Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Injunctions

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18, prohibits a corporation from acquiring the whole or any part of the assets of another corporation engaged also in commerce or in any activity affecting commerce, where in any line of commerce or in any activity affecting commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly. The United States is authorized by Section 15 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 25, to seek an injunction to block a pending acquisition. The United States has the ultimate burden of proving a Section 7 violation by a preponderance of the evidence.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

HN2[] Clayton Act, Claims

To establish a violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18, the plaintiff must show that a pending acquisition is reasonably likely to cause anticompetitive effects. Congress used the words "may be substantially to lessen competition" to indicate that its concern was with probabilities, not certainties. Section 7 does not require proof that a merger or other acquisition has caused higher prices in the affected market. All that is necessary is that the merger create an appreciable danger of such consequences in the future.

HN3[] Clayton Act, Claims

The basic outline of a horizontal acquisition case under Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18, is familiar. By showing that a transaction will lead to undue concentration in the market for a particular product in a particular geographic area, the government establishes a presumption that the transaction will substantially lessen competition. To establish this presumption, the government must show that the merger would produce a firm controlling an undue percentage share of the relevant market, and would result in a significant increase in the concentration of firms in that market. Once the government has established this presumption, the burden shifts to the defendants to rebut the presumption by showing that the market-share statistics give an inaccurate account of the merger's probable effects on competition in the relevant market. If the defendant successfully rebuts the presumption of illegality, the burden of producing additional evidence of anticompetitive effect shifts to the government, and merges with the ultimate burden of persuasion, which remains with the government at all times. Ultimately, the Supreme Court has adopted a totality-of-the-circumstances approach to the statute, weighing a variety of factors to determine the effects of particular transactions on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN4[] Clayton Act, Claims

In an antitrust case under Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18, merger analysis begins with defining the relevant product market. Defining the relevant market is critical in an antitrust case because the legality of the proposed merger in question almost always depends upon the market power of the parties involved. Indeed, the relevant market definition is often the key to the ultimate resolution of this type of case because of the relative implications of market power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Geographic Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN5[] Relevant Market, Geographic Market Definition

In an antitrust case, a relevant market has two components: (1) the relevant product market and (2) the relevant geographic market. The relevant geographic market identifies the geographic area in which the defendants compete in marketing their products or services.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

HN6[] Relevant Market, Product Market Definition

A "relevant product market" is a term of art in antitrust analysis. The Supreme Court has set forth the general rule for defining a relevant product market: The outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use by consumers or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it. In other words, courts look at whether two products can be used for the same purpose, and, if so, whether and to what extent purchasers are willing to substitute one for the other.

HN7[] Relevant Market, Product Market Definition

For purposes of antitrust cases, a broad, overall market may contain smaller markets which themselves constitute product markets for antitrust purposes. The mere fact that a firm may be termed a competitor in the overall marketplace does not necessarily require that it be included in the relevant product market for antitrust purposes. Traditionally, courts have held that the boundaries of a relevant product market within a broader market may be determined by examining such practical indicia as industry or public recognition of the relevant market as a separate economic entity, the product's peculiar characteristics and uses, unique production facilities, distinct customers, distinct prices, sensitivity to price changes, and specialized vendors. These "practical indicia" of market boundaries may be viewed as evidentiary proxies for proof of substitutability and cross-elasticities of supply and demand.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Merger Guidelines

HN8[] Relevant Market, Product Market Definition

In antitrust cases, an analytical method often used by courts to define a relevant market is to ask hypothetically whether it would be profitable to have a monopoly over a given set of substitutable products. If so, those products may constitute a relevant market. This approach – sometimes called the "hypothetical monopolist test" – is endorsed by the Horizontal Merger Guidelines issued by the Department of Justice and Federal Trade Commission. Fed. Trade Comm'n & U.S. Dep't of Justice Horizontal Merger Guidelines (2010), § 4.1.1. The Merger Guidelines are not binding upon courts, but courts in antitrust cases often look to them as persuasive authority. In the merger context, this inquiry boils down to whether a hypothetical profit-maximizing firm, not subject to price regulation, that was the only present and future seller of those products likely would impose at least a small but significant and non-transitory increase in price (SSNIP) on at least one product in the market, including at least one product sold by one of the merging firms. The SSNIP is typically assumed to be five percent or more.

HN9[] Relevant Market, Product Market Definition

In antitrust cases, when determining the relevant product market, courts often pay close attention to the defendants' ordinary course of business documents.

HN10[] Relevant Market, Product Market Definition

In antitrust cases, when determining the relevant product market, evidence of industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate economic unit matters because it is assumed that economic actors usually have accurate perceptions of economic realities.

HN11[] Relevant Market, Product Market Definition

In antitrust cases, when determining the relevant product market, a product's peculiar characteristics and uses and distinct prices may distinguish a relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

HN12[] Relevant Market, Product Market Definition

Distinct pricing is a consideration in determining the relevant product market in an antitrust case.

HN13[] Relevant Market, Product Market Definition

Courts in antitrust cases frequently exclude "self-supply" substitutes from relevant product markets.

HN14[] Relevant Market, Product Market Definition

For purposes of antitrust cases, a "critical loss" analysis attempts to calculate the largest amount of sales that a monopolist can lose before a price increase becomes unprofitable.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Merger Guidelines

HN15[] Relevant Market, Product Market Definition

For purposes of antitrust cases, the critical loss analysis is specifically endorsed by the Horizontal Merger Guidelines issued by the Department of Justice and Federal Trade Commission as a method for implementing the small but significant and non-transitory increase in price (SSNIP) test and has been accepted by courts as a standard methodology.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

HN16[] Clayton Act, Claims

In an antitrust case, after the relevant market has been defined, the court must next consider the likely effects of the proposed acquisition on competition within that market. The government must make out its prima facie case by showing that the merger would produce a firm controlling an undue percentage share of the relevant market, and would result in a significant increase in the concentration of firms in that market. Such a showing establishes a presumption that the merger will substantially lessen competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Merger Guidelines

HN17[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

For purposes of antitrust cases, market concentration, or the lack thereof, is often measured by the Herfindahl-Hirschmann Index (HHI). The HHI is calculated by totaling the squares of the market shares of every firm in the relevant market. For example, a market with ten firms having market shares of 20%, 17%, 13%, 12%, 10%, 10%, 8%, 5%, 3% and 2% has an HHI of 1304 (202 + 172 + 132 + 122 + 102 + 102 + 82 + 52 +32 +22). Sufficiently large HHI figures establish the government's prima facie case that a merger is anticompetitive. Under the Horizontal Merger Guidelines issued by the Department of Justice and Federal Trade Commission, markets with an HHI above 2500 are considered highly concentrated and mergers resulting in highly concentrated markets that involve an increase in the HHI of more than 200 points will be presumed to be likely to enhance market power. Fed. Trade Comm'n & U.S. Dep't of Justice Horizontal Merger Guidelines (2010), § 5.3.

HN18[] Market Definition, Relevant Market

For purposes of antitrust cases, a reliable, reasonable, close approximation of relevant market share data is sufficient.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN19[] Clayton Act, Claims

Upon the showing of a prima facie case that a merger violates Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18, the burden shifts to the defendants to show that traditional economic theories of the competitive effects of market concentration are not an accurate indicator of the merger's probable effect on competition in these markets or that the procompetitive effects of the merger are likely to outweigh any potential anticompetitive effects. The courts have not established a clear standard that the merging parties must meet in order to rebut a prima facie case, other than to advise that the more compelling the prima facie case, the more evidence the defendant must present to rebut the presumption successfully. Even in cases where the government has made a strong prima facie showing, imposing a heavy burden of production on a defendant would be particularly anomalous where it is easy to establish a prima facie case. The government can carry its initial burden of production simply by presenting market concentration statistics. To allow the government virtually to rest its case at that point, leaving the defendant to prove the core of the dispute, would grossly inflate the role of statistics. Thus, ultimately, the Supreme Court has adopted a totality-of-the-circumstances approach, weighing a variety of factors to determine the effects of particular transactions on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Defenses

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Horizontal Mergers

HN20[] Clayton Act, Defenses

In antitrust cases, courts have held that likely entry or expansion by other competitors can counteract anticompetitive effects that would otherwise be expected from a merger. Entry or expansion must be timely, likely, and sufficient in its magnitude, character, and scope to deter or counteract the competitive effects of concern. Determining whether there is ease of entry hinges upon an analysis of barriers to new firms entering the market or existing firms expanding into new regions of the market. Where the government has established its prima facie case, the defendants carry the burden to show that ease of expansion is sufficient to fill the competitive void that will result if defendants are permitted to purchase their acquisition target.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Defenses

HN21[] Clayton Act, Defenses

Merger law rests upon the theory that, where rivals are few, firms will be able to coordinate their behavior, either by overt collusion or implicit understanding in order to restrict output and achieve profits above competitive levels. Whether a merger will make coordinated interaction more likely depends on whether market conditions, on the whole, are conducive to reaching terms of coordination and detecting and punishing deviations from those terms. Where the government has established its prima facie case, the burden is on the defendants to produce evidence of structural market barriers to collusion specific to this industry that would defeat the ordinary presumption of collusion that attaches to a merger in a highly concentrated market.

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Horizontal Mergers

HN22[] Antitrust Statutes, Clayton Act

Where a merger would result in the elimination of a particularly aggressive competitor in a highly concentrated market, that factor is certainly an important consideration when analyzing possible anti-competitive effects.

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Horizontal Mergers

HN23[] Antitrust Statutes, Clayton Act

A merger is likely to have unilateral anticompetitive effect if the acquiring firm will have the incentive to raise prices or reduce quality after the acquisition, independent of competitive responses from other firms. The extent of direct competition between the products sold by the merging parties is central to the evaluation of unilateral price effects. Unilateral effects in a differentiated product market are likely to be profitable under the following conditions: (1) the products must be differentiated; (2) the products controlled by the merging firms must be close substitutes, i.e., a substantial number of the customers of one firm would turn to the other in response to a price increase; (3) other products must be sufficiently different from the products offered by the merging firms that a merger would make a small but significant and non-transitory price increase profitable for the merging firm; and (4) repositioning must be unlikely.

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN24[] Antitrust Statutes, Clayton Act

One of the key benefits of a merger to the economy is its potential to generate efficiencies. Merger-generated efficiencies can enhance the merged firm's ability and incentive to compete, which may result in lower prices, improved quality, enhanced service, or new products. Courts have recognized that a showing of sufficient efficiencies may rebut the government's showing of likely anticompetitive effects. High market concentration levels require proof of extraordinary efficiencies, however, and courts generally have found inadequate proof of efficiencies to sustain a rebuttal of the government's case.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Defenses

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Horizontal Mergers

HN25[] Clayton Act, Defenses

In an antitrust case, the court must undertake a rigorous analysis of the kinds of efficiencies being urged by the parties to a merger in order to ensure that those "efficiencies" represent more than mere speculation and promises about post-merger behavior. Cognizable efficiencies are merger-specific efficiencies that have been verified and do not arise from anticompetitive reductions in output or service. Efficiencies are inherently difficult to verify and quantify and it is incumbent upon the merging firms to substantiate efficiency claims so that it is possible to verify by reasonable means the likelihood and magnitude of each asserted efficiency, how and when each would be achieved (and any costs of doing so), how each would enhance the merged firm's ability and incentive to compete, and why each would be merger-specific. In other words, a cognizable efficiency claim must represent a type of cost saving that could not be achieved without the merger and the estimate of the predicted saving must be reasonably verifiable by an independent party.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Defenses

HN26[] Clayton Act, Defenses

If a company could achieve certain cost savings without any merger at all, then those stand-alone cost savings cannot be credited as merger-specific efficiencies. In an antitrust case, the defendants must show that their efficiencies cannot be achieved by either company alone because, if they can, the merger's asserted benefits can be achieved without the concomitant loss of a competitor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Defenses

HN27[] Clayton Act, Defenses

For purposes of presenting an efficiencies defense in an antitrust case, while reliance on the estimation and judgment of experienced executives about costs may be perfectly sensible as a business matter, the lack of a verifiable method of factual analysis resulting in a party's cost estimates renders them not cognizable by the court. If this were not so, then the efficiencies defense might well swallow the whole of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18, because management would be able to present large efficiencies based on its own judgment and the court would be hard pressed to find otherwise. The difficulty in substantiating efficiency claims in a verifiable way is one reason why courts generally have found inadequate proof of efficiencies to sustain a rebuttal of the government's case.

[*42] MEMORANDUM OPINION[1]

[1] The Court provided this Memorandum Opinion to the parties in final form on October 31, 2011, but public release was delayed to ensure that no confidential business information that had been submitted under [2] seal was released. Based on input from the parties, confidential business information has been redacted from the opinion, with such redactions reflected by the insertion of the text "{redacted}." In some instances, redacted confidential business information has been replaced by more general language that reflects the same underlying concepts without revealing the confidential business information. Such substitutions are indicated by braces surrounding the substituted text.

Last year, approximately 140 million Americans filed tax returns with the Internal Revenue Service ("IRS"). Paying taxes is a fundamental civic duty in our democracy. Taxes pay for the government to carry out its constitutionally mandated functions and enable the government to give force to the laws and policies adopted by the people of the United States through their elected representatives. Despite the necessity of taxes to fund our government and to sustain services that many citizens depend upon, the task of preparing a tax return brings joy to the hearts of few. Many find it to be a complex and tedious exercise. Fortunately, various businesses offer different products and services designed to assist taxpayers [3] with preparing their returns. These tax preparation businesses principally include accountants, retail tax stores, and digital tax software providers – all of which provide important services to the American taxpayer. In this case, the United States, through the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice, seeks to enjoin a proposed merger between two companies that offer tax software products – H&R Block and TaxACT – on the grounds that the merger violates the antitrust laws and will lead to an anticompetitive duopoly in which the only substantial providers of digital tax software in the marketplace would be H&R Block and Intuit, the maker of the popular "TurboTax" software program. After carefully considering all of the evidence, including documents and factual and expert testimony, the applicable law, and the arguments before the Court, the Court will enjoin the proposed merger for the reasons explained in detail below.

I. [4] BACKGROUND

A. Overview

The United States, through the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice (the "DOJ," the "government," or the "plaintiff"), filed this action on May 23, 2011. The DOJ seeks to enjoin Defendant H&R Block, Inc. from acquiring Defendant 2SS Holdings, Inc. ("TaxACT"), which sells digital do-it-yourself tax preparation products marketed under the brand name TaxACT. Compl. ¶ 10. H&R Block ("HRB") is a Missouri corporation headquartered in Kansas City, Missouri. Id. ¶ 9. 2SS Holdings, or TaxACT, is a Delaware corporation headquartered in Cedar Rapids, Iowa. Id. ¶

10. Defendant TA IX, L.P. ("TA"), a Delaware limited partnership headquartered in Boston, Massachusetts, owns a two-thirds interest in TaxACT. Id. ¶ 11.

As noted above, approximately 140 million Americans filed tax returns with the IRS in 2010. Id. ¶ 1. Broadly speaking, there are three methods for preparing a tax return. The "pen and paper" or "manual" method includes preparation by hand and with free, electronically fillable forms available on the IRS website. A second method, known as "assisted" preparation, involves hiring a tax professional – typically either a certified public accountant ("CPA") or [5] a specialist at a retail tax store. HRB operates the largest retail tax store chain in the United States. Cobb, TT, 9/19/11 a.m., at 37. The companies Jackson-Hewitt and Liberty Tax Service also operate well-known retail tax stores. Finally, many taxpayers now prepare their returns using digital do-it-yourself tax preparation products ("DDIY"), such as the popular software product "TurboTax." DDIY preparation is becoming increasingly popular and an estimated 35 to 40 million taxpayers used DDIY in 2010. GX 19 at 3; see also GX 27.[2]

[*44] The three most popular DDIY providers are HRB, TaxACT, and Intuit, the maker of TurboTax. According to IRS data, these three firms accounted for approximately 90 percent of the DDIY-prepared federal returns filed in tax season 2010.[3] GX 27. The next largest firm is TaxHawk, also known [6] as FreeTaxUSA, with 3.2 percent market share, followed by TaxSlayer, with 2.7 percent. Id. The remainder of the market is divided among numerous smaller firms. Id. Intuit accounted for 62.2 percent of DDIY returns, HRB for 15.6 percent, and TaxACT for 12.8 percent. Id. DDIY products are offered to consumers through three channels: (1) online through an internet browser; (2) personal computer software downloaded from a website; and (3) personal computer software installed from a disk, which is either sent directly to the consumer or purchased by the consumer from a third-party retailer. GX 629 at 11. In industry parlance, DDIY products provided through an internet browser are called "online" products, while software applications downloaded onto the user's computer via the web or installed from a disk are referred to as "software" products. See id.

The proposed acquisition challenged in this case would combine HRB and TaxACT, the second and third most popular providers of DDIY products, respectively. According to the government, this combination would result in an effective duopoly between HRB and Intuit in the DDIY market, in which the next nearest competitor will have an approximately 3 percent market share, and most other competitors will have less than a 1 percent share. GX 27. The government also alleges that unilateral anticompetitive effects would result from the elimination of head-to-head competition between the merging parties. Compl. ¶ 45.

Thus, the DOJ alleges that because the proposed acquisition would reduce competition in the DDIY industry by eliminating head-to-head competition between the merging parties and by making anticompetitive coordination between the two major remaining market participants substantially more likely, the proposed acquisition violates Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18. Id. ¶¶ 40-49. Accordingly, the government seeks a permanent injunction blocking HRB from acquiring TaxACT. Id. ¶¶ 53-55.

On July 6, 2011, the Court [8] entered a scheduling order in this case that provided for an expedited schedule of fact and expert discovery and briefing on the government's anticipated motion to enjoin the transaction. Joint Scheduling and Case Mgmt. Order, ECF No. 30. On August 1, 2011, the DOJ filed a motion for preliminary injunction against the merger, which was fully briefed by August 18, 2011. The parties subsequently agreed to forego the preliminary injunction phase and proceed directly to a trial on the merits of this action. TT, 9/6/11 a.m., at 8-9.

[2] In this opinion, the Court will use the abbreviations "GX", "GTX", "DX", and "DTX" to refer to the government's exhibits, the government's trial exhibits, the defendants' exhibits, and the defendants' trial exhibits, respectively. "TT" refers to trial testimony. "PFF" refers the plaintiff's proposed findings of fact. "DFF" refers to the defendants' proposed findings of fact.

[3] The denomination of different years in the tax industry can be somewhat confusing. Tax returns are typically due in the month of April following the relevant tax year. Thus, each "tax season" refers to the period when returns for the prior "tax year" are generally completed. For example, "tax season 2010" refers to returns filed primarily [7] in early 2010, corresponding to income earned in "tax year 2009."

On September 2, 2011, the Court held a pre-trial conference. On September 6, the Court began a nine-day bench trial that was held on September 6, 7, 8, 9, 12, 13, 15, 19, and 20. Eight fact witnesses and [*45] three expert witnesses testified at the hearing. The parties presented testimony from additional witnesses by affidavit and deposition. Each side submitted over 800 exhibits, totaling many thousands of pages. Following the conclusion of the evidentiary phase of the trial, the Court gave the parties approximately two weeks to submit post-trial memoranda and proposed findings of fact, which were filed on September 28, 2011. ECF Nos. 98-99. The Court then heard [9] closing arguments on October 3, 2011.

The government's motion to enjoin HRB's acquisition of TaxACT is presently before the Court. For the reasons explained in this opinion, the Court grants the government's motion.

Before proceeding to a discussion of the relevant legal standards governing this case, the Court will provide additional background regarding the parties, their proposed transaction, and the tax preparation industry in general.

B. The Merging Parties

HRB is a Missouri corporation with its principal place of business in Kansas City, Missouri. Compl. ¶ 9; Defs.' Answer, ECF No. 31, ¶ 9. HRB provides both assisted tax preparation services and DDIY products through separate business units. Bennett, TT, 9/6/11 a.m., at 106. HRB offers its DDIY products for consumers under the brand name "H&R Block At Home" (formerly known as "TaxCut"). GX 629 at 9.

In 2011, HRB's DDIY products generated {significant} revenue. GX 296-2. For the same period, HRB sold approximately 6.69 million DDIY units to consumers. GX 296-2. Separately, in 2011, HRB's assisted tax preparation business generated approximately $2.7 billion in revenue (based on 14,756,000 U.S. tax returns at an average fee of $182.96, [10] as reported in HRB's 2011 Annual Report). GX 532 (Cobb Dep.) at 32; GX 565 at 19.

2SS Holdings, Inc. ("2SS") is a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business in Cedar Rapids, Iowa. Compl. ¶ 10; Defs.' Answer ¶ 10. 2SS owns 2nd Story Software, Inc., which offers DDIY products under the brand name "TaxACT." GX 629 at 8-9.

In the fiscal year ending April 30, 2011, TaxACT products generated approximately {half as much revenue as H&R Block}. GX 151 at 6. In the same year, consumers used TaxACT to electronically file approximately 5 million federal tax returns. GX 151 at 3-4.

TA IX, L.P. ("TA") is a private equity firm organized under the laws of Delaware with its headquarters in Boston, Massachusetts. Compl. ¶ 11; Defs.' Answer ¶ 11. In December of 2004, TA purchased a majority interest in 2SS for $85 million, and as a result TA has majority control of 2SS Holdings and 2nd Story Software. GX 55 (Greif Dep.) at 72-73; GX 28-3.

C. The History Of TaxACT And The Proposed Transaction

TaxACT was founded in 1998 by Lance Dunn and three others, with Mr. Dunn serving as president. Dunn, TT, 9/7/11 p.m., at 49-52. Before founding TaxACT, Mr. Dunn and the other co-founders of the company [11] had worked at Parsons Technology, a software company that had created a DDIY tax preparation product called "Personal Tax Edge." Id. at 49-52. In 1994, Intuit acquired Parsons Technology and continued to operate Personal Tax Edge as a separate product for approximately two years before merging it into its TurboTax product line. Id. at 51. Mr. Dunn testified that the business objective of founding TaxACT was "to make money selling value tax software which . . . was a category that [*46] did not exist at that time" because Intuit's acquisition of Parsons Technology had eliminated Personal Tax Edge, which had previously occupied a value tax software niche. Id. at 52. Thus, TaxACT "recreated" the category or "niche that the Personal Tax Edge product line filled when it existed." Id.

Over the years, TaxACT has emphasized high-quality free product offerings as part of its business strategy. Id. at 53. TaxACT initially offered a DDIY tax preparation product that made it free to prepare and print a federal tax return, but TaxACT charged a fee for electronic filing ("e-filing") or preparation of a state tax return. Id. at 54. Thus, from the beginning, TaxACT's business strategy relied on promoting [12] "free" or "freemium" products, in which a basic part of the service is offered for free and add-ons and extra features are sold for a price.[4] As Mr. Dunn put it, "Free is an integral part of the value model. And the beauty of it is it has universal appeal. Everybody likes something for free." Id.

Currently, TaxACT's free product offering allows customers to prepare, print, and e-file a federal tax return completely for free. Id. at 54; GX 28-10 at 5-7. TaxACT's "Deluxe" edition, which costs $9.95, contains additional features, such as the ability to import data from a return filed the prior year through TaxACT. GX 55-26; Dunn, TT, 9/7/11 p.m., at 91-92; GX 28-10 at 5-7; GX 28 (Dunn. Dep.) at 219. Customers who use TaxACT to prepare a state tax return in addition to a federal return pay either $14.95 for the state return [13] in combination with the free federal product or $17.95 for the state return in combination with the "Deluxe" federal product. GX 55-26; Dunn, TT, 9/8/11 a.m., at 49. TaxACT's prices have generally remained unchanged for the past decade. Dunn, TT, 9/7/11 p.m., at 91.

The parties first began discussing the potential acquisition of TaxACT by HRB in July 2009. Bowen, TT, 9/15/11 p.m., at 14. During the fall of 2009, teams from HRB and TaxACT met to discuss the possibilities for the potential acquisition and HRB performed due diligence on TaxACT. See DX 244 at 8-9; Bowen, TT, 9/15/11 p.m., at 19-23, 26; DX 9527 at 35.

Negotiations between the parties stalled in December 2009 and the proposed deal collapsed. Bowen, TT, 9/15/11 p.m., at 33. The CEOs of the two companies continued to discuss a potential acquisition through the spring of 2010, however. Id. at 34. Serious merger talks resumed in July 2010. Id. at 38-39; DX1005.

In October 2010, the HRB Board of Directors approved a plan for HRB to acquire TaxACT. DX 600 at 12-13; Bowen, TT, 9/15/11 p.m., at 59-60. On October 13, 2010, HRB entered into a merger agreement with 2SS and TA. GX 120 at 1. Under this agreement, HRB would acquire control [14] of 2SS for $287.5 million. GX 120 at 6; GX 119 at 1. HRB's stated post-merger plan is to maintain both the HRB and TaxACT brands – with the HRB-brand focusing on higher priced-products and the TaxACT brand focusing on the lower-priced products. See Bennett, TT, 9/6/11 a.m., at 101-102; DX 1005 at 1. HRB plans {redacted} ultimately to rely on TaxACT's current technological platform and intends to give Mr. Dunn responsibility for running the combined firm's [*47] entire DDIY business operation from Cedar Rapids, Iowa. Dunn, TT, 9/8/11 p.m. (sealed), at 14-16; see also Bennett, TT, 9/6/11 a.m., at 110.

D. Free Products And The Free File Alliance

The evolution of TaxACT's free product offerings and the other free offerings in the DDIY market is important for understanding the claims in this case. The players in the DDIY market offer various "free" tax preparation products, but the features and functionality offered in these free products vary significantly, as do the ways in which these free products are ultimately combined with paid products to earn revenue. While the availability of some types of free product offers has long been a feature of the DDIY market, a spike in free offerings occurred [15] during the last decade in parallel with the growth of e-filing.

As a matter of public policy, the IRS actively promotes e-filing because it has an interest in efficient and accessible tax return preparation and filing. The Internal Revenue Service Restructuring and Reform Act of 1998 set a goal of having eighty percent of individual taxpayers e-filing their returns by 2007. IRS Stip., ECF No. 80, ¶ 2. The IRS is close to achieving that goal and the IRS Oversight Board has recommended that the 80 percent benchmark be achieved by 2012. Id. According to stipulated facts attested to by IRS employees, in 2001, the IRS adopted an initiative "to decrease the tax preparation and filing burden of wage earners by providing greater access to free online tax preparation and filing options for a significant number of taxpayers." Id. ¶ 4. The IRS also determined that it could save a substantial amount of public money by encouraging filers to switch to e-filing, since e-filed returns are cheaper for the IRS to process. Id. ¶ 5.

[4] The business model of offering free products and then soliciting customers to purchase additional, related features or services is sometimes referred to as "freemium." See GX 130 ("H&R Block Strategic Planning Working Session, April 16 &17, 2010") at 103 ("'Freemium' is a known market dynamic that has arisen in multiple product categories and will continue to grow.").

The IRS determined that the most effective and efficient way to accomplish its goal of promoting access to free online tax preparation and filing options was to partner with [16] a consortium of companies in the electronic tax preparation and filing industry. Id. ¶ 6; GX 297-D7 at E-2. In 2002, this consortium of companies formed Free File Alliance, LLC ("FFA") in order to partner with the IRS on this initiative to promote free filing. IRS Stip. ¶ 6; GX 297-D7 at E-2. HRB, TaxACT, and Intuit are all members of the FFA, as are approximately fifteen smaller companies. See IRS Stip. ¶ 8; DX 328. On October 30, 2002, the IRS and the FFA entered into a "Free On-Line Electronic Tax Filing Agreement" to provide free online tax return preparation and filing to individual taxpayers. IRS Stip. ¶ 9. Pursuant to this agreement, members of the FFA would offer free, online tax preparation and filing services to taxpayers, and the IRS would provide taxpayers with links to those free services through a web page, hosted at irs.gov and accessible through another government website. Id. ¶ 12. HRB, TaxACT, and Intuit were among the original members to make free offers through the FFA. Id. ¶ 8.

"In 2003, the first year in which free services were available to taxpayers through the FFA, none of the FFA members offered free services to all taxpayers." Id. ¶ 14. Rather, each "member [17] set eligibility criteria. Most members, including H&R Block, TaxACT, and Intuit, used adjusted gross income ('AGI') as a way to define which taxpayers were eligible" for their offers of free federal tax return preparation services. Id. "For example, H&R Block offered free services to taxpayers with an AGI of $28,000 or less." Id. Some members that offered free federal return [*48] preparation services based on AGI also offered free services to taxpayers who met other conditions, such as eligibility to file a Form 1040EZ. Id. "Several members did not define eligibility based on AGI. Of the eleven FFA members that offered free services based on AGI, only TaxACT's AGI-based offering was available to individuals with AGI over $33,000." Id. Specifically, TaxACT made its free federal services available exclusively to taxpayers who had AGI over $100,000 or were eligible to file a Form 1040EZ. Id.

In 2004, the second year in which free services for federal returns were available to taxpayers through the FFA, TaxACT introduced a new offer through the FFA that offered free preparation and e-filing of federal returns for all taxpayers regardless of AGI or other limitations ("free for all"). See id. [18] ¶ 15; Dunn, TT, 9/7/11 p.m., at 65, 78. After TaxACT introduced a free-for-all offer through the FFA, other companies followed by introducing federal free-for-all offers of their own. Dunn, TT, 9/7/11 p.m., at 78 ("After we offered free for everyone in 2003, in 2004, a lot of companies offered free for everyone on the FFA.").

According to Mr. Dunn's testimony, after TaxACT made its FFA offer of a free federal product for all taxpayers, without any AGI or other limitations, other companies made efforts to restrict the wide availability of free offers on the FFA. Id. at 79. Specifically, according to Mr. Dunn, Intuit proposed that companies in the FFA collude by agreeing to restrict free offers. Id. Mr. Dunn and TaxACT opposed Intuit's proposal and believed that it was "probably not legal for that group to restrain trade." Id.

Subsequently, HRB, Intuit and others successfully lobbied the IRS to implement restrictions on the number of taxpayers that could be covered by a free offer through the FFA website. GX 28 (Dunn Dep.) at 114-15; GX 28-4; GX 35 at HRB-DOJ-00912870; GX 569 (DuMars Dep.) at 108, 112-113; Ernst, TT, 9/7/11 a.m., 26-27; GX 41 at 4; GX 25 (TaxHawk Decl.) ¶ 16. HRB desired [19] these restrictions because, among other things, it was concerned about how free-for-all offers would affect the pricing structure for the industry and believed that such offers might undermine the company's ability to generate money through the paid side of its DDIY business. Ernst, TT, 9/7/11 a.m., at 26-27; GX 531 (Ciaramitaro Dep.) at 60-62; see also GX 41 at 4; GX 25 (TaxHawk Decl.) ¶ 16.

The IRS amended the FFA rules in October 2005 to prevent FFA members from making free-for-all offers. Dunn, TT, 9/7/11 p.m., at 78-79; Ernst, TT, 9/7/11 a.m., at 29; GX 42; GX 25 (TaxHawk Decl.) ¶ 16; GX 29 (Intuit Decl.) ¶ 9. Therefore, TaxACT could no longer make its free-for-all offer through the FFA.

In tax year 2005, in response to restrictions that the IRS imposed on the scope of offers that could be made through the FFA, TaxACT became the first DDIY company to offer all tax payers a free DDIY product for preparation of federal returns directly on its website. Dunn, TT, 9/7/11 p.m., at 79-80; GX 28 (Dunn Dep.) at 122-23. Today, free offers in various forms are an entrenched part of the DDIY market. Dunn, TT, 9/8/11 a.m., 85; Defs.' Opening Stmt., TT, 9/6/11 a.m., at 86-87.

"Defining the relevant market is critical in an antitrust case because the legality of the proposed merger[] in question almost always depends upon the market power of the parties involved." Id. (quoting FTC v. Cardinal Health, Inc., 12 F. Supp. 2d 34, 45 (D.D.C. 1998)). Indeed, the relevant market definition is often "the key to the ultimate resolution of this type of case because of the relative implications of market power."[7] Id.

The government argues that the relevant market in this case consists of all DDIY products, but does not include assisted tax preparation or pen-and-paper. Under this view of the market, the acquisition in this case would result in a DDIY market that is dominated by two large players – H&R Block and Intuit – that together control approximately 90 percent of the market share, with the remaining 10 percent of the market divided amongst a plethora of smaller companies. In contrast, the defendants argue for a broader market that includes all tax preparation methods ("all methods"), comprised of DDIY, assisted, and pen-and-paper. Under this view of the market, the market concentration effects of this acquisition would be much smaller and would not lead to a situation in which two firms control 90 percent of the market. This broader view of the market rests primarily on the premise that providers of all methods of tax preparation compete with each other for [26] the patronage of the same pool of customers – U.S. taxpayers. After carefully considering the evidence and arguments presented by all parties, the Court has concluded that the relevant market in this case is, as the DOJ contends, the market for digital do-it-yourself tax preparation products.

HN6[] A "relevant product market" is a term of art in antitrust analysis. The Supreme Court has set forth the general rule for defining a relevant product market: "The outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use [by consumers] [*51] or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it." Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 325; see also United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 395, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956). In other words, courts look at "whether two products can be used for the same purpose, and, if so, whether and to what extent purchasers are willing to substitute one for the other." FTC v. Staples, Inc., 970 F. Supp. 1066, 1074 (D.D.C. 1997) (citation omitted); see also Bon-Ton Stores, Inc. v. May Dep't Stores Co., 881 F. Supp. 860, 868 (W.D.N.Y. 1994) (citing Hayden Pub. Co. v. Cox Broad. Corp., 730 F.2d 64, 71 (2d Cir. 1984)).

[7] HN5[] "A relevant market has two components: (1) the relevant product market and (2) the relevant geographic market. . . . The 'relevant geographic market' identifies the geographic area in which the defendants compete in marketing their products or services." FTC v. CCC Holdings, Inc., 605 F. Supp. 2d 26, 37 (D.D.C. 2009). The parties have stipulated that the relevant geographic market in this case is worldwide. Joint Pre-Hearing Statement ¶ IX, C, 12. DDIY products are provided online and can be used by any individual worldwide – either within the United States or abroad – who needs to prepare [25] and file a U.S. tax return. The products at issue in this case are not used for preparation of foreign tax returns. See Pl.'s Mot. For Prelim. Inj. at 29-30. The Court accepts the parties' stipulation as to the relevant geographic market.

HN7[] A broad, [27] overall market may contain smaller markets which themselves "constitute product markets for antitrust purposes."[8] Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 325. "[T]he mere fact that a firm may be termed a competitor in the overall marketplace does not necessarily require that it be included in the relevant product market for antitrust purposes." Staples, 970 F. Supp. at 1075. Traditionally, courts have held that the boundaries of a relevant product market within a broader market "may be determined by examining such practical indicia as industry or public recognition of the [relevant market] as a separate economic entity, the product's peculiar characteristics and uses, unique production facilities, distinct customers, distinct prices, sensitivity to price changes, and specialized vendors." FTC v. Whole Foods Market, Inc. 548 F.3d 1028, 1037-38 (D.C. Cir. 2008) (Brown, J.) (quoting Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 325).[9] See also FTC v. CCC Holdings, Inc., 605 F. Supp. 2d 26, 38 (D.D.C. 2009). These "practical indicia" of market boundaries may be viewed as evidentiary proxies for proof of substitutability and cross-elasticities of supply and demand. Rothery Storage & Van Co. v. Atlas Van Lines, Inc., 792 F.2d 210, 218, 253 U.S. App. D.C. 142 (D.C. Cir. 1986).

HN8[] An analytical method often used by courts to define a relevant market is to ask hypothetically whether it would be profitable to have a monopoly over a given set of substitutable products. If so, those products may constitute a relevant market. See 5C PHILLIP E. AREEDA & HERBERT HOVENKAMP, ANTITRUST LAW (hereinafter, "Areeda & Hovenkamp"), ¶ 530a, at 226 (3d ed. 2007) ("[A] market can be seen as the array of producers of substitute products that could control price if united in a hypothetical cartel or as a hypothetical monopoly."). This approach – sometimes [*52] called the "hypothetical monopolist test" – is endorsed by the Horizontal Merger Guidelines issued by the DOJ and Federal Trade Commission. See Fed. Trade Comm'n & U.S. Dep't of Justice Horizontal Merger Guidelines (2010) (hereinafter, "Merger Guidelines"), § 4.1.1.[10] In the merger context, this inquiry boils down to whether "a hypothetical profit-maximizing firm, not subject to price regulation, that [30] was the only present and future seller of those products . . . likely would impose at least a small but significant and non-transitory increase in price ("SSNIP") on at least one product in the market, including at least one product sold by one of the merging firms." Id. The "small but significant and non-transitory increase in price," or SSNIP, is typically assumed to be five percent or more. Id. § 4.1.2.

Thus, the question here is whether it would be hypothetically useful to have a monopoly over all DDIY tax preparation products because the monopolist could then profitably raise prices for those products by five percent or more; or whether, to the contrary, there would be no reason to monopolize all DDIY tax preparation products because substitution and price competition with other methods of tax preparation would restrain any potential DDIY monopolist from profitably raising prices. In other words, would enough DDIY users switch to the assisted or pen-and-paper methods of tax preparation in response to a five-to-ten [31] percent increase in DDIY prices to make such a price increase unprofitable?

[8] Courts [28] have sometimes referred to such markets-within-markets as "submarkets." See Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 325; Whole Foods, 548 F.3d at 1037-38 (Brown, J.). Other courts and commentators have criticized this "submarket" terminology as unduly confusing, however. See 5C PHILLIP E. AREEDA & HERBERT HOVENKAMP, ANTITRUST LAW ¶ 533, at 251 (3d ed. 2007) ("Courts sometimes describe the closest substitutes as a 'submarket' within a larger 'market' of less-close substitutes. Although degrees of constraint do in fact vary, the 'market' for antitrust purposes is the one relevant to the particular legal issue at hand.") (internal citations omitted); Geneva Pharms. Tech. Corp. v. Barr Labs, Inc., 386 F.3d 485, 496 (2d Cir. 2004) ("The term 'submarket' is somewhat of a misnomer, since the 'submarket' analysis simply clarifies whether two products are in fact 'reasonable' substitutes and are therefore part of the same market.").

[9] The D.C. Circuit's decision in Whole Foods lacked a majority opinion. See Whole Foods, 548 F.3d at 1061 n.8 (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting). Judges Brown and Tatel filed separate opinions concurring in the judgment to reverse the District Court and Judge Kavanaugh, in dissent, would [29] have affirmed. See id. at 1032 (Brown, J.); id. at 1041 (Tatel, J.); id. at 1051 n.1 (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting). Thus, in referring to the opinions in Whole Foods, the Court will indicate the name of the Judge whose opinion is cited.

[10] The Merger Guidelines are not binding upon this Court, but courts in antitrust cases often look to them as persuasive authority. See Staples, 970 F. Supp. at 1081-82.

In evaluating the relevant product market here, the Court considers business documents from the defendants and others, the testimony of the fact witnesses, and the analyses of the parties' expert economists. This evidence demonstrates that DDIY is the relevant product market in this case.

1. The Defendants' Documents Show That DDIY Is The Relevant Product Market.

HN9[] When determining the relevant product market, courts often pay close attention to the defendants' ordinary course of business documents. See, e.g., Staples, 970 F. Supp. at 1076; CCC Holdings, 605 F. Supp. 2d at 41-42. The government argues that the defendants' ordinary course of business documents in this case "conclusively demonstrate that competition with other [DDIY] firms drive Defendants' pricing decisions, quality improvements, and corporate strategy" for their own DDIY products—thus supporting the government's view of the relevant market. Pl.'s Post-Trial Mem. at 7. The defendants contend that the government has relied on "select, 'out-of-context' snippets from documents," and that the documents as a whole support the defendants' view that the [32] relevant product market is all methods of tax preparation. Defs.' Post-Trial Mem. at 1. The Court finds that the documentary evidence in this case supports the conclusion that DDIY is the relevant product market.

Internal TaxACT documents establish that TaxACT has viewed DDIY offerings by HRB and TurboTax as its primary competitors, that it has tracked their marketing, product offerings, and pricing, and that it has determined its own pricing and business strategy in relation to those companies' DDIY products. See GX 295-16 ("Competitive Analysis" comparing the three companies); GX 102 (email explaining TaxACT is a "direct competitor" with HRB and Intuit's products); GX 55 (Greif Dep.) at 137-38 (describing TaxACT's [*53] compilation of a routine, end-of-season competitive analysis that "typically" covers Intuit, HRB, and TaxACT). Confidential memoranda prepared by TaxACT's investment bankers for potential private equity buyers of TaxACT identify HRB and TurboTax as TaxACT's primary competitors in a DDIY market. See GX 7 (Greene Holcomb & Fisher "Confidential Memorandum") at 14 ("The Company's major competitors for both desktop and Internet-based income tax software and e-filing services [33] include Intuit (the makers of TurboTax software) and H&R Block (the makers of TaxCut software)."); GX 134 (Deutsche Bank "Confidential Information Memorandum") at 17 ("The Company's two main competitors, Intuit and H&R Block. . ."); see also Dunn, TT, 9/7/11 p.m., at 97-104. These documents also recognize that TaxACT's strategy for competing with Intuit and HRB is to offer a lower price for what it deems a superior product. GX 7 at 14 ("Relative to its two major competitors, 2nd Story has positioned its product offerings as being of equal or higher quality, and completely fulfilling the needs of a vast portion of the potential market. It also pursues a pricing strategy that positions its products and services meaningfully below either Intuit or H&R Block, in some instances free.").

While, as defendants point out, parts of these TaxACT documents also discuss the broader tax preparation industry, these documents make clear that TaxACT's own view – and that conveyed by its investment bankers to potential buyers – is that the company primarily competes in a DDIY market against Intuit and HRB and that it develops its pricing and business strategy with that market and those competitors in [34] mind. These documents are strong evidence that DDIY is the relevant product market. See Whole Foods, 548 F.3d at 1045 (Tatel, J.) (HN10[] "[E]vidence of industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate economic unit matters because we assume that economic actors usually have accurate perceptions of economic realities.") (internal quotation omitted).

Internal HRB documents also evidence HRB's perception of a discrete DDIY market or market segment. HRB and its outside consultants have tracked its digital competitors' activities, prices, and product offerings. See GX 28-19 ("2009 Competitive Price Comparison"); GX 118 (independent analyst's report analyzing digital competitors as one of three separate categories of competitors); GX 61-8 at 1 (slide on competition in "digital market" identifying TurboTax and TaxACT as competitors); GX 199 (HRB "digital strategy update" Powerpoint tracking features and prices for TurboTax and TaxACT); GX 188 (HRB spreadsheet comparing HRB, TurboTax, and TaxACT prices for various product offerings). Documents from HRB's DDIY business have also referred to HRB, TaxACT, and TurboTax as the "Big Three" competitors in the DDIY market. GX 61-3 ("OCS Offsite [35] Competitive Intelligence Review of TS07") at 5; GX 61-4 at 1 (email referencing request for data from consultant regarding "big 3 digital tax prep companies"); see also GX 70 (email from head of HRB's digital business stating its "only real direct competitors are turbotax in san diego and taxact in cedar rapids" [sic]); Ernst, TT, 9/7/11 a.m., at 13-14. Finally, the documents show that, in connection with a proposed acquisition of TaxACT, HRB identified the proposed transaction as a way to grow its digital "market share" and has measured TaxACT's market share in a DDIY market. GX 130 at 96-99; GX 21-37 (projections from 2009 for different potential scenarios for acquisition of TaxACT, including their effect on DDIY market share); see also Newkirk, TT, 9/7/11 a.m., at 95-96 (explaining GX 21-37). All of these documents [*54] also provide evidence that DDIY is a relevant product market.

The defendants acknowledge that "the merging parties certainly have documents that discuss each other and digital competitors generally, and even reference a digital market and the 'Big Three,'" but contend this evidence is insufficient to prove a market. Defs.' Post-Trial Mem. at 9. Rather, the defendants argue [36] that the documents show that the relevant market is all methods of tax preparation, especially in light of documented competition between DDIY providers and assisted providers for the same overall pool of U.S. taxpayers who are potential customers. See id. 9-10; see, e.g., DX 78 at 4 (Intuit document explaining 2011 strategic goal of acquiring tax store customers); GX 650 at 41 (Intuit document noting goal of acquiring tax store customers and specifically mentioning HRB). As discussed below, the Court disagrees and finds that the relevant product market is DDIY products.

2. The Relevant Product Market Does Not Include Assisted Tax Preparation Or Manual Preparation.

It is beyond debate – and conceded by the plaintiff – that all methods of tax preparation are, to some degree, in competition. Pl.'s Post-Trial Mem. at 8. All tax preparation methods provide taxpayers with a means to perform the task of completing a tax return, but each method is starkly different. Thus, while providers of all tax preparation methods may compete at some level, this "does not necessarily require that [they] be included in the relevant product market for antitrust purposes." Staples, 970 F. Supp. at 1075. DDIY [37] tax preparation products differ from manual tax preparation and assisted tax preparation products in a number of meaningful ways. As compared to manual and assisted methods, DDIY products involve different technology, price, convenience level, time investment, mental effort and type of interaction by the consumer. Taken together, these different attributes make the consumer experience of using DDIY products quite distinct from other methods of tax preparation. See Whole Foods, 548 F.3d at 1037-38 (Brown, J.) (noting that HN11[] a "product's peculiar characteristics and uses" and "distinct prices" may distinguish a relevant market) (citing Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 325); see also, e.g., GX 130 at 140 (HRB internal analysis discussing convenience and price as factors differentiating DDIY and assisted methods for consumers). The question for this court is whether DDIY and other methods of tax preparation are "reasonably interchangeable" so that it would not be profitable to have a monopoly over only DDIY products.

a. Assisted Tax Preparation Is Not In The Relevant Product Market.

Apart from the analysis of their economic expert, the defendants' main argument for inclusion of assisted tax preparation [38] in the relevant market is that DDIY and assisted companies compete for customers.[11] As evidence for this point, the defendants emphasize that Intuit's marketing efforts have targeted HRB's assisted customers. See DX 78 at 3 (Intuit document noting strategic goal to "Beat Tax Store[s]"). While the evidence does show that companies in the DDIY and assisted markets all generally compete with each [*55] other for the same overall pool of potential customers – U.S. taxpayers – that fact does not necessarily mean that DDIY and assisted must be viewed as part of the same relevant product market. DDIY provides customers with tax preparation services through an entirely different method, technology, and user experience than assisted preparation. As Judge Tatel explained in Whole Foods:

> [W]hen the automobile was first invented, competing auto manufacturers obviously took customers primarily from companies selling horses and buggies, not from other auto manufacturers, but that hardly shows that cars > and horse-drawn carriages should be treated as the same product market. That Whole Foods and Wild Oats have attracted many customers away from conventional grocery stores by offering extensive selections [39] of natural and organic products thus tells us nothing about whether Whole Foods and Wild Oats should be treated as operating in the same market as conventional grocery stores. Indeed, courts have often found that sufficiently innovative retailers can constitute a distinct product market even when they take customers from existing retailers.

Whole Foods, 548 F.3d at 1048; see also Staples, 970 F. Supp. at 1074-80 (finding a distinct market of office supply superstores despite competition from mail-order catalogues and stores carrying a broader range of merchandise).

The key question for the Court is whether DDIY and assisted products are sufficiently close substitutes to constrain any anticompetitive DDIY pricing after the proposed merger. Evidence of the absence of close price competition between DDIY and assisted products makes clear that the answer to that question is no—and [40] that DDIY is the relevant product market here. See Swedish Match, 131 F. Supp. 2d at 165 (HN12[] "Distinct pricing is also a consideration" in determining the relevant product market) (citing Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 325). Significantly, despite some DDIY efforts to capture tax store customers, none of the major DDIY competitors sets their prices based on consideration of assisted prices. See, e.g., Ernst, TT, 9/7/11 a.m., at 35 (HRB set its digital and assisted prices separately); {redacted} (Dep.) at 183:18-25 (explaining that {redacted} does not consider assisted pricing in setting prices because its prices are already "substantially less than both tax stores and most professionals"). Indeed, there are quite significant price disparities between the average prices of DDIY and assisted products. The average price of TurboTax, the most popular DDIY brand is approximately $55. GX 293 (Intuit Dep.) at 21. The average price of HRB's DDIY products is approximately $25. GX 296-7 at 6. Overall, the DDIY industry average price is $44.13. GX 121 at 57. In contrast, the typical price of an assisted tax return is significantly higher, in the range of $150-200.[12] A 10 percent or even 20 percent price [41] increase in the average price of DDIY would only move the average price up to $48.54 or $52.96, respectively – still substantially below the average price of assisted tax products. The overall lack of evidence of price competition between DDIY and assisted products supports the conclusion that DDIY is a separate relevant product market for evaluating this transaction, despite the fact that DDIY [*56] and assisted firms target their marketing efforts at the same pool of customers.

The defendants point to some evidence that HRB sets prices for certain assisted products to compete with DDIY. For example, defendants note that in 2009, HRB "reduced prices on its assisted tax preparation services to $39 for federal 1040EZ preparation and $29 for state tax preparation to compete with and {redacted}" to DDIY. DFF ¶ 77a. These are limited product offerings for which prices [42] appear well below even the 25th percentile price for HRB's assisted products. See GX 128 (HRB "TS10 Market Dynamics" presentation) at 38 (noting, for Tax Season 2010, that the 25th percentile for prices at HRB stores was {higher than DDIY}). Relatedly, the defendants' claim that prices for assisted and DDIY products "significantly overlap" is not strongly supported and relies on a comparison of the most limited, low-end assisted products with DDIY products generally. See DFF ¶ 78b (citing tax year 2009 data that show that 14 percent of customers using name-brand tax stores paid $50 or less and another 20 percent paid between $51-100); id. ¶ 78c-d (quoting prices for Jackson Hewitt's preparation of form 1040EZ, a simplified tax form, at Wal-Mart and for HRB's Second Look service, which actually only double-checks an already completed tax return for errors). In sum, while defendants' have identified isolated instances in which assisted product offerings are priced lower than the average prices for typical assisted products, they do not and cannot demonstrate that this is generally the case.

Testimony from HRB executives further supports treating DDIY as a relevant product market in evaluating [43] this transaction. HRB's DDIY and assisted businesses are run as separate business units. Bennett, TT, 9/6/11 a.m., at 106. Alan Bennett, who was the CEO of HRB in 2010 when the parties reached the proposed merger agreement, testified that "net-net," he did not believe that HRB's DDIY business had impacted its assisted business in terms of taking away customers.[13] Id. at 108; see also GX 1151 at 4 (HRB internal analysis stating "Online is not growing materially at the expense of assisted."). Mark Ernst, HRB's CEO from 2001 to 2007, also explained that, in his opinion based on research he reviewed while at HRB, the primary reason consumers switched between assisted and DDIY was because of "life events" that led to changes in tax status. Ernst, TT, 9/7/11 a.m., at 34-35.

Finally, defendants argue that their broad relevant market is appropriate because [44] there is "industry movement toward 'hybrid' products that combine some elements of both digital and assisted tax preparation." Defs.' Post-Trial Mem. at 11. Based on the evidence presented at the hearing, however, it would be premature for the Court to identify any trend toward hybrid products. In fact, neither Intuit nor TaxACT presently offers a hybrid product and the defendants openly concede that HRB's current hybrid product has had "somewhat limited success," which defendants attribute to "technical issues" and a "lack of consistent marketing." Id. at 11 n.16. {redacted} {T}he Court finds it unlikely that there will be a sufficiently large scale shift into these products in the immediate future to compel the conclusion that DDIY and assisted [*57] products make up the same relevant product market.

b. Manual Tax Preparation Is Not In The Relevant Product Market.

The defendants also argue that manual tax preparation, or pen-and-paper, should be included in the relevant product market. At the outset, the Court notes that pen-and-paper is not a "product" at all; it is the task of filling out a tax return by oneself without any interactive assistance. Even so, the defendants argue pen-and-paper [45] should be included in the relevant product market because it acts as a "significant competitive constraint" on DDIY. Defs.' Post-Trial Mem. at 11. The defendants' argument relies primarily on two factors. First, the defendants' cite the results of a 2011 email survey of TaxACT customers. See id. For reasons detailed in the following section, the Court declines to rely on this email survey. Second, the defendants point to documents and testimony indicating that TaxACT has considered possible diversion to pen-and-paper in setting its prices. See id. at 11-12.

The Court finds that pen-and-paper is not part of the relevant market because it does not believe a sufficient number of consumers would switch to pen-and-paper in response to a small, but significant increase in DDIY prices. The possibility of preparing one's own tax return necessarily constrains the prices of other methods of preparation at some level. For example, if the price of DDIY and assisted products were raised to $1 million per tax return, surely all but the most well-heeled taxpayers would switch to pen-and-paper. Yet, at the more practical price increase levels that trigger antitrust concern – the typical five to ten [46] percent price increase of the SSNIP test – pen-and-paper preparation is unlikely to provide a meaningful restraint for DDIY products, which currently sell for an average price of $44.13. GX 121 at 57.

The government well illustrated the overly broad nature of defendants' proposed relevant market by posing to the defendants' expert the hypothetical question of whether "sitting at home and drinking chicken soup [would be] part of the market for [manufactured] cold remedies?" Meyer, TT, 9/13/11 a.m., at 65. The defendants' expert responded that the real "question is if the price of cold medicines went up sufficiently, would people turn to chicken soup?" Id. As an initial matter, in contrast to the defendants' expert, the Court doubts that it would ever be legally appropriate to define a relevant product market that included manufactured cold remedies and ordinary chicken soup. This conclusion flows from the deep functional differences between those products. Setting that issue aside, however, a price has increased "sufficiently" to trigger antitrust concern at the level of a five to ten percent small, but significant non-transitory increase in price. Just as chicken soup is unlikely to [47] constrain the price of manufactured cold remedies sufficiently, the Court concludes that a SSNIP in DDIY would not be constrained by people turning to pen-and-paper. First, the share of returns prepared via pen-and-paper has dwindled over the past decade, as the DDIY market has grown. Bennett, TT, 9/6/11 a.m, at 118; GX 296 (Houseworth Dep.) at 66-68. Second, while pen-and-paper filers have been a net source of new customers for DDIY companies, both HRB and {redacted} executives have testified that they do not believe their DDIY products compete closely with pen-and-paper methods. {redacted} (Dep.) at 37:20-38:10; see GX 296 (Houseworth Dep.) 89-90. Third, HN13[] courts in antitrust cases frequently exclude similar "self-supply" substitutes from relevant product markets. See, e.g., FTC v. H.J. [*58] Heinz Co., 116 F. Supp. 2d 190, 195 (D.D.C. 2000), rev'd on other grounds, 246 F.3d 708, 345 U.S. App. D.C. 364 (D.C. Cir. 2001) (noting that homemade baby food and breast milk should not be included in the jarred baby food market even though substitution was possible because "the Supreme Court's interchangeability test refers to products."); CCC Holdings, 605 F. Supp. 2d at 41-42 (excluding books that can be used to perform [48] insurance loss valuations by hand from market for loss valuation software); United States v. Visa U.S.A. Inc., 163 F. Supp. 2d 322, 338 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) (excluding cash and checks from general purpose credit card market).

[13] By "net-net," Mr. Bennett meant that while there is customer switching between the DDIY and assisted businesses, the total share of customers in each has been relatively stable over the past few years, such that Mr. Bennett could conclude that the two business lines "do not steal customers back and forth net." Bennett, TT, 9/6/11 a.m., at 108.

The main case the defendants rely on to show that "self-supply" substitutes should be included in the relevant market involved a consumer market consisting of vertically integrated companies and explicitly distinguished cases, such as this one, involving markets of individual consumers. In United States v. Sungard Data Systems, Inc., Judge Huvelle found that disaster recovery computer systems developed internally by companies were in the same relevant product market as shared data recovery systems provided by outside vendors. Sungard, 172 F. Supp. 2d at 187-89. The Sungard court, however, distinguished the case before it – which involved vertical integration – from the situation in Heinz, the case involving the market for jarred baby food, because "homemade baby food is not an aspect of vertical integration . . . [and] individual consumers cannot vertically integrate by producing a product that they would otherwise have to purchase." Id. at 187 n.15. In finding that [49] in-house computer systems were included in its relevant product market, the Sungard court cited the following example from Areeda & Hovenkamp ¶ 535e regarding vertical integration:

> If iron ore is the relevant market and if shares are best measured there by sales, then internally used ore—so-called captive output—is part of the ore market even though it is not sold as such.
> In measuring the market power of a defendant selling iron ore, the ore used internally by other firms constrains the defendant's ability to profit by raising ore prices to monopoly levels. The higher ore price may induce an integrated firm to expand its ore production—to supply others in direct competition with the alleged monopolist or to expand its own steel production and thereby reduce the demand of other steel makers for ore, or both. Hence, captive output constrains the defendant regardless of whether integrated firms sell their ore to other steel makers previously purchasing from the defendant. In sum, the integrated firm's ore output belongs in the market.

Id. at 186 n.14. This rationale for including "self-supply" in a relevant product market does not appear to apply to the DDIY market in which the consumers [50] are individuals and not also potential traders or producers.

While some diversion from DDIY to manual filing may occur in response to a SSNIP, the Court finds that it would likely be limited and marginal. The functional experience of using a DDIY product is meaningfully different from the self-service task of filling out tax forms independently. Manual completion of a tax return requires different tools, effort, resources, and time investment by a consumer than use of either DDIY or assisted methods. The following discussion from United States v. Visa U.S.A. Inc. regarding why cash and checks should not be included in the credit card market is instructive here:

> [A]lthough it is literally true that, in a general sense, cash and checks compete with general purpose cards as an option for payment by consumers and that [*59] growth in payments via cards takes share from cash and checks in some instances, cash and checks do not drive many of the means of competition in the general purpose card market. In this respect, [the expert's] analogy of the general purpose card market to that for airplane travel is illustrative. [The expert] argues that while it is true that at the margin there is some competition [51] for customers among planes, trains, cars and buses, the reality is that airplane travel is a distinct product in which airlines are the principal drivers of competition. Any airline that had monopoly power over airline travel could raise prices or limit output without significant concern about competition from other forms of transportation. The same holds true for competition among general purpose credit and charge cards.

Visa U.S.A. Inc., 163 F. Supp. 2d at 338. Here, the same analogy to airplane travel holds true for competition among DDIY providers, who provide a distinct product for completion of tax returns. Indeed, the pen-and-paper method, in which the consumer essentially relies on his or her own labor to prepare a tax return, is perhaps most analogous to walking as opposed to purchasing a ride on any means of transportation. In sum, filling out a tax return manually is not reasonably interchangeable with DDIY products that effectively fill out the tax return with data input provided by the consumer.

Inclusion of all possible methods of tax preparation, including pen-and-paper, in the relevant product market also violates the principle that the relevant product market should [52] ordinarily be defined as the smallest product market that will satisfy the hypothetical monopolist test. See Merger Guidelines § 4.1.1 ("When the Agencies rely on market shares and concentration, they usually do so in the smallest relevant market satisfying the hypothetical monopolist test."); see also Warren-Boulton, TT, 9/8/11 p.m., at 35-36. Indeed, the defendants' inclusion of pen-and-paper in the relevant market ignores at least one obvious, smaller market possibility that they might have proposed – the combined market of all DDIY and assisted tax preparation products. It is hardly plausible that a monopolist of this market – to which the only alternative would be pen-and-paper – could not impose a SSNIP.

The defendants' proposed relevant market of all methods of tax return preparation is so broadly defined that, as the plaintiff's expert testified, there are no conceivable alternatives besides going to jail, fleeing to Canada, or not earning any taxable income. Warren-Boulton, TT, 9/8/11 p.m., at 35-36. As the plaintiff's expert put it, "if you're talking about the market for all tax preparation, you're talking about a market where, in economist terms, demand is completely [in]elastic. [53] There are no alternatives." Id. at 35. In such circumstances, the usual tools of antitrust analysis – such as the hypothetical monopolist test – cease being useful because it is self-evident that a monopolist of all forms of tax preparation, including self-preparation, could impose a small, but significant price increase. Indeed, a monopolist in that situation could essentially name any price since taxpayers would have no alternative but to pay it. As the plaintiff's expert testified, defining a market that broadly > negates the entire purpose of defining a relevant market in an antitrust case. You want to define a relevant market in an antitrust case so then [you can calculate] shares and the change in shares makes sense. I don't want to go to infinity . . . I want to define a relevant market under . . .the smallest market principle, which is I want to define the [*60] relevant market so that if a hypothetical monopolist . . . did manage to control all of those products, they would impose a significant price increase, large enough to be of concern but not so large as to make the whole exercise pointless.

Id. at 35-36. The Court agrees with this assessment and finds the defendants' proposed [54] relevant market to be overbroad.

3. The Economic Expert Testimony Tends To Confirm That DDIY Is The Relevant Product Market.

Both the plaintiff and the defendants presented testimony from expert economists to support their view of the relevant product market.[14] In addition to their testimony at the hearing, these expert witnesses also provided a detailed expert report and an affidavit summarizing their analysis and conclusions.

[14] The plaintiff presented expert testimony on market definition from Frederick R. Warren-Boulton, an economist at MiCRA, an economics consulting and research firm. GX 121 (Warren-Boulton Rep.) at 1. Dr. Warren-Boulton holds a B.A. from Yale University, a Ph.D. in economics from Princeton University, and formerly served as the chief economist for the Antitrust Division of the U.S. Department of Justice. Id. Dr. Warren-Boulton has previously served as an expert witness in other antitrust cases, including cases challenging the possible anticompetitive effects of a merger or acquisition. Id. (noting involvement in FTC v. Staples, Inc., 970 F. Supp. 1066, 1074 (D.D.C. 1997)).

The defendants presented expert testimony from Christine Siegwarth Meyer, an economist at National [55] Economic Research Associates, Inc., an economics consulting and research firm. DX 17 (Meyer Rep.) at 1. Dr. Meyer holds a B.A. from the United States Military Academy at West Point, a Ph.D. in economics from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and has taught economics at the university level. Id. Dr. Meyer has not previously provided expert testimony regarding the possible anticompetitive effects of a merger or acquisition. Meyer, TT, 9/13/11 a.m., at 39.

The Court finds that the analysis performed by the plaintiff's expert tends to confirm that DDIY is a relevant product market, although the available data in this case limited the predictive power of the plaintiff's expert's economic models. The Court also finds that it cannot draw any conclusions from defendants' expert's analysis because of severe shortcomings in the underlying consumer survey data upon which the defendants' expert relied.

a. Plaintiff's Expert - Dr. Warren-Boulton

The plaintiff's expert, Dr. Warren-Boulton, found the relevant product market to be DDIY. He determined that a hypothetical monopolist of DDIY products could profitably impose a SSNIP for at least one DDIY product, and that consumer substitution to [56] assisted methods or pen-and-paper would be insufficient to defeat the SSNIP. GX 121 (Warren-Boulton Rep.) at 12.

Dr. Warren-Boulton began his analysis by postulating that DDIY was the relevant product market and then he used two principal analytical tests to confirm the validity of that assumption. He began by testing DDIY as a relevant market for a few reasons. First, he concluded that the parties' DDIY products are substantially similar in terms of functionality. GX 121 (Warren-Boulton Rep.) at 12-18. Second, he concluded from his review of the defendants' business documents that they viewed DDIY as a discrete product market when competing in the ordinary course of business. Id. Third, he ruled out including pen-and-paper and assisted products in the relevant product market based on a consideration of various data. Id. at 24-32.

Dr. Warren-Boulton's decision to begin the relevant market analysis with DDIY [*61] was appropriate. See Areeda & Hovenkamp ¶ 536, at 287 ("[T]wo products are provisionally part of the same market [for hypothetical monopolist analysis] when they employ similar technologies and similar costs and customers use them interchangeably. . . In cases of doubt, [products] [57] should generally be excluded from the provisional market, for incorrect exclusions will ultimately be brought into the market via the price increase methodology."). The parties' DDIY products all provide a fundamentally similar service and a similar user experience for the consumer when compared with other methods of tax preparation. The DDIY consumer sits down at a computer and interacts with the DDIY software, which prompts the consumer for information and ultimately completes the consumer's tax return. This experience is qualitatively different than that of hiring a tax professional or figuring out how to complete one's own tax return manually. Various other evidence in the record also supports the fundamental functional similarity of the technology underlying the parties' DDIY products – perhaps most notably the testimony that post-merger, HRB plans to migrate {redacted} onto TaxACT's software "engine" {redacted}. See Dunn, TT, 9/8/11 p.m. (sealed), at 16-17.

As discussed in detail above, various documentary evidence suggests that the parties treat DDIY as a distinct product market in the ordinary course of business.

Dr. Warren-Boulton also considered whether the pen-and-paper and [58] assisted methods should be included in the provisional relevant market, as the defendants contend, and concluded that they should not be.

Dr. Warren-Boulton ruled out including pen-and-paper in the relevant product market, concluding instead that historical tax return data reflects "a gradual migration of customers to [DDIY] from more traditional methods like pen-and paper." GX 121 (Warren-Boulton Rep.) at 24. The percentage of returns prepared by pen-and-paper has fallen considerably over the last decade, while the percentage of DDIY has grown. Id. Changes in the yearly percentage shares of taxpayers using pen-and-paper do not appear correlated to changes in the yearly average price of DDIY. Id. at 27. Finally, based on IRS data, Dr. Warren-Boulton observed that taxpayers who switched from DDIY to pen-and-paper for tax seasons 2008 and 2009 on average experienced a decrease in tax return complexity, suggesting that much switching from DDIY products to pen-and-paper is driven by such complexity decreases.[15] [15] Switching, as discussed further below, refers to the switching of consumers between different products for any reason. The IRS categorizes tax returns into one of three complexity [59] categories: Simple, Intermediate, and Complex. Accordingly, the IRS data only reflects complexity changes that are sufficient to result in assignment to a different one of the three categories.

Dr. Warren-Boulton also ruled out including the assisted tax preparation methods in the relevant market based on consideration of several factors. He reviewed HRB documents that conclude that growth in DDIY has not come at the expense of HRB's assisted business. Id. at 28. Testimony from HRB employees, including the former CEO, also reinforced the same conclusion. Id. at 28-29. He also cited HRB internal studies, which concluded that consumers who have switched from DDIY to assisted are likely to have experienced a change in tax complexity. He found that HRB's internal conclusion was consistent with IRS switching data, which [*62] also indicated a correlation between switching from DDIY to assisted and an increase in tax complexity. Id. at 29-30. Finally, Dr. Warren-Boulton noted that, based on data from tax years 2004-2009, increases in the relative price of assisted products were not associated with decreases in the relative market share of assisted products and increases in the relative market share [60] of DDIY, as might be expected if DDIY and assisted prices moved in a single, price-responsive market. Id. at 32.

Therefore, having determined that the best provisional relevant market is DDIY and not all methods of tax preparation, Dr. Warren-Boulton then performed two economic tests to confirm that a hypothetical monopolist of all DDIY products could profitably impose a SSNIP. If these economic tests indicated that a hypothetical monopolist could not profitably impose a SSNIP, then the tests would call for the relevant market to be expanded. The tests, however, validated the relevant market as DDIY, as detailed below.

The economic tests Dr. Warren-Boulton applied relied heavily upon switching data from the IRS. Switching refers to the number of consumers who switch between different products for any reason. In any given year, many taxpayers switch from the tax preparation method they used in the prior year to a new method. Since the IRS processes all U.S. tax returns each year and tracks data about the methods of tax preparation that taxpayers used, there is ample, reliable data that market analysts can use to see how many taxpayers switched between methods each year. The IRS data, [61] however, provides little direct insight about why any given taxpayer switched methods of preparation. The switch could have been for reasons of price, convenience, changes in the consumer's personal situation, an increase or decrease in tax complexity, a loss of confidence in the prior method of preparation, or any other reason.

As opposed to switching, diversion refers to a consumer's response to a measured increase in the price of a product. In other words, diversion measures to what extent consumers of a given product will switch (or be "diverted") to other products in response to a price increase in the given product. The IRS switching data does not directly measure diversion because switching can occur for any number of reasons, many of which may not involve price.

Unfortunately, no direct, reliable data on diversion exists in this case. The plaintiff's expert argues, however, that the IRS switching data can provide at least some estimate of diversion. While this approach is not without its limitations, as discussed further below, the Court finds that the switching data is at least somewhat indicative of likely diversion ratios. Moreover, the IRS data is highly reliable because [62] (1) the sample size is enormous, since it encompasses over 100 million taxpayers, and (2) the data reflects actual historical tax return filing patterns as opposed to predicted behavior.[16]

[*63] The defendant's expert, who criticizes reliance on this switching data, suggests instead that a better analysis can be based upon simulated diversion data derived from consumer surveys commissioned by the defendants. As

[16] One limitation in the IRS data set is that if a taxpayer uses a DDIY product to prepare the return, but then prints and mails the return instead of e-filing it, the IRS does not attribute the filing to the DDIY provider and instead lists it in a generic "v-coded" pool of returns. At the hearing, the defendants' criticized the IRS switching data set as problematic on these grounds, suggesting that up to 30 million returns may be "v-coded." See Warren-Boulton, TT 9/20/11 a.m., at 21-22. As Dr. Warren-Boulton fully addressed in his expert report, however, a "conservative method for dealing with this issue is to drop all v-coded returns from the analysis," which would still leave well over 100 million returns in the IRS data set. Id.; GX 121 (Warren-Boulton Rep.) at 47. The defendants did not identify any reason the v-coded data would be likely to skew the data set. Thus, even if the v-coded data is disregarded, the IRS data set remains extensive and reliable. It is also worth noting that the IRS data [63] does not distinguish between the DDIY providers' various products, so only firm-level switching rates are available. GX 121 (Warren-Boulton Rep.) at 47 described more fully below, however, the shortcomings of these survey-derived diversion data are so substantial that the Court cannot rely on them.

i. Critical Loss Analysis

The first economic test Dr. Warren-Boulton performed is known as HN14[] a "critical loss" analysis. This test attempts to calculate "the largest amount of sales that a monopolist can lose before a price increase becomes unprofitable." Swedish Match, 131 F. Supp. 2d at 160. Dr. Warren-Boulton calculated that for a 10 percent price increase in DDIY, the price increase would be profitable if the resulting lost sales did not surpass 16.7 percent.[17] GX 121 (Warren-Boulton Rep.) at 34.

Dr. Warren-Boulton then sought to compare this critical loss threshold with "aggregate diversion ratios." The aggregate diversion ratio for any given product represents the proportion of lost sales that are recaptured by all other firms in the proposed market as the result of a price increase. Since these lost sales are recaptured within the proposed market, they are not lost to the hypothetical monopolist. According to Dr. Warren-Boulton, economists have shown that if the aggregate diversion ratio to products inside the proposed relevant market exceeds the critical loss threshold, then the critical loss analysis indicates that a SSNIP at that level would be profitable for a hypothetical monopolist. Id. at 34 (citing Michael Katz and Carl Shapiro, Critical Loss: Let's Tell the Whole Story, ANTITRUST (Spring 2003) at 49 -56); see also Warren-Boulton, TT, 9/9/11 p.m., at 33-34.

Because no diversion data is available, [65] Dr. Warren-Boulton relied instead on IRS switching data to estimate aggregate diversion ratios. Id. These data show that of the taxpayers who left HRB's DDIY products between tax year 2007 and 2008,[18] 57 percent went to other DDIY providers. Of those who left TaxACT, 53 percent stayed in DDIY, and for TurboTax, 39 percent stayed in DDIY. Id. at 34-35. Since these numbers are all well above the 16.7 percent critical loss threshold, Dr. Warren-Boulton concluded a 10 percent SSNIP in the DDIY market would be profitable for a hypothetical monopolist.

In cross-examining Dr. Warren-Boulton, the defendants suggested that the critical loss test is meaningless because it would seem to validate numerous different candidate markets consisting of various assortments of tax preparation businesses. Warren-Boulton, TT, 9/9/11 p.m., at 20-42. For example, the defendants demonstrated that the test could also validate a market consisting of just HRB and Intuit or a market consisting of just TaxACT and Intuit. See DX 9802. Dr. Warren-Boulton [*64] noted in his testimony, however, that such markets are "smaller, irrelevant" markets for evaluating [66] the proposed transaction between HRB and TaxACT. Warren-Boulton, TT, 9/9/11 p.m., at 41; see also Areeda & Hovenkamp ¶ 533c, at 254 ("[C]ourts correctly search for a 'relevant market' – that is a market relevant to the particular legal issue being litigated."). The fact that critical loss analysis would validate other groupings of businesses does not undermine Dr. Warren-Boulton's reliance on it to validate DDIY as the relevant market in this case.[19] Indeed, rather than urging a smaller relevant market definition, the defendants urged [17] The formula for critical loss is L = X/(X + M), where L is the critical loss, X is the percentage price increase, and M is the hypothetical monopolist's gross margin. Assuming a [64] 50 percent margin, which Dr. Warren-Boulton claims is a conservative estimate for firms in the DDIY market, then the critical loss for a 10 percent SSNIP is 16.7 percent. 16.7 percent is the result of applying 10 percent and 50 percent in the formula X/(X+M): .167 = .1/(.1+.5).

[18] These are the last two years for which this data was available.

[19] The defendants also referred obliquely in cross examination to an academic debate surrounding the proper way to perform critical loss analysis. Warren-Boulton, TT, 9/9/11 p.m., at 23. Dr. Warren-Boulton [67] acknowledged his awareness of the existence of this debate and the defendants' counsel did not pursue the topic further. Id. The Court has no basis for disputing Dr. Warren-Boulton's application of critical loss analysis based merely on the existence of unspecified academic critiques. The Court notes thatHN15[] the critical loss analysis is specifically endorsed by the Merger Guidelines as a method for implementing the SSNIP test, see Merger Guidelines § 4.1.3, and has been accepted by courts as a standard methodology. See FTC v. CCC Holdings Inc., 605 F. Supp. 2d 26, 40 n.16 (D.D.C. 2009) ("Critical loss analysis is a standard tool used by economists to study potentially relevant markets."). The court in CCC Holdings ultimately did not rely on the expert's application of critical loss the Court to define the market much more broadly. Nonetheless, the Court appreciates the defendants' point that the critical loss test alone cannot answer the relevant market inquiry. While some inappropriate proposed relevant markets would be ruled out by the critical loss test, the fact that the test could still confirm multiple relevant markets means that the Court must rely on additional evidence in reaching the single, appropriate market definition.

ii. Merger Simulation

In addition to the critical loss analysis, Dr. Warren-Boulton also performed an economic simulation of a merger among the HRB, TaxACT, and Intuit. GX 121 (Warren-Boulton Rep.) at 35. [68] This simulation, known as a Bertrand model, predicted that a monopolist of the DDIY products of these three companies would find it profit-maximizing to raise TaxACT's price by 83 percent, HRB's price by 37 percent and TurboTax's price by 11 percent absent efficiencies. Id. Dr. Warren Boulton concluded that this simulation also confirms that DDIY is the relevant product market.[20]

iii. Critiques of Dr. Warren-Boulton's Analysis

The defendants' expert, Dr. Meyer, critiques Dr. Warren-Boulton's analysis in numerous ways. Her most fundamental critique is that his reliance on switching data as a proxy for diversion is flawed because switching can occur for any number of reasons and, therefore, it is not necessarily indicative of what products consumers would switch to in response to a price increase. DX 17 (Meyer Rep.) at 59-60. Dr. Meyer is certainly correct in this critique. Dr. Warren-Boulton, however, testified forthrightly about the limitations involved in relying on switching data as a proxy for diversion:

> Using migration [i.e., switching] doesn't really [69] answer, or it doesn't answer the precise question of [the] merger guidelines, [*65] which of course is, where would you go if there was a small but significant price increase? It basically asks the question, where did you go? And you could go for a lot of reasons. You could go because the price has changed, you could go because the quality changes, you could go because you changed. Complexity changes. And there's a lot of evidence in the record that people switch because of changes in their own complexity. But using migration percentages, or using those gives you, I think, a reasonable second estimate of diversion ratios, because it's really asking the question, you know, if you went to some — if for some reason you decided to go from HRB to TaxACT, for all those reasons, is that roughly about the same percentages if you went due to a price increase?

Warren-Boulton, TT, 9/9/11 a.m., at 13-14. Thus, switching data does not necessarily indicate diversion for the reasons both experts have identified. In light of all the evidence in the record and the general similarity of DDIY products, the Court credits Dr. Warren-Boulton's conclusion that it was reasonable to use switching data as a proxy [70] for diversion, especially since no more refined historical data apparently exists. Bearing in mind the shortcomings of the switching data, the Court will not treat Dr. Warren-Boulton's hypothetical monopolist analysis as conclusive. The Court will treat it as another data point suggesting that DDIY is the correct relevant market, however.

Another major critique of Dr. Warren-Boulton's hypothetical monopolist analysis – and one that the defendants repeatedly emphasized at the hearing – is that Dr. Warren-Boulton decided "arbitrarily to exclude some alternatives that are closer substitutes than the products that he included." DX 17 (Meyer Rep.) at 70; see Meyer, TT, 9/12/11 p.m., at 20-22. As Dr. Meyer put it at the hearing, "Dr. Warren-Boulton's relevant market is a miscellaneous set of unconnected links, because it doesn't include . . . the closest substitute to H&R Block [At Home], which is assisted analysis due to what the court deemed a "gap" or oversight in the expert's reasoning, but the court nonetheless adopted the same relevant product market that the critical loss analysis had validated. See id. at 40-41.

[20] Dr. Warren-Boulton's merger simulation is addressed further below in the Court's discussion of unilateral effects in Section III.B.2.c.

tax preparation. It doesn't include pen and paper, which is the closest substitute to TaxACT." Meyer, TT, 9/12/11 p.m., at 24-25. Dr. Meyer identified the "closest substitutes" to the merging parties' products using simulated diversion data. As discussed below, the Court finds this data [71] unreliable and declines to rely upon it. Dr. Meyer opines, however, that Dr. Warren-Boulton failed to include the closest substitutes for the defendants' products in his market, even if switching data is treated as a proxy for diversion, as Dr. Warren-Boulton suggests. For example, Dr. Meyer states that "11.2% of TaxACT's customers in TY2007 switched to assisted preparation in TY2008, while only 2.7% switched to H&R Block At Home and 9.1% switched to TurboTax." DX 17 (Meyer Rep.) at 72. Thus, the defendants contend Dr. Warren-Boulton violated the following principle from the Merger Guidelines: "When applying the hypothetical monopolist test to define a market around a product offered by one of the merging firms, if the market includes a second product, the Agencies will normally also include a third product if that third product is a closer substitute for the first product than is the second product." Id. at 72 (quoting Merger Guidelines § 4.1.1).

The government persuasively illustrated the key flaw in this critique during the cross-examination of the defendants' expert. See Meyer, TT, 9/13/11 a.m., at 90-96. Simply put, when determining the "closest substitutes" for products within [72] the DDIY category, Dr. Meyer looked at diversion to individual DDIY brands, such as TurboTax and H&R Block At Home, [*66] but when assessing substitutes outside the DDIY category, Dr. Meyer lumped all products and methods together into large, aggregated market categories, such as "assisted" or "pen-and-paper." See id. If, instead, DDIY products are grouped together as an aggregated category, similar to the treatment of assisted and pen-and-paper in Dr. Meyer's analysis, then the IRS switching data would indicate that other DDIY products are the closest substitutes for both the DDIY products of HRB and TaxACT. See GTX 15, 16 (illustrating this analysis). For HRB, the numbers show 56.8 percent switching to other DDIY, 36.9 percent to assisted, and 6.3 percent to pen-and-paper. GTX 15. For TaxACT, the numbers show 52.7 percent switching to other DDIY, 40.1 percent to assisted, and 7.3 percent to pen-and-paper. GTX 16.

Some of Dr. Meyer's additional critiques have more merit. For example, one datum Dr. Warren-Boulton relied on in his analysis was the outcome of an advertising study showing that HRB's sales {were affected} in cities where TaxACT pursued an advertising campaign. See GX 121 (Warren-Boulton Rep.) at 43. [73] The Court accepts Dr. Meyer's critique that few conclusions can be drawn from this observation because the observed correlation could have been due to other variables – for example, the advertising of a third competitor like TurboTax. See DX 17 (Meyer Rep.) at 69. Similarly, Dr. Warren-Boulton's observations that changes in relative market share of DDIY, assisted, and pen-and-paper do not appear correlated to changes in relative price could also have been affected by confounding variables. Id. at 67.

b. Defendants' Expert - Dr. Meyer

Dr. Meyer found the relevant product market to be all methods of tax preparation, including DDIY, assisted, and pen-and-paper. Her conclusion rested on various factors, including an analysis of documents and testimony. See, e.g., id. at 15. This Court, however, has already discussed its own analysis of the relevant documents and testimony above. Therefore, the Court will focus now on Dr. Meyer's analysis of pricing data and, in particular, her use of and reliance on data derived from customer surveys commissioned by the defendants.

Dr. Meyer found that assisted preparation competes with DDIY in part because the assisted method is the most popular method of [74] tax preparation across all complexity levels. See id. at 12-13. Dr. Meyer concedes, however, that "taxpayers with the most complex tax returns are the most likely to use [assisted preparation]." Id. Indeed, her data show that this effect is pronounced, with approximately 70 percent of filers of complex returns using assisted and approximately 44 percent of filers of simple returns using assisted. Id. DDIY, by contrast, accounts for approximately 37 percent of simple returns and 23 percent of complex returns. Id. If anything, these data indicate that assisted products are linked to the needs of consumers with complex returns, suggesting a partially different consumer profile from DDIY products.

Dr. Meyer also noted that the pricing of DDIY and assisted products overlaps, but her analysis of this overlap rests primarily on comparing high-end DDIY products, such as HRB's Best of Both product,[21] [*67] with low-end assisted products, such as Jackson Hewitt's offering of limited, simple return preparation at Wal-Mart. See id. at 13-14. Dr. Meyer concedes that the median price of assisted is higher than the median DDIY price, see id. at 13, and that is the more useful point of comparison.

Apart from these comparisons and her conclusions about how industry participants view the market based on her review of documents and testimony in the record, Dr. Meyer's definition of the relevant market rests primarily on her analysis of simulated diversion data obtained from a "pricing simulator" created for HRB in 2009 and an email survey conducted by TaxACT in 2011. See id. at 17-20. These two sources for her conclusions are discussed seriatim below.

i. Pricing Simulator

Dr. Meyer asserts in her report that the pricing simulator "created for HRB in 2009, provides the only direct test of the likely diversion from HRB's [DDIY] products in reaction to a change in price." Id. at 17. The simulator itself is a pricing model that runs as a dynamic Excel spreadsheet. See Meyer, TT, 9/13/11 a.m., at 42. Dr. Meyer's report in several [76] instances relies upon an internal HRB Powerpoint presentation that reflects the simulator's data output under several different scenarios. See, e.g., DX 17 (Meyer Rep.) at 37 n.155 (citing the Powerpoint). As Dr. Meyer describes, the "simulator was prepared using a discrete choice survey of 6,119 respondents." Id. at 17. She explains that "[t]he respondents were shown five pricing scenarios, and the options included online DIY options, software DIY options, assisted tax preparation options, and other DIY options (including pen-and-paper and friends/family)." Id. Dr. Meyer further states that the "pricing of the various options changed across scenarios" and a "conjoint analysis was conducted to analyze the effect of a change in the price of each product on its own sales and the sales of the other tax preparation options." Id.

Based on the pricing simulator's results, Dr. Meyer calculated diversion ratios for DDIY products. Dr. Meyer found that "the largest diversion from HRB's [DDIY products], in the event of a price increase, is to CPAs and accountants." Id. at 18. She found the "second largest diversion from HRB's [DDIY products]" was to pen-and-paper. Id. at 19-20. In addition, "the [77] fourth largest diversion is to HRB retail stores." Id. at 18. Accordingly, Dr. Meyer concluded that assisted preparation and pen-and-paper were the closest substitutes to HRB's DDIY products and should be included in the relevant market.

There is a critical flaw in the design of the pricing simulator, however, that renders conclusions based on its output unreliable. Despite Dr. Meyer's assertion that the "pricing of the various options changed across [the] scenarios" presented to the survey respondents, not all of the options in the survey underlying the simulator actually had prices associated with them. See Meyer, TT, 9/13/11 a.m., at 27-28. Several "non-priced choice options" were available to the survey respondents and these non-priced options included, importantly, "CPA or Accountant," "H&R Block Retail Office," and "Paper & Pencil." DX 9231 (May 2009 Pricing Simulator Powerpoint) at 4. Thus, while the pricing of the various options changed for some products across the different scenarios presented in the survey, no prices at all were associated with these critical "non-priced choice options."

The fact that the pricing simulator survey failed to assign any prices to these [*68] particular [78] products is, of course, especially significant given Dr. Meyer's findings that the highest diversion from HRB DDIY was to CPAs and then to pen-and-paper. DX 17 (Meyer Rep.) at 18. Indeed, the conclusion that the largest diversion from HRB's DDIY products would be to CPAs is puzzling on its face. This outcome is counterintuitive because CPAs in general tend to be the most expensive form of tax preparation assistance, while DDIY tends to be the least expensive. See

[21] The Best [75] of Both product, as the name implies, actually combines aspects of DDIY and assisted. It enables a return completed on HRB's DDIY product to be reviewed by a tax professional. See DX 17 (Meyer Rep.) at 13 n.44. Thus, it is hardly surprising that this "hybrid" product, which features such exhaustive service, is priced more expensively than a typical DDIY product.

GTX 14. The Court finds that these surprising results are most likely due to the fact that the survey did not, in fact, assign any price at all to the CPA option. Due to this flaw in the survey's design, respondents may well have selected the CPA option and the other non-priced options without even attempting to consider price as a factor in their decision. Accordingly, the Court finds that it simply cannot rely on the diversion ratios predicted by the simulator.

Additional problems with the pricing simulator also render its output unreliable. As Dr. Warren-Boulton noted in his rebuttal of Dr. Meyer's report, the compilation of pricing simulator data which Dr. Meyer relied upon to calculate her diversion ratios contains results [79] that appear to violate what is "[p]erhaps the most fundamental principle in economics." See GX 665 (Warren-Boulton Reply Rep.) at 9-10. Increasing the price of one HRB DDIY product in the simulation, TaxCut Online Basic, appears to increase the quantity of the product sold, holding other variables constant. Id. This anomaly violates the fundamental economic principle that "demand curves almost always slope downward," which holds that, all other things being equal, consumers buy less of a product when the price goes up. See id. In another anomalous result, Dr. Warren-Boulton found that, based on the simulator data, cutting the price of TaxCut Online Basic from $29.95 to $14.95 approximately doubles its predicted market share, but cutting the price only to $19.95 greatly reduces its market share.[22] Id. Dr. Warren-Boulton also found that analysis of different print outs of simulator data in the HRB Powerpoint may yield inexplicably different results. For example, relying on the data on one page of the simulator Powerpoint, Dr. Meyer determined that the "the diversion rate from HRB to TaxACT is only 1.6 percent." DX 17 (Meyer Rep.) at 37. Yet, Dr. Warren-Boulton applied the same methodology [80] for calculating the diversion rate to the simulator data reflected on another slide of the same Powerpoint purporting to show the same simulator data as applied to a different scenario. This calculation yielded the "wildly different estimate" of a 32.4 percent diversion rate from HRB to TaxACT. See GX 665 (Warren-Boulton Reply Rep.) at 10. These inconsistent and anomalous results provide additional reasons to discredit the diversion ratios Dr. Meyer predicted from the simulator data.

ii. 2011 Email Survey

Dr. Meyer's analysis also relied on a 2011 email survey of TaxACT customers commissioned by the defendants.[23] See [*69] DX 17 (Meyer Rep.) at 20, 38. In April 2011, TaxACT and HRB jointly commissioned this survey "to determine [81] to which products TaxACT's customers would switch if those customers were displeased with TaxACT because of price, quality, or functionality." Id. at 20. The survey asked one primary question: "If you had become dissatisfied with TaxACT's price, functionality, or quality, which of these products or services would you have considered using to prepare your federal taxes?" GX 604 (Survey Summary) at 1. The survey then offered the respondents a list of other products or services from which to choose and instructed them to select all applicable options. Id. The list of options that respondents were given varied somewhat depending on the respondents' filing status and the payments they had made for their 2011 tax returns.[24] Id. A follow-up question asked the respondents to narrow their selections to a single choice. Id.

[22] Dr. Meyer testified at the hearing that these anomalies are not reflected in the underlying simulator Excel data, but rather appear only in the printouts of simulator data contained in the internal HRB Powerpoint. In addition, Dr. Meyer explained that she redid her calculations excluding the anomalous data and came up with the same conclusions. See Meyer, TT, 9/12/11 p.m., at 45-47. Dr. Meyer never identified the source or cause of the anomalies, however. Id. at 49.

[23] Prior to the hearing in this case, the government filed a motion in limine to exclude this survey from evidence and to limit Dr. Meyer's opinion to the extent it relied on the survey. See ECF No. 60. The government argued that the survey's wording and methodology made it inherently unreliable and therefore inadmissible. While the Court noted that the government had identified [82] a number of defects in the methodology and wording of the survey, the Court concluded that these defects did not undermine the survey and the expert's reliance on it so overwhelmingly as to render the survey inadmissible, especially in a bench trial. See Memorandum Opinion and Order on Motion in Limine, September 6, 2011, ECF No. 84.

[24] The response options varied among four different categories of filers, which are discussed further below. For example, the list of options presented to filers who completed a free federal tax return and no state return were: "I would prepare myself without help," "TurboTax Free Edition," "H&R Block at Home Free Edition," "Free TaxUSA Free Edition," "Complete Tax Free Basic,"

The research firm conducting the survey initially sent out 46,899 email requests to TaxACT customers inviting them to participate in the survey and then subsequently targeted 24,898 customers who had purchased a federal tax return product but not a state product. Id. Survey respondents were also asked screening [83] questions to determine their membership in one of four categories of customers: (1) those who paid to complete both a federal and state tax return; (2) those who completed a free federal return and paid to complete a state return; (3) those who completed a paid federal return but did not complete a state return; and (4) those who completed a free federal return and did not complete a state return. Id.

A total of 1,089 customers responded to the survey. Id. at 1-3. The response rates for the four categories of customers were: (1) 2.45 percent for paid federal / paid state filing (422); (2) 2.08 percent for free federal / paid state filing (245); (3) 0.6 percent for paid federal / no state filing (182); and (4) 1.7 percent for free federal / no state filing (240). Id.

Dr. Meyer opined that "this survey is closer to the concept of a diversion ratio than are data on overall switching between products." DX 17 (Meyer Rep.) at 20 n.85. Based on the survey's results, she concluded that the survey "provides direct evidence that digital DIY products compete with pen-and-paper" because the percentage of TaxACT customers who reported that, if they were dissatisfied with TaxACT, they would switch [84] to pen-and-paper in each group ranged from 27 to 34 percent. DX 17 (Meyer Rep.) at 20. Dr. Meyer also noted that the survey showed that few TaxACT customers would switch to H&R Block At Home, since only 4 to 10 percent of respondents selected that option. Id. at 38. Accordingly, Dr. Meyer [*70] found this outcome indicative that "HRB is not a particularly close competitor to TaxACT." Id.

In response to Dr. Meyer's reliance upon this survey, the government submitted a rebuttal expert report from Dr. Ravi Dhar, a professor of management at Yale University, which credibly critiques the survey on several levels.[25] GX 623 (Dhar Rep.). Most fundamentally, the government points out that the phrasing of the survey question – which asks about dissatisfaction with "TaxACT's price, functionality, or quality" – appears to ask a hypothetical question about switching, not diversion based solely on a price change. Since the phrasing of the survey question conflates customer concerns about price, functionality, or quality, the government argues that the survey cannot shed any light on customer reactions to price changes alone. See id. at 5. Further, to the extent that the wording of the question addresses [85] price, it does not ask about a change in price, but rather suggests a change in the customer's satisfaction with TaxACT's existing price. See id.

At the hearing, Dr. Meyer explained that she viewed the email survey data as "closer to diversion than is pure switching data" because switching could occur for any reason at all, while the survey only asked about potential switching due to dissatisfaction with "price, functionality, or quality." Meyer, TT, 9/13/11 a.m., at 87. Yet the Court finds that almost any reason for switching from a product could be characterized as dissatisfaction with the "functionality" or "quality" offered by the product in some respect. Therefore, the survey question does not come much closer to identifying diversion ratios than pure switching data does. Moreover, since there is extensive IRS data reflecting actual switching behavior in the marketplace – as opposed to the hypothetical switching behavior asked about in the email survey – the Court will not rely on the "diversion ratios" suggested by the 2011 email survey.

Furthermore, additional defects in the 2011 email [86] survey's methodology also render the reliability of its findings questionable. First, the high level of non-response to the defendants' email invitations to participate in the survey could have biased the results. Dr. Dhar explained that the "level of nonresponse . . . is extremely high (more than 98%)" and that the "extremely low response rates makes it difficult to determine whether the results were impacted by a certain segment who were systematically more likely to respond to the survey (e.g., those who were price sensitive or time insensitive) in relation to those who did not respond." GX 623 (Dhar Rep.) at 10. The Court agrees that non-response bias is a potential pitfall of the survey. See University of Kansas v. Sinks, No. 06-2341,

"An Accountant," "I would use a product on FFA [i.e., Free File Alliance]," "TaxSlayer Free Edition," "Jackson Hewitt Free Basic," "Tax$imple Free Basic," and "Other." GX604 at 2.

[25] Dr. Dhar did not testify in person at the hearing, but provided an expert report and affidavit.

2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23763, 2008 WL 755065, at *4 (D. Kan. Mar. 19, 2008) (noting, in trademark case, that a consumer survey response rate of "2.16% appears, by any standard, to be quite low."). Second, by providing survey respondents with a pre-selected list of alternative options, rather than letting respondents respond organically, the survey leads respondents to think about the market for tax preparation services in the same terms that the defendants do, which may have [87] led respondents to select options they otherwise would not have selected. Since the survey's question essentially asks about hypothetical switching, and since the actual IRS switching data in this case reflect a much larger [*71] sample size without the methodological deficiencies of the 2011 survey, the Court declines to rely on the purported diversion ratios calculated from the email survey.

On the whole, the Court views Dr. Warren-Boulton's expert analysis as more persuasive than Dr. Meyer's.[26] First, Dr. Warren-Boulton's testimony was generally more credible than Dr. Meyer's.[27] Second, the diversion ratios that Dr. Meyer calculated from the pricing simulator and the 2011 email survey are unreliable, as discussed above. Without these simulated diversion ratios, little remains of Dr. Meyer's expert conclusions apart from her analysis of documents in the record.

Dr. Warren-Boulton's analysis is not without its limitations. The main shortcoming for his approach is that he relied on switching data as a proxy for diversion. Since there is evidence in the record that switching among different products in the broader tax preparation industry occurs for reasons other than price competition, switching cannot serve as a complete proxy for diversion. Even so, the Court credits Dr. Warren-Boulton's conclusion that switching data can provide a "reasonable second estimate" of diversion ratios here. Therefore, the Court finds that Dr. Warren-Boulton's analysis tends to confirm that the relevant market is DDIY, although the Court would not rely on his analysis exclusively. As explained above, however, the full body of evidence in this case makes clear that DDIY is the correct relevant market for evaluating this merger.

B. Likely Effect on Competition

1. The Plaintiff's Prima Facie Case

HN16[] Having defined the relevant market as DDIY tax preparation products, "the Court must next consider the likely effects of the proposed acquisition on competition [89] within that market." Swedish Match, 131 F. Supp. 2d at 166. The government must now make out its prima facie case by showing "that the merger would produce 'a firm controlling an undue percentage share of the relevant market, and [would] result[ ] in a significant increase in the concentration of firms in that market.'" Heinz, 246 F.3d at 715 (quoting Philadelphia Nat'l Bank, 374 U.S. at 363). "Such a showing establishes a 'presumption' that the merger will substantially lessen competition." Id.

HN17[] "Market concentration, or the lack thereof, is often measured by the Herfindahl-Hirschmann Index ('HHI')." Id. at 716. "The HHI is calculated by totaling the squares of the market shares of every firm in the relevant market. For example, a market with ten firms having market shares of 20%, 17%, 13%, 12%, 10%, 10%, 8%, 5%, 3% and 2% has an HHI of 1304 ($20^2 + 17^2 + 13^2 + 12^2 + 10^2 + 10^2 + 8^2 + 5^2 + 3^2 + 2^2$)." Id. at 715 n.9. Sufficiently large HHI figures establish the government's prima facie case that a merger is anticompetitive. Id. Under the Horizontal Merger Guidelines, markets with an HHI above 2500 are considered "highly concentrated" and mergers "resulting in highly concentrated markets [90] that involve an increase in the HHI of more than 200 points will be presumed to [*72] be likely to enhance market power." Merger Guidelines § 5.3.

In this case, market concentration as measured by HHI is currently 4,291, indicating a highly concentrated market under the Merger Guidelines. GX 121 (Warren-Boulton Rep.) at 38. The most recent measures of market share

[26] Of course, the Court remains cognizant that the plaintiff bears the burden of proof in demonstrating the relevant market.

[27] For example, Dr. Meyer's description of the pricing simulator survey as one in which the "pricing of the various options changed across scenarios" was inaccurate insofar as several of the most significant products [88] for the purposes of Dr. Meyer's analysis did not have any prices associated with them at all. See discussion supra.

show Intuit with 62.2 percent of the market, HRB with 15.6 percent, and TaxACT with 12.8 percent. GX 27. These market share calculations are based on data provided by the IRS for federal tax filings for 2010, the most recent data available.

The defendants argue that market share calculations based exclusively on federal filing data are insufficient to meet the plaintiff's burden in establishing its alleged relevant product market, which includes both federal and state filings. Defs.' Post-Trial Mem. at 12-13. The Court rejects this argument. State tax return products are typically sold as add-ons to or in combination with federal return products and the Court finds that there is little reason to conclude that the market share proportions within the state DDIY segment would be significantly different from federal DDIY. See GX 600 [91] at 8 (HRB market research study stating that "[t]he desire to file State and Federal taxes together, and, inherently, for ease/convenience overruled all other rationales for the method chosen for State taxes."). While, as defendants point out, many customers of federal tax return DDIY products do not also purchase state returns, that may be because they live in states without income tax or because their state returns are simple enough to prepare very easily without assistance. See Dunn, TT, 9/8/11 a.m., at 48-49. HN18[] A reliable, reasonable, close approximation of relevant market share data is sufficient, however. FTC v. PPG Indus., Inc., 798 F.2d 1500, 1505, 255 U.S. App. D.C. 69 (D.C. Cir. 1986). Further, the defendants' own ordinary course of business documents analyze the market based on IRS federal e-file data, without reference to state filings, even though the defendants' clearly sell state tax return products. See, e.g., GX 27.

The proposed acquisition in this case would give the combined firm a 28.4 percent market share and will increase the HHI by approximately 400, resulting in a post-acquisition HHI of 4,691. Id. These HHI levels are high enough to create a presumption of anticompetitive effects. See, [92] e.g., Heinz, 246 F.3d at 716 (three-firm to two-firm merger that would have increased HHI by 510 points from 4,775 created presumption of anticompetitive effects by a "wide margin"); Swedish Match, 131 F. Supp. 2d at 166-67 (60 percent market share and 4,733 HHI established presumption). Accordingly, the government has established a prima facie case of anticompetitive effects.

HN19[] "Upon the showing of a prima facie case, the burden shifts to defendants to show that traditional economic theories of the competitive effects of market concentration are not an accurate indicator of the merger's probable effect on competition in these markets or that the procompetitive effects of the merger are likely to outweigh any potential anticompetitive effects." CCC Holdings, 605 F. Supp. 2d at 46. "The courts have not established a clear standard that the merging parties must meet in order to rebut a prima facie case, other than to advise that '[t]he more compelling the prima facie case, the more evidence the defendant must present to rebut [the presumption] successfully.'" Id. at 46-47 (quoting Baker Hughes, 908 F.2d at 991). Even in cases where the government has made a strong prima facie showing:

> [i]mposing [93] a heavy burden of production on a defendant would be particularly anomalous where, as here, it is easy to [*73] establish a prima facie case. The government, after all, can carry its initial burden of production simply by presenting market concentration statistics. To allow the government virtually to rest its case at that point, leaving the defendant to prove the core of the dispute, would grossly inflate the role of statistics in actions brought under section 7. The Herfindahl-Hirschman Index cannot guarantee litigation victories.

Baker Hughes, 908 F.2d at 992. Thus, ultimately,"[t]he Supreme Court has adopted a totality-of-the-circumstances approach to the [Clayton Act], weighing a variety of factors to determine the effects of particular transactions on competition." Id. at 984. With these observations in mind, the Court will evaluate the parties' evidence and arguments about the likely effect of the transaction on competition in the DDIY market.

2. Defendants' Rebuttal Arguments

a. Barriers to Entry

Defendants argue that the likelihood of expansion by existing DDIY companies besides Intuit, HRB, and TaxACT will offset any potential anticompetitive effects from the merger. HN20[] Courts have held [94] that likely entry or expansion by other competitors can counteract anticompetitive effects that would otherwise be expected. See Heinz, 246 F.3d at 717 n.13 ("Barriers to entry are important in evaluating whether market concentration statistics accurately reflect the pre- and likely post-merger competitive picture."); Baker Hughes, 908 F.2d at 987 ("In the absence of significant barriers, a company probably cannot maintain supracompetitive pricing for any length of time."). According to the Merger Guidelines, entry or expansion must be "timely, likely, and sufficient in its magnitude, character, and scope to deter or counteract the competitive effects of concern." Merger Guidelines § 9; see also CCC Holdings, 605 F. Supp. 2d at 47; United States v. Visa USA, Inc., 163 F. Supp. 2d 322, 342 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) (entry must be "timely, likely, and [of a] sufficient scale to deter or counteract any anticompetitive restraints"). "Determining whether there is ease of entry hinges upon an analysis of barriers to new firms entering the market or existing firms expanding into new regions of the market." CCC Holdings, 605 F. Supp. 2d at 47 (quoting FTC v. Cardinal Health, Inc., 12 F. Supp. 2d 34, 55 (D.D.C. 1998)). [95] In this case, the parties essentially agree that the proper focus of this inquiry is on the likelihood of expansion by existing competitors rather than new entry into the market.[28] See Defs.' Post-Trial Mem. at 21-22. Since the government has established its prima facie case, the defendants carry the burden to show that ease of expansion is sufficient "to fill the competitive void that will result if [defendants are] permitted to purchase" their acquisition target. Swedish Match, 131 F. Supp. 2d at 169.

In [96] describing the competitive landscape, the defendants note there are eighteen companies offering various DDIY products through the FFA. Defs.' Post-Trial Mem. at 22. Most of these companies are very small-time operators, however. [*74] The defendants acknowledge this fact, but nevertheless contend that the companies "TaxSlayer and TaxHawk are the two largest and most poised to replicate the scale and strength of TaxACT." Id. at 23. Witnesses from TaxSlayer and TaxHawk were the only witnesses from other DDIY companies to testify at the hearing. As such, the Court's ease of expansion analysis will focus on whether these two competitors are poised to expand in a way that is "timely, likely, and sufficient in its magnitude, character, and scope to deter or counteract" any potential anticompetitive effects resulting from the merger.

TaxHawk runs five different websites, including FreeTaxUSA.com, that all market the same underlying DDIY product. Kimber, TT, 9/12/11 a.m., at 12, 40. TaxHawk was founded in 2001, three years after TaxACT, although it has a significantly smaller market share of 3.2 percent. Id. at 11; GX 27. TaxHawk's vice-president and co-founder, Mr. Dane Kimber, testified that the [97] company has the technical infrastructure to grow by five to seven times the number of customers in any given year. Kimber, TT, 9/12/11 a.m., at 21. TaxHawk's marketing strategy relies substantially on search engine advertising and search term optimization, including by using the FreeTaxUSA.com domain name, which contains the keywords "free" and "tax." See id. at 19-27. Despite having been in business for a decade, its products are functionally more limited than those of Intuit, HRB, and TaxACT in various ways. See PFF ¶ 185. Although TaxHawk services the forms that cover most taxpayers, its program does not service all federal forms, it excludes two states' forms in their entirety, and it does not service city income tax forms for major cities that have income taxes – notably, New York City. Kimber, TT, 9/12/11 a.m., at 44. In fact, Mr. Kimber testified that the company would likely need another decade before its DDIY products could fully support all the tax forms. Id. at 45. The reason is that TaxHawk is what Mr. Kimber "like[s] to call . . . a 'lifestyle' company. We like the lifestyle we have as owners. We want our employees to have a life, if you will. I do feel we have the expertise [98] to [expand functionality] more rapidly, but we choose not to." Id. Mr. Kimber also testified that TaxHawk had suddenly experienced an unprecedented growth rate of over 60 percent since April 2011, id. at 20-21, but that the company had not done any analysis to attempt to explain this unanticipated (and presumably welcome) growth. Id. at 39.

[28] New entrants to the market would not only face all of the barriers to expansion already faced by the existing small firms offering DDIY products, they would also have to develop their own products, including a software platform and a sufficient level of tax expertise. For entry to be considered timely, it typically must occur within approximately two years post-merger. See Commentary on the Horizontal Merger Guidelines (2006) at 45-46 (discussing prior Merger Guidelines § 3.2, which specified that timely entry should occur within two years). It is unlikely that an entirely new entrant to the market could compete meaningfully with the established DDIY firms within that time frame.

TaxHawk's relaxed attitude toward its business stands in stark contrast to the entrepreneurial verve that was apparent throughout the testimony of Mr. Dunn and that has been rewarded by the impressive growth of TaxACT over the years. In short, TaxHawk is a very different company from TaxACT. TaxHawk is a small company that has developed a string of search-engine-optimized DDIY websites, which deliver a sufficient income stream to sustain its owners' comfortable lifestyle, without requiring maximal effort on their part. While TaxHawk's decision to prioritize a relaxed lifestyle over robust competition and innovation is certainly a valid one, expansion from TaxHawk that would allow it to compete "on the same playing field" as the merged company appears unlikely. Chicago Bridge & Iron Co. N.V. v. FTC, 534 F.3d 410, 430 (5th Cir. 2008).

After TaxHawk, [99] TaxSlayer is the next largest DDIY competitor, with a 2.7 percent market share. GX 27. TaxSlayer.com launched in 2003, although the same company started selling a software product to tax professionals several years earlier. Rhodes, TT, 9/12/11 a.m., at 71. TaxSlayer is part of the same corporate family as Rhodes Murphy, a tax firm that provides assisted tax preparation through [*75] sixteen retail offices in the Augusta, Georgia area. Id. The company is a family business and James Brian Rhodes, the product manager of TaxSlayer and the son of the company's founder, testified at the hearing. Id. at 70,73. Mr. Rhodes testified that, in the event of an increase in TaxACT's prices or a decrease in its quality, he "believe[s] that [TaxSlayer is] poised and ready to take those customers who would want to go elsewhere for lower prices." Id. at 81. TaxSlayer's marketing strategy relies heavily on sponsorship of sporting events, including the Gator Bowl and NASCAR. Id. at 75. TaxSlayer typically invests {a significant amount of its budget in marketing}. Rhodes, TT, 9/12/11 a.m. (sealed), at 86, 92. For example, TaxSlayer plans to spend ${redacted} on marketing in 2012 based on 2011 revenues of ${redacted}. [100] Id. at 84, 87. Despite this {high} level of marketing spending, TaxSlayer's DDIY market share has not changed substantially since 2006, despite steady growth in TaxSlayer's revenue and number of units sold. See id. at 94-96; GX 21-7 (IRS e-file share data chart showing 2.5 percent share for TaxSlayer in 2006 and 2.7 percent in 2010). Rather, TaxSlayer's growth in unit sales and revenue has come from maintaining the same slice of an expanding pie – the growing DDIY market. See GX 21-7.

TaxSlayer's stable market share despite its {significant} marketing expenditure as a proportion of revenue points to what the government considers the key barrier to entry in this market – the importance of reputation and brand in driving consumer behavior in purchasing DDIY products. Simply put, tax returns are highly personal documents that carry significant financial and legal consequences for consumers. Consumers, therefore, must trust and have confidence in their tax service provider. As one of TaxACT's bankers put it a confidential memorandum, "[t]ax filers must have confidence that sensitive data is being handled with care and that returns are processed in a secure, error-free and timely manner." [101] GX 125 at 12.

Building a reputation that a significant number of consumers will trust requires time and money. As HRB's former CEO noted, it takes millions of dollars and lots of time to develop a brand. Bennett, TT, 9/6/11 p.m., at 30. TaxACT's offering memoranda also point to the difficulty in building a brand in the industry as a barrier to competition. See GX 28-24 at 2SS-CORPe-2419 (2009 memorandum stating "With over 11 years of building reliable, robust software solutions, 2SS has created a valuable brand within the online tax preparation market which Management believes would take years of competitive investment to replicate."). In the DDIY industry, the Big Three incumbent players spend millions on marketing and advertising each year to build and maintain their brands, dwarfing the combined spending of the smaller companies. For example, in tax year 2009, Intuit, HRB, and TaxACT collectively spent approximately {over $100 million} on marketing and advertising. GX 29 (Intuit Decl.) ¶ 38; GX 61-22 at 3; GX 138 at 37. By contrast, {TaxSlayer and TaxHawk spent a significantly smaller amount}.[29] Rhodes, [*76] TT, 9/12/11 a.m. (sealed), at 95; GX 25 (TaxHawk Decl.) ¶ 14.

[29] The defendants [102] attempt to reframe this disparity by noting that their calculation of TaxSlayer's projected tax season 2015 marketing budget would slightly surpass the amount of TaxACT's actual 2011 marketing budget. Defs.' Post-Trial Mem. at 23. Setting aside the validity of the defendants' aggressive projections of TaxSlayer's 2015 budget, a proper comparison would have to be founded upon a comparable projection of TaxACT's 2015 budget—not TaxACT's actual 2011 numbers, for which the relevant comparison is TaxSlayer's 2011 numbers.

Even TaxACT's successful business strategy has been premised on the notion that it cannot outspend Intuit and HRB on marketing. Dunn, TT, 9/7/11 p.m., at 71-72. The massive marketing expenditures of the two major DDIY firms create high per customer acquisition costs and limit the easy marketing channels that are open to smaller competitors. See, e.g., id. at 88-89 (noting that "Web advertising is the most competitive. . . I think [TaxACT is] going to get shut out on Yahoo [the popular web portal]. I think Intuit is going to buy it lock, stock and barrel," and explaining that this outcome would hurt TaxACT's business if it doesn't find effective alternative advertising venues). [103] Rather than attempting to outspend HRB and Intuit, TaxACT's growth strategy has largely depended on providing "great customer service, a great product, and a great customer experience" and then relying on word-of-mouth referrals to spread the awareness of the brand. Id. at 71-72. This process is inherently time-consuming and difficult to replicate.

In support of their argument that TaxSlayer and TaxHawk are poised to expand in response to a price increase, the defendants emphasize that these companies "are at about the same position in terms of customer base as TaxACT was in 2002, which was the year before it did the Free For All [offer on] the FFA." Meyer, TT, 9/12/11 p.m., at 130. The government points out, however, that there are two flaws in this comparison, even assuming that TaxSlayer and TaxHawk were TaxACT's competitive equals. First, while these companies may have a similar number of customers to TaxACT in 2002 in absolute terms, TaxACT's market share at 8 percent was already significantly larger than the market shares of these firms today, despite the fact that TaxACT had been in the market for fewer years. See GTX 17.

Second, the DDIY market has matured considerably since [104] 2002, in parallel with the general ripening of various online industries during the past decade. Notably, the pool of pen-and-paper customers has dwindled as DDIY preparation has grown. Thus, the "low hanging fruit" of DDIY customer acquisition may have been plucked. See GX 296 (Houseworth Dep.) at 66-68 (noting that "there's probably only two or three years of continued mid teens category growth for online" because of the shrinking pool of new potential customers that can be converted from the pen-and-paper method). This trend suggests existing market shares may become further entrenched and that growing market share may be even harder, especially because there are barriers to switching from one DDIY product to another. For example, the hearing evidence showed that it is difficult to import prior-year tax return data across DDIY brands. If a taxpayer uses, say, TurboTax or TaxACT in one year, then when the taxpayer returns the next year, the program can automatically import the prior year's data, which is not only convenient but can also help the taxpayer identify useful tax information, such as carry forwards and available deductions. Dunn, TT, 9/8/11 a.m., at 111-14. Currently, [105] it is not possible to import much of this data if the taxpayer switches to a competitor's product. Id. Thus, this feature lends a "stickiness" to each particular DDIY product once a customer has used it.

Upon consideration of all of the evidence relating to barriers to entry or expansion, the Court cannot find that expansion is likely to avert anticompetitive effects from the transaction. The Court will next consider whether the evidence supports a likelihood [*77] of coordinated or unilateral anticompetitive effects from the merger.

b. Coordinated Effects

HN21[] Merger law "rests upon the theory that, where rivals are few, firms will be able to coordinate their behavior, either by overt collusion or implicit understanding in order to restrict output and achieve profits above competitive levels." CCC Holdings, 605 F. Supp. 2d at 60 (quoting Heinz, 246 F.3d at 715). The government argues that the "elimination of TaxACT, one of the 'Big 3' Digital DIY firms" will facilitate tacit coordination between Intuit and HRB. Pl.'s Post-Trial Mem. at 15. "Whether a merger will make coordinated interaction more likely depends on whether market conditions, on the whole, are conducive to reaching terms of coordination [106] and detecting and punishing deviations from those terms." CCC Holdings, 605 F. Supp. 2d at 60 (internal quotation omitted). Since the government has established its prima facie case, the burden is on the defendants to produce evidence of "structural market barriers to collusion" specific to this industry that would defeat the "ordinary presumption of collusion" that attaches to a merger in a highly concentrated market. See Heinz, 246 F.3d at 725.

The defendants argue the primary reason that coordinated effects will be unlikely is that Intuit will have no incentive to compete any less vigorously post-merger. The defendants assert that the competition between Intuit and HRB's retail stores would be "fundamentally nullified if Intuit decided to reduce the competitiveness of TurboTax." Defs.' Post-Trial Mem. at 17. Further, defendants contend that Intuit has no incentive to reduce the competitiveness of its free product because it views its free product as a critical driver of new customers. Id. at 17-18 Therefore, the defendants conclude that if HRB does not compete as aggressively as possible with its post-merger products, it will lose customers to Intuit. Id. at 18.

The most compelling [107] evidence the defendants marshal in support of these arguments consists of documents and testimony indicating that Intuit engaged in a series of "war games" designed to anticipate and defuse new competitive threats that might emerge from HRB post-merger. See GX 293 (Intuit Dep.) at 98-101; DX 84. The documents and testimony do indicate that Intuit and HRB will continue to compete for taxpayers' patronage after the merger—indeed, in the DDIY market, they would be the only major competitors. This conclusion, however, is not necessarily inconsistent with some coordination. As the Merger Guidelines explain, coordinated interaction involves a range of conduct, including unspoken understandings about how firms will compete or refrain from competing. See Merger Guidelines § 7.

In this case, the government contends that coordination would likely take the form of mutual recognition that neither firm has an interest in an overall "race to free" in which high-quality tax preparation software is provided for free or very low prices. Indeed, the government points to an outline created as part of the Intuit "war games" regarding post-merger competition with HRB that also indicates an Intuit employee's [108] perception that part of HRB's post-merger strategy would be to "not escalate free war: Make free the starting point not the end point for customers." GX 293-13 at INT-DOJ0015942.[30] Since, as defendants point [*78] out, DDIY companies have found "free" offers to be a useful marketing tool, it is unlikely that free offers would be eliminated. Rather, the government argues, it is more likely that HRB and Intuit may find it "in their mutual interest to reduce the quality of their free offerings . . . offer a lower quality free product and maintain higher prices for paid products . . . ." PFF ¶ 141.

The government points to a highly persuasive historical act of cooperation between HRB and Intuit that supports this theory. Cf. Merger Guidelines § 7.2 ("[M]arket conditions are conducive to coordinated interaction if firms representing a substantial share in the relevant market appear to have previously engaged in express collusion."). After TaxACT launched its free-for-all offer in the FFA, Intuit proposed that the firms in the market limit their free FFA offers, a move which TaxACT opposed and which Mr. Dunn believed was an illegal restraint on trade. Dunn, TT, 9/7/11 p.m., at 79. HRB, Intuit, and others then joined together and successfully lobbied the IRS for limitations on the scope of the free offers through the FFA – limitations that remain in place today. Ernst, TT, 9/7/11 a.m., at 26-27; [110] Warren-Boulton, TT, 9/9/11 p.m., at 78. This action illustrates how the pricing incentives of HRB and Intuit differ from those of TaxACT and it also shows that HRB and Intuit, although otherwise competitors, are capable of acting in concert to protect their common interests.

The defendants also argue that coordinated effects are unlikely because the DDIY market consists of differentiated products and has low price transparency. See CCC Holdings, 605 F. Supp. 2d at 62 (recognizing the importance of price transparency to the likelihood of coordinated effects). To the contrary, the record clearly demonstrates that the players in the DDIY industry are well aware of the prices and features offered by competitors. Since DDIY products are marketed to a large swath of the American population and available via the Internet, DDIY firms can easily monitor their competitors' offerings and pricing. The fact that competitors may offer various discounts and coupons to some customers via email hardly renders industry pricing "not transparent," as defendants submit. See Defs.' Post-Trial Mem. at 21. Moreover, while collusion may, in some instances, be more likely in markets for homogenous products than [111] differentiated products, product differentiation in this market would not necessarily make collusion more difficult. See Heinz, 246 F.3d at 716-17, 724-25 (finding likelihood of coordinated effects in product market differentiated by brand); see also CCC Holdings, 605 F. Supp. 2d at 65 n.42 ("[T]acit collusion may be easier when products are differentiated.") (quoting Lawrence A. Sullivan & Warren S. Grimes, The Law of Antitrust: An Integrated Handbook, § 11.2e1, at 635 (2d ed. 2006)).

[30] The government also cites an informal analysis written by Adam Newkirk, an analyst for HRB's DDIY business. Mr. Newkirk's analysis hypothesized that one possible reason for HRB to acquire TaxACT was that HRB and Intuit would jointly control a large DDIY market share post-merger and would "both obviously have great incentive to keep this channel profitable," while other potential purchasers of TaxACT "could decide to cut prices even further . . . ." See Newkirk, TT, 9/7/11 a.m., at 100; GX 18. The Court finds that the government overemphasized the importance and relevance of Mr. Newkirk's analysis. [109] The hearing testimony showed that Mr. Newkirk is a data analyst who had no decision-making role or authority in relation to the merger and that his discussion about the rationales for the merger was informal speculation. See Newkirk, TT, 9/7/11 p.m., at 42-44. Even so, this reasoning – independently reached by Intuit – is essentially a précis of the government's coordinated effects concern.

Other indicia of likely coordination are also present in the DDIY market. Transactions [*79] in the market are small, numerous, and spread among a mass of individual consumers, each of whom has low bargaining power; prices can be changed easily; and there are barriers to switching due to the "stickiness" of the DDIY products. See CCC Holdings, 605 F. Supp. 2d at 65-66 (discussing these factors as characteristic of markets conducive to coordination); see also supra Section III.B.2.a (discussing the difficulty of importing data as a barrier to switching from one DDIY product to another).

Finally, the Court notes that HN22[] the "merger would result in the elimination of a particularly aggressive competitor in a highly [112] concentrated market, a factor which is certainly an important consideration when analyzing possible anti-competitive effects." Staples, 970 F. Supp. at 1083; see also FTC v. Libbey, 211 F. Supp. 2d 34, 47 (D.D.C. 2002). The evidence presented at the hearing from all parties demonstrated TaxACT's impressive history of innovation and competition in the DDIY market. Mr. Dunn's trial testimony revealed him to be a dedicated and talented entrepreneur and businessman, with deep knowledge and passion for providing high-quality, low-cost tax solutions. TaxACT's history of expanding the scope of its high-quality, free product offerings has pushed the industry toward lower pricing, even when the two major players were not yet ready to follow – most notably in TaxACT's introduction of free-for-all into the market.

The government presses the argument that TaxACT's role as an aggressive competitor is particularly important by urging this Court to find that TaxACT is a "maverick." See Pl.'s Post-Trial Mem. at 18-19. In the context of antitrust law, a maverick has been defined as a particularly aggressive competitor that "plays a disruptive role in the market to the benefit of customers." Merger Guidelines [113] § 2.1.5. The most recent revision of the Merger Guidelines endorses this concept and gives a few examples of firms that may be industry mavericks, such as where "one of the merging firms may have the incentive to take the lead in price cutting or . . . a firm that has often resisted otherwise prevailing industry norms to cooperate on price setting or other terms of competition." Id.

The parties have spilled substantial ink debating TaxACT's maverick status. The arguments over whether TaxACT is or is not a "maverick" – or whether perhaps it once was a maverick but has not been a maverick recently – have not been particularly helpful to the Court's analysis. The government even put forward as supposed evidence a TaxACT promotional press release in which the company described itself as a "maverick." See GX 28-6. This type of evidence amounts to little more than a game of semantic gotcha. Here, the record is clear that while TaxACT has been an aggressive and innovative competitor in the market, as defendants admit, TaxACT is not unique in this role. Other competitors, including HRB and Intuit, have also been aggressive and innovative in forcing companies in the DDIY market to respond to [114] new product offerings to the benefit of consumers. See Defs.' Post-Trial Mem. at 20.

The government has not set out a clear standard, based on functional or economic considerations, to distinguish a maverick from any other aggressive competitor. At times, the government has emphasized TaxACT's low pricing as evidence of its maverick status, while, at other times, the government seems to suggest that almost any competitive activity on TaxACT's part is a "disruptive" indicator of a maverick. For example, the government claims that "[m]ost recently, TaxACT continued to disrupt the Digital DIY market by entering the boxed retail software segment of the [*80] market, which had belonged solely to HRB and [Intuit]." Pl.'s Post-Trial Mem. at 19. Credible evidence at the hearing, however, showed {otherwise}. See Dunn, TT, 9/8/11 p.m. (sealed), at 4. Moreover, the Court credits Mr. Dunn's explanation that TaxACT has little interest in selling boxed retail software because he believes this market segment is {redacted} not particularly significant. See Dunn, TT, 9/7/11 p.m. (sealed), at 123 ({redacted}).

What the Court finds particularly germane for the "maverick" or "particularly aggressive competitor" [115] analysis in this case is this question: Does TaxACT consistently play a role within the competitive structure of this market that constrains prices? See Staples, 970 F. Supp. at 1083 (finding "merger would result in the elimination of a particularly aggressive competitor in a highly concentrated market" where the merger would remove competition between "the two lowest cost and lowest priced firms" in the market); Merger Guidelines § 2.1.5 (noting maverick concerns may arise where "one of the merging firms may have the incentive to take the lead in price cutting or [with] . . . a firm that has often resisted otherwise prevailing industry norms to cooperate on price setting or other terms of competition."). The Court finds that TaxACT's competition does play a special role in this market that constrains prices. Not only did TaxACT buck prevailing pricing norms by introducing the free-for-all offer, which others later matched, it has remained the only competitor with significant market share to embrace a business strategy that relies primarily on offering high-quality, full-featured products for free with associated products at low prices.

Moreover, as the plaintiff's expert, Dr. Warren-Boulton, [116] explained, the pricing incentives of the merged firm will differ from those of TaxACT pre-merger because the merged firm's opportunity cost for offering free or very low-priced products will increase as compared to TaxACT now. See Warren-Boulton, 9/9/11 p.m., at 14-16. In other words, the merged firm will have a greater incentive to migrate customers into its higher-priced offerings – for example, by limiting the breadth of features available in the free or low-priced offerings or only offering innovative new features in the higher-priced products. See Commentary on the Horizontal Merger Guidelines (2006) at 24 (noting the importance of asking "whether the acquired firm has behaved as a maverick and whether the incentives that are expected to guide the merged firm's behavior likely would be different.").

While the defendants oppose the government's maverick theory, they do not deny that TaxACT has been an aggressive competitor. Indeed, they submit that "that's why H&R Block wants to buy them." Defs.' Closing Argument, TT, 10/3/11 a.m., at 132. HRB contends that the acquisition of TaxACT will result in efficiencies and management improvements that "will lead to better, more effective, [117] and/or cheaper H&R Block digital products post-merger" that are better able to compete with Intuit. Defs.' Post-Trial Mem. at 17. This argument is quite similar to the argument of the defendants in Heinz, which some commentators have described as arguing that the merger would create a maverick. Heinz, 246 F.3d at 720-22; see Jonathan B. Baker, Mavericks, Mergers, and Exclusion: Proving Coordinated Competitive Effects Under the Antitrust Laws, 77 N.Y.U. L. Rev. 135, 184 (2002). While the district court in Heinz accepted this argument that the merger would enhance rather than stifle competition, the D.C. Circuit reversed, finding that the "district court's analysis [fell] short of the findings necessary for a successful efficiencies defense" in that case. Heinz, 246 F.3d at 721. As [*81] explained more fully in Section III.B.2.d below, the defendants' efficiency arguments fail here for some of the same reasons the D.C. Circuit identified in Heinz.

Finally, the defendants suggest that coordinated effects are unlikely because of the ease of expansion for other competitors in the market. As detailed above in the Court's discussion of barriers to entry and expansion, the Court does not find that [118] ease of expansion would counteract likely anticompetitive effects.

Accordingly, the defendants have not rebutted the presumption that anticompetitive coordinated effects would result from the merger. To the contrary, the preponderance of the evidence suggests the acquisition is reasonably likely to cause such effects. See id. at 711-12 (finding, in market characterized by high barriers to entry and high HHI figures, that "no court has ever approved a merger to duopoly under similar circumstances.").

c. Unilateral Effects

HN23[] A merger is likely to have unilateral anticompetitive effect if the acquiring firm will have the incentive to raise prices or reduce quality after the acquisition, independent of competitive responses from other firms. See Swedish Match, 131 F. Supp. 2d at 169; Merger Guidelines § 6 ("The elimination of competition between two firms that results from their merger may alone constitute a substantial lessening of competition."). "The extent of direct competition between the products sold by the merging parties is central to the evaluation of unilateral price effects." Merger Guidelines § 6.1. As Judge Collyer in CCC Holdings explained:

> Unilateral effects in a differentiated [119] product market are likely to be profitable under the following conditions: (1) the products must be differentiated; (2) the products controlled by the merging firms must be > close substitutes, i.e., "a substantial number of the customers of one firm would turn to the other in response to a price increase"; (3) other products must be sufficiently different from the products offered by the merging firms that a merger would make a small but significant and non-transitory price increase profitable for the merging firm; and (4) repositioning must be unlikely.

605 F. Supp. 2d at 68 (citing Oracle, 331 F. Supp. 2d at 1117-18).[31] Since the Court has already found that the preponderance of the evidence shows a reasonable likelihood of coordinated effects, the Court need not reach the issue of unilateral effects. See id. at 67. The Court will discuss it, however, since there has been substantial argument on this topic and the Court's findings regarding unilateral effects bolster the conclusion that this proposed merger would violate Section 7 of the Clayton Act. As with coordinated effects, since the government has established its prima facie case, the burden is on the defendants to produce evidence [120] showing that the presumption of anticompetitive effects that attaches to a merger in a highly concentrated market is unfounded, but the ultimate burden of proof remains with the government.

i. Elimination of Direct Competition Between the Merging Parties

The government argues that unilateral effects are likely because the merger will eliminate head-to-head competition between HRB and TaxACT that has benefited taxpaying American consumers. Much [*82] of the evidence indicating direct competition between HRB and TaxACT is discussed above in relation to the market definition. See supra Section III.A. The government emphasizes that HRB has lowered its DDIY prices to better compete with free online products, the category pioneered by TaxACT, and has directly considered TaxACT's prices in setting its own prices. See GX 53 at 2, 8; GX 188; GX 199 at 5-9. HRB has also determined the nature of its free offerings in response to competitive activity from TaxACT. See, e.g., GX 304 at 5 (HRB changed timing of FFA offering in response to TaxACT's offer); GX 44 (recognizing need to compete with [121] TaxACT offerings); GX 79 (comparing contemplated free product description on HRB's website with TaxACT's website); GX 51 at 4 (noting launch of free online products intended "[t]o match competitor offerings and stem online share loss to Intuit and TaxACT"). The government also points to HRB documents that appear to acknowledge that TaxACT has put downward pressure on HRB's pricing ability. See GX 296-16 at 20-21 (noting TaxACT's association with the "commoditization of online space" and downward price pressure from commoditization); GX 20 at 11 ({redacted}). From all of this evidence, and the additional evidence discussed in this opinion, it is clear that HRB and TaxACT are head-to-head competitors.

ii. Pledge to Maintain TaxACT's Current Prices

Defendants press a few different arguments against a finding of likely unilateral anticompetitive effects. First, the defendants have pledged to maintain TaxACT's current prices for three years.[32] While the Court has no reason to doubt that defendants would honor their promise, this type of guarantee cannot rebut a likelihood of anticompetitive effects in this case. See Cardinal Health, 12 F. Supp. 2d at 64 (finding that "even with such guarantees [122] [to maintain prices], the mergers would likely result in anti-competitive prices."). Even if TaxACT's list price remains the same, the merged firm could accomplish what amounts to a price increase through other means. For example, instead of raising TaxACT's prices, it could limit the functionality of TaxACT's products, reserving special features or innovations for higher priced, HRB-branded products. The merged firm could also limit the availability of TaxACT to consumers by marketing it more selectively and less vigorously. Indeed, the defendants concede that one immediate effect of the merger will be the removal of TaxACT from the IRS-sponsored FFA website, a marketing channel whose importance the defendants themselves emphasize in their argument regarding barriers to expansion. See Dunn, TT, 9/7/11 p.m., at 76-77; Defs.' Post-Trial Mem. at 22.

[31] The first criterion in this analysis is satisfied because it is undisputed that DDIY products are differentiated.

[32] Before the hearing, the plaintiff filed a motion in limine to exclude evidence relating to this guarantee. ECF No. 44. Following oral argument at the pre-hearing conference, the plaintiff withdrew this motion. See Minute Entry dated September 2, 2011.

iii. Value Versus Premium Market Segments

Second, defendants argue that HRB and TaxACT are [123] not particularly close competitors. The defendants contend that HRB and TaxACT largely compete in distinct segments of the market – with HRB in the higher-priced, "premium" segment and TaxACT in the lower-priced, "value" segment.[33] The defendants also argue that [*83] there can be no unilateral effects because the evidence shows that both TaxACT and HRB are closer competitors to TurboTax than to each other. Defs.' Post-Trial Mem. at 15.

As part of the argument that HRB and TaxACT focus on separate value and premium segments, the defendants argued that for several years in the mid-2000s, HRB was trapped in the "murky middle" between TaxACT's value offerings and Intuit's premium offerings. See DX 17 (Meyer Rep.) at 29; Meyer, TT, 9/13/2011 a.m., at 103-107. The defendants argue that, in recent years, HRB has positioned itself more clearly as a premium provider, as evidenced by the fact that the list price of its online federal plus state DDIY product has tracked Intuit's price more closely since 2010. See DX 17 (Meyer Rep.) at 29. This comparison is misleading because it focuses solely on the comparison of the list prices for the companies' highest-priced products. See id. at 29 n.116. During the past few years, while HRB has increased the list price of its top-priced DDIY offering, it has also more heavily marketed free products. See GX 51 at 4; see also Meyer, TT, 9/13/2011 a.m., at 105-106. Accordingly, since 2008, HRB's average DDIY sales price has declined, while the average revenue per paid customer has remained roughly the same. [125] See GX 296-7 ("Digital Tax Solutions FY11 Actual Deep Dive") at 1; Meyer, TT, 9/13/11 a.m., at 107-108.

Further, the evidence discussed above indicating direct price and feature competition between HRB and TaxACT negates the conclusion that they operate in separate value and premium segments of the market. There are certainly occasional references to different pricing levels in the defendants' documents. See GX 20 at 11 (HRB document noting {redacted}) (emphasis added). This hardly means that the companies are not in close competition, however. Rather, as Mr. Dunn's testimony reflects, TaxACT competes with capital-rich HRB and Intuit by offering high-quality products at substantially lower prices. See Dunn, TT, 9/7/11 p.m., at 71-72 (noting that rather than attempting to outspend its richer competitors on marketing, TaxACT's growth strategy has depended on providing "great customer service, a great product, and a great customer experience" for a much lower price, including free). Id. This type of healthy competition benefits taxpaying consumers.

The fact that Intuit may be the closest competitor for both HRB and TaxACT also does not necessarily prevent a finding of unilateral effects [126] for this merger. See Areeda & Hovenkamp, ¶ 914, 77-80 (explaining that the merging parties need not be the closest rivals for there to be unilateral anticompetitive effects); see also Commentary on the Horizontal Merger Guidelines (2006) at 28 ("A merger may produce significant unilateral effects even though a non-merging product is the 'closest' substitute for every merging product . . ."). Using a simple estimate of diversion based on market share would indeed suggest that HRB and TaxACT are each other's second closest rivals after Intuit.[34] [*84] See GX 121 (Warren-Boulton Rep.) at 44 (explaining that using market share to estimate diversion is a "benchmark" assumption in standard empirical models of consumer demand).

iv. Merged Company's Combined Market Share

[33] In the defendants' submissions to the Antitrust Division of the DOJ prior to this litigation, the defendants appeared to emphasize this "value" and "premium" distinction as the basis for their definition of the relevant market. See GX 135 at 14-15; GX 629 at 18-30. As a result, the government accuses the defendants of having "tacked back and forth" regarding their proposed relevant market definition. Pl.'s Post-Trial Mem. at 1-2. While the Court agrees that the import of the hearing testimony about value and premium products was not always clear, the defendants' counsel clarified during closing arguments that the "only real relevance" of the premium versus value distinction was to show that HRB and TaxACT are not closest the competitors for the purposes [124] of unilateral effects analysis. Defs.' Closing Argument, TT, 10/3/2011 a.m., at 93-94.

[34] The relevance of the diversion estimates provided by the expert economists to the unilateral effects analysis is discussed more fully below.

Another argument that the defendants present against a likelihood of unilateral effects is that, in their view, unilateral effects cannot be demonstrated where the combined firm's market share does not surpass a certain threshold. The defendants point out that in Oracle, the court stated that [127] "[a] presumption of anticompetitive effects from a combined share of 35% in a differentiated products market is unwarranted. Indeed, the opposite is likely true." 331 F. Supp. 2d at 1123. The Oracle court stated that "[t]o prevail on a differentiated products unilateral effects claim, a plaintiff must prove a relevant market in which the merging parties would have essentially a monopoly or dominant position." Id. Some commentators have criticized this standard, however, because "impermissible price increases . . . can be achieved on far lower market shares" than Oracle's standard evidently requires. Areeda & Hovenkamp ¶ 914, at 84. Indeed, Judge Brown's subsequent opinion from this Circuit in Whole Foods implied that a market definition itself may not even be required for proving a Section 7 violation based on unilateral effects. See Whole Foods, 548 F.3d at 1036. In a footnote, Judge Brown explained that "a merger between two close competitors can sometimes raise antitrust concerns due to unilateral effects in highly differentiated markets. In such a situation, it might not be necessary to understand the market definition to conclude a preliminary injunction should issue."[35] Id. at [128] n.1 (citation omitted). [*85] The Court therefore declines the defendants' invitation, in reliance on Oracle, to impose a market share threshold for proving a unilateral effects claim.[36]

v. Post-Merger Dual Brand Strategy

HRB's plans for the post-merger company raise anticompetitive questions. Post-merger, [131] HRB's stated plan is to maintain both the HRB and TaxACT brands –with the HRB-brand focusing on higher priced-products and the TaxACT brand focusing on the lower-priced products. See Bennett, TT, 9/6/11 a.m., 101-102; DX 1005 at 1. HRB's general pre-merger pricing strategy has been to price its products a bit below Intuit's products. Bennett, TT, 9/6/11 a.m., at 99. Part of HRB's post-merger strategy, however, appears to involve raising prices on HRB-branded [35] "As a matter of applied economics, evaluation of unilateral effects does not require a market definition in the traditional sense at all." Areeda & Hovenkamp ¶ 913a, at 66. This is so because unilateral effects analysis focuses on measuring a firm's market power directly by "estimating the change in residual demand facing the post-merger firm. 'Residual demand' refers to the demand for a firm's goods after the output of all other competing firms has been taken into account." Id. at 63. If market power itself can be directly measured or estimated reliably, then in theory market definition is superfluous, at least as a matter of economics, because "[i]dentifying a market and computing market shares provide an indirect means for measuring market power." Id. ¶ 532a at 242-43; see also id. ¶ 521c. The 2010 revisions to the Merger Guidelines also appear to reflect this understanding. See Merger Guidelines § 4 ("The Agencies' analysis need not start with market definition. Some of the analytical tools used by [129] the Agencies to assess competitive effects do not rely on market definition, although evaluation of competitive alternatives available to customers is always necessary at some point in the analysis."). As a legal matter, however, a market definition may be required by Section 7 of the Clayton Act. See Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 324 ("[D]etermination of the relevant market is a necessary predicate to a finding of a violation of the Clayton Act because the threatened monopoly must be one which will substantially lessen competition 'within the area of effective competition.' Substantiality can be determined only in terms of the market affected. The 'area of effective competition' must be determined by reference to a product market (the 'line of commerce') and a geographic market (the 'section of the country').") (internal citation omitted); see also Heinz, 246 F.3d at 719 n.17 ("Courts interpret 'line of commerce' [in the language of the Clayton Act] as synonymous with the relevant product market."). The Court is not aware of any modern Section 7 case in which the court dispensed with the requirement to define a relevant product market, although Judge Brown's opinion in Whole Foods may be [130] read to endorse this possibility in accordance with the evolving understandings in economics. See Whole Foods, 548 F.3d at 1036 (Brown, J.) (stating that the Baker Hughes analytical framework, which "rests on defining a market and showing undue concentration in that market," "does not exhaust the possible ways to prove a § 7 violation on the merits").

[36] The Commentary on the Merger Guidelines, for its part, explains that while "[a]s an empirical matter, the unilateral effects challenges made by the Agencies nearly always have involved combined shares greater than 35%," "the Agencies may challenge mergers when the combined share falls below 35% if the analysis of the mergers' particular unilateral competitive effects indicates that they would be likely substantially to lessen competition." Commentary on the Horizontal Merger Guidelines (2006) at 26. "Combined shares less than 35% may be sufficiently high to produce a substantial unilateral anticompetitive effect if the products are differentiated and the merging products are especially close substitutes . . . ." Id.

products. Under this two-brand strategy, HRB would price its "premium" HRB-branded products equal to or above Intuit's prices. See Bennett, TT, 9/6/11 a.m., 101-102; DX 1005 at 1. At the same time, the company would "offer TaxACT as its free and value brand." DX 17 (Meyer Rep.) at 78. Yet, the defendants have never convincingly explained how this two-brand strategy would work in practice because defendants have repeatedly emphasized how important "free" product offerings are for all DDIY brands. See DFF ¶ 185 ("Free is a highly profitable method of acquiring customers for H&R Block."); DX 600 at 10 (HRB Board of Directors presentation for merger approval stating that after the merger TaxACT would be the "low cost value provider [132] focused on free" but that the company would "[c]ontinue to offer a free product in the HRB brand to drive client acquisition").

Part of the government's concern with HRB's two-brand strategy is that the incentives for the combined firm in marketing and developing the TaxACT product would be quite different from the incentives that exist in the current market. HRB may feel comfortable raising its "premium" prices because it knows that consumers looking for lower-cost DDIY options would be most likely to migrate to TaxACT, the established "value leader" in the market. Since HRB will also control TaxACT post-merger, however, HRB can still ensure that TaxACT's value proposition does not get "too good" and undermine the paid HRB products with the highest profit margins. For example, HRB might restrict the features of TaxACT's free and low-cost products to ensure they do not cannibalize sales of HRB's higher priced offerings. Indeed, assuming that there are high barriers to entry and expansion, this strategy would appear logical because it would maximize HRB's profit per customer. Post-merger, TaxACT will not have the same incentives it has today to develop robust free and low-cost offerings [133] that can compete with the functionality offered by HRB and Intuit. See Warren-Boulton, TT, 9/8/11 p.m., at 32-33. Thus, this merger could potentially have the effect of stifling price and feature competition compared with maintaining TaxACT as an independent firm.

[*86] vi. Merger Simulation Shows Likely Unilateral Price Increase

The government's expert economist, Dr. Warren-Boulton, did a merger simulation analysis that suggests a unilateral price increase is likely. Warren-Boulton, TT, 9/9/11 a.m., at 5-11; GX 121 (Warren-Boulton Rep.) at 52. The key factors in this simulation are HRB and TaxACT's price-cost margins and the diversion ratios between their products. Cf. Swedish Match, 131 F. Supp. 2d at 169 ("High margins and high diversion ratios support large price increases, a tenet endorsed by most economists.").

(a). Diversion Ratios Between the Merging Parties' DDIY Products

As explained above, the diversion rate from TaxACT to HRB measures the proportion of customers that would leave TaxACT in response to a price increase and switch to HRB. Dr. Warren-Boulton's report explains that higher diversion rates between merging parties "allow the firms to recapture more lost sales following a [134] price increase, and therefore lead to greater upward pricing pressure and post-merger unilateral price increases." GX 121 (Warren-Boulton Rep.) at 44. Dr. Warren-Boulton estimated diversion ratios from two sources: the parties' DDIY market share data and the IRS switching data.[37] Id. at 44-48.

By assuming diversion rates in accordance with market share, Dr. Warren-Boulton estimated the diversion rate from TaxACT to HRB to be 12 percent and from HRB to TaxACT to be 14 percent. Id. at 44-45. Dr. Warren-Boulton notes that these diversion estimates likely underestimate what the actual post-merger diversion rates will be since the merged company will likely implement marketing strategies to keep customers within the umbrella of the combined company. Id. at 45.

Dr. Warren-Boulton estimated diversion ratios using IRS switching data as well. As discussed above in Section III.A.3.a, he also used this switching data to test the relevant market definition. As previously noted in that prior discussion, switching data is [135] not equivalent to diversion, since diversion measures switching in response to [37] Dr. Warren-Boulton declined to rely on the defendants' proposed diversion data, derived from their consumer surveys, for the reasons already discussed supra in Section III.A.3.

a price increase as opposed to all switching generally. In particular, Dr. Warren-Boulton found that switching data is especially likely to overstate diversion from DDIY products to assisted preparation. Id. at 46-47. Therefore, Dr. Warren-Boulton discounted the switching rates from DDIY to assisted by half to correct for this effect.[38] Id. After this correction, Dr. Warren-Boulton calculated estimated diversion rates from TaxACT to HRB and from HRB to TaxACT of 12 percent. *Id.*at 47-48.

(b). Price-Cost Margins

The next step in his analysis [136] was to estimate the firms' price-cost margins. "All else equal, higher margins lead to greater unilateral price increases because [*87] the value of recaptured sales is higher." Id. at 48. Using a procedure described in his report, Dr. Warren-Boulton estimated {that the merging parties have high margins}. Id. at 49. The merger simulation also required quantities of units sold and average revenue per unit. Dr. Warren-Boulton obtained this data from the companies' submissions. Id. at 50.

(c). Simulation Results

Using all of these data, Dr. Warren-Boulton performed a linear demand Bertrand model simulation. Id. at 51. Unless there are significant efficiencies from the merger that are passed on to consumers, this simulation predicts a unilateral price increase.[39] Id. at 52. Assuming diversion ratios according to market share, the model predicts TaxACT's price will increase by 12.2 percent and HRB's price by 2.5 percent. Id. Assuming diversion ratios based on the IRS switching data as discussed above, the model predicts TaxACT's price will increase by 10.5 percent and HRB's price by 2.2 percent. Id.

(d). Critique of the Simulation's Unilateral Effects Results

The defendants attack Dr. Warren-Boulton's simulation on several grounds. The defendants reiterate their critique that switching data is an inappropriate proxy for diversion data. Further, defendants criticize the way in which Dr. Warren-Boulton discounted the switching rates from DDIY products to assisted preparation. See Warren-Boulton, TT, 9/9/9 p.m., at 60-65. In addition, the defendants contend that Dr. Warren-Boulton's simulator model is flawed because it will always predict a price increase with any positive diversion and because the model is "static," does not take various factors into account, such as the parties' different products, innovation, and marketing, and would never predict that a firm would offer free products, even though free products are a staple of the industry. DX 17 (Meyer Rep.) at 74-75.

The Court agrees that Dr. Warren-Boulton's discounting by half of the switching data from DDIY to assisted appears imprecise. Dr. Warren-Boulton clarified in his report, however, that "the model still predicts significant unilateral harm when non-discounted switching rates are [138] used to approximate diversion rates." GX 121 (Warren-Boulton Rep.) at 47. Further, and more importantly, Dr. Warren-Boulton also estimated diversion ratios based on market share and the Court has concluded above that DDIY is the appropriate relevant product market.[40]

[38] As a basis for this conclusion that switching data overstates diversion and for his choice to discount the DDIY-to-assisted switching rate by half, Dr. Warren-Boulton relies upon HRB documents that suggest that more than half of switching from DDIY to assisted occurs for reasons unrelated to price, such as a change in tax complexity. GX 121 (Warren-Boulton Rep.) at 46 n.128 (citing GX 635, GX 126). He also relies on IRS data showing that customers switching from DDIY to assisted were twice as likely to have a complexity increase as taxpayers who stayed within DDIY. Id. at 47.

[39] As discussed in Section III.B.2.d below, the Court finds most of defendants' claimed efficiencies [137] are not merger-specific or unverifiable.

[40] The defendants suggest that Dr. Warren-Boulton's reliance on market share as an estimate of diversion ratios is somewhat circular in that his market shares derive from his market definition, which, in turn, relied on his use of switching data as a proxy

As for the defendants' critiques about Dr. Warren-Boulton's economic model itself, Dr. Warren-Boulton addressed these directly. First, insofar as the model will predict at least some price increase absent efficiencies with any positive diversion ratios, Dr. Warren-Boulton explained that outcome is fully consistent with correct economic theory. GX 665 (Warren-Boulton Reply Rep.) at 14 ("Economic theory concludes that absent merger specific efficiencies, a merger between competing [139] firms will cause the merging firms to increase their prices by at least some [*88] amount. Thus, it is not a deficiency, but a strength, of merger simulation models that they reflect this aspect of economic reality."). In response to the critique that his "static" model would never predict that companies would offer free products, Dr. Warren-Boulton contends that because free DDIY products are often packaged with other paid products, these "free" products actually provide the companies with a positive average revenue per free unit, which his model does take into account. See id. at 14-15. As for the remaining critiques that the model does not factor in marketing or innovation, Dr. Warren-Boulton replies that any model is inherently a simplification of the real world, but there is no reason to assume these factors negate the price effect findings of the model. Id.

The Court finds that the merger simulation model used by the government's expert is an imprecise tool, but nonetheless has some probative value in predicting the likelihood of a potential price increase after the merger. The results of the merger simulation tend to confirm the Court's conclusions based upon the documents, testimony, [140] and other evidence in this case that HRB and TaxACT are head-to-head competitors, that TaxACT's competition has constrained HRB's pricing, and that, post-merger, overall prices in the DDIY products of the merged firms are likely to increase to the detriment of the American taxpayer.

vii. Repositioning Unlikely to Defeat Unilateral Price Increase

Repositioning by smaller competitors in response to a unilateral price increase is unlikely for the same reasons discussed above regarding barriers to entry and expansion. See Merger Guidelines § 6.1 ("Repositioning is a supply-side response that is evaluated much like entry, with consideration given to timeliness, likelihood, and sufficiency.").

Repositioning by Intuit is also unlikely due to the coordinated effects incentives discussed above. The Merger Guidelines make clear that a unilateral price increase may be defeated where "non-merging firms [are] able to reposition their products to offer close substitutes for the products offered by the merging firms." Merger Guidelines § 6.1. Since the Court has already found that HRB and Intuit would have coordinated pricing incentives post-merger, that finding implies that repositioning by Intuit [141] would not prevent HRB from raising prices. By relying on its finding of coordinated effects to predict the likelihood of repositioning by Intuit, the Court acknowledges that its unilateral effects finding is not strictly "unilateral" in the sense that it does take coordination into account. The case law and the Merger Guidelines, however, require that "repositioning" be considered in assessing unilateral effects, and the repositioning inquiry necessarily entails a consideration of the likely actions of other competitors in response to a price increase. See CCC Holdings, Inc., 605 F. Supp. 2d at 67 (noting that the distinction between coordinated and unilateral effects "has more significance in law than it does in economics" and citing expert testimony describing the distinction as "artificial").

viii. Finding Unilateral Anticompetitive Effects Likely

On balance, and considering the evidence as a whole, the Court finds that, absent efficiencies, the plaintiff has demonstrated a reasonable likelihood of unilateral effects by a preponderance of the evidence. See Swedish Match, 131 F. Supp. 2d at 169 (finding likelihood of unilateral price increase where merger would eliminate one of the [142] larger merging firm's "primary [*89] direct competitors," "the third largest selling" brand "that has consistently played a role in constraining the price" of the larger firm's products); see also Staples 970 F. Supp. at for diversion ratios. DX 17 (Meyer Rep.) at 76. As discussed above, however, the Court's finding that DDIY is the correct relevant product market is not dependent on Dr. Warren-Boulton's analysis.

1083 (finding anticompetitive effects where the "merger would eliminate significant head-to-head competition between the two lowest cost and lowest priced firms in the . . . market.").

The Court will now turn to the defendants' final rebuttal argument – the existence of significant, merger-specific efficiencies.

d. Post-Merger Efficiencies

HN24[] One of the key benefits of a merger to the economy is its potential to generate efficiencies. See Heinz, 246 F.3d at 720. As the Merger Guidelines recognize, merger-generated efficiencies can "enhance the merged firm's ability and incentive to compete, which may result in lower prices, improved quality, enhanced service, or new products." Merger Guidelines § 10. Courts have recognized that a showing of sufficient efficiencies may rebut the government's showing of likely anticompetitive effects. Heinz, 246 F.3d at 720. High market concentration levels require "proof of extraordinary efficiencies," however, and courts "generally have found [143] inadequate proof of efficiencies to sustain a rebuttal of the government's case." Id. (citation omitted).

HN25[] "[T]he court must undertake a rigorous analysis of the kinds of efficiencies being urged by the parties in order to ensure that those 'efficiencies' represent more than mere speculation and promises about post-merger behavior." Id. at 721. As the Merger Guidelines explain, "[c]ognizable efficiencies are merger-specific efficiencies that have been verified and do not arise from anticompetitive reductions in output or service." Merger Guidelines § 10. Efficiencies are inherently "difficult to verify and quantify" and "it is incumbent upon the merging firms to substantiate efficiency claims" so that it is possible to "verify by reasonable means the likelihood and magnitude of each asserted efficiency, how and when each would be achieved (and any costs of doing so), how each would enhance the merged firm's ability and incentive to compete, and why each would be merger-specific." Id. In other words, a "cognizable" efficiency claim must represent a type of cost saving that could not be achieved without the merger and the estimate of the predicted saving must be reasonably verifiable by [144] an independent party.

The defendants claim that "H&R Block's primary motivation for the TaxACT acquisition is to achieve significant synergies that will enable H&R Block to provide better products at a lower price and to compete more effectively."[41] Defs.' Post-Trial Mem. at 24. The defendants predict that they will achieve over ${redacted} million in annual efficiencies in ten different areas.[42] Id. at 24-25.

The chart below summarizes the defendants' claimed efficiencies and predicted annual cost savings:

Efficiency	Description	Estimated Annual Cost Saving
1. Online IT	{redacted}	${redacted} million
2. Emerald Card	Allowing TaxACT's prepaid debit card offerings to be fulfilled through HRB's bank	${redacted} million
3. H&R Block Bank Refund Anticipation Checks	Funding TaxACT's refund anticipation checks through HRB's bank	${redacted} million
4. {redacted}	{redacted}	${redacted}million

[41] "Cognizable efficiencies" are a subset of "synergies." "Synergies" refer more generally to any business performance benefits that result from the merger of two companies. See Zmijewski, TT, 9/19/11 a.m., at 99.

[42] Originally, the defendants claimed 11 efficiencies, including an efficiency related to {redacted}. This task is "really not an efficiency" but "an additional cost," Dunn, TT, 9/8/11 p.m. (sealed) at 7, and defendants do not reference it in their proposed findings of fact. DFF ¶ 291.

DFF [145] ¶ 292; see also DX236-007.

Dr. Mark E. Zmijewski, an expert witness for the government, analyzed the defendants' alleged efficiencies and concluded that – with the exception of {one efficiency related to eliminating third-party contracts} – the proposed efficiencies identified by the defendants are either not merger-specific or not verifiable.[43] See generally GX 664 (Zmijewski Rep.).

The Court agrees with Dr. Zmijewski that the defendants have not demonstrated that their claimed efficiencies are merger-specific. HN26[] If a company could achieve certain cost savings without any merger at all, then those stand-alone cost savings cannot be credited as merger-specific efficiencies. The defendants must show that their "efficiencies . . . cannot be achieved by either company alone because, if they can, the merger's asserted benefits can be achieved without the concomitant loss of a competitor." Heinz, 246 F.3d at 722. For example, if HRB's {redacted} [146] are not running in the most efficient, cost-effective manner, it is hard to see why a merger with TaxACT is necessary to improve their cost structure. The reasons HRB claims it has higher {redacted} costs than TaxACT include (1) that TaxACT has lower labor costs in Cedar Rapids than HRB has in Kansas City and (2) that TaxACT is simply more cost conscious. Bowen, TT, 9/15/11 p.m., (sealed), at 104-105. Plainly, then, HRB could therefore achieve at least some of the {redacted} cost savings on its own – by relocating {redacted} and taking a more cost conscious attitude toward them. Likewise, the efficiencies related to bringing HRB's outsourced {redacted} functions in-house are unlikely to be wholly merger-specific.

Similarly, the defendants' IT-related efficiencies, which account for the largest efficiency claims, are not entirely merger-specific either. Both TaxACT and HRB witnesses testified that {redacted} – suggesting that the platform consolidation would result in at least some merger-specific efficiencies. See Dunn, TT, 9/8/11 p.m. (sealed), at 16-17; Bowen, TT, 9/15/11 p.m. (sealed), at 67-68. One way in which {redacted}. Dunn, TT, 9/8/11 p.m. (sealed), at 16-17; Bowen, TT, 9/15/11 [147] p.m. (sealed), at 67-68; Bowen, TT, 9/19/11 a.m., at 12. Thus, the IT consolidation efficiency actually can be thought of as entailing two distinct consolidations: (1) [*91] {redacted} and (2) HRB's platform will be merged with TaxACT's platform. Bowen, TT, 9/19/11 a.m., at 12. Yet the claimed IT efficiency is not discounted for whatever savings HRB could obtain by {performing the first consolidation} on its own – an option the company considered in the past but did not adopt – and the defendants did not present evidence explaining why, as a technical matter, {performing the first consolidation} would not be feasible or, in fact, would not be more feasible than {the double consolidation}. Bowen, TT, 9/19/11 a.m., at 12; 9/15/11 p.m. (sealed) at 75. The IT efficiencies also apparently account for cost reductions associated with TaxACT's more cost-conscious culture and practices. See Dunn, TT, 9/8/11 a.m. (sealed), at 5 ("for Block to achieve these [efficiencies] would require them to come up with an entirely different corporate culture {redacted}.").

Even if the efficiencies were entirely merger-specific, many of them are also not independently verifiable. As Dr. Zmijewski explained, for the [148] various efficiencies that involve the activities now performed by HRB or its vendors that are proposed to be transferred to TaxACT, TaxACT's predicted cost figures for taking over these activities were not based on an analysis of facts that could be verified by a third party. Instead, TaxACT based its cost estimates on management judgments. GX 664 (Zmijewski Rep.) at 22-25. By comparison, HRB's estimated costs for the relevant activities were rooted in accounting and planning documents prepared in the ordinary course of business.

The testimony at the hearing confirmed that TaxACT's recurring cost estimates were largely premised on its managers experiential judgment about likely costs, rather than a detailed analysis of historical accounting data. See, e.g., Dunn, TT, 9/8/11 p.m. (sealed), at 28-31. HN27[] While reliance on the estimation and judgment of experienced executives about costs may be perfectly sensible as a business matter, the lack of a verifiable method of factual analysis resulting in the cost estimates renders them not cognizable by the Court. If this were not so, then the efficiencies defense might well swallow the whole of Section 7 of the Clayton Act because management would [149] be able to present large efficiencies based on its own judgment and the Court would be hard pressed to find otherwise. The difficulty in substantiating efficiency claims in a verifiable way is one reason why courts "generally have found inadequate proof of efficiencies to sustain a rebuttal of the government's case." Heinz, 246 F.3d at 720 (citation omitted); see also Staples, 970 F. Supp. at 1089 (finding "defendants failed to produce the necessary documentation for verification" of efficiencies).

Particular scrutiny of HRB's efficiencies claims is also warranted in light of HRB's historical acquisitions. In 2006, HRB acquired a software company called TaxWorks, which was renamed "RedGear." Bowen, TT, 9/15/11 p.m. (sealed), at 84. For the RedGear acquisition, which was much smaller in scale than the proposed TaxACT deal, HRB projected a total of ${redacted} million in efficiencies over three years. GX 1459 (February 2009 "Taxworks Financial Analysis") at 5. HRB failed to achieve these {efficiencies} {redacted}. Id. In this case, the efficiency estimates are much more aggressive, in that defendants are claiming approximately ${redacted} million in efficiencies for 2013 and ${redacted} [150] million in annual savings going forward thereafter, as opposed to ${redacted} million over three years. See Bowen, TT, 9/15/11 p.m. (sealed), at 77-78. While HRB has attempted to learn from the mistakes of the RedGear acquisition, id. at 85-87, the Court finds that this history only underscores [*92] the need for any claimed efficiencies to be independently verifiable in order to constitute evidence that can rebut the government's presumption of anticompetitive effects.

Considering all of the evidence regarding efficiencies, the Court finds that most of the defendants' claimed efficiencies are not cognizable because the defendants have not demonstrated that they are merger-specific and verifiable.[44]

IV. CONCLUSION

The Court concludes that the proposed merger between HRB and TaxACT violates Section 7 of the Clayton Act because it is reasonably likely to cause anticompetitive effects. The law of this Circuit supports this conclusion. In Heinz, the Court of Appeals reversed [151] a district court's denial of a preliminary injunction against a merger involving the second- and third-largest jarred baby food companies. 246 F.3d at 711-12. After noting the high barriers to entry and high HHI figures that characterized the market, the D.C. Circuit observed that "[a]s far as we can determine, no court has ever approved a merger to duopoly under similar circumstances." Id. at 717. The situation in this case is similar. The government established a prima facie case indicating that anticompetitive effects are likely to result from the merger. The defendants have not made a showing of evidence that rebuts the presumption of anticompetitive effects by demonstrating that the government's market share statistics give an inaccurate account of the merger's probable effects on competition in the relevant market. To the contrary, the totality of the evidence confirms that anticompetitive effects are a likely result of the merger, which would give H&R Block and Intuit control over 90 percent of the market for digital do-it-yourself tax preparation products.

[44] In addition, the defendants have not addressed how much of the claimed efficiencies would be passed through to consumers. See Staples, 970 F. Supp. at 1090 (analyzing projected pass-through rate for claimed efficiencies).

Accordingly, the Court will enjoin H&R Block's proposed acquisition of TaxACT. An appropriate Order will accompany this [152] Memorandum Opinion.

[*699] MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

I. INTRODUCTION

On September 7, 2011, the undersigned United States District Judge heard oral arguments on Defendant Bacardi U.S.A., Inc.'s ("Bacardi") Motion to Dismiss First Amended Complaint or for Transfer [Docket No. 24] ("Bacardi's Motion to Dismiss or Transfer"), on Defendant Brown-Forman Corporation's [2] ("Brown-Forman") Motion to Dismiss the First Amended Complaint [Docket No. 26] ("Brown-Forman's Motion to Dismiss"), and on Bacardi's Motion to Stay [Docket No. 30]. Brown-Forman's Motion to Stay or Transfer [Docket No. 66], filed subsequent to oral argument of the other identified motions, will also be considered.

[*700] Plaintiffs Johnson Brothers Liquor Company ("Johnson Brothers Liquor"); Johnson Brothers Northwest Beverages, Inc., d/b/a Ed Phillips & Sons Co. of North Dakota ("Ed Phillips & Sons"); and Johnson Brothers Famous Brands, Inc., d/b/a Famous Brands and/or Western Wholesale ("Famous Brands") assert claims under the Minnesota Franchise Act (the "MFA"), Minn. Stat. Ch. 80C, as well as federal antitrust violations under Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15, and Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, against Defendants (Bacardi and Brown-Forman collectively are "Defendants"). For the reasons set forth below, Bacardi's Motion to Dismiss or Transfer is granted, Brown-Forman's Motion to Dismiss is granted, Bacardi's Motion to Stay is denied, and Brown-Forman's Motion to Stay or Transfer is denied.

II. BACKGROUND[1]

Defendant Bacardi produces, imports, distributes, markets, promotes, and sells alcoholic beverages throughout the United States from its principal place of business in Coral Gables, Florida. Am. Compl. [Docket No. 22] ¶ 10. Bacardi owns brands of rum, gin, vodka, vermouth, sparkling wines, scotch whiskey, tequila, and liqueur. Id. ¶ 10. Defendant Brown-Forman produces, imports, distributes, markets, promotes, and sells alcoholic beverages throughout the United States from its principal place of business in Louisville, Kentucky. Id. ¶ 11. Brown-Forman owns brands of whiskey, vodka, champagne, liqueur, tequila, and wines, including Jack Daniel's Whiskey and Southern Comfort. Id. ¶¶ 11, 40. Plaintiffs (Johnson Brothers Liquor, Ed Phillips & Sons, and Famous Brands are collectively "Plaintiffs") are in the business of distributing alcoholic beverages. Id. ¶ 7. [1] In considering Defendants' Motion to Dismiss, the Court [3] considers the facts alleged in Plaintiffs' Complaint to be true. See Hamm v. Groose, 15 F.3d 110, 112 (8th Cir. 1994).

Johnson Brothers Liquor and Brown-Forman have a business relationship that spans over twenty-five years. Id. ¶ 32. Between 1987 and 1998, Brown-Forman entered into at least five distributor agreements with Johnson Brothers Liquor or its subsidiaries covering Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Iowa. Id. ¶ 34. Specifically, in July 1987, Brown-Forman entered into an [6] agreement with Ed Phillips & Sons for distribution of certain Brown-Forman products in North Dakota, and entered into two agreements with Famous Brands for distribution of Brown-Forman products in South Dakota. Id. ¶ 35. In June 1989, Brown-Forman also entered into an agreement with Johnson Brothers Liquor for distribution of all Brown-Forman products in Minnesota. Id. ¶ 36. Finally, in July 1998, a division of Brown-Forman entered into an agreement with Johnson Brothers Liquor for distribution of Brown-Forman wines in Iowa. Id. ¶ 37.

Similar to the 2004 North Dakota Agreement, Brown-Forman's distribution agreements with Johnson Brothers Liquor, or its subsidiaries, require the distributor to "bank" a portion of its profits for use in promoting Brown-Forman products. Id. ¶ 40. Since 2006, Famous Brands has spent $370,000 promoting Brown-Forman products in South Dakota. See id. Likewise, since 2008, Ed Phillips & Sons has spent $215,000 promoting Brown-Forman products in North Dakota. See id. Furthermore, like the 2004 North Dakota Agreement, the various Brown-Forman agreements with Plaintiffs allow either party to the agreement to terminate without cause. Hardwicke Decl. [Docket No. [7] 38] Ex. 1 § 12, Ex. 2 § 12, Ex. 3 § 12, Ex. 4 § 12, Ex. 5 § 12.

On January 4, 2011, four days after Bacardi sent its notice of termination of the 2004 North Dakota Agreement, Brown-Forman sent notice to Johnson Brothers Liquor's Minnesota office to terminate Johnson Brothers Liquor's wine distribution rights in Minnesota, its wine and spirits distribution rights in Iowa, and to terminate all of Ed Phillips & Sons' distribution rights in North Dakota and all of Famous Brands' distribution rights in South Dakota. Compl. ¶ 42, Ex. B. Brown-Forman then transferred distribution rights for its products in North Dakota and South Dakota to RNDC. Id. ¶ 44.

In the January 4, 2011 termination notice, Brown-Forman referenced its "national strategic distribution and broker alliance with Bacardi" and informed Plaintiffs that it was "moving to align" distribution of its brands with Bacardi. Id. ¶ 50, Ex. B. Furthermore, in public statements Brown-Forman has stated it has a "unique relationship" with Bacardi, seeks ways to "collaborate" with Bacardi, and "highly value[s] [its] partnership with Bacardi." Id. ¶ 47. Likewise, Bacardi has affirmed its "unique distribution partnerships" with Brown-Forman. [8] Id. ¶ 48. Bacardi and Brown-Forman have entered into agreements for Bacardi to distribute Brown-Forman brands in several European markets. Id. ¶ 49.

After receiving notice of termination from both Bacardi and Brown-Forman, Johnson Brothers Liquor responded with a letter to Bacardi alleging that Bacardi's [*702] action in aligning its distribution with Brown-Forman constituted a violation of federal antitrust laws and that terminating the 2004 North Dakota Agreement without cause constituted a violation of the Minnesota Franchise Act. Steinberg Decl. Ex. 5. Some correspondence ensued, and on March 21, 2011, Johnson Brother Liquors sent Bacardi a letter with a draft complaint alleging violations of the MFA and federal antitrust laws and seeking to negotiate a resolution. Steinberg Decl. Ex. 6. Less than forty-eight hours after receiving Johnson Brothers Liquor's draft complaint, on March 23, 2011, Bacardi filed its own complaint in the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Florida, Miami Division (the "Florida action"), against Ed Philips & Sons, Johnson Brothers Liquor, and another Johnson Brothers Liquor subsidiary, Iowa Wine & Beverage Company ("Iowa Wine"). See Steinberg Decl. [9] Ex. 8. The Florida action seeks declaratory judgment that Bacardi's termination of the 2004 North Dakota Agreement, and two other agreements with Iowa Wine, did not violate federal antitrust law or the MFA. Id. This case in Minnesota suing both Bacardi and Brown-Forman was initiated less than two weeks later on April 4, 2011.

The Florida action was assigned to Senior U.S. District Court Judge Paul C. Huck. On June 27, 2011 Judge Huck issued an order staying discovery to allow mediation of the claims related to the two Iowa agreements and on July 18, 2011 issued another order dismissing those claims without prejudice. Kranz. Decl. [Docket No. 45] Exs. D, E. Then, Johnson Brothers Liquor and Ed Phillips & Sons moved to transfer the Florida action, with its single claim relating to the 2004 North Dakota Agreement, here to federal district court in Minnesota. Judge Huck denied that motion, finding that the 28 U.S.C. § 1404(a) transfer factors weighed in favor of the Florida venue, particularly given the forum selection clause in the 2004 North Dakota Agreement. During oral argument, Judge Huck opined that the claims in this action against Brown-Forman may be compulsory counterclaims in [10] the Florida action. Tr. of Mot. Hr'g before J. Paul C. Huck [Docket No. 56] ("Huck Hr'g Tr.") 18. Accordingly, Johnson Brothers Liquor and Ed Phillips & Sons filed those counterclaims, without waiving arguments made before this Court, in the Florida action on October 7, 2011. Oct. 11, 2011 Letter [Docket No. 63] Ex. 1.

Therefore, as it now stands two nearly identical actions are proceeding in tandem, one here in Minnesota and another in Florida, with the Florida court having already ruled to retain jurisdiction. Nonetheless, Plaintiffs note that Judge Huck invited this Court to rule on issues of Minnesota law, and Plaintiffs contend that this Court should retain jurisdiction over this action because the forum selection clause relied on by the court in the Florida Action is invalid under the MFA. Plaintiffs further argue that once the forum selection clause is viewed as invalid, the first-filed rule dictates that this Court is the proper forum for this litigation. Defendants counter that this case should be stayed or transferred to the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Florida (the "Southern District of Florida"), or alternatively the Complaint in this matter should be [11] dismissed for failure to state a claim for which relief may be granted.

III. DISCUSSION

A. Motion to Dismiss Standard

Rule 12 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provides that a party may move to dismiss a complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). In considering a motion to dismiss, the pleadings are construed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, and the facts alleged in [*703] the complaint must be taken as true. Hamm, 15 F.3d at 112; Ossman v. Diana Corp., 825 F. Supp. 870, 879-80 (D. Minn. 1993). Any ambiguities concerning the sufficiency of the claims must be resolved in favor of the nonmoving party. Ossman, 825 F. Supp. at 880.

Under Rule 8(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, pleadings "shall contain a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." A pleading must allege "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw a reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct [12] alleged." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). Determining whether a complaint states a plausible claim for relief is "a context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense." Id. "But where the well-pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, the complaint has alleged—but not 'shown'—'that the pleader is entitled to relief.'" Id. (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2)).

B. MFA claims

Plaintiffs' MFA claims arise from an alleged franchise relationship between Johnson Brothers Liquor and Bacardi and Johnson Brothers Liquor and Brown-Forman. Essentially, Plaintiffs argue that Brown-Forman's dealings with Ed Phillips & Sons in North Dakota, Famous Brands in South Dakota, Johnson Brothers Liquor in Iowa, and Johnson Brothers Liquor in Minnesota formed a franchise-franchisee relationship between Brown-Forman and Johnson Brothers Liquor centered in Minnesota and covering a region comprised of North Dakota, South Dakota, Iowa, and Minnesota. Similarly, Plaintiffs argue that Bacardi's dealings with Ed Phillips & Sons in North Dakota created a franchise-franchisee relationship between [13] Bacardi and Johnson Brothers Liquor centered in Minnesota because Bacaradi was aware of Johnson Brother Liquor's control of Ed Phillips & Sons as its parent corporation. Based on the alleged existence of these franchise-franchisee relationships, Plaintiffs argue that their various distribution agreements could not be terminated except with good cause as required by Minn. Stat. § 80C.14, subd. 3(b).

The viability of Plaintiffs' theories with respect to both Brown-Forman and Bacardi requires the Court to disregard the individual distribution agreements, each signed by either Brown-Forman or Bacardi and a distinct legal entity related to Johnson Brothers Liquor, and instead imply direct contracts between Bacardi and Johnson Brothers Liquor and between Brown-Forman and Johnson Brothers Liquor. This argument is essential to Plaintiffs' MFA theories because the MFA applies only to "franchise agreements" within the purview of Minnesota law. Minnesota cannot regulate "franchise agreements" that are formed and preformed in other states. See In re St. Paul & K.C. Grain Co., 89 Minn. 98, 94 N.W. 218, 225 (Minn. 1903) (noting that "general rule" is that state statutes apply only to territory of state that enacted [14] the statute). Indeed, even where a party to a "franchise agreement" is a Minnesota corporation, the agreement is not within the purview of the MFA if the franchisee is not located in and does not operate in Minnesota. Hockey Enters., Inc. v. Total Hockey Worldwide, LLC, 762 F. Supp. 2d 1138, 1146 (D. Minn. 2011).

Johnson Brothers Liquor tacitly recognizes this limitation on the MFA by carefully [*704] premising its claims only on the alleged implied contracts with Johnson Brothers Liquor, and not any of the contracts with its subsidiaries. Pls.' Mem. of Law in Opp. to Def. Brown-Forman's Mot. to Dismiss the First Am. Compl. [Docket No. 48] 25; Pls.' Mem. of Law in Opp. to Def. Bacardi's Mot. to Dismiss the First Am. Compl. or for Transfer [Docket No. 46] 32. Therefore, because Plaintiffs argue that their MFA claims are premised only on implied contracts, to the extent any MFA claims are premised on the express contracts, they are dismissed. The Court now turns to the alleged implied contracts.

Johnson Brothers Liquor strenuously argues that a franchise under Minnesota law is created by "a contract or agreement, either express or implied . . . by which a franchisee is granted the right to engage [15] in the business of offering or distributing goods or services . . . ." Minn. Stat. § 80C.01, subd. 4(a) (emphasis added). Based on that language, Plaintiffs argue that a franchise was implied between Johnson Brothers Liquor in Minnesota and both Brown-Forman and Bacardi for distribution of alcoholic beverages in certain upper Midwestern states.

However, there is nothing remarkable about Minnesota allowing franchise agreements to be implied. Under the common law of Minnesota, contracts of any sort can be implied in fact and can be oral or written. See McArdle v. Williams, 193 Minn. 433, 258 N.W. 818, 820-21 (Minn. 1935) (noting that contracts may be written, oral, implied from the actions of the parties, or some combination thereof) (citing Restatement (First) of Contracts § 21, cmt. a (1932)). Equally uncontroversial in the law of contracts is that the formation of an implied contract is evaluated objectively. Gryc v. Lewis, 410 N.W.2d 888, 891 (Minn. Ct. App. 1987). In other words, "[a]n intent to be contractually bound is determined by the objective manifestations of the parties' words, conduct, and documents, and not by their subjective intent." Norwest Bank Minn. North, N.A. v. Beckler, 663 N.W.2d 571, 578 (Minn. Ct. App. 1983) [16] (citing Holman Erection Co. v. Orville E. Madsen & Sons, 330 N.W.2d 693, 695 (Minn. 1983)). Plaintiffs have identified no authority, and the Court finds none, that the Minnesota legislature intended to deviate from this fundamental tenet of contract law through the MFA. Therefore, the Court now considers in turn whether either Bacardi or Brown-Forman objectively manifested an intent to form an implied franchise agreement with Johnson Brothers Liquor.

1. Bacardi

Johnson Brothers Liquor has not plausibly alleged the existence of a "franchise agreement" between it and Bacardi. No factual content has been pled from which one may reasonably infer that an implied contract between Johnson Brothers Liquor and Bacardi exists.

Johnson Brothers Liquor's argument that an implied contract exists between it and Bacardi centers on allegations that: Johnson Brothers Liquor "controlled and managed" Ed Phillips & Sons, see Am. Compl. ¶ 9; that Johnson Brothers Liquor was "operating through" Ed Phillips & Sons in North Dakota, Am Comp. ¶¶ 22-24, 26, 28; or that Ed Philips & Sons was "effectively managed" by Johnson Brothers Liquor and that Johnson Brothers Liquor "carried out many of the essential functions" [17] of Ed Phillips & Sons, Am Comp. ¶¶ 25, 87. That a parent corporation controls, manages or "effectively" manages, operates through, or carries out the essential functions of its wholly-owned subsidiary is no surprise. These allegations say nothing about Bacardi's manifestation of assent to be contractually bound with Johnson Brothers Liquor.

[*705] The sole allegation of any direct conduct between Bacardi and Johnson Brothers Liquor is that Bacardi notified Johnson Brothers Liquor's vice-president, Bill Johnson, of its intent to cancel the 2004 North Dakota Agreement. Am. Compl. ¶ 4. However, any suggestion that this conduct objectively manifested an intent to contract with Johnson Brothers Liquor is belied by the factual assertion that Johnson Brothers Liquor and Ed Phillips & Sons have common officers. Id. ¶ 9. The suggestion that this conduct was an objective manifestation of an intent to contract with Johnson Brothers Liquor is further undermined because Bacardi's notice to Bill Johnson was confirmed with a letter addressed to Ed Phillips & Sons, sent to Ed Phillips & Sons' address in North Dakota. Id. Ex. A. Finally, an argument that this conduct created an implied contract is rebutted [18] by Bacardi's explicit references to the express contract between Bacardi and Ed Phillips & Sons. That contract is unambiguous-it is between Bacardi and Ed Philips & Sons only. See generally Steinberg Decl. Ex. 1.

Plaintiffs cannot avoid this result by conflating Ed Phillips & Sons and Johnson Brothers Liquor. For example, Plaintiffs cannot plausibly allege that Bacardi granted Ed Phillips & Sons "and/or" Johnson Brothers Liquor the right to use Bacardi's trade name, trademarks, or other commercial symbols, Am. Compl. ¶ 88, because the express terms of the 2004 North Dakota Agreement unambiguously granted those rights to Ed Phillips & Sons only, Steinberg Decl. Ex. 1§ 6.1. Bacardi entered into an agreement with Ed Phillips & Sons, not Johnson Brothers Liquor. Bacardi appointed as a distributor of its products in North Dakota Ed Phillips & Sons, not Johnson Brothers Liquor. Therefore, Bacardi's objective intent was to contract with Ed Phillips & Sons only. In light of the constitutionally-endorsed state-specific alcohol distribution regulations, see U.S. Const. amend. XXI, § 2 ("The transportation or importation into any State . . . of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws therefore, [19] is hereby prohibited."), Johnson Brothers Liquor can offer no plausible explanation as to why Bacardi would contract with any entity other than Ed Phillips & Sons, the only member of the Johnson Brothers Liquor corporate family licensed to distribute alcoholic beverages in North Dakota. Therefore, Johnson Brothers Liquor's MFA claim against Bacardi is dismissed because no franchise agreement exists between them.

2. Brown-Forman

Johnson Brothers Liquor bases its MFA claim against Brown-Forman on a "single unitary multi-state franchise" theory. In essence, Johnson Brothers Liquor argues that Brown-Forman's acts of contracting with its subsidiaries in North Dakota and South Dakota and with it in Minnesota and Iowa created an implied contract between Johnson Brothers Liquor and Brown-Forman for distribution of liquor throughout these upper Midwestern states.

The allegations in the Complaint, however, do not plausibly suggest the existence of such an implied contract. As with Bacardi, allegations that Johnson Brothers Liquor, as parent corporation to Ed Phillips & Sons and Famous Brands, carried out "essential functions" or "operated" its subsidiaries from its headquarters in Minnesota is [20] unremarkable and does not reasonably lead to an inference that Brown-Forman intended to contract with Johnson Brothers Liquor generally instead of with its subsidiaries individually. Furthermore, as discussed above with respect to Bacardi, Brown-Forman objectively manifested an intent to contract with each entity individually by entering into separate contracts with each and individually [*706] granting them rights as distributors in their respective states only. For example, Brown-Forman chose to contract individually with Famous Brands, granted Famous Brands the right to use Brown-Forman trademarks in South Dakota, and appointed Famous Brands an authorized distributor in South Dakota. See generally Hardwicke Decl. Ex. 3. The unambiguous language of each contract is an objective manifestation of an intent by Brown-Forman to be contractually bound in discrete state-by-state areas with each entity only. Artful pleading cannot alter that result.

Unlike with Bacardi, for its MFA claim against Brown-Forman, Johnson Brothers Liquor further alleges that Brown-Forman's notice of termination corroborates its "unitary multi-state franchise" theory because Brown-Forman sent a single notice of termination [21] that referred to a general "relationship with Johnson Brothers." Am. Compl. Ex. B. Johnson Brothers Liquor further notes that the letter never expressly references Johnson Brothers Liquors' subsidiaries or any distinct written agreements. These allegations cannot plausibly support the inference that an implied contract exists. First, the letter must be read in context. Brown-Forman signed discrete contracts for each state. The allegations in the Complaint are insufficient evidence from which a reasonable inference could be drawn that Brown-Forman intended to contract with Johnson Brothers Liquor for a multi-state distribution franchise given the distinct contracts with distinct legal entities covering discrete territories. Second, the letter on its face does not support the multi-state unitary franchise theory at all. Contrary to Johnson Brothers Liquor's characterization, the letter expressly states that notice of termination was provided for several "relationships." Id. The use of the plural negates the suggestion that the letter could support an inference of a single implied contract. Such action is consistent with each contract being distinct, and is inconsistent with the multi-state [22] unitary contract theory.

At most the letter supports the inferences that (1) Brown-Forman knew that Johnson Brothers Liquor formed wholly-owned subsidiaries and (2) Brown-Forman knew it had contracted with those subsidiaries. Mere knowledge of the existence of the Johnson Brothers Liquor corporate family is not a sufficient factual basis to infer that Brown-Forman manifested an objective intent to eviscerate its distinct contracts with Johnson Brother Liquor and its subsidiaries in favor of a single implied contract for distribution over the upper Midwest. Therefore, Johnson Brothers Liquor's MFA claim against Brown-Forman is dismissed.

In summary, Bacardi and Brown-Forman contracted with Johnson Brothers Liquor or its subsidiaries individually for distribution of alcoholic beverages in discrete state-by-state territories. Bacardi and Brown-Forman's awareness of the Johnson Brothers Liquor corporate family structure and their directing termination notices to Johnson Brothers Liquor's Minnesota office does not alter the fact that Bacardi and Brown-Forman both objectively manifested intents to contract with each Johnson Brothers Liquor subsidiary individually by entering into individual [23] contracts with those subsidiaries. No implied contracts exist, only the express contracts are of legal significance. Without any franchise agreements within the purview of the MFA, Plaintiffs' MFA claims (Counts I and II of the Complaint) are dismissed.

C. Antitrust claims

In addition to asserting claims under the MFA, Plaintiffs allege Bacardi and Brown-Forman conspired to violate [*707] federal antitrust laws by engaging in a "concerted refusal to deal" with Johnson Brothers Liquor and its subsidiaries. As a matter of right, a private business is free to conduct business with whomever it chooses to the exclusion of others. United States v. Colgate & Co. , 250 U.S. 300, 307, 39 S. Ct. 465, 63 L. Ed. 992, 1919 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 460 (1919). However, central to antitrust law is that what one entity may do on its own may be illegal for two or more entities to do in concert. Fed. Trade Comm'n v. Beech-Nut Packing Co., 257 U.S. 441, 453, 42 S. Ct. 150, 66 L. Ed. 307, 4 F.T.C. 583, 19 Ohio L. Rep. 586 (1922) (noting that the Colgate rule does not extend to "contracts or combinations" that "unduly hinder or obstruct . . . trade"). For example, when two or more firms jointly agree not to deal with another, it may run afoul of antitrust laws. Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 212-14, 79 S. Ct. 705, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741 (1959) (holding [24] that concerted refusal to deal among appliance manufacturers and distributors was violation of antitrust laws).

"Whether an agreement unreasonably restrains trade is determined under one of two approaches: the per se rule and the rule of reason." Worldwide Basketball & Sport Tours, Inc. v. Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, 388 F.3d 955, 959 (6th Cir. 2004). The per se rule is reserved for those agreements that are so obviously anti-competitive that unreasonableness is presumed and the agreements are deemed unlawful. Craftsmen Limousine, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 491 F.3d 380, 387 (8th Cir. 2007). In all other cases, conduct is evaluated under the "rule of reason," which looks to whether an arrangement is an "unreasonable restraint on competition." Id. (quotation omitted). "The antitrust laws, however, were enacted for 'the protection of competition not competitors . . . .'" Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977) (quoting Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962)).

1. Per Se Treatment is Not Warranted

In refusal to deal cases, such as this one, per se treatment is warranted only when the cartel refusing to deal with another possesses market power [25] or exclusive access to an element essential to effective competition. Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pac. Stationery & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 296, 105 S. Ct. 2613, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1985). Here, per se treatment is unwarranted because Plaintiffs have not plausibly alleged that Bacardi and Brown-Forman possess market power or exclusive access to an element essential to effective competition.

a. Defendants do not have market power

Plaintiffs urge that the relevant market is the distribution of liquor in the upper Midwest. This is a market in which Bacardi and Brown-Forman do not participate (which is precisely why they contracted with Plaintiffs to engage in distribution for them), much less one in which they have market power. Market power is typically defined as the ability "to raise price above the competitive level without losing so many sales so rapidly that the price increase is unprofitable and must be rescinded." Craftsmen Limousine, 491 F.3d at 388 (quoting Midwestern Mach. Co. v. N.W. Airlines, Inc., 392 F.3d 265, 274 (8th Cir. 2004)). Implicit in that reasoning is that a firm must be a participant in the market; otherwise, there are no "sales" within the market to be lost. Here, Bacardi and Brown-Forman [26] do not make any sales, and have no market power, in the market for distribution of liquor in the upper Midwest. Furthermore, market power has been alternatively defined [*708] as the ability to control output, typically from an ability to exclude other sources of supply. Ball Memorial Hosp. Inc. v. Mutual Hosp. Ins., Inc., 784 F.2d 1325, 1336 (7th Cir. 1986). However, no allegations have been made that Bacardi and Brown-Forman can control output of distribution in the liquor distribution market or restrict supply of liquor. To the contrary, Plaintiffs have alleged the existence of available alternative sources of supply of liquor, and of whiskey and rum in particular-namely Beam Global Spirits & Wine, Inc. ("Beam"), and Cruzan International, Inc. ("Cruzan"). Am. Compl. ¶ 73. Therefore, Bacardi and Brown-Forman together do not have market power in the relevant market as defined by Plaintiffs.

Plaintiffs argue that Bacardi and Brown-Forman have market power in the market for distribution of liquor because they have the ability to "impinge" on that market. See Insignia Sys., Inc. v. News Am. Marketing In-Store, Inc., 661 F. Supp. 2d 1039, 1063 (D. Minn. 2009) (defining market power sufficient [27] to sustain antitrust violation as the power to "significantly impinge on competition") (quotation omitted). Plaintiffs' argument is unavailing in several respects. To begin, the defendant in Insignia was a participant in the relevant market. Id. at 1057. Therefore, Insignia does not address the issue of defining market power for a non-participant in the market, as discussed above. Furthermore, no factual allegations support the argument that Bacardi and Brown-Forman together can "impinge" on the market for liquor distribution. Plaintiffs carefully define the relevant market as one not for distribution of any particular class of liquor, such as rum, whiskey, or vodka, but rather the market for distribution of all liquor. Am. Compl. ¶ 61; Pls.' Mem. of Law in Opp. to Def. Bacardi's Mot. to Dismiss the First Am. Compl. or for Transfer 27-29; Pls.' Mem. of Law in Opp. to Def. Brown-Forman's Mot. to Dismiss the First Am. Compl. 21-22. Yet, Plaintiffs have not articulated how Bacardi and Brown-Forman can impinge that market. Plaintiffs clearly allege that much of the market for distribution of rum and whiskey in North Dakota is now concentrated with RNDC. Am. Compl. ¶ 72. But, no explanation [28] has been offered as to how a concerted raise in prices for Bacardi and Brown-Forman products could impinge on the market for distribution of all liquors when vodka, tequila, gin, scotch whisky, liqueur, and other liquors comprise a significant portion of the relevant market as alleged by Plaintiffs, and distribution of those liquors is not concentrated in any one distributor.

Even more significantly, no explanation is given as to how Bacardi and Brown-Forman could collude to raise prices without having their customers, including RNDC, begin to favor competitors. Absent collusion or a wider conspiracy, neither of which is alleged, the price of liquor sold from distillers to distributors is independent of the price of liquor sold from distributors to retailers, which is also independent of the price of liquor sold from retailers to customers. Cf. 2004 North Dakota Agreement §§ 4.1-4.2 (allowing Bacardi to unilaterally determine price of products sold to Ed Phillips & Sons, and allowing Ed Phillips & Sons to unilaterally determine price of Bacardi products sold retailers if such prices are competitive). Therefore, if Defendants colluded to raise prices charged to their distributor, the [29] distributor must still competitively price the Defendants' products and absorb the price raise. Absorbing the price increase, a rational distributor would invest more effort into distributing lower cost (and therefore higher profit) competitor brands. Likewise, absent collusion between Defendants and their distributor, which is not alleged, if the distributor has market power and can raise prices on rum and whiskey or [*709] other liquors, there is no reason to believe that the increased profits will be passed along to Bacardi and Brown-Forman given that they must still compete with other distillers, such as Beam and Cruzan.

b. Defendants do not have exclusive access to an element essential to effective competition.

Bacardi and Brown-Forman are not the only distillers of liquor in the United States. As noted above, if Bacardi and Brown-Forman collectively raise prices, distributors of liquor would rationally choose to invest more effort into distributing lower cost (and therefore higher profit) liquors. The only suggestion by Plaintiffs that Bacardi and Brown-Forman could raise prices without suffering lost market share comes from the allegation that RNDC, Bacardi and Brown-Forman's present [30] distributor in North Dakota, now controls 99% of the market for whiskey and 95% of the market for rum in that state. However, no explanation has been offered as to why or how Bacardi and Brown-Forman could profitably raise prices for whiskey and rum without having RNDC favor other rum and whiskey manufacturers, as discussed above. In particular, RNDC's large market share for distribution of rum and whiskey is attributable to RNDC also being a distributor for Beam and Cruzan products. Am. Compl. ¶ 73. No explanation is given as to how or why Bacardi and Brown-Forman could raise their prices without having RNDC, or any other distributor, favor Beam and Cruzan products to the detriment of the would-be cartel. Beam and Cruzan are not alleged to be co-conspirators and neither is RNDC.

Furthermore, even if the relevant market were revised to be distribution of whiskey and rum, the allegation that RNDC has a large market share for distribution of whiskey and rum in North Dakota cannot plausibly support an antitrust violation because Plaintiffs have defined the relevant market to include an area larger than just North Dakota. Brown-Forman and Bacardi have evidently chosen as distributors entities [31] other than RNDC in both Minnesota and Iowa. See Am. Compl. Ex. B (noting Brown-Forman moved its spirits and wine distribution to non-RNDC entities in Minnesota and Iowa). Plaintiffs offer no explanation as to how alignment with those other entities, also non-conspirators, would allow Brown-Forman and Bacardi to control output, restrict access to supply, or raise prices.

2. Plaintiffs Have Failed to State a Claim under the Rule of Reason

Under the Rule of Reason, an arrangement between firms is repugnant to federal antitrust laws if it constitutes an "unreasonable restraint on competition." Craftsmen Limousine, 491 F.3d at 387. Plaintiffs have failed to identify an unreasonable restraint on competition resulting from Bacardi and Brown-Forman's concerted refusal to deal with Plaintiffs.

Plaintiffs' entire argument focuses on the concentration of the market for distribution of rum and whiskey with RNDC. Plaintiffs aver "Defendants' joint conduct and illegal agreement eliminates competition between liquor distillers, including but not limited to Bacardi, Brown-Forman, Beam, and Cruzan, and eliminates interbrand competition between their products by combining their distribution into one distributor." [32] Pls.' Mem. of Law in Opp. to Def. Brown-Forman's Mot. to Dismiss the First Am. Compl. 19. But, Plaintiffs may not rely on mere recitation that competition will be eliminated; they must allege factual content that plausibly suggests such an occurrence. See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555-57 (noting that "formulaic recitation" of elements is insufficient pleading, well-pled allegations [*710] must state plausible grounds for relief).

Plaintiffs do not plausibly suggest that interbrand competition will cease. Bacardi and Brown-Forman are not alleged to have any agreement with Beam or Cruzan. Therefore, Plaintiffs must articulate some reason as to why Bacardi and Brown-Forman will no longer have to compete with Beam or Cruzan. Plaintiffs have not done so. As discussed above, merely using the same distributor will not end interbrand competition. Without market power if a brand or cartel of brands raises prices, consumers will merely substitute a cheaper competitor brand. By way of illustration, virtually all drug stores purchase multiple brands of the same products, yet interbrand competition continues at all levels of the supply chain. Each brand still must compete for end-customers as well as for placement [33] in drug stores. Likewise, there is no reason to assume that merely because Bacardi and Brown-Forman sell to a customer in common with Beam and Cruzan that competition will cease among those firms. In that market, if Bacardi and Brown-Forman collude to raise prices, it will be to their own detriment as distributors will begin to favor now-cheaper (and now more profitable) brands, like Beam or Cruzan products. The Complaint does not allege the rationale of how or why interbrand competition will be stifled because a single distributor will buy and distribute competing brands of liquor.

Furthermore, assuming arguendo that the concentration of whiskey and rum brands in RNDC in North Dakota will cause an increase in whiskey and rum prices for retailers, there is no reason to believe that Bacardi or Brown-Forman will benefit or are culpable in any way. No allegations of a wider conspiracy involving Beam, Cruzan, or other distributors has been alleged. Absent some wider conspiracy, if another distributor has monopolized the distribution market, a Sherman Act § 2 claim may lie against them, but such monopolization was not the result of the alleged concerted refusal to deal. Rather, the monopolization [34] was the result of the actions of the distributor alone. Plaintiffs allege that "[b]ecause RNDC now markets several brands that were once competitors . . . [RNDC] no longer has the incentive to compete with the remaining distributor, [Ed Phillips & Sons], whose market share for rum and whiskey is negligible." Am. Compl. ¶ 83. While the concentration of rum and whiskey distribution with RNDC may be anticompetitive, it cannot be said to be an anti-competitive effect of any action by Defendants. The Complaint asserts that the concentration of the market for distribution of whiskey in North Dakota was the result of the alignment of Brown-Forman and Beam, entities that are not alleged to have any agreement or otherwise be co-conspirators. See Am. Compl. ¶¶ 10-11, 73 (indicating that Brown-Forman and Beam manufacture whiskey, but Bacardi does not). Similary, the Complaint makes clear that the concentration of the market for distribution of rum in North Dakota was the result of alignment of Bacardi and Cruzan, entities that are not alleged to have any agreement or otherwise be co-conspirators. See Am. Compl. ¶¶ 10-11, 73 (indicating that Bacardi and Cruzan manufacture rum, but Brown-Forman [35] does not).

The result here is bolstered by the result in a nearly identical, albeit forty-plus year-old, case. In Seagram & Sons, Inc. v. Hawaiian Oke & Liquors, Ltd., two distillers, Calvert and Barton, jointly decided to use a single distributor McKesson. 416 F.2d 71, 73-74 (9th Cir. 1969), cert. denied, 396 U.S. 1062, 90 S. Ct. 752, 24 L. Ed. 2d 755 (1970). Calvert's former distributor, Hawaiian Oke & Liquors, Ltd., then brought suit alleging an antitrust violation from Calvert and Barton's concerted [*711] refusal to deal. Id. Without any evidence of an anti-competitive effect or motive, the court there held that no unreasonable restraint of trade had resulted from the joint decision to align in a single distributor, and overturned a jury verdict for the plaintiff. Id. at 76-80. The court reasoned that the distillers had a legitimate business interest in selecting a distributor with a "well rounded group of lines." Id. at 80. As in Seagram & Sons, without plausible allegations that Bacardi and Brown-Forman's alignment of their products in a single distributor will have some anticompetitive effect, Plaintiffs have not adequately alleged an antitrust violation.

D. Stay and Transfer

In addition to addressing the merits of [36] the case, the parties have dedicated a substantial volume of briefing to arguing which forum is appropriate for this litigation to proceed. The first in time filing was in the Southern District of Florida. However, the two "red flags" identified by both the Eighth and Eleventh Circuits-filing a declaratory judgment and bringing a lawsuit after "compelling circumstances" for allowing the litigation to proceed in Minnesota. Manuel v. Convergys Corp., 430 F.3d 1132, 1135 (11th Cir. 2005) (noting that filing of declaratory judgment action and filing in anticipation of litigation are factors in determining whether compelling circumstances exist for exception to first-filed rule); N.W. Airlines, Inc. v. Am. Airlines, Inc., 989 F.2d 1002, 1007 (8th Cir. 1993) (noting that notice that litigation is imminent and filing of declaratory judgment action are red flags that may be compelling circumstances for abrogating first-filed rule).

An additional factor to consider is that Judge Huck denied a § 1404(a) transfer motion by Plaintiffs and in so doing noted that the Florida action was technically filed first. Huck Hr'g Tr. 56. The § 1404(a) motion in the Florida action was argued by all parties [37] under what is known in the Eighth Circuit as the Terra factors [2]—convenience of the witnesses, convenience of the parties, and the interests of justice. Terra Int'l, Inc. v. Miss. Chem. Corp., 119 F.3d 688, 691 (8th Cir. 1997). The interests of justice factor looks to, among other things, where the lawsuit was filed as a consideration. Id. at 696 (noting that the plaintiff's choice of forum is considered under interests of justice). Indeed, Plaintiffs here (Defendants in the Florida action), briefed the first-filed rule in the Florida action as an element of the Plaintiffs' (Defendants here) choice of forum. See Steinberg Decl. [Docket No. 34] Ex. 10 at 13-15. However, such analyses may be viewed as distinct, with § 1404(a) merely serving as the procedural mechanism, without respect to the tri-part analysis developed for § 1404(a) in other contexts, for effectuating a transfer appropriate under the first-filed doctrine. See Zimmer Enters., Inc. v. Atlandia Imports, 478 F. Supp. 2d 983, 989 (S.D. Ohio 2007) (noting that first-filed rule and transfer of venue analysis are "separate questions, the analysis of which are conducted separately"). Therefore, it appears the question of which [38] court, the Southern District of Florida or the District of Minnesota, properly has jurisdiction under the first-filed doctrine has not yet been fully addressed.

Another significant consideration is that the 2004 North Dakota Agreement includes a forum selection clause. 2004 North Dakota Agreement § 11.2. A forum selection clause may trump the first-filed doctrine. See, e.g., Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co. v. Las Vegas Professional Football Limited P'ship, 409 Fed. App'x 401, 403 [*712] (2d Cir. 2010) (disregarding first-filed rule in favor of forum selection clause). However, a forum selection clause may not be applicable where it applies to only one of multiple defendants, as is the case here. See *Vangura Kitchen Tops, Inc. v. C&C N. Am., Inc., No. 08cv1011, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 79360, 2008 WL 4540186, at 5 (W.D. Pa. Oct. 7, 2008) (Where . . . a forum selection clause is only applicable to claims against one of multiple parties, by its terms such clause does not supply venue over claims sounding in tort against third parties.") (citation omitted).

The resolution of the nuances of appropriate venue need not be reached here. Bacardi's Motion [39] to Dismiss or Stay was made in the alternative. [3] When a motion is pursued in the alternative, the Court has discretion to consider the alternative requests in any order. See *United States v. Thomas, Civil No. 08-788-GPM, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23853, 2009 WL 792571, at 3 (S.D. Ill. Mar. 24, 2009) (granting in part motion with respect to dismissal on merits, and denying in part same motion as to dismissal for improper venue or for transfer). Here, the Court exercised that discretion to consider the portion of the motion seeking dismissal first. As such, Bacardi's arguments related to transfer are now moot. Indeed, it appears that much of the complexity regarding which forum is most appropriate is owed to the novel "extra-contractual" theories Plaintiffs pursued for their MFA claims. Judge Huck invited this Court to weigh in on Plaintiffs' MFA theories, Huck Hr'g Tr. 39. The theories are rejected, as are Plaintiffs' antitrust allegations.

IV. CONCLUSION

Based upon the foregoing, [40] and all the files, records, and proceedings herein, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that:

1. Bacardi's Motion to Dismiss First Amended Complaint or for Transfer [Docket No. 24] is GRANTED to the extent it seeks dismissal;

2. Brown-Forman's Motion to Dismiss First Amended Complaint [Docket No. 26] is GRANTED;

3. Bacardi's Motion to Stay [Docket No. 30] is DENIED as moot;

4. Brown-Forman's Motion to Stay or Transfer [Docket No. 66] is DENIED as moot; and

[2] Named after Terra Int'l, Inc. v. Miss. Chem. Corp., 119 F.3d 688 (8th Cir. 1997).

[3] Bacardi's Motion to Stay and Brown-Forman's Motion to Transfer or Stay were both made after each had moved for dismissal. Therefore, considering those motions in the order they were presented to the Court, they are now moot and are denied.

5. All claims in the Complaint are DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.

LET JUDGMENT BE ENTERED ACCORDINGLY.

Under Maine statutory law, the Attorney General may seek injunctive relief by commencing a proceeding in equity to prevent and restrain antitrust violations. *Me. Rev. Stat. The statute also authorizes any person injured directly or indirectly in its business or property by an antitrust violation to sue for the injury in a separate civil action for treble damages and reasonable costs and fees. § 1104(1). The statute does not, however, authorize private entities to file complaints seeking injunctive relief.

Private and public antitrust actions are designed to be cumulative, not mutually exclusive. Because private parties are not bound by the government litigation, any liability to private parties may be determined separately under Maine's statutory framework. Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 10, § 1104(1), (2). Thus, there is no entitlement in a private party to intervene of right in a State antitrust enforcement action in Maine unless the party provides evidence of bad faith or malfeasance on the part of the government such that intervention is necessary to protect the public's interests. § 1104(1), (2).

[912] SAUFLEY, C.J.

[*P1] Central Maine Medical Center (CMMC) appeals from an order entered in the Business and Consumer Docket (Horton, J.) denying CMMC's motion to intervene in an antitrust enforcement action commenced by the State of Maine against MaineHealth, Maine Medical Center, Maine Cardiology Associates, P.A., and Cardiovascular Consultants of Maine, P.A. (collectively, the MaineHealth entities). See 10 M.R.S. § 1104(2) (2010). [1] CMMC contends that the court abused its discretion in denying the motion to intervene, filed pursuant to M.R. Civ. P. 24, and inappropriately [2] relied on federal antitrust law in reaching its decision. We affirm the denial of CMMC's motion to intervene.

I. BACKGROUND

[*P2] On March 22, 2011, the State of Maine filed a complaint for antitrust enforcement against the MaineHealth entities based on the proposed acquisition by MaineHealth of two major Portland-area [3] cardiology practices: Maine Cardiology Associates and Cardiovascular Consultants of Maine. MaineHealth is Maine's largest health system and owns Maine Medical Center in Portland, which is Maine's largest hospital.

[*P3] On the day that the State filed the complaint, it also filed a motion for approval of a consent decree between the State and the MaineHealth entities. The matter was transferred to the Business and Consumer Docket upon the State's and the MaineHealth entities' application for transfer, and the court entered a procedural order indicating that it would accept written comments from the public.

[*P4] In April 2011, CMMC moved to intervene in the proceeding, either of right or permissively. See M.R. Civ. P. 24(a), [913] (b). CMMC argued that it had an interest in the case as Maine Medical Center's principal competitor in southern Maine regarding cardiovascular surgery and that it could be driven from the market for cardiovascular surgery and angioplasty services as a result of the proposed merger, to the detriment of CMMC and its patients. CMMC contended that it should be allowed to intervene as it had when these parties attempted to merge in 2010.

> > A. These proceedings may be by way of petitions setting forth the case and praying that the violation shall be enjoined or otherwise prohibited.

> > C. Pending the petition and before final decree, the court may at any time make such temporary restraining order or prohibition as considered just under the circumstances.
> > D. Any person who violates the terms of an injunction issued under this section must forfeit and pay to the State, to be applied in carrying out this chapter, a civil penalty of not more than $50,000 for each violation.

10 M.R.S. § 1104(2) (2010).

CMMC did not file a proposed pleading presenting [4] allegations against any of the already-joined parties as required by M.R. Civ. P. 24(c). [2]

[*P5] After receiving written objections and memoranda, the court denied CMMC's motion to intervene. The court held that CMMC could not intervene of right, see M.R. Civ. P. 24(a), because it had failed to show any adverse effect on its ability to protect its interests through other mechanisms. See 10 M.R.S. § 1104(1) (2010); [5] 15 U.S.C.S. § 15 (LexisNexis 1985). The court also declined to allow permissive intervention because it is rarely permitted in antitrust enforcement actions brought by the government and generally requires some showing of governmental bad faith. The court noted that CMMC would have the opportunity to participate in a nontestimonial oral argument as authorized by the court in a separate order that invited "oral comment and written submissions" from third parties due to the public interest involved in the case.

[*P6] CMMC did file extensive written comments, and it requested the opportunity for oral argument within the time prescribed by the court, but it also appealed to us from the denial of its motion to intervene, which resulted in a stay of all proceedings in the Superior Court during the pendency of the appeal. See M.R. App. P. 3(b). We denied the State's and MaineHealth's motions for summary affirmance or immediate remand, but we granted their motion for expedited review.

II. DISCUSSION

A. Interlocutory Appeal

[*P7] HN4[] Although a final judgment is normally required before an appeal may be taken, see Morse Bros., Inc. v. Webster, 2001 ME 70, ¶ 13, 772 A.2d 842, we have recognized an exception to [6] the final judgment rule for appeals challenging the denial of a motion to intervene, see Francis v. Dana-Cummings, 2007 ME 16, ¶ 15, 915 A.2d 412. The exception applies whether the party sought intervention of right or permissive intervention. Donna C. v. Kalamaras, 485 A.2d 222, 223 (Me. 1984). We therefore immediately review the court's denial of CMMC's motion to intervene for error of law or abuse of discretion. Doe v. Roe, 495 A.2d 1235, 1238 (Me. 1985); Donna C., 485 A.2d at 224-25.

B. Intervention in Antitrust Actions in Maine

[*P8] HN5[] Under Maine statutory law, the Attorney General may seek injunctive relief by commencing a "proceeding[] in equity to prevent and restrain [antitrust] [914] violations." 10 M.R.S. § 1104(2). The statute also authorizes "[a]ny person . . . injured directly or indirectly in its business or property" by an antitrust violation to sue for the injury in a separate civil action for treble damages and reasonable costs and fees. 10 M.R.S. § 1104(1). The statute does not, however, authorize private entities to file complaints seeking injunctive relief. See id.

[*P9] CMMC acknowledges that no Maine statute authorizes it to seek injunctive relief against the MaineHealth entities [7] as a remedy for antitrust violations. CMMC does not argue that we have allowed or authorized such intervention in the past. [3] Nor does it cite to any supporting authority from other jurisdictions in which the statutes similarly permit only the government to seek injunctive relief. Nonetheless, CMMC argues that it should have been permitted to intervene, either of right or permissively, in the antitrust claim brought by the Attorney General seeking injunctive relief. We address each ground for intervention separately.

[2] HN2[] Rule 24(c) of the Maine Rules of Civil Procedure requires that a motion to intervene "be accompanied by a pleading setting forth the claim or defense for which intervention is sought." Because no such proposed pleading was filed in this matter, the court could have dismissed the motion for failure to comply with the rule, but it did not. Neither the State nor MaineHealth raised this deficiency to the court in their memoranda in opposition to intervention, however, and the court's decision to address the motion on its merits did not constitute obvious error. See Kondaur Capital Corp. v. Hankins, 2011 ME 82, ¶ 15, 25 A.3d 960 (stating that HN3[] unpreserved errors will be reviewed only for any "seriously prejudicial error tending to produce a manifest injustice" (quotation marks omitted)).

[3] Although CMMC emphasizes that it was allowed to intervene in a prior action, we did not review the court's determination in that case.

1. Intervention of Right

[*P10] HN6[] Pursuant to Rule 24(a), intervention is permitted of right in either of two circumstances:

> Upon timely application anyone shall be permitted to intervene in an action: (1) when a statute confers an unconditional right to intervene; or (2) when the applicant claims an interest relating to the property or transaction which is the subject of the action and the applicant is so situated that the disposition of the action may as a practical matter impair or impede the applicant's ability to protect that interest, unless [8] the applicant's interest is adequately represented by existing parties.

The first ground for intervention is inapplicable here because no "statute confers an unconditional right to intervene." M.R. Civ. P. 24(a)(1). Thus, the question for our consideration is whether CMMC satisfied the requirements of the second ground for intervention of right, which is allowed when, "on timely application: (1) [a party] claims an interest in the property or transaction that is the subject of the action, and (2) [the party] is so situated that the disposition of the action may impair or impede [its] ability to protect [its] interest, and (3) [its] interest is not adequately represented by the existing parties to the action." Doe, 495 A.2d at 1237; see M.R. Civ. P. 24(a)(2).

[*P11] As one of the competitors of the MaineHealth entities, CMMC has an interest related to the antitrust action, but CMMC did not demonstrate that the disposition of the antitrust action would impair or impede its ability to protect its own interests through independent litigation. See M.R. Civ. P. 24(a)(2). HN7[] Maine antitrust law allows any person injured in business or property, whether directly or indirectly, to sue for the injury in [9] a civil action and seek treble damages. 10 M.R.S. § 1104(1). [4] Only the Attorney General, [915] however, is authorized to "institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain [antitrust] violations." Id. § 1104(2).

[*P12] Thus, as the United States Supreme Court has held with regard to comparable federal antitrust law, HN9[] private and public actions "were designed to be cumulative, not mutually exclusive." Sam Fox Publ'g Co. v. United States, 366 U.S. 683, 689, 81 S. Ct. 1309, 6 L. Ed. 2d 604 (1961) (quotation marks omitted). Because private parties are not bound by the government litigation, any liability to private parties [10] may be determined separately under Maine's statutory framework. See 10 M.R.S. § 1104(1), (2); Sam Fox Publ'g Co., 366 U.S. at 689-90. Thus, there is no entitlement in a private party to intervene of right in a State antitrust enforcement action in Maine unless the party provides evidence of bad faith or malfeasance on the part of the government such that intervention is necessary to protect the public's interests. See 10 M.R.S. § 1104(1), (2); Sam Fox Publ'g Co., 366 U.S. at 689; United States v. Associated Milk Producers, Inc., 534 F.2d 113, 117 (8th Cir. 1976); *United States v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11872, at 2-3 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 17, 2000); United States v. G. Heileman Brewing Co., Inc., 563 F. Supp. 642, 648-49 (D. Del. 1983); United States v. Int'l Tel. & Tel. Corp., 349 F. Supp. 22, 26-27 (D. Conn. 1972).

[*P13] CMMC argues that the federal authorities to which we have referred above are now outdated because Congress has amended its statutes to allow for intervention in government antitrust cases. See 15 U.S.C.S. § 16 (LexisNexis 1985 & Supp. 2011). Maine's antitrust enforcement statute has not been amended, however, since 1991. See P.L. 1991, ch. 137, §§ 2, 3 (effective [11] October 9, 1991) (codified at 10 M.R.S. § 1104 (2010)). Because the Maine statute authorizes only one party—the Attorney General—to bring an enforcement action

[4] The statute provides:

> HN8[] Right of action and damages. Any person, including the State or any political subdivision of the State, injured directly or indirectly in its business or property by any other person or corporation by reason of anything forbidden or declared to be unlawful by section 1101, 1102 or 1102-A, may sue for the injury in a civil action. If the court finds for the plaintiff, the plaintiff shall recover 3 times the amount of the damages sustained and cost of suit, including necessary and reasonable investigative costs, reasonable experts' fees and reasonable attorney's fees.

10 M.R.S. § 1104(1) (2010).

seeking injunctive relief, see 10 M.R.S. § 1104(2), and does not authorize private intervention, the federal cases cited above remain persuasive regarding the limitations on private intervention in Maine.

[*P14] Because CMMC made no evidentiary showing of bad faith, collusion, or other malfeasance, intervention of right was properly denied.

2. Permissive Intervention

[*P15] HN10[] Pursuant to Rule 24(b), a person who files a timely application "may be permitted to intervene in an action when an applicant's claim or defense and the main action have a question of law or fact in common." In making this discretionary determination, "the court shall consider whether the intervention will unduly delay or prejudice the adjudication of the rights of the original parties." M.R. Civ. P. 24(b).

[*P16] Here, the court determined that joining a private cause of action to the State's enforcement claim would unduly burden the proceedings, and the court supplied an alternative method for CMMC to participate in the enforcement action by providing oral comments and written [12] submissions to the court. The court did not abuse its discretion in denying permissive intervention. Although CMMC contends that it occupies an exceptional position as a competitor of the MaineHealth entities, its situation is not unique. The MaineHealth entities have other competitors for cardiac care, and all are entitled to participate in the State's enforcement action as permitted [916] by the court, or to bring an independent claim for damages, see 10 M.R.S. § 1104(1); 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, or both.

The entry is:

ORDER GRANTING MOTION FOR FTC DOCUMENTS (Dkt. Nos. 138, 144)

This antitrust and trademark infringement action involves the United States market for condoms. Now pending before the Court is the motion of Mayer Laboratories, Inc. ("Mayer") to compel production of documents Church & Dwight Co. ("C&D") disclosed to the Federal Trade Commission ("FTC") in connection with a FTC investigation. (Dkt. Nos. 138, 144.) After carefully considering the parties' written arguments, and having had the benefit of telephonic oral argument on November 17, 2011, Mayer's motion to compel is GRANTED: the disputed documents are responsive to Mayer's document request, the FTC confidentiality regulations do not shield the disputed documents from discovery, any attorney-client or attorney-work product [*2] privilege was waived by disclosure of the documents to the FTC, and Federal Rule of Evidence 408 does not bar their discoverability.

BACKGROUND

Mayer served C&D with a document request for "[a]ll documents and data submitted, provided or disclosed by Church & Dwight to the FTC in the FTC Investigation." C&D responded to the request as follows:

> Church & Dwight repeats and restates all of its General Objections, as set forth above, as if set forth in full herein. Furthermore, the investigation of Church & Dwight by the FT C is non-public and subject to 15 USCA

> 57b-2(b)(3)(C). Therefore, all statements made to the FTC by Church & Dwight and communications between the FTC and Church and & Dwight are confidential and cannot be disclosed. Subject to and without waiving any of the foregoing objections, Church & Dwight will produce a copy of documents responsive to this Request.

(Dkt. No. 138 at p. 20.) On October 6, 2011, the parties jointly submitted a letter brief "regarding Mayer's motion to compel C&D to produce the entire C&D production of documents previously produced by C&D to the Federal Trade Commission ('FTC') pursuant to the FTC's non-public antitrust investigation of C&D." The parties' [*3] dispute concerns whether "certain Canadian documents that C&D possesses that were produced to the FTC but which C&D has withheld, at least in part, from its production to Mayer." (Dkt. No. 138.) After hearing argument, the district ruled as follows: "Defendant's motion to compel production of FTC documents is granted. Plaintiff shall produce FTC documents to Defendant by 10/15/2011." (Dkt. No. 132.)

C&D subsequently took the position that the term "FTC documents" as used by the district court refers only to documents "produced" to the FTC in response to the FTC's subpoena to C&D, and does not include documents voluntarily provided to the FTC outside of the subpoena, such as email, correspondence and "white papers" that express C&D's view on its compliance with the antitrust laws. C&D argues that the FTC investigation is non-public and that all materials submitted to the FTC in connection with the investigation are confidential and therefore non-discoverable. It also contends that to the extent such documents involve settlement discussions, they are inadmissible and also non-discoverable. The parties brought this dispute to the district court's attention by letter filed November 8, 2011 [*4] (Dkt. No. 138) and the dispute was referred to this Court for decision. (Dkt. No. 140.)

By joint letter filed November 17, 2011, the parties raised another, related dispute with the Court: "whether C&D is obligated to produce certain documents that it voluntarily submitted to the FTC in connection with the FTC's non-public investigation, including 'white papers' and other documents setting forth C&D's position on the legal merits of its compliance with antitrust law." (Dkt. No. 144.) C&D contends that such documents are protected work-product and/or attorney-client privilege while Mayer contends that any such privilege was waived when the documents were provided to the FTC.

In summary, the Court understands that C&D has provided to Mayer all documents which C&D produced to the FTC in response to FTC subpoenas, including documents involving the Canadian market for condoms, but is withholding any documents that were not disclosed pursuant to the subpoena, including email, correspondence, and "white papers" on the following grounds: (1) confidentiality of the FTC investigation, (2) attorney work product and/or attorney-client privilege, (3) Federal Rule of Evidence 408 settlement communications, [*5] and (4) burden and basic unfairness.

DISCUSSION

There is an issue as to whether C&D has properly preserved any objections to disclosing all the documents it provided to the FTC in light of (1) the district court's October 12, 2011 order that it produce "FTC documents", and/or (2) C&D's failure to produce a privilege log or specifically identify many of its objections in its written response to Mayer's document request number four. As discussed at oral argument, the Court will first decide whether the objections—assuming properly preserved—are valid. Because the Court concludes that they are not, it does not address whether C&D's document request response properly preserved the objections.

A. Confidentiality

Federal regulations provide that "[a]ny material which is received by the [FTC] in any investigation, a purpose of which is to determine whether any person may have violated any provision of the law administered by the [FTC], and which is provided pursuant to any compulsory process . . . shall not be required to be disclosed under [the Freedom of Information Act], or any other provision of law." 15 U.S.C. § 57b-2(f)(1). The Court concludes that this regulation does not create some privilege [*6] from discovery in a lawsuit between the target of the FTC's investigation and a third party. First, the regulation governs public disclosure by the FTC; it does not purport to create some privilege that can be asserted by the producing party in litigation with a third party. Second, the regulation applies only to those documents provided "pursuant to any compulsory process." C&D concedes that the district court's October 12, 2011 order applies to those documents that were produced in response to a FTC subpoena. (Dkt. No. 138 at 5.) Thus, the regulation does not apply to the documents at issue here—those which C&D voluntarily provided to the FTC and were not disclosed in response to a subpoena. The other regulation cited by C&D—15 U.S.C. § 57b-2(b)(3)(C)—similarly applies to "documents, tangible things, or transcripts of oral testimony received by the [FTC] pursuant to compulsory process." 15 U.S.C. § 57b-2(b)(1). Again, C&D concedes that the district court already ordered it to provide the documents produced to the FTC pursuant to compulsory process. Accordingly, the Court finds that the FTC confidentiality provisions do not shield C&D's voluntary disclosures to the FTC from production [*7] in this case.

B. Work-product and/or attorney-client privilege

The Court also concludes that C&D waived any attorney work product protection for correspondence, email and "white papers" it voluntarily submitted to the FTC, an adversary. See *S.E.C. v. Berry, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 28301, 2011 WL 825742 3-6 (N.D. Cal. March 7, 2011); United States v. Bergonzi, 216 F.R.D. 487, 497 (N.D. Cal. 2003); United States v. Reyes, 239 F.R.D. 591, 604 (N.D. Cal. 2006). The Court is not persuaded by the holding to the contrary in *Aronson v. McKesson HBOC, Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7078, 2005 WL 934331 9 (N.D. Cal. March 31, 2005). First, in Aronson, the work product was produced to the government pursuant to an express confidentiality agreement. *2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7078, [WL] at 1. There is no argument, let alone evidence, that such an agreement accompanied the voluntary production of the "white papers" here. No case holds that work product protection is maintained when documents are disclosed without a confidentiality agreement. And, as explained above, the FTC regulations prohibiting public disclosure only apply to documents produced pursuant to subpoena, that is, to documents not at issue on this motion. Second, all of the Circuits to have addressed the issue have held that [*8] waiver applies to voluntary production to the government as well as to private parties, even when the documents are produced in conjunction with a confidentiality agreement. See In re Qwest Commc'ns Int'l Inc., 450 F.3d 1179, 1194 (10th Cir. 2006); In re Columbia/HCA Healthcare Corp. Billing Practices Litig., 293 F.3d 289, 303 (6th Cir. 2002); Westinghouse Elec. Corp. v. Rep. of the Philippines, 951 F.2d 1414, 1430 (3d Cir. 1991). It is thus unsurprising that Aronson relied on a dissent by a Sixth Circuit judge. *2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7078, 2005 WL 934331 at 9. Accordingly, any work product privilege was waived by voluntarily sharing the documents with the FTC.

While C&D refers to attorney-client privilege, it does not cite any case that suggests that any attorney-client privilege was not waived when C&D voluntarily shared the documents with the FTC. See *Berry, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 28301, 2011 WL 925742 at 3 n.3 (holding that the attorney-client privilege is waived for communications shared with the government).

C. Settlement communications

C&D also contends that pursuant to Federal Rule of Evidence 408 "any material" relating to any settlement communications with the FTC is not relevant and could never lead to the discovery of admissible [*9] evidence The Court disagrees. Rule 408 is quite narrow: it only limits the admissibility of offers of settlement (or acceptance), or statements made in settlement negotiations, to prove or disprove liability or an amount of a claim. "The rule applies to the admissibility of evidence at trial, not to whether evidence is discoverable." *West v. Jewelry Innovations, Inc., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24103, 2009 WL 668695 1 (N.D. Cal. March 13, 2009) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted); see also Phoenix Solutions Inc. v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 254 F.R.D. 568, 584 (N.D. Cal. 2008) ("Rule 408 does not warrant protecting settlement negotiations from discovery"). C&D may not withhold documents on the grounds that they are connected to settlement discussions.

D. Burden and unfairness

Finally, C&D complains that it would be fundamentally unfair to allow Mayer to obtain correspondence and any white papers or expert reports C&D has "potentially" submitted to the FTC because it would allow for premature disclosure for the bases of C&D's expert reports. The Court is unclear why C&D modifies its statement with the word "potentially"—the document request at issue seeks only those documents that were, in fact, submitted to [*10] the FTC. Further, C&D does not explain what is so unfair about Mayer knowing what position C&D took with the FTC. C&D's assertion that it would be unduly burdensome to require its outside counsel to "search for, collect, and review hundreds of emails" in its counsel's e-mail archives to and from the FTC is unpersuasive, especially in litigation of this nature.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons explained above, Mayer's motion to compel production of documents responsive to its Document Request No. 4 is GRANTED. C&D shall produce the responsive documents on or before November 28, 2011.

This Order disposes of Docket Nos. 138, 144.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

ORDER GRANTING MOTION FOR FTC DOCUMENTS (Dkt. Nos. 138, 144)

This antitrust and trademark infringement action involves the United States market for condoms. Now pending before the Court is the motion of Mayer Laboratories, Inc. ("Mayer") to compel production of documents Church & Dwight Co. ("C&D") disclosed to the Federal Trade Commission ("FTC") in connection with a FTC investigation. (Dkt. [*3] Nos. 138, 144.) After carefully considering the parties' written arguments, and having had the benefit of telephonic oral argument on November 17, 2011, Mayer's motion to compel is GRANTED: the disputed documents are responsive to Mayer's document request, the FTC confidentiality regulations do not shield the disputed documents from discovery, any attorney-client or attorney-work product privilege was waived by disclosure of the documents to the FTC, and Federal Rule of Evidence 408 does not bar their discoverability.

BACKGROUND

Mayer served C&D with a document request for "[a]ll documents and data submitted, provided or disclosed by Church & Dwight to the FTC in the FTC Investigation." C&D responded to the request as follows:

> Church & Dwight repeats and restates all of its General Objections, as set forth above, as if set forth in full herein. Furthermore, the investigation of Church & Dwight by the FT C is non-public and subject to 15 USCA 57b-2(b)(3)(C). Therefore, all statements made to the FTC by Church & Dwight and communications between the FTC and Church and & Dwight are confidential and cannot be disclosed. Subject to and without waiving any of the foregoing objections, Church [*4] & Dwight will produce a copy of documents responsive to this Request.

(Dkt. No. 138 at p. 20.) On October 6, 2011, the parties jointly submitted a letter brief "regarding Mayer's motion to compel C&D to produce the entire C&D production of documents previously produced by C&D to the Federal Trade Commission ('FTC') pursuant to the FTC's non-public antitrust investigation of C&D." The parties' dispute concerns whether "certain Canadian documents that C&D possesses that were produced to the FTC but which C&D has withheld, at least in part, from its production to Mayer." (Dkt. No. 138.) After hearing argument, the district ruled as follows: "Defendant's motion to compel production of FTC documents is granted. Plaintiff shall produce FTC documents to Defendant by 10/15/2011." (Dkt. No. 132.)

C&D subsequently took the position that the term "FTC documents" as used by the district court refers only to documents "produced" to the FTC in response to the FTC's subpoena to C&D, and does not include documents voluntarily provided to the FTC outside of the subpoena, such as email, correspondence and "white papers" that express C&D's view on its compliance with the antitrust laws. C&D argues that [*5] the FTC investigation is non-public and that all materials submitted to the FTC in connection with the investigation are confidential and therefore non-discoverable. It also contends that to the extent such documents involve settlement discussions, they are inadmissible and also non-discoverable. The parties brought this dispute to the district court's attention by letter filed November 8, 2011 (Dkt. No. 138) and the dispute was referred to this Court for decision. (Dkt. No. 140.)

By joint letter filed November 17, 2011, the parties raised another, related dispute with the Court: "whether C&D is obligated to produce certain documents that it voluntarily submitted to the FTC in connection with the FTC's non-public investigation, including 'white papers' and other documents setting forth C&D's position on the legal merits of its compliance with antitrust law." (Dkt. No. 144.) C&D contends that such documents are protected work-product and/or attorney-client privilege while Mayer contends that any such privilege was waived when the documents were provided to the FTC.

In summary, the Court understands that C&D has provided to Mayer all documents which C&D produced to the FTC in response [*6] to FTC subpoenas, including documents involving the Canadian market for condoms, but is withholding any documents that were not disclosed pursuant to the subpoena, including email, correspondence, and "white papers" on the following grounds: (1) confidentiality of the FTC investigation, (2) attorney work product and/or attorney-client privilege, (3) Federal Rule of Evidence 408 settlement communications, and (4) burden and basic unfairness.

DISCUSSION

There is an issue as to whether C&D has properly preserved any objections to disclosing all the documents it provided to the FTC in light of (1) the district court's October 12, 2011 order that it produce "FTC documents", and/or (2) C&D's failure to produce a privilege log or specifically identify many of its objections in its written response to Mayer's document request number four. As discussed at oral argument, the Court will first decide whether the objections—assuming properly preserved—are valid. Because the Court concludes that they are not, it does not address whether C&D's document request response properly preserved the objections.

A. Confidentiality

Federal regulations provide that "[a]ny material which is received by the [FTC] [*7] in any investigation, a purpose of which is to determine whether any person may have violated any provision of the law administered by the [FTC], and which is provided pursuant to any compulsory process . . . shall not be required to be disclosed under [the Freedom of Information Act], or any other provision of law." 15 U.S.C. § 57b-2(f)(1). The Court concludes that this regulation does not create some privilege from discovery in a lawsuit between the target of the FTC's investigation and a third party. First, the regulation governs public disclosure by the FTC; it does not purport to create some privilege that can be asserted by the producing party in litigation with a third party. Second, the regulation applies only to those documents provided "pursuant to any compulsory process." C&D concedes that the district court's October 12, 2011 order applies to those documents that were produced in response to a FTC subpoena. (Dkt. No. 138 at 5.) Thus, the regulation does not apply to the documents at issue here—those which C&D voluntarily provided to the FTC and were not disclosed in response to a subpoena. The other regulation cited by C&D—15 U.S.C. § 57b-2(b)(3)(C)—similarly applies to [*8] "documents, tangible things, or transcripts of oral testimony received by the [FTC] pursuant to compulsory process." 15 U.S.C. § 57b-2(b)(1). Again, C&D concedes that the district court already ordered it to provide the documents produced to the FTC pursuant to compulsory process. Accordingly, the Court finds that the FTC confidentiality provisions do not shield C&D's voluntary disclosures to the FTC from production in this case.

B. Work-product and/or attorney-client privilege

The Court also concludes that C&D waived any attorney work product protection for correspondence, email and "white papers" it voluntarily submitted to the FTC, an adversary. See *S.E.C. v. Berry, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 28301, 2011 WL 825742 3-6 (N.D. Cal. March 7, 2011); United States v. Bergonzi, 216 F.R.D. 487, 497 (N.D. Cal. 2003); United States v. Reyes, 239 F.R.D. 591, 604 (N.D. Cal. 2006). The Court is not persuaded by the holding to the contrary in *In re McKesson HBOC, Inc. Secs. Litig., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7098, 2005 WL 934331 9 (N.D. Cal. March 31, 2005). First, in Aronson, the work product was produced to the government pursuant to an express confidentiality agreement. *2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7098, [WL] at 1. There is no argument, let alone evidence, that such an agreement accompanied the voluntary [*9] production of the "white papers" here. No case holds that work product protection is maintained when documents are disclosed without a confidentiality agreement. And, as explained above, the FTC regulations prohibiting public disclosure only apply to documents produced pursuant to subpoena, that is, to documents not at issue on this motion. Second, all of the Circuits to have addressed the issue have held that waiver applies to voluntary production to the government as well as to private parties, even when the documents are produced in conjunction with a confidentiality agreement. See In re Qwest Communs. Int'l, 450 F.3d 1179, 1194 (10th Cir. 2006); In re Columbia/HCA Healthcare Corp. Billing Practices Litig., 293 F.3d 289, 303 (6th Cir. 2002); Westinghouse Elec. Corp. v. Rep. of the Philippines, 951 F.2d 1414, 1430 (3d Cir. 1991). It is thus unsurprising that Aronson relied on a dissent by a Sixth Circuit judge. *2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7098, 2005 WL 934331 at 9. Accordingly, any work product privilege was waived by voluntarily sharing the documents with the FTC.

While C&D refers to attorney-client privilege, it does not cite any case that suggests that any attorney-client privilege was not waived when C&D [*10] voluntarily shared the documents with the FTC. See *Berry, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 28301, 2011 WL 925742 at 3 n.3 (holding that the attorney-client privilege is waived for communications shared with the government).

C. Settlement communications

C&D also contends that pursuant to Federal Rule of Evidence 408 "any material" relating to any settlement communications with the FTC is not relevant and could never lead to the discovery of admissible evidence The Court disagrees. Rule 408 is quite narrow: it only limits the admissibility of offers of settlement (or acceptance), or statements made in settlement negotiations, to prove or disprove liability or an amount of a claim. "The rule applies to the admissibility of evidence at trial, not to whether evidence is discoverable." *West v. Jewelry Innovations, Inc., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24103, 2009 WL 668695 1 (N.D. Cal. March 13, 2009) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted); see also Phoenix Solutions Inc. v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 254 F.R.D. 568, 584 (N.D. Cal. 2008) ("Rule 408 does not warrant protecting settlement negotiations from discovery"). C&D may not withhold documents on the grounds that they are connected to settlement discussions.

D. Burden and unfairness

Finally, C&D complains that [*11] it would be fundamentally unfair to allow Mayer to obtain correspondence and any white papers or expert reports C&D has "potentially" submitted to the FTC because it would allow for premature disclosure for the bases of C&D's expert reports. The Court is unclear why C&D modifies its statement with the word "potentially"—the document request at issue seeks only those documents that were, in fact, submitted to the FTC. Further, C&D does not explain what is so unfair about Mayer knowing what position C&D took with the FTC. C&D's assertion that it would be unduly burdensome to require its outside counsel to "search for, collect, and review hundreds of e-mails" in its counsel's e-mail archives to and from the FTC is unpersuasive, especially in litigation of this nature.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons explained above, Mayer's motion to compel production of documents responsive to its Document Request No. 4 is GRANTED. C&D shall produce the responsive documents on or before November 28, 2011.

This Order disposes of Docket Nos. 138, 144.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Opinion

ORDER REGARDING MOTIONS TO DISMISS AND MOTION FOR LEAVE TO AMEND

Before the Court are three motions to dismiss: one filed by defendant Orbitz Worldwide, LLC ("Orbitz") (doc. 77); another by defendants Travelport Limited and Travelport, LP (collectively, "Travelport") (doc. 85); and the final one by defendants Sabre Inc., Sabre Holdings Corporation, [*7] and Sabre Travel International Limited (collectively, "Sabre") (doc. 97). Also before the Court is the motion for leave to file a second amended complaint (doc. 148) filed by plaintiff American Airlines, Inc. ("American"). After review, the Court will grant Orbitz's motion to dismiss, grant in part and deny in part Travelport's motion to dismiss, grant in part and deny in part Sabre's motion to dismiss, and grant in part and deny in part American's motion for leave.[1]

I. Defendants' Motions to Dismiss

A. Background

Plaintiff American Airlines, Inc. ("American"), is a domestic and international airline that logs approximately 3500 departures each day. (Am. Compl. ¶ 19 (doc. 70).) Orbitz operates an online travel agency. (Id. ¶ 6.) Travelport and Sabre each operate global distribution systems ("GDSes"). (Id. ¶ 2.)

GDSes distribute airline fare, flight, and availability information to travel agents, enabling those travel agents to make reservations and issue tickets to travelers. (Id.) Airlines provide their information to GDSes and pay each GDS a booking fee for every reservation that is made through the GDS. (Id. ¶ 2, 6.) American pays Travelport and Sabre several million dollars in booking [*8] fees every year. (Id. ¶ 6.)

Five GDSes operate in the United States. (Id. ¶ 3.) Sabre controls the largest, which accounts for more than 60% of all airline ticket sales made by U.S.-based travel agencies. (Id.) Travelport controls three GDSes--Galileo, Apollo, and Worldspan--which collectively account for over 30% of all airline ticket sales made by U.S.-based travel agencies. (Id.) The fifth GDS is Amadeus, whose operator is not a party to this lawsuit. (Id.) Over the past year, some $7 billion of American's sales were booked through Sabre and more than $2.7 billion were booked through Travelport GDSes. (Id.)

GDSes typically enter into long-term subscriber agreements with travel agents. (Id. ¶ 35.) Under the usual subscriber agreement, a travel agent receives a portion of a GDS's booking fee when the agent makes a reservation through that GDS. (Id.) Using a GDS, a travel agent can conduct a single search for airline fare, flight, and availability information and review the search results in a single integrated display. (Id.) Subscribing to multiple GDSes often means additional costs and expenses for a travel agent by adding layers to the search process, requiring additional training [*9] costs, and complicating the travel agent's record-keeping systems. (Id. at ¶ 38.) Consequently, a travel agency typically subscribes to only a single GDS and uses software applications that interoperate with that GDS. (Id.)

According to American, network airlines are dependent upon travel agencies to sell airline tickets to travelers. (Id. ¶ 29.) Although the airlines sell some tickets directly to consumers through their websites, call centers, and ticket offices, the majority of the airlines' passenger revenues are generated by ticket sales through travel agencies. (Id.) These travel agencies include both traditional brick-and-mortar agencies and online agencies such as Orbitz. (Id.) Approximately 51% of American's passenger revenue is generated by sales through brick-and-mortar travel agencies, and approximately 10-15% is generated by sales through online agencies. (Id.)

American further alleges that network airlines are dependent upon travel agents to reach business travelers in particular. (Id. ¶ 30.) Business travelers account for a disproportionately high share of network airlines' revenues, including American's. (Id.) And according to American's complaint, less than 10% of business [*10] travel is booked through the internet. (Id. ¶ 31.) Instead, most businesses contract with travel agencies to manage their employees' travel, resulting in virtually exclusive working relationships between business travelers and their travel agents. (Id. at ¶ 31.)

American contends that this landscape favors GDSes and disfavors airlines and consumers. Broadly speaking, American alleges that, because consumers (particularly business travelers) rely heavily on travel agencies to purchase airline tickets, and because those travel agencies, in turn, rely almost exclusively on GDSes to book flights, airlines are dependent upon GDSes to reach travel agents and, ultimately, to sell tickets to consumers. (Id. ¶ 2.) It is American's position that Sabre and Travelport each have monopoly power over American and that each of them has used its monopoly power to exclude competition in the relevant market and submarkets. (Id. ¶ 9.) It is also American's position that Sabre and Travelport, along with Orbitz and other industry participants, "have engaged in a broad and unlawful multi-part anticompetitive scheme." (Id.)

This scheme, according to American, includes charging supracompetitive booking fees [*11] to airlines, entering into restrictive long-term contracts with travel agents, and imposing various anticompetitive contract terms upon airlines. (Id. ¶ 10.) In addition, American alleges that Travelport and Sabre have retaliated against American for its development and implementation of "AA Direct Connect," a method of providing airline information and booking services directly to travel agents without having to go through GDSes. (Id. ¶¶ 8-9.) American contends that Travelport and Sabre view AA Direct Connect as a threat to the vitality of the current GDS-dominated landscape. (Id.) Sabre's and Travelport's retaliatory actions, American alleges, include doubling American's booking fees on certain types of flight reservations and biasing American's flight information on their displays. (Id. ¶¶ 12-13.) Moreover, American alleges that the defendants' retaliatory practices have been directed not only at American, but also certain third-party software developers who have worked with American in developing non-GDS technologies to distribute flight information directly to travel agents. (Id. ¶ 13.) The result of the defendants' actions, argues American, ultimately affects United States consumers. [*12] (Id. ¶ 15.)

American's first amended complaint (doc. 70) asserts six claims for relief. Its claims one and two are against Sabre and Travelport, respectively, for their alleged "monopolization of the distribution of airline tickets" in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.A. § 2 (West 2011). (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 128-33.) American's third claim, also brought under section 2, is for "conspiracy to monopolize the distribution of airline tickets through travel agents," and is directed at Travelport and Orbitz. (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 134-36.) American's fourth claim, which addresses all defendants, alleges that they entered into agreements that unreasonably restrain competition in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.A. § 1. (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 137-42.) American's fifth claim is against Travelport for tortious interference "with existing and prospective contractual relationships." (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 143-51.) And similarly, American's sixth and final claim is asserted against Sabre and Travelport for tortious interference "with existing contractual relationships." (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 152-57.) All defendants now seek dismissal of American's amended complaint under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6).

B. Legal Standard

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) authorizes the dismissal of a complaint that fails "to [*13] state a claim upon which relief can be granted." This rule must be interpreted in conjunction with Rule 8(a), which sets forth the requirements for pleading a claim for relief in federal court. Rule 8(a) requires "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2); see Swierkiewicz v. Sorema N.A., 534 U.S. 506, 508, 122 S. Ct. 992, 152 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2002) (holding that Rule 8(a)'s simplified pleading standard applies to most civil actions). The Court must accept as true all well-pleaded, non-conclusory allegations in the complaint and liberally construe the complaint in favor of the plaintiff. Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Sales, Inc. v. Avondale Shipyards, Inc., 677 F.2d 1045, 1050 (5th Cir. 1982).

The plaintiff must, however, plead specific facts, not mere conclusory allegations, to avoid dismissal. Guidry v. Bank of LaPlace, 954 F.2d 278, 281 (5th Cir. 1992). Indeed, the plaintiff must plead "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face," and his "[f]actual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level, on the assumption that all the allegations in the complaint are true (even if doubtful in fact)." Bell

Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 547, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (citations omitted). The Court need not credit bare conclusory allegations or "a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action." Id. at 1965. Rather, "[a] claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the [*14] reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009).

C. Analysis of American's Section 2 Claims

"Section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act provides a cause of action against 'single firms that monopolize or attempt to monopolize, as well as conspiracies and combinations to monopolize.'" Stewart Glass & Mirror, Inc. v. U.S. Auto Glass Disc. Ctrs., Inc., 200 F.3d 307, 315 (5th Cir. 2000) (quoting Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 454, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993)).[2] Thus, section 2 denounces three actions: (1) actual monopolization, (2) attempted monopolization, and (3) conspiracy to monopolize. Geddie v. Seaton, No. 3:06-CV-0895-R, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 55106, 2006 WL 2263335, at *5 (N.D. Tex. Aug. 8, 2006) (Buchmeyer, J.) (citing 15 U.S.C.A. § 2; N. Miss. Commc'ns, Inc. v. Jones, 792 F.2d 1330, 1335 (5th Cir. 1986)). As previously noted, in its first amended complaint American asserts claims for actual monopolization and conspiracy to monopolize.

1. American's Monopolization Claims

a. Relevant Market and Submarkets

"The offense of monopoly under § 2 of the Sherman Act has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence [*15] of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." Alcatel USA, Inc. v. DGI Techs., Inc., 166 F.3d 772, 781 (5th Cir. 1999) (quoting Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 481, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992)) (internal quotation marks omitted). Thus, as a preliminary matter, "the plaintiff must first establish the relevant product market." Alcatel, 166 F.3d at 781 (citation omitted).

"Whether a relevant market has been identified is usually a question of fact . . . ." Apani Sw., Inc. v. Coca-Cola Enters., Inc., 300 F.3d 620, 628 (5th Cir. 2002) (citing Seidenstein v. Nat'l Med. Enters., Inc., 769 F.2d 1100, 1106 (5th Cir. 1985)). A proffered relevant market is insufficient as a matter of law, however, "[w]here the plaintiff fails to define [the] market with reference to the rule of reasonable interchangeability and cross-elasticity of demand, or alleges a proposed relevant market that clearly does not encompass all interchangeable substitute products even when all factual inferences are granted in plaintiff's favor." Id. (citations omitted).[3]

In the instant case, American defines the relevant product market as "[t]he distribution of airline fare, flight, and availability information and the provision of reservations and ticketing capability to travel agents." (Am Compl. ¶ 117.) The participants in this market ("the Market") include GDSes as well as entities like American who seek to

> Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony . . . .

15 U.S.C.A. § 2.

[3] "'The cross-elasticity of demand for substitutes' measures consumers' propensity to switch from one product to another, similar product when relative prices change. Products similar enough that a small relative price change causes consumers to substitute one for another are in the same market." United Farmers Ass'n, Inc. v. Farmers Ins. Exchange, 89 F.3d 233, 236 n.3 (5th Cir. 1996) (citations omitted) (internal quotation marks omitted). Similarly, "'[i]nterchangeability' looks to the use or function of the given product as compared to other products. Every product that can be substituted for the same use or purpose should be included within a single product market." Intellective, Inc. v. Mass. Mut. Life. Ins. Co., 190 F. Supp. 2d 600, 610 (S.D.N.Y. 2002).

provide airline booking services to travel agents. None of the parties challenges that this is a plausible product [*16] market.[4]

American also alleges the existence of two relevant submarkets: (1) the provision of airline booking services to Sabre subscribers ("the Sabre submarket") and (2) the provision of airline booking services to Travelport subscribers ("the Travelport submarket"). (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 118-19.) Unlike the Market, Sabre and Travelport do challenge the plausibility of American's proffered submarkets. Sabre and Travelport argue that the submarkets fail to take into account cross-elasticity of demand as well as all reasonably-interchangeable substitutes. Moreover, Sabre and Travelport contend that the circumstances under which a single-brand market may serve as a relevant product market are limited to the type of circumstances present in Eastman Kodak Company v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992)--that is, where consumers are "locked in" to purchasing a particular aftermarket product because of a lack of reasonably-interchangeable substitutes.

After review, the Court disagrees. First of all, American has described the submarkets in terms of reasonable interchangeability and cross-elasticity of demand. For example, American alleges that airlines cannot afford to forego access to any of the GDSes because each GDS controls access to [*17] a critical group of travel agents who, in turn, have access to a discrete set of business travelers. According to American, because the typical travel agent aligns with a particular GDS, and because it is cost-prohibitive for the travel agent to switch to a new GDS, an airline must participate in every GDS or risk losing a crippling amount of sales. American further alleges that, in light of the foregoing, each GDS can, and does, raise its booking fees to supracompetitive levels--without fear of losing revenue from airlines and without regard to the other GDSes' booking fees. In short, American alleges that one GDS is not a substitute for another and that each GDS therefore constitutes a separate submarket. This, in the Court's view, is sufficient to avoid dismissal under Rule 12.

Moreover, the Court is not persuaded that the circumstances present in Kodak are the sole circumstances under which a single-brand market may be plausible. The defendant in that case, Eastman Kodak Company ("Kodak"), manufactured and sold complex business machines requiring unique replacement parts. Kodak, 504 U.S. at 456-57. The United States Supreme Court determined that "[b]ecause service and parts for Kodak equipment [were] not interchangeable [*18] with other manufacturers' service and parts, the relevant market from the Kodak equipment owner's perspective [was] composed of only those companies that service[d] Kodak machines." Id. at 482. Stated differently, because Kodak equipment-owners were "locked-in" to purchasing Kodak's repair parts and services following their initial purchase of Kodak equipment, the plaintiffs had a triable claim that the Kodak parts and service markets were each relevant markets. Id. at 481-83.

In rejecting Kodak's argument that a single brand could never be a relevant market, the Supreme Court noted that "proper market definition . . . can be determined only after a factual inquiry into the 'commercial realities' faced by consumers." Id. at 482 (quoting United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 572, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966)). And the commercial reality in Kodak was that there were no interchangeable substitutes for Kodak equipment parts. See id. The Supreme Court's decision was thus driven by a recognition that market definition is a factual inquiry. See id. Nowhere in Kodak did the Supreme Court state that aftermarkets present the only circumstances under which a single-brand market may be plausible.[5] To the contrary, the Supreme Court cited a number of its prior cases, some of which did not involve aftermarkets, [*19] that "support[ed] the proposition that in some instances one brand of a product can constitute a separate market." Id. [6]

[4] American's amended complaint alleges that "[e]ach country served by American in which Sabre or Travelport accounts for a substantial percentage of airline bookings is a relevant geographic market, including the United States, the United Kingdom, Belgium, and Switzerland." (Am. Compl. ¶ 120.) But in its response to Travelport's motion to dismiss, following a jurisdictional challenge from Travelport, American states that "the [amended complaint]'s allegations with respect to [Traveport]'s market share and conduct in certain foreign markets are not intended to demonstrate that [Travelport] has unlawfully monopolized those markets." (Pl.'s Resp. to Travelport's Mot. to Dismiss 16 (doc. 107).) Instead, says American, "the [amended complaint] alleges that Travelport used its monopoly power in those markets in order to quash [American]'s attempt to introduce competition to [Travelport]'s GDSs in the United States." (Id. at 16-17.) Thus, American's response clarifies that the geographical scope of its alleged product market and submarkets is limited to the United States.

In its amended complaint, American alleges facts that, if proven might show, or at least raise a factual dispute as to whether, a GDS's services are not interchangeable with those of another GDS. Corroborating those allegations is another alleged fact: that all airlines participate in every GDS. "The boundaries of . . . a submarket may be determined by examining such practical indicia as industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate economic entity, the product's peculiar characteristics and uses, unique production facilities, distinct customers, distinct prices, sensitivity to price changes, and specialized vendors." Apani, 300 F.3d at 626 (quoting Heatransfer Corp. v. Volkswagenwerk, A.G., 553 F.2d 964, 980 (5th Cir. 1977)) (internal quotation marks omitted). Sabre and Travelport may dispute that their travel-agent subscribers are "distinct customers" or that there is "industry or public recognition of [each of their submarkets] as a separate economic entity," but at the Rule 12 stage the Court must construe all factual allegations in favor of American. See Apani, 300 F.3d at 628; see also Associated Radio Serv. Co. v. Page Airways, Inc., 624 F.2d 1342, 1348-49 (5th Cir. 1980) ("Relevant market is a question of fact, and findings [*20] concerning the market should be overturned on appeal only if clearly erroneous or where there is no evidence to support the finding below." (citation omitted)).

Therefore, because American has pleaded the Sabre and Travelport submarkets in a way that takes into account the rules of interchangeability and cross-elasticity of demand, and given the fact-intensive nature of the relevant-market inquiry, the Court concludes that the Sabre and Travelport submarkets are sufficiently plausible to survive the defendants' challenges under Rule 12. See In re Air Passenger Computer Reservs. Sys. Antitrust Litig., 694 F. Supp. 1443, 1459-60 (C.D. Cal. 1988) (holding that plaintiff-airline had created a dispute of fact as to whether Sabre (then owned by American) was "a separate service market" where the plaintiff-airline had produced "evidence that airlines view[ed] each [GDS] as offering a unique service: access to a particular set of travel agents").

b. Monopoly Power

[5] Earlier in the Kodak opinion, the Supreme Court observed that "[l]egal presumptions that rest on formalistic distinctions rather than actual market realities are generally disfavored in antitrust law." Kodak, 504 U.S. at 466-67. The Supreme Court further observed that it "has preferred to resolve antitrust claims on a case-by-case basis, focusing on the particular facts disclosed by the record." Id. at 467 (citations omitted) (internal quotation marks omitted). Thus, rather than label the Travelport and Sabre submarkets "single-brand markets" and dismissing them on the basis of that label, the Court is of the opinion that it must look to the commercial realities of the airline industry, as depicted in American's complaint.

[6] The Court notes that the instant case is distinguishable from PSKS, Inc. v. Leegin Creative Leather Products, Inc., 615 F.3d 412 (5th Cir. 2010), in which the Fifth Circuit affirmed a district court's rejection of the proffered market consisting of defendant's single brand of products. In that case, the Fifth Circuit noted that single-brand markets are appropriate only in "rare circumstances" and, indeed, even seemed to suggest that such circumstances were "limited to situations in which consumers are 'locked in' to a specific brand by the nature of the product." Leegin, 615 F.3d at 418. But the court's decision to reject the proffered single-brand market in that case was based on its finding that the plaintiff had failed to plead that there was a "structural barrier to the interchangeability of [the defendant's] products with goods produced by competing manufacturers." Id. The court did not reach its decision merely because a single-brand market was involved. Id. Here, American has alleged the existence of structural barriers to the interchangeability of the GDSes's respective services, as well as a number of other facts showing that GDSes are not substitutes for one another. Thus, Leegin is distinguishable. The instant case is also distinguishable from United Farmers Agents Association v. Farmers Insurance Exchange, 89 F.3d 233 (5th Cir. 1996), another case in which the Fifth Circuit rejected a proffered single-brand market. In that case, the Fifth Circuit found that the plaintiffs--insurance agents--had not alleged the existence of "a superior or unique insurance product that allow[ed] [defendant Farmers Insurance] to charge consumers more for policies or pay agents less for selling them." Farmers, 89 F.3d at 236. The Farmers court also found that the plaintiffs had "shown no evidence that new Farmers agents would face significant information or switching costs." Id. The court therefore concluded that the plaintiffs "ha[d] failed to give [it] any reason to view the market for electronic access to Farmers policy information as the relevant market." Id. In the instant case, by contrast, American has pleaded facts showing that the GDSes have unique power that enables them to charge airlines high booking fees. American has also alleged that the GDSes' power is maintained in part because of the significant switching costs that travel agents face. Thus, Farmers is distinguishable from the instant case.

Once a plaintiff alleging monopolization has successfully pleaded the relevant product market, his next hurdle is to plead facts showing that the defendant possesses monopoly power in that market. See Stewart, 200 F.3d at 315. "Monopoly power is understood as 'the power to control price or exclude competition.'" Id. (quoting United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 391, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956)). It is undisputed that Travelport and Sabre [*21] possess monopoly power in the Travelport and Sabre submarkets, respectively. Moreover, Sabre appears to concede, at least for purposes of its motion, that its alleged market share of over 60% of the Market is sufficient market power to support a claim for monopolization under section 2.

Travelport, on the other hand, contends that its alleged 34% share of the Market is, as a matter of law, too insubstantial to constitute a monopoly. And after review, the Court agrees. It is a "widely accepted rule of thumb that while a 90 percent market share definitely is enough to constitute monopolization, 'it is doubtful whether 60 or 64 percent would be enough; and certainly, 33 percent is not.'" Domed Stadium Hotel, Inc. v. Holiday Inns, Inc., 732 F.2d 480, 489 (5th Cir. 1984) (quoting United States v. Aluminum Co. of Am., 148 F.2d 416, 424 (2d Cir. 1945)). Furthermore, the "Supreme Court cases, as well as cases from [the Fifth Circuit], suggest that absent special circumstances, a defendant must have a market share of at least fifty percent before he can be guilty of monopolization." Id. (collecting cases). "[L]ow market shares, if undisputed, make monopolization an impossibility as a matter of law." Dimmitt Agri Indus., Inc. v. CPC Int'l, Inc., 679 F.2d 516, 529 (5th Cir. 1982). Accordingly, American has failed to state a claim against Travelport for monopolization of the Market.

c. Exclusionary Conduct

As previously noted, the second [*22] element of a monopolization claim is "the willful acquisition or maintenance of [monopoly] power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." Alcatel, 166 F.3d at 781. In analyzing whether this sort of exclusionary conduct has occurred, courts consider "the proffered business justification for the act. If the conduct has no rational business purpose other than its adverse effects on competitors, an inference that it is exclusionary is supported." Stearns v. Airport Equip. Co., Inc. v. FMC Corp., 170 F.3d 518, 522 (5th Cir. 1999) (citing Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands, 472 U.S. 585, 608, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 (1985)).

In its amended complaint, American alleges that Sabre and Travelport "impose anticompetitive terms and conditions on airlines that participate in their GDSs." (Am. Compl. ¶ 49.) As an example, American points to section 2.1 of the Preferred Fares Amendment ("PFA"), entered into between American and one of Travelport's predecessors-in-interest.[7] The PFA includes a "full-content" provision requiring American to make flight-related content available to Travelport "at levels and amounts that are at least as favorable to [Travelport] as those upon which American makes the same types of [content] available through any other GDS or distribution channel." (Am. Compl. ¶ 52.) According to American, terms like this stifle [*23] innovation in the provision of booking services because they "prevent participating airlines from encouraging travel agents or consumers to use alternative, less-costly, distribution channels by making certain content available only through those channels." (Am. Compl. ¶ 54.) As another example, American points to a term in one of its contracts with Sabre that allegedly limits its ability to market AA Direct Connect to Sabre subscribers. (Am. Compl. ¶ 61.)

[7] Travelport contends that American's claims are based on the "content parity" provision of the PFA, which was executed in 2006, and are barred by the Sherman Act's four-year statute of limitations. 15 U.S.C.A. § 15b. In response, American insists that its claims based on the PFA are preserved by the continuing-violation theory and that, even if they are not, American can use those allegations as proof that Travelport is liable for monopolization during the limitations period. In the Court's view, the applicable statute of limitations does not bar American's PFA-related allegations. American's monopolization claims are not based heavily on the PFA; rather American simply points to the PFA as an example of what it considers a larger continuing effort by Travelport to exclude competition in the Travelport submarket. Therefore, although ultimately American will only be able to recover damages incurred as a result of acts committed during the limitations period, American may rely on its PFA-related allegations to establish that Travelport is liable for monopolization. See Imperial Point Colonnades Condo., Inc. v. Mangurian, 549 F.2d 1029, 1034-35 (5th Cir. 1977).

Moreover, American alleges that it is forced to accept the defendants' desired contract terms. For one thing, says American, Sabre and Travelport stagger the expiration dates of their contracts with airlines to place the airlines at a bargaining disadvantage when negotiating over new contract terms. According to American, an airline has less leverage in negotiations when it knows that its competitors have already accepted the GDS's terms in their contracts. Further, American asserts that because it is financially dependent upon Travelport and Sabre for access to their travel agents, it has little choice but to accept the GDSes' desired terms.

In addition to imposing anticompetitive contract terms on airlines, American's amended [*24] complaint alleges that Sabre and Travelport include anticompetitive terms in their subscriber agreements with travel agents. These contracts, according to American, are typically long-term--often three years but sometimes longer--and in many cases require the contracting travel agent to align exclusively with the contracting GDS. American alleges that these contracts, when combined with other market realities, make it difficult for travel agents to switch GDSes and for airlines to provide flight information directly to the travel agents.

American also alleges that Sabre and Travelport have taken a number of retaliatory actions against American in response to American's efforts to develop alternative channels of providing booking services. These retaliatory practices include raising certain booking fees and biasing against American's flight and fare content in their displays, which is, according to American, economically irrational. American alleges that display bias is "inconsistent with a competitor seeking to obtain the highest number of bookings." (Am. Compl ¶ 107.)

Sabre's and Travelport's retaliatory practices, American alleges, have been directed at not only American, but also [*25] certain third-party software developers who have worked with American in developing non-GDS technologies to distribute flight information directly to travel agents. For example, American alleges that Sabre terminated its developer agreement with Farelogix, a third-party technology provider, as a result of Farelogix's efforts at helping airlines, including American, establish direct connections with travel agents.

Sabre and Travelport contend that these allegations do not describe actions that are offensive to the Sherman Act. Sabre insists that its contractual arrangements with airlines--specifically its inclusion of most-favored-nation provisions, staggered contract-termination dates, and restrictions on American's promotion of AA Direct Connect--are perfectly kosher under the antitrust laws, as are its contracts with travel agents. While the factfinder may eventually find otherwise, at this stage of the litigation the Court is simply not able to say that the aforementioned allegations are, as a matter of law, insufficient to support a monopolization claim under section 2.[8]

2. American's Conspiracy-to-Monopolize Claims

"A conspiracy to monopolize can be established only by proof of (1) the existence [*26] of specific intent to monopolize; (2) the existence of a combination or conspiracy to achieve that end; (3) overt acts in furtherance of the combination or conspiracy; and (4) an effect upon a substantial amount of interstate commerce." Stewart, 200 F.3d at 316 (quoting N. Miss. Commc'ns, 792 F.2d at 1335) (internal quotation marks omitted). In their motions to dismiss, Travelport and Orbitz collectively challenge elements two and four.

a. Existence of Combination or Conspiracy

i. Conspiracy Between Orbitz and Travelport

Under Copperweld Corporation v. Independence Tube Corporation, 467 U.S. 752, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984), and its progeny, a parent and its wholly-owned subsidiary are treated as a single enterprise and are legally incapable of conspiring for purposes of the Sherman Act.[9] This rule also applies to sibling companies owned

[8] Sabre and Travelport also point out that they have no duty to assist competitors. They contend that any refusal on their part to deal with third party providers such as Farelogix is not offensive to the antitrust laws. But the sum of American's allegations is not that Sabre and Travelport have declined to assist competitors; it is that they have taken actions intended to destroy competition in the Market and the relevant submarkets. For example, American alleges that Sabre terminated its developer agreement with Farelogix after Farelogix worked with American on developing AA Direct Connect. According to American, Sabre's actions were intended to stifle innovation and competition in the airline flight-booking industry.

by the same parent company. See [Hood v. Tenneco Tex. Life Ins. Co., 739 F.2d 1012, 1015 (5th Cir. 1984)]. Orbitz contends that American's conspiracy claim fails because it is based largely on the subscriber service agreement ("SSA"), which was executed when Orbitz was wholly owned by Travelport. In addition, Orbitz and Travelport argue that, even though Travelport no longer wholly owns Orbitz, they still cannot conspire with one another because they are under common ownership.

Initially, the Court notes that, as American points out in its response, the SSA is not [*27] the only agreement between Travelport and Orbitz challenged in the amended complaint. American also alleges that Travelport and Orbitz entered into an agreement ("the Orbitz-Travelport compensation agreement") by which "Travelport agreed to pay Orbitz significant monetary consideration to offset any lost profits that resulted from American's termination of Orbitz's ticketing authority--conditioned only on Orbitz'[s] continued refusal to adopt AA Direct Connect." (Am. Compl. ¶ 101.) And it can reasonably be inferred from the amended complaint that Travelport no longer wholly owned Orbitz because, according to the complaint, the Orbitz-Travelport compensation agreement was executed after a "partial divestiture" of Travelport's ownership of Orbitz. (Am Compl. ¶¶ 91, 101.).[10] Orbitz seems to acknowledge as much in its reply, noting that the Orbitz-Travelport compensation agreement "took place after Travelport partially divested its shares in Orbitz, but while Travelport and its affiliates still owned a majority of Orbitz's stock." (Orbitz Reply 8-9.)

Thus, because the Orbitz-Travelport compensation agreement was executed when Travelport did not wholly own Orbitz, the fact that Orbitz [*28] was wholly owned by Travelport at the time of the SSA does not dispose of American's conspiracy claims. And although Orbitz and Travelport contend they are currently under common ownership, this is simply not what American alleges. Rather, according to American, Travelport owns a 48% interest in Orbitz. Additionally, American argues that the corporate ownership structure between Orbitz and Travelport is complex and requires additional discovery to fully resolve.

The Court agrees with American that it is American's factual perspective on the Travelport-Orbitz corporate relationship that matters at this stage. The relevant inquiry is thus whether Travelport's 48% ownership of Orbitz precludes the possibility of a conspiracy. And, in the Court's view, it does not. Copperweld does not, by its terms, apply to situations involving partially-owned subsidiaries, and neither Orbitz nor Travelport has offered any cases suggesting that it should. See [Free v. Abbott Labs., Inc., 176 F.3d 298, 299-300 (5th Cir. 1999)]. Moreover, American's allegations, broadly viewed, paint a picture of Orbitz and Travelport as "separate economic actors pursuing separate economic interests." [Am. Needle, Inc. v. Nat'l Football League, 560 U.S. 183, 130 S. Ct. 2201, 2212, 176 L. Ed. 2d 947 (2010)] (quoting [Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 769]) (internal quotation marks omitted). Therefore, because American's amended [*29] complaint alleges the existence of an agreement entered into between Orbitz and Travelport when they were neither wholly owned by one another nor sibling companies, and because American describes those two companies as separate economic actors, the Court concludes that Copperweld does not preclude a determination that Orbitz and Travelport can conspire.

ii. Conspiracy Involving "Unnamed Industry Participants"

American's complaint purports to allege a conspiracy between "Travelport, Orbitz, and other unnamed industry participants," presumably travel agents. (Am. Compl. ¶ 135.) Travelport contends that American's allegations concerning the involvement of unnamed industry participants fall short of plausibility. Similarly, Orbitz contends that American has failed to sufficiently plead Orbitz's involvement in a larger conspiracy beyond its agreements with Travelport.

[9] Although Copperweld birthed this rule in the context of a [section 1] claim, the rule covers [section 2] conspiracy cases as well. See [Stewart Glass & Mirror, Inc. v. U.S.A. Glas, Inc., 17 F. Supp. 2d 649, 657 (E.D. Tex. 1998)]. The parties appear to agree on this.

[10] Admittedly, it is difficult to discern from American's amended complaint the precise timing of Orbitz's ownership changes. But the Court must draw all reasonable inferences in American's favor. See [Kaiser Aluminum, 677 F.2d at 1050].

After review, the Court agrees. First of all, American has not alleged any specific relationships between Orbitz and other travel agents or competitors. Consequently, American has not alleged any horizontal conspiracies involving Orbitz. See Spectators' Commc'n Network, Inc. v. Colonial Country Club, 253 F.3d 215, 223 (5th Cir. 2001) (defining a horizontal conspiracy "a conspiracy between competitors," as opposed to [*30] "a vertical conspiracy between firms at different levels"). Instead, what American has essentially alleged are discrete vertical conspiracies between Travelport and individual travel agents, such as Orbitz. See id.; see also Jayco Sys., Inc. v. Savin Business Machines Corp., 777 F.2d 306, 317 n.40 ("Vertical agreements are those among persons at different levels of the market structure--i.e., among a manufacturer and its distributors--in contra-distinction to horizontal agreements among competitors at the same level of the market structure--i.e., among manufacturers or distributors." (citation omitted) (internal quotation marks omitted)).

But because a conspiracy necessarily involves an agreement between at least two parties, for each of the vertical conspiracies to survive a Rule 12 challenge, American must identify at least one other participant, along with Travelport, in each instance. See Lombard's, Inc. v. Prince Mfg., Inc., 753 F.2d 974 (11th Cir. 1985) (affirming dismissal of Sherman Act conspiracy claim where "the specific participants of the conspiracy [were] not even identified"); In re Refined Petroleum Prods. Antitrust Litig., 649 F. Supp. 2d 572, 580 (S.D. Tex. 2009) ("A conspiracy cannot be formed unless at least two separate persons or corporations reach an agreement or understanding." (quoting Fifth Circuit Pattern Jury Instruction (Civil) § 6.1 (2006))); see also Fuentes v. South Hills Cardiology, 946 F.2d 196, 202 (3d Cir. 1991) (determining that "allegations identifying [*31] the conspiracy's participants, purpose[,] and motive are sufficient to survive a motion to dismiss"); *Geddie, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 55106, 2006 WL 2263335, at 8 (noting that a defendant "cannot engage in a conspiracy by himself"); In re Currency Conversion Fee Antitrust Litig., 265 F. Supp. 2d 385, 417 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) ("The complaint must identify the co-conspirators, and describe the nature and effects of the alleged conspiracy." (citation omitted) (internal quotation marks omitted))).

For this reason, American's broad allegations of a conspiracy involving unnamed industry participants will not suffice. See Fort Wayne Telsat v. Entm't & Sports Programming Network, 753 F. Supp. 109 (S.D.N.Y. 1990) (dismissing Sherman Act claim alleging a conspiracy between defendant ESPN and "certain unnamed cable operators"). Thus, the only conspiracy that American has properly pleaded involves the Orbitz-Travelport compensation agreement. No other section 2 conspiracies have been properly pleaded.[11]

b. Effect Upon a Substantial Amount of Commerce

Orbitz also contends that American has not pleaded facts showing that Orbitz and Travelport's alleged conspiracy had an effect on a substantial amount of interstate commerce. Orbitz's theory is that the primary tie between itself and Travelport alleged in the amended complaint--the SSA--does not foreclose a sufficient share of the market to support a conspiracy-to-monopolize claim. As the Court has [*32] already noted, however, American has adequately pleaded a second agreement between Orbitz and Travelport: the Orbitz-Travelport compensation agreement.

But as a result of either agreement, American loses access to Orbitz--that is all.[12] And American's complaint does not provide any information concerning what share of the market Orbitz holds, aside from its allegation that Orbitz is [11] In its response brief, American purports to explain "why GDSs and their travel agency subscribers, including Orbitz, share a common economic interest in preserving the GDSs' [alleged] monopoly positions." (American's Resp. to Orbitz's Mot. to Dismiss 8.) But American also alleges that Orbitz's agreements with [Travelport] were not in fact rational or part of a competitive business strategy." (Id. at 10.) These two statements, in the Court's view, seem to contradict one another. It is unclear to the Court how Orbitz's contracts can accurately reflect a shared economic interest with Travelport and, at the same time, lack any rational justification or connection to Orbitz's business strategy. Thus, even assuming American had adequately alleged an industry-wide conspiracy, the Court is not persuaded that the motive behind such a conspiracy is evident from the amended complaint.

[12] American contends that, for purposes of its conspiracy claims, the Court should aggregate the effects of Travelport's agreements with Orbitz and the effects of Travelport's agreements with other travel-agent subscribers. This argument, however, the third-largest online travel agency in the United States. Without more, the Court cannot discern whether the amount of commerce affected by the alleged Orbitz-Travelport conspiracy is substantial. Given that online travel agencies account for only 10-15% of American's passenger revenue, however, it is reasonable to infer that Orbitz's market share is quite low. Therefore, in the Court's view, American has failed to plead facts showing that the alleged Orbitz-Travelport conspiracy had an effect on a substantial amount of commerce. See Stewart, 200 F.3d at 315 ("A conspiracy to monopolize can be established only by proof of . . . an effect upon a substantial amount of interstate commerce." (quoting N. Miss. Commc'ns, 792 F.2d at 1335) (emphasis added)(internal quotation marks omitted)).

D. Analysis of American's Section 1 Claims

"To establish a § 1 violation, a plaintiff must [*33] prove that: (1) the defendants engaged in a conspiracy; (2) that restrained trade; (3) in the relevant market." Golden Bridge Tech., Inc. v. Motorola, Inc., 547 F.3d 266, 271 (5th Cir. 2008) (citing Apani Sw., Inc. v. Coca-Cola Enters., Inc., 300 F.3d 620, 627 (5th Cir. 2002)).[13] In addition, "antitrust plaintiffs must prove they have suffered an injury stemming from the complained-of anti-competitive behavior." Stewart, 200 F.3d at 312 (citing Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio, 475 U.S. 574, 586, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986)).[14]

But as a threshold matter, courts apply a "market-power screen" to section 1 claims, dismissing claims against defendants who are not alleged to have significant market power. See Leegin, 615 F.3d at 418. Travelport contends that American has failed to allege that it has sufficient market power in the Market to support a section 1 claim. Market power and monopoly power, however, are not the same thing. See Dimmitt, 679 F.2d at 529. And as the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit has noted, "[s]ome circuit courts have used 30% as a rough benchmark for the minimum amount of market power necessary to give rise to a per se violation of antitrust law." Breaux Bros. Farms, Inc. v. Teche Sugar Co., Inc., 21 F.3d 83, 87 (5th Cir. 1994). Although American's section 1 claims do not give rise to per-se violations, the Court sees no reason why the 30% threshold would not be sufficient in the context of section 1 rule-of-reason analysis. Thus, the 34% market share that Travelport allegedly holds in the Market is, in the Court's view, sufficient [*34] to survive the market-power screen.

presumes that American has properly pleaded a conspiracy among Travelport, Orbitz, and its other travel-agent subscribers. And as previously noted, American has not adequately alleged such a conspiracy.

Moreover, even assuming American had sufficiently pleaded the existence of several discrete vertical conspiracies, the effects of each agreement would have to be considered individually, not in the aggregate. "Indeed, to hold otherwise would be to suggest that the distinction between a single conspiracy and multiple conspiracies involving a common defendant is one without a difference." Dickson v. Microsoft Corp., 309 F.3d 193, 210 (4th Cir. 2002).

[13] Section 1 states, "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C.A. § 1.

[14] "Once a plaintiff establishes that a conspiracy occurred, whether it violates § 1 is determined by the application of either the per se rule or the rule of reason." Golden Bridge, 547 F.3d at 271 (citing Spectators' Commc'n Network, Inc. v. Colonial Country Club, 253 F.3d 215, 222-23 (5th Cir. 2001)). Should "the court determine[] that the defendant's conduct 'would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output,' the restraint is per se illegal and no further inquiry occurs." Golden Bridge, 547 F.3d at 271 (citing Leegin Creative Leather Prods. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 886, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 (2007)). But "if the conduct is not deemed per se unreasonable, the plaintiff will also have to prove that the conduct unreasonably restrains trade in light of actual market forces under the rule of reason." Golden Bridge, 547 F.3d at 271 (citing Leegin, 551 U.S. at 886). Most cases will require analysis under the rule of reason. See N. Tex. Specialty Physicians v. F.T.C., 528 F.3d 346, 360 (5th Cir. 2008) (noting that the Supreme Court "has analyzed most restraints under the so-called rule of reason" (footnote omitted) (internal quotation marks omitted)).

American does not allege that the defendants' activities are per se illegal under section 1. Moreover, American's complaint pleads only vertical agreements, which are analyzed under the rule of reason. See Leegin Creative Leather Prods., Inc. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 907, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 (2007).

Turning to the first element, Travelport and Orbitz contend, as they did with American's section 2 conspiracy-to-monopolize claims, that American has not adequately alleged the existence of a conspiracy. As the Court previously noted, American has sufficiently pleaded a conspiracy between Orbitz and Travelport in the form of the Orbitz-Travelport compensation agreement, but has not sufficiently pleaded Orbitz's involvement in any broader conspiracy beyond its agreement with Travelport.

With regard to element two, Sabre contends, as it did before, that its contracts with travel agents and airlines are not anticompetitive and thus do not unreasonably restrain trade. But as the Court previously concluded, it is not prepared to say that Sabre's alleged conduct is not anti-competitive as a matter of law.[15] In addition, Sabre, Travelport, and Orbitz all contend that American has not alleged an unreasonable restraint on trade because it has not stated that their allegedly anticompetitive agreements and practices foreclosed a substantial share of the relevant market and submarkets.[16] Collectively, the defendants argue that American must allege some percentage of foreclosure [*35] or at least identify the specific agreements that allegedly restrain trade.

The Court agrees. First, with regard to Sabre, because a single defendant cannot unilaterally violate section 1, American must allege that a particular conspiracy involving Sabre and at least one other entity forecloses a substantial share of the market. See Tampa Elec. Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 328, 81 S. Ct. 623, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1961) ("[T]he competition foreclosed by the contract must be found to constitute a substantial share of the relevant market."); Metro Ford Truck Sales, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 145 F.3d 320, (5th Cir. 1998) ("Independent action is not proscribed. Even where a single firm's restraints directly affect prices and have the same economic effect as concerted action might have, there can be no liability under § 1 in the absence of a combination or agreement. Thus, the distinction between independent action and joint action is fundamental in antitrust jurisprudence, and a claim will not exist in the absence of the latter." (footnotes omitted) (internal quotation marks omitted)).

Although American's complaint describes the various types of agreements that Sabre allegedly enters into with its travel-agent subscribers,[17] American does not identify any particular agreement that it is challenging [*36] under [15] Sabre also contends that American cannot challenge its own contracts because American is equally responsible for any antitrust violation that occurs as a result of its contracts. In Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. International Parts Corporation, 392 U.S. 134, 140, 88 S. Ct. 1981, 20 L. Ed. 2d 982 (1968), overruled on other grounds by Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 777, the Supreme Court held that the doctrine of in pari delicto is not a defense to an antitrust action. The Court, however, left open the question of whether a plaintiff could be barred from recovering against a defendant on the basis of the plaintiff's "truly complete involvement and participation in a monopolistic scheme." Perma, 392 U.S. at 140.

The first amended complaint, which the Court must take as true, does not paint the picture of American as a coparticipant in the alleged industry-wide conspiracy. Thus, for purposes of this motion, American lacks any "truly complete involvement [or] participation in a monopolistic scheme," and Sabre cannot avail itself of the defense of in pari delicto. Id. The implication of American's lack of involvement in a Sabre-related conspiracy, however, is that American cannot rely on its own contracts with Sabre to establish a section 1 violation because Sabre cannot be unilaterally liable under section 1. See Metro Ford, 145 F.3d at 325 ("Independent action is not proscribed [by section 1].").

[16] As it did with its section 2 conspiracy-to-monopolize claims, American contends that, for purposes of its section 1 claims, the Court should aggregate the effects of Travelport's agreements with Orbitz and the effects of Travelport's agreements with other travel-agent subscribers. As previously noted, this argument fails because American has not adequately pleaded a conspiracy among Travelport, Orbitz, and its other travel-agent subscribers and because the effects of each alleged vertical agreement between Travelport and each of its subscribers must be considered individually, not in the aggregate. See supra note 12.

[17] For example, American alleges that "[b]oth Sabre and Travelport enter into long term contracts with travel agents, typically three years but sometimes longer. Most of these contracts include some type of provision that either requires or provides financial incentives for the travel agents to use one GDS exclusively, or nearly exclusively." (Am. Compl. ¶ 63.) In addition, elsewhere American alleges that "[s]ome agreements between the GDSs and their subscribers contain an express provision that requires the travel agent to use one GDS exclusively, either for all its bookings or for bookings at particular locations or for particular corporate customers." (Id. ¶ 65.)

section 1. Nor does it identify the specific travel agents involved with Sabre or what types of agreements the travel agents have entered into. Without information of this nature, the Court cannot assess whether a substantial share of the market has been foreclosed.[18]

The Court, after all, cannot conclude that a substantial share of the Market or Sabre submarket has been foreclosed simply by considering the level of foreclosure that would result from a broad conspiracy involving Sabre and all its travel agents. American has not alleged any relationships among Sabre's travel agents, aside from conclusory allegations such as this one: "Sabre, Travelport, Orbitz, and other industry participants have, in fact, stood 'shoulder to shoulder' in punishing American for promoting the use of technology that could disrupt their monopolistic distribution system." (Am. Compl. ¶ 88.) Instead, American has essentially pleaded several discrete conspiracies, each of which involves Sabre and an unnamed travel agent. And without identifying the specific travel agents involved, or at least providing some information about the travel agents' agreements with Sabre, American cannot successfully aver that a substantial [*37] share of the market has been foreclosed with each conspiracy.[19]

With regard to the Orbitz-Travelport conspiracy, the Court concludes that just as American failed to plead facts indicating whether the conspiracy affected a substantial amount of commerce, it likewise has failed to allege facts indicating that a substantial share of the market has been foreclosed. See Stitt Spark Plug Co. v. Champion Spark Plug Co., 840 F.2d 1253 (5th Cir. 1988) ("[Plaintiff] did not prove the extent of its foreclosure from the replacement market; [Plaintiff] offered no comparison between the number of distribution outlets available and the number of those foreclosed. Without more, no reasonable jury could have concluded that [Defendant]'s efforts foreclosed a 'substantial share of the relevant market.'" (citing Tampa, 365 U.S. at 328-29)); see also Apani, 300 F.3d at 625 (To show exclusive dealing, "a plaintiff must show that the competition foreclosed by the arrangement constitutes a substantial share of the relevant market. That is, the opportunities for other traders to enter into or remain in that market must be significantly limited." (citations omitted) (internal quotation marks omitted)). And, once again, considering that it is alleged that online travel agencies only account for 10-15% of American's revenues, [*38] it is reasonable to infer that whatever share of the market that the Orbitz-Travelport conspiracy is alleged to foreclose is insubstantial.

E. Analysis American's State-Law Claims

Sabre and Travelport contend that American's claims for tortious interference with existing and prospective contractual relationships are preempted by the Airline Deregulation Act ("ADA"), 49 U.S.C. § 41713(b)(1).[20] The

---

[18] To illustrate, consider a scenario in which "Travel Agency A" has a market share of 3% and "Travel Agency B" has a market share of 45%. A conspiracy involving Sabre and Travel Agency A would not foreclose a substantial share of the market, whereas a conspiracy between Sabre and Travel Agency B likely would.

[19] The Court notes that American's failure to identify Sabre's coconspirators and to point to a specific agreement involving Sabre not only means that American has failed to plead foreclosure of a substantial share of the market (element two), it also means that American has failed to adequately allege a conspiracy involving Sabre in the first place (element one). The Court did not address this in its discussion of element one (i.e., the existence of a conspiracy), however, because Sabre did not raise it. Morever, in evaluating whether substantial foreclosure has occurred, the Court cannot aggregate the effects of Sabre's agreements with its travel agents for the reasons set forth in footnote 12. See supra note 12.

[20] To state a claim "for tortious interference with an existing contract, a plaintiff must demonstrate '(1) the existence of a contract subject to interference, (2) the act of interference was willful and intentional, (3) such intentional act was a proximate cause of plaintiff's damage and (4) actual damage or loss occurred.'" Stewart, 200 F.3d at 316 (quoting Johnson v. Hosp. Corp. of Am., 95 F.3d 383, 394 (5th Cir. 1996)). Similarly, to state a claim for tortious interference with prospective contract or business relationships, a plaintiff must allege facts showing:

> (1) a reasonable probability that the parties would have entered into a contractual relationship, (2) an intentional and malicious act by the defendant that prevented the relationship from [*39] occurring, with the purpose of harming the plaintiff, (3) the defendant lacked privilege or justification to do the act, and (4) actual harm or damage resulted from the defendant's interference.

ADA provides that, with limited exceptions, a state "may not enact or enforce a law, regulation, or other provision having the force and effect of law related to a price, route, or service of an air carrier that may provide air transportation." 49 U.S.C.A. § 41713(b)(1). The Supreme Court has explained that "[t]he scope of ADA preemption is a question of statutory intent." Lyn-Lea Travel Corp. v. American Airlines, Inc., 283 F.3d 282, 286 (5th Cir. 2002) (citing Morales v. Trans World Airlines, Inc., 504 U.S. 374, 383, 112 S. Ct. 2031, 119 L. Ed. 2d 157 (1992)). The Supreme Court has, likewise, "held that the phrase 'relating to rates, routes, or services' in the ADA [is] 'deliberately expansive' and preempt[s] any 'state enforcement action having a connection with or reference to airline rates, routes, or services.'" Id. (quoting Morales, 504 U.S. at 384).

However, "the ADA's preemption clause does not shelter airlines [or GDSes] from suits alleging no violation of state-imposed obligations, but seeking recovery solely for the airline's alleged breach of its own, self-imposed undertakings." Id. at 287 (quoting Am. Airlines v. Wolens, 513 U.S. 219, 228, 115 S. Ct. 817, 130 L. Ed. 2d 715 (1995)). Thus, "[t]he ADA does not preempt 'state-law-based court adjudication of routine breach-of-contract claims' so long as there is 'no enlargement or enhancement of the contract based on state laws or policies external to the agreement.'" Id. (quoting Wolens, 513 U.S. at 228). Nor is the ADA concerned with "displacing state tort law." Id. (quoting Hodges v. Delta Airlines, Inc., 44 F.3d 334, 340 (5th Cir. 1995) (en banc)).

In the Court's view, the ADA preempts American's claims for tortious interference with existing and prospective contractual relationships. First, American's claims "relate to" the defendants' rates and services and have "a significant relationship to the economic aspects of the airline industry." Id. Second, American is seeking to enforce state-created standards, not "self-assumed contractual obligations." Id. at 289.

Like [*40] the plaintiff in Lyn-Lea Travel Corporation v. American Airlines, Inc., 283 F.3d 282 (5th Cir. 2002), American "is seeking the application of Texas common law in a way that would regulate [Sabre's and Travelport]'s pricing policies [i.e., booking fees], commission structure [i.e., sharing booking fees with travel agents], and reservation practices [i.e., biasing American's flights in their displays]." Id. at 287 (footnote omitted). In Lyn-Lea, the plaintiff had asserted a claim for tortious interference with business relationships, alleging that the defendant "intentionally interfered with its business relationships with four customers and an employee, luring the customers away with discounted fares." Id. The Fifth Circuit determined that the "business relations claim [was] plainly preempted because it involve[d] [the defendant]'s prices and services to customers." Id. at 287-88. Similarly, the Court holds that American's state-law claims are preempted.

F. Disposition of the Motions to Dismiss

Based on the foregoing, the Court GRANTS Orbitz's motion to dismiss, GRANTS in part and DENIES in part Travelport's motion to dismiss, and GRANTS in part and DENIES in part Sabre's motion to dismiss. The following claims, as pleaded in American's first amended complaint, should be dismissed:

> (1) all [*41] claims against Orbitz;
> (2) American's claims against Travelport for monopolization of the Market, conspiracy to monopolize in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act, unreasonably restraining competition in violation of section 1 of that act, and tortious interference with existing and prospective contractual relationships; and
> (3) American's claims against Sabre for unreasonably restraining competition in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act and tortious interference with existing contractual relationships.

To be clear, this leaves the following claims: (1) monopolization by Travelport in the Travelport submarket, (2) monopolization by Sabre in the Sabre submarket, and (3) monopolization by Sabre in the Market.

II. American's Motion for Leave to Amend

Id. (quoting Exxon Corp. v. Allsup, 808 S.W.2d 648, 659 (Tex. App.--Corpus Christi 1991, writ denied)) (internal quotation marks omitted).

After the defendants' motions to dismiss American's amended complaint became ripe for review, and subsequent to the Court's consideration of those motions, American filed its motion for leave to file a second amended complaint. In its proposed second amended complaint, American's objectives appear to be four-fold. First, American seeks to add new allegations in support of its existing claims, based on recently-discovered information. Second, American seeks to [*42] add three new claims: (1) a section 1 claim against Sabre and Travelport for entering into an alleged anticompetitive agreement together; (2) another section 1 claim against Sabre, Travelport, and "numerous travel agencies" based on an alleged group boycott; and (3) a section 1 claim against Orbitz and Travelport for allegedly entering into an agreement to allocate customers. Third, American seeks to include Sabre in its section 2 conspiracy claim, which was previously asserted against only Travelport and Orbitz. Fourth, and finally, American seeks to drop its state-law tortious-interference claims.

Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15(a)(2), a "court should freely give leave when justice so requires." Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a)(2). There are five factors the Court must consider when determining "whether to grant a party leave to amend a complaint: (1) undue delay, (2) bad faith or dilatory motive, (3) repeated failure to cure deficiencies by previous amendments, (4) undue prejudice to the opposing party, and (5) futility of the amendment." Smith v. EMC Corp., 393 F.3d 590, 595 (5th Cir. 2004) (citing Rosenzweig v. Azurix Corp., 332 F.3d 854, 864 (5th Cir. 2003)).

As an initial matter, the Court notes that American's fourth objective--dropping its state-law tortious-interference claims--is a moot point, given the Court's decision to dismiss those claims. Additionally, with regard to American's second [*43] objective, the Court is persuaded that American's three new claims should be allowed. In so allowing, the Court is not concluding that these claims are plausible and sufficient to survive a Rule 12(b)(6) challenge. The Court is merely concluding that these claims are not patently futile. Along these same lines, the Court is satisfied that American's proposed change to its section 2 monopolization claim--adding Sabre--is permissible in light of Rule 15. Likewise, the Court is persuaded that American should be allowed to include its newly-discovered allegations in support of its existing claims, as there does not appear to have been bad faith or undue delay on American's part.

There is one claim in the proposed second amended complaint, however, that, in the Court's view, should not be allowed to go forward: American's claim that Sabre's and Travelport's agreements with participating airlines and travel-agent subscribers unreasonably restrain competition in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act. Allowing amendment of this claim, which is designated as count four in both American's first amended complaint and its proposed second amended complaint, would prove futile, as American does not remedy the deficiencies noted in [*44] Part I.D. of this order in its proposed second amended complaint.

Therefore, the Court GRANTS in part and DENIES in part American's motion for leave to amend. American is thus GRANTED leave to file its proposed second amended complaint no later than December 5, 2011, except that its fourth claim for relief should be stricken.

III. Conclusion

In light of the foregoing, American's state-law tortious-interference claims, as well as American's claim that Sabre's and Travelport's agreements with participating airlines and travel-agent subscribers unreasonably restrain trade in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, are hereby DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.

ORDER AND FINAL JUDGMENT APPROVING DIRECT PURCHASER CLASS SETTLEMENT AND AWARDING ATTORNEYS' FEES, REIMBURSEMENT OF COSTS, AND CLASS REPRESENTATIVE AWARDS

STENGEL, J.

Plaintiffs SAJ Distributors, Inc. and Stephen L. LaFrance Holdings, Inc. (together, "SAJ") and Meijer, Inc. and Meijer Distribution, Inc. (together, "Meijer") (collectively, "Plaintiffs") executed a Settlement Agreement, dated August 3, 2011, with Defendant SmithKline Beecham Corporation d/b/a GlaxoSmithKline, including GlaxoSmithKline plc, ("GSK") to fully resolve this direct purchaser class action antitrust case.

On August 31, 2011, this Court granted preliminary approval of the parties' proposed settlement ("Preliminary Approval Order") (Doc. 407). The Preliminary Approval Order authorized Plaintiffs to disseminate to members of the direct purchaser class notice of the settlement, the fairness hearing, and related matters. Notice was provided to the class in accordance with the Preliminary Approval [*4] Order, and the Court held a final fairness hearing on November 21, 2011 to further consider the proposed settlement, as well as Class Counsel's requests for an award of attorneys' fees, reimbursement of expenses advanced on behalf of the class, and awards to the two named Plaintiffs for their efforts in representing the class.

AND NOW, this 21st day of November, 2011, having considered Plaintiffs' Motion for Final Approval of Direct Purchaser Class Settlement; Class Counsel's Motion for Attorneys' Fees, Reimbursement of Expenses, and Class Representative Awards; oral argument presented at the fairness hearing; and the complete record in this matter, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED, ADJUDGED, AND DECREED as follows:

The Class

1. This case was previously certified as a class action, by Memorandum and Order of May 2, 2008 (Doc. 258), on behalf of the following class: "all persons or entities in the United States, excluding governmental entities, that purchased the 100mg or 150mg dosage of Wellbutrin SR directly from GSK during the period from January 24, 2002 to June 30, 2006." As set forth in the Preliminary Approval Order (at ¶ 2), notice of class certification was provided to class members in 2008, [*5] in full compliance with the requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 and due process. No class member requested exclusion from the class by the September 12, 2008 deadline.

Jurisdiction

2. This Court has jurisdiction over the claims of Plaintiffs, the class, and GSK.

3. The Preliminary Approval Order directed the substance, form, and manner by which the Plaintiffs would provide the class with notice of the proposed settlement with GSK; the date, time, and location of the fairness hearing; and related matters, such as how class members could object to the settlement or otherwise be heard. The notice program included individual notice to class members, as well as publication (twice) of a summary notice in The Pink Sheet and the establishment of a website (WellbutrinDirectPurchserSettlement.com), through which notice and other information could be obtained. Proof that the mailing, publication, and website conformed with the Preliminary Approval Order has been filed with the Court. The notice constituted the most effective and best notice practicable under the circumstances and was due and sufficient notice for all other purposes to all potential class members entitled to receive notice.

Approval of the Settlement [*6] and Plan of Allocation

4. The parties' settlement resulted from an extensive investigation of the facts, complete discovery, expert analysis and reports, motion practice, and development of the case for trial. It was reached only after arm's-length negotiations, which were undertaken in good faith by counsel for the parties.

5. The settlement provides a recovery from GSK of $49 million dollars in cash and up to $500,000 in costs of notice to the class and administration of the settlement.

6. The Court has evaluated the proposed settlement under Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, as well as relevant Third Circuit jurisprudence, including the factors set forth in Girsh v. Jepson, 521 F.2d 153, 157 (3d Cir. 1975) and the additional factors, where relevant, identified in In re Prudential Ins. Co. Am. Sales Practice Litig. Agent Actions, 148 F.3d 283, 323 (3d Cir. 1998), finding as follows:

a. The complexity, expense, and likely duration of the litigation. This case was no exception to the oft-recognized conclusion that antitrust cases are among the most complex to litigate. See Bradburn Parent Teacher Store, Inc. v. 3M (Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co.), 513 F. Supp. 2d 322, 338-39 (E.D. Pa. 2007); *Stop & Shop Supermarket Co. v. SmithKline Beecham Corp., Civ. A. 03-4578, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9705, 2005 WL 1213926, at 11 (E.D. Pa. May 19, 2005); In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., 296 F. Supp. 2d 568, 577 (E.D. Pa. 2003). Although the case was nearing trial at the time of settlement, after roughly six-and-a-half years of litigation (preceded by pre-suit investigation), the settlement nonetheless saved substantial resources. These savings included the time and expense [*7] of further oral argument on the several pretrial motions that were still pending, but had not yet been argued, at the time of settlement; the Court's consideration and resolution of those motions, as well as others that had been argued, but not yet decided; final preparations for trial; a trial that could have lasted several weeks; post-trial motions; and, potentially, appeals. Collectively, these matters would have required substantial additional time and expense for the Court, the parties, and counsel, the savings of which supports final approval of this settlement. See In re Warfarin Sodium Antitrust Litig., 391 F.3d 516, 536 (3d Cir. 2004); *Meijer, Inc. v. 3M, Civ. A. 04-5871, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 56744, 2006 WL 2382718, at 13 (E.D. Pa. Aug. 14, 2006).

b. The reaction of the class to the settlement. There were no objections to the settlement filed by any class member. The absence of any objections despite ample notice to class members providing the opportunity to object is "particularly telling," Warfarin, 391 F.3d at 536, and supports approval of the settlement. In re Cendant Corp. Litig., 264 F.3d 201, 235 (3d Cir. 2001). This is particularly true here, where the class members are sophisticated businesses. In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., 321 F. Supp. 2d 619, 629 (E.D. Pa. 2004). Moreover, the three class members whose claims represent roughly 78% of the recovery obtained for the class have, after being apprised of the facts, circumstances, legal hurdles, and other risks involved in the case, [*8] advised the Court that they support the settlement as fair and adequate.

c. The stage of the proceedings and the amount of discovery completed. Settlements reached after discovery "are more likely to reflect the true value of the claim and be fair." Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Bolger, 2 F.3d 1304, 1314 (3d Cir.1993). See also Cullen v. Whitman Med. Corp., 197 F.R.D. 136, 144-45 (E.D. Pa. 2000); Linerboard, 321 F. Supp. 2d at 630. This case was well past discovery and virtually ready for trial at the time of settlement. The settlement here was the process of informed, arm's-length negotiations, see Prudential, 148 F.3d at 319, and settled much later in the litigation process than the stages at which some settlements have been approved. See, e.g., Cendant, 264 F.3d at 236 (settlement approved even though the case was only in the early stages of discovery). This factor also supports final approval.

d. The risks of establishing liability. Plaintiffs in this case faced real risks in establishing, by clear and convincing evidence, that GSK's patent infringement lawsuits against its competitors in the market for Wellbutrin SR constituted sham litigation under the standard of Prof'l Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1993) ("PRE"). This was Plaintiffs' only remaining liability theory after this Court granted summary judgment to GSK on Plaintiffs' allegation that GSK had defrauded the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office within the meaning of Walker Process Equip., Inc. v. Food Mach. & Chem. Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 86 S. Ct. 347, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1965). The PRE standard [*9] would have required Plaintiffs to establish that GSK's lawsuits were both objectively baseless in that no reasonable litigant in GSK's position could have expected to succeed on the merits, as well as that GSK filed its lawsuits with the intent to interfere with its competition. See PRE, 508 U.S. at 60-61. Compounding this was the fact that assessing GSK's patent infringement lawsuits involved consideration of difficult patent law theories, aspects of which were being parsed and refined by the United States Supreme Court and United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit while GSK was pursuing those lawsuits. Plaintiffs also faced significant evidentiary challenges related to GSK's withholding in discovery many documents under claims of attorney-client privilege and/or work product protection. Beyond establishing liability for purposes of PRE, Plaintiffs would also have needed to establish each of the standard elements of antitrust liability, such as monopoly power, causation, and antitrust injury. Given the many liability issues at stake, there was also the risk that, even if Plaintiffs had prevailed in establishing liability, GSK might ultimately have succeeded on appeal. These substantial liability [*10] risks weigh in favor of approving this settlement. Warfarin, 391 F.3d at 537; Prudential, 148 F.3d at 319; In re Corel Corp. Inc. Sec. Litig., 293 F. Supp. 2d 484, 490 (E.D. Pa. 2003).

e. The risks of establishing damages. At the time of settlement, GSK's Daubert motion seeking to exclude the testimony of Plaintiffs' expert economist remained to be decided and, to the extent it would not have been granted, GSK had its own expert economist prepared to oppose Plaintiffs' economic theories at trial. The existence of competing expert opinions on complex damages issues weighs in favor of settlement. Cendant, 264 F.3d at 239; Corel Corp., 293 F. Supp. 2d at 492.

f. The risks of maintaining the class action through the trial. At the time of settlement, GSK had not moved to decertify the class and the Court is not aware of any manageability problems faced by the class. This factor is thus neutral in this case. See Cendant, 264 F.3d at 239; Linerboard, 321 F. Supp. 2d at 631.

g. The ability of the defendants to withstand a greater judgment. This is not a case in which a lower settlement was reached due to the inability of the defendant to pay more. See Reibstein v. Rite Aid Corp., 761 F. Supp. 2d 241, 254 (E.D. Pa. 2011); Chakejian v. Equifax Info. Services, LLC, 275 F.R.D. 201, 214 (E.D. Pa. 2011). The theoretical ability of a defendant to pay more is not relevant when divorced from context and considerations of whether a settlement is fair in light of the legal issues and circumstances involved. See Warfarin, 391 F.3d at 538. This case involved many difficult legal issues, presented substantial risks [*11] that Plaintiffs would either not prevail or would be required to spend substantial additional time and expenses pursuing the case to its ultimate end, and the settlement negotiations, as with the case generally, were hard-fought by GSK. The amount that Plaintiffs obtained in settlement is an excellent benefit on its face, and an even better result when these considerations are taken into account. The theoretical ability of GSK to pay more, considered absent this context, is not relevant to determining the reasonableness of this settlement. See id.

h. The range of reasonableness of the settlement fund in light of the best possible recovery and all the attendant risks of litigation. These two factors assess "whether the settlement represents a good value for a weak case or a poor value for a strong case." Warfarin, 391 F.3d at 538. Since it is a compromise, a settlement need not approach the maximum possible recovery to be found reasonable. Prudential, 148 F.3d at 316-17. A settlement may be reasonable even though it represents only a fraction of the potential recovery. Cullen, 197 F.R.D. at 144; Linerboard, 321 F. Supp. 2d at 632; Fisher Bros. v. Phelps Dodge Indus., Inc., 604 F. Supp. 446, 451 (E.D. Pa. 1985). Based on the damages estimated by Plaintiffs' expert economist, the settlement in this case represents a recovery of between 5.8% and 10.7% of Plaintiffs' estimated, [*12] non-trebled damages, which is the measure courts use in assessing antitrust settlements. See Fisher Bros., 604 F. Supp. at 451. This amount is well within the range of recovery demonstrated by court-approved settlements in other antitrust litigation. See, e.g., Linerboard, 296 F. Supp. 2d at 581 (identifying antitrust settlements ranging from 5.35% to 28% of estimated damages); Stop & Shop, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9705, 2005 WL 1213926, at *9 (approving direct purchaser antitrust settlement representing approximately 11.4% of estimated damages). This factor thus also supports final approval.

i. Factors that bear on the maturity of the underlying substantive issues. This case was settled after roughly six-and-a-half years of litigation (which followed an extensive pre-suit investigation), well after the completion of extensive discovery, just before trial, and only after hard-fought settlement negotiations. That the underlying substantive issues were so well-developed further supports approval of this settlement. See Chakejian, 275 F.R.D. 201, 2011 WL 2411109, at *12.

j. The existence and probable outcome of claims by other classes and subclasses. Because there were no other direct purchaser actions outside this case and no direct purchaser plaintiffs elected to opt out of the class, there are no comparable claims being pursued by other direct purchaser classes or [*13] subclasses. This factor is thus not pertinent.

k. Results achieved by settlement for individual class members versus the results achieved—or likely to be achieved—for other claimants. For the reasons above, there are no other results to be compared against those of the class members. (As noted below, however, the plan of allocation ensures class members equitable claims payments vis-à-vis one another.)

l. Whether class or subclass members are accorded the right to opt out of the settlement. As noted above, class members were given the opportunity to opt out of the class in 2008, when they were notified that the class had been certified. After ample opportunity, no class member requested exclusion from the class by the September 12, 2008 opt-out deadline. See id.

m. Whether any provisions for attorneys' fees are reasonable. The provisions for attorneys' fees are reasonable, as described in greater detail below.

n. Whether the procedure for processing individual claims under the settlement is fair and reasonable. Reasonable notice of the settlement has been provided, and class members have until the postmark deadline of December 31, 2011 to submit claims. The Court previously authorized [*14] Class Action Administration, Inc. ("CAA"), which is experienced in administering class action settlements, to receive and process class members' claims, with the supervision of Class Counsel. After all timely claims have been processed, claims payments will be distributed to class members from the net settlement fund (i.e., the amount remaining after reduction for payment of taxes, attorneys' fees, reimbursement of expenses, and awards to the named Plaintiffs for their efforts in representing the class) on a pro rata basis, according to class members' purchases of Wellbutrin SR during the class period. This plan of allocation does not grant preferential treatment to any class member and is both fair and reasonable. This factor thus also supports approval of this settlement.

7. Upon consideration of the above factors and the record in this case, the Settlement Agreement and each of its terms, as well as the plan of allocation, are finally approved as fair, reasonable, and adequate within the meaning of Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, and the parties are directed to consummate the settlement according to its terms.

Attorneys' Fees

8. Class Counsel seek attorneys' fees of one-third of the gross settlement fund (or 33 [*15] 1/3 % of the $49 million settlement fund).

9. The percentage-of-the-fund method of awarding attorneys' fees is the appropriate method to be used in this common fund case. In re AT & T Corp., 455 F.3d 160, 164 (3d Cir. 2006).

10. The Court has considered Class Counsel's request for attorneys' fees under the factors identified in Gunter v. Ridgewood Energy Corp., 223 F.3d 190, 195 n.1 (3d Cir. 2000) and Prudential, 148 F.3d at 338-40, each of which supports the reasonableness of Class Counsel's request:

a. Complexity and duration of the litigation. As noted above, this class action—like most antitrust cases, *see Bradburn Parent Teacher Store, Inc., 513 F. Supp. 2d at 338-39—*was especially complex, involving challenging issues of patent and antitrust law, difficult liability theories, and demanding evidentiary issues. This case was also hard-fought, lasting nearly seven years from the time the complaint was filed until the final approval hearing (in addition to an extensive pre-suit investigation). This factor weighs in favor of approving Class Counsel's attorneys' fees request. See In re Am. Investors Life Ins. Co. Annuity Mktg. & Sales Practices Litig., 263 F.R.D. 226, 243 (E.D. Pa. 2009); Boone v. City of Philadelphia, 668 F. Supp. 2d 693, 714 (E.D. Pa. 2009); Bradburn Parent Teacher Store, 513 F. Supp. 2d at 339; Corel Corp., 293 F. Supp. 2d at 496.

b. The size of the fund and the number of people benefited. This $49 million cash settlement (plus accrued interest, and less attorneys' fees, expenses to the extent not covered by the $500,000 that GSK has agreed to pay towards the costs of administering the settlement, and awards to the named Plaintiffs) is an [*16] excellent benefit to the class. Class members are assured recovery without the expense and burden involved in duplicative and expensive individual trials, and, as discussed above, the recovery falls within a reasonable range in comparison to the potential damages.

c. The presence or absence of objections to terms or fees. The absence of any objections despite ample notice to class members describing the opportunity to object weighs in favor of granting the fee request, *see In re Sterling Fin. Corp. Sec. Class Action, MDL 1879, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 83224, 2009 WL 2914363, at 2 (E.D. Pa. Sept. 10, 2009), particularly given the sophisticated nature of the absent class members. See Bradburn Parent Teacher Store, 513 F. Supp. 2d at 338. Indeed, the three class members whose claims represent roughly 78% of the recovery obtained for the class have advised the Court that they support not only the settlement (as noted above), but also Class Counsel's request for attorneys' fees, reimbursement of litigation expenses, and awards to the named Plaintiffs for their work on behalf of the class.

d. The skill and efficiency of counsel. Class Counsel are experienced practitioners in the highly specialized area of pharmaceutical antitrust class action cases. This experience and the results obtained for the class reflect Class Counsel's skill and efficiency. *In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., MDL 1261, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10532, 2004 WL 1221350, at 5 (E.D. Pa. June 2, 2004). Class Counsel also faced [*17] formidable opposition from the skilled counsel opposing this litigation. All of these facts weigh in favor of granting Class Counsel's request for attorneys' fees. See Am. Investors, 263 F.R.D. at 244; Bradburn Parent Teacher Store, 513 F. Supp. 2d at 338; Corel Corp., 293 F. Supp. 2d at 496.

e. The risk of nonpayment. Class Counsel faced numerous risks in preparing and litigating this case, including the risks associated with the motion to dismiss, class certification, summary judgment, and—had the case continued—ultimately proving liability and damages at trial and potentially surviving any appeals. Underlying all of these risks was the enormous one of handling this case for its entire duration on a contingent basis, doing everything necessary to honor Class Counsel's commitment and obligations to the class. See In re Ikon Office Solutions, Inc. Sec. Litig., 194 F.R.D. 166, 194 (E.D. Pa. 2000); Serrano v. Sterling Testing Sys., Inc., 711 F. Supp. 2d 402, 423 (E.D. Pa. 2010). The substantial risk of nonpayment that Class Counsel faced throughout this litigation strongly supports their fee request. See Am. Investors, 263 F.R.D. at 244; Bradburn Parent Teacher Store, 513 F. Supp. 2d at 339; *In re Auto. Refinishing Paint Antitrust Litig., MDL No. 1426, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 569, 2008 WL 63269, at 5 (E.D. Pa. Jan. 3, 2008).

f. The amount of time devoted to the litigation. Class Counsel invested more than 41,000 hours, during the course of nearly seven years, preparing, litigating, and negotiating the settlement of this case, and will continue to commit time to this litigation in connection with claims administration and, potentially, handling any appeals. This substantial time [*18] commitment, made with no guarantee of recovery, likewise supports approval of Class Counsel's fee request. See Boone, 668 F. Supp. 2d at 714; Bradburn Parent Teacher Store, 513 F. Supp. 2d at 339; Nichols v. SmithKline Beecham Corp., Civ. A. 00-6222, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7061, 2005 WL 950616, at *22 (E.D. Pa. Apr. 22, 2005).

g. The consistency with fee awards in comparable cases. Class Counsel's requested fee of one-third of the gross settlement fund falls just slightly above the average attorneys' fees percentage identified in one study of settlements ranging from $1 to $50 million, and directly on the median percentage identified in that same study. See Boone, 668 F. Supp. 2d at 714 (citing In re Rite Aid Corp. Sec. Litig., 146 F.Supp.2d 706, 735 (E.D. Pa. 2001)). It is within the range of awards that the Third Circuit has recognized as typical, see In re Rite Aid Corp. Sec. Litig., 396 F.3d 294, 303 (3d Cir. 2005), as well as the normal range of common fund recoveries identified by a leading treatise. See 4 Herbert B. Newberg & Alba Conte, Newberg on Class Actions § 14:6 (4th ed. 2006). It is also well within the range of percentage awards approved in recent antitrust actions within the Third Circuit. See, e.g., In re Methyl Methacrylate (MMA) Antitrust Litig., 06-MD-1768, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 133759, 2009 WL 3150399, at *2 (E.D. Pa. Sept. 23, 2009); Auto. Refinishing Paint, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 569, 2008 WL 63269, at *3, 6; Bradburn Parent Teacher Store, 513 F. Supp. 2d at 337-38, 341-42; Nichols, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7061, 2005 WL 950616, at *20, 24; In re Remeron Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., Civ. 03-0085 FSH, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27013, 2005 WL 3008808, at *12, 17 (D.N.J. Nov. 9, 2005). In addition, as demonstrated by several unreported decisions appended to Class Counsel's motion, numerous other courts have awarded fees of one-third of the gross settlement [*19] fund in similar pharmaceutical antitrust class actions. See Meijer, Inc. v. Abbott Labs., No C. 07-5985 CW (N.D. Cal. Aug. 11, 2011); In re Nifedipine Antitrust Litig., No. 03-mc-223-RJL (D.D.C. Jan. 31, 2011); In re Oxycontin Antitrust Litig., 04-md-1603-SHS (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 25, 2011); In re Tricor Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., No. 05-340-SLR (D. Del. Apr. 23, 2009); Meijer, Inc. v. Barr Pharm., Inc., C.A. No. 05-2195 (D.D.C. Apr. 20, 2009); North Shore Hematology-Oncology Assoc., P.C. v. Bristol-Myers Squibb Co., No. 04-248-EGS (D.D.C. Nov. 30, 2004); In re Relafen Antitrust Litig., No. 01-12239-WHY at 7-8 (D. Mass. Apr. 9, 2004).

h. The value of benefits accruing to class members attributable to the efforts of class counsel, as opposed to the efforts of others. Class Counsel developed this case through their own investigative efforts, without the advantages of following a prior government investigation or lawsuit. This factor thus also supports Class Counsel's fee request. See AT & T Corp., 455 F.3d at 173.

i. The percentage fee that would have been privately negotiated. A one-third contingency fee is comparable, or perhaps even less than, the fee that Class Counsel could have been expected to negotiate on a private basis. See Bradburn Parent Teacher Store, 513 F. Supp. 2d at 340; Remeron Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27013, 2005 WL 3008808, at *16. Testimony [*20] to that is the largest three class members' support of Class Counsel's fee request. This factor therefore supports the reasonableness of Class Counsel's fee request.

j. Innovative settlement terms. Class Counsel have acknowledged that this settlement, while providing an excellent benefit to the class, does not contain any especially innovative settlement terms, and this factor thus neither supports nor detracts from Class Counsel's fee request. See Bradburn Parent Teacher Store, 513 F. Supp. 2d at 340.

11. Class Counsel's request for attorneys' fees of one-third of the gross settlement fund (33 1/3% of the $49 million settlement fund, or $16,333,333) is hereby approved as reasonable under the factors set forth in Gunter and Prudential, as confirmed by a lodestar cross-check, see Rite Aid, 396 F.3d at 305-06, which demonstrates a lodestar (using Class Counsel's actual, current, reasonable hourly rates) that exceeds the requested fee. In general, the Third Circuit has observed that multipliers ranging from one to four are frequently awarded in common fund cases, Prudential, 148 F.3d at 334, and substantial multipliers have frequently been awarded in other cases. See, e.g., In re Cendant Corp. PRIDES Litig., 243 F.3d 722, 741-42 (3d Cir. 2001) (remanding the case and suggesting that a lodestar multiplier of 3 would be appropriate, even though the Third Circuit [*21] found the case was lacking in legal and factual complexity, and—in this pre-Rite Aid case—the lodestar was calculated using the senior partner rate as the rate for all hours); Bradburn Parent Teacher Store, 513 F. Supp. 2d at 341 (approving a fee award resulting in a lodestar multiplier of 2.5 at counsel's then-current rates); *Nichols, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7061, 2005 WL 950616, at 24 (awarding fees as a percentage of the fund that translated to a 3.15 multiplier); Ikon Office Solutions, 194 F.R.D. at 195 (conducting a lodestar cross-check of the percentage fee award and finding a 2.7 multiplier, calculated at counsel's then-current rates, to be well within an appropriate range); *Meijer, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 56744, 2006 WL 2382718, at 19, 24 (approving a percentage fee award that translated to a 4.77 multiplier). A comparison with these other cases further demonstrates the requested fee award to be quite reasonable.

Reimbursement of Litigation Expenses

12. Class Counsel's request for reimbursement of $1.3 million in out-of-pocket expenses advanced on behalf of the class is approved. Attorneys who create a common fund for the benefit of a class are entitled to reimbursement from that fund of the reasonable litigation expenses that they advanced on behalf of the class. See Cendant Corp. PRIDES Litig., 243 F.3d at 732 n.12; Ikon Office Solutions, 194 F.R.D. at 192. The costs incurred (such as for experts, depositions, photocopying, computerized legal research, and travel) are reasonable, [*22] appropriate, and comparable to, or lower than, those awarded in other antitrust litigation that did not last nearly as long as this case did. *See, e.g., MMA, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 133759, 2009 WL 3150399, at 2 (awarding reimbursement of roughly $1.3 million in expenses incurred over roughly three years); *Auto. Refinishing Paint, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 569, 2008 WL 63269, at 6 (expenses of roughly $1.2 million incurred over approximately three-and-a-half years); *Remeron Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27013, 2005 WL 3008808, at 17 ($1.925 million in expenses incurred during roughly three years).

Awards to the Class Representative Plaintiffs

13. The requested awards of $25,000 each to the two named Plaintiffs, SAJ and Meijer, are approved in recognition of their efforts on behalf of the class, without which this settlement would not have occurred. Those efforts included assisting in the pre-filing investigation, reviewing draft complaints, collecting and producing documents, preparing for and giving depositions, and preparing to participate in what could have been a several-week trial. (These awards are separate from, and in addition to, any monies that SAJ and Meijer may receive from claims made against the settlement fund, according to the court-approved plan of allocation discussed above.) These types of awards are common in class action litigation, and particularly in cases [*23] in which a common fund has been created for the benefit of an entire class. Cullen, 197 F.R.D. at 145. Courts routinely grant awards to compensate class representatives for the services they provided and the risks they undertook in pursuing a case, placing the interests of the class above their own. Id. See also Bradburn Parent Teacher Store, 513 F. Supp. 2d at 342 ("It is particularly appropriate to compensate named representative plaintiffs with incentive awards when they have actively assisted plaintiffs' counsel in their prosecution of the litigation for the benefit of the class."); *Auto. Refinishing Paint, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 569, 2008 WL 63269, at 7 ("Incentive awards are typically awarded to class representatives for their often extensive involvement with a lawsuit and courts in this Circuit have traditionally granted requests for these awards."). The requested awards are well within the acceptable range awarded by courts within the Third Circuit in other recent direct purchaser antitrust litigation. See, e.g., Bradburn Parent Teacher Store, 513 F. Supp. 2d at 342 (approving award of $75,000 to the named plaintiff); *Auto. Refinishing Paint, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 569, 2008 WL 63269, at 7 (approving awards to four class representatives resulting in aggregate awards of $30,000 each); *Remeron Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27013, 2005 WL 3008808, at 18 ($60,000 to be divided between two named plaintiffs); *Linerboard, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10532, 2004 WL 1221350, at 18-19 ($25,000 each to five class representative plaintiffs). See also In re Cardizem CD Antitrust Litig., 218 F.R.D. 508, 535-36 (E.D. Mich. 2003) (awarding $75,000 each to the corporate [*24] class representatives); McCoy v. Health Net, Inc., 569 F. Supp. 2d 448, 479-80 (D.N.J. 2008) (ERISA action approving awards of $60,000 each to the named plaintiffs and citing cases approving named plaintiff awards ranging from $35,000 to $200,000 each).

Entry of Final Judgment Binding on the Class and Dismissal of the Case With Prejudice

14. As noted above, no class member timely and validly requested exclusion from the class. Each class member therefore is, and will forever remain, bound by this Order and Final Judgment.

15. This class action is dismissed with prejudice and in its entirety, on the merits, as to GSK. This dismissal shall not affect, in any way, Plaintiffs' or class members' rights to pursue any claims other than those released, as set forth in the Settlement Agreement.

16. Plaintiffs and all members of the class are permanently enjoined and barred from instituting, commencing, or prosecuting any action or other proceeding asserting any released claims, as set forth in the Settlement Agreement, against any released party, either directly, individually, representatively, derivatively, or in any other capacity, by whatever means, in any local, state, or federal court, or in any agency or other authority or arbitral or other forum wherever [*25] located.

17. Plaintiffs and all members of the class hereby remise, release, forever discharge, and covenant not to sue the released parties from and for the released claims, as set forth in the Settlement Agreement.

18. In no event shall GSK be obligated to pay anything in addition to (a) the $49 million settlement fund created pursuant to the Settlement Agreement, and (b) up to $500,000 towards the costs of notice and settlement administration, including without limitation, attorneys' fees, awards to the named Plaintiffs for their efforts on behalf of the class, notice or settlement administration costs exceeding $500,000, escrow costs, taxes, or any other cost or expense arising from or to be paid as part of the settlement.

19. This Order and Final Judgment does not settle or compromise any claims by Plaintiffs or the class against persons or entities other than the released parties, as set forth in the Settlement Agreement. All rights against any other person or entity are specifically reserved.

20. The settlement, this Order and Final Judgment, and/or any and all negotiations, documents, and discussions associated with it shall be without prejudice to the rights of any party, shall [*26] not be deemed or construed to be an admission or evidence of any kind, including without limitation of any violation of any statute or law or any liability or wrongdoing by GSK or an acknowledgement of defenses by Plaintiffs, or the truth of any of the claims or allegations contained in any pleading in this case or the standing of any party to assert claims against GSK or defenses against Plaintiffs, and evidence thereof shall not be discoverable or used directly or indirectly, by any party or any third party, in any way, whether in this class action or in any other action or proceeding of any kind whatsoever, civil, criminal or otherwise, before any court, tribunal, administrative agency, regulatory body or other similar entity, provided, however, that nothing contained herein shall preclude use of the Settlement Agreement or this Order and Final Judgment in any proceeding to enforce the Settlement Agreement.

21. Without affecting the finality of this Order and Final Judgment, this Court retains exclusive and continuing jurisdiction over the Settlement and the Settlement Agreement, including the Settlement Fund and the administration, consummation, and interpretation of the Settlement [*27] and Settlement Agreement.

22. The escrow account established by the parties is hereby approved by the Court. GSK has deposited or will deposit $49 million as the settlement fund into that escrow account pursuant to the Settlement Agreement, and that escrow fund, including any accrued interest, is approved as a Qualified Settlement Fund pursuant to Internal Revenue Code Section 468B and the Treasury Regulations promulgated thereunder.

23. Pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 54, the Court finds that there is no just reason for delay and hereby directs the entry of final judgment of dismissal forthwith as to GSK.

Opinion

DECISION and ORDER

HON. EILEEN A. RAKOWER:

Plaintiff NAR Apartments LLC ("NAR") is the owner of the 25-unit apartment building located at 517 East 13th Street in New York County (the "Building"). Plaintiff brings this action against defendant Patricia Ippolito ("Defendant"), a tenant in the Building, seeking a judgment declaring as valid and enforceable a letter agreement dated March 3, 2010 and signed by both parties (the "Letter Agreement"), wherein Defendant represented and agreed that she would not keep (or permit any other individual to keep) a dog in her apartment.

Defendant has lived in the Building for approximately 18 years, and has resided in her apartment (Apartment 3B) pursuant to a lease since 1998. On a rider to the lease in effect at the times relevant to the complaint herein was a no-pet clause which provided as follows:

> No Pets
> 9. Dogs or animals of any kind shall not be kept or harbored in the in the Apartment, unless in each instance it be expressly permitted in writing by Owner... BECAUSE OF THE HEALTH HAZARD AND POSSIBLE

> DISTURBANCE OF OTHER TENANTS WHICH ARISE FROM THE UNCONTROLLED PRESENCE OF ANIMALS, ESPECIALLY DOGS, [*2] IN THE BUILDING, THE STRICT ADHERENCE TO THE PROVISIONS OF [3] THIS RULE BY EACH TENANT ISA MATERIAL REQUIREMENT OF EACH LEASE. TENANT'S FAILURE TO OBEY THIS RULE SHALL BE CONSIDERED A SERIOUS VIOLATION OF AN IMPORTANT OBLIGATION BY TENANT UNDER THIS LEASE. OWNER MAY ELECT TO END THIS LEASE BASED UPON THIS VIOLATION.

It is undisputed that, in January 2010, Defendant adopted a four year old Yorkie and brought it into her apartment without informing NAR or seeking its permission prior thereto.[1] NAR states that it became aware of a dog in the premises when its managing agent, who resides one floor above Defendant heard the dog barking. A letter dated February 22, 2010 from NAR to Defendant confirms a prior conversation that day wherein Defendant confirmed that she had a dog in her apartment, and further demanded that Defendant remove the dog from her apartment immediately or face actions to ensure compliance with the lease rules concerning pets. Defendant responded by letter, also dated February 22, 2010. In her letter, Defendant stated that the dog is a "rescue dog," and that she rarely barks, is not aggressive, is completely housebroken, and that neither she nor her roommate had received [*3] any complaints about the dog. The letter further advised that Defendant and her roommate would take the dog to a day care center for dogs during their work hours, and asked that NAR "[p]lease give Puddy a chance for a happy home, she's really come around in the time we've had her and I'm sure we can train her not to bark, she's proven herself to be a very intelligent dog." NAR notes that nowhere in this letter is there any mention that Defendant requires the presence of the dog for emotional support.

On February 23, 2010, NAR sent another letter to Defendant, wherein NAR advised Defendant that it would not accept rent from her until they have received written confirmation that the dog is no longer in her apartment. Defendant states that NAR commenced eviction proceedings immediately thereafter. By March 1, 2010, Defendant advised NAR that the dog has been removed from the apartment, and offered to let a representative from NAR inspect the apartment to confirm same. After inspection of the apartment, NAR provided [*4] Defendant with the Letter Agreement [4] dated March 3, 2010. The Letter Agreement provided that

> You hereby represent and warrant to us and hereby agree as follows: (i) you will not hereafter permit the dog to be present in your apartment under any circumstances, and (ii) neither you, nor any person whom you permit to reside with you in your apartment, will maintain or permit to maintain, or allow any dog to visit or to reside in your apartment at any time for any purpose whatsoever.

Defendant signed the Letter Agreement indicating that she understood the terms and provisions of the agreement, and agreed to be bound by the terms thereof. NAR thereafter told its process server not to serve Defendant with the papers from the holdover proceeding.

Defendant claims that she signed the Letter Agreement under duress; specifically, she claims that NAR placed her in the "terrifying position of facing homelessness or parting with [her] dog, leaving [her] with what [she] perceived as no option but to give away the dog..." Defendant states that she thereafter sought and obtained the advice of counsel in order to protect her rights. By letter dated June 8, 2010, Defendant's attorney claimed that the Letter [*5] Agreement, and NAR's coercion of Defendant into signing the letter constituted unlawful discrimination against a disabled person. The letter claimed that Defendant suffers from depression and is disabled as defined under relevant federal, state, and city anti-discrimination laws. Further, the letter claims that Defendant's dog is a medically necessary source of emotional support for Defendant. In support of this assertion, Defendant attached a letter from Psychiatrist Bradford M. Goff, M.D. In that letter, Dr. Goff states that Defendant has been under his care since 2007, and that she has had a long history of depression dating back to early adulthood. Further, Dr. Goff stated that, in his opinion, the availability of pets in the home has had a tremendously positive effect on Defendant, providing her with much-needed emotional support. Dr. Goff further stated that, after the dog was removed from the apartment, Defendant's condition worsened significantly, to the point of interfering with her work. Based on all of the foregoing, Defendant's counsel advised in his letter that, if NAR did not agree to Defendant's demand for a reasonable accommodation within ten days, Defendant intended [*6] to pursue a claim to vindicate her legal rights.

[1] NAR also states that Defendant has several cats in her apartment without NAR's prior knowledge or consent, but states that it decided to refrain from litigating that issue.

[5] NAR commenced this action on June 15, 2010 by purchasing an Index number and filing its summons and complaint. On August 6, 2010, Defendant filed a complaint with DHR.

In October of 2010, Defendant moved for summary judgment, or alternatively, for an order staying the action during the pendency of Defendant's State Division of Human Rights ("DHR") proceeding concerning her request for a reasonable accommodation; and for an order quashing subpoenas served on Dr. Goff seeking his deposition and pertinent medical records. NAR cross-moved for an order compelling the deposition of Dr. Goff; alternatively NAR sought summary judgment on the issue of the enforceability of the Letter Agreement.

By order dated November 16, 2010, the court denied the parties' motions for summary judgment, and granted NAR's cross-motion to the extent that it sought to depose Dr. Goff and obtain pertinent medical records. In its decision, the court rejected Defendant's argument that she signed the Letter Agreement under duress - i.e., that NAR knowingly forced her to relinquish her right to a reasonable accommodation as a disabled person under threat of being evicted [*7] and facing homelessness. In so holding, the court noted that the undisputed facts in the record indicated that, at the time Defendant signed the Letter Agreement, she had never claimed — nor was NAR otherwise on notice of any claim — that Defendant was disabled and required the dog as a support animal. Nevertheless, the court denied NAR's motion for a judgment declaring the Letter Agreement enforceable, as issues of fact remained as to whether Defendant was in fact disabled, and whether she required the presence of her dog in the apartment as a reasonable accommodation for her claimed disability.

Defendant now moves to amend her answer to assert an additional cross-claim. The additional cross-claim seeks compensatory and punitive damages, as well as costs and attorney's fees based upon NAR's failure to grant her a reasonable accommodation by allowing her to harbor her dog. Defendant's second counter-claim alleges and seeks damages for NAR's commencement and prosecution of this action in retaliation for Defendant's assertion of her right to a reasonable accommodation under the Fair Housing Act, and other state and local claims.

NAR opposes Defendant's motion to amend her answer, and cross-moves [*8] for dismissal of Defendant's counter-claims and the imposition of sanctions.

[6] Pursuant to CPLR §3025(b), "A party may amend his pleading... at any time by leave of court . . . . Leave shall be freely given upon such terms as may be just...." "CPLR §3025 allows liberal amendment of pleadings absent demonstrable prejudice" (Atlantic Mut. Ins. Co. v. Greater New York Mut. Ins. Co., 271 A.D.2d 278, 280, 707 N.Y.S.2d 398 [1st Dept. 2000]). In the absence of prejudice, leave to amend a pleading should be denied only when the proposed amendment is plainly lacking in merit (see Bd. of Managers of Gramercy Park Habitat Condo. v. Zucker, 190 A.D.2d 636, 594 N.Y.S.2d 18 [1st Dept. 1993]) (*see also Pier 59 Studios, L.P. v. Chelsea Piers, L.P., 40 A.D.3d 363, 836 N.Y.S.2d 68, 2007 NY Slip Op 4179, 2 [1st Dept. 2007]) ("[I]n considering the proposed amendment, 'the court should examine, but need not decide, the merits of the proposed new pleading unless it is patently insufficient on its face. Once a prima facie basis for the amendment has been established, that should end the inquiry, even in the face of a rebuttal that might provide the ground for a subsequent motion for summary judgment'").

Here, the court finds that Defendant is entitled to amend her answer [*9] to the extent that she may add a counter-claim based upon her claim of entitlement to a reasonable accommodation. Factual issues remain as to the existence and/or extent of Defendant's purported disability, as well as the necessity of harboring a dog as an emotional support animal, assuming that Defendant is in fact disabled.

However, the court finds that NAR is entitled to dismissal of Defendant's counter-claim for retaliation[2]. The commencement of litigation is a protected activity under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, which bars the imposition of liability of a party based upon its petitioning the government (I. G. Second Generation Partners, L.P. v. Duane Reade, 17 A.D.3d 206, 793 N.Y.S.2d 379 [1st Dept. 2005]). Although originally derived from antitrust law, the doctrine is rooted in First Amendment principles and has been applied to bar liability for alleged violations of civil rights laws, including the Fair Housing Act (see Mosdos Chofetz Chaim, Inc. v. Vill. of Wesley Hills, 701 F. Supp.2d 568 [E.D.N.Y. 2008]) (citing, inter alia, Sanghvi v. City of Claremont, 328 F.3d 532, 543 [9th Cir. 2003], which affirmed the dismissal of plaintiffs' claim that municipal defendant's commencement of legal [*10] action against them constituted unlawful retaliation for asserting their rights under 42 U.S.C. §1983 and the Fair Housing Act.). An exception to the doctrine is made when a party demonstrates that the [7] challenged action was "a sham" and was "objectively baseless" (I. G. Second Generation Partners at 208).

Here, the court cannot find that NAR's commencement of this lawsuit was objectively baseless. As previously noted, it is undisputed that NAR and Defendant entered into the Letter Agreement, whereby she agreed not to harbor a dog in her apartment. It was further established that she did so free of duress or coercion on the part of NAR, and that up to that point, Defendant made no mention of suffering from a disability and requiring a dog for emotional support. Irrespective of the ultimate determination of Defendant's reasonable accommodation claim, and whether the Letter Agreement must yield to Defendant's rights under the Fair Housing Act [*11] or other applicable laws, Defendant cannot show that NAR's declaratory judgment action is a sham brought merely for the purpose of harming Defendant.

Wherefore it is hereby ORDERED that Defendant's leave to amend her answer is granted, and the amended answer in the proposed form annexed to the moving papers shall be deemed served on defendants upon service of a copy of this Order with notice of entry thereof; and it is further;

ORDERED that NAR's cross-motion is granted to the extent that Defendant's counter-claim for retaliation is dismissed.

This constitutes the Decision and Order of the Court. All other relief requested is denied.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN2[] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

The party seeking class certification bears the burden of establishing that each of the four requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a) and at least one requirement of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b) have been met. A district court may certify a class only if, after rigorous analysis, it determines that the party seeking certification has met its burden.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

HN3[] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

In reviewing a motion for class certification, the court generally is bound to take the substantive allegations of the complaint as true. However, the court may look beyond the pleadings to determine whether the requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 have been met. In fact, courts are at liberty to consider evidence which goes to the requirements of Rule 23 at the class certification stage even if the evidence may also relate to the underlying merits of the case. A trial court's rigorous analysis under Rule 23 will frequently entail some overlap with the merits of the plaintiff's underlying claim.

HN4[] Prerequisites for Class Action, Commonality

During the class certification stage, the court must simply determine whether plaintiffs have made a sufficient showing that the evidence they intend to present concerning antitrust impact will be made using generalized proof common to the class and that these common issues will predominate. The court cannot weigh in on the merits of plaintiffs' substantive arguments, and must avoid engaging in a battle of expert testimony. During the class certification stage, the plaintiffs need not supply a precise damage formula, but must simply offer a proposed method for determining damages that is not so insubstantial as to amount to no method at all.

As a matter of antitrust law, when a seller overcharges a buyer, the fact that the buyer raises the price for its own product, thereby passing on the overcharge to its customers and avoiding a loss in profit, has no bearing on the issue of whether the buyer has suffered an injury and thus has the right to recover damages from the seller.

ORDER GRANTING PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION

Plaintiffs [1] bring this class action against Defendant Apple Computer, Inc. ("Apple"), alleging violations of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, and related [*3] state law claims. Plaintiffs allege that Apple has committed unlawful acts in issuing software updates for its iPod, in violation of federal and state antitrust laws.

Presently before the Court is Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification. [2] The Court conducted a hearing on June 27, 2011. [3] Based on the papers submitted to date and oral argument, the Court GRANTS Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification.

A. Background

A detailed account of the earlier procedural history in this case may be found in the Court's December 20, 2006 Order Denying Defendant's Motion to Dismiss [4] and in the Court's December 22, 2008 Order Granting Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification. [5] The Court reviews the procedural history relevant to the present Motion.

---

[1] Named Plaintiffs are Somtai Troy Charoensak, Mariana Rosen and Melanie Tucker.

[2] (Plaintiffs' Notice of Motion and Renewed Motion for Class Certification and Appointment of Lead Counsel, hereafter, "Motion," Docket Item No. 477 (filed under seal).)

[3] After the hearing on June 27, 2011, the Court ordered supplemental briefings and expert reports on the issue of damages calculation and gave the parties a few weeks to complete and submit these additional materials. (hereafter, "June 27 Order," Docket Item No. 650.) In response to the Court's June 27 Order, the parties requested additional time. (See Docket Item No. 661.) On August 2, 2011, the Court denied the parties' Stipulation. (See Docket Item No. 672 at 1.) Instead, the Court ordered: (1) Plaintiffs to file their Supplemental Expert [*4] Report on or before September 23, 2011; and (2) Defendant to file a Supplemental Rebuttal Expert Report on or before November 14, 2011. (Id. at 1-2.)

[4] (hereafter, "December 20 Order.") This Order may be found as Docket Item No. 27 in the docket for Tucker v. Apple Computer, Inc., No. C 06-04457 JW, which was one of the original cases now included in this consolidated action. It may also be found as Tucker v. Apple Computer, Inc., 493 F. Supp. 2d 1090 (N.D. Cal. 2006).

This case is a consolidated putative class action. The original cases were Charoensak v. Apple Computer, Inc., No. C 05-00037 JW, [*5] and Tucker v. Apple Computer, Inc., No. C 06-04457 JW. On March 21, 2007, the Court ordered these cases consolidated, and renamed the consolidated case The Apple iPod iTunes Antitrust Litigation. [6] (Docket Item No. 106.) The Court designated The Katriel Law Firm, P.L.L.C. and Coughlin Stoia Geller Rudman & Robbins as Co-Lead Counsel, and designated Somtai Troy Charoensak, Mariana Rosen and Melanie Tucker as Lead Plaintiffs. (Id. at 1.) On April 19, 2007, Plaintiffs filed a Consolidated Complaint for Violations of Sherman Antitrust Act, Clayton Act, Cartwright Act, California Unfair Competition Law, Consumer Legal Remedies Act, and California Common Law of Monopolization. (Docket Item No. 107.)

On December 22, 2008, the Court granted Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification as to all but one of Plaintiffs' counts. (December 22 Order at 13-14.) As to the remaining count, which stated a claim for Unlawful Tying in violation [*6] of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, the Court denied certification without prejudice pending further proceedings in the case. (Id. at 13.) On December 21, 2009, the Court sua sponte decertified the classes it had previously certified. [7] In its December 21 Order, the Court explained that the technological interoperability between iPods and media sold through Apple's iTS did not constitute unlawful tying under the Sherman Act. (Id. at 2.) The Court stated that Plaintiffs' monopoly claims "interweave[d] allegations that there were technological ties between Apple products when they were first introduced to the market," which by itself does not constitute anticompetitive conduct, and "allegations that Apple made technological modifications to its products for the express purpose of maintaining monopoly power," which could support a monopoly claim. (Id.) The Court invited Plaintiffs to submit an Amended Consolidated Complaint "that does not depend upon allegations of tying as the anticompetitive conduct upon which they base their monopoly claims." (Id. at 3.)

On January 26, 2010, Plaintiffs filed an Amended Consolidated Complaint. [8] On January 18, 2011, Defendant filed a Motion for Summary Judgment. (See Docket Item No. 473.) On May 19, 2011, the Court granted in part and denied in part Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment. [9] While the Court granted Defendant summary judgment on Plaintiffs' antitrust claims relating to Defendant's introduction of iTunes 4.7, the Court denied Defendant summary judgment on Plaintiffs' antitrust claims relating to Defendant's introduction of iTunes 7.0. (Id. at 11-13.) In its May 19 Order, the Court also denied Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification as premature. (Id. at 14.) The Court explained that it lacked information necessary to certify the class, and accordingly, the Court ordered further briefing to address the issues of how the class should be defined and the length of the class period. (Id. at 14-15.) On June 6, 2011, the parties filed supplemental briefs to address those issues. [10]

On June 22, 2011, the Court ordered further supplemental briefing to have the parties address the specific definition of the products at issue in the class period, the geographic scope of the class, and the effect of the Supreme Court's June 20, 2011 decision in Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Dukes [11] on Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification. (See

[6] Prior to consolidation, the Court denied Apple's Motion to Dismiss the antitrust claims in Tucker case. (See December 20 Order at 16.) No other dispositive motions were filed in Tucker or in Charoensak prior to consolidation.

[7] (See Order Decertifying Classes Without Prejudice to Being Renewed; Inviting Further Motions at 2, hereafter, "December [*7] 21 Order," Docket Item No. 303.)

[8] (Amended Consolidated Complaint for Violations of Sherman Antitrust Act, Clayton Act, Cartwright Act, California Unfair Competition Law, Consumers Legal Remedies Act, and California [*8] Common Law of Monopolization, Docket Item No. 322.)

[10] (See Supplemental Brief in Support of Plaintiffs' Renewed Motion for Class Certification and Response to Court's May 19, 2011 Order, hereafter, "Plaintiffs' Brief," Docket Item No. 629; Apple's Supplemental Brief Re Class Certification, hereafter, "Defendant's Brief," Docket Item No. 633.)

Docket Item No. 639.) On June 23, 2011, both parties filed further supplemental briefs to address those issues. [12] On August 2, 2011, the Court granted both parties time to file supplemental expert reports. [13] Pursuant to the Court's August 2 Order, on September 23, 2011 and November 14, 2011, the parties filed [*9] their supplemental expert reports. [14]

Presently before the Court is Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification.

B. Standards

HN1[] The decision to certify a class is committed to the discretion of the district court within the guidelines of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23; Doninger v. Pac. Nw. Bell, Inc., 564 F.2d 1304, 1309 (9th Cir. 1977). HN2[] The party seeking class certification bears the burden of establishing that each of the four [*10] requirements of Rule 23(a) and at least one requirement of Rule 23(b) have been met. See Zinser v. Accufix Research Inst., Inc., 253 F.3d 1180, 1186 (9th Cir. 2001), amended, 273 F.3d 1266 (9th Cir. 2001). A district court may certify a class only if, after "rigorous analysis," it determines that the party seeking certification has met its burden. Gen. Tel. Co. of the Southwest v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147, 158-61, 102 S. Ct. 2364, 72 L. Ed. 2d 740 (1982).

HN3[] In reviewing a motion for class certification, the court generally is bound to take the substantive allegations of the complaint as true. In re Coordinated Pretrial Proceedings in Petroleum Prods. Antitrust Litig., 691 F.2d 1335, 1342 (9th Cir. 1982) (citing Blackie v. Barrack, 524 F.2d 891, 901 (9th Cir. 1975)). However, the court may look beyond the pleadings to determine whether the requirements of Rule 23 have been met. Hanon v. Dataproducts Corp., 976 F.2d 497, 509 (9th Cir. 1992) (citation omitted). In fact, courts are "at liberty to consider evidence which goes to the requirements of Rule 23 [at the class certification stage] even [if] the evidence may also relate to the underlying merits of the case." Id. A trial court's "rigorous analysis" under Rule 23 will frequently [*11] "entail some overlap with the merits of the plaintiff's underlying claim." Dukes, 131 S. Ct. at 2551.

C. Discussion

Plaintiffs seek to certify a damages class under Rule 23(b)(3), seeking damages for the supracompetitive price paid for iPods as a result of Defendant's alleged anticompetitive conduct. (Motion at 1, 16.) Defendant contends that: (1) Plaintiffs fail to demonstrate a class-wide method of proving impact and damages; and (2) Plaintiffs have also failed to carry their burden to show that resellers may properly be included in the Class. [15]

As discussed previously, the Court earlier certified classes in this case under both Rule 23(b)(2) and Rule 23(b)(3). (See December 22 Order.) The Court later sua sponte decertified those classes without prejudice. (See December 21 Order.) However, the Court only decertified the classes in order to reexamine Plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims. (Id.

[15] (Apple's Opposition to Renewed Motion for Class Certification at 8-21, hereafter, "Opp'n," Docket Item No. 512 (filed under seal).)

at 2-3, 10-11.) Because the Court, in its May 19 Order, found that Plaintiffs state a claim under the Sherman Act as to iTunes 7.0, the Court's earlier findings that Plaintiffs' [*12] proposed class satisfies the requirements of Rule 23(a) and 23(b)(3) still stand. (See December 22 Order at 4-13.) Thus, the Court need only consider class issues that are challenged on this round of certification.

1. Impact and Damages

Plaintiffs contend that they have provided sufficient expert testimony to show that antitrust impact may be demonstrated, and damages may be calculated, through generally accepted economic methodologies. (Motion at 19-22.) Defendant responds that the methods proposed by Plaintiffs' expert are inadequate to establish impact and damages on a class-wide basis. (Opp'n at 8-21.)

HN4[] During the class certification stage, "the court must simply determine whether plaintiffs have made a sufficient showing that the evidence they intend to present concerning antitrust impact will be made using generalized proof common to the class and that these common issues will predominate." *In re Dynamic Random Access Memory (DRAM) Antitrust Litig., No. M 02-1486 PJH, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 39841, 2006 WL 1530166, at 9 (N.D. Cal. June 5, 2006). "The court cannot weigh in on the merits of plaintiffs' substantive arguments, and must avoid engaging in a battle of expert testimony." Id. During the class certification [*13] stage, plaintiffs need not supply a "precise damage formula," but must simply offer a proposed method for determining damages that is not "so insubstantial as to amount to no method at all." *In re Online DVD Rental Antitrust Litig., No. M 09-2029 PJH, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 138558, 2010 WL 5396064, at * 11 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 23, 2010)*.

Here, the Court has previously found that Plaintiffs have provided an adequate method for proving common impact on the class. (See December 21 Order at 2 n.6.) Although the parties dispute in their Supplemental Expert Reports whether Plaintiffs can prove impact and damages with a class-wide method in light of the Court's May 19 Order granting partial summary judgment to Defendant, [16] the Court finds that Plaintiffs have demonstrated that it can be done. (See Supplemental Noll Decl.) Plaintiffs have proposed three specific methodologies [17] which, upon review, are sufficient to establish their method for determining damages at this stage. See *In re Online DVD Rental Antitrust Litig., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 138558, 2010 WL 5396064, at 11.

Accordingly, the [*14] Court finds that Plaintiffs have adequately demonstrated class-wide methods of proving impact and damages.

2. Resellers

Defendant contends that the class should be limited to end-user consumers and should exclude resellers, on the ground that resellers are not situated similarly to end-users insofar as resellers benefit from higher retail prices. [18] (Opp'n at 21-24.) Plaintiffs respond that: (1) the Court has already considered and rejected this argument; and (2) they can represent all direct purchasers, including resellers. [19]

[17] (See Class Certification Motion at 21; Declaration of Roger G. Noll at 68-84, Docket Item No. 488 (filed under seal).)

[18] Defendant defines the term "reseller" to include a variety of vendors, including "large electronic stores" such as Best Buy and Circuit City, "retail stores" such as Target, "discount warehouses" such as Costco, and other stores and on-line retailers. (Opp'n at 22.)

[19] (Reply Memorandum in Support of Plaintiffs' Renewed Motion for Class Certification at 10-14, Docket Item No. 550 (filed under seal).)

In its January 15, 2009 Order, the Court stated that "in ruling on class certification, the Court considered Defendant's contentions that resellers should be excluded from the class definition." [20] The Court expressly stated that by "declining to address this issue [*15] in [its Class Certification Order]," it had "implicitly included resellers in the certified class." (Id.) Thus, the Court has already found that resellers are properly included in the certified class.

Further, the Court finds that Defendant's contention that resellers are differently situated from end-users insofar as they "benefit from higher retail prices" is misguided. (Opp'n at 22.) HN5[] As a matter of antitrust law, "when a seller overcharges a buyer . . . the fact that the buyer raises the price for its own product, thereby passing on the overcharge to its customers and avoiding a loss in profit, has no bearing on the issue of whether the buyer has suffered an injury and thus has the right to recover damages from the seller." Meijer, Inc. v. Abbott Labs., 251 F.R.D. 431, 433 (N.D. Cal. 2008) (citing Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Mach. Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 489-92, 88 S. Ct. 2224, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231 (1968)). Thus, because "all class members have the right to pursue overcharge damages, they have the same incentive to do so, and there is no conflict among class members [*16] allegedly harmed by the same antitrust violation." Id. at 435 (citation omitted).

Accordingly, the Court finds that Plaintiffs can represent all direct purchasers, including resellers.

D. Conclusion

The Court GRANTS Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification. [21] The Court certifies Plaintiffs' class as follows:

> All persons or entities in the United States (excluding federal, state and local governmental entities, Apple, its directors, officers and members of their families) who purchased an iPod directly from Apple between September 12, 2006 [22] and March 31, 2009 [23] ("Class Period"). The specific models of iPods covered by the Class Definition are as follows [24]:
> I. iPod Standard, Classic, Special Models

[20] (See Order Vacating Case Management Conference; Clarifying and Correcting Class Certification Order; Setting Briefing Schedule at 2, Docket Item No. 198.)

[21] Because the Court grants Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification, the Court DENIES as moot Plaintiffs' Request for Leave to File Brief Response to Apple's Objections to Plaintiffs' Evidence Filed in Support of Reply in Support of Plaintiffs' Renewed Motion for Class Certification, Docket Item No. 573. For the same reason, the Court DENIES as moot the following: (1) Defendant's Motion for Leave to File Supplemental Objections to Reply Declaration of Roger C. Noll and Supplemental Opposition to Class Certification Motion, Docket Item No. 579; (2) Plaintiffs' Notice of Motion and Motion for Leave to File Plaintiffs' Motion to Strike the Supplemental Expert Report of Dr. Michelle M. Burtis, Ph.D., Docket Item No. 604; (3) Plaintiffs' Notice of Motion and Motion [*18] to Strike the Supplemental Expert Report of Dr. Michelle M. Burtis, Ph.D., Docket Item No. 605; and (4) Plaintiffs' Notice of Motion and Motion for Leave to File Plaintiffs' Opposition to Apple's Supplemental Objections to Reply Declaration of Roger G. Noll and Supplemental Opposition to Class Certification Motion, Docket Item No. 607.

[22] Plaintiffs contend that the Class Period should begin on September 12, 2006 because that is the date on which iTunes 7.0 was released to the public, and because the Court's May 19 Order found that Plaintiffs had stated an antitrust claim with regard to the release of iTunes 7.0. (Plaintiffs' Brief at 3-4.) Defendant responds that Plaintiffs have not offered sufficient evidence to show a class-wide method of proving impact and damages for a period beginning with the introduction of iTunes 7.0 in September 2006. (Defendant's Brief at 2-5.) However, as discussed previously, in its December 22 Order the Court certified a Rule 23(b)(3) damages class beginning in April 2003. (December 22 Order at 13.) Thus, the Court has already determined that Plaintiffs have shown a class-wide method of proving impact and damages during the Class Period.

[23] Plaintiffs contend [*19] that the Class Period should end on March 31, 2009, because Defendant was able to "maintain its supracompetitive pricing" of the iPod "until at least March 31, 2009," when it "began selling its full catalog of music" without FairPlay, its DRM-encryption system. (See Motion at 8-9.)

Before a patentee may be held liable under § 43(a) of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125(a), for marketplace activity in support of its patent, and thus be deprived of the right to make statements about potential infringement of its patent, the marketplace activity must have been undertaken in bad faith. This prerequisite is a function of the interaction between the Lanham Act and patent law, and is in addition to the elements required by § 1125(a) itself, as § 1125(a) alone does not require bad faith.

HN4[] Intentional Torts, Defenses

The litigation privilege, codified at Cal. Civ. Code § 47, applies to any publication required or permitted by law in the course of a judicial proceeding to achieve the objects of the litigation, even though the publication is made outside the courtroom and no function of the court or its officers is involved. The privilege bars all tort causes of action other than malicious prosecution and applies to any communication: (1) made in judicial or quasi-judicial proceedings; (2) by litigants or other participants authorized by law; (3) to achieve the objects of the litigation; and (4) that have some connection or logical relation to the action. Statements to nonparticipants in the action are generally not privileged under § 47(b) and are thus actionable unless privileged on some other basis. In addition, in order for the litigation privilege to apply, the communicative act--be it a document filed with the court, a letter between counsel or an oral statement--must function as a necessary or useful step in the litigation process and must serve its purposes.

ORDER GRANTING PLAINTIFF'S MOTION TO DISMISS AND GRANTING SKYPATROL LEAVE TO AMEND THIRD COUNTERCLAIM

Plaintiff's motion to dismiss defendant Skypatrol's third counterclaim is scheduled for a hearing on December 2, 2011. Pursuant to Civil Local Rule 7-1(b), the Court determines that the matter is appropriate for resolution without oral argument, and VACATES the hearing. For the reasons set forth below, the Court GRANTS plaintiff's motion and GRANTS Skypatrol leave to amend. Skypatrol's amended counterclaim must be filed by December 22, 2011.

DISCUSSION

On August 15, 2011, plaintiff ProconGPS, Inc. filed this lawsuit against several defendants, including defendant Skypatrol, LLC. Plaintiff alleges that defendants are infringing two patents owned by plaintiff.

Plaintiff moves to dismiss defendant Skypatrol's third counterclaim. [*3] The third counterclaim for unfair competition alleges,

> On information and belief, Procon has represented and is representing to third parties, including but not limited to Skypatrol's existing and prospective customers, that Skypatrol is going out of business, at least in part due to Procon's litigation tactics. As an example, during the week of August 29, 2011, a Procon sales representative called one of Skypatrol's existing customers, The Best Choice Inc., and represented multiple times that Skypatrol was going out of business and that Skypatrol's efforts to sell additional products were aimed at collecting as much money as possible before closing or going bankrupt. These representations are false.

Skypatrol's Amended Answer and Counterclaims ¶ 71. The third counterclaim also alleges, "[o]n information and belief, Skypatrol has lost at least one customer based on Procon's representations to third parties that Skypatrol is going out of business." Id. ¶ 72. In addition, Skypatrol alleges on information and belief that Procon "is asserting patents that are not valid and not infringed," and that Procon's conduct constitutes unfair competition under common law, California Business and Professions Code § 17200 et seq., [*4] and the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a). Id. ¶¶ 73-74.

I. Rule 9(b)

Plaintiff moves to dismiss defendant's counterclaim on numerous grounds. First, plaintiff contends that Skypatrol failed to plead the counterclaim with heightened particularity as required by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b). Plaintiff argues that Rule 9(b) applies because Skypatrol alleges that Procon falsely misrepresented Skypatrol's financial condition. Plaintiff contends that the counterclaim does not meet the pleading requirements of Rule 9(b) because Skypatrol alleges that unidentified Procon employees made false statements to unidentified third parties at unspecified times.

Skypatrol responds that Rule 9(b) does not apply because Skypatrol's counterclaim does not sound in fraud. Skypatrol asserts that the basis for its counterclaim is that Procon's false statements are unfair, not that they are fraudulent. Skypatrol also argues that even if Rule 9(b) applies, the counterclaim meets that standard because Skypatrol alleges specific facts about Procon's misrepresentations to one of Skypatrol's customers, The Best Choice, Inc.

The Court agrees with plaintiff that Rule 9(b) applies because Skypatrol's unfair competition [*5] counterclaim is based entirely on the allegation that Procon employees have and continue to falsely represent Skypatrol's financial condition; there is no other conduct that is alleged to be "unfair." The Court further finds that, with the exception of the allegations concerning misrepresentations made to The Best Choice, Inc., the counterclaim does not meet Rule 9(b)'s pleading standard. Skypatrol alleges "on information and belief" that Procon is falsely representing to unnamed third parties that Skypatrol is going out of business "at least in part due to Procon's litigation tactics." These allegations are too vague to provide Procon with notice of the particular misconduct with which it is charged. The Court grants Skypatrol leave to amend to allege more specific details about the alleged misrepresentations. While the Court does not expect Skypatrol to be able to allege the names of the persons who allegedly made the misrepresentations, in order to provide Procon with adequate notice, Skypatrol must allege some information about the person or persons who made the misrepresentations (such as if the person was a sales representative), when the misrepresentations were made, and to [*6] whom. In addition, Skypatrol must allege the substance of the false statements, and specify what it means by "at least in part due to Procon's litigation tactics."

II. Lanham Act

Plaintiff contends that Skypatrol has not stated a claim for unfair competition under the Lanham Act because Skypatrol has not alleged any facts showing that plaintiff acted in bad faith. Plaintiff relies on Zenith Electronics Corporation v. Exzec, Inc., 182 F.3d 1340, (Fed. Cir. 1999), in which the Federal Circuit held, > HN1[] [B]efore a patentee may be held liable under § 43(a) for marketplace activity in support of its patent, and thus be deprived of the right to make statements about potential infringement of its patent, the marketplace activity must have been undertaken in bad faith. This prerequisite is a function of the interaction between the Lanham Act and patent law, and is in addition to the elements required by § 43(a) itself, as § 43(a) alone does not require bad faith [citations].

Id. at 1353.

The parties dispute whether Skypatrol has alleged "marketplace activity in support of [Procon's] patent." Id. Plaintiff argues that Skypatrol fails to allege that Procon made statements about Skypatrol's business outside [*7] the context of informing customers of patent infringement, while Skypatrol contends that Procon's false statements about Skypatrol's financial condition and business operations are distinct from its claims of patent infringement.

The Court concludes that, as currently pled, it is unclear whether Skypatrol's Lanham Act counterclaim seeks to hold plaintiff liable for marketplace activity in support of its patent. The Court agrees with Skypatrol that Procon's alleged misstatements about Skypatrol going out of business, on their own, do not constitute marketplace activity in support of Procon's patent. However, the counterclaim alleges that Procon has represented, and is representing that "Skypatrol is going out of business, at least in part due to Procon's litigation tactics." Counterclaim ¶ 71. It is unclear what Skypatrol means by "Procon's litigation tactics." If Skypatrol is alleging that Procon told third parties that Skypatrol is going out of business because Skypatrol is infringing Procon's patents, such conduct would appear to constitute "marketplace activity in support of its patent." Zenith Elecs., 182 F.3d at 1353; see id. at 1354 (patent holder's statement that alleged infringer [*8] could not design around patent was marketplace activity in support of patent).

The Court will grant Skypatrol leave to amend to clarify the nature of its Lanham Act counterclaim. In amending this claim, Skypatrol should take care to allege all of HN2[] the elements of a such a claim: "(1) that the defendant . . . made a false or misleading statement of fact in commercial advertising or promotion about the plaintiff's goods or services; (2) that the statement actually deceives or is likely to deceive a substantial segment of the intended audience; (3) that the deception is material in that it is likely to influence purchasing decisions; (4) that the defendant caused the statement to enter interstate commerce; and (5) that the statement results in actual or probable injury to the plaintiff." Zenith Elecs., 182 F.3d at 1348. If Skypatrol's amended counterclaim alleges conduct by Procon in support of its patent such that the bad faith requirement of Zenith applies, Skypatrol must also allege facts in support of its allegation that Procon is asserting patents it knows are not valid and not infringed; it is not sufficient to simply make such an allegation "on information and belief."

III. UCL

With [*9] regard to the UCL, plaintiff argues that Skypatrol has not alleged any facts depicting any deception of Skypatrol's customers or any facts to support an inference that plaintiff committed an unfair practice that broke or violated the spirit of antitrust laws. HN3[] "When a party sues an ostensible competitor under the 'unfair' prong of § 17200, the claim may be proven only on the basis of 'conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an anti-trust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition.'" Watson Labs, Inc. v. Rhone-Poulenc Rorer, Inc., 178 F. Supp. 2d 1099, 1118 (C.D. Cal. 2001) (quoting Cel–Tech Commn's, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal.4th 163, 187, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999).

Skypatrol contends that under Watson Labs and Cel-Tech it need not allege an antitrust violation, and instead can state a claim under the "unfair" prong by alleging conduct that harms or threatens competition. While Skypatrol is correct in its statement of the law, Skypatrol's counterclaim does not actually allege that plaintiff's conduct "significantly threatens or [*10] harms competition." Instead, the counterclaim only alleges that Skypatrol has lost at least one customer based on Procon's alleged misrepresentations. Harm to a competitor is not the same as harm to competition, and Skypatrol must allege conduct that significantly threatens or harms competition in order to state a claim. Watson Labs, 178 F. Supp. 2d at 1118-19. In addition, if Skypatrol's UCL claim is based on Procon's marketplace activity in support of its patent, Skypatrol must allege facts showing bad faith on the part of Procon. See Zenith Elecs., 182 F.3d at 1355. Accordingly, the Court GRANTS plaintiff's motion and GRANTS Skypatrol leave to amend.

IV. Litigation privilege

Plaintiff also contends that Skypatrol's counterclaim fails because Procon's alleged misrepresentations are protected by California's litigation privilege. HN4[] The litigation privilege, codified at California Civil Code § 47, "applies to any publication required or permitted by law in the course of a judicial proceeding to achieve the objects of the litigation, even though the publication is made outside the courtroom and no function of the court or its officers is involved." Jacob B. v. County of Shasta, 40 Cal. 4th 948, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 477, 154 P.3d 1003, 1007 (Cal. 2007) [*11] (citation omitted). The privilege bars all tort causes of action other than malicious prosecution and applies to any communication "(1) made in judicial or quasi-judicial proceedings; (2) by litigants or other participants authorized by law; (3) to achieve the objects of the litigation; and (4) that have some connection or logical relation to the action." Silberg v. Anderson, 50 Cal.3d 205, 219-220, 266 Cal. Rptr. 638, 786 P.2d 365 (1990).

In light of the Court's dismissal of the counterclaim with leave to amend, the Court finds it unnecessary to decide whether the alleged misrepresentations to Skypatrol's current and potential customers are protected by the litigation privilege. However, the Court notes that "[s]tatements to nonparticipants in the action are generally not privileged under section 47, subdivision (b), and are thus actionable unless privileged on some other basis." Rothman v. Jackson, 49 Cal. App. 4th 1134, 1141, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 284 (1996). In addition, in order for the litigation privilege to apply, "the communicative act – be it a document filed with the court, a letter between counsel or an oral statement – must function as a necessary or useful step in the litigation process and must serve its purposes." Id. at 1146. [*12] While it is unclear what Skypatrol means by its allegation that Procon has represented that Skypatrol is going out of business "at least in part due to Procon's litigation tactics," the other alleged statements – that Skypatrol is going out of business, and that Skypatrol's efforts to sell additional products were aimed at collecting as much money as possible before closing or going bankrupt – do not function as a necessary or useful step in the process of litigating plaintiff's claims of patent infringement.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court GRANTS plaintiff's motion and GRANTS Skypatrol leave to amend. The amended counterclaim must be filed by December 22, 2011.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

ORDER GRANTING DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO DISMISS

I. INTRODUCTION

Plaintiffs [1] bring this putative class action against eBay ("Defendant"), alleging, inter alia, violations of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 et seq., and various state law claims. Plaintiffs allege that Defendant engaged in anti-competitive and monopolistic conduct by implementing a customer feedback policy that resulted in sellers with low feedback ratings being excluded from Defendant's website.

Presently before the Court is Defendant's Motion to Dismiss. [2] The Court conducted a hearing on October 17, 2011. Based on the papers submitted to date and oral argument, the Court GRANTS Defendant's Motion to Dismiss.

II. BACKGROUND

A. Factual Allegations

In a First Amended Complaint [3] filed on June 25, 2011, Plaintiffs allege as follows:

> Defendant is the world's largest online auction house. (FAC ¶ 22.) Defendant controls in excess of 90% to 98% of the online auction market. (Id. ¶ 25.) Defendant's dominance as an online auctioneer exists because it has the largest amount of buyers and sellers in a single place. (Id. ¶ 26.) In addition, Defendant benefits from a network effect, where the value of a product or service increases as more people use it. (Id. ¶ 31.)
> On or about May 2008, Defendant utilized its dominant position and economic [*3] power within the online auctions market to implement the Detailed Seller Rating Policy ("DSR Policy"). (FAC ¶ 35.) This policy appreciably restrained competition within the online auction market to the financial benefit of Defendant. (Id.) Specifically, the DSR policy affords buyers the opportunity to rate the service provided by eBay sellers on a one to five star scale in four different areas. (Id. ¶ 36.) These areas are "item as described," "communication," "shipping time" and "shipping charges." (Id.)
> Recently, Defendant has added requirements to the DSR policy which further undermine the ability of small auction sellers to compete with larger sellers. (FAC ¶ 37.) Defendant now mandates that all eBay sellers must have less than a specified percentage of one and two star ratings in every category. (Id.) In addition, sellers are required to maintain a DSR average of 4.3 stars to operate freely on eBay. (Id. ¶ 40.) This policy is destroying the business and livelihood of many well-established, small eBay auction sellers. (Id. ¶ 38.) A multitude of sellers who had feedback ratings of 90-100% now have restrictions on their accounts or have had their accounts permanently disabled due to [*4] low DSR ratings. (Id.) The DSR policy leaves sellers vulnerable to "feedback extortion," where unscrupulous buyers use the power of DSR rankings to force sellers to provide them items and services above and beyond what they have paid for. (Id. ¶ 39.)
> In addition, the categories utilized in the DSR rankings are prejudicial to small sellers. (FAC ¶ 41.) The DSR policy contains no mechanism to prevent malicious competitors from artificially lowering a competitor's DSR rating, as DSR ratings are anonymous. (Id. ¶ 42.) Large sellers are often exempt from DSR penalties to which small sellers are subject, and have a much greater chance of rehabilitating their DSR rankings due to the volume of business they conduct. (Id.) Small business owners have no incentive to enter the online auctions market because it is now common knowledge that a large competitor can cause the DSR ratings of smaller sellers to plummet. (Id.)

[1] Plaintiffs are Max Garon, Phil Lentsch, Office [*2] Dynamics, Amy Rickel, Ben Guz, Jonathan Pais, Eric Geiseke, Jason Adams, Liquidation Sports, Inc., Labb Suruplus, Steven Shelhorn, Dan Goodwill and Nate Demont.

[3] (See First Amended Class Action Complaint, hereafter, "FAC," Docket Item No. 20.)

> The intent and goal of Defendant's DSR policy was to attract large sellers to its website, thereby making sure that large sellers do business only with Defendant. (FAC ¶ 44.) By attracting large sellers from their competitors, Defendant sought to increase its dominance over its competitors [*5] even further. (Id.)
> In addition, by using market dominance in one market (the market for the provision of online auction services) to extend its market power into the online auction market, Defendant leveraged its monopoly power, which is prohibited under § 2 of the Sherman Act. (FAC ¶ 45.)

On the basis of the allegations above, Plaintiffs allege seven causes of action: (1) Monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 15, 26; (2) Attempted Monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act; (3) Unlawful and Unfair Competition in Violation of California's Unfair Competition Law, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17200 et seq. (the "UCL"); (4) Tortious Interference; (5) Trade Libel; (6) Unjust Enrichment; and (7) Negligence.

Plaintiffs seek to assert these claims on behalf of three classes of individuals allegedly impacted by the DSR policy: (1) all companies and individuals whose eBay accounts were closed or limited in accordance with eBay's DSR policy; [4] (2) all companies and individuals whose eBay accounts were closed by Defendant for arbitrary and capricious reasons; [5] and (3) all companies and individuals [*6] who are buyers within Defendant's platform and are deprived of the ability to purchase from small businesses which have been limited or closed due to Defendant's DSR policy. [6]

B.Procedural History

On December 15, 2010, Plaintiffs filed their initial Class Action Complaint. (See Docket Item No. 1.) On April 28, 2011, Defendant moved to dismiss for failure to state a claim. (See Docket Item No. 16.) On June 25, 2011, rather than responding to Defendant's Motion to Dismiss, Plaintiffs filed a First Amended Complaint. (See Docket Item No. 20.) Although Plaintiffs' filing of the Amended Complaint did not comport with Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a), the Court accepted Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint pursuant to Ninth Circuit caselaw dictating that Rule 15 should be construed with extreme liberality, and accordingly denied as moot Defendant's Motion to Dismiss. (See Docket Item No. 22.) Only July 1, 2011, the Court denied Defendant's motion for leave to file a motion for reconsideration. [7]

Presently before the Court is Defendant's Motion to Dismiss.

III. STANDARDS

Pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6), a complaint [*7] may be dismissed against a defendant for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted against that defendant. Dismissal may be based on either the lack of a cognizable legal theory or the absence of sufficient facts alleged under a cognizable legal theory. Balistreri v. Pacifica Police Dep't, 901 F.2d 696, 699 (9th Cir. 1990); Robertson v. Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc., 749 F.2d 530, 533-34 (9th Cir. 1984). For purposes of evaluating a motion to dismiss, the court "must presume all factual allegations of the complaint to be true and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the nonmoving party." Usher v. City of Los Angeles, 828 F.2d 556, 561 (9th Cir. 1987). Any existing ambiguities must be resolved in favor of the pleading. Walling v. Beverly Enters., 476 F.2d 393, 396 (9th Cir. 1973).

[5] (See FAC ¶ 158.)

[6] (See FAC ¶ 167.)

[7] (See Docket Item Nos. 23, 25.)

However, mere conclusions couched in factual allegations are not sufficient to state a cause of action. Papasan v. Allain, 478 U.S. 265, 286, 106 S. Ct. 2932, 92 L. Ed. 2d 209 (1986); see also McGlinchy v. Shell Chem. Co., 845 F.2d 802, 810 (9th Cir. 1988). The complaint must plead "enough facts to state a claim for relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). A claim is plausible [*8] on its face "when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). Thus, "for a complaint to survive a motion to dismiss, the non-conclusory 'factual content,' and reasonable inferences from that content, must be plausibly suggestive of a claim entitling the plaintiff to relief." Moss v. U.S. Secret Serv., 572 F.3d 962, 969 (9th Cir. 2009). Courts may dismiss a case without leave to amend if the plaintiff is unable to cure the defect by amendment. Lopez v. Smith, 203 F.3d 1122, 1129 (9th Cir. 2000).

IV. DISCUSSION

Defendant moves to dismiss Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint on the grounds that: (1) Plaintiffs have not identified a relevant antitrust market or alleged a cognizable antitrust injury as is necessary for a Sherman Act claim; (2) Plaintiffs' UCL claim must also fail, because they have not alleged conduct which amounts to a violation of antitrust law; (3) Plaintiffs have not alleged the required elements of a trade libel claim, because they have not claimed any special damages; (4) Plaintiffs' claim for negligence is barred [*9] by the economic loss rule; (5) Plaintiffs' claim for tortious interference with prospective economic relations must fail because Plaintiffs have failed to allege unlawful conduct; and (6) Plaintiffs cannot maintain a cause of action for unjust enrichment because unjust enrichment is not a cause of action in California. [8]

Plaintiffs respond that: (1) Plaintiffs have alleged an antitrust market and antitrust injury in the form of exclusion from that market; (2) having adequately pleaded a violation of the Sherman Act, Plaintiffs have also adequately pleaded a violation of the "unlawful" prong of the UCL; (3) Plaintiffs are not required to allege special damages to succeed on a trade libel claim because the statements at issue were defamatory per se; (4) the economic loss rule does not bar suits for intentional torts even where the loss is purely monetary; (5) because Plaintiffs have adequately pleaded antitrust violations, the conduct that interfered with their prospective economic relationships was barred by law and is therefore actionable; and (6) unjust enrichment is recognized as cause of action in California. [9]

The Court considers the adequacy of Plaintiffs' pleadings for each cause of action in turn.

A. Monopolization Under § 2 of the Sherman Act

At issue is whether Plaintiffs have adequately pleaded a violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act. [10]

To state a monopolization claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must allege that: (1) the defendant possessed monopoly power in the relevant market; (2) the defendant willfully acquired or maintained that power through exclusionary conduct; and (3) the defendant's conduct caused antitrust injury. See MetroNet Servs. Corp. v. Qwest Corp., 383 F.3d 1124, 1130 (9th Cir. 2004) (citation omitted). Antitrust injury is injury "of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent." Glen Holly Entm't, Inc. v. Tektronix, Inc., 352 F.3d 367, 371 (9th Cir. 2003) (citation omitted). In other words, "a plaintiff must prove that his loss flows from an anticompetitive aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior . . . If the injury flows from aspects of the defendant's conduct that are beneficial or neutral to competition, there is no antitrust injury, [*11] even if the defendant's conduct is illegal per se." Pool Water Prods. v. Olin Corp., 258 F.3d 1024, 1034 (9th Cir. 2001) (citation omitted) (emphasis in original). Where all a plaintiff has alleged is that his injuries are causally linked to the defendant's illegal activities, that is not enough to maintain a private antitrust action. See Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488-89, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977).

Here, Plaintiffs allege an antitrust market consisting of websites which provide online auction services. Within that market, Plaintiffs allege:

> Defendant's anti-competitive acts have injured Defendant's competitors by attracting all big sellers to Defendant's platform. (FAC ¶ 181.) As a result, Defendant's competitors shall not have large sellers on their platforms which will in turn decrease the overall number of participants [in] their auctions, further reducing their market share. (Id.) Defendant's auction sellers have paid or are likely to pay artificially inflated and supra-competitive fees. (Id. ¶ 180.) Plaintiffs and the Members of their Classes have been injured by their total exclusion from the relevant market. (Id. ¶ 187.) Further, Defendant has grossly abused said monopoly [*12] power by causing a grave antitrust injury to Plaintiffs by arbitrarily destroying their business and livelihood while leaving them no suitable alternatives for continuing their business. (Id. ¶ 189.)

Based on the allegations above, it appears that Plaintiffs are advancing two possible theories of antitrust injuries stemming from the DSR policy. However, as explained below, neither of these theories supports Plaintiffs' antitrust claim.

First, it appears that Plaintiffs are alleging that they have been directly excluded from a relevant antitrust market by Defendant's anti-competitive conduct. However, Plaintiffs have only alleged facts sufficient to support the claim that they have been excluded from Defendant's own website; Plaintiffs have not alleged that they were excluded from any other online auction site. The decision of a single company not to do business with a given client generally does not give rise to an antitrust claim. See TV Commc'ns Network v. Turner Network Tel., Inc., 964 F.2d 1022, 1025 (10th Cir. 1992) ("[A] company does not violate the Sherman Act by virtue of the natural monopoly it holds over its own product"). More fundamentally, even if Plaintiffs were to allege [*13] complete exclusion from all online auction websites, this would represent exclusion from an entirely different market than that in which Defendant is an alleged monopolist. Plaintiffs do not compete to provide online auction services (the "Auction Services Market"). Plaintiffs instead compete in the market to auction goods online (the "Sellers Market"), which is an entirely different market. Although success in the Sellers Market depends heavily on having access to the websites that make up the Auction Services Market, Plaintiffs do not allege that Defendant is a monopolist or even a competitor within the Sellers Market. Thus, Plaintiffs cannot state a monopolization claim against Defendant based on their effective exclusion from a market in which Defendant is neither alleged to be a monopolist nor a competitor.

Second, insofar as Plaintiffs' allegations can be construed as claiming that although Defendant implemented the DSR policy to harm competitors in its own market—namely, the Auction Services Market—this policy in effect injured Plaintiffs by shutting down their businesses. This injury, however, is not antitrust injury because it does not "flow from the anticompetitive aspect" [*14] of Defendant's behavior. See Pool Water Prods., 258 F.3d at 1034. Plaintiffs do not allege any causal connection between diminished competition within the Auction Services Market and the harm to their businesses. Instead, they merely allege that the policy which Defendant used to increase its market share within the Auction Services Market, the DSR policy, also had the effect of harming some businesses within the Sellers Market, including their own. But the allegation that a policy was implemented for anti-competitive reasons, even if true, does not render all grievances regarding that policy actionable under antitrust laws. See Brunswick Corp., 429 U.S. at 489. Because Plaintiffs have not alleged that their businesses were closed as a result of harm to competition within the Auction Services Market, they have not alleged an antitrust injury, and therefore have not stated a claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act.

Plaintiffs contend that they have alleged antitrust injury because "no one benefits if eBay users have to pay supra-competitive payment fees to consummate a transaction." (Opp'n at 16.) It is true that the payment of supra-competitive fees due to harm to competition in the Auction [*15] Services Market would be cognizable antitrust injury if the DSR policy resulted in such fees. Plaintiffs do not allege, however, that any of them actually paid supra-competitive fees. Although Plaintiffs allege that they all used eBay both before and after implementation of the DSR policy, and the First Amended Complaint alleges that this policy has damaged Plaintiffs' businesses, the Complaint does not allege any price increase for the use of Defendant's services after the alleged anti-competitive policy took effect. (See FAC ¶¶ 46-131.) Plaintiffs have also specifically represented to this Court that the injuries for which they seek relief are not the payment of supra-competitive fees. [11] Thus, although the payment of monopolistic fees would be sufficient to allege an antitrust injury, Plaintiffs have not done so here, and would be unable to in light of their judicial admission.

Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Defendant's Motion as to Plaintiffs' First Cause of Action. Because the injury claimed by Plaintiffs is not an antitrust injury, allowing Plaintiffs leave to amend their Sherman Act claim would be futile. Thus, the Court DISMISSES Plaintiffs' Sherman Act claim with prejudice.

B. Attempted Monopolization under the Sherman Act

At issue is whether Plaintiffs have adequately stated a claim for attempted monopolization under the Sherman Act.

To state a claim for attempted monopolization, a plaintiff must allege: (1) specific intent to control prices or destroy competition; (2) predatory or anti-competitive conduct directed toward accomplishing that purpose; (3) a dangerous probability of success; and (4) causal antitrust injury. Forsyth v. Humana, Inc., 114 F.3d 1467, 1477 (9th Cir. 1997). Thus, a claim of attempted monopolization, like a monopolization claim, must allege an antitrust injury in order to be cognizable under § 2 of the Sherman Act. Id.

For the reasons stated [*17] above, Plaintiffs have not pleaded any antitrust injury or facts sufficient to support such a claim. Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Defendant's Motion as to Plaintiffs' Second Cause of Action and DISMISSES the claim with prejudice.

C. UCL

At issue is whether Plaintiffs have adequately pleaded a violation of the UCL. Plaintiffs seek relief on the grounds that Defendant's DSR policy is both unlawful and unfair. (FAC ¶ 53.) The Court considers Plaintiffs' allegations under each prong of the UCL in turn.

1. Unlawful Conduct

The unlawful prong of the UCL "borrows violations of other laws and treats them as unlawful practices independently actionable." Saunders v. Superior Court, 27 Cal. App. 4th 832, 839, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 438 (Cal. Ct. App. 1994) (citation omitted). To state a claim under the unlawful prong of the UCL, a plaintiff must allege acts by the defendant that violate some separate law. See Birdsong v. Apple, Inc., 590 F.3d 955, 960 n.3 (9th Cir. 2009) (citing Webb v. Smart Document Solutions, LLC, 499 F.3d 1078, 1082 (9th Cir. 2007)). Thus, where the conduct alleged by a plaintiff does not violate any law, the plaintiff has not stated a claim for relief under the unlawful prong of the UCL. See id.

Here, Plaintiffs' [*18] claim for relief under the unlawful prong of the UCL is contingent on their contention that the DSR policy violates both the Sherman Act and the Cartwright Act. (FAC ¶ 198.) Because the Court has already found Plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims to be insufficient, Plaintiffs' UCL claim is viable only if they have sufficiently alleged a violation of the Cartwright Act.

[11] (See Plaintiffs' Memorandum in Opposition to Defendant eBay's Administrative Motion to Consider Whether Cases Should Be Related Pursuant to Civil L.R. 3-12 and 7-11 at 3, Docket Item No. 15 (arguing that this case should not be related to a separate antitrust action against Defendant because plaintiffs in [*16] the other case claim injury based on payment of monopolistic fees, while Plaintiffs in the present action seek relief based on their businesses being closed, and not the payment of higher fees).)

The Cartwright Act "prohibits the combination of resources of two or more independent interests for the purpose of restraining commerce and preventing market competition in the variety of ways listed in the statute." Lowell v. Mother's Cake & Cookie Co., 79 Cal. App. 3d 13, 23, 144 Cal. Rptr. 664 (Cal. Ct. App. 1978). The Cartwright Act "does not address unilateral conduct." Dimidowich v. Bell & Howell, 803 F.2d 1473, 1478 (9th Cir. 1986) (citation omitted) (emphasis in original).

Here, Plaintiffs have alleged only unilateral conduct by Defendant; the Complaint contains no allegations that Defendant collaborated with another independent entity to restrain trade. Because Plaintiffs have not alleged that Defendant collaborated with another interest in restraint of trade, they have not alleged a violation of the Cartwright Act. Thus, because Plaintiffs [*19] have failed to state a claim for relief under either the Sherman or Cartwright Acts, Plaintiffs have failed to state a claim under the unlawful prong of the UCL.

2. Unfair Conduct

A business practice is unfair under the UCL if it "offends an established public policy or . . . is immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous or substantially injurious to consumers." People v. Duz-Mor Diagnostic Lab. Inc., 68 Cal. App. 4th 654, 658, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 419 (Cal. Ct. App. 1998) (citation omitted). To find a business practice unfair for purposes of the UCL, a court must generally conduct an "examination of its impact on its alleged victim, balanced against the reasons, justifications and motives of the alleged wrongdoer." Motors, Inc. v. Times Mirror Co., 102 Cal. App. 3d 735, 740, 162 Cal. Rptr. 543 (Cal. Ct. App. 1990). Therefore, where the pleading states a prima facie case of harm stemming from an apparently unfair business practice, dismissal on the pleadings is usually inappropriate, as the court cannot weigh the utility of the defendant's conduct without analysis of some evidence. See id.

Where conduct is alleged to be unfair on the basis that it is anti-competitive, however, a finding that the conduct alleged does not violate [*20] the Sherman Act also precludes a finding that it violates the UCL on grounds of unfairness. See Chavez v. Whirlpool Corp., 93 Cal. App. 4th 363, 375, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 175 (Cal. Ct. App. 2001). If the same conduct is alleged to be both an antitrust violation and an "unfair" business act or practice for the same reason—because it unreasonably restrains competition and harms consumers—the determination that the conduct is not an unreasonable restraint of trade necessarily implies that the conduct is not unfair toward consumers. Id.

Here, Plaintiffs have challenged the DSR policy implemented by Defendant on the grounds that it unreasonably restrains trade, but have failed to state a cognizable claim under the Sherman Act. Thus, Plaintiffs' cause of action under the UCL must also be dismissed. See Chavez, 93 Cal. App. 4th at 375.

Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Defendant's Motion as to Plaintiffs' Third Cause of Action. The Court further finds that because the UCL claim is entirely contingent upon Plaintiffs' Sherman Act claim, and the Sherman Act claim has been dismissed with prejudice, the UCL claim cannot be cured through amendment. Accordingly, the Court DISMISSES the claim with prejudice.

D. Trade Libel

At issue [*21] is whether Plaintiffs have adequately pleaded a cause of action for trade libel.

In California, a claim for trade libel requires (1) a publication, (2) which induces others not to deal with the plaintiff, and (3) special damages. Aetna Cas. and Sur. Co., Inc. v. Centennial Ins. Co., 838 F.2d 346, 351 (9th Cir. 1998). To succeed on a claim for trade libel, a plaintiff must plead and prove special damages in the form of pecuniary loss. Leonardini v. Shell Oil Co., 216 Cal. App. 3d 547, 572, 264 Cal. Rptr. 883 (Cal. Ct. App. 1989). Where an item of special damage is claimed by a plaintiff, the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure require that the item be specifically stated. Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(g). Thus, while a dollar amount need not be specified, a plaintiff must allege the existence of an established business, the amount of sales for a substantial period preceding the publication, and facts showing that such losses in sales were the natural and probable result of such a publication. See Isuzu Motors Ltd. v. Consumers Union of U.S., Inc., 12 F. Supp. 2d 1035, 1047 (C.D. Cal. 1998) (citation omitted).

Here, Plaintiff Rickel alleges that Defendant sent an e-mail to his eBay customers after his account was closed [*22] which defamed him by stating that his account was a threat to eBay security. (FAC ¶ 217.) As to damages, Plaintiffs allege:

> [A]s a direct and proximate result of [the] emails, Plaintiff Fred Rickel and the members of his class have suffered and continue to suffer actual pecuniary loss due to the loss of business reputation, loss of value of the business, loss of business opportunities, and loss of goodwill. (FAC ¶ 219.) Specifically, Plaintiff Fred Rickel has not only lost his customers, but was also deprived of his all of his [sic] annual profits due to inability to utilize the acquired inventory that became useless after Plaintiff Fred Rickel lost his customers. (Id.) Such losses in sales were the natural and probable result of the publication of emails and closing of his accounts by Defendant eBay and PayPal. (Id.)

Based on the allegations above, it appears Plaintiff Rickel is claiming that the loss of his customers and his business on eBay constitutes trade libel damages. However, Plaintiff Rickel also alleges that the libelous e-mail was sent after Defendant closed his eBay account. (FAC ¶ 217.) Because the Complaint clearly alleges that Plaintiff Rickel's eBay business was shut [*23] down completely before the allegedly defamatory e-mail was sent, the Court finds that it would be impossible for Plaintiff Rickel to have lost his eBay customers as a result of the e-mail. Thus, Plaintiff Rickel has not pleaded special damages as is required to state a claim for trade libel under California law.

Plaintiffs contend that they do not need to plead special damages because the statements at issue are libelous per se, and statements which are libelous per se are actionable without a showing of special damages. (Opp'n at 18.) Plaintiffs contend that because Plaintiff Rickel had maintained a positive feedback rating prior to the implementation of the DSR policy, a reasonable person reading Defendant's e-mail would assume that Plaintiff Rickel had committed a crime, and accusing someone of a crime is generally considered to be libelous per se. [12] (Opp'n at 19.) This contention in misguided, as Plaintiffs base the inference that Plaintiff Rickel had committed a crime on an extrinsic fact—namely, his previously high feedback rating—defeating the argument that the e-mail is libelous without reference to extrinsic fact. Because Plaintiff Rickel has not alleged a statement that is [*24] libelous per se or pleaded special damages, his claim for trade libel fails as a matter of law.

Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Defendant's Motion as to Plaintiffs' Fifth Cause of Action and DISMISSES the claim with prejudice because amendment would be futile.

E. Negligence

At issue is whether Plaintiffs may maintain a cause of action for negligence against Defendant or if the economic loss rule bars such an action for purely economic damages.

The economic loss rule "requires a purchaser to recover in contract for purely economic loss due to disappointed expectations, unless he can demonstrate harm above and beyond a broken contractual promise." Robinson Helicopter Co., Inc. v. Dana Corp., 34 Cal. 4th 979, 988, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 352, 102 P.3d 268 (2004). Thus, in California, plaintiffs may seek remedies for negligence only where they experience "physical injury to person or property, and not for pure economic losses." *Chang Bee Yang v. Sun Trust Mortg., Inc., No. 1:10-CV-01541 AWI, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 31162, 2011 WL 902108, at 7 (E.D. Cal. Mar. 15, 2011) [*25] (citation omitted). Purely economic damages to a plaintiff which stem from disappointed expectations from a commercial transaction must be addressed through contract law; negligence is not a viable cause of action for such claims. See id.; Robinson Helicopter, 34 Cal. 4th at 988.

[12] A statement can be considered libelous per se if it is "defamatory of the plaintiff without the necessity of explanatory matter, such as an inducement, innuendo or other extrinsic fact." Cal. Civ. Code § 45a.

Here, in support of their negligence claim, Plaintiffs allege in pertinent part:

> Defendant has an obligation to establish and maintain adequate procedures to avoid unfairness and bias to large eBay auction sellers on its platform. (FAC ¶ 227.) Defendant also has a duty to not close eBay seller accounts without an adequate investigation and explanation. (Id.) Defendant breached these obligations by implementing the DSR policy which is biased against small eBay auction sellers. (Id. ¶ 228.) Further Defendant breached these obligations by closing the eBay auction seller accounts of Plaintiffs without due investigation and explanation. (Id.)

Based on the allegations above, the Court finds that these claims are barred by the economic loss rule. The bounds of Defendant's duty to Plaintiffs, and any remedies stemming from breach of that duty, are solely within the purview of the contractual relationship between Defendant [*26] and its clients. The economic loss rule does not allow Plaintiffs to maintain an action for negligence for monetary losses stemming from breach of this alleged duty.

The cases relied on by Plaintiffs in support of their negligence claim are not to the contrary. [13] These cases instead stand for the proposition that certain intentional torts between parties to a contract are actionable even if they only result in economic loss. This proposition is inapposite to the economic loss rule, which applies only to negligence and strict liability cases, and not intentional torts. See *Jackson v. Balanced Health Prods., Inc., No. 08-05584 CW, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 48848, 2009 WL 1625944, at 5 (N.D. Cal. June 10, 2009). Since Plaintiffs have asserted a cause of action for negligence, and not an intentional tort against Defendant, this claim is within the category of cases barred by the economic loss rule.

Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Defendant's Motion as to Plaintiff's Seventh Cause of Action. The Court finds that the defects with this claim cannot be cured by amendment, and DISMISSES the claim with prejudice.

F. Tortious Interference with Prospective Economic Relationships

At issue is whether Plaintiffs [*27] have adequately pleaded a cause of action for tortious interference with prospective economic relationships.

"To establish a claim for interference with prospective economic advantage, a plaintiff must plead that the defendant engaged in an independently wrongful act." Korea Supply Co. v. Lockheed Martin Corp., 29 Cal. 4th 1134, 1158, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 29, 63 P.3d 937 (2003). An act is "independently wrongful if it is unlawful, that is, if it is proscribed by some constitutional, statutory, regulatory, common law, or other determinable legal standard." Id. at 59. An act which has the effect of interfering with a prospective economic relationship but is not unlawful cannot give rise to a tortious interference claim. See id.

Here, having found that Plaintiffs have not adequately pleaded any other violation of law, their claim for tortious interference with prospective economic relationships must also fail. Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Defendant's Motion as to Plaintiff's Fourth Cause of Action, and DISMISSES the claim with prejudice as amendment would be futile.

G. Unjust Enrichment

At issue is whether Plaintiffs' claim for unjust enrichment is cognizable under California law.

[13] (See Opp'n at 21-22.)

There is no cause of action in California for [*28] unjust enrichment. Melchior v. New Line Prods., Inc., 106 Cal. App. 4th 779, 793, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 347 (Cal. Ct. App. 2003); McBride v. Boughton, 123 Cal. App. 4th 379, 387-88, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 115 (Cal. Ct. App. 2004). "The phrase 'Unjust Enrichment' does not describe a theory of recovery, but an effect: the result of a failure to make restitution under circumstances where it is equitable to do so." Melchior, 106 Cal. App. 4th at 793 (citation omitted). A court may look past the formal label of a claim for "unjust enrichment" if the allegations state a claim which allows for the type of recovery supported by the principle of unjust enrichment. McBride, 123 Cal. App. 4th at 387. A claim for unjust enrichment, however, cannot stand alone as an independent cause of action; it must be accompanied by a another cause of action which could give rise to recovery under such a theory. See *Miletak v. Allstate Ins. Co., No. C 06-03778 JW, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26913, 2010 WL 809579, at 8 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 5, 2010).

Here, the Court has found that Plaintiffs have not stated any other cause of action which could give rise to recovery under a theory of unjust enrichment. Because the claim for unjust enrichment cannot stand alone as a cause of action, it also must be dismissed [*29] with prejudice. Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Defendant's Motion as to Plaintiffs' Sixth Cause of Action, and DISMISSES the claim with prejudice.

V. CONCLUSION

The Court GRANTS Defendant's Motion to Dismiss and DISMISSES Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint with prejudice.

CIVIL MINUTES - GENERAL

PROCEEDINGS (in chambers): ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART DEFENDANTS' MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT, OR ALTERNATIVELY PARTIAL SUMMARY JUDGMENT; AND PARTIAL SUMMARY JUDGMENT [Docket No. 64]; ORDER DENYING PLAINTIFF'S MOTION FOR PARTIAL SUMMARY JUDGMENT [Docket No. 72]

This matter is before the Court on Defendants GLP German Light Products, Mark Ravenhill, and Intervening Plaintiff B&K Braun GMBH's (collectively, "Defendants") Motion for Summary Judgment as to Plaintiff's Claims, or alternatively Partial Summary Judgment; and Partial Summary Judgment Granting Defendants and Intervening Plaintiff's Counterclaims and Claim ("Defendants' Motion"), filed August 15, 2011, and Plaintiff Global Truss America LLC's ("Plaintiff") Motion for Partial Summary Judgment ("Plaintiff's Motion"), filed August 15, 2011. (Docket Nos. 64, 72.) On August 29, 2011, Defendants filed their Opposition (Docket No. 85) to which Plaintiff filed its Reply (Docket No. 127) on September 12, 2011. On August 29, 2011, Plaintiff filed [*2] its Opposition (Docket No. 96) to which Defendants filed their Reply (Docket No. 122) on September 12, 2011.

On August 29, 2011, Plaintiff submitted a Request to Strike Portions of Evidence Submitted in Support of Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment ("Plaintiff's Motion to Strike"). (Docket No. 96.) On September 12, 2011, Defendants filed a Reply to Plaintiff's Objections and Motion to Strike. (Docket No. 125.) Defendants filed their Objection to and Request to Strike Plaintiff's Evidence in Opposition to Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment ("Defendants' Motion to Strike") on September 12, 2011. (Docket No. 126.) On September 13, 2011, Plaintiff filed its Response to Defendants' Motion to Strike. (Docket No. 130.)

The Court found these matters suitable for disposition without oral argument and vacated the hearings scheduled for September 26, 2011. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 78(b). For the following reasons, the Court GRANTS IN PART AND DENIES IN PART Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment and DENIES Plaintiff's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment.

I. FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

A. General Background

Plaintiff is a limited liability company formed in the state of California. (Decl. of Toby Velazquez [*3] in Supp. of Pl.'s Mot. ("Velazquez Mot. Decl.") ¶ 2.) On September 18, 2007, and February 5, 2008, Plaintiff registered the Global Truss logo and Global Truss name (collectively, "Global Truss Marks") with the United States Patent and Trademark Office ("USPTO"). (Velazquez Mot. Decl. ¶ 3, Ex. 2.) Plaintiff recorded the Global Truss Marks with the United States Customs and Border Protection ("Customs") on November 8, 2010. (Velazquez Mot. Decl. ¶¶ 5, 6, Exs. 4, 5.)

Plaintiff distributes and sells trussing products in the United States. (Decl. of Toby Velazquez in Supp. of Pl.'s Opp'n ("Velazquez Opp'n Decl.") ¶ 16.) In 2002, a distribution group was formed to manufacture and sell trussing products; which included: Plaintiff, B&K Bruan Gmbh ("B&K"), and Taiwan Georgia Corporation ("TGC") (collectively, "Distribution Group").[1] (Velazquez Decl. ¶ 11.) Prior to 2003, Plaintiff was known as Stage Tool America LLC and advertised its trussing products in the United States under the "Stage Tools" name and logo. (Decl. of Charles Davies in Supp. of Pl.'s Mot. ("Davies Decl.") ¶¶ 2-4.) However, B&K was unable to register a similar "Stage Tools" mark in Germany and the Global Truss name and marks [*4] were created for the Distribution Groups' trussing products. Plaintiff was encouraged by B&K and TGC to adopt the Global Truss name and logo in order to have the brand name recognized worldwide. (Decl. of Joshua A. Schaul in Supp. of Pl.'s Opp'n ("Schaul Opp'n Decl.") Ex. 4, at 55:17-20, 60:15-61:2, 62:7-15.) Plaintiff adopted the Global Truss name and marks and changed its company name to Global Truss America LLC in 2005. (Davies Decl. ¶¶ 5-6; Velazquez Decl. ¶ 2.)

B&K is a wholesaler of sound and lighting equipment with Hartmut Braun as its Chief Executive Officer. (Decl. of Hartmut Braun in Supp. of Defs.' Mot. ("Braun Decl.") ¶¶ 1-2, Ex. 1.) On March 13, 2003, B&K applied to register the Global Truss Marks with the German Patent and Trademark Office. (Braun Decl. 15, Ex. 3.) On August 4, 2004, Mr. Braun from B&K and Mr. Davies from Global Truss America signed an agreement which stated that Mr. Davies would not sell Global Truss products in Europe. (Braun Decl. ¶ 19, Ex. 8.) This is the only written exclusivity agreement between the parties.

Defendant GLP German Light Products, Inc. ("GLP") is a distributor of entertainment lighting products, including Global Truss products. (Decl. [*5] of Mark Ravenhill in Supp. of Defs.' Mot. ("Ravenhill Decl.") ¶ 2, Ex. 1.) Defendant Mark Ravenhill is the assistant secretary of GLP and is acting as the president of GLP. (Ravenhill Decl. ¶ 1.) Although GLP and B&K are not related companies, B&K has an extensive ownership interest in GLP. B&K also finances the purchase of Global Truss branded products for GLP so that GLP can import the products into the United States. (Schaul Opp'n Decl. Ex. 4, at 148:18-148:21; Ex. 5, at 61:12-61:19, 97:24-99:16.)

In November 2010, Defendants GLP and Ravenhill imported into the United States four shipping containers of trussing products bearing the Global Truss Marks. (Schaul Opp'n Decl. Ex. 5, at 24:23-25:2, 25:15-25:25.) On December 17, 2010, Plaintiff sought to have GLP's truss shipment seized by the Los Angeles Police Department ("LAPD") claiming GLP's goods to be infringing. (Decl. of Erica J. Pruetz in Supp. of Defs.' Mot. ("Pruetz Decl.") Ex.

[1] TGC also does business under the name Global Truss Corp. (Decl. of George Lee in Supp. of Defs.' Mot. ("Lee Decl.") ¶ 2.)

16.) In 2011, Defendants GLP and Ravenhill imported the following shipping containers of trussing products bearing the Global Truss Marks: one shipping container in March 2011, two shipping containers in April 2011, and one shipping container in July [*6] 2011. (Schaul Opp'n Decl. Ex. 5, at 102:7-18, 104:7-105:21.)

Prior to January 2011, Plaintiff's and Defendants' trussing products were both manufactured by a subcontractor, Aluforce Industrial Co. ("Aluforce") (Lee Decl. ¶ 3.) On January 31, 2011, TGC suspended shipments of Global Truss products to Plaintiff. (Lee Decl. ¶ 19.) After January 31, 2011, Plaintiff's Global Truss products are manufactured in Los Angeles, China, and the Czech Republic. (Velazquez Opp'n Decl. ¶ 26.) Defendants do not purchase their Global Truss products from any of Plaintiff's current manufacturers. (Velazquez Opp'n Decl. ¶¶ 20-21.)

Defendant GLP published three press releases on its Facebook page (www.facebook.com/GLP.German.Light.Products) and on the Projection, Lights and Staging News website (www.psln.com) regarding its distribution of Global Truss products in the United States. (First Am. Compl. ("FAC") ¶ 36, ECF No. 18.) In December 2010, GLP announced its appointment as the authorized distributor of Global Truss products. (Ravenhill Decl. ¶ 9, Ex. 3.) In February 2011, GLP issued a press release confirming its appointment as an authorized distributor. (Ravenhill Decl. ¶ 10, Ex. 4.) Lastly, in June 2011, [*7] GLP announced that it was the exclusive distributor of the Global Truss products in the United States. (Ravenhill Decl. ¶ 11, Ex. 5.) Following GLP's press releases, TGC sent Plaintiff a termination letter on July 21, 2011. (Lee Decl. ¶ 22, Ex. 5.)

Plaintiff also published two press releases regarding GLP's distribution of Global Truss products. (Pruetz Mot. Decl. Exs. 20, 21.) Plaintiff's statements were published on its website, sent to industry trade magazines, and sent via email blasts. (Ravenhill Decl. ¶ 20, Ex. 8.) On January 13, 2011 and June 27, 2011, Plaintiff published the following statements: (1) GLP has wrongfully implied that Global Truss is the source of the products; (2) GLP "made a deliberate effort . . . to misappropriate Global Truss' name and trademarks through wrongful and improper practices"; (3) GLP sells unauthorized products that bear the specious Global Truss Marks; (4) GLP falsely stated that George Lee is the CEO of Global Truss; (5) GLP committed a blatant and willful violation of the law; and (6) GLP is an infringer and products being sold by GLP are not authorized by Global Truss. (Pruetz Mot. Decl. Exs. 20, 21.) In the beginning of 2010 or earlier, Defendant [*8] GLP acquired information regarding Plaintiff's price lists and customer lists. (FAC ¶ 44.) GLP acquired Plaintiff's price list when a dealer sent the list to one of GLP's salesmen. (Ravenhill Decl. ¶ 19, Ex. 7.) In its Complaint, Plaintiff alleges that by acquiring Plaintiff's price and customer lists, GLP gained confidential knowledge of: the identities and information relating to dealers of customers of Plaintiff's products, the identities and information relating to vendors or potential vendors, and the details of the types and volume of Global Truss products that Plaintiff distributes through its dealers. (FAC ¶ 44.)

B. Parties' Claims

As a result of the aforementioned events, Plaintiff filed a Complaint against Defendants GLP and Ravenhill in this Court and amended its Complaint on January 18, 2011 ("Complaint"). (Docket Nos. 1, 18.) The Complaint alleges seven causes of action: (1) violation of the Lanham Act; (2) trade libel; (3) misappropriation of trade secrets; (4) intentional interference with prospective economic advantage; (5) negligent interference with prospective economic advantage; (6) unfair business practices; and (7) violations of the Tariff Act. (See generally FAC) [*9]

Defendants GLP and Ravenhill filed Counterclaims against Plaintiff on February 8, 2011, alleging: (1) trademark cancellation; (2) defamation; (3) trade libel; (4) unfair competition; and (5) intentional interference with prospective economic advantage. (See generally Countercl.)

On March 17, 2011, B&K moved to intervene in this action. (Docket No. 41.) This Court granted B&K's motion to intervene on April 18, 2011. (Docket No. 50.) Intervening Plaintiff B&K filed its Intervenor Complaint against Plaintiff, filed on April 20, 2011, alleging two causes of action: (1) trademark cancellation; and (2) copyright infringement. (See generally Intervenor Compl., ECF No. 51.) Defendant GLP, Defendant Ravenhill, and Intervening Plaintiff B&K bring their Motion for Summary Judgment as to Plaintiff's claims against them and as to their claims against Plaintiff. Plaintiff brings its Motion for Partial Summary Judgment as to its claims against Defendants and its affirmative defense against Intervening Plaintiff B&K's copyright claim. (See generally Defs.' Mot; Pl.'s Mot.)

II. DISCUSSION

Defendants bring a Motion seeking summary judgment as to Plaintiff's claims for Lanham Act violations, Tariff Act violations, [*10] trade libel, misappropriation of trade secrets, negligent interference with prospective economic advantage, intentional interference with prospective economic advantage, and unfair competition. (See generally Defs.' Mot.) Defendants also seek partial summary judgment as to Defendants' Counterclaims for trademark cancellation, trade libel, defamation, and intentional interference with prospective economic advantage. (See generally Defs.' Mot.) Plaintiff brings a Motion seeking partial summary judgment as to Plaintiff's claims for unauthorized importation under the Lanham Act and Tariff Act and its affirmative defense of laches on Intervening Plaintiff B&K's copyright infringement claim. (See generally Pl.'s Mot.) Plaintiff also seeks summary judgment as to its prayer for: (1) an award of the maximum amount of statutory damages; (2) permanent injunction; (3) seizure of Global Truss branded trussing products from GLP; (4) attorneys' fees; and (5) costs of suit. (See generally Pl.'s Mot.)

A. Legal Standard

Rule 56(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure mandates that "the court shall grant summary judgment if the movant shows that there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of [*11] law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a). The moving party bears the initial burden of establishing the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. See Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). "When the party moving for summary judgment would bear the burden of proof at trial, it must come forward with evidence which would entitle it to a directed verdict if the evidence went uncontroverted at trial. In such a case, the moving party has the initial burden of establishing the absence of a genuine issue of fact on each issue material to its case." C.A.R. Transp. Brokerage Co. v. Darden Rests., Inc., 213 F.3d 474, 480 (9th Cir. 2000) (citations omitted).

In contrast, when the nonmoving party bears the burden of proving the claim or defense, the moving party does not need to produce any evidence or prove the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. See Celotex Corp., 477 U.S. at 325. Rather, the moving party's initial burden "may be discharged by 'showing' - that is, pointing out to the district court - that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case." Id. Once the moving party meets its initial burden, the "party asserting that a fact cannot be or is genuinely disputed must support the assertion." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c)(1). "The mere existence of a scintilla of evidence in support of the [nonmoving party]'s position will be insufficient; there must be evidence on [*12] which the jury could reasonably find for the [nonmoving party]." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 252, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986); accord Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986) ("[O]pponent must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts."). Further, "[o]nly disputes over facts that might affect the outcome of the suit . . . will properly preclude the entry of summary judgment [and] [f]actual disputes that are irrelevant or unnecessary will not be counted." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 248. At the summary judgment stage, a court does not make credibility determinations or weigh conflicting evidence. See id. at 249. A court is required to draw all inferences in a light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587.

B. Trademark Counterfeiting and Illegal Importation under the Lanham Act

Defendants move for summary judgment on Plaintiff's claims for trademark infringement and unauthorized importation of goods bearing an infringing mark pursuant to § 1114(1)(a) and § 1124 of the Lanham Act. (Defs.' Mot. 9-12.) Plaintiff moves for partial summary judgment as to its claim for unauthorized importation of goods bearing an infringing mark in violation of § 1124 of the Lanham Act. (Pl.'s Mot. 8.) Defendants argue that Plaintiff's Lanham Act claims fail because Plaintiff does not own the Global Truss Marks, and the trussing [*13] goods at issue are genuine because they "emanate from the same source." (Defs.' Mot. 9:5-10:3.)

The Lanham Act bars importation of goods bearing a mark that "cop[ies] or simulate[s]" a valid registered trademark. 15 U.S.C. § 1124. Similarly, § 1114(1)(a) prohibits the use of "any reproduction, counterfeit, copy, or colorable imitation of a registered mark in connection with the sale . . . of any goods or services on or in connection with which such use is likely to cause confusion, or to cause mistake, or to deceive," without the consent of the registrant. 15 U.S.C. § 1114(1)(a) (emphases added). Thus, in order to state a § 1114(1)(a) trademark infringement claim, a plaintiff must establish: "(1) ownership of a valid mark (i.e., a protectable interest); and (2) that the alleged infringer's use of the mark 'is likely to cause confusion, or to cause mistake, or to deceive' consumers." Reno Air Racing Ass'n, Inc. v. McCord, 452 F.3d 1126, 1134 (9th Cir. 2006) (quoting 15 U.S.C. § 1114(1)(a)).

The parties' Motions for Summary Judgment hinge on two important issues: (1) whether Plaintiff has ownership rights to the Global Truss Marks; and (2) whether Defendants' parallel imports of the goods at issue are genuinely or materially different from Plaintiff's trussing goods. (See generally Defs.' Mot; Pl.'s Mot.; Pl.'s Opp'n.)

1. Ownership Rights to [*14] the Global Truss Marks

Defendants assert three grounds in support of their argument that Plaintiff does not own the Global Truss Marks. First, Defendants argue that B&K owns the Marks because it was the first to use the Global Truss Marks in commerce. (Defs.' Mot. 9:27-10:2.) Second, Defendants argue that Plaintiff is not an exclusive distributor of the Global Truss Marks and that the manufacturer of the Global Truss branded products, TGC, has superior ownership rights over Plaintiff. (Defs.' Mot. 10:1-12:5.) Finally, Defendants contend that Plaintiff fraudulently procured its trademark registrations. (Defs.' Mot. 12:6-7.) For the following reasons, the Court is not persuaded that Defendants are entitled to summary judgment regarding Plaintiff's ownership of the Marks.

a. Priority in Use

Defendants assert that B&K, not Plaintiff, was the first to use the Global Truss Marks, and Plaintiff has no ownership rights to the Global Truss Marks. (Defs.' Mot. 9:27-10:2; Braun Decl. ¶ 18.) "It is axiomatic in trademark law that the standard test of ownership is priority of use." Sengoku Works Ltd. v. RMC Int'l, Ltd., 96 F.3d 1217, 1219 (9th Cir. 1996). However, under the territoriality principle, "[p]riority of trademark rights in the United States depends solely upon [*15] priority of use in the United States, not on priority of use anywhere in the world." Grupo Gigante SA De CV v. Dallo & Co., Inc., 391 F.3d 1088, 1093 (9th Cir. 2004).

"When proving ownership of a trademark, federal registration is prima facie evidence that the registrant is the owner of the mark." Sengoku Works, 96 F.3d at 1219. "However, the non-registrant can rebut this presumption by showing that the registrant had not established valid ownership rights in the mark at the time of registration - in other words, if the non-registrant can show that he used the mark in commerce first, then the registration may be invalid." Id. at 1220. The non-registrant must overcome the presumption of ownership by a preponderance of the evidence. Id. at 1219.

"Under the principle of first in time equals first in right, priority ordinarily comes with earlier use of a mark in commerce. It is 'not enough to have invented the mark first or even to have registered it first.'" Grupo Gigante SA De CV, 391 F.3d at 1093. Defendants contend that "B&K was the first to use the Global Truss marks in interstate commerce in the United States, beginning on May 13, 2003, on invoices sent to American DJ, [Plaintiff's] sister company." (Defs.' Mot. 9:27-10:1; Braun Decl. ¶ 18, Ex. 7; Pruetz Decl. Ex. 3, at 185:20-186:13, 187:6-21.) Plaintiff argues that invoices sent by B&K to Plaintiff's [*16] sister company are not legitimate use in commerce sufficient to meet the threshold requirement for ownership by priority in use. (Pl.'s Opp'n 7:18-8:9.)

Under section 45 of the Lanham Act, > a mark shall be deemed to be in use in commerce . . . on goods when . . . it is placed in any manner on the goods or their containers or the displays associated therewith or on the tags or labels affixed thereto, or if the nature of the goods makes such placement impracticable, then on documents associated with the goods or their sale, and . . . the goods are sold or transported in commerce.

15 U.S.C. § 1127.

Plaintiff argues that Defendants fail to provide evidence that B&K's invoices "were in any way placed on 'Global Truss' marked products or their containers or the displays associated . . . or on the tags or labels affixed to 'Global Truss' marked products in commerce." (Pl.'s Opp'n 7:24-27.) Plaintiff asserts that B&K's invoices are "arbitrary invoices for Christmas presents and unrelated effects lighting engineering" equipment, and these invoices fail to demonstrate priority in use. (Pl.'s Opp'n 7:28-8:5; Schaul Opp'n Decl. Ex. 4, at 74:21-76:5.) According to Plaintiff's evidence, the invoices only show the Global Truss [*17] logo next to four other logos at the bottom of the page. (Schaul Opp'n Decl. Ex. 4, at 74:21-76:5.) Plaintiff argues that Defendants' evidence does not establish that B&K sold, distributed, transported, or advertised any products with the Global Truss Marks in the United States. (Pl.'s Opp'n 7:24-8:9.)

In response, Defendants assert that, in addition to sending invoices, B&K shipped a single piece of truss directly to Plaintiff to be used in an emergency situation. (Defs.' Reply 2:9-10.) Defendants argue that "even a single use constitutes first use and establishes seniority." (Defs.' Reply 2:10-12.) However, Defendants do not cite any evidence to support the assertion that B&K shipped a single piece of truss to Plaintiff. Even if Defendants could establish that B&K shipped a piece of truss to Plaintiff, "the use necessary to acquire protectable rights is more than token or de minimus [sic] use." See Chance v. Pac-Tel Teletrac, Inc., 242 F.3d 1151, 1157 (9th Cir. 2001). Defendants have not provided evidence to indicate Defendants sold the emergency trussing products to Plaintiff. As such, the Court cannot find that Defendants' shipment was a use of the Global Truss Marks in commerce.

The invoices sent by B&K to American DJ are also insufficient [*18] to establish a use of the Global Truss Marks in commerce. Under 15 U.S.C. § 1127, documents associated with goods, such as invoices, constitute a use of the mark in commerce only when the placement of the marks on the goods themselves is impracticable. See 15 U.S.C. § 1127. Defendants have not provided any evidence to support the argument that placement of the Global Truss Marks on the trussing products was impracticable.

Further, B&K's invoices do not indicate that trussing products bearing the Global Truss Marks were in fact sold or transported in commerce in the United States. Indeed, the invoices presented by Defendants seem completely unrelated to the sale of Global Truss products in the United States. Defendants' evidence therefore does not establish prior use in commerce sufficient to rebut the presumption that Plaintiff, as the registrant, owns the Global Truss Marks. As such, the Court finds as a matter of law that B&K was not the first to use the Global Truss Marks in commerce, and Defendants are not entitled to summary judgment under their priority in use argument.

b. Superior Rights of Ownership

Disputes over trademark ownership often occur when the mark is used on goods manufactured by one company, but [*19] distributed by another company. Sengoku Works Ltd., 96 F.3d at 1220. In a dispute over the ownership of a trademark between a foreign manufacturer and an exclusive distributor in the United States, "the courts presume that contractual provisions as to trademark ownership are determinative." 4 J. McCarthy on Trademarks and Unfair Competition § 16:48 (4th ed. 2009); see Sengoku Works Ltd., 96 F.3d at 1220.

Defendants argue Plaintiff is a nonexclusive distributor because there is no exclusivity agreement between Plaintiff and the manufacturer. (Defs.' Mot. 10:23-11:6.) Defendants contend that in absence of an exclusivity agreement, the manufacturer should be presumed the owner of the Global Truss Marks. (Defs.' Mot. 10:14-16.) It is undisputed that Plaintiff does not manufacture trussing products bearing the Global Truss Marks. (Braun Decl. ¶ 7; Velazquez Opp'n Decl. ¶ 26.) However, the parties do dispute: (1) whether Plaintiff was the exclusive distributor of trussing products bearing the Global Truss Marks in the United States; and (2) who is the manufacturer of the Global Truss products. (See generally Defs.' Mot.; Pl.'s Opp'n.)

i. Exclusive Territory Agreement

The first question the Court must ask is whether there exists any agreement between the parties defining [*20] trademark ownership. The parties do not dispute that there is no written agreement between Plaintiff and TGC stating that Plaintiff is the exclusive distributor of the Global Truss Marks in the United States. (Lee Decl. ¶ 14, Exs. 1, 2; Schaul Opp'n Decl. Ex. 6.) Defendants argue that Plaintiff is not the owner of the Global Truss Marks because Plaintiff was given a nonexclusive license to distribute the goods in the United States. (Defs.' Mot. 10:28-11:6.) Plaintiff argues that there is an exclusivity agreement shown by the history of dealing between Plaintiff and the members of the Distribution Group. (Pl.'s Opp'n 9:1-10; Schaul Opp'n Decl. Ex 2, at 241:25-242:2; 242:2-243:22; Velazquez Opp'n Decl. ¶ 11, Ex. 3.)

As a general rule, "[w]here there is no express grant of exclusive territory in a contract or franchise, none will be impliedly read into the contract." Pac. Supply Co-op. v. Farmers Union Cent. Exch., Inc., 318 F.2d 894, 907 (9th Cir. 1963). However, "the law recognizes exceptions." Id. One court found that an agreement "without provision as to exclusivity" does not necessarily make the agreement "under any and all circumstances non-exclusive." Huber Baking Co. v. Stroehmann Bros. Co., 252 F.2d 945, 955 (2d Cir. 1958).

Defendants proffer two pieces of evidence to support the argument that Plaintiff is not the exclusive distributor [*21] of Global Truss products: (1) a Letter of Appointment; and (2) an email message sent by Mr. Lee of TGC. On December 21, 2010, TGC signed a Letter of Appointment stating that GLP is an authorized distributor of Global Truss products in the United States. (Lee Decl. Ex. 2.) Defendants assert that under the Letter of Appointment, TGC stated that it can have more than one distributor for the United States market. (Defs.' Mot. 11:7-12; Lee Decl. ¶¶ 9, 14, Exs. 1, 2.) On December 21, 2010, Mr. Lee also sent an email message to the members of the Distribution Group stating that TGC will sign a distribution agreement with GLP because the original agreement between the parties allowed for more than one distributor of Global Truss products in the United States. (Lee Decl. Ex. 1.)

It is undisputed that the only written exclusivity agreement between members of the Distribution Group states that Mr. Davies of Global Truss America cannot sell Global Truss products in Europe. (Braun Decl. ¶ 19; Pl.'s Statements of Genuine Disputes ("SGD") in Support of Pl.'s Opp'n ¶ 30.) However, Plaintiff argues that the course of conduct between Plaintiff, B&K, and TGC established over eight years indicates that [*22] there was an implied-in-fact agreement that Plaintiff would be the exclusive source of products bearing the Global Truss Marks in the United States. (Pl.'s Opp'n 9:8-10; Velazquez Opp'n Decl. ¶ 11, Ex. 3; Schaul Opp'n Decl. Ex. 1, at 313:16-20, 315:3-16.) Plaintiff further asserts that it would have never adopted the Global Truss Marks and changed its company name "if it was not understood by the Distribution Group, including B&K and TGC, that [Plaintiff] had exclusive rights to use" the Global Truss Marks in the United States. (Pl.'s Opp'n 9:10-17; Velazquez Opp'n Decl. ¶ 10; Davies Opp'n Decl. ¶ 9.)

The parties present conflicting evidence of whether Plaintiff had an agreement that it would be the exclusive distributor of the trussing products bearing the Global Truss Marks in the United States. Further, neither party has presented any sort of written agreement from which the Court could determine the presence or absence of an exclusivity provision. As such, there is a genuine issue of material fact; a reasonable jury could find that the parties had formed an agreement that Plaintiff would be the exclusive distributor of Global Truss branded products in the United States. Thus, Defendants' [*23] argument that Plaintiff was a nonexclusive distributor does not support a grant of summary judgment.

ii. Manufacturer of the Global Truss Products

Defendants argue that TGC, as the manufacturer of products bearing the Global Truss Marks, is the presumptive owner of the Marks. In absence of an agreement determining ownership, "the manufacturer is presumed to own the trademark." Sengoku Works Ltd., 96 F.3d at 1220. This presumption depends on whether there is an exclusivity agreement between Plaintiff and the manufacturer - a question that the Court has already determined must be submitted to the jury, see supra Part II.B.1.b.i. However, even assuming, arguendo, that Plaintiff is merely a nonexclusive distributor, Defendants' argument fails for the following reasons.

Defendants argue that TGC is the manufacturer of the trussing products bearing the Global Truss Marks and the Marks are affixed by TGC's subcontractor, Aluforce. (Defs.' Mot. 10:14-16; Lee Decl. ¶ 3.) Defendants assert that TGC "oversees the quality and uniformity of the Global Truss products." (Defs.' Mot. 10:17-18; Lee Decl. ¶ 6.) Defendants' argument that the manufacturer is presumed the owner of the trademark is a defense, known as jus tertii, of raising [*24] a third party's rights. However, a third party's superior use of a trademark is not a valid defense to a trademark infringement action. See Autodesk, Inc. v. Dassault Systemes SolidWorks Corp., 685 F. Supp. 2d 1001, 1011 (N.D. Cal. 2009); see also Comm. for Idaho's High Desert v. Yost, 92 F.3d 814, 820 (9th Cir.1996) (stating that "even if, for some purposes and in some territory, a [third party] may have a right in the trade-mark superior to that of the plaintiff, the defendant is not thereby exonerated from responsibility for an attempt to appropriate to itself a good will created by the plaintiff during a long course of business").

Furthermore, the presumption of ownership in favor of a manufacturer, foreign or domestic, may be rebutted by the distributor. Sengoku Works, 96 F.3d at 1220. Defendants argue that the factors set forth by the Ninth Circuit in Sengoku Works to determine the superior rights of ownership favor the manufacturer in this case. (Defs.' Mot. 19:22-11:21 (citing Sengoku Works, 96 F.3d at 1220).) Because Defendants are not entitled to a presumption that the manufacturer is the presumed owner of the trademark, they cannot argue that Plaintiff is unable to rebut this presumption. Thus, Defendants' argument that TGC is the true owner of the Marks does not support summary judgment.

c. Fraud in Obtaining Trademark Registration

Defendants move for summary judgment on their affirmative defense [*25] that Plaintiff's registrations of the Global Truss Marks are invalid. (Defs.' Mot. 11:22-12:5.) Defendants argue that Plaintiff's registration is invalid because it committed fraud on the USPTO. (Defs.' Mot. 12:6-7.) Defendants assert that Plaintiff falsely declared to the USPTO that it owned the Global Truss Marks and "to the best of the verifier's knowledge and belief, no other person has the right to use such marks in commerce." (Defs.' Mot. 12:6-12.) Defendants contend that Plaintiff should not have registered the marks because it "knew that it was not the exclusive distributor" of the Global Truss Marks. (Defs.' Mot. 12:23-24.)

Fraud in the procurement of a trademark registration may be raised as an affirmative defense to a charge of trademark infringement. See *UGG Holdings, Inc. v. Severn, No. CV 04-1137-JFW (FMOx), 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 45783, 2005 WL 5887187, at 9 (C.D. Cal. Feb. 23, 2005) ("A defendant asserting the affirmative defense of fraudulent procurement of a trademark registration 'must prove the alleged fraud by clear and convincing evidence.'"). Fraud requires the following elements: (1) "a false representation regarding a material fact"; (2) "the registrant's knowledge or belief that the representation is false"; (3) "the intent to induce reliance upon [*26] the misrepresentation"; (4) and "reasonable reliance" on the misrepresentation; and (5) "damages proximately resulting from the reliance." Robi v. Five Platters, Inc., 918 F.2d 1439, 1444 (9th Cir. 1990).[2] The defendant has a heavy burden in showing that plaintiff fraudulently procured a trademark registration. Id.

Plaintiff argues that it did not commit fraud and that Defendants failed to meet their heavy burden to show that Plaintiff fraudulently procured a trademark registration. (Pl.'s Opp'n 9:18-10:6.) The Court finds that because Plaintiff has presented a triable issue of fact regarding whether the parties had an implied exclusivity agreement, Defendants cannot show absence of a genuine dispute that Plaintiff's statement was false. Because Defendants' fraud claim rests on the disputed assumption that Plaintiff was not the exclusive domestic distributor of Global Truss branded products, summary judgment is inappropriate.

Even if Plaintiff was not the exclusive distributor, taking the evidence in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, the Court finds that Defendants have failed to establish that Plaintiff knew or believed that it made a false representation. See Far Out Prods., Inc. v. Oskar, 247 F.3d 986, 996 (finding that a good faith or honest belief of a statement of [*27] fact that may be inaccurate is not fraud). Plaintiff states that it believed it was the only company with the right to use the Marks in the United States. (See Velazquez Opp'n Decl. ¶ 11, Ex. 3; Schaul Opp'n Decl. Ex. 1, at 313:16-20, 315:3-16.) Even if this belief was inaccurate, Defendants have not met their burden to show that the statements were not made in good faith. Thus, there is a genuine issue of material fact as to whether Plaintiff knowingly made a false representation, and a reasonable jury could find either that Plaintiff's declaration to the USPTO was true or that Plaintiff was unaware of its falsity. Accordingly, the Court cannot grant summary judgment on Defendants' affirmative defense of fraudulent procurement of trademark registrations.

For the foregoing reasons, the Court DENIES Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment that Plaintiff is not the valid owner of the Global Truss Marks.

2. Genuine or Materially Different Marks

[2] The elements of fraud are discussed in greater detail regarding Defendants' Motion for Partial Summary Judgment as to their claim for trademark cancellation, see infra Part II.D.

Plaintiff moves for summary judgment that Defendants violated § 1124 because Defendants imported trussing products bearing marks identical to the Global Truss Marks. (Pl.'s Mot. 9:1-6.) Defendants move for summary judgment that Plaintiff cannot state a [*28] cause of action under the Lanham Act because Defendants' trussing products are genuine Global Truss branded products. (Defs.' Mot. 9:19-20.)

The Lanham Act bars importation of goods bearing a mark that "cop[ies] or simulate[s]" a valid registered trademark. 15 U.S.C. § 1124. Parallel imports, or "gray market" goods, are "foreign-manufactured good[s], bearing a valid United States trademark, that [are] imported without the consent of the United States trademark holder." K Mart Corp. v. Cartier, Inc., 486 U.S. 281, 285, 108 S. Ct. 1811, 100 L. Ed. 2d 313 (1988). There is no violation of the Lanham Act for "the sale of genuine goods bearing a true mark even though such a sale is without the mark owner's consent." NEC Elecs. v. CAL Circuit Abco, 810 F.2d 1506, 1509 (9th Cir. 1987). "[G]enuineness turns in some manner on the issue of common control of the goods." Philip Morris, Inc. v. Cigarettes for Less, 69 F. Supp. 2d 1181, 1185 (N.D. Cal. 1999). However, "courts have generally held that 'gray market' goods infringe trademark rights if they 'differ materially' from similar domestic goods sold under the same mark." Summit Tech., Inc. v. High-Line Med. Instruments Co., 922 F. Supp. 299, 308 (C.D. Cal. 1996); see also Am. Circuit Breaker Corp. v. Or. Breakers, Inc., 406 F.3d 577, 585-86 (9th Cir. 2005).

In its Motion, Plaintiff states that it is undisputed that the Global Truss Marks "appearing on products imported by Defendants are identical." (Pl.'s Mot. 9:1-6; Velazquez Decl. ¶ 11; Davies Decl. ¶ 11.) The uncontroverted evidence shows that until January 31, 2011, Plaintiff and GLP were selling the exact same Global [*29] Truss products from the same source, Aluforce, TGC's subcontractor. (Defs.' Opp'n 9:16-18; Pruetz Decl. Ex. 1, at 121:10-122:6; Decl. of Hartmut Braun in Supp. of Defs.' Reply ("Braun Reply Decl.") ¶ 22.) Plaintiff has not provided any evidence that trussing products imported by Defendants were materially different from Plaintiff's products. Indeed, the record indicates that prior to January 2011, Plaintiff's and Defendants' products were the same.

However, in its Opposition, Plaintiff asserts that after January 2011, Plaintiff discontinued ordering its products from Aluforce, and now orders its products from alternative manufacturers in China and the Czech Republic. (Pl.'s Reply 3:24-4:7; Pl.'s Opp'n 10:8-27; Schaul Opp'n Decl. Ex. 3, at 132:5-133:12; Velazquez Opp'n Decl. ¶ 25.) Plaintiff argues that because the trussing products come from "factories that specifically do not supply truss to B&K or GLP," the products differ materially. (Pl.'s Opp'n 10:12-26; Velazquez Opp'n Decl. 23-28.) Plaintiff asserts that its products differ in "both in etching and labeling" because its products are no longer etched with the Global Truss Marks, and the labels affixed to the products are created [*30] exclusively for Plaintiff. (Pl.'s Reply 4:3:25-4:7; Velazquez Decl. ¶¶ 25-27; Decl. of Charles Davies in Supp. of Pl.'s Reply ("Davies Reply Decl.") ¶ 9, Ex. 9.) In addition, Plaintiff contends that the imported products are not subject to Plaintiff's quality control measures. (Pl.'s Reply 4:3:25-4:7; Velazquez Opp'n Decl. ¶¶ 25-27.)

The Ninth Circuit has held that if there are no material differences between the parties goods, a plaintiff's trademark infringement claim must fail. Am. Circuit Breakers Corp., 406 F.3d at 585-86. In American Circuit Breakers, the Ninth Circuit determined whether a plaintiff had a valid trademark infringement claim for importation of gray market goods. Id. at 578. The plaintiff owned a trademark for circuit breakers in the United States and contracted with a foreign manufacturer that owned the identical trademark in the foreign jurisdiction. Id. at 580. The defendant was a third party that purchased the foreign manufactured goods and imported them for resale. Id. The parties stipulated that there were no material differences between the circuit breakers and they were identical except for the color - plaintiff's were black and defendant's were gray. Id. at 579-80. The Ninth Circuit found that because "consumers purchasing circuit [*31] breakers from [defendant] are getting exactly the same circuit breaker, both in specification and quality, as they would purchase from [plaintiff]," consumers were not likely to be confused as to the source of the goods. Id. at 585-86.

The Court finds that before January 2011, the trussing products imported by Defendants were identical to Plaintiff's products. Like consumers of the circuit breakers at issue in American Circuit Breakers, consumers purchasing trussing products from Defendants prior to January 2011 received the same trussing products, both in specification and quality, as they would have from Plaintiff, because they came from the same manufacturer. See id. at 585-86.

Plaintiff provides no admissible evidence to oppose the argument that prior to January 2011, Defendants' goods were not genuine.

In light of the complete lack of admissible evidence to oppose Defendants' allegations, and the overwhelming evidence to the contrary, the Court is convinced that no reasonable jury could find that the Defendants' trussing products are materially different from Plaintiff's products. Accordingly, there is no violation of the Lanham Act for imports of trussing products that occurred prior to January 2011.

However, [*32] the Court finds that there is a genuine issue of material fact as to whether the trussing products imported by Defendants after January 2011 differ materially from Plaintiff's products. After January 2011, Plaintiff's goods were manufactured by a different company and its products had different etching, labeling and quality control measures. Plaintiff's evidence suggests that Defendants are importing products "of one make under the trademark of another." See Champion Spark Plug Co. v. Sanders, 331 U.S. 125, 128, 67 S. Ct. 1136, 91 L. Ed. 1386 (1947). Because there are triable issues relating to material differences between Plaintiff's and Defendants' trussing products, a reasonable jury could find that Defendants' products are not genuine.

For the foregoing reasons, the Court GRANTS IN PART Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment and DENIES IN PART Plaintiff's Motion for Summary Judgment on Plaintiff's Lanham Act claims for violations that occurred prior to January 2011. The Court DENIES IN PART the parties' Motions for Summary Judgment on Plaintiff's Lanham Act claims for violations that occurred after January 2011.

3. Plaintiff's Request for an Award of the Maximum Amount of Statutory Damages, Permanent Injunction, Attorneys' Fees, and an Award of Costs

In its Motion, Plaintiff [*33] requests four types of relief pursuant to the Lanham Act. First, Plaintiff requests statutory damages in lieu of actual damages and argues that because Defendants' conduct is willful, Plaintiff is entitled to an award of the maximum amount of statutory damages. (Pl.'s Mot. 9:20-27.) Second, Plaintiff argues that it is entitled to a permanent injunction under section 1116(a) of the Act to prohibit Defendants from "importing, purchasing, distributing, selling . . . or otherwise using in commerce any trussing products bearing" the Global Truss Marks. (Pl.'s Mot. 12:21-13:9.) Third, Plaintiff argues that it is entitled to an award of reasonable attorneys' fees because Defendants' conduct is willful. (Pl.'s Mot. 14:3-12.) Lastly, Plaintiff requests an award of costs. (Pl.'s Mot. 14:14-23.)

Because the Court finds that Plaintiff is not entitled to summary judgment on its claim under § 1124, the Court DENIES Plaintiff's Motion for Summary Judgment as to Plaintiff's request for an award of maximum amount of statutory damages, permanent injunction, attorneys' fees, and an award of costs.

C. Illegal Importation and Trademark Counterfeiting under the Tariff Act

Although the Lanham Act does not provide a remedy for the unauthorized importation of genuine goods, the Tariff Act [*34] does provide a remedy for such conduct. See 19 U.S.C. § 1526; see also Parfums Givenchy, Inc. v. Drug Emporium, Inc., 38 F.3d 477, 484 (9th Cir. 1994) (the purpose of § 1526 "is to protect domestic companies against foreign competition"). Defendants move for summary judgment on Plaintiff's Tariff Act claim. (Defs.' Mot. 16:19-21.). Plaintiff also moves for summary judgment on its Tariff Act claim and requests that all products bearing the Global Truss Marks illegally imported be seized, forfeited, and destroyed. (Pl.'s Mot. 7:6-8:9, 13:19-24.)

The Tariff Act provides "extraordinary protection to certain holders of trademarks registered in the United States." K Mart Corp., 486 U.S. at 295. Section 526 of the Act prohibits the importation of:

> any merchandise of foreign manufacture if such merchandise . . . bears a trademark owned by a citizen of, or by a corporation . . . organized within, the United States, and registered in the Patent and Trademark Office by a person domiciled in the United States, . . . unless written consent of the owner of such trademark is produced at the time of making entry.

19 U.S.C. § 1526(a) (emphasis added).

It is undisputed that Plaintiff is a United States limited liability company that has obtained federal trademark registrations for the Global Truss Marks, copies of which are filed with Customs, and that Defendants [*35] have imported at least eight shipping containers of products bearing the Global Truss Marks. (Pl.'s Mot. 7:22-8:2; Defendants' SGD of Material Facts ¶¶ 1, 4-5, 8-11, 14.) In its Motion, Plaintiff asserts that it prevails because it has proved all the elements of its illegal importation claim and requests that "all products bearing the counterfeit 'Global Truss' [M]ark . . . be immediately seized, forfeited and destroyed" pursuant to section 526(e) of the Tariff Act, 19 U.S.C. § 1526(e).[3] Under § 1526(e), any merchandise "bearing a counterfeit mark . . . imported into the United States in violation of [§ 1124] shall be seized and . . . forfeited . . . [and] the Secretary shall . . . after forfeiture, destroy the merchandise. 19 U.S.C. § 1526(e).

"There can be no question that Congress intended section 1526(a) to bar the importation of genuine goods unless authorized by the domestic trademark owner." United States. v. Eighty-Nine (89) Bottles of Eau de Joy, 797 F.2d 767, 770 (9th Cir. 1986). Furthermore, "where a trademark is owned . . . by an exclusive distributor who is independent of the foreign manufacturer . . . the distributor is entitled under [§ 1526(e)] to prevent the importation even of genuine merchandise." Premier Dental Prods. Co. v. Darby Dental Supply Co., 794 F.2d 850, 858 (3d Cir. 1986).

Defendants argue that Plaintiff is not the owner of the Global Truss Marks, thus Plaintiff cannot make a claim under [*36] the Tariff Act. (Defs.' Mot. 16:19-21.) Defendants assert that TGC is the manufacturer of the Global Truss Marks and has superior rights over Plaintiff to the marks. (Defs.' Mot. 16:25-17:3). As discussed previously, supra Part II.B.1.b.ii, Defendants may not raise a third-party defense that the manufacturer has superior rights over Plaintiff.

The parties also dispute whether Plaintiff is an exclusive distributor, providing Plaintiff ownership rights, of the trussing products bearing the Global Truss Marks. Because there is a genuine of issue of material fact as to whether Plaintiff is the exclusive distributor of the Global Truss Marks, a reasonable jury could find that Plaintiff is an exclusive distributor and the owner of the Global Truss Marks. As such, the Court DENIES both Defendants' and Plaintiff's Motion for Summary Judgment on Plaintiff's claim for illegal importation under the Tariff Act.

D. Trademark Cancellation

Defendants move for summary judgment on their counterclaim for trademark cancellation. In their Motion, Defendants contend that Plaintiff falsely declared in its sworn declaration to the USPTO that "no other person has the right to use such mark in commerce." (Defs.' [*37] Mot. 17:15-24.) Defendants argue that Plaintiff's declaration is false because it is not the exclusive owner of the trademark. (Defs.' Mot. 17:20-24; Pruetz Decl. Ex. 1, at 120:5-11.)

A claim for fraudulent procurement of a trademark requires the following elements: (1) "a false representation regarding a material fact"; (2) "the registrant's knowledge or belief that the representation is false"; (3) "the intent to induce reliance upon the misrepresentation"; (4) and "reasonable reliance" on the misrepresentation; and (5) "damages proximately resulting from the reliance." Robi, 918 F.2d at 1444. An important element in a claim for fraud is an "intent to induce reliance upon the misrepresentation" or "intent to deceive." Robi, 918 F.2d at 1444. "Intent to deceive cannot be inferred solely from the fact that information was not disclosed; there must be a factual basis for a finding of deceptive intent." Levi Strauss & Co. v. Esprit US Distrib. Ltd., 588 F. Supp. 2d 1076, 1084 (N.D. Cal. 2008).

[3] "It is important to note that the standard for determining whether a mark is 'counterfeit'" under section 45 of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1127, "is higher than whether a mark shall copy or simulate 'a registered mark'" under section 42 of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1124. United States v. 10,510 Packaged Computer Towers, More or Less,152 F. Supp. 2d 1189, 1200 (N.D. Cal. 2001). A counterfeit is defined as "a spurious mark which is identical with, or substantially indistinguishable from, a registered mark." 15 U.S.C. § 1127. Whereas a "copy or simulate" mark is "one which may so resemble a recorded mark . . . as to be likely to cause the public to associate the copying or simulating mark . . . with the recorded mark." 19 C.F.R. § 133.22(a).

Defendants have not provided any evidence to support a finding that Plaintiff intended to deceive the USPTO. Defendants' argument solely relies on the fact that Plaintiff failed to disclose that it did not have an agreement in writing that Plaintiff is the exclusive distributor of the Global Truss products in the United States. [*38] (Defs.' Mot. 17:20-24.) There is no indication that Plaintiff intended to deceive the USPTO. Furthermore, Defendants have not met their burden to show that Plaintiff's declaration that it was not the exclusive distributor was false and made in bad faith. See supra Part II.B.1.c. In light of the complete lack of admissible evidence to support the allegation that Plaintiff intended to deceive, the Court DENIES Defendants' Motion for Partial Summary Judgment as to their claim for trademark cancellation.

E. Trade Libel Claim and Defamation Claims

Defendants move for summary judgment on Plaintiff's trade libel claim. Defendants also move for summary judgment on their trade libel and defamation counterclaims. For the following reasons, the Court DENIES Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment on Plaintiff's trade libel claim and on Defendants' trade libel and defamation counterclaims.

1. Plaintiff's Claim for Trade Libel

Defendants GLP and Ravenhill issued three press releases on www.facebook.com and www.psln.com to its customers that are the subject of Plaintiff's trade libel claim. In December 2010, GLP announced its appointment as the authorized distributor of Global Truss products. (Defs.' [*39] Mot. 13:11-14; Ravenhill Decl. ¶ 9, Ex. 3.) In February 2011, GLP issued a press release confirming its appointment as an authorized distributor. (Defs.' Mot. 13:15-16; Ravenhill Decl. ¶ 10, Ex. 4.) In June 2011, following the termination of Plaintiff's relationship with its manufacturer, GLP announced that it was the exclusive distributor of the Global Truss products in the United States. (Defs.' Mot. 13:16-19; Ravenhill Decl. ¶ 11, Ex. 5.) Defendants allege that these statements were based upon the Letter of Appointment GLP received from TGC. (Defs.' Mot. 13:9-24; Lee Decl. ¶ 16; Lee Decl. Ex. 2.)

"Under California law, 'trade libel is an intentional disparagement of the quality of property, which results in pecuniary damage.'" New.Net, Inc. v. Lavasoft, 356 F. Supp. 2d 1090, 1113 (C.D. Cal. 2004). "To prove trade libel, Plaintiff must show (1) a statement that (2) was false, (3) disparaging, (4) published to others in writing, (5) induced others not to deal with it, and (6) caused special damages." Id.

Plaintiff asserts that these statements were false and disparaging to Plaintiff's products and business. (Pl.'s Opp'n 12:1-3.) Plaintiff argues that these statements are false because Plaintiff is the owner of the federally registered Global Truss Marks [*40] that Defendants claim they have the authority to use. (Pl.'s Opp'n 11:26-28.) According to Plaintiff, GLP's statements are disparaging because the statements tell the public that Plaintiff is no longer authorized to distribute its own Global Truss branded products. (Pl.'s Opp'n 11:23-25.)

Defendants argue that the statements were not false because the statements were factually based on the Letter of Appointment Defendant GLP received from TGC. (Defs.' Mot. 13:9-24; Lee Decl. ¶ 16, Ex. 2.) To determine whether a statement is false, "is a question of law for the court to decide, unless the statement is susceptible of both an innocent and a libelous meaning, in which case the jury must decide how the statement was understood." Robinson v. HSBC Bank USA, 732 F. Supp. 2d 976, 985 (N.D. Cal. 2010). The falsity of Defendants' statements depends upon whether Plaintiff had an exclusivity agreement over the Global Truss Marks in the United States. Because there is conflicting evidence of whether Plaintiff had an agreement that it would be the exclusive distributor of the Global Truss Marks in the United States, the falsity of Defendants' statements is a question for the jury.

Defendants also argue that the statements were not disparaging because the press releases [*41] did not mention Plaintiff by name. (Defs.' Mot. 13:19-21.) To determine whether a statement is disparaging "the courts apply a totality of the circumstances test to review the meaning of the language in context and whether it is susceptible of a meaning alleged by the plaintiff." Id. at 986. Here, Defendants only refer to themselves and their own products, not Plaintiff or Plaintiff's product. Statements that refer only to a defendant's products and not to the plaintiff's products will not support a claim for trade libel. See *Atlapac Trading Co. v. American Motorists Ins. Co., No. CV 97-0871, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21943, 1997 WL 1941512, at 6 (C.D. Cal. Sept. 19, 1997) (finding no product disparagement where a party advertised its own product as "pure olive oil" but made no representation as to competitor's product).

However, "[t]here is no requirement that the person defamed be mentioned by name." Di Giorgio Fruit Corp. v. Am. Fed'n of Labor and Congress of Indus. Org., 215 Cal. App. 2d 560, 569, 30 Cal. Rptr. 350 (1963). Defendants' statements can reasonably be interpreted as referring to Plaintiff because stating that GLP is the exclusive distributor creates a negative implication that Plaintiff, Global Truss America, is no longer authorized to distribute Global Truss products. See Di Giorgio Fruit Corp., 215 Cal. App. 2d at 569 ("It is sufficient if from the evidence the jury can infer that the defamatory statement applies to the plaintiff.") Whether Defendants' statements were understood by the recipients [*42] as disparaging to Plaintiff's products and business is a question for the jury.

Accordingly, The Court DENIES Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment on Plaintiff's trade libel claim.

2. Defendants' Trade Libel Claim and Defamation Claim

Defendants assert that Plaintiff has made the following false statements: (1) GLP has wrongfully implied that Global Truss is the source of the products; (2) GLP sells unauthorized products that bear the Global Truss Marks; and (3) GLP is an infringer and products being sold by GLP are not authorized by Global Truss. (Defs.' Mot. 18:23-19:1; Pruetz Mot. Decl. Exs. 20, 21.) Defendants also assert that Plaintiff attacked GLP's honesty by stating that GLP has: (1) falsely stated that George Lee is the CEO of Global Truss; (2) committed a blatant and willful violation of the law; and (3) made a deliberate effort . . . to misappropriate Global Truss' name and trademarks through wrongful and improper practices. (Pruetz Decl. Exs. 20, 21.) These statements were published on Plaintiff's website, sent to industry trade magazines, and sent via an email blast. (Defs.' Mot. 19:7-9; Pruetz Decl. Ex. 2, at 213:13-214:7.)

"[T]rade libel is an intentional disparagement [*43] of the quality of property, which results in pecuniary damage." New.Net, Inc., 356 F. Supp. 2d at 1113. Defamation, on the other hand, "exists whenever a false and unprivileged statement which has a natural tendency to injure or which causes special damage is communicated to one or more persons who understand its defamatory meaning and its application to the injured party." Isuzu Motors Ltd. v. Consumers Union of U.S., Inc., 66 F. Supp. 2d 1117, 1122 (C.D. Cal. 1999) (citing Jackson v. Paramount Pictures Corp., 68 Cal. App. 4th 10, 26, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1 (1998)). It is important to note that "the two torts are distinct; that is, 'trade libel' is not true libel and is not actionable as defamation." Polygram Records, Inc. v. Super. Ct., 170 Cal. App. 3d 543, 549, 216 Cal. Rptr. 252 (1985). Trade libel deals with commercial damage to a product, whereas defamation deals with injury to the reputation of a person or a company. Id. at 549. Plaintiff's statements fall under both trade libel and defamation because the statements attack both the quality of Defendant GLP's products, by declaring them to be counterfeit, and Defendant GLP's reputation, by calling GLP an infringer.

Defendants argue that because these statements are clearly injurious to their business, they constitute liable per se and do not require proof of special damages. (Defs.' Mot. 18:14-15.) Defamation may be either categorized under libel or slander. Cal. Civ. Code § 44. Libel per se is defined under section 45a of the California Civil Code as a statement which is "defamatory of the plaintiff [*44] without the necessity of explanatory matter, such as an inducement, innuendo or other extrinsic fact, is said to be a libel on its face." Cal. Civ. Code. § 45a. The "[l]aw presumes general damages follow from utterance or publication of matter slanderous or libelous per se." Clark v. McClurg, 215 Cal. 279, 9 P.2d 505, 506 (1932). However, damages are not presumed in an action for trade libel. Erlich v. Etner, 224 Cal. App. 2d 69, 73, 36 Cal. Rptr. 256 (1964). Because Defendants did not provide any evidence as to special damages relating to their trade libel counterclaim, the Court DENIES Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment on Defendants' trade libel counterclaim.

The Court agrees that Plaintiff's statements are libel per se. Plaintiff's statements assert that Defendant GLP is guilty of an act of dishonesty, infringing on Plaintiff's trademark, which is defamatory on its face. However, Defendants still have the burden to prove that the statements were false. Plaintiff asserts that the statements were true and because Plaintiff is the only entity that has the authority to permit Defendant GLP to import Global Truss products and Plaintiff never authorized or appointed Defendant GLP to do so. (Pl.'s Opp'n 19:1-9.) The falsity of Plaintiff's statements are dependent upon whether Plaintiff is the exclusive distributor over [*45] the Global Truss

Marks in the United States and is the owner of the Global Truss Marks. Because the parties have presented conflicting evidence of whether Plaintiff was the exclusive distributor in the United States, the falsity of Plaintiff's statements is a question for the jury. The Court DENIES Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment on Defendants' defamation counterclaim.

F. Trade Secrets

Defendants move for summary judgment on Plaintiff's trade secrets claim. In their Motion, Defendants argue that Plaintiff's price and customer lists are not trade secrets. "The test for trade secrets is whether the matter sought to be protected is information (1) which is valuable because it is unknown to others and (2) which the owner has attempted to keep secret." Whyte v. Schlage Lock Co., 101 Cal. App. 4th 1443, 1454, 125 Cal. Rptr. 2d 277 (2002).

Defendants argue that Plaintiff's price and customer lists are not confidential. Defendants assert that Plaintiff sends its price lists to between five-hundred and a thousand dealers approximately three times a year. (Defs.' Mot. 15:4-7; Pruetz Decl. Ex. 2, at 67:1-22, 69:11-25.) Plaintiff argues that it takes action to maintain the confidentiality of its price lists. (Pl.'s Opp'n 12:14-17.) Plaintiff alleges that its price lists are [*46] clearly marked "Confidential" and Plaintiff asks its dealers to agree to maintain the contents of its price lists confidential. (Pl.'s Opp'n 12:14-17, 12:27:13:3; Schaul Opp'n Decl. ¶ 3, Ex. 2, at 170:18-171:4, 181:13-21.) The Court concludes that Plaintiff has made reasonable efforts to maintain the secrecy of its price lists.

Defendants also argue that Plaintiff's customer and price lists do not derive independent economic value because they are widely disseminated and commonly known to the trussing industry. (Defs.' Mot. 14:23-25.) However, cases have recognized that information that relates to pricing can be a trade secret. See Courtesy Temporary Serv., Inc. v. Camacho, 222 Cal. App. 3d 1278, 1288, 272 Cal. Rptr. 352 (1990) (billing and markup rates "irrefutably" of commercial value); SI Handling Sys., Inc. v. Heisley, 753 F.2d 1244, 1260 (3d Cir. 1985) (cost and pricing information are trade secrets); Lumex, Inc. v. Highsmith, 919 F. Supp. 624, 628-30 (E.D.N.Y. 1996) (pricing, costs, and profit margins treated as trade secrets). Defendants' contention that Plaintiff's customer and price lists do not derive independent economic value is not supported by any evidence. Accordingly, the Court DENIES Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment on Plaintiff's trade secrets claim.

G. Interference with Prospective Economic Advantage Claim

Defendants move for summary judgment on Plaintiff's claims for intentional and negligent [*47] interference with prospective economic advantage. Defendants also move for summary judgment on their counterclaim for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage.

1. Intentional Interference with Prospective Economic Advantage

The elements of a cause of action for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage are:

> (1) the existence of a prospective business relationship advantageous to the plaintiff; (2) the defendant's knowledge of the existence of that relationship; (3) intentional acts by the defendant designed to disrupt the relationship; (4) actual causation; and (5) resulting damages.

Stolz v. Wong Communications Limited Partnership, 25 Cal. App. 4th 1811, 1825, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 229 (1994). A claim for intentional interference "is made out when interference resulting in injury to another is wrongful by some measure beyond the fact of the interference itself." Della Penna v. Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A., Inc., 11 Cal. 4th 376, 385, 45 Cal. Rptr. 2d 436, 902 P.2d 740 (1995) (emphases in original).

Defendants move for summary judgment on Plaintiff's intentional interference claim as well as on their own intentional interference claim against Plaintiff. (Defs.' Mot. 17:10-12,19:27-20:17.) Defendants argue that because all of Plaintiff's other claims fail as a matter of law, Plaintiff cannot establish an independent wrong separate from the interference itself. (Defs.' Mot. [*48] 17:10-12.) However, the Court does not find that all of Plaintiff's claims fail as a matter of law, and therefore cannot conclude that Plaintiff is unable to prove an independent wrong under its intentional interference claim. The genuine disputes of fact that preclude summary judgment on Plaintiff's other claims preclude summary judgment on intentional interference. Similarly, because the Court has not granted summary judgment for Defendants on any of Defendants' claims, the Court cannot find that Defendants have established an independent wrong beyond interference.

As such, the Court DENIES Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment on Plaintiff's claim for intentional interference with economic advantage and Defendants' claim for intentional interference with economic advantage.

2. Negligent Interference with Prospective Economic Advantage

Defendants move for summary judgment on Plaintiff's claim for negligent interference with prospective economic advantage. "The tort of negligent interference with economic relationship arises only when the defendant owes the plaintiff a duty of care." Stolz v. Wong Communications Limited Partnership, 25 Cal. App. 4th 1811, 1825, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 229 (1994). Defendants allege that Plaintiff and Defendant GLP are competitors in the truss market. (Defs.' Mot. [*49] 15:22; Pruetz Decl. Ex.3, at 155:23-156:9.) Defendants argue that GLP does not owe a duty of care to Plaintiff. (Defs.' Mot. 15:22-27.)

The determination whether a defendant owes a duty of care to a plaintiff involves the balancing of various factors, among which are:

> [1] the extent to which the transaction was intended to affect the plaintiff, [2] the foreseeability of harm to him, [3] the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury, [4] the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered, [5] the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct, and [6] the policy of preventing future harm.

Biakanja v. Irving, 49 Cal. 2d 647, 320 P.2d 16, 19 (Cal. 1958).

In their Motion, Defendants raise the privilege of competition, an affirmative defense. (Defs.' Mot. 15:22-27). There is no duty of care between competitors because "[t]he policy of the common law has always been in favor of free competition." See A-Mark Coin Co. v. General Mills, Inc., 148 Cal. App. 3d 312, 323, 195 Cal. Rptr. 859 (1983) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). Defendants argue that because GLP and Plaintiff are competitors, GLP does not owe Plaintiff a duty of care. (Defs.' Mot. 15:22-27).

Plaintiff dispute Defendants' contention that Plaintiff and GLP are competitors. (Schaul Opp'n Decl. ¶ 4, Ex. 3, at 156:11-16.) [*50] Plaintiff argues that Defendants owe a duty not to interfere with its customers because Plaintiff and Defendants are joint venturers. (Pl.'s Opp'n 13:15-20.) Plaintiff asserts that B&K and Plaintiff are joint venturers because they are co-members of the Distribution Group. Furthermore, Plaintiff alleges that because GLP and B&K are related companies, both GLP and B&K owe a duty of care to Plaintiff.

The Court disagrees. Plaintiff has failed to provide sufficient evidence that B&K and Plaintiff are joint venturers. The elements for the creation of a joint venture are: "(1) joint interest in a common business; (2) with an understanding to share profits and losses; and (3) a right to joint control." April Enterprises, Inc. v. KTTV, 147 Cal. App. 3d 805, 819, 195 Cal. Rptr. 421 (1983). While Plaintiff has provided evidence that members of the Distribution Group share profits, Plaintiff has not provided any evidence to show that members of the Distribution Group share losses and a right to joint control. As such, the Court finds that Plaintiff has failed to provide evidence sufficient to allow a jury to find that B&K and Plaintiff are joint venturers.

For the foregoing reasons, the Court finds that GLP and Plaintiff are competitors and Defendants do not owe Plaintiff a duty [*51] of care. The Court GRANTS Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment on Plaintiff's claim for negligent interference with prospective economic advantage.

H. Unfair Competition

Defendants move for summary judgment on Plaintiff's unfair competition claim. (Defs.' Mot. 16:2-17.) The term "unfair competition" includes "any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice and unfair, deceptive, untrue or misleading advertising." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200. Defendants argue that Plaintiff has not alleged or provided any facts to show that Defendant GLP's conduct unreasonably restrains competition. (Defs.' Mot. 16:11-17.) Defendants rely on Cel-Tech Commc'ns, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (Cal. App. Ct. 1999), for the proposition that "unfair" means "conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws." Id. at 187. However, Cel-Tech Communications was an action by a competitor alleging anticompetitive practices, and the court explicitly stated its holding had no impact on "actions by consumers or by competitors alleging other kinds of violations of the unfair competition law such as 'fraudulent' or 'unlawful' business practices." Id. at 187 n.12.

Here, Plaintiff alleges that Defendants' actions are unlawful. (Pl.'s Opp'n 14:13-26.) "Unlawful [*52] acts are 'anything that can properly be called a business practice and that at the same time is forbidden by law . . . be it civil, criminal, federal, state, or municipal, statutory, regulatory, or court-made,' where court-made law is, 'for example a violation of a prior court order.'" Sybersound Records, Inc. v. UAV Corp., 517 F.3d 1137, 1153 (9th Cir. 2008) (quoting Nat'l Rural Telecomm. Co-op. v. DIRECTV, Inc., 319 F. Supp. 2d 1059, 1074 & n.22 (C.D. Cal. 2003). Thus, Plaintiff's unfair competition claim stands if Plaintiff can show that Defendants' acts were unlawful. Because the unlawfulness of Defendants' actions must be determined by a jury, the Court DENIES Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment on Plaintiff's unfair competition claim.

I. Affirmative Defense of Laches to B&K's Copyright Infringement Claim

Plaintiff moves for summary judgment on its affirmative defense of laches on Intervening Plaintiff B&K's copyright infringement claim. (Pl.'s Mot. 15:15-17.) "Laches is an equitable time limitation on a party's right to bring suit resting on the maxim that one who seeks the help of a court of equity must not sleep on his rights." Seller Agency Council, Inc. v. Kennedy Center for Real Estate Educ., Inc., 621 F.3d 981, 988 (9th Cir. 2010). The defense of laches requires: (1) an unreasonable delay in bringing suit; (2) prejudice resulting from the delay. Id. at 989.

"[D]elay is to be measured from the time that the plaintiff knew or should have known about the [*53] potential claim at issue." Kling v. Hallmark Cards, Inc., 225 F.3d 1030, 1036 (9th Cir. 2000). In 2003, Plaintiff began using the Global Truss Marks in the United States. (Schaul Decl. Ex. 14, at 61:16-22, 66:17-67:14, 68:2-69:7, 126:3-17.) Plaintiff alleges that Defendants have been sitting on their rights for approximately eight years. (Pl.'s Mot. 13:24.) However, Defendants argue that Plaintiff's alleged infringement occurred when Plaintiff exceeded the scope of its nonexclusive license by registering the Global Truss Marks with the USPTO. (Defs.' Opp'n 18:13-19.) A claim for copyright infringement can occur if the use of copyrighted materials exceeds the scope of an implied license. Oddo v. Ries, 743 F.2d 630, 634 (9th Cir. 1984). Defendants assert that Plaintiff had an implied license to use the Global Truss Marks and exceeded its implied license once Plaintiff registered the marks. (Defs.' Opp'n 17:26-18:2.)

Plaintiff argues that Defendants were put on inquiry notice that the Global Truss Marks would be registered by each member of the Distribution Group in each member's respective territory. (Pl.'s Reply 4:11-15; Decl. of Joshua A. Schaul in Supp. of Pl.'s Reply ("Schaul Reply Decl.") ¶ 14, Ex. 13.) In support of its contention, Plaintiff points to an email sent by Mr. Lee on March 25, [*54] 3003, stating that the "Partners . . . need to register the brand and logo ASAP." (Schaul Reply Decl. ¶ 14, Ex. 13.) Defendants claim that they were unaware of the potential for copyright infringement until December 17, 2010, when Plaintiff sought to have Defendant GLP's truss shipment seized by the LAPD. (Defs.' Opp'n 18:8-9; Pruetz Opp'n Decl. ¶ 17, Ex. 16; Braun Opp'n Decl. ¶¶ 15, 23.)

Because the parties present conflicting evidence as to when B&K knew or had reason to know about the potential copyright infringement claim, a reasonable jury could find that B&K did not know about its potential claim against Plaintiff until December 17, 2010. See Kling, 225 F.3d at 1041 ("[B]ecause a claim of laches 'depends on a close evaluation of all the particular facts in a case, it is seldom susceptible of resolution by summary judgment.'").

In addition, Defendants argue that there is a presumption that there has been no unreasonable delay because B&K brought its copyright claim within the statute of limitations period. (Defs.' Opp'n 18:22-23.) "The reasonableness of the plaintiff's delay is considered in light of the time allotted by the analogous limitations period." Jarrow Formulas, Inc. v. Nutrition Now, Inc., 304 F.3d 829, 838 (9th Cir. 2002). The statute of limitations period for a copyright [*55] claim is three years. 17 U.S.C. § 507(b).

Defendants argue that they brought their suit within the statutory period by filing its claim less than four months after it knew about Plaintiff's potential infringement. (Defs.' Opp'n 18:22-26.) Viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, the Court finds that there is a genuine issue of material fact as to when B&K knew or had reason to know about the potential copyright infringement. The Court DENIES Plaintiff's Motion for Summary Judgment on its affirmative defense of laches.

III. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Plaintiff's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment is DENIED.

For the foregoing reasons, Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment as to Claims 2, 3, 4, 6, and 7 is DENIED. Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment as to Claim 1 is GRANTED IN PART AND DENIED IN PART. The Court finds as a matter of law that Intervening Plaintiff B&K was not the first to use the Global Truss Marks in commerce in the United States. Defendants may proceed with the argument that Plaintiff does not own the Global Truss Marks on the theory that Plaintiff is not an exclusive distributor of the Global Truss products bearing the Global Truss Marks. [*56] The Court finds that Plaintiff's claim for violations under the Lanham Act prior to January 2011 fail as a matter of law. Plaintiff may proceed with the argument that Defendants violated the Lanham Act after January 2011. Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment as to Claim 5 is GRANTED.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

[*1148] MEMORANDUM DECISION AND ORDER

INTRODUCTION

The Court has before it several pending motions (Dkts. 72, 73, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 82, 85, 88, 120 and 122). The Court heard oral argument on the motions on June 20, 2011, [1] and now issues the following memorandum decision and order.

BACKGROUND

[1] The Court apologizes to counsel and the parties for the delay in issuing this decision. The confluence of a number of unanticipated events led to the "perfect storm" which precluded me from meeting my aspirational goal of issuing a decision on all motions within 30-45 days after oral argument. The Court will do everything within its power to ensure that this type of delay does not occur in the future.

Plaintiffs are a company who claims to have purchased potatoes directly from one or more of the defendants, and a series of persons or entities who allege they have indirectly purchased potatoes [9] from one or more of the defendants. The former is referred to as direct purchaser plaintiffs and the latter as indirect purchaser plaintiffs. [2] All plaintiffs contend that defendants illegally agreed to reduce the supply of potatoes in order to raise prices. Plaintiffs assert that the alleged scheme started when potato growers in Idaho formed a cooperative called United Potato Growers of Idaho ("UPGI"). The Idaho potato growers, along with potato farmers in several other states, then established United Potato Growers of America ("UPGA") as an umbrella cooperative.

Plaintiffs assert that the cooperatives were created for the purpose of increasing the price of potatoes through supply management. They further allege that defendants implemented their plan by agreeing to limit potato planting acreages, and by paying farmers to either destroy existing stocks or refrain from growing additional potatoes in order to reduce the overall number of potatoes available for sale to direct [10] purchasers. Plaintiffs contend that defendants' supply reduction program caused potato prices to be fixed, raised, [*1149] maintained, and/or stabilized. This, it is argued, violated the antitrust laws.

Defendants filed motions to dismiss on several grounds. Some of their arguments apply to all defendants (or large groups of defendants), while some are specific to individual defendants. After laying out the general legal standard for motions to dismiss, the Court will address motions that apply to each large groups of defendants, and then address individual defendant motions. [3]

LEGAL STANDARD

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(a)(2) requires only "'a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief,'" in order to "give the defendant fair notice of what the . . . claim is and the grounds upon which it rests, . . ." Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). While a complaint attacked by a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss [11] "does not need detailed factual allegations," it must set forth "more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Id. To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to "state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Id. at 570. A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged. Id. at 556. The plausibility standard is not akin to a "probability requirement," but it asks for more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully. Id. Where a complaint pleads facts that are "merely consistent with" a defendant's liability, it "stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility of 'entitlement to relief.'" Id. at 557.

In a more recent case, the Supreme Court identified two "working principles" that underlie Twombly. See Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). First, the tenet that a court must accept as true all of the allegations contained in a complaint is inapplicable to legal conclusions. Id. "Rule 8 [12] marks a notable and generous departure from the hyper-technical, code-pleading regime of a prior era, but it does not unlock the doors of discovery for a plaintiff armed with nothing more than conclusions." Id. at 1950. Second, only a complaint that states a plausible claim for relief survives a motion to dismiss. Id. "Determining whether a complaint states a plausible claim for relief will . . . be a context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense." Id.

[2] In this decision, the Court will distinguish between direct and indirect purchaser plaintiffs when necessary. Otherwise, the Court will refer to both direct and indirect purchaser plaintiffs simply as Plaintiffs.

[3] Based on discussions between the Court and counsel during oral argument, the Court will not rule on jurisdictional issues at this time. It appears this Court will permanently preside over the matter by stipulation and/or concession.

A dismissal without leave to amend is improper unless it is beyond doubt that the complaint "could not be saved by any amendment." Harris v. Amgen, Inc., 573 F.3d 728, 737 (9th Cir. 2009) (issued two months after Iqbal). [4] The [*1150] Ninth Circuit has held that "in dismissals for failure to state a claim, a district court should grant leave to amend even if no request to amend the pleading was made, unless it determines that the pleading could not possibly be cured by the allegation of other facts." Cook, Perkiss & Liehe, Inc. v. N. Cal. Collection Serv., Inc., 911 F.2d 242, 247 (9th Cir. 1990). The issue is not whether plaintiff will prevail but whether he "is entitled to offer evidence [13] to support the claims." See Hydrick v. Hunter, 466 F.3d 676, 685 (9th Cir. 2006).

These familiar principles guide the Court's analysis of any 12(b)(6) motion, but they bear repeating here. The Court will consider the Supreme Court's landmark decision, Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007), in more detail later, along with Ninth Circuit [14] authority interpreting that decision. Twombly is of particular importance here - not only because it announced the plausibility standard in the first place, but because it did so in the context of a Sherman Act § 1 claim.

Plaintiffs allege that defendants violated § 1 of the Sherman Act, which prohibits "any contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce." 15 U.S.C. § 1. To state a claim under § 1, plaintiffs must plead facts that plausibly suggest "(1) an agreement or conspiracy among two or more persons or distinct business entities, (2) by which the persons or entities intend to harm or restrain competition, and (3) which actually injures competition." Les Shockley Racing, Inc. v. Nat'l Hot Rod Ass'n, 884 F.2d 504, 507 (9th Cir. 1989). Additionally, for each individual defendant, plaintiffs must allege that that defendant had "'a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful object.'" Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984) (citation omitted).

Defendants' motions to dismiss fall into four basic categories. First, a large group of defendants assert that the Capper-Volstead [15] Act immunizes them from Sherman Act liability. Second, these defendants, along with several others, argue that plaintiffs have failed to plausibly allege that each individual defendant joined the conspiracy. Third, several defendants argue that the indirect-purchaser plaintiffs' claims should be dismissed based on standing and preemption doctrines. Fourth, defendant United Potato Growers of Canada ("UPGC") asserts unique arguments for dismissal based upon, among other things, the act of state doctrine.

1. MOTIONS TO DISMISS BASED ON THE CAPPER-VOLSTEAD ACT

A. The Capper-Volstead Act and Related Statutes

Congress enacted the Capper-Volstead Act in the early 1900's. It provides agricultural cooperatives with a limited exemption from antitrust laws. It states that:

> Persons engaged in the production of agricultural products as farmers, planters, ranchmen, dairymen, nut or fruit growers may act together in associations, corporate or otherwise, with or without capital stock, in

[4] The Court has some concern about the continued vitality of the liberal amendment policy adopted in Harris v. Amgen, based as it is on language in Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957), suggesting that "a complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim . . . ." Given Twombly and Iqbal's rejection of the liberal pleading standards adopted by Conley, a question arises whether the liberal amendment policy of Harris v Amgen still exists. Nevertheless, the Circuit has continued to apply the liberal amendment policy even after dismissing claims for violating Iqbal and Twombly. See Market Trading, Inc. v. AT&T Mobility, LLC, 388 Fed. Appx. 707, 2010 WL 2836092 (9th Cir. July 20, 2010) (not for publication). Accordingly, the Court will follow suit.

> collectively processing, preparing for market, handling, [*1151] and marketing in interstate and foreign commerce, such products of persons so engaged. Such associations may have marketing agencies in common; and such associations [16] and their members may make the necessary contracts and agreements to effect such purposes: Provided, however, That such associations are operated for the mutual benefit of the members thereof . . . .

7 U.S.C. § 291. The Capper-Volstead Act clarified and expanded the antitrust exemption for cooperatives found in Section 6 of the Clayton Act, which provided that:

> Nothing contained in the antitrust laws shall be construed to forbid the existence and operation of labor, agricultural or horticultural organizations instituted for the purposes of mutual help . . . or forbid or restrain individual members of such organizations from lawfully carrying out the legitimate objects thereof; nor shall such organizations, or the members thereof, be held or construed to be illegal combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade under the antitrust laws.

15 U.S.C. § 17.

Congress had enacted Section 6 of the Clayton Act to counter the possibility that the Sherman Act's prohibition against combinations in restraint of trade would be applied to imperil the development of cooperative endeavors such as unions. Case-Swayne Co. v. Sunkist Growers, Inc., 389 U.S. 384, 390-91, 88 S. Ct. 528, 19 L. Ed. 2d 621 (1967). But Section 6 of the Clayton [17] Act "shows no more than a purpose to allow farmers to act together in cooperative associations without the associations as such being held or construed to be illegal combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade, under the antitrust laws, as they otherwise might have been." Maryland & Virginia Milk Producers Ass'n v. U.S., 362 U.S. 458, 465 (1960) (Internal quotations omitted). Thus, "a group of farmers acting together as a single entity in an association cannot be restrained from lawfully carrying out the legitimate objects thereof, but . . . it [does not] give[] such an entity full freedom to engage in predatory trade practices at will." Id. (Internal quotations omitted).

With respect to the Capper-Volstead Act, the Supreme Court has recognized that it and its legislative history "'indicate[ ] a purpose to make it possible for farmer-producers to organize together, set association policy, fix prices at which their cooperative will sell their produce, and otherwise carry on like a business corporation without thereby violating the antitrust laws.'" In re Mushroom Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litigation, 621 F. Supp. 2d 274, 283 (E.D. Pa., 2009) (citing Maryland & Virginia Milk Producers, 362 U.S. 458, 466, 80 S. Ct. 847, 4 L. Ed. 2d 880 (1960). [18] It provides "that among the legitimate objects of farmer organizations [are] collectively processing, preparing for market, handling, and marketing products through common marketing agencies and the making of necessary contracts and agreements to effect such purposes." Id. (Internal quotations omitted). Thus, the general philosophy of Section 6 of the Clayton Act and the Capper-Volstead Act is simply that, through agricultural cooperatives acting as entities, individual farmers should be given the same unified competitive advantage and responsibility available to businessmen acting through corporations as entities. Id.

As explained below, the Court will deny the motions to dismiss to the extent they are based on the Capper-Volstead Act because questions of fact remain as to whether the Act applies in this case. However, the Court recognizes that the parties fully briefed and argued areas of law where case law is scant, and where there are no [*1152] disputed issues of fact in this case. Under these circumstances, the Court believes it prudent to address these areas of law because leaving them unresolved would likely cause the parties to incur unnecessary expense going forward. [5] If, as the [19] case progresses, disputed issues of fact appear where there were none today, or if significant new decisions are issued, a motion for reconsideration may be appropriate.

[5] This is an extraordinary step. Normally, the Court would not address an issue which was not legally or factually necessary to its decision. However, the Court views that offering such an "advisory opinion" in this case as consistent with the command of Rule 1, that the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure be "construed and administered to secure the just, speedy, and inexpensive determination of every action and proceeding." Fed. R. Civ. P. 1.

(1).Questions of Fact Remain about Whether the Capper-Volstead Act Applies

As noted above, the Capper-Volstead Act exempts certain agricultural cooperatives from antitrust liability. However, the Supreme Court has made clear that the exemption only applies if all participants in the organization qualify under the Act. Questions of fact prevent the Court from making a final determination on this question at this time.

In their complaint, [6] Plaintiffs contend that the Capper-Volstead exemption does not apply because Defendants conspired with non-members, ineligible members, and non-producers. [20] Plaintiff's contention is based upon the Supreme Court's decisions in Case-Swayne Co. v. Sunkist Growers, Inc., 389 U.S. 384, 88 S. Ct. 528, 19 L. Ed. 2d 621 (1967) and National Broiler Marketing Ass'n v. United States, 436 U.S. 816, 98 S. Ct. 2122, 56 L. Ed. 2d 728 (1978).

In Sunkist, the Court concluded that Congress did not intend to allow organizations with nonproducer interests to avail themselves of the Capper-Volstead exemption. Sunkist, 389 U.S. at 395-96. In that case, the structure of the Sunkist system included local producers organized into associations operating packing houses, with those houses organized into exchanges. Id. at 386. Although eighty-five percent of the local associations were exclusively made up of fruit growers, the remaining members were private, for-profit packing houses. Id.

The packers entered into contracts with producers where they would handle each grower's fruit at cost, plus a fixed surcharge. Id. The Supreme Court explained that the exemption should be limited to only actual producers of agricultural [21] products, and not those involved in the processing of those raw commodities into other products. Id. at 393. The Supreme Court concluded that Sunkist could not avail itself of the Capper-Volstead exemption because it included nonproducer interests. Id. The court noted that the right of agricultural producers to unite under the Capper-Volstead Act "cannot be deemed to authorize any combination or conspiracy with other persons in restraint of trade that these producers may see fit to devise." Id. at 395 (Internal citation omitted).

The holding in Sunkist was reaffirmed in National Broiler Marketing Ass'n v. United States, 436 U.S. 816, 98 S. Ct. 2122, 56 L. Ed. 2d 728 (1978). There, the Supreme Court concluded that in order for a defendant to be exempt from antitrust [*1153] liability pursuant to Capper-Volstead, the defendant must establish that both itself, and all entities with which it conspired, qualify under the Act. National Broiler, 436 U.S. at 822-23. "It is not enough that a typical member qualify, or even that most of [the] members qualify." Id.

Plaintiffs' complaint alleges that the cooperatives involve numerous vertically integrated members who perform packing and processing functions for themselves and other growers [22] of potatoes. The majority opinions in Sunkist and National Broiler do not provide a clear indication whether such integrated agribusiness would be a disqualified participant in an association otherwise protected by Capper-Volstead. Indeed, the majority in National Broiler expressly chose not to address the question. However, the dissenting and concurring opinions in that decision provide something of a roadmap to the answer to that question.

The dissent in National Broiler suggested that expanding the exemption to include integrated agribusiness is necessary because the nature of agriculture has changed dramatically since the Capper-Volstead Act was adopted. Id. Justice Brennan's concurring opinion explained why that argument fails. Justice Brennan noted that the dissent "recognizes that integrated . . . producers do not neatly fit the limitation Congress signified by the phrase 'as farmers,' but reads that limitation out of the Act in order to give effect to what it perceives as Congress' desire to aid the agricultural industry generally because of the uncertainty of profits in that industry caused by the combination of weather, fluctuations in demand, and perishability of the product." [23] National Broiler, 436 U.S. at 834 (Brennan, J., concurring). He then explained that such a drastic restructuring of the statute is both inconsistent with Congress' specific intent regarding the meaning of the limitation, and unnecessary to give continuing effect to its broader purposes. Id. In Justice Brennan's view, Congress consciously chose not to exempt processors engaged in the production of agriculture even though they bore some risks in common with agriculture generally. Id. The dissent's approach of adopting a bright-line rule permitting integrated producers to partake of the benefits of Capper-Volstead would do violence to that legislative intent. In Justice Brennan's view the proper approach is to engage in a case-by-case analysis, in which, "the nature of the association's activities, the degree of integration of its members, and the functions historically performed by farmers in the industry are relevant considerations in deciding whether an association is exempt." Id. at 836. [7]

[6] In this decision, the Court will refer to the direct purchaser complaint as DPC, and the indirect purchaser complaint as IPC when necessary to distinguish the two. Otherwise, the Court will simply refer to the complaint.

The defendants here urge the Court to adopt the bright line rule suggested by the dissent in National Broiler, to the effect that a farming operation is an eligible participant under Capper-Volstead, even if it is a fully integrated operation which extends from spring planting to the grocery store warehouse. However, the Court agrees with Justice Brennan's concern with that view. Adopting the dissent's [*1154] expansive reading of the statute would read "the farmer" requirement out of the statute, ignore congressional intent, and create the potential for abuse.

On the other hand, the Court is also disinclined to adopt a bright line rule that any degree of vertical integration disqualifies a farming operation from participating in a Capper-Volstead [25] eligible association. Rather, a factually-intense inquiry is necessary - one which focuses on the economics and history of potato marketing, the actual functions of the associations, and the degree of integration of the participants. From that evaluation a determination must be made as to whether granting Capper-Volstead exemption here would be consistent with the legislative intent to create an environment in which farmers can compete on a level playing field. However, a better-developed record is necessary before the Court can make that determination.

Accordingly, the Court will deny the motions to dismiss to the extent they are based on Capper-Volstead. In their complaint, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants entered into agreements with unprotected entities, including non-protected potato groups, non-producer partners, a dehydration joint venture, and integrated members and packer/warehouses. If proved, these allegations could preclude application of the Capper-Volstead exemption. Resolving these allegations of alleged anti-competitive practices which potentially place a defendant's conduct outside the Capper-Volstead exemption requires a fact intensive inquiry which should be completed [26] by the Court only after proper discovery has been conducted. [8]

(2).Legal Issues

As noted above, the Court will, although not necessary to its decision, address legal issues which have been fully briefed and argued, on which there is little case law, and where there are no disputed issues of fact.

(a)Collusive Production Curtailment

[7] Relying on Justice Brennan's concurrence, at least one lower Court has denied application of the Capper-Volstead exemption to integrated producers. In United States v. Hinote, 823 F. Supp. 1350 (S.D. Miss 1993) [24] the district court reasoned that applying Capper-Volstead to integrated producers would allow large agribusinesses organized to market and sell agricultural products to exempt themselves from the antitrust laws by simply purchasing or leasing some interest in a farming operation, no matter how de minimis the interest. Id. at 1359. The court concluded that such a result would undermine Congress' express purpose in enacting the Capper-Volstead Act. Id.

[8] As an additional ground for denying the motion to dismiss, the Court notes that the Capper-Volstead exemption is an affirmative defense. Alexander v. National Farmers Organization, 687 F.2d 1173, 1184 (8th Cir. 1982)(the Capper Volstead exemption "is an affirmative defense. . . ."). See also Fairdale Farms, Inc. v. Yankee Milk, Inc., 635 F.2d 1037, 1039 (2nd Cir. 1980) (referring to Capper-Volstead exemption as an affirmative defense); Northern California Supermarkets, Inc. v. Central California, 413 F. Supp. 984, 987 (D.C. Cal. 1976) (referencing the Capper-Volstead as an affirmative defense). In general, the merits of an affirmative defense cannot be properly addressed through Rule 12(b)(6), but should be resolved at trial or on summary judgment. See In re Southeastern Milk Antitrust Litigation, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44541, 2008 WL 2368212 (E.D. Tenn. 2008).

Plaintiffs contend that the [27] list of activities protected by the Capper-Volstead Act excludes acreage reductions, production restrictions, or collusive crop planning. The Court agrees.

The Court first notes that there are no cases where a court specifically approved, under the Capper-Volstead Act, a pre-production agricultural output limitation as opposed to a post-production marketing decision such as withholding of product from market. Likewise, there are no cases where a court has concluded that Capper-Volstead immunizes cooperatives and their members who seek to collectively implement production controls in order to raise prices.

However, the language of the Capper-Volstead Act itself indicates that it does not apply to production limitations. The Court must construe statutory terms in accordance with their ordinary meaning. Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Meyer, 510 U.S. 471, 476 [*1155] (1994); United States v. Nader, 542 F.3d 713, 717 (9th Cir. 2008). The key phrase of the Act, "processing, preparing for market, handling, and marketing," applies to acts done to an agricultural product after it has been planted and harvested. Thus, under the plain language of the statute, coordinating and reducing acreage for planting [28] is not allowed. [9]

The cases cited by Defendants for the contrary view are distinguishable. For example, in In the Matter of Wash. Crab Ass'n, 66 F.T.C. 45 (1964), the court did not address Capper-Volstead. Instead, the case dealt with the Fishermen's Collective Marketing Act ("FCMA") (15 U.S.C. § 521), which states:

> Persons engaged in the fishery industry, as fishermen, catching, collecting, [30] or cultivating aquatic products, or as planters of aquatic products on public or private beds, may act together in associations, corporate or otherwise, with or without capital stock, in collectively catching, producing, preparing for market, processing, handling, and marketing in interstate and foreign commerce, such products of said persons so engaged.

15 U.S.C. § 521. The plain language of that statute is far different from the plain language of Capper-Volstead. It specifically allows fishermen to act jointly in producing and catching fish.

Defendants next suggest that the court in Alexander v. Nat'l Farmers Organization, 687 F.2d 1173 (8th Cir. 1982) broadly considered antitrust claims involving a cooperative's efforts to limit the supply of milk. Defendants cite the court's conclusion that the cooperative's decision to withhold milk from the market "as a general matter, is within the scope of the Capper-Volstead exemption." Alexander, 687 F.2d at 1188. Alexander did not involve a production restriction, however. Instead, members of a dairy farmer cooperative withheld already produced milk from the market for a matter of days until the DOJ successfully enjoined it. Alexander, 687 F.2d at 1182.

[9] Federal agencies have also recognized that production limitations are 9 not permitted under Capper-Volstead. To the degree there is ambiguity in the statute on this issue, agencies with jurisdiction over the statue are typically entitled to Chevron deference, and their decisions would be persuasive. National Cable & Telecomms. Ass'n v. Brand X Internet Servs., 545 U.S. 967, 980, 125 S. Ct. 2688, 162 L. Ed. 2d 820 (2005). The DOJ and the FTC, the prime agencies responsible for enforcing federal antitrust laws, suggest a narrow interpretation of Capper-Volstead. The FTC's position seems clear from its statements in California Lettuce as explained below. As for the DOJ, it has expressed its position in its report to the task group on antitrust immunities. The DOJ explained that there is "evidence that Congress was concerned about the right or ability of cooperatives to restrict the supply of agricultural commodities." A Report of the U.S. Department of Justice to the Task Group on Antitrust Immunities, p. 68 (1977), Dkt. 111-14, Ex. M. The DOJ went on to state that "[i]t is not surprising that Congress did not specifically grant to the cooperatives the power to restrict supply . . . ." Id. The DOJ concluded [29] that "it would not be the act of a rational legislature to give the cooperatives the power to deal with overproduction, a factor which had been demonstrated was not a cause of the crisis it was addressing." Id. at 68-69.

The USDA's position has also been consistent with that of DOJ and FTC and in opposition to a view that production curtailments are allowed under Capper-Volstead. The USDA has issued reports and guidelines to farmers indicating that "it is not legal for cooperatives to control members' production. The basic role of cooperatives is to market the available supply in the most effective manner possible, not to limit production." Farmer Cooperatives in the United States, Cooperative Information Report 1 Section 3, USDA, Rural Business - Cooperative Service, p. 17 (1980, reprinted 1990), Dkt. 111-16, Ex. O.

The [31] case of Holly Sugar Corp. v. Goshen County Co-op. Beet Growers Ass'n, 725 [*1156] F.2d 564 (10th Cir. 1984) is even less applicable to this case. Defendants properly explain that in that case the Tenth Circuit recognized that the Capper-Volstead exemption protected the efforts of a sugar beet growers' association to prevent its members from contracting outside of the association. Members of the association had signed a marketing agreement which prevented them from contracting individually with a buyer. Holly Sugar, 725 F.2d at 566. After the association failed to reach an agreement with the buyer, several growers sought to sell their sugar beets outside of the association. Id. The members sued the association for relief from the marketing restriction, and the trial court granted the injunction. Id. at 567. The Tenth Circuit reversed and held that the marketing agreement did not violate antitrust laws and that the cooperative could prevent its members from negotiating independent sales contracts. Id. at 569.

Based on that finding, Defendants suggest that the Tenth Circuit concluded that the cooperative could manage the supply of sugar beets by preventing its members from putting their crops [32] on the market. Notably, however, there was no finding that the cooperative controlled pre-production agricultural output.

Defendants next rely on Northern California Supermarkets, Inc. v. Central California Lettuce Producers Coop., et al., 413 F. Supp. 984 (N.D. Cal 1976) which concluded that a cooperative's activities were within the purposes of Capper-Volstead and Section 6 of the Clayton Act through all production phases. In that case, the court specifically noted that the cooperative engaged in marketing activities such as gathering and disseminating information concerning the planting, harvesting and shipment of lettuce. This general statement does seem to cloud the issue a bit. However, there was no dispute in Northern California Supermarkets that the "primary activity of [the cooperative] [was] to set prices or price ranges to which members [were] required to adhere in the sale of their lettuce." Id. at 987. There was no indication that the cooperative actually curtailed production or did anything more than gather and disseminate information regarding pre-production agricultural output.

Still, Defendants argue that because Capper-Volstead cooperatives are allowed to fix prices, [33] they must also be allowed to restrict production. This argument is unpersuasive. The reason an agricultural cooperative can fix the price at which their good is sold is because if the price rises, farmers will produce more and consumers will not be overcharged. Individual freedom to produce more in times of high prices is a quintessential safeguard against Capper-Volstead abuse, which Congress recognized in enacting the statute.

Although dicta, the FTC's language in In the Matter of Central California Lettuce Producers Cooperative, 90 F.T.C. 18, at 32 n. 20 (July 25, 1977) is telling on this matter:

> Congress' attitude toward production controls provides an additional indication that it did not regard the corporation as the model around which the Capper-Volstead exemption would be built. Beyond doubt, a single corporation can restrict its output, if it chooses, without incurring antitrust liability. Nevertheless, there are strong indications that Congress did not intend to allow farmers to use cooperatives as a vehicle by which they could effectively agree to limit production.

(emphasis added). The FTC went on to quote Senator Capper during debate of the Act, where he stated:

> [*1157] But a farmers' [34] monopoly is impossible. If the cooperative marketing association makes its price too high, the result is inevitable self-destruction by overproduction in the following years. No other industry except agriculture has this automatic safeguard. With corporation activities the group producers, such as the United States Steel Corporation, can reduce the quantity of steel rails it will produce at any given time or completely close down its mills and reduce the supply.

Id. (Internal citations omitted).

Furthermore, "Congress has reinforced the interpretation that production controls were not authorized by adding to the Capper-Volstead Act a comprehensive statutory scheme for controlling supply in the form of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937 (AMAA), 7 U.S.C. 601 et seq." Id. If a cooperative is allowed to limit production among its own members, it can "shut[] off the safety valve against private abuse that ameliorates the adverse consumer impact of the Capper-Volstead exemption and circumvent[] the important procedural safeguards of the AMAA." Id.

For these reasons, the Court concludes that acreage reductions, production restrictions, and collusive crop planning are not activities [35] protected by the Capper-Volstead Act.

(b)Alleged Conspiracy with Foreign Association

Plaintiffs do not challenge the applicability of the Capper-Volstead exemption based on foreign farmers being members of UPGA. However, they do contend that any conspiracy with a foreign association negates the exemption. The issue has not been directly addressed by a court, and opinions on the matter are scant at best.

The most compelling evidence of whether a domestic cooperative forfeits application of the Capper-Volstead applies when it conspires with a foreign association is in the Act itself. The Capper-Volstead Act uses the term "persons" without limitation and does not exclude foreign producers. As pointed out by Defendants, the reference in the Act to "foreign commerce" demonstrates that Congress intended Capper-Volstead to apply to foreign entities. 7 U.S.C. §§ 291-292. Additionally, Section 6 of the Clayton Act serves to exempt agricultural producers from liability under the antitrust laws. The Sherman Act and the Clayton Act both define "person" to include "corporations and associations existing under or authorized by the laws of the United States, the laws of any of the Territories, the laws [36] of any State, or the laws of any foreign country." 15 U.S.C. §§ 7, 12(a). Accordingly, as a matter of law, any collaboration with foreign growers does not necessarily destroy the Capper-Volstead exemption.

A few courts have touched on the issue, but those cases are barely worth noting. For example, in Northern Cranberries Inc., v. Ocean Spray, Inc., 382 F. Supp. 2d 221 (D. Mass. 2004), the court interpreted the term "persons" in 7 U.S.C. § 291 to include foreign persons and entities such that they could be members of a domestic cooperative. Cranberries, 382 F. Supp. 2d at 225-26. However, the decision did not directly address whether a domestic cooperative would lose access to the Capper-Volstead exemption if it conspired with a foreign cooperative. Similarly, in United States v. Nat'l Board of Fur Farm Organizations, Inc., 395 F. Supp. 56, 57 (E.D. Wis. 1975), the court touched on the issue in the context of a motion to dismiss a criminal indictment. The court noted that both the government and the defendants appeared to agree that a Capper-Volstead organization is not exempt from liability if the [*1158] organization conspires with "other persons," but it never directly addressed the question [37] of whether the foreign organizations were exempt under Capper-Volstead. Instead, the court simply denied the motion to dismiss because the government was not obligated to negate the defense in the criminal indictment. Fur Farm, 395 F. Supp at 57.

Finally, United States v. Dairy Farmers of America, Inc., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19979, 2001-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P73,136, 2000 WL 33200552 (E.D. Pa. 2000) is not as helpful as suggested by Plaintiffs. Plaintiffs suggest that the DOJ's view as to the inapplicability of the Capper-Volstead Act to foreign producers figured into the resolution to its challenge to the acquisition by the Dairy Farmers of America ("D.F.A.") of SODIALL North American Corporation, a subsidiary of a large foreign cooperative. Plaintiffs cite the DOJ's competitive impact statement in that case, and suggest that central to DOJ's decision to block the merger was DOJ's determination that SODIALL did not have the benefit of the Capper-Volstead exemption. The impact statement does indicate that DOJ believes that SODIALL did not have the benefit of the Capper-Volstead exemption. (Dkt. 111, Ex. S.) However, there is no discussion about why SODIALL does not have the benefit of the exemption, or more importantly, whether a conspiracy between [38] D.F.A. and SODIALL would deny application of the exemption to D.F.A.

After considering the statutory language and the limited number of cases which have addressed the issue, the Court concludes that an association does not lose its Capper-Volstead exemption by including, among its members, foreign corporations or legal entities.

2. TWOMBLY MOTIONS

The defendants who seek a Twombly dismissal fall into four general categories: potato growers; licensors; marketers; and dehydrators.

A. The Potato Growers' Motion to Dismiss[10]

At its heart, this case is about a group of potato growers who allegedly agreed to reduce the supply of potatoes they produce so as to increase prices. See DPC ¶ 3. The core allegations against the potato growers begin with a September 2004 meeting in Blackfoot, Idaho, which is described in the complaints as follows:

> 167. The potato cartel was first formalized when Mr. Wada organized a meeting of Idaho potato farmers in September of 2004 to discuss how to "curb production" and "boost prices" for potatoes. At this meeting, Mr. Wada and Keith Cornelison (of Defendant Cornelison Farms) summoned 23 Idaho potato [*1159] growers to an office in Blackfoot, Idaho to discuss how their collective efforts at reducing potato supplies would help fix, raise, maintain, and stabilize prices.
> 168. After more meetings, [40] phone calls, and emails among these growers, the group agreed to form UPGI - with the explicit goal of reducing potato supplies through various means.
> 169. The 23 growers in attendance at this meeting became the founders of UPGI, which filed for incorporation on November 2, 2004. The founders' operations encompassed approximately 60 percent of the fresh potatoes produced in Idaho and 25 percent of the fresh potato market in the United States.
> . . .
> 171. In the Articles of Incorporation of UPGI, the stated purpose of the organization is "to stabilize potato prices and supplies in the State of Idaho and to work with similar cooperatives in other states having similar purposes."

DPC ¶ 167-69, 171. The growers who are identified as having attended the meeting include the moving grower defendants. Id. ¶ 170. It further alleges that these growers were founding members of UPGI and that they "explicitly signed on to the supply reduction and price-fixing scheme alleged herein." Id. The DPC goes on to detail various acts taken after the 2004 meeting to implement the conspiracy, including, among other things:

- Yearly acreage reductions rules, meaning that the growers planted fewer potatoes;
- A bid [41] buy-down program, whereby growers were paid not to plant potatoes;
- "Shipping holidays," during which packing plants were shut down for at least eight hours; and
- "Flow-control" activities, whereby certain defendants allegedly participated in marketing calls in an effort to prevent potatoes from being shipped when prices were too low.
- "Offloading" surplus potatoes by selling them to dehydration plants.

DPC ¶¶ 118, 185-90; see also IPC ¶¶ 221-27.

[10] The potato growers' arguments are set forth in the following three motions:

> (1) The Joint Motion. Numerous defendants filed this motion, but the Twombly arguments are asserted only by Wada Farms, Inc., Wada Farms Potatoes, Inc., Wada-Van Orden Potatoes, Inc., Wada Farms Marketing Group, LLC, Raybould Brothers Farms, LLC, Lance Funk, Snake River Plains Potatoes, Cornelison Farms, Keith Cornelison, and Michael Cranney. Dkt. 79-1.
> (2) The Larsen-Driscoll-Rigby Motion. Moving defendants are Blaine Larsen, Blaine Larsen Farms, Inc., Driscoll Potatoes, and Rigby Produce, Inc. Dkt. 75-1.
> (3) The Pleasant Valley Motion. The sole moving defendant is Pleasant Valley Potato, Inc. Dkt. [39] 73-1.

The first two motions raise common issues and will be addressed jointly under this heading. The Pleasant Valley Motion raises separate issues and is addressed below. United II also moved for dismissal in the Joint Motion, but it is more accurately categorized as a dehydrator defendant. United II's arguments are thus addressed below along with the other dehydrator defendants' motions for dismissal.

The grower defendants contend that these allegations fail to plausibly allege a § 1 conspiracy as to each individual defendant. They make two basic arguments in support of this contention. First, they argue that mere membership in a trade association such as UPGI or UPGA cannot form the basis of a § 1 conspiracy. See Joint Mot. Memo., Dkt. 79-1, at 23. Second, they argue that plaintiffs have failed to allege each individual defendant's role in the alleged conspiracy with sufficient factual detail.

(1).The Membership Argument

Turning first to the membership argument, defendants rely on Kline v. Coldwell Banker & Co., 508 F.2d 226 (9th Cir. 1974) and Kendall v. Visa U.S.A. Inc., 518 F.3d 1042 (9th Cir. 2008). In Kline, a group of real estate sellers [42] sued a local realty board and thirty-two named brokers who were board members during the previous four years. Plaintiffs alleged that the defendants conspired to fix brokerage commissions at six percent by distributing a recommended fee schedule to its members. Id. at 228. The Ninth Circuit reversed the district court's grant of class certification because plaintiffs had not shown that common questions predominated as to defendants' liability. Id. at 236. In so holding, the Court clarified that membership in the realty board, standing alone, was insufficient to impose liability. Id. at 233. Rather, "in order for a member of a trade association to become . . . liable in a treble damage case he must [*1160] have 'knowingly, intentionally and actively participated in an individual capacity in the scheme.'" Id. at 232 (citation omitted).

The key difference between Kline and this case is that in Kline plaintiffs did not allege that the realty board itself was created to effectuate a pre-existing agreement to violate antitrust laws. Here, by contrast, plaintiffs allege that UPGI and UPGA were formed for the sole purpose of managing potato supply and fixing prices. See, e.g., DPC ¶ 3. Further, defendants [43] allege that the grower defendants were directly involved in the meetings and agreements leading to the formation of the cooperatives. This allegation - essentially, that UPGI and UPGA formalized an underlying § 1 conspiracy - is supported with "evidentiary factual" allegations. For example, plaintiffs allege that UPGA's website articulates its "Vision" as follows: "We will manage national potato supply so as to positively affect grower profitability." Id. ¶ 198; see also id. ¶ 164. As for UPGI, because it believed it had Capper-Volstead immunity, UPGI's stated corporate purpose is "to stabilize potato prices and supplies in the State of Idaho and to work with similar cooperatives in other states having similar purposes.'" Id. ¶ 171; see also id. ¶ 200 ("Our efforts are targeted at supply management in order to help growers receive a reasonable price for their crop.").

As such, these defendants did not merely join an extant trade association and then choose whether or not to follow suggested guidelines; rather, plaintiffs alleged that they first agreed to the conspiracy outlined in the complaint, and then created the trade associations to formalize and implement that agreement. Kline [44] is thus inapposite.

Kendall does not support the grower defendants' membership theory either. In that case, plaintiffs alleged that a group of credit card companies and banks conspired to fix two separate fees related to credit card transactions - an interchange fee and a merchant discount fee. Kendall, 518 F.3d at 1046. Regarding the interchange fee, the bank defendants successfully argued that plaintiffs had not plausibly alleged that the banks conspired to fix the interchange fee. Id. at 1048. Rather, according to the banks, Visa and MasterCard set these fees and the banks chose to adopt them. See id. This prompted the Ninth Circuit to invoke Kline in dismissing the complaint against the banks:

> Regarding the allegations that the Banks conspired to fix the interchange fee, merely charging, adopting or following the fees set by a Consortium [Mastercard or Visa] is insufficient as a matter of law to constitute a violation of the Sherman Act. In Kline, we held that membership in an association does not render an association's members automatically liable for antitrust violations committed by the association.

Id. at 1048 (internal citation to Twombly omitted).

A handful of grower defendants [45] argue that they are in an analogous position to the bank defendants in Kendall. See Larsen-Driscoll-Rigby Mot. Memo., Dkt. 75-1, at 7-8; Hearing Transcript, Dkt. 151, at 208-12. These defendants point out that the bank defendants in Kendall were owner-members of Visa (which defendants liken to a "cooperative"), just as the potato growers here are members of cooperatives. See Larsen-Driscoll-Rigby Reply, Dkt. 130, at 4. They also argue that the interchange fee in Kendall was "enforced in a mandatory way on all members [and] could not be varied, ..." Hearing Transcript, Dkt. 151, at 209; see also, e.g., Larsen-Driscoll-Rigby Reply, Dkt. 130, at 4-5.

[*1161] These grower defendants then proceed to argue that they are just like the banks: They may have planted fewer potatoes because UPGI and UPGA had mandatory acreagereduction (and other rules), but being a member of that cooperative, and merely adopting or following cooperative rules cannot give rise to § 1 liability under Kendall and Kline. See, e.g., Hearing Transcript, Dkt. 151, at 210 (at oral argument counsel asserted that "the mere fact that some member of the institution is required to charge or adopt or follow the fees - or in this [46] case it would be the acreage limitation rules or other practices set down by the association - does not, as a matter of law - the Ninth Circuit's term - give rise to a claim.").

This argument has two problems. First, although the Kendall plaintiffs alleged that the banks participated in the management of, and held a propriety interest in Visa and MasterCard, the banks successfully argued that they did not conspire to set the interchange fee. See Kendall, 518 F.3d at 1048 (holding that although plaintiffs alleged that the banks actively participated "in an individual capacity in the scheme to fix the interchange fee or the merchant discount fee, this was nothing more than a conclusory statement."). Here, by contrast, plaintiffs have provided evidentiary factual allegations that the moving grower defendants met and agreed to the scheme alleged in the complaint. Now, of course, whether that can be proven remains to be seen - either at trial or in the context of a motion for summary judgment. But, for purposes of a motion to dismiss, it is sufficient that the plaintiffs have alleged that the defendants met and agreed to the scheme.

Second, the grower defendants' argument that the interchange [47] fees were "enforced in a mandatory way" was not part of the Ninth Circuit's holding and appears to be controverted by the record in that case. In district court proceedings, Visa and MasterCard repeatedly asserted that each network permitted member banks to opt out of the default interchange fees and apply different arrangements between particular acquirers and issuers. [11] The Ninth Circuit did not find to the contrary on appeal.

Kendall is thus distinguishable. Among other things, plaintiffs have plausibly alleged that the growers themselves came together and agreed to reduce potato supply and stabilize prices. Such allegations were not present in Kendall.

(2).The Who-What-Where-When Argument

In addition to arguing that their "mere membership" in the cooperatives cannot form the basis for liability, the moving grower defendants argue that plaintiffs have not sufficiently connected each individual defendant to the alleged conspiracy. To resolve this argument requires the Court to resolve the parties' underlying dispute as to the correct pleading standard in antitrust cases following the Supreme Court's decision in Bell Atlantic Corp. v. [*1162] Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) and the Ninth Circuit's decision in Kendall v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 518 F.3d 1042 (9th Cir. 2008). The parties have fundamentally different views of these cases. In particular, the parties dispute how detailed an antitrust complaint must be in answering the "basic questions: who, did what, to whom (or with whom), where, and when?" Id. at 1047. The Court will explore Twombly and Kendall in some detail before turning to the allegations [49] in this case.

(a)Twombly and Kendall

In Twombly, the plaintiffs alleged that a group of telephone companies - the Baby Bells [12] - were engaging in "parallel behavior." In other words, they were not competing. But that's all plaintiffs alleged to support their inference that the Baby Bells must have entered into an illegal conspiracy. The core allegation was simply that > [i]n the absence of any meaningful competition between the [defendants] in one another's markets, and in light of the parallel course of conduct that each engaged in to prevent competition from [other carriers] within their respective local telephone and/or high speed internet services markets and the other facts and market circumstances alleged above, Plaintiffs allege upon information and belief that [the defendants] have entered into a contract, combination or conspiracy to prevent competitive entry in their respective local telephone and/or high speed internet services markets and have agreed not to compete with one another and otherwise allocated customers and markets to one another.

Id. at 551, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929.

The problem with this allegation is that § 1 of the Sherman Act does not require sellers to compete; it just forbids their agreeing not to compete. Further, the Supreme Court found that the Baby Bells had "tremendous independent economic incentive to resist 'sharing' and to forego entering one another's markets at the pain of being forced to subsidize a competing long distance carrier by sharing equipment." In re Packaged Ice Antitrust Litig., 723 F. Supp. 2d 987, 1004 (E.D. Mich. 2010) (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 566).

Thus, the Twombly complaint merely alleged a fact - parallel behavior - that was equally consistent with two competing inferences: (1) an inference that the defendants were conspiring and; (2) an inference that market conditions enabled them to avoid competing without having to agree not to compete. The Court concluded that without more, this independent, economically self-motivated behavior was not enough to sustain a conspiracy claim. Instead, the Court held that allegations of parallel conduct must be placed in a factual context that [51] "plausibly suggests" an agreement. Id. at 556-57.

In footnote 10 of its opinion, the Court explained just how barren the complaint was. Id. at 565 n.10. In this oft-cited footnote, the Court explained that Twombly's conspiracy allegations, standing alone, probably would not even provide the defendants the notice required by Rule 8. Id. at 565 n.10. Indeed, the only specific thing Twombly did to show a conspiracy was to identify "the seven-year span in which the § 1 violations were supposed to have occurred . . . ." Id. Otherwise, the pleadings "mentioned [*1163] no specific time, place, or person involved in the alleged conspiracies." Id. As a result, it furnished "no clue as to which of the four ILECs (much less which of their employees) supposedly agreed, or when or where the illicit agreement took place." Id. A defendant seeking to respond to such a complaint "would have little idea where to begin." Id.

Less than a year after the Supreme Court handed down Twombly, the Ninth Circuit decided Kendall. In reciting the new plausibility standard announced in Twombly, the Kendall Court cited Twombly's footnote 10, stating that Supreme Court "suggested that to allege an agreement between antitrust [52] co-conspirators, the complaint must allege facts such as a 'specific time, place, or person involved in the alleged conspiracies,' to give a defendant seeking to respond to allegations of a conspiracy an idea of where to begin." Id. at 1047 (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 565 n.10). Notably, the Kendall complaint was as barren as Twombly's. In dismissing the complaint, the Court found that even after conducting discovery, "the complaint does not answer the basic questions: who, did what, to whom (or with whom), where, and when?" Id. at 1048.

In the wake of Twombly and Kendall, antitrust defendants have relied on footnote 10 and the who-what-where-when language in Kendall to argue that complaints filed against them are deficient - even when complaints contain [12] The Baby Bells, as they were known, were regional telephone companies that were the successors to the Bell Operating Companies [50] that AT&T had been forced to divest in settlement of the government's antitrust suit against it. See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 548, 550 n.1.

detailed "evidentiary factual" allegations connecting them to the alleged conspiracy. See, e.g., In re Packaged Ice Antitrust Litig., 723 F. Supp. 2d at 1008 ("Defendants continue to sound the who, what, when and where refrain throughout their briefs . . . ."). Many courts have rejected such arguments (including district courts within the Ninth Circuit), concluding that the Supreme Court did not impose the elaborate "who-what-where-when" [53] pleading requirement defendants insisted upon. [13]

(b)Plaintiffs' Who-What-Where-When Allegations

Turning to plaintiffs' allegations in this case, the Court finds that plaintiffs have alleged sufficient evidentiary facts connecting the moving grower defendants to the alleged [54] conspiracy. [14] This complaint does answer the basic who-what-where-when question. Specifically: Who? Twenty-three growers, including the moving grower defendants. What? Met and agreed to reduce potato supply and fix prices. When? Fall 2004. Where? An office in Blackfoot, Idaho.

Because these basic questions are answered, and the defendants have supplied additional factual detail regarding the activities [*1164] of the group thereafter (albeit not on a defendant-by-defendant basis), the moving defendants have "an idea of where to begin" in responding to the complaint. See Kendall, 518 F.3d at 1047.

Some defendants argue that the language in the complaint suggesting that the defendants "signed onto" or "participated" in the supply-reduction/price-fixing scheme are "conclusory allegations" that "must be disregarded." Joint Reply, Dkt. 134, at 11. In a vacuum, such terms would be conclusory. But that is not so here. Plaintiffs have supported [55] these allegations with sufficient factual detail. As noted, the moving grower defendants attended the 2004 meeting and agreed to reduce supply of and fix prices for potatoes.

As for the subsequent conduct of these defendants, at this stage plaintiffs do not need to provide elaborately detailed who-what-where-when facts for every single act that the moving grower defendants allegedly took to implement the scheme. Yet this is what defendants seem to demand. For example, in the Larsen-Driscoll-Rigby motion, defendants take issue with the following allegation, and, in particular, the use of the disjunctive "and/or":

> All Defendants involved in potato growing and selling operations herein . . . . were direct participants in the supply reduction scheme outlined herein and followed acreage reductions, participated in the bid-buy-down program, participated in and utilized information obtained from marketing calls and packing reports, and/or reduced the domestic supply of potatoes for the express purposes of fixing, raising, maintaining and/or stabilizing prices.

DPC ¶ 246 (emphasis added). These defendants argue that they do not have proper notice of what they allegedly did, asking: "Did Larsen [56] 'participate' in the bid buy-down program? Or 'utilize' information from marketing calls and packing reports? Or both? What about Driscoll? Rigby?" Larsen-Driscoll-Rigby Mot. Memo., Dkt. 75-1, at 9. Defendants go on to state that the "obvious explanation is that plaintiffs don't know." Id.

[13] See, e.g., In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig., 599 F. Supp. 2d 1179, 1183 (N.D. Cal. 2009) ("Contrary to defendants' suggestions, neither Twombly nor the Court's prior order requires elaborate fact pleading."); In re Packaged Ice, 723 F. Supp. 2d at 1005 ("Twombly imposed no such requirement); In re Southeastern Milk Antitrust Litig., 555 F. Supp. 2d 934 (E.D. Tenn. 2008) (holding sufficient complaints that "while not answering all specific questions about 'who, what, when and where,' do put defendants on notice concerning the basic nature of their complaints against the defendants and the grounds upon which their claims exist"); see also Starr v. Sony BMG Entm't, 592 F.3d 314, 325 (2d Cir. 2010); In re Graphics Processing Units Antitrust Litig., 527 F. Supp. 2d 1011, 1024 (N.D. Cal. 2007) (plaintiffs need not plead "specific back-room meetings between specific actors at which specific decisions were made").

[14] Pleasant Valley is an exception. Additionally, plaintiffs' allegations relating to various Wada entities makes it unclear which particular Wada entity is alleged to have joined the purported conspiracy. Issues specific to these defendants are discussed below.

Defendants ask too much. Plaintiffs have alleged - with the requisite factual specificity - the moving grower defendants' agreement to reduce potato supply and fix and elevate potato prices. This adequately describes their basic role in the alleged scheme. The level of factual detail defendants demand here is more appropriately reserved for summary judgment. See, e.g., In re Cathode Ray Tube (CRT) Antitrust Litig., 738 F. Supp. 2d 1011, 1022 (N.D. Cal. 2010); In re Static Random Access Memory (SRAM) Litig., 580 F. Supp. 2d 896 (N.D. Cal. 2008) ("Defendants . . . rely upon the standard for a motion for summary judgment."). The Court will therefore deny the following grower defendants' motions to dismiss: (1) Blaine Larsen Farms; (2) Cornelison Farms; (3) Keith Cornelison; (4) Michael Cranney; (5) Driscoll Potatoes, Inc.; (6) Lance Funk; (7) Blaine Larsen; (8) Raybould Brothers Farms, LLC; (9) Snake [57] River Plains Potatoes, Inc.; and (10) Rigby Produce, Inc. As explained next, the Court will grant the Pleasant Valley and Wada entities' motions to dismiss, although plaintiffs will be given leave to amend the complaint.

(3).Pleasant Valley and the Wada Entities

Unlike the other moving grower defendants, Pleasant Valley argues that plaintiffs have not sufficiently connected it to the Fall 2004 meeting where the alleged conspiracy originated. [15] Typically, plaintiffs [*1165] allege that a particular individual attended the meeting, and that the individual is "of" an entity defendant. For example, plaintiffs assert that "Lorraine Driscoll (of Driscoll Potatoes)" attended "the initial UPGI meeting" and "explicitly signed on to the supply-reduction and price-fixing scheme . . . ." DPC ¶ 170. Elsewhere, plaintiffs usually allege that the entity defendant "is a founding member of UPGI." See, e.g., id. ¶ 102 ("Driscoll Potatoes is a founding member of UPGI"). Plaintiffs were not entirely consistent in this regard; but, for the most part, the moving grower defendants did not take issue with this particular aspect of the pleading. That is, the entity defendants did not contend that the individuals who [58] attended the meeting were not connected to them, or that the named individual did not attend the meeting on their behalf.

As already noted, Pleasant Valley is an exception. Plaintiffs allege that Pleasant Valley is a "founding member of UPGI." DPC ¶ 111. That allegation, in turn, rests on the allegation that Kim Wahlen attended the Fall 2004 meeting and "signed on to" the conspiracy alleged in the complaint. Id. ¶ 170. There are no allegations to indicate Mr. Wahlen's relationship to Pleasant Valley, or his ability to act on behalf of that entity. Rather, Plaintiffs connect Mr. Wahlen to Pleasant Valley only with the word of. See id. (identifying "Kim Wahlen (of Pleasant Valley Potato)").

This allegation - basically, the word "of," - is not sufficient to plausibly allege that Mr. Wahlen had the authority to, or did, act on Pleasant Valley's behalf, or attend that meeting on Pleasant Valley's behalf. Cf. Acosta Orellana v. Croplife Int'l, 711 F. Supp. 2d 81, 112 (D.D.C. 2010) [59] (formulaic recitations of the essential elements of agency will not suffice). Plaintiffs have therefore failed to allege facts connecting Pleasant Valley to the scheme outlined in the complaint and dismissal with leave to amend is appropriate.

The Court also takes judicial notice of UPGI's articles of incorporation, which do not list Pleasant Valley as a founding member. See Fed. R. Evid. 201(b); MGIC Indem. Corp. v. Weisman, 803 F.2d 500, 504 (9th Cir. 1986). As certified public records kept by the Secretary of State in Idaho, the articles fall directly within the category of documents the Ninth Circuit generally considers proper for judicial notice. Weisman, 803 F.2d at 504. This Court may consider the articles as part of a 12(b)(6) motion without converting that motion to one for summary judgment. Id.

Various Wada entities make a related argument. In essence, these defendants contend that plaintiffs named them as defendants only because they carry the Wada name and because Albert Wada, the individual, is an alleged "mastermind" of the conspiracy.

[15] During oral argument, Pleasant Valley's counsel asserted that Pleasant Valley is a packing shed only, and that it does not even grow potatoes. For purposes of this motion, however, the Court must assume the truth of plaintiff's allegation that Pleasant Valley is a grower.

Plaintiffs name the following Wada entities as defendants: (1) Wada Farms, Inc.; (2) Wada Farms Potatoes, Inc.; (3) Wada Van-Orden Potatoes, [60] Inc.; and (4) Wada Farms Marketing Group, LLC. DPC ¶¶ 30-32, 45. Plaintiffs then define the first three entities as "Wada Farms," and then allege that "Wada Farms through Albert Wada, played a critical role in the formation of UPGI and UPGA and the implementation of the supply reduction conspiracy." Id. ¶ 38; see also id. ¶ 170 (alleging that "Albert Wada (of Wada Farms)" attended "the initial UPGI meeting" and "explicitly signed on to the supply [*1166] reduction and price-fixing scheme . . . .") (emphasis added). Plaintiffs also allege that "Defendant Albert Wada is the Chairman and former CEO of Wada Farms." Id. ¶ 38. In context, it is not clear if plaintiffs are alleging that Mr. Wada is the chairman and former CEO of all three entities.

These allegations do not allow the reader to figure out why each corporate entity has been named as a defendant, or what its connection to the underlying scheme is. With three entities lumped together as one ("Wada Farms"), the complaint fails to sufficiently connect each corporate defendant to the scheme. Plaintiffs will be given leave to amend in order to clarify how each entity is allegedly connected to the scheme.

As for Wada Farms Marketing, plaintiffs [61] allege that it is the " [16] sales and marketing arm of Wada Farms" and that it "participated in and benefitted from the conspiracy." Id. ¶ 49. Plaintiffs further assert that "Wada Farms controls Wada Farms Marketing and Wada Farms Marketing acted pursuant to that control." Id. ¶ 50; see also id. ¶ 51 ("Wada Farms Marketing acted as Wada Farms' agent.").

Plaintiffs attempt to connect all marketer defendants to the complaint with allegations such as these: "Idaho marketing calls were implemented" and prior to these calls "participating warehouses would log on the UPGI web-page and provide information on capacity, stocks and pack-outs. These data along with other information . . . were discussed and . . . summarized . . . on the internet to assist with 'flow-control' and prevent potatoes from being shipped when prices were too low." Id. ¶ 190.

These allegations do not sufficiently connect Wada Farms Marketing to the scheme. The control allegations are too [62] conclusory, and the other allegations do not specifically implicate Wada Farms Marketing. The Court will dismiss the complaint as to Wada Farms Marketing but will grant plaintiffs leave to file an amended complaint to allege how Wada Farms Marketing is connected to the scheme.

B. Licensor Defendants - Dole's Motion to Dismiss

Dole Food Company Inc. and Dole Fresh Vegetables are named as licensor defendants. See DPC ¶¶ 52-66; IPC ¶¶ 132-45. These defendants do not grow or sell their own potatoes. Rather, Dole Fresh Vegetables licenses Wada Farms Marketing the right to place the DOLE® label on Wada-grown potatoes. This licensing® relationship has been in existence for roughly 15 years.

The Dole defendants contend that because this is all they do (that is, license their brand name [17]) they should be dismissed from this action. More specifically, Dole argues that plaintiffs fail to sufficiently allege it participated in the price-fixing/supply-reduction conspiracy alleged in the complaint. Dole also argues that plaintiffs fail to properly plead an agency relationship that would give rise to vicarious liability.

[16] As its name suggests, Wada Farms Marketing is more accurately characterized as a marketer defendant. Nonetheless, the Court will address Wada Farms Marketing here, given the similarity of its argument to the other Wada entity defendants.

[17] The Court refers to both Dole entities as "Dole" herein. To be clear, however, [63] Dole Fresh Vegetables, not Dole Food Company Inc., is the licensor. Although the parties dispute whether plaintiffs can "impute" the license to Dole Food Company Inc., the Court does not need to resolve this question to decide Dole's motion.

As to Dole's allegedly direct participation in the scheme, there are just a few allegations. Both complaints allege: "During the Class Period, Dole Fresh Vegetables participated in the supply-restriction and price-fixing scheme . . . alleged herein." DPC ¶ 52; IPC ¶ 133; see also DPC ¶ 246; IPC ¶ 268 (alleging, parenthetically, that Dole Food was a "direct participant in the supply reduction scheme outlined herein . . . .").

These conclusory statements are not amplified with sufficient evidentiary factual allegations. Plaintiffs do not allege, for example, [64] that Dole attended the supply-reduction meetings described in the complaint. Nor do plaintiffs allege that Dole "signed on" to any supply-reduction agreement reached at those meetings. Instead, the complaint rests almost entirely on the existence of the licensing arrangement described above.

But the fact that Dole entered into a licensing agreement several years before the alleged conspiracy began does not sufficiently link Dole to the conspiracy. Nor are there any other allegations in the complaint that would allow the Court to infer that Dole directly participated in the alleged conspiracy. Although the allegations need not include elaborate detail, the complaint must allege that each individual defendant joined the conspiracy and played some role in it. After all, the hallmark of an antitrust conspiracy is a "common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective." Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764, and each individual defendants' conscious commitment to that scheme.

(2).Agency Theory of Liability

Given the deficiency of the direct-liability allegations, plaintiffs are left with their agency allegations. See generally Am. Soc. of Mech. & Elec. Eng'rs v. Hydrolevel, 456 U.S. 556, 569, 102 S. Ct. 1935, 72 L. Ed. 2d 330 (1982) [65] (defendants may be held liable for Sherman Act violations under an agency theory of liability). As with other allegations in the complaint, plaintiffs are not permitted to rest on conclusory allegations to properly plead an agency relationship. See Acosta Orellana, 711 F. Supp. 2d at 112 (formulaic recitations of the essential elements of agency will not suffice); Millar v. Pitman Bd. of Educ., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 63962, 2011 WL 2417141 (D.N.J. June 13, 2011) (citing cases); *Imageline, Inc. v. CafePress.com, Inc., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 39828, 2011 WL 1322525, at 4 (C.D. Cal. Apr. 6, 2011) ("To sufficiently plead an agency relationship, a plaintiff must allege facts demonstrating the principal's control over its agent.").

The principles of agency law at issue here - actual authority and apparent authority - are well settled: "Actual authority consists of powers which a principal directly confers upon an agent, as well as those the principal causes or permits the agent to believe he or she possess." 2A C.J.S. Agency § 133; see also Restatement (Third) Agency § 2.01 (2006); Sun Microsystems, Inc. v. Hynix Semiconductor Inc., 622 F. Supp. 2d 890, 899 (N.D. Cal. 2009) (federal common law of agency applies, as guided by principles set forth in [66] the Restatement of Agency). Apparent authority focuses on third parties. It arises when a third party reasonably believes that the putative agent had authority [*1168] to act on behalf of the principal and that belief can be traced to the principal's own manifestations. See Restatement (Third) Agency § 2.03 & cmts. c, d. Apparent authority is "basically an estoppel principle which operates in favor of third parties seeking to bind a principal for unauthorized acts of its agents." 2A C.J.S. Agency § 391.

Plaintiffs' complaints contain brief, conclusory allegations that the "Wada Defendants acted as the Dole Defendants' agent in participating in the price-fixing and capacity reduction scheme alleged herein." DPC ¶ 62; IPC ¶ 133. The more specific factual allegations intended to support these allegations arise out of the licensor-licensee relationship. See DP Opp., Dkt. 110, at 57 (arguing that "the Dole Defendant's relationship with the Wada Defendants goes well beyond that of traditional licensorlicensee"). For example, plaintiffs allege that "Wada Farms Marketing holds the exclusive marketing agreement for potatoes, onions, and sweet potatoes sold under the national Dole label" and [18] For purposes of this motion, the Court assumes, without deciding, that Dole may be liable as a direct participant in the scheme. See generally Am. Soc. of Mech. & Elec. Eng'rs v. Hydrolevel, 456 U.S. 556, 569, 102 S. Ct. 1935, 72 L. Ed. 2d 330 (1982) (non-profit, standard-setting association liable for § 1 violation of Sherman Act; the association did not produce or sell the mechanical device at issue).

that due [67] to this relationship, the Wada Defendants "enjoyed frequent contact with and supervision from the Dole representatives." DPC ¶¶ 47, 61; see IPC ¶ 135, 141.

Plaintiffs also allege that "[a]s licensor of the potatoes sold by the Wada Defendants, the Dole Defendants had control over many aspects of the marketing, selling, packaging, quality and branding of these potatoes." DPC ¶ 61; see IPC ¶ 135, 141. They go on to quote the following statement from the Wada Farms' website that discusses the Dole/Wada relationship:

> Our relationship with Dole started approximately 15 years ago based on a mutual commitment to provide the highest quality products and service to every customer. The Dole brand has been around for over a century and means the finest, highquality products. Through Wada Farms Marketing Group, Dole will continue to meet customers' expectations by consistently providing potatoes and onions that meet the highest standard. With the combined program and experience of Wada Farms, there are unlimited opportunities with the National Dole label for potatoes, onions, and sweet potatoes. For Wada and Dole, anything less is unacceptable.

DPC ¶ 47; see IPC ¶ 78 [68] (same quote, with minor omissions).

Plaintiffs allege that through this webpage, along with other, unspecified "representations to various third parties and the public," Dole and Wada "confirmed" that "Wada was acting on Dole's behalf and as Dole's agent in the production, marketing and sales of Dole potatoes." DPC ¶ 64; IPC ¶ 143.

But neither the website statement nor any of the other allegations supports the sweeping conclusion that Dole invested the Wada defendants with actual or apparent authority "to act on Dole's behalf, including by reducing the supply of Dole-branded potatoes . . . ." DPC ¶ 63. The allegations in this regard are benign (such as the allegation that Dole was in frequent contact with Dole) or conclusory (such as the allegation that Dole "supervised" or otherwise "controlled" Wada [19]). Moreover, [*1169] Dole does not grow or sell potatoes. Consequently, under the facts alleged in this complaint, it does not seem plausible that Dole would be in a position to "control" the potato growers.

At most, plaintiffs' allegations show that Dole and Wada have united interests on particular issues, such as their "mutual commitment to provide the highest quality products and service to every customer." DPC ¶ 47; IPC ¶ 78. But the mere fact that Dole and Wada have some united interests is not enough to plausibly suggest that one is the agent of the other. There must be some indication that one entity is directing the other. See Acosta Orellana v. Croplife Int'l, 711 F. Supp. 2d 81, 115 (D.D.C. 2010) ("Regardless of how united [two parties] might be with respect to any particular issue, there can be no principal-agent relationship absent [70] some indication that the position of one of the entities was taken at the direction of the other.'") (citation omitted). Here, plaintiffs' agency allegations regarding Dole are far too conclusory for this Court to infer that Wada was acting as Dole's agent, and the string of authorities plaintiffs cite, see DP Opp., Dkt. 110, at 50-52, does not support a contrary conclusion.

In sum, plaintiffs have failed to sufficiently allege that Dole participated - either directly or indirectly - in the alleged conspiracy. Dismissal of the § 1 claim against Dole is thus appropriate.

The Court will also dismiss the indirect purchasers' state-law claims against Dole. In its moving papers, Dole asserted that if the conspiracy claim against it fails, all of the indirect purchasers' state-law claims necessarily fail in that they expressly hinge on pleading conspiracy. Dole Mot. Memo., Dkt. 88-1, at 13-14. Plaintiffs apparently concede the point; they did not respond to that argument.

[19] This particular allegation is contained in the direct-purchaser complaint. See DPC ¶ 63 ("Throughout the Class Period, the Dole Defendants exercised actual or apparent authority over the [69] Wada Defendants as those Wada entities publicly and repeatedly announced their intentions to reduce potato supplies nationwide and encouraged competitors to do the same. The Dole Defendants invested authority in the Wada Defendants to act on Dole's behalf, including by reducing the supply of Dole-branded potatoes, despite knowing of the Wada Defendants' efforts to restrict potato supplies and fix prices nationwide with their co-conspirators) (emphasis added). The later-filed indirect-purchaser complaint omits the italicized language. See IPC ¶ 142.

Finally, given the weakness of the allegations against Dole, the complaint against Dole will be dismissed with prejudice. Associated Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 528 n.17, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983) ("a district [71] court must retain the power to insist upon some specificity in pleading before allowing a massive factual controversy to proceed").

C. Marketing Defendant - Potandon's Motion to Dismiss

Potandon Produce L.L.C. sells potatoes and onions to major retailers, club stores, wholesalers, produce distributors and restaurant chains. IPC ¶ 88. The company is owned by five prior Pillsbury managers and "six grower/shippers." Id. Potandon is the marketing agent for several Idaho potato growers, including defendant Larsen Farms. Id. ¶ 89.

(1).Direct Participation

Potandon argues that it is peripheral to any conspiracy alleged in this action because it does not grow potatoes. Plaintiffs, however, insist that Potandon was directly involved in the conspiracy because Potandon participated in the "flow-control" measures alleged in the complaint. See DP Opp., Dkt. 110, at 35. Per the plaintiffs, flow control is exactly what it sounds like - controlling the number of potatoes that flow into the marketplace. Plaintiffs allege that flow-control efforts include basic monitoring of the marketplace and then reducing supply when deemed necessary by, for example, donating potatoes to food banks or imposing "shipping [72] holidays" in which potato-packing [*1170] operations shut down for eight or more hours. See DPC ¶¶ 189-91, 209-210.

The problem with plaintiffs' theory is that their flow-control and related allegations are not specifically directed at Potandon. Counsel essentially conceded this point at oral argument. See Hearing Transcript, Dkt. 151, at 263.

Plaintiffs also argue that the Court should simply infer Potandon's direct involvement based on the Potandon's size and role in the industry. Plaintiffs allege that Potandon is the largest potato marketer in North America, controlling 25% of the Idaho potato market. DPC ¶¶ 72, 77. Thus, according to plaintiffs, the Court should just understand that "the conspiracy could not have operated without Potandon's direct and significant involvement given its size and role." DP Opp., Dkt. 110, at 36.

This argument is contrary to cases holding that an antitrust plaintiff must "allege that each individual defendant joined the conspiracy and played some role in it because, at the heart of an antitrust conspiracy is an agreement and a conscious decision by each defendant to join in." In re Elec. Carbon Prods., 333 F. Supp. 2d at 311-12. Under this standard, plaintiff's [73] allegation that Potandon directly participated in the alleged conspiracy is insufficient.

(2).Liability as Marketing Agent

In addition to claiming that Potandon was directly involved in the conspiracy, Plaintiffs allege Potandon is liable as a marketing agent for certain of the grower defendants.

A marketing agent is not liable for the acts of its alleged principal in a § 1 conspiracy unless the agent (1) had "knowledge of its supplier's purpose to restrain trade," (2) "intended to restrain trade itself rather than simply earn its usual and customary commission," and (3) contribute[d] materially to the restraint." 7 Herbert Hovenkamp & Philip E. Areeda, Fundamentals of Antitrust Law ¶ 1474c (3d ed. 2010). A defendant that does not meet each of these requirements "does not share a 'conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective,' as the Supreme Court has required. Id. (quoting Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764).

Plaintiffs have wholly failed to plead two of these requirements - knowledge and material contribution. Instead, plaintiffs ask the Court to infer facts supporting Potandon's alleged knowledge of and material contribution to the alleged conspiracy. See, [74] e.g., DP Opp., Dkt. 110, at 39. As for the third requirement - intent - plaintiffs rely on a conclusory allegation, along with allegations that do not mention or otherwise implicate Potandon. See id. (citing DPC ¶¶ 80, 186, 189, 214).

These allegations are deficient. The three elements articulated above must be pled, and those ultimate allegations must be supported with evidentiary factual allegations.

(3).Corporate Control and Ownership Theories of Liability

In addition to claiming that Potandon is liable as a direct participant or as a marketing agent for a conspirator, plaintiffs suggest that Potandon is liable by virtue of its corporate ownership structure. In that regard, plaintiffs allege:

> Potandon is owned and/or controlled by its suppliers and has conspired with its potato growers to assist in efforts to reduce potato supplies and fix prices and has directly profited from the price fixing scheme detailed herein.

DPC ¶ 80.

This allegation is not sufficient to connect Potandon to the alleged conspiracy. [*1171] The allegation that Potandon "conspired with its potato growers" is a bare conclusion. And Potandon - a separate corporate entity - cannot be implicated in the conspiracy based solely [75] on the fact that one of its owners is an alleged conspirator. See In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 618 F.3d 300, 341 n.44 (3d Cir. 2010). Plaintiffs have not plausibly alleged that Potandon's separate corporate status should be ignored under any alter ego or agency theory of liability. Cf. Hinds County v. Wachovia Bank, 708 F. Supp. 2d 348, 367 (S.D.N.Y. 2010) (finding that plaintiffs had "plausibly alleged" that the legal fiction separating two corporate defendants "was illusory as to the transactions at issue . . . .").

Allen v. Dairy Farmers of America, Inc., 748 F. Supp. 2d 323 (D. Vt. 2010), which the parties discuss at some length, supports dismissal of the complaint against Potandon. In Allen, dairy farmers sued various entities in the milk industry for antitrust violations. The defendants included a cooperative of dairy farmers; the cooperative's exclusive marketing agent; and two large milk bottlers, including defendant HP Hood LLC. Id. at 330-31. The allegations against Hood were based on little more than (1) Hood was a large milk bottler, (2) another defendant (the dairy farmers' cooperative) had a 15% ownership interest in Hood, (3) an allegation that the cooperative [76] "exercised control over all of the milk supplied to Hood; . . ." and (4) an allegation, "wholly devoid of facts" that Hood benefitted from the underlying conspiracy. Id. at 333-34. Based on these allegations - which failed to "alleged any facts regarding Hood's alleged agreement to conspire" - the district court granted Hood's motion to dismiss. Id. at 334 (emphasis in original).

The allegations against Potandon are similarly lacking; they are based primarily on Potandon's relative size, the fact that a grower defendant partially owns the company, and conclusory allegations of control and benefit. Hood thus supports Potandon's position.

The Court rejects plaintiffs' argument that Potandon is more analogous to the marketing agent sued in Allen. Among other things, the Allen complaint contained sufficient factual allegations for the court to conclude that the dairy farmers' cooperative and its marketing agent "acted as one." Id. at 344. There are no such allegations here. Dismissal of the complaint against Potandon is therefore appropriate.

At oral argument, however, plaintiffs indicated that, if given leave to amend, they intend to name Potandon as a direct participant in the flow-control [77] measures described above. The Court will grant the motion to dismiss, without prejudice to plaintiffs filing an amended complaint.

Finally, the Court rejects Potandon's argument that the Cooperative Marketing Act ("CMA"), 7 U.S.C. § 455, provides it with a separate and distinct form of immunity. See Potandon Mot. Memo., Dkt. 76-1, at 17-19. Section 5 of the CMA allows cooperatives to use a common agent to "acquire, exchange, interpret, and disseminate" various types of information, including, for example, market information and information regarding "past, present, and prospective crop[s]." 7 U.S.C. § 455. On its face, the CMA does not expressly state that the cooperative at issue must be a Capper-Volstead cooperative. See id. Potandon therefore argues that the CMA immunizes it from Sherman Act liability - even if the cooperatives Potandon serves are not Capper-Volstead cooperatives.

Potandon's argument fails based on the language of the CMA. To be sure, the CMA does not expressly state that "Capper-Volstead [*1172] cooperatives" may share market information though a common agent. But Congress did copy the entire, cumbersome definition of a Capper-Volstead cooperative and then paste it into [78] the CMA, just before the language stating what such a cooperative "may" do. Section 5 of the CMA provides that > Persons engaged, as original producers of agricultural products, such as farmers, planters, ranchmen, dairymen, nut or fruit growers, acting together in associations, corporate or otherwise, in collectively processing, preparing for market, handling, and marketing in interstate and/or foreign commerce such products of persons so engaged, may acquire, exchange, interpret, and disseminate past, present, and prospective crop, market, statistical, economic, and other similar information by direct exchange between such persons, and/or such associations or federations thereof, and/or by and through a common agent created or selected by them.

7 U.S.C. § 455 (emphasis added).

The italicized language precisely describes a Capper-Volstead cooperative. For ease of reference, here again is the description of a Capper-Volstead cooperative, as found in 7 U.S.C. § 291:

> Persons engaged in the production of agricultural products as farmers, planters, ranchmen, dairymen, nut or fruit growers may act together in associations, corporate or otherwise, with or without capital stock, in collectively [79] processing, preparing for market, handling, and marketing in interstate and foreign commerce, such products of persons so engaged.

Given this duplicate language, it seems obvious that Congress intended the CMA to apply to Capper-Volstead cooperatives. Further, when it passed the CMA, Congress stated that "nothing contained in this chapter is intended, nor shall be construed, to modify, or repeal any of the provisions of sections 291 or 292 of [the Capper-Volstead Act]." 7 U.S.C. § 457; see also Christine A. Varney, The Capper-Volstead Act, Agricultural Cooperatives, and Antitrust Immunity, The Antitrust Source, Dec. 2010, at 2 n.10 (The CMA "authorizes Capper-Volstead-type cooperatives to acquire and exchange 'past, present, and prospective crop, market, statistical, economic, and other similar information.'"). Consequently, the CMA does not provide a separate immunity for Potandon.

D. Dehydrator Defendants

The "dehydrator" defendants include United II, R.D. Offutt, and Idahoan Foods, LLC. Plaintiffs allege that these defendants participated in a 2007 joint venture whereby "R.D. Offutt partnered with Defendant United II to create . . . Idahoan Foods." DPC ¶ 117.

The deal allegedly included [80] the following components: (1) UPGI formed United II, which is a second cooperative made up of some UPGI members; (2) R.D. Offutt contributed potato processing plants to the venture; (3) United II and R.D. Offutt own Idahoan Foods, which is a limited liability company; (4) Idahoan Foods acquired a company (Idaho Fresh-Pak) that had four dehydration plants; and (5) United II's growerowners supply all the potatoes for Idahoan Foods' Idaho and Nevada plants. Id. ¶¶ 27-29, 118-20, 315-20; IPC ¶ 47, 153-55; see also Hearing Transcript, Dkt. 151, at 160.

Plaintiffs allege that Idahoan Foods was created as part of the overarching scheme to reduce the supply of potatoes that made their way to the market. As plaintiffs put it, the "joint venture enabled potato growers to offload surplus potatoes and further reduce supplies and thereby further facilitated [*1173] and contributed to the price-fixing scheme alleged." DPC ¶ 118; see also id. ¶ 124; IPC ¶¶ 47-48, 157-58, 280, 315. In related allegations, plaintiffs allege that UPGI explicitly and publicly stated the joint venture's purpose. See, e.g., DPC ¶ 315; IPC ¶ 328. For example, the complaint alleges:

- "UPGI also discussed this venture in its March [81] 2007 newsletter and stated United of Idaho [UPGI] feels that the current dehy strategy being implemented is critical to United's overall mission of supply management." DPC ¶ 319; IPC ¶ 332 (emphasis in complaints)

- "In December of 2007, UPGI announced the new 'Idahoan Fresh Potato Plan' as part of this venture and as a means to further control supplies and fix prices where UPGI proposed that growers sell 100% of their potatoes to Idahoan Fresh." DPC ¶ 320; IPC ¶ 333.

The dehydrator defendants argue that - notwithstanding allegations regarding UPGI's intentions for the joint venture - plaintiffs have alleged nothing more than a lawful, vertically integrated, pro-competitive agreement. Plaintiffs counter that they are not concerned with the vertical elements of the joint venture; rather, they are focused on a horizontal, price-fixing component within this vertical arrangement.

(1).United II and R.D. Offutt - The Joint Venture Partners

As such, plaintiffs initially focus on the fact that both joint venture partners grow potatoes: R.D. Offutt is a large, North-Dakota-based grower, with 60,000 acres devoted to potatoes. DPC ¶ 127-30. United II is comprised of some UPGI members, all of whom [82] grow potatoes. Plaintiffs next contend that these growers came together to figure out how they could divert fresh potatoes out of the fresh-potato market. The theory was explained during oral argument as follows:

> It all started with an agreement between Offutt and UPGI to initiate this program, this conduct in order to divert fresh potatoes out of the fresh potato market. And that was the key.
> So what you have is a horizontal arrangement between UPGI and its member growers on the one hand, and Offutt, an enormous grower, on the other, a horizontal agreement. And that's the genesis of the plan: How are we going to set up a mechanism, which ultimately had some vertical components, but the key to it was the initiation of a horizontal agreement, which Offutt was a key participant.

Hearing Transcript, Dkt. 151, at 161.

Facts supporting this theory, however, are not alleged in the complaint. In particular, plaintiffs have not alleged facts showing that "it all started with an agreement between Offutt and UPGI."

The factual allegations relating to United II are, mainly, that it is a cooperative made up of UPGI growers who wished to participate in the dehydration venture. Plaintiffs also allege [83] that "UPGI, its members, and co-conspirators have conspired and colluded with 'United II' - a non-grower, vertically integrated potato purchaser, to assist with supply-restriction efforts." DPC ¶ 257(h); IPC ¶ 5(viii).

As for R.D. Offutt, plaintiffs allege that in 2004, the company sent a representative to a November 2004 meeting regarding the formation of national and regional cooperatives. DPC ¶ 173. Unlike many other grower defendants, R.D. Offutt is not alleged to have joined any cooperative in 2004. Plaintiffs also allege that in connection with "shutting down potato processing plants as part of this venture, Paul Noah, [*1174] an R.D. Offutt official in North Dakota stated that "[i]n essence, there is excess capacity in the industry." Id. ¶ 125.

Plaintiffs contend that these allegations - combined with the fact of the joint venture agreement - support an inference that R.D. Offutt agreed to the over-arching conspiracy described in the complaint. In particular, plaintiffs assert that R.D. Offutt must have been aware of UPGI's overall goals for the venture. But these facts are not sufficient to infer that R.D. Offutt viewed the transaction the same way UPGI did, or that it entered the transaction [84] for these reasons. This is particularly true because there is an obvious alternative explanation for R.D. Offutt's participation in the venture - namely, that R.D. Offutt wanted to acquire potatoes for dehydration plants. As such, it becomes difficult for the Court to infer R.D. Offutt's larger agreement to the underlying conspiracy.

On this point, courts disagree as to whether the complaint itself needs to exclude the possibility of independent action, and the Ninth Circuit has yet to rule on this precise issue. Some courts, including the Third and Sixth Circuits, hold that if plaintiffs do not allege direct evidence of an agreement to restrain trade, they must allege "sufficient circumstantial evidence tending to exclude the possibility of independent conduct." *Watson Carpet & Floor Covering, Inc. v. Mohawk Indus., Inc., 648 F.3d 452, 2011 WL 2462833, at 4 (6th Cir. June 22, 2011); see also In re Ins. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 322-23 (conspiracy allegations deficient "if there are 'obvious alternative explanation[s]' for the facts alleged.") (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 567). Others hold that "despite the need to show some factual context supporting a plausible inference of conspiracy, [85] at the motion to dismiss stage a plaintiff need not allege facts that fully exclude 'independent self-interested conduct as an explanation for defendant's parallel behavior." LaFlamme v. Societe Air France, 702 F. Supp. 2d 136, 151 (E.D.N.Y. 2010) (citing Starr v. Sony BMG Entm't, 592 F.3d 314, 325 (2d Cir. 2010)).

To a certain extent, these decisions are reconcilable. As the Court sees it, plaintiffs must allege facts tending to exclude independent action, but they need not allege facts that fully exclude it. The standard is properly viewed as a fluid one; that is, if plaintiffs allege strong circumstantial evidence of an agreement, there is less of a need to allege facts negating an obvious, independent reason for defendants' conduct. This reading of the cases is in accord with Twombly's holding, where the Supreme Court "[a]cknowledg[ed] that parallel conduct' between two businesses "was consistent with an unlawful agreement, [but] nevertheless concluded that it did not plausibly suggest an illicit accord because it was not only compatible with, but indeed was more likely explained by, lawful, unchoreographed free-market behavior." Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1950 (as quoted in *Watson Carpet, 648 F.3d 452, 2011 WL 2462833, at 4).

Here, [86] plaintiffs rely on circumstantial evidence to show that R.D. Offutt agreed to the overarching conspiracy alleged in the complaint - mainly UPGI's statements and the fact of the dehydration venture. Those factual allegations (even in combination with the more specific allegations described above) are weak in terms of suggesting that R.D. Offutt itself consciously committed to the conspiracy, particularly in view of the fact that there is an obvious alternative, independent explanation for R.D. Offutt's entry into the joint venture agreement. At most, plaintiffs have pled that R.D. Offutt had an opportunity to join the conspiracy. Such allegations are insufficient to "nudge plaintiffs' [*1175] claims across the line from the conceivable to the plausible." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570; cf. In re Fla. Cement & Concrete Antitrust Litig., 746 F. Supp. 2d 1291 (S.D. Fla. 2010) ("the opportunity to conspire does not on its own or when paired with parallel conduct suggest Defendants entered an agreement to fix prices"); Hinds County v. Wachovia Bank, 620 F. Supp. 2d 499 (S.D.N.Y. 2009) (participation in trade associations or conferences cannot support allegations of a conspiracy). The complaints against [87] R.D. Offutt will be dismissed.

Because the complaint fails to plausibly allege the dehydration agreement contained, as one of its component parts, a horizontal agreement whereby R.D. Offutt entered the underlying conspiracy, the allegations against the remaining dehydrator defendants collapse.

Turning first to R.D. Offutt's joint-venture partner, plaintiffs have not put forth sufficient evidentiary facts supporting the allegation that United II itself consciously committed itself to any underlying, horizontal conspiracy. Some of its members may well have, as the Court has determined that the complaint plausibly alleges that certain grower defendants joined the alleged conspiracy. But this does not necessarily bring United II into the fold.

In sum, the complaint plausibly alleges that UPGI viewed the dehydration venture as a key part of its supply-management efforts. What the complaint does not do is allege that United II and R.D. Offutt joined the underlying conspiracy. The complaint against these defendants will therefore be dismissed with leave to amend.

(2).The Joint Venture LLC - Idahoan Foods

The complaint against the joint venture LLC itself, Idahoan Foods, LLC, will also be dismissed [88] because there are no evidentiary factual allegations tying Idahoan to the scheme alleged in the complaint other than the fact of the dehydration joint venture agreement. All plaintiffs have alleged at this point is that Idahoan purchases potatoes from some members of an alleged "potato cartel." That, in and of itself, does not give rise to antitrust liability. See Rick-Mik Enters. v. Equilon Enters., LLC, 532 F.3d 963 (9th Cir. 2008). Further, as with R.D. Offutt, Idahoan has obvious independent, economically self-motivated reasons for entering into the transaction - to purchase potatoes. The facts pled do not allow the court to reasonably infer that Idahoan itself conspired with the potato growers to reduce supply or fix prices.

The Court will therefore grant Idahoan Foods' motions to dismiss, with leave to file an amended complaint.

3. INDIRECT PURCHASER CLAIMS

Defendants make three arguments why the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs ("IP" Plaintiffs) claims should be dismissed: (1) federal law pre-empts the IP Plaintiffs state law claims; (2) the IP Plaintiffs do not have standing under the laws of the states where they have not been injured; and (3) the IP Plaintiffs do not have standing [89] to pursue antitrust claims.

With respect to the pre-emption argument, the IP Plaintiffs agree that they are not seeking application of state antitrust laws beyond what Capper-Volstead immunizes for federal antitrust liability. With respect to standing under the laws of states where they have not been injured, Plaintiffs have agreed to amend their complaint to add plaintiffs in those states. Therefore, the only issue remaining is whether the IP Plaintiffs have standing to pursue antitrust claims.

[*1176] There is no doubt that the IP Plaintiffs must establish antitrust standing. But what is required to allege enough facts to survive a motion to dismiss is less clear. Defendants initially argued that the factors listed by the Supreme Court in Associated General Contractors of California v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983) ("AGC") provide the Court with the best approach to determine antitrust standing, and that the Court should apply those factors. Plaintiffs countered that the Court should reject any suggestion that the Court read limitations derived from federal law into state indirectpurchaser statutes in the absence of authority from the states' legislatures and [90] courts. At oral argument, defense counsel modified their approach, and suggested that the Court ignore AGC particularly, or whether or not each state applies it, and focus on the following common denominators: (1) causation; (2) remoteness; and (3) injury.

At this stage of the litigation, the Court agrees with defense counsel's suggestion. This makes sense in light of the Court's indication to the parties at oral argument that it would be receptive to an amended complaint. Accordingly, the Court will grant the motion to dismiss, and instruct Plaintiffs to re-plead. In doing so, Plaintiffs need to be more specific about the plaintiffs and the product. The Court notes that some of what plaintiffs must plead was covered in the briefs and at oral argument, but the pleadings must match the statements made by counsel in the briefs and during oral argument.

4. CLAIMS AGAINST UPGC

UPGC makes three arguments why the Court should dismiss the claims against it: (1) UPGC is an agency and instrumentality of a foreign state and is thus immune from the jurisdiction of any court in the United States pursuant to the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act (the "FSIA"); (2) antitrust immunity under the Cooperative [91] Marketing Act ("CMA"); and (3) the act of state doctrine warrants dismissal because a foreign sovereign granted UPGC authority to engage in the acts deemed unlawful by Plaintiffs.

Although the claims against UPGC are not barred by either the FSIA or the CMA, they are barred by the Act of State Doctrine. The Court will briefly explain why the first two arguments fail, and then explain why the claims must be dismissed under the Act of State Doctrine.

A. FSIA

Under the FSIA, a "foreign state" is immune from the jurisdiction of the federal and state courts of the United States unless it falls within an exception. 28 U.S.C. § 1604. A "foreign state" includes "a political subdivision of a foreign state or an agency or instrumentality of a foreign state as defined in [§ 1603(b)]." 28 U.S.C. § 1603(a). An agency or instrumentality of a foreign state is:

> Any entity -
> (1) which is a separate legal person, corporate or otherwise, and
> (2) which is an organ of a foreign state or political subdivision thereof, or a majority of whose shares or other ownership interest is owned by a foreign state or political subdivision thereof, and
> (3) which is neither a citizen of a State of the United States as defined [92] in section 1332(c) and (d) of this title, nor created under the laws of any third country.

28 U.S.C. § 1603(b). The parties dispute whether UPGC fulfills the second element. The Court agrees with Plaintiffs that the [*1177] second element is not fulfilled because UPGC is not an organ of a foreign state.

An organ of a foreign state "engages in a public activity on behalf of the foreign government." Cal. Dep't of Water Res. v. Powerex Corp., 533 F.3d 1087, 1098 (9th Cir. 2008). In determining whether an entity is an organ of a foreign state, courts consider whether the entity engages in a public activity on behalf of the foreign government. To make this determination, courts examine the following factors: (1) the circumstances surrounding the entity's creation; (2) the purpose of its activities; (3) its independence from the government; (4) the level of government financial support; (5) its employment policies; and (6) its obligations and privileges under state law. Id.; see also Patrickson v. Dole Food Company, 251 F.3d 795, 807 (9th Cir. 2001). An entity may have some autonomy from the foreign government and still be its organ. Patrickson, 251 F.3d at 807.

First, with respect to the circumstances [93] surrounding its creation, UPGC asserts that it is nothing more than a forum through which its member agencies implement the powers granted by Canada's provinces. UPGC suggests that this case is similar to Cal. Dep't of Water Res. v. Powerex Corp., where the Ninth Circuit held that the circumstances surrounding Powerex's creation weigh in favor of finding Powerex to be an organ of British Columbia. Powerex, 533 F.3d at 1099. In so holding, the court explained that Powerex was a wholly owned subsidiary of BC Hydro, which was created by the British Columbia Hydro and Power Authority Act. Powerex owed its very existence to the Province, which instructed BC Hydro to establish a subsidiary that would assist it with its sovereign functions.

UPGC contends that similarly, the provincial governments created the member agencies, and those agencies created UPGC to assist them with their sovereign functions. The Court finds a striking difference between the two. In Powerex, the Ninth Circuit explained that British Columbia's Minister of Energy, Mines, and Petroleum Resources notified BC Hydro that the Provincial Cabinet wanted a single agency to be responsible to market the export of power outside [94] the province and that such an entity should be a wholly owned subsidiary of BC Hydro. Id. Powerex was incorporated within a month. Id.

Here, although the member agencies may have created UPGC, it does not owe its very existence to a province. A province did not instruct or direct the member agencies to establish UPGC or any other subsidiary that would assist it with its sovereign functions. According to the Amended Complaint, the entire UPGA Board of Directors met with key industry leaders in Canada and the United States, where more than 250 potato growers preliminarily approved the startup of a Canadian counterpart to the UPGA. Another meeting was later held in Toronto, Canada, where the UPGA board initiated the formation of UPGC. Amended Complaint ¶ 239, Dkt. 63. Accordingly, the circumstances surrounding the creation of UPGC weigh against finding that UPGC qualifies as an organ.

Second, the purpose of UPGC's activities also weighs against finding that it qualifies as an organ of government. UPGC argues that like Powerex, it helps immune entities fulfill the mission and goals dictated by Canada's provinces and statutes. However, the Ninth Circuit also noted that the Canadian province [95] looked to Powerex to further other public policies. Id. at 1100. Powerex fulfills the goals of the Power for Jobs Development Act by supplying power on favorable terms to expanding businesses in British Columbia. [*1178] Id. It also played a role in treaty formation and implementation. Id. All of these activities were pursued for public purposes. Id.

That is not the case here. The allegations in the Amended Complaint are that the purpose of UPGC's activities is to disseminate information about the production and marketing of potatoes. UPGC does not dispute this.

Next, UPGC contends that it is controlled and funded by immune government entities. UPGC argues that because it consists of immune member agencies, is controlled by those agencies, and depends upon those agencies for funds, both the third and fourth factors support a finding of organ status. UPGC focuses its argument on the member agencies, arguing that since every member of UPGC's board of directors is a representative of an immune member agency, and because those board members are immune from suit, then UPGC should be immune from suit. UPGC also notes that the member agencies fund UPGC.

There is some merit in UPGC's argument. However, [96] the Court cannot make the same finding as the Ninth Circuit did in Powerex. In that case, the court explained that Powerex was restrained by provincial regulations and directives applicable to government corporations, that the province could limit Powerex's ability to enter banking and other financial arrangements, and that Powerex's financial operations were reviewed by the province's comptroller general. The Ninth Circuit also noted that the province had sole beneficial ownership and control of Powerex.

These same indicators of government control are not present with regard to UPGC. Thus, at best this factor is a wash, and would likely tip in favor of not finding immunity were it the only factor the Court were to consider.

The final two factors, UPGC's employment policies and UPGC's obligations and privileges under state law, do not tip the scale in either direction. UPGC has one parttime employee, who is not a public servant. Employment of civil servants is indicative of an organ of government, but it is not dispositive. Id. at 1102. Moreover, it does not appear that any savings UPGC receives as a non-profit amounts to substantial financial support.

Based on an evaluation of all six [97] factors, the Court finds that the scale tips decidedly in favor of finding that UPGC is not an organ of a foreign state.

The Court is also unpersuaded by UPGC's argument that it must be deemed an organ of a foreign state because each of its underlying member agencies are, themselves, organs of a foreign state. The Ninth Circuit has explained that Congress was exceedingly conscious of the distinction between foreign states, political subdivisions, and agencies or instrumentalities of foreign states and political subdivisions. Gates v. Victor Fine Foods, 54 F.3d 1457, 1462 (9th Cir. 1995). The Ninth Circuit further noted in Gates that "[a] contrary reading of the statute could expand immunity far beyond what Congress intended." Id.

> As it is written, the Act provides potential immunity to entities that are either organs of a foreign state or political subdivision thereof or have a majority of shares owned by the foreign state or political subdivision. To add to that list entities that are owned by an agency or instrumentality would expand the potential immunity considerably because it would provide potential immunity for every subsidiary in a corporate chain, no matter how far down the [98] line, so long as the first corporation is an organ of the foreign state or political subdivision or [*1179] has a majority of its shares owned by the foreign state or political subdivision. Although such a broad view of sovereign immunity may very well be desirable, we cannot assume that Congress intended such a result when a literal reading of the statute leads to the opposite conclusion.

Id. UPGC's "organ of an organ of a foreign state" argument requires just such an expansion of immunity - one which the Ninth Circuit has found to be unsupported by a literal reading of the statute. Accordingly, UPGC is not entitled to FSIA immunity.

B. Cooperative Marketing Act

UPGC also contends that it is immune from antitrust liability pursuant to the CMA. As noted previously, section 5 of the CMA immunizes individuals and entities engaged in certain cooperative marketing activities including,

> [p]ersons engaged, as original producers of agricultural products, such as farmers, planters, ranchmen, dairymen, nut or fruit growers, acting together in associations, corporate or otherwise, in collectively processing, preparing for market, handling, and marketing in interstate and/or foreign commerce such products [99] of persons so engaged, may acquire, exchange, interpret, and disseminate past, present, and prospective crop, market, statistical, economic, and other similar information by direct exchange between such persons, and/or such associations or federations thereof, and/or by and through a common agent created or selected by them.

Plaintiffs do not dispute that the CMA allows certain entities to engage in data-gathering and data-exchange, and that those entities may engage in direct interchange of information through an association or federation. However, Plaintiffs contend that UPGA's activities went much further and included conduct not immunized by the CMA - specifically, participating in and facilitating supply-restriction and price-fixing. Plaintiffs concede that UPGC collects and disseminates information, but that is not the sole basis of the claims against them. Plaintiffs allege that UPGC conspired with other defendants to reduce the supply of fresh and process potatoes for the purpose of artificially inflating their price. The CMA does not apply to these allegations.

C. The Act of State Doctrine

The classic statement of the Act of State Doctrine was made more than one [100] hundred years ago in Underhill v. Hernandez, 168 U.S. 250, 18 S. Ct. 83, 42 L. Ed. 456 (1897), when Justice Fuller stated that "[e]very sovereign State is bound to respect the independence of every other sovereign State, and the courts of one country will not sit in judgment on the acts of the government of another done within its own territory. Redress of grievances by reason of such acts must be obtained through the means open to be availed of by sovereign powers as between themselves." Credit Suisse v. U.S. Dist. Court for Cent. Dist. of Cal., 130 F.3d 1342, 1346 (9th Cir. 1997) (Citing Underhill, 168 U.S. at 252). The doctrine is "meant to facilitate the foreign relations of the United States . . . ." Republic of Philippines v. Marcos, 862 F.2d 1355, 1361 (9th Cir. 1988). It recognizes "the thoroughly sound principle that on occasion individual litigants may have to forgo decision on the merits of their claims because the involvement of the courts in such a decision might frustrate the conduct of United States foreign policy." Spectrum Stores, Inc. v. Citgo Petroleum Co., 632 F.3d 938, 954 (5th Cir. 2011) (Internal quotations and citations omitted).

[*1180] UPGC contends that the Act of State Doctrine warrants dismissal [101] because a foreign sovereign granted UPGC authority to engage in the acts deemed unlawful by Plaintiffs. The Act of State Doctrine bars judicial review of a claim if "(1) there is an official act of a foreign sovereign performed within its own territory; and (2) the relief sought or the defense interposed in the action would require a court in the United States to declare invalid the foreign sovereign's official act." Credit Suisse, 130 F.3d at 1346 (Internal brackets and citation omitted). The burden of proving acts of state lies with the party asserting the applicability of the doctrine. Liu v. Republic of China, 892 F.2d 1419, 1432 (9th Cir. 1989).

Both elements are met in this case. First, the member agencies are foreign sovereigns which have performed official acts within their respective provinces. UPGC has provided evidence that only the member agencies have the power to dictate price, supply, quality, quantity, and exports of Canadian potatoes, and that the member agencies created UPGC simply to facilitate their cooperation and carry out their sovereign duties. Thus, to the extent any decisions were made to reduce the supply or export of Canadian potatoes, those decisions were [102] made by the member agencies in their sovereign capacity.

Plaintiffs raise a concern about whether UPGC can assume the status of the member agencies in this case. But that makes no difference. The first element of the Act of State Doctrine is whether there is an official act of a foreign sovereign performed within its own territory, not whether the named defendant is the foreign sovereign who performed that official act. It makes no difference that the member agencies are not the named defendants in this case. The Act of State Doctrine prevents Plaintiffs from attacking the member agencies' sovereign supply-control decisions through UPGC. Unlike the FSIA, the relevant acts include any governmental acts whose validity would be called into question by adjudication of the suit, not just the acts of the defendants. Spectrum Stores, 632 F.3d at 954; see also IAM v. OPEC, 649 F.2d 1354, 1359 (9th Cir. 1981). Moreover, "[t]he Act of State Doctrine is not diluted by the commercial activity exception which limits the doctrine of sovereign immunity." IAM, 649 F.2d at 1360; see also Honduras Aircraft Registry, Ltd. v. Honduras, 129 F.3d 543, 550 (11th Cir. 1997) ("[T]here is no commercial exception [103] to the Act of State Doctrine as there is under the FSIA.").

The second element is also met. Resolving Plaintiffs' claims would require the Court to declare the member agencies' sovereign acts invalid. In order for the plaintiffs to prevail on their claims against UPGC, the Court would need to conclude that, through UPGC, the member agencies' illegally agreed to reduce the supply and export of potatoes in their respective provinces. However, UPGC has shown that Canadian law expressly empowers the member agencies to cooperate and work with each other to regulate the marketing of potatoes within their respective provinces, and Plaintiffs have provided no evidence to the contrary. Thus, the Court would be forced to declare the member agencies' sovereign acts invalid in order to grant Plaintiffs' requested relief. Accordingly, the Act of State Doctrine bars this suit against UPGC.

5. Motion to Add Names to List of Custodians

Plaintiff Brigiotta's Farmland Produce and Garden Center, Inc. asks the Court to order Defendant Pleasant Valley Potato, Inc. to add Kim Wahlen to their custodian list pursuant to the Preservation [*1181] Order. As explained above, Plaintiffs allege that Pleasant Valley is a founding [104] member of UPGI, based on the related allegation that Kim Wahlen attended the Fall 2004 meeting and "signed on to" the conspiracy alleged in the complaint. However, there are no allegations in the complaint to indicate Mr. Wahlen's relationship to Pleasant Valley, or his ability to act on behalf of that entity. Accordingly, the Court has determined that Plaintiffs have failed to allege facts connecting Pleasant Valley to the scheme outlined in the complaint and dismissal with leave to amend is appropriate.

For similar reasons, the Court will deny Plaintiffs' motion to add Kim Wahlen as a custodian. According to his affidavit, although Kim Wahlen is an owner and shareholder of Pleasant Valley, he owns a separate farm. Wahlen Aff., Dkt. 142-2. He indicates that the documents for his farm are kept separate from documents for Pleasant Valley, and that he does not have control of Pleasant Valley documents. Id. Pleasant Valley also states that it has designated individuals within Pleasant Valley's corporate structure as record custodians, and that the entirety of Pleasant Valley's records are covered by those designations. Accordingly, there is no justification for designating Kim Wahlen as [105] a record custodian for Pleasant Valley.

ORDER

IT IS ORDERED:

1. Defendant R.D. Offutt Co.'s Motion To Dismiss For Failure to State Claim (Dkt. 72) is GRANTED with leave to amend.

[*919] ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO DISMISS, GRANTING DEFENDANT'S REQUEST TO STAY PROCEEDINGS AS MODIFIED, AND ADMINISTRATIVELY CLOSING THIS CASE

FACTUAL BACKGROUND[1]

Plaintiffs Elizabeth Valdez Kyne, Chad [2] Kruzic, and Adam Borowiec ("Plaintiffs"), brought suit on behalf of a similarly situated class against the Ritz-Carlton Hotel Company, L.L.C., d/b/a the Ritz-Carlton, Kapalua ("Defendant" or "Hotel"). Am. Compl. ¶¶ 3-6. Plaintiffs have all worked as food and beverage servers for at the Ritz-Carlton, Kapalua, in Maui, Hawaii. Id. ¶ 3.

Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint alleges that the Ritz Carlton provides food and beverage services throughout the Hotel, including in its banquet department, its [*920] restaurants, and through room service. Id. ¶ 5. Plaintiffs allege that Defendant has added a preset service charge to customers' bills for food and beverage served at the Hotel, but that Defendant has not remitted the total proceeds of the service charge as tip income to the employees who serve the food and beverages. Id. ¶¶ 6-9. Instead, Plaintiffs allege that Defendant has had a policy and practice of retaining for themselves a portion of these service charges (or using it to pay managers or other non-tipped employees who do not serve food and beverages), without disclosing to the Hotel's customers that the services charges are not remitted in full to the employees who serve the food and beverages. [3] [2] Id. ¶¶ 8-9. Plaintiffs assert that therefore customers are misled into believing the entire service charge is distributed to the employees that serve them, and as a result, customers who would otherwise leave an additional gratuity do not do so. Id. ¶ 10.

Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint asserts five counts. In Count I, Plaintiffs allege that Defendant's conduct violates Hawaii Revised Statutes ("H.R.S.") § 481B-14, and that pursuant to § 481B-4, such violation constitutes an unfair method of competition or unfair and deceptive act or practice within the meaning of H.R.S. § 480-2. In Count II, Plaintiffs allege that Defendant's conduct constitutes unlawful intentional interference with contractual and/or advantageous relations. In Count III, Plaintiffs allege that Defendant's conduct constitutes a breach of two implied contracts. In Count IV, Plaintiffs allege that Defendant has been unjustly [4] enriched at Plaintiffs' expense under state common law. In Count V, Plaintiffs allege that as a result of Defendant's conduct, they have been deprived of income that constitutes wages, which is actionable under H.R.S. §§ 388-6, 388-10, and 388-11.

PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

On November 24, 2008, Plaintiffs filed a Class Action Complaint. Doc. No. 1. There were a number of similar cases filed in this Court, and on February 11, 2009, Plaintiffs moved to consolidate or alternatively for assignment of all the related cases to one judge pursuant to Local Rule 40.2. [3] Doc. No. 25. On April 8, 2009, this Court adopted the

[1] The facts as recited in this Order are for the purpose of disposing of the current motion and are not to be construed as findings of fact that the parties may rely on in future proceedings.

[2] The Collective Bargaining Agreement ("CBA") between the Hotel and its employees provided that employees shall receive at least 93% of the guaranteed service charge. Def.'s Response to Pls.' CSF Ex. A, § 7.h. There does not appear to be a dispute that Defendant kept 7% of service charges it imposed.

[3] There are at least seven other similar cases that food and beverage service employees have filed against their employers in this District Court between November 21, 2008, and May 13, 2010. These actions are: Davis v. Four Seasons Hotel, Ltd., Civ. No. 08-00525 HG-BMK (D. Haw. Nov. 21, 2008) (hereafter "Davis I"); Apana v. Fairmont Hotels & Resorts (U.S.) Inc., Civ. No. 08-00528 JMS-LEK (D. Haw. Nov. 24, 2008); Villon v. Marriott Hotel Servs., Inc., Civ. No. [5] 08-00529 LEK-RLP (D. Haw. Nov. 24, 2008); Wadsworth v. KSL Grand Wailea Resort, Inc., Civ. No. 08-00527 ACK-LEK (D. Haw. Nov. 24, 2008); Lara v. Renaissance Hotel Operating Co., Civ. No. 08-00560 LEK-RLP (D. Haw. Dec. 10, 2008); Rodriguez v. Starwood Hotels & Resorts Worldwide, Inc., 09-00016 LEK-RLP (D. Haw. Jan. 9, 2009); and Flynn v. Fairmont Hotels & Resorts, Inc., Civ. No. 10-00285 DAE-LEK (D. Haw. May 13, 2010).

Magistrate Judge's Findings and Recommendation that the similar cases not be consolidated. 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29719, 2009 WL 975753 (Doc. No. 31). [4]

On July 9, 2009, the Court stayed this case in light of Judge Gillmor's certification to the Hawaii Supreme Court of a question of law that was also important to [*921] the instant case. [5] See Doc. No. 42. The Hawaii Supreme Court answered the certified question on March 29, 2010. See Davis v. Four Seasons Hotel Ltd., 122 Haw. 423, 228 P.3d 303 (Haw. 2010) (hereafter "Davis II"). Accordingly, on April 19, 2010, Plaintiffs filed a motion to lift the stay and a motion to file an amended complaint. Doc. Nos. 44 & 45. The Magistrate Judge granted both motions [6] on June 22, 2010. Doc. No. 54. Plaintiffs filed their Amended Complaint on June 28, 2010. Doc. No. 56.

Meanwhile, on May 11, 2011, Plaintiffs filed a Motion to Certify Class. Doc. No. 76. On July 18, 2011, the Court adopted the Magistrate Judge's Findings and Recommendation that the Court grant Plaintiffs' motion and certify the class as "all non-managerial food and beverage service employees who, since November 24, 2002, have worked at banquets, functions, small parties, room service, and other events at the Ritz-Carlton, Kapalua, where a service charge was imposed and where a part of that service [7] charge was kept by the Defendant without adequate disclosure to customers." Doc. No. 91, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 77814 ; 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 78031, 2011 WL 2940444 (Doc. No. 93).

On May 11, 2011, Defendant filed a Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' Amended Class Action Complaint ("Defendant's Motion to Dismiss"). Doc. No. 81. The Motion was accompanied by a supporting memorandum ("Def.'s MTD Mem."). Id. Plaintiffs filed an opposition on October 26, 2011 ("Pls.' Opp'n"). Doc. No. 100. On November 2, 2011, Defendant filed a reply ("Def.'s Reply"). Doc. No. 104.

Plaintiffs filed a Motion for Partial Summary Judgment on May 11, 2011 ("Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment"). Doc. No. 78. The Motion was accompanied by a supporting memorandum ("Pls.' MSJ Mem.") and a concise statement of facts ("Pls.' CSF"). Doc. Nos. 79 & 80. On October 26, 2011, Defendant filed an opposition ("Def.'s Opp'n") and a response to Plaintiffs' CSF ("Def.'s Response to Pls.' CSF"). Doc. Nos. 101 & 102. Plaintiffs filed a reply on November 2, 2011 ("Pls.' Reply"). Doc. No. 103.

On November 9, 2011, Defendant filed a supplement to its Motion to Dismiss, attaching a copy of the Hawaii Supreme Court's order on the question certified to it by Judge Kobayashi in [8] Villon v. Marriot Hotel Services, Inc., CV-08-00529 LEK-RLP, Doc. No. 130 (Oct. 12, 2011), and Rodriguez v. Starwood Hotels & Resorts Worldwide, Inc., CV-09-00016 LEK-RLP, Doc. No. 139 (Oct. 12, 2011). Doc. [*922] STANDARD

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) ("Rule 12(b)(6)") permits dismissal of a complaint that fails "to state a claim upon which relief can be granted." Under Rule 12(b)(6), review is generally limited to the contents of the complaint. Sprewell v. Golden State Warriors, 266 F.3d 979, 988 (9th Cir. 2001); [9] Campanelli v. Bockrath, 100 F.3d 1476, 1479 (9th Cir. 1996). Courts may also "consider certain materials—documents attached to the complaint, documents incorporated by reference in the complaint, or matters of judicial notice—without converting the motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment." United States v. Ritchie, 342 F.3d 903, 908 (9th Cir. 2003). Documents whose contents are alleged in a complaint and whose authenticity is not questioned by any party may also be considered in ruling on a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss. See Branch v. Tunnell, 14 F.3d 449, 453-54 (9th Cir. 1994), overruled on other grounds by Galbraith v. County of Santa Clara, 307 F.3d 1119 (9th Cir. 2002). If a court converts a motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment, the court must give the parties notice and a reasonable opportunity to supplement the record. Bank Melli Iran v. Pahlavi, 58 F.3d 1406, 1408 (9th Cir. 1995).

On a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, all allegations of material fact are taken as true and construed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Fed'n of African Am. Contractors v. City of Oakland, 96 F.3d 1204, 1207 (9th Cir. 1996). However, conclusory allegations [10] of law, unwarranted deductions of fact, and unreasonable inferences are insufficient to defeat a motion to dismiss. See Sprewell, 266 F.3d at 988; Nat'l Assoc. for the Advancement of Psychoanalysis v. Cal. Bd. of Psychology, 228 F.3d 1043, 1049 (9th Cir. 2000); In re Syntex Corp. Sec. Litig., 95 F.3d 922, 926 (9th Cir. 1996). Moreover, the court need not accept as true allegations that contradict matters properly subject to judicial notice or allegations contradicting the exhibits attached to the complaint. Sprewell, 266 F.3d at 988.

In summary, to survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, "[f]actual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level . . . on the assumption that all the allegations in the complaint are true (even if doubtful in fact)." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (internal citations and quotations omitted). "While a complaint attacked by a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss does not need detailed factual allegations . . . a plaintiff's obligation to provide the 'grounds' of his 'entitlement to relief' requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not [11] do." Id. (internal citations and quotations omitted). Dismissal is appropriate under Rule 12(b)(6) if the facts alleged do not state a claim that is "plausible on its face." Id. at 570. "Determining whether a complaint states a plausible claim for relief will . . . be a context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1950, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (citation omitted). "[W]here the well-pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, the complaint has alleged—but it has not 'show[n]'—'that the pleader is entitled to relief.'" Id. (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2)).

"Dismissal without leave to amend is improper unless it is clear that the complaint could not be saved by any [*923] amendment." Harris v. Amgen, Inc., 573 F.3d 728, 737 (9th Cir. 2009) (internal quotation marks omitted). "But courts have discretion to deny leave to amend a complaint for futility, and futility includes the inevitability of a claim's defeat on summary judgment." *Johnson v. Am. DISCUSSION

The Court will [12] first address Defendant's request that this Court stay proceedings in this case while the Hawaii Supreme Court considers a certified question in a similar case. The Court will then address Defendant's Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint.

days, but rescheduled the hearing for November 16, 2011, to accommodate Plaintiffs' counsel and their travel needs. See Doc. No. 95.

I. Defendant's Request to Stay Proceedings

On May 11, 2010, in alternative to its Motion to Dismiss, Defendant asked this Court to certify the following question to the Hawaii Supreme Court: "May employees use H.R.S. §[ ]388-6 to seek damages for alleged violations of the obligations created by H.R.S. §[]481B-14 when the employees have not stated a claim under H.R.S. §[]481B-14?" Def.'s MTD Mem. at 24.

Subsequently, on October 12, 2011, Judge Kobayashi certified three questions to the Hawaii Supreme Court in two similar cases, Villon v. Marriot Hotel Services, Inc., CV-08-00529 LEK-RLP, Doc. No. 130 (Oct. 12, 2011), and Rodriguez v. Starwood Hotels & Resorts Worldwide, Inc., CV-09-00016 LEK-RLP, Doc. No. 139 (Oct. 12, 2011). As relevant here, Judge Kobayashi certified the following question:

> May food or beverage service employees of a hotel or restaurant bring a claim against their employer based on alleged violation of Haw. Rev. Stat. § 481B-14 [13] by invoking Haw. Rev. Stat. §§ 388-6, 388-10, and 388-11 and without invoking Haw. Rev. Stat. §§ 480-2 or 480-13? [7]

Villon, CV-08-00529 LEK-RLP, Doc. No. 130; Rodriguez, CV-09-00016LEK-RLP, Doc. No. 139.

On November 8, 2011, the Hawaii Supreme Court issued an "Order on Certified Question," ordering the parties to submit briefing with respect to this question, but stated that it was ordering such action "without conclusively determining whether this court will answer" the certified question. See Def.'s [14] Supplemental Filing, Doc. No. 105 Ex. A.

Defendant acknowledges that Judge Kobayashi's certification renders Defendant's request for this Court to certify the question moot. Def.'s Opp'n at 21. Defendant requests, however, that the Court administratively close this case pending a decision by the Hawaii Supreme Court. Id. Defendant asserts that proceeding with the case at this time would be an inefficient use of judicial resources. Id. at 22. Defendant further asserts that because Plaintiffs' counsel are also the counsel for the plaintiffs in Villon, they will have a full opportunity to brief the issue before the Hawaii Supreme Court, and that Plaintiffs will not be prejudiced because "they will have the [*924] benefit of the Hawaii Supreme Court's opinion on this critical issue." Id.

Plaintiffs oppose Defendant's request, asserting that a stay "would impede the orderly course of justice by thwarting the expedient resolution of this case." Pls.' Reply at 15. Specifically, Plaintiffs point out that this case is three years old and has already been stayed once pending certification of another question to the Hawaii Supreme Court. Id.

A district court has discretion to certify a question to a state [15] supreme court. Riordan v. State Farm Mut. Auto Ins. Co., 589 F.3d 999, 1009 (9th Cir. 2009). The Ninth Circuit has explained that it "request[s] certification not because a difficult legal issue is presented but because of deference to the state court on significant state law matters," and that it has "an obligation to consider whether novel state law questions should be certified." Kremen v. Cohen, 325 F.3d 1035, 1037-38 (9th Cir. 2003). The Supreme Court has noted that certification does, "in the long run save time, energy, and resources and helps build a cooperative judicial federalism." Lehman Bros. v. Schein, 416 U.S. 386, 390-91, 94 S. Ct. 1741, 40 L. Ed. 2d 215 (1974).

[7] Judge Kobayashi also certified the following questions:

> (1) "If food or beverage service employees of a hotel or restaurant are entitled to enforce Haw. Rev. Stat. § 481B-14 through Haw. Rev. Stat. §§ 388-6, 388-10, and 388-11, what statute of limitations applies?" and (2) "May food and beverage service employees of a hotel or restaurant bring a claim under Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-2(e) for an alleged violation of Haw. Rev. Stat. § 481B-14, where those employees have alleged that their employer's conduct has caused them injury that resulted from an unfair method of competition?"

The Hawaii Supreme Court declined to accept these two questions. See Def.'s Supplemental Filing, Doc. No. 105 Ex. A.

In Bellotti v. Baird, 428 U.S. 132, 96 S. Ct. 2857, 49 L. Ed. 2d 844 (1976), the Supreme Court held that the district court should have certified questions concerning the meaning of a state statute where potential interpretations of the statute would have avoided or substantially modified the constitutional challenge at issue. Id. at 146-51 ("In deciding this case, we need go no further than the claim that the District Court should have abstained pending construction of the statute by Massachusetts courts."). The Supreme Court has also admonished both the Ninth Circuit and the [16] district court for failure to certify a novel state law question. See Arizonans for Official English v. Arizona, 520 U.S. 43, 76-77, 117 S. Ct. 1055, 137 L. Ed. 2d 170 (1997) ("Both lower federal courts in this case refused to invite the aid of the Arizona Supreme Court because they found the language of Article XXVIII [of the Arizona Constitution] 'plain.' . . . A more cautious approach was in order."). With this admonishment in mind, the Ninth Circuit has certified a state law question to the Washington Supreme Court when the parties unanimously opposed certification. See Parents Involved in Cmty. Schs. v. Seattle Sch. Dist. No. 1, 294 F.3d 1085, 1086 (9th Cir. 2002). The Ninth Circuit has also recognized that a certified question need not raise a constitutional issue. See Kremen, 325 at 1038 n.1, 1042. (certifying a question related to the tort of conversion). Nonetheless, the Ninth Circuit has held that "[e]ven where state law is unclear, resort to the certification process is not obligatory." Riordan, 589 F.3d at 1009.

It is also within the discretion of a district court to stay proceedings in its own court. Lockyer v. Mirant Corp., 398 F.3d 1098, 1109 (9th Cir. 2005). This District Court has recognized that:

> A party [17] seeking a stay . . . 'must make out a clear case of hardship or inequity in being required to go forward, if there is even a fair possibility that the stay for which he prays will work damage to someone else. Only in rare circumstances will a litigant in one case be compelled to stand aside while a litigant in another settles the rule of law that will define the rights of both.'

In Davis I, Civ. No. 08-00525 HG-BMK, F. Supp. 2d , 810 F. Supp. 2d 1145, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 96340, 2011 WL 3841075 (D. Haw. Aug. 26, 2011), Judge Gillmor similarly considered whether to stay the case in light of the same question [*925] certified to the Hawaii Supreme Court in Villon and Rodriguez. Judge Gillmor denied the defendant's request to stay the case, determining that the case was over three years old and had already been stayed once for ten months pending the Hawaii Supreme Court's ruling on a certified question; that although the plaintiffs had previously requested certification of that question, the defendant had opposed certification and had an opportunity to submit briefing on the questions to be submitted; and that it was unclear [18] whether the certification of the questions would have any impact on the ultimate resolution of the case. *Davis I, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 121846, 2011 WL 5025485, at 2. Judge Gillmor further explained that the Hawaii Supreme Court may decline the certification and that the ultimate impact of the resolution of the instant question might have was unclear. Id.

Similarly, this case is nearly three years old and has already been stayed once pending resolution of a certified question by the Hawaii Supreme Court. Since Judge Gillmor's order in Davis I, however, the Hawaii Supreme Court has ordered briefing on the question potentially dispositive of the instant motion. See Def.'s Supplement, Doc. No. 105 Ex. A. Although more likely now, it does remain unclear when or if the Hawaii Supreme Court will answer the certified question because the court expressly declined to "conclusively determine" whether it would do so. Id. Also in contrast to the circumstances present in Davis I, Defendant has not previously opposed certification of the § 388-6 issue. In summary, in Davis I, the plaintiffs, who are represented by the same counsel as Plaintiffs in this case, had requested certification to the Hawaii Supreme Court of the issue [19] now before the Court, and the defendant in that case had opposed such certification; [8] whereas, in this case, Defendant now requests such certification and Plaintiffs oppose it.

[8] The defendant in Davis I is not represented by Defendant's counsel in this case.

Significantly, neither the Court nor the parties were able to find an appellate decision approving of a lower court continuing with a case when a state supreme court had accepted a certified question on an important issue of law in that case. It would be inefficient and a waste of resources to continue to trial and potentially the appellate process, and then have the Hawaii Supreme Court issue a decision inapposite to this Court's ruling. With this consideration in mind, and in deference to the Hawaii Supreme Court, who has ordered briefing on the certified question, the Court will stay the effect of the instant order, and administratively close the case, pending resolution of the question certified in Villon and Rodriguez.

Defendant's request to stay this case is GRANTED as modified.

II. Motion to Dismiss

Defendant moves to dismiss all counts of Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint, on the grounds that Plaintiffs' claims are preempted by [20] Federal Labor Law and they fail to state claims upon which relief may be granted. Def.'s MTD Mem. at 1. The Court will first discuss preemption, followed by whether Plaintiffs' allegations state a plausible claim.

A. Preemption

Defendant argues that Plaintiffs' claims require interpretation of the terms of a collective bargaining agreement ("CBA") and therefore the claims are preempted by Section 301 of the Labor Relations Management Act, 29 U.S.C. § 185(a) ("Section 301"), and accordingly should be dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. Def.'s MTD Mem. at 30. Defendant also [*926] asserts that H.R.S. § 481B-14 is preempted by the National Labor Relations Act ("NLRA"), pursuant to Lodge 76, International Association of Machinists v. Wisconsin Employment Relations Commission, 427 U.S. 132, 140-41 (1976) ("Machinists"), because Congress intended to leave questions regarding the allocation of service charges under a CBA unregulated. Def.'s MTD Mem. at 33.

1. Section 301 Preemption

Section 301 provides:

> Suits for violation of contracts between an employer and a labor organization representing employees in an industry affecting commerce as defined in this chapter, or between ay such labor [21] organizations, may be brought in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction of the parties, without respect to the amount in controversy or without regard to the citizenship of the parties.

29 U.S.C. § 185(a). In enacting this statute, Congress charged federal courts with a "mandate . . . to fashion a body of federal common law to be used to address disputes arising out of labor contracts." Allis-Chalmers Corp. v. Lueck, 471 U.S. 202, 209, 105 S. Ct. 1904, 85 L. Ed. 2d 206 (1985). Thus, "a suit in state court alleging a violation of a provision of a labor contract must be brought under § 301 and resolved by reference to federal law. A state rule that purports to define the meaning or scope of a term in a contract suit is therefore pre-empted by federal labor law." Id. at 210. The Supreme Court has explained, however, that in order to give the policies behind Section 301 their proper range, the pre-emptive effect of § 301 must extend beyond suits alleging contract violations. Id. Therefore, > questions relating to what the parties to a labor agreement agreed, and what legal consequences were intended to flow from breaches of that agreement, must be resolved by reference to uniform federal law, whether such [22] questions arise in the context of a suit for breach of contract or in a suit alleging liability in tort. Any other result would elevate form over substance and allow parties to evade the requirements of § 301 by relabeling their contract claims as claims for tortious breach of contract.

Id. at 211. The Supreme Court in Lueck was careful though to clarify that "not every dispute concerning employment, or tangentially involving a provision of a collective-bargaining agreement, is pre-empted by § 301 or other provisions of the federal labor law. . . . In extending the pre-emptive effect of § 301 beyond suits for breach of contract, it would be inconsistent with congressional intent under that section to preempt state rules that proscribe conduct, or establish rights and obligations, independent of a labor contract." Id. at 212.

The Supreme Court revisited this issue just a few years after Lueck in Lingle v. Norge Division of Magic Chef, Inc., 486 U.S. 399, 108 S. Ct. 1877, 100 L. Ed. 2d 410 (1988). Lingle has become a touchstone in the analysis of § 301 preemption. There, the Supreme Court held that although an employee was covered by a collective bargaining agreement that provided a contractual remedy for discharge without [23] just cause, the employee could still maintain her state-law remedy for retaliatory discharge. See id. at 401. The Supreme Court explained that in order to resolve the plaintiff's state law retaliatory discharge claim there was no need to interpret any term of the collective bargaining agreement. Id. at 407. Therefore, the Supreme Court concluded that "the state-law remedy [was] 'independent' of the collective-bargaining agreement in the sense of 'independent' that matters for § 301 pre-emption [*927] purposes: resolution of the state-law claim does not require construing the collective-bargaining agreement." Id. at 407.

In practice, however, the "demarcation between preempted claims and those that survive § 301's reach is not . . . a line that lends itself to analytical precision." Cramer v. Consol. Freightways, Inc., 255 F.3d 683, 691 (9th Cir. 2001). Nevertheless, the Ninth Circuit has established guidelines to aid in this process based upon the Supreme Court's preemption decisions. See Burnside v. Kiewit Pac. Corp., 491 F.3d 1053, 1060 (9th Cir. 2007).

First, a court must determine whether the asserted cause of action involves a right conferred upon an employee by virtue of state law, not [24] by a CBA. Id. at 1059-60. As a part of this analysis, the Court must consider the "legal character of a claim, as 'independent' of rights under the collective-bargaining agreement [and] not whether a grievance arising from 'precisely the same set of facts' could be pursued." Id. at 1060 (citing Livadas v. Bradshaw, 512 U.S. 107, 123, 114 S. Ct. 2068, 129 L. Ed. 2d 93 (1994)). Moreover, a defendant's reliance upon a CBA as an aspect of a defense is not enough to "inject[ ] a federal question into an action that asserts what is plainly a state-law claim." Id.

Second, even if a right exists independently of the CBA, a court must consider whether the claim is nevertheless "substantially dependent on analysis of a collective-bargaining agreement." Id. at 1059-60. To determine whether a state law right is "substantially dependent" on the terms of a CBA, the court must examine whether a claim can be resolved by "looking to" a CBA rather than "interpreting" the CBA. Id. In Livadas, the Supreme Court made it clear that "when the meaning of contract terms is not the subject of dispute, the bare fact that a [CBA] will be consulted in the course of state-law litigation plainly does not require the claim to be extinguished." Livadas, 512 U.S. at 124. [25] The Ninth Circuit has also explained, as part of this analysis, if a waiver of the state law right at issue is asserted (and a waiver of that right is permissible), a court may look to a CBA to determine whether it contains a clear and unmistakable waiver of that right without triggering Section 301 preemption. See Cramer, 255 F.3d at 692. Finally, a court may look to a CBA to determine damages without triggering the need for preemption. See Lingle, 486 U.S. at 413 n. 12 ("A collective-bargaining agreement may, of course, contain information such as rate of pay . . . that might be helpful in determining the damages to which a worker prevailing in a state-law suit is entitled."); Livadas, 512 U.S. at 125, ("[T]he mere need to 'look to' the collective-bargaining agreement for damages computation is no reason to hold the state-law claim defeated by § 301."); Burnside, 491 F.3d at 1073.

As Defendant recognizes, this Court previously addressed the same arguments in a similar case, Wadsworth v. KSL Grand Wailea Resort, Inc., __ F. Supp. 2d __, Civ. No. 08-00527 ACK-RLP, 818 F. Supp. 2d 1240, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 131205, 2010 WL 5146521 (D. Haw. Dec. 10, 2010). In Wadsworth the Court discussed Defendant's arguments in detail and concluded [26] that, with the exception of the portion of Count III seeking recovery for an implied contract between the plaintiffs and the defendants, the same claims alleged here were not preempted by Section 301 because the claims did not involve interpretation of the CBA. [9] Defendant has [*928] not alleged any facts or made any arguments that distinguish Plaintiffs' claims in this case from those made by the plaintiffs in Wadsworth. Thus, the Court adopts the reasoning in Wadsworth as its reasoning in this case, and concludes that Plaintiffs' claim for breach of an implied contract between Plaintiffs and Defendant is preempted under federal labor law, and the remainder of Plaintiffs' claims are not preempted. See *Wadsworth, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 131205, 2010 WL 5146521, at 6-14. The Court will nonetheless briefly address each count.

i. Count I

In short, the Court concludes that Count I, Plaintiffs' unfair methods of competition claim, is not preempted under Section 301 because Plaintiffs are not [27] enforcing a right conferred only by the CBA, but rather an independent right conferred by state law. Defendant makes the blanket assertion that the Court will need to interpret the CBA in resolving this claim. Def.'s MTD Mem. at 31. Resolution of Plaintiffs' state law claim, however, is not dependent on any provision contained in the CBA and will not require interpretation of the CBA. See *Wadsworth, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 131205, 2010 WL 5146521, at 8-9. Therefore Count I is not preempted by Section 301.

ii. Count II

In Count II, Plaintiffs assert that Defendant's conduct constitutes unlawful intentional interference with contractual and/or advantageous business relationships that exists between the employees and Defendant's customers. Am. Compl. Count II. Again this state-law claim is independent of any right conferred by the CBA. The CBA plainly does not confer or deny Plaintiffs the right to maintain business relations with customers. There is no indication that any interpretation of the terms or provision of the CBA is needed to support or defend against this claim, and thus Count II is not preempted by Section 301.

iii. Count III

With respect to Count III, Plaintiffs recognize this Court has previously concluded [28] that a claim for breach of an implied contract between an employer and employee is preempted by Section 301. Thus, Plaintiffs are only pursuing this count to the extent it asserts an implied contract between Defendant and its customers, with Plaintiffs as third party beneficiaries. Pls.' Opp'n at 20 n.6. Any such an implied contract would be independent of the CBA and not require any interpretation of the terms of the CBA. Accordingly, Plaintiffs' breach of an implied contract claim is not preempted to the extent that they allege there is an implied contract between Defendant and its customers, to which Plaintiffs assert they are third party beneficiaries.

Defendant's Motion to Dismiss is GRANTED with respect to the portion of Count III that seeks recovery for an implied contract between Plaintiffs and Defendant.

iv. Count IV

Defendant asserts that Count IV, Plaintiffs' unjust enrichment claim, is preempted by Section 301 because the CBA expressly authorizes the Hotel to retain a portion of the service charges. Def.'s MTD Mem. at 32. Under Hawaii law, there are two required elements for an unjust enrichment claim - (1) a plaintiff must show that he or she has conferred a benefit upon [29] the defendant and second, that the retention of that benefit was unjust. *Wadsworth, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 131205, 2010 WL 5146521, at 11. This claim is based upon § 481B-14, and although the CBA may need to be referenced regarding Defendant's defense, no interpretation of the CBA is required and thus Count IV is not preempted by Section 301. Moreover, [*929] there does not appear to be any dispute that the CBA provides that the Hotel may keep 7% of the service charges.

v. Count V

Count V, Plaintiffs' claim pursuant to Chapter 388 is similarly not preempted by section 301. This claim is asserting a state-law right that is independent of any right conferred by the CBA. The CBA will not need to be interpreted in resolving this claim and thus it is not preempted by Section 301. See *2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 131205, [WL] at 13-14.

2. Machinists Preemption

In Machinists, the U.S. Supreme Court described the circumstances in which the NLRA will preempt an otherwise valid state law. Under Machinists, state activity may be restricted "on the theory that pre-emption is necessary to further Congress['s] intent that 'the conduct involved be unregulated because [it should be] left to be controlled by the free play of economic forces.'" Fort Halifax Packing Co. v. Coyne, 482 U.S. 1, 19-20, 107 S. Ct. 2211, 96 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1987) [30] (second alteration in original) (internal quotations omitted) (quoting Machinists, 427 U.S. at 140). In considering Machinists preemption, the Supreme Court has explained that states may pass laws that set minimum labor standards because they do not "encourage or discourage employees in the promotion of their interests collectively," which are the subject of federal regulation under the NLRA. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Massachusetts, 471 U.S. 724, 755, 105 S. Ct. 2380, 85 L. Ed. 2d 728 (1985). The Court further explained "that it cannot declare pre-empted all local regulation that touches or concerns in any way the complex interrelationships between employees, employers, and unions; obviously, much of this is left to the States." Id. at 756-57.

As with Defendant's arguments related to Section 301 preemption, the Court considered a nearly identical argument in Wadsworth that § 481B-14 is preempted by the NLRA pursuant to Machinists. See *Wadsworth, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 131205, 2010 WL 5146521, at 17-18. The Court adopts its reasoning in Wadsworth as its analysis in this case. In sum, § 481B-14 is a law of general applicability which creates a minimum standard related to service charges for the entire hotel and restaurant industry. Consequently, [31] § 481B-14 does not encourage or discourage employees in the promotion of their interest collectively, and is not the type of statute that the Machinists doctrine is intended to preempt. See *id. at 16; see aslo Dillingham Constr. N.A. v. County of Sonoma, 190 F.3d 1034, 1038-40 (9th Cir. 1999) (concluding that a statute directed at certain workers was one of general applicability providing minimum protection for employees and thus was not preempted under Machinists); Nat'l Broadcasting v. Bradshaw, 70 F.3d 69, 71-73 (9th Cir. 1995) (holding that a California regulation that applied only to broadcast employees and established an overtime minimum benefit protection was not preempted under Machinists); Rodriguez, Civ. No. 09-00016, Doc. No. 93, at 29, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 143698 (explaining that in passing § 481B-14, "Hawai'i has done nothing more than use its broad authority to pass employment regulations to protect workers in the state," and that the provision "in no way limits the rights of self-organization or collective bargaining," and thus was not preempted under Machinists) (internal quotations omitted).

Thus, § 481B-14 is not preempted by the Machinists doctrine.

B. Failure to State a Claim

1. Count [32] I

Count 1 is claim for unfair methods of competition brought pursuant to §§ 481B-14, 481B-4, and 480-2. Defendant asserts that Plaintiffs have not alleged facts describing [*930] the particular competition at issue and an adverse effect on that competition. Def.'s MTD Mem. at 3. Defendant asserts that although Plaintiffs repeatedly use the word "competitive" in the Amended Complaint, Plaintiffs fail to identify specific facts supporting the alleged competition. Id. Defendant contends that per the Hawaii Supreme Court's decision in Davis II, a plaintiff must plead the nature of competition to state a claim under § 480-2, and therefore Count I does not state a claim upon which relief may be granted. Id. at 4.

Plaintiffs disagree with Defendant's characterization of the Hawaii Supreme Court's decision in Davis II. Pls.' Opp'n at 28. Plaintiffs assert that the Court ruled that plaintiffs must meet the "causation requirement" of the statute, which is similar to the requirement in the federal antitrust context, but that the court "specifically decided not to adopt" the test used in federal antitrust cases. Id. Instead, Plaintiffs assert the Hawaii Supreme Court held that "plaintiffs' pleadings 'should [33] reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation.'" Id. Plaintiffs aver that they have met this burden, asserting that "the negative effect on competition is presumed to have occurred as a result of their employer's violation of § 481B-14." Id. at 28-29.

This Court has already rejected similar arguments made by the plaintiffs in Wadsworth and adopts its analysis in Wadsworth with respect to Count I in full as its analysis here. Specifically, the Court reiterates that in Davis II, the Hawaii Supreme Court explained that a plaintiff may bring a claim of unfair methods of competition based on conduct that would also support a claim of unfair or deceptive acts or practices, but that in doing so, the nature of the competition must be sufficiently alleged in the complaint. See Davis II, 228 P.3d at 315. The court went on to state that "the existence of the competition is what distinguishes a claim of unfair or deceptive acts or practices from a claim of unfair methods of competition." Id. at 317 n. 26 (internal quotations omitted). Thus, "[e]mployees are required to allege how [the Hotel's] conduct will negatively affect [34] competition in order to recover on an unfair methods of competition claim." Id. at 317-18.

Hawaii's requirement that a plaintiff assert the nature of the competition is designed to serve the same purpose as the federal requirement that a plaintiff assert an antitrust injury. See id. at 323 ("When examining HRS § 480-2, this court has recognized that '[t]he genesis of Hawai'i's consumer protection statute is in federal antitrust law,' with a shared 'concern for the preservation of unrestrained economic competition and free trade.'") (alterations in original) (quoting Cieri v. Leticia Query Realty, Inc., 80 Haw. 54, 905 P.2d 29, 34 (Haw. 1995)). In Davis II, the Hawaii Supreme Court explained that it had previously "noted that the antitrust injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of the anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation." Davis II, 228 P.3d at 323 (quoting Robert's Hawaii Sch. Bus, Inc. v. Laupahoehoe Transp. Co. Inc., 91 Haw. 224, 982 P.2d 853, 883 n.31 (1999)). Consequently, Plaintiffs' argument that they do not have to plead an antitrust injury is without merit.

Plaintiffs' allegations related to competition include that (1) "the defendant has gained an [35] unfair competitive advantage over competitor hotels that comply with Section 481B-14 because the defendant is able to reduce the published cost of its food and beverages by improperly profiting from the imposition of a service charge that its customers would believe is used in full to pay gratuity for its food and [*931] beverage service employees"; (2) that Defendant and Plaintiffs compete for the amount customers are willing to pay for food and beverage services and therefore "[b]y not disclosing to customers that service charges are not paid in full to the wait staff employees, the defendant gains an improper competitive advantage over the plaintiffs by retaining portions of the service charge which customers believe are being provided in full to the plaintiffs as tip income"; and (3) that Plaintiffs' injuries flow from Defendant's anti-competitive acts and are "inextricably intertwined" with those acts. Am. Compl. ¶¶ 11-13.

These pleadings are insufficient because (1) although Plaintiffs allege harm to competitors, they have not alleged harm to competition; (2) merely alleging competition between hotels that results in lower prices to consumers does not give rise to antitrust injury, instead [36] Plaintiffs must show how these lower prices are predatory; (3) Plaintiffs have offered no authority supporting their allegation that they were "competing" with Defendant for tips, that there is a competitive market for tips, that Defendant was part of this market, or that Defendant's actions regarding service charges had a negative effect on any such market; and (4) Plaintiffs' conclusory statements that their injuries are "inextricably intertwined" with Defendant's anticompetitive acts does not establish that Defendant's actions have caused any negative effect on competition. See *Wadsworth, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 131205, 2010 WL 5146521, at 21-26.

Consequently, Plaintiffs have not adequately alleged the nature of competition and Count I is DISMISSED without prejudice.

2. Count II

In Count II, Plaintiffs assert a claim for intentional interference with contractual and/or business relations. Defendant asserts that Plaintiffs fail to state a viable claim because any business relationship could "only be by virtue of H.R.S. § 481B-14." Def.'s MTD Mem. at 27. Defendant also contends that Plaintiffs have not alleged a business relationship between themselves and the customers or prospective advantage or expectancy that [37] would mature in the future. Id.

Hawaii recognizes two separate torts: (1) tortious interference with contractual relations and (2) the tort of intentional or tortious interference with prospective business advantage. Meridian Mortg. Inc. v. First Hawaiian Bank, 109 Haw. 35, 122 P.3d 1133, 1145-46 (Haw. App. 2005); Robert's Hawaii Sch. Bus, Inc., 982 P.2d at 887-88. Among other elements, tortious interference with contractual relations requires a contract between the plaintiff and a third party and a defendant's knowledge of the contract. Meridian, 122 P.3d at 1143. Because Plaintiffs have not alleged the existence of a contract between themselves and customers of the Hotel, the Court will focus on a tortious interference with prospective business advantage claim.

To state a claim for tortious interference with prospective business advantage, a plaintiff must allege: (1) the existence of a valid business relationship or a prospective advantage or expectancy that is reasonably probable of maturing into a future economic benefit to the plaintiff; (2) knowledge of the relationship, advantage, or expectancy by the defendant; (3) purposeful intent to interfere with the relationship, advantage or expectancy; [38] (4) legal causation between the act of interference and the impairment of the relationship, advantage, or expectancy; and (5) actual damages. See id. at 1145-46.

Plaintiffs have alleged that they served Defendant's customers, that the customers paid the service charge, and [*932] that the customers expected that the entirety of the service charge would be distributed to Plaintiffs. Am. Compl. ¶¶ 3, 6, 9-10. In Rodriguez, the Court dismissed the same claim with nearly identical factual allegations. The Court held that "[w]ith only the widest of latitudes can this Court conclude that Plaintiffs alleged in their Second Amended Complaint that the Defendant knew of these relations," but that the plaintiffs had failed to allege that the defendant had intentionally interfered with these relations. Rodriguez, Civ. No. 09-000016 DAE-LEK, Doc. No. 93, at 60 (D. Haw. Dec. 29, 2010). The Court therefore dismissed the claim. Likewise, in Davis I, the Court dismissed an identical claim because the plaintiffs had not alleged that the defendants had intentionally interfered with any potential business relationship between the plaintiffs and the defendants' customers. Davis I, Civ. No. 08-00525 HG-BMK, Doc. No. 125, at 35-36, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 112386 (D. Haw. Sept. 30, 2010). [39] Here too, Plaintiffs have not asserted that Defendant intentionally interfered with the allegedly advantageous expectancy or business relationship between Plaintiffs and Defendant's customers.

Plaintiffs have therefore failed to allege sufficient facts to support their claim and Count II is DISMISSED without prejudice.

3. Count III

Plaintiffs' third count asserts that "the defendant has breached an implied contract with its customers that the employees would receive this money, for which the employees are third party beneficiaries." [10] Am. Compl. Count III.

To state a claim for breach of an implied contract, a plaintiff must allege the breach of "an agreement in fact," which is not expressed, but "is implied or presumed" based upon the actions of the parties. Durette v. Aloha Plastic Recycling, Inc., 105 Haw. 490, 100 P.3d 60, 74 (Haw. 2004); Kemp v. State of Haw. Child Support Enforcement

[10] As discussed above, Plaintiffs are no longer pursuing their claim for breach of an implied contract between Plaintiffs and Defendant. See Pls.' Opp'n at 20 n.6.

Agency, 111 Haw. 367, 141 P.3d 1014, 1038 (Haw. 2006). "Generally, third parties do not have enforceable contract rights. The [40] exception to the general rule involves intended third-party beneficiaries." Ass'n of Apartment Owners of Newtown Meadows v. Venture 15, Inc., 115 Haw. 232, 167 P.3d 225, 262 (Haw. 2007) (internal quotations omitted). Thus, "a prime requisite to the status of 'third party beneficiary under a contract is that the parties to the contract must have intended to benefit the third party, who must be something more than a mere incidental beneficiary." Id. (internal quotations omitted).

Plaintiffs allege that by imposing a service charge, Defendant and Defendant's customers had an implied contract that the serving employees would receive the service charge. Plaintiffs further assert that Defendant has breached this implied contract through withholding service charges. This claim is unlikely to survive a summary judgment motion. See Davis I, Civ. No. 08-00525, Doc. No. 183, at 12-13, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 122009 (granting summary judgment for the defendant on a similar claim because the plaintiffs were unable to point to evidence of actions taken by the hotel and its customers that would imply a mutual intent to form a contract requiring the hotel to remit the total service charges to employees). At this stage of the proceeding, however, [41] Plaintiffs' allegations are sufficient to state a claim upon which relief may be granted. See Rodriguez, Civ. No. 09-000016 DAE-LEK, Doc. No. 93, at 53, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 143698 (D. Haw. Dec. 29, 2010) (determining a similar claim with similar allegations stated a plausible claim).

[*933] As discussed above, Count III is preempted to the extent it asserts a breach of an implied contract between Plaintiffs and Defendant, and therefore dismissed to that extent, but Defendant's Motion to Dismiss Count III is DENIED to the extent it asserts a claim for breach of an implied contract between Defendant and Defendant's customers.

4. Count IV

In Count IV, Plaintiffs assert that "the defendant's conduct as set forth above constitutes unjust enrichment under state common law." Am. Compl. Count IV. There are two elements a plaintiff must show to establish an unjust enrichment claim under Hawaii law. Wadsworth, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 131205, 2010 WL 5146521, at *11. First, a plaintiff must show that he or she has conferred a benefit upon the defendant and second, that the retention of that benefit was unjust. Id. Plaintiffs have alleged that Defendant's conduct of assessing and partially retaining a service charge at events where Plaintiffs serve food and beverages, [42] which customers expect and intend to be distributed to Plaintiffs, results in unjustly enriching Defendant.

Defendant alleges that Plaintiffs cannot show any such retention was unjust because the CBA, negotiated by Defendant and Plaintiffs' union, allows Defendant to retain a portion of service charges. The Court cannot consider the CBA in deciding the motion to dismiss as it is not a proper subject of judicial notice and the Amended Complaint does not refer to it. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(d) ("If, on a motion under Rule 12(b)(6) or 12(c), matters outside the pleadings are presented to and not excluded by the court, the motion must be treated as one for summary judgment under Rule 56."). [11] Instead, the Complaint alleges that "the defendant has a policy and practice of retaining" a portion of the service charges. Am. Compl. ¶ 8. Although it is questionable whether this claim would survive summary judgment, the facts as alleged in the Complaint state a plausible unjust enrichment claim.

Consequently, Defendant's motion to dismiss Count IV is DENIED.

5. Count V

In Count V, Plaintiffs assert that [43] as a result of Defendant's unlawful failure to remit the entire proceeds of food and beverage service charges to the food and beverage servers, Defendant is liable to Plaintiffs under Chapter 388. Am. Compl. Count V. Whether Plaintiffs have stated a plausible claims turns on a question of statutory interpretation - whether an employee may recover under H.R.S. §§ 388-6, 388-10, and 388-11, for the failure of a hotel to distribute service charges to employees when the hotel did not make disclosures required by H.R.S. § 481B-14. [12]

i. Legal Framework

The Court has diversity jurisdiction over this case pursuant to the Class Action Fairness Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1332(d)(2). See Am. Compl. ¶ 2. In Davis II, the Hawaii Supreme Court addressed whether employees have standing to enforce § 481B-14 through § 480-2(e), but declined to consider whether §481B-14 is enforceable through §§ 386-6, 388-10, and 388-11 because "it [was] beyond the scope of the certified question." 228 P.3d at 308 n.12. [44] Because the instant issue raises a question not yet decided by the Hawaii Supreme [*934] Court, this Court, "sitting in diversity, must use [its] best judgment to predict how the Hawaii Supreme Court would decide [the] issue." Burlington Ins. Co. v. Oceanic Design & Constr., Inc., 383 F.3d 940, 944 (9th Cir. 2004) (alterations in original) (internal quotations omitted).

The Hawaii Supreme Court instructs that "[w]hen construing a statute, the starting point is the language of the statute itself." State v. Batson, 99 Haw. 118, 53 P.3d 257, 259 (Haw. 2002) (internal quotation omitted). A court "must read statutory language in the context of the entire statute and construe it in a manner consistent with its purpose." Id. (internal quotations omitted). When statutes appear to relate to the same subject matter, the Hawaii Supreme Court uses a three-step approach to interpret those statutes.

> First, legislative enactments are presumptively valid and should be interpreted [in such a manner as] to give them effect. Second, [l]aws in pari materia, or upon the same subject matter, shall be construed with reference to each other. What is clear in one statute may be called in aid to explain what is doubtful in another. [45] Third, where there is a "plainly irreconcilable" conflict between a general and a specific statute concerning the same subject matter, the specific will be favored. However, where the statutes simply overlap in their application, effect will be given to both if possible, as repeal by implication is disfavored.

Batson, 99 Haw. 118, 53 P.3d 257, 259 (alterations in original) (internal quotations and citations omitted).

The Hawaii Supreme Court has explained: "It is a cardinal rule of statutory interpretation that, where the terms of a statute are plain, unambiguous and explicit, we are not at liberty to look beyond that language for a different meaning. Instead, our sole duty is to give effect to the statute's plain and obvious meaning." T-Mobile USA v. Cnty. of Hawaii Planning Comm'n, 106 Haw. 343, 104 P.3d 930, 939-40 (Haw. 2005) (internal quotations omitted).

In Count V, Plaintiffs seek to recover unpaid service charges pursuant to H.R.S. § 388-6, titled "Withholding of wages." Section 388-6 provides that: "No employer may deduct, retain, or otherwise require to be paid, any part or portion of any compensation earned by any employee except where required by federal or state statute or by court process or when [46] such deductions or retentions are authorized in writing by the employee." [13] Chapter 388 defines wages, in relevant part, as follows:

[12] Because this statutory question is at issue in Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment, the Court will also address the arguments made in the parties' summary judgment briefing related to the statutory interpretation issue here.

[13] Defendant asserts in a footnote of its reply supporting its motion to dismiss that because Plaintiffs' union agreed that the Hotel could keep seven percent of the banquet service charges, there is an authorization in writing that "dooms [Plaintiffs'] claim." Def.'s Reply at 3 n.1. As discussed earlier, the Court cannot consider the CBA in deciding this Motion to Dismiss. The Court declines to convert the Motion to Dismiss to a motion for summary judgment (which would have required notice of the Court's intention and an opportunity for the parties to supplement the record). In any event, the Court has previously rejected this argument in Wadsworth. "[I]f under state law a waiver of rights is permissible, 'the [47] CBA must include clear and unmistakable language waiving the covered employee's state right for a court to even consider whether it could be given effect.'" Wadsworth, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 131205, 2010 WL 5146521, at *8 (quoting Valles v. Ivy Hill Corp., 410 F.3d 1071, 1076 (9th Cir. 2005)). The Court specifically concluded that although § 388-6 appears to contain a partial waiver provision, "Defendants > [*935] "Wages" means compensation for labor or services rendered by an employee, whether the amount is determined on a time, task, piece, commission, or other basis of calculation. . . . but shall not include tips or gratuities of any kind, provided that for the purposes of section 388-6, "wages" shall include tips or gratuities of any kind.

H.R.S. § 388-1.

"Any employer who fails to pay wages in accordance with [Chapter 388] without equitable justification" is liable to the unpaid employee for twice the amount of the unpaid wages. H.R.S. § 388-10. Section 388-11 provides an employee or class of employees with a cause of action to recover unpaid wages.

Pursuant to § 481B-4, if a person violates a provision of Chapter 481B, the person is deemed to have engaged in an unfair method of competition. One such provision, § 481B-14, requires that:

> Any hotel or restaurant that applies [48] a service charge for the sale of food or beverage services shall distribute the service charge directly to its employees as tip income or clearly disclose to the purchaser of the services that the service charge is being used to pay for costs or expenses other than wages and tips of employees.

ii. The Parties' Arguments

Defendant argues that Count V does not state a plausible claim because Plaintiffs have no "inchoate right" to service charges and "if they have a claim to [service charges], it could only be by virtue of H.R.S. §[]481B-14." Def.'s MTD Mem. at 13. Defendant asserts that consequently, if Plaintiffs cannot assert a claim under § 481B-14, there is nothing to remedy and a claim under Chapter 388 cannot stand. Id. Defendant asserts that improperly retained service charges are not "compensation earned," and that instead, service charges are property of the hotel that imposes them in contrast to tips. Def.'s Opp'n at 6. Defendant elaborates that the CBA contains the amount of service charges Plaintiffs are entitled to receive, and thus that amount is the only service charges that Plaintiffs "earned," and that "[a]ny payments above that are not earned," but "a penalty imposed [49] by H.R.S. §[]481B-14." Id. Defendant relies heavily on the legislative history of § 481B-14. Def.'s MTD Mem. at 7-14. Defendant asserts, inter alia, that because the legislature initially intended to amend Chapters 387 and 388, but chose to ultimately add a new section regarding service charges in Chapter 481B, § 481B-14 is enforceable exclusively through Chapter 480. Id. at 10-11. Defendant avers that Plaintiffs erroneously rely on the title of H.B. No. 2123, the bill that eventually became § 481B-14, which is "Relating to wages and Tips of Employees." Def.'s Reply at 11-13. Defendant argues that the title is insignificant because the Hawaii Legislative Drafting Manual indicates that each bill gets a title and that titles should not be amended. Id. at 11.

Plaintiffs point out that "section 388-1 defines 'wages' as 'compensation for labor services rendered by an employee,' including, for purposes of § 388-6, 'tips or gratuities of any kind.'" Pls.' Reply at 3. Plaintiffs assert that, therefore, service charges that must be distributed as "tip income," "plainly mean" the same thing as "compensation earned" as used in § 388-6. Id. Plaintiffs assert that the plain language of the statutes [50] renders a resort to legislative history unnecessary, and that in any event, the legislative history supports Plaintiffs' interpretation of the statute. Id. at 8. Plaintiffs aver that the title of H.B. No. 2123, "Relating to Wages and Tips of Employees," is "pivotal," because Article III, section 15 states that: "No law shall be passed except by bill. Each law shall embrace [*936] but one subject, which shall be expressed in its title." Id. at 8-9. "Given the title of the law and this mandate of the Hawaii Constitution that the title express the law's subject, it is impossible to see how this Act was not intended to protect the wages and tips of employees." Id. at 9.

have not come forth with any evidence that there has been any clear and unmistakable waiver in the CBA as they are required to if they seek to assert a party has waived a state-law right." *2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 131205, [WL] at 14. Here too, Defendant has not shown that there has been a clear and unmistakable waiver in the CBA.

Plaintiffs additionally contend that the title supports that § 481B-14 and § 388-6 can be read in pari materia. Id. Plaintiffs assert that "[s]imply put, § 481B-14 deals with distribution of 'tip income' and § 388-6 deals with the withholding of wages and other compensation, including tips," and thus the two provisions deal with similar subjects. Id. Plaintiffs further contend that if the legislature did not intend for employees to be able to bring an action seeking payment of service charges under § 388-6, there would no reason [51] for the final version of § 481B-14 to require that, where a clear disclosure is not made, the service charge be distributed "directly to its employees as tip income. . . ." Id. at 10. Plaintiffs assert this is "especially so" because the phrase "as tip income" was added after the proposed bill had been moved to Chapter 481B. Id.

iii. Application

Again, the Court considered this identical issue in an order issued today in Wadsworth. Both Defendant and Plaintiffs are represented by the same counsel in Wadsworth, and the parties have not made any arguments that were not made in that case. The Court will adopt its reasoning in that case as its reasoning here. See Wadsworth, Civ. No. 08-00527 ACK-RLP, Order Denying Defendants' Motion to Dismiss, Granting Defendants' Request to Stay Proceedings as Modified, and Administratively Closing this Case. In sum, the Court found that pursuant to the plain language of §§ 388-6, 388-10, 388-11, and 481B-14, employees can recover service charges that a hotel imposed without making a clear disclosure that the charges were not distributed to employees as tips or wages. Because § 481B-14 and § 388-6 address the same subject matter, compensation of employees, [52] the statutes can be read in pari materia, i.e., applied with reference to each other. Defendant's argument that the Court must ignore the title of H.B. No. 2123 is not persuasive. Significantly, after noting the title of H.B. No. 2123 was "Relating to Wages and Tips of Employees," the Hawaii Supreme Court stated that "although we believe the title is instructive in that it appears to reflect the legislature's concern that employees may not always be receiving the service charges imposed by their employers, we do not believe it is dispositive of the issue of whether the legislature intended to afford Employees standing to sue for HRS § 481B-14 violations." Davis II, 228 P.3d at 313 (emphasis added). Although the title is not dispositive of the issue whether the two provisions here consider the same subject matter, it, along with the Hawaii Supreme Court's discussion in Davis II, provide further support for the Court's conclusion that the statutes both refer to employee compensation and thus can be read in pari materia.

Section 481B-14 requires hotels to distribute service charges to employees as "tip income." Section 388-6 provides that employers cannot retain "compensation earned" by [53] employees and § 388-1 provides that, for purposes of Chapter 388, "'[w]ages' means compensation for labor or services rendered by an employee . . . for the purposes of section 388-6, 'wages' shall include tips or gratuities of any kind." (emphasis added). Employees earn "tip income" that is distributed from service charges made without the requisite disclosure by serving at the relevant events. This "tip income" qualifies as "compensation earned" under § 388-6, and thus is recoverable pursuant to § 388-10, [*937] which provides for penalties against "[a]ny employer who fails to pay wages in accordance with [Chapter 388] without equitable justification," and § 388-11, which provides a cause of action to recover unpaid wages. [14]

Because under Hawaii law the Court need not look past the [54] plain language, it is unnecessary to consult the legislative history of § 481B-14 here. Nonetheless, the Court alternatively holds that the legislative history, as interpreted by the Hawaii Supreme Court in Davis II, allows Plaintiffs to recover for unpaid service charges imposed without the requisite disclosure set forth in § 481B-14, through a claim brought pursuant to §§ 388-6, 388-10, and 388-11.

In Davis II, the Hawaii Supreme Court performed an in depth review of the legislative history of § 481B-14, and determined that "[i]n sum, the legislative history of H.B. No. 2123 indicates that the legislature was concerned that when a hotel or restaurant withholds a service charge without disclosing to consumers that it is doing so, both employees and consumers can be negatively impacted." Davis II, 228 P.3d at 314 (emphasis added). This Court agrees with Judge Gillmor's analysis in Davis I, that:

[14] At the hearing, Defendant asserted that the CBA provided Defendant with an equitable justification for retaining a portion of the service charges. Again, the Court cannot consider the CBA in deciding this Motion to Dismiss. Nonetheless, the CBA would not provide an equitable justification for violating state law; Defendant could have complied with both the CBA and state law by making the requisite disclosures.

> The legislative history of section 481B-14 reflects a desire to prevent service workers from being deprived of tip income. To the extent that the legislative history of section 481B-14 is relevant to the question of whether employees may sue for unpaid wages under section 388-6 based on violations [55] of section 481B-14, that legislative history, as interpreted by the Hawaii Supreme Court in Davis, provides support for the idea that employees may do so.

*Davis I, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 131205, 2011 WL 3841075, at 8 (internal citations omitted).

Defendant's Motion to Dismiss with respect to Count V is DENIED.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons the Court (1) GRANTS in part and DENIES in part Defendant's Motion to Dismiss, and (2) GRANTS Defendant's request to stay the case as modified.

Specifically, Counts I, II, and III, to the extent Count III seeks recovery for an implied contract between Defendant and Plaintiffs, are DISMISSED.

The Court orders a stay of all proceedings pending a decision by the Hawaii Supreme Court on the question of law certified to it by Judge Kobayashi in Villon v. Marriot Hotel Services, Inc., CV-08-00529 LEK-RLP, Doc. No. 130 (Oct. 12, 2011), and Rodriguez v. Starwood Hotels & Resorts Worldwide, Inc., CV-09-00016 LEK-RLP, Doc. No. 139 (Oct. 12, 2011). The Clerk of Court is directed to administratively close this action without prejudice to any party. The closing is administrative only and thus has no effect on the procedural or substantive rights of any party or any limitations period. Any [56] party may move to reopen the case after the Hawaii Supreme Court rules, and the parties shall promptly inform this court in writing of the disposition in Judge Kobayashi's case, at which time the stay will be automatically dissolved if not earlier. The instant order will not go into effect until after the Hawaii Supreme Court rules on [*938] the question of law certified to it in Villon and Rodriguez.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

DATED: Honolulu, Hawaii, December 2, 2011.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Judgment on the pleadings pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c) is appropriate when, even if all material facts in the non-moving party's pleadings are true, the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. The standard applied on a Rule 12(c) motion for judgment on the pleadings is essentially the same as that applied on a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN2[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), a complaint must be dismissed when a plaintiff's allegations fail to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. To survive a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level, on the assumption that all the allegations in the complaint are true (even if doubtful in fact). While a complaint attacked by a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss does not need detailed factual allegations, a plaintiff's obligation to provide the grounds of his entitlement to relief requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do. In other words, threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements do not suffice.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN3[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state the claim to relief that is plausible on its face. A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged. The plausibility standard is not akin to a probability requirement, but it asks for more than a sheer possibility that a defendant acted unlawfully. The complaint must contain factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged. Where the well-pled facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, the complaint has alleged, but it has not shown, that the pleader is entitled to relief. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2). A well-pled complaint may proceed even if it appears that a recovery is very remote and unlikely.

Pro se pleadings are liberally construed.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN5[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Generally, review is limited to the contents of the complaint. However, material which is properly submitted as part of the complaint may be considered on a motion to dismiss. Also, a court may take judicial notice of matters of public record without converting a motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment. Allegations of material fact in the complaint are taken as true and construed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. The court need not, however, accept as true allegations that contradict matters properly subject to judicial notice or by exhibit. Nor is the court required to accept as true allegations that are merely conclusory, unwarranted deductions of fact, or unreasonable inferences.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction on Certiorari > Considerations Governing Review > State Court Decisions

HN7[] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Federal Questions

Federal district courts may exercise only original jurisdiction; they may not exercise appellate jurisdiction over state court decisions. This rule arises from the juxtaposition of two statutes: 28 U.S.C.S. § 1331, giving district courts original jurisdiction over civil actions arising under federal law, and 28 U.S.C.S. § 1257, giving the United States Supreme Court the right to review final judgments rendered by the highest court of a state. The rule applies even when the challenge to the state court's decision is based on alleged deprivations of federally protected rights.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Full Faith & Credit > Rooker-Feldman Doctrine

HN8[] Full Faith & Credit, Rooker-Feldman Doctrine

A federal plaintiff may not avoid the Rooker-Feldman bar by styling an attack on a state court's ruling as a civil rights action. In determining whether a civil rights action is such an attack, the court must determine whether the federal plaintiff's claims are inextricably intertwined with the state court's ruling. A federal claim is inextricably intertwined with the state court's ruling when a district court must scrutinize the state court's application of the law. Put another way, a federal claim is inextricably intertwined with the state court judgment if the federal claim succeeds only to the extent that the state court wrongly decided the issues before it.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Scope

HN9[] Fundamental Freedoms, Freedom of Speech

To establish a First Amendment retaliation claim, a plaintiff must show that: (i) she was engaged in a constitutionally protected activity, (ii) that the defendants' actions would chill a person of ordinary firmness from continuing to engage in the protected activity, and (iii) that the protected activity was a substantial or motivating factor in the defendant's conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

HN10[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, which arose in the context of antitrust law, holds that those who petition the government for redress are generally immune from liability. The Noerr-Pennington Doctrine extended to the approach of citizens to administrative agencies and to the courts. The Doctrine is well established under California law and has been applied to bar liability for activities undertaken in the course of representing a client in litigation. The immunity applies no matter how a plaintiff chooses to characterize a purported cause of action if, as here, the acts which necessarily underlie the purported cause of action are taken in the course of presenting a matter in a court of law. Obviously, the principle of constitutional law that bars litigation arising from injuries received as a consequence of First Amendment petitioning activity should be applied regardless of the underlying cause of action asserted by the plaintiffs citation. To hold otherwise would effectively chill the defendants' First Amendment rights citation.

Abstract injury is not enough. It must be alleged that the plaintiff has sustained or is immediately in danger of sustaining some direct injury as the result of the challenged statute or official conduct. The injury or threat of injury must be both real and immediate, not conjectural or hypothetical.

Civil Rights Law > ... > Section 1983 Actions > Elements > General Overview

HN15[] Elements, Causal Relationship

In order to state a claim under 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983, a plaintiff must allege that: (1) the defendant was acting under color of state law at the time the complained-of act was committed; and (2) the defendant's conduct deprived plaintiff of rights, privileges or immunities secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States. The plaintiff also must establish causation, by demonstrating that each defendant personally was involved in the constitutional violation, or that there was a sufficient causal connection between the defendant's wrongful conduct and the constitutional violation. The inquiry into causation must be individualized to focus on the duties and responsibilities of each individual defendant whose acts or omissions are alleged to have caused a constitutional deprivation.

Civil Rights Law > ... > Section 1983 Actions > Elements > Causal Relationship

HN16[] Elements, Causal Relationship

Liability may be imposed on an individual defendant under 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983 only if the plaintiff can show that the defendant proximately caused the deprivations of his federally protected rights of which he complains.

Civil Rights Law > ... > Section 1983 Actions > Elements > General Overview

Civil Rights Law > ... > Section 1983 Actions > Scope > Government Actions

HN17[] Section 1983 Actions, Elements

To state a claim under 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983, the plaintiff must allege a violation of her constitutional rights and show that the defendant's actions were taken under color of state law. That the defendant act under color of state law is a jurisdictional requisite for a § 1983 action. Similarly, a plaintiff basing a cause of action on alleged constitutional violations must show that the actions complained of are fairly attributable to the government.

Civil Rights Law > ... > Elements > Color of State Law > General Overview

HN18[] Elements, Color of State Law

Generally, private actors are not acting under color of state law. In order to determine whether a private actor acts under color of law for 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983 purposes, the court looks to whether the conduct causing the alleged deprivation of federal rights is fairly attributable to the state. Conduct may be fairly attributable to the state where (1) it results from a governmental policy and (2) the defendant is someone who fairly may be said to be a governmental actor.

Civil Rights Law > ... > Elements > Color of State Law > General Overview

HN19[] Elements, Color of State Law

Any services performed by attorney defendants in connection with an underlying custody dispute could not constitute actions under color of state law.

HN20[] Immunity From Liability, Judicial & Quasi-Judicial Functions

The litigation privilege shields any publication or broadcast made in any judicial proceeding. Cal. Civ. Code § 47(b). The absolute immunity under § 47(b) litigation privilege extended to communications with some relation to judicial proceedings and extends to the steps taken thereafter in execution on the judgment.

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Immunity From Liability > Judicial & Quasi-Judicial Functions

Governments > Courts > Judges > Judicial Immunity

HN21[] Immunity From Liability, Judicial & Quasi-Judicial Functions

Communications with some relation to judicial proceedings are absolutely immune from tort liability by the litigation privilege. It is not limited to statements made during a trial or other proceedings, but may extend to steps taken prior thereto, or afterwards. The litigation privilege is absolute and bars all causes of action other than a claim for malicious prosecution, including those asserted in federal court. It has also been regularly applied in federal courts. The usual formulation is that the privilege applies to any communication (1) made in judicial or quasi-judicial proceedings; (2) by litigants or other participants authorized by law; (3) to achieve the objects of the litigation; and (4) that have some connection or logical relation to the action. Courts have given the privilege an expansive reach and held that the privilege is absolute, even in cases in which the result in inequitable. Any doubt as to whether the privilege applies is resolved in favor of applying it.

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Immunity From Liability > Judicial & Quasi-Judicial Functions

Governments > Courts > Judges > Judicial Immunity

HN22[] Immunity From Liability, Judicial & Quasi-Judicial Functions

Pleadings and process in a case are generally viewed as privileged communications. Indeed, even allegedly false or perjurous pleadings and declarations have been held to be covered by the litigation privilege. A declaration functions as written testimony, is a communication, not conduct and is exactly the sort of communication that privilege is designed to protect.

Civil Rights Law > ... > Elements > Color of State Law > Joint Ventures

HN23[] Color of State Law, Joint Ventures

A conspiracy claim brought under 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983 requires proof of an agreement or meeting the minds to violate constitutional rights and an actual deprivation of constitutional rights. To be liable, each participant in the conspiracy need not know the exact details of the plan, but each participant must at least share the common objective of the conspiracy.

Civil Rights Law > ... > Elements > Color of State Law > Joint Ventures

HN24[] Color of State Law, Joint Ventures

To state a claim for conspiracy, a plaintiff must allege specific facts showing two or more persons intended to accomplish an unlawful objective of causing the plaintiff harm and took some concerted action in furtherance thereof. To state a claim for conspiracy under 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983, a plaintiff must allege facts showing agreement of the alleged conspirators to deprive him of his rights. A conspiracy allegation, even if established, does not give rise to a liability under § 1983 unless there is a deprivation of civil rights.

Civil Rights Law > ... > Elements > Color of State Law > Joint Ventures

HN25[] Color of State Law, Joint Ventures

A valid claim for conspiracy between private parties and the government to violate constitutional rights requires an agreement or meeting of the minds. Further, the acts of the private parties must be sufficiently intertwined with a violating government actor amounting to more than near acquiescence.

REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION OF UNITED STATES MAGISTRATE JUDGE

This Report and Recommendation is submitted to the Honorable Philip S. Gutierrez, United States District Judge, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §636 and General Order 05-07 of the United States District Court for the Central District of California.

PROCEEDINGS

On November 25, 2009, Laura Lynn (hereinafter "Plaintiff") filed a Complaint entitled "Complaint for Immediate Injunctive and Other Relief." Plaintiff brought this action for injunctive relief, compensatory and punitive damages pursuant to 42 U.S.C. §1983 and 18 U.S.C. §§241 and 242. (Complaint at 3.) Plaintiff named as Defendants Alan H. Friedenthal, individually and in his official capacity as Commissioner of the Superior Court of the State of California, Los Angeles; Steff R. Padilla, individually and in her official capacity as Commissioner of the Superior Court of the State of California, Los Angeles; the Superior Court of the State of California, [*2] Los Angeles; Michael Howard; Helen A. Lynn; Kenneth P. Sherman; Carlson, De Klerk, Sherman and Rale, and Does 1-9. (Complaint at 1-5.)

On April 20, 2010, the Court issued an Order re Dismissal with Leave to Amend.

On May 19, 2010, Plaintiff filed a "First Amended Complaint" pursuant to 42 U.S.C. §§1983, 1985 and 1988.

On July 19, 2010, Defendants Commissioner Friedenthal, Commissioner Padilla and the Superior Court of the County of Los Angeles filed a "Notice of Motion and Motion to Dismiss Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint by Defendants Commissioner Friedenthal, Commissioner Padilla and the Superior Court of California, County of Los Angeles; Memorandum of Points and Authorities in Support Thereof [F.R. Civ. P. Rules 12(b)(1) and (6)]."

On August 17, 2010, Plaintiff filed "Plaintiff's Request for Judicial Notice" and "Plaintiff's Opposition to Motion to Dismiss."

On August 31, 2010, Defendants Commissioners Friedenthal and Padilla and the Superior Court filed a "Reply to Plaintiff's Opposition to the Defendants' Motion to Dismiss First Amended Complaint."

On October 12, 2010, Defendants Kenneth P. Sherman and Carlson, De Klerk, Sherman & Rale filed an Answer to Plaintiff's First Amended [*3] Complaint.

On February 9, 2011, United States Magistrate Judge Victor B. Kenton issued a Report and Recommendation recommending that Defendants Commissioner Friedenthal, Commissioner Padilla and the Los Angeles County Superior Court's Motion to Dismiss be granted.

On March 8, 2011, United States District Judge Philip S. Gutierrez issued an "Order Accepting and Adopting the Report and Recommendation of United States Magistrate Judge" and "Judgment" was entered dismissing Defendants Commissioner Friedenthal, Commissioner Padilla, the Los Angeles County Superior Court and Michael Howard with prejudice.

On May 25, 2011, Defendants Kenneth P. Sherman, Carlson, De Klerk, Sherman & Rale filed a "Notice of Motion and Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings as to Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint by Defendants Kenneth P. Sherman, and Carlson, De Klerk, Sherman & Rale; Memorandum of Points and Authorities in Support Thereof" and "Request for Judicial Notice in Support of Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings as to Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint" (hereinafter referred to as "RJN").

On May 31, 2011, the Court issued a Minute Order ordering Plaintiff to file an Opposition or Statement of Non-Opposition [*4] to Defendants' Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings.

On June 24, 2011, Plaintiff filed "Response to Notice of Motion and Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings as to Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint by Defendants Kenneth P. Sherman and Carlson, De Klerk, Sherman and Rale" (hereinafter referred to as "Opposition").

On July 7, 2011, Defendants filed a "Reply in Support of Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings as to Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint by Defendants Kenneth P. Sherman, and Carlson, De Klerk, Sherman and Rale; Memorandum of Points and Authorities in Support Thereof" (hereinafter referred to as "Reply").

Having reviewed the allegations in Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint, Defendants Kenneth P. Sherman and Carlson, De Klerk, Sherman & Rale's Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings, Plaintiff's Opposition and Defendants' Reply, the Court hereby recommends that Defendants' Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings be granted.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

Plaintiff was a party to a contentious custody dispute in Los Angeles County Superior Court Case No. PD 016769. (FAC at ¶ 17.) In July of 2007, Defendant Kenneth P. Sherman, a partner in the law firm of Carlson, De Klerk, Sherman and Rale, was [*5] appointed by Defendant Commissioner Friedenthal to represent Plaintiff's two minor sons, S.L. and B.L., in the custody proceedings. (FAC, ¶¶ 11, 12, 38.) Defendant Commissioner Friedenthal placed the children, B.L. and S.L., in the custody of their paternal grandparents, Helen and Jim Lynn. (FAC, ¶ 39.) Plaintiff alleges that her warnings regarding the grandparents' unfitness to care for the children were foreshadowed by the fact that her son, S.L., later chose to live on the streets instead of with his father. (FAC, ¶¶ 39, 41.) Plaintiff alleges that Defendants Commissioner Friedenthal and Kenneth P. Sherman predicted that this would happen to S.L. (FAC, ¶ 41.)

Plaintiff alleges that in December of 2007 Defendant Kenneth P. Sherman failed to return any of her phone calls while she was attempting to regain custody of her son, B.L., with whom she had only limited visitation rights. (FAC, ¶¶ 40, 49.) On December 21, 2007, Defendant Kenneth P. Sherman applied, ex parte, for an Order to Show Cause why Plaintiff's visitations with her children should not be professionally monitored. (FAC, ¶ 49; RJN, Exhibit ["Ex."] 1.) The ex parte application was supported by the declaration of Helen Lynn, [*6] who, along with Jim Lynn, had custody of B.L. at that time. Helen Lynn declared that, among other recent problems, B.L. had become "belligerent and verbally assaultive" after spending the weekend with Plaintiff, and had "talked about killing [Helen] and killing himself." (RJN, Ex. 1, p. 7, ¶ 9.)

Plaintiff alleges that the ex parte application was motivated by her admitted actions on December 19, 2007, wherein she hung missing children posters around her in-laws' neighborhood regarding M.S. and L.S., Jim and Helen Lynn's other grandchildren. (FAC, ¶¶ 18, 48, 52.) Defendant Commissioner Friedenthal was upset with Plaintiff for hanging missing children posters of M.S. and L.S. (Plaintiff's ex-husband's sister's children). Defendant Commissioner Friedenthal said if they were not her children she had no business hanging missing children posters. (FAC at ¶¶ 49-50.)

Defendant Commissioner Friedenthal granted the ex parte application and ordered that Plaintiff's visitations be professionally monitored at her expense. (FAC ¶¶ 50, 51; RJN, Ex. 2, p. 43.) Plaintiff alleges that the hanging of the missing children posters of M.S. and L.S., is free speech and that the conspiracy between Helen Lynn [*7] and Defendant Kenneth P. Sherman to violate Plaintiff's protected speech is in violation of 42 U.S.C. §§ 1983 and 1985. (FAC, ¶¶ 50, 53.)

Defendant Kenneth P. Sherman continued to represent Plaintiff's son B.L. until the attorney Defendants made a motion to be relieved as counsel which was granted by the Court on July 16, 2008. Thereafter, attorney E. Scott Clarke was appointed to represent B.L. (FAC ¶62.)

PLAINTIFF'S CAUSES OF ACTION

Plaintiff alleges the following causes of action:

1. Violation of the rights of Plaintiff under the First and Fourteenth Amendments of the United States Constitution and 42 U.S.C. §§1983, 1985 and 1988, wherein Plaintiff claims that Defendants Commissioner Friedenthal and the Superior Court threatened retaliation if Plaintiff exercised her free speech;

2. Violation of Plaintiff's rights under the First and Fourteenth Amendments of the United States Constitution and 42 U.S.C. §§1983 and 1985 against Defendants Commissioner Padilla and the Los Angeles County Superior Court. Plaintiff alleges that "Facebook" postings violated her free speech and caused emotional distress;

3. Violation of Plaintiff's rights under the First, Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments of the United States Constitution [*8] and 42 U.S.C. §§1983, 1985 and 1988 wherein Plaintiff alleges Defendants Helen Lynn, Kenneth P. Sherman and Carlson De Klerk, Sherman & Rale violated Plaintiff's free speech rights;

4. Violation of Plaintiff's rights under the First and Fourteenth Amendments of the United States Constitution and 42 U.S.C. §§1983 against Defendant Michael Howard;

5. Negligent infliction of emotional distress and denial of rights under the Fifth Amendment of the United States Constitution against Defendant Los Angeles County Superior Court for failure to supervise a Commissioner;

6. Negligent infliction of emotional distress and denial of constitutional rights of the First and Fifth Amendments of the United States Constitution and in violation of 42 U.S.C. §1983 against Doe Defendants; and
7. Civil conspiracy against Defendants Helen Lynn, Kenneth P. Sherman, and Carlson, De Klerk, Sherman & Rale wherein Plaintiff alleges that those Defendants conspired to deprive Plaintiff of child support by false pretense. (FAC at ¶¶ 105-126.)

DEFENDANTS' MOTION FOR JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS

Defendants Kenneth P. Sherman, and Carlson, De Klerk, Sherman & Rale contend that Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint should be dismissed [*9] on the following grounds: (1) Plaintiff's civil rights action is barred by the Rooker-Feldman [1] doctrine; (2) Plaintiff's claims are barred by the absolute immunity provided by the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine; (3) Plaintiff's claims against the attorney Defendants are barred by the one-year statute of limitations on actions against attorneys arising out of the performance of professional services; (4) Plaintiff's civil conspiracy claim is barred by the absolute litigation privilege; (5) Plaintiff lacks Article III standing; and (6) Plaintiff's 42 U.S.C. § 1983 claim fails because attorney Defendants were not state actors acting under color of state law.

PLAINTIFF'S OPPOSITION TO DEFENDANTS' MOTION FOR JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS

Plaintiff contends that her civil rights action is not barred by the Rooker-Feldman Doctrine; Plaintiff's claims are not barred by the absolute immunity provided by the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine; the one-year statute of limitations on actions against attorneys arising out of the performance of professional [*10] services is tolled until Plaintiff knows about the actual conspiracy to commit fraud and the disclosure of the illegitimate communications between Defendants that were not subject to the attorney-client privilege and from the last occurrence of damage pursuant to the conspiracy; California Civil Code 47 absolute litigation privilege does not apply to 42 U.S.C. § 1983 or § 1985 claims; Civil Code 47 absolute litigation privilege does not apply because the tortious conduct was not relegated to the judicial proceedings; Plaintiff does not lack Article III standing; and non-state actors can be acting under color of law when acting in concert with state actors.

DEFENDANTS' REPLY

Defendants in their Reply contend that Plaintiff's civil rights claims are barred by the Rooker-Feldman Doctrine; Plaintiff's reliance on McDonald [2] is misplaced and all of Plaintiff's claims are barred by the absolute immunity provided by the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine; Plaintiff admits that she suffered actual injury on December 21, 2007 such that her claims are absolutely barred by the one-year statute of limitations embodied in California Code of Civil Procedure § 340.6; the absolute litigation privilege bars Plaintiff's [*11] claims for civil conspiracy; Plaintiff's opposition confirms that she lacks Article III standing; and Plaintiff's response does not provide any authority under which the attorney Defendants can be considered "state actors" for the purpose of Plaintiff's 42 U.S.C. § 1983 claims.

LEGAL STANDARD

DISCUSSION

For all of the following reasons, Defendants' Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings should be granted.

A. Plaintiff's Civil Rights Action is Barred by the Rooker-Feldman [*15] Doctrine.

Plaintiff alleges in Count III that "Defendants Helen A. Lynn and Kenneth P. Sherman, Doe 6 and the partnership of Carlson, De Klerk, Sherman & Rale conspired with a state actor [i.e., Commissioner Friedenthal and the Los Angeles County Superior Court] to violate the Plaintiff's right to free speech, the posting of missing children posters, by intimidating and oppressing the Plaintiff by requesting the court to order monitored visitation with her child. HN6[] A 42 U.S.C. 1983, 1985 and 1988 cause of action arises from the deprivation of the Plaintiff's constitutional rights. The Defendants' action caused severe emotional distress due to the loss of her constitutionally guaranteed right to a parent-child relationship, as well as the restriction to her First Amendment right to free speech." (FAC, ¶ 117.)

HN7[] Federal District Courts may exercise only original jurisdiction; they may not exercise appellate jurisdiction over state court decisions. District of Columbia Court of Appeals v. Feldman, 460 U.S. 462, 482, 103 S.Ct. 1303, 75 L. Ed. 2d 206 (1983); Rooker v. Fidelity Trust Co., 263 U.S. 413, 415-16, 44 S.Ct. 149, 68 L. Ed. 362 (1923); Dubinka v. Judges of the Superior Court, 23 F.3d 218, 221 (9th Cir. 1994). This rule [*16] arises from the juxtaposition of two statutes: 28 U.S.C. §1331, giving District Courts original jurisdiction over civil actions arising under federal law, and 28 U.S.C. §1257, giving the United States Supreme Court the right to review final judgments rendered by the highest court of a state. Dubinka at 221. The rule applies even when the challenge to the state court's decision is based on alleged deprivations of federally protected rights. Allah v. Superior Court, 871 F.2d 887, 891 (9th Cir. 1989).

HN8[] A federal Plaintiff may not avoid the Rooker-Feldman bar by styling an attack on a state court's ruling as a civil rights action. Branson v. Nott, 62 F.3d 287, 291 (9th Cir. 1995), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1009, 116 S. Ct. 565, 133 L. Ed. 2d 491 (1995); Worldwide Church of God v. McNair, 805 F.2d 888, 893 n. 4. In determining whether a civil rights action is such an attack, the Court must determine whether the federal Plaintiff's claims are "inextricably intertwined" with the state court's ruling. District of Columbia Court of Appeals v. Feldman 460 U.S. 462, 482 n. 16, 103 S.Ct. 1303, 75 L. Ed. 2d 206 (1983); Dubinka v. Judges of the Superior Court, 23 F.3d 218, 221 (9th Cir. 1994). A federal claim is inextricably intertwined with the state court's [*17] ruling when a district court must scrutinize the state court's application of the law. Dubinka at 222. Put another way, a "federal claim is inextricably intertwined with the state court judgment if the federal claim succeeds only to the extent that the state court wrongly decided the issues before it." Pennzoil Co. v. Texaco, Inc., 481 U.S. 1, 25, 107 S.Ct. 1519, 95 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1987) (Marshall, J., concurring.)

Plaintiff alleges that the attorney Defendants and Helen Lynn conspired with Defendant Commissioner Friedenthal and violated Plaintiff's right to free speech. (FAC, ¶ 117.) It appears that Plaintiff, unhappy with the Los Angeles County Superior Court's rulings, is attempting to circumvent the decisions of the Los Angeles County Superior Court by filing a civil rights action. This is improper; rather, Plaintiff should appeal the Los Angeles County Superior Court's rulings through the state court system.

Plaintiff further alleges that Defendants' actions in ordering Plaintiff's visitations with her son be monitored violated her constitutional rights and restricted her First Amendment right to free speech. (FAC, ¶ 117.) However, HN9[] "[t]o establish a First Amendment retaliation claim ... a plaintiff [*18] must show that: (i) [she] was engaged in a constitutionally protected activity, (ii) that the defendants' actions would chill a person of ordinary firmness from continuing to engage in the protected activity, and (iii) that the protected activity was a substantial or motivating factor in the defendant's conduct." Pinard v. Clatskanie School Dist. 6J, 467 F.3d 755, 770 (9th Cir. 2006); Mendocino Envtl. Ctr. v. Mendocino County, 192 F.3d 1283, 1300 (9th Cir. 1999).

In order to analyze Plaintiff's civil rights violations based on the allegations contained in ¶ 117 of the FAC, this Court necessarily would have to determine whether the Los Angeles County Superior Court's decision was correct. Specifically, this Court would need to render a decision on whether Defendant Commissioner Friedenthal's alleged orders prohibiting Plaintiff from posting missing children posters in her former in-laws' neighborhood and requiring Plaintiff's visits with her son, B.L., to be professionally monitored, were correct. Consequently, any claims arising out of these allegations are inextricably intertwined with the Los Angeles County Superior Court's rulings, and are barred by the Rooker-Feldman Doctrine as [*19] a matter of law.

B. Plaintiff's Claims Are Barred by the Absolute Immunity Provided by the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine.

HN10[] The Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, which arose in the context of antitrust law, holds that those who petition the government for redress are generally immune from liability. California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 510-11, 92 S.Ct. 609, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1972)[the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine extended to "the approach of citizens ... to administrative agencies ... and to the courts"]. The Doctrine is well established under California law and has been applied to bar liability for activities undertaken in the course of representing a client in litigation. Premier Medical Management Systems, Inc. v. California Ins. Guarantee Assn., 136 Cal. App. 4th 464, 478-79, 39 Cal. Rptr. 3d 43 (2006). The immunity applies no matter how a plaintiff chooses to characterize a purported cause of action if, as here, the acts which necessarily underlie the purported cause of action are taken in the course of presenting a matter in a court of law. In Ludwig v. Superior Court, 37 Cal.App.4th 8, 21-22, fn. 17, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 350 (1995), the Court explained, "obviously, the principle of constitutional law that bars litigation arising [*20] from injuries received as a consequence of First Amendment petitioning activity [should be applied] regardless of the underlying cause of action asserted by the plaintiffs [citation]. [T]o hold otherwise would effectively chill the defendants' First Amendment rights [citation]." Ludwig, 37 Cal.App.4th at 21-22, fn. 17 (quoting Hi-Top Steel Corp. v. Lehrer, 24 Cal.App.4th 570, 577-78, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 646 (1994).

In Premier Medical Management Systems, Inc. v. California Ins. Guarantee Ass'n., supra, the Court analyzed the applicability of the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine to bar liability based upon conduct undertaken in the course of litigating lien claims. In holding that the complaint was subject to being stricken insofar as the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine completely barred plaintiff's claims, the court concluded, "[t]he gravamen of plaintiff's action arises from the activity of defendants in litigating lien claims ..." Premier, 136 Cal. App. 4th at 477. Holding that the right of litigants and their counsel to present their positions in a court of law constitutes the essence of petitioning activity, the court dismissed the claim in its entirety.

Plaintiff in her Opposition relies on McDonald v. Smith, 472 U.S. 479, 105 S.Ct. 2787, 86 L. Ed. 2d 384 (1985) [*21] for the proposition that the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine does not apply to her case. Plaintiff argues that libelous and damaging falsehoods in petitions to Government officials are not protected by the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine. Plaintiff's reliance on McDonald, however, is mistaken. The attorney Defendants are being sued by Plaintiff for their conduct associated with litigation on behalf of Plaintiff's minor sons, B.L. and S.L. Plaintiff's claims against Defendants Kenneth P. Sherman, and the law firm Carlson, De Klerk, Sherman & Rale are based on their petitioning activities in the custody dispute. The gravamen of Plaintiff's Complaint is that after the attorney Defendants were appointed by the Court to represent Plaintiff's sons, they conspired with the Court and others to deprive her of her constitutional right to free speech and a parent-child relationship. However, the attorney Defendants' conduct cannot be characterized as libel, such that McDonald would apply.

Plaintiff also contends that the attorney Defendants have been sued as a result of their activities on behalf of Defendant Helen Lynn and her daughter Crystal Lynn Strelioff (Opposition at 15) and therefore are not protected [*22] by the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine. However, the attorney Defendants did not represent either Helen Lynn or Crystal Lynn Strelioff.

The attorney Defendants have the right to present their positions and their clients' positions in a court of law. The attorney Defendants are protected by the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine because their representation of Plaintiff's minor sons, B.L. and S.L., in the underlying action was petitioning activity. The attorney Defendants were appointed by Defendant Commissioner Friedenthal to advocate for their clients, S.L. and B.L. Plaintiff's claims are therefore barred under the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine as a matter of law.

C. Plaintiff's Claims Against the Attorney Defendants Are Barred by the One-Year Statute of Limitations on Actions Against Attorneys Arising out of the Performance of Their Professional Services.

HN11[] California Code of Civil Procedure § 340.6 governs the statute of limitations for all actions (other than actual fraud) regarding an attorney's alleged wrongful act or omission, regardless of the theory pled. HN12[] Section 340.6 provides that:

> "(a) An action against an attorney for a wrongful act or omission, other than for actual fraud, arising in the performance [*23] of professional services shall be commenced within one year after the plaintiff discovers, or through the use of reasonable diligence should have discovered, the facts constituting the wrongful act or omission, or four years from the date of the wrongful act or omission, whichever occurs first. ... in no event shall the time for commencement of legal action exceed four years except that the period shall be tolled during the time that ...:
> (1) The plaintiff has not sustained actual injury."

In July of 2007, Defendant Kenneth P. Sherman was appointed by Defendant Commissioner Friedenthal to represent Plaintiff's two minor sons, B.L. and S.L., in the custody proceedings. (FAC, ¶¶ 11, 12, 38.) As noted by Plaintiff in her Opposition, Defendant Kenneth P. Sherman was relieved as attorney of record on July 16, 2008. (Opposition at 1.)

Plaintiff was aware of the facts giving rise to her claim against the attorney Defendants by December 21, 2007. At that time, Defendant Kenneth P. Sherman is alleged to have: "[f]iled an Application for Order and Supporting Declaration dated December 19, 2007 in order to effect the ex parte order to require a monitor for Laura's visits. Mr. Sherman did not speak [*24] to Laura about the 'facts' he alleged. Mr. Sherman made his recommendations based on double hearsay (what Helen said B.L. said Laura said) and the act of hanging the missing children posters." (FAC, ¶ 52.) On that date, Defendant Commissioner Friedenthal issued a temporary order requiring Plaintiff's visits with her son, B.L., to be monitored. (RJN, Ex. 2 at p. 2: 15-26.)

Plaintiff alleges that "Defendants Helen A. Lynn and Kenneth P. Sherman, Doe 6 and the partnership of Carlson, De Klerk, Sherman & Rale conspired with a state actor to violate Plaintiff's right to free speech, the posting of missing children posters, by intimidating and oppressing the Plaintiff by requesting the Court to order monitored visitation with her child." (FAC, ¶ 117.) Plaintiff further alleges that "[t]he Defendants' actions caused severe emotional distress due to the loss of her constitutionally guaranteed right to a parent-child relationship, as well as the restriction to her First Amendment right to free speech." (Id.)

Based on Plaintiff's allegations, her rights were infringed upon by the Los Angeles County Superior Court's December 21, 2007 order requiring her visits to be professionally monitored. (FAC, [*25] ¶ 51; RJN, Ex. 2.) There is no question but that the December 21, 2007 Order caused Plaintiff to suffer "actual injury" sufficient to end any tolling of the one-year statute of limitations. Plaintiff was therefore required to file her action against the attorney Defendants within one year thereafter, or by no later than December 21, 2008. Plaintiff's Complaint filed on or about November 25, 2009 was filed more than 11 months after the statute of limitations expired.

D. Plaintiff Lacks Article III Standing.

Defendants Kenneth P. Sherman and Carlson, De Klerk, Sherman & Rale contend that Plaintiff lacks standing under Article III to bring this action. As stated in O'Shea v. Littleton, 414 U.S. 488, 493-94, 94 S.Ct. 669, 38 L. Ed. 2d 674 (1974), HN13[] "Plaintiffs in the federal courts 'must allege some threatened or actual injury resulting from the putatively illegal action before a federal court may assume jurisdiction.' ... Abstract injury is not enough. It must be alleged that the Plaintiff 'has sustained or is immediately in danger of sustaining some direct injury' as the result of the challenged statute or official conduct. ... The injury or threat of injury must be both 'real and immediate,' not 'conjectural' [*26] or 'hypothetical.'" (Citations omitted.)

Here, there is no "current controversy" between Plaintiff, and the attorney Defendants. As conceded in Plaintiff's FAC, the attorney Defendants were relieved as counsel for Plaintiff's sons, B.L. and S.L., in July of 2008, more than a year before Plaintiff filed her original Complaint. (FAC, ¶ 62; Opposition at 1.) Moreover, the only alleged misconduct of the attorney Defendants amounted to their ex parte application seeking professional monitoring of Plaintiff's visitations with her son, B.L., in December of 2007. Since the attorney Defendants' withdrawal from the underlying custody dispute, there has been no act or omission of the attorney Defendants alleged by Plaintiff to cause Plaintiff injury. Plaintiff does not have any present injury in fact and therefore, does not have Article III standing to proceed with this action against the attorney Defendants.

E. Plaintiff Has Failed To State A Claim Against Each Defendant Under Section 1983.

HN14[] 42 U.S.C. §1983 provides:

> "Every person who, under color of any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage, of any state... subjects, or causes to be subjected, any citizen of the United States or other [*27] person within the jurisdiction thereof to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws, shall be liable to the party injured in an action at law, suit in equity, or other proper proceeding for redress."

HN15[] In order to state a claim under §1983, Plaintiff must allege that: (1) Defendant was acting under color of state law at the time the complained-of act was committed; and (2) Defendant's conduct deprived Plaintiff of rights, privileges or immunities secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States. Parratt v. Taylor, 451 U.S. 527, 535, 101 S.Ct. 1908, 68 L. Ed. 2d 420, (1981), overruled on other grounds by Daniels v. Williams, 474 U.S. 327, 330-31, 106 S. Ct. 662, 88 L. Ed. 2d 662 (1986); Jensen v. City of Oxnard, 145 F.3d 1078, 1082 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1016, 119 S. Ct. 540, 142 L. Ed. 2d 449 (1998).

Plaintiff also must establish causation, by demonstrating that each Defendant personally was involved in the constitutional violation, or that there was a sufficient causal connection between the Defendant's wrongful conduct and the constitutional violation. Redman v. County of San Diego, 942 F.2d 1435, 1446-47 (9th Cir. 1991)(en banc), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 1074, 112 S. Ct. 972, 117 L. Ed. 2d 137 (1992); Hansen v. Black, 885 F.2d 642, 646 (9th Cir. 1989). [*28] "The inquiry into causation must be individualized to focus on the duties and responsibilities of each individual defendant whose acts or omissions are alleged to have caused a constitutional deprivation." Leer v. Murphy 844 F.2d 628, 633 (9th Cir. 1988).

HN16[] Liability may be imposed on an individual defendant under §1983 only if the plaintiff can show that the defendant proximately caused the deprivations of his federally protected rights of which he complains. Leer v. Murphy, 844 F.2d 628, 634 (9th Cir. 1988); Harris v. City of Roseburg, 664 F.2d 1121, 1125 (9th Cir. 1981).

HN17[] To state a claim under Title 42 U.S.C. §1983, the plaintiff must allege a violation of her constitutional rights and show that the defendant's actions were taken under color of state law. West v. Atkins, 487 U.S. 42, 48, 108 S.Ct. 2250, 101 L. Ed. 2d 40 (1988); Gritchen v. Collier, 254 F.3d 807, 812 (9th Cir.2001). That the defendant act under color of state law is "'a jurisdictional requisite for a §1983 action.'" Id. (quoting West v. Atkins, 487 U.S. 42, 46, 108 S.Ct. 2250, 101 L. Ed. 2d 40 (1988)). Similarly, a plaintiff basing a cause of action on alleged constitutional violations must show that the "actions complained of are 'fairly attributable' [*29] to the government." Morse v. North Coast Opportunities, Inc., 118 F.3d 1338, 1340 (9th Cir. 1997).

HN18[] Generally, private actors are not acting under color of state law. See Price v. Hawaii, 939 F.2d 702, 707-08 (9th Cir. 1991). In order to determine whether a private actor acts under color of law for §1983 purposes, the Court looks to whether the conduct causing the alleged deprivation of federal rights is fairly attributable to the State. Id. (citing Lugar v. Edmondson Oil Co., 457 U.S. 922, 937, 102 S. Ct. 2744, 73 L. Ed. 2d 482 (1982)). Conduct may be fairly attributable to the State where (1) it results from a governmental policy and (2) the defendant is someone who fairly may be said to be a governmental actor. Lugar v. Edmondson Oil Co., 457 U.S. 922, 937, 102 S. Ct. 2744, 73 L. Ed. 2d 482 (1982); see also Sutton v. Providence St. Joseph Medical Center, 192 F.3d 826, 839 (9th Cir. 1999). Defendants Kenneth P. Sherman and Carlson, De Klerk, Sherman & Rale are not state actors.

Here, Plaintiff has failed to set forth sufficient facts against Defendants Kenneth P. Sherman and the law firm of Carlson, De Klerk, Sherman and Rale to state a civil rights cause of action under 42 U.S.C. §1983. Defendants Kenneth P. [*30] Sherman and Carlson, De Klerk, Sherman and Rale are not "state actors." Plaintiff's FAC against the attorney Defendants must be dismissed because Defendant Kenneth P. Sherman was not "acting under color of state law." Here, the attorney Defendants were appointed by Defendant Commissioner Friedenthal to represent Plaintiff's minor children in a custody dispute. (FAC, ¶¶ 11, 38.) The attorney Defendants did not represent Plaintiff, nor did they owe any duty to her. The attorney Defendants only owed a duty to the children to act in their best interests with respect to the custody proceedings. Consequently, the attorney Defendants could not and did not act under color of state law at any time during the custody proceedings when they communicated with Helen Lynn, Plaintiff, or the Court; when they filed the ex parte application seeking monitored visitations with B.L.; or when they allegedly chose to ignore Plaintiff's phone calls and work with Helen in drafting a declaration for the ex parte application. As a private attorney appointed by the court, Defendant Kenneth P. Sherman was still acting as a private actor. Additionally, HN19[] any services performed by the attorney Defendants in connection [*31] with the underlying custody dispute could not constitute actions under color of state law. See Franklin v. Oregon, 662 F.2d 1337, 1345 (9th Cir. 1981).

F. Plaintiff's Civil Conspiracy Claim Is Barred by the Litigation Privilege Set Forth in Civil Code § 47(b).

Plaintiff in the seventh count of the FAC alleges, in a single sentence, that "Helen Lynn, Kenneth P. Sherman, Carlson, De Klerk, Sherman & Rale and Doe 6 conspired to defraud the Plaintiff of child support by false pretense ." (FAC, ¶ 126.) HN20[] "The litigation privilege shields any 'publication or broadcast' made in any ... judicial proceeding." A. F. Brown Elec. Contractor, Inc. v. Rhino Electric Supply, Inc., 137 Cal.App.4th 1118, 1126, 41 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1 (2006); see also California Civil Code § 47(b). All of Plaintiff's claims against the attorney Defendants are absolutely privileged as communications in legal proceedings which have some connection or logical relation to the legal proceedings. In Rusheen v. Cohen, 37 Cal.4th 1048, 39 Cal. Rptr. 3d 516, 128 P.3d 713 (2006), the California Supreme Court explained that the absolute immunity under Civil Code § 47(b) litigation privilege extended to communications "with some relation" to judicial proceedings [*32] and extends to the steps taken thereafter in execution on the judgment.

Thus, HN21[] "communications with 'some relation' to judicial proceedings" are "absolutely immune from tort liability" by the litigation privilege. Rubin v. Green, 4 Cal.4th 1187, 1193, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 828, 847 P.2d 1044 (1993). It is not limited to statements made during a trial or other proceedings, but may extend to steps taken prior thereto, or afterwards." (Id. at 1057.) The litigation privilege is absolute and bars all causes of action other than a claim for malicious prosecution, including those asserted in federal court. Rohde v. Wolf, 154 Cal.App.4th 28, 38, 64 Cal.Rptr.3d 348 (2007). It has also been regularly applied in federal courts. "The usual formulation is that the privilege applies to any communication (1) made in judicial or quasi-judicial proceedings; (2) by litigants or other participants authorized by law; (3) to achieve the objects of the litigation; and (4) that have some connection or logical relation to the action [Citations]." Silberg v. Anderson, 50 Cal.3d 205, 212, 266 Cal. Rptr. 638, 786 P.2d 365 (1990). See Morales v. Cooperative of Am. Physicians, Inc., 180 F.3d 1060, 1062 (9th Cir. 1999). Courts have given the privilege an expansive reach [*33] and held that the privilege is absolute, even in cases in which the result in inequitable. Doctors' Co. Ins. Servs. v. Superior Court, 225 Cal.App.3d 1284, 1294, 275 Cal. Rptr. 674 (1990). Any doubt as to whether the privilege applies is resolved in favor of applying it. Adams v. Superior Court, 2 Cal.App.4th 521, 529, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 49 (1992).

HN22[] "Pleadings and process in a case are generally viewed as privileged communications." Navellier v. Sletten, 106 Cal.App.4th 763, 770, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 201 (2003). Indeed, even allegedly false or perjurous pleadings and declarations have been held to be covered by the litigation privilege. See Pollock v. University of Southern California, 112 Cal.App.4th 1416, 1431, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 122 (2003)(A declaration "functions as written testimony," is a "communication, not conduct" and "is exactly the sort of communication that privilege is designed to protect").

Thus, Plaintiff's conspiracy claim only alleges conduct by the attorney Defendants arising out of the representation of Plaintiff's minor sons B.L. and S.L. in the family court action, namely, their alleged interference with Plaintiff's claim for child custody. As such, the attorney Defendants' [*34] conduct is absolutely privileged. Indeed, the conduct alleged by Plaintiff relates solely to communications and recommendations to a court relating to issues under consideration by that court. As such, Plaintiff's claims against the attorney Defendants are barred.

Further, HN23[] a conspiracy claim brought under § 1983 requires proof of an "agreement or meeting the minds to violate constitutional rights." Franklin v. Fox, 312 F.3d 423, 441 (9th Cir. 2002), quoting United Steelworkers of America v. Phelps Dodge, 865 F.2d 1539, 1540, 1541 (9th Cir. 1989)(citation omitted), and an actual deprivation of constitutional rights. Hart v. Parks, 450 F.3d 1059, 1071 (9th Cir. 2006)(quoting Woodrum v. Woodward County, Oklahoma, 866 F.2d 1121, 1126 (9th Cir. 1989). "To be liable, each participant in the conspiracy need not know the exact details of the plan, but each participant must at least share the common objective of the conspiracy." Franklin, 312 F.3d at 441, quoting United Steel Workers, 865 F.2d at 1541.

HN24[] To state a claim for conspiracy, Plaintiff must allege specific facts showing two or more persons intended to accomplish an unlawful objective of causing Plaintiff harm and took some concerted action [*35] in furtherance thereof. Gilbrook v. City of Westminster, 177 F.3d 839 (9th Cir. 1999); Burns v. County of King, 883 F.2d 819, 822 (9th Cir. 1989)(conclusory allegations of conspiracy insufficient to state a valid § 1983 claim); see also Margolis v. Ryan, 140 F.3d 850, 852 (9th Cir. 1998)(to state a claim for conspiracy under § 1983, Plaintiff must allege facts showing agreement of the alleged conspirators to deprive him of his rights. A conspiracy allegation, even if established, does not give rise to a liability under § 1983 unless there is a deprivation of civil rights.).

HN25[] A valid claim for conspiracy between private parties and the government to violate constitutional rights requires an agreement or "meeting of the minds." Adickes v. S.H. Kress and Co., 398 U.S. 144, 158, 90 S. Ct. 1598, 26 L. Ed. 2d 142 (1970). Further, the acts of the private parties must be "sufficiently intertwined" with a violating government actor amounting to more than "near acquiescence." Fonda v. Gray, 707 F.2d 435, 438 (9th Cir. 1983). Accordingly, Plaintiff has failed to state a civil conspiracy claim and the attorney Defendants must be dismissed.

RECOMMENDATION

For all of the foregoing reasons, IT IS RECOMMENDED that the District Court issue [*36] an Order: (1) approving and adopting this Report and Recommendation; (2) granting Defendants Kenneth P. Sherman and Carlson, De Klerk, Sherman & Rale's Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings; and (3) directing that an Order be entered dismissing these Defendants from this action with prejudice.

ORDER ON DEFENDANTS' F.R.Civ.P. 12 MOTION TO DISMISS

(Doc. 5.)

INTRODUCTION

Defendants GMAC Mortgage, LLC ("GMAC") and Executive Trustee Services, LLC ("ETS") seek to dismiss as legally barred and time barred plaintiff Carmen Lopez' ("Ms. Lopez"') claims arising out of the defaulted loan for and foreclosures on her Bakersfield property ("property"). Ms. Lopez filed no papers to oppose timely GMAC and ETS' (collectively "defendants"') F.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss. This Court considered defendants' F.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss on the record and VACATES the December 15, 2011 hearing, pursuant to Local Rule 230(c), (g). For the reasons discussed below, this Court DISMISSES this action against defendants.

BACKGROUND

Ms. Lopez' Loan And Property Foreclosure

On October 3, 2007, Ms. Lopez financed the property's purchase with a $233,494 loan from GMAC. A Deed of Trust ("DOT") was recorded on [*2] October 5, 2007 to secure the loan. [1] The DOT names ETS as trustee and Mortgage Electronic Registration Systems, Inc. ("MERS") as beneficiary, acting solely as nominee for lender GMAC.

On August 28, 2009, a Substitution of Trustee was recorded whereby ETS became DOT trustee.

In early 2010, Ms. Lopez experienced difficulties making her monthly loan payments and attempted to obtain a loan modification with GMAC. GMAC rejected Ms. Lopez' partial payment and told her they could not accept such payments because she was under review for loan modification.

On May 3, 2010, ETS recorded a Notice of Default and Election to Sell under Deed of Trust which indicated that Ms. Lopez was $36,582.62 in arrears as of April 30, 2010.

In June 2010, plaintiff attempted again to work out a loan modification but never received the loan application as promised. In August 2010, GMAC informed Ms. Lopez that she did not qualify for loan modification and that ETS proceeded toward property foreclosure.

In August 2010, Ms. Lopez again attempted to obtain loan modification and provided GMAC requested [*3] financial documents. On September 21, 2010, MERS assigned its beneficial interest under the DOT to GMAC, and a corresponding Assignment of Deed of Trust was recorded on October 1, 2010. In February 2011, GMAC declined Ms. Lopez for loan modification.

On May 12, 2011, a Notice of Trustee's Sale for the property was recorded. On August 24, 2011, the property's foreclosure sale occurred, and GMAC became record title owner of the property. A Trustee's Deed upon Sale was recorded on August 30, 2011.

Ms. Lopez' Claims

On September 15, 2011, prior to removal to this Court, Ms. Lopez filed her Verified Complaint ("complaint") to allege California statutory and common law claims which will be addressed below. The complaint alleges that "GMAC failed to act as reasonable lender by placing the Plaintiff in a risky unreasonable and unaffordable loan." The complaint accuses GMAC of knowing that once the loan became unaffordable, Ms. Lopez "would be forced to either refinance or have a foreclosure" and of failing "to disclose the terms and risks of the Subject Loan in any meaningfully [sic] way." The complaint seeks damages of "loss money and property," a declaration that the foreclosure sale is void [*4] and unenforceable, an injunction to evict Ms. Lopez, rescission of the promissory note and foreclosure sale, and punitive damages.

DISCUSSION

F.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) Motion To Dismiss Standards

Defendants fault the complaint's failure to allege factual claims that "give rise to a valid claim" given the complaint's speculative and conclusory allegations which are unclear as to "which defendants are being named under each claim."

[1] Documents pertaining to Ms. Lopez' loan and property foreclosure were recorded with the Kern County Official Records.

"When a federal court reviews the sufficiency of a complaint, before the reception of any evidence either by affidavit or admissions, its task is necessarily a limited one. The issue is not whether a plaintiff will ultimately prevail but whether the claimant is entitled to offer evidence to support the claims." Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 94 S. Ct. 1683, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90 (1974); Gilligan v. Jamco Development Corp., 108 F.3d 246, 249 (9th Cir. 1997). A F.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) dismissal is proper where there is either a "lack of a cognizable legal theory" or "the absence of sufficient facts alleged under a cognizable legal theory." Balistreri v. Pacifica Police Dep't, 901 F.2d 696, 699 (9th Cir. 1988); Graehling v. Village of Lombard, Ill., 58 F.3d 295, 297 (7th Cir. 1995). A F.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) [*5] motion "tests the legal sufficiency of a claim." Navarro v. Block, 250 F.3d 729, 732 (9th Cir. 2001).

In addressing dismissal, a court must: (1) construe the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff; (2) accept all well-pleaded factual allegations as true; and (3) determine whether plaintiff can prove any set of facts to support a claim that would merit relief. Cahill v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 80 F.3d 336, 337-338 (9th Cir. 1996). Nonetheless, a court is not required "to accept as true allegations that are merely conclusory, unwarranted deductions of fact, or unreasonable inferences." In re Gilead Sciences Securities Litig., 536 F.3d 1049, 1055 (9th Cir. 2008) (citation omitted). A court "need not assume the truth of legal conclusions cast in the form of factual allegations," U.S. ex rel. Chunie v. Ringrose, 788 F.2d 638, 643, n. 2 (9th Cir.1986), and must not "assume that the [plaintiff] can prove facts that it has not alleged or that the defendants have violated . . . laws in ways that have not been alleged." Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 526, 103 S.Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983). A court need not permit an [*6] attempt to amend if "it is clear that the complaint could not be saved by an amendment." Livid Holdings Ltd. v. Salomon Smith Barney, Inc., 416 F.3d 940, 946 (9th Cir. 2005).

A "plaintiff's obligation to provide the 'grounds' of his 'entitlement to relief' requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 1964-65, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (internal citations omitted). Moreover, a court "will dismiss any claim that, even when construed in the light most favorable to plaintiff, fails to plead sufficiently all required elements of a cause of action." Student Loan Marketing Ass'n v. Hanes, 181 F.R.D. 629, 634 (S.D. Cal. 1998). In practice, a complaint "must contain either direct or inferential allegations respecting all the material elements necessary to sustain recovery under some viable legal theory." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 562, 127 S. Ct. at 1969 (quoting Car Carriers, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 745 F.2d 1101, 1106 (7th Cir. 1984)).

In Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S.Ct. 1937,1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009), the U.S. Supreme Court explained:

> . . . a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, [*7] accepted as true, to "state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." . . . A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged. . . . The plausibility standard is not akin to a "probability requirement," but it asks for more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully. (Citations omitted.)

After discussing Iqbal, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals summarized: "In sum, for a complaint to survive [dismissal], the non-conclusory 'factual content,' and reasonable inferences from that content, must be plausibly suggestive of a claim entitling the plaintiff to relief." Moss v. U.S. Secret Service, 572 F.3d 962, 969 (9th Cir. 2009) (quoting Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S.Ct. at 1949).

The U.S. Supreme Court applies a "two-prong approach" to address dismissal:

> First, the tenet that a court must accept as true all of the allegations contained in a complaint is inapplicable to legal conclusions. Threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice. . . . Second, only a complaint that [*8] states a plausible claim for relief survives a motion to dismiss. . . . Determining whether a complaint states a plausible claim for relief will . . . be a context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense. . . . But where the well-pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, the > complaint has alleged - but it has not "show[n]"-"that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 8(a)(2).

> In keeping with these principles a court considering a motion to dismiss can choose to begin by identifying pleadings that, because they are no more than conclusions, are not entitled to the assumption of truth. While legal conclusions can provide the framework of a complaint, they must be supported by factual allegations. When there are well-pleaded factual allegations, a court should assume their veracity and then determine whether they plausibly give rise to an entitlement to relief.

Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S.Ct. at 1949-1950.

Moreover, a plaintiff suing multiple defendants "must allege the basis of his claim against each defendant to satisfy Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(a)(2), [*9] which requires a short and plain statement of the claim to put defendants on sufficient notice of the allegations against them." Gauvin v. Trombatore, 682 F.Supp. 1067, 1071 (N.D. Cal. 1988). "Specific identification of the parties to the activities alleged by the plaintiffs is required in this action to enable the defendant to plead intelligently." Van Dyke Ford, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 399 F.Supp. 277, 284 (D. Wis. 1975).

A"complaint may be dismissed under Rule 12(b)(6) when its own allegations indicate the existence of an affirmative defense." Quiller v. Barclays American/Credit, Inc., 727 F.2d 1067, 1069 (11th Cir. 1984). For instance, a limitations defense may be raised by a F.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss. Jablon v. Dean Witter & Co., 614 F.2d 677, 682 (9th Cir. 1980); see Avco Corp. v. Precision Air Parts, Inc., 676 F.2d 494, 495 (11th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1037, 103 S. Ct. 450, 74 L. Ed. 2d 604 (1982). A F.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss may raise the limitations defense when the statute's running is apparent on the complaint's face. Jablon, 614 F.2d at 682. If the limitations defense does not appear on the complaint's face and the trial court accepts matters outside the [*10] pleadings' scope, the defense may be raised by a motion to dismiss accompanied by affidavits. Jablon, 614 F.2d at 682; Rauch v. Day and Night Mfg. Corp., 576 F.2d 697 (6th Cir. 1978).

For a F.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) motion, a court generally cannot consider material outside the complaint. Van Winkle v. Allstate Ins. Co., 290 F.Supp.2d 1158, 1162, n. 2 (C.D. Cal. 2003). Nonetheless, a court may consider exhibits submitted with the complaint. Durning v. First Boston Corp., 815 F.2d 1265, 1267 (9th Cir. 1987);Van Winkle, 290 F.Supp.2d at 1162, n. 2. In addition, a "court may consider evidence on which the complaint 'necessarily relies' if: (1) the complaint refers to the document; (2) the document is central to the plaintiff's claim; and (3) no party questions the authenticity of the copy attached to the 12(b)(6) motion." Marder v. Lopez, 450 F.3d 445, 448 (9th Cir. 2006). A court may treat such a document as "part of the complaint, and thus may assume that its contents are true for purposes of a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6)." United States v. Ritchie, 342 F.3d 903, 908 (9th Cir.2003). Such consideration prevents "plaintiffs from surviving a Rule 12(b)(6) motion by deliberately omitting [*11] reference to documents upon which their claims are based." Parrino v. FHP, Inc., 146 F.3d 699, 706 (9th Cir. 1998). [2] A "court may disregard allegations in the complaint if contradicted by facts established by exhibits attached to the complaint." Sumner Peck Ranch v. Bureau of Reclamation, 823 F.Supp. 715, 720 (E.D. Cal. 1993) (citing Durning v. First Boston Corp., 815 F.2d 1265, 1267 (9th Cir.1987)).

With these standards in mind, this Court turns to defendants' challenges to Ms. Lopez' claims.

Failure To Tender

Common Law And Equitable Claims

[2] "We have extended the 'incorporation by reference' doctrine to situations in which the plaintiff's claim depends on the contents of a document, the defendant attaches the document to its motion to dismiss, and the parties do not dispute the authenticity of the document, even though the plaintiff does not explicitly allege the contents of that document in the complaint." Knievel v. ESPN, 393 F.3d 1068, 1076 (9th Cir. 2005) (citing Parrino, 146 F.3d at 706).

Defendants raise Ms. Lopez' failure to tender amounts owed on her loan as a global defense to the complaint's claims in that their "crux" "is a challenge to the foreclosure sale" which invokes [*12] equitable principles.

"A tender is an offer of performance made with the intent to extinguish the obligation." Arnolds Management Corp. v. Eischen, 158 Cal.App.3d 575, 580, 205 Cal.Rptr. 15 (1984) (citing Cal. Civ. Code, § 1485; Still v. Plaza Marina Commercial Corp., 21 Cal.App.3d 378, 385, 98 Cal.Rptr. 414 (1971)). "A tender must be one of full performance . . . and must be unconditional to be valid." Arnolds Management, 158 Cal.App.3d at 580, 205 Cal.Rptr. 15. "Nothing short of the full amount due the creditor is sufficient to constitute a valid tender, and the debtor must at his peril offer the full amount." Rauer's Law etc. Co. v. S. Proctor Co., 40 Cal.App. 524, 525, 181 P. 71 (1919).

A defaulted borrower is "required to allege tender of the amount of [the lender's] secured indebtedness in order to maintain any cause of action for irregularity in the sale procedure." Abdallah v. United Savings Bank, 43 Cal.App.4th 1101, 1109, 51 Cal.Rptr.2d 286 (1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1081, 117 S. Ct. 746, 136 L. Ed. 2d 684 (1997). In FPCI RE-HAB 01 v. E & G Investments, Ltd., 207 Cal.App.3d 1018, 1021, 255 Cal.Rptr. 157 (1989), the California Court of Appeal explained:

> . . . generally "an action to set aside [*13] a trustee's sale for irregularities in sale notice or procedure should be accompanied by an offer to pay the full amount of the debt for which the property was security." . . . . This rule . . . is based upon the equitable maxim that a court of equity will not order a useless act performed. . . . "A valid and viable tender of payment of the indebtedness owing is essential to an action to cancel a voidable sale under a deed of trust." . . . The rationale behind the rule is that if plaintiffs could not have redeemed the property had the sale procedures been proper, any irregularities in the sale did not result in damages to the plaintiffs. (Citations omitted.)

An action to set aside a foreclosure sale, unaccompanied by an offer to redeem, does not state a cause of action which a court of equity recognizes. Karlsen v. American Sav. & Loan Assn., 15 Cal.App.3d 112, 117, 92 Cal.Rptr. 851 (1971). The basic rule is that an offer of performance is of no effect if the person making it is not able to perform. Karlsen, 15 Cal.App.3d at118, 92 Cal.Rptr. 851 (citing Cal. Civ. Code, § 1495). Simply put, if the offeror "is without the money necessary to make the offer good and knows it" the tender [*14] is without legal force or effect. Karlsen, 15 Cal.App.3d at118, 92 Cal.Rptr. 851 (citing several cases). "It would be futile to set aside a foreclosure sale on the technical ground that notice was improper, if the party making the challenge did not first make full tender and thereby establish his ability to purchase the property." United States Cold Storage v. Great Western Savings & Loan Assn., 165 Cal.App.3d 1214, 1224, 212 Cal.Rptr. 232 (1985). "A cause of action 'implicitly integrated' with the irregular sale fails unless the trustor can allege and establish a valid tender." Arnolds Management, 158 Cal.App.3d at 579, 205 Cal.Rptr. 15.

"It is settled in California that a mortgagor cannot quiet his title against the mortgagee without paying the debt secured." Shimpones v. Stickney, 219 Cal. 637, 649, 28 P.2d 673 (1934); see Mix v. Sodd, 126 Cal.App.3d 386, 390, 178 Cal.Rptr. 736 (1981) ("a mortgagor in possession may not maintain an action to quiet title, even though the debt is unenforceable"); Aguilar v. Bocci, 39 Cal.App.3d 475, 477, 114 Cal.Rptr. 91 (1974) (trustor is unable to quiet title "without discharging his debt"). "A party may not without payment of the debt, enjoin a [*15] sale by a trustee under a power conferred by a deed of trust, or have his title quieted against the purchaser at such a sale, even though the statute of limitations has run against the indebtedness." Sipe v. McKenna, 88 Cal.App.2d 1001, 1006, 200 P.2d 61 (1948).

Moreover, to obtain "rescission or cancellation, the rule is that the complainant is required to do equity, as a condition to his obtaining relief, by restoring to the defendant everything of value which the plaintiff has received in the transaction. . . . The rule applies although the plaintiff was induced to enter into the contract by the fraudulent representations of the defendant." Fleming v. Kagan, 189 Cal.App.2d 791, 796, 11 Cal.Rptr. 737 (1961). "A valid and viable tender of payment of the indebtedness owing is essential to an action to cancel a voidable sale under a deed of trust." Karlsen, 15 Cal.App.3d at 117, 92 Cal.Rptr. 851. Analyzing "trust deed nonjudicial foreclosure sales issues in the context of common law contract principles" is "unhelpful" given "the comprehensive statutory scheme regulating nonjudicial foreclosure sales." Residential Capital v. Cal-Western Reconveyance Corp., 108 Cal.App.4th 807, 820, 821, 134 Cal.Rptr.2d 162 (2003).

"The [*16] rules which govern tenders are strict and are strictly applied." Nguyen v. Calhoun, 105 Cal.App.4th 428, 439, 129 Cal.Rptr.2d 436 (2003). "The tenderer must do and offer everything that is necessary on his part to complete the transaction, and must fairly make known his purpose without ambiguity, and the act of tender must be such that it needs only acceptance by the one to whom it is made to complete the transaction." Gaffney v. Downey Savings & Loan Assn., 200 Cal.App.3d 1154, 1165, 246 Cal.Rptr. 421 (1988). The debtor bears "responsibility to make an unambiguous tender of the entire amount due or else suffer the consequence that the tender is of no effect." Gaffney, 200 Cal.App.3d at 1165, 246 Cal.Rptr. 421.

Neither the complaint nor record references Ms. Lopez' tender of indebtedness or meaningful ability to do so. The complaint merely alleges that Ms. Lopez "would like to keep the property if the Defendants . . . are willing to consider a reasonable loan modification." An offer to negotiate a loan modification is not a tender. The record's silence on Ms. Lopez' tender of or ability to tender amounts outstanding is construed as her concession of inability to do so. Without Ms. Lopez' [*17] meaningful tender, Ms. Lopez seeks empty remedies, not capable of being granted and the complaint's purported claims are doomed.

Truth In Lending Act

The complaint's first claim alleges that the "risks of the loan were not clearly communicated to the Plaintiff by the Defendant GMAC, a clear violation" of the Truth in Lending Act ("TILA"), 15 U.S.C. §§ 1601, et seq. Under TILA, the "voiding of a security interest may be judicially conditioned on debtor's tender of amount due under the loan." American Mortgage Network, Inc. v. Shelton, 486 F.3d 815, 821 (4th Cir. 2007).

15 U.S.C. § 1635(b) governs the return of money or property when a borrower has rescinded effectively:

> . . . Within 20 days after receipt of a notice of rescission, the creditor shall return to the obligor any money or property given as earnest money, downpayment, or otherwise, and shall take any action necessary or appropriate to reflect the termination of any security interest created under the transaction. If the creditor has delivered any property to the obligor, the obligor may retain possession of it. Upon the performance of the creditor's obligations under this section, the obligor shall tender the property to the [*18] creditor, except that if return of the property in kind would be impracticable or inequitable, the obligor shall tender its reasonable value. Tender shall be made at the location of the property or at the residence of the obligor, at the option of the obligor. If the creditor does not take possession of the property within 20 days after tender by the obligor, ownership of the property vests in the obligor without obligation on his part to pay for it. The procedures prescribed by this subsection shall apply except when otherwise ordered by a court.

12 C.F.R. § 226.23(d) addresses rescission effects and provides:

> (2) Within 20 calendar days after receipt of a notice of rescission, the creditor shall return any money or property that has been given to anyone in connection with the transaction and shall take any action necessary to reflect the termination of the security interest.
> (3) If the creditor has delivered any money or property, the consumer may retain possession until the creditor has met its obligation under paragraph (d)(2) of this section. When the creditor has complied with that paragraph, the consumer shall tender the money or property to the creditor or, where the latter would [*19] be impracticable or inequitable, tender its reasonable value. At the consumer's option, tender of property may be made at the location of the property or at the consumer's residence. Tender of money must be made at the creditor's designated place of business. If the creditor does not take possession of the money or property within 20 calendar days after the consumer's tender, the consumer may keep it without further obligation. (Bold added.)

Neither TILA nor its Regulation Z, 12 C.F.R. §§ 226, et seq., "'establishes that a borrower's mere assertion of the right of rescission has the automatic effect of voiding the contract.'" Yamamoto v. Bank of New York, 329 F.3d 1167, 1172 (9th Cir. 2003) (quoting Large v. Conseco Financing Servicing Corp., 292 F.3d 49, 54-55 (1st Cir. 2002)). The Ninth Circuit, relying on Large, explained:

> Instead, the "natural reading" of the language of § 1635(b) "is that the security interest becomes void when the obligor exercises a right to rescind that is available in the particular case, either because the creditor acknowledges that the right of rescission is available, or because the appropriate decision maker has so determined. . . . Until such decision is [*20] made the [borrowers] have only advanced a claim seeking rescission."

Yamamoto, 329 F.3d at 1172 (quoting Large, 292 F.3d at 54-55)).

A rescission notice is not automatic "without regard to whether the law permits [borrower] to rescind on the grounds asserted." See Yamamoto, 329 F.3d at 1172. Entertaining rescission automatically "makes no sense . . . when the lender contests the ground upon which the borrower rescinds." Yamamoto, 329 F.3d at 1172. "In these circumstances, it cannot be that the security interest vanishes immediately upon the giving of notice. Otherwise, a borrower could get out from under a secured loan simply by claiming TILA violations, whether or not the lender had actually committed any." Yamamoto, 329 F.3d at 1172 (italics in original).

Moreover, although 15 U.S.C. § 1635(b) "provides for immediate voiding of the security interest and return of the money within twenty days of the notice of rescission, we believe this assumes that the notice of rescission was proper in the first place." In re Groat, 369 B.R. 413, 419 (Bankr. 8th Cir. 2007). A "court may impose conditions on rescission that assure that the borrower meets her obligations once the creditor has performed [*21] its obligations." Yamamoto, 329 F.3d at 1173. The Ninth Circuit has explained that prior to ordering rescission based on a lender's alleged TILA violations, a court may require borrowers to prove ability to repay loan proceeds:

> As rescission under § 1635(b) is an on-going process consisting of a number of steps, there is no reason why a court that may alter the sequence of procedures after deciding that rescission is warranted, may not do so before deciding that rescission is warranted when it finds that, assuming grounds for rescission exist, rescission still could not be enforced because the borrower cannot comply with the borrower's rescission obligations no matter what. Such a decision lies within the court's equitable discretion, taking into consideration all the circumstances including the nature of the violations and the borrower's ability to repay the proceeds. If, as was the case here, it is clear from the evidence that the borrower lacks capacity to pay back what she has received (less interest, finance charges, etc.), the court does not lack discretion to do before trial what it could do after.

Yamamoto, 329 F.3d at 1173 (affirming summary judgment for lender in absence of [*22] evidence that borrowers could refinance or sell property); see American Mortgage, 486 F.3d at 821 ("Once the trial judge in this case determined that the [plaintiffs] were unable to tender the loan proceeds, the remedy of unconditional rescission was inappropriate."); LaGrone v. Johnson, 534 F.2d 1360, 1362 (9th Cir. 1974) (under the facts, loan rescission should be conditioned on the borrower's tender of advanced funds given the lender's non-egregious TILA violations and equities heavily favoring the lender). [3]

[3] The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals agrees with the Ninth Circuit that 15 U.S.C. § 1635(b) does not compel a creditor to remove a mortgage lien in the absence of the debtor's tender of loan proceeds:

> Congress did not intend to require a lender to relinquish its security interest when it is now known that the borrowers did not intend and were not prepared to tender restitution of the funds expended by the lender in discharging the prior obligations of the borrowers.

Powers v. Sims & Levin, 542 F.2d 1216, 1221 (4th Cir. 1976).

The complaint does not address conditions precedent to permit rescission under TILA. The complaint is not a timely, valid rescission notice. "Clearly it was [*23] not the intent of Congress to reduce the mortgage company to an unsecured creditor or to simply permit the debtor to indefinitely extend the loan without interest." American Mortgage, 486 F.3d at 820-821. Without Ms. Lopez' meaningful tender, the complaint's claims, including those referencing TILA, are doomed.

TILA Limitations Periods

Defendants fault the complaint's TILA claim as time barred.

Damages Limitations Period

A TILA damages claim is subject to 15 U.S.C. § 1640(e), which provides that an action for a TILA violation must proceed "within one year from the date of the occurrence of the violation." "TILA requires that any claim based on an alleged failure to make material disclosures be brought within one year from the date of the occurrence of the violation." Hallas v. Ameriquest Mortg. Co., 406 F.Supp.2d 1176, 1183 (D. Or. 2005). The limitations period runs from the date of a transaction's consummation which is the time that a consumer becomes contractually obligated on a credit transaction. Monaco v. Bear Stearns Residential Mortgage Corp., 554 F.Supp.2d 1034, 1039 (C.D. Cal. 2008). The Ninth Circuit noted in Meyer v. Ameriquest Mortgage Co., 342 F.3d 899, 902 (9th Cir. 2003):

> The [*24] failure to make the required disclosures occurred, if at all, at the time the loan documents were signed. The [plaintiffs] were in full possession of all information relevant to the discovery of a TiLA violation and a § 1640(a) damages claim on the day the loan papers were signed.

Ms. Lopez consummated her loan on October 3, 2007 and filed her complaint on September 15, 2011, nearly four years after her loan transaction, to render a TILA damages claim time barred.

Rescission Limitations Period

To the extent that the complaint pursues a TILA rescission claim, it too is time barred. TILA's "buyer's remorse" provision allows borrowers three business days to rescind, without penalty, a consumer loan that uses their principal dwelling as security. Semar v. Platte Valley Federal Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 791 F.2d 699, 701 (9th Cir. 1986);15 U.S.C. § 1635(a). TILA rescission may be extended up to three years if the lender fails to comply with TILA disclosure requirements. Semar, 791 F.2d at 701-702; 15 U.S.C. § 1635(f).

15 U.S.C. § 1635(f) addresses the outer most limit to seek rescission:

> An obligor's right of rescission shall expire three years after the date of consummation of the transaction or upon [*25] the sale of the property, whichever occurs first, notwithstanding the fact that the information and forms required under this section or any other disclosures required under this part have not been delivered to the obligor . . . (Bold added.)

The U.S. Supreme Court has described as "manifest" Congress' intent to prohibit rescission after the three-year period has run:

> Section 1635(f), however, takes us beyond any question whether it limits more than the time for bringing a suit, by governing the life of the underlying right as well. The subsection says nothing in terms of bringing an action but instead provides that the "right of rescission [under the Act] shall expire" at the end of the time period. It talks not of a suit's commencement but of a right's duration, which it addresses in terms so straightforward as to render any limitation on the time for seeking a remedy superfluous. There is no reason, then, even to resort to the canons of construction that we use to resolve doubtful cases, such as the rule that the creation of a right > in the same statute that provides a limitation is some evidence that the right was meant to be limited, not just the remedy. See Midstate Horticultural Co., supra, at 360, 64 S. Ct., at 130; [*26] Burnett, supra, at 427, n. 2, 85 S. Ct., at 1054 n. 2; Davis v. Mills, 194 U.S. 451, 454, 24 S.Ct. 692, 693-694, 48 L.Ed. 1067 (1904).

Beach v. Ocwen Fed. Bank, 523 U.S. 410, 417, 419, 118 S.Ct. 1408, 140 L. Ed. 2d 566 (1998); Miguel v. Country Funding Corp., 309 F.3d 1161, 1164 (9th Cir. 2002) ("§ 1635(f) is a statute of repose, depriving the courts of subject matter jurisdiction when a § 1635 claim is brought outside the three-year limitation period").

The complaint alleges, and matters subject to judicial notice reflect, that Ms. Lopez' loan was consummated on October 3, 2007 to render a TILA rescission remedy expired prior to the September 15, 2010 filing of the complaint. TILA rescission is time barred.

Equitable Tolling

Apparently recognizing that TILA claims are time barred, Ms. Lopez in her complaint appears to invoke equitable tolling and alleges: "There may be a number of factors that affect the tolling of a statute of limitations. In many cases, the discovery of the harms starts the statute running. . . Here, the discovery of the harm came well after the loan was originated." Nonetheless, the complaint lacks allegations of facts to excuse Ms. Lopez' earlier discovery of TILA violations with due [*27] diligence and to demonstrate concealment of material facts as to the loan agreements.

"Equitable tolling may be applied if, despite all due diligence, a plaintiff is unable to obtain vital information bearing on the existence of his claim." Santa Maria v. Pacific Bell, 202 F.3d 1170, 1178 (9th Cir. 2000). The Ninth Circuit Court has explained:

> Unlike equitable estoppel, equitable tolling does not depend on any wrongful conduct by the defendant to prevent the plaintiff from suing. Instead it focuses on whether there was excusable delay by the plaintiff. If a reasonable plaintiff would not have known of the existence of a possible claim within the limitations period, then equitable tolling will serve to extend the statute of limitations for filing until the plaintiff can gather what information he needs. . . . However, equitable tolling does not postpone the statute of limitations until the existence of a claim is a virtual certainty.

Santa Maria, 202 F.3d at 1178 (citation omitted).

Courts are reluctant to invoke equitable tolling:

> A statute of limitations is subject to the doctrine of equitable tolling; therefore, relief from strict construction of a statute of limitations is readily available [*28] in extreme cases and gives the court latitude in a case-by-case analysis. . . . The equitable tolling doctrine has been applied by the Supreme Court in certain circumstances, but it has been applied sparingly; for example, the Supreme Court has allowed equitable tolling when the statute of limitations was not complied with because of defective pleadings, when a claimant was tricked by an adversary into letting a deadline expire . . . Courts have been generally unforgiving, however, when a late filing is due to claimant's failure "to exercise due diligence in preserving his legal rights." . . .

Scholar v. Pac. Bell, 963 F.2d 264, 267-268 (9th Cir. 1992) (bold added; citations omitted).

To rely on delayed discovery of a claim, "[a] plaintiff whose complaint shows on its face that his claim would be barred without the benefit of the discovery rule must specifically plead facts to show (1) the time and manner of discovery and (2) the inability to have made earlier discovery despite reasonable diligence." Fox v. Ethicon Endo-Surgery, Inc., 35 Cal.4th 797, 808, 27 Cal.Rptr.3d 661, 110 P.3d 914 (2005) (quoting McKelvey v. Boeing North American, Inc., 74 Cal.App.4th 151, 160, 86 Cal.Rptr.2d 645 (1999)). "[T]o [*29] adequately allege facts supporting a theory of delayed discovery, the plaintiff must plead that, despite diligent investigation of the circumstances of the injury, he or she could not have reasonably discovered facts supporting the cause of action within the applicable statute of limitations period." Fox, 35 Cal.4th at 809, 27 Cal.Rptr.3d 661.

The doctrine of delayed discovery requires a plaintiff to plead facts showing an excuse for late discovery of the facts underlying his cause of action. Prudential Home Mortgage Co. v. Superior Court, 66 Cal.App.4th 1236, 1247, 78 Cal.Rptr.2d 566 (1998). The plaintiff must show that it was not at fault for failing to discover or had no actual or presumptive knowledge of facts sufficient to put it on inquiry. Prudential Home, 66 Cal.App.4th at 1247, 78 Cal.Rptr.2d 566. As to sufficiency of delayed discovery allegations, a plaintiff bears the burden to "show diligence" and "conclusory allegations" will not withstand dismissal. Fox, 35 Cal.4th 797, 808, 27 Cal.Rptr.3d 661.

The complaint broadly references that "a number of factors" may "affect tolling of a statute of limitations." No allegation identifies specific withheld disclosures. The complaint [*30] lacks allegations that the lender defendants prevented Ms. Lopez to compare what documents she received to the TILA disclosure requirements. See Hubbard v. Fidelity Federal Bank, 91 F.3d 75, 79 (9th Cir. 1996) (no evidence suggested that lender concealed its alleged breach). Nothing suggests that Ms. Lopez lacked information relevant to discovery of a TILA violation when her loan was consummated. The complaint offers nothing to demonstrate that despite Ms. Lopez' due diligence, she was unable to obtain information of a TILA violation. The complaint is silent as to her purported due diligence. The complaint is conclusory as to alleged TILA violations and support for tolling. The complaint's conclusory allegations are insufficient to invoke equitable tolling or delayed discovery and in turn to defeat the limitations defense. Ms. Lopez' TILA claim is time barred and subject to dismissal.

Constructive Fraud

The complaint bases its (third) constructive fraud claim on GMAC's failure "to disclose how much and how soon the interest rate (and, therefore, the monthly payment) would increase after the teaser rate of Plaintiffs [sic] subprime ARM expired."

GMAC As Lender

In Salahutdin v. Valley of California, Inc., 24 Cal.App.4th 555, 562, 29 Cal.Rptr.2d 463 (1994), [*31] the California Court of Appeal explained constructive fraud:

> Constructive fraud is a unique species of fraud applicable only to a fiduciary or confidential relationship. . . . [A]s a general principle constructive fraud comprises any act, omission or concealment involving a breach of legal or equitable duty, trust or confidence which results in damage to another even though the conduct is not otherwise fraudulent. Most acts by an agent in breach of his fiduciary duties constitute constructive fraud. The failure of the fiduciary to disclose a material fact to his principal which might affect the fiduciary's motives or the principal's decision, which is known (or should be known) to the fiduciary, may constitute constructive fraud. Also, a careless misstatement may constitute constructive fraud even though there is no fraudulent intent. (Citation and internal punctuation omitted).

"Unlike actual fraud, constructive fraud depends on the existence of a fiduciary relationship of some kind, and this must be alleged." Younan v. Equifax Inc., 111 Cal.App.3d 498, 516-517,169 Cal.Rptr. 478 (1980). "It is essential to the operation of the doctrine of constructive fraud that there exist a fiduciary [*32] or special relationship." Peterson Development Co. v. Torrey Pines Bank, 233 Cal.App.3d 103, 116, 284 Cal.Rptr. 367 (1991). Constructive fraud elements are: (1) a fiduciary relationship; (2) nondisclosure (breach of fiduciary duty); (3) intent to deceive; and (4) reliance and resulting injury (causation). Younan, 111 Cal.App.3d at 516-517, n. 14,169 Cal.Rptr. 478.

Defendants point to the absence of fiduciary relationship between Ms. Lopez and GMAC as original lender and servicer of Ms. Lopez' loan and DOT beneficiary.

A fiduciary relationship arises "between parties to a transaction wherein one of the parties is . . . duty bound to act with the utmost good faith for the benefit of the other party." Herbert v. Lankershim, 9 Cal.2d 409, 483, 71 P.2d 220 (1937). A fiduciary relationship "ordinarily arises where a confidence is reposed by one person in the integrity of another, and in such a relation the party in whom the confidence is reposed, if he voluntarily accepts or assumes to accept the confidence, can take no advantage from his acts relating to the interest of the other party without the latter's knowledge or consent." Herbert, 9 Cal.2d at 483, 71 P.2d 220.

Nonetheless "no fiduciary [*33] relationship is established merely because 'the parties reposed trust and confidence in each other.'" Girard v. Delta Towers Joint Venture, 20 Cal.App.4th 1741, 1749, 26 Cal.Rptr.2d 102 (1993) (quoting Worldvision Enterprises, Inc. v. American Broadcasting Companies, Inc., 142 Cal.App.3d 589, 595, 191 Cal.Rptr. 148 (1983)). To be charged with a fiduciary obligation, a person must knowingly undertake to act on behalf and for the benefit of another, or must enter into a relationship which imposes that undertaking as a matter of law. City of Hope Nat. Medical Center v. Genentech, Inc., 43 Cal.4th 375, 385, 75 Cal. Rptr. 3d 333, 181 P.3d 142 (2008).

"California courts have not extended the 'special relationship' doctrine to include ordinary commercial contractual relationships" Martin v. U-Haul Co. of Fresno, 204 Cal.App.3d 396, 412, 251 Cal.Rptr. 17 (1988) (citations omitted). "The relationship between a lending institution and its borrower-client is not fiduciary in nature." Nymark v. Heart Fed. Savings & Loan Assn., 231 Cal.App.3d 1089, 1093, n. 1, 283 Cal.Rptr. 53 (1991) (citing Price v. Wells Fargo Bank, 213 Cal.App.3d 465, 476-478, 261 Cal.Rptr. 735 (1989)). A commercial lender is entitled to pursue its [*34] own economic interests in a loan transaction. Nymark, 231 Cal.App.3d at 1093, n. 1, 283 Cal.Rptr. 53(citing Kruse v. Bank of America, 202 Cal.App.3d 38, 67, 248 Cal.Rptr. 217 (1988)).

Absent "special circumstances" a loan transaction is "at arms-length and there is no fiduciary relationship between the borrower and lender." Oaks Management Corp. v. Superior Court, 145 Cal.App.4th 453, 466, 51 Cal.Rptr.3d 561 (2006) ("the bank is in no sense a true fiduciary"); see Downey v. Humphreys, 102 Cal. App. 2d 323, 332, 227 P.2d 484 (1951) ("A debt is not a trust and there is not a fiduciary relation between debtor and creditor as such."). "[A]s a general rule, a financial institution owes no duty of care to a borrower when the institution's involvement in the loan transaction does not exceed the scope of its conventional role as a mere lender of money." Nymark, 231 Cal.App.3d at 1096, 283 Cal.Rptr. 53.

The complaint alleges no facts to support a fiduciary relationship between Ms. Lopez and GMAC. The complaint's mere reference to a constructive fraud elements is insufficient to impose a fiduciary relationship on GMAC. The complaint fails to allege existence of a fiduciary or confidential relationship [*35] with requisite specificity to warrant dismissal of the constructive fraud claim against GMAC.

ETS As Trustee

Defendants contend that ETS as DOT trustee owes no fiduciary or similar duties to support a constructive fraud claim.

"Financing or refinancing of real property is generally accomplished in California through a deed of trust. The borrower (trustor) executes a promissory note and deed of trust, thereby transferring an interest in the property to the lender (beneficiary) as security for repayment of the loan." Bartold v. Glendale Federal Bank, 81 Cal.App.4th 816, 821, 97 Cal.Rptr.2d 226 (2000). A deed of trust "entitles the lender to reach some asset of the debtor if the note is not paid." Alliance Mortgage Co. v. Rothwell, 10 Cal.4th 1226, 1235, 44 Cal.Rptr.2d 352, 900 P.2d 601 (1995).

If a borrower defaults on a loan and the deed of trust contains a power of sale clause, the lender may non-judicially foreclose. See McDonald v. Smoke Creek Live Stock Co., 209 Cal. 231, 236-237, 286 P. 693 (1930).

An "ordinary trust deed conveys the legal title to the trustee only so far as may be necessary to the execution of the trust." Lupertino v. Carbahal, 35 Cal.App.3d 742, 748, 111 Cal.Rptr. 112 (1973). A [*36] deed of trust "carries none of the incidents of ownership of the property, other than the right to convey upon default on the part of the debtor in the payment of his debt." Lupertino, 35 Cal.App.3d at 748, 111 Cal.Rptr. 112 (quoting Bank of Italy, etc. Assn. v. Bentley, 217 Cal. 644, 656, 20 P.2d 940 (1933)). The California Court of Appeal has explained a deed of trust trustee's limited authority:

> The trustee under a deed of trust "is not a true trustee, and owes no fiduciary obligations; [it] merely acts as a common agent for the trustor and beneficiary of the deed of trust. [The trustee's] only duties are: (1) upon default to undertake the steps necessary to foreclose the deed of trust; or (2) upon satisfaction of the secured debt to reconvey the deed of trust." (Vournas v. Fidelity National Title Ins. Co. (1999) 73 Cal.App.4th 668, 677, 86 Cal.Rptr.2d 490.) Consistent with this view, California courts have refused to impose duties on the trustee other than those imposed by statute or specified in the deed of trust. As our Supreme Court noted in I.E. Associates v. Safeco Title Ins. Co. (1985) 39 Cal.3d 281, 216 Cal.Rptr. 438, 702 P.2d 596, "The rights and powers of trustees in nonjudicial [*37] foreclosure proceedings have long been regarded as strictly limited and defined by the contract of the parties and the statutes.... [¶] ... [T]here is no authority for the proposition that a trustee under a deed of trust owes any duties with respect to exercise of the power of sale beyond those specified in the deed and the statutes." (Id. at pp. 287-288, 216 Cal.Rptr. 438, 702 P.2d 596.)

Heritage Oaks Partners v. First American Title Ins. Co., 155 Cal.App.4th 339, 345, 66 Cal.Rptr.3d 510 (2007);

"The trustee in nonjudicial foreclosure is not a true trustee with fiduciary duties, but rather a common agent for the trustor and beneficiary. . . . The scope and nature of the trustee's duties are exclusively defined by the deed of trust and the governing statutes. No other common law duties exist." Kachlon v. Markowitz, 168 Cal.App.4th 316, 335, 85 Cal.Rptr.3d 532 (2008) (citations omitted). "The similarities between a trustee of an express trust and a trustee under a deed of trust end with the name. . . . [T]he trustee under a deed of trust does not have a true trustee's interest in, and control over, the trust property. Nor is it bound by the fiduciary duties that characterize a true trustee." [*38] Monterey SP Partnership v. WL Bangham, 49 Cal.3d 454, 462-463, 261 Cal. Rptr. 587, 777 P.2d 623 (1989).

A "trustee has a general duty to conduct the sale 'fairly, openly, reasonably, and with due diligence,' exercising sound discretion to protect the rights of the mortgagor and others." Hatch v. Collins, 225 Cal.App.3d 1104, 1112, 275 Cal.Rptr. 476 (1990)(citation omitted).

The complaint lacks facts to support necessary elements for a constructive fraud claim against ETS, whose role is limited to the DOT trustee. The constructive fraud claim is subject to dismissal.

Misrepresentation

The complaint's (eighth) misrepresentation claim alleges the GMAC "made false representations to Plaintiff in order to induce Plaintiff to obtain the Subject Loan because the Subject Loan was presumably more profitable to Defendant GMAC."

Defendants attack the misrepresentation claim as lacking sufficient particularity to satisfy F.R.Civ.P. 9(b).

Fraud Elements

The elements of a California fraud claim are: (1) misrepresentation (false representation, concealment or nondisclosure); (2) knowledge of the falsity (or "scienter"); (3) intent to defraud, i.e., to induce reliance; (4) justifiable reliance; and (5) resulting damage. [*39] Lazar v. Superior Court, 12 Cal.4th 631, 638, 49 Cal.Rptr.2d 377, 909 P.2d 981 (1996). The same elements comprise a cause of action for negligent misrepresentation, except there is no requirement of intent to induce reliance. Cadlo v. Owens-Illinois, Inc., 125 Cal. App. 4th 513, 519, 23 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1 (2004).

"[T]o establish a cause of action for fraud a plaintiff must plead and prove in full, factually and specifically, all of the elements of the cause of action." Conrad v. Bank of America, 45 Cal.App.4th 133, 156, 53 Cal.Rptr.2d 336 (1996). There must be a showing "that the defendant thereby intended to induce the plaintiff to act to his detriment in reliance upon the false representation" and "that the plaintiff actually and justifiably relied upon the defendant's misrepresentation in acting to his detriment." Conrad, 45 Cal.App.4th at 157, 53 Cal.Rptr.2d 336. "The absence of any one of these required elements will preclude recovery." Wilhelm v. Pray, Price, Williams & Russell, 186 Cal.App.3d 1324, 1332, 231 Cal.Rptr. 355 (1986).

Particularity Pleading Standard

F.R.Civ.P. 9(b) requires a party to "state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud." [4] In the Ninth Circuit, "claims for fraud [*40] and negligent misrepresentation must meet Rule 9(b)'s particularity requirements." Neilson v. Union Bank of California, N.A., 290 F.Supp.2d 1101, 1141 (C.D. Cal. 2003). A court may dismiss a claim grounded in fraud when its allegations fail to satisfy F.R.Civ.P. 9(b)'s heightened pleading requirements. Vess, 317 F.3d at 1107. [5] A motion to dismiss a claim "grounded in fraud" under F.R.Civ.P. 9(b) for failure to plead with particularity is the "functional equivalent" of a F.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. Vess, 317 F.3d at 1107. As a counter-balance, F.R.Civ.P. 8(a)(2) requires from a pleading "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief."

F.R.Civ.P. 9(b)'s heightened pleading standard "is not an invitation to disregard Rule 8's requirement of simplicity, directness, and clarity" and "has among its purposes the avoidance of unnecessary discovery." McHenry v. Renne, 84 F.3d 1172, 1178 (9th Cir. 1996). F.R.Civ.P 9(b) requires "specific" allegations of fraud "to give defendants notice of the particular misconduct which is alleged to constitute the fraud charged so that they can defend against the charge and not just deny that they have done anything wrong." Semegen v. Weidner, 780 F.2d 727, 731 (9th Cir. 1985). "A pleading is sufficient under Rule 9(b) if it identifies the circumstances constituting fraud so that the defendant can prepare an adequate answer from the allegations." Neubronner v. Milken, 6 F.3d 666, 671-672 (9th Cir. 1993) (internal quotations [*42] omitted; citing Gottreich v. San Francisco Investment Corp., 552 F.2d 866, 866 (9th Cir. 1997)). The Ninth Circuit has explained:

> Rule 9(b) requires particularized allegations of the circumstances constituting fraud. The time, place and content of an alleged misrepresentation may identify the statement or the omission complained of, but these circumstances do not "constitute" fraud. The statement in question must be false to be fraudulent. Accordingly, our cases have consistently required that circumstances indicating falseness be set forth. . . . [W]e [have] observed that plaintiff must include statements regarding the time, place, and nature of the alleged fraudulent activities, and that "mere conclusory allegations of fraud are insufficient." . . . The plaintiff must set forth what is false or misleading about a statement, and why it is false. In other words, the plaintiff must set forth an explanation as to why the statement or omission complained of was false or misleading. . . .
> In certain cases, to be sure, the requisite particularity might be supplied with great simplicity.

In Re Glenfed, Inc. Securities Litigation, 42 F.3d 1541, 1547-1548 (9th Cir. 1994) (en banc) (italics in [*43] original) superseded by statute on other grounds as stated in Marksman Partners, L.P. v. Pickett, 137 F.3d 616, 627 (9th Cir. 1997) (fraud allegations must be accompanied by "the who, what, when, where, and how" of the misconduct charged); see Neubronner, 6 F.3d at 672 ("The complaint must specify facts as the times, dates, places, benefits received and other details of the alleged fraudulent activity.")

[4] F.R.Civ.P. 9(b)'s particularity requirement applies to state law causes of action: "[W]hile a federal court will examine state law to determine whether the elements of fraud have been pled sufficiently to state a cause of action, the Rule 9(b) requirement that the circumstances of the fraud must be stated with particularity is a federally imposed rule." Vess v. Ciba-Geigy Corp. USA, 317 F.3d 1097, 1103 (9th Cir. 2003) (quoting Hayduk v. Lanna, 775 F.2d 441, 443 (1st Cir. 1995)(italics [*41] in original)).

[5] "In some cases, the plaintiff may allege a unified course of fraudulent conduct and rely entirely on that course of conduct as the basis of a claim. In that event, the claim is said to be 'grounded in fraud' or to 'sound in fraud,' and the pleading of that claim as a whole must satisfy the particularity requirement of Rule 9(b)." Vess, 317 F.3d at 1103-1104.

In a fraud action against a corporation, a plaintiff must "allege the names of the persons who made the allegedly fraudulent representations, their authority to speak, to whom they spoke, what they said or wrote, and when it was said or written." Tarmann v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2 Cal.App.4th 153, 157, 2 Cal.Rptr.2d 861 (1991).

F.R.Civ.P. 9(b) "does not allow a complaint to merely lump multiple defendants together but 'require[s] plaintiffs to differentiate their allegations when suing more than one defendant . . . and inform each defendant separately of the allegations surrounding his alleged participation in the fraud.'" Swartz v. KPMG LLP, 476 F.3d 756, 764-765 (9th Cir. 2007) (quoting Haskin v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 995 F.Supp. 1437, 1439 (M.D. Fla.1998)). [*44] In the context of a fraud suit involving multiple defendants, a plaintiff must, at a minimum, "identif[y] the role of [each] defendant[ ] in the alleged fraudulent scheme." Moore v. Kayport Package Express, Inc., 885 F.2d 531, 541 (9th Cir.1989). "To state a claim of fraudulent conduct, which carries substantial reputational costs, plaintiffs must provide each and every defendant with enough information to enable them 'to know what misrepresentations are attributable to them and what fraudulent conduct they are charged with.'" Pegasus Holdings v. Veterinary Centers of America, Inc., 38 F.Supp.2d 1158, 1163 (C.D. Cal. 1998) (quoting In re Worlds of Wonder Sec. Litig., 694 F.Supp. 1427, 1433 (N.D. Cal.1988)).

The complaint's conclusory allegations fail to meet Rule 9(b)'s strict standard. The complaint lacks precise allegations as to what defendants, through specifically identified and authorized agents or representatives, allegedly promised or represented. The complaint lacks facts to support fraud elements let alone the who, what, when, when and how of alleged misconduct. Defendants correctly challenge the complaint's "generalized, global pleading in the context of fraud claims." The [*45] complaint relies on mere notions of false advise and promises regarding loan refinancing and modification. Given the multiple defendants and their differing roles, such allegations are insufficient to warrant dismissal of the complaint's claims sounding in fraud.

Breach Of Implied Covenant Of Good Faith And Fair Dealing

The complaint's fourth claim alleges that "in violation of the contract and of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing . . . GMAC unfairly interfered with Plaintiff [sic] rights to receive promised benefits under the contracts by refusing to refinance and charging unconscionable monthly payments."

Defendants challenge the complaint's lack of allegations to support a claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing in that no implied covenant precluded defendants to commence non-judicial foreclosure.

"There is an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing in every contract that neither party will do anything which will injure the right of the other to receive the benefits of the agreement." Kransco v. American Empire Surplus Lines Ins. Co., 23 Cal.4th 390, 400, 97 Cal.Rptr.2d 151, 2 P.3d 1 (2000) (quoting Comunale v. Traders & General Ins. Co., 50 Cal.2d 654, 658, 328 P.2d 198 (1958)). [*46] The "implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing is limited to assuring compliance with the express terms of the contract, and cannot be extended to create obligations not contemplated by the contract." Pasadena Live, LLC v. City of Pasadena, 114 Cal.App.4th 1089, 1093-1094, 8 Cal.Rptr.3d 233 (2004) (citation omitted). The "scope of conduct prohibited by the covenant of good faith is circumscribed by the purposes and express terms of the contract." Carma Developers (Cal.), Inc. v. Marathon Development California, Inc., 2 Cal.4th 342, 373, 6 Cal.Rptr.2d 467, 826 P.2d 710 (1992). "[T]he implied covenant will only be recognized to further the contract's purpose; it will not be read into a contract to prohibit a party from doing that which is expressly permitted by the agreement itself." Wolf v. Walt Disney Pictures and Television, 162 Cal.App.4th 1107, 1120, 76 Cal.Rptr.3d 585 (2008). "The covenant 'cannot impose substantive duties or limits on the contracting parties beyond those incorporated in the specific terms of their agreement.'" Agosta v. Astor, 120 Cal.App.4th 596, 607, 15 Cal.Rptr.3d 565 (2004) (quoting Guz v. Bechtel Nat. Inc. 24 Cal.4th 317, 349-350, 100 Cal.Rptr.2d 352, 8 P.3d 1089 (2000)).

The [*47] complaint fails to allege or identify a contract or contract provision to invoke an implied covenant to impose on the defendants liability for alleged wrongs. Defendants merely exercised their DOT rights to pursue non-judicial foreclosure. The complaint lacks an alleged breach to invoke the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. Ms. Lopez is unable to resort to an implied covenant to manufacture defendants' obligations which do not exist. The complaint's claim for breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing is subject to dismissal.

California Civil Code Section 2923.5

The complaint's (fifth) claim alleges that defendants failed to satisfy pre-foreclosure obligations under California Civil Code section 2923.5 ("section 2923.5") by failing to contact or attempt to contact Ms. Lopez "in a good faith effort to prevent foreclosure."

Section 2923.5(a)(1) prohibits a mortgagee, trustee, beneficiary or authorized agent to "file a notice of default pursuant to Section 2924 until 30 days after initial contact is made as required by paragraph (2) or 30 days after satisfying the due diligence requirements as described in subdivision (g)." Section 2923.5(a)(2) requires a "mortgagee, [*48] beneficiary or authorized agent" to "contact the borrower in person or by telephone in order to assess the borrower's financial situation and explore options for the borrower to avoid foreclosure." Section 2923.5(b) requires a default notice to include a declaration "from the mortgagee, beneficiary, or authorized agent" of compliance with section 2923.5, including attempt "with due diligence to contact the borrower as required by this section."

Defendants note that section 2923.5 offers no post-foreclosure relief. The California Court of Appeal has explained:

> There is nothing in section 2923.5 that even hints that noncompliance with the statute would cause any cloud on title after an otherwise properly conducted foreclosure sale. We would merely note that under the plain language of section 2923.5, read in conjunction with section 2924g, the only remedy provided is a postponement of the sale before it happens.

Mabry v. Superior Court, 185 Cal.App.4th 208, 235, 110 Cal.Rptr.3d 201 (2010); see also Knapp v. Doherty, 123 Cal.App.4th 76, 94, 20 Cal.Rptr.3d 1 (2004): ("slight procedural irregularity in the service of the Sale Notice did not cause any injury to Borrowers. They had notice of [*49] the original sale date; the trustee's sale did not go forward until almost one year after the date noticed. There was no prejudicial procedural irregularity.")

Defendants are correct that section 2923.5 supports no post-foreclosure claim or relief for Ms. Lopez to warrant dismissal of a claim premised on section 2923.5.

Negligence

The complaint's (sixth) claim alleges "GMAC breached their [sic] duty of care to Plaintiff to act as reasonable lender."

Duty Of Care

Defendants argue that the claim fails in the absence of their cognizable duty to support negligence. Defendants point out that a lender/borrower relationship fails to impose an actionable duty of care on defendants.

"The elements of a cause of action for negligence are (1) a legal duty to use reasonable care, (2) breach of that duty, and (3) proximate [or legal] cause between the breach and (4) the plaintiff's injury." Mendoza v. City of Los Angeles, 66 Cal.App.4th 1333, 1339, 78 Cal.Rptr.2d 525 (1998) (citation omitted). "The existence of a duty of care owed by a defendant to a plaintiff is a prerequisite to establishing a claim for negligence." Nymark v. Heart Fed. Savings & Loan Assn., 231 Cal.App.3d 1089, 1095, 283 Cal.Rptr. 53 (1991). [*50] "[A]bsent a duty, the defendant's care, or lack of care, is irrelevant." Software Design & Application, Ltd. v. Hoefer & Arnett, Inc., 49 Cal.App.4th 472, 481, 56 Cal.Rptr.2d 756 (1996). "The existence of a legal duty to use reasonable care in a particular factual situation is a question of law for the court to decide." Vasquez v. Residential Investments, Inc., 118 Cal.App.4th 269, 278, 12 Cal.Rptr.3d 846 (2004) (citation omitted).

"The 'legal duty' of care may be of two general types: (a) the duty of a person to use ordinary care in activities from which harm might reasonably be anticipated [, or] (b) [a]n affirmative duty where the person occupies a particular relationship to others. . . . In the first situation, he is not liable unless he is actively careless; in the second, he may be liable for failure to act affirmatively to prevent harm." McGettigan v. Bay Area Rapid Transit Dist., 57 Cal.App.4th 1011, 1016-1017, 67 Cal.Rptr.2d 516 (1997).

There is no actionable duty between a lender and borrower in that loan transactions are arms-length. A lender "owes no duty of care to the [borrowers] in approving their loan. Liability to a borrower for negligence arises only when the lender [*51] 'actively participates' in the financed enterprise 'beyond the domain of the usual money lender.'" Wagner v. Benson, 101 Cal.App.3d 27, 35, 161 Cal.Rptr. 516 (1980) (citing several cases). "[A]s a general rule, a financial institution owes no duty of care to a borrower when the institution's involvement in the loan transaction does not exceed the scope of its conventional role as a mere lender of money." Nymark, 231 Cal.App.3d at 1096, 283 Cal.Rptr. 53; see Meyers v. Guarantee Sav. & Loan Assn., 79 Cal. App. 3d 307, 312, 144 Cal. Rptr. 616 (1978) (no lender liability when lender did not engage "in any activity outside the scope of the normal activities of a lender of construction monies").

"Public policy does not impose upon the Bank absolute liability for the hardships which may befall the [borrower] it finances." Wagner, 101 Cal.App.3d at 34, 161 Cal.Rptr. 516. The success of a borrower's investment "is not a benefit of the loan agreement which the Bank is under a duty to protect." Wagner, 101 Cal.App.3d at 34, 161 Cal.Rptr. 516 (lender lacked duty to disclose "any information it may have had"). "It is simply not tortious for a commercial lender to lend money, take collateral, or to [*52] foreclose on collateral when a debt is not paid." Sierra-Bay Fed. Land Bank Assn. v. Superior Court, 227 Cal.App.3d 318, 334, 277 Cal.Rptr. 753 (1991).

As to DOT trustees, the "scope and nature of the trustee's duties are exclusively defined by the deed of trust and the governing statutes. No other common law duties exist." Kachlon, 168 Cal.App.4th 316, 335, 85 Cal.Rptr.3d 532 (2008) (citations omitted).

The complaint insufficiently attempts to allege GMAC's cognizable a duty of care let alone its breach. Ms. Lopez lacks a negligence claim based on a lender/borrower relationship, particularly in the absence of a duty to forego foreclosure or to provide loan modification or refinancing. "No such duty exists" for a lender "to determine the borrower's ability to repay the loan. . . . The lender's efforts to determine the creditworthiness and ability to repay by a borrower are for the lender's protection, not the borrower's." Renteria v. United States, 452 F. Supp. 2d 910, 922-923 (D. Ariz. 2006) (borrowers "had to rely on their own judgment and risk assessment to determine whether or not to accept the loan"). "A commercial lender is not to be regarded as the guarantor of a borrower's success [*53] and is not liable for the hardships which may befall a borrower." Sierra-Bay Fed. Land Bank Assn. v. Superior Court, 227 Cal.App.3d 318, 334, 277 Cal.Rptr. 753 (1991). Defendants owed no duty of care to Ms. Lopez arising from her default, property foreclosure, and loan modification or refinancing attempts. The complaint lacks facts of special circumstances to impose duties on defendants in that the complaint depicts an arms-length transaction, nothing more. The complaint fails to substantiate a special lending relationship or an actionable breach of duty to substantiate a negligence claim. The negligence claim fails.

Limitations Defense

Moreover, the negligence claim is susceptible to the two-year limitations period of California Code of Civil Procedure section 339(1). The complaint alludes to GMAC's purported unreasonableness two years prior to the complaint's September 15, 2011 filing.

California Statutory Unfair Lending Practices

The complaint's sixth claim alleges that GMAC violated "California's anti-predatory lending statutes, Fin. Code 4970-4979.8, by steering, counseling and directing Plaintiffs [sic] to accept a loan product that has a specified risk grade less favorable than [*54] another risk grade for which they [sic] could have qualified."

An initial question is whether Ms. Lopez' loan is a "covered loan" under subsection (b) of California Financial Code section 4970 ("section 4970"). Section 4970(b) provides:

> "Covered loan" means a consumer loan in which the original principal balance of the loan does not exceed the most current conforming loan limit for a single-family first mortgage loan established by the Federal National Mortgage Association in the case of a mortgage or deed of trust, and where one of the following conditions are met:
> (1) For a mortgage or deed of trust, the annual percentage rate at consummation of the transaction will exceed by more than eight percentage points the yield on Treasury securities having comparable periods of maturity on the 15th day of the month immediately preceding the month in which the application for the extension of credit is received by the creditor.
> (2) The total points and fees payable by the consumer at or before closing for a mortgage or deed of trust will exceed 6 percent of the total loan amount.

The complaint fails to allege facts that Ms. Lopez' loan meets section 4970(b) conditions. See Nool v. HomeQ Servicing, 653 F.Supp.2d 1047, 1054 (E.D. Cal. 2009) [*55] (dismissing a section 4970 claim for failure to allege "covered loan" conditions). In absence of necessary facts to establish a covered loan, the complaint's sixth claim fails. See Fortaleza v. PNC Financial Services Group, Inc., 642 F.Supp.2d 1012, 1020 (N.D. Cal. 2009) (dismissing a claim under California Financial Code, §§ 4973, et seq., in that plaintiff "failed to identify either the specific statutory provision pursuant to which plaintiff brings suit, or the specific conduct undertaken by either [defendant] in alleged violation of an applicable statutory provision").

Furthermore, the complaint's sixth claim is untimely in that California Code of Civil Procedure section 340 provides a one-year limitations period for statutes such as California Financial Code sections 4970-4979.8. See DeLeon v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 729 F.Supp.2d 1119, 1128-1129 (N.D. Cal. 2010). Ms. Lopez' claims arise out of her loan origination and accrued at the loan's October 3, 2007 closing to render the September 15, 2011 complaint filing untimely for claims under California Financial Code sections 4970-4979.8.

Unfair Business Practices

The complaint's second claim alleges that GMAC engaged in business practices [*56] to violate "Business and Professions Code section 17200, et. Seq. [sic] by making untrue and misleading statement [sic] and by causing untrue or misleading statements to be made by the mortgage broker, with the intent to induce Plaintiff to enter the Subject Loan."

Defendants fault the complaint's failure to allege a predicate legal violation to support a claim under California's Unfair Competition Law ("UCL"), Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 17200, et seq.

"Unfair competition is defined to include 'unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business practice and unfair, deceptive, untrue or misleading advertising.'" Blank v. Kirwan, 39 Cal.3d 311, 329, 216 Cal.Rptr. 718, 703 P.2d 58 (1985) (quoting Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200). The UCL establishes three varieties of unfair competition - "acts or practices which are unlawful, or unfair, or fraudulent." Shvarts v. Budget Group, Inc., 81 Cal.App.4th 1153, 1157, 97 Cal.Rptr.2d 722 (2000). An "unlawful business activity" includes anything that can properly be called a business practice and that at the same time is forbidden by law. Blank, 39 Cal.3d at 329, 216 Cal.Rptr. 718 (citing People v. McKale, 25 Cal.3d 626, 631-632, 159 Cal.Rptr. 811, 602 P.2d 731 (1979)). [*57] "A business practice is 'unlawful' if it is 'forbidden by law.'" Walker v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., 98 Cal.App.4th 1158, 1169, 121 Cal.Rptr.2d 79 (2002) (quoting Farmers Ins. Exchange v. Superior Court, 2 Cal.4th 377, 383, 6 Cal.Rptr.2d 487, 826 P.2d 730 (1992)).

The UCL prohibits "unlawful" practices "forbidden by law, be it civil or criminal, federal, state, or municipal, statutory, regulatory, or court-made." Saunders v. Superior Court, 27 Cal. App. 4th 832, 838, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 438 (1994). The UCL "thus creates an independent action when a business practice violates some other law." Walker, 98 Cal.App.4th at 1169, 121 Cal.Rptr.2d 79. According to the California Supreme Court, the UCL "borrows" violations of other laws and treats them as unlawful practices independently actionable under the UCL. Farmers Ins. Exchange v. Superior Court, 2 Cal.4th 377, 383, 6 Cal.Rptr.2d 487, 826 P.2d 730 (1992).

A fellow district court has explained the borrowing of a violation of law other than the UCL:

> To state a claim for an "unlawful" business practice under the UCL, a plaintiff must assert the violation of any other law. Cel-Tech Commc'ns, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Co., 20 Cal.4th 163, 180, 83 Cal.Rptr.2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999) [*58] (stating, "By proscribing 'any unlawful' business practice, section 17200 'borrows' violations of other law and treats them as unlawful practices that the unfair competition law makes independently actionable.") (citation omitted). Where a plaintiff cannot state a claim under the "borrowed" law, she cannot state a UCL claim either. See, e.g., Smith v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Ins. Co., 93 Cal.App.4th 700, 718, 113 Cal.Rptr.2d 399 (2001). Here, Plaintiff has predicated her "unlawful" business practices claim on her TILA claim. However, as discussed above, Plaintiff's attempt to state a claim under TILA has failed. Accordingly, Plaintiff has stated no "unlawful" UCL claim.

Rubio v. Capital One Bank, 572 F.Supp.2d 1157, 1168 (C.D. Cal. 2008).

"Unfair" under the UCL "means conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." Cal-Tech Communications, 20 Cal.4th 163 at 187, 83 Cal.Rptr.2d 548. The "unfairness" prong of the UCL "does not give the courts a general license to review the fairness [*59] of contracts." Samura v. Kaiser Found. Health Plan, 17 Cal.App.4th 1284, 1299, 22 Cal. Rptr. 2d 20 & n. 6 (1993).

The "fraudulent" prong under the UCL requires a plaintiff to "show deception to some members of the public, or harm to the public interest," Watson Laboratories, Inc. v. Rhone-Poulenc Rorer, Inc., 178 F.Supp.2d 1099, 1121 (C.D. Ca. 2001), or to allege that "members of the public are likely to be deceived." *Medical Instrument Development Laboratories v. Alcon Laboratories, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 41411, 2005 WL 1926673, at 5 (N.D. Cal. 2005).

"A plaintiff alleging unfair business practices under these statutes [UCL] must state with reasonable particularity the facts supporting the statutory elements of the violation." Khoury v. Maly's of California, Inc., 14 Cal.App.4th 612, 619, 17 Cal.Rptr.2d 708 (1993).

The complaint fails to establish that defendants engaged in unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business practices under the UCL. In the absence of violation of a borrowed law, a UCL claim fails in that it cannot rest on alleged irregularities in the loan transaction or foreclosure proceedings. The complaint lacks viable statutory or common law claims. The complaint lacks reasonable particularity of facts to [*60] support a UCL claim. Reliance on other invalid claims alleged in the complaint fails to support a viable UCL claim. The UCL claim lacks particularity of fraudulent circumstances, such as a misrepresentation, for a UCL claim, especially given failure of fraud-sounding claims, as discussed above. The complaint lacks facts to describe how consumers were deceived. The complaint lacks facts to hint at a wrong subject to the UCL to warrant the UCL claim's dismissal.

CONCLUSION AND ORDER

For the reasons discussed above, this Court:

1. DISMISSES with prejudice this action against defendants; and
2. DIRECTS the clerk to enter judgment in favor of defendants GMAC Mortgage, LLC and Executive Trustee Services, LLC and against plaintiff Carmen Lopez and to close this action.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c), after the pleadings are closed--but early enough not to delay trial--a party may move for judgment on the pleadings. A motion for judgment on the pleadings pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c), alleging a failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, is analyzed under the same standard as a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss.

HN2[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) permits a court to dismiss all or part of an action for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. In deciding a motion to dismiss, all well-pleaded allegations of the complaint must be taken as true and interpreted in the light most favorable to the plaintiffs, and all inferences must be drawn in favor of them. A Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss should be granted only if the plaintiff is unable to articulate enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. A plaintiff is required, by Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2), to provide the grounds of his entitlement to relief, which requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do.

HN3[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

In deciding motions to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), courts generally consider only the allegations in the complaint, exhibits attached to the complaint, matters of public record, and documents that form the basis of a claim. A document forms the basis of a claim if the document is integral to or explicitly relied upon in the complaint. The purpose of this rule is to avoid the situation where a plaintiff with a legally deficient claim that is based on a particular document can avoid dismissal of that claim by failing to attach the relied upon document. Further, considering such a document is not unfair to a plaintiff because, by relying on the document, the plaintiff is on notice that the document will be considered.

MEMORANDUM OPINION

STARK, U.S. District Judge:

Pending before the Court is the Motion under Rule 12(c) for dismissal of New York's Donnelly Act Damages Claim on Behalf of Consumers (Docket Item ("D.I.") 161 and, hereinafter, the "Donnelly Consumer Motion") filed by defendant Intel Corporation ("Intel" or "Defendant"). For the reasons discussed below, the Court will grant the motion.

I.BACKGROUND

Plaintiff, the [*2] State of New York ("Plaintiff" or "New York"), filed the complaint ("Complaint") in this action on November 4, 2009 against Intel. (D.I. 1) The Complaint alleges:

> Intel has engaged in a systematic worldwide campaign of illegal, exclusionary conduct to maintain its monopoly power and prices in the market for x86 microprocessors, the "brains" of Personal Computers ("PCs"). By exacting exclusive or near-exclusive agreements from large computer makers ("Original Equipment Manufacturers" or "OEMs") in exchange for payments totaling billions of dollars, and threatening retaliation against any company that did not heed its wishes, Intel robbed its competitors of the opportunity to challenge Intel's dominance in key segments of the market. This illegal behavior was highly detrimental to consumers, competition, and innovation.

(Id. ¶ 1; see also id. ¶¶ 2-9, 252 (discussing, inter alia, Intel's alleged behavior and consumer harm, including "depriv[ing] New York consumers ... of innovative technology and compell[ing] them to pay prices above competitive levels")) Plaintiff asserts violations of Section 2 of the federal Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2 (Claim One), and two state statutes — (1) New York's [*3] antitrust law (the "Donnelly Act"), N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340 et seq. (Claim Two), and (2) Section 63(12) of New York's Executive Law, N.Y. Exec. Law § 63(12) (the "Executive Law"), a statute permitting New York's Attorney General to seek relief with respect to certain "repeated fraudulent or illegal acts" (Claims Three and Four). (See D.I. 1)

As to its state-based Donnelly Act claims, Plaintiff, as parens patriae, seeks redress on behalf of New York consumers-at-large, specifically natural persons and governmental entities. [1] Of particular relevance here is Claim Two of the Complaint, whereby Plaintiff, under color of New York law, "as the duly constituted officer authorized to represent . . . consumers" and "sue[] on behalf of . . . New York consumers who purchased x86 CPUs or x86 CPU-containing products directly or indirectly from [Intel]," seeks to recover, under the Donnelly Act, "treble damages on behalf of all New York consumers who suffered directly or indirectly as a result of Intel's illegal conduct." (D.I. 1 ¶¶ 14, 263, Prayer for Relief; see also D.I. 162 at 1 & n.1)

Intel answered the Complaint on January 5, 2010. (D.I. 14) On May 27, 2011, Intel filed its Donnelly Consumer Motion, seeking dismissal of Plaintiff's Donnelly Act treble damages claim on behalf of individual New York consumers. (D.I. 161) By its motion, Intel submits that New York is simply vested with the power to assert this treble damages claim on behalf of consumers, as such a claim is rooted in neither statutory nor common law. (See D.I. 162 at 1; D.I. 220 at 1) Intel contends the Donnelly Act does not bestow authority upon New York to sue for damages on behalf of consumers; rather, the Act confines New York, when filing suit on behalf of its citizens, to requests for penalties and injunctive relief. (See D.I. 162 at 1, 3-4; D.I. 220 at 1; Tr. at 16-18) Moreover, Intel continues, New York cannot ground its request for relief under the cloak of other statutory authority, or on a parens patriae theory, "because a sovereign has no parens patriae right to recover damages on behalf of particular individuals for harm done to those individuals." (D.I. [*5] 162 at 1; see also id. at 4-9; D.I. 220)

After briefing on the motion was completed, the Court heard argument on October 27, 2011 (see Transcript of October 27, 2011 hearing (D.I. 247) (hereinafter "Tr.")).

II. LEGAL STANDARDS

A. Motion to Dismiss - Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c)

HN1[] Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(c), "[a]fter the pleadings are closed — but early enough not to delay trial — a party may move for judgment on the pleadings." A motion for judgment on the pleadings pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(c), alleging a failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, is analyzed under the same standard as a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss. See Turbe v. Gov't of Virgin Islands, 938 F.2d 427, 428 (3d Cir. 1991).

B. Motion to Dismiss - Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6)

HN2[] Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) permits a court to dismiss all or part of an action "for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted." "In deciding a motion to dismiss, all well-pleaded allegations of the complaint must be taken as true and interpreted in the light most favorable to the plaintiffs, and all inferences must be drawn in favor of them." McTernan v. City of York, 577 F.3d 521, 526 (3d Cir. 2009) [*6] (internal citation and

[1] New York sought to amend its Complaint on December 9, 2010 to amend the term "consumers" to include not only [*4] natural persons and governmental entities but also small and medium businesses. (See D.I. 87) That request was denied. (See D.I. 154) quotation marks omitted). A Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss should be granted only if the plaintiff is unable to articulate "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007); see also Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). A plaintiff is required, by Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2), to provide the "grounds of his entitle[ment] to relief," which "requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555 (internal quotation marks omitted).

The Third Circuit has explained:

> HN3[] In deciding motions to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), courts generally consider only the allegations in the complaint, exhibits attached to the complaint, matters of public record, and documents that form the basis of a claim. A document forms the basis of a claim if the document is integral to or explicitly relied upon in the complaint. The purpose of this rule is to avoid the situation where a plaintiff with a legally deficient claim that is based on a particular document can avoid dismissal of that claim by failing [*7] to attach the relied upon document. Further, considering such a document is not unfair to a plaintiff because, by relying on the document, the plaintiff is on notice that the document will be considered.

Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007))*; see also In re Burlington Coat Factory Sec. Litig., 114 F.3d 1410, 1426 (3d Cir. 1997).

III. DISCUSSION

Intel filed its Donnelly Consumer Motion seeking dismissal of New York's Donnelly Act treble damages claim on behalf of consumers. (D.I. 161) Intel highlights the language of the Donnelly Act, which, it contends, limits the State to bringing on behalf of "the people" only claims for penalties or injunctive relief. (D.I. 162 at 3) The statute provides:

> HN4[] The attorney-general may bring an action in the name and in behalf of the people of the state against any person, trustee, director, manager or other officer or agent of a corporation, or against a corporation, foreign or domestic, to restrain and prevent the doing in this state of any act herein declared to be illegal, or any act in, toward [*8] or for the making or consummation of any contract, agreement, arrangement or combination herein prohibited, wherever the same may have been made. In such an action, the court may award to the plaintiff a sum not in excess of twenty thousand dollars as an additional allowance.

N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 342 (emphasis added). Another provision of the statute states:

> HN5[] In lieu of any penalty otherwise prescribed for a violation of a provision of this article and in addition to an action pursuant to section three hundred forty-two of this article, the attorney-general may bring an action in the name and in behalf of the people of the state against any person, trustee, director, manager or other officer or agent of a corporation, or against a corporation, foreign or domestic, to recover a penalty in the sum specified in section three hundred forty-one of [*9] this article for the doing in this state of any act herein declared to be illegal, or any act in, toward or for the making or consummation of any contract, agreement, arrangement or combination herein prohibited, wherever the same may have been made. The action must be brought within three years after the commission of the act upon which it is based.

N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 342-a (emphasis added). Finally, N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 342-b provides:

> HN6[] In addition to existing statutory authority to bring such actions on behalf of the state and public authorities, the attorney general may also bring action on behalf of any political subdivision or public authority of the state upon the request of such political subdivision or public authority to recover damages for violations of section three hundred forty of this article, or to recover damages provided for by federal law for violations of the federal antitrust laws. In any class action the attorney general may bring on behalf of these or other subordinate governmental entities, any governmental entity that does not affirmatively exclude itself from the action, upon due notice thereof, shall be deemed to have requested to be treated as a member of [*10] the class represented in that action. The attorney general, on behalf of the state of New York, shall be entitled to retain from any moneys recovered in such actions the costs and expenses of such services.

(Emphasis added).

Based on these statutory provisions, Intel contends:

> the Donnelly Act does not authorize New York to bring a damages claim for harm done to private parties. . . . Notably, the Donnelly Act specifically permits New York to seek damages for harms that "the state" itself has sustained (and also permits non-state public entities and consumers to seek damages for harms they sustained themselves). See N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340(5). The Donnelly Act further allows New York to bring suit for damages on behalf of harms suffered by non-state public entities, but only "upon the request[s]" of such entities. . . . The Donnelly Act includes no similar provision authorizing New York to sue for damages on behalf of consumers.

(D.I. 162 at 3; see also Tr. at 16-18)

Courts considering the issue before the Court have agreed with Intel's reading of the Donnelly Act. For instance, in In re Dynamic Random Access Memory Antitrust Litig. (In re DRAM), [*11] the Northern District of California held:

> [T]he [Donnelly] Act itself does not authorize the [New York] Attorney General to pursue damages claims on behalf of natural persons. To be sure, the Act does contemplate that the Attorney General may file claims "in behalf of the people of the state . . ." See N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 342. However, the Act specifically limits such claims to those seeking injunctive relief, or civil penalties under the Act. See id. at § 342-a. By contrast, the separate provision of the Act that expressly governs the Attorney General's ability to pursue damages claims under the Act, unambiguously limits such actions to those "on behalf of any political subdivision or public authority of the state." See id. at § 342-b. Presumably, the legislature knew how to include language granting the Attorney General the right to sue "in behalf of the people of the state" in the Act's damages relief provision, as it did so with respect to the provisions allowing actions for injunctive relief and civil penalties. Accordingly, the court concludes that the legislature's failure to include similar language in the provision authorizing damages suits was deliberate. As such, plaintiff [*12] may not assert a claim for monetary damages under the Act on behalf of natural persons.

*2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 67948, 2007 WL 2517851, 8 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 31, 2007); see also New York v. Feldman, 210 F. Supp. 2d 294, 303 n.4 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) ("The [Donnelly] Act does not authorize [New York] to recover damages on behalf of the people."); see also People v. Gold Medal Farms, Inc., 113 Misc. 2d 574, 578, 449 N.Y.S.2d 618 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 1982) (examining text of Donnelly Act to determine state's statutorily mandated authority). The Court is persuaded that HN7[] no express statutory authority permits New York to bring treble damages claims on behalf of individuals under the Donnelly Act.

New York seeks to distinguish *In re DRAM*based on the fact it predates more recent state-law authority, particularly New York v. Liberty Mutual Ins. Co., 52 A.D.3d 378, 861 N.Y.S.2d 294 (1st Dept. 2009). Yet federal courts have adhered to In re DRAM even after having the benefit of New York's subsequent authority. In In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig., the Northern District of California adopted In re DRAM's conclusion and reasoning. See *2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 88723, 2011 WL 3475408, at 4-6 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 9, 2011). Indeed, the TFT-LCD court explicitly rejected New York's reliance on Liberty Mutual, [*13] explaining that Liberty Mutual's treatment of the issue is "exceedingly brief" and "does not discuss what relief would be available" in a parens patriae damages suit on behalf of individuals. *2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 88723, 2011 WL 3475408, at 6. [2]

[2] Subsequent to the Court's hearing on Intel's Donnelly Consumer Motion, the parties apprised the Court that the TFT-LCD court denied New York's motion to reconsider the holding regarding the State's parens patriae damages claim. (See D.I. 255; D.I. 256) In reaffirming its original decision, the Northern District of California emphasized that "the New York legislature has 'unambiguously' restricted the state's ability to seek such damages to actions 'on behalf of any political subdivision or public

New York insists that New York courts have allowed parens patriae treble damages actions under the Donnelly Act. (See D.I. 213 at 1, 7-10) Intel responds that New York failed to invoke the parens patriae theory in its Donnelly Act claim. Intel further contends that "New York's suit for treble damages on behalf of consumers in connection with individual computer [*14] purchases is the prototypical example of a claim brought to vindicate private interests and therefore cannot be maintained under New York's common-law parens patriae authority." (D.I. 162 at 4 n.3, 5; see also In re Dram, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 67948, 2007 WL 2517851, at *8-9 (rejecting notion that subject suit could be premised on state's general common law powers when there "is no broadly recognized common law parens patriae right to pursue monetary damages claims, and cases discussing the common law parens patriae right have generally been limited to cases seeking injunctive or other equitable relief")) Intel further submits that a parens patriae claim can only be brought on behalf of the State as a whole to protect a "quasi-sovereign interest," and cannot be asserted to vindicate the "interests of particular private parties." (D.I. 162 at 4; see also Alfred L. Snapp & Son, Inc. v. Puerto Rico, 458 U.S. 592, 607, 102 S. Ct. 3260, 73 L. Ed. 2d 995 (1982))

In support of its position, Intel cites a decision of the Court of Appeals of New York adopting Snapp's "quasi-sovereign interest" standard for measuring New York's common-law parens patriae authority. (See D.I. 162 at 4; People v. Grasso, 11 N.Y.3d 64, 69 n.4, 893 N.E.2d 105, 862 N.Y.S.2d 828 (2008) ("Parens patriae is a common-law [*15] standing doctrine that permits the state to commence an action to protect a public interest, like the safety, health or welfare of its citizens. To invoke the doctrine, the Attorney General must prove a quasi-sovereign interest distinct from that of a particular party and injury to a substantial segment of the state's population."); see also New York ex rel. Abrams v. Seneci, 817 F.2d 1015, 1017 (2d Cir. 1987) (denying New York's assertion of standing to sue in representative capacity on behalf of individuals under parens patriae theory to recover treble damages, explaining "[a] State that sues as parens patriae must seek to redress an injury to an interest that is separate from the interests of particular individuals"); id. ("Where the complaint only seeks to recover money damages for injuries suffered by individuals, the award of money damages will not compensate the state for any harm done to its quasi-sovereign interests. Thus, the state as parens patriae lacks standing to prosecute such a suit.")).

New York responds that the New York Attorney General is permitted to recover its state law Donnelly Act damages for injury to consumers because New York has a "quasi-sovereign interest [*16] in maintaining a competitive marketplace." (D.I. 213 at 3) Specifically, Plaintiff insists it meets the three-prong test of Grasso. (See id. at 1-2) As New York summarizes: "'[T]he three factors that normally determine whether a quasi-sovereign interest is sufficiently important to permit standing are (1) the size of the segment of the population that has been adversely affected, (2) the magnitude of the harm inflicted, and (3) the practical ability of those injured to obtain complete relief without intervention by the sovereign.' 72 Am. Jur. 2d States, Etc. § 91 (2011)." (D.I. 213 at 4) Here, New York contends its claim vindicates a quasi-sovereign interest since computers can be found in nearly every home, so virtually all New Yorkers are affected by the claim; the magnitude of harm is large in terms of dollar amount and populace affected, and competition and innovation are risked; and, it would be impractical for individuals to seek relief without sovereign intervention. (See id. at 4)

In Grasso, the Court observed: "In varying contexts, courts have held that a state has a quasi-sovereign interest in protecting the integrity of the marketplace." 11 N.Y.3d at 69 n.4. Here, however, [*17] the Court agrees with Intel that New York is suing to recover treble damages on behalf of certain New York consumers, in order to recover overcharges those consumers allegedly paid while purchasing computers containing microprocessors, and this ground for relief seeks to vindicate particular private interests. (D.I. 162 at 6-9)

Finally, New York offers that, "[i]ndependent of its common law authority, New York may also bring its Donnelly Act claim on behalf of consumers by virtue of separate statutes." (D.I. 213 at 10; see also Tr. at 50) In particular, New York cites Executive Law Section 63(1) [3] as authorizing the Attorney General to "[p]rosecute and defend all actions authority of the state.'" In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 88723, 2011 WL 5573930, at *1 (N.D. Cal. Nov 16, 2011).

[3] NY Exec. Law § 63(1) provides:

> HN8[] The attorney-general shall:

and proceedings in which the State is interested." (D.I. 213 at 10) Additionally, New York cites to Executive Law Section 63(12) [4] as authorizing the Attorney General to sue "in the name of the people of the State of New York" when any person shall "[e]ngage in repeated fraudulent or illegal acts or otherwise demonstrate persistent fraud or illegality in the carrying on, conducting, or transaction of business." (Id. at 10-11) New York submits that courts have determined that these two statutory provisions constitute [*18] "express state statutory authority [allowing the Attorney General] to represent consumers in a capacity that is the functional equivalent of parens patriae authority." (Id. at 11)

However, the Executive Law permits New York to recover compensatory damages for harms to individuals arising from repeated violations of the Donnelly Act. (See Tr. at 16) (counsel for Intel stating, "I think everyone is mindful that there is authority with the Executive Law, Section 63 [(12)], that they can bring single compensatory damage, Donnelly Act-type claims but not the treble damages under 342-b.") It does not permit New York to bring treble damages claims on behalf of consumers.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, the Court will grant Intel's Donnelly Consumer Motion. A separate Order, consistent with this Memorandum Opinion, will be entered.

End of Document

> Prosecute and defend all actions and proceedings in which the state is interested, and have charge and control of all the legal business of the departments and bureaus of the state, or of any office thereof which requires the services of attorney or counsel, in order to protect the interest of the state, but this section shall not apply to any of the military department bureaus or military offices of the state. STARK, U.S. District Judge:

Pending before the Court is the Motion for Partial Summary Judgment on Statute of Limitations Grounds (Docket Item ("D.I.") 166 and, hereinafter, the "Summary Judgment Motion") filed by defendant Intel Corporation ("Intel" or "Defendant"). For the reasons discussed below, the Court will grant the motion.

I. BACKGROUND

Plaintiff, the State of New York ("Plaintiff" [*2] or "New York"), filed the complaint ("Complaint") in this action on November 4, 2009 against Intel. (D.I. 1) The Complaint alleges:

> Intel has engaged in a systematic worldwide campaign of illegal, exclusionary conduct to maintain its monopoly power and prices in the market for x86 microprocessors, the "brains" of Personal Computers ("PCs"). By exacting exclusive or near-exclusive agreements from large computer makers ("Original Equipment Manufacturers" or "OEMs") in exchange for payments totaling billions of dollars, and threatening retaliation against any company that did not heed its wishes, Intel robbed its competitors of the opportunity to challenge Intel's dominance in key segments of the market. This illegal behavior was highly detrimental to consumers, competition, and innovation.

(Id. ¶ 1; see also id. ¶¶ 2-9 (discussing, inter alia, Intel's alleged behavior and resulting harm)) Plaintiff asserts violations of Section 2 of the federal Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2 (Claim One), and two state statutes - (1) New York's antitrust law (the "Donnelly Act"), N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340 et seq. (Claim Two), and (2) Section 63(12) of New York's Executive Law, N.Y. Exec. Law § 63(12) (the "Executive [*3] Law"), a statute permitting New York's Attorney General to seek relief with respect to certain "repeated fraudulent or illegal acts" (Claims Three and Four). (See D.I. 1)

New York's claims essentially fall into two categories: direct and indirect. (See D.I. 167 at 1-2; D.I. 215 at 1) "The direct claims allege that Intel overcharged OEMs for microprocessors, and that the OEMs assigned to New York any antitrust claims that they might have under assignment clauses in New York's computer purchase contracts." (D.I. 167 at 1; see also D.I. 1 ¶ 251) New York asserts its direct claims under both the Sherman and Donnelly Acts. (D.I. 167 at 1; see D.I. 1 ¶¶ 258, 261) The indirect claims assert that computer purchasers incurred indirect overcharges "because OEMs passed on microprocessor overcharges to consumers in the computer market." (D.I. 167 at 1) New York attempts to present these indirect claims not only on its own behalf, as well as on behalf of its local governments and agencies (as computer purchasers themselves) (so-called "Indirect Proprietary Claims"), but also on behalf of New York consumers who purchased computers (so-called "Indirect Representative Claims"). (See D.I. 167 at 1-2; [*4] D.I. 1 ¶¶ 261-63, 268, 272) The indirect claims asserted by New York are brought solely pursuant to state law. (See D.I. 167 at 2; D.I. 1 ¶¶ 261-63, 268, 272)

As to its state-based Donnelly Act and Executive Law claims, Plaintiff, as parens patriae, seeks redress on behalf of New York consumers-at-large, including natural persons and governmental entities. Specifically, in Claim Two of its Complaint, New York seeks to recover treble damages under the Donnelly Act on four separate grounds: (i) for harms allegedly suffered by the State itself as a purchaser of computers containing Intel microprocessors; (ii) as assignee of the claims previously owned by the OEMs that purchased Intel microprocessors; (iii) on behalf of New York non-state local entities that purchased computers containing Intel microprocessors; and (iv) on behalf of New York consumers who purchased computers containing Intel microprocessors. (See D.I. 1 ¶¶ 14, 259-63 and Prayer for Relief) Plaintiff's Executive Law claims seek to recover damages sustained as a result of Intel's alleged violations on behalf of "all natural persons." (See id.) The Complaint alleges anticompetitive conduct dating back to 2001. (See D.I. 167 [*5] at 2; see also D.I. 1 ¶¶ 257, 260, 266, 270; D.I. 168, Declaration of Daniel S. Floyd, dated May 16, 2011 ("Floyd Decl."), at Nos. 14 & 15)

Intel answered the Complaint on January 5, 2010. (D.I. 14) On May 27, 2011, Intel filed its Summary Judgment Motion, seeking summary judgment on the basis that several of New York's claims fall outside the applicable limitations period. (D.I. 166) Specifically, Intel contends it is entitled to judgment on (a) direct Sherman Act damages claims for OEM microprocessor purchases occurring before November 4, 2005; (b) direct Donnelly Act and Executive Law damages and penalties claims for OEM microprocessor purchases occurring before November 4, 2006; and (c) all indirect damages and penalties claims based on computer purchases occurring before November 4, 2006. [1] (See id. at 1; D.I. 167)

[1] The parties clarified at the October hearing that "November 4th" is the operative date, not "November 3rd," as some documents had erroneously stated. (See Tr. at 3, 5, 27-28, 56, 58)

After briefing on the motion was completed, the Court heard argument on October 27, 2011 (see Transcript of October 27, 2011 hearing (D.I. 247) (hereinafter "Tr.")).

II. LEGAL STANDARDS

"The [*6] court shall grant summary judgment if the movant shows that there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a). The moving party bears the burden of demonstrating the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. See Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586 n. 10, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). An assertion that a fact cannot be - or, alternatively, is - genuinely disputed must be supported either by citing to "particular parts of materials in the record, including depositions, documents, electronically stored information, affidavits or declarations, stipulations (including those made for the purposes of the motion only), admissions, interrogatory answers, or other materials," or by "showing that the materials cited do not establish the absence or presence of a genuine dispute, or that an adverse party cannot produce admissible evidence to support the fact." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c)(1)(A) & (B). If the moving party has carried its burden, the nonmovant must then "come forward with specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587 (internal quotation marks [*7] omitted). The Court will "draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the nonmoving party, and it may not make credibility determinations or weigh the evidence." Reeves v. Sanderson Plumbing Prods., Inc., 530 U.S. 133, 150, 120 S. Ct. 2097, 147 L. Ed. 2d 105 (2000).

To defeat a motion for summary judgment, the non-moving party must "do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 586; see also Podohnik v. U.S. Postal Service, 409 F.3d 584, 594 (3d Cir. 2005) (stating party opposing summary judgment "must present more than just bare assertions, conclusory allegations or suspicions to show the existence of a genuine issue") (internal quotation marks omitted). However, the "mere existence of some alleged factual dispute between the parties will not defeat an otherwise properly supported motion for summary judgment;" and a factual dispute is genuine only where "the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 247-48, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). "If the evidence is merely colorable, or is not significantly probative, summary judgment may be granted." Id. at 249-50 (internal citations omitted); [*8] see also Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986) (stating entry of summary judgment is mandated "against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial"). Thus, the "mere existence of a scintilla of evidence" in support of the non-moving party's position is insufficient to defeat a motion for summary judgment; there must be "evidence on which the jury could reasonably find" for the non-moving party. Anderson, 477 U.S. at 252.

III. DISCUSSION

Intel seeks summary judgment on New York's claims that fall outside the applicable limitations period. The Court will grant Intel's motion.

A. Sherman Act

With respect to New York's Sherman Act damages claims for microprocessor purchases, there appears to be no real dispute that claims arising before November 4, 2005 are time-barred. New York acknowledges that "[a]s to its Sherman Act direct purchaser claims, New York does not dispute that the applicable statute of limitations is four years, extending back from the November [4], 2009 filing of its complaint." (D.I. 215 at 1; see also Tr. at 27)

B. Donnelly [*9] Act and Executive Law

With respect to New York's Donnelly Act and Executive Law damages and penalties claims for microprocessor purchases occurring before November 4, 2006, Intel contends there were no other proceedings operating to toll the limitations period. Intel further asserts that these claims are barred under Delaware's Borrowing Statute, 10 Del. C. § 8121, which requires the Court to apply the shorter of Delaware's statute of limitations or the statute of limitation of the state in which the claim arose. (See D.I. 166 at 1; D.I. 167 at 2-4; D.I. 218 at 2-6) Specifically, Delaware's Borrowing Statute provides:

> Where a cause of action arises outside of this State, an action cannot be brought in a court of this State to enforce such cause of action after the expiration of whichever is shorter, the time limited by the law of this State, or the time limited by the law of the state or country where the cause of action arose, for bringing an action upon such cause of action. Where the cause of action originally accrued in favor of a person who at the time of such accrual was a resident of this State, the time limited by the law of this State shall apply.

10 Del. C. § 8121 (emphasis [*10] added).

The statute of limitations for antitrust claims under the Delaware Antitrust Act is three years. See 6 Del. C. § 2111 ("Any action to enforce this chapter shall be forever barred unless commenced within 3 years after the cause of action accrued. For purposes of this section, a cause of action for a continuing violation is deemed to accrue at any time during the period of such violation.").

New York asks the Court to apply New York's longer statutes of limitations: four years for the Donnelly Act claims, and six years for the Executive Law claims. New York contends these longer periods apply because the injury was suffered in New York, and the Complaint was filed here out of the interest of efficiency [2] rather than forum shopping. (See D.I. 215 at 2, 4-6; see also Tr. at 10-11, 28-29, 31-32, 56-57) The Court agrees with Intel, however, that the Borrowing Statute limits all of New York's state-law claims (both Donnelly Act and Executive Law claims) to a three-year recovery period.

In reaching this conclusion, the Court must - as even New York concedes - "begin with the literal language of the [B]orrowing [S]tatute." (Tr. at 28) The language of the statute is clear. As between New York's and Delaware's statutes of limitations, the Court is to apply "whichever is shorter," which here is Delaware's three year statute of limitations. The statute contains no exception for when a party chooses to file suit in Delaware for purported "efficiency" reasons and Delaware's statute of limitations is shorter than the limitations period of the state in which the claim arose. New York, for whatever reason, chose to file in Delaware, so its claims must be analyzed pursuant to Delaware's forum laws. Those laws, again, require the application of [*12] the shorter limitations period of three years.

With respect to New York's indirect damages and penalties claims based on computer purchases occurring before November 4, 2006, New York argues that, "as to the natural persons for whom New York is seeking damages under its Donnelly Act parens patriae and Executive Law claims, the statute of limitations was tolled by the filing of a class action complaint containing Donnelly Act claims of which they were potential members at least as early as July 13, 2005." (D.I. 215 at 2; see also id. at 7-16) New York insists that the class action tolling doctrine under American Pipe & Constr. Co. v. Utah, 414 U.S. 538, 94 S. Ct. 756, 38 L. Ed. 2d 713 (1974), applies here under both Delaware or New York law. (See D.I. 215 at 2, 7-16; see also Tr. at 33-36)

Intel replies that the tolling doctrines on which New York relies are inapplicable here. In Intel's view, American Pipe provides for tolling only for a class action that follows an earlier class action that was denied because of lack of an adequate class representative. See also Yang v. Odom, 392 F.3d 97 (3d Cir. 2004). The instant action, Intel contends, is not a class action, and the previously filed class action against Intel, see Paul v. Intel Corp., C.A. No. 05-485 (D. Del. (filed July 12, 2005) [*13] , was not defeated due to lack of an adequate class representative. (See Tr. at 57; see also D.I. 218 at 1, 6-10)

[2] New York explains that its filing in Delaware is particularly efficient because Delaware is also the site of a pending multi-district litigation, In re Intel Corp. Microprocessor Antitrust Litig., MDL Docket No. 05-1717-LPS. [*11] (See D.I. 215 at 6) Also pending in this district is the member suit brought by Advanced Micro Devices, Inc. and AMD International Sales & Service, Ltd. against Intel Corporation and Intel Kabushiki Kaisha, alleging antitrust claims under the Sherman Act and violations of the California Business and Professions Code. See Advanced Micro Devices, Inc. v. Intel Corp., C.A. No. 05-441 (D. Del.) (filed June 27, 2005).

The Court agrees with Intel's analysis of American Pipe and its non-applicability to this case. The instant case is not a class action. Moreover, there has been no determination in the earlier (and still pending) class action that there was an inadequate class representative. Therefore, the statute of limitations was not tolled.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, the Court will grant Intel's Summary Judgment Motion. A separate Order, consistent with this Memorandum Opinion, will be entered.

[*259] OPINION AND [4] ORDER DENYING WITHOUT PREJUDICE PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION

(Doc. 206)

This matter came before the court on September 26, 2011 for a hearing on Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Doc. 206). The parties completed their post-hearing filings on October 12, 2011.

Plaintiffs, Alice H. Allen and Laurance E. Allen, d/b/a Al-lens Farm, Garret Sitts and Ralph Sitts, and Jonathan and Claudia Haar (collectively, "Plaintiffs") ask the court to certify a class to pursue the allegations contained in Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint on a class action basis. They contend that they have met all of the requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23, and that a class action is the most appropriate mechanism for resolving this lawsuit.

Defendants, Dairy Farmers of America, Inc. ("DFA") and Dairy Marketing Services, LLC ("DMS") (collectively, "Defendants"), oppose class certification on three principal grounds. First, they claim this lawsuit lacks common questions of fact and law and that, to the extent there are some common questions, they do not predominate over questions affecting only individual members of the class. Second, they contend the claims of Plaintiffs' proposed class representatives [5] are not typical of the class. And third, they assert that neither Plaintiffs' proposed class representatives nor proposed class counsel can adequately represent the diverse and conflicting interests of the proposed class.

I. The Amended Complaint.

Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint alleges five causes of action: (1) conspiracy to monopolize/monopsonize in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act;[1] (2) attempt to monopolize/monopsonize [*260] in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act;

[1] Section 2 of the Sherman Act makes it an [6] offense to "monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States[.]" 15 U.S.C. § 2. Section 2 "forbids both monopolization and attempted monopolization." Tops Mkts., Inc. v. Quality Mkts., Inc., 142 F.3d 90, 97

(3) unlawful monopoly/monopsony in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act; (4) price fixing in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act;[2] and (5) conspiracy to restrain trade in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. In support of these claims, the Amended Complaint contains 286 paragraphs of allegations that assert a vast array of anticompetitive acts by Defendants including that from at least as early as 2001, DFA and DMS and their coconspirators engaged in a wide-ranging conspiracy at both the processor and cooperative levels to fix, stabilize, and artificially depress prices for raw Grade A milk and to allocate markets within Federal Milk Market Order 1 ("Order 1") among the coconspirators.

Plaintiffs seek monetary damages in an amount which "represent[s] the additional amount Plaintiffs and other members of the Class would have received from the sale of raw Grade A milk in the absence of the violations alleged." (Doc. 117 at 83.) Plaintiffs further seek treble damages under Section 4 of the Clayton Act. 15 U.S.C. § 15.

In addition to their request for monetary relief, Plaintiffs seek multi-faceted injunctive relief that includes a request for an order: (1) enjoining Defendants from entering into full supply agreements; (2) enjoining Defendants from entering into agreements not to compete for the purchase of raw Grade A milk; (3) enjoining Defendants from forcing dairy farmers in Order 1 to market their milk through DMS in order to gain access to processing plants; (4) enjoining Defendants from continuing their conspiracy to engage in price-fixing and price suppression, and (5) requiring Defendants to divest their processing plants [8] in order to restore competition. (Id. at 80-83, 96.)

With less specificity, Plaintiffs also seek injunctive relief that will prevent Defendants from continuing to conspire and/or contract to "unlawfully allocate the market, refuse to compete and to fix, reduce, stabilize or maintain at artificially depressed values the over-order premiums paid by processors in the Northeast for raw Grade A milk[.]" (Id. at 90-91.)

II. Plaintiffs' Proposed Class Action.

Plaintiffs' proposed product market is raw Grade A milk. Their proposed geographic market is Order 1 covering areas in Connecticut, Delaware, the District of Columbia, Maryland, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont, and Virginia. Plaintiffs define the proposed class as follows:

> All dairy farmers, whether individuals, entities or members of cooperatives, who produced and pooled raw Grade A milk in Order 1 during any time from January 1, 2002 to the present. Defendants and Defendants' Coconspirators are excluded from the Class.

(Doc. 206 at 16.) They identify "Defendants' Coconspirators [who] are excluded from the Class" as: Dean Foods ("Dean"), HP Hood LLC ("Hood"), National Dairy Holdings [9] ("NDH"), Farmland Dairies LLC ("Farmland"), Kraft, Dairylea Cooperative, Inc. (Dairylea"), St. Albans Cooperative Creamery, Inc. ("St. Albans"), Agri-Mark, Inc. ("Agri-Mark"), Land O'Lakes, Inc. ("LOL"), and Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers Cooperative Association, Inc. ("MDVA").

(2d Cir. 1998). In order to establish a § 2 violation for completed monopolization, a plaintiff must show that the defendant: "(1) possessed monopoly power in the relevant market; and (2) willfully acquired or maintained that power." Id. (citing United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966)). "[A]n action under section 2 of the Sherman Act for attempting to monopolize a market will lie only where there is anticompetitive conduct, a specific intent to monopolize and a dangerous probability that monopoly will be achieved." Int'l Distrib. Ctrs., Inc., v. Walsh Trucking Co., Inc., 812 F.2d 786, 791 (2d Cir. 1987).

[2] Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States[.]" 15 U.S.C. § 1. To establish a claim under § 1, a plaintiff [7] must show: "(1) a combination or some form of concerted action between at least two legally distinct economic entities; and (2) such combination or conduct constituted an unreasonable restraint of trade[.]" Tops Mkts., Inc., 142 F.3d at 95-96.

Plaintiffs propose that the following individuals be named class representatives: (1) Plaintiffs Alice H. Allen and Laurance E. Allen who do business as the Al-lens Farm, which is located in Wells River, Vermont. From January 1, 2002 to present, Al-lens Farm sold, through DMS, raw grade A milk to raw Grade A milk processing plants in Order 1. They now sell organic milk, which Plaintiffs concede is not included in the definition of the proposed product market; (2) [*261] Plaintiffs Ralph Sitts and Garret Sitts who, as part of a partnership, operate a dairy farm in Franklin, New York. Their dairy farm was a member of DFA from 1998 until 2007. From January 1, 2002 to present, their partnership sold, through DMS, raw Grade A milk to raw Grade A milk processing plants in Order 1; (3) Plaintiffs Jonathan Haar and Claudia Haar, who operate a dairy farm in West Edmeston, New York. Their dairy farm has been a member of [10] DFA from 2000 to the present. From January 1, 2002 to present, their dairy farm sold, through DMS, raw Grade A milk to raw Grade A milk processing plants in Order 1.

III. The Nature of Plaintiffs' Claims.

Before embarking on an analysis of Plaintiffs' class certification motion, the court briefly sets forth the legal framework for Plaintiffs' claims against DFA and DMS. Under the Sherman Act, Plaintiffs have alleged both horizontal and vertical restraints of trade as well as a combination of the two.[3] They allege a conspiracy of dairy cooperatives and milk processors to fix, stabilize, and suppress the prices for raw Grade A milk that dairy farmers receive from both their cooperatives and their processors. In other words, Plaintiffs allege a dual level of price fixing and price suppression for dairy farmers who produce and pool their milk in Order 1.[4]

Despite its broad language, the Sherman Act only prohibits conduct that "unreasonably restrain[s] trade." NYNEX Corp. v. Discon, Inc., 525 U.S. 128, 133, 119 S. Ct. 493, 142 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1998) (emphasis in original). Courts thus analyze the legality of contracts or agreements that allegedly restrain trade using one of two frameworks: either a per se approach or the "rule of reason." See Virgin Atl. Airways Ltd. v. British Airways PLC, 257 F.3d 256, 263 (2d Cir. 2001).

Courts apply the per se rule in limited circumstances where the agreement at issue is of the sort that has proven so "manifestly anticompetitive" in the past that, "because of [its] pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming value [it is] conclusively presumed [12] to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm [it has] caused or the business excuse for [its] use." Cont'l T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 50, 97 S. Ct. 2549, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568 (1977) (internal quotation omitted). Generally, there is a presumption against applying the per se rule. See Bus. Elecs. Corp. v. Sharps Elecs. Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 726, 108 S. Ct. 1515, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808 (1988); Bogan v. Hodgkins, 166 F.3d 509, 514 (2d Cir. 1999).

All other contracts and agreements are subject to a rule of reason analysis. A court conducting a rule of reason analysis should consider "all of the circumstances of [the] case," including the nature of the market and market participants involved, in order to determine whether the agreement at issue has an actual adverse effect on competition. GTE Sylvania, 433 U.S. at 49.

[3] "Restraints imposed by agreement between competitors have traditionally been denominated as horizontal restraints, and those imposed by agreement between firms at different levels of distribution as vertical restraints." Bus. Elecs. Corp. v. Sharp Elecs. Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 730, 108 S. Ct. 1515, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808 (1988).

[4] The court in In re Se. Milk Antitrust Litig. concluded [11] a similar list of acts "are not manifestly anti-competitive, do not always or almost always tend to restrict competition or decrease output, do not always have an adverse impact on the market and are not, in and of themselves, illegal." *Se. Milk, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 76552, 2011 WL 2749587, at 10 (E.D. Tenn. July 14, 2011). Thus, "[t]he essence of plaintiffs' argument . . . is that defendants have used a series of legal, potentially competitive practices to accomplish an unlawful effect on prices and markets." Id.

Although Plaintiffs characterize some of the conspirators' agreements as per se violations of the antitrust laws, their proof in support of this conclusion is decidedly scant.[5] For example, although Plaintiffs allege an unlawful conspiracy to engage in price fixing through Greater Northeast Milk Marketing [*262] Association ("GNEMMA")[6] and its predecessors, they do not establish that all price fixing [13] by GNEMMA is unlawful per se. This distinction is important because in the absence of per se violations, Plaintiffs' claims are subject to a rule of reason analysis:

> Under this test plaintiff bears the initial burden of showing that the challenged conduct has had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market; to prove it has been harmed as an individual competitor will not suffice. Insisting on proof of harm to the whole market fulfills the broad purpose of the antitrust law that was enacted to ensure competition in general, not narrowly focused to protect individual competitors.

Capital Imaging Assocs., 996 F.2d at 543. Accordingly, in a rule of reason analysis, Plaintiffs must demonstrate that DFA's and DMS's alleged violations of the Sherman Act had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in Order 1.

IV. Class Certification Standards.

Plaintiffs, as the parties seeking certification, "bear[] the burden of establishing the existence of all four Rule 23(a) requirements, often referred to as the criteria of 'numerosity, commonality, typicality, and adequacy.'" Bourlas v. Davis Law Assocs., 237 F.R.D. 345, 350 (E.D.N.Y. 2006) (citations omitted); see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a).[7] If Plaintiffs satisfy this burden, they must also establish that their proposed class action is one of the three types of class action suits identified in Rule 23(b).

A district court must undertake a "rigorous analysis" and "assess all of the relevant evidence admitted at the class certification stage [to] determine whether each Rule 23 requirement has been met[.]" In re Initial Pub. Offerings Secs. Litig., 471 F.3d 24, 33, 42 (2d Cir. 2006) ("IPO"). Class certification requires "significant proof" in support of generalized claims. See Gen. Tel. Co. of the Sw. v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147, 160, 102 S. Ct. 2364, 72 L. Ed. 2d 740 (1982). As a result, "the class determination generally involves considerations that are 'enmeshed in the factual and legal issues comprising the plaintiff's cause of action.'" Coopers & Lybrand v. Livesay, 437 U.S. 463, 469, 98 S. Ct. 2454, 57 L. Ed. 2d 351 (1978) (quoting Mercantile Nat'l Bank v. Langdeau, 371 U.S. 555, 558, 83 S. Ct. 520, 9 L.

[5] At oral argument, Plaintiffs emphasized that if established, their allegations will demonstrate that DFA and DMS have violated consent decrees, their "core" policies, and their own antitrust guidelines. However, none of these claims is actionable by Plaintiffs, and Plaintiffs do not claim otherwise.

[6] GNEMMA is a common marketing agency formed under [14] the Capper-Volstead Act, 7 U.S.C. § 291 (2006). "The Capper-Volstead Act removed from the proscription of antitrust laws cooperatives formed by certain agricultural producers that otherwise would be directly competing with each other in efforts to bring their goods to market." Nat'l Broiler Mktg. Ass'n v. United States, 436 U.S. 816, 822, 98 S. Ct. 2122, 56 L. Ed. 2d 728 (1978). Accordingly, it grants dairy cooperatives antitrust immunity with regard to price-fixing agreements with other dairy farmers provided the agreement meet certain requirements.

[7] Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a) provides:

> One or more members of a class may sue or be sued as representative parties on behalf of all members [15] only if:
> > (1) the class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable [numerosity];
> > (2) there are questions of law or fact common to the class [commonality];
> > (3) the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class [typicality]; and
> > (4) the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class [adequacy].

Ed. 2d 523 (1963)). Where "significant proof" is lacking, class certification should be denied. [16] See Vega v. T-Mobile USA, Inc., 564 F.3d 1256, 1269 (11th Cir. 2009) (prohibiting courts from being "generous or forgiving" of failures of proof when performing rigorous analysis).

In IPO, the Second Circuit held that in order to satisfy the "rigorous analysis" standard, "the district judge must receive enough evidence, by affidavits, documents, or testimony, to be satisfied that each Rule 23 requirement has been met." IPO, 471 F.3d at 32-42. It recently summarized the task as follows:

> (1) a district judge may certify a class only after making determinations that each of the Rule 23 requirements has been met; (2) such determinations can be made only if the judge resolves factual disputes relevant to each Rule 23 requirement and finds that whatever underlying facts are relevant to a particular Rule 23 requirement have been established and is persuaded to [*263] rule, based on the relevant facts and the applicable legal standard, that the requirement is met; (3) the obligation to make such determinations is not lessened by overlap between a Rule 23 requirement and a merits issue, even a merits issue that is identical with a Rule 23 requirement; (4) in making such determinations, a district judge [17] should not assess any aspect of the merits unrelated to a Rule 23 requirement; and (5) a district judge has ample discretion to circumscribe both the extent of discovery concerning Rule 23 requirements and the extent of a hearing to determine whether such requirements are met in order to assure that a class certification motion does not become a pretext for a partial trial of the merits.

Shahriar v. Smith & Wollensky Rest. Grp., Inc., 659 F.3d 234, 251 (2d Cir. 2011) (quoting IPO, 471 F.3d at 41).

The court thus examines each Rule 23(a) requirement to determine whether Plaintiffs have sustained their burden of proof. Only then may it turn to whether Rule 23(b) and (c) have been satisfied.

V. Whether Plaintiffs Satisfy Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)'s Requirements.

Numerosity

Although there is no rigid test for numerosity, in determining whether a class is so numerous that joinder of all class members is impracticable, joinder is "generally presumed to be impracticable when a putative class exceeds 40 members." Menkes v. Stolt-Nielsen S.A., 270 F.R.D. 80, 90 (D. Conn. 2010) (citing Marisol A. v. Giuliani, 126 F.3d 372, 376 (2d Cir. 1997)); see also In re Am. Med. Sys., Inc., 75 F.3d 1069, 1079 (6th Cir. 1996) [18] ("When class size reaches substantial proportions . . . the impracticability requirement is usually satisfied by numbers alone.").

Here, the proposed settlement class consists of approximately 9,000 dairy farmers, dispersed throughout several states and judicial districts. The court finds that joinder of each of these dairy farmers as a party to this case would be difficult, inconvenient, and expensive, and would unduly complicate and delay the resolution of this lawsuit. Joinder is thus impracticable, and the numerosity requirement has been satisfied. DFA and DMS do not argue to the contrary.

Commonality

Rule 23(a)(2) requires a party seeking class certification to establish that there are questions of law and fact common to the class. Plaintiffs allege that the commonality requirement is satisfied by common proof of the existence, scope, activities, participants and duration of the alleged conspiracy. As acts in furtherance of the conspiracy, Plaintiffs allege (a) an agreement between DFA and Dairylea to create DMS in order to bring non-DFA members under its control; (b) DFA's purchase of eleven divested bottling plants previously owned by Dean and Suiza, thereby allowing Dean and Suiza [19] to merge; (c) Dean's agreements with DMS and DFA to allow Dean to circumvent Department of Justice safeguards in exchange for Dean's assistance in helping DMS acquire monopoly/monopsony power; (d) market allocation agreements between Agri-Mark, Dean, DFA, and DMS; (e) long-term supply agreements between Dean, DFA, and DMS; (f) actions to force Plaintiffs to market their product through DMS in order to gain access to bottling plants; (g) threatening haulers who worked with independent farmers; (h) cutting off access to bottling plants and boycotting independent dairy farmers; and (j) conspiring to engage in price-fixing and price suppression. (Doc. 117 at 84-86.) They contend that each of these allegedly anticompetitive acts will be established through common proof and that each putative class member "has a common interest in proving the existence, scope, effectiveness and impact of [those] conspirac[ies], as well as the appropriate injunctive and monetary relief to remedy the injury caused by the conspirac[ies]." (Doc. 206 at 20) (quoting In re NASDAQ Market-Makers Antitrust Litig., 169 F.R.D. 493, 510 (S.D.N.Y. 1996)).

In support of their theory of liability, Plaintiffs rely upon the [20] opinions of their expert [*264] witness Gordon Rausser, Ph.D.[8] In his Initial Declaration dated February 1, 2011, Dr. Rausser advanced opinions supported by facts that: (1) Grade A raw milk is the relevant product market and Order 1 is the relevant geographic market; (2) the structure and characteristics of Order 1 are conducive to the conspiracy alleged; (3) there is common evidence that collusion has occurred; and (4) DFA, DMS, and their co-conspirators' actions which are against their own interests may be explained by reference to common proof.

In response, DFA and DMS do not dispute that Plaintiffs can identify some common issues of fact and law with regard to their claims set forth in the Amended Complaint. They nonetheless contend that class certification must be denied on commonality grounds for two reasons.

First, they argue that competitive conditions, milk production, presence of non-conspirator processing plants, and DMS's market share vary so widely across Order 1 that the existence and exercise of monopsony power cannot be established across the entire region by common proof. In support of these arguments, they rely on the April 5, 2011 Expert Report of Joseph P. Kalt, Ph.D.[9] In his report, Dr. Kalt opined, among other things, that a plausible claim of common class-wide monopolization cannot be established by common [22] proof because: (1) monopsonization is not feasible in unconcentrated markets and the presence of DFA, DMS, and their alleged coconspirators is highly uneven and unstable across Order 1; (2) proposed class members in Order 1 have access to non-conspirators' processing plants; and (3) an anti-farmer conspiracy by farmer owned and operated cooperatives is not plausible. With regard to implausibility, Dr. Kalt points out that Plaintiffs allege:

> [a] complex and novel theory of monopsonization (i.e. buyer monopolization) in which unlawful unilateral and conspiratorial conduct by up to three dozen or more farmer-owned and run dairy cooperatives has been suppressing the prices farmers in the northeastern United States receive for their raw milk for most of the last decade. The complexity and novelty here lies in the claim that so many cooperatives owned and run by farmers have acted to harm the very farmers who own and run those cooperatives.

(Doc. 281-1 at 25).

[8] Dr. Rausser has a doctorate in the field of Agricultural Economics from the University of California at Davis and has completed post-doctorate studies at the University of Chicago's Department of Economics and Statistics. He is currently employed at the University of California at Berkeley where he teaches and advises graduate students in the Department of Agriculture and Resource Economics. He has received many awards and professional distinctions, has co-authored numerous publications, and has authored and edited others. He has given trial testimony in thirteen cases in the previous four years and deposition testimony in many others. The court [21] deems him qualified to provide an expert witness declaration in this case, and DFA and DMS do not argue otherwise. Dr. Rausser is also an expert witness for the plaintiffs in the Southeastern Milk. The class action in Southeastern Milk was recently decertified to the extent it includes current or former members of DFA. See *In re Se. Milk Antitrust Litig., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 83196, 2011 WL 3205798, at 8-9 (E.D. Tenn. July 28, 2011)

[9] Dr. Kalt is a professor of international political economy at the John F. Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University. He is also a senior economist with Compass Lexecon, an economics consulting firm with offices across the United [23] States. His experience includes researching and teaching positions, numerous publications, and trial testimony in state, federal and international courts. He has also provided expert testimony on behalf of the defendants in two ongoing dairy industry antitrust cases. The court finds that for purposes of class certification, Dr. Kalt is qualified to provide an expert opinion. Plaintiffs do not challenge Dr. Kalt's qualifications but point out that he has never opined that a common adverse impact may be shown.

Although Dr. Kalt may be correct in some of his observations, they do not negate the existence of common facts to establish (or not establish) DFA's and DMS's alleged antitrust violations. Notwithstanding the complexities of a particular market, "[n]umerous courts have held that allegations concerning the existence, scope, and efficacy of an alleged antitrust conspiracy present important common questions sufficient to satisfy the commonality requirement of Rule 23(a)(2)." See NASDAQ, 169 F.R.D. at 509 (citing cases); see also In re Visa Check/MasterMoney Antitrust [*265] Litig., 280 F.3d 124, 136 (2d Cir.2001) (affirming district court's determination that common proof could be used to [24] prove antitrust violations); *In re Dynamic Random Access Memory (DRAM) Antitrust Litig., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 39841, 2006 WL 1530166, at 3 (N.D. Cal. June 5, 2006) ("[w]here an antitrust conspiracy has been alleged, courts have consistently held that 'the very nature of a conspiracy antitrust action compels a finding that common questions of law and fact exist.'"); 7A Charles A. Wright, Arthur R. Miller and Mary Kay Kane, Federal Practice & Procedure § 1781, at 228 (3d ed. 2005) (noting that "whether a conspiracy exists is a common question"); 6 Alba Conte & Herbert Newberg, Newberg on Class Actions § 18.28, at 102 (4th ed. 2002) ("As a rule, the allegation of a price-fixing conspiracy is sufficient to establish predominance of common questions.").

Here, Plaintiffs have established that their factual claims against Defendants alleging antitrust violations, and Defendants' denial of those allegations, will be determined by reference to the same body of proof. Plaintiffs have thus satisfied the commonality requirement with regard to establishing the formation, duration and implementation of the alleged conspiracy.

DFA's and DMS's second challenge to commonality—that Plaintiffs cannot and have not shown common adverse [25] impact—has greater traction. An essential element of Plaintiffs' antitrust claims is that the proposed class suffered a common adverse impact from the alleged antitrust violations. See In re Urethane Antitrust Litig., 251 F.R.D. 629, 634 (D. Kan. 2008) (holding that plaintiffs must establish "that the proposed class suffered injury from the alleged antitrust violation—an element commonly called 'impact.'"). This element can be "likened to the causation element in a negligence cause of action. The term means simply that the antitrust violation caused injury to the antitrust plaintiff." Alabama v. Blue Bird Body Co. Inc., 573 F.2d 309, 317 (5th Cir. 1978).

In support of their theory of common adverse impact, Plaintiffs rely heavily upon a handful of documents and witnesses that they claim establish that the conspiracy has lowered milk prices for the entire market and established a uniform milk price for virtually all dairy farmers in Order 1. The stray statements Plaintiffs cite repeatedly in support of these claims are less compelling than Plaintiffs claim and are not an adequate substitute for a cogent theory of common adverse impact. DMS and DMA accurately identify some of the deficiencies [26] in this proof in Defendants' Response to Plaintiffs' Post-Argument Supplemental Memorandum on Class Certification (Doc. 355 at 6-8).[10]

Plaintiffs more significantly rely upon an analysis of common adverse impact performed by their expert witness Dr. Rausser. Dr. Rausser's common adverse impact opinions in this case elude a simple explanation and have evolved significantly in the course of class certification briefing.[11] The court addresses Dr. Rausser's opinions in accordance with the four iterations Plaintiffs have proffered.

In his Initial Declaration dated February 1, 2011, Dr. Rausser opined that there is common impact on all members of the proposed class, and there is a workable methodology for computing class-wide damages. To support these opinions, he advanced a hypothetical "yardstick" for calculating damages using a regional bench mark "likely consisting of Federal Orders 32 and 33." (Doc. 206-1 at 135). He identified certain variables (which could be found in payroll data or data which is publicly available) that [*266] must be considered in determining whether raw Grade A milk prices had been fixed, stabilized or suppressed.[12] "[F]or the purpose of assessing price consistency, [Dr. Rausser] computed the milk price received by individual producers based only on the reported butterfat, protein, and other solids component prices available in the payroll database." (Doc. 206-1 at ¶ 222) (emphasis supplied). Dr. Rausser specifically removed "over order premiums" as part of his price comparison, opining that "[t]he formulaic premiums and deductions that are [28] made available to Northeast farmers . . . are an extremely small part of the overall price and I have seen no evidence to suggest that they are subject to suppression or are in any way different than they would be in the but-for world." (Id. at ¶ 236). Dr. Rausser observed that "the announced over order premiums throughout Order 1 were implemented monthly by GNEMMA,"[13] and that although, to date, there was no evidence that this occurred by common agreement in Order 1, there was "clear evidence" of a "unanimous agreement by all processors" in the Southeast region. (Doc. 206-1 at ¶ 219). At the time of his Initial Declaration, Dr. Rausser's theory of common adverse impact remained largely hypothetical. See id. at ¶ 241 ("Although this data is not yet complete, it is sufficient to establish that a workable methodology can, in fact, be implemented to measure price suppression and calculate class-wide damages.").

[10] For example, Plaintiffs assert that Stephen Pyne, a former mid-level DMS executive, testified that "99% of the members of DFA, Dairylea, and St. Albans receive the same price for their milk as other members of the same cooperative." (Doc. 355 at 6). However, Mr. Pyne's actual testimony was that only 1% of farmers in Dairylea receive "special deals" or preferential treatment when there is no reason to distinguish them from other dairy farmer members.

[11] Dr. Rausser's Initial Declaration filed February 1, 2011 spanned 131 pages and was supported by 115 pages of exhibits. On June 13, 2011, Dr. Rausser submitted a ninety-five page Rebuttal Declaration, with over 700 [27] pages of exhibits. He has since supplemented his Declaration with a sixteen page Supplemental Declaration dated July 15, 2011 with 273 pages of exhibits.

The court cannot rely on the evidence of common adverse impact set forth in Dr. Rausser's Initial Declaration for three reasons. First, as Plaintiffs concede, Dr. Rausser erroneously examined the regulated component prices of raw Grade A milk as the proper unit of price comparison to determine adverse impact. Plaintiffs now claim that the total price of raw Grade A milk [30] is the proper unit of comparison and concede that the regulated components pricing was not impacted by the alleged conspiracy. See Doc. 332-3 at 180; see also Doc. 281-6 (Rausser Dep. at 66-67, 78-80, 206). Second, although Dr. Rausser did not examine the impact of the alleged conspiracy on "over order premiums" other than to note that they appeared to have been artificially reduced by GNEMMA, Plaintiffs allege suppression of "over order premiums" as part of their damages. See Doc. 332-3 at 180 ("Plaintiffs do, however, contend that the over-order premiums they and all other members of the Class received during the class period were suppressed by virtue of defendants' wrongful conduct[.]"). And third, as acknowledged by Dr. Rausser in his Initial Declaration, his theory of common adverse impact was merely in the development stage and was not fully articulated.

The court thus turns to whether Dr. Rausser's opinions as set forth in his Rebuttal Declaration, his Supplemental Declaration, or as described in the class certification hearing advance a theory of common adverse impact that can withstand a "rigorous analysis."

In his June 13, 2011 Rebuttal Declaration, Dr. Rausser responded to [31] Dr. Kalt's opinion that there are too many differences in cooperatives' structures, organization, management, degree of vertical integration, and local conditions to conclude that common proof could establish class-wide victimization of proposed class members in Order 1. He asserted that Dr. Kalt ignores real world facts, exaggerates the individualized nature of the industry, and overemphasizes differences in [*267] price. However, because DFA and DMS have no obligation to proffer a theory of common adverse impact, the court is more concerned with Dr. Rausser's theory of common adverse impact than Dr. Kalt's. Although Dr. Rausser does not concede that he analyzed the wrong component of price, he states:

[12] Some of these variables were identified by Dr. Rausser and include the passage of time and geographic location (to account for structural changes in the relevant market), the regional population under the age of nineteen, the pounds of milk pooled in Order 1, the butterfat percentage [29] of milk, the volume produced per farmer, and Class I utilization rates. At the time of his Initial Declaration, Dr. Rausser's model did "not take into account the potential effect of patronage refunds [which] represent annual credits that cooperatives provide to their members as a means of distributing the cooperative's profits." (Doc. 206-1 at ¶ 242). Dr. Rausser conceded that "[w]hether these 'refunds' can be deemed an additional payment for milk (and thus a potential offset against damages) depends upon the specifics of the program." Id.

[13] DFA and DMS contend that Plaintiffs and Dr. Rausser misunderstands GNEMMA and that the only premium that GNEMMA as a whole sets is the premium to charge customers for rbST-free raw milk. They contend that GNEMMA does not set "over order" premiums across Order 1. (Doc. 281-8 at 12.)

> Dr. Kalt criticized the uniformity analysis presented in my Initial Declaration for focusing on the component prices (butterfat, protein and other solids) that comprise the largest portion of the total payment received by proposed Class members. However, when the entire price is analyzed, rather than merely the components, the conclusion remains the same: prices are highly uniform.

(Doc. 312-1 at 79) (footnote omitted).

Similarly, without disclaiming his previous opinion that premiums paid to [32] farmers did not appear to have been significantly impacted by the alleged conspiracy, Dr. Rausser opined that the suppression of over order premiums was a "facilitating mechanism" that results in common impact. (Id. at 72). Finally, Dr. Rausser stated that "[i]n response to Dr. Kalt's report, I have performed a regression analysis on the farmer payroll data that has been produced in this case in order to demonstrate that these common factors predominate in the pricing of milk in Order 1." (Id. at 92). Dr. Rausser describes his analysis as follows:

> Covering the time period from 2002 to 2010 and using around 530,000 data points, each one corresponding to a farmer's monthly milk deliveries, I have separately investigated the common factor regressions for four different price variables. The four variables are (i) the gross price; (ii) the mailbox price (which is the gross price minus deductions made by the cooperative for haulage and so on); (iii) the standardized gross price (which standardizes farmer's milk to the same percentage of butterfat, protein and other solids); and (iv) the standardized mailbox price (which again standardizes farmer's milk to the same percentage of butterfat, [33] protein and other solids). . . . I have applied the same multivariate economic model to attempt to explain individual variation for each of these four prices, except that, when dealing with the two standardized prices, the model disregards the farmer's component percentages, since this adjustment has already been made. The common factors included in the model for non-standardized prices include:
> • Indicators of farm size in terms of total production (to capture the volume incentives in milk pricing);
> • Input costs due to alfalfa hay and diesel;
> • Butterfat, protein and other solids percentages of the farmer's milk;
> • Demand variables, such as State population, proportion of that population under the age of 19 (as more milk is consumed by children) and State per capita income:
> • The Class I Utilization Rate;
> • Indications of whether or not the farmer produces organic or rBST-free milk;
> • The Natural Agricultural Statistics Services reported prices for butter, cheese, dry whey and non-fat dry milk prices, which are used to set Class milk prices;
> • Cooperative and location indicator variables;
> • Seasonality.

(Id. at 92-93).

In testing the reliability of his multivariate analysis, Dr. Rausser pointed [34] out that "[a]n important determinant of the success of the model is its 'explanatory power' as measured by the R-squared." (Id. at 93). R-squared "is a statistical representation of how much of the variation in prices is accounted for (or 'explained') by the common factors." Id. Dr. Rausser claimed that the "R-squared values for the regressions I have performed range from 89% to 94%." (Id. at 94).

On July 8, 2011, DFA and DMS filed the Reply Report of Dr. Kalt. Dr. Kalt noted that Dr. Rausser had offered a series of new opinions in his Rebuttal Declaration, several of which conflicted with his Initial Declaration. In addition, Dr. Kalt pointed out that Dr. Rausser's analysis now focused on the total price paid to farmers (including the regulated components). Dr. Kalt opined that the proper unit of comparison was the "market [*268] driven premiums," which Dr. Kalt characterized as that portion of the price for raw Grade A milk that was actually responsive to competition and thus susceptible to suppression. Dr. Kalt stressed the fundamental need to focus on the correct unit of comparison and to accurately reflect whether variations in that unit evidenced a common trend.

In response, Dr. Rausser [35] filed a third "Supplemental Declaration" just days before the originally scheduled class certification hearing.[14] In his July 15, 2011 Supplemental Declaration, Dr. Rausser denied that he had offered any new opinions in his Rebuttal Declaration and claimed that he was instead merely correcting Dr. Kalt.[15] Dr. Rausser then proceeded to critique Dr. Kalt's criticism, concluding "Dr. Kalt's approach (relying on univariate analysis, eschewing all price variation as 'too much', and demanding perfection of a price prediction model) would not survive any market or any commodity." (Doc. 332-2 at 17). Dr. Rausser's disclaimer of any new opinions of adverse common impact in his Rebuttal Declaration is problematic because, taken at face value, this would leave the court with the flawed and partially formed opinions in his Initial Declaration. The court thus addresses whether Plaintiffs were able to clarify and reconcile Dr. Rausser's divergent opinions at the class certification hearing.

At the September 26th class certification hearing, Plaintiffs claimed that Dr. Rausser's common impact damages theory had become established proof. Indeed, Plaintffs asserted that "[d]amage results are statistically significant with a 99% confidence level." See Plaintiff's Exhibit 21 (citing Rausser 7/15/11 Supp. Decl. at ¶ 10). Plaintiffs nonetheless acknowledged that Dr. Rausser had started with the wrong unit of comparison and that he had initially opined that suppression would be found in the wrong component of price. See Sept. 26, 2011 Tr.; Doc. 358 at 58-59 ("[Dr.] Rausser started by looking for uniformity in the component price because that's where the suppression was found in the Southeast. Now what he found during that analysis was that the component prices in the Northeast—and, in fact, that's not where the suppression [37] was. The suppression was in the total price, and in particular, in the premiums.").

Moreover, it became clear that Plaintiffs do rely upon the opinions offered by Dr. Rausser in his Rebuttal Declaration as the basis for their theory of common adverse impact. They argue that Dr. Rausser examined over 500,000 data points (data which Dr. Rausser characterizes as "unusually robust"), controlled for the approximately nineteen variables identified in his Rebuttal Declaration, and conducted a "uniformity analysis" to determine variability in prices paid to farmers. They rely on Dr. Rausser's conclusion that although some variability in pricing is inevitable, prices paid to farmers exhibit a high degree of uniformity, and that the coefficient of variation here is "extremely small" relative to "typical price variation found in the academic literature." In doing so, Plaintiffs did not attempt to explain why Dr. Rausser's opinions had changed so significantly, or why he nonetheless maintained that they had not.

At the class certification hearing, DFA and DMS challenged Plaintiffs' theory of common adverse impact on a number of grounds. First, they questioned the reliability of an analysis that [38] initially focused on the wrong unit of comparison. Second, they asserted that because it is undisputed that approximately 85% of milk prices are the product of regulation that ensures uniformity, it is improper to credit this uniformity to the unlawful conspiracy without targeting that portion of the price that at least could be subject to manipulation. If the analysis examines the competitive premiums earned by dairy farmers, they contend that Dr. Rausser's alleged [*269] price uniformity disappears. For example, DFA and DMS point out that from 2002 to 2009, dairy cooperatives operating in Order 1 did not pay uniform premiums to their member dairy farmers, and that not only are premiums not uniform among the alleged coconspirators, they do not even reflect a uniform trend or high correlation. They also argue that there is obvious and substantial geographical dispersion in premiums earned by dairy farmers as evidenced by the counties in which each of the named Plaintiffs are located. They challenge Dr. Rausser's opinion that a 42 cent per cwt difference in premiums is "quite modest" when there is evidence that a 15 cent pay price difference is enough to cause a cooperative to lose or gain [39] members.

[14] At the parties' request, the class certification hearing was postponed twice.

[15] See Doc. 332-2 at 3 ("In his latest report, Dr. Kalt purports to be responding to 'new' analyses appearing four weeks earlier in [36] my rebuttal declaration. This characterization is incorrect. Each and every one of the analyses in my rebuttal was a direct response to a critique advanced by Dr. Kalt in his initial report, and the large majority of them were devoted to correcting Dr. Kalt's own analyses and demonstrating that those analyses (once corrected) do not support his conclusions.").

With regard to processing plant prices, DFA and DMS argue that Dr. Rausser's data shows variability, not uniformity. Examining prices paid by DMS's plants with those owned by alleged coconspirators and other "fringe" processors, they assert that there are variations as much as $3.00 per cwt.

Finally, DFA and DMS pointed out that any analysis of price suppression is further complicated by the fact that DMS had a significantly lower market share in 2002 and 2003 before St. Albans and Land O'Lakes became affiliated with it, GNEMMA was not created until 2006, and, according to Plaintiffs' own responses to discovery, the members of the alleged conspiracy changed significantly over time which, if Plaintiffs are correct in their allegations, should have had a corresponding impact on prices which Plaintiffs have failed to demonstrate.

Plaintiffs sought to rebut Defendants' challenges by arguing: (1) the vast majority of the raw Grade A milk in Order 1 is supplied through the conspiracy (assuming one accepts Plaintiffs' definition of the multi-membered conspiracy); (2) 80% of processing plant capacity is primarily supplied by conspirators (again, same caveat); (3) 82% of non-pool capacity [40] is primarily supplied by conspirators (same caveat); (4) it is very common in conspiracies for the operations of coconspirators to be unevenly distributed in the relevant market; (5) in most counties, there are zero or one processing facility that is not owned or supplied predominately or exclusively by the coconspirators (same caveat); and (6) the fact that there are county-by-county differences in processors is legally and factually irrelevant, even though Plaintiffs concede that one of their claims is that the conspiracy controlled dairy farmers' access to processing plants.

The parties' competing arguments arguably require the court to delve into the merits of many of Plaintiffs' complex and multi-dimensional allegations regarding how, when, and where the alleged conspiracy operated because Plaintiffs depend upon these allegations in claiming a common adverse impact. Here, the court need not engage in this arduous task because it is confronted with a clear failure of proof.

The Second Circuit has cautioned that Rule 23(a)'s requirements cannot be satisfied by "some showing" based upon an expert report that is not "fundamentally flawed." See IPO, 471 F.3d at 40 ("[W]e can no longer [41] continue to advise district courts that 'some showing' of meeting Rule 23 requirements will suffice . . . or that an expert's report will sustain a plaintiff's burden so long as it is not 'fatally flawed[.]"). Instead, Plaintiffs must adduce "significant proof" of common impact that will withstand a "rigorous analysis." Id. at 33, 42; Falcon, 457 U.S. at 160. For the following reasons, Plaintiffs have not sustained this burden.[16]

First, although Plaintiffs concede that their expert focused on the wrong component of price, erroneously opined that the impact of the alleged conspiracy would be found in the component pricing, and disclaimed any significant impact of the conspiracy on premiums paid to farmers, Dr. Rausser has repeatedly stated that he has not abandoned the opinions he articulated in his Initial Declaration. Accordingly, Plaintiffs and their expert either have a significant difference of [*270] opinion regarding critical components of Plaintiffs' theory of common adverse impact or the court [42] must rely on Dr. Rausser's fundamentally flawed Initial Declaration. See IPO, 471 F.3d at 36 (noting that the Second Circuit has upheld denial of class certification where the expert's opinion was "fundamentally flawed"). If there is a third alternative, Plaintiffs have not identified it.

Second, the court remains unconvinced that the total price of milk is what must be examined to determine whether prices have been adversely impacted by the alleged conspiracy.[17] As Dr. Rausser concedes, prices for raw Grade A milk in Order 1 exhibit a high degree of uniformity for reasons that have nothing to do with the alleged conspiracy. See Doc. 312-1 at 98 ("In conclusion, milk pricing in Order 1 is highly uniform due to both the homogeneous nature of the product and the regulated structure of the industry."). To focus solely on total price may thus reflect a uniformity that is largely the product of regulation, and not necessarily the product of a conspiracy to suppress prices. Dr. Kalt opines that Dr. Rausser has examined the wrong component of price and that any analysis of common adverse impact must focus on the market driven premiums. In response to this criticism, Plaintiffs assert that "[a]s [43] Dr. Rausser has made clear, even when the regression analysis focuses on the 'total price paid minus the Federal Order Uniform Price,' its explanatory power 'is still extremely high by professional standards.'" (Doc. 357 at 7 (citing Rausser July 15, 2011 Supplemental Decl. ¶ 9 and n. 14; Plaintiffs' Reply Memorandum at 10 (citing Reference Manual on Scientific Evidence (2d ed.) (Federal Judicial Center, 2000)). However, this is yet another opinion by Dr. Rausser that leaves in question the proper unit of comparison.

[16] The court does not regard this observation as a conclusive determination of the merits of Plaintiffs' causation and damages theory. See Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacquelin, 417 U.S. 156, 177, 94 S. Ct. 2140, 40 L. Ed. 2d 732 (1974).

[17] The court acknowledges that Plaintiffs need not prove their entire case to the court in order to obtain class certification, however, they must show that "whatever underlying facts are relevant to a particular Rule 23 requirement have been established[.]" IPO, 471 F.3d at 41.

Third, because one of the central tenets of Plaintiffs' claims is that the alleged conspiracy controlled dairy farmers' access to processing plants, forcing them to join cooperatives against their will in order to gain access to those plants, Plaintiffs should be expected to set forth a theory of common adverse impact that takes into consideration the existence or non-existence of non-conspirator [44] processing plants. Dr. Rausser's Initial Declaration did not address this variable and Plaintiffs, themselves, appear to address it only as an afterthought. See Doc. 354 at 10 ("Moreover, the only factor even hypothesized by Defendants as potentially biasing the result (the presence of non-conspirator processors in a county) can easily be accounted for in the regression and has no relevant impact on the results.") (citing Rausser July 15, 2011 Supplemental Decl. at ¶¶ 5, 12 & n.19).

Finally, neither Plaintiffs nor Dr. Rausser adequately address whether the final iteration of their theory of common adverse impact reflects the return on investment some dairy farmers may experience through joining cooperatives that own their own processing plants and return profits to their members based upon processing activities. DFA and DMS characterize this variable as dairy farmers who "benefited . . . or broken even" (Doc. 281-8 at 8) from the alleged price suppression.[18]

[*271] In response, Plaintiffs argue that they need only demonstrate that a common injury occurred, not the amount of injury suffered by each class member. See [In re Urethane Antitrust Litig., 251 F.R.D. at 638] (in deciding class certification motion, "the issue in the common impact analysis is the fact, [46] not the amount of, injury.") (quoting [In re Potash Antitrust Litig., 159 F.R.D. 682, 694 (D. Minn. 1995))]. They further argue that whether some members of the proposed class may have received some benefit from a particular anticompetitive activity is factually and legally irrelevant. However, the court's concern is more subtle. A central tenet of Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint is that "[t]hrough acquisitions, mergers, supply agreements and closures of competitors' processing plants, Defendants secured control of the raw Grade A milk processing market in the Northeast" in order to "force independent dairy cooperatives and independent dairy farmers to join DFA or market their milk through DMS." (Doc. 117 at ¶ 84). Through Dr. Rausser, Plaintiffs proffer a regression analysis which they claim controls for all of the variables that may affect price. They further assert that they have gone beyond theory to established proof, and that "[d]amage results are statistically significant with a 99% confidence level." See Plaintiff's Exhibit 21. Dr. Rausser's formula, however, does not appear to account for any difference in the impact the alleged conspiracy may have had on dairy farmers whose cooperatives [47] own their own processing plants versus dairy farmers whose cooperatives do not. In his Initial Declaration, Dr. Rausser recognized that profits distributed to cooperative members may be important in analyzing "price" but noted that his model did not take this into consideration. See

[18] DFA and DMS more specifically describe the issue as follows:

> Moreover, the very economic theory of Plaintiffs' case precludes any claim of commonality. Plaintiffs insist that the suppression of farmers' prices resulted in supra-competitive [45] profits for conspiring milk processors—by paying less for raw milk, processors were able to increase their margins and profits. But there are thousands of putative class members—e.g., the farmers who belong to the Agri-Mark coop in Vermont, and to the Upstate/Niagara coop in New York—whose cooperatives own their own milk processing plants, such that whatever profits those plants generate are returned to the coops' dairy farmer members. Depending on the extent to which their coops are vertically integrated into owning plants, these farmers would have benefited from the price suppression alleged by Plaintiffs (e.g., if their coops are net buyers of raw milk), or broken even (e.g., if their coops simply processed the milk produced by their farmers). Only by examining these farmers' individual circumstances can the impact of alleged antitrust violations, if any, be determined.

(Doc. 281-8 at 8).

Doc. 206-1 at ¶ 242. His subsequent opinions also do not appear to adequately reflect this variable. It thus seems premature to declare Plaintiffs' theory of common adverse impact not only finalized but conclusively proven.

In summary, although Dr. Rausser's multivariate regression analysis may ultimately prove to be an acceptable means of analyzing causation and damages in this case, the court cannot find it is presently sufficient to perform this task because too many uncertainties remain regarding what component of price is being analyzed and how. For purposes of class certification, the court thus finds that under Rule 23(a)(2), Plaintiffs have not sustained their burden of proffering "significant proof" that causation and damages may be established by common proof. See Falcon, 457 U.S. at 160 (class certification requires "significant proof" in support of generalized claims).

Whether, at this stage of [48] the proceedings, Plaintiffs can ultimately prove common impact through Dr. Rausser's regression analysis does not end the court's class certification inquiry. The court has previously found that Plaintiffs' allegations regarding the conspiracy's formation, participants, duration and implementation are likely to be demonstrated by common proof. See NASDAQ, 169 F.R.D. at 509. Rule 23(a)(2) requires only that there be "questions of law or fact common to the class." "This requirement is not quantitative in nature; that is, it is possible to satisfy Rule 23(a)(2) where only a single issue is common to the members of the proposed class, as long as resolution of that issue will advance the litigation." Shakhnes ex rel. Shakhnes v. Eggleston, 740 F. Supp. 2d 602, 624-25 (S.D.N.Y. 2010). Here, there are sufficient common questions of fact and law to satisfy the requirements of Rules 23(a)(2).

The court, sua sponte, noted the possibility of certifying some, but not all issues, for resolution on a class action basis. See Nassau Cnty. Strip Search Cases, 461 F.3d 219, 226 (2d Cir. 2006) (holding a district court may certify a class as to specific issues even if it cannot do so with regard to the [49] entire claim); see also MANUAL FOR COMPLEX LITIGATION (Fourth) § 21.24 (issue classes "may enable a court to achieve economies of class action treatment for a portion of a case, the rest of which may either not qualify under Rule 23(a) or may be unmanageable as a class action."). Both parties, however, ask the court not to certify the class only as to certain issues as this may create more issues than it resolves. See McLaughlin v. Am. Tobacco Co., 522 F.3d 215, 234 (2d Cir. 2008) ("[I]n this case, given the number of questions that would remain for individual adjudication, issue certification would not reduce [*272] the range of issues in dispute and promote judicial economy.") (internal quotations and citation omitted), abrogated in part by Bridge v. Phoenix Bond & Indem. Co., 553 U.S. 639, 128 S. Ct. 2131, 170 L. Ed. 2d 1012 (2008). The court is thus left with the conclusion that while Plaintiffs have satisfied the commonality requirement with regard to the conspiracy's formation, duration and implementation, class certification on those issues is not requested.

In the event Plaintiffs seek to re-file their motion for class certification at a later date and to facilitate appellate review, the court addresses the remaining Rule 23(a) [50] requirements.

Typicality

Rule 23(a)(3) requires Plaintiffs' claims to be "typical" of the class. This requirement is satisfied when "each class member's claim arises from the same course of events and each class member makes similar legal arguments to prove the defendant's liability." In re Flag Telecom Holdings, Ltd. Secs. Litig., 574 F.3d 29, 35 (2d Cir. 2009) (citation and quotation marks omitted).

"[C]laims in antitrust price-fixing cases generally satisfy Rule 23(a)(3)'s typicality requirement" because typicality "in the antitrust context will be established by plaintiffs and all class members alleging the same antitrust violations by the defendants." In re Playmobil Antitrust Litig., 35 F. Supp. 2d 231, 241 (E.D.N.Y. 1998) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). Accordingly, "[w]hen it is alleged that the same unlawful conduct was directed at or affected both the named plaintiff and the class sought to be represented, the typicality requirement is usually met irrespective of minor variations in the fact patterns underlying individual claims." Robidoux v. Celani, 987 F.2d 931, 936-37 (2d Cir. 1993). "Sometimes the issues are plain enough from the pleadings to determine whether [51] the interests of the absent parties are fairly encompassed within the named plaintiff's claim, and sometimes it may be necessary for the court to probe behind the pleadings before coming to rest on the certification question." Falcon, 457 U.S. at 160.

Here, Plaintiffs' proposed class representatives are all dairy farmers who have produced and pooled raw Grade A milk in Order 1 at some point during the alleged conspiracy. For purposes of typicality, the named Plaintiffs and the proposed class share a common interest in establishing that DFA and DMS committed the alleged antitrust violations, even if some members of the proposed class do not object to those activities. See Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacquelin, 391 F.2d at 562 (lack of opposition to defendant's practices from some class members is irrelevant to class certification); Jacobi v. Bache & Co., Inc., 1972 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15192, 1972 WL 560, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 8, 1972) (because the "object of an anti-trust action is the restoration of competition to the industry involved: the fact that some members of the class may differ as to the desirability of a particular remedy for the anti-trust violation, or even desire the maintenance of the status quo" does not prevent [52] class certification); In re New Motor Vehicles Canadian Export Antitrust Litig., 235 F.R.D. 127, 141 n.49 (D. Me. 2006) (instructing court to certify class despite "disapproval of the action by some class members"). It is thus well-established that "differing fact situations of class members do not defeat typicality under Rule 23(a)(3) so long as the claims of the class representative and class members are based on the same legal or remedial theory." Adamson v. Bowen, 855 F.2d 668, 676 (10th Cir. 1988).

Plaintiffs' claims in this case thus meet the typicality requirement of Rule 23(a)(3) to the extent they address the formation, duration, and implementation of the alleged conspiracy. The court does not, at this time, find that Plaintiffs' causation and damages claims meet the typicality requirement as it has found insufficient proof of a theory of common adverse impact.

Adequacy

Rule 23(a)'s adequacy requirement asks whether the class representatives will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class. "Two factors generally inform whether class representatives satisfy the Rule 23(a)(4) requirement: "(1) absence of conflict and (2) assurance of vigorous prosecution." Robinson v. Metro-North Commuter [*273] R.R. Co., 267 F.3d 147, 170 (2d Cir. 2001) [53] (quoting 1 Herbert B. Newberg & Alba Conte, Newberg on Class Actions, § 3.22, at 3-126 (3d ed. 1992)); see also Denney v. Deutsche Bank AG, 443 F.3d 253, 268 (2d Cir. 2006) ("Adequacy is twofold: the proposed class representative must have an interest in vigorously pursuing the claims of the class, and must have no interests antagonistic to the interests of other class members."). This inquiry focuses on "uncovering 'conflicts of interest between named parties and the class they seek to represent.'" Flag, 574 F.3d at 35 (quoting Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 625, 117 S. Ct. 2231, 138 L. Ed. 2d 689 (1997)).

A conflict must be "fundamental" to violate Rule 23(a)(4). See Flag, 574 F.3d at 35; Pickett v. Iowa Beef Processors, 209 F.3d 1276, 1280 (11th Cir. 2000) (quoting 7A CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT & ARTHUR R. MILLER, FEDERAL PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE § 1768 (2d ed. 1986) ("It is axiomatic that a putative representative cannot adequately protect the class if his interests are antagonistic to or in conflict with the objectives of those he purports to represent."). In instances when a fundamental conflict does exist, the court may cure the conflict by dividing the class into separate "homogenous subclasses . . . with [54] separate representation to eliminate conflicting interests of counsel." Ortiz v. Fibreboard Corp., 527 U.S. 815, 856, 119 S. Ct. 2295, 144 L. Ed. 2d 715 (1999); see also In re Literary Works in Elec. Databases Copyright Litig., 654 F.3d 242, 249-50 (2d Cir. 2011) (same).

DFA and DMS characterize the potential subclasses in this case as follows:

> [F]armers who belong to cooperatives associated with [DMS]; the farmers who have joined cooperatives with no association with DMS (such as Lanco, Fingerlakes Cooperative, and Producers Cooperative); the farmers who have chosen not to join any cooperative, but who market their milk independently to plants that have no connection to DMS; the farmers who have chosen to join cooperatives (such as Agri-Mark and Upstate Niagara) that have invested heavily in milk processing plants (the beneficiaries of any allegedly lower prices for raw milk); and the farmers who have chosen to join cooperatives (such as Dairylea) that have minimal, if any, investment in plants.

(Doc. 281-8 at 6). Although DFA and DMS correctly assert that these subgroups of dairy farmers do not share identical interests in the litigation, the only conflict they identify is between farmers who are part of DMS and farmers [55] who are not. See Doc. 281-8 at 7 ("It could not be clearer that the farmers who ultimately own, fund and support DMS have fundamentally different interests than those outside of DMS who would like to take opportunities, customers, and dollars away from them.").

As they further point out, however, because Plaintiffs seek not only a significant damages award against DFA and DMS, but ask the court to grant injunctive relief that would fundamentally alter how those entities do business, there is also a potential conflict between those who support and benefit from the activities of DFA and DMS, and those who do not.[19] In support of this claim, DFA and DMS have filed sworn declarations from nearly two dozen dairy farmers who assert that because they use DMS to bring their milk to market and seek to continue to do so, their interests are not aligned with dairy farmers who do not. These dairy farmers oppose both this lawsuit and the relief that it requests.[20] DFA and DMS cite Pickett as instructive of how this conflict must be resolved.

In Pickett, the trial court certified a class which included all cattle producers who sold feed cattle to the defendants on the spot [*274] market, as well as all cattle producers who have or previously had contracts and marketing agreements with the defendants. The plaintiffs in Pickett alleged that the contracts and marketing agreements allowed defendants to "depress the market at strategic times in order to force producers to accept artificially low prices[.]" Id. at 1278. In reversing the certification decision, the Eleventh Circuit concluded that the adequacy requirement of Rule 23(a)(4) was not satisfied because of a conflict within the class. See id. at 1280 ("Thus, a class cannot be certified when its members have opposing interests or when it consists of [57] members who benefit from the same acts alleged to be harmful to other members of the class."). The Eleventh Circuit further observed that the plaintiffs sought injunctive relief which would have prohibited defendants from using purchasing arrangements in the future, thereby imposing a restriction on the way defendants conducted business. Id. The court concluded that "under these circumstances, the [p]laintiff's could not possibly provide adequate representation" to the class as whole. Id.[21]

In this case, Plaintiffs seek monetary relief which, if awarded, must be paid by DFA and DMS and, in turn, paid to some extent by their members. Plaintiffs further seek injunctive relief that will materially transform the manner in which DFA and DMS do business.[22] As a result, DFA's and DMS's members may suffer harm which will not be shared by each of the proposed class representatives.

[19] Plaintiffs assert that the facts before the court are no different than those considered by the court when it certified a settlement class for the purposes [56] of the Dean Settlement. However, no member of the Dean Settlement Class could be said to occupy the status of both plaintiff and quasi-defendant. Here, individual dairy farmers including dairy farmer members of DMS would be pursuing relief against dairy farmer-owned DMS.

[20] With regard to the Dean Settlement, only a few dairy farmers opposed Dean's proposal to pay $30 million in order to settle all claims against it in this lawsuit.

[21] As Plaintiffs point out, on remand in Pickett, the District Court certified a narrower class than that proposed by the plaintiffs to address the conflict. *Pickett v. IBP, Inc., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22453, 2001 WL 34886460 at, 10-11 (M.D. Ala. Dec. 26, 2001). A similar result is warranted here.

[22] As the court in Southeastern Milk found, Plaintiffs' [58] challenges to DFA's full supply agreements pose a clear conflict because "injunctive relief preventing DFA and other Defendants from entering into full supply agreements is something at the very heart of plaintiffs' claims," and yet some DFA farmers claim "[t]he DFA supply agreements at issue in this case have guaranteed farmers a stable, secure and needed market for their raw milk, something especially essential to staying in business, especially for farmers in surplus areas and small farmers." *Se. Milk, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 83196, 2011 WL 3205798, at 3-4.

Contrary to Plaintiffs' assertions, it is not enough to assume that all members of the class will ultimately benefit if the practices in Order 1 are materially altered. Certainly those members of DFA and DMS who contend that their organizations engage in lawful and beneficial activities on their behalf cannot be said to have their interests adequately represented by parties that seek to financially recover from, punish, and prohibit those very same activities.

Pursuant to Rule 23(a)(4), the named plaintiffs must "possess the same interest[s] and suffer the same injur[ies] as the class members." Amchem, 521 U.S. at 625-26 (quoting E. Tex. Motor Freight Sys., Inc. v. Rodriguez, 431 U.S. 395, 403, 97 S. Ct. 1891, 52 L. Ed. 2d 453 (1977)). [59] Here, the interests of the class clearly diverge, and the proposed class representatives cannot adequately represent all members of the class. There is thus a fundamental conflict within the proposed class created by Plaintiffs' request for injunctive and monetary relief which will adversely impact members of DFA and DMS while benefitting other members of the proposed class.[23]

Finding a fundamental conflict with regard to both the monetary and injunctive relief sought, the court must determine whether any conflict may be addressed by certifying subclasses as opposed to denying class certification [60] entirely. In this case, adequacy of representation may be accomplished by certifying subclasses that consist of dairy farmers: (1) who belong to DFA and DMS; and (2) those who do not, with "separate representation [*275] [for each subclass] to eliminate conflicting interests of counsel." Literary Works in Elec. Databases Copyright Litig., 654 F.3d at 249-50; see also *Johnson, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 131701, 2011 WL 3876531, at 4. As the Amended Complaint does not seek monetary or injunctive relief against alleged coconspirators who are not defendants in this lawsuit, no further subclasses appear to be warranted.

Having determined that a condition precedent to class certification is the creation of a subclass with separate counsel, the court proceeds no further in analyzing whether Rule 23(a)(4)'s remaining requirements have been satisfied.

The court also does not determine whether Rule 23(b)'s requirement that common questions of law and fact predominate over individual questions have been met. Such an analysis would be premature in light of the court's denial of class certification on Rule 23(a)(2) grounds.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the court DENIES WITHOUT PREJUDICE Plaintiffs' motion for class certification [61] (Doc. 206).

[23] The court in Southeastern Milk properly framed (and answered) the dispositive question as follows:

> Is there proof that the interests of the nominal plaintiffs are in conflict with, or antagonistic to, the interests of the DFA members of the class? In other words, are DFA members of the class entitled to class representatives who share their interests when making decisions about whether to invalidate business practices and seek a money judgment from the cooperative? On the current state of the record, the Court concludes that the answer to both question is "yes."

HN6[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The doctrine of state-action immunity protects the states from liability under the federal antitrust laws. Relying on principles of federalism, the United States Supreme Court has refused to find in the antitrust laws an unexpressed purpose to nullify a state's control over its officers and agents. The same protection does not, however, extend automatically to municipalities or political subdivisions of the states. Political subdivisions are not themselves sovereign; they do not receive all the federal deference of the states that create them. But because political subdivisions are instrumentalities of the state, they may under some circumstances be entitled to state-action immunity. Thus, a political subdivision enjoys state-action immunity if it shows that, through statutes, the state generally authorizes it to perform the challenged action and that, through statutes, the state has clearly articulated a state policy authorizing anticompetitive conduct.

The requirement of a clearly articulated state policy for purposes of state-action immunity and federal antitrust law, does not require the state legislature to expressly state in a statute or its legislative history that the legislature intends for the delegated action to have anticompetitive effects. Instead, it is enough that such anticompetitive conduct is a "foreseeable result" of the legislation. And, "foreseeable anticompetitive effect" need not be one that ordinarily occurs, routinely occurs, or is inherently likely to occur as a result of the empowering legislation. The clear-articulation standard requires only that the anticompetitive conduct be reasonably anticipated.

In 1941, the Georgia legislature enacted the Hospital Authorities Law, 1941 Ga. Laws 241 (codified as amended at O.C.G.A. § 31-7-70 et seq.). That statute creates a hospital authority, "a public body corporate and politic," for each city and county, O.C.G.A. § 31-7-72(a), or for multiple cities or counties combined, id. § 31-7-72(d). The hospital authority does not become operative, however, unless the governing body of the city or county determines that the authority is needed for the delivery of hospital services. Id. § 31-7-72(a). [3] Once such need is determined, the governing body appoints between five and nine individuals to manage the authority. Id.

Each authority is given broad powers to meet the public health needs of its community. Among those specified by the statute are the powers to "operate projects," id. § 31-7-75(4), which include hospitals, clinics, nursing homes, and other public health facilities, id. § 31-7-71(5);[1] to "acquire by purchase, lease, or otherwise . . . projects," id. § 31-7-75(4); to "construct, reconstruct, improve, alter, and repair projects," id. § 31-7-75(5); to "lease . . . for operation by others any project," id. § 31-7-75(7); to "establish rates and charges for the services and use of the facilities of the authority," id. § 31-7-75(10); to "exchange, transfer, assign, pledge, mortgage, or dispose of any real or personal property or interest therein," id. § 31-7-75(14); and to "form and operate, either directly or indirectly, one or more networks of hospitals, physicians, and other health care providers and to arrange for the provision of health care services through such networks," id. § 31-7-75(27).

The statute also grants the authorities more general powers to "make plans for unmet needs of their respective communities," id. § 31-7-75(22), to "make and execute contracts and other instruments necessary to exercise the[ir] powers," id. § 31-7-75(3), and to "exercise any or all powers now or hereafter possessed by private corporations performing similar functions," id. § 31-7-75(21). And, the statute makes clear, these enumerated powers—broad as

In 1941, the City of Albany and Dougherty County (in which the City is located) determined the need for a hospital authority in Dougherty County and established the Hospital Authority of Albany-Dougherty County (the "Authority"). After it was formed, the Authority acquired Phoebe Putney Memorial Hospital in Albany ("Memorial"). Until 1990, the Authority operated Memorial. That year, however, the Authority [6] exercised its § 31-7-75(7) power to lease the facility for operation by others; to such end, it formed two nonprofit corporations, Phoebe Putney Health System, Inc. ("PPHS") and, as a PPHS subsidiary, Phoebe Putney Memorial Hospital, Inc. ("PPMH"), and leased Memorial to PPMH.[4] Since 1990, PPMH has been operating the hospital.

PPMH's lease gives it the right to set the prices for the services Memorial provides. In exercising such right, however, PPMH is subject to the Hospital Authorities Law's proscription against charging prices greater than necessary to cover the cost of the services and provide reasonable reserves. See id. § 31-7-77.

Memorial consists of 443 beds and offers, among other things, a full range of inpatient general acute-care services. Memorial's (and thus PPHS's and PPMH's) only real competitor is Palmyra Park Hospital, Inc. ("Palmyra"), a subsidiary of HCA, Inc. established in Albany in 1971.[5] Palmyra consists of 248 beds and provides essentially the [7] same services as Memorial. Memorial controls 75 percent and Palmyra 11 percent of their geographic market.[6]

In December 2010, PPHS presented the Authority with a plan to acquire Palmyra's assets, i.e., the Palmyra hospital facility, with funds provided by PPHS[7] and to lease such assets to PPHS or a nonprofit PPHS subsidiary. The terms of the lease would be essentially the same as the Authority's PPMH lease.[8] The Authority approved [*1374] the plan to the extent that it called for the purchase of the Palmyra hospital and its temporary management by a

[2] Each authority's exercise of these powers, however, is generally limited to its own city or county, or, under limited circumstances, only slightly beyond those boundaries. The statute defines an authority's "[a]rea of operation" as "the area within the city or county activating an authority," as well as "any other city or county in which the authority wishes to operate, provided the governing authorities and the board of any hospital authorities of such city and county request or approve such operation." Id. § 31-7-71(1). And the statute's definition [5] of "project" suggests that an operation qualifies as a project only if it falls within the city or county in which the authority is located, within the authority's area of operation, or within a city or county whose governing bodies and hospital authority have approved the project. See id. § 31-7-71(5). An authority in a low-population county, however, may locate a project in a county contiguous to its area of operation. Id. § 31-7-89.1(d). The statute also sometimes allows projects as far as 12 miles from the city or county in which an authority is located. Id. § 31-7-72(f).

[3] The facts set out in subpart B are as reflected in the complaint in this case and are not materially disputed. In reciting the provisions of the Hospital Authorities Law we took judicial notice of such provisions.

[4] The Authority's contractual arrangement with PPMH and PPHS provides that, upon the termination or expiration of the lease to PPMH, both PPMH and PPHS are to be dissolved and their assets are to revert to the Authority.

[5] HCA, Inc. is a for-profit corporation that operates hospitals in twenty states.

[6] The geographic market for Memorial and Palmyra consists of Dougherty and five surrounding counties.

[7] PPHS would provide $195 million, and the Authority would use such funds to purchase Palmyra's assets. If the plan were not carried to fruition, PPHS would pay HCA, Inc. a fee of $35 million.

[8] The plan called for the cancellation of PPMH's Memorial lease and the execution of an instrument under which the Authority would lease both Memorial [8] and Palmyra to PPHS or a PPHS subsidiary for a term of 40 years. Prior to the execution of this lease, the Authority would contract with a newly organized PPHS subsidiary, Phoebe North, Inc., to operate Palmyra.

subsidiary to be established by PPHS. In April 2011, the Authority approved the terms of the proposed lease to PPHS or its subsidiary.

II.

On April 19, 2011, the Federal Trade Commission (the "Commission") initiated an administrative proceeding to determine whether the Authority's purchase of Palmyra and subsequent lease to PPHS, or a PPHS subsidiary, would substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in the inpatient general acute-care hospital services market in Dougherty County and surrounding areas (the "relevant market") in violation of section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18. See 15 U.S.C. § 21(a) (granting the Commission authority to enforce section 7 of the Clayton Act). Section 7 provides that HN1[] "no person subject to the jurisdiction of the [Commission] shall acquire . . . the assets of another . . . where . . . the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly." 15 U.S.C. § 18. According to the Commission, the proceeding was to be held in September 2011. If a section 7 violation were to be found, the Commission would issue [9] a cease and desist order to prevent the Authority going forward with the plan to acquire the Palmyra hospital facility. The order would be subject to review in this court. 15 U.S.C. § 45(c) (HN2[] "Any person, partnership, or corporation required by an order of the Commission to cease and desist . . . may obtain a review of such order in the [appropriate circuit] court of appeals of the United States.").

To prevent the consummation of the plan prior to the completion of the administrative proceeding, FTC v. Univ. Health, Inc., 938 F.2d 1206, 1217 n.23 (11th Cir. 1991) ("[O]nce an anticompetitive acquisition is consummated, it is difficult to 'unscramble the egg.'"), the Commission brought this action, on April 20, 2011, to obtain a preliminary injunction against the Authority, PPHS, PPMH, HCA, Inc., and Palmyra (collectively "Appellees"). See 15 U.S.C. § 53(b) (HN3[] "Whenever the Commission has reason to believe (1) that any person, partnership, or corporation is violating, or is about to violate [section 7] . . . the Commission . . . may bring suit in a district court of the United States to enjoin any such act."). In order to demonstrate its likelihood of prevailing on the merits,[9] the Commission [10] alleged that the Authority's purchase of Palmyra would create a monopoly in the relevant market.

The Appellees, in response, moved the district court to dismiss the Commission's complaint under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim. They did not contest the Commission's claim that the acquisition of Palmyra and effective merger of Palmyra and Memorial would tend to create, if not actually create, a monopoly in the relevant market. Instead, they asserted that the "state-action doctrine" immunized the Authority and its operation of the two hospitals under the planned arrangement with PPHS from antitrust liability. The district court agreed that the Authority, PPHS, and PPMH were entitled to such immunity and dismissed [*1375] the Commission's complaint with prejudice. The Commission now appeals.

III.

HN5[] We review [11] de novo a district court's order dismissing a complaint under Rule 12(b)(6). Speaker v. U.S. Dep't of Health & Human Servs. Ctrs. for Disease Control & Prevention, 623 F.3d 1371, 1379 (11th Cir. 2010). We "accept[] the factual allegations in the complaint as true and construe[] them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff," id.; we are not, however, "bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation," Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 1965, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (quoting Papasan v. Allain, 478 U.S. 265, 286, 106 S. Ct. 2932, 2944, 92 L. Ed. 2d 209 (1986)).

We agree with the Commission that, on the facts alleged, the joint operation of Memorial and Palmyra would substantially lessen competition or tend to create, if not create, a monopoly. The question, then, is whether this anticompetitive conduct is immunized by the state-action doctrine.

[9] HN4[] Section 13(b) of the Federal Trade Commission Act allows courts to grant a preliminary injunction against defendants in an action brought by the Commission provided there is a "proper showing that, weighing the equities and considering the Commission's likelihood of ultimate success, [granting the injunction] would be in the public interest." 15 U.S.C. § 53(b).

HN6[] The doctrine of state-action immunity protects the states from liability under the federal antitrust laws. In Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943), the Supreme Court held that the Sherman Act did not subject the states to liability for anticompetitive conduct [12] within their jurisdiction. Id. at 352, 63 S. Ct. at 314. Relying on principles of federalism, the Court refused to find in the antitrust laws "an unexpressed purpose to nullify a state's control over its officers and agents." Id. at 351, 63 S. Ct. at 313.

The same protection does not, however, extend automatically to municipalities or political subdivisions of the states. Political subdivisions, as the Supreme Court has explained, "are not themselves sovereign; they do not receive all the federal deference of the States that create them." City of Lafayette v. La. Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 412, 98 S. Ct. 1123, 1136, 55 L. Ed. 2d 364 (1978) (plurality opinion). But because political subdivisions are "instrumentalities of the State," id. at 413, 98 S. Ct. at 1137 (quoting Louisiana ex rel. Folsom v. Mayor of New Orleans, 109 U.S. 285, 287, 3 S. Ct. 211, 213, 27 L. Ed. 936 (1883)), they may under some circumstances be entitled to state-action immunity. Thus, a political subdivision, like the Authority,[10] enjoys state-action immunity if it shows that, "through statutes, the state generally authorizes [it] to perform the challenged action" and that, "through statutes, the state has [13] clearly articulated a state policy authorizing anticompetitive conduct." FTC v. Hosp. Bd. of Dirs. of Lee Cnty., 38 F.3d 1184, 1187-88 (11th Cir. 1994) (citing Town of Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 105 S. Ct. 1713, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24 (1985)).

HN7[] The requirement of a clearly articulated state policy, as the Supreme Court explained in Town of Hallie, does not require the state legislature to "expressly state in a statute or its legislative history that the legislature intends for the delegated action to have anticompetitive effects." 471 U.S. at 43, 105 S. Ct. at 1719. Instead, it is enough that such anticompetitive conduct is a "foreseeable result" of the legislation. Id. at 42, S. Ct. at 1718. And, as we explained in Lee County, a "foreseeable anticompetitive effect" need not be "one that ordinarily occurs, [*1376] routinely occurs, or is inherently likely to occur as a result of the [14] empowering legislation." 38 F.3d at 1188. The clear-articulation standard "require[s] only that the anticompetitive conduct be reasonably anticipated." Id. at 1190-91.

B.

The Authority's immunity therefore turns on whether the state has authorized the Authority's acquisition[11] of Palmyra and, in doing so, clearly articulated a policy to displace competition.[12] See Town of Hallie, 471 U.S. at 40, 105 S. Ct. at 1717. That standard, as explained above, is satisfied as long as anticompetitive consequences were a

---

[10] We held in Crosby v. Hospital Authority of Valdosta and Lowndes County, 93 F.3d 1515 (11th Cir. 1996), that a hospital authority created by the Georgia Hospital Authorities Law, O.C.G.A. § 31-7-70 et seq., was, for purposes of state-action immunity, a political subdivision of the state. 93 F.3d at 1525.

[11] For purposes of our state-action analysis, we consider all the anticipated stages of the plan approved by the Authority—the purchase of Palmyra's assets, as well as their temporary management by, and subsequent lease to, PPHS or a PPHS subsidiary—as parts of a single "acquisition" under the Clayton Act.

[12] The Commission would have us approach the state-action issue differently. It argues that this case involves no "genuine state action" at all. Appellant's Br. 24. According to the Commission, the challenged plan is, in substance, a transfer of control of a hospital [15] from one private party to another—a transfer engineered by a private party and only rubber-stamped by a governmental entity. In the absence of genuine state action, the Commission insists, we can dispose of the immunity issue without even reaching the question whether the state authorized the transaction and clearly articulated a policy to displace competition.

The Supreme Court's decision in City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 111 S. Ct. 1344, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382 (1991), forbids us to accept the Commission's argument. HN8[] We may not "look behind" governmental actions for "'perceived conspiracies to restrain trade.'" Id. at 379, 111 S. Ct. at 1353 (quoting Hoover v. Ronwin, 466 U.S. 558, 580, 104 S. Ct. 1989, 2001, 80 L. Ed. 2d 590 (1984)). We may not "deconstruct[] . . . the governmental process" or "prob[e] . . . the official 'intent'" to determine whether the government's decision-making process has been usurped by private parties. Id. at 377, 111 S. Ct. at 1352. We therefore must reject the Commission's argument that because the plan at issue was formulated by PPHS and HCA, Inc. and presented by PPHS to the Authority, the plan's execution would constitute [16] only private action.

foreseeable result of the statute authorizing the Authority's conduct. We conclude that in this case that standard is met.

HN9[] The Hospital Authorities Law, O.C.G.A. § 31-7-70 et seq., evidently contemplates anticompetitive effects, including just the sort of anticompetitive conduct challenged here. Through that law, the Georgia legislature granted powers of impressive breadth to the hospital authorities. Those powers include the powers to "operate projects," id. § 31-7-75(4), which include hospitals, id. § 31-7-71(5); to "construct, reconstruct, improve, alter, and repair projects," id. § 31-7-75(5); to "establish rates and charges for the services and use of the facilities of the authority," id. § 31-7-75(10); to "sue and be sued," id. § 31-7-75(1); to "exchange, transfer, assign, pledge, mortgage, or dispose of any real or personal property or interest therein," id. § 31-7-75(14); and to "borrow money for any corporate purpose," id. § 31-7-75(17).

The statute, indeed, goes further. HN10[] It also authorizes the authorities more generally to "make and execute contracts and other instruments necessary to exercise the[ir] powers," id. § 31-7-75(3), and to "exercise any or all powers now or hereafter possessed by private corporations performing similar functions," id. § 31-7-75(21). To fulfill its [17] mission to promote public health, the Authority can in effect deploy any power a private corporation could in its stead. And it enjoys powers that private corporations do not. It may "acquire by the exercise of the right of eminent domain any property essential to [*1377] [its] purposes." Id. § 31-7-75(12). And although the Authority has no power to tax, id. § 31-7-84(a), the statute authorizes local governments to impose a tax to cover some of the Authority's expenses, see id. § 31-7-84(a)-(b), freeing the Authority to price its health services below cost.

Most important in this case, however, is HN11[] the Georgia legislature's grant of the power to "acquire by purchase, lease, or otherwise . . . projects," id. § 31-7-75(4), which, again, include hospitals, id. § 31-7-71(5), and the power to "lease . . . for operation by others any project," id. § 31-7-75(7). This grant makes clear that the Authority is authorized to acquire and lease Palmyra. Moreover, in granting the power to acquire hospitals, the legislature must have anticipated that such acquisitions would produce anticompetitive effects. Foreseeably, acquisitions could consolidate ownership of competing hospitals, eliminating competition between [18] them. This case, therefore, is not materially different from Lee County, where we held that the Florida legislature must have anticipated that granting the power to acquire hospitals to a county hospital board of directors would likely diminish competition. 38 F.3d at 1191-92.

The Commission argues that Lee County is distinguishable because the Florida statute in that case concerned the hospital board of only one county. See id. at 1186. For that reason, the Commission insists, the Florida legislature likely acted on detailed knowledge of the competitive conditions in that specific county. Here, by contrast, the Hospital Authorities Law applies statewide. We thus have no reason, according to the Commission, to believe that when the Georgia legislature enacted that statute, it was similarly familiar with competitive conditions in the geographic area affected by the Authority's acquisition of Palmyra.

Nevertheless, the Georgia legislature must have anticipated anticompetitive harm when it authorized hospital acquisitions by the authorities. It defies imagination to suppose the legislature could have believed that every geographic market in Georgia was so replete with hospitals that authorizing [19] acquisitions by the authorities could have no serious anticompetitive consequences. The legislature could hardly have thought that Georgia's more rural markets could support so many hospitals that acquisitions by an authority would not harm competition. We therefore conclude that, through the Hospital Authorities Law, the Georgia legislature clearly articulated a policy authorizing the displacement of competition.

The Commission also points to HN12[] a 1993 amendment to the Hospital Authorities Law. See Act of Apr. 13, 1993, sec. 1, § 31-7-72.1, 1993 Ga. Laws 1020, 1020-22 (codified at O.C.G.A. § 31-7-72.1). That amendment allows mergers between two hospital authorities when they exist within a single, high-population county, O.C.G.A. §§ 31-7-72.1(a), 31-7-73(a), and declares that, in undertaking such mergers, "hospital authorities are acting pursuant to state policy and shall be immune from antitrust liability to the same degree and extent as enjoyed by the State of Georgia," id. § 31-7-72.1(e). According to the Commission, this amendment suggests that in 1993—more than fifty years after the original Hospital Authorities Law, 1941 Ga. Laws 241 (codified as amended at O.C.G.A. § 31-7-70 et seq.), [20] was enacted—the Georgia legislature concluded that other provisions of the law, including those that authorize the authorities to acquire hospitals, did not clearly articulate a policy to displace competition. And, the Commission suggests, the legislature chose—again, in 1993—not to change that state of affairs.

HN13[] What matters, though, is whether anticompetitive effects were anticipated "at [*1378] the time the legislation was enacted." Lee Cnty., 38 F.3d at 1192. At that time—when the original Hospital Authorities Law created the authorities and empowered them to acquire hospitals, §§ 3, 5, 1941 Ga. Laws at 242-44—anticompetitive effects were indeed anticipated. The views of a much later legislature do not change that fact. See, e.g., United States v. X-Citement Video, Inc., 513 U.S. 64, 77 n.6, 115 S. Ct. 464, 471 n.6, 130 L. Ed. 2d 372 (1994) ("[T]he views of one Congress as to the meaning of an Act passed by an earlier Congress are not ordinarily of great weight . . . ."); United States v. Sw. Cable Co., 392 U.S. 157, 170, 88 S. Ct. 1994, 2001, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1001 (1968) ("[T]he views of one Congress as to the construction of a statute adopted many years before by another Congress have very [21] little, if any, significance." (internal quotation marks omitted)). We accordingly conclude that the acquisition of Palmyra and its subsequent operation at the Authority's behest by PPHS are authorized pursuant to a clearly articulated state policy to displace competition.[13] The execution of the plan, consequently, is protected by state-action immunity.

IV.

For the reasons stated in part III, supra, the judgment of the district court is

AFFIRMED.

End of Document

[13] The Commission's argument that no such policy has been articulated also emphasizes that the Authority's acquisition of Palmyra was engineered by PPHS, with the Authority approving the transaction after little or no deliberation, and that it leaves PPHS in control of Palmyra. We reject the suggestion that such private influence, or such private benefit, somehow makes the transaction and its anticompetitive effects unforeseeable. This argument is no more than another manifestation of the Commission's insistence that we disregard City of Columbia's injunction against "deconstruction of the governmental process and probing of the official 'intent.'" 499 U.S. at 377, 111 S. Ct. at 1352. See supra note 12.

Opinion

FINAL JUDGMENT AND ORDER OF DISMISSAL GRANTING FINAL APPROVAL OF PROPOSED CLASS ACTION SETTLEMENT WITH CADBURY PLC, CADBURY HOLDINGS LTD. AND CADBURY ADAMS CANADA, INC.

This Court having considered the Settlement Agreement executed on April 28, 2011, including all Exhibits thereto (the "Settlement Agreement") between the Plaintiffs and all members of the Settlement Class certified in the above-captioned case (collectively "Plaintiffs") and Defendants Cadbury plc, Cadbury Holdings, Ltd., and Cadbury Adams Canada, Inc. (collectively, "the Cadbury Defendants"), and having held a Fairness Hearing on December 12, [*37] 2011, and having considered all of the submissions and arguments with respect thereto, and otherwise being fully informed and good cause appearing therefore,

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED, ADJUDGED and DECREED as follows:

1. This Final Judgment and Order of Dismissal incorporates herein and makes a part hereof, the Settlement Agreement, including the Exhibits thereto. Unless otherwise provided herein, the terms defined in the Settlement Agreement shall have the same meanings for purposes of this Final Judgment and Order of Dismissal.

2. The Court has personal jurisdiction over all Plaintiffs and the Cadbury Defendants, and has subject matter jurisdiction to approve the Settlement Agreement.

3. For purposes of the settlement with the Cadbury Defendants (and only for such purposes, without any impact upon the issues between any of the Plaintiffs and any of the non-settling Defendants), the Court finds that the requirements of Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure have been satisfied with respect to the Settlement Class. At this settlement certification phase, and only for purposes of the settlement with the Cadbury Defendants, the Settlement Class is defined as:

> All persons and entities [*38] who indirectly purchased Chocolate Candy for resale in, or for delivery into any state that has enacted a statute extending standing (or standing to assert claims which could be denominated to be antitrust claims in any state), to indirect purchasers for resale asserting claims under state or local antitrust, unfair competition, consumer protection, unfair practices, trade practice, or civil conspiracy law, including but not limited to the states of Arizona, California, the District of Columbia, Florida, Guam, Hawaii, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Mexico, Nebraska, New York, North Dakota, North Carolina, Oregon, South Dakota, Tennessee, Utah, Vermont and Wisconsin, that was manufactured and/or distributed by or for any Defendant or any predecessor, subsidiary, affiliate or division of any Defendant, at any time from December 9, 2002 through and including December 20, 2007. The Class is composed of indirect purchasers for resale as defined in Paragraph 41 of the Indirect Purchasers for Resale Second Amended Consolidated Class Complaint. Excluded from the Settlement Class are governmental entities, Defendants, or any present [*39] or former parent, subsidiary or affiliate thereof.[1]

No Settlement Class Members have elected to be excluded from the Settlement Class.

4. Pursuant to Rule 23(a)(1), the Court determines that the Settlement Class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable.

5. For purposes of this settlement only, the commonality requirement of Rule 23(a)(2) is satisfied because Plaintiffs have alleged one or more questions of fact and law common to the Settlement Class, including whether the Cadbury Defendants violated state antitrust and consumer protection laws by engaging in an unlawful conspiracy to fix, raise, maintain and/or stabilize prices of chocolate candy in the United States.

6. The Court hereby approves the following entities as Representative Plaintiffs of the Settlement Class pursuant to Rule 23(a)(3), and finds that, for settlement purposes only, these Representative Plaintiffs' claims are typical of the claims of the Settlement Class: Treat America Limited, Corporate Services Group, Greater Tricities Services, LLC

[1] Neither the Cadbury Settlement nor this Order is intended to or shall limit the rights of any state attorney general.

d/b/a GTS Refreshment Service, Food Express, [*40] Inc., All Star Services, Inc., The Konop Companies, North County Vending, Inc., NCV Arizona, Inc., SS Distributor, LLC d/b/a JR Foodmart, GNC Properties, Inc. d/b/a Olive View AMPM and Coborn's Inc. The claims of the Representative Plaintiffs and absent class members rely on the same legal theories and arise from the same alleged conspiratorial conduct by Defendants, namely, the agreement to fix, raise, maintain and/or stabilize prices of chocolate candy in various states.

7. The Court finds that, for purposes of this settlement with the Cadbury Defendants, the Representative Plaintiffs will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the Settlement Class in satisfaction of the requirements of Rule 23(a)(4) because: (1) the interests of the Representative Plaintiffs are consistent with those of the Settlement Class members; (2) there appear to be no conflicts between or among the Representative Plaintiffs and the other Settlement Class members; (3) the Representative Plaintiffs have been and appear to be capable of continuing to be active participants in both the prosecution and the settlement of this litigation; and (4) the Representative Plaintiffs and the Settlement Class members [*41] are represented by qualified, reputable counsel who are experienced in preparing and prosecuting large, complicated class action cases, including those concerning violations of antitrust law.

8. The Court finds that, for purposes of his settlement only, questions of law or fact common to members of the Settlement Class predominate over questions affecting only individual members of the Settlement Class under Rule 23(b)(3). Further, a class action resolution in the manner proposed in the Settlement Agreement would be superior to other available methods for a fair and efficient adjudication of the litigation with respect to the Cadbury Defendants. In making these preliminary findings, the Court has considered, inter alia, (1) the interest of the Settlement Class members in individually controlling the prosecution or defense of separate actions; (2) the impracticality or inefficiency of prosecuting or defending separate actions; (3) the extent and nature of any litigation concerning these claims already commenced; and (4) the desirability of concentrating the litigation of the claims in a particular forum.

9. At this juncture, the Court makes no determination regarding the manageability [*42] of this litigation as a class action, if this litigation were to go to trial.

10. The Court hereby also approves the following law firms as Settlement Class Counsel pursuant to Rule 23(g), and finds that, for settlement purposes only, these Settlement Class Counsel have and will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the Settlement Class: Robins, Kaplan, Miller & Ciresi L.L.P. and The Maher Law Firm.

11. The Indirect Purchaser for Resale Settlement Class has received notice in the manner approved by the Court in its Order of August 12, 2011 (Docket No. 1025). The Court finds that such notice: (i) constitutes reasonable and the best practicable notice; (ii) constitutes notice that is reasonably calculated, under the circumstances, to apprise potential Settlement Class members of the terms of the settlement, their right to object to the settlement, and their right to appear at the settlement Fairness Hearing; (iii) constitutes due, adequate and sufficient notice to all persons entitled to receive notice; and (iv) meets the requirements of due process and Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

12. [*43] No individuals or entities have excluded themselves from the Settlement Class.

13. Pursuant to Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the Court hereby finally approves in all respects the settlement set forth in the Settlement Agreement (the "Settlement") and finds that the Settlement and the Settlement Agreement are, in all respects, fair, reasonable and adequate, and in the best interest of the Settlement Class. The Court further approves the establishment of the Settlement Fund and Notice and Administration Fund under the terms and conditions set forth in the Settlement Agreement and the Escrow Agreements. The parties are hereby directed to implement and consummate the Settlement according to the terms and provisions of the Settlement Agreement.

14. Plaintiffs may use the Settlement Fund to pay from time to time such expenses as may reasonably be incurred in the prosecution of the Class Action, subject to an accounting to the Court at the time of the final resolution of the Class Action.

15. The above-captioned case is hereby dismissed with prejudice against the Cadbury Defendants only and without costs to any party.

16. (a) The Cadbury Defendants and their past and present [*44] officers, directors, employees, parents, subsidiaries, and affiliates; the past and present officers, directors, and employees of such parents, subsidiaries, and affiliates; and the predecessors, successors, heirs, executors, and assigns of each of the foregoing (the "Releasees")- shall be completely released, acquitted, and forever discharged from any and all manner of claims, demands, actions, suits, causes of action, whether class, individual, or otherwise in nature whether personal or subrogated, damages whenever incurred, damages of any kind including compensatory, punitive or other damages, including any compensation derived from parens patriae lawsuits, liabilities of any nature whatsoever, including interests, costs, expenses, class administration expenses, penalties, and lawyers' fees (including Settlement Class Counsel fees) that Class Representatives, the Settlement Class Members and their respective past and present parents, subsidiaries, affiliates, heirs and assigns. or each of them, ever had, now have, or hereafter can, shall, or may have against the Releasees, whether known or unknown, on account of, arising out of, relating to, or resulting from or in any way relating [*45] to conduct of the Releasees during the period February 1, 2001 to December 31, 2008 concerning any aspect of the pricing, selling, discounting, marketing, manufacturing, and distributing of chocolate candy purchased for resale in, or for delivery into, any state that has enacted a statute extending antitrust standing (or standing to assert claims which could be denominated to be antitrust claims in any state) to indirect purchasers for resale asserting claims under state or local antitrust, unfair competition, consumer protection, unfair practices, trade practice, or civil conspiracy law, or that permits indirect purchasers for resale to recover for such claims, including but not limited to the states of Alaska, Arkansas, Arizona, California, the District of Columbia, Florida, Guam, Hawaii, Idaho, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Mexico, Nebraska, New York, North Dakota, North Carolina, Oregon, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Tennessee, Utah, Vermont, Virginia and Wisconsin, or which are, have been or could have been asserted by Releasors, within the scope of the facts asserted in the Complaint, either of which arise under any [*46] state or local antitrust, unfair competition, consumer protection, unfair practices, trade practice, or civil conspiracy law. Nothing in this Order is intended to or shall release the rights of any state attorney general.

(b) Each Releasor waives California Civil Code Section 1542 and similar provisions in other states. Class Plaintiffs have certified that they are aware of and have read and reviewed the following provision of California Civil Code Section 1542 ("Section 1542"): "A general release does not extend to claims which the creditor does not know or suspect to exist in his favor at the time of executing the release, which if known by him must have materially affected his settlement with the debtor." The provisions of the release set forth above shall apply, regardless of the provisions of Section 1542 or any equivalent, similar, or comparable present or future law or principle of law of any jurisdiction. Each Releasor may hereafter discover facts other than or different from those which he, she or it knows or believes to be true with respect to the claims that are the subject matter of this paragraph, but each Releasor hereby expressly and fully, finally and forever waives, [*47] relinquishes, and forever settles and releases any and all rights and benefits existing under (i) Section 1542 or any equivalent, similar or comparable present or future law or principle of law of any jurisdiction and (ii) any law or principle of law of any jurisdiction that would limit or restrict the effect or scope of the provisions of the release set forth above. Each Releasor also expressly waives and fully, finally and forever settles any claims it may have against Releasees or any of them under California Business and Professions Code § 17200 et seq., which claims are expressly incorporated into this paragraph.

(c) Nothing herein shall release any product defect, claims of supplier or distributor breach of contract, or similar claims between the parties relating to Chocolate Candy.

(d) Notwithstanding the foregoing, "Releasees" does not include any other Defendant currently named in the Action.

17. Upon final approval of the settlement (including, without limitation, the exhaustion of any judicial review, or requests for judicial review, from this Final Judgment and Order of Dismissal), the Cadbury Defendants fully and finally release and discharge each of the Representative Plaintiffs [*48] and their counsel and experts from any Claims relating to the institution or prosecution of the Action.

18. Nothing in this Final Judgment and Order of Dismissal, the settlement, or the Settlement Agreement, is or shall be deemed or construed to be an admission or evidence of any violation of any statute or law or of any liability or wrongdoing.

19. Without affecting the finality of this Final Judgment and Order of Dismissal, the Court retains continuing and exclusive jurisdiction over any all matters relating to the administration, consummation, enforcement and interpretation of the Settlement Agreement and of this Final Judgment and Order of Dismissal, and for any other necessary purpose. The Cadbury Defendants, Plaintiffs and each member of the Settlement Class are hereby deemed to have irrevocably submitted to the exclusive jurisdiction of this Court for any suit, action, proceeding or dispute arising out of or relating to the Settlement Agreement or the applicability of the Settlement Agreement, including the Exhibits hereto. Without limiting the generality of the foregoing, and without affecting the finality of this Final Judgment and Order of Dismissal, the Court retains jurisdiction [*49] over any such suit, action or proceeding. Solely for purposes of such suit, action or proceeding, to the fullest extent they may effectively do so under applicable law, the parties hereto are deemed to have irrevocably waived and agreed not to assert by way of motion, as a defense or otherwise, any claim or objection that they are not subject to the jurisdiction of this Court, or that this Court is, in any way, an improper venue or an inconvenient forum.

20. In the event that the Settlement does not become effective according to the Settlement Agreement, this Final Judgment and Order of Dismissal shall be rendered null and void as provided by the Settlement Agreement, shall be vacated, and all orders entered and releases delivered in connection herewith shall be null and void to the extent provided by and in accordance with the Settlement Agreement.

BRIDGEPORT HARBOUR PLACE I, LLC v. JOSEPH P. GANIM ET AL.

Prior History: [1] Action to recover damages for the defendants' alleged violation of state antitrust law, and for other relief, brought to the Superior Court in the judicial district of New Haven, where the case was transferred to the judicial district of Waterbury, Complex Litigation Docket; thereafter, the action was withdrawn as against the defendant Harbor Communications, Inc.; subsequently, the court, Alander, J., granted the motions to strike filed by the defendant Charles J. Willinger, Jr., et al.; thereafter, the court, Stevens, J., granted the motion for summary judgment filed by the defendant HNTB Corporation, the motions to strike the amended complaint filed by the defendant Charles J. Willinger, Jr., et al., and the motions for judgment filed by the defendant Alfred Lenoci, Jr., et al., and rendered judgment thereon in favor of the named defendant et al., from which the plaintiff appealed to the Appellate Court; subsequently, the court, Stevens, J., granted the remaining defendants' motions to strike and the motions for judgment filed by the defendant Eight Hundred Fifteen Lafayette Center, LLC, et al., and rendered judgment in favor of the remaining defendants, and the plaintiff filed an [2] amended appeal; thereafter, the action was withdrawn as against the defendant HNTB Corporation; subsequently, the Appellate Court, McLachlan, Robinson and Hennessey, Js., affirmed the trial court's judgment, and the plaintiff, on the granting of certification, appealed to this court.

HN3[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A motion to strike challenges the legal sufficiency of a pleading and, consequently, requires no factual findings by a trial court. As a result, review of the court's ruling is plenary. The reviewing court takes the facts to be those alleged in the complaint that has been stricken, and it construes the complaint in the manner most favorable to sustaining its legal sufficiency. Thus, if facts provable in the complaint would support a cause of action, the motion to strike must be denied. A motion to strike is properly granted if the complaint alleges mere conclusions of law that are unsupported by the facts alleged.

Conn. Gen. Stat. § 35-44b provides that, in construing Connecticut's antitrust act, Conn. Gen. Stat. § 35-24 et seq., the courts of Connecticut shall be guided by interpretations given by the federal courts to federal antitrust statutes. With respect to the allegations necessary to state a cognizable antitrust claim, in pleading such a claim, a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do. Factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level.

HN5[] Sherman Act, Claims

Conn. Gen. Stat. § 35-26 is substantially identical to 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 and applies to contracts, combinations, or conspiracies in restraint of trade or commerce. It is well settled that Congress designed the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., as a consumer welfare prescription. Consumer welfare is maximized when economic resources are allocated to their best use and when consumers are assured competitive price and quality. Accordingly, an act is deemed anticompetitive under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., only when it harms both allocative efficiency and raises the prices of goods above competitive levels or diminishes their quality.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN7[] Sherman Act, Claims

A violation of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 generally requires a combination or other form of concerted action between two legally distinct entities resulting in an unreasonable restraint on trade. If a restraint alleged is among that small class of actions that courts have deemed to have such predictable and pernicious anticompetitive effect, and such limited potential for procompetitive benefit, it will be unreasonable per se. Most antitrust claims, however, are analyzed under a rule of reason analysis which seeks to determine if the alleged restraint is unreasonable because its anticompetitive effects outweigh its procompetitive effects.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN8[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

In order to establish, under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, an anticompetitive effect sufficient to avoid dismissal of a complaint for failure to state a claim, it is not enough to allege an injury to a competitor. Rather, the inquiry under the rule of reason is directed at the challenged restraint's overall impact on competitive conditions, rather than whether a particular party has been restrained by the conduct at issue. Accordingly, under the rule of reason, a plaintiff bears an initial burden to demonstrate that a defendant's challenged behavior had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market. Anticompetitive effects, more commonly referred to as "injury to competition" or "harm to the competitive process," are usually measured by a reduction in output and an increase in prices in the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

HN9[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

The payment of bribes by suppliers to a purchasing agent does not by itself establish an anticompetitive effect. Although the bribes may have been illegal and unfair methods of competition, their illegality and unfairness do not support an inference that the bribes restrained competition. On the contrary, bribery may be consistent with intense competition among suppliers—some of which resort to illegal measures to gain an advantage.

HN10[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

The Sherman Act's, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., proscription of anti-competitive conduct does not apply to government action. The Sherman Act also does not proscribe private citizens' conduct undertaken to influence government action. That is so because the purpose of the Sherman Act is to regulate business, not political activity. This is true even if the conduct by which citizens attempt to influence governmental regulation is undertaken for the sole purpose of destroying competition, involves unethical business practices, or is specifically intended to hurt competitors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN11[] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Right to Petition Immunity

Insofar as the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., sets up a code of ethics at all, it is a code that condemns trade restraints, not political activity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Right to Petition Immunity

The proscriptions of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., tailored as they are for the business world, are not at all appropriate for application in the political arena.

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., does not proscribe private citizens' conduct undertaken to influence government action, even if that conduct involves conspiracy or bribery.

Syllabus

The plaintiff developer, which had been awarded a contract with the defendant city of Bridgeport to develop certain real property, sought to recover damages from the defendants, claiming that the they had violated the Connecticut Antitrust Act (§ 35-24 et seq.) by engaging in an illegal conspiracy in restraint of trade. The plaintiff specifically alleged that the named defendant, the former mayor of Bridgeport, engaged in a contract steering scheme in which he received the proceeds of bribes and kickbacks from businesses seeking city contracts, that the plaintiff refused to participate in the scheme, and that certain defendants prevented the plaintiff from fulfilling its contractual obligations. The trial court granted the defendants' motions to strike the plaintiff's complaint, concluding that the complaint failed to allege facts sufficient to demonstrate an antitrust violation, and rendered judgment [3] for the defendants, from which the plaintiff appealed to the Appellate Court. The Appellate Court affirmed the trial court's judgment, concluding that the plaintiff's complaint was devoid of factual allegations that would support the legal conclusion that the defendants' conduct had an adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market of commercial development in Bridgeport. On the granting of certification, the plaintiff appealed to this court, claiming that the Appellate Court improperly concluded that the complaint failed to allege an antitrust violation. Held that the Appellate Court properly upheld the trial court's decision to grant the defendants' motions to strike, the plaintiff's complaint having failed to state a cognizable antitrust injury; the plaintiff's complaint demonstrated only that the plaintiff was injured by the defendants' conduct rather than that the defendants' conduct restrained competition among general contractors seeking contracts with the city, and commercial bribery does not constitute a restraint of trade for purposes of antitrust law.

[298] [*207] PALMER, J. The plaintiff, Bridgeport Harbour Place I, LLC, brought this action against the defendants, Joseph P. Ganim, the city of Bridgeport (city), Alfred Lenoci, Sr., Alfred Lenoci, Jr., United Properties, Ltd., Eight Hundred Fifteen Lafayette Centre, LLC, United Investments, LLC, United Environmental Redevelopment, LLC, Crescent Avenue Development Company, LLC, Charles J. Willinger, Jr., Willinger, Willinger and Bucci,

[*5] P.C., Joseph T. Kasper, Jr., Kasper Group, Inc., and Michael Schinella,[1] alleging that the defendants had violated General Statutes § 35-26[2] of the Connecticut Antitrust Act (antitrust act) by engaging in an illegal conspiracy in restraint of trade. The trial court granted the defendants' motions to strike the plaintiff's amended complaint on the ground that the complaint failed to allege an antitrust injury. The plaintiff appealed to the Appellate Court, which affirmed the trial court's judgment. Bridgeport Harbour Place I, LLC v. Ganim, 111 Conn. App. 197, 210, 958 A.2d 210 (2008). We granted [*208] the plaintiff's petition for certification to appeal limited to the following issue: "Did the Appellate Court properly affirm the trial court's granting of the defendants' motion[s] to strike?" Bridgeport Harbour Place I, LLC v. Ganim, 290 Conn. 906, 962 A.2d 793 (2009). We answer that question in the affirmative and, accordingly, affirm the judgment of the Appellate Court.

The following relevant procedural and factual background is set forth in the opinion of the Appellate Court. "In May, 1997, the city . . . requested proposals for the site development of a section of waterfront [299] property known as Steel Point. A development proposal submitted by Bridgeport Renaissance Center, later renamed Harbour Place Limited Partnership and subsequently acquired by the plaintiff, was chosen by the city for the project. On November 18, 1998, the city and the plaintiff signed a development agreement. The plaintiff could not fulfill its obligations under the contract, however, due to the successive withdrawals of several financing partners, and the city terminated the contract in March, 2001.

"According to the plaintiff, it was prevented from completing the development activities specified in the contract by the unlawful conduct of the defendants. Specifically, the plaintiff alleged that the city's mayor, Ganim, engaged in a contract steering scheme in which his coconspirators, Leonard Grimaldi and Paul Pinto, demanded [7] bribes and kickbacks from businesses seeking city contracts and then divided the proceeds of those illegal payments with Ganim. After the contract had been awarded to the plaintiff, the plaintiff refused to participate in the scheme. Thereafter, Ganim and the other defendants allegedly conspired to deprive the plaintiff of its development rights, through corrupt and illegal means, for their own benefit. Because of the unreasonable delays, conditions and demands imposed on the plaintiff, its three financial partners withdrew [*209] from the project, and the plaintiff was unable to fulfill its contractual obligations. From the date it was chosen until it was discharged in March, 2001, the plaintiff had expended millions of dollars in its attempt to complete the project.

"The plaintiff filed a one count complaint on October 19, 2004, claiming that the defendants [had] violated the [antitrust act] by engaging in an illegal conspiracy in restraint of trade. [The plaintiff] sought treble damages pursuant to General Statutes § 35-35.[3] Several of the defendants filed motions to strike the complaint on the ground that it failed to state a legally sufficient antitrust claim. The [trial] court, Alander, [8] J., granted the motions, concluding that the plaintiff's original complaint failed to allege facts that would establish an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market and failed to allege facts that would constitute price discrimination in violation of General Statutes § 35-45.

"The plaintiff timely filed an amended complaint. See Practice Book § 10-44. The amended complaint added one paragraph, alleging, in part, that '[t]he defendants' conduct had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market of undertaking and completing commercial development in the [c]ity . . . in a timely, cost

[1] Harbor Communications, Inc., and HNTB Corporation also were named as defendants. The plaintiff subsequently withdrew its complaint against Harbor Communications, Inc., and the action subsequently was withdrawn as against [6] HNTB Corporation.

[2] General Statutes § 35-26 provides: HN1[] "Every contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of any part of trade or commerce is unlawful."

[3] General Statutes § 35-35 provides: HN2[] "The state, or any person, including, but not limited to, a consumer, injured in its business or property by any violation of the provisions of this chapter shall recover treble damages, together with a reasonable attorney's fee and costs."

efficient manner.'[4] The other allegations [*210] in the amended complaint [300] were the same as in the original complaint, and the plaintiff did not amend its allegations with respect to [its claim of] price discrimination.

"Six of the defendants filed motions to strike the plaintiff's amended complaint, claiming that the plaintiff [had] failed to allege any additional facts that could constitute a cognizable antitrust claim. The court, Stevens, J., heard argument and issued its decision on March 5, 2007, granting the motions of those defendants. In its decision, the court concluded that the allegations in the added paragraph contained only legal or conclusory claims and did not provide a [10] factual basis for an antitrust violation. Further, the court stated that, even if it is assumed that the relevant market was as alleged in the added paragraph, the plaintiff nevertheless failed to allege any facts of a specific nature that demonstrated that the defendants' conduct had an adverse effect on competition in that market. The court noted: 'When taken as true, the facts set forth in the . . . amended complaint establish that the plaintiff lost its ability to develop a single property, Steel Point, due to the improper conduct of the various defendants. The plaintiff has not alleged any particular facts, however, that would indicate that this action prevented other competitors from developing Steel Point or other properties in [the city] under government contracts with the city . . . or otherwise hindered competitors in such pursuits.'

"Subsequently, the [remaining] defendants filed motions to strike the amended complaint on identical grounds. The court granted the motions and . . . rendered judgment in favor of all of the defendants." Bridgeport Harbour Place I, LLC v. Ganim, supra, 111 Conn. App. 200-203.

The plaintiff appealed to the Appellate Court from the judgment of the [11] trial court, claiming, inter alia, that [*211] the trial court improperly had determined that the amended complaint failed to allege an antitrust injury. Specifically, the plaintiff contended that the allegations in the amended complaint "that the defendants conspired to exclude competition in connection with eight different city projects through commercial bribery and other unlawful acts were sufficient to support the legal conclusion that the defendants engaged in anticompetitive behavior in commercial development in [the city]." Id., 207. The Appellate Court disagreed, concluding that the amended complaint was "devoid of factual allegations that would support the legal conclusion that the defendants' conduct had an adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market. The plaintiff [did] not allege how the challenged actions decreased competition among developers or how the alleged payback scheme actually affected the marketplace, which allegations are necessary to support a . . . violation [of § 35-26] under a rule of reason analysis. The plaintiff appears to claim that the very fact that the defendants allegedly required anyone who wanted a city contract in [the city] to pay [12] bribes, i.e., they had to 'pay to play,' automatically results in an anticompetitive effect on the market. The plaintiff can cite no case law in support of such a position." Id., 208. The Appellate Court also noted that "the case law suggest[ed] otherwise." Id. In reaching its conclusion, the court relied on three cases, namely, Expert Masonry, Inc. v. Boone County, 440 F.3d 336, 348 (6th Cir. 2006), Comet Mechanical Contractors, Inc. v. E. A. Cowen Construction, Inc., 609 F.2d 404, 406 (10th Cir. 1980), and Federal Paper Board Co. v. Amata, 693 F. Sup. 1376, 1383 (D. Conn. 1988), that had held that commercial bribery, standing alone, does not constitute anticompetitive behavior under federal antitrust law.

[301] On appeal to this court, the plaintiff contends that the Appellate Court improperly concluded that the [*212] amended complaint fails to allege a cognizable antitrust injury. The plaintiff claims that the complaint, when construed in the light most favorable to sustaining its legal sufficiency, alleges such an injury because it asserts that the defendants "controlled the relevant market to such an extent that they excluded competitors at will through their bribery and kickback scheme." [13] In particular, the plaintiff contends that "[t]he restraint alleged [in the complaint] is that of a general contractor, the Lenocis and their cronies, conspiring with the mayor [Ganim] who controlled the city . . . ." The plaintiff further contends that "the Lenocis' control over [Ganim] effectively precluded competition among general contractors." According to the plaintiff, "[b]ecause so many publicly bid projects were controlled by the Lenocis and involved kickbacks and bribes, this had the effect of stifling competition for these kinds of projects." Finally, the plaintiff contends that paragraph twenty-seven of the amended complaint,[5] which identifies eight city contracts that the Lenocis allegedly obtained as a result of corrupt payments, supports the claim that the defendants' conduct had an anticompetitive effect on the market as a whole. We are not persuaded by the plaintiff's claim.

[4] "The added paragraph . . . [provides]: 'The defendants' conduct had [9] an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market of undertaking and completing commercial development in the [c]ity . . . in a timely, cost efficient manner. The defendants' conduct as alleged added the extra cost of corrupt paying as demanded. The corruption and payback system of Ganim, Grimaldi and Pinto, which operated with the cooperation of . . . [city] officials under . . . Ganim, including . . . corporation counsel, leaders of the [c]ity [c]ouncil, its economic director, finance director, zoning officials, comptroller and others caused the market for the commercial development as a whole to be adversely affected.'" Bridgeport Harbour Place I, LLC v. Ganim, supra, 111 Conn. App. 201 n.3.

The following legal principles guide our analysis. HN3[] "A motion to strike challenges the legal sufficiency of a [*213] pleading . . . and, consequently, requires no factual findings by the trial court. As a result, our review of the court's ruling is plenary. . . . We take the facts to be those alleged in the complaint that has been stricken and we construe the complaint in the manner most favorable to sustaining its legal sufficiency. . . . Thus, [i]f facts provable in the complaint would support a cause [15] of action, the motion to strike must be denied." (Citations omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) Vacco v. Microsoft Corp., 260 Conn. 59, 64-65, 793 A.2d 1048 (2002). "A motion to strike is properly granted if the complaint alleges mere conclusions of law that are unsupported by the facts alleged." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Fort Trumbull Conservancy, LLC v. Alves, 262 Conn. 480, 498, 815 A.2d 1188 (2003).

Furthermore, HN4[] General Statutes § 35-44b provides that, in construing the antitrust act, "the courts of this state shall be guided by interpretations given by the federal courts to federal antitrust statutes."[6] With respect to the allegations [302] necessary to state a cognizable antitrust claim, the United States Supreme Court has explained that, in pleading such a claim, "a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do. . . . Factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level . . . ."[7] (Citations omitted.) *Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Exxon Corp., 275 F.3d 191, 198 (2d Cir. [214] 2001) (in deciding motion to dismiss for failure to state [16] claim, "[i]t is . . . improper [for the court] to assume that the [plaintiff] can prove facts that it has not alleged or that the [defendant has] violated the antitrust laws in ways that have not been alleged" [internal quotation marks omitted]); Furlong v. Long Island College Hospital, 710 F.2d 922, 927 (2d Cir. 1983) (conclusory allegations cannot "substitute for minimally sufficient factual allegations").

[5] Paragraph twenty-seven of the plaintiff's amended complaint provides in relevant part: "Ganim, acting through his office and through and in cooperation with various municipal officials and employees he influenced through corrupt payments of extraordinary benefits, appointments, awards of city contracts [14] to relatives, was engaged in a massive, hidden conspiracy with the defendants and others, Willinger, Lenoci Sr., Lenoci Jr., Pinto, Grimaldi, Kasper and Schinella to illegally profit from the awarding and completion of contracts with the [c]ity . . . . The corrupt agreements included but were not limited to those involving the sewer treatment facility, the baseball park, the hockey stadium, the removal of asbestos, the public relations campaign for [the city], the clean and green program for the removal of distressed buildings, the redevelopment of Father Panik [V]illage, the redevelopment of Steel Point and the awarding of contracts for legal services, all in the restraint of trade . . . ."

Accordingly, "[u]nder the rule of reason, the [plaintiff bears] an initial burden to demonstrate [that] the [defendant's] challenged behavior had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Major League Baseball Properties, Inc. v. Salvino, Inc., 542 F.3d 290, 317 (2d Cir. 2008). "Anticompetitive effects, more commonly referred to as 'injury to competition' or 'harm to the competitive process,' are usually measured by a reduction in output and [*216] an increase in prices in the relevant market." Sullivan v. National Football League, 34 F.3d 1091, 1096-97 (1st Cir. 1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1190, 115 S. Ct. 1252, 131 L. Ed. 2d 133 (1995); [20] see also Virgin Atlantic Airways Ltd. v. British Airways PLC, 257 F.3d 256, 264 (2d Cir. 2001) ("whether an actual adverse effect has occurred is determined by examining factors like reduced output, increased prices and decreased quality").

Upon review of the plaintiff's amended complaint, we conclude that the Appellate Court properly upheld the trial court's decision to grant the defendants' motions to strike because the complaint is devoid of facts demonstrating that the defendants' alleged bribery scheme actually had an adverse effect on competition. Almost every paragraph of the thirty-three page amended complaint focuses on the various ways in which the defendants' conduct injured the plaintiff individually by preventing it from completing the Steel Point project.[9] There is not a single

[9] The following allegations of the amended complaint are representative of the entire complaint: "40. On or about January 27, 1999, as a result of the illegal conspiracy in restraint of trade [22] by the defendants, the [plaintiff's] development partner . . . withdrew from the Steel Point project."

"46. In April of 1999, less than one month after the known extension of the development agreement with the plaintiff, Pinto and the defendants Lenoci Sr., Lenoci Jr., and Ganim agreed to select and cause other officials and employees to sabotage the [plaintiff's] plan to develop the Steel Point site, in direct derogation of the [plaintiff's] rights under the development agreement."

"51. The defendant . . . Willinger intentionally . . . and in bad faith inserted commercially unreasonable terms and conditions into the [Steel Point] agreement, intentionally delayed the completion of the agreements, participated in a scheme to steer [c]ity contracts on the project to entities who would pay fees to [the] conspirators, and who would act to further delay and interpose unfair development conditions [on] the Steel Point project."

allegation [304] in the [*217] complaint explaining how the bribery scheme reduced output or raised prices, the sine qua non of an antitrust injury. Furthermore, although the plaintiff argues that the Lenocis' control over Ganim effectively precluded general contractors from competing for projects open to public bidding, the amended complaint itself contains no such allegation. As the defendants note, the amended [21] complaint does not even identify a general contractor, other than the plaintiff, that was adversely affected by the defendants' scheme. Much less does the amended complaint allege facts demonstrating that general contractors as a group were precluded from competing for city contracts. The thrust of the amended complaint, rather, is that any general contractor that wanted to do business with the city could do so but had to pay to play.[10] As the District Court explained in *Federal Paper [218] Board Co. v. Amata, supra, 693 F. Sup. 1376, however, HN9[] "[t]he payment of bribes by suppliers to a purchasing agent does not by itself establish an anticompetitive effect. Although the bribes may have been illegal and unfair methods of competition, their illegality and unfairness [do] not support an inference that the bribes restrained competition. On the contrary, bribery could have been consistent with intense competition among the suppliers—some of which resorted to illegal measures to gain an advantage." Id., 1383.

As the Appellate Court noted, moreover, even if the plaintiff adequately alleged in its amended complaint an anticompetitive impact on the market, federal courts have concluded that commercial bribery does not constitute a

"53. From May of 1999 through January of 2000, while the plaintiff was attempting in good faith to complete the transaction, [certain of the defendants] were engaged in a conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce to deprive the plaintiff of its rights."

"56. Unaware [23] of the fact that the mayor [Ganim] . . . had entered into a corrupt agreement to block and [to] interfere with [the plaintiff's] contractual rights, the plaintiff continued to try to complete the Steel Point [p]roject, spending large sums of money on all of the various components of the project . . . ."

"65. The defendants . . . Lenoci Sr. . . . Lenoci [Jr.], Michael Schinella, and the related Lenoci [c]orporations . . . engaged in an illegal conspiracy in restraint of trade in one or more of the following ways:

"d) by engaging in a myriad of illegal schemes to enrich the mayor [Ganim] and other [city] officials . . . in order to obtain the cooperation of those officials in frustrating the development attempts of the [p]laintiff, [and]

"e) by providing the chief elected official of the [c]ity . . . with items of value in order to secure his cooperation in frustrating the development attempts of the plaintiff."

"67. The defendant[s] . . . Kasper and Kasper Group [Inc.] engaged in a conspiracy in restraint of trade in one or more of the following ways

"a) by attempting to insert the Lenoci defendants into the Steel Point project;

"b) by paying bribes to the mayor [Ganim] . . .

"c) by conspiring [24] with the Lenocis and the Lenoci controlled entities to steal the [plaintiff's] development project

"d) by deceiving the plaintiff and hiding from the plaintiff the illegal conspiracy [and]

"e) by paying sums of money to other conspirators in support of the conspiracy . . . ."

[10] For example, paragraph twenty-eight of the amended complaint provides in relevant part: "At all times mentioned herein, and for a long time prior to the incidents described in this complaint, Pinto and Grimaldi received payments from businesses seeking to do business with the [c]ity . . . and then shared the proceeds of these payments with . . . Ganim."

Paragraph thirty-three of the amended complaint provides in relevant part: "Unlike other businesses in the [c]ity . . . the plaintiff refused to pay . . . or associate itself with the members of the conspiracy, in order to complete [the Steel Point] development project. As a result, the [d]efendant . . . Ganim, through the members of his administration, paid consultants . . . Willinger and the Willinger firm prevented [the] [p]laintiff from completing the [Steel Point] transaction."

Paragraph thirty-six provides in relevant part: "During the period of the plaintiff's [25] development of Steel Point, the defendant Willinger represented the defendants Lenoci Sr., Lenoci Jr., and their related companies, and Pinto, Grimaldi, Kasper and related companies, and Ganim . . . received from the defendants [money] extorted from persons seeking to do business with the [c]ity . . . ."

restraint of trade within the meaning of the Sherman Act. See Bridgeport Harbour Place I, LLC v. Ganim, supra, 111 Conn. App. 208. We are aware of no case in which governmental corruption was found to fall within the purview of federal antitrust law.

Recently, in Coll v. First American Title Ins. Co., 642 F.3d 876 (10th Cir. 2011), the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals engaged in a comprehensive review of the governing case law in explaining [305] why commercial bribery of government officials does not constitute a [*219] restraint of trade for purposes of the Sherman Act. The analysis of the court in Coll, with which we agree, bears repeating. "In Parker [v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943)], [26] the [United States] Supreme Court held that HN10[] the . . . Sherman Act's proscription of anti-competitive conduct did not apply to government action. See [id., 350-52]. Later in [Eastern R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 81 S. Ct. 523, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464 (1961) (Noerr)], the [c]ourt addressed the other side of the same coin, [Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 383, 111 S. Ct. 1344, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382 (1991)], concluding that the Sherman Act also did not proscribe private citizens' conduct undertaken to influence government action. See [Eastern R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., supra, 135-37]. That is so because the purpose of the Sherman Act is to regulate business, not political activity. See [id., 137]. This was true, according to Noerr, even if the conduct by which citizens attempted to influence governmental regulation was undertaken for the sole purpose of destroying competition, involved unethical business practices, or was specifically intended to hurt competitors. See [id., 138-45]. In fact, Noerr addressed claims of egregious private conduct, including assertions that a number of railroads conspired to engage [27] in a publicity campaign against their competitors in the trucking industry designed to foster the adoption and retention of laws and law enforcement practices destructive of the trucking business, to create an atmosphere of distaste for the truckers among the general public, and to impair the relationships existing between the truckers and their customers. [Id., 129-30]. . . .

"Notwithstanding this deceptive and unethical business conduct, the [c]ourt held that the Sherman Act did not apply to proscribe it. See [id., 140-41]. [The court in Noerr stated that] HN11[] [i]nsofar as [the Sherman] [*220] Act sets up a code of ethics at all, it is a code that condemns trade restraints, not political activity, and . . . a publicity campaign to influence governmental action falls clearly into the category of political activity. HN12[] The proscriptions of the [Sherman] Act, tailored as they are for the business world, are not at all appropriate for application in the political arena. [Id.]

"In conclusion, [the court in] Noerr noted that the fight between the railroads and the truckers appears to have been conducted along lines normally accepted in our political system, except to the extent that each group has deliberately [28] deceived the public and public officials. And that deception, reprehensible as it is, can be of no consequence so far as the Sherman Act is concerned. [Id., 144-45].

"More recently, the [United States] Supreme Court, relying on its reasoning in Noerr, held that HN13[] the Sherman Act did not proscribe private citizens' conduct undertaken to influence government action, even if that conduct involved conspiracy or bribery. In [Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., supra, 499 U.S. 365], a jury found that a billboard company conspired with city officials to obtain legislation that protected the billboard company's monopolization of the billboard market within the city [of Columbia, South Carolina] and that restrained the business of a competitor billboard company. See [id., 368-69]. Nevertheless, the . . . [c]ourt held that the Sherman Act did not apply to such conduct, [306] which was undertaken to influence governmental action. See [id., 384]. In reaching this conclusion, the [c]ourt first rejected a conspiracy exception to Parker state-action immunity. See [id., 374-75]. Since it is both inevitable and desirable that public officials often agree to do what one or another group of private [29] citizens urges upon them, such an [*221] exception would virtually swallow up the Parker rule: All anticompetitive regulation would be vulnerable to a conspiracy charge. [Id., 375]. The [c]ourt applied this same reasoning to reject a conspiracy exception to Noerr immunity, too: The same factors [that] . . . make it impracticable or beyond the purpose of the antitrust laws to identify and invalidate lawmaking that has been infected by selfishly motivated agreement with private interests likewise make it impracticable or beyond that scope to identify and invalidate lobbying that has produced selfishly motivated agreement with public officials. It would be unlikely that any effort to influence legislative action could succeed unless one or more members of the legislative body became . . . co-conspirators in some sense with the private party urging such action. [Id., 383-84] . . . .

"[Columbia] went further, rejecting exceptions to Parker and Noerr immunity even for conspiracies involving corruption. See [id., 376-79]. A conspiracy exception narrowed along such vague lines is similarly impractical. Few governmental actions are immune from the charge that they are not in the public interest or [30] in some sense corrupt. . . . The fact is that virtually all regulation benefits some segments of . . . society and harms others; and that it is not universally considered contrary to public good if the net economic loss to the losers exceeds the net economic gain to the winners. [Id., 377]. . . .

"[To] carve out a special exclusion to [the] Noerr-Pennington[11] [doctrine] when the corruption involves some ill-defined and open-ended concept of bribery or other acts that might violate state or federal law . . . would, of course, vitiate [the] Noerr-Pennington [doctrine] almost entirely because there is hardly any lobbying [*222] effort that is not open to at least a charge of some illegal dealings when important economic interests are at stake. . . . The Supreme Court in [Columbia] understood that risk and held that corruption—and even bribery explicitly—would not vitiate a claim of Noerr-Pennington immunity. The [c]ourt said: Such unlawful activity has no necessary relationship to whether the governmental action is in the public interest. A mayor is guilty of accepting a bribe even if he would and should have taken, in the public interest, the same action for which the bribe was paid . . . . [31] To use unlawful political influence as the test of legality of state regulation undoubtedly vindicates (in a rather blunt way) principles of good government. But the [Sherman Act] . . . is not directed to that end. Congress has passed other laws aimed at combating corruption in state and local governments. Insofar as the Sherman Act sets up a code of ethics at all, it is a code that condemns trade restraints not political activity. [Id., 378-79]." (Citations omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) Coll v. First American Title Ins. Co., supra, 642 F.3d 896-98; see also Armstrong Surgical Center, Inc. v. Armstrong County Memorial Hospital, 185 F.3d 154, 162 [307] (3d Cir. 1999) ("Liability for [anticompetitive] injuries caused by . . . state action is precluded [under the Sherman Act] even [when] it is alleged that a private party urging the action did so by bribery, deceit or other wrongful conduct that may have affected the decision making process. The remedy for such conduct rests with laws addressed to it and not with courts looking behind sovereign state action at the behest of antitrust plaintiffs. Federalism requires this result both with respect to state actors and with respect [32] to private parties who have urged the state action."), cert. denied, 530 U.S. 1261, 120 S. Ct. 2716, 147 L. Ed. 2d 982 (2000); Comet Mechanical Contractors, Inc. v. E. A. Cowen Construction, Inc., supra, 609 F.2d 406-407 (plaintiff's allegation that it was [*223] denied government contract because it refused to pay bribe to government official did not establish antitrust violation); Calnetics Corp. v. Volkswagen of America, Inc., 532 F.2d 674, 687 (9th Cir.) ("commercial bribery, standing alone, does not constitute a violation of the Sherman Act"), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 940, 97 S. Ct. 355, 50 L. Ed. 2d 309 (1976).

As the foregoing case law makes clear, the plaintiff's allegation that the defendants took bribes and kickbacks in exchange for steering public contracts does not state a cognizable antitrust claim.[12] Accordingly, we agree with the Appellate Court that the trial court properly granted the defendants' motions to strike the plaintiff's amended complaint.

The judgment of the Appellate Court is affirmed.

[12] This does not mean that there can be no remedy for the plaintiff's injuries. Indeed, the plaintiff brought a separate action against several [33] of the defendants for, among other wrongful acts, breach of contract, tortious interference with contractual relations, and violation of the Connecticut Unfair Trade Practices Act (CUTPA), General Statutes § 42-110a et seq. See Bridgeport Harbour Place I, LLC v. Ganim, 131 Conn. App. 99, 104, 30 A.3d 703 (2011). The jury rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff on several counts and awarded the plaintiff $366,524 in damages. Id., 111-12. Thereafter, the court awarded the plaintiff punitive damages, attorney's fees and costs in accordance with the jury's findings on the CUTPA claim. Id., 113. The Appellate Court recently affirmed the judgment in that case. Id., 178. Federal authorities also successfully prosecuted several of the defendants for bribery, mail fraud and violations of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1961 et seq. (1994), in addition to other crimes.

In this opinion the other justices concurred.

The Federal Trade Commission has no obligation to establish precisely the relevance of the material it seeks in an investigative subpoena by tying that material to a particular theory of violation. In light of the broad deference courts afford the investigating agency, it is essentially the respondent's burden to show that the information is irrelevant.

[*1313] [450] GINSBURG, Circuit Judge: Church and Dwight Co., Inc., the leading manufacturer of condoms in the United States, appeals an order of the district court enforcing a subpoena and an accompanying civil investigative demand (CID) issued by the Federal Trade Commission insofar as the FTC would require it to produce information related to its sales of products other than condoms. Church & Dwight contends such information is not reasonably relevant to the Commission's investigation into [2] its potentially monopolistic practices in the market for condoms. Because the Commission's inquiry lawfully extends to the possibility Church & Dwight is engaged in the exclusionary bundling of rebates to retailers that sell condoms and other Church & Dwight products, we hold the district court did not err in finding that the information on products other than condoms was reasonably relevant to the Commission's investigation. Accordingly, we affirm the order enforcing [*1314] [451] the subpoena and the CID against Church & Dwight as issued.

I. Background

Church & Dwight sells condoms primarily under its Trojan brand name. According to the Commission, the Company accounts for "at least 70%" of the latex condoms sold in the United States.[*] In order to market its condoms, Church & Dwight offers retailers a discount based upon the amount of shelf space they devote to its condoms. Church & Dwight also sells a variety of other products, including such consumer products as cat litter and toothpaste.

In June 2009 the Commission issued a "Resolution Authorizing Use of Compulsory Process in a Nonpublic Investigation" in order to determine whether Church & Dwight > has attempted to acquire, acquired, or maintained a monopoly in the distribution or sale of condoms in the United States, or in any part of that commerce, through potentially exclusionary practices including, but not limited to, conditioning discounts or rebates to retailers on the percentage of shelf or display space dedicated to Trojan brand condoms and other products distributed or sold by Church & Dwight, in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act ....

Pursuant to the Resolution, the Commission issued a subpoena duces tecum seeking, among other things, production of documents related to Church & Dwight's sales and distribution of condoms in the United States and Canada. At the same time the Commission issued a CID seeking information about cost, pricing, production, and sales of the Company's condoms in the United States and Canada.

Although the Commission did not explicitly request information on products other than condoms, Specification R of the subpoena provides: "All Documents [4] responsive to this request ... shall be produced in complete form, unredacted unless privileged ...."

Church & Dwight turned over to the Commission documents and data sets relating to its condom business with the information on other products redacted. Church & Dwight petitioned the Commission either to limit or to quash the subpoena and the CID. The Commission denied that request and petitioned the district court to enforce the subpoena and the CID.

In the district court, Church & Dwight argued, "Properly read, the FTC's Resolution's language concerning 'Trojan brand condoms and other products distributed or sold by Church & Dwight' does not include irrelevant non-condom products such as toothpaste, cat litter, baking soda and detergents." The district court, finding the information on products other than condoms in documents with information pertaining to condoms was "reasonably relevant" to the Commission's investigation and the request was not "unduly burdensome," granted the petition for enforcement.

II. Analysis

Church & Dwight appeals the district court's order insofar as the subpoena and the CID relate to its products other than condoms. The Company first contends the district [5] court departed from the legal standard prescribed in precedent because it (1) did not interpret the scope of the Resolution, (2) did not identify the materials [*1315] [452] sought in the subpoena and the CID, and (3) required that the materials sought in the subpoena and the CID be only plausibly, rather than reasonably, relevant to the Commission's investigation. It also argues that, even if

---

[*] Although its inquiry into the market for condoms is not limited to the latex variety of the product, the Commission has not provided an estimate of Church & Dwight's share of a market that includes both latex [3] and non-latex condoms.

the district court applied the correct legal standard, the court clearly erred when it found the disputed materials were in fact reasonably relevant to the investigation.

A. Standards of Review

HN1[] Whether the district court applied the correct standard in deciding an investigative subpoena should be enforced is a question of law, which we decide de novo. See U.S. Int'l Trade Comm'n v. ASAT, Inc., 411 F.3d 245, 253, 366 U.S. App. D.C. 269 (D.C. Cir. 2005); FTC v. Texaco, 555 F.2d 862, 876 n.29, 180 U.S. App. D.C. 390 (D.C. Cir. 1977) (en banc). We review the district court's determination of relevance, a question of fact, only for clear error. See FTC v. Invention Submission Corp., 965 F.2d 1086, 1089, 296 U.S. App. D.C. 124 (D.C. Cir. 1992).

In the last-cited case we explained HN2[] "a district court must enforce a federal agency's investigative subpoena if the information sought is 'reasonably [6] relevant'—or, put differently, 'not plainly incompetent or irrelevant to any lawful purpose of the [agency]'—and not 'unduly burdensome' to produce." 965 F.2d at 1089 (brackets in original) (internal citations omitted) (quoting Texaco, 555 F.2d at 872, 873 n.23, 881). We also reiterated HN3[] a long-established point quite pertinent to the dispute here: "[T]he validity of Commission subpoenas is to be measured against the purposes stated in the resolution ...." 965 F.2d at 1092 (quoting FTC v. Carter, 636 F.2d 781, 789, 205 U.S. App. D.C. 73 (D.C. Cir. 1980)).

B. Scope of the Resolution

The main dispute in this case is whether the Commission's inquiry, as defined by the Resolution, extends to Church & Dwight's products other than condoms. The Resolution indicates the Commission is investigating various of Church & Dwight's practices, including its "conditioning [of] discounts or rebates to retailers on the percentage of shelf or display space dedicated to Trojan brand condoms and other products ...." Despite the seemingly unqualified reach of the phrase "and other products," the Company argues we should interpret it narrowly to mean "and other [condom] products." For its part, the Commission maintains the Resolution [7] comprehends an investigation into Church & Dwight's possible bundling of rebates based upon the retailer's sales of both its condoms and its other products. Under the Commission's interpretation, the information concerning products other than condoms is unquestionably relevant to its investigation, and the district court was correct to enforce the subpoena and the CID.

As an initial matter, Church & Dwight is incorrect in claiming the district court "failed to interpret" the Resolution; the district court simply interpreted the Resolution as being more broad than Church & Dwight had argued. The question properly before us is whether the district court correctly interpreted the Resolution to include an inquiry that implicated Church & Dwight products other than condoms.

Contrary to the Company's urging, HN4[] we defer to the Commission's interpretation of its own Resolution. Cf. FTC v. Ken Roberts Co., 276 F.3d 583, 586, 349 U.S. App. D.C. 240 (D.C. Cir. 2001) ("courts of appeals have consistently deferred to agency determinations of their own investigative authority"); EEOC v. Lutheran Social Servs., 186 F.3d 959, 965, 337 U.S. App. D.C. 373 (D.C. Cir. 1999) ("agency's interpretation of relevance of subpoena deserves deference because the [8] scope of the investigation is very much dependent on the agency's interpretation and administration of its authorizing [*1316] [453] substantive legislation" (internal quotation marks, alterations, and citation omitted)). So long as the material the Commission seeks is "relevant to the investigation?the boundary of which may be defined quite generally," Invention Submission, 965 F.2d at 1090, see also Texaco, 555 F.2d at 874 n.26 ("resolutions of [a broad] sort are not uncommon in the investigative process"), the district court must enforce the agency's demand.

The Commission maintains its Resolution contemplates an investigation into the possibility Church & Dwight is engaged in exclusionary practices in which products other than condoms may play a role. Such practices include bundling discounts, as in LePage's Inc. v. 3M, 324 F.3d 141 (3d Cir. 2003) (en banc), and tying sales, as in Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992). Church & Dwight replies that, because the initial clause of the Resolution authorizes an investigation into illegal monopolization "in the distribution or sale of condoms ... through potentially exclusionary practices including, but not limited [9] to, [shelf-space discounts] on Trojan brand condoms and other products," the last two words must refer only to Church & Dwight's condom brands other than Trojan. There is, however, a reasonable interpretation of the Resolution that is less narrow than the one Church & Dwight favors. Although HN5[] we will not interpret the scope of the Resolution so broadly as to enable the agency to investigate a matter beyond the reach of the laws it enforces, see Invention Submission Corp., 965 F.2d at 1089, we note that an inquiry into the bundling of rebates on condoms and other types of products with the purpose of sustaining market power in the market for condoms is arguably within the condemnation of the Sherman Act as the Third Circuit construed it in LePage's, 324 F.3d at 154-57 (concluding 3M's practice of bundling rebates for multiple products in order to maintain its monopoly in one of them was an exclusionary practice in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act).[]

Church & Dwight suggests we should reject this interpretation of the Resolution because the Commission's subpoena and CID are too narrowly focused to support a case premised upon a theory of bundling that includes products other than condoms. The Company reasons the Commission, had it wanted to pursue such a theory, would have requested information on products other than condoms even when that information appears in documents that contain no information on condoms. This argument fails because HN7[] we do not require the Commission to seek in one document request all the information it might need in order successfully to establish a violation at trial.

LePage's is of course not the law of this circuit, and it has been roundly criticized, see, e.g., Antitrust Modernization Comm'n, Report and Recommendations 94 [11] (2007) ("The lack of clear standards regarding bundling, as reflected in LePage's v. 3M, may discourage conduct that is procompetitive or competitively neutral and thus may actually harm consumer welfare"); Bruce H. Kobayashi, The Law and Economics of [*1317] [454] Predatory Pricing, in ANTITRUST LAW AND ECONOMICS 116, 148 (Keith N. Hylton ed., 2009) ("The potential for liability will result in [firms with sufficient market power and multiple product lines] being deterred from using bundling that would have led to reduced prices for consumers and higher welfare"); Richard A. Epstein, Monopoly Dominance or Level Playing Field? The New Antitrust Paradox, 72 U. Chi. L. Rev. 49, 71 (2005) ("highly unlikely that 3M would tailor practices that cover six of its departments solely because of the effects that it would have on" the one product market in which it competed with LePage's); Daniel L. Rubinfeld, 3M's Bundled Rebates: An Economic Perspective, 72 U. Chi. L. Rev. 243, 254-56, 262-64 (2005) (by not following test for predatory conduct from Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 (1993), or some similar standard for predatory conduct, LePage's condemns behavior that does [12] not obviously reduce, and may even promote, consumer welfare). We need not, however, pass upon the merits of the rule in LePage's in order to resolve this case.

Because LePage's is the law in the Third Circuit, and because Church & Dwight sells both condoms and other consumer products within the Third Circuit, the Commission may lawfully investigate whether the Company's practices would constitute a violation of the law in that circuit. Although this court might someday reach a different resolution of the issue presented in LePage's, HN8[] "a subpoena enforcement action is [generally] not the proper forum in which to litigate disagreements over an agency's authority to pursue an investigation. Unless it is patently clear that an agency lacks the jurisdiction that it seeks to assert, an investigative subpoena will be enforced." Ken Roberts, 276 F.3d at 584. We hold, therefore, the Resolution lawfully encompasses an investigation into whether Church & Dwight has bundled discounts for condoms and other products in order to acquire or maintain a monopoly in the market for condoms in the United States.

C. Church & Dwight's Remaining Contentions

[*] The Commission's contention its Resolution also comprehends an investigation into potential tying is less than persuasive. HN6[] In a tying case, the plaintiff must allege the defendant company used market power in the tying product to gain [10] market power in the tied product. See Eastman Kodak, 504 U.S. at 464 & n.9. Here, however, the Commission indicated in its Resolution it is investigating only the acquisition or maintenance of a monopoly in the condom market; that is the only product market in which the FTC has alleged Church & Dwight has market power, and the Commission has not identified any potentially tied product.

We can dispose of Church & Dwight's other contentions [13] in short order. First, we reject the Company's contention the district court "never described" the materials sought in the subpoena and the CID; in fact, the district court described the disputed materials the Commission sought and the Company "seeks to redact" as "information from the documents [Church & Dwight] produce[d] regarding proprietary and confidential information on non-condom products ...." FTC v. Church & Dwight Co., 747 F. Supp. 2d 3, 8 (D.D.C. 2010) (internal quotation marks omitted). In any event, the Company does not actually dispute the identity of the materials at issue.

Second, Church & Dwight claims the district court's finding of relevance was based upon both a legal and a clear factual error. As for the legal error, the Company contends the district court was satisfied with mere "plausibility" instead of demanding the "reasonable relevance" required under Texaco. It bases this claim upon the following statement in the opinion of the district court: "[I]t is entirely plausible that information [concerning other products] appearing in the same document with relevant information concerning ... condoms would itself be relevant to the investigation." That statement [14] is not inconsistent, however, with the correct legal standard, viz., that the "requested materials ... be reasonably relevant to the investigation," which appears in the next sentence [*1318] [455] of the court's opinion, followed by a citation to Invention Submission.

As for the factual error, the Company erroneously argues Texaco requires the district court to "perform an independent review" of the information sought and "articulate the reasons underlying a finding of relevancy" to the investigation. Again the Company would demand of the district court a more searching probe of the relation between the Commission's inquiry and the information sought than our precedents require or even allow. As we said in Invention Submission, > HN9[] the Commission has no obligation to establish precisely the relevance of the material it seeks in an investigative subpoena by tying that material to a particular theory of violation. See Texaco, 555 F.2d at 877. ... [I]n light of the broad deference we afford the investigating agency, it is essentially the respondent's burden to show that the information is irrelevant. Cf. id. at 882 ....

965 F.2d at 1090.

The present Resolution, as we have explained, contemplates an investigation [15] into Church & Dwight's sales not only of condoms but also of other products. The information the Commission is seeking concerning those other products is obviously relevant to that investigation;[] the district court had no obligation to belabor the obvious.

III. Conclusion

Church & Dwight's claims fail because they rest upon an unduly narrow interpretation of the Resolution, one that is inconsistent with the principles laid out in Texaco and more recently applied in Invention Submission. The Commission contemplates an investigation into the bundling of rebates to retailers on sales of condoms and of other products, which may [16] violate the Sherman Act as interpreted by the Third Circuit in LePage's. Therefore the district court did not err in finding that the information concerning products other than condoms was reasonably relevant to the Commission's inquiry. Accordingly, the order of the district court granting enforcement of the Commission's subpoena and the associated CID is in all respects

Affirmed.

---

[*] The Commission also suggested at oral argument that the Company is required to produce information on products other than condoms even if that information is not directly relevant to its investigation because the Commission requested unredacted versions of documents containing at least some relevant information. We need not, however, reach the question whether the Commission's anti-redaction policy is permissible because we conclude the subpoena and CID at issue here are directed entirely toward information reasonably relevant to the Commission's investigation.

HN3[] Private Actions, State Regulation

Pursuant to § 542.18, Fla. Stat. (2009), every contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce in this state is unlawful. The Florida Legislature has indicated that its intent is for courts that are construing the Florida Antitrust Act to give due consideration and great weight to the interpretations of the federal courts relating to comparable federal antitrust statutes. § 542.32, Fla. Stat. (2005). Therefore, Florida courts look to federal cases to elucidate what is an agreement in restraint of trade and what proof constitutes a conspiracy.

HN5[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

In a distributor-termination case, there must be concerted action (contract, combination, or conspiracy) between the manufacturer and other distributors to establish an antitrust violation. Independent action is not proscribed. A manufacturer of course generally has a right to deal, or refuse to deal, with whomever it likes, as long as it does so independently. The manufacturer can announce its resale prices in advance and refuse to deal with those who fail to comply. And a distributor is free to acquiesce in the manufacturer's demand in order to avoid termination. Thus, a manufacturer's mere receipt of complaints from its wholesalers or agents who compete with the plaintiff, standing alone, does not constitute a conspiracy. There must also be some other evidence of a tacit understanding or agreement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN6[] Private Actions, State Regulation

Although Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp. and Parts Depot Co. v. Fla. Auto Supply, Inc., involved the legal standard for analyzing what constitutes a reasonable inference when considering a motion for a directed verdict, the same standard is applicable in evaluating the sufficiency of an antitrust claim where, as may often be the case in distributor-termination cases, the plaintiff's conclusion of concerted action is based on inferences from the alleged facts.

HN7[] Sherman Act, Claims

In identifying facts that are suggestive enough to render a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 antitrust conspiracy plausible, Florida courts have the benefit of prior rulings. Accordingly, a pleading which merely asserts complaints to the manufacturer by competing dealers followed by termination of a discounter would be insufficient to create a reasonable inference of a conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

HN8[] Sherman Act, Claims

To state a claim for antitrust conspiracy, the factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level on the assumption that all the allegations in the complaint are true (even if doubtful in fact). The complaint must contain enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest that an agreement was made and allegations plausibly suggesting (not merely consistent with) agreement.

HN9[] Sherman Act, Claims

To survive a motion to dismiss, a party claiming an antitrust conspiracy may not merely plead that an agreement was reached. The party must plead sufficient facts to establish each element and cannot use terms which are conclusory. The party must also allege that the agreement was an unreasonable restraint on competition. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 outlaws only unreasonable restraints. The factual allegations required to plead that an agreement unreasonably restrains competition depends on whether the agreement is categorized as vertical or horizontal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

HN10[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

Vertical restraints upon competition are those imposed by persons or firms on a different level of the distribution system than the level of the persons or firms receiving the impact of the restraints, e.g., resale price fixing may involve a manufacturer dictating the price at which a dealer sells a product. On the other hand, horizontal restraints are those imposed within the same distribution level, e.g., by some dealers refusing to sell to other dealers. Horizontal restraints also encompass the situation where dealers conspire to induce the manufacturer to refuse to deal with a particular dealer.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

HN11[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Price Fixing

A horizontal agreement exists where distributors conspire to induce a manufacturer to refuse to deal with a particular distributor. Price-fixing agreements between two or more competitors, otherwise known as horizontal price-fixing agreements, fall into the category of arrangements that are per se unlawful. Elimination, by joint collaborative action, of discounters from access to the market is a per se violation of the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

HN12[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

A horizontal cartel among competing manufacturers or competing retailers that decreases output or reduces competition in order to increase price is, and ought to be, per se unlawful. To the extent a vertical agreement setting minimum resale prices is entered upon to facilitate either type of cartel, it, too, would need to be held unlawful under the rule of reason.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

HN13[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The rule of reason requires the plaintiff in an antitrust case to prove that a restrictive practice constitutes an unreasonable restraint on competition. Under Florida law, three elements must be alleged under the rule of reason test: 1) that there is a specifically defined market; 2) that the defendants possessed the ability to affect price or output; and 3) that plaintiff's exclusion from the market did affect or was intended to affect the price or supply of goods in that market.

[*44] CIKLIN, J.

MYD Marine Distributor, Inc. and two affiliated companies[1](collectively referred to as "MYD") appeal the trial court's final order dismissing their antitrust claims with prejudice for failure to state a cause of action. Because we conclude that the amended complaint sufficiently alleges antitrust claims, we reverse.

MYD, as a distributor of marine paint and related products, purchases the paint and other goods it distributes from manufacturers and resells them to yacht builders, boatyards, and other customers who use marine paint in their businesses. Until it was terminated in November 2008, MYD was a distributor of Awlgrip topside yacht paint.[2] The appellees, International Paint Ltd. and International Paint LLC (collectively referred to as "International Paint"), manufacture Awlgrip paint.

In December 2008, MYD filed suit against International Paint and two competing Awlgrip distributors—Donovan Marine, Inc. ("Donovan") and East Coast Marine Distributors, Inc. d/b/a Gold Coast Marine Distributor ("Gold Coast"). In its complaint, MYD asserted claims under the state antitrust laws of Florida, California, and Maryland respectively. After its initial complaint was dismissed for failure to state a cause of action, MYD filed an amended complaint. The defendants again moved to dismiss.

In its amended complaint, [3] MYD alleged that it was the largest distributor of Awlgrip paint in North America and that it consistently sold "its products at significantly lower prices than the prices charged by its competitors." MYD then claimed that several competing distributors of Awlgrip paint (including Donovan and Gold Coast) conspired with one another and with International Paint to "eliminate the [*45] competitive threat posed by MYD's discounting and to raise prices to the levels charged by the conspiring distributors."

MYD next described specific instances where the "unlawful conspiracy" had been "either acknowledged or carried out by members of the conspiracy in the presence of witnesses." The paragraph of the amended complaint which is relevant to the defendant distributors in this case read in pertinent part:

[1] In the appellate briefs, the parties treat these three companies as a single entity; thus, for simplicity, the appellants are collectively [2] referred to in this opinion as the singular "MYD."

[2] In its amended complaint, MYD defines topside yacht paint as "paint and other related coatings used to paint pleasure boats above the water line."

> Michael Sharrow of Donovan and Joel Mains of Gold Coast jointly met with Ken Hickling, then Global Manager of the Awlgrip division of International Paint, at the Fort Lauderdale Boat Show. . . . Mr. Sharrow is a manager of Donovan and Mr. Mains is a principal and owner of Gold Coast. Donovan and Gold Coast are competitors of one another and of MYD. During the meeting, Mr. Mains and Mr. Sharrow vociferously [4] complained that MYD was "ruin[ing] the Awlgrip market" by undercutting their prices on Awlgrip products. . . . During this meeting, Mr. Sharrow and Mr. Mains jointly asked Mr. Hickling either (i) to coerce MYD into raising its Awlgrip prices or (ii) if MYD refused to raise its prices, to terminate MYD as an Awlgrip distributor. Mr. Hickling agreed to do so, thereby forming a three-way agreement among International Paint, Gold Coast and Donovan. When the three-way meeting ended, Mr. Del Monico [(MYD's owner)] approached Mr. Hickling and introduced himself. Mr. Hickling responded by saying: "So you're the fellow that Donovan and Gold Coast say ruined the Awlgrip market." . . . Mr. Hickling then asked Mr. Del Monico to raise MYD's profit margins to at least 25%. Mr. Del Monico stated that Mr. Hickling's request was against U.S. law, to which Mr. Hickling replied: "Well, I'm not an American, am I?"

MYD also alleged that representatives from International Paint had admitted on multiple occasions that it was "under intense pressure from MYD's competitors either to get MYD to raise its prices on Awlgrip products or to terminate MYD as an Awlgrip distributor." These factual allegations included [5] the names of the people who made the comments, those who heard them, and in many instances the dates on which they occurred.

The amended complaint also described a series of actions allegedly taken by International Paint to coerce MYD into raising its prices including: 1) requesting on several occasions that MYD raise its prices to levels charged by other distributors; 2) threatening to delay shipments of orders to MYD; 3) spreading false rumors that MYD was in serious financial difficulty; and 4) shipping defective product to MYD and then falsely telling MYD's customers who bought the defective product that it had informed MYD of the problem, but MYD resold the paint regardless. Ultimately, according to the amended complaint, when these coercive efforts failed, International Paint terminated MYD as an Awlgrip distributor. MYD also alleged statements made by International Paint representatives admitting that MYD's discount pricing was the reason for its termination.

After hearing arguments on the motions, the trial court granted the motions to dismiss MYD's amended complaint. When MYD subsequently advised the trial court that it did not intend to further amend its antitrust claims, the [6] trial court entered a final judgment in favor of International Paint, Donovan, and Gold Coast. This appeal followed.

HN1[] A dismissal for failure to state a cause of action is reviewed de novo. Wells v. Wells, 24 So. 3d 579, 582 (Fla. 4th DCA [*46] 2009). HN2[] "A motion to dismiss for failure to state a cause of action admits all well pleaded facts as true, as well as reasonable inferences that may arise from those facts." Id. (emphasis added) (citation and quotation marks omitted).

MYD sued International Paint, Donovan, and Gold Coast for violations of the Florida Antitrust Act of 1980.[3] See § 542.15, Fla. Stat. (2005). HN3[] Pursuant to section 542.18, Florida Statutes, "[e]very contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce in this state is unlawful." The Florida Legislature has indicated that its intent is for courts that are construing the Florida Antitrust Act to give "due consideration and great weight . . . to the interpretations of the federal courts relating to comparable federal antitrust statutes." See § 542.32, Fla. Stat. (2005). Therefore, we "look to federal cases to elucidate what is an agreement in restraint of trade and what proof constitutes a conspiracy." Parts Depot Co. v. Fla. Auto Supply, Inc., 669 So. 2d 321, 324 (Fla. 4th DCA 1996).

[3] MYD [7] also sued for violations of California and Maryland antitrust laws. Because those laws are, in relevant part, substantially similar to the Florida antitrust law and to the equivalent § 1 of the federal Sherman Act the analysis in terms of stating a cause of action in a Florida civil court, is the same under any of the three states' laws. See 15 U.S.C. § 1 HN4[] ("Every contract, combination . . . , or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce . . . is declared to be illegal."); § 542.18, Fla. Stat. (2009) ("Every contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce in this state is unlawful."); Cal. Bus. & Prof'l. Code §§ 16720, 16726 (West 2009); Md. Code Ann., Com. Law § 11-204(a) (West 2009) ("A person may not . . . [b]y contract, combination, or conspiracy with one or more other persons, unreasonably restrain trade or commerce . . . .").

HN5[] In a distributor-termination case, there must be concerted action ("contract, combination, or conspiracy") between the manufacturer and other distributors to establish an antitrust violation. See Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984) (discussing requirements for the comparable § 1 of the Sherman Act).

In [8] Monsanto, the United States Supreme Court explained:

> Independent action is not proscribed. A manufacturer of course generally has a right to deal, or refuse to deal, with whomever it likes, as long as it does so independently. United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 307, 39 S. Ct. 465, 63 L. Ed. 992, 1919 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 460 (1919). Under Colgate, the manufacturer can announce its resale prices in advance and refuse to deal with those who fail to comply. And a distributor is free to acquiesce in the manufacturer's demand in order to avoid termination.

Id. (citation omitted). Thus, "[a] manufacturer's mere receipt of complaints from its wholesalers or agents who compete with the plaintiff, standing alone, does not constitute a conspiracy." Parts Depot, 669 So. 2d at 324. There must also be "some other evidence of a tacit understanding or agreement." Id. at 325.

HN6[] Although Monsanto and Parts Depot involved the legal standard for analyzing what constitutes a reasonable inference when considering a motion for a directed verdict, the same standard is applicable in evaluating the sufficiency of an antitrust claim where, as may often be the case in distributor-termination cases, the plaintiff's conclusion of concerted action is based on inferences [9] from the alleged facts. See Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 556, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) HN7[] ("In identifying facts that are suggestive enough to render a § 1 conspiracy [*47] plausible, we have the benefit of . . . prior rulings . . . .").[4] Accordingly, a pleading which merely asserts complaints to the manufacturer by competing dealers followed by termination of a discounter would be insufficient to create a "reasonable inference" of a conspiracy.

In this case, however, MYD has pled much more than just mere complaints followed by termination. MYD alleged an exact place where the conspiracy was formed and the actual representatives from each of the defendants who participated in the agreement. It pled [11] that representatives from Donovan and Gold Coast arranged to meet jointly with a representative from International Paint at a Fort Lauderdale boat show. According to the amended complaint, the representatives "jointly asked" International Paint to force MYD to raise its prices and to terminate MYD as an Awlgrip distributor if MYD refused. MYD also alleged that International Paint agreed to do so, and that immediately after the meeting with the competing distributors, International Paint's representative asked MYD's principal to raise MYD's profit margins to at least 25%. The allegation that International Paint requested that MYD raise its prices immediately after the joint meeting with the competing distributors places International Paint's demand "in a context that raises a suggestion of a preceding agreement." See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557.

[4] In Twombly, the United States Supreme Court addressed the question of what "a plaintiff must plead in order to state a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act." 550 U.S. at 554-55. The Court concluded that HN8[] to state such a claim, the "[f]actual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level on the assumption that all the allegations in the complaint are true (even if doubtful in fact)." Id. at 555 (citations and footnote omitted). The Court further explained that the complaint must contain "enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest that an agreement was made" and "allegations plausibly suggesting (not merely consistent with) agreement." Id. at 556-57. The Court then looked to case law and commentary involving other stages [10] of antitrust trials (such as summary judgments and directed verdicts) to determine if the alleged conduct in that case (parallel conduct by competing companies) was sufficient.

While we are not bound by the United States Supreme Court's interpretation of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, we have been instructed by our legislature to give "due consideration and great weight . . . to the interpretations of the federal courts" in interpreting Florida's antitrust statutes. See § 542.32, Fla. Stat. Furthermore, we note that we have looked to federal cases in the past to guide us in analyzing the sufficiency of Florida antitrust complaints. See, e.g., Okeelanta Power Ltd. P'ship v. Fla. Power & Light Co., 766 So. 2d 264, 267 (Fla. 4th DCA 2000). As such, we believe that Florida courts should look to Twombly in determining whether an agreement in violation of the Florida Antitrust law can be reasonably inferred from the alleged facts.

Even if the above facts were insufficient, MYD also alleged an additional fact which when viewed in the light most favorable to it, further supports the allegation that an agreement was reached. MYD alleged that its owner responded to International Paint's request that MYD raise its prices by telling International Paint's representative that the [12] request was against U.S. law. The representative's alleged response was, "Well, I'm not an American, am I?" A reasonable inference from International Paint's response is that International Paint admitted that its conduct was in violation of U.S. antitrust law. Independent action by International Paint, however, would not be illegal. Thus, the response could be reasonably interpreted as an admission that International Paint's request that MYD raise its prices was made pursuant to the alleged agreement with Donovan and Gold Coast.

[*48] HN9[] To survive a motion to dismiss, MYD could not merely plead that an agreement was reached. See Okeelanta Power Ltd. P'ship v. Fla. Power & Light Co., 766 So. 2d 264, 267 (Fla. 4th DCA 2000) ("[T]he party must plead sufficient facts to establish each element and cannot use terms which are conclusory." (emphasis added)). MYD also had to allege that the agreement was an unreasonable restraint on competition. See Leegin Creative Leather Prods., Inc. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 885, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 (2007) ("[T]he Court has repeated time and again that § 1 outlaw[s] only unreasonable restraints." (citation and quotation marks omitted)); Parts Depot, 669 So. 2d at 325. The factual [13] allegations required to plead that an agreement unreasonably restrains competition depends on whether the agreement is categorized as vertical or horizontal.[5]

HN11[] A horizontal agreement exists where distributors conspire to induce a manufacturer to refuse to deal with a particular distributor. Parts Depot, 669 So. 2d at 324. "Price-fixing agreements between two or more competitors, otherwise known as horizontal price-fixing agreements, fall into the category of arrangements [14] that are per se unlawful." Texaco Inc. v. Dagher, 547 U.S. 1, 5, 126 S. Ct. 1276, 164 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2006); see also United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127, 145, 86 S. Ct. 1321, 16 L. Ed. 2d 415 (1966) ("Elimination, by joint collaborative action, of discounters from access to the market is a per se violation of the [Sherman] Act.").

Here, the factual allegations in MYD's amended complaint suggest that Donovan and Gold Coast conspired to induce International Paint to refuse to deal with MYD. MYD further alleged that this concerted action by Donovan and Gold Coast was done to protect themselves from price competition by MYD. Thus, the alleged conduct was a per se violation of the Florida Antitrust Act. See Texaco Inc., 547 U.S. at 5; General Motors, 384 U.S. at 145. As such, MYD was not required to plead any additional facts to show that the alleged agreement between Donovan and Gold Coast would have anticompetitive effects.

MYD also claims that its allegation that International Paint agreed to the demands of Donovan and Gold Coast made it a participant in the horizontal conspiracy, and as such International Paint's conduct was also per se unlawful. We disagree.

In Leegin, the United States Supreme Court explained:

> HN12[] A horizontal cartel among competing [15] manufacturers or competing retailers that decreases output or reduces competition in order to increase price is, and ought to be, per se unlawful. To the extent a vertical agreement setting minimum resale prices is entered upon to facilitate either type of cartel, it, too, would need to be held unlawful under the rule of reason.

[5] In Parts Depot, we explained the distinction between vertical and horizontal restraints:

> HN10[] "Vertical" restraints upon competition are those imposed by persons or firms on a different level of the distribution system than the level of the persons or firms receiving the impact of the restraints, e.g., resale price fixing may involve a manufacturer dictating the price at which a dealer sells a product.
> On the other hand, "horizontal" restraints are those imposed within the same distribution level, e.g., by some dealers refusing to sell to other dealers. Horizontal restraints also encompass the situation where dealers conspire to induce the manufacturer to refuse to deal with a particular dealer.

669 So. 2d at 324 (citation omitted).

[*49] 551 U.S. at 893 (emphasis added) (internal citation omitted). MYD has alleged that International Paint agreed to set a minimum resale price (gross profit margins of at least 25% which is a 33% markup) in order to help the horizontal cartel to increase average retail prices of Awlgrip paint. Thus, according to Leegin, International Paint's participation created a vertical agreement between International Paint and the cartel and should be analyzed under the rule of reason.

HN13[] The rule of reason "requires the plaintiff to prove that a restrictive practice constitutes an unreasonable restraint on competition." Parts Depot, 669 So. 2d at 325. Under Florida law, "[t]hree elements must be alleged . . . under the rule of reason test: 1) that there is a specifically defined market; 2) that the defendants possessed the ability to affect price or output; and 3) that plaintiff's [16] exclusion from the market did affect or was intended to affect the price or supply of goods in that market." Id. at 326.

MYD alleged the three required elements in its amended complaint. According to the amended complaint, the relevant product market was topside yacht paint, which was defined as "paint and other related coatings used to paint pleasure boats above the water line." MYD further alleged that "[t]opside yacht paint is not reasonably interchangeable with other types of marine paint, such as paint used on commercial vessels (e.g., tugboats and barges) or bottom paint (also known as anti-fouling paint) used on pleasure boats." The amended complaint also stated that the relevant geographic markets depended on the size of the customers. For large customers such as yacht manufacturers, the relevant geographic market was the entire United States. For smaller accounts, the relevant geographic market was regional with the relevant regional markets relevant to this case being South Florida, the mid-Atlantic, Southern California, Northern California, and the Pacific Northwest. Thus, MYD alleged "enough information in [its] complaint to [reasonably] suggest the contours of the relevant [17] geographic and product markets." See Jacobs v. Tempur-Pedic Int'l, Inc., 626 F.3d 1327, 1336 (11th Cir. 2010).

MYD also alleged that International Paint possessed the ability to affect price or output in this specifically defined market. According to the amended complaint, International Paint had "market power?the ability to raise prices above competitive levels without losing sufficient sales to make the price increase unprofitable—in each of the relevant markets." MYD supported its contention with the following factual allegations: (1) Awlgrip paint has a market share above 80% in the topside yacht paint market; and (2) International Paint "earns supracompetitive margins on Awlgrip paint."

To show that MYD's exclusion from the relevant market did affect or was intended to affect the price or supply of goods in that market, MYD alleged that it was the largest distributor of Awlgrip paint in North America and that it consistently sold its products "at significantly lower prices than the prices charged by [its] competitors." Thus, MYD's termination as an Awlgrip distributor resulted in the removal of a significant discounter from the market. MYD also alleged that Awlgrip had a sufficiently [18] dominant position that customers continued to buy Awlgrip at higher prices after MYD was terminated rather than substituting other brands of topside yacht paint.

Thus, MYD's amended complaint contains sufficient factual allegations to properly plead that the vertical agreement between International Paint and the competing distributors was an unreasonable [*50] restraint on competition. Therefore, the trial court erred in granting International Paint's motion to dismiss MYD's antitrust claims for failure to state a cause of action.

The other two points on appeal raised by MYD have been carefully considered and found to be either without merit or not yet ripe for appellate review. Because MYD's amended complaint contains sufficient factual allegations to properly plead antitrust claims, we reverse the trial court's orders granting the motions to dismiss the amended complaint against International Paint, Donovan, and Gold Coast.

Reversed and remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Jurisdiction

HN21[] Separation of Powers, Jurisdiction

El concepto jurisdicción estatutaria o exclusiva guarda relación con la jurisdicción primaria concurrente pero es distinto en cuanto a su alcance y naturaleza. En la jurisdicción exclusiva se trata de situaciones en que no aplica la doctrina de jurisdicción primaria concurrente porque la propia ley aclara que esta última no existe. Es decir, el propio estatuto establece una jurisdicción exclusiva. Cuando un estatuto le confiere de manera expresa la jurisdicción a un órgano administrativo sobre determinado tipo de asuntos, los tribunales no tendrán autoridad para dilucidar el caso en primera instancia. Claro está, la jurisdicción primaria exclusiva no soslaya la revisión judicial posterior de la decisión del organismo.

San Juan, Puerto Rico, a 15 de diciembre de 2011.

En esta ocasión la controversia que nos ocupa es relativamente sencilla: ?tiene legitimación activa una persona privada, detallista de gasolina, para presentar una causa de acción ante el Tribunal de Primera Instancia contra [2] un distribuidor-mayorista de ese producto por alegadas violaciones a las disposiciones relativas al deber de desvinculación operacional que establece el Art. 4A de la Ley de Control de Productores, Refinadores y Distribuidores-Mayoristas de Gasolina?[1] Al atender tal interrogante, interpretamos por primera vez de forma conjunta dos estatutos que regulan la competencia en el mercado de gasolina, a saber: la Ley de Control de Productores, Refinadores y Distribuidores-Mayoristas de Gasolina, Ley Núm. 3 de 21 de marzo de 1978, según enmendada, 23 L.P.R.A. sec. 1101 et seq. (Ley de Gasolina), y la Ley de Monopolios [*909] y Restricción del Comercio, Ley Núm. 77 de 25 de junio de 1964, según enmendada, 10 L.P.R.A sec. 257 et seq. (Ley de Monopolios).

[1] 23 L.P.R.A. sec. 1104a.

La peticionaria Esso Standard Oil Company (la peticionaria o Esso) es una corporación dedicada a la importación, distribución y venta de gasolina al por mayor, o sea, un distribuidor-mayorista.[2] Por su parte, las recurridas Aguadilla Paint Center, Inc., y CB Gasoline Service Group, Inc. (las recurridas) son detallistas,[3] o sea, vendedores al detal de gasolina, en este caso gasolina importada, distribuida y vendida por la peticionaria [3] Esso (detallistas de marca).

Para agosto de 2004, las recurridas presentaron una demanda ante el tribunal de instancia en la que imputaron a la peticionaria Esso, inter alia, incurrir en la práctica de vinculación operacional, en contravención al Art. 4A de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, y al Art. 7 de la Ley de Monopolios.[4] Además, solicitaron resarcimiento en daños y perjuicios, según el Art. 1802 del Código Civil, 31 L.P.R.A. sec. 5141.

Luego de múltiples incidentes procesales,[5] el 12 de marzo de 2010 Esso solicitó la desestimación de la demanda [*910] al amparo de la Regla 10.2 de Procedimiento Civil.[6] En su moción, Esso argumentó básicamente que la causa de acción de las recurridas, fundada en la obligación de "desvinculación operacional" que establece el Art. 4A de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, debía ser desestimada porque el Art. 8 de la Ley de Gasolina, 23 L.P.R.A. sec. 1108, establece que una violación al Art. 4A "constituirá una práctica o acto injusto o engañoso y estará sujeto a las disposiciones de las secs. 257 et seq." de la Ley de Monopolios, supra.

El tribunal de instancia declaró no ha lugar la solicitud de desestimación de Esso, al concluir "que un ente privado como la demandante puede presentar una acción al amparo del Artículo 7 de la [Ley de Gasolina, 23 L.P.R.A. Sec. 1107] sobre competencia en el mercado de gasolina, ante el Tribunal de Primera Instancia".[7] Inconforme, Esso recurrió ante el Tribunal de Apelaciones mediante recurso de certiorari. Dicho foro concluyó que, luego de un análisis ponderado del [5] recurso presentado y los documentos que obraban en el expediente, Esso no lo había colocado en condiciones de conceder el remedio solicitado y que el dictamen recurrido no ameritaba su intervención en esa etapa procesal.

Ante tal dictamen, Esso acudió ante esta Curia mediante recurso de certiorari esbozando los siguientes señalamientos de error:

> Erró el Tribunal de Apelaciones al no expedir el auto solicitado y reconocer que el Art. 12(a) de la Ley de Monopolios excluye demandas privadas por alegada vinculación operacional bajo el Art. 4A de la Ley de Gasolina.
> Erró el Tribunal de Apelaciones al no expedir el auto solicitado y no ordenar la desestimación de la reclamación bajo el Art. 4A de la Ley de Gasolina, ya que los demandantes no tienen legitimación activa para incoarla y, por lo tanto, el Tribunal de Primera Instancia carece de jurisdicción sobre la materia para atenderla.

[4] 10 L.P.R.A. sec. 263.

[5] El [4] 1 de octubre de 2004, Esso solicitó por primera vez la desestimación de la demanda, basado en que el Art. 4 de la Ley de Gasolina desplazaba la aplicación del Art. 7 de la Ley de Monopolios (caso DAC2005-0343). Sin embargo, el Tribunal de Primera Instancia denegó la solicitud de desestimación, por lo que Esso recurrió ante el Tribunal de Apelaciones (caso KLCE2005-00564). El Tribunal de Apelaciones denegó la expedición del auto mediante "Resolución" de 26 de mayo de 2005. Entonces, Esso recurrió ante este Tribunal mediante certiorari, el cual denegamos el 10 de noviembre de 2005. Tal determinación advino final y firme, continuando así los procedimientos ante el Tribunal de Primera Instancia.

> [*911] Erró el Tribunal de Apelaciones al determinar que Esso no lo colocó en "condiciones de conceder el remedio solicitado", ya que se cumplen los criterios para la expedición del auto contenidos en la Regla 40 del Reglamento del Tribunal de Apelaciones.

Expedido [6] el certiorari, paralizamos los procedimientos y ordenamos a las partes presentar sus correspondientes alegatos.[8] Con el beneficio de la posición de todas las partes, resolvemos.

A. Ley de Control de Productores, Refinadores y Distribuidores-Mayoristas de Gasolina

Según surge de su Exposición de Motivos, la aprobación de la Ley de Control de Productores, Refinadores y Distribuidores-Mayoristas de Gasolina, Ley Núm. 3 de 21 de marzo de 1978, según enmendada, 23 L.P.R.A. sec. 1101 et seq., tuvo como propósito -entre otros- combatir el problema "que representa el que el control de los abastos de productos energéticos y, en especial, la gasolina y otros combustibles derivados del petróleo y del gas natural, continúe concentrándose en las manos de unos pocos que dominan todos los aspectos relacionados con la producción, refinación y mercadeo de estos productos".[9] De manera que el legislador buscó eliminar las ventajas competitivas existentes en el mercado de la gasolina o combustibles especiales de motor, [7] así como disponer sobre la supervisión de ese proceso y establecer medidas para el cumplimiento de los propósitos perseguidos por dicho estatuto. A tenor [*912] con este fin, el legislador tipificó delitos y fijó penalidades a los infractores del estatuto.

De esta manera, la Asamblea Legislativa determinó que, ante la falta de uniformidad competitiva, era necesario instituir salvaguardas minuciosas que impidieran las actuaciones de las compañías petroleras y distribuidoras de productos energéticos dirigidas a monopolizar los puntos de distribución pública de gasolina.[10] Además, la Ley de Gasolina persigue proteger la industria de la venta de combustible al detal de toda práctica discriminatoria que pretenda eliminar al detallista individual de gasolina de la competencia del mercado, así como también de aquellas prácticas discriminatorias y de control sobre la estructura de precios dirigidas a favorecer a unos detallistas en perjuicio de otros y del consumidor.[11]

Por otro lado, apenas unos meses después de aprobada la Ley de Gasolina, la Legislatura aprobó -a manera de addendum [8] a esta última- la Ley Núm. 73 de 23 de junio de 1978, según enmendada, 23 L.P.R.A. sec. 1131 et seq. (Ley Núm. 73), dirigida a la "Reglamentación y Control de la Industria de la Gasolina". Con la aprobación de la Ley Núm. 73 se declaró "la industria de la gasolina en todas sus facetas como una revestida de interés público".[12] Al así hacerlo se reconoció que la industria de la gasolina constituye un elemento fundamental para la seguridad y el bienestar del pueblo de Puerto Rico. Esto debido a que de la disponibilidad de ese producto dependía en gran medida en aquel entonces -y evidentemente continúa siendo así en la actualidad- el normal funcionamiento de nuestra economía y el continuo desarrollo de las actividades cotidianas del País.[13]

[*913] Cónsono con la Ley de Gasolina, el propósito de la Ley Núm. 73 es regular de manera efectiva ciertos aspectos de la industria de la gasolina y así asegurar que los intereses del pueblo de Puerto Rico estén adecuadamente protegidos [9] de actividades perjudiciales que tengan lugar en cualquiera de los distintos niveles operacionales de esa industria.[14] Al así actuar, el legislador señaló que es al Gobierno al que 1e compete asegurar que exista una situación estable dentro de toda actividad que afecte el bienestar general de la ciudadanía, así como asegurar el buen orden de la comunidad y la protección de los mejores intereses del sistema económico y gubernamental.[15]

Con el fin de cumplir con sus propósitos, la Ley Núm. 73 estableció ciertas obligaciones y prohibiciones que se detallan en su Art. 3.[16] Entre ellas y a manera de ejemplo, se prohíbe que en las relaciones entre distribuidores-mayoristas y detallistas existan simultáneamente contratos de arrendamiento y subarrendamiento (lease and lease-back), cuando dicha relación tenga el efecto o el propósito de cancelar la obligación del pago entre las partes o de restringir irrazonablemente el derecho a la libre contratación o a la disposición de la propiedad.[17] Además, la Ley Núm. 73 estableció la obligación a todo distribuidor-mayorista de presentar [10] en la Oficina de Asuntos Monopolísticos (O.A.M.)[18] una copia legible de todo contrato en el que se establezca una relación comercial con un detallista, dentro de los diez días siguientes a su formalización, así como toda enmienda o modificación subsiguiente a éste.

[*914] Conjuntamente, y para asegurar el cumplimiento de sus objetivos y propósitos, la Ley Núm. 73 facultó a varias agencias gubernamentales y les impuso la responsabilidad de realizar diversas funciones. Entre esas agencias se encuentran el Departamento de Comercio,[19] la Comisión de Servicio Público, la Junta de Planificación, la Administración de Reglamentos y Permisos y el Departamento de Asuntos del Consumidor (D.A.Co.).[20]

Finalmente, es menester considerar lo que establece el Art. 5 de la Ley Núm. 73 con relación a la Ley de Monopolios, supra:

> § 1134* [11] Aplicación de la Ley de Monopolios
> Nada de lo aquí dispuesto o promulgado por reglamento o de otra forma, conforme a las disposiciones de las secs. 1131 a 1135 de este título, será interpretado como que exceptúa de o confiere inmunidad en cuanto a la aplicabilidad de las disposiciones de las secs. 257 a 274 del Título 10.[21]

En resumen, es evidente que desde sus inicios tanto la Ley de Gasolina como su addendum, la Ley Núm. 73, dispusieron no sólo para la protección de la industria de venta de combustible al detal de toda práctica discriminatoria en perjuicio de los mejores intereses del pueblo de Puerto Rico, sino que reconocieron expresamente la injerencia de la Ley de Monopolios, supra, en tal proceso. Así, ambas leyes dispusieron para que la actuación del Departamento de Justicia de Puerto Rico, a través de su O.A.M., fuera una cardinal en el cumplimiento de sus disposiciones fiscalizadoras. Además, el legislador dispuso para que otras agencias gubernamentales, tales como el D.A.Co., tuvieran también participación.

A tono con todo lo anterior, el Art. 2(a) de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, 23 L.P.R.A. sec. 1102, establece que:

Asimismo, el Art. 4 de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, 23 L.P.R.A. sec. 1104, establece que:

> HN2[] [t]odo productor o refinador de petróleo o distribuidor-mayorista de productos de petróleo que supla gasolina y/o combustibles especiales a estaciones de servicio para la venta al detal de dichos productos estará obligado a proveer uniformemente a todos los detallistas de venta de gasolina y/o combustibles especiales a quienes supla, todo descuento, deducción, disminución o rebaja en precios que conceda de forma directa o indirecta.[22]

Ahora bien, relacionado directamente a la controversia que nos ocupa, analizamos el Art. 4A de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, el cual dispone lo siguiente:

> § 1104a Desvinculación operacional
> HN5[] Ningún refinador, productor de petróleo o distribuidor-mayorista podrá, mediante convenio, arreglo, contrato, esquema corporativo operacional, con cualquier detallista y/o persona natural o jurídica, [14] o de cualquier otra forma operar directamente una estación de servicio de venta al detal de gasolina [*916] de forma que impida su completa desvinculación operacional. Ningún refinador, productor de petróleo o distribuidor-mayorista podrá, mediante convenio, arreglo, contrato, esquema corporativa [sic] operacional, con cualquier detallista y/o persona natural o jurídica, o de cualquier otra forma imponer, requerir, fijar o limitar directamente el margen de ganancia y/o el precio de venta al detal de la gasolina y/o combustibles especiales en la estación de servicio de venta al detal.

El Art. 4A de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, es el resultado de una enmienda que se hiciera a este estatuto mediante la Ley Núm. 157 de 21 de agosto de 1996 y otra enmienda al propio artículo -que añade la segunda oración- mediante la aprobación de la Ley Núm. 74-2005. El artículo establece la "desvinculación operacional" o, lo que es lo mismo, prohíbe la llamada "vinculación operacional" de los mayoristas de gasolina con las estaciones de venta a1 detal. La Ley Núm. 157 también enmendó la Ley de Gasolina para establecer que "desvinculación operacional" es el cese por parte de un refinador, productor de petróleo o [15] distribuidor-mayorista "de participar en forma directa en la operación o actividades de intercambio comercial de la venta al detal de gasolina y combustibles especiales en 1as estaciones de servicio de venta al detal".[23]

De otra parte, y cardinal a la controversia que nos ocupa, debemos considerar también el Art. 8 de la Ley de Gasolina, el cual dispone lo siguiente:

Mientras, HN4[] el Art. 6 de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, 23 L.P.R.A., sec. 1106, ordena la distribución uniforme de combustible en periodos de escasez o disminución en el abasto o disponibilidad de gasolina o de combustibles especiales. El Art. 7 de la mencionada Ley prohíbe que un vendedor al detal de combustible, a sabiendas, solicite o induzca la concesión, o rebaja en precios o en la renta de equipos y rótulos, en violación a los Arts. 4 y 5 de la Ley de Gasolina, 23 L.P.R.A. sec. 1107.

> HN6[] Cualquier violación a las secs. 1102, 1102a, 1104, 1104a, 1105 y 1105a de este título constituirá una práctica o acto injusto [o] engañoso y estará sujeto a las disposiciones de las secs. 257 et seq. del Título 10.[24] (Énfasis suplido.)

El Art. 8 de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, está dirigido a dos fines íntimamente ligados. En primer lugar, instaurar [*917] como "práctica o acto injusto o engañoso" toda violación a los Arts. 2, 2A, 4, 4A, 5 y 5A de la Ley de Gasolina. En segundo lugar, establecer que cualquier violación a los artículos mencionados estará sujeta a lo dispuesto en la Ley de Monopolios, supra. Complementando esta disposición, el Art. 10 de la Ley de Gasolina dispone que "[e]l cumplimiento de los propósitos y las disposiciones de las [16] secs. 1101 a 1110 de [la Ley de Gasolina] será responsabilidad del Secretario de Justicia, por conducto de la Oficina de Asuntos Monopolísticos de dicho Departamento".[25]

En su versión original, el Art. 8 de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, leía de la siguiente manera:

> Cualquier violación a los Arts. 4, 5, 6 y 7 constituirá una práctica o acto injusto o engañoso y estará sujeto a las disposiciones del Artículo 3 de la Ley Núm. 77 de 25 de junio de 1964.[26]

Nótese que este artículo originalmente hacía referencia a violaciones al Art. 4 de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, el cual establece la obligación de todo productor o refinador de petróleo o distribuidor-mayorista de productos de petróleo de proveer uniformidad en todo descuento, deducción, disminución o rebaja en precios, a los detallistas; violaciones al Art. 5, el cual establece la obligación de todo productor o refinador de petróleo o distribuidor-mayorista de productos de petróleo de proveer uniformidad en la renta de equipos y rótulos a los detallistas; y violaciones al Art. 6, el cual establece la obligación de todo productor o refinador de petróleo o distribuidor-mayorista [17] de productos de petróleo de instaurar un prorrateo indiscriminado y una distribución uniforme entre todos los detallistas a quienes supla gasolina para la venta, durante tiempos de escasez, o disminución en el abasto o disponibilidad de gasolina o de combustibles especiales. Por otro lado, el Art. 8 en su versión original también hacía referencia a violaciones al Art. 7, el [*918] cual establece una prohibición al detallista de solicitar o inducir la concesión o rebaja en precios en la renta de equipos y rótulos. Como puede percibirse, cada disposición a la cual el Art. 8 en su versión original hacía referencia -Arts. 4 al 7- contenía una prohibición cuya violación, constituía "una práctica o acto injusto o engañoso".

Ahora bien, desde su redacción original el Art. 8 de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, ha sufrido dos enmiendas. La primera de ellas mediante la aprobación de la Ley Núm. 157 de 21 de agosto de 1996 (Ley Núm. 157), la cual en su Exposición de Motivos señalaba lo siguiente (haciendo referencia a la Ley Núm. 3 de 1978, Ley de Gasolina):

> En el 1978, la Asamblea Legislativa aprobó legislación dirigida a proteger a los detallistas de gasolina de posibles prácticas predadoras de parte de compañías [18] mayoristas distribuidora de gasolina. Una de esas leyes, la Ley Núm. 3... dispuso que ninguna compañía mayorista podía operar directamente estaciones de gasolina, sujeto a determinadas excepciones. La responsabilidad para vigilar por el cumplimiento de esta ley fue asignada al Secretario de Justicia a través de su Oficina de Asuntos Monopolísticos. (Énfasis suplido.)[27]

Como puede verse, en la Exposición de Motivos de la Ley Núm. 157, la Asamblea Legislativa mencionó la Ley de Gasolina entre aquellas cuya intención es "proteger a los detallistas de gasolina de posibles prácticas predadoras de parte de compañías mayoristas distribuidoras de gasolina". (Énfasis suplido.)[28] Además, señaló que la Ley de Gasolina "dispuso que ninguna compañía mayorista podía operar directamente estaciones de gasolina, sujeto a determinadas excepciones".[29] De manera que la Ley Núm. 157, en su Exposición de Motivos reconoció como una práctica depredadora, esto es, dañina a los detallistas y prohibida por la Ley de Gasolina, aquella en la cual el mayorista [*919] operaba directamente una estación de gasolina. Señalaba, además, [19] que la fiscalización de esa prohibición era un asunto a ser trabajado por la Oficina de Asuntos Monopolísticos.

Por otro lado, en su último párrafo, la Exposición de Motivos de la Ley Núm. 157 también señala como su propósito el enmendar la Ley de Gasolina a los efectos de que se establezca la completa separación entre las operaciones de ventas al detal y las de mayoristas y refinadores de gasolina. El texto mencionado lee así:

> Con la presente medida se pretende cerrar las brechas de excepción que, por quedar abiertas en 1978, han limitado el logro de los objetivos públicos en esta industria. En específico, se establece la completa separación entre las operaciones de ventas al detal y las de mayoristas y refinadores de gasolina, disponiéndose un plazo para que se lleven a efectos las desvinculaciones necesarias hasta lograrlos. (Énfasis suplido.)[30]

Como parte de las enmiendas realizadas a la Ley de Gasolina dirigidas a establecer esa "completa separación entre las operaciones" de detallistas y mayoristas, la Ley Núm. 157 creó el mencionado Art. 4A, que prohíbe todo acto que impida [20] la llamada "desvinculación operacional". La definición de "desvinculación operacional", que la propia Ley Núm. 157 también estableció como una de las enmiendas a la Ley de Gasolina, supra, señala que ésta HN7[] "ocurre cuando un... distribuidor mayorista cesa de participar en forma directa en la operación y/o actividades de intercambio comercial de la venta al detal de gasolina... en las estaciones de venta al detal".[31]

Ahora bien, la enmienda al Art. 8 de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, producida por la Ley Núm. 157 cambió la mayoría de los artículos a los que hacía referencia la versión del artículo original. La versión del Art. 8 después de la enmienda de la Ley Núm. 157 pasó a ser la siguiente:

> [*920] Cualquier violación a los Artículos 1, 2, 3, 4 y 5 constituirá una práctica o acto injusto o engañoso y estará sujeto a las disposiciones del Artículo 3 de la Ley Núm. 77 de 25 de junio de 1964, según enmendada.

Al analizar el texto anterior tenemos que concluir que la referida enmienda al Art. 8 producida por la Ley Núm. 157 produjo cambios ilógicos en unos casos e inconsecuentes en otros. Nos explicamos. En primer lugar, no guarda relación alguna con la lógica el que una ley [21] en cuya Exposición de Motivos se señala que su propósito es enmendar la Ley de Gasolina para establecer una completa separación entre las operaciones de ventas al detal y las de mayoristas, evitando así "posibles prácticas predadoras [monopolísticas] de parte de compañías mayoristas distribuidoras de gasolina"; que crea el Art. 4A de "desvinculación operacional" para esos fines, y que reconoce que la fiscalización de tal cumplimiento descansa en el expertise de la O.A.M., no incluya el Art. 4A como parte de la enmienda al mencionado Art. 8 de la Ley de Gasolina, supra.

Por otro lado, la enmienda al Art. 8 de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, que introdujo la Ley Núm. 157 también incluyó, como "práctica o acto injusto o engañoso", cualquier violación al Art. 1 de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, 23 L.P.R.A. sec. 1101. Sin embargo, el Art. 1 de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, solo establecía en ese entonces -y establece actualmente- una serie de definiciones de términos, ninguno de los cuales constituye una prohibición per se. Por lo tanto, nadie podía cometer una violación al Art. 1 de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, pues tal artículo no prohibía ni prohíbe cosa alguna.

Por último, lo mismo ocurría con el Art. [22] 3 de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, 23 L.P.R.A. sec. 1103. Tal artículo establecía en aquel momento -y permanece igual al presente- la creación del "Comité Interagencial sobre la Industria de la Gasolina". Como ocurría con el Art. 1 ("Definiciones"), el Art. 3 no instituía prohibición alguna, por lo que la inclusión [*921] de ese artículo en la enumeración establecida por la enmienda de la Ley Núm. 157 al Art. 8 de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, resultaba totalmente inconsecuente.

Siendo así, la pregunta que procede es a qué obedeció la redacción y aprobación final del Art. 8 de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, después de la enmienda integrada por la Ley Núm. 157. Aunque el historial legislativo no nos arroja demasiada luz al respecto, sí encontramos que la primera versión de enmienda a este artículo (que se presentó en el Proyecto de Ley de la Cámara de Representantes) señalaba que constituiría una práctica o acto injusto o engañoso "[c]ualquier violación a los Artículos 2, 4, 4A, 5, 5A, 6, 6A, y 7". (Itálicas en el original y énfasis suplido.)[32]

Por otro lado, al codificarse la versión de la segunda y [23] última enmienda que sufriera este artículo mediante la Ley Núm. 74 de 25 de agosto de 2005, se señala en su historial la siguiente nota de codificación:

> La ley enmendadora de 1996 parece haberse referido a los arts. 1, 2, 3, 4 y 5 de la propia ley en vez de los artículos enmendados o adicionados por la misma, a saber: arts. 1, 2, 4A, 5A y 8, o sea, secs. 1101, 1102, 1104a, 1105a y 1108 de este título. Sin embargo, por tener semejanza al contenido de las secciones referidas originalmente en la ley de 1978, pudiera ser que la ley de 1996 intentó referirse a los arts. 4, 4A, 5 y 5A de la ley, secs. 1104, 1104a, 1105 y 1105a de este título. (Énfasis suplido.)

Al considerar todo lo anterior, no nos cabe duda de que HN8[] la versión del Art. 8 de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, que surgió como resultado de la enmienda realizada por la Ley Núm. 157 fue el producto de un error probablemente tipográfico, que no reflejaba la intención o voluntad del legislador. Como sugiere la nota de codificación del historial de este artículo, entendemos que la intención de la Ley Núm. 157 era incluir los Arts. 4, 4A, 5 y 5A en la versión [*922] del Art. 8 de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, y su exclusión responde a un mero error [24] administrativo ("clerical error").

Determinamos lo anterior, considerando la norma de hermenéutica jurídica que reiteramos en Passalacqua v. Mun. de San Juan, 16 P.R. Offic. Trans. 756, 116 D.P.R. 618, 623 (1985), en donde señalamos lo siguiente:

> En Roig Commercial Bank v. Buscaglia, Tes., 74 P.R.R. 919, 74 D.P.R. 986, 998 (1953), este Tribunal determinó que HN9[] si una palabra, frase o disposición ha sido aprobada por inadvertencia o error, especialmente si es contraria al resto de la ley o limitaría la efectividad de ésta, se puede eliminar. Entendemos que bajo las mismas circunstancias se puede añadir una frase o palabras, para que se pueda cumplir con la intención legislativa. (Énfasis suplido.)

De manera que, siendo consistentes con lo que ha sido nuestra pauta en materia de interpretación jurídica al confrontar situaciones en una ley como la del caso de autos, determinamos que el legislador tuvo la intención de que el Art. 4A formara parte de los enumerados en el Art. 8 de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, desde la aprobación de la Ley Núm. 157; así debe interpretarse.

Para finalizar el análisis de los artículos de la Ley de Gasolina que son necesarios considerar para la resolución del caso de autos, tenemos que referirnos al Art. 7, [25] de la mencionada ley, 23 L.P.R.A. sec. 1107. Dicho artículo dispone lo siguiente:

> § 1107* Obligación del detallista
> HN10[] Ninguna persona natural o jurídica que opere una estación de servicio de venta al detal podrá, a sabiendas, solicitar o inducir la concesión, o rebaja en precios o en la renta de equipos y rótulos, en violación a las secs. 1104 y 1105 de este título. (Énfasis suplido.)

Como surge claramente de su texto -incluso desde el título-, este artículo se dirige únicamente al vendedor al detal de combustible, prohibiéndole el que, a sabiendas, induzca o le solicite a un productor o distribuidor-mayorista [*923] (entre otros) la concesión o rebaja en precios o en la renta de equipos y rótulos, en violación a los Artículos

[32] Véase P. de la C. 2288 de 30 de enero de 1996, 7ma Sesión Ordinaria, 12 Asamblea Legislativa, pág. 7.

4 y 5 de la Ley de Gasolina. En otras palabras, el objeto de prohibición es aquel detallista que pretende solicitar o inducir a un productor o distribuidor-mayorista a que le provea precios distintos en la gasolina o los combustibles especiales, que los que provee a otros detallistas, esto, en violación al Art. 4 de la Ley de Gasolina, supra. De igual manera, el artículo está dirigido únicamente a aquel detallista que solicite o induzca al productor o distribuidor-mayorista [26] (entre otros) a que le provea una renta distinta de equipos y rótulos que aquella que se le provee a otros detallistas, esto, en violación al Art. 5 de la Ley de Gasolina.

B. Ley de Monopolios

Las leyes monopolísticas, así como aquellas que pretenden establecer la justa competencia y que establecen restricciones al comercio, constituyen estatutos que precisan extremo cuidado tanto en su legislación como en su interpretación jurídica. El objetivo que inspira este tipo de estatuto está fundamentado en intereses apremiantes y, como tal, indispensables para la economía de la jurisdicción en la que se aplican.

Así, en Colón Cabrera v. Caribbean Petroleum,[33] expresamos con relación a nuestra Ley de Monopolios que, "considerando que se trata de un asunto que incide sobre los cimientos de nuestra sociedad democrática, entendemos que los propósitos que subyacen dicha legislación son de la más alta jerarquía y constituyen un interés apremiante del Estado".

El propósito principal de este tipo de estatuto yace en el principio económico fundamental que dispone la preservación de la libertad de competencia y el entorpecimiento de [*924] toda práctica que perjudique el desarrollo [27] de los distintos mercados. Por lo tanto, tales estatutos tienen como objetivo la erradicación de los actos abusivos, desleales y monopolísticos que tiendan a limitar la actividad mercantil, favoreciendo así la libre y abierta competencia en los mercados.[34]

En Puerto Rico, la Ley de Monopolios, supra, fue redactada tomando como base dos estatutos federales: la Ley Sherman[35] y la Ley Clayton.[36] De hecho, este también es el patrón en la mayoría de los estados de la Unión que también cuentan con estatutos que regulan de alguna manera la competencia, los monopolios y las restricciones al comercio, y que contienen disposiciones comparables con las de las leyes federales antimonopolísticas.

Nuestra Ley de Monopolios fue promulgada "para asegurarle al Pueblo en general, y a los pequeños comerciantes en particular, los beneficios de la libre competencia".[37] Como señalamos en Colón Cabrera v. Caribbean Petroleum, supra, el propósito de la Ley de Monopolios es

> ... evitar la confabulación [28] entre firmas para dominar el mercado, [el] acaparamiento de materias primas, [1os] aumentos indebidos en los precios resultantes de una posición monopolística, [1as] prácticas discriminatorias en las relaciones con clientes [y la] concentración extrema de la actividad económica y de la riqueza en algunos grandes consorcios de empresas.

Ahora bien, en cuanto a la controversia que nos ocupa, es necesario considerar en específico los Arts. 3(a) y 12(a) de la Ley de Monopolios.

[*925] C. El Art. 3(a) de la Ley de Monopolios

En lo pertinente, el Art. 3(a) de la Ley de Monopolios[38] establece que serán ilegales HN11[] "[l]os métodos injustos de competencia, así como las prácticas o actos injustos o engañosos en los negocios o el comercio". (Énfasis suplido.) Así también el inciso (c) de este artículo establece lo siguiente:

> HN12[] (c) Sin menoscabo de la facultad de recurrir a los medios autorizados por la sec. 269 de este título [injuctions], la Oficina de Asuntos Monopolísticos podrá radicar (sic) y tramitar querellas administrativas en el Departamento de Asuntos del Consumidor para prevenir, evitar y detener las violaciones al inciso (a) de [29] esta sección o los reglamentos aprobados de conformidad al inciso (b) de la misma.[39]

Distinto a otras disposiciones de la Ley de Monopolios, el Art. 3 tuvo su base en la Sec. 5(a)(1) de la ley que creó la Comisión Federal de Comercio (15 U.S.C. sec. 45), la cual -al igual que el Art. 3(a)- declara ilegales los métodos injustos de competencia y los actos o prácticas injustas o engañosas que afectan el comercio.[40]

Por otra parte, el inciso (c) del Art. 3 de la Ley de Gasolina, 23 L.P.R.A. sec. 259(c), faculta expresamente a la Oficina de Asuntos Monopolísticos del Departamento de Justicia a actuar como ente fiscalizador ante el D.A.Co. en cuanto a toda violación por "métodos injustos de competencia, así como las prácticas o actos injustos o engañosos en los negocios o el comercio". La Oficina de Asuntos Monopolísticos fue creada por el Art. 16 del mencionado estatuto para implementar el propósito que lo inspira.[41] La O.A.M. es una entidad adscrita al Departamento [*926] de Justicia, con facultades para la administración de la legislación sobre prácticas monopolísticas, [30] así como para la fiscalización de éstas. Además, posee la facultad de promulgar reglamentos y proscribir actuaciones que constituyan métodos injustos de competencia y prácticas o actos injustos o engañosos en los negocios o el comercio.[42] En fin, la O.A.M. es una entidad creada con una delegación de poderes amplios que le permite al Estado contar con los instrumentos investigativos precisos para cumplir con el propósito fiscalizador de la Ley de Monopolios.[43] No existe duda de que, conforme al Art. 3 de la Ley de Monopolios, supra, es la O.A.M. el organismo gubernamental con el deber ministerial de fiscalizar y velar por el cumplimiento de esa ley.

Ahora bien, nótese que el Art. 3 de la Ley de Monopolios, supra, no le confiere poderes adjudicativos a la O.A.M. Esto es, no es a la O.A.M. a la cual le corresponde adjudicar la controversia, sino investigar y presentar la causa de acción. El inciso (c) del Art. 3 de la Ley de Monopolios, supra, dispone no sólo que es ante el D.A.Co. que la O.A.M. podrá presentar y tramitar querellas buscando prevenir, [31] evitar y detener las violaciones al inciso (a) del propio artículo, sino que en el resto del artículo se establece todo un esquema procesal y apelativo que deberá seguirse ante esa agencia y del cual mencionaremos algunos detalles.

Así, el inciso (c) del Art. 3 de la Ley de Monopolios, supra, establece que una vez la parte querellada haya sido notificada de la querella en su contra, el D.A.Co. deberá celebrar una vista y resolver la controversia entre las partes, otorgando el remedio más adecuado tan pronto le sea posible.[44] Mientras, el inciso (d) establece que la O.A.M. tendrá un término de treinta días para recurrir en revisión [*927] de la decisión del D.A.Co. al Tribunal de Primera Instancia, si esta le fuera adversa.[45] Por su parte, el inciso (e) establece la forma en que se formalizará tal recurso de revisión ante el Tribunal de Primera Instancia, del cual se tendrá que notificar a la parte querellada y al D.A.Co., que contará con un término de quince días para solicitar intervención.[46]

El inciso (g) establece que el Tribunal de Primera Instancia revisará la decisión del D.A.Co. a base del récord administrativo [32] que se sometió ante la agencia y sólo en cuanto a las conclusiones de derecho. Además, las determinaciones de hecho del D.A.Co. "serán concluyentes para el tribunal si estuvieren sostenidas por evidencia sustancial".[47]

Es evidente que, por la referencia directa a esa agencia, por el procedimiento tan detallado establecido ante ésta y considerando la naturaleza de la causas de acción que intrincan las controversias monopolísticas -sobre todo ante alegaciones de prácticas o actos injustos o engañosos- el legislador decidió que fuera el D.A.Co. el que tuviera la jurisdicción primaria exclusiva para tramitar y adjudicar toda querella presentada por la O.A.M.

La jurisdicción primaria exclusiva de D.A.Co. en este asunto se confirma, además, mediante la propia Ley Orgánica del Departamento de Asuntos del Consumidor, Ley Núm. 5 de 23 de abril de 1973, según enmendada,[48] la cual en su Art. 6(x) incluye entre los poderes y facultades que ejercerá el Secretario de Asuntos del Consumidor el "[a]djudicar las querellas que la Oficina de Asuntos Monopolísticos del Departamento de Justicia, radique (sic) y procese en virtud de lo dispuesto en la sec. 259 [Art. 3] del [*928] Título [33] 10".[49] Como vemos, en armonía con el Art. 3(c) de la Ley de Monopolios, el inciso (x) del Art. 6 de la Ley Orgánica de D.A.Co. le confiere jurisdicción a esa agencia para adjudicar las querellas que 1e presente la O.A.M. al amparo del Art. 3 de la Ley de Monopolios.

En conclusión, HN13[] es al Departamento de Justicia a través de la O.A.M. al que, conforme al mandato legislativo, corresponde fiscalizar directamente las infracciones a la Ley de Monopolios, específicamente en lo concerniente a 1as violaciones a las disposiciones de prácticas injustas de comercio, incluyendo toda práctica o acto injusto o engañoso. Además, concluimos que, en virtud del Art. 3 de la Ley de Monopolios, supra, es al D.A.Co. al que corresponde la jurisdicción primaria exclusiva en toda causa de acción antimonopolística emprendida por la O.A.M., cuya causa de acción esté basada en alguna práctica o acto injusto o engañoso.

H. El Art. 12(a) de la Ley de Monopolios

Como ya hemos establecido, una infracción a la prohibición de vinculación operacional que estatuye el Art. 4A de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, constituye una "práctica o acto injusto o engañoso", acción que estaría sujeta a las disposiciones [34] de nuestra Ley de Monopolios, conforme al Art. 8 de la Ley de Gasolina, supra. De manera que corresponde entonces, ante la alegación de una violación a la disposición que exige tal "desvinculación operacional", remitirse a aquellos artículos de la Ley de Monopolios que versan sobre 1as "prácticas o actos injustos o engañosos" al comercio, a los fines de resolver cualquier interrogante sobre esta materia. Ya hemos analizado el Art. 3 de la Ley de Monopolios, supra, por lo que nos resta discutir el Art. 12 del mencionado estatuto, específicamente el inciso (a), el cual dispone:

> [*929] § 268 Demandas por personas perjudicadas

sufrido, más las costas del procedimiento y una suma razonable para honorarios de abogado.[50] (Énfasis suplido.)

HN15[] El Art. 12(a) de la Ley de Monopolios, supra, [35] establece el llamado remedio de triple daño para toda persona que sufra daños como consecuencia de actos antimonopolísticos. La acción judicial para recobrar tales daños deberá iniciarse dentro de1 término de cuatro años, contados a partir del nacimiento de la causa de acción.[51] Ahora bien, es claro del texto de este inciso (a) del Art. 12 de la Ley de Monopolios, supra, que, sin distinción alguna, éste exceptúa de su ámbito jurisdiccional toda causa de acción que se pretenda o se tenga que iniciar al amparo de la sec. 259 de la propia Ley de Monopolios. O sea, toda causa de acción por prácticas o actos injustos o engañosos.

III

En el presente caso no albergamos dudas con relación a que una persona privada, ya sea natural o jurídica, carece de legitimación activa para presentar una causa de acción contra un distribuidor-mayorista por alegada violación al Art. 4A de la Ley de Gasolina, supra. Así surge claramente de cada estatuto concernido. Veamos.

HN16[] El Art. 8 de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, establece como una "práctica o acto injusto [o] engañoso" cualquier violación al Art. 4A de la mencionada ley y señala que tal violación [*930] "estará sujet[a] a las disposiciones [36] de las secs. 257 et seq. del Título 10", o sea, a la sección 257 "y las siguientes" de la Ley de Monopolios.

Por su parte, HN17[] el Art. 3(a) de la Ley de Monopolios (sec. 259(a)) declara como ilegal "las prácticas o actos injustos o engañosos", que es precisamente la conducta descrita y remitida ante el ámbito de esa ley por el Art. 8 de la Ley de Gasolina, supra. Nótese, entonces, que existe una clara identificación o concordancia en el lenguaje utilizado en ambas disposiciones. De manera que, por el lenguaje claro de ambos estatutos -Ley de Gasolina y Ley de Monopolios- es evidente que el legislador dispuso, a través del Art. 8 de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, el que toda violación al Art. 4A de esa ley fuera comprendida, cubierta o estuviera bajo el ámbito jurisdiccional del Art. 3 de la Ley de Monopolios, supra.

Una vez determinamos que HN18[] la conducta prohibida por el Art. 4A de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, se encuentra bajo el ámbito jurisdiccional del Art. 3 de la Ley de Monopolios (sec. 259), nos enfrentamos al Art. 12(a) de la Ley de Monopolios, supra, que, a su vez, exceptúa expresamente de su ámbito jurisdiccional toda acción que se presente al amparo de la sección 259. Por lo tanto, cualquier [37] persona privada que sufra daños por actuaciones prohibidas por la Ley de Monopolios cuenta con un remedio de triple daño al amparo del Art. 12(a) de la Ley de Monopolios, supra, excepto que su causa de acción se fundamente en el Art. 3 de la Ley de Monopolios (sec. 259).[52] Siendo así, evidentemente toda causa de acción al amparo del Art. 4A de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, se encuentra excluida de la posibilidad del remedio [*931] de triple daño que provee el Art. 12(a) de la Ley de Monopolios, *supra.

En este contexto, Esso argumenta que erró el foro de instancia al no desestimar, al amparo de la Regla 10.2 de Procedimiento Civil, la reclamación de las recurridas fundamentada en el Art. 4A de la Ley de Gasolina.[53] Le asiste la razón. La Regla 10.2 de Procedimiento Civil de 1979, 32 L.P.R.A. Ap. V, R. 10.2, establece unas defensas privilegiadas que, como tal, pueden presentarse en cualquier momento del proceso.[54] Es decir, tales defensas no se pierden si no se levantan en la contestación de la demanda o antes. Entre esas defensas privilegiadas, la Regla 10.2 incluye la falta de jurisdicción sobre la materia.[55]

Recientemente, en González v. Mayagüez Resort & Casino, 2009 TSPR 140, 176 D.P.R. 848, 855, 2009 Juris P.R. 143 (2009), reiteramos nuestra pauta en el sentido de que la ausencia de jurisdicción sobre la materia

> (1) no es susceptible de ser subsanada; (2) las partes no pueden voluntariamente conferírsela a un tribunal como tampoco puede éste abrogársela [sic]; (3) conlleva la nulidad de los dictámenes emitidos; (4) impone a los tribunales el ineludible deber de auscultar su propia jurisdicción; (5) impone a los tribunales apelativos el deber de examinar la jurisdicción del foro de donde procede el recurso; y (6) puede presentarse en cualquier etapa del procedimiento, a instancia de las partes o por el tribunal motu proprio.

Por otro lado, HN19[] una parte demandante posee legitimación activa si cumple con los siguientes [39] requisitos: "(1) ha sufrido un daño claro y palpable; (2) el referido daño es real, inmediato y preciso, y no abstracto o hipotético; (3) [*932] existe conexión entre el daño sufrido y la causa de acción ejercitada; y (4) la causa de acción surge bajo el palio de la Constitución o de una ley".[56] (Énfasis suplido.) Considerando entonces que, como hemos establecido, una persona privada no puede presentar una causa de acción por alegada violación al Art. 4A de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, las recurridas carecen de una causa de acción que surja bajo el palio de una ley. Siendo así, el foro de instancia ciertamente carecía de jurisdicción sobre la materia para atender tal causa de acción y debió desestimarla, conforme a la Regla 10.2 de Procedimiento Civil de 1979, supra.

De otra parte, recientemente establecimos en SLG Semidey Vázquez v. ASIFAL, 177 D.P.R. 657, 676 (2009), que HN20[] "[s]i [un] estatuto le confiere la jurisdicción al organismo administrativo se trata de una jurisdicción estatutaria (exclusiva)".[57] Allí también pautamos lo siguiente:

> HN21[] El concepto jurisdicción [40] estatutaria o exclusiva guarda relación con la jurisdicción primaria concurrente pero es distinto en cuanto a su alcance y naturaleza. En la jurisdicción exclusiva se trata de situaciones en que no aplica la doctrina de jurisdicción primaria concurrente porque la propia ley aclara que esta última no existe. Es decir, el propio estatuto establece una jurisdicción exclusiva. En tales casos estamos frente a un mandato legislativo. De ahí, que cuando un estatuto le confiere de manera expresa la jurisdicción a un órgano administrativo sobre determinado tipo de asuntos, los tribunales no tendrán autoridad para dilucidar el caso en primera instancia. Claro está, la jurisdicción primaria exclusiva no soslaya la revisión judicial posterior de la decisión del organismo. (Citas y énfasis omitidos.)[58]

Al observar la manera expresa, amplia y detallada con la que el legislador se manifestó, determinamos [*933] que, HN22[] con excepción de los remedios autorizados por la sec. 269 (injuctions), el [41] Art. 3 de la Ley de Monopolios, supra, le confiere jurisdicción primaria exclusiva al D.A.Co. en la dilucidación de cualquier violación al inciso (a) del propio artículo, esto es, la utilización de métodos injustos de competencia y prácticas o actos injustos o engañosos en los negocios o el comercio.

En cuanto a la determinación del tribunal de instancia en el sentido de que "un ente privado como la demandante puede presentar una causa de acción al amparo del Artículo 7 de la Ley de Control de Gasolina", por lo que ya explicamos determinamos que la misma es claramente errónea. HN23[] El Art. 7 de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, provee para una causa de acción en contra de los detallistas y no a favor de éstos. De otra parte, además de que la interpretación de tal estatuto por parte del foro primario no fue la correcta, lo cierto es que las recurridas nunca reclamaron una causa de acción al amparo del Art. 7 de la Ley de Gasolina, sino del Art. 7 de la Ley de Monopolios, supra.[59]

Ahora bien, con relación a que la causa de acción de las recurridas pueda ser resarcida como un remedio sencillo u ordinario [42] de daños y perjuicios al amparo del Art. 1802 del Código Civil, 31 L.P.R.A. sec. 5141, nada encontramos en la ley que lo impida; al contrario. Como bien señala la Procuradora General en su comparecencia especial, surge de la discusión reseñada en el historial legislativo con relación a los informes camerales que originaron la Ley de Monopolios, lo siguiente:

> En cuanto a las acciones de los particulares, por triple daño, estas no se autorizan con respecto a los actos prohibidos por el Artículo 3, sin que por ello se intente afectar el derecho a entablar una acción ordinaria de daños y perjuicios, si ésta procediere [*934] conforme al Código Civil u otros principios de ley. (Énfasis suplido.)[60]

Como vemos, las expresiones del legislador fueron claras. La Asamblea Legislativa no tuvo la intención de que una causa de acción como la del caso de autos no pudiera ser resarcida como un remedio sencillo u ordinario de daños y perjuicios al amparo del Art. 1802 del Código Civil, supra. Todo lo contrario.

Por último, al final de su alegato las recurridas argumentan que la causa de acción en este litigio comprende hechos [43] ocurridos durante los años 2000 al 2005, periodo de tiempo en el que el Art. 8 de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, no había sido enmendado para incluir el Art. 4A. Por esto, las recurridas concluyen que en vista de que tal enmienda ocurrió con posterioridad a la presentación de su causa de acción, ésta -la enmienda de 2005- tendría un efecto retroactivo en violación al Art. 3 de nuestro Código Civil.[61] No les asiste la razón.

En primer lugar, ya hemos determinado basado en el análisis del artículo enmendando y del historial legislativo de la Ley Núm. 157, supra, que la intención de la Asamblea Legislativa fue que el Art. 4A de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, estuviera incluido bajo el ámbito jurisdiccional del Art. 8 de la propia Ley, desde la enmienda de 1996. Así lo interpretamos.

Pero, además, si aceptáramos la proposición de las recurridas en el sentido de que el Art. 8 de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, no incluía bajo su ámbito [44] jurisdiccional el Art. 4A para el año en que estos instaron su causa de acción, tendríamos que resolver de todos modos que la enmienda de 2005 no constituiría una enmienda con efecto retroactivo. Nos explicamos.

[61] El Art. 3 del Código Civil establece lo siguiente:

> HN24[] Las leyes no tendrán efecto retroactivo, si no dispusieran lo contrario. En ningún caso podrá el efecto retroactivo de una ley perjudicar los derechos adquiridos al amparo de una legislación anterior. 31 L.P.R.A. sec. 3.

Desde el 1905, esta Curia resolvió, interpretando el Art. 3 del Código Civil, supra, que:

> HN25[] ... es un principio de derecho español, que los estatutos que regulan la jurisdicción y el procedimiento, son de interés público, y empiezan a regir retroactivamente, o más bien, que no son consideradas como retroactivas en tal sentido, que caigan bajo las restricciones [45] de este artículo. (Énfasis suplido.)[62]

Así también, en Texas Co. v. Sancho Bonet, Tes*., 52 P.R.R. 637, 52 D.P.R. 658, 667(1938)*, señalamos que:

> ... como se dice en 59 Corpus Juris 1173, resumiendo la jurisprudencia, HN26[] "... La regla general de que los estatutos sólo se interpretarán prospectivamente (prospectively) y no retrospectiva o retroactivamente, de ordinario no es aplicable a estatutos que afectan el remedio o procedimiento, o, conforme se dice de otro modo, esa regla general está sujeta a una excepción cuando se trata de un estatuto relativo al remedio o procedimiento". (Énfasis suplido.)

De manera que, considerando que la enmienda producida por la Ley Núm. 74 de 25 de agosto de 2005 al Art. 8 de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, tuvo claramente un efecto sobre los procesos y la jurisdicción del tribunal de instancia en causas de acción al amparo del Art. 4A de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, tal [*936] enmienda no constituye una retroactiva en el marco que el Art. 3 del Código Civil, supra, lo prohíbe.[63]

Por todo lo anterior, se revoca la Resolución emitida por el Tribunal de Apelaciones y, en consecuencia, se desestima la causa de acción fundamentada en el Art. 4A de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, ante el Tribunal de Primera Instancia, por falta de jurisdicción.

Se dictará sentencia de conformidad.

Disension

Opinión Disidente emitida por el Juez Presidente señor Hernández Denton a la cual se une la Juez Asociada señora Rodríguez Rodríguez.

San Juan, Puerto Rico, a 15 de diciembre de 2011.

Por entender que ni la Ley de Control de Productores, Refinadores y Distribuidores Mayoristas de Gasolina, Ley Núm. 3 de 21 de marzo de 1978, según enmendada, 23 L.P.R.A. secs. 1101, et seq. (Ley de Gasolina), ni la Ley de Monopolios y Restricción del Comercio, Ley Núm. 77 de 25 de junio de 1964, según enmendada, 10 L.P.R.A. secs. 257, et seq. (Ley de Monopolios), impiden que un participante del mercado presente una acción en daños por violaciones a las prohibiciones de las referidas leyes, disentimos del curso seguido por una mayoría de este Tribunal. En esencia, no [*937] podemos estar de acuerdo porque el resultado de la Opinión del Tribunal es contrario a los propósitos de los estatutos antimonopolísticos en controversia.

I.

Los demandantes, Aguadilla Paint Center, Inc., CB Gasoline Service Group y Micada de Puerto Rico, Inc., son detallistas o vendedores al detal de gasolina importada, distribuida y vendida por Esso Standard Oil (Esso). Es decir, detallistas de marca. En 2004, los detallistas [48] presentaron una demanda contra Esso en la cual le imputaban incurrir en la práctica ilícita de vinculación operacional y discrimen de precios y descuentos, en contravención al Art. 4A de la Ley de Gasolina, 23 L.P.R.A. sec. 1104a y el Art. 7 de la Ley de Monopolios, 10 L.P.R.A. sec. 263. Asimismo, solicitaron indemnización bajo el Art. 1802 del Código Civil de Puerto Rico, 31 L.P.R.A. sec. 5141. En específico, los demandantes alegan que Esso controla la operación de las estaciones de gasolina en violación al Art. 4A, porque establece el costo de la gasolina, la cantidad de gasolina que vende, la frecuencia con la que se compra la gasolina, la entrega de la misma, el método de pago, el precio sugerido de venta y la renta de las estaciones de servicio. De otro lado, la causa de acción por violación al Art. 7 de la Ley de Monopolios se basa en que, alegadamente, Esso mantiene un discrimen de precios frente a compradores igualmente situados.

Por su parte, Esso solicitó la desestimación alegando, en esencia, que esas dos causas de acción solo pueden ser presentadas por el Departamento de Justicia. Por lo tanto, los demandantes carecían de legitimación activa.

El Tribunal de Primera Instancia [49] proveyó no ha lugar a la moción de desestimación y el foro apelativo intermedio mantuvo ese dictamen al no expedir el auto solicitado, por no estar en posición de intervenir en esa etapa procesal. [*938] Inconforme, Esso acude ante nos. Por su parte, los demandantes, cuyos planteamientos quedaron excluidos de la Opinión del Tribunal, argumentan que son conscientes de que existen una serie de remedios en los estatutos antes mencionados que le han sido encomendados al Departamento de Justicia. En específico, aducen que los injunctions preliminares y permanentes reconocidos en dichas leyes para paralizar actuaciones prohibidas son competencia exclusiva del Secretario de Justicia y es este quien tiene legitimación activa para procurarlos. Sin embargo, los demandantes no buscan interferir con esos remedios. Su única súplica es que se les permita demostrar que Esso les causó daños al violar los preceptos de ambas leyes por incurrir en prácticas de vinculación operacional y discrimen de precios. Inclusive, aunque lo solicitaron originalmente en su demanda, los demandantes sostienen ante nos que no reclaman el beneficio de triple daño, reconocido en los estatutos antimonopolísticos de Estados Unidos [50] y Puerto Rico. De nuevo, solo quieren que se les permita demostrar cómo, al incurrir en las prácticas prohibidas por los referidos estatutos, se les causó daños que, en algunos casos, resultaron en la quiebra de negocios familiares.

II.

A. Estatutos antimonopolísticos

La Ley de Gasolina, supra, tiene como propósito combatir el control de los abastos de productos energéticos y eliminar las ventajas competitivas existentes en el mercado de gasolina. Por ello, nuestra Asamblea Legislativa procuró la uniformidad competitiva e implantó prohibiciones a prácticas discriminatorias y de control de precios. Unos meses más tarde, se aprobó la Ley Núm. 73 del 23 de junio de 1978, 23 L.P.R.A. secs. 1131, et seq., (Ley 73), con el propósito de declarar la industria de la gasolina -en todas sus facetas- como una revestida de interés público.

[*939] A su vez, la Ley 73, supra, implantó una serie de prohibiciones sobre acuerdos de arrendamiento y subarrendamiento y otro tipo de vinculación entre mayoristas y detallistas. Además, estableció que los mayoristas están obligados a presentar ante la Oficina de Asuntos Monopolísticos (O.A.M.) del Departamento de Justicia copia de todos sus contratos con los detallistas. [51] Asimismo, la Ley 73, supra, dispuso que reconocía la existencia de la Ley de Monopolios, supra, y que nada de lo dispuesto en la primera contravendría la segunda. Esto es, que la Asamblea Legislativa era consciente de la Ley de Monopolios, supra, y de su operación.

A tono con lo anterior, el Art. 4A de la Ley de Gasolina, 23 L.P.R.A. sec. 1104a, dispone que:

> Ningún... distribuidor-mayorista podrá, mediante convenio... operar directamente una estación de servicio de venta al detal de gasolina de forma que impida su completa desvinculación operacional. Ningún... distribuidor-mayorista podrá, mediante convenio... imponer, requerir, fijar o limitar directamente el margen de ganancia y/o el precio de venta al detal de la gasolina... en la estación de servicio de venta al detal.

Asimismo, el Art. 8 de la Ley de Gasolina, 23 L.P.R.A. sec. 1108, dispone que: "Cualquier violación a las secs. 1102, 1102a, 1104, 1104a, 1105 y 1105a, de este título constituirá una práctica o acto injusto o engañoso y estará sujeto a las disposiciones de las secs. 257, et seq., del Título 10." (Énfasis suplido). Esto último sobre las secs. 257, et seq., del Título 10 se refiere a la Ley de Monopolios.

De otra parte, [52] la Oficina de Asuntos Monopolísticos del Departamento de Justicia tiene a su haber una serie de remedios y facultades para fiscalizar el cumplimiento con Ley de Monopolios, supra. Cabe resaltar que todas las secciones de esa ley a las que la Opinión de este Tribunal hace referencia, disponen que la O.A.M. "podrá" realizar determinados actos.

[*940] Por su parte, el Art. 7 de la Ley de Monopolios dispone, en lo pertinente, que:

> Será ilegal el que cualquier persona, directa o indirectamente, discrimine en precio entre distintos compradores de cosas objeto de comercio del mismo grado y calidad, cuando dichas cosas sean vendidas para uso, consumo o reventa en Puerto Rico, y cuando el efecto de tal discrimen pueda ser el de reducir sustancialmente la competencia o tender a crear un monopolio en cualquier línea de comercio en Puerto Rico o afectar, destruir o evitar la competencia con cualquier persona que hubiese concedido o a sabiendas hubiese recibido el beneficio de tal discriminación, o con cualquier cliente de uno de éstos. 10 L.P.R.A. sec. 263.

Por último, el Art. 12 de la Ley de Monopolios, preceptúa que:

> Cualquier persona que sea perjudicada en sus negocios o propiedades por otra persona, [53] por razón de actos o intentos de actos, prohibidos o declarados ilegales por las disposiciones de este capítulo, salvo las de las Secs. 259 y 261 de este título pueden demandar a causa de dichos actos ante el Tribunal de Primera Instancia y tendrá derecho a recobrar tres (3) veces el importe de los daños y perjuicios que haya sufrido, más las costas del procedimiento y una suma razonable para honorarios de abogado. 10 L.P.R.A. sec. 268. (Énfasis suplido).

Como este último artículo excluye las acciones bajo la Sec. 259, este Foro hoy concluye que no será cualquier persona la que pueda presentar esa acción, sino que será la O.A.M. la única legitimada bajo esa sección de la Ley de Monopolios, supra. Por ello, ordena la desestimación de las causas de acción bajo la Ley de Gasolina, supra, y la Ley de Monopolios, supra, aunque permite que el caso continúe sobre las alegaciones de daños bajo el Art. 1802 del Código Civil, supra.

Como veremos más adelante, ese análisis es contrario a lo expresado en Pressure Vessels P.R. v. Empire Gas P.R., 137 D.P.R. 497, 1994 Juris P.R. 144 (1994). Allí, establecimos el origen y los propósitos abarcadores del Art.

2 de la Ley de Monopolios, [*941] 10 L.P.R.A. sec. 258. Este busca evitar [54] cualquier acto, contrato, o conspiración para restringir irrazonablemente los negocios o el comercio en Puerto Rico. Para ello, nuestra Asamblea Legislativa adoptó el mismo texto de la Sec. 1 del Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. 1. Véase: Pressure Vessels, supra; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 4, 78 S. Ct. 514, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1958).

Además, establecimos que tanto el texto de nuestro artículo como la doctrina federal coinciden en que hay tres requisitos que se tienen que establecer para demostrar una infracción a esta disposición: (1) deberá existir algún contrato, combinación o conspiración entre dos o más entidades, (2) el cual restringe irrazonablemente los negocios o el comercio (3) en Puerto Rico. *Pressure Vessels, supra, p*ág. 509. Finalmente, en el referido caso, resolvimos que un demandante puede traer prueba para demostrar la irrazonabilidad de unos contratos a la luz de su efecto sustancialmente adverso sobre la libre competencia, ello como vehículo para probar que, "como consecuencia de la infracción de la ley, el demandante haya sufrido un daño". Íd. pág. 520.

B. Concesión de poder de reglamentación

El 23 de junio de 1978, la Asamblea Legislativa aprobó dos leyes que nos atañen frente a la actual [55] controversia. La primera es la Ley Núm. 72, que tuvo el propósito de adicionar, al Art. 3 de la Ley de Monopolios, supra, una disposición "a fin de autorizar a la Oficina de Asuntos Monopolísticos a radicar y tramitar querellas por violaciones a este artículo en el Departamento de Asuntos del Consumidor", "autorizar a dicho Departamento a resolver dichas querellas e imponer las sanciones aquí dispuestas" y "establecer el trámite procesal para la revisión judicial de dichas querellas". Véase: Ley Núm. 72 de 23 de junio de 1978, 1978 Leyes de Puerto Rico, págs. 256-257. La exposición de motivos de esa Ley establece claramente que lo que se quiso fue "proveer un foro adicional a [*942] los existentes donde puedan ventilarse los actos o métodos injustos en los negocios y el comercio". Íd., pág. 257. (Énfasis suplido.)

Por su parte, la segunda ley aprobada, la Ley Núm. 73 de 23 de junio de 1978, supra, se estableció con el propósito de "autorizar al Departamento de Justicia, de Comercio y de Asuntos del Consumidor, a la Junta de Planificación, la Administración de Reglamentos y Permisos y, a la Comisión de Servicio Público a adoptar e implantar la reglamentación necesaria para poner en efectos [56] los propósitos y objetivos de esta ley". Ley Núm. 73 de 23 de junio de 1978, 1978 Leyes de Puerto Rico, pág. 259. La exposición de motivos de esta ley dispone que es "necesaria la intervención gubernamental en su ejercicio del Poder de Razón de Estado para evitar la dislocación en la integridad, funcionalidad y competencia que debe prevalecer en el mercado de la gasolina en Puerto Rico, industria vital a los mejores intereses de la ciudadanía y a la dinámica económica del país". Íd. pág. 260. Más adelante, esa misma ley proscribe en su Art. 5 que "nada de lo aquí dispuesto o promulgado por reglamento o de otra forma, conforme a las disposiciones de esta ley, será interpretado como que exceptúa de o confiere inmunidad en cuanto al aplicación de las disposiciones de la Ley Núm. 77 de 25 de junio de 1964, según enmendada". Íd. Pág. 264.

Así las cosas, la Asamblea Legislativa quiso adicionar un remedio administrativo con el propósito de allegar herramientas a la lucha antimonopolística. No obstante, nada de lo aquí dispuesto sobre las facultades y el trámite administrativo tuvo el propósito de eliminar los remedios reconocidos por la Ley de Monopolios, supra, como bien dispuso el Art. 5 [57] de la Ley Núm. 73, supra.

Esa acción legislativa es totalmente consistente con la enmienda de 1970 a la Ley de Monopolios, supra. Mediante la Ley Núm. 67 de 30 de mayo de 1970, se realizó una enmienda al Art. 3 de la Ley de Monopolios, supra, que dispone que "sin menoscabo de la facultad de recurrir a los remedios autorizados [*943] en el Artículo 13 [que versa sobre los remedios de injunction], la Oficina de Asuntos Monopolísticos, mediante reglas y reglamentos promulgados. podrá proscribir actos o prácticas específicas.". Ley Núm. 67 de 30 de mayo de 1970, 1970 Leyes de Puerto Rico, pág. 185.

Por ello, el Art. 3 de la Ley de Monopolios, supra, según enmendado, simplemente reconoce la facultad administrativa de reglamentar prácticas ilícitas y provee un foro ante el Departamento de Asuntos del Consumidor para examinar violaciones a los estatutos aquí discutidos.

III.

Por los fundamentos que anteceden, disentimos del resultado de la Opinión Mayoritaria. Somos del criterio que nada en los estatutos que hemos discutido impide la legitimación activa de los demandantes y que, a pesar de que bajo el Art. 12 de la Ley de Monopolios, supra, se excluye el Art. 3, la acción de los demandantes en nada [58] contraviene la delegación legislativa de poder para reglamentar, que se concede en ese Art. 3. En síntesis, se les debe permitir a los demandantes probar un caso de daños por violaciones a las disposiciones específicas de los estatutos aquí discutidos. Veamos.

La Ley de Gasolina, supra, fue adoptada con posterioridad a la aprobación de la Ley de Monopolios, supra. Asimismo, la primera expresa que la Asamblea Legislativa fue consciente de las disposiciones de la segunda, al momento de aprobarla. La Ley de Gasolina expresa en su Art. 8 que cualquier violación a varios de sus artículos, incluyendo el Art. 4A, "constituirá una práctica o acto injusto a (sic) engañoso y estará sujeto a las disposiciones de las secs. 257, et seq. del Título 10". 23 L.P.R.A. sec. 1108.

Cuando acudimos a las secs. 257 y siguientes del Título 10, es decir, la Ley de Monopolios, encontramos que el [*944] Art. 12 reconoce una causa de acción a: "cualquier persona que sea perjudicada en sus negocios o propiedades por otra persona, por razón de actos, o intentos de actos, prohibidos o declarados ilegales por las disposiciones de este capítulo, salvo las de las secs. 259 y 261." 10 L.P.R.A. sec. 268.

Cónsono con los propósitos [59] legislativos de nuestros estatutos y de los estatutos federales en que se basa la legislación local, esa causa de acción, es totalmente independiente del poder legislativo de reglamentar que se le confirió a las agencias administrativas mediante el Art. 3 de la Ley de Monopolios, *10 L.P.R.A. sec. 259.

Esto es importante porque, según la Opinión del Tribunal, las prácticas violatorias del Art. 8 de la Ley de Gasolina, supra, sólo estarían sujetas a la acción bajo el Art. 3 de la Ley de Monopolios, que dispone que "los métodos injustos de competencia, así como las prácticas o actos injustos o engañosos en los negocios o el comercio, por la presente se declaran ilegales". 10 L.P.R.A. sec. 259. Es decir, que porque el Art. 8 de la Ley de Gasolina declara "actos injustos y engañosos" lo prohibido en dicha ley y que, como el Art. 3 de la Ley de Monopolios es el que prohíbe los "actos injustos y engañosos" y, éste, a su vez, está excluido del Art. 12 de la Ley de Monopolios que reconoce la acción de triple daño, entonces los demandantes no tienen disponible esa causa de acción por violaciones a la Ley de Gasolina, supra.

Esa interpretación textualista -que propone el peticionario y que adopta [60] completamente este Tribunal- es totalmente contraria a los propósitos de ambas leyes. Además, los artículos bajo los cuales reclaman los demandantes no deben interpretarse como los únicos artículos de esas leyes que permiten una acción en daños. Si bien esa interpretación que hace la Opinión de este Tribunal permite que los demandantes continúen con su causa de acción en daños bajo el Art. 1802 del Código Civil de Puerto Rico, supra, cabe preguntarnos: ?qué alegaciones [*945] podrán presentar los demandantes para demostrar que fue la realización de prácticas prohibidas por parte del demandado la que le causaron los daños que buscan indemnizar, si se le han desestimado las causas de acción bajo la Ley de Monopolios y la Ley de Gasolina?

Somos del criterio que se pudo llegar a una interpretación distinta. Máxime ante el hecho de que la propia Opinión del Tribunal reconoce el origen directo de nuestros estatutos antimonopolísticos de sus análogos federales.

En los Estados Unidos, los "private actions" juegan un rol crítico en el régimen antimonopolístico. J. Von Kalinowski, Antitrust Law and Trade Regulation, Sec. 160.01, 2d. ed., Vol. 8 pág. 160-2 (supl. 2011). "In enacting the antitrust laws, [61] the U.S. Congress was convinced that private antitrust litigation is one of the surest weapons for effective antitrust enforcement and that private suits are an important element of the Nation's antitrust enforcement scheme. The Supreme Court has labeled the private action as a vital means of enforcing the antitrust policy of the United States and as an important weapon of antitrust enforcement." Íd. (Citas omitidas). (Énfasis suplido).

Por ello, nuestra interpretación es que la alegada acción ilícita de los demandados podría estar prohibida por la Ley de Monopolios, supra, y los demandantes así podrían demostrarlo conforme a nuestra Opinión en Pressure

Vessels, supra, que, en esencia, le permite a un participante del mercado reclamar daños por una actuación prohibida bajo el estatuto antimonopolístico.

De hecho, en la legislación federal, el remedio de triple daño está disponible bajo la Sec. 4 del Clayton Act. El texto de esa sección es sumamente sencillo y simplemente reconoce una causa de acción a cualquier persona afectada por razón de cualquier acto prohibido bajo una ley antimonopolística. 15 USC sec. 15. Para obtener ese remedio, el demandante sólo tiene que probar que el daño [62] fue causado por razón de una actuación [*946] antimonopolística. J. Von Kalinowski, op. cit. sec. 161.02, pág. 161-9. ("Thus, in antitrust cases, it is not sufficient simply to demonstrate an injury, even injury directly caused by the defendant. The injury will not be considered antitrust injury unless it was caused by reason of a violation of the antitrust laws.")(Citas omitidas.) Esto demuestra que el Congreso quiso permitirles a los participantes del mercado presentar una acción de daños por el mero hecho de otro haber realizado una práctica antimonopolística.

Por lo tanto, habríamos concluido que la demanda presentada por los recurridos podía continuar. Con su decisión, este Tribunal deja en suspenso un importante elemento de la lucha antimonopolística, en particular sobre el negocio de distribución de combustibles en Puerto Rico. Basta mirar a décadas pasadas para recordar las prácticas indeseables que sufrimos en el País durante la crisis petrolera de los años 1970's. Hoy, de espaldas a la política pública de los Estados Unidos, a base de la cual formulamos nuestros estatutos sobre esta materia, este Tribunal ata las manos y cierra las puertas de la justicia a quienes alegan haber sufrido [63] un daño que ahora será más difícil de demostrar.

De la normativa federal antes descrita es evidente que, desde principios del siglo pasado, el ordenamiento dispuso que los competidores jugarían un rol central en la lucha contra el control ilícito de los mercados, mediante la presentación de acciones para recuperar el daño causado por acciones monopolísticas. No vemos por qué los participantes del mercado de gasolina puertorriqueño no puedan hacer lo mismo, cuando nuestra legislación también tiene el propósito de apoderar a los afectados con legitimación para reclamar remedios por prácticas injustas.

IV.

A modo de epílogo, la decisión de este Tribunal se emite [*947] en los momentos en que está entredicho la capacidad de la Oficina de Asuntos Monopolísticos para adelantar los propósitos legislativos. De la propia información publicada por el Departamento de Justicia sobre su presupuesto para el año fiscal en curso surge que, desde el año 2009, dicha Oficina ha perdido casi de un cuarenta por ciento de su personal, apenas cuenta con cuatro abogados en la actualidad, y, durante el mismo periodo, se le ha recortado sobre un quince por ciento de su presupuesto. Véase: Departamento de Justica, Presupuesto [64] Aprobado para el año 2012, disponible en: http://www.pr.gov/presupuesto/aprobado_201 2/ju sticia.htm.

En suma, habríamos permitido que el litigio continuara en sus méritos en vez de resolverlo sumariamente, sin permitirle al demandante establecer su caso. La desestimación de acciones privadas contra el control ilícito de los mercados en nuestra jurisdicción es contraria tanto a la intención como al espíritu de la Ley de Monopolios y la Ley de Gasolina y priva a los detallistas de gasolina un instrumento muy importante para vindicar sus derechos ante prácticas injustas de los mayoristas.

ORDER DENYING MOTION TO ENFORCE

British Airways ("BA") and Virgin Atlantic Airways, Ltd. ("VAA") (collectively, "the airlines") reached settlements three years ago in this antitrust MDL. See Mot. (dkt. 365) at 1. Carnival PLC, a cruise company, now asks the Court to declare that it is a member of those settlement classes and thus entitled to compensation from the settlement funds. Id. As discussed below, the Court concludes that the Settlement Administrator properly determined that Carnival is not a class member.

I. BACKGROUND

BA and VAA entered into settlements with the plaintiffs in this case on February 15, 2008, and the Court approved the settlements on October 3, 2008, retaining jurisdiction over their enforcement. [*16] See dkt. 293, 294. The settlement agreements both defined the settlement class as:

> [A]ll Persons to whom, in the period beginning on August 11, 2004 and ending on March 23, 2006, [BA or VAA] sold, in the United Kingdom, at least one coupon for passenger air travel on a flight operated by [BA or VAA] and as to which the long-haul fuel surcharge was paid and not refunded in whole or in part as of the date of the Settlement Agreement.

Mot. at 5.

Carnival asserts that, during the relevant time period, it purchased about 130,180 tickets from BA and VAA combined, the great majority of which were used by Carnival's passengers, and a minority of which were used by Carnival's crew members. Id. at 1. [1] Carnival explains that it does not include a line-item charge to its passengers for air travel; rather, the air travel is bundled together with a variety of services, such as dining, entertainment, and travel to ports of call "to create a single, unique product — a Carnival cruise vacation — for which there is but one total price." Id. at 3. Carnival had purchase agreements with BA and VAA which provided that Carnival would reserve airline tickets up to nine months prior to departure, and had to [*17] pay for those tickets about six weeks before departure. Id. Carnival represents that, because it had to pay for the tickets at the time it committed to purchase them, which was often before it had identified a customer to use the tickets, it was responsible for any failure to fill the seat. Id. The airlines' only recourse for failure to pay for tickets was with Carnival, the airlines provided rate quotes directly to Carnival, and notices of fuel surcharge increases also went directly to Carnival. Id. at 3-4. Carnival thus considers itself a direct purchaser of the airline tickets. See generally Mot.

In April 2010, the Settlement Administrator, Kenneth R. Feinberg, [*18] denied Carnival's request for compensation under the settlement funds. See Libow Decl. Ex. E (dkt. 375-5). The Settlement Administrator explained:

> It is my conclusion that the parties' contracts and course of dealing indicate that Carnival issued tickets as an agent for the airlines and the passengers paid these fares and surcharges. Accordingly, under the Settlement Agreement the appropriate Settlement Class Members are the airlines' passengers, rather than Carnival, and the passengers, rather than Carnival, are entitled to the refund for the fuel surcharge on the tickets.

Id. at 1. He stated that his conclusion was based on four considerations: (1) that the passengers who purchased cruises had the option of buying the airline tickets either from Carnival or separately, but that in both cases the passenger had to pay the surcharge; (2) that "[i]n calculating what to charge the passenger for the air ticket . . . Carnival had to take into account the fuel surcharge in its pricing and the passenger had to pay the fuel surcharge;" (3) that under the contracts with BA and VAA, Carnival "purchased as an agent;" and (4) that Carnival's contention that it was a "principal," not an agent, was [*19] based on regulations unrelated to the settlement agreement. Id. at 1-2.

Carnival sought reconsideration of the Settlement Administrator's decision, which he denied. See Mot. at 6. The Settlement Administrator found that Carnival's submission did not warrant reversal of his initial decision "that the individual Carnival customers, who purchased tickets for air travel and paid the fuel surcharge, are the direct purchasers who are entitled to claim a refund under the Settlement." See Libow Decl. Ex. I (dkt. 375-9).

Carnival now moves the Court to enforce the settlement agreements by: (1) declaring that Carnival is a member of the settlement classes, (2) declaring that Carnival is entitled to compensation from the settlement funds, and (3) ordering that Carnival be paid compensation from the settlement funds. See Mot. at 15.

II. LEGAL STANDARD

"A settlement agreement is treated as any other contract for purposes of interpretation." United Commercial Ins. Serv., Inc. v. Paymaster Corp., 962 F.2d 853, 856 (9th Cir. 1992). Federal courts are to apply state contract law principles to the enforcement of settlement agreements. See O'Neil v. Bunge Corp., 365 F.3d 820, 822 (9th Cir. 2004). [2]

The Settlement Administrator, who was involved in the mediation and negotiation of the settlement agreements, and has been administering the funds for three years, has direct and extensive knowledge of this case. See Opp'n at 10. Thus, the Court must give some deference to his recommendation as to factual matters. See Goodrich Corp.

[1] According to Carnival, the Settlement Administrator "recently determined that Carnival is entitled to compensation from the settlement funds for about 2,823 tickets purchased on BA for business travel by Carnival crew members and about 276 tickets on VAA for business travel by Carnival crew members," and asserts that it is "not seeking compensation on those approximately 3,099 tickets." Id. n.1. The parties confirmed at the motion hearing that the tickets Carnival purchased for its crew members are not at issue in this Motion.

[2] The settlement [*20] agreements selected New York law to govern the interpretation of their terms. See Opp'n at 2.

v. Town of Middlesbury, 311 F.3d 154, 171 (2d Cir. 2002) ("a district court must give some deference to a [special] master's recommendation where the [special] master has direct and extensive knowledge about the particular circumstances of a given case") (internal quotation marks omitted). However, the Settlement Administrator's legal conclusion as to the proper construction of the settlement agreements is owed no deference. See Gulf Ins. Co. v. Transatlantic Reinsurance Co., 13 A.D.3d 278, 788 N.Y.S.2d 44, 45 (App. Div. 2004) (applying de novo standard of review to construction of contract).

III. DISCUSSION

The only question before the Court is whether Carnival is a class member.

Carnival's argument that it is a class member relies heavily on antitrust law, characterizing itself [*21] as a direct purchaser of the airline tickets, and its passengers as indirect purchasers who cannot recover under Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977). See generally Mot. That argument is fairly persuasive upon initial reading, because the antitrust principles it contains are sound: only direct purchasers may recover for antitrust injury, [3] and a "pass-on" defense is impermissible. [4] But the question before the Court is one of contracts, not antitrust law. See United Commercial Ins. Svc., Inc., 962 F.2d at 856. The Court must determine whether Carnival fits within the definition of a class member as defined by the settlement agreement and irrespective of antitrust principles. It was therefore appropriate for the Settlement Administrator to focus on the "parties' contracts and course of dealing" in making the determination of whether Carnival is a class member. See Libow Decl. Ex. E (April 2010 letter from Settlement Administrator denying Carnival's claim).

A. Carnival was not the Purchaser

To be a class member under the settlement agreement, one has to be a person to whom BA or VAA sold a coupon for passenger air travel and to which the fuel surcharge was paid and not refunded. See Mot. at 5 (class definition). The Settlement Administrator found that, based upon the purchase contracts between Carnival and BA/VAA, and Carnival's process in attaining the airline tickets from the airlines and providing them to its passengers, Carnival does not fit within that definition. See generally Libow Decl. Ex. E. Importantly, there is no dispute that Carnival remitted money to the airlines and received airline tickets in exchange: the question is whether it actually purchased the tickets, or acted as a conduit for its passengers. Several considerations suggest that Carnival was acting as a conduit.

1. Relationship Between Carnival and VAA

Carnival's contract with VAA refers to Carnival as an "agent," [*23] but Carnival asserts that "that nomenclature was only a naming convention." Mot. at 4. Nonetheless, the contract describes an arrangement that sounds very much like Carnival is acting as a travel agent. [5]

The contract provides, for example, that "Agents must use the full passport name of each passenger when making CRS bookings," Brooker Decl. Ex. A (dkt. 376-1) § 6.1(p), that "Agents shall not make fraudulent, fictitious or speculative bookings in the CRS, or hold reservations or block space to accommodate expected demand," id. §

[3] See Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. 720, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (indirect purchaser was not a proper plaintiff to bring antitrust claim even if indirect purchaser could show that the direct purchaser passed on the alleged overcharge).

[4] See Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Mach. Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 88 S. Ct. 2224, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231 (1968) [*22] ("As long as the seller continues to charge the illegal price, he takes from the buyer more than the law allows. At whatever the price the buyer sells, the price he pays the seller remains illegally high, and his profits would b greater were his costs lower.").

[5] At the motion hearing, Carnival agreed that a traditional travel agent would not be a class member.

6.1(c), and that "A ticket shall not be issued to a customer unless the booking has been confirmed in that class in airline's internal reservation system," id. § 6.1(f).

The airlines also submitted a declaration from the head of National Sales at VAA, which explains that when a Carnival passenger requests that Carnival handle the booking of air travel, Carnival does the booking using the CRS/GDS system, which contains information about VAA's schedules, availability and fares. Brooker Decl. ¶ 9. "The CRS/GDS system is not unique to Carnival — it is used by most [*24] travel agents and tour operators that book travel for their customers." Id. No payment is due to VAA until a ticket issues. Id. ¶ 11. Twenty-one days before a flight, Carnival is required to ticket any bookings it is holding for passengers on a VAA flight; when that ticket is issued, it is issued in the name of the specific passenger, not in Carnival's name. Id. ¶¶ 13-14. At that point, Carnival was obligated to remit the agreed fare to VAA. Id. ¶¶ 14, 17. Once paid, Carnival was not permitted to switch the passenger on the ticket, because, VAA explains, "it is not Carnival's ticket." Id. ¶ 19. Additionally, when the ticket issued, "the customer enters into two contracts, one with Carnival and one with VAA in accordance with the Conditions of Carriage." Opp'n at 5.

This evidence supports the conclusion that Carnival facilitated ticket sales much as any travel agent would, but did not buy tickets on its own behalf.

2. Relationship Between Carnival and BA

Carnival's relationship with BA appears to be quite similar. The relationship is governed by two contracts: the IATA and the IT contract. See Opp'n at 5. Under the IATA contract, as with VAA, Carnival uses the CRS/GDS system, through which [*25] BA gives agents access to its inventory, including flights, fares and availability. Rodgers Decl. (dkt. 377) ¶ 7. Carnival must provide a passenger's name at booking, and is not required to remit payment until a ticket is issued. Id. ¶ 8. Under the IT contract, Carnival has the right to sell seats to its customers on identified flights as part of a cruise package, and in return, Carnival agreed to pay the Nett Inclusive Tour Fare and assume responsibility for collecting and remitting payment for taxes, fees, and charges. Id. ¶ 9; see also Rodgers Decl. Ex. 2 (IT agreement) ¶ 4.2 ("The Airlines will provide seats at Nett Inclusive Tour Fares on certain routes, for certain prices, in certain classes and subject to specific rules and restrictions, all of which will be detailed in the Rate Sheets."). Under the IT contract, Carnival can only book tickets to named passengers. Id. ¶ 13 (citing Rodgers Decl. Ex. 2 (IT agreement)) § 6.1(g)). And Carnival was again obligated to "incorporate the Conditions of Carriage and all other relevant ticketing and contractual obligations . . . at the request of and for the benefit of the relevant Airline." Id. ¶ 6.1(i).

The language in the BA contracts [*26] characterizing Carnival as a "principal," see, e.g., Monts Decl. Ex. A (dkt. 367-1) § 2.3 ("If the Organiser is arranging a Package for the Group which includes travel with the benefit of the Group Nett Rates then the Organiser acts as principal."); Rogers Decl. Ex. 2 § 2.1 (". . . acting as principal, not as the Airline's agent."), does not change the Court's conclusion. Even if the contracts use the word "principal" more broadly than only in the context of the ATOL Regulations, compare Rodgers Decl. ¶ 15 ("The term 'principal' appears for the purposes of the Air Travel Organisers' Licensing Regulations.") [6]; with Rodgers Decl. Ex. 2 (IT agreement) § 6.2 ("Tour Operator shall not hold itself out as BA's . . . agent for the purposes of the ATOL Regulations or otherwise"), such language is not determinative of the issue here: not whether Carnival was technically BA's agent, but whether Carnival purchased the airfares on its own behalf, as a class member. [7] The evidence previously discussed leads the Court to conclude that Carnival did not purchase the airfares on its own behalf, but performed a consolidating function analogous to that of a travel agent.

[6] The declaration was made by BA's [*27] Key Account Manager, who manages BA's account with Carnival. Id. ¶ 2. Nonetheless it is not clear that this individual was involved in the drafting of the agreement or that he has personal knowledge of the purpose of that term.

[7] See also Mot. at 11 (arguing as to agency descriptor that "the Supreme Court recently noted" that "it is not the description of a transaction or a party to it that determines its antitrust significance but the economic substance of the arrangement").

3. Additional Arguments about Agency

Carnival makes two additional arguments for why it is not an agent.

First, Carnival cites to McCarthy v. Recordex Serv., Inc., 80 F.3d 842, 852 (3d Cir. 1996), in which the plaintiffs sought to circumvent the bar of Havover Shoe and Illinois Brick by arguing that their lawyers had acted as their agents for the purposes of purchasing photocopies. See Mot. at 12-13. The court in McCarthy, 80 F.3d at 852, held that "none of the plaintiffs retained their lawyers to act as mere purchasing agents whose sole objective and function was to buy photocopies for the clients." Id. Carnival argues that the "sole objective and function" of its purchase of tickets was not to arrange air travel [*28] on behalf of BA and VAA. Mot. at 13. But even if McCarthy, a Third Circuit case, had precedential value, it is distinguishable here for at least three reasons. First, this case sounds in contract, not antitrust, law. Second, the airlines' argument here is that Carnival was acting like an agent of the defendants — not of the plaintiffs. And third, arguably Carnival's sole function was to sell airline tickets as far as the airlines were concerned. Nonetheless, as previously discussed, Carnival need not have technically been an "agent" to be acting along the lines of a travel agent by purchasing tickets for its clients.

Next, Carnival argues without reference to any authority that "[w]hen travel agents sell tickets on behalf of an airline, they charge the fare established by the carrier; they do not price the ticket themselves or exercise any pricing discretion." Mot. at 10. Carnival reasons that "any pricing of air travel is necessarily made by Carnival when it sells single-price, all-inclusive cruise packages," id., and so Carnival cannot be an agent. That argument fails, because Carnival does not contest that it secures the ticket prices that the airlines require. Bundling services [*29] together and charging clients for them all at once does not mean that Carnival sets the price for the airline tickets, just that Carnival has flexibility in pricing the entire bundle of services.

B. Carnival Never Paid Fuel Surcharges

Most important, under Carnival's arrangements with the airlines, it was never responsible for paying fuel surcharges. See Opp'n at 12-13. "Fuel surcharges were only levied on tickets that were issued to individual passengers for seats actually flown by the ticketed passengers, and therefore were only paid for by the individual passengers, not by Carnival." Id. at 12; Brooker Decl. ¶ 14 (VAA fuel surcharge at time ticket issued); Rodgers Decl. ¶ 24 ("British Airways only assessed a fuel surcharge if a ticket was issued to a passenger and actually utilized by the passenger"). If a ticket was not issued to an individual passenger, at most Carnival had to pay a fixed fee to the airlines. See Rodgers Decl. ¶ 24. Fuel surcharges were not assessed if no ticket was issued to an individual passenger. Id.; Opp'n at 12. Thus, as the airlines argue, "[w]hatever risk Carnival assumed with respect to the seats that it requested BA reserve for Carnival customers, Carnival [*30] was never at risk of paying a fuel surcharge." Opp'n at 12.

This is the most significant fact weighing against Carnival's inclusion in the class. Carnival agreed with the Court at the motion hearing that this case was about the fuel surcharges. That Carnival was never on the hook for the fuel surcharge is consistent with it only purchasing airline tickets on behalf of its passengers, and inconsistent with its being a purchaser entitled to recovery.

Importantly, BA conceded at the motion hearing that if Carnival paid a fuel surcharge and there was no customer to pass that charge onto, Carnival would be a class member. To the extent that ever occurred, Carnival should prevail as to those charges. No evidence has been presented to the Court that it ever occurred.

Accordingly, the Court agrees with the Settlement Administrator that Carnival did not purchase tickets for itself but as a conduit.

C. Carnival's Delay Was Not Improper

Finally, the airlines complain that Carnival's delay in seeking review of the Settlement Administrator's decision threatens to harm other claimants. See Opp'n at 13-14. The Settlement Administrator's initial ruling denying Carnival's claim was 18 months ago, and it [*31] has been nearly a year since his denial of their request for reconsideration. Id. at 13. In the meantime, apparently 2,500 Carnival passengers have submitted claims and been issued refunds. Id. The airlines note that under the settlement agreement, each coupon for passenger travel is eligible for only one refund. Id. Therefore, they suggest, Carnival's claim threatens to take money out of its own passengers' pockets.

Be that as it may, Carnival was within its rights to wait as long as it did. Claimants have until December 2012 to submit claims, see id., and so Carnival might have waited another year to even step forward. That so many Carnival passengers submitted claims, presumably believing that they were class members, just underscores that it would be a windfall for Carnival to recover for a surcharge it never paid.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court finds that Carnival is not a class member and DENIES the Motion, except as to any instances in which Carnival can demonstrate to the Settlement Administrator that Carnival, and not its passenger, paid the fuel surcharge.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Opinion

[*293] MEMORANDUM

GENE E.K. PRATTER, J.

Plaintiffs have moved for the remand of this action for lack of subject matter jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1447(c). For the reasons that follow, the Court grants the motion.

I. Background

Plaintiffs are six direct purchasers of eggs and egg products who originally filed their Complaint in the Twenty-Ninth Judicial District, the District Court of Wyandotte County, Kansas. As the basis for their single claim, Plaintiffs exclusively rely on Kansas state law in asserting that various egg and egg product producers and trade groups conspired to fix prices and restrict the supply of shell egg and egg products in violation of the Kansas Restraint of Trade Act, Kan. Stat. Ann. §§ 50-101 and 50-112.

After Plaintiffs initiated suit, this "Kansas action" has navigated several procedural stopovers before ultimately coming to roost before this Court. Defendants filed a notice of removal of the action before the U.S. District Court of Kansas, following which Plaintiffs filed the motion sub judice. While the motion was pending before the Kansas federal court, the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation conditionally transferred this action [4] to the Processed Egg Products Antitrust Litigation (MDL No. 2002), then pending in this Court. See J.P.M.L. Transfer Order (Doc. No. 515). The cases coordinated or consolidated in the multidistrict litigation concern allegations of a conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act among egg producers and trade groups to manipulate the supply of eggs and egg products and thereby affect the domestic prices of those goods. See In re Processed Egg Prods. Antitrust Litig., 588 F. Supp. 2d 1366, 1367 (J.P.M.L. 2008). Some of those cases also include various state law claims against the Defendants. Because this Kansas action has been conditionally transferred to the multidistrict litigation, the pending motion for remand is before this Court. [1]

[1] Defendants filed their Notice of Removal on the docket of the U.S. District Court of Kansas, Civil Action No. 11-2063 at Docket No. 1. On that docket, Plaintiffs filed their Motion to Remand at Docket No. 21, and Defendants responded in opposition. Defendants jointly filed a response at Docket No. 68 (hereinafter, "Defs.' Resp."), and Defendant Sparboe Farms, Inc. responded separately at Docket No. 66 (hereinafter, "Sparboe Resp."). Plaintiffs filed their [5] reply at Docket No. 75 (hereinafter, "Pls.' Reply").

[*294] II. Subject Matter Jurisdiction

A defendant may properly remove to federal district court a civil action originally brought in state court, so long as the federal district court would have original jurisdiction over the matter. See 28 U.S.C. § 1441(a); Franchise Tax Bd. of Cal. v. Constr. Laborers Vacation Trust for S. Cal., 463 U.S. 1, 7-8, 103 S. Ct. 2841, 77 L. Ed. 2d 420 (1983). In doing so, the removing defendant bears the burden of establishing that jurisdiction exists. Dukes v. U. S. Healthcare, Inc., 57 F.3d 350, 359 (3d Cir. 1995).

Here, as the parties agree, because the named parties are not diverse, the Court's jurisdiction cannot be based upon diversity jurisdiction [6] under 28 U.S.C. § 1332(a). "Where the parties are not diverse, removal is appropriate only if the case falls within the district court's original 'federal question' jurisdiction . . . ." U.S. Express Lines Ltd. v. Higgins, 281 F.3d 383, 389 (3d Cir. 2002). In their removal papers Defendants invoked both 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331 and 1337 as bases for federal question jurisdiction. See Defs.' Notice of Removal at ¶ 4. These provisions respectively provide for the district court's original jurisdiction in "all civil actions arising under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States," 28 U.S.C. § 1331, and "any civil action or proceeding arising under any Act of Congress regulating commerce or protecting trade and commerce against restraints and monopolies," 28 U.S.C. § 1337. The term "arising under" is construed consistently across these provisions. Franchise Tax Bd., 463 U.S. at 8 n.7 ("[W]e have not distinguished between the 'arising under' standards of § 1337 and § 1331.").

Defendants argue that the Kansas action raises federal question jurisdiction sufficient for removal: "(1) because Plaintiffs allege claims that arise in interstate commerce that arise solely under federal law; [7] (2) because at least two Plaintiffs allege claims that have no connection at all to Kansas and, therefore, at least those claims cannot arise under Kansas law and must arise under federal law; (3) because the federal law of agricultural cooperatives completely preempts state law; and (4) because Plaintiffs' claims (even if properly pled under the Kansas Act) on their face raise substantial federal questions." Defs.' Resp. at 1. However, the Court determines that the federal issues identified by Defendants, to the extent that the Complaint's lone state claim implicates any, are insufficient to establish federal question jurisdiction.

A. Well-Pleaded Complaint Rule and Artful Pleading Doctrine

"Ordinarily, determining whether a particular case arises under federal law turns on the 'well-pleaded complaint' rule." Aetna Health Inc. v. Davila, 542 U.S. 200, 207, 124 S. Ct. 2488, 159 L. Ed. 2d 312 (2004) (internal quotations omitted) (citing Franchise Tax Bd., 463 U.S. at 9-10). Under the rule, "federal jurisdiction exists only when a federal question is presented on the face of the plaintiff's properly pleaded complaint." Caterpillar Inc. v. Williams, 482 U.S. 386, 392, 107 S. Ct. 2425, 96 L. Ed. 2d 318 (1987) (citing Gully v. First Nat'l Bank, 299 U.S. 109, 112-13, 57 S. Ct. 96, 81 L. Ed. 70 (1936)); [8] see also Gully, 299 U.S. at 115 ("Not every question of federal law emerging [*295] in a suit is proof that a federal law is the basis of the suit.").

Accordingly, a petition for removal and an answer to a complaint are irrelevant in determining the presence vel non of a federal question, and "[i]t is not enough that a federal question is or may be raised as a defense." U.S. Express, 281 F.3d at 389 (citation omitted). Likewise, counterclaims are inadequate to confer federal jurisdiction. Holmes Grp., Inc. v. Vornado Air Circulation Sys., Inc., 535 U.S. 826, 831, 122 S. Ct. 1889, 153 L. Ed. 2d 13 (2002). In essence, the "rule makes the plaintiff the master of the claim; he or she may avoid federal jurisdiction by exclusive reliance on state law." Caterpillar, 482 U.S. at 392.

Upon the transfer of the case to this district, this Court granted leave for the parties to file supplemental briefing as to Third Circuit law; those supplemental briefs are filed on this Court's docket, Action No. 08-md-2002 at Docket Nos. 529 and 530 (hereinafter, respectively, "Pls.' Suppl." and "Defs.' Suppl."). All Defendants joined the Defendants' supplemental memorandum. See Defs.' Suppl. at 9 n.5. Plaintiffs also filed a Notice of Supplemental Authority with this Court at Docket No. 540.

"[T]he vast majority of cases brought under the general federal-question jurisdiction of the federal courts are those in which federal law creates the cause of action." Merrell Dow Pharm. Inc. v. Thompson, 478 U.S. 804, 808, 106 S. Ct. 3229, 92 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1986). However, a "state suit need not invoke a federal law in order to 'arise under' it for removal purposes." U.S. Express, 281 F.3d at 389. Consequently, for purposes of federal question jurisdiction, either a "federal law creates [9] the cause of action or ... the plaintiff's right to relief necessarily depends on resolution of a substantial question of federal law." Empire Healthchoice Assurance Inc. v. McVeigh, 547 U.S. 677, 690, 126 S. Ct. 2121, 165 L. Ed. 2d 131 (2006) (citing Franchise Tax Bd., 463 U.S. at 27-28). [2]

A [10] familiar, if cynical, corollary to the well-pleaded complaint rule is the "artful pleading" doctrine. See Rivet v. Regions Bank of La., 522 U.S. 470, 475, 118 S. Ct. 921, 139 L. Ed. 2d 912 (1998); Franchise Tax Bd., 463 U.S. at 22 (1983). "If a court concludes that a plaintiff has 'artfully pleaded' claims in this fashion, it may uphold removal even though no federal question appears on the face of the plaintiff's complaint." Rivet, 522 U.S. at 475. As such, this doctrine "requires a court to peer through what are ostensibly wholly state claims to discern the federal question lurking in the verbiage." U.S. Express, 281 F.3d at 389.

In doing so, it is important to recognize that the term "federal issue" is not merely "a password opening federal courts to any state action embracing a point of federal law," and that a cause of action simply "appear[ing] in state raiment" is not necessarily cause for exclusion from federal courts. Grable & Sons Metal Prods., Inc. v. Darue Eng'g & Mfg., 545 U.S. 308, 314, 125 S. Ct. 2363, 162 L. Ed. 2d 257 (2005). [3] Accordingly, the Court must [*296] ask "does a state-law claim necessarily raise a stated federal issue, actually disputed and substantial, which a federal forum may entertain without disturbing any congressionally approved [11] balance of federal and state judicial responsibilities"? Id. at 314.

In their Complaint, Plaintiffs present a cause of action under state law, the Kansas Restraint of Trade Act ("KRTA"), for violations of Kan. Stat. Ann. §§ 50-101 and 50-112. See Compl. ¶¶ 227, 234-35, 37 (articulating that Defendants' alleged conduct was "in violation of the Kansas Restraint of Trade Act, K.S.A. 50-101 and 50-112" and seeking relief pursuant to Kan. Stat. Ann. §§ 50-115, 50-108, and 50-161). This "Kansas law is similar in some respects to the Sherman Act, but it is not identical." Bergstrom v. Noah, 266 Kan. 829, 974 P.2d 520, 531 (Kan. 1999). The Act "denies any person the right to form a trust or to be 'in any manner interested' in a trust, 'either directly or directly,' as defined in the [Act,] K.S.A. 50-102. In addition, all arrangements, contracts, [12] agreements or trusts 'which tend to prevent full and free competition in the importation, transportation or sale of articles imported into this state' are 'against public policy, unlawful and void.'" *Van Hoecke Contracting, Inc. v. Lennox Indus., Inc., No. 05-02343, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23439, 2005 WL 2575271, at 3 (D. Kan. Oct. 12, 2005) (quoting Kan. Stat. Ann. § 50-112). The Supreme Court of Kansas has summarized the KRTA as "very sweeping in its provisions. It defines and denounces five kinds of combinations, which it denominates trusts. The definitions are couched in general terms, but cover almost every conceivable device by which freedom of commerce might be hampered, competition restricted, or the price of commodities controlled." Bergstrom, 974 P.2d at 530 (quoting

[2] Additionally, a "state claim may be removed to federal court... when Congress expressly so provides, such as in the Price-Anderson Act...." Beneficial Nat. Bank v. Anderson, 539 U.S. 1, 8, 123 S. Ct. 2058, 156 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2003). That Act "contains an unusual pre-emption provision, 42 U.S.C. § 2014(hh), that not only gives federal courts jurisdiction over tort actions arising out of nuclear accidents but also expressly provides for removal of such actions brought in state court even when they assert only state-law claims." Id. at 6 (citation omitted).

Another such example is the Securities Litigation Uniform Standards Act of 1998, the removal provision for which, 15 U.S.C. § 78bb(f)(2), is "jurisdictional" and "creates an express exception to the well-pleaded complaint rule, conferring federal removal jurisdiction over a unique class of state law claims." Rowinski v. Salomon Smith Barney Inc., 398 F.3d 294, 297-298 (3d Cir. 2005) (footnote and citation omitted).

[3] As the Third Circuit Court of Appeals has recognized, generally, "there is a very limited area in which a federal court in a case removed from a state court is authorized to recharacterize what purports to be a state law claim as a claim arising under a federal statute." R.R. Labor Execs. Ass'n v. Pittsburgh & Lake Erie R.R. Co., 858 F.2d 936, 942 (3d Cir. 1988).

Kansas v. Wilson, 73 Kan. 334, 80 P. 639, 640 (1906) in reference to Kan. Stat. Ann. §§ 50-101 to 50-110); see also Van Hoecke, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23439, 2005 WL 2575271, at *4 (quoting same). [4]

None of the Defendants' arguments against remand are premised upon the contention that the Complaint is deficient in alleging a prima facie claim under the KRTA. Cf. United Jersey Banks v. Parell, 783 F.2d 360, 368 (3d Cir. 1986) (commenting that "federal jurisdiction will not be found when the complaint states a prima facie claim under state law"); see also Jackson v. Prime Motors, Inc., No. 11-2360, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 143015, 2011 WL 1883806, at *3 (E.D. Pa. May 17, 2011). Instead, Defendants attempt to recast the Plaintiff's claim as one arising under the Sherman Act because "[e]ither in whole or in part, Plaintiffs allege interstate conspiracy claims that can only arise under the Sherman Act." Defs.' Resp. at 6.

Defendants argue that Plaintiffs assert factual allegations that involve "the same nationwide conspiracy, in interstate commerce, to fix prices of eggs and egg products," and which are "virtually [14] identical" [*297] to those allegations giving rise to the federal claims existing in the multidistrict litigation. Id. [5] However, even if the same factual allegations and same theory of conspiracy could give rise to both federal and state claims, the fact that Plaintiffs could have also brought a Sherman Act claim is not a factor in applying the well-pleaded complaint rule. See Delta Dental of R.I. v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of R.I., 942 F. Supp. 740, 747 (D.R.I. 1996) ("... [T]he present dispute could have been brought as a federal antitrust claim under the Sherman Act. [Plaintiff] has chosen to forego its rights under federal law, however, instead relying exclusively on state law in asserting its claims against [Defendant].... [Plaintiff], as the master of the claim, has chosen to rely exclusively on state law and to litigate in state court—a choice that [Defendant] cannot defeat, notwithstanding that the case could have been brought under the Sherman Act or that federal defenses might be available.").

Defendants also contend [15] that Plaintiffs are impermissibly seeking to recover for claims based upon sales of goods outside of Kansas, and that Plaintiffs "can only seek recovery [for those claims] pursuant to federal law." Defs.' Resp. at 8. Namely, according to Defendants, Kansas courts generally do not recognize the enforcement of state law on extraterritorial acts and that the KRTA cannot apply to out-of-state transactions because to do so would conflict with the federal dormant commerce clause. Id. Additionally, Defendants claim that some of these six Plaintiffs may not be able to recover at all under the KRTA because those Plaintiffs' claims do not involve sales made in or into Kansas. Id. at 7-8. Even assuming, arguendo, the validity of these arguments, Defendants are merely highlighting that Plaintiffs may not be able to recover under the KRTA for the full scope of the activities and damages alleged in the Complaint for various reasons, including because of at least one reason premised upon a federal legal issue. [6] Nonetheless, these arguments are not occasion for a Chicken Little panic. Instead, they simply

[4] One federal district court also observed recently that:

> In discussing the Kansas restraint of trade act, Kansas Supreme Court noted that no hard and fast rule could be laid down, but that the question is never whether there is a restraint of trade, but whether the restraint is reasonable [13] and whether or not the restraint contravenes the public welfare. Because the restraint of trade act concerns itself with the public welfare, it was designed to protect the competitive process, not competitors.

Ablulimir v. U-Haul Co. of Kansas, Inc., No. 11-4014-EFM, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 75191, 2011 WL 2731774, at *6 (D. Kan. June 13, 2011).

[5] Plaintiffs do not appear to dispute that their Complaint is premised upon factual allegations that form the cause of actions at issue in the multidistrict litigation.

[6] There is some authority that may further diminish the Defendants' interstate commerce argument in one respect. See In re Wyoming Tight Sands Antitrust Cases, No. 85-2349, 1990 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12165, 1990 WL 136788, at *4 (D. Kan. Aug. 2, 1990) (rejecting an argument that "Kansas antitrust laws regulate activities solely in intrastate and opposed to interstate commerce" because "K.S.A. 50-112 clearly makes unlawful 'all arrangements ... which tend to prevent full and free competition in the importation, transportation or sale of articles imported into this state" and by "its clear language, the statute clearly contemplates enforcement in the interstate context," and because the cases raised by the movant "demonstrate that when a challenged course of conduct has implicated both inter-and intrastate commerce, the courts have applied Kansas antitrust statutes").

constitute defenses to the state claim, and defenses do not provide appropriate grounds for [16] removal on the basis of federal question jurisdiction. [7]

Defendants are equally unpersuasive in their argument that "the Plaintiffs' Complaint raises the substantial federal question of the agricultural cooperative's immunity on its face." Defs.' Resp. at 20. All [*298] parties appear to agree that the Capper-Volstead Act and the other statutes, "allow[] certain agricultural producers to form cooperatives without incurring antitrust liability." In re Mushroom Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., 655 F.3d 158, 158 (3d Cir. 2011). However, according to Defendants, the Plaintiffs' allegations "are designed to establish that Defendants have not complied with the terms of the federal cooperative acts [such as the Capper-Volstead Act, the Agricultural Cooperative Marketing Act, and Section 6 of the Clayton Act]. Otherwise, Defendants' alleged actions would be legally justified and Plaintiffs could not prove that Defendants engaged in anticompetitive conduct." Defs.' Suppl. at 7.

However, there are no allegations in the Complaint that refer to any federal statute, let alone any allegations that [18] Defendants do not qualify for immunity under the Capper-Volstead Act or a similar federal statute. Furthermore, Defendant Sparboe Farms, Inc. [8] acknowledges that "compliance or non-compliance" with those statutes "is not an element of Plaintiffs' claims," and thus "Plaintiffs are not required to make any affirmative pleading with respect to federal statutes." Sparboe Resp. at 13.

As previously discussed, although the Complaint contains factual allegations that could give rise to a federal antitrust claim, or factual allegations that ostensibly appear to anticipate a federal defense, the existence of these possibilities do not provide [*299] grounds for federal question jurisdiction when Plaintiffs do not actually assert a federal antitrust claim. [9] Likewise, no grounds [19] for federal question jurisdiction exist because Plaintiffs do not have to prove (or disprove) a substantial question of federal law to make out all necessary elements of their KRTA

[7] In exercising their "plaintiff's choice" by only pursuing a KRTA claim in their Complaint, Plaintiffs may have accounted for the advantages and disadvantages of pursuing remedies under the KRTA in lieu of the Sherman Act. See, e.g., Kenton C. Granger, A Glimpse at a Plaintiff's Remedies Under Kansas' [17] Antitrust Laws, 8 Washburn L.J. 1, 10-13 (describing some of the possible advantages of bringing a KRTA suit as compared to a federal antitrust suit, and vice versa).

[8] In the pending multidistrict litigation, Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs entered into a settlement agreement with Sparboe, as well as a settlement agreement with another group of Defendants. Plaintiffs have represented to the Court that "Plaintiffs opted-out of th[ose] direct purchaser settlements on or before November 16, 2010, and filed their lawsuit in Kansas state court." Pls.' Mot. at 4, ¶ 12, see also id. at 3-4, ¶¶ 9-11.

[9] The Court does not address in this decision whether the Capper-Volstead Act or the other statutes create a recognized defense to the KRTA. However, the Court observes that Defendants, in recounting the development of the Capper-Volstead Act in light of the history of "prosecutions of [agricultural] cooperatives under state antitrust laws," quote the Supreme Court for the contention that "[s]ome state courts had sustained antitrust charges against agricultural cooperatives, and as a result eventually all the States passed Acts [20] authorizing their existence." Defs.' Resp. at 14-15 (emphasis added) (quoting Md. & Va. Milk Producers Ass'n v. United States, 362 U.S. 458, 464, 80 S. Ct. 847, 4 L. Ed. 2d 880 (1960)). Seemingly, the Cooperative Marketing Act, Kan. Stat. Ann. §§ 17-1601 to 17-1636, which provides, "[n]o association, contract, method or act which [under Kansas law qualifies as, or is conduct attributed to, an agricultural cooperative association] shall be deemed a conspiracy or combination in restraint of trade or as creating an illegal monopoly," id. § 17-1634, may qualify as one such state statute. See Kan. Wheat Growers' Ass'n v. Charlet, 118 Kan. 765, 236 P. 657, 658 (Kan. 1925) (commenting that the Kansas Supreme Court had "held the statute [the Cooperative Marketing Act] to be valid, and held the [defendant] association is not an unreasonable combination in restraint of trade, or an organization for fostering unlawful monopoly"). It follows that the Cooperative Marketing Act might provide an alternative explanation for why Plaintiffs alleged facts that could be construed as anticipating an "agricultural cooperative"-type defense. See, e.g., Compl. ¶ 106 ("These activities fall outside the legitimate objectives of any agricultural cooperative."); [21] id. ¶ 108 ("UEP members are large corporate competitors rather than small farmers banding together to cut out the corporate middlemen who would otherwise market their eggs. UEP members do not associate to collectively process, handle and market their products, and UEP does not provide those services. UEP does not wash, candle, grade, break, pasteurize, package, store, transport, or distribute its members' eggs. UEP does not negotiate contracts for sale for its members.").

claim. See Grable, 545 U.S. at 314-15 (recognizing that federal question jurisdiction exists when the meaning of a federal statute both is disputed and is an essential element of the plaintiff's state law cause of action). [10] As such, the Defendants' arguments on this score do not implicate any of the previously discussed principles concerning federal question jurisdiction, the well-pleaded complaint rule, and the artful pleading doctrine that would warrant denying the remand request.

B. Complete Preemption

Another way in which the artful pleading doctrine permits removal is "where federal law completely preempts a plaintiff's state-law claim." Rivet, 522 U.S. at 475. That is, when the pre-emptive force of a statute is so "extraordinary" that it "converts an ordinary state common-law complaint into one stating a federal claim for purposes of the well-pleaded complaint rule." Caterpillar, 482 U.S. at 393 (quoting Metro. Life Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 481 U.S. 58, 65, 107 S. Ct. 1542, 95 L. Ed. 2d 55 (1987)); see also 13D Charles Alan Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 3566 ("It is based on the theory that some federal statutes have such an overwhelming preemptive effect that they do more than merely provide a defense to a state-law claim."). [11] This occurs "when a federal statute wholly displaces the state-law cause of action." Anderson, 539 U.S. at 6, 8; see also In re Cmty. Bank of N. Va., 418 F.3d 277, 294 (3d Cir. 2005). "Once an area of state law has been completely pre-empted, any claim purportedly based on that pre-empted state law is considered, from its inception, a federal claim, and therefore [23] arises under federal law." Caterpillar, 482 U.S. at 393. [12]

The Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit has determined that complete preemption exists only when (1) the federal statute that ostensibly serves as [*300] the basis for removal "contains civil enforcement provisions [24] within the scope of which the plaintiff's claim falls," and (2) there is "a clear indication of a Congressional intention to permit removal." Goepel v. Nat'l Postal Mail Handlers Union, 36 F.3d 306, 311 (3d Cir. 1994) (quoting R.R. Labor, 858 F.2d at 942); Allstate Ins. Co. v. 65 Sec. Plan, 879 F.2d 90, 93 (3d Cir. 1989).

Although our Court of Appeals has not revisited the test in recent years, the second-part of this inquiry may have been modified by a subsequent Supreme Court decision to "focus[] on whether Congress intended the federal cause of action to be exclusive rather than on whether Congress intended that the cause of action be removable." Anderson, 539 U.S. at 9 n.5. Under either formulation of the test, "Congressional intent remains the touchstone, however." 14B Wright & Miller, supra § 3722.2.

In one case illustrative of complete preemption, the Supreme Court "found complete pre-emption" when "the federal statutes at issue provided the exclusive cause of action for the claim asserted and also set forth procedures and [10] Contrary to the Defendants' contention otherwise, they have not demonstrated that the Plaintiffs' KRTA claim is like the state law quiet title claim in Grable & Sons Metal Products, Inc. v. Darue Engineering & Manufacturing, 545 U.S. 308, 125 S. Ct. 2363, 162 L. Ed. 2d 257. In Grable, the Supreme Court upheld the removal of a state quiet title claim because it was premised on the grounds that a sale of real property was invalid because the service of an IRS seizure notice was inadequate under a federal statute. Id. at 310-11. The issue involving notice under the federal statute was thus "an essential element of [the] quiet title claim." Id. at 315. Here, the purported federal issue of an agricultural cooperative's immunity might arise as an affirmative [22] defense to the Plaintiff's KRTA claim, but not as an element of the cause of action.

[11] "Very few statutes have a complete preemption effect." Wright & Miller, supra § 3566. Examples of statutes that have been found to completely preempt state law include the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, and the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974. See El Paso Natural Gas Co. v. Neztsosie, 526 U.S. 473, 484 n.6, 119 S. Ct. 1430, 143 L. Ed. 2d 635 (1999).

[12] In this way, complete preemption could be understood to serve as the recalibration of a non-existent state claim into the federal claim that it actually is: "An effort to invoke nonexistent state law is no different from a spelling error. A complaint reciting that a firm with a large share of the market for some product is violating 'the anti-rust laws' could not be dismissed on the observation that there is no federal prohibition of iron oxide. A court would treat the document as one under anti-trust law from the outset." Bartholet v. Reishauer A.G., 953 F.2d 1073, 1075 (7th Cir. 1992).

remedies governing that cause of action." Anderson, 539 U.S. at 8. However, the Supreme Court has recognized that "the absence of a federal private right of [25] action as evidence [is] relevant to, but not dispositive of, the 'sensitive judgments about congressional intent' that [28 U.S.C.] § 1331 requires." Grable, 545 U.S. at 318. Indeed, "the combination of no federal cause of action and no preemption of state remedies ... [is] an important clue to Congress's conception of the scope of jurisdiction to be exercised under § 1331. [Thus, a] missing cause of action [is] not... a missing federal door key, always required, but [is] a missing welcome mat, required in the circumstances, when exercising federal jurisdiction over a state ... action would have attracted a horde of original filings and removal cases raising other state claims with embedded federal issues." Id.

Courts often emphasize that complete preemption, which addresses federal subject matter jurisdiction, is "a distinct concept from ordinary preemption." R.R. Labor, 858 F.2d at 941 (citing Caterpillar, 482 U.S. at 398). In contrast, "[o]rdinary preemption governs what substantive law—federal or state—ought to control a claim styled under state law." Krashna v. Oliver Realty, Inc., 895 F.2d 111, 114 n.3 (3d Cir. 1990); see also Guckin v. Nagle, 259 F. Supp. 2d 406 (E.D. Pa. 2003) [26] ("In other words, complete preemption addresses the forum, i.e., federal or state, where the claim must be heard; 'ordinary preemption' addresses the substantive rule of decision, i.e., federal or state, which the court must apply."); Vorhees v. Naper Aero Club, Inc., 272 F.3d 398, 403 (7th Cir. 2001) ("Only 'complete' preemption affects federal subject matter jurisdiction. 'Conflict' preemption relates to the merits of a claim. It comes into play any time a state law allegedly conflicts with federal law."); Wright & Miller, supra § 3556 ("The name [of 'complete preemption'] is misleading and this doctrine should be contrasted with 'ordinary' or 'conflict' preemption, under which federal law provides a defense to a state-law claim. 'Complete preemption,' in contrast, is actually a doctrine of subject matter jurisdiction." (footnote omitted)). Ordinary defensive preemption is embodied in the three categories of express preemption, conflict preemption, and field preemption. See Farina v. Nokia Inc., 625 F.3d 97, 115 (3d Cir. 2010) (citing Hillsborough Cnty. v. Automated Med. Labs., Inc., 471 U.S. 707, 713, 105 S. Ct. 2371, 85 L. Ed. 2d 714 (1985)).

[*301] However, "[t]he fact that a defendant might ultimately prove that a plaintiff's [27] claims are pre-empted ... does not establish that they are removable to federal court." R.R. Labor, 858 F.2d at 941 (quoting Caterpillar, 482 U.S. at 398). As such, "it is now settled law that a case may not be removed to federal court on the basis of a federal defense, including the defense of pre-emption, even if the defense is anticipated in the plaintiff's complaint, and even if both parties concede that the federal defense is the only question truly at issue." Caterpillar, 482 U.S. at 393 (citing Franchise Tax Bd., 463 U.S. at 12).

Defendants contend that the principles of complete preemption apply to the KRTA claim by arguing that federal law regulating the economic activities of agricultural cooperatives completely preempts state law. According to Defendants, the "Plaintiffs' claims against [a trade group] and the individual Defendants arise in an area that is completely preempted by federal law" because the Capper-Volstead Act, the Agricultural Cooperative Marketing Act, and Section 6 of the Clayton Act "comprehensively regulate[] the joint economic activities of agricultural cooperatives." Defs.' Resp. at 12.

As Plaintiffs correctly contend in rejoinder, however, Defendants [28] have not sustained their burden in demonstrating that removal is appropriate on the basis that the Plaintiffs' claim is completely preempted by the Capper-Volstead Act and the like. For example, Defendants have not pointed to any authority that suggests that any of the federal statutes that purportedly regulate the economic activities or competition of agricultural cooperatives create an exclusive cause of action or set forth procedures and remedies governing such actions. Moreover, the Defendants do not take the position that the Capper-Volstead Act, or the other statutes in combination or separately, create any sort of cause of action—and certainly not an exclusive cause of action—but rather provide for a kind of "immunity" to antitrust claims. Indeed, Defendants argue that those statutes "permit joint actions that might otherwise be illegal" and that "should cooperatives engage in anticompetitive behavior beyond that allowed by these statutes, then federal law provides a remedy through the Sherman Act." Defs.' Suppl. at 5-6; see also Defs.' Resp. at 12-13. In other words, Defendants appear to recognize that any federal cause of action in antitrust cases involving agricultural producers [29] arises under the Sherman Act, not the Capper-Volstead Act or similar federal law. [13]

Defendants also have failed to demonstrate that those statutes manifest the Congressional intent that Defendants attempt to assign them. Defendants claim that the statutes "reflect a sustained congressional intent that agricultural cooperatives affirmatively be permitted to act jointly with and on behalf of their members," Defs.' Resp. at 12-13, and as such the statutes "evince an intent to occupy the field and preempt state law." Defs.' Suppl. at 5. Defendants cite excerpts of the plain language of the Capper-Volstead Act, the Agricultural Cooperative Marketing Act, and Section 6 of the Clayton Act, as well as quotations from case law and commentators that discuss those statutes in a summary manner. See Defs.' Resp. at [*302] 13-17. [14] However, a close review of those authorities reveals that while there may be considerable Congressional interest in the economic activities [30] of agricultural cooperatives, those authorities do not go so far as to serve as evidence that Congress intended to create a cause of action that is exclusively federal and could serve as the basis for removal, or that Congress intended these statutes to completely preempt state remedies.

Furthermore, the quintessence of the Defendants' [31] argument as to complete preemption reveals that Defendants are scrambling the principles of complete preemption with the defense of federal preemption. [15] Indeed, this is evident in the Defendant's invocation of "field preemption" and "conflict preemption," which, as previously discussed, are defenses to the merits of a state claim. Given that in the removal context the Court's federal question jurisdiction cannot rest on federal defenses of preemption, the Defendants' reliance on ordinary preemption concepts cannot win the day. In sum, Defendants have not met their burden of demonstrating that removal on the grounds of complete preemption is appropriate. [16]

[13] Although the Defendants occasionally invoke the Sherman Act in their arguments as to complete preemption, they are explicit in stating that they "do not contend that federal antitrust law preempts all state antitrust law." Defs.' Resp. at 19.

[14] Some examples of the Defendants' legal authority from case law and commentators includes: Christine Varney, The Capper-Volstead Act, Agricultural Cooperatives, and Antitrust Immunity, The Antitrust Source, at 1 (Dec. 2010) (quoted by Defendants for the contention that the "Capper-Volstead Act represented the culmination of a long struggle by farmers to guarantee their right to organize cooperatives" and that the "passage of the Sherman Act and many state antitrust laws" led to "widespread concern ... that these laws would be used against agricultural cooperatives"), and Bell v. Fur Breeders Agricultural Cooperative, 348 F. 3d 1224, 1232-33 (10th Cir. 2003) (cited by Defendants for the proposition that federal courts "have determined that agricultural cooperatives, like corporations, do not have the plurality of actors necessary for a Section 1 conspiracy").

[15] This conflation is not unique to Defendants. See, e.g., Sullivan v. Am. Airlines, Inc., 424 F.3d 267, 273 n.7 (2d Cir. 2005) ("Some commentators seem to equate the defense of field preemption, which defeats a plaintiff's state-law claim because federal law 'occupies the field' within which the state-law claim falls, with the doctrine of complete preemption, which creates federal subject-matter jurisdiction over preempted state-law claims .... But no Supreme Court case has ever held the two forms of preemption to be equivalent. [32] It is true that the defense of field preemption and the doctrine of complete preemption both rest on the breadth, in some crude sense, of a federal statute's preemptive force. The two types of preemption are, however, better considered distinct." (citations omitted)).

[16] Although remand is appropriate at this time, the Court recognizes that this case might join the pending multidistrict litigation at another time. Such an occasion might develop, for instance, pursuant to the Class Action Fairness Act ("CAFA"). By way of example, this Court's jurisdiction might arise under CAFA given the potential interplay between the possible (albeit, rather novel) formation of a class of defendants, see, e.g., Kan. Stat. Ann. § 60-223; S. Ute Indian Tribe v. Amoco Prod. Co., 2 F.3d 1023, 1030 (10th Cir. 1993) (describing a district court's certification of a defendant class upon a defendant's motion); CAFA's broad jurisdictional grant for state class actions, including those with a proposed class, 28 U.S.C. § 1332(d); and the federal removal statute, 28 U.S.C. § 1446(b) ("If the case stated by the initial pleading is not removable, a notice of removal may be filed within thirty days after receipt by [33] the defendant, through service or otherwise, of a copy of an amended pleading, motion, order or other paper from which it may first be ascertained that the case is one which is or has become removable, except that a case may not be removed on the basis of jurisdiction conferred by section 1332 of this title more than 1 year after commencement of the action.").

III. Request for Fees and Costs

Plaintiffs have requested pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1447(c) the recovery of costs and [*303] expenses they have incurred due to the Defendants' removal of the Kansas action. However, the Court concludes that denial of this request is appropriate.

28 U.S.C. § 1447(c) provides that an "order remanding the case may require payment of just costs and any actual expenses, including attorney fees, incurred as a result of the removal." There is no requirement "that fees under § 1447(c) should either usually be granted or usually be denied." Martin v. Franklin Capital Corp., 546 U.S. 132, 139, 126 S. Ct. 704, 163 L. Ed. 2d 547 (2005).

Instead, the Court is guided by the standard that, "absent unusual circumstances, attorney's fees should not be awarded when the removing party has an objectively reasonable basis for removal." Id. at 136. Additionally, [34] the Court has "discretion to consider whether unusual circumstances warrant a departure from the rule in a given case. For instance, a plaintiff's delay in seeking remand or failure to disclose facts necessary to determine jurisdiction may affect the decision to award attorney's fees." Id. at 141. This standard serves to "recognize the desire to deter removals sought for the purpose of prolonging litigation and imposing costs on the opposing party, while not undermining Congress' basic decision to afford defendants a right to remove as a general matter, when the statutory criteria are satisfied," and likewise, not "discouraging [the] exercise [of removal] in all but obvious cases." Id. at 140. In exercising this discretion, the Court must ensure its rationale is "'faithful to the purposes' of awarding fees under § 1447(c)." Id. at 141.

Plaintiffs claim that fees and costs are warranted because Defendants did not have an objectively reasonable basis for removal. In support, they cite a case from another district in this Circuit that found that "no reasonable basis for removal" was presented when the Defendants' arguments for removal were previously rejected by the Supreme Court and other [35] courts. See *Gilbert v. Synagro, LLC, No. 1:CV-08-1460, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 98949, 2008 WL 5146506, at 1 (M.D. Pa. Dec. 8, 2008). Plaintiffs also argue that "Defendants failed to cite to any case from anywhere in the country that supported this argument." Pls.' Suppl. at 10.

However, this line of argument verges on the pot calling the kettle black. Plaintiffs likewise did not raise any legal authority that directly considered (and rejected) the Defendants' arguments. It may be that no court has had occasion to consider arguments like those raised by Defendants, or that the parties' research simply did not uncover such authority. Regardless, no single, dispositive conclusion can be drawn from the parties' mutual failure to raise legal authority that directly addressed Defendants' arguments—albeit, given the high quality of advocacy that the parties' counsel respectively exhibited, this result suggests by implication that there was no obvious authority contravening removal. Furthermore, based upon the circumstances of removal and the parties' briefing, it could be fairly said that Defendants were attempting to extend this area of law based upon certain legal authority, and that although the Court ultimately disagreed [36] with their interpretation of that authority, the legal authority cited provided an objectively comprehensible and nonfrivolous basis for removal. Cf. Vandeventer v. Guimond, 494 F. Supp. 2d 1255, 1269 (D. Kan. 2007).

Additionally, Plaintiffs imply that the Defendants' removal efforts are an intentional attempt to delay the litigation and impose unnecessary costs on Plaintiffs because the Defendants also sought to "stay [*304] the District of Kansas from timely ruling on Plaintiffs' Motion to Remand and by transferring this lawsuit across the country." Pls.' Suppl. at 10. However, this other alleged conduct, even if true, does not demonstrate intent to extensively prolong the litigation and impose costs upon Plaintiffs, particularly when considering this removal in the framework of the pending multidistrict litigation, which involves many of the same defendants and shares common factual allegations with the Plaintiffs' Complaint. Furthermore, the Court does not find other evidence of intentional delay here.

In sum, Plaintiffs do not cite to any legal authority or underlying facts in this case, nor does the Court find any such circumstances, that would justify an award for fees and costs under [37] § 1447(c). Furthermore, the Court determines that none of the purposes underlying § 1447(c) compel the award of fees and costs in the present circumstances. Accordingly, the Court denies the Plaintiffs' request for attorney's fees and costs.

IV. Conclusion

Although Defendants have mustered a series of arguments to support their removal of the Kansas action, these arguments must be considered unavailing. The Defendants' arguments essentially invoke defenses to the Complaint as the basis for the Court's federal question jurisdiction. However, defenses, even those that conjure federal issues and preemption defenses, simply are insufficient to support removal on the basis that the Plaintiffs' claim arises under federal law. Furthermore, Defendants have failed to satisfy their burden of demonstrating that the Plaintiff's KRTA claim establishes federal question jurisdiction. Accordingly, the Court grants the Plaintiffs' Motion for Remand, and the action will be remanded for lack of subject matter jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1447(c).

An Order consistent with this Memorandum follows.

ORDER

AND NOW, this 19th [38] day of December, 2011, upon consideration of the Plaintiffs' Motion to Remand (D. Kan., Civil Action No. 11-2063, Doc. No. 21), the Defendants' response and the Defendant Sparboe Farms, Inc.'s response (D. Kan., Civil Action No. 11-2063, Doc. Nos. 68 and 66), the Plaintiffs' reply (D. Kan., Civil Action No. 11-2063, Doc. No. 75), and the parties' supplemental filings thereto, and for the reasons stated in the accompanying Memorandum, it is hereby ORDERED that the Motion to Remand is GRANTED.

It is FURTHER ORDERED that this case is REMANDED to the Twenty-Ninth Judicial District, the District Court of Wyandotte County, Kansas, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1447(c).

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Clerk of Court shall CLOSE Associated Wholesale Grocers, Inc. v. United Egg Producers, Civil Action No. 11-3520 (E.D. Pa.), for all purposes, including statistics.

HN1[] Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

The role of an appellate court is to ascertain whether or not a district court clearly abused its discretion in approving or rejecting a settlement agreement in a class action. A district court abuses its discretion if its decision rests upon a clearly erroneous finding of fact, an errant conclusion of law, or an improper application of law to fact. If the district court's analysis on these points is correct, however, then it is fair to say that the appellate court will ordinarily defer to its exercise of discretion embodied in the findings on predominance and superiority. Whether an incorrect legal standard has been used is an issue of law to be reviewed de novo. The district court's determination that the settlement is fair, reasonable, and adequate is likewise reviewed for abuse of discretion.

HN2[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

Before approving a class settlement agreement, a district court first must determine that the requirements for class certification under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a), (b) are met. Rule 23(a) contains four threshold requirements, which every putative class must satisfy: (1) the class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable; (2) there are questions of law or fact common to the class; (3) the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class; and (4) the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class. Rule 23(a). Upon finding each of these prerequisites satisfied, the district court must then determine that the proposed class fits within one of the categories of class actions enumerated in Rule 23(b).

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Maintainability

HN3[] Remedies, Injunctions

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2) authorizes class actions seeking injunctive relief in instances where a defendant has acted or refused to act on grounds that apply generally to the class, so that final injunctive relief is appropriate respecting the class as a whole. Rule 23(b)(2).

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Predominance

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Superiority

HN4[] Prerequisites for Class Action, Predominance

Certification of a class pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3) seeking monetary compensation is permitted where (1) questions of law or fact common to class members predominate over any questions affecting only individual members, and (2) a class action is superior to other available methods for fairly and efficiently adjudicating the controversy. Rule 23(b)(3). These twin requirements are commonly referred to as predominance and superiority.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Commonality

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Predominance

HN5[] Prerequisites for Class Action, Commonality

The predominance inquiry tests whether proposed classes are sufficiently cohesive to warrant adjudication by representation, and assesses whether a class action would achieve economies of time, effort, and expense, and promote uniformity of decision as to persons similarly situated. Parallel with Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(2)'s commonality element, which provides that a proposed class must share a common question of law or fact, Rule 23(b)(3)'s predominance requirement imposes a more rigorous obligation upon a reviewing court to ensure that issues common to the class predominate over those affecting only individual class members. Hence, the court considers the Rule 23(a) commonality requirement to be incorporated into the more stringent Rule 23(b)(3) predominance requirement, and therefore deem it appropriate to analyze the two factors together, with particular focus on the predominance requirement.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Commonality

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Predominance

HN6[] Prerequisites for Class Action, Commonality

Three guideposts direct the predominance inquiry in a class action: first, that commonality is informed by the defendant's conduct as to all class members and any resulting injuries common to all class members; second, that variations in state law do not necessarily defeat predominance; and third, that concerns regarding variations in state law largely dissipate when a court is considering the certification of a settlement class.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Predominance

HN7[] Prerequisites for Class Action, Predominance

The focus of the predominance inquiry is on whether a defendant's conduct was common as to all class members, and whether all of the class members were harmed by the defendant's conduct.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Commonality

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Predominance

HN8[] Prerequisites for Class Action, Commonality

In the class action context, commonality and predominance are defeated when it cannot be said that there was a common course of conduct in which the defendant engaged with respect to each individual. But commonality is satisfied where common questions generate common answers apt to drive the resolution of the litigation.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Commonality

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Predominance

HN9[] Prerequisites for Class Action, Commonality

Variations in the rights and remedies available to injured class members under the various laws of the fifty states do not defeat commonality and predominance for class action purposes. This is so because a finding of commonality does not require that all class members share identical claims, and predominance is not considered deficient merely because claims were subject to the varying laws of fifty states. Predominance under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3) cannot be reduced to a mechanical, single-issue test; rather, as long as a sufficient constellation of common issues binds class members together, variations in the sources and application of applicable laws will not foreclose class certification.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Commonality

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Predominance

HN10[] Prerequisites for Class Action, Commonality

Courts are willing to certify nationwide classes where differences in state law fall into a limited number of predictable patterns, and any deviations can be overcome at trial by grouping similar state laws together and applying them as a unit.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Commonality

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Predominance

HN11[] Prerequisites for Class Action, Commonality

For purposes of litigation classes, if applicable state laws can be sorted into a small number of groups, each containing materially identical legal standards, then certification of subgroups embracing each of the dominant legal standards can be appropriate.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Commonality

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Predominance

HN12[] Prerequisites for Class Action, Commonality

Nothing in case law or the language of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 commands that everyone in a class must allege precisely identical or uniform causes of action, and statutory variations do not defeat predominance in the presence of other exceedingly common issues. Instead, where a defendant's singular conduct gives rise to one cause of action in one state, while providing for a different cause of action in another jurisdiction, the courts may group both claims in a single class action.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Commonality

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Predominance

HN13[] Prerequisites for Class Action, Commonality

In the class action context, the question is not what valid claims can plaintiffs assert; rather, it is simply whether common issues of fact or law predominate. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3). There is no "claims" or "merits" litmus test incorporated into the predominance inquiry beyond what is necessary to determine preliminarily whether certain elements will necessitate individual or common proof.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

HN14[] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

Although an evaluation of the probable outcome on the merits is not properly part of a class certification decision, discovery in aid of the certification decision often includes information required to identify the nature of the issues that actually will be presented at trial. In this sense it is appropriate to conduct controlled discovery into the merits, limited to those aspects relevant to making the certification decision on an informed basis.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

HN15[] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

A court considering certification of a class may inquire whether the elements of asserted claims are capable of proof through common evidence, but lacks authority to adjudge the legal validity or soundness of the substantive elements of asserted claims. Put another way, a district court may inquire into the merits of the claims presented in order to determine whether the requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 are met, but not in order to determine whether the individual elements of each claim are satisfied.

HN17[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

Settlement agreements in class actions are creatures of private contract law. A district court is not a party to the settlement, nor may it modify the terms of a voluntary settlement agreement between parties. Thus, a district court's certification of a settlement simply recognizes the parties' deliberate decision to bind themselves according to mutually agreed-upon terms without engaging in any substantive adjudication of the underlying causes of action. In the absence of a finding that plaintiffs are actually entitled to relief under substantive state law, the court does not abridge, enlarge, or modify any substantive right by approving a voluntarily-entered class settlement agreement. 28 U.S.C.S. § 2072(b).

Fed. R. Civ. HN19[] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

No particular format of a class certification order is necessary in order to meet the substantive requirement of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(c), and an appellate court will not set aside substantively conforming certification orders purely over matters of form.

HN21[] Remedies, Injunctions

In contrast to the damages provision of § 4 of the Clayton Act, § 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 26, is applied more expansively, both because its language is less restrictive than that of § 4 and because the injunctive remedy is a more flexible and adaptable tool for enforcing the antitrust laws than the damage remedy. Because actions seeking injunctive relief under § 16 do not present the countervailing considerations--such as the risk of duplicative or ruinous recoveries and the spectre of a trial burdened with complex and conjectural economic analyses, plaintiffs need not satisfy the direct purchaser requirement as a condition of seeking injunctive relief.

HN23[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

Parties to a class action suit have the right to agree to anything they please in reference to the subject matter of their litigation, and a court, when applied to, will ordinarily give effect to their agreement if it comes within the general scope of the case made by the pleadings. In turn, the district court may provide broader relief in an action that is resolved before trial than the court could have awarded after a trial. Accordingly, district courts are afforded wide discretion to give effect to joint compromises that timely advance the interests of the parties without wasteful litigation.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Typicality

HN24[] Prerequisites for Class Action, Typicality

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2) authorizes class certification only when the party opposing the class has acted or refused to act on grounds generally applicable to the class, thereby making appropriate final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief with respect to the class as a whole. Rule 23(b)(2). Important to the analysis is that the relief sought should benefit the entire class, and the putative class must demonstrate that the interests of the class members are so like those of the individual representatives that injustice will not result from their being bound by such judgment in the subsequent application of principles of res judicata. Injunctive actions, seeking to define the relationship between the defendant and the world at large, will usually satisfy the requirement.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Compromise & Settlement

HN25[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

Before approving a class settlement agreement, a district court must find that the requirements for class certification under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a), (b) are met, and must separately determine that the settlement is fair to the class under Rule 23(e). Rule 23(e) provides that a proposed settlement may only be approved after a hearing and on finding that it is fair, reasonable, and adequate. Rule 23(e)(2). In this process, trial judges bear the important responsibility of protecting absent class members, and must be assured that the settlement represents adequate compensation for the release of the class claims. Where settlement negotiations precede class certification, and approval for settlement and certification are sought simultaneously, district courts should be even more scrupulous than usual when examining the fairness of the proposed settlement.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Compromise & Settlement

HN26[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

In assessing the fairness of a proposed settlement of a class action, there are nine well-established primary factors for a district court to consider in conducting its inquiry: (1) the complexity, expense, and likely duration of the litigation; (2) the reaction of the class to the settlement; (3) the stage of the proceedings and the amount of discovery completed; (4) the risks of establishing liability; (5) the risks of establishing damages; (6) the risks of maintaining the class action through the trial; (7) the ability of the defendants to withstand a greater judgment; (8) the range of reasonableness of the settlement fund in light of the best possible recovery; and (9) the range of reasonableness of the settlement fund to a possible recovery in light of all the attendant risks of litigation.

HN27[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

A district court may consider factors illustrative of additional inquiries that in many instances will be useful for a thoroughgoing analysis of a class action settlement's terms: the maturity of the underlying substantive issues, as measured by experience in adjudicating individual actions, the development of scientific knowledge, the extent of discovery on the merits, and other factors that bear on the ability to assess the probable outcome of a trial on the merits of liability and individual damages; the existence and probable outcome of claims by other classes and subclasses; the comparison between the results achieved by the settlement for individual class or subclass members and the results achieved--or likely to be achieved--for other claimants; whether class or subclass members are accorded the right to opt out of the settlement; whether any provisions for attorneys' fees are reasonable; and whether the procedure for processing individual claims under the settlement is fair and reasonable. The settling parties bear the burden of proving that the factors weigh in favor of approval of the settlement throughout this analysis. Because of the district court's proximity to the parties and to the nuances of the litigation, an appellate court accords great weight to the district court's factual findings in conducting the fairness inquiry.

HN33[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

A factor in assessing the fairness of a class action settlement measures the likelihood of obtaining and keeping a class certification if the action were to proceed to trial in light of the fact that the prospects for obtaining certification have a great impact on the range of recovery one can expect to reap from the class action. Class certification is tenuous, as a district court retains the authority to decertify or modify a class at any time during the litigation if it proves to be unmanageable.

HN36[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

In any class action against a large corporation, the defendant entity is likely to be able to withstand a more substantial judgment, and, against the weight of remaining factors, this fact alone does not undermine the reasonableness of a settlement.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Compromise & Settlement

HN37[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

Factors in assessing the fairness of a class action settlement consider whether the settlement represents a good value for a weak case or a poor value for a strong case. The reasonableness of the proposed settlement is assessed by comparing the present value of the damages plaintiffs would likely recover if successful at trial, appropriately discounted for the risk of not prevailing with the amount of the proposed settlement. Notably, in conducting the analysis, the court must guard against demanding too large a settlement based on its view of the merits of the litigation; after all, settlement is a compromise, a yielding of the highest hopes in exchange for certainty and resolution.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Compromise & Settlement

HN38[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

Courts generally determine fairness of an antitrust class action settlement based on how it compensates the class for past injuries, without giving much, if any, consideration to treble damages.

HN39[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

In reaching a private consensual settlement of a class action, the parties, counsel, mediators, and district judges naturally arrive at a reasonable range for settlement by considering the likelihood of a plaintiffs' or defense verdict, the potential recovery, and the chances of obtaining it, discounted to present value. The court's principal role in this engagement is to protect the unnamed members of the class. As such, the court must remain cognizant that its intrusion upon what is otherwise a private consensual agreement negotiated between the parties to a lawsuit must be limited to the extent necessary to reach a reasoned judgment that the agreement is not the product of fraud or overreaching by, or collusion between, the negotiating parties.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Compromise & Settlement

HN40[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

A district court's principal obligation in approving a plan of allocation under a class action settlement is simply to ensure that the fund distribution is fair and reasonable as to all participants in the fund. Where a class is found to include subclasses divergent in interest, the use of subclasses may be appropriate and is designed to prevent conflicts of interest in class representation. Courts also not the potential drawbacks of subclassing, including the potential "Balkanization" of the class action, and creation of a huge obstacle to settlement if each subclass has an incentive to hold out for more money. An appellate court accords substantial deference to district courts with respect to their resolution of this issue" because such decisions require a balancing of costs and benefits that can best be performed by a district judge. Where the district court has declined to certify a subclass and treats all class members as falling within a single class for purposes of a fund allocation, the appellate court will ordinarily defer to its decision unless it constitutes an abuse of discretion.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Compromise & Settlement

HN41[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

Courts generally consider plans of allocation under a class action settlement that reimburse class members based on the type and extent of their injuries to be reasonable, and district courts have broad supervisory powers over the administration of class action settlements to allocate the proceeds among the claiming class members equitably.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

HN42[] Class Attorneys, Fees

A robust and thorough judicial review of fee applications is required in all class action settlements, but that the amount of a fee award is within the district court's discretion so long as it employs correct standards and procedures and makes findings of fact not clearly erroneous.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

HN43[] Class Attorneys, Fees

Attorneys' fees requests in a class action are generally assessed under one of two methods: the percentage-of-recovery (POR) approach or the lodestar scheme. The former applies a certain percentage to the settlement fund, while the latter multiplies the number of hours class counsel worked on a case by a reasonable hourly billing rate for such services. The POR method is generally favored in common fund cases because it allows courts to award fees from the fund in a manner that rewards counsel for success and penalizes it for failure. The lodestar method, which is more commonly utilized in statutory fee-shifting cases and where the expected relief has a small enough monetary value that a POR method would provide inadequate compensation is then used to crosscheck the reasonableness of a POR fee award.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

HN44[] Class Attorneys, Fees

The lodestar crosscheck of a percentage-of-recovery fee award in a class action is performed by dividing the proposed fee award by the lodestar calculation, resulting in a lodestar multiplier. The multiplier endeavors to account for the contingent nature or risk involved in a particular case, and may be adjusted to account for particular circumstances, such as the quality of representation, the benefit obtained for the class, and the complexity and novelty of the issues presented.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

HN45[] Class Attorneys, Fees

The factors for determining a percentage-of-recovery fee award in a class action are as follows: (1) the size of the fund created and the number of persons benefitted; (2) the presence or absence of substantial objections by members of the class to the settlement terms and/or fees requested by counsel; (3) the skill and efficiency of the attorneys involved; (4) the complexity and duration of the litigation; (5) the risk of nonpayment; (6) the amount of time devoted to the case by plaintiffs' counsel; (7) the awards in similar cases; (8) the value of benefits attributable to the efforts of class counsel relative to the efforts of other groups, such as government agencies conducting investigations, (9) the percentage fee that would have been negotiated had the case been subject to a private contingent fee arrangement at the time counsel was retained; and (10) any innovative terms of settlement.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

HN46[] Class Attorneys, Fees

A district court may not rely on a formulaic application of the appropriate range in awarding fees in a class action but must consider the relevant circumstances of the particular case.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Members > Named Members

HN47[] Class Members, Named Members

Incentive awards are not uncommon in class action litigation and particularly where a common fund has been created for the benefit of the entire class. The purpose of these payments is to compensate the named plaintiffs for the services they provided and the risks they incurred during the course of class action litigation, and to reward the public service of contributing to the enforcement of mandatory laws.

Opinion

[*285] OPINION OF THE COURT

RENDELL, Circuit Judge, with whom Circuit Judges SCIRICA, AMBRO, FUENTES, FISHER, CHAGARES and VANASKIE, join.

At issue on appeal in this class action litigation is the propriety of the District Court's certification of two nationwide settlement classes comprising purchasers of diamonds from De Beers SA. and related entities ("De Beers").[1] The settlement provided for a fund of $295 million to be distributed to both the direct and indirect purchasers: the direct purchasers were to receive $22.5 million of the fund, while the indirect purchasers would receive $272.5 million. A panel of our Court held that the District Court's ruling was inconsistent with the predominance inquiry mandated by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(b)(3), and remanded the matter for further proceedings. See Sullivan v. DB Investments, Inc., 613 F.3d 134 (3d Cir. 2010), reh'g en banc granted and vacated by Sullivan v. DB Investments, Inc., 619 F.3d 287 (3d Cir. 2010). We [5] then granted the plaintiffs' petition for rehearing en banc and vacated the prior order. Accordingly, we address anew the propriety of the District Court's certification of the direct and indirect purchaser classes pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(b)(2) and 23(b)(3), and also consider for the first time the objections raised to the fairness of the class settlement.[2]

We believe that the predominance inquiry should be easily resolved here based on De Beers's conduct and the injury it caused to each and every class member, and that the straightforward application of Rule 23 and our precedent should result in affirming the District Court's order certifying the class. But the objectors to the class certification and our dissenting colleagues insist that, when deciding whether to certify a class, a district court must ensure that each class member possesses a viable claim or "some colorable legal claim," (Dissenting Op. at 10). We disagree, and accordingly, we will reason [*286] through our analysis in a more deliberate manner in order to explain why the addition of this new requirement into the Rule 23 certification process [7] is unwarranted.

* Honorable Donetta W. Ambrose, United States District Court Judge for the Western District of Pennsylvania, sitting by designation.

1 The Settlement involved five individual class actions pending in federal court and two other class suits pending in state court. The individual federal suits presently before us are: Sullivan v. DB Investments, Inc., Index No. 04-cv-02819 (D.N.J.); Null v. DB Investments, Inc., Madison Co. No. 05-L-209 (Madison County, Ill. Cir. Ct., removed to S.D. Ill.); Leider v. Ralfe, No. 01-CV-3137 (S.D.N.Y.); Anco Industrial Diamond Corp. v. DB Investments, Inc., No. 01-cv-04463 (D.N.J.); and British Diamond Import Co. v. Central Holdings Ltd., No. 04-cv-04098 (D.N.J.). The two other class actions pending in state court pertinent to the Settlement and this set of appeals are: Hopkins v. De Beers Centenary A.G., San Francisco County No. CGC-04-432954 (Cal. Super. Ct.), and Cornwell v. DB Investments, Inc., Maricopa Co. [6] No. CV2005-2968 (Ariz. Super. Ct.).

2 Because the Panel found the certification of the class to be flawed, it did not reach the Rule 23 fairness objections to the settlement, distribution plan, and fee award, or the District Court's resolution of these objections. See Sullivan, 613 F.3d at 142 n.6. Because we now conclude that the District Court's certification of the proposed settlement was appropriate, we will also address these issues.

I. Factual & Procedural Background

A. Present Litigation & Settlement Proceedings

The allegations in the present case arose from De Beers's undisputed position as the dominant participant in the wholesale market for gem-quality diamonds throughout much of the twentieth century.[3] It is alleged that, beginning in 1890 and continuing through the filing of the Complaints at issue in this appeal, De Beers coordinated the worldwide sales of diamonds by, inter alia, executing output-purchase agreements with competitors, synchronizing and setting production limits, restricting the resale of diamonds within certain geographic regions, and directing marketing and advertising. Through its coordinated network of diamond producers, De Beers was able to value diamonds according to certain physical characteristics and to then control the quantity and prices of diamonds in the marketplace by strictly regimenting sales to preferred wholesalers, known as "sightholders."[4] Sightholders resold these diamonds to jewelry manufacturers and retailers — either as rough diamonds or as cut, polished, and finished stones — [8] and constituted De Beers's primary channel for distribution of its diamonds.[5]

Between 2001 and 2002, plaintiffs brought suit complaining that De Beers's aforementioned business practices contravened state and federal antitrust, consumer protection, and unjust enrichment laws, and constituted unfair business practices and false advertising under common law and relevant state statutes. Specifically, the plaintiffs alleged that De Beers exploited its market dominance to artificially inflate the prices of rough diamonds; this, in turn, caused reseller and consumer purchasers of diamonds and diamond-infused products to pay an unwarranted premium for such products. The initial two price-fixing lawsuits were filed in the United States District Courts for the District of New Jersey and the Southern District of New York in 2001, and five subsequent lawsuits were initiated in federal and state courts in other parts of the country.[6] [*287] Three of the lawsuits [10] were filed in state court

[3] The vacated Panel Opinion describes the history, progression to power, and eventual market dominance of De Beers and its related entities in greater detail. See Sullivan, 613 F.3d at 138-39. For the sake of brevity, we provide a summary.

[4] Sightholders are selected by De Beers's subsidiary Diamond Trading Company ("DTC") based upon specific criteria, "including their financial standing and reliability, their market position, their distribution ability, their marketing ability, and their compliance with Diamond Trading Company Diamond Best Practice Principles." (App'x 1438.) In 2006, DTC had ninety-three sightholders, nine of which had head offices in the United States and seventy-six of which had sales offices in the country. (Id.) Sightholders sell both rough and polished diamonds, as well as diamond jewelry. (Id.) By way of example, the retailer Tiffany & Co. is a majority-owner of the South African sightholder Rand Precision Cut Diamonds, which sells polished diamonds and manufactures jewelry for sale in Tiffany stores. (Id. 1438-39.)

[5] The process by which De Beers sold its rough diamonds entailed a "diamond [9] pipeline," which began with the sale of rough diamonds and ended with the purchase of retail diamond jewelry by consumers. The participants in the diamond pipeline included rough stone wholesalers, cutters and polishers of rough diamonds, finished stone wholesalers, diamond jewelry manufacturers and wholesalers, and retailers.

[6] The theories of recovery in the individual cases are as follows: Anco Industrial was filed on behalf of all direct purchasers of rough diamonds pursuant to Clayton Act §§ 4 and 16, 15 U.S.C. §§ 15 and 26, to prevent and restrain violations of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1-2. British Diamond was filed on behalf of direct purchasers of polished diamonds pursuant to Clayton Act §§ 4 and 16, 15 U.S.C. §§ 15 and 26, to prevent and restrain violations of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1-2. Cornwell was filed on behalf of all purchasers of diamonds in Arizona pursuant to Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 44-1402 for monopolization of the market for diamonds, and under § 44-1403 for establishment, maintenance or use of monopoly. Hopkins was filed on behalf of California residents who purchased diamonds in California [11] pursuant to Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720, et seq., alleging engagement in a continuing unlawful restraint of trade; pursuant to § 17200, et seq., for violation of the unfair competition law; and under California common law for monopolization and attempted monopolization. Leider was filed on behalf of consumers who purchased diamonds or diamond jewelry pursuant to the Wilson Tariff Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 8-11; under § 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 26, for injunctive relief in connection with §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, and for damages for violations of § 2 of the Sherman Act; pursuant to federal and New York state common law for damages and injunctive relief; in Arizona, California, and Illinois, respectively; the last was then removed to the United States District Court for the Southern District of Illinois. The five suits in federal court were subsequently all transferred to and consolidated in the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey, and are presently before us.

The plaintiffs in the seven cases are best characterized as falling within one of two types of purchaser classes. The first category includes direct purchasers of gem diamonds, who purchased directly from De Beers or one of its competitors ("Direct Purchaser Class" or "Direct Purchasers"). These plaintiffs advanced claims of price-fixing and monopolization pursuant to §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, and sought monetary and injunctive relief under §§4 and 16 of the Clayton Act. The second category of plaintiffs consists of indirect purchasers of rough or cut-and-polished diamonds; this category of consumers, jewelry retailers and other middlemen acquired diamonds from sightholders or other direct purchasers, rather than directly from De Beers or its competitors ("Indirect Purchaser Class" or "Indirect Purchasers"). While both categories of purchasers alleged the same antitrust injury and sought injunctive relief pursuant to [13] § 16 of the Clayton Act, the Indirect Purchasers sought damages pursuant only to state antitrust, consumer protection, and unjust enrichment statutes and common law.

As it had for well over a half-century, De Beers initially rejected the plaintiffs' assertion that courts in the United States possessed personal jurisdiction over it and its associated entities, arguing that it never transacted business directly in the United States. De Beers refused to appear in the lawsuits, resulting in defaults or default judgments being entered against it in each of the filed cases with the exception of Cornwell. While continuing to insist that these default judgments were unenforceable, counsel for De Beers approached [*288] plaintiffs' counsel in May 2005 to discuss settlement of the Indirect Purchasers' claims. These discussions yielded an agreement to settle Sullivan, Hopkins, Null, and Cornwell (the "Indirect Purchaser Settlement"), with De Beers agreeing to establish a settlement fund of $250 million to be distributed to class members, and further agreeing not to contest certification of a settlement class of indirect purchasers.[7] The settlement also provided for a stipulated injunction, enjoining [14] De Beers from engaging in certain conduct violative of United States antitrust laws. Pursuant to the settlement, De Beers would consent to the District Court's jurisdiction for the limited purpose of fulfilling the terms of the settlement and enforcement of the injunction.

The District Court entered an order on November 30, 2005, preliminarily approving the Indirect Purchaser Settlement and conditionally certifying a settlement class of Indirect Purchasers pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(b)(2) — for purposes of entering the stipulated injunction — and 23(b)(3) — in order to distribute the settlement fund to class members.

De Beers then entered into settlement discussions with plaintiffs' counsel for the Direct Purchasers in Anco and British Diamond, ultimately reaching an agreement in March 2006. The latter agreement paralleled the Indirect Purchaser Settlement in that De Beers agreed to not contest certification of a Direct Purchaser settlement class, to abide by substantively identical injunctive [15] relief as imposed under the Indirect Purchaser Settlement, and to establish a $22.5 million fund to satisfy the Direct Purchasers' claims. As part of this settlement, De Beers also agreed to increase the Indirect Purchaser Settlement fund by $22.5 million to accommodate those putative class members characterized as Indirect Purchasers in the lawsuits filed by the Direct Purchasers who had not participated in the Indirect Purchaser Settlement.

under N.Y. Gen. Bus. §§ 349-350; and under New York's Donnelly Act and the antitrust laws of fifteen other states and the District of Columbia. Null was filed on behalf of all purchasers of De Beers diamonds pursuant to 815 Ill. Comp. Stat. § 505/1, et seq., and § 510/2, alleging unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices, and, in the alternative, pursuant to the consumer fraud and deceptive practice laws of the various states where purchases of diamonds were made. Sullivan was filed on behalf [12] of a class of all persons and businesses in the United States who purchased polished diamonds indirectly from De Beers pursuant to §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act for injunctive relief, and pursuant to state antitrust and deceptive practices acts for monetary relief.

[7] The Leider plaintiffs subsequently reached agreement with the parties to the Indirect Purchaser Settlement to resolve that matter in accordance with the terms of the Settlement.

On March 31, 2006, the District Court modified its November 30, 2005 Order to conditionally certify both the Direct and Indirect Purchaser settlement classes under Rules 23(b)(2) and 23(b)(3), and to preliminarily approve a combined settlement fund for both classes totaling $295 million, of which $22.5 million was allotted to Direct Purchasers and $272.5 million was allocated to the Indirect Purchaser claims. The combined settlement also provided for entry of a stipulated injunction, which required De Beers to, inter alia, comply with and abide by federal and state antitrust laws, to limit its purchases of diamonds from third-party producers, to abstain from setting or fixing the prices of diamonds sold by third-party producers, to desist from [16] restricting the geographic regions within which sightholders could resell De Beers diamonds, and barred De Beers from purchasing diamonds in the United States for the principal purpose of restraining supply. Notably, De Beers agreed to subject itself to personal jurisdiction in the United States for purposes of enforcing the combined settlement agreement.

B. Special Master & Objections

After granting preliminary approval to the combined settlement agreement, the District Court referred the case to a Special Master pursuant to Rules 23, 53, and 54 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure to consider and recommend a plan for dissemination of the Notice of Settlement, a distribution plan for members of the [*289] Indirect and Direct Purchaser settlement classes, division of the fund between the Indirect Purchaser reseller and consumer subclasses, the amount of incentive awards for named plaintiffs, and the fee requests filed by plaintiffs' counsel. After two years of proceedings, the Special Master authored several lengthy Report and Recommendations finding the settlement fair, reasonable, and adequate based upon the parties' agreement to seek the certification of the following two nationwide Settlement [17] Classes:

> (i) The "Direct Purchaser Class." All natural persons and legal entities located in the United States who purchased any Gem Diamond directly from a Defendant or Defendants' Competitors (including any entity controlled by or affiliated with any such party) from September 20, 1997 to the date of settlement class certification. The class shall exclude Defendants, the officers, directors or employees of any Defendant, any entity in which any Defendant has a controlling interest, any affiliate of any Defendant, Defendants' Competitors, any person or entity which is or was a Sightholder for the time period(s) during which such person or entity had Sightholder status, any federal, state or local governmental entity, and any judicial officer presiding over this Settlement, and any member of the judicial officer's family and court staff; and
> (ii) The "Indirect Purchaser Class." All natural persons and legal entities located in the United States who purchased any Diamond Product from January 1, 1994 to the date of settlement class certification, provided that any purchases of any Gem Diamond made directly from a Defendant (including any entity in which any Defendant has a controlling [18] interest and any affiliate of any Defendant) or Defendants' competitors (including any entity controlled by or affiliated with any such party) shall be excluded. The class shall also exclude Defendants, the officers, directors or employees of any Defendant, any entity in which any Defendant has a controlling interest, any affiliate of any Defendant, any federal, state or local governmental entity, and any judicial officer presiding over this Settlement, and any member of the judicial officer's family and court staff.

(App'x 270 (quoting September 4, 2007 Report and Recommendation of Special Master Alfred M. Wolin ("R&R") at 21, App'x 1433-34).) The Indirect Purchaser Class was further subdivided into two subclasses for purposes of effectuating the Settlement Agreement:

> (1) The "Indirect Purchaser Reseller Subclass," consisting of all members of the Indirect Purchaser Class who purchased any diamond product for resale; and
> (2) The "Indirect Purchaser Consumer Subclass," consisting of all members of the Indirect Purchaser Class who purchased any diamond product for use and not for resale.

(Id. 270-71.)[8]

[8] The Indirect Purchaser Consumer Subclass is estimated to contain between 67 and 117 million [19] members, while the Indirect Purchaser Reseller Subclass contains an estimated 38,152 members. The Direct Purchaser Class is estimated to contain approximately 130 members. (App'x 275 n.1.)

After reviewing the record, the competing econometric reports furnished by several experts, and other reliable data, the Special Master recommended that, apart from the $22.5 million allocated to the Direct Purchaser Class,[9] the Indirect Purchaser [*290] Settlement Fund of $272.5 million should be allocated 50.3%, approximately $137.1 million, to the Resellers Subclass, and 49.7%, approximately $135.4 million, to the Consumers Subclass.[10] (App'x 1508.) Unlike Direct Purchasers, who purchased diamonds only, Indirect Purchasers generally purchased jewelry and other products containing diamonds; given this, the Special Master attempted to ascertain the cost of the diamonds in the final purchased product separate and apart from the cost of other components. The Special Master further recommended that claims that would result in de minimis recoveries from the settlement fund — equating to less than ten dollars[11] — not be paid in light of high administrative costs.[12]

With respect to plaintiffs' counsel's request for attorneys' fees and reimbursement of litigation expenses, the [22] Special Master recommended a percentage of recovery approach with a lodestar cross-check, and concluded that the request for 25% of the settlement fund in fees, and for under 1% of the fund in expenses, was fair, reasonable, and adequate.[13] The Special Master further decided that the $220,000 in incentive awards sought on behalf of class representatives was appropriate in light of the benefits conferred upon the class and the risks incurred in engaging in litigation.

In response to the preliminary certification of the Settlement Agreement and the Special Master's recommendations, the District Court received twenty separate objections on behalf of thirty-seven objectors. All of the objectors were members of the Indirect Purchaser Class; none of the Direct Purchasers objected to the Settlement.[14] [*291] Fifteen of the twenty objections opposed class certification of the settlement, four objected to the stipulated provision for injunctive relief, six opposed the allocation and distribution of the Settlement Funds, and nine objected [23] to the provisions for attorneys' fees. As required by the Federal Rules, the District Court conducted a Fairness Hearing in the matter on April 14, 2008. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(e)(2).

[9] The Special Master advised that distribution [20] of the Direct Purchaser Settlement Fund be conducted on a pro rata basis and that each Direct Class member receive the Net Settlement amount multiplied by the quotient of the Adjusted Purchases of the claimant divided by the aggregate Adjusted Purchases of all approved direct purchaser claims. The Adjusted Purchases of a claimant would be calculated by multiplying the amount paid for Rough Diamonds by 1.22 (the average Rough to Polished Matrix factor), and adding the total amount paid for Polished Diamonds. (App'x 1533-34.)

[10] The Special Master recommended that the Indirect Purchaser Consumer Subclass receive a pro rata share of the Indirect Purchaser Settlement Fund, calculated by multiplying the Net Consumer settlement fund amount by the quotient of a consumer's total recognized diamond claim divided by the total recognized diamond claims of all consumers. (App'x 1547.) In contrast, a Reseller Subclass member's claim would be calculated in a three step process: (1) all of the claimant's diamond purchases are converted to the common metric of polished wholesale value and adjusted to reflect the number of years each Reseller operated during the class period; (2) claims are weighted [21] by applying the absorption weighting factor derived from a fixed effects regression analysis for each type of diamond purchase; and (3) the claimant's pro rata share of the Reseller Subclass settlement fund is the ratio of the claimant's "absorption adjusted purchases" to the sum of all claimants' "absorption adjusted purchases." (Id. 1575.)

[11] The Special Master's report noted that Indirect Purchaser Consumer claims aggregating less than $165 for mixed stone jewelry or products, and less than $95 for diamond only jewelry or products, would be considered de minimis. (App'x 1547-48.)

[12] Additionally, the Special Master recommended a four-part notification program — entailing direct notice, publication notice, "earned media outreach" in the form of press releases and news reporting, and electronic notice — finding that it provided notice "in a reasonable manner to all class members who would be bound by the proposed settlement." (App'x 1518-27 (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(e)).) The District Court adopted this recommendation and method of notification in its October 1, 2007 Order.

[13] The District Court rejected the Special Master's recommendation of adding a percentage of the interest earned on the total settlement fund to the total attorneys' fees.

[14] Four objectors were members of the Indirect Purchaser Reseller Subclass and thirty-three objectors belonged to the Indirect Purchaser Consumer Subclass. (App'x 272.)

The objectors challenging the propriety of certifying the two settlement classes raised two primary arguments. First, the objectors contended that a nationwide class of Indirect Purchasers should not be certified under Rule 23(b)(3) for purposes of administering a monetary settlement of state law claims because significant differences existed among the various antitrust, consumer protection, and unjust enrichment laws of the relevant state jurisdictions. Specifically, the objectors argued that the substantive law of many states prohibits indirect purchasers from recovering damages for antitrust injuries, exposing the class to particularized legal variations and precluding a finding that common questions of law or fact predominated over individual issues.[15] Second, the objectors challenged the certification of both Direct and Indirect Purchaser [24] classes for purposes of implementing injunctive relief pursuant to Rule 23(b)(2). The objectors asserted that the market for rough gem diamonds had become competitive during the course of the instant litigation, rendering an injunction to enforce compliance with antitrust laws superfluous, and divesting the Indirect Purchasers of antitrust standing to seek relief.

Other objections challenged the fairness and adequacy of the Settlement and the plan of allocation for the Indirect Purchaser Settlement Fund as between the Reseller and Consumer Subclasses, averring that each class member would collect only $1-2 in exchange for their full release of claims against De Beers if every single putative class member requested compensation; also, they might receive nothing under the de minimis provision [25] in the Settlement. Objectors also urged that the award of attorneys' fees to plaintiffs' counsel was excessive and unreasonable in a default judgment case with minimal litigation.

C. Acceptance and Certification of Class Settlement

In its May 22, 2008 Opinion, the District Court considered and rejected each of the objections. Responding to the Rule 23(b)(3) objections, the Court concluded that differences in state antitrust and consumer protection statutes did not override class commonalities. Observing that "'predominance is a test readily met in certain cases alleging consumer or securities fraud or violations of the antitrust laws,'" (App'x 276 (quoting Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 625, 117 S. Ct. 2231, 138 L. Ed. 2d 689 (1997))), the District Court noted that "at the class certification stage, the Court need not concern itself with whether Plaintiffs can prove their allegations" so long as they "'make a threshold showing that the elements of impact will predominantly involve [*292] generalized issues of proof, rather than questions which are particular to each member of the plaintiff class,'" (id. 277 (quoting In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., 305 F.3d 145, 152 (3d Cir. 2002))).) In this regard, the District [26] Court presented the following operative factual and legal inquiries that, in its view, constituted common questions that predominated over individual issues in the litigation:

> (a) Whether Defendants combined or conspired with others to fix, raise, stabilize and maintain the prices of polished diamonds;
> (b) Whether Defendants monopolized or combined or conspired with others to monopolize the supply of polished diamonds;
> (c) Whether Defendants' conduct caused the prices of polished diamonds to be maintained at higher levels than would exist in a competitive market;
> (d) Whether Plaintiffs and the Classes are entitled to injunctive relief; and
> (e) Whether Defendants' conduct caused injury to the business or property of Plaintiffs and the other Class and Subclass Members and, if so, the appropriate class-wide measure of damages.

(App'x 276 (alterations omitted).) The District Court also stressed that all class members shared a common jurisdictional question pertaining to De Beers's refusal to submit to the jurisdiction of United States courts and the potential burden of confirming domestic contacts for purposes of establishing personal jurisdiction. (Id. 279.)

[15] A related objection was filed on grounds that the equal allocation of the Indirect Purchaser Settlement Fund without consideration of a claimant's state of controlling law was improper since some states purportedly prohibited recovery by indirect purchasers. These objectors asserted that class members from states permitting indirect purchaser recovery should be entitled to greater monetary compensation.

Considering the nature of De Beers's [27] central role in the alleged diamond conspiracy, the Court determined that each class member shared "a similar legal question arising from whether De Beers engaged in a broad conspiracy" aimed at affecting diamond prices in the United States; concurrently, all class members shared common factual issues pertaining to the form, duration, and extent of the conspiracy. (App'x 278-79.) The Court concluded that the totality of common issues predominated over individual questions, and, as a result, the objectors' assertion that disparities in state law precluded a nationwide class settlement was unavailing. In its analysis, the Court emphasized the expense, complexity, and imprecision of weighing the relative strengths of different state law claims, the policy interest in securing an expedient resolution to the disparate claims of the Direct and Indirect Purchasers, and De Beers's insistence upon a release of all potential damage claims in all fifty states.

With respect to the Rule 23(b)(2) analysis for injunctive relief, the District Court rejected the objectors' assertion that both of the purchaser classes faced no risk of future harm. The Court observed that De Beers had stipulated to the [28] injunction and "waived the right to demand proof of substantive elements of the claims" advanced by plaintiffs, namely, that De Beers's ongoing conduct would continue to anti-competitively increase the price of all diamonds on the market. (App'x 285.) Accordingly, the Court determined that injunctive relief was appropriate and would benefit all classes and subclasses.

Having ruled that the Rule 23(b) elements were satisfied, the District Court then responded to the other objections relating to the fairness and adequacy of the Settlement and the plan of allocation and distribution, as well as to objections pertaining to attorneys' fees. The District Court conducted a fairness evaluation of the final settlement by applying and weighing the fairness factors set forth in Girsh v. Jepson, 521 F.2d 153 (3d Cir. 1975), "being mindful of the heightened standard of review in place for a settlement-only [*293] class that has not yet been entirely certified." (App'x 288-89.) The Court concluded that the final settlement agreement and the plan of allocation were fair, reasonable, and adequate. The District Court also reviewed the attorneys' fees application pursuant to Gunter v. Ridgewood Energy Corp., 223 F.3d 190 (3d Cir. 2000), [29] similarly finding the Special Master's recommendation for 25% of the settlement fund in fees to be fair, reasonable, and adequate.

Accordingly, the District Court entered a final order on May 22, 2008, certifying the Direct and Indirect Purchaser Classes under Rules 23(b)(2) and 23(b)(3). The Direct Purchaser Class consists of all sightholders who purchased rough gem diamonds directly from De Beers between September 20, 1997 and March 31, 2006. The Indirect Purchaser Class includes all Indirect Purchasers who acquired gem diamonds between January 1, 1994 and March 31, 2006, regardless of whether De Beers or one of its competitors supplied the diamonds.[16] The Court's order further included the previously agreed-upon injunction, which is to remain in effect for five years from the date of its issuance. The objectors then filed the appeals presently before us.

D. Proceedings On Appeal

On [30] appeal, a divided panel of this Court initially determined that the District Court abused its discretion in certifying the nationwide class of litigants. We vacated this Opinion and granted rehearing en banc. While we do not usually discuss the analysis contained in a vacated opinion, we do so here because the Panel's decision reflected, accepted, and elaborated upon one or more of the views advanced by the objectors, with which we take issue. Our dissenting colleagues also embrace certain of these views.

Addressing the objectors' challenge to the District Court's finding of predominance under Rule 23(b)(3), the Panel undertook a wide-ranging fact-finding review of state antitrust statutes, noting that the variance among states "is mainly a function of whether a state has chosen to follow the Sherman Act principles regarding standing laid down by the Supreme Court in Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977)." Sullivan, 613 F.3d at 146. There, the Supreme Court decided that only direct purchasers possessed standing under [16] As the Panel Opinion noted, the parties did not explain, nor did the record reveal, any reason for the disparity in the time periods covered by the Settlement between the Indirect and Direct Purchaser classes. See Sullivan, 613 F.3d at 143 n.8. We do not consider this difference pertinent to the appeals.

the federal Sherman Act to sue for monetary damages incurred from an antitrust injury. The Panel observed that some states follow this framework and prohibit [31] monetary recovery for indirect purchasers, while other states have enacted statutes known as "Illinois Brick repealers," which extend antitrust standing to indirect purchasers and consumers.[17] Id. As a result, the Panel found that "only some of th[e] jurisdictions recognize the claims for which recovery is sought," and that such distinctions reflected "fundamental policy differences among the several states." Id. at 147, 149. Based on its belief that many members of the Indirect Purchaser Class lacked a substantive right to recover damages, the Panel decided that "no question of law or fact regarding their legal rights is uniform [*294] throughout the class," thereby defeating a finding of predominance. Id. at 149.

The Panel then considered the various state consumer protection and unjust enrichment claims implicated by the District Court's certification, again noting several variations among jurisdictions: differences in whether indirect purchasers may invoke consumer protection [32] and unjust enrichment statutes to gain antitrust relief; variations in the extent of elements of proof necessary to establish unjust enrichment or consumer fraud; and dissimilarities in whether a plaintiff must lack an adequate remedy at law to bring an equitable claim. Id. at 150-51. Based upon these discrepancies, the Panel decided that "evidence of price-fixing and monopolization does not give rise in every state to an unjust enrichment or consumer protection claim for indirect purchasers," defeating predominance and rendering the District Court's certification of a nationwide class an abuse of discretion. Id. at 151.

The Panel further observed that the District Court's certification order contravened the Rules Enabling Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2072(b), by extending antitrust remedies not rooted in state substantive law to putative class members. Id. The Panel expressly rejected the plaintiffs' argument that De Beers's willingness to stipulate to liability in all fifty states should suffice for the District Court's predominance inquiry, holding instead that such an approach would invite collusive settlements. Id. In the same vein, the Panel expressed concern that the District Court sacrificed [33] principles of federalism in favor of obtaining an expedient settlement by certifying the nationwide class "despite the fact that only some of those jurisdictions recognize the claims for which recovery is sought." Id. at 152. Finding that certain states categorically deny to indirect purchasers a right to antitrust recovery as a matter of substantive law, the Panel concluded that the instant certification "wrongly allowed the sovereignty of the states to be subordinated to De Beers's desire to resolve all indirect purchaser claims simultaneously." Id.

Finally, the Panel rejected the District Court's certification of the Indirect Purchaser Class under Rule 23(b)(2) for the purpose of awarding injunctive relief under § 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 26. Relying upon expert reports written to identify a methodology for calculating damages, the Panel concluded that De Beers's market share fell from approximately 65% in 2000 to 45% in 2006, and determined that, as a result, plaintiffs face "no significant threat of future antitrust harm in the absence of the injunction because . . . the market has become increasingly competitive from 2006 onward." Id. at 157-58. Accordingly, the Panel [34] found that plaintiffs lacked antitrust standing under § 16 of the Clayton Act and vacated the District Court's order certifying the injunctive class.

The Panel Opinion remanded the matter to the District Court to consider whether "a more limited class of indirect purchasers is appropriate under Rule 23," and instructed the District Court to more precisely identify "a readily discernible, clear, and complete list of the claims, issues or defenses to be treated on a class basis." Id. at 154 (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P 23(c)(2)). The Panel noted that the Court failed to clearly delineate the precise state law claims subject to class treatment and did not explicitly state whether the claims advanced apply to the Indirect Purchasers' antitrust, consumer protection, or unjust enrichment claims, or to some combination of the three. Accordingly, the Panel directed the District Court to "identify with particularity both the prerequisites for membership in the class and the issues or [*295] claims that will be resolved on a class-wide basis." Id. at 155.

In response, Appellees Shawn Sullivan, Arrigotti Fine Jewelry, and James Walnum petitioned for rehearing, urging that the Panel Opinion was inconsistent [35] with our precedent governing class action settlements. In support, they raised several arguments. First, they contended that the Panel's demand that all class members assert at least one "uniform" claim in order for disparate state claims to be settled at once contravened our clear holdings in [17] Based on its assessment, the Panel found that at least twenty-five states and the District of Columbia possess Illinois Brick repealer statutes or have judicially extended antitrust standing to indirect purchasers.

Warfarin and Prudential. (See Pet. of Appellees for Reh'g or Reh'g En Banc 2.) Next, they urged that the Panel's extensive inquiry into the legal viability of plaintiff's claims at the class certification stage improperly adjudicated the merits of the asserted claims and undermined the "strong judicial policy in favor of class action settlement." (Id. (citation omitted).) Finally, the Appellees observed that the Panel's methodology supplanted the District Court as primary fact-finder and unilaterally reached factual conclusions based upon evidence unrelated to the subject at issue. (Id. 3-4.)

We granted the petition for the entire Court to address these issues.

II. Jurisdiction And Standard of Review

The District Court exercised federal question jurisdiction over the Direct Purchasers' Sherman Act antitrust claim for damages pursuant to § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15, and over both the Direct [36] and Indirect Purchasers' claims for injunctive relief under § 16 of the same Act, 15 U.S.C § 26. Original jurisdiction over the federal claims also arose under 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331 and 1337(a). The District Court possessed supplemental jurisdiction over the Indirect Purchasers' state-law antitrust, consumer protection, and unjust enrichment claims pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1367. We review final orders of the District Court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1291.

III. Discussion

At issue on appeal is the District Court's approval of the class settlement agreement [*296] and certification of the Indirect Purchaser Class pursuant to Rule 23(b)(3) and both the Direct and Indirect Purchaser Classes under Rule 23(b)(2). We begin by discussing the standards for certifying a settlement class and will address the pertinent objections in light of the District Court's [38] — and the vacated Panel's — Opinions. We will then consider the objections pertaining to the fairness of the settlement, the plan of allocation, and the attorneys' fees award, which we have not previously addressed.[18]

A. Certification Pursuant to Rule 23

[18] As mentioned above, because the Panel concluded that certification was inappropriate, it did not reach the Special Master's recommendations or the objections to the distribution plan and fee award. Sullivan, 613 F.3d at 142 n.6. In light of our finding that class certification is appropriate, we assess these objections for the first time.

As we have consistently observed, "Rule 23 is designed to assure that courts will identify the common interests of class members and evaluate the named plaintiffs' and counsel's ability to fairly and adequately protect class interests." In re Comm. Bank of N. Va., 622 F.3d 275, 291 (3d Cir. 2010) ("Comm. Bank II") (quoting GM Truck, 55 F.3d at 799) (alterations omitted). In turn, HN2[] before approving a class settlement agreement, "a district court first must determine that the requirements for class certification under Rule 23(a) and (b) are met." In re Pet Food Prods. Liab. Litig., 629 F.3d 333, 341 (3d Cir. 2010). [39] Rule 23(a) contains four threshold requirements, which every putative class must satisfy:

> (1) the class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable; (2) there are questions of law or fact common to the class; (3) the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class; and (4) the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class.

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a); see also Amchem, 521 U.S. at 613. Upon finding each of these prerequisites satisfied, a district court must then determine that the proposed class fits within one of the categories of class actions enumerated in Rule 23(b).

As mentioned, HN3[] Rule 23(b)(2) authorizes class actions seeking injunctive relief in instances where the defendant "has acted or refused to act on grounds that apply generally to the class, so that final injunctive relief . . . is appropriate respecting the class as a whole." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2); see In re Cmty. Bank of N. Va.. (Comm. Bank I), 418 F.3d 277, 302 n.14 (2005). Separately, HN4[] certification pursuant to Rule 23(b)(3) seeking monetary compensation is permitted where (1) "questions of law or fact common to class [40] members predominate over any questions affecting only individual members," and (2) "a class action is superior to other available methods for fairly and efficiently adjudicating the controversy." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3); see Collins v. E.I. DuPont de Nemours & Co., 34 F.3d 172, 180 (3d Cir. 1994). These twin requirements are commonly referred to as predominance and superiority. We address the certification of the damages class first before turning to the certification for injunctive relief.

1. Predominance of Common Legal or Factual Issues Under Rule 23(b)(3)

The objectors challenge the District Court's Rule 23(b)(3) analysis with regard to the state law claims asserted by the Indirect Purchasers against De Beers. The District Court concluded that differences in state law did not override predominantly common factual and legal issues [*297] presented by De Beers's integral role in perpetuating the alleged conspiracy. Rejecting this view, the objectors argue that the existence of substantive variations in the state antitrust laws underlying the Indirect Purchaser damages claims should preclude a court from finding that common issues affecting the class as a whole predominate. They also urge [41] that differences among state consumer protection and unjust enrichment laws would likewise preclude a finding of predominance. Our dissenting colleagues focus on this issue as well, and adopt a specific requirement that every class member has "some colorable legal claim" in order for a district court to certify a class. (Dissenting Op. at 10.) In our view, this requirement would result in a radical departure from what Rule 23 envisions and what our precedent demands, and it founders for many reasons.[19]

a. Legal Framework

HN5[] The predominance inquiry "'tests whether proposed classes are sufficiently cohesive to warrant adjudication by representation,'" In re Ins. Broker. Antitrust Litig., 579 F.3d 241, 266 (3d Cir. 2009) (quoting Amchem, 521 U.S. at 624), and assesses whether a class action "would achieve economies of time, effort, and expense, and promote uniformity of decision as to persons similarly situated," Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3) advisory committee's note to 1966 amendment. See also 2 [42] William Rubenstein, Alba Conte & Herbert Newberg, Newberg on Class Actions, § 4:25 (4th ed. 2010) ("[T]he predominance test asks whether a class suit for the unitary adjudication of common issues is economical and efficient in the context of all the issues in the suit."). Parallel with Rule 23(a)(2)'s commonality element, which provides that a proposed class must share a common question of law or fact, Rule 23(b)(3)'s predominance requirement imposes a more rigorous obligation upon a reviewing court to ensure that issues common to the class predominate over those affecting only individual class members. Ins. Broker., 579 F.3d at 266. "Hence, we consider the Rule 23(a) commonality requirement to be incorporated into the more stringent Rule 23(b)(3) predominance requirement, and therefore deem it appropriate to 'analyze the two factors together, with particular focus on the predominance requirement.'" Id. (quoting In re Warfarin Sodium Antitrust Litig., 391 F.3d 516, 528 (3d Cir. 2004)); see also Danvers Motor Co., Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 543 F.3d 141, 148 (3d Cir. 2008) ("[T]he commonality requirement is subsumed by the predominance requirement.").

[19] The objectors also challenge the District Court's purported failure to identify the state law claims that should receive class treatment under the existing certification order, as we discuss below.

From our case law, we can distill at [43] least HN6[] three guideposts that direct the predominance inquiry: first, that commonality is informed by the defendant's conduct as to all class members and any resulting injuries common to all class members; second, that variations in state law do not necessarily defeat predominance; and third, that concerns regarding variations in state law largely dissipate when a court is considering the certification of a settlement class. We address each of these guideposts in turn. Then, we turn to case law demonstrating that Rule 23(b)(3) does not, as urged by the objectors and the dissent, require individual class members to individually state a valid claim for relief. Next, we address the flaws inherent in the framework proposed by the dissent. Finally, we discuss why an important by-product of the class action device — settlement [*298] of all potential claims — supports the decision we reach here.

i) Precedent Regarding Predominance: Defendant's Conduct and Class Members' Injuries

Our precedent provides that HN7[] the focus of the predominance inquiry is on whether the defendant's conduct was common as to all of the class members, and whether all of the class members were harmed by the defendant's conduct. [44] Our reasoning in Warfarin is instructive on this point. The claims asserted there were remarkably similar to the specific claims at issue here. There, we considered the propriety of the certification of a settlement class arising out of DuPont Pharmaceuticals' alleged dissemination of misleading information about a competitor's product. 391 F.3d at 522. The plaintiffs averred that DuPont engaged in anticompetitive conduct that allowed it to maintain a 67% market share and to charge supracompetitive prices, in violation of federal antitrust law, the antitrust statutes of Illinois Brick repealer states,[20] the consumer protection and deceptive practices statutes of all fifty states and the District of Columbia, and the common law prohibitions on unjust enrichment and tortious interference of every jurisdiction. Id. at 523-25. After reaching a class settlement with the defendant and receiving the district court's preliminary approval, objections were lodged contesting the certification of a single nationwide class of plaintiffs. The objectors argued that such certification was inappropriate due to inconsistencies in state antitrust and consumer fraud statutes' provision of statutory standing [45] to assert antitrust claims and eligibility for treble or punitive damages recovery, and the relative weakness of certain consumer claims. Id. at 529-31.

Guided by the Supreme Court's observation that "[p]redominance is a test readily met in certain cases alleging consumer[ ] fraud or violations of the antitrust laws," we stated:

> This case falls squarely into that category: plaintiffs have alleged that DuPont engaged in a broad-based campaign, in violation of federal and state consumer fraud and antitrust laws, to deceive consumers, TPPs, health care professionals, and regulatory bodies into believing that generic warfarin sodium was not an equivalent alternative to Coumadin. These allegations naturally raise several questions of law and fact common to the entire class and which predominate over any issues related to individual class members, including the unlawfulness of DuPont's conduct under federal antitrust laws as well as state law, the causal linkage between [20] As mentioned, certain states have enacted statutes known as "Illinois Brick repealers," which extend antitrust standing to indirect purchasers and consumers. See supra n. 17.

DuPont's conduct and the injury suffered by the [46] class members, and the nature of the relief to which class members are entitled.

Id. at 528. In light of DuPont's allegedly deceptive "broad-based, national campaign conducted by and directed from corporate headquarters," we emphasized that proof of liability of DuPont's conduct "depends on evidence which is common to the class members" because "liability depends on the conduct of DuPont, and whether it conducted a nationwide campaign of misrepresentation and deception, [and] does not depend on the conduct of individual class members." Id. As a result, we affirmed the District Court's ruling that class members shared predominantly common issues as to the conduct of the defendants [*299] despite possessing claims arising under differing state laws. Id. at 530.[21]

We applied a similar approach in Insurance Brokerage, where, in evaluating a challenge to certification of a settlement class on the basis of predominance, we determined that the elements of a Sherman Act violation for concerted anticompetitive activity focused upon "the conduct of the defendants." 579 F.3d at 268. Noting the presence of several shared questions of law and fact — including, among others, whether the defendants conspired to allocate a particular market, whether the conduct actually reduced competition in the market by consolidating the industry, and whether the conspiratorial conduct raised premiums for all members of the class — we concluded that "common questions abound with respect to whether the defendants engaged in illegal, concerted action." 579 F.3d at 268. As a result, we held that "individual issues d[id] not overwhelm the common ones."[22] Id; see also Linerboard, 305 F.3d at 162 [48] ("[C]ommon issues [ ] predominate here because the inquiry necessarily focuses on defendants' conduct, that is, what defendants did rather than what plaintiffs did.") (citation & quotations omitted); cf. In re LifeUSA Holding Inc., 242 F.3d 136, 145-46 (3d Cir. 2001) (reversing certification of litigation class where plaintiffs' claims arose "not out of one single event or misrepresentation," but out of "non-standardized and individualized sales 'pitches'").

In this [49] regard, we note the dissent's misreading of the Supreme Court's recent opinion in Wal-mart Stores Inc. v. Dukes, 131 S. Ct. 2541, 180 L. Ed. 2d 374 (2011) as supporting its thesis that an inquiry into the existence or validity of each class member's claim is required at the class certification stage. To the contrary, Dukes actually bolsters our position, making clear that the focus is on whether the defendant's conduct was [*300] common as to all of the class members, not on whether each plaintiff has a "colorable" claim. In Dukes, the Court held that HN8[] commonality and predominance are defeated when it cannot be said that there was a common course of conduct in which the defendant engaged with respect to each individual. But commonality is satisfied where common questions generate common answers "apt to drive the resolution of the litigation." 131 S. Ct. at 2551. That is exactly what is presented here, for the answers to questions about De Beers's alleged misconduct and the harm it caused would be common as to all of the class members, and would thus inform the resolution of the litigation if it were not being settled.

[21] Contrary to the objectors' and the Panel's view that Warfarin's analysis is inapplicable because the plaintiffs in that case purportedly shared a common claim under the Delaware Consumer Fraud Act, our holding in Warfarin did not address the Delaware statute in analyzing predominance. 391 F.3d at 528-29. Indeed, Warfarin did not consider whether every class member even possessed a claim under Delaware law, nor did it undertake a choice-of-law [47] analysis to determine whether all members in the nationwide class could assert a claim under the Delaware statute. Rather, we simply concluded that any claims arising under the varying state laws and the Delaware statute could be proved with common evidence, thereby supporting a finding of predominance. Id.

[22] A comparable approach is evidenced in our decision in Prudential, where we affirmed the district court's finding of predominance based upon the central issue in the case — a common nationwide scheme of deceptive conduct by the defendant to defraud millions of customers. 148 F.3d at 315. Similarly, in Linerboard, we noted that the "critical inquiry will be whether defendants successfully concealed the existence of the alleged conspiracy," and "the fact of concealment [ ] is the polestar in an analysis of fraudulent concealment." 305 F.3d at 163 (emphasis in original). Because it was the defendant's conduct that demanded attention, we found that "allegations of proof are all common to the defendants, not the plaintiffs." Id.

Specifically, here, plaintiffs allege that De Beers engaged in anticompetitive activity by exploiting [50] its 65% share of the diamond market and control of the world's supply of rough diamonds to impose rigid constraints on the sale and resale of those diamonds. This conduct resulted in a common injury as to all class members — inflated diamond prices — in violation of federal antitrust law, and the antitrust, consumer protection, or unjust enrichment laws of every state and the District of Columbia.[23] In this respect, as in Warfarin and Insurance Brokerage, De Beers's asserted price-fixing and monopolization conduct lies at the core of plaintiffs' claims, as do the common injuries which all class members suffered as a result. Based upon our case law, we can distill that "each class member shares a similar legal question arising from whether De Beers engaged in a broad conspiracy that was aimed to and did affect diamond prices in the United States." (App'x 278-79 (emphasis added).) Evidence for this legal question would entail generalized common proof as to "the implementation of De Beers'[s] conspiracy, the form of the conspiracy, and the duration and extent of the conspiracy." (Id. 278.)

The plaintiffs likewise share common factual questions as to whether De Beers "acted in concert to artificially fix, maintain, and stabilize prices and to monopolize trade and commerce in the market for polished diamonds," and whether said activity resulted "in an inflation in the prices of diamonds sold to consumers." (Id. 278-79.) These allegations are unaffected by the particularized conduct of individual class members, as proof of liability and liability itself would depend entirely upon De Beers's allegedly anticompetitive activities. Indeed, the presence of these questions stemming solely from De Beers's asserted behavior and the fact that all class members purchased diamonds is an apt illustration of why the predominance test is "readily met in certain cases alleging consumer [ ] fraud or violations of the antitrust laws.'"[24] Ins. Broker., 579 F.3d at 266 (quoting Amchem, 521 U.S. at 624); see [52] generally Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3) advisory committee's notes to 1966 amendment (providing that "a fraud perpetrated on numerous persons by the use of similar misrepresentations may be an appealing situation for a class action"). Considering this presentation of common issues, a finding that common inquiries predominated over individual questions particular to any putative class member appears reasonably within the discretion of the District Court.

The dissent urges that according to our view, the class is "practically limitless." (Dissenting Op. at 9.) This is plainly incorrect: the limits are found in the conduct of the defendant and the injuries sustained by class members as a result of the conduct. These provide sufficient class [*301] contours. The instant class is not made up of "everyone on earth," [53] "regardless of diamond purchases." (Dissenting Op. at 8 n.5.) Instead, each member is a Direct or Indirect Purchaser, harmed by what De Beers did. These class members, moreover, possess a legally cognizable injury acknowledged in hornbook law, as their injuries are real, and stem not from simply feeling "wronged," as the dissent suggests (Dissenting Op. at 8), but from De Beers's alleged anti-competitive conduct, conduct which antitrust laws forbid.

ii) Precedent Regarding Variations in State Law

Furthermore, our precedent provides that HN9[] "variations in the rights and remedies available to injured class members under the various laws of the fifty states [do] not defeat commonality and predominance." Warfarin, 391 F.3d at 529 (quoting In re Prudential Ins. Co. Am. Sales Practice Litig. Agent Actions, 148 F.3d 283, 315 (3d Cir. 1998)). This is so because "'a finding of commonality does not require that all class members share identical claims,'" and predominance is not considered deficient merely "because claims were subject to the [varying] laws of [23] No one seriously disputes that De Beers's alleged conduct, if true, was anticompetitive and violated [51] state antitrust laws. Our disagreement with the dissent arises solely out of the question whether certain class members' potential inability to satisfy some states' statutory standing requirements should have precluded the District Court from certifying the settlement class in this case.

[24] As we noted in Insurance Brokerage, we do not presume here "that common issues necessarily predominate in every antitrust case." 579 F.3d at 267 n.26 (citing Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 321-22). Here, we merely conclude that the District Court was free to determine that common issues of law or fact stemming from De Beers's conduct in this instance satisfied the predominance requirement.

fifty states." Id. "'Predominance under Rule 23(b)(3) cannot be reduced to a mechanical, single-issue test'"; rather, "'[a]s long as a sufficient [54] constellation of common issues binds class members together, variations in the sources and application'" of applicable laws will not foreclose class certification. Linerboard, 305 F.3d at 162-63 (quoting with approval Waste Mgmt. Holdings, Inc. v. Mowbray, 208 F.3d 288, 296 (1st Cir. 2000) (rejecting argument that variations in twenty states' laws concerning reliance, waiver, and statutes of limitations defeated predominance)); see also Smilow v. Sw. Bell Mobile Sys., Inc., 323 F.3d 32, 39 (1st Cir. 2003) ("Rule 23(b)(3) requires merely that common issues predominate, not that all issues be common to the class.") (emphasis added). Thus, it is not surprising that we can find no support in our Court's jurisprudence for the proposition that commonality and predominance are defeated merely because available rights and remedies differ under the several laws that form the basis for the class claims.[25]

We have never required the presentation of identical or uniform issues or claims as a prerequisite to certification of a class. Rather, our jurisprudence evinces a pragmatic response to certifications of common claims arising under varying state laws. In Prudential, we addressed the certification of a settlement class arising under federal securities law and varying state law formulations of common law fraud, breach of contract, bad faith, negligent misrepresentation, negligence, unjust enrichment, and breach of state consumer fraud statutes. 148 F.3d at 315. HN10[] We emphasized our willingness to certify nationwide classes where differences in state law fell "into a limited number of predictable patterns," and any deviations "could be overcome at trial by grouping similar state laws together and applying them as a unit." [56] Id. As such, we affirmed the district court's decision to subsume the relatively [*302] minor differences in state law within a single class. Id; see also Ins. Broker., 579 F.3d at 271 (noting that "subclasses are appropriate 'where a class is found to include subclasses divergent in interest'") (citation & alteration omitted).

Similarly, in GM Truck, we approved the certification of nationwide (b)(3) litigation classes where "the laws of the 50 states could be reduced to [several] general patterns, providing the framework for sub-classes if the nationwide action had proven unmanageable." 55 F.3d at 817-18 (discussing In re School Asbestos Litig., 789 F.2d 996, 1010 (3d Cir. 1986)). Observing that "we [could not] conceive that each of the forty-nine states [ ] represented here has a truly unique statutory scheme," we determined that a nationwide class "could have been properly certified." Id. This alternative to outright rejection of certification of a nationwide class was deemed to be especially fitting because it could "surmount[ ] some of the individual issues while retaining some of the substantive advantages of the class action." Id. at 818.

Echoing this approach, our fellow Courts of [57] Appeals have agreed that, HN11[] for purposes of litigation classes, "if the applicable state laws can be sorted into a small number of groups, each containing materially identical legal standards," then certification of subgroups "embracing each of the dominant legal standards can be appropriate." Klay v. Humana, Inc., 382 F.3d 1241, 1262 (11th Cir. 2004); see also Walsh v. Ford Motor Co., 807 F.2d 1000, 1017, 257 U.S. App. D.C. 85 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (R.B. Ginsburg, J.) (holding that class certification is appropriate where state law variations can be grouped by similar legal doctrines).

Where "a sufficient constellation of common issues binds class members together," Linerboard, 305 F.3d at 162-63, differences in state law treatment of indirect purchaser claims likely fall into a handful of clearly discernible statutory schemes. HN12[] Nothing in our case law or the language of Rule 23 commands that everyone in a class must allege precisely identical or "uniform" causes of action, see Sullivan, 613 F.3d at 149, and statutory variations do not defeat predominance in the presence of other exceedingly common issues.[26] Instead, as Prudential and GM

[25] Other courts have similarly declined to examine the controlling substantive law pertinent to asserted claims at the class certification stage. See, e.g., Schumacher v. Tyson Fresh Meats, Inc., 2004 DSD 5, 221 F.R.D. 605, 612 (D.S.D. 2004) ("Where federal claims and common law claims are predicated on [55] the same factual allegations and proof will be essentially the same, 'even if the law of different states might ultimately govern the common law claims — an issue that need not and is not decided at this juncture — certification of the class for the whole action is appropriate.'") (quoting Walsh v. Chittenden Corp., 798 F. Supp. 1043, 1055 (D. Vt. 1992)) (alteration omitted).

Truck explain, where a defendant's singular conduct gives rise to one cause [58] of action in one state, while providing for a different cause of action in another jurisdiction, the courts may group both claims in a single class action. This tactic in litigation advances the laudatory purposes of the class action device, "preserv[ing] the resources of both the courts and the parties by permitting issues affecting all class members to be litigated in an efficient, expedited, and manageable fashion." Allison v. Citgo Petrol. Corp., 151 F.3d 402, 410 (5th Cir. 1998).

iii) Certification of Settlement Classes: Diminished Concern Regarding Variations in State Law

But we need not rely merely on certifications involving actual litigation of the class issues for the proposition that differing state laws do not defeat commonality or predominance. The correct outcome is even clearer for certification of a settlement class because the concern for manageability [59] that is a central tenet in the certification of a litigation class is removed from the equation. Indeed, the class settlement [*303] posture of this case largely marginalizes the objectors' concern that state law variations undermine a finding of predominance.

In Warfarin, we rejected an objection essentially indistinguishable from the one advanced here, namely, that "variations in and inconsistencies between the state consumer fraud and antitrust laws of the fifty states defeat the commonality and predominance requirements of Rule 23." 391 F.3d at 529. In light of the Supreme Court's guidance that a district court "[c]onfronted with a request for settlement-only class certification" need not inquire whether the case "would present intractable management problems," Amchem, 521 U.S. at 620, in Warfarin, we delineated a "key" distinction between certification of a class for settlement versus certification for purposes of litigation, 391 F.3d at 529. Specifically, we observed that, in the settlement context, variations in state antitrust, consumer protection and unjust enrichment laws did not present "the types of insuperable obstacles" that could render class litigation unmanageable.[27] Id. (citing [60] Prudential, 148 F.3d at 315). We emphasized, as a result, that "variations [in state laws] are irrelevant to certification of a settlement class" since a settlement would eliminate the principal burden of establishing the elements of liability under disparate laws. Id.; see, e.g., Davis v. J.P Morgan Chase & Co., 775 F. Supp. 2d 601, 609 (W.D.N.Y. 2011) ("[S]tate-law distinctions impact trial manageability, which is relevant principally with respect to litigation at trial.") (citing Warfarin, 391 F.3d at 529-30); In re Lupron Mktg & Sales Practices Litig., 228 F.R.D. 75, 92 (D. Mass. 2005) (finding that "differences in the state consumer protection laws" implicate manageability concerns and do not pose an obstacle to certification of a settlement class).

Hence, our consideration of varying laws in the context of predominance has primarily focused on [61] manageability of a litigation class. This is a particularly important point, as the objectors seem to conflate the predicate predominance analysis for certification of a settlement class with that required for certification of a litigation class, relying exclusively upon cases implicating the manageability obstacles inherent in class litigation. See, e.g., Sacred Heart Health Sys., Inc. v. Humana Mil. Healthcare Servs., Inc., 601 F.3d 1159, 1180 (11th Cir. 2010); Cole v. Gen. Motors Corp., 484 F.3d 717, 724 (5th Cir. 2007). The Panel likewise referenced authority that focused on the manageability issues pertinent to certification of litigation classes in rejecting the settlement class certification. See Sullivan, 613 F.3d at 151 (quoting Clay v. Am. Tobacco Co., 188 F.R.D. 483, 501 (S.D. Ill. 1999) (discussing "unmanageable" nature of varying state unjust enrichment laws)).

Because we are presented with a settlement class certification, "we are not as concerned with formulating some prediction as to how [variances in state law] would play out at trial, for the proposal is that there be no trial." Ins. Broker., 579 F.3d at 269 (internal citations & quotations omitted). As such, we simply [62] need not inquire whether the varying state treatments [*304] of indirect purchaser damage claims at issue would present the type

[26] We do not reach this conclusion so as to allow district courts to "shirk" the requirements of Rule 23 when certifying the class, as the dissent suggests. (Dissenting Op. at 21 n.13.) We do not ignore the differences in state law, but rather find, based on our precedent, that those differences do not defeat predominance.

[27] In conducting the analysis in Warfarin, we expressly distinguished the Seventh Circuit's decision in In re Bridgestone/Firestone Inc., 288 F.3d 1012 (7th Cir. 2002), in which certification of a nationwide class arising under the tort laws of all fifty states was sought for purposes of litigation, rather than settlement. 391 F.3d at 529.

of "insuperable obstacles" or "intractable management problems" pertinent to certification of a litigation class.[28] Comm. Bank I, 418 F.3d at 299; Warfarin, 391 F.3d at 529. The proposed settlement here obviates the difficulties inherent in proving the elements of varied claims at trial or in instructing a jury on varied state laws, and "the difference is key."[29] Warfarin, 391 F.3d at 529. Accordingly, while we are cognizant of our responsibility to "protect absentees by blocking unwarranted or overbroad class definitions," Comm. Bank II, 622 F.3d at 291, state law variations are largely "irrelevant to certification of a settlement class," Warfarin, 391 F.3d at 529.[30]

iv) Rule 23(b) (3) and our Precedent [65] do not Require that Individual Class Members State a Valid Claim

At bottom, we can find no persuasive authority for deeming the certification of a class for settlement purposes improper based on differences in state law. The objectors and our dissenting colleagues nevertheless insist that, despite the prevalence of the shared issues of fact and law stemming from the defendant's conduct common as to all class members and each class member's resulting injury, states' inconsistent treatment of indirect purchaser damages claims overwhelms the commonalities. They advocate this because approximately twenty-five states have not extended antitrust standing to indirect purchasers through Illinois Brick repealer [*305] statutes or judicial edict; likewise, some uncertain number of states do not permit an end-run around antitrust standing through claims based on consumer protection and/or unjust enrichment statutes. (See Quinn Supp. Br. on Reh'g En Banc 21-22.) It follows then, they argue, that a large proportion of the Indirect Purchaser Class lacks any valid claims under applicable state substantive law, and, therefore, cannot "predominantly" share common issues of law or fact with those Indirect Purchasers [66] actually possessing valid claims.[31] In turn, they insist that a district court must undertake a thorough review of applicable substantive law to assure itself that each class member has "at least [28] We are aware that there may still be circumstances, as we and other Courts of Appeals have noted, where "'[i]n a multi-state class action, variations in state law may swamp any common issues and defeat predominance.'" Klay v. Humana, Inc., 382 F.3d 1241, 1261 (11th Cir. 2004) (quoting Castano v. Am. Tobacco Co., 84 F.3d 734, 741 (5th Cir. 1996)). But these decisions are inapplicable here, as the certification [63] orders at issue pertained to litigation classes and were preoccupied with the attendant manageability aspects of certification. More explicitly, the courts expressed unease that if "more than a few of the laws of the fifty states differ, the district judge would face an impossible task of instructing a jury on the relevant law," and noted "the difficulties in trying the [ ] claims on a class basis." Id. (citation & quotations omitted). Unlike those situations "where the certification inquiry [is] set against the backdrop of an impending trial," Ins. Broker., 579 F.3d at 269, the settlement context here does not present equivalent concerns.

[29] Unsurprisingly, we are not alone in recognizing the "key" distinction between certification for settlement purposes versus litigation, and "courts are more inclined to find the predominance test met [in the settlement context], even when there are differences in applicable state laws." *Ersler v. Toshiba Am., Inc., No. CV-07-2304, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14374, 2009 WL 454354, at 4 (E.D.N.Y. Feb. 24, 2009) (citing In re Grand Theft Auto Video Game Consumer Litig., 251 F.R.D. 139, 158 (S.D.N.Y. 2008)); see, e.g., In re Mexico Money Transfer Litig., 267 F.3d 743, 746-47 (7th Cir. 2001) [64] (noting that while certification of litigation classes arising under varying consumer fraud statutes is often inappropriate, the same is not true for settlement classes where "no one need draw fine lines among state-law theories of relief"); In re Inter-Op Hip Prosthesis Liability Litig., 204 F.R.D 330, 347 (N.D. Ohio 2001) ("[W]hen taking the proposed settlement [ ] into consideration for purposes of determining class certification, individual issues which are normally present in . . . litigation become irrelevant, allowing the common issues to predominate.") (citation & quotations omitted).

[30] Although we will not here speculate as to the type of "situations where variations in state laws are so significant so as to defeat commonality and predominance even in a settlement class certification," Warfarin, 391 F.3d at 530, we are confident that the several common questions of law or fact arising from a "single central issue" — namely, De Beers's alleged anticompetitive conduct and the resulting injury caused to each class member — predominate over any issues concerning individual class members, Prudential, 148 F.3d at 314 (citation & quotations omitted).

[31] As noted, the Panel conducted an extensive review of relevant state statutes and reached the conclusion that "indirect purchasers do not have a right to recover in all states, and, therefore, no question of law or fact regarding their legal rights is uniform throughout the class." Sullivan, 613 F.3d at 149.

some colorable legal claim" (Dissenting Op. at 10) or "has a valid claim" (Quinn Supp. Br. at 16) before certifying a settlement.

But this focus is misdirected. HN13[] The question is not what valid claims can plaintiffs assert; rather, it is simply whether common issues of fact or law predominate. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3). Contrary to what the dissent and objectors principally contend, there is no "claims" or "merits" litmus test incorporated into the predominance inquiry beyond what is necessary to determine preliminarily whether certain elements will necessitate individual or common proof. Such a view misreads Rule 23 and our jurisprudence as to the inquiry a district court must conduct [67] at the class certification stage. An analysis into the legal viability of asserted claims is properly considered through a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b) or summary judgment pursuant to Rule 56, not as part of a Rule 23 certification process. See Comm. Bank II, 622 F.3d at 303 ("[T]he Rule 23 requirements 'differ in kind from legal rulings under Rule 12(b)(6).'") (quoting Szabo v. Bridgeport Machs., Inc., 249 F.3d 672, 676 (7th Cir. 2001)).

To adopt the position of the dissent and the objectors is to introduce a Rule 12(b)(6) inquiry as to every claim in the class before a class may be certified. But Rule 23 makes clear that a district court has limited authority to examine the merits when conducting the certification inquiry:

> HN14[] Although an evaluation of the probable outcome on the merits is not properly part of the certification decision, discovery in aid of the certification decision often includes information required to identify the nature of the issues that actually will be presented at trial. In this sense it is appropriate to conduct controlled discovery into the "merits," limited to those aspects relevant to making the certification decision on an informed basis.

2003 Amendments [68] to Rule 23 (emphasis added); see also Hassine v. Jeffes, 846 F.2d 169, 178 (3d Cir. 1988) ("The ability of a named plaintiff to succeed on his or her individual claims has never been a prerequisite to certification of the class."). HN15[] A court may inquire whether the elements of asserted claims are capable of proof through common evidence, but lacks authority to adjudge the legal validity or soundness of the substantive elements of asserted claims. Put another way, a district court may inquire into the merits of the claims presented in order to determine whether the requirements of Rule 23 are met, but not in order to determine whether the individual elements of each claim are satisfied.

Citing our holdings in Hydrogen Peroxide and *Newton v. Merrill Lynch, [306] Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 259 F.3d 154 (3d Cir. 2001), the objectors argue that the District Court abused its discretion by failing to establish as part of the certification process that each class member possessed a valid claim under the applicable substantive laws.[32] (See Quinn Br. at 17.) But these cases do not stand for this proposition. We explained in Hydrogen Peroxide that an examination of the elements of plaintiffs' claim [69] is sometimes necessary, not in order to determine whether each class member states a valid claim, but instead to determine whether the requirements of Rule 23 — namely, that the elements of the claim can be proved "through evidence common to the class rather than individual to its members" — are met. 552 F.3d at 311-12. In Newton, we similarly stated that a court may "delve beyond the pleadings to determine whether the requirements for class certification are satisfied," and held that a court's rigorous certification analysis may include a "preliminary inquiry into the merits." 259 F.3d at 167 (citations & quotations omitted). But we did not state that an inquiry into the merits was necessary in order to prove that each class member has state a valid claim as a prerequisite to class certification. Rather, the Rules and our case law have consistently made clear that plaintiffs need not actually establish the validity of claims at the certification stage.[33]

[32] The Panel echoed the objectors' position, concluding after examining the laws of fifty states that many jurisdictions "categorically foreclosed" a legal right to recover on the merits to indirect purchasers. Sullivan, 613 F.3d at 151 n.14.

[33] The [70] marginal role played by the question of "validity" of claims in class settlement certification situations is further evidenced by considering our subsequent Prudential decision. See In re Prudential Ins. Co. of Am. Sales Practice Litig., 261 F.3d 355, 366 (3d Cir. 2001) ("Prudential II"). There, we released all state-law claims — including unnamed claims — "arising from the same nucleus of operative facts as the claims" actually considered by the Court without adjudicating the validity of

Moreover, the merits inquiry is particularly unwarranted in the settlement context since a district court need not "envision the form that a trial" would take, Newton, 259 F.3d at 167, nor consider "the available evidence and the method or methods by which plaintiffs propose to use the evidence to prove" the disputed element at trial, Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 312. In fact, the absence of evidentiary and trial manageability concerns that initially motivated our instruction to conduct a preliminary merits inquiry in the predominance context reinforces the "key" distinction between certification of a litigation and settlement class. Warfarin, 391 F.3d at 529. As such, the objectors' focus on the legal strengths and weaknesses of class members' claims misconstrues the requirements of Rule 23.[34] See Newton, 259 F.3d at 167-69.

[*307] Even still, the objectors and the dissent urge that the absence of one particular element for some class members — statutory standing — means that these members cannot state a valid claim, and therefore, the class cannot be certified. While it may be correct that states abiding by Illinois Brick require a plaintiff to be a direct purchaser as one element of an antitrust or consumer protection claim, the possibility that some of the Indirect Purchasers in the instant class might be unable to establish this element at trial is beside the point. This element, often confusingly denoted as a statutory standing requirement, is not jurisdictional.[35] Statutory standing is distinct from jurisdictional standing in that "Article III standing is required to establish a justiciable case or controversy within the jurisdiction of the federal courts," whereas "lack of antitrust standing affects a plaintiff's ability to recover, [73] but does not implicate the subject matter jurisdiction of the court." Gerlinger v. Amazon.com Inc., 526 F.3d 1253, 1256 (9th Cir. 2008) (citation omitted); see e.g., Lerner v. Fleet Bank, N.A., 318 F.3d 113, 128 (2d Cir. 2003) (noting that "statutory standing under the antitrust laws is not a prerequisite to federal subject matter jurisdiction"); Hammes v. AAMCO Transmissions, Inc., 33 F.3d 774, 778 (7th Cir. 1994) ("[D]espite the suggestive terminology, 'antitrust standing' is not a jurisdictional requirement and is therefore waivable."). Accordingly, statutory standing is simply another element of proof for an antitrust claim, rather than a predicate for asserting a claim in the first place.

Here, the supposed lack of one element necessary to prove a violation on the merits — statutory standing — does not establish a concomitant absence of other predominantly common issues. See Prudential, 148 F.3d at 315 (affirming a district court's certification of a settlement class despite the fact that some objectors challenged the settlement on the grounds that some plaintiffs could not establish reliance — a necessary element of their state-law fraud claims). This is especially true in the settlement context where no proof on the merits need be adduced. See Linerboard, 305 F.3d at 162-63 ("'[T]he mere fact that such concerns [of individualized factual and legal determinations] may arise and may affect different class members differently does not compel a finding that individual issues predominate over common ones.'") (quoting Mowbray, 208 F.3d at 296). Common questions as to the nature of De Beers's "conduct under federal antitrust laws as well as state law" and "the causal linkage between [De Beers's] conduct and the injury suffered by the class members" may still be found to predominate. See those other allegations. Id. We observed that "a judgment pursuant to a class settlement can bar later claims based on the allegations underlying the claims in the settled class action" even where the "precluded claim was not presented, and could not have been presented, in the class action itself." Id. (citations omitted). We reasoned that while our "power to release those claims as part of a judgment" may "seem anomalous," "we have endorsed the rule because it 'serves the important policy interest of judicial economy by permitting parties to enter into comprehensive settlements that 'prevent relitigation of settled questions at the core of a class action.'" Id. (quoting TBK Partners, Ltd. v. Western Union Corp., 675 F.2d 456, 460 (2d Cir. 1982)). [71] As such, the unidentified prospective claims could be included in the settlement without adjudication of their validity since they arose from the identical fraudulent scheme perpetrated by the defendant.

[34] The objectors' associated argument that the predominance inquiry presupposes that every putative class members possesses at least a single valid cause of action [72] likewise misses the point. While Rule 23 may presuppose that every class member does actually allege a predominantly common claim against a defendant, Rule 23 does not mandate that each of these claims must be shown capable of prevailing on the merits at the certification stage.

[35] To further clarify, we use the term "statutory standing" to refer to the possession of a viable claim or right to relief, not to a jurisdictional requirement. See generally Steel Co. v. Citizens for a Better Env't, 523 U.S. 83, 89, 118 S. Ct. 1003, 140 L. Ed. 2d 210 (1998) ("It is firmly established in our cases that the absence of a valid (as opposed to arguable) cause of action does not implicate subject-matter jurisdiction," and "jurisdiction is not defeated by the possibility that the averments might fail to state a cause [74] of action") (citations and alterations omitted).

Warfarin, 391 F.3d at 528; see also Pet Food, 629 F.3d at 342 [75] ("[T]he predominance requirement was satisfied because the same set of core operative facts and theory of proximate cause apply to each member of the class.") (internal quotations omitted).[36]

[*308] v) The Dissent's Proposed Framework

The dissent's proposed framework mistakenly places the cart before the horse by requiring the District Court to establish the validity of the disputed elements of the asserted claims — namely, the viability of indirect purchaser actions under state substantive laws — prior to certifying the class. Under this approach, the dissent seems to require [76] that class members show that they can state a valid claim for relief. But the Rule 23 inquiry does not, and should not, involve a Rule 12(b)(6) inquiry.[37]

Were we to require district courts to ensure that "each member of a settlement class has a valid claim" in order to establish predominance, (Quinn Supp. Br. at 16), or that each class member has a "colorable legal claim," district courts would be obligated at the class certification stage to, sua sponte, conduct a thorough [77] Rule 12(b)(6) analysis of every statutory and common-law claim to ensure that each plaintiff — including absent class members — possesses a valid cause of action or a "colorable claim" under the applicable federal or state substantive law. Such an inquiry into the merits goes beyond the requirements of Rule 23, for Rule 23 does not require a district court to determine whether class members individually have a colorable claim — one that "appear[s] to be true, valid, or right. (Dissenting Op. at 10 n.8.) In addition to exceeding the plain requirements of Rule 23, in nationwide class settlements, such as the one here, and even if limited to a statutory standing inquiry, this analysis would necessitate an intensive, fifty-state cataloguing of differences in state law at an early stage of the proceedings, and without the benefit of a developed record.[38] Despite the dissent's view, Rule 23 does not require such an intensive cataloguing of each class member's claim in order to establish predominance. Even more troublesome, this merits [*309] analysis might not actually answer the salient question of whether common issues of fact or law actually predominate over individual ones.

Moreover, district courts undertaking the scrupulous review of state laws could not ensure the validity of each individual claim without first settling upon the precise state law governing each of the putative class members' claims. This choice-of-law analysis would be particularly difficult in a nationwide class action where an array of factors beyond the residence of the class members must be [79] considered, including, inter alia, the location of [36] The Panel analyzed the antitrust claims separately from the consumer protection and unjust enrichment claims, seemingly concluding that plaintiffs could only prevail if each putative class member alleged either a "uniform" antitrust cause of action, a "uniform" consumer protection cause of action, or a "uniform" unjust enrichment claim. Sullivan, 613 F.3d 146, 150. We will not read into Rule 23 this heightened threshold requirement that plaintiffs must allege an identical cause of action, when all that is required is that common issues of law or fact predominate over questions particular to individual class members.

[37] The dissent describes this requirement in varied ways: under their view, class members who, "according to the plain terms of controlling law have no claim at all" (Dissenting Op. at 16 n. 11), have "no legal claim" (Id. at 1), have "no cause of action," (Id. at 4), have a claim "clearly lacking a colorable basis" (Id. at 15), or have a claim "nonexistent as a matter of substantive law" (Id. at 13), are barred from partaking in this class action settlement. The problem with this requirement, however, is that in order to separate class members possessing an "existent" legal claim from those possessing a "nonexistent" one, district courts would have to perform a Rule 12(b)(6) inquiry into each class member's claim.

[38] At the same time, [78] it is by no means clear that the dissent's proposed analysis could be cabined to only consider the differing statutory standing requirements in the process of evaluating the validity of claims. As discussed supra, statutory standing for indirect purchasers is treated as but one element of a cause of action, rather than a jurisdictional requirement, as the dissent mistakenly suggests. If a district court were required to evaluate the statutory standing element to assess a claim's viability, logic and consistency suggest that the court should also consider other aspects of a claim for Rule 12(b)(6) and other deficiencies. This approach would delay proceedings in the trial court, as it would require the parties to engage in ill-timed, protracted merits litigation at the class certification stage.

the parties and the purchased items, and the place of contracting and performance. See generally Berg Chilling Sys., Inc. v. Hull Corp., 435 F.3d 455, 467 (3d Cir. 2006). The Seventh Circuit rightly noted that "choice-of-law issues in nationwide class actions are rarely so uncomplicated that one can delineate clear winning and losing arguments at an early stage in the litigation"; "the legal uncertainty resulting from the complicated choice-of-law issues" would unduly complicate the process for establishing predominance under Rule 23. Mirfasihi v. Fleet Mortg. Corp., 450 F.3d 745, 750 (7th Cir. 2006). As a result, many courts find it "inappropriate to decide choice of law issues incident to a motion for class certification." See, e.g., In re Kirschner Med. Corp. Sec. Litig., 139 F.R.D. 74, 84 (D. Md. 1991); Singer v. AT&T Corp., 185 F.R.D. 681, 691 (S.D. Fla. 1998) ("It is well-established that consideration of choice of law issues at the class certification stage is generally premature.").

Even were a district court to properly ascertain the applicable law after conducting the choice-of-law inquiry, it would likely encounter unsettled [80] legal questions, further undermining its ability to assess the viability of some class members' claims and increasing the costs of administration. By way of example, in Warfarin, we remarked on the "unsettled question of law as to whether Tennessee's antitrust statutes . . . cover only violations occurring in intrastate commerce or extend to cover violations occurring in interstate commerce as well." 391 F.3d at 530 n.12. Relegating the issue to a footnote, we did not think it necessary to pry into the legal merits of the Tennessee claims in approving the class settlement. In another instance, the Fifth Circuit confronted the unresolved question of whether Louisiana antitrust law granted standing to indirect purchasers of consumer products as part of the class certification process, and asked the Louisiana Supreme Court to accept certification of the question. See Free v. Abbott Labs., 176 F.3d 298, 298-99 (5th Cir. 1999). When the state court declined, the Fifth Circuit was "le[ft] to fathom Louisiana's unsettled antitrust law." Id. By requiring district courts to assess the validity of unsettled state law claims at the certification stage, we would needlessly introduce additional [81] legal uncertainty into a certification process that does not demand it.[39]

[*310] We raise the following questions to further demonstrate the error of the proposed framework adopted by our dissenting colleagues. If the dissent's "colorable legal claim" test is a threshold inquiry for commonality, why should the court not consider every potential disqualifier from one's having a "colorable legal claim?" For example, in any class certification case, should the court consider whether all potential class members complied with applicable pre-notice requirements under the relevant substantive law? Should the court consider whether every potential class

[39] Application of the proposed inquiry to the instant matter demonstrates the likely obstacles the District Court would encounter under this approach. The objectors present Ohio's statutory regime as emblematic of the impropriety of the type of class settlement certification at issue here. Citing the Ohio Supreme Court's decision in Johnson v. Microsoft Corp., 106 Ohio St. 3d 278, 2005 Ohio 4985, 834 N.E.2d 791 (Ohio 2005), they urge that Ohio law prohibits all indirect purchaser claims asserting violations of Ohio antitrust law, common law claims for unjust enrichment where a purchaser cannot establish that he conferred a benefit upon a defendant, and claims alleging violations of the Ohio Consumer Sales Practices Act predicated upon monopolistic pricing practices. (Quinn Br. at 60-61.) As a result, they insist that, "[d]irectly contrary to the district court's [certification], an Ohio class member does not have a valid claim under Ohio law." (Id. at 61.) The objectors contend that a similar problem exists for other Illinois Brick states.

This inference is flawed for several reasons. First, the objectors fail to engage in the type of choice-of-law [82] exercise necessitated by their proposed approach — the evaluation of whether an Ohio class member is asserting a claim pursuant to Ohio law or pursuant to the law of a repealer state or a state affording an alternative basis for recovery. Undoubtedly, this analysis would present significant hurdles and potentially alter the presumed outcome. Second, although Johnson provides that an indirect purchaser lacking an antitrust claim under Illinois Brick cannot circumvent this limitation by relying upon the Ohio consumer protection statute, the Ohio Supreme Court did not, nor could it, preclude consumer protection claims predicated on fraud or deception. As the plaintiffs point out, the claims settled here include allegations of fraud and deception separate from the antitrust allegations, suggesting that some avenue of recovery arising from the same defendant conduct remains available to indirect purchasers even in Ohio. (See Pls.' Br. in Response to Quinn's Response to Class Counsel's Mot. for Leave to File Record Excerpts 13-14.) Finally, if the court is to evaluate the viability of plaintiffs' statutory standing element under Ohio law at the class certification stage, the objectors presented [83] no sensible reason why the court should not likewise inspect the viability of every other aspect of an antitrust, consumer protection, or unjust enrichment claim, such as statutes of limitation, conditions precedent to suit, and the like. We do not doubt that such an exhaustive analysis would produce absurd results and cause undue delay in our trial courts.

member exhausted her administrative remedies under the relevant substantive law? Should the court evaluate whether each class member's claim complies with the applicable statute of limitations? The answers to these questions most certainly implicate whether a litigant, [84] in a class action or otherwise, has a "colorable legal claim." These questions, moreover, show how flawed, from an administrative, logical, and practical standpoint, the dissent's and objectors' approach really is. No class would ever be certified because it would be impossible to demonstrate that every class member has a "colorable legal claim." (Dissenting Op. at 10.) More than this, it would gut commonality, for, most certainly, individual issues would then predominate. There would simply be no class that could meet this commonality and predominance test.

vi) Settlements

Finally, were we to mandate that a class include only those alleging "colorable" claims, we would effectively rule out the ability of a defendant to achieve "global peace" by obtaining releases from all those who might wish to assert claims, meritorious or not. We need not take judicial notice of the fact that plaintiffs with non-viable claims do nonetheless commence legal action. Here, in an effort to avoid protracted litigation and future relitigation of settled questions in federal and state courts across numerous jurisdictions, De Beers pursued a global settlement and demanded a release of potential damage claims [85] in all fifty states. See Prudential, 148 F.3d at 326 n.82 (noting that release of all claims "serves the important policy interest of judicial economy by permitting parties to enter into comprehensive settlements [*311] that prevent relitigation of settled questions at the core of a class action") (citation & quotations omitted). Specifically, De Beers sought "global peace" in a settlement covering plaintiffs in every federal and state case, as well as potential plaintiffs who had not yet filed cases in either federal or state court. See generally *Klein v. O'Neal, Inc., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 36395, 2009 WL 1174638, at 3 (N.D. Tex. Apr. 29, 2009) ("In a class action settlement setting, defendants seek and pay for global peace-i.e., the resolution of as many claims as possible."); In re Vioxx Prods. Liability Litig., 574 F. Supp. 2d 606, 613 (E.D. La. 2008) (quoting *In re Guidant Corp. Implantable Defibrillators Prods. Liability Litig., MDL No. 05-1708, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17535, 2008 WL 682174, at 3 (D. Minn. 2008) (noting that the parties "contemplated a global settlement covering Plaintiffs from both the MDL and state cases, and included Plaintiffs whose cases had been filed or transferred to the MDL, Plaintiffs whose cases were filed outside [86] the MDL in state court proceedings, and potential Plaintiffs who had not yet filed their cases")). The parties entered a mutual agreement and sought certification of a settlement class with the aim of avoiding countless individual suits in diverse jurisdictions.

Our dissenting colleagues disparage the concept of "global peace" as if it were an impermissible objective in using the class action device. From a practical standpoint, however, achieving global peace is a valid, and valuable, incentive to class action settlements. Settlements avoid future litigation with all potential plaintiffs — meritorious or not. If the dissent's position were adopted, there would be no settlements, collusive or otherwise. First of all, litigating whether a claim is "colorable" and defending who is in and who is not in the class would be an endless process, preventing the parties from seriously getting to, and engaging in, settlement negotiations. And, as discussed above, the "individualized" nature of the task would doom the class certification process from the outset. Second, since releases would necessarily be limited to the qualifying class members, those ultimately excluded would no doubt go right [87] back into court to continue to assert their claims. No defendants would consider settling under this framework, for they could never be assured that they have extinguished every claim from every potential plaintiff.[40]

As applied here, the objectors' approach would subject De Beers to numerous individual suits brought by claimants excluded from the class, undermining "the strong presumption in favor of voluntary settlement agreements, which we have explicitly recognized with approval." Ehrheart, 609 F.3d at 594 (citing Pennwalt Corp. v. Plough, 676 F.2d [40] Of course, some global settlements may nevertheless be rejected for failing to meet the requirements of Rule 23. In Ortiz v. Fibreboard Corp., 527 U.S. 815, 119 S. Ct. 2295, 144 L. Ed. 2d 715 (1999), the Supreme Court rejected a global settlement in a mandatory class action based on a limited fund theory under Rule 23(b)(1)(B). There, the plaintiffs seeking class certification failed to demonstrate that the fund available to pay claims was limited beyond the fund amount agreed to by the parties. There, the requirements of Rule 23(b)(1)(B) were not met; here, the requirements of Rule 23(b)(3) are met.

77, 79-80 (3d Cir. 1982)). "This presumption is especially strong in [88] class actions and other complex cases . . . because they promote the amicable resolution of disputes and lighten the increasing load of litigation faced by the federal courts." Id. (citations omitted). By contrast, requiring a class to assert uniform or identical questions of law or fact and to preemptively demonstrate their legal viability "would seriously undermine the possibility for settling any large, multi district class action." *Prudential [312] II, 261 F.3d at 367. Apart from imposing immense administrative costs, the extraordinary requirement that class members individually possess a "colorable legal claim" would make it increasingly difficult to approve nationwide class settlements entailing predominantly common issues but arising under varying state laws. The resulting framework would likely siphon the various state law claims from federal class actions, and defendants seeking to settle "in such suits would always be concerned that a settlement of the federal class action would leave them exposed to countless suits in state court despite settlement of the federal claims." Id; see also Pet Food, 629 F.3d at 342 ("[A]bsent class certification, the Court may be faced with litigating [89] over 100 individual lawsuits all of which would arise out of the same set of operative facts.").

Rather than "concentrating the litigation of the claims" in a superior single action, Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3)(C), this would serve to frustrate "[t]he core purpose of Rule 23(b)(3)," which "is to vindicate the claims of consumers and other groups of people whose individual claims would be too small to warrant litigation," Amchem, 521 U.S. at 617.

b. Rules Enabling Act & Federalism Concerns

The objectors further contend that the District Court's certification of the settlement class was flawed because it "recognized as valid, for purposes of Rule 23, claims that are not recognized as valid under applicable state law." (Quinn Supp. Br. at 28.) Accordingly, they argue, the order ran afoul of HN16[] the Rules Enabling Act, which provides that the rules of procedure "shall not abridge, enlarge or modify any substantive right." 28 U.S.C. § 2072(b).[41] We cannot agree.

In Prudential, we approved a district court's certification of a proposed settlement despite objections that the certification modified or abridged state law rights. 148 F.3d at 324 (discussing 962 F. Supp. 450, 461-62 (D.N.J. 1997)). We agreed with the district court that "approval of a settlement under Rule 23 merely recognizes the parties' voluntary compromise of their rights and does not itself affect their substantive state law rights." Id. (citation & alterations omitted). As a result, we also agreed with the district court's assessment that the proposed settlement could not violate the Rules Enabling Act since a "court's approval of a voluntary settlement, by nature a compromise of rights, does not affect substantive state rights." Prudential, 962 F. Supp. at 462.

It is well established that HN17[] "settlement agreements are [91] creatures of private contract law." See, e.g., Bauer v. Trans. Sch. Dist. of City of St. Louis, 255 F.3d 478, 482 (8th Cir. 2001). "A district court is not a party to the settlement, nor may it modify the terms of a voluntary settlement agreement between parties." Ehrheart, 609 F.3d at 593 (emphasis added). Thus, a district court's certification of a settlement simply recognizes the parties' deliberate decision to bind themselves according to mutually agreed-upon terms without engaging in any substantive adjudication of the underlying causes of action. [*313] In the absence of a finding that plaintiffs are actually entitled to relief under substantive state law, we reiterate that a court does not "abridge, enlarge, or modify any substantive right" by approving a voluntarily-entered class settlement agreement. § 2072(b).

[41] The Panel agreed with this characterization, holding that "the order contravenes the Rules Enabling Act" because it "extends antitrust remedies that, in many instances, have no root in state substantive law." Sullivan, 613 F.3d at 149. The [90] Panel rejected the argument that De Beers's willingness to stipulate to liability obviated this concern, noting that a court was obligated even in the settlement context to ensure that all of Rule 23's requirements were met and could not "effectively grant[ ] relief to individuals to whom De Beers had no antitrust liability." Id. The dissent repeats this argument.

In the same vein, we disagree with the contention that the District Court violated principles of federalism by extending to the plaintiffs a substantive right that they could not have asserted in state court.[42] As an initial matter, the District Court's approval of the parties' settlement should not be considered a recognition or expansion of substantive rights unavailable [92] in a particular state.[43] See supra. In this regard, the disputed certification order did not subordinate the states' interests, as it did not in fact validate any asserted claims purportedly rejected by the states.[44]

Moreover, consideration of the policy imperatives underlying Illinois Brick confirms that the District Court's certification of a settlement class here did not infringe upon federalism principles. Illinois Brick's restriction on indirect purchaser recovery was motivated by prudential concerns for manageability; it does not reflect a categorical policy judgment that indirect purchasers do not merit antitrust protection. As we previously highlighted, the Illinois Brick Court offered "three policy reasons for its holding":

> (1) a risk of duplicative liability for defendants and potentially inconsistent adjudications could arise if courts permitted both direct and [*314] indirect purchasers to sue defendants for the same overcharge; (2) the evidentiary complexities and uncertainties involved in ascertaining the portion of the overcharge that the direct purchasers had passed on to the various levels of indirect purchasers would place too great a burden on the courts; and (3) permitting direct and indirect purchasers to sue only for the amount of the overcharge they themselves absorbed and did not pass on would cause inefficient [95] enforcement of the antitrust laws by diluting the ultimate recovery and thus decreasing the direct purchasers' incentive to sue.

Howard Hess Dental Labs Inc. v. Dentsply Intern., Inc., 424 F.3d 363, 369-70 (3d Cir. 2005) (citing Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 730-35, 740-43).[45] Nevertheless, the Supreme Court acknowledged that its aversion to administering [42] The Panel agreed with this argument, noting that certain states' "categorical refus[al] to allow indirect purchasers to bring a price-fixing claim" was "not trivial" and represented "fundamental policy differences among the several states." Sullivan, 613 F.3d at 152, 148. The Panel concluded that these state interests were in effect "subordinated to De Beers's desire to resolve all indirect purchaser claims simultaneously" and "in a quest to clear the queue in court." Id. at 152 (citation & quotations omitted).

[43] The dissent concludes that approving class certification here endorses the enlargement of substantive rights because had some class members brought these claims individually in state court, they would "be immediately shown the exit." (Dissenting Op. at 30.) This is incorrect, for the state court would not automatically dismiss them without a motion from De Beers. More significantly, nothing would prevent De Beers from settling those claims in lieu of moving to [93] dismiss them, and doing so in that scenario would not be an enlargement of substantive rights.

In responding to this point, the dissent equates an objection to class certification with a motion to dismiss, but such treatment demonstrates the very flaw in its position. Class certification and motions to dismiss involve two distinct (and different) standards, and the former does not permit as extensive an inquiry into the merits as the latter does. (See Dissenting Op. at 30 n.21.)

[44] The dissent decries this position, contending that including Indirect Purchasers in the class who could not, on an individual basis, state a claim for recovery impermissibly modifies the rights of those Indirect Purchasers who could recover individually. In so asserting, the dissent assumes that the size of the settlement fund would be the same if the Indirect Purchasers who cannot recover individually were excluded from the class. Surely this cannot be the case, for the settlement amount to which De Beers has agreed must be based in large part on the number of potential class members and on securing global peace. Had those Indirect Purchasers who could not recover individually been excluded, we seriously doubt [94] that the Indirect Purchaser settlement fund would still be $272.5 million.

[45] Other Courts of Appeals have recognized a similar functional focus in the Supreme Court's decision. See, e.g., Freedom from Religion Found., Inc. v. Chao, 433 F.3d 989, 991 (7th Cir. 2006) ("An example of the prudential limitations on standing is the judge-made 'indirect purchaser' doctrine of antitrust law," which is premised on minimizing complicated litigation), rev'd on other grounds, Hein v. Freedom from Religion Found., Inc., 551 U.S. 587, 127 S. Ct. 2553, 168 L. Ed. 2d 424 (2007); County of Oakland v. City of Detroit, 866 F.2d 839, 852 (6th Cir. 1989) ("The question of whether a plaintiff has standing to sue under the antitrust laws depends largely on prudential considerations.").

indirect purchaser recoveries undoubtedly "denie[d] recovery to those indirect purchasers who may have been actually injured by antitrust violations." Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 746.[46]

Here, contrary to the dissent's and the objectors' argument, the District Court's certification order did not undermine these prudential considerations. De Beers's agreement to a specified recovery payment — and the interrelated removal of a need to ascertain and prove the amount of passed-on overcharges — marginalizes the first two Illinois Brick concerns for duplicative liability and complexity in ascertaining the passed-on overcharges. The third prudential concern is similarly inapposite since the Direct Purchaser Class pursued and approved a separate [97] settlement agreement and there is no indication that the Indirect Purchaser Settlement undermined "the direct purchasers' incentive to sue." Dentsply, 424 F.3d at 370. Indeed, the immediate relief offered by the instant settlement appears to offer the most "[ ]efficient enforcement of the antitrust laws," id, when compared to the highly uncertain result the plaintiffs would encounter by engaging in protracted litigation against a party with a long track record of avoiding the jurisdiction of courts in the United States. See generally Comment, The Diamond Cartel, 56 Yale L.J. 1404, 1411 (1947) (discussing De Beers's avoidance of effective antitrust prosecution in light of "the twin difficulties of obtaining jurisdiction over the foreign corporations and of retaining within the court's reach tangible assets sufficient to enforce a decree").

Accordingly, we reject the assertion that the District Court inappropriately subordinated state sovereignty in certifying the class.

c. Identification of Class Claims Pursuant to Rule 23(c)(1)(B)

Apart from our disagreement with the objectors' arguments regarding commonality and predominance, we similarly reject the view that the District Court's Order [98] in this case failed to satisfy all of [*315] Rule 23(c)(1)(B)'s substantive requirements.

As we have explicated, HN18[] Rule 23(c) provides that a certification order "must include (1) a readily discernible, clear, and precise statement of the parameters defining the class or classes to be certified, and (2) a readily discernible, clear, and complete list of the claims, issues or defenses to be treated on a class basis." Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 320-21 (citation & quotations omitted); see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(c)(1)(B) ("An order that certifies a class action must define the class and the class claims, issues, or defenses. . . ."). The District Court's Order "easily meets the requirements of Rule 23(c)(1)(B) with respect to the definition of the class itself." Wachtel ex rel. Jesse v. Guardian Life Ins. Co. of Am., 453 F.3d 179, 188 (3d Cir. 2006). The Court properly delineated the parameters of the Indirect Purchaser Class, defining class members as any purchasers of any diamond product in the United States except for those who purchased directly from De Beers or its competitors. (App'x 270.)

As to the second prong of the above test, the contention is raised that the Court's Order did not [99] "explicitly define which claims, issues, or defenses are to be treated on a class basis." Wachtel, 453 F.3d at 189. We disagree with this characterization, as the settlement posture of this class action makes our decision on this front particularly simple. As we noted in Wachtel, a "critical" purpose of Rule 23(c)(1)'s requirement of a "full and clear articulation of the litigation's contours at the time of class certification" was the "need [ ] to determine how the case will be tried" through presentation of "a 'trial plan' that describes the issues likely to be presented at trial and tests whether they are susceptible to class-wide proof." 453 F.3d at 186 (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(c)(1)(A) advisory committee's note) (quotations omitted). In the settlement context, however, this concern evaporates, "for the proposal is that there be no trial." Comm. Bank II, 622 F.3d at 291 (citing Amchem, 521 U.S. at 620). As such, we agree with the Seventh Circuit's sentiment that "[g]iven the settlement, no one need draw fine lines among [the various] theories of relief." Mexico Money, 267 F.3d at 747.

[46] States [96] on both sides of the indirect purchaser restriction have likewise appreciated the pragmatic origins of and purposes served by Illinois Brick. See, e.g., Lorix v. Crompton Corp., 736 N.W.2d 619, 624 (Minn. 2007) (noting that antitrust standing "has prudential limits based on remoteness of injury and complexity of proof); Comes v. Microsoft Corp., 646 N.W.2d 440, 449 (Iowa 2002) ("[T]he Illinois Brick court was wholly concerned with the complexity of litigation and the possibility of multiple liability."); Abbott Labs, Inc. v. Segura, 907 S.W.2d 503, 506-07 (Tex. 1995) (discussing the prudential policy concerns underlying Illinois Brick).

The District Court's Order identified six common legal or factual issues it reasonably found [100] to "predominate" over individual questions and susceptible to class treatment, (see App'x 276); the Court also expressly included in its Opinion a background section titled "Underlying Claims, Cases & Parties," which laid out in depth all the claims asserted in each individual suit to be resolved by the class settlement, (App'x 263-65). See also supra note 6. It is undisputed that the Settlement Agreement resolves and releases each and every one of these asserted claims and issues, obviating any need to "cobble together" some uncertain category of issues to be tried as a class. Wachtel, 453 F.3d at 189. HN19[] "[N]o particular format is necessary in order to meet the substantive requirement of [Rule 23(c)], and we will not set aside substantively conforming certification orders purely over matters of form." Id. at 188 n.10. The District Court's Opinion "facilitate[d] meaningful appellate review of [this] complex certification decision[ ]" by providing us with ample guidance as to the "contours" of the settlement." Id. at 186.[47]

[*316] Accordingly, we conclude that the District Court did not run afoul of the requirements of Rule 23(c)(1)(B) and properly certified the two classes of claims.

2. Injunctive Relief Pursuant to Rule 23(b)(2)

In addition to certifying the Direct and Indirect Purchaser Classes under Rule 23(b)(3), the District Court further certified the purchaser classes pursuant to Rule 23(b)(2) for the purpose of awarding injunctive relief under § 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 26.[48] (App'x 285.) Plaintiffs alleged that, in the absence of injunctive relief, De Beers's anticompetitive conduct would continue to cause the entire membership of all classes to pay artificially inflated prices. The objectors counter that class members lack antitrust standing to seek injunctive relief because they cannot demonstrate a significant threat of injury from an impending violation of the antitrust laws. In support, they point to expert reports submitted in 2008 for the targeted purpose of identifying a common methodology benchmark for calculating damages; these reports suggested that the market for rough diamonds became more competitive in the interim between mid-2006 and 2008, in concert [103] with De Beers's weakening position in the market.[49] In [47] We find additional support for our conclusion from the First Circuit's recent ruling in In re Pharmaceutical Industry Average Wholesale Price Litigation, 588 F.3d 24 (1st Cir. 2009). [101] There, the Court remarked that "Rule 23(c)(1)(B) was added . . . to help appellate courts reviewing an order better understand the district court's decision," and to allow "appellate courts, attorneys, and parties [to] proceed with more information and mutual understanding." Id. at 40 (citing Wachtel, 453 F.3d at 186-87). As a result, the Court upheld a district court's certification order that "plainly defined the class and the class claims, issues, and defenses in sufficient detail," "devoted many pages to the class's factual allegations against the defendant," "carefully analyzed the proposed class's suitability for certification, again explaining the issues common to the class," and also "discussed the state consumer protection statutes underlying the class's claims, noting differences among them." Id. Likewise here, the District Court clearly defined the class, listed six common claims and issues, devoted significant discussion to the factual allegations, analyzed the class's suitability for certification by explaining the predominantly common issues, and noted the differences among the various statutes implicated in the claims. As succinctly stated by our fellow Court of Appeals, [102] "[t]hat is enough." Id. at 41.

---

[48] 15 U.S.C. § 26 reads in pertinent part:

> HN20[] Any person, firm, corporation, or association shall be entitled to sue for and have injunctive relief, in any court of the United States having jurisdiction over the parties, against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust law . . . when and under the same conditions and principles as injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity.

[49] After evaluating the mentioned expert reports, the Panel agreed with the objectors that plaintiffs no longer faced "a significant threat of future antitrust harm in the absence of the injunction," and, therefore, lacked antitrust standing under § 16 of the Clayton Act. Sullivan, 613 F.3d at 157-58.

making this argument, the objectors reject the District Court's conclusion that De Beers's willful entry into the settlement removed the plaintiffs' burden to establish the likelihood of future injury. (See App'x 285.)

HN21[] In contrast to the damages provision of § 4 of the Clayton Act, "'Section 16 has been applied more expansively, both because its language is less restrictive than that of § 4 [104] . . . and because the injunctive remedy is a more flexible and adaptable tool for enforcing the antitrust laws than the damage remedy. . . .'"[50] [*317] McCarthy v. Recordex Serv., Inc., 80 F.3d 842, 856 (3d Cir. 1996) (quoting Schoenkopf v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 637 F.2d 205, 210 (3d Cir. 1980)). Because actions seeking injunctive relief under § 16 do "not present the countervailing considerations — such as the risk of duplicative or ruinous recoveries and the spectre of a trial burdened with complex and conjectural economic analyses," plaintiffs need not "satisfy the direct purchaser requirement as a condition of seeking injunctive relief." In re Warfarin Sodium Antitrust Litig., 214 F.3d 395, 400 (3d Cir. 2000) (Warfarin I) (quoting Mid-West Paper Prods Co. v. Continental Group, Inc., 596 F.2d 573, 594 (3d Cir. 1979)) (quotations omitted). Instead, to establish the need for injunctive relief, plaintiffs must generally demonstrate three uncomplicated prerequisites: "a threat of loss"; that the injury in question "is of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent"; and "a significant threat of injury from a violation of the antitrust laws." Id. at 399 (citations & quotations [105] omitted; alterations added).

Despite this burden, it is well established that HN23[] "parties to a suit have the right to agree to anything they please in reference to the subject matter of their litigation, and the court, when applied to, will ordinarily give effect to their agreement, if it comes within the general scope of the case made by the pleadings." Sansom Comm. by Cook v. Lynn, 735 F.2d 1535, 1548 (3d Cir. 1984) (quoting Pac. R.R. v. Ketchum, 101 U.S. 289, 297, 25 L. Ed. 932 (1879) (quotations & alterations omitted)). In turn, "[a]s the Supreme Court has recognized, a district court may 'provide broader relief in an action that is resolved before trial than the court could have awarded after a trial.'" In re "Agent Orange" Prod. Liability Litig., 818 F.2d 179, 185 (2d Cir. 1987) [106] (quoting Local No. 93, Int'l Assoc. of Firefighters v. City of Cleveland, 478 U.S. 501, 525, 106 S. Ct. 3063, 92 L. Ed. 2d 405 (1986) (alterations omitted). Accordingly, district courts are afforded wide discretion to give effect to joint compromises that timely advance the interests of the parties without wasteful litigation.[51] In exercising this discretion, the District Court here could reasonably approve a mutually agreed-upon stipulation enjoining conduct within the Court's jurisdiction regardless of whether the plaintiffs could have received identical relief in a contested suit by satisfying each of the aforementioned requirements at trial.

Yet because of the class nature of the instant [107] suit, the District Court's approval of the stipulated injunction borne out of a class settlement did need to satisfy an additional test. Specifically, HN24[] Rule 23(b)(2) authorizes class certification only when "the party opposing the class has acted or refused to act on grounds generally applicable to the class, thereby making appropriate final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief with respect to the class as a whole." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2).[52] Important to the analysis "is [*318] that the relief

[50] Section 16 provides in pertinent part:

> HN22[] Any person, firm, corporation, or association shall be entitled to sue for and have injunctive relief, in any court of the United States having jurisdiction over the parties, against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws, . . . when and under the same conditions and principles as injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity.

15 U.S.C. § 26.

[51] Unsurprisingly, a paucity of case law addresses the issue of whether parties to a lawsuit may consent to the issuance of an injunction that is agreeable to all parties without a court's asking whether the prerequisites of Rule 23(b)(2) have been satisfied. This dearth of precedent is to be expected since it would be highly illogical for a defendant to dispute an injunction to which it in fact agreed, and for a plaintiff beneficiary to object to an injunction entered for its benefit. Curiously, the latter situation is presented here.

[52] "This rule applies when the putative class seeks injunctive or declaratory relief, and 'does not extend to cases in which [108] the appropriate final relief relates exclusively or predominantly to money damages,'" as with a certification pursuant to sought . . . should benefit the entire class," and "the putative class [must] 'demonstrate that the interests of the class members are so like those of the individual representatives that injustice will not result from their being bound by such judgment in the subsequent application of principles of res judicata.'" Baby Neal for and by Kanter v. Casey, 43 F.3d 48, 59 (3d Cir. 1994) (quoting Hassine, 846 F.2d at 179). "[I]njunctive actions, seeking to define the relationship between the defendant and the 'world at large,' will usually satisfy the requirement." Id.

Here, we have no difficulty concluding that Rule 23(b)(2)'s requirement that De Beers's alleged conduct be "generally applicable to the class" was satisfied. Indeed, much of our discussion of "predominance" in the previous section of this Opinion specifically emphasized the common elements of the complained of conduct that are equally applicable to "the class as a whole." See supra. As the District Court discussed, the plaintiffs alleged that De Beers's anticompetitive behavior "caused the entire membership of all classes to pay artificially inflated prices," and that, in the absence of injunctive relief, all classes would continue to pay artificial premiums. (App'x 285.) These claims demonstrate shared interests between the members of the putative class, and, these allegations, if proven, would support injunctive relief respecting the class as a whole. Likewise, the parties' mutual decision to settle claims "on grounds generally applicable [109] to the class" complies with the text of Rule 23(b)(2) and should be respected.

In reaching this decision, we also reject the objectors' request that we engage in fact-finding as to whether all class members could show an imminent threat of prospective antitrust injury. Due to the settlement posture of this case, which controls, we need not concern ourselves with this issue. Moreover, the District Court never addressed the question of whether changes in the market negatively affected De Beers's ability to extract higher rents from diamond sightholders and subsequent purchasers.[53] Without the benefit of the [*319] District Court's factual findings on the matter in any event, "[w]e deem it inappropriate to treat this question without any evidence having been presented on [it] and without the benefit of the findings and opinion of the district judge. Merola v. Atl. Richfield Co., 515 F.2d 165, 173 (3d Cir. 1975).

At bottom, we hold that the District Court acted within its discretion in accepting De Beers's stipulation to the injunctive relief.

B. Fairness of the Class Action Settlement & the Plan of Allocation

Rule 23(b)(3). Beck v. Maximus, Inc., 457 F.3d 291, 301 (3d Cir. 2006) (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2) advisory committee's note).

[53] The objectors urge, based on the damages methodology expert reports, that De Beers's market share fell to approximately 46% in 2006, and, therefore, posed little continuing threat of future antitrust harm. (Quinn Br. 19.) Although the experts mentioned that De Beers lost its dominant [110] share of an increasingly competitive market, the experts never opined — as the objectors contend — that plaintiffs face no significant threat of future antitrust harm. Were we to conduct our own independent analysis, we might draw a very different conclusion as to De Beers's asserted ability to inflict future harm: we might decide that De Beers's ongoing leadership position — considering its purported 46% market share in the diamond market — afforded it ample opportunity to influence diamond prices, posing an ongoing and significant threat of antitrust injury. See generally United States v. Continental Can Co., 378 U.S. 441, 459, 84 S. Ct. 1738, 12 L. Ed. 2d 953 (1964) (discussing defendant's "dominant position" based upon a 43%-46% market share in a highly concentrated industry). The objectors place far too much stock in De Beers's purported market share, ignoring one of the basic tenets in assessing market power: "Obviously no magic inheres in numbers; the relative effect of percentage command of a market varies with the setting in which that factor is placed." Times-Picayune Pub. Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 612, 73 S. Ct. 872, 97 L. Ed. 1277 (1953).

Curiously, the objectors and the Panel also rejected the plaintiffs' contention that the [111] injunction entered by the District Court in 2006 — an injunction directly tailored to fostering competition — played any role in the increasingly competitive market. Sullivan, 613 F.3d at 157. The Panel opined that although the mid-2006 competitive increases "roughly coincided with the District Court's issuance of the injunction," this coincidence did not support the reasonable deduction that the injunction "played a meaningful role in producing those competitive gains." Id. at 157-58. An equally logical inference would be that increased competition approximating the issuance of the injunction evidenced the efficacy of the relief. That said, we will abstain from extrapolating broad legal conclusions of market competitiveness from data narrowly focused on damages methodology.

Apart from contesting the certification of the settlement class, the objectors raise two other arguments as to the fairness and adequacy of the proposed settlement. First, they quarrel with the District Court's approval [112] of the settlement as a whole under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(e)'s requirement that the settlement be "fair, reasonable, and adequate." (See Bagolie Br. at 18-28.) Second, the objectors dispute the fairness and adequacy of the settlement's plan of allocation for a portion of the settlement. Specifically, they urge that the proposed Indirect Purchaser Settlement distribution is "patently unfair" and presents "an intra-class conflict of interest that renders Class Counsel, as well as the class representative, inadequate." (See Murray Consol. Br. at 13; Quinn Br. at 63-64; Petrus Br. at 12-13.) We address each objection in order.

1. Approval of the Settlement

HN25[] Before approving a class settlement agreement, a district court must find that the requirements for class certification under Rule 23(a) and (b) are met, and must separately "determine that the settlement is fair to the class under [Rule] 23(e)." Ins. Broker., 579 F.3d at 257. Rule 23(e) provides that a proposed settlement may only be approved "after a hearing and on finding that it is fair, reasonable, and adequate." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(e)(2). In this process, "trial judges bear the important responsibility of protecting absent [113] class members," and must be "assur[ed] that the settlement represents adequate compensation for the release of the class claims." Pet Food, 629 F.3d at 349 (citation & quotations omitted); see also Ehrheart, 609 F.3d at 593 (stressing that "[t]he purpose of Rule 23(e) is to protect the unnamed members of the class," and that a "district court acts as a fiduciary" for absent class members) (citing Warfarin, 391 F.3d at 534). "[W]here settlement negotiations precede class certification, and approval for settlement and certification are sought simultaneously, district courts should be even 'more scrupulous than usual' when examining the fairness of the proposed settlement." Warfarin, 391 F.3d at 534 (quoting GM Truck, 55 F.3d at 805).

HN26[] In assessing the fairness of a proposed settlement, we have articulated nine well-established primary factors for a district court to consider in conducting its inquiry:

> (1) the complexity, expense and likely duration of the litigation; (2) the reaction of the class to the settlement; (3) the stage of the proceedings and the amount of discovery completed; (4) the [*320] risks of establishing liability; (5) the risks of establishing damages; (6) the risks of maintaining [114] the class action through the trial; (7) the ability of the defendants to withstand a greater judgment; (8) the range of reasonableness of the settlement fund in light of the best possible recovery; [and] (9) the range of reasonableness of the settlement fund to a possible recovery in light of all the attendant risks of litigation.

Pet Food, 629 F.3d at 350 (quoting Girsh v. Jepson, 521 F.2d 153, 157 (3d Cir. 1975)). (internal quotation marks and alterations omitted).

Furthermore, HN27[] a district court may consider several other factors "illustrative of additional inquiries that in many instances will be useful for a thoroughgoing analysis of a settlement's terms," id.:

> [T]he maturity of the underlying substantive issues, as measured by experience in adjudicating individual actions, the development of scientific knowledge, the extent of discovery on the merits, and other factors that bear on the ability to assess the probable outcome of a trial on the merits of liability and individual damages; the existence and probable outcome of claims by other classes and subclasses; the comparison between the results achieved by the settlement for individual class or subclass members and the results achieved—or [115] likely to be achieved—for other claimants; whether class or subclass members are accorded the right to opt out of the settlement; whether any provisions for attorneys' fees are reasonable; and whether the procedure for processing individual claims under the settlement is fair and reasonable.

Id. (quoting Prudential, 148 F.3d at 323). The "settling parties bear the burden of proving that the Girsh factors weigh in favor of approval of the settlement" throughout this analysis.[54] Id. (citation omitted). "Because of the district court's proximity to the parties and to the nuances of the litigation, we accord great weight to the court's factual findings" in conducting the fairness inquiry. Prudential, 148 F.3d at 317.

The District Court in this instance engaged in a thorough review of the Girsh factors, holding that the relevant considerations on balance weighed in favor of a finding of fairness under Rule 23(e). We conclude that the Court did not abuse its discretion in finding the settlement to be fair, reasonable, and adequate.

a. Complexity, Expense, and Likely Duration of the Litigation

HN28[] The first Girsh factor "captures the probable costs, in both time and money, of continued litigation." Warfarin, 391 F.3d at 536 (citation omitted). The District Court found that this litigation "would have been difficult, as multiple parties, multiple claims, extensive jurisdictional problems, and complicated discovery would be involved." (App'x 289.) The Court further discussed the likelihood of extensive motion practice as to jurisdiction, the lifting of default judgments, statute of limitations issues, and the concern for protecting [*321] foreign litigants in United States courts. (Id. 289-90.)

We agree with the District Court's conclusion that [117] litigation of the numerous legal and factual issues discussed would have inevitably contributed to the expense and duration of the proceedings. Faced with the uncertainty arising from the existing defaults and De Beers's ongoing denial of personal jurisdiction, the settlement provided substantial and immediate relief to the class without further expense. Moreover, extended motion practice "would not only further prolong the litigation but also reduce the value of any recovery to the class." Warfarin, 391 F.3d at 536. Accordingly, this first factor favors the settlement.

b. The Reaction of the Class to the Settlement

HN29[] The second Girsh factor "attempts to gauge whether members of the class support the settlement," by considering the number of objectors and opt-outs and the substance of any objections. Prudential, 148 F.3d at 318. The District Court determined that the reaction of the class was overwhelmingly positive,[55] and noted that all twenty of the objections pertained to the Indirect Purchaser Class, with all but four objections relating to the consumer subclass, which consists of between 67 and 117 million members. (App'x 290-91.) We agree with the District Court's observation that [118] the minimal number of objections and requests for exclusion are consistent with class settlements we have previously approved, and we are satisfied that the District Court acted within its discretion in finding this factor to favor settlement.

[54] We have separately observed that "an initial presumption of fairness" may apply when reviewing a proposed settlement where: "(1) the settlement negotiations occurred at arm's length; (2) there was sufficient discovery; (3) the proponents of the settlement are experienced in similar litigation; and (4) only a small fraction of the class objected." Warfarin, 391 F.3d at 535 (quoting In re Cendant Corp. Litig., 264 F.3d 201, 232 (3d Cir. 2001) ("Cendant"). The District Court [116] did not consider or rely upon this presumption in assessing fairness. Because we find no error in the Court's thorough analysis, we will likewise disregard this presumption.

[55] The Court noted that, as of March 31, 2008, it had received 433,891 claims forms from all classes — nine from members of the Direct Purchaser Class and 433,882 from the Indirect Purchaser Class, with 431,380 from the Consumer Subclass and 2,502 from the Reseller Subclass. (App'x 291.) The Court also stated that five requests for exclusion had been received from the Direct Purchaser Class and 139 from the Indirect Purchaser Class (66 from the Reseller Subclass and 69 from the Consumer Subclass). (Id.) The Court received no objections from any direct purchasers and also noted that notice was provided to the United States Attorney General and the Attorney Generals of all fifty states, with none seeking to participate in the proceedings. (Id. 290-291, 1449-1450.)

c. The Stage of the Proceedings and the Amount of Discovery Completed

HN30[] The third Girsh factor "captures the degree of case development that class counsel had accomplished prior to settlement," [119] and allows the court to "determine whether counsel had an adequate appreciation of the merits of the case before negotiating." Warfarin, 391 F.3d at 537 (citation, quotations & alterations omitted). The District Court thoroughly discussed the development of this case prior to settlement, highlighting the extensive factual discovery of industry participants, consumers, and experts in the field; the retention of economic experts; the review of publicly available information; the experiences of counsel who had previously sued De Beers for price-fixing; and the analysis of proceedings relating to De Beers's other contractual entanglements in the field. (App'x 292.) The Court further observed that several of the individual suits had been in litigation for years before negotiation of the settlement, and emphasized that classes had been certified in several individual suits after significant factual investigation and legal development. (Id.) The Court committed no error in concluding that counsel adequately appreciated the merits of the case prior to reaching a settlement, and we agree that this factor favors approval of the settlement.

[*322] d. The Risks of Establishing Liability

HN31[] The fourth Girsh [120] factor "examine[s] what the potential rewards (or downside) of litigation might have been had class counsel decided to litigate the claims rather than settle them." Cendant, 264 F.3d at 237. As already highlighted, the District Court discussed at length the various difficulties plaintiffs would likely encounter in attempting to collect on default judgments in foreign jurisdictions, observing that the Court's monetary judgments would likely be perceived as "beyond its authority" and "effectively void." (App'x 294-95.) The objectors' misguided contention that no risk of establishing liability exists entirely disregards the potential drawbacks of litigating and attempting to collect in foreign jurisdictions, including the extensive motion practice and expense such an uncertain tactic would entail. We are also influenced by De Beers's track record of rejecting United States jurisdiction over its legal affairs and the fact that De Beers has continued to deny any wrongdoing even in reaching a settlement agreement in this matter. Accordingly, we discern no error in the District Court's conclusion that this factor favors settlement.

e. The Risks of Establishing Damages

HN32[] As with the fourth Girsh [121] factor, "this inquiry attempts to measure the expected value of litigating the action rather than settling it at the current time." Cendant, 264 F.3d at 238-39 (citation & quotations omitted). The District Court found that entry of a default judgment against De Beers would prompt the court to "conduct such hearings or order such references as it deems necessary and proper" to ascertain the amount of damages since the damages had not presently been established with certainty. (App'x 296 (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 55(b)).) The expert reports submitted by the various parties indicated that these proceedings would likely entail a "battle of the experts," with each side presenting its figures and defenses to the other side's proposals. (Id. 297.) Because of the "uncertainty attendant to such a battle," the District Court determined this factor to weigh in support of settlement, (id.), and the objectors do not contest this finding on appeal. Accordingly, we find no flaw in the District Court's decision that the additional "risk in establishing damages" counsels in favor of approval of the settlement. Cendant, 264 F.3d at 239.

f. The Risks of Maintaining the Class Action Through Trial

HN33[] The sixth [122] Girsh factor "measures the likelihood of obtaining and keeping a class certification if the action were to proceed to trial" in light of the fact that "the prospects for obtaining certification have a great impact on the range of recovery one can expect to reap from the class action." Warfarin, 391 F.3d at 537 (internal quotations & citation omitted). Class certification is tenuous, as a "district court retains the authority to decertify or modify a class at any time during the litigation if it proves to be unmanageable." Id. (citation omitted). As we have discussed supra, although the size and variety of issues implicated in this nationwide class action do not present an obstacle to certification of a settlement class, "there is a significant risk that such a class would create intractable management problems if it were to become a litigation class, and therefore be decertified." Id. Accordingly, we agree with the District Court that the considerable risk of maintaining the class action through trial weighed in favor of settlement.[56]

[*323] g. Ability of Defendants to Withstand a Greater Judgment

HN34[] The seventh Girsh factor considers "whether the defendants could withstand a judgment for an amount significantly greater than the settlement." Warfarin, 391 F.3d at 537-58 (citation, quotations, & alteration omitted). The District Court observed that "little fact-finding has been done on this issue," and noted that the parties did not dispute De Beers's ability to withstand a greater judgment. (App'x 298-99.) Even so, the Court found this factor to neither favor nor disfavor the proposed settlement because "it [124] would be extremely difficult, if not impossible, to collect a judgment from De Beers." (Id.) The objectors contend that the District Court made insufficient findings as to De Beers's market capitalization, which suggested an ability to withstand a much higher judgment, and, therefore, should have weighed this factor against the settlement. (Bagolie Br. at 26-27).

HN35[] In comparing the value of settlement versus trial, we must be careful to judge the fairness factors "against the realistic, rather than theoretical, potential for recovery after trial." In re Global Crossing Sec. & ERISA Litig., 225 F.R.D. 436, 461 (S.D.N.Y. 2004). In this regard, a finding that an immediate settlement is preferable to the high unlikelihood of collecting a theoretical judgment against De Beers appears entirely reasonable. Moreover, a defendant's ability to withstand a much higher judgment does not necessarily "mean that it is obligated to pay any more than what the [class members] are entitled to under the theories of liability that existed at the time the settlement was reached." Warfarin, 391 F.3d at 538. That said, "[t]he proponents of a settlement bear the burden of proving that the Girsh factors weigh [125] in favor of approval," and we have previously found that defendants' speculative ability to pay "substantially more than they did under the Settlement" cut against approval, "albeit only moderately." Cendant, 264 F.3d at 241.

At bottom, we agree that, HN36[] "in any class action against a large corporation, the defendant entity is likely to be able to withstand a more substantial judgment, and, against the weight of the remaining factors, this fact alone does not undermine the reasonableness of the instant settlement." Weber v. Gov't Empl. Ins. Co., 262 F.R.D. 431, 447 (D.N.J. 2009). As such, we find no error in the District Court's conclusion that De Beers's ability to withstand a greater judgment does not necessarily undermine the fairness of the settlement.

h. The Range of Reasonableness of the Settlement in Light of the Best Possible Recovery and All Attendant Risks of Litigation

HN37[] The final two Girsh factors consider "whether the settlement represents a good value for a weak case or a poor value for a strong case." Warfarin, 391 F.3d at 538. The reasonableness of a proposed settlement is assessed by comparing "the present value of the damages plaintiffs would likely recover if successful [*324] [126] [at trial], appropriately discounted for the risk of not prevailing . . . with the amount of the proposed settlement." Prudential, 148 F.3d at 322. Notably, in conducting the analysis, the court must "guard against demanding too large a settlement based on its view of the merits of the litigation; after all, settlement is a compromise, a yielding of the highest hopes in exchange for certainty and resolution." GM Truck, 55 F.3d at 806 (citations omitted).

[56] The objectors aver that drawing a distinction between settlement and litigation classes "would create two standards for class certification" although [123] "the federal rules do not provide for such a difference." (Bagolie Br. at 25.) This argument patently disregards our clear and consistent precedent on the subject. While the standards for class certification are the same for both settlement and litigation classes, certification in the former context need not consider "whether the case, if tried, would present intractable management problems, for the proposal is that there be no trial." Comm. Bank II, 622 F.3d at 291 (citing Amchem, 521 U.S. at 620). This added risk is of utmost significance in determining whether a settlement would best serve the interests of the class.

Applying this framework, the District Court described the methodology utilized by the Indirect Purchaser Consumer Subclass's expert, who theorized that the average overcharge for diamond sales was 4.85% and the total worldwide overcharge equalled $4.99 billion; the United States consumes approximately 50% of the diamonds and diamond jewelry worldwide, rendering the overcharge to the U.S. market equal to $2.49 billion. (App'x 300.) Accordingly, the proposed $272.5 million Indirect Purchaser Settlement Fund represented 10.93% of this overcharge. (Id.) The expert further posited that although the Direct Purchaser Class recovery could not be precisely quantified in the absence of data as to the exact amount of non-De Beers sales to Direct [127] Purchasers, the value could reasonably be estimated. Placing the total value of United States imports of rough diamonds during the Direct Purchaser Class Period at $4.3 billion, the expert estimated that at least 46% — or approximately $2 billion — of the rough diamond sales were excluded sales; applying the 4.85 weighted overcharge percentage to that $2 billion, the expert theorized that the overcharge percentage was near $100 million. (Id.) As such, the proposed $22.5 million recovery represented more than 20% of the single damages. (Id.) The District Court found this estimate reasonable and the objectors do not protest this methodology.

Instead, the objectors contend that the District Court abused its discretion in overvaluing the settlement by considering only estimated single damages in its "best possible recovery" inquiry, rather than comparing the settlement amount to the treble damages that are an automatic component of antitrust damages recovery in many jurisdictions. (Bagolie Br. 28, 32-43.) Although the objectors correctly note that the District Court compared the settlement recovery to single damages in evaluating the propriety of the settlement's monetary component, (App'x [128] 301), we do not agree with the objectors that this methodology constituted legal error.

Some disagreement exists in the case law as to whether the reasonableness of a settlement amount should be evaluated by comparison to the potential single damages of a class or the trebled damages authorized in certain jurisdictions. Compare County of Suffolk v. Long Island Lighting Co., 907 F.2d 1295, 1324 (2d Cir. 1990) ("[T]he district judge correctly recognized that it is inappropriate to measure the adequacy of a settlement amount by comparing to a trebled base recovery figure."), Carnegie v. Household Intern., Inc., 445 F. Supp. 2d 1032, 1035 (N.D. Ill. 2006) ("[N]umerous courts have held that in determining a settlement value, the potential for treble damages should not be taken into account."), and Lorazepam & Clorazepate Antitrust Litig., 205 F.R.D. 369, 376 (D.D.C. 2002) ("[T]he standard for evaluating settlement involves a comparison of the settlement amount with the estimated single damages."), with *In re Auction Houses Antitrust Litig., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1713, 2001 WL 170792, at 7 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 22, 2001) ("[T]here are few perceptible justifications of the single damages standard for the determination of the [129] fairness of antitrust class actions," which "places the settlement court, [acting] as a fiduciary for the absent class members, in [*325] a position in which it may be forced to approve a settlement that no non-representative plaintiffs would accept"), and In re Compact Disc Minimum Advertised Price Antitrust Litig., 216 F.R.D 197, 210 n.30 (D. Me. 2003) ("[I]f a settlement reflects a potential damage recovery, it should logically reflect the other parts of that recovery (trebling and attorneys' fees) that the statute awards automatically.").

That said, "we know of no authority that requires a district court to assess the fairness of a settlement in light of the potential for trebled damages."[57] Comm. Bank II, 622 F.3d at 312 (emphasis in original); see also Rodriguez v. West Publishing Corp., 563 F.3d 948, 964-65 (9th Cir. 2009) ("We have never precluded courts from comparing the settlement amount to both single and treble damages. By the same token, we do not require them to do so in all cases."). Rather, HN38[] "courts generally determine fairness of an antitrust class action settlement based on how it compensates the class for past injuries, without giving much, if any, consideration to treble [130] damages."[58] Rodriguez, 563 F.3d at 964; see also City of Detroit v. Grinnell Corp., 495 F.2d 448, 458-59

57 Peculiarly, the objectors at once argue "that treble damages could be considered in assessing" fairness while also presuming without cause that a fairness inquiry "necessarily involves consideration of treble damages." (Bagolie Br. 38-39 (emphasis added).)

(2d Cir. 1974) ("[T]he vast majority of courts which have approved settlements . . . have given their approval . . . based on an estimate of single damages only."), overruled on other grounds as recognized by U.S. Football League v. Nat'l Football League, 887 F.2d 408, 415-16 (2d Cir. 1989). Without delving into the debate over whether single or treble damages are the proper variable of comparison, we cannot label the District Court's adherence to the commonly accepted procedure for assessing the fairness, adequacy, and reasonableness of a settlement an abuse of discretion.[59] Moreover, many of the state law claims asserted would not provide for treble damages recovery.

Finding no abuse in the District Court's conclusion that the proposed settlement offered a reasonable recovery, particularly [*326] "when accounting for the additional relief provided by the injunction," (App'x 301), we are also not persuaded that the Court erred in assessing the reasonableness of the settlement in light of all of the attendant risks of litigation. Girsh, 521 F.2d at 157. The District Court found the "magnitude of the potential risks in litigation, including likely profound difficulties enforcing United States default judgments in the relevant foreign countries, establishing personal jurisdiction, and establishing liability," to [133] compare unfavorably to the recovery offered by the proposed settlement. (App'x 301-02.) Based on this assessment, we find the District Court's conclusion that these final factors weigh in favor of the settlement compelling.

On balance, we conclude that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in finding the Settlement as a whole fair, adequate, and reasonable.

2. Plan of Allocation

The objectors next aver that the previously discussed differences in state law mandate a differential allocation in the percentage of recovery within the Indirect Purchaser Consumer Settlement Fund, which should "account for the[ ] varying strengths and weaknesses" of consumer claims as informed by the applicable state law treatments of indirect purchaser causes of action. (Murray Br. at 15-18.) Accordingly, they contend that the District Court should utilize subclasses in accounting for the varied rights to recovery caused by Illinois Brick disparities in state laws. (Quinn Answer to Pet. for Reh'g En Banc at 11.)

HN40[] A district court's "principal obligation" in approving a plan of allocation "is simply to ensure that the fund distribution is fair and reasonable as to all participants in the fund." Walsh v. Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co., Inc., 726 F.2d 956, 964 (3d Cir. 1983). [134] In prior instances where objectors challenged the fairness of intra-class allocation of settlement funds, we have explained that "where a class is found to include subclasses divergent in interest," the use of subclasses may be appropriate and "is designed to prevent conflicts of interest in class representation." Ins. Broker., 579 F.3d at 271. We have likewise noted the potential drawbacks of subclassing, including the potential "'Balkanization' of the class action," and creation of "a huge obstacle to settlement if each [58] We agree with our fellow Court of Appeals that, HN39[] in reaching a private consensual settlement, the "parties, counsel, mediators, and district judges naturally arrive [131] at a reasonable range for settlement by considering the likelihood of a plaintiffs' or defense verdict, the potential recovery, and the chances of obtaining it, discounted to present value." Rodriguez, 563 F.3d at 965. Our principal role in this engagement "is to protect the unnamed members of the class." Ehrheart, 609 F.3d at 593. As such, we must remain cognizant that our "'intrusion upon what is otherwise a private consensual agreement negotiated between the parties to a lawsuit must be limited to the extent necessary to reach a reasoned judgment that the agreement is not the product of fraud or overreaching by, or collusion between, the negotiating parties.'" Rodriguez, 563 F.3d at 965 (quoting Hanlon v. Chrysler Corp., 150 F.3d 1011, 1027 (9th Cir. 1998)); see also GM Truck, 55 F.3d at 805 (same). No assertion of collusion, fraud, or overreaching is advanced or evidenced in the settlement at issue here.

[59] The objectors also allege legal error in the District Court's estimate of the "best possible recovery" for the Indirect Purchaser Class by reference to the class as a whole, rather than by making separate findings as to estimated damages for the Consumer and Reseller subclasses. [132] (Bagolie Br. at 27.) This argument falls short. The Special Master — whose findings were accepted by the District Court — thoroughly considered several expert reports and econometric models submitted by various counsel discussing the proper share of damages within the Indirect Purchaser class. The Special Master established an appropriate distribution of the Indirect Purchaser fund based upon estimated damages to both the Consumer and Reseller subclasses, and the objectors have not demonstrated the inaccuracy of this analysis. (See App'x 1473-1508.)

subclass has an incentive to hold out for more money." Id. (quoting In re Cendant Corp. Sec. Litig., 404 F.3d 173, 202 (3d Cir. 2005) ("Cendant Sec.")). We accord "substantial deference to district courts with respect to their resolution of this issue" because such decisions "require[] a balancing of costs and benefits that can best be performed by a district judge." Ins. Broker., 579 F.3d at 271. "Where the district court has declined to certify a subclass" and treats all class members as falling within a single class for purposes of a fund allocation, "we will ordinarily defer to its decision unless it constituted an abuse of discretion." Id. (quoting Cendant Sec., 404 F.3d at 202) [135] (quotations & alterations omitted).

In Insurance Brokerage, the objectors asserted that the district court abused its discretion in failing to require the establishment of subclasses where "the increased recovery of one sub-class was achieved at the expense of another subclass's diminished recovery." Id. at 270. There, the plan of allocation tied reimbursement "to the extent of damages incurred on certain policies of insurance," and was "allocated in such a way that policyholders who likely incurred the most damage are entitled to a larger proportion of the recovery than those whose injuries were less severe." Id. at 272-73. Although we observed that the proposed sub [*327] classes "ha[d] some appeal" in remedying an unequal division of the settlement fund, we deferred to the district court's thorough explanation that the objectors had failed to evidence "divergent or antagonistic interests between the three groups," and had not established that "these groups have claims of varying merit." Id. at 272 (citation & quotations omitted). Indeed, despite the factual disparities in the type of insurance at issue, the district court had highlighted that "all of the class members shared a unified interest [136] in establishing [] liability for engaging in anticompetitive conduct which increased the cost of premium for all policyholders," undermining the showing of divergent interests. Id. at 273. We further noted that the plan of allocation "was carefully devised to ensure a fair distribution of the settlement fund," and "merely created a structure for ensuring that reimbursement [was] tied to the extent of damages incurred." Id. at 272. Accordingly, we found the settlement allocation fair and within the district court's discretion. Id.

We reached a different conclusion in Pet Food. 629 F.3d at 353. There, the district court carefully examined the fairness of the total settlement fund, but did not discuss whether an allocation of the fund to a sub-segment of claims — namely, to consumers who had received refunds outside of the settlement — was inadequate and rendered the settlement unfair and unreasonable to those who had received nothing on account of their claims. 629 F.3d at 353 (noting that although "we do not doubt the able District Court properly determined that the fund was a fair and adequate settlement of all the claims advanced by plaintiffs in this case[,] . . . [w]e are unable [137] to determine whether the $250,000 allocation was a fair and adequate settlement of the Purchase Claims"). There, we decided that the district court lacked sufficient information to decide whether the allocation to certain claimants was fair, and, thus, we remanded for further proceedings. Id. at 356.

Like the progressive settlement contemplated in Insurance Brokerage, the settlement at issue here provides for a pro rata distribution to all class members, and does not distinguish based upon any variables, such as the applicable state law of claimants' states of residence or location of purchase. While the District Court here did not specifically evaluate the pro rata allocation through the fairness lens, it did consider the differential allocation question in conducting the predominance analysis, noting the imprecision inherent in weighing class member claims "based on the relative strength of different state law claims." (App'x 279.) The District Court further noted in its Rule 23(a) analysis that the various "individual classes were represented by separate counsel during settlement negotiations, allowing for 'adequate structural protections to assure that differently situated plaintiffs [138] negotiate for their own unique interests.'" (App'x 220 (quoting Warfarin, 391 F.3d at 533).) Moreover, the Court observed that there were no intra-class conflicts since all putative members experienced injury caused by De Beers, all sought recovery for overpayment caused by allegedly anticompetitive behavior, and all shared common interests in establishing damages and injunctive relief. (Id. at 220-21.)

It may be entirely reasonable to apply the same damages calculation to claimants from all states because, as the district court in Warfarin observed, "[i]t is purely speculative that claimants from indirect purchaser states could anticipate a greater recovery than claimants from other states." In re Warfarin Sodium Antitrust Litig., 212 F.R.D. 231, 260 (D. Del. 2002); see also Cendant, 264 F.3d at 250 (given [*328] the "speculative" nature of such an inquiry, differences in the liability standards between § 11 and § 10(b) securities claims did not warrant differential plan of allocation). And only by engaging in the type of fact-intensive merits and choice-of-law analyses that we have rejected could a district court attempt to assay the "varying strengths and weaknesses" of asserted state claims. [139] (See Murray Br. at 15-18.) We can find no support in our case law for differentiating within a class based on the strength or weakness of the theories of recovery. Accordingly, we decline to require such an analysis.

Moreover, it is noteworthy that each putative class member suffered the same alleged injury as a result of De Beers's anticompetitive conduct, irrespective of the vagaries of applicable state laws. Recognizing this, the plan of allocation here "adjust[s] diamond purchases to a common measure," allowing an "apples to apples" comparison "of the relative amount of damages suffered by various claimants within the classes and subclasses and permits distribution pro rata based on the relative amounts of damages suffered." (App'x 1530.) HN41[] Courts "generally consider plans of allocation that reimburse class members based on the type and extent of their injuries to be reasonable," In re Corel Corp. Inc. Sec. Litig., 293 F. Supp. 2d 484, 493 (E.D. Pa. 2003), and we are mindful that "district courts have broad supervisory powers over the administration of class action settlements to allocate the proceeds among the claiming class members equitably," McCoy v. Health Net, Inc., 569 F. Supp. 2d 448, 469 (D.N.J. 2008). [140] The record here confirms that the District Court carefully considered expert advice in accepting the plan of allocation, and "[t]his kind of decision is intensely fact-based, falling within the purview of the District Court's decision." Cendant, 264 F.3d at 254. In light of the foregoing analysis, we cannot conclude that the District Court abused its discretion in accepting the carefully negotiated plan of allocation.

Lastly, the objectors contend that the settlement's minimum claim payment requirement of $10 provides inadequate settlement relief, as it will eliminate the rights of many class members without providing any compensation. (Petrus/Giddings Br. at 12.) They urge that a minimum payment provision contradicts the purpose of the class action mechanism to provide recovery even where the amount is "paltry." (Id. at 16 (quoting Yang v. Odom, 392 F.3d 97, 106 (3d Cir. 2004)).) We disagree and find no abuse in the District Court's decision to approve the minimum claim payment threshold.

As other courts have observed, "de minimis thresholds for payable claims are beneficial to the class as a whole since they save the settlement fund from being depleted by the administrative costs associated [141] with claims unlikely to exceed those costs and courts have frequently approved such thresholds, often at $10." *In re Gilat Satellite Networks, Ltd., No. CV-02-1510, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29062, 2007 WL 1191048, at 9 (E.D.N.Y. Apr. 19, 2007); see, e.g., In re Global Crossing Sec. & ERISA Litig., 225 F.R.D. 436, 463 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) (noting that the minimum recovery requirement is a common procedure that addresses "the undeniable fact that claims-processing costs money, which comes out of the settlement fund"); Mehling v. New York Life Ins. Co., 248 F.R.D. 455, 463 (E.D. Pa. 2008) (approving settlement plan with $50 minimum payment). The District Court adopted the Special Master's considered decision that "administrative costs to make de minimis payments are too large to justify the small payments," and the objectors have offered only conclusory counter-allegations. (App'x 1531). Indicative of the disingenuous [*329] nature of their responses is the objectors' assertion that "[i]n exchange for their release, millions of class members [will] receive no money." (Quinn Br. at 63-64.) This argument fails to acknowledge the injunctive relief offered by the settlement, however, which is intended to benefit all class members [142] regardless of individual monetary recovery.[60]

Furthermore, the objectors appear to ignore a key rationale underlying the class action mechanism. In addition to providing individual class members with payments, "'[t]he policy at the very core of the class action mechanism'" is to provide sufficient incentive to prosecute an action "'by aggregating the relatively paltry potential recoveries into something worth someone's (usually an attorney's) labor,'" [143] Yang, 392 F.3d at 106 (quoting Amchem, 521 U.S. at 617). In this instance, the representative parties and their counsel were properly incentivized to bring and prosecute this action through settlement, resulting in a net benefit to the class. As a result, based upon the evidence offered before the Special Master and the arguments alleged herein, we cannot conclude that the District Court abused its discretion in approving this element of the plan of allocation.

C. Objections to the Fee Award

The objectors likewise aver that the District Court abused its discretion in awarding attorneys' fees that they urge are excessive. (Quinn Br. at 65; Hicks Prelim. Op. Br. at 7; Petrus/Giddings Br. at 12.) They contend that class counsel will receive in excess of $73 million — equal to approximately 25% of the $293 million principal settlement fund — despite this being a default judgment case, which entailed minimal motions practice and discovery. Additionally, considering the large number of putative class members and the alleged lack of risk undertaken by class counsel in prosecuting this case to settlement, the objectors urge that the award is unjustified under our jurisprudence. We disagree.

Our [144] case law makes clear that HN42[] a "robust" and "thorough judicial review of fee applications is required in all class action settlements," In re Diet Drugs, 582 F.3d 524, 537-38 (3d Cir. 2009) (citation & quotations omitted), but that "the amount of a fee award . . . is within the district court's discretion so long as it employs correct standards and procedures and makes findings of fact not clearly erroneous," In re Rite Aid Corp. Sec. Litig., 396 F.3d 294, 299 (3d Cir. 2005) (citation & quotations omitted). See also Ursic v. Bethlehem Mines, 719 F.2d 670, 675 (3d Cir. 1983) ("[T]he district court has discretion in determining the amount of a fee award . . . in view of [its] superior understanding of the litigation and the desirability of avoiding frequent appellate review of what essentially are factual matters.") (quoting Hensley v. Eckerhart, 461 U.S. 424, 436, 103 S. Ct. 1933, 76 L. Ed. 2d 40 (1983)).

[*330] HN43[] Attorneys' fees requests are generally assessed under one of two methods: the percentage-of-recovery ("POR") approach or the lodestar scheme. "The former applies a certain percentage to the settlement fund," while "[t]he latter multiplies the number of hours class counsel worked on a case by a reasonable hourly billing [145] rate for such services." Diet Drugs, 582 F.3d at 540 (citation, quotations, & alterations omitted). The POR method "is generally favored in common fund cases because it allows courts to award fees from the fund 'in a manner that rewards counsel for success and penalizes it for failure.'" Rite Aid, 396 F.3d at 300 (citation & quotations omitted). The lodestar method, which is more commonly utilized in statutory fee-shifting cases and "where the expected relief has a small enough monetary value that a percentage-of-recovery method would provide inadequate compensation," Diet Drugs, 582 F.3d at 540-41, is then used "to cross-check the reasonableness of a percentage-of-recovery fee award," AT&T Corp., 455 F.3d at 164.[61] Because the case at issue entailed a common fund, the District Court applied the POR method and utilized a lodestar crosscheck. (App'x 310.). The objectors do not dispute the propriety of this approach, and we find no fault with this decision.

In determining the appropriate percentage fee award, the District Court then devoted detailed consideration to each of the ten factors that we identified in Gunter v. Ridgewood Energy Corp., 223 F.3d 190 (3d Cir. 2000),[62] and Prudential, 148 F.3d 283,[63] finding, inter alia, that the complexity and duration of the litigation, the time and skill [61] HN44[] The lodestar crosscheck "is performed by dividing the proposed fee award by the lodestar calculation, resulting in a lodestar multiplier." AT&T Corp., 455 F.3d at 164. The multiplier endeavors "to account for the contingent nature [146] or risk involved in a particular case," and may be adjusted "to account for particular circumstances, such as the quality of representation, the benefit obtained for the class, [and] the complexity and novelty of the issues presented." Id. at 164 n.4 (citations & quotations omitted).

[62] HN45[] The Gunter factors are as follows:

> (1) the size of the fund created and the number of persons benefitted; (2) the presence or absence of substantial objections by members of the class to the settlement terms and/or fees requested by counsel; (3) the skill and efficiency of the attorneys involved; (4) the complexity and duration of the litigation; (5) the risk of nonpayment; (6) the amount of time devoted to the case by plaintiffs' counsel; and (7) the awards in similar cases.

223 F.3d at 195 n.1.

committed to the litigation, the ever-present risk of nonpayment from De Beers's tenuous status in the United States, the absence of substantial objections, and the achievement of both monetary and injunctive relief without any governmental investigation or assistance all weighed in favor of approving the Special Master's recommended 25% attorneys' fee award. (App'x 311-21.) The objectors do not contend that the District Court applied incorrect legal standards or procedures or that the Court improperly "brushed over our required analysis." In re Cendant Corp. PRIDES Litig., 243 F.3d 722, 735 (3d Cir. 2001). [147] Rather, they disagree with the Court's factual findings as to two of the factors; they contend that we [*331] should find an abuse of discretion because this case is "'neither legally nor factually complex and did not require significant motion practice or discovery' by class counsel." (Quinn Br. at 65 (quoting Cendant PRIDES, 243 F.3d at 743).)

Because of the objectors' narrow focus before us and the District Court's thorough analysis of each of the Gunter and Prudential factors, we will only address the specific objections raised herein. As an initial matter, the objectors neglect to mention the primary reason for our finding of error in Cendant PRIDES — the principal case advanced in support of their position. There, we criticized the district court's failure to "explicitly consider any of [the Gunter] factors," and its neglect to "'make its reasoning and application of the fee-awards jurisprudence clear.'" Cendant PRIDES, 243 F.3d at 734-35 (quoting Gunter, 223 F.3d at 196). We engaged in our own analysis of the propriety of the fee award only because the district court failed to consider the fee award factors that we had deemed "essential to a proper exercise of discretion." Id. at 735; see also Ne. Women's Ctr. v. McMonagle, 889 F.2d 466, 475 (3d Cir. 1989) ("[A]n appellate court, which relies on a cold record, is even more poorly positioned to assess the nature and quality of the legal services performed at the trial [149] court level."). We have no such concern here, as the District Court clearly set forth its reasoning for the fee award. Indeed, the objectors never explain exactly where in its lengthy analysis the District Court misapplied the Gunter factors; the objectors simply dislike the conclusion reached by the Court. See generally McMonagle, 889 F.2d at 475 ("[T]he appellate court may not upset a trial court's exercise of discretion on the basis of a visceral disagreement with the lower court's decision.") (citation & quotations omitted).

Moreover, the District Court's factual findings as to the complexity and demands of this case further distinguish the instant circumstances from Cendant PRIDES and do not suggest an abuse of discretion. As we discussed in Rite Aid, the Cendant PRIDES counsel "only spent approximately 5,600 hours on the action," "Cendant had conceded liability and no risks pertaining to liability or collection were pertinent." 396 F.3d at 304 (discussing Cendant PRIDES, 243 F.3d at 735). These factors are absent in this case. Contrary to the objectors' contention, the Special Master and District Court both observed that counsel devoted nearly 39,000 hours to litigating this matter [150] in the various federal and state courts and to the subsequent negotiations and disputes pertaining to the settlement itself. The Court noted that, apart from addressing complicated legal questions and the secrecy surrounding the diamond industry, plaintiffs' counsel was forced to litigate against opposition from intervenors and amicus curiae, engaged in protracted settlement negotiations lasting approximately one year, and ultimately confronted the difficult settlement, distribution, and injunctive issues addressed in this appeal. (App'x 317-18.) Given the complexity of the legal and factual issues implicated and the difficult questions raised in the post-settlement process, we find no abuse of discretion in the District Court's conclusion that the complexity and duration of the litigation supported the requested fee.[64]

[63] The Prudential factors are:

> (8) the value of benefits attributable to the efforts of class counsel relative to the efforts of other groups, such as government agencies conducting investigations, (9) the percentage fee that would have been negotiated had the case been subject to a private contingent fee arrangement at the time counsel was retained, and (10) [148] any innovative terms of settlement.

Diet Drugs, 582 F.3d at 541 (citing Prudential, 148 F.3d at 338-40).

[64] The objectors' further contention that the size of the percentage fee award should decrease in light of the large size of the overall settlement, (Quinn Br. at 66), is premised on several of our opinions in which we stated that "the percentage of a recovery devoted to attorneys' fees should decrease as the size of the overall settlement or recovery increases." Cendant, 264

[*332] Furthermore, unlike in Cendant PRIDES, the risk of nonpayment here remained ever-present throughout the litigation and settlement proceedings. The objectors dispute that counsel faced such risk after agreeing to settle and the depositing of the settlement amount into an escrow account. It is unclear, however, whether an agreement to settle after inception and prosecution of a matter should play a role in a court's evaluation of the risk of nonpayment; indeed, our case law has "never addressed whether courts must reconsider the risk of nonpayment as the action evolves." Diet Drugs, 582 F.3d at 543. Although we previously approved a district court's evaluation of risk "as of 'the inception of the action and not through the rosy lens of hindsight,'" we emphasized that our endorsement took into consideration the district court's "more comprehensive" reevaluation of the risk over the course of the proceedings. Id. (quoting In re Diet Drugs, 553 F. Supp. 2d 442, 478 (E.D. Pa. 2008)). There, we did not directly resolve whether a district court should reassess risk [153] throughout a litigation, but found the risk of nonpayment to be ongoing, noting that while a settlement agreement and "the escrow funds undoubtedly reduced the risk of nonpayment, those funds were but one part of an intricate agreement" and the efforts of counsel could still "have been for naught." Id.

Here, we are similarly satisfied that counsel faced a legitimate risk of nonpayment throughout the litigation. The District Court found that De Beers possessed few assets in the United States against which a judgment could be enforced and effectively dodged jurisdiction in the United States for over fifty years, evidencing a cognizable risk of nonpayment at the inception stage. (App'x 319.) Although the District Court's order did not address the prospects for nonpayment post-settlement, it is evident that De Beers never conceded liability or admitted any wrongdoing, and that the escrow funds "were but one part of an intricate agreement" that — as demonstrated by the Panel's original decision to reject settlement class certification — continued to pose a genuine risk of nonpayment to counsel. As such, the objectors' "view of the risk of nonpayment is more myopic than the Court's," Diet Drugs, 582 F.3d at 543, [154] and we are not persuaded that the District Court abused its discretion in finding this factor to favor the requested fee.

Finally, the objectors' assertion that the award improperly exceeds the awards in similar cases is equally unavailing. In Cendant PRIDES, we discussed fee awards in class actions in which the settlement fund exceeded $100 million and which relied upon the POR method, finding [*333] that "the attorneys' fee awards ranged from 2.8% to 36% of the total settlement fund." 243 F.3d at 737. Similarly, in Rite Aid, we found no abuse of discretion in a district court's reliance on three studies that demonstrated an average percentage fee recovery in large class action settlements of 31%, 27-30%, and 25-30%. 396 F.3d at 303. Here, the District Court determined that the 25% fee requested by counsel fell within this range. (App'x 320.)

We are cognizant that a comparison of this award to fees ordered in other cases is a complex analytical task, in light of variations in the efforts exerted by attorneys and the presence of complex legal and factual issues. That said, we have emphasized "that HN46[] a district court may not rely on a formulaic application of the appropriate range in awarding [155] fees but must consider the relevant circumstances of the particular case." Cendant PRIDES, 243 F.3d at 736. Although this case may have lacked some of the contested motion practice and extensive discovery elicited in some of the other cases receiving similar percentage awards, see id. at 740-41, the case presented other challenges, including "De Beers'[s] denial of jurisdiction [and liability], the secrecy of the diamond industry, and unavailability of ordinary discovery methods, the substantial risk of non-collection of a U.S.

F.3d at 284 n.55 [151] (citations & quotations omitted). We so ruled because "in many instances the increase in recovery is merely a factor of the size of the class and has no direct relationship to the efforts of counsel." Id. In particular, we have vacated large fee awards "'when much of the settlement apparently resulted from the work of state regulators and a multi-state insurance task force.'" Rite Aid, 396 F.3d at 303 (quoting Prudential, 148 F.3d at 338-342). But "there is no rule that a district court must apply a declining percentage reduction in every settlement involving a sizable fund," and we have approved large settlements where "class counsel's efforts played a significant role in augmenting and obtaining an immense fund." Id. Ultimately, "the fact-intensive Prudential/Gunter analysis" must trump all other considerations. Id.

Here, plaintiffs' counsel prosecuted this matter through settlement with no certainty as to their ability to enforce any judgment against De Beers. The District Court's fact-intensive Gunter analysis found that plaintiffs' counsel deftly and efficiently handled this complex matter and played a significant role in the outcome. Accordingly, we disagree that the size of the [152] overall settlement bears no relationship to the efforts of counsel and will defer to the District Court's considered judgment.

judgment in foreign countries and the historic injunction obtained." (February 15, 2008 Report and Recommendation of Special Master on Incentive Awards, Cost Reimbursement & Attorneys' Fee Awards at 31.) The District Court here properly considered the relevant Gunter and Prudential factors, and determined that the case presented all of the factors we had recognized as supporting a higher award: "complex and/or novel legal issues, extensive discovery, acrimonious litigation, and tens of thousands of hours spent on the case by class counsel." (App'x 320 (quoting Cendant PRIDES, 243 F.3d at 741).)

Because the District Court employed the "correct [156] standards and procedures" and its findings of fact are not clearly erroneous, we do not find an abuse of discretion in its calculation of the attorneys' fee award. Rite Aid, 396 F.3d at 299.[65]

IV. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, we will affirm the District Court's Order.

Concur

SCIRICA, Circuit Judge, concurring.

I fully concur in the Court's opinion. I write separately to address this case in the wider context of the evolving law on settlement classes.

Ever since the Supreme Court's landmark decisions in Amchem Products Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 117 S. Ct. 2231, 138 L. Ed. 2d 689 (1997) and *Ortiz v. Fibreboard Corp., 527 U.S. 815, 119 S. Ct. 2295, [334] 144 L. Ed. 2d 715 (1999), one of the most vexing questions in modern class action practice has been the proper treatment of settlement classes, especially in cases national in scope that may also implicate state law. Grounded in equitable concepts of structural and procedural fairness for absent plaintiffs—competent and conflict-free representation, fair allocation of settlement, absence of collusion—Amchem and Ortiz set down important standards and guidelines for settlement classes.[1] [65] We also reject the sole objection pertaining to the District Court's decision to grant incentive awards to class representatives. HN47[] "Incentive awards are not uncommon in class action litigation and particularly where . . . a common fund has been created for the benefit of the entire class." Lorazepam, 205 F.R.D. at 400 (internal quotations omitted). "The purpose of these payments is to compensate named plaintiffs for the services they provided and the risks they incurred during the course of class action litigation," and to "reward the public service of contributing to the enforcement of mandatory laws." *Bredbenner v. Liberty Travel, Inc., No. 09-905, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38663, 2011 WL 1344745, at 22 (D.N.J. Apr. 8, 2011) (citations & quotations omitted). Contrary to the objectors' contention, the District Court — relying upon the Special Master's more detailed findings — discussed the role played by the several class representatives and the risks taken by these parties in prosecuting this matter. (App'x 326-27; R&R on Awards at 42-46.) [157] We find no error in the District Court's decision.

[1] The class action device has a venerable pedigree in equity practice. As early as the seventeenth century, English chancery courts employed bills of peace to facilitate representative suits analogous to "common question" suits under Rule 23(b)(3). Geoffrey C. Hazard, [158] Jr. et al., An Historical Analysis of the Binding Effect of Class Suits, 146 U. Pa. L. Rev. 1849, 1861-65 (1998). Inchoate class actions continued in the American legal system until codified under Rule 23 in Federal Rules of Civil Procedure in 1938. Id. at 1878-1942. The 1966 amendments to Rule 23 substantially modified earlier practice and ushered in a class action "revolution" by introducing most of the current aspects of class action litigation, particularly the broad provisions of 23(b)(3) and the concomitant procedural safeguards requiring predominance and notice. Stephen B. Burbank, The Class Action Fairness Act of 2005 in Historical Context: A Preliminary View, 156 U. Pa. L. Rev. 1439, 1484-89 (2008).

Despite initial uncertainty the opinions might pose formidable obstacles for settling massive, complex cases, this has not, for the most part, proved to be the case. Nonetheless, class settlement in mass tort cases (especially personal injury claims) remains problematic, leading some practitioners to avoid the class action device—most prominently in the recent $4.85 billion mass settlement of 50,000 claims arising out of use of the drug Vioxx. In fact, some observers believe there [159] has been a shift in mass personal injury claims to aggregate non-class settlements. "The Zyprexa and Ephedra settlements, as well as the more recent Guidant and Vioxx settlements, suggest that the MDL process has supplemented and perhaps displaced the class action device as a procedural mechanism for large settlements." Thomas E. Willging & Emery G. Lee III, From Class Actions to Multidistrict Consolidations: Aggregate Mass-Tort Litigation after Ortiz, 58 U. Kan. L. Rev. 775, 801 (2010); see also Thomas E. Willging & Shannon R. Wheatman, Attorney Choice of Forum in Class Action Litigation: What Difference Does It Make?, 81 Notre Dame L. Rev. 591, 636 tbl. 12 (2006) (presenting evidence that, in sample, 41% of cases denied class certification ended in non-class settlement). This is significant, for outside the federal rules governing class actions,[2] there is no prescribed independent review of the structural and substantive fairness of a settlement including evaluation of attorneys' fees, potential conflicts of interest, and counsel's allocation of settlement funds among class members.[3]

Because of the pivotal role and ensuing consequences of the class certification decision, trial courts must conduct a "rigorous analysis" of Rule 23's prerequisites. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Dukes, __ U.S. __, 131 S. Ct. 2541, 2551-52, 180 L. Ed. 2d 374 [*335] (2011); In re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litig., 552 F.3d 305, 315-21 (3d Cir. 2008); In re Initial Pub. Offering Secs. Litig., 471 F.3d 24, 31-42 (2d Cir. 2006).[4] The [161] same analytical rigor is required for litigation and settlement certification, but some inquiries essential to litigation class certification are no longer problematic in the settlement context. A key question in a litigation class action is manageability—how the case will or can be tried, and whether there are questions of fact or law that are capable of common proof. But the settlement class presents no management problems because the case will not be tried. Conversely, other inquiries assume heightened importance and heightened scrutiny because of the danger of conflicts of interest, collusion, and unfair allocation. See Amchem, 521 U.S. at 620 ("[O]ther specifications of the Rule [23]—those designed to protect absentees by blocking unwarranted or overbroad class definitions—demand undiluted, even heightened, attention in the settlement context.").

In conducting a "rigorous analysis" under Rule 23, lower courts have applied the strictures laid down in Amchem and Ortiz, and added some of their own. So far, the developing jurisprudence appears to have justified the judgment of the Judicial Conference's Committee on Rules of Practice and Procedure and Advisory Committee on Civil Rules to defer consideration of a variant rule for settlement class actions.

Rule 23(a) sensibly provides that every certified class must share common questions of law or fact. For (b)(3) classes, common questions must predominate over individual questions, claims must be typical, and the class action device must be superior to other available methods for fairly and efficiently adjudicating the controversy.

[2] Bankruptcy may also provide a vehicle for some measure of compensation to mass claimants (creditors) [160] and for resolution of liability.

[3] Nevertheless, some MDL transferee judges have treated the MDL proceedings as quasi class actions and restricted contingent fee agreements in non-class aggregate settlements under their equitable and supervisory powers. See In re Vioxx Prods. Liab. Litig., 650 F. Supp. 2d 549, 558-62 (E.D. La. 2009); In re Guidant Corp. Implantable Defibrillators Prods. Liab. Litig., MDL No. 05-1708 (DWF/AJB), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17535, 2008 WL 682174 (D. Minn. Mar. 7, 2008); In re Zyprexa Prods. Liab. Litig., 424 F. Supp. 2d 488, 491 (E.D.N.Y. 2006).

[4] For a litigation class, the key decision is whether or not to certify the class. Once a class is certified, the dynamics of the case change dramatically. For many plaintiffs, denial of certification may sound the death knell of the action because the claims are too small to be prosecuted individually. For many defendants, class certification [162] may create hydraulic pressure to settle, even for claims defendants deem non-meritorious. For these reasons, the Supreme Court adopted Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(f) to permit a discretionary interlocutory appeal from the grant or denial of class certification.

Naturally, there is some overlap in the requirements for commonality, typicality, and predominance—all of which must be shown.

Commonality for a settlement class should be satisfied under the [163] standard for supplemental jurisdiction first set forth in United Mine Workers of America v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 725, 86 S. Ct. 1130, 16 L. Ed. 2d 218 (1966), allowing joinder of claims deriving from a common nucleus of operative fact. See also Shady Grove Orthopedic Assocs., P.A. v. Allstate Ins. Co., ___ U.S. ___, 130 S. Ct. 1431, 1443, 176 L. Ed. 2d 311 (2010) (Scalia, J., plurality opinion) ("A class action, no less than traditional joinder (of which it is a species), merely enables a federal court to adjudicate claims of multiple parties at once, instead of in separate suits."). Variation in state law should not necessarily bar class certification. The focus in the settlement context should be on the conduct (or misconduct) of the defendant and the injury suffered as a consequence. The claim or claims must be related and cohesive and should all arise out of the same nucleus of operative fact. The "common contention, moreover, must be of such a nature that it is capable of classwide resolution—which means that determination of its truth or falsity will resolve an issue that is central to the validity of each one of the claims in one stroke." Dukes, 131 S.Ct. at 2551. The interests of the class members should be aligned.

[*336] The nature [164] of the predominance analysis reflects the purpose of the inquiry, which is to determine whether "a class action would achieve economies of time, effort, and expense, and promote . . . uniformity of decision as to persons similarly situated, without sacrificing procedural fairness or bringing about other undesirable results." Amchem, 521 U.S. at 615 (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 advisory committee note). This is important even though, in the settlement context, a court need not worry about the challenge of litigating the claims to a verdict in a single proceeding. If the class presented a grab-bag of unrelated claims, a trial court would be unable to ensure that absent class members' interests were protected. The question, then, is what kind of common issues a settlement class must share to satisfy commonality and predominance.

In certain areas, such as antitrust, common issues tend to predominate because a major focus is the allegedly anticompetitive conduct of the defendant and its downstream effects on plaintiffs. See In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 579 F.3d 241, 268 (3d Cir. 2009). Commonality and predominance are usually met in the antitrust settlement context when all class [165] members' claims present common issues including (1) whether the defendant's conduct was actionably anticompetitive under antitrust standards; and (2) whether that conduct produced anticompetitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets. See id. at 267.

Even when a settlement class satisfies the predominance requirement, the inclusion of members who have a questionable chance of a favorable adjudication may present fairness concerns that demand the district court's attention. Trial courts must enforce the Rule 23(a) and (b) requirements in order to obtain a "structural assurance of fair and adequate representation for the diverse groups and individuals affected." Amchem, 521 U.S. at 627. In discharging this responsibility, district courts have a number of ways to address fairness concerns.[5] Due to the context-specific nature of these judgments, district courts should be afforded a broad ambit of discretion.

For viable settlement classes, Amchem and Ortiz made clear that expediency could not negate the requirements of Rule 23, which serve to protect absent class members. [167] See Amchem, 521 U.S. at 621 ("Subdivisions (a) and (b) [of Rule 23] focus court attention on whether a proposed class has sufficient unity so that absent members can be fairly bound by decisions of class representatives. That dominant concern persists when settlement, rather than trial, is proposed."). The principal danger of collusion [*337] lies in the prospect that class counsel, induced by defendants' offer of attorneys' fees, will "trade away" the claims of some or all class members for inadequate compensation. There is also the possibility that a settlement will not serve the interests of all of the class members, which may be in tension. In Amchem, for instance, the Court concluded the settlement was not demonstrably fair—there was insufficient allocation to asbestos claimants who were seriously injured (e.g. mesothelioma) and insufficient protection of non-impaired plaintiffs. 521 U.S. at 625-28. The Court worried that the claims of the exposure-only class members were being released without adequate protection. Id; see also In re Prudential Ins. Co. of Am. Sales Practice Litig., 148 F.3d 283, 315 (3d Cir. 1998) ("Prudential") (identifying and distinguishing Amchem's concerns); In re Gen. Motors Corp. Pick-Up Truck Fuel Tank Prods. Liability Litig., 55 F.3d 768, 784-86 (3d Cir. 1995) [168] (providing summary of the debate regarding propriety of mass tort settlements prior to Amchem).

[5] Trial courts can certify subclasses in situations where divergent interests implicate fair allocation—a situation not presented here, as all indirect class members have aligned interests. Certifying subclasses may be proper "[w]here a class is found to include subclasses [166] divergent in interest." In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig, 579 F.3d at 271 (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(c) advisory committee note). Even the conflicts in Amchem were amenable to resolution through sub-classes. See Ortiz, 527 U.S. at 856 (explaining that Amchem requires "a class divided between holders of present and future claims" to be "divi[ded] into homogeneous subclasses . . . with separate representation to eliminate conflicting interests of counsel"). Objector Quinn, in her answer to the petition for rehearing, states that subclasses would adequately address the Illinois Brick-based disparities in this case; she does not argue that it would be categorically improper to afford class treatment to indirect purchasers governed by Illinois Brick. See Quinn Answer at 11. The District Court here examined whether indirect purchasers' interests diverged depending on the law applied to their claims, and found such differences to be irrelevant in the context of this settlement. I find no abuse of discretion in such a conclusion.

These observations elucidate the issues of predominance and fairness present in this case. Here, the objectors contend certain claims (claims under state-law following Illinois Brick) are not viable--that is, they fail to state a cause of action.[6] For this reason, objectors believe that defendants are barred from settling these claims in a settlement class action because of the predominance requirement. Under objectors' view of Rule 23, trial courts would be obligated at the settlement class certification stage to decide which state's law would govern for that particular plaintiff, and whether a plaintiff has stated a valid cause of action, even if no defendant has raised a Rule 12(b)(6) objection—the usual way to contest the validity of a claim. Objectors contend they seek to protect absent class members, but fail to explain how absent class members—all of whom claim injury—are harmed by the defendants' willingness to settle all potential claims.

This [169] interpretation also presents significant administrative problems. Objectors view the indirect purchaser class as composed of members who either have valid claims under the laws of states with Illinois Brick repealers or members who have invalid claims under the laws of non-repealer states. But a claim cannot be declared invalid without proper analysis, which would require a choice-of-law examination for each class member's claim. Such analyses may pose difficulties in cases where the residence of the class member is not the sole consideration; modern choice-of-law standards often consider an array of factors particular to individual plaintiffs. Consequently, individual 12(b)(6) inquiries for settlement class certification could present serious difficulties in administration and greatly increase costs and fees, and may deplete rather than increase the recovery of even successful plaintiffs.[7] [6] Objectors also claim that variance on state claims (based on consumer protection and unjust enrichment laws) defeats predominance as well.

[7] The purported "overbreadth" of the putative class at issue here is qualitatively different from the Supreme Court's concerns in Amchem. Under Amchem the significance of variations in state laws is properly assessed in terms of the interests of absent class members. The proposed Amchem settlement, [170] extinguishing claims for different injuries with different onsets incurred at different times due to conduct of different defendants, undercompensated exposure-only claims and those with mesothelioma. Here, objectors contend some class members do not have a valid cause of action, but these class members with non-repealer state law claims have lost nothing through inclusion in the class. Objectors speculate inclusion of non-repealer state law claims necessarily diminishes the settlement accrued to class members whom they contend have undisputedly valid claims. But they provided no support for their assertion. In Amchem the objectors provided evidence of intraclass conflicts detrimental to class members. For example, 15% of the proposed Amchem settlement's mesothelioma claims arose in California, where the average recovery for a mesothelioma claim was more than double their maximum recovery in the settlement. Amchem, 521 U.S. at 610 n.14.

The objectors have not shown that plaintiffs suffering identical economic injuries due to a single course of conduct on the part of the defendant have conflicting interests solely because some class members may have stronger claims depending upon variation [171] in state law. Objectors assume that the non-repealer state claims have zero settlement value and that defendants would contribute the same amount to the common settlement fund regardless of how many claims the settlement may extinguish. But the settlement of the considerable bulk of claims against the defendants for a prior course of conduct may [*338] Issues of predominance and fairness do not undermine this settlement. All plaintiffs here claim injury that by reason of defendants' conduct—market manipulation and fraud—has caused a common and measurable form of economic damage. They seek redress under federal antitrust laws and state antitrust, consumer protection, and unjust enrichment laws. All claims arise out of the same course of defendants' conduct; all share a common nucleus of operative fact, supplying the necessary cohesion. Class members' interests are aligned. The entire DeBeers settlement class consists of members with some pleaded claim (but [172] not necessarily the exact same one) arising out of the same course of allegedly wrongful conduct such that shared issues of fact or law outweigh issues not common to the class and individual issues do not predominate. As the class structure and settlement assure fairness to all class members, there appears to be nothing in Rule 23 that would prohibit certification and settlement approval.

Moreover, the focus on the alleged insufficiency of some members' claims is misplaced. Settlement of a class action is not an adjudication of the merits of the members' claims. It is a contract between the parties governed by the requirements of Rule 23(a), (b), and particularly (e),[8] and establishes a contractual obligation as well as a contractual defense against future claims. Here, class members and DeBeers want to settle all state and federal claims arising out of defendant's alleged misconduct. Amchem recognized the legitimacy of such a settlement under Rule 23, [*339] setting forth applicable parameters. The court's responsibility is to supervise and assume control over a responsible and fair settlement. Those requirements have been met here.

A responsible and fair settlement serves the interests of both plaintiffs and defendants and furthers the aims of the class action device. Plaintiffs receive redress of their claimed [174] injuries without the burden of litigating individually. Defendants receive finality. Having released their claims for consideration, class members are precluded from continuing to press their claims. Collateral attack of settlements and parallel proceedings in multiple fora are common realities in modern class actions—features that can imperil the feasibility of settlements if defendants lack an effective way to protect bargained-for rights. See Prudential, 314 F.3d at 104-05. If the in direct-purchaser claims at issue here were excluded, nothing would bar the plaintiffs from bringing them as separate class actions or as aggregate individual actions, leaving defendants "exposed to countless suits in state court" despite the settlement. In re Prudential Ins. Co. of Am. Sales Practice Litig., 261 F.3d 355, 367 (3d Cir. 2001) ("Prudential II"). (Here, prior to removal and MDL consolidation, it appears an Illinois state court certified a nationwide litigation class asserting indirect-purchaser claims under the laws of all 50 states.) Perhaps a defendant will be willing and able to defend or settle all of these actions separately, or perhaps it won't. Either way, the costs (direct and indirect) [175] and risks of continuing litigation will be greater. A defendant, therefore, may be motivated to pay class be of substantially greater value to defendants than a settlement of only the strongest claims against them. And, unlike in Amchem, objectors have not shown the inclusion of more claims was achieved by grossly underpaying some class members.

[8] Rule 23(e) is especially relevant in this context because [173] it governs the settlement, dismissal, or compromise of a class action. It requires court approval of any agreement, and establishes five procedural requirements that must be satisfied:

> (1) The court must direct notice in a reasonable manner to all class members who would be bound by the proposal.
> (2) If the proposal would bind class members, the court may approve it only after a hearing and on finding that it is fair, reasonable, and adequate.
> (3) The parties seeking approval must file a statement identifying any agreement made in connection with the proposal.
> (4) If the class action was previously certified under Rule 23(b)(3), the court may refuse to approve a settlement unless it affords a new opportunity to request exclusion to individual class members who had an earlier opportunity to request exclusion but did not do so.
> (5) Any class member may object to the proposal if it requires court approval under this subdivision (e); the objection may be withdrawn only with the court's approval.

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(e).

members a premium and achieve a global settlement in order to avoid additional lawsuits, even ones where it might be able to file a straightforward motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim.[9]

Finally, new limitations such as those proposed by objectors would, I believe, undercut the policy goals of the Class Action Fairness Act of 2005 ("CAFA"), Pub. L. No. 109-2, 119 Stat. 4, and the Multidistrict Litigation Statute, 28 U.S.C. § 1407, both of which are designed to encourage the consolidation of mass claims national in scope—and in the case of CAFA, with particular [176] reference to class actions based on state law claims. Of course, district courts must fully enforce the requirements of Rule 23. But the limitations objectors propose here "would seriously undermine the possibility for settling any large, multi district class action." Prudential II, 261 F.3d at 367.[10]

[*340] The [178] class action device and the concept of the private attorney general are powerful instruments of social and economic policy. Despite inherent tensions, they have proven efficacious in resolving mass claims when courts have insisted on structural, procedural, and substantive fairness. Among the goals are redress of injuries, procedural due process, efficiency, horizontal equity among injured claimants, and finality. Arguably a legal system that permits robust litigation of mass claims should also provide ways to fairly and effectively resolve those claims. Otherwise, mass claims will likely be resolved without independent review and court supervision.[11]

JORDAN, Circuit Judge, joined by SMITH, Circuit Judge, dissenting

This is the Majority's considered view of the law: in certifying a class action, it makes no difference whether the class is defined to include members who lack any claim at all. As my colleagues in the Majority see it, "were we to mandate that a class include only those alleging 'colorable' claims, we would effectively rule out the ability of a defendant to achieve 'global peace' by obtaining releases from all those who might wish to assert claims,

[9] Facing liability for alleged misconduct, a defendant may desire global settlement for several possible reasons: (1) redressing plaintiffs' injuries; (2) the possibility of liability; (3) the direct costs of defending suits, often in multiple fora; (4) the risk of financially unmanageable jury verdicts which may threaten bankruptcy; (5) the effects of pending or impending mass litigation on its stock price or access to capital markets; (6) the stigma of brand-damaging litigation; and (7) maintaining financial stability.

[10] In Prudential II, we affirmed the grant of an injunction enjoining a state-court action brought by policyholders who were members of the Prudential class to the extent the state-law claims were based on or related to claims released in the class action. We agreed with the district court that allowing the policyholders to prosecute their civil actions in state court "would allow an end run around the Class settlement by affording them (and other class members who might later attempt the same strategy) an opportunity for relitigation of the released claims." 261 F.3d at 367 (internal quotation marks omitted). We noted that the position urged by the policyholders "would seriously undermine the possibility for settling any large, multi district class action. Defendants in such suits would always be concerned that a settlement of the federal class action would leave them exposed to countless [177] suits in state court despite settlement of the federal claims. . . . [S]uch state suits could number in the millions." Id. It is for this reason that releases of all claims—whether state or federal—have been held valid, "provided they are based on the same factual predicate." Prudential, 148 F.3d at 326 n.82. So long as a sufficient factual predicate exists, a release can even bar later claims which could not have been brought in the court rendering the settlement judgment. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Epstein, 516 U.S. 367, 377, 116 S. Ct. 873, 134 L. Ed. 2d 6 (1996).

It notes that, unlike class settlements, "[n]on-class aggregate settlements are governed primarily by ethical rules and are rarely subject to court review or approval for fairness" and so advocates "a fresh look . . . at how non-class aggregate settlements should be regulated." Id. In particular, it proposes a rule to provide each plaintiff [179] a nonwaivable right to challenge in court a settlement that is allegedly "not procedurally and substantively fair and reasonable." § 3.18(a). meritorious or not." (Slip Op. at 66.) So, "come one, come all," regardless of substantive legal rights. That remarkable declaration sets the class action ship in our Circuit badly adrift.

To be clear, the problem with the enormous, nationwide class most particularly at issue in this case is not that it may include people with marginal or dubious claims. The class of indirect purchasers of De Beers diamonds actually presents [180] a far more troubling problem than that. It includes people who have no legal claim whatsoever. That is clear on the face of the statutory and decisional law of several states whose laws are invoked as the basis for this class action,[1] and no one has been able to mount a cogent argument to the contrary. Despite the Majority's elaborate construction and dismantling of straw man arguments about commonality and predominance, those state laws ought to stand as an insurmountable barrier to any proper certification of a nationwide indirect purchaser class. By treating the dictates of state law as irrelevant, to be passed over in the name of "global peace," the Majority has endorsed the fabrication of substantive rights where none before existed. This is, in short, a bad day for [*341] Rule 23, for federalism, and for those who thought the Rules Enabling Act was a restraint on judicial legislating. I therefore dissent.

I. Where We Agree

The Majority devotes much [181] attention to the question of whether "commonality and predominance are defeated merely because available rights and remedies differ under the several laws that form the basis for the class claims." (Slip Op. at 45-46.) In addressing that question, the Majority inaccurately characterizes the now-vacated panel opinion as having required "that everyone in a class must allege precisely identical or 'uniform' causes of action."[2] (Slip Op. at 48 (citing Sullivan v. DB Investments, Inc., 613 F.3d 134, 149 (3d Cir. 2010), reh'g en banc granted and vacated by Sullivan v. DB Investments, Inc., 619 F.3d 287 (3d Cir. 2010)). But the panel opinion made no such statement, nor have the objectors claimed that all class members must share a "uniform cause of action." The only "uniformity" required by the panel opinion, or argued for by the objectors, is that at least some "question of law or fact regarding [class members'] legal rights [be] uniform throughout the class." Sullivan, 613 F.3d at 149. Insisting that there be a uniform question of law or fact is nothing more than an application of the Rule 23(a)(2) requirement that there be "questions of law or fact common to the class." The Majority's [182] assertion that the panel demanded there be uniform causes of action — a requirement far different than requiring uniform questions — is unfounded and should not detain us any longer.

On this much we can agree: that, as the Majority says, "where a defendant's singular conduct gives rise to one cause of action in one state, while providing for a different cause of action in another jurisdiction, the courts may group both claims in a single class action." (Slip Op. at 48.) If that were the case before us, we would have unanimity. The problem, though, is that the defendants' singular conduct here gives rise to causes of action in some states while providing for no cause of action at all in others. Under these circumstances, there can be no grouping of claims into a single class action, because, by definition, some would-be class members have no claim. As a result, and as discussed in the following section, there can be no common questions of law or fact with respect to

[1] More precisely, we are dealing here with a set of class actions, since the settlement involves the resolution of several cases, as the Majority opinion notes. For ease of reference, however, I will often refer to these matters in the singular.

[2] The Majority is oddly persistent in this confusion. Despite the clear language in the panel opinion and repeated assurance in this dissent that class members need not all share a "uniform cause of action" to satisfy the requirements of Rule 23, the Majority continues to say by implication and assertion that the panel opinion suggested that all members of the class must assert a "uniform" cause of action or "identical ... issues or claims." See Slip Op. at 46 ("We have never required the presentation of identical or uniform issues or claims as a prerequisite to certification of a class."); id. at 48 ("Nothing in our case law or the language of Rule 23 commands that everyone in a class must allege precisely identical or 'uniform' causes of action ... and statutory variations do not defeat predominance in the presence of other exceedingly common issues." (internal citations omitted)); id. at 60 n.36 ("The Panel ... seemingly conclude[ed] that plaintiffs could only prevail if each putative class member alleged [183] either a 'uniform' antitrust cause of action, a 'uniform' consumer protection cause of action, or a 'uniform' unjust enrichment claim.").

that subset of would-be class members and, therefore, neither the commonality requirement of Rule 23(a)(2) nor the predominance requirement of Rule 23(b)(3) can be satisfied.

II. Commonality And Predominance Under Rule 23

The objectors[3] have challenged the commonality [184] of the indirect purchaser [*342] class, stating that "putative class members who do not even have an arguable cause of action under applicable law do not qualify for inclusion in a class action for failure to satisfy [the] Rule 23(a)(2) requirement of 'questions of law or fact common to the class.'" (Supplemental Brief of Appellant Susan M. Quinn on Rehearing En Banc at 11-12 (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(2).) While they initially couched their arguments about commonality in terms of predominance under Rule 23(b)(3), the objectors' position has always been that common questions of law or fact do not predominate because there simply are no questions of law or fact common to the entire class of indirect purchasers. (See, e.g., Brief for Appellant Susan M. Quinn at 32 ("The evidence supporting a lack of commonality is abundant."); id. at 38 ("[T]he question of antitrust conspiracy is not common to the class."); id. at 44 ("The district court did not even determine that there was a common question involving unjust enrichment."); id. at 45 ("The district court did not find a common question regarding [the consumer protection/deceptive trade practice] claims.").) The panel opinion thus addressed [185] the objectors' arguments in that light, holding that there was no predominance because there were no questions of law or fact common to the entire class. Sullivan, 613 F.3d at 148 ("[T]here can be no certification of a nationwide class of state indirect purchaser plaintiffs because there is no common question of law or material fact.").

Ultimately, though, whether the objectors' argument is framed as a Rule 23(a)(2) commonality challenge or a Rule 23(b)(3) predominance challenge is immaterial.[4] As noted by the Majority, we have said before that "'we consider the Rule 23(a) commonality requirement to be incorporated into the more stringent Rule 23(b)(3) predominance requirement, and therefore deem it appropriate to analyze the two factors together.'" (Slip Op. at 37 (quoting In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 579 F.3d 241, 266 (3d Cir. 2009)).) Whatever label we hang on the objectors' argument, it always has been clear that their basic contention is that there are no questions [186] of law or fact common to all class members, which necessarily means that common questions do not predominate. Whether coined as a Rule 23(a)(2) problem or as a [*343] Rule 23(b)(3) problem, the determinative question of commonality is the same.

The Majority spends little time explaining what makes questions "common," but the principle they seem to espouse is that questions are common when the "defendant's conduct was common as to all of the class members" and when "all of the class members were harmed by the defendant's conduct." (Slip Op. at 38.) Based on that, the Majority asserts that, as to the indirect purchaser class, "each class member shares a similar legal question arising

[3] Both before the panel and the en banc court, objector Susan M. Quinn has taken the lead on the issues of commonality and predominance, and my references to the arguments of the objectors come from her briefs.

[4] Although the parties do not particularly press the issue in their briefs, an argument can be made that the proposed class might also fail to meet the requirements of Rule 23(a)(4), which provides that a court may certify a class only if "the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(4). By proposing a class that consists of individuals who have no cause of action under state or federal law, the class representatives have diluted the recovery for those who actually have claims. Moreover, the class representatives also unnecessarily incur the cost of giving notice under Rule 23 to individuals who have no right to relief, as well as the cost of compensating class counsel for undertaking unnecessary tasks associated with such notice. *Cf. In the Matter of Aqua Dots Prods. Liability Litig., 654 F.3d 748, 2011 WL 3629723, at 3 (7th Cir. 2011) ("A representative who proposes that high transaction [187] costs (notice and attorneys' fees) be incurred at the class members' expense to obtain a refund that is already on offer is not adequately protecting the class members' interests." (citing Thorogood v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 627 F.3d 289, 293-94 (7th Cir. 2010))). Those costs reduce the total amount of recovery available to the appropriate members of the proposed class (i.e., individuals who may assert an antitrust claim under federal or state law). In other words, a class representative who unnecessarily increases the cost of litigating a class action by including improper plaintiffs in the class definition is at risk of being found to not "adequately protect the interests of the class." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(4).

from whether De Beers engaged in [188] a broad conspiracy that was aimed to and did affect diamond prices in the United States" (Slip Op. at 43 (internal quotation marks omitted)) and shares "common factual questions as to whether De Beers 'acted in concert to artificially fix, maintain, and stabilize prices and to monopolize trade and commerce in the market for polished diamonds.'" (Slip Op. at 43 (quoting App. 278-79).) Those questions are common to the class, according to the Majority, because the "allegations are unaffected by the particularized conduct of individual class members, as proof of liability and liability itself would depend entirely upon De Beers's allegedly anticompetitive activities." (Slip Op. at 43.)

In seeking to justify its "welcome all comers" approach to class certification, the Majority has produced an internally inconsistent definition of commonality. On the one hand, as just noted, the Majority emphasizes that "proof of liability and liability itself would depend entirely upon De Beers's allegedly anticompetitive activities" (Slip Op. at 43), as if no reference need be made to the status of individual class members. Indeed, if one examines what the Majority identifies as "common factual [189] questions" and "similar legal question[s,]" it is apparent that no reference to anyone but De Beers is called for, which means that the class is entirely unbounded. Everyone in the world could share in a class defined on those lines.[5] On the other hand, evidently recognizing the problem with a commonality definition that looks only at De Beers's activities, the Majority adds as something of an afterthought that, well yes, there must be some limiting feature of the class and that feature is injury; class members must have been injured by De Beers's unlawful conduct. (Slip Op. at 38.)

Of course, as soon as one acknowledges that commonality requires a consideration of whether class members have sustained injury, one ought also have to acknowledge, by logic grounded in hornbook law, that "injury" is not an abstraction but rather refers to a concrete and legally [190] cognizable injury. A definition of commonality that says, in effect, "if you feel wronged, you have a claim" is a giant step away from precedent and the underlying premise of Rule 23, which is designed to efficiently handle claims recognized by law, not to create new claims. Cf. Shady Grove Orthopedic Assocs. v. Allstate Ins. Co., 130 S. Ct. 1431, 1442, 176 L. Ed. 2d 311 (2010) ("Congress authorized ... promulgat[ion] [of] rules of procedure subject to its review, 28 U.S.C. § 2072(a), but with the limitation that those rules 'shall not abridge, enlarge or modify any substantive right,' § 2072(b)."). Never before has any court, to my knowledge, tried to take the position effectively adopted by the Majority here, namely that, in deciding commonality, one need not be concerned [*344] with whether the alleged injuries of class members are legally cognizable.[6]

In stark contrast to the Majority's practically limitless definition of commonality is the measured definition provided by the Supreme Court in its recent decision in Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Dukes, 131 S. Ct. 2541, 180 L. Ed. 2d 374 (2011). The Court there clarified the meaning of "commonality" under Rule 23, saying that the concept is "easy to misread." Id. at 2551. In a passage particularly apropos of the Majority's new rule, the Supreme Court said:

> [A]ny competently crafted class complaint literally raises common 'questions,' For example: Do all of us plaintiffs indeed work for Wal-Mart? Do our managers have discretion over pay? Is that an unlawful employment practice? What remedies should we get? Reciting those questions is not sufficient to obtain class certification.

Id. (internal quotation marks and citations [192] omitted). Emphasizing a point that the Majority ignores, the Court explained that "'[w]hat matters to class certification ... is not the raising of common 'questions' — even in droves — but, rather the capacity of a classwide proceeding to generate answers apt to drive the resolution of the litigation.'"

[5] If one were actually to accept a test that looked solely at the behavior of the alleged wrongdoer, it would make no difference who was in the class. Thus, in this case, it would be appropriate to certify a class consisting of everyone on earth, regardless of diamond purchases, since the supposedly common questions would stay the same.

[6] While trying to distance itself from the consequences of its own ruling today, the Majority asserts that the "[indirect purchaser] class members ... possess a legally cognizable injury acknowledged in hornbook law, as their injuries are real, and stem not from simply feeling 'wronged,' as the dissent suggests ..., but from De Beers's alleged anticompetitive [191] conduct, conduct which antitrust laws forbid." (Slip Op. at 44-45.) If only my colleagues in the Majority actually applied that assertion, this dissent would be unnecessary, since the assertion concedes that (1) recovery should be preconditioned on the existence of an injury that is legally cognizable, and (2) whether an injury is legally cognizable depends on the operative substantive law.

Id. (quoting Richard A. Nagareda, Class Certification in the Age of Aggregate Proof 84 N.Y.U. L. Rev. 97, 132 (2009)). In other words, common questions must have answers that "will resolve an issue that is central to the validity of each one of the claims in one stroke." Id. Thus, as defined by Dukes, "common questions" are those that, because they have answers that will affect the validity of all class members' claims, can be said to be legally relevant.[7]

A [193] necessary corollary of that definition is that, for there to be any common questions, all class members must have at least some colorable legal claim.[8] Otherwise, it is nonsense to speak of "resolv[ing] an issue that is central to the validity of each one of the claims ...." Id. It cannot be sufficient, as the Concurring Opinion in this case suggests, simply for each class member to have "some pleaded claim." (Concurrence Slip Op. at 12.) Merely pleading a claim is not enough, because "Rule 23 does not set forth a mere pleading standard. A party seeking class certification must ... prove that there are in fact ... common questions of law or fact. ... [S]ometimes it may be necessary for the court to probe behind the pleadings before coming to rest on the certification question." [*345] Dukes, 131 S. Ct. at 2551 (internal quotation marks omitted); see In re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litig., 552 F.3d 305, 316 (3d Cir. 2008) ("[T]he requirements set out in Rule 23 are not mere pleading rules. The court may delve beyond the pleadings to determine whether the requirements for class certification are satisfied." (internal quotation marks and citations omitted)). As the panel opinion explained [194] it, "to obtain certification of an indirect purchaser class, plaintiffs would have to show that all class members share a right to recover for antitrust harms, such that one or more common issues affect all members' claims."[9] Sullivan, 613 F.3d at 154.

Dukes's instruction that, for questions to be "common" in the sense contemplated by Rule 23, their answers must affect the validity of claims, does not set forth a new principle.[10] In Amchem Products, Inc. v. Windsor, the Supreme Court, in a discussion of predominance, said that the common questions that matter are those "that qualify each class member's case as a genuine controversy." 521 U.S. 591, 623, 117 S. Ct. 2231, 138 L. Ed. 2d 689 (1997). It

[7] Similarly, if predominance means anything, it must mean that the resolution of something will actually affect somehow the claims of all class members. The claims might vary among the class members, but, at a minimum, some legal right to recover has to be held by everyone in the class.

[8] A colorable claim is one that at least "appear[s] to be true, valid, or right." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 301(9th ed. 2009). Requiring a district court to consider whether a claim appears to be valid before certifying class, when the court is expressly apprised of good reasons to doubt the same, does not transform the Rule 23 inquiry into one under Rule 12(b)(6), as I discuss infra.

[9] To the extent that the quoted statement, read in isolation, might suggest a rule that all class members had to share an antitrust claim, the context of the statement — coming after a discussion of other types of statutory or common law claims that might give rise to common questions — makes it clear that the panel was requiring only that all class members' right to recover arise from the same harm or injury — something unambiguously required under Supreme Court precedent. See, e.g., Dukes, 131 S.Ct. at 2551 ("Commonality requires the plaintiff to demonstrate [195] that the class members have suffered the same injury." (internal quotation marks omitted)).

[10] The following passage in the American Law Institute's Principles of the Law of Aggregate Litigation articulates this basic principle:

> The legal and factual issues involved in any individual civil claim are a function of applicable substantive law. ... Factual issues concern disputes about whether the evidence at trial demonstrates, under the applicable standard of proof, the existence of a given element. ... A factual issue may rise to the level of a common issue if ... a common body of evidence to be presented on behalf of multiple claimants at trial is capable of proving the existence of a material fact as to all such claimants.

ALI, Principles of Law: Aggregate Litigation § 2.01(b)(2010). Thus, the treatise supports the proposition that in order to satisfy Rule 23(b)(3)'s commonality requirement, there must be some "material" issue. Materiality is a "function of applicable substantive law." See id; In re Lemington Home for the Aged, 659 F.3d 282, 290 (3d Cir. 2011) ("A material fact is '[a] fact[] that might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law.'" (quoting Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986))). By necessary implication, if certain [197] members of the proposed class cannot assert a claim under either federal or state law, then there can be no common questions of law or fact that are "material."

seems self-evident that there can be no "genuine controversy" with respect to plaintiffs whose claims are nonexistent as a matter of substantive law. Likewise, in Hydrogen Peroxide, we noted that Rule 23 requires plaintiffs to show that the elements of their claim are "capable of proof at trial through evidence that is common to the class rather than individual to its members." 552 F.3d at 311-12. Again, for plaintiffs who lack any claim, there are certainly no elements of a claim that are "capable of proof," either common or individual. Accordingly, in assessing commonality or predominance, an inherent step is deciding that class members possess at least some legal basis for asserting [196] a claim.

By misconstruing Supreme Court precedent, the Majority denies that district courts have either the need or the power to take that essential step. My colleagues declare that "[a] court may inquire [at the class certification stage] whether the elements of asserted claims are capable of [*346] proof through common evidence, but lacks authority to adjudge the legal validity or soundness of the substantive elements of asserted claims." (Slip Op. at 55 (emphasis added).) However, the Majority's position is contrary to what the Supreme Court has just said in Dukes:

> A statement in one of our prior cases, Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacquelin, 417 U.S. 156, 177, 94 S. Ct. 2140, 40 L. Ed. 2d 732 (1974), is sometimes mistakenly cited ...: "We find nothing in either the language or history of Rule 23 that gives a court any authority to conduct a preliminary inquiry into the merits of a suit in order to determine whether it may be maintained as a class action." But in that case, the judge had conducted a preliminary inquiry into the merits of a suit, not in order to determine the propriety [198] of certification under Rules 23(a) and (b) (he had already done that, see id. at 165), but in order to shift the cost of notice required by Rule 23(c)(2) from the plaintiff to the defendants. To the extent the quoted statement goes beyond the permissibility of a merits inquiry for any other pretrial purpose, it is the purest dictum and is contradicted by our other cases.

131 S. Ct. at 2552. Thus, any suggestion that a district court is prevented from "adjudging the legal validity or soundness of the substantive elements of asserted claims" at the class certification stage is clearly mistaken after Dukes. That should already have been clear, however, from our statement in Hydrogen Peroxide that "[a] concern for merits-avoidance should not be talismanically invoked to artificially limit a trial court's examination of the factors necessary to a reasoned determination of whether a plaintiff has met her burden of establishing each of the Rule 23 class action requirements." 552 F.3d at 318 n.17 (internal quotation marks omitted).

The Majority repeatedly suggests that requiring adherence to substantive law would "introduce a Rule 12(b)(6) inquiry as to every claim in the class." (Slip Op. at [199] 54.) More specifically, my colleagues in the Majority say that, if my approach were followed, "district courts would be obligated at the class certification stage to, sua sponte, conduct a thorough Rule 12(b)(6) analysis of every ... claim to ensure that each plaintiff ... possesses a valid cause of action ... ." (Slip Op. at 61.) That characterization is incorrect. Rather, I advocate a procedure essentially identical to the one that occurred here: A district court is approached with a class complaint requesting relief under a variety of state statutes. Because of differences among those statutes, it is clear that some class members are entirely without a cognizable claim. Objectors bring those issues to the district court's attention. Because "such variances ... are so significant as to defeat commonality and predominance even in a settlement class certification," In re Warfarin Sodium Antitrust Litig., 391 F.3d 516, 529-30 (3d Cir. 2004) (hereinafter "Warfarin Sodium II"), the district court should deny certification. Assuming the parties revise the class to eliminate claims clearly lacking a colorable legal basis, and assuming the class otherwise satisfies Rule 23, the district [200] court could then certify the class.[11]

[11] There are at least two other problems with the Majority's assertion that "[t]o adopt the position of the dissent and the objectors is to introduce a Rule 12(b)(6) inquiry as to every claim in the class before a class may be certified." (Slip Op. at 59.) First, it ducks the difficulty at the center of this case, which is not and never has been about merely dubious claims. Claims that are of doubtful quality still have, as the adjective indicates, some doubt about them, which means they still retain at least some superficial possibility of being valid. Such claims, because they cling to that possibility, will typically not need to cause a district judge any agita in addressing the certification of a class for settlement purposes. The central problem in this case, however, goes beyond factual disputes or debatable points of law. The problem here is that there are class members who, according to the plain terms of controlling law, have no claim at all, not even a dubious one. We are not rightfully at liberty to ignore that, nor was the District Court. The second problem with the Majority's parade-of-horribles rhetoric in response to the suggestion

[*347] Note that the court in this hypothetical has neither performed a Rule 12(b)(6) inquiry, nor conducted an individualized assessment of claims.[12] It has simply engaged in a straightforward analysis of the applicable law. This is by no means unusual in considering the certification of a settlement [202] class. In Prudential, the plaintiffs "compiled a series of charts setting forth comprehensive analyses of the various states' laws potentially applicable to their common law claims." 148 F.3d at 315 (internal quotation marks omitted). There, we concurred with the district court's conclusion that "the elements of the[] common law claims are substantially similar and any differences fall into a limited number of predictable patterns." Id.

In short, I have proposed only what the law has heretofore [204] always required: one must actually have a legal claim before getting in line for a legal recovery. When objections are raised that persuasively demonstrate that a portion of a proposed class does not have any such claim, courts of law are obliged to follow the law. That is the circumstance we face, as was detailed at length in the panel opinion and is again described briefly herein.

[*348] III. Some Class Members Lack A Claim

As noted by the Majority, the indirect purchasers in the consolidated actions "sought damages pursuant only to state antitrust, consumer protection, and unjust enrichment statutes and common law." (Slip Op. at 16.) Unlike the direct purchasers, the indirect purchasers did not seek damages under federal law, because, pursuant to the Supreme Court's decision in Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977), only direct purchasers may bring an antitrust claim under federal law.

Although most states have traditionally followed federal law in interpreting their own state antitrust laws, some have enacted "Illinois Brick Repealers," rejecting the rule that only direct purchasers may recover for an antitrust violation. See, e.g., Cal Bus. & Prof. Code § 16750(a). By contrast, [205] others have expressly followed Illinois Brick and declared unequivocally that, in their states, indirect purchasers lack standing to bring a claim. See, e.g., Johnson v. Microsoft Corp., 106 Ohio St. 3d 278, 2005 Ohio 4985, 834 N.E.2d 791, 798 (Ohio 2005). Several states have been even more precise, explaining that indirect purchasers lack standing to bring what is effectively an antitrust claim, regardless of how the claim is labeled, so that recovery is precluded even if, for example, it is sought

[201] that class members should actually have claims (see Slip Op. at 60-66) is that objectors have always been entitled to raise a legal challenge to claims being included in a class, even a settlement class. Cf. Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 320 ("[A] district court exercising proper discretion in deciding whether to certify a class will ... make findings that each Rule 23 requirement is met or not met, having considered all relevant evidence and arguments presented by the parties."). In other words, district courts have always been required to ensure that the requisites of Rule 23 have been met, and that includes an obligation to address the non-frivolous arguments and objections that are put to them. A court does not need to assess sua sponte every potential problem, nor need it engage in "an intensive cataloguing of each class member's claim" (Slip Op. at 62), but it must give objections their due.

[12] The Majority's recoiling at the individualized assessment of claims also reflects a failure to appreciate that some such assessment does typically take place at some point during the settlement process. The parties share a common interest in ensuring that individuals falling outside the class do not share the benefits of the settlement. For that reason, a class member here must submit a proof of claim demonstrating his or her purchase of a diamond within the relevant time period. As is often the case, parties to an antitrust settlement want to ensure that individuals seeking a share of the settlement actually bought a product with an allegedly inflated price, demonstrating their membership in the class. See Warfarin Sodium II, 391 F.3d at 525. Some [203] settlements create elaborate systems for evaluating not only the validity but the severity of each class member's injury. See In re Prudential Sales Co. Am. Sales Practice Litig. Agent Actions, 148 F.3d 283, 295-96 (3d Cir. 1998). These proofs of claim are rarely evaluated by the court. "Although the court has general supervisory powers over settlements, it usually does not handle the actual administration. As a rule, the administration is delegated either to a special master or to the plaintiff's counsel or a committee of counsel." 4 Alba Conte & Herbert Newberg, Newberg on Class Actions § 11:33 at 68-69 (4th ed. 2002). It is universally recognized that the special master, committee, or other body created to administer the settlement agreement is responsible for evaluating the validity of claims and calculating the individualized recovery of a particular class member. See David F. Herr, Manual for Complex Litigation § 21.661 (4th ed. 2011) ("The administrator or special master may be charged with reviewing the claims and deciding whether to allow claims that are late, deficient in documentation, or questionable for other reasons.").

under a consumer protection act ("CPA") or the common law. See, e.g., Abbott Labs., Inc. (Ross Labs. Div.) v. Segura, 907 S.W.2d 503, 507 (Tex. 1995) ("We will not interpret the [Texas CPA] in a manner that rewards creative pleading at the expense of consistent application of legal principles. ... Our holding today only forecloses the recovery of damages for seeking a prohibited antitrust recovery under the masquerade of our [CPA]."); Johnson, 834 N.E.2d at 801 (holding that Ohio antitrust statute "provides the exclusive remedy for" claims predicated upon "monopolistic pricing practices," and thus dismissing claims under Ohio's CPA and common law). In at least some states, then, indirect purchasers are absolutely precluded [206] from bringing an antitrust claim, no matter how they dress it up.[13]

[*349] Nevertheless, the Majority declares that those class members whose claims purportedly arise in states that preclude indirect purchaser recovery can still be part of the indirect purchaser class. The Majority offers two arguments in support of that conclusion. First, noting that indirect purchasers lack only statutory standing under Illinois Brick, rather than Article III standing, the Majority [208] asserts that "statutory standing is simply another element of proof for an antitrust claim, rather than a predicate for asserting a claim in the first place." (Slip Op. at 59.) The Majority does not cite any authority to support that assertion, and there is reason to doubt it.[14] But, in any

[13] For a more detailed discussion of which states preclude claims entirely, see Sullivan, 613 F.3d at 147-48 & n.10-11, 150-51. According to the Majority, the panel opinion "undertook a wide-ranging fact-finding review of state antitrust statutes ... ." (Slip Op. at 29.) That description is puzzling, however, because there was no fact-finding involved. The review of state law was just that: a review of law. The panel opinion took the very ordinary approach of examining the laws on which the plaintiffs purported to base their claims, including state antitrust laws. The opinion also stated:

> We are certainly not saying that nuanced differences among state laws will prevent the certification of a class, nor are we suggesting that a state-by-state cataloguing of differences in state law is necessary every time a multi-jurisdiction class is certified. We are saying that the difference between having an antitrust claim under state law and having none is no mere nuance and cannot be solved by any reconfiguration of the nationwide class short of changing it from a nationwide class to one or more classes that exclude those who [207] have no claim.

Sullivan, 613 F.3d at 148 n.12. Both the Majority and the Concurring Opinions claim that it is wrong for us to pay attention to the differences in state law because, as the Concurrence puts it, "trial courts would be obligated at the settlement class certification stage to decide which state's law would govern ... ." (Concurrence Slip Op. at 9.) It bears repeating, then, that nothing said by the panel opinion or in this dissent would entail the cataloguing of differences in state law in the mine run of cases. However, when, as in this case, an objection has been raised pointing out that there is a body of claims that are undeniably impermissible under the law of the state which governs them, we are not free to shirk the responsibility of separating those unfounded claims from the class.

[14] It is not clear, to begin with, that the Majority's "statutory standing" label accurately describes the substantive law of the several states denying a claim to indirect purchasers. That aside, and although a dismissal for lack of statutory standing may be viewed as akin to a dismissal under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6), see Baldwin v. Univ. of Pittsburgh Med. Ctr., 636 F.3d 69, 73 (3d Cir. 2011) (noting that "[a] dismissal for lack of statutory standing is effectively the same as a dismissal for failure to state a claim"), compelling authority teaches that the absence of statutory standing can also implicate the court's power to adjudicate a dispute under Article III, see Steel Co. v. Citizens for a Better Environment, 523 U.S. 83, 89, 118 S. Ct. 1003, 140 L. Ed. 2d 210 (1998) ("Dismissal for lack of subject-matter [210] jurisdiction because of the adequacy of the federal claim is proper ... when the claim is so insubstantial, implausible, foreclosed by prior decisions of this Court, or otherwise completely devoid of merit as not to involve a federal controversy." (internal quotation marks omitted)). We have suggested this ourselves, see Malaysia Int'l Shipping Corp. v. Sinochem Int'l Co. Ltd., 436 F.3d 349, 359 (3d Cir. 2006) (stating that "non-Article III jurisdictional issues like statutory standing" fit within a category of cases somewhere between cases that have "jurisdictional issues that cannot be bypassed because Article III of our Constitution requires that they be addressed" and cases "with merits-related issues, which cannot be reached without first verifying jurisdiction" (internal citations and quotation marks omitted)), rev'd on other grounds, 549 U.S. 422, 127 S. Ct. 1184, 167 L. Ed. 2d 15 (2007), and other circuits have held the same, see Crawford v. Lamantia, 34 F.3d 28, 32 (1st Cir. 1994) (statutory standing under ERISA) ("[W]e note that the basis for '[s]tanding, since it goes to the very power of the court to act, must exist at all stages of the proceeding, and not merely when the action is initiated or during an [211] initial appeal.'"); Alexander v. Anheuser Busch Co., 990 F.2d 536, 538 (10th Cir. 1993) (statutory standing under ERISA) ("In reviewing Alexander's ERISA claims, we raise, sua sponte, the question whether he has standing to bring such claims. The issue of standing is jurisdictional in nature."); Sommers Drug Stores Co. Employee Profit Sharing Trust v.

event, it misses the point. Even if the Majority's ipse dixit were true as to antitrust claims under federal law, there is no basis for saying it is so with respect to claims under the laws of the several states that have adopted the ultimate holding of Illinois Brick. Indeed, in several of those states, courts have indicated that indirect purchasers are barred from asserting a claim because they lack standing.[15] For instance, the Ohio Supreme Court has stated that "an indirect [*350] purchaser of goods may not assert a Valentine Act [, i.e., a state antitrust act] claim for alleged violations of Ohio antitrust law." Johnson, 834 N.E.2d at 798. Likewise, the New Jersey Supreme Court has held that "indirect purchasers ... have no standing to assert a private right of action under the New Jersey Antitrust Act." Wilson v. Gen. Motors Corp., 190 N.J. 336, 921 A.2d 414, 416 (N.J. 2007). The Connecticut Supreme Court has [209] said the same, explaining that Connecticut law allows "only those consumers who purchase directly from the antitrust defendant to bring suit under our state antitrust law." Vacco v. Microsoft Corp., 260 Conn. 59, 793 A.2d 1048, 1058 (Conn. 2002). Thus, it is clear that there are states that decidedly do treat statutory standing[16] as "a predicate for asserting a claim in the first place." (Slip Op. at 59.)

Second, the Majority asserts, using the Ohio Supreme Court's Johnson case as an example, that "although Johnson provides that an indirect purchaser lacking an antitrust claim under Illinois Brick cannot circumvent this limitation by relying upon the Ohio consumer protection statute, the Ohio Supreme Court did not, nor could it, preclude consumer protection claims predicated [213] on fraud or deception." (Id. at 64 n.39.) The Majority then says that "claims settled here include allegations of fraud and deception separate from the antitrust allegations." (Id. at 64 n.39.) While the Majority is correct that Ohio does not "preclude consumer protection claims predicated on fraud or deception," it is not correct that such claims were brought in this case under the Ohio CPA — or under the CPA of any state following Illinois Brick. Of the seven complaints covered by the proposed class action settlement, only two made allegations referencing violations of the Ohio CPA, Sullivan v. DB Investments, Inc., No. 04-cv-02819 (D.N.J.) and Null v. DB Investments, Inc., No. 05-L-209 (S.D. Ill.), and both of those complaints predicated their Ohio CPA claims on monopolistic pricing practices. In Sullivan, the only allegation with respect to the Ohio CPA is that "Defendants' contract, combination and conspiracy in unreasonable restraint of trade and to monopolize and defendants' monopolization constitute a violation of various state antitrust and/or consumer protection and deceptive and unfair business practices acts and laws." (App. at 652 ¶ 47.) Likewise, the allegations in Null [214] are that the CPA "laws of the various states" were violated "through one or more of the following unfair and/or deceptive acts and/or practices: illegally and artificially restraining trade and increasing the price of diamonds by controlling inventory, limiting supply, restricting purchase and falsely advertising the scarceness of diamonds." (App. at 629 ¶ 61, 626 ¶ 45.) Thus, the only claims brought under the Ohio CPA in any of the class actions now at issue were "predicated upon monopolistic pricing practices," and, therefore, according to the highest court in Ohio, those claims are precluded. Johnson, 834 N.E.2d at 801.

Corrigan, 883 F.2d 345, 349 (5th Cir. 1989) (statutory standing under ERISA) ("We have recognized, however, that standing is essential to the exercise of jurisdiction, and that lack of standing can be raised at any time by a party or by the court."); cf. Mainstreet Org. of Realtors v. Calumet City, 505 F.3d 742, 747 (7th Cir. 2007) (Posner, J.) (describing lack of statutory standing under Illinois Brick as "not jurisdictional, at least in the conventional sense[,]" but nonetheless "belong[ing] to an intermediate class of cases in which a court can notice an error and reverse on the basis of it even though no party has noticed it").

[15] Whether a party has standing under Article III is a distinct inquiry from whether the party may assert a cause of action under state or federal law. In Bond v. United States, 131 S. Ct. 2355, 2362, 180 L. Ed. 2d 269 (2011), [212] the Supreme Court made clear that a party may have standing under Article III, but fail to assert a cause of action under state law. See id. at 2362 ("Still, the question whether a plaintiff states a claim for relief 'goes to the merits' in the typical case, not the justiciability of a dispute, and conflation of the two concepts can cause confusion." (internal citation and quotation marks omitted)). However, even assuming indirect purchasers have standing under Article III, they have no claim under federal law and many of them lack standing to assert any claim under relevant state law. Because the proposed class includes such individuals, it cannot satisfy Rule 23(b)(3)'s commonality requirement.

[16] Again, assuming that "statutory standing" is the appropriate description of the principle under state law. See supra n. 13.

Moreover, even if any of the complaints could be construed as raising claims for fraud under some state CPAs,[17] those [*351] claims were, it appears, never brought to the attention of, or considered by, the District Court, nor were they raised before the Panel. As a result, the District Court made no findings with respect to fraud claims under state CPAs, including whether the elements of those claims could be proven by "evidence common to the class," as required by Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 325. Of the five common questions identified by the District Court, none pertain [215] to fraud.[18] Thus, even if there were fraud claims for all class members — which, for the reasons I have identified, there are not — there has been no finding of commonality and predominance with respect to those claims and, therefore, the District Court's class certification cannot rightly be affirmed on that basis.

The bottom line is that, as to those class members who purport to bring claims under the laws of states following Illinois Brick, the status of being an indirect purchaser is not only the gateway to membership in the class, it is what entirely disqualifies them from asserting any claim based on De Beers's price-fixing conduct. That is a straightforward application of state law.[19] The class thus includes members who are barred from asserting a claim in the first place. And, because those class members lack any claim, there are no questions common to all class members for which the answers "will resolve an issue that is central to the validity of each one of the claims." Dukes, 131 S.Ct. at 2551. Consequently, pursuant to long-standing principles of aggregate [217] litigation, most recently reaffirmed in Dukes, there is neither commonality nor predominance under Rule 23.[20]

---

[17] The Majority uses Ohio's CPA as an example and does not discuss whether fraud claims were brought under the CPAs of other states following Illinois Brick. Nonetheless, the pleading deficiency is the same for allegations involving the laws of other states. The Sullivan and Null complaints are the only complaints to invoke the CPAs of the states following Illinois Brick and, as discussed above, neither of those complaints allege fraud; they merely pin the "fraud" label on the price-fixing behavior at issue. Consequently, there is no claim for fraud under the laws of any state adhering to Illinois Brick.

[18] Those questions are:

> (a) Whether [D]efendants combined or conspired with others to fix, raise, stabilize and maintain the prices of polished diamonds;
> (b) Whether [D]efendants monopolized or combined or conspired with others to monopolize the supply of polished diamonds;
> (c) [216] Whether [D]efendants' conduct caused the prices of polished diamonds to be maintained at higher levels than would exist in a competitive market;
> (d) Whether [P]laintiffs and the Class[es] are entitled to injunctive relief; and
> (e) Whether [D]efendants' conduct caused injury to the business or property of [P]laintiffs and the other [Class and] Subclass Members and, if so, the appropriate class-wide measure of damages.

(App. at 276.)

[19] In its effort to diminish the significance of the state laws denying a cause of action to indirect purchasers, the Majority likens those laws to pre-suit notice requirements or other issues of form that may vary from state to state. (Slip Op. at 65.) But we are not talking here about the niceties of notice. In a class action invoking the laws of multiple jurisdictions, there will often be variations in the law pertaining to how a particular claim is to be presented. Those variations may at times be framed as prerequisites to the bringing of a cause of action or restrictions on the manner in which the action is brought. Were the aggregated claims to be brought individually, those prerequisites would in all likelihood be met on a claim-by-claim basis, but, since the claims are aggregated, those prerequisites are appropriately bypassed. They amount to nothing more than variations in form, not in kind, and neither the panel opinion in this case nor the objectors nor this dissent have advocated the elevation of form over substance. Differences in form are not at issue here; it [218] is the very existence of any cause of action at all that is at stake. The distinction is crucial.

[20] I am not suggesting that no class of indirect purchasers could have been certified here. On the contrary, as the panel opinion noted,

> It may be that the antitrust and consumer protection statutes in a more limited number of states are sufficiently similar that common issues of law or fact would predominate with respect to plaintiffs in those jurisdictions. However, it was improper

[*352] IV. The Rules Enabling Act and Federalism

In addition to violating the terms of Rule 23, certifying this class violates the Rules Enabling Act and basic principles of federalism. The Rules Enabling Act authorizes the creation of "rules of practice and procedure," but states that "[s]uch rules shall not abridge, enlarge, or modify any substantive right." 28 U.S.C. § 2072(a), (b). In Dukes, the Supreme Court highlighted the [219] role of the Rules Enabling Act in class certification decisions, holding that, "[b]ecause the Rules Enabling Act forbids interpreting Rule 23 to 'abridge, enlarge or modify any substantive right,'" the proposed class could not be certified because it would have abridged Wal-Mart's statutory right to litigate certain defenses. 131 S.Ct. at 2561 (quoting 28 U.S.C. § 2072(b)). That point is consistent with the Court's past cautionary statements that an overly expansive reading of Rule 23 will violate the Rules Enabling Act. See Ortiz v. Fibreboard Corp., 527 U.S. 815, 845, 119 S. Ct. 2295, 144 L. Ed. 2d 715 (1999) ("The Rules Enabling Act underscores the need for caution. As we said in Amchem, no reading of the rule can ignore the Act's mandate that rules of procedure shall not abridge, enlarge, or modify any substantive right." (internal quotation marks omitted)); Amchem, 521 U.S. at 613 ("We therefore follow the path taken by the Court of Appeals, mindful that Rule 23's requirements must be interpreted in keeping with Article III's constraints, and with the Rules Enabling Act, which instructs that rules of procedure 'shall not abridge, enlarge or modify any substantive right.'" (quoting 28 U.S.C. § 2072(b))).

In this case, [220] by approving certification of the indirect purchaser class, the Majority proceeds heedless of that advice and endorses the enlarging of substantive rights. Using the Majority's example of a member of the indirect purchaser class asserting under Ohio law a claim based on De Beers's price-fixing, it is indisputable that the same member would, if he tried to bring his claim individually in an Ohio court, be immediately shown the exit.[21] [*353] Controlling law allows no result but dismissal of such a claim. But, under the Majority's class action certification theory, that individual now has a right to share in the settlement fund based on a claim he is otherwise forbidden to bring. If that is not an enlargement or modification of substantive rights, it is hard to know what would be. Cf. Shady Grove Orthopedic Assocs., 130 S. Ct. at 1442 (stating that, for purposes of the Rules Enabling Act, a rule is substantive in nature if it alters the rules of decision by which courts adjudicate rights). The Majority seems to have a "no harm, no foul" feeling about dispensing new rights, but legitimate class members are harmed. If we enforced substantive law as we ought to, those who actually have claims [221] would not be required to share the proceeds of a proper settlement with those who do not.[22] > for the District Court to certify a nationwide class of plaintiffs based on state law when many states withhold antitrust standing from indirect purchasers and where the variability in consumer protection and unjust enrichment law in a context like this is extreme.

Sullivan, 613 F.3d at 153-54.

[21] The Majority tries to deny this, saying that a state court would only dismiss the invalid claim upon a motion by the defendant. (Slip Op. at 71 n.43.) But the procedural mechanism that prompts application of substantive law is irrelevant. Whether or not a motion brings to light a claim's fatal flaw, the flaw is there. To continue with the Ohio law example, there is clearly no colorable claim for an indirect purchaser, and that is true whether or not a defendant chooses to file a motion to dismiss. Ohio law does not depend on the whim of De Beers or any other defendant. It is telling that the Majority's rejoinder on this point is, in effect, "yes, the claimant could be tossed out of state court, but only if there were a motion." That seems a concession that the differing results that now obtain in this Circuit and in Ohio state courts reflect an expansion of substantive rights. As to the "there must be a motion" comment, irrelevant and of questionable accuracy though it may be, it prompts re-emphasis of this fact: there was a motion in this case, in the form of the objections to the nationwide [222] settlement of the indirect purchaser class. Thus, the legal problem was squarely before the District Court, as it is now before us. It does not matter that the motion came from someone other than De Beers. The issue has been raised and cannot be dodged by saying no one brought it up. Nor can it be avoided by saying that De Beers could have settled an individual suit in Ohio. We are obviously not dealing with the settlement of a dispute between private parties in Ohio state court; we are dealing with a class action settlement binding on absent parties and sanctioned by a federal court purporting to apply Ohio law.

[22] Herein lies a fundamental flaw in the Concurring Opinion as well, which takes the view that "[u]nder Amchem the significance of variations in state law is properly assessed in terms of the interests of absent class members[,]" and that here class members from states adhering to Illinois Brick "have lost nothing through inclusion in the class." (Concurrence Slip Op. at 10 n.7.) Very Certifying the indirect purchaser class is, for the same reasons, contrary to principles of federalism. The policy decisions of the constituent states of our country are "fundamental aspect[s] of our federal republic and must not be overridden in a quest to clear the queue in court." In re Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc., 288 F.3d 1012, 1020 (7th Cir. 2002). When one of those states says to its citizens "you have no claim" — and the law covering many of the class members here is just that clear — but those under that edict nevertheless are joined in a class with people who do have a claim, by what logical process consistent with federalism can aggregating the "haves" and the "have-nots" imbue those "have-nots" with the very claim that the state has said is foreclosed [224] to them? There is no sound answer to that question. There is only the Majority's and the Concurrence's policy preference, in derogation of controlling state law, for "global peace" through unfettered access to class action settlements.[23]

My colleagues in the Majority of course dispute that certifying this class implicates either the Rules Enabling Act or federalism. [*354] With respect to the Rules Enabling Act, they say that there has been a "voluntary settlement agreement between parties" (Slip Op. at 70 (quoting Ehrheart v. Verizon Wireless, 609 F.3d 590, 593 (3d Cir. 2010)), and "a district court's certification of a settlement simply recognizes [225] the parties' deliberate decision to bind themselves according to mutually agreed-upon terms without engaging in any substantive adjudication of the underlying causes of action" (id.). That may be so when a settlement involves only private parties who all participate in the settlement process, but it is not true in a class action settlement. In that latter context, the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure require district courts to be intimately involved, because the approval of a class action settlement gives the government's imprimatur to the terms of the settlement and binds absent parties.[24] As already discussed, a court is not supposed to certify a class without determining that there is a "genuine controversy" or, in other words, that there is at least some legal basis for class members to claim relief. If a district court credits potential class members with having a valid claim when the underlying state law says there is none, the court has, by definition, enlarged and modified those class members' rights.

Moreover, while De Beers is now pleased to stipulate to liability in all fifty states, and, for its own purposes, is willing to forego legal arguments that it could have raised about the substantive rights of class members, a defendant's willingness to waive an argument is not a reason to ignore it. It is rather the very reason that collusive settlements are a problem. No matter how much De Beers wants to bind everyone in America, and no matter how much the attorneys involved stand to gain from their percentage of the settlement, and no matter how laudatory the "global" resolution of a price-fixing case may be as policy matter, there are limits on the power of federal courts to facilitate settlements and bind absent class members and objectors. [227] Amchem admonishes courts approving settlement classes to pay "undiluted, even heightened, attention" to issues of predominance as well as to the other requirements of Rule 23 to ensure that a certified class is not overbroad. 521 U.S. at 620. Approving a class certification that groups together plaintiffs who have claims with those who plainly do not results in such a class.

true. The problem here is not that some absent class members who deserve compensation are left out by the settlement. The problem is that some class members who deserve nothing are included in [223] the settlement and hence are diluting the recovery of those who are entitled to make claims. That harm is real, and the cause of it, the overbreadth of the class, is akin to the problem in Amchem. See Amchem, 521 U.S. at 620 ("But other specifications of [Rule 23] — those designed to protect absentees by blocking unwarranted or overbroad class definitions — demand undiluted, even heightened, attention in the settlement context.").

[23] The Majority cites Warfarin Sodium II in an effort to justify its decision today, but we were careful to say in that case that "there may be situations where variations in state law are so significant so as to defeat commonality and predominance even in a settlement class." 391 F.3d at 529. That observation seems obvious and unassailable, and we are presented here with exactly that kind of situation. If we cannot bring ourselves to say plainly that the certification here was improper, one is forced to wonder what limit is left on the reach of Rule 23.

[24] The Majority also writes that, in Prudential, "we agreed with the district court that 'approval of a settlement under Rule 23 merely recognizes the parties' voluntary compromise [226] of their rights and does not itself affect their substantive state law rights," and, therefore, held that "the proposed settlement could not violate the Rules Enabling Act." (Slip Op. at 70 (quoting Prudential, 148 F.3d at 324).) However, we also held in Prudential that the proposed settlement was not contrary to the cited state law, and, therefore, the Rules Enabling Act could not possibly have been implicated. Prudential, 148 F.3d at 324 & n.77.

Furthermore, while the Majority speculates that the approach I suggest will seriously impede class action settlements, it is far from clear that limiting class certification to people who have legal claims would actually undermine the goal of global peace. Indeed, as the Concurrence acknowledges, similar concerns in other cases have proved largely unfounded. (Concurrence Slip Op. at 2.) But even if one assumes that the Majority's concerns about "global peace" have some merit, Rule 23 remains the sole benchmark for determining whether a settlement class can be certified. In Amchem, the Supreme Court reiterated that point over Justice Breyer's criticism that the Court had given insufficient weight to the value of settlement. See Amchem, 521 U.S. at 629 ("Rule 23, which must [*355] be interpreted with fidelity to the Rules [228] Enabling Act and applied with the interests of absent class members in close view, cannot carry the large load CCR, class counsel, and the District Court heaped upon it."); id. (Breyer, J., dissenting) ("I believe that the need for settlement of this mass tort case, with hundreds and thousands of lawsuits, is greater than the Court's opinion suggests."). In Ortiz, the Court rejected a settlement expressly designed for "total peace," 527 U.S. at 864-65, even as several justices acknowledged the need for a resolution to the "elephantine mass of asbestos cases," id. at 865 (Rehnquist, C.J., concurring). We are not free to rewrite the requirements of Rule 23 simply because it would allegedly advance the goal of global peace.

The Majority also dismisses any federalism concern, reasoning that the policy concerns behind Illinois Brick do not apply. As the Majority sees it, "Illinois Brick's restriction on indirect purchaser recovery was motivated by prudential concerns for manageability; it does not reflect a categorical policy judgment that indirect purchasers do not merit antitrust protection." (Slip Op. at 72.) Thus, says the Majority, because the "District Court's certification order did [229] not undermine these prudential concerns," the District Court did not "inappropriately subordinate[] state sovereignty in certifying the class." (Slip Op. at 74-75.) But regardless of the Majority's novel views about the policy judgments underlying Illinois Brick and whether "indirect purchasers ... merit antitrust protection," the states which have chosen to follow Illinois Brick have decided — and plainly stated — that indirect purchasers have no substantive right to recovery under their laws. Principles of federalism do not permit us to write our own exceptions into unambiguous state laws simply because we think that the states would see things differently if only they had our policy insights.[25] Somehow, though, the Majority thinks that "the class settlement posture of this case largely marginalizes the objectors' concern that state law variations undermine a finding of predominance." (Slip Op. at 49.) Once again, the promise of settlement trumps everything else, even variations in state laws as wide as "you have a claim" versus "you have none."

V. Conclusion

I cannot voice strongly enough my disagreement with this elevation of settlement to the status of ultimate and overriding good. (See Slip Op. at 66 ("[W]ere we to mandate that a class include only those alleging 'colorable' claims, we would effectively rule out the ability of a defendant to achieve 'global peace' by obtaining releases from all those who might wish to assert claims, meritorious or not."). It has been aptly observed that "[s]ocial peace is not the Article III mission." Paul D. Carrington & Derek P. Apanovitch, The Constitutional Limits of Judicial Rulemaking: the Illegitimacy of Mass-Tort Settlements Negotiated Under Federal Rule 23, [231] 39 Ariz. L. Rev. 461, 475 (1997). Rather, we are to "decide cases or controversies." Id. Social [*356] peace becomes a natural and very welcome byproduct of focusing on that specific mission, "because for every carefully wrought judicial decision, there may be hundreds or thousands of matters that are privately resolved 'in the shadow' of the law." Id.

On its own terms, then, the Majority's decision is short-sighted and counterproductive. In the interest of short-term peace, it sacrifices long-term legitimacy and, with that, a more stable, lasting peace. By failing to enforce the limits of Rule 23, today's decision will encourage frivolous class action claims and have the predictable consequence of weakening the incentives — the sheltering shadow — under which non-frivolous disputes would otherwise be properly resolved.

[25] The Concurring Opinion's assertion that the settlement of a class action is merely "a contract between the parties" (Concurrence Slip Op. [230] at 12) misses this point, though the opinion adds a reference to Rule 23 (id. at 12-13 n.8). The states have an interest in not having their laws strained beyond recognition or ignored entirely. A class action settlement, whether it involves a settlement or a litigation class, is not simply a private contract. If it were, it would not need court approval, and federal courts called upon to supervise class actions, including resulting settlements, are obligated to see that Rule 23 does not become a tool for modifying state law.

In sum, when a federal court issues an order certifying that there are questions of fact or law common to all class members, it necessarily concludes, whether explicitly stated or not, that all class members have at least some colorable legal claim. When there are members of a putative class who do not, under the operative substantive law in a case, have a colorable claim, certification [232] of the class enlarges the substantive rights of those members. Any such order is thus a violation of the Rules Enabling Act, and, when it occurs in a class whose only claims are based in state law, it also violates core principles of federalism. The damage done by that judicial usurpation is not made better by invoking the benefits of social peace through litigation settlement. Private parties have a free hand in settling their own disputes, but class action settlements require federal courts to determine the rights and obligations of people who are not there to speak for themselves — hence the Supreme Court's insistence that class action settlements "demand undiluted, even heightened, attention ...," especially when there is a risk of "unwarranted or overbroad class definitions," Amchem, 521 U.S. at 620. That risk has been realized here.

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

On June 22, 2010, defendant, Wachovia Bank, N.A. (Wachovia), removed this action from the 164th Judicial District Court of Harris County, Texas, where it was pending under Case No. 2010-33526 (Docket Entry No. 1). Pending before the court are Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment and Brief in Support (Docket Entry No. 22), Plaintiffs' Objection and Motion to Strike Affidavit (Docket Entry No. 30), Plaintiffs' request to amend included in their Response to Defendant's First Amended Motion to Dismiss (Docket Entry No. 39), Defendant's Motion for Adequate Protection (Docket Entry No. 41), Defendant's Corrected First Amended Motion to Dismiss Pursuant to FRCP 12(b)(6) (Docket Entry No. 43), and Counter-Plaintiff's Motion for Leave to File First Amended Counterclaim (Docket Entry No. 46). For the reasons explained below, plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment, objection and [*2] motion to strike affidavit, and request to amend will be denied. Defendant's motions to dismiss and for adequate protection will be granted in part and denied in part, and defendant's motion to file first amended counterclaim will be granted.

I. Factual and Procedural Background

Plaintiffs allege that in 2003 Rocky Emery executed a promissory note ("Note") payable to World Savings in the amount of $667,000.00 for an adjustable rate mortgage that the plaintiffs used to purchase a new home located at 2607 Sara Ridge Lane, Katy, Texas. The promissory note was secured by a deed of trust to the real property, which was executed by both Rocky Emery and his wife, Julie Emery. The property at issue is the plaintiffs' homestead. After the loan closed monthly payments of approximately $3,000.00 were drawn from Rocky Emery's personal bank account. In 2007 or 2008 Wachovia Bank purchased World Savings, including Rocky Emery's promissory note. Plaintiffs allege that in 2008 Wachovia over-charged Rocky Emery approximately $100,000.00 in mortgage payments. In 2009 Rocky Emery was unable to pay the 2008 property taxes on the home. Plaintiffs allege that Rocky Emery contracted with Wachovia to pay the [*3] taxes and have the amount added to the promissory note, thereby increasing the monthly payment to approximately $6,000.00. However, when plaintiffs attempted to submit the new payment amount, Wachovia refused to accept it insisting, instead, that the new monthly payment should be approximately $9,000.00 -- an amount sufficient to pay for insurance on the property. Because Rocky Emery maintained insurance on the property, the Emerys' refused to pay the $9,000.00 per month that Wachovia demanded.[1]

In approximately March of 2009 Rocky Emery applied for mortgage assistance from various government programs. Plaintiffs allege that once applications for such assistance were submitted mortgage payments were supposed to be suspended or stayed until a decision was made on their applications, but that Wachovia did not suspend or stay their mortgage payments. In approximately January of 2010, after having his applications for three separate mortgage assistance programs denied, Rocky Emery learned that Wachovia claimed that he owed between $30,000.00 and $60,000.00 in back mortgage payments, and these amounts included charges for insurance that Wachovia had improperly obtained. In May of 2010 plaintiffs [*4] learned that Wachovia intended to foreclose on Rocky Emery's promissory note on the first Monday of June 2010. Plaintiffs unsuccessfully contacted Wachovia in an effort to cure the alleged default. Plaintiffs allege that they did not receive written notice of foreclosure from Wachovia and that Wachovia did not follow the procedural and notice requirements pertaining to non-judicial foreclosures stated in Chapter 51 of the Texas Property Code.[2]

On May 28, 2010, plaintiffs filed an action in the 164th District Court of Harris County, Texas, styled Rocky and Julie Emery v. Wachovia Bank, N.A., Docket Number 2010-33526. On June 22, 2010, Wachovia filed its Notice of Removal (Docket Entry No. 1) pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 1332, 1441, and 1446, asserting that complete diversity exists for purposes of federal jurisdiction because plaintiffs are citizens of Texas and Wachovia Bank, N.A. is a South Dakota entity for diversity purposes.[3]

On November 19, 2010, plaintiffs filed Plaintiffs' First Amended Original Complaint and Request for Injunctive Relief (Docket Entry No. 17) in which they assert claims for breach of contract, promissory estoppel, violation of the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act of 1974 (RESPA), 12 U.S.C. § 2601, negligent [*5] misrepresentation, negligence, and gross negligence. Plaintiffs seek to reinstate the loan and cure any alleged default. Plaintiffs also seek an accounting of the loan account, injunctive relief, and damages, including attorney's fees. Plaintiffs state that they are willing to post a reasonable bond, but ask the court to waive the bond requirement.[4] On the same day Wachovia filed a counterclaim for breach of contract alleging that plaintiffs are in breach of the Note by failing to make all payments timely as they came due. Wachovia also alleges that the claims plaintiffs have asserted in this action violate Texas Civil Practices and Remedies Code §§ 9.011 et seq. and 10.001 et seq. because they are groundless and brought either in bad faith for the purpose of harassment, or for an improper purpose such as to cause unnecessary or needless increase in the cost of litigation.[5]

II. Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment

Plaintiffs argue that they are entitled to summary judgment on defendant's counterclaim to enforce the Note because defendant is unable to produce the original note, and is unable to prove the amount owed thereunder.[6] Defendant responds that plaintiffs are not entitled to summary judgment because defendant undisputedly possesses the original [*6] blue-ink signed note executed by Rocky Emery on November 25, 2003, and because

> 6. World Savings Bank, FSB, a Federal Savings Bank was the original owner and holder of the mortgage on Plaintiffs' home located at 2607 Sara Ridge Lane, Katy, Texas 77450.
> 7. It is common knowledge that in 2007 World Savings Bank, FSB, a Federal Savings Bank merged with Wachovia and became Wachovia Mortgage. In 2008, it is also common knowledge that Wachovia announced that it would be merging with Wells Fargo Bank, N.A.[7]

A. Standard of Review

Summary judgment is authorized if the movant establishes that there is no genuine dispute about any material fact and the law entitles it to judgment. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). Disputes about material facts are "genuine" if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 106 S.Ct. 2505, 2511, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). The Supreme Court has interpreted the plain language of Rule 56(c) to mandate the entry of summary judgment "after adequate time for discovery and upon motion, against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial." Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 106 S.Ct. 2548, 2552, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). A party moving for summary judgment [*7] "must 'demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact,' but need not negate the elements of the nonmovant's case." Little v. Liquid Air Corp., 37 F.3d 1069, 1075 (5th Cir. 1994) (en banc) (quoting Celotex, 106 S.Ct. at 2553-2554). If the moving party meets this burden, Rule 56(c) requires the nonmovant to go beyond the pleadings and show by affidavits, depositions, answers to interrogatories, admissions on file, or other admissible evidence that specific facts exist over which there is a genuine issue for trial. Id. (citing Celotex, 106 S.Ct. at 2553-2554). In reviewing the evidence "the court must draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the nonmoving party, and it may not make credibility determinations or weigh the evidence." Reeves v. Sanderson Plumbing Products, Inc., 530 U.S. 133, 120 S.Ct. 2097, 2110, 147 L. Ed. 2d 105 (2000). Factual controversies are to be resolved in favor of the nonmovant, "but only when . . . both parties have submitted evidence of contradictory facts." Little, 37 F.3d at 1075.

B. Analysis

1. Applicable Law

To recover a judgment against plaintiffs for suit on a note, Wachovia bears the burden of proving that (1) there is a note, (2) the plaintiffs were the makers of the note, (3) Wachovia is the legal holder or owner of the note, and (4) a certain balance is due and owing on the note. See Clark v. Dedina, 658 S.W.2d 293, 295 (Tex. App. -- Houston [1st Dist.] 1983, writ dism'd); Blankenship v. Robins, 899 S.W.2d 236, 238 (Tex. App. -- Houston [14th Dist.] 1994, no writ). In this case the dispute before the court concerns the third and fourth elements: whether Wachovia is the holder [*8] and/or owner of the Note, and whether Wachovia is able to prove that a certain balance is due and owing on the Note.

2. The Parties' Arguments and Summary Judgment Evidence

Asserting that "Wachovia Bank cannot prove that they are the proper holder of the alleged note and because Wachovia Bank cannot prove the amount owed,"[8] plaintiffs argue that they "are entitled to summary judgment on Defendant's claim seeking to enforce the terms of the note."[9] Citing Reyna v. First National Bank in Edinburg, 55 S.W.3d 58 (Tex. App. -- Corpus Christi 2001, no writ), and Priesmeyer v. Pacific Southwest Bank, F.S.B., 917 S.W.2d 937 (Tex. App. -- Austin 1996, no writ) (per curiam), plaintiffs argue that > [i]t is well settled that state law requires a claimant seeking to enforce the terms of a promissory note must prove it is a holder of the note and must provide evidence of the amount due. . . In this case, Plaintiffs executed a note with another financial institution. If Wachovia Bank wants to enforce that note, it must prove it is the holder of same. . . In short, Wachovia Bank must produce the original note bearing all the proper endorsements. Wachovia Bank also must prove the amount owed showing all credits and offsets. Because they have failed to do so, Plaintiffs are entitled to summary judgment.[10]

On March 25, 2011, Wachovia filed a response to plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment arguing [*9] that the plaintiffs' motion fails on its face because

> 5. On November 25, 2003, Plaintiff, Rocky Emery executed the loan documents.
> 6. World Savings Bank, FSB, a Federal Savings Bank was the original owner and holder of the mortgage on Plaintiffs' home located at 2607 Sara Ridge Lane, Katy, Texas 77450.
> 7. It is common knowledge that in 2007 World Savings Bank, FSB, a Federal Savings Bank merged with Wachovia and became Wachovia Mortgage. In 2008, it is also common knowledge that Wachovia announced that it would be merging with Wells Fargo Bank, N.A.
> 8. Defendant owns and continues to service Plaintiffs' mortgage just as it does hundreds of thousands of other mortgages throughout the United States.[11]

Wachovia cites four exhibits in support of this argument: the Note (Exhibit A), the Deed of Trust (Exhibit B), the Acceleration Letter (Exhibit C), and Defendant's Affidavit in Support of Response (Exhibit D).[12] Exhibits A-C were attached to Wachovia's Response to Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment (Docket Entry No. 25), but Exhibit D was not attached to Wachovia's response.

On March 28, 2011, plaintiffs filed a reply arguing that Wachovia's bare assertions that "it is common knowledge that [*10] in 2007 World Savings Bank, FSB . . . merged with Wachovia to become Wachovia Mortgage[, and that i]n 2008 . . . Wachovia announced that it would be merging with Wells Fargo Bank, N.A.,"[13] are not summary judgment evidence capable of raising a genuine issue of material fact for trial as to whether Wachovia is a holder in due course of the note at issue.[14] Plaintiffs explain that

> [t]hough it is known some transactions and sale of assets and/or liabilities occurred between World Savings Bank and Wachovia, it is not known which assets or liabilities were transferred. More importantly, there is no > evidence that Wachovia Bank purchased the mortgage security held by World Savings that forms the basis of this lawsuit. World Savings could have factored the mortgage or otherwise sold it on the derivative market. It was Plaintiffs understanding that Wachovia was merely a servicer for the note and not the holder of same.[15]

Later that same day, Wachovia filed Defendant's Affidavit in Support of Response to Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment (Docket Entry No. 28). The affidavit was signed by Wachovia's Operations Manager/Custodian of Records and states in pertinent part:

> 4. On November 25, 2003, Plaintiff, [*11] Rocky Emery executed the loan documents.
> 5. World Savings Bank, FSB, a Federal Savings Bank was the original owner and holder of the mortgage on Plaintiffs' home located at 2607 Sara Ridge Lane, Katy, Texas 77450.
> 6. In 2007 World Savings Bank, FSB, a Federal Savings Bank merged with Wachovia and became Wachovia Mortgage. In the merger, Wachovia became owner and holder of Plaintiffs' mortgage.
> 7. In 2008, Wachovia announced that it would be merging with Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. and has since merged with Wells Fargo Bank, N.A.
> 8. Wachovia is now Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. a/k/a Wachovia Mortgage, a Division of Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. and f/k/a Wachovia Mortgage, FSB.
> 9. Wachovia is the owner and holder of the Note and continues to service Plaintiffs' mortgage.
> 10. Wachovia is in the process of preparing a current Payoff Statement and will provide Plaintiffs with a copy of same upon completion.[16]

On April 6, 2011, plaintiffs filed objections to defendant's affidavit citing Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 56(c)(2) and (4). Plaintiffs object to the affidavit because "[n]o foundation whatsoever is laid for the affiant having personal knowledge of the facts stated therein. Other than a bare assertion that the affiant was 'personally acquainted with [*12] the facts' therein, there is no such basis for that statement."[17] Thus,

> Plaintiffs ask the Court to strike paragraphs 5, 6, 7 and 9 since there is no foundation for such evidence.
> Absent this evidence, the only evidence offered by Defendant to show it is a holder of the note is the actual note itself. Unfortunately, the note reflects the original lender, World Savings Bank. It contains only one endorsement that appears to be signed by a Wachovia official. There are no endorsements signed by World Savings or Wells Fargo the two earlier institutions that were alleged to be holders of the note. Therefore, Defendant has failed to meet its burden under the Motion for Summary Judgment procedure.
> Finally, Plaintiffs object to the late filed summary judgment affidavit because it is not the best evidence of the matter sought to prove. In fact, the affidavit is nothing more than hearsay stacked upon hearsay. The best evidence of transfer of the loan from World Savings and ultimately to Defendant would be proper endorsements on the actual note. Because the actual note does not contain such endorsements, Defendant cannot prove it is a holder in due course of same. . . The untimely affidavit offered [*13] by Defendant simply seeks to summarize alleged purchase and transfer agreements without including such agreements and without laying a foundation of the witness's personal knowledge of same.[18]

On September 1, 2001, Wachovia filed Defendant's Motion for Leave to File Surreply (Docket Entry No. 48), which the court granted the next day (Docket Entry No. 53). On September 2, 2011, Wachovia filed Defendant's Surreply to Plaintiffs' Reply to Defendant's Response to Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment (Docket Entry No. 54). Wachovia also filed a new Defendant's Affidavit in Support of Surreply to Plaintiffs' Reply to Defendant's Response to Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment (Docket Entry No. 55). Citing Texas Business and Commerce Code §§ 3.201, 3.203, and 3.301, and Waters v. Waters, 498 S.W.2d 236, 242 (Tex. Civ. App. -- Tyler 1973, writ ref'd n.r.e.), Wachovia argues that it need not be a holder to enforce the Note. Wachovia explains that under Texas Business and Commerce Code § 3.301, an owner of a Note is entitled to enforce the Note by foreclosure and deficiency judgment, and that under Texas Business and Commerce Code §§ 3.201 and 3.203, "[o]wnership of a Note may be transferred by possession, even if it is not endorsed by the transferee. . . [and that t]he transferee then acquires the rights of the transferor, but he does not become the holder."[19] In Waters the court explained that

> [t]he fact that a transferee [*14] lacking a necessary indorsement is not the holder does not mean that the transferee cannot establish his right as assignee and enforce the obligation. To the contrary, a transferee although he has neglected to obtain the indorsement necessary to make him a holder may enforce a note, foreclos[e] on collateral, and obtain a deficiency judgment against the debtor.[20]

Waters, 498 S.W.2d at 242. Wachovia thus asserts that all the requirements for enforcing the Note exist in this case because > 18. Plaintiffs admit in paragraphs 10 and 11 of their First Amended Complaint that "on or about 2003, Rocky executes a promissory note payable to World Savings in the amount of $667,000.00 for a new home in Houston, Texas. Said promissory note was secured by a deed of trust to the real property commonly described as 2607 Sara Ridge Lane; Katy, Texas 77450." See paragraphs 10 and 11 of Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint.

> 19. Likewise, Defendant has provided proof that (i) it is the owner of the Note and (ii) a certain balance is due and owing. See paragraphs 7 and 10 on page 2 of Defendant's Affidavit attached hereto.[21]

Filed together with Wachovia's surreply is the affidavit of Michael Dolan, which states in pertinent part:

> 3. I, on behalf of [*15] Wachovia, am the custodian of records pertaining to this loan, and I have personally reviewed the loan file pertaining to Rocky Emery's loan owned, held, and serviced by WELLS FARGO BANK, N.A. A/K/A WACHOVIA MORTGAGE, A DIVISION OF WELLS FARGO BANK, N.A. AND F/K/A WACHOVIA MORTGAGE, FSB F/K/A WORLD SAVINGS BANK, FSB. As such, I have personal knowledge of the facts herein. The Adjustable Rate Mortgage Note and Deed of Trust (Exhibits "A" and "B" respectively) attached hereto are exact duplicates and true and correct copies of the original.
> 4. On November 25, 2003, Rocky Emery executed the Adjustable Rate Mortgage Note, and on November 25, 2003, Rocky Emery and Julie K. Emery executed the Deed of Trust.
> 5. World Savings Bank, FSB was the original lender.
> 6. On December 31, 2007, World Savings changed its name to Wachovia Mortgage, FSB, and on November 1, 2009, Wachovia merged into Wells Fargo Bank, N.A.
> 7. WELLS FARGO BANK, N.A. A/K/A WACHOVIA MORTGAGE, A DIVISION OF WELLS FARGO BANK, N.A. AND F/K/A WACHOVIA MORTGAGE, FSB, F/K/A WORLD SAVINGS BANK, FSB, is the owner of the Note and is in possession of the original Note.
> 8. Rocky Emery is currently in default under the terms of the Note.
> 9. [*16] As a result of the default, Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. accelerated the indebtedness.
> 10. The most recent official Payoff Statement was generated on March 28, 2011, and sent to Rocky Emery. It is attached hereto as Exhibit "C" to this Affidavit and incorporated herein by reference. As of March 28, 2011, the total secured debt owed by Rocky Emery was $869,594.23 which includes principal of $712,619.07,

3. Application of the Law to the Summary Judgment Evidence

(a) A Genuine Issue of Material Fact Exists as to Whether Defendant Owns the Note

Plaintiffs argue that they are entitled to summary judgment because Wachovia cannot establish that it is the holder of the Note by producing the original Note bearing all the proper endorsements. Texas law defines "holder" as "the person in possession of a negotiable instrument that is payable either to bearer or to an identified person that is the person in possession[.]" Tex. Bus. & Com. Code § 1.201(b)(21)(A). "A person can become the holder of an instrument when the instrument is issued to that [*17] person; or he can become a holder by negotiation." Leavings v. Mills, 175 S.W.3d 301, 309 (Tex. App. -- Houston [1st Dist.] 2004, no pet.) (citing Tex. Bus. & Com. Code § 3.201 cmt. 1). "Negotiation is the 'transfer of possession of an instrument . . . by a person other than the issuer to a person who thereby becomes its holder.'" Id. (quoting Tex. Bus. & Com. Code § 3.201(b)). "The indorsement must be written by or on behalf of the holder and on the instrument or on a paper so firmly affixed to it as to become part of it. . . If an instrument not in the possession of the original holder lacks a written indorsement and proof of the chain of title, the person in possession does not have the status of a holder." Id., 175 S.W.3d at 309. Nevertheless, Texas law makes clear that a party does not have to be a holder to enforce a negotiable instrument, including a note. Id. ("[E]ven if a person is not the holder of a note, he may still be able to prove that he is the owner and entitled to enforce the note, foreclose on collateral and obtain a deficiency judgment under common-law principles of assignment."). See also SMS Fin., Ltd. Liability Co. v. ABCO Homes, Inc., 167 F.3d 235, 238 (5th Cir. 1999) (explaining that a party seeking to enforce a promissory note must establish that he "is the owner or holder of the note").

An "owner" of a negotiable instrument means a person who is entitled to exercise the rights conveyed by an instrument, as determined [*18] by the principles of property law. See Priesmeyer, 917 S.W.2d at 939. To prove that it owns the Note, Wachovia must prove the series of transfers by which it acquired the Note. Id. An owner of a note may prove the transfer of a note by testimony or documentation. Id. (citing Christian v. University Federal Savings Association, 792 S.W.2d 533, 534 (Tex. App. -- Houston [1st Dist.] 1990, no writ) (affidavit sufficient to establish ownership of note)). See also Lawson v. Finance America Private Brands, Inc., 537 S.W.2d 483, 485 (Tex. App. -- El Paso 1976, no writ) (testimony by defendant sufficient to establish right to enforce an instrument). In Leavings, 175 S.W.3d at 309, the court explained how a party establishes that it is the owner of an instrument: "A person not identified in a note who is seeking to enforce it as the owner or holder must prove the transfer by which he acquired the note. . . An issue of material fact on the issue of ownership of a note is presented when there is an unexplained gap in the chain of title." Importantly, transfer of an instrument does not require the transferee to endorse that instrument. Id.

For present purposes, there is only one meaningful difference between being a holder and an owner. A holder is presumed to be entitled to enforce the instrument merely by showing possession of that instrument. On the other hand, an owner may not invoke such a presumption merely by showing possession; instead, an owner must prove the transfer [*19] by showing possession and establishing an unbroken chain of title. See Tex. Bus. & Com. Code § 3.203 cmt. 2 (2011) ("Because the transferee is not a holder, there is no presumption under Section 3-308 that the transferee, by producing the instrument, is entitled to payment. The instrument, by its terms, is not payable to the transferee and the transferee must account for possession of the unindorsed instrument by proving the transaction through which the transferee acquired it."). Resolution Trust Corp. v. Starkey, 41 F.3d 1018, 1023 (5th Cir. 1995) ("In the absence of an indorsement, there is no presumption that the transferee of a note is its owner, and possession must then be demonstrated by proving the transaction whereby the note was acquired.").

The undisputed evidence in this case is that Wachovia is in physical possession of the original Note executed by Rocky Emery. Wachovia has attached an exact duplicate of the Note to both its Response to Plaintiffs' Motion for [22] Defendant's Affidavit in Support of Surreply to Plaintiffs' Reply to Defendant's Response to Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment, Docket Entry No. 55, pp. 1-2 ¶¶ 3-10.

Summary Judgment, and to its Surreply to Plaintiffs' Reply to Defendant's Response to Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment. Wachovia has also presented affidavit evidence demonstrating the Note's chain of title and stating that Wachovia is the owner of the Note. Plaintiffs have neither identified nor presented controverting [*20] evidence. Nor have plaintiffs pointed to any evidence in the record indicating that some other entity might later approach them demanding payment. Although plaintiffs objected to the affidavit that Wachovia submitted in support of its initial response to plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment, plaintiffs have not objected to the Dolan affidavit that Wachovia submitted in support of its surreply to plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment.

Under Texas law an unequivocal statement of ownership of a note, if uncontroverted, is sufficient to establish ownership as a matter of law even in the absence of supporting documents. See First Gibraltar Bank, FSB v. Farley, 895 S.W.2d 425, 428 (Tex. App. -- San Antonio 1995, writ denied) ("Testimony in an affidavit that a particular person or entity owns a note is sufficient to conclusively establish ownership even in the absence of supporting documentation if there is no controverting summary judgment evidence."). See also Resolution Trust Corp. v. Camp, 965 F.2d 25, 29 (5th Cir. 1992) (uncontroverted affidavits — based upon personal knowledge that a party is the holder or owner of a promissory note — are generally sufficient summary judgment evidence). Moreover, as a nonmovant contesting the promissor's right to summary judgment, Wachovia is only required to present evidence sufficient to raise a genuine [*21] issue of material fact for trial. Accordingly, the court concludes that the Dolan affidavit, together with the corroborating evidence that Wachovia is in possession of the original Note, suffices to raise a genuine issue of material fact for trial as to whether Wachovia is the owner of the Note.

(b) A Genuine Issue of Material Fact Exists as to the Amount Owed Under the Note

Plaintiffs argue that they are entitled to summary judgment because Wachovia cannot prove the amount owed showing all credits and offsets.[23] The Dolan affidavit states that

> [t]he most recent official Payoff Statement was generated on March 28, 2011, and sent to Rocky Emery. It is attached hereto as Exhibit "C" to this Affidavit and incorporated herein by reference. As of March 28, 2011, the total secured debt owed by Rocky Emery was $869,594.23 which includes principal of $712,619.07, accrued interest of $78,854.69, escrow advances for ad valorem taxes and hazard insurance $76,487.40, corporate advances of $1,387.07, property inspection fees of $230.00, and recording fees of $16.00.[24]

There is no dispute that Rocky Emery signed the Note, that the Note was secured by a deed of trust on real property, and that Rocky Emery defaulted [*22] in payment of the Note. Evidence that Rocky Emery defaulted on the Note is found in the Plaintiffs' First Amended Original Complaint and Request for Injunctive Relief (Docket Entry No. 17), in which plaintiffs allege that "due to an unforeseen decline in the United States economy, Rocky was not able to pay the 2008 property taxes on the homestead and contracted with Wachovia to pay the taxes and the amount would be added to the promissory note,"[25] that when the plaintiffs attempted "to pay the new contracted amount, Wachovia refused acceptance of payment,"[26] and that "[i]n approximately January 2010, after being denied for three separate mortgage assistance programs . . . Rocky was made aware that . . . he owed between $30,000 — $60,000 in back payments, including amounts for insurance. . ."[27] Since plaintiffs' allegations establish that an amount is due and owing on the note, and Dolan's affidavit quantifies that amount, the court concludes that the amount due and owing is a genuine issue of fact for trial. Accordingly, plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment on Wachovia's counter-claim to enforce the Note will be denied.

C. Plaintiffs' Objection and Motion to Strike Affidavit

Citing Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 56(c)(2) and [*23] (4), plaintiffs object to the initial affidavit that Wachovia submitted in support of its Response to Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment on grounds that the affidavit fails to establish that the affiant has personal knowledge of the facts stated, the affidavit is not the best evidence of transfer of the loan from World Savings to Wachovia, and the affidavit was filed late.[28] Since the court has been able to resolve the issues presented by the plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment without referring to the affidavit to which the plaintiffs object, plaintiffs' objections to that affidavit and motion to strike portions of it will be denied as moot.

III. Defendant's Motion to Dismiss

Wachovia contends that (1) plaintiffs' claims for breach of contract, negligence, negligent misrepresentation, and gross negligence should be dismissed because they are preempted by the Homeowner's Loan Act (HOLA); (2) plaintiffs have not stated a claim and cannot state a claim under the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act; (3) plaintiffs have not stated and cannot state a claim for violations of the Real Estate Settlement and Procedures Act (RESPA); and (4) independent of HOLA, plaintiffs have not stated a [*24] claim for breach of contract, negligent misrepresentation, negligence, or gross negligence. On August 29, 2011, defendants filed a Corrected First Amended Motion to Dismiss Pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) solely to reflect that the proper defendant -- improperly named by Plaintiffs as Wachovia Bank, N.A. -- is Wells Fargo Bank, N.A.[29]

A. Standard of Review

A motion to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim for which relief may be granted tests the formal sufficiency of the pleadings and is "appropriate when a defendant attacks the complaint because it fails to state a legally cognizable claim." Ramming v. United States, 281 F.3d 158, 161 (5th Cir. 2001), cert. denied sub nom Cloud v. United States, 536 U.S. 960, 122 S.Ct. 2665, 153 L. Ed. 2d 839 (2002). The court must accept the factual allegations of the complaint as true, view them in a light most favorable to the plaintiff, and draw all reasonable inferences in the plaintiff's favor. Id.

> When a federal court reviews the sufficiency of a complaint, before the reception of any evidence either by affidavit or admissions, its task is necessarily a limited one. The issue is not whether a plaintiff will ultimately prevail but whether the claimant is entitled to offer evidence to support the claims.

B. Analysis

1. Plaintiffs' Claims for Breach of Contract, Negligence, Negligent Misrepresentation, and Gross Negligence are Not Preempted by HOLA

Asserting that plaintiffs' claims "purport to directly attack loan servicing issues both generally and as they relate to the foreclosure process,"[31] Wachovia argues that "[s]uch claims, including those arising under § 51.002 of the Texas Property Code, are clearly pre-empted by HOLA"[32] (the Home Owner's Loan Act of 1933, 12 U.S.C. § 1461, et seq.). Wachovia explains that through HOLA and its implementing regulation, 12 C.F.R. § 560, "Congress authorized and delegated power and authority to the Office of Thrift Supervision (OTS) to regulate and govern 'every federal savings and loan association from its cradle to its corporate grave.'"[33] Wachovia argues [*26] that HOLA preempts the plaintiffs' claims because World Savings Bank was a federal savings bank regulated by the OTS in 2003 when plaintiffs' loan originated, and because HOLA expressly preempts state laws relating to mortgage services, including laws regarding terms of credit, escrow and impound accounts, processing, origination, servicing, sale or purchase of mortgages, and disbursements and repayments. 12 C.F.R. § 560.2(b)(4), (6), (9), (10), and (11). Citing In re Ocwen Loan Servicing, LLC Mortgage Servicing Litigation, 491 F.3d 638, 642 (7th Cir. 2007), Wachovia argues that it can assert a HOLA preemption defense because "[t]he foundations for Plaintiffs' entire First Amended Complaint [Docket No. 17] are the allegation that (i) Defendant violated § 51.002 of the Texas Property Code regarding notice and opportunity to cure prior to acceleration of their indebtedness and (ii) Defendant in multiple ways mishandled the servicing of Plaintiffs' loan."[34] Also citing Ocwen, 491 F.3d at 638, Plaintiffs respond that their breach of contract and negligence claims are not preempted by HOLA.[35]

(a) HOLA

In Ocwen, 491 F.3d at 638, the Seventh Circuit addressed the question of whether HOLA and the OTS regulations promulgated thereunder preempted claims based on state contract and tort law. The court noted that HOLA's preemptive force gave OTS the "exclusive authority to regulate the savings and loan [*27] industry in the sense of fixing fees (including penalties), setting licensing requirements, prescribing certain terms in mortgages, establishing requirements for disclosure of credit information to customers, and setting standards for processing and servicing mortgages," id. at 643, but that the OTS "has no power to adjudicate disputes between S&Ls [savings and loan associations] and their customers," and "HOLA creates no private right to sue to enforce the provisions of the statute or the OTS's regulations." Id.

"Against this background of limited remedial authority," the court held that HOLA did not preempt "basic state common-law type remedies" for people harmed by the actions of savings and loans. Id. The court explained that if a saving and loan association entered a mortgage agreement with an annual interest rate of 6 percent, and then proceeded to bill the homeowner at a rate of 10 percent and instituted foreclosure proceedings when the homeowner refused to pay, "[i]t would be surprising for a federal regulation to forbid the homeowner's state to give the homeowner a defense based on the mortgagee's breach of contract." Id. at 643-44. The Ocwen court also observed that "if the mortgagee (or a servicer [*28] like Ocwen) fraudulently represents to the mortgagor that it will forgive a default, and then forecloses, it would be surprising for a federal regulation to bar a suit for fraud." Id. at 644. The court stated that "[e]nforcement of state law in either of the mortgage-servicing examples above would complement rather than substitute for the federal regulatory scheme." Id. The court also gave examples of claims that are clearly preempted: claims based upon a mortgagee's "failing to provide mortgagors with adequate monthly statements of their account balances, assessing 'excessive' late fees, and 'force placing insurance on properties that already have insurance coverage.'" Id. at 646. These claims, the court held, "could interfere with federal regulation of disclosures, fees, and credit terms." Id.

102, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957). In Twombly, 127 S.Ct. at 1966, the Supreme Court disavowed the "no set of facts" language from Conley. The Supreme Court explained that "[t]his phrase is best forgotten as an incomplete, negative gloss on an accepted pleading standard: once a claim has been stated adequately, it may be supported by showing any set of facts consistent with the allegations in the complaint." Id. at 1969. Courts have applied this change generally and not limited its application to cases like Twombly that involve antitrust law. Although this court's decision to grant in part Wachovia's Motion to Dismiss rests on the standard expressed in Twombly and Iqbal, the court would have reached the same decision had it applied the standard expressed in Conley.

(b) Plaintiffs' Breach of Contract Claims are Not Preempted

In their breach of contract claims plaintiffs allege that:

> 34. Plaintiffs and Defendant entered into a contract by the executed loan agreement, promissory note, security agreement, and deed of trust.
> 35. The terms of these agreements prohibited any acceleration of the indebtedness unless all Texas laws regarding homesteads were followed.
> 36. Defendant failed to follow [*29] Texas Property Code Section 51.002(d) regarding notice and the opportunity to cure.
> 37. Thus, Defendant breached the contract by placing Plaintiffs' homestead for foreclosure sale without meeting the terms of the agreement and the statutory requirements for foreclosure sale.
> 38. Defendant wrongfully withdrew $100,000 of mortgage payments.
> 39. In light of the above described facts, Plaintiffs seek recovery from Defendant for breach of contract.[36]

Wachovia argues that HOLA preempts plaintiffs' breach of contract claims because they arise out of the servicing and processing of the loan and concern disbursements and repayment.[37] Since, however, plaintiffs allege that the source of the rights they seek to enforce is not state law but, instead, the loan documents that allegedly incorporate state law rights, plaintiffs' breach of contract claims are not preempted because they seek to hold the defendant liable for failing to perform obligations imposed by the loan documents. See Ocwen, 491 F.3d at 643-44 ("[i]t would be surprising for a federal regulation to forbid the homeowner's state to give the homeowner a defense based on the mortgagee's breach of the contract").

(c) Plaintiffs' Negligence Claims Are Not Preempted

Plaintiffs' negligence claims are based [*30] on allegations that > 50. Wachovia provided false information to Plaintiffs in the course of servicing Plaintiff's promissory note.

> 51. Wachovia did not exercise proper care or competence in obtaining or communicating information about suspending payments on Plaintiffs' promissory note and withdrawing approximately $100,000 over and above what the promissory note required.
> 52. Plaintiffs suffered pecuniary loss by relying on the information Wachovia provided to them.
> 53. Wachovia knew their misrepresentations or omissions were false when made, or made recklessly without any knowledge of the truth and as a positive assertion, or made negligently.
> 54. Wachovia made these representations or omissions with the intention Plaintiffs would act on them.
> 55. Plaintiffs acted in reliance on Wachovia's misrepresentations and omissions and as a result suffered damages.
> 56. Wachovia's negligence was also gross negligence.[38]

[36] Plaintiffs' First Amended Original Complaint, Docket Entry No. 17, p. 6 ¶¶ 34-39.

[37] Defendant's Corrected First Amended Motion to Dismiss, Docket Entry No. 43, pp. 11-12 ¶¶ 43-44.

[38] Plaintiffs' First Amended Original Complaint, Docket Entry No. 17, pp. 8-9 ¶¶ 50-56.

Asserting that "Plaintiffs specifically allege that Defendant 'provided false information to Plaintiffs[] in the course of servicing Plaintiffs' promissory note,'"[39] Wachovia argues that plaintiffs' claims for negligent misrepresentation, negligence, and gross negligence are preempted by HOLA [*31] because plaintiffs admit that these claims arise out of the servicing and processing of plaintiffs' loan. The court is not persuaded by Wachovia's argument. Plaintiffs' negligence claims are not preempted because they are not based on misrepresentations that were allegedly made in relation to the formation of the underlying contract but, instead, in relation to plaintiffs' attempt to cure a default. See Ocwen, 491 F.3d at 644 ("if the mortgagee . . . fraudulently represents to the mortgagor that it will forgive a default, and then forecloses, it would be surprising for a federal regulation to bar a suit for fraud").

2. Plaintiffs' Texas DTPA Claims are Subject to Dismissal

Wachovia argues that plaintiffs' claims for violation of the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act should be dismissed "[b]ecause [p]laintiffs cannot claim 'consumer' status as a matter of law."[40] Citing Flenniken v. Longview Bank & Trust Co., 661 S.W.2d 705, 707-08 (Tex. 1983), plaintiffs respond that they are able to maintain a DTPA action against Wachovia because the object of the transaction at issue is a good, i.e., their home.[41]

A person qualifies as a consumer under the DTPA by meeting two requirements: (1) the person must seek or acquire goods or services by lease or purchase, Tex. Bus. & Com. Code. § 17.45(4); and (2) the goods or services sought or acquired [*32] must form the basis of the person's complaint. Melody Home Manufacturing Co. v. Barnes, 741 S.W.2d 349, 351-52 (Tex. 1987). Whether a person meets these requirements is a question of law. Johnson v. Walker, 824 S.W.2d 184, 187 (Tex. App. -- Fort Worth 1991, writ denied). In determining whether a plaintiff is a consumer, the focus is on the plaintiff's relationship to the transaction, not the contractual relationship between the parties. See Ortiz v. Collins, 203 S.W.3d 414, 424 (Tex. App. -- Houston [14th Dist.] 2006, no pet.) (citing Flenniken, 661 S.W.2d at 707). Generally, a person cannot qualify as a consumer if the underlying transaction is a loan because money is considered neither a good nor a service. Riverside National Bank v. Lewis, 603 S.W.2d 169, 173-76 (Tex. 1980) (holding that the refinancing of a car loan did not confer consumer status on the debtor). See also Walker v. FDIC, 970 F.2d 114, 123-24 (5th Cir. 1992) (holding that loan transactions are not covered by the Texas DTPA). Other courts have applied the Riverside holding to modifications of existing loans, concluding that loan modifications are neither goods nor services and cannot form the basis of a claim under the DTPA. See Fix v. Flagstar Bank, FSB, 242 S.W.3d 147, 160 (Tex. App. -- Fort Worth 2007, pet. denied) ("Because the Fixes had already purchased their house, the Flagstar refinance merely extended credit to the Fixes. As such, the refinance cannot qualify as a good or a service under the DTPA.").

Citing Flenniken, 661 S.W.2d at 706, plaintiffs assert that they qualify as consumers because their real property qualifies as a good, which is the basis of his complaint. In Flenniken the plaintiffs executed [*33] a note and materialman's lien to a builder for the construction of a home on their property. On the same day, the builder assigned the note and the lien to a bank in return for interim financing on the construction job. The bank disbursed the entire loan amount to the builder even though the builder completed only twenty percent of the work. The builder subsequently abandoned the job, and the plaintiffs stopped paying on the note. The bank then foreclosed on the property under the terms of the deed of trust. The bank later conceded that the foreclosure was wrongful. See Longview Bank & Trust Co. v. Flenniken, 642 S.W.2d 568, 570 n.2 (Tex. App. -- Tyler 1982), rev'd, 661 S.W.2d 705 (Tex. 1983). Without overruling Riverside, 603 S.W.2d at 169, the Texas Supreme Court held the bank liable on a DTPA claim. See Flenniken, 661 S.W.2d at 706. In so doing, the Texas Supreme Court did not differentiate between the plaintiffs' transaction with the builder and the builder's transaction with the bank but, instead, viewed the transaction as a whole from the buyer's perspective. Id. The court reasoned that the plaintiffs were consumers because they "did not seek to borrow money; they sought to acquire a house." Id. at 707-08.

[39] Defendant's Corrected First Amended Motion to Dismiss, Docket Entry No. 43, p. 12 ¶ 47 (emphasis in original).

[40] Id. at 18 ¶ 67.

[41] Plaintiffs' Response to Defendant's First Amended Motion to Dismiss, Docket Entry No. 39, p. 15.

The rationale in Flenniken is inapplicable here. Although plaintiffs argue that their real property qualifies as a good, their complaint makes clear that [*34] they are actually complaining about Wachovia's failure to extend additional credit by modifying their loan as allegedly promised. Plaintiffs do not complain about a defect with their house, and they do not complain that they were denied a house they borrowed money to buy because of an error by the bank as occurred in Flenniken. Instead, when the acts about which the plaintiffs complain occurred, plaintiffs already owned the house that is subject to the mortgage at issue. Since the plaintiffs' house is not the basis of their complaint, the court concludes as a matter of law that plaintiffs' DTPA claim is subject to dismissal because plaintiffs do not qualify as "consumers" under the DTPA. See Walker v. Fed. Deposit Ins. Corp., 970 F.2d 114, 123 (5th Cir. 1992) (distinguishing cases where complaints concern tangible property as opposed to a loan, the court held that a plaintiff who borrows money, even if incidental to a completed mortgage loan, is not a consumer for purposes of the DTPA, and noting that the "strict interpretation" line of cases in which courts decline to find that similarly situated loan recipients were consumers, represented "the wisest and most logical course"). See also Fix, 242 S.W.3d at 160-61 (holding that refinancing of purchased home is not a good or [*35] service for purposes of qualifying as a consumer under the DTPA).

3. Plaintiffs' RESPA Claims are Subject to Dismissal

Wachovia argues that plaintiffs' claims for violation of the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act (RESPA) should be dismissed because plaintiffs allege that Wachovia has incorrectly administered their escrow account and a private cause of action does not exist for such acts.[42] Plaintiffs respond that > Defendant violated Section 2605(g) which requires the servicer of a loan to make payments from an escrow account in a timely manner as such payments become due. 12 U.S.C. § 2605(g). Defendant violated this provision by failing to make the proper payments from he escrow account in a timely manner.[43]

In support of the argument that their RESPA claims should not be dismissed, plaintiffs cite ¶¶ 18-20 of their complaint, which allege:

> 18. Wachovia intentionally and deceptively overcharged Rocky approximately $100,000 in mortgage payments during the year 2008.
> 19. In 2009, due to an unforeseen decline in the United States economy, Rocky was not able to pay the 2008 property taxes on the homestead and contracted with Wachovia to pay the taxes and the amount would be added to the promissory note, making the previous $3,000/month [*36] payment, approximately $6,000/month.
> 20. When attempting to pay the new contracted amount, Wachovia refused acceptance of payment and instead instructed Julie Emery the new amount would be approximately $9,000 a month because Wachovia had to pay for insurance on the property.[44]

Plaintiffs point to § 2605(g) as the section that Wachovia violated, but plaintiffs' complaint does not allege facts that would support claims for violation of this section. Instead, plaintiffs complain that Wachovia overcharged Rocky $100,000 in mortgage payments during the year 2008. Because plaintiffs have not alleged that Wachovia failed to make timely payments on their behalf, plaintiffs have failed to state claims for which relief may be granted under 12 U.S.C. § 2605(g). Accordingly, the court concludes that [*37] plaintiffs' RESPA claims are subject to dismissal.

> If the terms of any federally related mortgage loan require the borrower to make payments to the servicer of the loan for deposit into an escrow account for the purpose of assuring payment of taxes, insurance premiums, and other charges with respect to the property, the servicer shall make payments from the escrow account for such taxes, insurance premiums, and other charges in a timely manner as such payments become due.

[44] Plaintiffs' First Amended Original Complaint, Docket Entry No. 17, p. 4 ¶¶ 18-20.

4. Plaintiffs' Negligence Claims are Subject to Dismissal

Wachovia argues that plaintiffs' claims for negligent misrepresentation, negligence, and gross negligence should be dismissed because these claims are conclusory allegations unsupported by any facts.[45] Plaintiffs respond that these claims are sufficiently pleaded.[46]

(a) Negligent Misrepresentation Claims

The elements of negligent misrepresentation under Texas law are: (1) the representation is made by a defendant in the course of his business, or in a transaction in which the defendant has a pecuniary interest; (2) the defendant supplied false information for the guidance of others in their businesses; (3) the defendant did not exercise reasonable care or competence in obtaining or communicating the information; and (4) the plaintiff suffers pecuniary loss by justifiably relying on the representation. Horizon Shipbuilding, Inc. v. BLyn II Holding, LLC, 324 S.W.3d 840, 850 (Tex. App. -- Houston [14th Dist.] 2010, no pet.) (citing Henry Schein, Inc. v. Stromboe, 102 S.W.3d 675, 686 n.24 (Tex. 2002)). "In a cause of action for negligent misrepresentation, the misrepresentation at issue must be one of existing fact." BCY Water Supply Corp. v. Residential Investments, Inc., 170 S.W.3d 596, 603 (Tex. App. -- Tyler 2005, pet. denied). "A promise to do or refrain from doing an act in the future is not actionable because it does not concern an existing fact." Id. (citing Miksch v. Exxon Corp., 979 S.W.2d 700, 706 (Tex. App. -- Houston [14th Dist.] 1998, pet. denied)).

Plaintiffs [*38] argue that their claims for negligent misrepresentation are sufficient to withstand Wachovia's motion to dismiss because they have alleged that > Defendant told the Emerys the new amount under their loan was to include the loan payment and the 2008 property taxes. . . However, after the modification was entered into, Defendant stated the new amount was to include the original loan payment, 2008 property taxes, and insurance for the property despite the fact that the Emerys paid for insurance out of their own pocket. . . Defendant also represented that the Emerys' loan payments would be suspended during their application for government assistance. . . However, again, once the Emerys relied on the representations that their loan payment would be suspended and stopped making payments, Defendant charged them for the payments during the application period.[47]

Plaintiffs' claims for negligent misrepresentation fail because the misrepresentations about which they complain are not misrepresentations of existing fact but are, instead, promises to do or refrain from doing an act in the future. Promises of future conduct are insufficient to support a claim for negligent misrepresentation. BCY Water Supply, 170 S.W.3d at 603. Accordingly, [*39] plaintiff's claims for negligent misrepresentation will be dismissed.

(b) Negligence Claims

Under Texas law the elements of a negligence claim are: (1) a legal duty owed by one person to another, (2) breach of that duty, and (3) damages proximately caused by the breach. See Lane v. Halliburton, 529 F.3d 548, 565 (5th Cir. 2008) (citing Sport Supply Group, Inc. v. Columbia Casualty Co., 335 F.3d 453, 466 (5th Cir. 2003)). Where there is a contract between the parties, the duty must arise independently of the fact that a contract exists between the parties (i.e., there must be an independent obligation/duty imposed by law). See American National Ins. Co. v. IBM Corp., 933 S.W.2d 685, 686 (Tex. App. -- San Antonio 1996, writ denied). See Jim Walter Homes, Inc. v. Reed, 711 S.W.2d 617, 618 (Tex. 1986) ("The 'nature of the injury' most often determines which duty or duties are breached. When the injury is only the economic loss to the subject of the contract itself, the action sounds in contract alone."). Moreover, "[t]o be entitled to damages for negligence, a party must plead and prove something more than mere economic harm." Blanche v. First Nationwide Mortgage Corp., 74 S.W.3d 444, 453 (Tex. App. -- Dallas 2002, no pet.).

[46] Plaintiffs' Response to Defendant's First Amended Motion to Dismiss, Docket Entry No. 39, pp. 17-19.

[47] Id. at 18-19.

Plaintiffs argue that their claims for negligence are sufficient to withstand Wachovia's motion to dismiss because they have alleged that "Defendant's overcharging of their account of approximately $100,000 for improper payments under the loan agreements amounted to negligence."[48] Plaintiffs' claims for negligence fail because there is a contract between the parties and [*40] the duty not to overcharge arises from that contract, see American National Ins., 933 S.W.2d at 686, and because the only harm the plaintiffs allege they suffered is economic harm. See Blanche, 74 S.W.3d at 453 (to be entitled to damages for negligence, a party must plead and prove something more than mere economic harm).

(c) Gross Negligence Claims

Under Texas law gross negligence is a heightened form of negligence. In addition to the ordinary elements of negligence, a claim for gross negligence requires proof of (1) an act or omission that viewed objectively from the actor's standpoint involved "an extreme degree of risk;" and (2) the actor had actual, subjective awareness of the risk and proceeded, nevertheless, with a conscious indifference by the negligent actor. See Lane, 529 F.3d at 565 (citing Mobil Oil Corp. v. Ellender, 968 S.W.2d 917, 921 (Tex. 1998)).

Plaintiffs argue that their claims for gross negligence are sufficient to withstand Wachovia's motion to dismiss because they have alleged that > Defendant held a grudge against Rocky Emery prior to their purchase of his home mortgage . . . Defendant's history with Rocky Emery demonstrates that Defendant had actual, subjective awareness of the wrongful treatment of the Emerys and its improper actions with regard to their loan, but Defendant proceeded with a conscious indifference [*41] to the rights, safety, or welfare of the Emerys. . . Further, the objective component is met in that a lender in the same position as Defendant would know that its actions toward the Emerys was wrong and would cause them to likely lose their home, yet Defendant proceeded anyway.[49]

Plaintiffs' claims for gross negligence fail for the same reasons that their claims for ordinary negligence fail, i.e., because the parties have a contract and the duties that the plaintiffs claim Wachovia breached arise from that contract, see American National Ins., 933 S.W.2d at 686, and because the only harm the plaintiffs allege they suffered as a result of Wachovia's gross negligence is economic harm. See Blanche, 74 S.W.3d at 453 (to be entitled to damages for negligence a party must plead and prove something more than mere economic harm).

5. Plaintiffs' Breach of Contract Claims are Not Subject to Dismissal

Wachovia argues that plaintiffs' breach of contract claims should be dismissed because the plaintiffs admit to having defaulted under the terms of the Note and the Deed of Trust.[50] Wachovia explains that plaintiffs' admission that they have defaulted under the terms of the Note and the Deed of Trust means that their breach of contract claims are not adequately, specifically, [*42] or properly pleaded.[51] Plaintiffs respond that their breach of contract claims are sufficiently pleaded and not subject to dismissal because > a close reading of the Emerys' Complaint demonstrates that they did not fail to comply with the Agreements because they negotiated a modification to include the 2008 property taxes and Defendant would not accept the proper payment under the modification. . . Further, the Emerys' allegations regarding overcharges totaling approximately $100,000 occurred prior to any default on payments.[52]

[52] Plaintiffs' Response to Defendant's First Amended Motion to Dismiss, Docket Entry No. 39, pp. 14-15.

Wachovia's argument that the plaintiffs' breach of contract claims should be dismissed because they are not adequately pleaded is unpersuasive. Plaintiffs have alleged that Wachovia breached the terms of the loan documents by overcharging them approximately $100,000.00 in 2008. Although plaintiffs admit that in 2009 they were unable to pay the 2008 property taxes, since the default arising from their failure to pay property taxes did not occur until after plaintiffs allege that Wachovia overcharged them in breach of the parties' contract, plaintiffs have alleged sufficient facts to withstand Wachovia's motion to dismiss their breach of contract claims based [*43] on overcharging that occurred in 2008. Plaintiffs have also alleged that Wachovia breached the terms of the loan documents by placing their homestead for foreclosure sale in 2010. Although plaintiffs admit to not having paid the 2008 property taxes in 2009, plaintiffs allege that Wachovia agreed to modify the terms of the loan by increasing the monthly payment from approximately $3,000.00 to approximately $6,000.00; that plaintiffs made payments under the terms of the modified agreement; and that notwithstanding those payments, plaintiffs endured injury when Wachovia set their home for foreclosure sale without meeting the terms of the parties' agreement regarding notice and opportunity to cure. These allegations are sufficient to withstand Wachovia's Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss plaintiffs' breach of contract claims. See Aguiar v. Segal, 167 S.W.3d 443, 450 (Tex. App. -- Houston [14th Dist.] 2005, pet. denied) ("The essential elements of a breach of contract claim are: (1) the existence of a valid contract; (2) performance or tendered performance by the plaintiff; (3) breach of the contract by the defendant; and (4) damages sustained by the plaintiff as a result of the breach.").

IV. Motions to Amend

Both parties seek leave to amend. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15(a) requires a trial court "to grant leave to amend [*44] 'freely,' and the language of this rule 'evinces a bias in favor of granting leave to amend.'" Lyn-Lea Travel Corp. v. American Airlines, 283 F.3d 282, 286 (5th Cir. 2002). A trial court must possess a "substantial reason" to deny a request for leave to amend, id., but "leave to amend is by no means automatic." Halbert v. City of Sherman, 33 F.3d 526, 529 (5th Cir. 1994). Decisions concerning motions to amend are "entrusted to the sound discretion of the district court." Quintanilla v. Texas Television, Inc., 139 F.3d 494, 499 (5th Cir. 1998). In deciding whether to grant leave to amend the district court may consider the variety of factors in exercising its discretion, including undue delay, bad faith or dilatory motive on the part of the movant, repeated failures to cure deficiencies by amendments previously allowed, undue prejudice to the opposing party by virtue of allowance of the amendment, and futility of the amendment. Dussouy v. Gulf Coast Inv. Corp., 660 F.2d 594, 598 (5th Cir. 1981). See also Foman v. Davis, 371 U.S. 178, 83 S.Ct. 227, 9 L. Ed. 2d 222 (1962) (recognizing bad faith or dilatory motive, repeated failure to cure deficiencies by amendments previously allowed, undue prejudice to the opposing party by virtue of allowance of the amendment, or futility of the amendment as plausible reasons for a district court to deny a party's request for leave to amend).

A. Plaintiffs' Request for Leave to Amend

The last section of plaintiffs' response to Wachovia's motion to dismiss is titled "Request for leave to [*45] amend."[53] Plaintiffs state that "if the Court is inclined to grant Defendant's request on any of the claims addressed in the Motion, [they] ask for leave to amend their Complaint to further set forth the factual basis of their claims with more particularity."[54] Plaintiffs acknowledge that they have amended their complaint once, but argue that leave to amend should be freely granted.[55] Although the plaintiffs were aware of the defendant's objections to their complaint as written because those objections appeared in the defendant's motion to dismiss, plaintiffs failed to furnish the court with a proposed amended complaint and failed to alert the court to any additional facts not previously pleaded that could cure the pleading defects raised by the defendant. Under these circumstances the court is not persuaded that plaintiffs should receive another opportunity to plead their claims. See McKinney v. Irving Independent School Dist., 309 F.3d 308, 315 (5th Cir. 2002), cert. denied, 537 U.S. 1194, 123 S.Ct. 1332, 154 L. Ed. 2d 1030 (2003) (finding no abuse of discretion in the district court's denial of request for leave to amend where the plaintiffs failed to submit a proposed amended complaint together with a request for leave to amend and failed to alert the court to the substance of any proposed amendment). Accordingly, [*46] plaintiffs' request for leave to amend will be denied.

B. Wachovia's Motion for Leave to File First Amended Counterclaim

Wachovia seeks leave to file an amended counterclaim "to correct its legal name and assert that it is the owner and/or holder of the Note, which Counter-Defendants dispute."[56] Wachovia explains that "Counter-Defendants did not take this position in the Complaint, but have subsequently argued this position in briefings filed with the Court. Counter-Defendants will not be caused any unfair prejudice. . ."[57] Wachovia's proposed First Amended Counterclaim is attached to the pending motion. Plaintiffs have not objected to Wachovia's motion to file an amended counterclaim. Under these circumstances the court is persuaded that Wachovia's motion to file its first amended counterclaim should be granted.

V. Defendant's Motion for Adequate Protection

Asserting that the Note has been accelerated and that it remains in accelerated status, that since June of 2009 plaintiffs have continued to reside in the house without remitting mortgage payments or rent, and that Wachovia continues to pay ad valorem taxes on the property, Wachovia > seeks adequate protection from the Court starting [*47] immediately, and it prays that the Court order Plaintiff[s] to pay into the Registry of the Court, for the benefit of Defendant, or to Defendant directly reasonabl[y] adequate protection/rent payments of at least the current principal, interest and escrow payment.[58]

Plaintiffs respond that they "are not opposed to the Motion with some exceptions."[59] Plaintiffs explain that they > are unwilling to make payments to the Defendants directly. Furthermore, payments to the Court registry require needless expense and accounting. Therefore . . Plaintiffs are willing to make payments in the amount of $3,400, slightly more than their standard payment amount, into their attorneys' trust account until such time as this case is resolved. Plaintiffs' counsel will make a monthly accounting to Defendants to confirm such payments have been made. Plaintiffs will continue to maintain the insurance and taxes. Payments would . . . continue on the first of the month until such time as this case is resolved.[60]

Defendant replies that "[a]s of June 2009, Plaintiffs' contractual due date, Plaintiffs' monthly principal and interest payment was $3,490.66, exclusive of ad valorem taxes and hazard insurance,"[61] "Plaintiffs' monthly escrow payment for ongoing, [*48] current year's ad valorem taxes was $2,531.39,"[62] "Defendant was not escrowing Plaintiffs' loan for ongoing hazard insurance,"[63] "Plaintiffs' total monthly principal and interest and escrow for ongoing, current year's taxes was $6,022.05,"[64] and "Plaintiffs also owned $3,515.66 per month towards the escrow shortage associated with Plaintiffs' loan following Defendant's payment of delinquent property taxes."[65] Wachovia asserts that it "has paid all known ad valorem taxes on the Property since the 2008 calendar year and all penalties and interest associated with same."[66]

Although plaintiffs' proposal for adequate protection payments does not include sums for escrow of ad valorem taxes and property insurance, plaintiffs admit that they were unable to pay the 2008 ad valorem taxes, and have neither alleged nor submitted any evidence that contradicts Wachovia's assertion that Wachovia -- not plaintiffs -- has paid all known ad valorem taxes on the property since the 2008 calendar year. Nor have plaintiffs explained why making adequate protection payments into the registry of the court would require needless expense and/or accounting. Accordingly, the court concludes that starting on [*49] January 10, 2012, and continuing on the 10th of each month until such time as this case is resolved, plaintiffs shall make adequate protection payments in the amount of $6,022.05 per month into the registry of the court. Plaintiffs will continue to maintain the insurance, and Wachovia will continue to pay the ad valorem taxes.

VI. Conclusions and Order

For the reasons explained in § II, above, the court concludes that Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment (Docket Entry No. 22) is DENIED; and Plaintiffs', Rocky and Julie Emery, Objection and Motion to Strike Affidavit (Docket Entry No. 30) is DENIED as MOOT.

For the reasons explained in § III, above, the court concludes that Wachovia has carried its burden of proving that plaintiffs' claims for violation of the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act, the Real Estate Settlement Practices Act, and for negligent misrepresentation, negligence, and gross negligence are subject to dismissal for failure to state a claim for which relief may be granted; but that Wachovia has not carried its burden of proving that plaintiffs' claims for breach of contract are subject to dismissal for failure to state a claim for which relief may be granted. Accordingly, [*50] Defendants' Corrected First Amended Motion to Dismiss Pursuant to FRCP 12(b)(6) (Docket Entry No. 43) is GRANTED IN PART and DENIED IN PART; and plaintiffs' claims for violation of the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act, the Real Estate Settlement Practices Act, and for negligent misrepresentation, negligence, and gross negligence are DISMISSED.

For the reasons explained in § IV, above, plaintiffs' request to amend their complaint contained in Plaintiffs' Response to Defendant's First Amended Motion to Dismiss (Docket Entry No. 39) is DENIED, and Counter-Plaintiff's Motion for Leave to File First Amended Counterclaim (Docket Entry No. 46) is GRANTED.

For the reasons explained in § V, above, Defendant's Motion for Adequate Protection (Docket Entry No. 41) is GRANTED in PART and DENIED in PART. Starting on January 10, 2012, and continuing on the 10th of each month until such time as this case is resolved, plaintiffs shall make adequate protection payments in the amount of $6,022.05 per month into the registry of the court. Plaintiffs will continue to maintain the insurance, and Wachovia will continue to pay the ad valorem taxes.

Opinion

Katharine S. Hayden, U.S.D.J.

I. Introduction

This matter arises from a dispute over Federal Communication Commission ("FCC") licenses that permit the operation of Automated Maritime Telecommunications System ("AMTS") radio frequencies. Plaintiffs Warren Havens, Skybridge Spectrum Foundation, Telesaurus, VPC, LLC, AMTS Consortium, LLC, Intelligent Transportation & Monitoring, LLC, and Telesaurus GB, LLC (collectively "plaintiffs") assert that defendants Mobex Network Services, LLC, Mobex Communications, [*2] Inc., Maritime Communications/Land Mobile LLC, Paging Systems, Inc., and Touch Tel Corporation, are engaged in a scheme to hoard certain types of AMTS licenses, in violation of FCC regulations, with the goal of harming plaintiff's business. To that end, plaintiffs assert claims under the Federal Communications Act of 1934 and the Sherman Antitrust Act. In this motion to dismiss, defendants allege that plaintiffs' claims are barred under res judicata and collateral estoppel, and that plaintiffs' complaint fails to put forth an adequate claim on each of its three counts.

II. Factual Background and Procedural History

A. The Facts as Pleaded

The following facts are derived from plaintiff's second amended complaint.

Plaintiff Warren Havens is in the business of obtaining FCC Geographic licenses in the AMTS radio service. (Second Am. Compl. ¶ 2.) He is "the founder, majority owner, manager, and president of the other Plaintiffs." (Id.) Those plaintiffs are each either limited liability companies or nonprofit corporations in the business of obtaining FCC licenses for AMTS radio service "to provide spectrum and wireless telecommunications services to governmental and non-governmental entities [*3] within the State of New Jersey and other states." (Id. ¶¶ 3-7.)

The case involves three defendants. The first, Paging Systems, Inc. ("PSI"), is the holder of "Site-Based" AMTS licenses, including some with stations designated for location in New Jersey. (Id. ¶ 10.) The second, Touch Tel Corp. ("Touch Tel"), constructs and operates PSI's AMTS stations across the country. (Id.) Although the complaint equivocates as to precisely who owns each company, that issue is not relevant for purposes of this motion, and it suffices to say that Robert and Susan Cooper, husband and wife, together own and operate the companies in their joint operations. (Id.) The third and fourth defendants are Maritime Communications/Land Mobile, LLC ("MCLM") [1] and Mobex Network Services LLC ("Mobex"). MCLM is the holder of site-based licenses in New Jersey, which it obtained upon its purchase of Mobex. (Id. ¶ 8-9.) The sole owner of MCLM is Rev. Sandra Depriest, though plaintiffs allege that her husband, Donald Depriest, actually controls MCLM's operations. (Id. ¶ 8.)

This case revolves around FCC-issued ATMS licenses. "AMTS is a common-carrier Commercial Mobile Radio Service . . . licensed throughout the United States, which provides when in operation voice and communications to

[1] Because of ongoing bankruptcy proceedings in the Northern District of Mississippi, the litigation is presently stayed as to MCLM. MCLM figured in the [*4] parties' submissions on the motion to dismiss because those submissions were filed prior to the entry of the stay order. The stay precludes anything in this opinion from affecting MCLM at this time.

customers." (Id. ¶ 16.) Originally created for the benefit of maritime customers along costal and navigable water routes, it has expanded to include land service along the Northeast Corridor. (Id.) AMTS licenses fall into two categories: Site-Based and Geographic. A Site-Based license is a "license issued by the FCC on a first-come, first-served basis, at no cost (except for nominal application processing fees)." (Id. ¶ 17.) These licenses provide for operation only at a specific station whose location is provided in the license. (Id.) Until 2004, all AMTS licenses were Site-Based. (Id. ¶ 18.)

The second type of license is a Geographic license, which is "issued by the FCC to a high bidder in a public auction, which authorizes to the licensee exclusive use of specified radio frequencies [*5] to construct and operate wireless telecommunications stations within a defined wide geographic area." (Id. ¶ 17.) The FCC began auctioning AMTS Geographic licenses in 2004. (Id. ¶ 18.)

To protect Site-Based license holders whose licenses incorporate areas located within the same area granted in a Geographic license, FCC regulations provide that Site-based stations are entitled to "continue their station operations without excessively close-spaced co-channel Geographic-Licensed Stations that may cause radio interference." (Id.) To that end, "the Geographic Licensee [may] build and operate stations no closer than a certain range of lawful stations operated under a valid co-channel (same frequencies) Site-based AMTS license." (Id. ¶ 21.) That distance is the shorter of 120 kilometers and the actual transmitting distance of the Site-Based station as determined through a specific, technical formula. (Id. (citing 47 C.F.R. § 80.385).) If a Site-Based license is terminated, revoked, or found invalid, its covered radio frequencies will revert to the overlapping Geographic license for that area. (Id. ¶ 18.)

The plaintiffs in this case collectively hold AMTS Geographic Licenses covering a majority [*6] of the United States, including New Jersey. (Id. ¶ 19.) Defendants hold the AMTS Site-Based licenses in various places across the country including New Jersey. (Id. ¶ 20.) Plaintiffs assert that Site-Based licensees are expected to provide information to the overlapping Geographic licensees so that the Geographic licensees may calculate the Site-Based station's transmitting distance. (Id. ¶ 22.)

Plaintiffs and defendants are competitors, and plaintiffs complain that defendants have failed to provide them with the necessary information to allow them to know the protected contour of the defendants' stations. (Id. ¶ 23.) Defendants have refused to provide this information notwithstanding three FCC "Cooperation Orders" and the FCC's regulatory disclosure requirements. (Id.)

Plaintiffs assert that defendants are "motivated by an anticompetitive purpose and intend to block and restrain Plaintiffs as competitors." (Id. ¶ 27.) Specifically, plaintiffs allege that even though FCC regulations require Site-Based AMTS licensees to construct stations within two years of obtaining a license, defendants have not actually constructed those stations and are therefore refusing to disclose their stations' [*7] operating contours because such disclosure would reveal that the stations do not exist, thereby resulting in the Site-Based license rights reverting to plaintiffs as the Geographic licensees for the relevant region. (Id. ¶¶ 27-30.) This practice is known as "warehousing," and it "occurs when a party acquired spectrum licenses without the intent to utilize them lawfully" and instead "squat[s]' on the spectrum until a buyer is found." (Id. ¶ 31.)

In the course of discussions with defendants, Havens learned that PSI and the company now known as Mobex were cooperating on management of their licenses, such as that they would locate their stations at the same sites to reduce costs, and that Mobex held an option on PSI's licenses. (Id. ¶¶ 36-39.)

Plaintiffs' first count demands an injunction under 47 U.S.C. § 401(b) to require defendants to disclose the information necessary to calculate the contours of their Site-Based stations. (Id. ¶¶ 46-54.) Plaintiffs' second count seeks damages for violations of the Federal Communications Act, as permitted under 47 U.S.C §§ 206-07. (Id. ¶¶ 55-63.) Plaintiffs' third count seeks damages for violations of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1-2. (Id. ¶¶ 64-73.)

B. [*8] The California Litigation

In 2005, plaintiffs (except for Skybridge Spectrum Foundation) filed a complaint in California Superior Court against Mobex and MCLM, claiming interference with prospective economic advantage, fraud, negligent misrepresentation, unfair competition, and breach of contract. (Friedman Cert., Ex. A.) Defendants removed the case to the Northern District of California, and the plaintiffs filed an amended complaint and later voluntarily dismissed the action. (Friedman Cert., Exs. A & B.)

In 2007, plaintiffs (except for Skybridge Spectrum Foundation) filed another complaint in California Superior Court against Mobex, MCLM, and PSI, this time alleging a violation of the Cartwright Act (a California state antitrust law), two counts of interference with prospective economic advantage, two counts of fraud, negligent misrepresentation, two counts of unfair competition, intentional interference with contracts, and two counts of conversion. (Mauriello Cert., Ex. I.) On June 2, 2008, the California state court dismissed the action, holding that the claims were preempted under the Federal Communications Act ("FCA"), see 47 U.S.C. § 332(c)(3)(A), because determination of the [*9] matter would require the court to assess whether defendants violated the FCA. (Mauriello Cert., Ex. J.)

C. Procedural History

On June 20, 2008, plaintiffs filed a complaint in the District of New Jersey, originally under civil docket number 08-3094. On October 14, 2008, plaintiffs filed a first amended complaint. After the California matter concluded and defendants filed a motion to dismiss on February 7, 2011, plaintiffs submitted a second amended complaint under docket number 11-993. Defendants filed a motion to dismiss.

On August 4, 2011, defendants MCLM and Mobex Network Services, LLC submitted to the Court a Notice of Bankruptcy Case Filing. On August 10, 2011, the Court entered an order staying this matter as to those defendants pending the disposition of the bankruptcy matter. On November 7, 2011, the Court lifted the order as to Mobex because only MCLM actually filed for bankruptcy.

III. Standard of Review

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(a)(2) provides that a claim for relief must include "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Although a plaintiff need not submit "detailed factual allegations" to plead a case, the Rule requires [*10] that the complaint include "more than an unadorned, the-defendant-unlawfully-harmed-me accusation." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). Mere "'labels and conclusions' or 'a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do,'" unless the complaint contains "sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Id. (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556-57, 570). Ultimately, the complaint must contain sufficient facts to allow "the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id.; see also Phillips v. Cnty. of Allegheny, 515 F.3d 224, 231 (3d Cir. 2008).

When a court decides a motion under Rule 12(b)(6), it "must accept as true all of the allegations contained in a complaint," provided that they are factual allegations and not masked legal conclusions. Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949-50.

IV. Discussion

Defendants argue first that the Court is barred from deciding this case under principles of res judicata and collateral estoppel. They then argue that plaintiffs have failed to state a claim on each of [*11] the three counts in the complaint.

A. The California Litigation

1. Res Judicata

Defendants argue that res judicata applies because the facts underlying this case are the same as the facts upon which the now-dismissed California state litigation was based.

The purpose of res judicata is to "promote[] judicial economy and protect[] defendants from having to defend multiple or nearly identical lawsuits by 'bar[ing] not only claims that were brought in a previous action, but also claims that could have been brought.'" Morgan v. Covington Twp., 648 F.3d 172, 177 (3d Cir. 2011) (quoting In re Mullarkey, 536 F.3d 215, 225 (3d Cir. 2008)) (third alteration in original). To that end, a second suit is barred "when there exists '(1) a final judgment on the merits in a prior suit involving (2) the same parties or their privies and (3) a subsequent suit based on the same cause of action.'" Id. (quoting Mullarkey, 536 F.3d at 225). Res judicata applies whenever "there is an 'essential similarity of the underlying events giving rise to the various legal claims.'" CoreStates Bank, N.A. v. Huls Am., Inc., 176 F.3d 187, 194 (3d Cir 1999) (quoting United States v. Athlone Industries, Inc., 746 F.2d 977, 984 (3d Cir. 1984)). [*12] In other words, res judicata will prevent a party from re-litigating not only the precise theory of recovery, but also any other theory invoking the same underlying facts.

The doctrine, however, is not without its limitations. "Ordinarily, a party will not be precluded from raising a claim by a prior adjudication if the party did not have the opportunity to fully and fairly litigate the claim." Id. at 197 (citing Restatement (Second) of Judgments § 26(1)(c)). A claim will not be extinguished if "[t]he plaintiff was unable to rely on a certain theory of the case or to seek a certain remedy or form of relief in the first action because of the limitations on subject matter jurisdiction of the courts." Restatement (Second) of Judgments § 26(1)(c).

Here, the complaint alleges claims under the Federal Communications Act ("FCA") and the Sherman Act. Both of these statutes explicitly limit a plaintiff's recourse in court to federal district courts. See 15 U.S.C. § 15(a); 47 U.S.C. § 207. These claims could not have been brought to the California state court in the previous action. Defendants acknowledge as much, arguing that "Plaintiffs conveniently ignore that they could have filed (but did [*13] not) the California Action in federal district court rather than state court." (Defs.' Reply Br. Supp. Mot. Dismiss 3.) This argument twists the res judicata exception for exclusive federal jurisdiction into a requirement that plaintiffs either bring their initial claims to the federal forum or forfeit their federal counts. Plaintiffs could have sought relief in federal court, but they did not. Instead they brought their claims in a state court that lacked jurisdiction to entertain the FCA and Sherman Act claims. Therefore, res judicata cannot apply.

2. Collateral Estoppel

Defendants argue that collateral estoppel precludes re-litigation of the following issues because they were decided in the motion to dismiss the California case:

> (1) plaintiffs failed to establish a predicate wrong under the Communications Act because they failed to allege facts sufficient to show that the FCC has finally determined that Defendants wrongfully retained cancelled licenses; (2) alleging that certain licenses have 'automatically terminated and were subsequently identified by the FCC as cancelled' is not sufficient to establish a predicate wrong under the Communications Act; and (3) the determination of [*14] whether there was a predicate wrong under the Communications Act is a question for the FCC, not a court of law.
> (Defs.' Br. Supp. Mot. Dismiss 18.)

Collateral estoppel provides that "once an issue is actually and necessarily determined by a court of competent jurisdiction, that determination is conclusive in subsequent suits based on a different cause of action involving a party to the prior litigation." Howard Hess Dental Labs., Inc. v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 602 F.3d 237, 247 (3d Cir. 2010) (quoting Montana v. United States, 440 U.S. 147, 153, 99 S. Ct. 970, 59 L. Ed. 2d 210 (1979)). Application of collateral estoppel requires the satisfaction of four elements: "(1) the identical issue was previously adjudicated; (2) the issue was actually litigated; (3) the previous determination was necessary to the decision; and (4) the party being precluded from relitigating the issue was fully represented in the prior action." Id. at 247-48 (quoting Szehinskyj v. Attorney Gen. of the United States, 432 F.3d 253, 255 (3d Cir. 2005)). [2]

Here, the claim for collateral estoppel fails on the first element because the identical issue has not already been decided. The California court dismissed the case because "the claims set forth in the [Second Amended Complaint] come within the express preemption clause of the Federal Communications Act ("FCA") at 47 U.S.C. § 332(c)(3)(A)." (Mauriello Cert., Ex. J, at 3, 4.) The court's decision was relatively narrow, and defendants overstate its depth. For example, although the court found that plaintiffs' allegation "that certain licenses have 'automatically terminated and were subsequently identified by the FCC as cancelled'" was insufficient to demonstrate that the FCC has made a final decision on the matter, the court addressed that claim only in the context of making certain that the FCC had not decided potentially preempted claims. (See id. at 3, 4.) Moreover, the court never said that the determination of a predicate wrong is strictly one for the FCC; rather, it simply observed that state courts are precluded from addressing such questions under 47 U.S.C. § 332(c)(3)(A). [*16] (See id.)

The California court determined that state courts lack jurisdiction to hear certain claims under the FCA. Because this Court is not a state court, that determination is irrelevant and does not bar this Court's consideration of the issues presented in that prior litigation.

B. Availability of Relief Under 47 U.S.C. § 401(b)

Defendants argue that plaintiffs are not entitled to relief under 47 U.S.C. § 401(b) because that provision does not provide a private right of action in these circumstances. Section 401(b) provides that > [i]f any person fails or neglects to obey any order of the Commission other than for the payment of money, while the same is in effect, . . . any party injured thereby . . . may apply to the appropriate district court of the United States for the enforcement of such order. If, after hearing, that court determines that the order was regularly made and duly served, and that the person is in disobedience of the same, the court shall enforce obedience to such order by a writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, to restrain such person or the officers, agents, or representatives of such person, from further disobedience of such order, or [*17] to enjoin upon it or them obedience to the same.

Plaintiffs' complaint seeks to have the Court enter an order "directing Defendants . . . to comply with the Cooperation Orders and 47 C.F.R. 80.385(b)(1), and specifically requiring Defendants to provide Plaintiffs the required information to enable Plaintiffs to calculate the protected contour of Defendants' Site-Based AMTS stations and thus the portions of Plaintiffs' same-channel Geographic licenses they may use." (Second Am. Compl. ¶¶ 32-33.) Defendants counter that neither the "Cooperation Orders" nor 47 C.F.R. § 80.385(b)(1) constitute "orders" within the meaning of the FCA.

The definition of the term "order" has generated a circuit split and the Third Circuit has yet to address the question. In New England Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Public Utilities Commission of Maine, 742 F.2d 1, 4 (1st Cir. 1984) (Breyer, J.), the First Circuit held that an FCC decision that arose via the Commission's rulemaking authority was not an "order" under section 401(b). The court based its reasoning on several factors: first, the Administrative Procedure Act defines the word "order" as including "final [*18] dispositions . . . in a matter other than rulemaking," New Eng. Tel. & Tel. Co., 742 F.2d at 5 (quoting 5 U.S.C. § 551(6)); second, a broad definition of the term "order" would threaten the principle that enforcement should be left to the FCC, id.; third, a broad definition would "threaten[] the sound development of a coherent nationwide communications policy," id.; fourth, given that review of an FCC decision is obtained through the courts of appeals, "the Act's statutory review provisions can be read more fairly and coherently if 401(b) is construed narrowly" to limit the ability of district courts to engage in interpretation of agency decisions, id. at 6; fifth, other provisions of the Communications Act "use the word 'order' in a way that seems to envision Commission decisions requiring specific actions of specific carriers," id. at 7; and sixth, a narrower view of the definition helps avoid "issue splitting and procedural complexity," id. Accordingly, the court concluded that the term "order" in section 401(b) refers only to "adjudicatory" orders. Id. at 9.

[2] The parties cite the five-factor test articulated in California courts. See Lucido v. Super. Ct. of Mendocino Cnty., 51 Cal. 3d 335, 272 Cal. Rptr. 767, 795 P.2d 1223, 1225 (Cal. 1990), cert. denied, 500 U.S. 920, 111 S. Ct. 2021, 114 L. Ed. 2d 107 (1991). Because the [*15] tests are substantively the same in all respects relevant here, the different articulations do not change the outcome.

At the other end, in Hawaiian Telephone Co. v. Public Utilities Commission of State of Hawaii, 827 F.2d 1264, 1271 (9th Cir. 1987), [*19] the Ninth Circuit explicitly rejected the First Circuit's interpretation. Specifically, the Ninth Circuit saw no reason to import definitions from the Administrative Procedure act into section 401(b) and did not share the First Circuit's concern that the broader definition of the word "order" would hinder the FCC's enforcement role. Hawaiian Tel. Co., 824 F.2d at 1271-72. The court ultimately reserved judgment on the issue of "whether every rule, order, or regulation promulgated by the FCC is an enforceable order under § 401(b)," holding that the order immediately at issue met the necessary criteria because it "require[d] particular actions be taken by [defendant] and private carriers providing service to Hawaii." Id. at 1272.

In its only case confronting this issue, the Third Circuit concluded that "an agency regulation should be considered an 'order' if it requires a defendant to take concrete actions." Mallenbaum v. Adelphia Commc'ns Corp., 74 F.3d 465, 468 (3d Cir. 1996). The court recognized the circuit split but held that it did not need to take sides because the "order" at issue did not require "a particular action to be taken by the defendant." Id. at 468 & n.5.

Here, plaintiffs' [*20] section 401(b) claim seeks an order requiring defendants to disclose "the protected contour of [their] Site-Based AMTS stations." To that end, plaintiffs point to three orders. The first order is a response to MCLM's request for clarification on FCC rules. (Second Am. Compl., Ex. 1.) The Commission granted the request in part and denied it in part. With regard to one part of the request for clarification, the Commission held that a "geographic licensee's co-channel interference protection obligations" should be based on "actual operating parameters" rather than "maximum permissible operating parameters." (Id.) In a footnote to this remark, the Commission cited a prior order in another case and added that "[a]s we noted in that decision, we expect incumbent AMTS licensees 'to cooperate with geographic licenses in order to avoid and resolve interference issues. This includes, at a minimum, providing upon request sufficient information to enable geographic licensees to calculate the site-based station's protected contour.'" (Id.)

The second order addressed an application that touched on PSI's site-based AMTS license at the World Trade Center. (Second Am. Compl., Ex. 2.) The Commission [*21] noted that the petitioner in that case "had to make certain assumptions regarding Station WQA216's technical parameters, given the destruction of the WTC on September 11, 2001." (Id.) In a footnote to that statement, the Commission again stated that "AMTS site-based incumbents are expected to cooperate with geographic licensees in order to avoid and resolve interference issues. . . . This includes, at a minimum, providing upon request sufficient information to enable geographic licensees to calculate the site-based station's protected contour." (Id.)

The third order is a motion for reconsideration regarding the earlier co-channel interference decision. The Commission declined to reconsider its decision to "abandon the use of actual ERP for determining co-channel interference protection," again observing that "AMTS site-based licensees are expected to cooperate with geographic licensees in avoiding and resolving interference issues and that this obligation requires, at a minimum, that the site-based licensee 'provid[e] upon request sufficient information to enable geographic licensees to calculate the site-based station's protected contour.'" (Second Am. Compl., Ex. 3.)

The Court need [*22] not decide which circuit's definition of the term "order" is correct because the cited orders fall short under either definition. In each of the three orders, the FCC discussed matters related to the interplay between Site-Based licenses and Geographic licenses, but the FCC never explicitly confronted the question of how much cooperation is necessary. To be sure, each order offered interpretive guidance, but the orders never required defendants engage in any particular disclosure. Rather, the FCC addressed the cooperation requirements in terms of "expectations," not specific mandates capable of judicial enforcement. Similarly, 47 C.F.R. § 80.385(b)(1) also does not "require[] a particular action to be taken by a defendant," Mallenbaum, 74 F.3d at 468, because it dictates only where a Geographic licensee may locate its stations, not what technical details the Site-Based licensees must disclose. In the absence of an FCC order against defendants on this issue, the Court may not enter an injunction requiring defendants' compliance, and plaintiffs have failed to state a claim.

C. Private Right of Action under 47 U.S.C § 201(b)

Plaintiffs seek recovery for damages under 47 U.S.C. § 207, which [*23] provides that > [a]ny person claiming to be damaged by any common carrier subject to the provisions of this chapter may either make complaint to the Commission as hereinafter provided for, or may bring suit for the recovery of the damages for which such common carrier may be liable under the provisions of this chapter, in any district court of the United States of competent jurisdiction; but such person shall not have the right to pursue both such remedies.

With regard to liability for damages in general, a common carrier such as defendants, who "do[es], or cause[s] or permit[s] to be done, any act, matter, or thing in this chapter prohibited or declared to be unlawful, or . . . omit[s] to do any act, matter, or thing in this chapter required to be done," is "liable to the person or persons injured thereby for the full amount of damages sustained in consequence of any such violation of the provisions of this chapter." 47 U.S.C. § 206.

In substance, plaintiffs claim that defendants violated 47 U.S.C. § 201(b), which states: "All charges, practices, classifications, and regulations for and in connection with [a common carrier] communication service, shall be just and reasonable, and any such [*24] charge, practice, classification, or regulation that is unjust or unreasonable is declared to be unlawful." Therefore, if defendants' alleged conduct is "unjust or unreasonable," then it is unlawful and plaintiffs have stated a claim.

Notwithstanding the grant of jurisdiction in section 207, courts are constrained in what they may and may not find to be a violation. Specifically, "the lawsuit is proper if the FCC could properly hold that [the challenged practice] is an 'unreasonable practice' deemed unlawful under § 201(b)." Global Crossing Telecomms., Inc. v. Metrophones Telecomms., Inc., 550 U.S. 45, 52-53, 127 S. Ct. 1513, 167 L. Ed. 2d 422 (2007). Accordingly, as the Ninth Circuit stated in a case on which both parties rely, "[I]t is within the Commission's purview to determine whether a particular practice constitutes a violation for which there is a private right to compensation." N. Cnty. Commc'ns Corp. v. Cal. Catalog & Tech., 594 F.3d 1149, 1158 (9th Cir. 2010). If a party asks a court to find a violation of section 201(b) in the absence of an FCC determination that the defendant's conduct generally violates that provision, then it is a request "that the federal courts fill in the analytical gap," and such a [*25] request cannot be granted because it would "put interpretation of a finely-tuned regulatory scheme squarely in the hands of private parties and some 700 federal district judges, instead of in the hands of the Commission." Id. (quoting Greene v. Sprint Communs. Co., 340 F.3d 1047, 1053 (9th Cir. 2003) (quoting Conboy v. AT&T Corp., 241 F.3d 242, 253 (2d Cir. 2001))).

To support its claim that it is a violation of section 201(b) to "warehouse" AMTS licenses, plaintiffs cite to FCC determinations that it is a violation of section 201(b) for a party to "warehouse" toll free numbers without identified subscribers. See, e.g., In re Toll Free Serv. Access Codes, 12 FCC Rcd 11162 (1997); Patients Plus, Inc. v. Long Distance Telecomm. Serv., 12 FCC Rcd 13258 (1997). Although these determinations support the proposition that the FCC has found warehousing to be disfavored in one particular context, the determinations do not address the precise type of conduct at issue in this case, or even a sufficient number of similar types of conduct for the Court to infer the FCC's distaste for warehousing as a general practice. The Court cannot risk disturbing the delicate regulatory framework that the Commission [*26] is tasked with maintaining. Cf. Hoffman v. Rashid, 388 F. App'x 121, 123 (3d Cir. 2010) ("[I]t is within the purview of the Federal Communications Commission, not [plaintiff], 'to determine whether a particular practice constitutes a violation for which there is a private right to compensation.'" (quoting N. Cnty. Commc'ns Corp., 594 F.3d at 1158)). [3]

For the [*27] foregoing reasons, plaintiffs' claims under the Federal Communications Act fail, and are dismissed.

D. Sherman Act

1. Preemption

Defendants argue that the FCA established an elaborate framework under which the FCC regulates radio frequency allocation, and that the FCA therefore preempts Sherman Act claims because those claims may interfere with FCC radio frequency determinations. Absent from defendants' argument, however, is any authority to suggest that a court should abstain from hearing a case within its jurisdiction merely because it touches on an area subject to sophisticated agency regulation. Cf. Raritan Baykeeper v. Edison Wetlands Ass'n, Inc., 660 F.3d 686, 691 (3d Cir. 2011) (in context of primary jurisdiction doctrine, noting that "[w]hen 'the matter is not one peculiarly within the agency's area of expertise, but is one which the courts or jury are equally well-suited to determine, the court must not abdicate its responsibility'" (quoting MCI Telecomms. Corp. v. Teleconcepts, Inc., 71 F.3d 1086, 1094 (3d Cir. 1995) (further citations omitted))).

More to the point, defendants' argument ignores 47 U.S.C. § 152, in which an uncodified amendment states that "nothing in this Act [*28] or the amendments made by this Act shall be construed to modify, impair, or supersede the applicability of any of the antitrust laws." Pub. L. No. 104-104, § 601(b)(1) (1996). The amendment further clarifies that the term "antitrust laws" includes the Sherman Act. Pub. L. No. 104-104, § 601(e)(4). The legislative history of this amendment clarifies that when Congress enacted the Telecommunications Act of 1996, it sought to ensure that the FCC could not "confer antitrust immunity" through the course of its decisionmaking. See S. Rep. No. 104-230, at 178-79 (1996) (Conf. Rep.). Thus, Congress envisioned a system in which the FCC could consider antitrust matters when reaching decisions, but that the FCC's decisions would not preclude the operation of independent antitrust statutes. See Verizon Commc'ns, Inc. v. Law Offices of Curtis V. Trinko, LLP, 540 U.S. 398, 406, 124 S. Ct. 872, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823 (2004) (holding that notwithstanding arguments for implied immunity, "the savings clause preserves those claims that satisfy established antitrust standards" (citation and quotation marks omitted)). Accordingly, the FCA does not preempt plaintiffs' Sherman Act claim.

2. Standing

To establish standing, plaintiffs must show that [*29] they suffered an antitrust injury, meaning an injury that is "the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anti-competitive effect either of the violation or of anti-competitive acts made possible by the violation." Eichorn v. AT&T Corp., 248 F.3d 131, 140 (3d Cir. 2001) (quoting Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977)). This injury must "reflect[] an activity's anti-competitive effect on the competitive market," and "an individual plaintiff personally aggrieved by an alleged anti-competitive agreement has not suffered an antitrust injury unless the activity has a wider impact on the competitive market. Id. (citations omitted).

[3] Defendants assert that plaintiffs' section 207 claim is time-barred under 47 U.S.C. § 415(b). Having found that plaintiffs failed to state a claim under section 207, the Court need not address this issue in depth. The Third Circuit has spoken on the issue, holding that "when a defendant's conduct is part of a continuing practice, an action is timely so long as the last act evidencing the continuing practice falls within the limitations period." Brenner v. Local 514, United Bhd. of Carpenters & Joiners of Am., 927 F.2d 1283, 1295 (3d Cir. 1991). Here, plaintiffs' claim is that the defendants' unjust and unreasonable practice is the continuing disregard of Commission regulations and orders, and the continued warehousing of AMTS licenses. Because these are ongoing activities, the statute of limitations has not yet started to run.

Defendants suggest that plaintiffs are complaining about injury to their status as competitors rather than an injury suffered by the overall competitive market. But plaintiffs' complaint pleads a broader injury than that. After recounting defendants' course of conduct, the complaint states that "[t]hese acts produced anti-competitive effects within the relevant geographic market for AMTS, are manifestly anticompetitive and constitute [*30] a per se violation of the Sherman Act." (Second Am. Compl. ¶ 66.) The complaint further alleges that the conduct "had a wider impact on the relevant AMTS market." (Id. ¶ 69.) These statements are not mere "labels and conclusions," nor are they "a formulaic recitation of the elements of the cause" or "'naked assertion[s]' devoid of 'further factual enhancement.'" Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949 (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555, 557). Rather, they are the logical and plausible inferences to be drawn from plaintiffs' factual allegations. Plaintiffs allege that defendants have refused to provide necessary information about the contours of their Site-Based stations (Second Am. Compl. ¶ 25), that they have done so to avoid the loss of their licenses (id. ¶ 30), and that their ultimate goal is to "warehouse" the licenses to make the neighboring Geographic licenses "less economically viable to competitors in upcoming auctions, so that [defendants] as the 'Incumbent' Station licensees could succeed in the auctions with less competition and at lower prices" (id. ¶¶ 31-33). These allegations, accepted as true, present not only allegations that plaintiffs themselves have suffered harm, but also that [*31] defendants' conduct affects the overall competitive market for AMTS frequencies. Accordingly, plaintiffs have established antitrust standing.

3. Sherman Act Section 1 Claim

A claim under section one of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, consists of four elements: "(1) concerted action by the defendants; (2) that produced anti-competitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets; (3) that the concerted action[was] illegal; and (4) . . . [plaintiff] was injured as a proximate result of the concerted action." Howard Hess Dental Labs., Inc., 602 F.3d at 253 (quoting Gordon v. Lewistown Hosp., 423 F.3d 184, 207 (3d Cir. 2005)). Defendant alleges that the complaint fails to satisfy the first element because it does not allege that defendants "conspired or agreed to act in concert with any other party, let alone the other defendants." (Defs.' Br. Supp. Mot. Dismiss 39.) See also Twombly, 127 S. Ct. at 1961 (in antitrust case, insufficient to allege "parallel conduct unfavorable to competition" without "some factual context suggesting agreement, as distinct from identical, independent action").

The facts here, however, are distinguishable from the facts in Twombly. Here, plaintiff [*32] has stated sufficient facts to "allow[] the court to draw the reasonable inference that" defendants had the requisite intent to act in concert. Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949 (citing Twombly, 127 S. Ct. at 1965). First, plaintiff alleges specific reasons for the defendants' decisions to act in concert, such as that the defendants made a spectrum-splitting arrangement to allow each to share in the benefits of the AMTS licenses. (See Second Am. Compl. ¶ 36.) Moreover, Havens learned through communications with PSI that PSI and Mobex were cooperating and had an intertwined financial stake in the AMTS spectrums at issue. (Id. ¶ 38.) Cooperation could also be seen in other areas, such as Mobex and PSI locating stations at the same sites in order to reduce costs. (Id. ¶ 39.) This cooperation extended beyond physical interactions, as Mobex and PSI jointly petitioned the FCC on certain matters regarding the licenses. (Id. ¶ 41.)

The complaint alleges a history of cooperation and interactions between the companies on the very licenses at issue in this case. This makes plausible plaintiffs' allegation of concerted action, and plaintiffs have therefore stated a claim on which relief can be granted.

4. [*33] Sherman Act Section 2 Claim

Under 15 U.S.C. § 2, it is unlawful to "monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations." Plaintiffs alleging a conspiracy to monopolize must demonstrate four elements: "(1) an agreement to monopolize; (2) an overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy; (3) a specific intent to monopolize; and (4) a causal connection between the conspiracy and the injury alleged." Howard Hess Dental Labs., 602 F.3d at 253. To plead monopolization, "a plaintiff must allege: '(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historical accident.'" Crossroads Cogeneration Corp. v. Orange & Rockland Cntys. Util., Inc., 159 F.3d 129, 141 (3d Cir. 1998) (quoting Schuylkill Energy Res. v. Pa. Power & Light Co., 113 F.3d 405, 412-13 (3d Cir), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 977, 118 S. Ct. 435, 139 L. Ed. 2d 335 (1997)). Similarly, to claim attempted monopolization, "a plaintiff must allege '(1) that the defendant [*34] has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power.'" Id. (quoting Schuykill Energy Res., 113 F.3d at 413).

Plaintiffs' complaint specifically cites the "essential facilities doctrine," which requires demonstrating: "(1) control of the essential facility by a monopolist; (2) the competitor's inability practically or reasonably to duplicate the essential facility; (3) denial of the use of the facility to a competitor; and (4) the feasibility of providing the facility." Ideal Dairy Farms, Inc. v. John Labatt, Ltd., 90 F.3d 737, 748 (3d Cir. 1996) (quoting Del. Health Care, Inc. v. MCD Holding Co., 893 F. Supp. 1279 (D. Del. 1995)).

Here, even assuming that the contour information is an "essential facility," plaintiffs' claim falls short because the complaint does not set forth a case that defendants are monopolists, have established a monopoly, or are attempting to establish a monopoly. Indeed, a claim of attempted monopolization is largely inconsistent with the overall theory of plaintiffs' case. The complaint does not allege that defendants were warehousing AMTS spectrum in order to [*35] generate a monopoly. Instead, the complaint states that defendants' goal in warehousing the Site-Based licenses was to make the remaining licenses less attractive to competitors, or to create an opportunity to reap a profit by selling or leasing their licenses to the adjacent Geographic licensees. (Second Am. Compl. ¶ 33.) (Notably, if this were defendant's plan, it apparently failed, as plaintiffs won the auctions for the Geographic licenses and now own them across most of the country.) Although this practice, if true, may serve to give defendants an edge in the market, it does not lay any meaningful groundwork for the establishment of a monopoly, especially because plaintiffs own most of the Geographic licenses for New Jersey and would therefore appear to have a comparable bargaining position to that of defendants. Additionally, the FCC tightly regulates the distribution of the pertinent licenses and could be made aware of any potential abuses. Cf. Verizon Commc'ns, Inc., 540 U.S. at 412 ("One factor of particular importance is the existence of a regulatory structure designed to deter and remedy anticompetitive harm."). Accordingly, plaintiffs have failed to set forth a claim under [*36] section two of the Sherman Act.

E. Administrative Exhaustion and the Primary Jurisdiction Doctrine

Defendants last argue that the Court should dismiss the complaint because plaintiffs have not exhausted their administrative remedies and because the primary jurisdiction doctrine suggests that the matter should be heard by the FCC. Because the Court has determined that plaintiffs failed to state a claim under the FCA, and because the FCC does not have jurisdiction over claims under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15(a), the Court need not address that argument.

V. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, the motion to dismiss is granted as to plaintiffs' claims under the FCA and section 2 of the Sherman Act, and the motion is denied as to plaintiffs' claim under section 1 of the Sherman Act.

ORDER ON MOTIONS FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

The matter comes before the court on the parties' motions and cross motions [*2] for summary judgment. Dkt. 58, 66, 71, 72, and 74. The court has reviewed and considered all of the pleadings filed by the parties and the remainder of the file herein, and is fully advised.

INTRODUCTION

It appears that this case involves two ambulance companies fighting about money, and dragging Clark County and the City of Vancouver into that fight.

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

On November 5, 2010, plaintiff Metro West Ambulance (Metro West) filed a complaint for declaratory judgment and injunctive relief against (1) Clark County, Washington, and the Clark County Board of Commissioners, being Tom Mielke, Marc Boldt, and Steve Stuart, in their official capacities as current commissioners of Clark County (collectively referred to as Clark County); and the Clark County Emergency Medical Services District No. 2. Dkt. 1.

On March 22, 2011, Metro West filed a First Amended Complaint for Declaratory Judgment. Dkt. 28.

On April 12, 2011, Clark County filed an answer and a counterclaim, seeking an injunction to prevent Metro West from providing non-emergency ambulance service within the regulated service area of Clark County, without complying with the Clark County Code. Dkt. 32.

On March 25, 2011, the court [*3] granted the motion of American Medical Response to intervene as a defendant. Dkt. 30. On April 25, 2011, the then-existing parties stipulated to intervention by the City of Vancouver (Dkt. 33); although the City of Vancouver did not file a formal motion to intervene, the city has filed pleadings and has apparently acquiesced to status as a party defendant.

AMENDED COMPLAINT

In the amended complaint, Metro West makes the following claims regarding Clark County Code Section 5.48A.025 (EMS Ordinance): (1) Federal law preempts the EMS Ordinance because it conflicts with federal antitrust policy, is a hybrid restraint of trade, and constitutes a per se violation of the Sherman Act. 15 U.S.C. § 1 et al.; (2) Metro West's provision of ambulance/emergency services pursuant to its contract with the VA Medical Centers preempts the EMS Ordinance; and (3) the EMS Ordinance violates the Commerce Clause of the United States Constitution, Article I, Section 8, Clause 3, because the EMS Ordinance directly regulates interstate commerce, burdens interstate commerce, increases health care costs, and decreases access to specialized health care services for Clark County patients. Dkt. 28. The amended complaint [*4] requests declaratory and injunctive relief. Dkt. 28, at 16-17.

On April 12, 2011, Clark County filed an answer and asserted a counterclaim, requesting a permanent injunction, enjoining Metro West from providing non-emergency ambulance service within the regulated service area of Clark County, without complying with the Clark County Code. Dkt. 32, at 7.

PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND AND RELEVANT FACTS

The Parties. Clark County is a municipal corporation under the laws of Washington. The Clark County Board of Commissioners provides legislative authority for Clark County. The three current members of the Board of Commissioners are Tom Mielke, Marc Boldt, and Steve Stuart. Clark County Emergency Medical Services District No. 2 (hereafter the District) is an emergency medical service district under RCW 36.32.480 ("A county legislative authority may adopt an ordinance creating an emergency medical service district in all or a portion of the unincorporated area of the county, and ... within the corporate limits of any city or town...."). The District covers Clark County and the City of Vancouver.

Federal Lawsuit. In 1987, the Clark County Board of Commissioners created the District. The commissioners [*5] found that creation of this district was necessary for the protection of public health, safety and welfare. By 1990, the Board determined that additional changes were necessary, and adopted Ordinance 1990-07-303 to establish oversight and regulatory standards for the provision of pre-hospital emergency medical services. This ordinance required a license for all providers of emergency medical services and imposed standards regulating issuance of licenses. Service providers were required to respond to calls within 4-60 minutes depending on the remoteness of the area, and ambulances were required to be appropriately staffed based on status from "Basic Life Support" to "Advanced Life Support".

In 1991, an antitrust suit was filed in Federal Court, alleging that Clark County's system of allocation of ambulance service between two ambulance providers violated the Sherman Act. Buck Medical Services, Inc. v. Clark County, et al. C91-5229B. The Clark County Board of Commissioners, on behalf of the District, faced with the antitrust allegations, adopted resolution 1991-06-1 to both provide emergency medical services based on a competitive selection process and to assign interim services in a [*6] fashion to minimize disruption of services. The Clark County Board of Commissioners found and concluded that the county should be divided between the two providers: Buck Medical Services, an Oregon corporation; and American Ambulance, provided that the federal court conclude that the District possessed the authority to allocate calls and that such actions and its competitive process did not violate antitrust laws. Finally the Board authorized the District to petition for intervention and to authorize other cities to join the District by interlocal agreement.

The federal lawsuit proceeded until October 11, 1991, when the court approved a Settlement Agreement and an entered an agreed order of dismissal. Dkt. 69-5.

The Settlement Agreement referenced EMS District Resolution No. 1991-06-01, which provided that 911 medical request calls would be allocated to one EMS provider selected pursuant to an open, competitive process; and provided an interim allocation until the single source provider could be selected. Dkt. 69-5, at 9. The Settlement Agreement provided that the Resolution "was contingent upon this Court's upholding the authority of the EMS District to implement the Resolution and [*7] the validity of the Resolution under federal antitrust law." Dkt. 69-5, at 9.

The Settlement Agreement included a copy of Resolution M-2744, adopted by the Vancouver City Council on September 16, 1991, which found, among other things, that existing private ambulance service in Vancouver would become inadequate under RCW 35.21.766 if the EMS District were served by a single contract EMS provider while Vancouver were served by one of more EMS providers under a different system. Dkt. 69-5, at 10.

The Settlement Agreement included the following provision:

> WHEREAS, Clark County, the EMS District and Vancouver have the authority under federal and Washington State law to undertake the actions described in this Settlement Agreement, and such actions are valid under federal antitrust laws....

Dkt. 69-5, at 11.

On October 10, 1991, the parties sent a letter to the undersigned judge, stating in relevant part as follows:

> Because substantial taxpayer revenues and County and City resources are necessary to implement the single provider system and interim reallocation measures called for by the Settlement Agreement, Clark County, the City of Vancouver, and the EMS District seek to obtain the Court's approval [*8] of the settlement terms prior to expending these sums and resources.

Dkt. 69-6, at 3.

The Settlement Agreement also included the procedure for an open competitive process that may be for 911 calls only, or the process may include the entire market including both 911 calls and calls for "assumed" routine transport services. Dkt. 69-5, at 19-20.

On October 11, 1991, the court approved the Settlement Agreement and dismissed the action. Dkt. 69-5, at 2-3.

Emergency Medical Service. Clark County Code Section 5.48A covers the provision of Emergency Medical Services within the District.

" 'Emergency medical service' means medical treatment and care which may be rendered at the scene of any medical emergency or while transporting any patient in an ambulance to an appropriate medical facility, including ambulance transportation between medical facilities." RCW 18.73.030(10).

Washington State law governs authority of local governments related to provision of emergency medical service.

Ambulance Services. The EMS Ordinance covers provision of ambulance services in the district.

" 'Ambulance' means a ground or air vehicle designed and used to transport the ill and injured and to provide personnel, facilities, [*9] and equipment to treat patients before and during transportation." RCW 18.73.030(4).

Washington State law governs authority of local governments concerning ambulance services.

RCW 36.01.100 provides the authority for counties, as it relates to ambulance services:

> The legislative authority of any county may by appropriate legislation provide for the establishment of a system of ambulance service for the entire county or for portions thereof, and award contracts for ambulance services: PROVIDED, That such legislation may not provide for the establishment of any system which would compete with any existing private system.

RCW 36.01.095 provides as follows:

> Any county may establish a system of emergency medical services as defined by [RCW 18.73.030 was amended by 2000 c 93 § 16, changing subsection (11) to subsection (9).] RCW 18.73.030(11). The county legislative authority may adopt by resolution procedures to collect reasonable fees in order to reimburse the county in whole or in part for its costs of providing such service: PROVIDED, That any county which provides emergency medical services supported by an excess levy may waive such charges for service: PROVIDED FURTHER, That whenever the [*10] county legislative authority determines that the county or a substantial portion of the county is not adequately served by existing private ambulance service, and existing private ambulance service cannot be encouraged to expand service on a contract basis, the emergency medical service that is established by the county shall not be deemed to compete with any existing private ambulance service as provided for in RCW 36.01.100.

RCW 35.21.766 provides the authority for cities and towns, as it relates to ambulance services:

> Whenever the legislative authority of any city or town determines that the city or town or a substantial portion of the city or town is not adequately served by existing private ambulance service, the legislative authority may by appropriate legislation provide for the establishment of a system of ambulance service to be operated as a public utility of the city or town or operated by contract after a call for bids.

EMS Ordinance. Clark County Code Section 5.48A.025 provides as follows:

> Exclusive ambulance service provider.
> Except as provided for in Section 5.48A.110, no person or entity shall provide ambulance service for either emergency and nonemergency transport of ambulance [*11] patients (language specific to county "within the regulated service area" unless under contract to do so with the district. (Sec. 2 of Ord. 1995-04-04; amended by Exh. A of Res. 2003-04-23)

Dkt. 60, at 5.

Clark County Code Section 5.48A.100 contains eight exemptions from the provisions of Section 5.48A. Dkt. 60, at 8. Three of those exemptions are relevant here.

> B. Vehicles owned or controlled by the United States government;
>
> * * * * * * * *
>
> F. Persons or vehicles providing ambulance service for patient transports originating outside the regulated service area or nonstop patient transports through the regulated service area.
>
> * * * * * * * *
> H. Persons or vehicles providing non-911 ambulance service for inter-county patient transports originating inside the regulated service area in excess of thirty (30) loaded miles.

Dkt. 60, at 8 and 9.

Violation of the EMS Ordinance constitutes a misdemeanor punishable upon conviction by not more than one year in jail and/or a fine not to exceed $5,000. Clark County Code 5.48A.240; Dkt. 60, at 11.

The City of Vancouver VMC 5.84.015 states: "Except as provided for in VMC 5.84.110, no person or entity shall provide ambulance service for either emergency or nonemergency [*12] transport of ambulance patients within the city limits of Vancouver unless under contract to do so with the district." VMC 5.84.110(2) provides that the chapter does not apply to "Vehicles owned or controlled by the United States Government".

Contract between the District and American Medical Response. Following dismissal of Buck Medical Services. v. Clark County, Clark County, in compliance with the Settlement Agreement, received requests for proposals from both providers. Following execution of an agreement with Buck Medical, the County adopted Ordinance 1992-06-26. The first ambulance agreement was limited to 911 services and contained specific response times for emergency calls, penalties for non-compliance, a required performance bond sufficient to allow the county to take over in the event of a default, a rental agreement that would allow the county to take over facilities and equipment. Access to the non-emergency market was open to American Ambulance.

By 1995, following a joint city/county/District work session that included an anti-trust legal analysis, the City of Vancouver and Clark County determined that the public was at risk under the then-current system, and that the public [*13] was best served by a unified system of ambulance service. The District requested proposals from all providers wishing to provide exclusive ambulance service for both 911 and non-emergency transport. A new Request for Proposal was issued in 2004.

On June 24, 2004, Clark County, through the District, entered into a contract with American Medical Response. Dkt. 61, at 2-87. The contract ran from June 29, 2004 through 2010. The contract has been extended to 2014.

The contract states that American Medical Response "is the winner of a competitive allocation of ambulance service market rights and responsibilities, conducted by the District in accordance with the terms of Settlement Agreement No. C91-5229B[.]". Dkt. 61, at 5.

The contract includes a rationale, as follows:

> SECTION III. FAIL SAFE FRANCHISE MODEL DESIGN RATIONALE
> Competition Within the Market Has Proven Ineffective. The historical track record of the ambulance industry conclusively reveals that retail competition within a geographic market fails to provide and reward efficient production of quality patient care due to the following economic distortions:
> > 1. Emergency victims have little opportunity and less inclination to "comparison [*14] shop" for ambulance services at the time service is required;
> > 2. Even where multiple firms operate within the same area, few potential ambulance service customers prepare to be effective buyers in their moment of need, by comparing services and costs of suppliers in advance;
> > 3. The typical consumer of ambulance services purchases such services too infrequently (i.e., about twice in a lifetime) to develop skills as a shrewd and experienced buyer of ambulance services;

> > 4. Ambulance services are becoming increasingly sophisticated, both clinically and technologically, to an extent that few customers are able to make useful distinctions in quality of patient care.
> > 5. Persons dialing 911 in a medical emergency have no opportunity to choose from among competing suppliers of ambulance service, have no way of knowing which firm's ambulance is nearest their location and staffed and equipped for their needs, and thus cannot reasonably be expected to choose from a selection of available firms;
> > 6. The retail market transaction is often rendered economically ineffective because the person choosing the ambulance company is neither the patient nor the payer;
> > 7. Unlike other health care services, the primary [*15] cost of ambulance service is the cost of providing geographic coverage, which cost is only increased when multiple firms must duplicate coverage of the same geographic area; and
> > 8. Economies of scale in ambulance service industry are such that the total population of the Contract Service Area is inadequate to support the economically stable delivery of totally or substantially unsubsidized paramedic ambulance services delivered at reasonable rates, if fee-for-service income must support the fixed costs and overhead of multiple firms. Thus, dividing the Contract Service Area into two or more zones for allocation among two or more firms is not in the public interest, clinically or economically.
> Competition for the Market Can Be a Powerful and Positive Force. Experience of communities across the U.S. has shown conclusively that, although effective use of competitive market allocation is among the most complex of all procurements, managed competition for the market has reliably generated the EMS industry's highest levels of clinical and response time reliability at costs (subsidies and fee structures combined) far below those of systems which have eliminated competition entirely (i.e., socialized [*16] systems), and below those of systems depending on retail competition within the market. Thus, this process involves a competitive "group purchase" of ambulance services on behalf of the residents of the "Contract Service Area."

Dkt. 61, at 16-17. Emphasis in the original.

Under the contract, American Medical Response is "awarded exclusive rights and responsibilities for provision of all 911 and 'Routine Transfer' ambulance service originating within the Contract Service Area, for an initial term of s (6) years with the possibility of up to three (3) 'earned' two (2) year extensions." Dkt. 61, at 16.

The contract further provides as follows:

> A. EXCLUSIVE MARKET RIGHTS. The Contractor is awarded exclusive market rights (911) and "Routine Transfer"), for provision of all ground ambulance services originating within the Contract Service Area, regardless of whether the patient's destination is within or outside the State of Washington, subject to the following exceptions:
> > 1. Long-Distance, Inter-County Transports. Other firms may compete with the Contractor on a retail basis for the sale of inter-county ambulance transports originating within the Contract Service Area involving "Routine Transfers" [*17] more than 30 loaded miles.
> > 2. VA Contractors. Ambulances operating under federal contract for direct purchase of ambulance services (e.g., VA contracts) shall be exempt from provisions of exclusivity. For purposes of this provision, Medicare and Medicaid provider agreements shall be considered a reimbursement arrangement—not a federal contract for direct purchase of ambulance services.
> > ******************************

Dkt. 61, at 24.

Under the terms of the contract, the District refers all medical emergency "911" calls within Clark County to American Medical Response. The emergency response center is operated by Clark Regional Emergency Services Agency (CRESA). CRESA is a political subdivision of Clark County, funded by a fee charged, pursuant to the contract, on all ambulance services provided within the District by American Medical Response. In addition, under the terms of the contract, American Medical Response is entitled to every ambulance call originating in the District regardless whether the request comes through CRESA or not, or whether it is an emergency transport or not.

VA Contract with Metro West. In 2009, Metro West submitted a bid in response to a Request for Proposal from [*18] the United States Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) to transport beneficiaries of the VA within the Portland metropolitan area, including beneficiaries located within Clark County. Dkt. 65. The VA awarded the contract (VA contract) to Metro West on December 11, 2009, and the parties signed the contract on December 31, 2009. Dkt. 65, at 3; Dkt. 65-1, at 1-51.

In the Statement of Work, the VA contract provides in relevant part as follows:

> Purpose Statement: The purpose of this contract is to provide the Ambulance services for beneficiaries of the Department of Veterans Affairs Medical centers (VAMC) in Portland, Oregon, East Glisan SBOC and Hillsboro CBOC, and the VA Nursing Care Unit in Vancouver, Washington. The Contractor shall provide all vehicles, personnel, management, supplies, Transportation, equipment and reports necessary for all Ambulance services, as identified on the Schedule in Section B.

Dkt. 65-1, at 8.

In the Veterans Rights section, the VA contract provides in relevant part as follows:

> (b) Each veteran will be provided with safe and comfortable transportation to and/or from the Medical Center. The contractor will assume the total responsibility for the veteran's safety [*19] and comfort during the entire transfer process, from the time the Contractor's staff reaches the veteran, through the loading and unloading of the veteran into the vehicle, and until the time the veteran is properly delivered to the professional staff of the medical Center or other final destination.

Dkt. 65-1, at 20.

The VA contract requires that all Metro West ambulance services for Advanced Life Support services "for Portland, Oregon and Vancouver, Washington, East Glisan and Hillsboro CBOCs shall be in accordance with current Oregon and Washington State laws and regulations". Dkt. 92, at 5.

The VA contract further provides as follows:

> BLS [Basic Life Support] is defined as services required for non-critical veteran care in which veteran requires an ambulance, staffed in accordance with Washington State laws and regulations governing the certification and licensure of private ambulances....BLS services for Portland, Oregon and Vancouver, Washington, East Glisan and Hillsboro CBOCs shall be staffed and supplied in accordance with current Oregon and Washington State laws and regulations.

Dkt. 92, at 5-6.

According to the declaration of J.D. Fuiten, the president and CEO of Metro West, the [*20] VA provides Metro West with a service request for a pick-up of a VA beneficiary via the VA's dispatch center; the VA dispatch center provides dispatch directions for the VA beneficiary, regardless of the beneficiary's location; Metro West dispatches an ambulance to the address requested by the VA dispatcher; Metro West bills the VA for the ambulance services requested; and the VA pays the bills. Dkt. 65, at 5.

Action by Clark County. On July 10, 2010, the Clark County Prosecutor send a letter to Mr. Fuiten, President of Metro West, stating that Metro West violated the EMS Ordinance on June 13, 2010, when it provided ambulance service for a patient being transported from Legacy Salmon Creek Hospital to Portland Veterans Medical Center. Dkt. 65-2, at 2.

The letter stated as follows:

> Based on a June 16th email from your Business Development Director, Erin Miller to Doug Smith-Lee, CRESA's EMS Manager, I understand this was considered a Veterans Administration (VA) call. To meet the provision that exempts vehicles owned or controlled by the United States government, the ambulance service must: 1) be owned, or under contract with the federal government; and 2) the ambulance call must originate [*21] and end on federal property. Picking up a VA patient outside of federal property (i.e., Vancouver VA Medical Center) doesn't meet this exception.

Dkt.65-2, at 2.

The letter further stated that, at the time of the call, Metro West was not licensed to provide ambulance services in Washington, and that "[s]ince the call in question didn't originate on federal property, Metro West also violated Section 5.48A095 of the EMS Ordinance based on Metro West not being a licensed ambulance service for the State of Washington and the personnel not meeting the Medical Program Director's minimum staffing requirements (Clark County certified paramedic and EMT)". Dkt. 65-2, at 3.

MOTIONS FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

The parties have filed four motions for summary judgment. Dkt. 66 was improperly filed as a separate motion, but is the supporting memorandum for Dkt. 71.

1. Metro West filed a motion for summary judgment (Dkt. 58), requesting that the court declare that (a) Metro West is entitled to perform under the VA contract, either pursuant to Clark County Code § 5.48A.110(B) or federal preemption, without fear of prosecution by Clark County for alleged violations of the EMS Ordinance; (b) the EMS Ordinance violates [*22] the Commerce Clause; and (c) because the EMS Ordinance creates a hybrid restraint of trade by providing American Medical Response with a territorial monopoly, it constitutes a per se violation of the Sherman Act. Dkt. 58.

2. The Clark County defendants filed a motion for partial summary judgment (Dkt. 71) and a memorandum in support of that motion (Dkt. 66), requesting that the court dismiss Metro West's preemption claim and grant injunctive relief requiring Metro West to comply with local and state regulations for non-mandated transports in Clark County. Dkt. 66, at 17. It appears that "non-mandated" means "transports other than those that begin and end at VA facilities". Dkt. 66, at 9. The City of Vancouver joined in the Clark County defendants' motion for summary judgment (Dkt. 74).

3. American Medical Response filed a motion for partial summary judgment (Dkt. 72), requesting that the court dismiss Metro West's antitrust and Commerce Clause claims. The City of Vancouver joined in American Medical Response's motion for summary judgment (Dkt. 74).

SUMMARY JUDGMENT STANDARD

Summary judgment is proper only if the pleadings, the discovery and disclosure materials on file, and any affidavits [*23] show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed.R.Civ.P. 56(c). The moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law when the nonmoving party fails to make a sufficient showing on an essential element of a claim in the case on which the nonmoving party has the burden of proof. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1985). There is no genuine issue of fact for trial where the record, taken as a whole, could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the non moving party. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986)(nonmoving party must present specific, significant probative evidence, not simply "some metaphysical doubt."). See also Fed.R.Civ.P. 56(e). Conversely, a genuine dispute over a material fact exists if there is sufficient evidence supporting the claimed factual dispute, requiring a judge or jury to resolve the differing versions of the truth. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 253, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986); T.W. Elec. Service Inc. v. Pacific Electrical Contractors Association, 809 F.2d 626, 630 (9th Cir. 1987).

The determination of the existence of a material [*24] fact is often a close question. The court must consider the substantive evidentiary burden that the nonmoving party must meet at trial —e.g., a preponderance of the evidence in most civil cases. Anderson, 477 U.S. at 254, T.W. Elect. Service Inc., 809 F.2d at 630. The court must resolve any factual issues of controversy in favor of the nonmoving party only when the facts specifically attested by that party contradict facts specifically attested by the moving party. The nonmoving party may not merely state that it will discredit the moving party's evidence at trial, in the hopes that evidence can be developed at trial to support the claim. T.W. Elect. Service Inc., 809 F.2d at 630 (relying on Anderson, supra). Conclusory, non specific statements in affidavits are not sufficient, and "missing facts" will not be "presumed." Lujan v. National Wildlife Federation, 497 U.S. 871, 888-89, 110 S. Ct. 3177, 111 L. Ed. 2d 695 (1990).

DISCUSSION

1. VA Transports

Metro West requests that the court declare that Metro West is entitled to perform under the VA contract, pursuant to the exemption in Clark County Code Section 5.48A.110(B) or on the basis of federal preemption. Clark County requests that the court grant injunctive relief that [*25] requires Metro West to comply with local and state regulations for "non-mandated" transports in Clark County, that is, for transports other than those that begin and end at VA facilities.

RCW 36.01.100 provides that a legislative authority of a county may (1) by appropriate legislation; (2) provide for the establishment of a system of ambulance service; (3) award contracts for ambulance services; (4) but may not provide for the establishment of any system which would compete with any existing private system.

RCW 35.21.766 provides that a legislative city or town may (1) by appropriate legislation; (2) provide for the establishment of a system of ambulance service; (3) by contract after a call for bids; (4) when the legislative authority determines that the city or town is not adequately served by existing private ambulance service.

Clark County established the District. Clark County adopted the EMS Ordinance. The City of Vancouver determined that, given the intent of Clark County to award a single source competitive contract for ambulance services, the City of Vancouver would not be adequately served by the existing private ambulance service. The EMS District followed an open and competitive [*26] bid process for contracting for exclusive rights to ambulance services within the EMS District. The contract was awarded to American Medical Response. Clark County adopted the EMS Ordinance, which prohibited a person or entity from providing ambulance service for emergency and nonemergency transport of ambulance patients within the District unless under contract to do so with the district. The EMS Ordinance provided that "Vehicles owned or controlled by the United States government" are exempt from Clark County Code Chapter 5.48A.

Metro West entered into a contract with the VA. The purpose of this contract was to provide the ambulance services for beneficiaries of the Department of Veterans Affairs Medical centers (VAMC) in Portland, Oregon, East Glisan SBOC and Hillsboro CBOC, and the VA Nursing Care Unit in Vancouver, Washington.

A contract entered into by the United States and another party is controlled by general principles of federal contract law. Tanadgusix v. Huber, 404 F.3d 1201,1205 (9th Cir. 2005). The court construes a contract by reading it as a whole and interpreting each part with reference to the entire contract. Id. The terms of the contract control, regardless of the [*27] parties' subjective intentions shown by extrinsic evidence. Id. Where there is no ambiguity in the contract, there is no genuine issue of fact. Id.

The ambulances operated by Metro West, are "controlled by the United States government" through the VA contract. The VA contract is unambiguous. The VA contract does not restrict or limit the pick-up or drop off of the beneficiaries to transports between VA facilities/hospitals. The VA contract provides for ambulance services for beneficiaries, not for ambulance services for hospitals. The VA contract does not restrict where a beneficiary can be picked up or dropped off.

American Medical Response argues that Metro West has not provided sufficient information in discovery to show whether the VA authorized, through the VA travel desk, pickups in Clark County; and that the information American Medical Response has shows that Metro West has no corroboration of VA authorization for 694 of the 1644 transports claimed by Metro West in the schedules Metro West provided in discovery. However, there is nothing to suggest that the pick-ups in Clark County for these 694 transports were not paid for and included in the VA contract, regardless whether [*28] those transports were authorized in advance.

Because the EMS Ordinance exempts ambulance services provided pursuant to the VA contract from Clark County Chapter 5.48A, Metro West is entitled to a declaration that it is entitled to perform under the VA contract, without fear of prosecution by Clark County for alleged violations of the EMS Ordinance.

In light of this conclusion, the court need not address Metro West's argument that the VA contract, pursuant to federal preemption, prohibits Clark County from prosecuting Metro West for violation of the EMS Ordinance. However, it would not be surprising to learn that the issue of federal preemption was considered by Clark County when the EMS Ordinance, and the exemption in Clark County Code Section 5.48A.110(B), were drafted and adopted.

2. Compliance with Licensing Requirements and Regulations

Clark County requests that the court grant injunctive relief, requiring that Metro West comply with local and state regulations for non-mandated transports in Clark County.

As discussed above, services performed by Metro West pursuant to the VA contract are exempt from Clark County Chapter 5.48A.

Certifications. Clark County further maintains that Metro [*29] West is in violation of the VA contract because it has not obtained the Clark County certifications required by the VA contract. That is an issue between the VA and Metro West. Further, Metro West contends that it cannot obtain Clark County certification because Clark County has taken the position that Metro West's personnel may not perform services provided under the VA contract. The certification is an issue that Clark County should be able to resolve, if necessary, in light of the court's determination that services performed pursuant to the VA contract with Metro West are exempt from Clark County Chapter 5.48A.

Discovery. Both Clark County and American Medical Response West claim that Metro West has refused to provide information in discovery that would show that Metro West is in compliance with the EMS Ordinance.

Metro West is required to comply with state and local regulations. An order of this court that it do so is not necessary or appropriate. According to the deposition of Michael Beaulieu, Metro West declines transports automatically when the transport originates in Clark County, unless the transport is pursuant to the VA contract. Dkt. 82, at 49. Clark County contends that [*30] Metro West has left flyers in nursing homes in the District, advertising its services. While that may be true, those flyers could legitimately be used by nursing home residents for the return trip from Oregon.

Finally, the EMS Ordinance provides for criminal penalties. Using a civil action to attempt to gain information for use in criminal prosecution is not appropriate.

Clark County's request that the court require that Metro West comply with local and state regulations for non-mandated transports in Clark County should be denied.

3. Antitrust

Metro West requests that the court grant summary judgment, declaring that the EMS Ordinance is invalid under the Supremacy Clause; and that the EMS Ordinance is preempted by the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 et al., because, through an agreement with American Medical Response, the District has created an artificial territorial monopoly in conflict with federal antitrust policy. Dkt. 58, at 20. Metro West maintains that the District is not immune under the state action doctrine because creation of this restraint of trade is not authorized by the enabling statutes. Dkt. 58, at 20.

American Medical Response requests that the court grant summary [*31] judgment, dismissing the antitrust claim, contending that the EMS Ordinance is immune from Sherman Act liability based on the doctrine of state action immunity; the EMS Ordinance is not a combination or agreement, which is required for a Sherman Act § 1 claim; Metro West has stated in discovery that analysis under the Rule of Reason does not apply, and has declined to identify or produce evidence of any anticompetitive effects or injuries; Metro West cannot prevail if the court applies the Rule of Reason analysis; the EMS Ordinance does not directly discriminate against interstate commerce and there are no incidental burdens on interstate commerce that are different from burdens imposed on intrastate commerce; and the EMS Ordinance advances legitimate legislative goals and Metro West offers no evidence indicating that those goals favor domestic industry. Dkt. 72, at 2-3.

Under the Sherman Act, "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. This law applies to local governments. See City of Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 408, 98 S. Ct. 1123, 55 L. Ed. 2d 364 (1978).

In [*32] Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943), the Supreme Court held that the Sherman Act was not intended to apply to acts of the States as sovereigns. The Parker state action exemption to antitrust laws insulates local governments from antitrust liability, provided that the local government demonstrate that it is engaging in the challenged activity pursuant to a clearly expressed state policy. Town of Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 40, 105 S. Ct. 1713, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24 (1985). The statutory provisions must plainly show that the legislature contemplated the kind of action complained of. Id., at 44, citing Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., supra. An expression of state policy that is sufficient to establish Parker immunity is comprised of two elements: The legislature must have authorized the challenged activity, and it must have done so with an intent to displace competition. See Community Communications Co. v. City of Boulder, supra, 455 U.S. 40, 51-52 (1982); City of Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. at 415.

The EMS Ordinance is an enforcement mechanism for the single franchise contract between Clark County and American Medical Response.

The state action immunity doctrine has been applied [*33] to single franchise ambulance systems implemented by local governments pursuant to broad state statutory authority to regulate ambulance services. See Gold Cross Ambulance Co. v. City of Kansas City, 705 F.2d 1005 (8th Cir. 1983); Forest Ambulance Serv. v. Mercy Ambulance, 952 F.Supp. 296 (E.D. Va. 1997); Central Ambulance Service, Inc. v. Dallas, 631 F. Supp. 366, 371 (N.D. Tex. 1986). See also Gold Cross Ambulance Co. v. City of Kansas City, 705 F.2d 1005 (8th Cir. 1983)(city's single franchise ambulance system immune from antitrust claims because system was enacted pursuant to statue, and single-franchise system was foreseeable consequence of statute).

State action immunity has been applied in the 9th Circuit to ambulance systems regulated by local governments. See Springs Ambulance Service, Inc. v. Rancho Mirage, 745 F.2d 1270, 1273 (9th Cir. 1984)(fire Commission servicing emergency ambulance needs of three cities did not violate antitrust laws because it was enacted pursuant to California statute that provided that "The legislative body of a city may contract for ambulance service to serve the residents of the city as convenience requires"); Mercy-Peninsula Ambulance, Inc. v. County of San Mateo, 791 F.2d 755, 757 (9th Cir. 1986)(county's [*34] regulation of ambulance services upheld when "it is apparent that anti-competitive effects would result from a broad authority to regulate"); Ambulance Service of Reno, Inc. v. Nevada Ambulance Services, Inc., 819 F.2d 910 (9th Cir. 1987)(single franchise ambulance system protected by state action immunity from Sherman Act attacks). Accord, A-1 Ambulance Serv. v. County of Monterey, 90 F.3d 333 (9th Cir. 1996)(single franchise ambulance system protected by state action immunity); and Redwood Empire Life Support v. County of Sonoma, 190 F.3d 949, 950-951 (9th Cir. 1999). But see Medic Air Cor. v. Air Ambulance Authority, 843 F.2d 1187 (9th Cir. 1988)(air ambulance service not protected by state action immunity when private provider exceeded authority granted it by local government).

In this case, Pursuant to RCW 36.32.480, Clark County created the District. RCW 36.01.100 authorizes the legislative authority of any county, by appropriate legislation, to establish a system of ambulance service for the entire county or for portions thereof, and to award contracts for ambulance services. Clark County established a single franchise system for the District, and awarded the contract, following [*35] a competitive bid process, to American Medical Response. Clark County adopted the EMS Ordinance as an enforcement mechanism for the single provider contract. RCW 36.01.100 restricted a county from providing for the establishment of any system which would compete with any existing private system. There is no evidence that Metro West operated as an existing private system, at the time the EMS Ordinance was adopted. The general grant of authority of RCW 36.01.100 provided the board authority to regulate; it was apparent that anticompetitive acts would result from the broad authority to regulate ambulance systems. There is no indication that American Medical Response exceeded the authority granted to it by contract. State action immunity applies to insulate defendants from antitrust allegations against defendants.

Metro West argues that the county failed to make adequate findings that the county was not adequately served by existing private ambulance services, and that existing private ambulance services could not expand service on a contract basis, as is required by RCW 36.01.095. This statute does not apply in this case, because Metro West was not an existing private ambulance service [*36] at the time the EMS Ordinance was adopted. Even if Metro West could have been considered an existing private ambulance service, Clark County articulated the inadequacy of the system as it existed, and set forth reasons why expanding the existing services would not work, in the settlement agreement in Buck Medical Services, inc. v. Clark County, C91-5229B, and in the Fail Safe Franchise Model Design Rationale of the contract with American Medical Response.

State action immunity applies to insulate Clark County and American Medical Response from antitrust claims. It is unclear whether Metro West alleged antitrust claims against the City of Vancouver. See Amended Complaint, Dkt. 28. Assuming that it did, state action immunity insulates the City of Vancouver from antitrust claims. The City of Vancouver, pursuant to the authority granted it in RCW 35.21.766, enacted VMC 5.84.015, after adopting Resolution M-2744, which found that private ambulance service in Vancouver would become inadequate under RCW 35.21.766 if the District were served by a single contract EMS provider while the City of Vancouver were served by one of more EMS providers under a different system.

Defendants are protected [*37] by state action immunity from Metro West's antitrust claims. The court should deny Metro West's motion for summary judgment as to the antitrust claims, grant American Medical Response's motion for partial summary judgment as to the antitrust claims, and grant the City of Vancouver's joinder in American Medical Response's motion for summary judgment.

4. Commerce Clause

Metro West contends that the EMS Ordinance violates the Commerce Clause because it directly regulates interstate ambulance trips and, therefore, interstate commerce; it discriminates against interstate commerce by creating a private monopoly; and it favors local economic interests in lowering the cost of emergency ambulance services at the expense of out of state consumers of ambulance services. Dkt. 58, at 4.

American Medical Response contends that the EMS Ordinance does not favor local business nor discriminate against interstate commerce because it does not directly regulate interstate commerce; does not create a private monopoly; does not favor local interests; does not discriminate against interstate commerce; and does not impose a burden that falls uniquely on interstate commerce. Dkt. 79, at 7-15.

In reviewing challenges [*38] to local regulations under the Commerce Clause, the court follows a two-tiered approach:

> [1] When a state statute directly regulates or discriminates against interstate commerce, or when its effect is to favor in-state economic interests over out-of-state interests, we have generally struck down the statute without further inquiry. [2] When, however, a statute has only indirect effects on interstate commerce and regulates evenhandedly, we have examined whether the State's interest is legitimate and whether the burden on interstate commerce clearly exceeds the local benefits.

S.D. Myers, Inc. v. City and County of San Francisco, 253 F.3d 461, 466 (9th Cir. 2001), citing Brown-Forman Distillers Corp. v. N.Y. State Liquor Auth., 476 U.S. 573, 579, 106 S. Ct. 2080, 90 L. Ed. 2d 552 (1986); see also NCAA v. Miller, 10 F.3d 633, 638 (9th Cir.1993). The "central rationale" of the dormant Commerce Clause "is to prohibit state or municipal laws whose object is local economic protectionism, laws that would excite those jealousies and retaliatory measures the Constitution was designed to prevent." S.D. Myers, Inc. v. City and County of San Francisco, 253 F.3d at 466, citing C & A Carbone, Inc. v. Town of Clarkstown, 511 U.S. 383, 390, 114 S. Ct. 1677, 128 L. Ed. 2d 399 (1994).

Per [*39] Se Violation of Commerce Clause. In order to determine whether the EMS Ordinance is a per se violation of the Commerce Clause, the court asks whether the ordinance directly regulates interstate commerce; whether the ordinance discriminates against interstate commerce; or whether the ordinance favors in-state economic interests over out-of-state economic interests. See Healy v. Beer Institute, 491 U.S. 324, 337 n. 14, 109 S. Ct. 2491, 105 L. Ed. 2d 275 (1989) (quoting Brown-Forman Distillers Corp. v. New York State Liquor Auth., 476 U.S at 579).

> Directly Regulates Interstate Commerce. Metro West contends that the EMS Ordinance directly regulates commerce by targeting interstate ambulance trips. Metro West contends that a significant proportion of ambulance trips originating in the District are destined for Oregon, within a 30-mile radius. Metro West also contends that Oregon health care providers who could, and arguably would, contract with Metro West for ambulance services originating in Clark County cannot do so because of the EMS Ordinance. The critical inquiry is whether the practical effect of the regulation is to control conduct beyond the boundaries of the State. See Healy v. Beer Institute, 491 U.S. at 336, citing [*40] Brown-Forman, 476 U.S., at 579.

The EMS Ordinance does not govern activities that take place wholly outside of Washington State borders. The EMS Ordinance applies only to those transports originating in Washington, even if those transports terminate in Oregon. Further, the EMS Ordinance does not interfere with any legitimate regulatory scheme that Oregon might adopt to regulate ambulance services in Oregon, since the single franchise contract/EMS Ordinance does not purport to control any transports that originate in Oregon.

> Discriminates against Interstate Commerce. The single-franchise contract between Clark County and American Medical Response did not discriminate against any out of state company or entity during the competitive bid process. In fact, the record shows that both Metro West and American Medical Response are Oregon companies. Further, the EMS Ordinance applies to all ambulance services, in-state or out-of-state, that were not awarded the single-franchise contract. The EMS Ordinance does not discriminate against Interstate Commerce.

> Favors In-state over Out-of-state Interests. The single-franchise contract was awarded without regard to whether the winner of the competitive [*41] bid process was a Washington company or an out-of-state company. The EMS Ordinance is an enforcement mechanism related to the single franchise contract. Metro West argues that an Oregon hospital/health system wishes to contract with Metro West, but is unable to do so because of the EMS Ordinance. That argument is speculative at best. However, even assuming that that is true, the EMS Ordinance applies equally to a Washington hospital/health system that wishes to contract for ambulance services. The EMS Ordinance does not favor in-state over out-of-state interests.

The record shows that the EMS Ordinance is not a per se violation of the Commerce Clause.

Indirect Effects on Interstate Commerce. If the EMS Ordinance has only indirect effects on interstate commerce, and it regulates evenhandedly, the court balances whether the burden on interstate commerce clearly exceeds the local benefits. See Pike v. Bruce Church, Inc., 397 U.S. 137, 142, 90 S. Ct. 844, 25 L. Ed. 2d 174 (1970).

A statute that regulates interstate and intrastate commerce even-handedly will only be declared unconstitutional if the burdens of the statute so outweigh the putative benefits as to make the statute unreasonable or irrational. Alaska Airlines, Inc. v. Long Beach, 951 F.2d 977, 983 (9th Cir. 1992).

In [*42] this case, the County found that the single-franchise system assured higher quality care at lower cost. The single-franchise contract was awarded following a competitive bid process, in which both Metro West and American Medical Response participated. The single-franchise system has been shown to reduce costs and improve quality of service. Dkt. 68, and Dkt. 73, at 104-107. The local benefits of a single-franchise system are significant.

Metro West contends that the single-franchise system is a mechanism that provides funding for CRESA, and that Oregon residents are forced by the single-franchise system to shoulder some of the cost of funding that local Washington entity.

While some Oregon residents may be picked up by ambulance within the District, and while some of the fees those services may be used to fund CRESA, this is, at most, a minor burden to interstate commerce, and does not clearly exceed the significant local benefits of the single-franchise system. Metro West has not shown that the burden on interstate commerce of the single-franchise system, and the EMS Ordinance that enforces that system, clearly exceed the local benefits.

The court should deny Metro West's motion for [*43] summary judgment as to the Commerce Clause claim, American Medical Response's motion for partial summary judgment as to the Commerce Clause claims, and grant the City of Vancouver's joinder in American Medical Response's motion for partial summary judgment.

Accordingly, it is hereby ORDERED that:

1. Plaintiff Metro West Ambulance's Motion for Summary Judgment (Dkt. 58) is GRANTED IN PART AND DENIED IN PART as follows: The motion is GRANTED with regard to Metro West's motion for declaratory and injunctive relief. Metro West is entitled to perform ambulance services that are included in and covered by the VA contract, without fear of prosecution by Clark County for alleged violations of the EMS Ordinance, Clark County Code Section 5.48A.025. The motion is DENIED in all other respects.

2. Clark County's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment (Dkt. 71 and 66) is DENIED. The City of Vancouver joined in Clark County's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment; that motion (Dkt. 74) is DENIED. Clark County's counterclaim, requesting a permanent injunction enjoining Metro West from providing non-emergency ambulance service within the regulated service area of Clark County, without complying with the Clark [*44] County Code, is DISMISSED.

3. American Medical Response Northwest, Inc.'s Motion for Partial Summary Judgment (Dkt. 72) is GRANTED. The City of Vancouver's joinder in that motion (Dkt. 74) is GRANTED. Metro West's claims that the EMS Ordinance, Clark County Code Section 5.48A.025, violate antitrust laws and the Commerce Clause are DISMISSED.

4. This case is DISMISSED.

The Clerk is directed to send uncertified copies of this Order to all counsel of record and to any party appearing pro se at said party's last known address.

Dated this 22nd day of December, 2011.

[*1208] MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

[*1209] TABLE OF CONTENTS

[*1210] MEMORANDUM [2] AND ORDER

This case arises from an agreement ("the Agreement") by which SolmeteX, Inc. ("SolmeteX") licensed certain technology for the removal of arsenic from water, to which it held rights under a patent, to defendant Bro-Tech Corporation, d/b/a The Purolite Company ("Purolite"). Plaintiff Layne Christensen Company ("Layne") acquired SolmeteX and asserts SolmeteX's rights under the patent and the Agreement. Layne terminated the Agreement. Layne now asserts claims against Purolite for patent infringement, and pursuant to a prior order of the Court, Arup SenGupta, the owner of the patent, was added as a required plaintiff. Layne also asserts claims against Purolite for breach of the Agreement. Purolite has asserted counterclaims against Layne for breach of contract, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, unfair competition, and restraint of trade.

This matter presently comes before the Court on various motions by the parties involving expert witnesses. As more fully set forth below, the Court rules on those motions as follows: Plaintiffs' motion to exclude testimony by Richard Troxel (Doc. # 426) is granted in part and denied in part; the motion is granted with [3] respect to opinions concerning Layne's claim for royalties and Purolite's claim for unpaid invoices, but is denied as moot with respect to damages on Purolite's other counterclaims. Plaintiffs' motion to exclude certain expert sur-rebuttal reports (Doc # 428) is denied. Purolite's motion to exclude testimony by Dennis Clifford (Doc. # 430) is denied. Plaintiffs' motion for leave to file a declaration by Dr. Clifford (Doc. # 542) is granted, and the proposed declaration is deemed filed.

This matter also comes before the Court on Layne's motion for summary judgment on certain of Purolite's counterclaims (Doc. # 404). That motion is granted, and Layne is awarded summary judgment on Purolite's counterclaims at issue in the motion, namely all claims for breach of contract other than Purolite's claim of a breach based on the failure to pay for product, and Purolite's claims for unfair competition, restraint of trade, and breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing.

The matter is also before the Court on Layne's motion for partial summary judgment on its claims for breach of contract (Doc. # 406). That motion is granted in part and denied in part. As it relates to Layne's [4] claim for damages for unpaid royalties, the motion is granted with respect to Purolite's liability, but denied with respect to the amount of damages. As it relates to Layne's claim for a permanent injunction for breach of Section 11.2 of the Agreement, the motion is granted, and Purolite is hereby permanently enjoined from making, selling, or using the product FerrIX A33E or any substantially similar product that uses "Intellectual Property" (as defined in the Agreement) resulting from Purolite's activities under the Agreement.

The matter is also before the Court on plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment on its claims of patent infringement (Doc. # 408). That motion is granted in part and denied in part. The motion is granted with respect to the following, on which plaintiffs are awarded summary judgment: Purolite's theories that Claim 1 of the patent is not infringed based on the "by the action of the oxidant" and "salt of said metal" limitations; and Purolite's invalidity defenses based on an inoperable process under 35 U.S.C. § 112 (Claim 1), the lack of a written description under 35 U.S.C. § 112 (Claim 1), and obviousness under 35 U.S.C. § 103 [*1211] (Claim 15). The motion is denied [5] in all other respects.

The matter is also before the Court on Purolite's motion for summary judgment on certain of plaintiffs' claims (Doc. # 410). That motion is granted in part and denied in part. The motion is granted with respect to the following, on which Purolite is awarded summary judgment: Layne's claim for breach of Section 10.1 of the Agreement, to the extent that such breach is based on an underlying breach of a separate non-disclosure agreement between SolmeteX and Purolite; with respect to patent infringement, plaintiffs' marking estoppel theory and any claims by plaintiff based on indirect infringement or the doctrine of equivalents; and with respect to patent invalidity, plaintiffs' license estoppel theory and Purolite's defense that Claim 15 of the patent is anticipated by prior art pursuant to 35 U.S.C. § 102—and thus also plaintiffs' claim for infringement of Claim 15. The motion is denied is all other respects.

I. Motions Relating to Experts

A. Plaintiffs' Motion to Exclude Troxel Testimony (Doc. # 426)

Plaintiffs Layne and Dr. SenGupta move to exclude expert testimony by Purolite's damages expert, Richard Troxel. This motion is granted in part and denied in part.

First, [6] the motion is granted with respect to Mr. Troxel's opinions concerning the amount of unpaid invoices for product sold to Layne on which Purolite seeks to recover. In his report, Mr. Troxel merely totaled up the balance due on three invoices to arrive at a total amount due. Purolite has not addressed this opinion in its response brief, and thus it has not disputed that at trial Mr. Troxel would be doing nothing more than simply adding three numbers. Because the Court agrees with plaintiffs that adding up the three invoices does not require expert testimony and because this argument is unopposed, the motion is granted as it relates to this opinion.

Second, by this opinion, the Court has granted Layne summary judgment on all other counterclaims asserted by Purolite. See infra Part III. Accordingly, the motion is denied as moot to the extent that it relates to Mr. Troxel's opinions concerning damages for those counterclaims.

Third, the motion is granted with respect to Mr. Troxel's opinions on plaintiffs' claims for damages for infringement of the patent. Plaintiffs object to this testimony on the basis that Mr. Troxel did not do any analysis himself, but merely relied on the opinion of [7] a Purolite executive concerning an appropriate royalty percentage. Purolite has not responded to this argument. Based on the evidence submitted by plaintiffs, it does appear to the Court that Mr. Troxel has not articulated an independent opinion on that issue. See Ash Grove Cement Co. v. Employers Ins. of Wausau, 246 F.R.D. 656, 661 (D. Kan. 2007) (Lungstrum, J.) (expert may not simply parrot or recite opinions and knowledge of other witnesses). For that reason and because the motion is unopposed with respect to these opinions, Mr. Troxel's opinions on this issue of plaintiffs' infringement damages will not be admitted.

B. Plaintiffs' Motion to Exclude Sur-Rebuttal Reports (Doc. # 428)

Plaintiffs move to exclude expert reports by Mr. Troxel and by Daniel Stack, another Purolite expert, that were provided after the expiration of the Court's expert disclosure deadlines. Purolite concedes that these two reports were submitted in [*1212] rebuttal to plaintiffs' rebuttal expert reports. This motion is denied.

First, given the Court's rulings, see supra [8] Part I.A, Mr. Troxel will not be offering expert testimony at trial. Accordingly, the motion is moot with respect to Mr. Troxel's additional report.

Second, the Court agrees that the sur-rebuttal report by Dr. Stack was not authorized by the Court's scheduling order. Nevertheless, as long as he does not offer any new opinions separate from those offered in his authorized report, Dr. Stack will of course be permitted at trial to comment on criticisms by plaintiffs' expert of Dr. Stack's opinions. Moreover, Purolite could have submitted Dr. Stack's sur-rebuttal opinions in the form of a declaration to be considered at summary judgment. Thus, plaintiffs have suffered no prejudice from the fact that those sur-rebuttal opinions were formalized in a report, and in fact plaintiffs may be better able to prepare to cross-examine Dr. Stack at trial. In ruling on summary judgment, the Court will not consider any new opinion offered by Dr. Stack that is not fairly contained in his other report, and any such objection to a new opinion may be asserted at trial when appropriate. Accordingly, the Court denies the motion to exclude the sur-rebuttal report by Dr. Stack. Plaintiffs' request for sanctions [9] is also denied.

C. Purolite's Motion to Exclude Clifford Testimony (Doc. # 430)

The Court also denies Purolite's motion to exclude testimony by plaintiff's expert, Dennis Clifford. First, with respect to his opinions concerning infringement, the Court concludes that Dr. Clifford's opinions are sufficiently based on his experience and that Purolite's objections concerning his analysis and the lack of testing go to the weight of the opinions and not to their admissibility. Second, the Court will not exclude Dr. Clifford's invalidity opinions on the basis that they are too short, as Dr. Clifford addressed the issues at greater length in his rebuttal report. Of course, Dr. Clifford may not offer an opinion on a legal issue at trial, but the Court will defer consideration of any such objection in order to rule on it in the context of his testimony at trial as a whole. Third, the Court does not agree with Purolite that Dr. Clifford's opinions concerning contract issues constitute an improper attempt to construe terms in the Agreement.

D. Plaintiffs' Motion for Leave to File Declaration (Doc. # 542)

In opposing Purolite's summary judgment motion, plaintiffs have cited to Dr. Clifford's expert [10] reports. Purolite has objected to those citations, on the basis that the reports were not sworn or supported by an affidavit or declaration, as required by the local rule. See D. Kan. 56.1(d).[1] To address that objection, plaintiffs now seek leave to file a declaration by Dr. Clifford supporting his prior reports. Purolite opposes the motion, arguing that the declaration is untimely and that an extension is unwarranted.[2]

Because it concludes that an extension of time is warranted for plaintiffs' reliance on such a declaration, the Court grants this motion. See Bishop v. Corsentino, 371 F.3d 1203, 1206 (10th Cir. 2004) (noting factors relevant to a determination of excusable neglect). Because Purolite addressed Dr. Clifford's evidence in its summary judgment briefs, Purolite will not [*1213] suffer any unfair prejudice from the extension. Although Purolite ominously suggests that further discovery could result, it [11] has not identified any additional discovery that it would seek leave to pursue. The delay in the submission of the declaration will not affect judicial proceedings. Plaintiffs' failure to include a declaration with its summary judgment response is reasonable in light of the fact that Purolite cited to and attached Dr. Clifford's unsworn report (also in violation of the local rule) in the summary judgment brief to which plaintiffs were responding. Finally, Purolite's argument that plaintiffs lacked good faith appears nonsensical, as there could be no conceivable advantage gained by delaying compliance with the requirement of a declaration.

For these reasons, the Court finds that plaintiffs' failure to submit the declaration previously resulted from excusable neglect and that an extension of the deadline to submit the declaration is therefore warranted. Thus, the Court grants the present motion for leave, and the proposed declaration is deemed filed. The Court further overrules Purolite's objections to plaintiffs' citations to Dr. Clifford's reports in the summary judgment briefs.

II. Summary Judgment Standard

Summary judgment is appropriate if the moving party demonstrates that there is [12] "no genuine dispute as to any material fact" and that it is "entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a). In applying this standard, the court views the evidence and all reasonable inferences therefrom in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Burke v. Utah Transit Auth. & Local 382, 462 F.3d 1253, 1258 (10th Cir. 2006). An issue of fact is "genuine" if "the evidence allows a reasonable jury to resolve the issue either way." Haynes v. Level 3 Communications, LLC, 456 F.3d 1215, 1219 (10th Cir. 2006). A fact is "material" when "it is essential to the proper disposition of the claim." Id.

The moving party bears the initial burden of demonstrating an absence of a genuine issue of material fact and entitlement to judgment as a matter of law. Thom v. Bristol-Myers Squibb Co., 353 F.3d 848, 851 (10th Cir. 2003) (citing Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322-23, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986)). In attempting to meet that standard, a movant that does not bear the ultimate burden of persuasion at trial need not negate the other party's claim; rather, the movant need simply point out to the court a lack of evidence for the other party on an essential element of that party's claim. [13] Id. (citing Celotex, 477 U.S. at 325). If the movant carries this initial burden, the nonmovant may not simply rest upon the pleadings but must "bring forward specific facts showing a genuine issue for trial as to those dispositive matters for which he or she carries the burden of proof." Garrison v. Gambro, Inc., 428 F.3d 933, 935, 150 Fed. Appx. 819 (10th Cir. 2005).

Finally, the Court notes that summary judgment is not a "disfavored procedural shortcut;" rather, it is an important procedure "designed to secure the just, speedy and inexpensive determination of every action." Celotex, 477 U.S. at 327 (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 1).

III. Purolite's Counterclaims

---

[1] Fed. R. Civ. P. 56, as recently amended, requires only that parties support their factual statements by citation to materials in the record.

[2] The Court rejects Purolite's further argument that the proposed declaration is not sufficient for purposes of compliance with the local rule.

Layne moves for summary judgment on various counterclaims asserted by Purolite (Doc. # 404).

A. Consequential Damages

Layne asserts that any claim by Purolite for consequential damages is barred by Section 9.4 of the Agreement, which precludes the recovery of such damages, including lost profits. Purolite does not dispute that the damage limitation applies in [*1214] this case to preclude such damages generally; rather, Purolite only notes that the limitation contains an exception for breaches of Section 11 of the Agreement and that it has indeed brought a claim [14] against Layne for breach of Section 11 (relating to alleged acts of competition by Layne). Layne agrees that the prohibition against consequential damages would not apply to Purolite's claim under Section 11. Accordingly, Layne is granted summary judgment on all claims by Purolite for consequential damages other than Purolite's claim for breach of Section 11 of the Agreement.

B. Breach of the Agreement — Specifications

Purolite claims that Layne's predecessor, SolmeteX, breached Section 1.2 of the Agreement by "providing a deficient and inoperable product specification." (See Pretrial Order ¶ 5.b.) Layne seeks summary judgment on that counterclaim based on both the statute of limitations and the merits of the claim.

1. STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS

The Court applies Kansas limitations law in this case. See Miller v. Armstrong World Indus., 949 F.2d 1088, 1089 n.3 (10th Cir. 1991) (for state-law claim, court applies substantive law, including statutes of limitation, that forum courts would apply); see also Klaxon Co. v. Stentor Elec. Mfg. Co., 313 U.S. 487, 496, 61 S. Ct. 1020, 85 L. Ed. 1477 (1941) (federal court sitting in diversity jurisdiction must apply forum state's choice of law rules to determine which state's substantive [15] law applies). Kansas courts apply their own state's statutes of limitations. See Green v. Kensinger, 199 Kan. 220, 223, 429 P.2d 95 (1967). The Court also applies Kansas's borrowing statute, K.S.A. § 60-516, as necessary. See Garcia v. International Elevator Co., 358 F.3d 777, 779 (10th Cir. 2004).

Layne asserts that SolmeteX provided the specifications to Purolite prior to November 2004, and that Purolite's claim therefore accrued at the latest on November 15, 2004, when SolmeteX and Purolite executed the Agreement, to which the specifications were attached. Purolite did not assert this counterclaim until January 2010 at the earliest. Therefore, Layne argues that Purolite's claim is barred by Kansas's five-year statute of limitations. See K.S.A. § 60-511(1) (five years for action on written agreement).[3]

Purolite does not dispute that its claim accrued on November 15, 2004, or that it first asserted the claim more than five years later. Nevertheless, Purolite contends that, despite the running of the statute of limitations, it may assert the claim as a defense, to the extent of any recovery by Layne under the Agreement. [*1215] Indeed, K.S.A. § 60-213, relating to counterclaims, provides as follows:

[3] The Court rejects Purolite's argument that Layne waived this defense of the statute of limitations by raising it for the first time in the Pretrial Order. Whether or not the defense was raised before, it has been included without objection in the Pretrial Order, and thus the defense is properly in the case. Purolite has not moved to amend the Pretrial Order to strike that defense. Moreover, it appears [16] that any such motion to amend would not succeed, as Layne notes that Purolite did not plead this specific counterclaim regarding the specifications until the Pretrial Order was prepared.

The Court also rejects Layne's argument that this claim is barred by laches, waiver, or estoppel. Layne improperly raised this argument for the first time in its reply brief. *See, e.g., U.S. Fire Ins. Co. v. Bunge N. Am., Inc., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 59737, 2008 WL 3077074, at 9 n.7 (D. Kan. Aug. 4, 2008) (court will not consider issues raised for first time in reply brief) (citing Minshall v. McGraw Hill Broadcasting Co., 323 F.3d 1273, 1288 (10th Cir. 2003)). Moreover, Layne failed to analyze the elements of any of those doctrines, and thus has failed to establish those affirmative defenses as a matter of law.

> If a party's claim arises out [17] of the contract or transaction that is the basis of an opposing party's claim . . . and it could have been asserted as a counterclaim or crossclaim against a person if the person had asserted a claim against the party previously, the party's claim is not extinguished by . . . the expiration of the statute of limitations. However, the party's claim may be asserted in these circumstances only to the extent that it does not exceed the amount awarded to the opposing party.

See id. § 60-213(d). Under this statute, a time-barred claim may nonetheless be used to obtain a setoff against the opposing party's recovery under the same contract if the two parties' claims were coexisting at any particular time. See Mynatt v. Collis, 274 Kan. 850, 866, 57 P.3d 513 (2002) (citing Lightcap v. Mobil Oil Corp., 221 Kan. 448, 464, 562 P.2d 1 (1977)). Purolite argues that Layne's claim for royalties under the Agreement, which Purolite allegedly failed to pay beginning in "late 2008" (see Pretrial Order ¶ 5.a), did coexist for a period with its own claim, which did not become time-barred under the Kansas statute until November 2009.

Layne argues that the claims did not coexist. Layne argues that Purolite's claim arose in Pennsylvania, [18] the home of Purolite's manufacturing facilities where Purolite would have received the specifications from SolmeteX. Thus, Layne argues that Kansas would borrow Pennsylvania's four-year statute of limitations for a claim for breach of a written agreement, 42 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 5525(a)(8). See K.S.A. § 60-516 (borrowing statute). Finally, Layne argues that because its own claim did not accrue until after November 15, 2008, the parties' claims did not coexist and Purolite therefore cannot assert its claim even in defense. Purolite does not dispute that its claim arose in Pennsylvania or that a four-year statute of limitations would govern Purolite's assertion of an affirmative claim. Nevertheless, Purolite argues, without analysis or citation to authority, that the borrowing statute would not apply because it is asserting its claim only defensively.

The Court agrees with Layne that the Pennsylvania four-year statute of limitations applies through the Kansas borrowing statute for purposes of determining whether the two claims coexisted here at any point in time. The Kansas Supreme Court has described the coexistence requirement as follows:

> The statute, 60-213(d), supra, requires that before [19] the cross-claim can be asserted the two demands, the plaintiff's demand and the defendant's demand, must have coexisted between persons under such circumstances that if one had brought an action against the other, a counterclaim could have been set up. In all cases this prerequisite requires that at some point in time there must be a coexistence of the two claims together. If the cross-claim asserted is barred prior to the existence of the claim asserted in the damage action by [the plaintiff], then the statute does not allow the assertion of the cross-claim, since the two claims at no time coexisted in time.

J.A. Tobin Constr. Co. v. Holtzman, 207 Kan. 525, 534, 485 P.2d 1276 (1971); see also Lightcap, 221 Kan. at 464 (considering when claims were "alive" under applicable statutes of limitations in determining whether claims coexisted for purposes of K.S.A. § 60-213(d)). Thus, for Purolite to assert its claim as a defense, the claim must have been alive, and not time-barred as an affirmative cause of action, at the time Layne's own cause of action accrued. At any time after November 15, 2008, Layne could have relied on [*1216] the borrowing statute and the Pennsylvania statute of limitations, and thus Purolite [20] could not have maintained an affirmative claim after that date. Thus, the parties' claims coexisted only if Layne's own claim accrued before November 15, 2008.

The Pretrial Order is not helpful in resolving this issue of fact; that document notes Layne's contention that Purolite stopped paying royalties under the Agreement in "late 2008," and it contains a stipulation that "Purolite suspended payment of royalties to Layne at the end of 2008." (Pretrial Order ¶¶ 4.a(7), 5.a.) Layne has provided a copy of a letter that it sent to Purolite on November 19, 2008, in which it demanded unpaid royalties. First, this evidence was submitted only with Layne's reply brief, and the Court will not consider Layne's argument, made for the first time in that brief, that its claim accrued on that specific date. Second, Layne has not explained how the letter establishes that its claim did not accrue earlier. In fact, the letter stated that the demand was based on an audit performed in June 2008. Therefore, the Court concludes that an issue of fact remains concerning the accrual date of Layne's claim and whether the parties' claims coexisted for purposes of K.S.A. § 60-213(d).

Accordingly, the Court grants [21] Layne's motion for summary judgment on the basis of the statute of limitations on Purolite's claim relating to the provision of specifications under Section 1.2 of the Agreement to the extent that that claim is asserted affirmatively. The Court denies the motion based on the statute of limitations to the extent that the claim is asserted defensively to the extent of any recovery by Layne on the Agreement.

2. MERITS OF THE CLAIM[4]

Layne also argues that it is entitled to summary judgment [22] on this claim because Purolite has failed to provide evidence that SolmeteX in fact breached the contract. The relevant contract provision, Section 1.2 of the Agreement, follows:

> Specifications. Purolite and SolmeteX will finalize and attach to this Agreement the Manufacturing Specifications (as defined below) for the Media. The "Manufacturing Specifications" will include finished product specifications for the Media, and certain testing standards to determine compliance therewith. The Manufacturing Specifications will be attached to this Agreement as Appendices A [sic] hereto, respectively. The Manufacturing Specifications will be developed such that (a) Purolite need disclose no proprietary manufacturing information and (b) SolmeteX's disclosure of proprietary information is minimized. After the initial Manufacturing Specifications are established, (i) SolmeteX will be promptly notified of all changes made thereto, and (ii) Purolite agrees to use best efforts to promptly implement any change thereto requested by SolmeteX.

Purolite has stated its claim for breach of this provision as follows:

> Purolite contends that both parties to the Contract had the understanding that [*1217] SolmeteX had [23] produced a finalized, completed, and marketable "resin primarily used in arsenic removal from aqueous streams" and that the Manufacturing Specifications attached to the Contract as Appendix A provided a finished and finalized manner of manufacturing the ArsenXnp product. SolmeteX breached the Contract by providing a deficient and inoperable product specification that caused Purolite to experience a number of manufacturing problems and incur additional, unanticipated costs.

(Pretrial Order ¶ 5.b.)

In seeking summary judgment, Layne argues that SolmeteX did provide specifications before the Agreement was executed and that Purolite in fact manufactured and sold the product before the date of the Agreement. Layne disputes that the Agreement imposed any obligation to provide "operable" product specifications or specifications that would need no improvement, and it cites other portions of the Agreement that refer to anticipated improvements to the Media. Layne further argues that any obligation to provide a "marketable" product (although it disputes the existence of such an obligation) was satisfied because Purolite did sell the product. Finally, Lanye notes that the Agreement imposed the [24] obligation regarding the specification jointly on SolmeteX and Purolite, although it does not explain how that would relieve SolmeteX of any obligation under Section 1.2.

In response, Purolite argues that the requirement for the provision of "finished product specifications" (from the definition of "Manufacturing Specifications") demanded SolmeteX's provision of "finalized specifications for a finished product," from which "Purolite could manufacture non-defective, commercially marketable Media." In that regard, Purolite notes the introductory language to the Agreement stating that "SolmeteX has developed a resin primarily used in arsenic removal from aqueous streams . . ., comprised of SolmeteX's chemistry applied to a Purolite base bead . . . (the 'Media')." Purolites cites to evidence that in late 2004 and early 2005, the product had problems (the product easily broke up, was fragile, had a bad odor, and left a precipitate); and that the product finally reached a "commercially ready point" in May 2005. Purolite argues that that evidence raises a question of [4] Because the parties have agreed that Delaware law governs all claims for breach of the Agreement, pursuant to a choice-of-law provision therein, the Court has also applied Delaware law for purposes of resolving the parties' summary judgment motions. The parties have not addressed the scope of that choice-of-law provision, however, or whether the law of the place of performance could govern issues not relating to the interpretation of the Agreement. See, e.g., Layne Christensen Co. v. Zurich Canada, 30 Kan. App. 2d 128, 142, 38 P.3d 757 (2002) (noting difficulty is deciding whether to apply law of place of contracting or place of performance). Thus, the Court does not comment on which state's law will be applied at trial.

---

fact concerning whether SolmeteX "initially provided finished product specifications that yielded a commercially viable product."

The [25] Court rejects Purolite's arguments. First, contrary to Purolite's interpretation, Section 1.2 does not require the provision of specifications that yield a perfect product, a marketable product, or a product free of any problems. The only obligation is to provide "finished product specifications." Thus, applying the ordinary meaning of the word "finished", SolmeteX was required only to provide specifications in their completed form, and not from some initial or earlier stage. As noted by Layne, the contract clearly contemplated that improvements would be made to the initial specifications—indeed, Section 1.2 itself speaks to future changes by Purolite to the "initial Manufacturing Specifications." Although Purolite points to the introductory language, it has not provided any evidence that SolmeteX in fact had not developed an arsenic removal resin comprising its chemistry and Purolite's bead. Purolite's evidence that there were issues demanding improvement to the product and that the product was not "commercially ready" does not constitute evidence that SolmeteX did not provide its "finished product specifications." Purolite does not controvert the fact that it did sell the product, [26] based on SolmeteX's specifications, [*1218] even before the execution of the Agreement. Thus, Purolite has not submitted evidence that SolmeteX breached Section 1.2 of the Agreement. Accordingly, the Court awards summary judgment in favor of Layne on this claim for breach of contract (whether asserted affirmatively or merely as a defense).

C. Breach of the Agreement — Pursuit of Suspected Infringer

Purolite also claims that Layne breached Section 4.6.1 of the Agreement by failing to "pursue" parties suspected of infringing the patent. Layne argues that Purolite cannot produce evidence that it has suffered any damage from any such breach. In support of that argument, Layne notes that Purolite's damage expert could not identify any specific sales that Purolite lost because Layne did not pursue infringers, and he did not offer any opinion as to whether any such failure by Layne caused damage to Purolite. In response, Purolite concedes that it cannot establish the amount of its damages for this breach with the necessary certainty, but it argues that because it did suffer some damage from this breach, it may seek nominal damages. Purolite cites evidence that one suspected infringer, Resin Tech, did [27] make some sales of an infringing product, and it argues that it was damaged because "those sales necessarily could have been made by Purolite."

The Court rejects this claim by Purolite for nominal damages for several reasons. First, Purolite has not explained why the Court should permit it essentially to seek a declaration of breach, in the guise of a claim for nominal damages, without pursuing any meaningful relief.[5] Second, any such damage in the form of lost sales would constitute consequential damages (which includes lost profits), the recovery of which the Agreement precludes—nominal or otherwise—as set forth above. Third, Purolite's statement in its brief that it could have made the sales that Resin Tech made is not sufficient to withstand summary judgment on this point. The only actual evidence cited by Purolite in support of that bit of speculation is the statement in the declaration of a Purolite executive that "[t]o the extent that Resin Tech sold its ASM-10-HP product in or around September of 2008, those requirements for an arsenic removal product could have been satisfied by the ArseneX product made by Purolite at that time." Purolite

[5] In support of its claim for nominal damages, Purolite cites an unpublished opinion, Ivize of Milwaukee, LLC v. Compex Litigation Support, LLC, 2009 Del. Ch. LEXIS 55, 2009 WL 1111179 (Del. Ch. Apr. 27, 2009) (unpub. op.). In Ivize, the court stated that "the breach of a contractual obligation often warrants an award of nominal damages." *See 2009 Del. Ch. LEXIS 55, [WL] at 12 (citing *Palmer v. Moffat, 2004 Del. Super. LEXIS 51, 2004 WL 397051, at 4 (Del. Super. Feb. 27, 2004) (unpub. op.)). In Palmer, however, an unpublished district court opinion on which the Ivize court relied, the court noted that "[e]ven where nominal damages are possible, a trial is not always warranted," and it refused to allow such a claim in that case because [29] no loss was shown by the plaintiff and a trial on liability would have been a futile exercise. *See Palmer, 2004 Del. Super. LEXIS 51, 2004 WL 397051, at 4-5 (citing 22 Am. Jur. 2d, Damages § 9, p.39). Similarly here, no purpose would be served by allowing this claim for nominal damages to proceed to trial (there is no claim for injunctive relief, for example), and Purolite has not cited any authority that would require the trial of such a claim for nominal damages for breach of contract. Moreover, the fact that Purolite cannot assert an affirmative claim for this breach does not preclude Purolite's assertion of the breach as an affirmative defense to Layne's own claim for breach of the Agreement.

has not provided any evidence concerning [28] when any sales by Resin Tech occurred, however; nor is there evidence that the declarant had any personal knowledge about the volume or other details of [*1219] any sales by Resin Tech, or whether Resin Tech actually made any sales in September 2008. Thus, Purolite has not provided evidence that it could and would have made specific sales that Resin Tech made, and thus it has not shown that it did suffer actual damage from the alleged breach. Accordingly, Layne is awarded summary judgment on this claim by Purolite for breach of contract.[6]

D. Breach of the Agreement — Competitive Acts

Purolite also claims a breach of Section 11.1 of the Agreement, which provides as follows:

11. Non-Competition

> 11.1 Restrictions on SolmeteX. Except as otherwise set forth in this Agreement, SolmeteX agrees not to use any third party distributor as defined in section 3.2 for the Media in the Licensed Channels [30] other than Purolite during the Term. Except as otherwise set forth in this Agreement, Solmetex agrees not to use any other supplier for Media and not to license any third party to manufacture Media for commercial sale during the Term. Notwithstanding anything herein to the contrary, there will be no limitation on SolmeteX's non-sales activities, including research and development related to Media.

Purolite claims that Layne breached this provision by engaging in the following "acts of competition" against Purolite:

> (1) activities with Thermax, including a purchase order to Thermax Inc. for 2,000 cubic feet of ArseXnp in July of 2005 and the subsequent production of ArseXnp by Thermax; (2) work with Mobile Process Technology ("MPT") on the development, promotion, and sale of "npRio", a competing arsenic removal product; (3) other activities with MPT, consisting of the formation and promotion of certain partnerships and joint ventures, MPT's manufacture of ArsenX on behalf of SolmeteX, and the project known as "Compliant Water"; and (4) the development, promotion, and sale of Layne's own competing products called Layne33 and Layne RT.

(Pretrial Order ¶ 5.b.)

1. DAMAGES

In seeking summary [31] judgment on this claim, Layne argues that Purolite has not produced any evidence of damage attributable to this alleged breach.[7] Layne notes that Purolite's damage expert could not attribute specific amounts of damages to the alleged anti-competitive acts involving Thermax or MPT or Layne RT.

With respect to the amount of its damages, Purolite points to its expert's opinion by which he calculated a specific amount of damages suffered by Purolite for all of the competitive acts alleged (based on Purolite's lost sales to SolmeteX directly and to one other customer). Thus, Purolite has submitted evidence of the amount of its damages for this alleged breach. The Court does not agree with Layne that the expert's inability to allocate his damage amount for this breach among the alleged anti-competitive acts precludes this claim at this stage.

The Court does agree with Layne, however, that Purolite has failed to provide any evidence of the fact of any damage [*1220] suffered as a result of this alleged breach. On this issue of damages, Purolite's entire argument is as follows:

---

[6] Because of this ruling, the Court need not address the merits of this claim, including the meaning of "pursue" and whether Layne did pursue Resin Tech as a matter of law.

[7] As noted above, the consequential damage limitation in the Agreement did not apply to breaches of Section 11 of the Agreement.
