Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Defendant has moved to dismiss the complaint for failure to state a claim for relief. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. In evaluating a motion to dismiss, the court accepts plaintiffs' well-pled factual allegations as true and draws reasonable inferences in plaintiffs' favor.

Banking Law > Consumer Protection > Truth in Lending > Disclosure

Real Property Law > Financing > Secondary Financing > Home Equity Credit Lines

HN2[] Truth in Lending, Disclosure

Congress enacted the Truth in Lending Act (TILA) to enhance economic stabilization and competition in the consumer credit industry through the informed use of credit. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1601. TILA's stated purpose is to assure a meaningful disclosure of credit terms so that the consumer will be able to compare the various credit terms available to him and avoid the uninformed use of credit and to protect the consumer against inaccurate and unfair credit billing. TILA also regulates home equity lines of credit, permitting lenders to alter them only under certain circumstances.

Banking Law > Consumer Protection > Truth in Lending > General Overview

Real Property Law > Financing > Secondary Financing > Home Equity Credit Lines

HN3*[] Consumer Protection, Truth in Lending

The Truth in Lending Act (TILA), 15 U.S.C.S. § 1601 et seq., explains that a home equity line of credit (HELOC) may be reduced during any period in which the value of the consumer's principal dwelling which secures any outstanding balance is significantly less than the original appraisal value of the dwelling. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1647(c)(2)(B). Regulation Z similarly allows HELOC reduction or suspension if the value of the dwelling that secures the HELOC declines significantly below the dwelling's appraised value. 12 C.F.R. § 226.5b(f)(3)(vi)(A).

To come within the meaning of "consumer" for the purposes of asserting a Truth in Lending Act (TILA), 15 U.S.C.S. § 1601 et seq., claim, the transactions at issue must be primarily for personal, family, or household purposes. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1602(h).

Civil Procedure > ... > Declaratory Judgments > Federal Declaratory Judgments > Discretionary Jurisdiction

HN5*[] Federal Declaratory Judgments, Discretionary Jurisdiction

The Declaratory Judgment Act provides that, in a case of actual controversy within its jurisdiction, any court of the United States may declare the rights and other legal relations of any interested party seeking such declaration, whether or not further relief is or could be sought. 28 U.S.C.S. § 2201. The decision to entertain a declaratory judgment action lies within the discretion of the district court and is not precluded by the availability of another form of relief. Fed. R. Civ. P. 57.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Good Faith & Fair Dealing

HN6*[] Contract Interpretation, Good Faith & Fair Dealing

California law recognizes a cause of action for the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The breach of a specific provision of the contract is not a necessary prerequisite to a claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing.

Insurance Law > Liability & Performance Standards > Bad Faith & Extracontractual Liability > Payment Delays & Denials

HN7*[] Bad Faith & Extracontractual Liability, Payment Delays & Denials

An insurer's obligations extend beyond simply paying the benefits to which its insured is entitled. Tactics that delay, frustrate, or oppress the insured can support a claim for relief even if the insured eventually receives the payment due under the policy.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Good Faith & Fair Dealing

Real Property Law > Financing > Secondary Financing > Home Equity Credit Lines

HN8[] Contract Interpretation, Good Faith & Fair Dealing

Allegations that a lender offering a home equity line of credit reduced or suspended the account by claiming that the property value had declined without a sufficient factual basis, failed to provide specific information as to how it reached that conclusion, and then required the borrower to pay the cost of an appraisal to show otherwise are sufficient to state a claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing.

HN9[] Contract Interpretation, Good Faith & Fair Dealing

In Delaware, the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing inheres in every contract and requires a party in a contractual relationship to refrain from arbitrary or unreasonable conduct that has the effect of preventing the other party to the contract from receiving the fruits of the bargain. The implied covenant cannot be invoked to override the express terms of the contract. To state a claim, plaintiff must identify a specific implied contractual obligation and allege how the violation of that obligation denied the plaintiff the fruits of the contract. A general allegation that defendant acted in bad faith is insufficient.

HN10[] Contract Interpretation, Good Faith & Fair Dealing

Minnesota's implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing requires that one party not unjustifiably hinder the other party's performance of a contract and that a party not take advantage of the failure of a condition precedent when the party itself has frustrated performance of that condition. The covenant does not extend to actions beyond the scope of the underlying contract, but Minnesota law does not require a plaintiff asserting an implied covenant breach to first establish breach of an express contractual provision.

HN11[] Contract Interpretation, Good Faith & Fair Dealing

Arizona's implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing prohibits either party from acting in a way that will impair the right of the other to receive the benefits that flow from their agreement or contractual relationship. To state a claim under this theory, a plaintiff need only allege that defendant's actions potentially impaired plaintiff's contractual rights.

Contracts Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > Quantum Meruit

Contracts Law > Remedies > Restitution

HN12[] Equitable Relief, Quantum Meruit

A restitution claim in California requires receipt of benefit and unjust retention of that benefit at the expense of others. In Minnesota, an unjust enrichment claim requires a showing that (1) a benefit was conferred by the plaintiff on the defendant; (2) the defendant accepted the benefit; and (3) the defendant retained the benefit although retaining it without payment is inequitable. Texas allows recovery on an unjust enrichment theory when one person has obtained a benefit from another by fraud, duress, or the taking of an undue advantage. Delaware law requires a showing of (1) an enrichment; (2) an impoverishment; (3) a relation between the enrichment and the impoverishment; (4) the absence of justification; and (5) the absence of a remedy at law. Although the definitions thus differ slightly, all essentially require the inequitable or unjustified retention of a benefit or enrichment at plaintiff's expense.

HN13[] Secondary Financing, Home Equity Credit Lines

A creditor may collect only bona fide and reasonable appraisal and credit report fees if such fees are actually incurred in investigating whether the condition permitting the freeze continues to exist. A creditor may not, in any circumstances, impose a fee to reinstate a credit line once the condition has been determined not to exist. 12 C.F.R. Pt. 226, Supp. 1, 5b(f)(3)(vi)-3. In addition, while the creditor is allowed to shift the burden to request reinstatement to the borrower, once the consumer requests reinstatement, the creditor must promptly investigate to determine whether the condition allowing the freeze continues to exist. 12 C.F.R. Pt. 226, Supp. 1, 5(b)(f)(3)(vi)-4. Together, these provisions suggest that the creditor may shift the burden of incurring an appraisal fee to the consumer.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

HN14[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

California's unfair competition law (UCL) prohibits any unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent business act. Cal. Bus &a Prof. Code § 17200. Under California law, such a claim may be brought by a person who has suffered injury in fact and has lost money or property as a result of the unfair competition. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17204. In other words, the law allows prosecution by a private plaintiff, although the remedies available under those circumstances are generally limited to injunctive relief and restitution. The term "fraudulent business act" is not further defined in the statute, but the statute has the broad purpose of protecting both consumers and competitors by promoting fair competition in commercial markets for goods and services.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

HN15[] State Regulation, Claims

The Illinois Supreme Court has explained its interpretation of the state's Consumer Fraud Act as requiring that litigant plead (1) a deceptive act or practice by defendant; (2) defendant's intent that plaintiff rely on the deception; (3) the occurrence of the deception in the course of conduct involving trade or commerce; and (4) actual damage to plaintiff (5) proximately caused by the deception. 815 ILCS 505/2 and 815 ILCS 505/10a(a). The Illinois Supreme Court has explained that plaintiff must prove that he or she was actually deceived by the misrepresentation in order to establish the element of proximate causation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > General Overview

HN16[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

Minnesota law provides that the act, use, or employment by any person of any fraud, false pretense, false promise, misrepresentation, misleading statement, or deceptive practice, with the intent that others rely thereon in connection with the sale of any merchandise, whether or not any person has in fact been misled, deceived, or damaged thereby, is enjoinable. Minn. Stat. § 325F.69. The statute does not require actual reliance if a plaintiff seeks an injunction, but Minnesota courts have required proof of actual reliance on defendant's fraudulent conduct to support an award of damages.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

HN17[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

The California courts currently employ two separate definitions of "unfair." The first asks the court to weigh the utility of defendant's conduct against the gravity of the harm to the alleged victim. The second treats conduct as unfair if it threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws, but that definition has not been held applicable in consumer claims. As for the "unlawful" prong of the law, Cal. Bus & Prof. Code § 17200 has been interpreted to render violations of federal, state, or local law unlawful practices which are independently actionable.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

HN18[] State Regulation, Claims

In California, a business practice is unfair within the meaning of the unfair competition law if it is unscrupulous and causes injury to consumers that outweighs the benefits. The determination of whether a business practice is unfair is usually a question of fact and inappropriate for a motion to dismiss.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

Banking Law > Consumer Protection > Truth in Lending > Liability for Violations

HN19[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

In Illinois, the question of whether a business practice is unfair within the meaning of the Illinois Consumer Fraud Act depends on (1) whether the practice offends public policy; (2) whether it is immoral, unethical, oppressive, or unscrupulous; or (3) whether it causes substantial injury to consumers. Illinois law also explains, however, that the consumer fraud law does not require lenders to make more extensive disclosures than are required by the Truth in Lending Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1601 et seq.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

The Minnesota Uniform Deceptive Practices Act, Minn. Stat. § 325D.44, subd. 1, which prohibits a person from representing that goods or services have characteristics they do not have or otherwise creating a likelihood of confusion or misunderstanding. Claims brought pursuant to this act are based on conduct by defendant and do not require reliance by the plaintiff. The Minnesota statutes affords injunctive relief as well as costs and attorneys fees, in addition to relief available under other state statutes or common law. Minn. Stat. § 325D.45.

[*866] MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

A home equity line of credit ("HELOC") is a revolving line of credit secured by a holder's primary residence. In this class action, eight individuals to whom Defendant had extended HELOCs charge Defendant with having reduced or suspended those HELOCs without a permissible reason for doing so, thus violating the Federal Truth-in-Lending Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1601 et seq, and its implementing regulation, Regulation Z, 12 C.F.R. 226. Plaintiffs also allege that Defendant's suspension or reduction of their HELOCs, and the manner in which those reductions or suspensions were carried out, constitute breach of contract, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, unjust enrichment, and violations of California, Illinois, and Minnesota consumer protection [3] laws. This action comes to the court after having been consolidated by the United States Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation. Defendant moves to dismiss the Complaint in its entirety, arguing that federal law and relevant contractual provisions permit Defendant to reduce or suspend Plaintiffs' HELOCs. Defendant challenges Plaintiffs' claims on a host of other grounds as well.

For the reasons explained here, the court concludes that Plaintiffs have adequately pleaded a violation of TILA and Regulation Z by alleging that Defendant suspended or reduced HELOCs in the absence of a significant decline in the value of the property securing the HELOC. Defendant is correct that the failure to consider present available equity, the use of "automated valuation models," the use of "unlawful triggering events," and reduction or suspension absent a "sound factual basis" are not independent bases for relief. Those practices are, however, relevant in considering whether Defendant reduced or suspended HELOCs even though the properties securing them suffered no significant decline in value. The court is also satisfied that Plaintiffs have adequately pleaded that the HELOCs at issue were obtained [4] primarily for personal, family, or household purposes, as required by TILA. The court declines to dismiss Plaintiffs' claims for declaratory relief, as such relief may be sought as an alternative to the remedies provided for by TILA and Regulation Z. The court concludes, further, that Plaintiffs' allegations that Defendant reduced or suspended their HELOCs without adequate justification are sufficient to state claims for breach of contract under Minnesota, California, Texas and Delaware law. Certain other state law claims survive, as well, including Plaintiffs' unfair conduct claims under the California and Illinois consumer protection laws, and their claim under the Minnesota Deceptive Practices Act.

BACKGROUND

Plaintiffs William Cavanagh, Robert M. Frank, Maria I. Frank, Shannon Hackett, Michael Malcolm, Daryl Mayes, Michael Walsh, and Robert Wilder, have brought a consolidated class action complaint against Defendant JPMorgan Chase, alleging that the bank reduced or suspended their home equity lines of credit ("HELOCs") in violation of the Federal Truth-in-Lending Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1601 et seq, and its implementing regulation, Regulation Z, 12 C.F.R. 226. [1] (Compl. ¶¶ 1, 2.) Plaintiffs [*867] [5] also allege breach of contract, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, unjust enrichment, and violations of California, Illinois, and Minnesota consumer protection laws. (Id.)

HELOCs, as noted, are revolving lines of credit used by consumers for significant expenditures including education, home improvements, medical bills, and debt consolidation. (Id. ¶ 3.) Because HELOCs are secured by the borrower's primary residence (meaning default can result in foreclosure), lenders base the amount of a HELOC, in part, on the level of equity in the home. (Id. ¶ 4.) The HELOC agreements entered into between Plaintiffs and Defendant [2] allow Plaintiffs to utilize a HELOC in exchange for an annual fee payable for each one-year "draw period." (Id. ¶ 5.) Under the terms of the agreement, Defendant is permitted to reduce or suspend the HELOC in the event that "[t]he value of the Property declines significantly below the value as determined by us at the time you applied for your" HELOC. [3] (Id. ¶ 6; Group [6] Ex. A at 14.) See also 15 U.S.C. § 1647(c)(2)(B) (Truth in Lending Act provision allowing HELOC reduction when the value of the property "is significantly less than the original appraisal value of the dwelling"); 12 C.F.R. § 226.5b(f)(3)(vi)(A) (TILA implementing regulation, Regulation Z, explaining that a reduction is permitted when the value of the property "declines significantly below the dwelling's

[1] As discussed below, Plaintiffs filed a consolidated complaint after their cases were transferred to this court by the United States Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation.

[2] Plaintiffs did not all sign identical agreements, but the agreements are similar in relevant respects, as described herein. The agreements are attached as Group Exhibit A to Plaintiffs' Consolidated Amended Complaint. (Dkt. 41.) Several Plaintiffs signed agreements with Chase Manhattan, Bank One, and Washington Mutual, which have since been acquired by or merged with J.P. Morgan to become JPMorgan Chase. Some Plaintiffs signed their agreements with JPMorgan Chase [7] itself.

[3] Each agreement contains similar language regarding when Defendant is permitted to reduce or suspend the amount of a HELOC.

appraised value"). In order to determine whether a significant decline in value warranting HELOC reduction or suspension had occurred, Defendant used "automated valuation models" ("AVMs"), which, Plaintiffs allege, unreasonably undervalued homes and lacked validation mechanisms necessary to ensure accuracy. (Compl. ¶¶ 10, 11.)

At the time it suspended or reduced a HELOC, Defendant sent the borrower a two-page form letter explaining, first, that home values throughout the nation were falling [4] and, second, that Defendant's estimate of the individual Plaintiff's particular property value "no longer supports the full amount of [the] credit line." (Id. ¶ 15; see also Group Ex. B.) In several cases, the letters were sent the day after or the day before the account's reduction or suspension; in other cases, the letters are not dated, or the dates do not appear in the copies submitted to the court. (See Group Ex. B at 4, 10.) In most cases, the letters did not contain any additional information, such as the estimated decrease in the value of the property, or an explanation of how that decrease was determined. (Id. ¶ 16.) The letters explained that in order to request reinstatement of the HELOC, the customer must order and pay for an [*868] appraisal to be conducted by an appraiser chosen by Defendant. (Id. ¶ 18.) Plaintiffs contend that these notices did not disclose Defendant's valuation of [8] the property at the time of the HELOC origination, nor provide any other information that would assist the consumer in determining whether or not to appeal the action and request reinstatement. (Id. ¶ 19.) Plaintiffs allege, further, that those borrowers whose HELOCs were suspended nevertheless continued to be charged an annual fee and did not receive a refund of their annual fee for any portion of the draw period during which the HELOC remained suspended. (Id. ¶ 22.)

Individual Plaintiffs' Allegations

Although Plaintiffs' factual circumstances are not identical, all allege unwarranted reductions in their lines of credit, as follows:

- Plaintiff William Cavanagh entered into a HELOC agreement in February 2008 [9] for a $400,000 line of credit secured by a mortgage on his primary residence in Edina, Minnesota. (Id. ¶¶ 23, 36.) At the time of origination, Cavanagh's property was valued by Chase at $950,000, and he had $650,000 in available equity (the precise method by which Chase arrived at this original valuation is not specified). (Id. ¶ 36.) In January 2009, Cavanagh received a letter from Defendant announcing that future draws on his HELOC would be suspended effective January 10, and that his home's value had been estimated using a "proven valuation method" at $736,290. (Id. ¶ 37.) Cavanagh hired an appraiser, who determined that his home value had actually increased to $1.1 million, and several weeks later Defendant reinstated Cavanagh's HELOC. (Id. ¶¶ 38, 39.) The suspension caused Cavanagh to lose access to the HELOC, his primary line of credit, for several months, and increased his credit utilization rate, potentially damaging his credit score and increasing his credit costs. (Id. ¶¶ 40, 41.)

- Robert M. and Maria I. Frank entered into a HELOC agreement with Washington Mutual in April 2003 for a $100,000 line of credit secured by their home in Auburn, California. (Id. ¶ 24, 42.) The home [10] was valued at $389,000 at the time of origination, and by April 2009, the Franks had paid down their mortgage from $177,000 to $122,000. (Id.) On April 16, 2009, Defendant reduced the Franks' HELOC from $100,000 to $13,100 based on an estimated decrease in their property value. (Id. ¶ 43.) Defendant estimated the value of the home at $345,600, which, coupled with the mortgage payments made to that date, Plaintiffs assert, actually reflected an increase in the available equity in the property from $112,000 to $123,600. (Id. ¶ 47.)

- Shannon Hackett entered into a HELOC agreement with Chase in May 2004 for a $100,000 line of credit secured by Hackett's home in Evanston, Illinois, which was valued at $445,000 by Defendant's "automated

[4] Washington Mutual's letter explained that "[w]ith home values continuing to fall in many parts of the country, a recent review of your account identified a decline in the value of the property securing your HELOC since the date you applied for your HELOC or increase." (Group Ex. B at 10.) Chase's letter similarly explained that, "[w]ith home values falling in many parts of the country, we've used a proven valuation method to estimate your home's value . . . ." (Group Ex. B at 8.)

valuation model." (Id. ¶ 50.) Hackett's $283,125 balance on her first mortgage left unencumbered equity, after accounting for the HELOC, of $61,857. (Id. ¶ 51.) Defendant reduced Hackett's HELOC from $100,000 to $57,000 in December 2008 after determining her home value had declined to $400,000; Hackett alleges she did not learn about this HELOC reduction until February 2010, when she began inquiring into a later HELOC suspension. (Id. ¶ 52.) Specifically, [11] on November 5, 2009, Hackett received a letter from Defendant announcing that the HELOC had been suspended because the property value [*869] had declined to $358,000. (Id. ¶ 53.) Hackett paid for an appraisal of the property, which took place on November 9, 2009, and resulted in a valuation of $400,000. (Id. ¶ 55.) She requested reinstatement of the HELOC on December 9, 2009. (Id.) Defendant refused to reinstate the HELOC, contending that the value of Hackett's home was insufficient to support any line of credit. (Id. ¶¶ 56, 57.) Plaintiffs acknowledge that the amount of available equity in Hackett's home in 2009 had decreased to $41,540, but they allege that this decrease was just 32.8 percent from that available at the time of the HELOC origination, which they argue is not a "significant decline" for purposes of Section I and III, TILA, and Regulation Z. (Id. ¶¶ 60-62.)

• Michael Malcolm entered into a HELOC agreement in March 2006 for a $122,000 line of credit secured by his $1 million Mountain View, California home. (Id. ¶¶ 26, 65.) Defendant suspended Malcolm's HELOC on August 7, 2009, based on a "proven valuation method" that put the home's value at $826,000 (no other details of this [12] valuation were provided). (Id. ¶ 66.) Malcolm paid for an appraisal (the date on which it was conducted is not specified), which showed that his property value had actually increased to $1.07 million. (Id. ¶¶ 68, 69.) Defendant reinstated Malcolm's line of credit after he filed his original lawsuit. (Id. ¶ 69.)

• Daryl Mayes entered into a HELOC agreement with Washington Mutual in November 2006 for a $17,000 line of credit secured by his $172,000 home in Arlington, Texas. (Id. ¶ 71.) The amount of available equity in Mayes's home at the time of origination was $34,690. (Id. ¶ 72.) Defendant suspended Mayes's HELOC on March 26, 2009. Although it did not specify the property's current valuation or the reduction in value, Defendant explained that "a recent review of your account identified a decline in the value of the property securing your HELOC." (Id. ¶ 73; Group Ex. B at 10.) After numerous phone calls to Defendant, on June 20, 2009, Mayes secured a valuation report from Defendant, in which Defendant valued his property at $151,000. (Compl. ¶ 76.) An appraisal conducted ten days prior to his receipt of notice of the suspension, obtained in connection with a refinancing of Mayes's primary [13] mortgage (also held by Defendant), determined the home's value to be $165,000. (Id. ¶ 77.) Defendant nevertheless refused to reinstate Mayes's HELOC, invoking a new policy that required a loan-to-value ratio of 70 percent; Plaintiff Mayes contends the required ratio was 80 percent at the time of origination. (Id. ¶ 78.) Because Mayes had paid off a portion of his mortgage after the HELOC origination, the available equity in his property had decreased by just 2.2 percent between the HELOC origination and suspension, and, even without considering the additional equity, had decreased by only 20 percent. (Id. ¶¶ 82, 84.)

• Michael Walsh entered into a HELOC agreement with Washington Mutual in August 2003 for a $100,000 line of credit secured by his $490,000 home in Garden Grove, California. (Id. ¶ 87.) Defendant reduced the HELOC from $100,000 to $16,300 effective April 16, 2009. (Id. ¶ 88.) Defendant told Walsh during a May 15, 2009, phone call that it had valued his home at $502,589 at origination, and its value had since fallen to $466,300. (Id. ¶ 91.) Plaintiff alleges that "[d]espite the fact Chase's own AVM purportedly showed the property to be worth $466,300, during [*870] that same telephone [14] call the customer service representative notified Walsh, inexplicably, that he would need an appraisal value of $412,353 to reinstate his HELOC?that is, Chase informed Walsh that its own AVM had valued his property at $54,000 more than would be needed to keep his HELOC open." (Id.)

• Robert Wilder entered into a HELOC agreement, similar to those entered into by other Plaintiffs, with Bank One in July 2003 for a $250,000 line of credit secured by Wilder's $900,000 Scottsdale, Arizona home. (Id. ¶ 94.) Defendant suspended Wilder's HELOC effective April 17, 2009, based on a valuation of $811,800. (Id. ¶ 95.) Wilder obtained an appraisal, which he forwarded to Defendant in June 2009, that showed his property value had increased to $970,000. (Id. ¶ 101.) Defendant reinstated his HELOC after he filed this lawsuit (the precise date is not specified). (Id.)

Plaintiffs sought centralization of their various cases pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1407(a), which allows for "coordinated or consolidated pretrial proceedings . . . when civil actions involving one or more common questions of fact are pending in different districts." The United States Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation granted Plaintiffs' [15] request on June 7, 2010. In re: JPMorgan Chase Bank Home Equity Line of Credit Litigation, 716 F. Supp. 2d 1363 (U.S. Jud. Pan. Mult. Lit. 2010). The panel noted that the common factual allegations included that Defendant "improperly suspended or reduced plaintiffs' respective home equity line of credit accounts and, relatedly, used inappropriate automated valuation models in assessing the value of the underlying properties." Id.

DISCUSSION

HN1[] Defendant has moved to dismiss the complaint for failure to state a claim for relief. FED. R. CIV. P. 12(b)(6). "To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). In evaluating a motion to dismiss, the court accepts Plaintiffs' well-pleaded factual allegations as true, and draws reasonable inferences in Plaintiffs' favor. Tamayo v. Blagojevich, 526 F.3d 1074, 1081 (7th Cir. 2008).

I. Violations of TILA and Regulation Z

HN2[] Congress enacted the Truth in Lending Act to enhance "economic stabilization" and competition in the consumer credit industry through the "informed use of credit." [16] 15 U.S.C. § 1601. TILA's stated purpose is "to assure a meaningful disclosure of credit terms so that the consumer will be able to compare . . . the various credit terms available to him and avoid the uninformed use of credit, and to protect the consumer against inaccurate and unfair credit billing. . . ." Id. As relevant to this case, the Act also regulates HELOCs, permitting lenders to alter them only under certain circumstances.

Plaintiffs allege that Defendant violated TILA and its implementing regulation, Regulation Z, in four different respects: (1) suspending and reducing HELOCs in the absence of a significant decline in the value of the property securing the HELOC, and failing to reinstate such HELOCs when appropriate (Compl. ¶¶ 113-15); (2) using inaccurate and unreliable methods to value Plaintiffs' homes (Id. ¶¶ 116-20); (3) failing to consider the amount of available equity in Plaintiffs' homes before concluding their home values [*871] had declined significantly for TILA and Regulation Z purposes (Id. ¶ 121); and (4) using unlawful triggering events in deciding to suspend or reduce HELOCs. (Id. ¶¶ 122-26.) The court examines each in turn.

A. Reduction or Suspension of HELOCs Absent [17] Significant Decline

Plaintiffs' central claim is that their HELOCs were reduced or suspended in the absence of a significant decline in the value of their properties, a practice prohibited by TILA and Regulation Z. HN3[] TILA explains that a HELOC may be reduced "during any period in which the value of the consumer's principal dwelling which secures any outstanding balance is significantly less than the original appraisal value of the dwelling." 15 U.S.C. § 1647(c)(2)(B). Regulation Z similarly allows HELOC reduction or suspension if "[t]he value of the dwelling that secures the [HELOC] declines significantly below the dwelling's appraised value . . . ." 12 C.F.R. § 226.5b(f)(3)(vi)(A).

The Federal Reserve Board's Official Commentary to Regulation Z explains that "what constitutes a significant decline . . . will vary according to individual circumstances." 12 C.F.R. Pt. 226, Supp. 1, 5b(f)(3)(vi)-6 ("Official Commentary" or "Commentary"). The Commentary goes on to explain, however, that "if the value of the dwelling declines such that the initial difference between the credit limit and the available equity (based on the property's appraised value for purposes of the plan) is reduced by fifty [18] percent, this constitutes a significant decline." Id. Thus, for example, if a $100,000 home, with a $50,000 first mortgage, secures a HELOC of $30,000, then the difference between the credit limit and available equity is $20,000. If the value of that home decreases by $10,000, the difference between the credit limit and the available equity would decrease by $10,000 as well, from $20,000 to $10,000—a 50 percent reduction, and a "significant decline" for purposes of the statute. Id. The statute and regulation do not explain what steps must be taken prior to suspension. The Act states only that "a creditor [need not] obtain an appraisal before suspending credit privileges . . . [but that] a significant decline must occur before suspension can occur." Id.

Defendant argues that Plaintiffs have not sufficiently alleged that their HELOCs were reduced or suspended in the absence of a significant decline in value, and that their allegations amount to no more than the type of "threadbare recitals" that Iqbal determined were insufficient to survive a motion to dismiss. (Def.'s Br. at 14-15 (quoting Iqbal, 129 S.Ct. at 1940).) According to Defendant, its valuations did, in fact, demonstrate declines [19] in value of between 7 and 23 percent, which, it contends, are significant for purposes of the statute. (Def.'s Br. at 15.) Further, Defendant urges that "[w]hile some Plaintiffs . . . allege that they subsequently obtained appraisals showing their properties' values had recovered to support reinstatement," those circumstances are insufficient to establish a TILA violation. (Id.) In Defendant's view, "[i]f a borrower could allege a TILA violation any time he subsequently obtained an appraisal warranting reinstatement, this would gut the TILA and Regulation Z provisions permitting the lender to suspend the line." (Id. at 15-16.)

The court does not share Defendant's understanding of Plaintiffs' allegations. Plaintiffs have specifically alleged that Defendant suspended or reduced HELOCs based on property-value estimates that were rebutted within close temporal proximity to the valuations Defendant provided. Such a pattern supports an inference that Defendant's valuations are not reliable indicators, or that Plaintiffs' property values did not actually decline to the extent [*872] Defendant claimed. The court disagrees, further, with Defendant's assertion that allowing such a claim to survive would [20] "gut" the applicable laws—if such a claim could not be supported with a subsequent or contemporaneous appraisal, it is difficult to see how it could ever be supported.

Notably, numerous courts have declined to dismiss similar complaints where plaintiff offered nothing more than unadorned allegations that a "significant decline" did not occur prior to suspension or reduction of the HELOC. *In re Citibank HELOC Litig., No. C-09-0350 MMC, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 95938, 2010 WL 3447724, at 3 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 30, 2010) (denying motion to dismiss where plaintiff pleaded that there had not been a significant decline, without any additional specifics); *Malcolm v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A., No. 09-4496-JF (PVT), 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23770, 2010 WL 934252, at 3 (N.D. Cal. March 15, 2010) (denying motion to dismiss where appraisal conducted during the same month as the HELOC reduction revealed an increase in the value of the home); Hickman v. Wells Fargo Bank N.A., 683 F. Supp. 2d 779, 785-86 (N.D. Ill. 2010) (St. Eve, J.) (denying motion to dismiss though plaintiff "did not specifically allege any factual support for his allegation that the value of his home did not decline significantly").

Plaintiffs have adequately alleged that their HELOCs were suspended [21] or reduced in the absence of a significant decline in the value of the property securing the HELOC.

B. Consideration of Available Equity

Plaintiffs also allege that Defendant violated TILA and Regulation Z by failing to consider the present available equity [5] in the property securing the HELOC before suspension or reduction. Defendant contends that TILA does not require such consideration. (Def.'s Br. at 7.)

[5] For purposes of this opinion, the court uses the term "present available equity" to refer to the amount of unencumbered equity in the subject property at the time of the HELOC reduction or suspension. "Available equity" refers to the amount of unencumbered equity at the time of HELOC origination. The difference between these two figures represents the payments that have been made in the interim on the subject property's principal, minus the reduction in value that has occurred (as well as any additional liabilities to which the property has become subject, which does not appear to be a factor in this case).

As discussed previously, TILA and Regulation Z do not explicitly discuss the issue of present available equity. The Official Commentary does discuss available equity in setting [22] out its "safe harbor" provision. [6] The Commentary, however, illustrates that provision without reference to the amount of present available equity. Instead it references the amount of available equity at the HELOC's inception. [*873] Defendant also notes that the Commentary explains that the safe harbor requires lenders to consider whether the equity has been reduced to fifty percent of that "initial difference" between the available equity and the credit limit. 12 C.F.R. Pt. 226, Supp. 1, 5b(f)(3)(vi)-6 (emphasis added). This suggests, Defendant urges, that the borrower's equity as of the time of a HELOC suspension is not a factor. That view is bolstered, according to Defendant, by a proposed rule that "clarifies that in determining whether a decline results in a 50 percent equity cushion reduction, the creditor may, but does not have to, consider any changes in available equity based on the status of the first mortgage." Truth in Lending: Proposed Rules, 74 Fed. Reg. 43,428, 43,491 (Aug. 26, 2009).

At least one district court found this argument persuasive. In Raeth v. National City Bank, 755 F. Supp. 2d 899 (W.D. Tenn. 2010), the court concluded that a lender need not consider the [24] amount of present available equity before suspending or reducing a HELOC. Id. at 903-04. That court noted that TILA and Regulation Z do not contain any reference to the "present equity level" (or "present available equity," as this court defines it). The "sole operative variable" the Commentary references, the court noted, is the value of the home. Id. at 904. The court observed, further, that while "[t]he level of equity at origination is essential to the safe harbor because it sets the baseline by which the decline will be judged," the example offered in the Commentary makes "no reference to the present level of equity—it could be unchanged or it could be irrelevant." Id. at 903. Finding the reference to "available equity" ambiguous, the court declined to read into the statute a requirement that the lender consider present available equity. The court also rejected policy arguments in favor of such a requirement. Id. at 904. Specifically, plaintiff in Raeth had argued that reading the statute without the equity requirement would discourage borrowers from paying off their mortgages, and that because the purpose of the statute is to "prevent unfair lending practices" it should be read [25] in favor of consumers. Id. The court determined that requiring consideration of present equity could have the opposite effect: "[M]aking it more difficult for creditors to protect themselves against perceived risk could harm consumers if loans were subsequently made available to consumers only on more onerous terms." Id.

Plaintiffs distinguish Raeth on the ground that in that case, the value of the borrower's property had dropped such that, even considering the present available equity, there was an overall decline within the safe harbor provision. (Response at 12 n.5.) In this case, by contrast, even without considering present available equity, none of the named Plaintiffs' homes fall within the 50 percent safe harbor provision. (Id.) Plaintiffs note, further, that they are not alleging that Defendant's refusal to take account of available equity constitutes an independent claim for relief; instead, "any allegations . . . regarding failure to consider equity . . . are alleged as being demonstrative of unfair and potentially fraudulent practices." (Id.)

[6] The Official Commentary's "safe harbor" provision is considered controlling law, absolving a lender from liability for reductions that occur based on declines in value within the "safe harbor" [23] parameters. See Hamm v. Ameriquest Mortg. Co., 506 F.3d 525, 528 (7th Cir. 2007) ("Unless demonstrably irrational, Federal Reserve Board staff opinions construing the Act [TILA] or Regulation [Z] should be dispositive.") (citation and quotation omitted).

The safe harbor provision reads, in full:

> 6. Significant decline defined. What constitutes a significant decline for purposes of § 226.5b(f)(3)(vi)(A) will vary according to individual circumstances. In any event, if the value of the dwelling declines such that the initial difference between the credit limit and the available equity (based on the property's appraised value for purposes of the plan) is reduced by fifty percent, this constitutes a significant decline in the value of the dwelling for purposes of § 226.5b(f)(3)(vi)(A). . . . This provision does not require a creditor to obtain an appraisal before suspending credit privileges although a significant decline must occur before suspension can occur.

12 C.F.R., Pt. 226, Supp. 1, 5b(f)(3)(vi)-6.

In this court's view, present available equity should in fact play some role in a responsible creditor's lending decision—after all, [26] the amount of a HELOC is based on the amount of equity in the home; it makes little sense to suggest that an increase in the amount of that equity will have no bearing on the HELOC. The Raeth court is correct that not allowing lenders to appropriately protect themselves against risk could create incentives to impose more onerous terms on consumers, but that is not an obvious result from a holding that recognizes the relevance of present available equity. In the wake of [*874] the economic downturn, Plaintiffs here have seen their HELOCs reduced, allegedly not for legitimate reasons like a decline in home values, but instead mostly to insulate the lender from risk. According to Plaintiffs, Defendant's arbitrary reductions, unrelated to the actual value of the home or the home's equity, contravene TILA's purposes of "economic stabilization" for consumers and informed credit usage and potentially compromise the borrower's credit score. [7] While financial institutions must be able to safeguard against risk, TILA and Regulation Z restrict their ability to do so rashly and arbitrarily—by allowing a reduction or suspension only in the event of a "significant decline"—precisely because of the effect [27] such actions have on consumers.

The court need not decide whether Defendant's failure to consider equity increases itself violates TILA, as Plaintiffs' allegations survive regardless. For now, this allegation, as Plaintiffs argue, serves only to illustrate the practices it alleges violate TILA and Regulation Z.

C. Use of Inaccurate and Unreliable Valuation Methods

Plaintiffs also allege that in determining that their properties had suffered significant declines in value, Defendant relied on inaccurate, unreliable, and unreasonable valuation methods. Specifically, Plaintiffs allege that the "automated valuation models" ("AVMs") that Defendant uses are "flawed and inaccurate" and "generat[e] false positives resulting in reductions or suspensions in the absence of the required significant decline in value." (Response at 15.)

Defendant argues that this claim should [28] be dismissed because the law permits a lender to use AVMs in order to estimate home values. Indeed, Regulation Z "does not require a creditor to obtain an appraisal" before suspending a HELOC. 12 C.F.R. Pt. 226, Supp. 1, 5b(f)(3)(vi)-6. Defendant also points to a proposed rule explaining that "appropriate valuation methods may include, but are not limited to" AVMs. Truth in Lending: Proposed Rule, 74 Fed. Reg. 43,428, 43,492 (Aug. 26, 2009). Further, Defendant argues, Plaintiffs' suggestion that Defendant must ensure its AVMs are accurate finds no support in TILA or Regulation Z, neither of which "contains any requirements regarding validating, back-testing or verifying AVM models." (Def.'s Br. at 11.)

Plaintiffs, for their part, concede that the use of AVMs is not "per se improper," and that Defendant's "failure to adequately validate and back-test AVMs, while contrary to the FDIC's recommendations" also do not per se violate the Act. (Response at 15.) Instead, Plaintiffs argue that the use of these AVMs "contributes to, and results in, Chase's unlawful suspensions of HELOCs in the absence of significant declines in home values." (Id. at 16.)

The court's ruling on this motion does not [29] turn on the propriety of Defendant's use of AVMs. The ultimate question is whether Defendant reduced or suspended HELOCs in the absence of a significant decline in property values, in violation of TILA and Regulation Z. 15 U.S.C. § 1647(c)(2)(B); 12 C.F.R. § 226.5b(f)(3)(vi)(A). To the extent Defendant's use of AVMs contributed to improper reductions or suspensions of HELOCs, it is relevant, but Plaintiffs do not contend that the use of AVMs in and of itself violated TILA or Regulation Z. The court [*875]

concludes that the fact that TILA and Regulation Z permit the use of AVMs also does not require dismissal of this claim. [8]

D. Use of Unlawful Triggering Events

Defendant contends that Plaintiffs' challenge to the use of "triggering events" in deciding to suspend or revoke HELOCs must be rejected "because it purports to impose TILA prohibitions beyond those contained in TILA or Regulation Z." (Def.'s Br. at 11-12.) The focus of this argument is on Plaintiffs' allegation that Defendant suspended or revoked HELOCs based on a 5 percent decline in property value. (Compl. ¶ 123.) Plaintiffs Walsh, Wilder, and Frank allege specifically that Defendant's customer service representative told them (in conversations not further detailed in the complaint) "that [Defendant] was entitled to suspend or reduce their respective HELOCs because their home values had decreased by 5%." (Id.) In effect, Plaintiffs allege, Defendant violates the law by creating its own metrics for reduction or suspension decisions that are independent of the exhaustive list set forth in TILA and Regulation Z. [9] Indeed, the Commentary [31] does explain that "a contract cannot contain a provision allowing the creditor to freeze a line due to an insignificant decline in property value since the regulation allows that response only for a significant decline." 12 C.F.R. Pt. 226, Supp. 1, 5b(f)(3)(i)-2.

Defendant insists that TILA and Regulation Z do not provide threshold values for determining whether a "significant decline" has occurred, and therefore "a lender is free to consider the individual circumstances surrounding the decline." (Def.'s Br. at 12-13.) Because Plaintiffs have not alleged "that, in their particular circumstances, a 5 [percent] decline was not a 'significant decline' in value," Defendant argues, their claim must be dismissed. (Id.) Plaintiffs respond that they have alleged that the declines upon which Defendant based its reduction or suspension decisions were not significant. Those allegations are sufficient, Plaintiffs urge; forcing Plaintiffs to "identify a specific value that would constitute a significant decline [32] under TILA . . . is inappropriate at the pleadings stage." (Response at 17.) The court agrees. Plaintiffs have adequately alleged that their HELOCs were reduced or suspended in the absence of a significant decline. The allegation regarding the purported 5 percent standard is merely an example of an allegedly impermissible reason given by Defendant for suspending or reducing a HELOC.

Defendant also argues that Plaintiffs lack standing to challenge its suspension or revocation of HELOCs based on this theory because "each Plaintiff alleges [Defendant] suspended or reduced their HELOCs based on a decline [in] property value in excess of 5 [percent]." (Def.'s Br. [*876] at 13.) Plaintiffs are correct, however, that "[Defendant] can make such assertions only if [Defendant] completely ignores Plaintiffs' allegations regarding the actual values of their respective homes." (Response at 17.) Plaintiffs acknowledge that Defendant claimed to have taken action in response to declines in value that exceeded 5 percent, but Plaintiffs also contend that any actual decline was not in fact "significant"—in other words, the allegation is that Defendant's claims as to the amount of the decline were incorrect, [33] and that action was taken in response to what were actually insignificant declines. The court declines to strike Plaintiffs' allegations regarding Defendant's reliance on a "triggering event" other than a significant decline in value.

E. Lack of a Sound Factual Basis

[8] Defendant has submitted supplemental authority in support of its argument that Plaintiffs' allegations do not state a claim for violations of TILA or Regulation Z, and, in particular, that the use of AVMs does not run afoul of those laws. In the cited case, however, the plaintiff had not made "a single allegation anywhere . . . that purports to correct the alleged mistaken property value reached by Wells Fargo". *Brigliadora v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., No. 8:10-CV-01944-EAK-TGW, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 60620, 2011 WL 2217485, at 4 (M.D. Fla. June 7, 2011). In other words, the Brigliadora plaintiff [30] did not rebut the valuation that was a product of Wells Fargo's use of AVMs. Plaintiffs here, by contrast, have specifically alleged that their property values had not suffered declines that can be deemed significant.

[9] Again, the court notes, Plaintiffs have not presented these circumstances as an independent violation, but because Defendant argues as though they have, the court addresses the argument here.

Defendant next argues that Plaintiffs' allegation it reduced or suspended HELOCs without a "sound factual basis" for doing so is improper because TILA and Regulation Z do not impose such a requirement. (Def.'s Br. at 14.) Again, however, Plaintiffs have not alleged that a suspension or reduction without a "sound factual basis" is an independent harm, but rather urge that it is "demonstrative of unfair and potentially fraudulent practices." (Response at 12 n.5.) Defendant's objection to this allegation is overruled.

F. Failure To Allege HELOCs Were Obtained For Personal, Family, or Household Purposes

Finally, Defendant argues that Plaintiffs fail to adequately allege that their HELOCs were used primarily for personal, family, or household purposes. (Def.'s Br. at 16.) Both parties agree that HN4[] to come within the meaning of "consumer" for the purposes of asserting a TILA claim (the relevant portion applies only to consumer transactions), [34] the transactions at issue must be "primarily for personal, family, or household purposes." 15 U.S.C. § 1602(h).

In their Complaint, each Plaintiff does allege that his or her HELOC was obtained "primarily for personal, family and/or household purposes, including household items and personal expenses." (Compl. ¶ 28.) These allegations are repeated with slight variation as to each Plaintiff. (Id. ¶¶ 23-29.) Defendant alleges that these are "[c]onclusory allegations that simply restate statutory language." (Def.'s Br. at 17.) Defendant cites to two cases as support for its contention that an allegation of this type is insufficient. In the first, a motion to dismiss was granted in part because plaintiff alleged only that the HELOC was for "basic expenses." *Hamilton v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., No. 09-04152 CW, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43074, 2010 WL 1460253, at 2 (N.D. Cal. April 12, 2010). In the second, *Schulken v. Washington Mutual, No. C 09-02708 JW, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 143387, at 10 (N.D. Cal. March 3, 2010), plaintiff alleged that the "purposes of the loan included home renovations" but not that such purposes were the primary reason for the HELOC. Id.

In the Complaint before this court, Plaintiffs do specifically allege that the HELOC [35] was used "primarily" for consumer purposes. Though conclusory, these allegations are not implausible within the meaning of Iqbal or Twombly such that a more detailed factual showing must be made at the pleadings stage. Defendant offers nothing to suggest these funds were used for non-consumer purposes, and offers the court no reason to question Plaintiffs' assertions. If Plaintiffs were required to provide detailed records concerning the nature of their HELOC expenditures at this stage, the already-lengthy Complaint would become unwieldy. The court declines to dismiss Plaintiffs' Complaint based on the lack of detail concerning HELOC expenditures.

[*877] II. Declaratory Relief

Defendant argues that Plaintiffs' declaratory judgment claim (Count II) should be dismissed because TILA's statutory scheme provides a complete remedy, and a declaratory judgment would serve no useful purpose. (Def.'s Br. at 18.)

HN5[] The Declaratory Judgment Act provides that "[i]n [36] a case of actual controversy within its jurisdiction . . . any court of the United States . . . may declare the rights and other legal relations of any interested party seeking such declaration, whether or not further relief is or could be sought." 28 U.S.C. § 2201. The decision to entertain a declaratory judgment action lies within the discretion of the district court, and is not precluded by the availability of another form of relief. FED. R. CIV. P. 57; Wilton v. Seven Falls Co., 515 U.S. 277, 282, 115 S. Ct. 2137, 132 L. Ed. 2d 214 (1995); City of Highland Park v. Train, 519 F.2d 681, 693 (7th Cir. 1975).

Plaintiffs argue that "it is unknown at this time whether TILA damages will sufficiently compensate the Class." (Response at 20-21.) Further, Plaintiffs argue, as Defendant "does not consider itself required to use accurate AVMs or to otherwise act with a sound factual basis when suspending accounts . . . a declaration affirming that Chase's conduct violates TILA may prove more beneficial to the Class members than any fractional share of a statutory damages award." (Id. at 21.) Because TILA's statutory remedies may indeed prove insufficient, the court declines to strike Plaintiffs' request for declaratory relief. [37] Cf. Hickman v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., No. 09 C

5090, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 108342, 2010 WL 3833669, at *4 (N.D. Ill. May 11, 2010) (declining to strike declaratory relief claim pleaded in the alternative).

III. Breach of Contract

Plaintiffs allege that Defendant breached its contracts in several ways, most significantly that it reduced or suspended HELOCs when no significant decline in property value justifying such action had occurred, and that it did so through the use of faulty AVMs, unlawful triggering events, and lack of consideration of available equity. (Compl. ¶¶ 135-40.) Plaintiffs also allege that Defendant's annual fees and other fees also constituted contractual breaches. (Id. ¶¶ 141-42.)

Defendant challenges Plaintiffs' breach of contract claims on a variety of grounds, urging, first, that Plaintiffs have not identified any express contractual provision that has been breached. (Def.'s Br. at 19.) Defendant argues, further, that neither the allegations of improper suspensions or reductions of HELOCs, nor the alleged improper collection of fees, states a breach of contract. (Id.) [10]

A. Absence of an Express Contractual Provision

Defendant's initial contract defense is another version of one the court has already addressed. Specifically, Defendant urges that Plaintiffs have not identified a specific contract provision that has been breached. (Def.'s Br. at 19), but Plaintiffs respond by pointing to the portion [*878] of the HELOC agreement that allows Defendant to reduce a credit limit if "the value of your property declines significantly below the property's appraised value . . . [including], for example, a decline [39] such that the initial difference between the Credit Limit and the available equity is reduced by fifty percent and may include a smaller decline depending on the individual circumstances." (Response at 22; Compl. ¶ 135; Group Ex. A at 6, 14, 22, 29, 36, 47, 53.) Defendant responds that it has not breached this provision because Plaintiffs have not adequately pleaded that their property values did not significantly decline. (Reply at 9.) For the reasons explained earlier, the court concludes that Plaintiffs have indeed so alleged. This objection is overruled.

B. Implicit Contractual Provisions

Defendant also challenges Plaintiffs' claims based on implied contractual terms. These include allegations that Defendant failed to consider available equity in a home before deciding to revoke or suspend a HELOC; used unlawful triggering events in making those decisions; and relied improperly on the use of automated valuation models. (Def.'s Br. at 19.) Citing Edwards v. Arthur Andersen LLP, 44 Cal.4th 937, 81 Cal. Rptr. 3d 282, 189 P.3d 285 (Cal. 2008), Plaintiffs contend that provisions of TILA and Regulation Z are incorporated by law into the contract, and "insofar as [Defendant's] conduct plausibly violates TILA, [40] such conduct also plausibly states a claim for breach of contract." (Response at 23.) Because the court is able to resolve Defendant's objections to Plaintiffs' Complaint without determining whether the contract incorporates TILA and Regulation Z, the court need not decide the issue. In any event, should Plaintiffs prevail on their claims that Defendant has violated TILA, a claim that the conduct also constitutes a breach of contract would not obviously yield any additional relief.

[10] The court notes that Plaintiffs' contract claims are governed by the laws of different states. "[T]he choice-of-law rule [38] for pendent state claims should be that of the forum [state]." Baltimore Orioles, Inc. v. Major League Baseball Players Assoc., 805 F.2d 663, 681 (7th Cir. 1986). In Illinois, "the law applicable to a contract is that which the parties intended . . . [w]hen that intent is expressed." Hofeld v. Nationwide Life Ins. Co., 59 Ill.2d 522, 529, 322 N.E.2d 454, 458 (1975). The HELOC agreements require the use of Minnesota law (Cavanagh, Group Ex. A at 5), California law (Frank, Group Ex. A at 6; Malcolm, Group Ex. A at 5; Walsh, Group Ex. A at 6), Delaware law (Hackett, Group Ex. A at 7), Texas law (Mayes, Group Ex. A at 5), and Arizona law (Wilder, Group Ex. A at 5).

i. Available Equity

Defendant contends that no contractual provision requires that it take into consideration available equity before suspension or reduction of a HELOC. The court agrees. Plaintiffs point to a provision in their HELOC agreements explaining that Defendant may reduce or suspend a HELOC when > [t]he value of the Property declines significantly below the value as determined by us at the time you applied for your Credit Line Account. This includes, for example, a decline such that the difference between the Credit Line and the available equity is reduced by fifty percent . . . and may include a smaller decline depending on individual circumstances.

(Group Ex. A at 14.). As the court reads this provision, [41] it does not require Defendant to consider available equity in deciding whether to suspend or revoke a HELOC. The mention of "available equity" refers to a situation in which action might be taken. The preceding sentence explains when Defendant is permitted to take action, and refers only to the value of the property, not to available equity. Further, the term "available equity" could be understood either to mean the available equity at the time of origination, or the present available equity at the time of suspension or reduction. The former interpretation accords more closely with the court's earlier reading of Regulation Z and the Commentary. See infra I.A. The court concludes that no express contractual provision requires Defendant's consideration of available equity at the time of any revocation or suspension.

To the extent Plaintiffs contend consideration of available equity is implied in the contract, the court is unpersuaded. As [*879] discussed earlier, TILA and Regulation Z do not appear to dictate that present available equity be considered, and any suggestion that TILA and Regulation Z are incorporated therefore would not require Defendant to consider present available equity as [42] a contractual matter.

The court notes that, while Plaintiffs devote a section of their brief to arguing that Defendant's failure to consider available equity is an independent contract violation, they appear to withdraw that argument in a footnote that acknowledges, "any allegations in the instant Complaint regarding failure to consider equity . . . are alleged as being demonstrative of unfair and potentially fraudulent practices." (Response at 12 n.5.) The court concludes that it must dismiss any breach of contract claim premised solely on failure to consider present available equity in making a reduction or suspension decision.

ii. Triggering Events

Defendant next argues that Plaintiffs' allegation that Defendant relied on "unlawful triggering events" in suspending or revoking HELOCs constitutes an "impermissibl[e] attempt to bootstrap nonexistent TILA statutory violations into a breach of contract claim." (Reply at 11.) Plaintiffs argue that because "the HELOC contracts provide an exhaustive list of grounds upon which [Defendant] can base a HELOC suspension or reduction . . . [Defendant's] reliance on different grounds—i.e., insignificant property value declines—would [43] breach the contract." (Response at 24.) Thus, Plaintiffs assert, Defendant breached the parties' contract by reducing or suspending Plaintiffs' HELOCs on the basis of insignificant declines in property values. (Id.) The court agrees with Plaintiffs that a reduction or suspension in the absence of a significant property value decline constitutes a breach of contract—but that is the same claim alleged previously. Plaintiffs previously identified the express contractual provision breached and explained in what way it was breached. See supra III.A. To the extent Plaintiffs are attempting to assert an additional breach of contract claim here, it is stricken as duplicative.

iii. Use of AVMs

Defendant asks the court to dismiss Plaintiffs' claim to the extent it is premised on the use of AVMs because no contractual provision or law prohibits their use. The court agrees that Defendant's use of AVMs, does not by itself, constitute breach of contract. Thus, though Plaintiffs mention Defendant's "reliance on flawed AVMs" in passing (see, e.g., Compl. ¶¶ 10-12, 138, 150, 155, 159), they offer no contractual provision that addresses the use of AVMs. This practice may be demonstrative or supportive [44] of Plaintiffs' breach of contract claims, but is not independently actionable.

iv. Loan-To-Value Ratios

Plaintiffs contend that Defendant breached its contract with HELOC borrowers by suspending or revoking HELOCs based on changes in its own internal loan-to-value ("LTV") ratio policies. (Response at 24.) An account's failure to "meet the bank's new internal LTV ratio requirements is not one of the enumerated grounds" for which an account can be suspended or reduced, Plaintiffs note: "[N]othing in [Defendant's] contract allows it to base suspensions and reductions on unilateral changes to its internal LTV ratio requirements that are made after its customers sign their HELOC contracts." (Id.)

Defendant argues that Plaintiffs have not identified any contractual provisions that govern Defendant's use of LTV ratios. (Def.'s Br. at 20.) The HELOC agreement, however, does provide an enumerated list of circumstances under which Defendant is able to suspend or revoke a [*880] HELOC; [11] TILA and Regulation Z also limit the circumstances when such action may be taken to enumerated occurrences. Defendant's decision to modify its own internal loan-to-value ratios is not on either list, and Defendant does [45] not point to any provision that authorizes its action. Were Defendant able to modify the HELOC terms based on any circumstance not enumerated in the agreement or applicable laws, the contract and laws governing HELOCs would become meaningless. Defendant allegedly told Mayes that his HELOC would be suspended because of a change in Defendant's LTV ratio, and similarly told Wilder in suspending his HELOC that his ratio was "high." (Response at 24.) Plaintiffs have stated a plausible claim that HELOCs were reduced or suspended due to Defendant's unilateral decision to change its LTV ratio, and not in response to a significant decline in home value, as the party's contracts require. Defendant's motion to dismiss this breach of contract theory is denied.

v. Annual Fee

Defendant next challenges Plaintiffs' assertion that Defendant breached the HELOC agreement by charging customers an annual fee for use of a HELOC account even after the account had been suspended. It appears that Plaintiff Hackett is the only named Plaintiff who paid a fee after suspension. Defendant argues that Hackett herself has not alleged she was charged a fee after suspension of the HELOC (Reply at 12); instead, she alleges only that Defendant failed to refund the annual fee after her account was suspended. (Compl. ¶ 22.) In any event, Defendant asserts, the agreement permits such a charge unless the account has been terminated and the loan balance paid off. (Def.'s [47] Br. at 21.) Thus, the HELOC agreement Hackett entered into explains that "[u]nless you terminate your Credit Account and pay the outstanding balance, the Annual Participation Fee will be charged to your Credit Account annually. . . . " (Group Ex. A at 22.)

The Hickman court examined a similar claim. Plaintiff there alleged that Wells Fargo breached its contract by charging a $75 annual fee after reducing his HELOC. 683 F. Supp. 2d at 792. The court noted that HELOC contract terms require the borrower "to be responsible for full payment of the balance of [the] Account as well as all other account obligations, according to the terms of this Agreement." Id. Another portion of the agreement explained that each year the HELOC was open, "a $75 non-refundable Annual Fee will be charged to [plaintiff's] account." Id. The contract also provided for situations in which the credit limit could be reduced. Id. The court concluded that because [11] The Washington Mutual agreement entered into by Plaintiff Frank provides an illustrative list. It explains that a HELOC may be reduced or suspended if: the property value declines significantly; the bank believes the borrower cannot meet his or her obligations; the borrower defaults on his or her obligations; the government prohibits charging the APR specified in the agreement; government action affects the priority of the bank's security [46] interest in the property; the government informs the bank "that continued advances may constitute an unsafe and unsound business practice"; or the maximum APR has been reached. (Group Ex. A at 14.) Defendant explains the reductions or suspensions at issue in this case solely by reference to the provision permitting such action where there has been a significant decline in property value; it does not contend that the reductions or suspensions are justified by reference to any other enumerated provision.

the contract contained no provision excusing payment of the annual fee in the event of a HELOC reduction, and because the contract expressly held plaintiff responsible for all account obligations and fees in the event of a reduction, plaintiff had not pleaded [48] any breach of contract [*881] claim with respect to the annual fee. Id. Plaintiffs attempt to distinguish Hickman because it involved an account reduction, rather than suspension, but the terms of Hackett's HELOC contract do not support such a distinction. [12]

Plaintiffs have failed to state a claim for breach of contract in connection with Defendant's charging an annual fee.

IV. Breach of Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing

Defendant argues that Plaintiffs' claims for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing should be dismissed because they fail to identify a contract term that creates an implied duty, or, alternatively, their claims do not actually state a breach of the implied duty. Whether Plaintiffs [49] can pursue claims for a breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing turns on state law and requires the court to address the state law relevant to each named Plaintiff's claims. The court notes that Plaintiffs have acknowledged that Texas law does not support a contractual cause of action for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and have withdrawn Plaintiff Mayes's claim based on Texas law. (Response at 28 n. 13.)

A. California

Claims for the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing by Plaintiffs Frank, Malcolm and Walsh are governed by California law. [13] (Frank, Group Ex. A at 6; Malcolm, Group Ex. A at 5; Walsh, Group Ex. A at 6). HN6[] California law recognizes a cause of action for the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. Thus, in Brehm v. 21st Century Ins. Co., 166 Cal. App. 4th 1225, 1236, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 410, 417 (Cal. App. 2008), the court observed that "breach of a specific provision of the contract is not a necessary prerequisite to a claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing." Defendant attempts to limit the reach of that holding by noting that in another portion of its opinion, the court [50] explains that "the principle that no breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing can occur if there is no coverage or potential for coverage under the [insurance] policy is quite different from the argument that no breach of the implied covenant can occur if there is no breach of an express contractual provision." Id. at 1236, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d at 417. But this citation only supports Plaintiffs' argument—it confirms that a breach of the implied covenant can occur even in the absence of a violation of an express contractual provision, so long as the contract is in force. Brehm goes on at some length to explain that in that case, dealing with an insurance contract, HN7[] "an insurer's obligations extend beyond simply paying the benefits to which its insured is entitled." Id. Tactics that delay, frustrate, or oppress the insured can support a claim for relief even if the insured eventually receives the [*882] payment due under the policy. Id. Guz v. Bechtel Nat. Inc., 24 Cal.4th 317, 327, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 352, 8 P.3d 1089, 1095 (2000), cited by Defendant, is to the same effect; it explains that the implied covenant cannot substantively alter the terms of a contract, but the covenant does require "mutual fairness [51] in applying a contract's actual terms . . . ."

[12] Hackett's agreement explains that

> You agree to pay us a non-refundable Annual Participation Fee of $25.00 during the Draw Period and any extension of the Draw Period. Unless you terminate your Credit Account and pay the outstanding balance, the Annual Participation Fee will be charged to your Credit Account annually during the Draw Period in the Monthly Statement Period ending on your anniversary month which we assign to your Credit Account.

(Group Ex. A at 22.)

[13] Plaintiffs do not discuss what state law they believe applies to each Plaintiff's implied covenant claim, but as their claims are based on contractual performance, this court applies the same choice-of-law provisions to these claims. See Amakua Development LLC v. Warner, 411 F. Supp. 2d 941, 948 (7th Cir. 2006).

This court concludes that California law therefore allows claims for the breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing in the execution of a contract's terms, so long as the implied covenant does not impose obligations inconsistent with the express terms of the written agreement.

At least one of the transferor courts so concluded in this case. There, in examining one Plaintiff's claims before consolidation, the district judge in Northern California determined that Plaintiff stated a claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing based on Defendant's suspension of a HELOC. *Malcolm, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23770, 2010 WL 934252, at 6. HN8[] "Allegations that Defendant claimed that the property value had declined without a sufficient factual basis, failed to provide specific information as to how it reached that conclusion, and [52] then required the borrower to pay the cost of an appraisal to show otherwise are sufficient to state a claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing." Id.

Defendant insists that allegations that it suspended or reduced HELOCs without considering present available equity, based its decisions on inaccurate and unreliable valuation methods, and charged excessive fees,\ do not state claims for the breach of any implied duty. (Def.'s Br. at 24.) At this stage, however, the court is satisfied that Plaintiffs have pleaded sufficient facts to suggest Defendant arbitrarily suspended their agreements based on valuations inconsistent with the actual declines in value experienced by the properties at issue. Plaintiffs have alleged that the appraisals they obtained after being notified of a suspension or reduction of their HELOCs diverge significantly from the valuations relied upon by Defendant in making the decision to revoke or suspend their HELOCs. [14] Plaintiffs assert, further, that they received delayed notifications from Defendant, did not receive notifications at all, received conflicting and inaccurate information, were charged excessive fees in connection with [53] their HELOC suspensions and revocations, or had their attempts to secure reinstatement of their HELOCs frustrated. The court concludes these allegations are sufficient to state a claim that Defendant violated the covenant of good faith and fair dealing in connection with the HELOCs.

B. Delaware

Plaintiff Hackett's claim is governed by Delaware law. (Hackett, Group Ex. A at 7.) HN9[] In Delaware, "[t]he implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing inheres in every contract and requires a party in a contractual relationship to refrain from arbitrary or unreasonable conduct which has the effect of preventing the other party to the contract from receiving the fruits of the bargain." Kuroda v. SPJS Holdings, L.L.C., 971 A.2d 872, 888 (Del. Ch. 2009) (citation and quotation omitted) (cited by Defendant). As in California, "[t]he implied covenant cannot be invoked to override the express terms of the contract." Id. To state a claim, plaintiff must identify "a specific [54] implied contractual [*883] obligation and allege how the violation of that obligation denied the plaintiff the fruits of the contract." Id. (citation and quotation omitted). A general allegation that defendant acted in bad faith is insufficient. Id.

The court concludes that Plaintiff Hackett has also adequately pleaded a claim for breach of the implied covenant. Plaintiff Hackett makes the same general allegations as do the other Plaintiffs, that the contract's terms were carried out improperly, but also alleges that she was charged a $30 fee to have a document faxed to her that Defendant was already obligated to provide. (Compl. ¶ 152.) This allegation is also sufficient to state a claim for breach of the implied covenant based on oppressive execution of the contract's terms.

C. Minnesota

Plaintiff Cavanagh's claim is governed by Minnesota law. (Cavanagh, Group Ex. A at 5.) HN10[] Minnesota's implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing "requir[es] that one party not 'unjustifiably hinder' the other party's performance of [a] contract" and that a party not "take advantage of the failure of a condition precedent when the party itself has frustrated performance of that condition." In re Hennepin County 1986 Recycling Board Litig., 540 N.W.2d 494, 502 (Minn. 1995) [55] . The covenant "does not extend to actions beyond the scope of the underlying contract," but Minnesota law does not require a plaintiff asserting an implied covenant breach to first establish breach of an express contractual provision. Id. at 503. For the reasons stated previously, the court concludes that Plaintiff Cavanagh states a claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing.

[14] Plaintiffs do not break out their allegations on this claim by individual Plaintiff, but rather allege generally that the implied covenant was breached by Defendant in some or all of these ways as to each Plaintiff. (Compl. ¶¶ 146-62.)

D. Arizona

Plaintiff Wilder's claim is governed by Arizona law. (Wilder, Group Ex. A at 5.) The court notes that Defendant offers no specific discussion of Wilder's claim and does not dispute that the implied covenant can be enforced under Arizona law. (Def.'s Br. at 23.) The transferor court in the Central District of California found that Wilder stated a claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing based by alleging that Defendant required him to pay for his appraisal up front and failed to provide information about the HELOC suspension sufficient to enable him to determine whether to appeal the determination and request reinstatement. *Wilder v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A., No. SACV 09-0834 DOC (RNBx), 2009 U.S. Dist. Lexis 124242, at 12 (C.D. Cal. Nov. 25, 2009).

The [56] court noted that HN11[] Arizona's implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing prohibits either party from acting in a way that will "impair the right of the other to receive the benefits which flow from their agreement or contractual relationship." *2009 U.S. Dist. Lexis 124242 at 11 (quoting Rawlings v. Apodaca, 151 Ariz. 149, 153-54, 726 P.2d 565, 569-70 (Ariz. 1986)). To state a claim under this theory, the court observed, a plaintiff need only allege that defendant's actions "potentially impair Plaintiff's right to the benefit of HELOC funds." Id. This court declines to depart from that conclusion. Plaintiff Wilder's allegations are sufficient to state a claim under essentially the same standard as those previously discussed.

V. Restitution and Unjust Enrichment

Plaintiffs have also challenged Defendant's conduct under an unjust enrichment theory. They allege that Defendant has been unjustly enriched in at least three ways: (1) by having received the benefit of appraisals paid for by Plaintiffs; (2) by retaining funds otherwise borrowed by [*884] Plaintiffs and profiting by lending those funds to other borrowers; (3) by retaining annual fees paid by Plaintiffs after their HELOCs were reduced or suspended.

A. Express [57] Contracts

Defendant first argues that the HELOC contract governs the relationships between the parties and precludes any claim for unjust enrichment. Defendant contends that California law does not recognize a claim for unjust enrichment at all, and that although Minnesota, Delaware, and Texas law recognize such a claim, it is barred where a contract exists. Plaintiffs argue that because they have pleaded their unjust enrichment claim in the alternative, it should survive the motion to dismiss. (Response at 35.)

The court is satisfied that a claim for unjust enrichment or restitution is recognized in each of the four forum states. California recognizes a claim for restitution (although there is some conflicting authority). *Malcolm, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23770, 2010 WL 934252, at 7 (citing Nordberg v. Trilegiant Corp., 445 F. Supp. 2d 1082, 1100 (N.D. Cal. 2006)); *Wilder, 2009 U.S. Dist. Defendant is correct that Minnesota, Texas, and Delaware bar unjust enrichment claims where the parties' relationship is governed by contract, [15] but all four states allow such a claim to [58] proceed when pleaded in the alternative. *Malcolm, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23770, 2010 WL 934252, at 7 (California); *Excel Homes of Minnesota, Inc. v. Ivy Ridge Home Builders, Inc., No. C2-00-1686, 2001 Minn. App. LEXIS 532, 2001 WL 506782, at *3 (Minn. As Plaintiffs note, two courts upheld unjust enrichment claims in this case pre-consolidation on the basis that those claims were pleaded in the alternative. *See Wilder, 2009 U.S. Dist. Lexis 124242, at 15 ("It would be inappropriate to dismiss Plaintiff's claim before the Court has held that an express, enforceable contract governed the subject matter for which Plaintiff seeks restitution."); *Yakas v. Chase Manhattan Bank, U.S.A., N.A., No C 09-02964 WHA, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5359, 2010 WL 367475, at 7 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 25, 2010) ("At this point, the Court is unwilling to categorically exclude the possibility that unjust enrichment will turn out to be an appropriate remedy.").

The court agrees that the existence of an express contract potentially covering these claims is not fatal at this stage and declines to dismiss Plaintiffs' unjust enrichment claims on this basis.

B. Retention of Benefits

Defendant argues that any unjust enrichment claim should also fail because Plaintiffs do not allege Defendant wrongfully retained any actual benefit, an element of such a claim in California, Minnesota, Texas, and Delaware. The four states differ in minor ways in how [*885] they define unjust enrichment: HN12[] A restitution claim in California requires "receipt of benefit and unjust [60] retention of that benefit at the expense of others." *Malcolm, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23770, 2010 WL 934252, at 7 (quoting Lectrodryer v. SeoulBank, 77 Cal. App. 4th 723, 726, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 881, 883 (Cal. App. 2000)). In Minnesota, an unjust enrichment claim requires a showing that "(1) a benefit [was] conferred by the plaintiff on the defendant; (2) the defendant accept[ed] the benefit; (3) the defendant retain[ed] the benefit although retaining it without payment is inequitable." Zinter v. University of Minnesota, No. A10-2041, ___ N.W. 2d ___, 2011 Minn. App. LEXIS 64, 2011 WL 2175872 (Minn. App. June 6, 2011). Texas allows recovery on an unjust enrichment theory "when one person has obtained a benefit from another by fraud, duress, or the taking of an undue advantage." *Christus Health v. Quality Infusion Care, Inc., No. 01-09-00591-CV, ___ S.W.3d ___, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4578, 2011 WL 2432117, at 3 (Tex. App. June 16, 2011) (quoting Heldenfels Bros., Inc. v. Corpus Christi, 832 S.W.2d 39, 41 (Tex. 1992)). Delaware law requires a showing of "(1) an enrichment; (2) an impoverishment; (3) a relation between the enrichment and the impoverishment; (4) the absence of justification; and (5) the absence of a remedy at law." *Ocwen Loan Servicing, LLC v. SFJV-2002-1, LLC, C.A. No. N10C-09-071 CLS, 2011 Del. Super. LEXIS 235, 2011 WL 2175995, at 2 (Del. Super. May 25, 2011) [61] (citation and quotation omitted). Although the definitions thus differ slightly, all essentially require the inequitable or unjustified retention of a benefit or enrichment at the plaintiff's expense.

Defendant argues that the retention of a "benefit" in the form of the up-to-date appraisal cannot be characterized as unjust because TILA and Regulation Z allow Defendant to charge up front for such appraisals. (Def.'s Br. at 30.) Defendant cites no authority for this proposition, but there is support for it. The Hickman court noted that "neither the statute, regulations nor Official Commentary contain any provisions prohibiting [creditors] from shifting the burden of obtaining and paying upfront for a property appraisal to borrowers." Hickman, 683 F. Supp. 2d at 789.

[15] *See Zupancich v. U.S. Steel Corp., No. 08-5847 ADM/RLE, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44504, 2009 WL 1474772, at 3 (D. Minn. May 27, 2009) ("In Minnesota, [59] the existence of an express contract between the parties . . . precludes recovery under the theories of unjust enrichment and quantum meruit."); Kuroda v. SPJS Holdings, L.L.C., 971 A.2d 872, 891 (Del. Ch. 2009) ("A claim for unjust enrichment is not available if there is a contract that governs the relationship between parties that gives rise to the unjust enrichment claim."); Fortune Production Co. v. Conoco, Inc., 52 S.W.3d 671, 684 (Tex. 2000) ("Generally speaking, when a valid, express contract covers the subject matter of the parties' dispute, there can be no recovery under a quasi-contract theory.").

The Raeth court agreed, explaining that neither TILA, Regulation Z, or the Commentary "require a creditor to incur appraisal fees." Raeth, 755 F. Supp. 2d at 905. The Raeth court noted that the relevant provision explains that > HN13[] a creditor may collect only bona fide and reasonable appraisal and credit report fees if such fees are actually incurred [62] in investigating whether the condition permitting the freeze continues to exist. A creditor may not, in any circumstances, impose a fee to reinstate a credit line once the condition has been determined not to exist.

12 C.F.R. Pt. 226, Supp. 1, 5b(f)(3)(vi)-3. In addition, while the creditor is allowed to shift the burden to request reinstatement to the borrower, as it has done here, "[o]nce the consumer requests reinstatement, the creditor must promptly investigate to determine whether the condition allowing the freeze continues to exist." 12 C.F.R. Pt. 226, Supp. 1, 5(b)(f)(3)(vi)-4. Together, these provisions do suggest, as the Raeth and Hickman courts concluded, that the creditor may shift the burden of incurring an appraisal fee to the consumer. [16]

Such a shift, however, is premised on the assumption that a "condition allowing the freeze" existed in the first place. The allegation Plaintiffs make here is that no such condition ever existed, and [63] that they were forced to incur fees [17] in order to [*886] rebut Defendant's claim of a significant decline in their property values—a decline that was solely a function of faulty valuation models. Whether this is the case has not yet been determined, but the allegation precludes a determination that no unjust benefit had been conferred upon Defendant. The court agrees with Defendant, however, that this claim is not available to any Plaintiff who did not pay for an appraisal based on a HELOC suspension or reduction, or to any Plaintiff who received a timely refund of his appraisal fee. One of the pre-consolidation courts reached this conclusion as well. *See Malcolm, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23770, 2010 WL 934252, at 7 (dismissing certain unjust enrichment claims but concluding that the claim survived "as to the appraisal, [because] Defendant did receive and retain that benefit at Plaintiff's expense").

Plaintiffs also allege that Defendant wrongfully retained the funds it should have made available to Plaintiffs, enabling it to lend those funds to other customers at higher interest rates and to maintain necessary reserves. Defendant argues that this claim fails for lack of a specific allegation as to what benefit was wrongfully retained. (Def.'s Br. at 31.) In other words, "Plaintiffs make no specific allegations of what actual monetary benefits Chase allegedly wrongfully retained." (Reply at 18.) Plaintiffs contend that "the existence, nature and type of benefit retained by [Defendant] will be confirmed through discovery." (Response at 37.) The court shares Defendant's concern that Plaintiffs' claims are sketchy at this point, but notes that Plaintiffs have plausibly alleged that they have lost the time value of the money they would have had access to, were it not for the allegedly improper suspensions or reductions. As one pre-consolidation court explained, "Chase had the benefit [65] of the use of the money that would otherwise be lent to Plaintiff between when the loan was frozen and when the loan was restored, and that benefit would have otherwise belonged to Plaintiff." *Wilder, 2009 U.S. Dist. Lexis 124242, at 7. Defendant's motion to dismiss this claim is denied.

Finally, Defendant argues that Plaintiffs state no unjust enrichment claim stemming from collection of annual fees after the suspension of HELOCs because Plaintiffs have not pleaded that they were indeed charged an annual fee after the HELOC suspension. (Def.'s Br. at 31.) As discussed previously, infra III.B.v., no Plaintiff has alleged that he or she was charged an annual fee after the suspension of a HELOC. The question of whether an annual fee was unjustly retained, however, is a different question. If Plaintiffs succeed in showing that the HELOCs themselves were improperly suspended or reduced, Plaintiffs may have paid an annual fee in exchange for a HELOC whose benefit of the bargain they did not actually receive. Plaintiffs have not addressed such a theory in their response brief, however. See Bonte v. U.S. Bank, N.A., 624 F.3d 461, 466 (7th Cir. 2010) ("Failure to respond to an argument . . [66] . results in waiver."); County of McHenry v. Ins. Co. of the West, 438 F.3d 813, 818 (7th Cir. 2006) ("When presented with a motion to dismiss, the non-moving party must proffer some legal basis to support his cause of action.") (citation and quotation omitted).

[16] The court finds no provision in the HELOC agreements that explicitly addresses the reinstatement process or identifies which party is responsible to pay the costs of such a reinstatement, nor have the parties identified such a provision.

[17] Plaintiffs' complaint does not include detailed information concerning which Plaintiffs paid for appraisals, how much they paid, who they paid for the appraisals, whether they received refunds, or the amount of any refunds received. The complaint does allege that Cavanagh paid for an appraisal but did not receive full reimbursement [64] (Compl. ¶ 39); that Hackett paid $385 for an appraisal (id. ¶¶ 55, 64); that Malcolm paid $385 for an appraisal, which was not reimbursed (id. ¶ 69); and that Wilder paid for an appraisal. (Id. ¶ 101.)

The court concludes Plaintiffs have adequately pleaded that Defendant was unjustly [*887] enriched by unjustifiably requiring appraisals at Plaintiffs' expense and by improper retention of credit to which Plaintiffs are entitled. Plaintiffs' unjust enrichment claims are otherwise dismissed.

VI. Consumer Protection Claims

Plaintiffs allege that Defendant violated California, Illinois, and Minnesota consumer protection laws through fraudulent activity designed to discourage borrowers from challenging their suspensions, and through unfair or unlawful conduct that resulted in improper suspensions or reductions of their HELOCs. Defendant seeks dismissal of these claims on the ground that they do not meet the heightened pleading standard imposed by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b) for claims involving fraudulent conduct. (Def.'s Br. at 31-32.) The unfair or unlawful conduct claims fail, Defendant argues, for the same reasons that the breach [67] of contract claim should be dismissed. (Id. at 33-34.) The court concludes that Plaintiffs' fraud claims should be dismissed for failure to plead actual reliance, but that the unfair or unlawful conduct claims survive.

A. Fraud Claims

In support of their fraud claims, Plaintiffs allege that Defendant "made a false statement of material fact" [18] in the HELOC suspension and revocation notices it sent out by asserting that properties securing the HELOCs had suffered significant declines in value when, in fact, no significant declines had occurred. (Compl. ¶ 197.) Defendant made these false statements, Plaintiffs allege, in order to trigger its right to suspend or reduce HELOCs. (Id. ¶ 198.) Those statements "were likely to deceive reasonable HELOC borrowers into believing that their home values did in fact decline significantly and that their HELOC suspensions or reductions were proper, and were further likely to prevent or limit appeals of [Defendant's] HELOC[] suspensions and reductions." (Id.) Planitiffs also allege Defendant made false statements related to Plaintiffs' appeals of their HELOC suspensions and revocations. (Id. ¶ 199.) Plaintiffs allege that Defendant made these statements [68] intending that customers, including Plaintiffs, rely on them and believe "there was nothing that could be done to have the account reinstated." (Id. ¶ 201.)

Defendant argues that Plaintiffs have not adequately alleged that they relied on the alleged fraud, were deceived by the alleged fraud, or incurred damages based on the allegedly deceptive conduct as required to state a fraud claim. (Def.'s Br. at 32.) The court first examines the state laws upon which Plaintiffs brings their claims, to determine whether some allegation of actual reliance is required.

i. [69] California

[18] Although the Complaint uses slightly different terminology, in the court's view, and for purposes of this motion, a "false statement of material fact" of the type alleged by Plaintiffs is essentially the same allegation as the "fraudulent business act" required to state a UCL claim under California law, Cal. Bus & Prof. Code § 17200, a "deceptive act or practice" of the type required by Illinois law, Oliveira v. Amoco Oil Co., 201 Ill.2d 134, 149, 776 N.E.2d 151, 160, 267 Ill. Dec. 14 (2002), and a "fraud, false pretense, false promise, misrepresentation, misleading statement or deceptive practice," as required by Minnesota law, Minn. Stat. § 325F.69.

Planitiffs Frank, Walsh, and Malcolm [19] allege fraud based on HN14[] California's unfair competition law ("UCL"), which prohibits "any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent [*888] business act." Cal. Bus & Prof. Code § 17200. Under California law, such a claim may be brought "by a person who has suffered injury in fact and has lost money or property as a result of the unfair competition." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17204. In other words, the law allows prosecution by a private plaintiff, although the remedies available under those circumstances are "generally limited to injunctive relief and restitution." Clark v. Superior Court, 50 Cal.4th 605, 610, 112 Cal. Rptr. 3d 876, 235 P.3d 171, 174 (2010) (citation and quotation omitted). The term "fraudulent business act" is not further defined in the statute, but the statute has the broad purpose of "protect[ing] both consumers and competitors by promoting fair competition in commercial markets for goods and services." Kasky v. Nike, Inc., 27 Cal.4th 939, 949, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 296, 45 P.3d 243, 249 (2002).

Defendant [70] here focuses not on whether its conduct fits within that term but instead whether Plaintiffs have adequately pleaded reliance on that conduct. Defendant cites In re Tobacco II Cases, 46 Cal.4th 298, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 559, 207 P.3d 20 (2009), for the proposition that California law requires a plaintiff to show actual reliance on an alleged misrepresentation in order to succeed on a UCL fraud claim. (Def.'s Br. at 32.) Tobacco II was brought by plaintiffs who alleged that "tobacco industry defendants violated the UCL by conducting a decades-long campaign of deceptive advertising and misleading statements about the addictive nature of nicotine and the relationship between tobacco use and disease." 46 Cal.4th at 306, 207 P.3d at 25. The court in that case did require plaintiffs to plead actual reliance on the tobacco industry advertisement. The court also explained, however, that "while a plaintiff must allege that the defendant's misrepresentations were an immediate cause of the injury-causing conduct, the plaintiff is not required to allege that those misrepresentations were the sole or even the decisive cause of the injury-producing conduct." Id. at 328, 207 P.3d at 40.

Plaintiffs argue that their allegations [71] are sufficient under this standard. They rely on Aron v. U-Haul Co. of California, 143 Cal. App. 4th 796, 49 Cal. Rptr. 3d 555 (Cal. App. 2006), which explained that a plaintiff alleging a fraudulent business practice must show only that the representations at issue "would be misleading to a reasonable consumer." Id. at 807, 49 Cal. Rptr. 3d at 563. In that case, the plaintiff alleged that U-Haul labeled a fee charged for returned trucks a "fueling fee" despite the fact that "fuel is not in fact replaced and this fact is not disclosed to the consumer." Id. at 806, 49 Cal. Rptr. 3d at 562. These allegations were adequate, the court concluded, because "there is no connection between the imposition of a fee or cost and whether the customer has in fact refueled the vehicle." Id. at 807, 49 Cal. Rptr. 3d at 563. Defendant argues that Aron is no longer good law because of the standing requirement imposed by Proposition 64, effective January 1, 2009, which requires that such a claim may be prosecuted only by "a person who has suffered injury in fact and has lost money or property as a result of the unfair competition." Cal. Bus. Code & Prof. Code § 17204 (emphasis added). Tobacco II cited [72] this change in the law in holding that plaintiffs were required to plead actual reliance in addition to loss when pursuing a UCL fraud claim of the type alleged here. Id. at 328, 207 P.3d at 40.

ii. Illinois

HN15[] The Illinois Supreme Court has explained its interpretation of the state's Consumer Fraud Act as requiring that litigant plead "(1) a deceptive act or practice by the defendant, (2) the defendant's [*889] intent that the plaintiff rely on the deception, (3) the occurrence of the deception in the course of conduct involving trade or commerce, and (4) actual damage to the plaintiff (5) proximately caused by the deception." Oliveira, 201 Ill.2d at 149, 776 N.E.2d at 160 (interpreting 815 ILCS 505/2 and 815 ILCS 505/10a(a)). The Illinois Supreme Court has explained that "a plaintiff must prove that he or she was actually deceived by the misrepresentation in order to establish the element of proximate causation." Avery v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 216 Ill.2d 100, 199, 835 N.E.2d 801, 861, 296 Ill. Dec. 448 (2005). Plaintiffs argue that this standard does not require "actual reliance," but in the court's view the requirement that a plaintiff be "actually deceived by the misrepresentation" is indistinguishable [73] from a requirement that plaintiff "actually rely" on the misrepresentation.

[19] The court notes that Plaintiffs have withdrawn claims pursuant to the California UCL on behalf of Wilder because neither he nor Defendant are California residents. (Response at 38 n. 18.)

iii. Minnesota

HN16[] Minnesota law provides that "[t]he act, use, or employment by any person of any fraud, false pretense, false promise, misrepresentation, misleading statement or deceptive practice, with the intent that others rely thereon in connection with the sale of any merchandise [20], whether or not any person has in fact been misled, deceived, or damaged thereby, is enjoinable . . . ." Minn. Stat. § 325F.69. The statute does not require actual reliance if a plaintiff seeks an injunction, but Minnesota courts have required proof of actual reliance on the defendant's fraudulent conduct to support an award of damages. Thompson v. American Tobacco Co., 189 F.R.D. 544, 553 (D. Minn. 1999) (rejecting class certification for cigarette smokers seeking relief in the form of the establishment of a "cessation program" because the court concluded it was "nothing more than a disguised attempt for compensatory damages" and would therefore "requir[e] proof of individual reliance," which would preclude class certification). Plaintiffs suggest that there is an exception to the requirement of a showing of individualized reliance [74] "where the plaintiffs' damages are alleged to be caused by a lengthy course of prohibited conduct that affected a large number of consumers." (Response at 46 (quoting Group Health Plan v. Philip Morris Inc., 621 N.W.2d 2, 13 (Minn. 2001)). But the Group Health court did conclude that plaintiffs must prove causation: although "direct evidence of reliance by individual consumers" is not necessary, plaintiffs are required to "demonstrate that defendants' conduct had some impact on their members' use of tobacco products that caused their damages." Id. at 13-14. The court concludes that Minnesota law employs a flexible standard for proof of reliance and does not require a showing for each individual class member, but does require plaintiffs to prove they relied on defendant's alleged false statements.

Plaintiffs here have not pleaded that Defendant's statements actually did influence their decisions to pursue or not pursue HELOC appeals, or that they actually relied on the allegedly fraudulent statements made by Defendant. As such an allegation is necessary under the Illinois, Minnesota, [75] and California consumer protection laws, Plaintiffs' fraud claims based on those laws are dismissed without prejudice.

B. Unfair Conduct Claims

Plaintiff also brings claims for "unfair" or "unlawful" conduct based on the unfair competition laws ("UCL") of Illinois and California, which, as explained here, differ [*890] from UCL claims for fraudulent conduct. Plaintiffs allege that Defendant engaged in unfair business practices through the use of "inaccurate and unsubstantiated" and "faulty and unreliable" AVMs, "in order to undervalue the property values of its customers and provide a false and improper basis for reducing credit limits." (Compl. ¶¶ 186, 187.) Thus, Plaintiffs allege, "Chase deprived borrowers of critical information needed to determine whether to seek credit line reinstatement" including the value of the property at HELOC origination and the value needed for reinstatement. (Id. ¶ 189.) Further, Defendant "pretextually suspended and reduced credit lines based on flawed and inaccurate AVMs and without properly considering the level of available equity in the properties and then took steps to discourage borrowers from appealing the suspensions." (Id.) Plaintiffs also allege that [76] the $30 fee for faxing a two-page notice containing information it alleges Defendant was already obligated to provide was "outrageous and oppressive." (Id. ¶ 188.)

i. California

Plaintiffs Frank, Walsh, and Malcolm have invoked the California unfair competition law's prohibition of unfair or unlawful conduct. Cal. Bus & Prof. Code § 17200. These terms, like the "fraudulent business act" term discussed earlier, are not defined by the statute, "and courts have struggled to come up with a workable definition." Davis v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 179 Cal. App. 4th 581, 593-94, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 697, 706 (Cal. App. 2009) (citation and quotation omitted). HN17[] The California courts currently employ two separate definitions of "unfair." The first asks the court to "weigh the utility of the defendant's conduct against the gravity of the harm to the alleged victim." Davis, 179 Cal. App. 4th at 594, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d at 707 (citation and quotation omitted). The second treats conduct as unfair if it "threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws," but that definition has not been held applicable in consumer claims such as this one. Id. at 594, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d at 707. [77] As for the "unlawful" prong of the law, Section 17200 has been interpreted to render "violations of federal, state or local law. . . unlawful practices which are independently actionable." Countrywide Financial Corp. v. Bundy, 187 Cal. App. 4th 234, 256, 113 Cal. Rptr. 3d 705, 721 (Cal. App. 2010).

Plaintiffs' unfair or unlawful conduct claims should be dismissed, Defendant urges, because under California law, if the conduct at issue does not violate TILA, it does not constitute "unlawful" conduct for purposes of the state consumer protection laws. (Def.'s Br. at 34.) This argument is answered by the court's earlier conclusion that Plaintiffs have adequately stated a claim under the Truth in Lending Act. Such allegations were held sufficient to state a violation of the UCL in two pre-consolidation cases. See *Walsh v. Washington Mutual Bank, CV 09-4387 RGK (Anx), 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 143385, at 13 (C.D. Cal. March 5, 2010) (Ex. A to Response) ("By sufficiently alleging that Defendant's reduction of the HELOC violated TILA, Plaintiff adequately pleads an unlawful business practice under the UCL."); *Kimball v. Washington Mutual Bank, No. 09-cv-1261 MMA (AJB), 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 109387, at 30 (S.D. Cal. April 15, 2010) (Ex. [78] C to Response) ("Because the Court has already declined to dismiss [TILA] claims, the Court finds that Plaintiff has stated a claim for relief under the 'unfair' and 'unlawful' prongs of California's UCL."). Here, similarly, Plaintiffs' claims based on the "unlawful" prong of the California UCL succeed because they have pleaded a violation of TILA and Regulation Z. (Response at 39.)

Defendant also argues that Plaintiffs' claims based on the "unfair" [*891] prong of the UCL fail because Defendant complied with TILA and Regulation Z. (Def.'s Br. at 34.) Again , however, the court's conclusion that Plaintiffs have adequately pleaded a violation defeats this defense. HN18[] In California, a "business practice is unfair within the meaning of the UCL if it . . . is . . . unscrupulous and causes injury to consumers which outweighs the benefits." McKell v. Washington Mutual Inc., 142 Cal. App. 4th 1457, 1473, 49 Cal. Rptr. 3d 227, 240 (Cal. App. 2006). The determination of whether a business practice is unfair is usually a question of fact and inappropriate for a motion to dismiss. Id. Defendant's motion to dismiss this claim is denied.

ii. Illinois

HN19[] In Illinois, the question of whether a business practice [79] is unfair within the meaning of the Illinois Consumer Fraud Act depends on "(1) whether the practice offends public policy; (2) whether it is immoral, unethical, oppressive, or unscrupulous; [or] (3) whether it causes substantial injury to consumers." Hickman, 683 F. Supp. 2d at 795 (citing Windy City Metal Fabricators & Supply, Inc. v. CIT Technology Financing Services, Inc., 536 F.3d 663, 669 (7th Cir. 2008)). Illinois law also explains, however, that the consumer fraud law does not require lenders to make "more extensive disclosure[s]" than are required by TILA. Lanier v. Associates Finance, Inc., 114 Ill.2d 1, 17, 499 N.E.2d 440, 447, 101 Ill. Dec. 852 (1986). In Hickman, the court concluded that plaintiff did state an ICFA claim "by alleging that Defendant's conduct in reducing borrower's HELOC limits without a sufficient factual basis and using faulty and inaccurate AVMs was 'unfair, immoral, and unscrupulous.'" Hickman, 683 F. Supp. 2d at 795. The court determined that plaintiff nevertheless did not state a claim that defendant had deprived borrowers of information needed to seek credit reinstatement because compliance with TILA is a defense under the ICFA, and "the allegations in Plaintiff's [80] Complaint establish that Defendant complied with the relevant notice and reinstatement provisions established by TILA, Regulation Z, and the Official Commentary." Id. at 796. See also Swanson v. Bank of America, N.A., 566 F. Supp. 2d 821, 828 (N.D. Ill. 2008) (ICFA does not prohibit conduct "specifically authorized by laws administered by any regulatory body . . . [or] conduct in compliance with the orders or rules of or a statute administered by a Federal, state or local governmental agency.") (quoting 815 ILCS 510/4(1), 815 ILCS 505/10b(1)).

Plaintiffs' allegations state a claim that Defendant engaged in actions that violate the ICFA through its use of inaccurate AVMs to reduce or suspend HELOCs. Though Defendant's alleged failure to consider available equity may not by itself violate the ICFA, that failure is a factor to be considered in evaluating Defendant's other alleged wrongdoing. And the allegation that Defendant required Plaintiffs to pay for information it was obligated to provide is sufficient to state a claim based on oppressive conduct in violation of the ICFA. The ICFA claim survives this motion.

iii. Minnesota Deceptive Practices

Plaintiff Cavanagh also pleads a violation [81] of HN20[] the Minnesota Uniform Deceptive Practices Act, Minn. Stat. § 325D.44, subdivision 1, which prohibits a person from representing "that goods or services have . . . characteristics . . . they do not have" or otherwise creating a "likelihood of confusion or misunderstanding." Claims brought pursuant to this act are "based on conduct by the defendant and do not require reliance by the plaintiff." *Ford Motor Credit Co. v. Majors, No. A04-1468, 2005 Minn. App. LEXIS 448, 2005 WL 1021551, at 3 (Minn. App. May 3, [*892] 2005). The Minnesota statutes affords injunctive relief as well as costs and attorneys fees, in addition to relief available under other state statutes or common law. Minn. Stat. § 325D.45.

Defendant argues that Plaintiffs do not meet the requirement of Rule 8 or Rule 9(b) for this claim because they have offered merely a "formulaic recitation" of the cause of action. (Def.'s Br. at 33.) Plaintiffs allege that Defendant represented that Cavanaugh would receive a line of credit that would not be revoked or suspended absent a significant decline in the value of his home, but that in reality he received a HELOC with no such protections, and one in which the decision to reduce or suspend the HELOC did not depend [82] on any actual change in the value of his property. These allegations are sufficient, in the court's view, to state a claim under Minnesota's law. The motion to dismiss this claim is denied.

CONCLUSION

Defendant's motion to dismiss [49] is granted in part and denied in part. The court dismisses Plaintiffs' breach of contract claim to the extent it relies on Defendant's charging an annual fee after HELOC suspension. Plaintiffs' fraud claims, brought under the California, Illinois, and Minnesota consumer protections laws, are also dismissed, as is Plaintiffs' claim for unjust enrichment based on the collection of annual fees. The motion is otherwise denied.

OPINION AND ORDER GRANTING MOTION TO REMAND

THIS MATTER comes before the Court on Plaintiff Colorado Civil Rights Commission's ("CCRC") Motion to Remand (#6), the Defendants' (collectively "Wells Fargo") Response (#9), and CCRC's Reply (#11). Having considered the same, the Court FINDS and CONCLUDES as follows.

I. Jurisdiction

This case was removed from the District Court of the State of Colorado in Jefferson County to this Court by Wells Fargo based on diversity jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1332(a). CCRC's Motion to Remand argues that diversity jurisdiction does not exist. Therefore, the Court exercises its inherent authority to determine its own jurisdiction. See United States v. Ruiz, 536 U.S. 622, 628, 122 S. Ct. 2450, 153 L. Ed. 2d 586 (2002).

II. Issue Presented

The [*2] ultimate issue presented is whether the Court has subject matter jurisdiction over this action based on diversity of citizenship under 28 U.S.C. § 1332(a). In the Motion to Remand, CCRC contends that jurisdiction is lacking because the parties are not completely diverse. [1] CCRC contends that it acts as an arm of the State of Colorado which has no citizenship for federal diversity purposes. Wells Fargo responds that although this action is brought by CCRC rather than a particular individual, the claims are brought on behalf of an individual citizen of the state, notably Juliet A. Moores, who is a citizen of Colorado. This distinction, Wells Fargo contends, allows the Court to find diversity of citizenship. [2]

Thus, to determine whether diversity jurisdiction exists, the Court must first determine whether CCRC asserts claims for the State of Colorado in a parens patriae capacity.

III. Facts

According to the Complaint (#1-1), Ms. Moores sought to refinance her mortgage loan on a residential property at 23499 Otowi Road, Indian Hills, Colorado. Although she was married, Ms. Moores sought to refinance the loan in her name without the involvement of her husband. She applied to Wells Fargo, which required Ms. Moores's husband to participate in and sign documents as a non-borrowing spouse. Although this was not acceptable to Ms. Moores, she did not withdraw her application, understanding that if she moved forward with the loan and complied with Wells Fargo's requirements, the interest rate was "locked in." Wells Fargo, however, mistakenly cancelled Ms. Moores's application. By the time it was reinstated, [*4] Ms. Moore's credit score had fallen four points and, as a result, Wells Fargo denied her loan application.

Ms. Moores submitted a complaint to the CCRC in which she alleged that Wells Fargo had unlawfully discriminated against her based on her marital status. [3] The CCRC found probable cause to believe that Wells Fargo had acted unlawfully, and as required by Colo. Rev. Stat. § 24-34-504(4.1), formally notified Wells Fargo of Ms. Moores's complaint and its determination. Wells Fargo elected to have the claims resolved in a civil action rather than at an administrative hearing.

Pursuant to its statutory authority, see Colo. Rev. Stat. § 24-34-505.5, CCRC commenced this action in the Colorado District Court for Jefferson County. CCRC brought three claims asserting unlawful discrimination based on marital status in violation of Colorado's Fair Housing laws, Colo. Rev. Stat. § 24-34-502. [4] It requested numerous remedies without differentiation among the claims. The requested remedies can be categorized in four groups. The first [*5] group is comprised of forms of injunctive relief to address Wells Fargo's lending practices: (1) an order of the Court directing Wells Fargo to cease and desist in practices that discriminate based on marital

[1] The parties do not dispute that Wells Fargo has adequately demonstrated that the amount in controversy exceeds $75,000.

[2] Notably, this is a different argument than that presented in the Notice of Removal (#1). In that filing, Wells Fargo argued that the citizenship of the Plaintiff was Colorado based solely on CCRC's status as an agency the State of Colorado. See Sturdevant v. Paulsen, 218 F.3d 1160, 1164 (10th Cir. 2000) (citing Mt. Healthy City Sch. Dist. Bd. Of Educ. V. Doyle, 429 U.S. 274, 280, 97 S. Ct. 568, 50 L. Ed. 2d 471 (1977)) [*3] (addressing the arm-of-the-state analysis). Regardless of the theory on which Wells Fargo proceeds, however, it retains the burden of demonstrating facts sufficient to support subject matter jurisdiction in this Court. See Martin v. Franklin Capital Corp., 251 F.3d 1284, 1289-90 (10th Cir. 2001).

[3] Discrimination in housing practices, including the provision of financing, based on marital status is unlawful under Colorado law. See Colo. Rev. Stat. § 24-34-502.

[4] Claim One asserts unlawful discrimination in the terms, conditions, privileges/facilities, and services for Wells Fargo's alleged use of different qualification criteria for Ms. Moores and refusal to negotiate with her regarding [*6] the terms of the refinance loan. Claim Two asserts unlawful discrimination in the provision of housing based on Wells Fargo's requirement that Ms. Moores' husband sign the loan documents as a non-borrowing spouse. Claim Three asserts unlawful discrimination in a residential real estate transaction by subjecting Ms. Moores to stricter borrowing standards due to her marital status and requiring her non-borrowing spouse to sign the mortgage loan documents.

status; (2) a permanent injunction prohibiting future discrimination by Wells Fargo based on marital status; and (3) a mandatory injunction directing Wells Fargo to implement unspecified affirmative actions to ensure the future, non-discriminatory provision of housing services to Ms. Moores and others similarly situated. The second form of relief is a request for imposition of civil penalties against Wells Fargo as provided by Colo. Rev. Stat. § 24-34-508(1)(f). The third type of relief requested is specific to Ms. Moores: (1) an award of damages for economic loss, emotional and mental distress; and (2) the costs and fees associated with her securing alternative financing. The fourth type of relief is for costs and attorney fees associated with this action.

IV. Standard of Review

Generally, the party invoking federal jurisdiction bears the burden of establishing subject matter jurisdiction. See Martin, 251 F.3d at 1289-90. When a case has been removed from state court, the defendant who removes the action bears the burden of establishing that removal is proper. See McNutt v. Gen. Motors Acceptance Corp., 298 U.S. 178, 189, 56 S. Ct. 780, 80 L. Ed. 1135 (1936). Removal statutes are to be strictly construed and all doubts are resolved against removal. See Fajen v. Found. Reserve Ins. Co., 683 F.2d 331, 333 (10th Cir. 1982).

Removal of a case to federal court is only appropriate if the case could have been initiated in federal court in the first instance. 28 U.S.C. § 1441(a). In this case, removal is premised on diversity [*7] jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1332(a). Diversity jurisdiction exists when the case involves a dispute "between . . . citizens of different states" and the amount in controversy exceeds $75,000. 28 U.S.C. § 1332(a)(1). To meet the diversity requirement, there must be complete diversity between all plaintiffs and all defendants. Put another way, no defendant can be a citizen from the same state as any plaintiff. Lincoln Prop. Co. v. Roche, 546 U.S. 81, 89, 126 S. Ct. 606, 163 L. Ed. 2d 415 (2005). For purposes of diversity jurisdiction, states are not considered to be citizens of any state. See Moor v. County of Alameda, 411 U.S. 693, 717, 93 S. Ct. 1785, 36 L. Ed. 2d 596 (1973).

To determine citizenship, a court looks beyond the parties named in the Complaint, instead determining who are the real parties in interest to the controversy. See Navarro Sav. Ass'n v. Lee, 446 U.S. 458, 461, 100 S. Ct. 1779, 64 L. Ed. 2d 425 (1980). Generally, the term "real party in interest" pertains to the person or entity who has a substantial and substantive legal interest in the case. See, e.g., United States ex rel. Eisenstein v. City of New York, 556 U.S. 928, 129 S. Ct. 2230, 2235, 173 L. Ed. 2d 1255 (2009); Illinois v. SDS West Corp., 640 F.Supp.2d 1047, 1050 (C.D. Ill. 2009); Black's Law Dictionary, 9th ed. 2009 (defining real [*8] party in interest as "[a] person entitled under the substantive law to enforce the right sued upon and who generally, but not necessarily, benefits from the action's final outcome).

V. Analysis

Wells Fargo contends that the real party in interest in this action is Ms. Moores, who is a citizen of Colorado. CCRC admits that although Ms. Moores may benefit from the action, the real party in interest is the State of Colorado which seeks to exercises its quasi-sovereign interest on behalf of all citizens of Colorado.

At this juncture, it is not necessary to determine whether Ms. Moores is a real party in interest or would merely benefit by CCRC's success in this action. The primary question is whether the State of Colorado is a real party in interest exercising its quasi-sovereign interest in a parens patriae role. If so, this Court has no jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § §1332(a) and 1441(b). [5] [5] Federal jurisdiction in cases brought by a State against a citizen of another State is granted by 28 U.S.C. § 1251(b)(3) which establishes original but not exclusive jurisdiction over such actions by the United States Supreme Court.

The first issue is what approach should be used to determine whether [*9] the State of Colorado is the real party in interest and, if so, what interest it asserts. [6] There are two common approaches used to resolve this inquiry—th "claim-by-claim" approach and the "wholesale approach." The "claim-by-claim" approach is a bit of a misnomer because the approach actually focuses on the remedies requested, rather than the claims asserted. See, e.g., West Virginia v. Comcast Corp., 705 F.Supp.2d 441, 450-51 (E.D. Penn. 2010); Connecticut v. Levi Strauss & Co., 471 F.Supp. 363, 371 (D. Conn. 1979). The "wholesale approach" views the Complaint as a whole and determines whether, in its entirety, the Complaint seeks to protect a parens patriae interest.

Wells Fargo urges use of the "claim-by-claim" approach. It relies upon Comcast Corp., 705 F.Supp.2d at 450-51; Levi Strauss, 471 F.Supp. at 371; and Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., 405 U.S. 251, 262-64, 92 S. Ct. 885, 31 L. Ed. 2d 184 (1972), to demonstrate the approach's utility. Upon careful review of these cases, the Court finds the "wholesale approach" to be better suited to the inquiry in this case.

The most recent authority cited by Wells Fargo is West Virginia v. Comcast Corp., 705 F.Supp.2d 441, 450-51 (E.D. Penn. 2010). Comcast was an action brought pursuant to the Class Action Fairness Act of 2005 ("CAFA"), the jurisdiction for which is set out in 28 U.S.C. § 1332(d). This section creates a different test for diversity than that found in 28 U.S.C. 1332(a). The diversity test under CAFA is minimal diversity—only one member of the plaintiff class (either named or unnamed) must have diverse citizenship as compared to any one defendant. [7] As noted by the court in Comcast, the analytical framework chosen "has a powerful impact on the court's ultimate conclusion" as to whether a state is the real party in interest. [*11] The court in Comcast selected the "claim-by-claim" approach because the statutory objective of CAFA was to expand federal jurisdiction, the express language of CAFA required only a minimal showing of diversity, and because such analytical framework had been endorsed by the Fifth Circuit in a similar CAFA case, Louisiana ex rel. Caldwell v. Allstate Ins. Co., 536 F.3d 418, 430 (5th Cir 2008).

Without commenting on the wisdom of use the "claim-by-claim" approach in CAFA cases, this matter is distinguishable. The applicable jurisdictional statute here is 28 U.S.C. § 1332(a), which requires complete diversity and is strictly interpreted because the matter was removed. In addition, the remedies sought by CCRC are not correlated to discrete claims, thereby making a division based on remedies inappropriate. Indeed, the state statutes that give rise to the requested remedies provide for both compensatory damages to those particularly harmed and injunctive relief and penalties that arguably benefit other citizens in Colorado.

Wells Fargo also relies upon Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., 405 U.S. 251, 262-64, 92 S. Ct. 885, 31 L. Ed. 2d 184 (1972), which [*12] focused upon requested remedies in determining what relief the State of Hawaii could seek in a parens patriae capacity for violation of federal antitrust law. Interpreting federal law, the Court held that the State of Hawaii could not pursue a claim for treble damages.

This case is also distinguishable from the instant matter in several respects. First, the issue in Standard Oil Co. did not concern whether there was federal court diversity jurisdiction; jurisdiction existed under 28 U.S.C. § 1331. Second, the issue was limited to whether the State of Hawaii could assert a claim for treble damages pursuant to federal antitrust statutes. Third, the Court was not deciding whether the State of Hawaii was a real party in interest or the nature of the claims it brought; the Complaint clearly denominated the State of Hawaii as the plaintiff proceeding in parens patriae. Although the opinion elucidates the meaning of parens patriae actions by states and limits the ability of states to assert damage claims for violation of federal antitrust law, it is not instructive with regard to the methodology to be used to determine whether a state is a real party in interest asserting quasi-sovereign rights [*13] in a parens patriae capacity.

[6] States or state agencies generally participate as parties in lawsuits in four capacities: (i) to pursue the State's sovereign interests, which include the exercise of sovereign power (i.e., making and enforcing laws within the State) and interactions with other States; (ii) in support of a proprietary interest, in which the State is essentially acting as a private party; (iii) to pursue the interests of a particular private party, in which the State is merely a nominal party; and (iv) in its capacity of parens patriae, [*10] literally parent of the country. See Alfred L. Snapp & Son, Inc. v. Puerto Rico, 458 U.S. 592, 601-602, 102 S. Ct. 3260, 73 L. Ed. 2d 995 (1982).

Finally, Wells Fargo relies on Connecticut v. Levi Strauss & Co., 471 F.Supp. 363, 371 (D. Conn. 1979). Levi Strauss involved various claims by the State of Connecticut for violations of state law antitrust provisions. Similar to the case at hand in a procedural context, Connecticut sought remand to state court after the action it initiated was removed to federal court. Connecticut argued that there was no federal jurisdiction—neither federal question nor diversity jurisdiction. With regard to the diversity question, the Court evaluated each of the four types of monetary awards that Connecticut sought, characterizing each as an element of a "money claim." The Court determined that both elements of diversity jurisdiction—diversity and amount in controversy—were not simultaneously met for any single element. As to the requests to recover overcharges, to impose a civil penalty, and for attorney fees, the Court concluded that these were asserted by Connecticut in a parens patriae role. Therefore, Connecticut had no citizenship for purposes of diversity jurisdiction. As to the refund of overcharges, the Court concluded that while the real parties in interest [*14] were the consumers who had been overcharged, the amount in controversy was not met for any single consumer. Although this case utilized a "claim-by-claim" approach, it gave no justification for doing so, nor did it provide any reasoning for its decision to separate a single claim into "elements" determined by the type of monetary award sought.

These cases do not persuade this Court that a "claim-by-claim" analysis is useful here. In this case, all remedies sought are tied to all of the claims, the pertinent statutes upon which the claims are based expressly provide for all of the remedies requested, [8] and there is no stated justification such as in Comcast to depart from the "wholesale approach" used by the majority of courts. *See, e.g., Illinois v. AU Optronics Corp., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 61561, at 15-17 (N. D. Ill. Jun. 6, 2011) (unpublished); *Connecticut v. Moody's Corp., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 780, at 10 (D. Conn. Jan. 5, 2011) (unpublished); SDS West, 640 F.Supp.2d at 1052; Hood v. Microsoft Corp., 428 F.Supp.2d 537, 545 (S.D. Miss. 2006); Wisconsin v. Abbott Labs, 341 F.Supp.2d 1057, 1062 (W.D. Wis. 2004); Kansas ex rel. Stovall v. Home Cable, Inc., 35 F.Supp.2d 783, 785-86 (D. Colo. 1998).

Thus, viewing the Complaint as a whole, the Court must determine whether CCRC is acting for the State of Colorado in its parens patriae role and whether the claims asserted aim to protect the State's quasi-sovereign interests. There is no dispute that CCRC is an agency of the state of Colorado charged with enforcement of state laws including those that form the basis of the claims in this action. Thus, the only question is whether CCRC seeks to enforce state law in service of Colorado's interest as parens patriae to eradicate unlawful discriminatory practices against Colorado citizens.

The doctrine of parens patriae recognizes that a State may bring an action to protect its "quasi-sovereign interests." These are interests that do not arise from a State's granted powers or its interest in property, but instead are general interests in the well-being of its citizens. There is no categorical test for determining the scope of quasi-sovereign interests, but the Supreme Court has provided [*16] some guidance in Alfred Snapp & Son,Inc., v. Puerto Rico ex re. Barez, 458 U.S. 592, 607, 102 S. Ct. 3260, 73 L. Ed. 2d 995 (1982). Snapp teaches that to bring a parens patriae action, the State must articulate a concrete interest separate and apart from the interests of the particular private parties involved in the case. These interests can fall into either of two categories: (i) the health and well-being, both physical and economic, of its residents; and (ii) asserting its rights in the federal system.

The first category is the interest at issue in this case. For this interest, a state must allege more than an injury to an identifiable group of individual residents, instead it must identify an injury or issue that is relevant to the population at large. Although there is no tipping point in terms of percentage of the population affected, there must be some general interest for the populace. One clue as to whether there is a quasi-sovereign interest is whether the issue is one that a state would, if it could, attempt to remedy with its lawmaking powers. A court considers both the indirect effects of the alleged injury as well as the direct effects.

[8] See,e.g., [*15] Colo. Rev. Stat. § 24-34-508 (providing for actual damages, civil penalties, cease and desist orders, and affirmative action requiring compliance for violations of Colorado's Unfair Housing Practices laws).

When a state seeks only compensatory and/or punitive damages, courts [*17] have held that there is no quasi-sovereign interest. See, e.g., Hood v. F. Hoffman-La Roche, Ltd., 639 F. Supp. 2d 25, 33 (D. D.C. 2009); Levi-Strauss, 471 F.Supp. at 371. However, if the state requests relief in the form of injunctions or civil penalties, even in conjunction with compensatory damages, courts have held that a quasi-sovereign interest is at stake. See, e.g., SDS West Corp., 640 F. Supp.2d at 1052; Abbott Labs., 341 F. Supp. 2d at 1062-63; New York ex rel Abrams v. Gen. Motors Corp., 547 F. Supp. 703, 705-06 (S.D. N.Y. 1982).

This case presents the latter scenario. The Complaint asserts three violations of Colorado's Unfair Housing Practices laws, for which injunctive remedies, civil penalties and compensatory damages for Ms. Moores are sought. CCRC seeks prospective injunctive relief regarding Wells Fargo's practices as they may apply to future customers—that Wells Fargo be ordered to cease and desist in their practice of discriminating against persons because of marital status, that Wells Fargo be permanently enjoined from unlawfully discriminating on the basis of marital status, that Wells Fargo be ordered to take affirmative actions to ensure that there is no future [*18] unlawful discrimination. In addition, CCRC requests that Wells Fargo be required to pay civil penalties pursuant to Colorado statute. CCRC argues that these remedies will benefit the populace of Colorado as a whole by helping to eradicate discrimination on the basis of marital status. Because this action is brought to benefit the State's population as a whole and not simply Ms. Moores, a quasi-sovereign interest is at stake.

The Court therefore finds that the State of Colorado is a real party in interest and that it brings this action in its parens patriae role. Because Colorado is not a citizen of any state, Wells Fargo has not demonstrated the complete diversity required by 28 U.S.C. §1332(a) and § 1441(b). Lincoln Prop. Co., 546 U.S. at 89. [9]

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that

(1) [*19] Plaintiff Colorado Civil Rights Commission's ("CCRC") Motion to Remand (#6) is GRANTED.

(2) Pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1447(c), this case is REMANDED to the Colorado District Court for Jefferson County. The Clerk of the Court shall transmit the entire case file of this action to the Clerk for the District Court in Jefferson County.
(3) The Clerk of Court shall thereafter close this case.

[9] It is of no significance to this analysis that Ms. Moores may benefit from this action or might also be considered a real party in interest. The absence of citizenship status for Colorado precludes a finding of complete diversity among the parties. *See, e.g., Hood v. AstraZeneca Pharms. LP, 744 F.Supp.2d 590, 596 (N.D. HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

In reviewing a motion to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), a court must accept as true all factual allegations in the complaint and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff. To survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, a complaint must allege enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. Thus, a pleading that only offers labels and conclusions or a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do. If the plaintiff has not nudged his claims across the line from conceivable to plausible, his complaint must be dismissed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN3[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

To state a claim under N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349, a plaintiff must allege that (1) the act or practice was consumer-oriented; (2) the act or practice was misleading in a material respect; and (3) the plaintiff was injured as a result.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN4[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

As a threshold matter, a party must plead consumer-oriented conduct in order to claim the benefit of N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349. The consumer-oriented requirement may be satisfied by showing that the conduct at issue potentially affects similarly situated consumers. Although consumer-oriented conduct does not require a repetition or pattern of deceptive conduct, a plaintiff must demonstrate that the acts or practices have a broader impact on consumers at large. New York courts recognize that private contract disputes between the parties do not fall within the ambit of § 349.

Deceptive practices within the meaning of N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349 are acts which are dishonest or misleading in a material respect. HN7[] Theories of Liability, Breach of Warranty

N. Y. Gen Bus. Law § 369-b clearly states that a warranty may not be limited by a manufacturer doing business in the state solely for the reason that such merchandise is sold by a particular dealer or dealers, and that any attempt to limit the manufacturer's warranty or guarantee for the aforesaid reason is void.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN8[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

Federal antitrust law preempts Donnelly Act, N.Y. Gen. Bus, Law § 340. claims only where the conduct complained of principally affects interstate commerce, with little or no impact on local or intrastate commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN9[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

To plead an antitrust violation under the Donnelly Act, N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340, a plaintiff must demonstrate that defendants' conduct constituted anticompetitive activity either per se or under the rule of reason. Under a rule of reason analysis, the factfinder weighs all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition. The per se rule treats categories of restraints as necessarily illegal, thus eliminating the need to study the reasonableness of an individual restraint in light of the real market forces at work.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN10[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The rule of reason requires the factfinder to decide whether under all the circumstances of the case the restrictive practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition. To plead an antitrust violation under the rule of reason, a plaintiff must allege a relevant market, including both a product market and a geographic market. A plaintiff also bears the initial burden to show that the challenged behavior had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market. Because the antitrust laws protect competition as a whole, evidence that plaintiffs have been harmed as individual competitors will not suffice.

Torts > Products Liability > Theories of Liability > Breach of Warranty

HN11[] Theories of Liability, Breach of Warranty

Neither N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law §§ 369-a nor 369-b provides for a private right of action on their face. In the absence of a statutory private right of action. A court will only imply a private right of action where (1) a plaintiff is one of the class for whose particular benefit the statute was enacted; (2) recognition of a private right of action would promote the legislative purpose; and (3) the creation of such a right would be consistent with the legislative scheme.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

HN12[] Injunctions, Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

A plaintiff seeking a preliminary injunction must establish that he is likely to succeed on the merits, that he is likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief, that the balance of equities tips in his favor, and that an injunction is in the public interest. A preliminary injunction is an extraordinary remedy that should not be routinely granted. The party seeking the injunction carries the burden of persuasion to demonstrate, by a clear showing, that the necessary elements are satisfied.

RICHARD J. SULLIVAN, District Judge;

Plaintiff WorldHomeCenterxom, Inc. ("WorldHomeCenter") is an online retailer of home improvement products incorporated in New York. (Am. Compl, ¶¶ 4, 6.) Defendant PLC Lighting, Inc. ("PLC") is a manufacturer and seller of lighting fixtures and accessories incorporated in Delaware. (Id. ¶¶ 5, 7.) Plaintiff commenced this action by filing a Complaint in New York Supreme Court, New York County, on April 12, 2010, alleging violations of the New York Deceptive Trade Practices Act and Donnelly Act and seeking declaratory and injunctive relief. Specifically, Plaintiff challenges (1) Defendant's Unilateral Minimum Advertised Pricing ("UMAP") policy, whereby Defendant required Plaintiff to advertise PLC products at a mark-up of not less than 80% (id., Ex. A); and (2) Defendant's warranty disclaimer policy, whereby Defendant allegedly indicated to consumers that [2] it would not honor warranties on PLC products sold by Plaintiff (id. ¶ 23). Defendant removed the action to this Court on May 18, 2010 and moved to dismiss the Complaint on February 11, 2011. The motion was fully submitted as of March 25, 2011. Now before the Court is Defendant's motion to dismiss the Complaint pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. As stated on the record during the July 1, 2011 conference, that motion is granted in part and denied in part,

[*498] I. Legal Standard

HN1[] In reviewing a motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), the Court must accept as true all factual allegations in the complaint and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff. ATSI Commc'ns v. Shaar Fund, Ltd., 493 F.3d 87, 98 (2d Cir. 2007). To survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, a complaint must allege "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). Thus, a pleading that only offers "labels and conclusions" or "a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Id. If the plaintiff "ha[s] not nudged [his] claims across the line from conceivable to plausible, [3] [his] complaint must be dismissed." Id.

II. Deceptive Trade Practices (N.Y. GBL § 349)

Plaintiffs first cause of action alleges that Defendant's policies constitute unfair or deceptive trade practices in violation of New York General Business Law § 349. Section 349 prohibits HN2[] "[d]eceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any business, trade or commerce or in the furnishing of any service in this state." N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349(a). HN3[] To state a Section 349 claim, a plaintiff must allege that "(1) the act or practice was consumer-oriented; (2) the act or practice was misleading in a material respect; and (3) the plaintiff was injured as a result." Spagnola v. Chubb Corp., 574 F.3d 64, 74 (2d Cir. 2009). The parties dispute the first two elements of the Section 349 claim — whether the policies at issue are "consumer-oriented" and whether they are materially misleading.

The Amended Complaint alleges that both the UMAP policy and the warranty disclaimer policy constitute false and deceptive trade practices that "unfairly discourage and dissuade consumers from purchasing merchandise from Plaintiff," and "unlawfully penalize" Plaintiffs customers who purchase Defendant's products. (Am. Compl, [4] ¶ 38.) According to Plaintiff, "[i]t is inherently misleading for PLC to publish a warranty disclaimer policy and conceal the fact that the policy plainly contradicts New York State Law," because "[a] reasonable consumer would presume that the UMAP policies and warranty disclaimers are legitimate, and would avoid purchasing discounted products from Homecenter.com to the consumer's own detriment (Pl.'s Opp'n 9.)

A. "Consumer-Oriented" Conduct

HN4[] As a threshold matter, a party must plead "consumer-oriented" conduct in order to claim the benefit of Section 349. Oswego Laborers' Local 214 Pension Fund v. Marine Midland Bank N.A., 85 N.Y.2d 20, 25, 647 N.E.2d 741, 623 N.Y.S.2d 529 (1995). "The 'consumer-oriented' requirement may be satisfied by showing that the conduct at issue potentially affects similarly situated consumers." Wilson v. Northwestern Mutual Ins. Co., 625 F.3d 54, 64 (2d Cir. 2010). "Although consumer-oriented conduct does not require a repetition or pattern of deceptive conduct, a plaintiff must demonstrate that the acts or practices have a broader impact on consumers at large." Id. For that reason, New York courts have recognized that "private contract disputes" between the parties do not "fall within the ambit [5] of the statute." Oswego Laborers' Local 214 Pension Fund, 85 N.Y.2d at 25.

In this case, the Court finds that the allegations regarding the UMAP policy clearly indicate a private contract dispute rather than "consumer-oriented" conduct. The Amended Complaint alleges that Defendant initiated the UMAP policy (Am. [*499] Compl, ¶ 13), that Defendant "refused to ship and fill orders submitted by Plaintiff. . . unless Plaintiff complied with [the] policy" (((id. ¶ 14), and that Plaintiff has sustained "lasting damages" as a result of the policy, including the loss of substantial profits and damage to its good will and market share (id. ¶¶ 18-19). By contrast, the Amended Complaint offers purely conclusory assertions that the UMAP policy is "directed at" consumers, and is therefore "consumer-oriented and likely to mislead a reasonable consumer." (Id. ¶ 30.) Such conclusory allegations fail to demonstrate the necessary impact on consumers at large. Rather, the overwhelming focus of the UMAP allegations is a private contractual dispute, which is unique to the parties in this case and therefore beyond the scope of Section 349. See Harary v. Allstate Ins. Co., 983 F. Supp. 95, 98 (E.D.N.Y. 1997). Accordingly, [6] the motion to dismiss the Section 349 claim is granted with respect to the UMAP policy.

The warranty disclaimer policy is a closer question. The Amended Complaint alleges "upon information and belief* that Defendant "has indicated to consumers that it will not honor warranties on Defendant's policies sold by Homecenter.com." (Am. Compl. ¶ 23 (emphasis added).) The Amended Complaint further alleges that the warranty disclaimer policy "has been communicated to other retailers and Plaintiffs prospective customers," (Id.) These allegations are admittedly sparse. However, because the "consumer-oriented" requirement is to be liberally construed, see New York v. Feldman, 210 F. Supp. 2d 294, 301 (S.D.N.Y. 2002), the Court finds that the alleged communication directly to consumers is enough to establish "consumer-oriented" conduct at this stage of the litigation. Whether such misinformation was actually funneled to consumers is an issue to be developed in discovery and taken up on summary judgment.

B. "Deceptive" Acts or Practices

The next element of a Section 349 claim is the requisite "misleading" act, which the Court regards as the core of the parties' dispute with respect to this cause of [7] action. HN5[] "Deceptive practices" within the meaning of Section 349 are "acts which are dishonest or misleading in a material respect." Kramer v. Pollock-Krasner Found., 890 F. Supp. 250, 258 (S.D.N.Y. 1995). The New York Court of Appeals has adopted an objective definition of "misleading," under which the alleged act must be "likely to mislead a reasonable consumer acting reasonably under the circumstances." Oswego Laborers' Local 214 Pension Fund, 85 N.Y.2d at 26. Defendant argues that there is no deceptive conduct here, because the warranty policy was "communicated to other retailers and Plaintiffs prospective customers." (Am. Compl. % 23.) New York law does offer some support for this position, since HN6[] the general rule is that "[t]here can be no claim for deceptive acts or practices . . . when the alleged deceptive practice was fully disclosed." Watts v. Jackson Hewitt Tax Serv, Inc., 579 F. Supp. 2d 334, 346 (E.D.N.Y. 2008),

However, none of the cases that stand for this general rule had occasion to address policies prohibited by other substantive laws. See Cohen v. JP Morgan Chase & Co., 498 F.3d 111, 126 (2d Cir. 2007) ("In none of these cases ... did the courts have occasion to consider [8] fees prohibited by other substantive laws."). New York courts have held that "collecting fees in violation of other federal or state laws may satisfy the misleading element of § 349" — even where those fees were fully disclosed. Id. Although illegal fees are not at issue in this case, Plaintiff argues that the warranty disclaimer policy is void and unenforceable pursuant to New York General Business Law § 369-b. [*500] Thus, Plaintiff argues that although the content of the warranty disclaimer policy was disclosed, consumers were nonetheless deceived regarding the legitimacy and lawfulness of that policy. (Pl.'s Opp'n 9.)

This is a close question, but the Court is ultimately persuaded that Plaintiff has the better argument here. HN7[] Section 369-b clearly states that a warranty "may not be limited by a manufacturer doing business in this state solely for the reason that such merchandise is sold by a particular dealer or dealers," and that "[a]ny attempt to limit the manufacturer's warranty or guarantee for the aforesaid reason is void," N. Y. Gen Bus. Law § 369-b. According to the Amended Complaint, that is precisely what the alleged warranty disclaimer policy attempted to do — disclaim warranties [9] of products sold by Plaintiff. (Am. Compl, ¶¶ 23-24.) Of course, the Court expresses no opinion as to whether Plaintiff will ultimately prove that allegation, especially since the alleged warranty policy has not been made part of the record. But the Court cannot conclude from the fact of disclosure that, as a matter of law, the warranty disclaimer policy is not a deceptive trade practice in violation of Section 349. See Cohen, 498 F.3d at 127. But see WorldHomeCenter.com, Inc., v. Franke Consumer Prods., Inc., 10 Civ. 3205 (BSJ), Doc. No. 31, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 67798 (S.D.N.Y. June 22, 2011). For that reason, the Court finds that Plaintiff has sufficiently pled the "misleading" act prong of the deceptive trade practices claim.

C. Actual Injury

Finally, Plaintiff clearly alleges that Defendant's policies "unfairly discourage and dissuade consumers from purchasing merchandise from Plaintiff and "unlawfully penalize" customers who do purchase Defendant's products from Plaintiff. (Am. Compl. ¶ 38.) Defendant does not appear to contest the sufficiency of these allegations for purposes of the third element of a Section 349 claim, actual injury. Because Plaintiff has sufficiently alleged all three elements, the motion [10] to dismiss the Section 349 claim is denied with respect to the warranty disclaimer policy.

III. Donnelly Act (N.Y. GBL § 340)

Plaintiffs second cause of action alleges that Defendant's policies constitute vertical price fixing in violation of the New York antitrust statute, known as the Donnelly Act, N.Y, Gen. Bus, Law § 340.

A. Preemption

In response, Defendant argues that the Donnelly Act is preempted by the Sherman Act because the conduct at issue relates to interstate commerce. In order to prevail on the preemption argument, Defendant must overcome the presumption against finding preemption of state law in areas — such as antitrust — traditionally regulated by the states. See California v. Arc Am. Corp., 490 U.S. 93, 101, 109 S. Ct. 1661, 104 L. Ed. 2d 86 (1989). HN8[] Federal antitrust law preempts Donnelly Act claims only where "the conduct complained of principally affects interstate commerce, with little or no impact on local or intrastate commerce." *H-Quotient, Inc. v. Knight Trading Grp., No 03 Civ. 5889 (DAB), 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1924, 2005 WL 323750, at 4 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 9, 2005). In support of its preemption argument, Defendant leans heavily on Judge Scheindlin's recent decision in Conergy AG v. MEMC Elec. Materials, Inc., in which a defendant's [11] motion to dismiss was granted because "the alleged conduct predominantly affects interstate commerce rather than New York commerce." 651 F. Supp. 2d 51, 60-62 (S.D.N.Y. 2009). Defendant urges the same result here.

[*501] The Court is not prepared to find preemption on a motion to dismiss in this case. Although the allegations relating to intrastate commerce are admittedly sparse, Plaintiff does allege that Defendant regularly transacts or solicits business in New York (Am. Compl, ¶¶ 2-3), that Plaintiff is a New York corporation (id. ¶ 4), and that a substantial part of the events at issue occurred in New York (id. ¶ 3). In Conergy, by contrast, neither party was a New York corporation, and the complaint alleged no specific impact on New York, no competition with New York producers, and no service to New York customers. Conergy AG, 651 F. Supp.2d at 61-62. Here, the mere fact that Plaintiff is an online retailer does not support the conclusion as a matter of law that Defendant's policies had "little or no impact on local or intrastate commerce." *H-Quotient, Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1924, 2005 WL 323750, at 4.

Because discovery is required to resolve the issue of intrastate commercial impact, the Court rejects the [12] preemption argument as a basis for a motion to dismiss the Donnelly Act claim.

B. Rule of Reason

Defendant argues in the alternative that Plaintiff fails to allege facts that would support a Donnelly Act claim under the rule of reason standard. HN9[] To plead an antitrust violation under the Donnelly Act, Plaintiff must demonstrate that Defendants' conduct constituted anti-competitive activity either per se or under the rule of reason. Under a rule of reason analysis, "the factfinder weighs all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition." Leegin Creative Leather Prods., Inc. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 885, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 (2007). The per se rule treats categories of restraints as necessarily illegal, thus "eliminat[ing] the need to study the reasonableness of an individual restraint in light of the real market forces at work." Id. at 886. Thus, the threshold question in evaluating Plaintiffs Donnelly Act claim is whether the rule of reason or the per se rule applies.

1. The Leegin Decision

Defendant urges the application of the rule of reason based on the Supreme Court's decision in Leegin Creative Leather Products, Inc. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 (2007). [13] In Leegin, a retail apparel store brought suit under the Sherman Act against a manufacturer, claiming that the manufacturer had entered into an illegal pricing plan whereby it refused to sell products to retailers that discounted goods below a certain price (so-called "vertical" price-fixing). See id. at 883-84. In ruling for the manufacturer, the Supreme Court held that the rule of reason, not a per se rule of unlawfulness, was the appropriate standard to judge vertical price restraints. Id. at 899. Because the Donnelly Act is modeled on the Sherman Act and generally construed in light of federal precedent, see Granite Partners, L.P. v. Bear, Stearns & Co., 17 F. Supp. 2d 275, 298 (S.D.N.Y. 1998), Defendant argues that the Leegin decision should control and that the rule of reason should apply.

Plaintiff counters that vertical price fixing constitutes a per se antitrust violation regardless of Leegin, because New York courts interpret the Donnelly Act differently than the Sherman Act "where State policy, differences in the statutory language[,] or the legislative history justify such a result." X.L.O. Concrete Corp. v. Rivergate Corp., 83 N.Y.2d 513, 518, 634 N.E.2d 158, 611 N.Y.S.2d 786 (1994). To justify a divergent [14] result under state law, Plaintiff leans heavily on Section 369-a, [*502] which renders void "[a]ny contract provision that purports to restrain a vendee of a commodity from reselling such commodity at less than the price stipulated by the vendor or producer . . . ." N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 369-a. Plaintiff argues that "in view of [Section] 369-a, courts applying New York law should treat vertical price fixing as a per se Donnelly Act violation, regardless of the change in federal antitrust law occasioned by the Supreme Court's decision in Leegin (Pl.'s Opp'n 13-14.) But Plaintiff supplies no authority for the proposition that Section 369-a justifies such a divergence from federal antitrust precedent. Indeed, the handful of cases in this District that have considered parallel state and federal antitrust claims following the Leegin decision appear to assume that Leegin applies equally to both. See Arista Records LLC v. Lime Group LLC, 532 F.Supp.2d 556, 569, 581 (S.D.N.Y. 2007) (Lynch, J.) (citing Leegin for the proposition that vertical price restraints "should be evaluated under the traditional rule of reason" standard and subsequently finding that the Donnelly Act claim "overlapped] completely" [15] with the federal antitrust claim). In the absence of any authority construing Section 369-a as relevant, much less controlling, with respect to New York antitrust law, the Court declines to adopt such a view. In light of the Leegin decision, the Court finds that the rule of reason and not the per se rule applies to Plaintiffs Donnelly Act claim.[1]

[1] The Court notes that Defendant also urges the application of the rule of reason on the grounds that the UMAP policy governs the advertised price rather than the resale price of Defendant's products. (Def.'s Mem. 11-12.) Whether an internet storefront ultimately collapses that distinction is certainly an interesting question. But because the Court finds that the rule of reason applies even to resale price restraints under Leegin, the issue of advertised versus resale pricing is beyond the scope of this ruling.

2. Applying the Rule of Reason

Having determined that the rule of reason applies to Plaintiffs Donnelly Act claim, the Court now proceeds to the implications of that choice. As previously noted, HN10[] the rule of reason "requires the factfinder to decide whether under all the circumstances of the case the restrictive practice imposes an unreasonable [16] restraint on competition." Major League Baseball Props., Inc. v. Salvino, Inc., 542 F.3d 290, 316 (2d Cir. 2008) (internal citation omitted). "In order to plead an antitrust violation under the rule of reason, a plaintiff must allege a relevant market, including both a product market and a geographic market." Integrated Sys. & Power, Inc. v. Honeywell Intl., Inc., 713 F. Supp. 2d 286, 298 (S.D.N.Y. 2010). Plaintiff also bears the initial burden to show that the challenged behavior "had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market." Major League Baseball, 542 F.3d at 317 (internal citation omitted). "Because the antitrust laws protect competition as a whole, evidence that plaintiffs have been harmed as individual competitors will not suffice." Id. (internal citation omitted).

Plaintiff has made no real attempt to plead a Donnelly Act violation under the rule of reason analysis. The Amended Complaint contains no allegations regarding the types of lighting products at issue, the geographic boundaries of the market, or the general impact of Defendant's policies in the relevant product or geographic markets. Plaintiff appears to acknowledge as much in its opposition [17] papers, arguing only that "a rule of reason analysis is unnecessary" and not that Plaintiff should prevail under that standard. (Pl.'s Opp'n 13.) Because Plaintiff fails to properly plead a Donnelly Act claim under the rule [*503] of reason analysis, the motion to dismiss the Donnelly Act claim is granted.

IV. Declaratory Relief

Plaintiffs third cause of action seeks declaratory relief pursuant to Section 369-a, Section 369-b, and the Declaratory Judgment Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2201. Plaintiff urges the Court to declare the UMAP policy void and unenforceable based on Section 369-a and the warranty disclaimer policy void and unenforceable based on Section 369-b. (Am. Compl, ¶¶ 48-49.) HN11[] But neither of these statutes provides for a private right of action on their face, and Plaintiff has not identified any express provision authorizing a private right of action for violation of either statute. In the absence of a statutory private right of action, the Court will only imply a private right of action where (1) Plaintiff is one of the class for whose particular benefit the statute was enacted; (2) recognition of a private right of action would promote the legislative purpose; and (3) the creation of such [18] a right would be consistent with the legislative scheme. See Carrier v. Salvation Army, 88 N.Y.2d 298, 302, 667 N.E.2d 328, 644 N.Y.S.2d 678 (1996). The third factor, which is generally the "most critical," is determinative here. Id. Since the only references to enforcement in Article 24-A of the General Business Law, which contains both Section 369-a and 369-b, are to enforcement by the attorney general and not by private parties, the Court finds that implying a private right of action here would be inconsistent with the enforcement means chosen by the New York legislature. See N.Y. Exec. Law § 63(12) (authorizing the Attorney General to apply to the courts for an order enjoining any person from engaging in "repeated fraudulent or illegal acts" or otherwise demonstrating "persistent fraud or illegality" in transacting business). Accordingly, the Court grants the motion to dismiss with respect to declaratory relief.

V. Injunctive Relief

Finally, Plaintiff also seeks a preliminary injunction "enjoining and restraining Defendant from implementing and enforcing its UMAP policy." (Am. Compl, ¶ 52.) HN12[] "A plaintiff seeking a preliminary injunction must establish that he is likely to succeed on the merits, that he is likely to [19] suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief, that the balance of equities tips in his favor, and that an injunction is in the public interest." Winter v. Natural Res, Def. Council, 555 U.S. 7, 129 S. Ct. 365, 374, 172 L. Ed. 2d 249 (2008). A preliminary injunction is an "extraordinary remedy" that should not be routinely granted. JSG Trading Corp. v. Tray-Wrap, Inc., 917 F.2d 75, 79-80 (2d Cir. 1990). The party seeking the injunction carries the burden of persuasion to demonstrate, "by a clear showing," that the necessary elements are satisfied. See Mazurek v. Armstrong, 520 U.S. 968, 972, 117 S. Ct. 1865, 138 L. Ed. 2d 162 (1997).

For the reasons stated above, Plaintiff has clearly failed to establish likelihood of success on the merits for its UMAP claims. Moreover, Plaintiff has also failed to demonstrate irreparable harm, the "single most important prerequisite for the issuance of a preliminary injunction." Rodriguez ex rel. Rodriguez v. DeBuono, 175 F.3d 227, 234 (2d Cir. 1999). The Amended Complaint alleges only that Plaintiff "has lost substantial profits" and experienced a "loss of established business dealings and prospective business opportunities." (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 18, 38, 42.) Because the harm alleged appears to be purely [20] financial and therefore reparable through monetary damages, Plaintiff has failed to allege irreparable injury. Accordingly, the motion to dismiss with respect to injunctive relief is also granted.

[*504] VI. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED THAT Defendant's motion to dismiss is DENIED with respect to the Section 349 claim as it pertains to Defendant's alleged warranty disclaimer policy, but GRANTED with respect to (1) the Section 349 claim as it pertains to the UMAP policy, (2) the Donnelly Act claim, and (3) the declaratory and injunctive relief claims. IT IS FURTHER ORDERED THAT the parties shall submit a joint status letter no later than July 22, 2011, updating the Court with respect to the status of settlement discussions and the need, if any, for additional discovery. To the extent that either party wishes to file a motion for summary judgment, that party shall also submit a pre-motion letter pursuant to Rule 2.A of my Individual Practices. The Clerk of the Court is respectfully directed to terminate the motion located at Doc. No. 29.

SO ORDERED.

[1954] ORDER GRANTING DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS PLAINTIFF'S COPYRIGHT MISUSE COUNTERCLAIM AND DENYING DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO DISMISS PLAINTIFF'S UCL CLAIM

Plaintiff/counter-defendant Adobe Systems Incorporated (Adobe) and third-party [*2] defendant [1955] Software & Information Industry Association's (SIIA) motion for partial dismissal of the amended counterclaims of defendant/counterclaimant Renee Norwood, now appearing pro se, is currently scheduled for hearing on July 8, 2011. Pursuant to Civil Local Rule 7-1(b), the Court finds this matter appropriate for resolution without oral argument and hereby VACATES the hearing. Having considered the papers submitted, and for good cause shown, the Court GRANTS Adobe's motion to dismiss Count One of the amended counterclaims, with prejudice. The Court DENIES the motion to dismiss Count Five of the amended counterclaims to the extent it is supported by Norwood's defamation, false light, and/or business disparagement claims. Count Five of the amended counterclaims is dismissed with prejudice to the extent it is based on an alleged violation of the federal Copyright Act or alleged anticompetitive acts.

BACKGROUND

Adobe filed this copyright and trademark infringement case on August 13, 2010, alleging that Renee Norwood engaged in "systematic, unauthorized copying and distribution of Adobe's software products through sales on the eBay online auction site." Compl. at ¶ 1. Norwood filed an [*3] answer on November 17, 2010 and on that same date filed ten counterclaims against Adobe and third-party defendant SIIA, a non-profit trade association, alleging three antitrust and unfair competition violations, misuse of copyright, defamation, placing defendant before the public in a false light, business disparagement, aiding and abetting, civil conspiracy, and that SIIA was an alter ego and/or instrumentality of Adobe. Adobe responded on January 7, 2011 and moved to dismiss all of the counterclaims except for the defamation, false light, and business disparagement claims.

On March 8, 2011, the Court dismissed Count One (conspiracy in restraint of trade in violation of federal antitrust law) and Count Two (violation of California antitrust law) with prejudice. Order Granting Motion to Dismiss Counterclaims, p. 5. The Court granted Adobe's motion to dismiss Counts Three (violation of the California Unfair Competition Law by restraint of trade), Eight (aiding and abetting), Nine (civil conspiracy), and Ten (alter ego/instrumentality), but gave Norwood leave to amend. Order, p. 1. The Court dismissed with prejudice Count Four (misuse of copyright) as to any claim for judgment against [*4] SIIA or for damages generally, but gave Norwood leave to amend to support a declaratory judgment against Adobe. Order, pp. 1, 8.

On March 18, 2011, Norwood filed amended counterclaims. Norwood claims that Adobe and SIIA "made a concerted effort to stop resale distribution altogether by instituting a coordinated campaign of federal litigation against small individual resellers who sell computer software on the secondary market — computer software lawfully purchased by these small computer software resellers and their upstream suppliers," which Norwood argues violates the first sale doctrine. Amended Counterclaims at ¶ 38. Norwood claims that Adobe and SIIA "have joined together to embark on a scheme to cartelize [the secondary market for computer software] and its financial promise for themselves. Their goal is simple: to destroy the secondary market for their computer software, since they no longer owned or controlled those copies of their software products." Id. at ¶ 39. To accomplish this goal, Norwood claims that Adobe and SIIA are "specifically targeting small, independent re-sellers of Adobe products" by filing lawsuits and Digital Millennium Copyright Act ("DMCA") take-down notices [*5] in order to "intimidate, harass and ultimately eliminate from competition these small resellers . . . ." Id. at ¶¶ 40-41. Norwood claims that Adobe and SIIA intentionally focus on small resellers with limited financial means in order to avoid having to litigate. They "know that their claims of infringement are not valid given the critical limitation on copyright, embodied in the First Sale Doctrine . . . . " Id. at ¶ 42.

Norwood claims that "Counter-Defendants aided and assisted one another in perpetrating the wrongful acts" alleged above. Id. at ¶ 48. "Specifically, Counter-Defendants conspired and agreed to unreasonably restrain trade in and to control and dominate the market for Adobe software products" and "took acts in furtherance of their combination and conspiracy, as alleged herein, that were intended to destroy the secondary market for Adobe software products and were intended to and did injure Norwood by bringing the instant lawsuit against her." Id.

Norwood further claims that SIIA issued a press release on October 6, 2010, which contained [1956] defamatory statements accusing Norwood of piracy. Norwood alleges that the statements were made without any evidence to support them and [*6] have caused her to suffer "severe emotional, psychological, and medical distress and damages . . . as she experienced the destruction of her reputation, identity, sense of self-worth, and lost business and customers." Id. at ¶¶ 49-61.

Norwood claims that the counter-defendants "have acted in conspiracy with one another, each tacitly and/or expressly participating in a common plan to destroy the legal, secondary market for Adobe software, and in the common plan to destroy [her] business reputation." Id. at ¶ 62.

On May 2, 2011 Norwood's attorney, Michael L. Rodenbaugh, moved to withdraw as counsel. The Court granted Rodenbaugh's motion to withdraw as counsel on June 3, 2011, and extended the mediation deadline by 60 days. The Court also ordered Mr. Rodenbaugh to inform Norwood of the Court's ruling by mail and e-mail, and inform Norwood of the pending motion to dismiss and associated deadlines.

Norwood has not asked the Court for a continuance nor submitted a response to Adobe's partial motion to dismiss the amended counterclaims.

LEGAL STANDARD

Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6), a district court must dismiss a complaint if it fails to state a claim upon which relief can be [*7] granted. The question presented by a motion to dismiss is not whether the plaintiff will prevail in the action, but whether the plaintiff is entitled to offer evidence in support of the claim. See Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 94 S. Ct. 1683, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90 (1974), overruled on other grounds by Davis v. Scherer, 468 U.S. 183, 104 S. Ct. 3012, 82 L. Ed. 2d 139 (1984).

In answering this question, the Court must assume that the plaintiff's allegations are true and must draw all reasonable inferences in the plaintiff's favor. See Usher v. City of Los Angeles, 828 F.2d 556, 561 (9th Cir. 1987). Even if the face of the pleadings suggests that the chance of recovery is remote, the Court must allow the plaintiff to develop the case at this stage of the proceedings. See United States v. City of Redwood City, 640 F.2d 963, 966 (9th Cir. 1981).

If the Court dismisses the complaint, it must then decide whether to grant leave to amend. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15 governs amendment of the pleadings. It states that if a responsive pleading has already been filed, the party seeking amendment may amend the party's pleading only by leave of court or by written consent of the adverse party and that leave shall be freely given when justice so requires. Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a). [*8] This rule reflects an underlying policy that disputes should be determined on their merits, and not on the technicalities of pleading rules. See Foman v. Davis, 371 U.S. 178, 181-82, 83 S. Ct. 227, 9 L. Ed. 2d 222 (1962). The Ninth Circuit has "repeatedly held that a district court should grant leave to amend even if no request to amend the pleading was made, unless it determines that the pleading could not possibly be cured by the allegation of other facts." Lopez v. Smith, 203 F.3d 1122, 1130 (9th Cir. 2000) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). Accordingly, the Court must be generous in granting leave to amend.

Generally, courts cannot consider material outside the complaint when ruling on a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. Arpin v. Santa Clara Valley Transp. Agency, 261 F.3d 912, 925 (9th Cir. 2001). However, material properly submitted as part of the complaint may be considered on a motion to dismiss. Branch v. Tunnell, 14 F.3d 449, 453 (9th Cir. 1994) (citing Hal Roach Studios, Inc. v. Richard Feiner & Co., 896 F.2d 1542, 1555 n. 19 (9th Cir. 1990)), rev'd on other grounds by Galbraith v. County of Santa Clara, 307 F.3d 1119 (9th Cir. 2002). A document is not outside the complaint if [*9] the complaint specifically refers to the document and if its authenticity is not questioned. Id. (citing Townsend v. Columbia Operations, 667 F.2d 844, 848-49 (9th Cir. 1982)). The court may consider the full text of the document, even if the complaint quotes it only in part. In re Stac Electronics Securities Litig., 89 F.3d 1399, 1405 n. 4 (9th Cir. 1996).

Pro se complaints are held to "less stringent standards than formal pleadings drafted by lawyers." Haines v. Kerner, 404 U.S. 519, 520, 92 S. Ct. 594, 30 L. Ed. 2d 652 (1972). Where a plaintiff is proceeding pro se, the Court has an obligation to construe the pleadings liberally and to afford the plaintiff the benefit of any doubt. Bretz v. Kelman, 773 F.2d 1026, 1027 n.1 (9th Cir. 1985) (en banc). However, pro se pleadings must still allege facts sufficient to allow a reviewing court to determine whether a claim has been stated. [1957] Ivey v. Bd. of Regents of Univ. of Alaska, 673 F.2d 266, 268 (9th Cir. 1982).

DISCUSSION

I. Count One: Misuse of Copyright

Norwood's first amended counterclaim is for misuse of copyright. It is based primarily on the allegation that Adobe's actions are in violation of the first sale doctrine.

A. Copyright Misuse

Copyright misuse, which is nearly [*10] always regarded as a defense, "forbids a copyright holder from securing an exclusive right or limited monopoly not granted by the Copyright Office" by preventing "copyright holders from leveraging their limited monopoly to allow them control of areas outside the monopoly." A & M Records, Inc. v. Napster, Inc., 239 F.3d 1004, 1026 (9th Cir. 2001) (internal quotation marks and alteration marks omitted). Here, Norwood alleges that Adobe and SIIA have attempted to control the resale of Adobe's software products beyond their first sale in contravention of the first sale doctrine. Amended Counterclaims at ¶ 35.

B. First Sale Doctrine

The first sale doctrine "permits one who has acquired ownership of a copy to dispose of that copy without the permission of the copyright owner." UMG Recordings, Inc. v. Augusto, 628 F.3d 1175, 1177 (9th Cir. 2011) (citing 17 U.S.C. § 109(a)). However, the doctrine "does not apply to a person who possesses a copy of the copyrighted work without owning it, such as a licensee." Vernor v. Autodesk, Inc., 621 F.3d 1102, 1107 (9th Cir. 2010) (citing 17 U.S.C. § 109(d)). "[A] software user is a licensee rather than an owner of a copy where the copyright owner (1) specifies [*11] that the user is granted a license; (2) significantly restricts the user's ability to transfer the software; and (3) imposes notable use restrictions." Id. at 1111.

C. Norwood's Amended Counterclaim

Many district courts have held that copyright misuse does not support a claim for damages. *Adobe Systems, Inc. v. Kornrumpf, 780 F. Supp. 2d988 , 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4956, 2011 WL 181375, 2 (N.D. Cal. 2011); Ticketmaster L.L.C. v. RMG Techs., Inc., 536 F. Supp. 2d 1191, 1198 (C.D. Cal. 2008); Online Policy Group v. Diebold Inc., 337 F. Supp. 2d 1195, 1198 n.4 (N.D. Cal. 2004). As Norwood identified no legal authority suggesting otherwise, the Court dismissed with prejudice her request for damages for copyright misuse. Order p. 6. Norwood did identify a case suggesting that copyright misuse may be asserted as a counterclaim for declaratory judgment. *See Apple Inc. v. Psystar Corp., No. C 08-03251 WHA, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14370, 2009 WL 303046, 2 (N.D. Cal. 2009). The Court gave Norwood leave to amend her copyright misuse claim for declaratory relief against Adobe, but made clear that the claim could only survive if Norwood alleged facts showing the applicability of the first sale doctrine. Order p. 7 (citing *Adobe Systems v. Kornrumpf, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4956, 2011 WL 181375 at 2).

Norwood [*12] bears the burden of alleging facts sufficient to support her cause of action. See Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). To show the applicability of the first sale doctrine, the Court said that Norwood must plead facts that distinguish her case from Vernor in her amended complaint. Order p. 7. In Vernor, the court said that the first sale doctrine does not apply to one who possesses a copy of a copyrighted work without owning it, such as a licensee. Vernor, 621 F.3d at 1107. The Court noted that Norwood had made only conclusory allegations that her purchase of the software from "other third party distributors" was "legitimate" and that she "failed to plead facts to suggest that title was transferred to her" or "provide information regarding the terms under which the third party distributors obtained the software." Order pp. 7-

8. The court said that to sustain a copyright misuse claim against Adobe in her amended pleading, "Norwood must plead facts showing that title of the software in question was properly transferred to her." Order p. 8.

In her amended counterclaims, Norwood attempts to demonstrate that Adobe's software distribution method constitutes a first sale under [*13] the first sale doctrine. Norwood argues that sales of Adobe software to computer and other component hardware manufacturers who sell the software as a "'package deal'" with hardware products constitutes a first sale because [1958] ownership in the copies of the software is transferred to the hardware manufacturers. Amended Counterclaims at ¶ 13. Norwood claims that Adobe sells its software products to resellers under the terms of "sales contracts" that exclude provisions typical of end user license agreements and include provisions indicating transfer of ownership. Id. at ¶ 14 (emphasis in original). As examples of these provisions, Norwood provides that Adobe allows for no refunds or exchanges of the copies of the software and that the contracts do not place restrictions on the reseller's ability to resell the copies of the software, indicating that "Adobe relinquishes its control of the software copies." Id.

Norwood also claims that copies of Adobe's CS4 software, which Norwood allegedly sold on eBay, contain no licensing restrictions on the face of the packaging or on the CDs containing the software. Norwood acknowledges in her amended counterclaims, however, that print inside the CD case [*14] states: "'Notice to Users: This product is offered subject to your acceptance of the license agreement included with the media and to limited warranty terms. See www.adobe.com/products/eulas for details.'" Id. at ¶ 26. When the user goes to that website, a licensing agreement is downloaded to the user's computer. Id. at ¶ 27. The agreement includes these terms:

> Adobe products are not sold; rather, copies of Adobe products . . . are licensed all the way through the distribution channel to the end user. UNLESS YOU HAVE ANOTHER AGREEMENT DIRECTLY WITH ADOBE THAT CONTROLS AND ALTERS YOUR USE OR DISTRIBUTION OF THE ADOBE PRODUCTS, THE TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF THE APPLICABLE LICENSE AGREEMENTS BELOW APPLY TO YOU.

Amended Counterclaims Exh. B (capital letters in original).

Norwood argues that this agreement "only purports to apply to the end-user of the software, rather than any of the prior purchasers from Adobe and its customers." Amended Counterclaims at ¶ 27. The language on Adobe's website, however, which Norwood attaches to her amended counterclaims, explicitly indicates that Adobe products are "licensed all the way through the distribution channel . . . ." Amended Counterclaims Exh. B. [*15] This contradicts Norwood's allegation that the license agreements only apply to end users and not to her or her supplier. Norwood does not plead facts indicating that either she or her supplier, Bea's Hive, have another agreement directly with Adobe that would make the license agreement quoted above inapplicable to them. The amended counterclaims and the exhibits attached by Norwood make clear that her Adobe products were licensed, not sold.

Norwood does not plead facts that distinguish her case from Vernor. The Court GRANTS Adobe's motion to dismiss Count One of the amended counterclaims, with prejudice.

II. Count Five: Violation of California's Unfair Competition Law

The Court granted Norwood leave to amend her third original counterclaim, which alleged violation of the California Unfair Competition Law (UCL) by restraint of trade. The original counterclaim related her UCL claim to her antitrust claim (that "Counter-Defendants conspired to and did restrain trade in ways that violated federal and state antitrust laws, and/or that violated the policy and spirit of such laws and threatened their incipient violation") and it was dismissed. See Counterclaims at ¶ 47. But Norwood argued that [*16] her defamation, false light, and/or disparagement claims could support the UCL claim. See Order p. 4. The Court granted Norwood leave to amend her UCL claim to plead causes of action other than antitrust, including defamation, false light, and/or business disparagement.

Norwood's amended counterclaims incorporate paragraphs 1 through 100 — including her copyright misuse, defamation, false light, and business disparagement claims — into her UCL claim. Norwood alleges that the "concerted and anticompetitive acts of Counter-Defendants. . . constitute unlawful and unfair business acts and practice and unfair competition." Amended Counterclaims at ¶ 102. She alleges that counter-defendants "conspired to and did commit unlawful, unfair and fraudulent actions, generally targeted at all eBay and Amazon resellers of Adobe software, including specifically Ms. Norwood." Id. In so doing, Norwood says, "Counter-defendants have also violated the U.S. Copyright Act . . . [and] have also violated specific California and/or other statutes, including statutes which prohibit defamation, false light and/or business [1959] disparagement — each of which are unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent torts." Id. [*17] at ¶¶ 103-04.

California's Unfair Competition Law prohibits any "unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice." Cel-Tech Communic'ns, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527, 539 (Cal. 1999); Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq. "By proscribing 'any unlawful' business practice, section 17200 'borrows' violations of other laws and treats them as unlawful practices that the unfair competition law makes independently actionable." Id. at 539-40 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). The law was "'intentionally framed in its broad, sweeping language.'" Id. at 540 (citation omitted).

"Violation of almost any federal, state or local law may serve as the basis for a UCL claim." *Kornrumpf, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4956, 2011 WL 181375 at 5 (citation omitted). The "unlawful" practices prohibited by section 17200 are "any practices forbidden by law, be it civil or criminal, federal, state, or municipal, statutory, regulatory, or court-made." Saunders v. Superior Court, 27 Cal. App. 4th 832, 838-39, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 438 (1994) (citing People v. McKale, 25 Cal. 3d 626, 159 Cal. Rptr. 811, 602 P.2d 731 (Cal. 1979)). Norwood attempts to ground her UCL claim in (1) her allegations that defendants committed certain anticompetitive acts; (2) her allegations [*18] of copyright misuse; and (3) her defamation, false light, and business disparagement claims. In the Court's previous Order, it dismissed alleged anticompetitive acts as a basis for Norwood's UCL claim. To the extent that her UCL claim is still based on alleged anticompetitive acts, it is dismissed. Because the Court has now dismissed Norwood's copyright misuse claim, Norwood's UCL claim is dismissed with prejudice to the extent that it is based on a violation of the federal Copyright Act. However, Norwood's UCL claim can be supported by her defamation, false light, and business disparagement claims. The Court DENIES Adobe's motion to dismiss Norwood's UCL claim to the extent that the claim is based on Norwood's defamation, false light, and business disparagement claims.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons and for good cause shown, the Court hereby GRANTS Adobe's motion to dismiss Count One of the amended counterclaims, with prejudice. The Court DENIES Adobe's motion to dismiss Count Five of the amended counterclaims to the extent it is supported by Norwood's defamation, false light, and/or business disparagement claims. Count Five of the amended counterclaims is DISMISSED with prejudice [*19] to the extent it is based on an alleged violation of the federal Copyright Act or alleged anticompetitive acts.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Opinion

[*849] DECISION AND ORDER

Plaintiffs, Fond du Lac Bumper Exchange, Inc. and Vehimax International, LLC, American purchasers of sheet metal aftermarket auto parts ("AM Parts"), bring these, now consolidated, putative class actions alleging that defendants, Taiwanese manufacturers of such parts and their American subsidiaries, violated Section 1 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act by conspiring to fix the prices of many AM Parts sold in the United States and to engage in other anti-competitive conduct such as reducing the availability of AM Parts and sharing the tools used to produce such parts. Plaintiffs further allege that they were injured as a result of defendants' conspiracy by being forced to pay higher prices for AM Parts and having diminished choice in the market. Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1), defendants' [8] moved to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction, and pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), for failure to state a claim. I denied both motions. Before me now are defendants motions to reconsider my decision on the Rule 12(b)(1) motion. Alternatively, defendants ask me to certify both the Rule 12(b)(1) and 12(b)(6) issues for interlocutory appeal.

HN1[] Courts have the inherent power to revisit prior decisions. In re Text Messaging Antitrust Litig., 630 F.3d 622, 627 (7th Cir. 2010); see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 54(b) (stating that courts may revise interlocutory decisions "at any time before the entry of judgment adjudicating all the claims and the rights and liabilities of all the parties"). Because a motion for reconsideration serves the limited purpose of correcting manifest errors of law or fact or of presenting newly discovered evidence, Rothwell Cotton Co. v. Rosenthal & Co., 827 F.2d 246, 251 (7th Cir. 1987), movants generally face an uphill battle.

HN2[] The Sherman Act prohibits "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Defendants argue that, based [9] on the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act ("FTAIA"), 15 U.S.C.A. § 6(a), I lack jurisdiction under the Sherman Act. HN3[] The FTAIA removes from the jurisdiction of the Sherman Act the following conduct: conduct involving trade or commerce (other than import trade or import commerce) with foreign nations unless –

(1) such conduct has a direct, substantial, and reasonably forseeable effect –

(A) on trade or commerce which is not trade or commerce with foreign nations, or on import trade or import commerce with foreign nations; or

[*850] (B) on export trade or export commerce with foreign nations, of a person engaged in such trade or commerce in the United States; and

(2) such effect gives rise to a claim under the provisions of this Act, other than this section.

15 U.S.C. § 6a. Defendants assert that their alleged anti-competitive conduct took place in Taiwan because they sold the parts in question to plaintiffs in Taiwan. Thus, they contend that their conduct involved purely foreign commerce, not import or domestic commerce and therefore is not within the Sherman Act. Defendants also contend that their conduct did not have the necessary effect on domestic commerce to fall within the Sherman Act [10] and that any effect it may have had did not give rise to plaintiffs' claim.

In order to resolve defendants' motions, I must first consider whether defendants' alleged activities involved import trade or commerce within the FTAIA. HN4[] Import trade or commerce consists of transactions in which the seller is located abroad, the buyer is domestic, and the goods flow into the United States. Phillip E. Areeda and Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and Their Application, Vol. 1B, 3rd ed. § 272i, at 290 (2006). In determining whether defendants' conduct involved import trade or commerce, I focus on the nature of the transactions in which they allegedly engaged, not on their nationalities. Id. I note also that Congress enacted the FTAIA because, as the scope of antitrust liability expanded under the broad jurisdictional language of the Sherman Act, it became concerned that the Sherman Act was excessively hospitable to suits alleging foreign injuries rather than injuries to American consumers. Id. at 287. Another Congressional concern was that antitrust law could impair the ability of American businesses to export their products efficiently as, for example, through [11] joint ventures. Id. Thus, HN5[] the FTAIA affirms that the purpose of the Sherman Act is to protect consumers and businesses in the American marketplace from injuries arising from anticompetitive activity.

In my previous decision, I found that the transactions in which defendants allegedly engaged involved import commerce and, having reviewed the parties' recent submissions, I conclude that that conclusion was correct. The evidence strongly supports the conclusion that the activities that defendants engaged in were not the type of activities that Congress intended to exclude from Sherman Act jurisdiction. The evidence suggests that defendants' alleged conspiracy focused on setting the prices of parts that were manufactured for the purpose of being sold in the United States and that such parts were in fact sold in the United States at prices established by the anti-competitive agreement. The complaint and the evidence indicate that there is a large American market for the parts in question (far larger than any market that might exist in Taiwan). The complaint and the evidence further indicate that defendants negotiated the sales of parts to importers at prices and in amounts established by [12] the conspiracy and delivered the parts to their ships for transport to the United States. In addition, defendants traveled to the United States to market the parts and established affiliates in the United States to import, distribute and service them. Further, at least one defendant, an American affiliate, itself brought AM parts into the United States.

The foregoing conduct clearly involves import commerce. Defendants' contention that because they may have sold the parts in Taiwan they were not involved in import commerce is based on an unduly narrow [*851] understanding of import commerce. Even if defendants transferred title to the parts to plaintiffs in Taiwan and did not themselves ship the parts into the United States, by allegedly agreeing to fix the prices of parts to be sold in the United States and taking the additional steps described above, defendants' conduct involved import commerce. As discussed, the purpose of American antitrust law is to protect the American marketplace from anti-competitive injury, and the FTAIA reaffirms that purpose. The FTAIA does not immunize foreign export cartels such as that allegedly established by defendants from liability for anti-competitive activity [13] in the American marketplace. Defendants' proposed narrow reading of import commerce would have the perverse effect of encouraging companies to engage in off-shore anti-competitive activity designed to harm American consumers and importers.

A number of cases as well as the legislative history of the FTAIA make this point. See, e.g., Continental Ore v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 704-05, 82 S. Ct. 1404, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777 (1962) (stating that HN6[] "a conspiracy to monopolize or restrain the domestic or foreign commerce of the United States is not outside the reach of the Sherman Act just because part of the conduct complained of occurs in foreign countries"); see also McBee v. Delica Co., 417 F.3d 107, 119 (1st Cir. 2005) (stating that "absent a certain degree of extraterritorial enforcement, violators will either take advantage of international coordination problems or hide in countries without efficacious antitrust or trademark laws, thereby avoiding legal authority"); Pub. Law 97-290, Export Trading Company Act of 1982, H.R. Rep. 97-686, as reprinted in 1982 U.S.C.C.A.N. 2487, 2494-95 (stating that "it is important that there be no misunderstanding that import restraints which can be damaging to American consumers remain [14] covered by the law" and noting that foreign antitrust law applies to the activities of American exporters); Restatement (Third) of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States, Part IV § 415 cmt. b (1987) (stating that HN7[] the FTAIA provides that activities carried out abroad such as "limiting imports or fixing the price of imported products" are subject to the Sherman Act).

Thus, because defendants' activities involved import trade or commerce, the FTAIA does not bar jurisdiction under the Sherman Act. Even assuming, arguendo, that the FTAIA does apply, the domestic effects exception in the statute would also apply and would bring defendants' activities within the Sherman Act. The evidence indicates that defendants control 95% of the American AM parts market and that by using their combined market power to raise prices and limit the range of products imported into the United States, their alleged conduct had a direct, substantial and foreseeable effect upon import and domestic commerce. See, e.g., Riverdell Forest Products, Ltd. v. Canadian Forest Products, Ltd., 810 F. Supp. 1116 (D. Colo. 1993) (finding direct effect on import commerce where foreign price fixing conspiracy targeted [15] American importers); see also In re Static Random Access Memory (SRAM) Antitrust Litig., No. 07-md-01819, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 141968 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 31, 2010) (stating that HN8[] where defendants' price fixing conspiracy targeted American commerce, defendants' conduct had a direct, substantial and foreseeable effect on domestic commerce). In short, defendants' activities "were intended to affect imports and did affect them." United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416, 443-44 (2d Cir. 1945).

Finally, the evidence indicates that plaintiffs' alleged injuries arose directly from the effect of defendants' alleged anti-competitive conduct. After all, fixing the [*852] prices that American buyers like plaintiffs had to pay for AM parts was the whole point of the alleged conspiracy.

As an alternative form of relief, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b), defendants request that I certify for interlocutory appeal the issues of subject matter jurisdiction and the sufficiency of the complaint. HN9[] I may certify a question for interlocutory appeal under § 1292(b) if it presents "a controlling question of law as to which there is a substantial ground for difference of opinion and . . . an intermediate appeal [16] . . . may materially advance" the progress of the case. For a court to grant a § 1292(b) petition, "there must be a question of law, it must be controlling, it must be contestable, and its resolution must promise to speed up the litigation." Ahrenholz v. Bd. of Trs. of Univ. of Ill., 219 F.3d 674, 675 (7th Cir.2000). The party seeking interlocutory review has the burden of persuading the court that "exceptional circumstances justify a departure from the basic policy of postponing appellate review until after the entry of a final judgment." Fisons Ltd. v. United States, 458 F.2d 1241, 1248 (7th Cir.1972).

I decline to certify for intermediate appeal either of the issues defendants raise. The subject matter jurisdiction issue presents a controlling question of law because a determination of no subject matter jurisdiction would end the case. However, if the facts are as plaintiffs allege, defendants' activities clearly involved import commerce and/or had a direct, substantial and foreseeable effect on American consumers and as a result the issue is only marginally contestable. Moreover, an interlocutory appeal is unlikely to speed up resolution of the issue. This is so not only because [17] an appeal would take considerable time but also because I can revisit the issue if discovery indicates that defendants' activities were less oriented toward the American market than it appears.

The question of whether plaintiffs' amended complaint states a claim likely presents a controlling question of law. See In re Text Messaging, 630 F.3d at 626. However, the question is not contestable. This is so because in In re Text Messaging, the Seventh Circuit considered the pleading standard and stated that direct evidence of an agreement to raise prices would be a "smoking gun" sufficient to state a plausible antitrust claim. Id. at 628-29. In the present case, plaintiffs' complaint identifies an admission that defendants no longer compete on price and have achieved very high profit margins by working together to jointly develop the American market. Thus, HN10[] the question of whether plaintiffs' complaint satisfies the pleading standard involves the routine application of a settled legal standard to facts alleged in a complaint and does not present the type of exceptional circumstance justifying an interlocutory appeal. See id. at 626-27.

Therefore, for the reasons stated, defendants' motions [18] for reconsideration or in the alternative for a certificate of an interlocutory appeal are DENIED.

ORDER GRANTING AU OPTRONICS CORPORATION'S MOTION TO COMPEL ARBITRATION

On February 18, 2011, the Court heard argument on AU Optronics Corporation's ("AUO") Motion to Compel Arbitration. Having considered the arguments of counsel and the papers submitted, the Court hereby GRANTS AUO's Motion.

BACKGROUND

Plaintiff Nokia Corporation, a Finnish company, is a "global leader in the design, manufacture, and supply of mobile wireless handsets." First Amended Complaint ("FAC"), ¶30. Plaintiff Nokia, Inc. is an American subsidiary of Nokia Corporation. FAC, ¶31. On November 25, 2009, Nokia Corporation and Nokia Inc. (collectively, "Nokia") filed suit in this Court against numerous domestic and foreign defendants, [*23] including AUO, for violations of state and federal antitrust laws.

Nokia's First Amended Complaint alleges a global price-fixing conspiracy by suppliers of liquid crystal display ("LCD") panels. It alleges that during the conspiracy period (1996-2006), "LCDs used in mobile wireless handsets included at least five different types of active and passive matrix technologies: TFT-LCD, thin film diode ('TFD'), color super-twist nematic ('CSTN'), film super-twist nematic ('FSTN'), and monochrome super-twist nematic ('MSTN'). Defendants' and their co-conspirators' price-fixing conspiracy alleged herein had the effect of raising, fixing, maintaining, and/or stabilizing the prices of TFT-LCDs as well as non-TFT LCDs, including TFD, CSTN, FSTN, and MSTN LCDs." FAC, ¶24.

Plaintiffs' first claim for relief seeks treble damages and injunctive relief under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, and Sections 4 and 16 of the Clayton Act. The second claim for relief seeks treble damages and injunctive relief under California's Cartwright Act and Unfair Competition Laws, as well as the antitrust, consumer protection, unfair trade and deceptive practices laws of Florida and Nevada. Id. [*24] Prayer for Relief, ¶A (I-ii).

Defendant AUO filed an answer to Nokia's amended complaint on August 27, 2010. Doc. 68.[1] In its answer, AUO asserted a number of affirmative defenses, the fifty-second of which reads, in its entirety, as follows: "To the extent Nokia has agreed to arbitration or chosen a different forum for the resolution of its claims against AUO, its claims are barred and should be dismissed." Id. at 37. On January 7, 2011, AUO filed a motion to compel arbitration and stay the court proceedings. Doc. 76.

LEGAL STANDARD

Section 4 of the Federal Arbitration Act ("FAA") permits "a party aggrieved by the alleged failure, neglect, or refusal of another to arbitrate under a written agreement for arbitration [to] petition any United States District Court . . . for an order directing that . . . arbitration proceed in the manner provided for in [the arbitration] agreement." [*25] 9 U.S.C. § 4. Upon a showing that a party has failed to comply with a valid arbitration agreement, the district court must issue an order compelling arbitration. Id.

International commercial arbitration agreements involving a United States corporation are governed by Chapter 2 of the FAA, which codifies the United Nations Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral

[1] AUO initially filed its answer in the consolidated MDL case, No. 07-1827 but failed to file it in the individual case, No. 09-5609. AUO then filed a stipulation that allowed AUO to file the answer in the individual case nunc pro tunc to August 27, 2010. Doc. 68. The Court signed an order accordingly. Doc. 73.

Awards (the "New York Convention" or "Convention"). 9 U.S.C. § 206. A district court may compel arbitration not only in its own district but also in a foreign location if the proposed arbitration is governed by the Convention. Id. Arbitration agreements governed by the New York Convention are also governed by Chapter 1 of the FAA to the extent that the FAA and the Convention are not in conflict. 9 U.S.C. § 208.

The Supreme Court has stated that the FAA espouses a general policy favoring arbitration agreements. Moses H. Cone Mem'l Hosp. v. Mercury Constr. Corp., 460 U.S. 1, 24-25, 103 S. Ct. 927, 74 L. Ed. 2d 765 (1983); see also Hall Street Assocs., L.L.C. v. Mattel, Inc., 552 U.S. 576, 581, 128 S. Ct. 1396, 170 L. Ed. 2d 254 (2008). Federal courts are required to rigorously enforce an agreement to arbitrate. See Hall Street Assocs., 552 U.S. at 582. Courts are also directed [*26] to resolve any "ambiguities as to the scope of the arbitration clause itself . . . in favor of arbitration." Volt Info. Sciences, Inc. v. Bd. of Trustees of Leland Stanford Jr. Univ., 489 U.S. 468, 476, 109 S. Ct. 1248, 103 L. Ed. 2d 488 (1989). The federal policy favoring enforcement of arbitration agreements "applies with special force in the field of international commerce." Mitsubishi Motors Corp. v. Soler Chrysler-Plymouth, Inc., 473 U.S. 614, 631, 105 S. Ct. 3346, 87 L. Ed. 2d 444 (1985).

The Ninth Circuit has held that, in determining whether to issue an order compelling arbitration under the New York Convention, the Court may not review the merits of the dispute but must limit its inquiry to determining whether:

> (1) there is an agreement in writing within the meaning of the Convention; (2) the agreement provides for arbitration in the territory of a signatory of the Convention; (3) the agreement arises out of a legal relationship, whether contractual or not, which is considered commercial; and (4) a party to the agreement is not an American citizen, or that the commercial relationship has some reasonable relation with one or more foreign states.

Balen v. Holland America Line Inc., 583 F.3d 647, 654-55 (9th Cir. 2009) (citation omitted). "If these [*27] questions are answered in the affirmative, a court is required to order arbitration unless the court finds the agreement to be null and void, inoperative, or incapable of being performed." Prograph Intern. Inc. v. Barhydt, 928 F. Supp. 983, 988 (N.D. Cal. 1996) (citation omitted); see also 9 U.S.C. § 4.

The FAA provides that arbitration agreements generally "shall be valid, irrevocable, and enforceable, save upon such grounds as exist at law or in equity for the revocation of any contract." 9 U.S.C. § 2. However, the strong presumption in favor of arbitration "does not confer a right to compel arbitration of any dispute at any time." Volt, 489 U.S. at 474. This is because "arbitration is a matter of contract and a party cannot be required to submit to arbitration any dispute which he has not agreed so to submit." United Steelworkers v. Warrior & Gulf Navigation Co., 363 U.S. 574, 582, 80 S. Ct. 1347, 4 L. Ed. 2d 1409 (1960); see also McDonnell Douglas Finance Corp. v. Pennsylvania Power & Light Co., 858 F.2d 825, 831 (2d Cir. 1988) (stating that the purpose of the FAA is to "make arbitration agreements as enforceable as other contracts, but not more so") (citation omitted). Additional grounds for declining to enforce [*28] an arbitration agreement include unconscionability and party waiver. See Rent-A-Center, West, Inc. v. Jackson, 130 S. Ct. 2772, 2776, 177 L. Ed. 2d 403 (2010) (unconscionability); Moses, 460 U.S. at 24-25 (waiver).

DISCUSSION

AUO and Nokia entered into a Product Purchase Agreement ("PPA") in 2005. That PPA included an arbitration clause that reads, in full:

> Any disputes related to this Agreement or its enforcement shall be resolved and settled by arbitration in the English language in London, England, in accordance with the Arbitration Rules of the ICC. The decision of the arbitrators shall be final, binding, and executable. The arbitration shall be the exclusive remedy of the Parties to the dispute.

Blumenstein Decl. Ex. A at 16, ¶27.2. The parties agreed that the PPA would apply "retroactively to previous deliveries." Id. at 15, ¶25.1. The parties also agreed to a provision stating that "[n]o waiver is effective unless in writing in each separate case and signed by both Parties." Id. at 16, ¶26.2. At the bottom of each page of the PPA, there is a copyright notice that reserves all rights in the document to Nokia, indicating that Nokia was likely the drafter of the contract.

The parties dispute whether the [*29] PPA should be interpreted to govern Nokia's claims and whether AUO has waived any right to demand arbitration. This Court must consider these issues in light of the specific circumstances of this dispute as well as the federal judiciary's "strong belief in the efficacy of arbitral procedures for the resolution of international commercial disputes[.]" Mitsubishi, 473 U.S. at 631; see also Moses, 460 U.S. at 24-25. As "the party resisting arbitration[, Nokia] bears the burden of proving that the claims at issue are unsuitable for arbitration." See Green Tree Financial Corp.-Alabama v. Randolph, 531 U.S. 79, 91, 121 S. Ct. 513, 148 L. Ed. 2d 373 (2000).

I. The Arbitration Agreement Governs the Current Dispute

In order to determine whether Nokia's claims are subject to the parties' arbitration agreement, this Court must first evaluate whether the agreement was valid under the Ninth Circuit's four-factor Balen test. If the agreement is found to be valid under the Balen test, the Court must then determine whether any other reason exists to find the agreement to be unenforceable.

A. The Balen Test

A finding of validity under the Balen test requires that four factors be established: (1) a written agreement that (2) includes a provision [*30] that requires arbitration in the territory of a signatory of the Convention, (3) arises out of a commercial legal relationship, whether contractual or not, and (4) has an international element, such as a party to the agreement who is not an American citizen, or a commercial relationship with one or more foreign states. Balen, 583 F.3d at 654-55.

The parties in this matter do not dispute that the PPA, which is a written and signed agreement, includes an arbitration agreement. Neither do they dispute that the PPA arose out of their commercial and contractual relationship. Both parties have international headquarters and American divisions. Therefore, all of the factors are present and the agreement is valid under the Balen test.

B. Grounds for Non-Enforcement

Nokia has not asserted any of the more commonly proffered reasons for seeking non-enforcement of an arbitration agreement, such as fraud, duress, or unconscionability. Instead, Nokia argues that its current claims, which relate to an alleged price-fixing conspiracy, exist wholly apart from the parties' contractual relationship and are thus not governed by the PPA and its arbitration agreement.

The reasoning that Nokia offers to support [*31] this argument falls short of the "forceful evidence" required, because the broad language of the arbitration clause allows for an interpretation that would cover all claims related, though not integral, to the contractual relationship. In its complaint, Nokia specifically alleged that "Nokia Corporation contracted with various Defendants regarding the prices and volumes of LCDs that Nokia Corporation and Nokia Inc. purchased in the United States and elsewhere." FAC, ¶32. This indicates that the claims in this case, which involve allegations of price-fixing, are in fact related to the parties' contractual relationship.

Nokia is correct that "a party can only be compelled to arbitrate those claims that it agreed to arbitrate." Opp. Brief at 15. The argument that Nokia did not agree to arbitrate the claims currently before the Court, however, is unpersuasive. The Supreme Court has held in several cases that arbitration clauses are to be read broadly and that any ambiguity must be read in favor of arbitration. See e.g. Volt, 489 U.S. at 476; see also AT&T Techs., Inc. v. Commc'ns Workers of Am., 475 U.S. 643, 650, 106 S. Ct. 1415, 89 L. Ed. 2d 648 (1986) ("Finally, it has been established that where the contract contains [*32] an arbitration clause, there is a presumption of arbitrability in the sense that '[a]n order to arbitrate the particular grievance should not be denied unless it may be said with positive assurance that the arbitration clause is not susceptible of an interpretation that covers the asserted dispute. Doubts should be resolved in favor of coverage . . . [i]n the absence of any express provision excluding a particular grievance from arbitration, we think only the most forceful evidence of a purpose to exclude the claim from arbitration can prevail.'") (internal citations omitted).

The language of the PPA states that "any disputes related to this Agreement" must be arbitrated. Blumenstein Decl. Ex. A, 16, ¶27.2 (emphasis added). This is similar to the language analyzed by the Ninth Circuit in Simula, Inc. v. Autoliv, Inc., 175 F.3d 716 (9th Cir. 1999). In Simula, the two parties entered into a contractual relationship in which Simula was to provide Autoliv with certain car parts that Autoliv would then deliver to BMW. Id. at 718. The contract included an arbitration clause that stated that it would apply to "[a]ll disputes arising in connection with this Agreement[.]" Id. at 720. Autoliv [*33] then began producing similar car parts that it marketed in direct competition with Simula's products. Id. at 718. Simula brought suit, alleging violations of antitrust, trade secret, trademark, and defamation laws. Id. at 719. Autoliv moved to compel arbitration under the parties' contract, and Simula objected, arguing that its claims were outside the scope of the agreement. Id. The Ninth Circuit determined that > the language "arising in connection with" reaches every dispute between the parties having a significant relationship to the contract and all disputes having their origin or genesis in the contract . . . To require arbitration, [a party's] factual allegations need only "touch matters" covered by the contract containing the arbitration clause and all doubts are to be resolved in favor of arbitrability.

Id. at 721. The Ninth Circuit therefore ordered the parties to arbitration. Id. at 726. See also Chiron Corp. v. Ortho Diagnostic Sys., Inc., 207 F.3d 1126, 1131 (9th Cir. 2000) ("The record here leaves little doubt that the dispute is subject to arbitration . . . The parties' arbitration clause is broad and far reaching: 'Any dispute, controversy or claim arising out of or relating [*34] to the validity, construction, enforceability or performance of this Agreement . . . .'") (emphasis added).

Under the Ninth Circuit's reasoning, the language "related to" must be read broadly, to encompass any matter that touches the contractual relationship between the parties. This must include matters that, while not arising directly under the contractual relationship, are nevertheless related to it. Nokia's antitrust claims, while existing outside of the parties' contractual relationship, nevertheless relate to the parties' relationship. See, e.g., FAC, ¶7 ("Defendants'[sic] . . . raised the prices of LCDs and LCD Products above the price that would have prevailed in a competitive market. During the Conspiracy Period, Nokia . . . purchased [LCD-related] Products . . . Nokia suffered damages as a result . . . ."). All of the purchases at issue in this case were made under the PPA. Nokia's current unfair competition and antitrust claims therefore "touch matters" addressed by the agreement and are sufficiently related to be covered under the agreement's broad language. See JLM Indus. v. Stolt-Nielsen SA, 387 F.3d 163, 172-75 (2d Cir. 2004) (holding that an arbitration clause that read [*35] "[a]ny and all differences and disputes of whatsoever nature arising out of this Charter shall be put to arbitration . . . ." was broad enough to encompass plaintiff's collateral antitrust claims).

Nokia offers an alternative interpretation of the holding in Simula, namely that in order to find that a dispute "touches matters" addressed by the agreement, it is also necessary to find that some reference to the contract is essential to determining the outcome of the dispute. The Ninth Circuit did note that "resolution here of [the plaintiff's] antitrust claims will necessitate interpreting the 1995 Agreement to determine its meaning and whether the contracts between [the parties] actually do suppress competition as alleged." 175 F.3d at 722. However, the Ninth Circuit mentioned this as one reason supporting the decision to compel arbitration, not as a condition precedent to doing so. The holding in Simula does not incorporate this as a necessary component of the "touch matters" test, nor have subsequent courts applying this test required this contractual-interpretation element. See, e.g. In re Currency Conversion Fee Litigation, 265 F. Supp. 2d 385, 410 (S.D.N.Y. 2003).[2] Moreover, the [*36] "touch matters" test was first endorsed by the Supreme Court in Mitsubishi. 473 U.S. at 624 n.13. Nothing in Mitsubishi, however, discusses the relevance of contractual interpretation to the determination of arbitrability. Therefore, Nokia's current claims are subject to the arbitration clause contained in the PPA.

[2] During oral argument, the parties discussed two cases extensively: In re Currency Conversion Fee Litigation, 265 F. Supp. 2d 385 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) and Bischoff v. DirecTV, Inc., 180 F. Supp. 2d 1097 (C.D. Cal. 2002), both of which were cited in AUO's reply. While it is true that the precise factual allegations of these cases differ from those currently before the Court, their holdings are consistent with this decision. Currency Conversion addressed credit cardholder allegations that credit card networks and banks had conspired to artificially raise the fees for foreign currency conversions performed by credit card companies. 265 F.

Nokia also argues that its claims should be treated as exempt from the arbitration agreement, or in the alternative that pre-2005 and post-2005 claims should be separated, because at least some portion of the actions on which Nokia bases its claim for damages took place before Nokia signed the PPA. AUO, however, contends that the agreement was intended to cover all dealings between the companies, including those that took place prior to 2005. Neither party has provided persuasive authority in support of its position outside of the contract itself. However, it is true that the PPA includes a term specifically stating that the agreement as a whole applies retroactively. Blumenstein Decl. Ex. A, 15, ¶25.1. Additionally, the PPA included an integration [*39] clause stating that the PPA "supersedes all previous arrangements, communication and agreements between the Parties in relation to the subject matter of this Agreement." Id. at ¶28.1.

The ultimate question for this Court is whether the parties knowingly entered into an agreement to submit a dispute such as the one presently before the Court to arbitration. Based on the language of the PPA, the answer to that question must be yes. The broad language of the arbitration agreement, combined with the explicit statement that the PPA must be read retroactively, as the final, integrated contract between the parties, indicates that the intent of the parties, at the time of the contract's conclusion, was to submit all disputes relating to the contractual relationship, regardless of whether the actions giving rise to the dispute occurred before or after the signing of the contract, to binding arbitration. This Court is bound to give meaning to the parties' intent as specified in the PPA, regardless of Nokia's present desire to alter the terms of that contract. The fact that Nokia drafted the PPA, as acknowledged by counsel at the hearing and indicated by the copyright notice, further weighs against [*40] Nokia's current request for the Court to derogate from the written contents of the contract.

Accordingly, this Court finds that the PPA and its arbitration agreement govern Nokia's present claims against AUO insofar as those claims relate to Nokia's purchases from AUO. Nokia remains free to proceed with its claims against AUO's alleged co-conspirators that are based upon purchases from AUO. It also may proceed with its claims that are based upon purchases from defendants other than AUO.

II. AUO Has Not Waived Its Right To Request Arbitration

Nokia also contends that, even if the PPA applies to Nokia's present claims, AUO implicitly waived its right to compel arbitration by engaging in aggressive litigation tactics over a fourteen month period. AUO responds that its actions have not been inconsistent with its intent to arbitrate, that Nokia has failed to demonstrate that it would suffer any prejudice if the parties were sent to arbitration, and that the PPA requires any waiver to be in writing.

Supp. 2d at 396-96. Bischoff addressed customer allegations that DirecTV had conspired with other companies to create a monopoly over the "distribution and sale of high-power direct satellite service and equipment." 180 F. Supp. 2d at 1102. Both [*37] cases dealt with the arbitrability of antitrust claims based on the wording of an arbitration clause; both held that, where the parties signed a broadly worded arbitration agreement, the presumption in favor of arbitration compelled a finding that the antitrust claims were arbitrable. See, e.g. Currency Conversion, 265 F. Supp. 2d at 410 ("In contrast, the arbitration clauses at issue here are quite broad in that they apply to any claim 'arising from or relating in any way to . . . your Account' and 'arising out of or relating to . . . your Account.' . . . [A]fter applying the strong policy in favor of arbitration . . . it is clear that plaintiffs' antitrust claims 'touch matters' covered by [the agreements].") (contrasting the arbitration clause before the court with the clause at issue in Coors Brewing Co. v. Molson Breweries, 51 F.3d 1511 (10th Cir. 1995) in which the Tenth Circuit held that language referring specifically to "the implementation, interpretation, and enforcement of the contract" was not broad enough to cover the parties' antitrust dispute); see also Bischoff, 180 F. Supp. 2d at 1106 ("Plaintiffs contend that their claims in this case do not relate to non-performance [*38] by DirecTV under the parties' contract, but rather, relate to DirecTV's illegal conspiracies with other parties in an effort to violate anti-trust laws. . . Plaintiffs allege that they have paid higher prices for services and equipment than they otherwise would have but for DirecTV's alleged anti-competitive acts. These allegations center around DirecTV's services, disputes which clearly fall within the scope of the arbitration clause.").

The Ninth Circuit has established a three part test, called the Fisher test, for determining whether a party has waived its right to compel arbitration: "A party seeking to prove waiver of a right [*41] to arbitration must demonstrate: (1) knowledge of an existing right to compel arbitration; (2) acts inconsistent with that existing right; and (3) prejudice to the party opposing arbitration resulting from such inconsistent acts." Fisher v. A.G. Becker Paribas Inc., 791 F.2d 691, 694 (9th Cir.1986). "However, waiver of the right to arbitration is disfavored because it is a contractual right, and thus any party arguing waiver of arbitration bears a heavy burden of proof." Van Ness Townhouses v. Mar Indus. Corp., 862 F.2d 754, 758 (9th Cir. 1989) (citation omitted).

A. Awareness of the Existence of the Arbitration Clause

Nokia argues that AUO must have been aware of the existence of the arbitration clause. AUO has not challenged this assertion, and therefore, the Court finds that the first prong of the test is satisfied.

B. Actions Inconsistent With an Intent to Arbitrate

Nokia argues that AUO has delayed moving to compel arbitration and chosen instead to participate in the litigation process. Nokia contends that this decision was inconsistent with AUO's right to arbitrate and thereby qualifies as an implicit waiver of that right. Additionally, Nokia argues that AUO's decisions to join the [*42] other defendants' motion to dismiss, file an answer to Nokia's complaint, participate in discovery, and take part in the meet-and-confer process were inconsistent with AUO's right to compel arbitration.

The Ninth Circuit has held that a significant delay may indicate an intent to waive arbitration rights. Van Ness, 862 F.2d at 758. In Van Ness, the party seeking to compel arbitration delayed over two years before moving to compel arbitration. Id. Its motion to compel arbitration was filed after the trial had initially been scheduled to begin, and only three months prior to the continued start date. Id. at 755. The court held that this delay constituted an implicit waiver of the right to compel arbitration. Id.

The case presently before the Court is distinguishable on several levels. First, the delay between Nokia's initial filing and AUO's motion to compel is just over one year, as opposed to the two years found unacceptable in Van Ness. Second, the trial is currently scheduled to begin on November 5, 2012. See No. 07-1827 (MDL Docket), Doc. 2165. This start date was almost two years away when AUO filed its motion to compel, and is still well over a year away as of this decision. Third, [*43] while AUO has participated in various aspects of the litigation, this involvement cannot reasonably be compared to the involvement in Van Ness. The defendant in Van Ness, one of a small group of defendants, apparently chose of its own accord to move forward with litigation. Van Ness, 862 F.2d at 755-56. In the present case, by contrast, AUO is one of numerous defendants, and Nokia is one of numerous plaintiffs, in a complex multidistrict litigation. The motion to dismiss was not filed by AUO itself; while AUO chose to join the motion, it can hardly be considered the equivalent to filing such a motion independently. Moreover, the Ninth Circuit has held that even where a party files a motion to dismiss, this alone will not be sufficient to constitute a waiver of the right to compel arbitration. See Sovak v. Chugai Pharmaceutical Co., 280 F.3d 1266, 1270 (9th Cir. 2002). The same is true of each of AUO's actions; while they might not be wholly consistent with an intent to arbitrate, neither are they inherently inconsistent with that right, without an additional showing of prejudice to Nokia.

One of the few actions that can clearly be treated as representing AUO's intent is AUO's answer [*44] to Nokia's amended complaint. Doc. 68. While AUO did not affirmatively demand arbitration in its answer, it did assert that "[t]o the extent Nokia has agreed to arbitration or chosen a different forum for the resolution of its claims against AUO, its claims are barred and should be dismissed." Answer, Doc. 68 at 37. Moreover, the existence of a written waiver requirement in the PPA weighs against a finding of implicit waiver. AUO did not at any point explicitly waive its right to compel arbitration, whereas the reference to arbitration in its answer could be interpreted as an intent to preserve its right. Ultimately, the fact that this is one of a very complex set of cases further cautions the Court against reading too much into AUO's actions, especially in light of the policy disfavoring waiver. Therefore, while the second prong of the Fisher test is less clear, it appears to weigh against a finding of waiver.

C. Prejudice to the Non-Moving Party

Nokia claims that it has been prejudiced by AUO's actions in at least three specific ways. First, Nokia claims that it has been forced to respond to multiple legal challenges from AUO, including the aforementioned motion to dismiss and several [*45] discovery-based motions. Second, Nokia claims that it has been forced to invest significant time and money in pursuing discovery with regard to AUO and that this investment will be for nothing if Nokia is forced to arbitrate, due to different standards relating to discovery in arbitrations. And third, Nokia argues that it has also incurred significant expenses responding to AUO's discovery requests, and that Nokia's prejudice here is amplified because AUO likely would not have been able to insist on such expansive discovery in an arbitration setting.

The Ninth Circuit has strongly indicated that where there is no showing of prejudice, there will likely be no waiver of arbitration rights. See Sovak, 280 F.3d at 1270 ("We conclude that Sovak has not met his burden because he has not shown how he was prejudiced by Cook's delay in moving to compel arbitration."). In the present case, two facts weigh heavily against a finding of prejudice. First, AUO is only one of numerous defendants against which Nokia has brought suit in this proceeding. Therefore, even had AUO moved to compel arbitration immediately after Nokia filed its complaint, Nokia would likely still have been required to answer [*46] the motion to dismiss, comply with discovery requests, and otherwise engage in this litigation. The discovery between Nokia and AUO, it is true, might not have taken place or would have been less extensive had an arbitral proceeding been initiated sooner. However, Nokia may be able to use some of the information is has obtained in the arbitration as well as in its ongoing lawsuits with other defendants on this same issue. Transfer to an arbitral forum will not preclude Nokia from pursuing its claims and Nokia is free to raise these equitable concerns before the arbitrator, who will be in a better position to discern the factual outlines of the discovery dispute.

The parties to this matter are both sophisticated corporations. The arbitration agreement is part of a complex business contract that appears to have been drafted by Nokia. The evidence before the Court does not clearly indicate an intent to waive the right to arbitrate on AUO's part, or significant prejudice on Nokia's; neither does it convey a clear intent to exclude anti-trust or unfair business practice from the scope of the arbitration clause. As the party challenging the motion to compel arbitration, Nokia carries the [*47] heavy burden of proving to the Court that an otherwise enforceable arbitration agreement should not apply to the case at hand, and it must do so in light of the strong federal policy in favor of enforcing arbitration agreements, particularly in the field of international commercial disputes. Nokia has failed to carry that burden.

III. The Litigation Between Nokia and AUO Is Stayed Pending Arbitration

It is within the Court's discretion to stay all or part of the litigation associated with the dispute between Nokia and AUO. United States v. Neumann Caribbean Int'l, Ltd., 750 F.2d 1422, 1427 (9th Cir. 1985); see also Bischoff, 180 F. Supp. 2d at 1114. Alternately, the Court may allow the litigation to run concurrently with arbitral proceedings. Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc. v. Byrd, 470 U.S. 213, 223, 105 S. Ct. 1238, 84 L. Ed. 2d 158 (1985). In light of the many parties associated with this multidistrict litigation, as well as the significant amount of time between now and the scheduled trial date, the Court stays all litigation between Nokia and AUO that involves purchases made by Nokia from AUO. Nokia remains free to pursue litigation with the other alleged co-conspirators.

IV. Modification of the Protective Order

At the [*48] February 18, 2011 hearing on this matter, the parties discussed the possibility of amending the protective order that currently prevents the parties from revealing the details of this multidistrict litigation, in order to allow them to present certain evidence obtained in this litigation to the arbitrator. The Court is amenable to this possibility and requests that the parties meet and confer and present the Court with a proposed order.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons and for good cause shown, the Court hereby GRANTS defendant AUO's Motion to Compel Arbitration. Doc. 76, 78 in 09-5609; Doc. 2283 in 07-1827.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

HN2[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2), a complaint must contain a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) authorizes the dismissal of a complaint if it fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted; therefore, a Rule 12(b)(6) motion tests the legal sufficiency of a complaint. When ruling on such a motion, the court must accept the well-pled allegations of the complaint as true, and construe the facts and reasonable inferences derived therefrom in the light most favorable to the plaintiff.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN3[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A complaint must be dismissed if it does not allege enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. Under the plausibility standard, a complaint must contain more than labels and conclusions or a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action. Well-pleaded factual allegations contained in the complaint are assumed to be true even if they are doubtful in fact, but legal conclusions are not entitled to judicial deference. Thus, even though Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2) marks a notable and generous departure from the hyper-technical, code-pleading regime of a prior era, it does not unlock the doors of discovery for a plaintiff armed with nothing more than conclusions.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN4[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

To survive a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion, the legal framework of the complaint must be supported by factual allegations that raise a right to relief above the speculative level. Threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice to plead a claim. The plausibility standard requires that the pleader show more than a sheer possibility of success, although it does not impose a probability requirement. Instead, a claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged. Thus, a court must draw on its judicial experience and common sense to determine whether the pleader has stated a plausible claim for relief.

HN17[] Civil Conspiracy, Defenses

The intracorporate conspiracy doctrine, developed in the antitrust context, holds that because the acts of corporate agents are attributable to the corporation itself, a corporation lacks the multiplicity of actors required to form a conspiracy. A corporation cannot conspire with its employees, and employees, when acting within the scope of their employment, cannot conspire amongst themselves. The United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit has identified two exceptions to the intracorporate conspiracy doctrine: (1) when a corporate officer has an independent personal stake in achieving the illegal objectives of the corporation; and (2) when the agent's acts are unauthorized.

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit has consistently found that the intracorporate conspiracy doctrine can be broadly applied to conspiracy cases, including civil claims under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961 et seq. The Fourth Circuit has long held that a single entity cannot conspire amongst itself. This principle has consistently been applied outside of the antitrust context.

[*351] MEMORANDUM OPINION

On March 22, 2010, Plaintiffs Bizzie Walters, Annie Hodge, Annette Baldwin, Katrena Cooper and Barbara Allen filed a Class Action Complaint in the United States District Court for the Middle District of Alabama and initiated this class action lawsuit. Plaintiffs name [3] as Defendants twenty-nine current and former Perdue Farms, Inc. ("Perdue") employees. [1] In a one count conspiracy claim, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants conspired to depress the wages of the legal, hourly-paid employees of Perdue in violation of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C. § 1961 et seq. through a scheme of hiring and falsely attesting to the work authorization of large numbers of illegal immigrants.

On May 28, 2010, Defendants filed a motion for joinder of Perdue, transfer of venue and / or dismissal and for stay of discovery. (ECF No. 61). Concurrently, Perdue filed a motion to intervene in the suit. (ECF No. 63). Subsequently, Plaintiffs filed a First Amended Class [4] Action Complaint (ECF No. 80) on June, 18, 2010. Plaintiffs filed this action on behalf of themselves and on behalf of a class consisting of all other persons legally authorized to be employed in the U.S., who have been employed at any of the Perdue facilities identified in this action as hourly wage earners in the four years prior to the filing of this case and up through trial. Am. Compl. ¶ 185. On March 18, 2011, this case was transferred from the Middle District of Alabama to this Court, (ECF No. 147) and on April 5, 2011, Perdue withdrew its motion to intervene. (ECF No. 163).

Presently pending before this Court is Defendants' Motion for Dismissal (ECF No. 61). [2] The Defendants move to dismiss [*352] on the ground that Plaintiffs fail to state a claim for relief under Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) and Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). Plaintiffs have filed a response in opposition to Defendants' motion (ECF No. 179). The parties' submissions have been reviewed and this Court held a hearing on June 9, 2011, pursuant to Local Rule 105.6 (D. Md. 2010) [3]

The Plaintiffs' one count civil RICO claim in this case relies on an expansive legal theory previously rejected by other United States District Courts. Essentially, the claim is that mid-level human resources employees have engaged in a conspiracy to indirectly enrich themselves by causing Perdue to violate United States immigration laws, thereby increasing its net profit, thereby increasing the potentiality of higher salaries for its employees. See infra n.13. This claim is simply not plausible. The logical extent of that legal theory would be to create civil RICO causes of action as to any allegedly illegal human resources decisions made by mid-level corporate employees. Furthermore, even if this theory were plausible, a corporation cannot conspire with its employees and, with rare exception, employees of a corporation, when acting within the scope of their employment, cannot conspire among themselves. No exceptions to this intracorporate conspiracy [6] doctrine, well recognized by the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit, apply in this case. As the Plaintiffs simply have no discernible independent personal stake in this matter, any effort to further amend their complaint would be futile. Accordingly, for the reasons that follow, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss (ECF No. 61) is GRANTED, and this case is DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.

[1] Todd McMahen, Tol Dozier, Nancy Hollis, Alberto Asyn, Elana Asyn, Richard Jamison, Jim Hungate, Amparo Herrera, Maria Salizar Gonzalez, Jeff Beckman, Jerry Layne, David Castro, Angie Wood, Julio Unzueta, Emperatriz "Paola" Beatty, Jim Booth, Terry Ashby, Jeanette Cox, Sandra Herrera, Leslie Cox, Gustavo "Gus" Paez, Randy Brown, Efrem Andrews, Gilberto "Fernando" Rivera, Bennie Gray, Charlie Carpenter, Bel Holden, Rob Helfin, and Gary Miller (collectively, "Defendants").

[2] Defendants' motion to dismiss was filed as part of the joint motion for joinder of Perdue, transfer of venue [5] and stay of discovery, (ECF No. 61) filed in advance of the First Amended Complaint, but still deemed to be applicable to that amended complaint.

[3] The parties agreed that the pending Motion to Dismiss is applicable to the amended complaint.

HN1[] In ruling on a motion to dismiss, "[t]he factual allegations in the Plaintiff's complaint must be accepted as true and those facts must be construed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff." Edwards v. City of Goldsboro, 178 F.3d 231, 244 (4th Cir. 1999).

Defendants are employees of Perdue, the alleged third largest poultry processing company in the United States. Am. Compl. ¶ 6. Perdue is headquartered in Salisbury, Maryland and owns and operates poultry processing facilities in Dothan, Alabama; Perry, Georgia; Monterey, Tennessee; Cromwell, Kentucky; Dillon, South Carolina; Accomac, Virginia; Bridgewater, Virginia; Concord, North Carolina; Georgetown, Delaware; Lewiston, North Carolina; Milford, Delaware; Rockingham, North Carolina; Salisbury, Maryland; and Washington, Indiana. [7] Id. ¶ 3, 4. Plaintiffs allege that "Corporate Co-Conspirators," including defendants Helfin and Miller, conspired with unnamed "Facility Co-Conspirators" and the other named Defendants, employees in Perdue's Human Resources ("HR") departments, to implement a scheme of hiring illegal immigrants. Id. ¶ 43. Plaintiffs allege that these hiring practices save Perdue millions of dollars in labor costs because illegal immigrants will work longer hours for lower wages than American citizens. Id. ¶ 43. Plaintiffs allege that these practices depress the wages of Perdue's legally authorized workers. Id. ¶ 184.

Plaintiffs state that corporate management directs HR managers and their staff members to accept false documents from [*353] illegal immigrants and to falsely attest to the authenticity of such documents in the hiring process. Id. ¶ 45. Plaintiffs allege that Defendants therefore engage in a host of illegal practices, including but not limited to: hiring workers who were previously employed at Perdue using different identifications, hiring workers known to be present in the United States illegally or using facially false documents, and hiring workers who use multiple sets of documents in order [8] to work extra shifts. Id. ¶ 46.

Plaintiffs allege that these practices are pervasive and that a scheme of illegal hiring is in place at each of Perdue's processing facilities. Id. ¶ 184. At the Dothan plant, for example, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants Dozier, Hollis, Alberto Asyn, Elana Fernandez and other unnamed parties in the HR department use "some or all" of the hiring practices alleged in ¶¶ 45-46. Id. ¶ 68. Plaintiffs lay out the corporate hierarchy at the plant, stating that Dozier is responsible for assisting McMahen and other corporate officers in setting the class's wages below market rates. Plaintiffs further assert that McMahen knows and approves of an immigration law conspiracy at the Dothan facility. Id. ¶ 74. Plaintiffs repeat functionally the same argument as to the named Defendants at the Perry facility, Id. ¶¶ 80-90; the Monterey facility, Id. ¶¶ 91- 105; the Cromwell facility, Id. ¶¶ 106-21; the Dillon facility, Id. ¶¶ 122-35; and the Accomac facility, Id. ¶¶ 136-48. Plaintiffs further allege, on information and belief, that the same illegal hiring conspiracy is in place at Perdue's eight other facilities: Bridgewater, Id. ¶¶ 149-52; Concord, Id. ¶¶ 153-56; Georgetown, [9] Id. ¶¶ 157-60; Lewiston, Id. ¶¶ 161-64; Milford, Id. ¶¶ 165-68; Rockingham, Id. ¶¶ 169-72; Salisbury, Id. ¶¶ 173-76 Washington, Id. ¶¶ 177-80.

Plaintiffs allege that Perdue's hiring practices are RICO predicate acts. [4] First, Plaintiffs allege that certain Defendants violated 8 U.S.C. § 1324(a)(3)(A), [5] a predicate offense under 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1)(F), by knowingly hiring hundreds of unauthorized and fraudulently documented workers, who had been brought into the United States from Mexico with assistance. Id. ¶ 53, 54. Second, Plaintiffs allege that certain Defendants violated 18 U.S.C. §§ 1546(b)(1), (2) and (3), racketeering acts under 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1)(B), by accepting fake or fraudulent documents from newly hired workers and making false attestations as to their legal status on I-9 forms. [6] Id. ¶ 56, [4] Section 1961 of RICO defines the operative terms of § 1962 - § 1968. "Racketeering activity" [10] is defined in § 1961 through a set of predicate violations — violations of other enumerated statutes.

[5] "Any person, who, during any 12-month period, knowingly hires for employment at least 10 individuals with actual knowledge that the individuals are aliens as described in subparagraph (B) shall be fined under title 18 or imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both. (B) An alien described in this subparagraph is an alien who — (i) is an unauthorized alien (as defined in section 1324a(h)(3) of this title), and (ii) has been brought into the United States in violation of this subsection." 8 U.S.C. § 1324(a)(3).

[6] All United States employers must complete and retain a Form I-9 for each individual they hire for employment in the United States verifying employment eligibility.

57. Conducting the affairs of an enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity is illegal under 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c), and Plaintiffs therefore allege that Defendants, though their scheme of illegal hiring violated § 1962(d), which finds unlawful any conspiracy to violate § 1962(a)-(c).

II. Standard of Review

HN2[] Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(a)(2), a complaint must contain a "short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure [*354] authorizes the dismissal of a complaint if it fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted; therefore, a Rule 12(b)(6) motion tests the legal sufficiency of a complaint. [11] Edwards v. City of Goldsboro, 178 F.3d 231, 243 (4th Cir. 1999). When ruling on such a motion, the court must "accept the well-pled allegations of the complaint as true," and "construe the facts and reasonable inferences derived therefrom in the light most favorable to the plaintiff." Ibarra v. United States, 120 F.3d 472, 474 (4th Cir. 1997).

HN3[] A complaint must be dismissed if it does not allege "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007); see also Simmons v. United Mort. and Loan Inv., LLC, 634 F.3d 754, 768 (4th Cir. Jan. 21, 2011); Andrew v. Clark, 561 F.3d 261, 266 (4th Cir. 2009). Under the plausibility standard, a complaint must contain "more than labels and conclusions" or a "formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555. Well-pleaded factual allegations contained in the complaint are assumed to be true "even if [they are] doubtful in fact," but legal conclusions are not entitled to judicial deference. See id. (noting that "courts are not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation") (internal quotation marks omitted). Thus, even [12] though Rule 8(a)(2) "marks a notable and generous departure from the hyper-technical, code-pleading regime of a prior era, . . . it does not unlock the doors of discovery for a plaintiff armed with nothing more than conclusions." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, ___ U.S. ___, 129 S. Ct. at 1937, 1950 (2009).

HN4[] To survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, the legal framework of the complaint must be supported by factual allegations that "raise a right to relief above the speculative level." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555. The Supreme Court has explained recently that "[t]hreadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice" to plead a claim. Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949. The plausibility standard requires that the pleader show more than a sheer possibility of success, although it does not impose a "probability requirement." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556. Instead, "[a] claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1937. Thus, a court must "draw on its judicial experience and common sense" to determine whether [13] the pleader has stated a plausible claim for relief. Id.

III. Analysis

A. Failure to State a Claim

HN5[] Under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, it is unlawful for "any person employed by or associated with any enterprise" to conduct "such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity or collection of unlawful debt." 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c). Section 1961 of RICO spells out specific acts which are predicate violations. Section 1961(1)(F) [7] defines a violation of 8 U.S.C. § 1324(a)(3)(A) as a RICO predicate act. Under § 1961(1)(B) [8] violations of 18 U.S.C. §§ 1546(b)(1), [*355] (2) and (3) [9] are likewise predicate offenses.

[7] HN6[] "Any act which is indictable under the Immigration and Nationality Act, section 274 (relating to bringing in and harboring certain aliens), section 274 (relating to aiding or assisting certain aliens to enter the United States), or section 278

HN9[] Under § 1962(d) it is unlawful to conspire to violate any provision of § 1962 (a), (b) or (c) of RICO. To plead a violation of § 1962(d), a plaintiff must allege that "each defendant agreed that another coconspirator would commit two or more acts of racketeering." Proctor v. Metro. Money Store Corp., et al., 645 F. Supp. 2d 464, 477 (D. Md. 2009) (quoting United States v. Pryba, 900 F.2d 748, 760 (4th Cir. 1990)).

Plaintiffs bring a one count conspiracy claim under § 1964(c) [10] or a violation of § 1962(d), alleging predicate violations under § 1324(a)(3)(A) and 18 U.S.C. §§ 1546(b)(1) - (3). Amend Comp. ¶ 181. Plaintiffs assert [15] that Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8, not Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b) should govern the pleading of these claims. Pls.' Opp'n at 14. [11] owever, this Court need not reach a decision on the appropriate pleading standard; Plaintiffs fail to state a claim under the lower threshold of Rule 8, and would necessarily fail under the more rigorous Rule 9(b). [12]

Regardless of the pleading standard applied, Plaintiffs fail to state a claim. Plaintiffs present no more than conclusory allegations to suggest that the Defendants formed a conspiracy under 18 U.S.C. § 1962(d). Plaintiffs allege a scheme of illegal hiring in which supervisors direct HR staff members to violate immigration laws. Amend Comp. ¶ 45. In a similar civil RICO case alleging predicate violations of §1324(a) and §1546 brought in the Northern District of Alabama, the Court explained HN12[] the standard of pleading under § 1962(d), stating that plaintiffs must "describe in detail the conspiracy, including the identity of the co-conspirators, the object of the conspiracy and the date and substance of the conspiratorial [17] agreement." Cruz v. Cinram Intl. Inc., 574 F. Supp. 2d 1227, 1236 (N.D. Ala. 2008). Here, Plaintiffs fail to provide any facts indicative of such an agreement, including when or where the agreement took place, or the specific substance of any communications between management and HR staff [*356] regarding hiring policy. Plaintiffs do not state facts sufficient to present a "plausible" claim under Twombly.

Plaintiffs also fail to adequately plead agreement to the conspiracy on the part of each defendant, as required by the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit in United States v. Pryba, 900 F.2d 748, 760 (4th Cir. 1990). In Pryba, the court found that to support a conspiracy conviction under § 1962(d), each defendant must agree that he or another would violate § 1962(c). Id. at 760. Plaintiffs repeat that at each facility Defendants use (relating to import of aliens for immoral purpose) if the act indictable under such section of Act was committed for the purpose of financial gain." 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1)(F).

[8] HN7[] "(B) any act which is indictable under any of the following provisions of title 18, United States Code: section 1546 (relating [14] to fraud and misuse of visa, permits and other documents)." 18 U.S.C § 1961(1)(B).

[9] HN8[] "Whoever uses — (1) an identification document, knowing (or having reason to know) that the document was not issued lawfully for the use of the possessor, (2) an identification document knowing (or having reason to know) that the document is false, or (3) a false attestation, for the purpose of satisfying a requirement of section 274A(b) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, shall be fined under this title, imprisoned for not more than 5 years or both." 18 U.S.C. § 1546(b)(1)-(3).

[10] HN10[] "Any person injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of section 1962 of this chapter may sue therefor in any appropriate United States district court and shall recover threefold the damages he sustains and the cost of the suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee, except that no person may rely upon any conduct that would have been actionable as fraud in the purchase or sale or securities to establish a violation of section 1962." 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c).

[11] The Defendants have alternatively argued that the complaint does not satisfy the pleading requirement of either Rule 8 or Rule 9(b).

[12] Parenthetically, this Court will note, however, that HN11[] it appears that Rule 9(b) does apply to the allegations of false attestation which are part of the claims under §§ 1546(b)(1), (2) and (3). The pleading standard of Rule 9(b) [16] applies to "all averments of fraud." Hershey v. MNC Fin., Inc., 774 F. Supp. 367, 376 (D. Md. 1991). This Court recently found that when the alleged racketeering sounds in fraud, plaintiffs asserting RICO claims must meet the pleading standard of Rule 9(b). Kun Lee v. PMG 1001, LLC, No. RDB-09-1514, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2103, 2010 WL 14823 at *3 (D. Md. January 11, 2010). Plaintiffs' claims of "false attestation" under §1546 sound in fraud and therefore should meet the Rule 9(b) pleading standard.

"some or all" of the illicit hiring practices alleged, Am. Compl. ¶ 71, but Plaintiffs fail to detail the personal agreement or involvement of each defendant. Moreover, as to eight of the Perdue facilities, Plaintiffs offer no facts supporting their allegations of predicate violations and conspiracy. They have pled on information and belief alone. [18] Plaintiffs' claims rest heavily on conjecture; they have not advanced their allegations beyond a "speculative level" as Twombly requires. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555.

Plaintiffs' claims as to the predicate RICO violations are similarly insufficient. In Beck v. Prupis, the Supreme Court held that HN13[] "injury caused by an overt act that is not an act of racketeering or otherwise wrongful under RICO is not sufficient to give rise to a cause of action under § 1964(c) for a violation of § 1962(d)." 529 U.S. 494, 505, 120 S. Ct. 1608, 146 L. Ed. 2d 561 (2000). Thus Plaintiffs must plead facts sufficient to support a plausible inference that the alleged conspiracy actually gave rise to acts of racketeering which were the proximate cause of the Plaintiffs' injury.

HN14[] A violation § 1324(a)(3)(A) occurs when an individual knowingly hires at least 10 individuals who are aliens, with knowledge that these individuals were brought into the United States in violation of the subsection. Plaintiffs' pleading of this predicate violation is simply a recitation of the statute:

> "They have personally hired hundreds of workers (and more than ten per year, each) with actual knowledge that the workers were unauthorized for employment, used fraudulent identity [19] documents that did not pertain / relate to them, and had been brought into the country with the assistance of others on their illicit journey across the U.S.-Mexico border. . . ."

Am. Compl. ¶ 54. Plaintiffs do not identify a single worker specifically known to be an illegal alien. Rather, Plaintiffs only allege in a conclusory fashion that Defendants at various facilities "observe[] the largely illegal workforce and know[] that most of these people are not U.S. citizens." Am. Compl. ¶ 83. Additionally, Plaintiffs allegations as to the means by which the illegal workers were brought into the country are unfounded. Plaintiffs state only: "on information and belief, Defendant Paez is also responsible for directly working with 'coyotes' and 'runners' to obtain employment at Perdue for the illegal immigrants when they arrive in the local community." Id. ¶ 108. This conclusion is not supported by any facts and is not entitled to judicial deference.

Plaintiffs likewise fail to state a claim under the predicate violation of 18 U.S.C. §§ 1546(b)(1)-(3). Plaintiffs explain that Defendants attest, under penalty of perjury, to the veracity of workers' identification documents when filling out I-9 [20] forms. Id. ¶ 58. Plaintiffs' complaint states: "this is a false attestation because the HR staff members know the documents presented are fake / fraudulent." Id. ¶ 58. The HR staff's alleged knowledge stems from being "directed by their superiors to accept . . . false documents and make these false attestations," and from the alleged hiring [*357] practices themselves, which include "hiring workers who are known to have previously been employed at Perdue under different identities" or "hiring workers whose background information . . . is plainly invalid and / or inconsistent on its face." Id. ¶ 46. Plaintiffs again fail to give any specific examples of known illegal employees, workers whose papers were found to be facially fraudulent or workers hired for multiple shifts using dual identities. Plaintiffs do not provide any underlying facts supporting the statement that these practices are taking place.

Additionally, HN15[] under § 1964(c) a Plaintiff must plead injury to "business or property by reason of" the violation of the violation of § 1962(d). Plaintiffs allege that the "hourly wages for the Class . . . are depressed below market levels (the going rate for unskilled labor in the area by employers [21] which do not employ illegal workers)." Am. Compl. ¶ 73. Plaintiffs state no underlying data or figures to support assertion. The complaint states no facts addressing: (1) the wages of any class members (2) the market wage of area employers who do not employ illegal workers (3) how the Plaintiffs can purport to determine which area employers do and do not "employ illegal workers" for purposes of calculating market wages. Plaintiffs, therefore, cannot sustain a claim because they fail to "raise a right to relief above a speculative level." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555.

This Court's decision to dismiss this case is bolstered by the recent failure of substantially similar civil RICO claims relying on identical legal theories brought in district courts throughout the country. See Nichols v. Mahoney, 608 F. Supp. 2d 526 (S.D.N.Y. 2009); Trollinger v. Tyson Foods, 543 F. Supp. 2d 842 (E.D. Tenn. 2008); Hall v. Thomas, 753 F. Supp. 2d 1113 (N.D. Ala. 2010). [13] n Nichols, for example, the Southern District of New York dismissed a civil RICO claim alleging the same predicate violations of immigration statutes as in the instant case. As in this case, the Nichols court found that the plaintiffs failed [22] to provide adequate factual information to sustain a claim, and noted that HN16[] unlawful employment of aliens is not a RICO predicate act — only the hiring of "illegal aliens who are known to have been smuggled ('brought') into the United States" qualifies as a RICO predicate offense. Nichols, 608 F. Supp. 2d at 534.

Moreover, while Plaintiffs rely heavily in their analysis on the Williams v. Mohawk Indus., Inc., 465 F.3d 1277 (11th Cir. 2006) [23] line of cases, [14] Mohawk is readily distinguishable from the instant case. In Mohawk, the conspiracy outlined involved named third party recruiters who conspired with Mohawk employees to bring undocumented aliens across the border for employment purposes. Id. at 1281-2. In this case, by contrast, the conspiracy alleged involves no third party efforts and the complaint contains almost no facts regarding [*358] the arrival of the allegedly illegal workers in the United States. Moreover, Mohawk was decided pre-Iqbal, limiting its precedential value. Nichols, 608 F. Supp. 2d at 538. Substantial reliance on Mohawk does little to advance Plaintiffs' claims.

B. The Intracorporate Conspiracy Doctrine

Even if Plaintiffs' claims were sufficiently plausible, they are nevertheless barred by the intracorporate conspiracy doctrine. HN17[] The intracorporate conspiracy doctrine, developed in the antitrust context, holds that because the acts of corporate agents are attributable to the corporation itself, a corporation lacks the multiplicity of actors required to [24] form a conspiracy. Marmott v. Maryland Lumber Co., 807 F.2d 1180, 1184 (4th Cir. 1986). As this Court has previously noted, a corporation cannot conspire with its employees — and employees, when acting within the scope of their employment, cannot conspire amongst themselves. AGV Sports Group, Inc. v. Protus IP Solutions, Inc., No. RDB 08-3388, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 58264, 2009 WL 1921152, at *4-5 (D. Md. July 1, 2009). The United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit has identified two exceptions to the intracorporate conspiracy doctrine: (1) when a corporate officer has an "independent personal stake" in achieving the illegal objectives of the corporation, Greenville Publ'g Co. v. Daily Reflector, Inc., 496 F.2d 391, 399 (4th Cir. 1974); Shoregood Water Co. v. United States Bottling Co., No. RDB 08-2470, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 69624, 2009 WL 2461689 at *7 (D. Md. Aug. 10, 2009); and (2) when the agent's acts are unauthorized. Buschi v. Kirven, 775 F.2d 1240, 1252-3 (4th Cir. 1985).

In United States v. Gwinn, No. 5:06-cv-00267, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26361, 2008 WL 867927 (S.D. W. Va. Mar. 31 2008), the Southern District of West Virginia engaged in a thorough review of the Fourth Circuit's continued application of the intracorporate conspiracy doctrine in civil RICO [25] cases in light of the Supreme Court's decision in Cedric Kushner Promotions Ltd. v. Don King et al., 533 U.S. 158, 121 S. Ct. 2087, 150 L. Ed. 2d 198 (2001). In Cedric Kushner, the Supreme Court found that a corporation's sole proprietor could be a natural person, and also an "enterprise" for the purposes of establishing liability under § 1962(c). Id. at 163. The Court made clear, however, that its holding created no inconsistency with "antitrust law's intracorporate conspiracy doctrine." Id. at 166. The court in Gwinn explained that while some courts have viewed Cedric Kushner as an indication that the intracorporate conspiracy doctrine should not be extended to RICO claims brought under § 1962(d) HN18[] the Fourth Circuit has consistently found that the intracorporate conspiracy doctrine can be broadly applied to conspiracy cases, including civil RICO claims. Gwinn, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26361, 2008 WL 867927 at * 22-23 (citing Detrick v. Panalpina Inc., 108 F.3d 529, 544 (4th Cir. 1997)). While the Fourth Circuit has yet to rule directly on this issue, Cedric Kushner should not change this Circuit's analysis of the applicability of the intracorporate conspiracy doctrine to non-antitrust cases. See Culver v. JBC Legal Group, P.C., No. 5:04-cv-389, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 45426, 2005 WL 5621875, at *6 (W.D.N.C. June 28, 2005) [26] (unpublished) (holding that the intracorporate conspiracy doctrine is not limited to antitrust cases).

[13] Two legally and factually analogous cases against poultry processors, Trollinger v. Tyson Foods, 543 F. Supp. 2d 842 (E.D. Tenn. 2008) and Hall v. Thomas, 753 F. Supp. 2d 1113 (N.D. Ala. 2010), were found to be without merit and were decided for the defendants on summary judgment. While these cases did survive motions to dismiss, both cases were filed pre-Iqbal and therefore are of limited value in analyzing the legal sufficiency of the pleading in the instant case. Both Trollinger and Hall are nevertheless indicative of the lack of factual backing characterizing this particular strain of civil RICO cases based on alleged use of illegal immigrant labor. In both cases, defendants were subjected to a lengthy discovery process for identical allegations.

[14] Williams v. Mohawk Indus., Inc., 314 F. Supp. 2d 1333 (N.D. Ga. 2004), aff'd in part, rev'd in part on other grounds by 465 F.3d 1277 (11th Cir. 2006).

The Fourth Circuit has long held that "a single entity cannot conspire amongst itself." Gwinn, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26361, 2008 WL 867927, at * 23 (quoting Cohn v. Bond, 953 F.2d 154, 159 (4th Cir. 1991)). This principle has consistently been applied outside of the antitrust context. See, e.g., Buschi, 775 F.2d at 1253 (holding the intracorporate conspiracy doctrine applicable to cases arising under 42 U.S.C. § 1983). Addressing [*359] § 1962(d) specifically, district courts in the Fourth Circuit pre-Cedric Kushner uniformly held that the intracorporate conspiracy doctrine can act to bar civil RICO claims brought under this section. Sadighi v. Daghighfekr, 36 F. Supp. 2d, 279 (D.S.C. 1999); Huntingdon Life Sciences, Inc. v. Rokke, 986 F. Supp. 982, 991 (E.D. Va. 1997); Broussard v. Meineke Discount Muffler Shops, Inc., 945 F. Supp. 901, 911-12 (W.D.N.C. 1996) rev'd on other grounds, 155 F. 3d 331 (4th Cir. 1998).

Post-Cedric Kusher, the Fourth Circuit has continued to apply the intracorporate conspiracy doctrine in non-antitrust conspiracy cases. See ePlus Tech., Inc. v. Aboud, 313 F.3d 166 (4th Cir. 2002) (noting the [27] general applicability of the intracorporate conspiracy doctrine to a non-antitrust conspiracy claim); [15] Lewin v. Cooke, 28 F.App'x 186 (4th Cir. 2002) (unpublished) (applying the intracorporate conspiracy doctrine to a state law conspiracy claim). In ePlus, for example, the court affirmed its pre-Cedric Kushner stance that "it is generally true that under the intracorporate immunity doctrine . . . corporate employees cannot conspire with each other or with the corporation." 313 F.3d at 179. Thus, claims brought under § 1962(d) likewise continue to be governed by the intracorporate conspiracy doctrine.

Applying the doctrine to the instant case, it is clear that Plaintiffs' claims are barred. The Defendants are all current or former employees [28] of Perdue acting within the scope of their employment, Am. Compl. ¶ 45, and, as such, cannot conspire amongst themselves. Neither recognized exception applies. Plaintiffs specifically state that the Defendants were directed by management to pursue the particular hiring policy here alleged — there was no action outside the scope of the agents' authority. Id. Likewise, the independent personal stake exception has no bearing here. For that exception to apply, a conspirator must possess a personal interest independent and "wholly separable" from the interests of the corporation. Selman v. Am. Sports Underwriters, Inc., 697 F. Supp. 225, 239 (W.D. Va. 1988). See Greenville Publ'g Co., 496 F.2d at 399; Gwinn, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26361, 2008 WL 867927, at *25 ("Where a corporation's success is directly dependent on the agent's success in furthering the illegal activity, the two are directly related and are not 'wholly independent' of one another."). Plaintiffs here allege no interest on the part of the Defendants independent of their relationship with the Perdue corporation; Defendants' alleged interests and the profitability of the company are, instead, completely intertwined. [16] herefore, Plaintiffs cannot sustain [29] a claim under § 1962(d).

[15] In ePlus, the plaintiff brought a civil conspiracy claim under state law and RICO § 1962(d). The court noted the general applicability of the intracorporate conspiracy doctrine, but found that the case fell under the independent personal stake exception. As a result, the court did not specifically note whether it considered the intracorporate conspiracy doctrine in relation to the state law claim, the RICO claim, or both. ePlus, 313 F.3d at 179.

[16] At the hearing held by this Court on June 9, 2011, Plaintiffs explained that the alleged scheme aimed to increase Perdue's overall profitability. Plaintiffs alleged that greater profits would, in turn, benefit the Defendants in the form of higher wages and bonuses for "keeping labor costs low." Plaintiffs provided no facts supporting the conclusion that Defendants would, in fact, receive greater compensation from their alleged activities. Cf. ePlus, 313 F.3d at 179-80 (holding that the independent personal stake exception applied when a conspirator's aim was to profit by sending her employer into bankruptcy). Defendants, therefore, have no independent personal stake in the alleged scheme.

IV. Dismissal with Prejudice

In Cozzarelli v. Inspire Pharms., Inc., 549 F.3d 618, 630 (4th Cir. 2008), the [*360] Fourth Circuit held that HN19[] dismissal with prejudice was warranted where "amendment would be futile in light of the [complaint's] fundamental deficiencies." See also Ganey v. PEC Solutions, Inc., 418 F.3d 379, 391, 125 Fed. Appx. 490 (4th Cir. 2005) (affirming a denial to leave to amend where any amendment would be futile).

Here, dismissal with prejudice is appropriate. Plaintiffs have no presently [30] pending motion for leave to amend and a previous amendment did not cure fundamental deficiencies in the complaint. Plaintiffs continue to rely on conclusory allegations and boilerplate recitations of the elements of their cause of action. Moreover, even if Plaintiffs were able to meet the pleading standard of Twombly and Iqbal, the intracorporate conspiracy doctrine bars the expansive civil RICO claim proffered by the Plaintiffs. Thus, amendment of this complaint would be futile. Plaintiffs cannot plead conspiracy of these parties as allegedly configured within the corporate entity, Perdue Farms, Inc.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss is GRANTED and this case is DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE. A separate Order follows.

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

This is an action by pro se plaintiff Lionel Drake against defendants Cox Communications, Inc. and The Advertising Council, Inc., complaining that the defendants have refused to provide him with free cable access time to broadcast his political commentary. Invoking state tort law, Drake made comparable factual charges in a Kansas action, alleging that Cox and the Ad Council "wrongfully obstructed [his] requests for [free] public service announcement air time." Lionel Drake v. Cox Communications, LLC and Cox Enterprises, Case No. 09-C-1287 (Shawnee Dist. Ct. Aug. 16, 2010).

After the Shawnee Country District Court granted summary judgment on the claims advanced in that action, Drake commenced this federal action, arguing that the denial of free air time represents a violation of [*2] federal antitrust law. Cox and the Ad Council have moved to dismiss Drake's claims, and the court finds that Drake's claims should be dismissed pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.Pr. 12(b)(6). Further the court finds that Drake — notwithstanding his voluminous pleadings — has failed to articulate any potential grounds by which his claims might be made viable, and so denies his requests for amendment and discovery.

Defendant Cox is a cable television provider. The Ad Council prepares and distributes PSAs for various organizations, including the federal government. According to his Complaint, Drake is a "freelance writer and television producer," who would like to produce public service announcements (PSAs). (Doc. 1, ¶ 4). However, he alleges he cannot do so because Cox only donates free air time to PSAs produced by the Ad Council. In his first claim, Drake argues that the defendants have violated Section 2 of the Sherman Act by monopolizing the "national market" for PSAs. In his second claim, he argues that the defendants have entered into "exclusionary agreement" to exclude persons such as himself from receiving free air time, thus violating Section 1 of the Sherman Act. Drake also asserts claims [*3] for "unlawful tying" under Section 1, and for violation of Section 13a of the Clayton Act for Discrimination.

Many of the factual allegations in Drake's Complaint are prefaced by the qualification that "Plaintiff is informed and believes and based thereon alleges" the asserted fact. However, a complaint must present averments which "raise a right to relief above a speculative level." Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S.Ct. 1955, 167 L.Ed.2d 929 (2007). This standard requires the plaintiff to advance "only enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Id. at 570. These allegations in the complaint must "state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Robbins v. Oklahoma, 519 F.3d. 1242, 1246 (10th Cir. 2008) (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570 (2007). See also VanZandt v. Oklahoma Dept. of Human Service, 276 Fed. Appx. 843, 2008 WL 1945344 *3 (10th Cir. 2008) (the plaintiff must allege sufficient facts to "nudge[] their claims across the line from conceivable to plausible"). "[T]he mere metaphysical possibility that some plaintiff could prove some set of facts in support of the pleaded claim is insufficient; the complaint must give the court reason to [*4] believe that this plaintiff has a reasonable likelihood of mustering factual support for these claims." Ridge at Red Hawk, L.L.C. v. Schneider, 493 F.3d 1174, 1177 (10th Cir. 2007).

This standard is particularly relevant in antitrust actions, such as that instituted by Drake. "Twombly is ... an essential guide to the application of that [pleading] standard in the antitrust context." In re Insurance Brokerage Antitrust Litigation, 618 F.3d 300, 320 (3d Cir. 2010). As the Third Circuit noted in that case, Twombly itself "turned largely on the doctrinal fact that antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case. Id. at 320, n. 18 (internal quotation omitted).

Drake's antitrust claims under the Sherman Act fail for multiple reasons. First, he has failed to demonstrate any standing to present his claims here. Standing in the context of the Sherman Act requires a showing of an antitrust injury, that is, "an injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent." Tal v. Hogan, 453 F.3d 1244, 1253 (10th Cir. 2006) (internal quotation omitted), cert. denied, 549 U.S. 1209, 127 S. Ct. 1334, 167 L. Ed. 2d 81 (2007). See Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977). [*5] The plaintiff must show that the defendant's actions have harmed not just himself, but competition as well. Four Corners Nephrology Associates, P.C. v. Mercy Medical Center of Durango, 582 F. 3d 1216, 1225 (10th Cir. 2009).

Here, Drake merely alleges the frustration of his own desire to receive free air time. He has failed to allege or show any injury to competition or to the consumer by Cox's actions in donating free air time to the Ad Council. More fundamentally, the provision of free air time for PSAs is simply not commercial activity, and thus not the sort of activity which the Sherman Act was intended to address. It is charitable activity, the polar opposite of commerce, and hence does not fall within the scope of the Act. See Bronx Legal Services v. Legal Services for New York City, No. 02 CV 6199, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 695, at *11-*12 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 17, 2003) (dismissing antitrust action arising from the contribution of free legal services since transactions were "akin to a series of charitable gifts"), aff'd, 78 Fed. Appx. 781 (2d Cir. 2003); Dedication & Everlasting Love to Animals v. Humane Soc'y of the United States, 50 F.3d 710 (9th Cir. 1995) (upholding dismissal of antitrust [*6] claim based on the supposed market for charitable stray animal shelters). See also In re Terrorist Attacks on September 11, 2001, 538 F.3d 71, 92 (2nd Cir. 2008) (holding in context of Foreign Sovereign Immunity Act that "[t]he alleged conduct itself—giving away money—is not a commercial activity."), abrogated on other gds, Samantar v. Yousuf, 130 S.Ct. 2278, 176 L. Ed. 2d 1047 (2010).

In Council for Employment and Economic Energy Use v. WHDH Corporation, 580 F.2d 9 (1st Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 945, 99 S. Ct. 1421, 59 L. Ed. 2d 633 (1979), the Third Circuit rejected an antitrust action against radio stations which donated free air time to a political opponent of the plaintiff, the court stressing:

> The original intent of Congress in enacting the Sherman Act was to suppress and penalize restraints on Commercial competition in the marketing of goods and services. Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, 310 U.S. 469, 493, 495, 60 S. Ct. 982, 84 L. Ed. 1311 (1940). It is difficult to conceive how the present complaint fits under that general rubric. Moreover, the Supreme Court has made clear its refusal to permit parties to "impute to the Sherman Act a purpose to regulate, not business activity, but political activity, a purpose which would have [*7] no basis whatever in the legislative history of that Act." Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 137, 81 S.Ct. 523, 529, 5 L.Ed.2d 464 (1961). See also United Mine Workers of America v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 85 S.Ct. 1585, 14 L.Ed.2d 626 (1965). The only exceptions to this rule countenanced by the Court were situations in which the political activity at issue was "a mere sham to cover what is actually nothing more than an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor." Id. 365 U.S. at 144, 81 S.Ct. at 533. Simply stating the exception demonstrates that it has no relationship to the facts alleged in appellant's complaint. This case involves political opponents, not commercial competitors; and political objectives, not market place goals.

580 F.2d at 12 (emphasis added). The present case involves charitable contributions for public service information, "not market place goals," and Drake's claim does not involve the type of injury that the antitrust laws were designed to address.

Further, Drake's Sherman Act claims are materially deficient in his failure to provide any intelligible definition of the relevant [*8] market. Actions under both Section 1 and Section 2 require careful definition of the relevant market. See Jacobs v. Tempur-Pedic Internat'l, 626 F.3d 1327, 1336 (11th Cir. 2010) (Section 1); Campfield v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Ins. Co., 532 F.3d 1111, 1117 (10th Cir. 2008) (Section 2). Claims under Section 2 require proof of a relevant market showing "the interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product and substitutes for it." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962).

Drake argues that the relevant market is the "national market" for PSAs, but this allegation is fatally overbroad. His Complaint advances no credible allegation that Cox, a regional cable provider, controls the national market for PSAs, or that Cox and the Ad Council, or indeed cable television more generally, are the only vehicles for the production and dissemination of PSAs. By its very nature, cable television is local television. Further, cable television is typically comprised of hundreds of television channels, each of which may carry its own PSAs. And cable television itself must compete with a variety of other media outlets, such as broadcast television, radio, [*9] the internet, and newspapers. Nowhere in Drake's many pages of Complaint, Response, and (unauthorized) Surreplies is there any intelligible definition of the relevant market within which Cox and the Ad Council have supposedly acquired monopoly power. He has failed to credibly allege the existence of a "national market" for the production of PSAs.

Further, actions under Section 2 require a showing of monopolization. "Monopoly power is the power to control prices or exclude competition." United States v. E. I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 391, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956); Tarabishi v. McAlester Reg'l Hosp., 951 F.2d 1558, 1567 (10th Cir. 1991). Here, Drake has failed to show that the defendants have monopoly power as to the production or distribution of PSAs. Aside from repeated forumulaic recitiations of the statutory language, his Complaint is devoid of any real allegation or showing that the Ad Council has any power as to the decisions of cable providers as to the recipients of free air time.

A claim under Section 1 requires proof of concerted anticompetitive action. Abraham v. Intermountain Healthcare, Inc., 461 F. 3d 1249, 1256 (10th Cir. 2006). To withstand a motion to dismiss, a plaintiff [*10] raising a claim under Section 1 must advance more than an inference as to an alleged illegal agreement, he must advance specific allegations as to the particular anticompetitive agreement. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 550-51. Here, Drake's Complaint merely alleges at the most general level that "Defendants do have an actual and or de facto agreement to exclude competition." (Dkt. 1, ¶ 74). This generality is repeated throughout Drake's lengthy complaint, but repetition is no substitute for the specificity required by Twombly.

Drake's third claim is that the defendants have entered into an illegal tying agreement. But this also presupposes a commercial transaction, since "[a] tying arrangement is an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchase a different (or tied) product." See Eastman Kodak v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 461, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992) (internal quotation omitted, emphasis added). In addition to the failure of Drake to provide any specific information as to the supposed agreement itself, there is no allegation in the Complaint that the Ad Council has engaged in any exclusionary conduct. As to Cox, a tying agreement may be illegal [*11] under the Sherman Act where a party who has "a direct economic interest in the sale of the tied product" acts to exclude other parties. Sports Racing Services. v. Sports Car Club of America, 131 F.3d 874, 886 (10th Cir. 1997). But, again, the present case involves the production of PSAs, which are not sold by Cox. Instead, the time is charitably donated. Drake's claim is without merit.

Finally, as noted earlier, Drake advances of discriminatory pricing under "Section 13a of the Clayton Act." (Dkt. 1, at ¶ 127). There is no Section 13a of the Clayton Act. Section 3 of the Robison-Patman Act, codified at 15 U.S.C. § 13a, does prohibit some discriminatory pricing schemes, but by its terms only applies to sales of goods. See National Black Expo v. Clear Channel Broadcasting Inc., No. 03 C 2751, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9783, at *38-*39 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 7, 2007) (holding that the statute had no application of alleged discriminatory pricing in radio advertising). Moreover, the statute contains no civil remedy; it is enforced solely through criminal actions brought by the Department of Justice. Nashville Milk Co. v. Carnation Co., 355 U.S. 373, 382, 78 S. Ct. 352, 2 L. Ed. 2d 340 (1958).

The court denies plaintiff's request to [*12] submit an amended complaint. This request takes the form of one sentence at the end of his Response: "If the court finds that the complaint is insufficient in any area, plaintiff requests the opportunity to amend the complaint to correct these issues." (Dkt. 22, at 16).

Drake's request will be denied. Not only is the request deficient under D.Kan.Rule 15.1(a)(2), which requires that request for amendment be accompanied by a copy of the proposed amended pleading, it is also futile. Drake's original Complaint extends across 40 pages and 130 numbered paragraphs. Throughout this Complaint, and in all of his subsequent filings, Drake has failed to present a colorable antitrust claim, and there is no reason to believe that any future pleading would correct the fatal deficiencies already present. The core of Drake's argument — that the Cox's charitable provision of PSAs to the Ad Council violates federal antitrust law— is simply contrary to unanimous case law, which provides that antitrust law is intended to govern commercial activity.

Similarly, the court will deny Drake's request for a hearing in which he would present evidence supposedly in support of his claims. Motions to Dismiss under [*13] Rule 12(b)(6) address the legal sufficiency of the allegations in a plaintiff's complaint, and thus are typically resolved without evidentiary hearing, See Lozar v. Birds Eye Foods, 678 F. Supp. 2d 589, 597 (W.D. Mich. 2009). As with the requested amendment, there is no reason to believe that plaintiff in a hearing will be able to state a valid basis for the present action, when he has been unable to do so in the voluminous pleadings already presented to the court.

The court will grant the motions by Cox and the Ad Council seeking to strike Drake's surreplies to the Motions to Dismiss. Surreplies are permitted only by prior leave of court, which Drake did not attempt to obtain. Michaud v. Duncan, 244 F. Supp. 2d 1217, 1230-31 (D. Kan. 2003). Here, the surreplies submitted by Drake are stricken not simply because he failed to seek prior leave, and because they advance no information which could not have also been included in his original Responses to the Motions to Dismiss, but because they lack any justification. That is, even if Drake had properly applied for permission to file his surreplies, leave would have been denied because the Replies submitted by Cox and the Ad Council contained [*14] no facts or arguments advanced for the first time. In the absence of such new arguments or other exceptional circumstances, no surreply would have been authorized. Michaud, 244 F.Supp.2d at 1231. Accordingly, Drake should not be placed in a more favorable position by his ignoring the prior leave rule, and the surreplies are accordingly stricken.

IT IS ACCORDINGLY ORDERED this 7th day of July, 2011, that the Motions to Dismiss and to Strike of the defendants (Dkt. 13, 15, 30, 31) are hereby granted; the Motion for Evidentiary Hearing (Dkt. 29) of the plaintiff is denied.

Opinion

ORDER ON JOINT MOTION TO DISMISS

(Doc. 272)

By motion filed on April 18, 2011, defendants USS-POSCO Industries ("UPI"), U.S. Steel Corp, Pitcal, Inc., POSCO-California Corp, and POSCO American Steel Corp. (collectively "defendants") filed a joint motion to dismiss the plaintiff's third amended complaint ("TAC"). The motions were filed under seal and redacted portions of the motions were subsequently filed. Plaintiff Stanislaus Food Products filed an opposition [*3] to the motions on May 23, 2011. The opposition also was filed under seal with a redacted version later filed. The defendants filed a joint reply brief on June 3, 2011. Pursuant to order, the motion was set without a hearing date. Having considered the moving, opposition, and reply papers, as well as the Court's file, the Court issues the following order.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

Plaintiff Stanislaus Food Products ("plaintiff" or "Stanislaus") is a Modesto tomato canner. Stanislaus processes and "fresh packs" tomatoes into tin-plated cans. Since 2001, Stanislaus has purchased millions of one-gallon tin-plated cans pursuant to a Container Supply Agreement ("Container Agreement") with non-party Silgan Containers Corporation ("Silgan"). (Doc. 268, TAC ¶21.) [1] Silgan buys "Tin Mill Products" (tin-plated steel) and manufactures the Tin Mill Products into tin-plated cans which are sold to canners, such as Stanislaus. (Doc. 268, TAC ¶29 .) Defendant USS-POSCO Industries ("UPI") is the manufacturer of the Tin Mill Products. UPI produces cold-rolled sheets, galvanized sheets and tin-plated and tin-free steel from "hot rolled" steel at its plant in Pittsburgh, California. (Doc.268, TAC ¶23.) UPI then [*4] sells the tin-plated steel to Silgan to make tin cans which Silgan in turn sells to Stanislaus. UPI is the only Tin Mill Products producer in the Western United States.

This action alleges antitrust conspiracies by defendants to monopolize the Tin Mill Products market and to price-fix Tin Mill Products.

Alleged Co-Conspirators

The hot-rolled steel, also known as "hot-band steel," is supplied to UPI by co-defendant U.S. Steel and non-party Pohang Iron & Steel Co., Ltd. ("POSCO") of South Korea. U.S. Steel is a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. (Doc. 268, TAC ¶22.) POSCO is a Korean corporation. (Doc. 268, TAC¶27.) UPI is a joint venture formed in 1986 by U.S. Steel and POSCO, through their holding companies. (Doc. 268, TAC ¶6.) The nominal general partners of UPI are Defendants Pitcal, Inc. and POSCO-California Corporation ("POSCAL"). Each of these UPI general partners is wholly owned subsidiary of either U.S. Steel or POSCO. Defendant Pitcal, Inc. is a wholly-owned subsidiary of U.S. Steel. POSCAL is a wholly-owned subsidiary of [*5] Defendant POSCO American Steel Corporation ("POSAM"), which is in turn a wholly-owned subsidiary of POSCO. (Doc. 268, TAC ¶23-26.) Ultimately, U.S. Steel and POSCO each own a 50% interest in UPI. (Doc. 268, TAC ¶6.)

Tin Mill Products Market

[1] The redacted version of the Third Amended Complaint is referenced in this order, unless otherwise noted.

UPI is the only Tin Mill Products manufacturer in the Western United States. (Doc. 268, TAC ¶23.) Companies outside the Western United States have higher transportation costs for their Tin Mill Products. Until 2006, U.S. Steel sold Tin Mill Products in the Western United States by competitively pricing its products compared to UPI. Both U.S. Steel and POSCO own and operate facilities separate from UPI that produce Tin Mill Products. (Doc. 268, TAC ¶38.) Plaintiff alleges that until 2006, U.S. Steel competed directly with UPI for sales of Tin Mill Products in the Western United States. (Doc. 268, TAC ¶47.) After 2006, the competition ceased pursuant of the Market Allocation Agreement.

Market Allocation Agreement

Plaintiff alleges that beginning in 2005, the CEOs of U.S. Steel and POSCO talked about steel capacity and output. "On information and belief, Mr. Surma and Mr. Lee discussed coordination between U.S. Steel and POSCO to reduce the supply of Tin [*6] Mill Products in the Western United States." (Doc. 268, TAC ¶59.) The CEOs are both members of the International Iron and Steel Institute ("IISI"). Plaintiff alleges that in October 2006, "On information and belief, at this meeting, Mr. Surma and Mr. Lee discussed eliminating competition in the Relevant Market, including coordinating supply restrictions of Tin Mill Products in the Western United States, in order to increase the prices of Tin Mill Products artificially." (Doc. 268, TAC ¶60.) Plaintiff alleges that on June 27, 2006, the International Trade Commission extended an antidumping order which precluded Japanese steel makers from entering the Western United States steel market. (Doc. 268, TAC ¶66-67.) Plaintiff states that after the antidumping order was extended "defendants finalized the Market Allocation Agreement."

Plaintiff alleges that "the Market Allocation Agreement itself was negotiated and finalized during the 2006 meetings of UPI's Management Committee." (Doc. 268, TAC ¶68.) Plaintiff alleges "on information and belief" who was present at the meeting, representing which of the defendants. (Doc. 268, TAC ¶69.) Plaintiff alleges that:

> "The overarching purpose of the Agreement [*7] was to allocate the Relevant Market fully to UPI in order to create a monopoly and control prices so that UPI (under the direction and control of U.S. Steel, through Pitcal, and POSCO, through POSAM and POSCAL) could control and increase the prices of Tin Mill Products in the Western United States to artificially high levels." (Doc. 268, TAC ¶73.)

Pursuant to the Market Allocation Agreement, U.S. Steel agreed to:

- exit the Relevant Market by no longer competing in the Western United States,
- promised to eliminate discounts U.S. Steel had offered its customers in the Western United States for quarter inch width surplus and for freight equalization pricing. (Doc. 268, TAC ¶74.)

Pursuant to the Market Allocation Agreement, POSCO (POSAM and POSCAL) agreed to:

- refrain from selling into the Western United States Tin Mill Products produced by POSCO. (Doc. 268, TAC ¶76.)

Pursuant to the Market Allocation Agreement, UPI agreed to raise Tin Mill Products prices. (Doc. 268, TAC ¶78.) Plaintiff alleges that "U.S. Steel, UPI, Pitcal, POSCAL, POSAM, and POSCO thereby agreed to eliminate the diversity of entrepreneurial interests that prevailed prior to 2006 (U.S. Steel's actual competition and POSCO's [*8] potential competition)." (Doc. 268, TAC ¶79.)

Plaintiff alleges that the Market Allocation Agreement was implemented and enforced by UPI, U.S. steel and POSCO through meeting held periodically. (Doc. 268, TAC ¶¶84-87.) Plaintiff alleges that "The existence and content of these meetings and communications have been kept strictly confidential by Defendants and co-conspirator POSCO." (Doc. 268, TAC ¶¶88.)

Claims in the TAC

The Third Amended Complaint alleges the following claims for relief:

(1) First Claim - California Cartwright Act, Cal.Bus. & Prof. Code §16720;

(2) Second Claim - Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §1 (Restraint of Trade);

(3) Third Claim - Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §2 (Conspiracy to Monopolize);

(4) Fourth Claim for Relief - Unfair Competition, Cal.Bus & Prof Code §17200.

This motion challenges each of plaintiff's claims.

ANALYSIS AND DISCUSSION

A. Rule 12(b)(6) - Motion to Dismiss for Failure to State a Claim

A motion to dismiss pursuant to Fed R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) is a challenge to the sufficiency of the pleadings set forth in the complaint. A Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) dismissal is proper where there is either a "lack of a cognizable legal theory" or "the absence [*9] of sufficient facts alleged under a cognizable legal theory." Balistreri v. Pacifica Police Dep't, 901 F.2d 696, 699 (9th Cir. 1990). In considering a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, the court generally accepts as true the allegations of the complaint in question, construes the pleading in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion, and resolves all doubts in the pleader's favor. Lazy Y. Ranch LTD v. Behrens, 546 F.3d 580, 588 (9th Cir. 2008); Jenkins v. McKeithen, 395 U.S. 411, 421, 89 S. Ct. 1843, 23 L. Ed. 2d 404, reh'g denied, 396 U.S. 869, 90 S. Ct. 35, 24 L. Ed. 2d 123 (1969).

To survive a motion to dismiss, the plaintiff must allege "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 1974, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) ("Twombly"). A claim has facial plausibility,"when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). "[F]or a complaint to survive a motion to dismiss, the non-conclusory 'factual content,' and reasonable inferences from that content, must be plausibly suggestive of a claim entitling the [*10] plaintiff to relief." Moss v. U.S. Secret Service, 572 F.3d 962, 969 (9th Cir. 2009).

A court is "free to ignore legal conclusions, unsupported conclusions, unwarranted inferences and sweeping legal conclusions cast in the form of factual allegations." Farm Credit Servs. of Am. v. Am. State Bank, 339 F.3d 764, 767 (8th Cir. 2003) (citation omitted). "While a complaint attacked by a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss does not need detailed factual allegations, a plaintiff's obligation to provide the 'grounds' of his 'entitlement to relief' requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Twombly, 550 U.S. 554, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 1964-65 (internal citations omitted). Moreover, a court "will dismiss any claim that, even when construed in the light most favorable to plaintiff, fails to plead sufficiently all required elements of a cause of action." Student Loan Marketing Ass'n v. Hanes, 181 F.R.D. 629, 634 (S.D. Cal. 1998). In practice, "a complaint . . . must contain either direct or inferential allegations respecting all the material elements necessary to sustain recovery under some viable legal theory." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 562, 127 S.Ct. at 1969. [*11] If a plaintiff fails to state a claim, a court need not permit an attempt to amend a complaint if "it determines that the pleading could not possibly be cured by allegation of other facts." Cook, Perkiss and Liehe, Inc. v. N. Cal. Collection Serv. Inc., 911 F.2d 242, 247 (9th Cir. 1990).

B. Overview of Sherman Act Claims

Plaintiff alleges the Market Allocation Agreement violates §1 and §2 the Sherman Act. 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2. Section 1 prohibits restraint of trade: "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce . . . is declared to be illegal." To prevail on a cause of action for violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1, a plaintiff must show, "(1) there was an agreement, conspiracy, or combination between two or more entities; (2) the agreement was an unreasonable restraint of trade under either a per se or rule of reason analysis; and (3) the restraint affected interstate commerce." American Ad Management, Inc. v. GTE Corp., 92 F.3d 781, 784 (9th Cir. 1996).

Plaintiff also alleges violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Section 2 makes it illegal to "to monopolize ... any part of the trade or commerce . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 2. Plaintiff [*12] alleges a conspiracy to monopolize. To prove a conspiracy to monopolize in violation of § 2, Plaintiff must show four elements: (1) the existence of a combination or conspiracy to monopolize; (2) an overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy; (3) the specific intent to monopolize; and (4) causal antitrust injury. Paladin Associates, Inc. v. Montana Power Co., 328 F.3d 1145, 1158 (9th Cir. 2003).

C. Challenge to the TAC under Twombly

The defendants challenge the complaint on the procedural grounds that the pleadings are inadequate under Twombly. Defendants argue that the allegations of an agreement to restrain trade in violation of Section 1 are inadequate. The basis for the conspiracy claim is the "Market Allocation Agreement." Defendants challenged the adequacy of allegations of the Market Allocation Agreement on three grounds: (1) plaintiff does not allege direct evidence of an agreement to restrain trade, and circumstantial evidence fails to support a reasonable inference of conspiratorial agreement, (2) contradictory allegations render the Market Allocation Agreement implausible, (3) plaintiff's claims are not "plausible on their face."

1. Standards of Specificity

"[A] district court [*13] must retain the power to insist upon some specificity in pleading before allowing a potentially massive factual controversy to proceed." Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 558, 127 S.Ct. 1955, 1967, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). The complaint must allege "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570. A claim of Sherman Act violation requires enough factual allegations to suggest an illegal agreement was made.

In Twombly, the Supreme Court found allegations that the defendant telephone companies "entered into a contract, combination or conspiracy to prevent competitive entry in their respective local telephone and/or high speed internet services markets and have agreed not to compete with one another and otherwise allocated customers and markets to one another" insufficient because no evidentiary facts were pleaded which could prove the conspiracy. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 565. The Court stated, in dicta, that "the pleadings mentioned no specific time, place, or person involved in the alleged conspiracies." 550 U.S. at 565 n. 10 ("the complaint here furnishes no clue as to which of the four [defendants] (much less which of their employees) supposedly [*14] agreed, or when and where the illicit agreement took place."). Allegations of an agreement would normally include details about the formation of that agreement. See Twombly, 550 U.S. 565 n. 10.

In Kendall v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 518 F.3d 1042, 1047 (9th Cir. 2008), a class of retailers failed to plead sufficient evidentiary facts to survive dismissal under Twombly of a price-fixing claim against Visa, MasterCard and banks belonging to the two systems. Plaintiffs alleged that the defendants had conspired to fix the bank fees charged to retailers for processing credit card sales. The court found that plaintiffs offered no evidentiary facts as to the banks individually beyond the collective legal conclusion that the "banks" knowingly participated in the alleged scheme. Id. at 1048. The court stated that plaintiffs allegation of an agreement that the "Banks knowingly, intentionally and actively participated in an individual capacity in the alleged scheme" to fix the fees, was factually insufficient. Kendall, 518 F.3d at 1048. Without more factual content the "banks," which were large institutions with hundreds of employees, entering into contracts and agreements daily, would have no idea [*15] how to begin to respond to the allegations of a conspiracy. Id. at 1047. The court held the complaint was properly dismissed because plaintiffs did not allege factual specifics that would "answer [such] basic questions [as]: who, did what, to whom (or with whom), where, and when?" Id. at 1049.

Twombly and Kendall do not require that plaintiff prove its case or include every factual detail in support of its claims in their complaints. Rather, Twombly and Kendall requires plaintiff to include sufficient facts supporting the existence of a conspiracy, beyond the conclusory allegation that a conspiracy did exist.

2. Adequacy of Pleading the "Market Allocation Agreement"

This is the third and last time this Court has or will consider the adequacy of plaintiff's pleading of the Market Allocation Agreement. In this Court's previous order, the Court found the allegations of Market Allocation Agreement were conclusory and non-specific. The Court granted the motion to dismiss on the grounds that no specific agreements among and between defendants were alleged. Plaintiff had alleged all defendants agreed to all agreements, notwithstanding their different corporate roles in and between themselves. [*16] The Court found that specific allegations of the terms of the Market Allocation Agreement are particularly significant in this case and dismissed for lack of specificity. The Court now turns to whether plaintiff has plead the Market Allocation Agreement adequately.

As alleged in the TAC, the Market Allocation Agreement comprises a long term, complex arrangement between former competitors, turned joint venturers. At its core, the Market Allocation Agreement was an agreement between U.S. Steel and POSCO, two competitors and also joint venturers in UPI, to no longer compete in the Tin-Mill Products market in the Western United States. (TAC ¶13.) The Agreement required U.S. Steel to no longer compete in the Western United States for its own profits, but rather for U.S. Steel to exit the market and "share" in tin mill products through profits from UPI. The TAC states the dates the Market Allocation Agreement was negotiated: January 9, 2006, June 12, 2006 and December 6, 2006. (Doc. 268, TAC ¶14.) These dates coincide with UPI Management Committee meetings. [2] The TAC alleges the persons involved in the agreement and the roles each person undertook, but on information and belief. (Doc. 268, [*17] TAC ¶14.) The TAC details which person were involved in which discussions. (Doc. 268, TAC ¶56-60, 69.)

[2] Defendants argue that "other than sheer speculation, it is not clear what basis Plaintiff could possibly have to allege that these meetings had anything to do with an alleged Market Allocation Agreement." (Doc. 272, Joint Brief p.9 n.6.) Defendants further argue that "the allegations are also false in fact." Id. The Court is not here concerned the falsity or speculation as to what occurred at the meetings. These are issues of proof for a different stage of proceeding. Here, the Court determines whether the plaintiff has sufficiently stated an agreement. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556 ("it simply calls for enough fact to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of illegal agreement").

[3] Generally, an agreement among competitors to allocate territory is a per se violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. Palmer v. BRG of Georgia, 498 U.S. 46, 111 S.Ct. 401, 112 L.Ed.2d 349 (1990) (per curiam). For instance, in Palmer, plaintiffs were students who sued providers of bar review courses, BRG and HBJ. Plaintiffs contended that the price of BRG's course was enhanced by an unlawful market allocation agreement. BRG had entered into an agreement whereby HBJ agreed to turn its Georgia bar review operations over to BRG and to grant BRG an exclusive license to market bar review courses under HBJ's "BarBri" trade name. Id. at 47, 111 S.Ct. 401. The Supreme Court reversed denials of summary judgment by both the trial and appeals court, and found the agreement per se unlawful. The Court held that:

> Here, HBJ and BRG had previously competed in the Georgia market; under their allocation agreement, BRG received that market, while HBJ received the remainder of the United States. Each agreed not to compete in the other's territories. Such agreements are anticompetitive regardless of whether [*19] the parties split a market within which both do business or whether they merely reserve one market for one and another for the other. Thus, the 1980 agreement between HBJ and BRG was unlawful on its face.

Id. at 49-50, 111 S.Ct. 401. In Palmer, plaintiff has presented evidence of an agreement called a "covenant not to compete" in Georgia and a separate reciprocal agreement for non-competition in the rest of the United States. The court said that these agreements were formed for the purpose and the effect of raising prices for bar review courses. Pursuant to Palmer, such an agreement to allocate the market is illegal under Section 1.

(1) U.S. Steel would not sell tin mill products in the Western United States;
(2) U.S. Steel eliminated discounts offered for quarter-inch width surplus and freight equalization pricing.
(3) U.S. Steel agreed to not otherwise price its tin mill produce competitively against UPI

(4) U.S. Steel agreed to reduce the supply [*18] of tin mill products by reducing capacity output at its Indian-based tin mills (Doc. 268 TAC ¶74.)

The TAC alleges the term of the Market Allocation Agreement with POSCO:

(1) POSCO agreed to refrain from selling into the Western United States Tin Mill Products produced in POSCO's own tin mills. (Doc. 268, TAC ¶76.)

Here, the TAC alleges the location and dates of meetings where the Market Allocation Agreement was negotiated and finalized. (Doc. 268, TAC ¶68.) The TAC alleges the terms of the Market Allocation Agreement, and the specific individuals who implemented the Market Allocation Agreement. (Doc. 268, TAC ¶73-78.) The TAC alleges how defendants monitored [*20] and enforced the agreement. (Doc. 268, TAC ¶82-86.)

The allegations are not generalized conclusions as to actions by defendants. In Twombly, the plaintiff plead conclusions parroting the language of the Section 1: "defendants "ha[d] entered into a contract, combination or conspiracy to prevent competitive entry ... and ha[d] agreed not to compete with one another." Twombly, 127 S.Ct. at 1955. Here, the allegations specify which defendant engaged in which activity. Specific agreements among and between defendants are alleged. Allegations of an agreement would normally include details about the formation of that agreement. See Twombly, 550 U.S. 565 n. 10. Accord Kendall v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 518 F.3d 1042, 1048 (9th Cir. 2008) ("There are no facts alleged to support [the conclusion that a conspiracy existed]. Even after the depositions taken, the complaint does not answer the basic questions: who, did what, to whom (or with whom), where, and when?") The TAC's allegations state the location and dates of meetings where the Market Allocation agreement was negotiated and finalized (TAC ¶ 68); the terms of the Market Allocation Agreement, and the specific individuals who implemented the Market [*21] Allocation Agreement (TAC ¶¶ 73-78); and how Defendants monitored and enforced each other's compliance with the Market Allocation Agreement. (TAC ¶¶ 82-86.) Thus, the allegations are not generalized conclusions.

3. Sufficient Factual Content

Defendants argue that plaintiff's direct evidence of a conspiracy is speculative. They argue plaintiff pleads no facts that the December 6, 2006 meeting was any different than any other Management Committee meeting. Defendants argue that plaintiff does not plead facts of documents evidencing an unlawful agreement, any guilty pleas or verbal admissions by a defendant. (Doc. 272, Joint Brief p. 10.)

Plaintiff argues that it "need not provide Defendants with a witness list, testimony, and documentary evidence." (Opposition p.8.) Plaintiff points out that the cases relied upon by defendants are summary judgment cases which have a different standard of proof.

The Court agrees with plaintiff. The cases relied upon by defendants are summary judgment cases where the plaintiff failed to prove the direct agreement. See e.g., In re Baby Food Antitrust Litigation, 166 F.3d 112 (3rd Cir. 1999) (cited in Joint Brief p. 10, 12.) This case is at the pleading stage, [*22] and plaintiff is not required to plead what exactly was said or happened at the Management Committee meetings. It would be surprising that plaintiff had access, pre-discovery, to detailed activities. Plaintiff has plead that the agreement was formed at these meetings in sufficient detail for defendants to establish who agreed to do what activity, when it was supposed to be done and how the activity was to be accomplished. These allegations are more than bare allegations. Kendall v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 518 F.3d 1042, 1047 (9th Cir. 2008) ("A bare allegation of a conspiracy is almost impossible to defend against, particularly where the defendants are large institutions with hundreds of employees entering into contracts and agreements daily.") The proof of this agreement is for different stage of this case.

4. Plausibility of the Agreement

Aside from the allegations of a direct agreement, the TAC also alleges circumstantial evidence of conspiracy. Plaintiff argues that Twombly does not require that the alleged antitrust conspiracy be the most likely explanation and that defendants' argument that there exists "a more plausible, alternative explanation" is not the legal standard. Plaintiff [*23] argues that the Market Allocation Agreement is plausible. Plaintiff argues that it has alleged numerous "plus factors" which show the plausibility of the alleged conspiracy and agreement. The structure of the Relevant Market makes collusion plausible, collusion is possible because of the concentrated supply controlled by defendants, and the inelastic demand for tin mill products would force customers to purchase from defendants.

Twombly did not explicitly use the term "plus factors" in formulating its pleading standard. "Plus factors" are pleading additional circumstantial evidence, that must exist to ensure "that the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588, 106 S.Ct. 1348, 89 L.Ed.2d 538 (1986). Here, plaintiff argues that it has alleged "plus factors" that there was a highly concentrated supply, inelastic demand, high barriers to reentry, among other things. If there are sufficient other "plus factors," an inference of conspiracy can be reasonable. In re Citric Acid Litigation, 191 F.3d 1090, 1102 (9th Cir. 1999) (considering parallel pricing as a "plus [*24] factor," for an inference of a conspiracy).

Defendants argue that plaintiff's allegation of an unlawful agreement reached at UPI's Management Committee meeting is pure speculation and conjecture. (Doc. 272, Joint Brief p. 11.) Defendants note that plaintiff admits the "information was confidential" and plaintiff has no knowledge of the contents of the meeting. Defendants analogize plaintiff's allegations with the allegations rejected in LaFlamme v. Societe Air France, 702 F.Supp.2d 136, 147-48 (E.D.N.Y. 2010). Defendants argue that in LaFlamme, the court dismissed plaintiff's purposed "direct evidence" of agreement because it was "based on a bald, conclusion allegation" that "it appeared that defendants decided to adopt the terms" of an agreement. LaFlamme, 702 F.Supp.2d at 147. Defendants argue that "plaintiff has taken the date of an ordinary meeting it knows occurred, but knows nothing else about, and attempted to pass it off as the date of an illegal agreement." (Doc. 272, Joint Brief p.13.)

The Court acknowledges that it does not infer a conspiracy merely because plaintiff identified an opportunity to conspire. In re Citric Acid Litig., 191 F.3d at 1103 (refusing to "infer participation [*25] in the conspiracy from the opportunity to do so. Such meetings, at least in and of themselves, do not tend to exclude the possibility of legitimate activity.").

The Court, however, will not delve into the truth of the allegations. On a motion to dismiss, the well pleaded factual allegations are assumed to be true. Lazy Y. Ranch LTD v. Behrens, 546 F.3d 580, 588 (9th Cir. 2008). None of the allegations regarding the Market Allocation Agreement (¶¶68, 73-78, 82-86) are made upon information and belief. Plaintiff alleges who was present at the meetings in which the Market Allocation Agreement was entered on information and belief. And while "these allegations cannot alone support Plaintiffs' claims, [ ] such participation demonstrates how and when Defendants had opportunities to exchange information or make agreements." In re Static Random Access Memory (SRAM) Antitrust Litigation, 580 F.Supp.2d 896, 903 (N.D.Cal.2008). It is an issue of proof as to the truth of the allegations. See Les Shockley Racing, Inc. v. National Hot Rod Ass'n, 884 F.2d 504, 510 (9th Cir.1989) ("[T]he Sherman Act reflects an important federal policy in preventing excessive concentration in relevant markets.")

Circumstantial [*26] evidence is sufficiently alleged. U.S. Steel ceased competing in the Western United States despite what plaintiff alleges are prices that tripled historic profit margins. (Doc. 268, TAC ¶96.) Plaintiff argues that U.S. Steel competed with UPI in the Western United States for the sale of Tin Mill Products. U.S. Steel was UPI's primary competitor and there were no other competitors. [4] In 2006, the International Trade Commission decided to continue an "antidumping" order against Japanese steel producers, which UPI and U.S. Steel endorsed. (Doc. 268, TAC ¶61-67.) This antidumping order restricted entry of other foreign competitors. No other competitors were in the market - only UPI and U.S. Steel - therefore no one was able to undercut UPI and U.S. Steel's prices. (Doc. 268, TAC ¶61.) With the exclusion of potential Japanese competitors, UPI and U.S. Steel could agree to allocate the market to UPI. U.S. Steel would no longer compete in the Western United States and instead, with no competition in the market, UPI could raise prices. U.S. Steel would benefit by exiting the market because it would participate in UPI's profits as UPI's joint venturer.

In these pleadings, plaintiff has at least set the stage, time frame and rationale for U.S. Steel leaving the Western United States market. [5] The Court acknowledges that some of the allegations in the complaint alleging the Market Allocation Agreement are made on "information and relief," and particularly as to which persons were involved in making the Market Allocation Agreement. However, the Court finds that the allegations of the agreement and the circumstantial evidence are sufficient factual content, reasonable inferences from that content for an alleged unlawful agreement.

5. Contradictory Allegations

Defendants argue that the TAC's contradictory allegations [*28] fails to allege a claim that is "plausible on its face." (Doc. 272 Joint Brief p. 14-16.) First, defendants point to contradictory allegations that there were no steel makers other than U.S. Steel which could affect the prices in the Western United States, yet the TAC contains allegations that Mittal was a "giant" in the industry. Second, plaintiff failed to state a starting date of the alleged conspiracy. Third, despite the unlawful agreement in 2006, prices were not raised until three years later in 2009.

Plaintiff argues that Twombly does not require that the alleged antitrust conspiracy be the most likely explanation and that defendants' argument, that there exists "a more plausible, alternative explanation," is not the legal standard. Plaintiff argues that the Market Allocation Agreement is plausible. Plaintiff argues that it has alleged numerous "plus factors" which show the plausibility of the alleged conspiracy and agreement.

The Court need not make unwarranted deductions or unreasonable inferences from the allegations. But as long as the theory "is not facially implausible, the court's skepticism is reserved for later stages of the proceedings." In re Gilead Sciences Sec. Litigation, 536 F.3d 1049, 1057 (9th Cir. 2008). [*29] "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Iqbal, 129 S.Ct. at 1949.

(A) Allegations of Mittal as a Competitor

The Court rejects defendants argument that the TAC is not plausible because of inconsistencies relating to Mittal, a purported competitor. The TAC alleges that the only "meaningful" competition UPI faced in the Western United States was from U.S. Steel. The TAC alleges that Mittal was "never been more than a minor player in the Western United States." (TAC ¶115.) Defendants point out that this allegation is inconsistent with another allegation because else where in the TAC, Mittal is referred to as a "giant." (Doc. 268, TAC ¶104 ("the elimination of freight equalization between these two giants increased the price of tin-mill products . . .").) The Court does not find it implausible as plaintiff alleges "Mittal has never significantly affected the price of Tin Mill Products in the Relevant Market" because "Tin Mill Products were only a 'small component of Mittal's product offering.'" (Doc. 268, TAC ¶115.)

(B) Allegations of the Starting [*30] Date of the Agreement

[4] Defendants argue that plaintiff's own [*27] allegations acknowledge other competitors because plaintiff refers to Mittal as a "giant" in steel manufacturing. Plaintiff argues that Mittal is a "giant," but not in the Western United States which is the relevant market in this case. This argument is addressed infra regarding contradictory allegations.

[5] It remains to be proved whether U.S. Steel actually left the Western U.S. in 2006, as currently alleged, or much earlier in 1986, as previously alleged. This fact appears to be a linchpin in the Market Allocation Agreement.

Defendants argue that plaintiff states that the alleged conspiracy began in December 2006, but alleges, inconsistently, that part of the conspiracy, elimination of freight equalization began in April 2006. Defendants note that there is inconsistency in the starting date of the conspiracy. The TAC quotes a Silgan official's testimony, Mr. Owen, who testified that freight equalization stopped in April 2006:

> "According to the TAC, Mr. Owen's testimony was given in April 2006. As a result, based on Plaintiff's own allegations, U.S. Steel could not have agreed with POSCO in December 2006 to 'eliminate discounts' because, according to the Owen testimony that Plaintiff quotes, U.S. Steel had unilaterally already stopped these discounts at least eight months earlier, in April 2006." (Doc. 272, Joint Brief p.15.)

The Court does not find the allegation, quoting Mr. Owen's testimony, fatally inconsistent with the remaining allegations. (TAC ¶74.) Plaintiff alleges the Market Allocation Agreement was negotiated over a period of several months, including prior to April 2006. Moreover, the TAC alleges that elimination of freight equalization was one of several components of the [*31] Market Allocation Agreement. It is not inconceivable that this component was agreed to early on and implemented immediately upon agreement. Further, the TAC quotes testimony of an executive of Silgan, Mr. Owen, without any foundational information necessary to substantiate his knowledge and meaning. The Court is reluctant to dismiss a conspiracy claim because hearsay evidence may be marginally inconsistent with other allegations. The Court, therefore, does not find the Market Allocation Agreement implausible based upon testimony of Mr. Owen.

(C) Delay in Implementing the Market Allocation Agreement

Defendants argue that the TAC contains contradictory allegations of a 3-year delay in price increases. Defendants note that plaintiff again alleges that the conspiracy was formed in 2006, but that UPI did not increase its prices until 2009. (Doc. 268, TAC ¶¶15, 93, 109.)

Plaintiff points to allegations which explain the reason for the delay in raising prices. The standard in the industry was multi-year contracts between purchasers of Tin Mill Products and suppliers of Tin Mill Products. (Doc. 268, TAC ¶102.) In 2006, UPI and U.S. Steel were in the midst of multi- year supply contracts to supply [*32] Tin Mill Products to their customers. Plaintiff alleges that once those contracts expired, on or about 2009, U.S. Steel did not renew its contracts, and UPI then increased prices. (Doc. 268, TAC ¶102.)

The Court does not find these allegations implausible to explain the delay in raising prices. While not likely, it is not implausible that the agreement had a delayed timing component. UPI and U.S. Steel might have agreed to delay implementation of price increases because they were indeed in long term contracts which would subject them to contractual liability if breached. It is not implausible. It will be subject to proof at a later stage of proceedings.

D. Adequacy of Plaintiff's Claims under Section 2 of the Sherman Act - Conspiracy to Monopolize

Section 2 makes it an offense for any person to "monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several states." 15 U.S.C. § 2. Plaintiff alleges a conspiracy to monopolize. (See TAC ¶¶151-159; Doc. 280, Opposition p. 24.) To prove a conspiracy to monopolize in violation of § 2, Plaintiff must show four elements: (1) the existence of a combination [*33] or conspiracy to monopolize; (2) an overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy; (3) the specific intent to monopolize; and (4) causal antitrust injury. Paladin Associates, Inc. v. Montana Power Co., 328 F.3d 1145, 1158 (9th Cir. 2003).

1. Arguments regarding Specific Intent

Defendants argue that plaintiff failed to allege two elements - specific intent to monopolize and the existence of a conspiracy to monopolize. (Doc. 272, Joint Brief p. 20.) Defendants argue that there is no allegation that "defendants intended and did drive out independent competitors," citing this Court's February 23, 2011 order. (Doc. 272, Joint Reply p. 20.) Defendants point out the alleged "specific intent" rests solely upon the allegation that U.S.

Steel left the relevant market. Thus, defendants argue there is no anticompetitive conduct designed to exclude other competitors. There is no allegation of a "single instance when a defendant drove out or somehow excluded an independent competitor from the market." (Doc. 272, Joint Brief p.23.)

Plaintiff argues that "the Market Allocation Agreement excluded U.S. Steel (and POSCO) from the market by agreement thus by design leaving UPI as the monopolist supplier." (Doc. [*34] 280, Opposition p. 25 (emphasis in original).) This exclusion by agreement, plaintiff argues, "is the essence of a conspiracy to monopolize claim." Id.

2. Specific Intent and AntiCompetitive Acts

To prevail on a conspiracy to monopolize, plaintiff must show "specific intent to monopolize and anticompetitive acts designed to effect that intent." Hunt-Wesson Foods, Inc. v. Ragu Foods, Inc., 627 F.2d 919, 926 (9th Cir.1980), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 921, 101 S. Ct. 1369, 67 L. Ed. 2d 348 (1981). "[S]pecific intent to monopolize and anticompetitive acts designed to effect that intent" are required for a conspiracy to monopolize claim. Freeman v. San Diego Ass'n of Realtors, 322 F.3d 1133, 1154 (9th Cir.) (section 2 claim failed for lack of evidence that the purpose of conduct was "to stifle competition"), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 940, 124 S. Ct. 355, 157 L. Ed. 2d 253 (2003).

A "specific intent to monopolize" means an intent to exclude competition or control prices. Carpet Seaming Tape Licensing Corp. v. Best Seam. Inc., 616 F.2d 1133, 1141-42 (9th Cir. 1980) (specific adverse impact on the market); see American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 789, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 90 L. Ed. 1575 (1945) (object of a combination or conspiracy to monopolize is "to [*35] exclude actual and potential competitors"). A specific intent to destroy competition or build monopoly is essential. Times-Picayune Pub. Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 626, 73 S. Ct. 872, 890 (1953). Thus, plaintiff must allege "specific intent" ultimately to seize monopoly power by destroying or excluding competition within the relevant market. Specific intent is sufficiently met by proof that a group of competitors took concerted action to drive independent competitors out of business. TV Communications Network v. Turner Network Television, Inc., 964 F.2d 1022 (10th Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 999, 113 S. Ct. 601, 121 L. Ed. 2d 537 (1992).

Plaintiff argues that it has satisfied the requirements to allege the existence of a conspiracy to monopolize, by alleging the Market Allocation Agreement. Plaintiff argues that excluding competition was the goal of the Market Allocation Agreement. Thus, plaintiff's allegation of a "intent to monopolize" is the existence of the Market Allocation Agreement. (Opposition p. 24.)

3. Lack of Independent Competition

The crux of this "specific intent" challenge is whether independent competitors must have been driven out, excluded or impaired in some fashion by the anticompetitive [*36] conduct - the Market Allocation Agreement. The issue is whether plaintiff has plead itself out of a claim because it alleges that there were no other competitors in the market which UPI and U.S. Steel agreed to allocate. The TAC alleges that only UPI and U.S. Steel were in the same market. As such, when U.S. Steel agreed to exit the Western United States, no other competitors were impacted.

Plaintiff cites to Hunt-Wesson Foods and to William Inglis for the proposition that the "Market Allocation Agreement excluded U.S. Steel (and POSCO) from the market by agreement, thus by design leaving UPI as the monopolist suppler." (Doc. 280, Opposition p. 25.)

In Hunt-Wesson Foods, 627 F.2d 919 (9th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 921, 101 S. Ct. 1369, 67 L. Ed. 2d 348 (1981), a food manufacturer brought a conspiracy to monopolize claim, among other claims, against a second food manufacturer. The second food manufacturer moved to dismiss the complaint for failure to allege specific intent. The Court overruled a motion to dismiss finding that specific intent had been alleged in that defendant had engaged in acts resulting in anticompetitive effects, "with the specific intent to eliminate plaintiff and others as competitors . . [*37] all with the intent of keeping or forcing plaintiff out of the business . . . and all with the purpose and effect of obstructing, restraining and excluding competition by the plaintiff and others." Hunt-Wesson Foods, 627 F.2d at 926-927. Thus, in Hunt-Wesson Foods, the plaintiff had alleged that the conduct excluded plaintiff and others as competitors.

In William Inglis & Sons Baking Co. v. ITT Continental Baking Co., 668 F.2d 1014 (9th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 825, 103 S. Ct. 57, 103 S. Ct. 58, 74 L. Ed. 2d 61 (1982), a baking company brought suit against competing independent wholesale bakers alleging antitrust violations. William Inglis stated that specific intent may be inferred from "conduct that serves as the basis for a substantial claim of restraint of trade" (such as a market allocation agreement), but only "if those actions are of a kind clearly threatening to competition or clearly exclusionary." Id. at 1028; accord Christofferson Dairy, Inc. v. MMM Sales, Inc., 849 F.2d 1168, 1174 (9th Cir. 1988) (Proof of specific intent may sometimes be supplied by inference from certain types of conduct. The conduct must, however, amount to an unreasonable restraint of trade under Sherman Act, section 1 standards.)

Here, [*38] plaintiff does not allege competitors or competition were excluded or impacted. Indeed, plaintiff alleges that UPI and U.S. Steel were the only competitors in the market. No other competition existed. Competition consists of rivalry among competitors. Hasbrouck v. Texaco, Inc., 842 F.2d 1034, 1040 (9th Cir. 1987), aff'd, 496 U.S. 543, 110 S. Ct. 2535, 110 L. Ed. 2d 492 (1990). Both UPI and U.S. Steel purportedly possessed a portion of the market which they agreed to allocate in the Market Allocation Agreement. [6] UPI and U.S. Steel each had market power that was lawfully in their hands. No competitors were in the market, excluded from the market or prevented from entering the market because of the Market Allocation Agreement. United States Steel Corp. v. Fortner Enters., Inc., 429 U.S. 610, 612, 97 S.Ct. 861, 51 L.Ed.2d 80 (1977) (holding that "'increasing sales' and 'increasing market share' are normal business goals, not forbidden by § 2 without other evidence of an intent to monopolize").

Specific intent cannot be inferred from U.S. Steel's "exclusion" from the market. The purported "exclusion" of U.S. Steel from the relevant market was by agreement. U.S. Steel voluntarily agreed not to participate in the market. [7] This is not "exclusionary" conduct. No exclusionary conduct, predatory conduct or other anticompetitive conduct is alleged as to any competitor, including U.S. Steel. The agreement to exit the market may be an illicit "agreement" under Section 1 for restraint of trade. It, however, is not a conspiracy to monopolize under Section 2, because the allegations do not allege exclusion of competitors or prevention of competitors from entering the market. Offenses under section 1 and section 2 of the Sherman Act are legally distinct even though they may overlap. See American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 788, 66 S.Ct. 1125, 1128, 90 L. Ed. 1575 (1946) [*40] (section 1 and section 2 are separate statutory offenses and "require proof of conspiracies which are reciprocally distinguishable from and independent of each other although the objects of the conspiracies may partially overlap"); United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 226 n. 59, 60 S.Ct. 811, 846 n. 59, 84 L. Ed. 1129 (1940) ("the crime under § 1 is legally distinct from that under § 2 ... though the two sections overlap in the sense that a monopoly under § 2 is a species of restraint of trade under § 1").

Further, the [*41] specific intent element cannot be inferred from the Market Allocation Agreement because of the remoteness in time between the acts and what plaintiff alleges is the resulting anticompetitive effects. When U.S. Steel exited the market in 2006, UPI's monopoly power purportedly came into existence. UPI could then raise

[6] The TAC alleges, "Pursuant to the Market Allocation Agreement, U.S. Steel (acting directly and through its alter ego Pitcal) agreed to exit the Relevant Market by no longer competing in the Western United States. . . .) (Doc. 268 [*39] TAC ¶74.) Plaintiff alleges that U.S. Steel entered into the Market Allocation Agreement with the specific intent to destroy the actual competition U.S. Steel provided in the Relevant Market . . ." (Doc. 268, TAC ¶75; see also ¶¶76-78 (allegations re POSCO and UPI).) The TAC does not allege other competition was impacted.

[7] In evaluating the allegations of competitors in the market, the Court does not ignore plaintiff's prior, inconsistent allegation. Plaintiff previously alleged that U.S. Steel exited the Western United States market in 1986 when UPI was formed as a joint venture between U.S. Steel and POSCO. Plaintiff had alleged U.S. Steel exited in 1986 because it would not compete against its joint venture. See Doc. 216, FAC ¶70-72. In the TAC, plaintiff alleges U.S. Steel exited the market much later, in 2006. In light of the inconsistent allegation of facts which are easily verifiable and verifiable without the need for discovery, this particular allegation is highly implausible.

prices. However, as noted above, the prices were not raised to supracompetitive prices for another three years after U.S. Steel purportedly left the market. The conspiracy to monopolize through the Market Allocation Agreement did not result in anticompetitive effects for three years. The conspiracy "finalized" in 2006, but prices were not increased until three years later in 2009. [8] There is no "link" between acts and anticompetitive effect in which to infer intent. The focus on an anticompetitive effect is essential, because "it is inimical to the antitrust laws to award damages for losses stemming from acts that do not hurt competition." Rebel Oil Co. Inc. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1433 (9th Cir. 1995), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 987, 116 S. Ct. 515, 133 L. Ed. 2d 424 (1995).

Specific intent to monopolize cannot be inferred when no independent competition is excluded from or effected by the conduct and where the anticompetitive effect is delayed for an extended time. Here, the conduct did not have any effect upon competition because plaintiff does not allege competition was excluded or prevented, and no price increase occurred for over 3 years. Accordingly, this Court finds that, although granted multiple occasions to amend, plaintiff cannot allege specific intent to monopolize. Therefore, this claim will be dismissed with prejudice.

E. Cartwright Act

The parties agree that plaintiff's California Cartwright Act claim either falls or succeeds on the success or failure of the claims under the Sherman Act. (See Doc. 280, Opposition p. 23 ("the TAC satisfies the elements of a Cartwright Act claim if it satisfies the elements of a Section 1 claim under the Sherman Act."); [*43] (Doc. 281, Reply p.7-8 ("plaintiff seems to concede that its Cartwright Act and UCL claims rise or fall with its Sherman Act claim.).)

The Cartwright Act is California's antitrust statute. Bus. & Prof Code §§16700-16770. Cases decided under the Sherman Act are applicable to interpreting the Cartwright Act. See Marin County Bd. Of Realtors, Inc. v. Palsson, 16 Cal.3d 920, 130 Cal.Rptr.1, 549 P.2d 833 (1976). Indeed, the analysis under California's antitrust law mirrors the analysis under federal law because the Cartwright Act was modeled after the Sherman Act. County of Tuolumne v. Sonora Community Hosp., 236 F.3d 1148, 1160 (9th Cir. 2001). Therefore, the analysis and conclusions would be the same under the Cartwright Act, as under the federal claims.

Given the analyses and conclusions regarding the federal claims, the Court incorporates those rulings for the state Cartwright Act antitrust claim as well. To the extent that the motion has been granted or denied on the Sherman Act claims, that ruling is incorporated for the Cartwright Act.

F. Unfair Competition Claim.

Plaintiff's count 4 alleges a claim under California's Unfair Practices Act, also called the Unfair Competition Act ("UCL"). The purposes [*44] of the UCL are "to safeguard the public against the creation or perpetuation of monopolies and to foster and encourage competition, by prohibiting unfair, dishonest, deceptive, destructive, fraudulent and discriminatory practices by which fair and honest competition is destroyed or prevented." Cal.Bus.&Prof.Code § 17001. "The UC[L] works by 'borrowing' violations of other laws and treating those transgressions, when committed as a business activity, as 'unlawful business practices.'" Stevens v. Superior Court, 75 Cal. App. 4th 594, 602, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 370 (1999). These "unlawful business practices" are "independently actionable under section 17200 et seq. and subject to the distinct remedies provided thereunder." Id.

The UCL claim predicates liability based on the Sherman Act and the Cartwright Act. Given the analyses and conclusions regarding the federal and state claims, the Court incorporates those rulings for the UCL claim as well.

[8] The section 1 claim, conspiracy to restrain trade, is not fatally flawed even though it contains the same allegations [*42] of delay in increasing prices. Proof is different for a Section 1 and a Section 2 claim. To prove a Section 2 conspiracy to monopolize, one must show a specific intent to monopolize. By comparison, a case brought under § 1 of the Sherman Act only requires proof of an anticompetitive agreement.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court rules on the defendants' motion to dismiss the third amended complaint as follows:

(1) The motion to dismiss the First Claim for California Cartwright Act, Cal.Bus. & Prof. Code §16720 is DENIED in part, to the extent that it is [*45] predicated on Section 1 of the Sherman Act and GRANTED in part, to the extent it is predicated on Section 2 of the Sherman Act;

(2) The motion to dismiss the Second Claim for Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §1 (Restraint of Trade) is DENIED;

(3) The motion to dismiss the Third Claim for Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §2 (Conspiracy to Monopolize) is GRANTED with prejudice;

(4) The motion to dismiss the Fourth Claim for Relief for Unfair Competition, Cal.Bus & Prof Code §17200 is DENIED in part, to the extent that it is predicated on Section 1 of the Sherman Act and GRANTED in part, to the extent it is predicated on Section 2 of the Sherman Act.

Defendants shall have 30 days from the date of entry of this order to file an answer.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

The objection that a petition fails to state a cause of action is properly raised by the peremptory exception. La. Code Civ. Proc. Ann. art. 927(A)(5). The purpose of the peremptory exception of no cause of action is to determine the sufficiency in law of the petition, in terms of whether the law extends a remedy to anyone under the petition's factual allegations. For purposes of determining the issues raised by a peremptory exception of no cause of action, the well-pleaded facts in the petition must be accepted as true, and the court must determine if the law affords the plaintiff a remedy under those facts. Any doubts are resolved in favor of the sufficiency of the petition.

HN5[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

The federal and Louisiana antitrust laws were intended to be sweeping in breadth, encompassing every conspiracy, contract, or combination that restrains trade. Not every business arrangement that restrains trade in some manner is illegal, however. The first step in analyzing an agreement to restrain trade is to determine whether it should be categorized as horizontal or vertical.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN6[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

A horizontal conspiracy is an agreement between competitors that restrains trade at the same level of distribution, and such agreements are generally considered "per se" violations of antitrust law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN7[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

A vertical restraint is imposed by persons at different levels of distribution, usually by one higher up in the distribution chain than the party restrained. When a vertical conspiracy is alleged, the plaintiffs must show that the restraint of trade violates the "rule of reason."

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Nonprice Restraints

HN8[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

The rule of reason analysis under both federal and Louisiana law requires proof of three elements: that the defendants (1) engaged in a conspiracy (2) that restrained trade or injured competition (3) in a particular market. Where the alleged restrictions are vertical, and not directed at fixing prices, their legality is governed by the rule of reason, and in order to prevail under the rule of reason, a plaintiff must show that the defendants' conduct has an adverse effect on competition.

HN10[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Under the rule of reason, and in order to state an antitrust claim under La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 51:122, a plaintiff must adequately allege injury to competition. This requirement cannot be met by broad allegations of harm to the "market" as an abstract entity. Even an act of pure malice by one business competitor against another does not, without more, state an antitrust claim. Since Louisiana is a fact-pleading state, a plaintiff must set forth "material facts" that form the basis for the asserted cause of action. A mere conclusion unsupported by material facts does not set forth a cause of action. Therefore, conclusory statements of fact or formulaic recitations of the elements of an antitrust violation are insufficient to state a claim.

HN12[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, Federal Trade Commission Act

The Louisiana Unfair Trade Practices Act, La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 51:1401 et seq., is patterned after the Federal Trade Commission Act and prohibits the same type of deceptive and anticompetitive conduct as prohibited by the Federal Trade Commission Act. Therefore, in interpreting Louisiana's statute, a court must consider how the Federal Trade Commission and the federal courts have applied the Federal Trade Commission Act to various types of conduct.

HN13[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, Federal Trade Commission Act

Under the Federal Trade Commission Act, vertical territorial and customer restrictions are not prohibited absent a showing of injury to competition. The real thrust of the Louisiana Unfair Trade Practices Act, La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 51:1401 et seq., modeled after the Federal Trade Commission Act, is to deter injury to competition.

[*1019] [Pg 3] GAIDRY, J.

This appeal involves an action by an insurance agent and his agency seeking damages for breach of contract, unfair trade practices, antitrust violations, and interference with contractual relations. The defendants-appellants, Grant P. Gravois ("Gravois") and Grant P. Gravois [2] Insurance Agency, Inc. ("Gravois Agency"), State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Company, State Farm Life Insurance Company, State Farm Fire and Casualty Company, State Farm General Insurance Company (collectively, "State Farm"), and Robert A. England ("England"), seek reversal of the trial court's judgment denying their peremptory exceptions of no cause of action in favor of the plaintiffs-appellees, Leigh Van Hoose, Jr. ("Van Hoose") and Leigh Van Hoose, Jr. Insurance Agency Inc. ("Van Hoose Agency").[1] [*1020] We reverse the trial court's judgment for the following reasons and remand the case in order to allow plaintiffs to amend their petition pursuant to La. Code Civ. P. art. 934.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND AND PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Van Hoose entered into a "State Farm Agent's Agreement" with State Farm, effective November 1, 1980, which provided that Van Hoose would be an independent contractor and the Van Hoose Agency would only sell State Farm insurance. The Van Hoose Agency is located in Slidell, Louisiana. [3] Curtis Martin was another State Farm agent located in Slidell. Martin and Van Hoose were close friends, and when Martin developed cancer and his death became imminent, he requested that Van Hoose consider hiring his most valued employee, Fanny Pichon. Soon after Martin's passing, Van Hoose hired Pichon with an effective employment [Pg 4] date of July 1, 2009. Sometime after July 1, 2009, Gravois began operating the Gravois Agency in Slidell.

Van Hoose filed a petition for damages on January 5, 2011, in which he claims that one week after hiring Pichon he received a call from England, an agency field executive for State Farm, who stated that "he better not see any policyholder transfers from the Curtis [Martin] Agency to the Van Hoose Agency." Van Hoose stated that he told England that neither he nor Pichon had solicited or would solicit any business from the former Curtis Martin Agency. Plaintiffs allege that Gravois, a former State Farm employee, was promised and expected to have all the policyholders from the former Curtis Martin Agency. The petition further alleges that several policyholders decided to transfer from the Curtis Martin Agency to the Van Hoose Agency of their own volition. [4] Subsequently, England again contacted Van Hoose and stated that he had the power to shut down the Van Hoose Agency if more policyholders requested transfers. In the fall of 2009, England and State Farm allowed some policyholders to transfer agencies at their request, but Gravois contacted several policyholders in an attempt to convince them not to switch. Plaintiffs claim that on January 7, 2010, Gravois stated in an email to Van Hoose, copying England and others, that as of that date he would not allow any more policyholders to transfer to the Van Hoose Agency. Since that time, any transfer requests from policyholders have been blocked by England.

Plaintiffs' petition seeks to allege causes of action for (1) breach of contract; (2) unfair trade practices in violation of the Louisiana Unfair Trade Practices Act ("LUTPA"), La. R.S. 51:1401, et seq.; (3) restraint of trade in violation of the Louisiana antitrust statute, La. R.S. 51:122; and (4) interference with contractual relations. Defendants filed exceptions of no [Pg 5] cause of action with respect to the unfair trade practices and antitrust claims. The trial court held a hearing on the exceptions on May 11, 2011, and subsequently [5] signed a judgment on May 23, 2011, denying the exceptions of no cause of action. This appeal followed.

ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR AND ISSUES PRESENTED

Defendants-appellants contend that the trial court erred in denying their exceptions of no cause of action. State Farm and England frame the issues presented for our review as follows:

[1] Gravois and Gravois Agency filed a separate exception from State Farm and England. However, the substance of the exceptions and the arguments made in this appeal are substantially similar.

[*1021] 1. Whether a plaintiff meets his burden of pleading an antitrust claim under Louisiana law where the allegations of his petition plead only a reduction in intrabrand competition and not interbrand competition, and injury to himself with no corresponding antitrust injury or injury to competition?

2. If there is a contract, combination, or conspiracy, which State Farm and England dispute, does Louisiana antitrust law recognize a per se horizontal restraint of trade under La. R.S. 51:122 where a plaintiff pleads only one same-level competitor?

3. In a case where plaintiffs have only nominally pleaded a vertical restraint of trade (wherein they are required to plead with material facts a relevant product and geographic market), does a petition that states only that the relevant geographic market is the "greater Slidell area" and the relevant product market is "State [6] Farm approved and authorized products" satisfy the fact-pleading standard to advance a State antitrust claim?
4. Where a plaintiff pleads a LUTPA claim that is premised entirely on the existence of an antitrust claim, and the antitrust claim is insufficiently pleaded, must the LUTPA claim be dismissed?

Gravois and Gravois Agency's issues for review are similar:

1. Whether the trial court incorrectly found that plaintiffs properly pled a claim under La. R.S. 51:122?
2. Whether plaintiffs have alleged a vertical restraint of trade?
3. Whether plaintiffs failed to show there is an unreasonable restraint on competition?
4. Whether plaintiffs failed to plead a relevant market?
5. Whether plaintiffs have also failed to allege a cause of action under the LUTPA?

[Pg 6] APPELLATE REVIEW OF JUDGMENT DENYING PEREMPTORY EXCEPTION OF NO CAUSE OF ACTION

HN1[] The objection that a petition fails to state a cause of action is properly raised by the peremptory exception. La. C.C.P. art. 927(A)(5). The purpose of the peremptory exception of no cause of action is to determine the sufficiency in law of the petition, in terms of whether the law extends a remedy to anyone under the petition's factual allegations. Stroscher v. Stroscher, 2001-2769 (La. App. 1st Cir. 2/14/03), 845 So.2d 518, 523. [7] For purposes of determining the issues raised by a peremptory exception of no cause of action, the well-pleaded facts in the petition must be accepted as true, and the court must determine if the law affords the plaintiff a remedy under those facts. Id. Any doubts are resolved in favor of the sufficiency of the petition. Id.

HN2[] Appellate review of the denial of a peremptory exception of no cause of action is de novo because an exception of no cause of action presents a question of law and the trial court's decision is based only on the sufficiency of the petition. City of Denham Springs v. Perkins, 2008-1937 (La. App. 1st Cir. 3/27/09), 10 So.3d 311, 321-22, writ denied, 2009-0871 (La. 5/13/09), 8 So.3d 568. HN3[] Though the denial of an exception of no cause of action is normally not appealable, La. R.S. 51:134 and 135 provide for an immediate appeal of such an interlocutory judgment related to antitrust claims. Plaquemine Marine, Inc. v. Mercury Marine, 2003-1036 (La. App. 1st Cir. 7/25/03), 859 So.2d 110, 114, n. [*1022] 3. While there is no specific statutory provision providing for an immediate appeal of an interlocutory judgment related to LUTPA claims, courts have addressed LUTPA claims along [8] with antitrust claims on appeals authorized by R.S. 51:134 and 135. See Southern Tool & Supply, Inc. v. Beerman Precision, Inc., 2003-0960 (La. App. 4th Cir. 11/26/03), 862 So.2d 271, [Pg 7] writs denied, 2003-3481, (La. 3/12/04), 869 So. 2d 821, 2003-3518, (La. 3/12/04),869 So. 2d 825, & 2003-3536 (La. 3/12/04), 869 So. 2d 826; see also *Jefferson v. Regardless, in the event that the Court does not have appellate jurisdiction over the LUTPA claim, we choose to exercise our supervisory jurisdiction pursuant to Article V, Section 10(A) of the Louisiana Constitution of 1974.

DISCUSSION

A. Antitrust claim under La. R.S. 51:122

The Louisiana antitrust statute provides that HN4[] "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce in this state is illegal." La. R.S. 51:122(A). HN5[] The federal and state antitrust laws were intended to be sweeping in breadth, encompassing every conspiracy, contract, or combination that restrains trade. Louisiana Power & Light Co. v. United Gas Pipe Line Co., 493 So.2d 1149, 1154-55 & n. 12 (La. 1986). Not every business arrangement [9] that restrains trade in some manner is illegal, however. The first step in analyzing an agreement to restrain trade is to determine whether it should be categorized as horizontal or vertical. HN6[] A horizontal conspiracy is an agreement between competitors that restrains trade at the same level of distribution, and such agreements are generally considered "per se" violations of antitrust law. Plaquemine Marine, Inc., 859 So.2d at 117; Southern Tool & Supply, Inc., 862 So.2d at 280. HN7[] A vertical restraint is imposed by persons at different levels of distribution, usually by one higher up in the distribution chain than the party restrained. When a vertical conspiracy is alleged, plaintiffs must show that the restraint of trade violates the "rule of reason." Plaquemine Marine, Inc., 859 So.2d at 118.

[Pg 8] HN8[] The rule of reason analysis under both federal and Louisiana law requires proof of three elements: that the defendants (1) engaged in a conspiracy (2) that restrained trade or injured competition (3) in a particular market. Abraham v. Richland Parish Hosp. Service Dist. 1-B, 41,141 (La. App. 2d Cir. 8/23/06), 938 So.2d 1163, 1172, writ denied, 2006-2534 (La. 1/8/07), 948 So.2d 124. Where the [10] alleged restrictions are vertical, and not directed at fixing prices, their legality is governed by the rule of reason, and in order to prevail under the rule of reason, a plaintiff must show that the defendants' conduct has an adverse effect on competition. Red Diamond Supply, Inc. v. Liquid Carbonic Corp., 637 F.2d 1001, 1005 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 827, 102 S. Ct. 119, 70 L. Ed. 2d 102 (1981).

In this case, plaintiffs-appellees argue that a horizontal conspiracy is alleged, which implicates the per se rule. However, jurisprudence is clear that HN9[] horizontal combinations are agreements between competitors at the same level of distribution. See Plaquemine Marine, Inc., 859 So.2d at 117; see also Southern Tool & Supply, Inc., 862 So.2d at 280. The agreement alleged here is among Gravois, the Gravois Agency, and England. While it is not entirely clear under Louisiana law and the facts of this case whether Gravois [*1023] could conspire with the Gravois Agency, even assuming that he could, there is no allegation that Gravois, the Gravois Agency, and England compete with each other. Therefore, under the facts alleged thus far, there could not be a horizontal conspiracy since the alleged [11] agreement is not "between competitors." The agreement alleged is properly categorized as a vertical conspiracy, triggering the rule of reason analysis.

HN10[] Under the rule of reason, and in order to state an antitrust claim under La. R.S. 51:122, a plaintiff must adequately allege injury to competition. Plaquemine Marine, Inc., 859 So.2d at 118. This requirement cannot be met [Pg 9] by broad allegations of harm to the "market" as an abstract entity. Id. Even an act of pure malice by one business competitor against another does not, without more, state an antitrust claim. Id. at 119. Since Louisiana is a fact-pleading state, a plaintiff must set forth "material facts" that form the basis for the asserted cause of action. Id. at 118. A mere conclusion unsupported by material facts does not set forth a cause of action; therefore, conclusory statements of fact or formulaic recitations of the elements of an antitrust violation are insufficient to state a claim. Tuban Petroleum, LLC v. SIARC, Inc., 2009-0302 (La. App. 4th Cir. 4/15/09), 11 So.3d 519, 522-23, writ denied, 2009-0945 (La. 6/5/09), 9 So.3d 877.

In this case, plaintiffs allege in their petition that the conspiracy to restrain trade "prevent[ed] [12] or discourage[d] State Farm policyholders from moving their State Farm policies from the Gravois Agency to the Van Hoose Agency," which "injured competition in the market by denying policyholders a free choice to select the State Farm agency they wished to have their business placed with." Plaintiffs further allege that the defendants' conspiracy "significantly injured competition among the remaining agencies." These allegations are broad and conclusory claims of harm to the market. The material facts underlying these allegations assert that the alleged agreement prevented State Farm policyholders from switching from the Gravois Agency to the Van Hoose Agency. While the petition contains an allegation regarding injury to "competition among the remaining agencies," there are no material facts plead to support such an allegation. There are no allegations that the State Farm policyholders in question were not allowed to transfer their policies to any other State Farm agency or any other insurance company. Therefore, the allegations of injury [Pg 10] to competition in the petition are insufficient to state a valid antitrust claim under La. R.S. 51:122.

Since we find that plaintiffs-appellees [13] have not adequately alleged injury to competition to support their antitrust claim and reverse the trial court's judgment on this basis, it is unnecessary to address the other issues related to the antitrust claim raised by appellants.

B. Unfair Trade Practices claim under LUTPA

The Louisiana Unfair Trade Practices Act, La. R.S. 51:1401, et seq., does not enumerate those instances of conduct that constitute unfair trade practices, but La. R.S. 51:1405(A) provides that HN11[] "[u]nfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce are hereby declared unlawful." This Court has noted that HN12[] the LUTPA is patterned after the Federal Trade Commission Act and prohibits the same type of deceptive and anticompetitive conduct as prohibited by the Federal Trade Commission Act. Capitol House Preservation Co., LLC v. Perryman Consultants, Inc., 2008-0367 (La. App. 1st Cir. 8/28/09), 47 So.3d 408, 417, writ denied, [*1024] 2009-2638 (La. 2/12/10), 27 So.3d 856, cert. denied, __ U.S. __, 131 S. Ct. 104, 178 L. Ed. 2d 30 (2010). Therefore, in interpreting Louisiana's statute, a court must consider how the Federal Trade Commission and the federal courts have [14] applied the Federal Trade Commission Act to various types of conduct. Id. HN13[] Under the Federal Trade Commission Act, vertical territorial and customer restrictions are not prohibited absent a showing of injury to competition. Red Diamond Supply, Inc., 637 F.2d at 1008. In addition, the U.S. Fifth Circuit has noted that "the real thrust of the LUTPA, modeled after the Federal Trade Commission Act, ... is to deter injury to competition." Reingold v. Swiftships, Inc. 126 F.3d 645, 652 (5th Cir. 1997) (quoting Omnitech International, Inc. v. Clorox Company, 11 F.3d 1316, 1331 (5th Cir.), [Pg 11] cert. denied, 513 U.S. 815, 115 S. Ct. 71, 130 L. Ed. 2d 26 (1994). As discussed above regarding the antitrust claim, plaintiffs-appellees have failed to adequately allege injury to competition in this case. Therefore, plaintiffs-appellees have similarly failed to state a claim for unfair trade practices under the LUTPA.

DECREE

The judgment of the trial court denying the peremptory exceptions of no cause of action is reversed, and the case is remanded in order to allow plaintiffs to amend their petition pursuant to La. C.C.P. art. 934. Costs of this appeal shall be split equally between the parties.

The Norris-LaGuardia Act (NLGA), 29 U.S.C.S. § 101 et seq., curtails the authority of a district court to issue injunctions in a labor dispute. The NLGA responded directly to the United State Supreme Court's construction of § 20 of the Clayton Act of 1914, 29 U.S.C.S. § 52, and to other decisions of federal courts entering or upholding injunctions in labor disputes. The Clayton Act bars federal courts, in any case between an employer and employees, or between employers and employees, or between employees, or between persons employed and persons seeking employment, involving, or growing out of, a dispute concerning terms or conditions of employment, from issuing an injunction to prohibit any person or persons from ceasing to perform any work or labor or terminating any relation of employment. 29 U.S.C.S. § 52. The NLGA effectively superseded United States Supreme Court decisions by precluding federal courts from enjoining certain secondary activity by workers in labor disputes.

There is no uniform definition of the term "lockout," but one practical definition used by the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit is a refusal by an employer to furnish available work to its regular employees. As used by the National Labor Relations Board and the courts, a lockout is most simply and completely defined as the withholding of employment by an employer from its employees for the purpose of either resisting their demands or gaining a concession from them.

Employers, of course, are among the persons participating in a labor dispute. The introductory clause of 29 U.S.C.S. § 104 thus plainly encompasses employers. If language in a particular subsection is applicable on its face to employees and employers alike (or to employers alone), then there is no need for a specific mention of employers. An employer against whom injunctive relief is sought may invoke the protection of a subsection as a person participating or interested in the labor dispute. The United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit already has recognized that § 104(c) applies to injunctions against employers.

The language in 29 U.S.C.S. § 104(a) — "remain in any relation of employment" — may apply to an employer. 29 U.S.C.S. § 103 of the Norris-LaGuardia Act, 29 U.S.C.S. § 101 et seq., makes clear that both employers and employees can be in a "relation of employment." 29 U.S.C.S. § 103(b) contemplates that either party to a labor agreement can agree to withdraw from an employment relation.

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Strikes & Work Stoppages

HN19[] Federal Preemption, Primacy of Labor Policy

The phrase "refusing. to remain in any relation of employment" in 29 U.S.C.S. § 104(a) encompasses a non-permanent work stoppage. To "remain" is to continue unchanged in place, form, or condition, or to continue, as in one place, condition, or character. While a strike or lockout may not permanently end a relation of employment, it changes the condition or character of that relationship. The relation of employer and employee is temporarily suspended during a strike.

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Federal Preemption > Primacy of Labor Policy

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Strikes & Work Stoppages

HN20[] Federal Preemption, Primacy of Labor Policy

Employees may refuse to perform work under the first clause of 29 U.S.C.S. § 104(a), and they may refuse to remain in a relation of employment under the second. There is likely overlap between the two clauses, and courts (including the U.S. Supreme Court) have cited both clauses in holding that a strike may not be enjoined. The employer, by contrast, does not perform work, so it may invoke only the second clause. Insofar as an employer's lockout extends to acts by other employers who refuse to take in the late employees of the first employer, the terms of § 104(a) do not forbid an injunction against refusing to offer new work or employment. The lack of symmetry, however, does not render § 104(a) inapplicable to employers altogether. The evenhanded introductory clause of § 104 still forbids a court to enjoin "any person or persons" in a labor dispute from "refusing. to remain in any relation of employment." That the terms of § 104(a) afford employers less protection against injunctions than they afford employees (who were, after all, the target of the controversial injunctions that prompted the Norris-LaGuardia Act, 29 U.S.C.S. § 101 et seq.) does not mean that Congress gave employers no protection at all.

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Federal Preemption > Primacy of Labor Policy

HN21[] Federal Preemption, Primacy of Labor Policy

It is not a court's province to define the purpose of Congress apart from what it has said in its enactments, and if a party's activities fall within the classes defined by the Clayton and Norris-LaGuardia acts, the court is bound to accord the party the benefit of the legislative provisions.

Statements by opponents of a bill and failure to enact suggested amendments, although they have some weight, are not the most reliable indications of congressional intent.

29 U.S.C.S. § 104(a) of the Norris-LaGuardia Act, 29 U.S.C.S. § 101 et seq., deprives a federal court of power to issue an injunction prohibiting a party to a labor dispute from implementing a lockout of its employees.

29 U.S.C.S. § 107 provides that a court has no authority to issue an injunction except after hearing the testimony of witnesses in open court (with opportunity for cross-examination) in support of the allegations of a complaint made under oath, and testimony in opposition thereto.

[*663] COLLOTON, Circuit Judge.

This appeal arises from an action filed by nine professional football players and one prospective football player ("the Players") against the National Football League and its thirty-two separately-owned clubs, more commonly known as football teams (collectively, "the NFL" or "the League"). On March 11, 2011, a collective bargaining agreement between the League and a union representing professional football players expired. The League had made known that if a new agreement was not reached before the expiration date, then it would implement a lockout of players, during which the athletes would not be paid or permitted to use club facilities. The League viewed a lockout as a legitimate tactic under the labor laws to bring economic pressure to bear on the players as part of the bargaining process. [5] See Am. Ship Bldg. Co. v. NLRB, 380 U.S. 300, 301-02, 318, 85 S. Ct. 955, 13 L. Ed. 2d 855 (1965).

The players, aware of the League's strategy, opted to terminate the union's status as their collective bargaining agent as of 4:00 p.m. on March 11, just before the agreement expired. Later that day, the Players filed an action in the district court alleging that the lockout planned by the League would constitute a group boycott and price-fixing agreement that would violate § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act. The complaint explained that "the players in the NFL have determined that it is not in their interest to remain unionized if the existence of such a union would serve to allow the NFL to impose anticompetitive restrictions with impunity." The plaintiffs also alleged other violations of the antitrust laws and state common law.

The League proceeded with its planned lockout on March 12, 2011. The Players moved for a preliminary injunction in the district court, urging the court to enjoin the lockout as an unlawful group boycott that was causing irreparable harm to the Players. The district court granted a preliminary injunction, and the League appealed. We conclude that the injunction did not conform to the provisions [6] of the Norris-LaGuardia Act, 29 U.S.C. § 101 et seq., and we therefore vacate the district court's order.

Some historical background will place this case in context. In Radovich v. NFL, 352 U.S. 445, 451-52, 77 S. Ct. 390, 1 L. Ed. 2d 456 (1957), the Supreme Court held that professional football — unlike major league baseball — is not categorically exempt from the antitrust laws. In 1968, the National Labor Relations Board ("NLRB") recognized the NFL Players Association ("NFLPA") as the exclusive bargaining representative of all NFL players, [*664] and the NFL and the NFLPA entered into their first collective bargaining agreement ("CBA"). Mackey v. NFL, 543 F.2d 606, 610 (8th Cir. 1976). Since then, the relationship between the League and its players has been punctuated by both collective bargaining agreements and antitrust lawsuits.

In 1972, several players filed an antitrust action against the League in Mackey v. NFL, alleging that the League's policy with respect to free agents — that is, players whose contracts with a particular team have expired — violated § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1.[1] Mackey, 543 F.2d at 609. This court concluded that the restriction at issue, known as the "Rozelle Rule," unreasonably restrained [7] trade in violation of § 1, because it was "significantly more restrictive than necessary to serve any legitimate purposes" of maintaining competitive balance in the NFL. Id. at 622. While the Mackey litigation was pending, the CBA between the League and the NFLPA expired, and seventy-eight NFL players filed a separate class action antitrust suit against the League. See Reynolds v. NFL, 584 F.2d 280, 282 (8th Cir. 1978); *Alexander v. NFL, No. 4-76-123, 1977 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14685, 1977 WL 1497, at 1 (D. Minn. Aug. 1, 1977). In 1977, the League and the players entered into a settlement agreement incorporating a new CBA that implemented a revised system of free agency known as "right of first refusal/compensation." Alexander, 1977 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14685, 1977 WL 1497, at *1-2. As part of the settlement, the League withdrew its petition for a writ of certiorari in Mackey. Reynolds, 584 F.2d at 282.

This state of affairs lasted until December 1982, when the NFL players engaged in a fifty-seven-day strike before agreeing [8] to a new CBA that included a modified version of the "right of first refusal/compensation" system. Powell v. NFL, 930 F.2d 1293, 1295-96 (8th Cir. 1989); Powell v. NFL, 678 F. Supp. 777, 780-81 (D. Minn. 1988), rev'd, 930 F.2d 1293. This CBA expired in 1987, and when negotiations for a new CBA proved unsuccessful, the NFLPA conducted another strike. Powell, 930 F.2d at 1296. Immediately after the strike ended in October 1987, the NFLPA and several individual players commenced an antitrust suit in Powell v. NFL, alleging among other things that the League's free agency restrictions violated the Sherman Act. Id. This court held that a nonstatutory labor exemption from the antitrust laws shielded the League from antitrust liability. Id. at 1303. The Supreme Court "has implied this exemption from federal labor statutes," reasoning that "to give effect to federal labor laws and policies and to allow meaningful collective bargaining to take place, some restraints on competition imposed through the bargaining process must be shielded from antitrust sanctions." Brown v. Pro Football, Inc., 518 U.S. 231, 236- 37, 116 S. Ct. 2116, 135 L. Ed. 2d 521 (1996). This court in Powell concluded that the nonstatutory labor exemption can [9] extend beyond an impasse in negotiations, and that application of the exemption was appropriate in that case, because the parties still could resolve their differences through the use of the "offsetting tools" of labor law, including strikes, lockouts, and petitions for intervention by the NLRB. 930 F.2d at 1302-03. The court declined, however, "to look into the future and pick a termination point for the labor exemption." Id. at 1303.

Two days after this court's decision in Powell, on November 3, 1989, the NFLPA's executive committee decided to [*665] abandon the organization's collective bargaining rights in an effort to end the NFL's nonstatutory labor exemption from the antitrust laws. Powell v. NFL, 764 F. Supp. 1351, 1354 (D. Minn. 1991). The NFLPA disclaimed its union status, enacted new bylaws prohibiting it from engaging in collective bargaining with the League, filed a labor organization termination notice with the U.S. Department of Labor, obtained a reclassification by the Internal Revenue Service as a "business league" rather than a labor organization, and notified the NFL that it would no longer represent players in grievance proceedings. Id.

In 1990, eight individual football [10] players brought a new antitrust action against the League in McNeil v. NFL, contending that new player restraints imposed by the League during the 1990-1991 season violated § 1 of the Sherman Act. Id. at 1359. Following a ten-week trial in late 1992, a jury rendered a verdict in favor of the McNeil plaintiffs and awarded substantial damages. See McNeil v. NFL, No. 4-90- 476, 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21561, 1992 WL 315292, at *1 (D. Minn. Sept. 10, 1992).

Two new antitrust lawsuits were filed in the two-week period after the McNeil verdict. Ten NFL players brought suit in Jackson v. NFL, alleging that the League's free agency restrictions violated the Sherman Act. Jackson v. NFL, 802 F. Supp. 226, 228-229, 234 n.14 (D. Minn. 1992). Five other NFL players instituted White v. NFL, a class action alleging that various practices of the League, including free agency restraints, the college draft, and the use of a standard NFL player contract, violated the antitrust laws. See White v. NFL, 822 F. Supp. 1389, 1395 (D. Minn. 1993).

Many disputes between the League and the players were resolved when the parties entered into a class action settlement agreement in White. In January 1993, the parties reached a tentative agreement [11] designed to resolve White and related cases. Id. at 1395-96. The NFLPA subsequently collected authorization cards from NFL players re-designating the organization as the players' exclusive collective bargaining representative, and the NFL voluntarily recognized the NFLPA as the players' union on March 29, 1993. Id. at 1396-97. The district court approved the parties' Stipulation and Settlement Agreement ("SSA") in April 1993, and the NFL and the NFLPA entered into a new CBA shortly thereafter. White v. NFL, 836 F. Supp. 1458, 1465-66 (D. Minn. 1993). The NFL and the NFLPA agreed to amend various portions of the SSA to conform to the provisions of the new CBA, and the district court approved the requested amendments. Id. at 1466, 1468. The court entered a consent decree incorporating the terms of the amended SSA on August 20, 1993. White v. NFL, 836 F. Supp. 1508, 1511 (D. Minn. 1993).

In 1996, the Supreme Court decided an important case concerning professional football and the scope of the nonstatutory labor exemption from the antitrust laws, Brown v. Pro Football, Inc., 518 U.S. 231, 116 S. Ct. 2116, 135 L. Ed. 2d 521. After the expiration of the collective bargaining agreement in 1987, the League and the NLFPA bargained [12] to impasse over player salaries for members of each club's "developmental squad," which consisted of up to six first-year players who were not on the regular player roster. The League then unilaterally implemented an agreement among the clubs to pay a salary of $1000 per week to these players. A group of the players sued, alleging that the employers' agreement violated § 1 of the Sherman Act. The Supreme Court held that the nonstatutory labor exemption applied to the employer conduct at issue, which (1) took place during and immediately after a collective-bargaining negotiation, (2) grew out of, and [*666] was directly related to, the lawful operation of the bargaining process, (3) involved a matter that the parties were required to negotiate collectively, and (4) concerned only the parties to the collective-bargaining relationship. Id. at 250. In a closing paragraph, the Court added the following:

> Our holding is not intended to insulate from antitrust review every joint imposition of terms by employers, for an agreement among employers could be sufficiently distant in time and in circumstances from the collective-bargaining process that a rule permitting antitrust intervention would not significantly [13] interfere with that process. See, e.g., 50 F.3d at 1507 (suggesting that exemption lasts until collapse of the collective-bargaining relationship, as evidenced by decertification of the union); El Cerrito Mill & Lumber Co., 316 N.L.R.B., at 1006-1007 (suggesting that "extremely long" impasse, accompanied by "instability" or "defunctness" of multiemployer unit, might justify union withdrawal from group bargaining). We need not decide in this case whether, or where, within these extreme boundaries to draw that line. Nor would it be appropriate for us to do so without the detailed views of the Board, to whose "specialized judgment" Congress "intended to leave" many of the "inevitable questions concerning multiemployer bargaining bound to arise in the future."

Id. (citations omitted).

The Supreme Court's most recent decision regarding this industry came in American Needle, Inc. v. NFL, 130 S. Ct. 2201, 176 L. Ed. 2d 947 (2010). The Court held that the alleged conduct of the NFL teams in forming National Football League Properties to develop, license, and market their individually owned intellectual property, and then to grant an exclusive license for that property, was concerted action not categorically beyond [14] the coverage of § 1 of the Sherman Act. At the same time, the Court remarked that "[f]ootball teams that need to cooperate are not trapped by antitrust law," to wit: "The fact that NFL teams share an interest in making the entire league successful and profitable, and that they must cooperate in the production and scheduling of games, provides a perfectly sensible justification for making a host of collective decisions." Id. at 2216. Yet these interests did not justify treating the NFL teams as a single entity for purposes of § 1 of the Sherman Act when it came to the marketing of their intellectual property. Id. at 2217.

B.

Since 1993, the players and the League have operated under the White SSA, and the district court has continued to oversee the settlement by resolving numerous disputes over the terms of the SSA and CBA. White v. NFL, 585 F.3d 1129, 1133 (8th Cir. 2009). Whenever the NFL and the NFLPA have agreed to change a provision in the CBA, a conforming change has also been made to the SSA. Id. at 1134. The SSA has been amended several times over the past eighteen years, most recently in 2006, when the NFL and the NFLPA reached an agreement on a new CBA that would last through [15] the 2012-2013 football season. See id. The 2006 SSA and CBA gave both sides the right to opt out of the final two years of each agreement upon written notice.

In May 2008, the NFL opted out of the final two years of the SSA and CBA, citing concerns about operating costs and other elements of the agreements. *White v. NFL, 766 F. Supp. 2d 941, 2011 WL 706319, at 1 (D. Minn. 2011). As a result, the SSA and CBA were scheduled to expire in early March 2011. Id. Although the NFL and the NFLPA engaged in more than two years [*667] of negotiations toward a new CBA, the League and the players were unable to reach an agreement. The League filed an unfair labor practice charge with the NLRB in February 2011, asserting that the union failed to confer in good faith. The Players say that the charge is meritless.

As the deadline approached, a substantial majority of NFL players voted to end the NFLPA's status as their collective bargaining representative. On March 11, 2011 — the expiration date of the SSA and CBA — the NFLPA notified the NFL that it disclaimed interest in continuing to serve as the players' collective bargaining representative, effective at 4:00 p.m. The NFLPA also amended its bylaws to [16] prohibit collective bargaining with the League or its agents, filed a labor organization termination notice with the Department of Labor, asked the Internal Revenue Service to reclassify the NFLPA as a professional association rather than a labor organization, and notified the NFL that it would no longer represent players bringing grievances against the League.

The League filed an amended unfair labor practice charge on March 11, alleging that the NFLPA's disclaimer was a "sham" and that the combination of a disclaimer by the union and subsequent antitrust litigation was "a ploy and an unlawful subversion of the collective bargaining process." The Players dispute the charge, citing an advice memorandum of an associate general counsel of the NLRB in Pittsburgh Steelers, Inc., No. 6-CA-23143, 1991 NLRB GCM LEXIS 63, 1991 WL 144468 (NLRB G.C. June 26, 1991). The memorandum concluded that the NLFPA's 1989 disclaimer was valid, and that it was "irrelevant" whether the disclaimer was motivated by "litigation strategy," so long as the disclaimer was "otherwise unequivocal and adhered to." *Id. at 2, 1991 NLRB GCM LEXIS 63 & n.8.

The Players, funded by the NFLPA, commenced this action on the same day as the disclaimer, March 11, 2011. Four [17] of the plaintiffs are under contract with an NFL club; five are free agents, and one is a prospective player who had entered the 2011 NFL draft and was ultimately selected in that draft. The Players brought this action on behalf of themselves and a putative class consisting of players who are under contract with any NFL club, free agents seeking employment with any NFL club, and college or other players who have not previously been under contract with any NFL club and who are eligible to play as a rookies for any club. As the case comes to us, no class has been certified.

The Players explained in their complaint that "[t]he players . . . have ended the role of the NFLPA as their collective bargaining representative and no longer have a collective bargaining relationship with the NFL defendants." They asserted, based on the Supreme Court's language in Brown, that the nonstatutory labor exemption therefore no longer protects the League from antitrust liability. The complaint alleged that the NFL's planned lockout was an illegal group boycott and price-fixing arrangement that violated § 1 of the Sherman Act. In addition, the Players claimed that the lockout would violate state contract [18] law by depriving players of contractually owed compensation, and would violate state tort law by interfering with players' existing contracts as well as their opportunities to enter into new contracts with NFL teams.

The complaint further alleged that the League planned to institute or to continue several anticompetitive practices that would violate § 1 of the Sherman Act, including a limitation on the amount of compensation that can be paid to recently drafted first-year "rookie" players, a cap on salaries for current players, and "franchise [*668] player" and "transition player" designations that restrict the ability of free agents to join a team other than their former team. The Players requested damages and declaratory and injunctive relief regarding these practices, including an injunction prohibiting the League from implementing or continuing the lockout.[2]

The SSA [19] and CBA expired at 11:59 p.m. on March 11. At 12:00 a.m. on March 12, the League instituted a lockout of members of the NFLPA's "bargaining unit," which includes professional football players under contract, free agents, and prospective players who have been drafted by or entered into negotiations with an NFL team. The NFL informed players under contract that the lockout would prohibit them from entering League facilities, from receiving any compensation or benefits, and from performing any employment duties including playing, practicing, working out, attending meetings, making promotional appearances, and consulting medical and training personnel except in limited situations. The League also notified the players that they could be required to report back to work immediately "[o]nce a new labor agreement is reached" between the NFL and the NFLPA.

[2] Several retired professional football players brought a similar but separate action on March 28, 2011, also seeking a preliminary injunction. The district court consolidated the two actions, and denied the retired players' motion for a preliminary injunction as moot after issuing an injunction in the previously filed action.

On April 25, 2011, the district court granted the Players' motion to enjoin the lockout, rejecting the League's assertions that the court lacked jurisdiction to enter the injunction, that the court should defer to the primary jurisdiction of the NLRB, and that the League is in any event immune from antitrust liability under the nonstatutory [20] labor exemption. *See Brady v. NFL, No. 11-639, 779 F. Supp. 2d 992, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44523, 2011 WL 1535240, at 37 (D. Minn. Apr. 25, 2011) [hereinafter Brady I]. The court concluded that HN2[] the Norris-LaGuardia Act ("NLGA" or "Act"), 29 U.S.C. § 101 et seq., which restricts the power of federal courts to issue injunctions in cases "involving or growing out of a labor dispute," id. § 1, was inapplicable, because the term "labor dispute" connotes a dispute between an employer and a union, and the Act therefore does not apply "absent the present existence of a union." *Brady I, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44523, 2011 WL 1535240, at 24-26. In the court's view, the conflict between the League and the players ceased to be a "labor dispute" subject to the Act when the NFLPA terminated its status as a union by disclaiming its role as the players' collective bargaining representative. *2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44523, [WL] at 26-27.

The district court also declined to stay the action pending the NLRB's resolution of the League's pending unfair labor practice charges. *See 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44523, [WL] at 9. The court determined that a stay would not be appropriate because the delay could cause significant hardship for the plaintiffs, and because "[t]he Board has articulated the standard under which disclaimers must be evaluated in [21] a clear and consistent fashion, and application of that established standard requires no particular specialized expertise." *2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44523, [WL] at 14-15, 18. Finally, the district court concluded that the nonstatutory labor exemption does not protect the League from antitrust liability related to the lockout. *See 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44523, [WL] at 34. In the court's view, the exemption applies only to agreements concerning "mandatory subjects of collective bargaining," such as wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment, and an employer's imposition of a lockout [*669] is not exempted because "[a] lockout is not a substantive term or condition of employment." *2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44523, [WL] at 35-36. The court distinguished the Supreme Court's decision in Brown on the basis that the parties here "have left the collective bargaining framework entirely." *2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44523, [WL] at 35.

The district court's order stated only that "[t]he 'lockout' is enjoined," *2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44523, [WL] at 37, and did not expressly define the scope of the injunction. In concluding that the plaintiffs would suffer irreparable harm absent an injunction, however, the court indicated that its order would prevent the harm that players would suffer if the League were able to bar them from playing or practicing [22] for an extended period of time. *See 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44523, [WL] at 29-30. The court also suggested that the injunction would provide free agents and rookies with significant opportunities to market their services to individual teams, *see 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44523, [WL] at 31-32, although it later remarked in denying a motion for stay pending appeal that the injunction did not require the League to enter into contracts. *See Brady v. NFL, No. 11-639, 779 F. Supp. 2d 1043, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 45511, 2011 WL 1578580, at 5 (D. Minn. Apr. 27, 2011). From this discussion, we understand the court's order to mean that the League must allow players under contract to play football, attend practice sessions, and collect compensation, and that the League must provide free agents and rookies with an opportunity to market their services to potential employers.

The League appealed, challenging the district court's application of the Norris-LaGuardia Act, the doctrine of primary jurisdiction, and the nonstatutory labor exemption. This court granted the NFL's motion to expedite the appeal and its motion for a stay of the district court's order pending appeal. We now consider the merits of the appeal.

II.

We consider first the League's contention that the Norris-LaGuardia Act deprived the district court [23] of jurisdiction to enter the injunction. HN3[] The NLGA, enacted in 1932, curtails the authority of a district court to issue injunctions in a labor dispute. "Congress was intent upon taking the federal courts out of the labor injunction business except in the very limited circumstances left open for federal jurisdiction under the Norris-LaGuardia Act." Marine Cooks & Stewards v. Pan. S.S. Co., 362 U.S. 365, 369, 80 S. Ct. 779, 4 L. Ed. 2d 797 (1960).

The Supreme Court has explained that the NLGA responded directly to the Court's construction of § 20 of the Clayton Act of 1914, 29 U.S.C. § 52, in Duplex Printing Press Co. v. Deering, 254 U.S. 443, 41 S. Ct. 172, 65 L. Ed.

349, 18 Ohio L. Rep. 366 (1921), and to other decisions of federal courts entering or upholding injunctions in labor disputes. Burlington N. R.R. Co. v. Bhd. of Maint. of Way Emps., 481 U.S. 429, 438, 107 S. Ct. 1841, 95 L. Ed. 2d 381 (1987). The Clayton Act bars federal courts, "in any case between an employer and employees, or between employers and employees, or between employees, or between persons employed and persons seeking employment, involving, or growing out of, a dispute concerning terms or conditions of employment," from issuing an injunction to prohibit "any person or persons" from "ceasing to perform any work or labor" or "terminating [24] any relation of employment." 29 U.S.C. § 52. In Duplex Printing, however, the Court held that § 20 of the Clayton Act did not prohibit an injunction against a secondary boycott undertaken by union members who were not "proximately and substantively concerned as parties to [*670] an actual dispute respecting the terms or conditions of their own employment." 254 U.S. at 472. Similarly, in Bedford Cut Stone Co. v. Journeymen Stone Cutters' Ass'n, 274 U.S. 37, 47 S. Ct. 522, 71 L. Ed. 916 (1927), the Court ruled that § 20 did not prohibit an injunction against a union's refusal to perform work on stone produced by a particular company with which the union had an ongoing dispute. Id. at 42-43, 55. The NLGA effectively superseded these decisions by precluding federal courts from enjoining certain secondary activity by workers in labor disputes.

The language of the Act, however, extends well beyond the specific issues decided in such cases as Duplex Printing and Bedford Cut Stone. HN4[] The impetus for the NLGA was dissatisfaction with injunctions entered against workers in labor disputes, but the statute also requires that an injunction against an employer participating in a labor dispute must conform to the Act. E.g., Bodecker v. Local Union No. P-46, 640 F.2d 182, 185 (8th Cir. 1981); [25] District 29, United Mine Workers v. New Beckley Mining Corp., 895 F.2d 942, 944-47 (4th Cir. 1990); Amalgamated Transit Union, Div. 1384 v. Greyhound Lines, Inc., 550 F.2d 1237, 1238 (9th Cir. 1977); Detroit Newspaper Publishers Ass'n v. Detroit Typographical Union No. 18, 471 F.2d 872, 876-77 (6th Cir. 1972); see Greyhound Lines, Inc. v. Amalgamated Transit Union, Div. 1384, 429 U.S. 807, 97 S. Ct. 43, 50 L. Ed. 2d 68 (1976). This case requires us to decide whether, and if so how, the Act applies to the district court's injunction against the League.

To determine whether the NLGA forbids or places conditions on the issuance of an injunction here, we begin with the text of the statute. Section 1 provides that HN5[] "[n]o court of the United States . . . shall have jurisdiction to issue any . . . temporary or permanent injunction in a case involving or growing out of a labor dispute, except in strict conformity with the provisions of this chapter." 29 U.S.C. § 101. As noted, the district court concluded that the Act is inapplicable to this action, because the case is not one "involving or growing out of a labor dispute."

Section 13(c) of the Act states that HN6[] "[t]he term 'labor dispute' includes any controversy concerning [26] terms or conditions of employment, or concerning the association or representation of persons in negotiating, fixing, maintaining, changing, or seeking to arrange terms or conditions of employment, regardless of whether or not the disputants stand in the proximate relation of employer and employee." 29 U.S.C. § 113(c) (emphasis added). This lawsuit is a controversy concerning terms or conditions of employment. The Players seek broad relief that would affect the terms or conditions of employment for the entire industry of professional football. In particular, they urge the court to declare unlawful and to enjoin several features of the relationship between the League and the players, including the limit on compensation that can be paid to rookies, the salary cap, the "franchise player" designation, and the "transition player" designation, all of which the Players assert are anticompetitive restrictions that violate § 1 of the Sherman Act. The district court did not appear to question this point, even distinguishing authority cited by the Players on the ground that it involved a dispute over the sale of commodities rather than "a controversy over terms and conditions of employment." Brady I, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44523, 2011 WL 1535240, at *24 n.44.

We [27] are not convinced by the Players' contention that because § 13(c) uses the term "includes," rather than "means," to introduce the substance of a "labor dispute," Congress did not fully define the term. They urge that § 13(c) merely expanded [*671] in one respect (to disputes outside the employer-employee relationship) a preexisting definition of "labor dispute" — a definition that was not codified and that, according to the Players, extended only to disputes involving organized labor. Whatever might be the significance of the verb "include" when used in other contexts, cf. Massachusetts v. EPA, 549 U.S. 497, 556-58, 127 S. Ct. 1438, 167 L. Ed. 2d 248 (2007) (Scalia, J., dissenting), Congress stated in § 13 of the NLGA that HN7[] "labor dispute" is "defined in this section," 29 U.S.C. § 113(a), and the Supreme Court consistently has described § 13(c) as a "definition" of "labor dispute." Burlington N. R.R. Co., 481 U.S. at 443; Jacksonville Bulk Terminals, Inc. v. Int'l Longshoremen's Ass'n, 457 U.S. 702, 711 n.11, 712, 102 S. Ct. 2672, 102 S. Ct. 2673, 73 L. Ed. 2d 327 (1982); H.A. Artists & Assocs. v. Actors' Equity Ass'n, 451 U.S. 704, 714 n.14, 715, 101 S. Ct. 2102, 68 L. Ed. 2d 558 (1981); Order of R.R. Telegraphers v. Chi. & N.W. Ry. Co., 362 U.S. 330, 335, 80 S. Ct. 761, 4 L. Ed. 2d 774 (1960); see also Bodecker, 640 F.2d at 185. Not only has [28] the Supreme Court repeatedly characterized § 13(c) as a definition, but contrary to the suggestion that an established meaning should be used to narrow the text, the Court has observed that "the statutory definition itself is extremely broad," Jacksonville Bulk Terminals, Inc., 457 U.S. at 712, and explained that "Congress made the definition broad because it wanted it to be broad." Order of R.R. Telegraphers, 362 U.S. at 335-36.

The Act also states expressly that HN8[] "[a] case shall be held to involve or grow out of a labor dispute when the case involves persons who are engaged in the same industry, trade, craft, or occupation." 29 U.S.C. § 113(a). This case, of course, involves persons engaged in the "same industry," namely, professional football. HN9[] The statute continues that such a case "shall be held to involve or grow out of a labor dispute" when "such dispute is . . . between one or more employers or associations of employers and one or more employees or associations of employees." Id. This dispute is between one or more employers or associations of employers (the League and the NFL teams) and one or more employees (the Players under contract). By the plain terms of the Act, this case [29] "shall be held to involve or grow out of a labor dispute."

The district court reached a contrary conclusion by departing from the text of § 13(a). The court thought the phrase "one or more employees or associations of employees" did not encompass the Players in this dispute, because "one or more employees" means "individual unionized employee or employees." Brady I, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44523, 2011 WL 1535240, at 24 n.43 (emphasis added). We see no warrant for adding a requirement of unionization to the text.

A similar argument did not persuade the Supreme Court in New Negro Alliance v. Sanitary Grocery Co., 303 U.S. 552, 58 S. Ct. 703, 82 L. Ed. 1012 (1938). There, a company sought an injunction against the New Negro Alliance, which the Supreme Court described as "a corporation composed of colored persons, organized for the mutual improvement of its members and the promotion of civic, educational, benevolent, and charitable enterprises." Id. at 555. The Alliance allegedly had conspired to picket and boycott one of the company's grocery stores to pressure the store to employ African-American clerks. Id. at 555-56. The company claimed, among other things, that the Alliance's acts were "unlawful, [and] constitute[d] a conspiracy in restraint of [30] trade." Id. at 558-59. The district court granted an injunction against the Alliance. The court of appeals affirmed, reasoning in part as follows:

> [*672] "The controversy here is not a labor dispute. The defendants do not constitute a labor union or a labor organization of any kind. They do not compose, nor are they all members, of any single trade or class of trades. Their demands are not connected with any one industry. The questions about which they are now picketing have no connection with wages, hours of labor, unionization, or betterment of working conditions. . . . It is solely a racial dispute."

New Negro Alliance v. Sanitary Grocery Co. 92 F.2d 510, 512-13 (D.C. Cir. 1937) (quoting A. S. Beck Shoe Corp. v. Johnson, 153 Misc. 363, 274 N.Y.S. 946, 953 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 1934)).

The Supreme Court reversed. Although no labor organization was involved in the dispute, and the company argued that "a recognized labor union or unions or individual members thereof were involved" in all but one of the "labor dispute" precedents cited by the Alliance, Brief for Respondent at 24, New Negro Alliance, 303 U.S. 552, 58 S. Ct. 703, 82 L. Ed. 1012 (No. 511), the Court ruled that the definitions in the Act "plainly embrace the controversy which gave [31] rise to the instant suit and classify it as one arising out of a dispute defined as a labor dispute." New Negro Alliance, 303 U.S. at 560. The Court observed that HN10[] § 13(a) provides that a case shall be held to involve or grow out of a labor dispute "when the case involves any conflicting or competing interests in a 'labor dispute' . . . of 'persons participating or interested' therein," and ruled that the Alliance and its individual members were "persons interested in the dispute." Id. (internal quotation omitted). If § 13(a) were limited to controversies involving unions or unionized employees, then the Court could not have reached this conclusion.

Further confirmation that the present existence of a union is not required for a "labor dispute" comes from NLRB v. Washington Aluminum Co., 370 U.S. 9, 82 S. Ct. 1099, 8 L. Ed. 2d 298 (1962). There, a group of seven employees who were "wholly unorganized" and had "no bargaining representative" or "representative of any kind to present their grievances to their employer" staged a walkout to protest cold working conditions in a machine shop. Id. at 14-15. Although the employees were not part of a union, the Supreme Court held that the walkout "did grow out of a 'labor dispute' [32] within the plain meaning of the definition of that term in § 2(9) of the [National Labor Relations] Act." Id. at 15. The definition of "labor dispute" in the National Labor Relations Act is "virtually identical" to the definition of "labor dispute" in the NLGA, and the two provisions "have been construed consistently with one another" by the Supreme Court. Jacksonville Bulk Terminals, Inc., 457 U.S. at 711 n.11; accord United States v. Hutcheson, 312 U.S. 219, 234 n.4, 61 S. Ct. 463, 85 L. Ed. 788 (1941).

Even § 2 of the NLGA, cited by the Players as an interpretive guide for the Act based on its declaration of "[p]ublic policy in labor matters," conflicts with the district court's conclusion. HN11[] Section 2 declares, among other things, that the "individual unorganized worker" shall be free from the interference of employers in "the designation of . . . representatives or in self-organization or in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection." 29 U.S.C. § 102 (emphasis added). Employees may engage in activities for the purpose of "mutual aid or protection" without the present existence of a union. Wash. Aluminum, 370 U.S. at 14-15; First Nat'l Bank of Omaha v. NLRB, 413 F.2d 921, 926 (8th Cir. 1969); [33] Vic Tanny Int'l, Inc. v. NLRB, 622 F.2d 237, 241 (6th Cir. 1980); *NLRB v. Phoenix [673] Mut. Life Ins. Co., 167 F.2d 983, 988 (7th Cir. 1948); see Wilson Trophy Co. v. NLRB, 989 F.2d 1502, 1508 (8th Cir. 1993).

The Players, citing Ozark Air Lines, Inc. v. National Mediation Board, 797 F.2d 557 (8th Cir. 1986), argue that circuit precedent requires "concerted labor activity" by "collectively organized employees" to establish a labor dispute under the Act. Appellees' Br. 12. Ozark Air Lines did not so hold. That case involved an employee's disability retirement claim arising under the Railway Labor Act, which includes specific provisions that take precedence over the more general provisions of the NLGA. 797 F.2d at 559, 563. This court also said the case had "nothing to do with terms and conditions of employment." Id. at 563.

HN12[] The definitions in the NLGA provide that a case shall be held to involve or grow out of a labor dispute if a controversy over terms and conditions of employment is between an employer and "one or more employees." 29 U.S.C. § 113(a) (emphasis added). The Act's reference to "concerted activities" appears only in the public policy section, 29 U.S.C. § 102. If the NLGA nonetheless [34] were construed to require concerted activity by employees to establish a labor dispute, a lawsuit filed in good faith by a group of employees to achieve more favorable terms or conditions of employment is "concerted activity" under § 7 of the National Labor Relations Act. Mohave Elec. Co-op, Inc. v. NLRB, 206 F.3d 1183, 1189, 340 U.S. App. D.C. 391 & n.8 (D.C. Cir. 2000); Altex Ready Mixed Concrete Corp. v. NLRB, 542 F.2d 295, 297 (5th Cir. 1976); Leviton Mfg. Co. v. NLRB, 486 F.2d 686, 689 (1st Cir. 1973); see Eastex, Inc. v. NLRB, 437 U.S. 556, 565-66, 98 S. Ct. 2505, 57 L. Ed. 2d 428 & n. 15 (1978).

HN13[] The text of the Norris-LaGuardia Act and the cases interpreting the term "labor dispute" do not require the present existence of a union to establish a labor dispute. Whatever the precise limits of the phrase "involving or growing out of a labor dispute," this case does not press the outer boundary. The League and the players' union were parties to a collective bargaining agreement for almost eighteen years prior to March 2011. They were engaged in collective bargaining over terms and conditions of employment for approximately two years through March 11, 2011. At that point, the parties were involved in a classic "labor dispute" by the Players' [35] own definition. Then, on a single day, just hours before the CBA's expiration, the union discontinued collective bargaining and disclaimed its status, and the Players filed this action seeking relief concerning industry-wide terms and conditions of employment. Whatever the effect of the union's disclaimer on the League's immunity from antitrust liability, the labor dispute did not suddenly disappear just because the Players elected to pursue the dispute through antitrust litigation rather than collective bargaining.

III.

The Players argue alternatively that even if this case does involve or grow out of a labor dispute, the district court's injunction conforms to the provisions of the NLGA, and should be affirmed on this alternative ground. The League counters that § 4 of the Act includes a flat prohibition on injunctions against a lockout, and, alternatively, that even if the court has authority to enjoin a lockout under certain circumstances, the district court did not comply with the procedural requirements set forth in § 7 of the Act.

A.

Section 4 of the NLGA, 29 U.S.C. § 104, is entitled, "Enumeration of specific acts not subject to restraining orders or injunctions." It provides:

> [*674] HN14[] No [36] court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue any restraining order or temporary or permanent injunction in any case involving or growing out of any labor dispute to prohibit any person or persons participating or interested in such dispute . . . from doing, whether singly or in concert, any of the following acts:
> (a) Ceasing or refusing to perform any work or to remain in any relation of employment;
> (b) Becoming or remaining a member of any labor organization or of any employer organization, regardless of any such undertaking or promise as is described in section 103 of this title;
> (c) Paying or giving to, or withholding from, any person participating or interested in such labor dispute, any strike or unemployment benefits or insurance, or other moneys or things of value;
> (d) By all lawful means aiding any person participating or interested in any labor dispute who is being proceeded against in, or is prosecuting, any action or suit in any court of the United States or of any State;
> (e) Giving publicity to the existence of, or the facts involved in, any labor dispute, whether by advertising, speaking, patrolling, or by any other method not involving fraud or violence;
> (f) [37] Assembling peaceably to act or to organize to act in promotion of their interests in a labor dispute;
> (g) Advising or notifying any person of an intention to do any of the acts heretofore specified;
> (h) Agreeing with other persons to do or not to do any of the acts heretofore specified; and
> (i) Advising, urging, or otherwise causing or inducing without fraud or violence the acts heretofore specified, regardless of any such undertaking or promise as is described in section 103 of this title.

The League relies on § 4(a). It argues that this subsection forbids an injunction to prohibit a lockout. HN15[] There is no uniform definition of the term "lockout," but one "practical definition" used by this court is "a refusal by [an employer] to furnish available work to its regular employees." Laclede Gas Co. v. NLRB, 421 F.2d 610, 615 & n.9 (8th Cir. 1970); see also 2 The Developing Labor Law 1639-40 (John E. Higgins, Jr. et al. eds., 5th ed. 2006) ("As used by the Board and the courts, . . . a lockout is most simply and completely defined as the withholding of employment by an employer from its employees for the purpose of either resisting their demands or gaining a concession from them."). The League [38] maintains that by locking out all professional football players, it is "[r]efusing to . . . remain in any relation of employment," and is thus doing one of the acts that cannot be enjoined according to § 4. Because HN16[] § 5 of the Act states that a district court cannot issue an injunction on the ground that parties to a labor dispute are violating the antitrust laws by doing in concert the acts enumerated in § 4, the League contends that § 5 is a further barrier to the district court enjoining the lockout.[3] [3] Section 5 provides that "[n]o court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue a restraining order or temporary or permanent injunction upon the ground that any of the persons participating or interested in a labor dispute constitute or are engaged in an unlawful combination or conspiracy because of the doing in concert of the acts enumerated in section 104 of this title." 29 U.S.C. § 105.

The Players respond that § 4(a) does not apply to employer injunctions at all. They cite the First Circuit's decision in De Arroyo v. Sindicato de Trabajadores Packinghouse, 425 F.2d 281 (1st Cir. 1970), [*675] which was followed by the Ninth Circuit in Local 2750, Lumber & Sawmill Workers Union v. Cole, 663 F.2d 983 (9th Cir. 1981). [39] These cases involved injunctions issued in a different context — actions under § 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act, 29 U.S.C. § 185, seeking orders directing an employer to rehire employees who were discharged in violation of a collective bargaining agreement — but they include some reasoning that addresses more generally whether § 4(a) prohibits injunctions against employers.

De Arroyo rejected a "literal" application of § 4(a) sought by an employer, because the court's "understanding of the legislative history behind section 4(a)" led it to conclude that § 4(a) "was not intended as a protection for employers." De Arroyo, 425 F.2d at 290-91. Rather, the court said: "The 'remain in any relation of employment' language in section 4(a), which forms the basis of the Company's literal interpretation, was used, we think, simply to make clear that employee strikes could not be enjoined either if the employees claimed to have ceased or refused to work temporarily or if they claimed to have completely ended their employment relation with their employer." Id. at 291. Citing § 4(b) of the Act, which proscribes an injunction to prohibit "[b]ecoming or remaining a member of any labor organization [40] or of any employer organization," the court reasoned that "the drafters did specifically include employers when protection was intended for them." Id.[4] The Players, based on De Arroyo and Lumber & Sawmill Workers, urge that § 4(a) applies only to employees, with the first clause — "perform any work" — directed to "temporary work stoppages" and the second clause — "remain in any relation of employment" — aimed solely at "permanent work stoppages."

With due respect to these courts, we think it better to begin the analysis with [41] the text of § 4(a). The introductory clause of § 4 forbids a court to issue an injunction to prohibit "any person or persons participating or interested" in a labor dispute from doing any of the acts set forth below, including those in § 4(a). HN17[] Employers, of course, are among the persons participating in a labor dispute. The introductory clause thus plainly encompasses employers. If language in a particular subsection is applicable on its face to employees and employers alike (or to employers alone), then there is no need for a specific mention of employers. An employer against whom injunctive relief is sought may invoke the protection of a subsection as a "person . . . participating or interested" in the labor dispute. This court already has recognized that § 4(c) applies to injunctions against employers, Local Union No. 884, United Rubber, Cork, Linoleum, & Plastic Workers v. Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc., 61 F.3d 1347, 1352, 1355 (8th Cir. 1995), so the premise of De Arroyo and Lumber & Sawmill Workers that employers are protected against injunction under § 4 only when specifically mentioned in § 4(b) is a non-starter under circuit precedent. See also Bodecker, 640 F.2d at 185-86 (holding [42] that intra-union dispute over funding stock acquisition and profit-sharing plans by payroll deferrals was a "labor [*676] dispute," and explaining that district court had refused to issue injunction against employer's implementation of payroll deferrals because it was forbidden by § 4(c)).[5]

[4] The Sixth Circuit reached the opposite conclusion, holding that § 4(a) of the NLGA prohibits an injunction in a § 301 action requiring an employer to reinstate an employee who was discharged in violation of a collective bargaining agreement. Heheman v. E.W. Scripps Co., 661 F.2d 1115, 1124-25 (6th Cir. 1981). This court has cited De Arroyo for the general proposition that a court has discretion to award equitable relief by way of reinstatement in a § 301 action, Tatum v. Frisco Transp. Co., 626 F.2d 55, 60 (8th Cir. 1980); Butler v. Local Union 823, Int'l Bhd. of Teamsters, 514 F.2d 442, 455 (8th Cir. 1975), but has not discussed § 4(a) of the NLGA in that context.

[5] The Players also rely on Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers v. Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., 310 F.2d 513 (7th Cir. 1962), which held that the NLGA did not deprive a district court of power to grant an injunction that prohibited railroad carriers from putting into effect revisions in work rules in a dispute governed by the Railway Labor Act. The court reasoned that "the purpose of Congress" in enacting the NLGA "was to protect only employees and unions," and found "nothing in the statement of policy to indicate any intention to deny jurisdiction to issue injunctions against employers." Id. at 518. To the extent that the Seventh Circuit would apply this broad reasoning outside the context of the Railway Labor Act, but cf. Chi. Midtown Milk Distribs., Inc. v. Dean Foods Co., Nos. 18577, 18578, 1970 U.S. App. LEXIS 8256, 1970 WL 2761, at *1 (7th Cir. July 9, 1970) (per curiam), it is inconsistent with this court's precedent that § 4 [43] applies to injunctions against employers, Bridgestone/Firestone, 61 F.3d

HN18[] The disputed language in § 4(a) — "remain in any relation of employment" — may apply to an employer. Section 3 of the Act makes clear that both employers and employees can be in a "relation of employment." Section 3(b) contemplates that either party to a labor agreement can agree to "withdraw from an employment relation." 29 U.S.C. § 103(b).

The term "any" is an expansive modifier for "relation of employment," and especially where the Supreme Court has emphasized the breadth of the NLGA's prohibition on injunctions, it would be odd to apply a narrow construction of "any relation of employment." Cf. Ali v. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, 552 U.S. 214, 219-20, 128 S. Ct. 831, 169 L. Ed. 2d 680 & n.4 (2008). We therefore reject a reading of the phrase that would limit the acts encompassed by the second clause of § 4(a) to refusing to remain in any relation of employment whatsoever, as with a permanent and complete work stoppage. The phrase is more naturally read to mean refusing to remain [44] in any particular relation of employment, whether or not the refusal is complete and permanent. This reading corresponds to the meaning of "any" in the first clause of § 4(a), which refers to a refusal "to perform any work." In that clause, "any" does not mean that the prohibition applies only when there is a refusal to perform any work whatsoever, but rather it forbids an injunction against even a refusal to perform any particular work — including a certain type of work, see Jacksonville Bulk Terminals, 457 U.S. at 704-05; cf. Bedford Cut Stone, 274 U.S. at 42-43, or a certain amount of work, see Teledyne Wis. Motor v. Local 283, United Auto., Aerospace & Agric. Implement Workers, 530 F.2d 727, 728-30 (7th Cir. 1976) even when there is not a complete work stoppage. The term "any" should be given the same meaning in both clauses of § 4(a). See Sullivan v. Stroop, 496 U.S. 478, 484, 110 S. Ct. 2499, 110 L. Ed. 2d 438 (1990).

So understood, HN19[] the phrase "refusing . . . to remain in any relation of employment" encompasses a non-permanent work stoppage. To "remain" is "[t]o continue unchanged in place, form, or condition," Webster's New International Dictionary 1802 (1932), or "[t]o continue, as in one place, condition, or [45] character." Funk & Wagnalls New Standard Dictionary 2082 (1931). While a strike or lockout may not permanently end a relation of employment, it changes the condition or character of that relationship. As one court of the era expressed it: "The relation of employer and employe[e] is temporarily suspended during a strike." Tri-City Cent. [*677] Trades Council v. Am. Steel Foundries, 238 F. 728, 733 (7th Cir. 1917).

Other contemporaneous judicial decisions show that Congress likely would have understood "refusing to remain in any relation of employment" as including a non-permanent work stoppage such as a strike or lockout of employees. In his dissent in Duplex Printing, Justice Brandeis remarked that the very acts to which § 20 of the Clayton Act applied "sever the continuity of the legal relationship" between employer and employee. 254 U.S. at 488 (Brandeis, J., dissenting). The Brandeis dissent cited a separate opinion in Iron Molders' Union No. 125 v. Allis-Chalmers Co., 166 F. 45 (7th Cir. 1908), where a concurring judge described the "somewhat anomalous relationship" between employees and employers during a strike or lockout: "Manifestly, then, pending a strike or a lock out, and as to [46] those who have not finally and in good faith abandoned it, a relationship exists between employer and employee that is neither that of the general relation of employer and employee, nor again that of employer looking among strangers for employees, or employees seeking from strangers employment." Id. at 52-53 (Grosscup, J., concurring). Other courts went so far as to hold that striking workers were no longer "employees" for purposes of the Clayton Act, either at the outset or after some duration of a strike. See Canoe Creek Coal Co. v. Christinson, 281 F. 559, 561-62 (W.D. Ky. 1922); Dail-Overland Co. v. Willys-Overland, Inc., 263 F. 171, 188 (N.D. Ohio 1919). For these reasons, we believe a reasonable legislator in 1932 would have understood a strike or lockout of employees as a refusal to "remain in [a] relation of employment." See also 75 Cong. Rec. 5489 (1932) ("[T]he [Clayton] Act could not be successfully invoked when once the employer had refilled vacancies, because, it was held, there was no longer a relationship existing of employer and employee between the owner of the plant and the striker. A worker who picketed was no longer an employee to come under the protection of the [47] Clayton Act. (See Dail-Overland Co. v. Willys-Overland, 263 F. at 192.)") (remarks of Rep. Celler).

at 1352, 1355, and with the Players' acknowledgment that an injunction against an employer lockout in a labor dispute must conform to § 7 of the NLGA. Appellees' Br. at 43 n.3.

It is true that if § 4(a) is construed to include a lockout of employees, then the section is not symmetrical. Contrary to the League's suggestion, Appellants' Reply Br. at 16, we do not think the second clause should be understood as applying only to employers. But cf. Local Union No. 861 of IBEW v. Stone & Webster Eng'g Corp., 163 F. Supp. 894, 896 (W.D. La. 1958). HN20[] Employees may refuse to perform work under the first clause, and they may refuse to remain in a relation of employment under the second. There is likely overlap between the two clauses, and courts (including the Supreme Court) have cited both clauses in holding that a strike may not be enjoined. Buffalo Forge Co. v. United Steelworkers, 428 U.S. 397, 410, 96 S. Ct. 3141, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1022 (1976); Order of R.R. Telegraphers, 362 U.S. at 335; Waller Bros. Stone Co. v. United Steelworkers, 620 F.2d 132, 136-37 (6th Cir. 1980) (quoting Buffalo Forge); U.S. Steel Corp. v. United Mine Workers, 519 F.2d 1236, 1242, 1245 (5th Cir.1975); Wilson & Co. v. Birl, 105 F.2d 948, 951 (3d Cir. 1939).

The employer, by contrast, does not perform work, so it may invoke only the [48] second clause. Insofar as an employer's lockout extends to acts by other employers who refuse to take in the "late employees" of the first employer, see Iron Molders' Union No. 125, 166 F. at 50, the terms of § 4(a) do not forbid an injunction against refusing to offer new work or employment. The lack of symmetry, however, does not render § 4(a) inapplicable to employers altogether. The evenhanded introductory [*678] clause of § 4 still forbids a court to enjoin "any person or persons" in a labor dispute from "refusing . . . to remain in any relation of employment." That the terms of § 4(a) afford employers less protection against injunctions than they afford employees (who were, after all, the target of the controversial injunctions that prompted the NLGA) does not mean that Congress gave employers no protection at all.

Aside from the text and structure of § 4, the Players argue that the policy of the NLGA and the legislative history support their position that § 4(a) offers no protection to employers. To be sure, the policy stated in § 2 is that the individual unorganized worker should be free from the interference, restraint, or coercion of employers in the designation of representatives, [49] self-organization, or other concerted activities. But it does not follow that a prohibition on injunctions against employer lockouts is contrary to the policy of the Act. The Supreme Court has observed that while the Act was designed to protect workingmen, the broader purpose was "to prevent the injunctions of the federal courts from upsetting the natural interplay of the competing economic forces of labor and capital." Bhd. of R.R. Trainmen v. Chi. River & Ind. R.R. Co., 353 U.S. 30, 40, 77 S. Ct. 635, 1 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1957) (emphasis added). An employer's lockout is part of this interplay; it is not the equivalent of a judicial injunction that interferes with the ability of workers to exercise organized economic power.

The Court elsewhere explained that "powerful judicial dissents," such as that of Justice Brandeis in Duplex Printing, urged that labor disputes were an "area of economic conflict that had best be left to economic forces and the pressure of public opinion and not subjected to the judgment of courts." Hutcheson, 312 U.S. at 231. In support of that view, the Brandeis dissent cited this excerpt from the 1915 Report of the Committee on Industrial Relations:

> [T]here are apparently, only two lines of action [50] possible: First to restrict the rights and powers of employers to correspond in substance to the powers and rights now allowed to trade unions, and second, to remove all restriction which now prevent the freedom of action of both parties to industrial disputes, retaining only the ordinary civil and criminal restraints for the preservation of life, property and the public peace. The first method has been tried and failed absolutely. * * * The only method therefore seems to be the removal of all restrictions upon both parties, thus legalizing the strike, the lockout, the boycott, the blacklist, the bringing in of strike-breakers, and peaceful picketing.

Duplex Printing, 254 U.S. at 486 n.7 (Brandeis, J., dissenting) (emphasis added); see also 75 Cong. Rec. 5478 (1932) (remarks of Rep. LaGuardia) ("If the courts had administered even justice to both employers and employees, there would be no need of considering a bill of this kind now."); id. at 4915 (remarks of Sen. Wagner) ("The policy and purpose which give meaning to the present legislation is its implicit declaration that the Government shall occupy a neutral position, lending its extraordinary power neither to those who would have [51] labor unorganized nor to those who would organize it and limiting its action to the preservation of order and the restraint of fraud."). A one-way interpretation of § 4(a) — prohibiting injunctions against strikes but not against lockouts — would be in tension with the purposes of the Norris-LaGuardia Act to allow free play of economic forces and "to withdraw federal courts from a type of controversy for which many believed they were ill-suited and from participation in which, it was feared, judicial prestige might suffer." Marine Cooks & Stewards, [*679] 362 U.S. at 369 n.7. We are not convinced that the policy of the Act counsels against our textual analysis of § 4(a). Cf. Am. Med. Ass'n v. United States, 317 U.S. 519, 535, 63 S. Ct. 326, 87 L. Ed. 434 (1943) (HN21[] "It is not our province to define the purpose of Congress apart from what it has said in its enactments, and if [a party's] activities fall within the classes defined by the [Clayton and Norris-LaGuardia] acts, we are bound to accord [the party] . . . the benefit of the legislative provisions.").[6]

The Players also contend that the legislative history of the NLGA shows that § 4(a) prohibits only injunctions against employees. They cite a House Committee Report, which states that § 4 was "intended by more specific language" to overcome the effects of judicial decisions that upheld injunctions against workers. H.R. Rep. 72-669, at 728 (1932). They point as well to then-Professor Frankfurter's treatise, which characterized § 4(a) as "declaratory of the modern common law right to strike." Felix Frankfurter & Nathan Greene, The Labor Injunction 217-18 (1930). Cf. Textile Workers Union v. Lincoln Mills, 353 U.S. 448, 469 n.3, 77 S. Ct. 912, 1 L. Ed. 2d 972 (1957) (Frankfurter, J., dissenting). These materials indicate [53] that Members of Congress, and Professors Frankfurter and Greene as drafters of proposed legislation, were determined to forbid federal courts from entering injunctions against workers participating in labor disputes. But they do not address the specific question whether § 4(a) also prohibits injunctions against employers.[7]

Other materials cited by the League suggest that Members of Congress did contemplate that employers could invoke the plain language of § 4(a), although they do not address the precise question either. S. Rep. No. 72-163, at 19 (1932) ("[I]t will be observed that this section [§ 6], as do most all of the other prohibitive sections of the bill, applies both to organizations of labor and organizations of capital. The same rule throughout the bill, wherever it is applicable, applies both to employers and employees, and also to organizations [*680] of employers and employees.") (emphasis added); 75 Cong. Rec. 4507 (1932) ("Wherever it can be done this bill applies equally to organizations of labor and to organizations of capital. [55] Organizations of employees and organizations of capital are treated exactly the same.") (remarks of Sen. Norris) (emphasis added); id. at 4509 ("[This bill] attempts to weigh in the scales of justice all the elements which ought to be considered in passing upon controversies between labor and capital. It asks for the laboring man nothing that it does not concede to the corporation.") (emphasis added); see also Edward B. Miller, Antitrust Laws & Employee Relations 15-25 (1984). As is often the case, the legislative history offers something for both parties, but it does not supply a convincing basis to depart from our analysis of the text.

[6] The First Circuit in De Arroyo said that the employer's interpretation of § 4(a) in that case "completely disregard[ed] the primary purpose behind the anti-injunction [52] provisions," 425 F.2d at 290-91, but that case did not involve a lockout, and the court observed in the same discussion that "the reemployment of improperly discharged employees can hardly be said to be one of the abuses sought to be eliminated by the Norris-LaGuardia Act." Id. at 291. See also Lumber & Sawmill Workers, 663 F.2d at 986-87 (discussing policy reasons that favor according federal courts power to order reinstatement of employees discharged in violation of collective bargaining agreements).

[7] The Players argue that the Senate's rejection of an amendment that would have included "employers" in the policy statement of § 2, 75 Cong. Rec. 4766, demonstrates that "Congress had no intent to relieve employers of any liability under the antitrust laws." Appellees' Br. 46-47 (internal quotation omitted). This bit of history does not alter our view of § 4(a). HN22[] "Statements by opponents of a bill and failure to enact suggested amendments, although they have some weight, are not the most reliable indications of congressional intent." Bryant v. Yellen, 447 U.S. 352, 376, 100 S. Ct. 2232, 65 L. Ed. 2d 184 (1980); see Florey v. Sioux Falls Sch. Dist. 49-5, 619 F.2d 1311, 1315 (8th Cir. 1980). Other features of the proposed NLGA amendment may have contributed to its defeat. See 75 Cong. Rec. 4762-65 (1932). The argument also proves too much, because even without mention of employers in § 2, the Act expressly [54] restricts the issuance of injunctions against employers in circumstances that might otherwise violate the antitrust laws. See Cal. State Council of Carpenters v. Associated Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc., 648 F.2d 527, 544-45 (9th Cir. 1980) (discussing 29 U.S.C. § 104(b)), rev'd on other grounds, 459 U.S. 519, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983). At any rate, we consider here only the scope of a district court's authority to issue injunctions, not the liability of employers under the antitrust laws.

One last point raised by the Players is that § 4(a) of the NLGA merely paraphrases language in § 20 of the Clayton Act that forbade injunctions prohibiting "any person or persons, whether singly or in concert, from terminating any relation of employment, or from ceasing to perform any work or labor." 29 U.S.C. § 52; see Frankfurter & Greene, at 217. They contend that the Supreme Court in American Steel Foundries v. Tri-City Central Trades Council, 257 U.S. 184, 203, 42 S. Ct. 72, 66 L. Ed. 189 (1921), authoritatively construed a related portion of § 20 as applying only to employees, [56] and that Congress should be understood to have incorporated this "settled meaning" when it enacted the Norris-LaGuardia Act. By way of post-argument submission, they also draw our attention to the legislative history of the Clayton Act. E.g., S. Rep. No. 63- 698, at 51 (1914) ("The words 'singly or in concert' are inserted . . . to guard the right of workingmen to act together in terminating, if they desire, any relation of employment, and to act together and in concert in doing or abstaining from doing any other of the acts named in that paragraph of the section.").

We do not agree that American Steel Foundries established the asserted meaning. The cited portion of the case did not concern the specific clauses that evidently were paraphrased in § 4(a) of the NLGA, and because the case arose from an injunction issued against employees, the court addressed § 20 of the Clayton Act only as it applied to employees. There was no question raised in the case about whether or how § 20 and the "terminating any relation of employment" clause applied to employers.

When the Second Circuit later addressed the Clayton Act in a discussion of mutiemployer collective bargaining, it reasoned that "[a]lthough [57] Congress was largely concerned with the effect of [federal court] interference on unions, the statute was phrased in an evenhanded fashion to protect employer conduct in labor disputes as well as that of unions. Section 20 thus exempted from federal prohibition 'persons . . . terminating any relation of employment . . . or withholding . . . moneys or things of value,' language that would permit multiemployer lockouts." NBA v. Williams, 45 F.3d 684, 689 (2d Cir. 1995) (quoting 29 U.S.C. § 52); see Brown, 50 F.3d at 1055 (quoting Williams, 45 F.3d at 689); see also 51 Cong. Rec. 14,334 (1914) ("[T]he paragraph is reciprocal.") (remarks of Sen. Thomas). We need not here decide whether the Clayton Act protects multiemployer lockouts; it is sufficient for present purposes that the NLGA incorporated no settled judicial interpretation that § 20 applied only to employees.

For these reasons, we conclude that HN23[] § 4(a) of the Norris-LaGuardia Act deprives a federal court of power to issue an injunction prohibiting a party to a labor dispute from implementing a lockout of its [*681] employees. This conclusion accords with the few decisions that have addressed the specific question. Clune v. Publishers' Ass'n of N.Y.C., 214 F. Supp. 520, 528-29 (S.D.N.Y.), [58] aff'd, 314 F.2d 343, 344 (2d Cir. 1963) (per curiam); Plumbers & Steamfitters Local 598 v. Morris, 511 F. Supp. 1298, 1311 (E.D. Wash. 1981); Stone & Webster Eng'g Corp., 163 F. Supp. at 896.[8] Because the Norris-LaGuardia Act prohibits the district court from issuing an injunction against the League's lockout of employees, the court's order cannot stand.

B.

Another portion of the injunction is not foreclosed by § 4(a). The district court enjoined not only the League's lockout of employees, i.e., players under contract, but also the League's refusal to deal with non-employees, i.e., free agents and prospective players or "rookies." As to these latter groups of players, § 4(a) does not [59] apply. The refusal of the League and NFL clubs to deal with free agents and rookies is not a refusal "to remain in any relation of employment," for there is no existing employment relationship in which "to remain."

An injunction with respect to the League's actions toward free agents and rookies, however, cannot be issued except in strict conformity with § 7 of the NLGA, 29 U.S.C. § 107, because this is "a case involving or growing out of a labor dispute." Id. §§ 101, 107. The present injunction does not conform to § 7.

[8] In Chicago Midtown Milk Distributors, 1970 U.S. App. LEXIS 8256, 1970 WL 2761, at *1, the Seventh Circuit reversed an injunction prohibiting two companies from refusing to supply and sell processed milk and other dairy products to certain distributors. The complaint alleged that "a refusal to deal based upon a lockout" violated the Sherman Act. In holding that the injunction was precluded by the NLGA, the court cited only § 1 of the Act. The court's reasoning is not well explained, and the opinion does not directly address § 4(a).

We disagree with the Players that the League forfeited its claim that the injunction must comply with § 7 by failing to raise the point in its brief in the district court. The district court raised the applicability of § 7 at oral argument, at which time the League argued that further procedures were required. Appellants' App. 521-23. The district court did not treat the point as forfeited or waived, concluding only that it was unnecessary to address § 7 because the court thought the NLGA wholly inapplicable. *Brady I, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44523, 2011 WL 1535240, at 23 n.41. And this court has considered compliance with the NLGA even when the issue was not raised in the district court. Ozark Air Lines, Inc., 797 F.2d at 562.

HN24[] Section 7 [60] provides that a court has no authority to issue an injunction "except after hearing the testimony of witnesses in open court (with opportunity for cross-examination) in support of the allegations of a complaint made under oath, and testimony in opposition thereto." 29 U.S.C. § 107. Although a hearing is not required where the party enjoined does not contest on appeal that the relevant facts are undisputed, Kansas City S. Transp. Co. v. Teamsters Local Union No. 41, 126 F.3d 1059, 1067-68 (8th Cir. 1997), the League does contest the facts in this case, and it is entitled to test the credibility of the Players' evidence by cross-examination. HN25[] Section 7(c) requires the court to evaluate the relative harms to the parties, and the court's calculus with respect to free agents and rookies undoubtedly was affected by its view that the entire lockout could be enjoined. Whether to enter an injunction requiring the League to deal with free agents and rookies, only to have these players locked out as soon as they enter into any new contract of employment, was [*682] not considered. The League also raises arguments concerning § 7(a) and § 7(e), which should be addressed by the district court in the first [61] instance as necessary. Compare, e.g., Mackey, 543 F.2d at 623, and Donnelly Garment Co. v. Dubinsky, 154 F.2d 38, 43 (8th Cir. 1946), with E. St. Louis Laborers' Local 100 v. Bellon Wrecking & Salvage Co., 414 F.3d 700, 708 (7th Cir. 2005), and Wilson & Co., 105 F.2d at 950-52. We therefore conclude that the injunction as a whole must be vacated.

IV.

Given our conclusion that the preliminary injunction did not conform to the provisions of the Norris-LaGuardia Act, we need not reach the other points raised by the League on appeal. In particular, we express no view on whether the League's nonstatutory labor exemption from the antitrust laws continues after the union's disclaimer. The parties agree that the Act's restrictions on equitable relief are not necessarily coextensive with the substantive rules of antitrust law, and we reach our decision on that understanding. See Burlington Northern, 481 U.S. at 435 n.3; Order of R.R. Telegraphers, 362 U.S. at 339 n.15; Milk Wagon Drivers' Union, Local No. 753 v. Lake Valley Farm Products, Inc., 311 U.S. 91, 103, 61 S. Ct. 122, 85 L. Ed. 63 (1940); *Burlington N. Santa Fe. Ry. Dissent

BYE, Circuit Judge, dissenting.

In 1914, after twenty years of judicial interference in labor conflicts on the side of the employers, Congress stepped in to protect organized labor by passing sections 6 and 20 of the Clayton Act. Section 20 of the Act generally prohibited the issuance of injunctions in cases involving or growing out of labor disputes. See 29 U.S.C. § 52. It soon became apparent, however, that what was supposed to be the "charter of liberty of labor," Felix Frankfurter &

Nathan Greene, The Labor Injunction 164 (1930) (remarks of William Howard Taft), fell short of the promise. The Lochner-era judges adopted a narrow interpretation of the Act, restricting it to "trade union activities directed against an employer by his own employees." United States v. Hutcheson, 312 U.S. 219, 230, 61 S. Ct. 463, 85 L. Ed. 788 (1941). "[T]o protect the rights of labor in the same manner the Congress intended when it enacted the Clayton Act," id. at 236, Congress [63] passed the Norris-LaGuardia Act, under which "the allowable area of union activity was not to be restricted . . . to an immediate employer-employee relation." Id. at 231. Through its holding in this case today, the majority reaffirms the wisdom of the old French saying used by Felix Frankfurter and Nathan Greene when describing judicial reluctance to enforce § 20 of the Clayton Act: "the more things are legislatively changed, the more they remain the same judicially." Felix Frankfurter & Nathan Greene, The Labor Injunction 176 (1930). Despite the repeated efforts of the legislative branch to come to the rescue of organized labor, today's opinion puts the power of the Act in the service of employers, to be used against non-unionized employees who can no longer avail themselves of protections of labor laws. Because I cannot countenance such interpretation of the Act, I must and hereby dissent.

A. "Labor Dispute"

First, I have to disagree with the majority's reading of the term "labor dispute." As the majority recounts, "[t]he underlying aim of the Norris-LaGuardia Act was to restore the broad purpose which Congress thought it had formulated in the Clayton Act but which was frustrated, [64] so Congress believed, by unduly restrictive judicial construction." United States v. Hutcheson, 312 U.S. at 235-36. The unequivocal goal of the new legislation was to overturn the Supreme Court's decisions in Duplex Printing and Bedford Cut Stone, which had restricted § 20 of the Clayton Act to labor union activities directed against employees' immediate employers. Allen Bradley Co. v. Local Union No. 3, Int'l Bhd. of Elec. Workers, 325 U.S. 797, 805, 65 S. Ct. 1533, 89 L. Ed. 1939 (1945). Congress accomplished the goal by clarifying that the term "labor dispute" > includes any controversy concerning terms or conditions of employment, or concerning the association or representation of persons in negotiating, fixing, maintaining, changing, or seeking to arrange terms or conditions of employment, regardless of whether or not the disputants stand in the proximate relation of employer and employee.

29 U.S.C. § 113(c) (emphasis added).

However, in passing the NLGA, Congress never intended to change the well-accepted calculus of the Clayton Act as the legislation for the benefit of organized labor. The Clayton Act was always understood as an attempt to assist the organized labor movement at the time its progress was impeded [65] by judicial misuse of injunctions. See, e.g., Hutcheson, 312 U.S. at 229-30 (explaining § 20 of the Clayton Act "withdrew from the general interdict of the Sherman Law specifically enumerated practices of labor unions by prohibiting injunctions against them"); Bedford Cut Stone Co. v. Journeymen Stone Cutters' Ass'n of N. Am., 274 U.S. 37, 56, 47 S. Ct. 522, 71 L. Ed. 916 (1927) (separate opinion by Stone, J.) (describing the Clayton Act as being concerned with "organized labor"); Am. Steel Foundries v. Tri-City Cent. Trades Council, 257 U.S. 184, 208-09, 42 S. Ct. 72, 66 L. Ed. 189 (1921) ("Labor unions are recognized by the Clayton Act as legal when instituted for mutual help and lawfully carrying out their legitimate objects."); see also Frankfurter & Green, The Labor Injunction, at 130-31, 139 (describing the Clayton Act's preoccupation with organized labor). It is this well-entrenched understanding of the term "labor dispute" as centered on the struggle between employers and organized labor that informs interpretation of the same definition under the NLGA. See Bruesewitz v. Wyeth LLC, 131 S.Ct. 1068, 1082, 179 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2011) ("When 'all (or nearly all) of the' relevant judicial decisions have given a term or concept a consistent judicial gloss, we [66] presume Congress intended the term or concept to have that meaning when it incorporated it into a later-enacted statute.") (citation omitted).

Like the Clayton Act, the NLGA has been consistently cited in connection with protection of unions' rights. See Brown v. Pro Football, Inc., 518 U.S. 231, 253 n.2, 116 S. Ct. 2116, 135 L. Ed. 2d 521 (1996) (dubbing §§ 6 and 20 of the Clayton Act and the NLGA as the "organized labor's exemption from federal antitrust laws"); Jacksonville Bulk Terminals, Inc. v. Int'l Longshoremen's Ass'n, 457 U.S. 702, 726, 102 S. Ct. 2672, 102 S. Ct. 2673, 73 L. Ed. 2d 327 (1982) (elaborating on the plain meaning of § 13(a) of the NLGA and noting the Act protects "union organizational efforts and efforts to improve working conditions"); H.A. Artists & Assoc., Inc. v. Actors' Equity Ass'n, 451 U.S. 704, 717 n.20, 101 S. Ct. [*684] 2102, 68 L. Ed. 2d 558 (1981) ("Of course, a party seeking refuge in the statutory exemption must be a bona fide labor organization. . . ."); Connell Constr. Co. v. Plumbers & Steamfitters Local Union No. 100, 421 U.S. 616, 621-22, 95 S. Ct. 1830, 44 L. Ed. 2d 418 (1975) (stating the Clayton Act and the NLGA "declare that labor unions are not combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade, and exempt specific union activities" from their purview); Int'l Ass'n of Machinists v. Street, 367 U.S. 740, 772, 81 S. Ct. 1784, 6 L. Ed. 2d 1141 (1961) [67] ("The Norris-LaGuardia Act, 47 Stat. 70, 29 U.S.C. §§ 101-115, expresses a basic policy against the injunction of activities of labor unions."); Hutcheson, 312 U.S. at 231 (the NLGA "established that the allowable area of union activity was not to be restricted, as it had been in the Duplex case, to an immediate employer-employee relation"). This interpretation is in part dictated by § 2 of the Act, which "explicitly formulated the 'public policy of the United States' in regard to the industrial conflict." Hutcheson, 312 U.S. at 231. Such public policy expressed concern with the plight of the "individual unorganized worker," whom Congress deemed "helpless to exercise actual liberty of contract and to protect his freedom of labor, and thereby to obtain acceptable terms and conditions of employment" when confronted with "corporate and other forms of ownership association" assumed by employers. 29 U.S.C. § 102. Commenting on the judicial respect § 2 deserves, the Supreme Court explained that "[t]here are few pieces of legislation where the congressional hearings, committee reports, and the language in the legislation itself more clearly point to the necessity for giving an Act a construction [68] that will protect the congressional policy the Act adopted." See Order of R.R. Telegraphers v. Chicago & N. W. R.R. Co., 362 U.S. 330, 335, 80 S. Ct. 761, 4 L. Ed. 2d 774 (1960). In the NLGA's case, the congressional policy was about helping the unions.

The majority attempts to diminish the significance of § 2's emphasis on organized labor by drawing attention to the part of the section which declares that an "individual unorganized worker" shall be free from the interference of employers in "self-organization or other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection." The majority finds it significant that the National Labor Relations Act, which guarantees employees the right to "self-organization . . . and to engage in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection," 29 U.S.C. § 157, has been interpreted not to require the presence of the union. NLRB v. Washington Aluminium Co., 370 U.S. 9, 82 S. Ct. 1099, 8 L. Ed. 2d 298 (1962); Mohave Elec. Co-op, Inc. v. NLRB, 206 F.3d 1183, 1189, 340 U.S. App. D.C. 391 & n.6 (D.C. Cir. 2000). While the definitions of the term "labor dispute" in the NLGA and NLRA, it is true, overlap, "the extent of the prohibition against injunctive [69] relief contained in Norris-LaGuardia [is] not coextensive with the National Labor Relations Act and the Board's jurisdiction over unfair labor practices." First Nat'l Maint. Corp. v. NLRB, 452 U.S. 666, 686 n.23, 101 S. Ct. 2573, 69 L. Ed. 2d 318 (1981). To give one example of the differences between the two statutes, the NLGA's injunction immunity is limited to labor disputes involving parties in "the same industry, trade, craft, or occupation," 29 U.S.C. § 113(a)-(b), whereas the NLRA does not have a similar limitation, see 29 U.S.C. § 152(9). And while the NLGA covers strikes about political issues which are beyond the scope of the immediate employment relationship, Jacksonville Bulk Terminals, Inc., 457 U.S. at 710-15, the NLRA does not, Int'l Longshoremen's Ass'n v. Allied Int'l, Inc., 456 U.S. 212, 225-26, 102 S. Ct. [*685] 1656, 72 L. Ed. 2d 21 (1982). Most critically, unlike the NLRA, the NLGA does not expressly protect concerted employee activities.

The phrase "mutual aid or protection" in § 2 of the NLGA had a "heuristic purpose" — i.e., to inform the courts of the "considerations moving Congressional action." Richard Michael Fischl, Self, Other, and Section 7: Mutualism and Protected Protest Activities Under the National Labor Relations Act, 89 Colum. L. Rev. 789, 847 (1989) [70] (quoting Frankfurter & Greene, The Labor Injunction, at 212). The phrase most likely originated from the "ideology of mutualism, rooted in working-class bondings and struggles," as contrasted with the philosophy of individualism embraced by "the prosperous and wellborn." Id. at 851(quoting D. Montgomery, The Fall of the House of Labor 2, 171 (1987)). The judicial gloss put on the terms "concerted activity" and "mutual aid and protection" years later, in the context of a different statute, cannot be used to undermine the Act's express concern with the success of the organized labor movement.

The majority also overstates by attributing too much significance to the Supreme Court's decision in New Negro Alliance, where the NLGA was applied in the context of a picket by an association of African Americans who, having been largely excluded from membership in the established unions, adopted the "traditional tactics of organized labor." Kenneth W. Mack, Rethinking Civil Rights Lawyering and Politics in the Era Before Brown, 115 Yale L. J. 256, 319 (2005). Such reliance on New Negro Alliance is unjustified. The decision presented a different question of whether the association had to have the [71] employment relationship with the employer and whether the racial struggle underlying the dispute was antithetical to finding a "labor dispute" within the meaning of the NLGA. Prior to the Supreme Court's decision, various circuits had apparently disagreed on the answers, and the lower courts' rulings held the NLGA inapplicable on these grounds. While setting the courts on the correct path with respect to the questions raised, the Court did not discuss whether a union was a sine qua non to the NLGA's applicability. In addition, in subsequent decisions the Court clarified, "a party seeking refuge in the statutory exemption [from antitrust liability] must be a bona fide labor organization, and not an independent contractor or entrepreneur." H.A. Artists & Associates, Inc., 451 U.S. at 717 n.20 (emphasis added). The Eighth Circuit agreed the absence of concerted labor activities disqualifies the subjects of the injunction from protection under the NLGA. Ozark Air Lines, Inc. v. Nat'l Mediation Bd., 797 F.2d 557, 563 (8th Cir. 1986) (stating a concerted activity is at the heart of the NLGA, which does not apply to the case because, among other things, it "has nothing to do with . . . concerted [72] labor activities"). Even if New Negro Alliance could leave the impression that a union is not required for the NLGA to apply, the Supreme Court's subsequent insistence on the NLGA's beneficiary status as a bona fide labor organization exposes such impression as being false.

This is not surprising. Organized labor activity serves as the necessary limiting principle circumscribing the application of the NLGA. Without such limiting principle, the Act would tie the courts' hands in granting injunctive relief in many routine cases where parties seek to enforce various aspects of individual employment contracts. Because courts have never viewed the NLGA as an obstacle to such exercise of equity powers, see, e.g., N.I.S. Corp. v. Swindle, 724 F.2d 707 (8th Cir. 1984) (upholding the grant of a preliminary injunction enforcing a covenant not to compete), [*686] the reading of the term untethered to unionization and collective bargaining activity does not make sense.

B. "Involving or Growing Out"

Second, I must take issue with the majority's conclusion as to this case not representing the outer boundary of the phrase "involving or growing out of a labor dispute." Like the nonstatutory labor exemption, [73] statutory exemption from antitrust liability, which rests in part on the Norris-LaGuardia Act, Connell Construction Co., 421 U.S. at 621-22, lies at the intersection between labor and antitrust laws. Allen Bradley Co., 325 U.S. at 806 (elaborating on the responsibility to reconcile "two declared congressional policies" — one "seek[ing] to preserve a competitive business economy" and one seeking "to preserve the rights of labor to organize to better its conditions through the agency of collective bargaining"); Am. Steel Erectors, Inc. v. Local Union No. 7, Int'l Ass'n of Bridge, Structural, Ornamental & Reinforcing Iron Workers, 536 F.3d 68, 76 (1st Cir. 2008) (stating that both the statutory and the nonstatutory labor exemption were developed "[t]o balance the competing federal policies supporting organized labor on one hand and business competition on the other"); Mackey v. NFL, 543 F.2d 606, 613 (8th Cir. 1976) (availability of the labor exemption "turns upon whether the relevant federal labor policy is deserving of preeminence over federal antitrust policy under the circumstances of the particular case"). "While the Norris-LaGuardia Act's bar of federal-court labor injunctions is [74] not explicitly phrased as an exemption from the antitrust laws, it has been interpreted broadly as a statement of congressional policy that the courts must not use the antitrust laws as a vehicle to interfere in labor disputes." H.A. Artists & Associates, Inc., 451 U.S. at 714. The scope of the two exemptions differs somewhat — "the statutory exemption allows unions to accomplish some restraints by acting unilaterally, [whereas] the nonstatutory exemption offers no similar protection when a union and a nonlabor party agree to restrain competition in a business market," see Connell Construction Co., 421 U.S. at 622, — but there is no place for the application of either at the time labor laws no longer govern and labor policy is no longer implicated.

The Supreme Court recognized as much when it explained that nonstatutory immunity from antitrust review is no longer necessary when "an agreement among employers [is] sufficiently distant in time and in circumstances from the collective-bargaining process that a rule permitting antitrust intervention would not significantly interfere with that process." Brown, 518 U.S. at 250. As an example of such endpoint, the Court cited "collapse of the [75] collective-bargaining relationship, as evidenced by decertification of the union." Id. (quoting Brown v. Pro Football, Inc., 50 F.3d 1041, 1057, 311 U.S. App. D.C. 89 (D.C. Cir. 1995)). With the players having voted to end the NFLPA's status as their collective bargaining representative and the NFLPA likewise having disclaimed its status as the players' representative, this case has reached that endpoint. See Brady v. NFL, 640 F.3d 785, 798-99 (8th Cir. 2011) (Bye, J., dissenting) (elaborating on the reasons why the union disclaimer should end the protection against antitrust liability).

Indeed, the League itself anticipated dissolution of antitrust remedy fetters upon disclaimer of union representation, as is evident from its concessions in previous cases. See Powell v. NFL, 930 F.2d 1293, 1303 n.12 (8th Cir. 1989) (describing the League's concession that "the Sherman Act could be found applicable, depending [*687] on the circumstances, . . . if the affected employees ceased to be represented by a certified union"); see also Appellees Special Add. at 370 (transcript of the League's Supreme Court argument in Brown v. Pro Football, Inc., where the League conceded antitrust immunities would not apply when "employees [76] ultimately elect, in good faith, . . . to give up their rights under the labor laws"). The League's view was consistent with those of the courts, who saw disassociation from the union as the point beyond which labor laws yield to the antitrust regime. Brown, 50 F.3d at 1057 ("If employees wish to seek the protections of the Sherman Act, they may forego unionization or even decertify their unions. We note that the NFL players took exactly this latter step after the Eighth Circuit's Powell decision."); Powell, 930 F.2d at 1305 (Heaney, J., dissenting) (criticizing the majority opinion for continuing the labor exemption for too long — in effect, "until the bargaining relationship is terminated either by a NLRB decertification proceeding or by abandonment of bargaining rights by the union"). This realization as to the players' membership in a union acting as a shield against the possibility of antitrust charges is the reason why, in the 1993 White settlement, the League insisted the NFLPA be reconstituted as the players' representative and the collective bargaining relationship between the parties be reestablished.

At some point in the "arising out of" spectrum, the antitrust immunities [77] stemming from statutory and nonstatutory labor exemptions must come to an end and give way to antitrust remedies. Such point does not come a year from the union disclaimer, nor one business cycle from it, as suggested by the League's counsel. Rather, such point comes at the moment of the union disclaimer.

II.

Although I would conclude the district court correctly determined this case does not involve or grow out of a labor dispute, thus negating any further application of the NLGA, I am compelled to write further addressing the majority's conclusion as to § 4(a) of the NLGA protecting employers. At least three other circuit courts have reached the opposite conclusion and, for the reasons set forth below, I find their reading persuasive. In interpreting § 4(a), these courts were guided by the legislative history of the NLGA, as well as the legislative history of the Clayton Act — from which the NLGA was drawn — both of which indicate the NLGA was not intended to protect employers. Finally, the stated purpose in § 2 of the NLGA confirms the statute should be interpreted in such a manner as to protect employees, rather than employers.

I start from where the majority began its analysis, with [78] a review of the pertinent cases discussing whether § 4(a) prohibits injunctions against employers. In De Arroyo v. Sindicato de Trabajadores Packinghouse, 425 F.2d 281, 291 (1st Cir. 1970), the First Circuit concluded § 4(a) does not protect employers, albeit in the context of whether the remedy of reinstatement in a case under § 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act was barred by the NLGA. De Arroyo rejected a strictly literal interpretation of § 4(a) because such a reading "completely disregards the primary purpose behind the anti-injunction provisions, 'to protect working men in the exercise of organized, economic power . . . to correct existing abuses of the injunctive remedy in labor disputes . . . to prevent the injunctions of the federal courts from upsetting the natural interplay of the competing economic forces of labor and capital.'" Id. at 290- 91 (quoting Bhd. of R.R. Trainmen v. Chicago R. & I.R. Co., 353 U.S. 30, 40-41, [*688] 77 S. Ct. 635, 1 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1957)). The court also referenced the legislative history behind § 4(a), which indicated the provision "was not intended as a protection for employers." Id. at 291. Instead, the court reasoned, "[t]he 'remain in any relation of employment' language [79] . . . was used . . . simply to make clear that employee strikes could not be enjoined either if the employees claimed to have ceased or refused to work temporarily or if they claimed to have completely ended their employment relation with their employer." Id.

De Arroyo was in line with a case decided by the Seventh Circuit eight years earlier, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers v. Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., 310 F.2d 513, 517 (7th Cir. 1962), which conducted "a thorough examination of the Act and its pertinent legislative history." According to the Seventh Circuit, "our study of that history and the language of the Act . . . convinces us that the purpose of Congress in this respect was to protect only employees and unions." Id. at 518. The court continued, "[w]e find nothing in the statement of policy to indicate any intention to deny jurisdiction to issue injunctions against employers," save for the same exceptions referenced by De Arroyo. Id. In sum, the Seventh Circuit deferred to Congress's authority:

> The enactment of the Act, was, of course, the responsibility of Congress, and not that of this court. That Congress may have been intent upon shielding organizations of employees [80] from injunctions rather than employers was and is a matter within its province. The same can be said of the exemption of labor organizations from the sanctions of antitrust laws. Those are matters over which the courts have no control, in the absence of a constitutional attack.
> The language used clearly negatives any intention to recognize any general reciprocity of rights of capital and labor. Essentially the Act is frankly a charter of the rights of labor against capital.

Id. Given the language and history of § 4, the Seventh Circuit concluded the NLGA did not prevent the issuance of an injunction. Id.

Building upon the decisions of the First and Seventh Circuits, the Ninth Circuit issued perhaps the most comprehensive decision on the issue in Local 2750, Lumber & Sawmill Workers Union v. Cole, 663 F.2d 983 (9th Cir. 1981). Although Lumber & Sawmill Workers again involved § 301 of the LMRA, the court discussed at length the application of § 4(a). Id. at 985-987. Specifically, the court agreed with De Arroyo because "section 4(a) does not refer to any right of an employer not to continue the employment relationship, but was used to make clear that strikes could not be enjoined even when [81] the strikers claimed to have completely ended the employment relationships, as well as when they claimed to have ceased work only temporarily." Id. at 986. To further support this assertion, the court noted, "[t]he second clause of section 4(a) apparently originated in section 20 of the Clayton Act, where it was clearly intended to apply to the termination of the work relationship by the employee rather than the employer." Id. Ultimately, after considering the text and history of § 4(a), as well as the history of the Clayton Act, the Ninth Circuit concluded "[s]ection 4(a) was intended to protect the right of workers and labor unions to strike," and thus the reinstatement order under § 301 was not barred by the NLGA. Id. at 986- 87; see also Retail Clerks Union Local 1222, AFL-CIO v. Alfred M. Lewis, Inc., 327 F.2d 442, 446 (9th Cir. 1964) ("While the writer of this opinion agrees with the view expressed by the 7th Circuit . . . that the purpose of Norris-LaGuardia was to protect only employees and unions, except for two isolated exceptions appearing in section 3(a, b), and [*689] in section 4(b), it is not necessary for us in this case to go so far.") (internal citations omitted).

While the [82] majority acknowledges each of the above decisions, it criticizes the courts' reasoning at the outset by focusing on one of the underlying aspects contained therein "that when employers were intended to be protected, as in section 4(b), they were specifically named." Lumber & Sawmill Workers, 663 F.2d at 985. Citing to Local Union No. 884, United Rubber, Cork, Linoleum, & Plastic Workers v. Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc., 61 F.3d 1347, 1352, 1355 (8th Cir. 1995), the majority concludes, "[t]his court already has recognized that § 4(c) applies to injunctions against employers . . . so the premise of De Arroyo and Lumber & Sawmill Workers that employers are protected against injunction under § 4 only when specifically mentioned in § 4(b) is a non-starter under circuit precedent." Ante at 24; see also id. at 24 n.5 (distinguishing the Seventh Circuit's decision due to "this court's precedent that § 4 applies to injunctions against employers").

With due respect to the majority, Bridgestone/Firestone did not so hold. Bridgestone/Firestone revolved around an injunction issued in favor of a union against an employer under an exception to the NLGA provided in Boys Markets, Inc. v. Retail Clerk's Union, Local 770, 398 U.S. 235, 90 S. Ct. 1583, 26 L. Ed. 2d 199 (1970), [83] which applies "'if the strike is over a dispute which under the parties' collective bargaining agreement should be submitted to arbitration.'" 61 F.3d at 1352 (quoting John Morrell & Co. v. Local Union 304A, 804 F.2d 457, 459 (8th Cir. 1986)). Within this context, the court was tasked with determining "whether the Boys Markets exception applies . . . where the union has sought and obtained an injunction against the company," which was "an issue of first impression in this circuit." Id. Following the lead of three circuits which had "unanimously concluded that the Boys Markets rationale should be extended to allow for injunctions against employers," the court likewise held the exception applied equally to employers. Id. The court then went on to analyze whether the Boys Markets test was satisfied, answering such question in the negative because the union "failed to demonstrate that without the injunction the arbitration proceeding would be frustrated or rendered a nullity." Id.

A careful reading of Bridgestone/Firestone reveals it has no bearing on the present question of whether § 4(a) protects employers. Namely, whether the Boys Markets exception applies to employers and employees [84] alike is an entirely different question than whether § 4(c), much less § 4(a), touches even-handedly on employers and employees. See, e.g., Aeronautical Indus. Dist. Lodge 91 of Int'l Ass'n of Machinists & Aerospace Workers v. United Techs. Corp., 230 F.3d 569, 581 (2d Cir. 2000) (distinguishing Niagara Hooker Emp. Union v. Occidental Chem. Corp., 935 F.2d 1370 (2d Cir. 1991), which Bridgestone/Firestone relied on, because "Niagara Hooker's focus was not all conceivable labor disputes, but only those concerning arbitrable issues," and thus the reverse Boys Markets exception was "wholly inapplicable to a case, like this one, in which the labor dispute concerns non-arbitrable issues"). In sum, while it is true Bridgestone/Firestone ultimately overturned an injunction against the employer, see id. at 1355, the court made no inquiry whatsoever as to whether § 4 itself protects employers equally, notwithstanding the Boys Markets exception, and therefore Bridgestone/Firestone does not contain any recognition or precedent applying § 4(c) to employers. Correspondingly, Bridgestone/Firestone is not in conflict with the three circuit cases discussed [*690] above which bear directly on the question [85] at hand.

Even if Bridgestone/Firestone stands for the proposition asserted by the majority, I respectfully disagree with the majority's subsequent statutory interpretation. The majority rejects the Players' argument distinguishing between temporary and permanent work stoppages in the first and second clauses of § 4(a). Instead, advancing the broad scope of the term "any," the majority construes "[r]efusing to . . . remain in any relation of employment" to encompass non-permanent work stoppages "such as a strike or lockout of employees." Ante at 25-26. However, the majority rejects the NFL's counterpart argument that "the second clause should be understood as applying only to employers." Id. at 27 (emphasis in original). In doing so, the majority concedes its interpretation is asymmetrical because "[e]mployees may refuse to perform work under the first clause, and they may refuse to remain in a relation of employment under the second." Id.

I have considerable doubt about the majority's interpretation of § 4(a). First, there is little basis in the text for reading § 4(a) as referring only to employees under the first clause but to both employees and employers under the second clause. Moreover, [86] the breadth with which the majority interprets the second clause as it relates to employers ostensibly covers the employee conduct encompassed under the majority's reading of the first clause. Stated differently, under the majority's remarkably broad interpretation, a refusal to perform any work by employees would be tantamount to a refusal to remain in any relation of employment because "it changes the condition or character of that relationship" in some fashion. Ante at 25-26. Such an interpretation, which conflates the two clauses, cannot stand because it renders the first clause superfluous. See Morrison Enters., LLC v. Dravo Corp., 638 F.3d 594, 609 (8th Cir. 2011) ("We avoid interpreting a statute in a manner that renders any section of the statute superfluous or fails to give effect to all of the words used by Congress.") (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

Second, and perhaps more importantly, the majority's interpretation fails to give effect to Congress's intent in passing the NLGA. See Ortega-Marroquin v. Holder, 640 F.3d 814, 818 (8th Cir. 2011) (noting courts must give effect to the intent of Congress when clear); see also Boys Markets, Inc., 398 U.S. at 250 [87] ("Statutory interpretation requires more than concentration upon isolated words; rather, consideration must be given to the total corpus of pertinent law and the policies that inspired ostensibly inconsistent provisions."). Returning to the legislative history discussed in depth above, which bears some repetition in the context of § 4, the NLGA "was enacted in response to federal-court intervention on behalf of employers," which "had caused the federal judiciary to fall into disrepute among large segments of this Nation's population." Jacksonville Bulk Terminals, Inc., 457 U.S. at 715; see also id. at 716 ("The legislative history is replete with criticisms of the ability of powerful employers to use federal judges as 'strike-breaking' agencies").

Attempting to remedy this inequity, the House Committee on the Judiciary explained about the NLGA, "[t]he purpose of the bill is to protect the rights of labor in the same manner the Congress intended when it enacted the Clayton Act . . . , which act, by reason of its construction and application by the Federal courts is ineffectual to accomplish the congressional intent." H.R. Rep. No. 669, 72d Cong., 1st Sess. 3 (1932). According to the [88] Committee, [*691] because federal courts were in the pocket of employers, the restrictions contained in § 20 of the Clayton Act had "'become more or less valueless to labor, and this section is intended by more specific language to overcome the qualifying effects of the decisions of the courts in this respect.'" Milk Wagon Drivers' Union v. Lake Valley Farm Prods., Inc., 311 U.S. 91, 102, 61 S. Ct. 122, 85 L. Ed. 63 (1940) (quoting H.Rep. No. 669, pp. 7, 8). Reviewing these committee reports, the Supreme Court concluded, "[w]hether or not one agrees with the committees that the cited cases constituted an unduly restricted interpretation of the Clayton Act, one must agree that the committees and the Congress made abundantly clear their intention that what they regarded as the misinterpretation of the Clayton Act should not be repeated in the construction of the Norris-LaGuardia Act." Id. at 103. Indeed, even the League concedes this much. See Blue Br. at 27 ("There is no doubt that concerns about injunctions against labor unions, rather than injunctions against employers, were the principal catalyst for the bill.").

Then-Professor Frankfurter, a drafter of the NLGA, wrote § 4 "provides that in cases growing out of labor [89] disputes, no persons participating in, or affected by, such disputes shall be enjoined from striking, or from striking for the success of strikes, by customary labor union effort, short of fraud or violence." Felix Frankfurter & Nathan Greene, The Labor Injunction 215 (1930). Professor Frankfurter explained § 4 was "a paraphrase of like language in the Clayton Act which was held to be merely declaratory of the modern common law right to strike." Id. at 217-18; see generally Carcieri v. Salazar, 555 U.S. 379, 129 S.Ct. 1058, 1065 n.5, 172 L. Ed. 2d 791 (2009) (noting the author of the legislation was "an unusually persuasive source as to the meaning of the relevant statutory language"). Eleven years later, then Supreme Court Justice Frankfurter confirmed this principle on the Supreme Court:

> The relation of the Norris-LaGuardia Act to the Clayton Act is not that of a tightly drawn amendment to a technically phrased tax provision. The underlying aim of the Norris-LaGuardia Act was to restore the broad purpose which Congress thought it had formulated in the Clayton Act but which was frustrated, so Congress believed, by unduly restrictive judicial construction. This was authoritatively stated by the House Committee on the [90] Judiciary.

As an assist in the interpretation of § 4(a), it is therefore helpful to look to § 20 of the Clayton Act, which prohibits injunctions against "terminating any relation of employment, or from ceasing to perform any work or labor, or from recommending, advising, or persuading others by peaceful means so to do." 29 U.S.C. § 52. The Supreme Court construed this language as forbidding injunctions against "recommending, advising or persuading others by peaceful means to cease employment and labor." Am. Steel Foundries, 257 U.S. at 203. The Court continued, "[i]t is clear that Congress wished to forbid the use by the federal courts of their equity arm to prevent peaceable persuasion by employees, discharged or expectant, in promotion of their side of the dispute." Id.

Delving deeper into the Clayton Act, the legislative history behind the "terminating any relation of employment" clause further confirms Congress intended to protect only employees. See Lumber & Sawmill Workers, 663 F.2d at 986 ("The second clause of section 4(a) apparently originated in section 20 of the Clayton Act, where it was clearly intended to apply to the termination [*692] of the work [91] relationship by the employee rather than the employer."). The House Committee acknowledged, "[t]he consensus of judicial view . . . is that workingmen may lawfully combine to further their material interests without limit or constraint, and may for that purpose adopt any means or methods which are lawful. It is the enjoyment and exercise of that right and none other that this bill forbids the courts to interfere with." H.R. Rep. No. 63-627, at 32 (1914). The Senate Committee likewise stated the language was intended "to guard the right of workingmen to act together in terminating, if they desire, any relation of employment, and to act together and in concert in doing or abstaining from doing any other of the acts named in that paragraph of the Section." Lumber & Sawmill Workers, 663 F.2d at 986 n.5 (quoting S. Rep. No. 63-698, at 51 (1914)).

Finally, if the legislative history left any lingering doubt about whether § 4(a) protects employers, Congress conclusively resolved any ambiguity by building the purpose into the NLGA itself via § 2. "Specifically, the Congress found that prevailing socio-political and economic conditions prevented individual workers from obtaining 'acceptable [92] terms and conditions of employment'" and thus the NLGA "sought to ensure workers the right to organize and conduct union activities 'free from the interference, restraint, or coercion' of employers or their agents by means of labor injunctions." Burlington N. R. Co. v. United Transp. Union, 848 F.2d 856, 861 (8th Cir. 1988) (citing 29 U.S.C. § 102). Senator Norris made clear § 2 was to be utilized as a guide to judicial interpretation which would "'relieve . . . many of the difficulties which have heretofore existed when a court has been called upon to interpret the law' — obviously thinking of the Supreme Court's interpretation of the Clayton Act." James M. Altman, Antitrust: A New Tool for Organized Labor?, 131 U. Pa. L. Rev. 127, 151 (1982) (quoting 75 Cong. Rec. 4503 (1932)).

In response to the policy statement offered by Senator Norris, Senator Hebert, the author of the Senate Judiciary Committee's minority report, proposed language to § 2 to protect "both the employer and the employee." Id. at 152 (quoting 75 Cong. Rec. 4677 (1932)). Senator Hebert disclosed his substitute "'trie[d] to afford the same degree of consideration to the employer in his relations to his employees [93] as it does to the employee in his relations with his employer'" because the majority bill contained "'very little, if any, reference to the consideration that is to be given to the employer in his relations with his employee.'" Id. (quoting 75 Cong. Rec. 4678). Following a colloquy, Senator Hebert's substitute "was defeated soundly." Id. (noting the vote was 47 to 18). "That vote . . . makes it quite clear that in passing the Norris-LaGuardia Act Congress had no intent to relieve employers of any liability under the antitrust laws." Id. at 153. Even if Congress had such intent, "the scope of such an exemption would be narrowly limited by the terms of the Act." Id. at 154 ("[T]he only subsection in section 4 that refers to an employer's activities is 4(b)").

Although the majority attempts to minimize the congressional defeat of employer protections in the NLGA, there can be little doubt this legislative history provides yet more support for a reading of § 4(a) which protects only employees. See, e.g., United States v. United Steelworkers of Am., 271 F.2d 676, 683 (3d Cir. 1959) ("Our conclusion in this regard is confirmed, we think, by contrasting the statute as enacted with the House [94] proposal which was rejected."). Indeed, the Supreme Court has previously placed significant weight on similar legislative history when construing [*693] the NLGA, as well as other labor statutes. See, e.g., Burlington N. R.R. Co. v. Bhd. of Maint. of Way Emps., 481 U.S. 429, 439-440, 107 S. Ct. 1841, 95 L. Ed. 2d 381 (1987) ("After lengthy debate, punctuated with numerous references to the notorious Pullman Strike of 1894, the House refused an amendment proposed by Representative Beck that would have exempted railroads from the coverage of the Act. The historical background of the Norris-LaGuardia Act thus reveals that Congress intended to preclude courts from enjoining secondary as well as primary activity, and that the railroads were to be treated no differently from other industries in this regard.") (citation omitted); Complete Auto Transit, Inc. v. Reis, 451 U.S. 401, 412-416, 101 S. Ct. 1836, 68 L. Ed. 2d 248 (1981) ("The legislative debates and the process of legislative amendment demonstrate that Congress deliberately chose" not to include a provision defeated in the House bill regarding section 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act).

Viewing the legislative history of § 4(a) in its entirety, Congress did not intend to protect employers under the [95] provision. See De Arroyo, 425 F.2d at 291 ("Our understanding of the legislative history behind section 4(a) leads us to conclude that that section was not intended as a protection for employers."). Moreover, the purpose delineated in § 2 further bolsters this conclusion. See Baseball Players and the Antitrust Laws, 53 Colum. L. Rev. 242, 249 n.71 (1953) ("Given the purpose of the Norris-LaGuardia Act it is improbable that an association of employers which deprives an 'individual unorganized worker' of his 'freedom of labor' comes within its protection."). Interpreting the text of § 4(a) in light of the legislative history and express policy of the NLGA, I would conclude § 4(a) does not protect employers.

In the end, I find illustrative the wise words of Judge Learned Hand:

> Of course it is true that the words used, even in their literal sense, are the primary, and ordinarily the most reliable, source of interpreting the meaning of any writing: be it a statute, a contract, or anything else. But it is > one of the surest indexes of a mature and developed jurisprudence not to make a fortress out of the dictionary; but to remember that statutes always have some purpose or object to accomplish, [96] whose sympathetic and imaginative discovery is the surest guide to their meaning.

Cabell v. Markham, 148 F.2d 737, 739 (2d Cir. 1945). In this case, "the fact remains that Congress passed the Norris-LaGuardia Act to forestall judicial attempts to narrow labor's statutory protection." Bhd. of Maint. of Way Emps., 481 U.S. at 443. This is exactly what the majority has done. As a consequence, I am compelled to and must dissent.[9]

End of Document

[9] Although the majority confines its analysis to the NLGA, I remain strongly convinced the other traditional injunction factors favor the Players. See Minn. Citizens Concerned for Life, Inc. v. Swanson, 640 F.3d 304, 310 (8th Cir. 2011) (setting forth the factors a court must consider). For the reasons set forth in my prior dissent, see Brady v. NFL, 640 F.3d 785, 794-96 (8th Cir. 2011) (Bye, J., dissenting), which have only intensified given the current juncture, I would affirm the district court.

ORDER DENYING DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS

Now before the Court is defendants' motion to dismiss the State of Oregon's first amended complaint ("FAC"). The Court finds this matter suitable for decision without oral argument and therefore VACATES the hearing currently scheduled for July 15, 2011. Having considered the arguments presented in the moving papers, the Court hereby DENIES defendants' motion.

BACKGROUND

The State of Oregon ("Oregon") filed this antitrust action in 2010, seeking to recover for damages caused by a global price-fixing conspiracy allegedly perpetrated by the major manufacturers of liquid-crystal display ("LCD") panels. Oregon brought suit on behalf of itself, "its agencies, political subdivisions, and local governments, and all natural persons residing in Oregon who were indirect purchasers of . . . products containing LCD panels . . . ." See Complaint, ¶1.

On April 15, 2011, after this Court dismissed in part Oregon's original complaint, Oregon filed its FAC. The FAC contains four causes of action: 1) price-fixing in violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1; [*53] 2) price-fixing in violation of the Oregon Antitrust Statute, ORS 646.725-646.730; 3) unjust enrichment under the Oregon Antitrust Statute, ORS 646.775; and 4) common law unjust enrichment. FAC, ¶¶155-72. The FAC sought damages and injunctive relief, as well as disgorgement of defendants' profits. FAC at 50, ¶4.

On May 2, 2011, defendants filed a joint motion to dismiss Oregon's FAC. Defendants' motion takes issue with only two aspects of the complaint. First, defendants claim that Oregon's third cause of action must be dismissed because the Oregon Antitrust Statute does not authorize claims for unjust enrichment. Second, defendants claim that Oregon's request for disgorgement of profits must be stricken from the complaint because disgorgement is not a proper remedy for unjust enrichment under Oregon law.

LEGAL STANDARD

Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6), a district court must dismiss a complaint that fails to state a claim upon which relief may be granted. To survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, the plaintiff must allege "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). This "facial plausibility" [*54] standard requires the plaintiff to allege facts that add up to "more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). While courts do not require "heightened fact pleading of specifics," a plaintiff must allege facts sufficient to "raise a right to relief above the speculative level." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 544, 555.

In deciding whether the plaintiff has stated a claim upon which relief may be granted, the Court must assume that the plaintiff's allegations are true and must draw all reasonable inferences in the plaintiff's favor. See Usher v. City of Los Angeles, 828 F.2d 556, 561 (9th Cir. 1987). However, the Court is not required to accept as true "allegations that are merely conclusory, unwarranted deductions of fact, or unreasonable inferences." In re Gilead Scis. Sec. Litig., 536 F.3d 1049, 1055 (9th Cir. 2008).

DISCUSSION

As mentioned above, defendants' motion challenges only two aspects of Oregon's complaint: Oregon's statutory unjust enrichment claim under the Oregon Antitrust Statute; and Oregon's request for disgorgement of defendants' profits. The Court rejects both of defendants' challenges.

1. Unjust enrichment [*55] under the Oregon Antitrust Statute

Oregon bases its statutory claim for unjust enrichment on ORS 646.775(1)(a). That section reads in its entirety as follows:

> The Attorney General may bring a civil action in the name of the State of Oregon, on behalf of a political subdivision in this state or as parens patriae on behalf of a natural person, in any circuit court in which venue is proper under ORS 646.790, to secure equitable and monetary relief as provided in this section for injury sustained by the natural person or political subdivision to the natural person's or political subdivision's property by reason of a violation of ORS 646.725 or 646.730. The Attorney General may bring the action authorized by this paragraph regardless of whether the natural person or political subdivision dealt directly or indirectly with the adverse party.

ORS 646.775(1)(a) (emphasis added). Oregon claims that the reference to "equitable . . . relief" in this section represents a broad grant of authority to the Oregon Attorney General to pursue equitable actions against antitrust offenders.

Defendants, however, argue that the equitable relief authorized under section 646.775(1)(a) is far more circumscribed. [*56] They argue that the statute only authorizes equitable relief to the extent it is "provided in this section." See id. Because no portion of section 646.775 explicitly authorizes claims for unjust enrichment, defendants argue that such claims are not among the equitable relief that the Oregon Attorney General may seek. Further, defendants point to the fact that the statute limits relief to "injury sustained" by plaintiffs. They argue that such language is inconsistent with the remedy of unjust enrichment, which focuses on a defendant's gain rather than a plaintiff's injury. [1] See, e.g., Davis v. Tyee Indus., Inc., 295 Ore. 467, 668 P.2d 1186, 1188 n.2 (Or. 1983) ("[Unjust enrichment] allows the plaintiff to recover not merely compensation for his loss, but all of the defendant's gain as well.") (quoting D. Dobbs, Remedies § 5.15, at 414 (1973)).

The Court cannot agree with defendants' reading of the statute. While later portions of section 646.775 [*58] detail the remedies available in an action brought under section 646.775(1)(a), those portions only pertain to monetary relief. See, e.g., ORS § 646.775(1)(b) (directing courts to exclude certain forms of monetary relief); ORS § 646.775(1)(c) (authorizing treble damages and attorneys' fees); ORS § 646.775(4) (authorizing proof of damages through "statistical or sampling methods"); ORS § 646.775(5) (discussing distribution of damage awards). After authorizing "equitable relief" in section 646.775(1)(a), section 646.775 does not use the term "equitable relief" or otherwise discuss the equitable relief available. Given the lack of any explicit reference to equitable relief in section 646.775, defendants' reading of that section would read equitable relief out of the Oregon Antitrust Statute entirely.

Contrary to defendants' arguments, the only provision of section 646.775 that remotely relates to equitable relief suggests that the Oregon legislature intended section 646.775(1)(a) to be an expansive grant of authority to pursue equitable claims: "The powers granted in this section are in addition to and not in derogation of the common law powers of the Attorney General to act as parens [*59] patriae, or the powers of the Attorney General to sue as a representative party on behalf of a class pursuant to ORCP 32." ORS 646.775(6).

[1] Defendants also argue that the Oregon legislature's narrow understanding of the equitable powers conferred by section 646.775(1)(a) is evidenced by the legislature's rejection of a 2001 amendment to the Oregon Antitrust Statute that would have added the following language to the section: "The equitable relief authorized by this subsection includes, but is [*57] not limited to, restitution and disgorgement." Proposed Oregon House Bill 2218 (2001), available at http://www.leg.state.or.us/01reg/pdf/HB2218.pdf. Defendants claim that the legislature's rejection of this proposed amendment shows that it views the equitable powers that the statute confers narrowly.

Having reviewed the full legislative history of the proposed amendment, however, the Court finds defendants' argument unconvincing. The amendment was introduced by the Oregon Attorney General's Office to make explicit what the Attorney General believed the statute already authorized. See Tape Recording, House Committee on Judiciary, Subcommittee on Criminal Law, HB 2218 (Jan. 23, 2001) (statement of Assistant Attorney General Andrew Aubertine), available at http://www.leg.state. or.us/listn/archive/archive.2001s/HJUDCR-200101230810.ram. The Oregon House passed the amendment, but it was never voted on by the Senate. The transcript of Senate hearing suggests that the Attorney General withdrew the amendment because it was deemed unnecessary in light of other amendments to the statute. See id.

In light of this provision, the Court finds that the Oregon legislature intended section 646.775(1)(a) to authorize a broad spectrum of equitable relief. Accordingly, it finds that Oregon's claims for unjust enrichment are authorized by the statute.

2. Availability of disgorgement

As a remedy for defendants' alleged antitrust violations, Oregon requests disgorgement of defendants' profits. Defendants argue that disgorgement is not an appropriate remedy for the antitrust claims asserted in plaintiff's suit. Instead, they argue that restitution is the only remedy available for unjust enrichment under Oregon law. See Bugge v. Far West Fed. Bank, S.B., 100 Ore. App. 133, 785 P.2d 1058, 1064 (Or. App. 1990) ("The proper remedy is restitution for unjust enrichment . . . ."). Defendants argue that almost no Oregon decisions have allowed disgorgement of profits as a remedy for unjust enrichment claims.

The Court finds defendants' argument unconvincing. While no Oregon court has awarded disgorgement of profits in the antitrust context, few Oregon decisions have discussed the availability [*60] of disgorgement as a remedy in general. At least one Oregon court, however, has found disgorgement to be an appropriate remedy for unjust enrichment. See Kerr v. Miller, 159 Ore. App. 613, 977 P.2d 438, 449 (Or. App. 1999).

Further, Oregon law makes the remedies available under the Sherman Act persuasive authority for the remedies available under the Oregon Antitrust Statute. ORS 646.715(2) ("The decisions of federal courts in construction of federal law relating to the same subject shall be persuasive authority . . . ."). Although rarely sought under the Sherman Act - perhaps because of the availability of treble damages - disgorgement appears to be an available remedy for violation of the federal antitrust laws.

The Southern District of New York recently concluded that federal courts may award disgorgement of profits as a remedy for Sherman Act violations. See United States v. Keyspan Corp., 763 F. Supp. 2d 633 (S.D.N.Y. 2011). The precise question in Keyspan was whether the district court should approve a consent decree settlement that included disgorgement of the defendant's profits. Id. at 635. In deciding that question, however, the court first had to decide whether disgorgement was an available [*61] remedy under the Sherman Act. Id. at 638-41.

The court first looked to decisions in the securities law context, in which disgorgement is a more common remedy. Relying on the Second Circuit's decision in S.E.C. v. Cavanagh, 445 F.3d 105 (2d Cir. 2006), the court concluded that federal courts possessed the power to authorize disgorgement of profits as part of their equity jurisdiction. Keyspan, 763 F. Supp. 2d at 638-39 ("Thus, '[b]ecause chancery courts possessed the power to order equitable disgorgement in the eighteenth century, . . . contemporary federal courts are vested with the same authority by the Constitution and the Judiciary Act.'" (quoting Cavanagh, 445 F.3d at 120)). The court then determined that nothing in the Sherman Act would limit the availability of this traditional power. Id. at 639-40 ("[Section 1 and section 4 of the Sherman Act] are broad and contain no language divesting a court of its 'inherent equitable powers.'").

Having determined that federal courts retain the power to order disgorgement under the Sherman Act, the court concluded that "disgorgement comports with established principles of antitrust law." Id. at 640. The court believed disgorgement to be an [*62] effective remedy for ensuring that antitrust defendants are not able to retain any rewards for their wrongful behavior. In addition, the court noted that "there appears to be little disagreement among commentators about the propriety of disgorgement as an antitrust remedy." Id. (citing Phillip E. Areeda et al., Antitrust Law ¶ 325a (3d ed. 2007) and Einer Elhauge, Disgorgement as an Antitrust Remedy, 76 Antitrust L.J. 79, 79 (2009)).

The Court finds this analysis persuasive. In light of the availability of disgorgement under the Sherman Act, and the expansive grant of authority to seek equitable relief under the Oregon Antitrust Statute, the Court concludes that disgorgement is available to Oregon in this case.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons and for good cause shown, the Court hereby DENIES defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint. Docket No. 15 in 10-4346; Docket No. 2708 in 07-1827.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

MEMORANDUM

This is a diversity and federal question action brought by plaintiff Hiren Patel. Patel alleges that defendants Sharon Smith, Nicole Johnson, and SJ Subs, LLC defrauded him of $300,000. Patel further alleges that the defendants induced him to buy Subway franchises and then tortiously interfered with his re-sale of those franchises. In total, Patel brings seven causes of action. Defendants have moved to dismiss Patel's claims for lack of jurisdiction and, alternatively, for failure to state a claim.

[1] The factual background is taken from the allegations contained in Patel's complaint. All allegations are accepted as true, and all reasonable inferences are drawn in favor of the plaintiff. See Keystone Redev. Partners v. Decker, 631 F.3d 89, 95 (3d Cir. 2011).

Subway sandwich shops are franchised through Development Agents ("Subway Agents"), which act as Subway's regional representatives. This case concerns Hiren [*2] Patel's unsuccessful efforts to become a Subway Agent in southern New Jersey.

In January and February 2008, defendants Sharon Smith and Nicole Johnson told Patel that they would be interested in selling him some of their Subway holdings and their position as Subway Agents. Patel, Smith, and Johnson met in Las Vegas on May 19, 2008 to arrange the sale. Patel examined Smith and Johnson's Subway Agent contract, but Smith told Patel that the content of the contract did not matter because Patel would enter into his own contract with Subway if Subway approved the transfer of the position to Patel. [2] Smith also encouraged Patel to increase his chances of being approved as a Subway Agent for southern New Jersey by purchasing Subway franchise locations in the area. Patel then verbally agreed to purchase from Smith and Johnson: (1) the position of Subway Agent for southern New Jersey for $1.3 million; (2) two franchise locations in southern New Jersey for a total of $400,000; and (3) a 1/3 interest in SJ Subs, LLC, which owned other franchises in southern New Jersey, for $200,000.

On May 28, 2008, Patel, Smith, [*3] and Johnson executed the sales. Patel signed three agreements: first, a purchase agreement for the Subway Agent position that included a $100,000 deposit; second, an amendment to the first agreement making the deposit refundable if Patel were not approved as a Subway Agent for southern New Jersey; and third, a purchase agreement for the interest in SJ Subs. [3] After the meeting, Patel wired $700,000 to Smith and Johnson: a $100,000 deposit toward the Subway Agent position; $400,000 for the two Subway franchise locations; and $200,000 for the interest in SJ Subs. Patel took ownership of the two Subway locations soon after, but did not receive any written evidence of, or cash distribution from, his interest in SJ Subs.

In August 2008, Smith, and now Johnson, encouraged Patel to purchase additional Subway franchises in southern New Jersey. [*4] Patel "and/or his affiliates" subsequently purchased six locations for a total purchase price of $957,000. Compl. at ¶ 30.

In early September 2008, Smith called Patel to tell him that "it would be desirable to enter into a replacement contract" for the Subway Agent position that increased the purchase price by $200,000. Compl. at ¶ 31. The new contract also called for a $300,000 deposit, but Smith told Patel that he would not have to pay the additional deposit because the "extra $200,000 would correspond to the $200,000 already paid by Patel" for the interest in SJ Subs. [4] Compl. at ¶ 33. On September 5, 2008, Patel, Smith, and Johnson executed the replacement contract. Smith assured Patel that the only change in the replacement contract was the increased purchase price and deposit, but in fact there were other differences, including that the $300,000 deposit was now non-refundable.

Later that month, Smith told Patel that Subway had not approved him as a Subway Agent. Patel then attempted to sell the Subway franchises he owned in southern New Jersey, but Smith and Johnson allegedly frustrated his efforts to do so by: (1) imposing conditions that made the transactions difficult to consummate; (2) telling potential buyers that the sale price was too high; and (3) making negative comments to potential buyers about the franchise locations. Patel was only able to sell one location, and he incurred a $25,000 loss on that sale.

On August 18, 2010, Patel filed a civil complaint in this court bringing seven claims: (1) restraint of trade; (2) conversion; (3) fraud; (4) civil conspiracy; (5) civil racketeering; (6) securities fraud; and (7) tortious interference with

[2] Presumably the Subway Agent position is transferable, but only with Subway's approval.

[3] Only two of the three proposed transactions are accounted for: there is no mention in the complaint of an executed agreement concerning the two franchise locations in southern New Jersey which had been discussed at the meeting on May 19, 2008. Given that the locations were later transferred to Patel, this inconsistency appears to be an inadvertent omission.

[4] It is not clear from the complaint whether this agreement either: (a) extinguished Patel's interest in SJ Subs and shifted the $200,000 originally paid for SJ Subs to the Subway Agent deposit; or (b) meant that the additional deposit requirement was waived on account of Patel's previous purchase. Because [*5] one of Patel's central allegations concerns the undelivered interest in SJ Subs, the court assumes the latter.

business relations. Patel argues that the defendants defrauded him of $300,000 and received further financial gains from his purchase and re-sale of Subway locations.

II. Discussion

Patel invokes this court's jurisdiction on two grounds: diversity of citizenship, 28 U.S.C. § 1332(a), and federal question, [*6] 28 U.S.C. §1331. Both bases are discussed below.

A. Diversity of Citizenship

The complaint states that two defendants, Smith and Johnson, have "a principal place of business" in New Jersey, but it says nothing about their permanent home. This pleading is insufficient to establish federal diversity jurisdiction, see Chemical Leaman Tank Lines v. Aetna Cas. and Sur. Co., 177 F.3d 210, 222 n.13 (3d Cir. 1999) (noting that "the plaintiff must state all parties' citizenships such that the existence of complete diversity can be confirmed"), and Patel will be given leave to amend his complaint for the purpose of establishing diversity, see 28 U.S.C. § 1653 ("Defective allegations of jurisdiction may be amended, upon terms, in the trial or appellate courts.").

B. Federal Question

Though Patel has not sufficiently pled diversity, this court may still have jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1331. Three of Patel's claims arise under federal law: (1) a violation of federal antitrust law; (2) a violation of federal racketeering law; and (3) a violation of federal securities fraud law. See Compl. at ¶¶ 60-100. The remainder of his claims arise under state law.

1. Standard of Review for a 12(b)(6) Motion

Rule 8 [*7] requires that a complaint contain "'a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief,' in order to 'give the defendant fair notice of what the . . . claim is and the grounds upon which it rests.'" Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (quoting Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 47, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957)). Facts alleged in the complaint must be taken as true, see Phillips v. Cnty. of Allegheny, 515 F.3d 224, 231 (3d Cir. 2008), but this presumption is "inapplicable to legal conclusions," Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 1949-50, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). To survive a motion to dismiss, the factual allegations in the complaint must "plausibly give rise to an entitlement to relief." Id. at 1950. Furthermore, all reasonable inferences must be drawn in favor of the plaintiff. See Keystone Redev. Partners v. Decker, 631 F.3d 89, 95 (3d Cir. 2011). With this general 12(b)(6) standard in mind, the court turns to the three federal claims.

2. Antitrust Claim[5]

A restraint of trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act has four elements: "(1) concerted action by the defendants; (2) that produced anti-competitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets; (3) that the concerted actions were illegal; and (4) that [the plaintiff] was injured as a proximate result of the concerted action." Gordon v. Lewistown Hosp., 423 F.3d 184, 207 (3d Cir. 2005) (citations omitted). With regard to the second element, the plaintiff has "the burden of defining the relevant market." Queen City Pizza v. Domino's Pizza, 124 F.3d 430, 436 (3d Cir. 1997) (citations omitted). "Where the plaintiff fails to define its proposed relevant market with reference to the rule of reasonable interchangeability and cross-elasticity of demand . . . , the relevant market is legally insufficient and a motion to dismiss may be granted." Id. (collecting [*9] cases). [6]

[5] Plaintiff's complaint states that defendants' actions constitute "a restraint of trade or commerce by Patel [sic] in violation of 1 [sic] U.S.C. § 1 et seq." Compl. at ¶ 61. Plaintiff explains in his memorandum in opposition [*8] to the motion to dismiss that the Sherman Act was mistakenly "referred to in the [c]omplaint as 1 U.S.C. § 1 et seq" instead of "15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq." Pl.'s Resp. at 3 (Docket No. 6). Because "[p]leadings must be construed so as to do justice," these typographical mistakes are disregarded. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(e).

In this case Patel has failed to allege a relevant market at all. It may be, as Patel alleges, that defendants "us[ed] the power of their position" to harm him, but this behavior alone is not an antitrust violation. Pl.'s Resp. at 6 (Docket No. 6). Federal antitrust laws "do not create a federal law of unfair competition or purport to afford remedies for all torts committed by or [*10] against persons engaged in interstate commerce." Brooke Group v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco, 509 U.S. 209, 225, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 (1993) (internal quotation marks omitted). Because Patel has failed to allege an antitrust violation, this claim will be dismissed.

3. Racketeering Claim

A prima facie violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c) (civil racketeering) is established when a plaintiff alleges, "(1) conduct (2) of an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity." Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., 473 U.S. 479, 496, 105 S. Ct. 3275, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346 (1985) (footnote omitted). [7] Plaintiffs must allege all four elements to survive a motion to dismiss. Id.

Racketeering activities include, inter alia, mail fraud and wire fraud. See 18 U.S.C. §§ 1341, 1343. Patel alleges that the defendants engaged in both acts. Compl. at ¶ 84. The federal wire fraud statute prohibits "any scheme or artifice to defraud, or for obtaining money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, [*11] representations, or promises . . . [that involves the use of] wire, television or radio communications." 18 U.S.C. § 1343. The federal mail fraud statute prohibits the same using a mail carrier. 18 U.S.C. § 1341.

A "pattern" of racketeering activity is defined as requiring "at least two acts of racketeering activity" within a ten-year period. 18 U.S.C. § 1961(5). A plaintiff must show that the "'racketeering [activities] are related, and that they amount to or pose a threat of continued criminal activity.'" Tabas v. Tabas, 47 F.3d 1280, 1292 (3d Cir. 1995) (second emphasis added) (quoting H.J. Inc. v. Nw. Bell Tel., 492 U.S. 229, 239, 109 S. Ct. 2893, 106 L. Ed. 2d 195 (1989)). The continuity requirement is satisfied by alleging "'past conduct that by its nature projects into the future with a threat of repetition,'" or, alternatively, a "'closed period of repeated conduct,'" Tabas, 47 F.3d at 1292 (quoting H.J. Inc., 492 U.S. at 241).

Patel does not allege that defendants' conduct poses a threat of future repetition. Furthermore, even drawing all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff, the court finds that the defendants' alleged conduct does not inherently pose such a threat: the alleged acts of racketeering [*12] concerned a single series of transactions—the sale of Subway assets to Patel—and a single victim. As a result, Patel must plead a "closed period of repeated conduct" by alleging "a series of related predicates extending over a substantial period of time." Tabas, 47 F.3d at 1292 (quoting H.J., 492 U.S. at 242).

The Third Circuit has not defined a "substantial period of time," but has held that "[r]elated predicate acts lasting 'a few weeks or months and threatening no future criminal conduct do not satisfy this requirement.'" Hindes v. Castle, 937 F.2d 868, 872 (3d Cir. 1991) (quoting H.J. Inc., 492 U.S. at 242); see also Kehr Packages, Inc. v. Fidelcor Inc.,

[6] The phrases "reasonable interchangeability" and "cross-elasticity of demand" refer to methods of defining the product market where anti-competitive effects are alleged to have occurred. The Third Circuit has summarized these methods as follows:

> The relevant product market is defined as those commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes. Factors to be considered include price, use and qualities. Accordingly, the products in a relevant product market would be characterized by a cross-elasticity of demand, in other words, the rise in the price of a good within a relevant product market would tend to create a greater demand for other like goods in that market.

Tunis Bros. Co. v. Ford Motor Co., 952 F.2d 715, 722 (3d Cir. 1991) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).

[7] A private civil remedy for a violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1962 is expressly granted by 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c) ("Any person injured . . . by reason of a violation of section 1962 of this chapter may sue therefor in any appropriate United States district court . . . .").

926 F.2d 1406, 1418 (3d Cir. 1991) (holding that an "eight-month period of fraudulent activity directed at a single entity does not constitute a pattern, absent a threat of future criminal acts"); Cooper v. Broadspire Services, No. 04-5289, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14752, 2005 WL 1712390, *10 (E.D. Pa. July 20, 2005) ("Plaintiff alleges a series of events over a four month period; this is insufficient to support a closed-ended scheme.").

Patel references two instances of fraudulent conduct that allegedly constitute racketeering activities: (1) on May 28, 2008, [*13] Smith and Johnson sold Patel an interest in SJ Subs and never delivered that interest; and (2) in early September, 2008, Smith told Patel that the revised contract for the sale of the Subway Agent position was identical to the original in every respect except for the increased purchase price and deposit, even though there were other material differences. [8] In short, these two acts occurred over the course of a few months and did not threaten future criminal conduct. Under Hindes, Patel has not adequately pled the continuity requirement of civil racketeering; because Patel has failed to allege this element, the civil racketeering claim will be dismissed without prejudice. See, e.g., Phillips v. Cnty. of Allegheny, 515 F.3d 224, 234 (3d Cir. 2008) (stating that a complaint must have "'enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest' [each] required element" of the claim alleged (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 545)).

4. "Securities Fraud" Claim

Patel alleges that defendants committed "securities fraud" by violating 18 U.S.C. § 1343 [*14] (fraud by wire) when they sold membership interests in SJ Subs "without disclosing to Patel all of the information and risk factors." [9] Compl. at ¶ 91. The federal wire fraud statute is part of the criminal code. The statute contains no express private right of action, and judicial recognition of an implied right of action is generally discouraged. Sosa v. Alvarez-Machain, 542 U.S. 692, 725-27, 124 S. Ct. 2739, 159 L. Ed. 2d 718 (2004) ("[T]his Court has recently and repeatedly said that a decision to create a private right of action is one better left to legislative judgment in the great majority of cases."). District courts in this circuit have not recognized an implied private right of action for violations of 18 U.S.C. § 1343, see Jones v. Lockett, No. 08-16, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 129347, 2009 WL 2232812 (W.D. Pa. July 23, 2009), Kovalev v. City of Philadelphia, No. 07-4875, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 103552, 2008 WL 5377625 (E.D. Pa. Dec. 23, 2008), Fleishman v. Scilley, No. 03-4639, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20066, 2004 WL 2203746 (E.D. Pa. Sept. 30, 2004), and neither have the other circuits that have confronted the issue, see Wisdom v. First Midwest Bank, 167 F.3d 402, 408—09 (8th Cir. 1999), Morganroth & Morganroth v. DeLorean, 123 F.3d 374, 386 (6th Cir. 1997), Napper v. Anderson, Henley, Shields, Bradford & Pritchard, 500 F.2d 634, 636 (5th Cir. 1974). [*15] After a close reading of the statute, the court agrees with the cited authorities and does not recognize a private right of action under § 1343. Accordingly, this court will dismiss Patel's wire fraud claim with prejudice. See Cowell v. Palmer Twp., 263 F.3d 286, 296 (3d Cir. 2001) ("[L]eave to amend need not be granted when amending the complaint would clearly be futile.").

5. State Law Claims

Patel urges this court to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over his four state law claims because they arise from the same nucleus of operative facts. Because Patel's federal claims will be dismissed, this court declines to exercise jurisdiction over Patel's state law claims. See 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c) ("The district courts may decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over a claim . . . [if] the district court has dismissed all claims over which it has original jurisdiction[.]").

III. [*16] Conclusion

[8] Patel does not allege that anything else the defendants did constituted an instance of "false or fraudulent pretenses, representations, or promises." 18 U.S.C. §§ 1341, 1343.

[9] Patel also cites 15 U.S.C. § 771 (describing the Comptroller General's supervision of the Federal Energy Administration) and 70 P.S. § 1-401 (Pennsylvania fraud provision). Compl. at ¶ 92. Even correcting the first citation to 15 U.S.C. § 771(b)(1) (defining "security"), neither statute creates a federal private right of action.

Patel invokes this court's jurisdiction on diversity of citizenship and federal question grounds. For the foregoing reasons, he has failed to properly plead either ground. Pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1653, Patel will be given 15 days to amend his complaint to allege the presence of diversity. An appropriate order accompanies this memorandum.

ORDER

AND NOW, this 11th day of July, 2011, upon consideration of plaintiff's complaint, defendants' motion to dismiss, defendants' memorandum in support of that motion, and plaintiff's memorandum in opposition to that motion, and for the reasons provided in the accompanying memorandum, it is hereby ORDERED that:

1. Defendants' motion to dismiss (Docket No. 4) is GRANTED;

2. Count 3 of the complaint, to the extent it relies upon 18 U.S.C. § 1343, is DISMISSED with prejudice;

3. All other Counts are DISMISSED; and
4. Plaintiff may amend the complaint to allege the presence of diversity jurisdiction not later than 15 days from the date of this order.

An appellate court reviews de novo a district court's denial of summary judgment on the basis of a non-statutory labor exemption from antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law

The selection of the proper mode of antitrust analysis is a question of law, which an appellate court reviews de novo.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Nonstatutory Exemptions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Statutory Exemptions

HN3[] Labor, Nonstatutory Exemptions

Court have recognized both statutory and non-statutory labor exemptions from the antitrust laws. The statutory exemption establishes that labor unions are not combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade and exempts certain union activities from scrutiny under the antitrust laws. However, the statutory exemption does not exempt concerted action or agreements between unions and nonlabor parties. The non-statutory labor exemption has been inferred from federal labor statutes. These set forth a national labor policy favoring free and private collective bargaining, require good-faith bargaining over wages, hours, and working conditions, and delegate related rulemaking and interpretive authority to the National Labor Relations Board. The implicit exemption interprets the labor statutes as limiting an antitrust court's authority to determine, in the area of industrial conflict, what is or is not a reasonable practice and substitutes legislative and administrative labor-related determinations for judicial antitrust-related determinations in that area. Some restraints on competition imposed through the bargaining process must be shielded from antitrust sanctions to give effect to federal labor policy and to allow meaningful collective bargaining to occur.

HN4[] Labor, Nonstatutory Exemptions

The U.S. Supreme Court has never delineated the precise boundaries of the non-statutory labor exemption from the antitrust laws, and what guidance it has given as to its application has come mostly in cases in which agreements between an employer and a labor union were alleged to have injured or eliminated a competitor in the employer's business or product market. The Court has explained that Congress did not intend to bestow on unions complete and unreviewable authority to aid business groups to frustrate antitrust legislation's primary objective.

HN5[] Labor, Nonstatutory Exemptions

The U.S. Supreme Court has rejected the argument that, simply because an agreement relates to wages—a subject at the heart of bargaining—rather than prices, the non-statutory labor exemption from the antitrust laws should apply. Though a union may conclude a wage agreement with the multi-employer bargaining unit without violating the antitrust laws, there are limits to what a union or an employer may offer or extract in the name of wages. A union forfeits its exemption from the antitrust laws when it is clearly shown that it has agreed with one set of employers to impose a certain wage scale on other bargaining units.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Statutory Exemptions

HN6[] Labor, Statutory Exemptions

While the statutory labor exemption from the antitrust laws allows unions to accomplish some restraints by acting unilaterally, the nonstatutory exemption offers no similar protection when a union and a nonlabor party agree to restrain competition in a business market. The exemption does not shield an agreement from the antitrust laws because such a direct restraint on the business market has substantial anticompetitive effects, both actual and potential, that would not follow naturally from the elimination of competition over wages and working conditions.

HN7[] Labor, Nonstatutory Exemptions

The U.S. Supreme Court interprets the labor statutes in accordance with the intent of Congress to prevent judicial use of antitrust law to resolve labor disputes and limits antitrust courts' authority to determine what qualifies as a reasonable practice in industrial conflict. With citation to the leading cases, the Court has explained that the non-statutory labor exemption from antitrust laws is essential to give effect to federal labor policy and allow meaningful collective bargaining because it would be difficult, if not impossible, to require groups of employers and employees to bargain together, but at the same time to forbid them to make among themselves or with each other any of the competition- restricting agreements potentially necessary to make the process work. The question presented is one of scope: whether the exemption applies to an agreement among several employers bargaining together to implement after impasse the terms of their last best good-faith wage offer.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

HN8[] Exemptions & Immunities, Labor

Labor law regulates directly, and considerably, the post-impasse imposition of a proposed employment term concerning a mandatory subject of bargaining. Labor regulations reflect the fact that impasse and an accompanying implementation of proposals constitute an integral part of the bargaining process, and case law demonstrates that implementation of terms after impasse is a familiar practice in multi-employer bargaining. Under these circumstances, to subject the practice to antitrust law is to require antitrust courts to answer a host of important practical questions about how collective bargaining over wages, hours, and working conditions is to proceed—the very result that the implicit labor exemption seeks to avoid.

HN9[] Labor, Nonstatutory Exemptions

The U.S. Supreme Court has addressed and rejected several proposed limitations or boundaries to the non-statutory labor exemption from the antitrust laws that were suggested by the parties and amici. The Court first rejected the argument that the exemption should be limited to existing labor-management agreements. The Court has emphasized that, for the immunity to be effective, it must apply not just to the completed bargain but also to the process by which the bargain is made, including the process before an initial collective-bargaining agreement is approved and the period after the agreement has expired. The Court has rejected the suggestion that the exemption should terminate when collective-bargaining negotiations reach impasse or a reasonable time thereafter and another suggestion that the exemption permit employers to make post-impasse agreements about bargaining tactics but not the terms of any policy directed at employees. The Court also has declined to hold that the arena of professional sports is special and should be viewed differently than other industries with respect to the antitrust exemption.

HN10[] Labor, Nonstatutory Exemptions

The United States Supreme Court's Brown holding is not intended to insulate from antitrust review every joint imposition of terms by employers, for an agreement among employers could be sufficiently distant in time and in circumstances from the collective-bargaining process that a rule permitting antitrust intervention would not significantly interfere with that process.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

HN11[] Exemptions & Immunities, Labor

Employers might undertake any number of activities to strengthen their bargaining posture and force unions to accept their terms, but the law does not necessarily exempt all such activities from antitrust law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Nonstatutory Exemptions

HN12[] Labor, Nonstatutory Exemptions

The case for the applicability of the non-statutory labor exemption from antitrust laws is strongest where the alleged restraint operates primarily in the labor market and has only tangential effects on the business market. Stated another way, and relying on the insights of a perceptive antitrust law commentator, in general, an agreement among employers restraining a product or nonlabor service market enjoys no labor immunity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN13[] Sherman Act, Claims

Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Congress designed the Sherman Act as a consumer welfare prescription. Consumer welfare is maximized when economic resources are allocated to their best use and when consumers are assured competitive price and quality. A trade restraint that has the effect of reducing the importance of consumer preference in setting price and output is not consistent with this fundamental goal of antitrust law. Congress sought to ensure that competitors not cut deals aimed at stifling competition and at permitting higher prices to be charged to consumers than would be expected in a competitive environment, or permitting lower prices to be paid to those from whom competitors bought materials than a fair market rate. The touchstone is consumer good. Agreements of competitors, whether express or implicit, whether by formal agreement or otherwise, in restraint of trade are outlawed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN14[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Sherman Act

The U.S. Supreme Court has repeatedly recognized that by the language of the Sherman Act, Congress intended to out-law only unreasonable trade restraints. Most antitrust claims are analyzed under a "rule of reason," according to which the finder of fact must decide whether the questioned practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition, taking into account a variety of factors. The rule of reason is the presumptive or default standard, and it requires the antitrust plaintiff to demonstrate that a particular contract or combination is in fact unreasonable and anticompetitive.

HN15[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The rule of reason weighs legitimate justifications for a trade restraint against any anticompetitive effects. An appellate court reviews all the facts, including the precise harms alleged to the competitive markets, and the legitimate justifications provided for the challenged practice, and determines whether the anticompetitive aspects of the challenged practice outweigh its procompetitive effects. The rule of reason is responsible for a sensible application of the antitrust laws that has guided courts for almost a century. The true test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition.

HN16[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Some types of trade restraints have such predictable and pernicious anticompetitive effect, and such limited potential for procompetitive benefit, that they are deemed unlawful per se.Such restraints are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use. Per se treatment is proper only once experience with a particular kind of restraint enables the court to predict with confidence that the rule of reason will condemn it. A departure from the rule-of-reason standard must be based upon demonstrable economic effect rather than upon formalistic line drawing. To justify per se condemnation, a challenged practice must have manifestly anticompetitive effects and lack any redeeming virtue. The U.S. Supreme Court has expressed reluctance to adopt per se rules where the economic impact of certain practices is not immediately obvious.

HN18[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

A certain class of trade restraints, while not unambiguously in the per se category, may require no more than cursory examination to establish that their principal or only effect is anticompetitive. Stated another way, the rule of reason analysis can sometimes be applied "in the twinkling of an eye." The U.S. Supreme Court has explained that this truncated rule of reason or quick look antitrust analysis may be appropriately used where an observer with even a rudimentary understanding of economics could conclude that the arrangements in question would have an anticompetitive effect on customers and markets. The object is to see whether the experience of the market has been so clear, or necessarily will be, that a confident conclusion about the principal tendency of a restriction will follow from a quick (or at least quicker) look, in place of a more sedulous one. Full rule of reason treatment is unnecessary where the anticompetitive effects are clear even in the absence of a detailed market analysis. But if an arrangement might plausibly be thought to have a net procompetitive effect, or possibly no effect at all on competition, then a "quick look" form of analysis is inappropriate.

HN19[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

There is generally no categorical line to be drawn between trade restraints that give rise to an intuitively obvious inference of anticompetitive effect and those that call for more detailed treatment. Instead, there should be an enquiry meet for the case that looks to the circumstances, details, and logic of a restraint. In any rule of reason case the amount and type of evidence necessary to prove illegality varies with the amount of power that is apparent, with the nature and plausibility of proffered defenses, and with the judge's evaluation of the degree of harm posed by the restraint.

HN23[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Market Allocation

Market-allocation agreements among competitors at the same market level are per se antitrust violations. Classic horizontal market division agreements are ones in which competitors at the same level agree to divide up the market for a given product. But where the conduct at issue is not a garden-variety horizontal division of a market, the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit has eschewed a per se rule and instead has utilized rule of reason analysis.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN24[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Because empirical analysis is required to determine a challenged trade restraint's net competitive effect, neither a per se nor a quick-look approach is appropriate because those methods of analysis are reserved for practices that facially appear to be ones that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN25[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

To use the quick look approach to determine a challenged restraint's net competitive effect, the court must first determine whether an observer with even a rudimentary understanding of economics could conclude that the arrangements in question would have an anticompetitive effect on customers and markets. Once it is established that the restraint is inherently suspect and the anticompetitive effects are easily ascertained, then the burden shifts to the grocers to produce evidence of procompetitive justification or effects and thus demonstrate the need for more extensive market inquiry.

[*1122] GOULD, Circuit Judge:

We must decide whether an agreement among competitors to share revenues during the term of a labor dispute is exempt from the antitrust laws under the non-statutory labor exemption, and if not, whether the agreement should be condemned as a per se violation of the antitrust laws or on a truncated "quick look," or whether more detailed scrutiny is required. We conclude that the agreement is not immune from the antitrust laws, but that summary condemnation, whether as a per se violation or on a "quick look," is improper. We affirm the district court.

I. Factual and Procedural History

In the fall of 2003, the collective-bargaining agreement between several local chapters of the United Food and [4] Commercial [*1123] Workers ("UFCW") and three large supermarket chains operating in Southern California (Albertson's, Ralphs, and Vons, a subsidiary of Safeway, Inc.) was set to expire. Another grocery chain, Food 4 Less,[1] had a separate contract with UFCW that was set to expire several months later, in February 2004. Before the contracts expired and with the consent of the union, Albertson's, Ralphs, and Vons formed a multi-employer bargaining unit in the summer of 2003 for negotiation of a successor labor contract.

Albertson's, Ralphs, Vons, and Food 4 Less ("Defendants" or "grocers") entered into a Mutual Strike Assistance Agreement[2] ("MSAA") in September 2003, in anticipation of the potential use of "whipsaw" tactics, where unions exert pressure on one employer within a multi-employer bargaining unit through, for example, selective strikes or

[1] Food 4 Less is an unincorporated operating division of Ralphs; it is a fictitious name under which Ralphs does business in Southern California.

[2] There were in fact two agreements with identical terms, one pertaining to UFCW Local No. 770 and the other to UFCW Locals No. 135, 324, 1036, 1167, 1428, and 1442. We will refer to them as one agreement for simplicity.

picketing. Among other things, the MSAA provided that if one party to the agreement was struck by the union, the other grocers (with the exception of Food 4 Less) would lock out all their union employees within [5] 48 hours.

Pertinent to the antitrust claims that we assess, the MSAA also included a revenue-sharing provision ("RSP"), providing that in the event of a strike/lockout, any grocer that earned revenues above its historical share relative to the other chains during the strike period would pay 15% of those excess revenues as reimbursement to the other grocers to restore their pre-strike shares.[3] The MSAA specified that the strike/lockout period would begin at the start of the week in which the strike/lockout commenced and continue for two weeks following the end of the strike/lockout.[4] According to a responsible grocer executive, the 15% figure was designed to estimate the incremental profit the grocers earned on each additional dollar of revenue.

On October 11, 2003, after union contract negotiations broke down, the unions began a strike against Vons stores in the region. Albertson's and Ralphs locked out their union employees the next day pursuant to the terms of the MSAA. The unions at first picketed Albertson's, Ralphs, and Vons stores, but soon elected to pull their pickets from Ralphs stores and focus their picketing efforts on Albertson's and Vons only. About four-and-a-half months after the strike began, at the end of February 2004, the grocers and the unions reached an agreement and the strike/lockout ended. [7] In accord with the revenue-sharing provision of the MSAA, Ralphs paid about $83.5 million to Vons, and it paid about $62.5 million to Albertson's.

[*1124] While the strike was in progress, the State of California brought an action against the grocers alleging that the RSP violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act, which prohibits any contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce.[5] 15 U.S.C. § 1. After limited discovery, the grocers moved for summary judgment on the ground that the RSP was immune from antitrust scrutiny under the non-statutory labor exemption. The district court denied the motion, holding that the exemption was inapplicable. California then moved for summary judgment, contending that the RSP was a per se violation of § 1, or in the alternative that it was unlawful under an abbreviated rule of reason or "quick look" antitrust analysis. The district court denied that motion as well. The grocers renewed their motion for summary judgment on the non-statutory labor exemption, and the district court again denied their motion.

While preserving their right to appeal the district court's rulings, the parties [8] stipulated to the entry of final judgment for the grocers after California agreed not to pursue the theory that the RSP violated § 1 of the Sherman Act under a full rule of reason analysis, and the grocers agreed not to pursue the various affirmative defenses they had pleaded, with the exception of the non-statutory labor exemption. The district court entered judgment in accordance with the parties' stipulations.

California timely appealed the final judgment, arguing that the RSP should be condemned as a per se violation or on a "quick look," and the grocers timely cross-appealed, arguing that the non-statutory labor exemption should apply. We issued an opinion affirming in part, reversing in part, and remanding. California ex rel. Brown v. Safeway, Inc., 615 F.3d 1171 (9th Cir. 2010). A majority of non-recused active judges voted to rehear this case en banc pursuant to Circuit Rule 35-3. California ex rel. Brown v. Safeway, Inc., 633 F.3d 1210 (9th Cir. 2011).

[3] To implement this arrangement, the grocers agreed to submit their weekly sales data for an eight-week period before the strike and for the strike period to a certified public accountant. The CPA would use the data to determine [6] the grocers' historical percentage shares of the market (relative to one another) prior to the strike, and to calculate the aggregate increase or decrease in each grocer's average weekly sales during the strike. The CPA would then multiply the total amount of disparity for each grocer by 15% and those grocers earning revenues above their historical share would pay that amount in compensation to the lower performing grocer to return all grocers to their relative pre-strike positions. Food 4 Less and Ralphs were treated as one unit for purposes of this calculation.

[4] The parties refer to this as the "two-week tail."

[5] California sought a permanent injunction and attorneys' fees.

III. Non-Statutory Labor Exemption

On cross-appeal, the grocers contend that the district court erred in holding that the RSP is not immune from the Sherman Act under the non-statutory labor exemption, and they urge that summary judgment should have been entered in their favor on the basis of the exemption.

A. Background

HN3[] Court have recognized both "statutory" and "non-statutory" labor exemptions to the antitrust laws. Phoenix Elec. Co. v. Nat'l Electric Contractors Ass'n, 81 F.3d 858, 860 (9th Cir. 1996). The statutory exemption, which is not invoked here, establishes that labor unions are not combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade and exempts certain union activities from scrutiny under the antitrust laws. [*1125] Connell Constr. Co. v. Plumbers & Steamfitters Local Union No. 100, 421 U.S. 616, 621-22, 95 S. Ct. 1830, 44 L. Ed. 2d 418 (1975). However, [10] the statutory exemption does "not exempt concerted action or agreements between unions and nonlabor parties." Id. at 622.

The non-statutory labor exemption, invoked by the grocers as a defense in this case, has been inferred from federal labor statutes. These "set forth a national labor policy favoring free and private collective bargaining," "require good-faith bargaining over wages, hours, and working conditions," and "delegate related rulemaking and interpretive authority to the National Labor Relations Board." Brown v. Pro Football, Inc., 518 U.S. 231, 236, 116 S. Ct. 2116, 135 L. Ed. 2d 521 (1996). The implicit exemption "interprets the labor statutes . . . as limiting an antitrust court's authority to determine, in the area of industrial conflict, what is or is not a 'reasonable' practice" and "substitutes legislative and administrative labor-related determinations for judicial antitrust-related determinations" in that area. Id. at 236-37. "[S]ome restraints on competition imposed through the bargaining process must be shielded from antitrust sanctions" to give effect to federal labor policy and to allow meaningful collective bargaining to occur. Id. at 237.

HN4[] "The Supreme Court has never delineated the precise boundaries [11] of the [non-statutory labor] exemption, and what guidance it has given as to its application has come mostly in cases in which agreements between an employer and a labor union were alleged to have injured or eliminated a competitor in the employer's business or product market." Clarett, 369 F.3d at 131. The Court first elaborated on the reach of the non-statutory labor exemption in Allen Bradley Co. v. Local Union No. 3, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, involving a series of agreements between an electrical workers union and several manufacturers and contractors in which the manufacturers and contractors agreed to do business exclusively with other companies that employed union workers. 325 U.S. 797, 65 S. Ct. 1533, 89 L. Ed. 1939 (1945). Those agreements were part of "a far larger program . . . to monopolize all the business in New York City, to bar all other business men from that area, and to charge the public prices above a competitive level" and created a "situation . . . not included within the [relevant] exemptions." Id. at 809. The Court explained that Congress did not intend to bestow on unions "complete and unreviewable authority to aid business groups to frustrate [antitrust legislation's] [12] primary objective." Id. at 810.

In United Mine Workers of America v. Pennington, the Supreme Court similarly declined to apply the exemption to insulate a wage agreement between a union of mine workers and large coal companies. 381 U.S. 657, 85 S. Ct. 1585, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626 (1965). The union and the large companies, to eliminate smaller coal companies and permit the larger companies to control the market, agreed to a series of terms, including increased wages for union workers. Id. at 660. A smaller coal mine operator, unable to pay the increased wages demanded by the union under the terms of their agreement with the larger companies, filed suit claiming that the agreement violated the Sherman Act. Id. at 659. In exploring the boundaries of the exemption, the Court observed that, had the union and employers entered into an agreement in which they collectively set prices for coal, they could not defend that agreement from antitrust attack, because "the restraint on the product market is direct and immediate, is of the type characteristically deemed unreasonable [*1126] under the Sherman Act and the union gets from the promise nothing more concrete than a hope for better wages to come." Id. at 663. HN5[] The Court rejected the argument [13] that, simply because the agreement related to wages—a subject at the heart of bargaining—rather than prices, the exemption should apply. Id. at 664-69. Though "a union may conclude a wage agreement with the multi-employer bargaining unit without violating the antitrust laws," the Court explained, "there are limits to what a union or an employer may offer or extract in the name of wages." Id. at 664-65. "[A] union forfeits its exemption from the antitrust laws when it is clearly shown that it has agreed with one set of employers to impose a certain wage scale on other bargaining units." Id. at 665 (emphasis added). The Court held that the wage agreement was not exempt from the antitrust laws. Id. at 669.

The exemption was applied in a fractured decision in Local Union No. 189, Amalgamated Meat Cutters & Butcher Workmen of North America v. Jewel Tea Co., 381 U.S. 676, 85 S. Ct. 1596, 14 L. Ed. 2d 640 (1965), which the Supreme Court issued together with its opinion in Pennington. The union representing butchers in Chicago reached a collective-bargaining agreement with a multi-employer bargaining unit of food retailers that included a marketing hours restriction, which prohibited the sale of meat before 9:00 a.m. and after [14] 6:00 p.m., and on Sundays. Id. at 679-80. One member of the bargaining unit, Jewel Tea, initially rejected the provision limiting hours, but eventually decided to sign a contract including such a provision under threat of a strike. Id. at 680-81. Jewel Tea brought suit against the union, claiming that the marketing hours restriction in the contract violated the Sherman Act as it was the product of a conspiracy to prevent the retail sale of fresh meat during the evening hours. Id. at 681-82. The plurality opinion explained that "the marketing-hours restriction, like wages, and unlike prices, is so intimately related to wages, hours and working conditions that the unions' successful attempt to obtain that provision . . . falls within the protection of the national labor policy and is therefore exempt from the Sherman Act." Id. at 689-90. Three other justices, concurring in the judgment (but dissenting in Pennington) viewed the exemption more broadly, and would have held that all "collective bargaining activity concerning mandatory subjects of bargaining under the Labor Act is not subject to the antitrust laws." Id. at 710 (Goldberg, J., concurring).

The Court declined to apply the non-statutory [15] exemption to a labor-employer agreement in Connell Construction Co., 421 U.S. at 621. A union representing workers in the plumbing and mechanical trades in Dallas entered into a multi-employer bargaining agreement with a large group of mechanical contractors. Id. at 619. The union asked Connell Construction— a general building contractor that was outside the bargaining agreement and whose workers were not represented by the union—to agree to subcontract mechanical work only to firms that had a contract with the union. Id. Connell initially refused to sign the agreement but acquiesced when the unions picketed one of its construction sites. Id. at 620. The Court recognized the importance of the non-statutory exemption for labor policy, but cautioned thatHN6[] "while the statutory exemption allows unions to accomplish some restraints by acting unilaterally, the nonstatutory exemption offers no similar protection when [*1127] a union and a nonlabor party agree to restrain competition in a business market." Id. at 622-23 (citation omitted). The exemption did not shield the agreement from the antitrust laws because such a "direct restraint on the business market has substantial anticompetitive effects, [16] both actual and potential, that would not follow naturally from the elimination of competition over wages and working conditions." Id. at 625.

Most recently, in Brown v. Pro Football, Inc., the Supreme Court for the first time extended the non-statutory labor exemption to an agreement that was solely among employers. 518 U.S. at 238; see also IB Areeda & Hovenkamp ¶ 257b2, at 141 (3d ed. 2006) (explaining that "historically the courts were reluctant to extend the exemption . . . to an agreement among employers that did not involve any employee group as a participant" but that the Supreme Court did extend the exemption to that situation in Brown); id. at 151-52.

Brown involved an agreement among National Football League teams to restrain the salaries of certain classes of players. Brown, 518 U.S. at 234-35. The collective-bargaining agreement between the players' union and the league expired, and bargaining began for a new contract. Id. at 234. During the negotiations, the NFL adopted a plan that would permit each team to create a developmental squad of rookies who would play in practice games with the team and sometimes in regular games as substitutes for injured players, and provided [17] that the developmental squad players would be paid $1000 per week. Id. The players' union disagreed with these terms and insisted that developmental squad players get benefits and protections similar to those offered to regular players and that they be free to negotiate their own salaries rather than be paid the fixed rate. Id. Two months later, bargaining reached an impasse, and the NFL unilaterally implemented the developmental squad program under its proposed terms. Id. at 235. The developmental squad players brought an antitrust action against the league and the individual teams, claiming that the agreement to pay them $1000 per week violated the Sherman Act. Id.

The Court began by examining the "history and logic" of the exemption, observing thatHN7[] it "interprets the labor statutes in accordance with" the intent of Congress to prevent "judicial use of antitrust law to resolve labor disputes" and limits antitrust courts' authority to determine what qualifies as a reasonable practice in industrial conflict. Id. at 236-37. With citation to the leading cases Connell, Jewel Tea, and Pennington, the Court explained that the exemption is essential to give effect to federal labor policy [18] and allow meaningful collective bargaining because "it would be difficult, if not impossible, to require groups of employers and employees to bargain together, but at the same time to forbid them to make among themselves or with each other any of the competition-restricting agreements potentially necessary to make the process work." Id. at 237.

The Court then identified the question presented as one of scope: whether the exemption applies to an agreement among several employers bargaining together to implement after impasse the terms of their last best good-faith wage offer. Id. at 238. The Court recognized at the outset that HN8[] labor law "regulates directly, and considerably, the kind of behavior here at issue—the postimpasse imposition of a proposed employment term concerning a mandatory subject of bargaining." Id. Labor regulations "reflect the fact that [*1128] impasse and an accompanying implementation of proposals constitute an integral part of the bargaining process," and case law demonstrates that implementation of terms after impasse is a familiar practice in multi-employer bargaining. Id. at 239-40. Under these circumstances, "to subject the practice to antitrust law is to require antitrust [19] courts to answer a host of important practical questions about how collective bargaining over wages, hours, and working conditions is to proceed—the very result that the implicit labor exemption seeks to avoid." Id. at 240-41.

HN9[] The Court addressed and rejected several proposed limitations or boundaries to the exemption that were suggested by the parties and amici. Id. at 243-50. The Court first rejected the argument that the exemption should be limited to existing labor-management agreements. Id. at 243-44. The Court emphasized that, for the immunity to be effective, it must apply not just to the completed bargain but also to the process by which the bargain is made, including the process before an initial collective-bargaining agreement is approved and the period after the agreement has expired. Id.; see also IB Areeda & Hovenkamp ¶ 257b2. The Court rejected the suggestion that the exemption should terminate when collective-bargaining negotiations reach impasse or a reasonable time thereafter and another suggestion that the exemption permit employers to make post-impasse agreements about bargaining tactics but not the terms of any policy directed at employees. Brown, 518 U.S. at 244-48. [20] The Court also declined to hold that the arena of professional sports is "special" and should be viewed differently than other industries with respect to the antitrust exemption. Id. at 248-49.

The Court described its decision to apply the exemption to the football teams' conduct in this way:

> That conduct took place during and immediately after a collective- bargaining negotiation. It grew out of, and was directly related to, the lawful operation of the bargaining process. It involved a matter that the parties were required to negotiate collectively. And it concerned only the parties to the collective-bargaining relationship.

Id. at 250. The Court then clarified that its "holding is HN10[] not intended to insulate from antitrust review every joint imposition of terms by employers, for an agreement among employers could be sufficiently distant in time and in circumstances from the collective-bargaining process that a rule permitting antitrust intervention would not significantly interfere with that process." Id.

B. Positions of the Parties

The grocers contend that Brown immunizes employer agreements related in time and circumstance to the collective-bargaining process, and that the economic weapons [21] parties use to advance their positions in a labor dispute—like an agreement to share revenue to weaken the effects of a whipsaw strike—are "as much a part of the collective bargaining process as are negotiations over terms." The grocers stress that labor policy approves the use of economic weapons, and that economic weapons are "part and parcel" of the collective-bargaining process that should be exercised free from governmental regulation. NLRB v. Ins. Agents' Int'l Union, 361 U.S. 477, 489, 80 S. Ct. 419, 4 L. Ed. 2d 454 (1960).

By contrast, California urges a narrower reading of Brown, one that would permit an exemption for agreements among employers only where "needed to make the [*1129] collective bargaining process work," relying on the Court's words in Brown. California contends that Brown imposes a multi-factor analysis that takes into account whether the alleged anticompetitive conduct is anchored in the collective-bargaining process, concerns only the parties to the collective-bargaining process, and relates to wages, hours, and conditions of employment or other mandatory subjects of collective bargaining. In California's view, the RSP was not necessary to allow meaningful collective bargaining to take place and [22] collective bargaining should not be defined so broadly as to include financial weapons like the RSP. The RSP helped the employers to gain advantage in negotiations, but was not integral to the bargaining process. Further, California argues, the RSP does not relate to the core subjects of collective bargaining (wages, hours, and working conditions) and primarily affects a "product market" not a "labor market." California also notes, as did the district court, that the RSP included an entity that was not a party to the collective-bargaining agreement (Food 4 Less), and that the RSP remained in effect for two weeks after bargaining ended.

C. Exemption Inapplicable

We reject the grocers' broad reading of the exemption and hold that, under the totality of circumstances here, and in light of the history and logic of the exemption as well as the Supreme Court's guidance in Brown, application of the exemption to shield the RSP from antitrust scrutiny is not warranted.

The Court in Brown stated, as a premise of its reasoning, that the practice under examination—the unilateral imposition of terms by employers after impasse—was "unobjectionable as a matter of labor law and policy" and that it was [23] regulated "directly, and considerably," by labor laws. Brown, 518 U.S. at 238. In other words, post-impasse imposition of terms is not only an accepted practice in labor negotiation, but one that has been extensively regulated and "carefully circumscribed." Id. By contrast, the use of revenue sharing as an economic weapon during a labor dispute does not enjoy any such endorsement, much less a history of careful regulation, from the realm of labor law and policy. Neither party points to a body of regulatory or judicial decisions that establishes revenue sharing among employers in a bargaining unit as an accepted economic weapon during a labor dispute.[6] From the

[6] The grocers rely on a decision from the Denver region of the NLRB, suggesting that a similar revenue sharing provision was a permissible practice, see Supp. Excerpts of Record (Vol. 3) 429-32, and on two courts of appeals decisions, Air Line Pilots Ass'n International v. Civil Aeronautics Board, 502 F.2d 453, 456-57, 163 U.S. App. D.C. 451 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (holding that revenue sharing among airline employers did not violate the [24] Railway Labor Act) and Kennedy v. Long Island Rail Road Co., 319 F.2d 366, 368 (2d Cir. 1963) (holding that a joint strike insurance plan among leading railroads did not violate the Railway Labor Act, the Interstate Commerce Act, or the Sherman Act), for the proposition that revenue sharing is an accepted economic weapon. But a decision of a regional NLRB tribunal and the two appellate cases implicating, respectively, a different statutory outset of our analysis, therefore, the RSP is on different footing than the agreement between the NFL club owners in Brown.

Addressing the practice of revenue sharing in the context of multi-employer bargaining, we conclude that the salient concerns [*1130] underlying Brown and central to the history and logic of the exemption are not present here. The agreement to share revenues during and shortly after a labor dispute does not play a significant role in collective bargaining, nor is it necessary to permit meaningful collective bargaining to take place. The RSP does not [25] relate to any core subject matter of bargaining, namely wages, hours, and working conditions, but rather relates principally to the relative revenues of the grocers in the market and the temporary, artificial maintenance of those revenues.

Although it is not an easy question, in our view the grocers cannot succeed in exempting their agreement merely by asserting its value to them and purpose as an economic weapon in the labor dispute over core bargaining subjects. If this were so, a group of employers could claim that fixing prices made them stronger and was useful as an economic weapon in a strike. Quite obviously, that could not be sufficient to gain exemption. It would be like saying "anything goes in a strike context," and we cannot read Brown so broadly. The RSP was designed to strengthen the grocers' position in negotiations with the union, but that fact alone does not entitle the agreement to antitrust immunity. HN11[] Employers might undertake any number of activities to strengthen their bargaining posture and force unions to accept their terms, but the law does not necessarily exempt all such activities.

Our decision not to expand the law of non-statutory labor exemption to shield [26] the grocers from antitrust liability in these circumstances does not place them in an untenable position or "introduce instability and uncertainty into the collective-bargaining process." Brown, 518 U.S. at 242. The inability of grocers to enter into an RSP for fear of possible antitrust liability does not hinder the functioning of the collective-bargaining process. Grocers may continue to negotiate terms with the union without an RSP in place and may bring other potent and well-established forms of economic pressure to bear to enhance their bargaining position, including lockouts and the use of replacement workers.

Further, the RSP concerned the "business" or "product" market, rather than the labor market. HN12[] "The case for the applicability of the non-statutory exemption is strongest where the alleged restraint operates primarily in the labor market and has only tangential effects on the business market." Am. Steel Erectors, Inc. v. Local Union No. 7, Int'l Ass'n of Bridge, Structural, Ornamental & Reinforcing Iron Workers, 536 F.3d 68, 79 (1st Cir. 2008) (citing Clarett, 369 F.3d at 134 n.14). Stated another way, and relying on the insights of a perceptive antitrust law commentator, [27] in general, "an agreement among employers restraining a product or nonlabor service market enjoys no labor immunity."[7] IB Areeda & Hovenkamp [*1131] ¶ 257a, at 131; see also Barnett Pontiac-Datsun, Inc. v. FTC (In re Detroit Auto Dealers Ass'n), 955 F.2d 457, 468 (6th Cir. 1992). The RSP, although intended to strengthen the grocers' position in bargaining for terms related to wages, hours, and working conditions, does not primarily affect the labor market. The fact that the grocers were sharing profits did not have direct consequences for regime and a different type of arrangement, are not sufficiently prevalent authority to demonstrate the acceptability of the practice. To the contrary, these few cases show that revenue sharing in this context is sufficiently rare that it has not been widely examined by agencies and courts as a labor practice.

[7] The grocers argue that the distinction between agreements affecting business or product markets and those affecting labor markets is no longer relevant to the non-statutory labor exemption [28] analysis following Brown. The Court did not expressly address the significance of the distinction in deciding Brown. The D.C. Circuit below had held that the exemption waives antitrust liability for restraints on competition that "operate primarily in a labor market characterized by collective bargaining," but the Supreme Court chose to interpret the exemption more narrowly. Brown, 518 U.S. at 235 (quoting Brown v. Pro Football, Inc., 50 F.3d 1041, 1056, 311 U.S. App. D.C. 89 (D.C. Cir. 1995)). At no point did it explicitly reject the product market/ labor market distinction or question its earlier cases that relied in part on the distinction. Id. at 236, 237 (citing Pennington, 381 U.S. at 657). Brown suggests that the distinction may not be central to the analysis in all cases, but we conclude that it remains a relevant consideration in determining whether a restraint "plays a significant role in a collective-bargaining process that itself constitutes an important part of the Nation's industrial relations system." Brown, 518 U.S. at 240. Other circuits are in accord. E.g., Am. Steel Erectors, 536 F.3d at 79; Clarett, 369 F.3d at 134 n.14.

the labor market. This aspect of the RSP lends further support to the view that application of the antitrust laws would not interfere with the bargaining process. While we stop short of endorsing the concept that as a strict rule the non-statutory labor exemption can only arise in a case involving restraint of terms directly relating to labor, that the restraint here is primarily a product market restraint does not encourage application of the non-statutory labor exemption.

Finally, the inclusion of a non-member of the collective-bargaining [29] unit, Food 4 Less, in the agreement to share revenue during the terms of the strike counsels against application of the exemption. The fact that the unilateral post-impasse imposition of terms in Brown "concerned only the parties to the collective-bargaining relationship" appears to have been a significant factor supporting the application of the exemption in that case. Brown, 518 U.S. at 250. This is logical in light of the purposes of the exemption: the inclusion of non-bargaining employers in an agreement suggests that the conduct is not anchored in the collective-bargaining process and should instead be subject to scrutiny by antitrust laws designed to prevent unreasonable restraints. Here, the grocers offer us the explanation that, as an unincorporated division of Ralphs that was doing business under another name, Food 4 Less needed to be bound by the RSP to make its terms effective. While it may be true that the inclusion of Food 4 Less helped to effectuate the purposes of the agreement, Food 4 Less had a separate contract with the unions that was set to expire at a later date; negotiations for a new agreement were months away. Food 4 Less was not part of the collective bargaining [30] unit, and its inclusion in the RSP, even if helpful to the grocers, suggests that the revenue sharing was not integral to the collective-bargaining process.

The restraint here differs from that in Brown along virtually every dimension that the Court there found significant in addressing the applicability of the exemption: The revenue-sharing provision has not been approved or regulated by labor law, it was not directly related to the collective-bargaining process, it did not concern a matter that the parties were required to negotiate collectively, and it involved a party that was not a member of the collective-bargaining relationship. The RSP is sufficiently "distant . . . in circumstances from the collective-bargaining process that a rule permitting antitrust intervention would not significantly interfere with that process." Brown, 518 U.S. at 250. We decline to read the Supreme Court's rejection of various limiting principles for the exemption in Brown as an invitation to apply the exemption broadly to any agreement loosely associated in time with bargaining, as the grocers advocate. To protect the employer agreement from antitrust scrutiny in this case would represent a major extension [31] of the non-statutory labor exemption [*1132] as described in Brown and, in our view, would run contrary to the history and logic of the exemption. An agreement among employers (some of which are members of a multi-employer bargaining unit and one of which is not) to re-allocate their revenues on a temporary basis to maintain market share while their workers are striking or locked out is not within the core concerns of labor law. Although the arguments advanced by the grocers may be relevant to their position that there was no unreasonable restraint of trade, they are not sufficient to require application of a non-statutory labor exemption.[8] The district court correctly concluded that the grocers' revenue-sharing agreement is not immune from antitrust scrutiny, and we affirm that conclusion.

We proceed [32] to consider the merits of California's claim under the Sherman Act.[9]

[8] We are reluctant to expand the non-statutory exemption beyond the scope of Brown without further guidance from the Supreme Court. See Brown, 518 U.S. at 250 (noting that its holding was "not intended to insulate from antitrust review every joint imposition of terms by employers," but that it "need not decide in this case whether, or where, within these extreme outer boundaries to draw that line").

[9] Chief Judge Kozinski's partial dissent contends that, in light of the stipulations of the parties, our ruling on the non-statutory labor exemption is "very likely" an advisory opinion and beyond the scope of our jurisdiction. That position does not present a correct view of our Article III jurisdiction, and would seem to foreclose ruling on many issues squarely presented. The issue of whether the RSP is exempt from antitrust scrutiny —which was expressly ruled on by the district court and preserved for appeal by the parties—is a threshold question that logically precedes our examination of the antitrust issues. If in addressing the exemption we determined that the RSP should be insulated from antitrust review, there would be no need to consider whether the RSP could be condemned with a per se rule or under "quick look" analysis. We properly may determine whether the antitrust regime applies at all before we rule on the merits of the antitrust claim.

IV. Antitrust Liability

A. Methods of Antitrust Analysis

HN13[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, [33] in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States." 15 U.S.C. § 1. "Congress designed the Sherman Act as a consumer welfare prescription." Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., 442 U.S. 330, 343, 99 S. Ct. 2326, 60 L. Ed. 2d 931 (1979) (internal quotation marks omitted). "Consumer welfare is maximized when economic resources are allocated to their best use" and when "consumers are assured competitive price and quality." Rebel Oil Co. v. Atl. Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1433 (9th Cir. 1995). "A restraint that has the effect of reducing the importance of consumer preference in setting price and output is not consistent with this fundamental goal of antitrust law." Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n v. Bd. of Regents of Univ. of Okla., 468 U.S. 85, 107, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1984). [34] Congress sought to ensure that competitors not cut deals aimed at stifling competition and at permitting higher prices to be charged to consumers than would be expected in a competitive environment, or permitting lower prices to be paid to those from whom competitors bought materials than a fair market rate. The touchstone is consumer good. Agreements of competitors, whether express or implicit, whether by formal agreement or otherwise, in restraint of trade are outlawed.

HN14[] The Supreme Court has repeatedly recognized that by the language [*1133] of the Sherman Act, "'Congress intended to outlaw only unreasonable restraints.'" Texaco Inc. v. Dagher, 547 U.S. 1, 5, 126 S. Ct. 1276, 164 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2006) (quoting State Oil Co. v. Khan, 522 U.S. 3, 10, 118 S. Ct. 275, 139 L. Ed. 2d 199 (1997)). "[M]ost antitrust claims are analyzed under a 'rule of reason,' according to which the finder of fact must decide whether the questioned practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition, taking into account a variety of factors . . . ." State Oil, 522 U.S. at 10. The rule of reason is the presumptive or default standard, and it requires the antitrust plaintiff to "demonstrate that a particular contract or combination is in fact unreasonable and anticompetitive." Dagher, 547 U.S. at 5.[10]

HN16[] "Some [36] types of restraints, however, have such predictable and pernicious anticompetitive effect, and such limited potential for procompetitive benefit, that they are deemed unlawful per se." State Oil, 522 U.S. at 10. Such restraints "'are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use.'" Nw. [*1134] HN18[] "[A] certain class of restraints, while not unambiguously in the per se category, may require no more than cursory examination to establish that their principal or only effect is anticompetitive.' XI Areeda & Hovenkamp ¶ 1911a, at 295-96. Stated another way, the rule of reason analysis can sometimes be applied '"in the twinkling of an eye." NCAA, 468 U.S. at 109 n.39 (quoting Phillip Areeda, The "Rule of Reason' in Antitrust Analysis: General Issues 37-38 (Federal Judicial Center, June 1981)). The Supreme Court explained in California Dental Ass'n v. FTC that this truncated rule of reason or "quick look" antitrust analysis may be appropriately used where "an observer [38] with even a rudimentary understanding of economics could conclude that the arrangements in question would have an anticompetitive effect on customers and markets.' 526 U.S. 756, 770, 119 S. Ct. 1604, 143 L. Ed. 2d 935 (1999). "The object is to see whether the experience of the market has been so clear, or necessarily will be, that a confident conclusion about the principal tendency of a restriction will follow from a quick (or at least quicker) look, in place of a more sedulous one.' Id. at 781. Full rule of reason treatment is unnecessary where the anticompetitive effects are clear even in the absence of a detailed market analysis. See NCAA, 468 U.S. at 110. But if an arrangement "might plausibly be thought to have a net procompetitive effect, or possibly no effect at all on competition,' then a "quick look' form of analysis is inappropriate. Cal. Dental Ass'n, 526 U.S. at 771.

HN19[] "[T]here is generally no categorical line to be drawn between restraints that give rise to an intuitively obvious inference of anticompetitive effect and those that call for more detailed treatment." Id. at 780-81. Instead, to borrow Justice Souter's phrase, there should be "an enquiry meet for the case" that looks to "the circumstances, details, [39] and logic of a restraint." Id. at 781. "[I]n any rule of reason case the amount and type of evidence necessary to prove illegality varies with the amount of power that is apparent, with the nature and plausibility of proffered defenses, and with the judge's evaluation of the degree of harm posed by the restraint." XI Areeda & Hovenkamp ¶ 1911a, at 296.

B. Per Se Treatment

California characterizes the RSP as (1) a profit-pooling agreement and (2) a market-allocation agreement, and urges that prior judicial experience with these categories of restraints requires per se condemnation of the RSP. We disagree. Given its distinguishing attributes, the RSP cannot be placed in either category of per se illegal restraints.

1. Profit-Pooling

California first argues that the RSP is "nearly identical" to the profit-pooling arrangement invalidated in Citizen Publishing Co. v. United States, 394 U.S. 131, 89 S. Ct. 927, 22 L. Ed. 2d 148 (1969). In that case, the two daily newspapers operating in Tucson, Arizona, entered into an agreement designed to "end any business or commercial competition" between them. Id. at 134. The newspapers agreed to consolidate their production, distribution, advertising, and most management operations in [40] a jointly-held entity, to fix prices, and to refrain from engaging in any competing businesses. Id. The agreement also provided that all profits realized by the papers would be pooled and distributed pursuant to an agreed ratio. Id. The agreement was to continue in force for twenty-five years and was later extended to fifty years. Id. at 133. The Court held that the [*1135] § 1 violations of the agreement were "plain beyond peradventure," and that "[p]ooling of profits pursuant to an inflexible ratio at least reduces incentives to compete for circulation and advertising revenues and runs afoul of the Sherman Act." Id. at 135.

Contrary to California's assertions, the RSP differs from the profit-pooling arrangement condemned in Citizen Publishing in significant ways, precluding per se treatment of the RSP. First, the agreement among the grocers stated that sharing of revenues would occur during the period of the labor dispute and for two weeks thereafter. The RSP, by its design, was of both limited and unknown duration. The revenue sharing would terminate two weeks after the resolution of any labor dispute, and this "triggering" event for the expiration of the agreement could occur at any time. [41] While the agreement in Citizen Publishing was scheduled to last for fifty years and could be terminated only by mutual consent of the parties, id. at 133, the RSP could end at any time—as soon as the labor dispute was resolved.[12] Indeed, the parties to the agreement could not know in advance how long the labor dispute would continue. The RSP lasted about five months.

This temporary and short-term feature of the RSP distinguishes the grocers' agreement from the profit-pooling condemned in Citizen Publishing in a way that is relevant to the key question of whether the RSP is a per se unreasonable restraint on trade, with a "predictable and pernicious anticompetitive effect." State Oil, 522 U.S. at 10; see also Freeman v. San Diego Ass'n of Realtors, 322 F.3d 1133, 1150-51 (9th Cir. 2003) (observing that per se rules are inappropriate in novel contexts and rejecting an argument against application of a per se rule because alleged novelty in the restraint was not relevant [42] to issue of competitiveness). Because the RSP was of indefinite but temporary duration, the grocers retained incentives to compete during the labor dispute period. See XI Areeda & Hovenkamp ¶ 1906a, at 236, 238-39 (observing that, in most cases, courts assess "likely" effects to determine if a restraint is "naked" and subject to per se condemnation). Unlike the Citizen Publishing arrangement, which insulated the newspapers from competition by pooling profits for decades and left no reason to compete for customers, the unknown duration of the RSP, the strike-induced nature of the agreement, and the fact that it could end at any moment suggest that the grocers had a continued interest in maintaining and growing their customer bases. Temporary revenue sharing likely did not blunt the grocers' incentives to advertise, discount, and provide quality service. Grocers retained incentives to prevent the loss of customers during the strike, who might not return after switching to a competitor, and they also had incentive to win new customers that might return as regular customers after the strike ended.[13] Because the RSP was of a necessarily limited duration, the grocers' interest in preserving [43] customer loyalty and maintaining or expanding market share likely persisted during the revenue-sharing period.[14]

[*1136] Second, the RSP differs from the profit-pooling arrangement condemned in Citizen Publishing in that it did not include all of the grocers operating in the region. In Citizen Publishing, the only two daily newspapers in Tucson agreed to pool profits pursuant to an inflexible ratio. 394 U.S. at 134-35. As California concedes, the combined sales of the grocers that were party to the RSP accounted for between 54.4% and 65.1% of the grocery market in the Los Angeles- Long [44] Beach metropolitan area, and between 67.1% and 76.0% of the grocery market in the San Diego metropolitan area. While their collective market share was significant, the grocers still faced competition from other retailers such as Stater Brothers, Trader Joe's, Costco, and Whole Foods. Given the presence of these competitors in the market, there is a significant probability that the grocers retained incentives to continue—or even to increase—discounting and advertising of grocery products to prevent the loss of customers and profits during the strike period, to gain new customers if possible, and to maximize profitability and market share after the strike.

Because the RSP was an agreement among some, but not all, of the competitors in the relevant market, and because by its terms the RSP had a limited and indefinite duration, it evades any "easy label" of "profit-pooling" and [12] While labor disputes are capable of dragging on for months or years, it does not appear that anyone realistically expected the RSP to continue for anywhere near the extended period of time at issue in Citizen Publishing.

[13] The Supreme Court has recognized that "[t]he retail food industry is very competitive and repetitive patronage is highly important." NLRB v. Brown, 380 U.S. 278, 284, 85 S. Ct. 980, 13 L. Ed. 2d 839 (1965).

[14] An agreement of limited and/or indefinite duration could have obvious anticompetitive effects and violate Section 1, for example, an agreement of competitors controlling most of the market to fix prices for a month to the detriment of consumers. But here, the limited and unknown length of the RSP separates it from a category of restraints with which we are sufficiently experienced to condemn without inquiry into actual competitive harms.

cannot sensibly be grouped together with or analogized to the very different arrangement condemned in Citizen Publishing.[15] See Broad. Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broad. Sys., Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 8-10, 99 S. Ct. 1551, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1979); United States v. Topco Assocs., 405 U.S. 596, 607-08, 92 S. Ct. 1126, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515 (1972) (HN20[] "It is only after considerable experience with certain [45] business relationships that courts classify them as per se violations of the Sherman Act."). A restraint of this nature has not undergone the kind of careful judicial scrutiny that would support the application of a per se rule. See Topco Assocs., Inc., 405 U.S. at 607-08; Metro Indus., Inc. v. Sammi Corp., 82 F.3d 839, 844 (9th Cir. 1996). Quite apart from the lack of judicial experience with a restraint of this nature, we conclude that the application [*1137] of a per se rule is not warranted in this case because the practice of temporary revenue sharing during the duration of a labor dispute among some competitors within a market does not "facially appear[ ] to be one that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output." Broad. Music, 441 U.S. at 19-20. In light of its particular features and context, the RSP is "'not a naked restraint of trade with no purpose except stifling of competition.'" Id. at 20 (brackets omitted) (quoting White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, 263, 83 S. Ct. 696, 9 L. Ed. 2d 738 (1963)).

2. Market Allocation

We also reject California's attempt to characterize the RSP as a market-allocation agreement. California correctly notes that HN23[] market-allocation agreements among competitors at the same market level are per se antitrust violations. See United States v. Brown, 936 F.2d 1042, 1045 (9th Cir. 1991). "Classic" horizontal market division agreements are ones in which "competitors at the same level agree to divide up the market for a given product." Metro Indus., 82 F.3d at 844. But where, as here, "the conduct at issue is not a garden-variety horizontal division of a market, we have eschewed a per se rule and instead have utilized rule of reason analysis." Id. California argues that the RSP "mirrors" market-allocation agreements because it divides up the Southern California market according to the participants' relative market shares. But California concedes that the RSP did not "prevent any Defendant from actually making sales" to consumers. California does not assert that the RSP restricted customers from patronizing certain grocers. Moreover, the agreement did not prevent the grocers from selling any particular [48] products, or limit the grocers to a particular set of customers or geographic regions. The RSP cannot be characterized as a per se illegal market-allocation agreement.

C. "Quick Look"

We next address whether summary condemnation of the RSP on a truncated rule of reason or "quick look" is or is not correct. We conclude that a "quick look" conclusion of antitrust illegality is here inappropriate. This is so for many of the same reasons that per se treatment is not correct. The unique features of the arrangement among the grocers—its limited duration and the existence of other significant external competitors in the market—and the uncertain effect these features had on the grocers' competitive behavior and incentives during the revenue-sharing period render any anticompetitive effects of the RSP not obvious.

[15] California offers a series of cases in addition to Citizen Publishing in an effort to demonstrate that HN21[] profit-pooling arrangements have long been condemned as per se [46] illegal. See, e.g., United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 334 U.S. 131, 149, 68 S. Ct. 915, 92 L. Ed. 1260 (1948) (holding that an agreement among five producers of motion pictures and their affiliates to share profits according to prearranged percentages was anticompetitive); N. Sec. Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, 24 S. Ct. 436, 48 L. Ed. 679 (1904) (invalidating an agreement among stockholders in competing interstate railway companies to form one corporation with a controlling interest in the stock of each railway); Chi., M. & St. P. Ry. Co. v. Wabash, St. L. & P. Ry. Co., 61 F. 993 (8th Cir. 1894) (invalidating an agreement among seven competing railroad companies to, among other things, pool gross earnings for a period of twenty-five years); Anderson v. Jett, 89 Ky. 375, 12 S.W. 670, 11 Ky. L. Rptr. 570 (Ky. 1889) (voiding a multi-year arrangement between rival steamboat owners to end their rivalry by sharing profits according to fixed percentages). None of these cases, alone or in combination, establishes sufficient judicial experience with a revenue sharing agreement of limited duration, among some competitors in a market, so as to permit per se treatment of the RSP. HN22[] The fundamental economics of the firms and the public interest do not require per se prohibitory [47] treatment of the challenged practice during a labor dispute.

To reach a confident conclusion on the anticompetitive effects of the RSP, further development of the record is required. One might want to permit expert testimony and examine facts about the degree to which the challenged revenue-sharing agreement may have suppressed incentives of the grocers to discount and otherwise compete for customers. One might want to have an understanding of [49] the market impact of other competitors, not in the defendant group, whose pricing and terms of sale would have to be taken into account in a competitive market. It might be helpful to have an understanding whether other competitors were waiting in the wings to exploit any anticompetitive market by their entry, whether these potential new competitors were overseas, or in other regions of the United States, or were skilled in the developing concept of internet marketing of groceries or other novel techniques that might impose market [*1138] pressures. Any of these inquiries might inform an evaluation whether, during the relevant period of its operation, the revenue-sharing provision had any anticompetitive effect. On a "quick look," none of this can be ascertained with reliability.[16]

The features of the RSP described in connection with the per se mode of analysis not only separate it from traditional per se illegal categories of restraints and prevent characterization as a "naked" restraint on price or output, but they also raise sufficient [50] doubt about the anticompetitive nature of the agreement such that detailed scrutiny is required to understand its effects. HN24[] Because "empirical analysis is required to determine [the] challenged restraint's net competitive effect, neither a per se nor a quick-look approach is appropriate because those methods of analysis are reserved for practices that facially appear to be ones that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output." Salvino, Inc., 542 F.3d at 340 n.10. (Sotomayor, J., concurring) (internal quotation marks and brackets omitted).

HN25[] To use the "quick look" approach, we must first determine whether "an observer with even a rudimentary understanding of economics could conclude that the arrangements in question would have an anticompetitive effect on customers and markets." Cal. Dental Ass'n, 526 U.S. at 770. Once it is established that the restraint is inherently suspect and the anticompetitive effects are easily ascertained, id., then the burden shifts to the grocers to produce evidence of procompetitive justification or effects and thus demonstrate the need for more extensive market inquiry, id. at 775; see also XI Areeda & Hovenkamp ¶ 1914d, [51] at 354-55. The features of the RSP— its limited, indefinite duration and the presence of other competitive firms in the market—strongly suggest that the agreement "might plausibly be thought to have a net procompetitive effect, or possibly no effect at all on competition."[17] Cal. Dental Ass'n, 526 U.S. at 771.

HN26[] "Where, as here, the circumstances of the restriction are somewhat complex, assumption alone will not do." Id. at 775 n.12. The particular features and context of the RSP are more than mere idiosyncracies: they warrant further development of evidence and more rigorous review. See XI Areeda & Hovenkamp ¶ 1911a, at 295. Because we cannot reach a confident conclusion that the principal tendency of the RSP is to restrict competition, truncated review is inappropriate.

Can it be successfully argued, to the contrary, that because the RSP reduces [52] the monetary risks of lost sales to participating grocers during a whipsaw strike, it is irretrievably anticompetitive in effect? We conclude that such an argument fails. If a competitor finds itself the target of a strike, which would cause it to lose sales to other competitors, then revenue sharing provides some cushion from the damaging monetary impact of the strike. But it is by no means "obvious" that the grocers that entered into the RSP would be motivated to reduce their competition on price. [*1139] Although the immediate monetary risk of losing sales to competitors during a labor strike is reduced by revenue sharing, the remaining risks are still such that a rational competitor would be expected to continue to compete vigorously. While it is true that the arrangement provides a cushion that may arguably affect [16] Also, if experts gave conflicting views on these subjects, and they were material to resolution, then the decision of the trier of fact might control the outcome.

[17] The grocers argue that the RSP has procompetitive benefits in the form of lower prices for consumers as a result of the grocers' ability to negotiate a more favorable contract on labor costs. Because California has not met its burden to show that the RSP is obviously anticompetitive, we need not address the grocers' procompetitive justifications.

incentives to compete, that alone, absent evidence of actual anticompetitive impact on pricing, is not sufficient for us to resolve the RSP issue on a "per se" or "quick look" or any other abbreviated basis.

In light of the novel circumstances and uncertain economic effects of the RSP, we conclude that the district court correctly determined that it should follow the presumptive [53] rule of reason. See Cal. Dental Ass'n, 526 U.S. at 781. Before the challenged revenue-sharing agreement technique is outlawed for use during a labor dispute, there should be open discovery and fair consideration of all factors relevant under the traditional rule of reason test, so as to determine if there are significant anticompetitive impacts and if so whether they outweigh any legitimate justifications. Application of the traditional rule of reason is not a simple matter, but it does permit the type of fundamental analysis appropriate for antitrust law evaluation, and it has stood the test of time.

V. Conclusion

We hold that the agreement between the grocers to share revenues for the duration of the strike period is not exempt from scrutiny under the Sherman Act, and that more than a "quick look" is required to ascertain its impact on competition in the Southern California grocery market. Given the limited judicial experience with revenue sharing for several months pending a labor dispute, we cannot say that the restraint's anticompetitive effects are "obvious" under a per se or quick-look approach. Although we conclude that summary condemnation is improper, we express no opinion [54] on the legality of the arrangement under the rule of reason.[18] AFFIRMED.

Concur

FISHER, Circuit Judge, specially concurring:

I join Parts I-IV.A and V of the majority opinion, and concur in the outcome of Parts IV.B-C. I have strong doubts that the grocers' profit sharing agreement left them with an undiminished incentive to compete. Judge Reinhardt's dissent raises serious economic concerns about the effects of even a limited profit sharing agreement that the majority has not entirely refuted. Nonetheless, I am not confident that under the novel circumstances here an "enquiry meet for the case" can be something less than the presumptive standard — the rule of reason. Cal. Dental Ass'n v. FTC, 526 U.S. 756, 770, 119 S. Ct. 1604, 143 L. Ed. 2d 935 (1999); see Texaco Inc. v. Dagher, 547 U.S. 1, 5, 126 S. Ct. 1276, 164 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2006). Because I do not find that a "great likelihood of anticompetitive [55] effects can easily be ascertained" on a quick look at the record before us, Cal. Dental, 526 U.S. at 770 (emphasis added), and because we lack the "considerable experience" necessary for per se analysis to say the economic impact of the grocers' agreement is "immediately obvious," Leegin Creative Leather Prods., Inc. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 886-87, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 [*1140] *L. Dissent

Chief Judge KOZINSKI, with whom Judges TALLMAN and RAWLINSON join, dissenting in part:

[18] The ultimate competitive question may not be determined in this case because the State of California, to gain a final judgment that could be appealed at this time, has stipulated to foregoing its challenge to the RSP under the traditional rule of reason, contending instead that the RSP is invalid per se or on a "quick look."

By going out of its way to rule on the non-statutory labor exemption, the majority decides an important legal question that will have absolutely no effect on anyone involved in this case. We hold that there's no categorical antitrust violation under the quick look doctrine; nor can such a violation be established on remand, because California stipulated to dismissal if it didn't prevail under quick look. Since no antitrust violation can ever be established in this case, we have no occasion to decide whether any exemption from antitrust liability would apply. The majority's groundbreaking [56] ruling on the labor exemption is thus very likely an advisory opinion and beyond the scope of our Article III jurisdiction. See Thomas v. Anchorage Equal Rights Comm'n, 220 F.3d 1134, 1138 (9th Cir. 2000) (en banc). Such dicta are particularly unwise when they are effectively insulated from Supreme Court review, as the grocers probably will have neither incentive nor standing to petition for certiorari.

Worse, I seriously doubt the majority decides the labor exemption issue correctly because it fails to grapple with the complex dynamics of this case. Had it done so, it would have realized that each and every factor the Supreme Court found relevant in Brown v. Pro Football, Inc., 518 U.S. 231, 116 S. Ct. 2116, 135 L. Ed. 2d 521 (1996), supports finding the revenue-sharing provision (RSP) protected by the labor exemption. Contra maj. op. at 9302.

First, the RSP was inextricably intertwined with the collective bargaining process. See Brown, 518 U.S. at 250. Contra maj. op. at 9301-02. The grocers' agreement was a direct response to the union's anticipated use of whipsaw tactics. As courts have long recognized, whipsaw tactics are particularly devastating for employers, because > the union strikes against one member of a multiemployer [57] bargaining unit, but allows the other employers to continue operating in order to maximize the competitive pressure brought to bear upon the struck member . . . ; the idea is thereby to force each employer individually to capitulate through a series of such strikes, thus defeating their attempt to stand together.

Int'l Bhd. of Boilermakers v. NLRB, 858 F.2d 756, 760, 273 U.S. App. D.C. 161 (D.C. Cir. 1988).

The grocers here were legitimately concerned that the union would selectively strike and picket only one chain, diverting their customers to the others. The unions would thereby upset the prevailing competitive balance, crippling the target and ruining any chance of bargaining as a group. The grocers sought to blunt the disproportionate losses borne by the targeted chain by redistributing some of the windfall profits reaped by the others as a result of the union's tactics. The agreement was limited to the duration of the strike plus two weeks and became operative only if, and only to the extent, the union succeeded in redirecting consumers from the targeted store to other stores in the bargaining group. The RSP was thus narrowly tailored to counter the union's divide-and-conquer strategy. Its effect, moreover, [58] was entirely pro-competitive: It helped keep all competitors in the market rather than letting one be wiped out by the strike.

As it turns out, the grocers were right to be concerned. Less than a week after [*1141] their contracts expired, the unions struck, and Vons was the exclusive target. Per the grocers' Mutual Strike Assurance Agreement, Albertson's and Ralphs locked out their workers. The unions then picketed all three stores, but soon pulled pickets from Ralphs to zero in on the other chains. The unions' strategy was highly effective: Vons and Albertson's lost market share to Ralphs, as customers switched stores to avoid the picket lines. Some of these losses were offset by payments from Ralphs under the RSP, but many—such as the loss of long-time customers—were permanent. The RSP was thus a limited, defensive tool that was directly related to the collective bargaining process.

The second Brown factor—that the practice is "unobjectionable as a matter of labor law and policy"—also points in favor of exemption. Brown, 518 U.S. at 238. Contra maj. op. at 9297-98. Although the NLRB has not had occasion to rule on the specific RSP at issue here, both the Supreme Court and the NLRB have generally [59] sanctioned the use of economic weapons to combat whipsaw tactics. See, e.g., NLRB v. Brown (Brown Food), 380 U.S. 278, 85 S. Ct. 980, 13 L. Ed. 2d 839 (1965). The Supreme Court has recognized a particularly strong interest in "preserving the integrity of the multiemployer bargaining unit" against targeted attacks. Brown, 518 U.S. at 245 (quoting Brown Food, 380 U.S. at 289) (internal quotation mark omitted). Accordingly, the Court has approved many practices employers use to maintain a common front: They may, for example, agree to lock out all workers if any one of them is struck, see NLRB v. Truck Drivers Local Union No. 449, 353 U.S. 87, 89, 97, 77 S. Ct. 643, 1 L.

Ed. 2d 676 (1957), or hire temporary replacement workers, see Brown Food, 380 U.S. at 279-80. Revenue-sharing provisions that are designed to maintain cohesiveness in the teeth of union efforts to disrupt the bargaining group fit squarely within this category of accepted labor practices.

On the handful of occasions that courts have evaluated the legitimacy of revenue-sharing provisions, they have been upheld. In Kennedy v. Long Island R.R., 319 F.2d 366 (2d Cir. 1963), the Second Circuit upheld the use of a strike insurance plan. Like the grocers here, the railroads were concerned that [60] the union would engage in whipsaw tactics and wanted to spread the losses among employers. Id. at 368-69. The railroads contributed to an insurance fund that would pay out in the event of a strike. Id. As the proceeds were distributed, the fund was supplemented by further deposits from non-struck railroads. Id. The union sued, claiming the strike insurance fund violated both antitrust law and the railroad's duty to bargain in good faith. Id. at 368. The Second Circuit rejected both claims, reasoning that "the strike insurance plan, far from constituting a violation of the railroad's duty to bargain in good faith, was an instrument of self-help properly employed in the process of collective bargaining." Id. at 371.

The D.C. Circuit reached a similar conclusion in Air Line Pilots Ass'n Int'l v. Civil Aeronautics Bd., 502 F.2d 453, 163 U.S. App. D.C. 451 (D.C. Cir. 1974). There, six airlines entered into a "Mutual Aid Pact" to "soften the impact of strikes against individual companies." Id. at 455. The Mutual Aid Pact contained a provision, almost identical to the RSP, under which a "strikebound company received payments from other Pact members equal to their increase in revenues resulting from the strike." Id. [61] As in Kennedy, the union claimed the revenue-sharing provision violated antitrust law and national labor policy. Id. The D.C. Circuit likewise rejected these claims, explaining that "[t]he national labor policy [*1142] rests on the principle that parties should be free to marshall [sic] the economic resources at their disposal in the resolution of a labor dispute." Id. at 456. Although both of these cases were decided under the Railway Labor Act, their analysis was based on national labor policy and relied heavily on National Labor Relations Act cases. See, e.g., id. at 456 n.3 (relying on NLRB v. Ins. Agents' Int'l Union, 361 U.S. 477, 490, 80 S. Ct. 419, 4 L. Ed. 2d 454 (1960)); Kennedy, 319 F.2d at 371 n.4 (relying on Truck Drivers, 353 U.S. 87, 77 S. Ct. 643, 1 L. Ed. 2d 676). The majority dismisses these cases in a footnote, but they fatally undermine the majority's claim that the precaution adopted by the employers here is too novel and exotic to fall within the labor exemption.

Courts have also approved other strategies that redistribute the financial pain wrought by a strike. When unions engage in selective striking, for example, striking employees are often paid benefits to compensate for lost wages. See Kennedy, 319 F.2d at 372. Unions do this [62] because it would be unfair to force one set of employees to bear the entire burden when the eventual benefit will inure to everyone. Strike benefits also strengthen the union's bargaining position by ensuring all employees share the same incentives, and none will be driven by personal hardship to undermine the strike. Strike benefits are thus considered a legitimate economic weapon. See Int'l Bhd. of Boilermakers, 858 F.2d at 767. RSPs serve precisely the same purposes for employers bargaining as a group: Why should one employer alone bear the heavy cost of selective striking or picketing, when the eventual contract will bind the entire group? And why should unions be able to spread the burdens of a strike to reinforce their bargaining position, while employers can't?

When unions pay benefits to striking workers, their collusive actions are protected by statute. See H. A. Artists & Assocs., Inc. v. Actors' Equity Ass'n, 451 U.S. 704, 713-14, 101 S. Ct. 2102, 68 L. Ed. 2d 558 (1981). To protect the collective bargaining process, employers too must be allowed to share losses without fear of antitrust liability, which is the very point of the non-statutory labor exemption. See Brown, 518 U.S. at 237.

My colleagues reach [63] the wrong conclusion because they misread Brown. The majority looks for some affirmative approval in labor law for the RSP, maj. op. at 9297-98, but that is far more than Brown calls for. Brown requires only that the conduct be "unobjectionable as a matter of labor law and policy." 518 U.S. at 238 (emphasis added). The very fact that the union did not challenge the RSP as an unfair labor practice, despite having raised a procedural dispute before the NLRB, itself is proof that the RSP is unobjectionable as a matter of labor policy. The second Brown factor is clearly satisfied.

The third Brown factor similarly favors exemption because the RSP concerned only parties with a direct stake in the outcome of the collective bargaining agreement. See Brown, 518 U.S. at 250. Contra maj. op. at 9301. Vons, Albertson's and Ralphs were part of the same multi-employer bargaining unit, and Food 4 Less's own contracts were set to expire just months later. Food 4 Less, standing alone, had no hope of doing better against the union than Vons, Ralphs and Albertson's had done by working together. In all likelihood, the contract the union wrung from them would set the bar for Food 4 Less's own negotiations. [64] Food 4 Less thus had a strong labor-related interest in standing shoulder-to-shoulder with the three other chains.

[*1143] Equally important, Food 4 Less was required by its existing contract to contribute to employee benefits at a rate tied to that of Ralphs. As Ralphs's Vice President of Human Resources and Labor Relations explained, "the rate . . . for Food 4 Less employees' health and welfare [was] directly connected to the contract we . . . bargained." If the unions managed to extract more favorable benefits from Ralphs and the other chains as a result of the strike, Food 4 Less would be forced to provide more benefits for its own workers. It thus had a direct and immediate financial stake in the contract negotiations. The majority's claim that "the inclusion of [Food 4 Less] suggests that the conduct is not anchored in the collective-bargaining process," id. at 9301, is belied by the record.

The fourth factor—whether the conduct involved subject matter that the parties were required to negotiate collectively —simply doesn't apply to this case. See Brown at 250. In Brown, the Court had to decide whether the NFL's unilateral imposition of its last good faith salary offer was exempt from antitrust [65] review. In such a case, it's relevant whether these substantive terms relate to "wages, hours, and working conditions," or whether the terms are unrelated to collective bargaining. Id. at 241; compare id. at 234 (agreement to set salaries is exempt), with United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 663, 85 S. Ct. 1585, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626 (1965) (agreement to set prices of goods is not exempt). Where the employer action at issue involves a procedural bargaining tactic, rather than a substantive term of the contract, it makes no sense to ask whether the tactic relates to "wages, hours, and working conditions." It never does. Yet procedural tactics go to the heart of the exemption's purpose—to free from antitrust scrutiny employer actions that are "needed to make the collective-bargaining process work." Brown, 518 U.S. at 234 (emphasis added); see also id. at 247. A lockout, for example, is a bargaining tactic that has nothing to do with "wages, hours, and working conditions" yet is exempt from antitrust review. See id. at 245; see also id. at 254 (Stevens, J., dissenting); maj. op. at 9300. That the revenue-sharing provision—which is [66] a procedural tactic designed to put pressure on the union during the course of negotiations—doesn't relate to a mandatory subject of collective bargaining is simply beside the point and cannot count against application of the labor exemption. Contra maj. op. at 9298-99.

Fifth, and finally, the conduct indisputably "took place during and immediately after a collective-bargaining negotiation." Brown, 518 U.S. at 250. The revenue-sharing provision clearly centered on the time period of the labor dispute, as it lasted only for the duration of the strike plus an additional two weeks. In its haste to condemn the RSP, the majority omits this factor from its discussion.

A fair reading of the RSP can leave no doubt that all the relevant Brown factors weigh heavily in favor of exempting the RSP from antitrust review. We are not dealing with employers who were using a labor dispute as a pretext to engage in price-fixing; it's perfectly clear that the employers were responding to union tactics in the course of a strike, and only to the degree the tactics were effectively deployed by the union. The majority's contrary dicta have no basis in the record, common sense or precedent.

Worst of all, we may [67] never be able to correct this error. Strikes are costly endeavors [*1144] for everyone involved, and introducing the additional threat of antitrust liability—with its protracted litigation, unpredictable rule of reason analysis and treble damages—will no doubt force employers to think twice before entering into a revenue-sharing agreement in the future. Today's gratuitous decision thus has the unfortunate consequence of "forcing [employers] to choose their collective-bargaining responses in light of what they predict or fear antitrust courts, not labor law administrators, will eventually decide." Brown, 518 U.S. at 247. Should this fear prevent employers from entering into an RSP, we will have effectively usurped the role of the NLRB by dictating the tools that can and cannot be used in labor disputes. Because I find this result irreconcilable with Brown, inimical to sound labor policy, completely unnecessary to the resolution of this case and outside the scope of our constitutional authority, I dissent from Part III of the majority opinion.

REINHARDT, Circuit Judge, dissenting in part and concurring in part, joined by Judges SCHROEDER and GRABER:

Our antitrust law reflects Congress's judgment [68] that, with rare and specific exceptions, free competition for customers among firms protects and benefits the public by increasing efficiency and output, lowering prices, and improving the quality of the products and services available.[1] No court has ever upheld an agreement among multiple employers to set prices or share profits.

In this case, the four largest supermarket chains in Southern California, controlling 60-70% of the market, entered into a profit sharing agreement according to a predetermined formula for the indeterminate period of an anticipated labor dispute and for a short period afterwards. The supermarkets contend that it is lawful for them to do so because, although profit sharing agreements are by their nature anticompetitive and thus constitute a restraint of trade, their particular profit sharing agreement differs in two respects from profit sharing agreements that have been held to violate the antitrust laws: first, the agreement was to last for only the limited duration of the strike, however long that might be; and, second, the four supermarkets control only a substantial majority but not 100% of the market.

The majority agrees with the supermarkets that these two factors make their profit sharing agreement sufficiently different [70] from those in all the previously decided cases that, in order to determine whether their agreement has an anticompetitive effect, it is necessary to apply not just the fact-sensitive intermediate test [*1145] that the Supreme Court has endorsed for assessing less complex restraints of trade, but the most rigorous and exhaustive "rule of reason" analysis that requires a full-scale duel of economic experts over complicated and sophisticated market issues. I disagree.

The profit sharing agreement's indeterminate duration and less-than-total domination of the market are immaterial to an analysis of an agreement that inherently violates the antitrust laws. The correct method of analysis of a profit sharing agreement is either the simple per se rule or another intermediate standard such as quick look, by which we examine the anticompetitive effects of an agreement according to its particular circumstances, details, and logic, in light of the generally applicable antitrust law, fundamental principles of economics, and clear experience of the market. See Cal. Dental Ass'n v. FTC, 526 U.S. 756, 780-81, 119 S. Ct. 1604, 143 L. Ed. 2d 935 (1999). Because a battle royale of economic experts in the courts is unnecessary and because defendants' [71] profit sharing agreement can readily be determined to violate the antitrust laws under the intermediate standard, I would reverse the district court's denial of summary judgment to plaintiff and hold that the profit sharing agreement violates section 1 of the Sherman Act. Accordingly, I dissent in part.[2]

Section 1 of the Sherman Act bans agreements or combinations that act as unreasonable restraints on interstate commerce. See State Oil Co. v. Khan, 522 U.S. 3, 10, 118 S. Ct. 275, 139 L. Ed. 2d 199 (1997). Defendants

The law directs itself not against conduct which is competitive, even severely so, but against conduct which unfairly tends to destroy competition itself. It does so not out of solicitude for private concerns [69] but out of concern for the public interest."); City of Lafayette v. La. Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 398, 98 S. Ct. 1123, 55 L. Ed. 2d 364 (1978) (In passing the Sherman Act, Congress "sought to establish a regime of competition as the fundamental principle governing commerce in this country.").

[2] Defendants also contend that their profit sharing agreement is exempt from the antitrust laws because they employ it as a bargaining tactic in an anticipated labor dispute. The majority concludes that the profit sharing agreement does not qualify for the nonstatutory labor exemption and I agree. See Maj. Op. at 9289-9302.

entered into an agreement to share profits. Such agreements have traditionally been held to be anticompetitive because they remove the incentive to engage in competitive behavior. Defendants have two principal contentions as to why their profit sharing agreement is different: first, that their profit sharing is for a limited, if indefinite period; and, second, that their agreement does [72] not include 100% of the participants in the market. They also contend, by way of response to plaintiff's prima facie case, that their profit sharing agreement helps them to prevail in the labor dispute and thereby to achieve their goal of lowering wages and benefits paid to their employees. Doing so, defendants allege, aids competition in the Southern California market.

It is evident from a rudimentary knowledge of economics, as well as from a reading of the case law, that neither the agreement's limited duration nor its failure to include the fragmented group of other firms operating in the market could do more than reduce the ordinary anticompetitive effects of such agreements. Certainly these factors would not eliminate such effects. An analysis of the details, logic, and circumstances of the particular profit sharing agreement, including its relationship to the anticipated strike, confirms that conclusion. The agreement's effect is necessarily anticompetitive and, like any other profit sharing agreement of limited duration among firms that control well over a majority, but less than 100% of the market, the anticompetitive effects might be reduced to some extent but they certainly [73] would not be eliminated.

The "presumptive or default," Maj. Op. at 9304, method of analysis for determining [*1146] whether an agreement is an unreasonable restraint on trade such as violates section 1 of the Sherman Act is rule of reason review. In conducting that review, courts fully examine factors such as "specific information about the relevant business," "the restraint's history, nature, and effect," and "[w]hether the businesses involved have market power," with the purpose of "distinguish[ing] between restraints with anticompetitive effect that are harmful to the consumer and restraints stimulating competition that are in the consumer's best interest." Leegin Creative Leather Prods., Inc. v. PSKS, Inc, 551 U.S. 877, 885-86, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 (2007) (internal quotation marks omitted).

Rule of reason review is data-intensive and, consequently, expensive for litigants; also, it consumes large amounts of court time and other resources. See Arizona v. Maricopa Cnty. Med. Soc'y, 457 U.S. 332, 343-44, 102 S. Ct. 2466, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48 & n.14 (1982). For these reasons, as well as to provide guidance to the business community, see Cont'l T.V., Inc., v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 50 n.16, 97 S. Ct. 2549, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568 (1977), courts have developed summary methods of identifying [74] section 1 violations in circumstances in which such violations are discernible without a full rule of reason analysis: namely, per se review and quick look review. Per se analysis examines whether prior judicial experience with the type of restraint at issue is sufficient to allow a determination that it would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output. See Leegin, 551 U.S. at 886. The focus of the inquiry is on accumulated data from prior decisions: an agreement may be declared unlawful with no further analysis, simply by virtue of its being of a type that courts have previously determined to have "manifestly anticompetitive effects," but no "redeeming virtue." Id. (internal quotation marks omitted).

In contrast, an arrangement violates section 1 under a quick look approach when "an observer with even a rudimentary understanding of economics could conclude that the arrangements in question would have an anticompetitive effect on customers and markets." Cal. Dental Ass'n v. FTC, 526 U.S. at 770. Quick look review is not necessarily based on a history of rule of reason adjudications; rather, it asks whether a "great likelihood of anticompetitive effects [75] can easily be ascertained" by examining the restraint and considering the defendants' justifications for it. See id.; see also XI Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 1911a, at 296-97 (2d. ed. 2004 Supp.) (Quick look review "is usually best reserved for circumstances where the restraint is sufficiently threatening to place it presumptively in the per se class, but lack of judicial experience requires at least some consideration of proffered defenses or justifications." (footnote omitted)).[3]

[3] Inherent in the summary nature of quick look and per se analysis is the possibility that a restraint that would survive a full rule of reason analysis in a particular case will nonetheless be invalidated: "For the sake of business certainty and litigation efficiency, we have tolerated the invalidation of some agreements that a fullblown inquiry might have proved to be reasonable." Maricopa

[*1147] California contends that defendants' profit sharing arrangement violates section 1 under either the per se rule or quick look review. Its assertion that the agreement strongly resembles arrangements that prior cases have found violative of section 1 is correct, although the particular circumstances of the restraint in question do differ from the circumstances relating to the profit sharing arrangements examined in those earlier cases. It is unnecessary, however, to determine whether such differences are sufficiently material that we should refrain from concluding that defendants' profit sharing agreement was illegal under a strict per se analysis, because the agreement was plainly illegal under a quick look or, more accurately, a combined [77] or mixed form of intermediate review. "[A] great likelihood" that defendants' profit sharing arrangement produced "anticompetitive effects" is manifest, Cal. Dental Ass'n, 526 U.S. at 770, and defendants offer no plausible procompetitive benefits that would overcome or neutralize those effects so as to require full rule of reason analysis.

Although the parties briefed the case on the traditional view that the two summary forms of review are separate and unrelated, and the questions they posed are here discussed separately to some extent, the lawfulness of the agreement is best analyzed in light of the Supreme Court's recent explanation that "our categories of analysis of anticompetitive effect are less fixed than terms like 'per se,' 'quick look,' and 'rule of reason' tend to make them appear." Id. at 779. According to Justice Souter, writing for the Court, "[w]hat is required . . . is an enquiry meet for the case, looking to the circumstances, details, and logic of a restraint," with the object of determining "whether the experience of the market has been so clear, or necessarily will be, that a confident conclusion" can be drawn that the "principal tendency" of an agreement is anticompetitive. [78] Id. at 780. I would follow the Court's suggestion and would apply a mixed or blended approach, engaging in an analysis "meet for the case" — here, an analysis that compels the confident conclusion that the principal tendency of defendants' agreement is anticompetitive and that the agreement thus violates section 1 of the Sherman Act. On the basis of that intermediate analysis, I would reverse the district court and hold that defendants' profit sharing arrangement is unlawful.

I first discuss the applicability of strict per se analysis. "The rationale of the rule of per se illegality depends on the premise[] that . . . judicial experience with a particular class of restraints shows that virtually all restraints in that class operate so as to reduce output or increase price." XI Areeda & Hovenkamp ¶ 1911a, at 295. Accordingly, application of the per se rule is limited to restraints of a type that courts' "considerable experience" has revealed to have "manifestly anticompetitive effects," and no "redeeming virtue," such that judges can "predict with confidence that it would be invalidated in all or almost all instances under the rule of reason." Leegin, 551 U.S. at 886-87. Thus, the [79] question for per se analysis is whether defendants' agreement is of a type that courts have previously determined to have such pernicious [*1148] effects. California argues that defendants' profit sharing arrangement was both a profit pooling agreement and a market allocation agreement, each of which courts have determined to be subject to per se invalidation. As I explain below, the contention that defendants' agreement was a market allocation agreement is without merit. The question whether it was a profit sharing agreement sufficiently similar to the profit sharing agreements that courts have previously examined and invalidated is much closer. Below, I discuss the relationship between defendants' profit sharing agreement and profit sharing agreements invalidated in prior cases but, ultimately, do not determine whether defendants' agreement constituted a per se violation of the Sherman Act. Rather, as I explain below, in determining that it was unlawful, I would apply a per se-plus or a quick look-minus analysis, a combined or mixed approach, somewhere between pure per se and pure quick look, along the meet-for-the- case lines suggested by the Court in California Dental Association.

Cnty. Med., 457 U.S. at 344. The ultimate inquiry in both analyses is establishing a sufficiently high likelihood of anticompetitive effect to justify foreclosing, in the name of certainty and efficiency goals, the possibility that a more in depth review would reveal that a restraint was on balance [76] benign or even beneficial. See Major League Baseball Props., Inc. v. Salvino, Inc., 542 F.3d 290, 340 n.10 (2d Cir. 2008) (Sotomayor, J., concurring in the judgment) (quick look and per se "methods of analysis are reserved for practices that 'facially appear [ ] to be one[s] that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output.'" (alterations in original) (quoting Broad. Music, Inc. v. CBS, 441 U.S. 1, 19-20, 99 S. Ct. 1551, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1979)).

California [80] contends that defendants' profit sharing agreement is essentially identical to those profit pooling and sharing schemes that the Supreme Court has found to be per se violations of section 1. See Citizen Publ'g Co. v. United States, 394 U.S. 131, 135, 89 S. Ct. 927, 22 L. Ed. 2d 148 (1969) ("Pooling of profits pursuant to an inflexible ratio at least reduces incentives to compete for circulation and advertising revenues and runs afoul of the Sherman Act."); see also United States v. Paramount Pictures Inc., 334 U.S. 131, 149, 68 S. Ct. 915, 92 L. Ed. 1260 (1948) (profit sharing agreement a "bald effort[ ] to substitute monopoly for competition"); N. Sec. Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, 24 S. Ct. 436, 48 L. Ed. 679 (1904); Chicago, M & St. P. Ry. Co. v. Wabash, St. L. & P. Ry. Co., 61 F. 993 (8th Cir. 1894); Anderson v. Jett, 89 Ky. 375, 12 S.W. 670, 11 Ky. L. Rptr. 570 (Ky. 1889).

Profit pooling or profit sharing arrangements eliminate incentives to compete for customers along every dimension: there is little purpose in attempting to attract another firm's customers by lowering prices, improving quality, or taking any other measure if the profits earned from those new customers would be placed in a common pool in which the other firm is a participant, and the proceeds distributed in the same way no matter [81] which participant in the profit pool generated the underlying sales, or if transfer payments are made between firms to achieve the same effect. See N. Sec. Co., 193 U.S. at 328 (pooling profits "destroy[s] every motive for com-petition between . . . natural competitors."); Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 61 F. at 997 (a profit sharing agreement by which railroads that carried less than a predetermined share of freight were compensated by other railroads such that their share of total revenues remained constant had "[t]he necessary and inevitable result of . . . foster[ing] and creat[ing] poorer service and higher rates"). The Sherman Act was intended to curb just such restraints on competition.

Defendants contend that there are three ways in which their scheme differs from the profit pooling or sharing that was held unlawful in prior cases. The first of these contentions is meritless. Defendants argue that, unlike the agreements in prior cases, which provided that the parties would share all profits, their agreement provides that any party that experiences an increase in relative market share would share with the others only 15% of its increase in relative revenue, and that the sums to [82] be redistributed are less than all of the profits earned on those increased [*1149] revenues. There is no question, however, that the 15% figure was defendants' estimate of the total additional profits to be earned as a result of any increase in relative market share while the profit sharing agreement was in effect. This plan to share all the additional profits earned is what is relevant. Richard Cox, a vice president of Safeway who helped to draft the agreement, stated in his deposition that the 15% was meant to represent accurately the profit that a chain would collect on increased revenues that were earned without an increase in fixed costs. Defendants do not dispute the accuracy of his testimony. Their proffer is the statement of their expert witness, who conjectured that it was "plausible" and "likely" that incremental profits were greater than 15% of revenues, but admitted that he had done no analysis of incremental profitability from the data.[4] Defendants cannot force the expense of full rule-of-reason litigation on courts and opposing parties simply by speculating that they may have gotten their arithmetic wrong when they were setting up their scheme to share profits; their plan to [83] share profits is sufficient, whether or not the scheme as implemented achieved that objective to perfection.

Defendants' other two contentions, however, raise sufficient question as to whether their profit sharing scheme should be invalidated under a strict per se approach or whether additional analysis of the agreement and its likely effects would be beneficial, and whether the court should proceed to a quick look approach or, more accurately, to a mixture or combination of the two approaches.

First, while profit sharing agreements in previous cases were to last for decades or permanently, defendants' scheme is scheduled to last only for the period of the labor dispute, plus two additional weeks. See Citizen Publ'g, 394 U.S. at 133 (fifty-year agreement); Paramount Pictures, 334 U.S. at 131 (considering apparently [84] permanent profit sharing agreements); N. Sec. Co., 193 U.S. at 197 (finding illegal an apparently permanent profit pooling arrangement); Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 61 F. at 996 ("The contract was to continue for 25 years."). That the term of the scheme could expire in a relatively short period — anywhere from a few weeks to a year or more, depending on the length of the strike — is no defense if the scheme is anticompetitive. Section 1 of the Sherman Act proscribes all anticompetitive agreements, regardless of their duration: neither the text of the statute nor the case law contains an exception for anticompetitive agreements that last for less than a fixed period of substantial length. However, defendants' contention is that no anticompetitive effects could result from their arrangement, because the potentially short term of the profit sharing leaves them with sufficient incentive to compete for customers, whose allegiance might be retained after the end of the strike. Because courts have not previously considered profit sharing arrangements of a potentially very short duration, the court probably should not simply apply a pure per se analysis to defendants' arrangement.

[4] I note that the district court should not have accorded the expert's statement any weight given its explicitly speculative nature. "An expert's opinions that are without factual basis and are based on speculation or conjecture" are inadmissible at trial and are "inappropriate material for consideration on a motion for summary judgment." Major League Baseball, 542 F.3d at 311.

Second, [85] unlike firms in most of the prior profit sharing cases, which were the only firms of their kind operating in the relevant market, defendants were not the only [*1150] supermarkets in the affected areas. See, e.g., Citizen Publ'g, 394 U.S. at 133 (the defendants were the only general distribution newspapers in Tucson). California is correct that a profit sharing plan need not cover the entire market in order to affect competition. However, it is incorrect that the distinction between a profit sharing plan that covers the entire market and one that does not is unworthy of any consideration before we make a determination whether anticompetitive effects will result from an agreement. As with the previous distinction, courts have not explored the question sufficiently to allow certitude with the application of a strict per se approach here.

California next contends that the profit sharing agreement was a market allocation agreement that allocated the Southern California grocery market according to defendants' historic shares of that market. Market allocation agreements are "classic per se antitrust violation[s]." See United States v. Brown, 936 F.2d 1042, 1045 (9th Cir. 1991). Courts have treated [86] as unlawful market allocation agreements assigning particular territories to particular vendors, see Palmer v. BRG of Ga., Inc., 498 U.S. 46, 49-50, 111 S. Ct. 401, 112 L. Ed. 2d 349 (1990) (per curiam); United States v. Topco Assocs., Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 92 S. Ct. 1126, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515 (1972), assigning certain customers to certain vendors, see White Motor Co. v. United States., 372 U.S. 253, 83 S. Ct. 696, 9 L. Ed. 2d 738 (1963), and capping total sales volume of the market and assigning participants fixed shares of that total volume, see United States v. Andreas, 216 F.3d 645, 666-68 (7th Cir. 2000). The common thread to these decisions is that in allocating the market, firms ensure that customers attempting to purchase products in the relevant market will have fewer firms competing for their business.

In contrast to the agreements at issue in the market allocation cases, however, defendants' agreement is not alleged to have decreased the number of supermarkets available to customers. Rather, California alleged that the agreement simply reduced the competition for customers among the defendant businesses. Thus, it does not allege a market allocation claim appropriate for either strict per se analysis or a mixed or blended approach, and we need proceed no further with that question. [87] In view of the above, I would decline to hold that California prevails on a strict per se theory.

C.

Turning from a strict per se to a quick look, or rather, in this case, to a combined or mixed approach, fair analysis requires careful inquiry. An agreement violates section 1 of the Sherman Act under a quick look analysis when "an observer with even a rudimentary understanding of economics could conclude that the arrangements in question would have an anticompetitive effect on customers and markets." Cal. Dental Ass'n, 526 U.S. at 770. If so, the burden of proof shifts to the defendant "to show empirical evidence of procompetitive effects." See id. at 775 n.12; XI Areeda & Hovenkamp ¶ 1914d(1) at 355. Accordingly, a court seeking to determine on a "quick look" whether an arrangement violates section 1 must first determine whether it can "easily . . . ascertain[ ]" a "great likelihood of anticompetitive effects," Cal. Dental Ass'n, 526 U.S. at 770, and, if so, whether any such effects are neutralized or outweighed by procompetitive benefits.

Taking into account the Supreme Court's recent explanation that the "categories [*1151] of analysis of anticompetitive effect are less fixed than terms like [88] 'per se,' 'quick look,' and 'rule of reason' tend to make them appear," and that rather than drawing "categorical line[s]" between restraints, a court reviewing an agreement that is alleged to violate section 1 must conduct "an enquiry meet for the case," see id. at 779-81, a court in a case like that before us should look to the history of judicial experience with profit sharing agreements, apply rudimentary economic principles to the meaning and effects of the particular agreement in question, and carefully analyze the circumstances, details, and logic of the agreement in order to determine the likelihood of anticompetitive effects. Then it must consider the purported procompetitive effects that the defendants suggest are sufficient to overcome any anticompetitive effects of the agreement. The question, then, under the combined or mixed approach is whether, after conducting the requisite review and analysis the court can reach a "confident conclusion [that] the principal tendency" of the agreement is to restrict competition. See id. at 781.

Significantly, a "confident conclusion" does not always prove ultimately correct. See supra note 3. Rather, it represents a tool of judicial economy [89] designed to save the litigants and the courts a considerable investment of time and money, which in the balance is to the benefit of all. That occasionally we might be wrong is a price that it is long established that society is willing to pay. In fact, some of the conclusions of which our leading economic experts have been confident have turned out to be incorrect. For example, Alan Greenspan, appointed and then reappointed Chairman of the Federal Reserve for five terms by four different Presidents, recently admitted to a significant flaw in the ideology that caused him to support and implement policies of financial deregulation: "We made a mistake in presuming that the self-interest of organizations, specifically banks and others, were such that they were best capable of protecting their own shareholders." See Paul M. Barrett, While Regulators Slept, N.Y. Times, Aug. 6, 2009, at BR 10. And Judge Richard Posner, a highly respected jurist and a leading economics expert, has recently expressed his admiration for Keynesian economics, reversing a lifetime of reliance on the Chicago School's approach. See John Cassidy, Letter from Chicago, The New Yorker, Jan. 11, 2010, at 28. Thus, a "confident [90] conclusion" for purposes of quick look and other limited approaches means, at most, a reasonably confident conclusion a court may reach that, on some occasions, may prove to be incorrect. Equally incorrect, however, may be a conclusion reached by a body of economics experts after years of study or even a verdict reached by a jury following a full-scale trial with the most careful and thorough development of a full evidentiary record with the aid of the most experienced antitrust lawyers and expert witnesses.

Here, I am confident in my conclusion that defendants' profit sharing agreement creates a "great likelihood of anticompetitive effects," and that such effects are not outweighed or neutralized by any plausible procompetitive benefits. I am confident that neither the duration of the agreement nor the fact that defendants have less than a 100% share of the market significantly affects the anticompetitive "principal tendency" of the profit sharing agreement. In reaching this conclusion, I have considered whether, because the objective of the agreement was to affect the outcome of a labor dispute and to bring about a reduction in labor costs, my conclusion should be altered. My answer [91] is a definite and unqualified "No." Finally, although the parties introduced some evidence to support [*1152] their respective positions, I do not rely on such empirical proof in reaching this conclusion; I note, however, that to the extent that it is relevant, the evidence appears either to support the conclusion that I would reach or, alternatively, to add little or nothing of any significance to my analysis. Finally, although some confident conclusions may ultimately prove to be incorrect, I am confident that this one will not.

Defendants entered into an agreement under which they shared profits with one another according to their historic shares of the market. As discussed above, the only factors distinguishing defendants' arrangement from a profit sharing agreement that would have constituted a per se violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act are (1) the presence in Southern California of a fragmented cluster of smaller markets with a residual minority of the market share, and (2) the indefinite, if limited, term of the agreement. Absent those features, defendants' scheme would simply constitute a profit pooling or sharing arrangement akin to the ones held violative of section 1 in [92] earlier cases, and there would be no question that the agreement creates a "great likelihood of anticompetitive effects." This is apparent from the fact that when firms sharing profits are the only firms in a market, each will receive the same portion of the total profits whether it cuts prices, invests in improving its products or services, or does nothing to win customers from the other firms; the result of this lack of competitive pressure is the high likelihood that prices rise towards monopoly levels or fail to fall with the same effect. It is for these reasons that the Supreme Court has said that "[p]ooling of profits pursuant to an inflexible ratio" is a "§ 1 violation[ ]" that is "plain beyond peradventure." Citizen Publ'g, 394 U.S. at 135-36.[5]

The well-recognized effects of profit sharing set forth above help to guide the discussion in the case before us: that discussion starts from the premise that the sharing of profits among competitors ordinarily [*1153] has substantial adverse effects on competition. Next is the consideration whether either of the aspects of the agreement before us that defendants assert materially distinguish it from ordinary profit sharing arrangements would, in light of the "circumstances, logic, and details of the restraint," preclude that agreement from having the anticompetitive effect that would otherwise occur.

In an ordinary period in which no profit sharing arrangement is in effect, defendants compete with one another, and with a smaller set of other unrelated grocers, for customers and sales. The fruits of successful competition might accrue both in the present, as a supermarket makes sales in the current period, and in the future, as customers won or retained through such competition return [95] to the store to make more purchases. Defendants contend that a profit sharing agreement of limited duration, restricted to the dominant market participants, does nothing to alter the ordinary incentive structure, and that the competitive pressure while such a profit sharing agreement is in effect is no less than the competitive pressure that would occur in the absence of such an agreement. Having reviewed their contentions and analyzed all the plausible effects of the agreement, I disagree. I am confident in the conclusion that defendants' profit sharing arrangement removes, or at the least significantly reduces, a key source of competitive pressure—competition among defendants for sales to be made during the agreement period—without there being any countervailing pressure sufficient to neutralize or overcome the overwhelming likelihood of anticompetitive effects. Although it is plausible that the two differences on which defendants rely will serve to reduce the competitive pressures to a lesser extent than would a long-term agreement among competitors who control 100% of the market, it is evident that the lessening of the reduction in competitive pressure will be one of degree only, [96] and that there is no likelihood whatsoever that the anticompetitive effects of a profit sharing agreement will be eliminated.

As already stated, when an arrangement redistributes all profits on current sales among a group of competitors according to a predetermined ratio, as defendants' arrangement does, there is little reason for the individual firms within the group to compete with one another for those sales. Thus, the analysis begins with the determination that there is a high likelihood that defendants' agreement has a substantial negative effect on their incentive to compete with one another for customers in order to make sales during the period in which the agreement is in effect. Defendants nonetheless contend that there is an incentive to compete with one another for customers during the profit sharing period, pointing to the indefinite duration of the agreement and to the possibility that customers who

[5] This effect has been well understood for many years, and was ably explained well over a hundred years ago by the Kentucky Court of Appeal, then the highest court in that state, in the following discussion of a profit sharing arrangement between two steamboat companies:

> There was a strong stimulation to increase the net profits by means other than that of popular favor springing out of efficient steamboat facilities and close attention [93] to the business of shipping for reasonable charges and courteous attention to passengers at reasonable fare. . . . It is the competition, or fear of competition, that makes these carriers efficient, attentive, polite, and reasonable in charges. Remove competition, or the fear of it, and they become extortionate, inattentive, impolite, and negligent. . . . It is said that neither was bound to charge the same as the other. That is true; but either could extort with impunity, and the other would be an equal recipient of the fruit of the extortion. . . . It is true that their contract did not, in so many words, bind them to any given charges; but it made it to the interest of each, not only to charge, but to encourage and sustain the other in charges that would amount to confiscation. . . . This combination was more than that of a combination not to take freight or passengers at less than certain prices. In such case, the combiners have to furnish adequate means of transportation, and efficient and polite officers, and confine themselves as nearly as possible to the sum agreed upon, in order to secure the trade, or a reasonable portion of it; but here, by reason of the agreement, . . . [94] . [i]nefficient means of transportation [and] unskilled or inattentive officials[ ] are no drawback to either boat. Its share of the profits come[s] notwithstanding.

are won or retained through competition during that period will remain as customers after the agreement ends. Additionally, they contend that the other firms in the market will exert competitive pressure on them sufficient to make up for any loss of competitive pressure among [97] themselves. These contentions must be examined for their validity during the period of limited duration in general, and then in light of whether the particular circumstance of the agreement — an impending labor strike — alters that general analysis.

First, for a profit sharing agreement of limited but indefinite duration, the incentive to compete for sales and profits that would occur at some future time would necessarily be less than the ordinary incentive to compete by seeking to attract customers who will patronize the stores [*1154] starting immediately and will continue to patronize them in the future as well. The supermarkets assert that the profit sharing arrangement does not reduce their incentive to engage in competitive behavior because customers might buy goods at some indefinite point in the future in which profits would not be shared. Any such future incentives are at best speculative and must be heavily discounted. The sales that would produce those future profits might not be made for six months, or a year, or more. By paying money now for sales that would occur, if at all, only in the indefinite future, the defendants would incur the ordinary costs of obtaining customers without [98] receiving the ordinary benefits that would accrue. Whatever incentive might remain, with the agreement in place, for the supermarkets to compete for customer purchases in the future is considerably outweighed by the incentives that the agreement reduces to compete for purchases today. Viewing matters most favorably to defendants, the anticompetitive effects resulting from an agreement of limited, if indefinite, duration might be diminished, but certainly would not be eliminated. There can be no question whatsoever that the profit sharing agreement of indefinite duration would at least to some degree reduce defendants' incentive to compete.

With defendants exerting reduced competitive pressure on one another during the profit sharing period, competition from firms not included in the profit sharing agreement would have to result in an extraordinary amount of increased competitive pressure to make up for the loss of the paramount pressure that defendants ordinarily exert on each other. This too is highly unlikely.[6] During the profit sharing period, defendants controlled at least 60% of the Los Angeles-Long Beach portion of the Southern California market and at least 70% of the San Diego [99] portion, and between them operated more than 950 stores in the areas affected by the agreement, a combined presence sufficient to suggest an ability to significantly affect prices and other outcomes in the Southern California market.[7] Defendants would be [*1155] at least partially insulated from competition from other vendors by virtue of the many

The same can be said for business practices that are economically equivalent — for example, agreements on market division, product quality, credit terms, and the like.").

[7] No precise [101] standard exists for determining when a firm or a group of firms controls enough of a market that its actions might cause anticompetitive effects. However, the uncontested facts about defendants' share of the market and the fragmented nature of the rest of the market together appear to be sufficient to establish the monopoly power over the market required for a violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act, a higher standard than is required to find that a firm or firms had sufficient power in the market that their actions could violate section 1. See Am. Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 797, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 90 L. Ed. 1575 (1946) (a firm with over two-thirds of the market is a monopoly); *Syufy Enters. v. Am. and varied locations of their stores, which for numerous customers would be far more convenient to patronize than the markets operated by the other vendors. Defendants also would be partially insulated from such competition by the inability of the other vendors to compete effectively as a result of brand recognition (and, indeed, customer awareness of their existence), limited facilities, contracts with suppliers and staffing commensurate with their limited historical role in the market; factors that would substantially curtail the ability of the other vendors to serve additional customers.[8] Those other vendors would no more be able to increase their capacity, staff, supplies, and brand recognition overnight than they could immediately open new locations convenient for defendants' customers. Nor would they be inclined to spend money to do so, knowing [100] that the profit sharing agreement was of limited duration and, in fact, could end at any time. Finally, those other vendors are mainly independent of each other, consist of various types of markets, and would have neither the inclination nor the ability to agree on a uniform marketing policy that would significantly increase whatever competitive pressure the totality of those vendors ordinarily exerts on defendants. The overwhelming likelihood appears to be that, on the whole, smaller vendors would do little if anything to alter their marketing practices but rather would continue on their ordinary course, which would not serve to increase their economic pressure on defendants beyond what they ordinarily exert, or attract any large number of the customers that ordinarily patronize defendants.[9]

[*1156] No one would dispute that the supermarkets' agreement had anticompetitive effects if they had simply agreed to fix equal prices and wages in order to eliminate competitive risk. The agreement in this case generated no less irreducibly anticompetitive effects, because the supermarkets' arrangement, like any other naked restraint on trade, reduced incentives to compete and yielded no [105] plausible off-setting procompetitive or competition-neutralizing effects. A rudimentary knowledge of antitrust law dictates the conclusion that, if defendants in this case agreed to share profits for a limited period for their mutual economic benefit, there would be a violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act — at least in the absence of some extraordinary circumstance.

This brings us to defendants' contention that the threat of a strike, or a strike itself, constitutes such a circumstance. First, then, we must consider whether the profit sharing agreement loses its anticompetitive effects when it becomes operative during the course of a strike or labor dispute. There should be little difficulty in answering that question: the fact that defendants' agreement provides for profits to be shared only during a labor dispute and a brief ensuing period does not alter its inherently anticompetitive nature. Even during a strike period, a profit sharing agreement generates a "great likelihood of anticompetitive effects." For a vendor, the principal features of an employee strike are diminished consumer demand, as some customers choose not to cross the picket lines; a reduced workforce, because [106] some workers at least are on strike; and a more urgent financial condition, as

[8] Another consideration is that many alleged competitors' product offerings differ substantially from those of defendants, including box stores selling goods in bulk, such as Costco; retailers selling a limited selection of products and brands, [103] such as Trader Joe's; and stores specializing in organic foods, such as Whole Foods. These markets are by their nature incapable of competing for much of the business of traditional supermarkets such as those operated by defendants. Notwithstanding these obvious facts, Costco, Trader Joe's, and Whole Foods were each alleged by defendants to have placed competitive pressure on them during the labor dispute.

[9] Interestingly, economic theory suggests an even stronger negative effect on competition: it would appear to predict that, at least in the short run, in a market in which large, dominant firms have an agreement limiting competition amongst themselves, such an agreement will tend to increase the prices charged by those large firms, and that smaller firms, rather than increasing whatever economic pressure they ordinarily exert on those larger firms by charging the lower prices that would obtain under competitive conditions in order to attract the larger firms' customers, but will instead charge higher prices close to those being charged by the larger firms. See Herbert Hovenkamp, Federal Antitrust Policy § 4.1b (1994). Firms that pool profits are acting as a kind of cartel, and cartels [104] that do not contain all the firms in the market are still able to raise prices above the prices that would be observed in a competitive marketplace, especially in a short term situation like that present here, in which the fixed costs of starting a supermarket (leases, employment and product purchasing contracts, signage, etc.) make it unlikely that new firms would enter the market to take advantage of the prices that are artificially high due to the cartel's collusive behavior. See Dennis W. Carlton & Jeffrey M. Perloff, Modern Industrial Organization 107-15, 122 (3d ed. 2000). Additionally, fixing market shares at precartel levels, as defendants essentially did here, is an "effective technique" for preventing cheating (in the form of competitive behavior) among members of the cartel. See id. at 139-40.

fixed costs remain at nonstrike levels, and revenues go down. While diminished demand, a reduced workforce, and a more urgent financial condition might affect defendants' competitive behavior during the strike, these potential effects would occur independent of the existence of a profit sharing agreement. None of these effects changes the basic impact of the agreement: defendants had little incentive to compete with one another while it was in effect because any profits earned on sales to another defendant's former customers would simply be redistributed back to the other defendants.[10]

The profit sharing agreement itself would have an additional effect; it would cause defendants to compete even less during the strike period than they would were there no profit sharing agreement in effect at that time. Whatever the baseline circumstance as to competition in any given period, including a strike period, the existence of the profit sharing agreement results in a greater likelihood of reduced competition than there would otherwise be. That is the simple lesson that is apparent from a rudimentary knowledge of economics. [*1157] Profit sharing necessarily serves to diminish the incentives to compete below whatever the level of competition would be in the absence of such an agreement; it is inherently, or as some courts have said, intuitively, anticompetitive and has the same, or a similar, effect on competition during a strike as it [108] would have before the strike and after it ends. See Cal. Dental Ass'n, 526 U.S. at 780-81. The ultimate impact that the agreement has on pricing or output might be lower or higher depending on other circumstances, such as the existence of the anticipated labor dispute; however, whether greater or lesser, the net effect in all circumstances would be anticompetitive.

For the reasons explained above, I conclude that a "great likelihood of anticompetitive effects can easily be ascertained" by examining the agreement in light of prior cases, in light of its circumstances and details, as well as in light of logic and rudimentary principles of economics. Here, those anticompetitive effects are not only substantial, but they result from an agreement that removes fundamental incentives to engage in competition for an indefinite period. In short, neither the fact that there are a number of smaller companies in the market, the fact that the agreement is of an indefinite though limited duration, nor the fact that the agreement takes effect during a strike, warrants a departure from the well-established rule that profit sharing agreements are anticompetitive and violate section 1 of the Sherman [109] Act.

Defendants' fallback position is that the state lacks empirical evidence to demonstrate that the effects of the agreement were anticompetitive in practice. However, neither per se nor quick look review ordinarily requires empirical evidence of anticompetitive effects, nor is it required for the combined or mixed per se/quick look approach that should be applied here. As Professors Areeda and Hovenkamp explain, "[t]he main difference between . . . the 'quick look' approach and the rule of reason is that under the former the plaintiff's case does not ordinarily include proof of [market] power or anticompetitive effects." XI Areeda & Hovenkamp ¶ 1914d(1), at 355; see also Cal. Dental Ass'n, 526 U.S. at 779-80 (explaining that the "quality of proof required should vary with the circumstances;" that "naked restraint[s] on price and output need not be supported by a detailed market analysis in order to" move to the second step of the quick look analysis and "require" defendants to produce "some competitive justification"; and that not "every case attacking a less obviously anticompetitive restraint . . . is a candidate for plenary market examination") (internal quotation marks omitted)). [110] So long as the anticompetitive nature of the likely effects of an agreement is, as a theoretical matter, "obvious," it is not necessary for a plaintiff to provide empirical evidence demonstrating anticompetitive consequences. See Cal. Dental Ass'n, 526 U.S. at 770-71; see also NCAA v. Bd. of Regents of Univ. of Oklahoma, 468 U.S. 85, 109-10, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1984). Such a rule is necessary in antitrust cases, where "reliable proof" of such effects might be "impossible to produce."

[10] A more urgent financial condition would appear, if anything, to make it less likely that defendants would commit resources to competing with each other for customers from whom they would receive profits, if at all, only at some future date. To any extent that lower demand, lower supply, or strike-caused financial woes would prompt a defendant to try to win customers from vendors external to the agreement, the profit sharing agreement would, as in a nonstrike period, reduce its incentive for doing so: while the defendant would [107] pay the entire cost (in advertising, improved quality, or discounting) of luring such customers, it would retain only a fraction of the benefit generated equal to its prestrike share of the market, and a substantial number of the new customers might well, for reasons discussed earlier, be lost by the time the labor dispute and profit sharing ended.

XI Areeda & Hovenkamp ¶ 1901d at 207 (also noting that "in most [antitrust] cases . . . the impact on output," which in this case would be diminished sales at higher prices, "is assessed by inference from the nature of the agreement and surrounding circumstances rather than by actual empirical measurement").

This is a case in which reliable proof of anticompetitive effects or their absence through empirical evidence might be difficult [*1158] to obtain. Defendants' own expert explained that, because the profit sharing agreement took effect only during the labor dispute and both the agreement and the labor dispute might affect defendants' pricing decisions, the data required to best distinguish between the effects of the strike and [111] those of the agreement and determine whether and how the agreement affected competition between defendants do not exist. See Declaration of Thomas R. McCarthy ¶ 47.

This is, more important, a case in which the anticompetitive nature of the restraint is obvious. As discussed above, by the terms of the agreement any defendant that earns profits above its historic market share is required to give those additional profits to the other defendants. Because a defendant may not retain any profits that it made from competing with the other defendants and receives a proportionate share of whatever profits those other defendants make from competing with it, the profit sharing agreement plainly reduces the competitive pressure among defendants for sales whenever it is in effect, during the strike or otherwise. To justify their conduct, defendants rely not on the neutral or positive effect on competition arising out of their agreement, but on other sources of competitive pressure—increased competition from other vendors and competition with one another for post-strike business. As explained above, it is wholly implausible that those factors would be sufficient to overcome the reduction in competitive [112] pressure that necessarily results from the profit sharing agreement. Defendants' agreement plainly removes a significant source of competitive pressure without giving rise to any comparable counter-source to replace it.[11] Accordingly, California has carried its burden by [*1159] demonstrating the existence of a great likelihood of anticompetitive effects.

Although California was not required to adduce empirical evidence of anticompetitive effects, given the nature of the restraint at issue in the case, the empirical evidence before us supports its contentions or is, at the least, of no substantial consequence. Defendants acknowledge diminished competitive behavior, such as discounting and advertising, during the period in which the profit sharing agreement was in effect. This, in all likelihood, resulted in at least some increase in, or some failure to reduce, the prices charged to the consumers. See Declaration of Thomas R. McCarthy, Backup to ex. 7A; Declaration of Steven Lawler at ¶ 8; Declaration of Carla Simpson ¶¶ 6-7; Declaration [115] of Charles Ackerman ¶¶ 15-19. Defendants explain this change in behavior by attributing it to [11] The obviously anticompetitive nature of defendants' profit sharing agreement in a traditional market setting distinguishes it from the restraint in California Dental Association. Here, there is a long history of adjudging profit sharing agreements to be anticompetitive and of demonstrating the validity of that conclusion. The unique limits on price and quality advertising by dentists that were at issue in California Dental Association might have been thought by some to reduce incentives to compete over price or quality, because without such advertising it would be difficult for a dentist to inform potential customers about his advantages over his competitors and, thus, lowering his prices or expending resources to improve his quality might simply have reduced his profits from existing customers. However, the Court reasoned that the nature [113] of the market for "professional services" such as dental care was unique and that the circumstances made it difficult to compare services across providers and to verify price and service information, meaning that price and quality advertising might have been misleading, and misleading advertising itself poses dangers to competition. See Cal. Dental Ass'n, 526 U.S. at 771-72. Accordingly, the Court concluded, that because of the "professional context," it was not implausible that, as a theoretical matter, the restriction on price advertising had either a positive effect or no effect on competition. See id. at 774-75. The Court emphasized that theoretical claims of anticompetitive effects that are not evident or established in antitrust law must be carefully considered and clearly explained in order to justify shifting the burden to defendants to show some procompetitive effect. See id. at 775 n.12. Here, the subjective factors that the Court found were critical to the sale of professional services do not exist. Economic theory as well as a practical analysis of the factual circumstances make it clear that there is a high likelihood that the profit sharing agreement had anticompetitive [114] effects. Unlike California Dental Association, there is a clear theoretical basis for concluding that a profit sharing agreement would have anticompetitive effects, and, again unlike California Dental Association, there is no plausible basis, theoretical or otherwise, for concluding that the profit sharing agreement had procompetitive effects, see infra section IV.2. Accordingly, the burden to demonstrate evidence of the restraints' procompetitive effects falls on defendants, who do not meet it in any way.

the lack of personnel created by the strike, rather than to the profit sharing agreement. However, their expert, who relied on this explanation, performed no regression or other statistical analyses, which are typical means of determining the effects of multiple variables, such as the labor dispute and the profit sharing agreement, on a single dependent variable, such as competitive behavior by defendants. See, e.g., Hemmings v. Tidyman's Inc., 285 F.3d 1174, 1183-84 & n. 9 (9th Cir. 2002). Instead, he simply looked at limited data from Albertsons and declared that Albertsons "did a lot of discounting during the strike" and that it increased its use of certain discounting methods. See Declaration of Thomas R. McCarthy ¶¶ 51-53. Because his analysis lacks a discussion of how much discounting Albertsons would have done absent the profit sharing agreement, it is beside the point. California's expert, who did perform regressions, asserted in his deposition that those regressions revealed that competition between defendants during the strike was harmed by the profit sharing agreement. He further [116] noted that Vons raised its prices despite suffering a dramatic drop in demand for its products, exactly the opposite of the lower prices that are expected when demand drops in a competitive marketplace.[12]

[*1160] Given the obviously anticompetitive nature of defendants' profit sharing agreement, no empirical data about the effects of the agreement are necessary for "an enquiry meet for [this] case." Nonetheless, a review of the empirical evidence in the record only increases the certainty that defendants' agreement generated a great likelihood of anticompetitive effects, that it is implausible that such effects could be overcome or neutralized by the conduct of defendants or others during the term of the agreement, and that requiring a full rule of reason inquiry would be contrary to the efficient and effective implementation of our antitrust laws.

Where, as here, a "great likelihood of anticompetitive effects can easily be ascertained," the burden of proof is shifted to the defendant to "to show empirical evidence of procompetitive effects." Cal. Dental Ass'n, 526 U.S. at 770, 775 n.12; XI Areeda & Hovenkamp ¶ 1914d(1) at 355 (when "the restraint is of such a character that an anticompetitive effect may be presumed," then "the only tolerance permitted to the defendant [119] is to show" procompetitive effects). Procompetitive effects include efficiency gains, the development or improvement of products, and other benefits to consumers and society. See XI Areeda & Hovenkamp ¶ 1912c(2) at 320. In California Dental Association, for instance, the Supreme Court saw a plausible procompetitive justification for the dentist association's restrictions limiting price and quality advertising in the potential of such restrictions to improve consumer information by eliminating false and misleading advertising. See 526 U.S. at 771-72.

At this point comes defendants' actual and least justifiable contention. The supermarkets assert that conduct that serves to reduce the cost of labor serves a procompetitive purpose, such as may excuse otherwise anticompetitive

[12] Defendants' evidence purporting to show that employees charged with pricing during the dispute did not know about the profit sharing agreement and took no action because of it, which was relied upon by the district court, also fails to provide support for their contentions. Their evidence on this point is both skeletal and somewhat dubious. Defendants do not come close to demonstrating that all employees with power over pricing were ignorant of the agreement or took no action because of it. See, e.g., Declaration of Bryan Davis ¶ 3 (Albertsons employee describing himself as responsible only for the prices in a discreet category of groceries); Declaration of Carla Simpson ¶ 2 (Safeway employee describing herself as having responsibility only for implementing pricing established by another department). Moreover, early in the strike the Los Angeles Times published a front-page article revealing that the chains had agreed to share the financial burden of the strike. See Nancy Cleeland [117] & Melinda Fulmer, In Tactical Move, Union Pulls Pickets From Ralphs, L.A. Times, Nov. 1, 2003, at A1. More important, it would defeat entirely the efficiency goals underlying the existence of per se, quick look, and "meet for the case" analysis if defendants could preclude a summary finding, and proceed to full rule of reason analysis, simply by asserting that the employees in charge of pricing did not know about the profit sharing. Such assertions are easy to make, while proving or disproving who knew what, and whether the knowledge of a particular individual had any effect on whether the company acted in a competitive manner, would require exactly the sort of onerous and costly production of evidence that summary review is meant to avoid. In any case, as noted above, the quick look inquiry is a probabilistic one: in order to place the burden on defendants to demonstrate that the agreement had a procompetitive effect, California need prove only that defendants' agreement to share profits created a great likelihood of anticompetitive effects. Accordingly, even if the anticompetitive effects had not come to pass because certain employees did not learn of the agreement or did not correctly [118] calculate where the company's interests lay in light of the agreement, that fact would be immaterial to the result of our inquiry.

behavior. They contend that the procompetitive benefit of their agreement is that it increased their chances of winning the labor dispute and reducing the wages and benefits they would be required to pay to their employees, which in turn would increase their ability to lower prices and compete more effectively with other companies. See Declaration of Thomas R. McCarthy ¶ 10. Defendants' proffered justification for [120] their profit sharing arrangement is, in essence, a countervailing power defense that the restraint of trade is necessary in order to give them sufficient bargaining power to counteract the market power exercised by their striking workers and thereby to allow them to purchase their workers' labor at a lower price.

As California points out, however, the chain of contingencies linking defendants' exercise of bargaining power to reduced prices for consumer purchases renders any such procompetitive benefits of their profit sharing agreement purely speculative. Rule of reason examination of defendants' countervailing power defense is accordingly unnecessary. "Suffice it to say that the theoretical literature suggests that countervailing cartels seldom improve the welfare of consumers." XII Hovencamp, Antitrust Law: An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and Their Application, ¶ 2015b at 158 (2d ed. 2000).

[*1161] More important, driving down compensation to workers in this way is not a benefit to consumers cognizable under our laws as a "procompetitive" benefit. Defendants do not pretend that they agreed to bargain in such a way that there will be a greater overall amount of labor purchased, for example [121] because the transaction costs to purchase each unit of labor are lower when the supermarkets work together. Defendants' argument for why their profit sharing agreement is procompetitive is instead, essentially, that it increases their bargaining power relative to striking workers in order to buy their labor at a lower price. In this way, the profit sharing arrangement resembles a cartel on the buyer side of the market.

The Supreme Court has made clear, however, that because antitrust law operates to correct all distortions of competition, it condemns market actors who distort competition, whether on the buyer side or seller side. See Weyerhaeuser Co. v. Ross-Simmons Hardwood, 549 U.S. 312, 322, 127 S. Ct. 1069, 166 L. Ed. 2d 911 (2007) ("Predatory-pricing and predatory-bidding claims are analytically similar. . . . This similarity results from the close theoretical connection between monopoly and monopsony."). Accordingly, the Court has long understood the Sherman Act to condemn buyer side cartels. See, e.g., American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 90 L. Ed. 1575 (1946); Mandeville Island Farms v. American Crystal Sugar Co., 334 U.S. 219, 68 S. Ct. 996, 92 L. Ed. 1328 (1948); and certain exercises of single-firm buyer power. See Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 79 S. Ct. 705, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741 (1959). [122] A central problem with allowing a countervailing power defense to justify buyer collusion is that such defense would be raised "in almost any case where the selling market is not perfectly competitive," such that all "[n]on-immune employers would claim the right to collude on wages because their employees are organized into unions and thus have significant power." XII Hovencamp ¶ 2015b at 156.

In any event, defendants' argument is wholly unpersuasive in light of our nation's labor laws and policies. It is a primary objective of these laws to protect the rights and interests of working persons, and to enable them to obtain a fair and decent wage through collective action.[13] Reducing workers' wages and benefits is hardly an objective that would justify a violation of our antitrust laws or constitute a benefit to the public so substantial as to overcome

[13] "One of the important social advantages of competition mandated by the antitrust laws is that it rewards the most efficient producer and thus ensures the optimum use of our economic resources. This result, as Congress [has] recognized, is not achieved by creating a situation in which manufacturers compete on the basis of who pays the lowest wages." United Mine Workers of Am. v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 676, 724, 85 S. Ct. 1596, 14 L. Ed. 2d 640 (1965) (Goldberg, J., dissenting and concurring); see also 15 U.S.C. § 17 ("The labor of a human being is not a commodity or article of commerce."); Polygram Holding, Inc. v. FTC, 416 F.3d 29, 38, 367 U.S. App. D.C. 367 (D.C. Cir. 2005) ("A restraint cannot be justified solely on the ground that it increases the [124] profitability of the enterprise . . . ."); Law v. NCAA, 134 F.3d 1010, 1023 (10th Cir. 1998) ("[M]ere profitability or cost savings have not qualified as a defense under the antitrust laws."). Depressing wages is not of societal benefit; it simply harms working people and their families, a significant part of the group that has come to be known as "the middle class," and which is experiencing enough economic travail without the added unlawful actions of those conspiring to violate the antitrust laws.

the deleterious consequences of anticompetitive conduct. There is no reason, even if we had the authority to do so, to set aside the ordinary principles governing antitrust law in order to unbalance the carefully developed legal structures relating to our laws governing collective [*1162] bargaining; nor is there any reason or justification for [123] assuming the function of increasing the economic power of employers to the disadvantage of their employees. To the extent that anticompetitive conduct is exempted from the application of our antitrust laws in order to facilitate the operation of labor/management processes, even the majority holds that it does not provide an escape device for the employers' conduct in this case. Defendants have not offered, much less demonstrated, any way in which their agreement generates procompetitive effects.

It is little wonder that the majority expressly declines to address the "grocers['] argu[ment] that the RSP has procompetitive benefits in the form of lower prices for consumers as a result of the grocers' ability to negotiate a more favorable contract on labor costs." Maj. Op. at 9313 n.17. Were defendants' proffered justification accepted as a ground for requiring full-blown rule of reason inquiry, colluding firms could evade quick look condemnation, without in any way increasing real efficiency or reducing costs to the consumer. Firms like the supermarkets that participate in markets for both buying (labor) and selling (groceries), and engage in a restraint of trade that has distorting [125] effects in both, cannot avoid quick look review of anticompetitive conduct simply by positing that they could conceivably pass on to consumers in the selling market any private gains such firms may achieve by restraining competition in the buying market. Allowing them to do so would lead to the absurd result that conduct which restrains more competition, in the sense that it distorts competition in both the buying and selling markets, would be subject to less demanding scrutiny than would be a comparable restraint that distorted just one market.

Defendants have put forward no plausible procompetitive effects to overcome or neutralize the great likelihood of anticompetitive effects that would result from the implementation of their profit sharing agreement. That likelihood is evident from a plain reading of the agreement's terms, an examination of the ample case law regarding profit sharing agreements, a rudimentary knowledge of economics, and an analysis of the "circumstances, details, and logic" of the agreement. In the absence of a procompetitive justification that outweighs the likelihood of substantial anticompetitive effects, I conclude with confidence and even with certainty [126] that the profit sharing agreement violates § 1 of the Sherman Act. I also conclude with the same measure of confidence and certainty that denying California the injunction to which it is entitled, simply because the parties did not engage in an extremely costly, burdensome, and utterly unnecessary battle of economic experts under rule of reason review, is contrary to the fundamental policies underlying our antitrust law, and encourages future antitrust violations by these defendants and others who may seek to suppress the rights of their employees.

Accordingly, I dissent in part.

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER GRANTING-IN-PART AND DENYING-IN-PART MOTIONS TO DISMISS (DKTS. 17, 19)

Related defendants Range Resources Corporation and Range Resources - Appalachia, LLC (collectively, "Range"), and defendant M.W. Gary & Associates, LLC ("Gary"), each have moved to dismiss the complaint filed by the plaintiff, Windstar Holdings LLC ("Windstar"). The motions allege that Windstar's complaint [*2] fails to state a claim under Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. For the reasons that follow, the Court GRANTS-IN-PART and DENIES-IN-PART both motions.

I. FACTUAL BACKGROUND

The factual and legal issues raised in this case closely mirror those discussed in the Court's recent opinion in Backwater Properties v. Range Resources Appalachia, Civ. Action No. 1:10CV103, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 48496 (N.D.W. Va. May 5, 2011)(Memorandum Opinion and Order, dkt. 71).[1] In Backwater, the Court held that language in lease documents provided to the plaintiffs in that case, in combination with alleged oral statements by Range's agents, precluded dismissal of claims for breach of contract, fraud, tortious interference, and unjust enrichment. The Court, however, did grant Range's motion to dismiss claims based on violations of federal and state antitrust laws. Some, but not all, of the claims asserted in this case parallel those in Backwater.[2]

As in Backwater, the plaintiff here alleges that, pursuant to an "Exclusionary Scheme" (the so-called "Bid Rigging Plan" in Backwater), Range enticed owners of natural gas rights in the Marcellus shale formation to sign lucrative, above-market-value leases of their gas reserves. According to Windstar, Range and its agents led it to believe it had binding contracts, subject only to confirmation of title. On information and belief, it alleges that Range in fact never intended to honor the agreements unless subsequent market conditions made doing so profitable. Windstar surmises that Range sought to prevent other gas companies from signing contracts with it, and succeeded by causing Windstar to turn down other offers to lease its gas rights at rates lower than those offered by Range.

Windstar originally filed this case in the Circuit Court of Monongalia County, West Virginia. Range filed a timely notice of removal based on diversity. The complaint sets forth the following narrative with regard to Windstar's dealings with Range and its agents:

• In early 2008, Range, [*4] along with its land company, Gary, began soliciting leases in northern West Virginia as well as in Pennsylvania. Defendant Adam Young[3] served as a "landman" or leasing agent for Range and Gary;

• The defendants formulated a scheme whereby they would entice gas owners into signing leases at above-market rates, with the intent only to honor the leases if future market conditions made them profitable. This had the effect of "locking up" the gas rights, essentially giving Range an option to buy. These proposals offered large per-acre signing bonuses, and production royalties significantly above the industry standard 1/8 (12.5%);

• In August and September of 2008, Young contacted Windstar, through its sole member R. Scott Summers ("Summers"), to solicit a gas lease. Young represented himself to be a Range employee. He also made the following representations, among others, to Summers: Range would pay Windstar a royalty rate of 18.5% of the value of all gas produced, plus $2,500 per acre as a signing bonus; the lease was pre-approved, only contingent upon certification of title; and "time was of the essence." He later increased the signing bonus to $2,850 per acre and stated that Range would [*5] lease the rights on those terms if Windstar signed within a month.

Along with the lease, Young presented Windstar with a "Dear Property Owner" letter ("DPO letter")(Windstar calls this the "Bonus Contract"), which stated that Windstar would receive an additional bonus payment as consideration for signing the lease. Young represented that the lease contract was binding as soon as Summers signed, that the lease language requiring Range's management approval process was a mere formality, and that Windstar would receive the bonus payment once a title check was completed;

• Summers, on behalf of Windstar, signed the lease on September 11, 2008, and returned it to Young. Summers then signed the DPO letter;

• Both before and after signing the Range lease and DPO letter, Windstar turned down other offers from competing potential lessees, with signing bonuses and royalties less than Range offered;

[1] Unlike Backwater, this case is not a putative class action.

[2] Additionally, the Court recently granted Range's motion to dismiss in Kerns v. Range Resources, Civ. Action No. 1:10CV23, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4473 (N.D.W. Va., Jan. 18, 2011), (Memorandum Opinion and Order, dkt. 34). The causes of action in Kerns [*3] differed significantly from those set forth in Backwater and this case, although the factual allegations were somewhat similar.

[3] Windstar has not perfected service on Young, nor has he entered an appearance in this case.

• On November 11, 2008, Range sent the lease back to Windstar, unsigned and stamped "VOID." Attached was a letter stating that the lease was not approved by Range management, but offering an alternative on slightly [*6] less favorable terms to Windstar (providing for the same total compensation, but the bonus would be spaced out over five years instead of paid immediately). The letter stated that the proposal would remain open until December 31, 2008;

• Summers contacted Young, who made further representations, including that the lease was contingent only on a title search and that the first installment of the bonus payment would be made in early January of 2009 if Windstar agreed to the new proposal;

• Summers agreed, and signed the new proposal. Young confirmed that Windstar had been "marked down" for a "2009 lease." He also stated in person that "the money is coming;"

• Windstar never received any payment, and, after several inquiries, Range informed Summers in May 2009 that the lease was "under management review." In June 2009, Range stated that it had stopped leasing in West Virginia and would not pursue a lease with Windstar; and

• Because of the drop in gas prices during the time it believed it had a binding contract with Range, Windstar was unable to lease its gas rights to another company at any price.

II. ANALYSIS

Windstar asserts seven causes of action, all of which Range and Gary argue fail [*7] to state a claim. In the context of a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), the Court must accept the factual allegations of the complaint as true, but need not accept the plaintiff's legal conclusions. Francis v. Giacomelli, 588 F.3d 186, 193 (4th Cir. 2009). With this standard in mind, the Court addresses in turn each cause of action as pled in the complaint.

A. Count One - Breach of Contract

This count is alleged only against the Range defendants, who argue that the proposed lease and DPO letter were not offers but merely an invitation to bargain. In Range's view, Summers's signature merely constituted an offer by Windstar, which Range could accept or reject at its discretion. The lease itself stated that it was subject to approval by Range's management.

As this Court ruled in Backwater, however, Range's argument fails on a motion to dismiss because, at a minimum, when combined with the written documents, Young's statement that management approval was a mere formality creates a plausible claim that Windstar and Range had enforceable contracts for both the bonus payment set forth in the DPO letter and compensation due under the lease. Also, as discussed below, because the plaintiff [*8] has adequately pleaded a case for fraud, these oral representations place the contract outside the statute of frauds. The Court therefore DENIES Range's motion to dismiss with respect to Count One.

B. Count Two - Specific Performance

Although pled as a separate count, the relief sought in Count Two – compelling Range to perform under the lease – is not an independent cause of action, but merely a possible remedy should Windstar ultimately establish the existence of a contract and a breach by Range. Contrary to the argument advanced by Range both in Backwater and here, the West Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals has recognized the possibility of ordering specific performance under a mineral lease. See Blair v. Dickinson, 133 W. Va. 38, 54 S.E.2d 828 (1949). Thus, although the count does not state a separate cause of action, it would be inappropriate to prematurely limit the possibility of the plaintiff's recovery of this remedy. Accordingly, the Court DENIES the defendants' motions to dismiss with respect to Count Two.

C. Count Three - W. Va. Antitrust Act

Windstar alleges a cause of action for illegal restraint of trade under W. Va. Code § 47-18-3. As a matter of law, however, its claim fails because [*9] Range, Gary and Young were not competitors, but rather members of the same enterprise, and thus, as a matter of law, cannot combine or conspire in manner giving rise to antitrust liability.

In Princeton Ins. Agency, Inc. v. Erie Ins. Co., 225 W. Va. 178, 690 S.E.2d 587, 593 (W. Va. 2009), the West Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals explicitly stated that, as directed by W. Va. Code § 47-18-16, it would "look to federal [antitrust] law to define what constitutes an unlawful restraint of trade." In that same case, the Court also held that the "legally distinct entities" requirement of federal law, which requires at least two separate economic actors to sustain an illegal combination or conspiracy, is applicable under the West Virginia Antitrust Act. Id. at 593 (quoting Oksanen v. Page Memorial Hospital, 945 F.2d 696, 702 (4th Cir. 1991).

Thus, because it is undisputed that M.W. Gary was an agent of Range, and Adam Young an agent of either or both of them, there can be no contract, conspiracy, or combination between any of them that would support a cause of action under the West Virginia Antitrust Act. Accordingly, the Court GRANTS the defendants' motions to dismiss Count Three.

D. Count Four - Sherman Antitrust [*10] Act

Federal antitrust law also does not prohibit the concerted action of persons or entities engaged in the same overall enterprise. Oksanen, 945 F.2d at 703 (citing Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984)). Thus, Windstar's Sherman Act allegations fail to state a claim as a matter of law, and the Court GRANTS the defendants' motions to dismiss Count Four of the complaint.

E. Count Five - Fraud and Civil Conspiracy

Count Five contains two separate causes of action, one for fraud and one for civil conspiracy. While the former is adequately pled, the conspiracy claim fails as a matter of law for reasons similar to those that warranted dismissal of the state and federal antitrust allegations in Counts Three and Four.

The facts alleged in the complaint support an allegation of fraud under Rule 9 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. "[T]he 'circumstances' required to be pled with particularity under Rule 9(b) are 'the time, place, and contents of the false representations, as well as the identity of the person making the misrepresentation and what he obtained thereby.'" Harrison v. Westinghouse Savannah River Co., 176 F.3d 776, 784 (4th Cir. 1999)(quoting 5 Charles [*11] Alan Wright and Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure: Civil § 1297, at 590 (2d ed. 1990)).

It is not implausible to infer from the allegedly inflated offers, and the obfuscatory contract language in combination with Young's alleged statements, that Range and its agents intentionally misled Windstar into believing that a binding contract had been formed, although it never intended to carry out the contract unless later developments made doing so profitable.

The false statements element is satisfied by the various representations allegedly made by Mr. Young in late 2008 and early 2009, including that the lease would be valid depending only on a title search, and that the money was "on the way," or would be paid in early January 2009. Windstar states unequivocally that it relied on these statements to its detriment by not entertaining other offers both before and after it signed with Range.

Accepting the complaint's version of Mr. Young's statements as true, as the Court must on a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), it was not unreasonable for Windstar to rely on those representations. Finally, Range allegedly gained a valuable option to lease the plaintiff's gas rights by [*12] virtue of its misleading statements. Thus, the Court DENIES the motion to dismiss with respect to the fraud claim set forth in Count Five.

Range and Gary correctly assert, however, that a corporation cannot conspire with its agents or employees. See Ridgeway Coal Co., Inc. v. FMC Corp., 616 F.Supp. 404 (S.D.W. Va. 1985). As previously noted, at all relevant times, Gary and Young were agents or sub-agents of Range. Thus, the Court GRANTS the defendants' motion to dismiss the civil conspiracy cause of action contained in Count Five.

F. Count Six - Negligent Misrepresentation

This claim survives because Windstar plausibly alleges that, when Young stated the lease was subject only to a title search, he knew or should have known that statement was false – that, in fact, Range intended to repudiate the lease unless it later determined that lease to be in its best interests. Alternatively, Range would have known its true intentions and should have made them clear to its landmen to enable them to fairly deal with potential lessors.

The facts pled support a cause of action in tort. If Range did in fact intend to review each lease on an economic basis, it would be wrong for it to allow its agent, [*13] Young, to represent otherwise in negotiations with gas owners. If Young knew of the scheme, his failure to disclose it would, at a minimum, be negligent. Finally, as already stated, Windstar has adequately alleged that it relied on this misinformation and declined offers from other gas companies, to its economic detriment. Thus, the Court DENIES the motion to dismiss Count Six of the complaint.

G. Count Seven - Tortious Interference with Prospective Contract

Again, Windstar has sufficiently alleged that it received bona fide offers to lease its gas rights after signing with Range. Range argues that it did not commit any affirmative act to interfere with these offers, even if they were legitimately an expectancy. Windstar, however, convincingly argues that the "exclusionary scheme," and specifically the continuing misrepresentations of Range, Young, and Gary, interfered with its prospective contracts with other gas companies.

Had Range, sometime before the spring of 2009, unequivocally represented to Windstar that in fact there was no contract until management approved the lease (that is, that Windstar's signature constituted only an offer, as Range now argues), Windstar would have been [*14] free to abandon that arrangement at any time and sign with another company. The facts as pled suggest that Range knew otherwise - that other companies would be making offers to owners of the Marcellus shale reserves, and, in an effort to prevent its competitors from doing business with the plaintiff, it intentionally misled Windstar into believing that the parties had a binding contract. Given the finding earlier in this opinion that Windstar has stated a claim for fraud based on Mr. Young's repeated reassurances, this claim survives as well, and the Court therefore DENIES the motions with respect to Count Seven.

CONCLUSION

Windstar's claims of civil conspiracy and violations of state and federal antitrust statutes fail to state a claim as a matter of law, and must be dismissed under Rule 12(b)(6). Its remaining causes of action, however, are adequately pled and survive the defendant's motions at this time. In summary, the Court GRANTS-IN-PART and DENIES-IN-PART the motions to dismiss filed by Gary (dkt. 17) and by Range (dkt. 19), with respect to each count of the complaint as follows:

• Count One: DENIED.

• Count Two: DENIED.

• Count Three: GRANTED, and Count Three of the complaint is [*15] DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.

• Count Four: GRANTED, and Count Four of the complaint is DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.

• Count Five: DENIED with respect to the claim of fraud; GRANTED with respect to civil conspiracy, and the claim of civil conspiracy is DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.

• Count Six: DENIED.

• Count Seven: DENIED.

It is so ORDERED.

The Court directs the Clerk to transmit copies of this Order to counsel of record.

HN4[] Standards of Review, Clearly Erroneous Review

Whether a governmental entity had actual notice of a plaintiff's claim presents a mixed question of fact and law. What the governmental entity knew about the plaintiff's claim is a factual finding and may not be overturned unless clearly erroneous. Whether the governmental entity's knowledge constituted actual notice under the law is a legal conclusion that an appellate court reviews de novo. The plaintiff bears the burden of proving actual notice. Whether a governmental entity suffered prejudice is also a mixed question of fact and law. The appellate court will uphold the circuit court's factual findings unless clearly erroneous. How these facts fit the statutory concept of prejudice is a question of law that the appellate court reviews de novo. The plaintiff bears the burden of proving lack of prejudice.

Three factors should be considered when determining whether to exempt a specific statute from the notice of claim requirements: (1) whether there is a specific statutory scheme for which the plaintiff seeks exemption; (2) whether enforcement of the notice of claim requirements found in Wis. Stat. § 893.80 (2005-06) would hinder a legislative preference for a prompt resolution of the type of claim under consideration; and (3) whether the purposes for which Wis. Stat. § 893.80 (2005-06) was enacted would be furthered by requiring that a notice of claim be filed.

HN8[] Complaints, Prelitigation Notices

In determining whether to exempt a specific statute from the notice of claim requirements, the first factor a court considers is whether there is a specific statutory scheme for which the plaintiff seeks exemption from the notice of claim requirements found in Wis. Stat. § 893.80 (2005-06). If a statute provides a specific statutory scheme that conflicts with the general intent behind the 120-day time limit provided in Wis. Stat. § 893.80 (2005-06), then the specific statutory scheme will take precedence.

HN9[] Complaints, Prelitigation Notices

A specific statutory scheme conflicts with the notice of claim requirements found in Wis. Stat. § 893.80 (2005-06) when the specific statute contains a more restrictive limitations period than the 120-day notice of claim requirements.

Wis. Stat. § 133.18(5) (2005-06) requires that each civil action under this chapter and each motion or other proceeding in such action shall be expedited in every way and shall be heard at the earliest practicable date. Opinion

[*P1] [725] [424] MICHAEL J. GABLEMAN, J. This is a review of a published decision of the court of appeals reversing the circuit court order granting summary judgment in favor of Oneida County.[1] This case concerns an agreement between Oneida County and Waste Management, Inc., (Waste Management) for the disposal of municipal solid waste. The agreement allowed Oneida County to charge Waste Management a $5.25 fee for each ton of municipal solid waste that Waste Management delivered to the Oneida County Solid Waste Facility (the Facility). The agreement in turn allowed Waste Management to charge Oneida County $24.50 per ton to remove all loaded transfer trailers [*2] from the Facility and transport them to an approved landfill.

[1] E-Z Roll Off, LLC v. Cnty. of Oneida, 2010 WI App 76, 325 Wis. 2d 423, 785 N.W.2d 645.

[*P2] [726] E-Z Roll Off, LLC (E-Z), which was paying a fee of $54.00 to Oneida County for each ton of municipal solid waste it delivered to the Facility, brought suit against Oneida County alleging that the agreement created an illegal restraint of trade in violation of Wis. Stat. § 133.03(1) (2005-06).[2] The circuit court, the Honorable Patrick F. O'Melia presiding, held that E-Z could not bring suit because E-Z had not filed a timely notice of claim in accordance with Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1)(a). [425] The court of appeals reversed, holding that antitrust actions brought pursuant to Wis. Stat. § 133.18 are exempt from the notice of claim requirements found in § 893.80(1). The question before us therefore is whether the notice of claim requirements found in § 893.80(1) apply to antitrust actions brought pursuant to § 133.18. If the notice of claim requirements apply, we must next consider whether E-Z satisfied these requirements.

[*P3] We hold that HN1[] antitrust [*3] actions brought pursuant to Wis. Stat. § 133.18 are not exempt from the notice of claim requirements found in Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1). Additionally, we hold that E-Z did not meet the requirements of § 893.80(1)(a) when it failed to give Oneida County notice of its claim within the 120-day limitations period. Accordingly, we reverse the court of appeals and conclude that the circuit court properly granted summary judgment in favor of Oneida County.

[*P4] E-Z was founded in 1996 by its owners Todd and Paula Laddusire. E-Z was in the business of collecting solid waste from residential and commercial customers. [727] From 1996 to 2003, E-Z was one of several companies that hauled solid waste to the Facility. During this time, Oneida County charged all haulers a $54.00 tipping fee for each ton of municipal solid waste that was delivered to the Facility.[3] A hauler who delivered at least 100 tons of municipal solid waste to the Facility could qualify for a $10 per ton rebate each year. E-Z regularly qualified for this rebate.

[*P5] On June 25, 2003, Oneida County executed an agreement with Waste Management. Pursuant to this agreement, Oneida County charged Waste Management a $5.25 tipping fee for each ton of municipal solid waste that it delivered to the Facility. All other haulers (including E-Z) continued to pay a $54.00 tipping fee. The agreement also required Waste Management to remove all loaded transfer trailers from the Facility and transport them to an approved landfill. Under the agreement, Oneida County paid Waste Management $24.50 for each ton of municipal solid waste that was loaded onto Waste Management trucks for transportation to such a landfill.

[*P6] The parties dispute the point in time when E-Z learned of Oneida County's agreement with Waste Management. E-Z contends that it first learned of the agreement in February 2004 when one of its employees was present at the Facility and saw a scale ticket that showed the lower tipping fee charged to Waste Management. Oneida County claims that E-Z received notice of the agreement via a public request for proposals [*5] that [728] was published in April 2003. In addition, Oneida County claims that Todd Laddusire attended a meeting in June 2003 in which Oneida County Solid Waste Director Bart Sexton advised interested haulers of the proposed $5.25 tipping fee as well as the other terms which were eventually incorporated into Oneida County's contract with Waste Management.

[*P7] It is undisputed that on February 17, 2004, the Laddusires met with Sexton to present their concerns regarding Oneida County's agreement with Waste Management. The focus of the Laddusires' concern was the $5.25 tipping fee Waste Management paid to Oneida County under the [426] agreement. The Laddusires were upset that Waste Management's tipping fee was dramatically less than the $54.00 tipping fee E-Z paid to Oneida County. At the February 17, 2004 meeting, the Laddusires told Sexton that they believed the agreement created a "monopoly." They demanded that E-Z's tipping fee be reduced to $24.50 per ton. Sexton refused to reduce E-Z's tipping fee.

They are called 'tipping' fees because garbage trucks literally [*4] tip their back end to dump out the carried waste." United Haulers Ass'n, Inc. v. Oneida-Herkimer Solid Waste Mgmt. Auth., 550 U.S. 330, 336 n.1, 127 S. Ct. 1786, 167 L. Ed. 2d 655 (2007).

[*P8] In April 2004, E-Z filed a written complaint with the Wisconsin Department of Agriculture, Trade and Consumer Protection (DATCP). The complaint alleged that the agreement between Oneida County and Waste [*6] Management constituted a monopoly, and that E-Z should be "reimbursed" for the tipping fees it had paid to Oneida County in excess of $5.25 per ton since that agreement was executed. The complaint alleged that this "reimbursement" totaled "about $98,000."

[*P9] On May 4, 2004, the DATCP forwarded the complaint to Sexton, who responded by letter on May 20. In his response letter, Sexton disputed each of E-Z's charges and went on to state that the contract bidding process had been conducted in accordance with appropriate state statutes. Additionally, Sexton stated that [729] E-Z, along with any other business entity, would have had the right to submit a bid during the bidding process.

[*P10] On September 28, 2005, E-Z filed a "Notice of Injury" and "Statement of Claim" with the Oneida County Clerk of Courts. In its Notice of Injury, E-Z asserted that it was injured when Oneida County entered into a conspiracy to restrain trade in violation of Wis. Stat. § 133.03 by executing the agreement with Waste Management. In its Statement of Claim, E-Z claimed $239,814.69 for loss of past earnings and $959,285.76 for loss of future earnings.[4] Oneida County denied E-Z's claim.

[*P11] On April 20, 2006, E-Z filed suit against Oneida County in the Circuit Court for Oneida County, the Honorable Robert E. Kinney then presiding,[5] seeking (1) a declaratory judgment that Oneida County's agreement with Waste Management constituted an illegal restraint of trade in violation of Wis. Stat. § 133.03(1),[6] and (2) treble damages, attorneys fees, and costs pursuant to Wis. Stat. § 133.18.

[*P12] [730] On September 29, 2008, Oneida County filed a motion for summary judgment, arguing that E-Z failed to comply with the notice of claim requirements found in Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1). Specifically, Oneida County argued that E-Z served [427] its notice of claim well beyond the 120-day time limit provided in § 893.80(1)(a). The circuit court agreed with Oneida County and rejected E-Z's argument that antitrust actions brought pursuant to Wis. Stat. § 133.18 are exempt from the notice of claim requirements found in § 893.80(1). The circuit court found that the 120-day limitations period began to accrue on June 25, 2003, when the agreement was signed, and that the Laddusires' September 28, 2005 notice of claim was untimely. Additionally, the circuit court found that E-Z had failed to establish that [*9] Oneida County had actual knowledge of the claim and further found that E-Z had failed to establish that Oneida County was not prejudiced by the untimely notice. As a result, the circuit court granted summary judgment in favor of Oneida County.

[*P13] E-Z appealed and, in a published decision, the court of appeals reversed the judgment of the circuit court.[7] Applying the three-factor test set forth in Town of Burke v. City of Madison, 225 Wis. 2d 615, 625, 593 N.W.2d 822 (Ct. App. 1999), the court of appeals concluded that (1) Wis. Stat. § 133.18 contained a specific [731] statutory scheme for antitrust actions,[8] E-Z Roll Off, 325 Wis. 2d 423, 2010 WI App 76, ¶18, 785 N.W.2d 645; (2) applying

[4] As we discuss in ¶20, in order to sue [*7] a governmental entity, a plaintiff must file a "notice of the circumstances of the claim" within 120 days of the event giving rise to the claim and must also file a separate "claim containing the claimant's address and relief sought." For the sake of clarity, we use the phrase "notice of claim" to refer to the "notice of the circumstances of the claim" required by Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1)(a). Further, we use the phrase "statement of claim" to refer to the "claim containing the address of the claimant and an itemized statement of the relief sought" found in Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1)(b).

[5] Judge Kinney retired during the pendency of this action and Judge O'Melia presided over the motion for summary judgment.

[6] Wis. Stat. § 133.03(1) states that:

> Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, [*8] or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce is illegal. Every person who makes any contract or engages in any combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce is guilty of a Class H felony, except that, notwithstanding the maximum fine specified in s. 939.50(3)(h), the person may be fined not more than $100,000 if a corporation, or, if any other person, may be fined not more than $50,000.

the notice of claim requirements to antitrust actions brought pursuant to § 133.18 would hinder the legislature's preference for prompt resolution of antitrust claims, Id., ¶24; and (3) the purposes of providing a notice of claim would not be furthered if the notice of claim requirements were applied to antitrust actions. Id., ¶27. The court of appeals held that antitrust actions are exempt from the notice of claim requirements. Id., ¶32. Accordingly, the court of appeals reversed the circuit court.

[*P14] Oneida County then petitioned this court for review, which we granted.

II. STANDARD OF REVIEW

[*P15] This case comes before us on summary judgment. HN2[] "We review the grant of a motion for summary judgment de novo, and apply the methodology specified in Wis. Stat. § 802.08. That is, we determine whether there is any genuine issue as to any material fact, and if not, which party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Borek Cranberry Marsh, Inc. v. Jackson Cnty., 2010 WI 95, ¶11, 328 Wis. 2d 613, 785 N.W.2d 615.

[*P16] This case also involves the interpretation of the notice of claim statute, found in Wis. Stat. § 893.80, and the interpretation of the antitrust damages statute, found in Wis. Stat. § 133.18. HN3[] The interpretation of a [732] statute is a question of law that we review de novo. *Hocking v. [*P18] Whether a governmental entity suffered prejudice is also a mixed question of fact and law. Olsen, 133 Wis. 2d at 378. We uphold the circuit court's factual findings unless clearly erroneous. Id. at 378-79. How these facts fit the statutory concept of prejudice is a question of law we review de novo. Id. at 379. The plaintiff bears the burden of proving lack of prejudice. Weiss, 79 Wis. 2d at 227.

III. DISCUSSION

[*P19] This case requires us to examine two issues. First, we consider whether antitrust claims brought pursuant to Wis. Stat. § 133.18 are exempt from the notice of claim requirements found in Wis. Stat. § 893.80. Second, we consider whether E-Z satisfied the notice of claim requirements set forth in § 893.80(1). We discuss each issue in turn.

[733] A. Antitrust Claims Brought Pursuant to Wis. Stat. § 133.18 [*12] Are Not Exempt from the Notice of Claim Requirements Found in Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1)

[*P20] HN5[] In order to commence a lawsuit against a governmental entity, a claimant must, as a precursor to actually filing suit, serve written notice of the circumstances of the claim within 120 days after the happening of the event.[9] Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1). Additionally, a claimant must present a written claim to an appropriate official. § 893.80(1)(b). When such a claim is disallowed, [734] a claimant has six months to bring suit. § 893.80(1g).[10]

[8] As we explain [*10] in Part III.A.1., a "specific statutory scheme" exists when the terms of a specific statute conflict with the general notice of claim requirements found in Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1)(a).

[9] Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1) reads in relevant part:

[*P21] We initially recognized in Department of Natural Resources v. City of Waukesha, 184 Wis. 2d 178, 191, 515 N.W.2d 888 (1994), [*14] the plain meaning of Wis. Stat. § 893.80: "[t]he language of the statute clearly and unambiguously makes the notice of claim requirements applicable to all actions." However, we subsequently recognized in Auchinleck that our holding in Waukesha had been "too broad." State ex. rel Auchinleck v. Town of LaGrange, [429] 200 Wis. 2d 585, 597, 547 N.W.2d 587 (1996) (exempting claims for open records violations and open meetings violations from the application of Wis. Stat. § 893.80).

[*P22] A number of cases following Auchinleck created additional exceptions to the application of the notice of claim requirements. See Gillen v. City of Neenah, 219 Wis. 2d 806, 822-23, 580 N.W.2d 628 (1998) (exempting actions to enjoin violations of the public trust doctrine under Wis. Stat. § 30.294); Little Sissabagama Lake Shore Owners Ass'n, Inc., v. Town of Edgewater, 208 Wis. 2d 259, 265, 559 N.W.2d 914 (Ct. App. 1997) (exempting actions to appeal a county board's determination regarding the requirements for tax-exempt status under Wis. Stat. § 70.11(20)(d)); Gamroth v. Vill. of Jackson, 215 Wis. 2d 251, 259, 571 N.W.2d 917 (Ct. App. 1997) (exempting actions to appeal special assessments under Wis. Stat. § 66.60(12)(a)).

[*P23] [735] [*15] In Town of Burke, 225 Wis. 2d 615, 593 N.W.2d 822, the court of appeals provided a structure for analyzing our notice of claim jurisprudence. After examining our prior notice of claim case law, the court of appeals concluded that HN7[] three factors should be considered when determining whether to exempt a specific statute from the notice of claim requirements: (1) whether there is a specific statutory scheme for which the plaintiff seeks exemption; (2) whether enforcement of the notice of claim requirements found in Wis. Stat. § 893.80 would hinder a legislative preference for a prompt resolution of the type of claim under consideration; and (3) whether the purposes for which § 893.80 was enacted would be furthered by requiring that a notice of claim be filed. Id. at 625. Applying this framework, the Town of Burke court concluded that the municipal annexation procedures set forth in Wis. Stat. § 66.021 were exempt from the notice of claim requirements. Id. at 626.

[*P24] The three factors articulated in Town of Burke have since become the accepted framework by which our appellate courts have considered exceptions to the notice of claim requirements found in Wis. Stat. § 893.80. See Ecker Bros. v. Calumet Cnty., 2009 WI App 112, ¶6, 321 Wis. 2d 51, 772 N.W.2d 240; [*16] Oak Creek Citizen's Action Comm. v. City of Oak Creek, 2007 WI App 196, ¶7, 304 Wis. 2d 702, 738 N.W.2d 168; Nesbitt Farms, LLC v. City of Madison, 2003 WI App 122, ¶9, 265 Wis. 2d 422, 665 N.W.2d 379. We therefore apply the Town of Burke test to determine whether antitrust actions brought pursuant to Wis. Stat. § 133.18 are exempt from the notice of claim requirements found in § 893.80.

> HN6[] (1) Except as provided in subs. (1g), (1m), (1p) and (8), no action may be brought or maintained against any volunteer fire company organized under ch. 213, political corporation, governmental subdivision or agency thereof nor against any officer, official, agent or employee of the corporation, subdivision or agency for acts done in their official capacity or in the course of their agency or employment upon a claim or cause of action unless:
> (a) Within 120 days after the happening of the event giving rise to the claim, written notice of the circumstances of the claim signed by the party, agent or attorney is served on the volunteer [*13] fire company, political corporation, governmental subdivision or agency and on the officer, official, agent or employee under s. 801.11. Failure to give the requisite notice shall not bar action on the claim if the fire company, corporation, subdivision or agency had actual notice of the claim and the claimant shows to the satisfaction of the court that the delay or failure to give the requisite notice has not been prejudicial to the defendant fire company, corporation, subdivision or agency or to the defendant officer, official, agent or employee; and
> (b) A claim containing the address of the claimant and an itemized statement of the relief sought is presented to the appropriate clerk or person who performs the duties of a clerk or secretary for the defendant fire company, corporation, subdivision or agency and the claim is disallowed.

We discuss exceptions to this general rule in Part III.B.2.

[10] A claim may be disallowed in two ways. First, the governmental entity may serve a written notice of disallowance on the claimant. Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1g). Second, if the governmental entity fails to act within 120 days, the claim is considered disallowed. Id.

[736] 1. Specific Statutory Scheme

[*P25] HN8[] The first factor we consider is "whether there is a specific statutory scheme for which the plaintiff seeks exemption" from the notice of claim requirements found in Wis. Stat. § 893.80. Town of Burke, 225 Wis. 2d at 625. If a statute provides a specific statutory scheme that conflicts with the general intent behind the 120-day time limit provided in Wis. Stat. § 893.80, then the specific statutory scheme will take precedence. City of Racine v. Waste Facility Siting Bd., 216 Wis. 2d 616, 625, 575 N.W.2d 712 (1998).

[*P26] In the instant case, the court of appeals relied on our decision in Gillen v. City of Neenah to conclude that the statutory scheme for antitrust actions brought pursuant to Wis. Stat. § 133.18 takes precedence over the general notice of claim requirements of § 893.80(1). [*17] We disagree. In Gillen, we held that when a statute allows a claimant to seek immediate injunctive relief, that statute irreconcilably conflicts with the general notice of claim [430] provisions of Wis. Stat. § 893.80, "which requires a plaintiff to provide a governmental body with a notice of claim, and to wait 120 days or until the claim is disallowed before filing an action." Gillen, 219 Wis. 2d at 822. The Gillen court concluded that, because application of the 120-day time limit imposed by Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1)(b) clearly frustrated the plaintiffs' specific right to immediate injunctive relief, the procedures setting forth injunctive relief took precedence over the general notice provisions of § 893.80.

[*P27] As illustrated in Gillen, our appellate courts have generally concluded that HN9[] a specific statutory scheme conflicts with the notice of claim requirements [737] found in Wis. Stat. § 893.80 when the specific statute contains a more restrictive limitations period than the 120-day notice of claim requirements. See id. at 821-22 (specific statute allowed immediate injunctive relief); Auchinleck, 200 Wis. 2d at 592 (specific statute allowed an action to be commenced within 20 days); Town of Burke, 225 Wis. 2d at 625 [*18] (specific statute required an action to be commenced within 90 days); Little Sissabagama, 208 Wis. 2d at 266 (specific statute required an action to be commenced within 90 days); Oak Creek Citizen's Action Comm., 304 Wis. 2d at 709 (specific statute required clerk to take action within 15 days and common council to take action within 30 days).

[*P28] While we find the reasoning of Gillen to be instructive, we conclude that its holding is inapplicable to the present case. In contrast to the plaintiffs in Gillen, E-Z does not seek immediate injunctive relief under § 133.16. Rather, E-Z seeks declaratory relief and damages under Wis. Stat. § 133.18.[11] HN10[] Unlike immediate injunctive relief, which "is designed to prevent injury," Gillen, 219 Wis. 2d at 821, declaratory relief is not, by its nature, in conflict with providing governmental [738] entities a 120-day period to review a claim.[12] We note that the Declaratory Judgment Act, found in Wis. Stat. § 806.04, provides no statute of limitations. We further note that § 133.18 provides a six-year limitations period for actions seeking damages for violations of antitrust law.[13]

[11] The prayer for relief contained in E-Z's complaint requests only (1) a declaratory judgment that the agreement is in violation of Wis. Stat. § 133.03(1), and (2) damages, attorneys fees, and costs pursuant to Wis. Stat. § 133.18. E-Z made no request for an injunction under Wis. Stat. § 133.16. The circuit court clarified this at the summary judgment hearing:

> [Counsel for E-Z]: . . . We're asking, Your Honor, for injunctive relief so this method of operation stops and stops immediately.
> [The Court]: See, I didn't read your complaint as asking for injunctive relief, but perhaps I missed that.
> [Counsel for E-Z]: Let me find it. Well, maybe it would be better stated as to—as to declaratory relief, that is declaring the contract by illegal I think is the way I phrased it in my complaint.

[12] "Declaratory relief" is "a binding adjudication that establishes the rights and other legal relations of the parties without providing for or ordering enforcement." Black's Law Dictionary 846 (7th ed. 1999). In contrast, "injunctive relief" entitles a party to "a court [*20] order commanding or preventing an action," Id. at 788, and "is usually requested simultaneously with, or soon after, commencing an action by a motion for a temporary restraining order and/or a preliminary injunction." Gillen, 219 Wis. 2d at 821.

Accordingly, [431] neither E-Z's claim for declaratory relief nor E-Z's claim for damages [*19] is brought pursuant to a specific statute whose terms conflict with the general notice of claim requirements found in Wis. Stat. § 893.80.

[*P29] [739] We therefore hold that § 133.18 does not contain a specific statutory scheme in conflict with the notice of claim requirements found in § 893.80.[14]

2. Legislative Preference for Prompt Resolution

[*P30] The second factor we consider is "whether enforcement of Wis. Stat. § 893.80 would hinder a legislative preference for a prompt resolution of the type of claim under consideration." Town of Burke, 225 Wis. 2d at 625. We therefore examine whether the legislature has expressed a preference for prompt resolution of antitrust damages actions pursuant to Wis. Stat. § 133.18 and, if so, whether applying the 120-day notice of claim requirements would somehow hinder that preference.

[*P31] HN11[] Wisconsin Stat. § 133.18(5) requires that "[e]ach civil action under this chapter and each motion or other proceeding in such action shall be expedited in every way and shall be heard at the earliest practicable date." This language demonstrates the legislature's [740] preference for the prompt resolution of antitrust claims brought pursuant to Wis. Stat. § 133.18. E-Z argues that applying the notice of claim requirements found in Wis. Stat. § 893.80 to antitrust actions brought pursuant to § 133.18 hinders prompt resolution of such claims. As the circuit court correctly recognized, applying the notice of claim requirements to antitrust [*23] actions brought pursuant to § 133.18 promotes, rather than hinders, the legislature's preference for expediency in the adjudication of such claims.

[*P32] This is so because ordinarily a plaintiff has six years to seek damages pursuant to Wis. Stat. § 133.18. See § 133.18(2). However, if a plaintiff advances a claim against a governmental entity, it is subject to the notice of claim requirements. See Wis. Stat. § 893.80. In that case, the plaintiff would be required to serve written notice of the claim upon the governmental entity within 120 days after the event giving rise to the claim. See § 893.80(1)(a). If the claim is disallowed, the plaintiff whose claim has been denied would have only six months, as [432] opposed to the six years otherwise afforded by Wis. Stat. § 133.18(2), to file the complaint. See § 893.80(1g). It is clear that such timelines encourage, rather than hinder, the prompt resolution of § 133.18 actions.

[*P33] Accordingly, we hold that enforcing the general notice of claim requirements found in Wis. Stat. § 893.80 promotes, rather than hinders, the legislature's preference for prompt resolution of such claims.

3. Furthering the Purposes of the Notice of Claim Statute

[13] Wisconsin Stat. § 133.18(1)(b) states that "[n]o damages, interest on damages, costs or attorney fees may be recovered under this chapter from any local governmental unit or against any official or employee of a local governmental unit who acted in an official capacity." Subsection (1)(b) is seemingly in tension with § 133.18(6), which caps the amount of monetary damages a plaintiff may recover in a suit against a governmental entity. The circuit court, relying on subsection (1)(b), struck E-Z's request for treble damages, costs, and attorney fees under § 133.18(1)(a). However, the circuit court expressly reserved the question of whether the language of subsection (1)(b) "precludes recovery of any monetary damages against [Oneida] County for violations alleged under any provision in Wis. Stat. ch. 133." Neither the circuit court nor the court of appeals further addressed this tension because both courts concluded that the question of whether [*21] the notice of claim statute applied was dispositive. This issue was not briefed before this court and we therefore need not address whether E-Z pled a viable claim for damages against Oneida County pursuant to § 133.18.

[14] The court of appeals also relied on Nesbitt in holding that Wis. Stat. § 133.18 actions constituted a specific statutory scheme. Nesbitt Farms, LLC v. City of Madison, 2003 WI App 122, 265 Wis. 2d 422, 665 N.W.2d 379. In Nesbitt, the court of appeals considered whether condemnation appeals brought under Wis. Stat. § 32.05 were subject to the notice of claim requirements. The Nesbitt court held that Wis. Stat. § 32.05 provided a detailed "procedure and deadline for commencing [condemnation] actions, as well as specifying other matters, such as how other interested parties may join the appeal and what issues may be tried." Id., ¶10. Wis. Stat. § 133.18 contains no such detailed procedures. Instead, § 133.18 merely creates a cause of action, defines the damages, and provides a lengthy six-year statute of limitations. Nesbitt [*22] is, therefore, easily distinguishable.

[*P34] The third factor [*24] we consider is "whether the purpose for which § 893.80(1) was enacted would be [741] furthered by requiring that a notice of claim be filed." Town of Burke, 225 Wis. 2d at 625. We have previously held that HN12[] the notice of claim statute serves two purposes: (1) to give governmental entities the opportunity to investigate and evaluate potential claims, and (2) to afford governmental entities the opportunity to compromise and budget for potential settlement or litigation. Thorp v. Town of Lebanon, 2000 WI 60, ¶¶23, 28, 235 Wis. 2d 610, 612 N.W.2d 59.

[*P37] The additional sixty-eight months during which claimants could bring their actions would obviously hamper a governmental entity's ability to investigate and evaluate claims. See, e.g., Olsen, 133 Wis. 2d at 380 (holding in a condemnation action that three years of vegetative growth made a determination of any damages difficult). It is axiomatic that a governmental entity can more effectively investigate the circumstances surrounding a claim that accrued within the [742] 120 days preceding the receipt of notice than it can investigate a claim that accrued up to six years in the past. In a similar vein, it is more likely that with the passage of time such investigation and evaluation will become more problematic as governmental employees leave their posts, memories fade, and witnesses become unavailable.

[*P38] Second, applying the notice of claim statute to antitrust actions brought pursuant to Wis. Stat. § 133.18 allows governmental entities a greater opportunity to compromise and budget [*26] for potential settlement or litigation. If the notice of claim statute were not applied to antitrust actions brought pursuant to § 133.18, governmental entities would no longer be provided with a 120-day period in which to review the claim before the claimant could file suit. We are compelled by the nature of E-Z's argument to note the obvious: it is easier for a governmental entity to compromise with a claimant when the governmental entity has the 120-day period required by the notice of claim statute in which it may review the claim and negotiate with the claimant prior to the commencement of litigation. Further, this period [433] grants governmental entities 120 days in which to adjust budgets to account for potential settlement or litigation. As a result, the purposes for which the notice of claim statute was enacted would be fulfilled if parties filing antitrust actions pursuant to § 133.18 were required to follow the general notice of claim requirements.

[*P39] Applying the three-factor Town of Burke test, we conclude that Wis. Stat. § 133.18 antitrust actions are not exempt from the notice of claim requirements set forth in Wis. Stat. § 893.80. We therefore next discuss whether E-Z satisfied [*27] the notice of claim requirements.

[743] B. Notice of Claim Requirements

[*P40] Under Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1), no action may be brought against a governmental subdivision unless paragraphs (a) and (b) are satisfied:

> HN13[] (a) Within 120 days after the happening of the event giving rise to the claim, written notice of the circumstances of the claim signed by the party, agent or attorney is served on the . . . governmental subdivision . . . . Failure to give the requisite notice shall not bar action on the claim if the . . . subdivision . . . had actual notice of the claim and the claimant shows to the satisfaction of the court that the delay or failure to give the requisite notice has not been prejudicial to the . . . subdivision . . . ; and

(b) A claim containing the address of the claimant and an itemized statement of the relief sought is presented to the appropriate clerk or person who performs the duties of a clerk or secretary for the defendant . . . subdivision . . . and the claim is disallowed.

[*P41] First, we consider whether the notice of claim was filed within 120 days of the "happening of the event." Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1)(a). This requires us to consider whether the continuing violation doctrine applies [*28] in Wisconsin.[15] Second, we consider whether Oneida County had actual notice of the claim and whether it suffered prejudice.

[744] 1. 120-Day Notice Requirement

[*P42] Wisconsin Stat. § 893.80(1) requires that E-Z serve its notice of claim on Oneida County "[w]ithin 120 days after the happening of the event giving rise to the claim . . . ." Oneida County argues that the "event" giving rise to E-Z's claim was the signing of the agreement with Waste Management on June 25, 2003. E-Z contends that its cause of action did not accrue until discovery of the agreement and that such discovery did not occur until February 2004. See Wis. Stat. § 133.18(4).

[*P43] We need not decide when E-Z's cause of action began to accrue because, in either case, E-Z's notice of claim was untimely. E-Z filed its notice of claim with the Oneida County Clerk of Court on September [*29] 28, 2005, well over 120 days after both the date on which the agreement was executed (June 25, 2003), as well as the date E-Z contended it learned of the agreement (February 2004).

[*P44] E-Z also argues that each time it paid a higher tipping fee than Waste Management, a new cause of action accrued to E-Z. Consistent with this assertion, E-Z argues that the notice of claim that it filed on September 28, 2005, was timely because the notice was filed within 120 days of E-Z [434] having paid a higher tipping fee than Waste Management.

[*P45] In support of this assertion, E-Z cites Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 401 U.S. 321, 91 S. Ct. 795, 28 L. Ed. 2d 77 (1971). In that case, the United States Supreme Court concluded that in the context of a continuing conspiracy to violate the federal antitrust laws, "each time a plaintiff is injured by an act of the defendant a cause of action accrues to him to recover the damages caused by that act [745] and that, as to those damages, the statute of limitations runs from the commission of the act." Id. at 338.

[*P46] E-Z, however, fails to cite any authority applying the continuing violations doctrine to the notice of claim statute under Wisconsin law. More importantly, E-Z also ignores a purpose [*30] of the notice of claim statute, which is to afford governmental entities the opportunity to compromise and budget for potential settlement or litigation. See Thorp, 235 Wis. 2d 610, 2000 WI 60, ¶¶23, 28, 612 N.W.2d 59. If the continuing violations doctrine were to apply, it would be much more difficult for governmental entities to budget for potential litigation. For example, under E-Z's theory, a cause of action would accrue to E-Z each time it paid a higher tipping fee during the 10-year length of Oneida County's agreement with Waste Management. The legislature did not intend for governmental entities to be exposed to indefinite periods of liability for potential violations of Wis. Stat. § 133.18.[16] Such a result would be unreasonable given the purposes of the notice of claim requirements found in § 893.80.[17]

[15] HN14[] The "continuing violation doctrine" holds that "each time a plaintiff is injured by an act of the defendants a cause of action accrues to him to recover the damages caused by that act and that, as to those damages, the statute of limitations runs from the commission of the act." Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 401 U.S. 321, 338-39, 91 S. Ct. 795, 28 L. Ed. 2d 77 (1971).

[16] Wisconsin Stat. § 893.80(1)(a) provides that a claimant must give notice "[w]ithin 120 days after the happening of the event giving rise to the claim . . . ." (Emphasis added.) We recognize that the general rule under Wis. Stat. § 990.001(1) is that we are to interpret the singular word "event" to include the plural "events" unless this "would produce a result inconsistent with the manifest intent of [*31] the legislature." The manifest intent of the legislature in Wis. Stat. § 893.80 is not to expose [*P47] [746] E-Z filed its notice of claim with the Oneida County Clerk of Court on September 28, 2005, well over 120 days after both the date on which the agreement was executed (June 25, 2003), as well as the date E-Z contended it learned of the agreement (February 2004). Having concluded that E-Z did not satisfy the first sentence of Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1)(a), we must next consider whether the actual notice and prejudice exception contained in Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1)(a) applies.

2. E-Z Failed to Show That Oneida County Suffered No Prejudice

[*P48] HN15[] An exception to the general 120-day rule exists when a claimant demonstrates that two conditions are met: (1) the governmental entity "had actual notice of the claim," and (2) [*32] the governmental entity has not been prejudiced by the delay or failure to give notice. Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1)(a). Because we determine that E-Z failed to show that Oneida County suffered no prejudice, we need not address whether Oneida County received actual notice of E-Z's claim. We therefore address only whether E-Z met its burden to produce evidence that Oneida County suffered no prejudice because of the delayed notice.

[*P49] In Olsen v. Spooner Township we held that prejudice "refers to a [435] delay which results in the inability of claimants to adequately defend their case." 133 Wis. 2d at 379 (internal citations omitted). This holding emphasized that one of the purposes of the notice of claim statute "is to ensure that governmental units have sufficient opportunity to escape prejudice by promptly investigating claims." Id. at 380. As the party [747] opposing summary judgment, E-Z "may not rest upon the mere allegations or denials of the pleadings . . . ." Wis. Stat. § 802.08(3). HN16[] "The ultimate burden [] of demonstrating that there is sufficient evidence . . . to go to trial at all (in the case of a motion for summary judgment) is on the party that has the burden of proof on the issue that is [*33] the object of the motion." Transp. Ins. Co. v. Hunzinger Constr. Co., 179 Wis. 2d 281, 290, 507 N.W.2d 136 (Ct. App. 1993). E-Z bears the burden of proving that Oneida County suffered no prejudice. Weiss, 79 Wis. 2d at 227. Therefore, E-Z "must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial" on the issue of prejudice. § 893.80(3).

[*P50] The circuit court found that E-Z set forth no facts showing that Oneida County suffered no prejudice. The circuit court went so far as to state that E-Z "provides no evidentiary citation" for its entire prejudice argument. We agree.

[*P52] The circuit court cautioned the parties early in the litigation that the issue of prejudice would require substantial discovery. When the circuit court denied Oneida County's motion for judgment on the pleadings, it cautioned both parties that:

> The determination [*34] as to whether E-Z is barred from bringing this action for failing to comply with the notice of claims requirements is a complex issue that would likely necessitate extensive factual support. Specifically, [748] failing to comply with the time limits in § 893.80 does not serve as an automatic bar to an action. Even if plaintiff fails to satisfy these time requirements, an action still survives if the plaintiff can show that the defendant had actual notice of the claim and that the defendant was not prejudiced by a delay of, or failure to provide, the requisite notice. § 893.80(1)(a). The determination of whether the County had actual notice of the claim and whether any prejudice exists are intensive factual issues that will likely require extensive discovery.

governmental entities to potentially infinite periods of liability. We therefore conclude that the general rule in § 990.001(1) is inapplicable in the instant case.

[17] "We attempt, whenever possible, to give reasonable effect to every word in a statute, avoiding both surplusage and absurd or unreasonable results." Hocking v. City of Dodgeville, 2010 WI 59, ¶18, 326 Wis. 2d 155, 785 N.W.2d 398.

Despite having received such guidance from the circuit court, E-Z inexplicably failed to conduct any discovery on the issue of prejudice.

[*P53] E-Z could have asked Sexton a number of questions to determine whether Oneida County did or did not suffer prejudice because of the delayed notice. For example, E-Z never questioned Sexton to determine whether Oneida County suffered from an inability to investigate the claim because of the delayed notice. [*35] In addition, E-Z never asked whether either Sexton or Oneida County had difficulty finding documents or other witnesses relevant to the proceedings. E-Z simply failed to introduce evidence on the issue of prejudice. Because of this, the circuit court properly granted summary judgment in favor of Oneida County.

[*436] IV. CONCLUSION

[*P54] We hold that antitrust actions brought pursuant to Wis. Stat. § 133.18 are not exempt from the notice of claim requirements found in Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1). Additionally, we hold that E-Z did not meet the requirements of § 893.80(1)(a) when it failed to give Oneida County notice of its claim within the 120-day limitations period. Accordingly, we reverse the court of [749] appeals and conclude that the circuit court properly granted summary judgment in favor of Oneida County.

By the Court.—The decision of the court of appeals is reversed.

Dissent by: PATIENCE DRAKE ROGGENSACK

Dissent

[*P55] PATIENCE DRAKE ROGGENSACK, J. (dissenting). Appellate courts apply a three-part test to determine whether the notice requirement of Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1) (2009-10)[1] applies to the claim under review. Oak Creek Citizen's Action Comm. v. City of Oak Creek, 2007 WI App 196, ¶7, 304 Wis. 2d 702, 738 N.W.2d 168. I [*36] conclude that E-Z Roll Off, LLC (E-Z) makes a restraint of trade claim under ch. 133 of the Wisconsin Statutes that meets the three-part test for an exception to the requirements of § 893.80(1): (1) ch. 133 provides a specific statutory scheme for the identification and resolution of claims; (2) compliance with § 893.80(1) would hinder the legislature's preference for prompt action on ch. 133 claims; and (3) the purposes for which § 893.80(1) was enacted would not be furthered by requiring a notice of claim to be filed for ch. 133 claims. Accordingly, I would affirm the court of appeals and I respectfully dissent from the majority opinion.

I. BACKGROUND

[*P56] E-Z was in the solid waste hauling business.[2] It provided waste containers to residential, commercial and construction customers. E-Z hauled the [750] waste it collected to the Oneida County landfill, and Oneida County charged E-Z a per ton tipping fee [*37] to utilize the landfill.

[*P57] E-Z paid a $54 per ton tipping fee for its use of the landfill, less a $10 per ton discount when E-Z brought a sufficient volume of waste to Oneida County's landfill. In February 2004, an employee of E-Z saw a receipt from the Oneida County landfill that showed Waste Management Wisconsin, Inc. (Waste Management) was being charged only $5.25 per ton as a tipping fee by Oneida County.

[1] All subsequent references to the Wisconsin Statutes are to the 2009-10 version unless otherwise indicated. (The 2005-06 are applicable to the notice question presented; however, the 2009-10 statutes referenced herein are the same as the 2005-06 version of § 893.80(1) in all relevant parts.)

[2] E-Z went out of business in May, 2008.

[*P58] Apparently, the lower tipping fee accorded to Waste Management was part of the June 25, 2003 contract[3] between Waste Management and Oneida County wherein Waste Management agreed to transport municipal solid waste for Oneida County for $24.50 per ton and Oneida County agreed to charge Waste Management only a $5.25 tipping fee rather than the usual $54 per ton rate.

[*P59] On February 17, 2004, the Laddusires, who own E-Z, met with Bart Sexton, [437] the Oneida County Solid Waste Director, to complain about the high tipping fee E-Z was paying and to request a reduction of its tipping fee. Sexton refused their request, and in April 2004 E-Z filed a written complaint with the Wisconsin Department of Agriculture, Trade and Consumer Protection (Consumer [*38] Protection agency). Although the Consumer Protection agency forwarded E-Z's complaint to Oneida County on May 4, 2004, the Consumer Protection agency took no further action on the complaint.

[*P60] On September 28, 2005, E-Z filed a "Notice of Injury" with Oneida County, in which it alleged that [751] the preferential tipping fee that Oneida County granted to Waste Management was a violation of Wis. Stat. § 133.03(1). It alleged that it had lost past and future earnings due to the lower prices that Waste Management was able to charge its customers because of the lower tipping fee that Waste Management was accorded by Oneida County for the tipping it did at the landfill.

[*P61] E-Z filed this action on April 20, 2006. Oneida County moved to dismiss, alleging that E-Z failed to comply with the notice of claim requirements of Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1), and the circuit court dismissed E-Z's claim. The court of appeals reversed, concluding that ch. 133 claims were excepted from compliance with § 893.80(1). E-Z Roll Off, LLC v. Cnty. of Oneida, 2010 WI App 76, ¶1, 325 Wis. 2d 423, 785 N.W.2d 645.

II. DISCUSSION

A. Standard of Review

[*P62] The circuit court dismissed E-Z's claim on summary judgment. We review summary judgment [*39] using the same methodology as did the circuit court and the court of appeals. Grygiel v. Monches Fish & Game Club, Inc., 2010 WI 93, ¶12, 328 Wis. 2d 436, 787 N.W.2d 6. This summary judgment turns on statutory interpretation. Statutory interpretation presents a question of law for our independent review, in which we benefit from the discussions in previous court decisions. Richards v. Badger Mut. Ins. Co., 2008 WI 52, ¶14, 309 Wis. 2d 541, 749 N.W.2d 581. As we interpret Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1), we assess its interaction with the ch. 133 claim made herein. The interaction of E-Z's ch. 133 claim with the obligations set out in § 893.80(1) presents a question of law for our independent consideration. [752] Nesbitt Farms, LLC v. City of Madison, 2003 WI App 122, ¶4, 265 Wis. 2d 422, 665 N.W.2d 379.

B. E-Z's Contention

[*P63] E-Z contends that Oneida County violated Wis. Stat. § 133.03(1) through its contract with Waste Management. Oneida County contracted to pay Waste Management $24.50 per ton for solid waste removal, and combined that payment with a $5.25 per ton tipping fee that Oneida County charged Waste Management. This contractual tipping fee of $5.25 is a $49.75 per ton reduction in charges on [*40] the solid waste that Waste Management dumped into the Oneida County landfill, not just solid waste that is hauled for Oneida County. E-Z alleged that the contract was an unreasonable restraint of trade in that it "permits Waste Management, Wisconsin, Inc., to under bid and drive out competition in Oneida County and the areas which the Oneida County Transfer Station has traditionally served,"[4] because Waste Management was charged $49.75 less per ton to dump solid waste at the Oneida County landfill than were other users of the landfill.

[*P64] [438] Stated otherwise, E-Z alleges that if Waste Management had been required to pay the $54 per ton tipping fee as E-Z was, Waste Management would have had to increase the prices it offered to customers for whose business E-Z was competing. It is argued that the lower tipping fee permitted Waste Management to compete unfairly with E-Z.

[*P65] In regard to Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1), E-Z does not argue that it timely filed a notice of claim. Rather, E-Z contends that it is not required to comply with § 893.80(1) because its ch. 133 claim falls outside of the [753] scope of § 893.80(1)'s command, and further, even if it were required to comply with § 893.80(1), [*41] Oneida County had actual notice of its claim. The court of appeals agreed with E-Z's first argument, concluding that ch. 133 claims are not required to comply with § 893.80(1). E-Z Roll Off, 325 Wis. 2d 423, ¶1. I agree with the court of appeals.

C. Statutory Concerns

1. Notice of claim

[*P66] Wisconsin Stat. § 893.80(1) provides in relevant part:

> Except as provided in subs. (1g), (1m), (1p) and (8),[5] no action may be brought or maintained against any . . . political corporation, governmental subdivision or agency thereof . . . for acts done in their official capacity or in the course of their agency or employment upon a claim or cause of action unless:
> (a) Within 120 days after the happening of the event giving rise to the claim, written notice of the circumstances of the claim signed by the party, agent or attorney is served on the . . . political corporation, governmental subdivision or agency . . . under s. 801.11. Failure to give the requisite notice shall not bar action on the claim if . . . the claimant shows to the satisfaction of the court that the delay or failure to give the requisite notice has not been prejudicial to the defendant . . .; and
> (b) A claim containing the address of the [*42] claimant and an itemized statement of the relief sought is presented to the appropriate clerk . . . and the claim is disallowed.

[*P67] [754] Although we once stated that Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1) applies to all types of actions, not just to tort actions, DNR v. City of Waukesha, 184 Wis. 2d 178, 191, 515 N.W.2d 888 (1994), we have modified that statement as being overly broad. State ex rel. Auchinleck v. Town of LaGrange, 200 Wis. 2d 585, 597, 547 N.W.2d 587 (1996). In addition, numerous appellate opinions have identified various exceptions to the statutory notice of claim requirements. See id. at 596 (noting that § 893.80(5) expressly states that specific rights and remedies provided by other statutes take precedence over the provisions of § 893.80 and concluding that § 893.80(1) does not apply to claimed violations of the open records law); see also Gillen v. City of Neenah, 219 Wis. 2d 806, 822-23, 580 N.W.2d 628 (1998) (concluding that § 893.80(1) does not apply to actions under Wis. Stat. § 30.294 to enjoin violations of the public trust doctrine); Oak Creek, 304 Wis. 2d 702, ¶2 (concluding that § 893.80(1) does not apply to an action to compel a city [*43] to comply with the direct legislation statute); Town of Burke v. City of Madison, 225 Wis. 2d 615, 617-18, 593 N.W.2d 822 (Ct. App. 1999) (concluding that actions objecting to annexation brought under Wis. Stat. § 66.021 are not required to comply with § 893.80(1)); Gamroth v. Vill. of Jackson, 215 Wis. 2d 251, 259, 571 N.W.2d 917 (Ct. App. 1997) (concluding that special assessment [439] appeals brought under Wis. Stat. § 66.60(12)(a) fall outside of § 893.80(1)'s requirements).

[*P68] Based on our analysis in Auchinleck, a three-part test has evolved by which courts assess whether the claimant is required to comply with Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1) for the claim presented. Oak Creek, 304 Wis. 2d 702, ¶7 (citing Nesbitt Farms, 265 Wis. 2d 422, ¶9. This three-part test provides:

> [755] "(1) whether there is a specific statutory scheme for which the plaintiff seeks exemption; (2) whether enforcement of § 893.80(1), Stats., would hinder a legislative preference for a prompt resolution of the type of claim under consideration; and (3) whether the purposes for which § 893.80(1) was enacted would be furthered by requiring that a notice of claim be filed."

[5] None of these listed exceptions apply here.

Id. (quoting Nesbitt Farms, 265 Wis. 2d 422, ¶9). Accordingly, [*44] I begin with Wis. Stat. § 133.03(1), the claim herein made.

2. Wisconsin Stat. § 133.03(1)

[*P69] E-Z claims anticompetitive conduct that it alleges is regulated by ch. 133, specifically Wis. Stat. § 133.03(1). Section 133.03(1) addresses anticompetitive contracts in restraint of trade. Section 133.03(1) provides in relevant part: "Unlawful contracts; conspiracies. (1) Every contract . . . in restraint of trade or commerce is illegal." It is this § 133.03(1) claim that the circuit court dismissed on summary judgment because the notice of claim provisions of Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1) had not been met. Accordingly, I consider the viability of E-Z's ch. 133 claim in light of § 893.80(1) and the requisite three-part test for exceptions thereto.

a. Specific statutory scheme

[*P70] Chapter 133 sets out a specific statutory scheme that addresses anticompetitive conduct that is quite comprehensive. First, it defines those who are covered by the prohibitions contained therein. Wis. Stat. § 133.02(3). Second, it sets out various prohibited practices: Wis. Stat. § 133.03 (unlawful contracts; conspiracies), Wis. Stat. § 133.04 (price discrimination; intent to destroy competition), Wis. Stat. § 133.05 (secret [756] rebates; [*45] unfair trade practices) and Wis. Stat. § 133.06 (interlocking directorates). Third, ch. 133 provides for discovery in regard to alleged violations. Wis. Stat. § 133.13. Fourth, remedies are established for contraventions of ch. 133: Wis. Stat. § 133.14 (illegal contracts are void); Wis. Stat. § 133.16 (injunctive relief, temporary and permanent, and attorney fees may be accorded); and Wis. Stat. § 133.18 (damages and attorney fees are available).

[*P71] The enforcement of a claim for relief due to an alleged restraint of trade by contract has been specifically provided for by the legislature in Wis. Stat. § 133.03(1). Not only is such a claim proscribed, but the legislature has specified various types of relief that a court can award. See e.g., Wis. Stat. § 133.14 (illegal contracts are void); Wis. Stat. § 133.16 (injunctive relief, temporary and permanent, and attorney fees may be accorded); and Wis. Stat. § 133.18 (damages and attorney fees are available). Accordingly, I conclude that E-Z's § 133.03(1) claim is part of a specific statutory scheme and therefore, it satisfies the first part of the requisite test for an exception to the directives of Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1).[6]

[*440] [757] b. Preference for prompt resolution

[*P72] The next step is to assess whether enforcement of Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1) would contravene a legislative preference for prompt resolution of ch. 133 claims. Wisconsin Stat. § 133.18 assists me in this assessment. Section 133.18(5) requires that "[e]ach civil action under this chapter and each motion or other proceeding in such action

[6] In concluding [*46] that ch. 133 contains a specific statutory scheme, the court of appeals relied on Gillen v. City of Neenah, 219 Wis. 2d 806, 580 N.W.2d 628 (1998). E-Z Roll Off, LLC v. Cnty. of Oneida, 2010 WI App 76, ¶18, 325 Wis. 2d 423, 785 N.W.2d 645. The majority opinion concludes that the reasoning of Gillen is "instructive," yet "inapplicable to the present case." Majority op., ¶28. In so concluding, the majority states that "[i]n contrast to the plaintiffs in Gillen, E-Z does not seek immediate injunctive relief under Wis. Stat. § 133.16. Rather, E-Z seeks declaratory relief and damages under Wis. Stat. § 133.18." Id. However, the distinction between the remedy sought by the plaintiffs in Gillen and the remedy E-Z sought in its complaint is not relevant to the determination of whether ch. 133 comprises a specific statutory scheme. Surely, a specific statutory scheme can include more than one section of a chapter. Here, the entirety of ch. 133 addresses anticompetitive conduct. The scheme is quite specific and quite comprehensive. Stated otherwise, the statutory scheme includes several statutory sections.

Furthermore, by considering only a single statutory section, specifically Wis. Stat. § 133.18, [*47] rather than the entire statutory scheme set out in ch. 133 that proscribes anticompetitive conduct, the majority's focus is too narrow. For example, a Wis. Stat. § 133.03(1) claimant could seek both damages under § 133.18 and a temporary and/or permanent injunction under Wis. Stat. § 133.16. Under the majority's reasoning, would that ch. 133 claim be an exception to the notice of claim provisions of Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1) given our decision in Gillen shall be expedited in every way and shall be heard at the earliest practicable date." However, Oneida County has 120 days after the filing of a notice of claim under § 893.80(1) to respond to a contention that it has entered into an illegal contract in restraint of trade. This time lag is in conflict with "expedited" [*48] procedures that the legislature has chosen for ch. 133 claims.

[*P73] Furthermore, Wis. Stat. § 133.16 provides for both temporary and permanent injunctive relief. It directs, "pending the filing of the answer . . . [a court] may, at any time, upon proper notice, make such temporary restraining order or prohibition as is just." We have noted that a statutory scheme that provides for immediate [758] injunctive relief is inconsistent with Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1)'s requirements. Gillen, 219 Wis. 2d at 822. A party bringing a claim pursuant to Wis. Stat. § 133.03(1) has a statutory right to seek temporary and permanent injunctive relief. Requiring a party to wait 120 days before being able to use the statutory remedies that the legislature set out would be contrary to the legislature's stated purpose that ch. 133 "be interpreted in a manner which gives the most liberal construction to achieve the aim of competition." Wis. Stat. § 133.01. Accordingly, I conclude that E-Z has satisfied the second part of the requisite test for an exception to the directives of § 893.80(1).

c. Purposes underlying Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1)

[*P74] The third part of the test for assessing a claimed exception to the directives of Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1) [*49] is whether the purposes underlying § 893.80(1) would be furthered by requiring that a notice of claim be filed. The purposes underlying § 893.80(1) are to permit timely investigation of claims so that the facts are not stale and to facilitate settlement of those that are meritorious. Thorp v. Town of Lebanon, 2000 WI 60, ¶¶23, 28, 235 Wis. 2d 610, 612 N.W.2d 59. However, as a party to the contract that E-Z alleges is in restraint of trade, little investigation would be needed by Oneida County, and settlement appears unlikely.

[*P75] [441] In addition, in this step, it is worth noting that Wis. Stat. § 133.18(4) provides, "A cause of action arising under this chapter does not accrue until the discovery, by the aggrieved person, of the facts constituting the cause of action." The circuit court concluded that the "event" that gives rise to the obligation to give notice within 120 days is the June 2003 signing of the contract between Waste Management and Oneida [759] County.[7] However, E-Z did not learn of the $5.25 tipping fee that Waste Management was awarded as part of that contract until February 2004. Therefore, by the time E-Z had knowledge of the facts giving rise to its ch. 133 claim, 120 days had [*50] long since passed, if the circuit court is correct about the event leading to the notice of claim requirement. Stated otherwise, Oneida County could not timely investigate a claim E-Z did not know it had. That is what is alleged to have happened here.[8]

[*P76] Furthermore, if Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1) were applied to E-Z's claim, it never could have employed the statutes that the legislature enacted to promote competition and to restrict restraints of trade. A defendant could simply say [*51] that the complaining party learned of the violation too late and as a result, the defendant is not required to do anything about it. Surely, that is not what the legislature sought to achieve either under § 893.80(1) or ch. 133.

[*P77] Therefore, I conclude that E-Z has satisfied the third part of the requisite test for an exception to the directives of Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1). Accordingly, I [760] conclude that E-Z's Wis. Stat. § 133.03(1) claim is excepted from § 893.80(1)'s notice requirements.

[7] The majority concludes that it does not need to determine what "event" gave rise to the obligation to give notice, and consequently when the cause of action began to accrue. The majority so concludes because even if it accepted E-Z's argument that the cause of action did not accrue until it learned of the agreement in February, 2004, more than 120 days passed between when the cause accrued and E-Z's filing of the notice of claim in September 2005. Majority op., ¶43.

[8] Although Oneida County implies that this may not be an accurate statement of fact, on a motion for summary judgment the facts are construed to favor the non-moving party. DeHart v. Wis. Mut. Ins. Co., 2007 WI 91, ¶7, 302 Wis. 2d 564, 734 N.W.2d 394.

[*P78] I conclude that E-Z makes a restraint of trade claim under ch. 133 of the Wisconsin Statutes that meets the three-part test for an exception to the requirements of Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1): (1) ch. 133 provides a specific statutory scheme for the identification and resolution of claims; (2) compliance with § 893.80(1) would hinder the legislature's preference for prompt action on ch. 133 claims; and (3) the purposes for which § 893.80(1) was enacted would not be furthered by requiring a notice of claim to be filed for ch. 133 claims. Accordingly, I would affirm the court of appeals and I respectfully dissent from the majority opinion.

[*P79] I am authorized to state that Chief Justice SHIRLEY S. [*52] ABRAHAMSON joins this dissent.

ORDER: (1) GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART MOTION TO DISMISS; (2) DISMISSING COMPLAINT WITHOUT PREJUDICE AS AGAINST ALL DEFENDANTS

On June 30, 2011, the Court heard Defendants' Motion to Dismiss. James H. Fosbinder, Esq., appeared at the hearing on behalf of Plaintiff Mark Phillips ("Plaintiff"); Patricia J. McHenry, Esq., and Sean Michael Smith, Esq.,appeared at the hearing on behalf of Defendants BAC Home Loans Servicing, LP ("BAC") and Mortgage Electronic Registration Systems, Inc. ("MERS") (collectively, "Defendants"). After reviewing the motion and the supporting and opposing memoranda, the Court GRANTS IN PART and DENIES [*2] IN PART the Motion to Dismiss. (Doc. # 28.) The First Amended Complaint is DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE as against all Defendants.

BACKGROUND

On or about September 29, 2006, Plaintiff Mark Phillips ("Plaintiff") executed a promissory note in favor of First Magnus Financial Corporation ("First Magnus") in the amount of $240,000. [1] (MTD Ex. 3 at 2.) To secure payment on the promissory note, Plaintiff executed a mortgage encumbering real property located at 140 Uwapo Road # 40-202, Kihei, Hawaii, 96753 (the "Subject Property") in favor of First Magnus. (Id. at 2-3.) The mortgage was recorded in the State of Hawaii Bureau of Conveyances on October 16, 2006 as Document Number 2006-188427. (Id. at 1.) First Magnus is listed on the mortgage as the originating lender and Mortgage Electronic Registration Systems, Inc. ("MERS") is the mortgagee "acting solely as a nominee for Lender and Lender's successors and assigns." (Id. at 2.)

Plaintiff claims that on or about October 23, 2006, First Magnus sold Plaintiff's loan to Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. (FAC ¶ 48.) Thereafter, BAC Home Loans Servicing, LP ("BAC") allegedly serviced Plaintiff's loan.

On August 4, 2009, MERS executed an assignment, which purported to assign its interest in the mortgage to BAC. (FAC Ex. A.) This assignment was recorded in the State of Hawaii Bureau of Conveyances on September 11, 2009 as Document Number 2009-139370. (Id.) BAC recorded a Notice of Mortgagee's Intention to Foreclose Under the Power of Sale ("Foreclosure Notice") on the same day. [2] (MTD Ex. 4.) As recognized by this Court's December 13, 2010 Order, [*4] the Subject Property was sold at a foreclosure auction on June 10, 2010. (Order at 3-4.) Public records indicate that Federal National Mortgage Association now owns the Subject Property. (Id. at 4.)

On May 7, 2010, Plaintiff filed a Complaint in this Court against Defendants BAC and MERS (collectively, "Defendants"), alleging that Plaintiff had been lured into a predatory mortgage loan. (Doc # 1.) On September 8, 2010, Defendants filed a Motion to Dismiss (Doc. # 8), which the Court granted on December 13, 2010 (Doc. # 22). The Court dismissed with prejudice Plaintiff's TILA rescission and recoupment claims, dismissed without prejudice Plaintiff's remaining claims, and granted Plaintiff 30 days leave to file an amended complaint. (Id.)

On January 10, 2011, Plaintiff filed a First Amended Complaint [*5] ("FAC," Doc. # 23), which asserts the following claims:

- Count I: Violations of the Sherman Antitrust Act (FAC ¶¶ 72-79)
- Count II: Violations of the Hawaii Antitrust/Anti-Monopoly Acts (Id. ¶¶ 80-83)
- Count III: Civil Conspiracy (Id. ¶¶ 84-88)
- Count IV: Fraudulent Misrepresentation (Id. ¶¶ 89-96)
- Count V: Unfair and Deceptive Acts or Practices (Id. ¶¶ 97-109)
- Count VI: Breach of Fiduciary Duty (Id. ¶¶ 110-118)
- Count VII: Unjust Enrichment against Defendant BAC (Id. ¶¶ 119-124)

[1] Defendants submitted a copy of the subject mortgage as Exhibit 3 to their Motion to Dismiss. "[A] district court ruling on a motion to dismiss may consider documents 'whose contents are alleged in a complaint and whose authenticity no party questions, but which are not [*3] physically attached to the [plaintiff's] pleading.'" Parrino v. FHP, Inc., 146 F.3d 699, 705 (9th Cir. 1998) (quoting Branch v. Tunnell, 14 F.3d 449, 454 (9th Cir. 1994)); see also Lee v. City of L.A., 250 F.3d 668, 688 (9th Cir. 2001). In the instant case, Plaintiff's entire Complaint revolves around the subject mortgage. The mortgage is clearly essential to the complaint, and neither party disputes its authenticity. Accordingly, it is appropriate for the Court to consider the mortgage itself when ruling on the Motion to Dismiss.

[2] Defendants submitted a copy of the Foreclosure Notice as Exhibit 4 to their Motion to Dismiss. Because Plaintiff's Complaint challenges the validity of the foreclosure, the Foreclosure Notice is clearly essential to the Complaint, and neither party disputes its authenticity. Accordingly, it is appropriate for the Court to consider the Foreclosure Notice when ruling on the Motion to Dismiss.

- Count VIII: Mistake against Defendant BAC (Id. ¶¶ 125-126)
- Count IX: Unconscionability against Defendant BAC (Id. ¶¶ 127-135)
- Count X: Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress (Id. ¶¶ 136-140)
- Count XI: Violations of the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act against Defendant BAC (Id. ¶¶ 141-146)
- Count XII: Breach of the Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing (Id. ¶¶ 147-149)
- Count XIII: Complaint to Quiet Title (Id. ¶¶ 150-155)

On February 7, 2011, Defendants filed a Motion to Dismiss the First Amended Complaint ("Motion to Dismiss"). ("MTD," Doc. # 28.) Plaintiff filed an Opposition to the Motion to Dismiss on April 29, 2011. ("Opp'n," Doc. # 33.) Defendants filed a Reply on May 18, 2011. ("Reply," [*6] Doc. # 35.)

STANDARD OF REVIEW

I. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6)

Pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure ("Rule"), a motion to dismiss will be granted where the plaintiff fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Review is limited to the contents of the complaint. See Clegg v. Cult Awareness Network, 18 F.3d 752, 754 (9th Cir. 1994). A complaint may be dismissed as a matter of law for one of two reasons: "(1) lack of a cognizable legal theory, or (2) insufficient facts under a cognizable legal claim." Robertson v. Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc., 749 F.2d 530, 534 (9th Cir. 1984) (citation omitted). Allegations of fact in the complaint must be taken as true and construed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. See Livid Holdings Ltd. v. Salomon Smith Barney, Inc., 416 F.3d 940, 946 (9th Cir. 2005).

A complaint need not include detailed facts to survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss. See Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555-56, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). In providing grounds for relief, however, a plaintiff must do more than recite the formulaic elements of a cause of action. See id. at 556-57; see also McGlinchy v. Shell Chem. Co., 845 F.2d 802, 810 (9th Cir. 1988) [*7] ("[C]onclusory allegations without more are insufficient to defeat a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim.") (citation omitted). "The tenet that a court must accept as true all of the allegations contained in a complaint is inapplicable to legal conclusions," and courts "are not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (internal quotations and citations omitted). Thus, "bare assertions amounting to nothing more than a formulaic recitation of the elements" of a claim "are not entitled to an assumption of truth." Moss v. U.S. Secret Service, 572 F.3d 962, 969 (9th Cir. 2009) ("[T]he non-conclusory 'factual content,' and reasonable inferences from that content, must be plausibly suggestive of a claim entitling the plaintiff to relief.") (internal quotations and citations omitted).

A court looks at whether the facts in the complaint sufficiently state a "plausible" ground for relief. See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570. A plaintiff must include enough facts to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence and may not just provide a speculation of a right to relief. Id. at 586. When [*8] a complaint fails to adequately state a claim, such deficiency should be "exposed at the point of minimum expenditure of time and money by the parties and the court." Id. at 558 (citation omitted). If a court dismisses the complaint or portions thereof, it must consider whether to grant leave to amend. Lopez v. Smith, 203 F.3d 1122, 1130 (9th Cir. 2000) (finding that leave to amend should be granted "if it appears at all possible that the plaintiff can correct the defect") (internal quotations and citations omitted).

II. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b)

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b) requires that "[i]n alleging fraud or mistake, a party must state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake." Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). Under Ninth Circuit law, "Rule 9(b) requires particularized allegations of the circumstances constituting fraud." In re GlenFed, Inc. Sec. Litig., 42 F.3d 1541, 1547-48 (9th Cir. 1994) (en banc), superseded on other grounds by 15 U.S.C. § 78u-4.

In their pleadings, plaintiffs must include the time, place, and nature of the alleged fraud; "mere conclusory allegations of fraud are insufficient" to satisfy this requirement. Id. at 1548 (quoting [*9] Moore v. Kayport Package Express, Inc., 885 F.2d 531, 540 (9th Cir. 1989)). "[T]he circumstances constituting the alleged fraud [must] 'be specific enough to give defendants notice of the particular misconduct . . . so that they can defend against the charge and not just deny that they have done anything wrong.'" Kearns v. Ford Motor Co., 567 F.3d 1120, 1124 (9th Cir. 2009) (quoting Bly-Magee v. California, 236 F.3d 1014, 1019 (9th Cir. 2001)); see also Moore, 885 F.2d at 540 (finding that Rule 9(b) requires a plaintiff to attribute particular fraudulent statements or acts to individual defendants). However, "[m]alice, intent, knowledge, and other conditions of a person's mind may be alleged generally." Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b); see also In re GlenFed, Inc. Sec. Litig., 42 F.3d at 1547 ("We conclude that plaintiffs may aver scienter . . . simply by saying that scienter existed."); Walling v. Beverly Enter., 476 F.2d 393, 397 (9th Cir. 1973) (finding that Rule 9(b) "only requires the identification of the circumstances constituting fraud so that the defendant can prepare an adequate answer from the allegations" (citations omitted)).

A motion to dismiss for failure to plead with particularity [*10] is the functional equivalent of a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim. Vess v. Ciba-Geigy Corp. USA, 317 F.3d 1097, 1107 (9th Cir. 2003). In considering a motion to dismiss, the court is not deciding the issue of "whether a plaintiff will ultimately prevail but whether the claimant is entitled to offer evidence to support the claims." Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 94 S. Ct. 1683, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90 (1974) overruled on other grounds by Davis v. Scherer, 468 U.S. 183, 104 S. Ct. 3012, 82 L. Ed. 2d 139 (1984).

DISCUSSION

Moving Defendants contend that the First Amended Complaint is vague and conclusory and therefore should be dismissed for failure to comply with Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 8 and 12(b)(6). The Court agrees.

I. Plaintiff's New Claims

As a preliminary matter, Defendants argue that Counts I, II, III, IV, VII, VIII, IX, XI, and XIII of the First Amended Complaint should be dismissed or stricken because the Court only granted leave to amend the claims asserted in the original Complaint. (MTD at 6-7; Reply at 1-2.)

This contention is belied by the terms of the December 13, 2010 Order, which provides as follows:

> The Court recognizes that it may be possible for Plaintiff to state a claim if provided the opportunity [*11] to amend his Complaint. Accordingly, the Complaint is DISMISSED as against all Defendants in this action with leave to amend no later than 30 days from the filing of this Order, except for Plaintiff's TILA rescission and recoupment claims, which are barred as a matter of law. . . . Failure to do so and to cure the pleading deficiencies will result in dismissal of this action with prejudice. Plaintiff is advised that the amended complaint must clearly state how each of the named defendants have injured him, and it must also clearly identify the statutory provisions under which Plaintiff's claims are brought.

(Order at 30-31.) In the Order, the Court did not circumscribe which claims could be amended, aside from Plaintiff's TILA rescission and recoupment claims, and did not preclude Plaintiff from raising new claims. The Court will not now strike Counts I, II, III, IV, VII, VIII, IX, XI, and XIII of Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint solely because they were not included in the original Complaint. Defendants' argument on this point is inapposite.

II. Count I: Violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act

Plaintiff alleges that Defendants "engaged in predatory conduct or anticompetitive conduct" [*12] by "monopolizing or attempting to monopolize the mortgage lending and servicing market" in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. (FAC ¶¶ 73-74, 79.) Plaintiff seeks monetary relief for this violation, presumably pursuant to Section 4 of the Clayton Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15.

Section 2 of the Sherman Act makes it illegal to "monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations." 15 U.S.C. § 2. Monopolization and attempted monopolization are the two traditional claims asserted under Section 2. To state a claim for monopolization, the plaintiff must sufficiently allege: "'(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.'" John Doe 1 v. Abbott Labs., 571 F.3d 930, 933 n.3 (9th Cir. 2009) (quoting Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 481, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992)); Alaska Airlines v. United Airlines, Inc., 948 F.2d 536, 540-41 (9th Cir. 1991) [*13] (same); see also MetroNet Servs. Corp. v. Qwest Corp., 383 F.3d 1124, 1130 (9th Cir. 2004) (listing the elements of a monopolization claim).

To state a claim for attempted monopolization, the plaintiff must allege: "'(1) that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power.'" Cascade Health Solutions v. PeaceHealth, 515 F.3d 883, 893 (9th Cir. 2008) (quoting Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 456, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993)); see also VeriSign, 611 F.3d at 506 (same).

An antitrust plaintiff must also demonstrate that the injury in question is "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent." [3] Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 489. Indeed, the antitrust laws "were enacted for 'the protection of competition, not competitors.'" Id. at 488 (quoting Brown, 370 U.S. at 320); see also Cascade Health Solutions, 515 F.3d at 901-02 (recognizing the Supreme Court's "long and consistent adherence to the principle that the antitrust laws protect the process of competition, and not the pursuits of any particular competitor").

A plaintiff seeking damages pursuant to Section 4 of the Clayton Act must show causal antitrust injury, and to obtain injunctive relief pursuant to Section 16 of the Clayton Act, a plaintiff must allege threatened antitrust injury. [4] Cargill, 479 U.S. at 109-13. The purpose of the antitrust injury requirement is to "ensure[] that the harm [*15] claimed by the plaintiff corresponds to the rationale for finding a violation of the antitrust laws in the first place, and it prevents losses that stem from competition from supporting suits by private plaintiffs for either damages or equitable relief." Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum, Inc., 495 U.S. 328, 342, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990). As such, "[t]o show antitrust injury, a plaintiff must prove that his loss flows from an anticompetitive aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior [because] it is inimical to the antitrust laws to award damages for losses stemming from acts that do not hurt competition." Rebel Oil Co., Inc. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1433 (9th Cir. 1995) (citing Atlantic Richfield, 495 U.S. at 334); see also Cascade Health Solutions, 515 F.3d at 902 ("'Plaintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation.'") (quoting Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 489).

[3] This is different from antitrust standing. See Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colo., Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 110-11, 107 S. Ct. 484, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 nn. 5-6 (1986) [*14] (noting that antitrust injury is necessary, but not always sufficient, to establish standing under Section 4 and that the standing analysis under Section 16 may differ from that for Section 4); see also Associated Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. Cal. State Counsel of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 535-46, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983) (articulating factors that courts should consider when determining whether a plaintiff has standing under Section 4); Lucas Auto. Eng'g, Inc. v. Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc., 140 F.3d 1228, 1232-37 (9th Cir. 1998) (examining whether a plaintiff had standing to assert claims for damages and injunctive relief under Sections 4 and 16 of the Clayton Act); Amarel v. Connell, 102 F.3d 1494, 1506-07 (9th Cir. 1996) (summarizing the factors relevant to determine whether a plaintiff has standing to pursue a damages claim under Section 4).

[4] Section 4 of the Clayton Act provides treble damages to [*16] "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws." 15 U.S.C. § 15. Section 16 of the Clayton Act provides that "[a]ny person, firm, corporation, or association shall be entitled to sue for and have injunctive relief . . . against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws." 15 U.S.C. § 26.

In addition to antitrust injury, antitrust plaintiffs must also properly allege a relevant market. See Newcal Indus., Inc. v. Ikon Office Solution, 513 F.3d 1038, 1044 (9th Cir. 2008) (finding that to state a claim under either Section 1 or Section 2 of the Sherman Act, the plaintiff must sufficiently allege a relevant market). The Ninth Circuit recently addressed the legal principles that govern definition of a relevant market, and it reaffirmed that a complaint may be dismissed under Rule 12(b)(6) if its relevant market definition is "facially unsustainable." Id. at 1045 (citing Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d 430, 436-37 (3d Cir. 1997)). The relevant market includes both the product market and the geographic market. Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 324; Newcal Indus., 513 F.3d at 1045 n.4. As to [*17] the product market, it must "encompass the product at issue as well as all economic substitutes for the product." Newcal Indus., 513 F.3d at 1045 (citing Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 325). It must therefore include "the group of sellers or producers who have the 'actual or potential ability to deprive each other of significant levels of business.'" Forsyth v. Humana, Inc., 114 F.3d 1467, 1476 (9th Cir. 1997) (quoting Thurman Indus., Inc. v. Pay 'N Pak Stores, Inc., 875 F.2d 1369, 1374 (9th Cir. 1989)); see also Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 325 ("The outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it."). "In limited settings, however, the relevant product market may be narrowed beyond the boundaries of physical interchangeability and cross-price elasticity to account for identifiable submarkets or product clusters." Thurman Indus., 875 F.2d at 1374 (citation omitted). To establish the existence of a legally cognizable submarket, "the plaintiff must be able to show (but need not necessarily establish in the complaint) that the alleged submarket is economically distinct [*18] from the general product market." Newcal Indus., 513 F.3d at 1045; see also Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 325 (listing several "practical indicia" of an economically distinct submarket).

Here, contrary to the abundant weight of authority, Plaintiff devoted merely five words of its fifty-one page complaint to defining the relevant market. Plaintiff asserts that the relevant market is the "mortgage lending and servicing market" (FAC ¶ 74), but the complaint is utterly devoid of any explanation or elaboration to support this contention. For instance, the complaint does not contain any allegations concerning economic substitutes for the proposed product market, and it is entirely unclear to the Court why Plaintiff defined the relevant market in the way that it did. Moreover, the complaint does not even specify a relevant geographic market.

The Court is also concerned by the vagueness of Plaintiff's allegations in support of the antitrust claim. As noted, Plaintiff alleges that "Defendants have engaged in predatory conduct or anticompetitive conduct in an attempt to monopolize the mortgage lending and servicing market." (FAC ¶ 74.) The complaint, however, utterly fails to set forth any specific [*19] factual or legal allegations or to link those allegations to particular statutory violations. Instead, Plaintiff alleges that Defendants "worked to create the collapse of the mortgage market, which in turn created an economic collapse unprecedented since the Great Depression." (FAC ¶ 77.) Such sweeping statements fail to apprise Defendants of their alleged wrongdoings.

The Supreme Court acknowledged, in a case involving an alleged Sherman Act violation, that "a district court must retain the power to insist upon some specificity in pleading before allowing a potentially massive factual controversy to proceed." Associated Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. at 528 n.17; see also Twombly, 550 U.S. at 558 ("[I]t is one thing to be cautious before dismissing an antitrust complaint in advance of discovery . . . , but quite another to forget that proceeding to antitrust discovery can be expensive."); Kendall, 518 F.3d at 1046-47 (concluding that the Supreme Court clarified the Sherman Act pleading requirements in Twombly "because discovery in antitrust cases frequently causes substantial expenditures and gives the plaintiff the opportunity to extort large settlements even where he does not have much [*20] of a case") (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 558-59). Because Plaintiff has provided nothing more than legal conclusions in support of the antitrust claim, this claim must be dismissed.

Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Defendants' Motion to Dismiss as to Count I of the First Amended Complaint.

III. Count II: Violations of the Hawaii Antitrust/Anti-Monopoly Acts

In Count II of the First Amended Complaint, Plaintiff relies on the factual allegations contained in Count I to assert violations of state antitrust laws. Plaintiff states generally that "[m]ortgage lending and servicing in Hawaii is an activity in or affecting interstate commerce." (FAC ¶ 81.) Plaintiff then alleges that Defendants have violated "the Hawaii Anti-Trust Act, Hawaii Revised Statutes § 480-13, and the Hawaii Monopolization Act, Hawaii Revised Statutes § 480-9." (FAC ¶ 82.)

The close relationship between federal antitrust law and Hawaii antitrust law has been long established. See, e.g., Robert's Haw. Sch. Bus v. Laupahoehoe Transp. Co., Inc., 91 Haw. 224, 982 P.2d 853, 881 n.29 (Haw. 1999) (noting the similarities between Section 2 of the Sherman Act and Hawaii Revised Statute section 480-9.) Indeed, the "[l]egislative history of Hawaii's [*21] antitrust law clearly indicates that the state laws are to be interpreted and construed in harmony with analogous federal antitrust laws." Island Tobacco Co., Ltd. v. R. J. Reynolds Indus., Inc., 513 F. Supp. 726, 738 (D. Haw. 1981). Similar to federal law, therefore, Hawaii courts require plaintiffs in antitrust proceedings to plead the "nature of the competition" to "ensure that the injury results from a competition-reducing aspect of the defendant's behavior." Davis v. Four Seasons Hotel Ltd., 122 Haw. 423, 228 P.3d 303, 325 (Haw. 2010) (citing and relying on federal law).

As with Plaintiff's Sherman Act claim, Plaintiff's state antitrust claim is vague and conclusory and fails to set forth sufficient factual allegations to withstand a motion to dismiss. Broad assertions of state antitrust law violations of the type presented here simply do not give Defendants an opportunity to properly defend themselves. See Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949 ("A pleading that offers labels and conclusions or a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do."). Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Defendants' Motion to Dismiss as to Count II of the First Amended Complaint.

IV. Count III: Civil Conspiracy

Count [*22] III alleges that "Defendants BAC, as successor in interest to First Magnus, MERS, as mortgagee, and the DOE Defendants agreed, between and among themselves, to engage in actions and a course of conduct designed to further an illegal act . . . and to commit one or more overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy to defraud the Plaintiff." (FAC ¶ 85.) According to Plaintiff, Defendants had a "common purpose of accruing economic gains for themselves at the expense of and detriment to the Plaintiff." (Id. ¶ 86.)

This Count is dismissed because Hawaii does not recognize an independent cause of action for "civil conspiracy"—such theories of potential liability are derivative of other wrongs. See, e.g., Chung v. McCabe Hamilton & Renny Co., 109 Haw. 520, 128 P.3d 833, 843 (Haw. 2006); Weinberg v. Mauch, 78 Haw. 40, 890 P.2d 277, 286 (Haw. 1995). Here, in contravention of this principle, Plaintiff did not link the claim of civil conspiracy with another cause of action. [5] Further, to the extent that this count is premised at least in part on fraud, Plaintiff must meet the heightened pleading requirements of Rule 9(b) in alleging a conspiracy. See Swartz v. KPMG LLP, 476 F.3d 756, 765 (9th Cir. 2007) ("Rule 9(b) imposes [*23] heightened pleading requirements where the object of the conspiracy is fraudulent." (citation and internal quotations omitted)). The bald assertions contained in this claim do not satisfy Rule 9(b)'s pleading standard.

Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Defendants' Motion to Dismiss as to Count III of the First Amended Complaint.

V. Count IV: Fraudulent Misrepresentation

Plaintiff next alleges that Defendants "knowingly and intentionally concealed material information from Plaintiff which was required by federal statutes and regulations to be disclosed to the Plaintiff both before and at the time of closing." (FAC ¶ 90.) Plaintiff also asserts that Defendants "materially misrepresented or failed to disclose material information to the Plaintiff with full knowledge by defendants that their affirmative representations were false, fraudulent, and misrepresented the truth at the time said representations were made or were omissions of material fact." (Id. ¶ 91.)

Plaintiff's vague assertions are insufficient to satisfy [*24] Rule 9(b)'s rigorous pleading requirements, which apply to allegations of fraud or mistake. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) ("In alleging fraud or mistake, a party must state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake."). As noted, a plaintiff "must state the time, place, and specific content of the false representations as well as the identities of the parties to the misrepresentation." Alan Neuman Prods., Inc. v. Albright, 862 F.2d 1388, 1393 (9th Cir. 1988). Fraud allegations must also include the "who, what, when, where, and how" of the misconduct, and set forth "more than the neutral facts necessary to identify the transaction." See Kearns v. Ford Motor Co., 567 F.3d 1120, 1124 (9th Cir. 2009).

[5] Plaintiff acknowledges as much in the Opposition. (See Opp'n at 23 (recognizing that "Plaintiff may not have tied his claim of civil conspiracy to any particular cause of action").)

Here, with the exception of Paragraph 92, the allegations of misconduct related to this claim are overly broad and general in nature. These assertions do not distinguish between Defendants and are plainly insufficient to meet Plaintiff's burden under Rule 8, much less the more rigorous requirements of Rule 9(b) applicable here.

Paragraph 92, the lone paragraph that provides any clarity to the fraudulent misrepresentation claim, is similarly deficient. In this paragraph, Plaintiff [*25] alleges several instances of concealment and misrepresentation, but the complaint does not identify who specifically made these misrepresentations or how material facts were concealed from Plaintiff. Nor does Plaintiff specify how these representations were false. [6] Without more, the Court cannot conclude that Plaintiff's vague assertions satisfy Rule 9(b)'s heightened pleading requirement.

Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Defendants' Motion to Dismiss as to Count IV of the First Amended Complaint.

VI. Count V: Unfair and Deceptive Acts or Practices

Plaintiff also contends that Defendants have [*26] engaged in unfair or deceptive acts and practices in violation of Hawaii Revised Statute sections 480-2(a) and 481A-3. (FAC ¶¶ 97-109.)

Section 480-2(a) provides that "[u]nfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce are unlawful." Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-2(a). "Two distinct causes of action have emerged under [section] 480-2(a): (1) claims alleging unfair methods of competition; and (2) claims alleging unfair or deceptive acts or practices." [7] Haw. Med. Ass'n v. Haw. Med. Serv. Ass'n, Inc., 113 Haw. 77, 148 P.3d 1179, 1207 (Haw. 2006); see also Star Markets, Ltd. v. Texaco, Inc., 945 F. Supp. 1344, 1346 (D. Haw. 1996). Section 481A-3 similarly prohibits "deceptive trade practice[s]." Haw. Rev. Stat. § 481A-3.

Plaintiff contends that Defendants violated these statutes by: (1) targeting financially unsophisticated and otherwise vulnerable consumers for inappropriate credit products; (2) failing to adequately disclose the true costs and risks of the subject loan and its inappropriateness for Plaintiff; (3) failing to disclose that the lender approved the subject loan based on financial documents required by Defendants such as tax returns and pay stubs without regard to Plaintiff's ability to sustain the loan with any reasonable means test; (4) falsely representing or failing to fully and completely disclose the amounts Plaintiff was required to pay; (5) issuing a defective mortgage loan that resulted in little net benefit to Plaintiff with the primary objective of generating fees; and (6) entering into the public record a materially false document. (FAC ¶ 102.)

Once again, Plaintiff provides only labels and conclusions to support this claim. For instance, Plaintiff [*28] has utterly failed to allege any facts to suggest that Defendants were targeting financially unsophisticated or otherwise

[6] As to Plaintiff's claim that Defendants "[f]alsely represented on August 4, 2009, that First Magnus transferred its interest in the Mortgage to BAC" (FAC ¶ 92(j)), this contention also fails to meet Rule 9(b)'s requirement that fraud be pleaded with particularity. In this allegation, Plaintiff is presumably referring to the assignment from MERS to BAC (see id. Ex. A; Opp'n at 19-21), but the complaint is completely devoid of any factual allegations to support Plaintiff's argument that MERS did not have authority to assign the mortgage. Accordingly, this contention cannot withstand a motion to dismiss.

[7] Although "[a]ny person" may bring an action for unfair methods of competition in violation of section 480-2, only consumers, the attorney general, or the director of the office of consumer protection may bring an action for unfair or deceptive acts or practices in violation of section 480-2. Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-2(d), (e); see also Davis v. Four Seasons Hotel, Ltd., 122 Haw. 423, 228 P.3d 303, 307 (Haw. 2010). A "consumer" is a "natural person [*27] who, primarily for personal, family, or household purposes, purchases, attempts to purchase, or is solicited to purchase goods or services or who commits money, property, or services in a personal investment." Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-1.

vulnerable consumers. Nor has Plaintiff proffered facts with respect to Defendants' failure to adequately disclose "the true costs and risks of the subject loan." There are also no factual allegations to suggest that the lender failed to disclose that it approved loans "without regard to Plaintiff [sic] ability to sustain the loan with any reasonable means test." (Id.) Moreover, Plaintiff's assertion that Defendants created a defective mortgage loan that resulted in little net economic benefit to Plaintiff is so utterly lacking in factual basis that it cannot possibly satisfy federal pleading requirements.

Additionally, Plaintiff's contentions that Defendants falsely represented the amount Plaintiff was required to pay, and that Defendants caused to be recorded a materially false document purporting to convey an interest in the Subject Property, sound in fraud. These assertions, couched as legal conclusions, are insufficient to meet Plaintiff's burden under Rule 8, much less the more rigorous requirements of Rule 9(b) that apply to allegations of fraud or mistake. [*29] See Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) (requiring a party to state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake).

In sum, the instant claim consists entirely of conclusory allegations and vague assertions, which do not satisfy federal pleading requirements and are insufficient to put Defendants on notice of the basis for Plaintiff's claims. See Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949 (finding that a complaint does not "suffice if it tenders naked assertions devoid of further factual enhancement") (citation and quotation signals omitted). Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Defendants' Motion to Dismiss as to Count V of the First Amended Complaint.

VII. Count VI: Breach of Fiduciary Duty

Plaintiff also argues that his relationship with Defendants was fiduciary in nature and that Defendants breached their fiduciary duties in connection with the loan. (See FAC ¶¶ 110-118.) Generally, there exists no fiduciary duty between borrowers and lenders. Unless a special relationship exists between a borrower and lender that elevates the lender's responsibility, the standard "arms-length business relationship" applies. Giles v. General Motors Acceptance Corp., 494 F.3d 865, 883 (9th Cir. 2007); see also Pension Trust Fund for Operation Engineers v. Federal Ins. Co., 307 F.3d 944, 954 (9th Cir. 2002).

Here, [*30] the complaint is completely devoid of any allegations to suggest that Plaintiff's relationship with Defendants is anything other than an ordinary, arms-length, lender-borrower relationship. Plaintiff's unsubstantiated assertion that Defendants owe him a fiduciary duty is simply not sufficient to establish the existence of such a duty. [8] Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Defendants' Motion to Dismiss as to Count VI of the First Amended Complaint.

VIII. Count IX: Unconscionability

Plaintiff argues in Count IX that "the terms and conditions of the Note and Mortgage are unconscionable, and [*31] Plaintiff is entitled to rescission, damages, repayment, reimbursement or indemnification of all monies that were paid and other claims in such amounts as shall be proven at the time of trial." (FAC ¶ 135.)

"Unconscionability" is generally a defense to the enforcement of a contract, and is not a proper claim for affirmative relief. See, e.g., Carey v. Lincoln Loan Co., 203 Ore. App. 399, 125 P.3d 814, 829 (Or. App. 2005) ("[U]nconscionability is not a basis for a separate claim for relief.") To the extent that unconscionability can be addressed affirmatively as a part of a distinct cause of action, such a claim exists where "the clauses are so one-sided as to be unconscionable under the circumstances existing at the time of the making of the contract." Lewis v. Lewis, 69 Haw. 497, 748 P.2d 1362, 1366 (Haw. 1988) (emphasis added and citations omitted).

[8] Additionally, to the extent that Plaintiff asserts Defendants breached their purported fiduciary duties by engaging in fraudulent conduct, those allegations fail to satisfy Rule 9(b)'s heightened pleading requirement. Moreover, the Court will not accept Plaintiff's invitation to "recognize that the law is changing with regard to lenders' fiduciary duties and find that Plaintiff has stated a cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty." (See Opp'n at 26.) Plaintiff's argument on this point is premised solely upon California state law, which simply is not relevant to the instant action. (See id. at 24-26.)

Here, Plaintiff's allegations fail to address any specific contract terms between Plaintiff and Defendants, and instead, address Defendants' alleged conduct generally. To the extent Plaintiff refers to the contract, it is to state that "First Magnus did not explain to [Plaintiff] that the payments on the Note he signed would for 10 years pay only interest on the loan, [*32] and that he would build no equity in the Subject Property as the result of those payments." (FAC ¶ 133.) Even this allegation, however, does not allege that any particular contract terms are unconscionable; to the contrary, Plaintiff asserts that First Magnus failed to inform him of the contract terms. Moreover, this claim is completely devoid of any facts to demonstrate unconscionability. Plaintiff's contentions in Count IX therefore fail to state a claim.

Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Defendants' Motion to Dismiss as to Count IX of the First Amended Complaint.

IX. Count X: Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress

Plaintiff next asserts a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress. Plaintiff specifically contends that he "suffered emotional distress in the form of lost sleep, constant worry, and grief from the loss of his property." (FAC ¶ 139.)

"Under Hawaii law, the elements of IIED are '(1) that the act allegedly causing the harm was intentional or reckless, (2) that the act was outrageous, and (3) that the act caused (4) extreme emotional distress to another.'" Enoka v. AIG Haw. Ins. Co., 109 Haw. 537, 128 P.3d 850, 872 (Haw. 2006) (quoting Hac v. Univ. of Haw., 102 Haw. 92, 73 P.3d 46, 60-61 (Haw. 2003)). [*33] The Hawaii Supreme Court defines the term "outrageous" as conduct "'without just cause or excuse and beyond all bounds of decency.'" Enoka, 128 P.3d at 872 (quoting Lee v. Aiu, 85 Haw. 19, 936 P.2d 655, 670 n.12 (Haw. 1997)). "Moreover, 'extreme emotional distress' constitutes, inter alia, mental suffering, mental anguish, nervous shock, and other 'highly unpleasant mental reactions.'" Id. (quoting Hac, 73 P.3d at 60).

Here, Plaintiff fails to allege any facts to support an inference that Defendants acted in an intentional or reckless manner or that they engaged in outrageous conduct or caused him to suffer severe mental and emotional distress. Plaintiff's conclusory allegations are once again insufficient to state a claim for relief. See Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949 ("Threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice.").

Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Defendants' Motion to Dismiss as to Count X of the First Amended Complaint.

X. Remaining Claims and Leave to Amend

Plaintiff concedes that the causes of action for Unjust Enrichment (Count VII), Mistake (Count VIII), Violations of the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (Count XI), Breach of [*34] the Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing (Count XII), and Complaint to Quiet Title (Count XIII) "are unlikely to prevail as written." (Opp'n at 28-29.) Plaintiff therefore requests leave to amend these claims and any others that the Court finds to be deficient.

Pursuant to Rule 15(a)(2), courts should "freely give leave [to amend] when justice so requires." Further, "requests for leave should be granted with extreme liberality." Moss v. U.S. Secret Service, 572 F.3d 962, 972 (9th Cir. 2009). "Dismissal without leave to amend is improper unless it is clear . . . that the complaint could not be saved by an amendment." Id. "However, 'liberality in granting leave to amend is subject to several limitations.'" Cafasso, U.S. ex rel. v. Gen. Dynamics C4 Sys., 637 F.3d 1047, 1058 (9th Cir. 2011) (quoting Ascon Props., Inc. v. Mobil Oil Co., 866 F.2d 1149, 1160 (9th Cir. 1989)). "Those limitations include undue prejudice to the opposing party, bad faith by the movant, futility, and undue delay." Id. (citing Ascon Props, 866 F.2d at 1160). "Further, '[t]he district court's discretion to deny leave to amend is particularly broad where plaintiff has previously amended the complaint.'" Id. (quoting [*35] Ascon Props, 866 F.2d at 1160).

Due to the deferential standard for amended complaints in this Circuit, the Court will provide Plaintiff one further opportunity to amend the complaint consistent with both this Order as well as the Court's December 13, 2010 Order. Accordingly, the First Amended Complaint is DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE as against all Defendants in this action with leave to amend no later than 30 days from the filing of this Order. Failure to file an amended complaint and to cure the pleading deficiencies will result in dismissal of this action with prejudice. Plaintiff is advised that the amended complaint must clearly state how each of the named defendants have injured him, and it must also clearly identify the statutory provisions, if any, under which Plaintiff's claims are brought. Moreover, the Court does not here limit Plaintiff's amended pleading only to the causes of action presently contained in the complaint—Plaintiff may allege new theories of liability, provided that they are supported by the proper factual and legal basis.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, the Court GRANTS IN PART and DENIES IN PART the Motion to Dismiss. The First Amended Complaint is [*36] DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE as against all Defendants.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

HN1[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(d), for a motion to dismiss, the court does not generally look beyond the complaint as doing so may enter the purview of summary judgment. There are, however, two exceptions to this rule. First, the court may properly take judicial notice of material which is attached as part of the complaint or relied upon by the complaint. Second, the court may properly take judicial notice of matters in the public record pursuant to Fed. R. Evid. 201(b). Rule 201(b) requires a judicially noticed fact must be one not subject to reasonable dispute in that it is either: (1) generally known within the territorial jurisdiction of the trial court; or (2) capable of accurate and ready determination by resort to sources whose accuracy cannot reasonably be questioned. Under Rule 201(d), a court shall take judicial notice if requested by a party and supplied with the necessary information.

HN2[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a) requires a plaintiff to plead each claim with sufficient specificity to give the defendant fair notice of what the claim is and the grounds upon which it rests. A complaint which falls short of the Rule 8(a) standard may be dismissed if it fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). Dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6) is appropriate only where the complaint lacks a cognizable legal theory or sufficient facts to support a cognizable legal theory. Moreover, the factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level such that the claim is plausible on its face.

HN3[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), when deciding whether to grant a motion to dismiss, the court generally may not consider any material beyond the pleadings. The court must accept as true all well-pleaded factual allegations. The court must also construe the alleged facts in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Material which is properly submitted as part of the complaint may be considered. But courts are not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation.

HN4[] Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

Fraud-based claims are subject to heightened pleading requirements under Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). In that regard, a plaintiff alleging fraud must state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud. Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). The allegations must be specific enough to give defendants notice of the particular misconduct which is alleged to constitute the fraud charged so that they can defend against the charge and not just deny that they have done anything wrong. To that end, the allegations must contain an account of the time, place, and specific content of the false representations as well as the identities of the parties to the misrepresentations.

If dismissal is granted under Fed. R. Civ. Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > Federal Preemption

HN6[] Supremacy Clause, Federal Preemption

Federal preemption of state laws stems from the Supremacy Clause of the Constitution, U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 2. The laws of the United States shall be the supreme law of the land any thing in the Constitution or laws of any state to the contrary notwithstanding.

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > Federal Preemption

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN7[] Supremacy Clause, Federal Preemption

Generally, preemption analysis starts with the assumption that the historic police powers of the States were not to be superseded by the Federal Act unless that was the clear and manifest purpose of Congress. Congressional intent is therefore the "ultimate touchstone" of preemption inquiry. Such intent may be explicitly stated in the statute's language or implicitly contained in its structure and purpose. State law may also be preempted by federal regulations. Where Congress has directed an administrator to exercise his discretion, his judgments are subject to judicial review only to determine whether he has exceeded his statutory authority or acted arbitrarily. If these conditions are met, the statutorily authorized regulations of an agency will pre-empt any state or local law that conflicts with such regulations or frustrates the purposes thereof.

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > Federal Preemption

HN8[] Supremacy Clause, Federal Preemption

There are times when the traditional presumption against preemption does not apply. Indeed, the presumption is not triggered when the State regulates in an area where there has been a history of significant federal presence.

HN9[] Federal Acts, Home Owners' Loan Act

Congress has legislated in the field of banking from the days of McCulloch v. Maryland, creating an extensive federal statutory and regulatory scheme. The Home Owners' Loan Act (HOLA), 12 U.S.C.S. § 1461, et seq. was enacted to charter savings associations under federal law, at a time when record numbers of home loans were in default and a staggering number of state-chartered savings associations were insolvent. One of HOLA's central purposes was to restore public confidence in the banking system by consolidating the regulation of savings and loan associations with the federal government. To achieve this purpose, Congress authorized the Office of Thrift Supervision (OTS) to promulgate regulations governing federal savings associations. 12 U.S.C.S. § 1464. OTS occupies the entire field in that regard. 12 C.F.R. § 560.2(a) (2011).

HN10[] Federal Acts, Home Owners' Loan Act

The Home Owners' Loan Act's implementing regulations, 12 C.F.R. § 560.2(b)(4), (b)(9)-(10) (2011) set forth a list, "without limitation," of the categories of state laws that are expressly preempted: The terms of credit, including amortization of loans and the deferral and capitalization of interest and adjustments to the interest rate, balance, payments due, or term to maturity of the loan, including the circumstances under which a loan may be called due and payable upon the passage of time or a specified event external to the loan; Disclosure and advertising, including laws requiring specific statements, information, or other content to be included in credit application forms, credit solicitations, billing statements, credit contracts, or other credit-related documents and laws requiring creditors to supply copies of credit reports to borrowers or applicants; Processing, origination, servicing, sale or purchase of, or investment or participation in, mortgages.

HN11[] Federal Acts, Home Owners' Loan Act

Although The Home Owners' Loan Act, 12 U.S.C.S. § 1461, et seq. and its related regulations have been described as so pervasive as to leave no room for state regulatory control, state laws may nonetheless survive a preemption claim in limited circumstances. Those state laws which "only incidentally affect the lending operations of Federal savings associations or are otherwise consistent with the purposes of the regulations may not be preempted. 12 C.F.R. § 560.2(c). In order to determine whether a particular state law has such an effect, the Ninth Circuit has provided the following process: When analyzing the status of state laws under § 560.2, the first step will be to determine whether the type of law in question is listed in paragraph (b). If so, the analysis will end there; the law is preempted. If the law is not covered by paragraph (b), the next question is whether the law affects lending. If it does, then, in accordance with paragraph (a), the presumption arises that the law is preempted. This presumption can be reversed only if the law can clearly be shown to fit within the confines of paragraph (c). For these purposes, paragraph (c) is intended to be interpreted narrowly. Any doubt should be resolved in favor of preemption.

HN12[] Financing, Foreclosures

Cal. Civ. Code § 2923.5(a)(2) requires a mortgage lender to contact the borrower in person or by telephone in order to assess the borrower's financial situation and explore options for the borrower to avoid foreclosure. Under § 2923.5(a)(1), a notice of default cannot be filed until 30 days after this contact is made.

HN13[] Federal Acts, Home Owners' Loan Act

The overwhelming weight of authority has held that a claim under Cal. Civ. Code § 2923.5 is preempted by the Home Owners' Loan Act (HOLA), 12 U.S.C.S. § 1461, et seq. This is because the notice requirement imposed by § 2923.5 implicates HOLA's express preemption of state laws regulating the processing and servicing of mortgages.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN14[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

Under California's Unfair Competition Law (UCL), Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et. seq., there are three varieties of unfair competition: acts or practices which are unlawful, or unfair, or fraudulent. Unlawful practices are forbidden by law, be it civil or criminal, federal, state, or municipal, statutory, regulatory, or court-made. Unfair practices constitute conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition. The fraudulent prong under the UCL requires a showing of actual or potential deception to some members of the public, or harm to the public interest. The UCL borrows violations of other laws and treats them as unfair business practices, and also makes clear that a practice may be deemed unfair even if not specifically proscribed by some other law.

HN15[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

Although California's Unfair Competition Law (UCL), Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et. seq. is a law of general applicability, it may nonetheless be preempted by the Home Owners' Loan Act, 12 U.S.C.S. § 1461, et seq. if, as applied, it is a type of state law contemplated by 12 C.F.R. § 560.2(b). If it is, the preemption analysis ends.

HN16[] Federal Acts, Home Owners' Loan Act

Alleged misrepresentations concerning inadequate disclosures of fees, interest rates, or other loan terms directly affect lending and are preempted by the Home Owners' Loan Act, 12 U.S.C.S. § 1461, et seq., while allegations which rely on the general duty not to misrepresent material facts are not preempted.

HN17[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

A plaintiff alleging unfair business practices under California's Unfair Competition Law, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et. seq., must state with reasonable particularity the facts supporting the statutory elements of the violation.

Torts > ... > Fraud & Misrepresentation > Actual Fraud > Elements

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

HN18[] Federal & State Interrelationships, Erie Doctrine

In California, the elements of fraud are: (1) misrepresentation; (2) knowledge of falsity; (3) intent to defraud or to induce reliance (4) justifiable reliance; and (5) resulting damage. Although the federal district court looks to state law to determine if the elements of fraud have been properly pleaded, a plaintiff must still meet the federal standard to plead fraud with particularity.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Consideration > Promissory Estoppel

HN19[] Consideration, Promissory Estoppel

A successful claim for promissory estoppel requires: (1) a promise that is clear and unambiguous in its terms; (2) reliance by the party to whom the promise is made; (3) the reliance must be reasonable and foreseeable; and (4) the party asserting the estoppel must be injured by his or her reliance.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Strike > Redundant Matters

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Strike > Scandalous Matters

HN20[] Motions to Strike, Immaterial Matters

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f), the court may strike from any pleading any insufficient defense or any redundant, immaterial, impertinent, or scandalous matter. A motion to strike will generally not be granted unless it is clear the matter to be stricken could not have any possible bearing on the subject matter of the litigation.

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Specific Cases Removed > Federal Questions

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Federal Questions > Well Pleaded Complaint Rule

HN21[] Specific Cases Removed, Federal Questions

A state court action may be removed to federal court so long as the action could have originally asserted federal-question jurisdiction. 28 U.S.C.S. 1441(b). The defendant must show the basis for federal jurisdiction. Removal jurisdiction statutes are strictly construed against removal. A well-pleaded complaint presents a federal-question on the face of the pleading. An anticipated or even actual federal defense is not sufficient to confer jurisdiction. A plaintiff, however, may not defeat removal by purposely omitting necessary federal questions from the complaint.

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Specific Cases Removed > Federal Questions

Real Property Law > ... > Landlord's Remedies & Rights > Eviction Actions > Forcible Entry & Detainer

HN22[] Specific Cases Removed, Federal Questions

Unlawful detainer claims themselves do not arise under federal law, and therefore, the federal district court lacks federal-question jurisdiction.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > Same Case & Controversy

HN23[] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Supplemental Jurisdiction

The supplemental-jurisdiction statute is not a source of original subject-matter jurisdiction, and a removal petition therefore may not base subject-matter jurisdiction on the supplemental jurisdiction statute, even if the action which a defendant seeks to remove is related to another action over which the federal district court already has subject-matter jurisdiction.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Amount in Controversy

Civil Procedure > ... > Diversity Jurisdiction > Amount in Controversy > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Diversity Jurisdiction > Citizenship > General Overview

HN24[] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Amount in Controversy

Under 28 U.S.C.S. § 1332(a), federal courts have original jurisdiction where: (1) opposing parties are citizens of different states; and (2) the amount in controversy exceeds $75,000. Where diversity is cited as a basis for jurisdiction, removal is not permitted if a defendant in the case is a citizen of the state in which the plaintiff originally brought the action, even if the opposing parties are diverse. 28 U.S.C.S. § 1441(b).

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Costs > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Postremoval Remands > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Basis of Recovery > Statutory Awards

HN25[] Costs & Attorney Fees, Costs

An order remanding a case may require payment of just costs and any actual expenses, including attorney fees, incurred as a result of the removal. 28 U.S.C.S. § 1447(c). Since the process of removing a case to federal court and then having it remanded back to state court delays resolution of the case, imposes additional costs on both parties, and wastes judicial resources, requiring the payment of fees and costs is appropriate where the removing party lacked an objectively reasonable basis for seeking removal. District courts retain discretion to consider whether unusual circumstances warrant a departure from the rule in a given case. In addition, the Ninth Circuit clarified that removal is not objectively unreasonable solely because the removing party's arguments lack merit, or else attorney's fees would always be awarded whenever remand is granted. Instead, the objective reasonableness of a removal depends on the clarity of the applicable law and whether such law "clearly foreclosed" the arguments in support of removal.

[Docket Item Nos. 11, 12, 17, 26]

Within this action alleging the wrongful institution of foreclosure proceedings, Defendant Wachovia Mortgage, FSB ("Wachovia") moves to dismiss the complaint pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) and to strike portions of the complaint pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(f). Wachovia also moves to remand the unlawful detainer portion of this case to the Monterey Superior Court on various [*2] grounds. After reviewing the complaint as well as the moving, responding and reply papers for each motion, the Court found these matters suitable for decision without oral argument pursuant to Civil Local Rule 7-1(b). As such, the hearing previously scheduled was vacated and the motions submitted. For the reasons set forth below, the motion to dismiss will be granted with leave to amend in part, rendering the motion to strike moot. The motion to remand will be granted. [1]

I. FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

In 1986, Sato purchased the property at issue located at 25500 Via Marquita in Carmel (the "Property") by executing a Deed of Trust in the amount of $317,000.00. Complaint at ¶ 10. Sato then refinanced the Property in 2008 through Wachovia. Id. at ¶ 11. On the corresponding Deed of Trust for this new loan, Wachovia was listed as the "lender" and Golden West Savings Association Service Company was listed as the "trustee." Id.

Sato remained current on her mortgage payments. Id. at ¶¶ 12-15. However, after a series of personal events which diminished her financial status, Sato contacted Wachovia in early 2008 [*3] and requested information about a loan modification since her current loan was an adjustable rate, negative amortization loan. Id. at ¶¶ 12-17. Wachovia representatives told Sato "numerous times" that she must stop making mortgage payments in order to for Wachovia to review her loan for a potential modification. Id. at ¶ 18. Relying on these statements, Sato did in fact stop paying her mortgage and believed Wachovia was in the process of reviewing of her loan. Id. at ¶¶ 21, 23.

Sato provided all information requested of her during the period her loan was under review. Id. at ¶ 25. According to Sato, however, Wachovia "routinely botched up documents, lost documents and asked for the same documentation over and over again" and despite her requests, Sato could not get a straight answer from Wachovia regarding the status of her loan. Id. at ¶¶ 24, 26. Wachovia never returned a "valid answer" on Sato's potential loan modification, and never discussed with her options to avoid foreclosure." Id. at ¶¶ 27-29. At some point, Wachovia stopped reviewing Sato's account and initiated foreclosure proceedings. Id. at ¶ 31. Thus, on June 28, 2010, a Notice of Default was recorded by Defendant NDex [*4] West ("NDex"). Id. at ¶ 35. Thereafter, NDex was substituted as

Trustee (although they had already filed a Notice of Default) on August 13, 2010, and a Notice of Trustee's Sale was filed by NDex on September 30, 2010. Id. at ¶¶ 36, 37.

Sato initiated this case in Monterey County Superior Court on January 13, 2011, alleging eight claims for relief: (1) Quiet Title; (2) violation of California Civil Code § 2923.5; (3) violation of California Business and Professions Code § 17200 et. seq.; (4) intentional misrepresentation; (5) negligent misrepresentation; (6) promissory estoppel; (7) injunctive relief; and (8) recission. On February 22, 2011, Wachovia removed Sato's action to this court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1332 et. seq. A subsequent unlawful detainer action brought by Wachovia in Monterey County Superior Court was thereafter removed by Sato on March 15, 2011, and consolidated into this case.

II. THE MOTION TO DISMISS

Wachovia moves to dismiss all of Sato's claims as pre-empted by the Home Owners' Loan Act ("HOLA"). As discussed further below, the court agrees that the first, second, seventh and eighth claims are preempted and cannot be saved through amendment. Thus, they will be dismissed [*5] without leave to amend. The remaining claims will be dismissed with leave to amend.

A. Request for Judicial Notice ("RJN")

In support of this motion to dismiss, Wachovia requested the court take judicial notice of various documents. See Wachovia's RJN. Exs. A-I. These documents include: (A) the Deed of Trust, (B) the Charter of Wachovia Mortgage, FSB, (C) a certification from the Comptroller of the Currency, (D) the Notice of Default, (E) the Substitution of Trustee, (F) the Notice of Trustee's Sale, (G) a letter from Wachovia to Sato informing her of a rate adjustment, (H) a letter from Wachovia to Sato informing her she did not qualify for a loan modification, and (I) the Trustee's Deed upon Sale.

HN1[] For a motion to dismiss, the court does not generally look beyond the complaint as doing so may enter the purview of summary judgment. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(d). There are, however, two exceptions to this rule. First, the court may properly take judicial notice of material which is attached as part of the complaint or relied upon by the complaint. See Lee v. City of Los Angeles, 250 F.3d 668, 688-69 (9th Cir. 2001). Second, the court may properly take judicial notice of matters in the public [*6] record pursuant to Federal Rule of Evidence 201(b). Id. Rule 201(b) requires a "judicially noticed fact must be one not subject to reasonable dispute in that it is either: (1) generally known within the territorial jurisdiction of the trial court; or (2) capable of accurate and ready determination by resort to sources whose accuracy cannot reasonably be questioned." A court "shall take judicial notice if requested by a party and supplied with the necessary information." See Fed. R. Evid. 201(d).

Here, Sato does not challenge the authenticity of the documents contained in Wachovia's RJN. Exhibits A, D, E, F and I are judicially noticeable as matters of public record. Exhibits G and H are judicially noticeable because they are relied upon by the complaint. Complaint at ¶¶ 31, 32. Additionally, exhibits B and C are judicially noticeable as "capable of accurate and ready determination by resort to sources whose accuracy cannot reasonably be questioned." Fed. R. Evid. 201(b)(2); *Hite v. Wachovia Mortg., No. 2:09-cv-02884-GEB-GGH, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 57732, at 6-9 (E.D. Cal. June 10, 2010); *Gens v. Wachovia Mortg. Corp., No. CV10-01073 JF (HRL), 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 54932, at 6-7 (N.D. Cal. May 12, 2010). [*7] Therefore, Wachovia's RJN is granted in its entirety.

B. Legal Standards

1. Dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6)

HN2[] Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(a) requires a plaintiff to plead each claim with sufficient specificity to "give the defendant fair notice of what the...claim is and the grounds upon which it rests." Bell Atlantic Corp. v.

Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (internal quotations omitted). A complaint which falls short of the Rule 8(a) standard may be dismissed if it fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). "Dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6) is appropriate only where the complaint lacks a cognizable legal theory or sufficient facts to support a cognizable legal theory." Mendiondo v. Centinela Hosp. Med. Ctr., 521 F.3d 1097, 1104 (9th Cir. 2008). Moreover, the factual allegations "must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level" such that the claim "is plausible on its face." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556-57.

HN3[] When deciding whether to grant a motion to dismiss, the court generally "may not consider any material beyond the pleadings." Hal Roach Studios, Inc. v. Richard Feiner & Co., 896 F.2d 1542, 1555 n. 19 (9th Cir. 1990). The court [*8] must accept as true all "well-pleaded factual allegations." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 1950, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). The court must also construe the alleged facts in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Love v. United States, 915 F.2d 1242, 1245 (9th Cir. 1988). "[M]aterial which is properly submitted as part of the complaint may be considered." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555. But "courts are not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation." Id.

Additionally, HN4[] fraud-based claims are subject to heightened pleading requirements under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b). In that regard, a plaintiff alleging fraud "must state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud." Fed. R. Civ. Proc. 9(b). The allegations must be "specific enough to give defendants notice of the particular misconduct which is alleged to constitute the fraud charged so that they can defend against the charge and not just deny that they have done anything wrong." Semegen v. Weidner, 780 F.2d 727, 731 (9th Cir. 1985). To that end, the allegations must contain "an account of the time, place, and specific content of the false representations as well as the identities of [*9] the parties to the misrepresentations." Swartz v. KPMG LLP, 476 F.3d 756, 764 (9th Cir. 2007).

HN5[] If dismissal is granted, leave to amend should be freely allowed "unless the court determines that the allegation of other facts consistent with the challenged pleading could not possibly cure the deficiency." Schreiber Distrib. Co. v. Serv-Well Furniture Co., 806 F.2d 1393, 1401 (9th Cir. 1986); see Lopez v. Smith, 203 F.3d 1122, 1127 (9th Cir. 2000); Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a). Where amendment to the complaint would be futile, the court may order dismissal with prejudice. Dumas v. Kipp, 90 F.3d 386, 393 (9th Cir. 1996).

2. Preemption under HOLA

HN6[] Federal preemption of state laws stems from the Supremacy Clause of the Constitution. United States v. Arizona, No. 10-16645, 641 F.3d 339, 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 7413, at *4. "[T]he laws of the United States...shall be the supreme law of the land...any Thing in the Constitution or laws of any state to the contrary notwithstanding." U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 2.

HN7[] Generally, "[p]reemption analysis 'start[s] [*10] with the assumption that the historic police powers of the States were not to be superseded by the Federal Act unless that was the clear and manifest purpose of Congress.'" City of Columbus v. Ours Garage & Wrecking Service, Inc., 536 U.S. 424, 438, 122 S. Ct. 2226, 153 L. Ed. 2d 430 (2002) (quoting Medtronic, Inc. v. Lohr, 518 U.S. 470, 485, 116 S. Ct. 2240, 135 L. Ed. 2d 700 (1996)). Congressional intent is therefore the "ultimate touchstone" of preemption inquiry. Medtronic, 518 U.S. at 485. Such intent may be "explicitly stated in the statute's language or implicitly contained in its structure and purpose." Fidelity Federal Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. de la Cuesta, 458 U.S. 141, 152-53, 102 S. Ct. 3014, 73 L. Ed. 2d 664 (1982). State law may also be preempted by federal regulations. Id. at 153. "Where Congress has directed an administrator to exercise his discretion, his judgments are subject to judicial review only to determine whether he has exceeded his statutory authority or acted arbitrarily." Id. If these conditions are met, "the statutorily authorized regulations of an agency will pre-empt any state or local law that conflicts with such regulations or frustrates the purposes thereof." New York v. Fed. Commc'ns Comm'n, 486 U.S. 57, 64, 108 S. Ct. 1637, 100 L. Ed. 2d 48 (1988).

HN8[] There are times when the traditional presumption [*11] against preemption does not apply. Indeed, the presumption is "not triggered when the State regulates in an area where there has been a history of significant federal presence." United States v. Locke, 529 U.S. 89, 108, 120 S. Ct. 1135, 146 L. Ed. 2d 69 (2000). As relevant here, HN9[] "Congress has legislated in the field of banking from the days of McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. 316, 325-26, 426-27, 4 L. Ed. 579 (1819), creating an extensive federal statutory and regulatory scheme." Bank of Am. v. City & County of San Francisco, 309 F.3d 551, 558 (9th Cir. 2002). HOLA was enacted "to charter savings associations under federal law, at a time when record numbers of home loans were in default and a staggering number of state-chartered savings associations were insolvent." Silvas v. E*Trade Mortg. Corp., 514 F.3d 1001, 1004 (9th Cir. 2008). One of HOLA's central purposes was to restore public confidence in the banking system by consolidating the regulation of savings and loan associations with the federal government. Id. To achieve this purpose, Congress authorized the Office of Thrift Supervision ("OTS") to promulgate regulations governing federal savings associations. 12 U.S.C. § 1464; Silvas, 514 F.3d at 1005. OTS occupies [*12] the entire field in that regard. 12 C.F.R. § 560.2(a) (2011).

HN10[] HOLA's implementing regulations set forth a list, "without limitation," of the categories of state laws that are expressly preempted:

> The terms of credit, including amortization of loans and the deferral and capitalization of interest and adjustments to the interest rate, balance, payments due, or term to maturity of the loan, including the circumstances under which a loan may be called due and payable upon the passage of time or a specified event external to the loan;
> Disclosure and advertising, including laws requiring specific statements, information, or other content to be included in credit application forms, credit solicitations, billing statements, credit contracts, or other credit-related documents and laws requiring creditors to supply copies of credit reports to borrowers or applicants;
> Processing, origination, servicing, sale or purchase of, or investment or participation in, mortgages....

12 C.F.R. § 560.2(b)(4), (b)(9)-(10) (2011).

HN11[] Although HOLA and its related regulations have been described as "so pervasive as to leave no room for state regulatory control," state laws may nonetheless survive a preemption [*13] claim in limited circumstances. Conference of Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'ns v. Stein, 604 F.2d 1256, 1260 (9th Cir. 1979), aff'd, 445 U.S. 921, 100 S. Ct. 1304, 63 L. Ed. 2d 754. Those state laws which "only incidentally affect the lending operations of Federal savings associations or are otherwise consistent with the purposes of" the regulations may not be preempted." 12 C.F.R. § 560.2(c) (emphasis added). In order to determine whether a particular state law has such an effect, the Ninth Circuit has provided the following process:

> When analyzing the status of state laws under § 560.2, the first step will be to determine whether the type of law in question is listed in paragraph (b). If so, the analysis will end there; the law is preempted. If the law is not covered by paragraph (b), the next question is whether the law affects lending. If it does, then, in accordance with paragraph (a), the presumption arises that the law is preempted. This presumption can be reversed only if the law can clearly be shown to fit within the confines of paragraph (c). For these purposes, paragraph (c) is intended to be interpreted narrowly. Any doubt should be resolved in favor of preemption.

Silvas, 514 F.3d at 1005 (quoting OTS, Final Rule, 61 Fed. Reg. 50951, 50966-67 (Sep. 30, 1996)).

B. [*14] Discussion

As a preliminary matter, it is important to note that Sato obtained the subject home loan from Wachovia Mortgage, FSB, in 2008. Complaint at ¶ 11; RJN, Ex. A. At that time, Wachovia was an independent "Federal savings bank chartered under section 5 of the Home Owners' Loan Act" and "subject to all lawful and applicable rules, regulations, and orders of the Office of Thrift Supervision." RJN, Ex. B. Although Wachovia was subsequently acquired by a national banking association, namely Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., district courts have held that HOLA preemption applies to all conduct relating to the loan. DeLeon v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 729 F. Supp. 2d 1119, 1126 (N.D. Cal. 2010); Haggarty v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., No. C 10-02416 CRB, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9962, at *10-11 (N.D. Cal. Feb. 2, 2011); Guerrero v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., No. CV 10-5095-VBF(AJWx), 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 96261, at *8-9 (C.D. Cal. Sep. 14, 2010); Zlotnik v. U.S. Bancorp, No. C 09-3855 PJH, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 119857, at *17-19 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 22, 2009). This court agrees with the conclusions of its predecessors and will therefore examine this matter under HOLA. Sato's argument in opposition, which mainly [*15] discusses preemption under the National Bank Act ("NBA"), 12 U.S.C. § 38 et. seq., is misplaced. [2]

1. Claim 2: Violation of California Civil Code § 2923.5

Sato alleges Wachovia violated the notice provisions contained in California Civil Code § 2923.5 by failing to contact her prior to foreclosure proceedings. HN12[] The statute requires a mortgage lender to "contact the borrower in person or by telephone in order to assess the borrower's financial situation and explore options for the borrower to avoid foreclosure." Cal. Civ. Code § 2923.5(a)(2). A notice of default cannot be filed until 30 days after this contact is made. Cal. Civ. Code § 2923.5(a)(1).

Sato's claim under § 2923.5 must be dismissed for three reasons: (1) § 2923.5 does not apply to Sato's mortgage loan, (2) § 2923.5 is preempted by HOLA, and (3) Sato is no longer eligible for relief under § 2923.5 even if the statute was viable here.

As to the first reason for dismissal, the court need not look further than the [*16] plain language of the statute. "This section shall apply only to mortgages or deeds of trust recorded from January 1, 2003, to December 31, 2007, inclusive, that are secured by owner-occupied residential real property containing no more than four dwelling units." Cal. Civ. Code § 2923.5(i) (emphasis added). Sato obtained her loan in 2008. Complaint at ¶ 11. The deed of trust was recorded on January 29, 2008. RJN, Ex. A. Thus, § 2923.5 does not apply to Sato's loan.

Regarding preemption, HN13[] "the overwhelming weight of authority has held that a claim under section 2923.5 is preempted by HOLA." Taguinod v. World Savings Bank, 755 F. Supp. 2d 1064, 1074, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 127677, at *20 (C.D. Cal. 2010); see also, e.g., Nguyen v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 749 F. Supp. 2d 1022, 1033 (N.D. Cal. 2010); Beall v. Quality Loan Serv., No. 10-CV-1900-IEG (WVG), 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29184, at *21-23 (C.D. Cal. Mar. 21, 2011). This is because the notice requirement imposed by § 2923.5 "implicates HOLA's express preemption of state laws regulating the 'processing' and 'servicing'" of mortgages. DeLeon, 729 F. Supp. 2d at 1127. Although one California appellate court has found against HOLA preemption, [*17] that court's determination is neither binding on this court, nor persuasive in its reasoning. See Mabry v. Sup. Ct., 185 Cal. App. 4th 208, 226-32, 110 Cal. Rptr. 3d 201 (2010). In the simplest of terms, the Mabry court held that since the term "foreclosure" does not explicitly appear in 12 C.F.R. § 560.2(b), state statutes that can be read to regulate only the foreclosure process, like § 2923.5, are not preempted by HOLA. Id. at 231. But looking to the categories of state laws expressly preempted by HOLA is only the first step of the two step inquiry prescribed by the Ninth Circuit. See Silvas, 514 F.3d at 1005; see also Giordano v. Wachovia Mortg., FSB, 5:10-cv-04661-JF, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 136284, at *11-14 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 14, 2010). Having undertaken the second step, this court finds - as others have found even after Mabry - that the additional notice and disclosure requirements imposed by § 2923.5 affect lending in a manner that cannot be described as incidental, even if foreclosure activities are not explicitly listed in 12 C.F.R. § 560.2(b). For this reason, § 2923.5 is preempted by HOLA.

In addition to the grounds stated above, Sato's claim under § 2923.5 would nonetheless be subject to dismissal [*18] even if the statute was applicable. The only available remedy available for a violation of § 2923.5 is the postponement of an impending foreclosure to permit the lender to comply with the statute. Mabry, 185 Cal. App. 4th at 223-24. Since the subject property has since been sold, Sato can obtain no further relief. RJN, Ex. I.

[2] In any event, it is likely preemption under NBA would lead to the same result. Zlotnik v. U.S. Bancorp, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 119857, at *19 (finding the preemption analysis under NBA as identical to that under HOLA).

Claim 2 will be dismissed without leave to amend.

2. Claim 3: Violation of California Business and Professions Code

Sato alleges violations of California's Unfair Competition Law ("UCL"). Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et. seq. HN14[] Under the UCL, there are three varieties of unfair competition: "acts or practices which are unlawful, or unfair, or fraudulent." Khoury v. Maly's of California, Inc., 14 Cal. App. 4th 612, 618-19, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 708 (1993). "Unlawful" practices are "forbidden by law, be it civil or criminal, federal, state, or municipal, statutory, regulatory, or court-made." Saunders v. Sup. Ct., 27 Cal. App. 4th 832, 838, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 438 (1999). "Unfair" practices constitute "conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly [*19] threatens or harms competition." Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 187, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999). The "fraudulent" prong under the UCL requires a showing of actual or potential deception to some members of the public, or harm to the public interest. See id. at 180; see also McKell v. Wash. Mut., Inc., 142 Cal. App. 4th 1457, 49 Cal. Rptr. 3d 227 (2006); Freeman v. Time, Inc., 68 F.3d 285, 289 (9th Cir. 1995). The UCL 'borrows' violations of other laws and treats them as unfair business practices, and also "makes clear that a practice may be deemed unfair even if not specifically proscribed by some other law." Cel-Tech, 20 Cal. 4th at 180.

Sato's UCL claim can be separated into three basic allegations: (1) "fraudulent representations" concerning the continuation of mortgage payments and the availability of a loan modification, (2) a violation of California Civil Code § 2923.6, and (3) a violation of California Civil Code § 2923.5. Sato contends she lost money and property as a result of Wachovia's conduct.

Sato's third allegation under § 2923.5, which is identical to her stand-alone claim under that statute, is preempted for the same reasons discussed in the preceding section. Similarly, [*20] the second allegation under § 2923.6 is preempted as plead. HN15[] Although the UCL is a law of general applicability, it may nonetheless be preempted if, as applied, it is a type of state law contemplated by 12 C.F.R. § 560.2(b). Silvas, 514 F.3d at 1006. "If it is, the preemption analysis ends." Id. Here, Sato alleges Wachovia violated § 2923.6 by failing to modify her loan. Complaint at ¶ 64. This clearly falls under the preemption provisions for "processing, origination, sale or purchase of ... mortgages" and "terms of credit." See *Stefan v. Wachovia, No. C 09-2252 SBA, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 113480, at 8-10 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 7, 2009); see also *Guerrero, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 96261, at 8-10. Since both allegations of statutory violations are subject to HOLA preemption, they cannot support this UCL claim.

The first allegation presents a different issue. Sato contends Wachovia told her "numerous times" that she must default in order for her loan to be reviewed for potential modification, and that Wachovia deceived her by offering modification while simultaneously attempting to foreclose on the property. See Complaint at ¶¶ 18, 58, 65. District courts are split as to whether this type of misrepresentation [*21] claim is preempted by HOLA. Compare *Guerrero, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 96261, at 8-10 (finding HOLA preemption for fraud claims arising from the loan modification process) and *Stefan, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 113480, at 8-10, with *DeLeon v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., No. 10-CV-01390-LHK, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8296, at 14-21 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 28. 2011) (finding against preemption of false representation claims that did not impose obligations on lending activity). From these cases, it appears the distinction is this: HN16[] alleged misrepresentations concerning "inadequate disclosures of fees, interest rates, or other loan terms" directly affect lending and are preempted, while allegations which "rely on the general duty not to misrepresent material facts" are not preempted. *DeLeon, 2011 U.S. Dist LEXIS at 17.

Here, Sato's allegations could be read two ways, one which would render them preempted and one which would not. If the court infers from the allegations that loan modifications must always be made available, and that Wachovia was required to review, or even modify, Sato's loan and to hold all foreclosure efforts during that time, then the allegations are preempted because they surely seek [*22] to impose an obligation which affects lending. See *Ortiz v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., No. C 10-4812 RS, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 58243, at 14-15 (N.D. Cal. May 27, 2011) (holding that ostensible UCL claim alleging misrepresentation of availability of loan modification is preempted by HOLA). However, if the court infers that the allegations only invoke a general duty to not engage in fraud during business dealings, then the claim only incidentally affects lending and is not preempted. *DeLeon, 2011 U.S. Dist LEXIS at 18-19. At this stage in the case, the court must construe the complaint in the manner most favorable to Sato. Love, 915 F.2d at 1245. Thus, the court finds that Sato's UCL claim is not preempted to the extent it relies on general allegations of misrepresentation.

But that does not end the discussion. HN17[] "A plaintiff alleging unfair business practices under [the UCL] must state with reasonable particularity the facts supporting the statutory elements of the violation." Khoury v. Maly's of California, Inc., 14 Cal. App. 4th 612, 619, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 708 (1993). Removing the statutory violations from this claim renders it devoid of sufficient facts to support a UCL violation. What [*23] is left are only general, vague and conclusory allegations which lack the "who, what, when, where, and how" required by Rule 9(b). Kearns v. Ford Motor Co., 567 F.3d 1120, 1125 (9th Cir. 2009). It must be amended to survive.

Accordingly, Claim 3 will be dismissed with leave to amend since Sato may be able to allege additional facts to support misrepresentation. Any amended UCL claim must remove reference to violations of the preempted statutes.

3. Claim 1, 7 & 8: Quiet Title, Injunctive Relief and Rescission

In her first claim, Sato seeks to quiet title in her favor notwithstanding the foreclosure process. Her seventh claim for injunctive relief seeks to postpone the trustee's sale. Sato also seeks to rescind the Notice of Trustee's Sale and re-start the foreclosure process in the eighth claim. To the extent the claim for quiet title is premised on defective notice under § 2923.5, it fails as that statute is inapplicable and preempted by HOLA. Moreover, Sato's allegations in each of these claims that NDex West had no ability to commence foreclosure proceedings due to a violation of California Civil Code § 2934a is directly contradicted by judicially-noticeable documents referenced by [*24] Sato in the complaint, which plainly demonstrate NDex was substituted as trustee before the Notice of Trustee's Sale was recorded. RJN, Exs. E, F. Similarly, the claims for injunctive relief and rescission can no longer be maintained based on another judicially-noticeable document - the Trustee's Deed upon sale. RJN, Ex. I.

Under these circumstances, allowing for amendment of the claims would be futile. Claims 1, 7 and 8 are therefore dismissed without leave to amend.

4. Claims 4 & 5: Intentional and Negligent Misrepresentation

Sato's fourth and fifth claims allege fraud based on intentional and negligent misrepresentation. These claims both rely on the allegations that: (1) Defendants failed to properly assign and transfer their rights under the Deed of Trust prior to foreclosure, in violation of certain California statutes, and (2) Wachovia misrepresented to Sato that she had to default on her mortgage payments in order to qualify for a loan modification.

As discussed above, the portion of these claims alleging Defendants' inability to foreclose is contradicted by judicially-noticeable documents and therefore cannot be maintained. The remaining portion of these claims, however, may survive [*25] summary dismissal on preemption grounds because they do not attempt to impose substantive requirements on the process of lending, much like Sato's misrepresentation-based UCL claim. This conclusion notwithstanding, however, the Court has determined these claims have not been sufficiently plead.

HN18[] In California, the elements of fraud are: (1) misrepresentation; (2) knowledge of falsity; (3) intent to defraud or to induce reliance (4) justifiable reliance; and (5) resulting damage. Engalla v. Permanente Med. Group, Inc., 15 Cal. 4th 951, 974, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 938 P.2d 903 (1997). Although the court looks to state law to determine if the elements of fraud have been properly pleaded, a plaintiff must still meet the federal standard to plead fraud with particularity. Kearns v. Ford Motor Co., 567 F.3d 1120, 1125 (9th Cir. 2009). Under these standards, the fraud claims are incomplete. While Sato identifies the alleged misrepresentations made to her, she provides little more. She has not adequately alleged that Defendants knew the statements were false, that they intended to deceive her, that her reliance on their statements was justifiable, or that she suffered damages as a result. Moreover, neither claim is plead with particularity. [*26] Thus, these claims must be dismissed for much the same reason as her UCL claim.

Claim 4 and 5 will be dismissed with leave to amend. If Sato chooses to amend these claims, she much remove the allegations alleging statutory violations, and must provide sufficient and particular facts supporting each element of fraud.

5. Claim 6: Promissory Estoppel

For this claim, Sato repeats allegations that Wachovia represented to her numerous times that she must default on her mortgage payments in order to qualify for a loan modification. She also alleges that Wachovia represented there was "no reason that she should not be accepted for a modification." Sato alleges damages due to reliance on these representations. Much like her UCL claim, this claim for promissory estoppel can be read in two ways: one which would result in HOLA preemption in requiring a loan modification or postponement of foreclosure, and one which would not result in preemption by simply alleging promises that were not kept. As with the UCL claim, the court cannot find clear preemption at this point. Love, 915 F.2d at 1245.

This raises the question of whether the promissory estoppel claim has been sufficiently plead. In its current [*27] form, it is missing basic facts which render it incomplete. HN19[] A successful claim for promissory estoppel requires: "(1) a promise that is clear and unambiguous in its terms; (2) reliance by the party to whom the promise is made; (3) the reliance must be reasonable and foreseeable; and (4) the party asserting the estoppel must be injured by his or her reliance." Boon Rawd Trading Intern. Co., Ltd. v. Paleewong Trading Co., Inc., 688 F. Supp.2d 940, 953 (N.D. Cal. 2010); see also Ecology, Inc. v. State of California, 129 Cal. App. 4th 887, 901-902, 904, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 894 (2005). Here, Sato's claim is missing allegations critical to her theory. For this claim to survive, Sato must allege Wachovia represented it would hold foreclosure proceedings while her loan was under review. Without that promise, the other two representations alleged by Sato are meaningless in this context since it is not reasonable to believe, relying only on the representations alleged, that foreclosure was not a possibility even if the loan was under review. More facts are needed to establish the specific promises made.

Since Sato may be able to provide additional facts which would support a claim of promissory estoppel, claim 6 is dismissed [*28] with leave to amend.

II. THE MOTION TO STRIKE

HN20[] The Court may strike "from any pleading any insufficient defense or any redundant, immaterial, impertinent, or scandalous matter." Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f). A motion to strike will generally not be granted unless it is clear the matter to be stricken could not have any possible bearing on the subject matter of the litigation. See LeDuc v. Ky. Cent. Life Ins. Co., 814 F. Supp. 820, 830 (N.D. Cal. 1992). Here, Wachovia moves to strike two specific portions of the complaint. However, because the court has granted Wachovia's motion to dismiss all of the claims, the motion to strike will be denied as moot.

III. THE MOTION TO REMAND

Through this motion, Wachovia seeks to remand an unlawful detainer action originally filed against Sato in Monterey County Superior Court. Wachovia also seeks to recover its fees for having to bring this motion. Sato removed this separate action from state court after the commencement of this case, alleging that the court has both federal-question and diversity jurisdiction. Notice of Removal, Docket Item No. 14 at 5-6. She also argues this court should exercise supplemental jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1367 as Wachovia's [*29] unlawful detainer action and Sato's wrongful foreclosure action arise between the same parties and involve the same facts. Since the unlawful detainer complaint presents only state claims on its face and diversity jurisdiction is lacking, the court grants Wachovia's motion.

A. Legal Standard

HN21[] A state court action may be removed to federal court so long as the action could have originally asserted federal-question jurisdiction. 28 U.S.C. 1441(b). The defendant must show the basis for federal jurisdiction. Nishimoto v. Federman-Bachrach & Assocs., 903 F.2d 709, 712 (9th Cir. 1990). Removal jurisdiction statutes are strictly construed against removal. Shamrock Oil & Gas Corp. v. Sheets, 313 U.S. 100, 108, 61 S. Ct. 868, 85 L. Ed. 1214 (1941). A "well-pleaded complaint" presents a federal-question on the face of the pleading. Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. v. Taylor, 481 U.S. 58, 63, 107 S. Ct. 1542, 95 L. Ed. 2d 55 (1987). An anticipated or even actual federal defense is not sufficient to confer jurisdiction. Franchise Tax Bd. of California v. Construction Laborers Vacation Trust, 463 U.S. 1, 10, 103 S. Ct. 2841, 77 L. Ed. 2d 420 (1983). A plaintiff, however, may not defeat removal by purposely omitting necessary federal questions from the complaint. Id. at 22.

1. [*30] Federal Question & Supplemental Jurisdiction

Wachovia alleges a single claim against Sato for unlawful detainer. Docket Item No. 14 at Ex. 1. HN22[] Unlawful detainer claims themselves do not arise under federal law, and therefore, the court lacks federal-question jurisdiction. See, e.g., *Fed. Nat'l Mortg. Assoc. v. Lopez, No. C 11-00451 WHA, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44818, 2011 WL 1465678 at 1 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 15, 2011); *GMAC Mortg. LLC v. Rosario, No. C 11-1894 PJH, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 53643, 2011 WL 1754053, at 2 (N.D. Cal. May 9, 2011); *Wescom Credit Union v. Dudley, No. CV 10-8203 GAF (SSx), 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 130517, 2010 WL 4916578, at 2 (C.D. Cal. Nov. 22, 2010).

Despite what appears to be a clear legal standard, Sato nonetheless asserts that Wachovia violated California's non-judicial foreclosure statutes as a reason for removal. This is not a defense based in federal law. But even if it was, it does not appear on the face of Wachovia's complaint or otherwise confer federal jurisdiction. See Taylor, 481 U.S. at 63 (holding jurisdiction must appear on the face of the complaint); see also Hunter, 582 F.3d at 1042-43 [*31] (holding jurisdiction cannot rest on actual or anticipated defense).

Moreover, Sato's argument that this court should exercise supplemental jurisdiction is unavailing. HN23[] "The supplemental-jurisdiction statute is not a source of original subject-matter jurisdiction, and a removal petition therefore may not base subject-matter jurisdiction on the supplemental jurisdiction statute, even if the action which a defendant seeks to remove is related to another action over which the federal district court already has subject-matter jurisdiction." *Pacific Bell v. Covad Communications Co., No. C 99-1491 SI, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8846, at 9 (N.D. Cal. June 8, 1999) (quoting Ahearn v. Charter Twp. Of Bloomfield, 100 F.3d 451, 456 (6th Cir. 1996)). Thus, any relationship between the unlawful detainer action and the wrongful foreclosure case is irrelevant for purposes of removal. There is no basis for either federal question or supplemental jurisdiction here.

2. Diversity Jurisdiction

Sato also alleges jurisdiction since Wachovia is a citizen of South Dakota while she is a citizen of California. HN24[] Federal courts have original jurisdiction where (1) opposing parties are citizens of different states and [*32] (2) the amount in controversy exceeds $75,000. 28 U.S.C. § 1332(a). Where diversity is cited as a basis for jurisdiction, removal is not permitted if a defendant in the case is a citizen of the state in which the plaintiff originally brought the action, even if the opposing parties are diverse. See 28 U.S.C. § 1441(b). Much like federal question jurisdiction, diversity jurisdiction simply does not exist here. First, Sato fails to allege the amount in controversy exceeds $75,000 in the Notice of Removal. Second, removal is improper because this case was originally filed in a California state court. Sato is a citizen of California. Docket Item No. 14 at 5. Thus, even assuming the parties are diverse, 28 U.S.C. § 1441(b) prohibits removal by Sato.

Because the court lacks a basis for jurisdiction, the unlawful detainer action will be remanded to Monterey County Superior Court.

B. Request for Attorney's Fees

Wachovia requests an award of fees in connection with this motion to remand. HN25[] "An order remanding the case may require payment of just costs and any actual expenses, including attorney fees, incurred as a result of the removal." 28 U.S.C. § 1447(c). Since "[t]he process of removing a case [*33] to federal court and then having it remanded back to state court delays resolution of the case, imposes additional costs on both parties, and wastes judicial resources," requiring the payment of fees and costs is appropriate where "the removing party lacked an objectively reasonable basis for seeking removal." Martin v. Franklin Captial Corp., 546 U.S. 132, 140-41, 126 S. Ct. 704, 163 L. Ed. 2d 547 (2005). In Martin, the Court explained that "district courts retain discretion to consider whether unusual circumstances warrant a departure from the rule in a given case." Id. at 141. In addition, the Ninth Circuit clarified in Lussier v. Dollar Tree Stores, Inc., 518 F. 3d 1062, 1065 (9th Cir. 2008) that "removal is not objectively unreasonable solely because the removing party's arguments lack merit, or else attorney's fees would always be awarded whenever remand is granted." Instead, the objective reasonableness of a removal depends on the clarity of the applicable law and whether such law "clearly foreclosed" the arguments in support of removal. Id. at 1066-67.

Here, Wachovia contends Sato lacked an objectively reasonable basis for removal because there are clearly settled reasons why removal is not appropriate. The court [*34] agrees. As determined above, there is no basis for jurisdiction disclosed on the face of the complaint, and Sato makes no effort to support her statement contained in the Notice of Removal that this unlawful detainer action somehow arises under federal law. Furthermore, Sato's reliance on diversity as a basis for jurisdiction is unreasonable considering the two doctrines which prevent removal based on diversity are codified and not subject to debate under the facts of this case. This leaves Sato's claim that the court should exercise supplemental jurisdiction. But as already stated, supplemental jurisdiction alone cannot form the basis of subject matter jurisdiction, even if another related action is already pending in federal court. *Pacific Bell, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8846 at 9; *Flower v. Wachovia Mortg., FSB, No. C 09-343 JF (HRL), 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 36299, at 26-27 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 10, 2009). In short, all of Sato's arguments are "clearly foreclosed" by the by the applicable law, and there are no unusual circumstances which would justify a different conclusion especially since Sato is represented by counsel. Since the court cannot find a valid reason for removal, it appears [*35] the this case was removed solely to delay the imposition of a state court judgment displacing Sato from the home, and to force Wachovia to sustain additional costs. The court will not countenance such frivolous behavior, especially when the precise purpose of § 1447(c) is to prevent such tactics. An award of fees and costs is therefore appropriate here.

Wachovia seeks a total of $2,145.00 in fees and costs, which amounts to 7.8 hours of time at a rate of $275.00 per hour. See Decl of Yaw-Jiun (Gene) Wu at ¶ 4. Pursuant to § 1447(c), the Court awards fees only for the time spent on the motion to remand as those fees were incurred directly as a result of the removal. See Baddie v. Berkeley Farms, 64 F.3d 487, 490 (9th Cir. 1995). For that reason, the court will not award fees for counsel's communications with either his client or Wells Fargo's other counsel, for analyzing the due date for the motion, or for speaking with the court clerk. Thus, the court finds reasonable a total of 6.8 hours at counsel's hourly rate. Accordingly, Wachovia's request for fees and costs is granted in the amount of $1,870.00.

IV. ORDER

Based on the foregoing:

1. Wachovia's Motion to Dismiss (Docket Item No. 11) [*36] is GRANTED WITHOUT LEAVE TO AMEND as to counts 1, 2, 7 and 8. The Motion is GRANTED WITH LEAVE TO AMEND as to counts 3, 4, 5, and 6. Any amended complaint must be filed within 30 days of the date this order is filed.

2. Wachovia's Motion to Strike (Docket Item No. 12) is DENIED AS MOOT.

3. Wachovia's Motion to Remand (Docket Item No. 17) is GRANTED. Wachovia's request for fees pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1447(c) is also GRANTED in the amount of $1,870.00.

4. Given the ruling on the Motion to Dismiss, Sato's Ex Parte Motion to Amend the Complaint (Docket Item No. 26) is DENIED AS MOOT.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Opinion

[*712] MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

I.Introduction

This multidistrict class action case involves allegations by plaintiffs, independent dairy farmers, independent cooperative members and DFA member dairy farmers, both on behalf of themselves and as a class action pursuant to Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure [1] against [9] Dean Foods Company ("Dean"), National Dairy Holdings, L.P. ("NDH"), Dairy Farmers of America, Inc. ("DFA"), Dairy Marketing Services, LLC ("DMS"), Southern Marketing Agency, Inc. ("SMA"), Mid-Am Capital, LLC ("Mid-Am"), James Baird ("Baird"), Gary Hanman ("Hanman") and Gerald Bos ("Bos") (collectively referred to as "defendants") seeking treble damages and injunctive relief for violations of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2, and a state law breach of contract claim against DFA.

Several motions for summary judgment have been filed: (1) Defendants' joint motion for summary judgment on Counts One through Five of the complaint, [Doc. 839]; (2) supplemental motions for summary judgment by SMA, [Doc. 829], Baird [Doc. 826], Bos, [Doc. 833], and Hanman, [Doc. 836]. [10] DFA has also moved for summary judgment as to Count Six, the state law breach of contract claim, [Doc. 842]. [2] The plaintiffs have responded to all motions for summary judgment, the defendants have replied and supplemental briefs have been filed by the parties as to certain questions raised at oral argument by the Court. Oral argument was heard on January 20, 2011, and April 21, 2011. An order was entered on May 12, 2011, [Doc. 1543], announcing the Court's decision as to several of those motions. This memorandum opinion is entered for the purpose of setting forth more fully the Court's analysis and conclusions with respect to the motions.

II.Factual and Procedural Background

As set forth above, plaintiffs' allege violations of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and breach of contract by DFA. More specifically, plaintiffs allege a conspiracy to monopolize and monopsonize against all defendants under § 2 (Count One), attempt to monopolize and monopsonize under § 2 (Count Two), a monopolization [11] claim against DFA, DMS and SMA under § 2 (Count Three), monoposonization against Dean under § 2 (Count Four), and conspiracy to restrain trade against all defendants under § 1 (Count Five). Plaintiffs also pursue a breach of contract claim against DFA in Count Six.

The plaintiffs are dairy farmers who produce or have produced during the relevant time period fluid Grade A milk within [*713] Federal Milk Market Orders ("FMMO" or "Order") 5 and 7 which was sold, directly or through an agent, to Defendants or Co-cospirators in Orders 5 and 7. Defendants Dean and NDH purchase, process and ship fluid Grade A milk. Dean owns a number of bottling plants in the southeast and is the largest fluid Grade A milk bottler in the southeast. NDH owns several Grade A milk bottling plants in the southeast and is the second largest Grade A milk bottler in the southeast. DFA owns fifty percent of NDH. DFA is a dairy farmer cooperative which markets, processes and ships Grade A milk. DFA owns and operates hauling companies, processing plants and distribution centers and is the third largest fluid Grade A milk bottler in the southeast. DFA is also the largest dairy cooperative in the country. DFA is owned by its [12] dairy farmer members and governed by a board of directors comprised of dairy farmer members. DFA markets milk produced by its dairy farmer members and distributes the net proceeds or profits from its operations to its dairy farmer members. DFA also markets milk on behalf of some non-members.

[1] This Court has previously granted a motion for class certification as to the Sherman Act claims but has denied class certification as to the breach of contract claim against DFA. The Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit recently denied defendants' request for permission to file an interlocutory appeal of the Court's class certification order and motions to decertify the class are currently pending.

[2] This order will not address the motion for summary judgment filed by DFA as to the breach of contract claim. The parties have agreed to stay that count pending the trial or other disposition of the other claims.

DMS is a common marketing agency that markets milk on behalf of dairy farmers. DMS also performs milk marketing services for certain milk processors pursuant to outsourcing contracts. SMA is a common marketing agency that assists in marketing raw Grade A milk on behalf of its six member dairy cooperatives. SMA handles coordination of hauling and transportation of its member cooperatives' raw Grade A milk from the farm to the processing plant and in recent years the coordination of the purchase and hauling of supplemental milk on behalf of its member co-ops. Mid-Am is a subsidiary of DFA and was formed by DFA and others to provide capital to, and make equity investments in, dairy processing and fluid Grade A milk bottling operations.

Baird is the manager of SMA, an officer, director, and general manager of Lone Star Milk Producers, a dairy cooperative based in Texas, and the principal owner, officer [13] and manager of Lone Star Milk Transport, Inc., BullsEye Transport, LLC, and BullsEye Logistics, LLC, Texas-based companies that transport Grade A milk for DFA and SMA. Baird is also the principal owner and manager of GSC, LLC, an entity designed to manage and/or coordinate the operations of defendants SMA, DMS and other entities. Hanman was DFA's chief executive officer from its formation in 1998 until he retired on December 31, 2005. Hanman also served on the management committee of Dairy Management, LLC, the sole general partner of defendant NDH. Bos was DFA's chief financial officer from its formation until his retirement on December 31, 2005. Bos also served on the management committee of Dairy Management, LLC. The plaintiffs allege that Baird, Hanman and Bos have participated in, authorized, directed and/or knowingly approved or ratified the illegal conduct alleged in their complaint.

Plaintiffs allege that certain other milk marketers, milk purchasers, milk processors and other entities and individuals have participated as co-conspirators with the defendants in the violations alleged in their complaint and have performed acts and made statements in furtherance thereof. The third [14] party co-conspirators include DairyCom, Inc., the Kroger Co., Prairie Farms Dairy, Inc., Robert W. Allen, Jay Bryant, Herman Brubaker, Gregg L. Engles, Michael J. McCloskey, Allen A. Meyer and Pete Shinkle.

This Court would ordinarily set out relevant facts related to the issues raised by the summary judgment motions. That is virtually impossible in this case, however, given the voluminous nature of the pleadings and exhibits filed by the parties, especially [*714] their statements of undisputed material facts. Both the statements of facts in support of the motions and plaintiffs' responses thereto, as well as plaintiffs' separate statement of facts, identify many "facts" which are irrelevant or, in reality, appear to be mainly arguments and/or conclusory statements advanced in support of their allegations. In reality, the material events related to the issues raised by these motions are largely undisputed, with the parties disputing only the inferences potentially to be drawn from those events by the finder of fact. Facts which are relevant to the Court's determination of these issues will be discussed within the body of the memorandum opinion.

III. Summary Judgment Standard

Generally, summary [15] judgment is proper where "the pleadings, the discovery and disclosure materials on file, and any affidavits show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c)(2); [3] Canderm Pharmacal, Ltd. v. Elder Pharm., Inc., 862 F.2d 597, 601 (6th Cir. 1988). Only factual disputes that might affect the outcome of a lawsuit under governing law are "material." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). To be "genuine," a dispute must involve evidence upon which a jury could find for the nonmoving party. Id. The burden is upon the moving party to show "that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case." Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 325, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). Thereafter, the nonmoving party must present significant probative evidence in support of the complaint to defeat the motion. Anderson, 477

[3] This language is quoted from the text of Rule 56(c)(2) effective until December 1, 2010. The language in the text effective, December 1, 2010, is slightly different; however, the standard for granting summary judgment remains the same.

U.S. at 249-50. The nonmoving party is required to show more than a metaphysical doubt as to the existence of a genuine issue of material fact. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). In deciding the motion, "[t]he court cannot [16] weigh the evidence, judge the credibility of witnesses, or determine the truth of any matter in dispute." Stephens v. Koch Foods, LLC, 667 F.Supp.2d 768, 2009 WL 3297289, *8 (E.D. Tenn. 2009) (citing Anderson).

The parties in this case have devoted considerable of their briefing and oral argument to the question of whether or not antitrust plaintiffs must meet a different standard from that required of other civil plaintiffs. The burden on the plaintiff in an antitrust case is the same as it is on any other civil plaintiff. Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 468-69, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992). As in other civil cases, courts addressing summary judgment motions in antitrust cases "must . . . consider all facts in the light most favorable to the non-movant and must give the non-movant the benefit of every reasonable inference." Spirit Airlines, Inc. v. Northwest Airlines, Inc., 431 F.3d 917, 930 (6th Cir. 2005) (internal quotations and citations omitted).

Some [17] special rules do apply, however, with respect to the manner in which the court views certain ambiguous circumstantial evidence in a § 1 case. In conspiracy cases, "[t]he element of agreement, . . . is nearly always established by circumstantial evidence, as conspirators seldom make records of their illegal agreements." United States v. Short, 671 F.2d 178, 182 (6th Cir. 1982). Both the Supreme Court and the Sixth Circuit have, however, [*715] made it clear that in a case based on circumstantial evidence, an antitrust plaintiff may not reach a jury where the evidence on which he relies to prove an agreement is, at best, ambiguous. Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588) ("conduct as consistent with permissible competition as illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of agreement"); Wallace v. Bank of Bartlett, 55 F.3d 1166 (6th Cir. 1995). An antitrust plaintiff bears the burden of presenting evidence that "tends to exclude the possibility that the [defendants] were acting independently." Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984). An antitrust plaintiff will be unable to demonstrate a conspiracy if, "using ambiguous evidence, the inference of a conspiracy is [18] less than or equal to an inference of independent action." See Riverview Investments, Inc. v. Ottawa Cmty. Imp. Corp., 899 F.2d 474, 483 (6th Cir. 1990) (citing Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588). The Supreme Court reiterated that standard as recently as 2007 in Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007):

> [P]roof of a § 1 conspiracy must include evidence tending to exclude the possibility of independent action, see Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed.2d 775 (1984); and at the summary judgment stage a § 1 plaintiff's offer of conspiracy evidence must tend to rule out the possibility that the defendants were acting independently, see Matsushita Elec. Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986).

550 U.S. at 554. This is consistent with the standard set forth by the Sixth Circuit in numerous cases. See Nat'l Hockey League Players Ass'n. v. Plymouth Whalers Hockey Club, 419 F.3d 462, 475 (6th Cir. 2005) (Sherman Act conspiracy claim fails if evidence is "equally consistent with independent conduct"); Sancap Abrasives Corp. v. Swiss Industrial Abrasives, 19 F. App'x. 181, 187 (6th Cir. 2001); Super Sulky, Inc. v. United States Trotting Ass'n, 174 F.3d 733, 740 (6th Cir. 1999); [19] Re/Max Int'l, Inc. v. Realty One, Inc., 173 F.3d 995, 1009-10 (6th Cir. 1999); Bailey's Inc. v. Windsor America, Inc., 948 F.2d 1018, 1028 (6th Cir. 1991); Nurse Midwifery Assoc. v. Hibbett, 918 F.2d 605, 616-17 (6th Cir. 1990); City Communications, Inc. v. City of Detroit, 888 F.2d 1081, 1085 (6th Cir. 1989).

IV. Analysis and Discussion

A. The Section 1 Claim-Unlawful Conspiracy Among Defendants To Foreclose Competition and Fix Prices (Count Five)

Count Five of plaintiffs' consolidated amended complaint ("complaint") alleges a decade long, multi-faceted, far-reaching conspiracy among defendants and third-party co-conspirators "to eliminate competition for the purchase of fluid Grade A milk from dairy farmers in the southeast." Plaintiffs allege that defendants have committed certain overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy alleged, including the following acts: (a) The use of long term full supply agreements to control southeast area farmers' access to fluid Grade A milk bottling plants; (b) depressing, fixing and stabilizing prices for fluid Grade A milk paid to dairy farmers; (c) requiring southeast dairy farmers to market their fluid Grade A milk to DFA controlled entities to gain [20] access to bottling plants; (d) threatening to cut off and cutting off southeast dairy farmers' access to bottling plants; (e) boycotting dairy farmers, cooperatives and Grade A milk bottlers; (f) "flooding" the southeast Grade A market to depress prices paid to farmers; (g) utilizing DFA-controlled entities to monitor prices for Grade A milk paid to independent dairy [*716] farmers and independent cooperative members; (h) "punishing" independent cooperatives and fluid Grade A milk bottlers that do not comply with defendants' conspiracy in an effort to eliminate or control those entities as competitive outlets for milk; and (i) purchasing fluid Grade A milk bottling plants, closing down those plants and/or refusing to operate the plants with the purpose and intent of stifling competition from independent dairy farmers, cooperatives and fluid Grade A milk bottlers in the southeast.

Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides in pertinent part:

> [e]very contract, combination . . . or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states . . . is declared to be illegal.

15 U.S.C. § 1. While § 1 appears to prohibit every restraint of trade, the Supreme Court has interpreted the statute as [21] condemning only those combinations which constitute unreasonable restraints of trade. Standard Oil Company of New Jersey v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 31 S. Ct. 502, 55 L. Ed. 619 (1911). In order to establish their claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, the plaintiffs must prove that the defendants "(1) participated in an agreement that (2) unreasonably unrestrained trade in the relevant market.") Nat'l Hockey League Players' Assoc., 325 F.3d at 718.

Whether an agreement unreasonably restrains trade is determined under one of two approaches: the per se rule and the rule of reason. Worldwide Basketball and Sport Tours, Inc. v. National Collegiate Athletic Association, 388 F.3d 955, 959 (6th Cir. 2004). In per se cases, evidence of actual effect on competition is not required because these actions are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable. Copperweld Corp. v Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 768, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984); Northern Pacific Railway Company v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5-6, 78 S. Ct. 514, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1958). A restraint on trade is per se illegal when "the practice facially appears to be one that would almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output." National Collegiate Athletic Association v. Bd. of Regents of Univ. Of Oklahoma, 468 U.S. 85, 100, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1984) [22] (citations omitted).

Examples of practices which are per se illegal are horizontal price fixing, market allocation, group boycotts or tying arrangements, activities which are considered inherently anti-competitive. Copperweld Corp., 467 U.S. at 768; Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting Sys., Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 19-20, 99 S. Ct. 1551, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1979); Northern Pacific Railway Company, 356 U.S. at 5-6. "Restraints imposed by agreement between competitors have traditionally been denominated as horizontal restraints, and those imposed by agreement between firms at different levels of distribution as vertical restraints." Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 108 S. Ct. 1515, 1522-23, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808 (1988). There is often no bright line separating per se from rule of reason analysis. NCAA, 468 U.S. at 104, n.26.

A per se rule is inappropriate where the effects of a particular restraint are unclear, even where aspects of the restraint may appear to be facially anti-competitive. Meijer, Inc. v Barr Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 572 F. Supp. 2d 38, 47 (D.D.C. 2008). Per se analysis should not be extended "to restraints imposed in the context of business relationships where the economic impact of certain practices is not [23] immediately obvious . . . ." Balmoral Cinema, Inc. v Allied Artists Pictures Corp., 885 F.2d 313, 316 (6th Cir. 1989) (quoting FTC v Indiana Federation of Dentists, [*717] 476 U.S. 447, 459, 106 S. Ct. 2009, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445 (1986)).

Furthermore, "there is a presumption in favor of a rule-of-reason standard," Business Elec., 485 U.S. at 726. Under the rule of reason analysis, the plaintiff bears the burden of establishing that the conduct complained of "produces significant anticompetitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets." NHL Players' Assoc., 325 F.3d at 718; Worldwide Basketball and Sport Tours, 388 F.3d at 959 (quoting Nat'l Hockey League Players, 325 F.3d at 718)).

Although defendants raise numerous arguments in favor of summary judgment, each of which will be addressed hereinafter, the defendants argue that the case can be disposed of in their favor on a more simple basis. Defendants argue that all of plaintiffs' claims require definition of a relevant market, and, since plaintiffs cannot establish the relevant geographic market, all of plaintiffs' claims fail. Plaintiffs respond that not all of their claims and, more particularly, their conspiracy claims do not require that they establish the [24] relevant geographic market. Put more simply, with respect to Count Five, the defendants claim that the allegations of violation of § 1 are subject to rule of reason analysis requiring plaintiffs to establish the relevant geographic market while plaintiffs argue that their § 1 claim is for a horizontal, per se illegal agreement in restraint of trade. The parties also differ on the question of whether or not to apply the rule of reason analysis or per se analysis to the conspiracy alleged is a question of law for the Court to decide or a question of fact for the jury.

1. Question of Law or Fact?

The question of whether the appropriate rule of law to be applied to the conspiracy alleged by the plaintiffs in their complaint is to be determined by the Court or is a question of fact for the jury has not been precisely answered in the Sixth Circuit. This Court concludes, however, that the weight of authority supports defendants' argument that determination of the appropriate rule of law to be applied is a question of law to be decided by the Court and that approach also appears to be consistent with the Sixth Circuit's application of the legal rules involved.

As defendants note in their brief, [25] a leading antitrust treatise recognizes that the selection of the mode of analysis is a question of law for the court:

> While applying any one of antitrust's modes of analysis might involve many fact questions, the selection of a mode is entirely a question of law. To be sure, the Supreme Court stated in Maricopa that "the rule of reason requires the factfinder to decide whether under all the circumstances of the case the restrictive practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition." But that statement was not meant to indicate that the fact finder should determine whether the per se rule or the rule of reason applied to a particular set of facts. Rather, it meant that once the court decided that the rule of reason should apply, disputed factual questions about reasonableness should be left to the jury. In a footnote the court made clear that determining the rule of decision was a question of law.

XI Herbert Hovencamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 1909b at 279 (2d Ed. 2005) (citing Perceptron, Inc. v. Sensor Adaptive Machs., Inc., 221 F.3d 913 (6th Cir. 2000)). This statement is also consistent with other decisions of the Sixth Circuit. For instance, in Expert Masonry, Inc. v. Boone County, Kentucky, 440 F.3d 336 (2006), [26] the Sixth Circuit said: "In the first instance, courts must distinguish between some types of unlawful anticompetitive restraints that [*718] [are] . . . per se illegal under the antitrust laws, and the far-larger type of restraints that should be analyzed under the rule of reason approach . . . ."). Id. at 342 (emphasis added). Likewise, in United States v. Cooperative Theaters Of Ohio, Inc., 845 F.2d 1367 (6th Cir. 1988), although a criminal case, the district court held as a matter of law that the alleged conduct constituted a per se violation of the Sherman Act, a ruling affirmed by the Sixth Circuit. See also Care Heating & Cooling, Inc. v. American Standard, Inc., 427 F.3d 1008, 1012 (6th Cir. 2005) ("if a court determines that a practice is illegal per se, further examination of the practice's impact on the market or the procompetitive justifications for the practice is unnecessary for finding a violation of antitrust law," suggesting that the decision as to whether a practice is illegal per se is one committed to the court).

The approach is likewise consistent with that taken by the United States Supreme Court and other circuit courts of appeals. The Supreme Court has repeatedly noted [27] that the per se rule should be applied to conduct only after courts have had "considerable experience with certain business relationships." United States v. Topco

Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 608, 92 S. Ct. 1126, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515 (1972). Since it seems quite clear that the per se rule should be applied to conduct only after it has been examined carefully by the courts, not juries, it also seems rather clear that the question of whether allegedly unlawful conduct is subject to per se analysis or rule of reason analysis is a legal question for the court, not a question for the jury. See also Northern Pacific Railway Company, 356 U.S. at 5 (suggesting that the court must first determine whether the conduct alleged to be unlawful is the type of conduct that has a "pernicious effect on competition and lacks any redeeming virtue . . .," to be considered illegal per se); Copy-Data Systems, Inc. v. Toshiba America, Inc., 663 F.2d 405 (2d Cir. 1981) (where the district judge had held, after hearing argument from both sides, that Toshiba had imposed a horizontal, illegal per se territorial restriction on Copy-Data, a holding reversed by the Second Circuit on appeal as a matter of law). [4]

2. Horizontal or Vertical? Per Se or Rule of Reason?

It is beyond question that plaintiffs present their claim as a horizontal, per se illegal conspiracy to restrain trade and fix prices on the part of the defendants, [see complaint, Doc. 87, ¶ 162], arguing only alternatively that the agreements at issue violate § 1 of the Sherman Act under rule of reason analysis. In addition, plaintiffs repeatedly referred to their claim as a horizontal, per se claim in their pleadings and repeatedly referred to the agreements at issue during oral argument as horizontal agreements. The labels attached to the conduct by the plaintiffs are not determinative, however, i.e. that plaintiffs repeatedly state that the conspiracy they allege is a horizontal, per se illegal conspiracy to fix prices and allocate markets does not make it so. In fact, the Supreme Court has recognized just this. California Dental Ass'n. v. Federal Trade Commission, 526 U.S. 756, 119 S. Ct. 1604, 143 L. Ed. 2d 935 (1999).

The Sixth Circuit has succinctly defined the two major types of antitrust conspiracies, as follows:

> Courts have identified two major types of antitrust conspiracies to restrain trade: horizontal and vertical. [29] Crane & Shovel Sales Corp. v Bucyrus-Erie Co., 854 F.2d 802, 805 (6th Cir. 1988). Horizontal conspiracies involve agreements among competitors at the same [*719] level of market structure to stifle trade, such as agreements among manufacturers or among distributors to fix prices for a given product, and therefore may constitute per se violations of antitrust law. Id.; see also Oreck Corp. v. Whirlpool Corp., 579 F.2d 126, 131 (2d Cir. 1978). Vertical conspiracies, on the other hand, involve agreements among actors at different levels of market structure to restrain trade, "such as agreements between a manufacturer and its distributors to exclude another distributor from a given product and geographic market." Crane & Shovel Sales Corp., 854 F.2d at 805.

Care Heating & Cooling, 427 F.3d at 1013. Vertical restraints are analyzed under the rule of reason. Id. (citing Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 57-58, 97 S. Ct. 2549, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568 (1977)). To the extent there was any lingering doubt about whether vertical restraints are subject to per se or rule of reason analysis, that suggestion was quashed by the United States Supreme Court in Leegin Creative Leather Products, Inc. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 (2007) [30] (vertical restraints to be judged according to the rule of reason). See also Total Benefits Planning Agency, Inc. v. Anthem Blue Cross and Blue Shield, 552 F.3d 430 (6th Cir. 2008).

As an initial matter then, the Court must determine whether or not the agreement alleged by the plaintiffs is horizontal in nature, which may constitute a per se violation of antitrust law, or vertical in nature, which must be analyzed under the rule of reason. In making this determination, as set forth above, the labels used by the plaintiffs are largely irrelevant and the decision will be made against a backdrop of several well established principles. First of all, "[t]here is an automatic presumption in favor of the rule of reason standard." Care Heating & Cooling, 427 F.3d at 1012 (citing Business Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. at 726; Continental T.V., Inc., 433 U.S. at 49). Secondly, the category of agreements to be analyzed under a per se analysis has been shrinking over the last few years. See

[4] Both plaintiffs and defendants incorrectly [28] cite this case as a Sixth Circuit decision.

Leegin. Finally, the per se rule should be applied only in "clear cut cases" of trade restraints that are so unreasonably anticompetitive that they present straightforward questions for reviewing courts. NHL Players Assoc., 325 F.3d at 718 [31] (citing Sylvana, 433 U.S. at 49-50). See also Balmoral Cinema, 885 F.2d at 316 ("per se analysis should not be extended 'to restraints imposed in the context of business relationships where the economic impact of certain practices is not immediately obvious . . . .'").

As noted above, plaintiffs allege a horizontal conspiracy to restrain trade among the named defendants and certain non-defendant co-conspirators identified in the complaint. These include some processors of raw milk (Dean, NDH, DFA, Kroger, Prairie Farms), membership cooperatives (DFA, Prairie Farms), common marketing agencies (SMA, DMS) and individuals, (Hanman, Bos, Baird, etc.). This diverse group of actors are not just horizontal competitors but a collection of actors in the milk industry whose roles run the gambit of activities from gathering and marketing of raw milk from the farm to processing and marketing of processed milk at the retail level. This does not appear on its face to be a horizontal conspiracy, despite plaintiffs' argument that defendants were horizontal competitors in both milk bottling and procurement of milk prior to the alleged illegal agreements to allocate markets. They also point to record [32] evidence that certain witnesses admitted under oath that Suiza/Dean, NDH and DFA viewed each other as competitors in both markets. Apparently recognizing the flaw in their [*720] position, defendants appear to argue in their pleadings that the conspiracy involved Dean, NDH and DFA/DMS/SMA as horizontal competitors and that the various other defendants and non-defendant co-conspirators, some of whom the defendants apparently acknowledge as vertical entities, simply joined in the horizontal agreement. In making this argument, plaintiffs appear to rely primarily on two Seventh Circuit cases.

In Denny's Marina, Inc. v. Renfro Productions, Inc., 8 F.3d 1217 (7th Cir. 1993), a marine dealer brought antitrust claims against its competitors, and the competitors' trade association and a boat show producer, challenging its exclusion from boat shows. The alleged illegal agreement was entered into by the marine dealers' competitors and the competitors' trade association, who, it was alleged, conspired to force Denny's out of boat shows because it was a price cutter. The operator of the premises where the boat shows were conducted, it was alleged, joined the conspiracy, by allowing Denny's competitors [33] and their trade association to accomplish their illegal goals. The Seventh Circuit held that the fact that the conspiracy was joined by the operator of the premises where the boat shows were held did not transform the illegal agreement between Denny's competitors and their trade association into a vertical agreement.

In Toys "R" Us, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 221 F.3d 928 (7th Cir. 2000), the court examined agreements between retailers and toy manufacturers in which each manufacturer promised to restrict distribution of its products to low priced warehouse club stores on condition that other manufacturers would do the same. Toys "R" Us, a toy retailer, invited manufacturers to stop selling toys to wholesale toy clubs which competed with Toys "R" Us and the manufacturers complied. The Seventh Circuit acknowledged that the agreements between Toys "R" Us and the manufacturers were vertical agreements but determined that the FTC's finding of the horizontal agreement among the manufacturers was warranted under the circumstances, based on evidence in the form of statements by the manufacturer's executives that each manufacturer had agreed to the Toys "R" Us proposal on condition that [34] its competitors do the same.

It seems to the Court that the Denny's Marine and Toys "R" Us cases are distinguishable from the factual situation at issue here. In the present case, although plaintiffs make an allegation of an explicit agreement to fix prices, they in reality claim concerted action on a host of non-price restrictions by vertically situated actors in furtherance of that conspiracy. See Total Benefits Planning Agency, Inc. v. Anthem Blue Cross and Blue Shield, 552 F.3d 430 (6th Cir. 2008). In addition, these two Seventh Circuit cases have not been widely cited for the proposition advanced by the plaintiffs and, indeed, the Denny's Marina case does not appear to have been cited at all for the proposition advanced by plaintiffs.

The Court thus concludes that the alleged agreements challenged by the plaintiffs are vertical in nature, not horizontal, and therefore not subject to per se analysis. Even if the Court were to determine that the agreements are horizontal in nature, however, the Court would conclude that these agreements do not involve the kind of "naked restraint" subject to per se analysis, as argued by the defendants.

As set forth above, per se analysis is reserved [35] for a very limited category of activities. The practice must be one which facially appears to be one that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output. As noted above, not all horizontal price fixing is the kind of naked restraint of trade subject [*721] to a per se analysis. See Care Heating & Cooling, 427 F.3d at 1013 (horizontal conspiracies "may constitute per se violations of antitrust law." (emphasis added)). In order to overcome the automatic presumption in favor of the rule of reason standard applied in the Sixth Circuit, the case must be a clear cut case of trade restraint that is so unreasonably anti-competitive as to present straightforward questions for reviewing courts. Id. at 1012.

As set forth above, the plaintiffs in this case allege a decade long, wide-ranging conspiracy to fix prices and allocate markets, activities which are traditionally per se illegal. In support of their claim, they point to a number of largely undisputed acts by the defendants which they argue are in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy. These overt acts, including the use of exclusive supply agreements, most favored nation pricing, alleged DFA control of NDH, agreements [36] to require farmers to join SMA, simultaneous decisions by Dean and NDH to terminate non-DFA suppliers, DFA's non-disclosed control of DMS, "flooding", pooling, outsourcing agreements, and the like, are activities or conduct which are not manifestly anti-competitive, do not always or almost always tend to restrict competition or decrease output, do not always have an adverse impact on the market and are not, in and of themselves, illegal.

The essence of plaintiffs' argument here is that defendants have used a series of legal, potentially competitive practices to accomplish an unlawful effect on prices and markets. Such a claim of necessity requires the Court to examine both the history of the restraint and the restraint's effect on competition, or traditional rule of reason analysis. In other words, plaintiffs will be required to prove not only that defendants combined, contracted or conspired but also that the agreements produced adverse anti-competitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets, that the conduct was illegal, and that the contract formed was a proximate cause of plaintiffs' injury. Int'l Logistics Group Ltd. v. Chrysler Corp., 884 F.2d 904, 907 (6th Cir. 1989) [37] (citing Crane & Shovel Sales Corp., 854 F.2d at 805).

3. The Relevant Market

Having decided that the plaintiffs' conspiracy claims are subject to a rule of reason analysis, the Court must determine whether or not the plaintiffs have established a relevant geographic market within which defendants have conspired with the resulting adverse anti-competitive effects. Plaintiffs argued in their complaint, and continue to argue, that the relevant geographic market is Federal Milk Market Orders 5 and 7.

Before reaching the merits of an antitrust claim, it is necessary to identify the relevant market. Potters Medical Center v. City Hosp. Ass'n, 800 F.2d 568, 574 (6th Cir.1986); Smith v. Northern Michigan Hospitals, Inc., 703 F.2d 942, 954 (6th Cir.1983). The plaintiffs bear the burden of defining "the relevant market within which the alleged anticompetitive effects" of the defendants' actions occur. See Kentucky Speedway, LLC v. National Ass'n of Stock Car Auto Racing, Inc., 588 F.3d 908, 916 (6th Cir. 2009); Worldwide Basketball & Sport Tours, Inc., 388 F.3d at 962 ("Failure to identify a relevant market is a proper ground for dismissing a Sherman Act claim.") (quoting NHL Players' Assoc., 325 F.3d at 719-20.

A [38] relevant market consists of both a product component and a geographic component. Kentucky Speedway, 588 F.3d at 916 (citing NHL Players' Assoc., 325 F.3d at 719). Dr. Gordon Rausser was hired by the plaintiffs to define the relevant market in this case. The parties [*722] agree that the relevant product market is raw Grade A milk and that there is no reasonable interchangeability with a substitute product. Spirit Airlines, Inc. v. Northwest Airlines, Inc. 431 F.3d 917, 933 (6th Cir. 2005). Therefore, the Court will turn to the issue of the relevant geographic market as defined by Dr. Rausser. In his report, Dr. Rausser concludes that the "relevant geographic market for Southeast dairy farmers is the area compromising Orders 5 and 7 because those Orders are treated as a common market, milk marketed in both orders is collectively pooled to arrive at an average blend price for both Orders, and Southeast farmers have severely limited options to move milk out of those Orders." Rausser Rpt. p. 8. [5]

The relevant geographic market is "the area of effective competition." Tampa Elec. Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 327, 81 S. Ct. 623, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1961). That means "the market area in which the seller operates, and to which the purchaser can practicably turn for supplies." Id.; see also White & White, Inc. v. Am. Hosp. Supply Corp., 723 F.2d 495, 503 (6th Cir. 1983). Market definition is a highly fact-based inquiry. Foundation For Interior Design Educ. Research v. Savannah Coll. of Art & Design, 244 F.3d 521, 531 (6th Cir. 2001). The Sherman Act applies with equal force to buyer side conspiracies, commonly referred to as monopsony. The Supreme Court has recognized that a conspiracy against buyers to stifle competition is as unlawful as one among sellers. Mandeville Island Farms, Inc. v. Am. Crystal Sugar Co., 334 U.S. 219, 235, 68 S. Ct. 996, 92 L. Ed. 1328 (1948).

Where, as here, the plaintiffs [40] allege a buyer-side conspiracy, the market is defined differently, requiring the Court "to reverse all of the factors involved in light of the buyer-side nature of the alleged activity." Todd v. Exxon Corp., 275 F.3d 191, 201-02 (2d Cir. 2001) (citing IIA Phillip E. Areeda, et al., Antitrust Law*: an Analysis of Antitrust Principles and Their Application*, ¶ 574 at 302 n.12 (referring to a buyer-side analysis as the "mirror image" of the traditional seller-side market analysis)). In the context of a buyer-side conspiracy, "the market is not the market of competing sellers but of competing buyers. This market is comprised of buyers who are seen by sellers as being reasonably good substitutes." Id. (quoting Roger D. Blair & Jeffrey L. Harrison, Antitrust Policy and Monopsony, 76 Cornell L.Rev. 297, 324 (1991)).

Defendants correctly argue that courts consistently reject overly narrow geographic markets that ignore the "commercial realities" facing buyers and sellers or that unduly limit the "relevant area of effective competition." Nilavar v. Mercy Health Sys., 244 F. Appx. 690, 698 (6th Cir. 2007). They argue that the undisputed record here shows that at least 40% of the milk pooled in [41] Orders 5 and 7 was produced elsewhere and that, in effect, Professor Rausser ignored the commercial realities by excluding these producers of raw milk from his analysis because they are within "the relevant area of effective competition" and impact significantly the supply of, demand for and price of raw milk in Orders 5 and 7. Defendants further argue that a relevant market may not be [*723] defined by reference to federal order boundaries, which were established for administrative purposes, and that defendants have not themselves treated Orders 5 and 7 as a relevant market.

Plaintiffs respond with alternative arguments. First, they argue that the relevant market must be analyzed by reference to the available buyers in the relevant geographic market, not by reference to the available sellers of raw milk, and, secondly, even if it is required that determination of the relevant geographic market includes consideration that 40% of the raw milk is produced outside the relevant market as one of the commercial realities required to be considered, Professor Rausser has done so. [6] Plaintiffs further argue that the federal milk marketing orders are relevant and a factor to be considered in determining [42] the relevant geographic market and they further argue that defendants have, in fact, treated Orders 5 and 7 as a relevant geographic market.

In short, plaintiffs argue that there are genuine issues of material fact to be decided by the jury which preclude a finding concerning the relevant market as a matter of law. Defendants, on the other hand, argue that there is no genuine issue of material fact, that Professor Rausser has not considered all of the economic realities in formulating his opinion, and that the Court should grant judgment as a matter of law. Although significant questions have been raised about Professor Rausser's approach, especially the possible, and maybe total, lack of consideration by him of the raw milk flowing into Orders 5 and 7 from elsewhere, genuine questions of material fact do exist requiring the question of the relevant market to be submitted to the jury. As this Court has noted in other orders, plaintiffs may not be able to carry their [43] burden of proof and convince the jury that the relevant market is Orders 5 and 7; however, that is not the question before the Court. Plaintiffs have established a jury question on the issue of the relevant geographic market.

[5] Dr. Rausser acknowledges that based upon his analysis of the available data, "the geographic boundaries of the relevant market include Orders 5, 6 and 7." Rassuer Rpt p. 66. Order 6, that is, Florida, [39] also has severely limited options to move milk out of its order. In addition, 6 of the 12 Order 6 pool distributing plants which are the closest plants to Orders 5 and 7 are controlled by Dean and NDH. Rassuer Rpt. p. 62. Therefore, Order 6 is very similarly situated to Orders 5 and 7 but was not included in the relevant geographic market.

[6] Plaintiffs do not explain why Professor Rausser would have considered the amount of milk coming into Orders 5 and 7 as one of the "commercial realities" if determination of the relevant market did not require him to do so.

B. Monopolization, Monopsonization and Attempted Monopolization and Monopsonization — Counts Two, Three and Four Count Three of plaintiffs' complaint alleges that DFA and DFA controlled entities possess monopoly power in the market for marketing and sales of fluid Grade A milk to fluid Grade A milk bottling plants in the southeast. Plaintiffs allege that DFA has maintained and enhanced its market dominance by unreasonably restraining trade, artificially and anti-competitively reducing the price of fluid Grade A milk purchased from plaintiffs and members of the class, eliminating competition from rival cooperatives and independent dairy farmers, and foreclosing and excluding competitors from access to fluid Grade A milk bottling plants by engaging in predatory and unlawful conduct. More specifically, plaintiffs allege that DFA has gained monopoly power through the very same acts alleged to have been engaged in by defendants in furtherance of their alleged § 1conspiracy, [44] [Complaint, ¶ 146].

Plaintiffs define the relevant geographic market as the southeast United States, comprised of Federal Milk Market Orders 5 and 7. They define the relevant product market as the market for sales or marketing of fluid Grade A milk to fluid Grade A bottling plants and the market for purchase of fluid Grade A milk by fluid Grade A milk bottling plants. They allege in their complaint that defendants control [*724] 77% of the fluid Grade A milk bottling capacity in the southeast, over 80% of the Grade A milk marketed in the southeast and 90% of the fluid Grade A milk produced in the southeast.

In Count Four, plaintiffs make almost identical allegations against Dean and non-defendant co-conspirator bottlers for unlawful monopsonization. [7] Count Two of the plaintiffs' complaint alleges that the same defendants named in Counts Three and Four of the complaint have attempted to monopolize and monopsonize.

Section 2 [45] of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, makes it illegal to "monopolize, (monopsonize), or attempt to monopolize (monopsonize) or combine or conspire to monopolize (monopsonize) any part or the trade or commerce among the several states . . ." The offenses of monopolization/monopsonization, attempt to monopolize/monopsonize and conspiracy to monopolize/monopsonize are distinct causes of action and require different proofs.

To establish a monopoly or monopsony under § 2 of the Sherman Act, plaintiffs must establish two elements: "1) possession of monopoly (or monopsony) power in the relevant market; and 2) willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 481, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992) (quoting United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966)). A claim for attempted monopolization (or monopsonization) requires: "(1) a specific intent to monopolize (or monopsonize); 2) anti-competitive conduct; and 3) a dangerous probability of success." Tarrant Service Agency, Inc. v. Am. Standard, Inc., 12 F.3d 609, 615 (6th Cir. 1993). [46] Market strength that approaches monopoly (or monopsony) power, meaning the ability to control prices and exclude competition, is a necessary element for showing a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly (or monopsony) power in an attempt case. Tarrant Serv. Agency, 12 F.3d at 615; see also Smith Wholesale Co., Inc. v. Philip Morris USA, Inc., 219 Fed. App'x. 398, 409 (6th Cir. 2007).

[7] Monopsonization is monopoly power exercised by a buyer, rather than a seller, Telcor Communications, Inc. v. Southwestern Bell Telephone Co., 305 F.3d 1124 (10th Cir. 2002), and is sometimes referred to as a "mirror image" of monopolization. Weyerhaeuser Co. v. Ross-Simmons Hardwood Lumber Co., Inc., 549 U.S. 312, 321, 127 S. Ct. 1069, 166 L. Ed. 2d 911 (2007).

In order to succeed on either a monopolization or attempt to monopolize claim, plaintiffs must establish the relevant market in which they compete [or do business] with the alleged monopolizer. See, e.g., Grinnell, 384 U.S. at 571-73; Walker Process Equipment, Inc. v. Food Machinery & Chemical Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 177, 86 S. Ct. 347, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1965); United States v. E.I. duPont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 395-99, 396 n.23, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956); Times-Picayune Pub. Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 611-12, 73 S. Ct. 872, 97 L. Ed. 1277 (1953). The relevant market consists of two components: product and service market and geographic market. Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 324, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962). The relevant product market is not at issue in this motion.

A geographic market is "an area of effective competition." Re/Max Int'l., 173 F.3d at 1016. The area is not defined [47] by "metes and bounds," but "is the locale in which consumers of a product or service can turn for alternative sources of supply." Id.; see also White and White, Inc. v. [*725] American Hosp. Supply Corp., 723 F.2d 495, 501 (6th Cir. 1983) ("[T]he area of effective competition in the known line of commerce must be charted by careful selection of the market area in which the seller operates, and to which the purchaser can practicably turn for supplies.") (quoting Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 327, 81 S. Ct. 623, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1961)).

Thus, "[t]he first step in any action brought under § 2 of the Sherman Act is for the plaintiff to define the relevant product and geographic markets in which it competes with the alleged monopolizer, and with respect to the monopolization claim, to show that the defendant, in fact possesses monopoly power." Conwood Co. v. United States Tobacco Co., 290 F.3d 768, 782 (6th Cir. 2002) (citing Berkey Photo, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263, 268-69 (2d Cir. 1979)). The Supreme Court has defined monopoly power as "the power to control prices or exclude competition." E.I. duPont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. at 391. A plaintiff may establish that a defendant holds monopoly [48] power by presenting either 1) direct evidence of actual control over prices or actual exclusion of competitors, or 2) circumstantial evidence showing a high market share within a defined market. Re/Max Int'l, Inc., 173 F.3d at 1016.

Neither the Supreme Court nor the Sixth Circuit has adopted a uniform standard as to a percentage of market power that triggers monopoly (or monopsony) power for purposes of § 2. See e.g., Smith Wholesale Co., Inc., 219 Fed. App'x at 409. The standard for monopoly power appears to be very high, and market share is typically a determining factor. See Grinnell, 384 U.S. at 570. While market share might, in many instances, lead to an inference of monopoly (or monopsony) power, it is not, in and of itself, the only factor to consider. Amer. Council of Certified Podiatric Physicians and Surgeons v. Amer. Bd. of Podiatric Surgery, Inc., 185 F.3d 606, 623 (6th Cir. 1999) ("[M]arket share is only a starting point for determining whether monopoly power exists, and the inference of monopoly power does not automatically follow from the possession of a commanding market share.").

In the Sixth Circuit, it appears that market share is a "starting point" in assessing market [49] power and that the threshold is, indeed, very high. See Byars v. Bluff City News Co, Inc., 609 F.2d 843, 850 (6th Cir. 1979) (finding that 75-80 percent or greater is a "starting point" in assessing monopoly power). See also Smith Wholesale Co., 219 Fed. App'x at 409 (56% market share insufficient); *Arthur S. Langenderfer, Inc. v. S.E. The real test is whether defendants possess sufficient market power to achieve their aims. Id. at 826. "Market power is the power to force a purchaser (or seller) to do something that he would not do in a competitive market," and it entails the "ability of one seller (or purchaser) to restrict output or raise prices." *PSI Repair Servs., Inc. v. In order for a Sherman Act claim to lie against a defendant, there must be a [*726] finding of market power. Hand v. Central Transp., Inc., 779 F.2d 8, 11 (6th Cir. 1985).

Defendants claim that plaintiffs cannot establish that DFA possessed, or had a dangerous probability of acquiring, monopoly power in the relevant market; that Dean possessed, or had a dangerous probability of acquiring, monopsony power in the relevant market; and that plaintiffs' claim of shared monopoly fails as a matter of law. Plaintiffs predictably respond by arguing that both Dean and DFA have the necessary market power and they also make the somewhat strained argument that these counts "are not limited solely to Dean and DFA," claiming that Court Two is a claim for attempt to monopolize and monopsonize "against all defendants acting in concert with other of the defendants," (a somewhat nonsensical statement) and that Count Four is a claim for unlawful monopsony against Dean, NDH and DFA collectively.

1. Does DFA Possess, or Have a Dangerous Probability of Acquiring, Monopoly Power in the Relevant Market?

As plaintiffs correctly argue, a plaintiff can demonstrate the possession [51] of, or dangerous probability of acquiring, monopoly power in one of two ways. "The first is by presenting direct evidence showing the exercise of actual control over prices or the actual exclusion of competitors." Re/Max Int'l v. Realty One, Inc., 173 F.3d at 1016. "The second is by presenting circumstantial evidence of monopoly power by showing a high market share within a defined market." Id. Defendants argue that plaintiffs have neither direct nor circumstantial evidence that DFA possesses unilateral monopoly power.

This Court agrees with defendants and the monopolization claim, Court Three, against DFA will be dismissed. As an initial matter, plaintiffs' attempt to salvage their unilateral conduct claims by aggregating the market shares of various defendants is misplaced. "Market power under § 2 of the Sherman Act is 'the ability of a single seller to raise prices and restrict output.'" Smith Wholesale Co., 219 Fed. App'x at 409 (quoting Virgin Atl. Airways, Ltd. v. British Airways, 257 F.3d 256, 265 (2d Cir. 2001)). Likewise, the Sixth Circuit has rejected the argument that market power may be measured by considering a combination of the market shares of more than one company. See [52] Smith Wholesale Co., 219 Fed. App'x at 409 ("[c]onsidering a combination of market shares of more than one company is an inappropriate measure of [ ] market power.") (citing Arthur S. Langenderfer, 917 F.2d at 1433). Thus it seems quite clear, at least in the Sixth Circuit, that it is the ability of a single actor, exercising unilateral market power which is the relevant inquiry in a monopolization case.

The plaintiffs appear to rely largely on the first method of demonstrating the possession of, or dangerous probability of acquiring, monopoly power. To prove monopoly power by presenting circumstantial evidence, it is the defendants' market share which is the relevant inquiry, Re/Max Int'l., 173 F.3d at 1016, although "[m]arket share, standing along, is insufficient to establish market power as a matter of law and is only the starting point for determining whether monopoly power exists." *Smith Wholesale Co. v. Philip Morris USA, Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18078, 2005 WL 1981452, at 8 (E.D. Tenn. August 17, 2005). Plaintiffs' expert witness, Dr. Rausser, conducted no analysis of DFA's market share or market power and indeed testified at his deposition that he held no opinion on these issues.

Plaintiffs also argue, [53] however, that they have direct evidence of DFA monopoly power. Plaintiffs point to evidence that DFA sets the price that both other cooperatives and independent dairy farmers receive [*727] for their milk and DFA's use of fully supply contracts as direct evidence of DFA's monopoly power. As plaintiffs acknowledge, DFA's actions are not, in and of themselves, a violation of § 2. While the evidence is clear that DFA is a hard-nosed actor in the market, the evidence establishes only that DFA has market power, not that it has unlawful monopoly power. Thus, there is no material question of fact regarding DFA's monopoly power.

2. Does Dean Possess, or Have a Dangerous Probability of Acquiring, Monoposy Power in the Relevant Market?

Defendants make essentially the same arguments with respect to Dean's possession of monopsony power in the market to buy raw milk that it makes with respect to the alleged monopolization by DFA of the market for raw milk.

Once again, plaintiffs shared or combined market arguments fail with respect to the monopsonization claim for the same reason they fail with the respect to the monopolization claim. This Court also agrees with defendants that plaintiffs have not created [54] an issue of material fact with respect to whether or not Dean possessed, or had a dangerous probability of acquiring, monopsony power in the relevant market.

Plaintiffs have, in fact, attempted to show through circumstantial evidence Dean's monopsony power by calculating its share of bottling capacity in Orders 5 and 7 at various points and times. While the various experts have reached different conclusions, it appears that the experts have calculated that Dean's share of bottling capacity is around 40%. Even assuming that an examination of bottling capacity is relevant on the question of Dean's share of the market alleged, i.e. purchases of raw Grade A milk by processing plants, it appears that these market share estimates are insufficient to establish monopsony power. Plaintiffs' class expert, Dr. John C. Beyer, estimated Dean's share of bottling capacity in Orders 5 and 7 as approximately 26% in 2002 and 41% in 2007. Dr. Rausser estimated Dean's share of bottling capacity to be approximately 41.5% and Dr. Scott estimated Dean's share at 43.4%, respectively, as of 2007. As set forth above, these percentages of market share, even assuming that they measure the correct market, do not [55] meet the threshold of what it takes to establish monopoly or monopsony power. See Byars, 609 F.2d at 850 (finding that 75-80% or greater is a "starting point" in assessing monopoly power); Spirit Airlines, Inc. v. Northwest Airlines, Inc., 431 F.3d 917, 935 (6th Cir. 2005) (noting Judge Learned Hand's explanation of when market share becomes large enough to constitute a monopoly: "over ninety . . . percent [ ] is enough to constitute a monopoly; it is doubtful whether sixty or sixty-four percent would be enough . . ."); Smith Wholesale Co., 219 Fed. App'x at 409 (56% market share insufficient). Furthermore, the undisputed evidence is that existing competitors have expanded and new rivals have appeared during the relevant time period in Orders 5 and 7.

Once again, plaintiffs also appear to rely on an argument that there is direct evidence that Dean possessed monopsony power in the market to buy raw milk or had a dangerous probability of acquiring such power. First, plaintiffs point to testimony from representatives of Dean's main supplier, DFA, and its main competitor, NDH, to support its argument that Dean has the ability to control prices paid to sellers in the market. DFA's director [56] of customer relations, Frank Johns, testified that Dean would be a "deal breaker" in terms of implementing any price increase. Similarly, they point to testimony of NDH President Meyer who testified that NDH wouldn't accept an over-order premium unless assured that Dean and other processors were accepting the same over-order premium. Specifically, he testified [*728] that "If Dean wouldn't accept a premium, I wouldn't accept the premium." This testimony, however, tends only to establish that Dean is a major player, perhaps a leader, in the market, and that Dean has a degree of market power. It does not establish, however, that Dean has the ability to set prices at an anti-competitive level, despite Professor Rausser's opinion to the contrary.

Plaintiffs also point to proof which they say establishes that Dean excludes competition from the market, mainly evidence related to the Red Oak plant in Georgia and the acquisition and shut down of eight bottling plants in the southeast. These acquisitions and shut downs, however, do not necessarily constitute evidence of excluding competition and plaintiffs point to no evidence that Dean actually shuttered plants in order to prevent price competition. [57] For these reasons, the Court finds that there is no genuine issue of material fact as to whether or not Dean possessed, or had a dangerous probability of acquiring, monopsony power in the relevant market and summary judgment will be granted as to Court Four.

3. Jointly Acquired Market Power

As noted above, Court Two of plaintiffs' complaint asserts a claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act for attempt to monopolize and monopsonize. Specifically, paragraph 134 of the complaint alleges: "DFA, both by itself and in combination with DFA-controlled market agencies DMS and SMA, has attempted to and continues to attempt to possess market power in the marketing and sales of fluid Grade A milk to fluid Grade A milk bottling plants in the southeast market and maintains a dominant position in the market for the purchase of fluid Grade A milk by fluid Grade A milk bottling plants in the southeast," clearing alleging a scheme to monopolize. The complaint further alleges, in paragraph 137, that "Defendants have attempted to and continue to attempt to obtain market power in the purchase of fluid Grade A milk by fluid Grade A milk bottling plants in southeast market and they have acted with the specific [58] intent to obtain a monopsony and use their market dominance in the bottling of fluid Grade A milk . . .," alleging a scheme on the part of defendants to monopsonize. Plaintiffs now recharacterize their Count Two claim as "a claim for attempt to monopolize and monopsonize against all defendants acting in concert with other of the defendants." [8]

As set forth above, a claim for attempted monopolization requires specific intent to monopolize, anti-competitive conduct and dangerous probability of success. Tarrant Serv. Agency, 12 F.3d at 615. Apparently recognizing that they are unable to show sufficient market share on the part of any defendant to establish monopoly or monopsony power, plaintiffs appear to attempt in this count to aggregate market share in an effort to do what they cannot otherwise do. Such an approach, however, flies in the face of clear Sixth Circuit precedent. Although plaintiffs attempt rather feebly to distinguish the case, the Sixth Circuit has, by clear implication, rejected the "shared monopoly" theory of [59] the plaintiffs. In the Smith Wholesale case, one which originated in this Court, the Sixth Circuit specifically held, when considering an attempted monopolization claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act, that "a combination of market shares of more than one company is an inappropriate measure of [ ] market power and that market power under § 2 relates to the ability of a single seller to raise prices and restrict output". This Court agrees with defendants' assertion that plaintiffs in reality suggest that somehow the Sixth Circuit [*729] did not mean what the Sixth Circuit said. Respectfully, that is an argument that must be presented to the Sixth Circuit, not to this Court. This Court will assume that the Sixth Circuit meant exactly what it said until the Sixth Circuit says otherwise. For this reason alone, Count Two of the complaint fails as a matter of law.

Furthermore, it appears to this Court that the plaintiffs misstate and misuse the holding of cases from other circuits in an attempt to salvage their attempt to monopolize and monopsonize claims. A review of each of the cases cited by the defendants reveals that the language quoted by the defendants in those cases about the collective or [60] joint use of monopoly power applies in the context of the language of § 2 of the Sherman Act which makes it illegal to "combine or conspire with any other person or persons to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce." Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993). Thus, the language from these cases is completely inapposite and has no application to a claim of attempt to monopolize; rather, what plaintiffs in reality allege is a conspiracy to monopolize or monopsonize, the very same claim they have raised in Count One of their complaint. The elements of a conspiracy to monopolize are the existence of a conspiracy, i.e. that defendants engaged in a conspiracy, and specific intent to monopolize. Richter Concrete, 691 F.2d at 827. Both a conspiracy to monopolize and attempt to monopolize require that defendant have monopoly power or a dangerous probability of acquiring it. Stewart Glass & Mirror, Inc. v. U.S. Auto Glass Discount Centers, Inc., 200 F.3d 307 (5th Cir. 2000). Thus, it appears to this Court that the only real difference between a claim of attempt to monopolize under § 2 and a claim of conspiracy to monopolize under § 2 is joint [61] or collective action by the defendants.

The plain language of § 2 further bolsters the Court's decision. As noted above, § 2 authorizes three distinct claims: (1) monopolization (or monopsonization); (2) attempt to monopolize (or monopsonize); and (3) conspiracy to monopolize (or monopsonize). The fact that a separate offense under § 2 exists for concerted action, i.e. conspiring, strongly suggests that claims for monopoly/ monopsony, and attempt are unilateral action claims and that any claim for joint action must be brought as a conspiracy claim rather than an attempt claim. See H.L. Hayden Co. of N. Y., Inc. v. Siemens Med. Sys., Inc., 879 F.2d 1005, 1018 (2d Cir. 1989); Carpet Group International v. Oriental Rug Importers Ass'n, 256 F. Supp. 2d 249 (D. New Jersey, 2003).

To the extent plaintiffs allege unilateral conduct on the part of Dean and DFA, their attempt claim in Count Two fails for the same reasons their claims of monopolization and monopsonization in Counts Three and Four against Dean and DFA fail. To the extent they allege joint or collective action on the part of the defendants to monopolize, that claim duplicates the claim made by the plaintiffs in Count One of the complaint [62] and Count Two should be dismissed for that reason alone. Furthermore, it appears that plaintiffs have abandoned completely their claims of unilateral conduct with respect to Count Two and Count Four and pursue only a unilateral monopolization claim against DFA in Count Three, which fails for the reasons set forth above. Counts Two, Three and Four of the complaint will therefore be dismissed.

C. Triable Issue of Fact as to the Alleged Conspiracies (Counts One and Five)

This Court has previously discussed the legal principles which apply to [*730] the adjudication of motions for summary judgment in antitrust cases at length in dealing with the retailer plaintiffs' motions for summary judgment and above and sees no purpose in discussing the standard again. See Sec. III above.

The parties have committed a substantial part of their briefs to their argument as to whether or not there is genuine issue of material fact with respect to the alleged conspiracies to suppress dairy farmer pay prices and monopolize/monopsonize. They have filed voluminous statements of fact and the exhibits to their motions consist of hundreds, if not thousands, of pages of documents. Over the almost one year since the joint [63] motion of the defendants was filed, this Court has made every effort to review this vast volume of pleadings and documents. Based upon that review, the Court has concluded that genuine issues of material fact do indeed exist with respect to the conspiracy allegations which require a jury to perform its traditional fact-finding role. Although it might be preferable for this Court to examine in detail in this memorandum opinion each of the arguments made by all of the parties in this case, such an approach would require an enormous amount of time and would increase the size of this already too long memorandum by dozens of pages. As a result, the Court simply finds that there are genuine issues of material fact with respect to the conspiracy claims of plaintiffs which require that those claims be submitted to the jury. The motion for summary judgment on this ground is DENIED.

D. Antitrust Injury and Antitrust Standing

"Standing, in a conventional Article III sense, requires just proof of actual injury, causation and redressability." NicSand, Inc. v. 3M Company, 507 F.3d 442, 449 (6th Cir. 2007) (quoting Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560-61, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351 (1992)). A determination of antitrust [64] standing, however, requires more. "Harm to the antitrust plaintiff is sufficient to satisfy the constitutional standing requirement of injury in fact, but the court must make a further determination whether the plaintiff is a proper party to bring a private antitrust action." Associated Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. Cal. State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 535 n.31, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983). Furthermore,

> Antitrust standing to sue is at the center of all antitrust law and policy. It is not a mere technicality. It is the glue that cements each suit with the purposes of the antitrust laws, and prevents abuses of those laws. The requirement of antitrust standing insures that antitrust litigants use the laws to prevent anti-competitive action and make certain that they will not be able to recover under the antitrust laws when the action challenged would tend to promote competition in the economic sense. Antitrust laws reflect considered policies regulating economic matters. The antitrust standing requirement makes certain that the laws are used only to deal with the economic problems whose solutions these policies were intended to affect.

In [65] other words, standing requires more than injury proximately caused by a violation of the antitrust laws. Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977). Plaintiffs must also prove "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Antitrust injury must be attributable to an anti-competitive aspect of the practice under scrutiny. Atlantic Ridgefield Co. v. [*731] USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 334, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990).

Defendants once again raise substantial issues; however, they appear to this Court to involve disputed factual issues which must be resolved by a jury. There is evidence from which a jury could conclude that defendants, the buyers within the relevant geographic market, have restricted opportunities to sellers, i.e. plaintiffs, such that they have no other option but to sell at the price set by defendants. As a result, the jury could conclude that plaintiffs are the direct victims of anti-competitive conduct on the part of defendants. In other words, the jury may find that plaintiffs have suffered an antitrust injury because of defendants' monopsonistic behavior; see Mandeville Island Farms, Inc. v. Am. Crystal Sugar Co., 334 U.S. 219, 235, 68 S. Ct. 996, 92 L. Ed. 1328 (1948), [66] and that they have antitrust standing to pursue these claims. Summary judgment is DENIED on this ground.

E. Filed—Rate Doctrine

One aspect of plaintiffs' case deals with their allegation that defendants "flooded" the southeast with excess milk reducing the federal minimum blend prices for milk. Plaintiffs complaint explains how minimum blend prices are set and the effect, as they see it, of flooding on the federal minimum blend prices:

> 50. USDA regulations mandate that fluid Grade A milk bottlers pay at least the weighted uniform average or minimum "blend" price for fluid Grade A milk that is "pooled" on an order. Dairy farmers "pool" Grade A milk on an order by delivering specified minimum quantities of fluid Grade A milk to USDA-regulated fluid Grade A milk bottling plants associated with that order. Dairy farmers' delivery of the minimum quantity of fluid Grade A milk to fluid Grade A milk bottling plants is referred to as "touching base." USDA regulations require that dairy farmers touch base each month they are pooled on an order.
> 51. The minimum blend price for an order is based upon the end uses of all Grade A milk pooled on that order. Thus, for example, if 60 percent of all Grade [67] A milk pooled on an order was used as Class I milk (fluid Grade A milk), and the remaining 40 percent was used as Class III milk (cheese milk), the minimum blend price for all Grade A milk pooled on the order would consist of the Class I price for 60 percent and the Class III price for 40 percent. To use hypothetical prices for this example, if the Class I price is $2.00 per pound and the Class III price is $1.50 per pound, the minimum blend price would be $1.80 per pound. (Using the hypothetical utilization of 60 percent for Class 1 yields $2.00 x .6 = $1.20. 40 percent utilization for Class III yields $1.50 x .4 = $.60. When these two prices are added together, $1.20 + $.60 = $1.80.)
> 52. Due to seasonal and other variations in Grade A milk production and demand and uneven distribution of dairy farmers throughout the United States, Class I utilization, the highest valued use of Grade A milk in the USDA pricing scheme, varies between orders. On some orders, such as Orders 5 and 7 where demand for bottled fluid Grade A milk often exceeds Grade A milk production, Class I utilization has traditionally exceeded 70 percent. In other areas, such as the Southwest where demand for bottled fluid [68] Grade A milk does not exceed Grade A milk production, the percentage of Class I utilization may often be as low as 40 percent. Consequently, orders with high Class I utilization generally have higher FMMO minimum blend prices than orders with lower Class I utilization.
> [*732] 53. Shifting substantial quantities of Grade A milk from one order to another is referred to as "diluting" or "flooding" a pool because the "outside" Grade A milk increases the total volume of Grade A milk pooled to the point that it decreases the Order's Class I utilization, and hence reduces the minimum blend prices. Because DFA has the capacity to flood pools and to move money arbitrarily among its members, it can use that power, as well as other means, to stifle competition in the Southeast market.
> 54. USDA minimum prices for Class I Grade A milk represent the minimum or floor prices that fluid Grade A milk bottlers must pay for Grade A milk marketed pursuant to USDA regulation. Cooperatives and independent dairy farmers are free to negotiate for prices in excess of FMMO minimum prices to reflect more accurately market conditions. The amounts by which prices for Grade A milk exceed FMMO minimum blend prices are known [69] generically as "overorder premiums." Fluid Grade A milk bottling plants in the Southeast traditionally paid overorder premiums for Grade A milk prior to the successful implementation of Defendants' conspiracy, monopolization and monopsonization.
> 55. The actual price a dairy farmer receives for Grade A milk is referred to as the "mailbox price." The mailbox price received by independent dairy farmers is comprised of the FMMO minimum blend price plus any over-order premium and bonuses for volume or quality, minus marketing costs. The mailbox price received by dairy > cooperative members is calculated in the same way except additional charges may be deducted by the cooperative. Prior to Defendants' antitrust violations, dairy farmers in the Southeast received mailbox prices for Grade A milk that included over-order premiums that reflected more accurately competitive market conditions.

Professor Rausser, plaintiffs' damages expert, calculates the damages he claims were caused by defendants' flooding of the southeast- his Stage 1 damages. To arrive at those damages, he estimates the amount of milk that he believes should have been shipped into Orders 5 and 7 from other areas and then "re-compute[s] [70] the uniform prices in Order 7 [but not Order 5] applying the federal formulas." Based on that recalculation, he claimed that plaintiffs were underpaid by $80 million as a result of an artificial reduction of the federal minimum blend prices for milk.

Defendants argue that these Stage 1 damages are barred by the filed-rate doctrine, which as a general rule bars challenges under state law and federal antitrust laws to rates set by federal agencies. This Court has previously discussed the origin and purpose of the filed-rate doctrine as well as the regulatory scheme involved in the setting of milk prices. See Doc. 79, pp. 9-11. In response to the defendants' prior motion to dismiss, plaintiffs responded to this same argument by asserting that the filed-rate doctrine does not apply here because minimum blend prices are not filed with or approved by a regulatory agency so as to invoke the doctrine. They further responded that it was the fixing of over order premiums which is at the heart of their complaint, not the minimum blend prices established by the Secretary of Agriculture. This Court previously agreed with plaintiffs on both points, noting that defendants had cited no authority for [71] the proposition that federal minimum blend prices are subject to the filed-rate doctrine. The Court specifically determined, based on plaintiffs' allegations, that it is the "mailbox price" which they allege is fixed at an artificially low amount and that these prices are neither [*733] regulated nor approved by the Department of Agriculture. The Court therefore found the filed-rate doctrine to be inapplicable to this case.

Plaintiffs argue that much has changed since the Court decided the motion to dismiss. They claim that discovery has made it clear that plaintiffs' "flooding" allegations present a direct challenge to the federal minimum blend price and that the federal minimum blend price is in fact a price set by the USDA through its federal market administrator. They further argue that the law has changed as well, citing a district court decision which specifically addressed the question of whether federal minimum blend prices are subject to the filed-rate doctrine. In Carlin v. Dairy America, Inc., 690 F.Supp.2d 1128, 1133-41 (E.D. Cal. 2010), the district court determined that the monetary damages sought by plaintiffs in that case, a class of dairy farmers against a dairy corporative [72] and a common marketing agency, could only be calculated by reference to rates set by the Secretary, something the filed-rate doctrine forbids. Id. at 1135-36. Defendants now renew their argument that plaintiffs' Stage 1 damages are barred by the filed-rate doctrine because they "can only be ascertained by reference to rates set by the Secretary pursuant to the FMMOs." Id. at 1136. [9]

Defendants make essentially the same arguments with respect to the filed-rate doctrine that they made previously with respect to the motion to dismiss. At the outset, however, it is important to note the different standards which apply for a motion to dismiss as opposed to a motion for summary judgment. The Court addressed a legal issue with respect to the motion to dismiss. The record is now complete and [73] the Court must address both the factual and legal issues raised by the motion and apply the appropriate summary judgment standard to the analysis.

Defendants do appear to have changed position somewhat since the time of the motion to dismiss. At that time, they clearly argued that the filed-rate doctrine has no application because it was not the federal minimum blend price which they challenged but rather the over-order premiums paid to farmers which were at the heart of their claims. They now simply take the position that the federal minimum blend price is not subject to the filed-rate doctrine. They make several arguments in this respect. First they argue that the USDA does not file or otherwise meaningfully review the federal minimum blend prices, they argue, somewhat tongue in cheek, that they have not changed their position and they argue that the Carlin decision is inapposite.

[9] The Carlin court noted this Court's prior decision not to apply the filed-rate doctrine, specifically noting that this Court's decision was based on the fact that "the rates being challenged were not the minimum blend rate determined by the Secretary, but were over-order premiums above the minimum rates that were allegedly manipulated by the defendants' anti-competitive behavior." 690 F.Supp.2d at 1134.

For the reasons which follow, this Court now concludes that the filed-rate doctrine does in fact bar plaintiffs' claim for the so-called Stage 1 damages calculated by Professor Rausser. What is abundantly clear at this point, after the factual record has been completed, is that, at least as far as these Stage [74] 1 damages are concerned, plaintiffs do directly challenge the federal minimum blend prices, and they can hardly argue otherwise. In order to arrive at the amount of Stage 1 damages, Professor Rausser recalculates the federal minimum blend price based on what he now believes it should have been. The Court cannot imagine a more direct attack on the federal minimum blend prices.

[*734] As noted above, this Court's prior decision was premised upon two bases: (1) That plaintiffs' claim related to over-order premiums, not to the federal minimum blend prices, and (2) that minimum blend prices are not filed rates set by a government regulatory agency. The Court concludes that the first basis for the Court's decision is now shown to be factually inaccurate and the second contrary to the weight of authority, especially given the factual state of the record. This Court finds the rationale in the Carlin case and Servais v. Kraft Foods, Inc., 2001 WI App 165, 246 Wis. 2d 920, 631 N.W.2d 629 (Wis. App. 2001), aff'd. 2002 WI 42, 252 Wis. 2d 145, 643 N.W.2d 92 (Wis. 2001), to be persuasive and, to the extent Professor Rausser's damages rely on recalculating the federal minimum blend price, that claim for damages is barred by the filed rate doctrine and summary judgment [75] will be GRANTED as to that claim. [10]

This Court discussed briefly the Servais case in its prior opinion with respect to the motion to dismiss. In Carlin, dairy farmers brought a putative class action against Dairy America, Inc., an entity established by a group of nine dairy cooperatives for the purpose of marketing dairy products manufactured by the cooperatives, and California Dairies, Inc., a dairy cooperative with a major stake in the Dairy America marketing cooperative. The plaintiffs alleged misreporting of pricing data by the defendants which led to significantly lower than would have been the case minimum prices for raw milk. The defendants moved to dismiss on grounds of the filed-rate doctrine. The district court, after reviewing the history of the [76] filed-rate doctrine and noting the lack of any federal cases applying the doctrine in the context of federal milk marketing orders, concluded that the filed-rate doctrine applies generally to minimum rates for raw milk, distinguishing this Court's prior decision in this antitrust litigation on the basis that this Court had found that the rates being challenged were not the minimum blend rate determined by the Secretary but were over-order premiums above the minimum rates. The Carlin court stated as follows:

> Plaintiffs' claims for monetary damage are, so far as the court can discern, solely the product of minimum prices for raw milk set by FMMO's that were artificially depressed by Defendants' misreporting of prices for NFDM. The crux of Plaintiffs' claims is that the minimum raw milk prices set forth in the FMMO's would have been higher had Defendants not misreported forward contract prices for NFDM. The monetary damages Plaintiffs claim are to be determined, as the court understands it, by calculating the difference between raw milk minimum prices as set forth in the FMMOs and what those prices would have been had Defendants not submitted on unauthorized forward contract sales prices. [77] In other words, Plaintiffs' damages can only be ascertained by reference to rates set by the Secretary pursuant to the FMMO's during the time period in question. This is precisely what the filed-rate doctrine forbids.

Id. at 1136. After rejecting plaintiffs' argument that the filed-rate doctrine does not apply to federal minimum milk prices, the district court also rejected many of the same technical objections to applicability of the doctrine raised by plaintiffs in this case. At least one other district court has also rejected similar arguments. See In [*735] Re Hawaiian & Guamanian Cabotage Antitrust Litigation, 754 F.Supp.2d 1239, 1245 (W.D. Wash. Nov. 30, 2010). (collecting cases).

[10] Plaintiffs do, as they must, acknowledge that "some of Prof. Rausser's damages rely on re-calculating the federal blend price. If true, those damages would be disallowed, not plaintiffs' entire claims." Plaintiffs would have considerably more credibility with the Court if they would simply acknowledge that Professor Rausser does in fact re-calculate the federal blend price. He states unequivocally in his report that he does so.

Given that Professor Rausser's Stage 1 damages opinion includes his recalculation of the federal minimum blend price, plaintiffs' claim related to those damages falls squarely withing the purpose of the filed-rate doctrine and would require this Court to substitute its judgment in this judicial proceeding for that of the governing regulatory agency. This Court agrees with the Carlin court that that is precisely the type of determination forbidden by the filed-rate doctrine. To allow plaintiffs' claim for Stage [78] 1 damages would require the Court to determine what the reasonable government minimum milk price would have been if defendants had not conspired as alleged in their complaint. Despite their prior claims, plaintiffs are in fact challenging the minimum prices set by the Secretary of Agriculture. In addition, now that the record has been fully developed, plaintiffs' arguments that the USDA does not file or otherwise meaningfully review the federal minimum blend price fails as well. The record in the case establishes that these rates are in fact filed with a government agency which has the authority to set and review those rates, regardless of the actual degree of agency review. In re Hawaiian & Guamanian Cabotage Antitrust Litigation, 754 F.Supp.2d at 1245 (citing Carlin, 690 F.Supp.2d at 1136-37); *In re N.J. Title Ins. Litig. 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 92310, 2009 WL 3233529 at 2 (D. New Jersey) ("application of the filed-rate doctrine does not depend upon meaningful agency review of filed rates") (citing Square D Co. v. Niagara Frontier Tariff Bureau, Inc.,, 476 U.S. [409] at 417 n.19, 106 S. Ct. 1922, 90 L. Ed. 2d 413)).

In sum, the filed-rate doctrine bars plaintiffs' claim for Stage 1 damages and the motion for summary judgment is [79] GRANTED in this respect.

F. The Bos Motion, [Doc. 833]

Gerald L. Bos ("Bos") is one of the individual defendants named by the plaintiffs in the two conspiracy counts contained in the amended complaint. Bos joins the joint motion of all other defendants for summary judgment; however, he has filed a separate motion for summary judgment raising issues not raised in the joint motion. Bos argues that, regardless of whether or not plaintiffs can establish a triable issue on the existence of a conspiracy generally, they cannot establish a triable issue on the question of whether or not Bos "actively and knowingly" participated in a conspiracy to eliminate competition for the purchase and sale of raw milk and to suppress farmer pay prices. Plaintiffs predictably respond that the evidence is not only sufficient to create a triable issue but is somewhat overwhelming as to Bos's participation in the conspiracy. The Court agrees with Bos and his supplemental motion for summary judgment will be granted.

1. Factual Background

Plaintiffs' statement of the background facts in this case is set out in their brief in five sentences; beyond that, they simply refer the Court to their response to DFA's statement [80] of facts, and plaintiffs' additional statement of facts, as well as their briefing with respect to the joint motion. Defendant does no better, setting out a two sentence statement of facts and referring the Court to other facts relevant to the motion which are discussed in the body of the motion. Neither party's approach to identification of genuine issues of material fact is helpful to the Court. As a result of the way the parties have approached the statement of facts in their briefs, the Court will not attempt to set out a statement of facts but will simply say that the Court has viewed [*736] the facts, as it is required to do, in the light most favorable to the plaintiffs.

Bos is the former chief financial officer of DFA, having retired from DFA in 2005 after 26 years with DFA and its predecessor Mid-America Dairymen, Inc. Bos served as a part time consultant to DFA after his retirement for approximately three years.

2. Legal Standard

The parties agree that the appropriate standard to be applied to the question of individual liability under the antitrust laws has been stated by the Sixth Circuit in Brown v. Donco Enterprises, Inc., 783 F.2d 644 (6th Cir. 1986). In Brown, the Sixth Circuit [81] found it to be "undisputed that a corporation's officers and agents may be held individually liable for corporate actions that violate the antitrust laws if they authorize or participate in the unlawful acts." Brown, 783 F.2d at 646 (citing United States v. Memphis Retail Package Stores Association, 334 F.Supp. 686, 689 (W.D. Tenn. 1971)). The specific holding of the Sixth Circuit in Brown is easily extracted from the Sixth Circuit's opinion and is a rather straightforward standard which must be applied. The Sixth Circuit held:

> Individual liability under the antitrust laws can be imposed only where corporate agents are actively and knowingly engaged in a scheme designed to achieve anticompetitive ends. To support a determination of liability under this standard, the evidence must demonstrate that a defendant exerted his influence so as to shape corporate intentions.

Brown, 783 F.2d at 646.

Both plaintiffs and the defendant take this relatively straightforward statement of the standard to be applied and attempt to modify it to meet their own purposes. In doing so, both parties misstate the Sixth Circuit's holding in Brown and this Court's prior holding as well. Bos states the standard [82] as follows: "Individual liability may be imposed only where corporate agents are actively and knowingly engaged in a scheme designed to achieve anti-competitive ends and that an individual defendant exerted his influence so as to shape corporate intentions", citing Brown and this Court's prior memorandum opinion, Doc. 61 (internal quotation marks omitted). Plaintiffs, on the other hand, state the standard as:

Under Brown, Bos is individually liable under the antitrust laws if he:

- Authorize[s] or participate[s] in the unlawful acts,
- Exerts his influence so as to shape corporate intentions,
- Becomes an active participant in formulating policy decisions with his client to restrain competition, or
- Direct[s] the corporation to engage in the complained of acts for anti-competitive purpose.

Dairy Farmers Response, [Doc. 923, p. 3].

In other words, defendant alleges that individual liability made be imposed only where two showings are made. First, he claims that individual liability attaches only where a corporate agent actively and knowingly engages in the scheme designed to achieve anticompetitive ends, and secondly, where the individual defendant asserted his influence so as to shape corporate [83] intentions. On the other hand, plaintiffs appear to argue that individual liability may attach in any one of four alternative situations. Both parties are wrong. The standard set out by the Sixth Circuit for individual liability of a corporate agent is that the agent "actively and knowingly engaged in a scheme designed to achieve anti-competitive ends." Brown, 783 F.2d at 646. The Sixth Circuit also makes it clear that, at a minimum, to support "a determination of liability under [*737] this standard, the evidence must demonstrate that a defendant exerted his influence so as to shape corporate intentions." Id. (emphasis added). In other words, in the Sixth Circuit, to meet the standard for individual liability, i.e. active and knowing participation, the evidence must show that the defendant exerted influence over corporate decisions to the point that his influence shaped corporate intentions.

Plaintiffs, however, are by far the worst offenders here. They appear to completely misstate and misuse the standard established by the Sixth Circuit. Nothing in the Brown decision suggests a four part alternative standard for individual liability and plaintiffs' argument that it must show only active [84] and knowing participation without also showing that the defendant exerted his influence so as to shape corporate intentions, is simply wrong. Plaintiffs also gloss over their attempt to evade the requirement by arguing that simple participation in the unlawful acts is sufficient when in fact the evidence must show that an individual's participation was active and knowing. The Court will now turn to the question of whether or not the evidence creates a genuine issue of material fact as to whether or not Bos actively and knowingly engaged in an anticompetitive scheme.

3. Analysis

Bos argues in his motion that there is no evidence against Bos which would establish a triable issue of fact with respect to whether Bos, as an individual, "actively and knowingly engaged in a scheme designed to achieve anticompetitive ends." More specifically, Bos not only argues that there is no evidence that he ever knowingly joined any illegal agreement, he also argues that there is no evidence to establish that he actively and knowingly participated in the various constituent parts of the alleged scheme, including plaintiffs' alleged plan by DFA and Dean to expand DFA's control of milk produced by requiring [85] dairy farmers in the southeast to become members of DMS before they could obtain access to Dean plants, no evidence that Bos actively and knowingly participated in any scheme to fix prices, and no evidence that he actively and knowingly shared pay price information or participated in the alleged flooding scheme. Bos further argues that there is no evidence that he actively and knowingly participated in any scheme to organize and maintain SMA for an anticompetitive purpose or any scheme to use DCMA to set agreed upon premiums and monitor compliance with the conspiracy. He also argues that he had no active and knowing participation in the enforcement of full supply agreements. Bos correctly argues that plaintiffs may not meet their burdenof establishing a triable issue of fact by pointing to the alleged conspiratorial intent and conduct of others.

In their response to Bos's motion, plaintiffs point to a host of "facts" [11] which they argue tend toestablish that Bos knowingly and actively participated in the alleged conspiracy. As best the Court can tell from the plaintiffs' filings, they allege the following in support of their claim that there is a triable issue of fact as to Bos:

• Bos [86] testified that he was involved in all aspects of the planning and financing of operations of DFA and its joint ventures;
• Gregg Engles, Dean's CEO, testified that Bos and Hanman were always together and Bos was a "driving force" behind the financial aspects of DFA/Suiza/Dean dealings;

[*738] • Bos, Hanman and co-conspirators Engles, Schenkel, Beshears, Meyer and Noll have been close friends for decades;
• Bos, Hanman and the co-conspirators listed above have entered into business deals together, as executives, co-investors and competitors;
• Bos was typically with Hanman when business matters were discussed;
• Bos was paid well for his services, including his work for a processing venture jointly owned by DFA with Pete Schenkel, then president of Suiza and bonuses paid based upon joint venture profits and volume of milk marketed by DFA;
• Bos was familiar with a prior antitrust lawsuit filed by Lonestar against DFA in 2000 [12];
• Bos is familiar with DFA business in general;
• Bos participated in DFA's plan to convert farmers to DMS;
• Bos signed the guarantee and indemnity portion of the outsourcing agreement between DMS and Dean;

• Bos personally negotiated the amount of "efficiency rebates" between [87] Dean and DFA/DMS;
• Bos never saw any studies calculating any actual "efficiencies" but he nevertheless authorized the payment of "efficiency rebates";

[11] The Court loosely refers to plaintiffs' "facts." In reality, what plaintiffs often refer to as "facts" are simply inferences they seek to draw from other facts or conclusory statements, or they simply misstate the facts established.

[12] This "fact" offered by plaintiffs is a stark example of how plaintiffs misinterpret the facts which [88] are established by the record. The fact relied upon by the plaintiffs in its statement of facts is: "In 2000, Lonestar sued DFA alleging that it, under Hanman's management and while Bos was CFO, unlawfully monopolized southeastern states, including Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, and Missouri, and interfered with Lonestar's access to processing plants." From this "fact", plaintiffs argue that it is established that Bos was directly involved in every financial aspect of the conspiracy and his familiarity with this prior lawsuit "demonstrates that he knew that he was engaging in potential unlawful acts," a conclusion not even remotely justified by the "fact" offered by the plaintiffs. If such a conclusion were applicable, this would mean that any financial officer of any corporation which engaged in unlawful activity would be held responsible simply because of his or her knowledge of the financial aspects of the business. In addition, a conclusion that Bos knew of the unlawful nature of his acts cannot be established based on the fact that he knew that his employer had previously been sued.

- Bos participated in the DFA-Dean full requirements agreements [13];
- Bos helped to facilitate DFA's transfer of milk bottling plants to Suiza;
- Bos handled the financial and accounting aspects of the sale of DFA's interest in Suiza Dairy Group;
- Bos participated in the financial aspects of the acts related to the $28.5 million transaction related to "carve out" plants;
- Bos participated in the setting up of NDH, referred to by plaintiffs as a "FAUX competitor"
- Bos agreed with the multi-million dollar buyout of Noll's and Beshears's NDH ownership stake;
- Bos was motivated by the receipt of several million dollars in wages and bonuses by DFA, amounts that were significantly more than he had previously earned.

A review of these "facts" reveals very quickly why plaintiffs attempt to restate the Sixth Circuit's Brown standard. They [*739] repeatedly argue that Bos participated in financial aspects of the various dealings and agreements which they allege are part of the anticompetitive scheme. What they do not establish, however, is that Bos actively and knowingly participated in an anticompetitive scheme by at a minimum, demonstrating that he "exerted his influence so as to shape corporate intentions." Plaintiffs view the standard as requiring that they simply show participation, not that they are not required to show influence on corporate intentions. Even if the acts complained of by the plaintiffs can be proven to be acts in furtherance of an anticompetitive scheme, plaintiffs have simply shown that Bos, "participated," sometimes intimately, in the financial planning and arrangements related to those acts. They have not shown, however, that he did anything more than would have been expected from a chief financial officer of any corporation, much less that his actions somehow influenced the [90] corporate decisions that were made. Plaintiffs have engaged in "guilt by association", and they argue inferences to be drawn from the evidence which are unfair and strained to the point of not being justified or reasonable. They have, at best, offered evidence from which equally balanced inferences of anticompetitive and pro-competitive activity are established. Under the Matsushita standard, plaintiffs therefore fail in their burden and Bos's motion for summary judgment will be GRANTED.

G. The Baird Motion, [Doc. 826]

James Baird ("Baird"), one of the individual defendants named by the plaintiffs, has also filed a separate motion for summary judgment raising issues not raised by the joint motion. In general, Baird alleges that he is entitled to summary judgment because the plaintiffs' circumstantial evidence regarding the formation and operation of SMA and the plaintiffs' claims of "sweetheart deals" merely show rational business decisions and that Baird had no rational economic motive to conspire. Plaintiffs predictably disagree and, on this motion, the Court agrees with the plaintiffs. Baird's supplemental motion for summary judgment will be DENIED.

Baird is a dairy farmer who was [91] active in the formation of Lone Star Milk Producers ("LSMP") in 1997. LSMP is one of the fastest growing dairy cooperatives in the United States. Baird also has ownership interest in hauling companies and has contracted with other cooperatives to manage the marketing of their milk. LSMP became a member of SMA in April, 2002. Plaintiffs argue that Baird was instrumental in the formation of SMA and has managed SMA through VFC Management, LLC ("VFC"), a for profit company owned by Baird and his daughter-in-law. Baird served on the operations committee of SMA as a representative for LSMP. Baird was named interim manager of SMA in April, 2006, and became a paid manager on January 1, 2007. One of Baird's hauling companies, Lone Star Milk Transport hauls milk for SMA.

In 2000, LSMP sued DFA alleging that it unlawfully monopolized milk in the Southeast. The suit was settled in 2001 with DFA paying LSMP $2.1 million. At about the same time as the LSMP/DFA settlement, the Suiza/Dean merger was ongoing. Suiza and DFA agreed that DFA would supply milk to the new entity. Plaintiffs allege that defendant formed SMA, controlled by DFA, to carry out the agreement and force independent cooperatives [92] to market milk through SMA to have access to bottling plants. They essentially argue that Baird's loyalty to DFA had been acquired through the settlement of the prior lawsuit and that Baird used threats and coercion to induce various cooperatives to join SMA. Plaintiffs further claim that Baird has been paid millions of dollars in fees for his participation in the [*740] conspiracy and has made additional millions of dollars through his hauling companies and management fees.

Plaintiffs allege that Baird participated in the formation of SMA, threatened and coerced other cooperatives to join SMA and personally engaged in price fixing. The fact that he participated in the formation of SMA and persuaded others to join is not disputed. What does appear to be disputed is that Baird and DFA jointly maintained SMA through coercion and threats or that Baird colluded with DFA, Dean and DMS to fix prices and not to compete. Plaintiffs argue that Baird was motivated to conspire by greed and that his actions increased his revenues and profits from managing cooperatives, protected his milk hauling revenues and profits and allowed him to diversify his business and earn millions of dollars through the use [93] of VFC, his for profit management company.

Baird argues that his involvement in the formation and operation of SMA does not create an inference of involvement in an illegal antitrust conspiracy but rather that he was motivated to do what he did "so that all cooperatives could share in the access to bottlers without an erosion of the over order prices." He further argues that he was exercising wise business judgement and acted in the best interest of those he represented. Baird also claims that the personal financial reward to him resulted from rational business decisions and do not give rise to an inference of conspiratorial intent to harm dairy farmers. Lastly, Baird alleges that plaintiffs lack standing to pursue the alleged antitrust allegations against him.

The Court will not discuss in detail the competing views of the evidence between plaintiffs and Baird. They are clearly set out in the record. Nor will the Court discuss in detail the competing inferences which the parties consider reasonable for the jury to draw from the proof. Suffice it to say that the Court finds the record contains evidence which, if believed by the jury, would be sufficient evidence from which the jury could [94] find that an illegal conspiracy existed, that Baird joined it, and that he personally participated in acts in furtherance of the conspiracy. The jury could also conclude that Baird took actions contrary to his own self interest absent a conspiracy and that he was motivated to conspire by the prospect of huge monetary gains.

The Court will briefly discuss, however, Baird's standing argument. Baird argues, without citation to any on-point authority, that any harm from any of Baird's conduct is too remote for a claim to be asserted by a cooperative member dairy farmer. That is so, he argues, because the direct victim is the cooperative itself. To the extent dairy farmers desire relief, he asserts they should seek it through their cooperatives.

As noted above, Baird cites no authority for his argument that cooperative dairy farmer members are required to seek relief derivatively and the Court has found none. Indeed the only authority at the Circuit Court level which addresses the issue is the case cited by plaintiffs, Alexander v. National Farmers Org., 687 F.2d 1173, 1208-09 (8th Cir. 1982), in which the Eighth Circuit found that dairy cooperative members have standing to pursue damages [95] resulting from suppressed prices received for milk because such damages belong to members of dairy cooperatives, not the cooperative itself. [14] The Court finds the rationale of Alexander persuasive.

[*741] H. The Hanman Motion, [Doc. 836]

Gary Hanman ("Hanman"), another of the individual defendants named by the plaintiffs, has, like Bos and Baird joined the joint motion of all other defendants for summary judgment and has also filed a motion for summary judgment raising issues not raised in the joint motion. Hanman raises two arguments in his motion for summary judgment. First, he argues that there is no basis for individual liability against him and, secondly, he argues that plaintiffs' claim for attempted monopoly/monopsony against him fails because he lacked market power. Given the [14] Plaintiffs state in their brief that many other cases reach the same conclusion. They do not, however, cite a single one of them.

Court's ruling with respect to the attempted monopoly/monopsony claim, the Court need not decide the second of the issues raised by Hanman. [15]

Hanman was president and CEO of DFA from 1998 through 2005 and supervised and was responsible for managing DFA staff and management personnel. Under plaintiffs' theory, Hanman was one of the two individuals responsible for designing, initiating and driving the conspiracy alleged in this case. He developed the business plan of DFA which led to DFA doing various acts which are alleged to be in furtherance of the conspiracy; signed the full supply agreements and the amendments thereto; authorized and participated in the creation of NDH, alleged by plaintiffs to be a sham competitor which permitted Dean to merge with Suiza; authorized and participated in the creation of SMA; and made millions of dollars participating in the conspiracy. Hanman's salary while CEO of DFA ranged from approximately $850,000 in 1999 to more than $17 million in 2005. After his term as CEO ended, Hanman was a consultant for DFA for three years with a pay salary [97] of $500,000 per year and the potential for making well in excess of $1,000,000.

The standard for individual liability for corporate officers is, as discussed above, set forth in Brown v. Donco Enterprises, Inc. Under the Sixth Circuit's holding, officers and agents may be held individually liable for corporate actions that violate the antitrust laws if they "actively and knowingly engaged in a scheme designed to achieve anti-competitive ends." Brown, 783 F.2d at 646. "[T]he evidence must demonstrate that a defendant exerted his influence so as to shape corporate intentions." Id. As discussed in the section on the Bos motion above, plaintiffs once again misstate the holding of Brown here; however, there are genuine issues of material fact with respect to Hanman's participation even under the correct statement of the Brown standard. Hanman's supplemental motion for summary judgment will, therefore, be DENIED.

I. The SMA Motion, [Doc. 829]

SMA, in its supplemental motion for summary judgment, argues that there is no genuine issue of material fact as to whether SMA joined in a conspiracy to suppress prices, even assuming the existence of such a conspiracy involving others. [16] According to [98] SMA, "[p]laintiffs' price fixing claims are rooted in the allegation that defendants conspired to fix and [*742] depress over order prices charged to dairy processors in the Southeast at artificially low levels." SMA argues that its formation led to the preservation of over order prices at levels higher than would otherwise have been the case and that it has no role in the establishment of over order premiums, a process carried out by DCMA, an 11-member cooperative organization not named as a defendant in this litigation. SMA also argues that its procurement of supplemental milk is consistent with industry standards and does not result in "flooding" of the Southeastern market.

The following statement of relevant facts is taken from the brief of the plaintiffs. SMA is a marketing agency of dairy cooperatives, including DFA. The day-to-day operations of SMA are handled by the "operations committee," which consists of non-farmer managers from the SMA cooperative members. Baird [99] has been a member of the operations committee since SMA's inception in April, 2002, until the present. In April, 2006, Baird was formally appointed general manager of SMA. Since January 1, 2007, Baird has managed SMA through VFC Management, a for-profit company owned by Baird and his daughter-in-law. VFC charges a $.09/cwt. fee on all SMA cooperative member milk, which is used to fund a 15% profit guarantee to Baird on all milk marketed through SMA—approximately $9,000,000.00 in 2008 alone.

[15] Plaintiffs have, in response to Hanman's claim with respect to lack of market power for the claim of attempted monopoly/monopsony, responded [96] that a showing of market power is not necessary to their conspiracy claim. This further bolsters the Court's prior decision that, in reality, plaintiffs claim is one for conspiracy to monopolize/monopsonize rather than attempt to monopolize/monopsonize.

[16] SMA's supplemental motion relates only to Count Five, the § 2 claim. SMA does not separately address the § 2 claims regarding monopolization and monopsonation which are addressed in the joint motions for summary judgment.

Defendants, including Dean Foods, formed and controlled SMA and forced previously independent cooperatives to market their milk through SMA in order to access bottling plants covered by DFA full-supply agreements. Because nearly all milk produced in the southeast is funneled through SMA (including the milk of DFA-controlled DMS, which is pooled in SMA), defendants used SMA to monitor and enforce their conspiracy, to flood the market with unneeded milk to further suppress prices, and to engage in other unlawful activities designed to eliminate competition and artificially reduce and fix milk prices.

Plaintiffs respond to SMA's argument by accusing SMA of misunderstanding fundamental rules of antitrust [100] claim construction by viewing plaintiffs' "price-fixing" and "flooding" claims "in isolation of the seven other overt acts alleged in Count V" of plaintiffs' complaint. They also correctly argue that SMA, at least for the purpose of its supplemental motion, cannot show an absence of genuine issue of material fact as to the other five overt acts since the moving party bears the burden of showing that it is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. On this point, the Court agrees with plaintiffs. Defendants are accused of participation in a conspiracy. Assuming that plaintiffs can establish the existence of a conspiracy, a coconspirator is liable for all acts performed in furtherance of the conspiracy. United States v. Hayter Oil Co., 51 F.3d 1265, 1271 (6th Cir. 1995) (citing Pinkerton v. United States, 328 U.S. 640, 646-47, 66 S. Ct. 1180, 90 L. Ed. 1489 (1946)). Each conspirator is liable for the overt acts committed by any member of the conspiracy, even if the defendant did not personally commit the acts. United States v. Murphy, 937 F.2d 1032, 1041 (6th Cir. 1991) (citing Poliafico v. United States, 237 F.2d 97, 104 (6th Cir. 1956) (Engle, J., dissenting)). It is not necessary that each conspirator know all the [101] details of the conspiracy or all the participants involved. Hooks v. Hooks, 771 F.2d 935, 944 (6th Cir. 1985).

Furthermore, SMA's claim also falls victim to the Supreme Court's admonition that a conspiracy case is to be judged by viewing it as a whole, not "by dismembering it and viewing its separate parts." *Continental Ore Co. v. Union [743] Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 698-99, 82 S. Ct. 1404, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777 (1962). Viewing the evidence as a whole, and not in isolation, the cumulative effect of all the evidence creates a genuine issue of material fact, even though some of the specific acts in furtherance of the conspiracy may not be illegal in themselves. See American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 147 F.2d 93, 107 (6th Cir. 1945) ("Acts done to give effect to the conspiracy may be, in themselves, wholly innocent acts. Yet, if they are part of the sum of the acts which are relied upon to effectuate the conspiracy which the statute forbids, they come within its prohibition.").

The evidence presented by plaintiffs, when viewed as a whole, creates a genuine issue of material fact. The evidence, if believed by the jury, will establish that the defendants designed SMA with the goal of controlling 100% of the milk produced [102] to eliminate the "independent" option, farmers were required to join SMA by coercion and threats, DFA controls SMA, SMA's pricing guidelines require its member cooperatives to charge customers the DCMA set over-order premiums, DCMA is DFA controlled, SMA monitors and enforces prices among its member cooperatives, and SMA provided price compilations to competitors.

The supplemental motion of SMA for summary judgment is DENIED.

So ordered.

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

In assessing a motion to dismiss, the court must accept all non-conclusory factual allegations as true and draw all reasonable inferences in the plaintiff's favor. To survive such a motion, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. A complaint that offers labels and conclusions or a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do. Where a complaint pleads facts that are merely consistent with a defendant's liability, it stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility of entitlement to relief. In other words, where the well-pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, dismissal is appropriate. Factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level, on the assumption that all the allegations in the complaint are true (even if doubtful in fact).

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN2[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Sherman Act

In analyzing a motion to dismiss a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, the court is mindful that a plaintiff needs to allege only enough factual matter to suggest that an agreement was made but he need not, unlike in the summary judgment context, rule out the possibility that the defendants were acting independently. Asking for plausible grounds to infer an agreement does not impose a probability requirement at the pleading stage; it simply calls for enough fact to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of an illegal agreement. Thus, an allegation of parallel conduct coupled with only a bare assertion of conspiracy is not sufficient to state a § 1 claim. Instead, allegations of parallel conduct must be placed in a context that raises a suggestion of a preceding agreement, not merely parallel conduct that could just as well be independent action.

A court in approving a class action settlement may release not only those claims alleged in the complaint and before the court but also claims which could have been alleged in connection with any matter or fact set forth or referred to in the complaint. However, a release applies only as long as the released conduct arises out of the identical factual predicate as the settled conduct. In other words, a settlement may be framed to prevent future suits depending on the very same set of facts, but future claims are barred only where there is a realistic identity of issues between the former and future cases and where the relationship between the suits is at the time of the class action foreseeably obvious to notified class members.

In addition to U.S. Const. art. III standing, an antitrust plaintiff must also establish antitrust standing. Antitrust standing is analyzed using two metrics. First, a plaintiff must demonstrate antitrust injury, which is injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants acts unlawful. Second, a plaintiff must show that he is a proper plaintiff in light of these factors: (1) the directness or indirectness of the asserted injury; (2) the existence of an identifiable class of persons whose self-interest would normally motivate them to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement; (3) the speculativeness of the alleged injury; and (4) the difficulty of identifying damages and apportioning them among direct and indirect victims so as to avoid duplicative recoveries. In addition, the existence of an improper motive is a relevant consideration, but it is not a panacea that will enable any complaint to withstand a motion to dismiss.

Ultimately, antitrust standing is about the question of which persons have sustained injuries too remote from an antitrust violation to give them standing to sue. Just as in common-law tort and contract litigation, concepts such as foreseeability and proximate cause, directness of injury, certainty of damages, and privity of contract circumscribe a party's right to recovery, so in antitrust actions the plaintiff's harm, the alleged wrongdoing by the defendants, and the relationship between them, can limit the right to sue. In considering the question of antitrust standing, the Supreme Court likens the analysis to that of proximate cause.

In the absence of a ruling by the state's highest court, the court considers and may follow intermediate court rulings unless it is convinced that the state's highest court would decide otherwise.

HN10[] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

Although a U.S. Const. art. III court must ordinarily assure itself that it has jurisdiction before proceeding, there is an exception to that rule when class certification issues are logically antecedent to U.S. Const. art. III concerns. The logically antecedent exception is not exactly defined. The cases indicate that where class certification is the source of the potential standing problems, class certification should precede the standing inquiry and the standing inquiry is deferred until after the class certification decision because the alleged problems of standing will not arise unless class certification is granted. This is particularly true where U.S. Const. art. III concerns pertain to statutory standing. Cases holding otherwise are situations where the standing of the named plaintiffs is in question or where the standing of each plaintiff involves nuances in the conduct affecting each plaintiff. Generally, this occurs in securities cases where plaintiffs brought claims related to securities they did not purchase on the theory that proposed class members had purchased them and would establish standing once joined.

West Virginia and South Dakota have antitrust statutes that courts have held to be ambiguous as to whether the conspiracy or the conduct must be alleged to have been within the state. S.D. Codified Laws § 37-1-3.1 provides that a conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce any part of which is within this state is unlawful. W. Va. Code § 47-18-3 is a similar provision. In light of this potential ambiguity, courts hold that the states intended to cover as broad a range of activities as possible and that the statutes require allegations of some conduct within the state.

The deceptive practice, whether a representation or an omission, must be likely to mislead a reasonable consumer acting reasonably under the circumstances. Although the New York statute is based upon § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, New York has chosen not to include unfair competition or unfair practices in its consumer protection statute, language that bespeaks a significantly broader reach. Accordingly, anticompetitive conduct that is not premised on consumer deception is not within the ambit of the statute because the statute seeks to secure an honest market place where trust, and not deception, prevails. An antitrust violation may violate N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349, but only if it is deceptive.

Like the New York consumer protection statute, N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349(a), the North Carolina consumer protection statute is based upon § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. However, unlike the New York statute, the North Carolina law contains a provision prohibiting "unfair" practices and thus fully mirrors § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. Because of that similarity, decisions construing the Federal Trade Commission Act are appropriate guidance. It is an accepted tenet of basic antitrust law that § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act sweeps within its prohibitory scope conduct also condemned by § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Although the requirements to plead unjust enrichment vary by state, almost all states at minimum require plaintiffs to allege that they conferred a benefit or enrichment upon defendant and that it would be inequitable or unjust for defendant to accept and retain the benefit. In contemporary United States common law, restitution based upon unjust enrichment takes at least two forms; it may be "autonomous" or "parasitic." Parasitic claims are where the unjust enrichment is based upon a predicate wrong, such as a tort, breach of contract or other wrongful conduct such as an antitrust violation. Conversely, unjust enrichment may provide an independent ground for restitution, and this is known as autonomous restitution. Autonomous claims in an area regulated by an independent body of law are more problematic than parasitic claims because the premise for such a claim must be that, even if the defendants' conduct is blameless under the substantive requirements of federal and state antitrust statutes and state consumer protection statutes, the plaintiffs nevertheless can still obtain restitution.

As to parasitic unjust enrichment claims premised on a violation of federal law, it is beyond peradventure that indirect purchasers may not employ unjust enrichment to skirt the limitation on recovery imposed by Illinois Brick. Moreover, there is no clearly established federal common law of restitution for a federal antitrust violation. Therefore, absent a basis for restitution in federal law both direct and indirect purchasers may not bring unjust enrichment claims premised solely on a violation of federal law.

Indirect purchaser antitrust plaintiffs face a further limitation. They may not recover restitution in states and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico that follow the rule of Illinois Brick, including Illinois, Virginia, Montana, Kentucky, Maryland, and Oklahoma. In Illinois, only the Illinois state attorney general may bring a class action on behalf of indirect purchasers under 740 Ill. Comp. Stat. 10/7(2). Many states have not expressly adopted or rejected Illinois Brick, but they have antitrust laws that are harmonized with federal law or overwhelmingly look to federal law for guidance. Therefore, any state that has not expressly passed Illinois Brick repealer legislation or interpreted its law in such a way as to override the rule of Illinois Brick is presumed to have decided to follow federal law, including the Illinois Brick limitation on indirect purchaser claims.

When a fragmented Supreme Court decides a case and no single rationale explaining the result enjoys the assent of five Justices, the holding of the Court may be viewed as that position taken by those Members who concurred in the judgments on the narrowest grounds. This rule is not a carte blanche; it only applies in instances where one opinion can meaningfully be regarded as narrower than another; that is to say, only when that narrow opinion is the common denominator representing the position approved by at least five justices.

740 ILCS 10/7(2) provides a procedure that is so bound up with the state-created right or remedy that it defines the scope of that substantive right or remedy. Therefore, applying the federal rule allowing class actions to override the process of allowing individual indirect purchaser actions but actions only by the Illinois Attorney General for a class of indirect purchasers would be an application of a federal rule that effectively abridges, enlarges, or modifies a state-created right or remedy and is disallowed. Because the indirect purchaser restrictions of the Illinois law are intertwined with the underlying substantive right, application of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 would abridge, enlarge or modify Illinois' substantive rights, and therefore Illinois' restrictions on indirect purchaser actions must be applied in federal court.

It is a general principle of corporate law deeply ingrained in our economic and legal systems that a parent corporation is not liable for the acts of its subsidiaries. But there is an equally fundamental principle of corporate law, applicable to the parent-subsidiary relationship as well as generally, that the corporate veil may be pierced and the shareholder held liable for the corporation's conduct when, inter alia, the corporate form would otherwise be misused to accomplish certain wrongful purposes.

In Delaware, a court can pierce the corporate veil of an entity where there is fraud or where a subsidiary is in fact a mere instrumentality or alter ego of its owner. Likewise, in New York, piercing the corporate veil requires a showing that: (1) the owners exercised complete domination of the corporation in respect to the transaction attacked; and (2) that such domination was used to commit a fraud or wrong against the plaintiff which resulted in plaintiff's injury. In determining whether to pierce the corporate veil in either state, courts consider allegations of disregarding corporate formalities, siphoning or intermingling of funds, inadequate capitalization, or that the corporation is a mere sham acting for the shareholder, among others.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Piercing the Corporate Veil > Alter Ego > Fraud & Misrepresentation

HN35[] Alter Ego, Fraud & Misrepresentation

In neither New York nor Delaware may liability be imposed merely based on a parent's ownership of a controlling interest in its subsidiary. The separate corporate existences of parent and subsidiary will not be set aside merely on a showing of common management of the two entities nor on a showing that the parent owned all the stock of the subsidiary. Indeed, a showing that a fraud would be perpetrated through misuse of the corporate form generally is required in both states. In both states, the corporation's separate identity is generally respected and the proponent of disregarding a corporation's separate identity bears a heavy burden.

[*396] Opinion & Order

LORETTA A. PRESKA, Chief United States District Judge:

Before the Court is a joint motion to dismiss a class-action [17] complaint alleging federal and state antitrust violations by major record labels in the distribution of music over the Internet. Defendants include Bertelsmann, Inc.; Sony BMG Music Entertainment; Sony Corporation of America; Capitol Records, Inc. d/b/a EMI Music North America; EMI Group North America, Inc.; Capitol-EMI Music, Inc.; Virgin Records America, Inc.; Time Warner Inc.; UMG Recordings, Inc.; and Warner Music Group Corp. [1] Several individual plaintiffs seek to represent a putative nationwide class of digital music purchasers. The operative complaint before the Court is the Third Consolidated Amended Complaint ("TCAC"), filed June 2, 2010. The Court's previous judgment dismissing the Second Consolidated Amended Complaint was vacated, and the case returned on remand from the Court of Appeals. Starr v. Sony BMG Music Entm't, 592 F.3d 314, 327 (2d Cir. 2010), cert. denied, 131 S. Ct. 901, 178 L. Ed. 2d 803 (2011).

[1] Because Bertelsmann, Inc., Sony Corporation of America, and Time Warner, Inc., are parent companies of other named defendants, the analysis proceeds somewhat differently for these three defendants. Therefore, the Court will refer to the named entities other than the three parent companies [18] as "Defendants," and the parent company defendants will be called the "Parent Companies" with their arguments analyzed separately.

I. BACKGROUND

Because the allegations in the TCAC are, with certain exceptions, the same as those previously considered in published opinions both here and in the Court of Appeals, [2] the Court assumes familiarity [*397] with the factual allegations in the TCAC. Starr, 592 F.3d at 317-22; In re Digital Music Antitrust Litig., 592 F. Supp. 2d 435, 437-39 (S.D.N.Y. 2008). To situate this discussion, a summary of the alleged facts follows. The Court assumes that all nonconclusory facts alleged are true for present purposes. Starr, 592 F.3d at 317 & n.1.

Defendants produce, license, and distribute music sold online ("Internet Music") and on compact discs ("CDs"). They control eighty percent of the market for digital music in the United States. Defendants Bertlesmann, Inc., Warner Music Group Corp., and EMI launched an online service called MusicNet, a joint venture entity owned and controlled by various Defendants. (TCAC ¶ 67.) Defendants UMG and Sony Corporation of America launched a similar online music service called Duet, later renamed pressplay. (TCAC ¶ 67.) It too was a joint venture. All Defendants signed distribution agreements with MusicNet and pressplay. (TCAC ¶ 67.) These joint ventures, along with the Recording Industry Association of America, provided a forum for Defendants to exchange pricing information, terms of sale, and use restrictions. (TCAC ¶¶ 34, 67-68, 87-88.)

Plaintiffs allege that Defendants conspired to fix the price, terms of sale, and restrictions on the use of Internet Music through these joint ventures. (TCAC ¶¶ 72, 98.) Defendants used these joint ventures as a forum to discuss their desire to engage in the alleged conduct, to share licensing [20] terms and pricing information, and to police the alleged agreements, among other things. (TCAC ¶¶ 67-68, 98.) Through the use of Most Favored Nation ("MFN") clauses in Defendants' licensing agreements, a licensor would receive at least equivalent licensing terms as another licensor. (TCAC ¶¶ 92, 99.) The alleged effect of the MFN agreements was to set a wholesale price floor for Internet Music of seventy cents per song. (TCAC ¶¶ 99-100.) Plaintiffs allege that despite the fact that the price of distributing Internet Music fell to essentially zero, the wholesale price of Internet Music increased uniformly. (TCAC ¶¶ 99-100.) This was due in material part to Defendants' enforcement of the MFN clauses, which Defendants attempted to hide. (TCAC ¶¶ 93, 99-100.) In addition, Defendants included digital rights management ("DRM"), which restricted transfer of songs to portable players, among other things. (TCAC ¶ 76.) Plaintiffs allege that but for the conspiracy, a defendant may have removed DRM to gain market share. (TCAC ¶ 76.) Allegedly, both the wholesale price and DRM included with Defendants' music was fixed among Defendants because of Defendants' collusion, even when they sold to unaffiliated [21] retailers. (TCAC ¶ 69.)

The core allegation is that Defendants' behavior sustained high prices for Internet Music, which made it less attractive to consumers and hampered the growth of Internet Music services generally. (TCAC ¶¶ 81-82.) Plaintiffs point to eMusic, an independent competitor in the online music business, as an example of competitive pricing. It is the second-largest online retailer and charges - at retail - less than half of Defendants' wholesale price, and Defendants refuse to do business with it. (TCAC ¶¶ 103-104.) Plaintiffs allege that Defendants' motive to conspire was to support their ability to charge supracompetitive prices for CDs; they could do so because Internet Music was priced, through the alleged conspiracy, so as to be an unattractive or economically uncompetitive substitute. (TCAC ¶ 83.)

[*398] The procedural history of this case is also well-described in the earlier opinions in this case. E.g., Starr, 592 F.3d at 320-21. The Court of Appeals remanded for further proceedings consistent with its opinion, and Defendants have again moved to dismiss the action, relying mainly on arguments made but not addressed in their original motion to dismiss.

[2] There are two salient exceptions. The first is an amendment to paragraph 99, which was proposed but denied as futile in the now-vacated order dismissing the complaint. The TCAC contains the amended language, which was considered by the Court of Appeals in its analysis, Starr, 592 F.3d at 323 n.3, and is considered here. The second exception is that the TCAC contains paragraphs 146-153, which were not included in the Second Consolidated Amended Complaint. Those paragraphs allege violations of the Illinois and New York [19] state antitrust laws, and they are discussed in this opinion.

In [22] evaluating this motion, the Court first will discuss the Sherman Act claims, beginning with a brief discussion of the Twombly analysis by the Court of Appeals. Then the Court will turn to the arguments made regarding the Sherman Act claims but not addressed in the original motion to dismiss and renewed in the motion to dismiss sub judice. Next, the Court will analyze Defendants' arguments relating to the state claims, aside from the Twombly-related argument, made in the original motion to dismiss but not addressed previously. The Court will also discuss new arguments raised in relation to newly added claims under the Illinois and New York antitrust laws. Following the state-law discussion, the Court will analyze Defendants' motion to dismiss claims against the Parent Companies. Finally, the Court will discuss the associated motion to strike portions of the TCAC. Before delving into these matters, the Court sets out the applicable legal standard.

A. Legal Standard for Motions to Dismiss

HN1[] In assessing a motion to dismiss, the Court must accept all non-conclusory factual allegations as true and draw all reasonable inferences in the plaintiff's favor. Goldstein v. Pataki, 516 F.3d 50, 56 (2d Cir. 2008) [23] (internal quotation marks omitted). To survive such a motion, "a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). A complaint that offers "labels and conclusions" or "a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555. The complaint must allege "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Id. "Where a complaint pleads facts that are 'merely consistent with' a defendant's liability, it 'stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility of entitlement to relief.'" Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949 (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557) (internal quotation marks omitted). In other words, "where the well-pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct," dismissal is appropriate. Id. at 1950. "Factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level, on the assumption that all the allegations in the complaint are true (even if doubtful in fact)." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555 [24] (citations omitted).

HN2[] In analyzing a motion to dismiss a claim under section 1 of the Sherman Act, the Court is mindful that a plaintiff needs to allege only "enough factual matter . . . to suggest that an agreement was made," id. at 556, but he need not, unlike in the summary judgment context, "rule out the possibility that the defendants were acting independently," id. at 554. "Asking for plausible grounds to infer an agreement does not impose a probability requirement at the pleading stage; it simply calls for enough fact to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of an illegal agreement." Id. at 556. "Thus, an allegation of parallel conduct coupled with only a bare assertion of conspiracy [*399] is not sufficient to state a Section 1 claim." Starr, 592 F.3d at 322. "Instead, allegations of parallel conduct 'must be placed in a context that raises a suggestion of a preceding agreement, not merely parallel conduct that could just as well be independent action.'" Id. (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557).

B. Pleading of Sherman Act Claims

In its opinion vacating the judgment entered in this case, the Court of Appeals concluded that the Second Consolidated Amended Complaint [25] "alleges specific facts sufficient to plausibly suggest that the parallel conduct alleged was the result of an agreement among the defendants." Id. at 323. The TCAC being the same in material part, Defendants do not argue their motion to dismiss on Twombly grounds. In light of the Court of Appeals clarification of the importance of context in claims under section 1 of the Sherman Act and its conclusion that the allegations above suffice, Plaintiffs' section 1 claims may proceed because the TCAC meets Twombly's pleading standards. Id. at 323-24.

C. Other Sherman Act Arguments

In their original motion to dismiss, Defendants made two arguments with respect to the federal claims that were not addressed. First, Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' claims through February 1, 2005, were settled and released because of a state class action settlement in Ottinger v. EMI Music Distrib., Civ. Action No. 24885-II (Tenn. Cir. Ct.). (Declaration of Helena Almeida in Support of Defendants' Motion to Dismiss dated July 30, 2007 ("Almeida Decl."), Ex. E.) Second, Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' claims involving CDs cannot survive because the TCAC does not state a claim of anticompetitive conduct involving [26] CDs, which deprives Plaintiffs of antitrust standing for CD purchases. The Court considers these arguments in this section.

1. Settlement and Release

Defendants argue that the Ottinger case involved an alleged conspiracy that Defendants conspired to elevate the price of CDs despite cost reductions. Because the Ottinger settlement released all claims that the settlement class "alleged or could have alleged" (Defendants' October 2007 Reply Brief ("Def. 2007 Reply Br.") at 11) based on the allegations in that case, the argument is that the instant claims, which Defendants argue could have been alleged, were released.

Defendants correctly note that HN3[] "[a] court may release not only those claims alleged in the complaint and before the court, but also claims which could have been alleged . . . in connection with any matter or fact set forth or referred to in the complaint." Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Visa, 396 F.3d 96, 107 n.13 (2d Cir. 2005) (quoting In re Corrugated Container Antitrust Litig., 643 F.2d 195, 221 (5th Cir. 1981)) (internal quotation marks omitted). However, they fail to appreciate that a release applies only "as long as the released conduct arises out of the 'identical factual [27] predicate' as the settled conduct." Id. at 107. In other words, a settlement may be framed to prevent future suits "depending on the very same set of facts," Nat'l Super Spuds, Inc. v. N.Y. Mercantile Exch., 660 F.2d 9, 18 n.7 (2d Cir. 1981), but future claims are barred only "where there is a realistic identity of issues" between the former and future cases and "where the relationship between the suits is at the time of the class action foreseeably obvious to notified class members." TBK Partners, Ltd. v. W. Union Corp., 675 F.2d 456, 461 (2d Cir. 1982).

Here, the claims do not arise out of the "identical factual predicate" as the Ottinger claims. Ottinger involved allegations that record-company defendants used various schemes to maintain higher CD profit [*400] margins than they could achieve for vinyl records and cassette tapes, despite cost reductions in the price of CD production. (Almeida Decl. Ex. G ¶ 1.) The alleged schemes had to do with the ways CDs were priced at wholesale and marketed to retailers, and the schemes involved allegations of direct price agreements and price signaling for CDs. (Id. ¶ 2.) The allegations simply have nothing to do with Internet Music, the interplay [28] between the online music market and the CD market, or the related allegations here. This complaint involves allegations that the market for online music downloads was priced at set, artificially high levels. It involves a different factual predicate from the Ottinger complaint. That this complaint, like the complaint in Ottinger, also alleges anticompetitive effects in the CD market or a motive to maintain higher CD prices is insufficient; a release bars future suits that depend on "the very same set of facts." Nat'l Super Spuds, 660 F.2d at 18 n.7; see Wal-Mart Stores, 396 F.3d at 107. The source of the alleged antitrust conspiracy here is wholly different from the source of the alleged antitrust conspiracy in Ottinger. Thus, the Ottinger release does not bar these claims. [3]

2. Standing to Assert CD-Purchaser Claims

Defendants next argue that the TCAC does not allege [29] antitrust injury to purchasers of CDs but, rather, only to Internet Music purchasers. This is an argument about antitrust standing. Defendants say that the TCAC is insufficient to confer standing on a CD purchaser class because it does not allege that any CD purchaser would have bought Internet Music instead of CDs absent the alleged conspiracy. They also argue that the complaint does not specify how restricting Internet Music affected the price of CDs. In sum, Defendants' argument is that the CD-purchaser plaintiffs may not recover for an antitrust injury in a separate market.

HN4[] In addition to Article III standing, "an antitrust plaintiff must also establish antitrust standing." In re DDAVP Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., 585 F.3d 677, 688 (2d Cir. 2009). Antitrust standing is analyzed using two metrics. First, a plaintiff must demonstrate "antitrust injury, which is 'injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful.'" Id. (quoting Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo

[3] Even if the Ottinger release were to bar these claims, it would be effective only for claims through September 29, 2003. The release by its terms only applies to members of the Ottinger class, which includes claims arising from CD purchases from June 1, 1991 to September 23, 2003. (Almeida Decl. Ex. E, §§ 1.5, 1.16, 1.19.)

Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977)). Second, a plaintiff must show that he is a proper plaintiff in light of the factors discussed in Associated General Contractors v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 540-45, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983). [30] These include:

> (1) the directness or indirectness of the asserted injury; (2) the existence of an identifiable class of persons whose self-interest would normally motivate them to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement; (3) the speculativeness of the alleged injury; and (4) the difficulty of identifying damages and apportioning them among direct and indirect victims so as to avoid duplicative recoveries.

In re DDAVP, 585 F.3d at 688. In addition, the existence of an improper motive is a relevant consideration, but it "is not a panacea that will enable any complaint to withstand a motion to dismiss." Associated Gen., 459 U.S. at 537; [*401] Balaklaw v. Lovell, 14 F.3d 793, 797 n.9 (2d Cir. 1994).

HN5[] Ultimately, antitrust standing is about the question of "which persons have sustained injuries too remote [from an antitrust violation] to give them standing to sue." Blue Shield of Va. v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 476, 102 S. Ct. 2540, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149 (1982) (alteration and emphasis in original). "Just as in common-law tort and contract litigation, concepts such as 'foreseeability and proximate cause, directness of injury, certainty of damages, and privity of contract' circumscribe a party's right to recovery, so in antitrust [31] actions 'the plaintiff's harm, the alleged wrongdoing by the defendants, and the relationship between them,' can limit the right to sue." Daniel v. Am. Bd. of Emergency Med., 428 F.3d 408, 437 (2d Cir. 2005) (quoting Associated Gen., 459 U.S. at 532-33, 535-36); Reading Int'l, Inc. v. Oaktree Capital Mgmt. LLC, 317 F. Supp. 2d 301, 316 n.8 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) ("In considering the question of antitrust standing, the Supreme Court has likened the analysis to that of proximate cause.").

As to the first part of the analysis, there is little doubt that the CD-purchaser plaintiffs' alleged injury is an antitrust injury. The CD-purchaser plaintiffs allege that they bought Defendants' CDs but were HN6[] "forced to pay supra-competitive prices as a result of the defendants' anticompetitive conduct. Such an injury plainly is 'of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent.'" In re DDAVP, 585 F.3d at 688 (quoting Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 489).

The second part of the analysis is less straightforward, however. Defendants argue that there are several infirmities in the CD-purchaser plaintiffs' antitrust standing: (1) the allegedly unlawful conduct has only to do with Internet Music; (2) no plaintiff [32] alleges he would have bought Internet Music instead of CDs but for the allegedly unlawful conduct; and (3) there is no alleged connection between the allegedly unlawful conduct and its effect on the CD market. Plaintiffs counter that "injuries to different groups of consumers of related products can be inflicted by a single antitrust conspiracy." (Plaintiffs' September 2007 Opposition Memorandum ("Pl. 2007 Opp.") at 21.) Neither side cites a case directly on point.

The Court begins by laying out the allegations relevant to the CD market in the TCAC. It states:

- "Internet Music and CDs are viewed as substitutes by both record labels and consumers as evidenced by the inverse relationship between sales of CDs and Internet Music." (TCAC ¶ 41.)
- "Defendants' collusion in setting high prices for Internet Music . . . made Internet Music less attractive to consumers, allowing Defendants to sell CDs at supracompetitive prices." (TCAC ¶ 82.)
- "Acting alone, no defendant could sustain the supracompetitive prices prevailing in the CD market. This inability to charge high CD prices, as market factors made consumer demand for CDs more elastic over time at the prices charged by Defendants during the [33] conspiracy, gave Defendants motive to conspire." (TCAC ¶ 83.)
- "In consequence, Defendants' conspiracy to restrain the availability and distribution of Internet Music, and to fix and maintain the price of Internet Music, has protected the sale of CDs and enables Defendants to maintain CD prices at supracompetitive levels." (TCAC ¶ 126.)

Otherwise, the TCAC has substantially similar allegations in a few other paragraphs, [*402] but no allegations that add materially to these.

The allegations in the TCAC do not suffice to establish the antitrust standing of CD purchasers. Although Plaintiffs argue that the "supracompetitive price that CD purchasers pay for CDs 'flows from' Defendants' anticompetitive conduct" (id. at 22), this argument is nothing more than ipse dixit. The allegations either (1) are insufficient to allege antitrust standing because they do not demonstrate an adequate connection between the alleged misconduct and an effect on the CD market or (2) do not allege cognizable antitrust standing because the alleged injury is too attenuated from the source of the alleged misconduct.

As to the first point, all of the allegations of misconduct in the TCAC involve fixing prices of Internet [34] Music. Without saying more than that CDs and Internet Music are "substitutes," the TCAC goes on to assert that Defendants' conduct in the Internet Music market "allow[ed] Defendants to sell CDs at supracompetitive prices." (TCAC ¶¶ 41, 82.) The TCAC contains no nonconclusory allegations about how the pricing of Internet Music affected CD pricing, how the CD market operated generally, what considerations affected CD pricing, or any kind of tie - contractual, historical, or correlative, for example - between CD pricing and Internet Music pricing. HN7[] Absent a "physical and economic nexus between the alleged violation and the harm to the plaintiff," antitrust standing is difficult to come by. See Blue Shield, 457 U.S. at 478; see also Associated Gen., 459 U.S. at 545-46.

Allegations of this type of linkage are important. The cases Plaintiffs rely upon have a much closer link between the allegedly unlawful conduct and the antitrust standing of the plaintiff. For example, in Loeb Industries, Inc. v. Sumitomo Corp., defendants allegedly fixed prices on the copper futures market, but claims by purchasers of physical copper proceeded because "the price of physical copper . . . is directly linked [35] to the . . . price for copper futures." 306 F.3d 469, 476 (7th Cir. 2002). In part, that was due to the fact that "dealers in all forms of physical copper quote prices based on rigid formulas related to [copper futures]." Id. Here, there is no alleged "direct link" between Internet Music pricing and CD pricing. [4] Likewise, In re Linerboard Antitrust Litigation involved a situation where vertically integrated producers restricted production of linerboard, which was a component of the end product, corrugated packaging. 305 F.3d 145, 159 (3d Cir. 2002). Plaintiffs, buyers of corrugated materials, had antitrust standing because restricting linerboard output necessarily increased the price of the corrugated packaging, as it was a required component. See id. at 148-49, 159-60. In this case, there is no necessary link alleged between the price of Internet Music, the market where the alleged misconduct occurred, and the price of CDs, which could be affected by totally distinct market forces or costs of production. Moreover, the TCAC does not explain any alleged link. Similarly, in Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, patients of psychologists who were allegedly damaged by conspiracy between [36] psychiatrists and health insurers had standing because [*403] the patients' injury was "inextricably intertwined" with the psychologists' injury. 457 U.S. at 479, 482-84. This case created a limited exception to the rule that an antitrust claim must be asserted by a market participant; it applies when injuries are "inextricably intertwined" with a market participant's. Am. Ad Mgmt., Inc. v. Gen. Tel. Co. of Ca., 190 F.3d 1051, 1057 n.5 (9th Cir. 1999). Blue Shield is inapposite because here, both CD purchasers and Internet Music purchasers allegedly were harmed by higher prices of CDs and Internet Music, respectively, and CD purchasers' alleged injury is thus distinct from and not intertwined with Internet Music purchasers' injury. Finally, Plaintiffs allude to Crimpers Promotions Inc. v. Home Box Office, Inc., 724 F.2d 290 (2d Cir. 1983), as supporting authority. That case involved an alleged conspiracy to boycott a trade show that allowed television producers to sell programming directly to cable television systems, rather than having producers go through middlemen who packaged programming together and sold it to the cable systems. Id. at 294. Crimpers involved conduct directly affecting [37] the group defendants allegedly conspired to harm. 724 F.2d at 294. Here, the conduct was directed at an entirely separate group of plaintiffs, and any effect on CD purchasers was at best indirect.

Although in Crimpers and in this case, the complaints alleged a motive of the conspiracy to harm the plaintiffs, intent alone is insufficient. Associated Gen., 459 U.S. at 537; see Blue Shield, 457 U.S. at 479 (stating that antitrust liability "is not a question of the specific intent of the conspirators"). Yet Plaintiffs appear to rely on only the "motive, purpose and intended effect of the conspiracy" (Pl. 2007 Opp. at 21) to support their CD-related claims. The thrust of the TCAC is that Defendants were motivated [38] to engage in this conspiracy in order to continue selling CDs at higher prices, but the TCAC goes no further. (E.g., TCAC ¶¶ 3, 41, 126.) At best, it could be read to say that Defendants' motivation supported some unstated, preexisting, and parallel conspiracy to keep CD prices high. (TCAC ¶ 126 (stating that object of conspiracy was to "maintain CD prices at supracompetitive levels" (emphasis added)).) But such an allegation does not exist in the TCAC, and there is nothing in the TCAC to show how any conduct was directed at the CD market or how other conduct affected the CD market beyond conclusory allegations that Defendants could continue selling CDs at higher prices. The CD-purchaser plaintiffs do not have antitrust standing. Associated Gen., 459 U.S. at 540, 545.

Were the above not enough, the TCAC also alleges an injury that is too attenuated from the source of the alleged misconduct. The TCAC alleges that Defendants' price-fixing in the Internet Music market caused prices of Internet Music to be supracompetitive. (TCAC ¶¶ 98-99, 103, 105, 126.) This allegation is sufficient. As a side-effect, and with no conduct directed at the CD market, the TCAC asserts that the Internet Music [39] price-fixing scheme allowed Defendants to continue selling CDs at supracompetitive prices. (TCAC ¶ 126.) This allegation is not sufficient. Not only is there no nonconclusory connection alleged between the Internet Music and CD markets, but the CD market could have been affected by supply and demand, cost of production, or other economic factors wholly unrelated to Internet Music. (See, e.g., TCAC ¶ 71 (discussing factors involved in CD pricing that are absent in Internet Music distribution).) Absent allegations of some conduct directed at the CD market or a direct linkage between the two markets, an allegation of wrongdoing in the Internet Music market bears little connection to the CD market. Cf. Associated Gen., 459 U.S. at 542-43 [*404] (listing independent factors that could have been at play). This alleged injury is simply too attenuated from the source of the alleged malfeasance. See id.; see also Am. Ad Mgmt., 190 F.3d at 1057 (HN8[] "Antitrust injury requires the plaintiff to have suffered its injury in the market where competition is being restrained."); Automated Salvage Transp., Inc. v. Wheelabrator Envtl. Sys., Inc., 155 F.3d 59, 79 (2d Cir. 1998) (similar).

Indeed, looking to the antitrust [40] standing factors, the CD-purchaser plaintiffs' standing fails in several regards. See In re DDAVP, 585 F.3d at 688. First, the cause of any injury to CD purchasers is from an indirect source; the direct cause of any injury is from machinations in the Internet Music market. Associated Gen., 459 U.S. at 540. Second, there is a class of persons - those who purchased Internet Music directly - whose self-interest would motivate them to vindicate the public interest. Id. at 542. Third, allowing CD purchasers to bring an antitrust suit involves more speculative injuries than those alleged to Internet Music purchasers, especially in light of the dearth of allegations about the linkage between the CD market and the Internet Music market, as explained above. Id. at 542-43. Because the CD market is separate, as the Court explains infra, "the alleged effects on the [CD market] may have been produced by independent factors." Id. at 542. And fourth, there is strong potential for duplicative recoveries here because the CD purchasers' claims are hard to disentangle from the Internet Music purchasers' claims, and the injury they seek to remedy arises from the same alleged misconduct. Id. at 544-45. [41] Given these additional factors, the CD-purchaser plaintiffs are not the proper plaintiffs to bring this action. The most they allege is malfeasance in the Internet Music market with no hard link to the CD market. [5]

Plaintiffs appear to argue that no distinction between the CD market and the Internet Music market is warranted. (Pl. 2007 Opp. at 21-22.) Although Plaintiffs have structured their complaint to define the relevant market as the market for music generally, their allegations involve only conduct related to the Internet Music market and not the CD market. Moreover, Plaintiffs themselves divide the market by referring to two separate classes of purchasers: Internet Music purchasers and CD purchasers. (TCAC ¶¶ 44-45.) The TCAC itself explains [42] how Internet Music differs from CDs. For example, Internet Music is "well below CD-quality" and "further hampered by DRM." (TCAC ¶ 74.) In addition, CD pricing includes costs for many features that distinguish the product: it includes costs for producing the discs, cases, packaging, antishoplifting mechanisms, shipping, distribution, and so forth. (TCAC ¶ 71.) Most tellingly, the TCAC alleges that while Internet Music "has the potential to transform the market" by increasing selection (TCAC ¶ 70), Defendants' conduct hampered its development and "forestalled the time by which Internet Music would emerge as a reasonable consumer substitute for CDs." (TCAC ¶ 79.) Thus, the TCAC acknowledges that Internet Music is not the same as or a substitute for CDs. Even Plaintiffs' memorandum implicitly understands that CDs and Internet Music are different; it calls them "related products." (Pl. 2007 [*405] Opp. at 21.) Finally, it takes no special training to understand that a CD is a physical product, while Internet Music is not. These attributes could be meaningful to one set of consumers over another.

[5] It is illustrative that the Court of Appeals hardly mentioned CDs in its opinion vacating this Court's earlier judgment dismissing the case. Its explanation for why the complaint survives focused instead on the Internet Music-related allegations. Only once did the Court of Appeals mention CDs in that discussion, and that mention referenced the lack of any reduction in the price for Internet Music "as compared to CDs." Starr, 592 F.3d at 323.

To summarize: the TCAC does not allege a sufficient linkage between the CD market and the Internet [43] Music market to make its allegations regarding the CD market cognizable for antitrust purposes. In addition, the TCAC alleges an injury that is too attenuated from the source of the alleged malfeasance to confer antitrust standing on the CD-purchaser plaintiffs. The TCAC merely pairs an allegation of a motive with an allegation of consequential harm to assert antitrust standing. The Supreme Court held specifically that this approach, combined with the other factors present here, is insufficient to confer antitrust standing. Associated Gen., 459 U.S. at 545 ("We conclude, therefore, that [plaintiff]'s allegations of consequential harm resulting from a violation of the antitrust laws, although buttressed by an allegation of intent to harm [plaintiff], are insufficient as a matter of law."). This being the third amended complaint involving factual allegations that do not involve the CD-purchaser plaintiffs, these claims are DISMISSED with prejudice.

D. State-Law Claims

Defendants reassert three state-law-based arguments that were made but not addressed previously: they argue that (1) Plaintiffs lack standing to assert claims on behalf of residents of states not included in this action; [44] (2) Plaintiffs claims fail under state-law pleading requirements; and (3) Plaintiffs' unjust enrichment claims are barred under the Illinois Brick doctrine. Defendants also argue that Plaintiffs' newly added claims under Illinois and New York antitrust statutes are barred. The Court addresses these arguments in turn.

HN9[↑] In considering substantive state-law claims, the Court "follow[s] a decision of the highest state court 'unless there are very persuasive grounds for believing that the state's highest court no longer would adhere to it.'" In re New Motor Vehicles Can. Exp. Antitrust Litig. (In re NMV), 350 F. Supp. 2d 160, 169 (D. Me. 2004) (quoting 19 Charles Alan Wright, Arthur R. Miller & Edward H. Cooper, Federal Practice & Procedure § 4507). "In the absence of a ruling by the state's highest court, [the Court] consider[s] and may follow intermediate court rulings unless [it is] convinced that the state's highest court would decide otherwise." Id. However, the standing argument, which the Court addresses first, is a matter of federal law.

1. Standing on Behalf of Other State Residents

The named Plaintiffs are residents of California, Florida, Hawaii, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, [45] New Mexico, New York, and Oregon; they assert state-law claims under those states' laws. (TCAC ¶¶ 5-19, 44.) The TCAC also asserts state-law claims under the laws of fourteen other states and the District of Columbia, where no named plaintiffs reside. [6] (TCAC ¶ 44.) Because the TCAC does not identify class representatives from those fourteen other states and the District of Columbia, Defendants argue that Plaintiffs have no Article III standing to assert these claims. Plaintiffs disagree, saying that, in this case, class certification issues are "logically antecedent" to standing issues. See Ortiz v. Fibreboard Corp., 527 U.S. 815, 831, 119 S. Ct. 2295, 144 L. Ed. 2d 715 (1999).

[*406] HN10[↑] Although an Article III court must ordinarily assure itself that it has jurisdiction before proceeding, there is an exception to that rule when class certification issues are "logically antecedent to Article III concerns." Id. (internal quotation marks [46] omitted). The "logically antecedent" exception is not exactly defined. See Blessing v. Sirius XM Radio Inc., 756 F. Supp. 2d 445, 451 (S.D.N.Y. 2010). The cases indicate that where "class certification is the source of the potential standing problems," class certification should precede the standing inquiry. *In re Grand Theft Auto Video Game Litig., No. 06 MD 1739, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 78064, 2006 WL 3039993, at 2 [6] The TCAC amends its allegations to include violations of Illinois state law. (TCAC ¶¶ 146-149.) Illinois is a state from which no named plaintiff hails, making the total fourteen states, a one-state increase from the thirteen states identified in the parties' papers. (Pl. 2007 Opp. at 25 n.23.)

(S.D.N.Y. Oct. 25, 2006) (emphasis added); accord Blessing, 756 F. Supp. 2d at 451; see In re Buspirone Patent Litig., 185 F. Supp. 2d 363, 377 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) (deferring standing inquiry until after class certification decision because "these alleged problems of standing will not arise unless class certification is granted"). This is particularly true where, as here, Article III concerns "pertain to statutory standing." Salsitz v. Peltz, 210 F.R.D. 95, 97 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) (quoting Ortiz, 527 U.S. at 831). Cases holding otherwise have been situations where the standing of the named plaintiffs is in question or where the standing of each plaintiff involves nuances in the conduct affecting each plaintiff. E.g., Gunther v. Capital One, N.A., 703 F. Supp. 2d 264, 274 (E.D.N.Y. 2010) (named plaintiff had [47] no standing); In re Flonase Antitrust Litig., 692 F. Supp. 2d 524, 533-34 (E.D. Pa. 2010) (similar, declining to defer standing inquiry where defendant "attack[ed] the standing only of the named plaintiffs"); Marshall v. Milberg, LLP, No. 07 Civ. 6950, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 121208, 2009 WL 5177975, at *8 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 23, 2009) (nuanced conduct determines standing of each plaintiff); see Clark v. McDonald's Corp., 213 F.R.D. 198, 204 (D.N.J. 2003) ("Stated differently, the Ortiz exception . . . does not apply if the standing issue would exist regardless of whether the named plaintiff filed his claim alone or as part of a class."). Generally, this occurs in securities cases where "plaintiffs brought claims related to securities they did not purchase on the theory that proposed class members had purchased them and would establish standing once joined." Blessing, 756 F. Supp. 2d at 451 n.1.

The Court concludes that this case is one where class certification issues are the source of any standing problems, making it appropriate to defer consideration of standing until the class certification stage. Defendants do not dispute that the named Plaintiffs have standing to bring class actions in the states where they reside [48] and purchased Internet Music. See, e.g., In re Flonase, 692 F. Supp. 2d at 533-34. Thus, there is no risk that the named Plaintiffs are attempting to "to piggyback on the injuries of the unnamed class members." In re Grand Theft Auto, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 78064, 2006 WL 3039993, at *3 (quoting Payton v. Cnty. of Kane, 308 F.3d 673, 680 (7th Cir. 2002)). Plaintiffs claim that they, along with a class of many more individuals, were all injured in similar ways by the same conduct of the Defendants: price-fixing of Internet Music. This conduct is alleged to be the same no matter where any plaintiff resides. This is not a case where nuances in the facts of each alleged injury suggest that standing must be determined first. "The relevant question, therefore, is not whether the Named Plaintiffs have standing to sue Defendants - they most certainly do - but whether their injuries are sufficiently similar to those of the purported Class to justify the prosecution of a [larger] class action." Id.; accord Blessing, 756 F. Supp. 2d at 452; Sheet Metal Workers Nat'l Health Fund v. Amgen Inc., No. 07 Civ. 5295, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 62181, 2008 WL 3833577, at *9 (D.N.J. Aug. 13, 2008).

Therefore, class certification issues are the source of any standing [49] problems identified [*407] by Defendants at this stage of the litigation. Here, moreover, statutory standing is generally at issue with respect to the state claims. Salsitz, 210 F.R.D. at 97. Class certification is logically antecedent to standing in this case, and the Court will consider standing after class certification has been resolved. See Blessing, 756 F. Supp. 2d at 452; In re Buspirone, 185 F. Supp. 2d at 377.

2. State-Law Statutory Claims

Defendants make two basic arguments as to the pleading of state-law claims. First, they claim that the TCAC contains insufficient allegations of intrastate conduct in states requiring such allegations and that in states without such a requirement, a lack of an intrastate connection fails under the dormant Commerce Clause. Second, they say that Plaintiffs do not properly allege state-law consumer protection claims.

a. Intrastate Conduct Defendants argue that the TCAC insufficiently alleges state claims under the antitrust laws of the District of Columbia, Michigan, South Dakota, Tennessee, West Virginia, and Wisconsin, as well as the consumer protection laws of North Carolina. Defendants focus on a single common denominator: they say that because each [50] of those states' statutes require an allegation of conduct or substantial effects within the state, the absence of such an allegation is fatal. [7] In large part, Plaintiffs accept the proposition that these states require [7] In supplemental briefing, Defendants state that the state statutes "apply exclusively to intrastate - not interstate - conduct." (Def. Response to Pl. Supp. Auth. Dated June 10, 2010, at 5.) If this argument is that relief under these statutes is exclusive of any applicable federal relief for interstate activity, the Court rejects it. "[T]he Court does not interpret the statutes to be allegations of intrastate conduct or substantial effects within the states, but they say that the TCAC sufficiently pleads intrastate activity. [8]

Drawing all [52] inferences in favor of Plaintiffs, as the Court must, the TCAC's allegations are sufficient to satisfy state statutes requiring either allegations of intrastate conduct or substantial effects within the state. The TCAC alleges that Defendants "produced, licensed, distributed and/or sold" Internet Music in all of the listed states. (TCAC ¶¶ 39, 44, 57-59, 127, 136.) The TCAC alleges that Defendants' conduct was "in a continuous and uninterrupted flow of intrastate and interstate [*408] commerce throughout the United States." (TCAC ¶ 39.) Pleadings involving similar allegations of intrastate conduct along with conduct throughout the United States in nationwide class actions have survived motions to dismiss in the face of this very argument. E.g., In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 602 F. Supp. 2d 538, 581 (M.D. Pa. 2009) (similar pleading sufficient to allege intrastate conduct in Wisconsin); In re Intel Corp. Microprocessor Antitrust Litig., 496 F. Supp. 2d 404, 411-14 (D. Del. 2007) (District of Columbia); In re NMV, 350 F. Supp. 2d at 171-75 (South Dakota, Tennessee & West Virginia). The Court cautions that "[t]he allegations of the [TCAC] certainly could have been more fulsome [53] on this subject." [9] In re NMV, 350 F. Supp. 2d at 171. Nevertheless, the Court must construe the pleadings in a light favorable to Plaintiffs and thus considers allegations of nationwide sales and distribution on essentially the same terms in both intrastate and interstate commerce to be sufficient. See id. Defendants cite California v. Infineon Technologies AG, which they argue holds that similar language is insufficient to plead interstate activity. 531 F. Supp. 2d 1124, 1156 (N.D. Cal. 2007). That case, unlike this one and others similar to it, does not contain specific allegations of "intrastate" conduct along with allegations of conduct "throughout the United States" and therefore is not persuasive. See In re Chocolate, 602 F. Supp. 2d at 581 n.53 (coming to the same conclusion).

Defendants also argue that the antitrust laws of Arizona, Iowa, Minnesota, North Carolina, North Dakota, and Vermont have not been determined [54] to require an intrastate connection and that allegations that lack such a connection would violate the prohibition on state regulation that unduly burdens interstate commerce. See, e.g., Am. Trucking Ass'ns, Inc. v. Mich. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 545 U.S. 429, 433, 125 S. Ct. 2419, 162 L. Ed. 2d 407 (2005). The Court need not tarry here because, as discussed above, reading the TCAC in a light most favorable to Plaintiffs, it contains sufficient allegations of intrastate conduct or effects to pass Constitutional muster without having to construe the limitations on those state laws, if any. Moreover, without getting to the details of the jurisprudence, it suffices to say that HN13[] states may not regulate wholly interstate activity, but they are not limited to regulating wholly intrastate activity. See id.; Grand River Enters. Six Nations, Ltd. v. Pryor, 425 F.3d 158, 169-72 (2d Cir. 2005). The Court rejects Defendants' argument as to pleading under the laws of these six states. The motion as to the state-law antitrust claims is DENIED.

inapplicable where the anticompetitive conduct may have both interstate effects and, as concerns the particular state in question, intrastate impact." *Sheet Metal Workers, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 62181, 2008 WL 3833577, at 12 (collecting cases).

[8] Plaintiffs dispute that Michigan, West Virginia, and South Dakota require intrastate allegations. HN11[] The Michigan statute explicitly requires the unlawful restraint of trade to be in "a relevant market," Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 445.771, [51] which it defines as an area of competition, "all or any part of which is within the state," Id. § 445.772. Thus, the Court assumes that an allegation of intrastate conduct is required in Michigan. HN12[] West Virginia and South Dakota have statutes that courts have held to be ambiguous as to whether the conspiracy or the conduct must be alleged to have been within the state. S.D. Codified Laws § 37-1-3.1 ("[A] conspiracy . . . in restraint of trade or commerce any part of which is within this state is unlawful."); W. Va. Code § 47-18-3 (similar); see, e.g., In re NMV, 350 F. Supp. 2d at 172, 175 (holding statutes ambiguous). In light of this potential ambiguity, courts have held that the states intended to cover as broad a range of activities as possible and that the statutes require allegations of some conduct within the state. In re Intel Corp. Microprocessor Antitrust Litig., 496 F. Supp. 2d 404, 414 (D. Del. 2007); In re NMV, 350 F. Supp. 2d at 172, 175. Accordingly, Plaintiffs' objections to having to allege intrastate conduct or effects as to South Dakota and West Virginia are meritless, and the Court assumes that those states require an allegation of intrastate conduct.

[9] "It would have been helpful if the plaintiffs had added allegations of state-directed activity." In re NMV, 350 F. Supp. 2d at 169 n.2. For example, simply adding an allegation of conduct throughout the United States "and in each listed state" would be superior pleading.

b. Consumer Protection Laws

Defendants argue that the TCAC insufficiently pleads violations of the consumer protection laws of California, the District of Columbia, Florida, Kansas, Maine, Massachusetts, [55] Nebraska, New Mexico, New York, and North Carolina because the TCAC does not plead the requisite deceptive or fraudulent conduct under those statutes. [10] As a general matter, [*409] whether the TCAC contains allegations of deception or fraud affects the analysis of allegations under each state's consumer protection laws. Thus, the Court first addresses this issue.

The TCAC does not contain allegations of fraudulent or deceptive conduct. First of all, the TCAC does not purport to comply with Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b) and plead any allegation of fraud with particularity (and, in fairness, Defendants do not make this argument). The Court cannot find in the TCAC any cognizable allegations of fraud. Secondly, there is no deception alleged about the nature of the product Plaintiffs purchased or the terms and conditions under which it was [56] sold. This is not a case like In re Intel, where the product was secretly altered to underperform when joined with complementary technology offered by a competitor and where the defendant threatened and retaliated against customers who dealt with its competitor. 496 F. Supp. 2d at 418. Instead, Plaintiffs rely only on allegations that Defendants concealed a price fixing conspiracy in attempting to parry Defendants' argument. (Pl. 2007 Opp. at 34 n.39.) However, if "failure to disclose participation in a purported antitrust conspiracy were sufficient to state a consumer-protection claim, then any Section 1 antitrust case would automatically become a consumer-protection case. That is not the law." In re NMV, 350 F. Supp. 2d at 177 n.22; accord Leider v. Ralfe, 387 F. Supp. 2d 283, 295-96 (S.D.N.Y. 2005). Finally, although Plaintiffs assert that two other nationwide antitrust cases determined that allegations of price fixing or monopolization alone are enough to allege deceptive or unconscionable conduct, that is not true. In both of those cases, the courts undertook a detailed, fact-intensive analysis of the allegations to determine whether the complaints alleged such conduct. In re NMV, 350 F. Supp. 2d at 176-77, 196; [57] see In re Intel, 496 F. Supp. 2d at 418. Without such allegations here, the Court can do no more and disagrees with Plaintiffs' characterization of the law.

These preliminary matters determined, the Court proceeds to discuss state consumer protection law claims about which Defendants make arguments. It has been observed that different state consumer protection statutes contain "not only nuances, but differing standards of proof, procedure, substance, and remedies." Tylka v. Gerber Prods. Co., 178 F.R.D. 493, 499 (N.D. Ill. 1998). The Court thus discusses Defendants' arguments with respect to each state because there is no unifying theme.

i. California

Plaintiffs agree with Defendants that they do not bring HN14[] a claim under California Unfair Competition Law for damages because such a claim is not allowed. Korea Supply Co. v. Lockheed Martin Corp., 29 Cal. 4th 1134, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 29, 63 P.3d 937, 943 (Cal. 2003). Instead, Plaintiffs seek restitution, which is a permissible claim. Id. This statute "prohibits unfair competition, including unlawful, unfair, and fraudulent business acts. The [California law] covers a wide range of conduct." Id. Defendants make no other argument about why this claim should be dismissed. Their motion [58] is DENIED.

ii. Kansas

The parties agree that Plaintiffs do not assert a claim under the Kansas Consumer Protection Act, Kan. Stat. Ann. § 50-623 et seq., but, rather, under the "Restraint of Trade" statute, id. § 50-101 et seq. Defendants' motion is therefore DENIED as moot on this point.

iii. New Mexico

Defendants argue that the TCAC insufficiently alleges "unconscionable trade practices." N.M. Stat. Ann. § 57-12-2(E)(2). HN15[] [*410] "Federal courts have generally permitted claims under the New Mexico Unfair Practices

[10] Defendants offer no developed argument or legal authority for their claim that the TCAC is insufficient under the District of Columbia, Florida, Maine, Massachusetts, or Nebraska consumer protection laws. Absent Defendants' invocation of some legal basis to dismiss these claims, the Court will not do so. The claims under these states' laws may proceed.

Act in price fixing cases if the plaintiff alleges a gross disparity between the price paid for the product and the value received." *In re Aftermarket Filters Antitrust Litig., No. 08 Civ. 4883, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 104114, 2009 WL 3754041, at 9 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 5, 2009). Here, as in Aftermarket Filters, the TCAC's allegation that Plaintiffs paid supracompetitive prices for the music they purchased "is sufficient to allege gross disparity." Id. Defendants' motion is DENIED as to the New Mexico Unfair Practices Act.

iv. New York

Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' New York General Business Law § 349(a) claim is deficient because the TCAC does not allege any deceptive conduct. HN16[] The New York statute requires "a showing [59] that defendant is engaging in an act or practice that is deceptive or misleading in a material way and that plaintiff has been injured by reason thereof." Goshen v. Mut. Life Ins. Co. of N.Y., 98 N.Y.2d 314, 774 N.E.2d 1190, 1195, 746 N.Y.S.2d 858 (N.Y. 2002). "The deceptive practice, whether a representation or an omission, must be likely to mislead a reasonable consumer acting reasonably under the circumstances. Morrissey v. Nextel Partners, Inc., 72 A.D.3d 209, 895 N.Y.S.2d 580, 585 (N.Y. App. Div. 2010). Although the New York statute is based upon section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act ("FTCA"), "New York has chosen not to include 'unfair competition' or 'unfair' practices in its consumer protection statute, language that bespeaks a significantly broader reach." Leider, 387 F. Supp. 2d at 296. Accordingly, "anticompetitive conduct that is not premised on consumer deception is not within the ambit of the statute," id. at 295, because "[t]he statute seeks to secure an honest market place where trust, and not deception, prevails," Goshen, 774 N.E.2d at 1195 (internal quotation marks omitted). See also In re NMV, 350 F. Supp. 2d at 197 ("An antitrust violation may violate section 349, but only if it is deceptive.").

The TCAC [60] does not contain antitrust allegations that "were imbued with a degree of subterfuge," Leider, 387 F. Supp. 2d at 295, as has been the case when courts uphold section 349 claims based on anticompetitive conduct. As the Court found, the TCAC does not allege deception. Plaintiffs' reliance on cases like In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litigation (In re TFT I), 586 F. Supp. 2d 1109, 1127-28 (N.D. Cal. 2008), is unpersuasive in this case because those cases deal with an argument about whether defendants made misrepresentations to plaintiffs. Therefore, Defendants' motion to dismiss the section 349 claim is GRANTED.

v. North Carolina

Defendants argue that the North Carolina consumer protection statute prohibits "unfair or deceptive" commercial conduct, of which they argue the TCAC lacks allegations. Dalton v. Camp, 353 N.C. 647, 548 S.E.2d 704, 711 (N.C. 2001). Plaintiffs argue that the TCAC contains sufficient allegations of at least unfair conduct. Having already determined that there are no allegations of deceptive conduct in the TCAC, the Court goes on to consider whether the TCAC contains allegations of unfair conduct.

The most persuasive authority arising under North Carolina law holds that HN17[] price [61] fixing is an unfair practice under that state's law. See Marshall v. Miller, 302 N.C. 539, 276 S.E.2d 397, 403 (N.C. 1981) ("A practice is unfair when it offends established public policy as well as when the practice is immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous, or substantially injurious to consumers."); see also McDaniel v. Greensboro News Co., No. 81 Civ. 132, 1983 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10678, [*411] *1983 WL 1943, at 3 (M.D.N.C. Dec. 19, 1983) (holding that price-fixing efforts in combination with other dishonest conduct suffices under the North Carolina law). Moreover, HN18[] like the New York statute, the North Carolina law is based upon section 5 of the FTCA. ITCO Corp. v. Michelin Tire Corp., 722 F.2d 42, 48 (4th Cir. 1983). However, unlike the New York statute, the North Carolina law contains a provision prohibiting "unfair" practices and thus fully mirrors the FTCA. Id.; Leider, 387 F. Supp. 2d at 295. Because of that similarity, decisions construing the FTCA are appropriate guidance here. ITCO, 722 F.2d at 48. "[I]t is an accepted tenet of basic antitrust law that § 5 of the [FTCA] sweeps within its prohibitory scope conduct also condemned by § 1 of the Sherman Act." Id. Because the parties point to no reason to conclude that North [62] Carolina courts would rule otherwise, the Court finds that the TCAC suffices to state a claim under the North Carolina law for the same reasons it states a federal antitrust claim. Defendants' motion as to the North Carolina consumer protection law is DENIED.

3. State-Law Unjust Enrichment Claims

Plaintiffs assert claims for restitution based on unjust enrichment under various state laws, stating that "Defendants' financial benefits resulting from their unlawful and inequitable conduct are traceable to overpayments for Internet Music and CDs stemming from Defendants' combination and conspiracy to restrain trade in Internet Music." (TCAC ¶ 139.) Defendants argue that these claims are nothing more than claims for damages for the alleged antitrust violations, which are barred because they seek duplicative recovery and because state antitrust laws should be the exclusive remedy for such violations. Plaintiffs argue first that they are entitled to plead alternative theories of relief and second that unjust enrichment claims are independent of antitrust claims and proceed on their own merits.

HN19[] Although the requirements to plead unjust enrichment vary by state, "almost all states at minimum require [63] plaintiffs to allege that they conferred a benefit or enrichment upon defendant and that it would be inequitable or unjust for defendant to accept and retain the benefit." [11] In re Flonase, 692 F. Supp. 2d at 541; see also Golden Pac. Bancorp v. FDIC, 273 F.3d 509, 519 (2d Cir. 2001). "In contemporary United States common law, restitution based upon unjust enrichment takes at least two forms"; it may be "autonomous" or "parasitic." In re NMV, 350 F. Supp. 2d at 207-08. Parasitic claims are "[w]here the unjust enrichment is based upon a predicate wrong, such as a tort, breach of contract or other wrongful conduct such as an antitrust violation." In re Flonase, 692 F. Supp. 2d at 542 n.13. "Conversely, unjust enrichment may provide an independent ground for restitution, and this is known as 'autonomous' restitution." Id. Autonomous claims in an area "regulated by an independent body of law" are more problematic than parasitic claims because the "premise for such a claim must be that, even if the defendants' conduct is [*412] blameless under the substantive requirements of federal and state antitrust statutes and state consumer protection statutes, the plaintiffs nevertheless can still obtain [64] restitution." In re NMV, 350 F. Supp. 2d at 209. Plaintiffs do not clearly differentiate the type of restitution they seek. See id. at 209 n.86.

For purposes of this motion, the Court assumes that the TCAC alleges that Plaintiffs conferred a benefit (payment for music) on Defendants and that, at minimum, Defendants' conduct violated the federal antitrust laws.

The Court begins with the autonomous claims. On its own, HN21[] "unjust enrichment ordinarily does not furnish [65] a basis for liability where parties voluntarily have negotiated, entered into and fully performed their bargain . . . ." In re NMV, 350 F. Supp. 2d at 210. Here, Plaintiffs "paid their purchase prices and obtained their" products. Id. Plaintiffs do not seek rescission of the sales, and they do not "assert that purchasers failed to receive the benefit for which they bargained." Id. They only allege that they overpaid for the product for which they bargained. Although authority exists for the proposition that providing only "fair," not "any," consideration for a benefit defeats an autonomous unjust enrichment claim, see In re K-Dur Antitrust Litig., 338 F. Supp. 2d 517, 545-46 (D.N.J. 2004), this case does not involve a situation, as in In re K-Dur, where the plaintiffs alleged that "they failed to receive the benefit of their bargain." In re Intel, 496 F. Supp. 2d at 421 (rejecting unjust enrichment claims in an overpayment case). Indeed, Plaintiffs received the music they purchased. HN22[] Because autonomous restitution only exists in the absence of a violation of law, the Court will not inquire into the terms of the sale where, as here, a relatively comprehensive state and federal statutory [66] and common-law scheme exists to proscribe the conduct of which Plaintiffs complain. See id.; see also U.S. East Telecomms., Inc. v. U.S. West Commc'ns Servs., Inc., 38 F.3d 1289, 1299 (2d Cir. 1994); Ferguson v. Lion Holding, Inc., 312 F. Supp. 2d 484, 495 (S.D.N.Y. 2004). To do so would undermine that legal regime. In re NMV, 350 F. Supp. 2d at 209 (citing Steamfitters Local Union No. 420 Welfare Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 171 F.3d 912, 936-37 (3d Cir. 1999)). Therefore, Plaintiffs "cannot prevail on a claim of restitution based upon [autonomous] unjust enrichment." Id. at 210; see In re Flonase, 692 F. Supp. 2d at 542 n.13.

[11] The Court rejects Defendants' first argument: that unjust enrichment is disallowed where an adequate remedy at law exists. This argument is premature because HN20[] Plaintiffs may plead in the alternative. In re K-Dur Antitrust Litig., 338 F. Supp. 2d 517, 544 (D.N.J. 2004). Likewise, Defendants' argument that Plaintiffs' lack of privity with at least some defendants is groundless because, as Plaintiffs argue (without Defendants' refutation), no state at issue here has a privity requirement to plead unjust enrichment. Id.; see Pl. 2007 Mem. at 38 & n.47 (citing cases). Defendants' reliance on cases discussing incidental benefits is misplaced; this case may involve certain indirect benefits, but it does not involve incidental benefits.

Before proceeding to the "parasitic" claims, it must be noted that there are two types of plaintiffs here: direct purchasers and indirect purchasers. Direct purchasers are those who bought music directly from MusicNet or pressplay. (TCAC ¶ 44.) Indirect purchasers are those who bought music owned by Defendants from another source that is unrelated to Defendants. (Id.) Moreover, there are two categories of violations at issue: federal and state law.

HN23[] As to parasitic claims premised on a violation of federal law, it is beyond peradventure that indirect purchasers [67] may not employ unjust enrichment to skirt the limitation on recovery imposed by Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 735, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977). In re NMV, 350 F. Supp. 2d at 211. Moreover, there is no clearly established federal common law of restitution for a federal antitrust violation, and Plaintiffs do not suggest that the Court create one. Id. at 211 n.90. Therefore, absent a basis for restitution in federal law both direct and indirect purchasers may not bring unjust enrichment claims premised solely on a violation of federal law. Plaintiffs' claim for parasitic unjust enrichment is dismissed to the extent it is premised on a violation of federal law.

[*413] As to parasitic claims premised on a violation of state law, these claims boil down to an election of remedies, which the Court does "not have unlimited compass . . . to determine" because "the statute creating liability can override otherwise relevant common law restitution principles by permitting such relief, by prohibiting such relief or by limiting or enlarging the scope of restitutionary relief." Id. at 210. Plaintiffs have not sought an unjust enrichment remedy under Florida, Montana, North Carolina, or North Dakota law. The Court [68] has dismissed the New York state claims, so they cannot be the basis for a parasitic claim. Without further direction from the parties about which other states disallow restitutionary relief, the Court will allow all direct purchaser parasitic unjust enrichment claims to proceed in states not named because they merely provide a different form of remedy.

HN24[] Indirect purchaser Plaintiffs, however, face a further limitation: they may not recover restitution in states that follow the rule of Illinois Brick. See In re Flonase, 692 F. Supp. 2d at 544-45 (Illinois follows Illinois Brick for individual indirect purchasers); In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig. (In re TFT II), 599 F. Supp. 2d 1179, 1185-87 (N.D. Cal. 2009) (Virginia, Montana, and Puerto Rico); In re Microsoft Corp. Antitrust Litig., 241 F. Supp. 2d 563, 565-66 (D. Md. 2003) (Kentucky, Maryland, and Oklahoma); see also 740 Ill. Comp. Stat. 10/7(2) (stating that only the Illinois state attorney general may bring a class action on behalf of indirect purchasers under Illinois law). Many states have not expressly adopted or rejected Illinois Brick, but they have antitrust laws that are harmonized with federal law or "overwhelmingly" [69] look to federal law for guidance. In re Digital Music, 592 F. Supp. 2d at 448 & nn.20-21. Therefore, any state that has not expressly passed Illinois Brick repealer legislation or interpreted its law in such a way as to override the rule of Illinois Brick is presumed to have decided to follow federal law, including the Illinois Brick limitation on indirect purchaser claims. See, e.g., In re TFT II, 599 F. Supp. 2d at 1185-87; FTC v. Mylan Labs., Inc., 62 F. Supp. 2d 25, 43 (D.D.C. 1999). In addition to claims (if any) brought under the laws of Florida, Illinois, Montana, New York, North Carolina, and North Dakota, all parasitic claims premised on the state laws of states that follow Illinois Brick are DISMISSED. [12]

[12] Of the other states in which plaintiffs purportedly reside as pleaded in this action, HN25[] Arizona, California, the District of Columbia, Kansas, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, Nevada, New Mexico, South Dakota, Tennessee, Vermont, West Virginia, and Wisconsin have passed Illinois Brick repealer laws or their courts have held that state law permits indirect purchaser suits by individuals. The Court relies on the following authority from each state in holding that these states do [70] not follow Illinois Brick: Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16750(a); D.C. Code § 28-4509(a); Kan. Stat. Ann. § 50-161; Me. Rev. Stat. tit. 10, § 1104(1); Mich. Comp. Laws § 445.778(2); Minn. Stat. § 325D.57; Nev. Rev. Stat § 598A.210(2); N.M. Stat. Ann. § 57-1-3(A); S.D. Codified Laws § 37-1-33; Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 9, § 2465; W. Va. Code R. 142-9-2; Wis. Stat. § 133.18(1)(a); Bunker's Glass Co. v. Pilkington PLC, 206 Ariz. 9, 75 P.3d 99, 102 (Ariz. 2003); Comes v. Microsoft Corp., 646 N.W.2d 440, 441 (Iowa 2002); *Sherwood v. Microsoft Corp., No. M2000-01850, 2003 Tenn. App. LEXIS 539, 2003 WL 21780975, at 29 (Tenn. Ct. App. July 31, 2003). Massachusetts is somewhat different in that HN26[] only direct purchasers may maintain a cause of action under the state antitrust act, but both direct and indirect purchasers may maintain a cause of action under the state consumer protection act. Ciardi v. Hoffmann-LaRoche, Ltd., 436 Mass. 53, 762 N.E.2d 303, 308-09, 312 (Mass. 2002). Plaintiffs do not assert a cause of action under the Massachusetts antitrust act, Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 93, § 1 et seq., relying instead only on the [*414] To summarize: Plaintiffs' autonomous unjust enrichment claims are dismissed, but their parasitic claims under the laws of many, but not all, states pleaded in the TCAC may proceed.

4. Newly Added State Law Claims

The TCAC adds state-law claims under Illinois and New York law. Plaintiffs argue that the Supreme Court's decision in Shady Grove Orthopedic Assocs. v. Allstate Ins. Co., 130 S. Ct. 1431, 176 L. Ed. 2d 311 (2010) allows them to assert these claims. The Court addresses these newly added claims, beginning with claims under Illinois law.

i. Illinois

Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' claim under Illinois antitrust law on behalf of all Illinois-resident indirect purchasers fails because the law expressly precludes private parties from asserting class actions on behalf of indirect purchasers. They acknowledge that the Illinois law does not "deny any person who is an indirect purchaser the right to sue for damages," but they say that only the state attorney general may assert a class action under this law. 740 Ill. Comp. Stat. 10/7(2). They [72] therefore argue that Plaintiffs lack standing under the Illinois statute or that Shady Grove does not permit them to assert a claim. The Court begins with Shady Grove because that analysis determines whether Plaintiffs have standing.

Shady Grove is a decision about the contours of the Erie doctrine, but it did not result in unanimity on all points. The Court considered whether a New York law prohibiting class actions in any suit seeking penalties or statutory minimum damages precluded a federal court from exercising diversity jurisdiction over a class action. 130 S. Ct. at 1436 (majority op.). The question for the Court was whether a suit for statutory damages could proceed in federal court as a class action notwithstanding the state statute's limitation. Id. at 1437. The same question exists here because the HN27[] Illinois law clearly provides for an individual remedy for indirect purchasers, yet it limits those who may maintain a class action for the same alleged violation to only the state attorney general. 740 Ill. Comp. Stat. 10/7(2) ("No provision of this Act shall deny any person who is an indirect purchaser the right to sue for damages.").

Setting out the legal framework, the Court [73] proceeded to analyze two questions: first, whether the applicable federal rule applies, and second, whether that rule "exceeds statutory authorization or Congress's rulemaking power." 130 S. Ct. at 1437 (majority op.). A majority of the Court concluded that Rule 23 conflicted with the state statute because Rule 23 "creates a categorical rule entitling a plaintiff whose suit meets the specified criteria to pursue his claim as a class action." Id. at 1437-38. The same analysis applies in this case: a diversity plaintiff in federal court may maintain a class action if he wishes; this rule conflicts with the Illinois statute, which places limits on who may maintain a class action in antitrust suits. Unless Rule 23 exceeds statutory authority or Congress's rulemaking power, then, it - and not the state rule - applies. Id. at 1437.

The Supreme Court differed as to the proper analysis of this second question, even though the Justices agree that a federal rule may not "abridge, enlarge, or modify a substantive right." Id. at 1442 (plurality op.); id. at 1452 (Stevens, J., concurring in part and concurring in the [*415] judgment). Justice Scalia's plurality opinion contained a simple approach: "the [74] validity of a Federal Rule depends entirely upon whether it regulates procedure." Id. at 1444 (plurality op.). Justice Scalia thought that a "class action . . . merely enables a federal court to adjudicate claims of multiple parties at once" but doing so leaves "the parties' legal rights and duties intact and the rules of decision unchanged." Id. at 1443. This view garnered the support of only four Justices. Justice Stevens wrote separately. He explained a more nuanced view of a similar concept: "there are some state procedural rules that federal courts must apply in diversity cases because they function as a part of the State's definition of substantive rights and remedies." Id. at 1448 (Stevens, J., concurring in part and concurring in the judgment). "A state procedural rule, though undeniably 'procedural' in the ordinary sense of the term, may exist to influence substantive consumer protection law, id. ch. 93A, § 1 et seq. Because the parties have not briefed whether the TCAC is sufficient to state a cause [71] of action under the Massachusetts consumer protection law, the Court will allow a parasitic unjust enrichment claim to proceed for Massachusetts plaintiffs, if any.

outcomes and may in some instances become so bound up with the state-created right or remedy that it defines the scope of that substantive right or remedy." Id. at 1450 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). "When a federal rule appears to abridge, enlarge, or modify a substantive right, federal courts [75] must consider whether the rule can reasonably be interpreted to avoid that impermissible result." Id. at 1452. Nevertheless, finding that a federal rule of procedure exceeds Congress's authority is a "high" bar. Id. at 1457. In Shady Grove, "Justice Stevens concluded that § 901(b) was not intertwined with New York's definition of substantive rights because the rule is in New York's procedural code, it is applicable to class actions brought under any source of law, and the legislative history was ambiguous." In re Wellbutrin XL Antitrust Litig., 756 F. Supp. 2d 670, 674 (E.D. Pa. 2010).

HN28[] "'When a fragmented Court decides a case and no single rationale explaining the result enjoys the assent of five Justices, the holding of the Court may be viewed as that position taken by those Members who concurred in the judgments on the narrowest grounds.'" United States v. Alcan Aluminum Corp., 315 F.3d 179, 189 (2d Cir. 2003) (quoting Marks v. United States, 430 U.S. 188, 193, 97 S. Ct. 990, 51 L. Ed. 2d 260 (1977)) (internal quotation marks omitted). This rule is not a carte blanche; it only applies "in instances where one opinion can meaningfully be regarded as 'narrower' than another . . . that is to say, only when that narrow [76] opinion is the common denominator representing the position approved by at least five justices." Id. (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). "Justice Stevens' approach does, however, form the 'narrowest grounds' in Shady Grove . . . ." In re Wellbutrin, 756 F. Supp. 2d at 675. "[T]he five justices in the concurrence and the dissent concluded that the validity of Federal Rules of Civil Procedure turns, in part, on the rights afforded by the state rule that the Federal Rule displaces." Id.; see also *In re Packaged Ice Antitrust Litig., No. 08 MD 1952, 779 F. Supp. 2d 642, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26048, 2011 WL 891169, at 15 (E.D. Mich. Mar. 11, 2011) ("Courts interpreting the Shady Grove decision . . . have concluded that Justice Stevens' concurrence is the controlling opinion by which interpreting courts are bound.").

The Illinois law, under Justice Stevens's controlling analysis, is "substantive" and therefore provides the rule of decision here. It states, in relevant part:

> HN29[] Any person who has been injured in his business or property, or is threatened with such injury, by a violation of [the Illinois antitrust statute] may maintain an action in the Circuit Court for damages, or for an injunction, or both, against any person who [77] has committed such violation. . . . .
> No provision of this Act shall deny any person who is an indirect purchaser the right to sue for damages. . . . Provided further that no person shall be [*416] authorized to maintain a class action in any court of this State for indirect purchasers asserting claims under this Act, with the sole exception of this State's Attorney General, who may maintain an action parens patriae as provided in this subsection.

HN30[] 740 Ill. Comp. Stat. 10/7(2). This statute provides a procedure that is "so bound up with the state-created right or remedy that it defines the scope of that substantive right or remedy." Shady Grove, 130 S. Ct. at 1450 (Stevens, J., concurring in part and concurring in the judgment). Therefore, applying the federal rule to override this process would be "an application of a federal rule that effectively abridges, enlarges, or modifies a state-created right or remedy" and is disallowed. Id. at 1451. Unlike the New York law at issue in Shady Grove, its limitation is not contained in a generally applicable procedural rule but, rather, in the same paragraph of the same statute that creates the underlying substantive right. In re Wellbutrin, 756 F. Supp. 2d at 677. [78] It applies only to that statute. Id. "Furthermore, courts have observed that the Illinois statute represents a policy judgment as to the feasibility of managing duplicative recovery, which the legislature has entrusted to the Attorney General but not to individual indirect purchasers." Id. That policy judgment is substantive. Indeed, the statute expressly cautions courts to take care to follow the Illinois Brick rule and avoid duplicate recoveries. "Because the indirect purchaser restrictions of the [Illinois law] IAA are 'intertwined' with the underlying substantive right, application of Rule 23 would 'abridge, enlarge or modify' Illinois' substantive rights, and therefore Illinois' restrictions on indirect purchaser actions must be applied in federal court." [13] Id.

[13] This holding indicates that Plaintiffs have no standing to bring suit under the Illinois law.

Plaintiffs' claim on behalf of indirect purchasers under Illinois law is DISMISSED.

ii. New York

Plaintiffs have added a claim under New York's Donnelly Act, which is a New York antitrust statute. Defendants contend that, even though Shady Grove allows private class actions for statutory claims in federal court under New York law, [79] Plaintiffs' claim fails because "federal antitrust laws preempt the Donnelly Act where the alleged conduct principally affects interstate commerce." Conergy AG v. MEMC Elec. Materials, Inc., 651 F. Supp. 2d 51, 61 n.83 (S.D.N.Y. 2009) (collecting cases). Plaintiffs argue that federal antitrust preemption obtains only when there is "little or no impact on local or intrastate commerce." Two Queens, Inc. v. Scoza, 296 A.D.2d 302, 745 N.Y.S.2d 517, 519 (N.Y. App. Div. 2002).

Although the authorities quoted by the parties contain broad, categorical language, the state authorities suggest that New York requires an impact on intrastate commerce so as to avoid a dormant Commerce Clause issue. Compare id. ("The question is whether the burden on interstate commerce outweighs the States' interests." (internal quotation marks omitted)), with, e.g., Nat'l Elec. Mfrs. Ass'n v. Sorrell, 272 F.3d 104, 108 (2d Cir. 2001) ("A statute may violate the well-established 'dormant' aspect of the Commerce Clause . . . if it imposes a burden on interstate commerce incommensurate with the local benefits secured." (internal citations omitted)). As Plaintiffs point out, the cases on which Defendants rely involve situations where [80] the defendants had only tangential connections to New York. And as the [*417] Court already determined, supra Part II.D.2.a., the TCAC alleges a sufficient intrastate connection to survive this type of argument. The TCAC alleges a "significant impact on intrastate commerce" in New York, Conergy AG, 651 F. Supp. 2d at 61, because the end purchasers presumably purchased Internet Music from New York and consumed the product in New York. Moreover, many of the Defendants are headquartered in New York City and/or incorporated in New York, and they clearly conduct significant business in New York. Federal antitrust law does not preempt the Donnelly Act in this case.

Defendants' motion to dismiss the newly added New York claim is DENIED.

E. Parent Company Motions to Dismiss

Three named defendants, Sony Corporation of America ("SCA"), Bertelsmann, Inc. ("Bertelsmann"), and Time Warner, Inc. ("Time Warner" and, collectively, the "Parent Companies"), move to dismiss the complaint against them because they are parent companies to the relevant actors named in the complaint. These defendants argue that absent allegations allowing the Court to pierce the corporate veil, their separate corporate form entitles [81] them to dismissal. The Court agrees. The Parent Companies could be liable directly or as alter egos of entities they own or control. The complaint is insufficient under either theory.

Beginning with the straightforward, the complaint alleges no conduct by the Parent Companies that violates the law. The complaint alleges that each Parent Company is a parent of a subsidiary that owns the rights to musical copyrights, royalties, and licensing agreements and that runs the related music operations. (TCAC ¶¶ 21-23, 26.) The Parent Companies have no direct involvement in or ownership of the relevant music licenses. (See TCAC ¶¶ 21-23, 26.) The complaint alleges that the Parent Companies had ownership interests in MusicNet and pressplay, which sold music to customers, and that SCA sold music directly through its website. (TCAC ¶¶ 58-60, 67, 72.) None of this is actionable conduct; HN31[] an antitrust conspiracy complaint must assert enough "factual matter" to suggest plausibly a preceding agreement. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555-57; see DM Research, Inc. v. Coll. of Am. Pathologists, 170 F.3d 53, 55 (1st Cir. 1999). Although Plaintiffs argue that they alleged that the Parent Companies were directly involved [82] in the alleged conspiracy (Pl. Mem. of Supp. Auth. Dated June 2, 2010, at 1), a reading of the complaint indicates otherwise. The complaint alleges direct involvement of the Parent Companies by way of generic references to "defendants." (Id. at 1-5.) This approach is insufficient. See, e.g., Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984); In re Elevator Antitrust Litig., 502 F.3d 47, 50-51 (2d Cir. 2007); Heart Disease Research Found. v. Gen. Motors Corp., 463 F.2d 98, 101 (2d Cir. 1972); Invamed, Inc. v. Barr Labs., Inc., 22 F. Supp. 2d 210, 221 (S.D.N.Y. 1998); see also De Jesus v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 87 F.3d 65, 70 (2d Cir. 1996) (reiterating that related corporations are presumed to be separate).

Direct involvement aside, the thrust of the complaint is to impute the actions of the Parent Companies' subsidiaries or joint ventures (MusicNet and pressplay) to the Parent Companies. But the complaint does not allege a basis to disregard the separate corporate forms of these entities and impose liability on the Parent Companies. HN32[] "It is a general principle of corporate law deeply ingrained in our economic and legal systems that a parent corporation . . . is not liable for [83] the acts of its subsidiaries." United States v. Bestfoods, 524 U.S. 51, 61, 118 S. Ct. 1876, 141 L. Ed. 2d 43 (1998) (internal quotation [*418] marks omitted); see, e.g., Greene v. Long Island R.R. Co., 280 F.3d 224, 235-36 (2d Cir. 2002). "But there is an equally fundamental principle of corporate law, applicable to the parent-subsidiary relationship as well as generally, that the corporate veil may be pierced and the shareholder held liable for the corporation's conduct when, inter alia, the corporate form would otherwise be misused to accomplish certain wrongful purposes . . . ." Bestfoods, 524 U.S. at 62.

HN33[] "Under New York choice-of-law principles, the issue of whether the corporate veil may be pierced is determined under the law of the state of incorporation." Spagnola v. Chubb Corp., 264 F.R.D. 76, 85 n.10 (S.D.N.Y. 2010) (citing Fletcher v. Atex, Inc., 68 F.3d 1451, 1456 (2d Cir. 1995)). Here, Time Warner and Bertelsmann are Delaware corporations, [14] and SCA is a New York corporation. (TCAC ¶¶ 22-23.) HN34[] In Delaware, "a court can pierce the corporate veil of an entity where there is fraud or where a subsidiary is in fact a mere instrumentality or alter ego of its owner." Geyer v. Ingersoll Publ'ns Co., 621 A.2d 784, 793 (Del. Ch. 1992). [84] Likewise, in New York, "piercing the corporate veil requires a showing that: (1) the owners exercised complete domination of the corporation in respect to the transaction attacked; and (2) that such domination was used to commit a fraud or wrong against the plaintiff which resulted in plaintiff's injury." Morris v. N.Y. State Dep't of Taxation & Fin., 82 N.Y.2d 135, 623 N.E.2d 1157, 1160, 603 N.Y.S.2d 807 (N.Y. 1993). In determining whether to pierce the corporate veil in either state, courts consider allegations of disregarding corporate formalities, siphoning or intermingling of funds, inadequate capitalization, or that the corporation is a mere sham acting for the shareholder, among others. *MicroStrategy Inc. v. Acacia Research Corp., Civ. A. No. 5735-VCP, 2010 Del. Ch. LEXIS 254, 2010 WL 5550455, at 11 (Del. Ch. Dec. 30, 2010); Fantazia Int'l Corp. v. CPL Furs N.Y., Inc., 67 A.D.3d 511, 889 N.Y.S.2d 28, 29 (N.Y. App. Div. 2009).

HN35[] In neither state may liability [85] be imposed merely based on a parent's ownership of a controlling interest in the subsidiary. *Mabon, Nugent & Co. v. Tx. Am. Energy Corp., Civ. A. No. 8578, 1990 Del. Ch. LEXIS 46, 1990 WL 44267, at 5 (Del. Ch. Apr. 12, 1990) ("[T]he separate corporate existences of parent and subsidiary will not be set aside merely on a showing of common management of the two entities, nor on a showing that the parent owned all the stock of the subsidiary."); Sheridan Broad. Corp. v. Small, 19 A.D.3d 331, 798 N.Y.S.2d 45, 46 (N.Y. App. Div. 2005). Indeed, a showing that a fraud would be "perpetrated through misuse of the corporate form" generally is required in both states. *Medi-Tec of Egypt Corp. v. Bausch & Lomb Surgical, No. Civ. A. 19760-NC, 2004 Del. Ch. LEXIS 21, 2004 WL 415251, at 7 (Del. Ch. Mar. 4, 2004); see Morris, 623 N.E.2d at 1161. Finally, in both states, the corporation's separate identity is generally respected, and the proponent of disregarding a corporation's separate identity bears a heavy burden. TNS Holdings, Inc. v. MKI Sec. Corp., 92 N.Y.2d 335, 703 N.E.2d 749, 751, 680 N.Y.S.2d 891 (N.Y. 1998); see *MicroStrategy Inc., 2010 Del. Ch. LEXIS 254, 2010 WL 5550455, at 11.

The TCAC fails to allege circumstances that would allow the Court to pierce the Parent Companies' corporate veils. The complaint [86] contains no allegations that the Parent Companies misused the corporate [*419] form, disregarded corporate formalities, commingled funds, or otherwise misused the separate identities of the entities. See, e.g., De Jesus, 87 F.3d at 70; *Miller v. Citicorp, No. 95 Civ. 9728, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2395, 1997 WL 96569, at 9 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 4, 1997) (quoting HN36[] New York law that subsidiary has to be the "mere dummy" of parent for veil to be pierced); *MicroStrategy Inc., 2010 Del. Ch. LEXIS 254, 2010 WL 5550455, at 11; Fantazia Int'l Corp., 889 N.Y.S.2d at 29. There is no allegation that the Parent Companies used the separate corporate form of the subsidiaries to perpetrate a fraud. The most the complaint alleges is that the Parent Companies own their respective subsidiaries and have ownership interests in the joint ventures. [15] (TCAC ¶¶ 21-23, 25-28, 57-58, 72.) But HN37[] a mere ownership stake in a joint venture is not grounds for a presumption of wrongdoing or fraud on the part of its owners. See, e.g., Broad. Music, Inc. v. CBS, Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 23, 99 S. Ct. 1551, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1979) ("Joint ventures and other cooperative arrangements are also not usually unlawful . . . where the agreement on price is necessary to market the product at all."); see also Texaco, Inc. v. Dagher, 547 U.S. 1, 5-6, 126 S. Ct. 1276, 164 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2006); [87] Addamax Corp. v. Open Software Found., Inc., 152 F.3d 48, 52 (1st Cir. 1998) (declining to adopt per se section 1 liability for joint venture unless it is a "complete sham"). The joint ventures here are separate legal entities and enjoy a presumption of separateness. See De Jesus, 87 F.3d at 70. It is clear that HN38[] simply owning, even wholly owning, a subsidiary is insufficient to pierce the corporate veil. See *Mabon, Nugent & Co., 1990 Del. Ch. LEXIS 46, 1990 WL 44267, at 5; Sheridan Broad. Corp., 798 N.Y.S.2d at 46. And even though Plaintiffs challenge aspects of the joint ventures, see Starr, 592 F.3d at 326, there are no allegations about any involvement of the Parent Companies.

There are no allegations that any Parent Company did anything actionable in the alleged antitrust conspiracy. Whether the joint ventures or subsidiaries did anything actionable is not relevant with respect to the liability of the Parent Companies absent a basis to pierce the corporate veil, and none is alleged. Moreover, there is no allegation that the Parent Companies directed the subsidiaries to engage in an antitrust conspiracy. As stated in a case involving more significant allegations of "dominion and control" over subsidiaries, "[t]he unadorned invocation of dominion and control is simply not enough." In re Currency Conversion Fee Antitrust Litig., 265 F. Supp. 2d 385, 426 (S.D.N.Y. 2003). Here, allegations of less pervasive control over the subsidiary entities, combined with the complete absence of any basis to infer the use of the subsidiary entities as a means to perpetrate a fraud, are likewise not enough. There being no basis in the complaint to impute liability to the Parent Companies, dismissal of the actions against them is appropriate.

F. Motion [89] to Strike Portions of the TCAC

Defendants move to strike paragraphs 87, 106-112, and the last sentence of paragraph 38 of the TCAC. Defendant's motion is GRANTED except as to paragraph 38 because paragraphs 87 and 106-112 contain information that is only inflammatory [*420] and is based on investigations or litigation that is unconcluded, concluded with no resolution against Defendants, or concluded but wholly irrelevant to digital music.

III. CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, Defendants' motion to dismiss [dkt. no. 132] is GRANTED in part and DENIED in part. The result is as follows: Plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims may proceed. The CD-purchaser class does not have antitrust standing, and its claims are DISMISSED with prejudice. The Court will conduct a standing inquiry on claims asserted in states in which no named plaintiff resides at the class certification stage. Defendants' motion to dismiss claims for violations of state consumer protection statutes is DENIED except as to New York, in which case it is GRANTED. Defendants' motion to dismiss the unjust enrichment claims is GRANTED in part and DENIED in part. Autonomous unjust enrichment claims are DISMISSED. Parasitic unjust enrichment [90] claims are DISMISSED as to Illinois, Florida, Montana, New York, North Carolina, and North Dakota based claims, if any, but may proceed as to other states. Defendants' motion to dismiss the newly added Illinois and New York state antitrust claims is DENIED in part and GRANTED in part. The New York claim only may proceed. Defendants' motion to dismiss claims against the Parent Companies is GRANTED. Defendants' motion to strike portions of the TCAC is GRANTED in part and DENIED in part; paragraphs 87 and 106-112 are stricken.

The parties shall confer and inform the Court no later than August 1, 2 011, how they propose to proceed.

[15] With respect to Bertlesmann, the TCAC states that Bertlesmann AG, not Bertlesmann, Inc., has an ownership in Sony BMG (TCAC ¶ 21), but Plaintiffs state in their memorandum of law that Bertlesmann, Inc., is the owner. Moreover, the TCAC alleges that Bertlesmann (and SCA) transferred their "musical copyrights, licensing agreements and royalty rights" to Sony BMG, a separate entity that "produces, licenses and distributes" the music involved in this lawsuit. (Id.) Whether Bertlesmann or Bertlesmann AG owns an interest in Sony BMG [88] is thus not material for the purpose of this motion; in either case, there is no basis to pierce either entity's corporate veil.

MEMORANDUM [*6] & ORDER

NICHOLAS G. GARAUFIS, United States District Judge.

Before the court is Plaintiffs' motion for entry of final judgment on consent as to claims against Defendants MasterCard International Incorporated ("MasterCard") and Visa Inc. ("Visa"). (Docket Entry # 134.) Under 15 U.S.C. § 16(e), the court must determine whether the Proposed Final Judgment (Docket Entry # 4) is in the public interest. For the reasons set forth below, the court finds that the Proposed Final Judgment is in the public interest.

I. BACKGROUND

The United States of America and several states bring this action against Defendants, several credit card companies, for various violations of antitrust law under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. (Am. Compl. (Docket Entry # 57).) Specifically, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants' anti-steering rules—rules that prohibit merchants who accept Defendants' credit cards from offering customers a discount for using cash or a credit card that is less costly to the merchant, or even informing customers about Defendants' credit cards' transaction fees—illegally restrain trade in interstate commerce. (Id. ¶ 4.)

The United States originally filed its action on October 4, 2010. (Compl. (Docket [*7] Entry # 1).) The same day, it filed a notice of settlement and a Proposed Final Judgment as to MasterCard and Visa. (Docket Entry # 4-1; see also Proposed Judgment (Docket Entry # 134-2).) As required by the Tunney Act, 15 U.S.C. § 16, the United States published the Proposed Final Judgment in several newspapers—here, the Washington Post and the New York Post—as well as the Federal Register. 75 Fed. Reg. 62858-02 (Oct. 13, 2010); see also 15 U.S.C. § 16(b), (c). In those notices, the United States informed the public that, pursuant to the Tunney Act, it was soliciting public comments concerning the Proposed Final Judgment for sixty days. See 15 U.S.C. § 16(d). During the sixty-day period, the United States received six comments. (See Public'n Order (Docket Entry # 121).) It filed its Response to those comments on June 14, 2011. (Response (Docket Entry # 119-1)); see also 15 U.S.C. § 16(d). On June 20, 2011, the court excused the United States from publishing those comments and its Response in the Federal Register, but directed the United States to publish a notice in the Federal Register containing a permanent website address of where those comments and the United States' Response [*8] would be available. (Public'n Order at 2.) The United States filed a certificate of compliance with that order on July 14, 2011. [1] (Docket Entry # 133.) The court must now review the proposed judgment pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 16(e).

II. DISCUSSION

A. The Tunney Act Standard

Where the United States seeks to enter into a settlement in a civil antitrust action, the Tunney Act requires the court to affirmatively approve the settlement only if it finds that the settlement serves the "public interest." Id. § 16(e). In making its public interest finding under 15 U.S.C. § 16(e)(1), the court must consider:

[1] In its certification of compliance, the United States listed the permanent website as http://www.justice.gov/atr/cases/americanexpress.html. (Docket Entry # 133.)

(A) the competitive impact of such judgment, including termination of alleged violations, provisions for enforcement and modification, duration of relief sought, anticipated effects of alternative remedies actually considered, whether its terms are ambiguous, and any other competitive considerations bearing upon the adequacy of such judgment that the court deems necessary to a determination of whether the consent judgment is in the [*9] public interest; and

(B) the impact of entry of such judgment upon competition in the relevant market or markets, upon the public generally and individuals alleging specific injury from the violations set forth in the complaint including consideration of the public benefit, if any, to be derived from a determination of the issues at trial.

The court may consider public comments to the proposed consent judgment and the United States' response to those comments as evidence in making this determination. Id. § 16(f)(4). Nonetheless, a "district court's 'public interest' inquiry into the merits of the consent decree is a narrow one." Massachusetts v. Microsoft Corp., 373 F.3d 1199, 1236, 362 U.S. App. D.C. 152 (D.C. Cir. 2004). "In making this determination, 'the court is not permitted to reject the proposed remedies merely because the court believes other remedies are preferable. Rather, the relevant inquiry is whether there is a factual foundation for the government's decisions such that its conclusions regarding the proposed settlement are reasonable.'" United States v. Keyspan Corp., 763 F. Supp. 2d 633, 637-38 (S.D.N.Y. 2011) (quoting United States v. Abitibi-Consol. Inc., 584 F. Supp. 2d 162, 165 (D.D.C. 2008)) [*10] (internal alterations omitted).

B. The Proposed Judgment

The substance of the proposed judgment requires Visa and MasterCard to alter their contracts with merchants, allowing merchants to offer discounts to consumers if they use alternate forms of payment, including other credit cards, and letting merchants inform consumers of the transaction costs experienced by merchants in processing credit card transactions. (Proposed Judgment at IV.A.) Visa's and MasterCard's current contracts with merchants allow merchants to offer a form-of-payment discount, but only if such a discount is "[c]learly disclosed as a discount from the standard price," and "[n]on-discriminatory, as between a Cardholder who pays with a Visa Card [or MasterCard] and a cardholder who pays with a 'comparable card.'" (Id. at V.B.) The Proposed Final Judgment removes this language from Visa's and MasterCard's merchant contracts and includes broad language allowing merchants to, among other things, offer the consumer an immediate discount for paying with an alternate credit card and inform consumers about Visa's and MasterCard's transaction fees. (Id.)

Six groups submitted public comments to the proposed judgment: this action's [*11] Class Plaintiffs (Class Pls.' Comment (Docket Entry # 119-2)); this action's Individual Merchant Plaintiffs (Indiv. Pls.' Comment (Docket Entry # 119-3)); Consumer World, a public service consumer education website (Consumer World Comment (Docket Entry # 119-4)); the Retail Industry Leaders Association ("RILA"), an association of America's largest retailers (RILA Comment (Docket Entry # 119-5)); Sears Holding Corp. (Sears Comment (Docket Entry # 119-6)); and a group of individual merchant Plaintiffs whose cases have been consolidated by the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation (the "JPML Plaintiffs") (JPML Pls.' Comment (Docket Entry # 119-7)).

The public comments are overwhelmingly positive if not enthusiastic. The Individual Merchant Plaintiffs "urge[] the Court to approve the proposed Final Judgments because we believe that they are pro-competitive and in the public interest." (Indiv. Pls.' Comment at 1.) RILA "applauds the Antitrust Division's longstanding interest in the General Purpose Card network services market" and "welcomes the settlement reached by Plaintiffs . . . as it could help facilitate competition in the General Purpose Card market." (RILA Comment at 1.) Sears [*12] similarly "applauds the DOJ (and the participating Plaintiff Attorneys General) for their willingness to engage on these issues and work to remove some of the anti-competitive rules that VISA and MasterCard have imposed on merchants." [2] (Sears Comment at 2.)

[2] Sears also raised several concerns over whether the proposed consent judgment would require Visa and MasterCard to identify, at the point of sale, which type of card, e.g., credit or debit, or "cash-back" or "reward points," the consumer wishes to use. (Sears Comment at 2-3.) As the United States has correctly pointed out in its Response, these concerns are "beyond the

The remaining commenters were lukewarm. The JPML Plaintiffs state that they "believe that the Proposed Final Judgment is procompetitive and furthers the public interest as required by the Tunney Act. . . . [but] may prove to be insufficient to remedy the harm to competition and market power that has resulted from the conduct of Visa, MasterCard, and their member banks over at least the last 30 years." (JPML Pls.' Comment at 3.) Consumer World does not disapprove of the Proposed Final Judgment but expresses concern over whether potential discounts would, in effect, become surcharges relative to items paid with more expensive forms of payment. (Consumer World Comment at 4.) Similarly, the Class Plaintiffs' only comment was in the form of a question concerning whether Visa's and MasterCard's anti-steering rules are coextensive, for antitrust purposes, with Visa's and MasterCard's "no-surcharge rules." [3] (Class Pls.' Comment at 1.)

All of these [*14] concerns, however, simply "make[] the observation, which is applicable to all settlements, that there is some uncertainty about the future impact and effectiveness of any proposed relief." (Response at 28.) But, as expressed by the United States, "[t]he proposed Final Judgment is not measured by how it resolves all of the concerns" raised by the Proposed Judgment but "whether the relief resolves the violation identified in the Amended Complaint in a manner that is within the reaches of the public interest." (Id.); see also Keyspan Corp., 763 F. Supp. 2d at 637-38. And it appears that the proposed judgment does just that. The Amended Complaint in this action simply alleges that Defendants' anti-steering practices illegally restrained trade. (Am. Compl. ¶ 4.) The Proposed Final Judgment, meanwhile, broadly prohibits Visa and MasterCard from any anti-steering practice with respect to alternate forms of payment (Proposed Judgment at IV.A, D), and affirmatively requires Visa and MasterCard to alter their contracts with merchants to effectuate true anti-anti-steering practices—even going so far as to supply the exact contract language Visa and MasterCard must use in this regard (id. at V.B, [*15] C). The proposed judgment also requires Visa and MasterCard to inform participating merchants about these changes, and to file notices of compliance with, and open themselves for inspection to the U.S. Department of Justice. (Id. at V.E, VI.)

While it is true that some of the public comments have raised potential concerns about the practical effects of the Judgment in the marketplace, it is safe to say that not one has expressed disapproval of the Proposed Final Judgment itself. Indeed, the issues raised by Class Plaintiffs and Consumer World—that one credit card company's "discount" is another's "surcharge"—may arise in the future, but these are issues for another day. The United States has demonstrated, and no public comment substantively contests, that the Proposed Final Judgment furthers the public interest by removing the anticompetitive impact of Visa's and MasterCard's anti-steering rules, see 15 U.S.C. § 16(e)(1)(A), and alleviates the public's "specific injury from the violations set forth in the complaint," see id. § 16(e)(1)(B). As such, the court finds that the public interest is best served by approving the proposed final judgment between Plaintiffs and Visa and MasterCard. [*16] The court will sign the Proposed Final Judgment separately.

C. Entry of Final Judgment Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 54

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 54(b) provides that in an action where "multiple parties are involved, the court may direct entry of a final judgment as to one or more, but fewer than all, claims or parties only if the court expressly determines that there is no just reason for delay." The principal concern against doing so is the "historic federal policy against piecemeal appeals." O'Bert ex rel. Estate of O'Bert v. Vargo, 331 F.3d 29, 41 (2d Cir. 2003) (quoting Curtiss-Wright Corp. v. Gen. Elec. Co., 446 U.S. 1, 8, 100 S. Ct. 1460, 64 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1980)). As a general matter though, parties waive their right to appeal judgments on consent. New York ex rel. Vacco v. Operation Rescue Nat'l, 80 F.3d 64, 69 (2d Cir. 1996) (citing Nashville, C. & St. Louis Ry. v. United States, 113 U.S. 261, 266, 5 S. Ct.

scope of the case" insofar as the "[t]he Amended Complaint alleges violations relating only to the General Purpose Card product market, a market that does not include debit cards." (Response at 25.) To the extent Sears's Comment seeks clarification on this issue as pertaining solely to the credit card market, the court notes that such concerns may be coextensive with the claims raised in Visa's and MasterCard's previous "honor all cards" litigation. See In re Payment Card Interchange Fee & Merchant Discount Antitrust Litig., 562 F. Supp. 2d 392 (E.D.N.Y. 2008) (Gleeson, [*13] J.); In re Visa Check/Mastermoney Antitrust Litig., 297 F. Supp. 2d 503 (E.D.N.Y. 2003) (Gleeson, J.).

[3] The "no-surcharge rules" prohibited merchants from charging consumers a "surcharge" above the normal price of a good for using a Visa or MasterCard.

460, 28 L. Ed. 971, 20 Ct. Cl. 526 (1885)). Here, because the final judgment to be entered is a judgment on consent, Visa and MasterCard will have effectively waived their right to appeal, thus obviating any possibility of piecemeal appeals. Further, judicial efficiencies would be better served in this litigation by entering judgment sooner [*17] rather than later so the court—and the parties—can continue to focus on Plaintiffs' claims against the remaining American Express Defendants. Therefore, the court directs the Clerk of Court to enter final judgment against Visa and MasterCard after the court approves the Proposed Final Judgment.

III. CONCLUSION

The court FINDS that the Proposed Final Judgment is in public interest pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 16(e). The court will approve the Proposed Final Judgment separately. The court also FINDS, under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 54(b), that there is no just reason for delay in entry of the final judgment against Defendants MasterCard International Incorporated and Visa Inc., and directs the Clerk of Court to enter final judgment against these Defendants after the court has approved the Proposed Final Judgment.

HN1[] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 provides district courts with broad discretion to determine whether a class should be certified, and to revisit that certification throughout the legal proceedings before the court. Before certifying a class, the trial court must conduct a rigorous analysis to determine whether the party seeking certification has met the prerequisites of Rule 23. The proponent of the class bears the burden of demonstrating that class certification is appropriate.

HN2[] Prerequisites for Class Action, Adequacy of Representation

The party seeking certification must satisfy all requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a) and one of the subsections of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b). Rule 23(a) requires that the party seeking certification show: (1) the class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable; (2) there are questions of law or fact common to the class; (3) the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class, and (4) the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Maintainability

HN3[] Prerequisites for Class Action, Maintainability

A class may be certified under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b) where: (1) there is a risk of inconsistent of unfair adjudication; (2) the party opposing the class has acted or refused to act on grounds generally applicable to the class, making injunctive or declaratory relief appropriate as to the class as a whole; or (3) questions of law or fact common to members of the class predominate and a class action is superior to other available methods for fairly and efficiently adjudicating the controversy.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN4[] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

In determining whether a plaintiff has met his burden of demonstrating that each element of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 has been satisfied, the court generally does not consider the merits of plaintiff's claims. Rather, the court must take the substantive allegations of the complaint as true.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

HN5[] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 does not set forth a mere pleading standard. A party seeking class certification must affirmatively demonstrate his compliance with the Rule; that is, he must be prepared to prove that there are in fact sufficiently numerous parties, common questions of law or fact, etc. Sometimes it may be necessary for the court to probe behind the pleadings before coming to rest on the certification question. Certification is proper only if the trial court is satisfied, after a rigorous analysis, that the prerequisites of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a) have been satisfied. Frequently that rigorous analysis will entail some overlap with the merits of the plaintiff's underlying claim. That cannot be helped. The class determination generally involves considerations that are enmeshed in the factual and legal issues comprising the plaintiff's cause of action. Nor is there anything unusual about that consequence: The necessity of touching aspects of the merits in order to resolve preliminary matters, e.g., jurisdiction and venue, is a familiar feature of litigation.

HN6[] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

Plaintiffs must show that the claims of the class depend upon a common contention of such a nature that it is capable of classwide resolution, which means that determination of its truth or falsity will resolve an issue that is central to the validity of each one of the claims in one stroke.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN7[] Sherman Act, Claims

The essential elements of a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 antitrust claim are: (1) violation of antitrust law; (2) injury or impact resulting from that violation; and (3) measurable damages. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Commonality

HN8[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Price Fixing

Cases involving horizontal price-fixing are, as a practical matter, often certified. However, this does not hold true when injury or impact can be shown only on an individualized basis.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Commonality

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Predominance

HN9[] Sherman Act, Claims

In antitrust cases, proof of injury must be distinguished from calculation of damages. The individual injury element is also known as antitrust impact, and to prevail on the merits, every class member must prove at least some antitrust impact resulting from the alleged violation. Impact often is critically important for the purpose of evaluating Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3)'s predominance requirement because it is an element of the claim that may call for individual, as opposed to common, proof. Plaintiffs' burden at the class certification stage is not to prove the element of antitrust impact, although in order to prevail on the merits each class member must do so. Instead, the task for plaintiffs at class certification is to demonstrate that the element of antitrust impact is capable of proof at trial through evidence that is common to the class rather than individual to its members. The question at the class certification stage is whether, if such impact is plausible in theory, it is also susceptible to proof at trial through available evidence common to the class. Accordingly, in determining whether plaintiffs have met their burden, the court must rigorously assess the available evidence and the method or methods by which the plaintiffs propose to use the evidence to prove impact at trial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

HN10[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Price Fixing

The United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit held that generalized proof of purchases at an inflated price is acceptable for purposes of showing the predominance of common issues at class certification.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Daubert Standard

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses

HN11[] Expert Witnesses, Daubert Standard

Fed. R. Evid. 702 provides that opinions relating to scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge may be admitted if they will assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue. The testimony may only be admitted if (1) it is based on sufficient facts or data, (2) it is the product of reliable principles and methods, and (3) the witness has applied the principles and methods reliably to the facts of the case. The court has a duty to ensure that expert testimony is both relevant and reliable. To this end, the trial judge must determine whether the testimony has a reliable basis in the knowledge and experience of the relevant discipline.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Daubert Standard

HN12[] Expert Witnesses, Daubert Standard

Once a court finds that the proposed witness qualifies as an expert, it must determine whether the testimony has a reliable basis in the knowledge and experience of the relevant discipline. The court's concern is not with what the experts say, but, rather what basis they have for saying it. The test under the Daubert standard is not the correctness of the expert's conclusions but the soundness of his methodology.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Daubert Standard

HN13[] Expert Witnesses, Daubert Standard

While there is no definitive checklist or test under the Daubert standard, courts identify several non-exclusive and nondispositive factors as potentially relevant to the reliability inquiry, including: (1) whether a method can be (and has been) tested, (2) whether the method has been subjected to peer review and publication, (3) the known or potential rate of error, (4) the existence and maintenance of standards controlling the method's operation, (5) a degree of acceptance of the method within a relevant community, (6) whether the expert is proposing to testify about matters growing naturally and directly out of research they have conducted independent of the litigation, (7) whether the expert has unjustifiably extrapolated from an accepted premise to an unfounded conclusion, (8) whether the expert has adequately accounted for obvious alternative explanations, (9) whether the expert employs in the courtroom the same level of intellectual rigor that characterizes the practice of an expert in the relevant field, and (10) whether the field of expertise claimed by the expert is known to reach reliable results for the type of opinion the expert would give.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

HN14[] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

In situations where a court is confronted with two opposing expert analyses or econometric models of what the but for world would look like, the court is not supposed to decide at the certification stage which expert analysis or model is better. At the class certification stage, the court's inquiry is limited to determining whether plaintiffs have made a sufficient showing that the evidence they intend to present concerning antitrust impact will be made using generalized proof common to the class and that these common issues will predominate. On a motion for class certification, the court only evaluates whether the method by which plaintiffs propose to prove class-wide impact could prove such impact, not whether plaintiffs in fact can prove class-wide impact.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

HN15[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Price Fixing

In an antitrust price fixing case in which the class representative has alleged a broad conspiracy, courts have not required that the representative has purchased from all of the defendants or that he has been adversely affected by all of the means and methods by which the alleged conspiracy was implemented.

[*366] CIVIL MINUTES - GENERAL

PROCEEDINGS: DIRECT PURCHASER PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION (filed 09/27/10)

Court hears oral argument and testimony from Gary J. Dorman and Russell Lamb. The tentative circulated and attached hereto, is hereby adopted as the Court's final ruling. Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification is granted.

A Scheduling Conference is set for August 4, 2011 at 8:30 a.m. A proposed scheduling will be filed by August 2, 2011.

Before the Court is the motion of Plaintiffs DJ's Autobody, Inc.; Dynacorn Autobody Parts, Inc.; Motoring Parts International; Prevatte Auto Supply, Inc; and Sioux Plating Co., Inc. (collectively "Plaintiffs") [1] for an Order certifying a Direct Purchaser Class ("Class") consisting of "All persons and entities that purchased Aftermarket Automotive Lighting Products ("AALPs") in the United States, and its territories and possessions, directly [2] from a Defendant between July 15, 2001 and February 10, 2009 (the 'Class Period')." See Docket Item Numbers ("Doc. Nos.") 183, 194. As set forth below, the Court will grant Plaintiffs' request for class certification.

BACKGROUND

The Defendants in this action are four sets of Taiwanese or Hong Kong companies and their United States subsidiaries: (a) TYC Brother Industrial [3] Co. Ltd. ("TYC") and its subsidiary Genera Corporation ("Genera"); (b) Depo Auto Parts Ind. Co., Ltd. ("Depo") and its subsidiary Maxzone Vehicle Lightmg Corp. ("Maxzone"); (c) Eagle Eyes Traffic Ind. Co. Ltd. ("Eagle Eyes") and its subsidiary E-Lite Automotive Inc. ("E-Lite"); and (d) Sabry Lee Limited and Sabry Lee (U.S.A.), Inc. ("Sabry Lee"), which was also partially owned by Eagle Eyes. The Complaint in this action asserts a single cause of action for violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. Plaintiffs allege that Defendants conspired to fix the prices of AALPs during the Class Period. AALPs are replacement lighting parts used in the repair of automobiles in lieu of Original Equipment Manufacturer ("OEM") lighting parts. Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaint ("ACAC") ¶ 1, Doc. No. 205.

Plaintiffs filed their motion for class certification ("Motion") and supporting documents on September 27, 2010. The Motion was accompanied by several hundred pages of supporting documents and the 306-page expert report, including exhibits, of Dr. Russell L. Lamb ("Lamb Rep."). See Doc. No. 195. On May 16, 2011, Defendants Genera and E-Lite filed a joint opposition to the Motion, [4] which was accompanied by a number of declarations, over one thousand pages of supporting documents, and the 36-page expert report, including exhibits, of Dr. Gary Dornan ("Dornan Rep."). See Doc. No. 271. Defendant Sabry Lee filed a Notice of Joinder on May 16, 2011, which it later withdrew, informing the Court that, while it continues to contest the issues of service and personal jurisdiction, it does not oppose Plaintiffs' Motion. See Doc. No. 292. On June 27, 2011, Plaintiffs filed their Reply, which was accompanied by hundreds of pages of additional supporting documents and a 48-page reply expert report ("Lamb Reply Rep."), including exhibits.

[*367] The term "Aftermarket Automotive Lighting Products," as defined in the Complaint, includes such products as headlamps and bulbs, parking, tail and interior lights, spot lights, fog lights and auxiliary rights sold as aftermarket replacements for the OEM parts originally contained in a vehicle. In order to be effective, an AALP must conform to the specifications of the original part. To facilitate conformity, firms involved in the manufacture, distribution and sales of AALPs instituted a universal parts numbering system known as "PartsLink." [5] Lamb Rep.¶ 13. Defendants all use such numbers so that their AALPs can be identified as replacements for use in specific makes, models and years of vehicles. Id. at ¶ 14. Since 2002, AALPs have also been certified by the Certified Automotive Parts Association ("CAPA"). Id. at ¶ 15.

From 2002 through 2008, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants TYC, Depo, and Eagle Eyes routinely exchanged pricing information and set prices together. Defendants' products constitute 90% of AALPs sold in the United States and, "as a consequence, their Distributor Defendant affiliates also control the vast majority (over 90%) of the Aftermarket Automotive Lighting Product market in the United States." CAC ¶ 35; see Lamb Rep. ¶ 9(c), 38-44. After Plaintiffs filed their initial cases, the United States Department of Justice ("DOJ") intervened to separately investigate the alleged conspiracy. Since Plaintiffs' initial class certification motion was filed, the DOJ has indicted and obtained guilty pleas from executives of Depo/Maxzone and Eagle Eyes' United States distributor. United States v. Chen, No. CR11-0166 (N.D. Cal.); United States v. Hsu, No. CR11-0061 (N.D. Cal.).

[1] This action was originally consolidated with other cases, resulting in eight potential class representatives. Two of these class representatives, Harolds Autobody and Flash Sales, Inc., are listed on the docket sheet as plaintiffs but were not mentioned in Plaintiffs' Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaint. See Doc. No. 205. Moreover, Defendants indicate that Nu-Parts Automotive Products, Inc., although an alleged class representative, "was never actively involved in this litigation." Opp. 4 n.4. Three other class representatives, Prevatte Auto Supply, DJ's Autobody, and Dynacorn Auto Body Parts, have been voluntarily dismissed from the lawsuit after the filing of the class certification motion. See Doc. Nos. 239, 240 (dismissing Prevatte); Nos. 228, 230 (dismissing Dynacom); and Nos. 231, 234 (dismissing DJ's Autobody).

LEGAL STANDARD

HN1[] Rule 23 provides district [6] courts with broad discretion to determine whether a class should be certified, and to revisit that certification throughout the legal proceedings before the court. See Armstrong v. Davis, 275 F.3d 849, 872 n.28 (9th Cir. 2001). Before certifying a class, the trial court must conduct a "rigorous analysis" to determine whether the party seeking certification has met the prerequisites of Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Valentino v. Carter-Wallace, Inc., 97 F.3d 1227, 1234 (9th Cir. 1996). The proponent of the class bears the burden of demonstrating that class certification is appropriate. In re N.D. Cal., Dalkon Shield IUD Prods. Liab. Litig., 693 F.2d 847, 854 (9th Cir. 1982). HN2[] The party seeking certification must satisfy all requirements of Rule 23(a) and one of the subsections of Rule 23(b). Valentino, 97 F.3d at 1234. Rule 23(a) requires that the party seeking certification show:

(1) the class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable;
(2) there are questions of law or fact common to the class;
(3) the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class, and

(4) the representative parties will fairly and [7] adequately protect the interests of the class.

HN3[] A class may be certified under Rule 23(b) where: (1) there is a risk of inconsistent of unfair adjudication; (2) the party opposing the class has acted or refused to act on grounds generally applicable to the class, making injunctive or declaratory relief appropriate as to the class as a whole; or (3) questions of law or fact common to members of the class predominate and a class action is superior to other available methods for fairly and efficiently adjudicating the controversy.

HN4[] In determining whether a plaintiff has met his burden of demonstrating that each element of Rule 23 has been satisfied, the court generally does not consider the merits of plaintiff's claims. See Burkhalter Travel Agency v. MacFarms Int'l, Inc., 141 F.R.D. 144, 152 (N.D. Cal. 1991). Rather, the court must take the substantive allegations of the complaint as true. See *Blackie v. ANALYSIS

HN7[] The essential elements of Plaintiffs' antitrust claim are: (1) violation of antitrust law; (2) injury - or "impact" - resulting from that violation; and (3) measurable damages. 15 U.S.C. § 15; In re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litig., 552 F.3d 305, 307 (3d Cir. 2008). [10] The primary dispute regarding the present motion for class certification centers around the "commonality" requirement of Rule 23(a)(2) and, specifically, whether proof of impact and damages resulting from the alleged conspiracy can be presented on a class-wide basis.

A class may not be certified unless the question whether the class paid artificially inflated prices as a result of Defendants' alleged conspiracy to fix prices is amenable to common proof. See, e.g., *In re Flash Memory Antitrust Litig., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 59491 44 (N.D. Cal. June 9, 2010). As noted in State v. Infineon Techs. AG, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 81251 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 5, 2008), HN8[] cases involving horizontal price-fixing are, as a practical matter, often certified. See *id. at * 26* (citing Paper Sys., Inc. v. Mitsubishi Corp., 193 F.R.D. 601, 612 (E.D. Wis. 2000); In re Commercial Tissue Prods., 183 F.R.D. 589, 595 (N.D. Fla. 1998)). "However, this does not hold true when injury or impact can be shown only on an individualized basis. See, e.g., Robinson v. Texas Auto Dealers Ass'n, 387 F.3d 416, 424 (5th Cir. 2004); In re Indust. Diamonds Antitrust Litig., 167 F.R.D. 374 (S.D.N.Y. 1996)." Id.; see also In re Methionine Antitrust Litig., 204 F.R.D. 161, 166 (N.D. Cal. 2001) [11] (denying class certification where plaintiffs lacked colorable method of determining injury in fact on a class-wide basis); Allied Orthopedic Appliances, Inc. v. Tyco Healthcare Group L.P., 247 F.R.D. 156, 167, n.12 (C.D. Cal. 2007) (Pfaelzer, J.) ("Even in conspiracy cases courts have cautioned against simply presuming class-wide impact on the basis of speculative expert testimony without any consideration of whether the markets or the alleged conspiracy at issue ... actually operated in such a manner so as to justify that presumption.").

Also at issue in this motion is the question of the effect of the Supreme Court's recent [*369] decision in Wal-Mart Stores. To the extent that Defendants are arguing that Wal-Mart Stores categorically precludes certification in this case, they overreach. The appeal in that case raised the issue of whether a nationwide class should have been certified under Rule 23(b)(2) where the plaintiffs therein attempted to demonstrate the common issue of company-wide gender discrimination chiefly through "statistical evidence about pay and promotion disparities between men and women at the company, anecdotal reports of discrimination from about 120 of Wal-Mart's female [12] employees, and the testimony of a sociologist... who conducted a "social framework analysis" of Wal-Mart's 'culture' and personnel practices, and concluded that the company was 'vulnerable' to gender discrimination. 180 L. Ed. 2d at 387. The Supreme Court rejected this approach, holding that the plaintiffs were required to show either that Wal-Mart used a biased testing procedure for employee advancement or operated under a general policy of discrimination, Id. at 391-92. Here, by contrast, the existence of a "general policy" of price-fixing is - at least for the purpose of this motion - undisputed. The question to be resolved is, once again, whether Plaintiffs will be able to present proof of impact and damages resulting from this alleged policy on a class-wide basis. Nothing in Wal-Mart Stores suggests that Plaintiffs will inevitably be unable to present such evidence in this case.

A. Can antitrust impact be proved through common evidence here?

As summarized in *In re Plastics Additives Antitrust Litigation, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90135, 14-16 (E.D. Pa. Aug. 31, 2010):

[2] To the extent that Defendants read the quoted language from Wal-Mart Stores as requiring plaintiffs to "prove common class-wide injury even at the class certification stage," Suppl. 4:4-5, this Court disagrees. Rather, HN6[] Plaintiffs must show that the claims of the class "depend upon a common contention .... of such a nature that it is capable of classwide resolution — which means that determination of its truth or falsity will resolve an issue that is central to the validity of each one of the claims in one stroke." Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 180 L. Ed. 2d at 389-90.

> HN9[] In antitrust cases, "[p]roof of injury (whether or not an injury occurred at all) must be distinguished from calculation [13] of damages (which determines the actual value of the injury)." [Citation]. The individual injury element is also known as antitrust impact, and "to prevail on the merits, every class member must prove at least some antitrust impact resulting from the alleged violation." [Citation]. Impact often is critically important for the purpose of evaluating Rule 23(b)(3)'s predominance requirement because it is an element of the claim that may call for individual, as opposed to common, proof." [Citation]. "Plaintiffs' burden at the class certification stage is not to prove the element of antitrust impact, although in order to prevail on the merits each class member must do so." [Citation]. "Instead, the task for plaintiffs at class certification is to demonstrate that the element of antitrust impact is capable of proof at trial through evidence that is common to the class rather than individual to its members." [Citation]. "[T]he question at [the] class certification stage is whether, if such impact is plausible in theory, it is also susceptible to proof at trial through available evidence common to the class." [Citation]. Accordingly, in determining whether Plaintiffs have met their burden, [14] we must rigorously assess the "available evidence and the method or methods by which [P]laintiffs propose to use the evidence to prove impact at trial." [Citation].

In Robinson, HN10[] the Fifth Circuit held that generalized proof of purchases at an inflated price is acceptable for purposes of showing the predominance of common issues at class certification. 387 F.3d at 422-23. See also In re Static Random Access Memory (SRAM) Antitrust Litig., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 141809 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 13, 2010). Often in cases involving negotiated transactions, as opposed to purchases based on list prices, such common proof is elusive. See, e.g., Robinson, 387 F.3d at 422; In re Indus. Diamonds Antitrust Litig., 167 F.R.D. 374, 382-84 (S.D.N.Y. 1996); *In re Flash Memory Antitrust Litig., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 59491 at 45. Here, by contrast, where the amounts paid by class members were based on published catalogue prices, the question of impact is, at least in theory, easily susceptible to common proof. [3] Note, though, that [*370] the court in In re Plastic Additives Antitrust Litigation, found that the expert evidence relying on price listings, rather than "transactional data" without any empirical analysis, [15] was too general to demonstrate class-wide impact due to price increase. *2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90135 at 17-55.

1. Expert Reports

In resolving the question of common impact, the expert reports are key. As noted in Pecover v. Elec. Arts Inc., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 140632 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 21, 2010):

[3] Defendants dispute whether Plaintiffs have established the existence of a "pricing structure" (i.e., "that the prices paid by different purchasers for the same product from a single seller, or for the same product from different sellers, tend to move together over time," Lamb Rep. ¶ 60), noting that graphs relied on by Plaintiffs' expert show that E-Lite, for example, charged "very disperse" prices to different customers for the same parts. Opp. 31:1-2. Defendants argue that "[t]he only possible explanation for such widespread price dispersion is that Eagle Eyes/E-Lite individually negotiated prices with these customers." Opp. 31:13-14.

Nevertheless, as observed by the court in In re Dynamic Random Access Memory Antitrust Litig., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 39841 (N.D. Cal. June 5, 2006):

> In a number of price-fixing cases, courts have certified classes where plaintiffs have alleged that defendants conspired to set an artificially inflated base — or "benchmark" price — from which all other prices are triggered. See, e.g., In re Vitamins Antitrust Litig., 209 F.R.D. at 266; In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 191 F.R.D. at 486; [16] In re Potash Antitrust Litig., 159 F.R.D. 682, 696 n. 19 (D. Minn. 1995); In re Domestic Air Transp. Antitrust Litig., 137 F.R.D. 677, 696 (N.D. Ga. 1991). Notably, classes were certified in these cases regardless whether some members of the class negotiated price individually, or whether — as here —differences among product type, customer class, and method of purchase existed. See, e.g., In re Indus. Diamonds Antitrust Litig., 167 F.R.D. at 383; *Arden Architectural Specialties v. Washington Mills Electro Minerals, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21506, 2002 WL 31421915, 9 (W.D. N.Y. 2002).

*Id. at 47-48. Thus, even if there were instances where class members separately negotiated prices on occasion, it would not necessarily preclude class certification.

> The admissibility of opinion testimony is governed by Article VII of the Federal Rules of Evidence ("FRE"). HN11[] FRE 702 provides that opinions relating to "scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge" may be admitted if they will "assist the trier of fact [17] to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue." Id. The testimony may only be admitted if "(1) [it] is based on sufficient facts or data, (2) [it] is the product of reliable principles and methods, and (3) the witness has applied the principles and methods reliably to the facts of this case." Id. The court has a duty to ensure that expert testimony is both relevant and reliable. Kumho Tire Co. v. Carmichael, 526 U.S. 137, 147, 119 S. Ct. 1167, 143 L. Ed. 2d 238 (1999) (citing Daubert v Merrell Dow Pharms, 509 U.S. 579, 589, 113 S. Ct. 2786, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469 (1993)). To this end, the trial judge must "determine whether the testimony has a "reliable basis in the knowledge and experience of [the relevant] discipline,'" id. at 149 (citing Daubert, 509 U.S. at 592) (brackets in original).

Id. at 4-5*.

The Supreme Court has recently strongly indicated that Daubert should be applied to expert testimony at the certification stage of class action proceedings. See Wal-Mart Stores, 180 L. Ed. 2d at 392 ("The District Court concluded that Daubert did not apply to expert testimony at the certification stage of class-action proceedings. We doubt that is so...") (citation omitted). Accordingly, [18] in order to grant class certification, this Court must first determine whether it may rely on the methodology used by Plaintiffs' expert to decide whether the claims in this case are amenable to common proof.

There is no dispute between the parties in this case regarding their respective experts' qualifications to serve as expert witnesses. HN12[] "Once a court finds that the proposed witness qualifies as an expert, it 'must determine whether the testimony has 'a reliable basis in the knowledge and experience of [the relevant] discipline. [Citation].'" *Pecover, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 140632 at 10. As the court noted in Pecover, our concern is not with "what the experts say," but, rather "what basis they have for saying it." Id. (citing Daubert v Merrell Dow Pharms, 43 F3d 1311, 1317 (9th Cir 1995) (on remand) ("Daubert II")). "[T]he test under Daubert [*371] is not the correctness of the expert's conclusions but the soundness of his methodology." Daubert II, 43 F.3d at 1318.

> HN13[] While there is no definitive checklist or test, Daubert, 509 U.S. at 593, courts have identified several non-exclusive and non-dispositive factors as potentially relevant to the reliability inquiry, including: (1) "whether a [method] [19] can be (and has been) tested," (2) "whether the [method] has been subjected to peer review and publication," (3) "the known or potential rate of error," (4) "the existence and maintenance of standards controlling the [method's] operation," (5) "a degree of acceptance" of the method within "a relevant community," id. at 593-94, (6) whether the expert is "proposing to testify about matters growing naturally and directly out of research they have conducted independent of the litigation," Daubert II, 43 F3d at 1317, (7) whether the expert has unjustifiably extrapolated from an accepted premise to an unfounded conclusion, [citation], (8) whether the expert has adequately accounted for obvious alternative explanations, [citation], whether the expert "employs in the courtroom the same level of intellectual rigor that characterizes the practice of an expert in the relevant field," Kumho Tire, 526 U.S. at 152, and (10) whether the field of expertise claimed by the expert is known to reach reliable results for the type of opinion the expert would give, see id. at 151.

*Pecover, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 140632 at 10 (ellipses omitted; all other alterations in original except for brackets indicating [20] omitted citations).

Plaintiff's expert (Dr. Lamb) identifies the following seven factors in his report that support a finding of common classwide impact: (1) stable demand for AALPs arising from a mature market, (2) market dominance by Defendants, (3) lack of a competitive fringe during the proposed Class Period that could have effectively disciplined the effects of the proposed cartel, (4) the existence of a pricing structure adopted by Defendants, (5) interchangeability of AALPs, (6) barriers to entry, and (7) lack of economic substitutes for AALPs.

2. Regression Analysis

Dr. Lamb employs a regression analysis to demonstrate to demonstrate how overcharges attributable to the alleged conspiracy could be measured on a classwide basis by comparing pricing during and after the conspiracy period. "A regression is a statistical tool designed to express the relationship between one variable, such as price, and explanatory variables that may affect the first variable. Regression analysis can be used to isolate the effect of an alleged conspiracy on price, taking into consideration other factors that might also influence price, like cost and demand." *In re Plastics Additives Antitrust Litig., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90135 at 57-58 n.13.

In [21] a Supplemental Brief filed July 7, 2011, Defendants seem to argue that the Supreme Court's decision in Wal-Mart Stores prevents Plaintiffs from being able to rely on their regression analysis to prove commonality. The crux of that argument is as follows:

> As in Wal-Mart, Plaintiffs here proffer a regression purporting to show that - on average - prices of select products were impacted and therefore individual class members were impacted, and that the calculated average can be applied to determine injury and damages on a classwide basis. However, just as it was illogical in Wal-Mart to assume from a regression showing disparity in the number of men and women employed by Wal-Mart at the regional or national level that any particular proposed member of the class was the subject of discriminatory hiring practices, it is equally implausible to infer that an "average" of a group of selected products showing a net overcharge necessarily means that there was an overcharge for any particular product.

Suppl. 7:17-8:1. The comparison to Wal-Mart Stores is not compelling. In that case, the Supreme Court found that the plaintiffs' expert's statistical analysis was deficient because (1) "[i]nformation [22] about disparities at the regional and national level does not establish the existence of disparities at individual [*372] stores, let alone raise the inference that a company-wide policy of discrimination is implemented by discretionary decisions at the store and district level," 180 L. Ed. 2d at 393-394 (quoting Dukes v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 603 F.3d 571, 637 (9th Cir. 2010) (Ikuta, J., dissenting)), and (2) even assuming proof of a disparity "in all of Wal-Mart's 3,400 stores," plaintiffs had not identified any "specific employment practice" that might be responsible for it, id. at 394.

Even though these are obviously not the same types of deficiencies that Defendants purport to find with Plaintiffs' expert's reports in this case, this Court must still - for the reasons explained above - make a determination that the methodology employed by Plaintiffs' expert was sound.

3. Purported Flaws with Plaintiffs' Expert's Analysis

Plaintiffs assert that Defendants do not dispute four of the seven common factors identified by Dr. Lamb as supporting a finding of common classwide impact (viz., stable demand, market dominance, lack of competitive fringe during the Class Period, and existence of pricing [23] structure). This is somewhat uncharitable, as Defendants do appear to at least question Plaintiffs' assertions regarding competition and pricing structure in the strict sense. In any event, Defendants purport to point out numerous flaws in Dr. Lamb's methodology.

First, they argue that the regression analysis employed in his report fails to take into account the entry of "an aggressively growing new-competitor," i.e., Vision, into the marketplace. This does not appear to be entirely accurate, as the Lamb report refers repeatedly to Vision and concludes that it was not a major competitive force during the Class Period or, presumably, thereafter. See, e.g., Lamb Rep. ¶ 51 (referring to Vision's "limited influence"), 55, ¶¶ 79-80 (referring to effect of emergence of "two small fringe competitors"), and ¶ 92 (insufficient quality of competitive fringe's products). The Lamb report uses Defendants' pricing from March 2009 to May 2009 as a benchmark for comparing prices during the alleged conspiracy. Defendants' expert, Dr. Dornan, purports to show the impact of Vision's entry into the market to show there was no overcharge on products where Vision did not compete, as compared to a decline [24] of 34% on prices where there was competition. Plaintiffs note, however, that Dr. Dornan testified at his deposition that he was unaware of Vision' market share and made no analysis of the AALPs it sold. The Dornan Report does not establish that Vision was a significant competitor during the benchmark period, nor otherwise undermine Dr. Lamb's use of Defendants' pricing from March 2009 to May 2009 as a benchmark.

Next, Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' regression model is "unstable and implausible" because it employs an averaging method (averaging across products) that supposedly masks the need for individualized inquiry to determine whether any particular purchaser was overcharged. In particular, Dr. Dornan asserts that it was impermissible for Plaintiffs' expert to assume that the averaged regression for the 1,724 parts he chose to analyze could be applied to the 3,800 parts he did not analyze. Dornan Rep. 15-16.

Defendants urge that Dr. Lamb's regression model is similar to methodologies that have been rejected by various courts at the certification stage. See, e.g., *In re Plastic Additives, 2010 U.S. Dist LEXIS 90135 at 56-58 ("Plaintiffs' regressions cannot serve as proof of impact [25] common to the class members."); *Flash Memory, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 59491 at 59-60 (noting that plaintiffs' expert's analysis "fails to take into account the fact the wide range of different types of products with equally varied attributes"); In re Graphics Processing Units Antitrust Litig., 253 F.R.D. 478, 494 (N.D. Cal. 2008) ("GPU") ("While averaging may be tolerable in some situations, the record here shows that it has in fact masked important differences between products and purchasers."). Plaintiffs argue that this case is at least distinguishable from In re Plastics Additives, in which the court found that plaintiffs had "done no empirical analysis of the actual effect of the price increases upon which they rely," *2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90135 at 19, because, [*373] here, Dr. Lamb actually analyzed a large number of specific transactions. Moreover, there is actual evidence of a collusive price structure.

Plaintiffs further observe that courts have distinguished the ruling in GPU by noting that it involved highly customized products or that the expert regression analysis therein was flawed in certain basic ways. See In re TFT-LCD Antitrust Litig., 267 F.R.D. 583, 605 (N.D. Cal. 2010) [26] ("LCD II"). Moreover, the court in GPU actually certified a class of direct purchasers. 253 F.R.D. at 497-98. The decision in Flash Memory concerned the denial of certification of a class of indirect purchasers.

In addition to arguing that Plaintiffs' expert's use of averaging masks the need for individualized proof, Defendants make the more general argument that the volume of different products at issue in this case and the length of the Class Period both make it less likely that antitrust impact can be established by common proof. Defendants are at least correct that the Class Period is quite long. They do not, however, cite to any specific facts that would make it necessary for Plaintiffs to conduct a separate inquiry vis-a-vis distinct time periods, although this Court may eventually require such studies.

Defendants also dispute Plaintiffs' contentions regarding product interchangeability and lack of substitutions, two points (the latter one, certainly) going more or less directly to the question of market definition. While a faulty market definition might indeed call into question Plaintiffs' ability to offer common proof of an antitrust injury (more likely, though, it is a question [27] on the merits), Defendants have not shown that Dr. Lamb's conceptions of interchangeability and market substitutions are so flawed as to preclude class certification. As to the first point, Defendants purport to refute Plaintiffs' contention that "the quality of all of the Defendants' products was sufficiently comparable that proposed class members would have been able to base their purchasing decisions on price rather than quality." Lamb Rep. ¶ 76. In particular, they cite the testimony of two class representatives who stated that TYC products were superior in quality to Eagle Eyes and Depo, as well as testimony of other putative class members. Nevertheless, it is not clear that the fact the products compete on dimensions of quality as well as price would defeat certification. Moreover, Plaintiffs make the argument that the fact of the price-fixing agreement itself shows that the products competed. As to the second point, Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' expert incorrectly contends that there are no economic substitutes for AALPs and that both OEM and recycled/refurbished auto lights should be treated as market substitutions. [4] This contention is addressed in some detail in Dr. Lamb's [28] Reply Report and would not preclude certification.

Finally, Defendants dispute Dr. Lamb's conclusion that the amount of "fringe competition" was too small to affect Defendants' prices. Lamb Rep. ¶ 51. As with other points raised by Defendants, even assuming some error in Dr. Lamb's analysis in this regard, it is not clear that this dispute does not simply go to the ultimate merits of Plaintiffs' case rather than the question whether certification should be granted.

[4] In his initial Report, Dr. Lamb wrote, "It is my opinion that small changes in the price of aftermarket auto lights would not have an impact on the demand for either OEM or recycled/refurbished auto lights." Lamb Rept. ¶ 46. He further stated, "This means that while aftermarket auto lights might have certain functional substitutes, no economic substitutes exist for them." Id. (emphasis in original).

4. Courts Need Not Chose Between Experts

Dr. Lamb's report essentially tries to demonstrate commonality as to the issues of impact and damages by considering the "but for" world unaffected by Defendants' purported collusion, asserting that a regression analysis is a standard way to do this. Defendants do not necessarily dispute [29] this contention, they simply argue that Dr. Lamb's regression analysis is flawed. As Plaintiffs point out in their Reply, HN14[] in situations where a court is confronted with two opposing expert analyses or econometric models of what the "but for" world would look like, the Court is not supposed to decide at the certification [*374] stage which expert analysis or model is better. As set forth in In re TFT-LCD Antitrust Litig., 267 F.R.D. 291, 313 (N.D. Cal. 2010) ("LCDJ"):

> At the class certification stage, the Court's inquiry is limited to determining "whether plaintiffs have made a sufficient showing that the evidence they intend to present concerning antitrust impact will be made using generalized proof common to the class and that these common issues will predominate." DRAM [*In re Dynamic Random Access Memory Antitrust Litig.], 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 39841, 2006 WL 1530166, at 9. "[O]n a motion for class certification, the Court only evaluates whether the method by which plaintiffs propose to prove class-wide impact could prove such impact, not whether plaintiffs in fact can prove class-wide impact." *In re Magnetic Audiotape Antitrust Litig., No. 99 CIV 1580, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7303, 2001 WL 619305, at 4 (S.D.N.Y. June 1, 2001); [30] see also In re High Fructose Corn Syrup Antitrust Litig., 295 F.3d 651, 660 (7th Cir. 2002) (in certified direct purchaser class case, reversing grant of summary judgment in favor of defendants and holding that expert battle over regression variables was an issue for trial: "[t]he defendants presented a competing regression analysis done by one of their economic experts, who added a couple of variables to the analysis of the plaintiffs' expert and, presto, the [key] variable ceased to be statistically significant." n15); Natchitoches Parish Hosp. Serv. Dist. v. Tyco Intern., Ltd., 247 F.R.D. 253, 270 (D. Mass. 2008) ("To determine predominance, a court need not plunge into the weeds of an expert dispute about potential technical flaws in an expert methodology.").

While Defendants' arguments in their initial Opposition brief are obviously better than their arguments that rely on Wal-Mart Stores they are, for the most part, sufficiently rebutted by the arguments in Plaintiffs' Reply papers, their expert's responsive declaration, and relevant case law. Again, Defendants do not appear to dispute that a regression analysis is a "standard" way to develop a hypothetical "but for" world as [31] a means of analyzing the impact of Defendants' alleged collusive practices. Thus, Plaintiffs argue, Defendants have conceded that there is a way to prove or disprove Plaintiffs' claims on a classwide basis "even if their experts disagree as to the application of that methodology." Reply 11:18. Hence the Court would tentatively conclude that Dr. Lamb's report provides a sufficient basis from which to conclude that Plaintiffs would adduce common proof concerning the effect of Defendants' alleged price-fixing conspiracy on prices class members paid for AALPs.

B. Adequacy of Representation

In addition to their arguments against commonality, Defendants also make two arguments regarding adequacy of representation under Rule 23(a)(4). First, they contend that neither Plaintiffs Sioux Plating nor MPI are adequate because they bought most (or, in MPI's case, all) of their AALPs from Genera. Second, they contend that Sioux Plating is inadequate because it views Genera as a "preferred" vendor and is a warehouse distributor for Genera. As Plaintiffs note, however, HN15[] "[i]n an antitrust price fixing case in which the class representative has alleged a broad conspiracy, courts have not required... that [32] the representative ha[s] purchased from all of the defendants or that he ha[s] been adversely affected by all of the means and methods by which the alleged conspiracy was implemented." In re S. Cen. States Bakery Prods. Antitrust Litig., 86 F.R.D. 407, 418 (M.D. La. 1980); accord In re NASDAQ Market-Makers Antitrust Litig., 169 F.R.D. 493, 511 (S.D.N.Y. 1996). Similarly, the fact that Sioux Plating is a warehouse distributor for Genera does not render it inadequate as a class representative. See Natchitoches Parish Hosp. Serv Dist. v. Tyco Int'l, Ltd., 247 F.R.D. 253, 265-66 (D. Mass. 2008) (claim of distributor class representative who allegedly received benefits from defendant's conduct was not at odds with interests of claims by a class that included end-users). Thus, the Court would reject Defendants' arguments that Plaintiffs cannot demonstrate adequacy of representation.

[*375] C. Class Certification is Appropriate.

In light of the above discussion, the Court would conclude that class certification is warranted in this case. The requirements of Rule 23(a) are satisfied. First, the class is sufficiently numerous. Dr. Lamb estimates that Genera, Maxzone and E-Lite had, respectively, 406, [33] 540 and 71 customer numbers associated with positive sales amounts in their transaction level data during the Class Period. Lamb Rep. ¶ 24. Thus, the proposed class numbers at least in the hundreds. Second, Plaintiffs have shown that there are questions of law or fact common to the class. Third, the claims of the representative plaintiffs are typical of those of the class. Although, in the above discussion of Plaintiffs' ability to demonstrate antitrust impact on a classwide basis, the requirements of commonality and typicality tend to merge, it is clear that both are satisfied. Finally, the proposed class representatives are adequate.

Certification is appropriate under Rule 23(b)(3). Plaintiffs have established that questions of law or fact common to the members of the class predominate over any questions affecting only individual members. They have also demonstrated that a class action would be a superior method of adjudication to numerous individual lawsuits. The matters pertinent to a finding that a class action is a superior method of adjudication include: (a) the interest of members of the class in individually controlling the prosecution or defense of separate actions; (b) the [34] extent and nature of any litigation concerning the controversy already commenced by or against members of the class; (c) the desirability or undesirability of concentrating the litigation of the claims in the particular forum; (d) the difficulties likely to be encountered in the management of a class action. Zinser v. Accufix Research Institute, Inc., 253 F.3d 1180, 1189 (9th Cir.), on rehearing, 273 F.3d 1266 (9th Cir. 2001); In re Tableware Antitrust Litig., 241 F.R.D. 644, 651 (N.D. Cal. 2007).

"In antitrust cases such as this, the damages of individual direct purchasers are likely to be too small to justify litigation, but a class action would offer those with small claims the opportunity for meaningful redress. A class action is the superior method of resolving this controversy." In re Static Random Access Antitrust Litig., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 107523 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 29, 2008); accord LCD I, 267 F.R.D. at 314-315. Class certification in this case would be far superior to, and more manageable than, any other procedure available for the treatment of the factual and legal issues raised by Plaintiffs' claims.

D. Appointment of Class Counsel

Previously, the Court appointed four counsel [35] as Interim Counsel in these cases. Their work in prosecuting this action has been effective and efficient. These counsel would therefore be appointed as Direct Purchaser Class Counsel.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification would be granted.

ORDER

This matter comes before the Court pursuant to Astellas's Motion to Dismiss (Doc. # 16), which was filed on November 19, 2010. Lakeland Regional Medical Center filed a Response in Opposition to the Motion (Doc. # 34) on January 21, 2011. [*2] Astellas filed a Reply Memorandum (Doc. # 42) on February 11, 2011. For the reasons that follow, the Court denies the Motion to Dismiss in this antitrust case.

I. Factual and Procedural Background

Lakeland Regional, a "full-service hospital," is a not-for-profit Florida corporation with its headquarters in Lakeland, Florida. (Doc. # 11 at ¶ 7). Defendants Astellas US, LLC and Astellas Pharma US, Inc. (collectively, "Astellas") are Delaware corporations with headquarters in Deerfield, Illinois. Id. at ¶ 8. Astellas is the exclusive licensee of two patents involving the administration of adenosine to patients undergoing cardiac stress tests. Lakeland Regional alleges that Astellas has engaged in unlawful, anticompetitive, monopolistic, and exclusionary activity with respect to adenosine in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2, the Clayton Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 14, Florida antitrust law, and Florida common law.

A. Stress Tests and Use of Adenosine

Physicians use a test known as myocardial perfusion imaging to diagnose a condition known as cardiac artery disease, one of the leading causes of death in the United States. Id. at ¶ 9. Myocardial perfusion imaging is [*3] usually done while the patient is placed under "stress" in order to maximize the accuracy of the test. Id. at ¶ 10. Physicians induce stress by requiring patients to exercise on a treadmill. Id. When patients are unable to exercise on a treadmill, physicians create "pharmacological stress" through the administration of adenosine. Id. Adenosine is a naturally occurring compound that induces the dilation of blood vessels. Id. at ¶ 12.

Even when patients are capable of exercise, physicians often use adenosine to further stress the heart, in order to increase the accuracy of the stress test. Id. Administration of adenosine is the medically recognized standard of care when pharmacologic stress is required to perform myocardial perfusion imaging. Id. When adenosine is required for myocardial perfusion imaging, more than 90% of the adenosine is suppled by Astellas. Id. Further, adenosine is administered to cardiac patients in more than 90% of cardiac stress tests conducted nationwide. Id. In addition to stress tests, adenosine is also used to treat a condition known as paroxysmal supraventricular tachycardia. Id.

Two patents are implicated here. The patents are owned by King Pharmaceuticals, [*4] Inc., but Astellas is the exclusive licensee of such patents: the 5,070,877 patent and the 5,731,296 patent. Id. at ¶¶ 17-18. The '877 Patent relates solely to the use of Astellas's adenosine product "Adenoscan®," for its vasodilative properties when used in conjunction with myocardial imaging. Id. at ¶ 18. The '877 Patent expired on May 18, 2009. Id. The '296 Patent covers a method of continuous adenosine infusion, and it will expire on March 24, 2015. Id. Both patents encompass the process of using adenosine during myocardial imaging. The patents do not cover Astellas's adenosine product, because adenosine is unpatentable. Id. at ¶ 22.

Several other companies sell an adenosine product that is not meaningfully distinguishable from Astellas's adenosine product. Id. Astellas charges $8.05 per ml. of Adenoscan, compared with $1.76 per ml. for generic adenosine—approximately 450% more per unit than its generic counterpart. Id. at ¶ 23.

It is Astellas's position that the '296 Patent grants Astellas exclusivity for the only medically recognized process to administer adenosine during myocardial perfusion imaging, even after the expiration of the '877 Patent. Id. at ¶ 19. The majority of all [*5] myocardial perfusion imaging stress tests are administered using the process patented by the '296 Patent. Id. No other medically recognized process for inducing stress for myocardial perfusion imaging is available. Id.

B. Astellas's Communications with Lakeland Regional

On July 31, 2008, Astellas transmitted a letter to Lakeland Regional indicating that Lakeland Regional must purchase Adenoscan for use in myocardial perfusion imaging procedures after expiration of the '877 Patent and that use of generic adenosine during such procedures would constitute infringement of the '296 Patent. Id. at ¶ 24. Among other things, the letter stated:

> [S]ale of . . . an Adenoscan® substitute for that use [in myocardial perfusion imaging] is currently protected by two independent United States patents . . . . When Adenoscan® is purchased from Astellas, the purchaser is given permission to use the drug as an adjunct for MPI. But when adenosine from an unauthorized source is used for MPI . . . the seller and the user are infringing both the '877 and the '296 patents and thus could be liable for patent infringement . . . . [E]ven after May 18, 2009, only Astellas . . . will be legally permitted to use adenosine [*6] as an adjunct for MPI.

Id. at ¶ 26.

In a letter dated September 14, 2009, Astellas explained to Lakeland Regional:

> While there is no patent that covers the composition, adenosine, this method of use patent precludes the use of generic adenosine for MPI as a substitute for Adenoscan®. Astellas is the only party that can authorize the patented use of an adenosine infusion for MPI studies. Such permission is only granted when Adenoscan® is purchased . . . from Astellas.

Id. at ¶ 28 (emphasis in original).

C. Lakeland Regional's Complaint

Lakeland Regional contends that Astellas "has attempted to effectively extend its '877 Patent beyond its expiration date by requiring the use of only Adenoscan®, or an Adenoscan® substitute, purchased through an Astellas-authorized company for use as an adjunct therapy to MPI." Id. at ¶ 35. Lakeland Regional characterizes Astellas's conduct as "anticompetive." Id. at ¶ 36.

Lakeland Regional initiated this action against Astellas on September 13, 2010, and filed an amended class action complaint on October 19, 2010. (Doc. ## 1, 11). Lakeland Regional's amended complaint arrays the following counts against Astellas: unlawful tying (count one), exclusive dealing [*7] (count two), attempted monopolize (count three), unreasonable restraint of trade (count four), attempted monopolization (count five), and tortious interference with a prospective economic advantage(count six).

Astellas responded to the amended complaint by filing a 55 page Motion to Dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. (Doc. # 16). Generally, Astellas asserts that dismissal is warranted because Lakeland Regional lacks standing, has failed to demonstrate an injury in fact, and has failed to state a claim upon which relief may be granted. The Court will address these arguments and others below.

II. Legal Standard

On a motion to dismiss, this Court accepts as true all the allegations in the complaint and construes them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Jackson v. Bellsouth Telecomms., 372 F.3d 1250, 1262 (11th Cir. 2004). Further, this Court favors the plaintiff with all reasonable inferences from the allegations in the complaint. Stephens v. Dep't of Health & Human Servs., 901 F.2d 1571, 1573 (11th Cir. 1990) ("On a motion to dismiss, the facts stated in [the] complaint and all reasonable inferences therefrom are taken as true."). However, [*8] in Twombly, an antitrust case, the Supreme Court cautioned:

> While a complaint attacked by a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss does not need detailed factual allegations, a plaintiff's obligation to provide the grounds of his entitlement to relief requires more than labels and > conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do. Factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level.

Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)(internal citations omitted). Further, courts are not "bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation." Papasan v. Allain, 478 U.S. 265, 286, 106 S. Ct. 2932, 92 L. Ed. 2d 209 (1986).

This Court's analysis is confined to the four corners of the complaint. Astellas has filed an assortment of documents as exhibits to the Motion to Dismiss. The Court has not reviewed the exhibits and is therefore not required to convert the Motion to Dismiss into a motion for summary judgment pursuant to Rule 12(d) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Without the benefit of discovery, it would be premature for the Court to conduct summary judgment analysis.

Furthermore, the Eleventh Circuit has cautioned that "Rule 12(b)(6) [*9] dismissals are particularly disfavored in fact-intensive antitrust cases." Spanish Broad. Sys. v. Clear Channel Commc'ns, 376 F.3d 1065, 1070 (11th Cir. 2004)(citations omitted). Moreover, as explained in Amey, Inc. v. Gulf Abstract & Title, Inc., 758 F.2d 1486, 1502 (11th Cir. 1985), "'summary procedures should be used sparingly in complex antitrust litigation where motive and intent play leading roles, the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators, and hostile witnesses thicken the plot.'" (quoting Norfolk Monument Co. v. Woodlawn Mem'l Gardens, 394 U.S. 700, 704, 89 S. Ct. 1391, 22 L. Ed. 2d 658 (1969)).

III.Analysis

A.Standing

As a threshold matter, this Court must determine whether Lakeland Regional has standing to bring this action. Pierson v. Orlando Reg'l Healthcare Sys., Inc., 619 F. Supp. 2d 1260, 1274 (M.D. Fla. 2009). Astellas challenges Lakeland Regional's standing by arguing that Lakeland Regional has not alleged an Article III "injury in fact," has not alleged an "antitrust injury" and has not satisfied the Illinois Brick rule.

1.Injury in Fact

As explained in Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560-61, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351 (1992), "[T]he irreducible constitutional minimum of standing contains three elements. [*10] First, the plaintiff must have suffered an injury in fact . . . . [s]econd, there must be a causal connection between the injury and the conduct complained of . . . . [t]hird, it must be likely, as opposed to mere speculative, that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision." Id. (internal citations and quotation marks omitted). Astellas contends that Lakeland Regional lacks Article III "case or controversy" standing because Lakeland Regional has failed to allege an "injury in fact." Under Lujan, an injury in fact is "an invasion of a legally protected interest which is (a) concrete and particularized and (b) actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical." Id. at 560 (internal citations and quotation marks omitted).

The Court finds that Lakeland Regional has alleged an injury in fact. In its amended complaint, Lakeland Regional alleges that it has suffered monetary damages resulting from Astellas's alleged exclusive dealing and unlawful tying of its patented process to its unpatentable adenosine drug. Lakeland Regional also alleges that Astellas has specifically threatened to sue Lakeland Regional if Lakeland Regional purchases alternatives to Adenoscan.

At this stage [*11] of the proceedings, the Court would be mistaken to dismiss the amended complaint for lack of Article III standing when the complaint alleges that Lakeland Regional has suffered a specific economic injury due to Astellas's alleged conduct and that Astellas has threatened to sue Lakeland Regional for patent infringement concerning Astellas's unpatentable drug. Astellas relies on a bounty of cases that affirm the dismissal of antitrust actions due to lack of standing. However, upon close inspection, these cases were decided at the summary judgment stage. [1] The Court will not make the misstep of deciding the intricate and factually complex matters before it prematurely.

Satisfied that Lakeland Regional meets the standing requirements of Article III, the Court must determine whether Lakeland Regional has suffered an antitrust injury and whether Lakeland Regional's amended complaint satisfies the Illinois Brick rule. "Harm to the antitrust plaintiff is sufficient [*12] to satisfy the constitutional standing requirement of injury in fact, but the court must make a further determination whether the plaintiff is a proper party to bring a private antitrust action." Assoc. Gen. Contractors of Cal. v. Cal. State Council, 459 U.S. 519, 535, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 at n.31 (1983).

2.Antitrust Injury

As explained by the Eleventh Circuit in Gulf States Reorganization Group, Inc. v. Nucor Corp., 466 F.3d 961, 966 (11th Cir. 2006), in addition to the Article III standing requirements that apply to all federal plaintiffs, those "challenging violations of the antitrust laws must also show that they have suffered [an] 'antitrust injury' or 'injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful.'" (citing Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977)).

The Eleventh Circuit defined the parameters of an antitrust injury in Midwestern Waffles: "The injury must reflect the anticompetitive effect of either the violation of antitrust law or of the anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation, and it should be the type of loss which a violation of antitrust law would be likely to cause." 734 F.2d at 710. [*13] To have suffered an antitrust injury, "a person must be one against whom anticompetitive activity is directed, and not one who has merely suffered indirect, secondary, or remote injury." Id.

Although both parties have submitted voluminous pleadings, the Court must restrict its analysis to the complaint to determine whether Lakeland Regional has asserted an antitrust injury. In the amended complaint, Lakeland Regional claims that Astellas perpetrated an illegal tying arrangement. According to the amended complaint, Astellas has tied the purchase of an unpatented product with multiple uses to the patented license to perform a medical procedure. Lakeland Regional also alleges that Astellas has excluded potential competitors from the market for the tied product.

The amended complaint alleges a antitrust injury within its four corners. Without delving into whether Lakeland Regional has evidence necessary to support its amended complaint and without considering the voluminous documents attached to Astellas's Motion, the Court determines that Lakeland Regional has adequately alleged an antitrust injury in its amended complaint.

3.Illinois Brick Standing

At this preliminary stage, the Court is [*14] also satisfied that Lakeland Regional's amended complaint does not run afoul of the standards set forth in Illinois Brick v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977) curtailing relief in indirect injury cases. There, the Court addressed the issue of whether plaintiffs asserting "pass-on" damages have standing to bring an antitrust action under the Clayton Act. The plaintiffs were government entities alleging that defendant brick manufacturers conspired to engage in price fixing, thus raising the price of cement bricks and eventually leading to inflation of the prices paid for finished government buildings. The Court determined that the plaintiffs were "indirect purchasers of concrete block, which passes through two separate levels in the chain of distribution before reaching [the plaintiffs]." Id. at 726. The Court ruled that the plaintiffs lacked standing because "[t]he legislative purpose in creating a group of private attorneys general to enforce the antitrust laws . . . is better served by holding direct purchasers to be injured to the fill extent of the overcharge paid by them than by attempting to apportion the overcharge among all that may have absorbed a part of it." Id. at 746 (citations [*15] omitted). Stated another way:

[1] See E.g., Midwestern Waffles, Inc. v. Waffle House, Inc., 734 F.2d 705 (11th Cir. 1984) and Kypta v. McDonald's Corp., 671 F.2d 1282 (11th Cir. 1982). Both cases involved review of antitrust claims at the summary judgment stage.

> An antitrust violation may be expected to cause ripples of harm to flow through the Nation's economy; but despite the broad wording of Section 4 [of the Clayton Act] there is a point beyond which the wrongdoer should not be held liable. It is reasonable to assume that Congress did not intend to allow every person tangentially affected by an antitrust violation to maintain an action to recover threefold damages for the injury to his business or property.

Assoc. Gen. Contractors of Cal., 459 U.S. at 534-35.

The Court has recognized several rationales for the direct purchaser rule of Illinois Brick: (1) it eliminates the complication of apportioning overcharges among purchasers in the chain of distribution; (2) it eliminates a pass-on defense for manufacturers, which would reduce the effectiveness of Clayton Act actions by diminishing the recovery available to plaintiffs; and (3) it eliminates the risk of multiple recoveries. Kan. v. Utilicorp United, Inc., 497 U.S. 199, 206-207, 110 S. Ct. 2807, 111 L. Ed. 2d 169 (1990).

However, as with many "brightline" rules, the Supreme Court has carved out exceptions to the Illinois Brick direct purchaser rule and has limited application of Illinois Brick [*16] under certain factual scenarios. See UtiliCorp, 497 U.S. at 216 ("The rationales underlying Hanover Shoe and Illinois Brick will not apply with equal force in all cases."). This Court finds Lowell v. Am. Cyanamid Co., 177 F.3d 1228 (11th Cir. 1999) instructive. There, the district court dismissed an antitrust action under Illinois Brick due to the plaintiffs' failure to join various cyanamid distributors. The plaintiffs (a group of farmers) were not direct purchasers of the crop protection product at issue in the case, rather, the farmers purchased the products from a distributor. The Eleventh Circuit reversed the dismissal of the case holding "Illinois Brick has no application in this case." 177 F.3d at 1229.

The Lowell court explained:

> Illinois Brick was an extension of the Court's earlier prohibition against the defensive use of passing on in Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery, Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 491-94, 88 S. Ct. 2224, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231 (1968). In concluding that the indirect government purchaser of a product may not sue distant manufacturers, Illinois Brick cited two rationales. The first of these was that allowing offensive but not defensive use of pass-on would create a serious risk of multiple liability [*17] for defendants. Even though an indirect purchaser had already recovered for all or part of an overcharge passed on to it, the direct purchaser would still recover automatically the full amount of the overcharge that the indirect purchaser had shown to be passed on. . . . Second, as in Hanover Shoe, the Court was worried about the uncertainties and difficulties in analyzing price and out-put decisions in the real economic world rather than an economist's hypothetical model and of the costs to the judicial system and the efficient enforcement of the antitrust laws of attempting to reconstruct those decisions in the courtroom.

Lowell, 177 F.3d at 1229 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). In Lowell, the Eleventh Circuit determined that the aforementioned rationales underpinning Illinois Brick did not apply to the facts presented because the complaint did not contain allegations of "passing on," there were "no problems of double recovery" (because only one illegal act was alleged) and there was "only one set of potential plaintiffs." 177 F.3d at 1230. Furthermore, the Eleventh Circuit determined that "the economic and legal complexities outlined in Illinois Brick [*18] [were] absent." Id.

Lakeland Regional's amended complaint contains allegations tending to describe direct purchase from Astellas, possibly eliminating the Illinois Brick inquiry. However, these allegations are somewhat tenuous. As to direct purchase, Lakeland Regional alleges: "Defendant Astellas has distributed and continues to distribute adenosine products valued in the millions of dollars annually from their headquarters in Illinois to plaintiff LRM's place of business in Florida, and to other purchasers throughout the country. Payments are remitted from across the country to the defendant." (Doc. # 11 at ¶ 6) Lakeland Regional also alleges that Astellas "manufactures and sells" its adenosine products. Id. at ¶ 22. Further Lakeland Regional alleges that it (along with other healthcare providers) has been forced to "agree to purchase their needed supplies of adenosine from defendant Astellas and not from competing adenosine providers, as they would prefer to do." Id. at ¶ 59. [2]

Although these allegations do not use the words "direct purchase" the Court accepts them as alleging direct purchase from Astellas at this preliminary stage of the proceedings. [3] However, even if these allegations were insufficient to support the direct purchase requirement of Illinois Brick, the Court is still justified in denying the Motion to Dismiss to the extent it is based on Illinois Brick because Lakeland Regional has argued that Illinois Brick is inapplicable, as was the case in Lowell. In addition, Lakeland Regional correctly points out that Illinois Brick applies only to antitrust damages and does not stand as a [*20] bar to any party seeking injunctive relief and attorney's fees, which Lakeland Regional seeks in its amended complaint.

At this point, the Court is satisfied that Lakeland Regional is the proper plaintiff to bring this action, and it does not find that Illinois Brick is a bar to pursuing this action. However, the parties are free to reassert their arguments during the summary judgment stage, after the completion of discovery.

B. Tying

Astellas seeks dismissal of Lakeland Regional's federal and state law tying claims asserted under the Sherman Act, the Clayton Act, and Florida Statute Section 542.18, as asserted in counts one and four of the amended complaint. The elements of a tying claim [*21] are:

> 1) that there are two separate products, a "tying" product and a "tied" product; 2) that those products are in fact "tied" together - that is, the buyer was forced to buy the tied product to get the tying product; 3) that the seller possesses sufficient economic power in the tying product market to coerce buyer acceptance of the tied product; and 4) involvement of a "not insubstantial" amount of interstate commerce in the market of the tied product.

Thompson v. Metro. Multi-List, Inc., 934 F.2d 1566, 1574 (11th Cir. 1991)(internal citation omitted).

Astellas does not contend that Lakeland Regional failed to allege the essential elements for a tying claim in the amended complaint. Rather, Astellas argues that Lakeland Regional's tying claims are subject to dismissal because Lakeland Regional failed to allege "plausible relevant markets, two separate and distinct product markets, or anticompetitive effects in the tied product market." (Doc. # 16 at 50).

As explained in Thompson, "antitrust law is concerned with abuses of power by private actors in the marketplace." 934 F.2d at 1572. "The plaintiff bears an initial burden of demonstrating that the alleged agreement produced adverse, [*22] anti-competitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets, i.e., market power." Schering-Plough Corp. v. FTC, 402 F.3d 1056, 1065 (11th Cir. 2005).

[2] The Court rejects Astellas's argument, pursuant to Warren Gen. Hosp. v. Amgen, Inc., Case No. 09-cv-4935, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 56220, 2010 WL 2326254 (D.N.J. June 7, 2010), that Lakeland Regional's allegations are insufficient. In Warren, [*19] the court dismissed the antitrust case pursuant to Illinois Brick because the complaint failed to allege direct purchase, alleged that the product at issue was purchased through a wholesaler, and attached to the complaint was a copy of the wholesale agreement. In stark contrast, Lakeland Regional's amended complaint does not mention a wholesaler. If it is Astellas's position that Lakeland Regional purchases its adenosine product from a wholesaler, Astellas may present that argument, along with evidence in support of such argument, in a motion for summary judgment.

[3] Furthermore, neither Astellas nor Lakeland Regional attempts to categorize the allegations contained in the amended complaint as a "horizontal" or a "vertical" antitrust violation. In Lowell, the Eleventh Circuit indicated that Illinois Brick does not apply to certain vertical antitrust conspiracies: "The inapplicability of Illinois Brick to vertical conspiracies with no allegations of pass-on (what some have called the 'vertical conspiracy exception') has long been recognized." Lowell, 177 F.3d at 1231.

Astellas contends that Lakeland Regional cannot prove market power because the FDA has not approved any drug other than Astellas's adenosine drugs for use in myocardial perfusion imaging. In addition, Astellas argues that Lakeland Regional cannot show that the patented license and the unpatentable adenosine product are separate products. Furthermore, Astellas remarks that Lakeland Regional cannot prove anticompetitive effects. However, Lakeland Regional adequately alleges:

> Defendant Astellas has monopoly power - the power to control price or exclude competition - in the market for adenosine used in MPI in the United States . . . . The defendant also controls greater than 60% of sales of adenosine for all purposes in the United States. Defendant Astellas, plaintiff LRMC, and other health care providers recognize and perceive that "adenosine used for MPI" is a relevant product submarket, which the defendant controls. The defendant, the plaintiff, and other health care providers also recognize and perceive that the process [*23] used to administer adenosine to patients during MPI is a relevant product market, which patent defendant Astellas controls in the United States. The relevant geographical market . . . is the United States of America and its territories. The patented process used to perform continuous adenosine infusion in MPI, and the unpatented product, adenosine, are recognized and perceived by providers and purchasers as two distinct products.

(Doc. # 11 at ¶¶ 13-16).

In Gulfstream Park Racing Association v. Tampa Bay Downs, Inc., 294 F. Supp. 2d 1291, 1306-07 (M.D. Fla. 2003), the court explained, "In constructing a product market, an expert is to identify producers that provide customers of a defendant firm . . . with alternative sources for the defendant's product or services." This case has not reached the stage of the proceedings where expert testimony may be elicited. The Court rejects Astellas's argument that Lakeland Regional must provide the contours of the relevant markets at the complaint stage. At this stage, Lakeland Regional is not required to come forward with any evidence to prove that the allegations in its complaint are true. Here, Lakeland Regional has set forth adequate allegations [*24] to sustain a tying claim against Astellas, particularly with respect to the definition of plausible relevant markets and anticompetitive effects.

For the same reasons, the Court also declines to dismiss Lakeland Regional's state tying claim. State antitrust claims are generally governed by Federal antitrust law, and Astellas has not asserted separate grounds for dismissal of the state law antitrust claims. "Florida antitrust law defers to federal interpretation of Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act in interpreting what conduct violates Florida Statute Section 542.18." Gulfstream Park Racing, 294 F. Supp. 2d at 1306, n.38; see also Florida Statute Section 542.32 ("It is the intent of the Legislature that, in construing this chapter, due consideration and great weight be given to the interpretations of the federal courts relating to comparable federal antitrust statutes. . . ."); Levine v. Cent. Fla. Med. Affiliates, Inc., 72 F.3d 1538, 1556 n.20 (11th Cir. 1996)("the Florida courts held that the Florida legislature has, in effect, adopted as the law of Florida the body of anti-trust law developed by the federal courts under the Sherman Act.")(internal citation omitted).

C.Exclusive Dealing

In [*25] count two, Lakeland Regional asserts a claim for exclusive dealing under Section 1 of the Sherman Act and Section 3 of the Clayton Act. In an effort to vanquish this claim, Astellas asserts four distinct arguments. First, Astellas reasserts its argument that "Lakeland Regional has not alleged injury-in-fact, antitrust standing, or Illinois Brick standing." (Doc. # 16 at 40). However, the Court has determined that Lakeland Regional has alleged an injury-in-fact and has otherwise established standing to assert its antitrust claims. Accordingly, Astellas's first argument is unavailing.

Second, Astellas argues that Lakeland Regional's exclusive dealing count is "simply a re-packaging of its defective tying theory." Id. at 51. The Court rejects this argument because, as noted above, the Court has declined to dismiss Lakeland Regional's tying claims and does not find that such tying claims are "defective." Similarly, Astellas contends that the exclusive dealing count should be dismissed because Lakeland Regional has failed to "allege a plausible relevant market in which Adenoscan competes;" however, [*26] as noted above, the Court has determined that Lakeland Regional's market allegations are sufficient.

Fourth, Astellas argues that the exclusive dealing count must be dismissed because it fails the "rule of reason." As explained in Levine:

> Under the rule of reason, the test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. Rule of reason analysis requires the plaintiff to prove (1) an anticompetitive effect of the defendant's conduct on the relevant market, and (2) that the conduct has no procompetitive benefit or justification. In order to prove an anticompetitive effect on the market, the plaintiff may either prove that the defendant's behavior had an actual detrimental effect on competition, or that the behavior had the potential for genuine adverse effects on competition. In order to prove the latter, the plaintiff must define the relevant market and establish that the defendants possessed power in that market.

Levine, 72 F.3d at 1551 (internal citations omitted). In Spanish Broadcasting Systems of Florida, the Eleventh Circuit clarified that "in alleging [*27] the anticompetitive effect of the defendant's conduct, an antitrust plaintiff must show harm to competition rather than to competitors. That is, the anticompetitive effects are measured by their impact on the market rather than by their impact on competitors." 376 F.3d at 1072. (internal citations omitted).

The Court is satisfied that Lakeland Regional has properly asserted its exclusive dealing claim. Among other allegations, Lakeland Regional alleged in the amended complaint:

> [A]s a result of the exclusive dealing agreement, actual and potential competitors in the adenosine market have been foreclosed from selling to the plaintiff and other of defendant's customers, which represent a majority of the purchasers for adenosine. Competition in the adenosine market has been unreasonably and dramatically reduced nationwide, and that market is controlled by defendant Astellas, which has the power to control price and exclude competition in the market for adenosine.

(Doc. # 11 at ¶ 61). Lakeland Regional also alleges, "as a result of defendant Astellas's unlawful conduct, health care costs among plaintiff LRMC's patients, within this District and nationwide, have increased unreasonably above [*28] what they would have been in a competitive market." Id. at ¶ 62. Nothing so far presented to the Court persuades the Court that Lakeland Regional's claim fails the rule of reason. Accordingly, the Court declines to dismiss Lakeland Regional's exclusive dealing count at this stage of the proceedings.

D. Attempt to Monopolize

"A patent gives its owner the right to grant licenses, if it so chooses, or it may ride its wave alone until the patent expires." Schering-Plough Corp., 402 F.3d at 1067. "What patent law does not do, however, is extend the patentee's monopoly beyond its statutory right to exclude." Id. In this case, Lakeland Regional alleges in count three that Astellas has attempted to monopolize in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, which states:

> Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $100,000,000 if a corporation, or, if any other person, $1,000,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding 10 years, or [*29] both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

15 U.S.C. § 2. Likewise, in count five, Lakeland Regional alleges that Astellas has attempted to monopolize under Florida Statute Section 542.19, which states, "It is unlawful for any person to monopolize, attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons to monopolize any part of trade or commerce in this state." Id.

The Eleventh Circuit has ruled that, "to establish a violation of Section 2 for attempted monopolization, a plaintiff must show (1) an intent to bring about a monopoly and (2) a dangerous possibility of success." Levine, 72 F.3d at 1555 (internal citation omitted). The Eleventh Circuit has further explained that "to have a dangerous probability of successfully monopolizing a market the defendant must be close to achieving monopoly power. Monopoly power is the power to raise prices to supra-competitive levels or . . . the power to exclude competition in the relevant market either by restricting entry of new competitors or by driving existing competitors out of the market." U.S. Anchor Mfg. v. Rule Indus., 7 F.3d 986, 994 (11th Cir. 1993).

The Court determines that Lakeland Regional's complaint [*30] allegations are sufficient to state a claim for attempted monopolization under the governing authorities. Lakeland Regional alleges, among other things, that: "[D]efendant Astellas charges customers, such as plaintiff LRMC, 450% more for its adenosine than customers would pay for adenosine from alternative providers. Defendant Astellas is able to control the cost for adenosine, and is able to foreclose competitors from customers for adenosine." (Doc. # 11 at ¶ 69).

Lakeland Regional also submits:

> There is a dangerous probability that defendant Astellas will successfully attain and retain monopoly power in the . . . market and submarket. This dangerous probability is demonstrated by defendant Astellas' high and sustaining market shares, by the perception in the health care community that use of defendant Astellas' process patent for administering adenosine is the medically accepted standard of care, which creates barriers to entry, and by defendant Astellas' threatening and misleading communications regarding its process patent and the alleged extension of the patent to the product, Adenoscan®.

Id. at ¶ 74.

These allegations are sufficient at this juncture to survive the Motion to Dismiss.

E.Tortious [*31] Interference with Prospective Economic Advantage

Astellas has asserted generalized and specific arguments in pursuit of the dismissal of count six, for tortious interference with a prospective economic advantage. Astellas suggests that the Court should decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over this state law claim. The Court; however, has an unflagging duty to address the cases before it, and it will not avoid this duty by declining to exercise jurisdiction over this count.

Astellas also maintains that Lakeland Regional has failed to properly allege two elements required to state a claim. The Florida Supreme Court has enumerated the following required elements to state such a claim: "(1) the existence of a business relationship . . . ; (2) knowledge of the relationship on the part of the defendant; (3) an intentional and unjustified interference with the relationship by the defendant; and (4) damage to the plaintiff as a result of the breach of the relationship." Ethan Allen, Inc. v. Georgetown Manor, Inc., 647 So. 2d 812, 814 (Fla. 1994)(alteration in original).

Specifically, Astellas asserts that Lakeland Regional has failed to sufficiently plead elements three and four. In [*32] the amended complaint Lakeland Regional alleges, inter alia, "Defendant Astellas' interference with contractual relations between plaintiff LRMC and generic adenosine manufacturers is unjustified. Any purported pro-competitive justification for the tie is substantially outweighed by the anticompetitive effects in the adenosine market. Defendant Astellas' conduct resulted in an economic loss to the Plaintiff." (Doc. # 11 at ¶¶ 105-06).

Astellas also asserts affirmative defenses to Lakeland Regional's tortious interference claim. Particularly, Astellas argues: "Astellas's alleged 'interference' amounts to nothing more than the lawful exercise of its patent right to protect its own business interests." (Doc. # 16 at 53). Justification or privilege to interfere with a contract is an affirmative defense to a tortious interference action. See Abele v. Sawyer, 750 So. 2d 70, 75 (Fla. 4th DCA 1999). However, the mere presence of a possible affirmative defense, which has not yet been proven, does not present a basis for the dismissal of this claim.

IV.Conclusion

As adeptly stated in Schering-Plough Corp., "Although the exclusionary power of a patent may seem incongruous with the goals of antitrust [*33] law, a delicate balance must be drawn between the two regulatory schemes." 402 F.3d at 1067. In deciding the present Motion, the Court has attempted to strike an appropriate balance between the parties' conflicting interests. This Court has evaluated the parties' arguments and determines that dismissal of the complaint is not warranted.

Many of the arguments presented by Astellas are directed to matters outside of the four corners of the amended complaint. In passing on these arguments without delving into them, the Court has not determined that they are meritless. Rather, the Court finds that these arguments are prematurely asserted, and will be given due consideration at the appropriate stage of the proceedings if reasserted.

Accordingly, it is

ORDERED, ADJUDGED, and DECREED:

Astellas's Motion to Dismiss the Complaint (Doc. # 16) is DENIED.

DONE and ORDERED in Chambers in Tampa, Florida, this 25th day of July, 2011.

RULING

This matter is before the Court on numerous motions to dismiss filed by various defendants in this matter. Defendants Active Solutions, LLC, Brian Fitzpatrick, Henry J. Burkhardt, Ignace [*5] A. Perrin III, and Southerns Electronics Supply, Inc. ("Southern") (collectively, the "Active-Southern Defendants") have filed a motion to dismiss (doc. 233), which plaintiff CamSoft Data Systems, Inc. ("CamSoft") has opposed (doc. 249). CIBER, Inc. ("CIBER") (doc. 234) and Mark Kurt (doc. 238) have also filed motions to dismiss, which plaintiff has opposed (doc. 251). Defendants Dell Inc. and Dell Marketing, L.P. ("Dell") have filed a motion to dismiss (doc. 239), which plaintiff has opposed (doc. 250). Defendants Steve Reneker (doc. 240), Billy Ridge (doc. 241), and Heather Smith (doc. 242) have each filed motions to dismiss, which plaintiff has opposed (doc. 250). Defendant EarthLink, Inc. ("EarthLink") has filed a motion to dismiss (doc. 243), which plaintiff has opposed (doc. 253). Defendants Donald Berryman and Bill Tolpegin ("EarthLink Employee Defendants") have filed a motion to dismiss (doc. 245), which plaintiff has opposed (doc. 253). Defendant Motorola Solutions, Inc. ("Motorola") has filed a motion to dismiss (doc. 244), which plaintiff has opposed (doc. 253). Defendant MMR Constructors, Inc. ("MMR") has also filed a motion to dismiss (doc. 246), which plaintiff has opposed [*6] (doc. 251).

Plaintiff has requested oral argument (doc. 281). The Active-Southern Defendants (doc. 282) and CIBER (doc. 283) have opposed plaintiff's request for oral argument. After the filing of the aforementioned motions, the court granted CamSoft's request to file another amended complaint. The amendment was limited to CamSoft's claims under Sherman Act, Robinson-Patman, RICO, and state antitrust law. This ruling, therefore, does not address the merits of defendants' arguments regarding dismissal of plaintiff's Sherman Act, Robinson-Patman, RICO, or state antitrust law claims.

Rule 12(b)(6) provides for dismissal for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). In reviewing the complaint, courts accept all well-pleaded facts in the complaint as true. C.C. Port, Ltd. v. Davis-Penn Mortg. Co., 61 F.3d 288, 289 (5th Cir. 1995). Courts do not, however, accept as true all legal conclusions. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). Instead, "the complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Id. (quoting Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). [*7] That is, a plaintiff must provide sufficient factual content for the court to reasonably infer that the plaintiff is entitled to relief based upon the context of the case and the court's "judicial experience and common sense." Id. at 1949-50.

Courts, therefore, must first identify the conclusory allegations, which do not receive a presumption of truth, and then determine whether the remaining factual allegations plausibly give rise to an entitlement of relief. Id. at 1950.

Active-Southern Defendants

The Active-Southern Defendants have moved to dismiss CamSoft's Second Supplemental and Amended Complaint (doc. 205) (hereinafter "Complaint" [1]). First, the Active-Southern Defendants contend that "all delictual actions [2] have prescribed," citing the one year liberative prescriptive period applicable under Louisiana law. These defendants contend that CamSoft knew of its state law tort causes of action by January 10, 2006 and thus these claims have prescribed. However, the portions of the complaint cited by the Active-Southern Defendants do not support this argument and are mischaracterized by the defendants. Paragraphs 173, 184, and 191 show that CamSoft likely knew it had been excluded or "pushed [*8] aside" by the City of New Orleans and possibly others, but not necessarily the Active-Southern Defendants.

[1] Although plaintiff has filed a subsequent amended complaint (doc. 308), the amendment is limited to its Sherman, Robinson-Patman, RICO and state antitrust claims. As such, the third amended complaint (doc. 308) does not affect the outcome of this ruling.

[2] Referring to CamSoft's claims for fraud, tortious interference with business relations, breach of duty of confidential business relations, promissory estoppel, and violations of state antitrust laws.

In opposition, CamSoft asserts that its state law delictual causes of action did not accrue until September of 2009 when CamSoft asserts that it first learned of the Active-Southern Defendant's participation in the July 8, 2004 meeting and subsequent agreements with Dell and city employees. (Complaint, ¶ 86). See Jordan v. Emp. Transfer Corp., 509 So.2d 420 (La. 1987); Griffin v. Kinberger, 507 So.2d 821 (La. 1987). Accepting as true the factual allegations of the Complaint, the court presently declines to find that these delictual causes of action have prescribed.

Next, the Active-Southern Defendants seek dismissal of plaintiff's claim [*9] under the Louisiana Unfair Trade Practices Act (LUTPA), La. R.S. 51:1409, based on peremption. In opposition, CamSoft contends that its LUTPA claims involve the continuing violation doctrine and are limited in damages to one year before filing suit and thereafter. In support, CamSoft cites Tubos de Acero de Mexico, S.A. v. Am. Int'l Inv. Corp., 292 F.3d 471, 481-82 (5th Cir. 2002), for the proposition that Louisiana's one year peremptive period for unfair trade practices is subject to the continuing violation doctrine. However, this Court is also aware of Glod v. Baker, 899 So.2d 642, 647 (La. App. 3d Cir. 2005), which distinguishes Tubos and notes that a "strong line of Louisiana jurisprudence" holds that the continuing tort doctrine does not apply to suspend a peremptive period, including the peremptive period applicable in Louisiana unfair trade practices claims. See Canal Marine Supply, Inc. v. Outboard Marine Corp., 522 So.2d 1201 (La. App. 4th Cir. 1988). This court is persuaded by the reasoning and authorities cited in Glod. As such, we hold that CamSoft's LUTPA claims against the Active-Southern defendants are prescribed and should therefore be dismissed.

The Active-Southern [*10] Defendants also seek dismissal of plaintiff's claims for misappropriation of trade secrets. Louisiana Revised Statute § 51:1436 provides, "[a]n action for misappropriation must be brought within three years after the misappropriation is discovered or by the exercise of reasonable diligence should have been discovered." CamSoft alleges that Active-Southern Defendants misappropriated plaintiff's trade secrets by disclosing them to city employees and Dell at a meeting on July 8, 2004. However, CamSoft alleges that it was not aware of this action until September 2009 (Complaint, ¶ 86). Whether or not the Active-Southern Defendants can eventually produce evidence regarding when plaintiff actually knew or should have known of the misappropriation of trade secrets is not presently before the court. Accepting as true the factual allegations in the Complaint, compared with the language of § 51:1436, the court declines to hold that plaintiff's misappropriation of trade secrets claim against the Active-Southern Defendants has prescribed.

Defendants also assert that plaintiff has disclosed its trade secrets to third parties with no obligation to maintain the confidentiality of the information. [*11] However, the court finds that plaintiff has alleged sufficient factual allegations to assert that it reasonably attempted to prevent disclosure of its trade secrets. As such, the court will not presently grant dismissal on this basis.

Defendants next contend that all claims asserted against them are time-barred under La. R.S. § 12:1502, which is entitled "Actions against persons who control business organizations." CamSoft alleges that CamSoft, Active, and Southern were involved in a joint venture. Louisiana Revised Statute § 12:1502(B) notes that the statute specifically applies to partnerships, and as defendants correctly assert, joint ventures are governed by Louisiana partnership law. Broadmoor, L.L.C. v. Ernest N. Morial New Orleans Exhibition Hall Auth., 867 So.2d 651, 663 (La. 2004). As such, the time periods of §12:1502 are applicable to certain specified claims by CamSoft against the Active-Southern Defendants.

Subsection (C) of §12:1502 establishes a one year prescriptive period for claims including breach of fiduciary duty and gross negligence. Subsection (D) provides a two year prescriptive period for claims of intentional tortious misconduct, intentional breach of duty of loyalty, [*12] intentional unlawful distribution, and acts or omissions in bad faith or involving fraud or a knowing and intentional violation of law. Subsections (C) and (D) also establish a three year peremptive period that runs from the date of the alleged act or omission. La. R.S. §12:1502 ("but in no event shall an action covered by the provisions of this Subsection be brought more than three years from the date of the alleged act or omission"). Because the three year peremptive period runs from the date of the alleged act or omission, the Active-Southern Defendants assert that the acts or omissions alleged against the Active-Southern Defendants largely occurred in 2004 and 2005 and, according to the Complaint, no later than January 2006. CamSoft did not file suit until September 2009.

In opposition, CamSoft attempts to invoke the continuing tort theory, asserting that Active-Southern Defendants believed they were still participating in the complained of conspiracy in February of 2007. CamSoft asserts that the prescriptive periods should run from either February 5, 2007 (the date of involuntary termination of the alleged conspiracy) or April 13, 2009 ("the timeframe after the Active-Defendants [*13] last direct, concerted and fraudulent concealment of facts tending to cover up their involvement in the conspiracy"). However, the court is persuaded by a recent Louisiana appellate court decision, which addressed this matter.

> We agree . . . as to the hybrid prescriptive and peremptive nature of La. R.S. 12:1502. This statute is a prescriptive statute that is subject to time limitations that have peremptive attributes. Nevertheless, the time limitations contained within this statute do not allow for plaintiffs . . . to levy claims under the continuous tort doctrine.
> Albeit that the statute at issue is not a strictly peremptive statute, the peremptive elements of the subject liberative prescription statute still do not permit the application of a continuing tort theory. . . . The application of [the continuing tort] doctrine stands in direct opposition, however, to the specific wording of this statute, which provides in La. R.S. 12:1502(E) that actions brought under La. R.S. 12:1502 are not subject to suspension or interruption, unless a suit is timely filed. The continuing tort doctrine is a suspension principle based on contra non valentem.

Suhren v. Gibert, 55 So.3d 941, 947 (La. App. 4th Cir. 2011).

The [*14] plain language of §12:1502(E) makes clear that the three year limitation period in §12:1502 "shall not be subject to suspension on any grounds or interruption except by timely suit." This court adopts the reasoning set forth in Suhren, 55 So.3d at 945-47. Accordingly, the court finds that the three year period has expired and any state law claims asserted by CamSoft against the Active-Southern Defendants based on breach of fiduciary duty, applicable gross negligence, intentional tortious misconduct, intentional breach of duty of loyalty, intentional unlawful distribution, and acts or omissions in bad faith or involving fraud or a knowing and intentional violation of law should be dismissed. (Hereinafter, these claims are collectively referred to as "business torts based on joint venture.") The court does not find that §12:1502 applies to bar any federal law claims nor state law claims other than those specified.

The Active-Southern Defendants also assert that plaintiff's claims should be dismissed pursuant to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. However, the court presently defers ruling on the merits of the Noerr-Pennington assertions because we find that this matter turns on factual issues inappropriate [*15] for a 12(b)(6) motion.

Defendants also contend that plaintiff has not alleged an actionable conspiracy under Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). The basis for defendants' argument is that plaintiff's characterization of the purported conspiracy is "nonsensical," noting that Twombly "requires a complaint with enough factual information (taken as true) to suggest that an agreement was made." 550 U.S. at 556. According to defendants, "[w]here Camsoft further alleges that the other participants in the July 8, 2004 meeting were actively conspiring against the Active-Southern Defendants," the claim for conspiracy must fail as a matter of law because "the Active-Southern Defendants could not be both perpetrators and victims of the same conspiracy." The court disagrees with defendants and finds that plaintiff has alleged sufficient facts to suggest that an agreement was made involving these defendants. That some purported co-conspirators are later alleged to have turned on the Active-Southern Defendants does not warrant dismissal of plaintiff's Complaint.

Finally, defendants contend, and CamSoft agrees, that plaintiff's unjust enrichment claim fails as a matter of law. [*16] As such, plaintiff's unjust enrichment claim against the Active-Southern Defendants should be dismissed.

CIBER

CIBER seeks dismissal of the allegations against it pursuant to Rules 12(b)(1) and 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. CIBER contends, and CamSoft does not dispute, that plaintiff's claim arising under Louisiana's Unfair Trade Practices Act (LUTPA) is perempted. Therefore, the LUPTA claim against CIBER should be dismissed. [3]

CIBER also seeks dismissal of plaintiff's claim under Louisiana Uniform Trade Secrets Act (LUTSA). On this matter, the court agrees with CIBER that plaintiff has not alleged sufficient facts indicating that CIBER engaged in any activity to misappropriate [4] CamSoft's trade secrets, nor that CIBER was involved in a conspiracy to misappropriate CamSoft's trade secrets. In other words, CamSoft has not adequately alleged [*17] that CIBER either acquired its trade secret with knowledge it was acquired through improper means, or disclosed or used CamSoft's trade secret without express or implied consent. The closest the Complaint comes to making such an allegation is in paragraph 346, however this paragraph only alleges that CIBER knew or should have known of what other actors were doing, combined with the conclusory allegation that CIBER is "imported with the MOT Employees' knowledge . . . given their employment as subcontractors to Ciber." Mere knowledge does not constitute an agreement, and CIBER's actions in furtherance of a conspiracy to violate other laws does not mean that CIBER agreed to misappropriate plaintiff's trade secrets. The court is not persuaded by plaintiff's attempt to use vicarious liability to establish CIBER's liability under LUTSA. Though plaintiff has made one non-factual, conclusory allegation that MOT Employees "were working within the course and scope of their employment with Ciber," [5] plaintiff's own Complaint generally characterizes the MOT Employees and their privately held companies as independent subcontractors of CIBER. See Complaint, ¶¶ 299, 300, 306. Moreover, plaintiff [*18] has pointed to no factual allegations in the Complaint that would justify the conclusion that the MOT Employees and/or their privately held companies were controlled by or employed by CIBER, nor that they were anything other than independent subcontractors. As such, plaintiff's LUTSA claim against CIBER should be dismissed.

CIBER also seeks dismissal of CamSoft's fraud claim against it. CIBER correctly points to the statement in the Complaint where CamSoft "admits that no direct Ciber employee made any affirmative material misrepresentations to either MacDonald or CamSoft." (Complaint, ¶355). However, CamSoft asserts (in conclusory language) that CIBER "is vicariously liable for the MOT Employees' fraudulent misrepresentations," and that CIBER "either knew or [*19] should have known of CamSoft, and accordingly conspired with the MOT Employees, Active Solutions and Southern Electronics, who did in fact make delictual and fraudulent misrepresentations." Id. Given the court's previous determination regarding CIBER's purported vicarious liability for MOT Employees, and considering the law cited by CIBER, [6] the court finds these allegations insufficient. Regarding CIBER, CamSoft has not adequately alleged misrepresentation of a material fact, nor has it adequately alleged fraudulent intent. As such, plaintiff's claim against CIBER for fraud should be dismissed.

CIBER seeks dismissal of plaintiff's claim for unjust enrichment. Plaintiff does not dispute dismissal of its unjust enrichment claim against CIBER. As such, the unjust enrichment claim against CIBER should be dismissed.

Finally, CIBER seeks dismissal of CamSoft's conspiracy claim against it. While CIBER is correct that conspiracy is not an independent tort under Louisiana law, Louisiana law does impose liability for conspiracy to commit an underlying tort. Aranyosi v. Delchamps, Inc., 739 So.2d 911, 917 (La. App. 1st Cir. 1999). As correctly noted by CIBER, [*20] it is the underlying tort that constitutes the actionable element of the claim. Id. Plaintiff has alleged sufficient factual allegations to constitute a conspiracy involving CIBER. While the court will not recognize an independent tort of conspiracy under Louisiana law, insofar as plaintiff has other remaining causes of actions related to the purported conspiracy, its conspiracy allegations are not dismissed.

[3] Plaintiff requests that the dismissal be without prejudice in the event discovery produces additional relevant facts. However, plaintiff has already been given the opportunity to amend its Complaint in light of discovery. As such, the dismissal of the LUTPA claims—along with the other claims dismissed in this ruling—is with prejudice.

Mark Kurt

First, Kurt seeks dismissal of plaintiff's Complaint for violations of Rule 8. Kurt contends that the Complaint is "overly verbose and confusing" (doc. 238-1, p. 5). While Kurt cites examples where courts have chosen to dismiss complaints under Rule 8, the cases also indicate that a district court is vested with much discretion in the matter. This court finds that plaintiff's Complaint should not be dismissed under Rule 8.

Kurt also seeks dismissal of the claims against him pursuant to qualified immunity based on his role as Chief Technology Officer of the MOT for the City of New Orleans. Kurt cites La. R.S. 9:2798.1(B), which states: "Liability shall not be imposed on public entities or their officers or employees based upon the exercise or performance or the failure to [*21] exercise or perform their policymaking or discretionary acts when such acts are within the course and scope of their lawful powers and duties." CamSoft cites also to subsection C of the same statute, which provides, in part, that subsection B immunity does not apply to "acts or omissions which constitute criminal, fraudulent, malicious, intentional, willful, outrageous, reckless, or flagrant misconduct." The court presently declines to reach the merits of Kurt's immunity argument because resolution would require factual determinations more appropriate for summary judgment or trial.

Kurt also seeks dismissal of plaintiff's claims against him pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6). According to Kurt's motion, Kurt is "improperly lumped in" with his alleged co-conspirators and the Complaint does not detail the role Kurt played in plaintiff's causes of action. However, a review of plaintiff's Complaint reveals otherwise. Paragraphs 218, 222, 231, 235, 280, and 300, among others, detail the role specifically played by Kurt in the overall conspiracy and causes of action (doc. 205). These allegations are in addition to other allegations throughout the Complaint in which plaintiff discusses actions by groups [*22] of defendants collectively.

Kurt also seeks dismissal of plaintiff's claim under LUTPA. The court agrees with Kurt that CamSoft's claims has prescribed under the one year time period of La. R.S. 51:1409(E). As such, CamSoft's state law claim against Kurt for unfair trade practices under LUTPA should be dismissed.

Kurt seeks dismissal of plaintiff's claim under LUTSA as well. However, Kurt's primary arguments in this regard are more appropriate for summary judgment or trial than the present motion. Kurt claims plaintiff's purported trade secret was revealed in the public record and thus cannot support a LUTSA claim. However, for purposes of the present motion, the court assumes the factual allegations of the Complaint are true and finds that plaintiff has properly asserted a claim under LUTSA. Plaintiff has alleged facts to indicate that Kurt was involved in the conspiracy to misappropriate plaintiff's wireless network designs. Whether plaintiff can eventually prevail on the merits of its LUTSA claim is not presently before the court.

Kurt seeks dismissal of plaintiff's claims against Kurt for declaration of ownership interest under Louisiana law, breach of fiduciary duty, breach of confidential [*23] relations, promissory estoppel, breach of contract, and unjust enrichment. Plaintiff concedes that it has no claim against Kurt for these causes of action. With the exception of the unjust enrichment claim, plaintiff correctly asserts that its Complaint does not attempt to state causes of action for the aforementioned claims against Kurt. The court agrees with both plaintiff and defendant that CamSoft's claim against Kurt for unjust enrichment should be dismissed.

Kurt seeks dismissal of plaintiff's fraud claim against him. CamSoft's opposition in no way responds to Kurt's assertion that the Complaint fails to comply with Rule 9(b)'s heightened pleading requirements for fraud. As such, the court finds that CamSoft's state law fraud claim against Kurt should be dismissed.

Kurt also seeks dismissal of plaintiff's claim for tortious interference with business relations. Kurt claims that the allegations against Kurt do not constitute a cognizable claim for tortious interference with business relations. In its opposition, CamSoft focuses on the roles played by other actors. However, CamSoft does not sufficiently address why its allegations are sufficient to state a cognizable claim for relief [*24] against Kurt for tortious interference with business relations. As such, the court finds this claim against Kurt should be dismissed.

Kurt contends that CamSoft has failed to state a claim for conspiracy under Louisiana law. The court has already addressed that conspiracy is not an independent tort under Louisiana law and that the actionable element in a conspiracy claim is not the conspiracy itself but the underlying tort. In this case, as we have cited to numerous allegations in the Complaint related to Kurt and his involvement in a conspiracy to engage in purported violations of law, the court finds that plaintiff has adequately alleged Kurt was involved in a civil conspiracy under Louisiana law. Plaintiff cannot recover for an independent state law tort based solely on this conspiracy, but as plaintiff has other causes of action remaining which serve as an underlying tort, the conspiracy claim should not presently be dismissed.

Finally, Kurt contends that CamSoft fails to state a claim for fraudulent concealment. However, plaintiff's Complaint does not attempt to state a cause of action for fraudulent concealment, but only seeks to raise the issue of fraudulent concealment as a defense [*25] against prescription. The court thus finds it unnecessary at present to address Kurt's arguments in this regard.

Dell, Steve Reneker, Billy Ridge and Heather Smith

Dell seeks dismissal of all claims against it and its named employees. Reneker, Ridge, and Smith ("Dell employees") each contend that the state law claims for LUTPA violations, fraud, unjust enrichment, and conspiracy should be dismissed because the allegations are based on actions committed within the scope of their employment with Dell. These defendants correctly assert that under Louisiana law, an employee will not be held personally liable for the delictual or contractual obligations of his or her employer unless the employee acts outside the scope of his employment. See Korson v. Independence Mall I, Ltd., 595 So.2d 1174, 1177-78 (La. App. 5th Cir. 1992). Accepting as true the factual allegations of the Complaint, CamSoft has failed to state a claim against the Dell employees on these causes of action. As such, the LUTPA, fraud, unjust enrichment, and conspiracy claims against the Dell employees should be dismissed.

Dell contends that plaintiff's LUTPA claim should be dismissed because the claim is perempted. This ruling [*26] has already addressed the peremptive nature of the one year LUTPA period. Dell also argues that CamSoft's LUTPA claim against Dell is perempted even if the continuing violation doctrine applies because, based on the factual allegations of the Complaint, Dell's "continual unlawful acts" stopped in January 2007. The court is persuaded by Dell's analysis in this regard and finds that CamSoft's claim against Dell for violations of LUTPA should be dismissed.

Dell also seeks dismissal of CamSoft's LUTSA claim. To establish a claim under LUTSA, CamSoft must allege: (1) the existence of a trade secret; (2) a misappropriation of the trade secret, and (3) actual loss caused by the misappropriation. Some of Dell's LUTSA arguments—such as whether plaintiff destroyed its trade secret by voluntarily disclosing it to third parties—are more appropriate for a later motion for summary judgment or a trial on the merits. For purposes of this motion, the court assumes the factual allegations of the Complaint are true. The court finds that the Complaint adequately states a claim for relief under LUTSA; plaintiff has alleged the existence of its purported trade secret and has alleged misappropriation of the [*27] trade secret as well as actual loss. Specifically, regarding Dell's arguments related to misappropriation, the court finds that paragraph 345 of the Complaint, combined with the other factual allegations, alleges sufficient facts to state a claim for misappropriation of trade secrets. This ruling has already addressed why plaintiff's LUTSA claim has not necessarily prescribed. As such, CamSoft's LUTSA claim against Dell should not be dismissed.

Dell also seeks dismissal of CamSoft's state law fraud claim. To state a claim for fraud, CamSoft must allege that Dell made a misrepresentation of material fact to CamSoft with the intent to deceive and that CamSoft justifiably relied on the misrepresentation and suffered injury as a result. Newport Ltd. v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 6 F.3d 1058, 1068 (5th Cir. 1993). CamSoft concedes that it has "alleged no facts suggesting that any representative of Dell made any false statements to CamSoft" (doc. 250, p. 49). Instead, CamSoft relies on the effects of conspiracy law to hold Dell liable for the fraudulent conduct of other defendants.

Separating the factual allegations, which are entitled to a presumption of truth, from the legal conclusions which [*28] are not entitled to such a presumption, reveals that plaintiff has not properly alleged that Dell engaged in a conspiracy to defraud CamSoft. Paragraph 354 of the Complaint provides one illustration of the conclusory nature of CamSoft's allegations regarding Dell's involvement with the purported conspiracy to defraud ("CamSoft alleges that Dell either knew or should have known of CamSoft, and accordingly conspired with the MOT Employees, Active Solutions and Southern Electronics, who did in fact make delictual and fraudulent misrepresentations, for the purpose of benefitting all Dell Alliance Members"). In short, the factual allegations related to Dell's involvement in the conspiracy to defraud do not state claim to relief that is plausible on its face. For instance, plaintiff appears to propose that the agreement forming the basis of the conspiracy was entered into at the July 8, 2004 meeting. However, the factual allegations later in the Complaint directly contradict that Dell reached such an agreement in 2004 or at all. See, e.g., Complaint, ¶¶ 129, 138, 210. As such, the court finds that plaintiff's fraud claim against Dell should be dismissed.

Dell also seeks dismissal of plaintiff's [*29] claim for unjust enrichment. CamSoft does not oppose Dell's request in this regard. Accordingly, plaintiff's unjust enrichment claim against Dell should be dismissed. Finally, Dell seeks dismissal of CamSoft's conspiracy claim. However, CamSoft readily admits that it does not seek to allege an independent cause of action for conspiracy. As such, there is no need to dismiss the conspiracy "claim" because it does not represent a separate cause of action.

EarthLink and EarthLink Employee Defendants

EarthLink and the EarthLink Employee defendants (collectively, "EarthLink defendants") seek dismissal of plaintiff's claims for LUTPA, unjust enrichment, and conspiracy. Plaintiff concedes in its opposition that the court should dismiss the LUTPA, fraud, and unjust enrichment claims against these defendants. Accordingly, the court finds that these claims against the EarthLink defendants should be dismissed. CamSoft asserts that it has not stated a separate cause of action for conspiracy. As such, there is no need to dismiss plaintiff's conspiracy "claim" against these defendants as there is no independent cause of action to dismiss. Insofar as plaintiff's conspiracy allegations relate to its [*30] antitrust claims, we have already stated that this ruling does not address the parties' arguments regarding plaintiff's antitrust claims.

Motorola

Motorola has also filed a motion to dismiss. Plaintiff concedes that its fraud, LUTPA, and unjust enrichment claims against Motorola should be dismissed. As such, the court finds that these claims against Motorola should be dismissed.

MMR

MMR also seeks dismissal of plaintiff's claims against it. CamSoft concedes in its opposition that its claims against MMR are "solely" based on "the legal theory of successor liability" (doc. 251, p. 47). Plaintiff also makes clear that it "does not allege that MMR Constructors or its employees played any independent role in the alleged activities" described in the Complaint (id., pp. 47-48). MMR correctly points out, though, that CamSoft has failed to allege facts sufficient to establish successor liability of MMR. In its opposition, CamSoft cites to no specific allegations in the Complaint; plaintiff simply asserts that it has established successor liability based on the fraud or continuation exceptions to the general rule of non-liability. [7] However, plaintiff has not alleged sufficient facts in its Complaint [*31] to indicate MMR was formed to defraud creditors of NetMethods. Plaintiff's only option, then, is to have alleged facts sufficient to establish that MMR was a continuation of NetMethods. CamSoft's allegations fall short in this regard as well. Plaintiff has not alleged that MMR purchased all the assets of NetMethods, [8] nor that the owners of the selling company had a substantial or almost identical interest in the purchasing corporation. [9] The closest the Complaint comes to making such allegations is its assertion that MMR "acquired" [10] NetMethods; however, the Complaint also alleges that St. Pierre, the former owner of NetMethods, was merely a "contractor" [11] of MMR.

Based solely on the factual allegations contained in the Complaint, CamSoft has failed to state a claim against MMR for violation of LUTPA, violation of LUTSA, fraud, conspiracy, or unjust enrichment, as CamSoft has failed to allege facts sufficient to establish successor liability. As such, these claims against MMR should be dismissed.

Accordingly, the Active-Southern Defendants' motion (doc. 233) is GRANTED INSOFAR as it seeks dismissal of plaintiff's claims against the Active-Southern Defendants for violation of LUTPA, state law business torts based on joint venture, [12] and unjust enrichment, and is DENIED in all other respects, except that the court makes no determination on the merits of the parties' arguments regarding RICO and antitrust claims. CIBER's motion (doc. 234) is GRANTED INSOFAR as it seeks dismissal of plaintiff's claims against CIBER for violation of LUTPA, violation of LUTSA, fraud, and unjust enrichment, [*33] and is DENIED in all other respects, except that the court makes no determination on the merits of the parties' arguments regarding RICO and antitrust claims. Mark Kurt's motion (doc. 238) is GRANTED INSOFAR as it seeks dismissal of plaintiff's claims against Kurt for violation of LUTPA, state law fraud, tortious interference with business relations, and unjust enrichment, and is DENIED in all other respects, except that the court makes no determination on the merits of the parties' arguments regarding RICO and antitrust claims. The Dell employees' motions (docs. 240, 241, 242) are GRANTED INSOFAR as they seek dismissal of plaintiff's claims for LUTPA violations, fraud, unjust enrichment, and conspiracy; however the court makes no determination regarding the merits of the parties' arguments regarding antitrust and RICO claims.

Dell's motion (doc. 239) is GRANTED INSOFAR as it seeks dismissal of plaintiff's LUTPA, fraud, and unjust enrichment claims, and DENIED in all other respects, except that the court makes no determination on the merits of the parties' arguments regarding RICO and antitrust claims. The EarthLink defendants' motions (docs. 243, 245) are GRANTED IN PART, and plaintiff's claims against these defendants for fraud, LUTPA, and unjust enrichment are DISMISSED; however, the court makes no determination on the merits of the parties' arguments regarding RICO and antitrust claims. Motorola's motion (doc. 244) is GRANTED IN PART, and plaintiff's claims against Motorola for fraud, LUTPA, and unjust enrichment are DISMISSED; however, the court makes no determination on the merits of the parties' arguments regarding RICO and antitrust claims. MMR's motion (doc. 246) is GRANTED INSOFAR as it seeks dismissal of plaintiff's claims against MMR for violation of LUTPA, violation of LUTSA, fraud,

HN2[] Contract Conditions & Provisions, Forum Selection Clauses

Under applicable precedent, a determination of whether to dismiss a claim based on a forum selection clause involves a four-part analysis. First, a court must determine whether the clause was reasonably communicated to the party resisting enforcement. Second, it must determine whether the language of the clause is mandatory, as opposed to merely permissive. Third, the court must examine whether the claims and parties involved in the suit are subject to the forum selection clause. If these three requirements are met, the forum selection clause is presumptively enforceable. The final step of the analysis requires a court to find whether the party resisting enforcement of the clause has rebutted the presumption of enforceability by making a sufficiently strong showing that enforcement would be unreasonable or unjust, or that the clause is invalid for such reasons as fraud or overreaching.

HN4[] Contract Conditions & Provisions, Forum Selection Clauses

In determining whether to dismiss a claim based on a forum selection clause, a district court must view all the facts in the light most favorable to the party claiming that venue is proper, while no disputed fact should be resolved against that party until it has had an opportunity to be heard. Accordingly, a disputed fact may be resolved in a manner adverse to that party only after an evidentiary hearing.

HN5[] Contracts Law, Contract Interpretation

Under California law, the words of a contract are to be understood in their ordinary and popular sense, rather than according to their strict legal meaning. Cal. Civ. Code § 1644. Courts must apply the standard statutory rules of contract interpretation in order to ascertain the mutual intention of the parties as it existed at the time the original agreements were entered into. Cal. Civ. Code §§ 1636, 1637).

HN6[] Contract Conditions & Provisions, Arbitration Clauses

Courts construing arbitration clauses refuse to subject claims to arbitration where the claims arise from or relate to conduct occurring prior to the effective date of the agreement, and where the clause is limited to claims under "this agreement." In contrast, courts find claims arising from or related to conduct occurring before the effective date of an arbitration clause to be within the scope of a clause that is not limited to claims arising under the agreement itself. In such circumstances, courts allow arbitration agreements to apply retroactively to transactions that occurred prior to the execution of the agreement.

HN7[] Contract Conditions & Provisions, Forum Selection Clauses

California courts place a substantial burden on a plaintiff seeking to defeat a forum selection clause, requiring it to demonstrate enforcement of the clause would be unreasonable under the circumstances of the case.

HN8[] Contract Conditions & Provisions, Forum Selection Clauses

A party challenging a forum selection clause bears the burden of showing that enforcement would be unreasonable or unjust, or that the clause was invalid for such reasons as fraud or overreaching. This exception to enforcement is interpreted narrowly, and rebuts the presumption of enforceability where, among other things, the incorporation of the clause into the agreement was the result of fraud or overreaching, or if the clause contravenes a strong public policy of the forum state.

HN9[] Contract Conditions & Provisions, Forum Selection Clauses

In Carnival Cruise Lines, Inc. v. Shute, the U.S. Supreme Court held that a forum selection clause contained in a form passage contract was enforceable, despite the fact that the terms of the form passage contract were not subject to negotiation, and that individuals had no bargaining power with the vendor. The Supreme Court rejected the argument that a non-negotiated forum selection clause was never enforceable simply because it was not subject to bargaining. The Supreme Court found that a reasonable forum selection clause was permissible where there was a special interest in limiting the fora in which a party potentially could be subject to suit.

[*32] SUMMARY ORDER

UPON DUE CONSIDERATION, it is hereby ORDERED, ADJUDGED, and DECREED that the judgment of the district court be AFFIRMED.

Plaintiff-Appellant TradeComet.com LLC ("TradeComet") appeals from a judgment entered pursuant to an opinion and order of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York (Stein, J.) dismissing its complaint. TradeComet brought this action against Defendant-Appellee Google, Inc. ("Google") for alleged violations of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2. On March 31, 2009, Google moved to dismiss TradeComet's complaint for lack of subject matter jurisdiction and improper venue, pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1) and 12(b)(3). The district court granted Google's motion on March 5, 2010. TradeComet timely appealed to this Court on March 15, 2010. In an opinion filed [2] contemporaneously with this order, we hold that a defendant may seek enforcement of a forum selection clause specifying a federal forum other than the one in which suit is pending through a Rule 12(b) motion to dismiss. See TradeComet.com LLC v. Google, Inc., 647 F.3d 472, 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 15311, No. 10-911-cv (2d Cir. Jan. 26, 2011). Here, we address whether the district court properly applied our four-part test for determining whether to dismiss a claim based on a forum selection clause. See TradeComet.com, LLC v. Google, Inc., 693 F. Supp. 2d 370 (S.D.N.Y. 2010). We assume the parties' familiarity with the underlying facts and procedural history.

On appeal, TradeComet argues that the district court erred by: 1) failing to conduct an evidentiary hearing on whether TradeComet was reasonably informed of the August 2006 agreement's forum selection clause; 2) applying the August 2006 forum selection clause to claims arising from conduct that occurred prior to Google's publication and TradeComet's alleged acceptance of the August 2006 agreement; and 3) declining to find the forum selection [*33] clause unreasonable and/or unconscionable. HN1[] Our review of a district court's dismissal of a complaint pursuant to Rules 12(b)(1) [3] and 12(b)(3) is de novo. See Phillips v. Audio Active Ltd., 494 F.3d 378, 384 (2d Cir. 2007); Makarova v. United States, 201 F.3d 110, 113 (2d Cir. 2000). We must view all the facts in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. Phillips, 494 F.3d at 384. Our review of a district court's interpretation of a contract is also de novo. Id. Both parties agree that California state law controls the interpretation of the Google agreements and that federal law applies as to the enforceability of the forum selection clause.

HN2[] Under our precedent, a determination of "whether to dismiss a claim based on a forum selection clause involves a four-part analysis." Id. at 383. First, a court must determine whether the clause was "reasonably communicated to the party resisting enforcement." Id. Second, it must determine whether the language of the clause is mandatory, as opposed to merely permissive. Id. Third, the court must examine "whether the claims and parties involved in the suit are subject to the forum selection clause." Id. If these three requirements are met, the forum selection clause is presumptively enforceable. Id. The final step of the analysis requires a court to find whether the [4] party resisting enforcement of the clause "has rebutted the presumption of enforceability by making a sufficiently strong showing that 'enforcement would be unreasonable or unjust, or that the clause [is] invalid for such reasons as fraud or overreaching.'" Id. at 383-84 (quoting M/S Bremen v. Zapata Off-Shore Co., 407 U.S. 1, 15, 92 S. Ct. 1907, 32 L. Ed. 2d 513 (1972)).

A. The District Court's Factual Findings

TradeComet argues that the district court committed a legal error by resolving a disputed issue of fact against it without an evidentiary hearing. TradeComet attests that it disputed whether the terms of the August 2006 agreement had been reasonably communicated to it. TradeComet, however, has forfeited this argument by failing to seek an evidentiary hearing before the district court. See United States ex rel. Drake v. Norden Sys., Inc., 375 F.3d 248, 256 (2d Cir. 2004) (noting that HN3[] the plaintiff waived his right to an evidentiary hearing by failing to request it until after the court ruled against him). We conclude, moreover, that TradeComet failed to raise any material issue of fact as to Google's communication of the terms of the August 2006 agreement that required an evidentiary hearing.

HN4[] In determining whether [5] to dismiss a claim based on a forum selection clause, the district court must view all the facts in the light most favorable to the party claiming that venue is proper, while "no disputed fact should be resolved against that party until it has had an opportunity to be heard." New Moon Shipping Co., Ltd. v. MAN B&W Diesel AG, 121 F.3d 24, 29 (2d Cir. 1997). Accordingly, a "disputed fact may be resolved in a manner adverse to that party only after an evidentiary hearing." Id. (emphasis added). Here, TradeComet points to information provided by Google showing that, in August 2006, a user agreed to the August 2006 agreement for at least ten of TradeComet's AdWords accounts within a span of three seconds. Google, however, did not dispute this fact; rather, it explained that TradeComet had an umbrella account that allowed one user to accept the August 2006 terms and conditions at once for all accounts included under the umbrella (here, the ten accounts that indicated assent). TradeComet did not contest this explanation below, and does not dispute it on appeal. Further, as the district court [*34] found, TradeComet did not submit any evidence to the contrary. TradeComet's belated demand for an [6] evidentiary hearing is therefore misplaced; the district court did not err in concluding that TradeComet accepted the terms of the August 2006 agreement.

B. "Retroactive" Application of the August 2006 Forum Selection Clause

TradeComet next argues that the forum selection clause contained in its April 2005 and May 2006 agreements with Google should apply in the instant case, and that TradeComet's antitrust claims do not fall within the scope of that clause. It further argues that the district court erred by "retroactively" applying the August 2006 agreement to Google's alleged anticompetitive conduct, which began prior to the effective date of this agreement. We find TradeComet's contentions to be without merit.

Both parties agree that California law controls in interpreting the agreements, including the scope of their respective forum selection clauses. HN5[] Under California law, "[t]he words of a contract are to be understood in their ordinary and popular sense, rather than according to their strict legal meaning." Badie v. Bank of Am., 67 Cal. App. 4th 779, 797, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 273 (Cal. Ct. App. 1998) (quoting Cal. Civ. Code § 1644). We must apply "the standard statutory rules of contract interpretation in [7] order to ascertain the mutual intention of the parties as it existed at the time the original account agreements were entered into." Id. at 798 (citing Cal. Civ. Code §§ 1636, 1637).

TradeComet cites few cases directly addressing the "retroactive" application of a forum selection clause. We are therefore guided here by analogous cases discussing the retroactive application of arbitration clauses. See AVC Nederland B.V. v. Atrium Inv. P'ship, 740 F.2d 148, 158 (2d Cir. 1984) (quoting Scherk v. Alberto-Culver Co., 417 U.S. 506, 518-19, 94 S. Ct. 2449, 41 L. Ed. 2d 270 (1974)) ("[A]n agreement to arbitrate . . . is, in effect, a specialized kind of forum-selection clause . . . ."). HN6[] Courts construing arbitration clauses have refused to subject claims to arbitration where the claims arise from or relate to conduct occurring prior to the effective date of the agreement, and where the clause is limited to claims under "this Agreement." See, e.g., Thomas v. Carnival Corp., 573 F.3d 1113, 1117-19 (11th Cir. 2009) (refusing to apply arbitration clause "retroactively" where the clause applied to "[a]ny and all disputes arising out of or in connection with this Agreement" (emphasis added)); Wachovia Bank N.A. v. Schmidt, 445 F.3d 762, 767-69 (4th Cir. 2006) [8] (same); Sec. Watch, Inc. v. Sentinel Sys., Inc., 176 F.3d 369, 372 (6th Cir. 1999) (finding arbitration clause inapplicable to disputes under previous agreements where clause applied to all claims "arising out of or relating to the [p]roducts furnished pursuant to this Agreement or acts or omissions . . . under this Agreement" (emphasis added)).

In contrast, courts have found claims arising from or related to conduct occurring before the effective date of an arbitration clause to be within the scope of a clause that "is not limited to claims arising under the agreement itself." In re Verisign, Inc. Derivative Litig., 531 F. Supp. 2d 1173, 1224 (N.D. Cal. 2007). In such circumstances, "courts have allowed arbitration agreements to apply retroactively to transactions that occurred prior to the execution of the agreement." Id. The court in In re Verisign rejected a retroactivity argument similar to TradeComet's, on the ground that the arbitration provision was "extremely broad, and cover[ed] not just [*35] services provided under the Agreement, but also 'any other services provided by'" the defendant. Id.; see also In re Currency Conversion Fee Antitrust Litig., 265 F. Supp. 2d 385, 407 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) [9] (finding arbitration clause applicable to claims arising prior to execution of the agreement when it covered claims beyond those under the agreement); *cf. Al-Thani v. Wells Fargo & Co., No. C 08-1745, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2732, at *16-17 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 7, 2009) (finding arbitration clause applicable to claims arising prior to execution of agreement, and observing that a clause not limited to claims under the agreement "place[s] no retroactive obligation on Plaintiff" and merely imposes a "prospective obligation to arbitrate, rather than litigate").

TradeComet nevertheless contends that California courts are hostile towards such retroactive application of forum selection clauses. TradeComet's cited case law, however, does not support this view. In Bancomer S.A. v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, for example, the court refused to apply the forum selection clause because the party against whom enforcement was sought was never a party to the agreement containing the clause. 44 Cal. App. 4th 1450, 1459-61, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 435 (Cal. App. Ct. 1996). In Allez Medical Applications v. Allez Spine, LLC, No. G037314, 2007 Cal. App. Unpub. LEXIS 2660, 2007 WL 927905 (Cal App. Ct. Mar. 29, 2007) (unpublished), the arbitration clause at issue [10] did not take effect until after the plaintiff filed suit. *See id. at 1. Neither of these cases, fairly read, support TradeComet's broad proposition. In fact, HN7[] California courts "have placed a substantial burden on a plaintiff seeking to defeat a [forum selection] clause, requiring it to demonstrate enforcement of the clause would be unreasonable under the circumstances of the case." CQL Orig. Prods., Inc. v. Nat'l Hockey League Players' Ass'n, 39 Cal. App. 4th 1347, 1354, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 412 (Cal. Ct. App. 1995).

Here, the plain language of the August 2006 agreement applies to claims "arising out of or relating to this agreement or the Google Program(s)." August 2006 Adwords Agreement ¶ 9 (emphasis added). "Google Programs," in turn, is defined to include the AdWords program at issue in this case. See id. ¶ Introduction. The forum selection clause is therefore not limited to claims arising from or related to the August 2006 agreement itself; it broadly includes any claim arising under or related to the "Google Programs," irrespective of whether it arose prior to or subsequent to the acceptance of the August 2006 agreement. The district court expressly found TradeComet's claims to "relate to" the "Google [11] Programs," a finding TradeComet does not dispute on appeal. In addition, the April 2005 and May 2006 agreements expressly permitted Google to modify the forum selection clause to that contained in the August 2006 agreement, which – through TradeComet's acceptance – "supersede[d] and replace[d] any other agreements, terms and conditions applicable to the subject matter hereof." August 2006 AdWords Agreement ¶ 9 (emphasis added). The district court therefore did not impermissibly give "retroactive" effect to the August 2006 forum selection clause.

C. Unreasonableness and Unconscionability

TradeComet finally argues that enforcement of the forum selection clause would be unconscionable and against public policy. HN8[] TradeComet bears the burden of showing that "enforcement would be unreasonable or unjust, or that the clause was invalid for such reasons as fraud or overreaching." Phillips, 494 F.3d at 384 (quoting Bremen, 407 U.S. at 15). [*36] This exception to enforcement "is interpreted narrowly," and rebuts the presumption of enforceability where, inter alia, the incorporation of the clause "into the agreement was the result of fraud or overreaching," or "if the clause[] contravene[s] a strong public [12] policy of the forum state." S.K.I. Beer Corp. v. Baltika Brewery, 612 F.3d 705, 711 (2d Cir. 2010) (quoting Roby v. Corp. of Lloyd's, 996 F.2d 1353, 1363 (2d Cir. 1993)). For the following reasons, TradeComet's arguments fail.

1. Overreaching

TradeComet first contends that the forum selection clause is unenforceable because it was the result of overreaching on Google's part. HN9[] In Carnival Cruise Lines, Inc. v. Shute, 499 U.S. 585, 111 S. Ct. 1522, 113 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1991), the Supreme Court held that a forum selection clause contained in a form passage contract was enforceable, id. at 595, despite the fact that the terms of the form passage contract were not subject to negotiation, and that individuals had no bargaining power with the vendor, id. at 593. The Court rejected the argument that a non-negotiated forum selection clause was never enforceable simply because it was not subject to bargaining. Id. The Court found that a reasonable forum selection clause was permissible where there was a "special interest in limiting the fora in which [a party] potentially could be subject to suit." Id. Such a "special interest" was present where there were transactions with individuals from many locales, and where a mishap could subject [13] the vendor to litigation in several different fora. See id.

Similar concerns warrant finding the forum selection clause reasonable in this case. TradeComet itself attests that Google is "the essential medium for search advertising to over a million advertisers, ranging from the largest companies in the world to the smallest, unsophisticated operations." Appellant's Br. 5 (emphasis added). Each of these advertisers, meanwhile, agrees to the terms of the agreement at issue in this case in connection with its participation in programs like AdWords. Google unquestionably holds a "special interest" in making sure that it is not subject to suit in numerous different fora for claims arising from its agreements with over a million advertisers.

TradeComet nevertheless argues that Google's ability to "modify . . . [the] Terms at any time without liability" constitutes overreaching where it expands the scope of an agreement into areas not contemplated by the original agreement. Specifically, TradeComet contends that Google's modification of its forum selection clause to include claims arising from or relating to "the Google Programs" was such an unreasonable expansion. TradeComet's own cited precedent, [14] however, expressly distinguishes modifications to an agreement that were "clearly related to a matter addressed in the original contract." Badie, 67 Cal. App. 4th at 792. Here, a forum selection clause specifying Santa Clara County, California as the locus for litigation was present in all three of the relevant agreements. The modification to the forum selection clause was therefore "clearly related" to a matter addressed by the agreements – namely, where cases between the parties were to be tried. Furthermore, TradeComet points to no evidence suggesting that Google's purpose in modifying the forum selection clause was to discourage plaintiffs from bringing suit. See Shute, 499 U.S. at 595 (noting the Supreme Court's concern over forum selection clauses that serve as "means of discouraging [plaintiffs] from pursuing legitimate [*37] claims"). TradeComet's claims of overreaching are therefore without merit.

2. Public Policy

Relying on our prior decision in American Safety Equipment Corp. v. J.P. Maguire & Co., 391 F.2d 821 (2d Cir. 1968), TradeComet next contends that Google's forum selection clause is contrary to public policy favoring enforcement of antitrust laws by private parties. This [15] argument fails. The Supreme Court limited American Safety Equipment Corp. in Mitsubishi Motors Corp. v. Soler Chrysler-Plymouth, Inc., 473 U.S. 614, 105 S. Ct. 3346, 87 L. Ed. 2d 444 (1985), where it held that arbitration clauses subjecting federal antitrust claims to arbitration were enforceable. Id. at 640. In doing so, the Court found that "[t]he mere appearance of an antitrust dispute does not alone warrant invalidation of the selected forum on the undemonstrated assumption that the arbitration clause is tainted." Id. at 632. In accordance with Mitsubishi Motors, we have also found enforceable an arbitration clause applicable to federal antitrust claims. See JLM Indus. Inc. v. Stolt-Nielsen S.A., 387 F.3d 163, 181 (2d Cir. 2004). We held in Bense v. Interstate Battery System of America, Inc., 683 F.2d 718 (2d Cir. 1982), moreover, that a forum selection clause was applicable to the plaintiff's federal antitrust claims. See id. at 720. In short, HN10[] both this Circuit and the Supreme Court have made clear that the mere existence of a federal antitrust claim does not void a forum selection clause as against public policy. TradeComet thus fails to meet its burden of demonstrating that the forum selection clause was unreasonable [16] or unconscionable.

D. Conclusion

We have considered the parties' remaining arguments and find them to be moot or without merit. For the foregoing reasons, and for the reasons stated in an opinion filed contemporaneously with this order, the judgment of the district court is AFFIRMED.

ORDER

Pending before the Court are Plaintiffs INVISTA S.a r.l., INVISTA Technologies S.a. r.l., and INVISTA North America S.a. r.l.'s Motion for Summary Judgment Dismissing Defendants' Counterclaims (Document No. 99) and Defendants Frontech, Inc. [*2] and Ming D. Wan's Motion for Complete Summary Judgment (Document No. 113). Having considered the motions, submissions, and applicable law, the Court determines Plaintiffs' motion should be granted and Defendants' motion should be granted in part and denied in part.

I. BACKGROUND

This is an alleged misappropriation of trade secrets case. Plaintiffs INVISTA S.a r.l., INVISTA Technologies S.a. r.l., and INVISTA North America S.a. r.l. ("Plaintiffs") produce and license a high-pressure hydrogenation process used to manufacture Butanediol ("BDO"), an industrial solvent and intermediate compound used in the production of various plastics and polymers. Defendant Frontech, Inc. ("Frontech") competes with Plaintiffs, primarily in China, to license BDO technology. Defendant Ming D. Wan ("Mr. Wan") is Frontech's owner, president, and sole employee.[1]

On June 15, 2010, Plaintiffs brought suit alleging Defendants misappropriated an engineering diagram that reflects Plaintiffs' detailed design and proprietary trade secret technology of a hydrogenation reactor used in a key step of the BDO manufacturing process. Plaintiffs further allege that Defendants licensed the technology as Defendants' own to customers [*3] in China. Plaintiffs' complaint assert eight separate causes of action: (1) false designation of origin under the Lanham Act; (2) false advertising under the Lanham Act; (3) theft under the Texas Theft Liability Act; (4) misappropriation of trade secrets under Texas common law; (5) conversion under Texas common law; (6) misappropriation under Texas common law; (7) unfair competition under Texas common law; (8) civil conspiracy under Texas common law; and unjust enrichment under Texas common law. Defendants assert two counterclaims for business disparagement and sham litigation. Plaintiffs move for summary judgement on Defendants' counterclaims and Defendants cross move for summary judgement on all Plaintiffs' claims.

II. STANDARD OF REVIEW

Summary judgment is proper when "there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a). The court must view the evidence in a light most favorable to the nonmovant. Coleman v. Hous. Indep. Sch. Dist., 113 F.3d 528, 533 (5th Cir. 1997). Initially, the movant bears the burden of presenting the basis for the motion and the elements of the causes of action upon which the nonmovant will be unable to establish a genuine issue of material fact. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). The burden then shifts [*4] to the nonmovant to come forward with specific facts showing there is a genuine issue for trial. See also Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c); Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586-87, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). "A dispute about a material fact is 'genuine' if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party." Bodenheimer v. PPG Indus., Inc., 5 F.3d 955, 956 (5th Cir. 1993) (citation omitted).

But the nonmoving party's bare allegations, standing alone, are insufficient to create a material issue of fact and defeat a motion for summary judgment. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 247-48, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). Moreover, conclusory allegations unsupported by specific facts will not prevent an award of summary judgment; the plaintiff cannot rest on his allegations to get to a jury without any significant probative evidence tending to support the complaint. Nat'l Ass'n of Gov't Emps. v. City Pub. Serv. Bd. of San Antonio, 40 F.3d 698, 713 (5th Cir. 1994). If a reasonable jury could not return a verdict for the nonmoving party, then summary judgment is appropriate. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. at 248. The nonmovant's burden cannot be satisfied by conclusory allegations, unsubstantiated assertions, or "only a scintilla of evidence." Turner v. Baylor Richardson Med. Ctr., 476 F.3d 337, 343 (5th Cir. 2007) (quoting Little v. Liquid Air Corp., 37 F.3d 1069, 1075 (5th Cir. 1994)). Furthermore, it is not the function of the court to search the record on the nonmovant's behalf for evidence that may raise a fact issue. Topalian v. Ehrman, 954 F.2d 1125, 1137 n.30 (5th Cir. 1992).

[1] For the purposes of this Order, Frontech and Mr. Wan will be referred to collectively as "Defendants."

III. LAW & ANALYSIS

A. Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment

Plaintiffs move to dismiss Defendants' counterclaims for business [*5] disparagement and sham litigation. Plaintiffs contend that Defendants' business disparagement counterclaim fails as a matter of law because Defendants cannot prove one or more of the essential requirements for relief. Plaintiffs contend that Defendants' sham litigation counterclaim fails as a matter of law because the claim is not a substantive cause of action, rather, it is a doctrine, which may be invoked to defeat an immunity defense to antitrust liability. Additionally, Plaintiffs contend that even assuming Defendants can assert sham litigation as a substantive cause of action, Defendants cannot prove one or more of the essential requirements for relief. Defendants respond and contend that Plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment should be denied because there are genuine fact issues to be resolved.

1. Business Disparagement

As an initial matter, the Court notes that it is unable to identify from Defendants' pleadings the nature of the alleged disparaging statements they complain of. Plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment, however, provides the Court with guidance. Plaintiffs contend that Mr. Wan provided deposition testimony as Frontech's corporate representative wherein he claimed [*6] the business disparagement counterclaim was premised on three categories of written and oral statements: (1) the pleadings filed in the instant lawsuit; (2) a press release relating to the instant lawsuit; and (3) statements allegedly made by one of Plaintiffs' agents to Defendants' potential licensees.[2]

Plaintiffs contend Defendants have no evidence to support the required elements of their business disparagement counterclaim for any of the three alleged statements. Specifically, Plaintiffs contend that the lawsuit pleadings and the press release are privileged communications, which precludes a business disparagement claim. Additionally, Plaintiffs contend Defendants have no evidence of any oral or written statements made by any of Plaintiffs' agents to potential Frontech clients. Defendants contend the alleged disparaging statements are not privileged and that there is sufficient evidence to raise a fact issue as its business disparagement claim.

To prove business disparagement, Defendants must establish that: (1) Plaintiffs published false and disparaging information about Defendants; (2) with malice; (3) without privilege; (4) which resulted in special damages to Defendants. Forbes, Inc. v. Granada Biosciences, Inc., 124 S.W.3d 167, 170 (Tex. 2003); see [*7] also *LED Sign Co., LLC v. Hwee, Civil Action No. H-08-1463, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 97851, 2008 WL 5114957, at 9 (S.D. Tex. Dec. 3, 2008) (Miller, J.) (citing Forbes). A business disparagement claim is similar to a defamation claim. They differ in that defamation serves to protect the reputation of the injured party, while business disparagement serves to protect the economic interest of the injured party. Forbes, 124 S.W.3d at 170.

Under Texas law, an absolute privilege or immunity is extended to "[a]ny communication, oral or written, uttered or published in the due course of a judicial proceeding." Reagan v. Guardian Life Ins. Co., 140 Tex. 105, 166 S.W.2d 909, 912 (Tex. 1942); see also James v. Brown, 637 S.W.2d 914, 916 (Tex. 1982) ("Communications in the due course of a judicial proceeding will not serve as the basis of a civil action for libel or slander, regardless of the negligence or malice with which they are made."); *Intel Corp. v. Intel-Logistics, Inc., No. Civ.A. H-05-2255, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34361, 2006 WL 1517510, at 1 (S.D. Tex. May 30, 2006) (Rosenthal, J.) (citing Reagan and James). "This privilege extends to any statement made by the judge, jurors, counsel, parties or witnesses, and attaches to all aspects of the proceedings, including statements made in open court, pre-trial hearings, depositions, affidavits and any of the pleadings or other papers in the case." James, 637 S.W.2d at 916-17; see also Daystar Residential, Inc. v. Collmer, 176 S.W.3d 24, 27 (Tex. App.—Houston [1st Dist.] 2004, pet denied) (citing James). The privilege also extends to "statements made in contemplation of and preliminary to judicial proceedings."

Daystar, 176 S.W.3d at 27 (citing Watson v. Kaminski, 51 S.W.3d 825, 827 (Tex. App.—Houston [1st Dist.] 2001, no pet.)).

"To be privileged, the communication must bear some relationship [*8] to pending or proposed litigation and must further the attorney's representation." Id.; but see Bell v. Lee, 49 S.W.3d 8, 11 (Tex. App.—San Antonio 2001, no pet.) (finding that the "further the attorney's representation" requirement is "nowhere mentioned by the [Texas] [S]upreme [C]ourt in James, and holding that the "privilege attaches if the statement has some relationship to a contemplated proceeding, regardless of whether it in fact furthers the representation."). Whether an alleged disparaging communication is related to a proposed or existing judicial proceeding is a question of law. Daystar, 176 S.W.3d at 28. When deciding the issue, "the court must consider the entire communication in its context, and must extend the privilege to any statement that bears some relation to an existing or proposed judicial proceeding." Id. (citing Russell v. Clark, 620 S.W.2d 865, 870 (Tex. App.—Dallas 1981, writ ref'd n.r.e.). Additionally, the court should resolve all doubt in favor of the relevancy of the statement. Id.

i. Plaintiffs' pleadings

The first category of disparaging statements identified by Mr. Wan comes from the pleadings filed in the instant lawsuit. To the extent that Defendants allege Plaintiffs' pleadings are disparaging, the Court finds the pleadings are covered by the judicial-proceedings privilege. See James, 637 S.W.2d at 916-17; Reagan, 166 S.W.2d at 912. Accordingly, Defendants' business [*9] disparagement counterclaim fails as a matter of law on this category of alleged disparagement.

ii. Plaintiffs' press release

The second category of disparaging statements identified by Mr. Wan comes from Plaintiffs' press release relating to the instant lawsuit. On June 16, 2010, the day after filing suit, Plaintiffs issued a press release in the United States and in China with the heading, "BDO Licensor Frontech Accused of Unauthorized use of INVISTA Trade Secrets."[3] Defendants contend that by June 24, 2011, the press release had been picked up by more than 180 websites, including three Chinese websites, and had been viewed over 550 times.[4] Defendants contend that as a result of the press release, they lost a bid to license their BDO technology to Guodian Younglight Energy & Chemicals Group Company, Ltd ("Younglight"). Finally, Defendants contend that since the press release, they have been unable to secure a single BDO-licensing project in China.

Plaintiffs contend the press release is covered by the judicial-proceedings [*10] privilege because it merely repeats assertions made by Plaintiffs in this litigation. Plaintiffs' press release reads in full as follows:

> BDO licensor Frontech accused of unauthorized use of INVISTA trade secrets
> Houston, Texas - June 16, 2010 - INVISTA filed a suit yesterday against Houston-based Frontech Inc. for misappropriation of trade secrets, theft, false advertising and unfair competition.
> The trade secrets at issue involve INVISTA's proprietary process for manufacturing butanediol (BDO), a chemical intermediate with applications including automobile parts, adhesives, personal care products and spandex.
> INVISTA produces and licenses BDO globally, utilizing its proprietary, high-pressure hydrogenation process. Frontech competes with INVISTA, primarily in China, to license BDO technology.

(3) http://www.gluenet.cn/news/3202.html .

> According to the complaint, INVISTA recently discovered that Frontech has been offering INVISTA's proprietary processes to potential licensees in China, falsely representing INVISTA's unique process as its own. INVISTA recently received additional evidence including an engineering design diagram used by Frontech, which was virtually identical to INVISTA's proprietary diagram for the same process. [*11]
> "INVISTA is a company known for its world-class technology and continuous innovation," said Bob Francois, president of INVISTA Specialty Materials. "We take great care to protect our licensees' investment in our valuable technology and will not tolerate theft or misuse of our intellectual property."
> INVISTA and Frontech are currently competing for several Chinese BDO technology projects, and the bidding on some of these projects closes very soon. The lawsuit, filed in U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Texas, seeks damages and declaratory and injunctive relief to halt Frontech's misconduct.
> INVISTA has been licensing its leading technologies in chemical intermediates and polymers in China since 1990. The total investment of INVISTA's Chinese licensees has exceeded RMB 32 billion.

Defendants contend, however, that even assuming the privilege attaches to a communication, the privilege is not absolute. Defendants cite Knox v. Taylor for the proposition that the privilege "cannot be enlarged into a license to go about in the community and make false and slanderous charges against his court adversary and escape liability for damages caused by such charges on the ground that he [*12] had made similar charges in his court pleadings." Knox v. Taylor, 992 S.W.2d 40, 52 (Tex. App.—Houston [14th Dist.] 1999, no pet). Defendants argue that the press release was orchestrated as part of a smear campaign intended to disparage Defendants' business. In support of this theory, Defendants point to an e-mail sent by James Ma ("Mr. Ma"),[5] Plaintiffs' alleged agent, to Plaintiffs one month prior to the filing of this lawsuit. Defendants argue the Ma E-mail reveals Plaintiffs' plan to disseminate false information about Defendants. The Ma E-mail states in part:

> I suggest that we disperse the information informally, that some company had gained access to INVISTA's proprietary technology illegally and licensed in Chan and INVISTA had gathered certain evidence and is in preparation of issuing lawsuit against this company both in China and U.S.A.
> This might have some effect on some enterprise who may want to use Frontech technology—especially SOE. I hope INVISTA legal can give some proposals and recommendations.[6]

Based on the Ma E-mail, Defendants argue that Plaintiffs did exactly what Knox prevents by claiming a license to go about in the community and make false and slanderous charges against Defendants and escape liability for damages caused by that conduct. [*13] However, Defendants' reliance on Knox is misplaced for two reasons.

First, Knox does not actually stand for the quoted proposition Defendants suggest. Rather, the quoted language comes from De Mankowski v. Ship Channel Dev. Co., 300 S.W. 118, 122 (Tex. Civ. App.—Galveston 1927, no writ).[7] The Knox court cites the quoted language, not as support for its holding, but as part of its observation of Levingston Shipbuilding Co. v. Inland West Corp., 688 S.W.2d 192 (Tex. App.—Beaumont 1985, writ ref'd n.r.e.), a case that relied on De Mankowski in reaching its decision that the judicial-proceedings privilege was waived.[8] The

[7] In De Mankowski, the plaintiff sued defendant for, among other things, cancellation of a contract. Defendant countersued for slander. After a trial on the merits, a jury rendered a verdict against plaintiffs on the cancellation of contract claim and in favor of defendant on the slander counterclaim. The Galveston Court of Civil Appeals affirmed the jury's award in favor of the defendant stating that while "the statements contained in [the plaintiffs] petition . . . are absolutely privileged and the filing by [the plaintiff] of such petition cannot be made the basis of a cause of action for libel or slander [regardless of] how false and malicious such statements may be . . . [the defendant's] claim for damages [was] not based upon the bringing of the suit by [the plaintiff], nor upon the false statements contained in his petition, but upon [the plaintiffs's] slanderous statements" made to other persons prior to an subsequent to the filing of the lawsuit. De Mankowski, 300 S.W. at 122.

Knox court went on to note the El Paso Court of Appeals' criticism of Levingston, which argued that Levingston mistakenly relied on De Mabnkowski. See Hill v. Herald-Post Pub. Co., 877 S.W.2d 774, 783 (Tex. App.—El Paso 1994, writ granted), aff'd in part, rev'd in part on other grounds, 891 S.W.2d 638 (Tex. 1994). In particular, the El Paso Court of Appeals observed that

> It was clear in De Mankowski that the defamation suit was not based on the appellant's pleadings in the prior suit but rather on appellant's slanderous statements made to various persons both prior to and subsequent to the filing of the suit. De Mankowski, 300 S.W. at 121-22. It appeared in Levingston Shipbuilding that the primary motive of the appellant in ordering copies of the suit delivered to the media was to obtain extensive publication with the intention of eliminating competition by harming the reputation of its competitor. 688 S.W.2d at 196. Although these facts [*14] seem to justify the affirmance of the jury verdict, the holding has no support in the case law and is a deviation from the general rule of absolute privilege. The harm resulting to the defamed party by delivering a copy of the suit or motion in a pending proceeding to the news media could demonstratively be no greater than it would be if the news media reporters got a tip from someone or found the pleadings on their own. For these reasons, we decline to follow the holding in Levingston Shipbuilding and instead, hold that under the facts of this case, the mere delivery of pleadings in pending litigation to members of the news media does not amount to a publication outside of the judicial proceedings, resulting in a waiver of the absolute privilege.

Id.

The second reason Defendants' reliance on Knox is misplaced is that Knox is factually distinguishable from the present case. In Knox, Eagle Insurance Company had previously sued Stacy Taylor. John Knox, Taylor's business competitor, anonymously sent the pleadings of the Eagle lawsuit to one of Taylor's business partners and to other associates in Taylor's field of business. In addition to the pleadings, [*15] Knox also authored and sent a three-page memorandum, which contained defamatory statements about Taylor. Consequently, Taylor sued Knox for defamation and tortious interference. After a trial on the merits, the jury returned a verdict in favor of Taylor. On appeal, Houston's Fourteenth Court of Appeals found that the judicial privilege was inapplicable because Knox was not a party to the Eagle lawsuit. Knox, 992 S.W.2d at 53. Additionally, the court found that Knox did more than merely send a copy of the Eagle pleadings, he also distributed a three-page memorandum, which the court found contained defamatory statements that went beyond any statements made in the accompanying legal pleadings. Id.

Here, Plaintiffs filed their lawsuit and then issued a press release the next day. The press release contains a basic description of the allegations contained in Plaintiffs' complaint. Based on the contents of the press release, the Court determines the press release is related to the lawsuit and is therefore covered by the judicial-proceedings privilege. Daystar, 176 S.W.3d at 28 ("[A] press release advising the media that a lawsuit has been filed, including a basic description of the allegations, does not amount to publication outside of [*16] the judicial proceedings resulting in a waiver of the absolute privilege." (citing Dallas Indep. Sch. Dist. v. Finlan, 27 S.W.3d 220, 238-40 (Tex. App.—Dallas 2000, pet. denied))). Any alleged malice in which the press release was issued is of no consequence. See James, 637 S.W.2d at 916. Accordingly, because Defendants cannot overcome the element of privilege, their counterclaim for business disparagement as the result of Plaintiffs' press release fails as a matter of law.

iii. Oral statements made to Defendants' potential licensees

[8] In Levingston, the plaintiff sued the defendant, a competitor, alleging the defendant had disclosed trade secrets. After filing the lawsuit, the plaintiff instructed one of its employees and the attorneys on the case to give a copy of the lawsuit to the media, which resulted in extensive publication and harm to the defendant's reputation. The defendant then countersued for defamation. A jury found in favor of the defendant on its defamation counterclaim. The Beaumont Court of Appeals affirmed finding that the plaintiff's lawsuit was privileged when filed. However, the court went on to cite De Mankowski and observed that because the jury believed the plaintiff accomplished its purpose of using the lawsuit to eliminate competition, the plaintiff necessarily "stepped out of the umbrella of privilege." Levingston, 688 S.W.2d at 196-97.

The third category of disparaging statements identified by Mr. Wan are the statements Mr. Ma allegedly made to Defendants' potential licensees. According to Mr. Wan's deposition, Mr. Ma told Defendants' potential licensees in China that if they used Defendants' BDO technology, Plaintiffs would sue them.[9] Plaintiffs contend that Defendants have no evidence that Plaintiffs or Mr. Ma orally made disparaging statements about Defendants. In support thereof, Plaintiffs point to Mr. Wan's deposition testimony. The following are excerpts of the relevant questions and answers related to this third category of alleged disparagement:

Q. Okay. So you claim that Invista disparaged FronTech by placing the ownership of the technology - -
A. At issue, yeah.

Q. - - at issue and by telling potential [*17] clients - - clients of potential clients that if they used FronTech technology, Invista would sue them?
A. Yes.
Q. Okay. Who from Invista told clients and potential clients that if they used FronTech technology, Invista would sue them?
A. I don't know exact people. They tell from Invista people, but I do know they have - - they have an agent, he act very aggressively against FronTech and said so many bad words about FronTech an threaten the client. He's Invista's agent in China market for license of BDO technology.
. . . .
Q. Did you say that this agent had written your clients or potential clients?
A. Threaten.
. . . .
Q. Orally or in writing?
A. I didn't see a writing but orally. That's client tell me. They didn't show me something.
Q. Did the agent - - have you - - have you - - who is this agent?
A. The company name is called J&F International Development Corporation something.
. . . .
Q. Who from J&F do you believe has made statements regarding FronTech?
A. The president of J&F, Mr. Ma.
. . . .
Q. And have you yourself seen or heard Mr. Ma make any statements regarding FronTech?
A. No.
Q. Have you seen or heard anyone from Invista make a disparaging statement regarding FronTech?
. . . .

A. Face to [*18] face?
Q. Yes.
A. No.
Q. Regarding Mr. Ma, who told you that Mr. Ma was saying anything regarding FronTech?
A. The Younglight project people [alleged potential licensee], the Shaanhua people [alleged potential licensee], the Markor people [alleged potential licensee].
Q. Who at Markor talked to Mr. Ma regarding FronTech?
A. I don't know he talking with Mr. Ma or he heard from Mr. Ma, but he told me.
Q. My question to you, though, and I want to make sure I understand your answer. I want to know specifically who at Markor spoke to Mr. Ma regarding FronTech, do you know?
A. I don't know.
Q. Okay. Who at Shaanhua spoke to Mr. Ma regarding FronTech?
A. I don't know exact people because they are in meeting. There's a bunch of people.
Q. Who at Younglight spoke to Mr. Ma regarding FronTech?
A. I don't know.

[9] Plaintiffs' Exhibit A, 126:12-127:16 (Document No. 99).

> Q. So you don't have personal knowledge of any disparaging statement made by Mr. Ma regarding FronTech correct? . . . You're not aware of any specific statement made by Mr. Ma to a particular person regarding FronTech, correct?
> A. Not a particular person, yes.
> Q. Okay. And who at Younglight has Invista spoken to regarding FronTech?
> A. I don't know.
> Q. Who at Shaanhua has Invista spoke to regarding FronTech? [*19]
> A. I don't know.
> Q. Who at Markor has Invista spoken to regarding - - FronTech?
> A. I don't know.
> Q. Who at Jianfeng has Invista spoke to regarding - -
> A. I don't't' know.
> Q. - - or regarding FronTech? You don't't' know?
> A. I don't know.
> Q. Who at Xinjing, X-I-N-J-E-N?
> . . . .
> A. I don't know.[10]

According to Mr. Wan's deposition testimony, Mr. Wan was unable to identify any individuals associated with the potential licensee companies that purportedly heard Plaintiffs or Mr. Ma make disparaging remarks about Defendants. Additionally, Mr. Wan was unable to identify the words or nature of the disparaging statements that were allegedly made. In response to Plaintiffs motion for summary judgment, Defendants offer no additional evidence of oral statements made to Defendants potential licensees by either Plaintiffs or Mr. Ma. Therefore, because Defendants present no evidence of any disparaging statements orally made to potential licensees, their counterclaim for business disparagement on this third category of alleged disparaging statements fails as a matter of law.

2. Sham Litigation

According to Defendants' counterclaim, Plaintiffs have impermissibly resorted to "sham litigation" in order to hinder Defendants [*20] as a competitor in the licensing of BDO manufacturing technology. Specifically, Defendants contend that Plaintiffs' lawsuit is objectively baseless and further attempts to interfere with Defendants' business by using the government process of litigation as an anticompetitive weapon.

Plaintiffs move for summary judgment and contend that Defendants' sham litigation counterclaim fails as a matter of law because it is not a substantive cause of action, rather, it is an doctrine, which may be invoked to defeat an immunity defense to an underlying antitrust claim. Alternatively, Plaintiffs contend that even assuming Defendants can assert sham litigation as a substantive cause of action, Defendants have no evidence to support one or more of the essential requirements for relief. In response, Defendants explain that in the event the Court finds the judicial-proceedings privilege acts as a bar to its business disparagement claim, then Defendants invoke the sham litigation doctrine. Defendants contend this doctrine strips away Plaintiffs' judicial-proceedings privilege.

i. Use of the sham litigation doctrine

The Court's research indicates that sham litigation is indeed a doctrine, which was developed [*21] in the context of First Amendment petitioning and antitrust law. The First Amendment to the United States Constitution guarantees the right to petition the courts for a redress of grievances. Cal. Motor Transp. Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 510, 92 S. Ct. 609, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1972). Under what has been termed the Noerr-Pennington immunity, "the right to petition the courts for a redress of grievances is generally immune from antitrust liability unless the petitioning activity is a 'sham.'" Bryant v. Military Dep't of Miss., 597 F.3d 678, 690 (5th Cir. 2010) (citing United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 85 S. Ct. 1585, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626 (1965) and E. R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 81 S. Ct. 523, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464 (1961)); see also Bill Johnson's Restaurant v. NLRB, 461 U.S. 731, 743 (1983) ("Baseless litigation is not immunized by the First Amendment right to petition."). Thus, sham litigation is an exception to Noerr-Pennington immunity.

In Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Industries, the United States Supreme Court outlined a two-part test for determining whether petitioning activity is a sham. 508 U.S. 49, 60-61, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611. First, "the lawsuit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits." Id. at 60. And second, "only if the challenged litigation is objectively meritless may a court examine the litigant's subjective motivation" to determine "whether the baseless lawsuit concealed 'an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor,' through the 'use [of] the governmental process—as opposed to the outcome of that process—as an [*22] anticompetitive weapon.'" Id. at 60-61 (internal citations omitted). Based on this test, the party asserting the sham litigation exception to Noerr-Pennington immunity bears the burden of disproving the challenged lawsuit's legal viability before subjective intent will be considered. Id. at 61.

An example of how the the sham litigation exception may be asserted is as follows: A plaintiff files a lawsuit against a defendant for trademark infringement. The defendant countersues claiming the plaintiff's lawsuit violates antitrust laws for which the defendant has sustained damages. The plaintiff-defendant asserts Noerr-Pennington immunity as an affirmative defense to any potential antitrust liability. The defendant-plaintiff asserts sham litigation as an exception to the plaintiff-defendant's claim to Noerr-Pennington immunity. At trial, the defendant-plaintiff bears the burden of demonstrating both the objective and the subjective component of the sham litigation exception. Id. at 61. Assuming the defendant-plaintiff can prove plaintiff-defendant's lawsuit is a sham, then the plaintiff-defendant would be deprived of immunity, and the defendant-plaintiff must move forward with proving its underlying antitrust claims. [*23] Id. at 61 ("Poof of a sham merely deprives the defendant[-plaintiff] of immunity; it does not relieve the plaintiff[-defendant] of the obligation to establish all other elements of his claim.").

ii. Application of sham litigation exception to this case

Although the sham litigation exception is generally applied in the context of antitrust suits, it has been extended in other contexts. Bryant, 597 F.3d at 692. But even in the nonantitrust context, courts still discuss sham litigation as an exception to Noerr-Pennington immunity. Here, Defendants have countersued Plaintiffs for business disparagement, a nonantitrust suit. In defense, Plaintiffs have asserted the judicial-proceedings privilege, not Noerr-Pennington immunity, as a means of disproving one of the required elements for business disparagement. Defendants' argument that the sham litigation exception strips away Plaintiffs' judicial-proceedings privilege is unprevailing. Defendants have cited no cases, and the Court has found none, that address the application of the sham litigation exception to the judicial-proceedings privilege. Thus, the Court finds the sham litigation exception is inapplicable to the present case.

Even assuming a sham litigation exception [*24] to the judicial-proceedings privilege exists, the Court finds that Defendants have failed to satisfy the first prong of the sham litigation test—whether Plaintiffs' lawsuit is "objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits." See Professional Real Estate Investors, 508 U.S. at 60. As the party moving for summary judgment, Plaintiffs have argued that Defendants are unable to offer any evidence that Plaintiffs' lawsuit is objectively baseless. Plaintiffs have presented the Court with persuasive argument and supporting evidence that when Plaintiffs filed this lawsuit, they reasonably believed that Defendants had included in its licensing packages to Chinese licensees, a copy of an engineering drawing containing a high-pressure hydrogenation reactor. The reactor drawing Defendants submitted to their licensees ("Frontech Reactor Copy") evidences a detailed design of a reactor used in Plaintiffs' BDO manufacturing process. According to Plaintiffs the Frontech Reactor Copy exhibits extraordinary similarity to the reactor drawing owned by Plaintiffs, which Plaintiffs contend they procured from a design firm during the developmental stages of Plaintiffs' proprietary technology. [*25]

As the nonmoving party, and the party with the burden of proof at trial, Defendants must bring forth competent evidence demonstrating a genuine issue of material fact for trial. In support of their sham litigation counterclaim, Defendants rely on the Ma E-mail, which Defendants contend outlines Plaintiffs' intent to file a lawsuit as part of a larger plan to engage in a smear campaign and gain a competitive advantage over Defendants in China. Even if taken as true, this evidence only goes to Plaintiffs' subjective intent, and the two-tiered test for sham litigation first requires Defendants to disprove the legal viability of Plaintiffs' lawsuit before Plaintiffs' subjective intent will be considered. See id. at 61. Defendants have presented no competent evidence in their summary judgment response that demonstrates, objectively, whether Plaintiffs' lawsuit is baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits. Therefore, the Court finds that Plaintiffs are entitled to summary judgment on Defendants' counterclaim for sham litigation.

B. Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment

Plaintiffs claims against Defendants include federal claims under the Lanham [*26] Act for false designation of origin and false advertising and state claims under the n Texas Theft Liability Act and under Texas common law for misappropriation of trade secrets, conversion, misappropriation, unfair competition, civil conspiracy, and unjust enrichment. Defendants move for summary judgment and contend that Plaintiffs' causes of action fail as a matter of law. Plaintiffs oppose summary judgment.

1. Plaintiffs' Lanham Act claims

"'The typical § 43(a) Lanham Act claim is brought by a plaintiff who is in competition with the defendant, and charges the defendant with using a mark—a brand name, a word, 'a slogan, a symbol, a combination of words and symbols, an ornamental feature, a distinctive shape, or something else intended to remind the consumer of the brand'—so similar to that of the plaintiff's that the public may be confused as to the source of the good or service." Advanced Res. Int'l, Inc. v. Tri-Star Petroleum Co., 4 F.3d 327, 334 (4th Cir. 1993) (quoting Blau Plumbing, Inc. v. S.O.S. Fix-It, Inc., 781 F.2d 604, 609 (7th Cir. 1986) and listing example cases brought under § 43(a)). Although trademark protection is at the core of the Lanham Act, § 43(a) of the Act, codified at 15 U.S.C § 1125(a), extends to nontrademark scenarios. Dastar Corp. v. Twentieth Century Fox Film Corp., 539 U.S. 23,27-28, 123 S. Ct. 2041, 156 L. Ed. 2d 18 (2003). These scenarios include false designation of origin, 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a)(1)(A); and false advertisement, 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a)(1)(B), both of which Plaintiffs assert against Defendants. [*27]

a. False designation of origin

Section 1125(a)(1)(A) creates a civil cause of action for false designation of origin made in connection with goods or services. Id. § 1125(a)(1)(A). This cause of action arises in a "reverse passing off' scenario, which occurs when a "producer misrepresents someone else's goods or services as his own."[11] Dastar, 539 U.S. at 28 n.1. The "origin" of a good or service is the "producer of the tangible goods [or services] that are offered for sale, and not to the author of any idea, concept, or communication embodied in those goods [or services]." Id. at 37. Thus, the goods or services that are examined under a reverse-passing-off claim for false designation of origin are those of the defendant. See id.

Plaintiffs' false designation of origin claim alleges that Defendants have made false and misleading statements of fact regarding the origin of Defendants' BDO technology and regarding the origin of the Frontech Reactor Copy, in connection with bids seeking to license the BDO technology and in subsequent license packages provided to licensees. Defendants contend that the BDO technology at issue is merely a process for creating BDO, and therefore, it is not a protectable "good" under the Lanham Act. The Court agrees. [*28] *See, e.g., INVISTA S.a.r.l. v. E.I. Du Pont De Nemours & Co., et al., No. 08 Cv. 7270(BSJ), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 94009, 2008 WL 4865208, at 3 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 3, 2008) (Jones, J.) (dismissing INVISTA's Lanham Act claim because the defendant's alleged misrepresentations related to a technological process rather that any "goods or services" within the meaning of Section 43(a)); *see also Hans-Jurgen Laube & Oxidwerk HJL AG v. KM Europa Metal AG, No. 96 Cv 8147(PKL), 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3921, 1998 WL 148427, at 2 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 27, 1998) (Leisure, J.) ("[N]either a patent nor a process for creating a product constitute 'goods' under Section 43(a) of the Lanham Act.").

Even assuming, however, that the BDO technology at issue is a good, or even more, that Defendants' licensing of that technology constitutes a services, as Plaintiffs argue, Plaintiffs misunderstand the application of the Lanham Act. To state a claim for reverse passing off, Plaintiffs must allege that the actual goods or services that Defendants provided to its licensees were in fact produced or performed by Plaintiffs. Tao of Sys Integration, Inc. v. Analytical Servs. & Materials, Inc., 299 F. Supp. 2d 565, 572 (E.D. Va. 2004) (Smith, J.). Plaintiffs' allegations and summary judgment evidence provide no basis for suspecting that Defendants' services, if any, were actually performed by Plaintiffs. Additionally, Plaintiffs' allegations and summary judgment evidence provide no basis for suspecting that Defendants' goods—presumably Defendants' [*29] BDO technology or the Frontech Reactor Copy—were actually produced by Plaintiffs and sold by Defendants. At best, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants' licensing bids and licensing packages incorporated technological ideas or concepts that belonged to Plaintiffs. This is precisely the sort of allegation that the Supreme Court has rejected for a reverse-passing-off claim. See Dastar, 539 U.S. at 37 (stating that the term "origin" as used in § 43(a) of the Lanham Act refers to the "producer of the tangible goods [or services] that are offered for sale, and not to the author of any idea, concept, or communication embodied in those goods [or services]. To hold otherwise would be akin to finding that § 43(a) created a species of perpetual patent and copyright, which Congress may not do."). Accordingly, Plaintiffs false designation of origin claim fails as a matter of law.

b. False advertising

Section 1125(a)(1)(B) provides a civil cause of action against any person who, "in commercial adverting or promotion," misrepresents the "the nature, characteristics, qualities, or geographic origin of his or her or another person's goods, services or commercial activities." 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a)(1)(B). Plaintiffs' false advertising claim alleges that Defendants have made false and misleading [*30] statements of fact regarding the origin of Defendants' BDO technology and regarding the origin of the Frontech Reactor Copy, in connection with the advertising and marketing of Defendants' services to potential licensees of BDO technology and in subsequent license packages provided to licensees. The Court finds these allegations to be, basically, a restatement of Plaintiffs' prior claim for false designation of origin under § 1125(a)(1)(A). Moreover, Plaintiffs have presented no evidence that any of Defendants' alleged misrepresentations relate to the "the nature, characteristics, qualities, or geographic origin" of any "goods or services" that Plaintiffs actually produced or rendered. Accordingly, for the reasons stated previously, this claim fails as a matter of law.

2. Plaintiffs' state-law claims

Defendants move for summary judgment on all Plaintiffs' state-law claims, which include claims under the Texas Theft Liability Act and under Texas common law for misappropriation of trade secrets, conversion, misappropriation, unfair competition, civil conspiracy, and unjust enrichment. Having considered the parties' arguments and summary judgment evidence, the Court finds there are material fact questions [*31] on each of Plaintiffs' remaining state-law claims.

IV. CONCLUSION

Based on all of the foregoing, the Court hereby

ORDERS that Plaintiffs INVISTA S.a r.l., INVISTA Technologies S.a. r.l., and INVISTA North America S.a. r.l.'s Motion for Summary Judgment Dismissing Defendants' Counterclaims (Document No. 99) is GRANTED. Defendants' counterclaims for business disparagement and sham litigation are DISMISSED. The Court further ORDERS that Defendants Frontech, Inc. and Ming D. Wan's Motion for Complete Summary Judgment (Document No. 113) is GRANTED IN PART and DENIED IN PART. Plaintiffs' federal claim for false designation of origin and false advertising under § 43(a) of the Lanham Act are DISMISSED. Plaintiffs' state-law claims, however, will proceed to trial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

HN1[] Scope, Exemptions

When a city acts as a market participant it generally has to play by the same rules as everyone else. It can't abuse its monopoly power or conspire to suppress competition. Except sometimes it can. If the city can show that its parent state authorized it to upend normal competition, to install instead a municipal monopoly, the city enjoys immunity from federal antitrust liability.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

HN2[] Scope, Exemptions

The U.S. Supreme Court has held that the Sherman Act's terms should not be read to preempt state imposed restraints of trade. States may regulate economic activity as they wish, pursuing even patently anticompetitive policies without having to look over their shoulders to see if Congress approves. Thus was born the concept of "state action immunity" (though the term "immunity" may be a bit strong since the U.S. Supreme Court held only that Congress hadn't covered state action, not that it couldn't).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

HN3[] Scope, Exemptions

A municipality sometimes may be sued under the Sherman Act and sometimes it may not. Because municipalities are not themselves sovereign, they should not automatically be eligible for the federal deference given to the States that create them. A municipality's "parochial interests" in anticompetitive policies don't necessarily implicate the federalism concerns that animate the state action immunity doctrine and shouldn't always be placed above the nation's economic goals reflected in the antitrust laws. This means not only that the Sherman Act can sometimes preempt a municipality's actions; it also means that municipalities may be subject to treble damage awards for violating the Act. At the same time, if a state expressly adopts an anticompetitive policy and chooses to use its municipal subdivisions as instruments to effect that policy, then the federal-state comity concerns undergirding the Parker state immunity doctrine do come into play. A municipality will be entitled to the protection of the state action exemption from the antitrust laws only if there is a clear articulation of a state policy to authorize anticompetitive conduct by the municipality. Put simply, at the end of the day a municipality shares the state's "immunity" when but only when it is implementing anticompetitive policies authorized by the state.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

HN4[] Scope, Exemptions

A municipality surely lacks antitrust "immunity" unless it can bear the burden of showing that its challenged conduct was at least a foreseeable (if not explicit) result of state legislation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

HN5[] Scope, Exemptions

A state's grant of a traditional corporate charter to a municipality isn't enough to make the municipality's subsequent anticompetitive conduct foreseeable. Municipal charters typically endow the municipality with the authority to make contracts, to buy and sell property, to enter into joint ventures. But most private corporate charters allow companies to do these same things. And natural persons win these powers simply by reaching the age of majority. Neither companies nor persons automatically take with these pedestrian powers the right to use them in an anticompetitive fashion, and there's no reason to think municipalities do either. Put simply, simple permission to play in a market doesn't foreseeably entail permission to roughhouse in that market unlawfully.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

HN6[] Scope, Exemptions

The fact that a state may have authorized some forms of municipal anticompetitive conduct isn't enough to make all forms of anticompetitive conduct foreseeable. Antitrust violations come in a variety of flavors and just because the state has authorized one doesn't mean it has authorized all. Even a lawful municipal monopolist may be subject to antitrust restraints when it seeks to extend or exploit its monopoly in a manner not contemplated by its authorization.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

HN7[] Scope, Exemptions

When asking whether the state has authorized the municipality's anticompetitive conduct courts look to and preference the most specific direction issued by the state legislature on the subject. After all, it is long and well settled that whenever courts construe legislative enactments a specific statute controls over a general one without regard to priority of enactment.

Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 18, § 437.2(k) expressly entitles rural electric cooperatives to continue and extend furnishing of electric energy in areas they have traditionally serviced even after those areas are annexed by a municipality. Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 18, § 437.2(k).

"Natural" monopolies are hardly always obvious or immutable. What one might call a natural monopoly in one place might not be a natural monopoly in another, and what might be a natural monopoly today might not be one tomorrow (think telephones and railroads).

HN15[] Scope, Exemptions

Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 17, § 190.7 does forbid a rural electrical cooperative from taking a municipality's existing customers. Nothing in Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 17, § 190.7 prohibits a rural electrical cooperative from competing against a municipality for new customers in annexed areas. Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 18, § 437.2(k) expressly guarantees a rural electrical cooperative the right to do exactly that.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

HN16[] Scope, Exemptions

To say that the authority to provide services in two markets authorizes a municipality to do whatever it wants in one or both of those markets would be to let the Parker immunity exception swallow the Sherman Act's antitrust rule.

HN1[] When a city acts as a market participant it generally has to play by the same rules as everyone else. It can't abuse its monopoly power or conspire to suppress competition. Except sometimes it can. If the city can show that its parent state authorized it to upend normal competition, to install instead a municipal monopoly, the city enjoys immunity from federal antitrust liability. The problem for the City of Newkirk in this case is that the state has done no such thing.

Newkirk and Kay Electric [2] Cooperative both provide electricity to Oklahoma consumers. Traditionally, Newkirk has served customers inside its city limits while Kay, a rural electrical cooperative, has served nearby customers outside the city boundaries. When the announcement came that a new jail would be built just outside Newkirk, Kay naturally offered to provide electricity. But unwilling to let so lucrative an opportunity slip away, Newkirk responded by annexing the area and issuing its own service offer. At the end of the day, Kay's offer was much the better but the jail still elected to buy electricity from Newkirk. Why? Because Newkirk is the only provider of sewage services in the area and it refused to provide any sewage services to the jail — that is, unless the jail also bought the city's electricity. Finding themselves stuck between a rock and a pile of sewage, the operators of the jail reluctantly went with the city's package deal.

As these things go Kay responded by suing Newkirk, alleging that the city had engaged in unlawful tying and attempted monopolization in violation of the Sherman Act. 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2. But the district court refused to allow the case to proceed, granting Newkirk's motion [3] to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) after it found Newkirk "immune" from liability as a matter of law. It is this ruling Kay challenges on appeal.

The Sherman Act has little to say about municipal immunity, at least directly. It contains only the broadest and barest of proscriptions against anticompetitive activity — declaring unlawful any contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade and forbidding any monopoly or attempt to monopolize. Over the last 120 years, however, much judicial embroidery has stitched out the scope of permissible and impermissible competitive activity under the Act, handiwork that's often been informed by evolving (if sometimes competing) schools of economic thought. One particular development, however, and the one at issue in this case, has less to do with economic regulation than state sovereignty.

While the Sherman Act clearly forbids anticompetitive conduct by private market players, what about conduct by state actors? In Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943), the plaintiff argued that the Act's sweeping terms don't distinguish between private and public players, that states must live by the same antitrust rules as everyone else. The Supreme [4] Court, however, disagreed. It assumed without deciding that Congress could constitutionally preempt state law directing state actors to behave anticompetitively. Id. at 350. But at [*1042] the same time the Court said there's "no hint" Congress wished to attack and undo such state sanctioned restraints of trade when it passed the Sherman Act. Id. Given this, and given the importance of federal-state comity, HN2[] the Court held that the Act's terms should not be read to preempt state imposed restraints of trade. States may regulate economic activity as they wish, pursuing even patently anticompetitive policies without having to look over their shoulders to see if Congress approves. Id. at 351. Thus was born the concept of "state action immunity" (though the term "immunity" may be a bit strong since the Court held only that Congress hadn't covered state action, not that it couldn't).

The Court's answer in Parker, however, soon begot new questions of its own. If states are free from federal antitrust worries, what about the municipal agents they create and through which they often act? When the Supreme Court eventually took up this question, it conclusively answered it inconclusively, holding that [5] HN3[] a municipality sometimes may be sued under the Sherman Act and sometimes it may not. Because municipalities "are not themselves sovereign," the Court reasoned, they should not automatically be eligible for the "federal deference [given to] the States that create them." City of Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 412, 98 S.

Ct. 1123, 55 L. Ed. 2d 364 (1978) (plurality); Town of Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 38, 105 S. Ct. 1713, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24 (1985). A municipality's "parochial interests" in anticompetitive policies, the Court added, don't necessarily implicate the federalism concerns that animate the state action immunity doctrine and shouldn't always be placed "above the Nation's economic goals reflected in the antitrust laws." Lafayette, 435 U.S. at 412-13. Perhaps surprisingly, the Court told us, this means not only that the Sherman Act can sometimes preempt a municipality's actions; it also means that municipalities may be subject to treble damage awards for violating the Act. See generally Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 223 (Aspen 3d ed. 2006); Community Communications Co. v. City of Boulder, 455 U.S. 40, 60-61, 102 S. Ct. 835, 70 L. Ed. 2d 810 (1982) (Rehnquist, J., dissenting). At the same time, the Court held, if a state [6] expressly adopts an anticompetitive policy and chooses to use its municipal subdivisions as instruments to effect that policy, then the federal-state comity concerns undergirding the Parker state immunity doctrine do come into play. And "[i]t is therefore clear," the Court concluded after laying all this out, "that a municipality will be entitled to the protection of the state action exemption from the antitrust laws" only if there is a "clear articulation of a state policy to authorize anticompetitive conduct" by the municipality. Hallie, 471 U.S. at 34 (internal quotation omitted); see also Boulder, 455 U.S. at 54-55; City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Adver., Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 373, 111 S. Ct. 1344, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382 (1991). Put simply, at the end of the day a municipality shares the state's "immunity" when but only when it is implementing anticompetitive policies authorized by the state.

How clearly must a state legislature articulate its authorization of anticompetitive municipal conduct to trigger antitrust immunity? Now many decades removed from Parker, the Court has sometimes declared that its judicially created "[s]tate-action immunity [should be] disfavored," F.T.C. v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 504 U.S. 621, 635-36, 112 S. Ct. 2169, 119 L. Ed. 2d 410 (1992) [7] (citing Lafayette, 435 U.S. at 398-99), and, because of this, a municipality's authority to suppress competition [*1043] must be "clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed" in state legislation. California Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 105, 100 S. Ct. 937, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233 (1980) (emphasis added); Ticor, 504 U.S. at 636 (requiring "real compliance" with Midcal). At other times, however, the Court has appeared to require something less of cities seeking to invoke Parker's protections, suggesting that a municipality's actions are free from the grasp of federal antitrust law if anticompetitive effects "logically would result" from state legislative policy. Hallie, 471 U.S. at 42. Complicating matters still further, the Court has also said that a municipality may be authorized to engage in anticompetitive actions that are merely the "foreseeable result" of state legislation. Id. (emphasis added).

With its usual care Professor Areeda and Hovenkamp's treatise traces all these warps and wefts before gently suggesting that "while the policy favoring competition is national and the states are permitted to establish an alternative regime," states should be required to "declare their intentions [8] clearly rather than falling back on the ambiguity-creating compromises that often characterize the legislative process." Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 225a at 133. Such a bright line rule, they have said, would "do a much better job of identifying the relevant principle of federalism that undergirds the Parker doctrine." Id. But however much sense this makes (and we think it makes quite a lot of sense), our lot as a lower court isn't to choose between the Supreme Court's holdings but to apply them. And though it's hard to see a way to reconcile all of the Court's competing statements in this area, we can say with certainty this much — HN4[] a municipality surely lacks antitrust "immunity" unless it can bear the burden of showing that its challenged conduct was at least a foreseeable (if not explicit) result of state legislation. Of course, what does and doesn't qualify as foreseeable is hardly "self-evident" or self-defining, itself perhaps another reason to eschew the test. See id. ¶ 225b3 at 144. But there are at least a few bright lines we can discern in this muddled arena — and these are enough to allow us to dispose of this appeal with confidence.

First, HN5[] a state's grant of a traditional [9] corporate charter to a municipality isn't enough to make the municipality's subsequent anticompetitive conduct foreseeable. Municipal charters typically endow the municipality with the authority to make contracts, to buy and sell property, to enter into joint ventures. But most private corporate charters allow companies to do these same things. And natural persons win these powers simply by reaching the age of majority. Neither companies nor persons automatically take with these pedestrian powers the right to use them in an anticompetitive fashion, and there's no reason to think municipalities do either. Put simply, simple permission to play in a market doesn't foreseeably entail permission to roughhouse in that market unlawfully. See Boulder, 455 U.S. at 54-55; Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 225b5 at 155 (giving as examples a municipality's operation of golf courses and swimming pools and explaining that monopoly in "such facilities is hardly inevitable"); Surgical Care Ctr. of Hammond, L.C. v. Hosp. Svc. Dist. No. 1, 171 F.3d 231, 235 (5th Cir. 1999); Lancaster Comm. Hosp. v. Antelope Valley Hosp. Dist., 940 F.2d 397, 402-03 (9th Cir. 1991).

Second, HN6[] the fact that a state may have authorized [10] some forms of municipal anticompetitive conduct isn't enough to make all forms of anticompetitive conduct [*1044] foreseeable. Antitrust violations come in a variety of flavors and just because the state has authorized one doesn't mean it has authorized all. As the Court has put it, "even a lawful [municipal] monopolist may be subject to antitrust restraints when it seeks to extend or exploit its monopoly in a manner not contemplated by its authorization." Lafayette, 435 U.S. at 417; see also Hallie, 471 U.S. at 44 ("[T]he legislature contemplated the kind of action complained of.") (emphasis added); Midcal, 445 U.S. at 105; Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 225a at 132-33.

Third, HN7[] when asking whether the state has authorized the municipality's anticompetitive conduct we look to and preference the most specific direction issued by the state legislature on the subject. After all, it is long and well settled that whenever we construe legislative enactments — and that's precisely what we're called on to do when deciding a municipality's antitrust immunity in light of state authorizing legislation — "a specific statute controls over a general one without regard to priority of enactment." Bulova Watch Co. v. United States, 365 U.S. 753, 758, 81 S. Ct. 864, 6 L. Ed. 2d 72, 1961-1 C.B. 782 (1961); [11] Edmond v. United States, 520 U.S. 651, 657, 117 S. Ct. 1573, 137 L. Ed. 2d 917 (1997).

Applying these rules to our case, it quickly becomes clear that Newkirk enjoys no immunity. HN8[] The Oklahoma legislature has spoken with specificity to the question whether there should be competition for electricity services in annexed areas. And it has expressed a clear preference for, not against, competition. While Newkirk cites a number of more general enabling statutes conferring on the city the authority to do business, none authorizes the kind of anticompetitive conduct alleged here, let alone suggests that we may ignore the more specific provisions of law indicating it may not.

The most specific legislation relevant to our inquiry the parties have identified is § 437.2 of the Rural Electric Cooperative Act. Part of Oklahoma law since 1961, HN9[] this provision expressly entitles rural electric cooperatives like Kay to "continue and extend furnishing of electric energy" in areas they have traditionally serviced even after those areas are annexed by a municipality. 18 Okla. Stat. § 437.2(k). This provision thus speaks directly to both the area and issue in this lawsuit. It is undisputed that the jail lies in an area traditionally serviced [12] by Kay; that the area has now been annexed by Newkirk; and that Newkirk is allegedly thwarting Kay's ability to operate there. And § 437.2(k) doesn't merely authorize Kay to continue to compete in annexed areas; it protects Kay from municipal interference in those areas, allowing Kay to continue to operate without having to seek or obtain "consent, franchise, license, [or] permit" from Newkirk. HN10[] Far from displacing competition, then, this language foreseeably does just its opposite — it seeks to preserve competition after annexation by constraining municipalities from using their considerable regulatory powers to harm rival rural electricity providers. Underscoring the point, the statute goes on to say a municipality may impose only two conditions on electric cooperatives operating in annexed areas — it may force them to pay taxes and comply with safety regulations. The fact that the statute fails to authorize any other municipal burden on competition is glaring. See United States v. Johnson, 529 U.S. 53, 58, 120 S. Ct. 1114, 146 L. Ed. 2d 39 (2000) ("When [the legislature] provides exceptions in a statute, it does not follow that courts have authority to create others. The proper inference . . . is that [the legislature] [13] considered the issues of exceptions [*1045] and, in the end, limited the statute to the ones set forth.").

This specific and state-sanctioned battle for electricity customers in annexed areas rests against an even grander plan to expand competition in electricity markets. In 1997, the Oklahoma legislature enacted the Electric Restructuring Act seeking to HN11[] "allow direct access by retail consumers to the competitive market for the generation of electricity while maintaining the safety and reliability of the electricity system in the state." 17 Okla. Stat. § 190.2. Creating a joint task force to promote restructuring, this law expressly aims to "provide greater competition and more efficient regulation," "increase[] consumer choice," and "provide electric generation service at the lowest and most competitive rates." Id.; see also 17 Okla. Stat. § 190.4 ("Competitive markets are to be encouraged to the greatest extent possible."). Here again, Oklahoma has expressed an unmistakable policy preference for competition in the provision of electricity.

Of course, Newkirk replies that the Electric Restructuring Act has yet to restructure much of anything. The sort of competition it envisions has yet to [14] emerge on the scale the legislature hoped, Newkirk says. And perhaps this is so. But no one denies that the Restructuring Act is on the books or that it expresses a policy preference for competition in electricity generation and supply. Neither is it the place of a court to say whether, over the last fourteen years since the statute's enactment, Oklahoma has moved too slowly or quickly in its efforts to restructure an entire industry. And no one before us has been so bold as to suggest that desuetude might render this statute, only in its teenage years, a dead letter we might simply ignore. See Norman J. Singer & J.D. Shambie Singer, 1A Statutes and Statutory Construction § 23:26 at 533 (7th ed. 2009) (HN12[] "The doctrine of separation of powers prevents holding that a legislative enactment . . . is ineffective by nonuse or obsolescence."). Besides, competition is already a manifest reality between cooperatives and municipalities in Oklahoma — as this case itself attests — and the state has taken other affirmative steps to increase this form of competition by conducting studies and declaring a moratorium on efforts by cities to condemn competing private facilities. See 11 Okla. Stat. § 21-222.

In [15] reply to all this, Newkirk draws our attention to various other provisions of state law, some of which merit attention here. Each, however, speaks with far less specificity to the challenged conduct than either the Cooperative Act or Restructuring Act. In fact, Newkirk begins its case with and emphasizes heavily throughout its brief the most general and least specific laws of all, portions of the Oklahoma state constitution that merely authorize municipalities to do business. See Okla. Const. Art. 18, §§ 6, 7. But this hardly tells us much of anything. As already explained, it is well settled that HN13[] general municipal charters are never enough to trigger Parker's protections.

Newkirk next draws our attention to 11 Okla. Stat. § 22-104. On inspection, however, this provision (similarly) turns out to be nothing more than a general enabling statute allowing municipalities to run utilities. Of course, one might argue that at least certain utilities are "natural" monopolies and so a great variety of anticompetitive conduct, including the conduct challenged in this case, would foreseeably follow from allowing a city to operate a utility. But we reject any such suggestion. For starters, and as [16] we have already explained, Supreme Court precedent doesn't support the idea that an enabling law permitting a city to run a business is enough [*1046] to produce Parker immunity. Beyond that, Newkirk's reading would require courts to decide whether a particular utility is or isn't a "natural" monopoly. And that's a business as busy as a box of frogs. HN14[] "Natural" monopolies are hardly always obvious or immutable. What one might call a natural monopoly in one place might not be a natural monopoly in another, and what might be a natural monopoly today might not be one tomorrow (think telephones and railroads). See Alfred E. Kahn, 2 The Economics of Regulation: Principles and Institutions 10 (1971) ("[T]echnology is perpetually developing: so the natural monopoly of yesterday may no longer be natural today."); Richard A. Posner, Natural Monopoly and Its Regulation, 21 Stan. L. Rev. 548, 636 (1969) ("[N]atural monopoly conditions are quite likely to be transient."). For an anticompetitive result to qualify as a foreseeable consequence of state legislative advance than a court's ruling on whether a particular business at a particular time and in a particular place qualifies as a "natural" [17] monopoly.

Trying another angle, Newkirk argues that 17 Okla. Stat. § 190.7 demonstrates an intent by Oklahoma to limit competition in the electricity markets. And here Newkirk has at least something of a point. HN15[] Section 190.7 does forbid a rural electrical cooperative like Kay from taking a municipality's existing customers. The difficulty is that nothing in § 190.7 prohibits a rural electrical cooperative from competing against a municipality for new customers in annexed areas. And this is hardly surprising given that (as we've seen) § 437.2(k) expressly guarantees Kay the right to do exactly that. Neither is the question before us whether Oklahoma has sought to make the electricity market competitive in every respect. It is instead, and as we have already explained, only whether Oklahoma has authorized the specific form of anticompetitive conduct under attack. And in this case Kay has challenged Newkirk's ability to preclude it from winning a new customer, not taking Newkirk's existing customers. On that, the question posed by this case, § 190.7 has nothing to say.

An even greater problem besets Newkirk's reliance on 18 Okla. Stat. § 437.2(k). Newkirk notes that this statute allows [18] municipalities, after annexing an area, to expropriate the facilities of the incumbent rural electric cooperative. On first blush this appears to be the strongest evidence yet of a legislative intent to allow municipalities to monopolize electricity markets within their borders. But, as part of its plan to bring more competition to electricity markets, the state legislature recently and expressly suspended these very powers. See 11 Okla. Stat. § 21-222. So if anything Newkirk's citation winds up doing more harm than good to its cause.

In a final stand, Newkirk insists that our decision to allow this case to proceed cannot be reconciled with Hallie or Sterling Beef Co. v. City of Fort Morgan, 810 F.2d 961 (10th Cir. 1987). Analogies to these cases, Newkirk insists, demonstrate its entitlement to Parker immunity. In truth, however, they do nearly the opposite.

In Hallie, the Court confronted a state statute that authorized municipalities to delineate the area in which it wished to afford sewage services. When the defendant-city did just that, some nearby towns complained that the city had refused to treat sewage from outside the city's delineated boundaries, and alleged that the city's [19] refusal to share or provide access to its treatment plant amounted to a violation of the Sherman Act. The Court found Parker immunity because the city's conduct was just the sort of thing the state legislature [*1047] had authorized. But, by contrast in our case, there's nothing on Oklahoma's statute books to suggest that the legislature authorized the species of antitrust violation alleged here — refusing to provide an end customer one service (sewage) unless he purchased something entirely different (electricity). At the end of the day, Oklahoma law simply allows Newkirk to provide sewage and electricity services. And it is no more foreseeable from this fact that Newkirk might unlawfully use its sewage business to sell electricity than to sell magazines, or life insurance, or require the prison to be painted a particular color. HN16[] To say that the authority to provide services in two markets authorizes a municipality to do whatever it wants in one or both of those markets would be to let the Parker immunity exception swallow the Sherman Act's antitrust rule.

Hallie is beside the point for another but still related reason. It involved a situation where the legislative evidence ran but one way — [20] the only relevant statute in the case tended to suggest that the particular challenged anticompetitive conduct was foreseeable. Meanwhile, the statutes identified by plaintiffs to suggest a pro-competitive state policy were introduced too late in the proceedings. And, as it turned out, they were themselves no more than general enabling statutes authorizing the plaintiffs to conduct business. See 471 U.S. at 42 n.5. Hallie thus doesn't tell us anything about the situation we face — where specific state statutes authorizing competition are compared to more general ones that are at best only susceptible to an anticompetitive gloss.

Sterling Beef is no more and perhaps even less analogous. The municipality there operated a natural gas utility. Under state law, it enjoyed the power not just to operate its own utility but also to decide whether to allow competitors to provide distribution systems within its territorial limits. The municipality denied authorization to a distributor who wished to build its pipes within city limits. When the distributor brought an antitrust suit, this court — unsurprisingly — held that an "anticompetitive impact" is the "obvious result of the state scheme." Sterling Beef, 810 F.2d at 964. [21] Indeed, the statute amounted to an express permission to create a monopoly if the municipality wished; competition could exist only at the city's grace. See also Allright Colo., Inc. v. City and Cty. of Denver, 937 F.2d 1502, 1508-09 (10th Cir. 1991) (finding antitrust immunity where state statute authorized city to regulate all airport transportation services). This case could hardly be more different. Oklahoma expressly entitles Kay to provide electricity services in the annexed area at issue — and expressly frees it of the need to obtain Newkirk's "consent, franchise, license, permit, or other authority" to do so. 18 Okla. Stat. § 437.2(k). If Sterling Beef has any bearing on this case, then, it serves only as a study in contrast not commonality.

The district court's Rule 12(b)(6) dismissal order is reversed, and the case is remanded for further proceedings with respect to Kay's allegations of unlawful tying and attempted monopolization of electricity services. No other aspects of the district court's dismissal order were pursued in this appeal.

A motion to strike admits all facts well pleaded; it does not admit legal conclusions or the truth or accuracy of opinions stated in the pleadings. The purpose of a motion to strike is to contest the legal sufficiency of the allegations of any complaint or counter claim to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. HN5[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Connecticut courts have held that it is a fundamental requirement under a rule of reason claim that there must be an allegation of public injury to competition; a harmful effect on a more generalized market and not merely on a single supplier or purchaser. In the context of an antitrust count, a plaintiff cannot merely state, in conclusory terms, that a defendant violated antitrust laws. Such allegations are essential because the antitrust laws were enacted to protect competition, not competitors.

MEMORANDUM OF DECISION RE (#110) PLAINTIFF'S MOTION TO STRIKE COUNTERCLAIM

This is a collection action brought by the plaintiff, Navien America, Inc. ("Navien") against the defendant, John H. Allen, III, d/b/a Allen's Plumbing Supply ("Allen").

The defendant has made a counterclaim against the plaintiff alleging that the plaintiff has engaged in price-fixing in violation of §§3 and 5(a) of the Connecticut Antitrust Act, Conn. Gen. Statutes §§35-26 and 35-28(a).

The plaintiff has moved to strike that counterclaim, arguing that 1) it fails to apprise the plaintiff sufficiently of the nature of the action and (2) it fails to state a legally sufficient antitrust claim upon which relief can be granted.

HN1[] "A motion to strike admits all facts well pleaded; it does not admit legal conclusions or the truth or accuracy of opinions stated in the pleadings." Faulkner v. United Technologies Corp., 240 Conn. 576, 588, 693 A.2d 293 (1997). "The purpose of a motion to strike is to contest . . . the legal sufficiency of the allegations of any complaint [or counter claim] . . . to state a claim upon which relief can be granted . . . A motion to strike . . . requires [*2] no factual findings by the trial court." Fort Trumbull Conservancy, LLC v Alves, 262 Conn. 480, 498, 815 A.2d 1188 (2003).

The parties appeared and were heard and the Court reserved decision. Having considered the arguments of counsel, the applicable statutes and case law, the Court makes the following findings.

The defendant bases its allegation of price fixing on the fact that the plaintiff engages in a policy with the retail companies with which it supplies tankless water heaters whereby such retailers, including the defendant, are not permitted to sell its products for less than a minimum price set by Navien. When Allen refused to go along with that policy, Navien refused to provide Allen with the merchandise. Navien continues to supply those products to Allen's competitors. Allen has alleged that such practice constitutes illegal price fixing.

(1) AS FOR THE CLAIM THAT THE COUNTER CLAIM DOES NOT SUFFICIENTLY APPRISE THE PLAINTIFF OF THE NATURE OF THE ACTION:

The defendant's reference to Sections 35-26 and 35-28(a), C.G.S. more than sufficiently apprises the plaintiff as to what proscribed conduct the defendant is relying upon. HN2[] Those statutes expressly, concern the prohibition against restraint of [*3] trade or commerce. The reference to "Sections 3 and 5(a) of the Connecticut Antitrust Act," while inaccurate, does not prevent the plaintiff from being aware of the defendant's counterclaim.

That argument in opposition to the motion to strike has no merit.

(2) AS FOR THE ARGUMENT THAT COUNTERCLAIM FAILS TO STATE A LEGALLY SUFFICIENT ANTITRUST CLAIM:

The plaintiff, Navien, has cited a number of cases which deal with the issue of price fixing policies which rise to the level of violations of the antitrust statutes. Navien argues that its policy of mandatory price minimums for its products does not constitute a restrain on trade and cites authority for its position.

In its brief in support of the motion to strike, Navien points out, "It is the intent of the General Assembly that in construing sections 35-24 to 35-46, inclusive, the courts of this state shall be guided by the interpretations given by the federal courts to federal antitrust statutes." Sec. 35-44b, C.G.S.

Navien argues that there are two ways in which the Court may analyze alleged violations of the Connecticut Antitrust Act: (1) the "rule of reason" analysis when dealing with conduct which is in restraint of trade or (2) finding [*4] a "per se" violation when presented with conduct that is "manifestly anticompetitive." See Bridgeport Harbour Place I, LLC v. Ganim, 111 Conn. App. 197, 958 A.2d 210, 216 (2008), and Elida, Inc. v. Harmor Realty Corp., 177 Conn. 218, 230-31, 413 A.2d 1226 (1979).

Navien points out that the United States Supreme Court recently rejected the application of the "per se" rule to cases alleging antitrust violations based on the existence of a vertical price restraint, citing Leegin Creative Leather Products, Inc. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 908, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 (2007).

In light of that decision, Navien argues that courts faced with cases alleging vertical price constraints (such as Allen's counterclaim in the instant case) must now employ a "rule of reason" test, which requires a court to distinguish between a restraint with an anticompetitive effect that is harmful to the consumer and a restraint with a procompetitive effect that is in the consumers' interest. See Leegin, supra, p. 897.

In his opposition to Navien's motion to strike Allen argues that judicial interpretation of the Act is to be guided by, not mandated by, the interpretations given to federal antitrust statutes by federal courts and that certain interpretations of federal [*5] law are inappropriate or inapposite when interpreting the Connecticut Antitrust Act.

He cites Westport Taxi Serv., Inc. v. Westport Transit Dist., 235 Conn. 1, 664 A.2d 719 (1995), wherein our Supreme Court held, "we follow federal precedent when we interpret the Act unless the text of our antitrust statutes, or other pertinent state law, requires us to interpret it differently." Id. P. 15-16 (emphasis added).

Allen argues that Leegin is applicable only to federal antitrust law and to antitrust laws of states which strictly follow federal case law and which do not have "significant statutory departures from Sherman Act's provisions for price maintenance." He considers Connecticut to be one of those states.

Allen points out that during the pendency of the Leegin case, Connecticut joined 37 other states in a brief in favor of the per se rule and in opposition to the adoption of the rule of reason analysis. Despite that effort in Leegin, the United States Supreme Court decided that in federal cases vertical price maintenance is subject to the rule of reason analysis rather than the per se rule.

Leegin, as HN3[] federal precedent, is to be followed when the courts of this state interpret the Connecticut Antitrust [*6] Act unless the text of our antitrust statutes, or other pertinent state law, requires them to interpret it differently. See Miller's Pond Co., LLC v. New London, 273 Conn. 786, 806, 873 A.2d 965 (2005).

Notwithstanding Connecticut's historic position for the maintenance of the per se test, this court has not been provided with any Connecticut antitrust statutes or pertinent state law to permit it not to follow Leegin as a federal precedent. The court finds that the rule of reason analysis is the applicable standard in this case to determine if there has been a violation of the Connecticut Antitrust Act.

Allen goes on to argue that if the courts were to follow the rule of reason and reject the per se rule against vertical minimum price fixing, a plaintiff (in this case, Allen, in furtherance of his counterclaim) would bear the burden of showing that an agreement had anticompetitive effects. Should he succeed in meeting that burden, the burden would then switch to the defendant (in this case the plaintiff, Navien) to show that the conduct challenged supports a sufficiently pro-competitive objective. Citing Major League Baseball Properties Inc. v. Salvino, Inc., 542 F.3d 290, 317 (2d Cir., 2008).

In this [*7] case, Allen has not cited any authority for this court not to follow the precedent of Leegin. He has, however, argued that the text of §35-28, C.G.S., as per the holding in the Westport Taxi case, allows this court to apply the per se test notwithstanding the holding in Leegin.

Allens' reliance upon the provisions of §35-28, C.G.S. (which prohibit, inter alia, fixing, controlling or maintaining prices, limiting the sale or supply, and refusing to deal) to warrant the application of the per se test is misplaced. HN4[] In order for such acts to warrant application of the per se test, it is incumbent upon Allen to allege and establish "that such restraint on trade is manifestly anticompetitive through its pernicious effect on competition and its lack of any redeeming virtue . . . 'Per se' rules of illegality should be applied only to conduct which is shown to be 'manifestly anticompetitive.' " Elida, Inc., v. Harmor Realty Corporation, 177 Conn. 218, 231, 413 A.2d 1226 (1979).

No such allegation is made by Allen in his counterclaim.

In support of its motion, Navien points out that HN5[] our courts have held that it is a fundamental requirement under a rule of reason claim that there must be an allegation of "public [*8] injury to competition . . . a harmful effect on a more generalized market and not merely on a single supplier or purchaser . . ." See *Baer v. New England Home Delivery Service, LLC, 2007 Conn.Super. LEXIS 2696 at*8-9 fn.3 (Conn.Super.Ct. Oct 18, 2007).

"In the context of an antitrust count, a plaintiff cannot merely state, in conclusory terms, that a defendant violated . . . antitrust laws." Budget Rent a Car of Westchester, Inc. v. Rental Car Resources, Inc. 842 F.Sup. 614, 616 (D.Conn. 1993).

"There must be some allegation of public injury to competition; a harmful effect on a more generalized market and not merely on a single supplier or purchaser." Blaine v. Meineke Discount Muffler Shops, Inc., 670 F.Sup. 1107, 1114 (D.Conn. 1987)."

"Such allegations are essential because the antitrust laws were enacted to protect competition, not competitors." Retail Service Associates v. ConAgra Products Co., 759 F. Supp. 976, 979-80 (D.Conn. 1987).

For the foregoing reasons, the plaintiff's motion to strike the defendant's counterclaim is hereby granted.

JOSEPH W. DOHERTY, JUDGE

HN1[] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

Summary judgment is proper if the pleadings, the discovery and disclosure materials on file, and any affidavits show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). The moving party bears the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its motion and must identify those portions of the record which it believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. If the moving party satisfies its burden, Rule 56(e) requires the non-moving party to respond by submitting evidentiary materials that designate specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. In determining whether summary judgment is appropriate, a district court must look at the record and any inferences to be drawn from it in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. Summary judgment is not proper if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the non-moving party.

HN5[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Federal antitrust laws cannot be applied to prevent states from exercising their sovereign powers to intervene in markets, even if such intervention entails anticompetitive restraints. Nothing in the language of the Sherman Act or in its history suggests that its purpose is to restrain a state or its officers or agents from activities directed by its legislature, and an unexpressed purpose to nullify a state's control over its officers and agents is not lightly to be attributed to Congress.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

HN6[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The Parker state action doctrine does not extend to all governmental entities, whether state agencies or subdivisions of a state, simply by reason of their status as such. However, municipalities are instrumentalities of the state, and the state action doctrine exempts anticompetitive conduct engaged in by municipalities, pursuant to state policy to displace competition with regulation or monopoly public service. An adequate state mandate for anticompetitive activities of cities and other subordinate governmental units exists when it is found from the authority given a governmental entity to operate in a particular area, that the legislature contemplated the kind of action complained of.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

Governments > Local Governments > Home Rule

HN7[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The state action doctrine does not provide immunity from antitrust liability when a city acted pursuant only to a state's broad grant of "home rule" power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

HN8[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Articulating the state action antitrust immunity rule in the municipality context, a sufficient expression of state policy consists of two elements: (1) the legislature must have authorized the challenged activity, and (2) it must have done so with an intent to displace competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

HN9[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

For purposes of state action antitrust immunity in the municipal context, a specific, detailed legislative authorization of monopoly service need not exist to infer the necessary state intent. It is sufficient that the legislature contemplated the kind of action complained of. In other words, a sufficient state policy to displace competition exists if the challenged restraint is a necessary or reasonable consequence of engaging in the authorized activity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Local Governments & Private Parties

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

HN10[] Parker State Action Doctrine, Local Governments & Private Parties

For purposes of state action antitrust immunity in the municipal context, although Midcal had required active state supervision of the challenged restraint, the United States Supreme Court has applied that requirement only in cases in which the defendants were private entities or individuals. When a city directly intervenes in the market, because municipal officials generally are politically accountable to the citizens they represent for their decisions regarding the challenged restraint, state supervision is not as necessary to prevent abuse as in the private context. Moreover, because the Parker doctrine requires that the state delegate to the local government the authority to engage in the challenged conduct, state supervision of a city's conduct is unnecessary to find state action. Requiring state authorization for local conduct is analogous to requiring active supervision of private conduct; it tests whether challenged local activity is truly state action and therefore entitled to immunity. Thus, at least where a municipality executes a traditional governmental function to protect public health and safety, the state action doctrine requires only that it act pursuant to state policy and does not require active state supervision.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

HN11[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The active state supervision requirement for state action antitrust immunity should not be imposed in cases in which the actor is a municipality. The requirement of active state supervision serves essentially an evidentiary function: it is one way of ensuring that the actor is engaging in the challenged conduct pursuant to state policy. Where the actor is a municipality, there is little or no danger that it is involved in a private price-fixing arrangement. Once it is clear that state authorization exists, there is no need to require the state to supervise actively the municipality's execution of what is a properly delegated function.

Environmental Law > Solid Wastes > Disposal Planning

HN13[] Solid Wastes, Disposal Planning

While Mo. Rev. Stat. § 260.215 does not expressly grant municipalities the power to grant exclusive solid waste disposal contracts, it clearly provides for such authority. Moreover, a legislative intent to displace competition can be inferred from the statutory scheme because it is a necessary and reasonable consequence of engaging in the authorized activity. Under the Missouri statute, municipalities are granted broad authority to regulate solid waste management and to contract with private companies to provide for solid waste management and disposal. Missouri caselaw also recognizes the validity of a municipal grant of a private monopoly in solid waste disposal. The legislative scheme contemplates displacing competition with regulation in the area of solid waste management and disposal.

ORDER

Before the Court are the Motion for Summary Judgment [Doc. # 39] filed by Defendant Allied Services, LLC ("Allied"), the Motion for Summary Judgment [Doc. # 41] filed by Defendant City of Jefferson, Missouri ("Jefferson City"), and the Motion for Summary Judgment [Doc. # 53] filed by Plaintiff George P. Massengale. For the following reasons, the Court grants summary judgment in favor of Defendants only with respect to Plaintiffs' federal antitrust claim and remands the remainder of the action to the Circuit Court of Cole County, Missouri.

I. Background

A. Relevant Undisputed Facts[1]

Plaintiff [*2] Massengale has been a resident and taxpayer of Jefferson City for over 11 years. Defendant Jefferson City is a constitutional charter city located in Cole County and organized under the statutes and Constitution of Missouri. Defendant Allied is organized under Delaware law and based in Phoenix, Arizona.

1. Before the Solid Waste Contract

Before Defendants Jefferson City and Allied entered into an exclusive Solid Waste Contract, the residential trash collection service in Jefferson City was voluntary. Before that Solid Waste Contract took effect in November 2009, Jefferson City residents could choose between using a 95-gallon cart or 32-gallon plastic bags for the twice-a-week pickup, or they could choose some other way of disposing of their solid waste. The rate charged for rental of a 95-gallon cart was $14.88 per month.

Before the Solid Waste Contract took effect, Plaintiff Massengale purchased the bags offered for sale by the solid waste contractors (all associated with Allied) that serviced Jefferson City's solid waste collection needs. Plaintiff would dispose of his trash by placing it in the bags and setting them at the curb for collection by the solid waste contractor. During the [*3] time Plaintiff Massengale was allowed to use these bags, he seldom, if ever, set out more than one bag a month. Plaintiff paid about $1.25 per bag in December 1999, and that amount increased over time to its highest rate of $1.56 just before the effective date of the Solid Waste Contract. There were no other fees or charges for Plaintiff's regular trash pickup. Prior to the effective date of the Solid Waste Contract, Plaintiff Massengale participated in recycling by taking his recyclables to the New World recycling bins provided at Memorial Park, at no cost.

Tom Brown, of the consulting firm Burns & McDonnell, submitted information to Defendant Jefferson City before the City sent out Request for Proposal # 2419 ("the RFP") on October 21, 2008, to potential solid waste collection contractors. Brown opined:

> . . . Jefferson City and Allied Waste report the following statistics relative to residential collection:
> - Number of single family and duplex households — 14,000
> - Number of households subscribing to cart service — approximately 7,900
> - Bag sales per week — approximately 2,600
> Assuming 1,300 households put out 2 bags per week, the total monthly rate for each of these households would be [*4] $12.90/month (2 bags/week x $1.49 per bag x 4.33 weeks/month). Under this assumption, as many as 4,800 households (14,000 — 7,900 — 1,300 households) pay no fees for residential waste removal. Our understanding is that the waste from these households is mainly placed in shared carts. If all these households use shared carts, Allied Waste may be removing up to 52% (4,800 households/9,200 households) more waste than it is being compensated for. At 75% use of shared carts, Allied Waste may be removing up to 39% (3,600 households/9,200 households) more waste than it is being compensated for.
> Optional Residential Collection: Optional participation in the residential collection services offered by Allied Waste (on the basis of its contract with the City) has resulted in as many as 4,800 households not participating in payment of services for residential collection.

[Doc. # 46 at ¶ 22; see also Doc. # 58, Ex. T.]

2. The Request for Proposal and the Solid Waste Contract

Defendant Jefferson City's RFP requested two different rate proposals for residential trash collection service. The first requested rate proposal, the Base Proposal, continued voluntary participation in residential trash collection [*5] service much like it had been in Jefferson City — i.e., twice-a-week pickup of either a 95-gallon container or 32-gallon plastic bags — but now including optional residential curbside recycling at an additional charge. The second requested rate proposal, the Alternate Proposal, was for curbside solid waste pickup, with curbside recycling service included at no additional cost, with collection only once per week and mandatory participation.

The RFP also required any winning bidder to provide a solid waste transfer station to be open to the public and located within Jefferson City limits, and which would be transferred to Jefferson City at no cost prior to the end of the contract period. Also in the RFP, Jefferson City required any winning bidder to construct a separate transfer station for long-distance solid waste hauling, also to be located within Jefferson City limits. The RFP required that this long-distance-haul transfer station and all of its property be transferred to Jefferson City for the price of one dollar prior to the end of the contract period.

From before the time of the RFP process, Defendant Allied has owned the only existing landfill and drop-off transfer station within [*6] Jefferson City limits. There has been no long-distance-haul transfer station within Jefferson City limits.

The RFP further required that the successful bidder agree to pay a "Street Repair Fee" (later called "Road Use Fee"). This fee would be $7.50 per ton of solid waste collected, increased annually at the same rate that solid waste collection rates were increased.

Defendant Allied's Base Proposal presented rates as follows: for cart use without the road fee, $14.90; without the transfer station, $13.30; with both, $16.24; and without both, $13.98. Allied's Base Proposal also presented per-bag rates for customers who would choose bag service: without the road fee, $2.03; without the transfer station, $2.05; with both, $2.08; and without both, $2.00. Allied's Base Proposal presented an additional monthly recycling fee of $5.50. The Base Proposal provided for solid waste collection to occur twice weekly.

Allied's Alternate Proposal presented per-month rates for mandatory cart-only use as follows: without the road fee, $10.37; without the transfer station, $10.53; with both, $10.90; and without both, $10.01. Allied's Alternate Proposal also presented an additional monthly recycling fee [*7] of $4.50. The Alternate Proposal provided for solid waste collection to occur once per week and curbside recycling collection to occur once per week.

Defendant Jefferson City accepted Defendant Allied's bid under the alternate, mandatory rate option, using two 64-gallon carts — one for solid waste, and one for recycling. After the acceptance of Allied's proposal, which was the only proposal submitted, the requirement to build a long-distance-haul transfer station was dropped from the Solid Waste Contract. However, the Solid Waste Contract did include an obligation for Allied to pay a "Future Planning Fee" to Jefferson City, which had not been mentioned in the RFP. The Future Planning Fee provision required Allied to pay $200,000 per year to Jefferson City for the construction of a transfer station, the expansion of the existing landfill (currently owned by Allied), the creation of a new landfill, or for other similar purposes designed to assure the continuation of solid waste services in Jefferson City at a reasonable price. The Solid Waste Contract also provided that Allied would collect and haul all solid waste disposed of by City-owned facilities at no charge to Jefferson City. As [*8] of mid-January, 2011, approximately $136,300 had been paid to Jefferson City under the Road Use Fee and the Future Planning Fee provisions of the Solid Waste Contract.

No vote by Defendant Jefferson City's voters was taken to approve such funds going to Jefferson City for street repair or for the goals associated with the Future Planning Fee. Beyond its contract-based relationship with Jefferson City, Defendant Allied's solid waste collection and removal service rates are unregulated.

Under Jefferson City's new trash ordinances — authorizing and implementing the Solid Waste Contract — Plaintiff Massengale is required to pay the contracted rate, currently $15.65 per month, regardless of how much solid waste he generates, or whether he uses or intends to use the curbside solid waste collection and recycling service at all. The Solid Waste Contract provides that Allied is entitled to increase its rates annually by an amount not to exceed the increase in the Consumer Price Index. Since the effective date of the Solid Waste Contract, there has been one rate increase, by 2.02%. Since the new trash ordinances have been in effect, Plaintiff Massengale alternates between setting out his trash [*9] cart one week and his recycling cart the next week, neither of which is ever full.

B. Procedural History

Plaintiff Massengale filed his Petition in the Circuit Court of Cole County, Missouri, on September 17, 2010. [Doc. # 1, Ex .1.] The Petition contains five counts. Count I asserts a claim under the Hancock Amendment to the Missouri Constitution, Mo. Const., art. 10 § 22, alleging that Jefferson City levied a tax without the approval of a majority of Jefferson City voters. Count II alleges that Defendants violated Missouri antitrust laws, Mo. Rev. Stat. §§ 416.011-416.161. Count III asserts a claim under the Clayton Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 12, et seq., for the violation of federal antitrust laws. Count IV asserts that Defendants' Solid Waste Contract is illegal, void, or voidable, because Allied failed to affirm its participation in a federal work authorization program and also failed to affirm that it did not knowingly employ unauthorized aliens, in violation of Mo. Rev. Stat. § 285.530. Finally, Count V seeks a declaratory judgment, under Mo. Rev. Stat. § 527.010, that neither Plaintiff nor any other resident of Jefferson City is required to enter into a contract with Allied.

Citing [*10] Count III of Plaintiff's Petition — invoking federal antitrust law — Defendant Allied removed this action to federal court on October 22, 2010. [Doc. # 1, ¶ 3.]

II. Discussion

A. Summary Judgment Standard

HN1[] Summary judgment is proper "if the pleadings, the discovery and disclosure materials on file, and any affidavits show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). The moving party "bears the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its motion" and must identify "those portions of [the record] which it believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact." Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). If the moving party satisfies its burden, Rule 56(e) requires the non-moving party to respond by submitting evidentiary materials that designate "specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). In determining whether summary judgment is appropriate, a district court must look at the record and any inferences to be drawn from it in the light most favorable [*11] to the non-moving party. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 255, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). Summary judgment is not proper if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the non-moving party. Id. at 248.

B. Plaintiff's Count III for Violation of Federal Antitrust Law

Plaintiff Massengale brings Count III of his Petition under the Clayton Act:

> . . .HN2[] [A]ny person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

15 U.S.C. § 15(a). In support of his Motion for Summary Judgment, Plaintiff clarifies that the Clayton Act prohibits any violation of federal antitrust law and that Defendants allegedly violated sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. See 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 (HN3[] "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is [*12] declared to be illegal."), 2 (HN4[] "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States . . . shall be deemed guilty of a felony").

Plaintiff Massengale summarizes his antitrust theory as follows:

> The City and Allied worked together to give Allied the entire trash collection service area in Jefferson City, under a six-year contract. A price is set for each resident to pay, under the threat of a fine for not paying it. Allied already owned the only landfill and drop-off area in the City limits (as required in the RFP), and worked with the City after submitting the only proposal, to be relieved of having to build the expensive, long-distance-haul transfer station (which also was required in the RFP to be within City limits). No other trash collection company would have a reasonable amount of time to submit plans for an expensive transfer station and drop-off area within the City limits, especially when one already exists. Allied sets its own prices, and those prices are not regulated by anyone [i.e., beyond the terms of the Solid Waste Contract].

[Doc. # [*13] 46 at 12.]

Even assuming that Plaintiff properly pleaded Count III in his Petition, and that he submitted sufficient evidence to establish a prima facie case for violation of federal antitrust laws, Count III still must fail because of the state action immunity doctrine. In Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943), the Supreme Court first determined that HN5[] federal antitrust laws could not be applied to prevent states from exercising their sovereign powers to intervene in markets, even if such intervention entailed anticompetitive restraints. Chief Justice Stone found "nothing in the language of the Sherman Act or in its history which suggests that its purpose was to restrain a state or its officers or agents from activities directed by its legislature" and explained that "an unexpressed purpose to nullify a state's control over its officers and agents is not lightly to be attributed to Congress." Id. at 350-51.

Later, in City of Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 98 S. Ct. 1123, 55 L. Ed. 2d 364 (1978), the Supreme Court faced the question of whether municipalities were also immune from federal antitrust liability under Parker's state action doctrine. A plurality of four justices wrote that HN6[] the doctrine [*14] did not extend to "all governmental entities, whether state agencies or subdivisions of a State . . . simply by reason of their status as such." Id. at 408. However, those justices recognized that municipalities were instrumentalities of the state and held that the state action doctrine exempts "anticompetitive conduct engaged in . . . by [municipalities], pursuant to state policy to displace competition with regulation or monopoly public service." Id. at 413. The Eighth Circuit has characterized City of Lafayette as holding that "an adequate state mandate for anticompetitive activities of cities and other subordinate governmental units exists when it is found from the authority given a governmental entity to operate in a particular area, that the legislature contemplated the kind of action complained of." Gold Cross Ambulance & Transfer v. City of Kansas City, 705 F.2d 1005, 1011 (8th Cir. 1983) (quoting City of Lafayette, 435 U.S. at 415).

In California Retail Liquor Dealers Association v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 105, 100 S. Ct. 937, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233 (1980), the Supreme Court required active state supervision of the challenged restraint, in addition to an affirmative expression of state policy. In Midcal, [*15] a California statute had delegated to wine producers the power to prevent price competition by dictating the prices charged by wholesalers. Id. at 103. Although California's wine pricing scheme was clearly state policy, it did not qualify for antitrust immunity because there was no state supervision. Id. at 105 ("The State simply authorizes price setting and enforces the prices established by private parties."). Two years later, Community Communications Co. v. City of Boulder, 455 U.S. 40, 102 S. Ct. 835, 70 L. Ed. 2d 810 (1982), held that HN7[] the state action doctrine did not provide immunity from antitrust liability when the city acted pursuant only to the state's broad grant of "home rule" power. Id. at 55-56.

In 1983, the Eighth Circuit decided Gold Cross Ambulance, a case in which two private ambulance companies brought federal antitrust claims against Kansas City, its municipal trust, city consultants, and the private ambulance service that obtained the exclusive contract with the city through a non-competitive process. Kansas City had tasked its municipal trust with implementing a "public utility model" for ambulances within city limits, "designed to eliminate the incentive created by free-market delivery of ambulance [*16] service by private companies to neglect emergency ambulance service in favor of the more profitable nonemergency business." Gold Cross Ambulance, 705 F.2d at 1008. HN8[] Articulating the state action immunity rule in the municipality context, the Eighth Circuit wrote that a sufficient expression of state policy consisted of two elements: (1) "The legislature must have authorized the challenged activity," and (2) "it must have done so with an intent to displace competition." Id. at 1011. The first element was easily satisfied:

> The state permits cities to provide ambulance service to its citizens, to acquire the necessary equipment, to "contract with one or more" operators to provide the ambulance service, and to promulgate rules to regulate the provision of that service. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 67.300.

Id. With respect to the second element, the Eighth Circuit wrote:

> HN9[] [A] specific, detailed legislative authorization of monopoly service need not exist to infer the necessary state intent. It is sufficient that the legislature contemplated the kind of action complained of. In other words, a sufficient state policy to displace competition exists if the challenged restraint is a necessary or reasonable consequence [*17] of engaging in the authorized activity.
> Because monopoly service is the necessary consequence of having only one municipal ambulance operator as authorized by Missouri law, [section 67.300] alone supports the district court's finding that the state intended to displace unregulated competition in the ambulance industry.

Id. at 1012-13 (internal quotations and citations omitted).

The Eighth Circuit in Gold Cross Ambulance faced only the question of whether Kansas City, its municipal trust, and its consultants were immune from antitrust liability under the state action doctrine. Judge Heaney explained that HN10[] although Midcal had required active state supervision of the challenged restraint, the Supreme Court had applied that requirement "only in cases in which the defendants were private entities or individuals." Id. at 1014 (citations omitted). Unlike California's statute delegating price setting to private wine producers, when a city directly intervenes in the market:

> Because municipal officials generally are politically accountable to the citizens they represent for their decisions regarding the challenged restraint, state supervision is not as necessary to prevent abuse as in the private [*18] context.
> Moreover, because the Parker doctrine requires that the state delegate to the local government the authority to engage in the challenged conduct, state supervision of Kansas City's conduct is unnecessary to find state action. As a leading commentator recently noted:
>> requiring state authorization for local conduct is analogous to requiring active supervision of private conduct; it tests whether challenged local activity is truly state action and therefore entitled to immunity.

Id. (citing, inter alia, Areeda, Antitrust Law ¶ 212.2a, at 47 (1982 Supp.)). Thus, at least where a municipality executes "a traditional governmental function to protect public health and safety," id. at 1014 n.13, the state action doctrine requires only that it act pursuant to state policy and does not require active state supervision.

Two years later, in Town of Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 105 S. Ct. 1713, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24 (1985), the Supreme Court echoed the Eighth Circuit's reasoning in Gold Cross Ambulance:

> In [Midcal,] a unanimous Court held that supervision is required where the anticompetitive conduct is by private parties. In Boulder, however, the most recent relevant case, we expressly left this issue open as to municipalities. [*19] We now conclude that HN11[] the active state supervision requirement should not be imposed in cases in which the actor is a municipality.
> [T]he requirement of active state supervision serves essentially an evidentiary function: it is one way of ensuring that the actor is engaging in the challenged conduct pursuant to state policy. . . . Where the actor is a municipality, there is little or no danger that it is involved in a private price-fixing arrangement. . . . Once it is clear that state authorization exists, there is no need to require the State to supervise actively the municipality's execution of what is a properly delegated function.

Hallie, 471 U.S. at 46-47. In Hallie, the City of Eau Claire was the only defendant. It remained somewhat unclear whether the state action immunity doctrine would also shield a private actor alleged to have conspired with a municipality in the course of the municipality's execution of a properly delegated function.

That question seems to have been resolved, at least in the Eighth Circuit, by L & H Sanitation, Inc. v. Lake City Sanitation, Inc., 769 F.2d 517 (8th Cir. 1985) — a highly analogous case to that now before the Court. There, the City of Heber [*20] Springs, Arkansas, granted a solid waste disposal franchise to a private firm, Lake City Sanitation. Lake City Sanitation had devised the franchise scheme, but plaintiff L & H Sanitation then submitted a lower bid. The municipality rejected both bids and invited Lake City Sanitation officials to a private meeting. When L & H Sanitation officials caught wind of the meeting and decided to attend, they were asked to leave. The municipality awarded the solid waste disposal franchise to Lake City Sanitation at the meeting, and L & H Sanitation sued Lake City Sanitation and municipal officials for conspiring to restrain trade and to create a monopoly. Id. at 519.

The Eighth Circuit's decision quoted extensively from Hallie, noting that the active state supervision requirement "should not be imposed in cases in which the actor is a municipality." Id. at 520 (quoting Hallie, 471 U.S. at 46). It then provided the Eighth Circuit state action immunity rule: (1) the state legislature must have authorized the challenged municipal activity, and (2) the legislature must have intended to displace competition. Id. at 521. After quoting the relevant Arkansas statute, the Eighth Circuit applied the state [*21] action immunity rule in a single paragraph:

> The Arkansas Solid Waste Management Act does not expressly grant municipalities the power to grant exclusive solid waste disposal franchises. However, we agree with the district court that the legislative intent to displace competition can be inferred from the statutory scheme because it is a necessary and reasonable consequence of engaging in the authorized activity. Under the Arkansas Solid Waste Management Act municipalities are granted broad authority to regulate solid waste management and to enter into agreements to provide for solid waste management and disposal. Regulation of solid waste management is one of the traditional public health functions of local government, and Arkansas law recognizes the validity of a municipal grant of a private monopoly in solid waste disposal. It certainly cannot be said that Arkansas has adopted a policy of indifference or mere neutrality respecting the municipal actions challenged as anticompetitive. Rather, we agree that the legislative scheme contemplates displacing competition with regulation in the area of solid waste management and disposal.
> In sum, we hold that the state action immunity doctrine [*22] is applicable to the city's award of the exclusive solid waste disposal franchise to Lake City. This holding makes any discussion of the question of Lake City's immunity under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine unnecessary.

Id. at 522 (citations and internal quotations omitted). Thus, in L & H Sanitation, the Eighth Circuit shielded from federal antitrust law not only city officials but also the private company awarded the franchise by the city, without requiring active state supervision of the city's decision.

The Missouri statute in this case and the Arkansas statute in L & H Sanitation are so similar that L & H Sanitation must control, and Defendants Jefferson City and Allied are entitled to state action immunity from Plaintiff Massengale's federal antitrust claim. The Eighth Circuit quoted the Arkansas statute as follows:

> 82-2705. Municipal solid waste management systems.-(a) All municipalities shall develop a plan to provide a solid waste management system and shall adequately provide for the disposal of solid wastes generated or existing within the incorporated limits of such municipality or in the area to be served thereby and in accordance with the rules, regulations, and orders of [*23] the Commission [or Department of Pollution Control and Ecology]. The governing body of the municipality may enter into agreements with a county or counties, with one or more other municipalities, with private persons or trusts, or with any combination thereof, to provide a solid waste management system or any part thereof for the municipality, but such agreement shall not relieve the parties thereto of their responsibilities hereunder. . . .

Id. at 522 n.2 (quoting Ark. Stat. Ann. § 82-2701 (1976)). The Missouri statute here provides, in relevant part:

> 260.215. Solid wastes, how handled—duties of cities and counties—exemptions—charges, how stated, how collected.
> HN12[] 1. . . . [E]ach city . . . shall provide individually or collectively for the collection and disposal of solid wastes for those areas within its boundaries that are to be served by the solid waste management system; shall be responsible for implementing their approved plan required by section 260.220 as it relates to the storage, collection, transportation, processing, and disposal of their solid wastes; and may purchase all necessary equipment, acquire all necessary land, build any necessary buildings, incinerators, transfer [*24] stations, or other structures, lease or otherwise acquire the right to use land or equipment. Each city and county may levy and collect charges for the necessary cost of providing such services . . . .
> 2. Any city or county may adopt ordinances or orders, rules, regulations, or standards for the storage, collection, transportation, processing or disposal of solid wastes which shall be in conformity with the rules and regulations adopted by the [Department of Natural Resources] for solid waste management systems. Nothing in sections 260.200 to 260.245 shall usurp the legal right of a city or county from adopting and enforcing local ordinances, rules, regulations, or standards for the storage, collection, transportation, processing, or disposal of solid wastes equal to or more stringent than the rules or regulations adopted by the department . . . .

3. (1) Cities or counties may contract as provided in chapter 70, RSMo, with any person, city, county, common sewer district, political subdivision, state agency or authority in this or other states to carry out their responsibilities for the storage, collection, transportation, processing, or disposal of solid wastes. . . .

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 260.215.

Thus, [*25] HN13[] while the Missouri statute does not expressly grant municipalities the power to grant exclusive solid waste disposal contracts, it clearly provides for such authority. Moreover, as with the Arkansas statute in L & H Sanitation, a "legislative intent to displace competition can be inferred from the statutory scheme because it is a 'necessary and reasonable consequence of engaging in the authorized activity.'" L & H Sanitation, 769 F.2d at 522 (quoting Gold Cross Ambulance, 705 F.2d at 1013.). Under the Missouri statute, municipalities are granted broad authority to regulate solid waste management and to contract with private companies to provide for solid waste management and disposal. As was true with Arkansas caselaw in L & H Sanitation, Missouri caselaw also recognizes the validity of a municipal grant of a private monopoly in solid waste disposal. See State ex rel. City of Macon v. Belt, 561 S.W.2d 117, 118 (Mo. 1978). Here, as in L & H Sanitation, "the legislative scheme contemplates displacing competition with regulation in the area of solid waste management and disposal." L & H Sanitation, 769 F.2d at 522 (citing Central Iowa Refuse Sys., Inc. v. Des Moines Metro. Solid Waste Agency, 715 F.2d 419, 426-28 (8th Cir. 1983)).

For [*26] the reasons stated above, the Court concludes that the state action immunity doctrine is applicable to Defendant Jefferson City's award of the exclusive Solid Waste Contract to Defendant Allied. This ruling makes any discussion of the question of Allied's immunity under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine unnecessary. Defendants' motions for summary judgment are granted with respect to Count III of Plaintiff Massengale's Petition alleging violations of federal antitrust law.

C. Remaining State Law Claims

Plaintiff Massengale's remaining claims are all asserted under Missouri law. To avoid needless decisions of state law, the Court remands the action to the Circuit Court of Cole County, Missouri. See Ivy v. Kimbrough, 115 F.3d 550, 552-53 (8th Cir. 1997) (HN14[] "In most cases, when federal and state claims are joined and the federal claims are dismissed on a motion for summary judgment, the pendent state claims are dismissed without prejudice to avoid needless decisions of state law." (internal quotation marks and citation omitted)); HN15[] 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c)(3) (court may decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction if it has dismissed all claims over which it had original jurisdiction).

III. Conclusion

Accordingly, [*27] it is hereby ORDERED that the Motion for Summary Judgment [Doc. # 39] filed by Defendant Allied and the Motion for Summary Judgment [Doc. # 41] filed by Defendant Jefferson City are GRANTED only with respect to Count III of Plaintiff's Petition. The remainder of the action is REMANDED to the Circuit Court of Cole County, Missouri.

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Notice of Class Action

HN1[] Class Actions, Notice of Class Action

Notice must be reasonably calculated to apprise the class of the pending action and to afford class members an opportunity to object.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Compromise & Settlement

HN2[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

There is an overriding public interest in settling and quieting litigation, and this is particularly true in class actions. Settlements generally advance the public interest because they minimize the expense of litigation, avoid the expenditure of judicial resources, and ensure injured parties' recoveries without the time, expense, and inconvenience of litigation. The claims of a certified class may be settled only with the court's approval. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(e).

HN3[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

In deciding whether to approve a settlement, the court must determine, after a hearing, whether it is "fair, reasonable and adequate," Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(e)(2), and is not the product of collusion. This analysis requires the court to consider both the settlement's terms and the negotiating process leading to settlement. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit has identified nine factors to be considered in making this determination: (1) the complexity, expense and likely duration of the litigation; (2) the reaction of the class to the settlement; (3) the stage of the proceedings and the amount of discovery completed; (4) the risks of establishing liability; (5) the risks of establishing damages; (6) the risks of maintaining the class action through the trial; (7) the ability of the defendants to withstand a greater judgment; (8) the range of reasonableness of the settlement fund in light of the best possible recovery; (9) the range of reasonableness of the settlement fund to a possible recovery in light of all the attendant risks of litigation.

HN4[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

A proposed class action settlement enjoys a strong presumption that it is fair, reasonable, and adequate if it was the product of arm's length negotiations conducted by capable counsel experienced in class action litigation and if it occurred after meaningful discovery.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Compromise & Settlement

HN5[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

Courts have held that it is enough for the parties to have engaged in sufficient investigation of the facts to enable the court to intelligently make an appraisal of the settlement.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Compromise & Settlement

HN6[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

It is well settled that the reaction of the class to the settlement is perhaps the most significant factor to be weighed in considering its adequacy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN7[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

The core element of a monopolization claim is market power, which is defined as the ability to raise price by restricting output.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN8[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit has held that once a relevant market has been established, a defendant's market share may be used "as a proxy for market power."

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

HN9[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

Dismissals for insufficient pleading of market power are rare pre-discovery and are generally reserved for complaints bereft of factual allegations or which contain market share or market power allegations that are purely conclusory. Courts have consistently held that firms with market shares of less than 30% are presumptively incapable of exercising market power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

HN10[] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

As a general matter, in the antitrust context, the continuing violation doctrine is heavily disfavored in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit and courts have been loath to apply it absent a showing of compelling circumstances.

HN11[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

The fact that a defendant is able to pay more than it offers in a settlement does not, standing alone, indicate that the settlement is unreasonable or inadequate. Instead, this factor must be weighed in conjunction with all of the Grinnell factors, most notably the risk of the class prevailing and the reasonableness of the settlement fund.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Compromise & Settlement

HN12[] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

Antitrust litigation in general, and class action litigation in particular, is unpredictable.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

HN13[] Class Attorneys, Fees

Courts recognize that when a common fund is created, the party who creates it is generally entitled to a reasonable attorney's fee. The rationale for the doctrine is an equitable one: it prevents unjust enrichment of those benefitting from a lawsuit without contributing to its cost. Courts further acknowledge the reality that a financial incentive is necessary to entice capable attorneys, who otherwise could be paid regularly by hourly-rate clients, to devote their time to complex, time-consuming cases for which they may never be paid.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Reasonable Fees

HN14[] Class Attorneys, Fees

Courts have used two distinct methods to determine what is a reasonable attorneys' fee. The first is the lodestar, under which the district court scrutinizes the fee petition to ascertain the number of hours reasonably billed to the class and then multiplies that figure by an appropriate hourly rate. Once that initial computation has been made, the district court may, in its discretion, increase the lodestar by applying a multiplier based on other less objective factors, such as the risk of the litigation and the performance of the attorneys. The second method is simpler. The court sets some percentage of the recovery as a fee. In determining what percentage to award, courts have looked to the same "less objective" factors that are used to determine the multiplier for the lodestar.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Reasonable Fees

HN15[] Class Attorneys, Fees

The trend in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit has been to express the attorneys' fees as a percentage of the total settlement. In determining the proper percentage, the Second Circuit has identified six factors: (1) the time and labor expended by counsel; (2) the magnitude and complexities of the litigation; (3) the risk of the litigation; (4) the quality of representation; (5) the requested fee in relation to the settlement; and (6) public policy considerations.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

HN16[] Class Attorneys, Fees

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit has rejected the notion of a "benchmark" for common fund cases. It has also tasked the district courts to act as a fiduciary who must serve as a guardian of the rights of absent class members. Accordingly, the court must take a hard look at plaintiffs' fee request because awards in common fund cases are proper only if made with moderation.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Members > Named Members

HN17[] Class Members, Named Members

An incentive award is meant to compensate the named plaintiff for any personal risk incurred by the individual or any additional effort expended by the individual for the benefit of the lawsuit.

OPINION AND ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART FINAL APPROVAL OF DEAN SETTLEMENT

(Docs. 310, 327)

This matter came before the court on July 18, 2011 for a hearing on Plaintiffs' motion for an order granting final approval of the settlement Plaintiffs reached with Defendant Dean Foods Company ("Dean") on December 7, 2010 (the "Dean Settlement"). (Doc. 327.) Plaintiffs also request: (1) approval of class counsel's application for an award of $8.5 million in attorney's fees, as well as [*5] accrued interest, plus $1.5 million in costs and expenses; and (2) a $7,500 incentive award to each of the six class representatives. (Doc. 310.) At issue before the court is whether the Dean Settlement is fair, reasonable and adequate. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(e). With certain modifications, the court concludes that it is, and therefore grants final approval.

Plaintiffs are represented by Kit A. Pierson, Esq., and Andrew D. Manitsky, Esq. Dean is represented by Paul H. Friedman, Esq. and John T. Sartore, Esq. Mr. Grant John Gorton requested, and was granted, an opportunity to address his concerns regarding the Dean Settlement.

A. Factual and Procedural Background.

In this lawsuit, Plaintiffs, on behalf of themselves and other dairy farmers who produced and pooled raw Grade A milk in Federal Milk Marketing Order 1 ("Order 1"), allege that Defendants Dairy Farmers of America, Inc. ("DFA"), Dairy Marketing Services, LLC ("DMS"), and Dean engaged in anticompetitive conduct in the dairy industry. In their 98-page, seven-count Revised Consolidated Amended Class Action Complaint, Plaintiffs allege, inter alia, that Defendants conspired to fix prices and monopolize and monopsonize the raw Grade [*6] A milk market in Order 1. Defendants deny Plaintiffs' claims.

In August 2010, the court granted in part and denied in part the motions to dismiss filed by each of the Defendants. [1] (Doc. 81.) The court set an expedited discovery schedule. Discovery in this case closed on May 20, 2011. In December 2010, Plaintiffs and Dean filed a motion for preliminary approval of the Dean Settlement. (Doc. 160.)

In March 2011, the court granted the Vermont Attorney General ("VTAG") permission to file an amicus brief in this action. Dean notified each attorney general whose state is located within Order 1 of the Dean Settlement. VTAG has submitted several letters to the court regarding the Dean Settlement.

On May 4, 2011, the court granted preliminary approval of the Dean Settlement, as revised. The revisions included the deletion of the injunctive relief provision in the Dean Settlement, clarification of the definition of the proposed settlement class, and inclusion of additional financial information.

1. The Dean Settlement Agreement.

As revised, the Dean Settlement Agreement identifies the proposed settlement class as follows:

[1] Defendant H.P. Hood, LLC was dismissed at that time.

> All dairy farmers, whether [*7] individuals, entities or members of cooperatives, who produced raw Grade A milk in Order 1 and pooled raw Grade A milk in Order 1 during any time from January 1, 2002 to the Notice Date. Defendants' current officers and directors are excluded from the Settlement Class.

(Doc. 294-1 at 8-9.) Paragraph 9.1 of the Dean Settlement Agreement sets forth the amount of the Settlement Fund:

> Within fifteen calendar days after the entry of the Preliminary Approval Order, the Settling Defendant [Dean] will deposit a sum of thirty million United States dollars ($30,000,000) into an escrow account (the "Settlement Fund"), held and administered by Eagle Bancorp, Inc.

(Doc. 294-1 at 17.) Pursuant to the settlement, Dean admits no wrongdoing and Plaintiffs agree, on behalf of the proposed settlement class, that once the Dean Settlement Agreement becomes final, their claims against Dean will be released. Until such release, Dean has agreed to respond to reasonable discovery requests in the status of a non-party. To date, it has submitted to four depositions.

2. Notice of the Dean Settlement.

The Preliminary Approval Order required class counsel to, inter alia: (1) send notice of the Dean Settlement to members [*8] of the settlement class, via first class mail, within thirty days after the order was signed; and (2) publish a summary notice of the Dean Settlement in four agricultural publications widely circulated in the Northeast.

The Affidavit of Charlene Young (the "Young Affidavit"), Senior Project Administrator for the Dean Settlement Claims Administrator, Rust Consulting ("Rust"), details Plaintiffs' dissemination of the Dean Settlement notices. According to the Young Affidavit, Rust mailed to 9,067 prospective Dean Settlement class members a packet containing the Settlement Notice (the "Notice"), a claim form, cover letter, and envelope which contained information required by the court in its preliminary approval order. [2] The United States Postal Service ("USPS") returned 201 of these mailings as undeliverable without a forwarding address. Rust obtained new addresses for 149 of these undeliverable packets and promptly re-mailed them. The USPS also returned ten notice packets that contained forwarding addresses; Rust re-mailed those packets as well. At the fairness hearing, Plaintiffs estimated that they sent individualized notices to 98% to 99% of the settlement class.

Through Rust, and pursuant to the Preliminary Approval Order, Plaintiffs also created a case-dedicated settlement website, www.NEDairySettlement.com, which became available on May 14, 2011 and includes links to the Notice, Claim Form, Dean Settlement Agreement, and other court documents. The website's opening paragraph states in bold:

> IF [*10] YOU ARE A DAIRY FARMER WHETHER AN INDIVIDUAL, ENTITY OR MEMBER OF A COOPERATIVE, WHO PRODUCED RAW GRADE A MILK IN ORDER 1 AND POOLED RAW GRADE A MILK ON ORDER 1 DURING ANY TIME FROM JANUARY 1, 2002 TO MAY 23, 2011, A PROPOSED CLASS ACTION SETTLEMENT MAY AFFECT YOUR LEGAL RIGHTS

(Doc. 327-3 at 22.) The website answers the following questions: "What is the lawsuit about? Who is included in the Dean Settlement Class? What are the terms of the settlement? What are my rights? What if I have questions?" (Doc. 327-3 at 22.) As of July 8, 2011, Plaintiffs estimate that this website had been viewed by approximately 1,456 visitors. In her Affidavit, Ms. Young noted that Rust established a toll-free telephone number, which went 'live' on May 13, 2011, and which provided a recorded message and access to a live representative to answer any additional questions. The toll-free number logged approximately 354 calls by July 8, 2011. (Doc 327-3 at 4.)

[2] The Notice is an eight-page [*9] document which describes in plain, easily understood language the nature of the litigation, the terms of the Dean Settlement, the definition of the settlement class, how to request a claim form, how to submit a claim, how to obtain exclusion from the lawsuit, how to object, how to attend the court's fairness hearing, and what happens if a class member does nothing. It divides these topics into twenty-seven discrete questions that explain the Dean Settlement in even greater detail. The Notice also advises each class member of the right to be represented by his or her own lawyer, and the binding effect of the Dean Settlement if exclusion is not requested. The Notice directs settlement class members to the website established specifically for the Dean Settlement, and to Rust, for further information. Contact information for class counsel is also provided.

Rust, on behalf of Plaintiffs, also created a one page "Summary Notice" regarding the Dean Settlement which they published in four trade publications: Country Folks; Farming: The Journal of Northeast Agriculture; Farmshine; and Progressive Dairymen (Northeast [*11] edition). The Summary Notice begins with the following statement: "If Your Farm Produced Grade A Milk In the Northeast Since 2002[,] You Could Get Money from a Class Action Settlement." (Doc. 327-3 at 7.) The Summary Notice describes the Dean Settlement and briefly answers the following questions: "What is the Case About? Who is Included in the Class? What Does the Settlement Provide? How to Get a Payment?" (Doc. 327-3 at 7.) The final paragraph, entitled "Your Other Rights," sets forth the following information:

> If you do nothing, you will be legally bound by the Settlement, your rights will be affected and you will not be able to sue Dean for any claim relating to the lawsuit. If you do not want to be legally bound by the Settlement, you may exclude yourself from it by June 27, 2011. If you stay in the Settlement, you may object to it by June 27, 2011. The Court will hold a hearing on July 18, 2011 to consider whether to approve the Settlement and a request by the Class lawyers for up to one-third of the settlement amount ($10 million) in attorneys' fees, plus costs, expenses, and incentive fees for the dairy farmers who brought the lawsuit. You do not need to attend the hearing. [*12] If you wish, you or your own lawyer may ask to appear and speak at the hearing at your own cost.

(Doc. 327-3 at 7.) The Summary Notice provides the Settlement toll free number and web address if class members wanted more information and a claim form.

The court finds that the Notice of the Dean Settlement fairly and reasonably apprised settlement class members of the nature of the lawsuit, the nature of the Dean Settlement, their right to object and to request exclusion from the settlement class, the time and manner for requesting exclusion, and the consequences for failing to do so. The Notice also provided settlement class members with clear directions as to how, when, and where to present any objections to the Dean Settlement, and of their right to be represented by their own attorneys. See In re Michael Milken & Assocs. Sec. Litig., 150 F.R.D. 57, 60 (S.D.N.Y. 1993) (observing that HN1[] notice must be reasonably calculated to apprise the class of the pending action and to afford class members an opportunity to object). The Notice was supplemented by the Summary Notice, the Dean Settlement website, and toll-free number. As a result, the court finds that Plaintiffs have provided the best [*13] practicable notice under the circumstances. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(c)(2).

3. Objections to the Dean Settlement.

Rust received four requests for exclusion from the Dean Settlement. Two class members objected to the Dean Settlement, including Mr. Gorton. At the July 18th hearing, Mr. Gorton expressed: (1) a concern that this lawsuit will do little to change the conditions in the dairy industry which are causing price instability, overproduction, and underpayments to farmers; (2) a desire to preserve a relationship with Dean which Mr. Gorton described as his "best customer;" (3) a concern that unregulated competition is destructive for the dairy industry and that what benefits an individual may not benefit the industry as a whole; and (4) a belief that the attorney's fees proposed for Plaintiffs' counsel are too high. Ranson Mead of Mead Farms, LLC in Newport Center, Vermont, the other objector, opposed the settlement because not enough money is being paid back to the farmers, and because an example should be set for the big milk companies who are not following the rules while farmers are required to do so. (Doc. 320.)

VTAG advised the court, by letter, that it had received criticism that [*14] the Dean Settlement amount was too low. It noted that this was a common criticism in class action litigation and that, although it had objected to settlements in the past on this basis, it would not interpose an objection to the Dean Settlement. VTAG questioned, however, why the $144 million settlement amount that Dean agreed to pay in the In re Southeastern Milk Litigation ("Southeastern Milk") [3] was considerably greater than the settlement amount offered by Dean in this case.

[3] In Southeastern Milk, litigated in the Eastern District of Tennessee, the plaintiffs alleged that the defendants (including Dean and Dairy Farmers of America) violated sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act through conspiracy to monopolize and monopsonize; unlawful monopsony and unlawful monopolization; attempt to monopolize and monopsonize; and conspiracy to Plaintiffs respond to the objections as follows. First, they point out that the number of objections and requests for exclusion is extremely low when compared to a class that exceeds 9,000 class members. Second, they argue that they did not reach settlement with Dean until they had completed over seventy depositions and had engaged in extensive written discovery, and thus were in a position to adequately assess the strengths and weaknesses of their case against Dean. Third, they assert that they have some questions regarding Dean's continuing financial viability, which renders a settlement advisable at this time. Fourth, they note that any argument by VTAG that the settlement amount should be based upon the volume of milk processed in Order 1 as opposed to the volume of milk processed in Orders 5 and 7 (the federal milk orders involved in the Southeastern Milk litigation), is irrational and not supported by either evidence or expert opinion. Plaintiffs further posit that VTAG is not [*16] sufficiently familiar with Southeastern Milk to make a proper comparison between the two settlements. For example, they point out that VTAG was initially unaware that Southeastern Milk involved both Orders 5 and 7, that Dean's market share in that geographic market approximated 70% (compared to a much smaller market share in Order 1), and that the Southeastern Milk settlement was payable over four years, as opposed to the Dean Settlement which is payable within six months.

Plaintiffs further contend that the attorney's fees and expenses they request are fair and reasonable, and fall well within what courts typically approve in litigation of this complexity and magnitude. They assert that devoting time and resources to this case involved significant risk, and that without a fee and expense award in the requested amount, attorneys would not bring these types of cases. Plaintiffs also contend that either the percentage or lodestar method are appropriate to calculate the attorney's fees award, and that a 28% recovery from the Dean Settlement Fund ($8.5 million), plus $1.5 million in expenses—which is "$500,000 less than the total expenditures of settlement class counsel on the instant litigation [*17] during this time period" (Doc. 310-1 at 18)—is reasonable.

For its part, Dean advised the court that it believes its damages in this lawsuit would have been confined to a four year period due to the statute of limitations. Dean also stated that it had strong defenses based upon its limited market share in the Northeast; that the facts at issue (insofar as they pertain to Dean) are very different in the two cases; and that, unlike the plaintiffs in that litigation, Plaintiffs here still have many hurdles to overcome before their claims against Dean proceed to trial. Dean asserted that the settlement amount is sizable in light of its smaller litigation risk and potential exposure should Plaintiffs prevail on their claims against it.

B. The Standard for Granting Approval of the Dean Settlement.

As the court has previously acknowledged, HN2[] "there is an overriding public interest in settling and quieting litigation, and this is particularly true in class actions." In re Prudential Sec. Inc. Ltd. P'ships Litig., 163 F.R.D. 200, 209 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (citations omitted). Settlements generally advance the public interest because they minimize the expense of litigation, avoid the expenditure of judicial [*18] resources, and ensure injured parties' recoveries without the time, expense, and inconvenience of litigation. The claims of a certified class may be settled "only with the court's approval." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(e). HN3[] In deciding whether to approve a settlement, the court must determine, after a hearing, whether it is "fair, reasonable and adequate," Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(e)(2), and is not the product of collusion. See D'Amato v. Deutsche Bank, 236 F.3d 78, 85 (2d Cir. 2001). "This analysis requires the court to consider both 'the settlement's terms and the negotiating process leading to settlement.'" Authors Guild v. Google, Inc., 770 F. Supp. 2d 666, 674 (S.D.N.Y. 2011) (quoting Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Visa U.S.A. Inc., 396 F.3d 96, 116 (2d Cir. 2005)). The Second Circuit has identified nine factors to be considered in making this determination:

> (1) the complexity, expense and likely duration of the litigation; (2) the reaction of the class to the settlement; (3) the stage of the proceedings and the amount of discovery completed; (4) the risks of establishing liability;

price-fix. While the plaintiffs' litigation theories in Southeastern Milk are similar to those in this case, the factual allegations and the structure of the Grade A milk market are quite different. The posture of the two cases is also markedly different. The plaintiffs in Southeastern Milk have survived a motion to dismiss and a motion for summary judgment. [*15] Class certification has been granted (although a motion is currently pending to decertify the class). Southeastern Milk is on the eve of a jury trial; in this case, the parties just completed discovery.

> (5) the risks of establishing damages; (6) the risks of maintaining the class action through the trial; (7) the ability [*19] of the defendants to withstand a greater judgment; (8) the range of reasonableness of the settlement fund in light of the best possible recovery; (9) the range of reasonableness of the settlement fund to a possible recovery in light of all the attendant risks of litigation.

City of Detroit v. Grinnell Corp., 495 F.2d 448, 463 (2d Cir. 1974) (citations omitted) (abrogated on other grounds by Goldberger v. Integrated Resources, Inc., 209 F.3d 43 (2d Cir. 2000)). Application of the Grinnell factors to the Dean Settlement reveals that it should be approved.

1. Complexity, Expense, and Likely Duration of the Litigation; Stage of the Proceedings.

This is a complex and expensive lawsuit that has already required a sizable time and monetary investment by Plaintiffs' counsel, totaling 31,429.6 hours from the time the lawsuit was filed on October 8, 2009 until April 30, 2011. Extensive written discovery, motion practice, and depositions took place before the Dean Settlement was reached. [4] Plaintiffs' counsel is experienced in antitrust and class action litigation and negotiated the Dean Settlement at arm's length, in a vigorous and non-collusive manner, with equally competent and experienced counsel [*20] for Dean. By settling before the completion of discovery, both Plaintiffs and Dean have saved themselves, and the prospective class, the time and expense of further discovery, class certification proceedings, motions for summary judgment, and the often exorbitant costs of trial. On the other hand, this is not a case which was settled prior to an adequate testing of the strength of Plaintiffs' allegations against Dean. See *Teachers' Ret. Sys. of La. v. A.C.L.N., Ltd., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8608, 2004 WL 1087261, at 1 (S.D.N.Y. May 14, 2004) (HN4[] "A proposed class action settlement enjoys a strong presumption that it is fair, reasonable, and adequate if . . . it was the product of arm's length negotiations conducted by capable counsel experienced in class action litigation . . . , and if it occurred after meaningful discovery.") (citations omitted).

HN5[] Courts have held that "it is enough for the parties to have engaged in sufficient investigation of the facts to enable the [c]ourt to 'intelligently make . . . an appraisal' of the Settlement." In re Austrian & German Bank Holocaust Litig., 80 F. Supp. 2d 164, 176(S.D.N.Y. 2000) [*21] (quoting Plummer v. Chemical Bank, 668 F.2d 654, 660 (2d Cir. 1982)). The court has some opportunity to consider the strength of Plaintiffs' claims against Dean in deciding the motions to dismiss. It concludes that the Dean Settlement neither grossly overvalues nor undervalues those claims.

2. Reaction of the Class to the Dean Settlement.

HN6[] "It is well settled that 'the reaction of the class to the settlement is perhaps the most significant factor to be weighed in considering its adequacy.'" In re Am. Bank Note Holographics, Inc., 127 F. Supp. 2d 418, 425 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) (quoting Sala v. Nat'l R.R. Passenger Corp., 721 F. Supp. 80, 83 (E.D. Pa. 1989)); see also Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 396 F.3d at 118 ("If only a small number of objections are received, that fact can be viewed as indicative of the adequacy of the settlement.") (internal quotation marks and citation omitted); In re Gen. Motors Corp. Pick-Up Truck Fuel Tank Prods. Liab. Litig., 55 F.3d 768, 785, 812 (3d Cir. 1995) (the number and vociferousness of the objectors is a factor to consider in weighing reasonableness of proposed settlement); In re Visa Check/Mastermoney Antitrust Litig., 297 F. Supp. 2d 503, 511 (E.D.N.Y. 2003) [*22] ("[A] certain number of objections are to be expected in a class action with an extensive notice campaign and a potentially large number of class members. If only a small number of objections are received, that fact can be viewed as indicative of the adequacy of the settlement") (citation omitted).

In this case, notwithstanding broadly disseminated individualized and published notice of the Dean Settlement, only two objections to the revised settlement were filed, together with four requests for exclusion. By any measure, this is an exceedingly small number of objections and exclusions. The court thus concludes that the class reaction to the Dean Settlement has been largely favorable.

[4] In addition to the discovery conducted in this case, Plaintiffs are privy to all of the discovery involving Dean in Southeastern Milk.

3. Risks of Establishing Liability and Damages, and of Maintaining Class Action.

The court next examines the risks of establishing liability and damages, and of maintaining the class action through trial. In seeking dismissal of this action over a year ago, Dean challenged Plaintiffs' definition of both the product and geographic markets, and argued that based upon publicly available documents, it owned fewer than 20% of the bottling plants in Order 1, and possessed only 18% of the market share, during Plaintiffs' [*23] proposed class period. HN7[] "The core element of a monopolization claim is market power, which is defined as 'the ability to raise price by restricting output.'" PepsiCo, Inc. v. Coca-Cola Co., 315 F.3d 101, 107 (2d Cir. 2002) (quoting 2A Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, ¶ 501, at 85 (2002)). [5] Dean argued that its own market power in Order 1 was simply too insignificant to form a factual and legal basis for Plaintiffs' antitrust claims.

In its Opinion and Order Granting in Part and Denying in Part Defendants' Motions to Dismiss, this court denied Dean's request for dismissal, observing that HN9[] "[d]ismissals for insufficient pleading of market power are rare pre-discovery and are generally reserved for complaints bereft of factual allegations or which contain market share or market power allegations that are purely conclusory." Allen v. Dairy Farmers of Am. Inc., 748 F. Supp. 2d 323, 340 (D. Vt. 2010) (citations omitted). The court nonetheless acknowledged that "[c]ourts have consistently held that [*24] firms with market shares of less than 30% are presumptively incapable of exercising market power." Id. (quoting Commercial Data Servers, Inc. v. IBM Corp., 262 F. Supp. 2d 50, 74 (S.D.N.Y. 2003)). Dean's limited market share in Order 1 thus posed a sizable risk that Plaintiffs would be unable to establish Dean's liability for antitrust violations.

This court further recognized that Plaintiffs faced similar challenges with regard to Dean's statute of limitations defense as "[i]t is beyond dispute that many of the acts that Plaintiffs allege caused them injury took place more than four years prior to the filing of Plaintiffs' initial Complaint [and in] the absence of a continuing violation, these acts cannot form the basis of Plaintiffs' antitrust claims." Id. at 348 (citation omitted). The court further noted that "' HN10[] [a]s a general matter, the continuing violation doctrine is heavily disfavored in the Second Circuit and courts have been loath to apply it absent a showing of compelling circumstances.'" Id. at 350 (quoting Stouter v. Smithtown Cent. Sch. Dist., 687 F. Supp. 2d 224, 230 (E.D.N.Y. 2010)). If the statute of limitations were found to bar all or most of Plaintiffs' claims against [*25] Dean, there would be no recovery for the class.

With regard to the risks of maintaining the class action through trial, it bears noting that the court has certified the class for purposes of the Dean Settlement only. The court has not adjudicated Plaintiffs' motion for class certification, which has been vigorously opposed by DFA and DMS, who have standing to oppose it. [6] Accordingly, there is a risk that this lawsuit will not be certified as a class action and will proceed to trial, if at all, as a lawsuit brought by the individual Plaintiffs against DFA and DMS. In such an event, there will obviously be no class recovery.

In light of the cited risks and obstacles, the court need not address whether Plaintiffs would face similar challenges in establishing damages [7] other than to note that, in antitrust class [*26] action suits, the task is rarely a simple one and is usually heavily dependent upon competing, complex, expensive, and extensive expert witness testimony. Plaintiffs therefore could be expected to incur additional time, labor, and expense in an effort to establish class members' damages against Dean. See Weseley v. Spear, Leeds & Kellogg, 711 F. Supp. 713, 719 (E.D.N.Y. 1989) (antitrust class action litigation is "notoriously complex, protracted, and bitterly fought"). Granting final approval to the Dean Settlement would thus "grant relief to all class members without subjecting them to the risks, complexity,

[5] HN8[] The Second Circuit has held that once a relevant market has been established, a defendant's market share may be used "as a proxy for market power." PepsiCo, 315 F.3d at 108.

[6] Consistent with controlling precedent, the court ruled that DFA and DMS, as non-settling Defendants, lacked standing to oppose the Dean Settlement. See *Allen v. Dairy Farmers of America, Inc., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 48479, 2011 WL 1706778, at 4 (D.Vt. May 4, 2011) (citing Zupnick v. Fogel, 989 F.2d 93, 98 (2d Cir. 1993) and 4 Alba Conte & Herbert B. Newberg, Newberg on Class Actions § 11.55 (4th ed. 2002)).

[7] The court has not been provided with damages estimates from either Plaintiffs or Dean.

duration, and expense of continuing litigation [against Dean.]" In re Global Crossing Sec. & ERISA Litig., 225 F.R.D. 436, 456-57 (S.D.N.Y. 2004). Accordingly, the fourth, fifth, and sixth Grinnell factors also favor approval.

4. The Ability of Dean to Withstand a Greater Judgment; Reasonableness of Settlement Fund.

The court must also consider whether Dean could have withstood a greater settlement amount, the reasonableness of the settlement fund in light of the best possible recovery, and the [*27] range of the reasonableness of the settlement fund to a possible recovery in light of all of the attendant risks of litigation.

Plaintiffs have expressed concern regarding Dean's continued financial viability, citing a news article discussing Dean's large debt. They note that HN11[] "the fact that a defendant is able to pay more than it offers in a settlement does not, standing alone, indicate that the settlement is unreasonable or inadequate." In re Paine Webber Ltd. P'ships Litig., 171 F.R.D. 104, 129 (S.D.N.Y. 1997). Instead, this factor "must be weighed in conjunction with all of the Grinnell factors, most notably the risk of the class prevailing and the reasonableness of the settlement fund." *In re AOL Time Warner ERISA Litig., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 70474, 2006 WL 2789862, at 8 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 27, 2006). Here, the court cannot determine whether Dean could have paid more, it can only conclude that there is no evidence that Dean should have paid more in light of its statute of limitations defense and its limited market share in Order 1.

As far as the reasonableness of the settlement fund, VTAG has questioned whether the $30 million settlement here is reasonable in light of the $140 million settlement in Southeastern [*28] Milk. However, because of the factual and procedural differences between the two cases, the court agrees with Plaintiffs and Dean that the Southeastern Milk settlement is not a proper benchmark for evaluating the Dean Settlement. The plaintiffs in Southeastern Milk are on the eve of trial. Because of Dean's approximately 70% market share in the Southeast, and more numerous allegations of Dean's wrongdoing (which Dean disputes), Dean's financial exposure in that litigation appears greater than its financial exposure in this case. Moreover, Plaintiffs here risk the possibility that their claims against Dean will be dismissed long before trial, but after they have incurred the time, expense, and inconvenience of further litigation. The unpredictability of the likelihood and amount of a potential recovery against Dean in this case thus weighs in favor of finding the Dean Settlement within the range of reasonable outcomes. See In re NASDAQ Market-Makers Antitrust Litig., 187 F.R.D. 465, 475-76 (S.D.N.Y. 1998) (HN12[] "Antitrust litigation in general, and class action litigation in particular, is unpredictable").

In summary, the Dean Settlement was the result of arm's length negotiations between [*29] competent, experienced counsel, fully familiar with an extensive factual record, who have litigated the case in a vigorous and professional manner. Although the best outcome for Plaintiffs is impossible to determine in this case, the court finds the Dean Settlement adequate in light of the risks of no recovery, the possibility that the class will not be certified, and the stage of the litigation at which the settlement was reached. Based upon all of the foregoing factors, the court concludes that the monetary amount and other terms (with the exception of attorney's fees and costs) of the Dean Settlement is "fair, reasonable and adequate." See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(e).

C. Attorney's Fees and Expenses.

Plaintiffs' counsel request an attorney's fees award in the amount of $8,500,000, as well as accrued interest, plus $1,500,000 as partial reimbursement for costs and expenses. The total award would thus represent approximately one third of the Dean Settlement. For the reasons set forth below, the court concludes that an award of $1,500,000 to cover costs and expenses is appropriate, and that an attorney's fees award comprising 15% of the total settlement ($4,500,000), without accrued interest, [*30] is fair and reasonable.

It is beyond dispute that settlement class counsel have created a benefit for the settlement class through the Dean Settlement that might not otherwise exist. HN13[] Courts recognize that when a common fund is created, the party who creates it is generally entitled to a reasonable attorney's fee. See Boeing Co. v. Van Gemert, 444 U.S. 472, 478, 100 S. Ct. 745, 62 L. Ed. 2d 676 (1980) (holding "a lawyer who recovers a common fund for the benefit of persons other than himself or his client is entitled to a reasonable attorney's fee from the fund as a whole.")

(citations omitted). "The rationale for the doctrine is an equitable one: it prevents unjust enrichment of those benefitting from a lawsuit without contributing to its cost." Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 47. Courts further acknowledge the reality that "a financial incentive is necessary to entice capable attorneys, who otherwise could be paid regularly by hourly-rate clients, to devote their time to complex, time-consuming cases for which they may never be paid." Mashburn v. Nat'l Healthcare, Inc., 684 F. Supp. 679, 687 (M.D. Ala. 1988) (citations omitted). Here, the only dispute is the amount of the fee.

HN14[] "Courts have used two distinct methods to determine [*31] what is a reasonable attorneys' fee." Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 47. "The first is the lodestar, under which the district court scrutinizes the fee petition to ascertain the number of hours reasonably billed to the class and then multiplies that figure by an appropriate hourly rate." Id. "Once that initial computation has been made, the district court may, in its discretion, increase the lodestar by applying a multiplier based on 'other less objective factors,' such as the risk of the litigation and the performance of the attorneys." Id. (citation omitted). "The second method is simpler. The court sets some percentage of the recovery as a fee." Id. "In determining what percentage to award, courts have looked to the same 'less objective' factors that are used to determine the multiplier for the lodestar." Id. (citation omitted).

As Plaintiffs correctly point out, HN15[] "[t]he trend in the Second Circuit has been to express the attorneys' fees as a percentage of the total settlement[.]" *In re Merrill Lynch & Co., Inc. Research Reports Sec. Litig., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 93423, 2007 WL 4526593, at 13 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 20, 2007). In determining the proper percentage, the Second Circuit has identified six factors:

> (1) the time and [*32] labor expended by counsel; (2) the magnitude and complexities of the litigation; (3) the risk of the litigation[ ]; (4) the quality of representation; (5) the requested fee in relation to the settlement; and (6) public policy considerations.

Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 50 (quoting In re Union Carbide Corp. Consumer Prods. Business Sec. Litig., 724 F. Supp. 160, 163 (S.D.N.Y. 1989)).

1. Counsel's Time and Labor.

Plaintiffs' counsel has expended substantial time and labor on this lawsuit. Plaintiffs estimate that, using the lodestar method of calculation, their attorney's fees exceed $11 million and their costs and expenses exceed $2 million. However, only a portion of these amounts gave rise to the Dean Settlement which in turn gave rise to the common fund from which any attorney's fee must be derived. Plaintiffs do not segregate the fees they incurred in pursuing the Dean Settlement from, for example, the time they spent in litigating the motions to dismiss, the discovery disputes, and the motion to certify the class. Indeed, they acknowledge that much of the discovery they would have otherwise pursued from Dean remains to be completed. The court thus does not find Plaintiffs' lodestar a [*33] reliable proxy for a reasonable attorney's fees award with regard to the Dean Settlement. Correspondingly, by awarding Plaintiffs the full amount of their costs and expenses incurred to date, the court arguably may overcompensate them for costs and expenses not incurred in creating the common fund. The court factors these considerations into its overall determination of a reasonable attorney's fees award.

2. Litigation Complexity, Magnitude, Risk, and Quality of Representation.

The court has already acknowledged that this litigation is complex, time consuming, and laden with risk regarding its potential outcome. Plaintiffs' counsel is experienced in antitrust litigation and vigorously negotiated the Dean Settlement. To date, Plaintiffs' attorneys have been competent, professional, and cooperative in this lawsuit and have not unnecessarily driven up the cost of litigation through either meritless motion practice, discovery subterfuges, or oppositional tactics. Indeed, counsel for all parties have litigated this case in a professional and courteous manner, on an expedited schedule that would have rendered it difficult for lead counsel to take on and pursue other work. The attorney's fee [*34] award in this case should compensate Plaintiffs' counsel's efforts and recognize both the quality of their representation, and the risks they accepted when they decided to pursue claims against Dean.

3. The Relationship of the Fee to the Settlement.

The relationship of the fee request to the Dean Settlement is grounds for concern. It leaves a relatively small recovery for each class member with no suggestion by either Plaintiffs or Dean that the Dean Settlement is expected to make class members "whole" insofar as their claims against Dean are concerned. In addition, Plaintiffs' ten million dollar fee request was based in part on the injunctive relief originally contained in the Dean Settlement which Plaintiffs lauded as a major victory for settlement class members. When that provision of the Dean Settlement proved divisive, it was excised. A corresponding reduction in the attorney's fee award properly reflects that the nature of the Dean Settlement has changed.

At the preliminary approval hearing, Plaintiffs candidly admitted that one third of the Dean Settlement fund was the most that they could reasonably expect the court to award as attorney's fees in this case. Although they now point [*35] to other attorney's fees awards in excess of this amount (that have been approved by other courts), they concede that it is not uncommon for parties to negotiate a lesser fee award when litigation does not require a trial to produce a common fund. Moreover, HN16[] the Second Circuit has rejected the notion of a "benchmark" for common fund cases. See Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 51 (rejecting counsel's argument that 25% is a proper benchmark for a percentage fee in a common fund case while acknowledging that other jurisdictions have taken this approach). It has also tasked the district courts to act "as a fiduciary who must serve as a guardian of the rights of absent class members[.]" Id. (citation omitted). Accordingly, the court must take a hard look at Plaintiffs' fee request because "awards [in common fund] cases are proper only 'if made with moderation.'" Id. (citation omitted).

Here, the litigation has not reached its conclusion. If Plaintiffs are successful in pursuing their claims against DFA and/or DMS, additional attorney's fees may be awarded. According to Plaintiffs' own calculations, the Dean Settlement is thus only a partial recovery for settlement class members. In light of this fact, [*36] the attorney's fees award should be a partial recovery as well.

4. Public Policy Considerations.

The merits of this litigation have not been decided, and no injunctive relief has been granted. Dean admits no wrongdoing. In such circumstances, public policy does not play an important role in the attorney's fee award for the Dean Settlement. [8]

Examining all of the foregoing factors and the totality of the circumstances, the court concludes that an attorney's fee award of $4.5 million, or 15% of the total Dean Settlement, without accrued interest, and an additional $1.5 million award for expenses and costs incurred to date is a reasonable and fair award.

D. Incentives for Class Representatives.

HN17[] "An incentive award is meant to compensate the named plaintiff for any personal risk incurred by the individual or any additional effort expended by the individual for the benefit of the lawsuit." Dornberger v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 203 F.R.D. 118, 124 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) (internal citations [*37] omitted). Plaintiffs seek an incentive award of $7,500 per class representative (a total of $22,500) for class representatives' provision of documents and information essential to the litigation. They identify no personal risk undertaken by any of the class representatives in pursuing this lawsuit.

At the preliminary approval hearing, Plaintiffs did not ask the court to grant incentive awards to the class representatives, and the order granting preliminary approval is silent on that issue. The Dean Settlement Agreement makes passing references to incentive awards, but does not explicitly call for such awards. [9] The [8] Public policy weighs in favor of awarding substantial attorney's fees for incurring the risks of meritorious litigation that redresses antitrust violations. At this juncture, no antitrust violations have been found.

[9] Section 10.5 of the Settlement Agreement provides that "In no event shall Settling Defendant be obligated to pay anything in addition to the Settlement Fund described in paragraph 9.1 hereto, including without limitation class notice costs, attorneys' fees, payments to named Plaintiffs for their efforts on behalf of the Settlement Class . . . Except as provided in paragraph 10.6 hereto, no [*38] payment shall be made out of the Settlement Fund prior to the Effective Date, and then, only as approved by the possibility of incentives for class representatives is disclosed in the Notice and the Summary Notice but only in the most general terms and without any accompanying monetary amount. [10]

Plaintiffs' motion seeking incentive awards was filed on June 3, 2011 (Doc. 310), a month after the court granted preliminary approval of the Dean Settlement as revised. In the absence of full disclosure of the amount and nature of [*39] these incentive awards, the court concludes that it is not appropriate to now include them as part of the Dean Settlement. Class representatives will share in the Dean Settlement pro rata payment. Additional compensation for their efforts must await further developments in this case, and must be accompanied by full and accurate notice of any deduction from the class's recovery. In so ruling, the court does not intend to suggest that class representatives have been anything less than vigorous in their pursuit of this lawsuit.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the court:

1. GRANTS Final Approval of the Dean Settlement Agreement, as revised;
2. AWARDS compensation of Plaintiffs' costs and expenses in the amount of $1.5 million and attorney's fees in the amount of $4.5 million;
3. DENIES Plaintiffs' request for an award of accrued interest on the Settlement Fund;
4. STAYS all proceedings against Dean; and
5. DENIES Plaintiffs' request for incentive awards to class representatives.

SO ORDERED.

ORDER GRANTING MOTIONS TO DISMISS, WITH LEAVE TO DISMISS, WITH LEAVE TO AMEND

I. INTRODUCTION

This Multi-District Litigation arises from an alleged conspiracy beginning in 2006 among defendants to fix the prices of "Optical Disc Drives" ("ODDs") and "Optical Disc Drive Products" ("ODD Products"). Two "master" consolidated complaints have been filed—one on behalf of a putative class of "direct" purchasers of ODDs and ODD Products, and one on behalf of "indirect" purchasers. Defendants who have appeared have jointly filed, or joined in, motions to dismiss each of the complaints. Various smaller groupings of defendants have filed separate additional motions to dismiss, raising arguments particular to each of them. Because plaintiffs have not alleged a plausible factual basis for inferring the existence of a conspiracy of the scope and nature alleged, the complaints must be dismissed, with leave to amend.

II. BACKGROUND[1]

A. The products

An optical disc is a medium for storing data. Familiar forms include CDs (compact discs) typically containing music or computer software, and DVDs (digital video disc or, officially, Digital Versatile Disc), often containing movies or other video content, and also used for computer software. When first introduced to the public, optical discs only contained data files that were recorded onto them during the manufacturing process—they could be "read" but not written to, much like phonograph records of an earlier time ("read only discs"). As the technology advanced, optical discs were developed that allowed an end user to record data on a one-time basis ("recordable discs"). Eventually optical discs appeared on the market that permitted data to be recorded and re-recorded indefinitely ("rewritable discs), which are analogous to magnetic tape, or hard and floppy computer discs. In a broad sense, the technology evolved generationally from CDs to DVDs to Blu-Ray Discs ("BDs"), each with the same progression moving from read only, to recordable, [*15] and then to rewritable.

ODDs are devices that allow data to be read from and, where applicable, written to, optical discs. ODDs are typically "backwards-compatible," – that is, an ODD that is designed to read (and perhaps write to) a more recently-developed format of optical disc usually will also be able to process older formats as well. ODDs have applications in a variety of consumer electronic devices, including desktop and laptop computers, game consoles, and camcorders. In these applications, the ODD is typically a built-in component of the device. Some television sets are also sold with built-in ODDs.

ODDs are also available as "stand alone" devices, in at least two forms. First, consumers have been able to purchase stand alone CD, DVD, and Blu-Ray "players" (which may or may not also include recording capabilities), primarily designed for enjoying music or video entertainment, through personal headphones, stereo equipment, or television sets. Second, stand alone ODDs are available that are configured to be connected to computers lacking built-in ODDs, primarily for the purpose of storing data or accessing optical disc-based software, but which can also be used to play music or [*16] video on the computers. In such a "stand alone" product, the ODD is the primary component, as contrasted, for example, to an ODD built into a computer that contains many other components performing various functions. Nevertheless, even in such "stand alone" products, the ODD itself can still be thought of as a separate component from such other elements as the power supply, interface circuitry, and the case.[2]

To this point, the term "ODD" has been used to refer to the optical disc drive component itself, whether built-in to another device such as a computer or camcorder, or only incorporated with a power supply and sufficient additional circuitry to function as a "stand alone" device. The Direct Purchasers' Consolidated Complaint, however, defines "ODD" differently. Specifically, plaintiffs allege that an "ODD" is either a "drive[] built to be incorporated into notebook and desktop computers, camcorders and/or game consoles" or a "stand-alone [*17] drive[]"—i.e., a drive component assembled with a power supply and interface circuitry in a case. The distinction is significant for this reason. There is no dispute that in the case of computers, for example, numerous other nondefendant companies purchase ODDs from defendants to be built into those other companies' computers. As discussed below, consequences flow from whether plaintiffs can legitimately be considered "direct purchasers" of the ODDs in such instances. It is unclear from the complaints whether there also exist manufacturers of "stand alone" DVD, CD, and Blu-Ray players who obtain the actual ODD components from defendants rather than manufacturing their own, but there appears to be no reason why that could not occur. In such circumstances, the same issue would arise regarding whether plaintiffs can be considered "direct purchasers" or not.

Furthermore, regardless of whether or not there is any significant number of non-defendant companies producing stand alone DVD, CD, and Blu-Ray players incorporating ODDs made by defendants, there is simply no logical reason to analyze those products separately from other devices that include "built-in" ODDs, such as computers, game [*18] consoles, and camcorders. Rather, the only useful distinction is between any product that includes an ODD on the one hand, and the actual ODD component on the other hand, regardless of whether it is built into a stand-alone player or into a more complex device with other functions.

The Direct Purchasers' Consolidated Complaint also contains another definitional anomaly that complicates the analysis. As noted above, the direct purchasers allege a conspiracy to fix prices of both ODDs (as they define them) and "ODD Products." The latter term is defined as inclusive of the former. Thus, "ODD Product" as used by plaintiffs not only refers to the ODDs themselves, but also to any computer, game console, or camcorder containing an ODD manufactured by defendants. While the actual ODD components in issue in this litigation are only those manufactured by defendants, the computers, game consoles, and camcorders implicated by the complaint include those manufactured by numerous third parties. Again, because it has implications for plaintiffs' designation as "direct purchasers," it is necessary to distinguish between the actual ODD components and other products that incorporate them. Defining "ODD [*19] Products" to include "ODDs" impedes that distinction.

Although plaintiffs' factual allegations must be accepted as true on a motion to dismiss, there is no requirement to adopt the nomenclature of the complaint, particularly where doing so would obfuscate rather than illuminate the dispositive issues. Accordingly, in the balance of this order, the term "ODDs" will be used to refer to optical disk drive mechanisms built to be incorporated into either (1) stand-alone CD, DVD, or Blu-Ray players and recorders, whether for audiovisual or computer use, (2) computers, (3) game consoles, or (4) camcorders. The term "ODD devices" will mean all such products (including the stand-alone players and recorders) that include ODDs.[3]

[2] For example, the indirect purchasers' complaint describes how a "consumer DVD player" can be designed simply by incorporating a "computer-type" ODD with a power supply and interface board in a case. Indirect Purchasers' First Amended Complaint ¶¶ 82-83.

B. The alleged conspiracy

The charging allegations of the Direct Purchasers' Consolidated Complaint assert that beginning in January of 2004, "Defendants and their Co-conspirators entered into a continuing contract, combination or conspiracy to unreasonably restrain trade and commerce in violation of Section One of the Sherman Act." Specifically, defendants allegedly had meetings and conversations in which they "agreed to charge prices at specified levels and otherwise to fix, increase, stabilize and/or maintain prices of ODD Products sold in the United States," and they thereafter in fact sold "ODD Products" at those artificially inflated prices. Defendants also allegedly engaged in bid rigging, allocation of customers and markets, and artificial limiting of supplies.

As support for these charges, the complaint comprises over fifty pages of description of various aspects of the ODD and ODD devices industry, which plaintiffs assert support an inference of price-fixing. The allegations include all of the following:

• The "ODD industry" is highly concentrated. Four of the named defendants jointly controlled over 80% of worldwide shipments of CD, DVD, and BD drives by volume in 2008, [*21] with another two defendants controlling over 13%. Market concentration has been increasing as the result of certain acquisitions and joint ventures. Some of the defendants are also major producers of ODD devices. Sony, as an example, markets Playstation game consoles, which have a large market share.
• Specific joint-ventures and other collaborative efforts between Taiwanese and Korean defendants on the one hand, and Japanese defendants who held key intellectual property rights on the other hand, resulted in forcing most of Taiwan's "second-tier" manufacturers and virtually all of China's manufacturers out of the "ODD industry."
• Various manufacturing and technological issues present high barriers to entry into the market, including high licensing costs imposed by patent pools among the defendants.
• Defendants participate in various specified trade associations that facilitate their alleged anticompetitive conduct and the making of price-fixing agreements.
• Defendants regularly attend certain trade shows, similarly giving them further opportunity to communicate and conspire.

• "ODD Products" are highly standardized, permitting consumers to view them as interchangeable, which "makes it [*22] easier to form and sustain a cartel."
• Many of the defendants have been investigated for antitrust violations involving other technology products, and in some cases found guilty.
• Several defendants engaged in bid-rigging in connection with auctions run by Dell and Hewlett-Packard for contracts to supply ODDs for use in their computers. Such bid-rigging occurred over several years, but included three auctions identified by specific dates.
• The U.S. Department of Justice is presently investigating possible criminal antitrust violations in the ODD industry.
• Certain defendants employ "Minimum Advertised Price" policies imposing limits on the prices retailers may actively promote for ODD devices.
• Some economic data purportedly shows that the "ODD market" has experienced unnatural price stability and periods of upward trends.

III. LEGAL STANDARD

[3] Defendants' joint motion to dismiss uses the term "Finished ODD products" similarly, although it is not entirely clear where they would categorize the stand-alone devices. Plaintiffs criticize defendants for using a term not found in the complaint, and suggest they have mischaracterized the nature of the conspiracy allegations by doing so. Because plaintiffs' definitions conflate products made by defendants with those that are not, however, more precise terminology is [*20] needed.

Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6), a district court must dismiss a complaint that fails to state a claim upon which relief may be granted. To survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, the plaintiff must allege "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). [*23] This "facial plausibility" standard requires the plaintiff to allege facts that add up to "more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). While courts do not require "heightened fact pleading of specifics," a plaintiff must allege facts sufficient to "raise a right to relief above the speculative level." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 544, 555.

In deciding whether the plaintiff has stated a claim upon which relief may be granted, the Court must assume that the plaintiff's allegations are true and must draw all reasonable inferences in the plaintiff's favor. See Usher v. City of Los Angeles, 828 F.2d 556, 561 (9th Cir.1987). However, the Court is not required to accept as true "allegations that are merely conclusory, unwarranted deductions of fact, or unreasonable inferences." In re Gilead Scis. Sec. Litig., 536 F.3d 1049, 1055 (9th Cir. 2008).[4]

IV. DISCUSSION

A. The Direct Purchasers' Consolidated Complaint

1. Illinois Brick

The parties vigorously dispute whether the specific factual allegations of the complaint are sufficient to support the conclusions advanced by plaintiffs that a price-fixing conspiracy existed, or instead whether those allegations amount to no more than a description of ordinary and legal industry activities, combined with irrelevant accusations of unrelated wrongdoing and the inconclusive fact that a DOJ investigation is pending. Underlying those disputes, however, is a more fundamental disagreement as to whether plaintiffs can plausibly allege a conspiracy to fix not only ODD prices, but also those of ODD Devices, and whether plaintiffs can be seen as "direct purchasers" at all.

The distinction between direct purchasers and indirect purchasers is of critical import as a result of the Supreme Court's holding in Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977). In Illinois Brick, the Court confronted the problem that in a manufacturing chain, the increased cost of one component of a product resulting from a [*25] price-fixing violation may very well be "passed-on" to a consumer further down the chain. Concluding that allocating damages among those potentially injured by the price-fixing would present unworkable complexity, the Court instead adopted a bright line rule that only direct purchasers have standing under federal law to seek damages for price-fixing violations. See id. at 745-746; Del. Valley Surgical Supply Inc. v. Johnson & Johnson, 523 F.3d 1116, 1120-21 (9th Cir. 2008) ("a bright line rule emerged from Illinois Brick: only direct purchasers have standing under § 4 of the Clayton Act to seek damages for antitrust violations.")

The Illinois Brick rule presents a fatal problem to the complaint as it is presently constituted. As noted, plaintiffs have defined "ODD Products" to include any ODD device containing an ODD manufactured by one of the named defendants. The allegations make clear, however, that a significant percentage of defendants' ODDs are sold to other companies, who are neither named as defendants nor directly affiliated with the named defendants, for incorporation into the ODD devices manufactured and sold by those other companies. All of the named plaintiffs are individuals [*26] or companies who allege only that they each purchased "ODD Products" from one or more of the defendants. While under plaintiffs' definitions it is at least possible that some plaintiffs may have purchased actual ODDs from a defendant for incorporation into an ODD device manufactured by such plaintiffs, the likelihood is that [4] Subsequent to the hearing, the parties have submitted several statements of recent decisions they contend bear on the issues in this action. In at least one instance, such a statement was simply filed, in others, they were accompanied by requests for leave to submit them, as is required [*24] by Civil Local Rule 7-3(d). All the statements of recent decision will be deemed properly filed.

most, if not all, the plaintiffs only purchased ODD devices.[5] Furthermore, the named plaintiffs unquestionably do not include such major makers of ODD devices as HP and Dell.

Thus, while the complaint presently attempts to encompass ODD devices manufactured and sold by non-defendant companies, plaintiffs simply are not direct purchasers of such devices within the meaning of Illinois Brick. Even in the event that one or more named plaintiff contends it is a purchaser of actual ODDs (for its own manufacturing of ODD devices or for replacing a failed ODD), such facts would have to be alleged.

Plaintiffs' response to this Illinois Brick conundrum [*27] is two-fold. First, plaintiffs invoke a "co-conspirator exception" to Illinois Brick permitting suit by persons who would otherwise be considered indirect purchasers if they can allege that the actual direct purchaser conspired with the defendant to set the prices the plaintiffs paid. See Arizona v. Shamrock Foods Co., 729 F.2d 1208, 1211 (9th Cir. 1984). Plaintiffs then argue they have alleged such cooperation between defendants and unnamed co-conspirators here. The paragraph of the complaint on which plaintiffs rely, however, only alleges that, "Some of the Defendants and their Co-conspirators are also major producers of products that contain ODDs." Other complaint paragraphs that specifically identify three alleged "Co-conspirators" by name fall well short of alleging facts supporting the contention that they conspired with defendants to set consumer prices of DVD devices.

Moreover, even if the allegations were sufficient as to those particular "co-conspirators," plaintiffs have defined "ODD Products" to include devices sold by an untold number of other companies. Not only are there no facts to show such companies were also "co-conspirators," some of the facts specifically pleaded [*28] and relied upon by plaintiffs for other purposes are to the contrary. Specifically, plaintiffs plead that HP and Dell were victims of the alleged bid-rigging. While pleading in the alternative is permissible in some circumstances, those allegations are flatly incompatible with a theory that HP and Dell were co-conspirators in fixing prices of the ODD devices they sold.

Plaintiffs' second argument against the applicability of Illinois Brick relies on the principle that its rule, "does not bar an indirect purchaser's suit where the direct purchaser is a division or subsidiary of a co-conspirator." Royal Printing Co. v. Kimberly Clark Corp., 621 F.2d 323, 326 (9th Cir. 1980). Plaintiffs embrace that safe harbor by insisting "defendants include verticallyintegrated manufacturers that make ODD Products" and the complaint purportedly "explains the corporate relationships among Defendants and the joint ventures they formed." Fatally, however, that argument at most applies to those ODD devices sold by subsidiaries and affiliates of the defendants. Once again, by defining "ODD Products" to include ODD devices sold by unrelated third parties, plaintiffs have overreached.

Furthermore, even with [*29] respect to ODD devices sold by subsidiaries of the defendants, Royal Printing merely permits suit under federal law by indirect purchasers notwithstanding Illinois Brick; it does not somehow transform indirect purchasers into direct purchasers. This complaint, however, was brought on behalf of a putative class of direct purchasers, by counsel given an interim appointment to represent such persons, not indirect purchasers. While potentially curable, either by expanding this complaint to include indirect purchasers who contend they have standing to assert damage claims under the Sherman Act, or by expanding the indirect purchasers' complaint to allege such claims on behalf of a subclass, amendment of the pleadings will be necessary.[6]

Accordingly, plaintiffs have not shown, and cannot show that the claims they have currently pleaded are viable in light of Illinois Brick. For this reason alone, [*30] the Direct Purchasers' Consolidated Complaint must be dismissed.

[5] One other somewhat more likely possibility arises. A plaintiff may have purchased an ODD as a replacement for a failed drive in an existing ODD device. In such circumstances, the plaintiff would qualify as a direct purchaser.

[6] Plaintiffs' counsel for the two groups should decide between them which approach is preferable, if the claims are to be pursued. Should a modification to the interim appointment order be required, the parties make seek one by stipulation or administrative motion brought under Civil Local Rule 7-11.

2. Plausibility

The direct purchasers' attempt to include in "ODD Products" devices made and sold by unrelated third parties gives rise to an additional problem, independent of the standing barrier of Illinois Brick. Plaintiffs allege that a relatively small number of defendants manufacture and sell nearly all the ODDs presently on the market. Assuming sufficient facts were pleaded to support a conspiracy inference, it likely would be at least plausible that such a group could and would engage in price fixing of ODDs. By positing price-fixing of ODD devices, however, plaintiffs vastly increase the number of entities that would have to be participating in such a conspiracy, and implicate a far broader range of markets and marketing channels that the conspirators would have to be shown to control. It is one thing to say that a small number of entities have conspired to fix the prices of particular products they directly sell; it is quite another to suggest that those entities have somehow agreed with unnamed parties to fix the prices of products each sells.

Plaintiffs contend that defendants have mischaracterized the complaint [*31] by pointing out the implausibility of such a vast conspiracy across different markets and involving so many unnamed co-conspirators. Rather, they insist their allegation is but a "single, intertwined, overarching" conspiracy involving "ODD products" (as they define that term). The issue, however, is not whether there are multiple conspiracies or one, but whether plaintiffs have pleaded facts to make any such "overarching" conspiracy plausible. Plaintiffs rely on Knevelbaard Dairies v. Kraft Foods, Inc., 232 F.3d 979 (9th Cir. 2000) for the proposition that a price-fixing conspiracy may involve a number of arguably different products. The alleged conspiracy in Knevelbaard, however, did not depend for its success on the cooperation of an untold number of additional entities who have the power to set prices for the products in dispute.

Plaintiffs also suggest that courts in this district have "routinely" accepted conspiracy allegations involving price-fixing of both an electronic component and the "finished product" containing the component. The cases on which plaintiffs rely, however, do not go as far as they suggest. For example, in In re Cathode Ray Tube (CRT) Antitrust Litigation, 738 F.Supp.2d 1011 (N.D.Cal. 2010) [*32] the court declined to dismiss allegations of a conspiracy to fix the price not only of cathode ray tubes ("CRTs") but also of television and computer monitors that incorporated CRTs. The court specifically noted that the purported direct purchaser plaintiffs' allegations of price fixing of finished products arose "in the case of vertically integrated manufacturers who produced both CRTs and CRT Products." 738 F.Supp.2d at 1018. Once again, the problem here is that plaintiffs are attempting to extend the price-fixing conspiracy to finished products not produced by the defendants, an issue not expressly addressed in Cathode Ray.[7]

Plaintiffs' citation to In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litigation, 586 F.Supp.2d 1109 (N.D.Cal. 2008), is no more helpful to them. There the court merely relied on allegations of purchases of finished products directly from alleged members of the [*33] cartel to reject an argument that plaintiffs lacked standing. Id. at 1119. As discussed above, while plaintiffs in this case do not have a standing problem with respect to any ODD devices they may have purchased directly from defendants, that does not address the plausibility of a purported price-fixing conspiracy extending even to ODD devices sold by unrelated third parties.

Finally, plaintiffs fare no better in pointing to the class certification order in the TFT-LCD case. See 267 F.R.D. 291 (N.D.Cal.2010). That decision reveals that the direct purchaser plaintiffs sought to define the class as only those persons who purchased "TFT-LCD panels or a product containing a TFT-LCD panel in the United States from the named defendants, any subsidiaries or affiliates thereof, or any co-conspirators as identified in the complaint." Id. at 298. While it is not clear from the opinion the extent to which there may in fact have been other producers of finished TFT-LCD products in the market, that narrow class definition largely avoided putting in issue the existence of a broad conspiracy between the named defendants and unnamed third parties.

[7] The indirect purchasers' complaint in Cathode Ray also described an economic mechanism whereby the defendants allegedly were able to affect the prices charged by third parties for finished products incorporating defendants' CRTs. Id. The direct purchasers' complaint here does not include any similar allegations.

In short, while there is no rule that a conspiracy to [*34] fix prices of both a particular component and the finished product containing that component can never exist or be successfully pleaded, there must be a plausible factual basis for contending that the sellers of the finished products were in fact in conspiracy together with the named defendants. Once again, plaintiffs' allegations here suggest the opposite, if anything. At least in the specific instance of ODD devices manufactured and sold by Dell and HP, plaintiffs have alleged that those third party sellers were unwitting dupes of the illegal activity, not co-conspirators. The most reasonable inference is that most, if not all, of the other sellers of ODD devices who are not directly affiliated with defendants likewise were victims of any agreement to fix ODD prices, not participants in a conspiracy to fix prices of the ODD devices they sold.

Although not clearly articulated by plaintiffs, it may be they are contending that defendants in effect fixed the prices of ODD devices sold by unaffiliated third parties by overcharging for the component ODDs incorporated in those devices, even without their knowledge or cooperation. Any such argument, however, would represent an impermissible [*35] end-run around the Illinois Brick rule. Indeed, one of the precise underpinnings of that rule is that it can be very difficult to determine how much, if any, of the inflated cost of a price-fixed component will ultimately be passed on to the consumer who buys the finished product. See Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 731-733. Given the uncertainties discussed in Illinois Brick as to when and under what circumstances the price of a finished product will reflect the effects of any price-fixing of a component, it simply would not be reasonable to infer from the facts alleged here that defendants' conduct necessarily affected the retail prices of all ODD devices, even if there was price-fixing of ODDs.

Accordingly, plaintiffs have not pleaded sufficient facts to make plausible their claim of a conspiracy to fix prices of both ODDs and ODD devices, including those made and sold by unaffiliated third parties. For this reason as well, the complaint must be dismissed.

3. Other Plausibility and Specificity Issues

Apart from the issue regarding the scope of the conspiracy discussed in the preceding section, to proceed on any conspiracy theory plaintiffs must also plead "enough factual matter (taken [*36] as true) to suggest that an agreement was made" because a "conclusory allegation of agreement at some unidentified point does not supply facts adequate to show illegality." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556-557. There is no doubt that the existing factual allegations are insufficient to support the inference of a price-fixing agreement among defendants and third party sellers of ODD devices, for the reasons discussed above. It would be premature to reach a definitive conclusion whether allegations substantially similar to those in the existing complaint might be sufficient to support a claim of a narrower conspiracy involving only an agreement by defendants to fix ODD prices. Nevertheless, it is appropriate to offer some observations.

Most of the existing allegations may serve to explain why a price-fixing agreement might be possible, and describe avenues of communication through which defendants could carry out such a plan, it is far from apparent that such averments would suffice to "nudge" plaintiffs' "claims across the line from conceivable to plausible." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570. Allegations that defendants participated in industry trade associations and attended trade shows represent particularly [*37] weak support for the existence of any conspiracy. See id., at 567 n. 12 (rejecting suggestion that similar allegations were of particular significance). Pricing trends and economic data present a potentially fertile ground for inferences of price manipulation, but the information plaintiffs have presented at this juncture is ambiguous at best, and does not permit reliable conclusions to be drawn about the pricing of ODDs in particular.

The allegations regarding contraction and consolidation among ODD manufacturers, and the market share held by defendants, as well as their participation in patent pools and various joint ventures, may very well be necessary predicates to showing that defendants had the power to fix prices, but they do not show that defendants in fact did so. Descriptions of other instances in which some of these defendants were found to have engaged in price-fixing is provocative, but plaintiffs have not shown enough commonalities between those circumstances and the present case to make those allegations probative. Cf. In re Static Random Access Memory (SRAM) Antitrust Litigation, 580

F.Supp.2d 896, 903 (N.D.Cal. 2008) (finding conspiracy claim to be supported by allegations [*38] that the "same actors" associated with defendants were responsible for marketing the products in each instance). Similarly, the allegations that defendants are presently targets of a DOJ investigation is a "non-factor," because, "[i]t is unknown whether the investigation will result in indictments or nothing at all [and] the scope of the investigation is pure speculation." In re Graphics Processing Units Antitrust Litigation, 527 F.Supp.2d 1011, 1024 (N.D.Cal. 2007).

Finally, plaintiffs' allegations of bid-rigging on three specifically-identified occasions perhaps come closest to providing the requisite support for a conspiracy, particularly because no alternative innocent explanation for such conduct is readily apparent. Indeed, at oral argument defendants virtually conceded such allegations likely would be sufficient to support the existence of a conspiracy with respect to at least those particular auctions. As defendants point out, however, those auctions involved only a small subset of defendants. Even assuming those auctions, and perhaps others, were rigged, that is a far cry from establishing plausibility for a broad six year continuing agreement among all defendants to fix the [*39] prices of all ODDs sold through innumerable other channels.[8]

In sum, while the allegations of the existing complaint are actually inconsistent with the existence of a conspiracy to fix prices on all ODD devices, they do suggest that a conspiracy to fix ODD prices is at least conceivable. Further allegations of fact, however, likely would be required to cross the line into the realm of the plausible, even if plaintiffs elect to limit their claims to alleged price fixing of ODDs.

4. FTAIA

Defendants further contend that the Direct Purchaser's Consolidated Complaint should also be dismissed for failure to plead sufficient facts to establish subject matter jurisdiction under the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvement Act ("FTAIA"), 15 U.S.C. § 6a. FTAIA generally excludes from the reach of [*40] the Sherman Act anti-competitive conduct that causes only foreign injury. See In re Dynamic Random Access Memory (DRAM) Antitrust Litig., 546 F.3d 981, 985 (9th Cir. 2008). Because the existing compliant fails to allege a plausible conspiracy of the scope claimed at all, it is technically not possible to say that plaintiffs have alleged a conspiracy with the requisite domestic effects to support jurisdiction under FTAIA. The failure, however, lies more in the issues identified above than in any particular requirement of FTAIA. Unless and until the parameters of any plausible conspiracy plaintiffs may be able to allege is known, the potential impact of FTAIA cannot be meaningfully evaluated.

5. Leave to amend

Defendants urge dismissal without leave to amend, pointing out that plaintiffs have had ample time and the benefit of filing a consolidated complaint to articulate a plausible claim. As the preceding discussion reflects, however, while it is far from apparent that plaintiffs necessarily will be able to address the identified defects successfully, it is not a foregone conclusion that they cannot advance facts sufficient to support a conspiracy of a more limited scope, assuming any [*41] of them can allege they bought ODDs or ODD devices directly from any defendants or co-conspirators. Accordingly, leave to amend will be granted.

B. The Indirect Purchasers' First Amended Complaint

1. Plausibility

Recognizing that they are barred by Illinois Brick from recovering damages under federal law, the indirect purchasers instead assert claims for, (1) injunctive relief under the Sherman Act, (2) damages, under a proposed

[8] Of course, as set out above, the Direct Purchaser plaintiffs do not even have standing to pursue claims arising from any bid-rigging at those auctions. While that does not necessarily foreclose them from pointing to defendants' alleged conduct at those auctions as support for the possible existence of a broader agreement to fix prices generally, it does somewhat lessen the significance of those allegations.

nation-wide class that would rely on California state antitrust and unfair competition law, and (3) in the alternative, damages, under 29 proposed state-specific classes that would rely on the antitrust laws, and in some instances, unfair competition laws, of those states.[9]

The indirect purchasers define ODDs and ODD Products in substantially the same way as do the direct purchasers, although they do not expressly make the latter term inclusive of the former. While those definitions leave some room for ambiguity, it appears that the indirect purchasers intend to bring their claims on behalf of persons who purchased ODD devices from third parties, other than the named defendants, their affiliates, and any co-conspirators.[10] It does not appear that any of the indirect purchasers are claiming that they purchased ODDs that were not already incorporated into ODD devices.

The opening paragraphs of the Indirect Purchasers' First Amended Complaint suggest that they may intend to allege only a conspiracy to fix prices of ODDs, and that their injuries would arise from the fact that some or all of the allegedly inflated price of the ODDs may have been passed through to them when they purchased ODD devices. Read as a whole, however, the complaint plainly advances a claim of an alleged conspiracy to fix prices of both ODDs and ODD devices. See, e.g. ¶ 317 ("Defendants and their co-conspirators . . . agree[d] to manipulate prices and supply of ODDs and ODD Products.").

For the same reasons as discussed above, plaintiffs have alleged no plausible basis for inferring a conspiracy between defendants and unnamed independent third parties who manufacture and sell ODD Devices. Again, the allegations of bid-rigging in auctions conducted by HP and Dell actually support a strong inference to the contrary. While the indirect purchasers point to factual details in their complaint that go beyond those offered by the direct purchasers (regarding defendants' participation in patent pools, trade associations, and pricing and economic data), [*44] those allegations do not fill the gap. At best, the indirect purchasers have come closer to alleging a factual predicate that might support a claim of a conspiracy to fix ODD prices than have the direct purchasers. Even for such a more circumscribed conspiracy, however, the barometer points to conceivable, rather than plausible. Accordingly, the complaint must be dismissed, with leave to amend.

2. Associated General Contractors

In Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983) ("AGC"), the Supreme Court articulated a multi-factor balancing test for evaluating a plaintiff's standing to bring antitrust claims under federal law generally. Because of the bright-line Illinois Brick rule that indirect purchasers lack standing to bring damages claims in price-fixing cases, resort to an AGC analysis ordinarily is not necessary with respect to federal claims. Defendants argue, however, that the AGC factors can and do apply to indirect purchasers' price-fixing claims under state law in any jurisdiction that has generally embraced the AGC antitrust standing requirements. Listing eighteen states that they contend have in fact adopted [*45] the AGC test, defendants move to dismiss those particular state law claims for lack of antitrust standing.

Plaintiffs respond that defendants are effectively attempting to override the decisions made in the legislatures or courts of those states to reject Illinois Brick as a bar to indirect purchasers' claims under state law. Defendants, in [9] Each of the 29 states is a so-called "Illinois Brick repealer" jurisdiction, having by statute or judicial decision expressed a determination that standing under that state's law is not to be limited by the rule announced in Illinois Brick. Because Illinois Brick addressed federal prudential standing issues, individual states are free to adopt a contrary rule under their own laws. Such state statutes and judicial decisions, of course, could not "repeal" the Supreme Court's holding in a literal [*42] sense.

[10] It may be that at this juncture there could be uncertainty as to whether a particular manufacturer or seller of ODD devices constitutes an affiliate or co-conspirator or can only be seen as an independent third party, and therefore it might not be clear whether persons who purchased from such entities are potential members of a direct purchaser class or an indirect purchaser class. Any such questions will have to be resolved eventually, because a person who purchased an ODD device from a particular entity should either be deemed a direct purchaser or an indirect purchaser as to that [*43] particular purchase, but not both.

turn, argue that the Illinois Brick and AGC courts were addressing different sets of policy and legal issues, and that there is no conflict in applying AGC to preclude an indirect purchaser from going forward even in a state that declines to follow Illinois Brick. While defendants may be correct that the issues the Illinois Brick and AGC addressed were not co-extensive, the application of the AGC test they advocate would appear, in effect, to "repeal" the Illinois Brick "repealers," as it is difficult to imagine an indirect purchaser ever having antitrust standing under defendants' formulation.

Defendants' basic contention that AIG may bar claims in circumstances like these has gained some traction in this district. See, e.g., In re Dynamic Random Access Memory (DRAM) Antitrust Litigation ("DRAM I "), 516 F.Supp.2d 1072 (N.D. Cal.2007), and DRAM II, 536 F.Supp.2d 1129 (N.D.Cal. 2008). [*46] The careful and persuasive analysis in In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litigation, 586 F.Supp.2d 1109 (N.D.Cal. 2008), however, warrants the conclusion that plaintiffs' claims here should not be dismissed for lack of antitrust standing under AIG. As explained in more detail in TFT-LCD, this is both because "it is inappropriate to broadly apply the AGC test to plaintiffs' claims under the repealer states' laws in the absence of a clear directive from those states' legislatures or highest courts," and because even if the AGC test were to be applied, it does not conclusively rule out standing, at least at the pleading stage, on facts like those present here. See TFT-LCD, 586 F.Supp.2d at 1123-24.

As in [*47] the case of the direct purchasers, the indirect purchasers' failure to allege a plausible conspiracy at all necessarily means they have failed to allege a conspiracy with the requisite domestic effects to permit jurisdiction over their Sherman Act claims under the FTAIA. Whether the FTAIA will continue to stand as a bar to Sherman Act claims under any plausible conspiracy plaintiffs may ultimately be able to allege will depend on the contours and details of such purported conspiracy.

As plaintiffs point out, on its face, the FTAIA only serves to limit the jurisdictional reach of the Sherman Act. As such, it is not immediately apparent that it would serve as a bar to claims brought under state law in any event. Defendants, however, have advanced an argument that under the Foreign Commerce Clause, the congressional policy expressed in FTAIA should effectively preempt state antitrust law from having a greater reach than that of the Sherman Act. Because defendants' arguments on this point have not been fully developed, at this juncture the FTAIA cannot be said to foreclose plaintiffs' state law claims. Defendants are not precluded, however, from raising the point again in any subsequent [*48] motion practice should it otherwise be appropriate to do so.

4. Nationwide class under California law

The Supreme Court's decision in Phillips Petroleum Co. v. Shutts, 472 U.S. 797, 105 S. Ct. 2965, 86 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1985), precludes nation-wide class actions based on the laws of a particular state where there is a material conflict of law between the forum jurisdiction and that of other states. Here, the fact that plaintiffs do not even attempt to advance claims under the laws of non-"repealer" states highlights the substantial difference between those jurisdictions and California. Non-"repealer" states have effectively endorsed Illinois Brick's prohibition against indirect purchasers recovering antitrust damages.[11] As plaintiffs point out, however, it is not immediately apparent that such states have any particular interest in protecting out-of-state parties such as the defendants here from such suits. The issue calls for a careful analysis under conflict of laws principles. While Shutts provides the foundational rule that nationwide classes are permissible only in the absence of a material conflict, it is too factually dissimilar to provide guidance as to whether a material conflict exists in this instance or not.

[11] Although [*49] not every non-"repealer" state necessarily elected to follow Illinois Brick through a conscious balancing of policy interests, at least some have. See Vacco v. Microsoft Corp., 260 Conn. 59, 793 A.2d 1048, 1059-60 (Conn. 2002) (noting that Connecticut's legislature has declined several times to enact bills that would have provided for an Illinois Brick "repealer").

Because of the number of substantive issues raised in these motions, the parties have not been able to brief the conflict of law issues sufficiently to permit a definitive determination on whether or not a nationwide class under California law can proceed. Accordingly, this prong of the motion to dismiss will be denied, without prejudice to defendants' right to raise the issue again either in a subsequent motion to dismiss or at the class certification stage.

5. Representative resident plaintiffs

Defendants have adequately shown that dismissal of state law claims is appropriate with respect to those jurisdictions in which none of the named class representatives reside, notwithstanding plaintiffs' arguments that it would not contravene standing requirements to allow those claims to proceed. See In re Flash Memory Antitrust Litig., 643 F. Supp. 2d 1133, 1164 (N.D. Cal. 2009) [*50] ("Where, as here, a representative plaintiff is lacking for a particular state, all claims based on that state's laws are subject to dismissal."). Plaintiffs represent that they have found additional class representatives that can be added to represent Hawaii and Nebraska, and they request time to locate representatives for the remaining jurisdictions. In view of the time plaintiffs have already had since defendants raised this issue, the thirty days leave to amend being afforded by this order is sufficient.

6. Other individual state claims

Defendants level a scattershot of additional arguments directed at particular individual state claims. In light of the fact that the entire complaint must be dismissed, the sufficiency of the existing allegations to withstand any or all of these arguments does not warrant further examination. Plaintiffs are advised, however, that in preparing any amended complaint, they should plead with an eye to addressing the arguments defendants have made, whether or not any of them would warrant dismissal, standing alone.

C. Additional motions to dismiss

A series of separate motions have been filed by various defendants arguing, in essence, that regardless of whether [*51] the complaints might be adequate to state a claim against some defendants, they do not state sufficient facts to implicate the moving parties. Several of these motions were each filed by two or more related entities, and one is a joint motion by defendants who contend they were named for no reason other than that they are each a parent or a subsidiary of a more-directly involved defendant.

Even assuming that some or all of these motions have merit with respect to the allegations as the conspiracies as presently pleaded, as plaintiffs are being given leave to amend, it would serve little purpose to engage in a detailed analysis of the current allegations made against each moving party, particularly given that any subsequent complaints may significantly alter the scope of the claimed conspiracy. In pleading any amended complaints, however, plaintiffs should bear in mind that while, as they note, detailed "defendant by defendant" allegations are not required, they nonetheless "must allege that each individual defendant joined the conspiracy and played some role in it because, at the heart of an antitrust conspiracy is an agreement and a conscious decision by each defendant to join it." [*52] In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litigation, supra, 586 F.Supp.2d at 1117 (quoting In re Elec. Carbon Prods. Antitrust Litig., 333 F.Supp.2d 303, 311-12 (D.N.J. 2004). As such, plaintiffs must "include allegations specific to each defendant alleging that defendant's role in the alleged conspiracy." Id.

V. CONCLUSION

The Direct Purchasers' Consolidated Complaint and the Indirect Purchasers' First Amended Complaint are dismissed for the reasons set out above, with leave to amend. Any amended complaints shall be filed within 30 days.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

The U.S. Supreme Court held in Martin v. Franklin Capital Corporation that, absent unusual circumstances, attorneys' fees should not be awarded under 28 U.S.C.S. § 1447(c) when the removing party has an objectively reasonable basis for removal. Pre-Martin, the Fifth Circuit said that the question to be considered in applying § 1447(c) is whether the defendant had objectively reasonable grounds to believe the removal was legally proper.

HN3[] Specific Cases Removed, Federal Questions

The U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Grable stands for the proposition that federal-question jurisdiction can exist in limited circumstances even if only a state-law claim is being asserted by the plaintiff. The Supreme Court defined the factors to be considered in determining whether the removal was proper as follows: Does a state-law claim necessarily raise a stated federal issue, actually disputed and substantial, which a federal forum may entertain without disturbing any congressionally approved balance of federal and state judicial responsibilities.

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Attorney Fees & Expenses > General Overview

HN4[] Costs & Attorney Fees, Attorney Fees & Expenses

In Martin, the U.S. Supreme Court explained that the appropriate test for awarding fees under 28 U.S.C.S. § 1447(c) should recognize the desire to deter removals sought for the purpose of prolonging litigation and imposing costs on the opposing party, while not undermining Congress's basic decision to afford defendants a right to remove as a general matter, when the statutory criteria are satisfied. In Martin, the Supreme Court went on to explain that, in light of the objectives set forth immediately above, the standard for awarding fees should turn on the reasonableness of the removal.

MEMORANDUM OPINION and ORDER

Before the court is the motion of plaintiff, American Airlines, Inc. ("American"), for recovery of costs, expenses, and attorneys' fees under 28 U.S.C. § 1447(c) for being required to pursue a remand after defendants, Sabre, Inc., Sabre Holdings Corp., and Sabre Travel International Limited ("Sabre Travel") (sometimes collectively referred to as "Sabre"), removed to this court the state court action that was carried under the above caption after removal and before remand. For the reasons given in this order, the court has concluded that American should recover from Sabre the amount specified in this memorandum opinion and order as attorneys' [*2] fees under § 1447(c).

I.

Pertinent Historical Facts

A. State Court Activity Before Removal

The removed action was commenced in the District Court of Tarrant County, Texas, 67th Judicial District, in November 2010 by the filing by American against Travelport Inc., of a pleading for declaratory judgment. By an amended pleading filed January 10, 2011, American added Sabre as defendants. The causes of action alleged against Sabre were breach of contract and tortious interference with prospective business relations. American sought a temporary restraining order ("TRO") and temporary injunction against Sabre Travel.

The state court signed an order on January 10, 2011, granting American's request for a TRO and scheduling a hearing on American's request for a temporary injunction for January 24, 2011. On January 13, 2011, American took a nonsuit as to (dismissed) Travelport, Inc. On January 21, 2011, the state court entered an order extending the temporary restraining order and resetting the temporary injunction hearing for February 14, 2011. On January 26, 2011, the court, pursuant to agreement of the parties, ordered the February 14, 2011, hearing on American's request for a temporary injunction [*3] canceled, and that all discovery and pleading deadlines be abated until June 1, 2011.

On June 8, 2011, Sabre filed their answer to American's amended pleading and their counterclaim against American asserting two breach of contract counts. On June 14, 2011, the state court ordered the action restyled "American Airlines, Inc. v. Sabre, Inc., Sabre Holdings, Inc., and Sabre Travel International Limited." On June 23, 2011, American filed its second amended pleading, again naming Sabre as defendants. The causes of action alleged were breach of contract, tortious interference with prospective business relations, and for declaratory relief related to what is referred to in the pleading as an Amended PCA. On July 1, 2011, American filed its answer to Sabre's counterclaim.

On July 8, 2011, American filed its third amended pleading, again naming Sabre as defendants, alleging causes of action against Sabre for breach of contract, tortious interference with prospective business relations, and monopolization in violation of the Texas Free Enterprise and Antitrust Act of 1983 ("TFEAA"), and seeking declaratory relief against Sabre.

On July 13, 2011, American filed motions to compel Sabre to respond [*4] to a previously served request for production of documents and asking the state court to require expedited discovery for the hearing on American's request for temporary-injunction, which the state court had set for August 22, 2011. Also on July 13, American notified Sabre that its motions for expedited discovery, for a temporary injunction hearing, and to compel production of documents were to be heard at 2:00 p.m. on July 18, 2011, and that the hearing on American's application for temporary injunction was scheduled to begin at 9:30 a.m. on August 22, 2011.

B. The Removal and Related Activity by Sabre

Sabre filed its notice of removal on the morning of July 18, 2011, a few hours before the state court hearing on American's motions for expedited discovery, for the temporary injunction hearing, and to compel production of documents was scheduled to begin.

Later in the day on July 18 Sabre filed a motion in an action pending on the docket of the Honorable Terry R. Means, the other district judge presiding in the Fort Worth Division, urging Judge Means to consolidate the removed action into his Case No. 4:11-CV-244-Y, styled "American Airlines, Inc., Plaintiff, v. Travelport Limited, Travelport, [*5] L.P., Travelport, Orbitz Worldwide, LLC, Sabre Inc., Sabre Holdings Corp., Sabre Travel International Limited, Defendants." [1] The ground of the motion was that the action pending before Judge Means and the removed action involved common questions of law and fact regarding identical issues of federal antitrust law, and that consolidation would promote the just and efficient conduct of the litigation by-preventing duplicative actions from proceeding in multiple forums. Sabre explained in its motion that the motion was being filed in Judge Means's case instead of the removed action because, according to Sabre, Judge Means's action was the first-filed of the two

[1] Contemporaneously with the filing of the notice of removal, Sabre filed a Notice of Related Case notifying the court of the pendency of the action on the docket of Judge Means.

actions, with the consequence that, under Fifth Circuit authority, Judge Means was the one to determine whether there would be a consolidation. No hearing was sought on the motion. The next morning, July 19, Sabre filed a notice in the removed action of its filing of the motion to consolidate.

C. The Emergency Motion to Remand

At around noon on July 19, 2011, [*6] American filed its emergency motion to remand and alternative motion to consolidate. American called the court's attention in the emergency motion to the timing of the removal from state court, and the extent to which the removal disrupted the state court activities. The court interpreted the motion, which requested a ruling without a hearing, to present a legitimate need for an immediate remand if the removal was improper.

As an alternative to be considered if the court were to conclude that the case should not be remanded, American argued that any consolidation of the removed action with the one pending before Judge Means should be ordered by the undersigned inasmuch as the removed action would be viewed under applicable law to be the first-filed action. [2]

D. Actions Taken by the Court in Response to the Emergency Motion to Remand

Even though the court tentatively concluded from the papers before it that the emergency motion to remand had merit, instead of ruling on the motion without a hearing, the court arranged for a telephone conference/hearing on the afternoon of July 19, 2011. Lead counsel for American, along with another attorney from his firm, and lead counsel for Sabre, were on the line at the outset. After the court explained its tentative conclusion that there should be a remand, the court invited lead counsel for Sabre to express his views in the event there was something the court might have overlooked. When lead counsel made known that he was not prepared to discuss the legal basis for Sabre's removal of the action and suggested that another lawyer in his office was the one who had been working on the research, he arranged for the other lawyer to enter into the conversation.

The other lawyer reiterated the recitation in [*8] the notice of removal that Sabre took the position that removal was proper under the Supreme Court's ruling in Grable & Sons Metal Products, Inc. v. Darue Engineering & Manufacturing, 545 U.S. 308, 125 S. Ct. 2363, 162 L. Ed. 2d 257 (2005). He emphasized that Sabre was of the belief that the facts in the removed action satisfied the three-part test expressed by the Supreme Court at page 314 of the Grable opinion. Because the court already had concluded that the Grable opinion did not justify Sabre's removal of the action, the court informed the parties that the action was being remanded to the state court. Later in the afternoon of July 19, the court signed an order and final judgment of remand, remanding the action to the state court from which it was removed.

E. The Motion for Attorneys' Fees and Sabre's Response

Plaintiff requested in its emergency motion to remand that it be awarded fees and costs incurred as a result of the removal. Rather than to act on that request, by an order signed July 20, 2011, the court gave American until July 25, 2011, to file a formal motion asking for an award of fees and costs if American wished to pursue that matter further. Sabre was given until July 27, 2011, to file a response to [*9] the motion.

On July 25, American filed its motion asking for an award of $18,515.00 in costs, expenses, and attorneys' fees against Sabre under 28 U.S.C. § 1447(c). The ground of American's motion was that Sabre lacked an objectively reasonable basis for removal of the action from state court. The motion was supported by an appendix containing affidavits and itemizations concerning the work done by American's attorneys, per-hour billing rates for the attorneys doing the work, and total fees.

[2] Case No. 4:11-CV-244-Y was initiated on April 12, 2011, by American's filing of a complaint naming three defendants. None of the Sabre companies was named. Sabre filed a motion to intervene in the action on June 1, 2011. By an amended complaint filed June 9, 2011, American added Sabre as defendants. Among other things, American complained in the amended complaint of anti-competitive conduct of Sabre and the other defendants in violation [*7] of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1-2. On July 13, 2011, Sabre filed a motion to dismiss American's complaint, as amended, for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted.

Sabre timely responded to plaintiff's motion, maintaining, as it had before, that the Grable case provided justification for its decision to file the notice of removal, and that, therefore, Sabre's decision to remove was not objectively unreasonable. American's reply to Sabre's opposition added little substance to the contents of its motion, other than perhaps to inform the court of the effect on the state court action of the expeditious remand.

II.

Analysis

HN1[] The Supreme Court held in Martin v. Franklin Capital Corp. that, absent unusual circumstances, attorneys' fees should not be awarded under 28 U.S.C. § 1447(c) when the removing party has an objectively reasonable basis for removal. 546 U.S. 132, 136, 126 S. Ct. 704, 163 L. Ed. 2d 547 (2005). [*10] Pre-Martin, the Fifth Circuit said that the question to be considered "in applying § 1447(c) is whether the defendant had objectively reasonable grounds to believe the removal was legally proper." Valdes v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 199 F.3d 290, 293 (5th Cir. 2000).

The first step in Sabre's attempted justification for the removal is to note that in the removed action American asserted a cause of action under the TFEAA, codified in chapter 15 of the Texas Business and Commerce Code. The next step is to call the court's attention to the provisions of section 15.04 of the Texas Business and Commerce Code, which reads, in pertinent part, as follows:

> HN2[] The purpose of [the TFEAA] is to maintain and promote economic competition in trade and commerce occurring wholly or partly within the State of Texas and to provide the benefits of that competition to consumers in the state. The provisions of [the TFEAA] shall be construed to accomplish this purpose and shall be construed in harmony with federal judicial interpretations of comparable federal antitrust statutes to the extent consistent with this purpose.

Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 15.04 (West 2011) (emphasis added). The final steps are to call [*11] the court's attention to the Supreme Court's holding in Grable, and to contend that the Grable holding justifies removal of the state court action inasmuch as American asserted a TFEAA cause of action against Sabre in the removed action. The court was not persuaded by Sabre's attempted justification when deciding the motion to remand, nor is the court any more persuaded that such justification for removal was objectively reasonable.

HN3[] Grable stands for the proposition that federal-question jurisdiction can exist in limited circumstances even if only a state-law claim is being asserted by the plaintiff. In Grable, an essential element of the plaintiff's quiet title claim was whether the Internal Revenue Service had given the plaintiff adequate notice, as defined by the Internal Revenue Code, that it was seizing his property to satisfy a federal tax delinquency. 545 U.S. at 310-11, 315. Thus, "the claim of title depended on the interpretation of the notice statute in the federal tax law." Id. at 311. That was the basis for the removal of the state court action to the federal court. Id.

The Supreme Court defined the factors to be considered in determining whether the removal was proper as [*12] follows:

> [D]oes a state-law claim necessarily raise a stated federal issue, actually disputed and substantial, which a federal forum may entertain without disturbing any congressionally approved balance of federal and state judicial responsibilities.

Id. at 314. Explaining why those factors were present in Grable, the Court reasoned:

> This case warrants federal jurisdiction. Grable's state complaint must specify the facts establishing the superiority of [its] claim, and Grable has premised its superior title claim on a failure by the IRS to give it > adequate notice, as defined by federal law. Whether Grable was given notice within the meaning of the federal statute is thus an essential element of its quiet title claim, and the meaning of the federal statute is actually in dispute; it appears to be the only legal or factual issue contested in the case. The meaning of the federal tax provision is an important issue of federal law that sensibly belongs in a federal court. The Government has a strong interest in the prompt and certain collection of delinquent taxes, and the ability of the IRS to satisfy its claims from the property of delinquents requires clear terms of notice to allow buyers [*13] like Darue to satisfy themselves that the Service has touched the bases necessary for good title. The Government thus has a direct interest in the availability of a federal forum to vindicate its own administrative action, and buyers (as well as tax delinquents) may find it valuable to come before judges used to federal tax matters. Finally, because it will be the rare state title case that raises a contested matter of federal law, federal jurisdiction to resolve genuine disagreement over federal tax title provisions will portend only a microscopic effect on the federal-state division of labor.

Id. at 314-15 (internal citations and quotation marks omitted). There is no similarity in principle or otherwise between the facts that led to the Grable ruling of federal-question jurisdiction and the facts confronting Sabre when it gave its notice of removal.

In Grdable, the federal issue the state court had to decide was clearly defined and was an essential element of plaintiff's state court cause of action. In contrast, here the state court is not obligated to decide any federal issue, but merely is to construe the TFEAA "in harmony with federal judicial interpretations of comparable federal [*14] antitrust statutes to the extent consistent" with the purpose of the TFEAA. Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 15.04. The unreasonableness of Sabre's removal contention becomes obvious when one recognizes that, if Sabre were correct, every cause of action brought in state court under the TFEAA would automatically be removable to federal court. [3]

The absurdity of the contention would not stop [*15] there. If Sabre were correct, most employment discrimination cases brought in a Texas state court based solely on Texas anti-discrimination statutes would arguably be removable to federal court inasmuch as Texas employment discrimination decisions are guided by both state law and federal precedent, and "federal law may be applied in the absence of state decision of law." See Murphy v. Uncle Ben's, Inc., 168 F.3d 734, 739 (5th Cir. 1999); see also Tex. Lab. Code Ann. § 21.001 (1)-(3) (West 2006); NME Hosps., Inc. v. Rennels, 994 S.W.2d 142, 144 (Tex. 1999). And, if Sabre were correct, federal courts could be burdened with removals from state courts of tort actions based on state-law causes of action in which the plaintiff is relying on a federally mandated standard of conduct to establish fault on the part of the defendant. [4] Not only that, if Grable meant what Sabre says it does, every time a case filed in state court presents a cause of action the outcome of which turns on the interpretation of a rule of the Texas Rules of Evidence, a removability issue could well be presented because "in the construction of the Texas rules, persuasive value is accorded the federal decisions interpreting [*16] the federal rules." Callaway v. State, 818 S.W.2d 816, 831 (Tex. App.—Amarillo 1991, pet. ref'd);

[3] In Waste Control Specialists v. Envirocare, 199 F.3d 781 (5th Cir.), modified in part, 207 F.3d 225 (5th Cir. 2000), the Fifth Circuit reversed the district court's denial of a motion to remand an action brought in state court under the TFEAA. The Fifth Circuit explained:

> Although WCS could have alleged a federal cause of action in its state petition, it did not. It filed a complaint in state court alleging wholly state claims in a non-preempted field. Its choice is entitled to respect and precluded removing the case to federal court absent circumstances not presented here.

Id. at 784. In addition to ordering the district court to remand the action, the Fifth Circuit ordered the district court to award the plaintiff costs and fees pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1447(c) upon submission of proper proof. Id. at 788.

[4] In Bennett v. Southwest Airlines Co., 484 F.3d 907, 912 (7th Cir. 2007), the Seventh Circuit in effect rejected the line of reasoning advanced by Grable, saying "[t]hat some standards of care used in tort litigation come from federal law does not make the tort claim one 'arising under' federal law."

accord Rodda v. State, 745 S.W.2d 415, 418 (Tex. App.—Houston [14th Dist.] 1988, pet. ref'd). The examples the court has given are only a few that readily come to mind. Undoubtedly there are many more.

The first of the three factors mentioned in Grable is "does a state-law claim necessarily raise a stated federal issue." 545 U.S. at 314. Sabre has not, and cannot, define any "stated federal issue" raised by American's state-law cause of action under the TFEAA. No reasonable argument can be made that the mere fact that a federal standard is to be referenced by a state court in determining whether there has been a state-law violation causes a state-law claim to "necessarily raise a stated federal issue." Id. The issue remains a state-law issue throughout, which might or might not be resolved by [*17] reference to federal law. There is no way to determine at the removal stage for certain whether federal law will be involved, nor, if it is involved, the nature and extent of its involvement.

Moreover, Sabre has not, and cannot, point to any federal issue that would qualify as satisfying the "actually disputed and substantial" factor expressed in Grable. Id. As the Fifth Circuit explained in New Orleans & Gulf Coast Railway Co. v. Barrois, 533 F.3d 321, 328 (5th Cir. 2008), in the absence of a specific argument that attempts to address the standard outlined in Grable, the court cannot conclude that any state court action raises a significant federal issue sufficient to establish federal-question jurisdiction. No reasonable argument can be made that this second Grable factor can be satisfied in this instance. Without a definition of a stated federal issue raised by American's cause of action, there is no way to say whether it is or is not "actually disputed and substantial."

Finally, referring to the third Grable factor, there is no reasonable argument that giving the federal court subject-matter jurisdiction over American's TFEAA claim would not disturb any congressionally approved balance [*18] of federal and state judicial responsibilities. Obviously, such a balance would be disturbed considering the wide-ranging effect that adoption of Sabre's view of things would have on congressionally approved balance of federal and state judicial responsibilities. Furthermore, no reasonable argument can be made that the government has a strong interest in the outcome of a cause of action brought under the TFEAA, including the matter of whether a state court has given proper weight to federal law. Sabre makes no reasoned argument that the government has a direct interest in the availability of a federal forum in which litigants can resolve causes of action asserted under the TFEAA. Particularly is this so when there has been no identification of any specific federal issue that might be raised in the litigation.

Sabre cites in its opposition to a number of district court cases denying an award of fees under § 1447(c) when the basis for the improper removal was reliance on Grable. Opp'n to Mot. for Fees at 4-5. Those cases cut more than one way. In virtually every one of those cases, the reliance by the removing party on Grable had a better chance at objective reasonableness than Sabre's [*19] reliance on Grable in this case. And, those cases appear to the court to provide strong authority that, by the time Sabre chose to invoke Grable in support of its removal of American's state-law case, any reasonable party would have known that the reliance was inappropriate.

Considering the exigencies created from Sabre's standpoint by the upcoming state court hearings, perhaps Sabre's conduct might be viewed to have been subjectively reasonable in the sense that perhaps the potential gain Sabre had from the removal more than offset in their minds any risk they might have incurred by a wrongful removal. [5] But the standard is objective reasonableness; and, the court cannot find that Sabre's conduct was objectively reasonable. The court makes the affirmative finding that Sabre's removal of American's state court action was objectively unreasonable. [6]

HN4[] In Martin, the Supreme Court explained:

[5] In Valdes v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., the Fifth Circuit said: "To be sure, the district court may award fees even if removal is made in subjective good faith." 199 F.3d 290, 292 (5th Cir. 2000).

[6] Sabre's argument that the fact that counsel for American anticipated the possibility that Sabre might seek a removal of the action provides evidence [*20] of the objective reasonableness of the removal is not persuasive. The court has no way of knowing why counsel for American anticipated Sabre's conduct, but the court is satisfied that whatever caused them to have that foresight does not cause Sabre's removal conduct to be objectively reasonable.

> The appropriate test for awarding fees under § 1447(c) should recognize the desire to deter removals sought for the purpose of prolonging litigation and imposing costs on the opposing party, while not undermining Congress' basic decision to afford defendants a right to remove as a general matter, when the statutory criteria are satisfied.

546 U.S. at 140. The court has applied that test, and finds that it justifies, indeed compels, an award of attorneys' fees against Sabre. In Martin, the Supreme Court went on to explain that, in light of the objectives set forth immediately above, "the standard for awarding fees should turn on the reasonableness of the removal." In this instance, the removal was not reasonable.

For the reasons stated above, the court has concluded that American should receive an award of attorneys' fees under § 1447 (c). However, the court [*21] is unwilling to award the full $18,515.00 amount sought by American. The court is eliminating from consideration the fees that were incurred in anticipation of the removal, amounting to $2,920.00. While those fees probably were reasonable and necessary for the representation of American, § 1447(c) contemplates an award for costs, expenses, and attorneys' fees "incurred as a result of the removal." 28 U.S.C. § 1447(c). Consequently, the court cannot make an award of attorneys' fees incurred before the removal.

While there appears to be duplication of effort between the attorneys as to some of the legal work done after the removal, when the court takes into account the time pressure placed on American's counsel to promptly respond by an emergency motion to remand and alternative motion to consolidate, the court has concluded that what might appear to be duplication of effort at first blush probably was a reasonable utilization of attorney resources that took into account the need for an immediate remand in order to avoid complete disruption of the orderly handling by the state court of the removed action. Therefore, the court has concluded that all other charges listed and verified in [*22] the items contained in the appendix in support of American's motion should be awarded. Those items total $15,595.00. The court finds that such amount constitutes reasonable attorneys' fees necessarily-incurred as a result of the removal.

III.

Order

Therefore,

The court ORDERS that American have and recover from Sabre, Inc., Sabre Holdings Corp., and Sabre Travel International Limited, jointly and severally, $15,595.00 as reasonable attorneys' fees incurred by American as a result of Sabre's removal of the state court action from state court to this court.

HN3[] Offers, Definite Terms

Unilateral understandings are not enough to give rise to an enforceable oral contract in Illinois. A feeling of certainty that a party in position to contract would surely agree to terms present in the situation disclosed does not evoke a contract from a plausible situation for contract. The agreement must actually be made by the parties to the alleged contract. It must be shown that those parties selected and concurred in the terms of the contract, or no contract exists. In order for there to be a contract between parties, there must be a meeting of the minds or mutual assent as to the terms of the contract.

HN17[] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

Proof of a violation under § 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(a), requires (1) a difference in price, (2) in sales to two buyers purchasing from a single seller, (3) involving commodities, (4) of like grade and quality, (5) that may injure competition. The "competitive injury" prong of this showing may be inferred from evidence that a favored competitor received significantly better prices over an extended period of time; the hallmark of such injury is the diversion of sales or profits from a disfavored purchaser to a favored purchaser.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > Primary Line Injuries

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > Secondary & Tertiary Line Injuries

HN18[] Competitive Injuries, Primary Line Injuries

There are three categories of competitive injury that may give rise to Robinson-Patman Act claims: primary line, secondary line, and tertiary line. Primary-line cases involve price discrimination that injures competition at the level of the discriminating seller and its direct competitors. Secondary-line cases like this one involve price discrimination that injures competition among customers of the discriminating seller. Tertiary-line cases involve injury to competition among the customers of the differently treated purchasers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > General Overview

HN19[] Remedies, Damages

Mere demonstration of a competitive injury and the other elements of a violation does not mean that a disfavored purchaser has been actually "injured" within the meaning of § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15. Plaintiffs seeking to recover treble damages pursuant to § 15 must prove more than a violation of § 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(a), since such proof establishes only that injury may result. The burden of showing damages is not unduly rigorous, but plaintiffs must present some evidence of injury attributable to the price discrimination. If there has been a violation of the Robinson-Patman Act, a petitioner is not excused from its burden of proving antitrust injury and damages. It is simply that once a violation is established, that burden is to some extent lightened.

Opinion

[*509] TINDER, Circuit Judge. The relationship between Dynegy Marketing and Trade ("Dynegy"), a natural gas supplier, and Multiut Corporation, a natural gas distributor headed by Nachshon Draiman, has become as volatile as the commodity in which they once dealt. Dynegy and Multiut adhered to their written contract for a time, but their relationship unraveled in the face of a failed acquisition, several million dollars' worth of unpaid invoices, and frequent disputes over pricing, which were later inflamed by allegations that Dynegy [2] and other natural gas suppliers were manipulating the indices on which natural gas price quotes are based. When Multiut's outstanding bills remained unpaid notwithstanding Draiman's personal guaranty, Dynegy cut off Multiut's gas supply and brought suit, alleging breach of contract and guaranty as well as fraudulent transfer claims. Multiut and Draiman fired back with six counterclaims, which included a number of contract-related claims and a Robinson-Patman antitrust claim. After contentious discovery, Dynegy moved for summary judgment on its contract and guaranty [*510] claims and all of the defendants' counterclaims. Multiut and Draiman tried to oppose summary judgment by submitting a declaration from Draiman, but the district court excluded the declaration as a sanction for Multiut's discovery violations. The district court granted Dynegy's summary judgment motion and ultimately issued a Rule 54(b) judgment on the contract and guaranty claims and the counterclaims. Multiut and Draiman filed two motions to reconsider, but the district court denied both motions and rejected their belated submission of affidavits relating to the alleged price index manipulation. Multiut and Draiman challenge [3] nine of the district court's rulings. We affirm in full.

I. Background

Draiman solely owns and controls Multiut, an Illinois corporation that acts as a middleman between utility providers and end-users. Multiut obtains wholesale quantities of natural gas from national suppliers and allocates the gas to its smaller local customers. Dynegy, a Colorado partnership that markets energy products, is the main supplier from which Multiut obtained gas. Multiut first established a contractual relationship with Dynegy's predecessor-in-interest, Natural Gas Clearinghouse, in 1988. In 1994, Multiut and Dynegy entered into a Natural Gas Sales Agreement ("the agreement"). (Technically, Multiut entered into the agreement with Natural Gas Clearinghouse, but the parties agree that Dynegy, as Natural Gas Clearinghouse's successor, is bound by the agreement.) Pursuant to the agreement, Multiut would contact Dynegy periodically and make "nominations" of natural gas, measured in units called "therms." Dynegy would quote Multiut a price, based on an applicable natural gas index, and if Multiut accepted the price Dynegy would pipe the gas to an agreed-upon delivery point and send monthly invoices to Multiut, [4] which was obligated to pay for the gas delivered. Its obligation was backstopped both by an interest provision in the agreement and a separate personal guaranty Draiman executed in 1995. The parties were supposed to formally memorialize their transactions by completing forms called "Exhibit Bs," but in practice the invoices were typically the only written records.

* The Honorable David R. Herndon, Chief Judge of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Illinois, sitting by designation.

The parties' arrangement worked well enough that Dynegy expressed an interest in acquiring Multiut in 1997. The parties signed a confidentiality agreement and conducted due diligence, but Dynegy ultimately bowed out of the deal. It instead created a joint venture, Nicor Energy, with one of Multiut's competitors, Nicor, Inc. Dynegy began providing natural gas to Nicor Energy in 1998, which Multiut and Draiman pinpoint as the beginning of the demise of the Dynegy-Multiut relationship. Multiut claims that Dynegy gave Nicor Energy sweetheart pricing, in violation not only of the antitrust laws but also of an alleged oral contract promising Multiut "most-favored nations" or "best" pricing.

Notwithstanding its apparent dissatisfaction with Dynegy and Nicor Energy, Multiut continued buying gas almost exclusively from Dynegy and making [5] "progress payments" toward its balance owed. Multiut hit a few financial bumps, however, and by December 2000 owed Dynegy at least $1,620,178 in payments and interest. Multiut's bookkeepers met with representatives from Dynegy in March 2001 and agreed that Dynegy's calculation of the arrearage was accurate despite Dynegy's failure to include interest on Multiut's invoices during most of 1999 and 2000. From roughly that point forward, Dynegy refused to offer Multiut monthly price quotes; to mitigate its risk, it would agree [*511] only to provide Multiut gas on a day-to-day basis. Multiut preferred longer-term, fixed-price deals, however, so as to better hedge its own risk against fluctuating energy prices and manage customers with whom it had entered into fixed-price contracts. It made repeated efforts to persuade Dynegy to offer it longer-term price guarantees. In June 2001, Draiman sent Dynegy an unsolicited fax stating, "This is to confirm the Multiut order for 12 months. A total of 8 million therms (800,000 MMBTU's) @ __." Dynegy did not send a return fax, but Draiman testified that he spoke with Dynegy employee Mark Ludwig and gleaned that Multiut "would have to wait a little bit of [6] time to bring some of the balance down" before fixed pricing would be available.

Draiman again sought fixed pricing at a September 2001 meeting with Dynegy employees Ludwig and Pete Pavluk. According to Draiman, Pavluk and Ludwig told him they would "work on" locking-in a fixed price, or that they "would get it done." They also asked him to develop a payment schedule to address Multiut's growing arrearage. By letter dated September 17, 2001, Draiman proposed a tentative payment schedule and added for Dynegy's review "a report of customers on Fixed Cost contracts." Draiman noted that these customers were committed to paying Multiut an average of 47.5 cents per therm and expressed interest in acquiring gas from Dynegy at a fixed price of 30 cents per therm to "insure [Multiut] an additional annual profit of 2,000,000." Dynegy responded by letter dated October 4, 2001, explaining that its relationship with Multiut had become "one of concern" and requested a "detailed formal payment plan by no later than Wednesday, October 10, 2001." It did not mention Draiman's fixed-price proposal. Draiman testified that he nonetheless relied on Ludwig and Pavluk's assurances and did not seek out alternative [7] sources of gas for Multiut.

Though it proposed a payment plan (on October 12), Multiut continued to fall further behind in its payments as wholesale natural gas prices climbed above the prices it was receiving from its own fixed-price customers. Dynegy kept the gas flowing (and arrearage growing) for another year but shut off the spigot in December 2002 after filing suit against Multiut and guarantor Draiman.

Multiut and Draiman responded by denying Dynegy's allegations and raising affirmative defenses to its breach of contract and breach of guaranty claims. They also filed a bevy of counterclaims against Dynegy. Those relevant here alleged that Dynegy breached the 1997 confidentiality agreement by "inevitably disclosing" to Nicor Energy valuable information it had obtained from Multiut; breached an oral agreement to supply gas at fixed prices; breached an implied agreement not to charge interest; breached an oral agreement to offer "most favored nations" pricing; and violated the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13(a), by offering lower gas prices to Multiut's competitors.

In March 2003, the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) issued a lengthy report summarizing its year-long [8] investigation of energy markets in the western United States. See Staff of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, Final Report on Price Manipulation in Western Markets (2003), available at http://www.ferc.gov/industries/ electric/indus-act/wec.asp ("FERC report"). According to the FERC report, which was commissioned to "determine whether and, if so, the extent to which California and Western energy markets were manipulated during 2000 and 2001," id. at ES-1, "[d]ysfunctions in the natural gas market appear to stem, at least in part, from [*512] efforts to manipulate price indices compiled by trade publications," id. Dynegy was one of many energy firms implicated in the alleged price index manipulation. The FERC report quoted several Dynegy employees, who stated they felt pressured to report inflated volumes or prices to the industry-produced indices, see id. at III-5, which were the bases for the prices Dynegy and other suppliers charged their customers, including Multiut. The FERC report highlighted Dynegy's alleged manipulations in Oregon and San Francisco, but did not mention Dynegy in connection with "the Great Lakes" or Chicago. See id. at III-54.

After the FERC report became public, [9] Multiut sought in discovery information and documents regarding Dynegy's calculation and reporting of price index information. Dynegy opposed its efforts. The magistrate judge overseeing discovery determined that Dynegy was not required to supplement its responses to these requests because "Multiut has not provided any basis for the assertion that Dynegy could independently influence the index price."

Dynegy eventually moved for summary judgment on Multiut and Draiman's counterclaims and its own breach of contract and guaranty claims. (Dynegy's fraudulent transfer and breach of fiduciary duty claims were not included in the summary judgment motion and are not part of this appeal.) As part of their response to Dynegy's statement of undisputed facts, Multiut and Draiman submitted for the district court's consideration, notwithstanding its discovery rulings, excerpts from the FERC report, documents from a related criminal proceeding against one of Dynegy's former traders, and a lengthy declaration by Draiman. The declaration from Draiman contained Multiut and Draiman's first and only estimates of Multiut's lost profits and some of its other alleged damages.

Pointing to the untimeliness [10] of the Draiman declaration and Multiut's failure to comply with Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(1)(A)(iii) & (e), which require parties to disclose and supplement "a computation of each category of damages," Dynegy argued that the declaration should be excluded pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(1). The district court agreed and excluded the declaration in its entirety. It also granted in full Dynegy's motion for summary judgment. Draiman and Multiut moved for reconsideration. In their motion, they asserted that the "centerpiece" of their opposition to the breach of contract claim was "evidence that Dynegy had systematically overcharged Multiut for its natural gas purchases due to its complicity in a nationwide conspiracy to inflate gas index prices" and argued that the price manipulation evidence was relevant. They also challenged Dynegy's computation of damages, which was based on an expert's review and analysis of invoices and payment records largely produced by Multiut. Dynegy responded with a Rule 54(b) motion for entry of final judgment on the claims and counterclaims resolved by the summary judgment order.

After considering briefing on both motions, the district court denied Multiut's motion [11] and granted Dynegy's. The district court found that reconsideration was not appropriate because Multiut had done little more than rehash its previously rejected arguments. The district court also rejected for want of evidence Multiut's assertion that the price index manipulation in California and other western states "carried over" into the Chicago market, though it recognized that such a conclusion was "not illogical." The district court granted Dynegy's Rule 54(b) motion after finding that the fraudulent transfer claims were legally and factually distinct from the [*513] other claims and that there was no just reason for delay.

Multiut and Draiman promptly appealed. We dismissed the appeal for lack of jurisdiction, however, because the district court's judgment did not specify the amount of pre-judgment interest the defendants owed and was therefore not final. See Osterneck v. Ernst & Whinney, 489 U.S. 169, 175-76, 109 S. Ct. 987, 103 L. Ed. 2d 146 (1989). The case therefore returned to the district court, whereupon Dynegy filed a Rule 60(a) motion to amend the judgment to include interest calculated pursuant to a formula in the agreement. Multiut and Draiman retorted that any interest due should be calculated pursuant to [12] an Illinois statutory provision. They also filed a second motion to reconsider the grant of summary judgment and moved to supplement the record with affidavits from former Dynegy employee Jeffrey Hornback and economist Michael Harris. Multiut and Draiman argued that these affidavits, which they obtained in connection with ongoing multi-district litigation prompted by the FERC report, see In re W. States Wholesale Natural Gas Antitrust Litig., 290 F. Supp. 2d 1376 (J.P.M.L. 2003), supported their contention that the prices Dynegy charged for natural gas were "artificially influenced or contaminated by plaintiff's wrongful conduct."

The district court denied the defendants' second motion for reconsideration. It cited finality concerns as well as hesitation to "construe [the remand order from the Seventh Circuit] as an open invitation to allow the parties to delve back into the substantive issues of the case." The district court granted Dynegy's Rule 60(a) motion to amend the judgment and sided with Dynegy as to the method by which the interest should be computed. The district court entered judgment for Dynegy, awarding it $8,929,449 in pre-judgment interest on top of its damages of $13,693,943.18, [13] for a total of $22,623,392.18. Multiut and Draiman promptly appealed.

II. Discussion

Multiut and Draiman have presented nine issues for our consideration, disregarding our repeated counsel that "the equivalent of a laser light show of claims may be so distracting as to disturb our vision and confound our analysis." United States v. Lathrop, 634 F.3d 931, 936 (7th Cir. 2011) (collecting cases), petition for cert. filed, No. 10-11044 (U.S. June 13, 2011) [cert. denied, 181 L. Ed. 2d 111 (2011)]; see also Cole v. Comm'r, 637 F.3d 767, 772 (7th Cir. 2011) (noting that the HN1[] "scattergun approach" generally does not serve appellants well). Not only does the "kitchen sink" approach to briefing cause distraction and confusion, it also "consumes space that should be devoted to developing the arguments with some promise." Howard v. Gramley, 225 F.3d 784, 791 (7th Cir. 2000). We focus on the minimally developed claims as best we can, grouping like contentions where possible and addressing the many claims of error in turn.

A. Exclusion of Draiman Declaration

As part of their response to Dynegy's summary judgment motion, Multiut and Draiman submitted a seventeen-page declaration by Draiman. They submitted the declaration many months after [14] discovery closed, but relied on it to prove the damages they allegedly suffered at Dynegy's hand. The district court declined to consider the declaration "because Multiut failed to make timely disclosures [of its computation of damages] during discovery." It reasoned, "Multiut has not provided any explanation for its failure to make earlier disclosures, and to allow it to make late disclosures now, after a lengthy discovery process, would prejudice Dynegy." [*514] Multiut and Draiman disagree with this reasoning. They contend that their failure to produce the Draiman declaration more expediently was harmless because the information it contained was otherwise made available to Dynegy.

HN2[] Rule 26(a)(1)(A)(iii) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure requires litigants to disclose to one another "a computation of each category of damages claimed by the disclosing party—who must also make available . . . the documents or other evidentiary material . . . on which each computation is based, including materials bearing on the nature and extent of injuries suffered." Rule 26(e)(1) requires parties to supplement their initial disclosures as more information becomes available to them. If a party does not [15] follow these rules, "the party is not allowed to use that information . . . to supply evidence on a motion, at a hearing, or at a trial, unless the failure was substantially justified or was harmless." Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(1). Whether a failure to comply with Rule 26(a) or (e) is substantially justified, harmless, or warrants sanctions is left to the broad discretion of the district court. David v. Caterpillar, Inc., 324 F.3d 851, 857 (7th Cir. 2003); cf. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c)(1)(A)-(C) (listing sanctions courts may impose). "[W]e review all discovery sanctions for abuse of discretion and will uphold a district court's decision so long as it could be considered reasonable." Collins v. Illinois, 554 F.3d 693, 696 (7th Cir. 2009).

Multiut and Draiman do not challenge the district court's conclusion that they violated Rule 26, nor do they contend that they were justified in doing so. They argue only that their violation should be excused because it was harmless: they assert that information relating to damages contained in the declaration was made available to Dynegy "in light of the exhaustive documentation produced by Multiut during discovery and the extensive deposition testimony of [16] Draiman and [expert] James Alerding on the subject of damages." This argument cannot carry the day logically (if the information contained in the declaration is already in the record, then there should be no problem with the district court's decision to exclude the declaration) or legally.

Multiut and Draiman started off discovery on the right foot by providing Dynegy with rough estimates of the damages associated with their counterclaims in their original disclosures. At that time, they averred, "As a result of Dynegy's breach of an agreement to supply gas at a fixed price, Multiut has sustained damages in an amount that Multiut believes exceeds $6 million. Multiut will supplement with a computation of these damages when they are ascertained through the course of continuing discovery." They made a similar statement with respect to their breach of confidentiality agreement counterclaim, for which they estimated at least $1 million in damages. But even after Dynegy filed several motions to compel and repeatedly sought (and occasionally obtained) sanctions, Multiut and Draiman failed to disclose how they arrived at those numbers. Even if we fully credit the defendants' contention that [17] the numerical information in Draiman's declaration was duplicative of that already disclosed in spreadsheet form, nothing in the record—not even Draiman's declaration— shines light into the black box of their damages calculation process. A reasonable district court could and did conclude that exclusion of the declaration, which contained the only ballpark estimates of Multiut's lost profits and alleged credits due, was an appropriate sanction for the defendants' continued dilatory and opaque behavior. Without an idea of where the defendants' numbers were coming [*515] from, Dynegy was unable to investigate and raise arguments against the claimed damages; the district court did not err in concluding the omissions were not harmless.

B. Breach of Oral & Implied Contract Counterclaims

Multiut and Draiman assert that the relationship between Dynegy and Multiut ran deeper than the pages of their written agreement. According to Multiut and Draiman, Dynegy and Multiut were also bound by three unwritten contracts: two oral and one implied in fact. Pursuant to the first alleged oral contract, Dynegy agreed to offer Multiut "most-favored-nations" pricing. That is, it agreed to charge Multiut "(i) a price [18] equal to or 1/2 cent per therm higher than the index price, or (ii) the lowest price contemporaneously being charged by Dynegy to any of Multiut's competitors." Pursuant to the second alleged oral contract, Dynegy agreed to lock-in the price it charged Multiut for gas such that the fixed price Multiut was obligated to pay Dynegy was less than the fixed prices Multiut's customers were obligated to pay it. Pursuant to the alleged implied-in-fact agreement, Dynegy implicitly agreed to waive Multiut's obligation to pay interest on its arrearage, as evidenced by the omission of interest charges from several months' worth of invoices. The district court concluded that there was no evidence establishing the existence of the alleged agreements and granted summary judgment in Dynegy's favor on all three counterclaims. We review these decisions de novo, drawing every reasonable inference in Multiut and Draiman's favor. E.g., India Breweries, Inc. v. Miller Brewing Co., 612 F.3d 651, 658 (7th Cir. 2010). We apply the substantive law of the state of Illinois. See id. (citing Erie R.R. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64, 78, 58 S. Ct. 817, 82 L. Ed. 1188 (1938)).

1. Oral "Most-Favored-Nations" Contract

Multiut claims that it had an "understanding," [19] dating back to "the mid-1990s," that Dynegy would charge it either "(i) a price equal to or 1/2 cent per therm higher than the index price, or (ii) the lowest price contemporaneously being charged by Dynegy to any of Multiut's competitors." It alleges that Dynegy fostered this understanding by repeatedly assuring one of Multiut's employees that Multiut was "getting the best price there is," though it acknowledges that Dynegy refused its requests to include a most-favored-nations clause in either the 1988 or 1994 agreements. Multiut claims that Dynegy violated part (i) of the understanding by charging Multiut five to twelve cents more than the index price per therm, and violated part (ii) by charging Multiut's competitor Nicor Energy lower prices than it charged Multiut.

HN3[] Unilateral "understandings" are not enough to give rise to an enforceable oral contract in Illinois. "A feeling of certainty . . . that a party in position to contract would surely agree to terms present in the situation disclosed, does not evoke a contract from a plausible situation for contract. The agreement must actually be made by the parties to the alleged contract. It must be shown that those parties selected [20] and concurred in the terms of the contract, or no contract exists." Richton v. Farina, 14 Ill. App. 3d 697, 303 N.E.2d 218, 223 (Ill. App. Ct. 1973) (quoting Bartlett v. Lauff, 271 Ill. App. 551, 554 (Ill. App. Ct. 1933)). "In order for there to be a contract between parties there must be a meeting of the minds or mutual assent as to the terms of the contract." Midland Hotel Corp. v. Reuben H. Donnelley Corp., 118 Ill. 2d 306, 515 N.E.2d 61, 65, 113 Ill. Dec. 252 (Ill. 1987). [*516] No reasonable jury could find any such meeting or mutual assent here. Although Multiut has asserted that the "essential terms" of the alleged contract were "definite and certain," id., it has not pointed to any evidence from which a jury could infer that Dynegy assented to them. Vague statements about "best" prices do not an agreement make, particularly where the proponent of the contract cannot pinpoint even the year in which the agreement was purportedly reached. Nor does the parties' course of conduct tally with the existence of such an agreement; if Multiut were guaranteed a pertherm price of index plus 1/2 cent, there would have been no reason for it to get price quotes from Dynegy or repeatedly seek fixed pricing. Summary judgment was properly entered in Dynegy's [21] favor on this counterclaim.

2. Oral Contract to Lock-in Prices

The second alleged oral contract also involves the prices Dynegy promised to offer Multiut. During a September 2001 meeting with Dynegy employees, Draiman floated the idea of locking-in Multiut's pricing for an extended period of time. He testified that the Dynegy employees said "something along th[e] lines" of they would "work on it" or "would get it done" and requested a list of Multiut's customers and profit margins. Draiman testified that although Dynegy did "not explicitly" agree to lock-in a price, he walked away from the meeting with the "impression and understanding" that Multiut would be getting fixed prices "for whatever period [its own fixed-price] contracts were." Based on that understanding, Multiut did not seek out other sources of natural gas for its fixed-price customers. On September 17, 2001, Draiman sent a letter to Dynegy in which he provided for Dynegy's "review" a list of the prices paid by Multiut's fixed-price customers and pointed out that if Multiut could lock-in a price of about 15 cents per therm below what its average customer was paying, it could increase its profits by $2 million. Dynegy's response [22] to the letter did not mention fixed prices, and Draiman took no further steps to ensure that Multiut would actually receive locked-in prices. The district court concluded that this evidence was not enough to show that Dynegy agreed to provide gas at a set price and granted summary judgment.[1] We agree that summary judgment is warranted.

The evidence Multiut and Draiman presented does not demonstrate the existence of an agreement between Dynegy and Multiut. Multiut was able to more precisely identify the timeframe in which the alleged agreement was reached, and the actors who allegedly made it, but there is no evidence as to what price the agreement locked in or how long the agreement was in effect. HN4[] "The essential terms of a contract must be definite and certain in order for a contract to be enforceable." Midland Hotel Corp., 515 N.E.2d at 65. Both price and duration are unquestionably "essential terms," at least in this sort of contract. Even if a jury ignored Dynegy's [23] oral use of prospective preliminary language, cf. Ocean Atl. Dev. Corp. v. Aurora Christian Schs., Inc., 322 F.3d 983, 995-96 (7th Cir. 2003) (applying Illinois law) (HN5[] "[A] letter of intent or a similar preliminary writing that reflects an agreement contingent upon the successful completion of negotiations that are ongoing, does not amount to a contract that binds the parties."), and concluded that an agreement had been reached during [*517] or after the September meeting, it would be unable to glean from the evidence presented the parameters or duration of that agreement. HN6[] "[I]f the essential terms are so uncertain that there is no basis for deciding whether the agreement has been kept or broken, there is no contract." Acad. Chi. Publishers v. Cheever, 144 Ill. 2d 24, 578 N.E.2d 981, 984, 161 Ill. Dec. 335 (Ill. 1991).

[1] The district court also found summary judgment warranted on the "separate and independent" ground that Multiut failed to offer evidence of its damages stemming from the alleged breach. We need not address that ground here.

3. Implied Contract to Waive Interest

The third unwritten contract purportedly governing Dynegy and Multiut's relationship grew out of Dynegy's failure to invoice Multiut for interest during most of 1999 and 2000. Multiut and Draiman contend that through this conduct, Dynegy impliedly agreed to forgo the collection of interest, notwithstanding its subsequent submission to Multiut of corrected interest invoices [24] and supporting schedules. The district court granted summary judgment for Dynegy after finding that Multiut and Draiman failed to demonstrate that any such agreement existed. We agree that summary judgment was proper.

HN7[] "Contracts implied in fact arise under circumstances which, according to the ordinary course of dealing and the common understanding of men, show a mutual intention to contract." Mowatt v. City of Chicago, 292 Ill. 578, 127 N.E. 176, 177 (Ill. 1920); see also Schivarelli v. Chi. Transit Auth., 355 Ill. App. 3d 93, 823 N.E.2d 158, 165-66, 291 Ill. Dec. 148 (Ill. App. Ct. 2005) ("In a contract implied in fact, a contractual duty is imposed by reason of a promissory expression inferred from facts, circumstances and expressions by the promisor showing an intent to be bound. Such contract may be proved by circumstances showing that the parties intended to contract and by the general course of dealing between them." (citation omitted)). No such intention can be reasonably inferred from the evidence presented here. Despite its failure to invoice interest for many months, Dynegy sought to rectify its mistake by sending Multiut a letter and updated invoices as soon as it discovered the omission. (The parties' written agreement contained [25] a provision allowing the parties up to 24 months to correct any billing errors.) It also invoiced Multiut for interest consistently both before and after the 1999-2000 period. These are not the actions of a party seeking to be bound. Moreover, and perhaps more damaging to this claim, Multiut met with Dynegy in March 2001 and agreed that it owed the amount Dynegy claimed it did; the agreed-upon amount included the interest Multiut now claims is waived. Perhaps Multiut hoped that Dynegy would overlook some of the interest it was accruing, but Dynegy's actions do not objectively indicate that it had any such intention.

C. Breach of Contract & Guaranty Claims

The district court granted summary judgment in Dynegy's favor on both its breach-of-contract and breachof-guaranty claims. HN8[] Summary judgment is appropriate if the admissible evidence considered as a whole shows that "there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law," Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a), even after all reasonable inferences are drawn in the nonmovant's favor. We review de novo the district court's determination that this standard has been met. E.g., *Davis v. Time Warner Cable of Se. Wis., L.P., 651 F.3d 664, No. 10-1423, 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 13636, 2011 WL 2611303, at 5 (7th Cir. July 5, 2011).

1. [26] Breach of Contract

Multiut and Draiman take an unusual tack in challenging summary judgment on the breach-of-contract claim. Rather than [*518] dispute the validity of the agreement, Dynegy's interpretation of its provisions, or Dynegy's allegations that Multiut was in breach, they contend that Dynegy is not entitled to recover damages because it offered insufficient proof of those damages, participated in improper manipulation of natural gas price indices, and breached other alleged oral and implied contracts. Though novel, none of these arguments gets Multiut and Draiman past the absence of evidence demonstrating a genuine issue for trial.

Multiut and Draiman first contend that Dynegy inadequately proved its damages because it based its calculations not on (largely nonexistent) Exhibit Bs but instead had an expert review invoices and tabulate a total due. HN9[] Under Illinois law, plaintiffs alleging breaches of contract "bear[ ] the burden of proving that [they] sustained damages resulting from the breach and establishing both the correct measurement of damages and the final computation of damages based on that measurement." Ollivier v. Alden, 262 Ill. App. 3d 190, 634 N.E.2d 418, 422, 199 Ill. Dec. 579 (Ill. App. Ct. 1994). Plaintiffs [27] are not required to prove damages to the exact cent; they must merely establish a "reasonable basis for computing damages," Razor v. Hyundai Motor Am., 222 Ill. 2d 75, 854

N.E.2d 607, 626, 305 Ill. Dec. 15 (Ill. 2006) (quotation omitted), and may do so "in any reasonable manner," id. at 627. Here, the record unequivocally indicates that Dynegy did just that. It provided a qualified expert with invoices from Multiut's as well as its own records, and the expert checked them against the handwritten records of Multiut's bookkeeper, which she testified were accurate. The expert then compared the invoices with Multiut's payment records and calculated interest charges pursuant to a provision in the agreement to arrive at a damage figure of roughly $15.3 million as of October 2004. Multiut and Draiman object to the expert's calculation because it rested on documents other than the Exhibit Bs, though they simultaneously concede that "[t]he parties were free to depart from the procedures contemplated by the written contract and . . . then rely on their contemporaneous notes to confirm each other's record of quantities or price." Reply Br. 10. The parties through their course of conduct mutually eschewed the formality of Exhibit [28] Bs; Multiut cannot now hold that decision against Dynegy in a one-sided fashion. Nor is there any basis for the argument that Dynegy's damages computation is flawed because it rests in large part on Multiut's concededly accurate data rather than Dynegy's own records.

Multiut and Draiman next contend that even if Dynegy adequately computed its damages, it should be barred from recovering them because of its alleged manipulation of gas price indices. Even if the invoices accurately reflected the prices charged, the argument goes, they improperly reflected inflated prices and therefore create a genuine issue of material fact as to the amount that would have been due had the price indices been left to the mercy of the invisible hand. Moreover, Multiut and Draiman continue, Dynegy "bears the burden of proving that the amounts of the invoices it seeks to collect are accurate based on free and open market indices." Appellants' Br. 27. The district court rejected these arguments, finding that "the causal chain that Multiut seeks to prove is too attenuated and diffuse," and noting, "it is not clear how damages would apply in that Multiut's theory is that fraud was perpetrated on the whole marketplace [29] so that the price charged by all suppliers presumably would have been equally affected by the alleged manipulation."

[*519] We agree with the sound reasoning of the district court. Multiut and Dynegy's argument has some intuitive appeal, and echoes the equitable doctrine of unclean hands, but there is no evidence in the record from which a reasonable jury could conclude that Dynegy's alleged price manipulation out west so significantly affected the prices it was quoting Multiut in Chicago that it should not be paid for the gas it distributed. Multiut has offered little more than indignant speculation that the prices it was charged were impermissibly inflated. They may well have been. But Multiut has not presented any evidence showing how much they were inflated, what portion of that inflation might reasonably be attributable to Dynegy's alleged misdeeds, or what price it would have been charged had the market been functioning normally. The FERC report, Multiut's only real evidence of the alleged manipulation, focuses predominantly on the western United States, implicates more than a dozen firms, and mentions Chicago and the "Great Lakes" region only twice in roughly 400 pages and never in [30] connection with Dynegy. Multiut makes a logical point, but HN10[] more than speculation, no matter how righteous, is required to create a genuine issue of material fact. See Delapaz v. Richardson, 634 F.3d 895, 901 (7th Cir. 2011); see also Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586-87, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986) (noting that nonmoving party "must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts").

Multiut and Draiman's final argument against the entry of summary judgment is similar to their previous one. They contend that the invoices are inaccurate and therefore unenforceable because they do not take into account the provisions of three alleged unwritten contracts: an oral "most-favored-nations" contract, an oral fixed-price contract, and an implied-in-fact contract to waive interest. We have already seen, however, that the record does not support the inference that such binding contracts existed. See supra Part II.B. If they did not exist, they could not possibly have hampered Dynegy's ability to abide by the concededly valid written agreement.

2. Breach of Guaranty

Dynegy also alleged that Multiut and Draiman breached a 1995 guaranty by failing [31] to satisfy the debts Multiut incurred in connection with the agreement. Draiman signed the guaranty in both his official and individual capacities, and he and Multiut concede that it is a valid document. They argue that it should not be enforced against them, however, because Dynegy failed to comply strictly with the agreement's Exhibit B requirements. This argument gets them no further here than it did in connection with Dynegy's breach of contract claim.

HN11[] A guaranty is a "third party's promise to answer for payment on or fulfill an obligation if the person primarily liable fails to perform." Panno v. Nicolau, 174 Ill. App. 3d 890, 529 N.E.2d 95, 98, 124 Ill. Dec. 378 (Ill. App. Ct. 1988). Multiut and Draiman do not contest that the guaranty here subjects them to liability if Multiut fails to perform its obligations under the agreement; they challenge neither its validity nor scope. We have already determined that Dynegy is entitled to summary judgment on its breach of contract claim; there is no genuine issue as to whether Multiut failed to fulfill its obligations. We recognized Multiut's concern with the lack of Exhibit Bs, but concluded that their absence was no impediment to finding Multiut liable under the contract. [32] See supra Part II.C.1. Since Multiut and Draiman do not raise an independent [*520] argument or present any independent evidence as to why they should not be held to the terms of the guaranty, we need not continue our analysis beyond this point. They have failed to demonstrate that a material issue of genuine fact exists for trial, so summary judgment is appropriate on this claim.

D. Breach of Confidentiality Agreement Counterclaim

In 1997, Dynegy expressed an interest in acquiring Multiut. Multiut was keen on the deal but insisted that Dynegy sign a confidentiality agreement before it would divulge any sensitive information. The confidentiality agreement prohibited Dynegy from disclosing any confidential or proprietary information provided by Multiut without first obtaining Multiut's written consent. The confidentiality agreement further restricted Dynegy's use of the information to "evaluating a Proposed Transaction between Multiut and [Dynegy]." Dynegy signed the agreement and gained access to Multiut's confidential information, including "contracts, pricing, volumes, and terms" in addition to "customer information." Dynegy copied much of the information and pursued the acquisition for a [33] time, but ultimately decided not to pull the trigger. It opted instead to enter into a joint venture with one of Multiut's competitors, Nicor Inc., a possibility it had been considering while courting Multiut. A handful of high-level executives at Dynegy had at least some involvement with both the Multiut due diligence and the Nicor joint venture. Citing the overlap in staffing, and cases from this court, PepsiCo, Inc. v. Redmond, 54 F.3d 1262 (7th Cir. 1995), and the Pennsylvania Superior Court, Den-Tal-Ez, Inc. v. Siemens Capital Corp., 389 Pa. Super. 219, 566 A.2d 1214 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1989), Multiut contends in one of its many counterclaims that its "confidential information was inevitably disclosed to Dynegy's Nicor Energy subsidiary." This alleged breach of the confidentiality agreement further resulted in Nicor Energy gaining a significant though unquantified competitive advantage over Multiut and wooing its customers away.

The district court did not evaluate Multiut's "inevitable disclosure" arguments, concluding that Multiut could not survive summary judgment even if the doctrine applied because Multiut failed to present any evidence of its damages. See Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986) [34] (noting that HN12[] summary judgment must be entered "against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial"). Multiut contends this decision was erroneous because the district court placed too high a burden on it; in its view, "[a]ll Multiut need establish is factual support for the proposition that it suffered an injury in fact." HN13[] We review the district court's grant of summary judgment de novo, drawing all reasonable inferences in Multiut's favor. E.g., *Davis, 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 13636, 2011 WL 2611303, at 5.

There is no need to delve into the murky waters of the "inevitable disclosure" doctrine here. Like most of Multiut's other counterclaims, this claim against Dynegy is a standard breach of contract claim. Under Illinois law, plaintiffs alleging breaches of contract "bear[ ] the burden of proving that [they] sustained damages resulting from the breach and establishing both the correct measurement of damages and the final computation of damages based on that measurement." Ollivier, 634 N.E.2d at 422; see also Perfection Corp. v. Lochinvar Corp., 349 Ill. App. 3d 738, 812 N.E.2d 465, 470-71, [*521] 285 Ill. Dec. 645 (Ill. App. Ct. 2004) [35] (HN14[] "The party who seeks damages has the burden not only to establish that he sustained damages, but also to establish a reasonable basis for computation of those damages."). Assuming there was a breach—Multiut has not presented any evidence beyond its assertion that Dynegy "inevitably disclosed" information it obtained pursuant to the confidentiality agreement—Multiut has not carried this burden.

It is a bedrock principle that HN15[] "[d]amages may not be awarded on the basis of speculation and conjecture." Perfection Corp., 812 N.E.2d at 471. Yet the only evidence Multiut has that it was damaged, let alone how much or by whom, is unspecified "indications from the market or from its customers that Nicor Energy always seemed to know what Multiut could offer and then undercut that price." No admissible evidence puts even a ballpark figure on the damages Multiut endured. And even if we assume Multiut lost profits as a result of a breach of the confidentiality agreement, Draiman testified that he did not know how many customers left Multiut to do business with Nicor Energy. He further acknowledged that numerous other factors, including his brother, Yehuda; customer relations issues; and changes [36] in customer ownership contributed to Multiut's weakened presence in the Chicago natural gas market. Without something linking Multiut's downfall to Dynegy's divulgence or inappropriate use of information in violation of the confidentiality agreement, there is no issue warranting trial on this claim.

E. Robinson-Patman Price

Discrimination Counterclaim

Multiut and Draiman's final counterclaim alleges that Dynegy violated section 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13(a), by charging Multiut more for gas than it charged Nicor Energy. They point to price differentials of up to ten cents per therm and contend that Multiut was injured by them. Proceeding under section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15, they seek treble damages and attorneys' fees. The district court found that Multiut and Draiman failed to offer any evidence that Multiut suffered injury and therefore granted summary judgment in Dynegy's favor even though it was not persuaded by Dynegy's other arguments. We review this determination de novo, drawing all reasonable inferences in Multiut and Draiman's favor. *E.g., Davis, 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 13636, 2011 WL 2611303, at 5.

HN16[] "Section 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act makes it illegal to discriminate [37] in price when an injury to competition is the consequence." Reserve Supply Corp. v. Owens- Corning Fiberglas Corp., 971 F.2d 37, 41 (7th Cir. 1992) (citation omitted). It is a "prophylactic statute which is violated merely upon a showing that 'the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition.'" J. Truett Payne Co. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 451 U.S. 557, 561, 101 S. Ct. 1923, 68 L. Ed. 2d 442 (1981) (quoting 15 U.S.C. § 13(a)). To establish the "secondary-line"[2] violation of [*522] which they complain, Multiut and Draiman must show (1) that Dynegy's sales of natural gas to Multiut and Nicor Energy were made in interstate commerce; (2) that the gas was of like grade and quality; (3) that Dynegy discriminated in price between Multiut and Nicor Energy; and (4) that the discrimination may have injured competition, to Nicor Energy's advantage. See Volvo Trucks, 546 U.S. at 176-77 (citing 15 U.S.C. § 13(a)); *Texaco Inc. v. The "competitive injury" prong of this showing may be inferred from evidence that a favored competitor received significantly better prices over an extended period of time; the hallmark of such injury "is the diversion of sales or profits from a disfavored purchaser to a favored purchaser." Volvo Trucks, 546 U.S. at 177.

[2] HN18[] There are three categories of 2 competitive injury that may give rise to Robinson-Patman Act claims: "primary line," "secondary line," and "tertiary line." Primary-line cases involve price discrimination that injures competition at the level of the discriminating seller and its direct competitors. Secondary-line cases like this one involve price discrimination that injures competition among customers of the discriminating seller. Tertiary-line cases involve injury to competition among the customers of the differently treated purchasers. Volvo Trucks N. Am., Inc. v. Reeder-Simco GMC, Inc., 546 U.S. 164, 176, 126 S. Ct. 860, 163 L. Ed. 2d 663 (2006).

But HN19[] mere demonstration of a "competitive injury" and the other elements of a violation "does not mean that a disfavored purchaser has been actually 'injured' within the meaning of § 4 [of the [39] Clayton Act]." *J. Plaintiffs (here, counter-plaintiffs) seeking to recover treble damages pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 15 "must prove more than a violation of § 2(a), since such proof establishes only that injury may result." Id.; cf. Texaco, 496 U.S. at 572 (noting distinction between liability and damages issues in the Robinson-Patman context). The burden of showing damages is not "unduly rigorous," Texaco, 496 U.S. at 573 (quoting J. Truett Payne Co., 451 U.S. at 562), but plaintiffs must present some evidence of injury attributable to the price discrimination, see Falls City Indus., Inc. v. Vanco Beverage, Inc., 460 U.S. 428, 437, 103 S. Ct. 1282, 75 L. Ed. 2d 174 (1983); J. Truett Payne Co., 451 U.S. at 568 ("[I]f there has been a violation of the Robinson-Patman Act, petitioner is not excused from its burden of proving antitrust injury and damages. It is simply that once a violation is established, that burden is to some extent lightened."). As on their breach of confidentiality agreement counterclaim, Multiut and Draiman have failed to satisfy this obligation.

Multiut and Draiman devote much of their briefing on this issue to an argument that they established a prima facie violation [40] of the Robinson-Patman Act. The district court rejected Dynegy's arguments for summary judgment on those grounds, however, so we are unsure why Multiut and Draiman have pursued this line of argument at the expense of attempting to establish an actual injury resulting from Dynegy's alleged price discrimination, an argument to which they dedicate a mere five sentences between their opening and reply briefs. In those five sentences, Multiut and Draiman contend that they have "identified evidence of lost sales and profits resulting from Dynegy's price discrimination." They do not, however, give any indication of what that evidence was, or how it tied to Dynegy's actions. We assume they are referring to the $5 million lost profits figure reported only in the properly excluded Draiman declaration, and their expert's computation that the long-term difference in prices charged amounted to roughly $1.86 million, [*523] even though the expert expressly testified that he did no work relating to the Robinson32 Patman counterclaim and, moreover, such computation is insufficient evidence of damages. See Texaco, 496 U.S. at 551. Even if Multiut and Draiman are able to ultimately prove that Dynegy violated [41] the Robinson-Patman Act, they have not presented admissible evidence from which a jury could find that Multiut was injured as a result. The district court properly entered summary judgment on this counterclaim. See Celotex, 477 U.S. at 322.

F. Denial of Second Motion to Reconsider

After we dismissed Multiut and Draiman's first appeal for lack of jurisdiction, the case returned to the district court and both sides submitted briefing on the proper computation of prejudgment interest. While the district court was considering that issue, Multiut and Draiman filed a motion asking the district court to reconsider its summary judgment rulings. They recognized that the district court had denied their previous motion to reconsider, but asserted that new evidence they obtained in connection with their multi-district litigation action against Dynegy rendered the grants of summary judgment inappropriate. The new evidence included an affidavit and a memorandum from former Dynegy employee Jeffrey Hornback, which demonstrated that Dynegy was aware of the alleged price index manipulation while it was contracting with Multiut, and an affidavit from Dr. Michael Harris, an economist who reviewed the FERC [42] report and concluded that manipulation of the gas price indices out west would have impacted prices in Chicago. The district court ordered briefing on the motion to reconsider but denied it (and its accompanying evidentiary submissions) without reaching the merits. In doing so, the district court first cited concerns of finality and noted that it had already visited the issue of price index manipulation at least twice. The district court gave as an alternative ground the limited scope of the mandate we issued, which instructed the district court only to determine prejudgment interest. The district court reasoned, "[i]t would be contrary to the spirit of [the mandate] to construe it as an open invitation to allow the parties to delve back into the substantive issues of the case, issues that were the subject of the appeal in the first place." Multiut and Draiman now contend that the district court erred in disregarding their new evidence and denying their motion. But they do not challenge either of the district court's asserted bases for denying their motion. Instead, they assert that the district court "should have reconsidered its summary judgment ruling in light of the Hornback and [43] Harris affidavits." They then walk us through the evidence and reiterate that the evidence was not in their possession when summary judgment briefs were filed. These "arguments" do not get them very far, as they have failed to articulate a ground on which we could find that the district court abused its discretion. The district court did not deny their motion because the evidence was not "newly discovered," or because it failed to find a nexus between the evidence and the summary judgment motion; it denied it for other grounds that Multiut and Draiman wholly disregard. HN20[] "We cannot make a party's arguments for him, or force him to make arguments he seems determined not to raise." United States v. Foster, 577 F.3d 813, 816 (7th Cir. 2009). Multiut and Draiman have waived any relevant argument. We affirm the district court's denial of their motion to reconsider.

III. Conclusion

The district court appropriately granted summary judgment in Dynegy's favor on [*524] its two claims. It was also correct to grant summary judgment in Dynegy's favor on Multiut's barrage of counterclaims. The district court also stayed well within the bounds of its discretion when it excluded the Draiman declaration, and [44] Multiut and Draiman failed to argue that the court stepped over the line in resolving their second motion to reconsider for the reasons it did. We AFFIRM the district court's judgment in full.

HN1[] Relief From Judgments, Altering & Amending Judgments

The purpose of a motion for reargument or reconsideration is to correct manifest errors of law or fact or to present newly discovered evidence. Accordingly, a court should alter or amend its judgment only if the movant demonstrates at least one of the following: (1) a change in the controlling law; (2) availability of new evidence not available when the court issued its order; or (3) a need to correct a clear error of law or fact or to prevent manifest injustice.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Altering & Amending Judgments

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Motions to Reargue

HN2[] Relief From Judgments, Altering & Amending Judgments

A motion for reargument is not properly premised on a request that a court rethink a decision already made. Motions for reargument may not be used to argue new facts or issues that inexcusably were not presented to the court in the matter previously decided. Reargument, however, may be appropriate where the court has patently misunderstood a party, or has made a decision outside the adversarial issues presented to the court by the parties, or has made an error not of reasoning but of apprehension.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Helpfulness

HN3[] Admissibility, Expert Witnesses

Experts are allowed to rely on admissible evidence, but its admissibility does not change its sufficiency or reliability under Fed. R. Evid. 702 and 703. A court still has a duty to conduct an independent evaluation in to the reasonableness of the expert's reliance on the evidence.

Monetary damages are not the only form of relief that a court can grant in an antitrust action. Under both the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1 and 2, as well as the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 14, a court has broad discretion to issue an injunction preventing the defendant from engaging in such anticompetitive conduct.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Permanent Injunctions

HN5[] Grounds for Injunctions, Likelihood of Success

In determining whether to grant a request for a permanent injunction, the court must consider whether: (1) the moving party has shown actual success on the merits; (2) the moving party will be irreparably injured by the denial of injunctive relief; (3) the granting of the permanent injunction will result in even greater harm to the defendant; and (4) the injunction would be in the public interest.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Injunctions

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > Irreparable Harm

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Injunctions

HN6[] Remedies, Injunctions

The irreparable harm factor with regard to a permanent injunction can be more difficult to show in the antitrust context as the antitrust laws are enacted for the protection of competition not competitors. Antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent, flows from that which makes a defendant's acts unlawful. Some courts have considered that to be irreparable harm.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Injunctions

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > Public Interest

HN7[] Remedies, Injunctions

Antitrust law is one of the few instances in civil actions where the public interest factor may have as much, if not more, weight as any other factor in the balancing test for injunctive relief. The reason for that is simple. A claim under the antitrust laws is not merely a private matter. The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., is designed to promote the national interest in a competitive economy; thus, the plaintiff asserting his rights under the Act has been likened to a private attorney-general who protects the public's interest.

[*635] MEMORANDUM OPINION

Dated: August 4, 2011

ROBINSON, District Judge

I. INTRODUCTION

Plaintiffs ZF Meritor LLC ("ZFM") and Meritor Transmission Corporation ("Meritor") (collectively, "plaintiffs") filed this action against defendant Eaton Corporation ("defendant") on October 5, 2006, alleging violations [2] of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1-2, and § 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 14. (D.I. 1) At all times relevant prior to trial, plaintiffs and defendant were rival manufacturers of Class 8 commercial truck transmissions.

Following a trial, defendant was found to have violated §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act and § 3 of the Clayton Act. (D.I. 226) The issue of damages was not tried. (Id.) Currently before the court is plaintiffs' motion for reconsideration (D.I. 158) of the court's order (D.I. 145) excluding the damages opinion testimony of plaintiffs' expert, Dr. David W. DeRamus ("DeRamus"). For the reasons stated below, plaintiffs' motion is denied.

II. BACKGROUND

The court incorporates by reference its Daubert opinion of August 20, 2009. (D.I. 144, 145) In that opinion and its accompanying order, the court granted defendant's motion to exclude DeRamus' expert report on damages because it was based on faulty underlying data: a single page from the "Revised Strategic Business Plan." (D.I. 144 at 7) However, the court found that the nature of defendant's conduct (in terms of antitrust injury) was adequately addressed by DeRamus and, therefore, the case [3] was bifurcated, and trial on liability was conducted during the subsequent weeks. On October 8, 2009, the jury found that defendant had violated §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, and § 3 of the Clayton Act. (D.I. 217) After trial, defendant renewed its motion for judgment as a matter of law (D.I. 245), which was denied by the court on March 10, 2011. (D.I. 259, [*636] 260) Plaintiff's motion for reconsideration of the court's Daubert order was then administratively closed as moot.

As it turns out, the court was in error to not decide the merits of plaintiffs' motion for reconsideration, as the issue of damages must be resolved before a final judgment is entered, see DL Resources, Inc. v. FirstEnergy Solutions, Corp., 506 F.3d 209, 213 (3d Cir. 2007) (citing Liberty Mutual Ins. Co. v. Wetzel, 424 U.S. 737, 744, 96 S. Ct. 1202, 47 L. Ed. 2d 435 (1976)), and trial on the issue of damages cannot go forward in the absence of expert testimony. Therefore, the court has "resurrected" the motion in order to substantively rule on plaintiffs' contentions that the court should reconsider its ruling to exclude Deramus' expert testimony under Daubert.

III. LEGAL STANDARD

HN1[ ] The purpose of a motion for reargument or reconsideration is [4] to correct manifest errors of law or fact or to present newly discovered evidence. Max's Seafood Cafe ex rel. Lou-Ann, Inc. v. Quinteros, 176 F.3d 669, 677 (3d Cir. 1999). Accordingly, a court should alter or amend its judgment only if the movant demonstrates at least one of the following: (1) a change in the controlling law; (2) availability of new evidence not available when the court issued its order; or (3) a need to correct a clear error of law or fact or to prevent manifest injustice. See Id.; see also, Schering Corp. v. Amgen, Inc., 25 F. Supp. 2d 293, 295 (D. Del. 1998).

HN2[ ] A motion for reargument is not properly premised on a request that a court rethink a decision already made. Glendon Energy Co. v. Borough of Glendon, 836 F. Supp. 1109, 1122 (E.D. Pa. 1993). Motions for reargument may not be used "to argue new facts or issues that inexcusably were not presented to the court in the matter previously decided." Brambles USA, Inc., v. Blocker, 735 F. Supp. 1239, 1240 (D. Del. 1990). Reargument, however, may be appropriate where "the court has patently misunderstood a party, or has made a decision outside the adversarial issues presented to the court by the parties, or has made an [5] error not of reasoning but of apprehension." Id. at 1241.

IV. DISCUSSION

A. Motion for Reconsideration

Plaintiff's motion for reconsideration is divided into two parts: the first was filed before trial (D.I. 158), and the second is a modification of the first in light of developments at trial. (D.I. 227) Plaintiffs make several arguments in support of admitting DeRamus' expert report. First, they argue that the report is admissible in its current form because the Strategic Business Plan on which it is based is reliable in view of the testimony of witnesses at trial.

(Id. at 5-7) Next, plaintiffs argue that the report is admissible in its current form because the Strategic Business Plan itself was admitted at trial, and experts are allowed to rely on evidence that is admitted at trial in forming their opinions. (Id. at 7-11) Finally, plaintiffs argue that DeRamus should be allowed to modify his report to reflect reliance on different data (such as ZFM profits) because the court found only that the data he relied on was flawed, not his underlying methodology. (Id. at 11-14)

1. Reliability of the Strategic Business Plan in view of witness testimony

Plaintiffs argue that witness testimony established [6] the reliability of the Strategic Business Plan and, therefore, DeRamus should be allowed to rely on it in his expert report. (D.I. 227 at 5-7) However, there is nothing new in the witnesses' [*637] testimony that provides the court with a reason to reverse its previous finding. The witnesses' testimony only states that the Strategic Business Plan was prepared at the behest of Martello, and was revised several times. (Id.) It says nothing about the plan's accuracy, or the reasonableness of its estimates. Furthermore, the court was already well aware of the circumstances surrounding the creation of the plan as DeRamus had testified to its source during an evidentiary hearing, and wrote about it in his declaration. (D.I. 158 at 3)

2. DeRamus' ability to rely on the Strategic Business Plan after it was admitted into evidence during trial.

Plaintiffs misinterpret the effect of the admission of the Strategic Business Plan on DeRamus' ability to rely on it in his expert report. While plaintiffs are generally correct that HN3[] experts are allowed to rely on admissible evidence, its admissibility does not change its sufficiency or reliability under Rules 702 and 703 of the Federal Rules of Evidence. A court [7] still has a duty to "conduct an independent evaluation in to the reasonableness" of the expert's reliance on the evidence. In re Paoli RR Yard PCB Litig., 35 F.3d 717, 748 (3d Cir. 1994). The fact that the Strategic Business Plan was part of plaintiffs' "story" does not mean, ipso facto, that it is the type of reliable evidence upon which an expert can base millions of dollars' worth of damages. Here, the court found that the Strategic Business Plan was insufficient and unreliable and, therefore, could not form the basis of DeRamus' opinion. Admissibility did not change this calculus.

3. Modification of DeRamus' report to rely on different underlying data

Plaintiffs' request to modify DeRamus' report to rely on different underlying data would be tantamount to reopening expert discovery. DeRamus would need to be deposed once again, and defendant would need to prepare another rebuttal expert report. The court would then be subject to another Daubert motion, and DeRamus' report could be found faulty once again. Furthermore, when the court gave plaintiffs leave to move for clarification as to what DeRamus could testify, leave was granted to show that DeRamus' report already contained an [8] alternate damages calculation. (D.I. 161 at 3) Plaintiffs had a chance to espouse alternate damages calculations when they first prepared DeRamus' report and, instead, they chose to rely on data that generated wildly inflated numbers. At this stage of litigation, the court will not give plaintiffs another opportunity to modify their damages estimation.

B. Permanent Injunction

While the plaintiffs are unable to prove monetary damages due to a lack of expert testimony, HN4[] monetary damages are not the only form of relief that a court can grant in an antitrust action. In the case at bar, the jury found that defendant had engaged in conduct that violated §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, as well as § 3 of the Clayton Act, that is, the use of Long Term Agreements ("LTAs") that contained discounts linked to market penetration targets. (D.I. 216, 259) Under both of these acts, the court has broad discretion to issue an injunction preventing defendant from engaging in such anticompetitive conduct.

1. Standard of review

HN5[] In determining whether to grant a request for a permanent injunction, the court must consider whether:

> (1) the moving party has shown actual success on the merits;
> [*638] (2) the moving [9] party will be irreparably injured by the denial of injunctive relief;
> (3) the granting of the permanent injunction will result in even greater harm to the defendant; and
> (4) the injunction would be in the public interest.

Gucci Am., Inc. v. Daffy's, Inc., 354 F.3d 228, 236-37 (3d Cir. 2003); Shields v. Zuccarini, 254 F.3d 476, 482 (3d Cir. 2001).

2. Discussion

a. Actual success on the merits

In the case at bar, actual success on the merits has already been shown. As discussed supra, defendant has been found liable for violating §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, as well as § 3 of the Clayton Act. Therefore, this factor favors a injunction.

b. Irreparable harm

HN6[] The irreparable harm factor can be more difficult to show in the antitrust context as the antitrust laws "were enacted 'for the protection of competition not competitors.'" Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977) (citations omitted). Here, competition was effectively excluded from the marketplace, which constitutes "antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendant['s] acts unlawful." Id. at 489. See also Xerox Corp v. Media Sciences Intern., Inc., 511 F. Supp. 2d 372, 383 (S.D.N.Y. 2007) [10] (plaintiff adequately alleged an antitrust injury for defendant's alleged use of loyalty rebates to exclude plaintiff from the market.). Some courts have considered this to be irreparable harm. See Christian Schmidt Brewing Co. v. G. Heileman Brewing Co. Inc., 600 F. Supp. 1326, 1331 (D.C. Mich. 1985). Therefore, this factor slightly favors an injunction.

c. Injunction will not cause greater harm to defendant

Defendant's harm is, at most, minimal. The court's injunction only prohibits defendant from linking discounts to market penetration targets. It does not prohibit defendant from giving other forms of discounts such as volume discounts. Defendant will still be able to operate its business as usual with the caveat that it cannot exclude others from the market. Therefore, this factor favors an injunction.

d. Public interest

HN7[] Antitrust law is one of the few instances in civil actions where the public interest factor may have as much, if not more, weight as any other factor in the balancing test. The reason for this is simple. "A claim under the antitrust laws is not merely a private matter. The Sherman Act is designed to promote the national interest in a competitive economy; thus, the [11] plaintiff asserting his rights under the Act has been likened to a private attorney-general who protects the public's interest. . . ." Mitsubishi Motors Corp. v. Soler Chrysler-Plymouth, Inc., 473 U.S. 614, 655, 105 S. Ct. 3346, 87 L. Ed. 2d 444 (1985) (emphasis added) (citations omitted).

In the case at bar, the public has a substantial interest in strong competition in the truck transmission market. As originally written, the LTAs constituted de-facto exclusive dealing contracts which had the effect of excluding others from the market, thus creating a situation where prices could be raised in the future and innovation could be stifled. Therefore, this factor heavily favors an injunction.

3. Conclusion

Given the strong public interest in promoting competition, the minimal harm to defendant, and plaintiffs' showing of success [*639] on the merits, defendant is enjoined from linking discounts or other benefits to market penetration targets.

V. CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated herein, plaintiffs' motion for reconsideration (D.I. 158) of the court's order excluding the damages opinion testimony of DeRamus is denied. Furthermore, defendant is enjoined from linking discounts to market penetration targets. [1] An appropriate order shall [12] issue.

ORDER

At Wilmington this 4th day of August, 2011, consistent with the memorandum opinion issued this same date;

IT IS ORDERED that:

1. Plaintiffs' motion for reconsideration (D.I. 158) is denied.

2. Plaintiffs are awarded $0 in damages.

3. On or before August 18, 2011, defendant shall show cause why the court should not enter an injunction pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 26 and 28 U.S.C. § 1291, wherein Eaton Corporation and its successors, assigns, officers, agents, servants, employees, attorneys, and persons in active concert or participation with them, including any affiliated entities, will be ENJOINED and RESTRAINED from linking discounts and other benefits to market penetration targets. FAILURE TO TIMELY RESPOND TO THIS ORDER SHALL RESULT IN ENTRY OF SUCH AN INJUNCTION.

United States District Judge

End of Document

[1] While plaintiffs are no longer in business and are unable to directly benefit from an injunction, here, an injunction is appropriate because of the public's interest in robust competition and the possibility that plaintiffs may one day reenter the market.

HN1[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

A plaintiff who files an "objectively reasonable" lawsuit cannot be held liable for an unfair trade practice under N.C. Gen. Stat. § 75-1.1 regardless of the plaintiff's subjective intent and even if the suit was instituted for "no legitimate purpose."

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN2[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

The appropriate inquiry upon a motion to dismiss pursuant to N.C. Gen. Stat. § 1A-1, N.C. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) is whether, as a matter of law, the allegations of a complaint, treated as true, are sufficient to state a claim upon which relief may be granted under some legal theory, whether properly labeled or not. The complaint is to be liberally construed, and a court should not dismiss the complaint unless it appears beyond a doubt that the plaintiff could prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief. The court need not determine that the plaintiff will ultimately prevail in order to deny the motion to dismiss; it need only determine whether the plaintiff has adequately pled a claim that allows the plaintiff to introduce evidence in support of the claim. However, dismissal is warranted when the complaint consists of facts which will necessarily defeat the claim as well as where there is an absence of law or fact necessary to support a claim. When considering a motion under Rule 12(b)(6), the court is not required to accept as true any conclusions of law or unwarranted deductions of fact in the complaint.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN3[] State Regulation, Claims

The essential elements of a claim under N.C. Gen. Stat. § 75-1.1 are: 1) an unfair or deceptive act or practice; 2) affecting commerce; and 3) which proximately causes actual injury. A practice is unfair when it offends established public policy and when the practice is immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous, or substantially injurious to consumers. The fair or unfair nature of particular conduct is to be judged by viewing it against the background of actual human experience and by determining its intended and actual effects upon others. For a practice to be deceptive, it must possess the tendency or capacity to mislead. Whether a particular commercial act or practice constitutes an unfair or deceptive trade practice is a question of law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

Contracts Law > Breach > Breach of Contract Actions > General Overview

HN4[] State Regulation, Claims

It is well recognized that actions for unfair or deceptive trade practices are distinct from actions for breach of contract, and that a mere breach of contract, even if intentional, is not sufficiently unfair or deceptive to sustain an action under N.C. Gen. Stat. ch. 75. To become an unfair trade practice, a breach of contract must be characterized by some type of egregious or aggravating circumstance.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

HN5[] State Regulation, Claims

A litigant can be sheltered from liability under N.C. Gen. Stat. § 75-1.1 for committing an unfair trade practice by application of the federal Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

HN6[] State Regulation, Claims

A reasonably objective lawsuit can never be an unfair trade practice. A lawsuit is objectively reasonable if an objective litigant could conclude that the suit is reasonably calculated to elicit a favorable outcome. The "sham litigation" exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine applies to claims under N.C. Gen. Stat. § 75-1.1, regarding unfair trade practices, when 1) the claim asserted is "objectively meritless" and 2) a court finds the litigant's subjective motivation was an unlawful intent to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor.

However, the inquiry into subjective intent only follows a finding that the suit is objectively baseless and does not inform that initial objective determination.

ORDER

[*1] THIS MATTER is before the Court on Plaintiffs' Motion to Dismiss Count III of Counterclaim Pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) And To Strike Portions of Defendant's Prayer for Relief ("Motion"). For the reasons stated below, the Motion is GRANTED in part and DENIED in part.

I. INTRODUCTION

[*2] The North Carolina Court of Appeals has held that HN1[] a plaintiff who files an "objectively reasonable" lawsuit cannot be held liable for an unfair trade practice under N.C. Gen. Stat. § 75-1.1 regardless of the plaintiff's subjective intent and even if the suit was instituted for "no legitimate purpose." Reichhold Chems., Inc. v. Goel, 146 N.C. App. 137, 157, 555 S.E.2d 281, 293 (2001). The Motion requires the Court to determine whether Count III of Defendant's Counterclaim alleges facts adequate to state [2] a claim for an unfair trade practice that falls within the "sham litigation" exception to the Noerr-Pennington immunity doctrine on which the Reichhold opinion rests. That inquiry, in turn, requires the Court to consider whether, accepting the allegations of the Counterclaim as true and allowing all favorable factual inferences from those facts, the Court can and should make that determination as a matter of law without need for further discovery. The controlling ultimate issue is whether Plaintiffs' Complaint is "objectively reasonable." If it is, Plaintiffs' subjective intent in filing the suit is irrelevant, and further inquiry into that intent is not necessary. Plaintiffs contend that the inquiry is pursuant to an objective standard that can be satisfied on the face of the pleadings; Defendant contends that the inquiry necessarily includes fact considerations which must at least await summary judgment.

[*3] The controversy centers on the provisions of the "Settlement Agreement," which was entered into between Plaintiffs Lorillard Tobacco Company and Lorillard Licensing Company, LLC (collectively, "Lorillard") and Defendant R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company ("RJRT") to resolve inter partes [3] litigation before the United States Patent and Trademark Office ("USPTO") and which relates to the use of the term "pleasure" in connection with the advertisement and sale of tobacco products. The Settlement Agreement provides restrictions on both RJRT's use of the term in some respects and on Lorillard's right to challenge RJRT's use of the term in other respects. The Settlement Agreement by its release language resolved claims regarding uses prior to its effective date. Lorillard complains that RJRT has used the term inconsistently with the Settlement Agreement. RJRT counterclaims that Lorillard has brought a suit it promised not to bring, and that its doing so was a deliberate and willful effort to restrain competition. That is, Count III of RJRT's Counterclaim asserts that the suit is "sham litigation" outside of any protection afforded by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

[*4] The Motion does not require the Court to determine whether Lorillard may ultimately prevail on the issue of whether RJRT's uses of which it complains are proscribed by the Settlement Agreement. The Court need only decide whether the pleadings demonstrate that Lorillard's claim is objectively reasonable. The Court [4] concludes that it is.

II. PROCEDURAL HISTORY

[*5] Plaintiffs filed their action in Guilford County Superior Court on November 5, 2010, after which the matter was designated as a Complex Business Case. Plaintiffs assert three claims: 1) breach of contract based on the Settlement Agreement; 2) common law unfair competition; and 3) unfair and deceptive trade practices under N.C. Gen. Stat. Section 75-1.1 ("Section 75-1.1"). On January 10, 2011, RJRT answered and asserted three Counterclaims: 1) Declaratory Judgment seeking to interpret the Settlement Agreement; 2) Breach of Contract by reason of Plaintiffs filing the Complaint in contravention of promises in the Settlement Agreement; and 3) a Section 75-1.1 claim that Lorillard's filing of its Complaint was an unfair trade practice. On May 23, 2011, Lorillard filed its Motion. The Motion has been fully briefed, the Court heard oral argument, and the matter is ripe for disposition.

III. STATEMENT OF FACTS [1]

[*6] Lorillard Tobacco Company and Lorillard Licensing Company, LLC are corporations organized and existing under the laws of the State of North Carolina, based in Greensboro, North Carolina. (Countercl. ¶¶ 6-7.) The former manufactures and sells tobacco products, including NEWPORT brand cigarettes; the latter owns all relevant trademark and trade dress rights associated with the NEWPORT cigarette brand. (Id.) RJRT is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of North Carolina, with its principal place of business in Winston-Salem, North Carolina. RJRT [2] is engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling tobacco products, including CAMEL brand cigarettes and CAMEL brand snus, a smokeless tobacco product. (Id. ¶ 5.)

[*7] In 2005, Lorillard applied to the USPTO to register the mark, PLEASURE [3] for use in connection with its cigarette products, which application RJRT opposed. (Id. ¶ 13.) In 2007, while Lorillard's application was pending, RII applied [6] to the USPTO to register certain phrases that included the word "pleasure" in connection with smokeless tobacco products, which application Lorillard opposed. (Id. ¶ 14.) The parties resolved this inter partes litigation by the Settlement Agreement with an effective date of July 16, 2009. [4] (Id. ¶ 16.)

[*8] The Settlement Agreement provided that RJRT agreed to withdraw with prejudice its opposition to Lorillard's application (Id. ¶ 17), and Lorillard agreed to withdraw with prejudice its opposition to RII's application. (Id. ¶ 18.) The Settlement Agreement had several provisions regarding RJRT's future use of the term "pleasure." RJRT agreed that it "will [7] not use the term PLEASURE alone or in conjunction with any other words as the name of a brand of a tobacco product." (Id. ¶ 19.) RJRT further agreed that it "will not use the term PLEASURE alone in the advertising or promotion of any tobacco product, or in any manner creating a commercial impression associating the term PLEASURE alone with the brand name of a tobacco product." (Id. ¶ 20.) The Settlement Agreement elaborated that "by 'the term PLEASURE alone,' the Parties mean that RJRT will only use the term PLEASURE as part of a composite phrase and not in a way that creates a commercial impression in the term PLEASURE separate and apart from such composite phrase." (Id. ¶ 21.) The Parties further provided that "[b]y way of example, RJRT will not significantly distinguish the term PLEASURE from other words in a composite phrase in a way that makes the term PLEASURE significantly more prominent than the other words in the composite phrase." (Id. ¶ 22.) The Parties specified an example of an advertisement that would not be permitted because of the comparative emphasis on the term "PLEASURE." (Id. ¶ 23.)

[1] The statement of facts assumes all the allegations of the Counterclaim are true and construes inferences from such facts in Defendant-Counterclaimant's favor. See Regions Bank v. Reg'l Prop. Dev. Corp., 2008 NCBC ¶¶40-41 (N.C. Super. Ct. Apr. 21, 2008). [5]

[2] The Settlement Agreement defined RJRT to include Reynolds Innovations Inc. ("RII"), a trademark holding company and subsidiary of RJRT. Likewise, this Order includes RII within the term RJRT where appropriate.

[3] The parties variously use the terms "pleasure" and "PLEASURE." The Court understands that the distinction between the two is not relevant to the current controversy.

[4] RJRT incorporated the Settlement Agreement into its Counterclaim by attaching as an "Exhibit 1" so it is properly considered as part of the pleadings for purposes of this Motion. See Oberlin Capital, L.P. v. Slavin, 147 N.C. App. 52, 60, 554 S.E. 2d 840, 847 (2001).

[*9] In return for these restrictions on RJRT's use, Lorillard agreed that "[it] will [8] not assert its rights under any registration issuing from the Lorillard PLEASURE Application, or any other alleged federal or state statutory or common law rights in the term PLEASURE alone . . . against: (a) the use by RJRT of any permitted composite phrase incorporating the term PLEASURE . . . ." [5] (Id. ¶ 24.) Lorillard further released RJRT from any liability for the use of the term "pleasure" up to the date of the Settlement Agreement. (Id. ¶ 25.) RJRT alleges that it has used the term "pleasure" since the Settlement Agreement, but only consistently with the uses permitted by that agreement. (Id. ¶¶ 26-29.) Some of the uses of which Lorillard complains were in use by RJRT before the Settlement Agreement, although Lorillard denies having knowledge of those uses at that time. Particularly, Lorillard catalogs some of RJRT's internet domain and sub-domain names which incorporate the term "pleasure" such as, for example, "camel.tobaccopleasure.com." (Compl. ¶¶19-20; Countercl. ¶¶ 27-28.)

[*10] Lorillard and RJRT now each contend that the other has breached the Settlement Agreement. Lorillard contends that RJRT has, since the date of the Settlement Agreement, used the term "pleasure" in ways that it undertook not to do by the Settlement Agreement. RJRT contends that it has only used the term as expressly permitted by the Settlement Agreement, and Lorillard has breached the Settlement Agreement by bringing a suit that it promised not to bring. RJRT, in Count II of its Counterclaim, asserts that Lorillard breached its contractual promise not to assert a trademark claim because of an RJRT use permitted by the Settlement Agreement. (Id. ¶ 37.) In Count III, RJRT amplifies its claim by asserting that Lorillard committed an unfair trade practice by deliberately and willfully filing the complaint to stifle competition. (Id. ¶ 46.)

[*11] RJRT's prayer for relief seeks punitive damages, treble damages, and attorneys' [10] fees. In addition to its request to dismiss Count III, Lorillard seeks to strike each of these elements of damages from RJRT's prayer for relief. RJRT concedes that the prayers for punitive damages and treble damages depend on Count III of the Counterclaim, but it contends that the prayer for attorneys' fees may be supported by other claims. [6]

IV. STANDARD OF REVIEW

[*12] HN2[] The appropriate inquiry upon a motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) of the North Carolina Rules of Civil Procedure is "whether, as a matter of law, the allegations of the complaint, treated as true, are sufficient to state a claim upon which relief may be granted under some legal theory, whether properly labeled or not." Crouse v. Mineo, 189 N.C. App. 232, 237, 658 S.E.2d 33, 36 (2008); Harris v. NCNB Nat'l Bank of N.C., 85 N.C. App. 669, 670-71, 355 S.E.2d 838, 840-41 (1987). "The complaint is to be liberally construed, and the court should not dismiss the complaint 'unless it appears beyond a doubt that [the] plaintiff could prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief.'" Holloman v. Harrelson, 149 N.C. App. 861, 864, 561 S.E.2d 351, 353 [11] (quoting Dixon v. Stuart, 85 N.C. App. 338, 340, 354 S.E.2d 757, 758 (1987)), disc. review denied, 355 N.C. 748, 565 S.E.2d 665 (2002). The Court need not determine that the plaintiff will ultimately prevail in order to deny the motion to dismiss; it need only determine whether plaintiff has adequately pled a claim that allows plaintiff to introduce evidence in support of the claim. Johnson v. Bollinger, 86 N.C. App. 1, 4, 356 S.E.2d 378, 381 (1987) (citation omitted). However, dismissal is warranted when the complaint "may consist . . . of facts which will necessarily defeat the claim as well as where there is an absence of law or fact necessary to support a claim." Sutton v. Duke, 277 N.C. 94, 102-03, 176 S.E.2d 161, 166 (1970). "When considering a motion under Rule 12(b)(6), the court is not required to accept as true any conclusions of law or unwarranted deductions of fact in the complaint." Branch Banking & Trust Co. v. Lighthouse Fin. Corp., 2005 NCBC 3 ¶ 8 (N.C. Super. Ct. July 13, 2005).

[5] The Court has accepted for purposes of the present Motion that each of RJRT's uses of the term "pleasure" of which Lorillard complains is as a part of a "composite phrase." However, this does not necessarily [9] end the inquiry. The Settlement Agreement provides that the use of "the term PLEASURE alone" means that it is both in a composite phrase and not in a manner creating a commercial impression associating the term alone with the brand name of a tobacco product. (Countercl. ¶ 21.)

[6] (See Defendant's Mem. In Opp'n to Pls.' Mot. to Dismiss and Mot. to Strike 20 n.6.)

[*13] Lorillard's Motion asserts that RJRT cannot state a claim for an unfair trade practice based on the filing of the Complaint which is, on its face, "objectively reasonable," and that [12] further discovery seeking to determine Lorillard's subjective intent in bringing the suit or its belief in its chances for success are irrelevant. That is, Lorillard claims that it is immune from any Section 75-1.1 claim grounded on its having brought the litigation.

[*14] If immunity does not apply, Count III of RJRT's Counterclaim alleges HN3[] the essential elements of a Section 75-1.1 claim, which are: 1) an unfair or deceptive act or practice; 2) affecting commerce; and 3) which proximately causes actual injury. Poor v. Hill, 138 N.C. App. 19, 27, 530 S.E.2d 838, 844 (2000); see also, Strickland v. Lawrence, 176 N.C. App. 656, 665, 627 S.E.2d 301, 307 (2006). "[A] practice is unfair when it offends established public policy" and "when the practice is immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous, or substantially injurious to consumers." Eastover Ridge, L.L.C. v. Metric Constructors, Inc., 139 N.C. App. 360, 367, 533 S.E.2d 827, 832 (2000) (quoting Warfield v. Hicks, 91 N.C. App. 1, 8, 370 S.E.2d 689, 693, disc. review denied, 323 N.C. 629, 374 S.E.2d 602 (1988)) (citations omitted). "The fair or unfair nature of particular conduct is to be judged by viewing it against the background of actual [13] human experience and by determining its intended and actual effects upon others." McDonald v. Scarboro, 91 N.C. App. 13, 18, 370 S.E.2d 680, 684 (1988). For a practice to be deceptive, it must "possess the tendency or capacity to mislead." Forsyth Mem'l Hosp. v. Contreras, 107 N.C. App. 611, 614, 421 S.E.2d 167, 170 (1992). Whether a particular commercial act or practice constitutes an unfair or deceptive trade practice is a question of law. Norman Owen Trucking, Inc. v. Morkoski, 131 N.C. App. 168, 177, 506 S.E.2d 267, 273 (1998); see also, First Union Nat'l Bank v. Brown, 166 N.C. App. 519, 603 S.E.2d 808, 819 (2004).

[*15] Consistent with the Rule 12(b)(6) standard of review, the Court must assume that Lorillard had an anti-competitive intent in bringing the suit. Likewise, the Court for purposes of the present Motion, assumes that RJRT will ultimately prove that Lorillard breached the Settlement Agreement by filing its Complaint. Proof of that breach of contract would not alone mean that RJRT would have proven an unfair trade practice. HN4[] "It is well recognized . . . that actions for unfair or deceptive trade practices are distinct from actions for breach of contract, and that a mere breach [14] of contract, even if intentional, is not sufficiently unfair or deceptive to sustain an action under [Chapter 75]." Eastover Ridge, L.L.C., 139 N.C. App. at 367, 533 S.E.2d at 832; Branch Banking and Trust Co. v. Thompson, 107 N.C. App. 53, 62, 418 S.E.2d 694, 700, disc. review denied, 332 N.C. 482, 421 S.E.2d 350 (1992) (citations omitted). To become an unfair trade practice, the breach of contract must be "characterized by some type of egregious or aggravating circumstance." Norman Owen Trucking, Inc., 131 N.C. App. at 177, 506 S.E.2d at 273. Here, the alleged egregious or aggravating circumstance is Lorillard's alleged anti-competitive intent. The inquiry, then, is whether an unfair practice has been proven based on such breach coupled with anti-competitive intent, or whether Lorillard is immunized from such a finding.

[*16] The North Carolina Court of Appeals in Reichhold held that HN5[] a litigant can be sheltered from liability under Section 75-1.1 by application of the federal Noerr-Pennington doctrine. 146 N.C. App. at 156-57, 555 S.E.2d at 293 (referring to E. R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 81 S. Ct. 523, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464 (1961) and Prof'l Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1993)). [15] Noting that Chapter 75 was modeled on federal antitrust law, the court held that "federal decisions may provide guidance in determining [its] scope and meaning" and then applied the Noerr-Pennington doctrine to Section 75-1.1. [7] Id. The court upheld dismissal of the Section 75-1.1 claim, affirming the trial court's conclusion that "though filed for no legitimate purpose, the lawsuit was not utterly baseless." Id. at 157, 555 S.E.2d at 293. Because it was not utterly baseless, the suit was "objectively reasonable, and thus . . . did not constitute an unfair trade practice under N.C.G.S. § 75-1.1." [8] Id. In so holding, the Court implicitly agreed with the

[7] The federal Noerr-Pennington Doctrine arose under the federal Sherman Act, on which certain provisions of Chapter 75 are modeled, whereas Chapter 75-1.1 was based on Section 5 of the FTC Act.

[8] However, because the suit was not filed for a legitimate purpose, the court found that the defendant remained exposed to liability for tortious interference with contract [17] claims because there is "no relation" between the state tort and "legislative intent behind federal anti-trust law." Reichhold Chems., Inc., 146 N.C. App. at 148, 555 S.E.2d at 288.

plaintiff's assertion "that HN6[] a reasonably objective lawsuit can never be an unfair trade practice, under the reasoning of Noerr and PRE." Id. at 156, 555 S.E.2d at 293. The court explained that a lawsuit is objectively reasonable "[i]f an objective litigant could conclude that the suit is reasonably calculated to elicit a favorable outcome." Id. at 146 N.C. App. at 157, 555 S.E.2d at 293 (citation omitted). The court's adoption of PRE's reasoning to control Section 75-1.1 means that it conversely follows that the "sham litigation" exception [16] to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine would apply to claims under that section when 1) the claim asserted is "objectively meritless" and 2) the court finds "the litigant's subjective motivation" was an unlawful intent to "interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor." See Prof'l Real Estate Investors, Inc., 508 U.S. at 60, 113 S. Ct. at 1928 (describing "sham litigation" as that which is "objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits"). However, the inquiry into subjective intent only follows a finding that the suit is objectively baseless and does not inform that initial objective determination. Id.; see also United States v. Ward, 618 F. Supp. 884, 907 (E.D.N.C. 1985), Sunbelt Rentals, Inc. v. Head & Engquist Equip., L.L.C., 2003 NCBC 4 ¶ 333 (2003).

[*17] The Court then turns to the controlling inquiry: whether Lorillard's suit is "objectively reasonable" as a matter of law or whether that determination must await further factual development. While it is true that Reichhold arose upon review of rulings made on a motion for summary judgment and at trial, Reichhold was later followed by a North Carolina federal district court opinion which resolved the immunity issue upon a Rule 12(b)(6) motion. See GoldToeMoretz, LLC v. Implus Footcare, LLC, No. 5:09-CV-0072, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90828, 2010 WL 3474792 (W.D.N.C. Aug. 31, 2010.) [9] RJRT cites federal cases from other circuits for the proposition that the determination of whether the plaintiff's complaint is a sham or a genuine effort to seek judicial redress is inherently a fact question. Aydin Corp. v. Loral Corp., 718 F.2d 897, 903 (9th Cir. 1983); *Scooter Store, Inc. v. SpinLife.com LLC, No. 777 F. Supp. 2d 1102, 2011 WL 1460438, at 8 (S.D. Ohio Apr. 18, 2011); *Pactiv Corp. v. Perk-Up, Inc., No. 08-05072 (DMC), 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 72796, 2009 WL 2568105, at 14 (D.N.J. Aug. 18, 2009). [18] However, here, the critical "fact" is a determination of the language of the Settlement Agreement compared to the alleged uses of the term "pleasure" complained challenged in the Complaint. The Court concludes that the Reichhold standard of whether Lorillard's lawsuit is "utterly baseless" can be determined from the face of the Counterclaim and its incorporated Settlement Agreement. Even if the Court assumes that the suit was otherwise brought "for no legitimate purpose" and with a subjective anti-competitive intent, it can still conclude that the suit is "objectively reasonable" because it is not "utterly baseless."

[*18] The issue is to be determined by looking through a lens of reasonable objectivity. That objective perspective demonstrates that Lorillard has a reasoned basis from which to argue [19] that RJRT's use of the term "pleasure" after the Settlement Agreement are not permitted, even though they are used only in composite phrases, because the Settlement Agreement also proscribes a use "in any manner creating a commercial impression associating the term PLEASURE alone with the brand name of a tobacco product." The language of the Settlement Agreement does not so clearly foreclose an argument that the uses catalogued in the pleadings are outside these proscriptions so as to render the Complaint "utterly baseless." Lorillard's subjective intent does not change that initial objective determination.

[*19] The Motion would present a much more difficult challenge to Lorillard if Lorillard's claim rested entirely on claimed liability for acts taken by RJRT before the date of the Settlement Agreement. RJRT correctly notes that the release language of the Settlement Agreement would extend to such acts whether or not Lorillard was aware of them when entering the Settlement Agreement. But Lorillard counters that by releasing past liability it did not ratify such acts in the future, and a claim based on acts after the Settlement Agreement are not then "utterly baseless." The Court can agree [20] that this position is not baseless without also concluding that Lorillard's position should ultimately prevail. It need only conclude that asserting the claim is "objectively reasonable." Because it is, liability

[9] Without citing Reichhold, another North Carolina federal district court held that "parties bringing or threatening to bring meritorious, good faith claims cannot by definition be subject to liability under [Section 75-1.1]. As such, parties bringing good faith claims . . . do not need the protections of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine." DIRECTV, Inc. v. Cephas, 294 F. Supp. 2d 760, 767 (M.D.N.C. 2003).

under Section 75-1.1 based on the "sham litigation" exception is foreclosed. The Motion to dismiss Count III should be granted.

[*20] As to the Motion's request to strike portions of RJRT's prayer for relief, RJRT has conceded that it has no claim for punitive damages or treble damages if Count III is dismissed. RJRT does not make the same concession as to attorneys' fees, and the Court concludes that it is premature to determine whether there is any basis to award attorneys' fees other than pursuant to this Count III. Therefore, that prayer for attorneys' fees in the Counterclaim will not be stricken at this time.

[*21] IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that:

1. Lorillard's Motion to Dismiss Count III of RJRT's Counterclaim pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) is GRANTED.
2. Lorillard's Motion to Strike RJRT's prayer for punitive damages and treble damages is GRANTED.

3. Lorillard's Motion to Strike the prayer for attorneys' fees is DENIED without prejudice to the Court's later consideration of the issue of [21] whether either party is entitled to an award of attorneys' fees.

It is so ORDERED this 8th day of August, 2011.

ORDER GRANTING PRELIMINARY APPROVAL OF CLASS ACTION SETTLEMENT WITH DEFENDANT CHUNGHWA PICTURE TUBES, LTD.

Judge: Hon. Samuel Conti

Special Master: Hon. Charles A. Legge (Ret.)

It is hereby ORDERED AND DECREED as follows:

The motion of the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs ("Plaintiffs") for preliminary approval of the proposed settlement with Chunghwa Picture Tubes, Ltd. ("Chunghwa") is hereby GRANTED.

1. For purposes of the settlement with Chunghwa, the Special Master preliminarily finds that the requirements of Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure have been satisfied with respect to the Settlement Class. At this preliminary certification phase, and only for purposes of the settlement with Chunghwa, the Settlement Class is defined as follows:

> All persons and or entities who or which indirectly purchased in the United States CRT Products [1] manufactured and/or sold by the Defendants, or any subsidiary, [*2] affiliate, or co-conspirator thereof, at any time during the period from at least March 1, 1995 through at least November 25, 2007, except, for purposes of claims on behalf of Illinois persons (as defined by 740 ILCS 10/4) under 740 Ill. Comp. Stat. § 10/7(2) and Oregon natural persons under ORS §§ 646.775(1)(a) and 646.780(5)(a). Such Illinois and Oregon persons (as identified in the preceding sentence) shall instead be represented by the Attorney General of their state pursuant to the parens patriae authority granted to each Attorney General by those statutes. Specifically excluded from this Class are claims on behalf of Washington persons (as defined by RCW 19.86.010) for purposes of claims under RCW 19.86.080(1); the Defendants; the officers, directors or employees of any Defendant; any entity in which any Defendant has a controlling interest; and, any affiliate, legal representative, heir or assign of any Defendant. Also excluded are any federal, state or local government entities, any judicial officer presiding over this action and the members of his/her immediate family and judicial staff, and any juror assigned to this action.

2. The Special Master concludes that, for the sole purpose of the settlement with Chunghwa, and without adjudication on the merits, the Settlement Class is sufficiently well-defined and cohesive to merit preliminary approval. Neither this Order nor any final order regarding the settlement with Chunghwa shall have any effect on the Special Master's consideration and determination of class certification or any other issue with respect to the non-settling Defendants.

3. Pursuant to Rule 23(a)(1), the Special Master determines that the Settlement Class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable.

4. For purposes of preliminary approval, the commonality requirement of Rule 23(a)(2) is satisfied because Plaintiffs have alleged one or more questions of fact and law common to the Settlement Class, including whether Chunghwa violated the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, et seq., and the antitrust and/or various other laws of the following states: Arizona, California, Florida, Hawaii, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, [*4] Mississippi, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, South Dakota, Tennessee, Vermont, West Virginia, Wisconsin and the District of Columbia.

5. The Special Master hereby approves the Plaintiffs named in the Third Consolidated Amended Complaint, filed December 11, 2010, as Representative Plaintiffs of the Settlement Class pursuant to Rule 23(a)(3), and finds that, for settlement purposes only, these Representative Plaintiffs' claims are typical of the claims of the Settlement Class. The claims of the Representative Plaintiffs and absent class members rely on the same legal theories and arise from the same alleged conspiratorial conduct by Defendants, namely, the agreement to fix, raise, maintain and/or stabilize prices of CRT Products sold in the United States.

6. The Special Master preliminarily finds that the Representative Plaintiffs will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the Settlement Class in satisfaction of the requirements of Rule 23(a)(4) because: (1) the interests of the Representative Plaintiffs are consistent with those of the Settlement Class members; (2) there appear to be no conflicts between or among the Representative Plaintiffs [*5] and the other Settlement Class members; (3) the Representative Plaintiffs have been and appear to be capable of continuing to be active participants in both the prosecution and the settlement of this litigation; and (4) the Representative Plaintiffs and the Settlement Class members are represented by qualified, reputable counsel who are experienced in preparing and prosecuting large, complicated class action cases, including those concerning violations of antitrust law.

7. The Special Master preliminarily finds that, for purposes of this settlement only, questions of law or fact common to members of the Settlement Class predominate over questions affecting only individual members of the Settlement Class under Rule 23(b)(3). Further, a class action resolution in the manner proposed in the Settlement Agreement would be superior to other available methods for a fair and efficient adjudication of the litigation with respect to the Chunghwa. In making these preliminary findings, the Special Master has considered, inter alia, (1) the interest of the Settlement Class members in individually controlling the prosecution or defense of separate actions; (2) the impracticality or inefficiency of [*6] prosecuting or defending separate actions; (3) the extent and nature of any litigation concerning these claims already commenced; and (4) the desirability of concentrating the litigation of the claims in a particular forum.

8. The Special Master hereby approves Mario N. Alioto and Trump, Alioto, Trump & Prescott, LLP as Settlement Class Counsel pursuant to Rule 23(g), and finds that this Settlement Class Counsel has and will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the Settlement Class, as defined in paragraph 1.

9. The Special Master finds that the proposed settlement with Chunghwa, as set forth in the Settlement Agreement, subject to final determination following proper notice and a fairness hearing, is sufficiently fair, reasonable and adequate to authorize dissemination of notice to the Settlement Class.

10. The Special Master approves the proposed allocation of the Net Settlement Fund. [2] Each state listed in the operative complaint for which damage claims are being asserted, plus the states of Illinois and Oregon, shall receive a pro rata share of the Net Settlement Fund. Each state's pro rata share shall be determined by computing its population as a percentage of the total [*7] population of all states listed below. Each state's percentage allocation shall be determined using census figures from the year 2000 (approximately the middle of the alleged class period), which are as follows:

State	Population (2000 Census)	Percentage
Arizona	5,130,632	3.55
California	33,871,648	23.42
District of Columbia	572,059	0.39
Florida	15,982,378	11.05
Hawaii	1,211,537	0.84
Illinois	12,419,293	8.59
Iowa	2,926,324	2.02
Kansas	2,688,418	1.86
Maine	1,274,923	0.88
Michigan	9,938,444	6.87
Minnesota	4,919,479	3.4
Mississippi	2,844,658	1.97
Nebraska	1,711,263	1.18
Nevada	1,998,257	1.38
New Mexico	1,819,046	1.26
New York	18,976,457	13.12
North Carolina	8,049,313	5.57
North Dakota	642,200	0.45
Oregon	3,421,399	2.37
South Dakota	754,844	0.52
Tennessee	5,689,283	3.93
Vermont	608,827	0.42
West Virginia	1,808,344	1.25
Wisconsin	5,363,675	3.71

[2] The Net Settlement Fund means the $10,000,000 settlement amount, plus interest, minus 25% for attorneys' fees, reimbursement of expenses, $2.5 million for a costs set-aside, [*8] including the costs of giving notice to class members and administration of the settlement fund, all of which shall be subject to court approval. The Net Settlement Fund shall be no less than $5 million.

This percentage allocation may change to the extent that additional state indirect purchasers provide legal authority to assert damage claims in this action. Each of the states shall receive its allocable share at a future date to be approved by the Court.

11. The distribution of the Net Settlement Fund shall be deferred until a later date when there might be additional settlement funds from other settling defendants to distribute. At the time of distribution, or at such later time as Plaintiffs, Illinois and Oregon may agree, the States of Illinois and Oregon will each receive their allocable share of the Net Settlement Fund. Plaintiffs shall propose a method of distribution at that time, which shall be subject to court approval. Until that time, any settlement funds not used to pay prior out of pocket expense or future litigation costs will accrue interest for the benefit of the Class.

12. The Special Master approves the form and content of the Detailed Notice, attached hereto as Exhibit A, and the Summary Notice, attached hereto as Exhibit B.

13. The Special Master finds that the publication of the Detailed Notice on the internet along with copies of the Settlement Agreement, and the publication of the Summary Notice in various newspapers [*9] and/or magazines throughout the United States which will direct potential class members to the Detailed Notice, constitutes the best notice practicable under the circumstances, is due and sufficient notice to the Indirect Purchaser Settlement Class and complies fully with the requirements of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23 and the due process requirements of the Constitution of the United States.

14. By November 1, 2011, Plaintiffs' counsel are hereby directed to cause the Summary Notice to indirect purchasers, substantially in the form attached hereto as Exhibit B, to be published in various newspapers and/or magazines throughout the United States. The Summary Notice shall direct interested parties to a website www.CRTSettlement.com, maintained by the settlement administrator, where the Detailed Notice, substantially in the form of Exhibit A attached hereto, will be provided.

15. All requests for exclusion from the Settlement must be postmarked no later than February 1, 2012, and must otherwise comply with the requirements set forth in the Detailed Notice.

16. Any member of the Settlement Class who objects to the settlement must do so in writing. The objection must include the caption [*10] of this case, be signed, and be sent to the Special Master, Plaintiffs' Counsel, and Counsel for Chunghwa postmarked no later than February 1, 2012 and shall otherwise comply with the requirements set forth in the Detailed Notice. Any member of the Settlement Class who wishes to speak at the Fairness Hearing must submit a letter notifying the Special Master, Plaintiffs' Counsel, and Counsel for Chunghwa postmarked no later than February 1, 2012 and shall otherwise comply with the requirements set forth in the Detailed Notice.

17. Each member of the Settlement Class shall retain all rights and causes of action with respect to claims against all Defendants other than Chunghwa, regardless of whether such member of the Settlement Class decides to remain in the Settlement Class or to exclude itself from the Settlement Class.

18. By March 1, 2012, Plaintiffs' Counsel shall file with the Court and serve on the parties their motion for final approval of the Settlement Agreement, and any other papers provided for in this settlement, including Plaintiffs' request for $2.5 million for a costs set aside. Plaintiffs shall also be entitled to request attorneys' fees at a later date. Said request shall [*11] be based upon Plaintiffs' recovery of $10 million and other relief as provided for in this settlement.

19. At the time Plaintiffs' Counsel file their motion for final approval of the Settlement Agreement, Plaintiffs' Counsel shall cause to be filed with the Court, and served upon counsel for Defendants, affidavits or declarations of the person under whose general direction the publication of the Summary Notice and the Detailed Notice were made, showing that publication and issuance were made in accordance with this Order.

20. By March 1, 2012, Plaintiffs' Counsel shall file with the Court and serve on the parties their responses to any objections to the settlement.

21. The Special Master will hold a Fairness Hearing on March 15, 2012 at 2:00 p.m., at JAMS, Two Embarcadero Center, Suite 1500, San Francisco, CA 94111, to determine the fairness, reasonableness, and adequacy of the proposed settlement with Chunghwa. Any member of the Settlement Class who follows the procedure set forth in the notices may appear and be heard at this hearing. The Fairness Hearing may be continued without further notice to the Settlement Class.

22. The Special Master approves the establishment of an escrow account, [*12] as set forth in the Settlement Agreement, as "Qualified Settlement Funds" pursuant to Treas. Reg. § 1.468B-2(b)(1). The Special Master retains continuing jurisdiction over any issues regarding the formation or administration of the escrow account. Plaintiffs' Counsel and their designees are authorized to expend funds from the escrow accounts to pay Taxes, Tax Expenses and notice and administration costs, as set forth in the Settlement Agreement.

23. The Special Master grants Plaintiffs' Counsel the right to use up to $500,000 of the settlement fund for payment of the cost of notice(s) to potential members of the Settlement Class regarding the Settlement Agreement and related matters, and other costs and expenses reasonably incurred in connection with the administration of the Settlement Agreement (the "Administrative Expenses"), without the approval of the Court in each instance, so long as (a) the Administrative Expenses incurred or contracted for are reasonable and necessary to carry out the transactions contemplated by the Settlement Agreement, and (b) counsel for Chunghwa shall receive from Settlement Class Counsel a full accounting of all expenditures made in the event funds are returned [*13] to Chunghwa under the terms of the Settlement Agreement.

24. The Notice Company, Inc. is approved to serve as Settlement Administrator for the Indirect Purchaser Settlement Class.

25. The litigation against Chunghwa in this action is hereby stayed, pending further order of the Court.

SO ORDERED this 5 day of AUGUST, 2011.

MEMORANDUM OPINION

Presently pending and ready for review in this antitrust case is the motion to dismiss filed by Defendant, GXS, Inc. (ECF No. 9). The issues have been fully briefed and the court now rules, no hearing deemed necessary. See Local Rule 105.6. For the following reasons, the motion to dismiss will be granted.

I. Background

A. Factual Background[1]

Plaintiff Loren Data Corporation and Defendant GXS, Inc. are Electronic Data Interchange providers. Loren Data is a California corporation with its principal place of business in Indian Rocks Beach, Florida, while GXS is a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business in Gaithersburg, Maryland.

Electronic Data Interchange ("EDI") is described by Loren Data as "the electronic exchange of business [*2] data and documents, such as purchase orders or invoices, in a standardized digital format that can be processed via the Internet by computer systems." (ECF No. 1 ¶ 1). EDI messages are generated, sent, received, and ingested into enterprise computing systems for parties engaged in commercial trading, such as retailers and suppliers, shippers and receivers, and manufacturers and vendors. These messages travel over a system of private networks interconnected to each other with network protocols called Value Added Networks ("VANs") that are secure. For example a shipper might send a purchase order formatted in EDI over a VAN to its trading partners. Although VANs are privately owned, trading partners on different VANs can still communicate with each other if their VANs are connected. One common way this occurs is through an interconnect jointly maintained by two VAN providers; another option is through a commercial mailbox. Plaintiff contends that it is long standing practice in the EDI industry for VANs to grant "non-settlement peer Interconnects" to each other to facilitate the flow of EDI data. In a non-settlement peer Interconnect, EDI messages are transferred from one VAN to another [*3] with each VAN absorbing its own costs. A commercial mailbox is a paid service for transmitting messages sent on one VAN to trading partners using a different VAN. The VAN typically charges for use of a commercial mailbox based on the amount of data being transmitted. Mailboxes also differ from interconnects in that the messages are not delivered to the receiving trading partner with the same ease and speed.

Loren Data and GXS both operate VANs. Loren Data's VAN has the brand name of ECGrid and has been in operation for over ten years. It currently serves approximately 18,000 IDs (akin to phone numbers or email addresses) primarily in North America. GXS manages a significantly larger VAN branded as "TGMS" and also controls the legacy VANs IE, InovisWorks, and Tradanet that it obtained through merger or acquisition from former VAN providers. In 2002 GXS' predecessor, GEIS, controlled approximately 25% of the EDI IDs. Since that time, GXS acquired the Information Exchange (IE) VAN, a former division of IBM, and it merged with Inovis. Accordingly to Loren Data, it is now generally accepted that GXS controls 50% or more of the EDI market when measured by revenue, customer base, or IDs.

In [*4] November 2000, Loren Data approached GXS to request an interconnect. At that time GXS told Loren Data that it was in the process of rewriting its VAN Interconnect Agreement and a new agreement would be available soon. In February 2001, while the parties continued negotiations regarding a potential interconnect, GXS made an EDI mailbox available to Loren Data as a temporary measure. Then in August 2001, GXS notified Loren Data that it would not provide a peer interconnect to the GXS network and that Loren Data's temporary mailbox would be terminated if Loren Data did not pay the $30,000 due in fees. Loren Data's mailbox was terminated two weeks later, and it was forced to make alternate arrangements for its customers with trading partners on the GXS VAN or lose their business. In 2002 Loren Data made a similar request to interconnect with the GXS Van that was also denied.

In February 2003, IBM contracted with Loren Data to provide interconnect outsourcing for its federal government and Department of Defense EDI traffic. When GXS acquired IBM's EDI network in 2005, GXS honored the agreement for several years and Loren Data was able to maintain its interconnect with the former IBM VAN. [*5] Loren Data alleges that the contract was terminated on October 31, 2009, however, leaving Loren Data due $24,832.89 in unpaid invoices.

In August 2003, one of Loren Data's customers, Covisint, required routing to GXS' IDs and, thus, Loren Data had to settle its outstanding accounts with GXS and initiate a new formal agreement with GXS. GXS still refused to provide an interconnect and instead set up a metered mailbox with manual web interfaces. Loren Data maintains that "GXS' technical network interfaces were regularly degraded and modified to cripple the relationship, causing vexing, serious and damaging system-wide failure with the Loren Data network" and that these failures would not have occurred if Loren Data had been permitted to interconnect with GXS. (Id. ¶ 19). Loren Data further alleges that during this time period GXS granted non-settlement peer interconnects to other VANs, large and small, and that because Loren Data was denied an interconnect it missed market opportunities, attained reduced market footprint, lost revenue, and incurred extraordinary expenses.

In March 2009, Inovis, Inc. offered Loren Data the option to route to GXS' customers through the InovisWorks VAN at [*6] a monthly rate of $3500.00. Loren Data accepted this agreement and all its GXS traffic was re-routed through InovisWorks by June 30, 2009. Loren Data alleges that this arrangement was only marginally better than the metered mailbox, however, because it resulted in a loss of message visibility and tracking across networks, creating confusion and loss of name recognition for Loren Data. In addition, in June 2010, GXS announced the completion of its merger with InovisWorks and expressed its intent to renegotiate the terms of the Loren Data/Inovis interconnect when it expired in May 2011. In particular, GXS expressed its intent to return to using a metered mailbox for Loren Data messages. Loren Data alleges that through its current mailbox arrangement GXS charges it $.04 per kilo character (kc) of transmitted data, amounting to as much as $25,000-$30,000 per month in charges since 2001. Under its agreement with Inovis Loren Data was only charged $.01 per kc. Loren Data further alleges that with a typical non-settlement interconnect there is no charge per kc.

B. Procedural Background

On December 13, 2010, Loren Data filed a six count complaint in federal district court alleging that: (1) [*7] GXS violated section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C § 1, by entering into contracts, combinations and/or conspiracies in restraint of trade or commerce; (2) GXS violated section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, by attempting to create a monopoly in the EDI industry; (3) GXS violated section 2 of the Sherman Act by willfully acquiring and possessing monopoly power in the EDI industry and using its monopoly power to exclude competition; (4) GXS violated Maryland Antitrust law, Md. Code Ann., Com. Law § 11-204; (5) GXS is liable for tortious inference with Loren Data's business relationships; and (6) GXS breached its contracts with Loren Data. (ECF No. 1). On February 3, 2011, GXS filed a motion to dismiss the complaint for failure to state a claim and lack of subject matter jurisdiction. (ECF No. 9). Loren Data subsequently filed an amended complaint adding a supplemental statement of facts but otherwise simply incorporating the claims from its original complaint. (ECF No. 13.) The parties have stipulated that GXS' motion to dismiss and Loren Data's opposition may be deemed to apply to the first amended complaint. (ECF Nos. 16, 17).

II. Standard of Review

The purpose of a motion to [*8] dismiss pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) is to test the sufficiency of the plaintiff's complaint. See Edwards v. City of Goldsboro, 178 F.3d 231, 243 (4th Cir. 1999). Except in certain specified cases, a plaintiff's complaint need only satisfy the "simplified pleading standard" of Rule 8(a), Swierkiewicz v. Sorema N.A., 534 U.S. 506, 513, 122 S. Ct. 992, 152 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2002), which requires a "short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed.R.Civ.P. 8(a)(2). Nevertheless, "Rule 8(a)(2) still requires a 'showing,' rather than a blanket assertion, of entitlement to relief." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555 n.3, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). That showing must consist of more than "a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action" or "naked assertion[s] devoid of further factual enhancement." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009)(internal citations omitted).

In its determination, the court must consider all well-pled allegations in a complaint as true, Albright v. Oliver, 510 U.S. 266, 268, 114 S. Ct. 807, 127 L. Ed. 2d 114 (1994), and must construe all factual allegations in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. See Harrison v. Westinghouse Savannah River Co., 176 F.3d 776, 783 (4th Cir. 1999)(citing [*9] Mylan Labs., Inc. v. Matkari, 7 F.3d 1130, 1134 (4th Cir. 1993)). The court need not, however, accept unsupported legal allegations, Revene v. Charles County Comm'rs, 882 F.2d 870, 873 (4th Cir. 1989), legal conclusions couched as factual allegations, Iqbal, 129 S.Ct. at 1950, or conclusory factual allegations devoid of any reference to actual events, United Black Firefighters v. Hirst, 604 F.2d 844, 847 (4th Cir. 1979). See also Francis v. Giacomelli, 588 F.3d 186, 193 (4th Cir. 2009). "[W]here the well-pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, the complaint has alleged, but it has not 'show[n] . . . that the pleader is entitled to relief.'" Iqbal, 129 S.Ct. at 1950 (quoting Fed.R.Civ.P. 8(a)(2)). Thus, "[d]etermining whether a complaint states a plausible claim for relief will . . . be a context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense." Id.

III. Analysis

A. Sherman Act Claims

1. Section 1 of the Sherman Act

Count I of Loren Data's complaint alleges a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. Section 1 prohibits "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust [*10] or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations." Id. GXS contends that Loren Data has failed to state a claim under section 1 because neither the alleged facts nor any reasonable inference therefrom shows a contract or agreement to conspire between GXS and other EDI providers. In response, Loren Data argues that GXS' refusal to deal with Loren Data while simultaneously combining to allow all other VANS to interconnect constitutes a group boycott and is a per se violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act. (ECF No. 14, at 2).

"Section one of the Sherman Act applies only to concerted action; unilateral conduct is excluded from its purview." Oksanen v. Page Mem'l Hosp., 945 F.2d 696, 702 (4th Cir. 1991) (citing Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984)), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 1074, 112 S. Ct. 973, 117 L. Ed. 2d 137 (1992). As the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit emphasized in Virginia Vermiculite, Ltd v. Historic Green Springs, Inc, 307 F.3d 277, 282 (4th Cir. 2002), cert. denied, 538 U.S. 998, 123 S. Ct. 1900, 155 L. Ed. 2d 824 (2003), "concerted activity susceptible to sanction by section 1 is activity in which multiple parties join their resources, [*11] rights, or economic power together in order to achieve an outcome that, but for the concert, would naturally be frustrated by their competing interests (by way of profit-maximizing choices)."

The pleading requirements to state a claim for violation of section 1 are quite clear. Section 1 "requires a complaint with enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest that an agreement was made." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556. A plaintiff may plead an agreement by alleging direct or circumstantial evidence, or a combination of the two. West Penn Allegheny Health Sys., Inc. v. UPMC, 627 F.3d 85, 99-100 (3d Cir. 2010). The Supreme Court in Twombly further held "[a]n allegation of parallel conduct and a bare assertion of conspiracy will not suffice. Without more, parallel conduct does not suggest conspiracy, and a conclusory allegation of agreement at some unidentified point does not supply facts adequate to show illegality." 550 U.S. at 556-57. In dicta, the Twombly court indicated that a section 1 claim should include information as to the specific time and place of the illicit agreement and the names of the parties to the agreement. Id. at n.10. Subsequent decisions from the courts of appeal have [*12] dismissed claims under section 1 for failure to provide these specific details about the agreement. See, e.g., Total Benefits Planning Agency, Inc. v. Anthem Blue Cross & Blue Shield, 552 F.3d 430, 437 (6th Cir. 2008).

In addition to pleading the existence of an agreement, the plaintiff must prove that the conspiracy or combination to which the defendant was a party imposed an unreasonable restraint on trade. Courts generally evaluate whether a restraint is unreasonable under one of three approaches: "(1) per se analysis, for obviously anticompetitive restraints, (2) quick-look analysis, for those with some procompetitive justification, and (3) the full "rule of reason," for restraints whose net impact on competition is particularly difficult to determine." Continental Airlines, Inc. v. United Airlines, Inc., 277 F.3d 499, 508-09 (4th Cir. 2002). Under the per se approach, courts are permitted to make "categorical judgments that certain practices, including price fixing, horizontal output restraints, and market-allocation agreements, are illegal per se." Id. (citing Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pac. Stationery & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 289, 105 S. Ct. 2613, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1985)). "Practices suitable [*13] for per se analysis have been found over the years to 'be ones that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output,' and that are not 'designed to increase economic efficiency and render markets more, rather than less, competitive.'" Id. (quoting Broad. Music, Inc. v. CBS, 441 U.S. 1, 19-20, 99 S. Ct. 1551, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1979)). When a practice qualifies for per se analysis there is a "conclusive presumption that the restraint is unreasonable." See Arizona v. Maricopa Cnty. Med. Soc'y, 457 U.S. 332, 343-45, 102 S. Ct. 2466, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48 (1982). Under the rule of reason approach, by contrast, a factfinder must "decide whether under all the circumstances of the case the restrictive practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition." Id. at 343. Rule of reason analysis requires a detailed analysis of "the facts peculiar to the business, the history of the restraint, and the reasons why it was imposed." Continental Airlines, Inc., 277 F.3d at 509 (quoting Nat'l Soc'y of Prof'l Engr's v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 692, 98 S. Ct. 1355, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1978)). The intermediary level of analysis, quick-look, is appropriate for practices that have an obvious anticompetitive impact upon a quick look, but also obvious procompetitive justifications. [*14] Id.

Loren Data has not alleged adequate facts to establish that GXS contracted, combined, or conspired with other VANs to boycott Loren Data. The complaint contains only the conclusory allegations that "Defendant GXS, Inc. has entered into contracts, combinations, and/or conspiracies in restraint of trade and/or commerce" and that it "combined with other EDI providers to provide peer non-settlement interconnects to the exclusion of Loren Data." (ECF No. 1 ¶ 28). The complaint does not identify the parties with whom GXS agreed to restrain trade, the time or place at which such an agreement was reached, or the specific contours of such agreement. Inserting the word "combine" into its allegation is not enough to state a claim under section 1.

Elsewhere Loren Data alleges that GXS provided peer interconnects to other VANS, (see ECF No. 1 ¶ 20 (alleging that GXS provided interconnects to Sterling, Inovis, Easylink, NuBridges, Advanced Communications Systems, I-Connect, and York Worldwide)), but Loren Data does not allege that these VANs failed to provide peer interconnects to Loren Data, that they were ever forced to deny interconnects by GXS, or that they agreed to deny interconnects to [*15] Loren Data. To the contrary, Loren Data alleges that "it has been granted Interconnects with every other VAN." (Id. ¶ 6). Agreements between other VANs to establish peer connects with GXS do not constitute an agreement to boycott Loren Data. To the extent Loren Data intended to allege that other VANs agreed that GXS would boycott Loren Data, this is an agreement lacking any substance as GXS does not need the permission or consent of third parties to decide whether it will do business with Loren Data. See Monsanto Co. v. Spray- Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984) ("Independent action is not proscribed. A manufacturer of course generally has a right to deal, or refuse to deal, with whomever it likes, as long as it does so independently. . . . And a distributor is free to acquiesce in the manufacturer's demand in order to avoid termination.").

Loren Data's argument that horizontal group boycotts constitute per se violations of section 1 is irrelevant because Loren Data has not alleged any facts to suggest the existence of a horizontal group boycott. At most Loren Data has alleged GXS was boycotting Loren Data and other VANs did not try to stop GXS from doing so. [2] Single party boycotts [*16] are not per se violations of the Sherman Act.

2. Section 2 of the Sherman Act

[2] In its first amended complaint Loren Data alleges that GXS has "let it be known that it will not permit any other VAN that interconnects with GXS to enter into an agreement with Loren Data that is similar to Loren Data's current agreement with Inovis." (ECF No. 13 ¶ k). No further details are alleged to indicate how, when, or to whom this intention was conveyed or how GXS intends to carry out its intent. This allegation is far from adequate to allege an illegal boycott or any other form of conspiracy to restrain trade.

Counts II and III of Loren Data's complaint allege violations of section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. Section 2 makes it illegal to "monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations[.]" 15 U.S.C. § 2. The elements of claims alleging monopolization and attempted monopolization are quite similar. To state a monopolization claim, a plaintiff must show possession of monopoly power in a relevant market, willful acquisition, or maintenance of that power [*17] in an exclusionary manner as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of superior product, business acumen, or historic accident, and causal antitrust injury. United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966); Advanced Health-Care Servs., Inc. v. Radford Cmty. Hosp., 910 F.2d 139, 147 (4th Cir. 1990). To state a claim for attempted monopolization, a plaintiff must demonstrate: (1) a specific intent to monopolize the relevant market; (2) predatory or anticompetitive acts in furtherance of the intent; and (3) a dangerous probability of success. Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 456, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993); In re Microsoft Corp. Antitrust Litig., 333 F.3d 517 (4th Cir. 2003).

a. Maintaining a Monopoly

GXS argues that Loren Data has failed to state a claim for monopolization in count III because it has not alleged facts to show that GXS lacked a legitimate business justification for the challenged actions or even that GXS failed to deal with Loren Data in an anti-competitive fashion. GXS also argues that Loren Data has failed to allege a relevant product or geographic market for the supposed monopoly, or that GXS possessed a monopoly. (ECF No. 9-1, at 21-38).

1) [*18] Possession of Monopoly Power in Relevant Market

Monopoly power is defined as "the power to control prices or exclude competition." United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 391, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956). "Proof of a relevant market is the threshold for a Sherman Act § 2 claim. The plaintiff must establish the geographic and product market that was monopolized." Consul, Ltd. v. Transco Energy Co., 805 F.2d 490, 493 (4th Cir. 1986) (citing cases), cert. denied, 481 U.S. 1050, 107 S. Ct. 2182, 95 L. Ed. 2d 838 (1987). The requirements for the relevant geographic market were explained by the Fourth Circuit in Consul:

> [T]he geographic market should consist of an area in which the defendants operate and which the plaintiff can reasonably turn to for supplies." [RCM Supply Co. v. Hunter Douglas, Inc.,] 686 F.2d [1074] at 1077 [4th Cir. 1982] (emphasis in original). See Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 327-34, 81 S. Ct. 623, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1961). The penultimate question, towards which this preliminary inquiry into market definition is directed, is whether the defendant has market power: the ability to raise prices above levels that would exist in a perfectly competitive market. The geographic demarcation should not be too tightly [*19] drawn, unless clear evidence exists that potential competitors outside the region are hindered from entering. A market drawn too tightly, either in geographic terms that exclude potential suppliers or in product terms that exclude potential substitutes, creates the illusion of market power where none may exist.

Id. at 494-95 (internal footnote omitted). "In sum, 'a relevant market, then is the narrowest market which is wide enough so that products from adjacent areas or from other producers in the same area cannot compete on substantial parity with those included in the market.'" Int'l Wood Processors v. Power Dry, Inc., 792 F.2d 416, 430 (4th Cir. 1986) (quoting L. Sullivan, Handbook of the Law of Antitrust § 12, at 41 (1977)).

At the pleading stage, Loren Data need only identify a geographic market that could meet this criteria. Loren Data seems determined, however, to comply with this straightforward pleading requirement in the most circuitous fashion. As GXS notes, neither the original complaint nor the supplemental statement of facts in the amended complaint contain a clear statement of the relevant geographic market. Instead, the amended complaint contains allegations such as "Loren [*20] Data's market is primarily (more than 95%) with trading partners in North America," (ECF No. ¶ 6), and that "50% of [GXS'] customers were based in the United States." Loren Data also alleges, however, that a "smaller portion of Loren Data's business was in the United Kingdom" (id.) and references GXS' VAN in the UK. (Id. ¶ 8). From these allegations it is not entirely clear whether Loren Data maintains that the relevant geographic market is North America or that the relevant market is North America and the United Kingdom. Additionally, while the original complaint included a section entitled "Relevant Market" (ECF No. 1, at 2-4), this section did not delineate the geographic limits of the relevant market; it merely discussed the EDI industry in generic terms. It is only in Loren Data's opposition to the motion to dismiss that it unequivocally states "Loren Data competes with GXS in the EDI market in North America." (ECF No. 24). Ordinarily a plaintiff cannot rely on allegations not made in the actual complaint to survive a motion to dismiss. In this case, one could discern that North America is the relevant market from the allegations in the complaint, but it is not the only conclusion [*21] that could be drawn. But because Loren Data's claim has other failings, it need not be determined whether the inconclusive statements as to geographic market are adequate to state a claim.

With respect to the product market, competing products are in the same market if they are readily substitutable for one another. See Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962) ("the outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it."). Well-defined submarkets may also exist within a broader market, "which, in themselves, constitute product markets for antitrust purposes." Id. (citing United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 353 U.S. 586, 593-95, 77 S. Ct. 872, 1 L. Ed. 2d 1057 (1957)). "The boundaries of such a submarket may be determined by examining such practical indicia as industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate economic entity, the product's peculiar characteristics and uses, unique production facilities, distinct customers, distinct prices, sensitivity to price changes, and specialized vendors." Id.

Here, Loren Data identifies the Electronic Data Interchange [*22] industry as the relevant product market in which GXS allegedly possesses monopoly power by controlling at least 50% of the market. (ECF No. 1 ¶¶ 5, 35, and B). The complaint further explains details regarding the Electronic Data Interchange industry and its contours. Whether this industry constitutes a submarket for antitrust purposes is a factual allegation that ultimately should be determined by the factfinder, but at this stage it cannot be said that Loren Data has failed to plead a relevant product market in terms sufficient to state a claim.

GXS also argues that control of only fifty percent of the market is inadequate as a matter of law to constitute a monopoly. (See ECF No. 9-1, at 37 (citing United States v. Microsoft Corp., 253 F.3d 34, 51, 346 U.S. App. D.C. 330 (D.C. Cir. 2001), Colo. Interstate Gas Co. v. Natural Gas Pipeline Co. of Am., 885 F.2d 683, 694 n.18 (10th Cir. 1989), Spirit Airlines, v. Nw. Airlines, 431 F.3d 917, 935-36 (6th Cir. 2005)). It is true that some courts have held that 50% or 60% of market share, absent other relevant factors, is not enough to demonstrate the existence of monopoly power. See, e.g., PepsiCo, Inc. v. Coca-Cola, Co., 315 F.3d 101, 109 (2d Cir. 2002) ("absent [*23] additional evidence, such as an ability to control prices or exclude competition, a 64 percent market share is insufficient to infer monopoly power."); In re Se. Milk Antitrust Litig., 730 F.Supp.2d 804, 822 (E.D.Tenn. 2010) ("As a general rule, however, monopoly power requires proof of more than 60% market power."). Monopoly power is a factual determination, however, and courts consider many factors beyond percentage of market share including: "the size and strength of competing firms, freedom of entry into the field, pricing trends and practices in the industry, ability of consumers to substitute comparable goods on services from outside the market, and consumer demand factors." Weiss v. York Hosp., 745 F.2d 786, n.72 (3d Cir. 1984) (citing. L. Sullivan, Handbook of the Law of Antitrust §§ 22-32 (1977)), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1060, 105 S. Ct. 1777, 84 L. Ed. 2d 836 (1985). Loren Data's complaint included allegations relating to many of these factors, and, thus, the claim cannot be dismissed based on Loren Data's failure to allege a market share greater than 60%. See also E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. v. Kolon Indus., Inc., 637 F.3d 435, 443 (4th Cir. 2011) ("Because market definition is a deeply fact-intensive inquiry, [*24] courts hesitate to grant motions to dismiss for failure to plead a relevant product market.") (citing cases).

2) Willful Exclusionary Conduct

The possession of monopoly power does not violate section 2 of the Sherman Act unless it is accompanied by an element of willful anticompetitive conduct. Verizon Commc'ns, Inc. v. Law Offices of Curtis V. Trinko, LLP, 540 U.S. 398, 407, 124 S. Ct. 872, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823 (2004). Where the alleged anticompetitive conduct is conduct that would constitute a per se violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, willfulness is presumed. For other alleged violations, a plaintiff must demonstrate that the defendant did not have legitimate business reasons for its conduct or that the defendant engaged in exclusionary conduct manifesting "a willingness to forsake short-term profits to achieve an anticompetitive end" and "a distinctly anticompetitive bent." Id. at 409. Loren Data alleges that GXS denied Loren Data reasonable access to the GXS network of clients and intentionally used its position as an essential facility to control EDI market prices and to harm and eliminate horizontal competition. (ECF No. 1 ¶ 36). In its motion to dismiss, GXS argues that the alleged facts demonstrate that GXS [*25] did not refuse to deal with Loren Data because GXS had legitimate business reasons for its actions and because the GXS VAN is not an essential facility. (ECF No. 9-1, at 21-27).

First, as to the allegation that GXS denied Loren Data reasonable access to the GXS network of clients, "as a general rule, businesses are free to choose the parties with whom they will deal, as well as the prices, terms, and conditions of that dealing." See United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 307, 39 S. Ct. 465, 63 L. Ed. 992, 1919 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 460 (1919). The Supreme Court has "held that a firm with no antitrust duty to deal with its rivals at all is under no obligation to provide those rivals with a sufficient level of service." Pacific Bell Tel. Co. v. Linkline Commc'ns, Inc., 555 U.S. 438, 129 S.Ct. 1109, 1115, 172 L. Ed. 2d 836 (2009) (citing Verizon Commc'ns Inc. v. Law Offices of Curtis V. Trinko, LLP, 540 U.S. 398, 410, 124 S. Ct. 872, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823 (2004)). The Court further held that a firm "certainly has no duty to deal under terms and conditions that the rivals find commercially advantageous." The rationale behind this rule was set forth in Trinko:

> Firms may acquire monopoly power by establishing an infrastructure that renders them uniquely suited to serve their customers. Compelling such [*26] firms to share the source of their advantage is in some tension with the underlying purpose of antitrust law, since it may lessen the incentive for the monopolist, the rival, or both to invest in those economically beneficial facilities. Enforced sharing also requires antitrust courts to act as central planners, identifying the proper price, quantity, and other terms of dealing-a role for which they are ill suited. Moreover, compelling negotiation between competitors may facilitate the supreme evil of antitrust: collusion.

Nevertheless, "[t]here are also limited circumstances in which a firm's unilateral refusal to deal with its rivals can give rise to antitrust liability." Pacific Bell Tel. Co., 129 S.Ct. at 1119 (citing Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 608-611, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 (1985)). In Aspen Skiing, the Court found that a rival's refusal to deal with its competitor violated section 2 because the defendant's conduct revealed a distinctly anticompetitive bent. 472 U.S. at 608-611. In other words, Aspen Skiing recognized an affirmative duty to deal where refusal to do so would result in an important change in a competitive market with negative consequences [*27] for consumers. In Aspen Skiing, the defendant owned three out of the four mountain ski areas in the Aspen region. For many years the defendant had cooperated with the owner of the fourth ski area to offer a combined multi-day, all area ski ticket with proceeds split in accordance with purchasers' use of lifts at the four areas. Over time the defendant demanded a greater percentage of the profits and ultimately cancelled the joint ticket and refused even to sell lift tickets at retail price to the owner of the fourth area. In upholding the jury finding that defendant's conduct violated section 2, the Court reasoned that "the jury may well have concluded that [the defendant] elected to forgo these short-run benefits because it was more interested in reducing competition . . . over the long run by harming its smaller competitor." Id. at 608.

A claim of refusal to deal is only cognizable if it harms competition generally and not solely the competitor challenging the monopolist's action. See Rural Tel. Serv. v. Feist Publ'ns, 957 F.2d 765, 768 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 984, 113 S. Ct. 490, 121 L. Ed. 2d 429 (1992); U.S. v. Microsoft Corp., 253 F.3d 34, 58, 346 U.S. App. D.C. 330 (D.C. Cir. 2001) ("[alleged anticompetitive conduct] must [*28] harm the competitive process and thereby harm consumers. In contrast, harm to one or more competitors will not suffice."). In addition, the duty to deal is more likely to be recognized where the defendant is ending a long-standing relationship with a competitor, see, e.g., High Tech. Careers v. San Jose Mercury News, 996 F.2d 987, 991 (9th Cir. 1993), or where the monopolist's aid is essential. See, e.g., Olympia Equip. Leasing Co. v. Western Union Tel., 802 F.2d 217, 219 (7th Cir. 1986) ("A monopolist is not required to subsidize its competitors by doing their selling for them."), cert. denied, 480 U.S. 934, 107 S. Ct. 1574, 94 L. Ed. 2d 765 (1987).

As its primary argument for dismissal, GXS argues that it has not refused to deal with Loren Data. GXS notes that the complaint identifies three current connections between the Loren Data VAN and the GXS VAN, (ECF No. 9-1, at 23 (citing ECF No. 1 ¶ 10)), and that Loren Data has not alleged that GXS will discontinue all connections in the future, only that GXS wants to renegotiate the terms and may charge more for access to its VAN. (Id. at 24). In response, Loren Data contends that GXS has refused to deal on certain occasions by refusing Loren Data's requests for interconnects [*29] and by countering the $3500 per month offer of InovisWorks to connect to GXS through its VAN with an offer to use GXS' mailbox for $13,000 per month. (ECF No. 14, at 13).

As a general matter, GXS is correct that a refusal to deal at the terms and conditions desired by a plaintiff does not violate the Sherman Act. See Abcor Corp. v. AM Int'l Inc., 916 F.2d 924, 929-30 (4th Cir. 1990) (holding that defendant had not engaged in anti-competitive behavior when it enacted policy that shifted costs of maintaining inventory to a competitor who had previously gotten a "free ride"); Laurel Sand & Gravel, Inc. v. CSX Transp., Inc., 924 F.2d 539, 544-45 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 814, 112 S. Ct. 64, 116 L. Ed. 2d 39 (1991); Morris Commc'ns Corp. v. PGA Tour, Inc., 364 F.3d 1288, 1296 (11th Cir. 2004) ("Section 2 of the Sherman Act does not require [defendant] to give its product freely to its competitors."). There need not be an outright refusal to deal, however, if a defendant offers only unreasonable terms for access to an essential facility under its control. Delaware & Hudson Ry. Co. v. Consol. Rail Corp., 902 F.2d 174, 179-80 (2d Cir. 1990). Thus, while Loren Data's complaint has not stated facts to support the allegation [*30] that GXS has refused entirely to deal, if Loren Data has pleaded facts to establish that GSX' VAN is an essential facility and that the terms offered by GSX were unreasonable, its claim for monopolization may survive.

The essential facilities doctrine has never been expressly rejected or adopted by the Supreme Court, Trinko, 540 U.S. at 410, but has been cited and relied upon by the courts of appeal. See, e.g., MCI Commc'ns v. Am. Tel. & Tel. Co., 708 F.2d 1081, 1132-33 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 891, 104 S. Ct. 234, 78 L. Ed. 2d 226 (1983); Laurel Sand & Gravel, Inc., 924 F.2d at 544; Delaware & Hudson Ry. Co., 902 F.2d at 179-80. In order to establish a violation of section 2 using this doctrine, four elements must be proven: (1) control by the monopolist of the essential facility; (2) the inability of the competitor seeking access to practically or reasonably duplicate the facility; (3) the denial of the facility to the competitor; and (4) the feasibility of the monopolist to provide the facility. Laurel Sand & Gravel, 924 F.2d at 544. To be essential, "a facility need not be indispensable; it is sufficient if duplication of the facility would be economically infeasible and if denial of its use inflicts a [*31] severe handicap on potential market entrants." Fishman v. Estate of Wirtz, 807 F.2d 520, 539 (7th Cir. 1986). Other courts have explained that the facility must not be "merely helpful, but vital to the claimant's competitive viability," Am. Online, Inc. v. GreatDeals.Net, 49 F.Supp.2d 851, 862 (E.D.Va. 1999), and that a plaintiff must show "more than inconvenience or even some economic loss" stemming from the lack of access to the facility to establish that it is essential. Advance Health-Care Servs. v. Giles Mem'l Hosp., 846 F.Supp. 488, 498 (W.D.Va. 1994). Moreover, the owner of an essential facility is not obligated to make it available under whatever terms the competitor wishes; the owner need only offer access under reasonable terms. See Laurel Sand & Gravel, Inc., 924 F.2d at 544. Terms are not unreasonable simply because they will reduce a competitor's profits. Id. Indeed as the Seventh Circuit has explained, "the most economical route is not an essential facility when other routes are available." Midwest Gas Servs., Inc. v. Indiana Gas Co., Inc., 317 F.3d 703, 714 (7th Cir. 2003) (citing Endsley v. City of Chicago, 230 F.3d 276, 283 (7th Cir. 2000)) (holding that defendant's [*32] refusal to allow plaintiff to interconnect to its gas pipeline network where other routes were available to transport the gas to its end destination did not constitute denial of access to an essential facility).

Here, Loren Data has not alleged facts to establish that GXS is liable pursuant to the essential facilities doctrine. Although Loren Data tries to argue that without an interconnect to the GSX VAN it cannot continue its business operations, the alleged facts do not demonstrate that the GXS VAN is essential or that Loren Data has not been offered reasonable means of access. First, Loren Data acknowledges that there are at least 36 VANs aside from GXS, as well as other means of transferring EDI from one trading partner to another. In addition, the complaint alleges that Loren Data has successfully worked around GXS' refusal to provide an interconnect for the past ten years, by using a metered mailbox and by interconnecting with other VANs that can interconnect with GXS' customers. There are also no alleged facts from which one can conclude that the terms offered by GXS for Loren Data to connect via a commercial mailbox are unreasonable.

b. Attempted Monopoly

In contrast to claims [*33] of actual monopolization, to establish attempted monopoly under section 2 a plaintiff must demonstrate that the defendant had specific intent to monopolize and a dangerous probability of success at achieving monopoly power. In re Microsoft Antitrust Litig., 333 F.3d 517, 534 (4th Cir. 2003). Specific intent may be inferred from the defendant's anticompetitive practices. M & M Med. Supplies & Serv., Inc. v. Pleasant Valley Hosp., Inc., 981 F.2d 160, 166 (4th Cir. 1992) (citing Abcor, 916 F.2d at 927; Gen. Indus. Corp. v. Hartz Mountain Corp., 810 F.2d 795, 802 (8th Cir. 1987)). But where there are legitimate business reasons motivating a refusal to deal, the requisite intent for an attempt to monopolize claim is not met. See J.H. Westerbeke Corp. v Onan Corp., 580 F.Supp. 1173 (D.Mass. 1984).

GXS contends that Loren Data has failed to state a claim for attempted monopolization because it has not alleged facts to show specific intent or a dangerous probability of success. As discussed above, the conduct that Loren Data alleges does not demonstrate that GSX had an intent to monopolize. GSX does business with other VAN providers, large and small, including offering them interconnects. Loren [*34] Data has also not alleged facts to establish a dangerous probability that GXS will succeed in establishing a monopoly. The requirements for establishing a dangerous probability of success were set forth in M & M Medical Supplies and Service, Inc.. There the Fourth Circuit explained:

> The third element of attempted monopolization, a dangerous probability of success, must be shown to be substantial and real. Market share is relevant, but its relevance is tempered by evidence of the other two elements of the claim. Compelling evidence of an intent to monopolize or of anticompetitive conduct reduces the level of market share that need be shown. Conversely, weak evidence of the other two elements requires a showing of significant market share. A rising share may show more probability of success than a falling share. Other factors must be considered, such as ease of entry, which heralds slight chance of success, or exclusionary conduct without the justification of efficiency, which enhances the likelihood of success.

981 F.2d at 168 (citing generally 3 Philip Areeda & Donald F. Turner, Antitrust Law ¶ 835, at 346-48 (1978)).
