court heard oral argument on the issue on February 3, 2016.

Although the Court recognizes that the Justice Department's reading of the Act is supported by 40 years of consistent practice, the Court cannot reconcile that practice or the Government's position in this case with the plain language of the Tunney Act, which applies to "any proposal for a consent judgment submitted by the United States" and not merely to proposed injunctive decrees. 15 U.S.C. § 16(b) (emphasis added). The Court is also unconvinced that either the legislative history of the [3] Tunney Act or any subsequent congressional action provides a basis to depart from—or to assign a unique meaning to—that plain language. Because the Tunney Act procedures, accordingly, must be followed in this case, and because the Government has yet to comply with those procedures, the Court DENIES the Government's Motion for Entry of Final Judgment (Dkt. 1-4) without prejudice.

I. BACKGROUND

Congress enacted the Tunney Act against the backdrop of a long history of concern about the Justice Department's [*38] process for settling antitrust cases. In 1959, the Antitrust Subcommittee of the House Committee on the Judiciary issued a report on the settlement of antitrust enforcement matters. See Antitrust Subcomm., H.R. Comm. on the Judiciary, 86th Cong., 1st Sess., Rep. on the Consent Decree Program of the Dep't of Justice (Comm. Print 1959) ("1959 Report").[1] The report explained that the Subcommittee had received complaints "that consent decrees . . . eliminated the judiciary from enforcement of the antitrust laws;" that they deprived private litigants of the ability to benefit from the Government's prosecution of antitrust litigation in the form of follow-on actions for treble damages; that [4] they were negotiated in secret, without input from competitors who "might be adversely affected;" and that they "often deprived the Government of relief it could have obtained if it had litigated its case." Id. at x. The Subcommittee assembled case studies of prominent antitrust "consent decrees" and concluded that the Justice Department had been too solicitous of the defendants' interests and had "abdicate[d] [its] duty" to ensure that settlements served the public interest, id. at 293; see also id. at 296-97, that decrees improperly left monopolies intact, id. at 290, that the Department demonstrated a "lack of candor" by not sharing information about settlements with the Subcommittee and the public, id. at 292; see also id. at 304, and that the Department had failed to require compliance with consent decrees, id. at 294, 302.

The Subcommittee, as a result, recommended that the Department of Justice revise its antitrust settlement procedures. Id. at 304. In particular, the Subcommittee urged the Department to "devise procedures which would assure competitors of the defendants a greater participation in the preparation of the terms of a consent decree than is now provided by the sporadic discussions which the Department of Justice on occasion initiates." [5] Id. Under those procedures, as contemplated by the Subcommittee, the Department would "provide notice to the public of the terms of the consent decree, and establish a waiting period" during which "private parties, who may be affected by the terms of the decree, should be given an opportunity to intervene in the Government's case in order to present their objections to the court for its consideration." Id. Moreover, "[w]hen the Department of Justice presents a consent decree to the court for its approval, it should be accompanied by a statement that sets forth the facts involved, the defendant's position, the meaning of the provisions used in the decree, and the reasons that form the basis for the Department's acceptance of the particular compromise." Id. The Subcommittee resolved to give the Attorney General the opportunity to "accomplish this revision through changes in the rules that govern the administration of his Department," but cautioned that, should he decline to act "or if the changes he institutes are inadequate, Congress should, by legislation, establish mandatory procedures and standards of conduct for this area." Id.

The Justice Department responded in July 1961, when then-Attorney [6] General Robert Kennedy issued an administrative order entitled "Consent Judgment Policy." 28 C.F.R. § 50.1 (1970). That order established a "policy" that the Department would "consent to a proposed judgment in an action to prevent or restrain violations of the antitrust laws only after or on condition that an opportunity is afforded persons (natural or corporate) who may be affected by such judgment and who are not named as parties to the action to state comments, views or relevant allegations [*39] prior to entry of such proposed judgment by the court." Id. § 50.1(a). "Pursuant to this policy," the order further provided that proposed antitrust consent judgments would "be filed in court or otherwise made available upon request to interested persons . . . at least 30 days prior to entry by the court," and that the Department would "receive and consider any written comments, views or relevant allegations relating to the proposed judgment" before entry of the judgment. Id. § 50.1(b). The Department reserved discretion to decide whether to disclose comments and "reserve[d] the right" (1) to disavow the proposed consent judgment if new facts or considerations came to light in the comment process and (2) "to object to intervention by [7] any party not named as a party by the Government." Id. The Department also adopted other reforms through less formal means, but abandoned them shortly thereafter. See Note, The ITT Dividend: Reform of Department of Justice Consent Decree Procedures, 73 Colum. L. Rev. 594, 607-609 (1973) (discussing the use of settlement clauses providing that the settlement would have prima facie effect in a treble damages action and pre-filing negotiation practices).

The Department's antitrust settlement authority was once again subject to scrutiny when "the details of the [International Telephone & Telegraph Corporation ("ITT")] antitrust settlement bec[a]me public in [the] Spring [of] 1972." Id. at 603. The Justice Department's settlement with ITT permitted "the nation's ninth largest corporation" to merge with Hartford Fire Insurance "in exchange for divesting itself of several smaller subsidiaries." Id. at 603-04. Senate confirmation hearings for Attorney General Richard G. Kleindienst probed the ITT settlement and suggested a connection between ITT's contributions to the 1972 Republican National Convention and the Nixon administration's willingness to settle on terms unduly favorable to ITT, but Kleindienst denied any White House involvement in the matter. Id. at 604; 120 [8] Cong. Rec. 29,269-70 (1974). The Watergate tapes revealed, however, that President Nixon had indeed told then-Deputy Attorney General Kleindienst that he did not want an ITT prosecution. See Ciara Torres-Spelliscy, Brennan Ctr. for Justice, The I.T.T. Affair and Why Public Financing Matters for Political Conventions (Mar. 19, 2014).[2] As a result, President Nixon's "unlawful activities . . . relating to the confirmation of Richard Kleindienst as Attorney General of the United States" were included in the Articles of Impeachment adopted by the House Judiciary Committee. 120 Cong. Rec. at 29,268 (1974). Attorney General Kleindienst also ultimately pleaded guilty in 1974 to a charge of failing to testify "accurately and fully" at his confirmation hearings about White House involvement in the ITT case. See Torres-Spelliscy, supra.

The ITT scandal was a major impetus for the passage of the Tunney Act. See 120 Cong. Rec. 38,585 (1974) (statement of Sen. Tunney); see also 120 Cong. Rec. 36,342 (1974) (statement of Rep. Holtzman); The ITT Dividend, supra, at 626-34. HN1[] The Act applies to "[a]ny proposal for a consent judgment submitted by the United States for entry in any civil proceeding brought by or on behalf of the United States under the [9] antitrust laws." 15 U.S.C. § 16(b). First, the Act provides for disclosure of certain information pertaining to the settlement and for an opportunity for public comment. It requires that the Government file a proposed "consent [*40] judgment" with "the district court . . . and publish[] [it] . . . in the Federal Register at least 60 days prior to the effective date of such judgment;" that any written comments and responses to them also be filed and published within 60 days; that materials "considered determinative in formulating" the proposed judgment be made publicly available; that the Government, "unless otherwise instructed by the court," file with the court and publish in the Federal Register a competitive impact statement reciting various information about the proposal, id.; and that a summary of the proposal and the competitive impact statement be published in specified newspapers, id. § 16(c). HN2[] The Act also requires the defendant to disclose to the court any lobbying contacts with the government—that is, "any and all written or oral communications by or on behalf of such defendant . . . with any officer or employee of the United States concerning or relevant to such proposal." Id. § 16(g). In addition, it requires [10] that the Attorney General "receive and consider any written comments" and, at the close of the 60-day period, publish a response to them. Id. § 16(d). Finally, the court must ultimately "determine that the entry of such judgment is in the public interest" before entering the proposed consent judgment, and the Act provides procedures for making that determination. Id. § 16(e)-(f).

Just two years after enacting the Tunney Act, Congress enacted the Hart-Scott-Rodino Act. HN3[] As relevant here, the HSR Act requires notification to the Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission ("FTC") and observation of a waiting period before a person completes certain acquisitions of voting securities or assets. 15 U.S.C. § 18a(a). The Act also exempts an array of transactions, including the acquisition of voting securities "solely for the purpose of investment." Id. at § 18a(c)(9). This premerger notification requirement facilitates the agencies' ability to detect and prevent antitrust violations before they occur. See, e.g., id. § 18a(f) (providing procedures for obtaining a preliminary injunction against consummation of a proposed acquisition that would violate the Clayton Act, the Federal Trade Commission Act, or the Sherman Act). Violations of [11] the HSR Act are punishable by a civil penalty of not more than $16,000 per day. Id. § 18a(g)(1); Debt Collection Improvement Act of 1996, Pub. L. No. 104-134, § 31001(s), 110 Stat. 1321, 1321-373 (amending the Federal Civil Penalties Inflation Adjustment Act of 1990, 28 U.S.C. § 2461 note); 16 C.F.R. § 1.98(a). Violations of the notification requirement are also subject to "such other equitable relief as the court in its discretion determines necessary or appropriate." 15 U.S.C. § 18a(g)(2)(C).

II. ANALYSIS

The Government and Defendant Blavatnik assert that the proposed consent judgment in this case is not subject to Tunney Act procedures because an HSR Act settlement solely for a civil penalty is not a "proposed consent judgment" within the meaning of the Tunney Act. See Dkts. 3-4. According to the Government, the Tunney Act applies to settlements seeking equitable relief and not to those seeking only monetary penalties. Dkt. 3 at 2. Thus, under the Government's theory, HSR Act settlements for injunctive relief are subject to the Tunney Act, while HSR Act settlements for monetary penalties are not. Id. at 13 n.4. In the Government's view, "[a]pplication of Tunney Act procedures to settlements for exclusively legal relief such as monetary penalties is inconsistent with the statute's history, its language as a whole, and nearly four decades [12] of precedent." Id. at 2. It further contends that Congress has "implicitly ratified" its position. Id.

[*41] A. The Text

In order to determine whether the Tunney Act applies to proposed settlements for civil penalties, the Court "begin[s] with the text of the statute." Kasten v. Saint-Gobain Performance Plastics Corp., 563 U.S. 1, 7, 131 S. Ct. 1325, 179 L. Ed. 2d 379 (2011). HN4[] The Act applies to "[a]ny proposal for a consent judgment submitted by the United States for entry in any civil proceeding brought by or on behalf of the United States under the antitrust laws." 15 U.S.C. § 16(b) (emphases added). The Court can easily dispose of two issues. First, there can be no reasonable dispute that an HSR Act civil penalty action arises "under the antitrust laws." Although enacted after the original Clayton Act of 1914 (as well as the Tunney Act), the relevant portions of the HSR Act were inserted into the Clayton Act. See Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Improvements Act of 1976, Pub. L. No. 94-435, § 201, 90 Stat. 1383, 1390 (amending the Clayton Act by inserting § 7A); see also Dkt. 1 at 2 (Government's complaint referring to HSR premerger notification provisions as "Section 7A(g) of the Clayton Act"). The Clayton Act, in turn, defines "antitrust laws" to include, among other statutes, the Clayton Act itself. 15 U.S.C. § 12(a). Second, although civil penalties are punitive in nature, this is undoubtedly a "civil proceeding." [13] The Government does not contest either of these propositions.

The dispositive question is thus whether a proposed judgment for civil penalties entered pursuant to a settlement between the parties is a "consent judgment" within the meaning of the Tunney Act. As a matter of common usage, it is difficult to avoid the conclusion that the answer is not merely yes, but that it is tautologically so. A "consent judgment" is, by definition, a judgment to which the parties have agreed. Black's Law Dictionary observes that a "consent judgment" is synonymous with an "agreed judgment," which is "[a] settlement that becomes a court judgment when the judge sanctions it. In effect, an agreed judgment is merely a contract acknowledged in open court and ordered to be recorded, but it binds the parties as fully as other judgments." Agreed Judgment, Consent Judgment, Black's Law Dictionary (10th ed. 2014). The Merriam-Webster Dictionary similarly defines a "consent judgment" as "a judgment by a court exercising common-law jurisdiction entered by consent of the parties upon stipulation or agreement." Consent Judgment, Webster's Third New Int'l Dictionary, Unabridged (2016). The surrounding language of the [14] Tunney Act, moreover, confirms the law's expansive reach and the absence of a carve-out for particular types of "consent judgments." It applies to "any proposal for a consent judgment . . . in any civil proceeding." 15 U.S.C. § 16(b) (emphases added). Thus, as a matter of ordinary meaning, it is difficult to escape the conclusion that the Act applies to all proposed Department of Justice antitrust consent judgments—whether for equitable or monetary relief.

The Government does not agree. Instead, it contends that the phrase "consent judgment" has long been understood in antitrust law to refer only to settlements for equitable relief. In support of this position, the Government asserted at oral argument that it has been unable to locate any pre-Tunney Act case that used the phrase "consent judgment" to refer to a purely monetary judgment in an antitrust enforcement action. To this, it added that the 1961 Attorney General policy statement was captioned "Consent Judgment Policy," but expressly applied only to actions "to prevent or restrain violations of the antitrust laws." 28 C.F.R. § 50.1(a) (1970). According to the Government, the latter phrase—"to prevent or restrain"—is a technical term that is used in § 4 of the Sherman [15] Act and § 15 of the Clayton Act [*42] to refer to the courts' equitable powers to enjoin actions in violation of the substantive antitrust laws. See 15 U.S.C. §§ 4, 25. That contention, indeed, finds support in the text of § 4 of the Sherman Act and § 15 of the Clayton Act, which provide that "it shall be the duty of the several United States attorneys . . . to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain" violations of those statutes. Id. (emphasis added).

The problem with the Government's argument is that it essentially skips over the question of the plain meaning of the Tunney Act and argues, instead, that the Department's pre-Tunney Act practice shows that Congress did not intend to reach purely monetary awards. As the Government explained at oral argument, the only civil penalty actions for monetary relief authorized before the HSR Act was enacted were actions brought under the Federal Trade Commission Act ("FTCA") for violations of FTC orders. See id. § 21(l); see also id. § 15a (authorizing damages suits by United States). All other antitrust suits by the United States involved claims for equitable relief under the Sherman and Clayton Acts. It is thus unsurprising that the Government has been unable to locate [16] any pre-Tunney Act cases in which the phrase "consent judgment" was used to refer to purely monetary settlements. Indeed, as the Government conceded at oral argument, it was also unable to locate any case involving a purely monetary settlement that used a phrase other than "consent judgment" to refer to a court-approved settlement. In short, the Government found evidence that the label "consent judgment" was used to refer to injunctive settlements, but no evidence—one way or the other—about whether the label also applied to court-ordered monetary settlements. Similarly, the fact that the Attorney General's "Consent Judgment Policy" applied to actions "to prevent or restrain violations of the antitrust laws" may indicate that in 1961 the Department was focused on enforcement of the Sherman and Clayton Acts, as they then existed, but it says little, if anything, about the plain meaning of the phrase "consent judgment" in the Tunney Act.

The Government's contention that the phrase "consent judgment" can be construed to exclude monetary judgments would have greater purchase if the Tunney Act used the phrase "consent decree," because that term has sometimes been used to connote purely equitable [17] relief. See Decree, Black's Law Dictionary (10th ed. 2014) ("'The chief differences between decrees in equity and judgments at common law are [that] [t]he former are pronounced by courts of equity; the latter, by courts of law.'").[3] The Act, however, does not refer to "consent decrees," only to "consent judgment[s]." And although it is possible to construe the word "decree" as limited to the award of equitable relief, the word "judgment" admits of no such limitation. To the contrary, a "judgment" is "[a] court's final determination of the rights and obligations of the parties." Judgment, Black's Law Dictionary (10th ed. 2014). The term may be "used in a broad sense to include decrees in equity," id. (emphasis added), but it does not under any recognized definition exclude monetary awards. The pre-Tunney Act history that the Government identifies, moreover, does not challenge this settled understanding: that [*43] history shows that the phrase "consent judgment" is capacious enough to include injunctive decrees, but it says nothing about whether the phrase excludes monetary awards. So understood, there is no basis to conclude that the Department of Justice's practices altered the commonly understood meaning [18] of the words Congress actually used.

The Government also argues that a previously enacted provision of the Clayton Act, which like the Tunney Act appears in § 5 of the Clayton Act, shows that Congress used the phrase "consent judgment" to refer solely to settlements invoking the equitable—or injunctive—power of the courts. As originally enacted, § 5 of the Clayton Act (now § 5(a)) provided "[t]hat a final judgment or decree" entered "in any criminal prosecution or in any suit or proceeding in equity brought by or on behalf of the United States under the antitrust laws" could be used as "prima facie evidence" in a private suit for damages. Pub. L. No. 63-212, § 5, 38 Stat. 730, 731 (1914) (codified at 15 U.S.C. § 16(a)). The law, however, expressly exempted "consent judgments or decrees entered before any testimony has been taken." Id. [19] From this, the Government draws the conclusion that, at least in 1914, Congress understood a "consent judgment or decree" to mean an order embodying the resolution of either a "criminal prosecution" or a "suit or proceeding in equity"—but not an action at law. Dkt. 3 at 4. Finally, the Government argues that the 1955 amendment to the "prima facie evidence" provision—which substituted "any civil . . . proceeding" for the prior reference to "any . . . proceeding in equity," Pub. L. No. 84-137, § 2, 69 Stat. 282, 283 (1955)—was merely intended to conform the law to the 1938 merger of law of equity, and was not intended to reflect any substantive change in the law. Dkt. 3 at 4. Thus, according to the Government, the phrase "consent judgment" should be construed in the Clayton Act as rooted in the Act's original focus on "proceedings in equity," which did not contemplate the award of monetary relief. Id.

On closer inspection, however, this history, if anything, supports the opposite conclusion. The principal purpose of the 1955 amendments to the Clayton Act was to give "the United States the right to recover actual damages for injuries" that the Government itself sustains as a result of anticompetitive conduct. S. Rep. No. 84-619, at 1 [20]

[3] Other definitions, however, indicate that consent "decrees" are not limited to equitable relief. "Decree" is also defined as "[a] court's final judgment" and "[a]ny court order." Decree, Black's Law Dictionary (10th ed. 2014). Moreover, a "civil-penalty order" is defined as "[a] judicial decree imposing some type of punishment for violating a noncriminal statute." Civil-penalty Order, Black's Law Dictionary (10th ed. 2014) (emphasis added).

(1955), as reprinted in 1955 U.S.C.C.A.N. 2328, 2328. The amendments thus added a new § 4A to the Clayton Act, which authorized the United States to recover "actual damages" that it sustained to "its business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws." Pub. L. No. 84-137, § 1, 69 Stat. 282, 282-83 (1955) (codified at 15 U.S.C. § 15a). When Congress did this, it also amended the exception to the "prima facie evidence" provision in § 5 of the Clayton Act to exclude not only "consent judgments or decrees entered before any testimony has been taken," but also "judgments or decrees entered in actions under" the newly added "section 4A" of the Act. Id. at § 2, 69 Stat. at 283. Yet, had Congress believed that § 5's reference to "civil proceedings" was already limited to claims seeking equitable relief, this change would have been unnecessary. Moreover, the amendment shows that Congress understood the phrase "judgments or decrees" to reach claims for monetary relief. From this, it is a small step to conclude that the reference to "consent judgment[s]" in the Tunney Act was understood to include settlements for monetary relief.[4]

[*44] Finally, the Government contends that, when read as a whole, the Tunney Act cannot sensibly be applied to HSR Act monetary settlements because "the procedures defined in the . . . Act, and the factors it requires courts to consider, . . . apply only to settlements that seek injunctive or other equitable relief." Dkt. 3 at 9. Most notably, in the Government's view, the principal components of the competitive impact statement required by § 5(b), see 15 U.S.C. § 16(b), and related factors that the court must consider to determine whether a proposed consent judgment is in the public interest have "little or no relevance" to a civil penalty. Dkt. 3 at 10. The competitive impact statement must, among other things, identify "the anticipated effects on competition of [the proposed] relief," [22] "the remedies available to potential private plaintiffs damaged by the alleged violation in the event that [the] proposal for the consent judgment is entered," and "a description of the procedures available for modification of [the] proposal." 15 U.S.C. § 16(b). And, before entering the proposed judgment, the court must consider "the competitive impact of [the] judgment," and "the impact of entry of [the] judgment upon competition in the relevant . . . markets, upon the public generally and individuals alleging specific injury from the violations set forth in the complaint." Id. § 16(e).

HN5[] Courts, of course, "have a 'duty to construe statutes, not isolated provisions.'" Graham Cty. Soil & Water Conservation Dist. v. United States ex rel. Wilson, 559 U.S. 280, 290, 130 S. Ct. 1396, 176 L. Ed. 2d 225 (2010) (quoting Gustafson v. Alloyd Co., 513 U.S. 561, 568, 115 S. Ct. 1061, 131 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1995)). Here, however, the requirements identified by the Government are not inconsistent with application of the Act to civil penalty settlements. First, the fact that certain factors are not implicated by a particular settlement—e.g., that there are no procedures for modifying the settlement or that the settlement is unlikely to have any direct or readily identifiable competitive effect in the relevant markets—does not render the application of the Act to civil penalties untenable or even awkward. Indeed, the Government (in its view, voluntarily) [23] used Tunney Act procedures to explain its first HSR Act settlement for a civil penalty, and its competitive impact statement was both perfectly coherent and wholly consistent with the purposes of the Tunney Act. See United States v. The Costal Corp.; Proposed Final Judgment and Competitive Impact Statement, 49 Fed. Reg. 36,454, 36,454-59 (Sept. 17, 1984).

Second, although it is true that a purely procedural violation of the HSR premerger notification requirement—that is, a failure to give notice of a merger that does not otherwise violate the antitrust laws—might appear to have, at most, a limited competitive impact, the Government has consistently applied the Tunney Act to HSR Act settlements involving injunctive relief. See Dkt. 3 at 13 n.4. Yet every time the Government agrees to resolve a HSR Act claim on purely monetary terms, it necessarily agrees not to seek injunctive relief. That decision implicates the same policy considerations as the Government's decision to seek injunctive terms. That is, if it is appropriate to assess the impact on competition of a proposed HSR Act injunctive settlement, then it is appropriate to assess the consequences of declining to [*45] seek injunctive relief. It is also an overstatement to suggest that purely monetary settlements will have no competitive consequences. As the Government itself [24] stated in its first

[4] The language of the "prima facie evidence" provision also shows that Congress understood that orders concluding "criminal proceedings," including orders to pay [21] "criminal fines," 15 U.S.C. § 1, were understood to constitute "consent judgments or decrees." See also 10 A.L.R. Fed. 328 (1972) ("Although the phrase 'consent judgments or decrees' [in § 16(a)] does not normally describe criminal convictions, the lower federal courts are agreed that a judgment of conviction entered on a plea of nolo contendere in a federal antitrust prosecution is a consent decree within the meaning of the proviso . . . ." (internal footnote omitted)).

HSR civil penalty action, "While civil penalties . . . have no competitive impact in and of themselves, the civil penalty . . . will help deter Defendant and others . . . from failing to comply with the notice and waiting requirements of the HSR Act. Compliance with these requirements will strengthen antitrust enforcement and thereby help to maintain competitive markets." 49 Fed. Reg. at 36,456. Thus, although the competitive impact of an HSR civil penalty settlement is an indirect one, there is no reason that the Department and the Court cannot assess how that indirect impact affects the public interest.

In summary, nothing in the structure or purposes of the Tunney Act suggests that applying it to consent judgments for civil penalties would be "'untenable in light of [the statute] as a whole,'" King v. Burwell, 135 S. Ct. 2480, 2495, 192 L. Ed. 2d 483 (2015) (quoting Dep't of Revenue of Oregon v. ACF Indus., Inc., 510 U.S. 332, 343, 114 S. Ct. 843, 127 L. Ed. 2d 165 (1994)), and thus the Court finds no reason "to depart from what would otherwise be the most natural reading of the pertinent statutory phrase," id. Nor is there any basis to conclude that Congress assigned anything but the plain meaning to the phrase "consent judgment" anywhere in the Clayton Act, including in the Tunney Act. To the contrary, the United States has itself used the phrase in [25] just this way. See, e.g., Press Release, Fed. Trade Comm'n, Penzoil to Pay $2.6 Million to Settle Federal Charges in Purchase of Chevron Stock, 1994 WL 524955 (Sept. 27, 1994) (referring to "consent judgment" requiring payment of civil penalty for alleged HSR Act reporting violation). The Court, accordingly, concludes that the statute unambiguously applies to all antitrust "consent judgments," including those seeking purely monetary relief.

B. The Legislative History

As the Government correctly notes, much of the legislative history of the Tunney Act suggests that Congress's principle concern was with consent decrees embodying equitable relief. As discussed above, the history of the Tunney Act can be traced back to the 1959 Report of the Antitrust Subcommittee of the House Committee on the Judiciary. That Report discusses a series of specific antitrust settlements, all of which involved the use of consent decrees to restrain specific conduct. 1959 Report at 35-39, 171-72. It begins, moreover, by discussing the Justice Department's authority to enter negotiated settlements in "equity proceedings that have been instituted by the Attorney General to enjoin violations of the antitrust laws," id. at 1, and it ends by discussing potential reforms to the "consent decree" procedures employed by [26] the Department of Justice, id. at 301-05. Although some of the Subcommittee's concerns were directed generally at the enforcement of the antitrust laws—such as ensuring that the use of settlements did not impede the development of judicial precedents interpreting the antitrust laws and that those who violate the antitrust laws cannot avoid "unfavorable publicity" through amicable settlements—others were directed more specifically at injunctive decrees—such as ensuring that competitors who are affected by the settlement receive notice and an opportunity to be heard. Id. at 303-04.

Similarly, the Justice Department's 1961 "Consent Judgment Policy" was most clearly directed at antitrust settlements involving injunctive relief. The policy was adopted in response to the 1959 Report, [*46] which was itself prompted by concerns about inadequate injunctive decrees. The policy, moreover, applied only to settlements in actions "to prevent or restrain violations" of the antitrust laws, 28 C.F.R. § 50.1(a) (1970), and, as noted above, a nearly identical phrase appears in § 4 of the Sherman Act and § 15 of the Clayton Act, and, in those contexts, is directed at "proceedings in equity." 15 U.S.C. §§ 4, 25. And, finally, the 1961 policy was designed to "afford[] persons [27] (natural or corporate) who may be affected by" the settlement an opportunity to be heard. 28 C.F.R. § 50.1(a) (1970) (emphasis added). Although it is conceivable that a purely monetary settlement might affect third parties, it seems most likely that the policy was concerned with the effect that an injunctive settlement might have on those who were not parties to the litigation or negotiation.

This focus on equitable decrees, as opposed to monetary settlements, carried through to Congress's consideration of the Tunney Act itself. Passage of the Act was most immediately prompted by congressional concern about settlement of the ITT antitrust case, where ITT was required to give up certain "holdings, but was allowed to retain the Hartford Fire Insurance Co., its most profitable subsidiary and most liquid asset." 119 Cong. Rec. at 24,598 (statement of Sen. Tunney). Other examples of controversial settlements included the 1941 Atlantic Refining Co. case, where the "original complaint sought sweeping divestitures in the oil industry," but "the eventual consent decree only resulted in the divestment of 2,500 [unprofitable] Sinclair service stations in 14 sparsely populated Mid-continent States;" the 1956 ATT-Western [28] Electric case, where ATT was allowed "to retain its manufacturing monopoly notwithstanding overwhelming evidence of improprieties;" the 1966 Von's Grocery Store case, where Von merely "jettisoned its 40 least profitable outlets;" the 1969 "smog case," where the automobile industry was not required to "undo its past damage;" and the El Paso case, where the Supreme Court "accused the Antitrust Division of 'knuckling under' to the El Paso Natural Gas Co." Id. Like the examples given in the 1959 House Report, all of these examples involved the asserted inadequacy of injunctive decrees.

Given this background, the Court does not doubt that Congress was spurred to act by its perception that the Justice Department had repeatedly settled antitrust cases for injunctive decrees that were less demanding than Congress believed appropriate. That, however, does not resolve the issue for several reasons. First, the most obvious reason that Congress focused on consent decrees is that, at the time the Tunney Act was enacted, consent decrees constituted the overwhelming bulk of the Department's enforcement activity—from "1955 to 1967, 81 percent of all antitrust judgments were represented by consent decrees." [29] 119 Cong. Rec. at 3,455 (statement of Sen. Gurney); see also 118 Cong. Rec. at 31,674 (statement of Sen. Tunney) (approximately 80 percent of civil antitrust suits settled through "consent decrees" requiring the defendant to "modify its conduct"). Indeed, the Government has identified only two statutes that authorize the imposition of monetary penalties in an antitrust action—the FTCA, which permits the United States to seek monetary penalties, as well as injunctive relief, where a party to an FTC order violates that order, and the HSR Act, which was not enacted until two years after the Tunney Act. 15 U.S.C. §§ 18a(g)(1), 21(l); see also id. § 15a (damages suits by United States). It is thus unremarkable that there was little focus on purely monetary relief at the time the Tunney Act was enacted.

Second, although not the principal focus of the legislation, there is some evidence [*47] that Congress was concerned with more than just injunctive decrees. In discussing the ITT settlement, for example, Senator Tunney expressed dismay that the company was not required to "disgorge the profits made between acquisition and divestiture, a retention which can only offer incentives to others to strive for similar short-run profit [30] taking." 119 Cong. Rec. at 24,598 (statement of Sen. Tunney). Although disgorgement is often considered an equitable remedy, that label is not relevant for present purposes. What matters is the fact that Congress was concerned with the failure of the Justice Department to pursue a monetary remedy that would not have had a direct effect on competition but would have created "incentives" for others to comply with the antitrust laws. Although perhaps a step further removed, the same is true here. The imposition of HSR Act penalties, in the words of the Justice Department, deter violations of the pre-merger notification requirements and thus "strengthen antitrust enforcement and thereby help to maintain competitive markets." 49 Fed. Reg. at 36,456. As the Department has further explained:

> Before the HSR Act was enacted, the DOJ and the FTC were often forced to investigate anticompetitive mergers that had already been consummated without public notice. In those situations, the agencies' only recourse was to sue to unwind the parties' merger, and the merged firm often delayed the litigation so that years elapsed before adjudication and attempted relief. During this extended time, the loss of competition continued [31] to harm consumers, and if the court ultimately found that the merger was illegal, effective relief was often impossible to achieve.

79 Fed. Reg. 70,555, 70,561 (Nov. 26, 2014). That explanation of the purpose of the HSR Act parallels the concern about disgorgement discussed in the Tunney Act legislative history.

Finally, although not every policy concern discussed in the legislative history applies to HSR Act monetary settlements, a number do. Congress, to be sure, recognized that enforcement actions under the Sherman Act can have a substantial effect on the public and the defendant's competitors. The Government's choice to settle a case, rather than to litigate it to judgment, can deprive third parties of the benefit of the collateral estoppel benefits of a litigated judgment, see 15 U.S.C. § 16(a), and "a bad or inadequate consent decree may as a practical matter foreclose further review of a defendant's practices." 118 Cong. Rec. at 31,674 (statement of Sen. Tunney). Those concerns admittedly have little to do with a monetary settlement of an HSR Act claim. But, Congress also recognized that "the public's interest in deterrence of future antitrust violations by the defendant and by other potential defendants may be affected profoundly by the [32] willingness of the Justice Department to settle cases and the price exacted for such settlements." Id. To the extent that compliance with the HSR Act "help[s] to maintain competitive markets," as the Department has professed, 49 Fed. Reg. at 36,456, the public has an interest in ensuring that HSR Act settlements exact an appropriate price. Following in the wake of the ITT settlement and the related scandal, moreover, Congress was concerned with both transparency and the fact that antitrust settlements may invite intensive lobbying, because "the stakes are high" for "those who exercise the greatest corporate influence." 118 Cong. Rec. at 31,676 (statement of Sen. Tunney). It thus concluded that "it is particularly important to assure some measure of public scrutiny of the exercise of that influence." Id. Although that rationale may apply most acutely in cases where the Government seeks to block large mergers or [*48] to require divesture of substantial interests, the principle applies broadly enough to include HSR Act monetary penalties.

For present purposes, the Court need not—and does not—conclude that Congress was focused on purely monetary settlements. Because the plain language of the Tunney Act reaches all "consent [33] judgments"—whether for injunctive or monetary relief—the questions are whether "reliance on [the literal] language would defeat the plain purpose of the statute," Bob Jones Univ. v. United States, 461 U.S. 574, 586, 103 S. Ct. 2017, 76 L. Ed. 2d 157 (1983), and whether the context in which Congress employed that language makes evident a "meaning—or ambiguity—" not otherwise evident from the text, King, 135 S. Ct. at 2489. For the reasons explained above, the answer to both of these question is "no." To the contrary, inclusion of proposed monetary judgments within the scope of the Act serves its objectives of increasing transparency and accountability in the settlement of antitrust cases and ensuring that antitrust settlements "exact a price" sufficient to deter future violations of the antitrust laws.

C. Practice and Congressional Ratification

The Government further contends that district courts have a longstanding practice of exempting consent judgments for civil penalties from Tunney Act procedures and that Congress has implicitly ratified this practice. Dkt. 3 at 12-15. To be sure, district courts have on many occasions since the passage of the Act entered civil penalty consent judgments without first applying Tunney Act procedures, see Dkt. 3 at 21-26 (table collecting 47 HSR entries of judgment); [34] see also id. at 35 (Exh. 2) (entry of judgment for civil penalty under 15 U.S.C. § 21(l)), but these unpublished cases provide, at best, limited support for the Government's construction of the Act.

Neither the Government nor this Court has identified any cases analyzing the issue in any depth, or any Court of Appeals decision addressing it at all. United States v. Computer Associates International, Inc., provides the longest discussion of the matter. See *No. 01-2062, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23039, 2002 WL 31961456, at 9 (D.D.C. Nov. 20, 2002). The final judgment entered by the district court in that case, however, simply stated: "The United States does not believe that the payment of civil penalties under the HSR Act is subject to the [APPA]. Consequently, the civil penalties component of the proposed Final Judgment is not open to public comment." Id. A footnote then explained:

> Obtaining civil penalties in a consent judgment is not the type of "consent judgment" Congress had in mind when it passed the APPA. Thus, in consent settlements seeking both equitable relief and civil penalties, courts have not required use of APPA procedures with respect to the civil penalty component of the proposed final judgment. Moreover, courts in this district have consistently entered consent judgments for civil penalties [35] under the HSR Act without employing APPA procedures.

*2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23039, at 9 n.1 (internal citations omitted).

In the absence of a more complete analysis, such pronouncements are of only limited persuasive value. Indeed, the Government has not identified a single case in which the issue of the Tunney Act's application to civil penalties was substantively briefed; rather, it points only to cases in which it "notified" the court of its interpretation of the Act—in the manner it did here—by including a short statement regarding its position in its motion for entry of judgment. Dkt. 3 at 16 & n.9, 21-26. Accordingly, the district courts' practice of entering consent judgments for civil penalties without applying Tunney Act [*49] procedures says little, if anything, about whether that practice is consistent with the statute.

Nor is the Court persuaded that Congress has implicitly ratified the practice, as the Government contends. Dkt. 3 at 12-15. HN6[] Under the ratification doctrine, "Congress is presumed to be aware of an administrative or judicial interpretation of a statute and to adopt that interpretation when it re-enacts a statute without change." Lorillard v. Pons, 434 U.S. 575, 580, 98 S. Ct. 866, 55 L. Ed. 2d 40 (1978). This rule applies when Congress re-enacts a provision in the face of a "consensus [36] [as to its interpretation] so broad and unquestioned that [the Court] must presume Congress knew of and endorsed it." Jama v. ICE, 543 U.S. 335, 349, 125 S. Ct. 694, 160 L. Ed. 2d 708 (2005). Here, there is no reason to conclude that Congress has ratified an interpretation of the Tunney Act that excludes purely monetary settlements.

In support of its ratification argument, the Government points to the 2004 amendments to the Tunney Act, see Antitrust Criminal Penalty Enhancement and Reform Act of 2004, Pub. L. No. 108-237, § 221(b)(2), 118 Stat. 661, 668-69 (2004) (codified at 15 U.S.C. § 16)—the only amendments that Congress has made to the Act. Those amendments: (1) made it mandatory, rather than permissible, for courts to consider all of the "public interest determination" factors enumerated in § 5(e); (2) revised some of the § 5(e) enumerated factors and added others; (3) permitted district courts to authorize a more cost-effective method of disseminating public comments than publication in the Federal Register under § 5(d); and (4) specified which agents of the defendant are subject to the lobbying disclosure requirements of § 5(g). Id. The amendments also included legislative findings indicating that Congress's principle purpose was to overrule the D.C. Circuit's decisions in United States v. Microsoft, 56 F.3d 1448, 1462, 312 U.S. App. D.C. 378 (D.C. Cir. 1995), and Mass. School of Law at Andover, Inc. v. United States, 118 F.3d 776, 783, 326 U.S. App. D.C. 175 (D.C. Cir. 1997), both of which held that a proposed consent judgment should be rejected [37] only if it would make "a mockery of judicial power." See Pub. L. No. 108-237, § 221(a), 118 Stat. at 668; United States v. SBC Commc'ns, Inc., 489 F. Supp. 2d 1, 11-14 (D.D.C. 2007).

Nothing contained in those amendments or Congress's consideration of the legislation approaches the type of showing required to find an implicit ratification of a judicial or administrative interpretation of a pre-existing statute. First, and foremost, Congress did not re-enact the Tunney Act as a whole and did not re-enact the provision containing the language at issue here. That language—"any proposal for a consent judgment submitted by the United States"—appears in § 5(b) of the Clayton Act. The 1994 amendments, however, did not touch § 5(b), but, rather, added language to § 5(d) and § 5(g) and added and deleted language in § 5(e). Pub. L. No. 108-237, § 221(b)(2), 118 Stat. 661, 668-69 (2004). Thus, Congress did not "re-enact . . . without change" the statutory provision on which the Government places an interpretive gloss. Lorillard, 434 U.S. at 580. Cf. Jama, 543 U.S. at 349; NLRB v. Gullett Gin Co., 340 U.S. 361, 366, 71 S. Ct. 337, 95 L. Ed. 337 (1951); Nat'l Lead Co. v. United States, 252 U.S. 140, 146-47, 40 S. Ct. 237, 64 L. Ed. 496, 55 Ct. Cl. 514 (1920); In re North, 50 F.3d 42, 45, 311 U.S. App. D.C. 71 (D.C. Cir. 1995).

Nor does the Government point to any evidence that Congress gave any consideration to the meaning of "consent judgment" in § 5(b) or that it was even aware of the practice of exempting consent judgments seeking civil penalties from Tunney Act review. Although courts often presume that Congress is "aware of an administrative [*50] or judicial interpretation of a statute and . . . adopt[s] that interpretation [38] when it re-enacts a statute without change," that presumption turns in significant part on the condition that the pre-existing interpretation is one that "affects the new statute." Lorillard, 434 U.S. at 580-81. The notion is that Congress necessarily legislates against a backdrop of established law. Courts assume that Congress is aware of that law and, absent evidence to the contrary, that it understands how new legislation fits within the existing framework. It is an altogether different matter, however, to make the unrealistic assumption that Congress is aware of—and intends to ratify—unreported district court orders and occasional Federal Register notices[5] that are unrelated to the specific provisions it is amending or to the substance of the changes it is making. See Jama, 543 U.S. at 351 (rejecting contention that two

[5] In addition to the unpublished entries of judgment by district courts discussed supra, the Government has periodically stated its position in Federal Register notices regarding mixed consent judgments that seek both equitable relief and civil penalties. See, e.g., 44 Fed. Reg. 41,579, 41,583 (July 17, 1979) ("[W]e do not believe that under the A.P.P.A. [39] the penalty aspect of this case is open to public objection."). The Government also explained its view that the Tunney Act is inapplicable to HSR Act settlements for civil penalties in a footnote in the Federal Register in conjunction with its first HSR Act penalty case in 1984. 49 Fed. Reg. at 36,455 n.1; see also Dkt. 3 at 17-18.

Court of Appeals decisions, "one of which was only a two-sentence per curiam," amounted to a "judicial consensus").

Finally, application of the ratification doctrine to the 2004 amendments is particularly out of place here, since those amendments sought to ensure robust judicial review of "consent judgments." See SBC Commc'ns, Inc., 489 F. Supp. 2d at 11-14. The Government's argument, in contrast, would contradict the plain terms of the Tunney Act, and it would do so in the absence of any congressional acknowledgment or evidence that the issue of purely monetary antitrust settlements was subject to a moment's consideration or debate. The ratification doctrine is a tool for discerning congressional intent—not a means of creating it. The Court, accordingly, rejects the Government's contention that Congress has adopted through silence a narrowing and atextual interpretation of "consent judgment."

III. CONCLUSION

For the forgoing reasons, the Government's Motion for Entry of Final Judgment (Dkt. 1-4) is DENIED without prejudice.

REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION

This matter is now before the court for screening pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §1915A. Also, there is a pending motion to dismiss by defendant Bertsch that has been fully briefed by the parties.

I. BACKGROUND

At least as the time of the filing of the complaint, plaintiff was incarcerated at the Ward County Jail in Minot. In his complaint, plaintiff claims that the prices being charged in the Jail's commissary are excessive because, according to him, they are greater than what persons outside the facility would have to pay for the same items on the open market. Plaintiff contends that the excessive pricing, as well as the acts of defendants causing it, violated federal antitrust laws[1] and his right to equal protection under the Fourteenth Amendment. The only relief that plaintiff seeks is damages. (Doc. No. 7).

One of the defendants that plaintiff wants to sue is Turnkey Correction, Inc. ("Turnkey"). Plaintiff contends that the excessive pricing is the result of Turnkey being involved with the Jail's commissary but is unclear in terms of its alleged role. For purposes of what follows, it will be assumed plaintiff is claiming that Turnkey is both operating the Jail's commissary and is the supplier of the items sold within it, rather than just being a supplier.

The other persons named as defendants are: Paul Othoff, who is alleged to be the Ward County Jail's commander of operations; Steve Kukowski, the Ward County Sheriff; and Leann Bertsch, the Direct of the North Dakota Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation ("NDDOCR"). There is no mention in the complaint of any of these individuals being sued in their individual as opposed to official capacities; but, in terms of the final outcome here, it does not make a difference.

II. STANDARDS GOVERNING INITIAL REVIEW

A. Screening requirements

When a prisoner proceeding in forma pauperis seeks to sue a governmental entity, officer, or employee, the Prison Litigation Reform Act of [*3] 1995 ("PLRA") requires the court to conduct an early screening of the complaint to weed out claims that clearly lack merit with the hope this will help to lessen the burdens imposed by the ever-rising number of prisoner suits, which too often are frivolous and without merit. Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 202-03, 127 S. Ct. 910, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798 (2007); Woodford v. Ngo, 548 U.S. 81, 83-84, 126 S. Ct. 2378, 165 L. Ed. 2d 368 (2006). In conducting the screening required by 28 U.S.C. § 1915A, the court is required to identify any cognizable claims and to dismiss the complaint, or any part of it, that is frivolous, malicious, fails to state a claim, or seeks monetary relief from an immune defendant.

Neither 42 U.S.C. § 1983 nor the PLRA imposes any heightened pleading requirements. Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. at 211-12. Consequently, in order to state a cognizable claim, the complaint need only meet the minimum requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2), which are that it contain "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Erickson v. Pardus, 551 U.S. 89, 93, 127 S. Ct. 2197, 167 L. Ed. 2d 1081 (2007) (per curiam).

The court is obligated to construe a pro se complaint liberally and hold it to a less stringent standard than what normally would be required of attorneys. Id.; see also Federal Express Corp. v. Holowecki, 552 U.S. 389, 402, 128 S. Ct. 1147, 170 L. Ed. 2d 10 (2008); Solomon v. Petray, 795 F.3d 777, 787 (8th Cir. 2015). This does not mean that the court must accept everything or anything that is filed by pro se prisoners, however. In enacting the screening requirement, Congress obviously expected it [*4] to be more than a ritualistic exercise and that courts would only allow to go forward those claims that are cognizable, that seek relief from a non-immune party, and that are not obviously frivolous or malicious.

To meet the minimal pleading requirements of Rule 8(a)(2) for stating a cognizable claim, something more is required than simply expressing a desire for relief and declaring an entitlement to it. See Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 556 n.3, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) ("Bell Atlantic"). The complaint must state enough to "'give the defendant fair notice of what the . . . claim is and the grounds upon which it rests.'" Erickson v. Pardus, 551 U.S. at 93 (quoting Bell Atlantic, 550 U.S. at 555). And, even though a pro se complaint is to be liberally construed, it must also contain enough to satisfy Bell Atlantic's "plausibility standard." E.g., *Ventura-Vera v. Dewitt, 417 Fed. Appx. 591, 592, 2011 WL 2184269, 1 (8th Cir. 2011) (unpublished per curiam) (citing Harris v. Mills, 572 F.3d 66, 72 (2d Cir. 2007) for the appropriate post-Bell Atlantic standard); see also Stone v. Harry, 364 F.3d 912, 914 (8th Cir. 2004) (pro se complaints must allege sufficient facts to state a claim). Complaints that offer nothing more than labels and conclusions or a formulaic recitation of the elements are not sufficient. See id. Frivolous claims are those that are clearly baseless, fanciful, fantastic, or delusional. See Denton v. Hernandez, 504 U.S. 25, 32-34, 112 S. Ct. 1728, 118 L. Ed. 2d 340 (1992).

[1] In his complaint, plaintiff references the Clayton Act codified at 15 U.S.C. §§ 12 et seq. as modified by the Robinson-Patman Act. Given what follows, [*2] the court need not get into the intricacies of federal antitrust law.

III. DISCUSSION

A. Antitrust claim

As noted above, plaintiff seeks only damage relief in this [*5] action. Consequently, plaintiff's complaint fails to state a claim for which relief can be granted because each of the defendants are entitled to immunity from plaintiff's antitrust claims for damages, albeit for different reasons.

The two county defendants sued in their official capacities are entitled to immunity by virtue of 15 U.S.C. § 35(a), which reads as follows:

> (a) Prohibition in general
> No damages, interest on damages, costs, or attorney's fees may be recovered under section 4, 4A, or 4C of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. 15, 15a, or 15c) from any local government, or official or employee thereof acting in an official capacity.

See, e.g., McGuire v. Ameritech Services, Inc., 253 F.Supp.2d 988, 1016 (S.D. Ohio 2003) ("McGuire") (dismissing claim for damages under 15 U.S.C. § 15 brought against local officials operating county jails).

Likewise, Turnkey is similarly immune based on 15 U.S.C. § 36(a), which reads:

> (a) Prohibition in general
> No damages, interest on damages, costs or attorney's fees may be recovered under section 4, 4A, or 4C of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. 15, 15a, or 15c) in any claim against a person based on any official action directed by a local government, or official or employee thereof acting in an official capacity.

This is because the Ward County Jail is a county facility operated by the Ward County Sheriff. N.D.C.C. §§ 11-10-20, 11-15-03, 12-44.1-02. And, whatever services and goods Turkey [*6] provides is necessarily at the direction of the Ward County Sheriff thereby entitling Turnkey to immunity from damages. See McGuire, 253 F.Supp.2d at 1016 (dismissing claim for damages under 15 U.S.C. § 15 brought against private defendants providing telephone services to jails at the direction of local officials).

Finally, any claim against defendant Bertsch in her official capacity as NDDOCR Director for antitrust violations is a claim against the State for which the State has Eleventh Amendment immunity as to any claim for damages. E.g., Mirch v. Beesely, 316 Fed.Appx. 643 (9th Cir. 2009) (dismissing claim for monetary damages for alleged antitrust violations under the Sherman and Clayton Acts against the Nevada State Bar Association and its employees on grounds of immunity under the Eleventh Amendment since the Bar Association was an arm of the State); see Will v. Michigan Dep't of State Police, 491 U.S. 58, 64 n.5, 109 S. Ct. 2304, 105 L. Ed. 2d 45 (1988) (drawing distinction between an antitrust claim brought against a State for injunctive relief and one seeking damages and noting that the trial court in an earlier antitrust case considered by the Court had dismissed the damage claim on Eleventh Amendment grounds). Further, defendant Bertsch would also have state-action ("Parker") immunity based on the seminal case of Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943); see, e.g., North Carolina State

Bd. of Dental Examiners v. F.T.C., __ U.S. __, 135 S.Ct. 1101, 1110, 191 L. Ed. 2d 35 (2015) ("Dental Examiners"). This is because Bertsch is the Director of the NDDOCR, which is a department [*7] of the State and not a board comprised of otherwise private active market participants like in Dental Examiners.[2] Finally, apart from any

[2] Even if plaintiff had sought relief other than money damages, Director Bertsch would likely be entitled to Parker immunity for the reasons stated. Also, while Parker immunity does not automatically extend to municipalities or political subdivisions of the States since they are not themselves sovereign, "substate governmental entities do receive immunity from antitrust scrutiny when they 'act pursuant to state policy to displace competition with regulation or monopoly public service.'" F.T.C. v. Phoebe Putney Health System, Inc., __ U.S. __, 133 S.Ct. 1003, 1010-11, 185 L. Ed. 2d 43 (2013) ("Phoebe Putney") (quoting Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 370, 111 S. Ct. 1344, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382 (1991)). Finally, in certain circumstances, private parties who carry out state functions are entitled to the benefit of Parker immunity. Id. at 1010.

A two-part test is employed to determine whether anticompetitive conduct of nonsovereign actors should be deemed state action and, for that reason, shielded from federal antitrust laws. First, the State must have [*8] articulated a clear policy to allow the anticompetitive conduct. Second, the State must provide active supervision of the anticompetitive conduct. Dental Examiners, 135 S.Ct. at 1111-12. An exception is made for local governmental entities, however, which only have to satisfy the first part of the test. Phoebe Putney, 133 S.Ct. at 1011. In order to meet the "clear articulation" test, it is not necessary that a state legislature expressly state in a statute or its legislative history that it intends for the delegated action to have anticompetitive effect. Rather, it is sufficient if the anticompetitive effect was a foreseeable result of what was authorized. Id.

In North Dakota, the State Legislature has (1) made the incarceration of inmates at the county level a public function through its requirement that counties either provide county jails or contract with other governmental entities for housing inmates, and (2) required that county sheriffs operate the jails, with the sheriff being an elected official whose office is provided for both under state statutory law and the North Dakota Constitution. See N.D. Const. Art. VII, § 11; N.D.C.C. §§ 11-10-20, 11-15-03, & 12-44.1-02. Further, the State Legislature has enacted N.D.C.C. ch 12-44.1, which regulates the operation of correctional facilities, including county jails. [*9] Among other things, ch. 12-44.1: (1) requires each facility to develop and periodically update a manual for operating the facility; (2) governs the treatment of inmates and proscribes inmate rights; (3) grants the NDDOCR the authority to promulgate minimum standards for the construction and operation of correctional facilities; and (4) requires the NDDOCR to annually conduct an inspection of each facility with respect to health and safety, fire and life safety, security, rehabilitation programs, recreation, treatment of inmates, and personnel training. Finally, the NDDOCR has promulgated detailed jail rules and standards that even more closely regulate jails and their operations. See www.nd.gov/docr/county/docs/NORTH DAKOTA CORRECTIONAL FACILITY RULES 2014(2).pdf (last accessed February 9, 2016).

Given all of this, the North Dakota Legislature clearly has made incarceration of inmates a governmental function, i.e., something that will generally be done by governmental entities and not the private sector, with the effects of that policy upon competition being clearly foreseeable. Further, the State's policy of government-operated correctional facilities clearly encompasses the ordinary incidents [*10] of incarcerating inmates including, for example, providing food, clothing, routine medical care, and recreational opportunities - all things that are subject to explicit regulation by the State and for which the State does not require be contracted out to the private sector. Finally, there is no reason why the same would not be true for a jail's operation of a commissary, which is a minor aspect of any county jail's operation, if it decides to offer one, and serves only inmates - a market with respect to which the State has generally eliminated competition. The net result of all of this is that the "clear articulation" requirement appears to be satisfied thereby entitling the county defendants to Parker immunity.

As for Turnkey, the "clear articulation" part of the two-part test is likely satisfied for the reasons already expressed and the second part of the two-part test (the "active supervision requirement") is likely satisfied by the fact that Turnkey is subject to the direct control of the Ward County Sheriff, who, in turn, is subject to removal from office by the Governor under N.D.C.C. § 44-11-01 for acts of misconduct, malfeasance, or neglect of duties and ultimately by the voters in the next election [*11] if they are dissatisfied with his or her performance. Also, Turnkey's ability to operate is subject to the indirect control of the State in two respects. First, although the NDDOCR has chosen not to directly regulate jail commissaries as of this point, it undoubtedly has the legislative authority to do so if it deemed it necessary to carry out its responsibilities under N.D.C.C. ch.12-44.1. Second, the operation of jail commissaries are more generally subject to the statutory provisions governing the treatment of inmates and inmates rights set forth in N.D.C.C. ch. 12-44.1 (e.g., the right of inmates to equal treat) as well as NDDOCR review generally of inmate treatment. Hence, Turnkey is also likely entitled to Parker immunity.

Not surprisingly, whether based upon a similar analysis or more general reasoning, a number of courts have concluded that Parker immunity should extend to the operation of commissaries by state or local governmental entities. See, e.g., Wheeler v.

immunity, plaintiff has failed to plead sufficient facts to make out a plausible claim of an antitrust violation against defendant Bertsch.

B. Alleged violation of federal equal protection rights

Generally speaking, prisoners have no constitutional right of access to a jail commissary. See, e.g., Tokar v. Armontrout, 97 F.3d 1078, 1083 (8th Cir.1996) ("[W]e note that we know of no constitutional right of access to a prison gift or snack shop...."); *Moore v. Ozmint, No. 3:10-3041, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 31519, 2012 WL 762460, at 10 (D.S.C. Feb. 16, 2012) (there is no freestanding constitutional right to canteen privileges). Further, once a jail voluntarily sets up a commissary or provides for commissary services, there is no constitutional requirement that the jail must offer commissary items for sale at or near what the cost might otherwise be to the public if the same items were purchased locally on the open market. See, e.g., *LaPlante v. Lovelace, No. 2:13-cv-32, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 145870, 2013 WL 5572908 at 11 (W.D. Mich. Oct. 9, 2013) ("Federal courts consistently have held that prisoners have no right to purchase products at regular retail prices."). Further, governmental officials can certainly discriminate between prisoners and the general public, and there is no allegation here that plaintiff was being charged more for commissary items than other inmates with whom he was similarly situated. In short, plaintiff's claim of denial of equal [*13] protection under the Fourteenth Amendment based upon an alleged pricing of commissary items that is greater than what the public might pay is without merit on its face.[3] See, e.g., Hernandez v. Pugh, No. 4:12-cv-0923, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 174518, 2012 WL 6113617, at 6-7 (N.D. Ohio Dec. 10, 2012) (rejecting a claim of denial of equal protection with respect to allegedly excessive commissary charges); *Guyer v. Frame, No. 85-3808, 1985 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12505, 1985 WL 4984, at 1 (E.D. Pa. Dec. 20, 1985) (same).

IV. RECOMMENDATION

The undersigned RECOMMENDS that defendant Bertsch's motion to dismiss as to her be granted (Doc. No. 15) and that plaintiff's complaint be otherwise dismissed in its entirety pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1915A for failure to state a claim and that the dismissal be without prejudice with respect to his claims of antitrust violation and with prejudice with respect to his equal protection claim.

NOTICE OF RIGHT TO FILE OBJECTIONS

Beard, No. 03-4826, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9778, 2005 WL 1217191, at  2-7 (E.D. Pa. May 19, 2005); Dehoney v. S.C.Dept. of Corr., Nos. 0:94-3169-21BD, 1995 U.S. Dist. July 31, 1995) aff'd 72 F.3d 126 [published in full-text format at 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 34980] (4th Cir. 1995) (South Carolina Department of Corrections entitled to Parker immunity as a state agency from an antitrust claim over the operation of a prison canteen); *Guyer v. Frame, No. 85-3808, 1985 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12505, 1985 WL 4984, at 2 (E.D. Pa. Dec. 20, 1985) (rejecting claim of antitrust violation [*12] based on alleged excessive commissary charges brought against a county prison).

[3] The State is also correct that there is Eleventh Amendment immunity for the claim of alleged constitutional violation being brought against defendant Bertsch. Under Eighth Circuit precedent, this court is required to assume that public officials are being sued in their official capacities unless there is a clear expression to the contrary. See, e.g., Remington v. Hoopes, 611 Fed. App'x 883, 884-85 (8th Cir. 2015) ("[W]hen a plaintiff's complaint is silent or otherwise ambiguous about the capacity in which the plaintiff is suing the defendant, our precedent requires us to presume that the plaintiff brings suit against the defendants in only their official capacities."); Johnson v. Outboard Marine Corp., 172 F.3d 531, 535 (8th Cir. 1999). The net result of this is that plaintiff has no claim against defendant Bertsch for alleged violation of his equal protection rights. This is because any suit against Bertsch in her official capacity is a suit against the State, which has Eleventh Amendment immunity from any claim for damages under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 for violation [*14] of federal civil rights. See, e.g., Kentucky v. Graham, 473 U.S. 159, 165-69, 105 S. Ct. 3099, 87 L. Ed. 2d 114 (1985); Reynolds v. Dormire, 636 F.3d 976, 981 (8th Cir.2011) (state officials sued in official capacity possess Eleventh Amendment immunity from damage claims).

Pursuant to D.N.D. Civil L.R. 72.1(D)(3), any party may object to this recommendation within fourteen (14) days after being served with a copy of this Report and Recommendation. Failure to file appropriate objections may result in the recommended action being taken without further notice or opportunity to respond. Because plaintiff is incarcerated the deadline for filing objections shall be extended to March 17, 2016.

In this consolidated proceeding, plaintiffs, a collection of public and nonprofit entities,[1] have alleged claims for, among other things, negligent misrepresentation, violations of the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.), and violations of the Unfair Competition Law (UCL) (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200 et seq.) against a collection of credit rating agencies,[2] including The McGraw-Hill Companies, Inc., now known as McGraw Hill Financial, Inc. and Standard & Poor's Financial Services LLC (collectively S&P), and bond insurers.[3] The present appeal and cross-appeal arises out of the trial court's ruling on defendants' motions to strike these causes of action as a strategic lawsuit against public participation (SLAPP) under Code of Civil Procedure section 425.16 (the anti-SLAPP statute).[4] S&P contends the court erred in denying its motion to strike plaintiffs' negligent misrepresentation and UCL claims; the bond insurers contend the court erred in denying their motion to strike plaintiffs' UCL claims; and plaintiffs contend the court erred in granting defendants' motions to strike their claims under the Cartwright Act. We reverse the order insofar as it granted bond insurer defendants' motions to strike plaintiffs' [*2] claims under the Cartwright Act but affirm the order in all other respects.

Factual and Procedural Background

Between July 2008 and April 2009, individual plaintiffs filed several complaints against the bond insurer defendants. In May 2009, the individual actions were coordinated and a coordination trial judge was appointed. A year later, the rating agencies were added as defendants. The claims arise out of what plaintiffs describe as the rating agencies' "dual credit rating system," under which the risk of default of bonds [*4] issued by municipalities and nonprofit entities was rated higher than the risk on corporate bonds even though the financial risk factors for the municipal and nonprofit bonds were lower than for the corporate bonds. Plaintiffs also claim that the rating agencies misrepresented the financial condition of the bond insurers, ultimately causing plaintiffs to incur substantial losses when the mortgage market collapsed.

Plaintiffs characterize their claims as follows: "This case arises from commercial transactions between the public entities and nonprofits and the credit rating agencies and bond insurers related to specific tax-exempt municipal bonds the public entities and nonprofits issued to finance public works, including [to] build and maintain schools, hospitals, subsidized housing, utilities and infrastructure. [¶] Before the public entities and nonprofits issued these bonds, the rating agencies charged multi-millions of dollars in fees to provide analytical reviews of and assign credit ratings to the pending bonds under the 'dual credit rating system.' This system made municipal bonds less desirable to investors by uniformly assigning lower credit ratings to municipal bonds than to [*5] riskier corporate debt. In turn, the bond insurers charged the public entities and nonprofits multi-millions of dollars in premiums for bond insurance to 'enhance' the credit rating of pending municipal bonds by 'wrapping' the bonds with the bond insurers' highest AAA credit ratings assigned by the rating agencies, for which the bond insurers also paid fees to the rating agencies. In other words, the bond insurers 'rented' their AAA credit ratings to the public entities and nonprofits to overcome the fact that, under the dual credit rating system, the rating agencies did not assign AAA credit ratings to municipal bonds. [¶] The dual credit rating system was highly lucrative for the rating agencies and bond insurers but cost the public entities and nonprofits multi-millions of dollars for analytical reviews, insurance premiums and other fees and costs that corporate issuers did not have to pay. Additionally, under the dual credit rating system, the marketability of bonds issued by the public entities and nonprofits were wholly dependent upon the maintenance by the bond insurers of their highest AAA credit ratings throughout the term of the bonds. [¶] In 2007-2008, the rating agencies [*6] downgraded the bond insurers' AAA credit ratings. As a direct result, the public entities and nonprofits suffered substantial damages when many of their bonds became unmarketable, and they were forced to pay higher interest rates, refinancing costs, termination fees, and other significant financial fees, costs and/or penalties. This occurred when the rating agencies and bond Insurers revealed publically that the bond insurers were overexposed to toxic subprime mortgage-backed securities—the collapse of the subprime mortgage market was at the heart of the global financial crisis." (Fn. omitted.)

[2] The rating agencies originally named as defendants also included Moody's Corporation, Moody's Investors Service, Inc., and Fitch Inc., Fitch Ratings, Ltd., and Fitch Group, Inc. Only [*3] the McGraw-Hill Companies, Inc., now known as McGraw Hill Financial, Inc. and Standard & Poor's Financial Services LLC, are parties to the appeal.

[3] The bond insurers named as defendants originally consisted of Ambac Assurance Corporation, Ambac Financial Group, Inc., MBIA Inc., MBIA Insurance Corporation, MBIA Insurance Corporation of Illinois, ACA Insurance Corp., Financial Guarantee Insurance Company (FGIC), Financial Security Assurance Inc., Assured Guaranty Corp., and Syncora Guarantee, Inc. Ambac Financial Group, Inc., ACA Insurance Corp., FGIC, and Syncora. were dismissed for various reasons and are no longer parties to the coordinated proceeding.

Of particular concern to the present appeal are plaintiffs' allegations in support of their Cartwright Act and UCL claims that the bond insurers and the rating agencies knew the dual credit rating system was inaccurate and unfair to plaintiffs but unlawfully agreed to maintain the system in order to continue profiting from the system. Plaintiffs' negligent misrepresentation claims turn on allegations that beginning in 2001, the ratings agencies knew that the bond insurers were insuring risky subprime mortgage backed securities and, thus, had no reasonable basis to believe the AAA credit ratings [*7] they assigned to the bond insurers were accurate.

In October 2010, the ratings agencies filed special motions to strike under the anti-SLAPP statute. Thereafter, the bond insurers filed their special motions to strike. In July 2013, after extensive briefing and argument, the trial court issued a final order granting the motions to strike the Cartwright Act claims, but denying the motions to strike the UCL and negligent misrepresentation claims.

Both S&P and plaintiffs timely filed notices of appeal from the trial court's order. Thereafter, bond insurers filed notices of cross-appeal in relation to plaintiffs' appeal.

Discussion

"'A special motion to strike is a procedural remedy to dispose of lawsuits brought to chill the valid exercise of a party's constitutional right of petition or free speech. [Citation.] The purpose of the anti-SLAPP statute is to encourage participation in matters of public significance and prevent meritless litigation designed to chill the exercise of First Amendment rights. [Citation.] The Legislature has declared that the statute must be "construed broadly" to that end.' [Citations.] [¶] 'The analysis of an anti-SLAPP motion . . . involves two steps. "First, the court decides [*8] whether the defendant has made a threshold showing that the challenged cause of action is one 'arising from' protected activity."' [Citation.] '"In the anti-SLAPP context, the critical consideration is whether the cause of action is based on the defendant's protected free speech or petitioning activity."' [Citation.] The court looks to '"the gravamen or principal thrust" of the action.' [Citations.] [¶] '"If the court finds [the threshold] showing has been made, it then must consider whether the plaintiff has demonstrated a probability of prevailing on the claim." [Citation.] "Only a cause of action that satisfies both prongs of the anti-SLAPP statute—i.e., that arises from protected speech or petitioning and lacks even minimal merit—is a SLAPP, subject to being stricken under the statute."' [Citation.] [¶] If the defendant meets its threshold burden and the plaintiff asserts its claims are exempt under the commercial speech exemption of section 425.17, subdivision (c), the plaintiff then has the burden to show the applicability of that exemption. [Citations.] If the plaintiff does not meet that burden, he or she must then establish a probability of prevailing on the claims. [¶] Review of an order granting or denying [*9] a motion to strike under section 425.16 is de novo. (Hawran v. Hixson (2012) 209 Cal.App.4th 256, 268-269, 147 Cal. Rptr. 3d 88.)

1. Cartwright Act Claims

Plaintiffs allege that defendants violated the Cartwright Act by engaging "in an agreement . . . and/or conspiracy to create and maintain artificial conditions for the acquisition of municipal bond insurance." Their claims are based on allegations that the bond insurers and rating agencies conspired to perpetuate an "anticompetitive dual credit rating system." According to the complaint, "[t]he dual credit rating system is a system under which municipal plaintiffs and other issuers of municipal bonds, despite having far lower rates of default, were given lower credit ratings than issuers of corporate bonds with the same or higher risk of default. [¶] . . . The dual credit rating system dramatically increased the price that defendants were able to charge plaintiffs for bond insurance; the amount plaintiffs paid for bond insurance was inversely correlated with their credit ratings; the lower the credit rating of an issuer the higher the premium charged by the bond insurance companies to insure bonds issued by that issuer." According to the complaint, rating agencies also have a significant financial interest in perpetuating [*10] the dual credit rating system because the system allows them "to get paid for multiple credit letters" on each transaction. The complaint alleges the rating agencies "knew that there was a disparity between the actual default rates and the intentionally low credit ratings they were giving municipalities" and between 1999 and 2000, "elements within the [ratings agencies] began to publically admit the flawed nature of the dual credit rating system." In response to the suggestions that the system was flawed, "a conspiracy between and among the bond insurance companies and the [ratings agencies] was formed. At the heart of this conspiracy was an agreement by the [ratings agencies] to maintain the dual credit rating system despite the [rating agencies'] admitted recognition of its inherent inaccuracy."

The trial court found that plaintiffs' claims under the Cartwright Act arise from protected activity and that the section 425.17, subdivision (c) exemption for commercial speech did not apply. Turning to the second prong of the anti-SLAPP analysis, the court found that plaintiffs had not made a sufficient showing with respect to their Cartwright Act claims because the necessary element of an agreement had not been demonstrated [*11] by substantial evidence. Accordingly, the court granted the defendants' motions to strike plaintiffs' Cartwright Act claims.

A motion to strike under section 425.16, subdivision (b)(1) may be directed at "[a] cause of action against a person arising from any act of that person in furtherance of the person's right of petition or free speech under the United States Constitution or the California Constitution in connection with a public issue . . . ." "The California Supreme Court has explained the first prong of the anti-SLAPP statute as follows: '[T]he statutory phrase "cause of action . . . arising from" means simply that the defendant's act underlying the plaintiff's cause of action must itself have been an act in furtherance of the right of petition or free speech. [Citation.] . . . [T]he critical point is whether the plaintiff's cause of action itself was based on an act in furtherance of the defendant's right of petition or free speech. [Citations.] . . . In determining whether [defendants'] burden is met, we keep in mind that '"the nature or form of the action is not what is critical but rather that it is against a person who has exercised certain rights" [*12] [citation].' [Citation.] Moreover, 'the gravamen of an action is the allegedly wrongful and injury-producing conduct, not the damage which flows from said conduct.' [Citation.] And, finally, where . . . the cause of action alleges both protected and nonprotected activities, the statute does not apply if the protected activities are 'merely incidental' or 'collateral' to the nonprotected activities." (California Public Employees' Retirement System v. Moody's Investors Service, Inc. (2014) 226 Cal.App.4th 643, 658-659, 172 Cal. Rptr. 3d 238 (CalPERS).)

No party disputes that the creditworthiness of the municipalities and nonprofit organizations that are plaintiffs in this action, and the criteria on which their financial condition is evaluated—the matters addressed by S&P's published ratings—are issues of public interest within the meaning of section 425.16, subdivision (e)(4). What is questioned is whether the alleged misconduct on which plaintiffs' Cartwright Act claims are based is conduct in furtherance of "defendants' constitutional right of free speech" on those matters of public interest. "An act is in furtherance of the right of free speech if the act helps to advance that right or assists in the exercise of that right." (Tamkin v. CBS Broadcasting, Inc. (2011) 193 Cal.App.4th 133, 143, 122 Cal. Rptr. 3d 264.)

Plaintiffs contend that the critical conduct with respect to their Cartwright Act claims is the alleged agreement between the [*13] rating agencies and the bond insurers that the rating agencies would continue to rate plaintiffs' creditworthiness pursuant to a system that defendants knew was unfair and inaccurate. Even assuming that it is the agreement and not the publication of the rating that allegedly injured plaintiffs, the alleged agreement as to how the rating agencies would formulate their ratings is conduct in furtherance of the publication of the ratings, which is an exercise of their right to free speech. Therefore, the alleged agreement advanced or assisted in the exercise of the rating agencies' right to free speech. (See, e.g., Greater Los Angeles Agency on Deafness, Inc. v. CNN, Inc. (9th Cir. 2014) 742 F.3d 414, 424 [decision to display videos without closed captioning even if not itself an exercise of free speech constitutes conduct in furtherance of defendant's protected right to report the news.]; Hunter v. CBS Broadcasting, Inc. (2013) 221 Cal.App.4th 1510, 1521, 165 Cal. Rptr. 3d 123 [allegedly discriminatory selection of news anchors is conduct in furtherance of the exercise of free speech because it "helped advance or assist" defendant's reporting of the news].) Thus, the trial court correctly determined that S&P met the burden under the first prong of the anti-SLAPP analysis of showing that plaintiffs' claims arise from protected activity.

A different analysis, however, [*14] is required for the bond insurer defendants. The bond insurers argue that plaintiffs' claims are based on their "advocacy" on behalf of the dual rating system, which they assert, constitutes protected speech on a matter of public interest. They rely on allegations in plaintiffs' complaint that in response to a suggestion in 2006 that Moody's was considering discontinuing use of the dual rating system, "several bond insurance companies organized a coordinated response" in which "top executives from two of the bond insurance companies met with Moody's top public finance analysts to ensure that despite indications to the contrary, Moody's would abide by the terms of the [agreement]." The bond insurers cite Clamp-All Corp. v. Cast Iron Soil Pipe Inst. (1st Cir. 1988) 851 F.2d 478, 487 for the proposition that "advocacy by commercial entities to private standard-setters or others who affect their markets is protected speech."

Plaintiffs disagree. They argue that their Cartwright Act claims do not "seek to impose liability on the bond insurers . . . for participating in a 'public debate about rating systems.'" Rather, they assert that their claims are based on the "secret, behind-the-scenes agreement" between the bond insurers and the rating agencies "to perpetuate [*15] [the dual rating system] at the [plaintiffs'] expense." They also argue that the bond insurers' reliance on the 2006 communications involving Moody's ignores the other relevant allegations in the complaint: "While the allegations (and evidence) regarding the bond insurers' attempt to suppress public discussion of the abandonment of the dual credit rating system in 2006 constitutes evidence of an underlying anticompetitive conspiracy, that does not mean the [plaintiffs'] claim is based on or otherwise depends on this evidence. The allegations, which the trial court ignored, show that the conspiracy existed both before and after the 2006 draft request for comments." (Emphasis omitted.)

Although there may be merit to the bond insurers' argument, we need not resolve this issue because we conclude that plaintiffs made a prima facie showing of their ability to prevail on this claim.

B. Does the commercial speech exemption apply?

Section 425.17, subdivision (c) exempts a cause of action arising from commercial speech from the anti-SLAPP law when "(1) the cause of action is against a person primarily engaged in the business of selling or leasing goods or services; (2) the cause of action arises from a statement or conduct [*16] by that person consisting of representations of fact about that person's or a business competitor's business operations, goods, or services; (3) the statement or conduct was made either for the purpose of obtaining approval for, promoting, or securing sales or leases of, or commercial transactions in, the person's goods or services or in the course of delivering the person's goods or services; and (4) the intended audience for the statement or conduct meets the definition set forth in section 425.17[, subdivision] (c)(2)," that is, "an actual or potential buyer or customer, or a person likely to repeat the statement to, or otherwise influence, an actual or potential buyer or customer." (Simpson Strong-Tie Co., Inc. v. Gore (2010) 49 Cal.4th 12, 22, 30, 109 Cal. Rptr. 3d 329, 230 P.3d 1117.)

As stated above, the misconduct alleged in plaintiffs' Cartwright Act cause of action is the allegedly unlawful agreement to use the dual credit rating system to rate plaintiffs' creditworthiness. As such, the cause of action does not arise "from a statement or conduct by [either the rating agencies or the bond insurers] consisting of representations of fact about [the rating agencies' or the bond insurers'] or a business competitor's business operations, goods, or services." (Simpson Strong-Tie Co., Inc. v. Gore, supra, 49 Cal.4th at p. 30.) Although the rating agencies allegedly [*17] made misrepresentations about the accuracy of their ratings, the falsity of those representations is not the basis of plaintiffs' Cartwright Act cause of action; the nub of the claim is the alleged agreement to use a common dual rating system. Hence, the court properly rejected application of the commercial speech exemption to this cause of action.

C. Did plaintiffs establish a probability of prevailing on their claims against the rating agency defendants?

"To show a probability of prevailing for purposes of section 425.16, a plaintiff must ""make a prima facie showing of facts which would, if proved at trial, support a judgment in plaintiff's favor."" [Citation.] This standard is 'similar to the standard used in determining motions for nonsuit, directed verdict, or summary judgment,' in that the court cannot weigh the evidence. [Citations.] However, the plaintiff 'cannot simply rely on the allegations in the complaint' [citations], but 'must provide the court with sufficient evidence to permit the court to determine whether "there is a probability that the plaintiff will prevail on the claim."'" (ComputerXpress, Inc. v. Jackson (2001) 93 Cal.App.4th 993, 1010, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 625.) However, "[a]n anti-SLAPP-suit motion is not a vehicle for testing the strength of a plaintiff's case [*18] . . . so early in the proceedings . . . . It is a vehicle for determining whether a plaintiff, through a showing of minimal merit, has stated and substantiated a legally sufficient claim." (Wilbanks v. Wolk (2004) 121 Cal.App.4th 883, 906, 17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 497, citing Equilon Enterprises v. Consumer Cause, Inc. (2002) 29 Cal.4th 53, 63, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 507, 52 P.3d 685.)

The elements of plaintiffs' Cartwright Act claim are ""(1) the formation and operation of the conspiracy, (2) the wrongful act or acts done pursuant thereto, and (3) the damage resulting from such act or acts."'" (Quelimane Co. v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co. (1998) 19 Cal.4th 26, 47, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 709, 960 P.2d 513.) As noted above, the trial court found that plaintiffs' failed to make an adequate showing with respect to the formation and operation of the alleged conspiracy.

In Aguilar v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 Cal.4th 826, 851-852, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 841, 24 P.3d 493, the court set forth the plaintiff's burden when required make a prima facie showing of the existence of an unlawful conspiracy necessary to assert a claim under the Cartwright Act: "[I]n order to carry a burden of production to make a prima facie showing that there is a triable issue of the material fact of the existence of an unlawful conspiracy, a plaintiff, who would bear the burden of proof by a preponderance of evidence at trial, must present evidence that would allow a reasonable trier of fact to find in his favor on the unlawful-conspiracy issue by a preponderance of the evidence, that is, to find an unlawful [*19] conspiracy more likely than not. Ambiguous evidence or inferences showing or implying conduct that is as consistent with permissible competition by independent actors as with unlawful conspiracy by colluding ones do not allow such a trier of fact so to find. Antitrust law, including the Cartwright Act, compels the result. Otherwise, it might effectively chill procompetitive conduct in the world at large, the very thing that it is designed to protect [citation], by subjecting it to undue costs in the judicial sphere. Therefore, in addition, the plaintiff must present evidence that tends to exclude, although it need not actually exclude, the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently rather than collusively." (Id. at p. 852, fn. omitted.) The court added, "if the court determines that any evidence or inference presented or drawn by the plaintiff indeed shows or implies unlawful conspiracy more likely than permissible competition, it must then deny the defendants'' motion for summary judgment, even in the face of contradictory evidence or inference presented or drawn by the defendants, because a reasonable trier of fact could find for the plaintiff. . . . [¶] But if the court determines [*20] that all of the evidence presented by the plaintiff, and all of the inferences drawn therefrom, show and imply unlawful conspiracy only as likely as permissible competition or even less likely, it must then grant the defendants' motion for summary judgment, even apart from any evidence presented by the defendants or any inferences drawn therefrom, because a reasonable trier of fact could not find for the plaintiff." (Id. at pp. 856-857.)

We agree with the trial court that plaintiffs' evidentiary showing that S&P entered into an agreement with any bond insurer or other rating agency to perpetuate the use of the dual credit rating system is insufficient. While plaintiffs unquestionably presented evidence of a strong financial motive and ample opportunity to enter into a conspiracy, there is insufficient evidence, either express or circumstantial, of an actual agreement. Contrary to plaintiffs' argument, the evidence is insufficient to support a reasonable inference that the maintenance of the dual rating system by S&P was "more likely than not" the product of an unlawful conspiracy. Plaintiffs argue: "The rating agencies' and bond insurers' lock-step adherence to the dual credit rating system implies collusion [*21] because it is inconsistent with the competitive market forces. Had any one of the three ratings agencies split from the others and applied a corporate equivalent rating scale to municipal bonds, as Moody's contemplated in 2006, or developed a municipal scale that clearly communicated the distinction between municipal and corporate debt, that rating agency would have immediately secured the majority of the municipal bond rating business from the others. [¶] Earning extra revenue from the dual rating system, by contrast, required that all three rating agencies provide ratings services on the same, ineffective municipal scale."

Plaintiffs argue that they submitted substantial evidence "in the form of expert testimony, fact witness testimony and party admissions, showing that the dual credit rating system could not and would not have survived as long as it did absent collusion between the credit rating agencies and the bond insurers." Plaintiffs' strongest evidence that defendants "more likely than not" engaged in a conspiracy comes from the declaration of Joseph Pimbley, whom plaintiffs retained as an "expert in municipal finance, credit enhancements and antitrust investigations." His [*22] declaration explains that "[t]he purpose of credit ratings is to provide information to investors on the credit quality of debt securities. Each [ratings agency] fully expects and wants investors to interpret different ratings on two bonds as the [rating agency's] unbiased, expert analysis that the two bonds have differing credit quality." Under the dual rating system, however, the ratings agencies "did not apply similar credit analysis and judgment to all bond sectors—specifically the [rating agencies] did not assign ratings to municipal and corporate bonds in a manner consistent with the affirmative representations of the meaning of the rating levels. [¶] The [ratings agency] default study results beginning in the 1990's should have moved the [rating agencies] to fix their credit rating analyses and assignments. Instead, the [ratings agencies] chose to maintain this 'dual system.' . . . [¶] The [rating agencies] failure to take corrective actions is particularly troubling given that when the [rating agencies] wish to apply different standards to different debt instruments, they specifically and clearly create ratings scales with different symbols. [For example], . . . [t]o avoid confusing [*23] investors, the [rating agencies] apply different rating symbols for short-term versus long-term debt. [¶] Had the [rating agencies] truly wished to rate municipal bonds with different meaning for the ratings, they would have created rating scales with distinct symbols and explained them clearly." (Fn. omitted.)

Ultimately, Pimbley concludes that the rating agencies "knowingly failed to assign ratings to municipal bonds in a manner consistent with the affirmative representations of the meanings of their ratings. This failure did not serve the marketplace; it only served to mislead investors." He concludes that the rating agencies "did not standardize their rating scales in large part because of the [rating agencies'] close relationship with the bond insurers. In short, the [rating agencies] were motivated by financial gain in this deliberate misrepresentation. The bond insurers were motivated by the fact that their business model would collapse if there was no dual credit rating system. These two business models merged to allow the dual credit system to perpetuate for years after the [rating agencies] recognized that the system was unfair and arbitrary." Plaintiffs also presented evidence [*24] in support of their claim that when the credit rating agencies "finally made changes to their rating scales, each did so within a small window of time in 2010."

This evidence does not tend to show that the continued use of the system resulted from an unlawful agreement rather than from S&P's determination of its own financial best interests. Plaintiffs do not dispute that the dual credit rating system was established by the rating agencies long before they allegedly discovered it was inaccurate and unfair. As the bond insurance market grew, so did a considerable income stream for the rating agencies. Nothing in the record establishes that the failure of S&P to discontinue the system was the product of an unlawful agreement rather than the reflection of its own financial self-interest. As in the case of any oligopoly, had any one of the rating agencies discontinued the dual rating system, "immediately secur[ing] the majority of the municipal bond rating system from others," as plaintiffs assert, it would expect the other agencies to follow suit and also discontinue use of the dual rating system, thereby decreasing rather than increasing its own profitability. (See Gregory J. Werden, Economic Evidence [*25] on the Existence of Collusion: Reconciling Antitrust Law with Oligopoly Theory, 71 Antitrust L.J. 719, 721 (2004).) That is the reason for which parallel action by competitors, without more, is not sufficient to establish the existence of an illegal agreement. (Biljac Associates v. First Interstate Bank (1990) 218 Cal.App.3d 1410, 1423, 1428, 267 Cal. Rptr. 819, disapproved on different ground in Demps v. San Francisco Housing Authority (2007) 149 Cal.App.4th 564, 566, 57 Cal. Rptr. 3d 204 [Conscious parallel pricing is not in itself unlawful and, without evidence of concerted activity, will not support an inference of antitrust conspiracy.]; Eddins v. Redstone (2005) 134 Cal.App.4th 290, 308-309, 35 Cal. Rptr. 3d 863 [consciously parallel behavior will not support an inference of conspiracy without evidence '"(1) that the defendants acted in contradiction of their economic interests, and (2) that the defendants had a motive to enter into an agreement."'].)

Plaintiffs' "direct evidence of collusion" fares no better at establishing an agreement involving S&P. According to plaintiffs, their "evidence shows that in January 2006, Moody's circulated a draft request for comments among the bond insurers and others in the municipal finance industry that had not been released to the public, which proposed seeking public comment on the abandonment of the dual credit rating system. The bond insurers, by and through a trade association colluded amongst themselves to pressure Moody's not to make [*26] any changes that would reduce or eliminate the 'spread' between municipal bonds and corporate debt that comprises the 'heart' of the municipal bond insurance industry. Two executives from the bond insurers met with Moody's shortly thereafter. One of the executives' summary of the meeting—'we were preaching to the choir'—clearly implies that an agreement to maintain the dual credit rating system had been discussed and advanced. Following the bond insurers communications, Moody's released a substantially revised request for comments that removed the exact question that the bond insurers disliked—whether the corporate equivalent scale should be used for U.S. municipal debt in all sectors." (Emphasis omitted.) Moody's January 2006 draft request for comments and its June 2006 request for comments are contained in the record and show that the relevant question went from "Should we expand the assignment of corporate equivalent ratings beyond swaps and taxable cross-border transactions to taxable transactions sold within the United states?" to "Should we (a) expand the assignment of corporate equivalent ratings (CERs) to taxable municipal transactions sold within the United States, (b) continue [*27] our current practice of assigning corporate equivalent ratings only to taxable transactions sold outside the United states and swaps, or (c) eliminate the practice of assigning CERs to individual municipal obligations?" The bond insurer defendants stipulated to the contents of emails written by an executive at one of the bond insurance companies noting the potential seriousness of the proposed changes as well as his intention to contact the trade association "to see if we can draft an industry response" as well as an executive's response following the May 2006 meeting with Moody's. The bond insurers also stipulated that "executives from two bond insurer defendants met with Moody's" in May 2006.

This evidence is insufficient to support an inference that S&P, as compared to Moody's, was a party to any agreement with the bond insurers. While that possibility of course remains, it is no more than speculation in the absence of some evidence linking S&P to entry of the alleged agreement. And, as just indicated, plaintiffs have presented no such evidence.

This evidence is sufficient, however, to support an inference that the bond insurer defendants were parties to an agreement with Moody's. [*28] Contrary to the bond insurers' argument, plaintiffs' evidence shows more than that Moody's merely "heard the bond insurers' position and decided to act in accordance with that position." The evidence of the meeting and Moody's subsequent change to its request for comments, coupled with plaintiffs' additional evidence that there is no reasonable justification for perpetuating the system other than an improper financial motive, is sufficient to support the inference (though not conclusive) of a conspiracy. (See Brown v. Pro Football, Inc. (1996) 518 U.S. 231, 241, 116 S. Ct. 2116, 135 L. Ed. 2d 521 ["Antitrust law also sometimes permits judges or juries to premise antitrust liability upon little more than uniform behavior among competitors, preceded by conversations implying that later uniformity might prove desirable [citations] or accompanied by other conduct that in context suggests that each competitor failed to make an independent decision."]; Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp. (1984) 465 U.S. 752, 764, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 ["[T]he antitrust plaintiff should present direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove that the manufacturer and others 'had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective.'"].)

For purposes of defeating a special motion to strike, plaintiffs need not, as bond insurers suggest, [*29] establish all of the details of the conspiracy. While the bond insurers are quick to point out that "there is no indication [in the record] of who these executives were or what companies employed them, what was discussed, whether anything was agreed upon, or even if they met separately or together with Moody's" that evidence undoubtedly will be pursued during discovery. In Aguilar v. Atlantic Richfield Co., supra, 25 Cal.4th at page 857, the court acknowledges that "a plaintiff . . . must often rely on inference rather than evidence since, usually, unlawful conspiracy is conceived in secrecy and lives its life in the shadows." At this early stage of the proceedings the evidence is sufficient to support the inference of a conspiracy, enabling plaintiffs to defeat the bond insurers' motion to strike and attempt to obtain further evidence that will prove their claim.

Finally, the bond insurers argue that absent evidence that they coerced Moody's into the agreement, their "advocacy" is protected by the First Amendment. Bond Insurers again rely on their argument that "[a]dvocacy to a private standards-setting body undertaken on a collective basis by competitors through a trade association or otherwise is protected under the First Amendment." As bond insurers acknowledge, however, the First Amendment does [*30] not protect "advocacy" that "involves economic coercion or similar abuse." Nor, does the First Amendment protect advocacy that "serves no legitimate purpose, or that . . . is unnecessarily harmful." (Clamp-All Corp. v. Cast Iron Soil Pipe Inst., supra, 851 F.2d at p. 487.) Plaintiffs' evidence that the bond insurer's so-called "advocacy" of the dual credit rating system did not serve a legitimate purpose and was unnecessarily harmful is sufficient to defeat the bond insurers' First Amendment defense for purposes of this motion.

D. Conclusion

In summary, we find no error in the court's order striking plaintiffs' Cartwright Act claims against S&P. However, we conclude that plaintiffs made a prima facie showing of their ability to prevail on this cause of action against the bond insurers and that the court erred in striking the Cartwright Act cause of action against those defendants.

2. UCL Claims

"The UCL does not proscribe specific acts, but broadly prohibits 'any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice and unfair, deceptive, untrue or misleading advertising . . . .' (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200.) 'The scope of the UCL is quite broad. [Citations.] Because the statute is framed in the disjunctive, a business practice need only meet one of the three criteria to be considered unfair competition.'" ([*31] Durell v. Sharp Healthcare (2010) 183 Cal.App.4th 1350, 1359, 108 Cal. Rptr. 3d 682.) An act or practice may be actionable as "unfair" under the unfair competition law even if it is not "unlawful." (Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Co. (1999) 20 Cal.4th 163, 180, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527.)

Nonprofit plaintiffs allege that defendants' actions, "including but not limited to making illegal agreements among themselves to act jointly to perpetuate the dual rating system and thus cause harm to competition in the bond insurance market, fix, stabilize and/or increase the price of bond insurance sold to plaintiff[s]," constitute "unfair, illegal and/or fraudulent business practices within the meaning of Business and Professions Code [section] 17200 et seq."

As indicated above, the trial court found that defendants satisfied their burden under the first prong of the anti-SLAPP analysis with respect to the UCL claims. The court explained that its ruling that the nonprofit plaintiffs had not met their burden under the second prong with respect to the Cartwright Act necessarily precluded a prima facie showing of a violation of the UCL under the unlawful criterion of the statute. The court concluded, however, that plaintiffs had made a prima facie showing under the unfairness criterion of the UCL and denied defendants' motion on that basis.

As indicated in the preceding discussion, we have concluded that the bond insurers' special [*32] motion to strike the Cartwright Act cause of action should have been denied. It therefore follows that plaintiffs are entitled to pursue their a UCL cause of action against the bond insurers under the illegality criterion, whether or not that cause of action against them can be sustained under the unfairness criterion. In their briefing and at oral argument, the bond insurers argued that the nonprofit plaintiffs lack standing to pursue their UCL claims against one or both of the remaining bond insurers because they did not purchase bond insurance from those insurers. Their argument is premised on the failure of the nonprofit plaintiffs to present evidence of the existence of a conspiracy to perpetuate the dual rating system. Because we have determined that the evidence of the bond insurers participation in a conspiracy is sufficient to defeat the anti-SLAPP motion addressed to the nonprofit plaintiffs' Cartwright Act claims, the evidence also makes a prima facie showing that the bond insurers' wrongful conduct (participation in the alleged antitrust conspiracy) caused the nonprofit plaintiffs to suffer injury in the form of increased or unnecessary payments for bond insurance. (See, [*33] e.g., Clayworth v. Pfizer, Inc. (2010) 49 Cal.4th 758, 788, 111 Cal. Rptr. 3d 666, 233 P.3d 1066 [Pharmacy plaintiffs had standing under UCL as indirect purchaser where "loss was the result of an unfair business practice: Pharmacies paid more than they otherwise would have because of a price-fixing conspiracy in violation of state law."]; Rosack v. Volvo of America Corp. (1982) 131 Cal.App.3d 741, 753, 182

Cal. Rptr. 800 ["[A] jury can infer the fact of injury when a conspiracy to fix prices has been established and plaintiffs have established that they purchased the affected goods or services. This inference eliminates the need for each class member to prove individually the consequences of the defendants' actions to him or her."])[5]

Because we have concluded that the plaintiffs failed to establish a likelihood of success on their Cartwright Act cause of action against the rating agencies, and because these defendants have carried their burden of showing that the UCL cause of action is based on constitutionally [*35] protected activity, we must determine whether the nonprofit plaintiffs have made a prima facie showing of their ability to prevail against the rating agencies under the unfairness criterion of the UCL sufficient to overcome the motion to strike.

Under Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Co., supra, 20 Cal.4th 163, 187, conduct is "unfair" within the meaning of the statute if it "threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." In this case, the trial court concluded that plaintiffs had made a sufficient showing that defendants' conduct was unfair under this standard. The court explained, "Regarding the antitrust public policy, . . . [plaintiffs] say the result of this asserted unfair practice results in a violation of many of the things to which antitrust law in general and the Cartwright Act specifically are directed. [¶] . . . [T]he idea is . . . that this system of rating, dual rating resulting in the rating agencies getting business and the insurance company selling insurance, end up in a closed market where the participants, without regard to an agreement [*36] to do this, make a lot of money. [¶] And I think the evidence presented by the plaintiff supports that interpretation . . . . They repeated comments regarding that there is a system that's going on here that results in charging of fees or the charging of insurance premiums, that there's nothing that anybody can do about it, that there's a cost impact on the issuers of bonds and the like, and the expert opinion that there's no factual basis for any of this, but everybody is doing it because they see the benefit of it."[6] [5] Bond insurers also argued in their briefs that the UCL claims should be dismissed because under this statute there is no form of relief to which the plaintiffs can possibly be entitled. The UCL "provides only limited remedies: restitution and injunctive relief." (Shersher v. Superior Court (2007) 154 Cal.App.4th 1491, 1497, 65 Cal. Rptr. 3d 634.) Because the disputed practice is no longer in use, injunctive relief is not available. As to restitution, "'in the UCL context . . . restitution means the return of money to those persons from whom it was taken or who had an ownership interest in it.'" (Ibid; Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17203 ["The court may make such orders or judgments, . . . as may be necessary to restore to any person in interest [*34] any money . . . which may have been acquired by means of such unfair competition."].) Direct payment from plaintiff to defendant is not necessary to state a claim under the UCL. (Shersher, supra, at p. 1497; Troyk v. Farmers Group, Inc. (2009) 171 Cal.App.4th 1305, 1340, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 589.) In cases where there is no direct payment, a plaintiff must show that the defendant benefitted from the actions that resulted in an economic loss to plaintiff. (Shersher, supra, at pp. 1499-1500 [finding that defendant benefitted from plaintiff's purchase of its products from third party dealers despite the fact that payment was not made directly from plaintiff to defendant.]; Troyk, supra, at pp. 1339-1342 [defendants subject to claim of restitution for service charges paid by consumers to a third party because defendants received a benefit from the payment of such charges and because defendants and the third party acted as a single enterprise].) Here, plaintiffs presented evidence that bond insurers acquired significant financial benefits from their participation in the alleged conspiracy.

[6] The trial court recognized two alternative definitions of "unfair" that may be applicable in this action and found that nonprofit plaintiffs had presented a probability of prevailing under each standard. (See West v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2013) 214 Cal.App.4th 780, 806, 154 Cal. Rptr. 3d 285 ["Several definitions of 'unfair' under the UCL have been formulated. They are: [¶] 1. 'An act or practice is unfair if the consumer injury is substantial, is not outweighed by any countervailing benefits to consumers or to competition, and is not an injury the consumers themselves could reasonably have avoided.' [Citation.] [¶] 2. '"[A]n 'unfair' business practice occurs when that practice 'offends an established public policy or when the practice is immoral, unethical, [*37] oppressive, unscrupulous or substantially injurious to consumers.' [Citation.]" [Citation.]' [Citation.] [¶] 3. An unfair business practice means '"the public policy which is a predicate to the action must be 'tethered' to specific constitutional, statutory or regulatory provisions."'"].) Defendants assert that the Cel-Tech standard is the only standard applicable in this action. Because we agree with the trial court's conclusion under that standard, we need not consider whether other standards apply or whether nonprofit plaintiffs' showing satisfied other standards as well.

S&P's argument that nonprofit plaintiffs, as a matter of law, "cannot restate their failed theory of antitrust harm under an unfairness prong UCL claim" is unfounded. Chavez v. Whirlpool Corp. (2001) 93 Cal.App.4th 363, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 175, relied on by defendants, does not hold that the absence of illegality precludes a finding of unfairness under the UCL. In that case, the court observed "conduct that the courts have determined to be permissible . . . cannot be deemed 'unfair' under the unfair competition law." (Id. at p. 375; see also Belton v. Comcast Cable Holdings, LLC (2007) 151 Cal.App.4th 1224, 1240, 60 Cal. Rptr. 3d 631.) But the court explained, "We do not hold that in all circumstances an 'unfair' business act or practice must violate an antitrust law to be actionable under [*38] the unfair competition law. Instead we hold that conduct alleged to be 'unfair' because it unreasonably restrains competition and harms consumers . . . is not 'unfair' if the conduct is deemed reasonable and condoned under the antitrust laws." (Chavez, supra, at p. 375.) As the trial court here correctly observed, the fact that plaintiffs were unable to substantiate their Cartwright Act claims against the ratings agencies does not mean that defendants' conduct is necessarily immune from liability under the unfairness criterion of the UCL. Since plaintiffs have made a plausible showing that the dual rating system was unreasonable, knowingly resulting in unjustifiable extra insurance costs for the public and nonprofit agencies, the court properly denied the special motion to strike the UCL cause of action against the rating agencies.

3. Negligent Misrepresentation Claims

Plaintiffs allege defendants "misrepresented the bond insurance companies' financial strength and concealed from plaintiffs that the bond insurance companies had shifted, and/or had the plan to shift, their risk free business model into the business of insuring exotic and risky financial instruments consisting of bundles of thousands of subprime [*39] mortgages. . . . This shift placed the bond insurance companies' financial strength at risk by jeopardizing their 'AAA' rating and ability to provide the credit support they had been paid millions to provide for plaintiffs' . . . bonds. Defendants made these misrepresentations with knowledge of their falsity or at least with no reasonable basis on which to believe in their truth. Defendants made these representations with the intention to induce plaintiffs to purchase bond insurance and leave it in place. Defendants also did so with the expectation that plaintiffs, as among a limited group of bond insurance purchasers, would rely on these misrepresentations and concealments in making these decisions. Had defendants not made these misrepresentations and/or revealed the true facts to plaintiffs, plaintiffs would not have purchased the bond insurance from them . . . and would not have left them in place into 2008. Ultimately, plaintiffs lost millions when the auctions for the [bond] issuances failed as a result of plaintiffs' decisions to purchase the bond insurance for these issuances and to leave it in place."

The trial court concluded that S&P had satisfied its prong one burden: "All [*40] of plaintiffs' causes of action against S&P arise out of S&P's speech regarding the publication of opinions and other materials and the dissemination of those opinions and other material concerning matters of concern in the public financial markets." The court found, however, that plaintiffs had presented substantial evidence as to each element necessary to support their causes of action for negligent misrepresentation against S&P and that S&P had not established its affirmative defense under the First Amendment.

The trial court's prong one analysis is likely correct. (See CalPERS, supra, 226 Cal.App.4th at p. 659.) We need not explore the issue further, however, as we conclude that the trial court's ruling on the second prong is also correct.

"The elements of negligent misrepresentation are (1) the misrepresentation of a past or existing material fact, (2) without reasonable ground for believing it to be true, (3) with intent to induce another's reliance on the fact misrepresented, (4) justifiable reliance on the misrepresentation, and (5) resulting damage." (Apollo Capital Fund, LLC v. Roth Capital Partners, LLC (2007)158 Cal. App. 4th 226, 243, 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 199.) S&P challenges plaintiffs' showing on each element.

S&P contends that their ratings are not actionable statements of fact. They argue that S&P's "ratings of plaintiffs' bonds and [*41] of the bond insurers constitute opinions of future events." They rely on the allegations in plaintiffs' complaints that the credit ratings express "'the likelihood of default by the entity that issues debt.'" In CalPERS, supra, 226 Cal.App.4th at page 664, this court refused to interpret credit ratings "in such a narrow fashion." We explained, "At first glance, resolving whether ratings are actionable misrepresentations for purposes of this tort seems quite straightforward given the oft-stated rule that a speaker's opinion about a future event is not a statement about a past or existing material fact. 'It is hornbook law that an actionable misrepresentation must be made about past or existing facts; statements regarding future events are merely deemed opinions.' [Citations.] . . . [¶] However, . . . 'Under certain circumstances, expressions of professional opinion are treated as representations of fact. When a statement, although in the form of an opinion, is "not a casual expression of belief" but "a deliberate affirmation of the matters stated," it may be regarded as a positive assertion of fact. [Citation.] Moreover, when a party possesses or holds itself out as possessing superior knowledge or special information or expertise [*42] regarding the subject matter and a plaintiff is so situated that it may reasonably rely on such supposed knowledge, information, or expertise, the defendant's representation may be treated as one of material fact." (Id. at p. 662; see also Anschutz Corp. v. Merrill Lynch & Co. Inc. (N.D. Cal. 2011) 785 F.Supp.2d 799, 824 [credit rating was actionable either as a """a deliberate affirmation of the matters stated,""" or because the credit rating agency's opinion is based on its "superior knowledge or special information"]; Abu Dhabi Commercial Bank v. Morgan Stanley & Co. Inc. (S.D.N.Y. 2012) 888 F.Supp.2d 431, 456 [Rating agencies may be liable for fraud "if the ratings both misstated the opinions or beliefs held by the [r]ating [a]gencies and were false or misleading with respect to the underlying subject matter they address."].)

In this case, plaintiffs submitted evidence that S&P had superior knowledge and special information about the financial condition and creditworthiness of the bond insurers. According to S&P's own documents, S&P "takes great care to assure that the market views its credit ratings as highly credible and relevant, and will continue to review its practices, policies, and procedures on an ongoing basis and modify or enhance them, as necessary, to ensure that rigorous analytics, integrity, independence, objectivity, transparency, credibility, and quality continue as [*43] fundamental premises of its operations." In its application for registration as a nationally recognized statistical rating organization, S&P writes that it "provides a credit rating only when, in its opinion, there is information of satisfactory quality to form a credible opinion on creditworthiness, consistent with its credit rating information and data policy, and only after applicable quantitative, qualitative, and legal analyses are performed. Throughout the ratings and surveillance process, the analytical team reviews information from both public and nonpublic sources."

In a report entitled "Bond Insurance Criteria: Industry Overview and Analytical Focus," S&P states that its "financial strength rating is a current opinion of the financial security characteristics of an insurance organization with respect to its ability to pay under its insurance policies and contacts in accordance with their terms." S&P's rating methodology for bond insurers "addresses many of the same factors involved in any insurance company's financial strength rating. However, the criteria developed for bond insurers have been tailored to the unique aspects of the financial guaranty business and differ in [*44] important respects. [¶] One critical difference . . . is the expectation that only minimal net losses will occur in a normal operating environment. This expectation is based on the credit quality of the insured portfolios, which overwhelmingly consist of issues that are investment grade or near investment grade quality on an uninsured basis." For this reason, S&P employed a "capital adequacy model" to determined the adequacy of capital reserves. "This model tests the ability of the bond insurer to handle claims that would be expected to occur in a hypothetical worst case scenario." Finally, S&P's rating criteria was established with "rating durability in mind" because "[i]nvestors expect that bond insurers' ratings will be stable and not subject to frequent adjustment based on the normal ebbs and flows of credit quality over the traditional economic cycle."

Consistent with its rating criteria, S&P imposed a "minimum capital level" for bond insurers and set a "preferred ownership profile" for bond insurers. S&P set "credit quality composition standards" for bond insurers' portfolios. S&P "periodically monitor[ed] the bond insurer's portfolio to look for any significant credit deterioration that might give [*45] rise to a need for additional capital."

In 2007, S&P issued a report stating, "Despite the well-documented deterioration in the world of subprime mortgages, this sector does not appear to be a threat to the rating stability of the bond insurers. We come to this view as the result of the insurers' underwriting standards . . . , their sound risk management practices, . . . and their conservative capital management strategies, which result in cushions that allow for adverse development without jeopardizing their capital adequacies." S&P explained that it had employed a number of analytical tools to determine the bond insurers ability to "withstand subprime stress" and based on the results, S&P concluded the "stress test results are positive."

Taken as a whole, this evidence makes a sufficient showing that the ratings given the bond insurers, although in the form of an opinion, were "'not a casual expression of belief' but 'a deliberate affirmation of the matters stated'" and that S&P's ratings are based on superior knowledge or special information concerning the then-present financial condition of the insurers and their ability to withstand foreseeable claims against their outstanding policies. [*46]

Plaintiffs also made a prima facie showing that S&P did not have reasonable grounds for believing its ratings to be accurate. Plaintiffs' expert, William Sarsfield, opined that "starting no later than 2003, the credit ratings agencies had no reasonable basis to believe that the AAA ratings they assigned to the bond insurers were true and accurate. . . . [T]he credit rating agencies knew or should have known bond insurers did not merit the 'AAA' ratings assigned by the credit ratings agencies because the bond insurers were overexposed to residential backed . . . securities and credit default swaps . . . referencing subprime mortgage debt." Sarsfield explains, "Setting aside internal emails, communications and other evidence showing the credit rating agencies knew or should have known the bond insurers did not merit AAA ratings given the bond insurers' exposure to [residential mortgage backed securities] and [credit default swaps] referencing subprime housing debt, a series of highly publicized government reports clearly called into questions the bond insurers' AAA credit ratings given the bond insurers' exposure to the subprime market. . . . [¶] . . . [¶] These warnings, coupled with a significant [*47] run up in securitized subprime lending, clearly placed the credit rating agencies on notice that the bond insurers did not merit AAA credit ratings." S&P's attack on Sarsfield's credentials and opinions are not well taken. S&P argues that "Mr. Sarsfield has never been employed at a ratings agency and has had no experience with the rating process for the bond insurers." In analyzing a SLAPP motion, however, this court does not weigh the credibility of plaintiff's evidence. (ComputerXpress, Inc. v. Jackson, supra, 93 Cal.App.4th 993, 1010.) S&P also faults Sarsfield for failing to offer an "explanation of the rating process for the bond insurers" and for not identifying "any particular assumptions that he views as lacking any reasonable basis." Sarsfield's declaration, however, cannot be read in a vacuum. Plaintiffs' presented substantial evidence regarding the rating process for bond insurers including, as set forth above, considerable evidence regarding S&P's descriptions of its ratings criteria. Read together, the evidence makes a prima facie showing that given what S&P knew or should have known regarding the bond insurers' exposure to the subprime mortgage market, S&P could not or should not have concluded that the bond insurers merited their [*48] AAA ratings under the identified criteria.

Plaintiffs made a sufficient showing of reliance and resulting damage. We reject S&P's argument that plaintiffs failed to establish that S&P owed them a legal duty of care. Although phrased by S&P as a question of duty, the relevant question is whether plaintiffs are within the class of persons entitled to rely on S&P's misrepresentations. In Bily v. Arthur Young & Co. (1992) 3 Cal.4th 370, 408, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 51, 834 P.2d 745, the court explained that "the person or 'class of persons entitled to rely upon the representations is restricted to those to whom or for whom the misrepresentations were made. Even though the defendant should have anticipated that the misinformation might reach others, he is not liable to them.'" This rule "attempts to define a narrow and circumscribed class of persons to whom or for whom representations are made. In this way, it recognizes commercial realities by avoiding both unlimited and uncertain liability for economic losses in cases of professional mistake and exoneration of the auditor in situations where it clearly intended to undertake the responsibility of influencing particular business transactions involving third persons. [This rule] thus appears to be a sensible and moderate approach [*49] to the potential consequences of imposing unlimited negligence liability which we have identified." (Ibid.) Plaintiffs have more than adequately shown that S&P intended to influence business transactions between plaintiffs and the bond insurers.

Plaintiffs also presented sufficient evidence that they did, in fact, rely on S&P's ratings and were damaged by their reliance. Plaintiffs presented numerous declarations by agents of the various nonprofit and public entities indicating that the entity relied to its detriment on the rating agencies' representations that the bond insurers were AAA rated and that the entity would not have purchased bond insurance without that express representation. Contrary to S&P's argument, the declarations submitted are sufficient for purposes of opposing its motion to strike. (CalPERs, supra, 226 Cal.App.4th at p. 672.)

Finally, S&P argues the trial court erred in rejecting its affirmative defense that plaintiffs' claims are barred by the First Amendment. "[A] special motion to strike should be granted 'if the defendant presents evidence that defeats the plaintiff's claim as a matter of law. [Citation.] Generally, a defendant may defeat a cause of action by showing . . . there is a complete defense to the cause [*50] of action . . . .' [Citation.] '[A]lthough section 425.16 places on the plaintiff the burden of substantiating its claims, a defendant that advances an affirmative defense to such claims properly bears the burden of proof on the defense.'" (CalPERs, supra, 226 Cal.App.4th at p. 674.)

S&P argues that "[u]nder the First Amendment, credit ratings, as opinions, have been held to be fully protected" and, alternatively, that "[e]ven where courts have declined to hold that ratings are absolutely protected, case law makes clear that credit ratings are entitled to First Amendment protection subject only to an 'actual malice exception'—requiring proof of actual, subjective 'serious doubt' or disbelief of the statement by the speaker."

Initially, we reject S&P's argument that plaintiffs' claims are barred because they are based on its protected expression of opinion rather than a provable false factual statement. As discussed above, plaintiffs made a prima facie showing that S&P's AAA ratings of the bond insurers was a representation of fact sufficient to withstand the motion to strike. Accordingly, S&P's rating is not entitled to absolute protection under the First Amendment.

We likewise reject S&P's argument that plaintiffs' negligent misrepresentation claims are subject to the "actual malice" standard applicable [*51] in defamation and libel cases. Compuware Corp. v. Moody's Investors Servs., Inc. (6th Cir. 2007) 499 F.3d 520, relied on by S&P is instructive. In that case, plaintiff contracted with defendant credit rating agency for a determination of plaintiff's overall creditworthiness. Later, after defendant issued a report downgrading plaintiff's rating, plaintiff filed an action for breach of contract and defamation against defendant. After concluding that plaintiff had failed to produce evidence of actual malice sufficient to withstand summary judgment of its defamation claim (id. at pp. 526-528), the court held that the "actual malice" requirement also applied to plaintiff's breach of contract claim and supported the granting of summary judgment of that claim as well. (Id. at p. 529.) The court explained, "Ordinarily, 'enforcement of . . . general laws against the press is not subject to stricter scrutiny than would be applied to enforcement against other persons or organizations.' [Citation.] But stricter scrutiny may be warranted where a plaintiff attempts to use a state-law claim 'to avoid the strict requirements for establishing a libel or defamation claim.'" (Id. at p. 529; see also County of Orange v. McGraw Hill Companies, Inc. (C.D. Cal. 1999) 245 B.R. 151, 155 ["Although these issues traditionally arise in libel or defamation actions, the actual malice standard applies to other causes [*52] of action when the plaintiff seeks compensatory damages arising from allegedly false statements."].) The court concluded that the breach of contract claim was premised on the defamation claim insofar as "it is inescapable that Compuware seeks compensation for harm caused to its reputation." (Id. at p. 530.) The court continued, "We see no material difference between this claim—which, although labeled one for breach of contract, essentially asserts that Moody's acted incompetently (i.e., negligently) in compiling and evaluating its publication of protected expression—and a tort claim based on conduct that might support a pendant defamation claim." (Id. at p. 532.)

In stark contrast, plaintiffs' negligent misrepresentation claim is not "based on conduct that might support a pendant defamation claim" and is not based on injuries to plaintiffs' reputations. Plaintiffs' claims are based on positive statements about the creditworthiness of the bond insurers that plaintiffs allege were false. There is no basis on which to apply the actual malice standard and no error in the court's denial of S&P's motion to strike.

Disposition

The trial court's order on defendants' motions to strike under section 425.16 is reversed insofar as it ordered [*53] plaintiffs' Cartwright Act claims against the bond insurer defendants stricken and is affirmed in all other respects. The parties shall bear their own costs on appeal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

HN1[] Sherman Act, Claims

In a case alleging violations of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, to avoid summary judgment, plaintiffs must show that a genuine issue of material fact exists as to whether defendants entered into an anti-competitive agreement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A non-movant's burden in defending against summary judgment in a Sherman Act antitrust case is no different than in any other case. Thus, as when reviewing any summary judgment motion, the court must view the facts and any reasonable inferences drawn therefrom in the light most favorable to the party opposing summary judgment, considering the evidence as a whole and refraining from weighing evidence or making credibility determinations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

HN3[] Sherman Act, Claims

In an antitrust case under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, to avoid summary judgment, plaintiffs must submit evidence that when considered holistically, tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently or interdependently. A nonmovant plaintiff in a section 1 case does not have to submit direct evidence, i.e., the so-called smoking gun, but can rely solely on circumstantial evidence and the reasonable inferences drawn from such evidence.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Inferences

HN4[] Sherman Act, Claims

The extent of what constitutes a reasonable inference in the context of an antitrust case is somewhat different from cases in other branches of the law in that antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 case. In drawing favorable inferences from underlying facts, a court must remember that often a fine line separates unlawful concerted action from legitimate business practices. Evidence which is equally consistent with legal and illegal conduct, standing alone, cannot support an inference of antitrust conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Legal Entitlement

HN5[] Sherman Act, Claims

In an antitrust case under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, defendants are not entitled to summary judgment simply because they demonstrated a plausible rationale for their behavior. Rather, the focus must remain on the evidence proffered by the plaintiff and whether that evidence tends to exclude the possibility that the defendants were acting independently.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope

HN6[] Sherman Act, Claims

The antitrust laws prohibit only overt concerted action. Firms are not prohibited from making decisions that are based on the actions of other firms.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

HN7[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Oligopolistic markets tend to be interdependent because competitors are more likely to consider each other's actions in markets dominated by few sellers. Thus, though each firm in an oligopoly may independently decide upon its course of action, any rational decision must take into account the anticipated reaction of the other firms. Because the firms are aware of what their competitors are doing, oligopolists' decisions may be interdependent, meaning the decisions were made upon considering competitors' actions or reactions. But such decisions are nonetheless considered to have been arrived at independently.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

HN8[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

In an oligopolistic market, interdependence may sometimes result in conscious parallelism, in which the firms engage in the same behavior because they consider the actions of their competitors, but not because they have overtly agreed to engage in that behavior. Conscious parallelism may enable firms in a concentrated market to maintain their prices at supracompetitive levels, or even raise them to those levels, without engaging in any overt concerted action. Consciously parallel conduct does not violate antitrust laws. Only actual agreement (i.e., a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective) qualifies as an unreasonable restraint of trade in violation of antitrust law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

HN9[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Sherman Act

In an antitrust case under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, for plaintiffs to create a fact issue about whether defendants entered an agreement, plaintiffs must present evidence tending to exclude the possibility of independent conduct, including interdependent conduct (e.g., conscious parallelism). In the Third Circuit, plaintiffs may show that defendants' parallel conduct is attributable to an agreement (rather than interdependence) by showing three elements: 1. Defendants' behavior was parallel; 2. Defendants were conscious of each other's conduct and awareness was an element in their decision-making processes; 3. plus factors showing an actual agreement: (1) motive, (2) actions contrary to defendants' interests, and (3) traditional conspiracy evidence. The third element's list of plus factors is non-exhaustive, but those three factors have been relied on repeatedly by the Third Circuit.

HN10[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Sherman Act

In an antitrust case involving analysis of "plus factors" that could show an actual agreement, the absence of any plausible motive to engage in the conduct charge is highly relevant to whether a genuine issue for trial exists within the meaning of Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e). Also, evidence of actions against self-interest means there is evidence of behavior inconsistent with a competitive market. For example, evidence that prices were raised despite no rise in demand or costs might indicate defendants are acting contrary to their interests.

HN11[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Sherman Act

In oligopolies, even a showing that the relevant market was ripe for collusion and that the defendants raised prices without a rise in demand or costs will usually be insufficient to rule out interdependent conduct. By nature, oligopolistic markets are conducive to price fixing and will often exhibit behavior that would not be expected in competitive markets. Therefore, these factors are neither necessary nor sufficient to preclude summary judgment, at least where the claim is price fixing among oligopolists. Nonetheless, courts must consider these first two factors because they are relevant and inform the inferences that might be drawn from plaintiffs' other evidence.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

HN12[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Sherman Act

Traditional conspiracy evidence will generally be the most important evidence in a price-fixing case involving an oligopoly. This category of evidence may involve customary indications of traditional conspiracy, or proof that the defendants got together and exchanged assurances of common action or otherwise adopted a common plan even though no meetings, conversations, or exchanged documents are shown.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Inferences

HN13[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Sherman Act

Evidence of competitors meeting together, without more, is insufficient to raise inferences of conspiracy without additional evidence. That said, opportunities to conspire may be probative of a conspiracy when meetings of defendants are closely followed in time by suspicious actions or records.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

HN14[] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

In considering whether plaintiffs have submitted sufficient evidence to survive summary judgment, the court may consider only admissible evidence. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c).

Evidence > ... > Hearsay > Exemptions > Statements by Coconspirators

HN15[] Exemptions, Statements by Coconspirators

Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(E), which codifies the co-conspirator exception, provides that a statement is not hearsay if it is offered against an opposing party and was made by the party's coconspirator during and in furtherance of the conspiracy. Demonstrating a conspiracy, and the declarant's and non-offering party's participation therein, are preliminary questions of fact for purposes of admissibility under Rule 801(d)(2)(E). Fed. R. Evid. 104(a). Rule 104(a) provides that the court must decide any preliminary question about whether evidence is admissible. In so deciding, the court is not bound by evidence rules, except those on privilege.

Evidence > ... > Procedural Matters > Preliminary Questions > Admissibility of Evidence

Evidence > ... > Hearsay > Exemptions > Statements by Coconspirators

HN16[] Preliminary Questions, Admissibility of Evidence

According to the plain meaning of Fed. R. Evid. 104(a), courts may make preliminary factual determinations by considering any evidence it wishes, unhindered by considerations of admissibility. In Bourjaily, the Supreme Court acknowledged that out-of-court statements made by anyone, including putative co-conspirators, are often hearsay. Even if they are, they may be considered, Glasser and the bootstrapping rule notwithstanding. The Court in Bourjaily did not decide whether a trial court could rely solely upon hearsay statements to determine that a conspiracy had been established by a preponderance of the evidence. Rather, the Court's holding merely provided that a court, in making a preliminary factual determination pursuant to Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(E), can consider the proffered hearsay statements themselves. A subsequent amendment to the Federal Rules of Evidence in 1997 clarified that the statement must be considered but does not by itself establish the existence of the conspiracy or participation in it under (E). Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(E).

Evidence > ... > Hearsay > Exemptions > Statements by Coconspirators

HN17[] Exemptions, Statements by Coconspirators

In the Third Circuit post-Bourjaily, in order for an out-of-court statement to be admissible pursuant to Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(E), the district court must find by a preponderance of the evidence that: (1) a conspiracy existed; (2) the declarant and the party against whom the statement is offered were members of the conspiracy; (3) the statement was made in the course of the conspiracy; and (4) the statement was made in furtherance of the conspiracy. A district court's preliminary finding will not be disturbed on appeal unless it is clearly erroneous. Alternatively, a district court has "considerable discretion" to admit the statements conditionally, subject to their later being connected up.

Evidence > ... > Procedural Matters > Preliminary Questions > Admissibility of Evidence

HN18[] Preliminary Questions, Admissibility of Evidence

The Rules of Evidence are to be liberally construed in favor of admissibility. To that end, a court may admit the proposed evidence on the condition that the proof be introduced later. Fed. R. Evid. 104(b). And the court has a wide berth in conditionally admitting co-conspirator statements at the summary judgment stage.

HN19[] Inferences & Presumptions, Inferences

The acceptable inferences which can be drawn from circumstantial evidence vary with the plausibility of the plaintiffs' theory and the dangers associated with such inferences.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Evidence > ... > Hearsay > Exemptions > Statements by Coconspirators

HN20[] Sherman Act, Claims

The fact that hearsay is admitted under Fed. R. Evid. 104 as to a particular defendant, does not necessarily compel a conclusion that the defendant has joined an agreement on prices in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Evidence > ... > Procedural Matters > Preliminary Questions > Admissibility of Evidence

HN21[] Preliminary Questions, Admissibility of Evidence

In considering the court's duty under Fed. R. Evid. 104, Third Circuit law requires that the court make rulings favorable to plaintiffs if plaintiffs have presented, by a preponderance of evidence, sufficient facts to warrant admissibility.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

HN22[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Price Fixing

In an antitrust case under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, price discussion among low level sales people has little probative weight. Evidence of sporadic exchanges of shop talk among field sales representatives who lack pricing authority is insufficient to survive summary judgment.

HN23[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Price Fixing

For purposes of antitrust law, manufacturers are permitted to communicate with one another under most circumstances. A jury could consider the manufacturers' communications to be probative of an agreement only if there is some evidence that exchanges of information had an impact on pricing decisions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

HN24[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Price Fixing

With respect to the legal viability of a conduit theory in an antitrust case, the Third Circuit has indicated that an antitrust conspiracy that required a middle-man could nonetheless be considered a conspiracy.

HN25[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Price Fixing

In an antitrust case under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, in order for plaintiffs to show that defendants' parallel conduct is attributable to an agreement, evidence of plus factors must tend to exclude the possibility of independent conduct. The mere presence of one or more of these "plus factors" does not necessarily mandate the conclusion that there was an illegal conspiracy between the parties, for the court may still conclude, based upon the evidence before it, that the defendants acted independently of one another, and not in violation of antitrust laws. Defendants are not entitled to summary judgment merely by showing that there is a plausible explanation for their conduct; rather the focus must remain on the evidence proffered by the plaintiff and whether that evidence tends to exclude the possibility that the defendants were acting independently.

HN26[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Price Fixing

Evidence that the defendant had a motive to enter into a price fixing conspiracy means evidence that the industry is conducive to oligopolistic price fixing, either interdependently or through a more express form of collusion. But plaintiffs' showing that defendants had a plausible reason to conspire does not end the inquiry.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

HN27[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Price Fixing

In an antitrust case under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, the Third Circuit has clarified that, in evaluating plus factors, courts should equate "actions against self-interest" with "evidence of behavior inconsistent with a competitive market."

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

HN28[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Price Fixing

Evidence of a defendant declining to pursue another manufacturer's customer could be viewed as inconsistent with a competitive market. But, evidence that a defendant refused to adjust its list price in order to secure a new customer would not be so probative.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

HN29[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Price Fixing

In an antitrust case under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, when no evidence suggests that the increase in list prices was correlated with any changes in costs or demand, a jury may conclude that defendants acted against self-interest.

HN30[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Price Fixing

In an antitrust case under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, a showing the defendants had motive and acted against self-interest is neither necessary nor sufficient to preclude summary judgment, at least where the claim is price fixing among oligopolists. Rather, to elevate a finding of actions against self-interest to a finding that a jury could conclude that defendants entered an agreement, plaintiffs must supply traditional conspiracy evidence.

HN31[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Price Fixing

In a Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, case involving oligopolies, the most important evidence will generally be non-economic evidence that there was an actual, manifest agreement not to compete. Traditional conspiracy evidence may involve customer indications of traditional conspiracy, or proof that the defendants got together and exchanged assurances of common action or otherwise adopted a common plan even though no meetings, conversations, or exchanged documents are shown.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

HN32[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Price Fixing

In an antitrust case under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, defendants' decision to eliminate job quotes may qualify as traditional conspiracy evidence to avoid summary judgment.

[*178] MEMORANDUM RE: DEFENDANTS' MOTIONS FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

TABLE OF CONTENTS

[*180] I. Introduction

In fall 2011, several U.S. gypsum wallboard manufacturers announced substantial changes to their pricing, ending a long-standing pricing practice and scheduling a very large price increase to commence in January 2012 and to be effective for the entire year. Then, in fall 2012, these manufacturers again announced similar price increase to take effect in January 2013. In this multidistrict litigation ("MDL"), Plaintiffs allege that the Defendants' 2012 and 2013 price increases and other changes in pricing practices were the result of an agreement, in violation of federal and state antitrust [4] laws.

Currently before the Court are four motions for summary judgment: Defendants' Joint Motion for Summary Judgment (ECF 206), Defendant CertainTeed's Motion for Summary Judgment (ECF 207-08), Defendant Lafarge's Motion for Summary Judgment (ECF 204), and Defendant PABCO's Motion for Summary Judgment (ECF 205). For the reasons that follow, the court GRANTS the Motions for Summary Judgment as to Certain Teed and DENIES the Motions for Summary Judgment as to American, National, Lafarge, and PABCO.

At the outset of these consolidated cases, the Court convened a pretrial conference on September 18, 2013 to discuss pretrial issues including discovery and initial pleadings. Defendants' counsel indicated that it was not their intention to file Rule 12 motions, although their clients strenuously disputed the truth of the allegations against them. Eventually, a consensus was reached among counsel and the Court that discovery would be initially limited to whether there was an agreement between any Defendants in violation of Sherman Act § 1. (ECF 64). Thus, the Court postponed discovery on issues such as class action, damages, antitrust injury, etc.

By and large, discovery proceeded without any need for [5] intervention. There was substantial production of documents by Defendants, and a deposition program was initiated and completed.

Following the close of discovery, Defendants, as planned, filed motions for summary judgment. As detailed below, each Defendant has supported its motion for summary judgment by declarations and deposition testimony by their officers and managers involved with the pricing of their drywall products. These testimonial materials assert that there was no agreement between their employer and any other Defendant.

Against this forceful show of denial, Plaintiffs have come forward with detailed facts that Plaintiffs assert show a genuine dispute that would allow a jury to find that there was an agreement by all of Defendants concerning prices.

[*181] Included within the factual material are excerpts from documents and testimony by the two third-party research organizations that had been subpoenaed and provided documents and deposition testimony, Longbow Research ("Longbow") and Thompson Research Group ("Thompson").

As required by the Court's practice order, Defendants have supported their motions for summary judgment with statements of undisputed facts. Plaintiffs have come [6] forward with responses to many of these assertions, claiming there are disputed facts, and have added additional facts to which Defendants have responded.

As of result of this mélange of factual materials, the Court believes that the "core facts" of the case, as contained in documents produced by all of Defendants, or third parties, along with deposition testimony by their officers and managers, are largely undisputed. The task of the court is to determine whether inferences favorable to Plaintiffs can be drawn from these factual materials.

In proceeding towards the appropriate analysis, the Court believes that there are three issues that must first be analyzed in detail, as follows:

First, the Court will review the history of the drywall industry in the United States, which satisfies the accepted definition of an oligopoly, and the drywall manufacturers' efforts to raise prices following the well-documented housing slump in 2008-2010.

Second, the Court will provide the legal analysis of the decision by the Supreme Court in the Matsushita case and a number of Third Circuit opinions analyzing antitrust claims involving oligopoly industries such as drywall. The Court must recognize the unique [7] economic discipline that applies to price fixing allegations against companies in an oligopoly setting, and the required hesitation, if not disinclination, to find any type of conspiracy from merely ambiguous evidence, but also, a duty to consider what courts have called "plus factors."

Third, the Court will review the evidence rules concerning alleged co-conspirator statements.

In making this review and analysis, the Court recognizes that this is not an occasion for fact finding. Defendants' motions assert their innocence; Plaintiffs assert their liability with equal vigor. The Court's role is not take sides, find facts, or determine liability or innocence, but only to determine what, if any, inferences can be drawn consistent with the governing case law on antitrust price fixing and the rules of evidence on allegedly co-conspirator statements.

After laying the groundwork on the industry background and legal principles, the Court will embark upon a chronological review of the factual materials, highlighting those facts that Plaintiffs have asserted are the strongest towards showing an agreement. The Court will then explain its decision as to admissibility of hearsay evidence, and separately, [8] the ability of the jury to draw reasonable inferences of agreement based on the record in this case.

II. Procedural History

In April 2013, the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation ordered consolidation in this District before the undersigned of various drywall antitrust cases from this and other Districts for pretrial proceedings. The original Defendants were U.S. domestic drywall manufacturers, namely CertainTeed Gypsum ("Certain Teed"), United States Gypsum Company ("USG") and its parent USG Corporation ("USG Corp."), New NGC, Inc. ("National"), LaFarge North America Inc. ("LaFarge"), [*182] American Gypsum Company LLC ("American") and its parent company Eagle Materials Inc. ("Eagle"), TIN, Inc. ("TIN"), and PABCO Building Products, LLC ("PABCO").

By May 2013, multiple putative class actions had been consolidated in the MDL. These actions had been filed on behalf of proposed classes of Plaintiffs who purchased drywall either directly or indirectly from Defendants.[1] The direct purchaser actions alleged violations of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1; the indirect purchaser actions sought injunctive relief through § 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S. C. § 26, based on allegations of violations of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and [9] sought damages based on alleged violations various of state laws.[2] The Court has jurisdiction over the federal law claims by virtue of 28 USC §§ 1331, 1337. The Court has jurisdiction over the Indirect Purchasers' state-law claims through 28 U.S.C. § 1367 and 28 U.S.C. § 1332 ("CAFA").

By Order dated May 7, 2013 (ECF 11), this Court consolidated, for pretrial purposes, (1) all pending indirect purchaser actions and any indirect purchaser actions filed thereafter ("Indirect Purchaser Action") and (2) all pending direct purchaser actions and any direct purchaser actions filed thereafter ("Direct Purchaser Action"). (ECF 11) Additionally, [10] the Court ordered the Direct and Indirect Purchaser Actions to coordinate for pretrial purposes. These Direct and Indirect Purchaser Actions are the subjects of the instant Motions for Summary Judgement.

III. Plaintiffs' Allegations in the Amended Complaints

On June 24-25, 2013, the consolidated putative classes of Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs and Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs both filed Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaints (ECF 20 (Direct), 21 (Indirect)). Both complaints allege that beginning in 2011, Defendants in the domestic drywall industry violated the antitrust laws by conspiring to raise prices, restrict supply, and eliminate the long-standing pricing practice of providing job quotes.

Drywall, also known as gypsum wallboard, sheetrock, and wallboard, is the basic material used to form walls and ceilings in over 90% of all new residential and commercial structures. The domestic drywall industry is oligopolistic. Defendants account for more than 89% of U.S. drywall sales, and the four largest Defendants (USG, National, Certain Teed, and American) account for approximately 70% of those sales.

According to the complaints, prior to fall 2011, Defendants typically announced multiple [11] price changes each year because of the commodity nature of wallboard and fluctuations in costs. These increases were typically announced through letters distributed to customers 30 to 45 days before the effective date of the increase. Additionally, since the 1980s, manufacturers had competed for price in part by providing "job quotes." Through job quotes, manufacturers provided a quoted price to a [*183] customer for a specific "job" and that price would remain the valid price throughout the duration of the job, regardless of market fluctuation.

[1] The Direct Purchaser Actions were comprised of those who purchased wallboard directly from the manufacturers; the Indirect Purchaser Actions were comprised of those who purchased wallboard through a retailer, contractor, or other intermediary, and whose claims are based on state laws.

[2] At least one case has been consolidated with this MDL but is not at issue today because it was filed as an individual action as opposed to a class action. Ashton Woods Holdings LLC v. USG Corp., 15-1712, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 160733 (E.D. Pa.) (also known as "Home Builders Action"). The cases at issue today are only those that were filed as class actions.

Like most construction industries, the drywall industry was significantly injured by economic events in the early 2000s, including the 2008-2010 Recession. According to Plaintiffs, prices had generally been flat or declining from 2008 to 2011. Defendants had attempted to raise prices multiple times in 2010 and 2011, but Plaintiffs allege Defendants were unable to obtain a meaningful increase because of the economic climate and because of competition with each other.

Then, over the span of a few weeks in late September and early October 2011, six Defendant-manufacturers distributed letters announcing that they would implement a price increase on January [12] 1, 2012 and that the new price would remain in effect for the entire year. In those letters, five of those Defendants either announced or expressed anticipation that the 2012 price would be as high as a 35% increase over current prices, the steepest increase announced in over ten years. Six Defendants also used the letters to announce the immediate elimination of job quotes. The only Defendant-manufacturer who did not announce the elimination of job quotes in its letter, USG, still unofficially eliminated or significantly curtailed new job quotes in fall 2011.

According to Plaintiffs, unlike the previous price-increases attempted earlier in 2011 and prior years, Defendants' January 2012 price increase was effective for the entire year, even though there had been no meaningful increase in drywall demand or manufacturers' costs. Plaintiffs allege these increases succeeded because Defendants had agreed to increase the prices, eliminate job quotes, and limit the supply of wallboard, in violation of antitrust laws.

Following the success of the 2012 price increase, Defendants again announced substantial price increase in fall 2012 to take effect in January 2013 and to last the duration of [13] 2013. As with the 2012 increase, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants agreed to implement the January 2013 price increase and restrict supply in the months preceding the increase, and that Defendants succeeded in achieving these goals, thus increasing the cost of wallboard over what would have been charged in a truly competitive market.

IV. Discovery

In September 2013, the Court ordered a phased discovery process, limiting Phase I to a single issue: "Whether the record contains sufficient facts and/or opinions, admissible at trial, to allow a jury to find a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, including whether there was an agreement between or among defendants." (ECF 64).

After considerable discovery, a dispute arose when Defendants moved to compel Plaintiffs to answer so-called "contention interrogatories," which asked for detailed facts. (ECF 99). After oral argument on April 22, 2014, the Court issued a Memorandum, noting that, based on the briefs that had been filed, the Plaintiffs had gathered a great deal of detailed factual information from the documents produced by Defendants. In re Domestic Drywall Antitrust Litig., 300 F.R.D. 228 (E.D. Pa. May 12, 2014). The Court therefore concluded that the most expeditious way to encapsulate the discovery that had so far [14] taken place was to require Plaintiffs to file a "contention statement," indicating the detailed facts that supported their allegations. Id.

In this Memorandum, the Court noted the success that Plaintiffs had realized from sophisticated deployment of electronic discovery, and therefore, the Court concluded [*184] that it would not be burdensome for Plaintiffs to "parlay" the facts learned in discovery into contention statements as an alternative to answers to interrogatories to which Defendants would then have to respond. Id.

The only other major discovery dispute concerned a third-party subpoena to a research group, Thompson, which is in the business of collecting information, analyzing trends, and making predictions on the economics of various businesses, including drywall manufacturers. This dispute resulted in a lengthy opinion setting forth the facts that Thompson would have to reveal, but provided protection for proprietary or truly confidential information. In Re Domestic Drywall Antitrust Litigation, 300 F.R.D. 234 (E.D. Pa. 2014).

V. Settling Defendants

In February 2015, Plaintiffs, both direct and indirect purchasers, reached settlements with a number of original Defendants: TIN, Inc. and the USG entities (including USG Corp., USG, and L&W[3]). The Court granted [15] preliminary approval of the settlements in March 2015 (ECF 183-186), and granted final approval and issued a final judgment order on August 20, 2015. (ECF 276-279).

Although the settling Defendants are not parties to the instant Summary Judgment Motions, this Memorandum will discuss some of the facts related to those original Defendants to the extent they are relevant to the pending motions by the remaining Defendants.

VI. Motions for Summary Judgment

On May 12, 2015, the non-settling Defendants moved for summary judgment, arguing that Plaintiffs had failed to uncover enough evidence to create a fact issue about whether Defendants entered a price-fixing conspiracy. Together, all Defendants filed a joint motion for summary judgment (ECF 206). Additionally, three Defendants filed supplemental motions for summary judgment to make Defendant-specific arguments: Lafarge (ECF 204), CertainTeed (ECF 207), and PABCO (ECF 205).

In accordance with Rule 56, each Defendant has submitted factual materials, including affidavits, declarations, and/or deposition testimony, [16] "asserting that a fact" alleged by Plaintiffs (namely, that Defendants agreed to fix prices and make other price-related changes to the industry) cannot be proven, and "show[ing]" the absence of a genuine dispute. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56 (c).

In support of the joint motion, Defendants argue that the undisputed evidence reveals that Defendants were merely "following the leader," which they argue is an expected and legal business practice in an oligopoly. Defendants paint the drywall industry in 2011 as suffering from a dire economic outlook for the manufacturers, who were still feeling the impact of the downturn in the construction industry from 2006-2008 and the Great Recession that begin in 2008. Defendants claim that by September 2011, they had tried various methods of raising prices and reducing costs, but were nonetheless experiencing substantial losses each year between 2008 and 2011.

Desperate to find solutions to improve its bottom line, on September 20, 2011, American became the first manufacturer to issue a letter to customers that (1) eliminated job quotes effective immediately and (2) announced a 35% price increase to take effect on January 1, 2012 and last [*185] throughout all of 2012. Defendants submit declarations [17] and depositions arguing that American's announcement took the industry by surprise, but seeing an opportunity to improve profitability, Defendants followed American's lead based on their independent conclusions that the changes announced by American were in the best interest of each individual manufacturer. Defendants argue that the same was true of the price increase that went into effect for 2013.

Each Defendant has satisfied its burden under Rule 56(c)(1) by filing declarations, and/or depositions of high-ranking corporate officers in which those officers deny the existence of, and their participation in, a price-fixing conspiracy. In reviewing Defendants' evidence, the Court focuses on the declarations of those individuals who are the most relevant to this litigation, where possible. When declarations are not available, the Court relies on deposition testimony.

A. American

American submitted declarations from David Powers (President, American) and Keith Metcalf (Sr. VP of Sales, Marketing, and Distribution, American), both of which support American's contention that it was not involved with any agreement to raise prices, eliminate job quotes, or restrict supply in either 2012 or 2013.[4] Exs. 48 [18] (Powers decl.), 50 (Metcalf decl.).

---

[3] L&W Supply Corporation, a wholly-owned subsidiary of USG Corporation, was not named as a defendant, but was included in the settlement agreement.

According to these declarations, Messrs. Powers and Metcalf worked together to develop American's pricing strategy for 2012 and 2013, though Mr. Powers had final say over any pricing decisions. Ex. 48 ¶ 7; Ex. 50 ¶¶ 17-20, 33-35. Sometime in summer 2011, the two men worked to develop a new pricing strategy in light of American's financial woes,[5] ultimately deciding to increase prices by 35% because "the larger the increase that American Gypsum announced, the better chance American Gypsum had of successfully implementing at least a portion of the increase." Ex. 48 ¶ 31; accord Ex. 50 ¶ 19.

In an attempt to achieve this price improvement, Mr. Powers came up with the idea to eliminate job quotes. Ex. 48 ¶¶ 30-31; [19] Ex. 50 ¶ 21. Messrs. Powers and Metcalf took their plan to Steven Rowley, President and CEO of Eagle Materials (American's parent company), and Mr. Rowley made the suggestion to create a calendar-year price given the large size of the price increase. Ex. 48 ¶ 31; Ex. 50 ¶ 22. American announced the increase "in late September because builders like to know how much their costs are increasing at that time since they negotiate the price for their next year's projects in October and November" and to provide "additional notice as a courtesy because of the change in job quote policy and the amount of the increase." Ex. 50 ¶ 25.

In making the announcement, Messrs. Powers and Metcalf recognized that they were taking a risk and could lose market share, but "American Gypsum was willing to lose some market share if it could realize higher prices, and hence a profit, on the sales that remained." Ex. 48 ¶ 32; Ex. 50 ¶ 20. And, if American "received negative feedback from [their] customers or if sales declined too much, then the company [*186] always had the option of rescinding, modifying, or selectively implementing the increase . . . ." Ex. 48 ¶ 32; accord Ex. 50 ¶ 20.

Messrs. Powers and Metcalf state [20] that they did not discuss increase with any employee of any other wallboard manufacturer and that they independently reached the decision to increase prices in 2012 and 2013 and to eliminate job quotes. Ex. 48 ¶¶ 34-36; Ex. 50 ¶ 53. The declarations also assert that American competed with the other Defendants throughout the class period, "reduc[ing] prices for individual customers on hundreds of occasions in order to meet prices offered by its competitors in 2012." Ex. 50 ¶ 30.

B. National

National submitted the declaration of Craig Weisbruch (Sr. VP of Sales and Marketing, National), which supports National's contention that it was not involved in any agreement in violation of the Sherman Act. Ex. 210 (Weisbruch decl.).[6]

According to Mr. Weisbruch's declaration, he "did not enter into any agreement with any other drywall manufacturer regarding drywall prices, supply, or job quotes." Ex. 210 ¶ 38. He [21] learned of American's price announcement on September 20, 2011 because two customers emailed him copies of the American letter. Ex. 210 ¶ 10. Prior to receiving the letters, Mr. Weisbruch did not know of "any plans by American Gypsum to raise prices or end job quotes," though, he "had heard secondhand reports from customers that USG had discussed with customers possibly ending USG's practice of issuing job quotes." Ex. 210 ¶ 11.

[4] American also submitted the declaration of Timothy Gleason (Attorney, Will & Emery LLP), but this declaration was related to the discovery process rather than the merits of the case.

[5] In his declaration, Mr. Powers detailed that, because of the economic downturn in the early 2000s, American's price for wallboard dropped from $165 per thousand square feet in 2006 to $91 per thousand square feet in 2011, a 45% decrease. Ex. 48 ¶ 20; accord Ex. 50 ¶ 14.

[6] National also submitted the declaration of John Corsi (VP of Manufacturing, Operations, and Engineering, National), but this declaration goes to the operational status of National's plants and the production capacity of those plants, rather than to whether National entered into an agreement. Ex. 30.

Upon receiving the American letter, Mr. Weisbruch placed a moratorium on job quoting and called an emergency meeting of the sales leadership team to decide how to proceed.[7] Ex. 210 ¶ 13. The team concluded that it was in the best interest of National to follow American's lead, though it decided to hold off on announcing the "hard dollar" amount of the increase until December 2011 so it could "collect competitive intelligence from [its] customers and form a more complete competitive picture." Ex. 210 ¶¶ 14-19.

In 2013, Mr. Weisbruch stated that National decided to raise prices by 30% because of its independent business judgment, which was based on information about what other manufacturers were doing, business conditions, and financial need. Ex. 210 ¶¶ 23-31.

The record contains substantial evidence documenting Mr. Weisbruch's communications with research analysts. In his declaration, Mr. Weisbruch clarified that he > never intended for anything [he] said to any industry analyst to be directly or indirectly conveyed to another drywall manufacturer. No analysts ever suggested to [him] that [the analyst] would convey [*187] anything [Mr. Weisbruch] said to another manufacturer. Nor did [he] ever ask an analyst to pass information [he] provided to any other manufacturer.

Ex. 210 ¶ 36.

C. Lafarge

Lafarge did not submit any declarations or affidavits, but every Lafarge employee [23] that Plaintiffs deposed denied under oath that there was ever any discussion or agreement among Defendants regarding pricing or job quotes. Ex. 1102 (DeMay dep.) at 371:4-375:6; Ex. 59 (Preston dep.) at 197:15-202:6; Ex. 80 (Pearson dep.) at 291:17-22, 294:3-4; 297:11; Ex. 81 (Conlin dep.) at 181:9 - 14; Ex. 82 (Wilson dep.) at 145:25-150:3.

As with National, there is some evidence in the record of communications with Stephen DeMay (VP Sales, Lafarge) and a third-party analyst at Longbow. In their supplemental briefing, Lafarge cites the depositions of the research analysts at Longbow to support that Mr. DeMay never asked an analyst to pass information to another drywall manufacturer and the analysts never agreed to pass such information along. Lafarge Suppl. Br. at 20.

D. PABCO

PABCO's declarations of Ryan Lucchetti (President, PABCO) and Mark Burkhammer (Dir. Sales — North, PABCO) both support PABCO's assertion that it did not participate in any agreement in violation of the Sherman Act.[8] Exs. 93, 99.

According to his declaration, Mr. Lucchetti first learned of American's September 2011 announcement from a customer, at which time Mr. Lucchetti forwarded to letter to Mark Burkhammer, Phil Kohl (VP Sales and Marketing, PABCO), Todd Thomas (Dir. Sales — South, PABCO), Foster Duval (Sales Manager, PABCO), and Emil Kopilovich (VP Manufacturing, PABCO). Ex. 93 ¶¶ 23-24. Mr. Duval responded to the email, informing Mr. Lucchetti, for the first time, that Mr. Duval had spoken with Mr. Powers (President, American) the day before. Ex. 93 ¶¶ 24-25.

[7] During the class period, National's pricing decisions were made by "discuss[ing[the issue and reach[ing] a consensus within a group of decision-makers consisting of [Mr. Weisbruch] and Messrs. Withrock [Dir. Demand Management], Kelly [Dir. Dealer Sales], Crutchfield [22] [Dir. Dealer Sales], and Wood [Dir. Nat'l Accounts]." Ex. 210 ¶ 3. After a decision was reached with this group, the decision would be run by Tom Nelson (CEO, National), who had "ultimate authority over [National]'s pricing actions and during this period routinely approved of the recommendations of the sales leadership team." Ex. 210 ¶ 4.

[8] PABCO submitted additional declarations, but these declarations are related to issues other than whether Defendants reached an agreement (e.g., plant operation during the relevant time period). [24]

Mr. Lucchetti explained that PABCO decided to follow the lead of its competitors in 2011 regarding the price increase and elimination of job quotes after it had received the increase letters from American, USG, National, CertainTeed, and Lafarge. Ex. 93 ¶ 29. Similarly, before announcing a price increase for 2013, PABCO waited to see what the other manufacturers would do, deciding to raise prices only after receiving announcements from American, National, Certain Teed, and Lafarge. Ex. 93 ¶ 42.

Mr. Lucchetti claims that he "did not use or rely on information obtained from [any gypsum industry research analysts]" when making his pricing decisions. Ex. [25] 93 ¶ 59.

E. CertainTeed

Of all Defendants, CertainTeed submitted by far the most declarations, offering approximately 90 declarations from Certain Teed leadership, employees, and customers. CertainTeed Exs. 1-50, 54-67, 69-94, 102-105. Almost all declarations deny knowledge of any agreement between CertainTeed and another manufacturer.[9] Id. [*188] Every declaration made by an employee of CertainTeed and its parent and sister companies also categorically denies entering into any agreement with any drywall competitor. CertainTeed Exs. 1-91, 93-94, 102-104.

According to the declaration of Steve Hawkins (VP Sales, Certain Teed), CertainTeed first learned of American's plans to increase prices and eliminate job quotes on September 20, 2011, when a customer emailed one of CertainTeed's Regional Sales Managers a copy of the American letter. CertainTeed Ex. 2 ¶ 50. The letter was forwarded to [26] Mr. Hawkins, who sent it to John Donaldson (President, Certain Teed). Between September 20 and October 3, CertainTeed "went through a deliberative process . . . to come to a decision on the best approach for CertainTeed. And the deliberative process over [Certain Teed's] specific price levels did not conclude until late December." CertainTeed Ex. 1 ¶¶ 45-56.

Similarly, Mr. Hawkins recalls being surprised by American's March 2012 announcement that it would likely raise its 2013 prices by 25-30%.[10] CertainTeed Ex. 2 ¶ 86. CertainTeed did not immediately start providing guidance because "it was too difficult to try to forecast industry conditions that far in advance" and because CertainTeed was unsure about "how much of the 2012 price increase would be realized." Id. ¶ 87. In August 2012, senior leadership at CertainTeed met and concluded that they "would like to announce a 30% price increase for 2013." Id. ¶ 88. On September 13, 2012, after receiving news that National had decided to raise its prices by 30% for 2013, CertainTeed announced the same increase for 2013. Id. ¶¶ 91-92.

VII. Summary Judgment Standard

HN1[] To avoid summary judgment, Plaintiffs must show that a genuine issue of material fact exists as to whether Defendants entered into an anti-competitive agreement. Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984).

HN2[] "[A] non-movant's burden in defending against summary judgment in an antitrust case is no different than in any other case." Petruzzi's IGA Supermarkets, Inc. v. Darling-Delaware Co., Inc., 998 F.2d 1224, 1230 (3d Cir. 1993) (quoting Big Apple BMW, Inc. v. BMW of N. Am., Inc., 974 F.2d 1358. 1363 (3d Cir. 1992)). Thus, as when reviewing any summary judgment motion, we must "view the facts and any reasonable inferences drawn therefrom in the light most favorable to the party opposing summary judgment," considering the evidence as a whole and [9] There are six exceptions, all of which were written by employees of CertainTeed's parent corporation. Exs. 37, 39, 43, 74, 76, 77. These declarations do not indicate that the individuals were aware of an agreement; they simply fail to state lack of awareness while the other declarations state as much prominently.

HN3[] To avoid summary judgment, Plaintiffs must submit evidence that when considered holistically, "'tends to exclude the possibility' that the alleged conspirators acted independently" or interdependently. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986) (quoting Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984)); accord In re Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 357. [*189] "[A] nonmovant plaintiff in a section 1 case does not have to submit direct evidence, i.e., the so-called smoking gun, but can rely solely on circumstantial evidence and the reasonable inferences drawn from such evidence." Petruzzi's, 998 F.2d at 1230; accord Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588.

HN4[] "The extent of what constitutes a reasonable inference [28] in the context of an antitrust case, however, is somewhat different from cases in other branches of the law in that 'antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case.'" In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig., 166 F.3d 112, 124 (3d Cir.1999) (quoting Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588). "[I]n drawing favorable inferences from underlying facts, a court must remember that often a fine line separates unlawful concerted action from legitimate business practices." Petruzzi's, 998 F.2d at 1230. "[E]vidence which is equally consistent with legal and illegal conduct, standing alone, cannot support an inference of antitrust conspiracy." Id. at 1231 (emphasis added).[11]

That said, HN5[] Defendants are "not entitled to summary judgment simply because they demonstrated a plausible rationale for their behavior. Rather, the focus must remain on the evidence proffered by the plaintiff and whether that evidence 'tends to exclude the possibility that [the defendants] were acting [29] independently.'" Id. at 1232 (quoting Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764).

After review of the relevant case law, the following sections will detail the undisputed facts regarding the industry prior to 2011 as well as Plaintiffs' evidence that the manufacturers entered price-related agreements during 2011 and 2012, and related arguments. Subsequently, the Court will apply the asserted factual disputes to the legal principles, addressing the evidence against each Defendant in turn.

VIII. Legal Analysis in Oligopoly Cases

HN6[] The antitrust laws prohibit only overt concerted action. In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350, 359-60 (3d Cir. 2004). Firms are not prohibited from making decisions that are based on the actions of other firms. Id.

It is undisputed that the market for drywall is oligopolistic. Oligopolistic markets tend to be interdependent. Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Fundamentals of Antitrust Law § 14.03 (Wolters Kluwer Law & Business, 4th ed. 2015 supp.). Interdependence is the market state in which market participants' decisions depend on what the participants' believe their competitors will do or their observations of competitors' behavior. Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, § 14.03. HN7[] Oligopolistic markets tend to be interdependent because competitors are more likely to consider each other's actions in markets dominated [30] by few sellers. Thus, though each firm in an oligopoly "may independently decide upon its course of action, any rational decision must take into account the anticipated reaction" of the other firms. In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig., 166 F.3d 112, 122 (3d Cir.1999). Because the firms are aware of what their competitors are doing, "oligopolists' decisions may be interdependent," meaning the decisions were made upon considering competitors' [*190] actions or reactions. Id. (quoting, Areeda, Antitrust Law § 1429 (1986)). But such decisions are nonetheless considered to have been "arrived at independently." Id. (quoting, Areeda, Antitrust Law § 1429 (1986)).

[11] The Court recognizes that much of the evidence in this case is consistent with both Plaintiffs' and Defendants' version of events. That fact alone does not entitle Defendants to summary judgment. Rather, Defendants are entitled to summary judgment only if the evidence is equally consistent with Plaintiffs' and Defendants' narratives. Petruzzi's, 998 F.2d at 1231.

HN8[] Interdependence may sometimes result in conscious parallelism, in which the firms engage in the same behavior because they consider the actions of their competitors, but not because they have overtly agreed to engage in that behavior. In re Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 359. Conscious parallelism may enable "firms in a concentrated market [to] maintain their prices at supracompetitive levels, or even raise them to those levels, without engaging in any overt concerted action." Id. Consciously parallel conduct does not violate antitrust laws. Id. Only actual agreement (i.e., a "conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective") [31] qualifies as an unreasonable restraint of trade in violation of antitrust law. Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984).

HN9[] For Plaintiffs to create a fact issue about whether Defendants entered an agreement, Plaintiffs must present evidence tending to exclude the possibility of independent conduct, including interdependent conduct (e.g., conscious parallelism). In re Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 359. In the Third Circuit, Plaintiffs may show that Defendants' parallel conduct is attributable to an agreement (rather than interdependence) by showing three elements:

1. Defendants' behavior was parallel;
2. Defendants were conscious of each other's conduct and awareness was an element in their decision-making processes;
3. plus factors showing an actual agreement: (1) motive, (2) actions contrary to Defendants' interests, and (3) traditional conspiracy evidence.

Id. at 360 n.11. The third element's list of plus factors is non-exhaustive, but those three factors have been relied on repeatedly by the Third Circuit. Id. at 360.

In their Summary Judgment Motions, Defendants do not meaningfully contest the first two elements. In fact, their defense is that the manufacturers were doing the same things because they were "following the leader," which essentially concedes the first two elements.

But the third [32] element is disputed. Plaintiffs typically establish motive by showing market factors that would be conducive to collusion (e.g., market concentration, high barriers to entry, etc.). E. g., In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 801 F.3d 383, 398 (3d Cir. 2015). Often it is plaintiffs' inability to establish motive (rather than their ability to establish it) that will have the greatest impact on the plaintiffs' case, because HN10[] "the absence of any plausible motive to engage in the conduct charge is highly relevant to whether a 'genuine issue for trial' exists within the meaning of Rule 56(e)." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 596, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986).

"[E]vidence of actions against self-interest means there is evidence of behavior inconsistent with a competitive market." In re Chocolate Confectionary, 801 F.3d at 398. For example, evidence that prices were raised despite no rise in demand or costs might indicate defendants are acting contrary to their interests. In re Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 359.

But HN11[] in oligopolies, even a showing that the relevant market was ripe for collusion and that the defendants raised prices without a rise in demand or costs [*191] will usually be insufficient to rule out interdependent conduct. Id. at 361. "By nature, oligopolistic markets are conducive to price fixing and will often exhibit behavior that would not be expected in competitive markets. Therefore, these factors are neither necessary nor sufficient [33] to preclude summary judgment, at least where the claim is price fixing among oligopolists."[12] In re Chocolate, 801 F.3d at 398. Nonetheless, courts must consider these first two factors because they are relevant and inform the inferences that might be drawn from plaintiffs' other evidence. In re Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 361 n.12.

HN12[] Traditional conspiracy evidence will generally be "[t]he most important evidence" in a price-fixing case involving an oligopoly. In re Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 361 (quoting In re High Fructose Corn Syrup Antitrust Litig., 295

[12] The Third Circuit has indicated that there may be some instances in which evidence of the first two factors would do more than show an interdependent market (e.g., unilateral exchanges of confidential price information). In re Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 361 n.12

F.3d 651, 655 (7th Cir. 2002)). This category of evidence "may involve 'customary indications of traditional conspiracy,' or 'proof that the defendants got together and exchanged assurances of common action or otherwise adopted a common plan even though no meetings, conversations, or exchanged documents are shown.'" Id. at 361 (quoting Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, 243 (2d ed. 2000)).

There are five particular cases in which the Supreme Court and the Third Circuit have developed the law of the plus factors: Matsushita Electric Industrial Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp ., 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986); Petruzzi's IGA Supermarkets, Inc. v. Darling-Delaware Co., Inc., 998 F.2d 1224 (3d Cir. 1993); In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig., 166 F.3d 112 (3d Cir. 1999); In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350 (3d Cir. 2004); and In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 801 F.3d 383 (3d Cir. 2015). The Court has relied heavily on these cases in reaching its decision today.

A. Matsushita Elec. Indust. Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp. [34]

In Matsushita Electric Industrial Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986), the plaintiffs, manufacturers and sellers of consumer electronic products, sued numerous competitor-manufacturers who were headquartered in Japan. Id. at 577. The plaintiffs' theorized that defendants had engaged in a "scheme to raise, fix and maintain artificially high prices for television receivers sold by [defendants] in Japan and, at the same time, to fix and maintain low prices for television receivers exported to and sold in the United States." Id. at 577 (quoting In re Japanese Elec. Prods. Antitrust Litig., 723 F.2d 238, 251 (3d Cir. 1983)).

The Supreme Court held that plaintiffs had not submitted sufficient evidence to survive the defendant's summary judgment motion, stressing that the Court was unwilling to make inferences of conspiracy from the ambiguous evidence offered by plaintiffs in light of defendants' lack of motive to conspire. Id. at 593-94. The Court explained that "[l]ack of motive bears on the range of permissible conclusions that might be drawn from ambiguous evidence: if petitioners had no rational economic motive to conspire, and if their conduct is consistent with other, equally plausible explanations, the conduct does not give rise to an inference of conspiracy." Id. at 596-97.

B. Petruzzi's IGA Supermarkets, Inc. v. Darling-Delaware Co., Inc. [35]

In Petruzzi's IGA Supermarkets, Inc. v. Darling-Delaware Co., Inc., 998 F.2d 1224 [*192] (3d Cir. 1993), the Third Circuit affirmed in part and reversed in part a district court's grant of defendants' summary judgment motion. The plaintiffs had accused the defendants, companies in the oligopolistic fat and bone rendering industry, of conspiring to allocate customers and entering various other agreements related to enforcement of the underlying conspiracy. Id. at 1228.

The court distinguished the Petruzzi's plaintiffs from those in Matsushita, explaining that the Petruzzi's plaintiffs' theory of conspiracy made "perfect economic sense" because it would "enable [defendants] to make profits that the free market would not allow them, in both the short-run and the long-run." Id. at 1232.

The court also concluded that two of the three defendants acted against self-interest in a way that was "not attributable to interdependence," explaining that "[l]eaving all other things the same, absent an agreement it does not make economic sense for defendants not to bid on an account unless they have some problem like capacity or they know that the existing price is too high." Id. at 1245-46.

Although it appears that the plaintiffs' showing of actions against self-interest might have been sufficient standing alone to avoid summary judgment, [36] the plaintiffs had also submitted substantial traditional conspiracy evidence against two of the defendants, including testimony from employees referring to a "code" that defendants had to not solicit each other's clients; recordings of secretly taped conversations of one of the defendants in which that defendant made reference to not taking other people's accounts; and expert testimony concluding that the economic data was consistent with a conspiracy. Id. at 1233 - 34, 1236, 1244. Considering all of the factors, the Third Circuit reversed the grant of summary judgment for these two defendants.

As to the remaining defendant, the court acknowledged that defendant had "made claims of capacity problems" and there was evidence that the firm actually took some accounts from the other two defendants. Id. at 1245. Thus, the court affirmed summary judgment as to the third defendant.

C. In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig.

Six years after Petruzzi's, the Third Circuit addressed allegations of price fixing in the oligopolistic baby food manufacturing industry, in In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig., 166 F.3d 112 (3d Cir. 1999). The plaintiffs argued that the defendants had engaged in an 18-year price-fixing conspiracy to "fix, raise, and maintain wholesale prices and price levels [37] of baby food in the United States." Id. at 116. The district court granted the defendants' summary judgment motion, and the Third Circuit affirmed. Id. at 116.

The plaintiffs had submitted an expert report to show that the defendants had motive to conspire and acted against self-interest. Id. at 134. But the court gave the expert report little to no weight given the expert's admission that his opinion was based on the assumption that defendants had conspired and that he had not "looked at whether the baby food industry fits the model of manufacturers following in their pricing practices the price leader." Id.

As further evidence of the defendants' actions against self-interest, the plaintiffs had also relied on (1) an internal defendant memorandum in which an employee referred to "our truce" and (2) one manufacturer's unwillingness to enter into new markets. As to the "truce" reference, the court explained that "the single use of the term in a highly competitive business environment and in the face of continuing fierce competition is as consistent with independent behavior as it is with price fixing." [*193] Id. at 127. As to the manufacturer's choice not to enter new markets, the court noted that only that manufacturer "was in a [38] position to decide whether it was in its best interest to make such commitments" in light of the "substantial capital expenditures and resource commitments" that entering a new market would require. Id.

The court also placed little weight on the plaintiffs' traditional conspiracy evidence, which included documentation of industry chatter, manufacturer notes about anticipated competitor price movements, and a manufacturer's notes indicating its intent to achieve "parity" with a competitor's price. Id. at 130-31, 133.

D. In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig.

In In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litigation, 385 F.3d 350 (3d Cir. 2004), the plaintiffs argued that manufacturers in the oligopolistic flat glass industry had conspired to fix the prices of flat glass and auto replacement glass. Id. at 354.[13] All of the defendants except one, PPG, settled with plaintiffs. PPG then filed for summary judgment, which the district court granted. Id. at 353. The Third Circuit reversed the grant of summary judgment as to the flat glass allegations, but affirmed summary judgment as to the alleged auto replacement glass price-fixing conspiracy. Id. at 356, 378.

[13] Notably, prior to the initiation of the private suits against the flat glass manufacturers, two executives of one of the industry's manufacturers were indicted on unrelated criminal [39] charges. In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litigation, 385 F.3d 350, 354 (3d Cir. 2004). Related to that proceeding, they claimed their employer (Libbey-Owens-Ford, "LOF") "had conspired with its competitors to fix the price of the glass products it sold." Id. LOF then submitted an admission to the Department of Justice admitting to as much, but not specifically naming its co-conspirators. Id. Although the Flat Glass court considered LOF's proffer to the Department of Justice, it noted that the evidence submitted by the plaintiffs was sufficient to warrant reversal of summary judgment regardless of LOF's proffer. Id at 363 n.14.

In reversing summary judgment, the court specifically considered the plaintiffs' plus-factor arguments as to motive, actions against self-interest, and traditional conspiracy evidence. The court concluded that the plaintiffs had shown motive in part because the demand for flat glass was in decline at the time of the alleged conspiracy and the industry experienced excess capacity. Id. at 361. The court also determined that plaintiffs had shown that the defendants had acted against their self-interest because "no evidence suggest[ed] that the increase in list prices was correlated with any changes in costs or demand." Id. at 362. Nonetheless, the court held that although the plaintiffs' [40] first two plus factor allegations indicated "that the price increases were collusive," the plaintiffs had failed to show "whether the collusion was merely interdependent or the result of actual agreement." Id. at 362. Thus, the court turned to traditional conspiracy evidence.

The Flat Glass court concluded that plaintiffs' traditional conspiracy evidence was sufficient. Plaintiffs submitted evidence showing that the manufacturers were in possession of each other's price information in advance of announcements, which the court distinguished from the price exchange evidence submitted by the Baby Food plaintiffs because "the exchanges of information [in Flat Glass were] more tightly linked with concerted behavior and therefore they appear[ed] more purposive." Id. at 368-69. Moreover, "several of the key documents [in Flat Glass] emphasize[d] that the relevant price increases were not economically justified or supportable, but required competitors [*194] to hold the line." Id. at 369. Other documents suggested knowledge of "the plans of multiple competitors," as opposed to just a single one. Id. at 369. And "[p]redictions of price behavior were followed by actual price changes." Id. at 369.

E. In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig.

Most recently, the Third Circuit clarified [41] the plus-factor analysis in In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 801 F.3d 383 (3d Cir. 2015). Direct and indirect purchaser classes sued the three major chocolate manufactures, who together controlled more than 75% of the domestic chocolate market. Id. at 391. The court concluded the defendants had motive to conspire "[g]iven the market concentration and high barriers to entry." Id. at 398. The court relied primarily on the plaintiffs' experts to conclude that defendants had acted against their self-interest, relying on the experts' opinions that the cost increases in the chocolate market could not explain the price increases. Id. at 399. But, as stated in Flat Glass, the court explained that "evidence of a price increase disconnected from changes in costs or demand only raises the question: was the anticompetitive price increase the result of lawful, rational interdependence or of an unlawful price-fixing conspiracy?" Id. at 400. The court concluded the plaintiffs had failed to point to evidence that went beyond interdependence. Id. at 401.

Thus, as with Flat Glass, the most important evidence was the traditional conspiracy evidence. But here, the court found that evidence wanting. There were two internal memos from Hershey reflecting that Hershey had advance notice of price increases scheduled by Mars [42] and Nestle USA. Id. at 407-08. But the court did not give much weight to those documents because the plaintiffs had "no direct or strong circumstantial evidence that the information came from Hershey's competitors, much less their upper-level executives." Id. at 408. There were three email exchanges among the competitors, but the court did not give them much weight, explaining that "sporadic communications among individuals without pricing authority are insufficient to create a reasonable inference of a conspiracy." Id. at 409. The court also noted that the timing of the communications and the actual price increases were not suspicious. Id. at 407, 409. Plaintiffs attempted to rely on defendants' departure from their pre-conspiracy conduct as traditional evidence, but the changes they cited were not "radical" or "abrupt" enough to create an inference greater than interdependence. Id. at 410 (quoting Toys "R" Us, Inc. v. FTC, 221 F.3d 928, 935 (7th Cir. 2000)).[14] [14] The Chocolate court dedicated most of its traditional conspiracy evidence analysis to the plaintiffs' evidence of a Canadian conspiracy that mirrored the conspiracy alleged by the plaintiffs. Id. at 403. Because Plaintiffs here have not submitted any comparable evidence, the Court does not discuss that analysis.

IX. Undisputed Background Facts

A. Wallboard Industry Background

Wallboard is a building-material panel consisting of a gypsum core pressed between sheets of paperboard. It is used in the construction of interior walls and ceilings for residential and commercial buildings. There are a variety of types of wallboard, varying in thickness, length, core formulations, and applications. Some product lines include different properties, such as fire-resistance, mold-resistance, and impact-resistance. The core ingredient of [*195] wallboard is gypsum, but other costs for manufacturers include paper, energy, and labor.

1. Market Share

From 2010 through 2012, there were eight manufactures of gypsum wallboard located in the United States: American, CertainTeed, Lafarge, National, PABCO, TIN, USG, and Georgia-Pacific.[15] Manufacturer market share varied from region to region, but nationally each manufacturer's market share in 2011 was approximately[16] as follows:

- USG: 24-26%
- National: 21-26%
- CertainTeed: 10. 3%-11.7%
- American: 10%
- Lafarge: 10%
- Georgia-Pacific: 10%
- TIN: 7%[17]

There are multiple distribution channels in the wallboard industry, and Defendants typically sell to the following customers, though no Defendant sells to all of the customer types: (1) gypsum specialty dealers,[18] (2) independent building material dealers[19] and lumber yards, (3) mass merchandisers, and (4) manufactured housing, (5) lumber yard buy-groups,[20] (6) two-step distributors,[21] (7) manufacturers that use the drywall to fabricate specialty products, and (8) contractors. Plaintiffs in the Direct Purchaser Action belong to one of the customer groups. Plaintiffs in the Indirect Purchaser Action purchased wallboard from at least one of the listed customer groups.

2. Demand

[15] Georgia-Pacific was never a party to the Direct or Indirect Purchaser Actions, and [44] USG and TIN have settled.

[16] The parties disagree slightly about the precise percentage. The Court has indicated a range to capture the positions of both parties.

[17] Georgia-Pacific acquired the assets of TIN in July 2013. These numbers reflect market shares at the time of the events giving rise to this case, which predated the acquisition.

[18] Gypsum Specialty Dealers serve the commercial construction and new residential construction industries and sell wallboard to builders, contractors, and sub-contractors.

[19] Independent building material dealers [45] and lumber yards sell other building materials in addition to wallboard.

[20] Lumber yard buy-groups are collections of lumber yards that attempt to leverage their combined buying power.

[21] Two-step distributors purchase wallboard and other construction materials and sell those products to lumber yards.

Demand for wallboard is directly related to the level of activity in the construction industry. The early 2000s saw the end of the housing boom in 2006 and the Great Recession. As a result, demand for new residential and commercial construction in 2011 was approximately 65% less than it was in 2006. The downturn in the construction industry caused the prices of manufacturers' wallboard products to drop precipitously. As a result, manufacturers shuttered some of their plants. The total number of operating plants in the United States in the mid-2000s was 77 plants, but during 2011 and 2012, there were only 60 operating plants. Ex. 123.

3. Capacity

The parties have offered two ways to measure capacity (and thus supply) in the wallboard industry. Theoretical, or "nameplate," capacity is the capacity of a wallboard plant if it runs seven days a week, 24 hours a day. The theoretical capacity [46] of the entire wallboard industry in the United States is approximately 33. 5 billion square feet per year. Effective capacity, or [*196] "crewed capacity," is the capacity of a wallboard plant as it is presently staffed. Defendants urge that the proper measure of supply in the wallboard industry is as a percentage of the crewed capacity. Ex. 48 (Powers decl.) ¶ 39; Ex. 22 (Salah dep.) at 196:4-16, 197:23:11. Plaintiffs, with the support of their experts, counter that the proper measure of supply is as a percentage of the theoretical capacity. Pls. Response Br. at 93-94.

4. Job Quotes

At least prior to 2011, manufacturers offered their customers a variety of rebates, discounts, credits, and other price reductions. Thus, regardless of the list price, the actual price that customers paid widely varied.

One price negotiation tool was "job quoting." The practice of job quotes began over 30 years ago to help commercial contractors bid on large jobs. Typically, manufacturers provided job quotes for commercial jobs requiring one million square feet of wallboard or more. Manufactures gave distributors a quote for the entire job ("job quote") so that the distributor's customers, the contractors, could [47] big on projects 12 to 18 months in advance. The use of job quotes grew from their inception in the 1980s, and by the 1990 s, they were no longer limited to large commercial projects.[22] The job quote practice was easily abused to the detriment of at least some of the manufacturers.[23] The abuses were exacerbated by the recession. Additionally, job quotes were a one-way liability for manufacturers because customers were not required to buy on the quote. Thus, if the market price dropped below the quote price, customers could simply buy drywall using the market price.

B. Trade Association Membership & Meetings

Plaintiffs have noted numerous instances in which Defendants' senior leadership were in the same place at the same time. For instance, the drywall and building materials [48] industries have trade shows and conventions that are attended by customers, manufacturers, and dealers.[24] And during the class period, all Defendants belonged to the same trade association, the Gypsum Association, which hosted events attended by Defendants.[25]

[22] Plaintiffs object to the use of Defendants' evidence that stems from before 2010 because the Court limited the discovery period to 2010-2013. The Court acknowledges Plaintiffs' objection but the facts merely provide background information.

[23] Plaintiffs dispute that USG's customers abused job quotes, but they do not provide evidence to create a fact dispute about whether the other manufacturers were impacted by job quote abuses.

[24] Plaintiffs submit evidence that Defendants had a presence at the following trade shows and customer-sponsored events: Association of the Wall and Ceiling Industry's ("AWCI") Interior Exterior Commercial Construction ("INTEX") Expo in April 2011 and 2012 and AWCI's Industry Executives' Conference & Committee Week in September 2011 and 2012 (PSOF ¶¶ 447-51); Global Gypsum Conference in October 2011 (PSOF ¶ 463); the Annual Meeting of AMAROK (a group of gypsum specialty dealers), held in April 2011 and 2012; the semi-annual meetings of the Drake Group (association of gypsum special dealers),

[*197] But it is now cannon that HN13[] evidence of competitors meeting together, without more, is insufficient to raise inferences of conspiracy without additional evidence. E. g., Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 567 n. 12, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007); In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 801 F.3d 383, 409 (3d Cir. 2015); Petruzzi's IGA Supermarkets, Inc. v. Darling-Delaware Co., Inc., 998 F.2d 1224, 1242 n.15 (3d Cir. 1993); Fragle & Sons Beverage Co. v. Dill, 760 F.2d 469, 473 (3d Cir. 1985). That said, opportunities to conspire may be probative of a conspiracy when meetings of Defendants are closely followed in time by suspicious actions or records. See In re Text Messaging Antitrust Litig., 782 F.3d 867, 878 (7th Cir. 2015) (explaining that plaintiffs' evidence of opportunities to conspire would have been "more compelling if the immediate sequel to any of these meetings had been a simultaneous or near-simultaneous price increase by the defendants"); Fragle & Sons Beverage Co., 760 F.2d at 474 (concluding, in a non-oligopoly case, that plaintiffs had submitted sufficient evidence to survive summary judgment in a refusal-to-deal conspiracy, where the plaintiff showed that a dealer-defendant agreed to sell to plaintiff and later repudiated that agreement and that an intervening meeting took place between the dealer-defendant and plaintiff's direct competitor); In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., 504 F.Supp. 2d 38, 59 (E.D. Pa. 2007) ("Importantly, plaintiffs do not offer their evidence of opportunity to [50] conspire in isolation.").

To the extent Plaintiffs have submitted evidence of opportunities to conspire that are closely linked in time with suspicious documents or changes in pricing practices, the Court will consider that evidence below. But, the Court will not give weight to any evidence that shows a bare opportunity to conspire, without more.

X. Bourjaily and Application of the Co-Conspirator Hearsay Exception

HN14[] In considering whether Plaintiffs have submitted sufficient evidence to survive summary judgment, the Court may consider only admissible evidence. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56 (c). This case involves multiple Defendants who are alleged to have been in a conspiracy. And most of Plaintiffs' evidence involves internal corporate communications from which Plaintiffs contend agreement might be inferred, rather than direct communications among Defendants. As such, the chief evidentiary question the Court must address is whether the hearsay statements made by one Defendant are admissible against the other Defendants. More specifically, are the statements made by one Defendant attributable to all Defendants by virtue of the co-conspirator exception to the rule against hearsay?

In answering this question, the Court finds [51] it helpful to review the evolution of the co-conspirator exception and its application in the Third Circuit, particularly in civil antitrust cases.

A. Brief History of the Co-Conspirator Exemption

Before the adoption of the Federal Rules of Evidence in 1975, which codified the co-conspirator hearsay exemption, federal courts had long applied the doctrine that the declarations of one conspirator made to a third party are admissible against his co-conspirators so long as the declarations were made in furtherance of the objects of the conspiracy. See Lutwak v. United States, 344 U.S. 604, 617-18, 73 S. Ct. 481, 97 L. Ed. 593 (1953); Logan v. United States, 144 U.S. 263, 308-09, 12 S. Ct. 617, 36 L. Ed. 429 (1892).

[*198] In Glasser v. United States, 315 U.S. 60, 74, 62 S. Ct. 457, 86 L. Ed. 680 (1942), the Supreme Court winnowed the viability of the co-conspirator exemption by providing that "such declarations are admissible over the objection of an alleged co-conspirator, who was not present when they were made, only if there is proof aliunde that held in February 2011 and 2012 and September 2012 (PSOF ¶¶ 467 - 71); the Annual Show of ENAP (buying group) in March 2011 and 2012 (PSOF ¶¶ 472-74); the annual show of Guardian (for-profit buying group) in January 2011 and 2012 (PSOF ¶¶ 475-77); the semi-annual shows of LMC (collective buying group) held in March 2011 and March 2012 (PSOF ¶¶ 478-80). [49]

[25] Plaintiffs submit evidence that Defendants had a presence at Gypsum Association events in March 2011, June 2011, October 2011, March 2012, July 2012, and October 2012. PSOF ¶¶ 452-62.

he is connected with the conspiracy." "Otherwise," the Court continued, "hearsay would lift itself by its own bootstraps to the level of competent evidence." Id. The Court reiterated this so called "bootstrapping-rule" again in United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 94 S. Ct. 3090, 41 L. Ed. 2d 1039 (1974). In Nixon, the Court provided that "[d]eclarations by one defendant may also be admissible against other defendants upon a sufficient showing, by independent evidence, of a conspiracy [52] among one of more other defendants and the declarant and if the declarations at issue were in furtherance of that conspiracy." Id. at 701 (emphasis added). In a footnote, the Court explained "by independent evidence" as requiring "substantial, independent evidence of the conspiracy, at least enough to take the question to the jury." Id. at 701 n. 14.[26]

B. Impact of Federal Rules of Evidence

With the advent of the Federal Rules of Evidence in 1975, what had been a clearly articulated prohibition on bootstrapping was called into question in the Circuit Courts. HN15[] Federal Rule of Evidence 801(d)(2)(E), which codifies the co-conspirator exception, provides that a statement is not hearsay if it is "offered against an opposing party and . . . was made by the party's coconspirator during and in furtherance of the conspiracy." Demonstrating a conspiracy, [53] and the declarant's and non-offering party's participation therein, are preliminary questions of fact for purposes of admissibility under Rule 801(d)(2)(E). Fed. R. Evid. 104(a). Rule 104(a) provides that "[t]he court must decide any preliminary question about whether . . . evidence is admissible. In so deciding, the court is not bound by evidence rules, except those on privilege." Id.

Accordingly, courts began to question the prohibition on bootstrapping, musing that, under the new Rules, a court could consider the proffered hearsay statements, in addition to the independent evidence of conspiracy, in determining whether a conspiracy existed for purposes of the co-conspirator exception. See, e.g., James R. Snyder Co., Inc. v. Associated Gen. Contractors of Am., Detroit Chapter, Inc., 677 F.2d 1111, 1117 (6th Cir. 1982) ("The out-of-court statements themselves now may be used to convince the trial judge of the conspiracy's existence and the defendant's participation in it."); United States v. Petrozziello, 548 F.2d 20, 23 n. 2 (1st Cir. 1977) (recognizing that, while Glasser and earlier case law rejected bootstrapping, the new Rule "suggests that a conspiracy may be proved by the very statement seeking admittance.").

The Third Circuit engaged in an extended analysis of the effect the new Federal Rules of Evidence had on the Glasser rule In re Japanese Elec. Prods. Antitrust Litig. (Japanese Elec. Prod.), 723 F.2d 238, 259-66 (3d Cir. 1983), reversed on other grounds sub nom. Matsushita Elec. Indus. [*199] Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U. S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986).[27] In that case, the plaintiffs, manufacturers and [54] sellers of consumer electronic products, sued numerous competitor-manufacturers, most of whom were headquartered in Japan. Japanese Elec. Prods., 723 F.2d at 250. The plaintiffs alleged, among other things, violations of Sherman Act §§ 1 and 2. Id. The district court judge[28] made evidentiary rulings excluding most of the plaintiffs' evidence that had been proffered in opposition to the defendants' summary judgment motions. The Court applied the Glasser rule and concluded that there was no admissible evidence that could raise an issue of fact as to the existence of a conspiracy in violation of Sherman Act § 1. Id. at 256. Thus, the court granted summary judgment on all of the plaintiffs' remaining claims and entered final judgment in favor of the defendants. Id. at 256-67.

[26] The lower federal courts uniformly interpreted this statement as requiring a hearsay proponent in the co-conspirator context to present independent evidence of the conspiracy, without any reference to the hearsay statement itself. See, e.g., United States v. Rodrigues, 491 F.2d 663, 666 (3d Cir. 1974) ("In order to be properly admitted under the co-conspirator exception to the hearsay rule, there must be independent evidence linking the declarant to the defendant.").

[27] As indicated by the citation, In re Japanese Electronic Litigation is the Third Circuit opinion that was reversed by Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986), a case that this Court has already discussed in the section on legal analysis in oligopoly cases.

[28] The judge was Edward R. Becker, who later became Chief Judge of the Third Circuit Court of Appeals.

On appeal, the plaintiffs challenged the district court's exclusion of the purported statements of co-conspirators. Id. at 260-66. The plaintiffs argued that the trial court erred by applying [55] the Glasser rule because the Federal Rules of Evidence had abrogated the Glasser rule. Id. at 260. The Third Circuit disagreed, concluding that neither Federal Rule of Evidence 104(a) nor Federal Rule of Evidence 801(d)(2)(E) "was intended to change the settled law that there must be independent proof aliunde of the existence of and membership in a conspiracy before coconspirator statements are admissible against a party." Id. at 261.

As this truncated history demonstrates, the Courts of Appeal were in disagreement as to whether the enactment of the Federal Rules of Evidence had indeed rendered the Glasser rule obsolete. The Supreme Court finally had cause to confront the issue in Bourjaily v. United States, 483 U.S. 171, 107 S. Ct. 2775, 97 L. Ed. 2d 144 (1987).

C. Bourjaily Ends the Rule Against Bootstrapping

In Bourjaily, which is the Rosetta Stone for determining admissibility of co-conspirator statements, the Supreme Court squarely confronted the issue of "whether the court must determine by independent evidence that the conspiracy existed and that the defendant and the declarant were members of the conspiracy" for purposes of determining admissibility under Rule 801(d)(2)(E). Bourjaily, 483 U.S. at 173. The facts of Bourjaily were straightforward:

> In May 1984, Clarence Greathouse, an informant working for the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), arranged to sell a kilogram of cocaine to [56] Angelo Lonardo. Lonardo agreed that he would find individuals to distribute the drug. When the sale became imminent, Lonardo stated in a tape-recorded telephone conversation that he had a "gentleman friend" who had some questions to ask about the cocaine. In a subsequent telephone call, Greathouse spoke to the "friend" about the quality of the drug and the price. Greathouse then spoke again with Lonardo, and the two arranged the details of the purchase. They [*200] agreed that the sale would take place in a designated hotel parking lot, and Lonardo would transfer the drug from Greathouse's car to the "friend," who would be waiting in the parking lot in his own car. Greathouse proceeded with the transaction as planned, and FBI agents arrested Lonardo and petitioner immediately after Lonardo placed a kilogram of cocaine into petitioner's car in the hotel parking lot. In petitioner's car, the agents found over $20,000 in cash.

Id. at 174.

Mr. Bourjaily was charged with conspiring to distribute cocaine and possession of cocaine with intent to distribute. Id. At trial, the Government introduced, over Mr. Bourjaily's objection, Mr. Lonardo's telephone statements about his "friend' s" participation in the contemplated [57] transaction. Id. In holding that Mr. Lonardo's out-of-court statements satisfied Rule 801(d)(2)(E) and were not hearsay, the district court found that the Government had established, by a preponderance of the evidence, that a conspiracy involving Messrs. Lonardo and Bourjaily existed. Id. In so finding, the district court considered both the events in the parking lot and Lonardo's out-of-court telephone statements. Id. Mr. Bourjaily was ultimately convicted on both counts. Id.

On appeal, Mr. Bourjaily argued that the district court erred by considering Mr. Lonardo's out-of-court statements to determine whether a conspiracy existed and whether the defendant was a member of it for purposes of Rule 801(d)(2)(E). Id. at 176. Mr. Bourjaily argued that the district court violated a strict reading of Glasser, namely that "a court should not consider hearsay statements at all in determining preliminary facts under Rule 801(d)(2)(E). Id. at 177.

The Supreme Court acknowledged that a majority of the Courts of Appeals had adopted this strict interpretation of Glasser, but noted that "[b]oth Glasser and Nixon . . . were decided before Congress enacted the Federal Rules of Evidence in 1975." Id. at 177. HN16[] According to the plain meaning of Rule 104(a), courts may make preliminary factual determinations [58] "by considering any evidence it wishes, unhindered by considerations of admissibility." Id. at 178. The Court acknowledged that "[o]ut-of-court statements made by anyone, including putative co-conspirators, are often hearsay. Even if they are, they may be considered, Glasser and the bootstrapping rule notwithstanding." Id. The Court in Bourjaily did not decide whether a trial court could rely solely upon hearsay statements to determine that a conspiracy had been established by a preponderance of the evidence. Id. at 181. Rather, the Court's holding merely provided that a court, in making a preliminary factual determination pursuant to Rule 801(d)(2)(E), can consider the proffered hearsay statements themselves. Id. A subsequent amendment to the Federal Rules of Evidence in 1997 clarified that "[t]he statement must be considered but does not by itself establish . . . the existence of the conspiracy or participation in it under (E)." Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(E).

D. Admissibility of Hearsay Statements in Antitrust Suits Under the Co-conspirator Exception Post-Bourjaily

HN17[] In the Third Circuit post-Bourjaily, "[i]n order for an out-of-court statement to be admissible pursuant to Rule 801(d)(2)(E), the district court must find by a preponderance of the evidence that: (1) a conspiracy existed; [59] (2) the declarant and the party against whom the statement is offered were members of the conspiracy; [*201] (3) the statement was made in the course of the conspiracy; and (4) the statement was made in furtherance of the conspiracy." In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350, 375 (3d Cir. 2004) (quoting United States v. Ellis, 156 F.3d 493, 496 (3d Cir. 1998)). A district court's preliminary finding will not be disturbed on appeal unless it is clearly erroneous. Bourjaily, 483 U.S. at 181; City of Tuscaloosa v. Harcros Chemicals, Inc., 158 F.3d 548 (11th Cir. 1998). Alternatively, a district court has "considerable discretion" to admit the statements conditionally, subject to their later being connected up. United States v. Mobile Materials, Inc., 881 F.2d 866, 869 (10th Cir. 1989) (quoting United States v. Hernandez, 829 F.2d 988, 994 n.6 (10th Cir. 1987)).

In the antitrust context, plaintiffs and prosecutors commonly seek to introduce the statements of purported co-conspirators that help to establish the existence of an agreement in violation of the Sherman Act. Two cases following the Supreme Court's decision in Bourjaily explain the Third Circuit's use of the co-conspirator exception in civil antitrust cases.

1. Big Apple BMW, Inv. v. BMW of N. Am., Inc.

In Big Apple BMW, Inc. v. BMW of North America, Inc., 974 F.2d 1358 (3d Cir. 1992), applicants for several BMW franchises ("applicants") sued the U.S. distributor for BMW automobiles ("BMW distributor"), alleging that the BMW distributor and its dealers conspired to exclude the applicants from becoming dealers, in violation of the Sherman Act.

The applicant-plaintiffs based [60] their claim on the fact that they had been denied BMW dealerships in the Tri-State area on each of the three times they had applied for them. The applicants argued that the area dealers, who would have been the applicants' competitors, persuaded the BMW distributors to deny the applicants' application so that the dealers could avoid price competition. Although the evidence underlying the first two denials was relevant to the suit, the Third Circuit addressed the co-conspirator exception to the hearsay rule in connection with only the evidence underlying the third denial.

The third denial occurred after the applicants had reached a written buy-sell agreement with Philadelphia BMW dealer Irvin Green. Id. at 1370. This agreement was made contingent on the applicants securing BMW and Volkswagen franchises by a certain date. Id. at 1371. But the BMW distributor once again denied the applicants' franchise application, and Mr. Green ultimately sold his BMW franchise to an existing BMW dealer. Id. at 1372.

The applicants claimed that they were denied a BMW dealership due to area dealers' concerns about price competition. In support of this theory, the applicants proffered the testimony of Bruce Braverman, the applicants' lease [61] manager. Id. at 1372. Mr. Braverman's testimony took two forms, both of which the district court excluded as inadmissible hearsay.

First, Mr. Braverman testified at his deposition to several statements allegedly made to him by Don Mitchell, a BMW leasing representative:

> Don Mitchell told me that the BMW dealers in the area would not let [the applicants] get the franchise because they were afraid that [the applicants'] reputation of selling cars cheaper than everybody else was not something that [the BMW dealers] wanted to get involved with. [The BMW dealers] didn't want to be involved in price competition. They wanted to keep their price levels where they were and that [sic] they were going to do what they could to make sure that [the applicants] did not get the franchise.

[*202] Id. Furthermore, Mr. Braverman testified that BMW's leasing representative > indicated to [Mr. Braverman] that he had spoken to dealers. The dealers, it was the dealers who did not want [the applicants] to get the franchise, it wasn't BMW who had rejected them. . . . [I]t seemed like it was a conspiracy of the dealers in the tri-state area that didn't want [the applicants] to get that franchise. I don't think BMW cared.

Id. Second, the [62] applicants proffered a memorandum memorializing Mr. Braverman's alleged conversation with the BMW leasing agent.[29]

The Third Circuit reversed the district court's evidentiary finding, concluding first that the leasing agent's statement was made as a representative of BMW subsidiaries and therefore bound the BMW distributor as the corporate parent. Id. at 1373. Accordingly, under Rule 801(d)(2)(D), Mr. Mitchell's statements to Mr. Braverman were admissible. Id.

The Third Circuit then applied the co-conspirator exception to hold that the various dealer statements[30] to the BMW leasing agent were also admissible. Id. at 1374. The court cited Bourjaily for the premise that a court "may look to independent evidence plus the statement itself for evidence of a conspiracy." Id. The court also explained that "mere association" would be insufficient evidence to establish the existence of a conspiracy and the declarant and defendant's connection to it, but "timing, circumstances, or a series of meetings," may prove sufficient. Id. at 1372-74. With these [63] principles in mind, the court concluded that "the [applicants] ha[d] proffered evidence to show concerted action in violation of the Sherman Act," and that therefore, "they ha[d] demonstrated the requisite conspiracy for admissibility under Rule 801(d)(2)(E)."[31] Id. Thus, the Third Circuit concluded that the evidence was admissible. Id. at 1374.

2. In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig.

The Third Circuit most recently addressed Rule 801(d)(2)(E) in the context of civil antitrust suits in In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350 (3d Cir. 2004). Although the court affirmed summary judgment as to the alleged conspiracy to fix automotive replacement glass, it reversed as to the flat glass price-fixing conspiracy. Id. at 369. After summarizing the evidence that, when considered as a whole, allowed the plaintiffs to move forward on their

[29] The Court notes National's objection to the admissibility of Ex. 1515 under the hearsay exceptions due to the memorandum containing the subjective impressions of the analyst. The Court disagrees. See Big Apple BMW, 974 F.2d at 1372-74; United States v. SKW Metals & Alloys, Inc., 195 F.3d 83, 88-89 (2d Cir. 1999).

[30] The excerpts from Mr. Braverman's testimony that are presented here do not specifically identify the dealers. But, in light of other evidence presented in the case, the Third Circuit concluded that that the identity of the dealers implicated by Mr. Mitchell's statement was sufficiently clear.

[31] The BMW distributor also made an additional argument relevant to the exclusion of this evidence. Because the BMW leasing agent categorically denied ever making the statements, the BMW distributor attempted to exclude (1) Mr. Braverman's recollection of the conversation with the BMW leasing agent and (2) the dealers' underlying communications with the BMW leasing agent. The Third Circuit rejected this argument, noting that the admissibility of co-conspirator statements under Rule 801(d)(2)(E) "is premised upon our adversarial system rather than in reliance upon indicia of reliability or trustworthiness," and it [64] is "the factfinder [who] must decide which of the diametrically opposed witnesses is truthful." Id.

flat glass price-fixing claim against the defendant-appellee PPG, the Court turned to a number of evidentiary rulings the district court had made. Id. at 370. [*203] One such ruling was the district court's exclusion of two categories of handwritten notes produced by Ronald Skeddle, the former President and Chief Executive of Libbey-Owens-Ford Company ("LOF"), a flat glass manufacturer that was not party to the suit.

On appeal, the Third Circuit considered whether the notes were admissible under the co-conspirator exception to the rules against hearsay. In making its Rule 104 finding, the district court had concluded that there was insufficient evidence from which a jury could conclude that PPG entered into an [65] agreement to fix prices. In reviewing the district court's grant of summary judgment, the Third Circuit had already concluded that a jury could find that PPG entered into an agreement. Based on the Third Circuit's opinion in Big Apple BMW, one would have expected this to be the end of the matter.

But, the Third Circuit explained that it could not conclude whether the district court abused its discretion, explaining that "simply because a jury could find by a preponderance of the evidence that PPG entered into a conspiracy, it is not the case that the District Court must find that plaintiffs showed by a preponderance of the evidence that PPG entered into an agreement." Id. at 375-76. The Court then stated:

> Any particular factual determination requires making a number of more particularized factual determinations and weighing the relevant importance of those determinations. And two factfinders could feasibly reach different conclusion [sic], especially under a preponderance of the evidence standard.

Id. at 376.

In so clarifying, the Third Circuit appeared to guard against the kind of bootstrapping employed in Big Apple BMW. However, the Court closed its discussion of the co-conspirator exception with a reminder [66] that, "[t]o be sure, however, 'the Federal Rules of Evidence are to be liberally construed in favor of admissibility.'" Id. (quoting United States v. Pelullo, 964 F.2d 193, 204 (3d Cir. 1992)).

E. Role of the Co-Conspirator Exception in this Case

It is Plaintiffs' burden to show, by a preponderance of the evidence, that Rule 801(d)(2)(E) requirements have been met. Abiding by the Third Circuit's holding in Flat Glass on the district court's obligations under Rule 104, this Court will make Rule 104 findings relevant to the admissibility of statements under Rule 801 (d)(2)(E). Those findings will be made following this Court's presentation of the chronology of material facts, and Rule 104 findings will be made separately from and prior to any findings on Plaintiffs' ability to withstand the summary judgment motion.

HN18[] The Rules of Evidence are to be liberally construed in favor of admissibility. To that end, the Court notes that it "may admit the proposed evidence on the condition that the proof be introduced later." Fed. R. Evid. 104(b). And the Court recognizes its wide berth in conditionally admitting co-conspirator statements at the summary judgment stage. See United States v. Mobile Materials, Inc., 881 F.2d 866, 869 (10th Cir. 1989).[32] The Court will exercise this option.

[32] See also United States v. Misle Bus & Equip. Co., 967 F.2d 1227, 1233 (8th Cir. 1992) (noting that the district court acted properly when it admitted co-conspirator statements conditionally and then, at close [67] of evidence, specifically found that the government had met its burden in satisfying the requirements of Bourjaily); *ZF Meritor LLC v. Eaton Corp., No. 6-623, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 83409, 2009 WL 2920851 at 2 (D. Del. Sept. 14, 2009) (admitting, with conditions, co-conspirator statements); *Consol. Credit Agency v. Equifax, Inc., No. 3 - 1229, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 31061, 2004 WL 5644363, at 13 n.19 (C.D. Cal. Aug. 5, 2004) (stating "on a motion for summary judgment the Court may conditionally consider hearsay evidence, subject to a subsequent determination as to whether plaintiffs can prove the existence of the conspiracy as well as the participation of the declarant in the conspiracy.").

XI. Chronology of Material Facts

Although Rule 56 focuses on factual disputes, in this case, most facts are undisputed. The facts presented, in both supporting [*204] and contesting Defendants' motions, come largely from Defendants' own documents, employee depositions, and/or memoranda of telephone calls made by various parties' representatives or third parties. The declarations filed by Defendants in support of their motions are not directly contradicted; instead, Plaintiffs cite facts from other materials that they assert would allow contradictory inferences and conclusions.

Thus, the Court's task becomes one of determining what inferences a jury could make from [68] all facts, disputed and undisputed. This analysis is mostly about what inferences are reasonable. HN19[] "[T]he acceptable inferences which can be drawn from circumstantial evidence vary with the plausibility of the plaintiffs' theory and the dangers associated with such inferences." Petruzzi's IGA Supermarkets, Inc. v. Darling-Delaware Co., Inc., 998 F.2d 1224, 1232 (3d Cir. 1993). As previously discussed, Plaintiffs must submit sufficient evidence to permit an inference of conspiracy that is reasonable in the context of an oligopolistic market, which can prove to be a demanding standard.

Before reaching the permissible inferences, the Court finds it helpful to present a timeline of the events of this case without drawing any inferences. Plaintiffs submitted a separate statement of facts along with supporting record evidence. The Court has distilled that evidence into a timeline of what the Court believes contains Plaintiffs' most persuasive evidence.

After presenting the chronology, the Court will make Federal Rule of Evidence 104 findings and address Plaintiffs' arguments about the inferences that can be drawn from the facts discussed in the chronology.

A. February — October 2011

1. 2/18/2011: Craig Weisbruch (Sr. VP of Sales and Marketing, National) indicated in an internal National email that Longbow had shared competitor [69] information with him. Ex. 1266.

As early as February 2011, it appears that Longbow would share information among competitors. In an internal National email between Craig Weisbruch and Tom Nelson (Pres. and CEO, National), Mr. Weisbruch wrote:

> I just finished a long conversation with the guys from Longbow. If I were to summarize 45 minutes, it would be...the dealers tell them that the manufacturers are dead serious about this increase and they are going to get it. And, our smaller competitors are telling Longbow that they are serious about this one, and while they don't feel comfortable leading future increases, they are more than ready to follow them.

Ex. 1266.

2. 2/30/2011: Zoran Miling (Analyst, Longbow) emailed Craig Weisbruch (Sr. VP Sales and Marketing, National) to share "some commentary from a few of [National's] peers" (Eagle and USG). Ex. 1276.

Mr. Miling (Analyst, Longbow) wrote that Longbow had "held our Construction Materials Conference last week and wanted to pass along some commentary from a few of your peers." Ex. 1276. He then [*205] disclosed information regarding USG and Eagle Materials, including those companies' impressions of recent price increase attempts. Ex. 1276. Mr. Weisbruch [70] responded that he "appreciate[d] the insight." Ex. 1276.

3. 4/3/2011-4/7/2011: Representatives from all Defendants attended the Las Vegas Trade Meeting. PSOF ¶ 448.[33]

Both parties agree that the attendees included, at least, David Bates (American), Keith Metcalf (American), Keith Metcalf (American), Matt Byrne (USG), Steve Bjorklund (USG), Christopher Griffin (USG), Scott Blanchard (USG), Rob Waterhouse (L&W), Donna Sue Mims (PABCO), Mark Burkhammer (PABCO), Philip Kohl (PABCO), Ryan Lucchetti (PABCO), Todd Thomas (PABCO), Bill Campbell (TIN), Jay Wyatt (TIN), Stephen Raley (TIN); Jay Conlin (Lafarge), Stephen DeMay (Lafarge), Isabelle Shiffrin (Lafarge), Robbe Pearson (Lafarge), Wayne Wilson (Lafarge), Bill Kelly (National) Scott Crutchfield (National), Craig Weisbruch (National), Duane Wood (National), Kurt Withrock (National), [71] John Donaldson (CertainTeed), Steve Hawkins (Certain Teed). Defs. Resp. PSOF ¶ 448.

Plaintiffs also argue that Bill Mazurie (CertainTeed) and John Mixson (National) attended, and they presented evidence that these two were at least pre-registered for the event. Ex. 1732. Defendants argue these two did not attend, though they present no evidence to support that contention.

The parties also dispute whether the meeting was held from April 3-7 or April 2-7. Defs. Resp. PSOF ¶ 448.

4. 4/27/2011: Keith Metcalf (Sr. VP of Marketing, Sales, and Distribution, American) sent internal email indicating that there might be "a movement from all manufacturers to eliminate job quotes." Ex. 1165.

Susan Hall (Dir. of Sales, South, American) sent an email to Keith Metcalf (Sr. VP of Marketing, Sales, and Distribution, American) to ask a question related to how to quote jobs going into calendar year 2012. Ex. 1165. Mr. Metcalf responded: "Please don't quote anything in 2012. We may have a movement from all manufacturers to eliminate quotes." Id.

When deposed, Mr. Metcalf could not recall the source of the information that caused him to write that passage in April 2011. Ex. 1124 (Metcalf dep.) at 140:19-143:11. [72]

5. 6/30/2011: Zoran Miling (Analyst, Longbow) sent Craig Weisbruch (Sr. VP Sales and Marketing, National) an email "to pass along some commentary from a few of your peers," namely, USG and American. Ex. 1276.

6. 7/8/2011: Longbow issued a report that directly quoted from an analyst's notes from a call with Lafarge. Exs. 1280, 2081, 1122 (Miling dep.) 310:15-23.

In July 2011, Zoran Miling (Analyst, Longbow) had a discussion with someone at Lafarge. Ex. 1122 (Miling dep.) at 310:15-23. Mr. Miling took detailed notes from the call. Id.; Ex. 1280. Portions of notes from this call appear verbatim in a July 8, 2011 Longbow report. Ex. 2081 at 7-8.

[*206] 7. 7/21/2011: Kathryn Thompson (Founder and Dir. of Research, Thompson) shared information about USG directly with Craig Weisbruch (Sr. VP Sales and Marketing, National). Ex. 1275 ; PSOF ¶ 207.

On July 21, 2011, Craig Weisbruch (Sr. VP of Sales and Marketing, National) emailed to Kathryn Thompson (Founder and Dir. of Research, Thompson): "I can't believe that USG is going in to their call tomorrow as the only company to not announce an increase." Ex. 1275.

[33] The Court will occasionally reference paragraphs from Plaintiffs' Supplemental Statement of Facts ("PSOF") or Defendants' Statement of Facts ("DSOF"), rather than citing to the underlying exhibits. The Court is not relying on the statement of facts as evidence; it is using the reference merely as shorthand to refer to the exhibits listed in the statement of facts' paragraphs.

Ms. Thompson responded later that day: "The message I think you will hear from USG is they likely [73] won't participate at all. If pressed, they'll say this decision is driven by their belief there is so much protected business in the market. Either way, let's compare notes when USG reports." Ex. 1275.

Mr. Weisbruch forwarded her response to Tom Nelson (Pres. and CEO, National), writing: "If true (and it sounds like she's spoken to them), here's a company that has truly run off the tracks." Ex. 1275.

8. 7/28/2011: Zoran Miling (Analyst, Longbow) emailed Craig Weisbruch (Sr. VP of Sales and Marketing, National) industry information on American and USG. Ex. 1281.

Mr. Weisbruch responded to American's unexpectedly low volume by commenting, "Our opinion is that American is trying to be a good steward of the price." Ex. 1281.

9. Early 9/2011: Internal PABCO email indicated recognition that a united manufacturer front would be necessary to cause a price increase. Ex. 1287.

Todd Thomas (Director of Sales, South, PABCO) wrote and circulated a confidential, internal PABCO memo that provided a market update for August 2011. The memo is not dated, but the context indicates it may have been written in early September 2011. Speaking about a price increase scheduled to take effect in early September [74] 2011, Mr. Thomas wrote:

> It will take strong united effort by all manufacture [sic] to manage current job pricing and improved forward pricing for this increase attempt to yield any price improvement. I do believe that the poor financial performance by all manufacturers, a reality check that demand improvements are not coming any time some [sic], and price improvement is the only answer [sic] will result in all manufactures falling in line to support price improvement in the coming year.

Ex. 1287.

10. 9/2/2011: Keith Metcalf (Sr. VP of Marketing, Sales, and Distribution, American) sent an internal email prohibiting staff from providing job quotes except in limited circumstances. Ex. 1482.

On September 2, Keith Metcalf sent another email to American Gypsum employees.

> Effective immediately, during the remaining time for calendar 2011, no quotes should be given to a customer unless they hand you the PS's that day or make a commitment to [American] on that job for the balance of the year.
> When looking ahead to January 2012 and moving forward we would like to hold off on giving any quotes until September 19th, at which time we will reevaluate.
> Some of this may sound odd but if you would like to [75] discuss further please give me a call.

Ex. 1482.

The impetus for this email was explained in an email exchange on September 20. On that date, Mary Schafer (VP of [*207] National Accounts, American) received an email from an American salesman asking whether he could provide a job quote for a particular project, referencing Mr. Metcalf's September 2 email. Ex. 2098. In response, Ms. Schafer wrote:

> We should pursue. The email below [the Metcalf email] is referencing an anticipated announcement from one or more of the big boys relative to job quoting. We're still waiting. Just want to proceed cautiously and not get locked in to big volume at low prices, especially if there is a game-changer event on the near horizon.

Ex. 2098 (emphasis added).

11. 9/6/2011, 1:45 PM: Mr. Metcalf (Sr. VP Sales, Marketing, and Distribution, American) called Rob Waterhouse (Sr. VP of Sales and Operations, L&W); the call lasted 24 seconds. At 1:48 PM, Mr. Waterhouse called Mr. Metcalf. The call lasted 4 minutes. Exs. 2146, 2187.

12. 9/6/2011, 1:56PM: Rob Waterhouse (Sr. VP of Sales and Operations, L&W) called Greg Salah (Sr. VP of Sales and Marketing, USG). The call lasted two minutes. Ex. 2187.

13. 9/7/2011: Greg Salah [76] (Sr. VP of Sales and Marketing, USG) emailed to USG leadership an internal draft letter creating an annual price for wallboard and eliminating job quotes. Ex. 2191.

14. 9/12/2011: Phil Kohl (VP of Sales and Marketing, PABCO) sent a memo to PABCO leadership indicating that unanimous manufacturer action would be required to achieve price improvement. Ex. 1366.

Under the heading "General Market Conditions," the memo read:

> Real sustainable price improvement is impossible without a unanimous resolve to push through a price increase coupled with an absolute tightening and strict policing of all existing quotes. All gypsum companies see the need for an increase but the failure to achieve this end is caused by their apparent inability or refusal to tightly manage their existing quotes. In such an oversupplied market, even one lose open-ended quote can be the catalyst for the collapse of any price improvement.

Ex. 1366.

15. 9/19/2011: Dave Powers (President, American) called Foster Duvall (Sales Manager, PABCO). Exs. 1168, 1128.

They spoke for 19 minutes. Id. Both men acknowledged the call in their deposition testimony. Exs. 1128 (Powers dep.) 220:24-222:21, 1104 (Duval dep.) 181:10-182:11. And in [77] an email the day after the call, Mr. Duvall wrote that he and Mr. Powers discussed a "lack of leadership in the industry" on the call. Ex. 1168.

Mr. Powers said this call reflects him merely returning a call from Mr. Duvall. Ex. 1128 (Powers dep.) at 220:24-222:3. Mr. Powers explained that he "seriously debated" whether to place the call because he knew American was about to release its announcement that would eliminate job quotes, create calendar-year pricing, and impose a 35% price increase for 1/1/2012. Id. But he decided to call Mr. Duvall nonetheless because Mr. Duvall was a personal friend, who had just had open-heart surgery multiple times. Id. Mr. Powers testified that they mostly discussed Mr. Duvall's health and family, but that they ended the call as they always did by slamming their former employer, USG, which involved talking about a lack of leadership in the industry. Id. at 222:07 — 223:09.

[*208] Mr. Duvall does not remember the call or what was said on it, though he does not contest that it occurred. Ex. 1104 (Duvall dep.) at 182:10-182:22.

16. 9/20/2011: American announced calendar-year pricing and the end of job quotes. Ex. 1489.

On September 20, 2011, American Gypsum circulated [78] to customers a to-the-point announcement:

> To our Customers:
> Effective January 1, 2012, we will implement a 35% price increase on all gypsum wallboard products. This increased price (up 35%) will be your price for the entire year of 2012. This increase applies to all segments of the business.
> Effective immediately, we will no longer be providing job quotes. We thank you for your continued support.

Ex. 1489. The letter was signed by Keith Metcalf (Sr. VP Sales, Marketing, and Distribution, American).

17. 9/20/2011: An internal PABCO email shows that PABCO leaders knew USG was considering elimination of job quotes. Ex. 1496.

Todd Thomas (Director of Sales, South, PABCO) emailed Ryan Lucchetti (President, PABCO) and Mark Burkhammer (Director of Sales, North, PABCO):

> I just heard USG is coming out with a letter in the next day or so for a ~$25 — 30 increase January 1st. The letter will include wording about how they will handle job quotes. My understanding [sic] National and American are on board.

Ex. 1496.

18. 9/20/2011-9/21/2011: PABCO's president commented on the American announcement. Ex. 1168.

A customer forwarded the American to Ryan Lucchetti (President, PABCO) at 2:29 pm on September 20. [79] Mr. Lucchetti forwarded the email to Foster Duvall (Sales Manager, PABCO) at 4:07 pm, saying, "Well here is the 1st." Ex. 1168. Mr. Duval responded: "Dave [from American] gave me a call yesterday and mentioned his frustration with the lack of leadership in the industry. Eliminating job quotes would be a great start for the price improvement." Id. The next day, Mr. Lucchetti responded, "Dave Powers is my new hero." Id.

Mark Burkhammer (Director of Sales, North, PABCO) also received Ryan Lucchetti's (President, PABCO) email forwarding the American announcement ("Well here is the first"). Mr. Burkhammer forwarded the letter to Marty Brand (VP Sales and Operations, L&W), writing "Hope this works." Ex. 1244. Mr. Brand responded, "Interesting idea. I hope this does fly. I like the way they put it out there 2-1/2 months ahead of time!" Id.

19. 9/20/2011-9/21/2011: CertainTeed leadership discussed American's announcement. Ex. 1491.

A customer emailed Bill Mazurie (Regional Manager, Certain Teed) a copy of the American increase letter. Ex. 1491. Mr. Mazurie forwarded it to Steve Hawkins (VP of US Sales, Certain Teed), writing: "Here it is. USG probably will be next." Id. Mr. Hawkins then forwarded [80] the letter to other CertainTeed leaders, including John Donaldson (President, Gypsum-North America, CertainTeed).

In response, Mr. Donaldson indicated that he needed an "urgent recommendation on our approach." Ex. 1498. Later in the same email chain, Mr. Donaldson indicated that he was "very much in favor of matching the [American] announcement as closely as possible." Ex. 1498.

[*209] 20. 9/20/2011: Craig Weisbruch (Sr. VP Sales and Marketing, National) had a call with Kathryn Thompson (Founder and Dir. of Research, Thompson) about job quotes. See Ex. 1499 ("after our conversation yesterday about job quotes").

21. 9/21/2011, 8:17 a.m.: Craig Weisbruch (Sr. VP of Marketing and Sales, National) revealed he knew that USG was considering job quote elimination. Exs. 1500, 1510.

Craig Weisbruch (Sr. VP of Sales and Marketing, National) received a copy of the American announcement and forwarded it to National's President and CEO (Tom Nelson). In the body of the email Mr. Weisbruch wrote, "Looks like American beat USG to the punch. This will be interesting to watch play out." Ex. 1500. Mr. Nelson responded, "This might change the outlook slightly."

22. 9/21/2011, morning hours: Kathryn Thompson (Founder [81] and Dir. of Research, Thompson) and Craig Weisbruch (Sr. VP of Sales and Marketing, National) exchanged emails about job quote elimination. Ex. 1499. PSOF ¶¶ 238, 252, 323.

On 9/21/2011 at 7:38 am, Craig Weisbruch (Sr. VP Sales and Marketing, National) wrote to Kathryn Thompson (Founder and Dir. of Research, Thompson) to follow-up about a conversation the two had the day before: "I should have added, again, after our conversation yesterday about job quotes, [the elimination of job quotes] is another way of telling the dealers that they are sick of pricing being manipulated by constant job quoting." Ex. 1499. Later in the same email chain, Mr. Weisbruch indicated that he thought the industry would follow American's lead. Ex. 1499.

Ms. Thompson quoted this email in a Thompson report that was circulated later that day.

23. 9/21/2011, 4:45 p.m.: National placed "a moratorium on job quoting until such time as [they] determine[d] [their] position on this subject going forward." Exs. 1500, 1510.

24. 9/21/2011, 6:00 p.m.: American employee indicated awareness that the price increase is not commensurate with demand. Ex. 1359.

The day after the American announcement, David Bates (Director of Sales — West, American) [82] wrote an external email to a distributor related to the American announcement:

> I don't think demand matters anymore. Job quotes are the killers!!!!! I am already hearing Pabco, USG and National are going to announce something similar as well. The industry needs this increase badly.

Ex. 1359.

25. 9/21/2011: A Thompson Flashnote anticipated that the successful elimination of job quotes would require all manufacturers to do so simultaneously. Ex. 1259.

On 9/21/2011, Thompson sent out a "flashnote" to clients assessing American's 9/20/2011 letter:

> The elimination of job quotes effectively stops price protection, which has been the bane of the wallboard industry. Anywhere from 30%-70% of wallboard pricing is protected in the current [*210] market, according to TRG contacts, which limits the effectiveness of price increases. As one TRG wallboard industry contact quipped this morning, "this is another way of telling the dealers that they are sick of pricing being manipulated by constant job quoting."
> Additional Color. It is our understanding that USG floated the idea of elimination of job quotes to certain customers over the past month or so. As such, EXP's [American's] letter yesterday effectively [83] supports USG's idea and also draws the proverbial line in the sand (i.e., "I dare you not to follow suit").
> TRG Opinion. Elimination of job quotes/price protection would be a positive for the wallboard industry, in our opinion. For this to work, however, all wallboard manufacturers would need to fall in line, and initial checks suggest this could be possible . . . .

Ex. 1259 (emphasis in original).

At least American received this report. Ex. 1259 (Thompson forwarding the report to American to keep American "in the loop").

26. 9/22/2011: Greg Salah (Sr. VP of Sales and Marketing, USG) sent an internal email that was optimistic about price improvement. Ex. 1502.

Greg Salah (Sr. VP of Sales and Marketing, USG) wrote to Scott Blanchard (VP of Sales, USG) only two days after the American announcement: "I do know one thing, we will not lose money in 2012. We have got to get wallboard to a point that we can get U.S. Gypsum to break even." Ex. 1502.

27. 9/22/2011: Longbow emailed National about Longbow's conversation with American/Eagle. Ex. 1277.

The day after the American announcement, Zoran Milling (Analyst, Longbow) asked Craig Weisbruch (Sr. VP of Sales and Marketing, National) about Mr. Weisbruch's [84] thoughts on the American announcement. Ex. 1277.

Mr. Weisbruch responded to this email. Portions of his response appeared verbatim in Longbow's October 11, 2011 report, which was received by L&W, USG, TIN, Lafarge, and Certain Teed. See Exs. 1261 (L&W bates stamp), 1349 (USG bates stamp), 2046 (TIN bates stamp), 1363 (Lafarge bates stamp), 1858 (Certain Teed bates stamp).

Zoran Miling (Analyst, Longbow) responded, thanking Mr. Weisbruch for the input and adding:

> We spoke with Eagle earlier this morning to get their take on the matter . . . . Management's tone was much more stern in regard to this increase attempt relative to others, with [Eagle]'s CFO saying 'we're serious this time around.' . . . Interestingly, they were open in telling us that they don't care if they lose market share because of the new strategy.

Ex. 1277.

28. 9/27/2011: L&W and PABCO employees discussed the elimination of job quotes. Ex. 1244.

On September 27, Mark Burkhammer (Director of Sales, North, PABCO) invited Marty Brand (VP of Sales and Operations, L&W) to dinner through an email. In the email chain, Mr. Burkhammer said:

> I look forward to seeing you and sharing some tales... maybe talk a little strategy if all [85] the announcements are out by then. Even though we haven't officially [*211] stated our intention I sent an email to the troops getting them ready. No more job quotes and 30 days to close any open quotes getting our system down to secured work through our distributors with footage and address's. I am suggesting, wherever and to whoever will listen, that the manufacturers have to police. . . . I don't know how this will all work out but it has some people thinking but getting something done by seven manufacturers for the good of the industry is like being in the house of reps in DC.

Ex. 1244.

29. 9/28/2011: USG sent letter out announcing elimination of job quotes and a shift to calendar-year pricing, but not announcing the specific amount of the January 1, 2012 increase. Ex. 1617.

30. 9/29/2011: Kathryn Thompson (Founder and Dir. of Research, Thompson) called Craig Weisbruch (Sr. VP of Sales and Marketing, National). The call lasted for 15 minutes. Ex. 2167.

Portions of Ms. Thompson's notes of this call (Ex. 1515) are repeated nearly verbatim in a 10/3/11 Thompson Research Group report. Ex. 1346.

31. 9/29/2011: CertainTeed stopped offering job quotes. Ex. 1299.

Although CertainTeed stopped offering [86] job quotes by 9/29/2011, it officially distributed the letter eliminating job quotes and announcing calendar year pricing on 10/3/2011. Ex. 1299. The letter was misdated as 10/3/2012. Ex. 1299. Certain Teed promised a new price schedule by 11/15/11. Ex. 1299.

32. 9/30/2011: National distributed letter announcing the elimination of job quotes and shift to calendar-year pricing. Ex. 1319.

National released its letter on 9/30/2015, but it had already indicated that it would follow American's lead. Ex. 1499. National's Director of National Accounts (Duane Wood) testified that he did not recall whether National considered what National would do if the other manufacturers did not also eliminate job quotes. Ex. 1138 (Wood dep.) at 141:10-17.

33. 10/3/2011: Craig Weisbruch (Sr. VP of Marketing and Sales, National) called Kathryn Thompson (Founder and Dir. of Research, Thompson); the call lasted 15 minutes. Ex. 2171.

34. 10/3/2011: Thompson released a flashnote that reproduced nearly verbatim Ms. Thompson's notes from a 9/28/2011 meeting with Craig Weisbruch (Sr. VP of Sales and Marketing, National). Compare Ex. 1515 (9/28/2011 New York City meeting notes from meeting with National); with Ex. 1346 [87] (10/3/2011 Thompson flashnote, Lafarge bates stamp).

35. 10/3/2011: CertainTeed distributed a letter announcing the end of job quotes and beginning of calendar-year pricing. The letter did not include the amount of the January 2012 price increase. Ex. 1299.

36. 10/4/2011: Lafarge sent out letter announcing elimination of job quotes and shift to calendar-year pricing with a 35% increase. Ex. 1522, 1102.

Lafarge's VP of Sales (Steve DeMay) testified that he did not recall anyone at the company putting anything in writing to [*212] justify these changes. Ex. 1102 at 151:17-21.

37. 10/10/2011: A manufacturer exchanged emails with Longbow. Ex. 2133.

The sender of the email is redacted, but Longbow's October 11, 2011 report quoted directly from the email and attributed the quote to a manufacturer, without specifying which manufacturer. Ex. 2133. In the email exchange, the manufacturer-sender summarized the current manufacturer announcements and wrote that he anticipated the manufacturers to take measures to limit pre-buying. Ex. 2133.

38. 10/11/2011: Longbow issued a report indicating that Longbow was not confident that the price increase for January would stick, which was received by L&W, USG, Lafarge, [88] Certain Teed, and TIN. Ex. 1342.

Longbow summarized the "key takeaway" as being that > industry players recognize the January increase attempt as a new approach to pricing, one that could end up being at least partially successful. However, without capacity reductions or consolidation (assuming Lafarge continues to struggle to find a buyer for its wallboard assets), we are taking a wait and see approach given the difficulty the industry has had in the past securing long term price increase success despite many attempts during the downcycle.

Ex. 1342 at 1-2.

Multiple Defendants received this report. Exs. 1261 (L&W bates stamp), 1349 (USG bates), 578 (Lafarge bates stamp), 1263 (Lafarge bates stamp), 1858 (Certain Teed bates stamp), 2046 (TIN bates stamp).

39. 10/11/2011: A TIN sales manager told his sales team that TIN would support the January increase; TIN did not formally announce elimination of job quotes but quotes were eliminated by mid-October 2011. Exs. 1503, 1523.

40. 10/11/2011: Kathryn Thompson (Founder and Dir. of Research, Thompson) called John Donaldson (President, Gypsum-North America, CertainTeed) and the call lasted for 17 minutes. Ex. 2155.

41. 10/12/2011: PABCO gave Longbow [89] advanced notice of its price increase (which would be issued later that day); within minutes of receiving this notice, Longbow forwarded the notice to Craig Weisbruch (Sr. VP of Sales and Marketing, National). Ex. 1278, 2030, 1278, 1122 (Miling dep.) at 100:3-103:1.

42. 10/12/2011: PABCO announced elimination of job quotes and implementation of calendar-year pricing with a 35% increase. Exs. 1095, 1118, 1320.

But prior to that announcement, PABCO had already curtailed job quotes. Ex. 1095 (Burkhammer dep.) at 120:20-22. The 35% price increase was the highest PABCO had ever announced. Ex. 1118 at 177:6-8.

43. 10/13/2011: PABCO sent an internal email reflecting that American had told its employees to stop sending written reports regarding any competitive information. Ex. 1493.

Phil Kohl (VP of Sales and Marketing, PABCO) emailed Ryan Lucchetti (President, [*213] PABCO) and Brian Hobdy (CFO, PABCO) with the subject "American and Temple-Inland Talk":

> Gary Miranda reports that American is telling their salesmen to discontinue all 'written' reports in regards to all competitive information; American apparently wants to limit their paper trail in regards to their thinking on the industry's planned $35 [90] price increase. American is concerned that there may be a market backlash with claims of collusion if this increase becomes a reality in 2012.

Ex. 1493.

44. 10/13/2011: National expressed concern about existing job quotes, worrying those quotes might "blow the deal" if American were to think that National had "broken ranks." Ex. 1560.

Kurt Withrock (Dir. Demand Management, National) sent an email to Scott Carlsen (unknown position, National) about Colorado "job numbers." Mr. Withrock was asking whether Mr. Carlsen could pare down the job numbers, writing: "This scares me more than anything I see in the system. I'd hate to think we blow the entire deal because American thinks we've broken ranks and job quoted well into 2012 in their backyard . . . when we hardly cover variable on all that footage." Ex. 1560.

> 45. 10/14/2011: Lafarge President instructed sales staff to tow the line following a Longbow report that criticized Lafarge for lacking pricing discipline. Ex. 1263.
> 46. 10/14/2011: Greg Salah (Sr. VP Sales and Marketing, USG) sent an email to Chris Griffin (President, USG), indicating that USG would go on a controlled distribution by 11/1/2011 to prevent flooding the > market with cheap [91] board, even though controlling supply was risky because competitors could steal market share. Ex. 1580.

Mr. Salah also wrote that he knew that "a couple of competitors . . . have already gone on controlled distribution." Ex. 1580.

47. 10/19/2011: Keith Metcalf (Sr. VP Sales, Marketing, and Distribution, American) advised an American's Sales Director to tell a customer to expect other manufacturers to impose the same price increase as American, but he did so before the amount of the increases were officially announced by all American's competitors. Ex. 1169.

On October 19, one of American's clients sent an American Sales Director an email intimating that the customer would go elsewhere if American went through with the January 2012 increase. Ex. 1169.

The sales director forwarded the email to Keith Metcalf (Sr. VP of Marketing, Sales, and Distribution, American) to get Mr. Metcalf's advice about how to proceed. Metcalf responded: "I would tell Albert that when he re-engages the other manufacturers he will find the same answer." Notably, at the time Mr. Metcalf sent this [*214] email, all of the manufacturers that would announce an increase in the price had announced that an increase would be made, [92] but they had not all announced what precisely the increase would be.

48. 10/19/2011: USG expressed concern that competitors might perceive that USG was involved in L&W's job quoting. Ex. 1564.

Rob Waterhouse (Sr. VP of Sales and Operations, L&W) sent Greg Salah (Sr. VP of Sales and Marketing, USG) some documents related to how L&W was handling the recent manufacturer price announcements. Salah responded:

> My only concern is your comments on jobs. We are taking a very hard line with all of our customers and not accepting job commitments dealers made on their own. It appears that L& W will be protecting a good deal of jobs and I assume the market will believe we are part of it.
> As a follow-up to our conversations, we will not be able to protect any jobs that were not in our job quote file with a specific identifiable job prior to September 28. Understanding this could cost USG volume in 2012, we feel we have no choice but to be very firm on our policy. Job quotes have decimated our pricing over the last 3-4 years. We cannot take a chance of creating the impression that we are not serious about our new pricing policy.

Ex. 1564.

49. 10/27/2011: National would not undercut USG's pricing when approached [93] by a customer because the job "violate[d] [National's] pricing policy established on 9/28" and National was "not in a position to provide special pricing." Ex. 1553.

50. 10/28/2011: National listened to Eagle/American's earnings call. Ex. 1581.

The information learned on the call was then passed around at National:

> For those of you who did not listen in, here is a transcript from EXP's earnings call. They say they are very serious about a 35% price increase and are willing to take less volume to make it stick. They are also planning to shut down all of their wallboard plants for a 2 to 3 week period at the end of December (because that is a low volume period).

Ex. 1581.

51. 11/3/2011: In an internal email, Lafarge indicated that it was restricting supply. Ex. 1505.

Ike Preston (President, Lafarge) summarized the industry status:

> So far the announcement [of the elimination of job quotes and a 35% price increase] has had the full support of the industry and we are seeing distributors scrambling to build up inventory. We have focused on limiting the inventory build up by limiting production and not running overtime in the plants. Similar moves have been made by our competitors so we believe we have good [94] reason to feel positive about the increase.

Ex. 1505.

52. 11/18/2011: Certain Teed refused to lower the price for Lowe's even though Lowe's had absorbed a price increase in April 2011 that the rest of CertainTeed's customer base didn't absorb. Ex. 1520.

A national accounts manager for Certain Teed emailed Steve Hawkins (VP of [*215] US Sales, Certain Teed), asking how firm the increase was for Lowe's:

> Lowe's took an average increase of $10 in April 2011. While the market has retreated, the Lowe's increase stayed intact. I have started prepping Steve Edwards for our pending January 2012 increase. He has advised that 35%/$50 is a bit steep. We are also hearing market reports that retail is not expecting to take the full increase. Since we were able to hold the April increase, I would recommend only going up $35-45 to come to the $50 you are seeking. . . . Please let me know your thoughts and I will work with Ian to get the Lowe's pricing matrix updated.

Ex. 1520. After the manager sent one follow-up email requesting a response, Hawkins responded:

> We must fully support [sic] increase. I have instructed Ian to update Lowes matrix reflecting our increase of $50-75-100. Makes no difference what happened [95] last year or Zelman's opinion. We have no choice but to support. Thanks.

Ex. 1520.

53. 11/21/2011: Longbow issued a research report. Ex. 1589.

The report characterized the January increase announcements and provided an outlook.

> From the beginning, manufacturers have collectively communicated the same date for the increase, a similar amount, and all have uniformly abandoned the use of job quotes. In the past, differences in dates and magnitude have also tended to undermine the increase. In addition, they have communicated these items will in advance to allow time for distributors and contractors to digest the information and make the necessary accommodations. Even though USG is the lone manufacturer who has yet to announce a price increase amount (they will do so in December), many of its distributors through its subsidiary L&W are quoting prices beyond January 1st with 35% escalators.
> Working against [the manufacturers] is that the same weak demand environment that has scuttled so many prior price increase attempts still exists. Capacity utilization is still 50% and the distribution channel is still having difficulty passing along increases of their own after manufacturers last raised [96] prices successfully back in March.

Ex. 1589 at 3.

54. 11/21/2011: Zoran Miling (Analyst, Longbow) emailed Craig Weisbruch (Sr. VP of Sales and Marketing, National) the most recent report. Ex. 1589.

Mr. Miling drew specific attention to information about USG and L&W: "Worth noting is that though USG has yet to announce a price increase, it's [sic] L&W arm is quoting prices beyond January 1st with $35-$40/MSF (~ 36%) escalators." Ex. 1589. He also wrote: "I'm sure plenty of lies are and will continue to be told, but from our perspective it appears as though the line is being held firmly." Ex. 1589. Mr. Weisbruch forwarded this to Tom Nelson [*216] (President, National), writing: "Don't know if you saw this or not. Pretty positive!" Id.

55. 11/28/2011: USG sent an internal email instructing sales staff that they could provide verbal guidance that USG would not quote jobs in 2013 and that the 2013 calendar-year price would likely be +20% from the 2012 calendar price. Ex. 1671.

56. 12/2/2011: In an internal email, a National director indicated his unwillingness to attempt to solicit competitors' customers. Ex. 1558.

57. 12/7/2011: Longbow sent an email report to TIN, PABCO, and National regarding a [97] meeting between Longbow and Eagle (American). ¶ Ex. 1267, 1258, 1268.

Zoran Miling (Analyst, Longbow) sent individual, nearly identical emails to TIN, PABCO, and National regarding "a series of meetings" it hosted "with EXP [Eagle] management in Chicago." Ex. 1267 (email to PABCO), 1258 (email to TIN), 1268 (email to National). He indicated that "[o]verall, the meetings had an optimistic tone regarding the upcoming wallboard price increase." Under the label "Wallboard Price Increase — Continue to Say and Do the Right Things," Mr. Miling summarized:

> • . . . EXP [Eagle] indicated that it should know if the price increase holds by early February. Our recent channel checks have confirmed that the industry has put distributors on allocation and we estimated the full impact of the increase won't be known until March/April when distributors will look to stock up for the spring building season. . . .
> • While a prebuy is currently occurring, the industry has not added shifts or capacity to meet the order rates. As a result, while inventories are high at distribution, the manufacturers' allocation has limited the degree distributors can stock up in advance. . . Additionally, as [Eagle] is taking its wallboard [98] plants down for maintenance this month, it essentially caps at current levels the amount its customers can order. Lastly, given space constraints at distribution and as wallboard can't be stored outdoors in the winter (or most anytime for that manner), distributors are limited in this regard to how much they can prebuy.
> • While 40% of past demand was subject to job quotes, EXP estimates that lingering projects that were subject to the prebuy will be only 10% in early CY 12. Additionally, EXP estimates projects tied to previous quotes will roll of[f] and by mid CY12.

Ex. 1267, 1258, 1268

58. 12/7/2011: Steve DeMay (VP of Sales, Lafarge) had a 27-minute conversation with Zoran Miling (Analyst, Longbow), which Mr. Miling memorialized. Ex. 1269.

The notes of this call, found at Exhibit 1269, are discussed in depth in this memorandum. Portions of the notes from this call appeared verbatim in a February 23, 2012 Longbow report. Compare Ex. 1269; with Ex. 1624 at 9.

59. 12/27/2011: In an internal USG email, USG's VP of Sales - West indicated that USG would not produce more board despite a shortage. Ex. 1576.

Scott Blanchard (VP Sales — West, USG) received an email regarding board shortage. [*217] Mr. Blanchard [99] indicated that USG might run some extra shifts at the plants, but that "[i]t's in the best interest of the market to keep it tight in January." Ex. 1576.

60. 12/27/2011: In an internal email, PABCO commented that if the industry could create wallboard scarcity, the price increase would be more likely to stick. Ex. 1582.

PABCO's VP of Sales and Marketing sent out an email entitled "Contrarian Thought," in which he explained that he > wouldn't be too anxious to empty the warehouse...starting next week we need to believe that PABCO will get an additional $35/msf more on everything we ship... if we don't believe, how can we expect our customers to believe. In an oversupplied market with many participants bent on the increase's destruction PABCO's message needs to be strong along with that of our competitors.

Ex. 1582.

B. 2012 Activity

61. 1/9/2012: A representative from Longbow called Craig Weisbruch (Sr. VP Marketing and Sales, National), and they spoke for approximately 34 minutes. Ex. 2172.

62. 1/19/2012: In an internal Lafarge email, Lafarge's VP of Sales expressed concern that any cut in price to a wholesaler would be communicated to competition. Ex. 1563.

Steve DeMay (VP of Sales, Lafarge) exchanged [100] emails with Wayne Wilson (Regional Sales Manager, Lafarge). Mr. Wilson wanted to know about a regional pricing issue. Mr. DeMay responded:

> I don't want to lose any high return business but as well do not want to be labeled as the price cutter. Both of these accounts are wholesalers so any move will likely be communicated to competition.

Ex. 1563.

63. 1/27/2012: In an internal American email, Keith Metcalf (Sr. VP Sales, Marketing, and Distribution, American) indicated that American would be unofficially providing 2013 pricing guidance to customers. Ex. 1172.

In response to an inquiry about pricing for 2013, Keith Metcalf (Sr. VP Sales and Marketing, American) responded:

> We are not ready to put a [sic] official notice out yet. If you would like you could send him and [sic] email to let him know our guidance. The guidance would be; [sic] for 2013 you will see increases [*218] from manufacturers up to 30% on today's numbers.

Ex. 1172.

64. 2/7/2012: Longbow research report on USG reported, "[USG's] [m]anagement also stated that it has no intention of undermining the increase — a key concern in the industry — as it views pricing as the best way to improve profitability given weak industry volumes." Ex. 1594.

65. [101] 2/10/2012: A TIN email to a customer estimated the price increase for 2013, estimating a $40 upswing from 2012 pricing. Ex. 1683.

66. 2/14/2012: A representative from Longbow called Bill Kelley (Dir. Dealer Sales, National); they spoke for 16 minutes. Exs. 2167; 2172; 2175; 2173.

67. 2/23/2012: A Longbow report summarized the status of the wallboard market in light of the January 2012 changes. Ex. 1531.

One paragraph is most relevant to the tactic of volume restriction:

> The price increase continues to hold at or near the previously communicated level with contacts noting that certain manufacturers — chiefly [Eagle], National Gypsum and CertainTeed — continue to hold the line likely at the expense of volumes. Despite prior concerns to the contrary, both USG and Lafarge continue to act rationally. . . . In fact, the various manufacturers we spoke with told us they were more than willing to cede some share at the expense of price and our various discussions with industry contacts supports that view.

Ex. 1531.

68. 2/25/2012-2/27/2012: Defendants' employees attended 2012 Drake Group meeting in San Antonio, TX. PSOF ¶ 470.

The Drake Group LLC is a network of approximately 61 gypsum specialty dealers, [102] which uses the aggregate buying power of its members to secure competitive rebates and discounts from vendors, including drywall vendors. The Drake Group does not purchase building products itself; it only negotiates the rebates and discounts made available to its members.

The parties agree that employees of some Defendants attended a February 25-27, 2012 Drake Group meeting in San Antonio, Texas. Drake Group meeting attended included Scott Blanchard (VP of Sales, USG), Matt Byrne (VP of Sales, USG), Cristopher Griffin (President, USG), Greg Salah (Sr. VP of Sales and Marketing, USG), John Donaldson (Pres., Gypsum-North America, CertainTeed), Steve Hawkins (VP of USG Sales, CertainTeed), Keith Metcalf (Sr. VP Sales, Marketing, and Distribution, American), David Powers (President, American), and Craig Weisbruch (Sr. VP of Sales and Marketing, National).

69. 2/27/2012: The last day of the Drake Group meeting, an internal National email indicated that National learned from dealers that American planned to announce formal guidance. Ex. 1677.

In an email titled "Weekly Report," Bill Kelly (Dir. Deal Sales, National Gypsum) [*219] wrote: "Dealers tell us that American Gypsum will soon be providing [103] price guidance for 2013 in a written communication telling customers to plan for one price increase in January of 25-30%." Ex. 1677.

70. 2/28/2012: In an internal USG email, Scott Blanchard (VP Sales — West, USG) wrote a recap of the Drake meeting. Ex. 1638.

Scott Blanchard (VP Sales — West, USG) summarized the Drake Group meeting for Greg Salah (Sr. VP Sales and Marketing, USG):

> In general the Drake Meeting was a non-event. Few of the customers "surprised" us at the meeting with requests or market information. There was a more positive outlook for the year with almost all the customers.
> From a high level these are the main takeaways;
> - The new Price strategy is being well received by the distributors (helped them)
> - No manufacturer has moved price
> - Some manufacturers are back in old markets because they can make money (greatest concern to distributors)

• Lower job quotes are escalating 4/1/2012 (protected volume up at least $10/msf or cancelled by our competitors)

• What escalator should they use for 2013 (20-25% was our guideline, further discussion is necessary internally at USG)

Ex. 1638.

71. 3/1/2012: American issued price-guideline announcement for 2013 indicating that the pricing for [104] 2013 was "anticipated to be in the range of 25%-30% higher than [the] 2012 prices." Ex. 1679.

Writing only "FYI," Greg Salah forwarded American's announcement to Chris Griff (President, USG):

> To our Customers:
> In September of last year, we announced that we would no longer be providing individual job quotes. At that time, we gave you prices to be used for all your work for the year 2012. In response to customer requests for prices to be used for work on jobs beyond the end of this year, we are sending you this communication to provide you guidance with respect to our wallboard pricing for 2013.
> Your January 2013 prices from American Gypsum are anticipated to be in the range of 25% - 30% higher than your 2012 prices. These January 2013 numbers and be used for all your work in 2013. This price increase is subject to further review as 2013 gets closer taking into consideration, among other things, increases in manufacturing and transportation costs.

Ex. 1680.

72. 3/7/2012: Jay Wyatt (Unknown position, TIN) provided internal email permitting sale staff to provide verbal guidance for 2013 pricing as "today's price plus no more than 30%." [105] Ex. 1684

73. 3/10/2012: USG sent internal guidance indicating that USG would not send out a letter for 2013 pricing yet, but permitting sales staff to respond to customer inquiries by providing a verbal 25% increase estimate. Exs. 1681, 1682.

74. 3/15/2012: Garik Shmois (Analyst, Longbow) spoke with Ken Banas (Sr. Dir. Investor Relations, USG). Ex. 2168.

75. 4/2/2012: Longbow Research issues a report regarding 2013 pricing. Ex. 1270.

Zoran Miling (Analyst, Longbow) sent an email with the subject line "Wallboard Business Conditions Survey — Longbow Research." Related to the 2013 price increase, he wrote:

> • The January 1 price increase continues to find meaningful support, with contacts reporting that manufacturer pricing is up in the 28-35% range, which varies somewhat by region and manufacturer. Prices in March were stable on a sequential basis.
> . . .
> • Eagle Materials has announced a 25% - 30% price increase for CY 2013 and is the first manufacturer to formally issue guidance. Competing manufacturers report that they are supportive of the attempt, but will not issue formal guidance until mid-2012 or as late as CY3 Q12.

Ex. 1270. The full list of recipients is unknown, as Mr. Miling appears [106] to have sent it to recipients as blind carbon copies (BCC). But, the bates stamp on the document indicates that at least National received this email.

76. 4/4/2012: National drafted a letter announcing a 2013 price increase, but it never sent that letter to customers. Ex. 1686.

The drafted letter indicated that National "anticipate[d] that January 2013 prices will be approximately 30% higher than pricing levels in January of 2012." Ex. 1686. Per Ex. 1134 (Weisbruch dep.) at 278:24-279:1, this letter was never sent out to customers.

77. 4/11/12: Lafarge quoted the April 2, 2012 Longbow report in a PowerPoint presentation. Ex. 1955.

The presentation quoted that > manufacturers seem to be sticking to their guns and for the first time ever it's on the distributors to support the increase. Back in 2009/2010 these huge job quotes were offered and they were cheap. Now that they are all steadfast, it's up to the distributors to keep the price up now.

Ex. 1955 at 4.

78. 4/12/12: An internal National email provided sales staff with a script for customer guidance regarding the 2013 price increase, which anticipated an approximately 30% increase. Ex. 1687.

79. 4/15/2012 — 4/19/2012: Senior Sales and Marketing personnel from most [107] Defendants gathered at the AWCI/CISCA Convention and INTEX Expo in Charlotte, NC. Defs. Resp. to PSOF ¶ 450.

The parties do not dispute that American, USG, National, Lafarge, CertainTeed, [*221] and TIN all sent representatives. Plaintiffs claim that PABCO also had a representative present, but the evidence cited in support of this contention does not confirm attendance by anyone from PABCO.

80. 4/17/2012: A representative from Longbow called Craig Weisbruch (Sr. VP Sales and Marketing, National); they spoke for approximately 14 minutes. Ex. 2167; Ex. 1122 (Miling dep.) at 172:25-177:8.

After the call, Garik Shmois (Analyst, Longbow) prepared an email to "Sales Approval" with the subject "USG Follow Up with Industry Insider." The first line explains, "We just got off the phone with an SVP (number three in the organization) of a large wallboard manufacturer to get his take on the USG results." Ex. 1600. This industry insider was Craig Weisbruch.

The call notes indicated Mr. Weisbruch's impression that USG was aggressive in January and February at winning share because its ultimate price increase was somewhat lower than expected. "In response to share gains, the rest of the industry responded more [108] aggressively to re-set pricing in March on a customer by customer basis. . . . [USG] has not responded aggressively to the industry re-set which is a good thing longer term." Ex. 1600. Mr. Weisbruch also indicated that he "expect[ed] some of the USG share gains to reverse in 2Q. . . . [National] ha[d] won back in the last month the majority of the share it lost to USG and he expects most of the industry has rebalanced accordingly. Neither USG nor anyone else has been disruptive since the recent re-set." Ex. 1600.

81. 4/17/2012: Kathryn Thompson (Founder and Dir. of Research, Thompson) spoke with Ken Banas (Sr. Dir. Investor Relations, USG) and others at USG. Ex. 2168.

82. April 2012: PABCO distributed monthly report. Exs. 1095, 1688.

Mark Burkhammer, the author of the report, wrote on the 2013 increase:

> I would support the intention of the American letter and have communicated to our reps that we would recommend a 25% increase be accounted for on any work going through January 1, 2013. I do not think we should put any letter out in support until others comply in writing. Not even sure we should go beyond verbal support at this time or later.

Ex. 1688. In his deposition, Mr. Burhammer indicated that at [109] this time customers who requested information would be told that PABCO was expecting a 25% increase, but PABCO was only providing that information to customers who specifically requested it. Ex. 1095 (Burkhammer dep.) at 155:12-157:8.

83. 5/21/2012: Bill Kelly (Dir. Dealer Sales, National) called Zoran Milling (Analyst, Longbow); they spoke for just under 22 minutes. Ex. 2177.

84. 6/14/2012: Ms. Thompson's notes from a phone call with Craig Weisbruch (Sr. VP Sales and Marketing, National) reflected that there were "verbal agreements" for price increases for 2013. Ex. 1515.

The contents of the notes from this call are discussed in greater detail later in the memorandum.

[*222] Portions of the notes are reflected in Thompson's July 15, 2012 report (Ex 1260). Compare Ex. 1515 ("2013 price increases? A: verbal agreements[] for a large price increase in 2013. EXP is already out for guidance for 25%-30%"); with Ex. 1260 ("TRG industry contacts are also telling us that manufacturers are discussing a sizable 2013 price increase to distributors (25%-30%), and we expect the industry will go on allocation by October.").

85. 6/19/2012: USG internally circulated an email containing commentary from Longbow [110] about Eagle Materials. Ex. 1689.

Following Eagle's participation at the Longbow Construction Materials Investor Day 2012, Ken Banas (Sr. Dir. Investor Relations, USG) sent an internal email to USG leadership that included Eagle's "thoughts on pricing this year and next." Ex. 1689. The quotes in the email were provided directly from Longbow's research note, so it is unclear whether USG also attended Longbow's Investor Day.

Eagle's thoughts on pricing were related to its April announcement of a 25-30% price incase announcement: "While competing manufacturers have yet to follow suit, [Longbow's] recent wallboard survey (see: Pricing Holding as Downside Risks Cleared) indicated that most manufacturers have internally supported the attempt and will likely announce comparable increases of their own in ~3 Q12. At this point [Longbow is] modeling ~ 5% pricing next year, though we admit there is upside to our pricing forecase." Ex. 1689.

86. 7/2/2012: Garik Shmois (Analyst, Longbow) spoke with Ken Banas (Sr. Dir. Investor Relations, USG). Ex. 2168.

87. 7/2/2012: A Thompson analyst spoke with Ken Banas (Sr. Dir. Investor Relations, USG). Ex. 2168.

88. 7/9/2012: A representative of Longbow called [111] Craig Weisbruch (Sr. VP Sales and Marketing, National); they spoke for approximately 27 minutes. Ex. 2167.

89. 7/11/2012: Longbow Research indicated that most manufacturers had informally announced a 2013 price increase by this date and anticipated that formal letters were likely to be issued in September or October. Ex. 1234.

90. 7/16/2012: A Thompson report indicated that Lafarge was telling customers to expect a 25% increase. Ex. 1690.

In addition to the anticipated increase, the report indicated that at "Lafarge also indicated that sometime between Labor Day and mid-October, they will go on 'controlled distribution' (i.e., allocation) in order to prevent excessive pre-buy activity." Ex. 1690.

When USG received the report, Ken Banas (Sr. Dr., Inv. Relations) cut out the portion regarding Lafarge noting that it was "worth passing along..." and forwarded it to senior staff at L&W and USG. Ex. 1690.

[*223] 91. 7/25/2012: A representative from Thompson called Craig Weisbruch (VP of Sales and Marketing, National); they spoke for about 8 minutes. Ex. 2167.

92. 7/25/2012: Ms. Thompson (Founder and Dir. of Research, Thompson) spoke with Ken Banas (Sr. Dir. Investor Relations, USG). Ex. 2168.

93. 7/25/2012: [112] Thompson report stated that manufacturers were discussing a price increase and that there was a potential for allocation by October. Ex. 1260

USG produced the report in discovery. Ex. 1260 (USG bates stamp).

94. 8/6/2012: In internal email, PABCO revealed its knowledge of other manufacturers' allocation plans. Ex. 1709.

In an August 6, 2012 email from Mark Burkhammer (Director of Sales, North, PABCO) to, inter alia, Foster Duval (Sales Manager, PABCO) and Ryan Luchetti (President, PABCO), he wrote: "I was told USG is going on allocation in September. We are also looking to allocate but I can't say I was ready to pull the trigger just yet. . . . Other manufacturers are doing the same planning. This will be an annual event to support increases." Ex. 1709.

95. 8/9/2012: Kathryn Thompson (Founder and Dir. of Research, Thompson) spoke with Ken Banas (Sr. Dir. Investor Relations, USG). Ex. 2168.

96. 8/10/2012: A representative of Thompson called Craig Weisbruch (Sr. VP Sales and Marketing, National); they spoke for approximately 20 minutes. Ex. 2167.

97. 8/16/2012: Internal CertainTeed communications revealed that CertainTeed considered adding a new shift at the Roxboro plant to respond to increased [113] demand. Ex. 136.

Because of increased demand, Certain Teed considers adding another shift to the Roxboro plan. But, the plant manager writes to Dave Engelhardt (Pres., Gypsum-North America, CertainTeed) that it will take 12-16 weeks to add the shift safely. Ex. 136.

98. 8/20/2012: Around the time that National was preparing its 2013 price increase letter (Ex. 2201), Steve Martinez (unknown position, National) spoke with a representative from Longbow Research Group for approximately 4 minutes 44 seconds. Ex. 2149.

99. 8/22/2012, 10:30 am: Longbow analysts spoke with a representative from Eagle Materials (American). Ex. 1692.

Zoran Miling (Analyst, Longbow) sent Garik Shmois (Analyst, Longbow) an email on August 23 at 11:46 am asking at what time the two had talked to Eagle the day before. Garick Schmois responded: "Right about 10:30. Nice. We published at about 12:30. So he definitely was typing an email when we were talking. National never had a chance to lead given Eagle was so fast." Ex. 1692.

100. 8/22/2012, 11:30 am: American distributed a formal price increase letter for 2013. The increase announced was 25% over 2012 prices. Ex. 1691.

[*224] 101. 8/22/2012, 12:30pm: Longbow distributed a report [114] with the "scoop" that National would put out an official price increase later that day. Ex. 1693.

Ken Banas (Sr. Dir. Investor Relations, USG) received the Longbow report and forwarded it to the higher ups at L&W and USG, writing:

> [T]he scoop [is] that National is putting out an official 30% price increase letter for next year later today, with "official" language vs. the "to-be-modified" guidance of 20-30% from Eagle earlier in the year.
> Channel check info from Longbow shows wallboard supply is getting very tight in many regions, with effective capacity utilization much higher than actual utilization. They comment all of this points to the likelihood of pricing traction next year.

Ex. 1693.

When deposed, Craig Weisbruch (Sr. VP Sales and Marketing, National) acknowledged that National was prepared to send the 2013 letter on August 22, 2013, but decided not to send the letter until September 6, 2012. Ex. 1134 (Weisbruch dep.) at 300:9-303:3. He provided no reason for why that was.

102. 8/22/2012: Kathryn Thompson (Founder and Dir. of Research, Thompson) called Craig Weisbruch (Sr. VP Sales and Marketing, National); they spoke for just over three minutes. Ex. 2167.

103. 8/22/2012: Garik Shmois [115] (Analyst, Longbow) spoke with Ken Banas (Sr. Dir. Investor Relations, USG). Ex. 2168.

104. 8/22/2012, 1:51pm: An internal USG email provided that "[i]n an effort to manage anticipated surge buying for the remainder of 2012, we are implementing our Controlled Distribution process for all wallboard shipment on Monday, August 27th." Ex. 1712.

105. 8/22/2012, 2:38pm: Internal TIN email stated that "[d]ue to increased order volume the past two weeks, the gypsum management team has decided to implement a managed distribution plan for gypsum wallboard until further notice." Ex. 1711.

106. 8/23/2012: Internal CertainTeed emails indicated that National and American had gone on allocation in certain areas, and that CT "need[s] to discuss process to Implement our allocation as it appears conditions are upon us." Ex. 2203.

107. 8/23/2012: Bill Kelly (Dir. Dealer Sales, National) called Zoran Miling (Analyst, Longbow); they spoke for just under two minutes. Ex. 2177.

108. ~8/29/2012: National states that "between the time that [National] announced its 2013 price increase and the effective date of that increase, [National] instituted product allocation on a regional bases, as needed." Defs. Resp. to PSOF ¶ 440.

109. [116] 8/31/2012: In internal PABCO email, PABCO revealed its knowledge of other manufacturers' allocation-plan start dates. Ex. 1710.

[*225] 110. 9/5/2012: In internal USG email, USG Plant Manager expressed frustration about slowing production. Ex. 1716.

Bruce Allen (Plant Manager, USG) writes:

> I'm being told we are only scheduled to run the Sigurd Plant three days due to USG controlled allocation. We have the opportunity and staffed [sic] to run four days. . . . We have customers wanting board. So we are going to let our competition pick up our surplus business? And if business is indeed picking up we are going to give it to our competition? I'm being told USG logistics, District sales and Manufacturing VP are all on board with this.

Ex. 1716. The email was sent to Jeffrey Barth and Jeffrey Broker. The Court does not have a record of their job titles, but by the context of the email, the email appears to be an internal USG communication.

111. 9/6/2012: National issued its 2013 price increase letter, announcing a 30% increase across the board. Ex. 1694.

112. 9/13/2012: CertainTeed announced a 30% price increase effective 1/2/2013. Ex. 1946.

Previously, on 8/22/2012, upon receiving American's 8/22/2012 [117] letter, Dave Engelhardt (Pres., Gypsum-NA, CertainTeed) wrote to Steve Hawkins (VP of US Sales, Certain Teed): "Beat us to the punch. We don't have a choice now but to support 25%. Do you think anyone else will come out lower?" Ex. 1695.

113. 10/5/2012: Longbow issued a report stating that 50% of wallboard manufacturers had announced a price increase of 25-30% (AG, CT, Lafarge and NG) and that the other 50% were expected to announce in next 30-60 days. Ex. 1696.

The report also recorded an industry contact as stating: "As strange as it sounds, allocation is fairly uniform across all of the manufacturers. There may be some isolated breakdowns in discipline—we haven't seen any—but some of those players in the past that I would label as first offenders have been rigid in their position[.]" Ex. 1696.

114. 10/9/2012: PABCO internally distributed a September 2012 Market Condition Report, revealing PABCO's fear that competitors could react negatively to any perceived attempt to grab market share. Ex. 1707.

Under the "General Market Conditions" heading, the report indicated:

> [T]here is little-to-no resistance to the January 1, 2013 price increase. Quit [sic] a change from last year when all the naysayers [118] were preaching the proposed increase would be a massive failure. Firmness across > the board is the key to maximize our success... any perceived weakness or attempt to grab additional share with reduced pricing by any of the players could throw the price back into a destructive downward spiral.

Ex. 1707.

In his deposition, Phil Kohl (VP Sales and Marketing, PABCO) confirmed that [*226] PABCO was concerned about sending the wrong "signal" to competitors by extending a lower price past January's announced increase. PABCO didn't want to undercut the price and for the other manufacturers to think PABCO was trying to undercut price increase. Ex. 1118 (Kohl dep.) at 226:12-228:19.

115. 10/15/2012: Lafarge issued its price increase letter reflecting a 30% increase for 2013. Ex. 1697.

116. 10/24/2012: PABCO issued its price increase letter reflecting a 30% increase for 2013. Ex. 1698.

117. 10/25/2012: PABCO confirmed to a customer that PABCO would not provide job quotes for 2013. Ex. 1672.

118. 10/26/2012: In an internal USG email exchange (10/22-26), Scott Blanchard (VP of Sales, USG) wrote, "I do not think it is in our best interest to move off 'controlled distribution' at this point. CertainTeed and GP [119] will see it and react." Ex. 1721.

119. 10/30/2012: Craig Kesler (CFO, Eagle) called Garik Shmois (Analyst, Longbow); the call lasted approximately 3 minutes. Ex. 2178.

120. 11/16/2012: USG issued price increase letter explaining that the prices would increase and that customers would be contacted individually regarding the amount of the increase. Ex. 1701.

A separate email on November 18, 2012 indicated to sales personnel that the price increase would be 25%. Ex. 1673.

121. 11/26/2012: TIN issued price increase letter reflecting a 30% increase. Ex. 1702.

122. 11/30/2012: L&W noted that it could not accommodate a lower price for any customer because to do so "would show our competition that we are protecting work and that would have the potential to harm the chances of this increase sticking." Ex. 1654.

Marty Brand (VP of Sales and Operations, L&W) rejected a regional sales manager's request for a flexible price, explaining that "it would show our competition that we are protecting work and that would have the potential to harm the chances of this increase sticking." Ex. 1654. Mr. Brand closed by writing, "Hold firm and keep me informed if you hear what the competition is doing in your markets." [120] Ex. 1654.

123. 12/5/2012: Bill Kelly (Dir. Dealer Sells, National) called Zoran Miling (Analyst, Longbow); the call lasted approximately 14 minutes. Ex. 2177.

124. 12/7/2012: Longbow issues two reports, and USG leadership is pleased with the report on USG.

One of the Longbow reports was a summary of USG's meetings with investors in the week leading up to the report. In an internal USG email, Ken Banas (Sr. VP of Investor Relations, USG), wrote that he had spent three days with Garik Shmois (Analyst, Longbow) talking to investors, and that he thought Mr. Shmois "did an accurate job of capturing our key messages around L&W strategic focus, deleveraging the balance sheet and [USG]'s commitment to 2013 pricing" in the Longbow report. Ex. 1237.

Relevant to those messages, the Longbow report included such lines as: "[W]e [*227] heard all the right things about USG's willingness to support the industry's January 1 price increase . . . Our discussions with management confirms that 'they get it' in that pricing is more important than volume . . . and that disruptive pricing behavior on the company's part could quickly undermine the pricing strength seen over the past year." Ex. 2195. At least one manufacturer, [121] Lafarge, received the report. Ex. 1364.

125. 12/11/2012: A representative of Longbow called Craig Weisbruch (Sr. VP Sales and Operations, National); the call lasted approximately 37 minutes. Ex. 2167; Ex. 1706 (call notes).

Garik Shmois (Analyst, Longbow) created thorough notes from the call, portions of which appear nearly verbatim in a December 18, 2012 Longbow report. Ex. 1674.

126. 12/13/2012: Garik Shmois (Analyst, Longbow) spoke with Ken Banas (Sr. Dir. Investor Relations, USG). Ex. 2168.

127. 12/17/2012: Garik Shmois (Analyst, Longbow) spoke with Ken Banas (Sr. Dir. Investor Relations, USG). Ex. 2168.

128. 12/18/2012: Longbow report indicated that manufacturers' elimination of job quotes remained in effect for 2013 and commented on the controlled distribution and capacity of manufacturers going into 2013. The report confirmed that CertainTeed, National, American, and Georgia-Pacific were not offering job quotes. The report also commented on manufacturer allocation. Ex. 1674.

As for the elimination of job quotes, the report indicated:

> We note that throughout the course of the downturn, job quotes obstructed manufacturers' ability to ultimately realize price increases; however since [122] the elimination of this practice, manufacturers have been able to shift price risk from themselves and onto the distributor and ultimately the contractor as distributors themselves . . . have remained largely disciplined. Again, this has allowed for greater price certainty in the market and thereby has allowed contractors and distributors to compete more on service rather than price.

Ex. 1674 at 9.

As to future pricing:

> Future Pricing: The entire industry has thus far communicated their pricing intentions for 2013 in written form. National Gypsum, CertainTeed, Lafarge and Temple-Inland have each announced an increase of 30% whereas American Gypsum (EXP) has announced an increase of 25%. Neither Georgia-Pacific nor USG have announced a dollar amount, through [sic] distribution contacts report that each is communicating an increase of $40/MSF, which is ~30%. Additionally, as L&W is out with a $50/MSF price increase, we believe 2013 pricing will exceed our prior expectations.

Ex. 1674 at report p. 2.

129. 12/21/2012: In USG's Form 10-K for financial year ending 12/21/2012, USG indicated that demand was low for wallboard. Ex. 1222 at 7.

[*228] 130. 12/26/2012: Greg Salah (Sr. VP Sales and Marketing, [123] USG) wrote that there couldn't be any "slop over" with price despite shipping issues because of potential market reaction. Ex. 1708.

In response to emails that severe weather was causing shipping problems, Greg Salah wrote internally at USG: "We cannot do any slop over. To great of a risk of perception that we are pursuing share at the expense of price." Ex. 1708.

XIII. Evidentiary Findings Pursuant to Fed. R. Evid. 104

The evidence just presented by the Court was presented without an eye towards the admissibility of the evidence. This is in part because the Court can consider both admissible and inadmissible evidence in determining whether certain evidence is admissible under the co-conspirator exception, as discussed in the Bourjaily sections, supra. Before confronting the inferences that Plaintiffs ask the Court to reach, the Court will address the three primary exceptions under which much of Plaintiffs' evidence is deemed admissible.

A. Parties' Statements

This is a relatively straightforward finding dictated by Federal Rule of Evidence 801(d)(2). The Court has limited its review of the evidence concerning statements made by officers/employees of each Defendant to those that the evidence warranted the Court finding was a "party's agent [124] or employee on a matter within the scope of that relationship and while it existed." All of Defendants' representatives quoted in this memorandum were either officers or managers who had some involvement with, or responsibility for, pricing drywall during the relevant time period. Thus, their statements are admitted against the speaker's employer.

B. Business Records

Defendants have objected to the Longbow and Thompson reports as inadmissible hearsay. See Defs. Resp. PSOF ¶ 273. Notably, Zoran Miling of Longbow and Kathryn Thompson of Thompson were both deposed. Ex. 1122 (Miling dep.); Ex. 1131 (Thompson dep.). Thus, their first hand impressions are not hearsay.

For the sole purpose of summary judgment, the Court concludes that the hearsay portions of their reports are admissible under Rule 803(6), the business records exception to the hearsay rule, to the extent that any hearsay statements support their opinions of the market. Some portions of the reports quote unnamed industry insiders. The Court has not relied on any of those portions of the reports in deciding whether Plaintiffs have satisfied their summary judgment showing, so the Court does not need to determine at this time whether those [125] portions of the reports will be admissible.

C. Co-Conspirator Statements & Bourjaily

As noted above, pursuant to Rule 104(b), the Court delayed making findings until it reviewed the evidence in the record. Having reviewed the most relevant evidence, the Court pauses to make threshold findings pursuant to Bourjaily and Federal Rule of Evidence 104. [*229] Under Bourjaily, the Court's ruling is one of admissibility of evidence only, and is not a ruling as to sufficiency of Plaintiffs' evidence to prove liability as to any specific Defendant. Hearsay evidence may be admissible under the co-conspirator rule, as to only some Defendants. It is not necessarily a conclusion that the overall evidence is sufficient to deny that Defendant's motion for summary judgment, especially in an antitrust case where special rules apply on motions for summary judgment.[34]

HN20[] The fact that hearsay is admitted under Rule 104 as to a particular Defendant, does not necessarily compel a conclusion that Defendant has joined an agreement on prices in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350, 375-76 (3d Cir. 2004).

Given the size of this industry, the large amount of money paid by the two settling Defendants, and the exposure to damages faced by the remaining Defendants, the Court has taken a long pause before making any rulings that will expose Defendants to liability, especially given Defendants' testimonial denials and vociferous arguments that Plaintiffs have failed in their efforts to show that an agreement existed.

HN21[] In considering the Court's duty under Rule 104, Third Circuit law requires the Court make rulings favorable to Plaintiffs if Plaintiffs have presented, by a preponderance of evidence, sufficient facts to warrant admissibility.

Based on the review of the facts presented by Defendants in their motion for summary judgment, the factual assertions put forth by Plaintiffs in their responses, and the legal arguments made by both parties, the Court has come to nine findings under Federal Rule of Evidence 104:

[127] 1. The depressed economy that the drywall manufacturers endured following the 2008 recession, which affected many parts our nation's economy, was a frustrating time for all of the manufacturers in this industry. A number of individual efforts to raise prices failed, which a jury may find contradicts Defendants' assertions that the industry had always practiced "price followership." The communications with customers and industry analysts show, without any doubt, that all U.S. drywall manufacturers were anxious for the opportunity to raise prices.

2. The price increase that was announced in fall 2011 to become effective January 1, 2012, was historically a very large, if not the largest ever, percentage increase, announced at 35% for most manufacturers, and was followed by all Defendants, resulting in increased prices to purchasers.

3. Accompanying the price increase was the elimination of job quotes. Job quotes are a pricing mechanism, and they had long served as an effective way for purchasers to achieve discounts from list prices. The Court concludes a jury could find that the elimination of job quotes either was intended to cause, or Defendants knew would result in, very few if any discounts [128] from the announced price increase. A jury could conclude that the elimination of job quotes resulted in a form [*230] of price maintenance. Plaintiffs have produced evidence that shows that each Defendant enforced elimination of job quotes during calendar years 2012-2013.

4. There are at least some actions taken by several of Defendants that could be considered as conduct against their self-interest, at least as that term has been defined in antitrust jurisprudence following Matsushita.

5. The record of this case shows several intercorporate communications. Many documents show very frequent discussions about prices between Defendants and analysts or customers. The Court agrees with Defendants that some of the evidence of pricing communications is, on its own, normal, innocuous, and insufficient to allow any inference of conspiracy. However, some of these communications could be interpreted as encouragement or affirmation that price increases announced in and following September 2011 would be adhered to.

6. Concerning Plaintiffs' theory that Defendants communicated with each other through analysts at Longbow and Thompson (the "conduit theory"), the Court finds, in what appears to be a novel factual [129] situation, the above

[34] "It is argued that a preponderance of the evidence test usurps the function of the jury to determine whether a conspiracy exists. This has surface appeal until it is remembered that what is involved here is a ruling on the admission or exclusion of particular evidence, and on this question only. As with all such judicial decisions on admissibility, the effect upon the outcome may be profound, [126] but this comes from the ruling itself and not from the manner in which the law requires the trial judge to make it." James R. Snyder Co. v. Associated Contractors of Am., Detroit Chapter, Inc., 677 F.2d 1111, 1117 (6th Cir. 1982).

chronology shows frequent use of Thompson's and Longbow's communications for pricing information, as well as for market reports. However, exchange of market information, including prices, is not necessarily evidence of agreement. Admitting these facts into evidence as to all Defendants may allow a jury to determine whether the use of analysts was a "facilitating device" that enabled at least some Defendants to communicate with each other under the guise of providing highly detailed, and often confidential, pricing information about their own company and others. The conduit evidence may also be a form of "signaling" between competitors that would have allowed Defendants to conclude that they were maintaining the increased prices and elimination of job quotes.

7. The expert opinions offered by Plaintiffs support the above findings, allowing admissibility of hearsay evidence. Although, by themselves, the expert opinions would not warrant a conclusion that Plaintiffs had met their burden of proof, under established Third Circuit precedent, the Court is within its discretion in citing and relying on the experts' opinions as having some relevance on Defendants' motions. [130] It is appropriate to consider these opinions on the pending motions for summary judgement because a jury will be entitled, if finding Plaintiffs' experts credible, to rely on those opinions as part of its review of the evidence to determine whether Plaintiffs have proved that an agreement existed.

8. Under Rule 104, taking all the evidence in the light most favorable to Plaintiffs, Plaintiffs have shown by a preponderance of the evidence that an agreement existed, as to at least some Defendants. Plaintiffs' evidence is more than merely "ambiguous" and proves sufficient to allow a jury to find that these hearsay statements, and perhaps others not specifically mentioned in this memorandum, were made during and in furtherance of an agreement by Defendants American, National, PABCO and Lafarge. Under Bourjaily and its progeny, the hearsay evidence cited by Plaintiffs is admissible against these Defendants to the extent the statements were made during and in furtherance of the conspiracy. Whether it proves enough to deny the motion for summary judgment as to these Defendants will be discussed below, individually.

9. Plaintiffs' evidence as to Defendant Certain Teed is not sufficient to show that [131] CertainTeed participated in the [*231] conspiracy. Therefore, the Court finds that the hearsay statements made by other Defendants or their agents, even when about CertainTeed, are not admissible against CertainTeed as statements of co-conspirators.

XIII. Plaintiffs' Theory of the Drywall Conspiracy

Relying on the evidence outlined in the chronology, Plaintiffs argue that a jury could draw inferences that Defendants entered an agreement to fix prices. Specifically, Plaintiffs argue that culpable inferences can be drawn from (1) the timing and similarity of Defendants' announcements of the elimination of job quotes and the 2012 and 2013 price increases, (2) Defendants' communications with one another in close proximity to major price announcements or under otherwise suspicious circumstances, (3) Defendants' communications with research analysts, and (4) Defendants' non-price conduct (e.g., restricting supply), which facilitated the success of the increases.

The Court acknowledges that Plaintiffs have provided no "smoking guns," and that courts in this circuit "have been cautious in accepting inferences from circumstantial evidence in cases involving allegations of horizontal price-fixing among [132] oligopolists." In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350, 358 (3d Cir. 2004). But even keeping this in mind, based on Plaintiffs' arguments and the record evidence, the Court concludes that when Plaintiffs' evidence is considered as a whole, there is substantial evidence, ranging temporally from Spring 2011 through the end of 2012, from which a jury could conclude that at least some Defendants reached an agreement with at least one other competitor. Cf. Petruzzi's IGA Supermarkets, Inc. v. Darling-Delaware Co., Inc., 998 F.2d 1224, 1233 (3d Cir. 1993) ("We consider [the plaintiff's] evidence as a whole and with the reasonable inferences that we can draw from it.").

A. Timing and Similarity of Defendants' Announcements Related to Elimination of Job Quotes and the 2012 and 2013 Price Increases

Defendants do not dispute that they eliminated job quotes and announced price increases around the same time. Nor do they dispute that they did so with knowledge that the other manufacturers were doing the same. In fact, Defendants argue that they eliminated job quotes and increased prices because the other manufacturers were doing so. There is significant evidence supporting Defendants' arguments that Plaintiffs' evidence in this vein permits an inference of no more than price followership. And Defendants are correct that the Court must not rely on mere [133] price followership activity because price followership is expected in oligopolistic markets.

The Court has nonetheless provided a fairly detailed review of the facts leading up to the price increases in January 2012 and January 2013 and will provide review of Plaintiffs' arguments related to those facts. Evidence that participants in an oligopolistic market acted the same way at the same time will always be insufficient, standing alone, to defeat a summary judgment motion. But, the timing and content of the manufactures' announcements is relevant to Plaintiffs' showing, even though the evidence in isolation is not dispositive.

1. Pricing Practices Prior to Fall 2011

Between 2010 and the September 20, 2011 American announcement, Defendants attempted seven price increases. Plaintiffs argue that the increases were all unsuccessful and also attribute the following characteristics to those increases:

- Usually one competitor would attempt to take market share and ends [*232] up wrecking the increase. PSOF ¶ 163.
- One of the larger manufacturers (National or USG) would lead typically the increase. PSOF ¶ 165.

- Increases were usually announced approximately 30 days before their effectiveness (presumably [134] because it was difficult to anticipate conditions more than 30 days out). PSOF ¶ 166.
- Summer and early fall were the best times for an increase, but winter was inhospitable to increases. PSOF ¶¶ 167-68.

Defendants deny that the prior increases had these attributes. They also deny that the increases failed, admitting only "that some Defendants tried to raise prices at least seven times between January 2010 and fall 2011 with various levels of success." Defs. Resp. PSOF ¶ 162. And Defendants "deny that market conditions did not support those attempts or that they did not result in price appreciation." Id.

2. Price Increase & Elimination of Job Quotes Effective January 2012

In fall 2011, the status quo for pricing in the drywall industry changed dramatically. Ex. 1263; see Ex. 1085 (Lamb Report) ("Job quotes were an integral part of the industry, and their near simultaneous virtual elimination by Defendants in the last quarter of 2011 created a structural change in the Paper-backed Gypsum Wallboard industry.").

a. American Announcement

In a letter to customers on September 20, 2011, American announced a move to calendar-year pricing, a 35% price increase, and the elimination of job quotes. [135] Ex. 1489. The letter was short and to the point:

> To our Customers:
> Effective January 1, 2012, we will implement a 35% price increase on all gypsum wallboard products. This increased price (up 35%) will be your price for the entire year of 2012. This increase applies to all segments of the business.
> Effective immediately, we will no longer be providing job quotes. We thank you for your continued support.
> Sincerely,
> American Gypsum Company

Keith Metcalf
Sr. VP of Marketing, Sales & Distribution

Ex. 1489. As noted in a Longbow report, American's announcement reflected a "new approach to pricing," including five features that differentiated it from prior price-increase attempts in the drywall market:

1. The elimination of job quotes — the list price will now be the purchase price
2. The duration of the increase — it's good for the entire year and will be the only one
3. The lead time in advance of the increase
4. The size of the increase
5. The content of the increase letter

Ex. 1263 at 1, 3.

Although this price announcement was substantially larger than those prior, American did not engage in any documented analysis prior to announcing these changes. Plaintiffs point out that American produced over [136] 450,000 pages of documents in this litigation, yet Plaintiffs were unable to locate a single document in American Gypsum's production setting forth any analysis, study, or modelling of the plan to eliminate job quotes or raise prices by 35% on January 1, 2012. PSOF ¶ 233. American asserts that it reached its decision during [*233] undocumented discussions between three members of senior leadership. Ex. 48 (Powers decl.) ¶¶ 30-38; Ex. 50 (Metcalf decl.) ¶¶ 17-22. But American has not identified any contemporaneous documents that memorialize its process.

Relying in part on one of Defendants' experts, Plaintiffs argue that the lack of written analysis is suspicious. Certain Teed's expert, Dr. Barry Harris, testified that he would have expected a firm making this dramatic a shift from industry practices to have done more (e. g., conducting customer research, considering potential responses from competitors, evaluating the impact of the announcement on the manufacturer's operations and financials) before making the announcement.[35] Ex. 1110 (Harris dep.) at 67:8-68:24.

b. USG Announcement

Other manufacturers quickly followed American's lead. USG was the first manufacturer to issue a formal announcement, distributing a letter to customers on September 28, 2011 that announced its elimination job quotes and implementation calendar-year pricing. No specific price was announced, but USG promised to notify customers of the 2012 price on December 1, 2011.

Although USG never provided a formal letter to all customers providing a uniform price increase, by October 5, USG's senior leadership approved the distribution of guidance for dealers of a 35% increase in prices. Ex. 1508. Ultimately, USG decided to allow prices to vary from market to market. According to USG, the final price increase [138] was below 30% in every geographic market and below 20% in over one-third of geographic markets. DSOF ¶ 663.[36]

c. National Announcement

National released its letter on September 30, 2011, but prior to that date, it had already internally and externally indicated that it would follow American's lead. The day after American distributed its announcement, National [35] Defendants object to Plaintiffs' interpretation on Dr. Barry Harris's testimony, arguing that in this context Dr. Harris was explaining [137] the types of actions that Certain Teed undertook in making its announcement. The Court rejects this reading. Although Dr. Harris was discussing the steps Certain Teed took, Dr. Harris also agreed that there were "important business reasons" for a company to take steps such as those taken by CertainTeed and that he would expect a company to take similar measures prior to making a decision to eliminate job quotes, dramatically increase prices, and shift to calendar-year pricing.

[36] Plaintiffs argue that "to the extent USG varied its price increase amounts, such variation is attributable to existing differences in prices prior to January 1, 2012." Pls. Resp. DSOF ¶ 655.

placed a moratorium on job quoting by sending an internal email to area managers. Exs. 1500, 1510. That same day, Craig Weisbruch (Sr. VP of Sales and Marketing, National) indicated externally that National would follow American's lead, reporting to a Thompson Research Group analyst that American's announcement "is the beginning of the manufacturers saying we can't survive in this unchanged climate for two or three more years. If there is going to be no volume increase, then there needs to be a new clearing price that allows us to be profitable at current volumes." Ex. 1499. National's Director of National Accounts testified that he did not recall [139] whether National considered what National would do if the other manufacturers did not also eliminate job quotes. Ex. 1138 (Wood dep.) at 141:10-17.

[*234] d. CertainTeed Announcement

CertainTeed distributed a letter eliminating job quotes on October 3, 2011[37] (though they had unofficially stopped quoting jobs by at least September 29, 2011). Exs. 1299, 1517. Certain Teed promised to provide the new 2012 price by November 15, 2011.

CertainTeed opened its letter by explaining that the housing market "continues to face very depressed market conditions . . . with little expectation of real improvement within the coming year." Ex. 1299.

e. Lafarge Announcement

Lafarge sent a customer letter on October 4, 2011, announcing the immediate elimination of job quotes and the implementation of calendar-year pricing, along with a 35% increase. Ex. 1522. Lafarge's VP of Sales (Mr. DeMay) testified that he did not recall anyone at the company putting anything in writing to justify these changes. Ex. 1102 (DeMay dep.) at 151:17-21.

f. TIN Announcement

On October 11, 2011, TIN sales staff were informed that TIN planned to support the January 2012 increase. TIN never [140] formally announced the elimination of job quotes, but job quotes were eliminated by mid-October 2011. Exs. 1503, 1523.

g. PABCO Announcement

PABCO formally announced the elimination of job quotes, implementation of a calendar-year price, and a 35% price increase on October 12, 2011. Ex. 1320. But prior to this announcement, PABCO had already curtailed job quotes. Ex. 1095 (Burkhammer dep.) at 120:20-22. The 35% price increase was the highest single increase that PABCO had ever announced, though "there had been prior years where the total combined amount of price increase announcements issued by PABCO exceeded 35%." Ex. 93 (Lucchetti decl.) ¶ 32.

h. Implementation & Results

As reflected in the below chart, by January 1, 2012, American, USG, National, Certain Teed, Lafarge, and PABCO had formally announced the elimination of job quotes and a shift to calendar-year pricing.[38] And all Defendants except USG had formally announced a price increase amount of approximately 35%.

[38] Plaintiffs attempt to make much of the fact that Defendants used similar language in their letters to customers in fall 2011. But it is undisputed that Defendants received copies of the other manufacturers' letters through [141] legitimate means after each

CertainTeed	10/3/2011	35-37%*	Yes
Lafarge	10/4/2011	35%	Yes

*percentage price increase announced after initial letter

The amount of the announced increase that was actually realized by Defendants is contested, but Plaintiffs' expert concluded that Defendants were "able to implement significant price increases in 2012." Ex. 1085 at 78.

2. Events Leading up to the 2013 Price Increase

Even before the 2012 pricing went into effect, the amount of the calendar-year price for 2013 was already being considered by [142] at least one manufacturer. Through an internal USG email, sales staff were instructed that they should not quote any jobs for 2013 and that "[t]he price guidance we are providing our customers is +20% from your January 2012 price for all of 2013." Ex. 1671. The email did clarify that the percentage would be confirmed at a later date. Id.

By January 27, 2012, American was providing "guidance" about the price increases that could be expected from manufacturers for January 2013. Ex. 1172. Keith Metcalf (Sr. VP Sales, Marketing, and Distribution, American) wrote to Susan Hall (Regional Sales Director, American): "We are not ready to put a[n] official notice out yet." Ex. 1172. But Metcalf told Ms. Hall that she could send a customer an email letting him know that "for 2013 you will see increases from manufacturers up to 30% on today's numbers." Ex. 1172. In Mr. Metcalf's deposition, Plaintiffs' counsel drew attention to the fact that Mr. Metcalf referred to "manufacturers, plural" in the email, but Mr. Metcalf responded by agreeing that "[t]he document states that, but I have no knowledge of that happening." Ex. 1124 (Metcalf dep.) at 237:3-20. Mr. Metcalf said that he didn't know which manufacturers [143] he was referring to the email, though Plaintiffs' counsel never asked Mr. Metcalf the source of the information. Id. at 237:21-238:1.

[*236] In early February 2012, TIN also provided at least one customer with 2013 pricing guidance of a $40 upswing from 2012 pricing. Ex. 1683.

But it wasn't until spring 2012 that plans for a 2013 price increase truly got underway.

a. Pricing Guidance Following the Drake Group Meeting manufacturer made its announcements public (e.g., the announcement was forwarded from costumers to manufacturers). Thus, the Court does not consider the similarity of the language used in the manufacturer's letters probative. See Elevator Antitrust Litig., 502 F.3d 47, 51 (2d Cir. 2007) (declining to find an inference of conspiracy from the defendants' similar contract language because "[s]imilar contract language can reflect the copying of documents that may not be secret").

From February 25-27, 2012, senior executives from USG, National, American, and CertainTeed attended a Drake Group event in Austin, Texas. Lafarge and PABCO did not attend. In USG's notes recapping the Drake Group Meeting, Scott Blanchard (VP Sales — West, USG) provided "main takeaways," one of which being that "[n]o manufacturer has moved price." Ex. 1638. Mr. Blanchard also noted that USG had been providing 2013 pricing guidance at 20-25% increase, but that "further discussion is necessary internally at USG." Id.

On March 1, 2012, three days after the conclusion of the meetings, American became the first manufacturer to provide formal 2013 pricing guidance. Keith Metcalf (Sr. VP of Marketing, Sales, and Operations, American) sent a letter to American's customers, writing: "Your January [144] 2013 prices from American are anticipated to be in the range of 25%-30% higher than your January 2012 prices." Ex. 1678.

Based on internal National emails, it appears that National leadership knew that American was going to take this action before the letter was sent. Ex. 1677. In an email providing a summary of the Drake Group meeting, Bill Kelly of National wrote that dealers had told him that American would soon be providing written guidance. Ex. 1677.[39]

Some of the other manufacturers followed suit by permitting sales staff to provide verbal guidance. On March 7, 2012, TIN advised its sales staff that, upon being asked by customers, sales staff could tell customers to "use today's price plus no more than 30%." Ex. 1684. Similarly, on March 10, USG instructed its sales team that they could verbally tell customers to anticipate a 25% price increase for January 2013. Ex. 1681. National initially drafted a letter to advise customers to expect an approximately 30% increase in January 2013, but ultimately [145] National opted not to send the letter, providing the information only verbally. Ex. 1686 (draft of letter); Ex. 1687 (script for providing verbal guidance to customers for 2013 pricing); Ex. 1134 (Weisbruch dep.) at 278:24 - 279:1. By April 2012, PABCO was also providing verbal guidance to expect a 25% increase in January 2013 over January 2012 prices, but this information was to be provided only to those customers who specifically asked. Exs. 1095 (Burkhammer dep.) at 156:1-18, 1688.

b. Fall 2012 Pricing Announcements

Plaintiffs have submitted evidence that, by the end of July 2012, all of the manufacturers were providing at least verbal guidance for a 20%-30% increase to go into effect in January 2013. Ex. 1690 (Lafarge); Exs. 1095, 1688 (PABCO); Ex. 1681 (USG); Ex. 1684 (TIN); Ex. 1687 (National); Ex. 1678 (American); see also Ex. 1234 (Longbow report) ("Most manufacturers have verbally communicated a 20-30% price increase should be expected for CY13. Formal letters will likely be issued in September or October.").

But the formal announcements didn't emerge until August 2012. Plaintiffs argue [*237] the sequence of communications allow the inference of an agreement.

On August 22, 2012, Longbow [146] announced a "scoop" that National was planning to issue a formal letter announcing a 30% price increase for January 2013. Ex. 1693. But it was American that distributed a formal price increase letter that day that announced a 25% increase over 2012 prices. Ex. 1691 (American letter); Ex. 1693 (Longbow announcement).

Despite Longbow's report to the contrary, National didn't actually distribute their letter on August 22. Ultimately, National distributed its letter on September 6, 2012, though Craig Weisbruch (VP of Sales and Marketing, National) acknowledged that National was prepared to send the 2013 letter on August 22, 2013. Ex. 1134 (Weisbruch dep.) at 300:9-303:3. In Mr. Weisbruch's deposition, he could not provide a reason as to why National delayed distributing its letter, but in his declaration, he implied that National held off because they "were very sensitive to the perception of antitrust concerns because the Florida Attorney General's Office had requested information from [National] relating to the January 2012 price increase." Ex. 210 ¶¶ 29-31.

[39] Defendants make a hearsay objection to Ex. 167. The Court rejects this objection because the document is being used to show notice and is not being offered for the truth of the matter asserted.

A week after the National announcement, on September 13, 2012, CertainTeed announced a 30% price increase. Ex. 1695.

The seas were [147] then quite for about a month. On October 15, 2012, Lafarge issued its price increase letter reflecting a 30% increase. Ex. 1697. Then PABCO issued a letter announcing its own 30% increase for 2013 on October 24, 2012. Ex. 1698. On November 16, 2014, USG issued a letter telling its customers that prices would increase in 2013. Ex. 1701. Instead of providing a price increase amount, the letter noted that customers would be provided a price list in early December. Ex. 1701. Then, on November 26, 2012, TIN also issued a price increase letter reflecting a 30% increase.

Manufacturers also continued to refuse job quotes in 2012 and 2013. Ex. 1674 (Longbow report).

The relevant case law specifies that similar price movements by competitors can be considered along with other evidence, in determining whether inferences favorable to plaintiffs are warranted. The evidence reviewed above does show very similar price increases as to both date and percentage of increase and, by January 2012, the uniform elimination of job quotes as a form of pricing.

B. Intercorporate Communications

There are four exchanges that Plaintiffs chiefly rely on to argue that Defendants were communicating with each other about [148] agreements: (1) internal American emails in April and September 2011, (2) phone calls between American and L&W shortly followed by calls between L&W and USG, (3) a phone call between PABCO and American the day before American announced the price increase, and (4) Thompson's notes about National's reference to "verbal agreements for a large price increase in 2013." The Court finds that many of these, when considered as a whole with the remainder of the evidence, could raise a reasonable inference about an agreement at least among some Defendants.[40]

[*238] Of course, the Court recognizes that HN23[] manufacturers are permitted to communicate with one another under most circumstances. A jury could consider the manufacturers' communications to be probative of an agreement only if there [149] is some evidence that exchanges of information had an impact on pricing decisions. In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig ., 385 F.3d 350, 369 (3d Cir. 2004); In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig., 166 F.3d 112, 125 (3d Cir. 1999).

1. Keith Metcalf's April and Early September Communications

In early April 2011, senior pricing officials from all of the U.S. wallboard manufacturers attended a major trade show in Las Vegas, Nevada. Both building-material suppliers and customers attended the meeting.

Approximately three weeks after the Las Vegas trade show, Keith Metcalf (Sr. VP of Sales, Marketing, and Operations, American), sent an email to American's Director of Sales for the South Region (Susan Hall). Ex. 1165. Ms. Hall had emailed Mr. Metcalf to ask how to quote jobs that would take place in calendar year 2012. Ex. 1165. Metcalf's entire response was "[p]lease don't quote anything in 2012. We may have a movement from all manufacturers to eliminate quotes." Ex. 1165 (emphasis added). When deposed, Mr. Metcalf said that he could not recall the source of the information that caused him to write that passage in April 2011. Ex. 1124 (Metcalf dep.) at [40] Consistent with Third Circuit precedent, the Court is not considering Plaintiffs' evidence of suspicious intercorporate and internal communications among manufacturers' low-level employees. See In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350, 368 (3d Cir. 2004) (HN22[] "[P]rice discussion among low level sales people has little probative weight."); In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig., 166 F.3d 112, 125 (3d Cir. 1999) ("Evidence of sporadic exchanges of shop talk among field sales representatives who lack pricing authority is insufficient to survive summary judgment.").

140:19-143:11.[41] Based on the timing of the email in relation to the Las Vegas trade meeting, Plaintiffs ask the Court to infer that Defendants discussed the elimination of job quotes at the Las [150] Vegas trade meeting.[42]

Then, on September 2, 2011, Mr. Metcalf sent another email that a jury could reasonably find suspicious. The email appears to have been directed to sales directors, but members of the American Gypsum leadership were also copied. Ex. 1482. In the email, Mr. Metcalf directed that "[e]ffective immediately, during the remaining time [151] for calendar 2011, no quotes should be given to a customer unless they hand you the PO's that day or make a commitment to [American] on that job for the balance of the year." Ex. 1482. He also instructed that staff should "hold off" on giving any job quotes for projects that would commence or extend to 2012 or beyond until September 19, 2011. Ex. 1482. At the close of the email, he acknowledged that "[s]ome of this may sound odd," and invited email recipients to call him if they had concerns. Ex. 1482.

A few weeks later, on September 20, 2011, one of the email recipients (Mike Wagstaff, position at American unknown) forwarded the email to Mary Schafer (VP of National Accounts, American) for clarification about whether he could provide a [*239] job quote on a specific project. Ms. Schafer had been copied on the original September 2, 2011 email. She responded by telling Mr. Wagstaff to pursue the project, explaining that the original September 2 email "was referencing an anticipated announcement from one or more of the big boys relative to job quoting. We're still waiting. Just want to proceed cautiously and not get locked in to big volume at low prices, especially if there is a game-changer event [152] on the near horizon." Ex. 2098.

Defendants have declined to make any hearsay objections to the Keith Metcalf emails, arguing instead that the document is irrelevant.[43]

2. September L&W Phone Calls

U.S. G. Corporation owns both U.S. G. Company ("USG"), a drywall manufacturer, and L&W Supply Company, a building-products distributor. Thus, L&W and USG are sister companies. Because USG sells wallboard to L&W, L&W is also a customer. But L&W also conducts business in some regions where USG does not. In those regions, L&W is a customer of American or PABCO. Plaintiffs argue that Defendants sometimes took advantage of L&W's customer-sister status with USG, using L&W as a middle-man to relay messages between drywall manufacturers.

One of these instances occurred in early [153] September 2011. On September 6, phone records reveal two calls between American and L& W that were followed shortly by a call between L&W and USG:

- 9/6/2011, 1:45PM: Keith Metcalf (Sr. VP Marketing, Sales, and Distribution, American) called Rob Waterhouse (Sr. VP of Sales and Operations, L& W); the call lasted 24 seconds. Ex. 2146.
- 9/6/2011, 1:48PM: Rob Waterhouse (Sr. VP of Sales and Operations, L&W) called Keith Metcalf (Sr. VP Marketing, Sales, and Distribution, American). The call lasted 4 minutes. Ex. 2187.

[41] Defendants have attempted to provide the basis for Mr. Metcalf's statement after the deposition. But the fact remains that Mr. Metcalf was unable to explain the basis at the deposition, even after preparing for four days. Pls. Response Br. at 26 n.47; Ex. 1124 (Metcalf dep.) at 140:19-143:11.

[42] Although Mr. Metcalf writes his email with the conditional "may," the Court finds that a jury could consider this email more than mere industry rumor in light of the senior leadership position of the author of the email and the timing of the email in relation to the Las Vegas trade meeting. See In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig., 166 F.3d 112, 135 (3d Cir.1999) ("[The] desultory collection of information 'on the street' by sales representatives is far removed from a concerted reciprocal exchange of important pricing and marketing information by the officers of major companies, particularly an exchange pursuant to an agreement.").

[43] Defendants have not raised any evidentiary objections to these emails, even though all of them came up in Plaintiff's Statement of Facts, in Defendants' reply briefing, and/or at the November 23 hearing. See PSOF ¶ 26 and 198, Joint Reply at 2, 21, and 32, and Hearing Tr. at 25-26, 29-31 (counsel for Certainteed), and 128-29 (all discussing Ex. 1165); PSOF 210 (discussing Ex. 1482); Joint Reply at 31 n.14, 70 (discussing Ex. 2098).

• 9/6/2011, 1:56PM: Rob Waterhouse (Sr. VP of Marketing and Sales, L&W) called Greg Salah (Sr. VP of Sales and Marketing, USG). The call lasted two minutes. Ex. 2187.

The next day, Mr. Salah sent an internal draft letter to Christopher Griffin (President, USG; Exec. VP of Operations at USG Corp.). The letter eliminated job quotes and promised calendar-year pricing, was post-dated as September 21, 2011, and was addressed to USG customers. In the email, Mr. Salah explained that he had sent the letter in anticipation of a conversation between Mr. Salah and Mr. Griffin later that week. Mr. Griffin also mentioned a meeting scheduled for September 21 "to review 2012 pricing strategy [154] which will include a second strategy being developed by the Sales Executive team." Ex. 2191.

Plaintiffs argue that the phone calls are suspiciously timed because the calls would have enabled Mr. Metcalf to funnel job-quote elimination information through Mr. Waterhouse at L&W. They rely on Mr. Salah's draft letter, sent the day following these calls, to show that the elimination of job quotes was in fact discussed on these calls. However, Mr. Salah had already sent drafts of this letter to his sales team on three occasions that predated the suspicious phone calls, including one email on September 2, 2011 that anticipated discussing [*240] the letter at the September 21 meeting. E.g., Exs. 769, 773, 775.

3. PABCO & American Phone Call

On September 19, 2011, David Powers (American, President) had a 19 minute call with Foster Duval (PABCO, Sales Manager).[44] Plaintiffs argue that although just a Sales Manager, Foster Duval was in fact a leader at PABCO, who had been hired because of his "high-level industry connections." Pls. Resp. Br. at 24. Defendants admit that Mr. Duval had long relationships with the Chairman, President and CEO of USG Corp.; the President and CEO of L&W; and the President of [155] American Gypsum. Defs. Resp. PSOF ¶¶ 82-84.

When deposed, Mr. Powers said this call reflects him returning a call from Mr. Duvall. Ex. 1128 at 220:24-222:3. Mr. Powers claims that he "seriously debated" whether to place the call because he knew American was about to release the letter. Ex. 1128 (Powers dep.) at 220:24-222:3. But Mr. Duvall was Mr. Powers' personal friend, and Mr. Duvall had recently endured multiple open-heart surgeries. Id. So Mr. Powers testified he decided to call Mr. Duvall because Mr. Powers was concerned for the health of his friend. Id. Mr. Powers claims that the two mostly discussed Mr. Duvall's health and family, but that they ended the call as they always did by slamming their former employer, USG, which involved talking about a lack of leadership in the industry. Id. at 222:07 — 223:09.

When deposed, Mr. Duvall could not remember the call or what was said on it, though he does not dispute that it happened. Ex. 1104 (Duvall dep.) at 182:10-22. But in an email, Mr. Duvall indicated [156] that more may have been discussed. The day after the call between Mr. Powers and Mr. Duvall, a customer forwarded the American announcement to Ryan Lucchetti (PABCO, President). Mr. Lucchetti forwarded the email to Mr. Duvall, writing, "Well here is the 1st." Ex. 1168. Mr. Duval responded: "Dave [from American] gave me a call yesterday and mentioned his frustration with the lack of leadership in the industry. Eliminating job quotes would be a great start for the price improvement." Id. The next day, Mr. Lucchetti responded, "Dave Powers is my new hero." Id.

Defendants concede that the phone call occurred; they disagree only with Plaintiffs' suggested inferences about the topics of the phone call. But the Court finds that the timing of the phone call relative to the announcement terminating job quotes and the PABCO email exchange that followed the American announcement, could both lend weight to the permissible inferences drawn from this phone call, in favor of Plaintiffs.

4. National's Reference to "[V]erbal[A]greements for a [L]arge[P]rice[I]ncrease in 2013"[45]

[44] Mr. Powers and Mr. Duval also had other calls in 2011, including May 17, 2011 (19 minutes), July 13, 2011 (18 minutes), and August 18, 2011 (31 minutes). Defs. Resp. to PSOF ¶ 28 (a).

Exhibit 1515 is a Thompson Research document that memorializes a number of conversations between Kathryn Thompson (Founder and Dir. of Research, Thompson) and Mr. [157] Weisbruch (VP of Sales and Marketing, National), ranging in date from February 10, 2011 through November 20, 2012.

The notes dated June 14, 2012 refer to "National Gypsum marketing in NYC." Ex. 1515. Following the bullet heading "2013 price increases?" the memorandum [*241] notes, "A: verbal agreements for a large price increase in 2013." Id. Ms. Thompson, the author of this document, was questioned heavily about these notes at her deposition. She neither confirmed nor denied that the speaker used the word "agreement," though she explained that her use of the word "agreement" in the memo did not necessarily mean that the word "agreement" was used in the conversation.

Plaintiffs argue that Ms. Thompson's notes should be considered as evidence of agreements among manufacturers to impose another large price increase in 2013. The Court agrees that a jury may so find.

Defendants argue that Mr. Weisbruch was not referring to agreements among manufacturers, but rather, was referring to agreements between National and its distributors. But, as noted above, the Court cannot simply adopt Defendants' argument as a matter of law when the document is susceptible to multiple reasonable interpretations. Although [158] Defendants' argument reveals one possible inference, Plaintiffs' interpretation of the evidence is equally reasonable. In an antitrust case, a defendant's use of the word "agreement" in relation to price cannot be considered merely ambiguous and insufficient to warrant inferences in favor of Plaintiffs.[46]

C. Communications with Research Analysts

Plaintiffs argue that Defendants relayed information to one another through research analysts, namely, analysts at Thompson Research Group[47] and Longbow Communications, and that by doing so, Defendants were able to signal to one another that they continued to participate in the agreement to increase prices (the "conduit theory"). The Court agrees that the evidence [159] can permit the inference that at least National and Lafarge used the research analysts to signal to the other manufacturers during the class period.[48] In other words, the interactions with research analysts might be considered a "facilitating practice" of an agreement regarding price.[49] However, the evidence is insufficient to permit the inference that Defendants actually reached an agreement by communicating through analysts.

[46] The Third Circuit has explained that the single use of a term synonymous with agreement "in a highly competitive business environment and in the face of continuing fierce competition is as consistent with independent behavior as it is with price-fixing." In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig., 166 F.3d 112, 127 (3d Cir. 1999). But the facts of Baby Food are distinguishable from the facts in this case. Most significantly, here, unlike Baby Food, the speaker who used the word "agreements" was a member of the senior leadership at National, not a low-level employee.

[47] The Court has previously described Thompson Research Group in greater detail. In re Domestic Drywall Antitrust Litigation, 300 F.R. D. 234 (E. D. Pa. May 15, 2014).

[48] The Court notes that both Ms. Thompson and Mr. Miling have testified under oath (and Mr. Shmois has similarly declared) that they were not aware of any unlawful agreement and they never promised to convey information in support of one. DSOF ¶¶ 1183-1185. Those denials, however, are not dispositive on the issue of whether Defendants used Thompson and Longbow as unwitting conduits to transmit information to themselves.

[49] "A 'facilitating practice' is an activity that makes it easier for parties to coordinate pricing or their behavior in an anticompetitive way. It increases the likelihood of a consequence offensive to antitrust policy." Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, *Fundamentals of Antitrust Law § 14.05(B)(1) [160] (Wolters Kluwer Law & Business, 4th ed. 2015 supp.). "[T]he label 'facilitating practice' is only an invitation to further analysis, not a license for automatic condemnation." Id. And the labeling of a practice as a facilitating practice is not a permanent one, but rather, it is made on a case-by-case basis. Id.

[*242] The Court will first provide background information on the analysts and their relationships with Defendants, then review Defendants' challenge to the legal viability of Plaintiffs' argument, and finally review the evidence supporting Plaintiffs' arguments that Defendants used the analysts to signal information to one another.

1. Analyst Background Information

The principal players are Kathryn Thompson (Founder and Dir. of Research, Thompson), Zoran Miling (Corp. Stock Analyst, Longbow); and Garik Shmois (Sr. Analyst, Longbow). PSOF ¶¶ 109-110; DSOF ¶¶ 1120-28, 1138; Ex. 1876; Ex. 1023 at 13-14; Ex. 1024.

Briefly summarized, Thompson and Longbow are in the business of generating investment advice. Both prepare reports that provide financial insight into businesses and industries for clients, such as large institutional investors. Both companies covered the drywall industry during [161] the relevant time period, and many Defendants obtained materials from one or both entities.

Critically, a key component of Thompson and Longbow's business models is soliciting information from industry insiders. Both Thompson and Longbow cultivated confidential contacts within the drywall industry and regularly spoke with them in an effort to make the best possible predictions and forecasts. Both companies contemporaneously documented their communications as well. E. g., Exs. 1515, 1269. Thompson and Longbow processed these interactions and other information and then disseminated reports to their customer base, either as flash reports in response to a breaking development or as regular industry updates as often as once or more per month. E.g., Ex. 1259 (flash report); Ex. 1201 (industry update).

2. Legal Viability of Plaintiffs' Conduit Theory

Plaintiffs do not cite any case law regarding the conduit theory, opting instead to treat claims of interactions between Thompson, Longbow, and Defendants as factual evidence in support of Plaintiffs' claim that Defendants conspired to fix prices. Pls. Resp. Br. at 45-49, 124. Defendants, by contrast, cite legal authority to argue that that Plaintiffs' [162] conduit theory is not a viable means of showing an antitrust conspiracy. Defs. Joint Opening Br. at 52-56; Defs. Joint Reply Br. at 27-30.

The Court is aware of only one Third Circuit case that is arguably relevant to the legal viability of Plaintiffs' conduit theory: In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 618 F.3d 300, 337 (3d Cir. 2010). There, HN24[] the Third Circuit indicated that an antitrust conspiracy that required a middle-man could nonetheless be considered a conspiracy. Id. Based on the Court's reading of Brokerage and the Court's survey of the non-binding law in this area, the Court concludes that Plaintiffs' conduit theory is legally viable.

a. Authority Supporting Plaintiffs' Conduit Theory

Defendants attempt to distinguish Plaintiffs' conduit theory from that in In re Titanium Dioxide Antitrust Litig., 959 F. Supp. 2d 799, 806 (D. Md. 2013), a case in which a district court denied the defendants' motion for summary judgment based in part on communications between the defendants and a third-party consultant. Defs. Reply Br. at 30 (citing In re Titanium Dioxide Antitrust Litig., 959 F.Supp. 2d 799, 806 (D. Md. 2013)).

The record in Titanium Dioxide reflected involvement by the third-party consultant in the pricing conspiracy. For example, emails reflected that > [*243] • one defendant asked the consultant to confirm a price increase from another, based on the consultant's "lofty position";

• that same defendant leaked [163] the consultant documents from a competitor and told the consultant not to "copy it verbatum [sic]" and to "screw up a few facts so it does not look like too much inside info"; and
• another defendant "as[ked the consultant] to do a little job for us — ascertain relative TiO2 inventory levels for some of our key competitors."

959 F. Supp. 2d at 812-13, 829.

Based on these exchanges, the District Court of Maryland found that the plaintiffs' evidence showed "the routine sharing of information between the individual firms and industry consultant Jim Fisher" and that these communications "support[ed] the Plaintiffs' theory that [Fisher] served as a conduit in the alleged price-fixing conspiracy." Id. at 810, 829. The court characterized this evidence as "evidence implying a traditional conspiracy." Id.

Similarly, the Court in *In re Polyurethane Foam Antitrust Litig., No. 1:10 MD 2196, 152 F. Supp. 3d 968, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15404, 2015 WL 520930, at 41 (N.D. Ohio Feb. 9, 2015) (unpublished), found that a scrap broker "served as a conduit for Defendant employees looking to build support for another underlay increase in March 2006."[50] The court noted that in a prior incident, the president of one defendant had asked the broker to send word to another defendant that "that it ought not go forward with a price increase because [the first defendant] had [164] backed off the same increase." *2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15404, [WL] at 12, 18.

These cases provide support for the conclusion that communications from Defendants to Thompson and Longbow could be indicia of a price fixing agreement. As discussed in greater detail below, evidence in the case at bar resembles the analyst activity in the Titanium and Polyurethane. Although Plaintiffs have not highlighted it, the Court notes that, despite Defendants' arguments to the contrary, the record reveals numerous instances in which the analysts directly communicated information shared by one Defendant with another Defendant either directly (e. g., through emailing one manufacturer notes about the analyst's interaction with another manufacturer) or indirectly (e.g., by quoting a manufacturer in an analyst report and then circulating those reports among Defendants).

b. Authority Undermining Plaintiffs' Conduit Theory

To support their argument that Plaintiffs' conduit theory is invalid, Defendants rely on Williamson Oil Co., Inc. v. Philip Morris USA, 346 F.3d 1287, 1308 (11th Cir. 2003), an opinion affirming summary judgment for the defendants in an oligopolistic market.[51] The plaintiffs argued that the defendants used stock analysts to signal pricing intentions to each other and that the defendants [165] "'clarif[ied] their agreement not to compete on price' by publicly announcing their future pricing intentions at meetings with stock analysts." Id. The court rejected the plaintiffs' arguments, concluding that the statement [*244] was consistent with "rational, lawful, parallel pricing behavior that is typical of an oligopoly." Id. at 1309-10.

Although the Court appreciates the reasoning of this case, the Court finds that the facts of this case are distinguishable from Williamson. Unlike the analyst in Williamson, the analysts in this case (as illustrated below) repeated word-for-word statements from Defendants in their industry analyses, which multiple Defendants received. When read alongside documents in which Defendants make suspicious or revelatory communications about pricing

[51] One older case, not cited by either party, rejected allegations that the defendant car manufacturers used a large national leasing and car management company, a trade association, and an individual dealer as conduits to exchange "mutual assurances that each would eliminate or substantially reduce fleet price concessions if the other did. *United States v. General Motors Corp., No. 38219, 1974 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6569, 1974 WL 926, at *11-14, 18 ¶¶ 67-88, 118 (E. D. Mich. Sept. 26, 1974). The opinion does not, however, go into detail on precisely why the theory failed.

to these same analysts, [166] these examples could support an inference that the analysts were used as conduits.[52]

3. Evidence Allowing Inferences of Defendants Using Analysts As Conduits

Despite Defendants' protests to the contrary, Plaintiffs have submitted evidence that is susceptible to the inference that Craig Weisbruch (VP of Sales and Marketing, National) and Steve DeMay (VP of Sales, Lafarge) communicated to analysts knowing or intending that at least portions of their communications would be disseminated to other manufacturers.

a. National Signaling Through Thompson and Longbow?

Most critically, although not flagged by Plaintiffs, Defendants incorrectly assert that "Plaintiffs have no evidence that Miling or Thompson relayed anything Weisbruch said to a competitor or that Weisbruch intended for them to do so." Def. Reply Brief at 27-30. In reality, there are several documented instances of Craig Weisbruch (VP Sales and Marketing, National) sending communications [167] to Thomspon and Longbow and of excerpts of those communications appearing verbatim in industry reports, which were circulated to multiple Defendants.[53]

The clearest example of Mr. Weisbruch possibly signaling through Longbow comes from late September 2011. On September 21, the day after American distributed its announcement, Mr. Weisbruch sent an email to Longbow about American's announcement. Ex. 1277. And on October 10, a manufacturer's employee sent Mr. Miling another email. Ex. 2133.[54] Longbow's October [168] 11, 2011 report directly quotes lines from the September 21 and October 10 communications, though the report attributes the comments only to "manufacturers." Ex. 1342.[55] And, [52] Defendants also cite Mayor and City Council of Balt., Md. v. Citigroup, Inc., 709 F.3d 129 (2d Cir 2013), a case that turns the conduit theory on its head by suggesting the use of conduits undercuts evidence of a direct agreement between defendants. The Court is unpersuaded by the reasoning in this non-binding case and declines to address it.

[53] Although there is no proof of receipt by another Defendant, in December 2012, a line from notes on a call that Longbow made with Mr. Weisbruch wound up appearing in a Longbow report. Ex. 2167. (AMA report); Ex. 1706 (call notes); Ex. 1674 ("taking an increase. I think it's as simple as that. They're going to take one."). And in April 2012, after Mr. Weisbruch called Longbow (Ex. 2167 ; Ex. 1122 at 172:25-177:8), Mr. Shmois prepared an email for "external use" with the subject "USG Follow Up with Industry Insider." The first line explains, "We just got off the phone with an SVP (number three in the organization) of a large wallboard manufacturer to get his take on the USG results." Ex. 1600.

[54] The sender of Ex. 2133 is redacted, but Plaintiffs have indicated their belief that the sender was Craig Weisbruch (VP of Sales and Marketing, National). Pls. Resp. to SOF ¶ 774 (misciting the exhibit number). The actual sender is irrelevant, however, because the Longbow report attributes the quotes from this email to a "manufacturer." Ex. 1342.

[55] The October 11 report and September 21 email both state: "I think this is the beginning of the manufacturers telling the market that we have to have a 'fair' price for our goods that allows us to make a profit and stay in business. Because the economic outlook for housing continues to be quite dark, and may be for some time to come, we have to find some way to get into the black I don't know what the end result will be, but see it as a constructive attempt to bring [169] some sanity to pricing." Ex. 1342 (report); Ex. 1277 (Sept. 21 email).

The October 11 report and October 10 email both state: "This is potential game changing event and yet it is occurring in a very depressed market. It's normal for the distributors to be skeptical and scared. It's an opportunity for them to get a little needed margin but they are fearful . . . I expect a lot of pleading and lying over the next few months as the job policy and price increase amount becomes more clear. Keep in mind, we are moving to a new paradigm where the distributor is taking ALL the responsibility for the quote he is making. Previously he had the luxury of having the manufacturer absorbing all the downside risk. . . . So the situation is still unclear, and if you're a distributor quoting longer term work it's difficult to know what to do. As usual they are all watching what L&W is doing as signal to what USGs real intention is." Ex. 1342 (report); Ex. 2133 (Oct. 10 email).

at minimum we [*245] know that USG (Ex. 1349), TIN (Ex. 2046), Lafarge (Exs. 1363, 1263), and CertainTeed (Ex. 1858) received copies of the report, as evidenced by the fact that they produced the reports in discovery.

There is also substantial evidence that Thompson quoted[56] Mr. Weisbruch in industry reports or otherwise included the sentiment[57] of his communications in their reports.

Plaintiffs' [171] evidence is also susceptible to an inference that Mr. Weisbruch would have known that the analysts were likely to share his information with other manufacturers. At the time Mr. Weisbruch made these communications with analysts, he should have known that at least Longbow was routinely sharing competitor information among Defendants because Longbow's analysts were sharing other Defendants' information with him:

- In February 2011, Mr. Weisbruch received information from Longbow that National's "smaller competitors [we]re telling Longbow that they are serious about this [price increase], and while they don't feel comfortable leading future increases, they are more than ready to follow them." Ex. 1266.[58]
- In June 2011, Mr. Miling emailed Mr. Weisbruch to share "some commentary from a few of [National's] peers" (Eagle and USG). Ex. 1276.

[*246] • In September 2011, Longbow emailed Mr. Weisbruch and stated, "We spoke with Eagle earlier this morning to get their take on the matter . . . . Management's tone was much more stern in regard to this increase attempt relative to others, with EXP's CFO saying 'we're serious this time around.'"). Ex. 1277.

- In October 2011, Mr. Miling emailed Mr. Weisbruch [172] to relay information regarding price increases and job quote elimination that Longbow had "just heard from [Mr. Weisbruch's] counterpart at PABCO." Ex. 1278.[59]
- On November 21, 2011, Mr. Miling emailed Mr. Weisbruch to inform him that "though USG has yet to announce a price increase, its L&W arm is quoting prices beyond January 1st with $35-40/MSF (~36%) escalators." Ex. 1589.

Thus, at least as to National Gypsum, there is plainly evidence sufficient to support a jury inference that National either used or attempted to use the analysts as conduits to pass information to competitors.

b. Lafarge Signaling Through Longbow?

Mr. Weisbruch was not the only one whose statements to Longbow later appeared in a report possessed by a third party.

[57] Compare Ex. 1515 (June 2012 meeting with National Gypsum) ("2013 price increases? A: verbal agreements[]for a large price increase in 2013. EXP is already out for guidance for 25%-30%"); with Ex. 1260 (USG copy of July Thompson report stating "TRG industry contacts are also telling us that manufacturers are discussing a sizable 2013 price increase to distributors (25%-30%), and we expect the industry will go on allocation by October. [. . .] Going forward, we remain acutely focused on ensuring that there aren't any cracks in the job quote elimination efforts."); compare also Ex. 1499 (Ms. Thompson asks Mr. Weisbruch in an email, "Do you think the industry will follow EXP's lead?" Weisbruch responds, "I'd be surprised if they didn't. As I've told you for the last six months or so, I feel like my competitors have legitimately tried to get the price up."); with Ex. 1259 ("TRG Opinion. Elimination of job quotes/price protection would be a positive for the wallboard industry, in our opinion. For this to work, however, all wallboard manufacturers would need to fall in line, and initial checks suggest this could be possible.").

[58] The price increase discussed in this quote refers to an increase prior to the one announced in September 2011.

[59] Longbow meant "just" literally. See Ex. 2030 (email from PABCO source to Miling at 11:03 a. m. on October 12, 2011); Ex. 1278 (11:07 email from Miling to Weisbruch regarding what Miling "just heard from your counterpart at PABCO"); Ex. 1122 (Miling dep.) at 100:3-103:1.

One of the documents that received a great deal of attention during the oral argument [173] is Exhibit 1269. This exhibit is a document reflecting Zoran Miling's (Analyst, Longbow) notes from a 27-minute phone call he held with Steve DeMay (VP of Sales, Lafarge) on December 2011. Exs. 2169; 1122 (Miling dep.) at 312:5-10. The Court concludes the document supports Plaintiffs' assertions as to several plus factors.

This exhibit is two and half single-spaced pages, the length of which, in and of itself, raises the question: Why would Mr. DeMay give such in-depth confidential financial and pricing information to Mr. Miling, knowing it was likely to be repeated to others, including manufacturers?

The first heading in the memorandum, "Response to USG and Competing Increases," noted that Certain Teed had come out with a large dollar increase, and then commented that Lafarge expected "some degree of downward negotiation from [CertainTeed's price]." Ex. 1269. The notes reflect that Lafarge anticipated that "National and some of the others that have yet to announce will be out with a dollar amount shortly," and guessed that amount might be approximately 40%. Ex. 1269. The document then continues with further thoughts on Lafarge's possible pricing, which a fact finder might conclude Lafarge [174] would have kept confidential in the absence of an agreement. Reference is also made to L&W, a USG subsidiary.

The letter continues with other comments consistent with Lafarge offering highly confidential information to Mr. Milling of Longbow, allowing a jury to infer that it is likely to find its being repeated in other communications.

Furthermore, the document uses the word "undermine" three times as in the following example: "Simply put, it does not appear that as though any of the manufacturers [*247] are using the above method to undermine the price increase. If they were, we would have heard about it. So far, so good." Ex. 1269. The use of the word "undermine" in this document and in this context may allow a fact finder to conclude that it was an "agreement" that was being "undermined." Moreover, this statement reflects the constant communications all Defendants were having about prices with customers, which by themselves are not at all illegal or improper. But this document permits an inference that the pricing information received from customers had also spread among other manufacturers, either by knowing use of their customers' reports, or by the use of Thompson and Longbow.

The last [175] and perhaps most important aspect of this document is a comment relating to the industry's fears that USG could destroy the increase. After discussing USG, Mr. DeMay is quoted as having said: "if we see them raise their price to their break-even number of $125 mill-net, there will be a collective responds [sic] from all of us — National, Lafarge, CertainTeed — all respond."[60] Ex. 1269. This language was heavily debated at the oral argument. The Court cannot ignore the possibility of a fact finder concluding that the phrase, "collective responds [sic]" (probably intended to be "response"), indicates intercorporate communications, past, present, and future.

The memorandum concludes with Mr. DeMay saying, "if I could talk to my counterparts at the other manufacturers [176] . . . ." Although Defendants attempt to rely on this phrase to show that Mr. DeMay was not communicating with other manufacturers, it is equally susceptible to the inference that Mr. DeMay wanted Mr. Miling to communicate this information to the other manufacturers for him. And indeed, portions of Exhibit 1269 appeared in a February 2012 Longbow report received by USG. Compare Ex. 1269; with Exs. 1624 at 9.[61]

[60] Portions of this document, including the identification of some of the referenced manufacturers, were redacted until shortly before the oral argument. Longbow, which had initially requested the redaction, withdrew the request. However, because of the redaction, there was not deposition testimony of Mr. DeMay or Mr. Milling about the identities mentioned in the memo, because it was still redacted as of the date of deposition.

[61] Both documents say: "It remains to be seen what Certain Teed does in the short and [medium]-term with their new North Carolina plant, and subsequently how [while Lafarge said "National," Longbow changed its language to "competing manufacturers"] will respond. When firing up a plant you need to run it full on for three days a week, which equates to about 5M board feet each week. Clearly, you can only stockpile so much and this may indeed displace some of the other plants in the Carolinas (National) and Virginia (USG). How CertainTeed acts - that is, will they cut the price - remains to be seen . . . we can adjust to that - it won't kill the increase. [. . .] These are all known issues that we are prepared for and have contingency plans set in place."

A jury may find that Exhibit 1269 [177] takes on even more sinister overtones in light of the fact that previous Lafarge communications had been quoted verbatim in Longbow reports. In July 2011, Longbow had a discussion with someone at Lafarge regarding pricing and Lafarge's impression of its competitor's pricing. Portions of Miling's notes of the call appear verbatim in a July 8, 2011 Longbow report.[62] Although [*248] Plaintiffs have not presented proof that Lafarge possessed the July report or knew that the company had been quoted verbatim, Plaintiffs have produced sufficient evidence from which a jury could infer that Lafarge knew that direct quotation of the December 2011 conversation was possible.

The sum total of the evidence documents at least two Defendants communicating sensitive [178] information to Longbow and Thompson only for those analysts to reprint that information verbatim in reports that other Defendants obtained. Such conduit evidence, when viewed in light of the fact that all remaining Defendants either spoke to analysts and/or received analyst communications,[63] could lend a jury support in analyzing whether a conspiracy existed.

D. Defendants' Non-Price Conduct

Plaintiffs present evidence that Defendants limited supply in the months leading up to the 2012 and 2013 increases and declined opportunities to compete for customers. Plaintiffs argue that this evidence provides a plus factor from which a jury could conclude that Defendants had entered an agreement because this evidence amounts to actions against self-interest.

Defendants counter that the use of limiting supply prior to an increase predates the class period, and that manufacturers did so to prevent customers from "loading up" on a product in advance of an increase. Defs. Opening [179] Br. at 72.

1. Limiting Supply

Plaintiffs argue that Defendants controlled distribution prior to the 2012 and 2013 increases in a way that materially differed from prior allocation plans. PSOF ¶ 298. Although Plaintiffs concede that Defendants sometimes prepared allocation plans, Plaintiffs argue that Defendants rarely actually implemented these plans prior to the 2012 and 2013 increase, and when they did, they only did so a brief time before the price increase. PSOF ¶ 298.

In contrast, Plaintiffs submit evidence that Defendants artificially limited their supply in both 2012 and 2013 for substantial periods prior to the increase.

a. Limiting Supply Prior to 2012 Increase

Prior to the 2012 increase, USG appears to have been the first manufacturer to decide to control distribution. Ex. 1580. On October 14, 2011, Mr. Salah sent an email to USG's president, explaining that although it was risky to control distribution because "some competitors may decide to produce more and flood the market," USG needed to go on controlled distribution on November 1, 2011 because a number of customers had indicated that they planned to overbuy prior to the January 1, 2012 increase to avoid the increase. Ex. [180] 1580.

[62] Compare Ex. 1280; with Ex. 2081 p. 7-8 ("Those who are down substantially are the ones who are supplying Lowes, as they are now trying to play catchup with Home Depot, who went to stocking Lightweight wallboard almost exclusively. What LOW has done is implemented a 2 week like review for all of its stores in patches . . . . When the industry releases volumes mid-month, I would expect to see industry volumes down in the mid to high single-digits.").

[63] Many of National's interactions with Longbow via Mr. Weisbruch have been detailed above, as have several of Lafarge's. As to PABCO, see e. g., Ex. 1257. As to CertainTeed, see e.g., Ex. 1858. As to American, see e.g., Ex. 831.

On October 28, 2011, Eagle held an earnings call and National listened in. Following the call, Mr. George Beckwith forwarded around the transcript of the call, summarizing that Eagle said "they are very serious about a 35% price increase and are willing to take less volume to make it stick. They are also planning to shut down all of their wallboard plants for a 2 to 3 week period at the end of December (because it is a low volume period)." Ex. 1581. Walter Withrock (Dir. of Demand Management, National) and Craig [*249] Weisbruch (Sr. VP of Sales and Marketing, National) replied all to the email asking what the others at National thought about Eagle closing its plants, to which Mr. Thomas Cusack (position unknown, National) responded: "It seems to me that saying they are serious about the 35% increase, they are indirectly creating a shortage to make this happen. I can't imagine all their plants just happen to need maintenance at the same time." Ex. 1581.

On November 3, 2011, Lafarge also indicated that it planned to limit supply and indicated that it knew that other manufacturers were also limiting supply. Ike Preston (President, Lafarge) wrote: "We have focused on limiting the inventory [181] build up [by distributors] by limiting production and not running overtime in the plants. Similar moves have been made by our competitors so we believe we have good reason to feel positive about the increase." Ex. 1505.

By November 21, 2011, Longbow was distributing reports alerting that National, American, USG, PABCO, CertainTeed, and Lafarge were limiting their supply to prevent customers from stock-piling inventory prior to the increase. Ex. 1589. Although Longbow noted the limits on supply, it also explained that "we still believe moderate pre-buying will take place, especially as inventory levels appear mostly normal." Ex. 1505.

Even as some manufacturers were coming up on a wallboard shortage, they stuck to their allocation plans. Scott Blanchard (VP Sales — West, USG) received an email that some customers were too low on board to wait for the amount they had been allocated. Ex. 1576. In response, Mr. Blanchard said that USG might open extra slots at the plant the next week, but they wouldn't be adding any full days. Ex. 1576. "It's in the best interest of the market to keep it tight in January." Ex. 1576.

A similar string of emails appears in PABCO's internal email. PABCO's Senior [182] VP of Sales and Marketing wrote that "[i]n an oversupplied market with many participants bent on the increase's destruction PABCO's message needs to be strong along with that of our competitors." Ex. 1582. "It's a good thing to not fulfill all our customers' needs this week; an increase will be much easier to achieve if we help the industry create a wallboard scarcity." Ex. 1582.

b. Limiting Supply Prior to 2013 Increase

Manufacturers were more candid about their limited allocation of wallboard prior to the 2013 increase.

Longbow's July 2012 report indicated that Lafarge planned to go on a controlled distribution sometime between Labor Day and mid-October. Ex. 1690.

On August 6, 2012, Mark Burkhammer (Director of Sales, North, PABCO) sent an email to PABCO leadership writing: "I was told USG is going on allocation in September. We are also looking to allocate but I can't say I was ready to pull the trigger just yet. . . . Other manufacturers are doing the same planning. This will be an annual event to support increases." Ex. 1709.

On August 22, both USG and TIN sent internal emails indicating that both manufacturers would implement controlled distribution within the week. Ex. 1711, 1712. On [183] August 23, Certain Teed internally noted that National and American had already gone on allocation in certain areas, and that Certain Teed "need[ed] to discuss process to implement our allocation as it appears conditions are upon us." Ex. 2203. National also admitted that "between the time that [National] announced its 2013 [*250] price increase and the effective date of that increase, [National] instituted product allocation on a regional bases, as needed." Defs. Resp. PSOF ¶ 440.

2. Declining to Compete for Customers

Refusal to stray from the increase started very soon after it was announced. In October 2011, one of National's customers approached USG when National wouldn't give the customer the price it wanted. Ex. 1553. Greg Salah (Sr. VP Sales and Marketing, USG) directed his sales staff to turn down the opportunity:

> [N]o single job or relationship is more important that [sic] USG getting our new pricing policy in place. As tempting as the job is, it violates our pricing policy established on 9/28. . . . [W]e are not in a position to provide special pricing.

It's also clear that manufacturers were concerned not just about actually creating price competition, but creating even the impression that [184] they intended to compete on price. Ex. 1561. In an email chain discussing USG's potential specific price increase for 1/1/12, a USG salesman indicated that he was ok that his area had a $15 spread with the competitive low: "We're within $5 of National. . . . If they even think we're trying for share we're dead. I'd rather they wake up on 3rd base saying.... 'wow.... USG is selling 5/8' to the majors at $200!" Ex. 1561.

This is also evident in one of Certain Teed's internal email exchanges. On November 18, 2011, a national accounts manager for Certain Teed emailed Steve Hawkins (VP of Sales, CertainTeed) asking how firm the increase was for Lowe's:

> Lowe's took an average increase of $10 in April 2011. While the market has retreated, the Lowe's increase stayed intact. I have started prepping Steve Edwards for our pending January 2012 increase. He has advised that 35%/$50 is a bit steep. We are also hearing market reports that retail is not expecting to take the full increase. Since we were able to hold the April increase, I would recommend only going up $35-45 to come to the $50 you are seeking.

Ex. 1520. Mr. Hawkins responded that CertainTeed "must fully support [sic] increase. . . . Makes [185] no difference what happened last year . . . . We have no choice but to support." Ex. 1520.

In December 2011, National received an email from a potential customer, asking National if they were still "running some mobile home gypsum board." ¶ Ex. 1558. In an internal email exchange, two National sale staff guessed that the customer sent the email because Georgia-Pacific had sent out its announcement about pricing/job quotes. Bill Kelly (Dir. of Dealer Sales, National) responded: "Very likely the reason he asked. Now would be a very bad time to solicit somebody else's long term customer." Ex. 1558.

In January 2012, Lafarge's VP of Sales (Steve DeMay) had an email exchange with one of Lafarge's regional sales managers (Wayne Wilson). Mr. Wilson wanted to know about a regional pricing issue. Mr. DeMay responded: "I don't want to lose any high return business but as well do not want to be labeled as the price cutter. Both of these accounts are wholesalers so any move will likely be communicated to competition." Ex. 1563.

In October 2012, PABCO internally distributed a September 2012 Market Condition Report, revealing PABCO's fear that competitors could react negatively to any perceived attempt [186] to grab market share. Ex. 1707. The report commented that "any perceived weakness or attempt to grab additional share with reduced pricing by [*251] any of the players could throw the price back into a destructive downward spiral." Ex. 1707. In his deposition, Phil Kohl (VP Sales and Marketing, PABCO) confirmed that PABCO was concerned about sending the wrong "signal" to competitors by extending a lower price past January's announced increase; they didn't want to undercut the price and they didn't want the other manufacturers to think PABCO was trying to undercut price increase. Ex. 1118 (Kohl dep.) at 226:12-228:19.

Although this evidence might create a compelling inference of collusion in a diverse market, the evidence that Defendants were concerned about other manufacturers' impressions is entirely consistent with an oligopolistic market. But, when combined with Plaintiffs' other evidence, it is possible that this evidence could contribute to Plaintiffs' ability to tend to exclude the possibility that Defendants acted independently.

XIV. Analysis — Consideration of Plus Factors

To avoid Summary Judgment, Plaintiffs must show that a jury could find:

1. Defendants' behavior was parallel;

2. Defendants [187] were conscious of each other's conduct and awareness was an element in their decision-making processes; and

3. plus factors showing an actual agreement: (1) motive, (2) actions contrary to Defendants' interests, and (3) traditional conspiracy evidence.

In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350, 360 n.11 (3d Cir. 2004). Defendants essentially concede the first two elements through their argument that they are not liable because there were merely following the leader. Implicit in such a defense is that Defendants' behavior was parallel, that they were conscious of each other's conduct, and that awareness was an element in their decision-making processes. Even if Defendants' theory of defense had been different, Plaintiffs have presented more than sufficient evidence for a jury to find that the first two elements have been satisfied.

Thus, the dispute in this case centers on whether Plaintiffs' evidence is sufficient for a jury to find plus factors indicating agreement. HN25[] "[E]vidence of plus factors must tend to exclude the possibility of independent conduct." In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig., 166 F.3d 112, 133 (3d Cir. 1999). "[T]he mere presence of one or more of these 'plus factors' does not necessarily mandate the conclusion that there was an illegal conspiracy between the parties, for the court may still conclude, based upon the [188] evidence before it, that the defendants acted independently of one another, and not in violation of antitrust laws."' Id. at 122 (quoting Balaklaw v. Lovell, 822 F.Supp. 892 (N. D. N. Y. 1993)).

The Court pauses again to reiterate that all Defendants have presented not only an innocent rational for their conduct, but also strong testimonial denials of reaching any agreement. But Defendants are not "entitled to summary judgment merely by showing that there is a plausible explanation for their conduct; rather the focus must remain on the evidence proffered by the plaintiff and whether that evidence tends to exclude the possibility that the defendants were acting independently." In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 801 F.3d 383, 397 (3d Cir. 2015) (quoting Rossi v. Standard Roofing, Inc., 156 F.3d 452, 466 (3d Cir. 1998)). The court examines below the facts that might warrant a jury in rejecting Defendants' denials.

[*252] A. Motive

HN26[] "Evidence that the defendant had a motive to enter into a price fixing conspiracy means evidence that the industry is conducive to oligopolistic price fixing, either interdependently or through a more express form of collusion." In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350, 360 (3d Cir. 2004). It cannot be seriously contested that a jury could find that Defendants had the motive to enter an agreement to raise prices. Defendants own documents are littered with references to manufacturers' poor financial performance and the dire [189] straits of the industry. And Plaintiffs' expert concluded that "[t]he market structure in the Paper-backed Gypsum Wallboard industry was conducive to the alleged Cartel." Ex. 1085 (Lamb Report).

But Plaintiffs' showing that Defendants had a plausible reason to conspire does not end the inquiry. See Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 597 n. 21, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986) ("We do not imply that, if petitioners had had a plausible reason to conspire, ambiguous conduct could suffice to create a triable issue of conspiracy.").

B. Actions Against Self-Interest

Whether defendants in an oligopolistic market acted against self-interest is a difficult question. Although the appellate case law is somewhat opaque in this area,[64] HN27[] the Third Circuit has clarified that courts should equate "actions against self-interest" with "evidence of behavior inconsistent with a competitive market." In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 801 F.3d 383, 398 (3d Cir. 2015). But because of the interdependence problem, determining whether Defendants' actions would have been irrational in a competitive market is a more difficult question than it appears at first blush.

Defendants have resolutely asserted, in filing in their declarations and briefs, that all of the actions that they have taken were in their economic self-interest. Plaintiffs' evidence to the contrary is principally in reports by Plaintiffs' experts. The Court is wary of relying too heavily on expert reports on these points, but having reviewed the case law and factual and expert materials on this topic, the Court concludes that the following actions could be found by a fact finder to be against the Defendants' self-interest, along with other evidence:

- announcing a 35% price increase despite a lack of meaningful increase in demand;
- eliminating job quotes; and
- artificially limiting supply.[65]

[*253] Defendants may have legitimate economic reasons for taking these actions, as they have argued in their briefing and at oral argument. But a fact finder could find that each of these actions were inconsistent with actions that would be taken in a competitive market, particularly in the economic circumstances of this industry.

HN29[] When "no evidence suggests that the increase in list prices was correlated with any [192] changes in costs or demand," a jury may conclude that defendants acted against self-interest. In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350, 362 (3d Cir. 2004). Plaintiffs have provided substantial evidence from which a jury could conclude that the dramatic increase in price was not correlated with any changes in cost or demand. See, e.g., Ex. 1085 at 78 (Lamb Report) ("Wallboard prices rose despite near historically low demand, excess production capacity and stable or declining costs."); Ex. 1287 (PABCO internal email in Sept. 2011) ("[D]emand improvements are not coming any time some [sic]."); Ex. 1589 (Nov. 2011 Longbow report) ("Working against [the manufactures] is the same weak demand environment that has scuttled so many prior price increase attempts."); Ex. 1222 (USG's Form 10-K for financial year 12/21/2012) (indicating demand was low for wallboard in 2012). Had Plaintiffs presented no other evidence on this plus factor, the Court's conclusions about this plus factor would remain the same.

But Plaintiffs also submitted evidence that Defendants took other actions that a jury could perceive to be against Defendants' self-interest, or inconsistent with a competitive market. A jury could consider Defendants' decision to eliminate job quotes to have [193] been against each Defendant's self-interest. Prior to American's announcement, job quotes had been frequently used by manufacturers as a means of providing discounts to large buyers and as a means of competing with one another on price. By eliminating job quotes, Defendants were [64] "The concept of 'action against self interest' is ambiguous . . . . [R]efusing to raise or lower prices unless rivals do the same could be against a firm's self-interest but nevertheless could spring from independent [190] behavior." In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig., 166 F.3d 112, 122 (3d Cir. 1999).

[65] The Court believes that HN28[] evidence of a defendant declining to pursue another manufacturer's customer could be viewed as inconsistent with a competitive market. But, [191] evidence that a defendant refused to adjust its list price in order to secure a new customer would not be so probative. See Petruzzi's IGA Supermarkets, Inc. v. Darling-Delaware Co., Inc., 998 F.2d 1224, 1244 (3d Cir. 1993) ("Areeda warns courts not to consider a failure to cut prices or an initiation of a price rise as an action against self-interest because it also reflects the interdependence of the industry."). Plaintiffs ask the Court to make inferences that Defendants refused to compete with each other for customers, but most of the evidence they offer reflects Defendants refusing merely to adjust their list price to secure a new customer. See, e.g., Ex. 1553 (USG refusing to accept a job because it violated the pricing policy they established in September 2011); Ex. 1563 (Lafarge declining to pursue a customer because they did "not want to be labeled as a price cutter"). The one exception is that Plaintiffs have submitted one document from which a jury could conclude that National declined to offer a customer National's list price because the customer had previously been Georgia-Pacific's customer. See Ex. 1558 ("Now would be a very bad time to solicit somebody else's long term customer.").

eliminating a major competitive tool and risking that any one Defendant would continue quoting jobs and steal substantial market share.

A jury would be permitted to find that eliminating job quotes was inconsistent with a competitive market. Cf. Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U.S. 208, 233, 59 S. Ct. 467, 83 L. Ed. 610 (1939) ("It taxes credulity to believe that the several distributors would, in the circumstances, have accepted and put into operation with substantial unanimity such far-reaching changes in their business methods without some understanding that all were to join, and we reject as beyond the range of probability that it was the result of mere chance."). As Plaintiffs' expert concluded, in a competitive market, Defendants would have been incentivized to retain job quotes to prevent loss of market share to another [manufacturer], because if one firm eliminated job quotes while the other firms did not, that firm would lose one means of competing with other firms for sales." Ex. [194] 1085 (Lamb Report). Even a National employee admitted that such action was risky. Bill Kelly (Director of Dealer Sales, National), testified that by eliminating job quotes, National "could have substantially less business come the winter because [they] did not bid work in October and [*254] November when that . . . work was bidding." Ex. 1116 (Kelly dep.) at 182:19-24.[66]

A jury could also conclude that Defendants acted against their self-interest based on Plaintiffs' evidence that Defendants artificially limited supply prior to the effective date of the 2012 and 2013 increases.[67] See Ex. 1085 at 112 (Report of Russell Lamb) (concluding that "Defendants' supply restrictions in the fall of 2011 and again in the fall of 2012" was "inconsistent with unilateral economic self-interest in the absence of the alleged Cartel"). Plaintiffs' evidence would permit a jury to conclude that, at minimum, USG, American, and Lafarge put customers on allocation prior to the January 2012 increase,[68] and [195] PABCO, USG, TIN, CertainTeed, and National went on allocation prior to the January, 2013 increase.[69]

By limiting the amount of product Defendants were willing to sell to their customers, Defendants were risking that their customers would go elsewhere. As explained by Plaintiffs' expert: "In a market free of the alleged Cartel, if one firm refused to supply Paper-backed Gypsum Wallboard to its customers, other firms would benefit from selling to them because they would gain larger market shares, improve their capacity utilization, reduce production costs, and make higher profits." Ex. 1085 (Lamb Report) at 66. Thus, a jury could reasonably conclude that those [196] Defendants who put customers on allocation prior to the increases were acting inconsistently with a competitive market.

Although the Court finds that Plaintiffs have submitted sufficient evidence for a jury to conclude that all Defendants acted against their self-interests, the Court recognizes that this finding is not sufficient, by itself, to defeat summary judgment because Plaintiffs have not yet tended to exclude the possibility of interdependent conduct. In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350, 361-62 (3d Cir. 2004); cf. In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 801 F.3d 383, 398 (3d Cir. 2015) (explaining that HN30[] a showing the defendants had motive and acted against self-interest "is neither necessary nor sufficient to preclude summary judgment, at least where the claim is price fixing among oligopolists"). Rather, to elevate a finding of actions against self-interest to a finding that a jury could conclude that Defendants entered an agreement, Plaintiffs must supply traditional conspiracy evidence.

[66] Mr. Kelly continued on to explain: "But this was a time and we felt an opportunity for us to get rid of a burdensome job-quoting process and we felt it was worth taking the risk." Ex. 1116 (Kelly dep.) at 182:24-183:2.

[67] It is a well-known antitrust principle that any concerted restrictions of output are per se illegal. Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n v. Bd. of Regents of Univ. of Okla., 468 U.S. 85, 99, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1984).

C. Traditional Conspiracy Evidence

HN31[] In § 1 Sherman Act cases involving oligopolies, the "most important evidence will generally be non-economic evidence 'that there was an actual, manifest agreement not to compete.'" In re Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 361 (quoting In re High Fructose Corn Syrup Antitrust Litig., 295 F.3d 651, 655 (7th Cir. 2002)). Traditional conspiracy evidence "may involve 'customer indications of traditional conspiracy,' or [197] 'proof [*255] that the defendants got together and exchanged assurances of common action or otherwise adopted a common plan even though no meetings, conversations, or exchanged documents are shown.'" Id. (quoting Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, 243 (2d ed. 2000)).

Plaintiffs have submitted sufficient traditional conspiracy evidence for a jury to conclude that American, National, PABCO, and Lafarge had entered an agreement in violation of the Sherman Act. But, Plaintiffs have fallen short as to Certain Teed.[70]

Before evaluating the evidence on a Defendant-by-Defenant basis, the Court pauses to consider three pieces of traditional conspiracy evidence that could be considered against one or more Defendants based on the Court's Bourjaily findings:

1. Keith Metcalf's (Sr. VP Marketing, Sales, and Distribution, American) April 2011 email indicating that there might be "a movement from all manufacturers to eliminate quotes," which was written a few weeks after all Defendants sent representatives to the Las Vegas trade meeting (Ex. 1165);

2. the notes from [198] the call between Steve DeMay (VP of Sales, Lafarge) and Zoran Miling (Analyst, Longbow), indicating that National, Lafarge, and Certain Teed would react to certain price moves by USG (Ex. 1269); and

3. the notes from the meeting between Kathryn Thompson (Founder and Dir. of Research, Thompson) and Craig Weisbruch (Sr. VP Marketing and Sales, National) indicating that there were verbal agreements for a large price increase in 2013 (Ex. 1515).

These statements alone might prove to be sufficient traditional conspiracy evidence for a jury to conclude that Defendants reached an agreement in violation of the Sherman Act.[71] Cf. In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350, 363 (3d Cir. 2004) ("[The manufacturer's] response to the Antitrust Division does not directly state that it agreed with [the defendant] to raise prices. But a reasonable factfinder could infer such an agreement from [the manufacturer]'s reference to an 'across the board' price increase."). And as outlined at length in this opinion, Plaintiffs have provided far more evidence than these three exhibits.

Additionally, HN32[] Defendants' decision to eliminate job quotes may qualify as traditional conspiracy evidence to avoid summary judgment. In In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 801 F.3d 383, 410 (3d Cir. 2015), the plaintiffs attempted to rely on the defendants' departure from their pre-conspiracy conduct as traditional conspiracy evidence. The court explained that "[f]or a change in conduct to create an inference of a conspiracy, the shift in behavior must be a 'radical' or 'abrupt' change from the industry's business practices." Id. (quoting Toys "R" Us, Inc. v. FTC, 221 F.3d 928, 935 (7th Cir. 2000)). Given the evidence that job quotes had been a feature in the drywall industry since the 1980s and that all Defendants eliminated this practice within weeks of [*256] each other in fall 2011, a jury might be justified in concluding that Defendants' shift in behavior was radical enough to contribute to the inference of conspiracy.

[70] The Court does not consider the traditional conspiracy evidence involving TIN or USG because those manufacturers have settled.

[71] These statements are not admissible against Certain Teed because CertainTeed did not make any of the statements and the co-conspirator exception to the rule against hearsay doesn't apply as [199] to CertainTeed, unlike the other Defendants, because the Court concluded that Plaintiffs failed to show by a preponderance of the evidence that Certain Teed was a member of the conspiracy.

1. American

Plaintiffs' evidence permits the inference that American reached an agreement to raise prices and eliminate job quotes, and specifically that Mr. Metcalf reached an agreement with other manufacturers [200] to eliminate job quotes and increase prices during the Las Vegas Trade meeting in April 2011 and that Mr. Powers communicated about the status of the agreement with PABCO the day before announcing the increase in fall 2011. See, e.g., Ex. 1165 (April 2011 Metcalf email) ("We may have a movement from all manufacturers to eliminate quotes."); Ex. 2098 (explaining that Mr. Metcalf's September 2011 email was "referencing an anticipated announcement from one or more of the big boys relative to job quoting"); Ex. 1168 (PABCO email after American announcement) (indicating that Mr. Powers (President, American) and Mr. Duvall (Sales Manager, PABCO) had a conversation about lack of industry leadership the day before the American announcement); Ex. 1110 (Harris dep.) at 67:8-68:24 (CertainTeed's expert's deposition) (testifying that he would expect a company announcing the changes that American announced in fall 2011 to have conducted more formal analysis).

2. National

Plaintiffs' evidence permits the inference that National participated in agreements to eliminate job quotes and raise prices, largely because of the frequent communications between Craig Weisbruch (Sr. VP Sales and Marketing, National) [201] and analysts at Thompson and Longbow. See, e.g., Ex. 1277 (email between Mr. Weisbruch and Thompson) ("I think this is the beginning of the manufacturers telling the market that we have to have a 'fair' price for our goods. . . ." (emphasis added)); Ex. 1560 (Withrock October 2011 email) ("I'd hate to think we blow the entire deal because American thinks we've broken ranks and job quoted well into 2012 in their backyard." (emphasis added)); Ex. 1515 (Thompson's notes from a June 2012 meeting with Weisbruch) ("2013 price increase? A: verbal agreements for a large price increase in 2013. . . . [T]he industry will be on planned distribution for the last 2-3 months to curtail excessive pre-buy activity." (emphasis added)).

3. PABCO

Plaintiffs' evidence permits the inference that PABCO participated in an agreement to eliminate job quotes and raise prices. See, e. g., Ex. 1287 (email from PABCO's Director of Sales, South in September 2011) ("It will take strong united effort by all manufacture [sic] to manage current job pricing and improve forward pricing for this increase attempt to yield any price improvement."); Ex. 1168 (PABCO email after American announcement) (indicating that Mr. Powers [202] (President, American) and Mr. Duvall (Sales Manager, PABCO) had a conversation about lack of industry leadership the day before the American announcement and that "[e]liminating job quotes would be a great start for the price improvement" (emphasis added)); Ex. 1244 (email from PABCO's Director of Sales, North on 9/27/2011) ("I am suggesting, wherever and to whoever will listen, that the manufacturers have to police. . . . [G]etting something done by seven manufacturers for the good of the industry is like being in the house of reps in DC."); Ex. 1278 (indicating that PABCO gave advanced notice of its price increase to Longbow and that within minutes of receiving that notice, Longbow forwarded the information to Craig Weisbruch at National); Ex. 1709 (email from PABCO's Director of [*257] Sales, North on 8/6/2012) ("Other manufacturers are doing the same planning [for allocation prior to the 2013 increase]. This will be an annual event to support price increases."); Ex. 1707 (10/9/2012 email from PABCO's VP of Sales and Marketing) ("[A]ny perceived weakness or attempt to grab additional share with reduced pricing by any of the players could throw the price back into a destructive downward spiral.").

4. Lafarge

Plaintiffs' [203] evidence permits the inference that PABCO participated in an agreement to eliminate job quotes and raise prices, particularly in light of the information shared between Steve DeMay and Longbow in December 2011. See, e.g., Ex. 1102 (DeMay dep.) at 151:17-21 (testifying that he didn't recall anyone putting anything in writing to justify the 2012 price increase and elimination of job quotes); Ex. 1269 (notes from 12/7/2011 call with Longbow) ("If we see [USG] raise their price to their breakeven number of $125 mill-net, there will be a collective responds [sic] from all of us — National, Lafarge, CertainTeed — we all respond. . . . If I could talk to my counterparts at the other manufactures [sic], I would tell them that the table is set and that we must show a degree of fortitude that we have not shown in years.").

5. CertainTeed

Unlike the other Defendants, there is a dearth of evidence of any communications by CertainTeed or other plus factors that could create the inference of conspiracy. See, e. g., Ex. 1491 (email from CertainTeed Regional Manager upon receiving 2011 American announcement) ("Here it is. USG probably will be next."); Ex. 1520 (email from Regional Manager) (refusing [204] to offer Lowe's a lower percentage increase even though Lowe's had absorbed an earlier price increase that the rest of the market had not absorbed).

As explained in the Court's Rule 104 findings, the Court is unable to conclude that Plaintiffs have shown by a preponderance of the evidence that CertainTeed was a member of a conspiracy so as to allow statements by other Defendants to be admissible against Certain Teed. The Court has considered that Steve DeMay's (VP of Sales, Lafarge) memorialized comment to Zoran Miling (Analyst, Longbow) would have been perhaps the most persuasive evidence against CertainTeed. See Ex. 1269 (notes from 12/7/2011 call with Longbow) ("If we see [USG] raise their price to their breakeven number of $125 mill-net, there will be a collective responds [sic] from all of us — National, Lafarge, CertainTeed — we all respond."). But the Court cannot consider Exhibit 1269 against CertainTeed because the record fails to demonstrate that CertainTeed communicated with other manufacturers or analysts on par with the other Defendants, and therefore, does not show any factual basis for Mr. DeMay to have referenced Certain Teed. The record does show interchanges between Longbow [205] and National. Thus, the Court can consider the exhibit against National and Lafarge because the record supports the Court concluding that they were co-conspirators for the purpose of Federal Rule of Evidence 802(d)(2)(E). But, Plaintiffs have not proven CertainTeed a co-conspirator under that rule, and thus, that statement is inadmissible hearsay as against Certain Teed.

What the Court is left with then are two types of traditional conspiracy evidence that the Third Circuit has indicated in dicta might permit an inference of a conspiracy: (1) a sudden and abrupt change in business practices (i.e., the elimination of job quotes) and (2) evidence that the other firms in the drywall industry entered into an agreement and that CertainTeed acted consistent with the other firms' [*258] actions. See In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 801 F.3d 383, 410 (3d Cir. 2015) (rejecting the plaintiffs' argument, which was that a change in the defendants' conduct qualified as traditional conspiracy evidence, because the change was not abrupt enough); In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350, 363 (3d Cir. 2004) (indicating that an inference of conspiracy may be permissible if there evidence that a defendant acted parallel to other firms and there is evidence that those other firms entered an agreement). The Court is not convinced that a jury would be justified in concluding, [206] based on this traditional conspiracy evidence alone, that CertainTeed entered an agreement.

Although the Court accepts that Defendants' elimination of job quotes was a radical and abrupt change from prior business practice, the Court is unwilling to read Chocolate as indicating that a radical change alone would be sufficient to create an inference that Certain Teed entered an agreement. As for the other Defendants, the evidence of the abrupt change in business practice gains weight because it is coupled with other indicia of conspiracy.

Nor can the fact that CertainTeed made comparable price decisions to the other Defendants save Plaintiffs' claims against CertainTeed, even when considering the abrupt change in business practices alongside the parallel behavior of CertainTeed and the other Defendants. The Court reaches this conclusion despite the Third Circuit's indication that when evidence tends to show that "six firms act in parallel fashion and there is evidence that five of the firms entered into an agreement, . . . it is reasonable to infer that the sixth firm acted consistent with the other five firms' actions because it was also party to the agreement." In re Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 363. Although CertainTeed [207] acted in parallel fashion to the other Defendants, the evidence as to CertainTeed is far less than the evidence implicating the other Defendants. Thus, the Court concludes that, even considering all the evidence in the light most favorable to Plaintiffs, making an inference based solely on CertainTeed's parallel conduct and the elimination of job quotes is not sufficient to defeat summary judgment.

Unlike the other Defendants, it is undisputed that Certain Teed did engage in a documented decision-making process before following American's lead: it "obtained information from customers, evaluated the impact of its announcement on CertainTeed's operations and financials; its senior managers evaluated the pros and cons of an announcement; and it considered the responses made by competitors." Ex. 1110 (Harris dep.) at 67:8-68:24. And this fact is not genuinely disputed by Plaintiffs.

The Court notes the over 90 declarations filed by CertainTeed in support of its Motion for Summary Judgment, and finds Plaintiffs' evidence has failed to substantially challenge Certain Teed's Rule 56 showing, which stands in contrast to Plaintiffs' persuasive showing as to the other Defendants. There are only a few [208] communications between research analysts and CertainTeed, and those communications are far fewer than those among those analysts and Lafarge or National. There is no evidence that CertainTeed provided the type of information to analysts that was provided by National and Lafarge. And unlike PABCO or American, there is no evidence allowing an inference that CertainTeed spoke with a competitor shortly before making a major pricing decision.

The relative lack of evidence that CertainTeed communicated with other manufacturers or analysts coupled with the evidence that CertainTeed did take steps indicative of independent decision making, result in the Court's conclusion that a [*259] jury could not reasonably make the inference that Certain Teed participated in an agreement in restraint of trade.

IX. Conclusion

When Plaintiffs evidence is considered as a whole, it tends to exclude the possibility that National, American, PABCO, and Lafarge acted independently, or even interdependently. Therefore, Defendants' Motions for Summary Judgment are being DENIED as to those Defendants. Plaintiffs' evidence does not tend to exclude the possibility that CertainTeed acted independently, and therefore, Certain [209] Teed's Motion for Summary Judgment will be GRANTED.

"[C]ertainty generally is illusion, and repose is not the destiny of man." Oliver Wendell Holmes, Jr., The Path of the Law, 10 Harv. L. Rev. 457 (1897). We tell jurors they may find facts without any strict rules, but based on common sense, circumstantial evidence, etc., putting no blinders on their deliberative decision making. In contrast, Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 52(a)(1) requires a judge sitting without a jury to "find the facts specially" and to state "conclusions of law separately." Similarly, in ruling on a summary judgment motion, judges should explain whether the evidence presented would allow a jury to make inferences in favor of the party opposing the motion. In this price-fixing antitrust case, within an oligopolistic industry, strict rules govern what inferences may be drawn from the evidence.

Because of the voluminous factual details presented by Plaintiffs, this lengthy opinion was appropriate to summarize the facts warranting the Court's conclusions as to what inferences a jury could or could not draw. The Court recognizes Defendants' exposure to significant and trebled damages, which the putative class might be able to prove if, as, and when a class is certified and proceeds to trial.

[210] Thus, the judge's function in ruling on summary judgment is as a "gatekeeper" through which the parties must pass. Denial of a summary judgment motion bestows a legal "rite of passage"—like the trials and tribulations facing the Prince and Papageno in Mozart's The Magic Flute, or the adventures of Ulysses in ancient Greece.

At trial, the jury then has free rein to actually determine what inferences it will make, which may be the same, or entirely different, than the inferences the judge has stated the jury must be allowed to make.

Although pressures to settle may be present, the defendants still have the option of succeeding on a directed verdict at the close of the plaintiffs' evidence (perhaps the evidence from the mouths of witnesses falls short of the "paper" that was successful in defeating summary judgment)—or in presenting, live, their officers and managers who are found more credible than the inferences plaintiffs advocate, resulting in a defense jury verdict, and again on post-trial motions, and again on appeal. The denial of summary judgment may be a temporal defeat for four Defendants, it need not be the end of the case.

"Now this is not the end. It is not even the beginning [211] of the end. But it is, perhaps, the end of the beginning." Winston Churchill, Remarks at the Lord Mayor's Luncheon at Mansion House: The End of the Beginning (November 10, 1942).

ORDER

AND NOW, this 18th day of February 2016, after review of Defendants' Joint Motion for Summary Judgment and Supporting Statement of Facts (ECF 206, 211), Defendant Certain Teed's Motion for [*260] Summary Judgment (ECF 207-08), Defendant Lafarge's Motion for Summary Judgment (ECF 204), Defendant PABCO's Motion for Summary Judgment (ECF 205), Plaintiffs' Response thereto (ECF 249-50), and Defendants' Replies thereto (ECF 280-85), it is hereby ORDERED that:

1. Defendants Motions for Summary Judgment are DENIED as to Defendants American, National, Lafarge, and PABCO; and

REPORT & RECOMMENDATION

By: Joel C. Hoppe

United States Magistrate Judge

Plaintiff Chase Carmen Hunter filed this action pro se against Lesley J. Holsinger and Carrie Ann Robertson ("Defendants"). Pending before the Court are Holsinger's motion to dismiss, ECF No. 24, Robertson's motion to dismiss, ECF No. 16, and Hunter's motions to amend the complaint, ECF Nos. 38-41. These motions are before me by referral under 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1)(B). The parties have briefed and argued the issue, and the matter is ripe for decision. After considering the pleadings, the parties' briefs and oral arguments, and the applicable law, I find that Hunter has failed to state a claim that entitles her to relief [*2] and that the proposed amendment of her Complaint would be futile. I therefore recommend that the presiding district judge grant Holsinger and Robertson's motions to dismiss and deny Hunter's motions to amend her complaint.

I. Procedural History

On June 4, 2015, Hunter filed a Complaint alleging ten counts against Holsinger alone and another four counts against both Defendants. ECF No. 2. Robertson and Holsinger filed separate motions to dismiss, ECF Nos. 16, 24, and Hunter responded with briefs in opposition that also contained many facts not within the Complaint, ECF Nos. 38, 39, 41. At oral argument and by Order on November 25, 2015, ECF No. 55, the Court interpreted Hunter's responsive briefs as a motion to amend her complaint and granted further briefing on the issue. Hunter filed a brief in support of her motion, ECF No. 44, Robinson and Holsinger filed briefs in opposition, ECF Nos. 58, 59, and Hunter filed reply briefs in support, ECF Nos. 60, 63.

II. Facts

For the purposes of the motions to dismiss, the Court accepts as true all of Hunter's well-pled facts and construes them in the light most favorable to her. Philips v. Pitt Cty. Mem'l Hosp., 572 F.3d 176, 180 (4th Cir. 2009). Holsinger is an animal control officer for the City of Staunton, Virginia, [*3] and Robertson is a dog owner within Holsinger's jurisdiction. Compl. ¶¶ 1, 22-23. On March 26, 2015, Holsinger entered into the Virginia Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services online database that Robertson's dog had bitten someone. Id. ¶ 4. Roughly the same time, she informed Robertson of Virginia Code § 3.2-6540(F), which requires owners of dogs that have been found dangerous to have liability insurance covering animal bites up to at least $100,000, or a surety bond of at least $100,000. Id. ¶ 1; see Va. Code Ann. § 3.2-6540(F). She told Robertson that she "must purchase 'a separate policy with only the dog on it' and that Robertson must buy this policy from 'Lester Kalmanson Agency or xinsurance' because these are the only two providers [of policies with] 'only the dog' on them." Compl. ¶ 2. Hunter states that Holsinger pressured Robertson to comply over the next two months, including calling her repeatedly, saying she would euthanize her dog, and threatening to report Robertson—who was on supervised release—to her probation officer. Id. ¶ 1.

In early May 2015, Hunter assisted Robertson in procuring an insurance policy to satisfy Virginia Code § 3.2-6540.[1] Id. ¶ 2. When Robertson presented this policy to Holsinger on May 15, Holsinger informed her [*4] that Hunter was not licensed in Virginia and was under investigation. Id. ¶¶ 2, 25. She said Robertson's policy was fake, not legal, and failed to satisfy the statute. Id. Hunter alleges that Holsinger's statements about her were false, Holsinger knew they were false, and Robertson should have known they were false. Id. ¶¶ 2, 25. Holsinger referred Robertson to a renter's insurance policy from Farmer's Insurance Company that she said complied with Virginia Code § 3.2-6540. Id. ¶ 3. Hunter alleges that Holsinger coached Robertson to lie on her application to Farmer's by denying that her dog had bitten someone. Id. ¶ 4.

Despite Hunter's assurance that Holsinger's statements were false, Robertson demanded a refund, ordered Hunter to charge no future installment payments, and canceled the credit card associated with her policy. Id. She insulted Hunter, calling her pathetic, among other things. Id. ¶ 25. She further "filed complaints against Hunter with Holsinger, her credit card issuer, [*5] and the Bureau of Insurance, and posted comments about Hunter on the internet." Id. Hunter alleges that Holsinger told Robertson how to file the complaint with the Bureau of Insurance. Id. ¶ 26.

Hunter derives fourteen causes of action from these events. Against Holsinger alone, she alleges: conspiracy in restraint of trade and to create a monopoly in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act (Counts I and II), blackmail in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 873 (Count IV), deprivation of constitutional rights in violation of 42 U.S.C. § 1983 (Count V), conspiracy to interfere with civil rights in violation of 42 U.S.C. § 1985 (Count VI), failure to prevent a conspiracy to interfere with civil rights in violation of 42 U.S.C. § 1986 (Count VII), accessory after the fact in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 3 (Count VIII), misprision in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 4 (Count IX), conspiracy against constitutional rights in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 241 (Count X), and deprivation of rights under the color of law in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 242 (Count XI). Against both Defendants, she alleges: a crime affecting insurance in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1033 (Count III), common law fraud (Count XII), tortious interference with a business expectancy (Count XIII), and conspiracy (Count XIV). She requests monetary damages, declaratory and injunctive relief, [*6] and attorney's fees.

[1] The exact nature of Hunter's business was unclear in the Complaint; however, in her motion to amend, Hunter clarifies that she is "an insurance agent who helps consumers obtain liability insurance for their dogs." ECF No. 39, at 5.

Hunter premises recovery for four of her counts—Counts III, IV, X, and XI—on 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c), part of the Racketeering Influenced and Corrupt Organization Acts ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961-68. In her motion to dismiss, Holsinger challenged the relevance of this statute under the facts of the Complaint. ECF No. 25, at 29-30. Hunter's responsive briefs contained a rebuttal to Holsinger's arguments and a significant amount of new facts detailing her RICO allegations. See ECF No. 38, at 4-32; ECF No. 39, at 5-35.[2] Both briefs end by requesting the Court "to allow Hunter to amend her complaint to include the details shown above," ECF No. 38, at 34; ECF No. 39, at 36, leading the Court to interpret these briefs as motions for leave to file an amended complaint.

In her proposed amended facts, Hunter states that she is one of only a few insurance agents who sell policies covering dangerous dogs. ECF No. 39, at 5-6. In 2009, [*7] one of her competitors in this market, Mitchel Kalmanson, sued her and others in Florida state court.[3] Id. at 6. Though the contours of this dispute are not clear, it eventually resulted in an April 2011 judgment against the defendants for ten million dollars. Id. Hunter alleges many defects with the case and judgment, including failure to effect service, forged records of hearings that never occurred, and court orders (including the final judgment) being entered by her opponents rather than a judge. Id. at 6-9. Hunter concludes that all court orders from this case and the judgment against her are "fraudulent" and not legally binding.[4] Id. at 6, 11. Hunter's attempts to challenge the judgment on direct appeal and with additional suits in Florida have been unsuccessful. Id.

In 2012, Kalmanson began attempting to collect on his judgment in multiple states, including Virginia.[5] Id. at 11-17, 22-23. Hunter challenged the judgment and Virginia collection efforts [*8] in Virginia state court and the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, but was not successful. Id. at 11-14. In January 2015, a Virginia judge ordered Hunter's property in Chesterfield County sold to satisfy the Florida judgment. Id. at 15-16. The locks on her property were changed, and Hunter has lost the rental income from that property. Id. at 16. Collection efforts have also resulted in multiple orders for Hunter's arrest, id. at 12-14, 19, 22-23, and two periods of imprisonment in Virginia for eight days each in 2012, id. at 12, 22-23. Hunter calls these arrests "kidnapping" performed "in cooperation with the criminal conspiracy arising from Florida." Id. at 14.

In October 2014, the Virginia Bureau of Insurance ("VBI") initiated an investigation into [*9] Hunter's business.[6] Id. at 14. The pleadings do not provide much detail on the proceedings, but it appears that the VBI took issue with

[2] Hunter's opposition to Robertson's motion to dismiss, ECF No. 38, and her opposition to Holsinger's motion to dismiss, ECF No. 39, are largely identical in their recitation of new facts. For simplicity, the Court will cite to ECF No. 39 for all material identically presented in both motions.

[3] Hunter does not say who the other parties in the suit were, only that she was one of the defendants. ECF No. 39, at 9.

[4] Though this is a legal conclusion and need not be taken as true by the Court, Hunter's reasoning on this point is important to understanding her perspective and subsequent claims.

[5] Hunter "once lived in Virginia," ECF No. 39, at 13, and as of January 2015 still owned rental property in Chesterfield County, id. at 16. Her complaint does not provide her current residence, instead stating she "is a citizen of the United States of America and not a resident of Virginia, during all times relevant," Compl. ¶ 21, though she also states elsewhere that her state of residence is Massachusetts, ECF No. 39, at 33, and she mailed her Complaint from an address in California, ECF No. 2-1.

[6] Through a request under the North Carolina Freedom of Information Act, Hunter received emails between the North Carolina Department of Insurance ("NCDI") and the VBI. ECF No. 39, at 14-15. A September 11, 2014, email from an NCDI employee suggests to a VBI employee that the VBI take action against Hunter in an [*10] attempt to "corral" her. Id.

Hunter's website, id. at 19, and that they wrangled over production of documents, id. at 20. Concerning the documents, Hunter states both that the VBI "never alleged that Hunter had [or] was required to have" the requested documents and that she actually did respond to the request. Id. Nevertheless, the VBI threatened to fine her for failure to produce documents. Id. The proceeding ended with the VBI revoking Hunter's license, allegedly solely for Hunter's failure to produce the requested documents. Id. at 21. Hunter pleads multiple procedural defects with the VBI's process, especially the handling of her second administrative hearing, and consequently labels the order revoking her license "void." Id. at 21. Hunter reports that administrative action has also been taken against her by the Florida Department of Financial Services and the Texas Department of Insurance.[7] Id. at 17-18.

Hunter responded to Kalmanson's collection efforts and the VBI's actions with numerous additional lawsuits. She filed a petition with the Virginia Supreme Court alleging that Virginia judges violated state law in their attempts to enforce the Florida judgment. Id. at 20. The Virginia Supreme Court denied her request for a fee waiver, and Hunter did not pursue the petition further. Id. at 19-20. Hunter filed a federal suit and a petition with the Virginia Supreme Court challenging the VBI's authority to interfere with her business. Id. at 19. After the VBI's revocation of her license, she lodged an appeal with the Virginia Supreme Court and moved for recusal of every Justice due to allegedly rampant fraud and deceit by Virginia judges. Id. at 21-22. By Hunter's own account, none of these suits have resulted in overturning the Florida judgment, halting the efforts to collect on that judgment, or overturning the VBI's revocation of her Virginia license. Id. at 19-22.

With this [*11] background established, Hunter moves on to describe the events underlying the instant suit in greater detail.[8] Robertson first contacted Hunter on May 4, 2015, for help procuring an insurance policy for her dog. Id. at 24. In a May 7 email to Hunter, Robertson stated that her dog "must be on a policy of his own [for] 100,000." Id. at 25. Robertson also stated in emails to Hunter that "the dog warden had been calling me non stop [sic]," id. at 28 (May 13 email), and "I need [the policy] number or our dig [sic] will be taken," id. (May 12 email). On May 12, Hunter charged Robertson's credit card for an insurance policy and emailed a copy of the receipt to Robertson. Id. at 25. Robertson forwarded her policy information to Holsinger the same day. Id.

On May 13, Holsinger received an email from Shane Ayers, another Staunton police officer, that stated "Bill called the other day and said that [Hunter] was not licensed to do insurance in Virginia." Id. at 24. Hunter identifies Bill as William Stanton, an employee [*12] of the VBI and Virginia State Corporation Commission. Id. In either the same email or another email on May 13, Ayers also told Holsinger "you might let [Robertson] know that we approved insurance from PRIME (on-line) and Farmers Insurance." Id. at 27. Hunter relates later that "Public records Hunter obtained from the Virginia Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services in May 2015 show that all other dog owners in Holsinger's jurisdiction met Holsinger's demand for insurance with PRIME contracts which are a 'separate policy with only the dog on it.'" Id. at 34.

Robertson emailed Hunter on May 15, stating that she had discovered Hunter was not licensed in Virginia, the "dog warden could not accept your fake policy and is actually working with an investigator," Hunter did not have permission to access money from her account, she had canceled her card, and she demanded a refund. Id. at 28-29. Hunter told Robertson that she had been given incorrect information and that the her insurance policy was valid. Id. at 29. In a May 18 email, Robertson informed Hunter that she "had to get a new insurance policy, a legal one, and actually the dog warden sent me to this company." Id. Robertson again demanded a refund and stated "your [*13] [sic] so pathetic you don't even have a real phone number for your clients to call." Id. at 29. Robertson forwarded her correspondence with Hunter thus far to Holsinger on May 19. Id. at 32.

Robertson was aware of the instant suit against her and Holsinger by May 25, 2015. Id. at 30. By email to Hunter that day, she disputed Hunter's claim that she lied on her Farmer's Insurance application, stating she had correctly

[7] Hunter states that the "record in the [VBI] administrative hearing proves that the [VBI] sought to revoke Hunter's license so that it could cause each of Hunter's non-resident state insurance licenses to be terminated." ECF No. 39, at 22.

[8] The additional detail comes largely from emails between Robertson and Hunter and documents procured under the Virginia Freedom of Information Act ("VFOIA") from the Staunton Police Department. See ECF No. 39, at 31 (describing the VFOIA request).

indicated that she had "never had to file an insurance claim for her dog biting anyone." Id. On May 26, Robertson sent Hunter an email with an attached document that she describes as the letter Holsinger received from the VBI that led her to deny the policy Hunter helped Robertson procure. Id. at 31. Hunter describes the attachment as "a generic-looking document of no known source . . . [which] appeared to be a 'case summary' of the [VBI's] insurance administrative action against Hunter." Id. Hunter's VFOIA request did not discover an email from the Staunton Police Department to Robertson with this document attached. Id.

Robertson also emailed Holsinger on May 26. She wrote that she had received a copy of the Complaint against them and that it was "packed with lies," including Hunter "saying you threatened [*14] me and coerced me into a bunch of stuff which is all untrue." Id. at 32. Robertson said that she would send Holsinger all email between her and Hunter that she had not already provided and requested that Holsinger call her. Id. Hunter concludes from these facts that participants in the RICO conspiracy originating from Florida solicited the Defendants' participation and the Defendants willfully joined in the RICO conspiracy against Hunter. Id. at 24, 32-33.

Hunter's brief also addresses some issues that are less directly tied to the narrative underlying her causes of action. Hunter expands upon her request in the Complaint for "a conclusive declaratory judgment clarifying the legal relations of the parties," Compl. ¶ 13, by listing four specific questions that she contends are real and imminent disputes ripe for declaratory judgment. ECF No. 39, at 2. She also reiterates her arguments that Virginia Code §§ 3.2-6540(F) and 38.2-2128 violate federal law regarding interstate commerce, id. at 23, and states that the National Association of Insurance Commissioners "functions in violation of federal law because it actively regulates interstate commerce," id. at 24.

II. Standards of Review

A. Motions to Dismiss

A complaint must "state[] a plausible claim for relief" that [*15] "permit[s] the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 679, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). In making this determination, the court accepts as true all well-pled facts and construes those facts in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Philips, 572 F.3d at 180. The court need not accept "legal conclusions, formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action, or bare assertions devoid of further factual enhancements," however, as those are not well-pled facts for Rule 12(b)(6)'s purposes. Nemet Chevrolet, Ltd. v. Consumeraffairs.com, Inc., 591 F.3d 250, 255 (4th Cir. 2009) (citing Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678).

Plaintiffs must plead enough facts to "nudge[] their claims across the line from conceivable to plausible," and the court should dismiss a complaint that is not "plausible on its face." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). Determining whether a complaint states a plausible claim for relief is "a context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 679. Federal courts have an obligation to construe pro se pleadings liberally, so that any potentially valid claim can be fairly decided on its merits rather than the pro se litigant's legal acumen. *Rankin v. Appalachian Power Co., No. 6:14cv47, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10749, 2015 WL 412850, at 1 (W.D. Va. Jan. 30, 2015) (citing Boag v. MacDougall, 454 U.S. 364, 365, 102 S. Ct. 700, 70 L. Ed. 2d 551 (1982)). Still, "a pro se plaintiff must . . . allege facts that state a cause of action, and district courts are not required 'to [*16] conjure up questions never squarely presented to them.'" *Considder v. Medicare, No. 3:09cv49, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 132571, 2009 WL 9052195, at 1 (W.D. Va. Aug. 3, 2009) (quoting Beaudett v. City of Hampton, 775 F.2d 1274, 1278 (4th Cir. 1985)), aff'd, 373 F. App'x 341 (4th Cir. 2010).

B. Motions to Amend

A plaintiff may amend her complaint once as a matter of course within 21 days after serving it, or 21 days after service of a responsive pleading or service of a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b), (e), or (f), whichever is earlier. Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a)(1)(A)-(B). Once this window has elapsed, the plaintiff may only amend with the opposing party's written consent or the court's leave. Id. at 15(a)(2). Leave to amend a complaint should be freely granted when justice so requires. Id. The court should deny leave "only where good reason exists," Franks v. Ross, 313 F.3d 184, 189 n.15 (4th Cir. 2002), such as when amending would be futile, Laber v. Harvey, 438 F.3d 404, 426 (4th Cir. 2006) (en banc). A proposed amendment "may properly be found futile where, as a matter of law, it fails to state a claim" against the putative defendant. Cominelli v. Rector & Visitors of the Univ. of Va., 589 F. Supp. 2d 706, 712 (W.D. Va. 2008).

III. Discussion

The essential facts of this case are simple. The VBI revoked Hunter's license to transact insurance in Virginia. Hunter thereafter brokered an insurance policy on behalf of Robertson. Holsinger, in her duties as a police officer, informed Robertson of Hunter's revoked license and inability to transact insurance in Virginia. Robertson attempted to recover her money and [*17] reported Hunter's conduct. From that interaction, Hunter brings this suit against the Defendants alleging a scattershot of civil and criminal infractions. As the following discussion demonstrates, neither the Complaint nor Hunter's proposed amendments state a claim under the law.

A. Amendment as a Matter of Course

As an initial matter, Hunter argues that she should be able to amend her Complaint as a matter of course under Rule 15(a)(1) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The first responsive pleading to Hunter's Complaint was Robertson's motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), which was served on July 27, 2015, by mail pursuant to Rule 5(b)(2)(C). ECF No. 16, at 10. Hunter's right to amend as a matter of course thus lapsed on August 20, 2015, six days before Hunter filed for an extension of time to respond, ECF No. 29, and 25 days before her first response and motion to amend on September 14, 2015. See ECF No. 38; see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 6(d) (adding three days for mailed service). Hunter argues that her date to amend as a matter of course should be calculated from the Roseboro notice she received and, further, that the date to amend each count should be based upon the individual motion that sought to dismiss that count and its corresponding Roseboro notice—i.e., as Robertson's [*18] motion only sought dismissal of the counts alleged against her, it should only trigger the countdown to amend those counts, not the whole Complaint. See ECF No. 60, at 1-9; ECF No. 63, at 3-4.

The date by which a party must respond to a motion is set by the Local Rules at 14 days after service of the motion, unless otherwise directed by the Court. W.D. Va. Local Rule 11(c)(1). The Court's Roseboro notice concerning Robertson's motion to dismiss modified this deadline by allowing Hunter 21 days from its issuance to respond. ECF No. 18. At Hunter's request, the Court granted an additional 10-day extension to file a response to Robertson's and Holsinger's motions. ECF No. 30. A party's date to amend as a matter of course, on the other hand, is set by the Federal Rules at 21 days from service of a responsive pleading or motion. Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a)(1). Neither the Court's Roseboro notice nor its subsequent extension changed this deadline.

A Roseboro notice acts to ensure that a pro se plaintiff does not lose a dispositive motion because she is not aware of her obligation to respond. Roseboro v. Garrison, 528 F.2d 309, 310 (4th Cir. 1975); see also *Proctor v. Morrissey, No. 95-1937, 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 25712, 1996 WL 555302, at 4 (4th Cir. Oct. 1, 1996) (stating that Roseboro concerns "[t]he entitlement of pro se litigants to specific notice of the pendency of proceedings in which dispositive action may be taken"). As with other [*19] concessions to pro se litigants, it encourages resolution of claims on their merits, rather than legal technicalities. Cf. *Rankin, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10749, 2015 WL 412850, at 1 (discussing how courts construe pro se pleadings liberally). Nothing in the Fourth Circuit's opinion or this Court's Roseboro Notice extends the protections provided in that notice to Rule 15. That the Roseboro notice did not toll the deadline for Hunter's amendment as a matter of right means only that her proposed amended complaint will be evaluated on its merits, rather than granted automatically. This result is consistent with the federal rules and the holding in Roseboro.

Concerning Hunter's second argument, the rules are clear that the filing of any responsive pleading or motion triggers the deadline for amendment of the entire complaint. Thus, "if only some defendants file responsive pleadings, plaintiff still should be governed by the 21-day amendment period in Rule 15(a)(1)(A) for pleading amendments regarding the nonresponding defendants." 6 Charles Alan Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1481 (3d ed. 2015), Westlaw; see Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a) advisory committee's note to 2009 amendment ("The 21-day period to amend once as a matter of course after service of a responsive pleading [*20] or after service of a designated motion are not cumulative."). Further, even if the deadline to amend as a matter of course were calculated from the filing of Holsinger's motion, it would have elapsed three days prior to Hunter's first response in opposition and motion to amend. The Court will thus evaluate Hunter's proposed amendments under Rule 15(a)(2).[9]

B. RICO Allegations

Hunter states repeatedly that the Court must read her pleadings liberally because she is proceeding pro se. See, e.g., ECF No. 60, at 6, 10, 17-18; ECF No. 63, at 5. While she is correct about this principle, she misunderstands its application. A Court is obliged to read a pro se litigant's pleadings liberally, such as overlooking a procedural error or failure to plead the exact cause of action called for by her facts, in order to "allow for the development of a potentially meritorious claim." [*21] Rankin, 15 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10749, 2015 WL 412850, at *1. The Court should not, and indeed cannot, read the law liberally and change the elements of a cause of action so that the facts a pro se litigant presents state a claim. The Court will search for a meritorious claim in pro se pleadings, but cannot create a claim from those pleadings that does not exist in the law. Hunter repeatedly requests the Court do the latter.

For example, Hunter requests recovery on four of her Counts through 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c), part of the RICO Act, which only grants relief if there is an underlying violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1962. Hunter does not plead a violation of § 1962 in her Complaint. Her proposed amended complaint contains thirty pages of allegations devoted to describing "the RICO details" behind this litigation, ECF No. 39, at 5-35, culminating with block quotes of 18 U.S.C. § 1962(b)-(d), id. 34. Nonetheless, Hunter insists that her proposed amendment does not add any new claims, but only supplements the claims already in her Complaint. ECF No. 60, at 6. Rather than dismissing all RICO allegations and requests under § 1964(c) for failure to plead a corresponding claim under § 1962, the Court will liberally construe Hunter's pleadings and evaluate her RICO allegations on the merits.

Section 1964(c) allows "any person injured in his business or property [*22] by reason of a violation of section 1962" to bring a civil suit for recovery of threefold damages sustained, plus costs and attorney's fees. 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c). Violation of § 1962 requires that a defendant participate in "a pattern of racketeering activity" or "collection of unlawful debt," which involves an enterprise engaged in commerce. 18 U.S.C. § 1962(a)—(c). "Racketeering activity" is "any act or threat involving murder, kidnapping, gambling, arson, robbery, bribery, extortion, dealing in obscene matter, or dealing in a controlled substance or listed chemical."[10] Id. § 1961(1). "Unlawful debt" is a debt incurred from illegal gambling activity or unlawful usury. Id. § 1961(6).

Hunter describes the Florida judgment rendered against her as "fraudulent," see, e.g., ECF No. 39, at 7, 11, and alleges many defects with the underlying case and court procedure, id. at 7-8. These are conclusory allegations that the Court need not and does not credit. Moreover, nothing in these allegations involves illegal gambling or usury, as required to qualify as an "unlawful debt" under the RICO statutes. Hunter's proposed additional [*23] facts also relate that the judgment has not been overturned despite her appeals and collateral attacks. See id. at 6, 11, 19-20. The Full Faith and Credit Clause of the Constitution, U.S. Const. art. IV, § 1, and federal statute, 28 U.S.C. § 1738, mandate that "the judgment of a state court should have the same credit, validity, and effect, in every other court in the United States, which it had in the state where it was pronounced." Thomas v. Washington Gas Light Co., 448 U.S. 261, 270, 100 S. Ct. 2647, 65 L. Ed. 2d 757 (1980) (quotation omitted). Virginia expressly allows a foreign judgment creditor to either bring an action to enforce his judgment, Va. Code Ann. § 8.01-465.5, or to follow a codified procedure for the domestication and collection of foreign judgments, id. § 8.01-465.1 to -465.4. Unless and until the Florida judgment is adjudicated invalid, courts in Virginia and throughout the country are bound to aid in its collection.

[9] Hunter argues that her motions to amend should be considered motions to supplement. ECF No. 60, at 6-9. Although most of the events alleged in her filings are not new, some occurred after she filed the Complaint. The standards for evaluating a motion to amend under Rule 15(a) and a motion to supplement under Rule 15(d), however, are nearly identical. See Walker v. United Parcel Serv., 240 F.3d 1268, 1278 (10th Cir. 2001).

[10] The definition also includes a long list of statutes whose violation counts as racketeering activity, none of which Hunter alleges or her pleadings implicate.

As to "racketeering activity," Hunter describes her two eight-day periods of imprisonment as "kidnapping," id. at 14, and the orders for her arrest as "attempted kidnapping," id. at 12-14, 19, 22-23. Kidnapping requires an unlawful seizure or detention. 18 U.S.C. § 1201; Va Code Ann. § 18.2-47. Hunter does not provide detail on the circumstances of her detention, but does appear to contest the validity of the warrants behind her arrests. See ECF No. 39, at 12-14, 19, 22-23. Improper arrest by state officials pursuant to a warrant does not state a claim [*24] for kidnapping, but rather implicates malicious prosecution, which is not defined as "racketeering activity" under the RICO act.

The law must contend with the limited number of words in the English language, and therefore grants words and phrases specific definitions for use in certain contexts, such as RICO violations. Hunter believes the judgment against her was reached in violation of the law, and therefore considers it an unlawful debt. Even taking this conclusion as true, the judgment still does not fit the specific definition of "unlawful debt" set out by the RICO Act and to which its penalties apply. The same is true for Hunter's allegations of "racketeering activity." Furthermore, Hunter's speculative allegations attempting to link the Defendants to a commercial enterprise are unsupported and simply not plausible. Though the Court must liberally construe Hunter's pleadings, she must nonetheless provide sufficient facts to state a plausible claim. The Court cannot distort the meaning of the RICO statutes so that they match Hunter's allegations.

Neither the Complaint nor the proposed additional facts describe an "unlawful debt" or "racketeering activity" as defined by 18 U.S.C. § 1961 or a commercial [*25] enterprise. Nor do they show that Hunter may be able to allege such facts. The portions of Hunter's Complaint requesting relief for RICO violations should therefore be dismissed with prejudice and her motion to amend the complaint to add a RICO claim or facts describing the alleged RICO conspiracy denied as futile.

C. Claims Brought Under Criminal Statutes: Counts III, IV, VIII, IX, X, and XI

Hunter brings five counts against Holsinger and one count against both Defendants alleging violation of various criminal statutes. Federal criminal statutes are enforced through actions brought by the United States Attorney, 28 U.S.C. § 547; Fed. R. Crim. P. 7, and "[a] private citizen lacks a judicially cognizable interest in the prosecution or nonprosecution of another." Diamond v. Charles, 476 U.S. 54, 64-65, 106 S. Ct. 1697, 90 L. Ed. 2d 48 (1986). "A private right of action to enforce a federal law can only be established by Congress, and the judicial duty is only to interpret the statute." *Reinheimer v. Moynihan, No. 5:14cv49, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 57255, 2015 WL 3507328, at 8 (W.D. Va. May 1, 2015) (citing Touche Ross & Co. v. Redington, 442 U.S. 560, 578, 99 S. Ct. 2479, 61 L. Ed. 2d 82 (1979)), report and recommendation adopted in relevant part, No. 5:14cv49, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 57255, 2015 WL 3513765 (W.D. Va. June 4, 2015). Therefore, absent clear Supreme Court guidance, a plaintiff cannot bring a civil claim for violation of a criminal statute. Id. (citing Cannon v. University of Chicago, 441 U.S. 677, 690, 99 S. Ct. 1946, 60 L. Ed. 2d 560 (1979)).

District courts have already found that the exact statutes Hunter [*26] attempts to enforce do not provide a provide right of action. See *Granier v. Ladd, No. 5:14cv5372, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 130505, 2015 WL 5676021, at 8 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 28, 2015) (dismissing claim for violation of 18 U.S.C. § 873 and others brought under Title 18 because "[f]ederal criminal statutes do not provide a basis for civil liability."); *Bardes v. Mass. Mut. Life Ins. Co., No. 1:11cv340, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50591, 2011 WL 1790816, at 3 (M.D.N.C. May 10, 2011) ("Section 1034 allows only the United States Attorney General (and, thus, by clear implication, not private plaintiffs) to seek civil penalties and injunctions for violations of the criminal prohibitions in Section 1033."); Cominsky v. FBI, No. 1:07cv1261, 2007

U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38719, 2007 WL 2206606, at *3 (N.D. Oh. May 29, 2007) ("Title 18 U.S.C. §§ 241, 242 and 18 U.S.C. §§ 3, 4 are criminal statutes. They provide no private right of action.").

Nothing that Hunter has pled or could plead would change the legal impossibility of recovery on these claims. Hunter's Counts III, IV, VIII, IX, X, and XI should be dismissed with prejudice and any amendment related to those counts denied.

D. Antitrust Claims: Counts I and II

Hunter brings antitrust claims against Holsinger alone, alleging in Count I that she violated 15 U.S.C. § 1 and in Count II that she violated 15 U.S.C. § 2. Hunter may bring a private cause of action under 15 U.S.C. § 15, which requires a plaintiff to demonstrate that the defendant violated antitrust statutes and that violation caused an injury [*27] to the plaintiff's business or property.

Hunter argues that Holsinger engaged in two anticompetitive acts: she initially told Robertson that she had to have a separate policy with only the dog on it to satisfy the Virginia statute, then rejected the policy Hunter helped Robertson procure and insisted that Robertson get one of two policies she recommended. Compl. ¶ 2; ECF No. 39, at 25, 29. Hunter concludes that Holsinger has conspired with VBI employees and other Stanton police officers to "restrict the insurance options for dog owners to just two providers in the entire United States of America," thereby impairing Hunter's ability to sell insurance in the Virginia market. ECF No. 39, at 27-28; see also ECF No. 60, at 20.

"The courts have long held that the federal antitrust laws apply primarily to private activity, and they do 'not apply to anticompetitive restraints imposed by the States as an act of government.'" Fisichelli v. City Known as Town of Methuen, 956 F.2d 12, 14 (1st Cir. 1992) (Breyer, C.J.) (quoting City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advert., Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 372, 111 S. Ct. 1344, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382 (1991)). As a municipal employee, Holsinger is potentially entitled to immunity for her actions under the Local Government Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 34-36, and the state action doctrine, see Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943) (establishing the doctrine); City of Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 98 S. Ct. 1123, 55 L. Ed. 2d 364 (1978) (applying Parker to municipalities). The Fourth [*28] Circuit instructs courts "to resolve the immunity issues as early as possible, with a minimum of expense and time to the parties." Sandcrest Outpatient Serv. v. Cumberland Cty. Hosp., 853 F.2d 1139, 1148 n.9 (4th Cir. 1998) (Powell, J. (Ret.), sitting by designation). The Court will address the state action doctrine first, as it provides immunity from damages and injunctions, while 15 U.S.C. § 35 concerns only damages. Command Force Sec., Inc. v. City of Portsmouth, 968 F. Supp. 1069, 1071-72 (E.D. Va. 1997).

The state action doctrine recognizes "that federal antitrust laws are not intended to prohibit States from imposing restraints on competition; thus, a State itself is absolutely immune from antitrust actions, both for money damages and for injunctive relief." Id. at 1072 (citing Parker, 317 U.S. 341, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315). A locality and its employees receive this same protection if they act in their official capacity pursuant to "an authorized implementation of state policy." Columbia, 499 U.S. at 371. The Supreme Court has emphasized that authorization is defined broadly for Parker immunity, asking only if the allegedly anticompetitive conduct is a "foreseeable result" of a clearly articulated state policy. Id. at 373-74. Authorization is broader even than legality; if the action is objectively authorized, the court does not look for substantive or procedural defects that may make the action illegal.[11] Id. at 370-73. Importantly, even allegations of bribery or conspiracy [*29] do not remove immunity if the [11] The Court's conclusion is grounded in principles of federalism:

> "To be sure, state law 'authorizes' only agency decisions that are substantively and procedurally correct. Errors of fact, law, or judgment by the agency are not 'authorized.' Erroneous acts or decisions are subject to reversal by superior tribunals because unauthorized. If the antitrust court demands unqualified 'authority' in this sense, it inevitably becomes the standard reviewer not only of federal agency activity but also of state and local activity whenever it is alleged that the governmental body, though possessing the power to engage in the challenged conduct, has actually exercised its power in a manner not authorized by state law."

action is authorized. Id. at 379 ("[W]e reaffirm our rejection of any interpretation of the Sherman Act that would allow plaintiffs to look behind the actions of state sovereigns to base their claims on 'perceived conspiracies to restrain trade.'" (quoting Hoover v. Ronwin, 466 U.S. 558, 580, 104 S. Ct. 1989, 80 L. Ed. 2d 590 (1984))); see also Fisichelli, 956 F.2d at 14 ("[I]n applying the 'Parker immunity' doctrine, the courts should recognize no exception for 'conspiracy,' 'bribery,' or similar activity." (quoting Columbia, 499 U.S. at 379)).

Hunter contends that Holsinger exceeded any authorization by "giving insurance advice, giving legal advice, and telling insurance consumers from whom they must buy their insurance." ECF No. 39, at 3; see also id. at 28. She also argues that even if Holsinger is entitled to immunity in her official capacity, she is still liable in her individual capacity. ECF No. 63, at 2-3; see Command Force Serv., 968 F. Supp. at 1074 ("[B]oth the State Action Doctrine and the LGAA protect these officials only when they are acting in an 'official capacity,' as opposed to their individual capacities.").

Virginia has a clearly articulated policy in Virginia Code § 3.2-6540(F) that all owners of dangerous dogs must have insurance coverage. Enforcement of this law, like others, is delegated to local municipalities such as the City of Staunton and its police officers such as Holsinger. See Va. Code Ann. § 15.2-1704. Hunter objects to Holsinger's classification of which insurance policies satisfy [*31] the statutory requirement and which do not. Animal control officers deciding whether an insurance policy satisfies the statute is not only a foreseeable result of Virginia Code § 3.2-6540(F), but necessary to its enforcement. Thus, Holsinger's alleged anticompetitive actions were authorized by a clearly articulated state policy. Hunter's allegations that Holsinger misunderstood the statute or abused her authority have no bearing on her entitlement to immunity as a municipal employee. See Columbia, 499 U.S. at 379; Fisichelli, 956 F.2d at 14; Allright Colorado, Inc. v. City & Cty. of Denver, 937 F.2d 1502, 1511 (10th Cir. 1991) ("[W]e reject the argument that alleged errors or abuses in the implementation of state law should expose the City to antitrust liability."); Boone v. Redevelopment Agency of City of San Jose, 841 F.2d 886, 892 (9th Cir. 1988) ("[C]oncerns over federalism and state sovereignty . . . dictate that the [plaintiffs] not be allowed to use federal antitrust law to remedy their claim that the city and the agency exceeded their authority under state law."), cert. denied 488 U.S. 965, 109 S. Ct. 489, 102 L. Ed. 2d 526 (1988).

Additionally, though immunity attaches only to actions taken in an official capacity, Hunter does not allege any anticompetitive actions by Holsinger beyond her interactions with Robertson regarding the standards of Virginia Code § 3.2-6540(F). These acts concern the epitome of Holsinger's official duties—an animal control officer requiring a dog owner to comply with state law—for which [*32] she, just like a municipality, enjoys immunity. See Fisichelli, 956 F.2d at 15-16 (discussing state action doctrine); Command Force Sec., 968 F. Supp. at 1072 (citing Sandcrest, 853 F.2d at 1142 (discussing Local Government Antitrust Act)). By way of contrast, when the court in Command Force Security found that the plaintiffs could potentially state an antitrust claim against police officers in their individual capacities, those officers were engaged in off-duty security work and were being sued for anticompetitive actions in the private security market they shared with the plaintiffs. 968 F. Supp. at 1071, 1074-75. Hunter does not allege that Holsinger participates in the insurance market or that she has taken any actions outside of her role as an animal control officer; instead, her complaints involve Holsinger's interpretation and application of the law. These actions are part of Holsinger's official duties and are covered by state action immunity.[12]

> We agree with that assessment, and believe that in [*30] order to prevent Parker from undermining the very interests of federalism it is designed to protect, it is necessary to adopt a concept of authority broader than what is applied to determine the legality of the municipality's action under state law.

Columbia,, 499 U.S. at 371-72 (quoting P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 212.3b (Supp. 1989)).

[12] Besides Holsinger's immunity, Hunter's antitrust counts have otherwise fatal substantive flaws. Hunter cannot demonstrate, as required by 15 U.S.C. § 15, that Holsinger's alleged antitrust violations caused an injury to her business or property. The VBI revoked Hunter's license before she dealt with Robertson, rendering their business relationship invalid and foreclosing [*33] her potential for future Virginia insurance sales. See Section III.G, infra. Concerning 15 U.S.C. § 1, Hunter does not demonstrate concerted action between Holsinger and any other party as necessary to state a claim for conspiracy, see Section III.E, infra, and with regard to 15 U.S.C. § 2, Hunter does not allege that Holsinger or anyone she interacted with is a participant in the Holsinger is entitled to immunity from monetary and injunctive relief under the state action doctrine and thus analysis of the Local Government Antitrust Act is unnecessary. Nothing in Hunter's proposed amended facts affects Holsinger's immunity. Counts I and II of the Complaint should be dismissed with prejudice and the motion to amend related to those Counts rejected.

E. Title 42 Claims: Counts V, VI, VII

Hunter alleges violation of three civil rights statutes against Holsinger alone. As discussed below, Hunter does not and cannot state a claim under Title 42. Counts V, VI, and VII should be dismissed with prejudice and any amendments directed to those Counts denied as futile.

1. 42 U.S.C. § 1983

Count V alleges [*34] that Hunter is a victim of Holsinger's actions under 42 U.S.C. § 1983. Compl. ¶ 46. Section 1983 creates a civil cause of action against a state actor for "deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws." 42 U.S.C. § 1983. The statute itself does not confer a substantive right, but rather provides an avenue in federal court to redress other rights. Albright v. Oliver, 510 U.S. 266, 271, 114 S. Ct. 807, 127 L. Ed. 2d 114 (1994). Every § 1983 claim therefore requires a separate underlying violation of the Constitution or federal law. As demonstrated in the previous sections, Hunter's pleadings do not state a claim under the RICO statutes, Holsinger is completely immune to the alleged antitrust violations, and the criminal statutes cited in the Complaint do not confer a private right of action under § 1983 or otherwise. Hunter thus has not pled a violation of the Constitution or federal law upon which to base a § 1983 claim.[13]

2. 42 U.S.C. § 1985

Count VI alleges conspiracy in violation of § 1985, but does not specify which subsection Holsinger is alleged to have violated. [*35] "Section 1985(1) prohibits interfering with federal officials in the performance of their duties." Shooting Point, L.L.C. v. Cumming, 238 F. Supp. 2d 729, 739 (E.D. Va. 2002), aff'd, 368 F.3d 379 (4th Cir. 2004). Hunter does not allege that Holsinger has interfered with any federal officials. Section 1985(2) prohibits obstructing justice in federal or state court, especially intimidating witnesses. Id.; see Haddle v. Garrison, 525 U.S. 121, 125, 119 S. Ct. 489, 142 L. Ed. 2d 502 (1998) ("The gist of the wrong at which § 1985(2) is directed is . . . [the] intimidation or retaliation against witnesses in federal-court proceedings."). Though Hunter discusses many court proceedings in her proposed amended facts, she does not allege Holsinger's involvement in any of them; indeed, they mostly precede Holsinger's actions in May 2015 that underlie the Complaint.

"Finally, section 1985(3) prohibits conspiracies to deprive persons of the equal protection of the law." Shooting Point, L.L.C., 238 F. Supp. 2d at 739 (citing Griffin v. Breckenridge, 403 U.S. 88, 102-03, 91 S. Ct. 1790, 29 L. Ed. 2d 338 (1971)). Enacted as part of the Civil Rights Act of 1871, the statute was designed to combat racial discrimination. See United Bhd. of Carpenters and Joiners of America v. Scott, 463 U.S. 825, 836-37, 103 S. Ct. 3352, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1049 (1983). Though the statute is not confined only to racial concerns, a violation of § 1985(3) requires a plaintiff to "demonstrate with specific facts that the defendants were 'motivated by a specific class-based, invidiously discriminatory animus to [ ] deprive the plaintiff[s] of the equal enjoyment of rights secured by the law to all.'" Francis v. Giacomelli, 588 F.3d 186, 196-97 (4th Cir. 2009) (alterations in original) (quoting [*36] Simmons v.

insurance market, much less one who holds monopoly power. See Estate Constr. Co. v. Miller & Smith Holding Co., 14 F.3d 213, 220 (4th Cir. 1994) (elements of conspiracy in restraint of trade); Cavalier Tel., LLC. v. Verizon Virginia, Inc., 330 F.3d 176, 183 (4th Cir. 2003) (elements of monopolization).

[13] Hunter states at various times in her pleadings that Virginia Code §§ 3.2-6540(F) and 38.2-2128 are unconstitutional, but she does not bring an explicit constitutional claim or provide sufficient argument for the Court to infer one. See Compl. ¶ 1, 11-13; ECF No. 39, at 2-3, 23.

Poe, 47 F.3d 1370, 1376 (4th Cir. 1995)). "[T]he intended victims must be victims not because of any personal malice the conspirators have toward them, but because of their membership in or affiliation with a particular class." United Bhd. of Carpenters, 463 U.S. at 850-51 (1983) (Blackmun, J., dissenting). "Moreover, the class must exist independently of the defendants' actions; that is, it cannot be defined simply as the group of victims of the tortious action." Id.

Hunter does not allege that she is part of a class as contemplated by § 1985(3). None of the facts in her Complaint or proposed additional facts indicate that any of the actions she complains of were motivated by class-based animus. On the contrary, she asserts that the many individuals and organizations in her alleged conspiracy have acted against her personally and against her business. Even assuming that every allegation Hunter has alleged is true, the Supreme Court has explicitly declined to "construe § 1985(3) to reach conspiracies motivated by economic or commercial animus." United Bhd. of Carpenters, 463 U.S. at 838. With no implication of class-based animus in her facts, Hunter does not and cannot state a claim under § 1985(3).

3. 42 U.S.C. § 1986

Hunter's last civil rights count alleges that Holsinger knew of a conspiracy in violation of § 1985, was in a position to prevent or aid in preventing the [*37] conspiracy, and failed to act. See 42 U.S.C. § 1986. Fundamentally, "[a] cause of action based upon § 1986 is dependent upon the existence of a claim under § 1985." Trerice v. Summons, 755 F.2d 1081, 1085 (4th Cir. 1985). With no actionable conspiracy, there can be no failure to intercede. The absence of a valid claim under § 1985 is fatal to a claim under § 1986. See Patterson v. McCormick, No. 2:13cv293, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 67846, 2014 WL 2039966, at *9 (E.D. Va. May 15, 2014).

F. Fraud

Count XII alleges common law fraud against Holsigner and Robertson. "To prevail on an actual fraud claim under Virginia law, a plaintiff must prove by clear and convincing evidence '(1) a false representation, (2) of a material fact, (3) made intentionally and knowingly, (4) with intent to mislead, (5) reliance by the party misled, and (6) resulting damage to the party misled.'" Murr v. Capital One Bank (USA), N.A., 28 F. Supp. 3d 575, 584 (E.D. Va. 2014) (quoting Evaluation Res. Corp. v. Alequin, 247 Va. 143, 439 S.E.2d 387, 390, 10 Va. Law Rep. 779 (Va. 1994)).

Hunter's fraud allegations discuss many statements made by Holsinger and Robertson to each other and to third parties. See ECF No. 38, at 32-33; ECF No. 60, at 13-14. Fundamentally, however, a fraud claim requires that "the party asserting the claim be the party to whom false representations were made." Unlimited Screw Products, Inv. v. Malm, 781 F. Supp. 1121 (E.D. Va. 1991) (citing Jefferson Standard Life Ins. Co. v. Hedrick, 181 Va. 824, 27 S.E.3d 198, 202 (Va. 1943)). The Complaint and proposed amended facts do not allege a false representation made by Holsinger [*38] to Hunter, or any reliance upon such a statement by Hunter to her detriment. In fact, the pleadings do not contain any direct communication between Holsinger and Hunter.

The Complaint also does not plead a false representation made by Robertson to Hunter, but the proposed amended facts allege the claim with greater detail. ECF No. 38, at 32-33. Hunter quotes an "electronic agreement" between herself and Robertson wherein Robertson agreed that "[a]ny and all information which has been or will be provided by [Robertson] is and shall be true and correct," and that she would "pay any associated non-premium fees that are contained in [Robertson's] instance online insurance quote when such fees are allowed by law." Id. Hunter asserts that she relied upon these statements in her decision to engage in business with Robertson, but that Robertson's later actions demonstrate that she never intended to abide by these statements.

Hunter's pleadings do not support her argument. For Robertson to knowingly make a false statement with the intent to mislead she must have intended not to follow her representations at the time she made them. To the contrary, all the facts presented in this case indicate that [*39] Robertson honestly desired insurance coverage for her dog and abided by her agreement with Hunter until she discovered that Hunter was not licensed in Virginia and the policy she helped Robertson procure would not fulfill her needs. Nothing indicates that Robertson's representations were false at the time she made them. While a court should construe all facts in the plaintiff's favor when considering a motion to dismiss, it should accept "neither legal conclusions drawn from the facts nor unwarranted inferences, unreasonable conclusions, or arguments." *Luther v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., No. 4:13cv72, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 161001, 2014 WL 6451667, at 2 (W.D. Va. Nov. 17, 2014) (quoting Eastern Shore Mkts., Inc. v. J.D. Assocs. Ltd. Pshp., 213 F.3d 175, 180 (4th Cir. 2000)). It would be unreasonable for the Court to conclude, based on Hunter's allegations, that Robertson's statements were false when she made them. Hunter consequently cannot state a claim for fraud. Count XII of the Complaint should be dismissed with prejudice and any proposed amendment of facts related to it denied.

G. Tortious Interference

Count XIII alleges tortious interference with a business expectancy against Holsinger and Robertson.[14] To state a claim, Hunter must plead: "(1) the existence of a valid contractual relationship or business expectancy; (2) knowledge of the relationship [*40] or expectancy on the part of the interferor; (3) intentional interference inducing or causing a breach or termination of the relationship or expectancy; and (4) resultant damage to the party whose relationship or expectancy has been disrupted." Dunlap v. Cottman Transmission Sys., LLC, 287 Va. 207, 754 S.E.2d 313, 318 (Va. 2014).

The agreement between Robertson and Hunter for the procurement of an insurance policy could form a basis for a claim only against Holsinger, as a party cannot interfere with her own contract. *Atta v. Nelson, No. 7:11cv463, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7436, 2012 WL 178355, at 4 (W.D. Va. Jan. 23, 2012) (citing Fox v. Deese, 234 Va. 412, 362 S.E.2d 699, 4 Va. Law Rep. 1248 (Va. 1987)). Hunter has [*41] not attached a copy of a contract between her and Robertson, and the precise nature of the alleged contractual and business relationship is not clear from the pleadings. Hunter states that she is "an insurance agent who helps consumers obtain liability insurance for their dogs." ECF No. 39, at 5. Robertson "entered into a contractual agreement electronically with Hunter," ECF No. 38, at 32, pursuant to which Hunter helped Robertson obtain insurance, Compl. ¶¶ 2, 25, and charged her credit card $100, ECF No. 39, at 25, 32. Hunter states that she was not part of the resulting contract between Robertson and the insurance company. Id. at 2. After Holsinger informed Robertson that Hunter was not licensed in Virginia and her policy did not satisfy the statute, Robertson demanded a refund, ordered Hunter to charge no future installment payments, and canceled the credit card associated with her policy. Compl. ¶ 4. It is not clear what the terms of Robertson and Hunter's contract were, whether the contractual relationship ended with the provision of insurance, or what ongoing business relationship they had related to installment payments. It is therefore not possible to analyze the nature of the contract [*42] or business expectancy, the circumstances of its breach, or the resulting damages. The Complaint fails to state a claim for tortious interference with Robertson's contract on this basis alone.

Furthermore, Hunter's claim suffers a more fundamental flaw. The proposed amended facts state plainly that the VBI revoked Hunter's insurance license before she interacted with Robertson. ECF No. 39, at 21. Hunter alleges many defects with the VBI's procedure and concludes that these render the decision void. Id. Though she has lodged these objections in an appeal to the Virginia Supreme Court, the Court has yet to act on her petition. Id. at 21-22. Despite Hunter's opinion to the contrary, an administrative (or judicial) decision that has not been formally overturned has full legal effect. Therefore, she was not a licensed insurance agent when she allegedly contracted with Robertson. Virginia law is clear that one cannot sell, solicit, or negotiate contracts of insurance without an agent license. Va. Code Ann. § 38.2-1822 (West); Devnew v. Brown & Brown, Inc., 396 F. Supp. 2d 665, 673 (E.D.

[14] In one of her reply briefs in support of her motion to amend, Hunter objects to Robertson's "conversion" of her claim for "tortious interference," Compl. ¶ 79, into a claim for tortious interference with a business expectancy. ECF No. 60, at 15. She argues that her complaint "sets forth 'tortious interference' which can be liberally construed," and Robertson is therefore adding unnecessary elements. Id. As with her RICO allegations, Hunter requests the Court to liberally construe the law rather than her pleadings. There is no cause of action in Virginia for tortious interference except for that which relates to a business expectancy. The Court cannot find otherwise, regardless of Hunter's pro se status.

Va. 2005) ("[T]o transact insurance in Virginia, Devnew must obtain an insurance agent license pursuant to the requirements in § 38.2-1817 [and] to maintain that license, he must comply with Virginia's insurance laws. § 38.2-1831(2)."); Cosby v. Com. ex rel. State Corp. Comm'n, 248 Va. 551, 450 S.E.2d 121, 123 (Va. 1994) (upholding [*43] State Corporation Commission's finding that an unlicensed woman soliciting and negotiating insurance on behalf of an agent violated Va. Code § 38.2-1822).

Tortious interference requires a valid contract and a contract that is itself illegal cannot form the basis of a interference claim. Am. Online, Inc. v. GreatDeals.Net, 49 F. Supp. 2d 851, 864 (E.D. Va. 1999). Put another way, a plaintiff has no expectation in a contract that is unenforceable. Under Virginia Law, if a party to a contract makes a "false representation of a material fact, constituting an inducement to the contract, on which the [other] had a right to rely," she commits fraud in the inducement. Abi-Najm v. Concord Condominium, LLC, 280 Va. 350, 699 S.E.2d 483, 489 (Va. 2010); see also In re Myrtle, 500 B.R. 441, 450 (Bankr. W.D. Va. 2013). Fraud in the inducement is grounds for rescission, rendering the entire contract voidable and unenforceable. Devine v. Buki, 289 Va. 162, 767 S.E.2d 459, 466 (Va. 2015); Abi-Najm, 699 S.E.2d at 489. Hunter contracted with Robertson to procure insurance and held herself out as an insurance agent without telling her that the VBI had revoked her Virginia license. That misrepresentation goes to the heart of their business relationship. Any contract made under those circumstances is unenforceable because of fraud in the inducement and could not form the basis of a tortious interference claim.[15]

As an additional lost business expectancy, Hunter pleads that the insurance company that issued the policy she helped Robertson obtain has since "ceased to offer this same insurance in Virginia and in all other states in which it does business only because Robertson and Holsinger joined together to attack Hunter's honest services." ECF No. 60, at 16; see also ECF No. 41. Hunter alleges that the Defendants' actions tortiously interfered with her ability to assist future dog owners to procure this insurance.

Courts require business expectancies to be more certain than what Hunter alleges here. "A contract expectancy is a contract that is expected to come into force in the future," GTSI Corp. v. Wildflower Int'l, Inc., No. 1:09cv123, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 61537, 2009 WL 2160451, at *8 (E.D. Va. July 17, 2009), and "[m]ere proof of a plaintiff's belief or hope that a business relationship [*45] will continue is inadequate to sustain the cause of action," Commercial Bus. Sys., Inc. v. Halifax Corp., 253 Va. 292, 484 S.E.2d 892, 896 (Va. 1997). Hunter's general assertion that she would have continued selling the insurance policy in the future lacks the specificity required to state a business expectancy. Furthermore, the revocation of Hunter's license forecloses any reasonable expectation she could have of continuing to sell insurance in Virginia.

Neither the Complaint nor the proposed amended facts present a valid contract or business expectancy upon which Hunter can base a claim for tortious interference. Considering that Hunter did not have a license to sell insurance in Virginia during the relevant time, she could not present additional facts related to this incident that would cure this defect. Count XIII should be dismissed with prejudice and any amendment of the facts related to it denied.

E. Conspiracy

Count XIV alleges that the Defendants have conspired against Hunter.[16] Virginia recognizes two versions of civil conspiracy—common law conspiracy and statutory conspiracy under Virginia Code §§ 18.2-499 and 18.2-500.

[15] While addressing the tortious interference claim, Hunter states that "Robertson breached her contract with [*44] Hunter when she disputed her credit card transaction with Hunter on fraudulent grounds." ECF No. 60, at 17. Hunter does not actually bring a breach of contract claim, and the Court need not infer one. Hunter's failure to disclose that she was not licensed in Virginia would be grounds for fraudulent inducement, and, as Hunter alleged, Robertson clearly terminated any agreement between them.

[16] The Complaint does not specify whether Hunter is bringing a common law or statutory conspiracy claim. See Compl. ¶ 83. Hunter's proposed amendment provides a very brief argument in support of statutory conspiracy, but does so in a section titled "Count XIV — Common Law Conspiracy and Statutory Conspiracy . . . ." See ECF No. 38, at 33-34; ECF No. 39, at 35-36. In the Common law conspiracy requires "(i) an agreement between two or more persons (ii) to accomplish an unlawful purpose or to accomplish a lawful purpose by unlawful means, which (iii) [*46] results in damage to plaintiff." Firestone v. Wiley, 485 F. Supp. 2d 694, 703 (E.D. Va. 2007) (citing Glass v. Glass, 228 Va. 39, 321 S.E.2d 69 (Va. 1984)). Section 18.2-499 imposes criminal liability on conspiracies to injure another in her business, while § 18.2-500 allows a civil cause of action and recovery of treble damages for a violation of § 18.2-499. "To recover in an action under these statutes, a plaintiff must establish: (1) a combination of two or more persons for the purpose of willfully and maliciously injuring plaintiff in his business[;] and (2) resulting damage to plaintiff." Dunlap, 754 S.E.2d at 317.

The two types of conspiracy have common requirements. "Because there can be no conspiracy to do an act that the law allows," the Virginia Supreme Court has held that either type of conspiracy "must at least allege an unlawful act or an unlawful purpose to survive demurrer." [*47] Id. (citations omitted) (collecting cases). "Thus, where 'there is no actionable claim for the underlying alleged wrong, there can be no action for civil conspiracy based on that wrong.'" Firestone, 485 F. Supp. 2d at 703 (quoting Citizens for Fauquier Cty. v. SPR Corp., 37 Va. Cir. 44, 50 (1995)). Additionally, "[u]nder either theory of recovery, the plaintiff must first allege that the defendants combined together to effect a 'preconceived plan and unity of design and purpose, for the common design is the essence of the conspiracy.'" Bay Tobacco, LLC v. Bell Quality Tobacco Prods., LLC, 261 F. Supp. 2d 483, 499 (E.D. Va. 2003) (quoting Bull v. Logetronics, Inc., 323 F. Supp. 115, 131 (E.D. Va. 1971)). Conspiracy must also be pled with particularity, and "in order to survive a motion to dismiss, [Hunter] must at least plead the requisite concert of action and unity of purpose in more than 'mere conclusory language.'" Id. (quoting Lewis v. Gupta, 54 F.Supp.2d 611, 618 (E.D. Va. 1999)).

Hunter's proposed amended facts contain many allegations of conspiracy that have no direct connection to the Defendants. See ECF No. 39, at 5-24 (spending 19 pages to describe six years of legal conflict before finally mentioning the Defendants and the facts underlying this dispute). Holsinger alleges three conspiracies specifically against the Defendants. First, she alleges that Holsinger and Robertson conspired to injure Hunter in her business. ECF No. 39, at 29-30. Second, "Holsinger conspired with Ayers and William [*48] Stanton to restrict, restrain, and impede interstate commerce in the insurance industry" by "restrict[ing] the insurance options for dog owners to just two providers in the entire United States of America." ECF No. 39, at 27-28; see also ECF No. 60, at 20. Third, "Robertson conspired with, among others, Bill of the [VBI] . . . to impede interstate commerce and to unlawfully regulate insurance." ECF No. 60, at 19.

In support of her conspiracy allegations, Hunter presents the following facts and events. Ayers told Holsinger in an email that Stanton had said Hunter was not a licensed insurance agent in Virginia. ECF No. 39, at 24. Ayers also said ""you might let [Robertson] know that we approved insurance from PRIME (on-line) and Farmers Insurance." Id. at 27. Holsinger informed Robertson that Hunter was not licensed in Virginia and that her policy did not satisfy the statute. Id. at 28. Robertson sent emails to Hunter expressing her anger and took remedial action, including canceling the card set up for installment payments, demanding a refund, and reporting Hunter to the VBI. Id. at 28-29. Robertson also sent Hunter a copy of what appeared to be a case summary of the VBI's action and forwarded the emails between herself and Hunter [*49] to Holsinger. Id. at 32. After Hunter filed suit against the Defendants, Robertson sent Holsinger another email requesting to discuss the suit and promising to forward any additional emails between herself and Hunter. Id.

These facts fail to allege either the unlawful purpose or concerted action necessary to sustain a conspiracy claim. As this opinion has discussed, the acts Hunter complains of do not state a cause of action under the law and none of Hunter's other Counts can provide the unlawful act upon which to base her fraud claim. There is no dispute that the VBI revoked Hunter's Virginia insurance license. None of Hunter's allegations of invalidity change the legal effect of that revocation. Neither are any statements made by the Defendants about Hunter's licensure or actions taken by them in response to it rendered unlawful because Hunter disagrees with the revocation decision and informed Robertson that it was fraudulent. In notifying others that the VBI had revoked Hunter's license and then interest of deciding any potentially valid claim on the merits, *Rankin, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10749, 2015 WL 412850, at 1, the Court will consider both forms.

taking steps to rectify Hunter's improper procurement of insurance for Robertson, the Defendants and other alleged conspirators did nothing unlawful. Even if the Defendants' actions were malicious [*50] and resulted in injury to Plaintiff—which the Court does not find—that would not render them unlawful. *R & D 2001, LLC v. Collins, No. CL-2005-7021, 2006 Va. Cir. LEXIS 131, 2006 WL 2578503, at 4 (Va. Cir. Ct. July 12, 2006) ("In Virginia, there can be no conspiracy to do that which is lawful, even if it [is] done maliciously and operates to injure another person or property.").

Additionally, the Defendants' actions align with their own individual duty and self interest and do not support an inference of concerted action. Holsinger's communication with Ayers and, indirectly, Stanton involved Hunter's licensure and the procurement of insurance policies that reflect the requirements of Virginia Code § 3.2-6540(F). Though Hunter characterizes Ayers's email concerning Prime and Farmer's policies as prima facie evidence of a conspiracy to restrict insurance options, the email suggests the companies as examples of policies that are known to satisfy the statute, not as an exclusive list. These interactions are a necessary and ordinary part of workplace communication in law enforcement. Holsinger relayed this information to Robertson as part of her duty to uphold the law, foster compliance, and serve the public. Robertson, finding that she had paid for a policy that did not work as promised, [*51] took steps to avoid further loss, recoup her money, and report Hunter's improper conduct. All of these actions are reasonable under the facts alleged and none of them indicate a common "preconceived plan or unity of design and purpose" between the Defendants, Ayers, or Stanton.

Count XI should be dismissed with prejudice and any proposed amendment related to it denied as futile.

F. Declaratory Judgment

Hunter's Complaint broadly requests "a conclusive declaratory judgment clarifying the legal relations of the parties." Compl. ¶ 13. Her proposed amended complaint expands upon this request by listing four specific questions for declaratory relief. ECF No. 39, at 2. "[A] federal court may properly exercise jurisdiction in a declaratory judgment proceeding when three essential elements are met: (1) the complaint alleges an 'actual controversy' between the parties 'of sufficient immediacy and reality to warrant issuance of a declaratory judgment;' (2) the court possesses an independent basis for jurisdiction over the parties (e.g., federal question or diversity jurisdiction); and (3) the court does not abuse its discretion in its exercise of jurisdiction." Volvo Constr. Equip. N. Am., Inc. v. CLM Equip. Co., 386 F.3d 581, 592 (4th Cir. 2004). Neither Hunter's Complaint nor [*52] proposed amended complaint states a substantive claim upon which relief can be granted. There is thus no actual controversy between the parties or independent jurisdiction upon which to base declaratory judgment. Hunter's request should be denied with prejudice.

IV. Conclusion

Neither Hunter's Complaint nor proposed amended complaint states a claim for which the Court can grant relief. I therefore recommend that the presiding District Judge GRANT Robertson's motion to dismiss, ECF No. 16, GRANT Holsinger's motion to dismiss, ECF No. 24, and DENY Hunter's motions to amend her complaint, ECF Nos. 38, 39, 40, 41, and DISMISS WITH PREJUDICE Hunter's Complaint, ECF No. 2.

[*586] ORDER:

(1) DENYING PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION (ECF NO. 121);

(2) DENYING MOTION FOR SANCTIONS (ECF NO. 132); AND

(3) DENYING EX PARTE MOTIONS RE: SUPPLEMENTAL AUTHORITY (ECF NOS. 139, 145, 146)

Plaintiffs Nancy Carrera, Anna Hershey, Emily Diaz, Brent Morrison, and Karene [*587] Jullien (collectively, "Plaintiffs") filed a Consolidated Class Action Complaint against defendant First American Home Buyers Protection Company ("Defendant" or "First American") on October 9, 2014 alleging: (1) tortious breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing; (2) violation of California Civil Code § 1710(1) (intentional misrepresentation); (3) violation of California Civil Code § 1710(2) (negligent misrepresentation); (4) violation of California Civil Code § 1710(3) (fraud by concealment); (5) violation of California Civil Code § 1710(4); (6) violation of California Business and Professions Code §§ 17200, et seq. (the "UCL"); (7) false advertising; (8) breach of contract;[1] and (9) declaratory relief. (ECF No. 115 ("Consol. Compl.").)

On November 24, 2014, Plaintiffs filed a motion to certify the following class pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(b)(2) and [3] (b)(3):

> All persons who purchased or were listed as the named insured on a home protection contract issued by Defendant First American Home Buyers Protection Corporation from March 6, 2003 to the present.

(ECF No. 121-1 ("Mot.") at pp. 2, 16, n. 8.) Plaintiffs seek certification of the class for the following claims: (1) intentional misrepresentation; (2) negligent misrepresentation; (3) fraud by concealment; (4) promissory fraud; (5) violation of the UCL; and (6) false advertising. (Id. at pp. 2-3.)[2] Defendant opposes. (ECF No. 128 ("Opp.").) The gravamen of Plaintiffs' class claims is that First American made misrepresentations in marketing home protection contracts, because First American routinely denies or delays legitimate claims made under the contracts.

After the filing of Plaintiffs' motion for class certification, Plaintiffs filed a motion for sanctions and the parties both filed ex parte motions for leave to file a notice of supplemental authority.

The Court finds these motions suitable for determination on the papers submitted and without oral argument. See Civ. L.R. 7.1. For the following [4] reasons, Plaintiffs' motion for class certification (ECF No. 121) is DENIED, the ex parte motions regarding supplemental authority filed by the parties (ECF Nos. 139, 145, 146)[3] are DENIED, and Plaintiffs' motion for sanctions (ECF No. 132) is DENIED.

I. FACTUAL BACKGROUND

First American is a nationwide provider of home warranty plans. (Opp. at p. 8.) The plans provide for the "repair or replacement" of covered systems and appliances that malfunction during the plan period due to "normal wear and tear," subject to certain exclusions. (Id.) The plans expire after one year, but can be renewed for additional one year terms. (Id.) During the class period, First American sold plans with a variety of configurations in more than 40

---

[1] The breach of contract claim is being brought solely on behalf of Plaintiffs Carrera, Hershey, Morrison, and Diaz individually. (ECF No. 115 at p. 49.)

[2] Plaintiffs do not seek certification of their tortious breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing claim.

[3] Having read and considered the moving papers, and good cause failing to appear, the Court DENIES the ex parte motions regarding supplemental authority. The Court will disregard any new argument contained in the motions. To the extent the cases are relevant, the Court will locate them in its own research.

states. (ECF No. 128-36 ("Hand Decl.") at ¶¶ 6-8.) From March 2003 through April 2011, First American sold 3,220,026 home warranty plans. (ECF No. 121-2 ("Bottini Decl.") at ¶ [5] 26, Exh. 25.)

First American markets and advertises its plans through four channels: (1) real estate sales; (2) renewals; (3) starting in 2007, direct to consumer (via telephone and online); and (4) portfolio management (10 or more properties under contract). (Opp. at p. 9; Hand Decl. at ¶ 5; ECF No. 128-35 ("Craney Decl.") at ¶ 4; ECF No. 128-16 ("Miles Decl.") at ¶ 3.) The primary forms of marketing communication include "flyers, postcards, brochures, direct mail, email, social media, and websites." (Hand Decl. at ¶ 9.)

First American home warranty plans can be obtained (1) in connection with the purchase of a residential property; (2) separately by ordering over the phone or through [*588] First American's website; or (3) by renewing a prior contract. (Miles Decl. at ¶ 3.) For calendar years 2004 to 2013, inclusive, approximately 50% of First American's home warranty plans were sold in the real estate channel, 46% were sold in the renewal channel, 4% were sold in the direct-to-consumer channel, and less than 1% were sold in the portfolio management channel. (Hand Decl. at ¶ 32.)

During the class period, from approximately March 2003 to June 2011, First American issued approximately 1,320 different versions [6] of its contract. (Miles Decl. at ¶ 8.) The contracts varied from state-to-state and year-to-year, and contained different types of coverage. (Id. at Exhs. C, D.)

First American's records reflect that approximately 49% of plan holders never make a claim under their plan. (Id. at ¶ 12.) In addition, although imprecise, First American's records reflect that between March 6, 2003 and December 31, 2012, approximately 4.5% of all claims made were denied in full or in part. (Id. at ¶ 11.)

A. Real Estate Sales Channel

In the real estate channel, First American employs approximately 100 "area managers" across the United States, who interact with local real estate agents. (Hand Decl. at ¶ 10.) The real estate agents, in turn, interact directly with home buyers and sellers, who then decide whether or not to purchase a home warranty plan with First American. (Id. at ¶ 10.) On occasion, home buyers and sellers use a real estate agent who does not interact with a First American area manager. (Id. at ¶ 11.) First American area managers are given discretion in determining how they want to market the plans. (Id. at ¶¶ 12, 13.) Marketing may include giving a live presentation at a real estate office or [7] trade event, speaking or corresponding with a real estate agent, or distributing written marketing materials prepared by First American's sales and marketing department, which are available for the area manager to order. (Id. at ¶ 12.)

Plaintiffs assert that First American's area managers are given standardized, written scripts. (Bottini Decl. at Exhs. 1 and 2.) As examples, Plaintiffs attach a First American Product and Services Home Warranty Training Presentation for real estate agents (see id.) and a Quick Reference Guide (see id. at Exh. 3) to their motion. In the presentation, the agents are instructed to hand out and review First American's brochures. (Id. at Exhs. 1 and 2.) The guide contains a "suggested script" for buyers and sellers, which contains similar language to the brochures. (Id. at Exh. 3.)

First American disputes the contention that it provides its area managers with a "script" to follow in selling its plans to buyers and sellers. (Hand Decl. at ¶ 13.) First American claims the "script" attached to Plaintiffs' motion is part of a PowerPoint presentation approved by First American's sales and marketing department in 2010 for use by use by some area managers. (Id. at [8] ¶ 14.) First American further claims this PowerPoint presentation was not used prior to 2010 and was never widely or uniformly disseminated to its network of area managers or available on First American's website. (Id. at ¶¶ 14, 15.)

First American also contends that the Quick Reference Guide attached to Plaintiffs' motion (Bottini Decl. at Exh. 3), which was generated in 2012, was only in use in the 2012-2013 time frame, and was not widely used or disseminated during that time. (Hand Decl. at ¶ 16.) First American further asserts that the Quick Reference Guide was never available on First American's website. (Id. at ¶ 16.)

First American admits that its sales and marketing department creates certain written materials, such as brochures and fliers, and sends those materials to many area managers to assist in the promotion of First American's home warranty plans or makes them available on First American's website. (Hand Decl. at ¶ 17; Bottini Decl. at Exh. 28 ("Miles II Depo.") at 64:6-12; see also Bottini Decl. at Exhs. 42, 43, 46.) However, First American contends they do not have a uniform practice of providing these materials and do not keep track of which specific materials the area [9] managers opt to provide to the real estate agents. (Hand Decl. at ¶¶ 19, 20.) [*589] First American also does not monitor how each real estate agent uses the provided materials, if the agent uses them at all. (Id. at ¶¶ 21, 24, 27.)

In the real estate channel, home warranty plans may be purchased by the: (1) real estate agent; (2) home seller; or (3) home buyer. (Hand Decl. at ¶ 23; Craney Decl. at ¶ 5; Miles Decl. at ¶¶ 3, 4.) Of the three options, the plans are more often purchased by the home seller or real estate agent. (Hand Decl. at ¶ 25.) The home buyer is rarely involved in the evaluation and selection of the plan, and may not receive a copy of the contract until after closing and taking possession of the home. (Id. at ¶ 25.) First American's marketing materials are aimed at both buyers and sellers. (See id. at Exh. B.)

First American asserts that it has created a wide variety of marketing materials over the years, which have varied over time and from region to region. (Id. at 18, 28, 31, Exh. B.) Some of the materials are specifically created at the request of area managers to be tailored to a specific region. (Id. at ¶¶ 18, 28.) First American attaches to its Opposition a few examples of its advertising [10] and marketing materials used in the real estate channel during the class period that do not reference Plaintiffs' alleged misrepresentations, and contain variations on the "cost comparison chart." (Id. at Exhs. A, B.) To their motion, Plaintiffs attach copies of eleven different brochures developed by First American containing the alleged misrepresentations. (Bottini Decl. at Exhibit 33.) First American contends that all of the brochures attached by Plaintiffs were intended for use exclusively in the real estate channel. (Hand Decl. at ¶ 29.)

Once escrow on a home purchase has closed, First American receives payment for the home warranty contract, typically a check drawn on the escrow account. (Miles Decl. at ¶ 4.) However, First American does not receive a copy of the underlying real estate purchase agreement, and has no way of knowing whether the buyer or seller agreed to pay for the premiums. (Id. at ¶ 4.) After First American receives an order and payment, First American mails a copy of the home warranty contract to the home buyer. (Id. at ¶ 4.)

B. Direct to Consumer Channel

First American created the direct-to-consumer channel in 2007. (Id. at ¶ 34.) The channel includes limited [11] scale direct mailings, telephone calls from First American based on leads generated by third-party vendors, and plans purchased directly through First American's website. (Id. at ¶ 34; Bottini Decl. at Exhs. 44, 45.) First American contends that because of the cost effectiveness of delivering marketing materials, purchasers are more likely to see advertising in an electronic format — website or email — rather than in a print format. (Hand Decl. at ¶ 34; see also Bottini Decl. at Exhs. 10-14, 15 ("Craney Depo.") at 113:8-115:15.)

C. Portfolio Management Channel

First American created the portfolio management channel in February 2013. The channel is defined as purchasers buying 10 or more warranties for their properties, for any given year. (Hand Decl. at ¶ 33.)

D. Renewals

When a home warranty plan is about to expire, First American mails various types of renewal correspondence to the holder of the plan. (Craney Decl. at ¶ 5.) The holder of the plan is not necessarily the person who purchased the plan. (Id.) However, First American only mails renewal correspondence to the holder of the plan, regardless of who purchased the plan originally. (Id.) For a variety of reasons, approximately 7% [12] to 10% of plan holders never receive any renewal correspondence from First American. (Id. at ¶ 6.)

First American's renewal correspondence generally consists of a cover letter, plus one or more different marketing inserts called "buck slips." (Craney Decl. at ¶ 7; Craney Depo. at 20:25-21:11; see also Bottini Decl. at Exh. 16.) At various times during the class period, either three or four renewal letters were sent, at various intervals, prior to expiration of a plan. (Craney Depo. at 74:8-24, 75:9-76:3, 84:1-9, 88:4-89:14; Miles II Depo. at 26:4-24, 27:5-10, 229:3-12.) Each letter had several versions. (Craney Depo. at 75:19-76:3, 88:4-10; Miles II Depo. at 26:4-24, 27:5-10.)

[*590] The renewal correspondence varied in content throughout the class period. (Craney Decl. at ¶¶ 8, 13-20; Craney Depo. at 84:1-9.) Some of the cover letters and buck slips contained the allegedly false representations, while others did not. (Craney Decl. at ¶¶ 8, 9, 14-15, 17-18, 20, Exhs. A-G; see also Bottini Decl. at Exh. 9.) The renewal correspondence varied depending on the plan holder's payment method. (Craney Decl. at ¶¶ 9, 11-14.) During the class period, First American used approximately 106 different buck [13] slips, with each correspondence containing anywhere from one to three of these buck slips. (Id. at ¶ 16.) With limited exceptions, First American no longer has records of which plan holders received which buck slips as part of their renewal correspondence during the class period. (Id. at ¶ 16.)

In addition to renewal correspondence, First American also utilizes "inside sales" staff to call customers whose plans are about to expire. (Id. at ¶ 22; Craney Depo. at 74:5-16.) The sales staff is not provided with any uniform written script or guidelines, but instead is given discretion and rely on its judgment in attempting to convince the plan holder to renew. (Craney Decl. at ¶ 22.) On April 12, 2013, the average renewal premium for First American nationwide was $580. (Craney Depo. at 67:13-22.)

E. Location

If plan holders choose to renew, they can renew by telephone, through First American's website, or by mail. (Craney Depo. at 63:21-25.) If plan holders renew by mail, the renewals are sent to Van Nuys, California, regardless of where the plan holder is located in the United States. (Id. 63:2-14.) First American does not maintain records on the method plan holders use to renew. (Id. at [14] 64:1-9, 66:1-11.)

First American maintains call centers in Santa Rosa, California and Phoenix, Arizona. (Craney Depo. at 70:6-18; Miles Depo. at 27:17-24.) The sales people who work in the renewals and direct-to-consumer departments are in one of those two locations. (Craney Depo. at 70:6-22; Miles II Depo. at 20:14-21:8.) The First American marketing and sales personnel who assist in creating the renewal letters are located in Santa Rosa, California. (Craney Depo. at 81:15-25; Miles II Depo. at 29:12-30:18.) Barry Miles, previously the Director of Call Center Operations and Senior Director of Service Operations and now the Vice-President of Operations, is located in Phoenix, Arizona. (Miles Decl. at ¶ 2; Miles Depo. at 8:22-23; Miles II Depo. at 9:18-19.) He previously supervised personnel in the offices in Van Nuys and Phoenix, as well as a "near shore operation" in the Dominican Republic that is a third-party service provider. (Miles Depo. at 27:17-24, 29:12-16.)

The headquarters of First American is in California. (Miles II Depo. at 8:3-11.) Executives are located in Santa Rosa, Van Nuys, and Irvine, California, as well as Phoenix, Arizona and Texas. (Id. at 9:6-12, 10:14-17.)

F. [15] Contractors

Before entering the "First American network," independent contractors are required to sign a "Service Agreement" with First American. (Miles Decl. at ¶ 22; see also Bottini Decl. at Exhs. 6, 7, & 29 ("Horne Depo.") at 30:2-16.) The Service Agreement requires contractors to, among other things: (1) "agree[] to contact homeowner within three hours of being contacted by First American;" (2) "agree[] to initiate service under normal circumstances within 48 hours of receipt of work order from First American;" (3) provide evidence of liability and worker's compensation insurance; and (4) "guarantee[] work performed for a period of thirty days and all parts replaced for a period of ninety days from completion of assignment." (Miles Decl. at ¶ 22; see also Bottini Decl. at Exh. 7; Gosselin Depo. at 117:16-118:5.) First American also requires that each of its contractors be licensed in the appropriate trade, which First American confirms with the relevant regulatory agency. (Miles Decl. at ¶¶ 23, 24; Gosselin Depo. at 117:16-118:5.) First American also tracks the expiration date of its contractors' licenses to ensure they are current. (Miles Decl. at ¶ 24.)

First American utilizes [16] various pricing structures for its contractors, including "uni-price," "flat rate," "default," "all-inclusive," "bid," and "value" payment methods. (Miles Decl. at ¶ 25; see also Bottini Decl. at Exh. 8; Bottini Decl. at Exhs. 25 ("Kaszynski Depo.") at 147:11-148:1, 39.) The pricing structures vary by what the contractor is obligated to pay and First American is obligated to pay for each job. (Miles [*591] Decl. at ¶ 25.) The percentage of contractors on any given pricing structure has varied considerably since 2003. (Miles Decl. at ¶ 26; see also Kaszynski Depo. at 156:10-21.)

First American sends "Welcome Aboard" packages to all contractors. (Horne Depo. at 30:2-32:7.) Each contractor receives the same package, although the package has changed over the years. (Id. at 30:2-32:7.) Packages are sent out via e-mail, fax, or mail. (Id. at 32:16-20.)

In allocating work to a contractor, First American claims "[e]ach contractor's circumstances are unique and are considered on a case-by-case basis," without one factor being determinative. (Miles Decl. at ¶ 28; Kaszynski Depo. at 144:8-18.) In allocating a percentage of work to a contractor, First American asserts that it takes into consideration the following [17] factors: (1) volume of work a contractor is capable of handling; (2) the number of other contractors that work in the same trade for the same geographic area; and (3) "various cost and performance-related criteria." (Miles Decl. at ¶¶ 28, 29; see also Bottini Decl. Exhs. 36-38.)

Evaluating contractor performance includes analyzing a number of reports, including homeowner complaint ("partner violation") reports, re-dispatch reports, continuation reports, recall (or call-back) percentage reports, cash out reports, repair versus replace reports, and reimbursement reports. (Miles Decl. at ¶¶ 30, 33; see also Bottini Decl. at Exhs. 5, 53, 63; Kaszynski Depo. at 158:3-14; Horne Depo. at 215:19-217:20.) First American claims it does not impose any hard or fixed numerical standard that its contractors must satisfy, but it will follow up if one of the performance reports is unusually high. (Miles Decl. at ¶¶ 31, 39; Bottini Decl. at Exhs. 5, 19, 21, 23, 36-38, 54; Kaszynski Depo. at 144:8-18.) If First American is not satisfied with the contractor's response to the follow up, it may either reduce or eliminate the work it allocates to that contractor. (Miles Decl. at ¶ 31; Bottini Decl. at Exhs. [18] 20 ("Gosselin Depo.") at 102:20-24; 107:14-109:20 & 52.) First American states that it routinely reduces or eliminates work allocations due to unsatisfactory performance reports, even where the contractor's average cost per invoice is no higher than other similarly situated contractors. (Miles Decl. at ¶ 31.) In allocating work to contractors, First American claims it does not consider the rate of denial of claims serviced by a contractor. (Id. at ¶ 32.)

For each claim, First American expects its contractors to first assess whether it is both possible and appropriate, under the circumstances, to repair a broken system or appliance, rather than replacing the entire system or appliance outright. (Miles Decl. at ¶ 27; Kaszynski Depo. at 143:23-144:7.) In one of its welcome packages to contractors, First American stated: "FA is looking for repair oriented contractors. We would like for you to attempt repair before you recommend replacement." (Bottini Decl. at Exh. 6; see also Bottini Decl. at Exhs. 54-56, 62, 66.) First American claims it does not encourage its contractors to make "inappropriate repairs," i.e., repair an item when replacement is warranted. (Miles Decl. at ¶27.) From approximately [19] 2008 to 2011, based on historical data, First American established the goal of a 6% to 8% replacement rate for "HVAC," i.e., heating, ventilation, and air conditioning, work. (Gosselin Depo. at 106:19-107:11; Bottini Decl. at Exh. 19.)

First American attempts to track repair/replacement percentages for a certain subset of contractors (uni-price, flat rate, or default pricing structure), although its definitions of "repair" and "replace" "are to a large degree arbitrary and are used for comparative purposes only." (Miles Decl. at ¶¶ 33, 34.) For example, replacing a part in an appliance may be considered a "repair" or a "replacement." (Id. at ¶ 34.) In addition, First American's designation of certain claims as "repair" or "replace" depends on the contractor's price structure. (Id. at ¶¶ 35-38.) With respect to replacement items that First American [*592] covers, it maintains records of those purchases. (Id. at ¶ 36.) For contractors that have all-inclusive pricing which covers the purchase of all parts, First American does not maintain information on those purchases. (Id.)

First American does not keep track of how much its customers pay other than the service trade fee. (Miles II Depo. at 77:8-10; [20] Horne Depo. at 187:2-6.) The service trade fee is listed in the plan holder's contract and generally varies by location. (Miles II Depo. at 73:2-20.) A contractor does not need to call First American if it covers anything not covered by the contract. (Id. at 78:3-4.) Non-covered charges may be reflected in the "Notes" section in Falcon, First American's software. (Miles II Depo. at 94:5-95:12; Horne Depo. at 186:8-23, 213:4-20; Bottini Decl. at Exh. 50.) First American surveys its customers every month, but does not proactively solicit information on fees paid for non-covered charges. (Miles II Depo. at 106:10-11, 117:14-16.)

G. Mandatory Arbitration Agreements

First American began adding mandatory arbitration provisions to new home warranty plans used in the portfolio management channel in February 2013. (Hand Decl. at ¶ 36.) Between February 2013 and early 2014, First American began adding arbitration clauses to its contracts on a state-by-state and channel-by-channel basis. (Id.) By early 2014, all new plans issued in all channels had mandatory arbitration clauses. (Id.)

H. Plaintiffs' Class Claims

Plaintiffs seek to certify a class for intentional misrepresentation, negligent misrepresentation, [21] fraud by concealment, promissory fraud, unfair, unlawful or fraudulent conduct in violation of the UCL, and false advertising. (Mot at pp. 2-3.)

1. Intentional and Negligent Misrepresentation

Plaintiffs allege First American made several "uniform and identical written representations" to the named Plaintiffs and each member of the Class, which were contained in First American's standard home warranty contract and written advertisements. (Consol. Compl. at ¶¶ 64, 99, 104.) The representations include: (1) First American covers unknown defects; (2) First American provides coverage for systems and appliances which malfunction due to lack of maintenance, rust or corrosion, or chemical or sedimentary buildup; (3) repair/replacement costs range between $85 and $7,500; (4) the cost with a First American plan is just $55; (4) First American responded to nearly 900,000 service requests and saved homeowners over $121 million dollars in home repair costs in 2007; (5) First American is a subsidiary of First American Corporation; and (6) having a First American home warranty on a home will give it a competitive edge over other homes on the market. (Id. at ¶ 64.)

Plaintiffs contend these representations are false [22] because: (1) First American routinely denies claims with pre-existing conditions; (2) First American routinely denies claims for pre-textual reasons, including lack of maintenance, rust, and corrosion, even if these things are not the cause of the malfunction; (3) First American trains its employees to deny legitimate warranty claims based on pre-textual reasons; (4) First American financially incentivizes its contractors to deny legitimate claims and/or perform substandard repairs; (5) First American creates economic incentives for contractors to shift the cost of repair or replacement onto the consumer; (6) First American routinely delays authorizing repairs or purchasing necessary equipment; (7) First American's customers routinely have to pay more than the service call fee because First American's contractors cause First American to deny, in whole or part, claims that should have been covered under the policy; (8) First American's contractors routinely gouge customers for the "non-covered" portions of warranty replacements and repairs; (9) First American's contractors routinely upsell customers for repairs and replacements that are not covered under the home warranty plan; (10) [23] First American has no way of knowing how much its customers have to pay out of their pocket for repairs and replacements because it does not keep track of such costs; (11) First American paid out only $94.3 million in [*593] claims during 2007; (12) First American is a subsidiary of First American Title Insurance Company; and (13) there is no evidence a First American home warranty gives the seller a competitive edge on the market. (Id. at ¶ 64.)

2. Concealment

Plaintiffs allege that First American had a duty to disclose all material facts to its insureds pursuant to California Insurance Code section 332. (Id. at ¶ 108.) Given this duty, Plaintiffs allege that Defendant failed to disclose the following: (1) First American tells its contractors to repair rather than replace items, even where a replacement is necessary, and even under situations where repairing rather than replacing an item would pose a threat to the safety of First American's customer; (2) the consumer will pay significant sums out of pocket for the replacements First American does authorize, above and beyond what they have already paid for the premium and service call fees; (3) First American pays its contractors significantly below retail rates; (4) First American [24] allows its contractors to charge full retail rates to First American's customers and encourages its contractors to earn their money mostly from the customer; (5) First American does not police its contractors with respect to charges they impose on First American's customers above and beyond First American's coverage under the home warranty plans and intentionally does not keep track of these charges; and (6) First American encourages a "race to the bottom" with respect to its contractors, by rewarding those who keep their average cost per call at a minimum. (Id. at ¶ 109.)

3. Promissory Fraud

Plaintiffs allege that First American promises customers that it will repair or replace covered systems, and the insured will only pay the service call fee to have any covered system repaired or replaced. (Id. at ¶¶ 116-119.) Plaintiffs allege that First American never had any intention of complying with these promises. (Id. at ¶¶ 120-121.)

4. UCL and FAL

Plaintiffs allege First American violated the unfair, fraudulent, and unlawful prongs of the UCL. (Id. at ¶ 134.) Plaintiffs allege that First American violated the unlawful prong by: (1) engaging in the fraud outlined above; (2) violating the FAL; [25] (3) breaching its contracts with Plaintiffs; (4) violating the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing; (5) violating California Insurance Code section 332; and (6) violating California's Unfair Insurance Practices Act. (Id. at ¶¶ 135-139.) Plaintiffs also allege First American violated the UCL and FAL by making or causing to be made the untrue and misleading statements set forth above. (Id. at ¶ 144.)

I. Named Plaintiffs

1. Nancy Carrera

Plaintiff Nancy Carrera ("Carrera") purchased a home in Virginia Beach, Virginia in or about February 2009. (ECF No. 128-10 ("Shophet Decl.") at Exh. B at 19:11-14.) Carrera's real estate agent, Jen Basnight, purchased a First American home warranty plan for Carrera in connection with the home purchase. (Shophet Decl. at Exh. B at 119:18-121:23; Exhs. K, L; Consol. Compl. at Exh. A.) Ms. Basnight informed Carrera that she purchases plans as a courtesy for the people who use her services. (Shophet Decl. at Exh. B at 121:15-23.) The money came from the seller's funds. (Id. at Exhs. K, L.)

Carrera recalls discussing over the phone with Ms. Basnight the types of services and warranties offered by First American and 2-10 Home Buyers Warranty. (Bottini Decl. II at Exh. 85 at 52:8-54:18.) Carrera testified [26] she picked a home warranty company based in part on this conversation. (Id. at 54:6-8.) Prior to learning that Ms. Basnight had purchased a First American home warranty plan for her, Carrera does not recall seeing any advertising about a home warranty company. (Shophet Decl. at Exh. B at 120:11-24.) After Ms. Basnight informed Carrera that she had purchased a home warranty plan for her, Carrera went online and did some research about First American. (Id. at 120:6-10, 121:6-8.) Carrera testified that she liked First [*594] American's broad range of services and their low service fee. (Id. at 121:6-8.)

Shortly after escrow closed on her home, in her closing packet, Carrera received her First American contract along with several brochures for home warranty companies. (Bottini Decl. at Exh. 34 at 137:15-138:22; ECF No. 129-1 ("Bottini Decl. II") at Exh. 85 at 40:8-14, 118:14-18, 134:16-21.) Carrera reviewed the First American brochure. (Bottini Decl. at Exh. 34 at 137:15-138:22.) The brochure and attached "First American Home Warranty Sample Contract" contain several of the alleged misrepresentations. (See id. at Exh. 34 at Exh. 13.)

After reviewing the brochures, Carrera testified that she found [27] "important" "[t]he service charge being low of $100, that it covered a broad, broad variety of appliances in [her] home, the customer service satisfaction[,] and . . . the quick response." (Bottini Decl. at Exh. 34 at 140:12-141:5; Bottini Decl. II at Exh. 85 at 116:14-117:19.) Carrera also went on First American's website at the time she received the brochures. (Bottini Decl. at Exh. 34 at 141:6-11.) Carrera reviewed this information before the deadline to cancel her First American policy. (Id. at Exh. 34 at 139:4-140:5.)

Carrera's First American home warranty plan was effective from February 20, 2009 through February 19, 2010. (Miles Decl. at ¶ 14.) In June 2009, she made a claim with respect to her air conditioning unit. (Id. at Exh. E.) Carrera did not renew her plan upon expiration. (Id. at ¶ 14.)

2. Karene Jullien

Plaintiff Karene Jullien ("Jullien") purchased a home in Sherman Oaks, California in or about June 2010. (Shophet Decl. at Exhs. E ("Jullien Depo.") at 18:20 - 20:10; U, V.) The home purchase agreement executed by Jullien states that the seller of the property was responsible for paying the cost, not to exceed $350, of a one year home warranty plan to be determined by the buyer [28] during the escrow period. (Shophet Decl. at Exh. U, ¶ 4(E)(5).) However, a later revised invoice indicates Jullien might have purchased the plan herself for $330. (Id. at ¶ 27, Exh. W.)

After reviewing the evidence submitted by all parties, it is unclear who purchased the initial plan. During Jullien's deposition, however, she testified that she did not choose First American, and there is no evidence that she read or relied on any representations from First American. Jullien's broker in connection with this purchase was Ronald Zate. (Id. at Exh. E at 20:12-20.) Jullien testified that prior to the close of escrow she did not discuss any specific home warranty company with Mr. Zate. (Id. at 51:9-16.) However, she informed Mary Stu Bryan, the individual responsible for obtaining her home warranty plan, that she wanted a plan that would specifically cover her AC. (Bottini Decl. II. At Exh. 87 at 39:17-41:15.) She informed Ms. Bryan: "It doesn't [which company] matter as long as it covers the AC." (Id. at 39:20-21.) Jullien later testified that she does not know who ultimately chose First American and did not do any research comparing different home warranty companies prior to close of escrow. [29] (Shophet Decl. at Exh. E at 51:2-25.)

Jullien's initial First American Home Warranty Plan was effective from June 17, 2010 through June 16, 2011. (Miles Decl. at ¶ 21.) During her initial contract term, beginning in or around April 2011, Jullien made claims with respect to her air conditioning unit, in that it was not cooling properly and it was dripping. (Shophet Decl. at Exh. E at 97:7-24; Miles Decl. at ¶ 20, Exh. I.)

In or around October 2011, Jullien renewed her contract with First American effective October 14, 2011. (Miles Decl. at ¶ 21; see also Consol. Compl. (ECF No. 116) at Exh. D.) Prior to this renewal, Jullien spoke with a First American representative over the phone. (Bottini Decl. II at Exh. 87 at 138:23-139:18.) She asked the technician to confirm whether or not her old air conditioning system would be covered, and he confirmed that it would be covered. (Id. at 139:5-18.) According to Jullien, the First American representative "said that he understood that the system was old, and they would take on the repair or replacement of the system if it failed again. And he even said wouldn't that be sweet for less than $500 a month — a year." (Id. at 139:14-18.)

[*595] In August 2012, [30] Jullien received a $1,640.88 cash settlement in lieu of the replacement of her hydronic air handler, which she accepted. (Shophet Decl. at Exhs. Z, AA, BB.) Jullien was ultimately satisfied with how First American resolved the claim she had made. (Id. at Exh. E at 69:2-20.)

Jullien's plan expired on October 13, 2012. (Craney Decl. at ¶ 10; Miles Decl. at ¶ 21.) On or around August 6, 2012, Jullien was mailed an auto-renewal cover letter and notice. (Craney Decl. at ¶ 10.) She did not renew her second home warranty plan. (Miles Decl. at ¶ 21.)

3. Brent Morrison

Brent Morrison ("Morrison") purchased a home in Canyon Country, California in or around April 2012. (Shophet Decl. at Exhs. C at 21:5-9, M, N; Bottini Decl. at Exh. 69, ¶ 2.) The Purchase Agreement and Joint Escrow Instructions executed by Morrison states that the seller of the property was responsible for paying the cost, not to exceed $375, of a one year home warranty plan issued by First American. (Shophet Decl. at Exh. M, ¶ 4(D)(6).) In April 2012, Morrison's real estate agent, Danny Tresierras, ordered a First American home warranty plan. (Id. at Exhs. C at 16:17-24, Q, R.) Mr. Tresierras informed Morrison he chose First American because a past client of his said [31] they do a good job. (Shophet Decl. at Exh. C at 25:5-15; Bottini Decl. at Exh. 70, ¶ 2.) Mr. Tresierras and Morrison did not have any other conversations about First American prior to Morrison signing the Purchase Agreement, or any conversations about other home warranty companies. (Shophet Decl. at Exh. C at 25:16-25.)

After Mr. Tresierras ordered the plan, an invoice was sent to Mr. Tresierras and the escrow company. (Shophet Decl. at Exh. R.) However, as reflected in subsequent Sale Escrow Instructions (dated after the Purchase Agreement and Joint Escrow Instructions) the sellers countered the plan out of the deal and did not provide a one-year home warranty plan for the property in the transaction. (Shophet Decl. at Exhs. O, Q; Bottini Decl. at Exh. 69, ¶ 2.)

When Morrison signed the loan documents, he still understood that a home warranty was included. (Shophet Decl. at Exhs. Q, P.) He subsequently made a claim on the plan on May 8, 2012. (Id. at Exh. P.) Upon being informed that no plan had been purchased, Morrison purchased a First American plan. (Id. at Exhs. R, P.) First American backdated the plan to the date the first claim was made on the property. (Id. at Exh. P.) Therefore, [32] Morrison's First American home warranty plan was effective from May 8, 2012 through May 7, 2013. (Miles Decl. at ¶ 16; Shophet Decl. at Exh. S.) Morrison did not renew his plan upon expiration. (Miles Decl. at ¶ 16.)

In a declaration filed in state court, Morrison states that he received several different brochures from different home warranty companies which solicited him to buy a home warranty contract after escrow closed on his house. (Bottini Decl. at Exh. 69, ¶ 3.) He claims he chose First American based on the "benefits and coverage provided by First American . . . compared to the contracts offered by [other companies], as well as the fact that [his] real estate agent had previously recommended First American." (Id. at ¶ 4.) It is unclear when Morrison read the brochure, as he does not reference his initial claim and confusion, and which representations in the brochure he relied on.

Morrison did not retain the brochure he read and relied on, but attaches one that is "substantially similar" to the one he received. (Bottini Decl. at Exh. 69, ¶ 4, Exh. A.) The brochure and attached "First American Home Warranty Sample Contract" contain several of the alleged misrepresentations. ([33] Id.)

4. Anna Hershey

Anna Hershey ("Hershey") purchased a home on Cliffridge Avenue in La Jolla, California ("Cliffridge Property") in 1999. (Shophet Decl. at ¶ 22, Exh. D at 12:6-8.) Prior to July 2011, Hershey rented this property to tenants. (Id. at 13:3-12.) After that date, Hershey personally lived on the property. (Id. at 13:3-12.)

Hershey received a First American home warranty plan for the property as a gift in [*596] 1999. (Id. at 19:10-17, 74:19-25; Bottini Decl. at Exh. 70 at ¶ 2.) Hershey renewed the plan from time to time. (Shophet Decl. at Exh. D at 20:10-22; Bottini Decl. at Exh. 70 at ¶ 2.) As relevant to this case, Hershey purchased a plan for this property effective July 2, 2010 through July 1, 2011. (Miles Decl. at ¶ 19; Bottini Decl. at Exh. 70 at ¶ 2.) She renewed her plan upon expiration. (Miles Decl. at ¶ 19; Bottini Decl. at Exh. 70 at ¶ 2.) Her new plan was effective July 2, 2011 through July 1, 2012. (Miles Decl. at ¶ 19.) She initially renewed this plan after expiration in July 2012, but changed her mind and received a refund. (Id. at Exh G at 558.)

Hershey also purchased a home on Westbourne Street in La Jolla, California ("Westbourne Property") in 1985. (Shophet Decl. at ¶ 23, Exh. D at 28:5-7.) Prior to moving [34] into the Cliffridge Property in July 2011, she lived in the Westbourne Property. (Id. at Exh. D at 22:13-25.) Hershey did not purchase the First American home warranty plan for the Cliffridge Property contemporaneously with the property. (Id. at ¶ 23, Exh. D at 28:8-11.) Hershey first purchased a home warranty plan with First American for the Westbourne Property in or around 2004. (Id. at Exh. D at 28:12-21.) She thereafter renewed the home warranty contract for this property. (Id. at ¶ 23, Exh. D at 30:9-12.)

As relevant to this case, Hershey purchased a First American home warranty plan for the Westbourne Property effective May 16, 2011 through May 15, 2012. (Miles Decl. at ¶ 19.) She renewed her plan upon expiration. (Id. at ¶ 19.) Her new plan was effective May 18, 2012 through May 17, 2013. (Id. at ¶ 19.) She did not renew the plan after expiration. (Id. at ¶ 19.)

In 2009 and 2010, Hershey attended classes at Mesa College to obtain her real estate license. (Shophet Decl. at Exh. D at 35:7-25.) While she was at Mesa College, First American home warranty plans were pitched by Lisa Wood, an area representative, who handed out First American brochures. (Id. at 36:17-25; Miles Decl. at Exh. G, p. 513.) Hershey also received First [35] American brochures from Prudential, Grossmont College, and REBA, which is a La Jolla real estate association. (Shophet Decl. at Exh. D at 38:11-16, 40:2-17.) Hershey stated in an April 2013 declaration that she saw and relied on "numerous advertisements from Defendant First American" at an unspecified time. (Bottini Decl. at Exh. 70 at ¶ 3.) Hershey further stated that the unspecified "statements and representations" in the brochures "were significant and substantial reasons that caused [her] to purchase the home warranty contracts from First American." (Id.) She attaches two brochures to her declaration. (Id. at ¶ 2, Exhs. B, C.) The brochures and attached "First American Home Warranty Sample Contract" contain several of the alleged misrepresentations. (Id. at ¶ 4, Exhs. B, C.)

Prior to the time she purchased or renewed her home warranty contracts, Hershey states that she received "numerous additional advertisements and brochures from First American," which she specifically recalls stated that: First American provided both repair and replacement coverage; she would only pay one small service fee for each covered claim; the home warranty contracts provided budget protection for costly [36] breakdowns; and First American had a "large network of 'pre-screened, certified service technicians.'" (Id. at ¶ 4.) Hershey states that these representations were "significant and material representations," which influenced her decision to purchase a First American home warranty contract instead of contracts offered by numerous competitors. (Id.)

Hershey also claims she received letters from First American urging her to renew her contracts. (Id. at ¶ 5.) Hershey says she read and relied upon these letters in renewing her coverage, in addition to the First American brochures and ads she had previously seen. (Id.)

In early 2011, Hershey maintained a "blog" on Zillow called "Anna Hershey's Advice." (Shophet Decl. at Exhs. D at 52:4-11; T.) On the blog, she answered a question about home warranty companies on January 5, 2011. (Id. at Exh. T.) In response, she stated: "Hi. I am very happy with First American Home Buyers Protection. Also used them for a rental. Available service is all spelld [sic] out in the contract, they respond promptly. Affiliated with Prudential." [*597] (Id. at Exh. T.) Hershey did not Google First American, however, until after she had problems with them. (Id. at Exh. D at 74:9-18.)

Hershey [37] had claims relating to an oven door denied on the Cliffridge Property in or around November 2010 and May 2012 because the damage was determined not to be due to normal wear and tear. (Miles Decl. at Exh. G, pp. 529, 541-548, 553.) She also had a claim relating to an oven door on the Westbourne Property denied in June 2012 because the damage was determined not to be due to normal wear and tear. (Id. at Exh. H, pp. 566-574.)

5. Emily Diaz

In or around November 2007, Emily Diaz ("Diaz") purchased a residential property with multiple units on Brighton Avenue in San Diego, California. (Shophet Decl. at ¶ 36, Exhs. FF, HH, & CC at 81:15-84:25.) The Purchase Agreement for the property represents that the seller will pay for a one-year home warranty plan issued by CRES, not to exceed $750. (Id. at Exhs. FF at 268 & CC at 86:8-13.) The counter-offer states that the home warranty company will be the seller's choice. (Id. at Exh. FF at 266 & CC at 87:9-89:7.) Diaz was represented during the purchase by realtor Jimmy Loucks. (Id. at Exh. CC at 82:19-83:2.)

Diaz testified that she first became a contract holder with First American in December 2007 in connection with the Brighton Avenue property. (Id. at Exhs. CC at 14:23-15:3 & GG.) Prior to receiving her First American home warranty [38] contract in the mail, she never spoke with anybody at First American, went online to research the company, or read about them in the paper. (Id. at Exh. CC at 208:11-209:11.)

During her contract with First American, Diaz submitted a claim for a shower drain that was not draining properly in March 2008, and a claim for a water heater in December 2008. (Id. at Exh. CC at 76:13-78:3, 186:14-20; Consol. Compl. at ¶ 53.) First American denied the claims. (Shophet Decl. at Exh. CC at 168:12-20.) Diaz ultimately hired and paid outside contractors to fix these issues. (Id. at Exh. CC at 76:13-78:3, 168:12-25.)

II. PROCEDURAL HISTORY[4]

A. Diaz Action

On March 6, 2009, Emily Diaz ("Diaz") commenced a class action against Defendant in San Diego Superior Court. (Diaz v. First American Home Buyers Protection Corporation, Case No. 09-cv-00775-BAS(JLB) ("Diaz Action"), ECF No. 1, Exh. A.) On April 15, 2009, Defendant removed the Diaz Action to federal court pursuant to the Class Action Fairness Act of 2005 ("CAFA"), 28 U.S.C. § 1332, 28 U.S.C. § 1441(a) and (b), and 28 U.S.C. § 1453. (Id.)

On June 22, 2009, the Court granted Defendant's motion to dismiss Diaz's third cause of action [39] for violation of the Consumer Legal Remedies Act ("CLRA") without leave to amend and Diaz's fourth cause of action for violation of the UCL to the extent it relies on a violation of California Insurance Code §§ 790 et seq. or the CLRA. (Diaz Action, ECF No. 15.) The Court also dismissed without prejudice Diaz's fifth and sixth causes of action for intentional misrepresentation and false promise. (Id.)

On July 24, 2009, Diaz filed a First Amended Complaint. (Diaz Action, ECF No. 16.) On September 21, 2009, the Court dismissed Diaz's UCL claim to the extent it relies on the violations of section 300 et seq. of the California Insurance Code and section 7000 et seq. of the California Business and Professions Code. (Diaz Action, ECF No. 24.) The Court also dismissed Diaz's fourth and fifth causes of action to the extent they rely on fraudulent concealment. (Id.) Defendant filed an Answer to the First Amended Complaint on October 21, 2009. (Diaz Action, ECF No. 25.)

With leave of Court, Diaz filed a Second Amended Complaint on May 17, 2010. (Diaz Action, ECF No. 38.) On July 23, 2010, the Court granted Defendant's motion to dismiss the UCL claim on the grounds the claim was [*598] based on alleged violations of the California Unfair Insurance Practices Act ("UIPA"), which provides [40] no private right of action. (Diaz Action, ECF No. 51 at p. 3.) The Court also struck paragraphs 41(b)-(e) from the SAC. (Id. at pp. 4-5.) Defendant filed an Answer to the Second Amended Complaint on August 23, 2010. (Diaz Action, ECF No. 54.)

On July 8, 2011, Diaz moved for class certification. (Diaz Action, ECF No. 87.) The proposed class consisted of:

> All persons and entities in the United States who, during the period from approximately March 6, 2003 through the present (the "Class Period"), purchased, and/or made a claim under, a home-warranty policy issued by Defendant First American Home Buyers Protection Corporation. Excluded from the class are defendants and their parents, subsidiaries, affiliates, all governmental entities, and co-conspirators.

[4] The Court takes judicial notice of prior filings in the Diaz Action and the Carrera Action. (See ECF No. 128-1 at Exhs. A-P, U-W.) See Fed. R. Evid. 201(b); Lee v. City of Los Angeles, 250 F.3d 668, 689-90 (9th Cir. 2001).

(Id. at p. 2.) The proposed class was estimated to contain at least 1,339,900 individuals. (Id.) Diaz sought to certify two classes, a damages class under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(b)(2), and a class seeking rescission and restitution damages under Rule 23(b)(3). (Id.) Diaz sought class certification of not only her breach of contract, breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, intentional misrepresentation, negligent misrepresentation, and false promise claims, but also for her dismissed [41] UCL claim to preserve her rights. (Id. at p. 16.)

On September 8, 2011, the Court denied Diaz's motion for class certification. (Diaz Action, ECF No. 114.) The Court denied certification of Diaz's claims under Rule 23(b)(2) on the grounds they failed the superiority and predominance analysis. (Id. at pp. 8-13.) The Court further denied certification under Rule 23(b)(3) on the grounds Diaz's allegations of future harm were "purely speculative" and Diaz did not offer evidence to rebut Defendant's evidence that the independent contractors do not deny claims and only deny approximately 4% of claims. (Id. at p. 14.) The Court did not address Diaz's UCL claim.

Following the Court's denial of class certification, Defendant moved to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction on October 31, 2011 on the grounds Diaz refused to accept its Rule 68 Offer of Judgment for an amount greater than any amount she could possibly recover at trial. (Diaz Action, ECF No. 125.) On November 29, 2011, the Court granted the motion to dismiss. (Diaz Action, ECF No. 129.)

On November 18, 2013, the Ninth Circuit held that "an unaccepted Rule 68 offer that would fully satisfy a plaintiff's claim is insufficient to render the claim moot." (Diaz Action, ECF No. 163 at 16.) The Ninth Circuit [42] also vacated the dismissal of Diaz's concealment and UCL claims. (Id.) The Ninth Circuit held that Diaz adequately alleged violations of the UCL "because her claims are premised on fraud, breach of contract and breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, even if [Defendant's] alleged conduct also may have violated [UIPA]." (Id at 20.)

The remaining claims in the Diaz matter after appeal therefore included class claims for (1) concealment and (2) violation of the UCL, and individual claims for (1) breach of contract, (2) breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, (3) intentional misrepresentation, (4) negligent misrepresentation, and (5) false promise.

B. Carrera Action

On September 23, 2009, Carrera filed a class action complaint against Defendant in Los Angeles Superior Court ("Carrera Action"). (ECF No. 1 at Exh. A; Diaz Action, ECF No. 65-2.) The complaint initially sought only injunctive and declaratory relief. (ECF No. 1 at Exh. A.) Defendant attempted to remove the Carrera Action to federal court three times. (Id. at ¶¶ 7, 12; Diaz Action, ECF No. 170-1 at p. 2.) Twice it was transferred from the Central District of California to the Southern District [43] of California and remanded. (ECF No. 1 at ¶¶ 7-16.) After the second remand, on or about August 23, 2012, Carrera filed a Second Amended Complaint in Los Angeles Superior Court, adding plaintiffs Anna Hershey, Karene Jullien, and Brent Morrison. (Id. at Exh. O.)

[*599] On September 6, 2013, following Defendant's third removal, the Court denied Plaintiffs' motion to remand. (ECF No. 44.) Following the Ninth Circuit's decision in the Diaz Action, Plaintiffs in the Carrera Action were granted leave to file a Third Amended Complaint, which they did on November 6, 2013. (ECF Nos. 51, 52.) On January 17, 2014, the Court denied Defendant's motion to dismiss the Third Amended Complaint. (ECF No. 72.)

In the Third Amended Complaint, Plaintiffs alleged the following class claims: (1) tortious breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing; (2) violation of California Civil Code § 1710(3) (concealment); (3) violation of California Civil Code § 1710(4) (promissory fraud); (4) a violation of the UCL; (5) false advertising; and (6) declaratory relief; as well as individual claims for breach of contract on behalf of plaintiffs Carrera, Hershey, and Morrison. (ECF No. 52.)

C. Intervention

On December 17, 2010, Ms. Carrera moved to intervene in the Diaz Action [44] on the grounds her claims share common questions of law and fact. (Diaz Action, ECF No. 62 at p. 2.) Diaz did not oppose the intervention. (Diaz Action, ECF No. 64.) Defendant opposed the intervention on the grounds that it was untimely. (Diaz Action, ECF No. 65 at pp. 1-2.) On January 12, 2011, the Court denied Ms. Carrera's motion to intervene on the grounds that it was "not timely at this late stage in the case." (Diaz Action, ECF No. 69 at p. 4.)

D. Consolidation

On July 3, 2014, Diaz filed a motion to consolidate the Diaz Action and the Carrera Action. (Diaz Action, ECF No. 170.) Following a limited opposition by Defendant, the Court granted the motion, finding that consolidation for all purposes under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 42(a)(2) was warranted. (Diaz Action, ECF No. 180, at p. 8.) The Court designated the Carrera Action to be the Lead Case under the caption In re First American Home Buyers Protection Corporation Class Action Litigation, Lead Case No. 13-cv-01585-BAS(JLB), and ordered the parties to file a consolidated complaint, which contained no new allegations or causes of action. (Id. at pp. 9-10.) Thereafter, Defendant was ordered to file an answer to the consolidated complaint which contained no new affirmative defenses [45] or counterclaims. (Id. at p. 10.)

On October 9, 2014, Plaintiffs filed a Consolidated Class Action Complaint against Defendant alleging: (1) tortious breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing; (2) violation of California Civil Code § 1710(1) (intentional misrepresentation); (3) violation of California Civil Code § 1710(2) (negligent misrepresentation); (4) violation of California Civil Code § 1710(3) (fraud by concealment); (5) violation of California Civil Code § 1710(4); (6) violation of California Business and Professions Code §§ 17200, et seq. (the "UCL"); (7) false advertising; (8) breach of contract;[5] and (9) declaratory relief. (ECF Nos. 115, 116.) On October 31, 2014, Defendant filed an answer to the Consolidated Class Action Complaint. (ECF No. 117.)

III. LEGAL STANDARD

The class action is "an exception to the usual rule that litigation is conducted by and on behalf of the individual named parties only." Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Dukes, 564 U.S. 338, 131 S. Ct. 2541, 2550, 180 L. Ed. 2d 374 (2011) (quoting Califano v. Yamasaki, 442 U.S. 682, 700-01, 99 S. Ct. 2545, 61 L. Ed. 2d 176 (1979)). "In order to justify a departure from that rule, 'a class representative must be part of the class and "possess the same interest and suffer the same injury" as the class members.'" Id. (citing E. Tex. Motor Freight Sys., Inc. v. Rodriguez, 431 U.S. 395, 403, 97 S. Ct. 1891, 52 L. Ed. 2d 453 (1977)). "To come within the exception, a party seeking to maintain a class action 'must affirmatively [46] demonstrate his [or her] compliance' with Rule 23." Comcast Corp. v. Behrend, 133 S. Ct. 1426, 1432, 185 L. Ed. 2d 515 (2013) (quoting Wal-Mart, 131 [*600] S. Ct. at 2551-2552); see also Mazza v. Am. Honda Motor Co., Inc., 666 F.3d 581, 588 (9th Cir. 2012).

Rule 23 "does not set forth a mere pleading standard." Id. (quoting Wal-Mart, 131 S. Ct. at 2551.) Rather, a party must satisfy "through evidentiary proof" all of the requirements of Rule 23(a), and at least one of the requirements of Rule 23(b). Id.; see also United Steel, Paper & Forestry, Rubber, Mfg. Energy, Allied Indus. & Serv. Workers Int'l Union v. ConocoPhillips Co., 593 F.3d 802, 806 (9th Cir. 2010); Zinser v. Accufix Research Inst., Inc., 253 F.3d 1180, 1186, amended 273 F.3d 1266 (9th Cir. 2001).

Rule 23(a) outlines four requirements that must be satisfied for class certification: (1) the class must be so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable; (2) questions of law or fact exist that are common to the class; (3) the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class; and (4) the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class. United Steel, Paper & Forestry, Rubber, Mfg. Energy, Allied Indus. & Serv. Workers Int'l Union, 593 F.3d at 806 (citing Fed. R. Civ. P.

[5] The breach of contract claim is being brought solely on behalf of Plaintiffs Carrera, Hershey, Morrison, and Diaz individually. (ECF No. 115 at p. 49.)

23(a)). These requirements are commonly referred to as numerosity, commonality, typicality, and adequacy. See, e.g., id.; Hanlon v. Chrysler Corp., 150 F.3d 1011, 1019 (9th Cir. 1998). A plaintiff must also establish at least one of the requirements outlined in Rule 23(b), including: (1) that there is a risk of substantial prejudice from separate actions; (2) that declaratory or injunctive relief benefitting the class as a whole would be appropriate; or (3) that common questions of law or fact predominate and the class action is superior to other [47] available methods of adjudication. Id. at 806-07 (citing Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)). The requirement set forth in Rule 23(b)(3) is generally referred to as "predominance." Id. at 807.

In analyzing whether a plaintiff has met his or her burden to satisfy the Rule 23 requirements, it "may be necessary for the court to probe behind the pleadings." Wal-Mart, 131 S. Ct. at 2551 (quoting Gen. Tel. Co. of Sw. v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147, 160, 102 S. Ct. 2364, 72 L. Ed. 2d 740 (1982)). Class certification "is proper only if 'the trial court is satisfied, after a rigorous analysis, that the prerequisites'" of Rule 23(a) and (b) have been satisfied. Id. (quoting Falcon, 457 U.S. at 161); see also Comcast Corp., 133 S. Ct. at 1432 (applying same analytical principles to Rule 23(a) and (b)); Zinser, 253 F.3d at 1186. "Such an analysis will frequently entail 'overlap with the merits of the plaintiff's underlying claim.'" Comcast Corp., 133 S. Ct. at 1432 (quoting Wal-Mart, 131 S. Ct. at 2551). However, "Rule 23 grants courts no license to engage in free-ranging merits inquiries at the certification stage." Amgen Inc. v. Conn. Ret. Plans & Trust Funds, 133 S. Ct. 1184, 1194-95, 185 L. Ed. 2d 308 (2013). Accordingly, any merits consideration must be limited to those issues necessary to deciding class certification. See id. at 1195 ("Merits questions may be considered to the extent—but only to the extent—that they are relevant to determining whether the Rule 23 prerequisites for class certification are satisfied.").

A district court is granted "broad discretion" to determine whether the Rule 23 requirements have been met. Zinser, 253 F.3d at 1186; see also Bateman v. Am. Multi—Cinema, Inc., 623 F.3d 708, 712 (9th Cir. 2010); In re Mego Fin. Corp. Sec. Litig., 213 F.3d 454, 461 (9th Cir. 2000) ("The district court's [48] decision certifying the class is subject to a very limited review and will be reversed only upon a strong showing that the district court's decision was a clear abuse of discretion.") (internal quotations omitted).

IV. DISCUSSION

Plaintiffs propose the following class definition:

> All persons who purchased or were listed as the named insured on a home protection contract issued by Defendant First American Home Buyers Protection Corporation from March 6, 2003 to the present (the "Class").[6]

[*601] (Mot. at p. 2.) Plaintiffs primarily seek certification under Rule 23(b)(3) for monetary relief, including damages. (Mot. at p. 16, n. 8.) However, because they also seek a class-wide injunction to end Defendant's alleged unlawful practices, they contend Rule 23(b)(2) certification is also appropriate. (Id.)

Plaintiffs seek certification of the class for the following claims: (1) intentional misrepresentation; (2) negligent misrepresentation; (3) fraud by concealment; (4) promissory fraud; (5) UCL violation; and (6) false [49] advertising. (Id. at pp. 2-3.) Defendant opposes on the grounds: (1) Plaintiffs' claims are atypical; (2) individual issues of law and fact predominate; and (3) the proposed class is not ascertainable. (Opp. at pp. 19-40.)

For the reasons set forth below, the Court finds Plaintiffs have failed to meet the predominance and superiority requirements of Rule 23(b)(3), and failed to establish that a class action is appropriate under Rule 23(b)(2). Because Plaintiffs fail to meet the requirements of Rule 23(b), the Court finds it unnecessary to address the requirements of Rule 23(a).

[6] Plaintiffs seek to certify a nationwide class. However, if the Court finds application of California law to a nationwide class to be inappropriate, Plaintiffs seek to certify a California class. (Mot. at p. 2, n. 2.)

A. Predominance

Rule 23(b)(3) requires the court to find "that the questions of law or fact common to class members predominate over any questions affecting only individual members." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3). "The predominance inquiry focuses on 'the relationship between the common and individual issues' and 'tests whether proposed classes are sufficiently cohesive to warrant adjudication by representation.'" Vinole v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., 571 F.3d 935, 944 (9th Cir. 2009) (quoting Hanlon, 150 F.3d at 1022). As the Ninth Circuit has stated:

> Rule 23(b)(3)'s predominance and superiority requirements were added to cover cases in which a class action would achieve economies of time, effort, and expense, and promote . . . uniformity of decision as to persons similarly situated, without sacrificing procedural fairness or bringing [50] about other undesirable results. Accordingly, a central concern of the Rule 23(b)(3) predominance test is whether adjudication of common issues will help achieve judicial economy.

Id. at 944 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).

"When common questions present a significant aspect of the case and they can be resolved for all members of the class in a single adjudication, there is clear justification for handling the dispute on a representative rather than on an individual basis." Hanlon, 150 F.3d at 1022 (citation omitted). In contrast, when "claims require a fact-intensive, individual analysis," then class certification will "burden the court" and be inappropriate. Vinole, 571 F.3d at 947; see also Zinser, 253 F.3d at 1189 ("[I]f the main issues in a case require the separate adjudication of each class member's individual claim or defense, a Rule 23(b)(3) action would be inappropriate[.]") (citation omitted). Though there is substantial overlap between Rule 23(a)(2)'s commonality and Rule 23(b)(3)'s predominance tests, the latter is a "far more demanding" standard. Wolin v. Jaguar Land Rover N. Am., LLC, 617 F.3d 1168, 1172 (9th Cir. 2010) (quoting Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 623-24, 117 S. Ct. 2231, 138 L. Ed. 2d 689 (1997)). To determine whether questions of law or fact common to the class predominate, the court must analyze each claim separately. Berger v. Home Depot USA, Inc., 741 F.3d 1061, 1068 (9th Cir. 2014) (citing Erica P. John Fund, Inc. v. Halliburton Co., 563 U.S. 804, 131 S. Ct. 2179, 2184, 180 L. Ed. 2d 24 (2011)).

1. Nationwide Class

The Court first examines whether common issues of law predominate as Plaintiffs [51] are attempting to apply California law to a nationwide class. It is well-established that where, as here, a federal court sits in diversity jurisdiction, the court "must look to the forum state's choice of law rules to determine the controlling substantive law." Mazza, 666 F.3d at 589 (quoting Zinser, 253 F.3d at 1187); see also Bruno v. Eckhart Corp., 280 F.R.D. 540, 545, n. 1 (C.D. Cal. 2012).

"Under California's choice of law rules, the class action proponent bears the initial burden to show that California has 'significant contact or significant aggregation [*602] of contacts' to the claims of each class member." Id. (quoting Wash. Mut. Bank v. Super. Ct., 24 Cal. 4th 906, 921, 103 Cal. Rptr. 2d 320, 15 P.3d 1071 (2001)); see also Bruno v. Quten Research Inst., LLC, 280 F.R.D. 524, 538-39 (C.D. Cal. 2011) (stating this requirement ensures that the certification of a nationwide class under the laws of a single state comports with due process). "Once the class action proponent makes this showing, the burden shifts to the other side to demonstrate 'that foreign law, rather than California law, should apply to class claims.'" Id. at 590 (quoting Wash. Mut. Bank, 24 Cal. 4th at 921). "California law may only be used on a classwide basis if 'the interests of other states are not found to outweigh California's interest in having its law applied.'" Id. (quoting Wash. Mut. Bank, 24 Cal. 4th at 921)).

To determine whether the interests of other states outweigh California's interest, the court looks to a three-step governmental interest test:

> First, the [52] court determines whether the relevant law of each of the potentially affected jurisdictions with regard to the particular issue in question is the same or different.

> Second, if there is a difference, the court examines each jurisdiction's interest in the application of its own law under the circumstances of the particular case to determine whether a true conflict exists.
> Third, if the court finds that there is a true conflict, it carefully evaluates and compares the nature and strength of the interest of each jurisdiction in the application of its own law to determine which state's interest would be more impaired if its policy were subordinated to the policy of the other state, and then ultimately applies the law of the state whose interest would be more impaired if its law were not applied.

Id. (quoting McCann v. Foster Wheeler LLC, 48 Cal. 4th 68, 81-82, 105 Cal. Rptr. 3d 378, 225 P.3d 516 (2010)).

The Court finds, and Defendant does not dispute, that Plaintiffs meet their initial burden of showing that California has a constitutionally sufficient aggregation of contacts to the claims of each putative class member because First American's headquarters are in California, it maintains at least one of its call centers in California, its sales and marketing personnel who assist in [53] creating the renewal letters are located in California, the renewal letters are sent to California, approximately a third of its premiums were written in California at times during the class period, and several of its executives are located in California. See Mazza, 666 F.3d at 590. Because Plaintiffs meet their burden, Defendant must demonstrate that foreign law, rather than California law, should apply to class claims. See id.

Defendant submits a chart showing the material differences between California's consumer protection statutes and the consumer protection statutes of the other forty-nine states. (See Shophet Decl. at ¶ 44, Exh. NN.) In this case, during the class period, First American sold plans with a variety of configurations in more than 40 states. (See Hand Decl. at ¶ 7.) Under a conflict of laws analysis, "[a] problem only arises if differences in state law are material, that is, if they make a difference in this litigation." Mazza, 666 F.3d at 590 (citing Wash. Mut. Bank, 24 Cal. 4th at 919). In Mazza, the Ninth Circuit examined the consumer protection statutes of 44 states and concluded that the apparent differences between the states' consumer protection statutes were "not trivial or wholly immaterial differences." Id. at 591 (citing differences in scienter [54] requirements between Colorado, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania; and reliance requirements between Florida, New Jersey and New York). These same differences are material in this case.

In examining the interests of foreign jurisdictions, the Ninth Circuit has concluded that each state has an interest in (1) "balancing the range of products and prices offered to consumers with the legal protections afforded to them;" and (2) "'being able to assure individuals and commercial entities operating within its territory that applicable limitations on liability set forth in the jurisdiction's law [*603] will be available to those individuals and businesses in the event they are faced with litigation in the future.'" Id. at 592-93 (quoting McCann, 48 Cal. 4th at 97-98).

Lastly, in analyzing which state's interest is most impaired, the Ninth Circuit held that it is determinative where the "last event necessary to make the actor liable occurred." See id. at 593-94. In a fraud case, "the place of the wrong was the state where the misrepresentations were communicated to the plaintiffs, not the state where the intention to misrepresent was formed or where the misrepresented acts took place." Id. (citing Zinn v. Ex-Cell-O Corp., 148 Cal. App. 2d 56, 80, n. 6, 306 P.2d 1017 (1957)).

In Mazza, the plaintiffs brought a class action alleging that [55] Honda misrepresented and concealed material information in connection with the marketing and sale of certain Acura vehicles, alleging violations of the UCL, FAL, Consumer Legal Remedies Act, Cal. Civ. Code § 1750, et. seq., and unjust enrichment. Id. at 587. Plaintiffs sought to certify a nationwide class of consumers who were exposed to the misrepresentations through television commercials, brochures, in-store kiosks, and the car's owner's manual. Id. at 586-87. In determining the "place of the wrong," the Ninth Circuit found that "the last events necessary for liability as to the foreign class members — communication of the advertisements to the claimants and their reliance thereon in purchasing vehicles — took place in the various states, not in California." Id. at 594. Accordingly, the Court held that each class member's consumer protection claim should be governed by the consumer protection laws of the jurisdiction in which the transaction took place. Id.

Here, with respect to every real estate purchase, which account for approximately 50% of the transactions, the Court finds the "place of the wrong" was the state of purchase. For renewals, which account for approximately 46% of the transactions, although the advertising was created in California, [56] and one of the call centers was located in California, the misrepresentations were communicated to the putative class members in their respective home states, and therefore those jurisdictions have a stronger interest in the application of their laws. Accordingly, the Court finds that each class member's UCL and FAL claim should be governed by the consumer protection laws of the jurisdiction in which the transaction took place, and certification of these claims on a nationwide basis should be denied.[7]

Plaintiffs request that the Court certify a California class, in the alternative, if the Court elects not to certify a nationwide class. (ECF No. 129 ("Reply") at p. 24.) The Ninth Circuit did not foreclose that possibility in Mazza. See Mazza, 666 F.3d at 594. However, for the reasons set forth below, the Court does not find it appropriate to grant that request. The Court now turns to the elements of each claim and examines whether common questions predominate.

2. Fraud Claims

The elements of fraud under California law are: (1) a misrepresentation, [57] which includes a false representation, concealment, or nondisclosure; (2) knowledge of its falsity; (3) intent to defraud, i.e., to induce reliance; (4) justifiable reliance; and (5) resulting damage. See Lazar v. Super. Ct., 12 Cal. 4th 631, 638, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 377, 909 P.2d 981 (1996); Agosta v. Astor, 120 Cal. App. 4th 596, 603, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 565 (2004); Cadlo v. Owens—Ill., Inc., 125 Cal. App. 4th 513, 519, 23 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1 (2004). The elements comprising a cause of action for negligent misrepresentation are the same, except there is no requirement of intent to induce reliance. See Cadlo, 125 Cal. App. 4th at 519.

To establish fraud through nondisclosure or concealment of facts, a plaintiff similarly must prove: (1) the defendant concealed or suppressed a material fact; (2) the defendant was under a duty to disclose the fact to the plaintiff; (3) the defendant intentionally concealed or suppressed the fact with the intent to defraud the plaintiff; (4) the [*604] plaintiff was unaware of the fact and would not have acted as he did if he had known of the concealed or suppressed fact; and (5) as a result of the concealment or suppression of the fact, the plaintiff sustained damage. See Blickman Turkus, LP v. MF Downtown Sunnyvale, LLC, 162 Cal. App. 4th 858, 868, 76 Cal. Rptr. 3d 325 (2008); see also Davis v. HSBC Bank Nev., N.A., 691 F.3d 1152, 1163 (9th Cir. 2012); OCM Principal Opportunities Fund v. CIBC World Mkts. Corp., 157 Cal. App. 4th 835, 845, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 828 (2007). A legal duty to disclose facts arises in four circumstances: (1) when the defendant is in a fiduciary relationship with the plaintiff; (2) when the defendant had exclusive knowledge of material facts not known to the plaintiff; (3) [58] when the defendant actively conceals a material fact from the plaintiff; and (4) when the defendant makes partial representations but also suppresses some material fact. Baggett v. Hewlett-Packard Co., 582 F. Supp. 2d 1261, 1267-68 (C.D. Cal. 2007) (citing LiMandri v. Judkins, 52 Cal. App. 4th 326, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 539 (1997)).

As relevant here, California Insurance Code section 332 imposes a duty to disclose. Pastoria v. Nationwide Ins., 112 Cal. App. 4th 1490, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 148 (2003). California law also recognizes an insurer's "special relationship" with an insured, under which an insurer has the duty reasonably to inform an insured of her rights under an insurance policy. See Vu v. Prudential Prop. & Cas. Ins. Co., 26 Cal. 4th 1142, 1149-51, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 70, 33 P.3d 487 (2001); Davis v. Blue Cross of N. Cal., 25 Cal. 3d 418, 426-27, 158 Cal. Rptr. 828, 600 P.2d 1060 (1979).[8]

"'Promissory fraud' is a subspecies of the action for fraud and deceit. A promise to do something necessarily implies the intention to perform; hence, where a promise is made without such intention, there is an implied misrepresentation of fact that may be actionable fraud." Lazar, 12 Cal. 4th at 638; see also Agosta, 120 Cal. App. 4th at 603. "[I]ntent not to perform cannot be proved simply by showing a subsequent failure to perform." UMG

[7] Although Defendant argues a nationwide class is inappropriate with respect to all of its claims, it has failed to meet its burden with respect to its remaining claims.

Recordings, Inc. v. Global Eagle Entm't, Inc., 117 F. Supp. 3d 1092, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 102659, 2015 WL 4606077, at *10 (C.D. Cal. June 22, 2015). "An action for promissory fraud may lie where a defendant fraudulently induces the plaintiff to enter into a contract." Lazar, 12 Cal. 4th at 638.

"Actual reliance occurs when the defendant's misrepresentation is an immediate cause of the plaintiff's conduct, altering his legal relations, and when, absent such representation, the plaintiff would not, in all reasonable probability, have [59] entered into the transaction." Cadlo, 125 Cal. App. 4th at 519. In order to prove reliance on an omission, "[o]ne need only prove that, had the omitted information been disclosed one would have been aware of it and behaved differently." Mirkin v. Wasserman, 5 Cal. 4th 1082, 1093, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 101, 858 P.2d 568 (1993).

Defendant argues individual issues of law and fact will predominate as to Plaintiffs' fraud claims because no inference of reliance arises as to the entire class, and Plaintiffs have failed to provide a viable damages model. (Opp. at pp. 39, n. 33, 40.) To demonstrate that the element of reliance is a common question that can be resolved for all members of the Class in a single adjudication, Plaintiffs rely on the following statement of the law set forth in Vasquez v. Super. Ct., 4 Cal. 3d 800, 94 Cal. Rptr. 796, 484 P.2d 964 (1971):

> The rule in this state and elsewhere is that it is not necessary to show reliance upon false representations by direct evidence. The fact of reliance upon alleged false representations may be inferred from the circumstances attending the transaction which oftentimes afford much stronger and more satisfactory evidence of the inducement . . . than his direct testimony to the same effect. . . . [I]f the trial court finds material misrepresentations were made to the class members, at least an inference of reliance would arise as to the entire class. Defendants may, [60] of course, introduce evidence in rebuttal.

Id. at 814 (internal quotations omitted); accord Occidental [*605] Land, Inc. v. Super. Ct. of Orange Cnty., 18 Cal. 3d 355, 363, 134 Cal. Rptr. 388, 556 P.2d 750 (1976). The Supreme Court of California clarified this statement in Mirkin, stating that "[w]hat we did hold [in Vasquez and Occidental] was that, when the same material misrepresentations have actually been communicated to each member of a class, an inference of reliance arises as to the entire class." Mirkin, 5 Cal. 4th at 1095 (emphasis in original). Therefore, "absent evidence of uniform material misrepresentations having been actually made to class members," an inference of reliance does not arise. See Knapp v. AT&T Wireless Servs., Inc., 195 Cal. App. 4th 932, 946, 124 Cal. Rptr. 3d 565 (2011) (quoting Kaldenbach v. Mut. of Omaha Life Ins. Co., 178 Cal. App. 4th 830, 851, 100 Cal. Rptr. 3d 637 (2009)).

Here, there is no evidence of common representations or omissions having been made to putative class members. Plaintiffs and Defendant agree that First American markets and advertises its plans through three primary channels: (1) real estate sales; (2) renewals; and (3) starting in 2007, direct to consumer (via telephone and online). (Mot. at pp. 3-7; Opp. at p. 9; Hand Decl. at ¶ 5; Craney Decl. at ¶ 4; Miles Decl. at ¶ 3.) The primary forms of marketing communication include "flyers, postcards, brochures, direct mail, email, social media, and websites." (Hand Decl. at ¶ 9.) The parties further agree that First American home warranty plans [61] can be obtained (1) in connection with the purchase of a residential property; (2) separately by ordering over the phone or through First American's website; or (3) by renewing a prior contract. (Mot. at pp. 3-7; Miles Decl. at ¶ 3.)

In the real estate channel, Plaintiffs argue First American provides free, written marketing materials to real estate agents, which are standardized and approved for "company-wide distribution" in all states. (Mot. at pp. 3-4.) Plaintiffs further contend First American uses a standardized, written script to train real estate agents on how to sell its home warranty plans, which includes an instruction to hand out a written brochure which is "almost identical" for all states and a sample home warranty contract. (Id. at pp. 4-5.) Plaintiffs assert these brochures and contracts contain the alleged misrepresentations. (Id. at at p. 5.) In the direct to consumer channel, Plaintiffs argue First American makes its misrepresentations both through its website, "which contains standardized written representations concerning the benefits and attributes of its home warranty plans," and various print and media advertisements. (Id. at pp. 5-6.) Lastly, in the renewal channel, Plaintiffs argue First [62] American sends several "standard form renewal letters" to its customers which contain the alleged false and misleading representations. (Id.

at p. 6.) Based on this evidence, Plaintiffs argue First American engaged in a "uniform advertising campaign" to sell its plans. (Id. at p. 7.) For the reasons discussed below, the Court disagrees.

In the real estate channel, which accounts for approximately 50% of First American home warranty plans sold between 2004 and 2013, First American employs approximately 100 area managers who interact with local real estate agents. (Hand Decl. at ¶¶ 10, 32.) The real estate agents, in turn, interact directly with home buyers and sellers; although a buyer or seller does not necessarily use a real estate agent who interacted with an area manager. (Id. at ¶¶ 10, 11.) Contrary to Plaintiffs' contention, Defendant represents that First American area managers are given discretion in determining how they want to market the plans, which may include giving a live presentation at a real estate office or trade event, speaking or corresponding with a real estate agent, or distributing written marketing materials prepared by First American's sales and marketing department, which are available [63] for the area manager to order. (Id. at ¶¶ 12, 13.) Although First American has at various times promoted a script to area managers, which includes the suggestion to hand out its brochures and samples contracts,[9] First American maintains that its area managers [*606] are given complete discretion and it does not impose any requirements or monitor how area managers choose to advertise. (Id. at ¶¶ 19-21, 24, 27.) Moreover, the area managers may be another step removed from the ultimate purchaser of the plan — the buyer or seller of the home. Determining what representations were made between the area managers and the real estate agents, and also between the real estate agents and the purchasers will therefore require a highly individualized inquiry.

In the renewal channel, which accounts for 46% of First American home warranty plans sold between 2004 and 2013, the renewal correspondence varied depending on the plan holder's [64] payment method, and varied in content throughout the class period. (Craney Decl. at ¶¶ 8, 9, 11-20; Craney Depo. at 84:1-9.) Some of the cover letters and buck slips contained the allegedly false or misleading representations, while others did not. (Craney Decl. at ¶¶ 8, 9, 14-15, 17-18, 20, Exhs. A-G; see also Bottini Decl. at Exh. 9.) During the class period, First American used approximately 106 different inserts, with each correspondence containing anywhere from one to three of these inserts. (Craney Decl. at ¶ 16.) For a variety of reasons, approximately 7% to 10% of plan holders never receive any renewal correspondence from First American. (Id. at ¶ 6.)

In addition to renewal correspondence, First American also utilizes a "inside sales" staff to call customers whose plans are about to expire. (Craney Decl. at ¶ 22; Craney Depo. at 74:5-16.) The sales staff is not provided with any uniform written script or guidelines, but instead are given discretion and rely on their judgment in attempting to convince the plan holder to renew. (Craney Decl. at ¶ 22.) Therefore, determining what representations each putative class member received or were exposed to prior to renewal, if anything, [65] and what conversations were had between sales agents and customers will require a highly individualized inquiry.

Lastly, in the direct to consumer channel, which accounts for only 4% of First American home warranty plans sold between 2004 and 2013, putative class members received limited scale direct mailings, telephone calls from First American based on leads generated by third-party vendors, and plans purchased directly through First American's website. (Hand Decl. at ¶¶ 32, 34; Bottini Decl. at Exhs. 44, 45.) Again, determining which representations each putative class member received or were exposed to, if anything, will require a highly individualized inquiry.

In light of the foregoing, the Court finds Plaintiffs have failed to demonstrate through evidentiary proof that the same material representations or omissions were made to each putative class member. There are significant individual issues as to whether the putative class members were even exposed to, much less relied on, the alleged misrepresentations. Accordingly, an inference of reliance does not arise as to all class members and cannot be resolved on a class-wide basis. See Kaldenbach, 178 Cal. App. 4th at 851; Knapp, 195 Cal. App. 4th at 946.

Although Plaintiffs' experiences are not determinative, [66] it is instructive that among Plaintiffs, all of them initially obtained a First American home warranty plan in connection with the purchase of a home, and most, if not all, of the plaintiffs utilized real estate agents. Prior to purchasing and/or receiving a First American plan, not all of the plaintiffs were exposed to any representations about First American, much less the alleged misrepresentations. The other plaintiffs received different representations from their respective real estate agents about First American's home warranty plans. Not all of these representations included the alleged misrepresentations. Two of the five Plaintiffs renewed their plans, and each testified they relied on different representations from different sources. Again, not all of these representations included the alleged misrepresentations. Accordingly, the Court finds Plaintiffs have failed to establish predominance with respect to Plaintiffs' fraud claims.

In addition, "actual reliance, or causation, is inferred from the misrepresentation of a material fact." Chapman v. Skype, Inc., 220 Cal. App. 4th 217, 229, 162 Cal. Rptr. 3d 864 (2013) (citing In re Tobacco [*607] II Cases, 46 Cal. 4th 298, 327, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 559, 207 P.3d 20 (2009)) (emphasis added); see also Stearns v. Ticketmaster Corp., 655 F.3d 1013, 1022 (9th Cir. 2011), abrogated on other grounds by Comcast Corp., 133 S. Ct. 1426, 185 L. Ed. 2d 515 (2013). "A misrepresentation is judged to be 'material' if 'a reasonable man would [67] attach importance to its existence or nonexistence in determining his choice of action in the transaction in question.'" In re Tobacco II Cases, 46 Cal. 4th 298, 327, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 559, 207 P.3d 20 (2009).

Here, the proposed Class contains three categories of individuals: (1) sellers; (2) real estate agents; and (3) buyers/owners. Plaintiffs have not demonstrated it can establish materiality on a class-wide basis as to these three categories of individuals. Based on the evidence submitted by Plaintiffs, certain real estate agents purchased the home warranty plans as "gifts" for their clients, and others picked First American because prior clients had a good experience with them. Plaintiffs submitted no evidence with respect to sellers, but it is implausible that buyers and sellers would necessarily attach the same importance to alleged misrepresentations in First American's advertising.[10] Plaintiffs argue that materiality can be demonstrated on a class-wide basis without distinguishing between the disparate categories of individuals in their proposed Class, who are not similarly situated. In the class context, "[i]f the misrepresentation or omission is not material as to all class members, the issue of reliance 'would vary from consumer to consumer' and the class should [68] not be certified." Stearns, 655 F.3d at 1022-23 (citing In re Vioxx Class Cases, 180 Cal. App. 4th 116, 103 Cal. Rptr. 3d 83 (2010)). For this reason as well, the Court finds Plaintiffs have failed to establish predominance with respect to the fraud causes of action.

3. UCL & FAL (Proposed California Class)

The UCL prohibits, and provides civil remedies for, unfair competition, which it defines as "any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice and unfair, deceptive, untrue or misleading advertising." Kwikset Corp., 51 Cal. 4th 310, 322, 120 Cal. Rptr. 3d 741, 246 P.3d 877 (2011) (quoting Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200). "Because the statute is written in the disjunctive, it is violated where a defendant's act or practice is (1) unlawful, (2) unfair, (3) fraudulent, or (4) in violation of section 17500," i.e., the FAL. Lozano v. AT&T Wireless Servs., Inc., 504 F.3d 718, 731 (9th Cir. 2007). The FAL "makes it unlawful for any person to 'induce the public to enter into any obligation' based on a statement that is 'untrue or misleading, and which is known, or which by the exercise of reasonable care should be known, to be untrue or misleading.'" Davis, 691 F.3d at 1161 (quoting Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17500). Each prong of the UCL is a "separate and distinct theory of liability." Lozano, 504 F.3d at 731.

Under the FAL, whether an advertisement is "misleading" [69] must be judged by the effect it would have on a "reasonable consumer," who is the "ordinary customer acting reasonably under the circumstances." Davis, 691 F.3d at 1161-62 (citing Williams v. Gerber Prods. Co., 552 F.3d 934, 938 (9th Cir. 2008); Colgan v. Leatherman Tool Grp., Inc., 135 Cal. App. 4th 663, 38 Cal. Rptr. 3d 36 (2006); Lavie v. Procter & Gamble Co., 105 Cal. App. 4th 496, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 486 (2003)). To prevail under this standard, a plaintiff must show that members of the public are likely to be deceived by the advertisement. Id. at 1162 (citing Williams, 552 F.3d at 938); see also In re Tobacco II Cases, 46 Cal. 4th at 312. This standard encompasses "not only advertising which is false, but also advertising which[,] although true, is either actually misleading or which has a capacity, likelihood or tendency to deceive or confuse the public." Id. (quoting Williams, 552 F.3d at 938). In determining whether a statement is misleading, a court looks primarily to the words of the statement itself, and compares those words to the actual facts. Viggiano v. Hansen Natural Corp., 944 F. Supp. 2d 877, 885-86 (C.D. Cal. 2013) [*608] (citing Colgan, 135 Cal. App. 4th at 679). Statements that amount to "mere puffery," however, are not actionable, because no reasonable consumer relies on puffery. See Williams, 552 F.3d at 939, n. 3; Cook, Perkiss and Liehe, Inc. v. N. Cal. Collection Serv., Inc., 911 F.2d 242, 246 (9th Cir. 1990); *Abramson v. Marriott Ownership Resorts, Inc., 155 F. Supp. 3d 1056, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2311, 2016 WL 105889, at 7 (C.D. Cal. Jan. 4, 2016).

To be "unlawful" under the UCL, the advertisements must violate another "borrowed" law. Davis, 691 F.3d at 1168 (citing Cel-Tech Commc'ns, Inc. v. L.A. Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 180, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999)). A business practice is "fraudulent" under the UCL if members of the public are likely to be deceived. Id. at 1169; see also In re Tobacco II Cases, 46 Cal. 4th at 312.[11] As with the FAL, the challenged conduct is judged by its effect on the "reasonable consumer." Davis, 691 F.3d at 1169. Any violation of the FAL necessarily violates [70] the UCL. Williams, 552 F.3d at 938 (citing Kasky v. Nike, Inc., 27 Cal. 4th 939, 950-51, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 296, 45 P.3d 243 (2002)).

The UCL does not define the term "unfair," thus "the proper definition of 'unfair' conduct against consumers 'is currently in flux' among California courts." Davis, 691 F.3d at 1169 (citing Lozano, 504 F.3d at 735). For suits brought by consumers, courts have applied either the balancing test set forth in S. Bay Chevrolet v. Gen. Motors Acceptance Corp., 72 Cal. App. 4th 861, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 301 (1999), the test set forth in Cel-Tech, or the three-pronged test set forth in the FTC Act. Id. at 169-70. However, the Ninth Circuit has declined to apply the FTC standard to consumer actions "in the absence of a clear holding from the California Supreme Court" that it should be applied. [71] Lozano, 504 F.3d at 736.

Under the balancing test, "unfair" conduct occurs when that practice "offends an established public policy or when the practice is immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous or substantially injurious to consumers." Id. at 1169 (citing S. Bay Chevrolet, 72 Cal. App. 4th at 886-87). "Under this approach, courts must examine the practice's impact on its alleged victim, balanced against the reasons, justifications and motives of the alleged wrongdoer. In short, this balancing test must weigh the utility of the defendant's conduct against the gravity of the harm to the alleged victim." Id. (internal citations and quotations omitted). Under the Cel-Tech test, which was expressly limited in Cel-Tech to actions by competitors, but has been applied by courts to consumer actions, an "unfair" practice means "conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." Id. at 1169-70 (citing Cel-Tech., 20 Cal. 4th at 187 & n. 12).

Under both the UCL and FAL, damages cannot be recovered; rather, plaintiffs are limited to injunctive relief and restitution. See Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17203, 17535; Korea Supply Co. v. Lockheed Martin Corp., 29 Cal. 4th 1134, 1144, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 29, 63 P.3d 937 (2003); In re Tobacco II Cases, 46 Cal. 4th at 312; Chern v. Bank of Am., 15 Cal. 3d 866, 875, 127 Cal. Rptr. 110, 544 P.2d 1310 (1976); Viggiano, 944 F. Supp. 2d at 886; Colgan, 135 Cal. App. 4th at 695. Under the UCL, "the primary [72] form of relief available . . . to protect consumers [*609] from unfair business practices is an injunction, along with ancillary relief in the form of such restitution 'as may be necessary to restore to any person in interest any money or property, real or personal, which may have been acquired by means of such unfair competition.'" In re Tobacco II Cases, 46 Cal. 4th at 319 (citing Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17203).

a. Fraudulent/False Advertising (FAL) Prongs

[11] The fraudulent business prong of the UCL is distinct from common law fraud, both in its elements and its remedies. In re Tobacco II Cases, 46 Cal. 4th at 312. "Unlike common-law fraud claims that focus on the victim's reliance or damages, the UCL focuses on the perpetrator's behavior: 'to state a claim under the UCL or the [FAL] . . . it is necessary only to show that members of the public are likely to be deceived." Berger, 741 F.3d at 1068 (citing In re Tobacco II Cases, 46 Cal. 4th at 312). "Actual falsehood, the perpetrator's knowledge of falsity, and perhaps most importantly, the victim's reliance on the false statements — each of which are elements of common-law fraud claims — are not required to show a violation of California's UCL." Id. (citing In re Tobacco II Cases, 46 Cal. 4th at 312).

"[C]lass certification of UCL claims is available only to those class members who were actually exposed to the business practices at issue." Berger, 741 F.3d at 1068 (citing Stearns, 655 F.3d at 1020-21; Mazza, 666 F.3d at 595-96); see also Campion v. Old Republic Home Protection Co., Inc., 272 F.R.D. 517, 534 (2011) (citing Pfizer, Inc. v. Super. Ct., 182 Cal. App. 4th 622, 631, 105 Cal. Rptr. 3d 795 (2010)) ("[O]ne who was not exposed to the alleged misrepresentation and therefore could not possibly have lost money or property as a result of the unfair competition is not entitled to restitution."); Cohen v. DirecTV, 178 Cal. App. 4th 966, 980, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 37 (2010) ("[W]e do not understand the UCL to authorize an award for injunctive relief and/or restitution on behalf of a consumer who was never exposed in any way to an allegedly wrongful business practice.") Common issues do not predominate where there is "no cohesion among the [class] members because they were exposed to quite disparate information from various representatives of defendant." Stearns, 655 F.3d at 1020; see also Cohen, 178 Cal. App. 4th at 979 (affirming denial of class certification under the UCL where the [73] evidence demonstrated that the class "would include subscribers who never saw DIRECTV advertisements or representations of any kind before deciding to purchase the company's HD services, and subscribers who only saw and/or relied upon advertisements that contained no mention of technical terms regarding bandwidth or pixels, and subscribers who purchased DIRECTV HD primarily based on word of mouth or because they saw DIRECTV's HD in a store or at a friend's or family member's home").

For the same reasons discussed above, the Court finds Plaintiffs have failed to demonstrate that there was cohesion among class members as to how they were exposed — if they were even exposed at all — to the various alleged false and misleading representations. As in Campion, "the proposed class members may have seen some, all or none of [the alleged misrepresentations] prior to the purchase of their home warranty plans due to the varying ways in which they acquired their plans." See Campion, 272 F.R.D. at 536-37. Again, although the named Plaintiffs experiences are not determinative in this context, their stories highlight the lack of cohesion among potential class members, as they were exposed to disparate information from a variety [74] of sources, and not all of them were even exposed to the alleged false and misleading representations prior to purchase.

b. Unlawful Prong

Plaintiffs seek to certify a class under the unlawful prong of the UCL premised on a violation of the FAL and a violation of California Insurance Code section 12760, and presumably the alleged fraud. (Mot at p. 14.) Because Plaintiffs have failed to establish that class certification is appropriate with respect to its FAL and fraud claims, the Court finds Plaintiffs have not met their Rule 23 burden with respect to the unlawful prong of the UCL.

In addition, the Court finds that the Consolidated Class Action Complaint does not reference a violation of California Insurance Code section 12760. As Defendant points out, prior judges in this case similarly did not locate such a violation in prior versions of Plaintiffs' complaint. (See Opp. at pp. 19-20, n. 10 (citing ECF Nos. 76, 87, 94, & 104).) Plaintiffs cite no authority permitting them to seek certification of a claim not in the complaint, and do not respond to Defendant's argument that they should not be allowed to do so. Accordingly, the Court declines to certify a class based on this claim.

c. Unfair Prong

In attempting to certify a class under the unfair prong of the UCL, Plaintiffs simply [*610] argue that "[t]he evidence referenced [75] above can establish a UCL violation under the 'unfair' . . . prong[]." (Mot at p. 14.) The Court finds that Plaintiffs have failed to meet their burden with respect to the unfair prong of the UCL.

B. Superiority

"Plaintiffs must also demonstrate that a class action is 'superior to other available methods for fairly and efficiently adjudicating the controversy.'" Otsuka v. Polo Ralph Lauren Corp., 251 F.R.D. 439, 448 (2008) (citing Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3)). "Where classwide litigation of common issues will reduce litigation costs and promote greater efficiency, a class action may be superior to other methods of litigation," and it is superior "if no realistic alternative exists." Valentino v. Carter-Wallace, Inc., 97 F.3d 1227, 1234-35 (9th Cir. 1996). The following factors are pertinent to this analysis:

(A) the class members' interest in individually controlling the prosecution or defense of separate actions;
(B) the extent and nature of any litigation concerning the controversy already begun by or against class members;
(C) the desirability or undesirability of concentrating the litigation of the claims in the particular forum; and

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3).

Plaintiffs argue that "[e]ach of the pertinent Rule 23(b)(3) factors, along with the overarching concern for judicial economy, supports class certification in this case." (Mot. at p. 24.) [76] Defendant does not contest superiority under the superiority requirement. However, several of Defendant's arguments are relevant to the superiority analysis.

For the reasons set forth in the Court's discussion above of the propriety of certifying a nationwide class, the Court finds that the Class, as proposed, is not the superior means of resolving this case. In addition, the Court finds there will likely be difficulties in managing this class action. Defendant addresses this concern under the ascertainability requirement, but it is more appropriately addressed in terms of manageability.

The manageability requirement "encompasses the whole range of practical problems that may render the class action format inappropriate for a particular suit." Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacquelin, 417 U.S. 156, 164, 94 S. Ct. 2140, 40 L. Ed. 2d 732 (1974). Among other considerations, "[t]his 'manageability' requirement includes consideration of the potential difficulties in notifying class members of the suit, calculation of individual damages, and distribution of damages." Six (6) Mexican Workers v. Ariz. Citrus Growers, 904 F.2d 1301, 1304 (9th Cir. 1990) (citation omitted). In sum, "when the complexities of class action treatment outweigh the benefits of considering common issues in one trial, class action treatment is not the 'superior' method of adjudication." Zinser, 253 F.3d at 1192 (citations [77] omitted). The Court has several significant qualms about the manageability of this case.

Plaintiffs' proposed Class includes all persons who purchased or were listed as the named insured on a First American home protection contract. (See Mot. at pp. 2, 16, n. 8.) There does not appear to be any dispute that First American maintains records for all persons listed as the named insured on a First American home protection contract. However, as all parties acknowledge, the person who is listed on the contract is not necessarily the purchaser of the contract. For the plans purchased through a real estate transaction, which comprise approximately 50% of all plans at issue, it is apparent that determining who purchased the plan will be time-consuming and difficult.

According to First American, once escrow on a home purchase has closed, First American receives payment for the home warranty contract, typically a check drawn on the escrow account. (Miles Decl. at ¶ 4.) However, First American does not receive a copy of the underlying real estate purchase agreement, and has no way of knowing whether the buyer or seller agreed to pay for the premiums. (Id. at ¶ 4.) For the named Plaintiffs in this [78] case, in order to determine who purchased the plan, First American had to subpoena the escrow records. However, the records [*611] do not always reflect who purchased the contract. Accordingly, for a potentially large portion of the proposed Class, there will be significant difficulties in notifying class members of the suit, calculation of individual damages, and distribution of damages.

Plaintiffs also assert that their claims can be proven with common evidence. Among Plaintiffs' claims is that First American's contractors routinely gouge customers for non-covered portions of warranty replacements and upsell customers for repair and replacements that are not covered under the class members' home warranty plan, and that class members pay significant sums out of pocket to contractors above and beyond Defendant's fees. (Consol. Compl. at ¶¶ 64, 109.) As both parties agree, however, Defendant does not maintain its contractors' records and does not maintain records on how much its contractors charge customers outside of their covered plan. (See id.; see also Miles II Depo. at 73:2-20, 77:3-10, 94:5-95:12, 106:10-11, 117:14-16; Horne Depo. at 186:8-23, 187:2-6, 213:4-20; Bottini Decl. at Exh. [79] 50.) Although these records may be able to be obtained from Defendant's contractors, this presents a manageability concern. The Court also has concerns about Defendants' ability to prove that First American routinely denies claims for pretextual reasons and routinely denies claims with pre-existing conditions without dragging every contractor into Court.[12]

For the foregoing reasons, the Court finds that Plaintiffs have failed to demonstrate that this class action is manageable and the superior method of resolving this case.

C. Certification Under Rule 23(b)(2)

Under Rule 23(b)(2), a class may be certified where "the party opposing the class has acted or refused to act on grounds that apply generally to the class, so that final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief is appropriate respecting the class as a whole." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2). "Class certification under Rule 23(b)(2) is appropriate only where the primary relief sought is declaratory or injunctive." Zinser, 253 F.3d at 1195 (citing Nelsen v. King Cnty., 895 F.2d 1248, 1254-55 (9th Cir. 1990); O'Connor v. Boeing N. Am., Inc., 180 F.R.D. 359, 377 (C.D. Cal. 1997); Haley v. Medtronic, 169 F.R.D. 643, 657 (C.D. Cal. 1996)). A class seeking monetary damages may be certified pursuant to Rule 23(b)(2) only where such relief is "merely incidental to [the] primary claim for injunctive relief." Probe v. State Teachers' Ret. Sys., 780 F.2d 776, 780 (9th Cir. 1986); see also Wal-Mart, 131 S. Ct. at 2557 (holding that claims for monetary relief [80] may not be certified under Rule 23(b)(2) "where . . . the monetary relief is not incidental to the injunctive or declaratory relief.") Moreover, Rule 23(b)(2) "does not authorize class certification when each class member would be entitled to an individualized award of monetary damages." Wal-Mart, 131 S. Ct. at 2557.

Although Plaintiffs' claim they "primarily" seek certification under Rule 23(b)(3) for monetary relief, including damages, "because they also seek a class-wide injunction to end Defendant's unlawful practices," they contend Rule 23(b)(2) certification is also appropriate. (Mot. at p. 16, n. 8.) "Because Rule 23(b)(2) certification is inappropriate where the primary relief sought is monetary, . . . the dispositive question is: What type of relief does [the plaintiff] primarily seek?" Zinser, 253 F.3d at 1195 (citing Nelsen, 895 F.2d at 1254). The primary relief sought in this case is monetary, with each class member entitled to an individualized award of monetary damages. (See Mot. at pp. 20-22 (Plaintiffs' proposed calculation of damages)). Accordingly, the Court does not find Rule 23(b)(2) appropriate.

Moreover, "[u]nless the named plaintiffs are themselves entitled to seek injunctive relief, they may not represent a class seeking that relief." Hodgers-Durgin v. de la Vina, 199 F.3d 1037, 1045 (9th Cir. 1999) (en banc). "Standing must be shown with respect to each form of relief sought, whether [81] it be injunctive relief, damages or civil penalties." Bates v. United Parcel Serv., Inc., 511 F.3d 974, 985 (9th Cir. 2007) (citing Friends of the Earth, Inc. v. Laidlaw Envt'l Servs. (TOC), Inc., 528 U.S. 167, 185, 120 S. Ct. 693, 145 L. Ed. 2d 610 (2000)). The fact [*612] that the named Plaintiffs previously purchased First American plans and may bring a claim for damages therefore does not in itself grant them standing to seek injunctive relief. See City of Los Angeles v. Lyons, 461 U.S. 95, 103, 103 S. Ct. 1660, 75 L. Ed. 2d 675 (1983) (stating that in a claim for injunctive relief, "past wrongs do not in themselves amount to that real and immediate threat of injury necessary to make out a case or controversy"). In order to establish standing to seek an injunction, a plaintiff must face an injury that is "actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical." Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351 (1992) (citations and internal quotation marks omitted). In other words, "he or she must demonstrate a 'very significant possibility of future harm.'" In re Static Random Access memory (SRAM) Antitrust Litig., 264 F.R.D. 603, 610 (N.D. Cal. 2009) (quoting San Diego Cnty. Gun Rights Comm. v. Reno, 98 F.3d 1121, 1126 (9th Cir.1996)).

Here, the named Plaintiffs do not currently have First American plans. (See Miles Decl. at ¶¶ 14, 16, 19, 21; Shophet Decl. at Exh. CC at 14:20-22.) Carrera's plan expired in February 2010, Morrison's and Hershey's final plans expired in May 2013, Jullien's final plan expired in October 2012, and Diaz testified she did not have a plan as of January 2011. (See id.) Although renewal is possible, there is no allegation or [82] testimony suggesting that any of the named Plaintiffs intend to purchase a First American plan in the future. Thus, Plaintiffs have failed to establish that they face an "actual or imminent" injury. For this reason as well, the Court denies Plaintiffs' request to certify a Rule 23(b)(2) class in the alternative.

V. MOTION TO STRIKE AND FOR SANCTIONS

Plaintiffs filed a motion to strike and for sanctions in connection with four reports Defendant attaches to its motion for class certification. (ECF No. 132 ("Strike Mot.").) Plaintiffs seek to exclude from evidence the four reports prepared by Defendant's expert, W. John Irwin II, because Defendant withheld these reports, as well as all corresponding notes and communications, from Plaintiffs during discovery and did not supplement its discovery responses upon determining that Mr. Irvin was going to be used as an expert. (Strike Mot. at p. 1.) The reports relate to inspections Mr. Irvin, a licensed Professional Mechanical Engineer, conducted on Plaintiffs' properties.

A. Background

With respect to this motion, the following facts do not appear to be disputed:

• Defendant designated Mr. Irwin as an expert that it may use at trial pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26(a)(2)(A) in the Diaz [83] Action. (ECF No. 133 ("Strike Opp.") at p. 3; Strike Mot. at p. 4.)
• Plaintiffs' counsel deposed Mr. Irwin on July 5, 2011 in the Diaz Action. (Strike Opp. at p. 3.)
• After Hershey, Jullien, and Morrison joined Carrera as Plaintiffs in the Carrera Action, Mr. Irwin inspected their properties. (Strike Opp. at pp. 5-6; Strike Mot. at p. 4.)
• On November 21, 2013, Plaintiffs served a Request for Production ("RFP") seeking all documents "concerning [First American's] physical inspection of Plaintiffs' properties" including all reports, retainer agreements, and communications. (Strike Opp. at p. 6; Strike Mot. at p. 4.)
• As of the date of the request, the Court had not yet issued a Scheduling Order setting a deadline for designating experts. (Strike Opp. p. 6; ECF No. 92.)
• Because Mr. Irwin was still acting as a consultant in the Carrera Action, First American timely objected to the RFP, asserting the attorney work product doctrine, as codified in Rule 26(b)(3). (Strike Opp. at p. 6; Strike Mot. at p. 5.)
• Defendant produced Mr. Irwin's handwritten notes and photographs from his inspections of the properties. (Strike Mot. at p. 5, n. 7; Strike Opp. at pp. 6-7; ECF No. 134 ("Strike Reply") at p. 3.)

[*613] • The Scheduling Order in the Carrera Action did not set the deadline for designating experts until after class certification [84] briefing was completed. (Strike Opp. at p. 7.) The deadline was March 20, 2015 for initial designation. (ECF No. 92 at ¶ 2; see also ECF No. 109 at ¶ 4.)
• Defendant attached the four reports at issue to its opposition to Plaintiff's motion for class certification. (Strike Mot. at p. 6; Strike Opp. at p. 7.)
• The Irwin reports address the specifics of each named Plaintiff's home warranty claims. (Strike Mot. at p. 6; Strike Opp. at p. 8.)
• After Defendant attached the reports to its opposition, Plaintiffs did not seek to depose Mr. Irwin. (Strike Opp. at p. 8; Strike Reply at p. 9.)
• In their reply brief in support of class certification, Plaintiffs assert that "Plaintiffs [home warranty] claims and this motion [for class certification] have nothing to do with whether First American properly rejected [home warranty] claims or what portion of claims were approved of denied." (Strike Opp. at p. 8; Reply at p. 1, lines 9-11.)

B. Legal Standard

Under Rule 26(b)(4), a party may employ two types of experts: (a) those experts identified as "an expert whose opinions may be presented at trial," which the Court will refer to as a "testifying" expert; and (b) experts "retained or specially employed . . . in anticipation of litigation or to prepare for trial and who [are] not expected to be called as a witness at [85] trial," which the Court will refer to as a "non-testifying" or "consulting" experts. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(4)(A), (D). A party must disclose the identity of a testifying expert "at the times and in the sequence that the court orders." Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2)(A), (D). If the testifying expert is "one retained or specially employed to provide expert testimony in the case," the disclosure must include a report. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2)(B). Any draft of such a report is protected from disclosure, as are certain communications between the party's attorney and the testifying expert. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(4)(C). A party may depose a testifying expert only after the expert report is provided. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(4).

With respect to non-testifying or consulting experts, a party may "discover facts known or opinions held by" such an expert only "as provided in Rule 35(b)" or "on showing exceptional circumstances under which it is impracticable for the party to obtain facts or opinions on the same subject by other means." Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(4)(D); see also Downs v. River City Grp., LLC, 288 F.R.D. 507, 510-14 (D. Nev. 2013); Estate of Manship v. United States, 240 F.R.D. 229 (M.D. La. 2006). In addition, "[w]hen experts serve as litigation consultants, the work-product privilege generally applies to materials reviewed or generated by them in that capacity." *S.E.C. v. Reyes, No. c 06-04435 CRB, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27767, 2007 WL 963422, at 1 (N.D. Cal. 2007) (citing Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(3)); see also *Apple Inc. v. Amazon.com, Inc., No. 11-1327 PJH(JSC), 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47124, 2013 WL 1320760, at 1 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 1, 2013).

C. Discussion

Plaintiffs argue Defendant was required to [86] supplement its response to the RFP after it determined it was using the Irwin reports in support of its opposition to Plaintiffs' motion for class certification. Pursuant to Rule 26(e)(1)(A), "[a] party . . . who has responded to [a] . . . request for production . . . must supplement or correct its . . . response . . . in a timely manner if the party learns that in some material respect the . . . response is incomplete or incorrect, and if the additional or corrective information has not otherwise been made known to the other parties during the discovery process or in writing." Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(e)(1)(A). A party who fails to provide the information required by Rule 26(e) "is not allowed to use that information . . . to supply evidence on a motion, at a hearing, or at a trial, unless the failure was substantially justified or is harmless." Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(1). Instead of this sanction, a court, on motion and after giving an opportunity to be heard, may order the payment of reasonable expenses, including attorney's fees, caused by the failure. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(1)(A). [*614] The burden is on the party facing sanctions to prove that its violation was either substantially justified or harmless. R&R Sails, Inc. v. Ins. Co. of Penn., 673 F.3d 1240, 1246 (9th Cir. 2012).

Specifically, Plaintiffs argue that Defendant was obligated to timely supplement in response [87] to the RFP "[o]nce Defendant decided to use Mr. Irwin as an 'expert' in addition to a 'consultant.'" (Strike Mot. at p. 9.) Plaintiffs offer two theories as to when this occurred. First, Plaintiffs contend that Mr. Irwin was retained as an expert on November 29, 2012, when he was first retained for the Carrera Action. (Id. at p. 15.) Alternatively, Plaintiffs contend that — "[e]ven assuming Defendant initially retained Mr. Irwin solely as a 'consultant'" in the Carrera Action — Defendant was under the obligation to timely supplement its response to the RFP once Defendant decided to use Mr. Irwin as an expert. (Id. at p. 16.) Plaintiffs suggest this date was December 4, 2014, which is the date of Mr. Irwin's report on his inspection of the Hershey property. (Id.) Plaintiffs further claim they were surprised by the filing of the Irwin reports, the surprise cannot be cured, and providing the documents now would require re-briefing of the motion for class certification. (Id. at pp. 19-20.)

In response, Defendant argues that it was under no legal obligation to disclose to Plaintiffs, in advance of its deadline to designate experts, which expert declarations First American's counsel had decided and intended to file in support of its opposition [88] to Plaintiffs' motion for class certification. After it filed the declaration of Mr. Irwin, Defendant concedes that it waived certain attorney-work product protections and opened the door to Mr. Irwin's deposition. For the following reasons, the Court agrees with Defendant.

Defendant designated Mr. Irwin as an expert in the Diaz Action and Plaintiffs were able to take his deposition. In the Carrera Action, however, Defendant claims it initially retained Mr. Irwin as a non-testifying expert. Therefore, under the work product doctrine of Rule 26(b)(3)(A) and the protection afforded non-testifying experts under Rule 26(b)(4)(D), Plaintiffs were not entitled to discover the facts known or opinions held by Mr. Irwin absent a showing of exceptional circumstances. The consolidation of these cases did not automatically render Mr. Irwin an expert in the Consolidated Action. The Court set the deadline to designate experts in the Consolidated Action for March 20, 2015. (See ECF No. 92 at ¶ 2; see also ECF No. 109 at ¶ 4.) Plaintiffs were under no obligation to designate Mr. Irwin prior to that date.

Although the deadline to designate testifying experts did not occur until after Defendant's opposition to the motion for class certification [89] was due, when Defendant submitted an expert declaration on behalf of Mr. Irwin with its opposition, the case law is clear that Defendant opened up discovery on Defendant's statements, findings, and opinions, and entitled Plaintiffs to take Mr. Irwin's deposition about the subject of his testimony. See *Worley v. Avanquest N. Am. Inc., No. C 12-04391 WHO(LB), 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 175305, 2013 WL 6576732, at 4 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 13, 2013); *Positive Techs., Inc. v. Sony Elecs., Inc., No. 11-cv-2226 SI(KAW), 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 49738, 2013 WL 1402337, at 2 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 5, 2013) (citing *Sims v. Metro. Life Ins. Co., No. C-05-02980, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 100677, 2006 WL 3826716, at 2 (N.D. Cal. 2006)). However, submitting Mr. Irwin's declaration does not permit discovery of information or material not put at issue or of the contents of any privileged communications. *Worley, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 175305, 2013 WL 6576732, at 4.

Plaintiffs did not seek to depose Mr. Irwin after Defendant filed his declaration. Instead, they seek to sanction Defendant for not supplementing its response to their RFP. To the extent Defendant failed to supplement its response to the RFP in a timely manner, the Court finds that a sanction is not appropriate, as the failure was harmless. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(1). As Plaintiffs state in their reply in support of their motion for class certification: "Plaintiffs' claims and this motion have nothing to do with whether First American properly rejected claims or what portion of claims were [90] approved or denied." (Reply at p. 1, lines 9-11.) Moreover, as is apparent from this Order, the Court did not — and did not need to — rely on Mr. Irwin's [*615] declaration or reports in deciding this motion. The Court further does not find that a sanction in the form of attorney's fees is appropriate. Accordingly, Plaintiffs' motion for sanctions is DENIED.

VI. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court DENIES Plaintiffs' motion for class certification (ECF No. 121); DENIES the ex parte motions regarding supplemental authority filed by the parties (ECF Nos. 139, 145, 146); and DENIES Plaintiffs' motion for sanctions (ECF No. 132).

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Opinion

[*660] THIS DOCUMENT RELATES TO ALL CASES

ORDER AND REASONS

Defendants Pool Corporation, SCP Distributors LLC, and Superior Pool Products (collectively, "Pool"), move to exclude the testimony of Dr. Gordon C. Rausser, an expert for the Direct-Purchaser Plaintiffs (DPPs).[1] The Court has reviewed the parties' submissions and has heard oral argument on the motion. For the following reasons, the Court grants defendants' motion in part and denies it in part.

I. BACKGROUND

This is an antitrust case that direct-purchaser plaintiffs (DPPs) and indirect-purchaser plaintiffs (IPPs) filed against Pool and the Manufacturer Defendants. Pool is the country's largest distributor of products used for the construction and maintenance of swimming pools (Pool Products).[2] The Manufacturer Defendants are the three largest manufacturers of Pool Products in the United States: Hayward Industries, [4] Inc. (Hayward), Pentair Water Pool and Spa, Inc. (Pentair), and Zodiac Pool Systems, Inc. (Zodiac).[3] As defined in DPPs' Second Consolidated Amended Class Action Complaint (SCAC), Pool Products are the equipment, products, parts, and materials used for the construction, renovation, maintenance, repair, and service of residential and commercial swimming pools. Pool Products include pumps, filters, covers, drains, fittings, rails, diving boards, and chemicals, among other goods. Pool buys Pool Products from manufacturers, including the three the Manufacturer Defendants, and in turn sells them to DPPs, which include pool builders, pool retail stores, and pool service and repair companies (collectively referred to as "Dealers" in the SCAC).[4]

DPPs have filed two consolidated amended complaints—the first on June 29, 2012[5] and the second on June 21, 2013[6]—each of which defendants moved to dismiss. The Court issued orders on both rounds of motions to dismiss,

[1] R. Doc. 508. Originally, Pool along with Pentair, one of the Manufacturer Defendants, jointly moved to exclude Dr. Rausser's testimony. Pentair has since settled with DPPs. See R. Doc. 699. Accordingly, the motion as to Pentair is now moot.

the details of which are summarized elsewhere.[7] Following those orders, DPPs were left with the following five claims: (1) a Section 1 claim under the per se rule involving a horizontal agreement between the Manufacturer [5] Defendants and Pool to fix free freight minimums; (2) three Section 1 claims under the rule of reason involving three separate vertical conspiracies (one between Pool and each Manufacturer Defendant) to exclude Pool's competitors; and (3) a Section 2 attempted monopolization claim against [*661] Pool. Defendants have moved for summary judgment on these five claims. In addition, DPPs have moved for class certification. The Court has dismissed DPPs' Section 1 per se claim on summary judgment.

II. LEGAL STANDARD

When expert testimony offered by one party is subject to a Daubert challenge, the Court must act as a "gatekeeper" under Federal Rule of Evidence 702.

A district court has considerable discretion to admit or exclude expert testimony under Rule 702. See Gen. Elec. Co. v. Joiner, 522 U.S. 136, 138-39, 118 S. Ct. 512, 139 L. Ed. 2d 508 (1997); Seatrax, Inc. v. Sonbeck Int'l, Inc., 200 F.3d 358, 371 (5th Cir. 2000). Rule 702, which governs the admissibility of expert witness testimony, provides:

> A witness who is qualified as an expert by knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education may testify in the form of an opinion or otherwise if: (a) the expert's scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge will help the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue; (b) the testimony is based on sufficient facts or data; (c) the testimony [6] is the product of reliable principles and methods; and (d) the expert has reliably applied the principles and methods to the facts of the case.

Fed. R. Evid. 702.

In Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., the Supreme Court held that Rule 702 requires the district court to act as a gatekeeper to ensure that "any and all scientific testimony or evidence admitted is not only relevant, but reliable." 509 U.S. at 589; see also Kumho Tire Co., Ltd. v. Carmichael, 526 U.S. 137, 147, 119 S. Ct. 1167, 143 L. Ed. 2d 238 (1999) (clarifying that the Daubert gatekeeping function applies to all forms of expert testimony). The Court's gatekeeping function thus involves a two-part inquiry into reliability and relevance.

First, the Court must determine whether the proffered expert testimony is reliable. The party offering the testimony bears the burden of establishing its reliability by a preponderance of the evidence. See Moore v. Ashland Chem. Inc., 151 F.3d 269, 276 (5th Cir. 1998). The reliability inquiry requires the Court to assess whether the reasoning or methodology underlying the expert's testimony is valid. See Daubert, 509 U.S. at 592-93. The aim is to exclude expert testimony based merely on subjective belief or unsupported speculation. See id. at 590.

The Court in Daubert articulated a flexible, non-exhaustive, five-factor test to assess the reliability of an expert's methodology: (1) whether the expert's theory [7] can be or has been tested; (2) whether the theory has been subject to peer review and publication; (3) the known or potential rate of error of a technique or theory when applied; (4) the existence and maintenance of standards and controls; and (5) the degree to which the technique or theory has been generally accepted in the scientific community. Id. at 593-95. The Supreme Court has emphasized, however, that these factors "do not constitute a 'definitive checklist or test.'" Kumho, 526 U.S. at 150 (quoting Daubert, 509 U.S. at 593). Rather, district courts "must have considerable leeway in deciding in a particular case how to go about determining whether particular expert testimony is reliable." Id. at 152. Courts have also considered whether experts are "proposing to testify about matters growing naturally and directly out of research they have conducted independent of the litigation, or whether they have developed their opinions expressly for purposes of testifying," [*662] Daubert v. Merrell Down Pharms., Inc., 43 F.3d 1311, 1317 (9th Cir. 1995), whether the expert has adequately accounted for obvious alternative explanations, see Claar v. Burlington N.R.R., 29 F.3d 499 (9th Cir. 1994), and whether the expert "is being as careful as he would be in his regular professional work outside his paid litigation consulting," Sheehan v. Daily Racing Form, Inc., 104 F.3d 940, 942 (7th Cir. 1997).

A district court's gatekeeper function does not replace the traditional [8] adversary system or the role of the jury within this system. See Daubert, 509 U.S. at 596. As the Supreme Court noted in Daubert: "Vigorous cross-examination, presentation of contrary evidence, and careful instruction on the burden of proof are the traditional and appropriate means of attacking shaky but admissible evidence." Id. The Fifth Circuit has held that, in determining the admissibility of expert testimony, district courts must accord proper deference to "the jury's role as the proper arbiter of disputes between conflicting opinions. As a general rule, questions relating to the bases and sources of an expert's opinion affect the weight to be assigned that opinion rather than its admissibility and should be left for the jury's consideration." United States v. 14.38 Acres of Land, More or Less Situated in Leflore Cty., Miss., 80 F.3d 1074, 1077 (5th Cir. 1996) (quoting Viterbo v. Dow Chem. Co., 826 F.2d 420, 422 (5th Cir. 1987)).

Nonetheless, expert testimony "must be reliable at each and every step or else it is inadmissible. The reliability analysis applies to all aspects of an expert's testimony: the methodology, the facts underlying the expert's opinion, the link between the facts and the conclusion, et alia." Knight v. Kirby Inland Marine Inc., 482 F.3d 347, 355 (5th Cir. 2007) (citation omitted). "Where the expert's opinion is based on insufficient information, the analysis is unreliable." Paz v. Brush Engineered Materials, Inc., 555 F.3d 383, 388 (5th Cir. 2009).

In Joiner, the Supreme Court [9] explained that "nothing in either Daubert or the Federal Rules of Evidence requires a district court to admit opinion evidence that is connected to existing data only by the ipse dixit of the expert." 522 U.S. at 146. Rather, "[a] court may conclude that there is simply too great an analytical gap between the data and the opinion proffered." Id.; see also LeBlanc v. Chevron USA, Inc., 396 F. App'x 94, 98 (5th Cir. 2010).

Second, the Court must determine whether the expert's reasoning or methodology is relevant. The question here is whether the reasoning or methodology "fits" the facts of the case and will thereby assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence. See Daubert, 509 U.S. at 591. "[F]undamentally unsupported" opinions "offer[] no expert assistance to the jury" and should be excluded. Guile v. United States, 422 F.3d 221, 227 (5th Cir. 2005) (citing Viterbo, 826 F.2d at 422).

III. DISCUSSION

Defendants challenge five aspects of Dr. Rausser's opinion. The Court begins by summarizing Dr. Rausser's opinion and methodology. The Court then summarizes the substantive antitrust and class certification law necessary to understand how the challenged portions of Dr. Rausser's opinion matter to DPPs' antitrust claims and motion for class certification. The Court then assesses defendants' five challenges to Dr. Rausser's opinion.

[*663] A. Dr. Rausser's Opinion and Methodology

1. Opinion [10] About Impact of Defendants' Conduct on Pricing

Dr. Rausser opines that Pool could charge inflated prices for Pool Products as a result of a mixture of conduct by Pool and the Manufacturer Defendants. He states that his "liability analysis" is how he shows the conduct had an impact on prices and thereby on plaintiffs.[8] His "liability analysis" consists of a narrative summary of the "documentary evidence" of Pool's and the Manufacturer Defendants' conduct during the class period, paired with a series of opinions about what the effect of that conduct would be on the market. Dr. Rausser relies on the following conduct in his liability analysis.

To begin, Dr. Rausser states that Pool communicated with the Manufacturer Defendants about "cutting off" Pool's rivals.[9] He describes several examples of alleged "foreclosures," in which the Manufacturer Defendants, at Pool's direction, allegedly refused to sell product to new distribution rivals in certain markets. Dr. Rausser examines six incidents of foreclosure in his initial report. He supports his analysis with the Manufacturer Defendants' transaction data, which he says demonstrates sales patterns consistent with [11] foreclosure—that is, limited or non-existent sales to the allegedly foreclosed rivals during the class period.[10]

Dr. Rausser also opines that Pool used its preferred vendor program to "facilitate its control of the market."[11] For vendors in the program, Pool provided extra advertising, marketing programs, and product support. In exchange, Pool required preferred vendors to maintain a certain percentage of sales (75% and later 80%) through distribution, including $2 million through Pool each year. Dr. Rausser opines that Pool used the preferred vendor program as leverage to encourage other desired behaviors by its preferred vendors.

First, he states that the preferred vendors' supply agreements usually contained a most-favored-pricing clause (colloquially called "most favored nation" provisions—"MFNs" for short).[12] The MFNs typically required that Pool receive a price at least equal to the lowest price offered to any other customer. According to Dr. Rausser, the MFNs ensured that Pool "would have available to it inventory that was effectively priced lower than that of its rivals, giving Pool[] another advantage[,] which it could use to ensure that its rivals could [12] not compete effectively."[13]

Second, Dr. Rausser states that Pool pressured its preferred vendors to police their own minimum acceptable advertised price (MAPP) and lowest acceptable advertised price (LAPP) policies. He states that "MAPP/LAPP provisions between manufacturers and their customers (either distributors or Dealers who purchased direct) prohibited the customers from advertising (not selling) the manufacturers' products at a price below the manufacturer's set minimum."[14] Similarly, Dr. Rausser suggests that Pool pressured its preferred vendors to police their own policies about dealer "redistribution," which involved a dealer's purchasing product directly from a manufacturer through a buying group and then redistributing that product to other Dealers.[15]

[*664] Third, Dr. Rausser states that Pool directed preferred vendors not to sell to new distributors, and that it used the preferred vendor program as leverage to enforce its demands.[16] According to Dr. Rausser, vendors who did not adhere to Pool's conditions ran the risk of being "punished" by being excluded from the preferred vendor program.[17]

Dr. Rausser also identifies two strategies supposedly targeted at eliminating competition from [13] buying groups. Buying groups allowed Dealers to purchase product directly from vendors at pre-negotiated prices, thus enabling Dealers to circumvent distribution. First, Dr. Rausser asserts that Pool encouraged the Manufacturer Defendants to increase their minimum purchase amounts for receiving free freight. He notes that the Manufacturer Defendants began announcing increases to their free-freight minimums in the fall of 2007 and that all three had raised their minimum from $10,000 to $20,000 by February 2008.[18] According to Dr. Rausser, this hike in the free-freight minimums "increased the costs faced by many Pool Dealers, including buying group members," which in turn "made membership of such groups a less attractive option for Dealers wishing to escape" Pool.[19] This, in turn, "increase[d] Pool[]'s ability to sustain higher prices for its Dealer customers." Second, Dr. Rausser asserts that Pool sought to directly alter the incentives for Dealers to purchase through Carecraft, one of the two largest buying groups. Pool reached an agreement with Carecraft under which Carecraft would encourage its members to purchase through Pool and, in return, Pool would provide incentive funds to Carecraft in the [14] form of rebates for purchases its members made.[20] Dr. Rausser refers to this arrangement, which allegedly led Carecraft to "strongly encourage[]" its members to buy through Pool, as the "capture" of Carecraft.[21]

Finally, Dr. Rausser suggests that, in certain instances, Pool sought to directly influence its rivals' pricing, either through the medium of one of its vendors, or by contacting the rival directly.[22]

Dr. Rausser summarizes the alleged effect of these various forms of conduct as follows:

> Through its actions, PoolCorp, in collaboration with the Manufacturing Defendants, directly limited competition from rival distributors and reduced the extent to which Dealers (including proposed Class members) could escape PoolCorp's actions. PoolCorp also signaled its ability and commitment to aggressively dissuade entry and expansion. It created a credible threat that enabled it to elevate and maintain its prices across the United States, causing adverse impact across the proposed Class.[23]

At his deposition, Dr. Rausser confirmed that it is his narrative liability analysis that demonstrates the impact of the defendants' conduct on Pool's prices.[24]

2. Opinion About Commonality [15] and Quantity of Impact

Having concluded that an impact exists, Dr. Rausser proceeds to evaluate whether [*665] that impact would be "common" across the class. Dr. Rausser concludes that the allegedly supracompetitive pricing "caus[ed] an impact across all Class members,"[25] "regardless of region or product category."[26] Dr. Rausser supports this opinion with an analysis of Pool's pricing system. He opines that Pool "used a tightly controlled centralized pricing system to determine prices across geographical regions, products, and customers."[27] Defendants attack this conclusion on the ground that it lacks factual support.

Dr. Rausser also conducts a "Common Factors" regression, which seeks to identify the key variables that predict variation in Pool Products prices. For example, the Common Factors regression includes variables to represent costs, demand, seasonal variation, customer size, and product characteristics. He contends that because his

Common Factors regression can predict 99% of the variation in prices, it shows that "common factors predominate" in determining pricing across the class.

Next, Dr. Rausser uses a "before-and-after" analysis to quantify the alleged impact [16] on the class. The before-and-after analysis seeks to quantify damages by comparing two time periods: a "before" time period, when the allegedly anticompetitive conduct was still underway, and an "after" time period, also referred to as the "benchmark" period, when most of the allegedly anticompetitive conduct had supposedly stopped. To compare the two time periods, he runs his "Common Factors" regression, but adds one additional variable, a "dummy" variable, which is set to 1 during the class period and to 0 during the benchmark period. He calls this regression his "Overcharge" regression. He uses November 21, 2011, as the dividing date between the before period and the benchmark period, because that is the date the Federal Trade Commission "publicly announced its investigation into Pool Products distribution" and "[d]uring that benchmark period, Pool[] was effectively prohibited from engaging in their previous anticompetitive conduct."[28] A positive and statistically significant coefficient on the overcharge dummy variable would indicate an overcharge attributable to the difference in competitive conditions between the class period and the benchmark period.

Defendants challenge Dr. Rausser's [17] before-and-after analysis on two grounds. First, they challenge the benchmark period Dr. Rausser uses on the ground that many of the types of conduct challenged by the DPPs continued into the benchmark period. They argue that the benchmark period must be completely free of challenged conduct to be a reliable basis for a "before-and-after" analysis and that, because his benchmark period is not completely clean, his analysis should be excluded as unreliable. Second, defendants argue that Dr. Rausser's analysis does not "fit" the facts of this case because it does not disaggregate the effect of "any particular allegedly unlawful acts."[29] They contend that because this case includes separate claims, each involving a different constellation of defendants, the analysis must evaluate the impact of "individual alleged events." Id.

Dr. Rausser's opinion also includes a proposed method for calculating "individual damages" for each individual transaction during the class period. Dr. Rausser estimates the individual overcharge for each transaction in two steps. First, he uses his [*666] Overcharge regression model to generate a "Predicted But-For Price" for the transaction. Second, Dr. [18] Rausser subtracts the Predicted But-For Price from the Actual Price that the customer paid for the transaction. The difference between the Actual Price paid and the Predicted But-For Price is the "individual overcharge" for that transaction.[30] Then, to correct for prediction error, Dr. Rausser takes the median overcharge for each product in a month and assigns that overcharge to all customers who purchased that product that month.

Defendants challenge his method on two grounds. First, they argue that his calculated "individual" overcharge for each transaction inappropriately includes an error term. Second, they challenge the final stage of his calculations, in which he substitutes a median overcharge term for his individualized estimates. They argue that this substitution obscures the differences between transactions and leads to "false positives." Ultimately, they contend that his method does not provide a reliable basis for the trier of fact to assess individual damages.

3. Opinion About Relevant Geographic Market

Dr. Rausser concludes that the relevant geographic market is the United States. He provides two bases for this conclusion. First, he opines [19] that Pool Product prices should have been "spatially integrated" across the country.[31] Second, he contends that his conclusion finds support in the results of a "cointegration test" he performed on Pool's pricing.[32] Defendants challenge Dr. Rausser's spatial integration theory on the ground that it is not supported by the facts and his cointegration test on the ground that it is not reliable.

B. Relevant Substantive Law

DPPs rely on Dr. Rausser's opinions to support their antitrust claims and their motion for class certification. The Court sets out the substantive law necessary to understand how the challenged portions of Dr. Rausser's opinion matter to DPPs' antitrust claims and motion for class certification.

1. Attempted Monopolization Claim

Section 2 of the Sherman Act forbids monopolization and attempts to monopolize. 15 U.S.C. § 2. DPPs maintain one attempted monopolization claim against Pool. To prevail on the claim, DPPs must prove that Pool (1) engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct, (2) with the specific intent to [20] monopolize, and (3) with "a dangerous probability" of achieving monopoly power. Spectrum Sports v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 456, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993). In appraising whether there is a dangerous probability of success, courts focus principally on the defendant's share of the relevant market. See, e.g., Pastore v. Bell Tel. Co., 24 F.3d 508, 512 (3d Cir. 1994) ("Determining whether a 'dangerous probability' exists requires 'inquiry into the relevant product and geographic market and the defendant's economic power in that market.'" (quoting Spectrum Sports, 506 U.S. at 459)). Market definition is a necessary component of this analysis, because without a definition of a relevant market, there is no way to measure a defendant's ability to lessen or destroy competition. Walker Process Equip. v. [*667] Food Mach. & Chem. Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 177, 86 S. Ct. 347, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1965). A relevant market has both product and geographic dimensions. Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 324, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962); Surgical Care Ctr. v. Hosp. Dist., 309 F.3d 836, 839-40 (5th Cir. 2002) (affirming dismissal for failure to provide evidence sufficient to demonstrate relevant geographic market).

In addition to establishing a Section 2 violation, to recover as private antitrust plaintiffs, DPPs must establish that they suffered injury in their "business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws." Bell Atl. Corp. v. AT&T Corp., 339 F.3d 294, 302 (5th Cir. 2003) (citing Clayton Act § 4, 15 U.S.C. § 15). They must also provide "some indication of the amount of damage." Id. (citing Alabama v. Blue Bird Body Co., Inc., 573 F.2d 309, 317 (5th Cir. 1978)).

2. Conspiracy Claims

Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits "every contract, combination . . . [21] or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states." 15 U.S.C. § 1. The Supreme Court has made clear, however, that the prohibition on "every" restraint on trade actually "prohibits only agreements that unreasonably restrain trade." NYNEX Corp. v. Discon, Inc., 525 U.S. 128, 133, 119 S. Ct. 493, 142 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1998).

DPPs' remaining section 1 claims are three separate vertical conspiracy claims: one alleging an agreement between Pool and Pentair, another alleging an agreement between Pool and Hayward, and another alleging an agreement between Pool and Zodiac. Vertical restraints are tested by the rule of reason. Leegin Creative Leather Prods., Inc. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 907, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 (2007) (overruling Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373, 31 S. Ct. 376, 55 L. Ed. 502 (1911), and extending application of rule of reason to all vertical restraints).

Under the rule of reason, courts must assess whether a challenged restraint "unreasonably restrained trade," that is, whether it caused an "injury to competition." Doctor's Hosp. of Jefferson, Inc. v. Se. Med. Alliance, Inc., 123 F.3d 301, 307 (5th Cir. 1997) (citations omitted). Courts must balance > the anticompetitive evils of a restrictive practice . . . against any procompetitive benefits or justifications within the confines of the relevant market. Proof that the defendant's activities, on balance, adversely affected competition in the appropriate product and geographic markets is essential to recovery under the rule of reason.

Id. (citing Hornsby Oil Co. v. Champion Spark Plug Co., 714 F.2d 1384, 1392 (5th Cir. 1983)). When assessing the effect [22] on competition of a vertical conspiracy in a case that includes multiple "discrete conspiracies," a court must evaluate each alleged agreement individually:

> [E]ach . . . agreement must be treated as a separate conspiracy, and only acts taken in furtherance of that alleged conspiracy are appropriately considered in determining the adverse effects of the claimed restraints on trade, not acts of one conspirator taken in furtherance of other possible, distinct conspiracies. . . . Indeed, to hold otherwise would be to suggest that the distinction between a single conspiracy and multiple conspiracies involving a common defendant is one without a difference.

Dickson v. Microsoft Corp., 309 F.3d 193, 210-11 (4th Cir. 2002) (citations omitted). If, on balance, the challenged conduct injures competition, then the conduct violates Section 1; if not, then not.

[*668] Almost always, courts must conduct this assessment within a precisely defined market. See Hornsby Oil Co., 714 F.2d at 1392-93 (holding that rule of reason analysis must be conducted in the context of the "appropriate product and geographic markets"). The Court must assess all of the relevant market circumstances within that market, including the market power of the businesses involved in the challenged conduct. See id.; Leegin, 551 U.S. at 885-86; Dickson, 309 F.3d at 209 n.18; see also 7 Phillip E. Areeda [23] & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 1503a, at 393 (2010) (explaining that assessing whether harm to competition is "not only possible but likely and significant" ordinarily requires examining market circumstances). That said, "elaborate market analysis" is not always required:

> [Because] the purpose of the inquiries into market definition and market power is to determine whether an arrangement has the potential for genuine adverse effects on competition, "proof of actual detrimental effects, such as a reduction of output," can obviate the need for an inquiry into market power, which is but a "surrogate for detrimental effects."

F.T.C. v. Ind. Fed'n of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 460-61, 106 S. Ct. 2009, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445 (1986). In most instances, however, plaintiffs cannot present direct evidence of detrimental effects. In that event, they must be able to define the relevant market. Hornsby Oil Co., 714 F.2d at 1392-93.

In addition to proving a violation of the antitrust laws, to establish private antitrust liability, DPPs must prove that they suffered an injury from the violation, and they must provide "some indication of the amount of damage." Robinson v. Tex. Auto. Dealers Ass'n, 387 F.3d 416, 422 (5th Cir. 2004) (citation omitted). The injury must be "antitrust injury," which is "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' [24] acts unlawful." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977). In other words, the injury must be "congruent with the rationale for finding an antitrust violation in the first place." 2A Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 355c4, at 81 (4th ed. 2014). Thus, a plaintiff cannot demonstrate antitrust injury without first establishing a violation. In addition, the causal link between the violation and the injury "may not be based on speculation," but rather "must be proved as a matter of fact and with a fair degree of certainty." Blue Bird Body Co., 573 F.2d at 317.

Once antitrust injury has been established, plaintiffs enjoy a "relaxed burden" with respect to the amount of damages. Pierce v. Ramsey Winch Co., 753 F.2d 416, 435 (5th Cir. 1985). But "the standard for proving the quantum of damages is not without bounds, for antitrust damages may not be determined by guesswork or speculation." El Aguila Food Prods., Inc. v. Gruma Corp., 131 F. App'x 450, 453 (5th Cir. 2005). Rather, there must be enough for a factfinder to make a "just and reasonable estimate of the damage based on relevant data." Id. (quoting Lehrman v. Gulf Oil Corp., 464 F.2d 26, 46 (5th Cir. 1972).

3. Class Certification

To be certified under Rule 23, the class must first satisfy four threshold requirements. A court may certify a class only if:

(1) the class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable;
(2) there are questions of law or fact common to the class;

(3) the [25] claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class; and [*669] (4) the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class.

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a). The party seeking certification bears the burden of establishing these requirements. Unger v. Amedisys, 401 F.3d 316, 320 (5th Cir. 2005) (citing Berger v. Compaq Comput. Corp., 257 F.3d 475, 479-80 (5th Cir. 2001)).

If the prerequisites of Rule 23(a) are met, the proposed class must also satisfy one of the three provisions for certification under Rule 23(b). For certification of a 23(b)(3) damages class, the court must make a finding that questions of law or fact common to class members predominate over questions affecting only individual members and that a class action is the best way to adjudicate the controversy. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3); Unger, 401 F.3d at 320.

To determine whether the class claims meet the predominance requirement, the court must "identify the substantive issues that will control the outcome, assess[] which issues will predominate, and then determin[e] whether the issues are common to the class." Bell Atl. Corp. v. AT&T Corp., 339 F.3d 294, 302 (5th Cir. 2003). As summarized above, establishing the predicate antitrust violation to support each of DPPs' claims is only the first of three steps necessary to establish private antitrust liability. DPPs must also prove that they suffered "antitrust injury" and make a showing as [26] to the amount of damages.

The Court will need to determine whether injury and amount of damages are susceptible to common proof. If injury "cannot be established for every class member through proof common to the class, the need to establish antitrust liability for individual class members defeats Rule 23(b)(3) predominance." Bell Atl., 339 F.3d at 302. Likewise, when plaintiffs fail to adduce a formula capable of providing "a just and reasonable estimate of the damages of every class member," individual issues as to amount of damages will defeat predominance. Id. at 304; Piggly Wiggly Clarksville, Inc. v. Interstate Brands Corp., 100 F. App'x 296, 297 (5th Cir. 2004) ("The necessity of calculating damages on an individual basis, by itself, can be grounds for not certifying a class." (citing Bell Atl., 339 F.3d at 308)). In Piggly Wiggly, the Fifth Circuit held that a district court did not abuse its discretion by refusing to certify a class on the ground that many individualized damages determinations would be required "because many of the class members negotiated a price rather than being charged strictly on price lists." Id. at 298. In short, "[c]lass treatment . . . may not be suitable where the calculation of damages is not susceptible to a mathematical or formulaic calculation, or where the formula by which the parties propose to calculate individual damages is [27] clearly inadequate." Bell Atl., 339 F.3d at 307.

C. Analysis

Defendants challenge five aspects of Dr. Rausser's opinion. The Court addresses each in turn.

1. Opinion About Pool's "Centralized Pricing System"

Dr. Rausser opines that Pool "used a tightly controlled centralized pricing system to determine prices across geographical regions, products, and customers."[33] He advances this opinion in support of his conclusion that Pool's allegedly supracompetitive pricing "caus[ed] an impact across all Class members,"[34] "regardless of region [*670] or product category."[35] DPPs also rely on Dr. Rausser's opinion about Pool's pricing system to support their proposed market definition in their summary judgment briefing.[36] Defendants challenge Dr. Rausser's opinion about Pool's pricing on that ground that it "is not supported by the facts" in the record and is therefore irrelevant.[37]

To prove that Pool centrally controlled pricing, Dr. Rausser asserts that "catalog" (or "P") pricing was the most prevalent form of pricing [28] Pool used and that Pool could "commonly elevate[] prices across its Dealer customers" through "bulk matrix updates" of its prices.[38] In contrast, defendants argue that "overwhelming factual evidence" indicates that Pool's prices are "set at the local branch level on a customer-by-customer, product-by-product basis."[39] Specifically, they argue that Pool extensively customized its pricing through the use of its matrix pricing system and price overrides; that catalog pricing not only represented a minority of Pool's sales, but also varied by geographic region; and that Dr. Rausser misrepresents the nature of Pool's "bulk matrix updates."

Pool's Pricing System

The parties agree that Pool uses three main types of pricing: regional catalog, or "P," prices; matrix, or "M," prices; and override, or "OV" prices. Pool issues approximately fifteen different regional catalogs.[40] Catalog pricing is set with input from the divisional pricing managers for each geographic division.[41] Matrix pricing is created at the local branch level, and is customized to individual customers (or customer groups) and individual products (or product groups). Finally, override [29] prices indicate sales for which the sales center manager at a particular branch overrides the catalog and matrix price options.

The parties also agree that Pool uses two types of matrix pricing: "asterisk" (or "*") pricing, and "dollar sign" (or "$") pricing. Asterisk pricing reflects a set markup or discount from the catalog price, or a set markup from cost.[42] Thus, when Pool inputs a change to either catalog prices or cost, asterisk pricing updates automatically.[43] Dollar sign pricing reflects a fixed dollar price for a product for a specific customer or customer group.[44] Dollar sign pricing does not update automatically. Instead, when Pool experiences a cost increase from its vendors, it implements a "bulk update" of its dollar matrices to reflect the cost increase.[45]

Defendants' Challenges

Pool's expert, Dr. Johnson, argues that Dr. Rausser inaccurately represents the nature of the matrix and override pricing. According to Dr. Johnson, Dr. Rausser [30] represents that commonality exists among transactions associated with the same price code, even though matrix and override pricing are, by definition, individualized.[46] For example, an "M1" price code [*671] would be used to set a price specific to an individual customer and an individual product (i.e., the price Customer C pays for Brand Y sand), while an "M6" price code would be used to set a price applicable to a group of a customers for an individual product (i.e., the price Customers A, B, and C pay for Brand Y sand). With override pricing, a Pool representative overrides the catalog and matrix price options.

Dr. Rausser and Dr. Johnson also disagree about how prevalent each type of pricing is, and what the prevalence of each pricing type implies about the degree to which Pool's pricing is "centralized." Dr. Rausser represents that approximately 43% of Pool's sales were made at catalog prices during the class period.[47] He argues that this demonstrates standardization in Pool's pricing. In contrast, Dr. Johnson, represents that "only 24%" of Pool's gross sales occurred at catalog prices during the class period.[48] Neither expert appears to dispute that 43% of Pool's sales, [31] accounting for 24% of its gross sales, were made at catalog prices during the class period. Rather, they differ as to whether it is more helpful to analyze the percentage of orders or the percentage of sales dollars. Dr. Rausser criticizes Dr. Johnson's choice to analyze the percentage of sales dollars, as opposed to the percentage of orders made under each code, on the ground that using sales dollars "erroneously and needlessly gives the sales of a more expensive products a higher weight in the analysis."[49]

Finally, Dr. Johnson argues that Dr. Rausser misrepresents the nature of Pool's bulk updates. In his initial report, Dr. Rausser characterized Pool's bulk updates as a mechanism for Pool to manipulate prices "on a common basis"[50] and "commonly elevate[] prices across its Dealer customers."[51] In his declaration, Dr. Rausser shifts his explanation and argues that the evidence still supports the idea that Pool's price updates were "company-wide," because "at the start of each year" Pool updated its "catalog prices, followed by matrix price updates."[52]

Discussion

When determining the admissibility of evidence, district courts must afford "proper deference to the jury's role as the arbiter of disputes between conflicting opinions." 14.38 Acres of Land, 80 F.3d at 1077 (quoting Viterbo, 826 F.2d at 422). "As a general rule, questions relating to the bases and sources of an expert's opinion affect the weight to be assigned that opinion rather than its admissibility and should be left for the jury's consideration." Id. (quoting Viterbo, 826 F.2d at 422).

The Court has reviewed the documents cited by both experts in support of their conclusions about the nature and degree of centralization of Pool's pricing. The Court concludes that defendants' arguments consist of factual disputes and challenges to Dr. Rausser's conclusions, which are more appropriately explored through cross examination. "Vigorous cross-examination, presentation of contrary evidence, and careful instruction on the burden of proof are the traditional and appropriate means of attacking shaky but admissible evidence." Daubert, 509 U.S.

at 596. Dr. Rausser's conclusions about Pool's pricing are not devoid of factual support. Indeed, Dr. Rausser's reports cite a number of internal Pool documents that demonstrate some level of centralized [*672] control over pricing during the class [33] period.

For example, he cites a document produced by Pool central management entitled "District Pricing Manager Responsibilities."[53] It states that the "core objective" of the division or district pricing manager position is to "improve the selling margins of the division."[54] The document outlines, step-by-step, the process divisions were to follow when making pricing decisions. Step one instructs the divisions to "Begin at 'P' [catalog] pricing . . . for many accounts it should be sufficient."[55] Steps two and three provide guidance on how to limit the use of customized matrix prices as much as possible.[56] The document also indicates that, as part of the process for setting catalog prices, all catalog price changes went through Steve Dwyer, the "corporate pricing manager."[57] This document demonstrates some level of centralized coordination and supervision of Pool's pricing.

Dr. Rausser also cites internal Pool emails discussing how to improve pricing discipline at the branch level. For example, he points to a 2006 email to senior staff from Manny Perez, Pool's president and CEO, in which Perez lists disciplinary [34] actions to be taken against employees who grant unauthorized pricing exceptions. The list includes requiring the responsible employee to pay Pool for the difference between the sale price and the authorized price ("equivalent to reimbursing the Company for stealing") and "termination."[58] This document provides support for Dr. Rausser's opinion that "pricing discipline was instilled from the most senior levels[.]"[59]

Dr. Rausser also points to Pool's "Price Management 2011 Action Plan," which provides detailed instructions on managing Pool's active price matrices. The plan instructs managers to review all price matrices for specific customers, eliminate obsolete entries, and then "[i]ncrease the gross margin percent on every matrix for every customer."[60] The plan further instructs managers to review group matrices and reduce the number of customers and products assigned to the lists and "[i]ncrease the margins on all items on these lists."[61] The plan explains:

> As a general rule, 80% of our customers watch pricing by focusing on a relatively small list of products they purchase frequently. For these customers we should be able to raise our margins [35] on every matrix item without raising any concerns. This will be easier this year as we have inflation. A margin going from 24.2% to 24.6% should go unnoticed.[62]

This document arguably provides step-by-step instructions for Pool's managers to implement across-the-board price increases for their customers.

These documents, and others like them, provide support for Dr. Rausser's opinion that Pool's pricing was subject to centralized control. Although Pool's pricing may not be as "tightly controlled" as Dr. Rausser [*673] opines, neither does it appear to be as atomized as Dr. Johnson suggests. This "dispute[] between conflicting opinions" is best left to the jury. 14.38 Acres of Land, 80 F.3d at 1077.

The Court reaches a similar conclusion about Dr. Rausser's opinion on the effect of Pool's bulk updates. Although there is no dispute that the bulk updates do not update all prices for all products at one time, Dr. Rausser has pointed to some evidence that the bulk updates facilitated common, if not completely uniform, increases in prices. Specifically, he has analyzed the effect of the bulk updates on pricing for different product lines, and he presents his results [36] in a series of graphs demonstrating step-like increases in prices corresponding to the bulk updates.[63] Thus, his bulk updates opinion is not without support in the record.

The Court denies defendants' motion to exclude Dr. Rausser's opinion about the centralization of Pool's pricing.

2. Definition of the Relevant Geographic Market

Dr. Rausser opines that the relevant geographic market is the United States.[64] He supports his conclusion by arguing that Pool Product prices should have been "spatially integrated" across the country,[65] and by reporting his interpretation of a "cointegration test" of Pool's pricing.[66] Defendants challenge Dr. Rausser's spatial integration analysis and cointegration test as unconnected to the facts of the case and unreliable.

"Spatial Integration" Theory

Dr. Rausser recognizes that the FTC complaint, which did not allege a national market, referred to "local geographic markets, focusing on demand-side effects — i.e. the limited ability of Dealers in certain locales [37] to switch to distributors operating far away."[67] He argues, however, that a market can still be national on the basis of supply-side substitution. He explains:

> [B]ecause Pool Products can and did ship throughout the United States . . . prices are expected to be related (or "spatially integrated") across the country, through supply-side substitution. Simply, where prices are elevated in one region relative to another (above that which can be justified by differences in transportation costs between the two), the economics of supply-side substitutability means that product flow will be restricted in the low-price region and re-directed to the higher price region, because such a re-direction would be economically beneficial to the supplier. This dynamic (often referred to as "spatial arbitrage") serves to keep prices in different regions related, and it also means that the relevant enquiry regarding market power is one that looks across the United States and not just in a particular locale.[68]

Defendants challenge Dr. Rausser's spatial integration theory as ungrounded in the facts of the case.[69] They point out that Dr. Rausser has not identified any evidence indicating that [38] Pool ever shipped product from one branch to another for the purpose of maximizing profits. [*674] Pool's expert, Dr. Johnson, points to evidence that gross margins varied by geographic region, and that, therefore, if Pool were engaging in "spatial arbitrage," it should have been shifting sales from less profitable to more profitable divisions until gross margins across geographies equalized.[70] As an illustration, Dr. Johnson points out that average gross margins for the heaters product line were twice as high in the Southeast region as in the Southern California region.[71] And yet Dr. Rausser has pointed to no evidence that heaters, or any other products, were transferred to improve margins.

At his deposition, Dr. Rausser could identify only two pieces of evidence in support of his spatial integration opinion. First, he identified a memo in which Pool management discussed the need to review with branches matrix pricing producing a "gross margin of 10% or less based on replacement cost."[72] To explain the memo, he cited deposition testimony by Manny Perez, indicating that Perez wanted general managers to [39] personally review all low-margin sales. Dr. Rausser argued that this evidence demonstrates that Pool was aiming to "maximize total margins." He reasoned that "the only way of maximizing total margins is, in fact, to equalize them, setting the incremental value of margins across regions of the country in equilibrium."[73] This document does not demonstrate that spatial arbitrage actually occurred.

Second, Dr. Rausser identified a regional manager report that discussed Pool's internal mechanism for transferring product from one branch to a branch that is out-of-stock.[74] Pool's counsel asked Dr. Rausser:

> Q: Is there anything in those documents that suggests that the subject of transferring product had anything to do with anything other than situations where one branch is out of stock of a product and needs to get product from another branch in order to fill demand?
> A: Well, certainly that's the major point that is visited in this document. But it also shows . . . they put in place a mechanism for moving product from the area of excess supply to an area of excess demand. . . . But fundamentally, it goes to taking advantage of areas [40] in which pricing and margins are better in one are than they are in another.
> Q: Show me where in Exhibit 3025 there's reference to the transfer of product being motivated by pricing or margins being better in one area rather than the other.
> A: If you have a stock out—this is implicit. If you have stock out -
> Q: This is a very specific question.
> A: Okay. Fair enough.
> Q: I'd like you to show me where explicitly it makes reference to that.
> A: There is no statement that goes directly to margins, but this is the internal . . . managerial operations with regard to moving product from one local branch to another.[75]

The regional manager report is not evidence of shifting product to increase margins.

[*675] On the demand-side, which Dr. Rausser does not extensively address, Dr. Johnson's reports provide evidence that Pool Products sales were significantly more localized than Dr. Rausser suggests. Specifically, Dr. Johnson points to evidence that buyers typically were not willing to travel long distances for Pool Products, or to have Pool Products shipped from far away (which he hypothesizes owes to high freight costs). He shows that in most [41] states, more than 90% of pick-up purchases were made at stores 50 miles or less from the buyer.[76] Likewise, in most of the states where Pool has branches, more than 90% of the orders Pool shipped were to Dealers 125 miles away or less.[77] Dr. Rausser responds:

> [T]hese statistics reflect only the distances over which Dealers have sourced Pool Products, not the distances over which they may be prepared to source Pool Products. If prices are in equilibrium, in that spatial arbitrage opportunities have been exploited and prices across regions have stabilized as a result, then Dealers need not source Pool Products from greater distances in order to enjoy better prices that may be on offer at distant branches. This does not mean that, if the network were to get out of equilibrium, with spatial arbitrage opportunities on offer, that Dealers would refrain from sourcing Pool Products from substantially further afield than 100 miles.[78]

But this is a bit like saying that the evidence for his theory is that there is no evidence. That Dealers, for the most part, ship locally may be consistent with a market that is integrated and in equilibrium, but it is equally consistent with an unintegrated market.

Ultimately, the Court finds that there is simply too great an analytical gap between the underlying evidence presented and Dr. Rausser's opinion. As the Fifth Circuit has repeatedly held, "[i]f an opinion is fundamentally unsupported, then it offers no expert assistance to the jury." Guile, 422 F.3d at 227 (quoting Viterbo, 826 F.2d at 422). Thus, "an expert's opinion should not be admitted if it does not apply to the specific facts of the case." Diggs v. Citigroup, Inc., 551 F. App'x 762, 765 (5th Cir. 2014) (citing Kumho Tire, 526 U.S. at 154). Here, Dr. Rausser has failed to point to any evidence indicating that the theory of spatial integration applies to the facts of the Pool Products market. The lack of evidence is telling; it is hard to imagine how Pool could have executed a nationwide program of margin-maximizing product transfers without having some sort of company policy in place. Because Dr. Rausser's opinion of spatial integration is without support in the record, it offers no help to the fact finder, and the Court excludes it as irrelevant.

Cointegration Test

In two footnotes, Dr. Rausser describes a "cointegration test" that he ran, which supposedly supports his conclusion that prices are spatially integrated. First, in footnote 109 of his [43] rebuttal report, Dr. Rausser writes:

> A cointegration test of PoolCorp's overall pricing supports that prices are spatially integrated across the regions of the United States. To test for spatial integration of PoolCorp's prices I identified all products which were sold by PoolCorp in every quarter and in every census region (Northeast, Midwest, South, and West) over the period from January 2007 through September 2012 [*676] (inclusive). I then computed the average quarterly price for each of the four census regions over all 621 such products. A cointegration test confirms that the four resulting price series are related, see my work papers. Fackler & Goodwin describe how cointegration tests can be used to investigate spatial integration.

Then, in footnote 29 of his supplemental report, he writes:

> In addition to the analysis presented in the Appendix, I have rerun the cointegration analysis of PoolCorp's overall pricing . . . after adjusting for the amended interpretation of PoolCorp's pricing variable in its OH database. However, because it is not consistently available throughout the time period, and cointegration analysis requires consistently measured time series, no adjustment is made for [44] the unit-of-measure issue. The results continue to support my conclusion that prices are spatially integrated across the regions of the United States. See my work papers.

That is all the description that Dr. Rausser provides of his cointegration test. Dr. Rausser does not provide any evidence of his calculations or any description of his results. Without this, the Court is unable to evaluate Dr. Rausser's methodology. Dr. Johnson, who has apparently seen Dr. Rausser's work papers, writes, "Dr. Rausser does not describe either his testing or the associated results. It is unclear from a replication of his work papers what serves as the basis for his claim that he continues to find support for his conclusion."[79] The Court cannot accept Dr.

Rausser's bare assertion that the test results "support[] that prices are spatially integrated across the regions of the United States." "[N]othing in either Daubert or the Federal Rules of Evidence requires a district court to admit opinion evidence that is connected to existing data only by the ipse dixit of the expert." Joiner, 522 U.S. at 146. On this basis alone, Dr. Rausser's opinion about his cointegration test can be excluded as unreliable.

In addition, [45] however, the Court has identified at least four substantive problems with the "methodology" of Dr. Rausser's cointegration test. First, as Dr. Johnson observes, Dr. Rausser's sample set of 621 products is quite small. It represents less than 1% of the products sold by Pool.[80] Dr. Rausser seeks to justify the small sample size by explaining that cointegration tests require "price series over a long period, with a high time-frequency," which counsels for using fewer regions and more frequent observations (i.e., quarterly as opposed to annual). And he represents that the 621 products he included in his analysis are the only products that were sold by Pool in all four Census regions every quarter.[81] But this explanation does not answer the real question posed by a small sample set: Is the sample size big enough to yield statistically significant results? As Dr. Rausser does not provide his results, the Court has no way of knowing what level of statistical significance he obtained, if any.

Second, the Court finds no support for the use of four generic census regions for a test of geographic market integration in the Pool Products market. [46] The census regions do not correspond to the organization of the Pool Products industry or of Pool's business. Moreover, each census region includes states that have little logical connection with one another. For example, the "West" census region comprises Alaska, Hawaii, Montana, Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico, Idaho, Utah, Arizona, Nevada, [*677] Washington, Oregon, and California.[82] Thus, the region includes obvious "sunbelt" states (California, Arizona, New Mexico), and "snowbelt" states (Colorado, Washington).[83] Common sense indicates that different pricing factors may apply between sunbelt and snowbelt states. But because Dr. Rausser uses geographic regions that include states from both groups, the cointegration test cannot answer whether pricing is integrated between sunbelt and snowbelt states.

Third, Dr. Rausser admits that his data for the cointegration test [47] does not correct for the "unit-of-measure issue." The unit-of-measure issue is a significant data coding issue that plagued Dr. Rausser's initial and rebuttal reports. The problem may be summarized as follows. For some transactions, Pool records a quantity of "one," indicating that one unit of a product was sold. For others, a quantity of "one" indicates "one case," indicating that twelve (or some other number greater than one) units of the product were sold. Thus, without the unit-of-measure variable, it is impossible to know whether the price given for a particular transaction is the price for one unit or for multiple units.

Dr. Rausser explains that he did not correct for unit-of-measure in the data set for his cointegration test because unit-of-measure information is "not consistently available throughout the time period."[84] He makes no attempt to explain what effect this error may have had on his results. But the unit-of-measure issue was such a big problem in Dr. Rausser's initial and rebuttal reports that the Court permitted him—over defendants' objections—to submit a supplemental report correcting the issue well after the deadlines for the exchange of expert reports had passed. [48] This required numerous other adjustments to the Court's scheduling order, to wit: the defendants were allowed to submit supplemental reports from their experts in response to Dr. Rausser's supplemental report; Dr. Rausser had to be redeposed; and, most significantly, all of the briefing deadlines for summary judgment, class certification, and Daubert motions had to be pushed back by several months—all to correct for two data coding issues, the unit-of-measure issue being one. The Court has a hard time accepting that a coding issue this significant would not also cause problems for Dr. Rausser's results here.

Finally, the Court observes that Dr. Rausser has not followed the best practices prescribed by the very authorities he cites. Dr. Rausser's cointegration discussion cites P.L. Fackler & B.K. Goodwin, Spatial Price Analysis, in HANDBOOK OF AGRICULTURAL ECONOMICS 971 (Bruce L. Gardner & Gordon C. Rausser, eds. 2001). He states that the article "describe[s] how cointegration tests can be used to investigate spatial integration."[85] The Court has reviewed the article. It provides a number of cautions and caveats about the limitations of the tests it describes, [49] including cointegration tests. The article explains that as a result of these limitations, > empirical tests supporting integration could be consistent with a complete lack of integration, and tests rejecting integration could occur in markets that are completely linked. These indeterminate results follow from a number of weaknesses inherent in the empirical tests, [*678] including a lack of information about transaction costs, model misspecifications, and weaknesses in the inferential procedures.

Id. at 1017 (emphasis added). The article goes on to summarize:

> What can be learned about spatial market behavior from empirical tests based upon prices alone? These tests clearly provide information about spatial relationships among prices. However, the tests should be interpreted within the context of institutional and factual characteristics of the markets in question as well as the shortcomings associated with each test. The significant limitations associated with individual tests suggest that inferences should not be based upon a single test but rather, when possible, on a variety of inferential techniques.

Id. at 1018 (emphasis added). Thus, the very article to which Dr. Rausser directs the Court's attention undermines [50] his approach here. He has conducted just one test, instead of the variety of tests and techniques prescribed by the article. Moreover, the article makes clear that the results of any one test standing alone are simply not enough from which to draw conclusions. Dr. Rausser's isolated use of the cointegration test violates accepted best practice as described by the authority upon which he relies. For all of these reasons, Dr. Rausser's opinion about his cointegration test is excluded as unreliable.

3. Benchmark Period

Damages calculations in antitrust cases seek to compare plaintiffs' actual experience in the real world with what the plaintiffs' experience would have been, "but for" the antitrust violation. See ABA Section of Antitrust Law, Antitrust Law Developments 783 (7th ed. 2012). One widely accepted methodology for proving damages is a before-and-after analysis, which "compares . . . the prices [a plaintiff] paid during the period of violations with . . . prices paid . . . after [the violation period's] termination." Id. at 786.

Dr. Rausser employs a before-and-after analysis here. Dr. Rausser uses November 21, 2011, as the dividing date between the "before" [51] period—when the allegedly anticompetitive conduct was still underway—and the "benchmark" period—when most of the allegedly anticompetitive conduct had supposedly stopped. Dr. Rausser says he chose the date because it is the date the Federal Trade Commission "publicly announced its investigation into Pool Products distribution" and "[d]uring that benchmark period, Pool[] was effectively prohibited from engaging in their previous anticompetitive conduct."[86] For his before-and-after analysis, Dr. Rausser uses the same variables as in his Common Factors regression, but adds one additional variable, a "dummy" variable, which is set to 1 during the class period and to 0 during the benchmark period. A positive and statistically significant coefficient on the overcharge dummy variable would indicate an overcharge attributable to the difference in competitive conditions between the class period and the benchmark period.

Defendants challenge Dr. Rausser's chosen benchmark period on the ground that many of the types of conduct challenged by the DPPs continued into the benchmark period. They argue that the benchmark period must be completely free of challenged conduct to be a [52] reliable basis for a "before-and-after" analysis, and that because his benchmark period is not completely clean, his analysis should be excluded as unreliable. They cite National Farmers' Organization, Inc. v. Associated Milk Producers, Inc., 850 F.2d 1286 (8th Cir. 1988), amended, 878 F.2d 1118 (8th [*679] Cir. 1989), for the proposition that "an antitrust plaintiff's damages should reflect the difference between its performance in a hypothetical market free of all antitrust violations and its actual performance in the market infected by the anticompetitive conduct." Id. at 1306 (emphasis added).

The Court rejects this argument. Defendants do not dispute that the before-and-after method is an accepted methodology to estimate overcharge damages. Nor do they provide any authority for the proposition that an expert's opinion must be excluded if the "after" period is not free of any residual effects of the challenged exclusionary or collusive conduct. National Farmers' Organization, cited by defendants, does not stand for that proposition, or anything close to it. Indeed, the Eighth Circuit's decision is a ringing endorsement of a liberal approach to calculating damages once the plaintiff has shown the fact of injury. See 850 F.2d at 1293 (explaining "a lesser standard of proof is applicable to proof of the amount of damages"). Further, as plaintiffs [53] note, the court in In re Linerboard Antitrust Litigation rejected the argument that an expert's opinion must be excluded if the benchmark period is not free of collusion. See 497 F. Supp. 2d 666, 675 (E.D. Pa. 2007). In Linerboard, the plaintiffs alleged a horizontal price-fixing conspiracy. The plaintiffs' expert constructed a model that used variables representing cost, demand, and other predictive factors to predict what prices should have been absent the alleged collusion. For inputs, the expert used data that excluded the period of the alleged conduct. The expert subtracted the predicted but-for prices generated by his model from the prices paid by the plaintiffs during the damages period. The defendants argued that, in choosing variables for his regression, the expert incorrectly assumed his benchmark period was free from collusion. The court concluded that even if the benchmark was not "perfectly competitive," the argument was unavailing. It reasoned that if there was in fact some collusion during the benchmark period, then the but-for price estimates would be too high, resulting in a "more conservative" estimate. Id.

The FTC Consent Decree required Pool to cease and desist from engaging in practices designed to induce [54] or coerce manufacturers to refuse to deal with other distributors, as well as from exacting penalties, discriminating, or retaliating against manufacturers because they dealt with or intended to deal with other distributors. Further, the Consent Decree required Pool to desist from conditioning participation in its preferred vendor program on whether a manufacturer sold to other distributors. Thus, the focus of the FTC Consent Decree and, indeed, the most serious of plaintiffs' allegations, involve Pool's efforts to induce or coerce manufacturers to refuse to deal with actual or would-be competitors. The Court has seen nothing in the record to indicate that Pool persisted in that conduct during the after period. That the preferred vendor program continued in the after period is not inconsistent with a cessation of anticompetitive activities. Pool was not required to forego the program completely; it was required only to stop using it as a tool to exclude competitors. Further, Dr. Rausser stated that during the after period, he did not "see any events with regard to foreclosure that one witnesses during the class period."[87] Dr. Rausser cited Pool Source as an example of a distributor that [55] had been foreclosed, and to which Pentair and Zodiac began to sell substantial amounts in the after period.[88] [*680] As to the other challenged "mechanisms that were still in place" in the after period, Dr. Rausser stated that he did not see "any evidence" to support the assertion that they were "effectively implemented to achieve anticompetitive results."[89] The issues defendants raise with respect to free freight minimums and most favored nations clauses are not trivial, but they do not fundamentally undermine Dr. Rausser's analysis. Rather, they provide a fertile subject for cross-examination. See Daubert, 509 U.S. at 596. Dr. Rausser's before-and-after analysis is not excludable.

4. Aggregated Causation Analysis

Fourth, defendants challenge Dr. Rausser's analysis on the ground that it does not disaggregate the impact of "any particular allegedly unlawful acts."[90] They argue that this case, which includes separate claims against different combinations of defendants, requires a disaggregated analysis of the impact of "individual alleged events."

In response, DPPs argue that Dr. Rausser's aggregated analysis is "[c]onsistent with DPPs' allegations [56] and the evidence."[91] Essentially, they argue that because they allege that all of the challenged conduct is related in one way or another, it is correct for their expert to analyze all of the challenged conduct together. In support of their position, they cite cases in which the plaintiffs maintain only one Sherman Act claim. See In re TFT LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig., 267 F.R.D. 583, 607 (N.D. Cal. 2010) (single conspiracy claim); In re Vitamins Antitrust Litig., 209 F.R.D. 251, 265 (D.D.C. 2002) (single conspiracy claim); Bonjorno v. Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Corp., 752 F.2d 802, 813 (3d Cir. 1984) (single attempted monopoly claim); LePage's Inc. v. 3M, 324 F.3d 141, 166 (3d Cir. 2003) (single monopoly claim); Cont'l Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 698-99, 82 S. Ct. 1404, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777 (1962) (single conspiracy to monopolize claim). They do not address whether an aggregated analysis can work in a case that involves multiple claims against different defendants.

Dr. Rausser confirms that he has taken an aggregated approach to analyzing the effect of the challenged conduct. He explains that his model "measures the increase in prices . . . attributable to PoolCorp's exercise of market power whatever the basis for the maintenance or enhancement of that power."[92] And he admits that the data will not allow him to disaggregate the effect, if any, of any individual challenged act or of any of DPPs' individual claims. Thus, there is no dispute that Dr. Rausser's analysis does not demonstrate the effect of [57] any specific challenged act or of any of the separate conspiracies.

Dr. Rausser defends his approach. Indeed, he criticizes the defense experts for evaluating specific "alleged anti-competitive acts in isolation" and "attempting to trace the particular effects of each one as though none of the other conduct had taken place."[93] He argues that, as a matter of economics, all of the alleged anticompetitive acts "must be judged based on their aggregate, rather than singular, effect."[94]

Here, defendants challenge the "fit" of Dr. Rausser's methods to the issues in this case, making a relevance argument. What is relevant to the proof of a claim depends [*681] on the legal standard that governs the claim. If, under the legal standard, only the conduct of certain parties is to be considered in determining if a violation occurred, an expert's opinion based on the conduct of others does not fit the case. As just summarized, Dr. Rausser's aggregated causation analysis purports to demonstrate and quantify the effect of all of the defendants' challenged conduct together. Thus, the Court must determine whether an analysis that seeks [58] to demonstrate only the aggregated effect of all of the challenged conduct is relevant to all of DPPs' claims.

The Court begins with DPPs' attempted monopolization claim against Pool. Liability in a private antitrust action requires that DPPs prove (1) a violation of the antitrust laws, (2) the fact of damage, and (3) some indication of the amount of damage. El Aguila Food Prods., Inc. v. Gruma Corp., 131 F. App'x 450, 452 (5th Cir. 2005). "The fact of damage requirement is one of causation; the plaintiff must show that the defendant's unlawful conduct was a material cause of injury to it[.]" Id. In a section 2 case, "[t]he fact finder should be able to consider the entire sum of unlawful exclusionary practices," although "care must be taken lest . . . causation and damages relate predominantly to lawful rather than unlawful conduct." 2B Areeda & Hovencamp at ¶ 310c7, at 235-237 (4th ed.

2014). "The dominant conduct causing the plaintiffs injuries must still be found to be unlawful." Id. at 237. Here, DPPs rely on all of the challenged conduct in support of their attempted monopolization claim against Pool. Thus, so long as all of the challenged conduct is found to be unlawful, proof of the aggregated effect of that conduct can satisfy the injury requirement for DPPs' section 2 claim. Therefore, [59] the aggregated analysis is relevant to DPPs' attempted monopolization claim against Pool. Thus, Dr. Rausser's aggregated analysis need not be excluded as to DPPs' attempted monopolization claim.

Next, the Court assesses the evidence's relevance to DPPs' three vertical conspiracy claims. With respect to these claims, the Court concludes that Dr. Rausser's aggregate analysis does not answer the relevant question. His opinion cannot help the fact-finder determine whether any one of these vertical conspiracies had an anticompetitive effect on the relevant market. As discussed earlier, DPPs' vertical conspiracy claims are assessed under the rule of reason. To prevail on a rule of reason claim, a plaintiff must demonstrate that a challenged restraint caused an adverse effect on competition, not simply to isolated competitors. See Doctor's Hosp. of Jefferson, 123 F.3d at 307. In assessing anticompetitive effects in the context of these vertical claims, the focus is not just on Pool's market share, but also on whether each Manufacturer Defendant had market power of antitrust concern. See Dickson, 309 F.3d at 207-11. Absent such power, a Manufacturer Defendant's collusion with Pool would be ineffective.[95] And, when assessing the effect on competition of a vertical [60] conspiracy in a case that includes multiple "discrete conspiracies," a court must evaluate only the conduct in furtherance of each alleged agreement. Id. at 210-11. Dr. Rausser's aggregated analysis does not even attempt to demonstrate the effects of each defendant's acts taken in furtherance of each alleged conspiracy. Indeed, he does not even advance a theory to explain how collusion between Pool and, for example, Zodiac, could have injured competition. Dr. Rausser and plaintiffs treat the case as one big conspiracy among Pool and all three Manufacturer Defendants inter se to exclude Pool's rivals or would-be rivals in order to allow Pool to charge [*682] anticompetitive prices to its downstream customers. Notably, this is a claim that the Court dismissed on the pleadings because plaintiffs failed to plausibly allege horizontal collusion by the Manufacturer Defendants.[96]

Dr. Rausser does not demonstrate that any Manufacturer Defendant had the market power necessary to foreclose competition through an agreement with Pool. Dr. Rausser does not provide the market shares of each Manufacturer Defendant and merely provides how much of the Manufacturer [61] Defendants' sales went to Pool and how much they collectively made up of Pool's sales. But Pool's purchases and sales do not constitute a market. Dr. Elzinga estimates, for example, that Zodiac's share of the total Pool Products purchased was between 6 and 7 percent.[97] So measured, Zodiac's individual share would suggest that it does not individually have the power to foreclose competition in a vertical agreement with Pool. Dr. Rausser's observation that Pool has buying leverage over the Manufacturer Defendants because Pool was their largest customer does not answer the question of whether any of these firms independently had the power to foreclose competition in a national market through an anticompetitive agreement with Pool. See Dickson, 309 F.3d at 208-11. For these reasons, the Court finds that Dr. Rausser's aggregate causation analysis does not fit DPPs' three vertical conspiracy claims, and it excludes his aggregated analysis as to these claims.

5. Individual Damages Calculation

Finally, defendants challenge Dr. Rausser's proposed method for calculating "individual damages" for the members of the class. Defendants challenge two aspects of his proposed method: (1) its supposed inclusion [62] of an error term in its estimates of the overcharge applicable to each transaction analyzed, and (2) its use of a median overcharge term instead of an individualized overcharge estimate in the final stage of each calculation. Defendants argue that as a result of these two alleged flaws, Dr. Rausser's proposed method leads to "false positives" and does not provide a reliable formula for calculating individual damages across the class.

[95] See Elzinga DPP Report at 35-39.

Inclusion of Error Term

Dr. Johnson represents that Dr. Rausser's individualized overcharge calculation for each transaction is equivalent to the uniform overcharge estimated by Dr. Rausser's Overcharge regression model, plus the prediction error associated with the transaction.[98] Dr. Johnson explains that "the error term in a regression model captures what cannot be explained by the model" and argues that it is "therefore inappropriate to attribute the observed variation in prices that cannot be explained by Dr. Rausser's regression model to the overcharge."[99]

The Court rejects this argument. Dr. Rausser estimates the individual overcharge for each transaction in two steps. First, he uses his regression model to generate a "Predicted [63] But-For Price" for the transaction. Because this price is a prediction, it naturally includes an element of prediction error. (This is the "error term" to which Dr. Johnson refers.) Second, Dr. Rausser subtracts the Predicted But-For Price from the Actual Price that the customer paid for the transaction. The difference between the Actual Price paid and the Predicted But-For Price is the "individual overcharge" for that transaction.[100] [*683] That Dr. Rausser's model, like all predictive models, includes a measure of prediction error does not necessarily invalidate the model. The Court will not exclude his individual damages calculation on this ground.

Use of Medians

Defendants also challenge Dr. Rausser's use of median overcharges instead of individualized overcharge estimates in the final stage of each calculation. They argue that this method leads to "false positives" and does not provide a reliable basis for the trier of fact to assess individual damages.

The Court begins by summarizing Dr. Rausser's method. First, Dr. Rausser calculates "individual" overcharges for each transaction, as described above. Then, to ameliorate the effects of prediction error, [64] Dr. Rausser takes the median overcharge for each product in a month and assigns that overcharge to all customers who purchased that product that month. He argues that this approach is "necessary given random prediction error," and that using medians "decreases individual overcharges that are too high (due to prediction error)" and "increas[es] individual overcharges that are too low or negative (due to prediction error)."[101]

If DPPs can establish an antitrust violation and antitrust injury, they will enjoy a "relaxed burden" with respect to the amount of damages. Pierce, 753 F.2d at 435. As the Fifth Circuit has explained, "[O]nce the causation hurdle has been overcome, the expert on damages need not be armed on the right hand with a slide rule, on the left hand with a computer. He is allowed some economic imagination so long as it does not become fantasy." Terrell v. Household Goods Carriers' Bureau, 494 F.2d 16, 25 (5th Cir. 1974). Thus, while "antitrust damages may not be determined by guesswork or speculation," plaintiffs need provide only a sufficient basis a factfinder to make a "just and reasonable estimate of the damage based on relevant data." El Aguila, 131 F. App'x at 453.

Defendants have not established that Dr. Rausser's model fails to provide a basis for the factfinder to make a "just and reasonable estimate" [65] of the damages for each plaintiff. DPPs' theory of the case is that class members were overcharged fairly uniformly across product lines and geographic regions. If DPPs persuade the factfinder that their theory of the case is correct, then, theoretically, a damages formula simply applying the estimated average overcharge to each plaintiff's purchases would be sufficient to provide a reasonable estimate of individual damages. See Greenhaw v. Lubbock Cty. Beverage Ass'n, 721 F.2d 1019, 1029 (5th Cir. 1983), overruled in part on other grounds by Int'l Woodworkers of Am., AFL-CIO & its Local No. 5-376 v. Champion Int'l Corp., 790 F.2d 1174 (5th Cir. 1986) (approving the application of an average overcharge figure, rather than an overcharge figure tailored by purchase location, to calculate damages for individual purchasers when it would have been impossible to determine how purchasers' shopping patterns would have differed in a competitive market). Here, Dr. Rausser has presented a model even more refined than one simply applying the average overcharge to all purchases. His individual damages model goes one step further, providing an overcharge estimate specific to the product purchased and the month of purchase.

Defendants argue that In re Rail Freight Fuel Surcharge Antitrust Litigation, 725 F.3d 244, 406 U.S. App. D.C. 371 (D.C. Cir. 2013), requires the Court to reject Dr. Rausser's model. In Rail Freight, the D.C. [66] Circuit reversed the district court's class certification order, [*684] partly on the ground that the district court had failed to take a "hard look" at the soundness of the plaintiffs' proposed damages model. Id. at 255. In particular, the court noted that the plaintiffs' proposed damages methodology "detect[ed] injury where none could exist." Id. at 252. In that case, however, the court could identify a segment of class members who categorically could not have suffered an overcharge: a group of shippers subject to legacy contracts and therefore "bound by rates negotiated before any conspiratorial behavior was alleged to have occurred." Id. No such group of categorically undamaged plaintiffs exists here. Rather, defendants point to the negative overcharge estimates that Dr. Rausser's model generates for some transactions (before he corrects for prediction error) as evidence that some class members "ha[d] no 'damages' at all."[102] Defendants misunderstand the purpose of Dr. Rausser's individual damages model. It does not purport to provide a precise calculation of the exact dollar amount each plaintiff was overcharged; it seeks to provide a reasonable estimate of each plaintiffs' likely overcharge.

To that end, [67] Dr. Rausser has determined that using medians to control for prediction error results in more reasonable estimates. And defendants have not provided any reason to refute that using a median is an appropriate econometric method to mitigate prediction error when generating an estimate. Moreover, an estimate is precisely what antitrust law permits plaintiffs to present, once they have cleared the evidentiary hurdles of establishing a violation and antitrust injury. For these reasons, the Court will not exclude Dr. Rausser's proposed "formula . . . to calculate individual damages." Bell Atlantic, 339 F.3d at 307.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court GRANTS IN PART and DENIES IN PART defendants' motion to exclude the testimony of Dr. Rausser. The Court excludes Dr. Rausser's opinion about (1) spatial integration, including his cointegration test; and (2) aggregate causation to demonstrate the effect of the alleged vertical conspiracies.

HN3[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The court of appeals reviews a dismissal under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) de novo. For the purposes of review, it accepts as true all well-pled facts alleged in the complaint and draws all reasonable inferences in the plaintiffs' favor. A motion for judgment on the pleadings under Rule 12(c) is treated much like a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, with the court viewing the facts contained in the pleadings in the light most favorable to the nonmovant and drawing all reasonable inferences therefrom.

HN4[] Sherman Act, Claims

To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. The pleadings need not contain detailed factual allegations but must provide more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of the cause of action will not do. Although the pleading standards articulated in Twombly are now ubiquitous in the legal world, it is important to note that Twombly addressed the specific question of what a plaintiff must plead in order to state a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act,, and the U.S. Court of Appeals for the First Circuit has cautioned against converting Twombly's mandates into a requirement that antitrust plaintiffs provide evidentiary support or set forth other "plus factors" to demonstrate the plausibility of their Sherman Act claims.

HN5[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In Actavis, it was alleged that the reverse payments involved side deals in which the generic manufacturers agreed to promote the brand name drug at issue in exchange for multi-million dollar payments from the brand manufacturer. This fact alone demonstrates that the U.S. Supreme Court recognized that a disguised above-market deal, in which a brand manufacturer effectively overpays a generic manufacturer for services rendered, may qualify as a reverse payment subject to antitrust scrutiny and militates against limiting the Supreme Court's decision to pure cash payments.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope

HN6[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Antitrust scrutiny attaches not only to pure cash reverse payments, but to other forms of reverse payment that induce the generic to abandon a patent challenge, which unreasonably eliminates competition at the expense of consumers. Moreover, this approach is consistent with antitrust law, which has consistently prioritized substance over form. The Sherman Act is aimed at substance rather than form. The antitrust inquiry as "a functional one."

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope

HN7[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

True, Actavis does contain references to money. But the key word used throughout the opinion is "payment," which connotes a much broader category of consideration than cash alone. Black's Law Dictionary (10th ed. 2014) (defining "payment" as the "performance of an obligation by the delivery of money or some other valuable thing accepted in partial or full discharge of the obligation" and "the money or other valuable thing so delivered in satisfaction of an obligation"). As the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit has observed, the thrust of the U.S. Supreme Court's reasoning is not that it is problematic that money is used to effect an end to a patent challenge, but rather that the patentee leverages some part of its patent power to cause anticompetitive harm--namely, elimination of the risk of competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope

HN8[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The U.S. Supreme Court's Actavis decision should reach non-monetary reverse payments.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope

HN9[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The language of Actavis emphasizes that the value of a reverse payment is a key component in determining whether it is unlawful. In discussing how to apply the rule of reason analysis to reverse payments, the U.S. Supreme Court explained, "the likelihood of a reverse payment bringing about anticompetitive effects depends upon its size, its scale in relation to the payor's anticipated future litigation costs, its independence from other services for which it might represent payment, and the lack of any other convincing justification." Such language emphasizes that the size of the reverse payment, particularly as it relates to potential litigation expenses, is central to the antitrust query and requires that the reviewing court or factfinder assess the value of the payment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN10[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The five considerations set forth by the U.S. Supreme Court require that the court or factfinder measure the payment's size. The Supreme Court stated that a reverse payment may be justified where it "reflects traditional settlement considerations, such as avoided litigation costs or fair value for services." And, for the market power inquiry, the Court explained that "the size of the payment from a branded drug manufacturer to a prospective generic is itself a strong indicator of power." Again, both statements assume that the value of the reverse payment is ascertainable. There is some dispute as to how the five considerations should factor into antitrust litigation going forward. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the First Circuit agrees with the view that the five considerations should not overhaul the rule of reason, nor should they create a new five-part framework in antitrust cases.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN11[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

There is overlap between the five considerations (set out by the U.S. Supreme Court in Actavis) and the preexisting elements of the rule of reason. For example, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the First Circuit's rule of reason analysis queries, among other things, whether the agreement involved the exercise of power in a relevant economic market. In that same vein, Actavis explains how to evaluate the market power question: "the size of the payment from a branded drug manufacturer to a prospective generic is itself a strong indicator of power." Similarly, the First Circuit rule of reason includes as an element the anticompetitive consequences of the alleged agreement, and the first of the five considerations articulated by the Supreme Court explains that a reverse payment may have significant anticompetitive effects where it "amounts to a purchase by the patentee of the exclusive right to sell its product."

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act

HN12[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Antitrust litigation often requires an elaborate inquiry into the reasonableness of a challenged business practice and, as a result, is extensive and complex. In other words, antitrust litigation already requires courts to make intricate and complex judgments about market practices.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN13[] Sherman Act, Claims

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the First Circuit agrees with those courts that, rather than rejecting wholesale Actavis's applicability to non-cash payments, have required that the plaintiffs plead information sufficient "to estimate the value of the term, at least to the extent of determining whether it is "large" and "unjustified." Consistent with Twombly, which declined to require heightened fact pleading of specifics, the First Circuit does not require that the plaintiffs provide precise figures and calculations at the pleading stage. Requiring such a high burden would impose a nearly insurmountable bar for plaintiffs at the pleading stage because very precise and particularized estimates of fair value and anticipated litigation costs may require evidence in the exclusive possession of the defendants, as well as expert analysis. Nevertheless, the plaintiffs must allege facts sufficient to support the legal conclusion that the settlement at issue involves a large and unjustified reverse payment under Actavis.

[*541] TORRUELLA, Circuit Judge. This appeal [4] arises from several pharmaceutical antitrust actions that were consolidated and transferred to the United States District Court for the District of Rhode Island by the United States Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation.

Defendant Warner Chilcott ("Warner") is a brand-name drug manufacturer that owns the patent covering the oral contraceptive Loestrin 24 Fe ("Loestrin 24"). After defendant Watson Pharmaceuticals, Inc. ("Watson") notified Warner that it would seek to introduce a generic version of Loestrin 24, Warner sued Watson for patent infringement. The parties settled on conditions that Watson delay entry of its generic version of Loestrin 24 and, in exchange, Watson entered into favorable promotional deals with Warner and received promises that Warner would not introduce its own generic version of Loestrin 24, among other things. Shortly thereafter, defendant Lupin Pharmaceuticals, Inc. ("Lupin") announced that it would introduce a generic version of Loestrin 24. Warner brought a patent infringement suit against Lupin. Again, the parties settled on terms that Lupin wait to introduce its generic Loestrin 24 in exchange for attorneys' [*542] fees and Warner's agreement to enter into [5] favorable side deals with Lupin.

Two putative classes of plaintiffs -- the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs ("DPPs"), a group comprised of corporate entities that purchased Loestrin 24 directly from Warner, and End Payor Plaintiffs ("EPPs"), which consist of health and welfare benefit plans that have indirectly purchased, paid for, and provided reimbursement for their members' purchase of Loestrin 24, and individuals who purchased or paid for some or all of the purchase price of Loestrin 24 -- subsequently brought antitrust claims that the settlement agreements were violations of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1.[1] They contend that these agreements constitute illegal restraints on trade under FTC v. Actavis, __ U.S. __, 133 S. Ct. 2223, 186 L. Ed. 2d 343 (2013), which subjected certain patent settlement agreements between generic drug and brand-name drug manufacturers to antitrust scrutiny where they involve "reverse payments." As described in more detail herein, a reverse payment typically arises where a brand-name drug manufacturer pays the generic manufacturer to delay entry of its generic equivalent, thereby protecting the brand's market from generic competition.

Specifically, this antitrust case queries whether, following Actavis, such settlement agreements are subject to federal antitrust scrutiny where they do not involve reverse payments in pure cash form. The district court found that Actavis only applied to monetary reverse payments and dismissed on the basis that the EPPs and DPPs had alleged the existence of non-cash reverse payments only. Because we disagree with the district court's limited reading of Actavis, we vacate and remand. We begin with the relevant statutory and legal background, which provides the framework for understanding the facts in this appeal.

I. Regulatory Background

[1] Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides:

> HN1[] Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, [6] in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make any contract or engage in any combination or conspiracy hereby declared to be illegal shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $100,000,000 if a corporation, or, if any person, $1,000,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding 10 years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

15 U.S.C. § 1.

The Drug Price Competition and Patent Term Restoration Act of [7] 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-417, 98 Stat. 1585, commonly known as the Hatch-Waxman Act, stipulates the process by which pharmaceutical firms may gain approval from the Food and Drug Administration ("FDA") to bring medications to the public marketplace. The Supreme Court in Actavis identified "four key features of the relevant drug-regulatory framework" under the Hatch-Waxman Act. 133 S. Ct. 2223, 2227-29, 186 L. Ed. 2d 343.

First, to market a new prescription drug, a brand-name drug manufacturer must submit a New Drug Application ("NDA") to the FDA and undergo a laborious and expensive approval process. 21 U.S.C. § 355(b)(1); see Actavis, 133 S. Ct. at 2228. Among other things, the NDA must include "the patent number and the expiration date of any patent which claims the drug . . . or which claims a method of using such drug." 21 U.S.C. § 355(b)(1). Upon receiving FDA approval, the brand manufacturer must publish a description of any patents associated with that drug in the Approved Drug Products with Therapeutic Equivalence Evaluations, commonly known as the Orange Book. See Caraco Pharm. Labs., Ltd. V. Novo Nordisk A/S, [*543] U.S. , 132 S. Ct. 1670, 1676, 182 L. Ed. 2d 678 (2012).

Second, the Hatch-Waxman Act promotes the availability of cheaper generic alternatives by allowing generic drug manufacturers to bypass certain aspects of the NDA process. Instead of filing an NDA, a generic manufacturer may file a less cumbersome Abbreviated New Drug Application [8] ("ANDA") "specifying that the generic has the 'same active ingredients as,' and is 'biologically equivalent' to, the already-approved brand-name drug." Actavis, 133 S. Ct. at 2228 (quoting Caraco Pharm. Labs., Ltd., 132 S. Ct. at 1676); 21 U.S.C. § 355(j)(2). But, "[b]ecause the FDA cannot authorize a generic drug that would infringe a patent, the timing of an ANDA's approval depends on the scope and duration of the patents covering the brand-name drug." Caraco Pharm. Labs., Ltd., 132 S. Ct. at 1676.

Third, the Hatch-Waxman Act establishes procedures for resolving patent disputes between brand and generic drug manufacturers. 21 U.S.C. § 355(j)(2)(A)(vii); Actavis, 133 S. Ct. at 2228. When seeking FDA approval, the generic manufacturer must certify that it will not infringe the brand manufacturer's patents. 21 U.S.C. § 355(j)(2)(A)(vii); Actavis, 133 S. Ct. at 2228. It can make this certification in one of four ways:

> It can certify that the brand-name manufacturer has not listed any relevant patents. It can certify that any relevant patents have expired. It can request approval to market beginning when any still-in-force patents expire. Or, it can certify that any listed, relevant patent "is invalid or will not be infringed by the manufacture, use, or sale" of the drug described in the [ANDA].

Actavis, 133 S. Ct. at 2228 (quoting 21 U.S.C. § 355(j)(2)(A) (vii)(IV)).

The fourth alternative, also known as the Paragraph IV route, "counts as patent infringement and often 'means provoking litigation'" by [9] the brand manufacturer. Id. (citation omitted) (quoting Caraco Pharm. Labs., Ltd., 132 S. Ct. at 1677). Should the brand manufacturer bring a patent suit within forty-five days of the generic manufacturer making a Paragraph IV certification, the FDA may not approve the generic manufacturer's ANDA for a thirty-month period. 21 U.S.C. § 355(j)(5)(B)(iii); Actavis, 133 S. Ct. at 2228. Paragraph IV litigation between generic and brand-name drug manufacturers is particularly relevant here as it has led to the settlement arrangements identified in Actavis.

Fourth, the Hatch-Waxman Act provides incentives for the first generic manufacturer to file an ANDA through the Paragraph IV route: the generic will receive a 180-day period of exclusivity during which "no other generic can compete with the brand-name drug." Actavis, 133 S. Ct. at 2229; 21 U.S.C. § 355(j)(5)(B)(iv). This exclusivity period is potentially worth hundreds of millions of dollars to the first-filing generic manufacturer. See Actavis, 133 S. Ct. at 2229.[2] That said, the generic manufacturer may still face competition from a generic version of the drug produced by the brand manufacturer, also known as an authorized generic ("AG"), at any time, including during the exclusivity period. See Teva Pharm. Indus. Ltd. v. Crawford, 410 F.3d 51, 54-55, 366 U.S. App. D.C. 203 (D.C. Cir. 2005) (citing 21 U.S.C. § 355(j)(5)(B)(iv)).

II. Actavis

We turn to [10] Actavis, where the Supreme Court analyzed settlement agreements [*544] arising from Paragraph IV litigation with terms requiring "(1) Company B, the claimed infringer, not to produce the patented product until the patent's term expires, and (2) Company A, the patentee, to pay B many millions of dollars." Actavis, 133 S. Ct. at 2227. These types of settlements led to concerns that a brand manufacturer may be paying the generic manufacturer to abandon its patent challenge, thereby insulating the brand's market from competition and preventing consumers from accessing a more affordable generic version of the brand-name drug. The Court described this arrangement as a "reverse payment," explaining that "the basic question here is whether such an agreement can sometimes unreasonably diminish competition in violation of the antitrust laws." Id.

The Supreme Court answered in the affirmative. It rejected the argument that a settlement involving reverse payments is immune from antitrust scrutiny so long as any "anticompetitive effects [of the settlement] fall within the scope of the exclusionary potential of the patent," otherwise known as the "scope of the patent" test. Id. at 2230 (quoting FTC v. Watson Pharms., Inc., 677 F.3d 1298, 1312 (11th Cir. 2012)).[3] The Court reasoned that Paragraph IV litigation [11] does not begin with the baseline assumption that a patent is valid because "[t]he paragraph IV litigation . . . put[s] the patent's validity at issue, as well as its actual preclusive scope." Id. at 2231.

The Supreme Court acknowledged the "general legal policy" in favor of settlements,[4] but determined that "five sets of considerations" weighed in favor of subjecting reverse payment settlements to antitrust scrutiny. Id. at 2234-37. Specifically, the Court explained:

> [1] [A] reverse payment, where large and unjustified, can bring with it the risk of significant anticompetitive effects; [2] one who makes such a payment may be unable to explain and to justify it; [3] such a firm or individual may well possess market power derived from the patent; [4] a court, by examining the size of the payment, may well be able to assess its likely anticompetitive effects along with its potential justifications without litigating the validity of the patent; and [5] [12] parties may well find ways to settle patent disputes without the use of reverse payments.

Id. at 2237. While the Supreme Court declined to adopt the Federal Trade Commission's ("FTC") suggestion that reverse payments be considered "presumptively unlawful," it determined that the potential anticompetitive effects of a reverse payment are subject to the rule of reason test. The "rule of reason" is a means of evaluating a restraint on trade and determining "whether under all the circumstances of [*545] the case the restrictive practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition." Arizona v. Maricopa Cty. Med. Soc'y, 457 U.S. 332, 343-44, 102 S. Ct. 2466, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48 (1982). To satisfy the rule of reason test, the plaintiff must demonstrate "that the alleged agreement involved the exercise of power in a relevant economic market, that this exercise had anti-competitive consequences, and that those detriments outweighed efficiencies or other economic benefits." Stop & Shop

[3] Before Actavis was decided, the circuits were split between the "scope of the patent test," see In re Ciprofloxacin Hydrochloride Antitrust Litig., 544 F.3d 1323, 1332-36 (Fed. Cir. 2008), abrogated by Actavis, 133 S. Ct. 2223, 186 L. Ed. 2d 343; In re Tamoxifen Citrate Antitrust Litig., 466 F.3d 187, 212-13 (2d Cir. 2006), abrogated by Actavis, 133 S. Ct. 2223, 186 L. Ed. 2d 343, and the "quick look" test, under which reverse payments were considered "prima facie evidence of an unreasonable restraint on trade," In re K-Dur Antitrust Litig., 686 F.3d 197, 218 (3d Cir. 2012), vacated, Upsher Smith Labs., Inc. v. La. Wholesale Drug Co., Inc., 133 S. Ct. 2849, 186 L. Ed. 2d 904 (2013).

[4] The Court noted that it did not intend to disturb commonplace settlement forms. Whereas in a traditional settlement "a party with a claim (or counterclaim) for damages receives a sum equal to or less than the value of its claim," in a reverse payment settlement, "a party with no claim for damages (something that is usually true [13] of a paragraph IV litigation defendant) walks away with money simply so it will stay away from the patentee's market." Actavis, 133 S. Ct. at 2233.

Nevertheless, the Supreme Court acknowledged that Actavis left many questions unanswered as to how these cases would be litigated and "le[ft] to the lower courts the structuring of the present rule-of-reason antitrust litigation." Actavis, 133 S. Ct. at 2238.

III. Facts

HN2[] "In reviewing the grant of a motion to dismiss, we recount the facts as alleged in the operative complaint[s]." Ruivo v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 766 F.3d 87, 88 (1st Cir. 2014). This appeal involves two operative complaints that allege substantially the same facts, filed by the EPPs and DPPs, respectively.

Loestrin 24 contains the active ingredients norethindrone acetate and ethinyl estradiol, both of which the FDA has approved as oral contraceptives since the 1970s. Previous versions of Loestrin, including Loestrin 21 and Loestrin 1/20, contain twenty-one tablets taken on a daily basis. The patient would then take a week of placebo pills or skip tablets for a week, depending on the version of Loestrin.

Studies conducted in the 1990s examined whether taking Loestrin tablets for a longer duration than the twenty-one day period decreased the incidence of intermenstrual bleeding, or "spotting," a common side-effect [14] of oral contraceptives. The studies yielded inconsistent results as to whether taking Loestrin tablets for longer periods actually reduced intermenstrual bleeding. Nevertheless, U.S. Patent No. 5,552,394 (the "'394 Patent"), entitled "Low Dose Oral Contraceptives with Less Breakthrough Bleeding and Sustained Efficacy," was granted for "a method of female contraception characterized by a reduced incidence of breakthrough bleeding by administering a combination of estrogen and progestin for 23-25 consecutive days of a 28 day cycle."

Defendant Warner[5] currently owns the '394 Patent and, on April 15, 2005, submitted an NDA for approval to market the dosing regimen later known as Loestrin 24. On February 17, 2006, the FDA approved Loestrin 24 and the '394 Patent was listed in the Orange Book as covering Loestrin 24. As suggested by the '394 Patent, Loestrin 24 purports to reduce the incidence of intermenstrual bleeding by having the patient take the pills for twenty-four, as opposed to twenty-one, consecutive days.

A. Watson Litigation and Settlement

Only several months after the FDA approved Loestrin 24, on June 19, 2006, defendant Watson sent Warner a notice letter that it had filed an ANDA to market a generic of Loestrin 24. The notice letter contained a Paragraph IV certification that the commercial manufacture, use, or sale of Watson's generic Loestrin 24 would not [*546] infringe any valid claim of the '394 Patent. Predictably, Warner filed suit against Watson, alleging that Watson's generic product would infringe the '394 Patent.[6] By doing so, Warner triggered the thirty-month stay of FDA approval of Watson's ANDA for generic Loestrin 24. The stay was scheduled to expire in January 2009.

In January 2009, just before the expiration of the stay, Watson and Warner entered into a stipulation of dismissal and Exclusion Payment Agreement. Under [16] the agreement, Watson agreed that it would delay selling its [5] Actavis acquired Warner in October 2013. In addition, Watson acquired Actavis in October 2012. Press Release, Watson Completes Actavis Acquisition, Allergan (Oct. 31, 2012). To avoid confusion with the Supreme Court case of the same name, we refer [15] to the defendants as Warner and Watson, respectively.

[6] In response, Watson challenged the validity and enforceability of the '394 Patent based, in part, on the inconsistent studies regarding Loestrin 24's ineffectiveness in combatting intermenstrual bleeding. Those arguments need not be repeated here, as "it is normally not necessary to litigate patent validity to answer the antitrust question." Actavis, 133 S. Ct. at 2236.

Loestrin 24 generic until the earliest of the following: (i) January 22, 2014; (ii) 180 days before Warner gave a third party the right to market a Loestrin 24 generic in the United States; (iii) the date another version of a Loestrin 24 generic entered the market; or (iv) the date on which a third party obtained a final, non-appealable judicial order that the '394 patent is invalid, unenforceable, or not infringed by the third party's generic Loestrin 24. In exchange, Warner agreed to several provisions:

(1) Warner agreed not to market, supply, or license an AG version of Loestrin 24 during Watson's first 180 days of marketing, otherwise known as a "no-AG agreement."

(2) Warner granted Watson a "non-exclusive, fully paid, worldwide, royalty-free irrevocable license" to market Loestrin 24 as of January 22, 2014.

(3) Warner would pay Watson annual fees and a percentage of net sales in connection with Watson's co-promotion of Femring, a Warner hormone therapy product, beginning in 2009.

(4) Warner gave Watson the exclusive right to earn brand sales of a Warner oral contraceptive in late-stage development at the time of the agreement, now [17] known as Generess Fe.

(5) Warner would not grant a license to any other manufacturer to produce a generic version of Loestrin 24 until at least 180 days after Watson entered the market.[7]

(6) Warner agreed to permit Watson to enter the market before January 22, 2014, should another manufacturer enter the market with a generic Loestrin 24 before Watson. This "acceleration clause" allegedly was intended to deter other generic manufacturers from entering the marketplace before Watson.[8]

B. Lupin Litigation and Settlement

Six months after the announcement of Warner and Watson's agreement, on July 30, 2009, defendant Lupin[9] notified Warner that it had filed an ANDA to market a generic version of Loestrin 24. The notice letter contained a Paragraph IV certification. As expected, in September 2009, Warner sued Lupin, alleging infringement [*547] of the '394 Patent. Again, by virtue of Warner's [18] filing suit within forty-five days, the FDA was prevented from approving the Lupin ANDA for thirty months.

Before the close of discovery, in October 2010, Warner entered into a non-competition agreement with Lupin and dismissed the suit. Under the agreement, Lupin forfeited its challenge to the '394 Patent and agreed to delay entry of its generic Loestrin 24 until July 22, 2014, the month that the '394 Patent was set to expire and six months after Watson was scheduled to enter the market with its Loestrin 24 generic. In exchange, Warner agreed to the following provisions:

(1) Warner granted Lupin a non-exclusive license as to Femcon Fe, another Warner branded oral contraceptive, which allowed Lupin to market an AG of Femcon Fe in the United States the earlier of (i) 180 days after Teva Pharmaceutical Industries, Ltd. (the Femcon Fe first filer) entered the market with its Femcon Fe generic, or (ii) January 1, 2013.

(2) Warner gave Lupin the right to purchase and sell in the United States a generic version of Asacol 400mg, a branded medication for inflammatory bowel disease, to be supplied by Warner, if a generic Asacol 400mg was launched by another manufacturer [19] in the United States.

(3) Warner paid Lupin an undisclosed amount toward attorney's fees.[10]

[7] Watson had otherwise forfeited its entitlement to a 180-day exclusivity period under the Hatch-Waxman Act because it had not obtained tentative FDA approval to market its generic Loestrin 24 within thirty months of submitting its ANDA.

[10] The DPPs also allege that, six months after the announcement of the Warner-Lupin agreement, in April 2011, Mylan Pharmaceuticals ("Mylan") sent Warner a notice containing a Paragraph IV certification announcing that it had filed an ANDA to market a generic Loestrin 24. In June 2011, Warner sued Mylan for infringement of the '394 Patent. In July 2013, before a bench trial was scheduled to begin, Warner entered a settlement and license agreement with Mylan and the case was dismissed.

IV. Procedural Background

In their complaint, the DPPs allege that Warner and Watson agreed to keep Watson's generic Loestrin 24 off of the market until January 22, 2014, in exchange for payments that Warner made to Watson when, absent the agreement, Watson could have introduced a generic Loestrin 24 as [20] early as 2009. The DPPs contend that this anticompetitive conduct insulated Loestrin 24 from generic competition, which would typically be priced far below the brand and eventually lead to reduced brand prices. In this way, Warner and Watson's conduct allegedly caused antitrust harm by subjecting the DPPs to artificially inflated prices.

The EPPs allege violations of § 1 of the Sherman Act as to both the Warner-Watson and Warner-Lupin agreements. They contend that the agreements required that Warner make payments to Watson and Lupin in exchange for Watson's and Lupin's promise not to market their versions of generic Loestrin 24 until January 22, 2014, and July 22, 2014, respectively. In addition, the EPPs bring state claims for unjust enrichment and allege that the Warner-Watson and Warner-Lupin agreements constituted unlawful restraints of trade in violation of various state antitrust laws.

The defendants filed two motions to dismiss, one as to the DPP complaint and the other as to the EPP complaint, under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) and 12(c). The defendants contended that Actavis [*548] was limited to reverse payments in cash. Nevertheless, they argued that the district court need not reach this question, as neither the DPPs [21] nor the EPPs had plausibly pled the existence of a large and unjustified reverse payment under the pleading standards announced in Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007), and Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). The defendants also asserted that the DPPs and EPPs had failed to allege monopoly power in a defined antitrust market as required under the rule of reason test and that their actions were barred on statute of limitations grounds.[11]

The district court granted the motions to dismiss in a single opinion and order on the basis that Actavis was limited to reverse payments in pure cash form. In re Loestrin 24 Fe Antitrust Litig., 45 F. Supp. 3d 180 (D.R.I. 2014) [In re Loestrin]. Scouring the language of Actavis, the district court noted that "[t]he discussion of patent settlements in Actavis fixates on the one form of consideration that was at issue in that case: cash." Id. at 189. The district court also took into account the five considerations contemplated by the Supreme Court in its determination that subjecting reverse payments to antitrust scrutiny outweighed the benefits of settlement. In the district court's view, these considerations "guide the inquiry as to whether [22] a settlement payment satisfies the rule of reason," and "require[], on the part of the plaintiff, and ultimately the reviewing court (or the jury), an ability to assess or calculate the true value of the payment made by the patentee to the generic competitor." Id. at 190. Whereas a court can measure the value of a cash settlement, "a non-cash settlement, particularly one that is multifaceted and complex . . . , is almost impossible to measure against these five factors." Id. at 191. In addition, the district court noted that "a cautious approach" was warranted as "Actavis marked a dramatic departure from the approach of the courts of appeal, and an important shift in the common law." Id. at 192.

Nevertheless, the district court candidly conceded that it had significant reservations about its holding: if antitrust scrutiny is limited to reverse payments in cash, "non-cash pay for delay arrangements are likely to evade Sherman Act scrutiny so long as pharmaceutical companies take the obvious cue to structure their settlements in ways that avoid cash payments." Id. at 193. The district court noted that "the Plaintiffs have asserted, in two robust complaints, facts demonstrating illegal contracts or combinations in restraint [23] of trade undertaken by the Defendants." Id. However, because the district court dismissed the case on the basis that the reverse payments

Under the agreement, Mylan agreed to drop its challenge to the '394 Patent and delay entry of its generic Loestrin 24 until July 22, 2014, again, the month that the '394 Patent was scheduled to expire. The DPPs do not detail the specific provisions of the agreement, nor do they allege that the Mylan agreement gives rise to independent antitrust claims.

[11] In addition, the defendants provided independent grounds for dismissing the state antitrust and unjust enrichment claims, none of which are relevant here.

were not in cash form, it did not address the subsequent question of whether the individual provisions of the settlement agreements -- including the no-AG agreement, the acceleration clause, and the various side deals -- would have been adequately alleged as unlawful reverse payments were Actavis to extend to non-cash payments.

The district court entered final judgment as to the DPPs' claim under Rule 58 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, noting that their case was "immediately appealable" as their complaint has been dismissed in its entirety. The district court entered final judgment as to the EPPs' federal antitrust claims under Rule 54(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and stayed their remaining claims. The DPPs and EPPs timely appealed the [*549] district court's decision, and the parties now dispute whether the district court erred in determining that Actavis was limited to cash and, if so, whether the plaintiffs plausibly alleged that the no-AG agreements, acceleration clause, and side deals constituted unlawful reverse payments.

V. Analysis

A. Standard of Review

HN3[] We review a dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6) de novo. Ocasio-Hernandez v. Fortuño-Burset, 640 F.3d 1, 7 (1st Cir. 2011). "For the purposes of our review, [24] we accept as true all well-pled facts alleged in the complaint and draw all reasonable inferences in [the plaintiffs'] favor." Evergreen Partnering Grp., Inc. v. Pactiv Corp., 720 F.3d 33, 36 (1st Cir. 2013). "A motion for judgment on the pleadings [under Rule 12(c)] is treated much like a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss," with the court viewing "the facts contained in the pleadings in the light most favorable to the nonmovant and draw[ing] all reasonable inferences therefrom." Perez-Acevedo v. Rivero-Cubano, 520 F.3d 26, 29 (1st Cir. 2008) (quoting R.G. Fin. Corp. v. Vergara-Nunez, 446 F.3d 178, 182 (1st Cir. 2006)).

HN4[] "To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678 (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570). The pleadings need not contain "detailed factual allegations" but must provide "more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of the cause of action will not do." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555. Although the pleading standards articulated in Twombly are now ubiquitous in the legal world, it is important to note that Twombly addressed the specific question of "what a plaintiff must plead in order to state a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act," id. at 554-55, and this court has cautioned against converting Twombly's mandates into a requirement that antitrust plaintiffs provide evidentiary support or set forth other "plus factors" to demonstrate the plausibility [25] of their Sherman Act claims, Evergreen Partnering Grp., 720 F.3d at 46-47.

B. Actavis and Non-Cash Payments

As the district court addressed only the question of whether Actavis reached non-cash reverse payments, today we choose to limit ourselves to that query as well. For the reasons discussed herein, we conclude that the district court erred in determining that non-monetary reverse payments do not fall under Actavis's scope.

The district court reasoned that the reverse payments alleged in Actavis involved only cash payments, but that is not so: HN5[] in Actavis, it was alleged that the reverse payments involved side deals in which the generic manufacturers agreed to promote the brand name drug at issue in exchange for multi-million dollar payments from the brand manufacturer. 133 S. Ct. at 2229; Watson Pharms., Inc., 677 F.3d at 1305 (describing the terms of the settlement agreements). This fact alone demonstrates that the Supreme Court recognized that a disguised above-market deal, in which a brand manufacturer effectively overpays a generic manufacturer for services rendered, may qualify as a reverse payment subject to antitrust scrutiny and militates against limiting the Supreme Court's decision to pure cash payments.

The district court also analyzed the language of Actavis, noting that [26] the Supreme Court was "fixated" on cash. But the district court overstates its case. Indeed, the Court in Actavis explained that, "in substance, the plaintiff agreed to pay the [*550] defendants many millions of dollars to stay out of its market." 133 S. Ct. at 2231 (emphasis added). This language acknowledges that HN6[] antitrust scrutiny attaches not only to pure cash reverse payments, but to other forms of reverse payment that induce the generic to abandon a patent challenge, which unreasonably eliminates competition at the expense of consumers. Moreover, this approach is consistent with antitrust law, which has consistently prioritized substance over form. See, e.g., Am. Needle, Inc. v. Nat'l Football League, 560 U.S. 183, 191-92, 130 S. Ct. 2201, 176 L. Ed. 2d 947 (2010) ("'[W]e seek the central substance of the situation' and therefore 'we are moved by the identity of the persons who act, rather than the label of their hats.'" (quoting United States v. Sealy, Inc., 388 U.S. 350, 353, 87 S. Ct. 1847, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1238 (1967)); Copperweld Corp. v. Indep. Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 760, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984) ("[The Sherman Act] is aimed at substance rather than form."); Podiatrist Ass'n v. La Cruz Azul de P.R., Inc., 332 F.3d 6, 14 (1st Cir. 2003) (describing the antitrust inquiry as "a functional one"). As the district court itself acknowledged, a narrow construction of Actavis will give drug manufacturers carte blanche to negotiate anticompetitive settlements so long as they involve non-cash reverse payments:

> Many observers welcomed Actavis as a necessary step [27] in confronting the scourge of pay for delay agreements that they contend benefit the pharmaceutical industry at the expense of consumers. But, ultimately, Actavis can only serve as the solution to anticompetitive pay for delay arrangements insofar as it encompasses both cash and these increasingly prevalent non-cash settlements. Of course, it is of relatively little import whether a payment for delay is made in the form of cash or some other form of consideration.

In re Loestrin, 45 F. Supp. 3d at 194 (footnote and citation omitted).

HN7[] True, Actavis does contain references to money. See Actavis, 133 S. Ct. at 2233 (describing reverse payment settlements as an arrangement "in which A, the plaintiff, pays money to defendant B purely so B will give up the patent fight"); id. (explaining that, in reverse payment settlements, a party "walks away with money simply so it will stay away from the patentee's market"). But the key word used throughout the opinion is "payment," which connotes a much broader category of consideration than cash alone. Black's Law Dictionary (10th ed. 2014) (defining "payment" as the "performance of an obligation by the delivery of money or some other valuable thing accepted in partial or full discharge of the obligation" and "the [28] money or other valuable thing so delivered in satisfaction of an obligation" (emphases added)). As the Third Circuit observed, > [t]he thrust of the Court's reasoning is not that it is problematic that money is used to effect an end to a patent challenge, but rather that the patentee leverages some part of its patent power . . . to cause anticompetitive harm -- namely, elimination of the risk of competition.

King Drug Co. of Florence, Inc. v. Smithkline Beecham Corp., 791 F.3d 388, 406 (3d Cir. 2015); see also id. at 409 (holding, post-Actavis, that a no-AG agreement "is subject to antitrust scrutiny under the rule of reason").

Nor are we the first court to determine that HN8[] Actavis should reach non-monetary reverse payments. Of the many district courts and the single court of appeals to have addressed this question, the overwhelming majority have declined to limit Actavis to cash payments. See King Drug Co. of Florence, Inc., 791 F.3d at 403 ("We do not believe Actavis's holding can be limited to reverse payments of cash."); In [*551] *re Actos End Payor Antitrust Litig., No. 13-cv-9244(RA), 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 127748, 2015 WL 5610752, at 13 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 22, 2015) ("This Court shares the majority view that Actavis's holding is not limited to payments made in cash."); In re Aggrenox Antitrust Litig., 94 F. Supp. 3d 224, 243 (D. Conn. 2015) ("A settlement agreement may be very simple or tremendously complex, and it may involve all manner of consideration; and if, when viewed holistically, it effects [29] a large and unexplained net transfer of value from the patent-holder to the alleged patent-infringer, it may fairly be called a reverse-payment settlement."); United Food & Commercial Workers v. Teikoku Pharma USA, 74 F. Supp. 3d 1052, 1069-70 (N.D. Cal. 2014) (rejecting theory that Actavis only applies to cash reverse payments as "[t]here are many plausible methods by which plaintiffs may calculate the value of non-monetary terms"); *In re Effexor XR Antitrust Litig., No. 11-5479(PGS)(LHG), 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 142206, 2014 WL 4988410, at 19 (D.N.J. Oct. 6, 2014) ("The common use of the term payment is described as something given to discharge a debt or obligation and does not require the payment to be in the form of money."); Time Ins. Co. v. Astrazeneca AB, 52 F. Supp. 3d 705, 710 (E.D. Pa. 2014) ("In my opinion, reverse payments deemed anti-competitive pursuant to Actavis may take forms other than cash payments."); In re Lipitor Antitrust Litig., 46 F. Supp. 3d 523, 543 (D.N.J. 2014) (finding that Actavis covers situations where "the non-monetary payment [can] be converted to a reliable estimate of its monetary value"); In re Niaspan Antitrust Litig., 42 F. Supp. 3d 735, 751 (E.D. Pa. 2014) (holding "that the term 'reverse payment' is not limited to a cash payment"); In re Nexium (Esomeprazole) Antitrust Litig., 968 F. Supp. 2d 367, 392 (D. Mass. 2013) ("This Court does not see fit to read into the opinion a strict limitation of its principles to monetary-based arrangements alone.").

To be sure, the district court was correct that HN9[] the language of Actavis emphasizes that the value of a reverse payment is a key component in determining whether it is unlawful. In [30] discussing how to apply the rule of reason analysis to reverse payments, the Supreme Court explained, "the likelihood of a reverse payment bringing about anticompetitive effects depends upon its size, its scale in relation to the payor's anticipated future litigation costs, its independence from other services for which it might represent payment, and the lack of any other convincing justification." Actavis, 133 S. Ct. at 2237. Such language emphasizes that the size of the reverse payment, particularly as it relates to potential litigation expenses, is central to the antitrust query and requires that the reviewing court or factfinder assess the value of the payment.

Similarly, as the district court noted, HN10[] the five considerations set forth by the Supreme Court[12] require that the court or [*552] factfinder measure the payment's size. The Supreme Court stated that a reverse payment may be justified where it "reflects traditional settlement considerations, such as avoided litigation costs or fair value for services." Id. at 2236. And, for the market power inquiry, the Court explained that "the size of the payment from a branded drug manufacturer to a prospective generic is itself a strong indicator of power." Id. (internal quotation [31] marks omitted). Again, both statements assume that the value of the reverse payment is ascertainable.

On this basis, the district court determined that it was "almost impossible" to measure non-cash settlements such as those at issue here. In re Loestrin, 45 F. Supp. 3d at 191. Although the value of non-cash reverse payments may be much more difficult to compute than that of their cash counterparts, HN12[] antitrust litigation often requires an "elaborate inquiry into the reasonableness of a challenged business practice" and, as a result, is "extensive and complex." Maricopa Cty. Med. Soc'y, 457 U.S. at 343. In other words, antitrust litigation already requires courts to make intricate and complex judgments about market practices.

HN13[] We agree with those courts that, rather than rejecting wholesale Actavis's applicability to non-cash payments, have required that the plaintiffs plead information sufficient "to estimate the value of the term, at least to the extent [33] of determining whether it is 'large' and 'unjustified.'" In re Actos End Payor Antitrust Litig., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 127748, 2015 WL 5610752, at *13. Consistent with Twombly, which declined to "require heightened fact pleading of specifics," Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570, we do not require that the plaintiffs provide precise figures and calculations at the pleading stage, In re Actos End Payor Antitrust Litig., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS

[12] There is some dispute as to how the five considerations should factor into antitrust litigation going forward. Whereas the district court construed the five considerations as "guid[ing] the inquiry as to whether a settlement payment satisfies the rule of reason," In re Loestrin, 45 F. Supp. 3d at 190, the DPPs contend that these considerations were proffered only as justifications for why subjecting reverse payments to antitrust scrutiny outweigh the public policy in favor of settlements. We agree with the DPPs that the five considerations should not overhaul the rule of reason, nor should they create a new five-part framework in antitrust cases.

HN11[] We note, however, that there is overlap between the five considerations and the preexisting elements of the rule of reason. For example, the First Circuit's rule of reason analysis queries, among other things, whether the "agreement involved the exercise of power in a relevant economic market." Stop & Shop Supermarket Co., 373 F.3d at 61. In that same vein, Actavis explains how to evaluate the market power question: "the size of the payment from a branded drug manufacturer to a prospective generic is itself a strong indicator of [32] power." Actavis, 133 S. Ct. at 2236 (internal quotation marks omitted). Similarly, the First Circuit rule of reason includes as an element the anticompetitive consequences of the alleged agreement, and the first of the five considerations articulated by the Supreme Court explains that a reverse payment may have significant anticompetitive effects where it "amounts to a purchase by the patentee of the exclusive right to sell its product." Id. at 2234.

*127748, 2015 WL 5610752, at 13. Requiring such a high burden would impose a nearly insurmountable bar for plaintiffs at the pleading stage because "very precise and particularized estimates of fair value and anticipated litigation costs may require evidence in the exclusive possession of the defendants, as well as expert analysis." In re Aggrenox Antitrust Litig., 94 F. Supp. 3d at 244-45. Nevertheless, the plaintiffs must allege facts sufficient to support the legal conclusion that the settlement at issue involves a large and unjustified reverse payment under Actavis. See In re Niaspan Antitrust Litig., 42 F. Supp. 3d at 753 (describing Twombly's applicability to the Actavis inquiry).

On appeal, the defendants do not strenuously argue that Actavis should be limited to cash payments, instead focusing their briefing on whether the plaintiffs adequately pled that the provisions at issue in the Warner-Watson and Warner-Lupin settlement agreements are unlawful reverse payments under Actavis. As the district court did not address these issues, we remand for the district court [34] to evaluate these remaining questions in the first instance. The HN14[] Supreme Court acknowledged that Actavis had opened the door to a new landscape of litigation and "le[ft] to the lower courts the structuring of the present rule-of-reason antitrust litigation." Actavis, 133 S. Ct. at 2238. At this juncture, we feel that the most prudent course is to proceed one step at a time, and we therefore leave for another day [*553] the question of whether the EPPs and DPPs adequately alleged that the individual provisions of the settlement agreements warranted antitrust scrutiny as unlawful reverse payments.

VI. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is vacated and the case is remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion. No costs are awarded.

Vacated and Remanded.

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Fed. R. Civ. P. 12 provides that a party may move to dismiss a complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). In considering a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), the pleadings are construed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, and the facts alleged in the complaint must be taken as true. Any ambiguities concerning the sufficiency of the claims must be resolved in favor of the nonmoving party.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN2[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A pleading must contain enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw a reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged. Determining whether a complaint states a plausible claim for relief is a context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense. But where the well-pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, the complaint has alleged--but not "shown"--that the pleader is entitled to relief. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN3[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

Section 2 (15 U.S.C.S. § 2) of the Sherman Act imposes liability on every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States. 15 U.S.C.S. § 2. To establish a § 2 violation, a plaintiff must plausibly allege that the defendant (1) possessed monopoly power in the relevant market, and (2) willfully acquired or maintained this monopoly power by anticompetitive conduct as opposed to gaining that power as a result of a superior product, business acumen, or historical accident. Minnesota anti-trust law is interpreted consistent with the federal court's construction of the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Evidence > Burdens of Proof

HN4[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

To state a viable claim under Section 2 (15 U.S.C.S. § 2) of the Sherman Act, the plaintiff has the burden of identifying a valid relevant market. A relevant market has components of both a product market and a geographic market. The relevant product market includes all reasonably interchangeable products. The geographic market is defined by considering the commercial realities faced by consumers. It includes the geographic area in which consumers can practically seek alternative sources of product. Without a well-defined relevant market, a court cannot determine the effect that an allegedly illegal act has on competition. Generally, proper market definition can be determined only after a factual inquiry into the commercial realities faced by consumers. However, this rule does not equate to a per se prohibition against dismissal of antitrust claims for failure to plead a relevant market under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN5[] Actual Monopolization, Claims

The relevant product market should include products that have reasonable interchangeability for the purpose for which they are produced.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN6[] Actual Monopolization, Claims

Courts define the relevant geographic market as the geographic area to which consumers can practically turn for alternative sources of the product and in which the antitrust defendants face competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN7[] Actual Monopolization, Claims

Proper market definition is best determined through a factual inquiry into the commercial realities faced by consumers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN8[] Actual Monopolization, Claims

The law surrounding bundled discounts as a theory of anticompetitive behavior is far from clearly established. Indeed, the Eighth Circuit has not explicitly addressed the viability of such a claim. In Concord Boat, the Eighth Circuit referenced several out-of-circuit discount bundling cases, appearing to at least implicitly recognize the theory. Of those circuits which have expressly recognized discount bundling as a form of anticompetitive behavior, there is no consensus on the standard utilized to evaluate discount bundling claims.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN9[] Actual Monopolization, Claims

A predatory pricing claim can be different than a bundled discount theory of anticompetitive behavior. Since the U.S. Supreme Court's holding in Linkline, courts have continued to address these claims under separate standards.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN10[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

At the Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss stage, the court must construe the complaint and "all reasonable inferences arising therefrom" in the plaintiff's favor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Right to Petition Immunity

Evidence > Burdens of Proof

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

HN11[] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Right to Petition Immunity

The Noerr-Pennington doctrine derives from two cases wherein the U.S. Supreme Court established that the right to petition under the First Amendment includes a litigant's right to bring a suit in federal or state court. Generally, under the doctrine, the act of filing a lawsuit is viewed as a form of petitioning activity and is therefore immune from antitrust liability. Because the right to petition means more than simply the right to communicate directly with the government, the Noerr-Pennington doctrine necessarily includes those activities reasonably and normally attendant to effective petitioning. Protection under Noerr-Pennington is not limitless, and an exception exists to the immunity it provides. Under the doctrine, immunity does not extend when the petitioning effort taken, or lawsuit filed, is a mere sham to cover what is actually nothing more than an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor. This exception applies when the petitioning activities at issue are so clearly baseless as to amount to an abuse of process. The sham exception is narrow, and the party attempting to invoke the exception bears a heavy burden of demonstrating that the activities are objectively meritless.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom to Petition

HN12[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

In contrast to Cardtoons, multiple circuit courts have held that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine does protect pre-litigation activities such as pre-suit demand letters, so long as such letters are not a "sham." A court has stated that where the underlying litigation fell within the protection of the Petition Clause, such incidental conduct would also be protected. Other circuit courts have similarly concluded that pre-litigation activity reasonably attendant to litigation is protected under the doctrine.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom to Petition

HN13[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The U.S. Supreme Court has cautioned that when determining whether conduct falls within the protection of Noerr-Pennington, a court must give adequate "breathing space" to the right to petition. Accordingly, it follows that "adequate breathing space" would include conduct necessarily relating to initiating a lawsuit.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

HN14[] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

The Noerr-Pennington doctrine does not apply when the litigation at issue is found to be a mere sham intended to disguise tortious or anticompetitive liability.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN15[] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

Whether a party's conduct is a genuine attempt to avail itself of the judicial process or is merely a sham is a question of fact that is inappropriate for a motion to dismiss. The decision about whether the Noerr-Pennington doctrine applies should be left until after discovery, so as to more fully develop the underling acts and possibly establish an exception.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN16[] Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

Fed. R. Civ. P. 8 does not require detailed factual allegations, but it demands more than an unadorned, the-defendant-unlawfully-harmed-me-accusation.

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Marking

HN17[] Defenses, Marking

Patent marking is not mandatory. 35 U.S.C.S. § 287(a) (stating a patentee "may give notice to the public that the same is patented"). Under 35 U.S.C.S. § 287(a), a patentee cannot recover damages "except on proof that the infringer was notified of the infringement and continued to infringe thereafter." When a patentee does not mark a product, § 287(a) requires actual notice to assure that the recipient knew of the adverse patent during the period in which liability accrues, when constructive notice by marking is absent. Thus, marking serves as an option for patentees to ensure that sufficient notice was provided which is required to recover damages for infringement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN18[] Standing, Requirements

To properly assert an antitrust action, a plaintiff must have suffered an antitrust injury--an injury of the type that the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. Antitrust injury is a threshold issue that plaintiffs must establish in order to have standing to sue under the antitrust laws. A mere causal connection between an antitrust violation and harm to plaintiff cannot be the basis for antitrust compensation unless the injury is directly related to the harm the antitrust laws were designed to protect.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN19[] Standing, Requirements

Indeed, the interplay between injury-to-competition and direct injury to a plaintiff when evaluating antitrust standing is not always clear. The two concepts are closely related, however, and the Eighth Circuit and decisions from the District of Minnesota largely conflate the two and incorporate an injury-to-competition requirement into the analysis of antitrust standing.

Torts > ... > Contracts > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN20[] Intentional Interference, Elements

To establish tortious interference with an existing contract under Minnesota law, a plaintiff must show: (1) the existence of a contract, (2) the defendant's knowledge of the contract, (3) the defendant's intentional procurement of the breach of contract, (4) the defendant acted without justification, and (5) damages. A claim for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage also has five elements: (1) the existence of a reasonable expectation of economic advantage belonging to the plaintiff; (2) the defendant's knowledge of that expectation; (3) the defendant's wrongful interference with that expectation; (4) a reasonable probability that the plaintiff would have realized the expectation absent the defendant's conduct; and (5) damages. Liability for a tortious interference with prospective economic advantage claim rests on whether the actor's conduct was improper. For purposes of this tort, improper means are those that are independently wrongful such as threats, violence, trespass, defamation, misrepresentation of fact, restraint of trade or any other wrongful act recognized by statute or common law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN21[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A complaint should be read as a whole, not parsed piece by piece.

Computer & Internet Law > ... > Trade Secrets > Misappropriation > Elements

Computer & Internet Law > ... > Trade Secrets > Misappropriation > Uniform Trade Secrets Act

HN22[] Misappropriation, Elements

Under the Minnesota Uniform Trade Secrets Act, a trade secret is defined as information that: (1) is not generally known or readily ascertainable, (2) derives independent economic value from secrecy, and (3) is the subject of reasonable efforts to maintain its secrecy. Minn. Stat. § 325C.01, subd. 5. Misappropriation of a trade secret occurs when there is disclosure or use of a trade secret without express or implied consent by a person who, at the time of disclosure or use, knew that the utilization of the trade secret was acquired under circumstances giving rise to a duty to maintain its secrecy or limit its use. Minn. Stat. § 325C.01, subd. 3(ii).

Computer & Internet Law > Intellectual Property Protection > Trade Secrets > Misappropriation

HN23[] Trade Secrets, Misappropriation

In the context of pleading a claim for the misappropriation of trade secrets, a plaintiff is understandably hesitant to reveal the exact parameters of the trade secrets it believes have been misappropriated because a trade secret made public is not a secret.

[*1123] MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

I. INTRODUCTION

On November 24, 2015, the undersigned United States District Judge heard oral argument on Defendant Graphic Packaging International, Inc.'s ("Graphic") Motion to Dismiss [Docket No. 25]. Plaintiff Inline Packaging, LCC ("Inline") opposes the Motion. For the reasons stated herein, Defendant's Motion is granted in part and denied in part.

II. BACKGROUND

Inline and Graphic compete in the susceptor food packaging industry. Compl. [*1124] [Docket No. 1] ¶ 2. Susceptor food packaging is a type of active food packaging that converts microwave energy to high surface temperatures which in turn crisps and browns foods. Id. ¶ 60. Inline identifies itself as a small player, whereas Graphic is one of the largest paperboard packaging companies in the United States [2] with at least a 95% share of the susceptor food packaging market. Id. ¶¶ 13-14, 17. Inline and Graphic primarily compete within this susceptor food packaging market for supply contracts with companies such as Nestle, Heinz, Little Lady Foods, Nation Pizza Products, and Smuckers. Id. ¶¶ 20-21.

Inline alleges that Graphic, in response to price competition from Inline and others, engages in anticompetitive conduct to maintain a monopolizing position in the crisping and browning susceptor packaging market. Id. ¶¶ 23-58, 81-110. Inline posits that Graphic's conduct produces no pro-competitive benefits and, because of this conduct, Inline has lost both existing and potential customers. Id. ¶¶ 111, 114. Inline asserts five claims against Graphic: (1) Count I—Tortious Interference with Prospective Business Relations; (2) Count II—Tortious Interference with Existing Contractual Relations; (3) Count III—Misappropriation of Trade Secrets; (4) Count IV—Violation of Minn. Stat. § 325D.52 for Maintenance or Use of a Monopoly Power; and (5) Count V—Violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. Id. ¶¶ 121-48. Graphic moves to dismiss the Complaint in its entirety.

III. DISCUSSION

A. Motion to Dismiss Standard

HN1[] Rule 12 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provides that a [3] party may move to dismiss a complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). In considering a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), the pleadings are construed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, and the facts alleged in the complaint must be taken as true. Hamm v. Groose, 15 F.3d 110, 112 (8th Cir. 1994); Ossman v. Diana Corp., 825 F. Supp. 870, 879-80 (D. Minn. 1993). Any ambiguities concerning the sufficiency of the claims must be resolved in favor of the nonmoving party. Ossman, 825 F. Supp. at 880.

HN2[] A pleading must contain "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw a reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). Determining whether a complaint states a plausible claim for relief is "a context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense." Id. "But where the well-pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, the complaint has alleged—but not 'shown'—'that the pleader is entitled to relief.'" Id. (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2)).

B. Antitrust Claims

Inline asserts antitrust claims against Graphic under both Minn. Stat. § 325D.52 (Count IV) and the Sherman Antitrust [4] Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2 (Count V). HN3[] Section 2 of the Sherman Act imposes liability on "[e]very person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States." 15 U.S.C. § 2. To establish a § 2 [*1125] violation, Inline must plausibly allege that Graphic (1) "possessed monopoly power in the relevant market," and (2) "willfully acquired or maintained this monopoly power by anticompetitive conduct as opposed to gaining that power as a result of a superior product, business acumen, or historical accident." Concord Boat Corp. v. Brunswick Corp., 207 F.3d 1039, 1060 (8th Cir. 2000). "Minnesota anti-trust law is interpreted consistent with the federal court's construction of the Sherman Act." Lamminen v. City of Cloquet, 987 F. Supp. 723, 734 (D. Minn. 1997) (citing State by Humphrey v. Road Constructors, Inc., 474 N.W.2d 224, 225 n.1 (Minn. Ct. App. 1991)); see also Lorix v. Crompton Corp., 736 N.W.2d 619, 626 (Minn. 2007) ("As the purposes of Minnesota and federal antitrust law are the same, it is sensible to interpret them consistently.").

Inline's antitrust claims are premised on several theories of anticompetitive behavior, including: (1) discount bundling; (2) baseless threats of sham litigation; and (3) submarine patent activities. Graphic counters that none of these three antitrust theories advanced by Inline are legally viable, nor are they supported by sufficient factual allegations. Graphic additionally [5] moves for dismissal based on Inline's failure to plead a relevant market and Inline's lack of standing to assert an antitrust claim. The Court will address each argument in turn.

1. Relevant Market

HN4[] To state a viable claim under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, Inline has the burden of identifying a valid relevant market. Double D. Spotting Serv., Inc. v. Supervalu, Inc., 136 F.3d 554, 560 (8th Cir. 1998). A relevant market has components of both a product market and a geographic market. Bathke v. Casey's Gen. Stores, Inc., 64 F.3d 340, 345 (8th Cir. 1995). "The relevant product market includes all reasonably interchangeable products. The geographic market is defined by considering the commercial realities faced by consumers. It includes the geographic area in which consumers can practically seek alternative sources of product." Double D. Spotting Serv., 136 F.3d at 560 (internal citations omitted). "Without a well-defined relevant market, a court cannot determine the effect that an allegedly illegal act has on competition." Little Rock Cardiology Clinic PA v. Baptist Health, 591 F.3d 591, 596 (8th Cir. 2009) (citing FTC v. Freeman Hosp., 69 F.3d 260, 270-71 (8th Cir. 1995)). Generally, "proper market definition can be determined only after a factual inquiry into the commercial realities faced by consumers." Double D. Spotting Serv., 136 F.3d at 560 (quoting Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d 430, 436 (3d Cir. 1997)). However, this rule does not equate to "a per se prohibition against dismissal of antitrust claims for failure to plead a relevant market under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6)." Id. (quoting Queen City Pizza, 124 F.3d at 436). Here, Inline defines the product market as the "susceptor [6] food packaging market" and the geographic market as the United States. Graphic disputes these market designations.

Inline has sufficiently pled both the product and geographic components of a relevant market to withstand a motion to dismiss. As to the product market, Graphic contends that the "susceptor food packaging market" is too narrow. Graphic argues that the Complaint refers to the larger markets of "paperboard food packaging" and "microwaveable foods," and that it is "obvious from any trip down a grocery store aisle" that "susceptor technology is only one way for food products to be packaged and microwaves are only one way to cook food." Mem. Supp. Mot. Dismiss [*1126] [Docket No. 27] 9. As such, Graphic contends that Inline has not adequately pled facts to identify the susceptor food packaging market as an independently relevant product market because variations in product type do not automatically equate to differing product markets. See Craftsmen Limousine, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 491 F.3d 380, 389-90 (8th Cir. 2007) (finding that a speciality limousine market was not distinguishable from the general market of limousines).

Graphic's position is without merit. HN5[] "The relevant product market should include 'products that have reasonable interchangeability for the purpose [7] for which they are produced.'" Little Rock Cardiology Clinic PA, 591 F.3d at 596 (quoting United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 404, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956)). As alleged in the Complaint, susceptor food packaging serves the specialized purpose of crisping and browning foods when microwaved. See Compl. ¶ 60. The Complaint further alleges that this packaging is unique in the marketplace as it "includes only active packaging that crisps and browns foods, which effect cannot be achieved using standard paperboard packaging." Id. Thus, the purposes of susceptor food packaging and paperboard packaging are not necessarily interchangeable. Moreover, the Complaint adequately alleges why there is a lack of reasonable substitutes for susceptor packaging—there are no similarly-priced or effective ways to crisp and brown microwaveable foods. Id. ¶ 67. These allegations are sufficient at the this stage. Inline has "alleged specific facts that support a narrow product market in a way that is plausible and bears a rational relation to the methodology courts prescribe." *Anchor Wall Sys., Inc. v. Rockwood Retaining Walls, Inc., No. 06-0466, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 92919, 2007 WL 4465195, at 7 (D. Minn. Dec. 18, 2007) (quotation and citation omitted).

Turning next to the alleged geographic market, Graphic argues that Inline has not sufficiently alleged facts in the Complaint to designate the United States as the relevant geographic market. Graphic suggests that [8] it participates, along with Inline, in the worldwide market, as both companies compete for contracts with international food companies (such as Nestle) and companies based in the United States that conduct business worldwide (such as Heinz and Smuckers).

HN6[] Courts define the relevant geographic market as "the geographic area to which consumers can practically turn for alternative sources of the product and in which the antitrust defendants face competition." Morgenstern v. Wilson, 29 F.3d 1291, 1296 (8th Cir. 1994) (citing Baxley-DeLamar Monuments, Inc., v. Am. Cemetery Ass'n, 938 F.2d 846, 850 (8th Cir. 1991)). The Complaint alleges, with sufficient specificity, that factors such as transportation costs, currency exchange rates, and developing packaging designs remotely are hurdles to consumers looking to the international market for alternative susceptor packaging. See Compl. ¶ 76. These facts support a plausible conclusion that the relevant market is not international.

Inline has properly pled the required components of product and geographic market. Further, given that HN7[] proper market definition is best determined through "a factual inquiry into the commercial realities faced by consumers," the record at this early stage of the proceedings is sufficient for the case to proceed. See Double D. Spotting Serv., Inc., 136 F.3d at 560.

2. Bundle Discounts

Inline claims that by offering [9] packaging bundles to consumers, Graphic is engaging [*1127] in anticompetitive behavior. Compl. ¶¶ 23-28. This theory of antitrust conduct centers on Graphic's alleged ability to provide differing types of packaging to food company buyers (customers) in a bundled discount. Id. ¶ 24. The Complaint alleges Graphic is a large player in the paperboard/cardboard packaging market, a market that is 400 times larger than the susceptor food packaging market. Id. ¶ 23. Inline does not participate in the paperboard market. Id.

a. Bundling Susceptor and Paperboard Packaging

Specifically, Inline claims that Graphic offers significant discounts if customers purchase large quantities of bundled paperboard packaging and susceptor packaging. Id. According to Inline, the volume of susceptor food packaging ordered in such bundles is significantly smaller compared to paperboard packaging, as paperboard packaging is in much higher demand from food company buyers. Id. ¶ 25. Due to the high quantity of paperboard packaging within the bundles, buyers receive a significant discount on the paperboard products—but only if they agree to purchase the susceptor packaging included in the bundle. Id. ¶ 26. Stated differently, [10] to receive a discount food company buyers must purchase both the susceptor packaging and paperboard packaging together. Id.

Inline claims that due to the discount provided through bundle packaging, food company buyers are discouraged from purchasing separate susceptor food packaging from Graphic's smaller competitors like Inline, even though Inline is more efficient at producing susceptor food packaging. Id. ¶¶ 22, 27. In sum, Inline alleges that "[b]ecause food company buyers commonly purchase far greater volumes of paperboard than susceptor food packaging, smaller competitors cannot profitably offer susceptor food packaging at a price low enough to compete with the discounts available on paperboard food packaging through Graphic's bundles." Id. ¶ 28.

b. Standard for Discount Bundling Theory

In theory, "[b]undling is the practice of offering, for a single price, two or more goods or services that could be sold separately. A bundled discount occurs when a firm sells a bundle of goods or services for a lower price than the seller charges for the goods or services purchased individually." Cascade Health Sol. v. PeaceHealth, 515 F.3d 883, 894 (9th Cir. 2008) (citations omitted). These bundled discounts can in turn be utilized by entities to increase their market share in the [11] competitive product.

HN8[] The law surrounding bundled discounts as a theory of anticompetitive behavior, however, is far from clearly established. Indeed, the Eighth Circuit has not explicitly addressed the viability of such a claim. In Concord Boat Corp. v. Brunswick Corp., the Eighth Circuit referenced several out-of-circuit discount bundling cases, appearing to at least implicitly recognize the theory. 207 F.3d 1039, 1062 (8th Cir. 2000) ("Because only one product . . . is at issue here and there are no allegations of tying or bundling with another product, we do not find these cases persuasive."). Of those circuits which have expressly recognized discount bundling as a form of anticompetitive behavior, there is no consensus on the standard utilized to evaluate discount bundling claims.

In LePage's Inc. v. 3M, the Third Circuit examined a bundled rebate program that allowed 3M to leverage its monopoly power in Scotch Brand tape to impact other categories in which the plaintiff also competed. 324 F.3d 141 (3d Cir. 2003). 3M argued that as a matter of law, above-cost pricing could not give rise to an antitrust [*1128] claim because price reduction, so long as it is not below cost, is the type of conduct antitrust laws serve to promote. Id. at 147. The Third Circuit [12] rejected this argument, noting that competitors may be unable to compensate buyers for the discount on the competitive product, even in scenarios when the bundled discount scheme is above costs. See id. at 155 (quoting Phillip E. Areeda & Herbet Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 794, at 83 (Supp. 2002)).

In contrast, in Cascade Health, the Ninth Circuit adopted a "discount attribution" standard for analyzing bundled discounts under § 2 of the Sherman Act:

> To prove a bundled discount was exclusionary or predatory for the purposes of a monopolization or attempted monopolization claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act, the plaintiff must establish that, after allocating the discount given by the defendant on the entire bundle of products to the competitive product or products, the defendant sold the competitive product or products below its average variable cost of producing them.

Cascade Health, 515 F.3d at 910. Therefore, critical to the discount attribution standard is the component that the defendant is pricing the competitive product below cost. As stated by the Ninth Circuit, "[t]his standard makes the defendant's bundled discounts legal unless the discounts have the potential to exclude a hypothetical equally efficient producer of the competitive [13] product." Id. at 906 (citation omitted).[1]

[1] At the hearing, Graphic referenced ("Bard I"). In Bard I, the Eighth Circuit did analyze a discount bundling theory wherein the Court seemed to, at least implicitly, endorse a discount bundling test requiring a below cost pricing component after attributing the entire discount on all products within a package to the competitive product. See Bard I, 616 F.3d at 893. However, Bard I was vacated shortly after its publication and decided on alternative grounds while making no reference to the discount bundling theory. See Southeast Missouri Hosp. v. C.R. Bard, Inc., 642 F.3d 608 (8th Cir. 2011) ("Bard II"). Due to the Eighth Circuit's Bard II decision, this Court will place no precedential value on Bard I in determining how the Eighth Circuit may, in the future, evaluate a discount bundling antitrust claim.

To add to this mix, in Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., the Supreme Court held that to prevail on a predatory pricing claim, a plaintiff must prove that (1) "the prices complained of are below an appropriate measure of its rival's costs" and (2) "that the competitor had . . . a dangerous probability, of recouping its investment in below-cost prices." 509 U.S. 209, 222-24, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 (1993). In 2009, the Supreme Court reiterated this holding in Pacific Bell Telephone Co. v. Linkline Communications, Inc. [14] , when it stated that "low prices are only actionable under the Sherman Act when the prices are below cost and there is a dangerous probability that the predator will be able to recoup the profits it loses from the low prices. 555 U.S. 438, 457, 129 S. Ct. 1109, 172 L. Ed. 2d 836 (2009) (citing Brooke Grp., 509 U.S. at 222-24).

c. Application of Standards to Inline's Discount Bundling Theory

Graphic argues that the bundled discount theory cannot advance the antitrust claims here for several reasons. According to Graphic, this theory should be evaluated under the Linkline standard which it fails because Inline has alleged neither that Graphic's prices are below cost nor that there is a dangerous probability that Graphic will recoup its lost profits.

Graphic maintains that the LePage test for bundling is an outlier, and that the other circuit courts to have addressed the issue, such as the Ninth Circuit in Cascade, [*1129] require some below cost pleading component, which Inline has failed to do. In response, Inline posits that Graphic is conflating the standard for a run-of-the-mill predatory pricing claim with a bundling claim and urges this Court to adopt the standard in LePage—that a plaintiff is not required to show that a competitive product [15] is priced below cost to establish a discount bundling claim. Inline further argues that even if this Court were to look to a discount attribution standard as articulated in Cascade, the Complaint can be read to reasonably infer that Graphic is selling susceptor packaging below cost.

The Court agrees with Inline's contention that HN9[] a predatory pricing claim can be different than a bundled discount theory of anticompetitive behavior. Since the Supreme Court's holding in Linkline, courts have continued to address these claims under separate standards. See *Vesta Corp. v. Amdocs Mgmt. Ltd., 129 F. Supp. 3d 1012, 2015 WL 5178073, at 14-19 (D. Or., 2015) (evaluating a predatory pricing claim under the Brooke Group standard and a bundled discounts claim under the Cascade standard); *Universal Surveillance Corp. v. Checkpoint Sys., Inc., No. 5:11-1755, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 147105, 2015 WL 6561241, at 5-6 (N.D. Ohio Oct. 19, 2015) (noting that when a discount is offered on a single product, it is evaluated under "antitrust's ordinary predatory pricing rule" (the Brooke Group standard), whereas a bundled discount offered on more than one product is evaluated under Cascade); see also *Safeway Inc. v. Abbott Labs., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2145, 2010 WL 147988, at * 4 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 12, 2010)* (dismissing an argument that Linkline rejected attribution tests like those set forth in Cascade). Because the Court is not convinced that [16] the Brooke Group/Linkline standard for predatory pricing is applicable here, Inline is not required to plead that Graphic has a dangerous probability of recouping its costs.

As to Graphic's contention that Inline has failed to plead the component of below cost allegations, even if this Court were to adopt the discount attribution test articulated in Cascade, Inline's claim does not fail. In the Complaint, Inline specifically alleges that it is more efficient than Graphic in manufacturing susceptor packaging, yet Inline cannot profitably offer susceptor food packaging at a price sufficiently low to compete with the discounts provided in Graphic's bundles. See Compl. ¶¶ 22, 28. These allegations lead to the logical inference that Graphic is selling below its cost; if Inline is more efficient than Graphic at making susceptor packaging and cannot sell the packaging for a profit to compete with Graphic's bundles, Graphic too must be selling below cost because it is less efficient than Inline. HN10[] At this stage, the Court must construe the Complaint and "all reasonable inferences arising therefrom" in Inline's favor and will do so here. Morton v. Becker, 793 F.2d 185, 187 (8th Cir. 1986) (citation omitted). Inline's discount bundling claim survives [17] dismissal at this time.

3. Sham Litigation

Inline additionally bases its antitrust claims on a theory of "sham litigation." Under this theory, Inline claims that Graphic directed baseless threats of litigation at Inline and Inline's customers which amounted to anticompetitive behavior. Graphic moves for dismissal of the sham litigation theory based on pleading deficiencies and protection under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

a. Graphic's Litigation Threats

Inline alleges Graphic is well-known as a litigious participant in both the susceptor and paperboard food packaging markets. Compl. ¶ 29. According to Inline, Graphic [*1130] is able to achieve its "dominant position in the susceptor food packaging market in part by engaging in aggressive and predatory litigation tactics against its smaller rivals and potential new entrants." Id. ¶ 30. Inline alleges that Graphic engages in two forms of sham litigation threats to achieve market monopolization: (1) Graphic directly threatens its competitors and their customers with patent infringement pertaining to expired or inapplicable patents; and (2) Graphic communicates directly with Inline's customers to threaten potential suit against Inline and, in so [18] doing, deters those customers from pursuing business with Inline and gains the business for itself. Id. ¶¶ 31, 39-42.

As to the first category of behavior, Inline claims that Graphic has directly threatened its competitors and food company buyers with patent infringement suits, including threats made related to expired or inapplicable patents. Id. ¶ 31. Through this misuse of intellectual property, Inline alleges Graphic is able to monopolize the market. Id.

As to the second category, the Complaint identifies at least two instances where Graphic communicated with Inline's customers by threatening litigation against Inline to reduce Inline's business. Inline alleges that in 2014 after being awarded a bid for 1.1 billion units of susceptor food packaging products from a food company buyer, the buyer ultimately ordered only ten percent of the product in the contract. Id. ¶ 41. Inline attributes Graphic's communications with the food company buyer for the reduction; that is, Graphic communicated to the food company buyer that it was planning to sue Inline and therefore the customer should not contract with Inline for susceptor products. Id. The Complaint further describes an occasion where [19] Inline was unsuccessful in securing a contract from Nation Pizza Products due to Graphic's assertion to Nation Pizza Products that it would sue Inline if Inline was awarded the Nation Pizza Products contract. Id. ¶ 42.

b. The Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Graphic argues that the sham litigation theory of anticompetitive conduct is barred by Noerr-Pennington immunity. Inline responds that although the doctrine may arguably apply to communications pertaining to litigation directly between Graphic and Inline, it does not extend to Graphic's communications with Inline's customers about threatened litigation against Inline. Even if Noerr-Pennington was applicable, Inline contends that the sham litigation exception saves the claim.

HN11[] The Noerr-Pennington doctrine derives from two cases wherein the Supreme Court established that the right to petition under the First Amendment includes a litigant's right to bring a suit in federal or state court. See E.R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 81 S. Ct. 523, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464 (1961); United Mine Workers of Am. v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 85 S. Ct. 1585, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626 (1965). Generally, under the doctrine, the act of filing a lawsuit is viewed as a form of petitioning activity and is therefore immune from antitrust liability. Hinshaw v. Smith, 436 F.3d 997, 1003 (8th Cir. 2006). Because "[t]he right to petition means more than simply the right to communicate directly with the government," the [20] Noerr-Pennington doctrine "necessarily includes those activities reasonably and normally attendant to effective petitioning." In re IBP Confidential Bus. Documents Litig., 755 F.2d 1300, 1310 (8th Cir. 1985) (citations omitted).

Protection under Noerr-Pennington is not limitless, and an exception exists to the immunity it provides. Under the doctrine, immunity does not extend [*1131] when the petitioning effort taken, or lawsuit filed, is a "mere sham to cover what is actually nothing more than an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor." Noerr, 365 U.S. at 144. This exception applies when the petitioning activities at issue are "so clearly baseless as to amount to an abuse of process." South Dakota v. Kansas City S. Indus., Inc., 880 F.2d 40, 51 (8th Cir. 1989) (quoting Razorback Ready Mix Concrete Co. v. Weaver, 761 F.2d 484, 487 (8th Cir. 1985)). "The sham exception is narrow, and the . . . party attempting to invoke the exception bears a heavy burden of demonstrating that the [activities are] objectively meritless." CBS Interactive Inc. v. Nat'l Football League Players Ass'n, Inc., 259 F.R.D. 398, 413 (D. Minn. 2009) (internal quotation omitted).

c. Application of Noerr-Pennington

The parties first contest whether the allegations alleged here are even covered by Noerr-Pennington. As noted above, the Complaint focuses on alleged threats of litigation directed both to Inline and Inline's customers. Inline urges this Court to adopt the reasoning of the Tenth Circuit articulated in Cardtoons, L.C. v. Major League Baseball Players Ass'n [21] , where the court concluded that the right to petition the government under the First Amendment did not extend to immunize private threats of litigation. 208 F.3d 885, 893 (10th Cir. 2000). Inline acknowledges that other circuit courts have held to the contrary, but argues that no court has extended Noerr-Pennington to communications with customers who were not actually the target of the threatened litigation. Graphic maintains that all allegations asserted are immunized by the doctrine.

In Cardtoons, a designer of parody baseball cards sought a declaratory judgment that the cards produced were not in violation of the Major League Baseball Players Association's publicity rights and additionally sought damages for tortious interference. Id. at 886-87. Cardtoons initiated the declaratory judgment action due to a cease and desist letter sent by the League Association. Id. The League Association argued that it was immune under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. The Tenth Circuit disagreed, holding that "[a] letter from one private party to another private party simply does not implicate the right to petition [the government], regardless of what the letter threatens." Id. at 892. The court distinguished the case, involving tort claims, [22] with other circuits' decisions pertaining to antitrust claims.

HN12[] In contrast to Cardtoons, multiple circuit courts have held that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine does protect pre-litigation activities such as pre-suit demand letters, so long as such letters are not a "sham." For example, in Sosa v. DIRECTTV, Inc., the Ninth Circuit concluded that DIRECTTV was immune from RICO liability under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine for sending settlement demand letters to individuals who had allegedly improperly utilized its satellite signal. 437 F.3d 923, 935 (9th Cir. 2006). In so deciding, the court emphasized that although the letters themselves where not petitions, the First Amendment "may nevertheless preclude burdening them so as to preserve the breathing space required for the effective exercise of the rights it protects." Id. at 933. The court therefore held that "conduct incidental to the prosecution" of a lawsuit was protected under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, stating "where the underlying litigation fell within the protection of the Petition Clause, such incidental conduct would also be protected." Id. at 935. Other circuit courts have similarly concluded that pre-litigation activity reasonably attendant to litigation is protected under the doctrine. See e.g., Primetime 24 [*1132] Joint Venture v. Nat'l Broad. Co. Inc., 219 F.3d 92, 100 (2d Cir. 2000); McGuire Oil Co. v. Mapco, Inc., 958 F.2d 1552, 1560 (11th Cir. 1992) [23] ; Coastal States Mktg., Inc. v. Hunt, 694 F.2d 1358, 1366-67 (5th Cir. 1983).

Here, Graphic argues that Cardtoons is an outlier and inapplicable. Graphic seems to interpret the litigation threats referenced in the Complaint as communications from Graphic to Inline and Inline's customers directly threatening patent enforcement litigation. As such, Graphic maintains that the Court should adhere to the reasoning of Sosa and other judges within this district in finding that the pre-litigation activities here are protected under Noerr-Pennington. Specifically, Graphic argues that because 35 U.S.C. § 287(a) requires that potential infringers be notified before a patentee can recover damages, pre-litigation notice letters would necessarily be encompassed under Noerr-Pennington. See Select Comfort Corp. v. Sleep Better Store, LLC, 838 F. Supp. 2d 889, 899-900 (D. Minn. 2012) (distinguishing Cardtoons and finding pre-litigation letters "reasonably attendant to litigation, especially where the trademark statute explicitly provides for such pre-suit notification to alleged infringers").

The reasoning articulated in Sosa and adopted by the majority of circuit courts to consider this question is sound. HN13[] The Supreme Court has cautioned that when determining whether conduct falls within the protection of Noerr-Pennington, a court must give adequate "breathing space" to the right to [24] petition. See BE & K Constr.

Co. v. NLRB, 536 U.S. 516, 531, 122 S. Ct. 2390, 153 L. Ed. 2d 499 (2002). Accordingly, it follows that "adequate breathing space" would include conduct necessarily relating to initiating a lawsuit. Inline seems to acknowledge this. See Mem. Opp'n Mot. Dismiss [Docket No. 31] 21. Therefore, to the extent Inline is alleging that Graphic made direct threats of patent enforcement litigation to Inline, such actions would be entitled to Noerr-Pennington protection unless deemed to be merely a sham.

However, Inline's allegations go beyond direct threats of litigation from Graphic to its competitors such as Inline. The Complaint also alleges that Graphic communicated with Inline's customers, threatening suit against Inline should these customers continue to work with Inline. Graphic has not identified any cases, and this Court has found none, supporting the extension of Noerr-Pennington to scenarios where those receiving the communications were third parties not directly threatened with litigation. Alleged actions against third parties who were not directly threatened with litigation are seemingly unrelated to Graphic's ability to petition a court for redress for Inline's wrongdoing. Moreover, even if such actions came within the purview of Noerr-Pennington [25] , Inline has, for the purposes of this Motion, sufficiently alleged that Graphic's conduct was a sham.

d. Sham Allegations

As noted above, HN14[] the Noerr-Pennington doctrine does not apply when the litigation at issue is found to be "a mere sham intended to disguise tortious or anticompetitive liability." Datascope Corp. v. Vascular Sols., Inc., 165 F. Supp. 2d 933, 936 (D. Minn. 2001). Here, Inline has adequately pled facts to establish that Graphic's litigation activities constituted a sham so as to preclude immunity under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

Unsurprisingly, the parties disagree as to what standard applies. Graphic recites the test articulated in Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Industries, Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1993) ("PREI"). In that case, the Court found that the sham exception is only applicable [*1133] when (1) it is established that the litigation is "objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits" and (2) the litigation is subjectively motivated by bad faith in the sense that the litigation is initiated as an "anticompetitive weapon." PREI, 508 U.S. at 60-61 (quotations omitted). The Eighth Circuit has also elaborated on the sham exception test as set forth in PREI:

> It is only where a defendant's resort to the courts is accompanied or characterized by illegal and reprehensible practices such [26] as perjury, fraud, conspiracy with or bribery of government decision makers, or misrepresentation, or is so clearly baseless as to amount to an abuse of process, that the Noerr-Pennington cloak of immunity provides no protection.

Razorback Ready Mix Concrete, 761 F.2d at 487 (emphasis added) (citation omitted).

Inline responds that the PREI standard should only be utilized in instances when a court is considering whether a single act rises to the level of sham litigation. According to Inline, because it has alleged a "pattern or practice" of behavior, the proper standard is whether there is "a pattern of baseless, repetitive claims . . . which leads the factfinder to conclude that the administrative or judicial processes have been abused." California Motor Transp. Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 513, 92 S. Ct. 609, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1972).

The Eighth Circuit has not yet evaluated the potential interplay between PREI and California Motor. Indeed, "[i]t is unclear whether PREI distinguished or displaced the sham litigation test first propounded in California Motor." Waugh Chapel S., LLC v. United Food and Comm. Workers Union Local 27, 728 F.3d 354, 363 (4th Cir. 2013). However, several circuit courts have drawn a distinction between the two tests. The Ninth Circuit, for example, has interpreted the tests "as applying to different situations" as "Professional Real Estate Investors provides a strict two-step analysis to assess whether [27] a single action constitutes sham petitioning . . . [whereas] California Motor Transport deals with the case where the defendant is accused of bringing a whole series of legal proceedings." USS—POSCO Indus. v. Contra Costa Cnty. Bldg. & Const. Trades Council, AFL-CIO, 31 F.3d 800, 810-11 (9th Cir. 1994).

At this stage, however, the Court need not determine which test is applicable, as Inline has sufficiently alleged sham litigation under both standards. Under the California Motor test, the facts alleged in the Complaint relating to Graphic's litigation activity amount to a pattern or practice. Inline claims that on at least two occasions Graphic targeted Inline by notifying Inline's customers that it planned to sue Inline and this was done with the "intent to maintain and exercise [Graphic's] dominant market position." Compl. ¶ 44. Additionally, Inline generally alleges that Graphic threatened competitors and food company buyers with infringement suits about "expired or inapplicable patents." Id. ¶ 31. This activity, taken together, pleads a "pattern of baseless, repetitive claims" under California Motor to constitute the sham litigation exception to Noerr-Pennington.

The Complaint also adequately pleads the sham exception under the test articulated in PREI. Graphic argues that Inline cannot [28] satisfy the PREI standard as it has failed to allege facts plausibly showing that Graphic's litigation activities were objectively unreasonable. Graphic emphasizes that Inline has not explicitly identified any unsuccessful lawsuit and states that "even if there was an open question about the scope or validity of some of [*1134] Graphic's patents, the mere existence of such a dispute would fall well short of the requirements of sham litigation." Mem. Supp. Mot. Dismiss at 20. However, at this stage, Inline is not required to show that the litigation threatened was actually meritless. Inline must only allege facts to plausibly establish that Graphic's litigation activity was objectively baseless. It has done so. Inline alleges that Graphic threatened enforcement of patents that were invalid, expired, or inapplicable. See Compl. ¶ 31. An infringement action based on such patents would be clearly baseless and an abuse of process. Inline further alleges that these enforcement actions were an anticompetitive weapon. According to Inline, these litigation threats were utilized as "a means to monopolize the market through litigation and threats of litigation by raising rivals' costs, both financial [29] and reputational." Id. These allegations, if true, could establish that Graphic's litigation threats were a sham under the PREI test. See Reg'l Multiple Listing Serv. of Minn., Inc. v. Am. Home Realty Network, Inc. 960 F. Supp. 2d 958, 978-79 (D. Minn. 2013) (finding that plaintiff had adequately alleged sham litigation when it stated that defendant was asserting a copyright claim over software it allegedly did not design or own).

More fundamentally, the Court finds that a decision as to whether Noerr-Pennington immunizes litigation activity here or if any protected activity constitutes a sham is better reserved until after discovery. See Scooter Store, Inc. v. SpinLife.com, LLC, 777 F. Supp. 2d 1102, 1115 (S.D. Ohio, 2011) HN15[] ("[W]hether a party's conduct is a genuine attempt to avail itself of the judicial process or is merely a sham is a question of fact that is inappropriate for a motion to dismiss.") (citing Clipper Exxpress v. Rocky Mountain Motor Tariff Bureau, 690 F.2d 1240, 1253 (9th Cir. 1982)); Fox News Network, L.L.C. v. Time Warner Inc., 962 F. Supp. 339, 346 (E.D.N.Y. 1997) ("The decision about whether the Noerr-Pennington doctrine applies should be left until after discovery, so as to more fully develop the underling acts and possibly establish an exception." (quotation omitted)). Here, whether specific communications are covered under Noerr-Pennington immunity can be better deciphered after discovery reveals the contents of such communications and to whom they were directed. Moreover, discovery will undoubtedly reveal the patents at issue so a determination [30] can be made on whether threatened enforcement litigation was so meritless as to constitute a sham. For now, Inline has pled sufficient facts to support a claim that the sham exception is applicable. Graphic's Motion to Dismiss the antitrust claims as it pertains to the sham litigation theory is denied.[2]

4. Submarine Patent Activities
