independent, private cause of action. Defendants contend that the HCQIA merely provides for immunity from suit and therefore count four should be dismissed. Plaintiff argues that count four should not be dismissed because plaintiff properly and adequately has pled pendent state law claims of interference with a business or economic enterprise. In their reply, defendants contend that a plain reading of count four of plaintiff's complaint fails to state a claim for interference with business expectancies or contractual relationships as plaintiff has argued, again contending that this count should be dismissed.

The court agrees that count four should be dismissed. HN11 [↑] The HCQIA provides only for limited immunity from civil damages incurred as the result of professional peer review action and does not provide for an independent, private right of action. The court also finds the complaint deficient of any state law claims for interference with a business or economic enterprise. Count four is entitled "Schueller v. AMH __ Suspension of Privileges violation of Health Care Quality Improvement Act __ Denial of Due Process" and nowhere within the six paragraphs of count four does plaintiff allege a claim under state law or even hint at alleging any claim other than one under the HCQIA. Accordingly, count four is dismissed for failure to state a claim against Ashley Memorial Hospital for which relief can be granted.

each as illustrative of antitrust violations. This conclusion is supported by plaintiff's repeated references to the "peer review" proceedings as well as the suspension and termination of his medical privileges; this includes but is not limited to, references in paragraphs 18, 19, 37, 38, 39, 40, 42, 43, 44, 47, 52, 53, 54, 55 and 57 of his complaint. Thus, the court finds that plaintiff's action is based, at least in part, upon the professional peer review proceedings conducted by Ashley Memorial and therefore the provisions of the HCQIA are relevant and applicable to this matter.

When it promulgated the HCQIA in 1986, Congress made the following findings:

1. The increasing occurrence of medical malpractice and the need to improve the quality of medical care have become [*25] nationwide problems that warrant greater efforts than those that can be undertaken by any individual State.
2. There is a national need to restrict the ability of incompetent physicians to move from State to State without disclosure or discovery of the physician's previous damaging or incompetent performance.
3. This nationwide problem can be remedied through effective professional peer review.
4. The threat of private money damage liability under Federal laws, including treble damage liability under Federal antitrust law, unreasonably discourages physicians from participating in effective professional peer review.
5. There is an overriding national need to provide incentive and protection for physicians engaging in effective professional peer review.

42 U.S.C. § 11101. To address the concerns identified in its findings, Congress provided for limited liability ⁵ [*26] in connection with professional peer review action ⁶ taken by a professional review body ⁷ provided that the action meets specified standards. See 42 U.S.C. § 11112(a).

HN14 [↑]

The defendants [*27] can qualify for immunity under the HCQIA if they can demonstrate that the (1) professional review actions complied with the standards set forth in 42 U.S.C. § 11112, (2) results of the peer review were reported properly to the state authorities in compliance with 42 U.S.C. §§ 11131(c)(1), 11151(2), and (3) professional review actions occurred after November 14, 1986, the effective date of the HCQIA. See Austin v. McNamara, 731 F. Supp. 934, 939 (C.D.Cal. 1990), aff'd, 979 F.2d 728 (9th Cir. 1992). There is no dispute that the professional peer review at issue in this matter occurred after November 14, 1986, and there has been no assertion by plaintiff that the results of the peer review were not reported to the appropriate state authorities. In fact, plaintiff has challenged the fact that information regarding his suspension was released to the National Practitioner Data Bank. The only issue for application of immunity, therefore, is whether defendants complied with the statutory requisites for immunity found in § 11112(a).

Specifically, HN15 [↑] for a professional review body to be protected by the HCQIA's immunity ⁸, the action of that body must be taken,

⁵ See 42 U.S.C. § 11111.

⁶ HN12 [↑] "Professional review action" is defined as "an action or recommendation of a professional review body which is taken or made in the conduct of a professional review activity, which is based on the competence or professional conduct of an individual physician (which conduct affects or could affect adversely the health or welfare of a patient or patients), and which affects (or may affect) adversely the clinical privileges, or membership in a professional society, of the physician. Such term includes a formal decision of a professional review body not to take an action or make a recommendation described in the previous sentence and also includes professional review activities relating to a professional review action." 42 U.S.C. § 11151(9).

⁷ HN13 [↑] "Professional review body" is defined as "a health care entity and the governing body or any committee of a health care entity which conducts professional review activity, and includes any committee of the medical staff of such an entity when assisting the governing body is a professional review activity." 42 U.S.C. § 11151(11).

- (1) in the [*28] reasonable belief that the action was in the furtherance of quality health care,
- (2) after a reasonable effort to obtain the facts of the matter,
- (3) after adequate notice and hearing procedures are afforded to the physician involved or after such other procedures as are fair to the physician under the circumstances, and
- (4) in the reasonable belief that the action was warranted by the facts known after such reasonable effort to obtain facts and after meeting the requirements of paragraph (3).

A professional review action shall be presumed to have met the preceding standards necessary for the protection set out in section 11111\(a\) of this title unless the presumption is rebutted by a preponderance of the evidence.

42 U.S.C. § 11112\(a\).

After examining the Ashley Memorial documents submitted by the [*29] parties, the court believes that, as a matter of law, the professional peer review proceedings conducted with respect to the plaintiff meet the statutory requirements for immunity. Inquiries into plaintiff's practice which eventually led to revocation of plaintiff's clinical privileges were initiated because of plaintiff's alleged "disruptive behavior and conduct not consistent with that of the professional staff of the hospital." Report of Board of Governors Meeting, April 17, 1991. Apparently, this inquiry in 1991 followed a series of conflicts between plaintiff and members of the hospital board and staff which began sometime after plaintiff joined the Ashley Memorial staff. See Report of Special Board Meeting, July 30, 1986; Report of Executive Committee Meeting, August 4, 1986; Report of Board of Governors Meeting, August 27, 1986; Letter to Dr. Steven Schueller, August 28, 1986.

On May 8, 1991, Steve McAdams, Chairman of the Board of Governors, directed Dr. Toon, at that time Chief of Staff for Ashley Memorial, to take corrective action pursuant to the medical staff Bylaws to investigate conduct which McAdams labeled as "potentially adversely affecting patient care." Examples [*30] of such disruptive and unprofessional activities included plaintiff's acceptance of a. referral for vascular surgery which was beyond the capabilities of the hospital; evidence of unauthorized impromptu peer review of other physicians' patients' files and unauthorized public disclosure of patient information; unilateral revision of emergency room procedures inconsistent with the practices of the medical staff; refusal to attend emergency room patients while on emergency room call; declaration of policy with respect to unassigned patients in emergency room; disruptive conduct at medical staff meetings; written demands to hospital administrator demanding changes in emergency room schedule; publicizing efforts to jeopardize the hospital's tax-exempt status; publicizing through press releases differences in opinions with hospital personnel; accusation of criminal conduct by hospital publicized in press releases; and attempts to perform surgery in hospital without appropriate equipment and personnel.

Thereafter, on May 13, 1991, Dr. Toon appointed Drs. Rankin, Gresham, Walsh, Thompson and Garcia to an ad hoc committee to interview Dr. Schueller and make recommendations pertinent to the [*31] numerous allegations contained in McAdam's letter. Plaintiff received notice of this action. See Letter of Dr. Toon, May 13, 1991. On May 20, 1991, Dr. Rankin reported to the hospital the results of the interview with Dr. Schueller and recommended that a letter be sent to Dr. Schueller encouraging closer cooperation with the staff and the Board in the functions of the hospital, less divisive behavior, and adherence to the hospital's emergency room policies. On May 28, 1991, Dr. Toon notified McAdams and the Board of Governors of the committee's recommendation. At a meeting of the Board of Governors on June 19, 1991, the Board accepted the recommendation. During this meeting, the Board also reviewed a letter by Dr. Schueller to the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations dated May 14, 1991. On July 30, 1991, the Board requested that the staff review the letter and determine whether this letter should be viewed as "disruptive behavior."

At a meeting on August 6, 1991, the medical staff executive committee met and determined that the letter was inappropriate and disruptive. The meeting also addressed the altercation between Drs. Schueller and Garcia which had [*32] occurred that day. On August 12, 1991, the medical staff met to discuss these matters and recommended to the Board that Dr. Schueller's clinical privileges be revoked based on the following: the letter to the accreditation commission; the inability to locate Dr. Schueller while on emergency room call on May 20, 1991; the altercation between Drs. Schueller and Garcia on August 6, 1991; two instances by Dr. Schueller of disruptive and offensive videotaping in the hospital; attempts to disrupt hospital recruiting; and other various instances of disruptive behavior. On August 14, 1991, Dr. Schueller requested a hearing on the clinical privilege suspension.

⁸ HN16 [↑] The immunity available is limited to protection from "damages under any law of the United States or of any State," excepting any civil rights proceedings. 42 U.S.C. § 11111\(a\)\(1\).

The hearing was held on August 28, 1991, and Dr. Schueller was in attendance for approximately fifteen minutes. At the conclusion of the hearing, the committee made the recommendation to the Board to continue Dr. Schueller's suspension. A review of the committee's action was requested by Dr. Schueller and this was conducted on September 20, 1991. The ad hoc committee reviewed the documentation and evidence was presented which was made a part of the record. At the conclusion of the meeting, the decision to continue Dr. Schueller's suspension [*33] and revocation of clinical privileges was reached and the staff also voted to terminate Dr. Schueller from the medical staff. Then, on December 16, 1991, the Board of Governors voted to accept the recommendations that Dr. Schueller's clinical privileges be suspended and that he no longer be allowed to practice at Ashley Memorial.

This professional peer review is entitled to a statutory presumption of compliance with the HCQIA until rebutted by a preponderance of the evidence and the court believes that plaintiff has neglected to present evidence which overcomes this presumption. Moreover, the court finds that the staff members which conducted the peer review did so with the "reasonable belief that the action was in the furtherance of quality health care." See 42 U.S.C. § 11112\(a\)\(1\). HN17 This objective "reasonable belief" standard is satisfied if the reviewers, with the information available to them at the time of the professional review action, would reasonably have concluded that their action would restrict incompetent behavior or would protect patients. H.R. Rep. No. 903, 99th Cong., 2d Sess. 10, reprinted in 1986 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 6393. The court finds that the [*34] ad hoc committee, the medical staff and the Board of Governors, armed with the information available to them at the time of the professional review action, "reasonably concluded that their action would restrict incompetent behavior or would protect patients." Thus, the court finds that subsection (a)(1) of § 11112 has been satisfied.

The court is also satisfied that defendants made a reasonable effort to obtain the facts with respect to Dr. Schueller's disruptive conduct. The inquiry which was initiated in April of 1991 did not culminate in a final decision until December of that year. During that time, the ad hoc committee, composed of staff members in accordance with the hospital's bylaws, internally investigated the matter, interviewed Dr. Schueller and conducted numerous meetings and hearings at which Dr. Schueller was given the opportunity to discuss the allegations against him. The court believes that the evidence is supportive of the conclusion that every effort was made to obtain the facts of this matter. See 42 U.S.C. § 11112\(a\)\(2\).

For similar reasons, the court likewise believes that adequate notice and hearing procedures are afforded to Dr. Schueller which were [*35] fair under the circumstances and thus finds that subsection (a)(3) has been satisfied. Although HN18 failure to comply with the specific notice and hearing requirements of § 11112\(b\)\(1\), without more, does not "constitute failure to meet the standards of subsection (a)(3) of this section," the court believes that there is sufficient evidence to conclude that Dr. Schueller received due process. Dr. Schueller was given notice that professional review action had been proposed along with the reasons for such action and was afforded the opportunity to request a hearing and to appear with counsel. Dr. Schueller requested a hearing and one was conducted. There is even evidence in the record meetings of the ad hoc committee were rescheduled to accommodate Dr. Schueller. The court is satisfied that plaintiff was given the opportunity to adequate process and evidence in the record that plaintiff opted not to exercise his full rights thereto by leaving proceedings prior to their conclusion does not render the proceedings defective. See § 11112\(b\)\(3\)\(B\).

The court also finds that it was the reasonable belief of the medical staff and Board of Governors of Ashley Memorial that the action taken [*36] with respect to Dr. Schueller "was warranted by the facts known after such reasonable effort to obtain facts and after meeting the requirements of paragraph (3)." Accordingly, immunity extends to defendants under the HCQIA in their capacity as a professional review body with regard to the professional review action culminating in revocation of plaintiff's clinical privileges at Ashley Memorial.

4. Sherman Antitrust Act

a. Statute of Limitation

As immunity under the HCQIA extends only to liability for damages which may be incurred in plaintiff's antitrust case and as plaintiff is also seeking injunctive relief, the court must continue its discussion under the Sherman Antitrust Act. With respect to plaintiff's antitrust claims, defendants first contend that these claims are barred by the applicable four (4) year statute of limitation as provided by the Clayton Act. Stating that this action was filed on June 16, 1992, defendants contend that any claims asserted by plaintiff which accrued prior to June 16, 1988, are barred. Specifically, defendants contend that plaintiff was aware of the purported conspiracy to violate the Sherman Antitrust Act as early as 1985 when Mr. [*37] Al Smith, a nurse anesthetist, allegedly told plaintiff that there was a "plan" at the hospital to let the plaintiff "die on the vine" and then to bring in another surgeon. Mr. Smith allegedly learned of this "plan" from Mr. Norman Reynolds, the administrator at that time of Ashley Memorial Hospital. Defendants characterize this act as the "only cognizable overt act" upon which plaintiff can base his antitrust claims.

Moreover, defendants urge that plaintiff was aware of his antitrust claims by 1987 when he filed his counterclaim in the state court action asserting essentially the same allegations and including the alleged "die on the vine" statement. Additionally, defendants contend that plaintiff's allegations that his income was diminished from 1986 to 1990 as a result of the alleged misconduct on the part of defendants is further evidence that plaintiff was aware, prior to June 16, 1988, that his potential antitrust claims were accruing. Alternatively, defendants argue that these losses suffered by plaintiff are simply "continuing effects" or "merely the abatable but unabated inertial consequences of some pre-limitations" conduct. Thus, defendants argue that since all of plaintiff's [*38] antitrust claims accrued prior to June 16, 1988, with only "continuing effects" of a previous overt act rather than "fresh instances" of overt acts since that time, each of plaintiff's antitrust claims are barred by the statute of limitation.

Plaintiff admits that the period for which he can recover damages is limited to that period June 17, 1988, forward. Plaintiff, however, challenges defendants' characterization of the losses suffered by plaintiff as simply the "continuing effects" of some pre-limitations conduct. Rather, plaintiff contends that fresh acts of Conspiracy and a continuing implementation of the boycott and refusal to deal with the plaintiff occurred between June 17, 1988, and June 16, 1992, the date upon which plaintiff filed his complaint. Plaintiff alleges that the defendants implemented the "die on the vine" plan during each of the years since 1988, providing as evidence the alleged decrease in referrals from the 1985 level, by eighty percent in 1988, ninety-two percent in 1989, and ninety-five percent in 1990. Plaintiff then contends that his surgical practice received permanent injury in 1991 when his credentials were revoked and plaintiff was unfairly associated [*39] with incompetent physicians through inclusion of his name in the National Practitioner Data Bank. Unlike the cases argued by defendants, plaintiff asserts that a business relationship was maintained between plaintiff and defendants throughout 1990, and that each act of boycott and refusal to deal created a new cause of action. Plaintiff then cites several examples of "fresh acts" within the limitations period which, if believed and aggregated with previous acts, allegedly indicative of a continuing conspiracy on behalf of defendants.

Defendants' reply is that plaintiff has presented insufficient evidence of overt acts occurring after June 17, 1988, to support his antitrust claims. Defendants contend that plaintiff's evidence, which points only to an alleged reduction in the number of referrals during the relevant period of time, without more, does not constitute an overt act, arguing again that the Sherman Act protects competition and not competitors. Then defendants assume, for the sake of argument, that even if referral reduction was experienced, plaintiff has failed to demonstrate that the referrals were part of any antitrust conspiracy or collective boycott. Defendants contends [*40] that the hospital administrator's alleged "die on the vine" statement, even if true, is not evidence that the defendants participated, or were even aware of, any plan of conspiracy to boycott plaintiff.

The court believes that plaintiff has presented little evidence which can be construed as overt acts of conspiracy by defendants occurring since June, 1988. However, as the court finds that plaintiff's antitrust claims are barred for substantive reasons discussed herein, the court finds it unnecessary to participate in any lengthy statute of limitations discussion and summary judgment on this basis is hereby denied.⁹

[*41] b. Merits of the Antitrust Claims

Defendants argue that plaintiff cannot prevail on the merits of his antitrust claims, contending primarily that plaintiff has failed to demonstrate any actual injury to competition as required. Turning first to plaintiff's boycott claims under § 1 of the Sherman Act, defendants state that as a threshold matter plaintiff is required to demonstrate that the alleged misconduct had a detrimental effect on competition in the relevant market or that defendants had "market power" in the relevant market. Defendants contend, however, that plaintiff cannot show that Ashley Memorial Hospital had the requisite "market power" in the relevant market or that the alleged misconduct of defendants had any detrimental impact on competition. According to defendants, there can be no injury because there was no competition in the relevant market, a twenty-five mile radius of Crossett, Arkansas.

Defendants then address plaintiff's monopolization and attempted monopolization claims under § 2 of the Sherman Act, stating first that, for the purposes of the motion for summary judgment, defendants admit the existence of a "natural" monopoly but deny its illegality. [*42] Defendants contend that although Ashley Memorial Hospital is the sole provider of surgical services as a primary care facility within the 25 mile radius of Crossett, the hospital's monopoly status is the result of economies of scale since the relevant market can accommodate only one provider of these services. Defendants argue, therefore, that the hospital meets the Eighth Circuit's definition of a "natural" monopoly and for that very reason, cannot be held liable under § 2 of the Sherman Act.

Defendants next argue that the "essential facility" doctrine is inapplicable to the facts of this case. Stating that plaintiff narrowly defined the relevant market so as to assert that Ashley Memorial is an "essential facility" and thus must make its facilities available to the plaintiff as the only means by which plaintiff can practice his profession, defendants contend that the practice of medicine in Arkansas is a privilege subject to regulation and revocation and is not a physician's right. Defendants thus contend that it would be inappropriate to apply a doctrine which would prevent hospitals from restricting unqualified doctors from the practice of medicine.

Defendants' final contention [*43] with respect to plaintiff's antitrust claims is that even if Ashley Memorial has market power or a monopoly in the relevant market, this status does not extend to surgical services. Defendants assert that strictly speaking the hospital does not offer surgical services but rather permits doctors to offer these services at its facility. Characterizing plaintiff's argument as one in which the hospital leverages its power in the market for hospital facilities by controlling the market for surgical services, defendants contend that this theory should be rejected. Defendants contend that Ashley Memorial cannot monopolize or attempt to monopolize the surgical services market because the hospital does not provide these services, only the space in which the services may be performed. Furthermore, the hospital does not prevent a doctor from obtaining privileges at another facility; doctors tend to practice in the most convenient hospital. Thus, defendants contend that Ashley Memorial cannot participate or realistically control the market for surgical services and therefore the antitrust claims against the hospital should be dismissed.

Responding to these contentions, plaintiff criticizes defendants [*44] for characterizing his § 1 Sherman Antitrust Act claims as based simply upon the peer review or hospital credentials. Plaintiff reiterates that his claims are ones for continuing conspiracy to boycott and refusal to deal with the plaintiff, conspiracy to monopolize the practice of medicine within the market served, and actual collective boycott and refusal to deal with the plaintiff. Recognizing that an indispensable element of these claims is "harm to competition" or an "anticompetitive injury," plaintiff contends that the output of surgical services in the market has been restricted as the result of defendants' anticompetitive activities. Plaintiff also contends that there is clear evidence of non-competitive prices for health care services as defendants have the power to control prices in the market.

⁹ Defendants make a similar argument under the equitable doctrine of laches, contending that plaintiff's claims are barred even if the applicable statute of limitations has not expired. Based upon the rulings contained herein, the court also finds it unnecessary to delve into any substantive discussion with respect to the doctrine of laches and summary judgment based upon laches is hereby denied.

Plaintiff cites as evidence the endoscopy procedures performed in the hospital operating room at Ashley Memorial by Dr. Birriel which were determined by a peer review organization of board certified surgeons and gastroenterologists to generally be a waste of medical resources. In 1993, the Georgia-Pacific Health Care Plan also commented upon the high costs of gastric procedures prevailing [*45] at Ashley Memorial. Plaintiff contends that he has performed the same procedures outside of the hospital operating room with minimal assistance resulting in lower charges to the patient and the insurer. The result of lower output and higher prices, according to plaintiff, is that surgical patients in this market are deprived of the least expensive, yet adequate treatment, which is suitable for the needs of the patients. Thus, consumers of medical services must either pay the increased cost or go outside the relevant market to obtain the services.

Turning to his § 2 Sherman Antitrust Act claims, plaintiff first points out that defendants' argument urging dismissal of count two against Ashley Memorial was without merit because Ashley Memorial not charged in count two and thus plaintiff does not object to such a dismissal. Plaintiff contends, therefore, that defendants' argument with respect to Ashley Memorial's status as a natural monopoly for purposes of count two was a waste of valuable resources. Plaintiff notes, however, that the same analysis does not apply to count three, the conspiracy to monopolize claim, in that Ashley Memorial's status as a natural monopolist has nothing [*46] to do with whether the physician defendants and others, including the hospital, conspired to monopolize the practice of medicine at Ashley Memorial.

Contrary to defendants, plaintiff then argues that the "essential facility" doctrine applies to the facts of this case. Plaintiff contends that the doctrine would be inapplicable in a simple "peer review" case, reiterating his contention that the basis of his claims is not "peer review" but rather conspiracy to boycott, monopolize and refusal to deal under the Sherman Act. Plaintiff points out that nothing in defendants' motion for summary judgment addresses conspiracy.

i. Section One Claims

Plaintiff has asserted that defendants violated HN19 [↑] § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, which states, in pertinent part, that every contract, combination . . . or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, . . . is hereby declared illegal.

15 U.S.C. § 1 (1982). Not surprisingly, the courts of this circuit have required proof of two essential elements in any action under § 1: (1) a contract, combination, or conspiracy, which results in (2) an unreasonable restraint of trade. Eureka Urethane, Inc. [*47] v. PBA, Inc., 746 F. Supp. 915 (E.D. Mo. 1990), aff'd, 935 F.2d 990 (8th Cir. 1991).

Plaintiff contends that defendants engaged in a conspiracy to harm plaintiff's medical practice. HN20 [↑] A Conspiracy imports a plurality of persons acting in concert to attain a "common goal or purpose." Eureka Urethane, 746 F. Supp. at 930. Accordingly, the Supreme Court, in Fisher v. City of Berkeley, 475 U.S. 260, 106 S. Ct. 1045, 89 L. Ed. 2d 206 (1986), recently reiterated that § 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits only unreasonable restraints of trade "effected by a 'contract, combination . . . , or conspiracy' between separate entities." 106 S. Ct. at 1049 quoting Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984) (emphasis in original). Thus, § 1 applies only to concerted action; unilateral action is excluded from its purview. Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 1469, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984).

Proof of concerted action requires evidence of a relationship between at least two legally distinct persons or entities. The court, therefore, must proceed to determine whether defendants and their [*48] agents and employees are separate entities for the purpose of a § 1 conspiracy. Under the facts of this matter, the court believes that the staff of Ashley Memorial is acting as an agent of Ashley Memorial during the peer review process and as such is distinct from the hospital.

This view is premised upon the 1984 Supreme Court case of Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., supra, which set forth a principle of intracorporate immunity to be applied in § 1 cases. In Copperweld, the issue before the Court was whether the coordinated acts of a parent and its wholly owned subsidiary can, in the legal sense contemplated by § 1 of the Sherman Act, constitute a combination or conspiracy. The "intra-enterprise conspiracy" doctrine, recognized by the Court to have been derived from earlier Supreme Court decisions, had provided that § 1 liability was not foreclosed merely because a parent and its subsidiary are subject to common ownership.

Recognizing that "the Sherman Act contains a 'basic distinction between concerted and independent action,'" and that "the conduct of a single firm is governed by § 2 alone and is unlawful only when it threatens actual monopolization," [*49] the Court proceeded to analyze whether a parent and subsidiary could act only in concert, thus giving rise to a § 2 action, or whether they could act independently or unilaterally, and thus providing a cause of action under only § 1 of the Act. The Court stated that "the distinction between unilateral and concerted conduct is necessary for a proper understanding of the terms 'contract, combination. . . or conspiracy' in § 1." Id. at 769.

The court then proceeded to address the nature of actions taken by corporate officers and employees, corporate divisions and subsidiaries. Finding that internal agreements and actions of corporate officers and employees pursuant to a single firm's policies do not raise the antitrust dangers which § 1 was designed to prevent, the court stated that the officers of a single firm are not separate economic actors pursuing separate economic interests, so agreements among them do not suddenly bring together economic power that was previously pursuing divergent goals. Coordination within a firm is as likely to result from an effort to compete as from a single effort to stifle competition. In the marketplace, such coordination may be necessary [*50] if a business enterprise is to compete effectively. For these reasons, officers or employees of the same firm do not provide the plurality of actors imperative for a § 1 conspiracy.

Id. at 769. The Court likewise recognized that the conduct of an unincorporated division of a corporation was to be considered, for purposes of § 1, as the conduct of a single actor:

The existence of an unincorporated division reflects no more than a firm's decision to adopt an organizational division of labor. A division within a corporate structure pursues the common interests of the whole rather than interests separate from those of the corporation itself; a business enterprise establishes divisions to further its own interests in the most efficient manner. Because coordination between a corporation and its division does not represent a sudden joining of two independent sources of economic power previously pursuing separate interests, it is not an activity that warrants § 1 scrutiny.

Id. at 770-71. The court then, for similar reasons, held that HN21[↑] "the coordinated activity of a parent and its wholly owned subsidiary must be viewed as that of a single enterprise for the [*51] purposes of § 1 of the Sherman Act." Id. at 771. The court found that the parent and its subsidiary have a "complete unity of interest," with common objectives. Id.

They are not unlike a multiple team of horses drawing a vehicle under the control of a single driver. With or without a formal "agreement," the subsidiary acts for the benefit of the parent, its sole shareholder. If a parent and a wholly owned subsidiary do "agree" to a course of action, there is no sudden joining of economic resources that had previously served different interests, and there is no justification for § 1 scrutiny.

Indeed, the very notion of an "agreement" in Sherman Act terms between a parent and a wholly owned subsidiary lacks meaning. A § 1 agreement may be found when the "conspirators had a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of minds in an unlawful arrangement." [citation omitted]. But in reality a parent and a wholly owned subsidiary always have a "unity of purpose or a common design."

Because there is nothing inherently anticompetitive about a corporation's decision to create a subsidiary, the intra-enterprise conspiracy doctrine [*52] "imposes grave Consequences upon organizational distinctions that are of de minimis meaning and effect." Sunkist Growers, Inc. v. Winckler & Smith Citrus Products Co., 370 U.S. 19, 29, 8 L. Ed. 2d 305, 82 S. Ct. 1130 \(1962\).

456 U.S. at 771, 773. Thus, the Court held that while a corporation's initial acquisition of control is subject to scrutiny under § 1, thereafter, a corporation and its wholly owned subsidiary are fully subject only to § 2 of the Sherman Act and cannot conspire within the meaning of § 1.

The court thinks that a similar unity of interest is present in the relationship between the hospital and its staff with both seeking to upgrade the quality of patient care through physician review. Examining the substance rather than the form of the relationship between hospital and staff, the court finds itself aligned with those circuits recognizing the applicability of intracorporate immunity to professional peer review proceedings. Oksanen v. Page Memorial Hospital, 945 F.2d 696 \(4th Cir. 1991\), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 1074, 112 S. Ct. 973, 117 L. Ed. 2d 137 (1992); Nurse Midwifery Assoc. v. Hibbett, 918 F.2d 605 \(6th Cir. 1990\), cert. denied, [*53] 502 U.S. 952, 112 S. Ct. 406, 116 L. Ed. 2d 355 (1991); Nanavati v. Burdette Tomlin Memorial Hospital, 857 F.2d 96 \(3d Cir. 1988\), cert. denied, 489 U.S. 1078, 109 S. Ct. 1528, 103 L. Ed. 2d 834 (1989). Like a corporation delegating authority to its officers, the Board of Governors at Ashley Memorial delegated peer review decisionmaking in the first instance to the medical staff, and thus, with respect to those decisions, the medical staff operated as an officer of a corporation. See Weiss v. York Hospital, 745 F.2d 786, 817 \(3d Cir. 1984\), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1060, 105 S. Ct. 1777, 84 L. Ed. 2d 836 (1985). In effect, the medical staff was acting as an agent of the Board in evaluating the conduct and competence of those to whom the hospital extended privileges. At all times, the Board had ultimate control over the peer review and could modify the staff's recommendations, retaining the ultimate responsibility for the conduct of the hospital. And as the staff is a component part of the hospital and not its competitor, the court finds that this decision to conduct peer review proceedings does not implicate the concerns of § 1 of the Sherman Act. See [Nurse Midwifery, I^{54\]} 918 F.2d at 614 \("There are no strong antitrust concerns that would warrant a departure from traditional concepts of agency since the hospital and medical staff are not competitors.\) Thus, as a matter of law, the court believes that plaintiff's § 1 Sherman Act claims are barred.](#)

Although plaintiff's response to defendants' summary judgment motion fails to address a recognized exception to the Copperweld doctrine of intracorporate conspiracy, plaintiff hints at conflicts of interests among defendants, characterizing them throughout his motion as his "direct economic competitors." Thus, the court feels compelled to discuss the decision of Pink Supply Corp. v. Hiebert, Inc., 788 F.2d 1313 \(8th Cir. 1986\), in which the Eighth Circuit recognized an exception to the general principle of Copperweld that agents of a corporation cannot conspire within the meaning of § 1:

HN22[↑] When the interests of principal and agents diverge, and the agents at the time of the conspiracy are acting beyond the scope of their authority or for their own benefit rather than that of the principal, they may be legally capable of engaging in an antitrust conspiracy with their corporate principal.

[*55] Id. at 1317. Recognizing the availability of such an exception, the court finds that there has been no evidence presented which would allow the court to conclude that members of the hospital staff were "acting beyond the scope of their authority or for their own benefit rather than that of the principal" when conducting the professional peer review proceedings. To the contrary, the evidence illustrates that members of the Ashley Memorial staff acted, at all relevant times, pursuant to the instruction of the Board of Governors and further, that the Board retained ultimate control over the investigation and hearing proceedings directed at plaintiff. Moreover, the court is unpersuaded that defendants were "direct economic competitors" of plaintiff as plaintiff elsewhere argues that he was the single board certified surgeon on staff at Ashley Memorial. Thus, the court concludes that the physician defendants were legally incapable of engaging in a § 1 antitrust conspiracy with Ashley Memorial.

The court believes that such a conclusion makes for good public policy. Penalizing coordinated conduct in the health care context would not only discourage hospitals from investigating [*56] their medical staffs but also discourage members of the staff from participating in such proceedings. One of the benefits of peer review is that physicians may be evaluated to determine if they have achieved a certain level of professional competence, benefiting both individual patients and the community at large. This is one of the reasons Congress passed the HCQIA, discussed at length above, and any potential antitrust threat to the peer review process is at odds with Congress' intent to encourage the process by granting immunity to participants.

ii. Section Two Claims

The plaintiff has also alleged violations of § 2 of the Sherman Act. HN23 [↑] Section 2 of the Act subjects to prosecution every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce . . .

15 U.S.C. § 2 \(1988\). To establish monopolization in violation of 52, the plaintiffs must show: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market, and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of superior product, business acumen, [*57] or historic accident." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992), citing United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966) (other citations omitted).

HN24 [↑] Monopoly power is defined as the "power to control prices and exclude competition with respect to a particular product and within a particular geographic market." Eureka Urethane, Inc. v. PBA, Inc., 746 F. Supp. 915, 924 (E.D. Mo. 1990), aff'd, 935 F.2d 990 (8th Cir. 1991), citing United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 391, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956). Thus, plaintiff must show that the defendants have "dominant market share in a well-defined relevant market." Assam Drug Co. v. Miller Brewing Co., 798 F.2d 311, 318 (8th Cir. 1986). The court is required, therefore, to define the relevant market by reference to both the product market and the geographic market. Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962); Baxley-DeLamar Monuments, Inc. v. American Cemetery Ass'n, 938 F.2d 846, 850 (8th Cir. 1991). The essential test [*58] for ascertaining the relevant product market involves the identification of those products or services that are either (1) identical to or (2) available substitutes for the defendants' products or services. United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. at 377. This comparative analysis has been characterized as the "reasonable interchangeability" standard. Eureka Urethane, 746 F. Supp. at 922.

Furthermore, a competitor may possess monopoly power in a submarket. A market can be divided into submarkets and may be determined by examining (1) the industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate economic entity; (2) the product's peculiar characteristics and uses; (3) unique production facilities; (4) distinct customers; (5) distinct prices; (6) sensitivity to price changes and (7) specialized vendors. Brown Shoe Co., 370 U.S. at 325.

While the court tends to believe that Ashley Memorial, the only hospital within a twenty-five mile radius of Crossett, Arkansas, possesses a dominant market share in a well-defined, if small, market for hospital services, HN25 [↑] a mere showing of monopoly power in the relevant market, unaccompanied by evidence of anti-competitive [*59] behavior, is insufficient to support a claim for monopolization. Trace X Chemical, 738 F.2d 261, 266. Thus, HN26 [↑] the second element of a section 2 claim requires proof of "either (1) specific intent to monopolize or (2) anticompetitive effects that result from the monopolist's actions." Paschall v. Kansas City Star Co., 727 F.2d 692, 696 (8th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 872, 83 L. Ed. 2d 152, 105 S. Ct. 222 (1984), citing United States v. Griffith, 334 U.S. 100, 107, 68 S. Ct. 941, 92 L. Ed. 1236 (1948). One need not prove both specific intent and anticompetitive effects; either alone is sufficient basis for the imposition of liability for an actor possessing monopoly power. Id. However, liability based upon specific intent may be negated where valid business justifications exist for the monopolist's actions. Id. at 697.

HN27[] Anti-competitive conduct is conduct without a legitimate business purpose. Becker v. Egypt News Co., 713 F.2d 363, 366 (8th Cir. 1983). Acts which are ordinary business practices typical of those used in a competitive market do not constitute anti-competitive conduct violative of Section 2. Telex Corp. v. IBM, 510 F.2d 894, 925-26 (10th [*60] Cir.), cert. dismissed, 423 U.S. 802, 96 S. Ct. 8, 46 L. Ed. 2d 244 (1975).

The exercise of business judgment cannot be found to be anti-competitive. To be labeled anti-competitive, the conduct involved must be such that its "anticipated benefits were dependent upon its tendency to discipline or eliminate competition and thereby enhance the firm's long term ability to reap the benefits of' monopoly power."

Trace X Chemical, 738 F.2d at 266. Rather, acts which would constitute an unlawful use of monopoly power are those "derived from [the monopolist's] power in the market or its size, . . . acts which could have been performed by one with the requisite power." Id. at 266, citing Telex Corp. v. IBM, 510 F.2d at 926.

An examination of the documentation submitted to the court reveals that no genuine issues of fact exist with respect to the presence of specific intent to monopolize the market or of anti-competitive conduct on behalf of defendants. Defendants contend that all actions taken with respect to the plaintiff were taken for a legitimate business and professional purpose - to recommend the appropriate action to be taken pursuant to the hospital's [*61] bylaws and professional peer review proceedings. Plaintiff has presented no evidence of anti-competitive behavior by defendants except for his assertion that defendants stopped making physician referrals to plaintiff. However, as there is no market for referrals, the court finds that even if true, a reduced number of referrals is not evidence of anti-competitive behavior which violates federal antitrust laws; the Sherman Act serves to protect competition in the marketplace and not individual competitors. See Flegel v. Christian Hospital, 4 F.3d 682 (8th Cir. 1993). Thus, the court finds no evidence of actionable anticompetitive conduct.

Plaintiff also alleges that defendants conspired to monopolize or attempted to monopolize commerce and trade under 52 of the Act and have the burden of proving the following elements: (1) defendants' specific intent to control prices or destroy Competition in some part of commerce; (2) predatory or anticompetitive conduct on behalf of defendants directed to accomplishing the unlawful purpose; and (3) a dangerous probability of success. See Trace X. Chemical, 738 F.2d at 265. HN28[] An antitrust plaintiff, alleging an attempted monopolization, must [*62] prove the existence of "methods, means and practices which would, if successful, accomplish monopolization, and which, falling short, nevertheless approach so close as to create a dangerous probability of it" American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 785, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 90 L. Ed. 1575 (1946).

For the same reasons discussed above with respect to plaintiff's § 1 claims, the court finds that defendants could not, as a matter of law, conspire or attempt to conspire to monopolize trade and commerce. Thus, the court finds that summary judgment for defendants on all of plaintiff's § 2 claims is also appropriate and is hereby granted.

5. Conclusion

For the reasons discussed above, the court finds that (1) defendants Clair Norman, Herman Hamilton, Jr., William S. Arnold, Ned Hastings and Roosevelt Early are hereby dismissed from this action, finding no facts pled by plaintiff in his complaint and no evidence in the record that the named trustees of the Crossett Health Foundation were in any way involved in the alleged unlawful conduct; (2) count four of plaintiff's complaint should be and hereby is dismissed as against Ashley Memorial Hospital as it fails [*63] to state a claim for relief; (3) immunity from liability for Sherman Antitrust Act damages be granted for defendants Ashley Memorial Hospital and Drs. Birriel, Burt, Gresham, Garcia, Rankin, Ripley, Toon and Walsh pursuant to the Health Care Quality Improvement Act of 1986; and (4) summary judgment should be and hereby is granted for defendants Ashley Memorial Hospital and Drs. Birriel, Burt, Gresham, Garcia, Rankin, Ripley, Toon and Walsh on plaintiff's § 1 and § 2 Sherman Antitrust Act claims. Summary judgment is granted and this action is hereby dismissed.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

H. Franklin Waters

United States District Judge

JUDGMENT

On this 6th day of April, 1994, the court finds, for reasons set forth in its memorandum opinion, that defendants' motion for summary judgment should be and hereby is granted and this action dismissed.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

H. Franklin Waters

United States District Judge

End of Document

Oki Distrib. v. Amana Refrigeration, Inc.

United States District Court for the Southern District of Ohio, Western Division

April 11, 1994, Decided ; April 12, 1994, Filed

C-1-92-192

Reporter

850 F. Supp. 637 *; 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5399 **

OKI DISTRIBUTING, INC., Plaintiff, v. AMANA REFRIGERATION, INC., et al., Defendants.

Core Terms

Distributor, summary judgment, modification, crossover, termination, modified, parties, promises, at-will, appliance, dealers, terms, integration clause, course of conduct, territory, written contract, representations, contractual, two-step, antitrust, reasonable juror, genuine issue, unambiguous, memorandum, trailing, credits, prices, conclusory allegation, promissory estoppel, material fact

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN1[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

The narrow question that a court must decide on a motion for summary judgment is whether there exists a genuine issue as to any material fact and whether the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). The appropriate standard in deciding a motion for summary judgment is as follows: The plain language of Rule 56(c) mandates the entry of summary judgment, after adequate time for discovery and on motion, against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial.

850 F. Supp. 637, *637IÁ1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5399, 5399

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

HN2 [down] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Genuine Disputes

The moving party has the initial burden of showing the absence of a genuine issue of material fact as to an essential element of the non-movant's case. If the moving party meets this burden, then the non-moving party must set forth specific facts showing there is a genuine issue for trial. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(e\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN3 [down] Summary Judgment, Burdens of Proof

The non-moving party must designate specific facts showing there is a genuine issue for trial. Although the burden might not require the non-moving party to designate facts by citing page numbers, the designated portions must be presented with enough specificity that the district court can readily identify the facts on which the non-moving party relies.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

HN4 [down] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Summary judgment is not appropriate if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the non-moving party. Conclusory allegations, however, are not sufficient to defeat a motion for summary judgment.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Contracts Law > Contract Modifications > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Formation > Execution & Delivery

HN5 [down] Types of Contracts, Covenants

Under Iowa law, at-will termination clauses are enforceable, and terminations under such clauses breach neither the express terms of the agreement nor the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. Furthermore, under Iowa law, where a signed contract contains a clause excluding modification or revision except by a signed writing, the contract cannot be otherwise modified or rescinded. Iowa Code § 554.2209\(2\). Thus, where a contractual clause prohibits any modification which is not embodied in a signed writing, the parties are barred under Iowa law from modifying the contract either orally, or through course of dealing or course of conduct.

850 F. Supp. 637, *637I^A1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5399, 5399

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Integration Clauses

Criminal Law & Procedure > Postconviction Proceedings > Parole

Commercial Law (UCC) > ... > Form, Formation & Readjustment > Parol Evidence Rule > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Parol Evidence > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > Parol Evidence

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Oral Agreements

HN6 [down] Contract Conditions & Provisions, Integration Clauses

Pre-formation evidence is barred by the Iowa parole evidence rule which states that terms with respect to which the confirmatory memoranda of the parties agree or which are otherwise set forth in writing intended by the parties as a final expression of their agreement with respect to such terms as are included therein may not be contradicted by evidence of any prior agreement or of any contemporaneous oral agreement. Iowa Code § 554.2202.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Integration Clauses

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Form, Formation & Readjustment > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Parol Evidence > General Overview

HN7 [down] Contract Conditions & Provisions, Integration Clauses

To allow pre-agreement discussions to modify a final written agreement with an integration clause would nullify the integration clause, render meaningless the express and unambiguous terms of the contract, and eviscerate Iowa Code § 554.2202. Accordingly, such statements are not appropriately considered.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Parol Evidence > General Overview

Evidence > Types of Evidence > Documentary Evidence > Parol Evidence

HN8 [down] Contract Interpretation, Parol Evidence

Where a contract is a final integration of the parties' agreement, and the contract expressly allows termination at-will, parol evidence may not be offered to vary the written terms of the contract.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Oral Agreements

Contracts Law > Contract Modifications > General Overview

HN9 [down] Types of Contracts, Oral Agreements

Consideration of post-contract oral agreements do not violate the parole evidence rule. In order for extra-contractual statements or conduct to operate as a valid modification, the expressions, interpreted in light of the surrounding facts, must make the plaintiff's understanding that the modification that occurs is a reasonable one. The defendants' understanding that no modification occurs must, conversely, be unreasonable.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Integration Clauses

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Modifications > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > General Overview

HN10[Contract Conditions & Provisions, Integration Clauses

Where a plaintiff points to nothing more than vague statements in support of a material contractual alteration, no issue of fact exists upon which a reasonable juror could find that the parties in fact modified the agreement.

Contracts Law > Contract Modifications > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > General Overview

HN11[Contracts Law, Contract Modifications

Although course of dealing may be appropriate under certain circumstances to demonstrate modification of contractual terms, course of conduct is only relevant to the extent that it does not directly conflict with written terms of the contract.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Consideration > Promissory Estoppel

HN12[Consideration, Promissory Estoppel

The elements of promissory estoppel are as follows: 1) A clear and definite agreement, 2) proof that the party seeking to enforce the agreement reasonably relied upon it to his detriment, and 3) a finding that the equities support enforcement of the agreement. Thus, in order to recover under a theory of promissory estoppel the plaintiff must prove that the defendants made clear and definite representations upon which the plaintiff reasonably relied to its detriment.

Torts > ... > Fraud & Misrepresentation > Nondisclosure > Elements

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN13[Nondisclosure, Elements

Under Iowa law, fraud consists of: 1) a representation about the past or present, 2) falsity, 3) materiality, 4) scienter, 5) intent to deceive, 6) reasonable reliance on the promise, and 6) resulting in damage. Although the fraud may also arise from a failure to disclose material facts, providing that the other elements are also present, the party failing to disclose the information must have a legal duty to do so.

850 F. Supp. 637, *637L^A1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5399, 5399

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN14 Business Torts, Fraud & Misrepresentation

A manufacturer does not have a duty to insulate distributors from all economic hardship at its own expense, even after a distributor has made substantial investments in the franchise.

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Form, Formation & Readjustment > General Overview

Contracts Law > ... > Affirmative Defenses > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN15 Sales (Article 2), Form, Formation & Readjustment

Pre-contract representations are not admissible to prove promissory fraud, unless they are offered to prove fraud with respect to a provision contained in the written contract.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Integration Clauses

Contracts Law > ... > Affirmative Defenses > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN16 Contract Conditions & Provisions, Integration Clauses

The integration clause is to prevent either party from relying on representations made prior to execution of the agreement that were not included in the agreement. To allow evidence of promissory fraud in the face of a written integrated contract would completely defeat the purpose of the integration clause.

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN17 Business Torts, Fraud & Misrepresentation

Where a plaintiff does not point to any evidence in the record on which a reasonable juror could conclude that the defendant intentionally misled the plaintiff into reasonably relying on the misrepresentations, plaintiff may not prevail on its fraud claims.

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Fiduciary Duties

Governments > Fiduciaries

850 F. Supp. 637, *637L^A 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5399, 5399

Business & Corporate Law > Agency Relationships > Fiduciaries > General Overview

HN18 [blue icon] Causes of Action, Fiduciary Duties

A manufacturer-distributor relationship, absent more, does not give rise to a fiduciary relationship.

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

HN19 [blue icon] Commercial Interference, Contracts

In order to commit tortious interference, a plaintiff must prove that the defendant, without privilege to do so, intentionally and improperly induced, or otherwise purposefully caused a third party not to enter into, or continue, a business relationship with the plaintiff, or perform a contract with another.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN20 [blue icon] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Genuine Disputes

Where a plaintiff fails to point to any evidence in the record raising a genuine issue of fact, summary judgement is appropriate notwithstanding the fact that the case happens to be complex, or that it involves antitrust claims or state of mind such as motive and intent.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > Cost Justification Defense

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

HN21 [blue icon] Defenses, Cost Justification Defense

15 U.S.C.S. § 13(a) does not prevent price differentials based on the sale of differing quantities of goods to different buyers, i.e. volume discounts. Thus, § 13(a) does not ban price discrimination per se, but only non-cost justified discrimination.

Counsel: [1] For OKI DISTRIBUTING INC, plaintiff: Leo Joseph Breslin, Lindhorst & Dreidame - 1, Cincinnati, OH.

For AMANA REFRIGERATION INC, a Delaware Corporation, defendant: Mark Christian Bissinger, Lawrence Robert Elleman, Dinsmore & Shohl - 1, Cincinnati, OH. For RAYTHEON COMPANY, Parent company of Amana Refrigeration, Inc, defendant: Lawrence Robert Elleman, Dinsmore & Shohl - 1, Cincinnati, OH.

Judges: Spiegel

Opinion by: S. ARTHUR SPIEGEL

Opinion

[*639] ORDER GRANTING DEFENDANTS' MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

This matter is before the Court on the Defendant Amana's Motion for Summary Judgement (doc. 21), the Defendant Raytheon's Motion for Summary Judgement (doc. 22), the Plaintiff's Memorandum in Opposition (doc. 43), the Plaintiff's Memorandum in Opposition to the Defendant Raytheon's Motion (doc. 42), and the Defendants' Reply (doc. 44).

BACKGROUND

This action arises out of a now terminated distribution agreement between the Plaintiff, O.K.I. Distributing, Inc. ("OKI"), a wholesale appliance distributor, and the Defendant Amana Refrigeration, Inc., a manufacturer of kitchen and laundry appliances. Prior to the fall of 1991, Amana used both the "one-step" and the "two-step" process of distribution. Under the "one-step" [2] process, the manufacturer sells its products directly to retail dealers often through regional, manufacturer-owned, facilities called "factory branches." Under the "two-step" process, a manufacturer sells its product to independent wholesale distributors who resell the product to retail dealers. The Plaintiff in this case was an independent wholesale distributor under the [*640] "two-step" process. In the fall of 1991, Amana canceled all but three of its retail distributors in an effort to eliminate its use of the two-step" process and use only the "one-step" process.

The parties do not dispute that they had a written contract ("contract" "agreement" or "Distributor Agreement") that provided, among other things, that either party could terminate the agreement at any time and without cause. The parties also agree that the Defendant Amana in fact terminated the agreement with the Plaintiff. There is also no dispute that Iowa law governs that outcome of this case.

What is contested is the Plaintiff's claim that the written contract was modified both orally and through a course of dealing and course of conduct. The Plaintiff alleges that the modification permitted termination of the agreement [3] only for cause, and that the Plaintiff's termination without cause, although consistent with the written contract, violated the agreement as modified. The Plaintiff also makes several other claims including promissory estoppel, fraud, breach of crossover agreement, breach of fiduciary relationship, tortious interference and violation of federal antitrust law.

The Defendants have moved for summary judgement. First, Amana and the Defendant Raytheon, Amana's parent corporation, have moved for summary judgement claiming, among other things, that the contract's "at-will" clause is clear and was never, nor could it ever have been, modified by oral agreement or course of conduct. The Defendants also claims that even if the contract was modifiable by oral agreement or course of dealing, the Plaintiff has failed to point to sufficient evidence of this oral or course of dealing modification upon which a reasonable juror could find in favor of the Plaintiff.

Furthermore, Raytheon has separately moved for Summary judgment claiming that it is not responsible for the acts of Amana, and that this is not a case where the Court should "pierce the Corporate veil" in the event that Amana is found to [4] be liable for any damages. Thus, Raytheon argues, the Court should grant summary judgement in its favor for that reason as well.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN1[↑] The narrow question that we must decide on a motion for summary judgment is whether there exists a "genuine issue as to any material fact and [whether] the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). The Supreme Court elaborated upon the appropriate standard in deciding a motion for summary judgment as follows:

The plain language of Rule 56(c) mandates the entry of summary judgment, after adequate time for discovery and upon motion, against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial.

850 F. Supp. 637, *640L^A 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5399, 4

Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986).

HN2[] The moving party has the initial burden of showing the absence of a genuine issue of material fact as to an essential element of the non-movant's case. Id. at 321; Guarino v. Brookfield Township Trustees, 980 F.2d 399, 405 (6th Cir. 1992); [5] Street v. J.C. Bradford & Co., 886 F.2d 1472, 1479 (6th Cir. 1989). If the moving party meets this burden, then the non-moving party "must set forth specific facts showing there is a genuine issue for trial." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e); Guarino, 980 F.2d at 405.

As the Supreme Court stated in Celotex, HN3[] the non-moving party must "designate" specific facts showing there is a genuine issue for trial. Celotex, 477 U.S. at 324; Guarino, 980 F.2d at 405. Although the burden might not require the non-moving party to "designate" facts by citing page numbers, "the designated portions must be presented with enough specificity that the district court can readily identify the facts upon which the non-moving party relies." Guarino, 980 F.2d at 405 (quoting Interroyal Corp. v. Sponseller, 889 F.2d 108, 111 [*641] (6th Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 494 U.S. 1091 (1990)).

HN4[] Summary judgment is not appropriate if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return [6] a verdict for the non-moving party. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986). Conclusory allegations, however, are not sufficient to defeat a motion for summary judgment. McDonald v. Union Camp Corp., 898 F.2d 1155, 1162 (6th Cir. 1990).

DISCUSSION

I

The Written Agreement

A

In this case the Court must consider whether under Iowa law, the parties were free to modify the at-will provision of the agreement whether orally or through their course of dealing. The Court must further consider, whether, if such oral modifications were permitted, the parties did in fact modify the contract in the manner alleged by the Plaintiff.

The parties do not dispute that the contract contained the following language:

This agreement may be terminated by either party at any time for any reason upon giving written notice of same by certified mail to the other party, which termination shall be effective ten (10) days from the date of mailing said notice.

The contract also stated that the agreement could not be, substituted, varied or modified [7] in any manner except by written instrument duly signed by the parties hereto.

Additionally, the agreement unambiguously stated that, written terms herein cannot be explained, supplemented or contradicted by evidence of any prior Distributor Agreement, course of dealing, course of performance or usage of trade.

Finally, the agreement contained the following integration clause:

This agreement contains the final and complete Major Appliances Distributor Agreement governing the business relationship existing between the parties hereto This Distributor Agreement supersedes and cancels all prior Major Appliances Distributor Agreements, written or oral, between Amana and Distributor

HN5[] Under Iowa law, at-will termination clauses are enforceable, and terminations under such clauses breach neither the express terms of the agreement nor the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. See Corenswet, Inc. v. Amana Refrigeration, Inc., 594 F.2d 129, 138-39 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 938, 62 L. Ed. 2d 198, 100 S. Ct. 288 (1979). Furthermore, under Iowa law, where [8] a signed contract contains a clause excluding modification or revision except by a signed writing, the contract cannot be otherwise modified or rescinded. Iowa Code § 554.2209\(2\). Thus, where, as here, a contractual clause prohibits any modification which is not embodied in a signed writing, the parties are barred under Iowa law from modifying the contract either orally, or through course of dealing or course of conduct.

It is thus apparent that under the plain and unambiguous language of the contract, either party could terminate the agreement at any time for any reason. The contract, with equal clarity, forbids modification of the agreement by oral promise or course of dealing; contractual provisions enforced under Iowa law. Therefor, under the express language of the contract and applicable law, the Plaintiff's claim that the agreement was altered by oral representation and course of dealing must, as a matter of law, fail. Accordingly, we conclude that the Defendants are entitled to summary judgement on the breach of contract claim.

B

(i)

We also note that even if evidence of modification by way of oral representation or course of dealing were appropriate in this case, [\[9\]](#) the Plaintiff has failed to point to sufficient [\[*642\]](#) evidence to raise a genuine issue of fact regarding such modification. The Plaintiff proffers evidence which it claims demonstrates that statements were made by Amana which constitute an oral contractual modification and which signifies the nature of the parties' relationship and course of dealing. However, many of the alleged promises took place before the contract was signed.

HN6 Pre-formation evidence is barred by the Iowa parole evidence rule which states that, terms with respect to which the confirmatory memoranda of the parties agree or which are otherwise set forth in writing intended by the parties as a final expression of their agreement with respect to such terms as are included therein may not be contradicted by evidence of any prior agreement or of any contemporaneous oral agreement¹

Iowa Code § 554.2202. In this case, as noted above, there was an express integration clause contained in the written contract. HN7 To allow pre-agreement discussions to modify the final written agreement would nullify the integration clause, render meaningless the express and unambiguous terms of the contract and eviscerate section 554.2202 [\[10\]](#) of the Iowa Code. Accordingly, such statements are not appropriately considered by this Court. See Lewelling v. Farmers Ins. of Columbus, Inc., 879 F.2d 212, 217 \(6th Cir. 1989\) (integration clause completely barred introduction of extrinsic evidence to contradict the terms of an integrated contract); Coal Resources, Inc. v. Gulf Western Industries, 756 F.2d 443, 447 \(6th Cir. 1985\) ("the purpose of an integration clause stating that there are no agreements or understandings between the parties other than those reflected in the written contract is, of course, to prevent either party from relying upon statements or representations made during negotiations that were not included in the final agreement"). Therefore, HN8 where a contract is a final integration of the parties' agreement, and the contract expressly allows termination at-will, parol evidence may not be offered to vary the written terms of the contract. See Young v. Cedar County Work Center, Inc., 418 N.W.2d 844 \(Iowa Sup. Ct. 1987\).

[\[11\]](#) On the other hand, HN9 consideration of post-contract oral agreements do not violate the parole evidence rule.² In order for extra-contractual statements or conduct to operate as a valid modification, the expressions, interpreted in light of the surrounding facts, must make the Plaintiff's understanding that a modification occurred a reasonable one. Id. The Defendants' understanding that no modification occurred must, conversely, be unreasonable. Id.

¹ This section does allow supplementation of the terms of the agreement by evidence of course of dealing. However, as discussed below, course of dealing is only admissible as evidence of modification to the extent that it is consistent with the written terms of the contract, and not to contradict contractual terms. See Part (ii) below.

² Although, as noted above, in this case such agreements do violate the express "written modification-only" clause of this contract as well as Iowa law.

The Plaintiff has failed to point to evidence in the record sufficient to support a finding by a reasonable juror that an oral modification had occurred, or that, in light of the circumstances of this case, the Plaintiff's belief that the parties modified the contract from an at-will contract to a for-cause contract was reasonable. For example, the Plaintiff notes that "Chad Calabria, an Amana representative [12] and privy to its policies, representations and state of mind, stated that Amana would emphasize again and again the 'two step distribution concept' and that it was a 'vital force' in Amana's sales and marketing efforts." Similarly, the Plaintiff claims that Amana's president stated that "Amana was dedicated to the two-step distribution process." Besides these general references given to Amana distributors during the course of periodic "pep-talks," the Plaintiff makes nothing more than conclusory allegations.

In light of the clear language of the Contract's integration clause, its at-will clause, as well as its unambiguous prohibitions on oral [*643] or course of dealing modification, it is dubious at best whether even an express assurance by Amana's representatives could have constituted a valid modification. See Part A above. However, in this case, HN10[¹⁴] where the Plaintiff points to nothing more than vague statements in support of this material contractual alteration, we conclude that no issue of fact exists upon which a reasonable juror could find that the parties in fact modified the agreement. See Corenswet, 594 F.2d at 136 (where Amana's president's statement [13] that Amana does "not cancel a distributor without a reason, without a good reason" and "we do not cancel our distributors without a reason" were insufficient to modify the same termination clause at issue in this case under Iowa law). It is simply not reasonable to conclude that, in the face of the clear contractual language, that a reasonable person would consider such statements to be a promise to eliminate an at-will clause--in flagrant violation of a clause prohibiting any modification unless embodied in a signed writing--and replace it with a termination-for-cause proviso. The Defendants are therefore entitled to summary judgement on this point.

(ii)

Additionally, with respect to the Plaintiff's allegations of course of conduct and course of dealing (to the extent it would even be relevant in light of the express terms of the agreement and Iowa law) we note that HN11[¹⁵] although course of dealing may be appropriate under certain circumstances to demonstrate modification of contractual terms, course of conduct is only relevant to the extent that it does not directly conflict with written terms of the contract. Corenswet, 594 F.2d at 136.

In this case, [14] the Plaintiff wishes to demonstrate through course of conduct that the parties had a termination for cause only proviso; a proviso diametrically contrary to the terms of the written contract's at-will clause. Therefore, the course of dealing evidence upon which the Plaintiff relies is expressly offered for the purpose of contradicting the terms of the written agreement. Consequently, it would be inappropriate to allow such a course of dealing to modify the express at-will clause of the contract. See id. Thus, the Defendants are entitled to summary judgement on this point as well.

II

Promissory Estoppel

The Plaintiff also claims that in light of the representations of Amana's "commitment" to the "two-step distribution process" upon which the Plaintiff claims it relied, the Plaintiff is entitled to recover under a theory of promissory estoppel. We disagree.

The Iowa Supreme Court has defined HN12[¹⁶] the elements of Promissory Estoppel as follows:

- 1) A clear and definite agreement; 2) Proof that the party seeking to enforce the agreement reasonably relied upon it to his detriment; and 3) A finding that the equities support enforcement of the agreement.

Amana Society v. Colony Inn, Inc., 315 N.W.2d 101, 117 \(Iowa Sup. Ct. 1982\); [15] UHL v. City of Sioux City, 490 N.W.2d 69, 73 \(Iowa Ct. App. 1992\) (citing Amana). Thus, in order to recover under a theory of promissory

estoppel the Plaintiff must prove that the Defendants made clear and definite representations upon which the Plaintiff reasonably relied to its detriment. Amana, 315 N.W.2d at 117; UHL, 490 N.W.2d at 73; Restatement (Second) Contracts § 90; John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, Contracts § 6-1, at 272 (3d Ed. 1987).

First, the Plaintiff, as discussed above, relies on unspecific words by Amana representatives to the effect that the "two step distribution concept" was a "vital force" in Amana's sales and marketing efforts, and that "Amana was dedicated to the two-step distribution process." These words contain no "clear and definite agreement" to alter the at-will clause of the contract, nor any other agreement that the contract could not be terminated at any time for any reason. See, e.g., Part IB(i) at 8-9.

Furthermore, the Plaintiff dedicates much of his Memorandum in Opposition to establishing that OKI relied on Amana's alleged representations, [16] including the investment [*644] of time, energy and money into its operations. Such investments pursuant to an at-will distributorship agreement are not unusual. See e.g., Corenswet, 594 F.2d at 132. Additionally, the Plaintiff has failed to establish that it changed its position, either by engaging in a course of conduct it would not have, or by forbearing on some course of conduct it would have embarked on, had it not been for the Defendants' alleged "promises;" OKI simply did what it would have done as a distributor for Amana.

Far more importantly, however, the written contract contained express and unambiguous terms stating that the parties enjoyed an at-will relationship. The contract further provided that no course of conduct or oral representations could modify the contract. In light of the express contractual terms and the vague and imprecise nature of the representations upon which the Plaintiff relies, we conclude that any reliance the Plaintiff may have placed upon the alleged course of dealing or oral "promises" could not have been reasonable. See Marketing West, Inc. v. Sanyo, 6 Cal. App. 4th 603 (Cal. App. Second Dist. 1992) [17] (holding that plaintiffs--independent sales representatives--could not have reasonably relied on express promises by defendant's senior vice president that at-will clause of contract did not apply to them in light of clear and unambiguous at-will language of contract).

Thus, we conclude that no reasonable juror could find that a clear and definite agreement occurred, nor that the Plaintiff was reasonable in any reliance it even arguably could have placed on the Defendants' statements. Accordingly, as promissory estoppel requires a clear and definite agreement, and not only reliance, but reasonable reliance on that agreement, and as the record is void of any evidence supporting such a claim, we conclude that the Defendants are entitled to summary judgement as a matter of law.

III

Crossover Payment Agreement

The Plaintiff also claims that the Defendants breached a "crossover agreement" when the Appliance Store of Pittsburgh purchased Amana products through a wholly owned and operated Amana branch and "set up shop" within OKI territory in the greater Dayton area. The Defendants claims that the crossover agreement was a permissive, not mandatory provision, and thus, Amana's failure [18] to credit the Plaintiff's account does not give rise to any liability on Amana's part.

The transhipping/cross-over provision of the Distributor's agreement provided,

Amana may debit distributor's account in the amount of $ 1,000.00 for each instance in which product originally sold to Distributor is transshipped by any other person or entity out of the Distributor's Authorized territory for resale in another distributor's authorized territory and Amana may credit the other distributor's account in the amount of $ 1,000.00. This provision does not pertain to Product shipped out of Distributor's authorized territory in accordance with the Amana's Cross-over program.

(emphasis added). Pursuant to the crossover program, Amana could grant permission to a distributor to cross-over (or tranship) without risking the $ 1,000.00 debit/credit provision.

The Plaintiff also cites in further support of its position, a memorandum issued along with the above agreement. That memorandum provided in pertinent part,

As outlined in Amana's Distributor's agreement, dealers may be sold only through a distributor's/branch's authorized territory. However, Amana recognizes there [19] may be Amana dealers with multiple locations which cross over into more than one distributor's/branch's territory. Therefore, to continue doing business with such dealers (or crossover accounts) in a manner that is consistent with Amana's marketing and sales strategies, a new Crossover policy is being implemented

* * *

Should a dealer cross over into another territory in 1990, without your first obtaining Amana's approval, the selling distributor/branch will be considered a transhipper. This is in direct violation of Amana's [*645] Distributor agreement. Amana will enforce the Distributor Agreement, which provides that a selling distributor/branch may be subject to a $ 1,000.00 debit for each instance of transhipment.

(emphasis added). The Plaintiff claims that under the crossover agreement, for every "crossover" sale of an Amana appliance, Amana should have credited the Plaintiff's account in the amount of $ 1,000.00. The Plaintiff claims that because Amana, directly through its own branch, distributed Amana appliances within OKI territory, and that because at least 300 appliance were sold in the Plaintiff's territory, Amana is liable to the Plaintiff in the [20] amount of at least $ 300,000.00. We disagree.

First, under the plain language of the agreement, this particular clause is permissive, not mandatory. It is clear from the language of the contract that Amana had the option of debiting the account of the transhipper and crediting the account of the transhippee. Consequently, if Amana elected not to do so, Amana did not violate the agreement. Thus, as the contractual language unambiguously permits, but does not require, Amana to debit and credit distributors' accounts under the agreement, we conclude that there exists no genuine issue of fact upon which a reasonable juror could conclude that Amana breached the agreement. See Potti v. Duramed Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 938 F.2d 641, 647 \(6th Cir 1991\).³

[21] Additionally, the memorandum purportedly issued by Amana's Vice President of sales for Major Appliances, upon which the Plaintiff heavily relies, only supports the Defendants' position. To the extent that the memorandum is indicative of any Amana policy statement underlying the crossover agreement, the policy, apparently, is aimed at discouraging transshipping only where to do so would be "in a manner that is inconsistent with Amana's marketing and sales strategies." Thus, it is not at all surprising that under the agreement Amana may approve a cross-over into another distributor's territory if Amana deems it advantageous; Amana may grant approval where it deems it consistent with Amana's marketing and sales strategies. This underscores the permissive nature of the cross-over agreement.

Finally, as the Plaintiff readily points out, in this instance it was Amana itself that sold the appliances to the retailer. Thus, since Amana itself was the party that "crossed-over," Amana undoubtedly deemed it "consistent with Amana's marketing and sales strategies" to do so, and thus worthy of its own approval. Amana thus did not violate the agreement. Accordingly, for the forgoing reasons, [22] we hereby conclude that the Defendants are entitled to summary judgement on the Plaintiff's cross-over claim.

IV

FRAUD, TORTIOUS INTERFERENCE

³ As the Potti court stated, "interpretation of written contract terms is a matter of law for initial determination by the court. . . . it is only when the relevant language is ambiguous that the job of interpretation is turned over to the fact finder . . . and the determination whether a contract is ambiguous is made as a matter of law by the court." 938 F.2d at 647 (citations omitted).

BREACH OF FIDUCIARY DUTY & ANTITRUST VIOLATIONS

A

Fraud

(i)

The Plaintiff has also made a number of other claims allegedly stemming from its business relationship with the Defendants. First, the Plaintiff claims that the Defendants committed fraud by failing to communicate to its distributors that it was planning on eliminating the "two-step" process. We disagree.

HN13 Under Iowa law, fraud consists of 1) a representation about the past or present; 2) falsity; 3) materiality 4) scienter 5) intent to deceive; 6) reasonable reliance on the promise; and 6) resulting in damage. Robinson v. Perpetual Services Corp., 412 N.W.2d 562, 565 \(Iowa Sup. Ct. 1987\); Irons v. Community State Bank, 461 N.W.2d 849, 853 \(Iowa Ct. App. 1990\). Although the fraud may also arise from a failure to disclose material facts (providing that the other elements are also present) the party failing to disclose the [*646] information must have a legal duty to do so. Irons, 461 N.W.2d at 854. 23

First, the Plaintiff has failed to persuade the Court that there was any duty on the part of the Defendants to disclose to their distributors that they were planning to make a structural change in the way the company operates. HN14 A manufacturer does not have a duty to insulate distributors from all economic hardship at its own expense, even after a distributor has made substantial investments in the franchise. See Gen. Aviation v. Cessna, 13 F.3d 178, 183 \(6th Cir. 1994\).

Furthermore, much of the Plaintiff's evidence focuses on alleged "promises" made prior to the formation of the Distributor Agreement contained in speeches and "pep-talks" of Amana representatives. Such HN15 pre-contract representations are not admissible to prove promissory fraud, unless they are offered to prove fraud with respect to a provision contained in the written contract. Lewelling v. Farmers Ins. of Columbus, Inc., 879 F.2d 212, 217 \(6th Cir. 1989\); Coal Resources, Inc. v. Gulf Western Industries, 756 F.2d 443, 447 \(6th Cir. 1985\). As the court in Coal Resources stated, although it is clear that making a contractual 24 promise with no present intention of performing it constitutes promissory fraud . . . and that extrinsic evidence is always admissible to show promissory fraud, . . . [the defendant] argues that a promissory fraud theory may not be used to impose additional obligations upon a party to a written contract containing an integration clause. According to the defendant, [the plaintiff] . . . was entitled to show through extrinsic evidence that [the defendant] . . . had no intention, at the time the contract was entered into, of performing the promises it had made in the written . . . agreement. The defendant earnestly contends, however, that [the plaintiff] . was not entitled to show that [the defendant] had no intention of performing promises which were not reflected in the written agreement.

We agree with the defendant.

756 F.2d at 446 (citations omitted) (emphasis in original). Similarly, in Lewelling the court stated that the purpose of HN16 the integration clause "is to prevent either party from relying on representations made prior to execution of the agreement that were not included in the agreement. To allow evidence of promissory fraud 25 in the face of a written integrated contract 'would completely defeat the purpose of the integration clause.'" 879 F.2d at 217 (quoting Coal Resources, 756 F.2d at 446).

In this case, as discussed above, the contract contained an integration clause. The Plaintiff relies on the pre-contract extrinsic evidence for the purpose of proving fraud with respect to promises not contained in the written contract. Consequently, the pre-contract statements are inappropriate, and thus insufficient to defeat the Defendants' motion for summary judgment.

Additionally, the post-contract evidence stemming from the "pep-talks" wherein the Defendants stated their devotion to the "two-step" process do not constitute "promises" upon which the Plaintiff could reasonably rely. Beyond those unspecific statements, as evidence of fraud, the Plaintiff makes conclusory allegations to the effect that the Defendants intentionally induced the Plaintiff to spend time and money looking into new markets only to ultimately deny the Plaintiff the distributorship in that area. HN17[¹⁸] The Plaintiff, however, does not point to any evidence in the record upon which a [26] reasonable juror could conclude that the Defendants intentionally misled the plaintiff into reasonably relying on the misrepresentations. Absent evidence of the existence of these elements upon which a reasonable juror could rely, the Plaintiff may not prevail on its fraud claims. See Robinson, 412 N.W.2d at 565. Thus, there is no genuine issue of material fact regarding whether any promise was ever made (or a material fact omitted), much less that such was made with the intent of misleading the Plaintiff into relying to its detriment. Thus, the Plaintiff's conclusory allegations must fail as a matter of law. McDonald v. Union Camp Corp., 898 F.2d 1155, 1162 \(6th Cir. 1990\).

[*647] (ii)

The Plaintiff's also claims that the Defendants committed fraud in connection with the "Trailing Credits" program. The trailing credits program involves the Nationwide Buying Group, an association of appliance dealers that attempts to obtain better pricing and terms for its members than might be normally available. "Trailing Credits" are volume discounts for certain large volume dealers to be paid by distributors in the form of rebates. [27] Swallen's, OKI's largest dealer, qualified for "trailing credits."

Prior to finalization of the 1991 pricing and terms agreement between Amana and Nationwide under the trailing credits program, OKI contacted Swallen's, OKI's largest dealer, regarding the sale and purchase of appliances. However, the 1991 Amana-Nationwide agreement had not been finalized, and thus the only document purporting to reflect the prices under the as yet unfinalized agreement was not accurate. The fact that the agreement had not been finalized and that the prices may not have been accurate was a fact about which Amana informed the Plaintiff.

Upon careful consideration, we conclude that the Plaintiff has pointed to nothing in the record generating a material issue of fact on the issue of fraud in the "trailing credit program." OKI admitted that it took a "gamble" on the prices on the unofficial, unfinalized agreement, and that OKI "felt it was similar to price sheets we had in the past." We find no other evidence in the record to the effect that Amana made material misrepresentation or omission with the intent of misleading and inducing OKI into engaging in some course of conduct to OKI's detriment. Consequently, [28] the Defendants are entitled to summary judgement on this point.

B

Breach of Fiduciary Duty

Tortious interference and Antitrust claims

The Plaintiff also claims that the Defendants breached a fiduciary duty owed to the Plaintiff, that Defendants committed tortious interference with its business dealings, and finally, that the Defendants violated the federal antitrust laws. We disagree.

First, it is well established that HN18[¹⁹] a manufacturer-distributor relationship, absent more, does not give rise to a fiduciary relationship. See Aerospace America v. Abatement Technology, 738 F. Supp. 1061, 1070 \(E.D. Mich. 1990\); Power Motive Corp. v. Mannesmann Demag Corp., 617 F. Supp. 1048, 1051 \(D. Colo. 1985\); see WKT Distributing Co. v. Sharp Electronics, 746 F.2d 1333, 1336-37 \(8th Cir. 1984\). In this case, the Plaintiff has failed to point to any evidence in the record to establish that a deeper relationship than a normal manufacturer/distributor relationship existed.

Furthermore, the Plaintiff claims that the Defendants tortiously interfered with OKI's business opportunities. We find that the [29] Plaintiff has failed to point to evidence sufficient to defeat the Defendant's motion for summary judgement.

HN19[[↑]] In order to commit tortious interference, the Plaintiff must prove that the Defendants, without privilege to do so, intentionally and improperly induced, or otherwise purposefully caused a third party not to enter into, or continue, a business relationship with the Plaintiff, or perform a contract with another. Preferred Marketing v. Hawkeye Nat. Life, 452 N.W.2d 389, 395-396 (Iowa Sup. Ct. 1990); Nesler v. Fisher & Co., 452 N.W.2d 191 (Iowa Sup. Ct. 1990); Restatement (Second) Torts § 766. The Plaintiff supports its claim with nothing more than conclusory allegations. Although OKI may have realized less profits or even lost money as a result of the termination, OKI has failed to point to evidence in the record to establish that the Defendants purposefully caused a third party not to enter into, or to discontinue a business relationship, or to breach a contract. There thus exists no genuine issue of fact in dispute.

Finally, the Plaintiff claims that the Defendants have violated the antitrust laws by use of the [30] trailing credit program because it resulted in lower prices for some dealers than paid by others; i.e. price discrimination. See 15 U.S.C. § 13\(a\). The Plaintiff puts [*648] great reliance on its assertion that summary judgement is inappropriate in a "complex" antitrust case because "motive and intent play leading roles." However, again, the Plaintiff points to no evidence in the record establishing that the defendant's were motivated or acted with the intent to hinder competition or engage in price discrimination.

Furthermore, it is well established that HN20[[↑]] where, as in this case, the Plaintiff fails to point to any evidence in the record raising a genuine issue of fact, summary judgement is appropriate notwithstanding the fact that the case happens to be complex, or that it involves antitrust claims or state of mind such as motive and intent. Street v. J.C. Bradford & Co., 886 F.2d 1472, 1479 (6th Cir. 1989).

Finally, HN21[[↑]] section 13\(a\) does not prevent price differentials based on the sale of differing quantities of goods to different buyers, i.e. volume discounts. 15 U.S.C. § 13\(a\). Thus, section 13\(a\) does not ban price discrimination per se, but only non-cost justified discrimination. Alan's of Atlanta, Inc. v. Minolta Corp., 903 F.2d 1414, 1417-8 (11th Cir. 1993); 15 U.S.C. § 13\(a\).

In this case, the Plaintiff does not dispute that Swallen's was a high volume Amana customer, and in fact, OKI's largest. Besides making conclusory allegations, the Plaintiff does not refute that the pricing differential with Swallen's was based on the volume of Swallen's business. Consequently, we conclude that as the Plaintiff has failed to point to evidence in the record sufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact in connection with its antitrust claim, the Defendants must prevail on their motion for summary judgement.

CONCLUSION

Accordingly, for the forgoing reasons, we hereby GRANT the Defendants' Motions for Summary Judgement (docs 21 & 22), and this action is hereby DISMISSED.

So ORDERED.

Dated: April 11, 1994

S. Arthur Spiegel

United States District Judge

American Agric. Movement v. Board of Trade

United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division

April 12, 1994, Decided ; April 14, 1994, Docketed

89 C 8467

Reporter

848 F. Supp. 814 *; 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4784 ; 1994-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,727

THE AMERICAN AGRICULTURE MOVEMENT, INC., et al., Plaintiffs, v. THE BOARD OF TRADE OF THE CITY OF CHICAGO, et al., Defendants.

Core Terms

soybean, futures market, Plaintiffs', cash market, markets, prices, Defendants', antitrust, damages, speculative, trading, Contractors, lack standing, indirect, traced, allegations, injuries, factors, customers, decisions, variables, entity, motion to dismiss, antitrust claim, causal chain, Commodities, conspiracy, contracts, positions, traders

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

HN1 [] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

When faced with a motion that attacks the factual basis for jurisdiction under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(1\), once defendants question jurisdiction, plaintiffs cannot rest on their pleadings. The district court may properly look beyond the jurisdictional allegations of the complaint and view whatever evidence has been submitted on the issue to determine whether in fact subject matter jurisdiction exists. However, if a defendant's Rule 12\(b\)\(1\) motion is an indirect attack on the merits of the plaintiff's claim, the court may treat the motion as if it were a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Justiciability > General Overview

HN2 [] Justiciability, Standing

U.S. Const. art. III standing requires that a party seeking to proceed in federal court meet three requirements: (1) the party must personally have suffered an actual or threatened injury caused by the defendant's allegedly illegal conduct, (2) the injury must be fairly traceable to the defendant's conduct, and (3) the injury must be one that is likely to be redressed through a favorable decision.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > Injury in Fact

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Justiciability > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Remedies > General Overview

HN3 [] Private Actions, Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

Section 4 of the Clayton Act, codified at 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\), provides that any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained. Despite the breadth of this language, the Supreme Court has emphasized that Congress did not intend the antitrust laws to provide a remedy in damages for all injuries that might conceivably be traced to an antitrust violation. The focus of the doctrine of antitrust standing is somewhat different from that of standing as a constitutional doctrine. Harm to the antitrust plaintiff is sufficient to satisfy the constitutional standing requirement of injury in fact, but the court must make the further determination whether the plaintiff is a proper party to bring a private antitrust action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > Injury in Fact

HN4 [] Private Actions, Standing

To determine whether plaintiffs are proper parties to bring antitrust actions the court must consider the following factors: (1) the causal connection between the alleged antitrust violation and the harm to the plaintiff; (2) improper motive; (3) whether the injury was of the type that Congress sought to redress with the antitrust laws; (4) the directness between the injury and the market restraint; (5) the speculative nature of the damages; and (6) the risk of duplicate recoveries or complex damage apportionment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN5 [down arrow] Private Actions, Standing

To determine whether plaintiffs are proper parties to bring antitrust actions the court must consider three factors. The first of the factors is the causal connection between the damages claimed by the antitrust plaintiff and the harm to the plaintiff. The second factor is the nature of the injury suffered by the plaintiff and the relationship between that injury and the type of conduct sought to be redressed by the provision of a private remedy for antitrust violations. The third factor is the directness of the asserted injury and, closely related, the risk of duplicative recoveries or, conversely, the difficulty of apportioning damages among various classes of plaintiffs.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Private Attorneys General

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN6 [down arrow] Private Actions, Standing

To determine whether plaintiffs are proper parties to bring antitrust actions the court must consider, inter alia, the existence of an identifiable class of persons whose self-interest would normally motivate them to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement. The existence of such a class of persons diminishes the justification for allowing a more remote party to perform the office of private attorney general.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN7 [down arrow] Private Actions, Standing

Ultimately, standing involves a case-by-case analysis of the plaintiff's harm, the alleged wrongdoing by the defendants, and the relationship between them.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > Antitrust Regulations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN8 [down arrow] Remedies, Damages

An allegation of improper motive, although it may support a plaintiff's damage claim under § 4 of the Clayton Act, codified at 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\), is not a panacea that will enable any complaint to withstand a motion to dismiss. A party may have suffered antitrust injury but still not be a proper plaintiff under § 15\(a\) for other reasons.

Judges: [\[1\]](#) MAROVICH

Opinion by: GEORGE M. MAROVICH

Opinion

[*816] MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

Plaintiff American Agriculture Movement, Inc. ("AAM"), a national organization representing and advocating the interests of farmers, along with several of its soybean-farmer members, brought this suit against the Chicago Board of Trade and 26 of its officers and employees (collectively "CBOT") under the Commodity Exchange Act ("CEA"), the Sherman Antitrust Act, and state common law. The Seventh Circuit affirmed this Court's dismissal of the CEA count and the state common law claims, but reversed this Court's entry of summary judgment on the antitrust claim. American Agriculture Movement, Inc. v. Board of Trade, 977 F.2d 1147 (7th Cir. 1992). Now before the Court is Defendants' motion to dismiss the single remaining antitrust count pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1) and 12(b)(6). Defendants contend that Plaintiffs lack both Article III standing and standing to raise an antitrust claim. In addition, Defendants argue that AAM lacks associational standing to raise the claims of its members. For the reasons set forth below, the Court will grant Defendants' motion to dismiss.

BACKGROUND

[2] This Court has written two prior opinions in this case and the Seventh Circuit also has reviewed the factual allegations presented by the Plaintiffs. Under these circumstances, we will endeavor to contain this statement of facts to those necessary to provide context to the resolution of the pending motions. According to the Complaint, Plaintiffs claim to have suffered injuries due to a price decline in the cash market for soybeans allegedly linked to action taken by the CBOT on July 11, 1989, regarding the futures market in soybeans. The Emergency Resolution ("Resolution") adopted by the CBOT specified that:

Effective as of the opening of the market on July 12, 1989, any person or entity, either alone or in conjunction with any other person or entity, who owns or controls a gross long or gross short position ¹ for any purpose whatsoever in excess of three million bushels in the July 1989 soybean futures contract traded on the Exchange must reduce said position and subsequent positions by at least 20% per trading day subject to the following absolute limits.

No person or entity, either alone or in conjunction with any other person or entity, shall own or control a gross long [3] or gross short position for any purpose whatsoever in the July 1989 soybean futures contract traded on the Exchange in excess of three million bushels as of the close of trading on Tuesday, July 18, 1989.

No person or entity, either alone or in conjunction with any other person or entity, shall own or control a gross long or gross short position for any purpose whatsoever in the July 1989 soybean futures contract traded on the Exchange in excess of one million bushels as of the close of trading on Thursday, July 20, 1989.

This resolution is applicable to all positions, whether hedge or speculative.

¹ For the benefit of readers unfamiliar with futures contracts, we note that according to CBOT regulations, each soybean futures contract applies to a fixed quantity of 5,000 bushels of soybeans. In overly simplified terms, a long position in soybean futures is a position to buy soybeans for delivery at a designated future time at the agreed upon price. On the other hand, a short position in soybean futures is a position to sell soybeans at the agreed upon price for delivery at a designated future time. For example, a long position in 4,000 contracts reflects a position to buy 20 million bushels of soybeans. Because of the ability to offset positions, actual delivery is a rare event. For a more comprehensive discussion of the various components of commodities markets and futures contracts, see Philip M. Johnson & Thomas L. Hazen, I Commodities Regulation §§ 1.00-1.19, at 1-84 (2d ed. 1989); see also Chicago Mercantile Exch. v. SEC, 883 F.2d 537, 542-43 (7th Cir. 1989) (discussing futures contract trading), cert. denied, 496 U.S. 936, 110 S. Ct. 3214, 110 L. Ed. 2d 662 (1990); Leist v. Simplot, 638 F.2d 283, 286-88 (2d Cir. 1980) (same), aff'd sub nom., Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc. v. Curran, 456 U.S. 353, 72 L. Ed. 2d 182, 102 S. Ct. 1825 (1982); William F. Sharpe & Gordon J. Alexander, Investments, ch. 5, at 594-628 (4th ed. 1990) (same).

[4] AAM alleges that the publication of the Resolution led to a price decline in the soybean futures market. The AAM further asserts that the Resolution caused a proportionate [*817] decline in soybean cash market prices. AAM accuses the CBOT, individual defendants, affiliated firms and their clients, of a conspiracy to adopt the Resolution to manipulate the prices in the soybean market to the benefit of the speculative gross short positions in the soybean market held by these individuals and firms. AAM contends that soybean cash market prices were relatively high prior to the Resolution and would have remained so or even risen but for the issuance of the Resolution. AAM alleges that the CBOT, Directors, and the Business Conduct Committee members conspired with each other and with associated trading firms and their clients to restrain trade in the soybean futures and cash markets. As a result, AAM claims that its soybean farmer members who sell or refrained from selling in the soybean cash market suffered great financial loss.

DISCUSSION

As a preliminary matter, the Court must define the permissible scope of our inquiry in deciding a motion under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(1\), as opposed [5] to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\). Plaintiffs argue that the Court is limited to the factual allegations of the complaint and cannot go beyond them. Plaintiffs, however, appear to ignore the fact that Defendants' motion is brought under both Rule 12\(b\)\(1\) for lack of Article III standing and Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) for failure to state an antitrust claim.² Defendants, not surprisingly, have a different view of what the Court may consider and argue that we are not limited to the allegations of the complaint on a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(1\).

[6] It is true that one may find language indicating that on a motion to dismiss the Court must accept the well-pleaded factual allegations of the complaint as true and interpret all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff. See, e.g., Capitol Leasing Co. v. F.D.I.C., 999 F.2d 188, 191 (7th Cir. 1993). Such statements, however, do not offer a complete understanding of Plaintiffs' burden HN1 when faced with a motion, such as the one here, that attacks the factual basis for jurisdiction under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(1\). Under these circumstances, it is well-settled that once Defendants question jurisdiction, the Plaintiffs cannot rest on their pleadings.³ As the Seventh Circuit noted in Capitol Leasing, "the district court may properly look beyond the jurisdictional allegations of the complaint and view whatever evidence has been submitted on the issue to determine whether in fact subject matter jurisdiction exists." Id. (quoting Grafon Corp. v. Hausermann, 602 F.2d 781, 783 (7th Cir. 1979)); see also McNutt v. General Motors Acceptance Corp., 298 U.S. 178, 189, 80 L. Ed. 1135, 56 S. Ct. 780 (1936); [7] Rennie v. Garrett, 896 F.2d 1057, 1057-58 (7th Cir. 1990). We also note, however, that "if a defendant's Rule 12\(b\)\(1\) motion is an indirect attack on the merits of the plaintiff's claim, the court may treat the motion as if it were a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted." Peckmann v. Thompson, 966 F.2d 295, 297 (7th Cir. 1992); see also Malak v. Associated Physicians, Inc., 784 F.2d 277, 279 (7th Cir. 1986). With these standards in mind, we will address the Defendant's multi-faceted attach on Plaintiffs' claim.

[8] [*818] Article III Standing

² Plaintiffs are correct to the extent that had Defendants brought only a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\), "general factual allegations of injury resulting from the defendant's conduct may suffice, for on a motion to dismiss we 'presume that general allegations embrace those specific facts that are necessary to support the claim.'" Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 2137 (1992) (quoting Lujan v. National Wildlife Federation, 497 U.S. 871, 889, 111 L. Ed. 2d 695, 110 S. Ct. 3177 (1990)).

³ Defendants correctly note the ample authorities in support of this proposition. See, e.g., NAACP v. American Family Mut. Ins. Co., 978 F.2d 287, 293 (7th Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 124 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 2335 (1993); Schaefer v. Transportation Media, Inc., 859 F.2d 1251, 1253-54 (7th Cir. 1987) ("when the party moving for dismissal under Rule 12\(b\)\(1\) challenges the factual basis for jurisdiction, the nonmoving party (i.e., the plaintiff) must submit affidavits and other relevant evidence to resolve the factual dispute regarding the court's jurisdiction"); Sprague v. King, 825 F. Supp. 1324, 1329 (N.D. Ill. 1993) ("Once questioned, it is plaintiff's burden to establish that all jurisdictional requirements have been satisfied.").

Plaintiffs claim two forms of injury allegedly caused by Defendants' conduct in issuing the Resolution of July 11, 1989. First, Plaintiffs claim to represent persons who sold cash market soybeans after July 12, 1989, at a price that was artificially depressed. Second, Plaintiffs claim to represent persons who refrained from selling cash market soybeans after July 12, 1989, because they believed the price was too low. Plaintiffs never traded July 1989 soybean futures contracts. Defendants challenge the ability of both groups of Plaintiffs to meet the standing requirements of Article III.

HN2[] Article III standing requires that a party seeking to proceed in federal court meet three requirements. The Seventh Circuit has summarized these requirements as follows:

- (1) the party must personally have suffered an actual or threatened injury caused by the defendant's allegedly illegal conduct, (2) the injury must be fairly traceable to the defendant's conduct, and (3) the injury must be one that is likely to be redressed through a favorable decision.

Simmons v. ICC, 900 F.2d 1023, 1026 (7th Cir. 1990) (quoting City of Evanston v. Regional Transportation Authority, 825 F.2d 1121, 1123 (7th Cir. 1987), [9] cert. denied, 484 U.S. 1005, 98 L. Ed. 2d 649, 108 S. Ct. 697 (1988)). Defendants' argument requires us to focus primarily on the second element.

Defendants suggest that an order issued by the Commodities Futures Trading Commission ("CFTC") on the morning of July 11, 1989, prior to the CBOT action, would have caused any alleged decline in prices whether or not the CBOT action was taken later that day. As a result, Defendants contend this independent, supervening action prevents Plaintiffs from establishing the necessary link between Defendants' conduct and their resulting injury.

Defendants assert that on July 11, 1989, the CFTC determined that "a threat to an orderly liquidation of the July . . . 1989 soybean futures" contract existed. Oversight Hearing With Regard to the Reauthorization of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission: Hearing Before the Senate Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition and Forestry, 101st Cong., 1st Sess. 216-17 (1989) (testimony of Kalo A. Hineman, Commissioner, CFTC) (hereinafter "Hearing"). That determination was made in a letter faxed on July 11 to Central Soya, a member of the Ferruzzi [10] Finanziara, S.p.A ("Ferruzzi") group. Id. The CFTC, along with the CBOT, had monitored Ferruzzi's activities in the May and July 1989 soybean futures market. In the letter the Commission also revoked the hedge exemption of Central Soya for anticipatory processing requirements during the last three trading days ⁴ in July and August futures. Id. According to Defendants, the CFTC's action required Ferruzzi group to reduce its holdings from approximately 4,095 contracts, a position encompassing almost 60 percent of the outstanding long or buy futures contracts, to 600 contracts by July 18, 1989. See AAM, 977 F.2d at 1151. After being advised of the CFTC action,⁵ the CBOT issued its Resolution which set more specific requirements for liquidation of gross long and short positions held by any trader.

[11] As a result of the CFTC action that purportedly preceded the issuance of the CBOT Resolution, Defendants maintain that Plaintiffs cannot show that their injury "fairly can be traced to the challenged action of the defendant, [rather than] injury that results from the independent action of some third party [i.e. the CFTC] not before the court." Simon v. Eastern Kentucky Welfare Rights Org., 426 U.S. 26, 41-42, [*819] 48 L. Ed. 2d 450, 96 S. Ct. 1917 (1976). Defendants contend that the CFTC letter to Central Soya revoking its regulatory exemption would have caused any decline in prices whether the CBOT issued its Resolution or not.

Plaintiffs point out that the CFTC order was a private order directed only at Central Soya, a Ferruzzi affiliate. Ferruzzi apparently was the largest single holder of long contracts. Defendants do not explain the link between

⁴ The last day of trading for July 1989 futures was July 20, 1989.

⁵ Defendants do not cite to any material that details when or how this communication between the CFTC and the CBOT occurred. Our review of the Hearing indicates that the CFTC and CBOT were in frequent contact throughout this period. We also note that a "Chronology of Events" prepared by CFTC staff indicates that the Business Conduct Committee had already recommended taking emergency action prior to the CFTC's decision to revoke the Ferruzzi hedge exemption. Finally, the Court finds that the present record as a whole provides only a cursory view into the circumstances and timing of the CFTC action.

Central Soya and Ferruzzi or how a letter directed at Central Soya bound all members of the Ferruzzi group. In contrast to the CFTC letter, the CBOT Resolution, a publicly announced order, applied to all holders of both gross long and short contracts.

Our review of the cases cited [12] by Defendants⁶ results in the conclusion that on the current record, the Court is unable to find that the CFTC order is the type of independent superseding event that breaks the causal chain for purposes of Article III standing. For example, in Simmons v. ICC, 900 F.2d 1023, 1026 (7th Cir. 1990), the Seventh Circuit found that petitioners who sought to overturn a decision by the ICC to allow a railroad to abandon a rail line lacked standing because any competitive injury could not be traced to the ICC's actions. A train derailment had rendered the rail line inoperable for at least a year and one-half prior to institution of proceedings before the ICC. The Court reasoned that even if the ICC denied the request to abandon the line, no evidence nor any allegation indicated that the railroad would repair the line to make it operable. Id. Under these circumstances, the alleged injury to petitioners due to their inability to ship on the line could not be traced to the ICC's actions in permitting the railroad to abandon the line. Id. After ruling out other asserted bases for standing, the court dismissed the action for lack of standing.

[13] In a somewhat different context, the Supreme Court in Allen v. Wright, 468 U.S. 737, 82 L. Ed. 2d 556, 104 S. Ct. 3315 (1984), found that black parents who challenged an IRS tax-exemption granted to private schools, including those that purportedly discriminated against children on the basis of race, lacked standing to pursue their claim. In finding that the parents lacked standing, the Court identified numerous speculations and intervening decisions that interrupted the causal link between the IRS action and plaintiffs' alleged injury. Id. at 758. First, the Court noted that it was entirely speculative whether there were enough racially discriminatory schools in the community for withdrawal of exemptions to have an appreciable effect. Second, the Court found plaintiffs' claims involved further speculation as to whether removal of tax exemptions would lead any school to change its policies and as to whether any parent would transfer their child to public school if the private school lost its tax exemption. Finally, the Court deemed it purely conjectural that enough [14] parents and school officials would reach decisions that would have a significant impact on the racial composition of the public schools. Id. As a result, the plaintiffs lacked standing because their injury could not be fairly traced to the IRS action.

Under the reasoning of these cases, it becomes clear that where plaintiffs' injuries would have occurred whether defendants acted or not, Article III standing is lacking because their injuries cannot then be fairly traceable to the defendants' conduct. On the basis of the current record, we cannot say that the CFTC action was independent of the CBOT action given the obvious level of interaction and communication between both entities and the lack of a complete record to review the circumstances surrounding the CFTC action. Moreover, we could only speculate that the CFTC action directed at Central Soya and not released to the public would have caused the same alleged market effect that the similar, but not identical, CBOT Resolution allegedly caused in the futures [*820] and cash markets after its public announcement.

Alternately, Defendants claim that the CBOT Resolution cannot be traced to prices in the futures market, let alone the cash [15] market, because the Resolution did not set prices. Instead, it allowed the market participants, both longs and shorts, to freely negotiate prices. Defendants argue that, like the voters challenging the patronage system in Rutan v. Republican Party of Illinois, 868 F.2d 943, 957 (7th Cir. 1989), countless individual decisions of futures market participants set the price for July 1989 futures and these individual decisions render the line of causation from the CBOT Resolution to Plaintiffs' injuries too tenuous. Defendants further maintain that even more imponderables intervene between a decline in price in the futures market and prices on the cash market.⁷

⁶ We do not find Michigan Consol. Gas v. Energy Regulatory Admin., 281 U.S. App. D.C. 277, 889 F.2d 1110, 1111-12 (D.C. Cir. 1989), on point. Though the courts finds that a plaintiff challenging an administrative agency's action lacks standing to obtain judicial review and refers to the lack of an injury fairly traceable to the agency's action, it does so in the context of standing under § 19(b) of the National Gas Act, 15 U.S.C. § 717r(b). Id.

[16] When confronted with these arguments, AAM essentially relies on its allegations and points to the CBOT Resolution as the device through which it alleges Defendants restrained trade which caused a price decline in the futures market and a corresponding decline in the cash market to the detriment of Plaintiff farmers. Plaintiffs could have done more to aid the Court. Be that as it may, the Court finds that Defendants' argument sweeps too broadly in comparing this case to Rutan.

In Rutan, voters challenged the patronage hiring system on the ground that it gave incumbents an inordinate advantage over their opponents and thus deprived the voters of equal access and effectiveness of elections. 868 F.2d at 957. The Seventh Circuit affirmed the district court's decision finding that the voters lacked standing. First, the Seventh Circuit explained the incumbents' advantage, if any, comes not from the hiring policy, but from the independent evaluation of potential workers that the incumbent will indeed win. Id. at 958 (quoting Shakman v. Dunne, 829 F.2d 1387, 1397 \(7th Cir. 1987\), cert. denied, [17] 484 U.S. 1065, 108 S. Ct. 1026, 98 L. Ed. 2d 991 (1988)). The evaluation of voting decisions of these potential workers would require a review of countless individual assessments of political activity such that the plaintiff voters injury could not be fairly traced to the defendant. Id. Based on Rutan, we find that for purposes of Article III, standing may be lacking where the causal connection between defendants' conduct and plaintiffs' claims depends on a speculative review of unknown or unknowable decisions of third parties not before the court.

As the Seventh Circuit noted in this case, the "Resolution no doubt restrained trade in the July 1989 soybean futures market," 977 F.2d at 1157, because it affirmatively mandated certain traders to liquidate their positions by certain increments during the specified time frames. In this sense, the soybean futures market was not a free and competitive one; instead, it operated under the influence of the Resolution. Unlike the case in Rutan where the challenged policy provided no advantage unless others formed particular beliefs that the incumbent [18] would win, the CBOT Resolution set in motion a liquidation of contracts. While the Resolution set no prices on its face, it certainly altered the futures trading landscape and the Defendants cannot shield the Resolution behind the numerous decisions of individual traders who acted within the affected market.

In addition, Plaintiffs' allegations indicate that Defendants' price neutral action, actually was calculated to cause a decline in both futures and cash prices. Defendants have pointed to matters outside the Complaint in their favor, but we also note that some of those matters weigh against them. For example, as Commissioner Hineman's testimony at the Hearing demonstrates, the clear concern of the CFTC and CBOT was Ferruzzi group's attempted execution of a "squeeze" by accumulating a dominant long position in both the soybean futures and cash markets. Hearing, at 185-86. Though price neutral on its face, this Court cannot say that Defendants [*821] could not anticipate a potential soybean futures price decline as a result of Ferruzzi's substantial liquidation of its long position in the July 1989 soybean futures. Moreover, Commissioner Hineman's testimony includes the tentative [19] acknowledgment that "a portion of the price declines in the July soybean future and in cash prices on July 12 may be an unfortunate side-effect of the emergency action." 99 F.2d 188 at 194. To be fair, we also note that Commissioner Hineman added that "the more significant price slide in soybeans that began earlier in July before the emergency action and extended into early August, cannot be attributed to that event." Id. We only mention these statements to show that the nature and impact of the CBOT Resolution is not as divorced from the CFTC's action or, more importantly, the soybean futures and cash markets as Defendants would have one believe.

With that said in regard to the Resolution's potential effect on the soybean futures market, we find the Defendants' argument regarding the various imponderables involved in assessing the impact of a futures market price decline on the cash market more appealing yet still unsuccessful. On one hand, commentators acknowledge that "when the futures market experiences a significant price change, the prices of that commodity in the cash market will usually experience a similar movement." Johnson & Hazen, I Commodities Regulation, supra, [20] § 1.04, at 13. Johnson and Hazen, however, also recognize the tremendous number of variables and difficulties involved in determining the cash price for a commodity. Johnson & Hazen, III Commodities Regulation, supra, §§ 5.13-5.18, 5.33, at 32-39, 66-67. To resolve this conflict, we turn to one of the acknowledged functions of the futures market.

⁷ Defendants list of imponderable include the whether, availability of competing soybeans from other regions and other nations, transport costs to ship grains, purchasing needs of any particular buyer, the quality and grade of the soybeans, storage costs incurred by farmers holding soybeans for later sale, and prices set by processors.

One of the main economic functions of futures markets is "the provision of reliable pricing information." Cargill, Inc. v. Hardin, 452 F.2d 1154, 1172-73 (8th Cir. 1971), cert. denied sub nom., Cargill, Inc. v. Butz, 406 U.S. 932, 32 L. Ed. 2d 135, 92 S. Ct. 1770 (1972). Consistent with this function, the CEA requires the CBOT to enact and enforce rules to prevent price manipulation, cornering and other market disturbances that might lead to distortion in prices. 7 U.S.C. § 7(d); 17 C.F.R. § 1.51(a). In light of this prominent function and the traditional parallels between futures and cash prices, we conclude that there is a link, albeit difficult to measure, between the futures and cash markets. As a result of this [21] link, we find that the various imponderables argued by Defendants do not break the causal chain for purposes of Article III standing for those Plaintiffs who actually sold soybeans during the alleged period of price decline in the cash market.

On the other hand, we cannot conclude that Article III is elastic enough to reach those Plaintiffs who refrained from selling soybeans allegedly because they felt the prices for soybeans were too low. The complexities, ambiguities and potential for pure speculation that exist in tracing a price decline from the futures market to the cash market are enlarged beyond the scope of Article III when one adds the further conjecture that any particular Plaintiff decided not to sell soybeans because he believed the price was too low. Cf. Blue Chip Stamps v. Manor Drug Stores, 421 U.S. 723, 44 L. Ed. 2d 539, 95 S. Ct. 1917 (1975) (individuals who refrained from purchasing or selling stock lacked standing to bring securities fraud action based on claim that a misleading prospectus caused them not to sell or purchase). Farmers may decide not to sell soybeans at any given time for a host of articulable [22] and inarticulable reasons such as a belief that prices will climb, excessive transportation costs, low storage costs, the poor quality or quantity of available supply, or a continuing relationship with a particular buyer who promises to buy in the future. Given that cash markets are essentially local, these considerations would vary from region to region and farmer to farmer. The causal chain from Defendants' action to the futures market to the cash market to those who refrained from selling soybeans during the asserted period of low prices is simply too weak to support standing for those Plaintiffs who refrained from selling soybeans.

[*822] Standing Under the Clayton Act

8

[23] HN3↑

Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15(a), provides that "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor . . . and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained . . ." Despite the breadth of this language, the Supreme Court has emphasized that "Congress did not intend the antitrust laws to provide a remedy in damages for all injuries that might conceivably be traced to an antitrust violation." Associated General Contractors, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 534, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983) (quoting Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., 405 U.S. 251, 263 n.14, 31 L. Ed. 2d 184, 92 S. Ct. 885 (1972)); see also Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 761, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061 (1977); Nelson v. Monroe Regional Medical Center, 925 F.2d 1555, 1562 (7th Cir 1991); Southwest Suburban Bd. of Realtors, Inc. v. Beverly Area Planning Assoc., 830 F.2d 1374, 1377 (7th Cir. 1987). [24] As the Supreme Court has observed, the "focus of the doctrine of 'antitrust standing' is somewhat different from that of standing as a constitutional doctrine. Harm to the antitrust plaintiff is sufficient to satisfy the constitutional standing requirement of injury in fact, but the court must make the further determination whether the plaintiff is a proper party to bring a private antitrust action." Associated General Contractors, 459 U.S. at 535 n.31. This Court now proceeds HN4¹ to determine whether Plaintiffs are proper parties to bring this antitrust action.

⁸ In contrast to the issue of Article III standing which was not mentioned, the Seventh Circuit noted that on remand this Court might "find it profitable to examine whether the AAM, whose members participated in the cash market, has standing under § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15, to bring an antitrust suit challenging anticompetitive practices in the futures market." 977 F.2d at 1167. That issue is now squarely joined before this Court. Unlike our discussion of Article III standing, our resolution of this issue will depend on the allegations of the Complaint and we will not consider matters outside of those allegations.

After expressing dissatisfaction with various tests, the Supreme Court set forth several factors to guide our present inquiry in Associated General Contractors, 459 U.S. at 537-45. Courts have developed various formulations of the factors outlined by the Supreme Court. We find the approach set forth by the Sixth and Eighth Circuits particularly useful. In Lovett v. General Motors Corp., 975 F.2d 518 \(8th Cir. 1992\), the Eighth Circuit listed the factors as follows:

- (1) the [25] causal connection between the alleged antitrust violation and the harm to the plaintiff;
- (2) improper motive;
- (3) whether the injury was of the type that Congress sought to redress with the antitrust laws;
- (4) the directness between the injury and the market restraint;
- (5) the speculative nature of the damages; and
- (6) the risk of duplicate recoveries or complex damage apportionment.

Id. at 520; see also Peck v. General Motors Corp., 894 F.2d 844, 846 \(6th Cir. 1990\).

Though no black-letter rules or tests exist, HN5¹ the Seventh Circuit has distilled the factors into three primary concerns. Nelson, 925 F.2d at 1562-63. The first of the factors is the causal connection between the damages claimed by the antitrust plaintiff and the harm to the plaintiff. Id. at 1562. The second factor is the "nature of the injury suffered by the plaintiff and the relationship between that injury and the type of conduct sought to be redressed by the provision of a private remedy for antitrust violations." Id. at 1563. Finally, the third factor is "the [26] directness of the asserted injury and, closely related, the risk of duplicative recoveries or (conversely) the difficulty of apportioning damages among various classes of plaintiffs." Nelson, 925 F.2d at 1563. Of particular relevance to this case, we add the HN6¹ related consideration of the "existence of an identifiable class of persons whose self-interest would normally motivate them to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement." Associated General Contractors, 459 U.S. at 542. As the Court explained, the existence of such a class of persons "diminishes the justification for allowing a more remote party . . . to perform the office of private attorney general." Id.

[*823] The differences between the expressions of the Associated General Contractors factors are ones of form rather than substance, and thus we are not concerned with any particular list. As the Seventh Circuit observed, HN7¹ "ultimately, standing involves a case-by-case analysis of 'the plaintiff's harm, the alleged wrongdoing by the defendants, and the relationship between them.'" Greater Rockford Energy & Technology Corp. v. Shell Oil Co., 998 F.2d 391, 396 \(7th Cir. 1993\) [27] (quoting Associated General Contractors, 459 U.S. at 535). Though various paths exist to reach a conclusion as to whether Plaintiffs are proper parties to bring this antitrust action, we will focus our attention on those trails marked by the parties' arguments.

Defendants initially concentrate their attack on Plaintiffs' claim on the directness or, more precisely, the indirectness of the relationship between the Resolution and the alleged decline in soybean cash market prices. Defendants argue that Plaintiffs, who participated only in the cash market, have suffered only indirect injuries from the Resolution which was expressly directed at the futures market in July 1989. Plaintiffs respond that the relevant market is the market for soybeans and the decline in cash market prices was both foreseeable and inextricably intertwined with the objectives of the alleged conspiracy.

As a threshold matter, we dispense with the notion proffered by Plaintiffs that the relevant market is the "market for soybeans." The Plaintiffs' Complaint clearly notes the distinction between the futures and cash markets for soybeans. As we noted above, [28] the futures market operates in a distinctive manner with one essential variable term - price. As a fair reading of the Complaint indicates, several cash markets operate throughout the country. Those markets operate without the structure imposed by necessity in the futures market. Despite Plaintiffs' assertion to the contrary, Defendants wisely do not contend that the markets are entirely unrelated. In this Court's view, the futures and cash markets for soybeans are distinct though obviously related markets. Cf. Utesch v. Dittmer, 947 F.2d 321, 323 \(8th Cir. 1991\) (recognizing that "there are two distinct markets in which cattle transactions take place: The 'cash' market and the 'futures' market."), cert. denied, 118 L. Ed. 2d 425, 112 S. Ct. 1764 (1992).

Moreover, the Seventh Circuit implicitly recognized this difference when it framed the issue for potential consideration on remand regarding Plaintiffs' standing to raise an antitrust claim when they did not participate in the soybean futures market. AAM, 977 F.2d at 1167; see supra n.8. We conclude that Plaintiffs' definition [29] of the relevant market as the market for soybeans masks the important differences in function and methods between the futures and cash markets, not the least of which is the fact that futures traders rarely are concerned with taking or making actual delivery of the commodity as a result of their ability to offset their futures contract obligations. As a result, we decline to consider the Plaintiffs' standing in relation to the alleged injuries they suffered as participants in a generic "market for soybeans."

Now we turn to the question of the directness of the injury allegedly sustained by Plaintiffs. Defendants rely on Associated General Contractors, S.W. Suburban Realtors, and a more recent Supreme Court case applying antitrust standing analysis to RICO claims, Holmes v. Securities Investor Protection Corp., 117 L. Ed. 2d 532, 112 S. Ct. 1311 \(1992\), to show that Plaintiffs claims are so indirect as to warrant denying them standing under § 4. We begin our discussion with these three cases.

In Associated General Contractors, the Supreme Court considered the standing of labor unions who sought recovery under antitrust law for damages [30] to their business activities. The unions alleged that the defendants, a multiemployer association of construction contractors and its members, restrained the market for subcontracting services by coercing landowners and other parties to divert business from union to non-union contractors and subcontractors. The Court reasoned that the immediate victims of coercion, the contractors and subcontractors had experienced direct injury due to the alleged violation. 459 U.S. at 540-41.

[*824] Conversely, the plaintiff unions had only experienced harm as an indirect result of whatever damages the construction contractors and subcontractors had suffered. Id. at 541 & n.46. The Court explained that the causal chain between the alleged restraint in the market for construction subcontracts, a market in which the plaintiff unions did not participate, and the harm allegedly suffered by the union contained several "vaguely defined links." Id. at 540. The speculative nature of the causal chain and the fact that the plaintiffs did [31] not participate as consumers or competitors in the relevant market weighed against standing.

Additionally, the obvious existence of parties more directly harmed by the alleged violation diminished the need to allow more remotely injured parties to proceed with a damage action under § 4. Id. at 542. Further, the Court found the plaintiffs' claim replete with speculation, complex questions of apportionment of damages, and the potential for duplicate recoveries. Taken together, these factors weighed heavily against enforcement of the plaintiffs' antitrust claim.

In S.W. Suburban, the Seventh Circuit applied the relevant factors to the claims of a corporate president who sought to pursue an independent antitrust claim for damages he suffered due to an alleged conspiracy to exclude his corporation from the market for the provision real estate brokerage services. The Seventh Circuit found that his claims were merely derivative of the damages suffered by his corporation. 830 F.2d at 1378. The court noted the substantial body of case law finding that derivative damages "sustained by employees, officers, [32] stockholders, and creditors of an injured company do not constitute 'antitrust injury' sufficient to confer antitrust standing." Id. We fully agree with the general rule stated in S.W. Suburban but find it of only marginal value given the different factual setting presented by Plaintiffs' claim.

In Holmes, the Supreme Court applied the proximate cause analysis adopted in Associated General Contractors for Clayton Act claims to RICO claims brought under 18 U.S.C. § 1964\(c\), 112 S. Ct. at 1315-18. Defendants acknowledge the different statutory context of Holmes but offer it as another example of an indirect claim not warranting standing. The Securities Investors Protection Corporation ("SIPC"), a private non-profit corporation, is charged with various statutory duties including a duty to advance funds to pay the claims of customers of defunct brokers. In Holmes, the SIPC sought recovery against multiple defendants under RICO for an alleged stock manipulation scheme that prevented two broker-dealers from meeting obligations to their customers. The SIPC's statutory duty to reimburse [33] those claims was thus triggered.

In considering the SIPC's claim, the Supreme Court found the link too remote between the conspirators' stock manipulation and the harm to customers, "being purely contingent on the harm suffered by the broker dealers." 112 S. Ct. at 1319. Only the "intervening insolvency [of the broker-dealers] connects the conspirators' acts to the losses suffered by the nonpurchasing customers and general creditors." Id. The Court further explained that allowing the nonpurchasing customers to sue, or allowing the SIPC to stand in their shoes, would require an analysis of whether the insolvency was caused by the alleged stock manipulation scheme or other factors such as poor business practices. Id. at 1320. Assuming that this factual assessment could be successfully undertaken, the district court would also have to apportion damages between the defunct broker-dealers and the non-purchasing customers. Id. These considerations resulted in the Court's conclusion that neither the SIPC nor the non-purchasing customers were proper plaintiffs.

Plaintiffs rely most heavily on a comparison of this case to Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, 102 S. Ct. 2540 (1982). [34] In that case, a health plan subscriber brought an antitrust claim against her health plan insurer for damages due to an alleged conspiracy to prevent clinical psychologists from receiving compensation under the Blue Shield plan to the benefit of physicians and psychiatrists providing psychotherapy [825] services. Defendant Blue Shield denied reimbursement to McCready for the bills she paid to her psychologist. Blue Shield allegedly desired to motivate subscribers not to seek treatment from psychologists by denying them reimbursement for such services. The Supreme Court found that McCready's claimed damage, easily quantified, was an integral and necessary aspect of the alleged illegal conspiracy. Id. at 479. The Court reasoned that the "injury she suffered was inextricably intertwined with the injury the conspirators sought to inflict on psychologists and the psychotherapy market." Id. at 484.

Plaintiffs argue that the Complaint alleges that Defendants intended to cause a price decline in both the futures and cash markets. Plaintiffs further allege that the exposure of [35] Defendants or affiliated trading firms and their clients on the futures market as holders of gross short positions exposed them to financial loss that they averted by causing a price decline in the futures market. Furthermore, the Plaintiffs assert that some of the affiliated trading firms and their clients had obligations to customers to supply them with large amounts of soybeans. Because these entities had not legitimately hedged their needs on the futures market, they were subject to losses from the high and allegedly increasing cash market prices. Plaintiffs argue that these allegations show that a cash market price decline was not only intended but necessary for the accomplishment of the alleged conspirators' goal to reduce their exposure on both the futures and cash markets.

Plaintiffs' reliance on McCready is misplaced. In many ways, McCready was a straight forward case because the plaintiff was a consumer in the relevant market for psychotherapy services and was directly affected by the defendant's decision to deny her reimbursement for services performed by a psychologist as part of a scheme to deprive psychologists of business. We do not find the present suit comparable. [36] In this case, Plaintiffs did not participate in the futures market and the Resolution was directed at that market. Nor could one say that Defendants' conduct is remotely as direct as denying an insured coverage for certain services. The unpaid bills in McCready are a long way from the intricacies of the soybeans futures and cash markets here.

We may condense the arguments in favor of standing to ones similar to those found in Associated General Contractors. In simple terms, Plaintiffs have alleged an injury causally related to Defendants' conduct and have alleged that Defendants intended to cause a decline in prices in the cash market as a necessary part of their conspiracy. As the Court noted in Associated General, however, HN8 [37] "an allegation of improper motive, although it may support a plaintiff's damage claim under § 4, is not a panacea that will enable any complaint to withstand a motion to dismiss." 459 U.S. at 537. Moreover, even if we assume that the decline in prices allegedly caused by Defendants' conduct is the type of injury protected by antitrust law, this is not sufficient to confer standing "because a [37] party may have suffered antitrust injury but still not be a proper plaintiff under § 4 for other reasons." S.W. Suburban, 830 F.2d at 1377. Those other reasons raise a substantial, and in our view, insurmountable hurdle in this case.

While a causal link between the soybean futures market and the soybean cash market exists, we find the causal chain between Defendants' conduct and Plaintiffs' claimed injuries too indirect and attenuated to support antitrust standing here. In similar circumstances, the Second Circuit found a plaintiff who operated in the copper scrap market did not have standing to challenge the conduct of defendants who operated in the refined copper market. Reading Industries, Inc. v. Kennecott Copper Corp., 631 F.2d 10 (2d Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 452 U.S. 916, 69 L. Ed. 2d 420, 101 S. Ct. 3051 (1981). Though Reading was decided prior to Associated General Contractors, its analysis of the difficulties in tracing the impact of anticompetitive conduct from one portion of the copper market to another is still viable and helpful here. The [38] Second Circuit found that the task of reconstructing innumerable individual decisions and countless market variables to gauge the effect of an alleged conspiracy in the market for refined copper on the price of [*826] copper scrap would "mire the court" in a difficult, if not impossible, effort to recreate the "possible permutations in the causes and effects of a price change." Id. at 13-14; see also de Atucha v. Commodity Exchange, Inc., 608 F. Supp. 510 (S.D.N.Y. 1985) (applying Reading to claim of London silver futures market participant against defendants operating in United States silver futures market).

In this case, the task of deciphering the effect of the parade of imponderables asserted by Defendants in this case is similar to the task that proved too speculative for the Second Circuit in Reading. To trace the effect of the Resolution, this Court would have to look first to conditions in the soybean futures and cash markets well prior to the issuance of the Resolution. The Court would have to determine the cause of the allegedly rising price for futures and cash market soybeans.⁹ That determination, if it could [39] be made, would then lead to analysis of the Resolution's effect on futures traders and, through their actions, its effect on futures prices. Along the way, the Court would necessarily have to consider the countless interactions of innumerable market variables over a period of time before and after issuance of the Resolution. All this would only provide, at best, a view of the futures market price decline and its potential causes.

[40] To reach the Plaintiffs' injuries, the Court would have to further speculate on the complex interaction between the futures markets and the numerous cash markets. As we previously mentioned, the conduct of countless individual decision-makers and multiple market variables varying by locality exacerbate the impediments to successful completion of this analysis. In the end, we may assume that the causal chain exists but the Court nonetheless finds that the attenuated nature of that chain's links weighs against standing for Plaintiffs.

In addition to the indirectness of the injury to Plaintiffs, Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' damages are speculative and "defy apportionment." To a great degree, this argument follows from the indirectness of the Plaintiffs' injuries. Plaintiffs contend that lower prices are direct and not speculative damages and that no overwhelming questions of apportionment exist. As in Holmes, this case would require the Court to determine what damages in the form of a price decline are attributable to Defendants' conduct as opposed to other market variables too numerous to mention. That calculation is further hampered by the additional variable of multiple [41] cash markets with potentially differing local variables affecting cash prices. In consideration of these extraordinary difficulties, we find again that the balance tips against granting Plaintiffs standing to pursue their claim.

Finally, we consider an important factor that neither party addresses directly. In Associated General Contractors and in numerous other cases, courts have recognized that where a more directly harmed class of potential plaintiffs exists, the need to allow a more remotely harmed class to proceed is substantially diminished. Associated General Contractors, 459 U.S. at 542; see also Holmes, 112 S. Ct. at 1320; Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479

⁹ Though not mentioned by either party, this case is perhaps further complicated by the absence of a potential party, Ferruzzi, which plays a central role in this saga. As the Hearing testimony indicates, the CFTC and the CBOT were concerned that Ferruzzi was attempting a squeeze that could and conceivably did contribute to the higher futures prices that allegedly prevailed prior to the issuance of the Resolution. As one court observed about the antitrust claims of traders in the silver futures market, "the magnitude of plaintiff's losses, if not the very potential for those losses, was directly determined by the actions allegedly taken by the non-exchange defendants to boost the price of silver futures." Grosser v. Commodity Exchange, Inc., 639 F. Supp. 1293, 1319 (S.D.N.Y. 1986), aff'd, 859 F.2d 148 (2d Cir. 1988). Thus, it appears quite clear that the market conditions both before and after the issuance of the Resolution are not only relevant but essential to analyzing the potential impact of the Resolution on the soybean futures market.

U.S. 104, 111 n.6, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 (1986). In this case, an easily identifiable group of potential plaintiffs exists whose harm from the Resolution is far more direct than Plaintiffs. Those traders who participated in the futures market experienced the effects of the Resolution [*827] most directly, especially those traders who held [42] long positions who stood to lose from a price decline. Their self-interest would normally be sufficient to protect the public interest in antitrust enforcement. Futures market participants have brought suits against exchanges and boards of trade seeking relief under antitrust law in the past. See, e.g., Grosser v. Commodity Exchange, Inc., 639 F. Supp. 1293 (S.D.N.Y. 1986); de Atucha v. Commodity Exchange, Inc., 608 F. Supp. 510 (S.D.N.Y. 1985). Accordingly, the Court concludes that this factor also weighs heavily against Plaintiffs' standing.

The preceding discussion demonstrates that Plaintiffs' claim is indirect and attenuated and creates enormous levels of complexity and speculation regarding both causation and damages. Moreover, another more directly harmed group exists and that group could protect the public interest in antitrust enforcement. Allowing Plaintiffs to proceed would involve this Court in the type of complex and massive damages litigation that undermines the effectiveness of treble-damage suits. Accordingly, the Court holds that Plaintiffs lack standing to pursue their claim under § 4 of the Clayton Act. [43] ¹⁰

AAM - Representational Standing

Even if we assume for the moment that Plaintiffs' claims are sufficient to overcome Defendants' other standing arguments, the Court finds that AAM lacks standing to represent its members. AAM seeks to represent the interests of its soybean farmer members in pursuing this action but there are no allegations that AAM itself has suffered any damages. Defendants assert that AAM lacks standing to represent its members because this suit involves issues of damages that require the participation of individual members. See Hunt v. Washington State Apple Advertising Comm'n, 432 U.S. 333, 343, 53 L. Ed. 2d 383, 97 S. Ct. 2434 (1977). [44] AAM contends that damage actions are not necessarily "excluded from the category of cases in which associations have standing."

The Seventh Circuit has recognized the uniform rejection of associational standing under § 4 of the Clayton Act. S.W. Suburban, 830 F.2d at 1380 n.3 (collecting cases). The court noted that both the language of § 4 and the test enunciated in Hunt barred an association's standing in a suit to recover damages to its members under § 4. Id. This Court finds no reason to depart from this authority and holds that AAM lacks standing to represent its members in this suit.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court grants the Defendants' motion to dismiss.

ENTER:

GEORGE M. MAROVICH

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

DATED: April 12, 1994

End of Document

¹⁰ Lest there be any doubt, even had we found that those Plaintiffs who refrained from selling had standing under Article III, our analysis and conclusion with respect to that class of Plaintiffs would not differ. In fact, the class of Plaintiffs who refrained from selling soybeans is one step further down the already attenuated causal chain and the damage assessment would have an added level of difficulty for these Plaintiffs.

Ehredt Underground v. Commonwealth Edison Co.

United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division

April 12, 1994, Decided ; April 13, 1994, Docketed

Case No. 91 C 2361

Reporter

848 F. Supp. 797 *; 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4658 ; 147 L.R.R.M. 2223; 1994-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,833

EHREDT UNDERGROUND, INC., Plaintiff, v. COMMONWEALTH EDISON COMPANY and INTERNATIONAL BROTHERHOOD OF ELECTRICAL WORKERS, LOCAL NO. 196, Defendants.

Prior History: [\[1\]](#) Adopting Magistrate's Document of January 27, 1994, Reported at: 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 748.

Core Terms

employees, conspiracy, bid, antitrust, recommendation, contractors, conspired, collective bargaining agreement, summary judgment, affiliation, alleges, restraint of trade, good faith, renegotiate, summary judgment motion, apparent authority, fair dealing, union labor, ambiguous, breached, objects, asserts, defense motion, diverted, parties, cable, grant summary judgment, legitimate business, Sherman Act, Underground

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN1 [down arrow] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Genuine Disputes

Summary judgment is proper where the record shows that no genuine issue of material fact exists and the moving party must prevail as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). In ruling, the court considers whether any rational trier of fact could find for the non-moving party. Although the general rule is that a court must draw all inferences in favor of the nonmoving party, antitrust law limits the extent to which permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence may be drawn.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Magistrates > Pretrial Referrals

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Magistrates > Standards of Review

HN2 [down] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

A district court must make a de novo determination of any portion of a report by a magistrate to which specific written objection has been made. The district judge may accept, reject, or modify the recommended decision, receive further evidence, or recommit the matter to the magistrate with instructions. Fed. R. Civ. P. 72\(b\); 28 U.S.C.S. § 636\(b\)\(1\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN3 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Section one of the Sherman Antitrust Act states that every contract, combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce is illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN4 [down] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

On a motion for summary judgment an antitrust plaintiff alleging an agreement in restraint of trade must produce evidence sufficient to carry its burden of showing that the illegal arrangement existed. To meet this burden, a plaintiff must show by direct or circumstantial evidence a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective. The court may not draw inferences that are "economically senseless."

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN5 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Seventh Circuit applies a two-part test to determine whether summary judgment is proper in an antitrust conspiracy case. First, the court must assess whether the plaintiff's evidence of conspiracy is ambiguous. Evidence of a conspiracy will be considered ambiguous where the evidence is as consistent with the defendants' permissible independent interests as with an illegal conspiracy. If evidence is deemed ambiguous, the court must ask whether there is any evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the defendants were pursuing these independent interests.

848 F. Supp. 797, *797L^{1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4658, 1}

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Contracts Law > Defenses > Ambiguities & Mistakes > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

HN6 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Under the Market Force test, evidence of an antitrust agreement is considered ambiguous where the evidence is as consistent with the defendant's permissible independent interests as with an illegal conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Conduct not supported by any economic rationale is persuasive evidence against the finding of an antitrust conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Authority to Act > Apparent Authority > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8 [down] Regulated Industries, Higher Education & Professional Associations

A corporation can be held liable in an antitrust action for actions undertaken by its agent under cloak of apparent authority.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Authority to Act > Apparent Authority > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Agency Relationships > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Agency Relationships > Authority to Act > General Overview

HN9 [down] Authority to Act, Apparent Authority

Apparent authority is the power to affect the legal relations of another person by transactions with third persons, professedly as agent for the other, arising from and in accordance with the other's manifestations to such third persons.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > Intent

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Authority to Act > Apparent Authority > General Overview

HN10 [down] Criminal Actions, Intent

Employees who affect decision-making authority on behalf of the corporation possess apparent authority or represent the corporation's intent.

Contracts Law > Breach > Breach of Contract Actions > General Overview

HN11 [💡] Breach, Breach of Contract Actions

Illinois law does not recognize a duty to renegotiate upon a change in circumstances.

Judges: ALESIA

Opinion by: JAMES H. ALESIA

Opinion

[*800] MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

This matter is before the court on the parties' objections to Magistrate Judge W. Thomas Rosemond's Report and Recommendation ("Report") on the motion by defendant Commonwealth Edison Company ("Edison") for summary judgment on Counts I, II, and IV of Plaintiff's First Amended Verified Complaint (the "Complaint").¹ Magistrate Judge Rosemond recommended granting defendant's motion for summary judgment on Count I, denying defendant's motion as to Count II, and granting summary judgment in part and denying it in part as to Count IV. For the reasons discussed below, the Court accepts the conclusions of the Report with respect to Count I and Count II. The Court sustains plaintiff's objection regarding its first claim under Count IV, and overrules plaintiff's objections to the Report as to the second claim under Count IV.

[2] I. FACTS

A. Edison and URD Work

Plaintiff Ehredt Underground, Inc. ("Ehredt") is an Illinois corporation engaged in the business of underground excavation. Kenneth Ehredt is the corporation's president, manager and sole shareholder.

Edison is a public utility which provides electricity to approximately the northern one-third of Illinois. Under a contract entitled the General Joint Agreement ("GJA"), Edison and Illinois Bell Co. ("Illinois Bell"), a public utility responsible for providing local telephone service within Illinois, divide responsibility for installation of electrical and telephone cable. Geographic areas are divided up under the GJA, with either Edison or Illinois Bell accepting sole responsibility for installing both companies' equipment in the assigned area. The GJA provides that contractors laying cable for Edison also act as agents for Illinois Bell and lay telephone cable at the same time.

As part of the GJA, Edison is responsible for completing underground residential distribution work ("URD"), which includes digging, trenching for ground cable, installing various equipment, and connecting cable. Although Edison's own employees traditionally ^{3} had performed URD work, in 1988 Edison management decided to hire outside contractors to perform some URD construction work in several of Edison's northern Illinois districts. In response to a request by officers from unions representing Edison employees, Edison agreed that it would contract out URD work only to companies whose employees were represented by unions.

¹ This court previously granted defendant Local 196's motion to dismiss Count III. Ehredt Underground, Inc. v. Commonwealth Edison Co., 830 F. Supp. 1083 \(N.D. Ill. 1993\).

[*801] In late 1988, an Edison construction foreman invited Ehredt and several other contractors, including Trench-It, Inc. ("Trench-It") to perform URD work on a purchase-order basis. Ehredt and the other contractors began performing work for Edison in the North Shore and Crystal Lake Districts of Edison's northern division. At this time, Ehredt did not employ union labor. At some point in late 1988, however, Ken Ehredt was informed that its employees should be represented by a union in order to work for Edison.

Starting in November 1988, Ehredt asserts that certain Edison representatives informed Ehredt that it should provide kickbacks for the award of URD work. Ehredt refused these requests, although an Edison representative had related to Ehredt that Trench-It provided kickbacks to Edison supervisors.

In early 1989, Edison [4] invited Ehredt, Trench-It, and several other contractors to submit bids for a contract to perform URD work. After the lowest bidder declined the contract, Edison awarded both Ehredt and Trench-It contracts to perform URD work. Both Ehredt and Trench-It performed contractor URD work in the Crystal Lake District during 1989 and 1990. Ehredt's 1989 Crystal Lake URD contract originally was set to expire October 31, 1989, but the contract was extended twice by the consent of all parties.

B. The Union Requirement

Although Ehredt's employees were not represented by a union at the time Edison originally solicited Ehredt for a bid, Edison's bid proposal form requires bidding parties to identify the union with which the bidding party has a labor contract. Shortly after Ehredt submitted his bid, therefore, he began discussions with several unions. Ehredt eventually negotiated a two-year collective bargaining agreement with International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, ("IBEW"), AFL-CIO, Local 336 ("Local 336"). The International approved the agreement on March 14, 1989.

Soon after the agreement was executed, certain parties began questioning Local 336's jurisdiction over Ehredt's [5] employees. First, Daniel Rosenmayer, president of Trench-It, complained to Harold Eastwood, business manager of Local 196, that Local 336 was representing employees in Local 196's jurisdiction. On May 9, 1989, James Conway, the International Vice President of the IBEW for the Sixth District, notified Thomas Beagley of Local 336 that Local 336 was not chartered for the type of work being performed by Ehredt employees. Conway stated that Local 196 was an IBEW-authorized union chartered for the work performed by Ehredt employees and, accordingly Local 336 must terminate its collective bargaining agreement with Ehredt.

In response, Local 336 appealed Conway's decision to the International President of the IBEW, who has the sole authority to determine all jurisdictional disputes. The International President reversed Conway's decision, stating that the agreement between Local 336 and Ehredt Underground was valid. In November 1989, Conway again disputed the jurisdiction of Local 336 over Ehredt's employees, and in late November, the International President again stated that the agreement was valid.

Far from accepting the International President's decision, the opposition to Ehredt's Local [6] 336 affiliation subsequently intensified its pressure on the International President to force Ehredt to switch unions. In January 1990 Harold Eastwood of Local 196 joined the battle and complained to the International President that Local 196 had jurisdiction over Ehredt employees. In January and March 1990, Conway sent two more letters to the International President. Finally, on March 13, 1990, the International President reversed his prior position and informed Local 336 that Local 196 had jurisdiction over Ehredt employees and Local 336 should not enter into further collective bargaining agreements with Ehredt. On July 17, 1990, the president of Local 336 notified Ehredt that the setting of pad transformers, pedestals, and switching gear for Edison was beyond the scope of the collective bargaining agreement between Ehredt and Local 336, because the existing agreement covered only trenching and cable laying. As such, Local 336 stated to Ehredt that it would not renew [*802] its collective bargaining agreement with Ehredt following its expiration on October 31, 1990.

C. The Rest of the Story

Although the above facts relate a fairly orderly though vigorous campaign to force Ehredt [7] employees to affiliate with Local 196, Ehredt asserts a more sinister side to the crusade. Ehredt maintains that in late 1988, his workers noticed that they were being followed from job site to job site. In April 1989 two Ehredt employees were attacked at a remote location while working on an Edison project. The two attackers first approached Ehredt manager Terry Counley while the other employee was away. The attackers asked to see Counley's union card, which he produced for them. After examining the card, the two men picked up some of Counley's equipment and dropped it in the trench. When Counley bent over to retrieve the equipment, the two men beat Counley. The attackers told Counley that "that's what he could expect if he ever worked in Cary, Illinois again." After releasing the brake on Ehredt's earth-moving equipment, the men departed.

Moments later, Local 196's business agent, Dave Lindsey arrived at the job site and questioned Counley about switching from Local 336 to Local 196. Counley told Lindsey that he could not give him an answer and asked for Lindsey's card. Lindsey handed him Harold Eastwood's business card. Harold Eastwood was a business manager for Local 196 and participated [8] in the dispute involving Local 336's jurisdiction over Ehredt employees.

On one occasion, Ehredt claims that Eastwood himself related to Counley and Ehredt that Ehredt's workers were in the wrong union, and that Local 196 was determined to obtain all work that it believed was within its jurisdiction. Eastwood stated that an Edison Board member was assisting him in getting rid of non-union excavation and cable installation contractors or getting them into Local 196.

Ehredt also alleges that he faced opposition on the job from Edison supervisors, despite Edison's overall satisfaction with Ehredt's work. As noted above, Edison extended Ehredt's contract twice between October 1988 and March 1990. Nevertheless, Douglas Hill, the supervisor in the underground construction department of Edison's Crystal Lake District, repeatedly threatened to terminate Ehredt and replace it with Trench-It. Ehredt asserts that Hill and other Edison employees consistently gave work to Trench-It that had been contracted to Ehredt. In addition, Hill often falsely blamed Ehredt for falling behind in its work and threatened to give the work to Trench-It.

D. The 1990 Crystal Lake District Contract

In [9] January 1990, Edison began to solicit bids for a second contract. Prior to his bid submission, Ken Ehredt spoke with Douglas Hill, the Edison supervisor, about his bid strategy, stating that he would likely increase his bid by twenty-five (25) percent from the preceding contract. In a later conversation, Hill told Ehredt that once Trench-It won the contract, most of Ehredt's employees would probably quit and go to work for Trench-it. Ehredt was alarmed at the implications of the statement. Not only was Hill aware of Ehredt's bid strategy, but also Hill's statement implied to Ehredt that Edison would give Trench-It special consideration in the bidding process for the as-yet unawarded contract. Ken Ehredt went to Forrest Stahmer, Edison's Contract Coordinator, to express concerns about possible favoritism. Stahmer assured Ehredt that the bidding procedure was kept as apolitical as possible.

Ehredt's fears were confirmed when Trench-It's bid for the contract came in just below the figure Ehredt had disclosed to Hill. Ehredt, however, had not followed his original strategy: upon the request of an Edison employee, he had lowered rather than raised his contract price. Ultimately, on March [10] 23, 1990, Edison awarded Ehredt a two-year contract for the Crystal Lake District, with the understanding that Ehredt would perform the work as a union contractor. Edison awarded Trench-It the backup 1990 Crystal Lake District URD contract.

[*803] Approximately three days after the contract was awarded, Hill called Ehredt's manager, Terry Counley, into his office. Hill told Counley that he did not think Ehredt could handle the work they had contracted to do and that he would "keep a close eye" on them. Further, Hill threatened to pull Ehredt off the job and give the work to Trench-It if Ehredt made "any wrong move." Ehredt asserts that although it made no "wrong moves," Hill began giving Crystal Lake work to Trench-It. Counley testified that on several occasions he arrived at the worksite only to find that the work had been done and, on one occasion, Counley arrived as Trench-It workers were completing the work.

At a January 2, 1991 meeting between Kenneth Ehredt and Terry Counley of Ehredt Underground and Janet Rudolph and George Adamaitis of Edison's purchasing department, Ken Ehredt complained to Rudolph about the work diverted to Trench-It. Rudolph assured Ehredt that Edison would stand [11] by its contract and pay Ehredt for all excavation work performed in the Crystal Lake District if Douglas Hill gave the work away in violation of the contract. As yet, Edison apparently has not deemed any work done by Trench-It as violative of the Crystal Lake District contract because Edison has not paid Ehredt for any diverted work.

E. Finding a New Union

Anticipating the expiration of its affiliation with Local 336, Ehredt contacted the Congress of Independent Unions ("CIU") in late July or early August 1990 about possible union representation. The CIU is a labor organization which is not affiliated with the AFL-CIO and is not organized by craft lines or geographic areas. The wage scale that would have been implemented under CIU representation was roughly comparable to the wages Ehredt paid under the Local 336 agreement.

Ken Ehredt notified James Harper, purchasing agent for Edison, that the CIU was under consideration as a possible replacement for Local 336. Harper referred the question of CIU representation to Daniel Shamblin of Edison's legal department. Three weeks later, Shamblin notified Harper that contractors should not affiliate with any unions not affiliated [12] with the AFL-CIO because Edison's own unions would not look favorably upon such an affiliation. Harper relayed this information to Ehredt.

Because of the new requirement of AFL-CIO affiliation, Ehredt began discussions with various AFL-CIO unions, including Local 150. Despite Local 150's AFL-CIO membership, Edison representatives Douglas Hill and James Harper related to Ehredt that Local 150 was not acceptable. Specifically, Hill told Ken Ehredt, "We don't want 150. Why don't you go with 196 and make everybody happy?"

Subsequently, in October 1990, Local 196 filed an intervenor petition with the National Labor Relations Board ("NLRB"), which scheduled an election for November 19, 1990. Local 196 now stepped up its efforts to pressure Ehredt and its employees to join Local 196. Agents from the International contacted Ehredt's employees at their homes in an effort to rally enough employee support. Agents of Local 196 assured Ken Ehredt that if Local 196 was given a collective bargaining agreement with Ehredt, the Local would assist in obtaining Edison's consent to price changes which would be necessitated under Local 196's higher price structure. Ehredt was also promised that Local 196 [13] would permit him to continue running the company as he had under Local 336. On the basis of these oral agreements, Ehredt agreed not to oppose Local 196's appearance on the NLRB election, and he informed his employees of this fact.

Local 196 won the election unanimously, and on December 17, 1990, it executed a collective bargaining agreement with Ehredt. Ehredt claims that no negotiation over terms of the agreement was possible. The agreement provided for a wage scale that was nearly ninety (90) percent higher than the scale implemented under the agreement with Local 336.

Ehredt's 1990 Crystal Lake District contract was predicated on Local 336's wage structure, and Ehredt found that an adjustment in its contract was needed as a result of the new agreement with Local 196. Ehredt [*804] requested a renegotiation of the contract. In early January, Janet Rudolph refused to renegotiate the contract and told Ehredt that unless he could adhere to his original bid, he would lose the contract. On January 14, 1991, Ehredt informed Janet Rudolph that he would not continue performing work under the terms of the 1990 Crystal Lake District URD contract, and that he was pulling his employees off the job. [14] Ehredt performed no work for Edison after that date. Edison subsequently awarded the contract to Trench-It, and Trench-It hired eighty (80) percent of Ehredt's employees.

F. Ehredt's Complaint and the Magistrate Judge's Report

In Counts I and II, Ehredt claims that Edison conspired to restrain trade in violation of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2. In Count I, Ehredt alleges that Edison conspired with Illinois Bell to compel Ehredt to execute a collective bargaining agreement with Local 196. Ehredt asserts that this conspiracy had the effect of eliminating competitive bidding in the Crystal Lake District and raising the cost to consumers of electrical and telephone services. In Count II, Ehredt claims that Edison, Local 196, Local 336, the International, and Trench-

It conspired to force Ehredt into executing a collective bargaining agreement containing ruinous economic terms, with the effect that Ehredt would be forced out of business and competition eliminated in the relevant market.

In Count IV, Ehredt alleges that Edison, through Douglas Hill, breached its contract with Ehredt under two theories. First, Ehredt [15] claims damages through Hill's diversion to Trench-It of work which was originally assigned to Ehredt. Second, Ehredt asserts that Edison breached the covenant of good faith and fair dealing by rejecting the CIU as an acceptable union and by refusing to renegotiate its contract after implementing the collective bargaining agreement with Local 196.

The Magistrate Judge recommended that defendant's motion for summary judgment be granted as to Count I, denied as to Count II, and granted in part and denied in part as to Count IV. Plaintiff objects to the Magistrate Judge's recommendation to grant summary judgment on Count I and to grant summary judgment in part on Count IV. Defendant objects to the Magistrate Judge's recommendation to deny summary judgment as to Count II and as to part of Count IV.

II. DISCUSSION

A. Standard of Review

1. Summary Judgment

HN1 [↑] Summary judgment is proper where the record shows that no genuine issue of material fact exists and the moving party must prevail as a matter of law. FED. R. CIV. P. 56(c); Wigod v. Chicago Mercantile Exchange, 981 F.2d 1510, 1514 (7th Cir. 1992). In ruling, the court considers whether [16] any rational trier of fact could find for the non-moving party. Wigod, 981 F.2d at 1514. Although the general rule is that a court must draw all inferences in favor of the nonmoving party, Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 112 S. Ct. 2072, 2077, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992), "antitrust law limits the extent to which permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence may be drawn." Wigod, 981 F.2d at 1514 (citing Valley Liquors Inc. v. Renfield Importers, Ltd., 822 F.2d 656 (7th Cir. 1987)).

2. Magistrate Judge's Report and Recommendation

HN2 [↑] A district court must make a de novo determination of any portion of the Report to which specific written objection has been made. The district judge "may accept, reject, or modify the recommended decision, receive further evidence, or recommit the matter to the magistrate with instructions." FED. R. CIV. P. 72(b): 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1). Therefore, this court will address both parties' objections and, applying the appropriate standard for summary judgment, [17] make a de novo determination as to each objection.

B. The Antitrust Claims

In Count I, Ehredt alleges that Edison and Illinois Bell conspired in restraint of trade to [*805] require their contractors to use union labor. The Magistrate Judge recommended granting summary judgment. Ehredt makes two objections to the Magistrate Judge's recommendation. First, Ehredt objects to the Magistrate Judge's conclusion that Illinois Bell did not conspire with Edison. Ehredt maintains that by signing the GJA, Illinois Bell relinquished the right to make labor decisions in areas assigned to Edison under the GJA. Ehredt states that "a requirement by Edison that subcontractors be union becomes the agreement of its principal, Illinois Bell. This creates the necessary plurality of actors and agreement necessary under Section One of the Sherman Act." Plaintiff's Memorandum in Support of Objections, at p. 4. Second, Ehredt objects that the agreement between Edison and Ehredt violates Section One. This court disagrees with Ehredt's contentions for the reasons that follow.

1. Liability Under Section One

HN3 [↑] Section One of the Sherman Antitrust Act states that "every contract, combination . . . [18] or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce . . . is . . . illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. The Supreme Court has held that

HN4[¹⁸] on a motion for summary judgment an antitrust plaintiff alleging an agreement in restraint of trade must produce evidence sufficient to carry its burden of showing that the illegal arrangement existed. Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 763, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984). To meet this burden, a plaintiff must show by direct or circumstantial evidence "a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective." Id. at 768. In regard to the motion for summary judgment on this anti-trust court, the court may not draw inferences that are "economically senseless." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 2083 (1992) (explaining Matsushita Elec. Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio, 475 U.S. 574, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986)). [19]

HN5[¹⁹] The Seventh Circuit applies a two-part test to determine whether summary judgment is proper in an antitrust conspiracy case. First, the court must assess whether the plaintiff's evidence of conspiracy is ambiguous. Market Force Inc. v. Wauwatosa Realty Co., 906 F.2d 1167, 1171 (7th Cir. 1990). Evidence of a conspiracy will be considered ambiguous where the evidence "is . . . as consistent with the defendants' permissible independent interests as with an illegal conspiracy." Id. If evidence is deemed ambiguous, the court must ask whether there is any evidence that "tends to exclude the possibility that the defendants were pursuing these independent interests." Id.

In light of these principles, we agree with the Magistrate Judge's finding that the record does not support the existence of a conspiracy between Edison and Illinois Bell. As an initial matter, we reject the notion that a contractual division of authority automatically makes one party to the contract a co-conspirator in illegal activities undertaken by the other party. As the Magistrate Judge pointed out. "under plaintiff's argument, every delegation of contracting authority from principal [20] to agent would give rise to antitrust liability as the agency agreement necessarily gives the agent the power to impose terms and conditions on third parties." Report, at p. 12. Ehredt has cited no authority that supports this extreme position, and this proposition contradicts the express mandate Monsanto that a "conscious commitment" must be made to the unlawful scheme. Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764, 104 S. Ct. at 1471.

Without Ehredt's theory of conspiracy through contract, we are left to examine the record for evidence that Illinois Bell and Edison conspired to require contractors to use union labor. As the Magistrate Judge noted, the only so-called evidence of agreement to use union labor is that both Edison and Illinois Bell use union labor. Applying the standard for summary judgment enunciated by the Seventh Circuit, it is clear that Ehredt cannot even reach the threshold of "ambiguous" evidence of a conspiracy, as there is simply no evidence in the record suggesting Edison and Illinois Bell conspired, other than the similar union requirement. Where the defendant has come forward [*806] with a sufficient legitimate business [21] justification, evidence of parallel business behavior, absent more, cannot defeat a motion for summary judgment. American Floral Services, Inc. v. Florists' Transworld Delivery Ass'n, 633 F. Supp. 201, 211 (N.D. Ill 1986). Here, Edison has explained that it requires its contractors to use unionized labor to improve internal relations. In the context of this case, this is sufficient to shift the burden back to Ehredt to produce "some significant probative evidence which suggests that conscious parallelism is the result of an unlawful agreement." Weit v. Continental Illinois Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 641 F.2d 457, 462 (7th Cir. 1981) (citing First National Bank of Arizona v. Cities Serv. Co., 391 U.S. 253, 289-90, 20 L. Ed. 2d 569, 88 S. Ct. 1575 (1962); Modern Home Inst. Inc. v. Hartford Accident and Indemnity Co., 513 F.2d 102 (2d Cir. 1975)). We agree with the Magistrate Judge that Ehredt has not and cannot meet its burden.

Moreover, we note that a conspiracy between Edison and Illinois Bell to require contractors to use union labor [22] makes no economic sense. From a financial standpoint, Edison and Illinois Bell would have all economic incentive not to use union labor because forcing contractors to use union labor would result in higher costs for the utilities. On the other hand, Edison's assertion that it uses union labor to improve internal labor relations is a feasible explanation. The compelling inference is that both Edison and Illinois Bell independently and legitimately arrived at their decisions to require union labor.

2. "Unilateral Conspiracy"

Ehredt next objects to the Magistrate Judge's conclusion that the URD contract between Edison and Ehredt may not form the requisite Section One "agreement." Essentially, Ehredt contends that the contract amounts to all illegal agreement by two employers "fixing the wage at which one or both pay their employees." Plaintiff's Memorandum in Support of Objections, at p. 2. Ehredt argues that the URD contract provided that Ehredt must sign a collective bargaining agreement with a union, and in turn, the collective bargaining that he signed contained uniform wage provisions. Therefore, Ehredt contends, the existence of the collective bargaining condition in [23] the URD contract defeats Edison's motion for summary judgment.

This novel position is not supported by any authority and is contrary to reason. As the Magistrate Judge correctly found, Edison's inclusion of the collective bargaining provision in its URD contracts was "for the legitimate and rational business purpose of maintaining a productive and agreeable relationship with its work force, which consisted primarily of union members." Report, at p. 17. By no rational interpretation can the collective bargaining provision be considered an illegal price-fixing condition. There is no reference whatsoever in the URD contract to an amount of wages Ehredt must pay his employees. Finally, as the Magistrate Judge observed, allowing a party to sue under the Sherman Act to recover damages "suffered as a result of another party's insistence on 'restrictive' terms in a contract . . . would make every contract illegal, as all contracts place restraints and restrictions on the parties who enter them." Report, at p. 15.

In sum, Ehredt has presented no evidence from which this court could find that a conspiracy or unlawful agreement existed between Edison and Illinois Bell or Edison and Ehredt. [24] Thus, Ehredt's objections to the Magistrate Judge's recommendation on Count I are denied, and defendant's motion for summary judgment on Count I is granted.

3. Count II

Count II of Ehredt's Complaint alleges that Edison, Local 196, Local 336, the International, Trench-It and certain employees of Edison conspired to force Ehredt to contract with Local 196 for the purpose of forcing Ehredt out of the URD industry. Ehredt's theory of the case may be stated as follows. Certain Edison employees wanted Trench-It, and not Ehredt, to perform URD work for Edison because Trench-It provided kickbacks to the Edison employees and because seven Edison employees had family members employed by Trench-It. Edison, Edison employees, [*807] Trench-It and Local 196 conspired to force Ehredt to breach its contract. Edison employees, Local 196, and Trench-It pressured the International President until he expelled Ehredt from Local 336. After the expulsion from Local 336, Edison railroaded Ehredt into signing a collective bargaining agreement with Local 196 that contained ruinous economic terms. The object of the conspiracy was achieved when Ehredt was forced to discontinue working for Edison, and Trench-It [25] was awarded the URD contract.

The Magistrate Judge recommended that defendant's motion for summary judgment on Count II be denied. The Report concluded that the record supported the rational inference that a conspiracy existed between certain Edison employees, Trench-It and Local 196. The Magistrate Judge further found that this inference was economically rational and more persuasive than the inference that each of the parties was acting independently and in furtherance of legitimate business goals.

Edison objects to the Magistrate Judge's recommendation on several grounds. First, Edison contends that central to Ehredt's claim is the contention that Edison conspired with its own employees, and that an antitrust conspiracy may not be based on such a conspiracy. Second, defendants argue that the Magistrate Judge improperly relied on no more than allegations of the Complaint to support its inferences that Edison acted improperly. Edison argues that Ehredt must bring forth additional evidence of the conspiracy to survive a summary judgment motion. Finally, Edison asserts that the Magistrate Judge's Report is filled with factual errors that destroy the inferences upon which the Report [26] relies to find a basis for an anticompetitive conspiracy.

Essentially, Edison's objections boil down to the core contention that Ehredt has not brought forth any evidence implicating Edison in the conspiracy, other than that regarding Edison employees whose conduct is not chargeable to Edison. Therefore, in order to thoroughly address Edison's objections, it is necessary to examine the specific evidence Ehredt avers and what rational inferences may be drawn from that evidence.²

(a) Local 196

Ehredt alleges that Local 196 conspired with Edison and Trench-It to force Ehredt to enter into a collective bargaining agreement with Local 196 for the purpose of driving Ehredt out of business. The record demonstrates that Local 196 complained to the International in January 1990 that Local 336 was [27] representing employees that were in Local 196's jurisdiction. The record also states that two Ehredt employees suffered a beating at a remote worksite and that the assailants likely were associated with Local 196, especially in light of the solicitation on behalf of Local 196 moments after the attack. Ehredt also alleges that the business agent for Local 196 indicated to Ken Ehredt and Terry Counley that Ehredt was in the wrong union and that an Edison Board member was assisting Local 196 in getting rid of non-union contractors or getting them into Local 196.

Upon examination of this evidence, we find that the inference is unmistakable that Local 196 wanted Ehredt to affiliate with Local 196, and may have used coercive and abusive means to go about urging membership. The evidence, however, does not go beyond this inference. The only evidence connecting Local 196 to a concerted action with Edison and Trench-It is Eastwood's boasting about his Edison connection³ and the fact that Trench-It's president first complained to Eastwood about the jurisdictional question.

[28] [*808] Applying the standard enunciated in Market Force, the conspiracy is ambiguous at best. Substantial evidentiary support exists in the record to infer that Local 196 was acting in its own, legitimate interest in obtaining Ehredt's membership into the union. On the other hand, there may be some evidence to indicate that Local 196 had some contact with either Trench-It or Edison in connection with the union jurisdiction dispute. Thus, drawing all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff, it is possible, although remote, to say that ambiguous evidence of an antitrust conspiracy exists.

Defendants however, have rebutted the inference of Local 196's involvement in the conspiracy. It is economically senseless for Local 196 to go through all of the trouble questioning jurisdiction and harassing Ehredt into signing a collective bargaining agreement, only to watch the terms of the agreement force Ehredt out of business. Ehredt has identified no reason that would explain why Local 196 would undertake a campaign to recruit union members for the purpose of putting them out of work. In addition, Local 196 appears to have had a legitimate reason to contest Local 336's jurisdiction over [29] Ehredt employees. See Market Force, Inc., 906 F.2d at 1171 (evidence tending to exclude the possibility of legitimate, independent interests is needed to support ambiguous conspiracy evidence). Local 196 contended that Local 336 was not chartered for the type of work being performed by Ehredt employees, specifically the setting of pad transformer, pedestal and switching gear. Thus, the only rational inference supported by the record is that representatives from Local 196 pressured Ehredt into signing a collective bargaining agreement because Local 196 wanted Ehredt's membership and jurisdiction over all URD workers in the area.⁴ As such, plaintiff has offered no rational evidence to infer that Local 196 entered into an unlawful agreement in restraint of trade.

² We will address the evidence with respect to alleged co-conspirators Local 196, Edison, Edison employees and Trench-It. The record is devoid of any evidence implicating the International and Local 336 in the conspiracy.

³ We note, however, that although this evidence may evince a connection between Edison and Local 196, it does not show that Local 196 had any interest in forcing Ehredt out of business. In fact, Eastwood's statements could be more easily read to support the opposite proposition, because Eastwood stated that the Edison official was helping to get contractors into the union. Logically, a union does not recruit members only to effectuate their unemployment by its "ruinous" collective bargaining agreement.

⁴ The record reveals that Local 196's campaign to recruit Ehredt was undertaken at the urging of Daniel Rosenmayer, president of Trench-It. This fact does not help Ehredt's case. As stated above, Trench-It's and Local 196's goals in pressuring Ehredt to switch unions were distinct. Trench-It wanted Ehredt to pay higher wages so it could compete with Ehredt for the URD contract, while Local 196 wanted Ehredt's membership. In order to find an antitrust conspiracy with a labor union based on a collective bargaining agreement, the goal between co-conspirators must be a common one. Mid-America Regional Bargaining Assn. v. Will County Carpenters Dist. Council, 675 F.2d 881, 889 (7th Cir. 1982).

[30] (b) Trench-It

Unlike the evidence surrounding Local 196, it is not difficult to infer from the evidence that Trench-It would like to have seen Ehredt put out of business. With respect to Trench-It, the record shows that Daniel Rosenmayer, the president of Trench-It, instigated the union jurisdiction dispute surrounding Ehredt's Local 336 affiliation. Moreover, Eastwood, Local 196's business manager, testified that Rosenmayer related to him that Trench-It lost the 1990 URD contract to Ehredt because of Local 336's lower wages. We agree with the Magistrate Judge's finding that "it is difficult to imagine what legitimate business goals Rosenmayer could have had in initiating a union jurisdiction dispute over another company's employees - as president of a company, Rosenmayer's labor concerns should have extended no further than determining which union, if any, would represent his employees." Report, at p. 20.

This evidence, however, does not demonstrate an anti-trust violation. While Rosenmayer's tactics relating to the union jurisdiction dispute may not have been pristine, they cannot amount to a conspiracy in restraint of trade. The most that can be inferred from Rosenmayer's [31] actions is that, with the intent to force Ehredt to repudiate its Edison contract, he contacted the unions to ensure that Local 336 was within its proper union-defined, jurisdictional boundaries. At this point, Rosenmayer had done nothing to violate the Sherman Act because no agreement was made between two entities to restrain trade. Subsequently, James Conway, International Vice President of the IBEW for its Sixth District, began a concerted effort to see that its jurisdictional restrictions were followed. At this point, still not actionable [*809] conspiracy is shown to exist because no agreement for an unlawful purpose has been shown. Subsequently, after the jurisdictional plea was initially rejected, both Conway and Rosenmayer complained vigorously to the International President to reverse himself and find that Local 336 had no jurisdiction over Ehredt's employees. On March 13, 1990, he, indeed, reversed his prior decision. He ultimately determined that Local 196 had jurisdiction over Ehredt's employees and that Local 336 did not and should refrain from entering into further collective bargaining agreements with Ehredt. Plaintiff does not allege that the ultimate decision regarding jurisdiction [32] was made other than in good faith. As such, no agreement to achieve an unlawful purpose can be shown between Rosenmayer and/or Trench-It and the International. From all the evidence, the most that can be inferred is that Trench-It maliciously initiated a union jurisdiction dispute and that the union then, independently and lawfully, decided a union dispute through its intra-union procedures. We cannot conclude that a plaintiff demonstrates an antitrust violation by alleging that an entity participated in a union jurisdictional dispute regarding a competitor. As such, Ehredt's allegations do not amount to an anti-trust conspiracy between Trench-It and the International.

(c) Edison

Next, the Report concludes that Edison conspired to frustrate Ehredt's ability to compete with Trench-It through Edison's application of its union affiliation requirement. The Magistrate Judge noted that, at the outset of Edison's relationship with Ehredt, Edison required union affiliation, but not with any specific union. Later, Edison, through Daniel Shamblin, determined that the union must be AFL-CIO affiliated. Regarding this requirement, the Magistrate Judge found the following:

This application [33] of the [union-affiliation] policy, which was inconsistent with both the original union requirement and Edison's policy toward other contractors, is unsupported by any legitimate business justification. Therefore, the inference that the policy was applied to Ehredt for the purpose of finishing Ehredt off in the URD market must be seen as the exclusive inference.

...

The fact that the Local 196 requirement apparently ran counter to Edison's economic self-interest in the URD contract market strengthens the circumstantial evidence . . . which suggests strongly that the policy was imposed as the coup de grace in a campaign organized by Edison, Trench-It and Local 196 to drive Ehredt out of the URD market.

Report, at pp. 27, 29. Edison objects to this characterization of its union requirement as an indicator of Edison's anticompetitive objective. Edison asserts that any inference of conspiracy is refuted by other evidence in the record.

We agree with Edison and sustain its objection. Any negative inference drawn from Edison's union requirement is refuted by stipulated evidence in the record and the lack of economic rationale for Edison to conspire. HN6⁵ Under the Market Force [34] test, evidence of an antitrust agreement is considered ambiguous where the evidence "is . . . as consistent with the defendant's permissible independent interests as with an illegal conspiracy." Market Force, Inc., 906 F.2d at 1171. It is far more likely that Edison refused the CIU for legitimate business reasons rather than as a calculated move designed to ultimately force Ehredt into breaching its contract.

First, as provided in the Statement of Uncontested Facts, Daniel Shamblin unilaterally made the decision to reject the CIU. His decision was based, as Ehredt has stipulated, on Shamblin's concern about work stoppages and difficulties with Edison's other unions. Final Pretrial Order -- Uncontested Facts, P 100. Shamblin made his decision without contacting or consulting anyone outside of Edison. Id. As such, Edison was acting independently when it made the decision to reject the CIU. We disagree with the Magistrate Judge's conclusion that the decision to reject a union not affiliated with the AFL-CIO was unsupported by any legitimate business [*810] justification. Preserving internal relations is an acceptable business justification.⁵

[35] Even assuming that Ehredt's evidence of Edison's involvement rose to the level of ambiguity, this court could not rationally find that Edison participated in the conspiracy because such participation would have been economically senseless. Conspiring to force out the low-bid contractor to replace it with a higher cost contractor is contrary to Edison's economic self-interest. We disagree with the Magistrate Judge's finding that the inference of Edison's involvement is strengthened because such a requirement is against Edison's self-interest. To the contrary, HN7⁵ conduct not supported by any economic rationale is persuasive evidence against the finding of an antitrust conspiracy. See Matsushita Elec. Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 1356, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 \(1986\); Eastman Kodak Co., 112 S. Ct. at 2083; Market Force, Inc., 906 F.2d at 1171.

The record also supports, overwhelmingly, the overall fairness and unbiased attitude of Edison towards Ehredt. First, despite Hill's apparent ill will towards Ehredt [36] from as early as November 1988, Edison not only extended Ehredt's first contract, but it also accepted Ehredt's choice of unions -- Local 336. Second, although Ehredt had ongoing concerns about neutrality of the bidding process, the procedure ultimately was conducted in a fair manner, and Ehredt won its second contract. Finally, when Ken Ehredt expressed his concerns to Janet Rudolph, she affirmed Edison's commitment to "stand by" the URD contract.

Therefore, with respect to Edison's involvement as a public utility in the antitrust conspiracy, we disagree with the Magistrate Judge that the record supports an inference suggesting Edison acted with anticompetitive intent. This determination, however, does not fully answer the question of Edison's liability in the antitrust context.

(d) Edison Employees

Although Edison argues that the conclusion that Edison was not involved in the alleged conspiracy should be the end of the argument, Ehredt maintains and the Magistrate Judge found that Edison employees participated in the conspiracy with Trench-It to oust Ehredt, and that Edison may be found liable under antitrust law for its employees' conduct. Before turning to the legal question [37] of whether Edison can be found liable in an antitrust context for the actions of its employees, however, we turn to the record to determine if the inference that Edison employees conspired with Trench-It can be supported.

In particular, we agree with the Magistrate Judge's determination that the suspect behavior of Douglas Hill, the Edison supervisor, indicates that he wanted Trench-It and not Ehredt performing the URD contract. The evidence

⁵ In addition, we disagree that Local 196 was the only acceptable union to Edison. The remarks made by Douglas Hill concerning the desirability of Local 196 over Local 150 is not necessarily indicative of Edison's decision whether Local 150 would be an acceptable union. Shamblin, not Hill, made decisions regarding union affiliation. Furthermore, Local 336 had been accepted by Edison. The union itself, not Edison, determined that Ehredt must be represented by Local 196.

strongly suggests that Hill leaked Ehredt's bid strategy for the 1990 Crystal Lake District URD contract to Trench-It, as Trench-It's bid came in just below the figure Ken Ehredt had disclosed to Hill. Notably, when Ehredt won the contract after changing its bid strategy, Hill reacted by becoming furious and threatening Ehredt that lie would give the contract to Trench-It if Ehredt made "any wrong move."

Second, after Ehredt began working for Edison under the 1990 URD contract, Hill continued his attempts to sabotage Ehredt. Hill made repeated threats to pull Ehredt off the job, despite Ehredt's satisfactory performance. Ehredt's foreman, Terry Counley, testified that work assigned to Ehredt was diverted to Trench-It. When Ken Ehredt confronted [38] Hill about the transfer of Ehredt's work to Trench-It, Hill retorted that "it's none of your damn business what I do with this work." Report, at p. 24.

Other evidence also implicates Hill in wrongdoing. Ken Ehredt testified that he [*811] approached Hill and Frank King, Edison's Crystal Lake District area foreman, about Edison's failure to pay Ehredt for completed work. King stated that Ehredt had "to pay the piper." Ehredt contends that this was a reference to paying kickbacks to Edison employees. In sum, we agree with the Magistrate Judge's conclusion:

Even if Hill's discussion with Ehredt concerning Ehredt's bid plans for the 1990 Crystal Lake Contract was held for the legitimate business reason of providing assistance to potential bidders, Hill's subsequent behavior - his prediction of Trench-It's winning the bid, repeated threats against Ehredt transfer of work to Trench-It, and the reference to kickbacks made by one of his subordinates in his presence - gives rise to the unmistakable inference that Hill discussed bids for the purpose of leaking bid information to Trench-It in order to deprive Ehredt of the opportunity to win a competitive bid. Such conduct is illegal per se under [39] the Sherman Act. See United States v. W.F. Brinkley & Son Constr. Co., 783 F.2d 1157, 1161 \(4th Cir. 1986\).

Report, at pp. 25-26.

In addition, the actions of Hill and Trench-It, viewed together, raise a strong inference that Hill and Trench-It acted in concert for the common goal of forcing Ehredt to breach its contract. While Hill used intimidation and provided Trench-It with confidential information, Trench-It apparently agreed to receive and utilize bid information and to receive work wrongfully diverted from Ehredt. Ehredt has asserted adequate evidence in the record to support an inference that Edison employees had an incentive to see Trench-It, rather than Ehredt, perform the URD contract, whether because of a financial gain through kickbacks from Trench-It or a desire to further the interests of family members employed by Trench-It. This scenario is also consistent in a larger context: the actions of Hill and others are not consistent with Edison's economic interests, but are consistent with the interests of an employee whose own fortunes bear no immediate relation to the price paid by Edison for URD work. Thus, we find sufficient evidence [40] from which to draw the inference that Hill and possibly other Edison employees⁶ conspired with Trench-It to put Ehredt out of business.

(e) Edison's Liability for its Employees' Actions

Edison, however, strenuously urges this court that such a conspiracy - between Edison employees and Trench-It - cannot form the basis of an antitrust conspiracy involving Edison. Edison avers that Hill was acting outside the scope of his authority, and to the extent that he acted unlawfully and in a manner injurious to Edison, Edison is not liable for his conduct. In contrast, the Magistrate Judge found that Hill was acting within the scope of his authority during the period in question, and was purporting to act on [41] Edison's behalf. For these reasons, the Magistrate Judge found that Hill's actions could be charged to Edison. Report, at p. 26.

In American Society of Mechanical Engineers, Inc. v. Hydrolevel Corp., 456 U.S. 556, 102 S. Ct. 1935, 72 L. Ed. 2d 330 \(1982\), the Supreme Court held that HN8 a corporation could be held liable in an antitrust action for actions undertaken by its agent under cloak of apparent authority. In ASME, a chairman of one of defendant's subcommittees issued an "unofficial response" condemning a competitor's product which ultimately led to the competitor's failure. This action by the corporation's agent was asserted as a basis for imposing antitrust liability on the defendant non-profit corporation. The Court found that the corporation had cloaked the subcommittee official with apparent authority, and "permitted those agents to affect the destinies of businesses and thus gave them the power to frustrate competition in the marketplace." Id. at 571. The Court defined HN9¹⁵ apparent authority as "the power to affect the legal relations of another" [*812] person *42 by transactions with third persons, professedly as agent for the other, arising from and in accordance with the other's manifestations to such third persons." Id. at 566 n.5 (citing Restatement (Second) of Agency § 8 (1957)). The Court rejected the defendant's argument that it should not be held liable unless its agents acted with intent to benefit the corporation, and stated that "whether [the agents] act in part to benefit [the principal] or solely to benefit themselves or their employers, [the] agents can have the same anticompetitive effects on the marketplace." Id. at 574. The Court also found that the defendant need not have ratified the agent's actions because imposing such a rule would allow a defendant corporation to avoid antitrust liability by ignoring its agents' conduct and would encourage corporations to do as little as possible to oversee its agents. Id. at 573.

⁶ The record also indicates that Frank King, Edison's area foreman for the Crystal Lake District, was likely a participant in the conspiracy. In the presence of Douglas Hill, King told Ken Ehredt that he had to "pay the piper." Ehredt alleges that this statement intimated to him that he had to pay a kickback.

Analogous cases have similarly concluded that HN10¹⁶ employees who affect decision-making authority on behalf of the corporation possess *43 apparent authority or represent the corporation's intent. See United States v. Basic Constr. Co, 711 F.2d 570 (4th Cir. 1983) (holding that a corporation will be held criminally responsible for antitrust violations committed by employees who acted with apparent authority and for the benefit of the corporation; corporate intent is shown by actions and statements of employees in positions of authority or have apparent authority to make policy decisions). In addition, the Seventh Circuit has found that, under ASME, "principals are liable when their agents act with apparent authority and commit torts even if the principal derives no benefit from the agent's actions and even if the agent acts entirely for his own purposes." United States v. One Parcel of Land, 965 F.2d 311, 319 (7th Cir. 1992). According to that court, the relevant inquiry into apparent authority asks "whether to a third party the agent appears to be acting in the ordinary course of the business provided to him." One Parcel of Land, 965 F.2d at 319; but see Union City Barge Line, Inc. v. Union Carbide Corp., 823 F.2d 129 (5th Cir. 1987) *44 (refusing to hold defendant corporation responsible in antitrust for criminal acts of its employee which were outside of his authority).

We hold, therefore, that the allegations and evidence suffice to raise a genuine issue of material fact as to whether Hill acted with sufficient apparent authority in conspiring with Trench-It in order to hold Edison responsible for any anti-trust violations. Hill possessed authority to apportion work between Ehredt and Trench-It. As such, Hill possessed authority to "affect the destinies of businesses and . . . frustrate competition in the marketplace." See ASME, 456 U.S. at 571. The record demonstrates that an agreement may have existed between Hill and Trench-It to restrain trade. Furthermore, we hold that Ehredt may be able to show that Hill and other Edison employees were acting sufficiently within their apparent authority when diverting work to Trench-It and by-passing the competitive process to hold Edison, as principal, responsible under Section One of the Sherman Act. Edison's Motion for Summary Judgment on Count II is therefore denied insofar as the plaintiff alleges a conspiracy *45 in restraint of trade between Edison and Trench-It. Plaintiff has alleged no other actionable conspiracy and, as such, all other allegations in Count II of agreements in restraint of trade are stricken.

4. Count IV

In Count IV, Ehredt alleges that Edison breached the 1990 Crystal Lake District URD contract. Ehredt sets forth two specific theories for the breach for which he seeks recovery. Ehredt first claims that Edison breached the URD contract when Hill diverted work to Trench-It. Second, Ehredt alleges that Edison breached the covenant of good faith and fair dealing by (1) refusing the CIU as an acceptable union replacement for Local 336 and (2) refusing to renegotiate the URD contract to reflect Ehredt's higher labor costs as a result of his agreement with Local 196.

(a) Ehredt's First Claim: Improper Diversion of Work

The Magistrate Judge recommended granting Edison's motion for summary judgment on the first theory of recovery. The [*813] Magistrate Judge found that Janet Rudolph's response to Ehredt that Edison would pay Ehredt for all URD work in the Crystal Lake District diverted to Trench-It in violation of the contract was dispositive evidence that Ehredt suffered *46 no damages as a result of the alleged transfers of work to Trench-It. Report, at

pp. 31-32. Ehredt objects to this conclusion, arguing that Rudolph's response demonstrates rather than relieves Edison's liability. Ehredt has produced Trench-It's paid invoices for work done during the contract period in the Crystal Lake District, and asserts that Edison has not paid him for this work.

We agree with Ehredt and sustain its objection. Ehredt has stated a valid claim under this theory and Rudolph's promise to pay for diverted work only strengthens Ehredt's case. In its brief, Edison stated that "Edison fulfilled its obligations under its contract with plaintiff by agreeing to pay for all work plaintiff was contractually entitled to perform." Edison's Motion for Summary Judgment On Count IV of the Complaint, P 4 (emphasis added). We disagree. Edison will fulfill its obligations to Ehredt under the contract when it pays Ehredt for the work it was entitled to perform. Edison's contention that Rudolph's promise to fulfill Edison's contractual obligations entitles it to summary judgment is erroneous. Rudolph's promise to pay does nothing to alleviate the damages Ehredt has suffered as [47] a result of the alleged breach of contract. Ehredt's objection to the Magistrate Judge's recommendation on the first claim of Count IV is sustained.

(b) Ehredt's Second Claim: Breach of Duty of Good Faith and Fair Dealing ⁷

The Magistrate Judge recommended granting summary judgment in favor of Edison on Ehredt's claim that Edison's failure to recognize the CIU breached the express terms of the URD contract. He recommended denying summary judgment on Ehredt's claim that the denial resulted in a breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing. Ehredt does not object to the Magistrate Judge's recommendation to grant summary judgment under the first theory of this claim. Therefore, this court accepts the [48] recommendation as to the first theory of liability on Ehredt's second claim that Edison breached the URD contract by refusing to accept the CIU as an acceptable union.

With respect to the second part of this claim, the Magistrate Judge found that Edison had unilaterally changed its union requirement to include only those unions affiliated with AFL-CIO "to the discrete disadvantage of Ehredt." Report, at p.34. Because Edison was vested with discretion to approve of Ehredt's suggested union, the Magistrate Judge found that a question existed as to whether Edison exercised its discretion reasonably and with proper motive. Report, at p. 34.

Edison objects to the Magistrate Judge's recommendation, arguing that Edison's refusal of the CIU cannot possibly be considered in bad faith because Ehredt has stipulated in the Statement of Uncontested Facts that it was not. Paragraph 100 of this Statement states that Shamblin, Edison's manager responsible for rejecting the CIU, rejected the CIU "because Edison faced considerable risk of work stoppages and difficulties with its own unions and from building trades unions if its contractors employed members of the CIU." Ehredt has also stipulated that [49] Shamblin's decision was made without contacting anyone outside of Edison. Therefore, Edison claims, the decision to reject the CIU cannot have been made in bad faith.

Because the record contains no evidence whatsoever contradicting the above stipulations, we agree with Edison and sustain its objection as to this claim. Ehredt does not implicate Shamblin in any other way as involved in wrongdoing, and there is simply no evidence supporting the contention that he was motivated by something other than legitimate business concerns. Thus, viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to Ehredt, [*814] we are unable to conclude that Edison's decision not to accept the CIU could have breached the covenant of good faith and fair dealing. This theory supporting the breach of contract claim is dismissed as having no basis in fact.

The Magistrate Judge next recommended denying Edison's motion for summary judgment on Ehredt's claim that Edison breached the duty of good faith and fair dealing by refusing to renegotiate the 1990 Crystal Lake Contract following Ehredt's signing with Local 196. The Magistrate Judge found that although parties are not required to renegotiate contracts when circumstances [50] change, the facts of the case warranted departure from this rule. The Magistrate Judge found that the change in circumstances - Ehredt's higher cost - was the result of a unilateral decision by Edison. The Magistrate Judge stated that "if the covenant of good faith and fair dealing means anything at all, it means that a party cannot use its unilateral discretion to change the conditions underlying the contract and then refuse to renegotiate the terms of the contract. That is precisely what appears to have occurred in this case" Report, at p. 36.

⁷ Edison states that "it appears that the Magistrate Judge's Report is also intended to be a ruling on Edison's Motion in Limine . . . to exclude legal theories." This is not the case; Edison's Motion in Limine was not decided by the Magistrate Judge and is still pending before the court.

Edison objects to the Magistrate Judge's determination, stating that the law does not recognize any "good faith" duty to renegotiate because of a change in circumstances. We agree with Edison that HN11 [51] Illinois law does not recognize a duty to renegotiate upon a change in circumstances. USX Corp. v. International Minerals & Chemicals Corp., No. 1987 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10914, *20 (N.D. Ill. 1987); see M.A.T.H. Inc. v. Housing Auth. of East St. Louis, 34 Ill. App. 3d 884, 341 N.E.2d 51, 53 \(5th Dist. 1976\) (no duty to renegotiate housing contract pursuant to the Illinois [51] Housing Authorities Act due to an alleged change of circumstances); cf. Bane v. Ferguson, 707 F. Supp. 988, 994 (N.D. Ill.) (finding that under Illinois law, duty of good faith and fair dealing does not apply in "overarching fashion, . . . but rather . . . limits one party's discretion where a contract gives the party that discretion"), aff'd, 890 F.2d 11 \(7th Cir. 1989\). Edison was not bound to renegotiate the contract. Edison's objection to the Magistrate Judge's recommendation on the third claim of Count IV is sustained. Defendant Edison's motion for summary judgment is granted with respect to plaintiff's claims in Count IV of breach of the duty of good faith and fair dealing.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, the findings of the Magistrate Judge's Report and Recommendation are accepted in part and rejected in part. The defendant's motion for summary judgment on Count I of Plaintiff's First Amended Verified Complaint is granted. Count I is dismissed with prejudice. Defendant's motion for summary judgment on Count II is denied as to the allegations of an agreement in restraint of trade between Edison and [52] Trench-It and granted as to all other allegations of conspiracy in restraint of trade. The defendant's motion for summary judgment on Count IV is denied as to Plaintiff's breach of contract claim and granted as to Plaintiff's breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing claim.

Date: APR 12 1994

JAMES H. ALESIA

United States District Judge

End of Document

Panache Broad. v. Richardson Elecs.

United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division

April 14, 1994, Decided ; April 15, 1994, Docketed

No. 90 C 6400

Reporter

1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4830 *

PANACHE BROADCASTING OF PENNSYLVANIA, INC., et al., Plaintiffs, v. RICHARDSON ELECTRONICS, LTD., and VARIAN ASSOCIATES, INC., in their own right and as successors in interest to Varian Supply Company, a joint venture, Defendants.

Subsequent History: [*1] Adopting Order of September 29, 1995, Reported at: 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14339.

Core Terms

tubes, electron, manufactured, conspiracy, acquisitions, prices, allegations, motion to dismiss, anticompetitive, customers, Sherman Act, joint venture, sales, amended complaint, eliminated, rebuilders, Memorandum, horizontal, dud, distributor, effects, Clayton Act, carcasses, products, argues, competitors, collection, antitrust, relevant market, power tube

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

Horizontal agreements are those among parties at the same level of the distribution chain.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Business & Corporate Law > Joint Ventures > Formation

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Joint Ventures > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Price Fixing

Although horizontal restraints do allow a finding of per se unreasonableness for a broader array of practices than vertical restraints, an allegation of a horizontal restraint does not, by itself, mandate a finding of a per se violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN3 [] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Attempted monopolization, as opposed to conspiracy to monopolize, involves individual action such as predatory pricing.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Joint Contracts

Business & Corporate Law > Joint Ventures > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Joint Ventures

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Exempt Cartels & Joint Ventures

HN4 [] Types of Contracts, Joint Contracts

A joint venture may constitute a violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN5 [] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

For purposes of deciding a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\), the facts alleged in the complaint are presumed true.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN6 [] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

A "market" is the set of suppliers to which a set of customers can turn for their requirements of a particular product at existing or slightly higher prices. A particular supplier's "market share" is that supplier's fraction of output. The higher the aggregate market share of a small number of suppliers, the easier it is for them to increase prices above the competitive level without losing so much business to other suppliers as to make the price increase unprofitable; this is the power called market power.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN7[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A complaint may be dismissed for failure to state a claim only if it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief. In considering a motion to dismiss, the court accepts all well-pleaded allegations as true and draws all reasonable inferences in the light most favorable to the plaintiff.

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN8[] Pleadings, Rule Application & Interpretation

Documents attached to the complaint as exhibits are part of the complaint for all purposes. Fed. R. Civ. P. 10\(c\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

HN9[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Supreme Court has cautioned that summary procedures should be used sparingly in antitrust cases because of the complexities involved. If a claim under the antitrust laws has been adequately set forth in the complaint, the highly factual and subjective questions of intent and purpose should be resolved after discovery and trial. The Supreme Court has observed that in antitrust cases, where the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators, dismissals prior to giving the plaintiff ample opportunity for discovery should be granted sparingly. In such instances, a complaint that does not contain a welter of factual detail, but does set out a possible theory as to how the plaintiff's anticompetitive conduct violated §§ 1 or 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1, 2, may survive a motion to dismiss. The prevailing standard of antitrust pleading is liberal, requiring only facts sufficient to at least inform the defendant of whether the claim is based on the per se or rule of reason theory.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN10 [blue document icon] Sherman Act, Claims

To show a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, plaintiff must establish a contract, conspiracy or combination intended to restrain competition and which actually has an anticompetitive effect. The statute was intended to prohibit only "unreasonable" restraints of trade, however. A court must examine the legality of any allegedly anticompetitive conduct by determining the consequences of the conduct in the affected market. The absence of a sufficient allegation of anticompetitive effects in a Sherman Act complaint is generally fatal to the existence of the cause of action. The only exception to the requirement of an allegation of anticompetitive effects occurs in a narrow category of cases that are deemed per se antitrust violations. In such cases, the kind of conduct complained of is so destructive to free competition that its deleterious effects are conclusively presumed. Examples of such per se offenses include price-fixing arrangements, group boycotts, market allocations, and certain types of tying arrangements.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN11 [blue document icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

An agreement to allocate customers or territories between competitors at the same level of the market structure is generally considered a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, whether the parties split a market within which both do business, or whether the parties reserve one market for one party and another for the other.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN12 [blue document icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Interbrand competition is the competition among the manufacturers of the same generic product, and is the primary concern of antitrust law. The extreme example of a deficiency of interbrand competition is monopoly, where there is only one manufacturer. In contrast, intrabrand competition is the competition between the distributors wholesale or retail of the product of a particular manufacturer.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN13 Regulated Industries, Higher Education & Professional Associations

Plaintiffs are required to plead anticompetitive effects for claims brought under the rule of reason, but not for claims alleging per se violations of the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Joint Contracts

HN14 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Agreements to negotiate for other arrangements in the future are not themselves unlawful. Such provisions contemplating future conduct do not themselves make out a per se claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN15 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

An antitrust complaint must plead factual detail only sufficient enough to inform the defendant of whether the claim is based on a per se or rule of reason theory.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Bench Trials

HN16 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The definition of a relevant market is a question of fact.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN17 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A co-conspirator who joins a conspiracy with knowledge of what has gone on before, and with an intent to pursue the same objectives, may be charged in the antitrust context with the preceding acts of its co-conspirators.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN18 [L] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Assuming that defendant's conduct is not presumptively illegal, the sufficiency of plaintiff's allegations must be analyzed under the rule of reason test of anticompetitive effects. It is important, in a "rule of reason" analysis, to assess defendant's market power both before and after the allegedly anticompetitive restraint is imposed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Market Allocation

HN19 [L] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Market Allocation

Market allocation is unlawful regardless of whether competitors have competed previously between themselves in the same market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Market Allocation

HN20 [L] Regulated Industries, Sports

The antitrust laws proscribe competitor agreements to restrict output, just as they proscribe agreements to restrict price.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Market Allocation

HN21 [L] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Market Allocation

A showing of previous competition between parties to an agreement is not a required element of a claim that the agreement is unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Bench Trials

HN22 [L] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The definition of a relevant market is a question of fact reserved for later proceedings on the merits.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN23 [blue icon] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

On a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, the court is bound to draw all inferences in the light most favorable to plaintiffs.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Entry of Pleas > Guilty Pleas > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN24 [blue icon] Regulated Industries, Sports

The inability of plaintiff to explain how the alleged conduct by defendant restrained trade in a discernible market is fatal to his claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Geographic Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN25 [blue icon] Relevant Market, Geographic Market Definition

The relevant geographic market defines the area where goods are bought and sold, not where goods are made.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

HN26 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

Horizontal price-fixing agreements need not include an explicit agreement on prices to be charged or that one party has the right to be consulted about the other's prices.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Entry of Pleas > Guilty Pleas > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Exemptions > Statements by Party Opponents > General Overview

HN27 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Section 5(a) of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 16\(a\), affords private plaintiffs the right to use guilty pleas as all-purpose admissions in civil antitrust actions as prima facie evidence of an antitrust violation.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN28 [blue icon] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

For the purposes of a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, and pending a ruling on class certification, plaintiff's class allegations must be presumed true.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN29 [blue icon] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

To establish a conspiracy to monopolize under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, a plaintiff must show (1) a conspiracy; (2) overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy; (3) an effect upon a substantial amount of interstate commerce; and (4) the existence of specific intent to monopolize in a relevant market. Proof of conspiracy to monopolize does not require plaintiff to show an exercise of monopolistic power or that defendants actually excluded existing or potential competitors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN30 [blue icon] Sherman Act, Claims

The element of anticompetitive effect required for claimed violations of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, corresponds with that required for claimed violations of § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2. Furthermore, direct purchasers of defendants' products need only allege that they paid inflated prices as a result of defendants' alleged anticompetitive conduct to sufficiently allege antitrust injury.

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Transportation Law > ... > Federal Powers > Powers of Congress > Substantial Relations

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN31 [💡] Involuntary Dismissals, Failure to State Claims

Plaintiffs' factual allegations must be presumed true and must be viewed in the light most favorable to plaintiffs in considering a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

HN32 [💡] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Elements

A restraint-of-trade claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, and a conspiracy-to-monopolize claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, require the same threshold showing: the existence of an agreement to restrain trade. Any conspiracy to monopolize is also a conspiracy to restrain trade in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. After plaintiff makes a showing of such an agreement, then § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, requires plaintiff to show that the conspiracy was formed with the specific intent to obtain or maintain a monopoly. It is this additional requirement that imposes a greater burden on a plaintiff claiming a § 2 conspiracy-to-monopolize violation than on one claiming a restraint-of-trade violation under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

HN33 [💡] Clayton Act, Claims

Direct purchasers of a product, the price of which has been inflated by anticompetitive conduct, have standing to sue under the antitrust laws. Plaintiffs have standing to sue under § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, if their alleged injury occurred within the market endangered by defendants' allegedly anticompetitive conduct.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Joint Contracts

Business & Corporate Law > Joint Ventures > Formation

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Merger Guidelines

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Joint Ventures > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Joint Ventures

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Market Definition

HN34 [+] Types of Contracts, Joint Contracts

Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18, forbids mergers and other acquisitions that are reasonably likely to substantially lessen competition in the relevant market. A plaintiff need not show a certainty or even a high probability of lessened competition, but only a tendency toward monopoly or reduced competition in the present and in the future. In assessing the probability of a substantial lessening of competition, the relevant criteria include (1) the market power of the joint venturers; (2) the relationship of their lines of commerce; (3) the reasons underlying the joint venture; and (4) the joint venture's line of commerce and its relationship to that of its parents. Assuming that the relevant market is properly defined, an acquisition which reduces the number of significant sellers in a market already highly concentrated is unlawful under § 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18. Courts must resolve doubts against the acquisition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN35 [+] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Judicial interpretations of the standards for judging the lawfulness of transactions under § 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, and under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, have "converged."

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Joint Contracts

Business & Corporate Law > Joint Ventures > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Joint Ventures

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Exempt Cartels & Joint Ventures

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

HN36 [] Types of Contracts, Joint Contracts

The Supreme Court has described the basic implications of any joint venture on competition in these terms: The joint venture is the chosen competitive instrument of two or more corporations previously acting independently and usually competitively with one another. The result is a "triumvirate of associated corporations." If the parent companies are in competition, or might compete absent the joint venture, it may be assumed that neither will compete with the progeny in its line of commerce. Inevitably, the operations of the joint venture will be frozen to those lines of commerce which will not bring it into competition with the parents, and the latter, by the same token will be foreclosed from the joint venture's market.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Joint Contracts

Business & Corporate Law > Joint Ventures > Formation

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Joint Ventures

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Joint Ventures > General Overview

HN37 [] Types of Contracts, Joint Contracts

The complete list of the Supreme Court's recommended criteria in assessing the probability of a substantial lessening of competition includes: the number and power of the competitors in the relevant market; the background of their growth; the power of the joint venturers; the relationship of their lines of commerce; the competition existing between them and the power of each in dealing with the competitors of the other; the setting in which the joint venture was created; the reasons and necessity for its existence; the joint venture's line of commerce and the relationship thereof to that of its parents; the adaptability of its line of commerce to non-competitive practices; the potential power of the joint venture in the relevant market; an appraisal of what the competition in the relevant market would have been if one of the joint venturers had entered it alone instead of through the joint venture; the effect, in the event of the occurrence, of the other joint venturer's potential competition; and such other factors as might indicate potential risk to competition in the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

HN38[Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Immense market shares strengthen the inference of market power and create a presumption of illegality. For example, three firms with a combined market share of 90 percent can raise prices with relatively little fear that the fringe of competitors will be able to defeat the attempt by expanding their own output.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN39[Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

There is no support in the Seventh Circuit for the argument that § 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18, applies only to those ventures that constitute true acquisitions of stock or assets.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Joint Contracts

Business & Corporate Law > Joint Ventures > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Joint Ventures

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Merger Guidelines

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN40[Types of Contracts, Joint Contracts

The test of § 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18, is the effect of the acquisitions at issue, not the size of the joint venture's holdings. The effect on competition is determined in part by the nature of the relevant market and by the nearness of the absorbed company to it.

Judges: PALLMEYER; NORDBERG

Opinion by: REBECCA R. PALLMEYER

Opinion

REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION

Plaintiff Panache Broadcasting of Pennsylvania, Inc. ("Panache"), a purchaser of electron power tubes,¹ [*2] instituted this civil antitrust action for treble damages and injunctive relief on behalf of a proposed class of purchasers who bought electron power tubes from one or both Defendant corporations between February 26, 1986 and the present. Plaintiffs allege that in entering into certain agreements, Defendants "engaged in a far-reaching scheme to eliminate competition, allocate markets and production, increase prices, and control the market for electron power tubes in the United States" in violation of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2, and section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18. (Complaint II PP 3-4.) Defendant Varian Associates, Inc. ("Varian") now moves to dismiss Plaintiffs' Second Amended Complaint as against itself in its entirety.²

The Parties

Plaintiff Panache is a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business in Bala Cynwyd, Pennsylvania. (Complaint II P 10.) Panache, which owns and operates a Philadelphia radio station known as WWDB, has purchased electron power tubes as an end-user for use in WWDB's broadcasting equipment. (Id.) Plaintiff V-R Electronics, Inc. ("V-R") is a Pennsylvania corporation with its principal place of business in Upper Darby, Pennsylvania. (Id. P 12.) Until recently, V-R designed, manufactured, repaired ultrasonic welding equipment containing electron power tubes; V-R has purchased electron power tubes from Defendant REL for use in its welding products. (Id.) Plaintiff Wood Radio Limited Partnership ("Wood") is a Delaware limited partnership with its principal place of business in Grand Rapids, Michigan. (Id. P 13.) Wood owns and operates two radio stations -- WOOD-AM and WOOD-FM [*3] -- and has purchased electron power tubes from Defendant REL as an end user for use in its broadcasting equipment. (Id.)³

Defendant Varian is a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business in Palo Alto, California. (Complaint II P 16.) Varian is the world's largest manufacturer of electron power tubes. (Id. P 17.) Varian also distributes these tubes. (Id. P 36.) Defendant Richardson Electronics, Ltd. ("REL"), originally incorporated under the laws of Illinois, subsequently reorganized and reincorporated under the laws of Delaware. (Id. P 14.) REL has its principal place of business in LaFox, Illinois. (Id.) REL is the dominant distributor in the United States for most worldwide manufacturers of electron power tubes, including those manufactured by Varian. [*4] (Id. P 15.) REL is also a manufacturer of electron power tubes. (Id. P 36.)

On February 26, 1986, Varian and REL formed Varian Supply Company ("VASCO"), a fifty-fifty joint venture. (Id. P 18.) Plaintiffs' original complaint named VASCO as a defendant in this action. (Id. P 18.) In April 1992, however, VASCO was dissolved pursuant to court order. See United States v. Varian Assocs., Inc., No. 91 C 6211 (N.D. Ill. April 14, 1992) (Lindberg, J.) (granting plaintiff's motion for final judgment). Varian and REL are successors of VASCO's assets and liabilities. (Complaint II P 18.)

PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

The procedural background of this case is fully described in this court's earlier Report and Recommendation ("R & R") issued on August 28, 1992, and will not be repeated here. In that R & R, this court considered Varian's and VASCO's motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint. In Count I of that three-count complaint, Plaintiffs charged that Defendants, in forming VASCO and entering into a joint venture agreement ("JV Agreement"),⁴ engaged in a contract, combination and conspiracy which unreasonably restrained trade and commerce in electron power [*5] tubes in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. Plaintiffs alleged that Defendants maintained prices for electron power tubes at artificially high levels and substantially reduced actual and potential competition in the manufacture, distribution and sale of electron power tubes. In Count II, Plaintiffs asserted that Defendants combined and conspired to monopolize, and attempted to monopolize, the market for electron power tubes, in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. In Count III, Plaintiffs alleged that Defendant REL's acquisition of stock and assets of other corporations substantially reduced competition in the market for electron power tubes, in violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18.

¹ Electron power tubes are vacuum or gas-filled electron tubes capable of handling at least 25 watts of power; they are used to amplify and control electrical signals in a variety of industrial, communication and scientific applications such as heating, dielectric sealing, and radio and television broadcasting where current or voltage amplification is required. (Second Amended Complaint (hereafter "Complaint II") P 2.)

² Defendant Richardson Electronics, Ltd. has also moved to dismiss Plaintiffs' Second Amended Complaint. That motion was not referred to this court and is not addressed in this Report.

³ Plaintiffs' Second Amended Complaint also lists as a named plaintiff CCA Electronics, Inc. ("CCA"), a Georgia manufacturer of radio transmitters containing electron power tubes. CCA has subsequently withdrawn from the suit.

[*6] In its earlier R & R, this court concluded that Plaintiffs had failed to allege a violation of the antitrust laws, and recommended dismissal of all three counts of Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint as against Varian and VASCO. As to Count I, the Report concluded that Plaintiffs failed to allege that the VASCO joint venture constituted a horizontal⁵ combination between Varian and REL, or that it resulted in the impermissible allocation of markets or fixing of prices. Likewise, the Report determined that Plaintiffs failed to plead a claim of attempted monopolization or of conspiracy to monopolize in Count II. Finally, the Report concluded that the allegations in Count III focused on REL's -- not Varian's -- acquisition activity, and that Plaintiffs had not adequately alleged that the VASCO joint venture substantially lessened competition, so as to withstand Varian and VASCO's motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' § 7 Clayton Act claims.

[*7] On February 16, 1993, Judge Nordberg issued a memorandum opinion, affirming this court's R & R in part and reversing in part. Panache Broadcasting of Pennsylvania, Inc. v. Richardson Electronics, Ltd., 1993-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P 70,169, at 69,815 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 17, 1993). As a preliminary matter, Judge Nordberg found that because Plaintiffs alleged that the VASCO joint venture established an agreement between Varian and REL as distributors,⁶ Plaintiffs had successfully pleaded a horizontal combination. Id. at 69,817. Judge Nordberg noted, however, that HN2[↑] although horizontal restraints do allow a finding of per se unreasonableness for a broader array of practices than vertical restraints, an allegation of a horizontal restraint does not, by itself, mandate a finding of a per se violation. Id. He concluded that Plaintiffs had not adequately pleaded a per se claim of price fixing, and dismissed that claim with prejudice. Id. Although the pricing formula contained in Article VIII(4) of the JV Agreement set internal joint venture prices at profitable levels, he reasoned that the formula did not set public sale prices and so could [*8] not be characterized as resale price maintenance. Id.

In contrast, Judge Nordberg found that Article VIII(11) of the JV agreement could be construed as an impermissible allocation of customers. Judge Nordberg noted, however, that the agreement did not allocate customers of tubes manufactured by Richardson, leaving a "big hole" in Plaintiffs' claim of illegal customer allocation. Still, drawing all inferences in favor of Plaintiffs, he concluded that their claim of illegal customer allocation should be dismissed without prejudice and that Plaintiffs should be allowed leave to amend their allegations on this claim. Id. at 69,818.

As for pressing both claims of price-fixing and customer allocation [*9] under a rule of reason analysis, Judge Nordberg held that Plaintiffs' allegations -- that REL and Varian dominated the market; that they maintained artificially high prices for electron power tubes; and that REL removed most of the competition in the power tube market -- were sufficient. Id. He suggested that additional allegations of market share and barriers to entry would have been helpful in showing Defendants' market power. Id.

⁴ Plaintiffs attached to Complaint II copies of the VASCO Joint Venture Agreement (Exhibit A) and a related Distributor-Requirements Agreement executed between Varian and REL (Exhibit B). Pursuant to FED. R. CIV. P. 10(c), both agreements are made a part of the complaint.

⁵ As explained in the August 28, 1992 Report and Recommendation, (R & R, at 9), HN1[↑] horizontal agreements are those among parties at the same level of the distribution chain.

⁶ Although the complaint only alleged that Varian is a manufacturer of electron power tubes, Judge Nordberg found that the language of the joint venture agreement clearly implied that Varian is a distributor as well. Panache, 1993-1 Trade Cas. (CCH), at 69,816 n.1.

Judge Nordberg also dismissed Count II as to the claim of conspiracy to monopolize without prejudice, and as to a claim of attempted monopolization by VASCO and Varian with prejudice. Id. Agreeing with this court that HN3[↑] attempted monopolization, as opposed to conspiracy to monopolize, involves individual action such as predatory pricing, Judge Nordberg found it unlikely that Plaintiffs could show any facts to demonstrate that Varian or VASCO had engaged in such conduct. Id. With respect to Plaintiffs' claim of conspiracy to monopolize, however, he allowed Plaintiffs the benefit of repleading to cure their failure to allege (1) that Defendants' conspiracy had a substantial effect on interstate commerce and (2) with particularity the [\[*10\]](#) existence of the conspiracy and overt acts in furtherance of it. Id.

Finally, Judge Nordberg dismissed Count III without prejudice on the grounds that, although HN4[↑] a joint venture may constitute a violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act, Plaintiffs had not sufficiently alleged the anticompetitive effects in the relevant market of the joint venture in the present case. Id. The district court granted Plaintiffs a final opportunity to file an amended complaint and to include in it additional claims raised in Plaintiffs' brief in response to Defendants' motion to dismiss. Id.

On March 17, 1993, Panache, joined by three additional proposed class representatives, filed a Second Amended Complaint ("Complaint II"). That complaint named Varian and REL as defendants and contained eight counts. Five of these counts (Counts I, II, V, VI and VIII) pertain to Defendant Varian. On May 7, 1993, Varian moved to dismiss Complaint II in its entirety as against itself. For reasons discussed below, Varian's motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' Second Amended Complaint should be granted in part and denied in part.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

HN5[↑] For purposes of Defendants' motion to dismiss under [FED. R. CIV. \[\[*11\]\(#\)\] P. 12\(b\)\(6\)](#), the facts alleged in Plaintiffs' Second Amended Complaint, summarized below, are presumed true.

Relevant Market and Defendants' Market Shares⁷

[\[*12\]](#) As the world's largest manufacturer of electron power tubes, (Complaint II P 17), Defendant Varian enjoys annual U.S. sales of such tubes in excess of $ 50 million. (Id. P 35.) Varian is either the only producer, or one of two producers, of many types and sizes of electron power tubes. (Id.) In addition, as Judge Nordberg observed, the language of the JV Agreement clearly implies that Varian also distributes these tubes. Panache, 1993-1 Trade Cas. (CCH), at 69,816 n.1. Defendant REL is either the dominant or only United States distributor for virtually all domestic and foreign manufacturers of electron power tubes, and a major manufacturer of such tubes itself. (Complaint P 36.) REL's annual sales of electron power tubes in the United States, including those it distributes for Varian, exceed $ 65 million. (Id.) Defendants Varian and REL sell electron power tubes to original equipment manufacturers ("OEMs"), such as Plaintiff V-R, as well as to end-users who need replacement tubes, such as Plaintiffs Panache and Wood. (Complaint II P 34.) Approximately 85% of all sales of electron power tubes in the United States and, correspondingly, of [\[*13\]](#) all sales of such tubes by Varian and REL, are for replacement use rather than for installation in new equipment. (Id.)

According to Plaintiffs, the relevant product market for this action is electron power tubes, (Id. P 31), and the relevant geographic market in this case is the United States, its territories, and the District of Columbia. (Id. P 30.) Varian and REL "have accounted for at least 70% of electron power tube sales in the United States" between ⁷ HN6[↑] A "market" is the set of suppliers to which a set of customers can turn for their requirements of a particular product at existing or slightly higher prices. F.T.C. v. Elders Grain, 868 F.2d at 907 (citing Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580, 81 S. Ct. 623 \(1961\)). A particular supplier's "market share" is that supplier's fraction of output. United States v. Rockford Memorial Corp., 898 F.2d 1278, 1283 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 920, 112 L. Ed. 2d 249, 111 S. Ct. 295 (1990). "The higher the aggregate market share of a small number of suppliers, the easier it is for them to increase prices above the competitive level without losing so much business to other suppliers as to make the price increase unprofitable; this is the power we call market power." Id.

February 26, 1986 and the present. (Id. P 31.) In addition, Varian and REL accounted for over 85% of the United States sales of those electron power tubes which are socket-interchangeable with the tubes sold by Varian and REL during the same period of time. (Id. P 32.)

The VASCO Agreements

On February 26, 1986, Varian and REL entered into the JV Agreement that granted VASCO exclusive worldwide rights to distribute electron power tubes manufactured by Varian. These rights were subject to certain exclusions, however. (Complaint II P 40.) Article VIII(11) of the JV Agreement, for example, provided that Varian would continue to make direct sales to all OEMs and worldwide governments and their agencies, [*14] to the extent that orders from such customers exceeded $ 5,000; REL, through VASCO, would become the exclusive distributor for all products to all customers for orders of $ 5,000 or less. (JV Agreement, Ex. A to Complaint II, art. VIII P 11.)

Pursuant to the JV Agreement, REL, Varian, and VASCO entered into a Distributor-Requirements Agreement ("DR Agreement") that made VASCO the exclusive distributor of certain electron power tubes and accessories manufactured by Varian's Eimac division. (Id. P 41; see DR Agreement, Ex. B to Complaint II.) The DR Agreement also made VASCO the exclusive supplier of REL for such products and provided that REL would purchase all of its requirements for such products from VASCO. (Complaint P 41.)

Article VIII(4) of the JV Agreement sets forth a method for calculating prices to be paid and cash payments to be made by VASCO to Varian for products sold pursuant to the DR Agreement, as well as by REL for products purchased from VASCO pursuant to the DR Agreement. (JV Agreement, Ex. A to Complaint II, Art. VIII(4).) The pricing formula in the DR Agreement appears to allow REL to pay VASCO, and VASCO to pay Varian, Varian's "Factory Cost" plus a cash [*15] amount, equivalent to "newly negotiated" and "confidential" distributor prices, so as to maintain Varian's profit margins at then-current levels. (See Id.) In the event that Varian's share of gross profits -- defined in article VIII(4)(a)(ii) of the DR Agreement as net sales, minus factory cost, minus VASCO's expenses -- exceeded such levels, Article VIII(4)(d) allowed for an adjustment of prices to equalize Varian's and REL's share of gross profits. (Id. P VIII(4)(d).)

Pursuant to the JV Agreement, Varian and REL established a Joint Venture Management Committee ("JV Management Committee"), composed of senior executives of Varian and REL, to manage VASCO. (Complaint II P 43.) VASCO did not own any facilities for manufacturing, production, warehousing or distribution; it operated out of REL's offices and its sole customer was REL. (Id. P 42.) Nor did VASCO have any marketing or sales force or employees of its own; employees of Varian and REL, paid directly by Varian and REL, conducted all of VASCO's activities. (Id.)

The Program to Purchase Surplus Tubes and Tube Carcasses

Pursuant to Article VIII(8) of the JV Agreement, REL agreed to "conduct an aggressive [*16] program" to purchase all surplus Varian Eimac tubes at prices and on terms set by the JV Management Committee, and, upon request by Varian, to purchase tube carcasses.⁸ (Complaint II PP 46, 47; JV Agreement, Ex. A to Complaint II PP VIII(8) and (9).)

Beginning in or around early 1988, Varian and REL began to collect surplus tubes and tube carcasses, and "raised the prices of electron power tube lines involved in the collection program." (Complaint II P 52.) The JV Management Committee regularly conferred about the collection program, which ultimately became the focus of an investigation by the U.S. Department of Justice during or after 1989. (Id. P 53.) On November 25, 1991, [*17] Varian pleaded guilty to a felony violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, pursuant to a criminal Information charging Varian with unlawfully agreeing with REL to "adopt a program to collect rebuildable tube carcasses to keep them from being rebuilt by tube rebuilders for the purpose of raising prices of rebuilt power grid tubes and new tubes of the same types." United States v. Varian Assocs., Inc., No. 91 C 6211 (N.D. Ill. April 14, 1992) (Lindberg, J.) (granting plaintiff's motion for final judgment).⁹

⁸ Surplus tubes and tube carcasses are "broken, damaged, defective, spent, used, or obsolete electron power tubes" of the types that can be rebuilt or reconditioned and then sold in competition with new electron power tubes. (Complaint II P 50.) Such surplus tubes and carcasses are sometimes referred to as "dud tubes" or simply "duds."

The Acquisitions

During and after 1981, REL acquired the businesses, [*18] or their assets or exclusive marketing agreements, of thirteen enterprises. (Complaint II P 56.) Relevant to the present motion, these included the acquisition of the inventory and equipment of Westinghouse Electric Corporation ("Westinghouse") in March 1988, of Amperex Electronic Corporation ("Amperex") in July 1988, and of the transmitting tube product lines of N.V. Philips ("Philips") in August 1988. (Id. PP 56(j),(l) and (m).) All three involved Defendant Varian. (Id. P 57.) The following year, Varian acquired Machlett Laboratories ("Machlett"), a division of Raytheon, Inc., one of the only significant remaining U.S. manufacturers of new electron power tubes. (Id. P 59.)

On or about August 13, 1986, VASCO entered into exclusive marketing agreements with primary Chinese manufacturers and exporters of electron power tubes,¹⁰ according to Plaintiffs, "to head off the potential manufacture in China and sale within the U.S. of low-priced electron power tubes socket-compatible with tubes manufactured by Varian." (Id. P 58.) In addition, during 1989, Varian acquired Machlett Laboratories, allegedly "one of the only significant remaining U.S. manufacturers of electron [*19] power tubes." (Id. P 59.)

DISCUSSION

Standard of Review

HN7 A complaint may be dismissed for failure to state a claim only if "it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957) (footnote omitted). In considering a motion to dismiss, the court accepts all well-pleaded allegations as true and draws all reasonable inferences in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. National Org. for Women, Inc. v. Scheidler, 968 F.2d 612, 616 (7th Cir. 1992), rev'd on other grounds, 127 L. Ed. 2d 99, 114 S. Ct. 798 (1994). [*20] HN8 Documents attached to the complaint as exhibits are part of the complaint for all purposes. FED. R. CIV. P. 10(c).

As our own Court of Appeals has observed, HN9 "The Supreme Court has cautioned that summary procedures should be used sparingly in antitrust cases because of the complexities involved." Scheidler, 968 F.2d at 617 (citing Poller v. Columbia Broadcasting Sys., Inc., 368 U.S. 464, 473, 7 L. Ed. 2d 458, 82 S. Ct. 486 (1962)). Poller and its progeny, the Scheidler court noted, "simply stand for the proposition that, if a claim under the antitrust laws has been adequately set forth in the complaint, the highly factual and subjective questions of intent and purpose should be resolved after discovery and trial." Id. (citing Car Carriers, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 745 F.2d 1101, 1106 (7th Cir. 1984) and Havco of America, Inc. v. Shell Oil Co., 626 F.2d 549, 559 (7th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1054 (1985)). The Supreme Court has observed that in antitrust cases, "where 'the proof is [*21] largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators,' dismissals prior to giving the plaintiff ample opportunity for discovery should be granted sparingly." Hospital Bldg. Co. v. Trustees of Rex Hosp., 425 U.S. 738, 746, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338, 96 S. Ct. 1848 (1976) (quoting Poller, 368 U.S. at 473). In such instances, a complaint that does "not contain a welter of factual detail," but does set out a possible theory as to how the plaintiff's anticompetitive conduct violated §§ 1 or 2 of the Sherman Act, may survive a motion to dismiss. Nelson v. Monroe Regional Medical Ctr., 925 F.2d 1555, 1567 n.7 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 116 L. Ed. 2d 236, 112 S. Ct. 285 (1991); see also Appraisers Coalition v. Appraisal Inst., No. 93-C-913, 1993 WL 326671, at *2-3 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 23, 1993) (citing Seglin v. Esau, 769 F.2d 1274, 1279 (7th Cir. 1985) and other cases) (prevailing standard of antitrust pleading is liberal, requiring only facts sufficient to at least [*22] inform defendant of whether claim is based on per se or rule of reason theory).

⁹ On October 7, 1991, REL had pleaded guilty to a felony violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, pursuant to a criminal Information charging REL with the same conduct as that charged Varian. United States v. Varian Assocs., Inc., No. 91 C 6211, (N.D. Ill. April 14, 1992) (Lindberg, J.) (granting plaintiffs motion for final judgment).

¹⁰ Specifically, VASCO entered into agreements with Jing Guang Electrical Manufactory, China National Electronics Export and Import Corporation, and China National Electronics Devices Corporation. (Complaint P 58).

I. Sherman Act § 1 Claims

HN10[↑] To show a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, plaintiff must establish "a contract, conspiracy or combination intended to restrain competition and which actually has an anticompetitive effect." Greater Rockford Energy & Technology Corp. v. Shell Oil Co., 998 F.2d 391, 396 (7th Cir. 1993) (citations omitted), cert. denied, 127 L. Ed. 2d 375, 114 S. Ct. 1054 (1994). The statute was intended to prohibit only "unreasonable" restraints of trade, however. Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 723, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, 108 S. Ct. 1515 (1988). A court must examine the legality of any allegedly anticompetitive conduct by determining the consequences of the conduct in the affected market. Havoco, 626 F.2d at 554. The absence of a sufficient allegation of anticompetitive effects in a Sherman Act complaint is generally fatal to the existence of the cause of action. Id. The only [*23] exception to the requirement of an allegation of anticompetitive effects occurs in a narrow category of cases that are deemed per se antitrust violations. In such cases, the kind of conduct complained of is so destructive to free competition that its deleterious effects are conclusively presumed. Id. at 555. Examples of such per se offenses include price-fixing arrangements, group boycotts, market allocations, and certain types of tying arrangements. Id. (citations omitted).

A. Count I: Overall Conspiracy

In Count I of their complaint, Plaintiffs allege that the JV Agreement between Varian and REL constituted a contract, combination, and conspiracy in unreasonable restraint of trade and commerce in electron power tubes in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. (Complaint II P 63.) Plaintiffs make a number of specific allegations in this count. First, Plaintiffs assert that Varian and REL conspired to allocate markets and for electron power tubes, (id. P 64(a)), resulting in the reduction or elimination of "actual and potential horizontal competition between Varian and REL" as distributors [*24] of, and manufacturers of, electron power tubes. (Id. PP 64(b), 64(c).) Second, Plaintiffs allege that Varian and REL reduced or eliminated actual and potential competition from other manufacturers and distributors of electron power tubes through a concerted effort to acquire competitors and competitors' inventory and equipment and to discontinue REL's manufacture of acquired tube lines that would have competed with Varian tubes. (Id. P 64(d).) Third, Plaintiffs allege that Varian and REL reduced or eliminated competition from electron power tube rebuilders through an aggressive campaign to acquire surplus tubes and tube carcasses, thereby depriving tube rebuilders of raw material needed to manufacture and sell rebuilt tubes in competition with Defendants. (Id. P 64(e).) Fourth, Plaintiffs allege that Varian and REL reduced or eliminated competition from electron power tubes manufactured in the People's Republic of China. (Id. P 64(f).) Finally, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants fixed, maintained and stabilized prices at artificially high levels, (id. P 64(g)), affecting a substantial amount of interstate commerce, (id. P 65), and injuring Plaintiffs and other [*25] members of the proposed class by charging them substantially higher prices for electron power tubes than they would have had to pay absent the § 1 violations. (Id. P 66.)

1. Effects of Customer Allocation on Horizontal Competition

In the First Amended Complaint, Plaintiffs' challenge to the lawfulness of alleged horizontal restraints on distribution was separate from their allegations of unlawful customer allocation. As Defendants note, Plaintiffs' Second Amended Complaint now addresses customer allocation and horizontal distribution claims in a single allegation. Specifically, Plaintiffs now allege that Varian's and REL's conspiracy to allocate markets and customers reduced actual and potential horizontal competition between them as distributors and manufacturers of electron power tubes. (Complaint II PP 64(a)-(c).)

HN11[↑] An agreement to allocate customers or territories between competitors at the same level of the market structure is generally considered a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, whether the parties split a market within which both do business, or whether the parties reserve one market for one party and another for the other. Palmer v. BRG of Georgia, Inc., 498 U.S. 46, 49-50, 112 L. Ed. 2d 349, 111 S. Ct. 401 (1990) [*26] (citing United States v. Topco Assocs., Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 608 (1972)). Noting that Plaintiffs had alleged that REL manufactures most of the tubes sold in the United States, Judge Nordberg earlier concluded that Article VIII(11)¹¹ [*27] and Exhibit A¹² of the JV Agreement, invoked by Plaintiffs in their First Amended Complaint to support a claim of a per se violation of § 1, do not indicate the existence of an agreement to allocate REL-manufactured tubes. Panache, 1993-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P 70,169, at 69,817-18. Nevertheless, Judge Nordberg suggested that this pleading deficiency could be cured.

Varian now contends that Plaintiffs' Second Amended Complaint fails to cure this deficiency. Varian assumes that to plead a restraint on interbrand competition at the distribution level, Plaintiffs must plead at a minimum that Varian customers were prevented from purchasing from Richardson brands manufactured by Richardson or other firms. Varian asserts that Plaintiffs have failed to do so and, consequently, have failed to allege facts sufficient to establish the elimination of interbrand¹³ competition at the distribution level. (Reply Memorandum of Defendant Varian Associates, Inc. in Response to Plaintiffs' Memorandum in Opposition to Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the Second Amended Complaint Pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) (hereinafter "Varian's Reply"), at 4.)

[*28] Notably, HN13 Plaintiffs are required to plead anticompetitive effects for claims brought under the rule of reason, but not for claims alleging per se violations of the Sherman Act. Banks v. National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, 977 F.2d 1081, 1087-88 (7th Cir. 1992) (citing Car Carriers, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 745 F.2d 1101, 1107-08 (7th Cir. 1984)). Thus, Plaintiffs are not required to plead anticompetitive effects in order to cure the prior pleading deficiency in the per se claim of unlawful customer allocation. As Judge Nordberg earlier noted, per se claims require the pleading of an agreement affecting the allocation of REL-manufactured tubes; the anticompetitive effects of such an agreement are presumed.

Plaintiffs urge that their Second Amended Complaint has cured the deficiency in their earlier pleaded claim of a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. Although Plaintiffs do not expressly allege in the Second Amended Complaint that REL agreed not to sell to any set of customers tubes manufactured by firms other than Varian, Plaintiffs have alleged the existence of "(1) agreements by REL not to compete [*29] with Varian in the sale of electron power tubes to 'restricted' Varian accounts, and (2) agreements by Varian not to sell its products directly in competition with REL at other accounts." (Complaint II P 44(a).) Specifically, Plaintiffs urge that Articles VIII(6) and VIII(7) of the JV Agreement impose restraints on REL's distributor relationships with manufacturers other than Varian, and thus could prevent customers from purchasing from REL products manufactured by firms other than Varian. (Complaint II P 44; JV Agreement, Ex. A to Complaint II, Art. VIII(6), (7).) Notably, however, the restraints challenged by Plaintiff here are imposed not by the JV Agreement itself, but by conduct of REL and VASCO that the Agreement only anticipates.¹⁴ Article VIII(6), for example, provides in part for the joint venture to enter into a

¹¹ Article VIII(11) of the JV Agreement provides:

So long as JV is a distributor of products pursuant to the [DR] Agreement attached hereto, Varian shall continue to (a) make direct sales of Products to local, state and federal governmental entities as provided in Exhibit A attached hereto and subject to the $ 5000 order limitation provided in Exhibit A, (b) continue and expand its OEM [original equipment manufacturer] arrangements as provided in Exhibit A attached hereto and subject to the $ 5000 order limitation provided in Exhibit A, and (c) continue to make direct internal sales of Products to Varian divisions and subsidiaries.

¹² Exhibit A describes markets and products covered by the JV agreement.

¹³ The Supreme Court has explained the distinction between interbrand and intrabrand competition in these terms:

HN12 Interbrand competition is the competition among the manufacturers of the same generic product -- television sets in this case -- and is the primary concern of antitrust law. The extreme example of a deficiency of interbrand competition is monopoly, where there is only one manufacturer. In contrast, intrabrand competition is the competition between the distributors -- wholesale or retail -- of the product of a particular manufacturer.

distributor relationship with manufacturers other than Varian "as soon as possible alter the execution" of the JV Agreement. (JV Agreement, Ex. A to Complaint II, Art. VIII(6).) Article VIII(7), similarly, states that the joint venture "anticipates entering into transactions and arrangements" with other tube manufacturers. (Id. Art. VIII(7).) Plaintiffs [*30] apparently contend that provisions such as these -- HN14¹⁴ agreements to negotiate for other arrangement in the future -- are themselves unlawful. Plaintiffs have not cited case law or other authority demonstrating that such provisions in fact result in unlawful customer allocations; this court is unwilling to conclude that provisions contemplating future conduct themselves make out a per se claim.

[*31] In his earlier opinion, however, Judge Nordberg did determine that, analyzed under the rule of reason, Plaintiffs have successfully pleaded a horizontal combination and sufficiently alleged Defendants' market power, that is, that Plaintiffs had adequately pleaded anticompetitive effects. Panache Broadcasting, 1993-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P 70,169, at 69,817. Moreover, in their Second Amended Complaint, Plaintiffs have alleged such effects expressly, stating that Defendants' agreement to allocate customers for electron power tubes did result in the reduction or elimination of "actual and potential horizontal competition between Varian and REL" as distributors of such tubes (Complaint II PP 64(b), 64(c)), and did injure Plaintiffs and other members of the proposed class by resulting in substantially higher prices for electron power tubes than they would have had to pay absent the § 1 violations.¹⁵ (Id. P 66.) Plaintiffs' complaint does, therefore, sufficiently allege a scheme of illegal customer allocation under the rule of reason. Varian's motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' claim of illegal customer allocation should therefore be denied.

[*32] 2. Restraint of Competition in Manufacturing

Varian next asserts that Plaintiffs fail to plead the existence of an agreement between the parties to restrict manufacturing competition. Specifically, Varian contends that Plaintiffs alleged neither that Varian and REL manufactured competing products, nor that the JV Agreement, or any other agreement, eliminated manufacturing competition between Varian and REL. (Memorandum of Defendant Varian Associates, Inc. in Support of its Motion to Dismiss the Second Amended Complaint Pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) (hereinafter "Varian's Memorandum"), at 5.) According to Varian, although Varian and REL both manufacture electron power tubes, Plaintiffs failed to allege that

¹⁴ Articles VIII(6) and VIII(7) provide:

6. As soon as possible after the execution of this Agreement, JV [VASCO Joint Venture] shall enter into distributor relationships with manufacturers other than Varian and pursuant to agreements approved by the JV Management Committee for the distribution in Territories of Other Products. Other Products sold to JV pursuant to such agreements shall be purchased at prices which are subject to approval by the JV Management Committee.

7. In addition to the activities described in this Article VIII, JV anticipates entering into transactions and arrangements with tube manufacturers other than Varian to purchase or to have manufactured piece parts and subassemblies for power grid tubes or finished goods with Varian supervision. In this regard and as a condition to the close of this Agreement, Richardson shall assign to the JV any and all rights and any and all obligations it has or may have in the future with manufacturers from the People's Republic of China ("PRC") as well as elsewhere to purchase such piece parts, subassemblies or finished goods . . . and the JV shall then sell to Varian such piece parts and subassemblies

(emphasis added). "Other Products" is defined in Exhibit B to the JV Agreement as "all products that are interchangeable with those products that Varian has granted exclusive distribution rights to."

¹⁵ Plaintiffs insist, more precisely in their opposition brief than in their Second Amended Complaint, that:

REL and Varian agreed not only that REL would not sell Varian tubes to "restricted" accounts, but that REL would not sell any other competing tubes to those restricted accounts. In turn, Varian bound itself to sell electron power tubes and any competing tubes made by other manufacturers only to VASCO, which in turn sold only to REL, thereby protecting REL from any possible competition from Varian in the sale of both Varian and non-Varian tubes. REL also assigned all of its current and future distribution and supply agreements with other manufacturers to VASCO, further assuring Varian control over any possible competition from REL's distribution of those competitors' lines.

(Plaintiffs' Memorandum in Opposition to Defendant Varian Associates' Motion to Dismiss the Second Amended Complaint (hereinafter "Plaintiffs' Opposition"), at 9-10) (footnote omitted) (citing Complaint II P 44; JV Agreement, Art. VIII PP 6-7.)

REL made a single tube type that competed with a tube type manufactured by Varian. (Id. at 5-6.) Citing National Collegiate Athletic Association \(NCAA\) v. Board of Regents of Univ. of Oklahoma, 468 U.S. 85, 111, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70, 104 S. Ct. 2948 \(1984\), Varian contends that Plaintiffs must, at a minimum, plead that Varian and REL each manufactured some tubes that were reasonable substitutes for some tubes manufactured [*33] by the other. (Varian's Reply, at 6.)

Plaintiffs insist that they have satisfied pleading requirements with their allegation in P 37 of Complaint II that Varian and REL were "horizontal competitors in the manufacture" of electron power tubes. (Plaintiffs' Opposition, at 11.) Moreover, they contend that their general allegations in paragraphs 44(b) and 44(d) that the agreements between Varian and REL and the subsequent conduct of the VASCO joint venture reduced or eliminated manufacturing competition, and in paragraphs 56-61 that specified acquisitions reduced manufacturing competition, satisfy notice pleading requirements under Rule 8\(a\). (Id.)

Plaintiffs' allegations do minimally meet the liberal pleading standards for complex antitrust complaints. See Nelson v. Monroe Regional Medical Ctr., 925 F.2d 1555, 1567 n.7 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 116 L. Ed. 2d 236, 112 S. Ct. 285 (1991); Appraisers Coalition v. Appraisal Inst., No. 93- C-913, 1993 WL 326671, at *2-3 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 23, 1993) (Nordberg, J.) (HN15 antitrust complaint must plead factual detail only sufficient enough to inform defendant of whether [*34] claim is based on per se or rule of reason theory). If Varian can demonstrate that its tubes and REL-manufactured tubes are not reasonable substitutes for each other, then Varian very well may be entitled to summary judgment on this issue.¹⁶ At this stage, however, Varian's motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' § 1 allegations of restraint on manufacturing competition should be denied.

3. The Alleged Acquisition Activity

Plaintiffs allege that [*35] the agreement between REL and Varian reduced or eliminated competition through Defendants' program of "acquiring competitors, competitors' inventory, and competitors' equipment." Of the thirteen acquisitions described in Complaint II, Plaintiffs allege that all acquisitions made after February 1986, particularly Amperex (P 57), Philips (P 57), Westinghouse (P 57), and Machlett (P 59), were made in collusion with Varian to advance the conspiracy to "dominate, control, allocate, and monopolize" the tube market. Varian insists that in allegations concerning only three of these acquisitions -- Amperex, Philips and Machlett -- do Plaintiffs plead any type of involvement by Varian.¹⁷ (Varian's Memorandum, at 6.)

36] a. Amperex Acquisition

Plaintiffs allege that around July 1988, REL bought Amperex Electronic Corporation, a manufacturer of electron power tubes, and that shortly thereafter, by agreement with Varian, REL discontinued producing Amperex electron power tubes that were socket-interchangeable with tubes produced by Varian. (Complaint II P 56(1).) Plaintiffs further allege that this transaction (1) made Varian the dominant or only manufacturer of these tubes to OEMs in the U.S. and (2) made REL the dominant or only seller of these tubes in the U.S. for replacement uses. (Id.)

Varian argues that Plaintiffs have failed to state a § 1 Sherman Act claim against Varian because they have pleaded neither that Varian participated in making the acquisition, nor that, at the time of the alleged post-acquisition agreement, REL and Varian competed in the manufacture of Amperex tube types. Thus, Varian concludes, Plaintiffs have failed to plead the facts to show that the alleged post-acquisition agreement caused some actual "anticompetitive effect," (Varian's Reply, at 10), a necessary component of a non-per se § 1 claim.

¹⁶ Moreover, Varian's reliance on NCAA is misplaced. At issue in that case was the relevance of reasonably substitutable products to a definition of the relevant market and a determination of the defendant's market power. NCAA, 468 U.S. at 111. Because HN16 the definition of a relevant market is a question of fact, Clark Equip. Co. v. Lift Parts Mfg. Co., No. 82- C-4585, 1990 WL 8690, at *5 (N.D. Ill. Jan. 22, 1990), the Court's discussion of the correct test for its determination is of limited utility here.

¹⁷ Although Varian only considered the Amperex, Philips, and Machlett acquisitions in its motion in this regard, Plaintiffs also attributed the acquisition of Westinghouse Electric Corporation ("Westinghouse") directly to Varian's alleged collusive behavior. (Complaint II P 57; but see id. P 56(j) (where Plaintiffs omit reference to Varian).) The court will refrain from any discussion of Westinghouse as the parties' briefs make no reference to this particular acquisition.

Plaintiffs urge that the fact that REL did the actual acquiring [*37] is irrelevant to a claim of conspiracy under § 1 of the Sherman Act as each conspirator is jointly and severally liable for the actions of each co-conspirator in furtherance of a conspiracy. (Plaintiffs' Opposition, at 12-13 (citing In re Uranium Antitrust Litigation, 617 F.2d 1248, 1257 (7th Cir. 1980)).) Although Plaintiffs' argument is not dispositive of Varian's § 1 liability, it is well recognized that HN17 [↑] a co-conspirator who joins a conspiracy with knowledge of what has gone on before and with an intent to pursue the same objectives may be charged, in the antitrust context, with the preceding acts of its co-conspirators. Havoco, 626 F.2d at 554 (citations omitted). Thus, Plaintiffs' allegations are sufficient as to this element.

Varian also asserts, however, that because Plaintiffs failed to plead that REL had ever manufactured a single Amperex tube type prior to the alleged agreement, Plaintiffs' Second Amended Complaint fails to allege that Varian and REL were actual competitors in the manufacture of Amperex tube types. This failure, according to Varian, means that any agreement between Varian and REL concerning production [*38] of the Amperex line cannot constitute a horizontal restraint.

HN18 [↑] Assuming that Varian's conduct is not presumptively illegal, the sufficiency of Plaintiffs' allegations must be analyzed under the rule of reason test of anticompetitive effects. Havoco, 626 F.2d at 556. In Havoco, a case cited by Varian, the Seventh Circuit noted the importance, in a "rule of reason" analysis, of assessing defendant's market power both before and after the allegedly anticompetitive restraint was imposed. Havoco, 626 F.2d at 554, 557 (citing Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238, 62 L. Ed. 683, 38 S. Ct. 242 (1948)).

Plaintiffs here allege not only that Defendants enjoyed significant market power, but also that shortly after REL bought Amperex in July 1988, Varian and REL agreed that REL would discontinue producing Amperex tube types that were socket-interchangeable with tubes produced by Varian. (Complaint II P 56(1).) This transaction, Plaintiffs contend, rendered Varian the dominant or only manufacturer and seller of these tubes to OEMs within the United [*39] States. (Id.) Plaintiffs have adequately alleged Varian's gain in market power after Varian's allegedly anticompetitive behavior occurred.

Moreover, citing Palmer v. BRG of Georgia, Inc., 498 U.S. 46, 112 L. Ed. 2d 349, 111 S. Ct. 401 (1990), Plaintiffs insist that an agreement to refrain from competitive production constitutes, "at a minimum, an unlawful restraint of potential competition." (Plaintiffs' Opposition, at 13.) The Palmer Court held that a market allocation agreement between competing providers of bar review courses on its face illegally restrained trade in violation of § 1. 498 U.S. at 403. Significantly, the Palmer Court concluded that HN19 [↑] market allocation is unlawful regardless of whether competitors had competed previously between themselves in the same market, as they had in that case. Id. Furthermore, as Plaintiffs point out, HN20 [↑] the antitrust laws proscribe competitor agreements to restrict output, just as they proscribe agreements to restrict price. (Plaintiffs' Opposition, at 13) (citing Chicago Professional Sports Ltd. Partnership v. National Basketball Ass'n, 961 F.2d 667, 674 (7th Cir. 1992)).) [*40]

Nonetheless, Varian asserts, without citing supporting law, that in order to plead facts showing that the alleged post-acquisition agreement caused some actual anticompetitive effect, Plaintiffs must allege that "the Amperex tubes were an economically viable product line (i.e., a line that could have been manufactured profitably) that Richardson would have elected to manufacture but for the alleged agreement with Varian." (Varian's Reply, at 10.) Because Plaintiffs make no such allegations, Varian concludes that they fail to plead that the competitive state of the market would have been different had REL and Varian not entered into the alleged agreement. (Id.)

The Supreme Court's reasoning in Palmer, as well as the Seventh Circuit's reasoning in Havoco, are at odds with Varian's argument. Under Palmer, HN21 [↑] a showing of previous competition between parties to an agreement is not a required element of a claim that the agreement is unlawful. A showing that Amperex tubes were not an economically viable product line may be fatal to Plaintiffs' ability to prove their claim. These contentions are not, however, fatal to Plaintiffs' ability to state a cognizable [*41] claim for relief. Because Plaintiffs have sufficiently pleaded the potential anticompetitive effects of Varian's agreement with REL with respect to the Amperex acquisition, (Complaint II PP 56(d), 57, 64(d)(e)), Varian's motion to dismiss this sub-count of Plaintiffs' § 1 claim should be denied.

b. Philips and Machlett Acquisitions

Plaintiffs assert that in August 1988, REL acquired certain manufacturing assets and exclusive worldwide marketing rights for Philips' transmitting tube power lines, including certain electron power tube lines, then subsequently sold certain of these assets and product lines to Varian. (Complaint II P 56(m).) REL's actions concerning Philips, allege Plaintiffs, were in collusion with Varian. (Id. P 57.) Plaintiffs also allege that Varian's 1989 acquisition of Machlett, one of the remaining U.S. manufacturers of new electron tubes, was made in furtherance of Defendants' joint plan to control the U.S. market for such tubes. (Id. P 59.)

Varian first argues that these allegations fail to state violations of § 1 of the Sherman Act because Plaintiffs did not plead that either Philips or Machlett made any of the types of electron power tubes that [*42] were socket-interchangeable with any of the tube types made by Varian. (Varian's Memorandum, at 8.) Accordingly, Varian argues, its purchase, through these acquisitions, of the capability of making products that did not compete with products it previously manufactured does not state a § 1 violation. (Id.)

Plaintiffs insist that because they alleged a broad conspiracy by Defendants to control the U.S. market for all electron power tubes, their general allegation that the Philips and Machlett acquisitions contributed to the overall illegal concentration of production and sales of such tubes satisfies the limited burdens of notice pleading under by FED. R. CIV. P. 8(a). (Plaintiffs' Opposition, at 14.) In addition, Plaintiffs characterize Varian's argument as a premature attack on their identification of "electron power tubes" as the relevant product market for this action. (Id. at 14 n.6.)

Indeed, as Varian acknowledges, (Varian's Reply, at 11), HN22[] the definition of a relevant market is a question of fact reserved for later proceedings on the merits. Clark Equip. Co., 1990 WL 8690, at *5. Nonetheless, Varian insists that by alleging that "electron power tubes have no substitutes [*43] in equipment designed to use such tubes," (Complaint II P 34), Plaintiffs themselves have acknowledged that "there are no substitutes for a tube designed to fit a particular socket" and thus demarcate a narrower relevant product market than one comprising all electron power tubes. (Varian's Reply, at 11.)

HN23[] Drawing all inferences in the light most favorable to Plaintiffs, as the court is bound to do on a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, this court cannot agree with Varian's narrow interpretation of Plaintiffs' allegation. The more reasonable construction of Plaintiffs allegation in P 34 of Complaint II is that electron power tubes are not practically interchangeable with other products, or, in other words, electron power tubes comprise a relevant product market because customers cannot substitute other products for such tubes.

Varian's second argument is that in light of Plaintiffs' allegation that 85% of the sales of electron power tubes by Varian and REL are for replacement rather than for installation in new equipment, (Complaint II P 34), it is these sales that give Defendants the market power that makes the Philips and Machlett acquisitions illegal. (Varian's [*44] Reply, at 11-12.) Thus, Varian argues, the acquisitions of Philips and Machlett "can reduce competition in the relevant market only if plaintiffs plead that those firms make tubes that fit in the same socket and hence are found by buyers to be satisfactory substitutes for one another." (Id.) Simply stated, Varian insists that Plaintiffs have failed to plead specifically that Phillips and Machlett made tubes for replacement use rather than for installation in new equipment.

Varian's argument is unconvincing. Although Plaintiffs have alleged that 85% of all sales of electron power tubes in the United States, and correspondingly of sales by Varian and REL, are for replacement rather than for installation in new equipment, (Complaint II P 34), this does not render Varian powerless in the market of tubes made for installation in new equipment. Plaintiffs have also alleged that Varian and REL together "have accounted for at least 70% of electron power tube sales in the United States" during the relevant period. (Complaint II P 31.) To this court's understanding, these two allegations, read together, simply mean that while Defendants' sales of tubes for installation in new equipment [*45] comprised only 15% of their total sales, they still enjoyed a 70% market share in such sales in the U.S. during the relevant period. Hence, Plaintiffs have adequately alleged Defendants' market power in the market for tubes for installation in new equipment. Varian's motion to dismiss their claim should therefore be denied, regardless of whether Phillips and Machlett made tubes for replacement use or for installation in new equipment.

c. Chinese Tubes

Plaintiffs allege that Varian and REL reduced or eliminated competition from the People's Republic of China ("China") when VASCO entered into exclusive marketing agreements with primary PRC manufacturers and exporters of electron power tubes, "to head off the potential manufacture in China and sale within the U.S. of low-priced electron power tubes socket-compatible with tubes manufactured by Varian." (Complaint II PP 58, 64(f).) Plaintiffs further allege that pursuant to these agreements, REL and Varian diverted Chinese production away from such tubes and toward the manufacture of other tubes. (Id. P 58.)

According to Varian, this allegation fails to state a § 1 Sherman Act claim because Plaintiffs have not sufficiently alleged [*46] the nature of the anticompetitive effects that would have resulted from Defendants' actions. (Varian's Memorandum, at 9.) Varian relies on a Seventh Circuit case, Banks v. National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, 977 F.2d 1081, 1089 (7th Cir. 1992), to illustrate Plaintiffs' need to plead how the exclusive marketing agreements diverted Chinese production away from low-priced tubes that were socket-compatible with Varian tube types. The Seventh Circuit in Banks held that HN24[¹] the inability of plaintiff, a college football player, to explain how the NCAA's no-draft rule restrained trade in a discernible market was fatal to his § 1 claim. Id. at 1093-94. At best, concluded the court, plaintiff "merely attempted to frame his complaint in antitrust language." Id. at 1093.

Plaintiffs do not respond to Varian's argument. Instead, they repeat their allegation -- that the conspiracy between REL and Varian "kept the major Chinese power tube factories from underselling Varian tubes in the United States" - - but fail, once again, to explain how this was accomplished. (Plaintiffs' Opposition, at 15.) As in [*47] Banks, Plaintiffs' failure to allege how Varian and/or REL obtained control over production decisions in China, as well as their failure to adequately allege the anticompetitive effects that would have resulted from Defendants's actions, is fatal to their § 1 claim as it concerns marketing agreements with Chinese agencies.¹⁸ Varian's motion to dismiss this claim should be granted.

[*48] 4. Price Fixing

In paragraph 64(g) of their Complaint, Plaintiffs predicate their § 1 claim against Varian and REL on the Defendants' "fixing, maintaining, and stabilizing of prices for electron power tubes at artificially high levels." Varian argues that this allegation is foreclosed by Judge Nordberg's dismissal of Plaintiffs' price-fixing claim in the First Amended Complaint. (Varian's Memorandum, at 10.) Plaintiffs suggest that while Judge Nordberg's decision bars them from stating a per se claim for resale price maintenance on the basis of the pricing formula in the VASCO JV Agreement, it does not bar them from stating a claim of horizontal collusion between REL and Varian to affect prices. (Plaintiffs' Opposition, at 16-17.)

It is true that although Judge Nordberg explicitly recognized that the VASCO joint venture established a horizontal agreement between Varian and REL as distributors, he nonetheless analyzed the pricing formula contained in Article VIII(4) of the agreement only as a vertical arrangement to set prices between Varian as manufacturer and REL as distributor. Panache Broadcasting, 1993-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P 70,169, at 69,817. [*49] It was on the basis of this reading of the pricing formula that Judge Nordberg rejected Plaintiffs' per se claim of price fixing. He rejected the claim on the ground that the formula could not be characterized as resale price maintenance because it did not set prices for public sales. Id. Therefore, urges Varian, Judge Nordberg's decision forecloses the possibility that Plaintiffs can re-allege a per se price-fixing claim on the basis of the JV Agreement; since Plaintiffs have not pleaded any other price-fixing agreement between Varian and REL, argues Varian, Plaintiffs' claim of a per se price-fixing violation should be dismissed.

¹⁸ Although the court accepts Varian's first argument -- that Plaintiffs' allegation concerning the exclusive marketing arrangements with Chinese agencies is insufficient for the purpose of pleading -- Varian's second is less persuasive. Varian contends that under Plaintiffs' definition of the relevant geographic market as the United States, "there would have been no competition from foreign imports anyway." (Varian's Memorandum, at 10). As Plaintiffs point out, however, HN25[¹] the relevant geographic market defines the area where goods are bought and sold, not where goods are made. Thus, foreign-made electron power tubes exported to the United States are part of the U.S. geographic market.

HN26 [↑] Horizontal price-fixing agreements need not include "explicit agreement on prices to be charged or that one party have the right to be consulted about the other's prices," however. Denny's Marina v. Renfro Prods., Inc., 8 F.3d 1217, 1221 (7th Cir. 1993) (citing Palmer, 498 U.S. at 48). The Court in Palmer, 498 U.S. at 49, for example, concluded that the revenue-sharing formula contained [*50] in an agreement between defendants, coupled with the price increase that took place immediately after the agreement was formed, indicated that defendants formed the agreement "for the purpose and with the effect of raising" prices. Accordingly, the Court upheld the denial of Defendants' motion for summary judgment.

Likewise, in the present case, Judge Nordberg noted that Plaintiffs' allegations that REL and Varian dominated the market, that they maintained artificially high prices for electron power tubes, and that REL removed most of the competition in the power tube market, were sufficient to press a horizontal price-fixing claim, at least under a rule of reason analysis. Panache Broadcasting, 1993-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P 70,169, at 69,818. Moreover, Plaintiffs have now cured the weaknesses that Judge Nordberg identified in their claim by alleging Defendants' market shares and the barriers to entry in the relevant market. (Complaint II PP 30-39.) Thus, Varian's motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' claim of horizontal price fixing should be denied, at least insofar as that claim may be proven under a rule of reason analysis.

B. Count II: Dud Tube Conspiracy

[*51] In Count II, Plaintiffs again allege that the JV Agreement between Varian and REL constituted a contract, combination, and conspiracy in restraint of trade, in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. (Complaint II P 69.) In this count, however, Plaintiffs allege that by agreeing to collect surplus tubes and tube carcasses, Varian and REL conspired to reduce or eliminate competition from rebuilders of surplus tubes and tube carcasses. (Id. P 70.) Defendants accomplished this, argue Plaintiffs, by increasing their costs for, or by eliminating their supply of, such tubes. (Id.) According to Plaintiffs, Defendants conspired to increase prices for new electron power tubes that are socket-interchangeable with tubes that could be rebuilt from the dud tubes that Defendants agreed to collect, and that Varian produced and REL sold. (Id.) Moreover, Plaintiffs allege that pursuant to their agreement, REL and Varian began acquisition of surplus tubes and tube carcasses, and thus actually did reduce competition for sales of socket-interchangeable tubes with rebuilt tubes. (Id. P 74.) As a result, Defendants did increase prices of such [*52] tubes, injuring Plaintiffs and other members of the proposed class by charging substantially higher prices for electron power tubes than they would have had to pay absent the alleged § 1 violations. (Id. P 76.) Plaintiffs argue that under § 5(a) of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 16, Varian's § 1 conviction -- its guilty plea to felony violations of § 1, based on the JV Agreement "insofar as it related to power grid tubes" ¹⁹ -- is, "at a minimum, prima facie evidence in this action that defendants committed such violations." (Id. P 71.)

Varian points out that it pleaded guilty only to agreeing "to adopt a program to collect rebuildable tube carcasses to keep them from being rebuilt," and not to the actual "collection of significant amounts of duds." (Varian's Memorandum, at 11 (citing Banks, 977 F.2d at 1087 n.9 and 1089).) [*53] Varian argues that Plaintiffs' allegations of a dud tube conspiracy must fail because they do not allege that Defendants' agreement resulted in any specific anticompetitive effect on the relevant market, as is required for claims of non-per se violations of § 1. (Varian's Memorandum, at 11.) Without citing any supporting case law, Varian argues that "whether VASCO began to collect duds is irrelevant," (Varian's Reply, at 15); to plead an anticompetitive effect, Plaintiffs must allege (1) that Varian and REL collected a substantial number of duds; (2) that they collected enough duds to drive up rebuilders' costs; (3) that collection of duds pursuant to Defendants' agreement did in fact drive up rebuilders' costs; and (4) that dud collections drove any rebuilder out of business. (Varian's Memorandum, at 11.) Moreover, Varian claims that since the alleged "conspiracy to adopt a dud program was abandoned at the outset," Plaintiffs "cannot plead that any significant collection was made." (Id. at 11-12 n.11.) Varian insists that Plaintiffs have failed to allege, as they must, "not that Varian and Richardson decided to raise their prices but that the rebuilders -- the object [*54] of the conspiracy -- were forced to raise theirs." (Varian's Reply, at 15-16.)

¹⁹ Plaintiffs assert that "power grid tubes constituted most of the electron power tubes which were subject of the VASCO Agreements and related transactions." (Complaint II P 71).

Finally, Varian argues that the dud tube conspiracy allegations should be dismissed because Plaintiffs have not alleged that they purchased tubes that were socket-interchangeable with rebuildable tubes. (Varian's Memorandum, at 13 n.13.) Varian asserts that because "there are hundreds of tube types, each fitting different sockets," only some of which are rebuildable, Plaintiffs' failure to plead that they purchased rebuildable tubes renders their complaint insufficient for lack of standing to challenge the alleged dud tube conspiracy. (Id. (citing Turner v. American Bar Ass'n, 407 F. Supp. 451, 480 \(D.C. Tex. 1975\)).

As Plaintiffs point out, however, they have alleged not only that Defendants began the collection program, but also that the program reduced competition for sales of socket-interchangeable tubes with rebuilt tubes and that the prices of such tubes increased. (Id. P 74.) Plaintiffs have also alleged that being charged substantially higher prices for tubes than they would have been charged absent the alleged § 1 violations injured their business and property [*55] and that of the other members of the proposed class. (Id. P 76.) All of these allegations are presumed true for purposes of this motion. If Plaintiffs' allegations of anticompetitive effect are as demonstrably false as Varian insists they are, then this issue will be an appropriate subject for a summary judgment motion.²⁰ [*56] At this stage, however, this court concludes that Plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged an anticompetitive effect of Defendants' alleged dud-tube conspiracy to withstand Varian's motion to dismiss.²¹

As for Varian's second argument, Plaintiffs have brought this action on behalf of a proposed class of purchasers who bought electron power tubes from Defendants. HN28[] For the purposes of the motion before this court, and pending a ruling on class certification, Plaintiffs' class allegations [*57] must also be presumed true. Because the class allegations are broad enough to include purchasers of rebuildable tubes, Varian's argument is without merit, and its motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' claim of a dud-tube conspiracy under § 1 of the Sherman Act should be denied.

II. Sherman Act § 2 Claims

HN29[] To establish a conspiracy to monopolize under § 2 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must show (1) a conspiracy, (2) overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy, (3) an effect upon a substantial amount of interstate commerce, and (4) the existence of specific intent to monopolize in a relevant market. Great Escape, Inc. v. Union City Body Co., 791 F.2d 532, 540-41 \(7th Cir. 1986\) (citations omitted); see also American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 810, 90 L. Ed. 1575, 66 S. Ct. 1125 \(1947\) (proof of conspiracy to monopolize does not require plaintiff to show an exercise of monopolistic power nor that defendants actually excluded existing or potential competitors).

²⁰ Moreover, in this instance, Varian's reliance on Banks is misplaced. At issue in Banks, 977 F.2d at 1087-88, was whether defendant NCAA's no-draft rule restrained trade in an identifiable market. The Seventh Circuit concluded that although the rule merely served as NCAA's eligibility requirement, plaintiff "could have alleged the manner in which the no-draft and no-agent rules have an anti-competitive impact on a relevant market," had he properly identified "college football labor" as the relevant market. Id. at 1090-91. In contrast, in this case, Plaintiffs have alleged a restraint of trade in the market for electron power tubes by pleading that Defendants' collection program reduced competition for such tubes and thereby increased prices for such tubes.

²¹ As this court noted in its earlier Report and Recommendation, however, the charges to which Varian pleaded guilty are significantly narrower than Plaintiffs' allegations here. (R & R, at 39-42). Thus, although HN27[] Section 5(a) of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 16\(a\), affords private plaintiffs the right to use guilty pleas as all-purpose admissions in civil antitrust actions, Commonwealth Edison Co. v. Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Co., 323 F.2d 412, 415 \(7th Cir. 1963\), cert. denied, 376 U.S. 939, 11 L. Ed. 2d 659, 84 S. Ct. 794 \(1964\), that is, as prima facie evidence of an antitrust violation, the court reminds Plaintiffs that Varian's guilty plea provides little support for their broad allegations here.

A. Count V: Overall Conspiracy

Plaintiffs allege that the agreement between JV and REL also violated § 2 of [*58] the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. (Complaint II P 92.) Plaintiffs allege that Varian and REL, in addition to engaging in the collection of surplus tubes and tube carcasses, engineered acquisitions and transactions "to eliminate the remaining competition for U.S. buyers." (Id. P 97.) Plaintiffs assert that this conspiracy reduced or eliminated competition in the U.S. for the sale of electron power tubes and increased prices in the U.S. for such tubes, (id. P 98), thereby affecting a substantial amount of interstate commerce. (Id. P 99.)

In response, Varian states only that because Plaintiffs' allegations are "insufficient to establish that Varian participated in the Amperex/Philips acquisition, or that either that acquisition or the Machlett acquisition had an adverse effect on competition, Count V, like Count VI, fails to state a § 2 claim." (Varian's Memorandum, at 13 n.14.) Plaintiffs contend that they have sufficiently alleged an adverse effect on competition. By forming VASCO, argue Plaintiffs, REL and Varian "eliminated any threat that they would compete with each other" and "with their backs protected, they turned to the task of acquiring [*59] or otherwise eliminating the remaining obstacles to their total domination of the U.S. market." (Plaintiffs' Opposition, at 19.) Thus, according to Plaintiffs, between 1986 and 1989, "REL and Varian, acting in their own names or through VASCO, systematically gained control of other sources of supply to the U.S. market, amassing overwhelming market shares." (Id. at 19.) This resulted in diminishing competition and increasing prices to the detriment of the proposed class of tube purchasers, they claim.

As discussed above, HN30[[↑]] the element of anticompetitive effect required for claimed violations of § 1 corresponds with that required for claimed violations of § 2. Furthermore, as direct purchasers of Defendants' products, Plaintiffs need only allege that they paid inflated prices as a result of Defendants' alleged anticompetitive conduct to sufficiently allege antitrust injury. Insofar as Varian's motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' § 1 allegations should be denied, therefore, so too should its motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' allegations of an overall conspiracy to monopolize under § 2.

B. Count VI: Dud Tube Conspiracy

In Count VI, Plaintiffs repeat the allegations in Count II, asserting [*60] that the agreement between Varian and REL to collect dud tubes also violated § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. (Complaint II P 101.) Specifically, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants entered into a "combination and conspiracy with the specific intent to monopolize interstate trade and commerce consisting of the manufacture and sale of electron power tubes that are socket-interchangeable with tubes that could be rebuilt from the surplus tubes and tube carcasses that Varian and REL agreed to collect." (Id. P 104.) In furtherance of this conspiracy, Plaintiffs allege that pursuant to its agreement with Varian, REL began to acquire surplus tubes and tube carcasses. (Id. P 105.) REL did this, Plaintiffs contend, to prevent tube rebuilders from rebuilding tubes and selling them in competition with the socket-interchangeable new tubes that Varian produced and that REL sold through VASCO in the U.S. (Id.) As a result, assert Plaintiffs, they and other class members were injured by being charged substantially higher prices for electron power tubes than they would have had to pay absent the alleged § 2 violations. (Id. P 106.)

Varian argues [*61] that Plaintiffs have not satisfactorily alleged the third required element of a cause of action under § 2 of the Sherman Act -- that Defendants' conduct affected a substantial amount of interstate commerce. As with the § 1 claim alleged in Count II, Varian argues that Plaintiffs' § 2 claim in Count VI fails because Plaintiffs have not alleged that Varian and REL ever collected significant numbers of dud tubes; if Defendants failed to collect a substantial amount of carcasses, then the conspiracy could not have had "an effect upon a substantial amount of interstate commerce." (Varian's Memorandum, at 12.) Again without citing any supporting case law, Varian contends that to plead an anticompetitive effect, Plaintiffs must allege not that Varian and REL decided to raise their prices but that "enough duds were collected to drive up the rebuilders' prices or to prevent customers from purchasing rebuilt tubes," which Plaintiffs have not done. (Varian's Reply, at 15.) In addition, Varian asserts that Plaintiffs' allegations fail to satisfy § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15, which creates a private remedy in antitrust cases, and which requires Plaintiffs [*62] to establish antitrust injury or injury "by reason of" a violation of the antitrust laws. (Varian's Memorandum, at 12.) According to Varian, this claim must fail because if Defendants did not collect a significant number of duds, Plaintiffs could not have sustained injury "by reason of" an alleged conspiracy. (Id.)

Judge Nordberg's earlier Opinion recognized Plaintiffs' failure to allege both that Defendants' conspiracy had a substantial effect on interstate commerce, and the existence of the conspiracy and overt acts in furtherance of it. Panache Broadcasting, 1993-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P 70,169, at 69,818. As noted earlier, however, HN31[¹] Plaintiffs' factual allegations must be presumed true. Viewing these allegations in the light most favorable to Plaintiffs, this court concludes that Plaintiffs have sufficiently cured the deficiencies in their earlier complaint and have sufficiently alleged an anticompetitive effect of Defendants' alleged dud-tube conspiracy to withstand Varian's motion to dismiss.

Courts and commentators have recognized that a HN32[¹] § 1 restraint-of-trade claim and a § 2 conspiracy-to-monopolize claim under the Sherman Act require the same [*63] threshold showing: the existence of an agreement to restrain trade. See Seagood Trading Corp. v. Jerrico, Inc., 924 F.2d 1555, 1576 (11th Cir. 1991); Richard A. Posner, ANTITRUST LAW: AN ECONOMIC PERSPECTIVE 216 (1976) (stating that any conspiracy to monopolize is also a conspiracy to restrain trade in violation of § 1). After plaintiff makes a showing of such an agreement, then § 2 requires plaintiff to show that the conspiracy was formed with the specific intent to obtain or maintain a monopoly. Seagood Trading, 924 F.2d at 1576. It is this additional requirement that imposes a greater burden on a plaintiff claiming a § 2 conspiracy-to-monopolize violation than on one claiming a § 1 restraint-of-trade violation. Id.; International Distribution Centers, Inc. v. Walsh Trucking Co., 812 F.2d 786, 793 (2nd Cir.), cert. denied, 482 U.S. 915, 96 L. Ed. 2d 676, 107 S. Ct. 3188 (1987). Varian does not dispute that Plaintiffs have adequately pleaded an allegation of specific intent to monopolize. Having concluded earlier that Varian's motion [*64] to dismiss Plaintiffs' § 1 dud-tube conspiracy claim should be denied, this court further concludes that Varian's motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' § 2 dud-tube conspiracy claim should also be denied.

Varian also argues that the § 1 claim concerning the Amperex acquisitions are not actionable because Plaintiffs fail to allege facts to establish their standing, specifically, facts to show that Plaintiffs purchased Amperex tube types. (Varian's Reply, at 7.). It is well-established that HN33[¹] direct purchasers of a product, the price of which has been inflated by anticompetitive conduct, have standing to sue under the antitrust laws. See Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., 442 U.S. 330, 339, 60 L. Ed. 2d 931, 99 S. Ct. 2326 (1979); see also Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231, 88 S. Ct. 2224 (1968). Plaintiffs here have standing to sue under § 4 of the Clayton Act because their alleged injury occurred within the market endangered by Defendants' allegedly anticompetitive conduct.

III. Count VIII: Clayton Act § 7 Claim

In Count [*65] VIII, Plaintiffs allege that by forming the VASCO joint venture, Varian and REL violated § 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18. (Complaint II P 114.) They assert that Defendants' direct and indirect acquisitions of stock and assets of other corporations substantially lessened competition in the markets for electron power tubes throughout the United States. (Id.) Specifically, Plaintiffs allege that the acquisitions reduced or eliminated actual and potential competition between Varian and REL at both the manufacturing and distribution levels, and reduced or eliminated actual and potential competition between Defendants and tube rebuilders. (Id. P 115(a) and (b).) Moreover, they allege that the acquisitions caused a monopolistic accumulation of the already-concentrated electron power tube market, and that Defendants' pervasive control of supply further increased the already high barriers to entry. (Id. P 115(c) and (e).) Because of the absence of vigorous competition, Plaintiffs allege, Defendants repeatedly raised prices for electron power tubes and maintained prices at artificially high levels. (Id. P 115(d).) Thus, Plaintiffs assert, [*66] the VASCO joint venture's anticompetitive effect outweighed "any purported increase in 'efficiency,'" (Id. P 116), and injured Plaintiffs and other proposed class members by charging them substantially higher prices than they would have been charged absent the alleged § 7 Clayton Act violation. (Id. P 117.)

Varian argues that Count VIII fails to state a claim under § 7 of the Clayton Act because Plaintiffs have alleged (1) that "although styled as a 'joint venture,' VASCO was an insubstantial shell entity which functioned as nothing more than a conduit for collusive transactions," and (2) that "VASCO had no other assets other than the receivables generated by paper transactions which transferred or allocated money between REL and Varian." (Complaint II P 42; Varian's Memorandum, at 14.) Without citing any supporting case law, Varian claims that § 7 "applies only to those ventures that constitute true acquisitions of stock or assets"; because Plaintiffs have pleaded that VASCO was not a true joint venture, but "merely a sham designed as a cover for allegedly anticompetitive activity," their § 7 claim must fail. (Id.)

Plaintiffs contend that VASCO was a "true joint venture" [*67] for jurisdictional purposes. Moreover, citing United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., 378 U.S. 158, 168, 12 L. Ed. 2d 775, 84 S. Ct. 1710 \(1964\), they argue that § 7 of the Clayton Act is mainly concerned with "threatened elimination of competition between the founding parents, an inquiry which is unaffected by the size of the joint venture's own holdings." (Plaintiffs' Opposition, at 22.) Plaintiffs further contend that their complaint need do no more to survive Defendants' 12(b)(6) motion than, as it has done, to set forth the requisite elements and factual predicate of their claim that the joint venture substantially lessened competition in the U.S. electron power tube market. (Id. at 20-21.) According to Plaintiffs, courts focus on the impact of joint ventures on customers and hold presumptively illegal joint ventures that further concentrate already concentrated markets. (Id. at 21 (citing United States v. Ivaco, Inc., 704 F. Supp. 1409, 1418-19 \(W.D. Mich. 1989\), and F.T.C. v. Great Lakes Chemical Corp., 528 F. Supp. 84 \(N.D. Ill. 1981\))).

HN34 [↑] [Section \[*68\]](#) 7 of the Clayton Act forbids mergers and other acquisitions that are reasonably likely to substantially lessen competition in the relevant market.²² Penn-Olin, 378 U.S. at 171; F.T.C. v. Elders Grain, Inc., 868 F.2d 901, 906 \(7th Cir. 1989\). A plaintiff need not show a certainty or even a high probability of lessened competition, but only a tendency toward monopoly or reduced competition in the present and in the future.²³ [*70] Penn-Olin, 378 U.S. at 171. In assessing the probability of a substantial lessening of competition, the relevant criteria²⁴ include (1) the market power of the joint venturers, (2) the relationship of their lines of commerce, (3) the reasons underlying the joint venture, and the (4) joint venture's line of commerce and its relationship to that of its

²² The Seventh Circuit has noted that HN35 [↑] judicial interpretations of the standards for judging the lawfulness of transactions under section 7 of the Clayton Act and under section 1 of the Sherman Act have "converged." United States v. Rockford Memorial Corp., 898 F.2d 1278, 1281-82 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 920, 112 L. Ed. 2d 249, 111 S. Ct. 295 \(1990\).

²³ HN36 [↑] The Supreme Court has described the basic implications of any joint venture on competition in these terms:

The joint venture . . . is the chosen competitive instrument of two or more corporations previously acting independently and usually competitively with one another. The result is a "triumvirate of associated corporations." If the parent companies are in competition, or might compete absent the joint venture, it may be assumed that neither will compete with the progeny in its line of commerce. Inevitably, the operations of the joint venture will be frozen to those lines of commerce which will not bring it into competition with the parents, and the latter, by the same token will be foreclosed from the joint venture's market.

Penn-Olin, 378 U.S. at 169.

²⁴ HN37 [↑] The complete list of the Court's recommended criteria includes:

The number and power of the competitors in the relevant market; the background of their growth; the power of the joint venturers; the relationship of their lines of commerce; the competition existing between them and the power of each in dealing with the competitors of the other; the setting in which the joint venture was created; the reasons and necessity for its existence; the joint venture's line of commerce and the relationship thereof to that of its parents; the adaptability of its line of commerce to non-competitive practices; the potential power of the joint venture in the relevant market; an appraisal of what the competition in the relevant market would have been if one of the joint venturers had entered it alone instead of through [the joint venture]; the effect, in the event of this occurrence, of the other joint venturer's potential competition; and such other factors as might indicate potential risk to competition in the relevant market.

parents. Penn-Olin, 378 U.S. at 177. Assuming that the relevant market is properly defined, "an acquisition which reduces the number of significant sellers in a market already highly concentrated" is [*69] unlawful under section 7; courts must resolve doubts against the acquisition. Elders Grain, 868 F.2d at 906.

[*71] For several reasons, Varian's argument that Plaintiffs' § 7 claims must fail because VASCO is not a true joint venture but only a sham is unavailing. First, in paragraphs 31 and 32 of their Second Amended Complaint, Plaintiffs allege that Varian and REL "together have accounted for at least 70% of electron power tube sales in the United States" and that Defendants have accounted for over 85% of sales of electron power tubes which are socket-interchangeable with tubes sold by Defendants in the U.S. between February 26, 1986 and the present. These allegations must be accepted as true in considering a motion to dismiss. It is precisely such HN38[[↑]] immense market shares that strengthen the inference of market power and create a presumption of illegality. United States v. Rockford Memorial Corp., 898 F.2d 1278, 1283-85 (7th Cir.) (stating that three firms with a combined market share of 90% "can raise prices with relatively little fear that the fringe of competitors will be able to defeat the attempt by expanding their own output"), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 920, 112 L. Ed. 2d 249, 111 S. Ct. 295 (1990). [*72]

Second, HN39[[↑]] there is no support in this Circuit for Varian's argument that § 7 "applies only to those ventures that constitute true acquisitions of stock or assets." In a footnote, Varian cites Ernest W. Hahn, Inc. v. Codding, 423 F. Supp. 913, 919 \(N.D. Cal. 1976\), rev'd on other grounds, 615 F.2d 830 \(9th Cir. 1980\), and United States v. Carilion Health Sys., 707 F. Supp. 840, 841 n.1 (W.D. Va.), aff'd without opinion, 892 F.2d 1042 \(4th Cir. 1989\), as examples of § 7 claims dismissed because the acquisitions at issue involved neither stock nor assets. (Varian's Memorandum, at 14 n.15.) Not only are both cases inapposite here, but also, contrary to Varian's assertion, the Seventh Circuit has expressly disapproved the ruling in Carilion. See Rockford Memorial Corp., 898 F.2d at 1281.

Plaintiffs allege that through the VASCO joint venture, Defendants directly and indirectly acquired the stock and assets of other corporations, consequently reducing or eliminating actual and potential manufacturing and distribution competition between [*73] Varian and REL and between Defendants and tube rebuilders. (Id. PP 114, 115(a), 115(b).) HN40[[↑]] The test of § 7 is the effect of the acquisitions at issue, Penn-Olin, 378 U.S. at 168, not, as Plaintiffs correctly point out, the size of the joint venture's holdings. The effect on competition is determined in part by the nature of the relevant market and by the nearness of the absorbed company to it. Id. at 174. Here, Plaintiffs have alleged that the market was already highly concentrated; that the acquisitions further concentrated the market; and that Defendants' control of supply further increased the already high barriers to entry. Thus, Plaintiffs have sufficiently pleaded that Defendants' acquisitions were reasonably likely to substantially lessen competition in the relevant market. Varian's motion to dismiss their § 7 allegations should therefore be denied.

CONCLUSION

Varian's motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' Second Amended Complaint should be granted in part and denied in part. Count I of the Complaint should be dismissed only as to a claim of per se [*74] unlawful customer allocation, and as to a claim of reduction or elimination of competition from tubes manufactured in the People's Republic of China. Defendant Varian's motion to dismiss all other claims in Count I, and all of Counts II, IV, V and VIII, should be denied.

ENTER:

REBECCA R. PALLMEYER

United States Magistrate Judge

Date: April 14, 1994

Thompson Everett, Inc. v. National Cable Advertising, L.P.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, Richmond Division

April 18, 1994, Decided ; April 18, 1994, Filed

Civil Action No. 3:93CV452

Reporter

850 F. Supp. 470 *; 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5168 ; 1994-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,602

THOMPSON EVERETT, INC., Plaintiff, v. NATIONAL CABLE ADVERTISING, L.P., et al., Defendants.

Disposition: [1] GRANTED.

Core Terms

cable, advertising, spot, cable system, media, antitrust, contracts, television, defendants', firms, buying, summary judgment, competitor, compete, advertising agency, exclusive contract, restrictions, conspiracy, consumer, vertical, regional, distributorship, manufacturers, broadcast, relevant market, anticompetitive, contractual, products, courts, buyer

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN1[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Summary judgment is proper if, viewed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\) requires that the court enter judgment against a party who, after adequate time for discovery fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial. The essence of the inquiry that the court must make is whether the evidence presents a sufficient disagreement to require submission to a jury or whether it is so one-sided that one party must prevail as a matter of law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

HN2 [down] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

Summary judgment is an important tool for dealing with antitrust cases. In fact, the very nature of antitrust litigation encourages summary disposition of such cases when permissible. A party opposing summary judgment in the antitrust context must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts; the nonmoving party must come forward with specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN3 [down] Private Actions, Remedies

An antitrust plaintiff must prove "antitrust injury," which is injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes a defendant's acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation. It should, in short, be the type of loss that the claimed violations would be likely to cause. Injury, although causally related to an antitrust violation, nevertheless will not qualify as "antitrust injury" unless it is attributable to an anticompetitive aspect of the practice under scrutiny, since it is inimical to the antitrust laws to award damages for losses stemming from continued competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN4 [down] Private Actions, Standing

Although the existence of "antitrust injury" helps courts determine whether a plaintiff has standing, the absence of "antitrust injury" is alone fatal.

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

HN5 Causes of Action, Restraints of Trade

Exclusive distributorship arrangements do not violate the antitrust laws unless they foreclose competition in the relevant market. Thus, only a plaintiff qualifying as a competitor or consumer in that market could suffer antitrust injury from an unlawful exclusive distributorship arrangement, because only those two categories of plaintiffs could be injured by such a restraint on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN6 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The plaintiff in an antitrust case bears the burden of proof of the relevant market. The relevant product market is composed of those products or services which are reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN7 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The outer boundary of the relevant product market is reached, if one were to raise the price of the product or limit its volume of production, while demand held constant, and supply from other sources beyond the boundary could not be expected to enter promptly enough and in large enough quantities to restore the old price or volume. A relevant market, then, is the narrowest market which is wide enough so that products from adjacent areas or from other producers in the same area cannot compete on substantial parity with those included in the market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Business & Corporate Law > Foreign Corporations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > Commerce With Foreign Nations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN9 Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

There are three basic elements of a Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 violation: the existence of a contract, combination or conspiracy among two or more separate entities that unreasonably restrains trade and affects interstate and foreign commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN10[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To survive a motion for summary judgment, a plaintiff asserting a Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, claim must present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently. The plaintiff, in other words, must show that the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action or collusive action that could not have harmed the plaintiff. Stated yet another way, there must be direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove that the parties had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

HN11[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Because proving a conspiracy is difficult without direct evidence, the United States Supreme Court has allowed courts to infer the existence of a conspiracy based on several factors. First, courts may consider a pattern of uniform conduct among competitors, which is commonly referred to as "conscious parallelism." In addition, courts look at various "plus factors," such as an opportunity for collusion, evidence showing the parties would benefit only through concerted action, and evidence showing legitimate business reasons should have motivated independent action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN12[] Regulated Industries, Higher Education & Professional Associations

Once a conspiracy is established, most business combinations are judged under a "rule of reason." This involves an in-depth market analysis to determine whether the combination in question unreasonably restrains trade. Under this inquiry, the key question is whether the restraint is one that promotes competition or one that suppresses competition. Despite this customary analysis, certain restraints are held to constitute a per se violation of the Sherman Act without necessitating a detailed consideration of the reasonableness of the impact on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Nonprice Restraints

HN13 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Generally, most vertical, non-price restrictions are judged under the rule of reason. The federal courts have applied the rule of reason analysis in the vast majority of exclusive distributorship cases. In analyzing the effect of exclusive distributorships on competition, courts have considered such factors as the strength of inter-brand competition, the duration of the exclusive distributorship, and the geographic extent of the distributorship.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

HN14 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

Vertical restrictions reduce intra-brand competition by limiting the number of sellers of a particular product competing for the business of a given group of buyers. Location restrictions have this effect because of practical constraints on the effective marketing area of retail outlets. Although intra-brand competition may be reduced, the ability of retailers to exploit the resulting market may be limited both by the ability of consumers to travel to other franchised locations and, perhaps more importantly, to purchase the competing products of other manufacturers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN15 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

Vertical restrictions promote inter-brand competition by allowing the manufacturer to achieve certain efficiencies in the distribution of his products. These "redeeming virtues" are implicit in every decision sustaining vertical restrictions under the rule of reason.

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

HN16 [blue icon] Intentional Interference, Elements

One who, by asserting in good faith a legally protected interest of his own or threatening in good faith to protect the interest by appropriate means, intentionally causes a third person not to perform an existing contract or enter into a prospective contractual relation with another does not interfere improperly with the other's relation if the actor believes that his interest may otherwise be impaired or destroyed by the performance of the contract or transaction.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Trade Dress Protection > Causes of Action

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Advertising > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Designation of Origin > Elements of False Designation of Origin

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Trade Dress Protection > General Overview

HN17 [+] Trade Dress Protection, Causes of Action

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125\(a\).

Counsel: For THOMPSON EVERETT, INC., plaintiff: Stephen Earl Baril, John Luther Walker, III, Curtis McKinley Hairston, Jr., Dana Duane McDaniel, Glen Andrew Lea, Williams, Mullen, Christian & Dobbins, Richmond, VA.

For NATIONAL CABLE ADVERTISING, INC., defendant: Charles Manley Allen, Jr., Wright, Robinson, McCammon, Osthimer & Tatum, Richmond, VA. Daniel G. Swanson, Julia A. Dahlberg, Robert H. Wright, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, Washington, DC. For CABLE NETWORKS, INC., defendant: Stephen Atherton Northup, Robert Dale Seabolt, Mays & Valentine, Richmond, VA. Yvonne S. Quinn, Sullivan & Cromwell, New York, NY. For CABLE MEDIA CORPORATION, defendant: Thomas Edward Spahn, McGuire, Woods, Battle & Boothe, Richmond, VA. Gerald J. Fields, Battle, Fowler, New York, NY. For NATIONAL CABLE ADVERTISING, L.P., defendant: Charles Manley Allen, Jr., David Ernest Boelzner, Daniel G. Swanson, Julia A. Dahlberg, Robert H. Wright, Wright, Robinson, McCammon, Osthimer & Tatum, Richmond, VA.

For COX CABLE COMMUNICATIONS, interested party: Charles Manley Allen, Jr., Daniel G. Swanson, Julia A. Dahlberg, Wright, Robinson, McCammon, Osthimer & Tatum, Richmond, VA.

Judges: Spencer

Opinion by: JAMES R. SPENCER

Opinion

[*472] MEMORANDUM [*2] OPINION

THIS MATTER comes before the Court on the defendants' Joint Motion for Summary Judgment. For the reasons stated herein, the defendants' motion will be GRANTED.

I.

Plaintiff Thompson Everett, Inc. ("TE"), is a corporation organized in Virginia with its principal place of business located in Glen Allen, Virginia. TE claims that it is a regional, [*473] independent cable television advertising representative and a full service advertising agency with affiliated offices in North Palm Beach, Florida and Louisville, Kentucky. The company is engaged in the business of buying broadcast, cable, radio, and print media advertising time for its clients, and offers consulting and television market research services to them as well.

The defendants are representatives of cable television systems ("cable rep firms") that sell advertising time ("spots") to national advertisers. The defendants seek out the advertisers, who are themselves represented by advertising agencies, and attempt to convince those agencies to buy time on the cable systems. The defendants are the three largest cable rep firms in the United States.

Defendant National Cable Advertising, L.P. ("NCA"), is a Massachusetts limited [3] partnership with its principal place of business located in Boston, Massachusetts. NCA is a national cable rep firm that is owned by four of the largest national cable system owners and operators in the United States: Continental Cablevision, Inc., Comcast Cable Corp., Cox Cable Communications, and Time Warner Cable.

Defendant Cable Networks, Inc. ("CNI"), is a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business located in New York. CNI is a national cable rep firm owned by Cablevision Systems Corp., a cable system owner and operator.

Defendant Cable Media Corporation ("CMC") is a Michigan corporation with its principal place of business located in Farmington Hills, Michigan. CMC is a national cable rep firm owned by Katz Communications, Inc., a network television rep firm, and Barrett J. Harrison, the president of CMC.

The plaintiff filed this lawsuit to challenge the defendants' exclusive contractual arrangements with their represented cable systems ("exclusive rep contracts"), in which the cable system operator commits to use the cable rep firm exclusively in exchange for the cable rep firm's agreement to make sales of advertising time on the cable system's behalf. Plaintiff [4] raises various antitrust claims and supplemental common law business tort claims.¹ In turn, all defendants have filed counterclaims against Thompson Everett, alleging tortious interference with contractual relations.

[5] II.

HN1 [↑] Summary judgment is proper if, viewed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, "the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c); see also Ross v. Communications Satellite Corp., 759 F.2d 355, 364 (4th Cir. 1985). Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56(c) requires that the court enter judgment against a party who, "after adequate time for discovery . . . fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial." Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986). The essence of the inquiry that the court must make is "whether the evidence presents a sufficient disagreement to require submission to a jury or whether it is so one-sided that one party must prevail as a matter of law." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 251-52, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106

¹ Counts I and II allege a horizontal conspiracy to fix prices, divide markets, exclude competition, coerce TE through exclusive contracts, in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1. Counts III and IV claim the defendants entered into vertical conspiracies with cable system operators to restrain trade and coerce TE's clients, also in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1. Count V claims the defendants monopolized access to local cable systems, in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 2. Counts VI and VII assert that the preceding actions constitute violations of the Virginia antitrust statutes, Va. Code § 59.1-9.5, -9.6, and business conspiracy statutes, Va. Code § 18.2-499, -500. Count VIII claims the defendants interfered with TE's business relations. Finally, the remaining counts allege that the defendants made defamatory statements about TE in violation of state law and Section 43(a) of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125.

Although TE also claimed at the summary judgment stage that it made a "tying" claim in its Amended Complaint, the pleading obviously does not give notice of such a claim.

S. Ct. [474] 2505 (1986). [6] Summary judgment is proper "if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could [not] return a verdict for the nonmoving party." Id. at 248.

HN2[] "Summary judgment is an important tool for dealing with antitrust cases." Oksanen v. Page Memorial Hosp., 945 F.2d 696 (4th Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 117 L. Ed. 2d 137, 112 S. Ct. 973 (1992). In fact, "the very nature of antitrust litigation encourages summary disposition of such cases when permissible." Id. (quoting Collins v. Associated Pathologists, Ltd., 844 F.2d 473, 475 (7th Cir. 1988)). As the Supreme Court stated in Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986), a party opposing summary judgment in the antitrust context "must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts . . . ; the nonmoving party must come forward with 'specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.'" Id. at 586-87; [7] see also Capital Imaging Assocs. v. Mohawk Valley Medical Assocs., 996 F.2d 537, 542 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 126 L. Ed. 2d 337, 114 S. Ct. 388 (1993).

III.

The defendants' main argument in support of their motion for summary judgment focuses on the Plaintiff's role in the advertising business. To consider this argument, some background material on the industry will be helpful.

In addition to the actual buyers and sellers of advertising, the advertising business includes a variety of entities with roles in facilitating the purchase or sale of the advertisements. These entities generally fit either of two categories: (i) buyer representatives that create and purchase advertising for advertisers, and (ii) seller representatives that sell ads for the different advertising media. The buyer reps include "advertising agencies," such as full service advertising agencies, "creative boutiques," and media buying services. (Joseph Michael Everett Tr. 96-108; Peter J. Moran Tr. 80-81.) The seller reps include "representative firms," such as radio representatives, cable television representatives and broadcast television [8] representatives (See Julianne Arena Tr. 183-84; Jane F. Berry Tr. 69-71.)

Although some advertisers create their own advertisements and then purchase their advertising directly from the desired media, many hire an agency to perform this task. A "full-service" agency typically studies an advertiser's product, creates a strategy for advertising the product, designs ads to implement that approach, selects the media to distribute the ads, and then negotiates and purchases the time or space from the selected media. (See Everett Tr. 97-100; Jon Sanders Tr. 131-33; Bunny Tiner Tr. 6; John R. Klein Tr. 30-31.)

Over time, two general types of advertising agencies have evolved. "Creative boutiques" concentrate on designing an advertising approach and creating and producing the advertisements but do not actually select or purchase the advertising media. (See Moran Tr. 80-81.) In contrast, "media buying services" focus upon selecting the mix of advertising to be used in an advertising campaign that has been created and designed elsewhere and upon negotiating with and purchasing advertising from the various media. (Everett Tr. 101, 103-104; Robert Fennimore Tr. 71; Susanne Moore Tr. [9] 48; Kay Franks Tr. 87-88; Sanders Tr. 192-93; Robert Williams Tr. 362.) Advertising agencies, whether full service agencies, creative boutiques, or media buying services, are all hired by the advertiser and thus work for and represent the interests of that advertiser. (Everett Tr. 97-98; Fennimore Tr. 71; Williams Tr. 362, 795; Sanders Tr. 213-14.)

Most advertising media retain sales staffs to sell ads to advertisers or advertising agencies. Most media have in-house advertising staffs that focus on sales to advertisers in the immediately surrounding geographic areas, and arrange for nationally based representatives to sell advertising to national and regional advertisers on their behalf. (See, e.g., Albin J. Seethaler Tr. 52.) These representatives are agents of the media and act as an extension of the media's own sales staff. (Moore Tr. 79-80, 85; Klein Tr. 49.) They [*475] traditionally have been paid a percentage commission based on the amount of advertising revenues they generate on behalf the cable system operator. (Barrett J. Harrison Tr. 52-53.)

The instant litigation focuses on a particular advertising medium -- spot cable. Spot cable is advertising time sold by cable television [10] operators throughout the country on the cable programming that they deliver to the homes of their subscribers. (Moran Aff. P 3; Harrison Decl. P 3.) Cable systems sell most of their spot cable advertising time through their own sales staffs to local advertisers, but a portion of the systems' available spot cable time is sold to national and regional advertisers. Thompson Everett now challenges the method in which cable rep firms sell spot cable to national and regional advertisers.

The defendants have attempted to characterize cable rep firms as "quite simply sales people for hire." They argue that cable rep firms are mere extensions of the cable systems' sales forces, and that their job is to maximize the advertising revenues of the systems that hire them. (Defts. Mem. 7.) Their responsibilities vary. Some cable rep firms, referred to as "turnkey operations," are hired as a total substitute for the cable operator's own internal sales staff. (Defs. Mem. 8.) Other representative firms handle only sales to national and regional advertisers, while the cable operator employs its own internal staff to sell to local advertisers. (Id.)

The defendants claim that they compete "aggressively [11] and regularly with one another for the right to be, or to replace one another as, exclusive sales agents for cable television systems and interconnects² [12] pursuant to exclusive representation agreements." (Defts. Mem. 13.) According to defendants, these representation agreements are short-term contracts by which the exclusive representative promises to use its best efforts to sell advertising to national and regional advertisers. The cable television system or interconnect, in turn, retains the right to control prices and reject sales that are unacceptable. (Defts. Mem. 14.) The contracts also contain performance standards that allow the cable systems to terminate the agreement if the standards are not met. (Id.) The defendants assert that a variety of legitimate business reasons exist to support the practice of forming exclusive contracts, such as tradition, convenience, efficiency, and to prevent "free riding."³

Given this background, the defendants argue that TE is not a true cable rep firm, but is instead a "media buying service." According to defendants, there is no question that TE works for and wants to serve the interests of advertisers and advertising agencies, not cable operators and interconnects.

While accepting the defendants' general description of the advertising business, TE disagrees about what produced the structure of the industry. First, TE argues that defendants' own deposition testimony contradicts their argument that exclusive contracts are motivated by a concern about "free riders." For example, CMC's president stated that CMC does not make extensive marketing efforts:

We don't go in and pitch our product to be honest with you. I mean, we get a phone call and they're buying ten markets . . . and it's a [13] case of just fulfilling their [order].

(TE Exh. 11 at 60.) Second, as it explains more completely in its Motion for Partial Summary Judgment, TE argues that the defendants have misled advertisers into believing they should not do business with TE because TE does not have exclusive contracts with cable systems.

Finally, and most importantly, TE maintains that it is a "cable rep firm," and not merely a "media buying service." TE asserts that the defendants' own evidence belies any notion that TE is a media buying [*476] service. For example, an internal CNI document identifies TE as one of five independent rep firms and states that TE is a "fairly well-respected regional firm." (TE Exh. 20 at 19-20.) Likewise, other internal documents from NCA identify TE as a cable rep firm. (TE Exh. 47, at N208303.)

TE states that "it is not surprising that defendants view TE as a cable rep firm (and a competitor). TE performs the same functions as defendants. Like defendants, TE brings advertising revenue to cable systems, and historically, cable systems have paid TE commissions." (TE Mem. in Opp. at 14 (citing TE Exh. 49 at 73, 74, 113-116, 169, and TE Exh. 50 at 247-48).) TE argues that defendants' [14] have concocted a description of TE as a "media buyer" because:

² An "interconnect" is a group of cable systems located within a given geographic area that have entered into an arrangement enabling advertisers to purchase advertising time on the entire group of systems in one purchase. (Defts. Mem. 7, at note 3.)

³ The defendants claim that "exclusive sales agent arrangements are necessary to support defendants' considerable investments in market and demographic research and in technological innovations that facilitate the actual placement of spot cable advertising." (Defts. Mem. 17.)

In those rare but increasing instances in which a cable system refuses to commission TE, TE tries to negotiate a spread between the price the agency is willing to pay for a spot and the price the cable system charges to create a profit on the transaction. That TE on occasion negotiates a profit and that it negotiates the best rate it can for advertising agencies does not make TE a media buyer and certainly does not mean that TE does not compete with the defendants for ad agency business. TE is, in fact, an independent cable rep firm that competes with defendants and other independent rep firms such as CTV, for limited national spot cable advertising dollars.

(TE Mem. in Opp. at 15-16 (citations omitted).)

IV.

HN3 [↑] An antitrust plaintiff must prove "antitrust injury," which is "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation. It should, in short, be 'the type of loss that the claimed violations . . . would [15] be likely to cause.'" Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 \(1977\) (quoting Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, 395 U.S. 100, 125, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129, 89 S. Ct. 1562 \(1969\)).

The Supreme Court has stated that:

injury, although causally related to an antitrust violation, nevertheless will not qualify as "antitrust injury" unless it is attributable to an anticompetitive aspect of the practice under scrutiny, "since 'it is inimical to [the antitrust] laws to award damages' for losses stemming from continued competition."

Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 1889, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 \(1990\) (quoting Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 109-110, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 \(1986\)).

HN4 [↑] Although the existence of "antitrust injury" also helps courts determine whether a plaintiff has standing, the absence of "antitrust injury" [16] is alone fatal. See id.; Pocahontas Supreme Coal Co. v. Bethlehem Steel Corp., 828 F.2d 211, 219 \(4th Cir. 1987\) (factor in determining antitrust standing is relationship of injury alleged to the forms of injury Congress targeted).

HN5 [↑] Exclusive distributorship arrangements ⁴ do not violate the antitrust laws unless [*477] they foreclose competition in the relevant market. See Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 45, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 \(1977\). Thus, only a plaintiff qualifying as a competitor or consumer in that market could suffer antitrust injury from an unlawful exclusive distributorship arrangement, because only those two categories of plaintiffs could be injured by such a restraint on competition. See id.; see also White v. Rockingham Radiologists, Ltd., 820 F.2d 98, 104 \(4th Cir. 1987\) (doctor could not prevail on monopolization claim against hospital because ⁴ The parties have referred to the spot cable contracts as "exclusive dealing" contracts. Such a categorization is only partly accurate. An "exclusive dealing" contract is "an agreement by a distributor to refrain from dealing in goods of a competitor." ABA Antitrust Section, Antitrust Law Developments, 117 n.631 (3d ed. 1992). On the other hand, "an exclusive distributorship typically provides a distributor with the right to be the exclusive outlet for a manufacturer's products or services in a given geographic area. It restricts the manufacturer from competing with a distributor by preventing the manufacturer from establishing its own sales outlet in the area as well as from appointing or selling to other distributors located in the area." Id. at 117; see also Steuer, Richard M., Exclusive Dealing in Distribution, 69 Cornell L. Rev. 101, 102 n.4 \(1983\) ("Exclusive [distributorships] do not in themselves limit the distributors, although they are frequently coupled with territorial restraints to keep the dealers out of each other's exclusive territories.").

The contracts at issue in this case are between cable systems and cable rep firms in which the systems appoint the rep firms as exclusive representatives for national and regional advertising directed to the cable systems' respective geographic markets. Regardless of which label is used, the ultimate question is whether the contracts unreasonably restrain competition. See, e.g., Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery and Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 289, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202, 105 S. Ct. 2613 \(1985\) (every commercial agreement restrains trade; key is whether restraint is reasonable).

However, the term "exclusive distributorship" best describes the arrangements in this case, because the rep firms commonly act as a substitute or extension of the cable systems' internal sales staffs.

doctor was neither a competitor nor consumer in the relevant market); Ficker v. Chesapeake & Potomac Tel. Co., 596 F. Supp. 900, 904 (D. Md. 1984) [17] (whether plaintiff is consumer or competitor in market is frequently dispositive).

[18] HN6 [↑] The plaintiff in an antitrust case bears the burden of proof of the relevant market. Satellite Television & Associated Resources, Inc. v. Continental Cablevision of Virginia, Inc., 714 F.2d 351 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 465 U.S. 1027, 79 L. Ed. 2d 688, 104 S. Ct. 1285 (1984). The relevant product market is composed of "those products or services which are 'reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes.'" 714 F.2d at 355 (quoting United States v. E.I. du PONT de NEMOURS & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 395, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956)).

A problem with defining the product market in this case is that the cable systems possess legal monopolies in their geographic areas of service. Despite this fact, they must compete with other media for advertising revenue, such as broadcast television, radio, newspapers, etc. This competition among the different media could easily qualify as "interbrand" competition even though the cable systems have a monopoly on the spot cable "brand" of advertising. The Fourth Circuit considered a similar issue in Satellite Television. [19] The court explained the Dupont standard by stating that

HN7 [↑] The outer boundary of the relevant product market is reached, if one were to raise the price of the product or limit its volume of production, while demand held constant, and supply from other sources beyond the boundary could not be expected to enter promptly enough and in large enough quantities to restore the old price or volume. "A 'relevant market', then, is the narrowest market which is wide enough so that products from adjacent areas or from other producers in the same area cannot compete on substantial parity with those included in the market."

Satellite Television, 714 F.2d at 356 (footnotes omitted).

In Satellite Television, one cable company sued another on various antitrust claims, alleging that the defendant had entered into unlawful exclusive dealing contracts with apartment complexes in the metropolitan Richmond area. The Fourth Circuit upheld the district court's conclusion that the product market included "cinema, broadcast television, video disks and cassettes, and other types of leisure and entertainment-related businesses for customers who live in single-family [20] dwellings and apartment houses . . ." Id. at 355. Although the plaintiff in that case stipulated that movies shown in theaters were "reasonably interchangeable" with the services offered (in the early-1980s) by cable television, the court stated that the plaintiff cable company might still recover by showing "economic factors or consumers' perceptions limit the [movie theater's] ability to compete . . ." Id. at 356. However, TE has not raised such an argument in this case.

Even assuming that the relevant market should be confined analytically to [*478] spot cable advertising in particular,⁵ TE must prove that it is a competitor of the defendants within the spot cable market. Evidence from TE's corporate officers dispels any notion that TE actually competes with the defendants as a cable rep firm. The evidence instead demonstrates that TE is a "media buying service" whose primary allegiance is to the advertisers -- not to the cable systems with which it seeks to do business. The deposition testimony from TE's chief operations officer, Amy Venhuizen, is illustrative of TE's role in the spot cable market:

Q: You don't like [21] [exclusive rep contracts] because they create a loyalty to the cable side of the business; isn't that right?

⁵ In the present case, Thompson Everett has not offered any evidence that the product market should be confined to the "spot cable" industry instead of the advertising industry. It is clear that spot cable competes with broadcast television for advertising dollars, but most courts allow the fact-finder to determine the relevant market. See Storer Cable Communications v. City of Montgomery, 826 F. Supp. 1338 (M.D. Ala. 1993) (relevant market usually determined only after fact-finding has been conducted). For summary judgment purposes, the Court will consider the effect of exclusive contracts on the narrow spot cable market as well.

A: We don't sign exclusivities because we do other things.

Q: Could you explain what those other things are?

A: A client may think they are interested in spot cable when, in fact, it would be more efficient to go network cable.

It is my opinion, if Thompson Everett doesn't sign an exclusive contract with a cable system, then we can meet the agency's needs by flipping the buy to network.

Q: So, in other words, you want -- you don't want to feel obligated to sell spot cable on behalf of any cable operator; is that correct?

A: I want to buy spot cable for the client when it meets the client's needs.

Q: You want to serve the interests of the client, which I understand is the advertiser; right?

A: That's correct.

Q: You want to serve the interests of the advertiser; is that correct?

A: That's correct.

Q: If the interests of the advertiser are inconsistent with selling spot cable for a particular cable operator, you're going to do what is in the advertiser's interests, not what is in the interests of the cable operator; is that correct?

A: That's correct.

[22] (Amy B. Venhuizen Tr. 364-65.)

In Associated General Contractors v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983), the plaintiff union alleged that a multiemployer bargaining association and its members coerced third parties and some of the association's [23] members to do business with nonunion firms. As part of a general inquiry into whether the plaintiff union had antitrust standing, the Court determined that the union had not suffered antitrust injury because it was neither a competitor nor a consumer in the relevant market. See id. at 539-40. Central to this conclusion was the fact that the union, "in its capacity as a bargaining representative, will frequently not be part of the class the Sherman Act was designed to protect, especially in disputes with employers with whom it bargains." Id. at 540. Along these lines, the Court noted that the union's "labor-market interests seem to predominate . . ." Id.

Responding to the defendants' description of its status in the spot cable market, TE contends that: (1) the defendants viewed TE as a competitor; (2) TE brings advertising revenue to the cable systems; and (3) cable systems have paid TE commissions. Accepting these disputed issues of fact as true for the purpose of the summary judgment analysis, the evidence offered still demonstrates that TE is not a competitor [24] of the defendants in the spot cable market. In determining whether the Plaintiff is a competitor, the key question is not what labels the parties use to describe their business activities. Instead, as Associated General Contractors makes clear, the Court must focus on how the business actually operates in [*479] the marketplace. See id. at 539-40.

TE's own officers testified during depositions that upon receiving an order from an advertiser, TE will serve the advertiser client by determining the best media vehicle for the advertiser's message. If TE decides that spot cable advertising will not serve the client's needs effectively, TE will buy advertising time from other media, such as broadcast television. (See Venhuizen Tr. 364-65, 419; Everett Tr. 109; see also Franks Tr. 87.) As was the case in Associated General Contractors, the antitrust plaintiff's interests in this case are anticompetitive. See Associated General Contractors, 459 U.S. at 539. Forcing the defendants to do business in the same manner that TE conducts its operations would endanger [25] the burgeoning spot cable advertising industry. Cable system operators would be forced to rely on firms with loyalty to the advertiser to sell their spot cable time. Inevitably, cable systems would have no alternative to placing greater reliance on their internal sales staffs to sell time, with a corresponding loss in efficiency.

Although TE has produced evidence that it brings revenue to the cable systems, that evidence equally demonstrates that it diverts revenue from the cable systems. In the event that exclusive rep contracts in the spot cable industry result in artificially high advertising prices,⁶ there is no reason why the advertisers themselves could not challenge the practice as consumers. Similarly, an independent cable rep firm closed out of bidding for exclusive contracts by an unlawful conspiracy could also seek recourse as a competitor.⁷

[26] Therefore, TE has not offered evidence sufficient to show that it has suffered an "antitrust injury."⁸ Accordingly, summary judgment must be granted with respect to Counts I, II, III, IV, V and VI.

V.

Even if TE had met its burden with respect to the antitrust injury requirement, summary judgment would still be appropriate on the substantive issues raised in this case.

Section 1 of the Sherman Act states that: HN8 "Every [27] contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1 \(1988\). HN9 There are three basic elements of a Section 1 violation: "(1) the existence of a contract, combination or conspiracy among two or more separate entities that (2) unreasonably restrains trade and (3) affects interstate and foreign commerce." ABA Antitrust Section, supra, 2 (and cases cited). TE has alleged that the exclusive rep contracts constitute unlawful horizontal and vertical conspiracies, in violation of Section 1.

HN10 To survive a motion for summary judgment, a plaintiff asserting a § 1 claim must present evidence "that tends to exclude the possibility" that the alleged conspirators acted independently. [The plaintiff], in other words, must show that the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action or collusive action that could not have harmed [the plaintiff]."Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\) [28] (citations omitted). Stated yet another way, "there must be direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove that [the parties] had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective."[\[*480\] Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 768, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 \(1984\)](#).

HN11 Because proving a conspiracy is difficult without direct evidence, the Supreme Court has allowed courts to infer the existence of a conspiracy based on several factors. First, courts may consider a pattern of uniform conduct among competitors, which is commonly referred to as "conscious parallelism." See ABA Antitrust Section, supra, at 5. In addition, courts look at various "plus factors," such as an opportunity for collusion, evidence showing the parties would benefit only through concerted action, and evidence showing legitimate business reasons should have motivated independent action. See id. at 9-10 (citations omitted).

Although the Plaintiff has offered evidence of frequent business contacts among the defendants, joint presentations to industry trade groups, and strategic [29] plans that discuss the need for organizing the spot cable market, much of the events giving rise to the alleged conspiracy occurred only after the defendants began using exclusive contracts. In fact, the defendants' evidence proves that such contracts are used throughout the advertising industry, and that they have used these agreements since the inception of their respective businesses. Therefore, there is no genuine issue of material fact supporting the existence of a unlawful horizontal agreement among the defendants.

⁶ It is unclear whether TE would suffer at all from artificially high prices, because its commissions would increase as a direct consequence.

⁷ This does not include TE. It has chosen not to compete for those contracts because of the conflict of interest those arrangements would create with its advertiser clients. (Venuhuizen Tr. 364-65.)

⁸ TE argues, in the alternative, that its claims should survive summary judgment even if it is deemed not to compete with the defendants, citing Engine Specialties, Inc. v. Bombardier, Ltd., 605 F.2d 1 \(1st Cir. 1979\), cert. denied 446 U.S. 983, 64 L. Ed. 2d 839, 100 S. Ct. 2964 (1980). However, Engine Specialties cannot rescue TE's claims. The plaintiff in that case actually competed with the defendant pursuant to its own exclusive distributorship contract. See id. at 13.

Furthermore, HN12 once a conspiracy has been proved, most business combinations are judged under a "rule of reason." This involves an in-depth market analysis to determine whether the combination in question unreasonably restrains trade.⁹ [\[31\]](#) Under this inquiry, the key question is whether the restraint "is one that promotes competition or one that suppresses competition." National Soc'y of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637, 98 S. Ct. 1355 \(1978\); see also Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 \(1977\); [\[30\]](#) ABA Antitrust Section, supra, at 42. Despite this customary analysis, certain restraints have been held to constitute a per se violation of the Sherman Act without necessitating a detailed consideration of the reasonableness of the impact on competition.¹⁰

As the defendants contend, the undisputed facts show that the defendants have entered independently into a series of vertical, [\[32\]](#) exclusive distributorship contracts with the cable system operators.¹¹ HN13 Generally, most vertical, nonprice restrictions are judged under the rule of reason. Blanton Enterprises, Inc. v. Burger King Corp., 680 F. Supp. 753 \(D. S.C. 1988\). The federal courts have applied the rule of reason analysis [\[*481\]](#) in the vast majority of exclusive distributorship cases. See ABA Antitrust Section, supra, at 123 n.666. "In analyzing the effect of exclusive distributorships on competition, courts have considered such factors as the strength of interbrand competition, the duration of the exclusive distributorship, and the geographic extent of the distributorship." ABA Antitrust Section, supra, at 118-119 (and cases cited). The impact of each of these considerations will be examined in turn.

[\[33\]](#) As discussed earlier, spot cable competes with other media, such as broadcast television, for advertising dollars. Even if the product market is confined more narrowly to the spot cable market itself, the evidence shows that the defendant cable rep firms compete for exclusive contracts. (See Declaration of Robert D. Williams at P 15; Declaration of Barrett J. Harrison at P 24; Affidavit of Peter J. Moran at P 14 (noting competition between NCA and CNI over right to represent Cable AdNet of Pittsburgh, Inc. and TCI Cablevision of Central Connecticut); Everett Tr. at 581.) Such competition will inevitably encourage the defendants to reduce their commissions or to offer additional services to lure business away from the other cable rep firms.

⁹ Justice Brandeis stated the rule of reason this way in Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 62 L. Ed. 683, 38 S. Ct. 242 \(1918\):

The true test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. To determine that question the court must ordinarily consider the facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied; its condition before and after the restraint was imposed; the nature of the restraint and its effect, actual or probable. The history of the restraint, the evil believed to exist, the reason for adopting the particular remedy, the purpose or end sought to be attained, are all relevant facts.

Id. at 238.

¹⁰ As Justice Black stated:

There are certain agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use. This principle of per se unreasonableness not only makes the type of restraints which are proscribed by the Sherman Act more certain to the benefit of everyone concerned, but it also avoids the necessity for an incredibly complicated and prolonged economic investigation into the entire history of the industry involved, as well as related industries, in an effort to determine at large whether a particular restraint has been unreasonable -- an inquiry so often wholly fruitless when undertaken.

Northern Pac. Ry. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 \(1958\).

¹¹ The contracts between the cable operators and the representative firms create an agency relationship. Under the intra-corporate conspiracy doctrine, a corporation cannot conspire with its own agents. See Buschi v. Kirven, 775 F.2d 1240, 1241-552 \(4th Cir. 1985\).

This competition is enhanced by the nature and scope of the contracts themselves. CMC's contracts typically allow the cable system to terminate the contract at any time upon one year's notice. (See Albin J. Seethaler Tr. at 42; Harrison Decl. at P 15.) CNI has entered into contracts with termination provisions that range from 30 days (Moran Aff. Exh. A at P 23.) to five years (Moran Aff. Exh. C at P 8(a)). NCA's contracts typically last [34] for one to three years. (See Williams Decl. Exhs. C at P 1, D at P B(6), E at 3, F at P 8, G at P 9, and H.) Many of these contracts also allow the parties to terminate the arrangement early if revenue goals are not met, or if the cable system gives reasonable notice. (See, e.g. Williams Decl. Exh. D at P 9; Moran Aff. Exh. C at P 8(b).)

The geographic scope of the exclusive rep agreements also varies widely. CMC's contracts provide that national spot cable advertising time may be purchased from the system only through CMC. (Harrison Decl. P 16.) The majority of CNI's agreements also are national in scope, but some of its contracts appoint CNI as an exclusive representative only in cities where CNI maintains an office or regularly does business. (See Moran Aff. Exhs. A, B and C.) The territorial limitations of NCA's exclusive rep contracts vary, with the clients adopting national, regional and local approaches. (Williams Decl. PP 7-11, and Exhs. B, D, E, F and G.)

The Supreme Court's decision in Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 \(1977\), suggests that, under [35] these facts, the vertical, nonprice restrictions in this case are manifestly reasonable. The Court there, which was faced with a territorial restraint, based its conclusion on the fact that vertical agreements commonly have both pro-competitive and anticompetitive effects.

HN14[] Vertical restrictions reduce intrabrand competition by limiting the number of sellers of a particular product competing for the business of a given group of buyers. Location restrictions have this effect because of practical constraints on the effective marketing area of retail outlets. Although intrabrand competition may be reduced, the ability of retailers to exploit the resulting market may be limited both by the ability of consumers to travel to other franchised locations and, perhaps more importantly, to purchase the competing products of other manufacturers

HN15[] Vertical restrictions promote interbrand competition by allowing the manufacturer to achieve certain efficiencies in the distribution of his products. These "redeeming virtues" are implicit in every decision sustaining vertical restrictions under the rule of reason. Economists have identified a number of ways in which manufacturers can use [36] such restrictions to compete more effectively against other manufacturers. For example, new manufacturers and manufacturers entering new markets can use the restrictions in order to induce competent and aggressive retailers to make the kind of investment of capital and labor that is often required in the distribution of [*482] products unknown to the consumer. Established manufacturers can use them to induce retailers to engage in promotional activities or to provide service and repair facilities necessary to the efficient marketing of their products

Sylvania, 433 U.S. at 54-55 (citations omitted).

The Sylvania Court's recognition of the "efficiencies" produced by vertical, nonprice restrictions applies with equal force in the present case. As the defendants contend, traditional antitrust concerns such as "free riding" have prompted the use of exclusive contracts throughout spot cable. The evidence has also demonstrated that such contracts have attracted investment capital to the industry, and have produced competition within the spot cable industry and with other advertising vehicles such as broadcast television. [37] Finally, TE presents no evidence which suggests that the exclusive contracts have resulted in output restriction. Cf. Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 19-20, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1, 99 S. Ct. 1551 \(1979\) (output restriction factor in determining whether restraint is unlawful per se).

In short, the Plaintiff would not be able to prove at trial that exclusive representation agreements have had a substantial anticompetitive effect. To the extent that TE's claims are premised on the theory that such contracts violate the antitrust laws, summary judgment must be granted.¹²

[38] VI.

Count VIII of TE's Amended Complaint alleges a claim for tortious interference with contractual relations and business expectations. Under section 773 of the Restatement \(Second\) of Torts:

HN16 [↑] One who, by asserting in good faith a legally protected interest of his own or threatening in good faith to protect the interest by appropriate means, intentionally causes a third person not to perform an existing contract or enter into a prospective contractual relation with another does not interfere improperly with the other's relation if the actor believes that his interest may otherwise be impaired or destroyed by the performance of the contract or transaction.

Restatement \(2d\) of Torts § 773 (1979).

The evidence submitted to the Court shows that the defendants acted in good faith to protect their contractual rights. None of the evidence presented shows that the defendants used wrongful means to enforce those agreements. Therefore, summary judgment in the defendants' favor is appropriate.

VII.

TE's remaining claims concern alleged common law defamation and "commercial defamation" under Section 43(a) of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125\(a\).¹³ [*39] Both [*483] claims are based on the assumption that exclusivity in the spot cable advertising business violates the antitrust laws. In light of the Court's ruling on that issue, none of the defendants' statements could be held defamatory under state law or federal law.

[40] TE points out that the Lanham Act was recently amended to include commercial defamation claims. Previously, false representations about the plaintiff's product or service were not considered actionable. See ¹² Thus, summary judgment also will be granted in favor of the defendants on TE's monopolization claim under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, and on its Virginia antitrust claims. See White v. Rockingham Radiologists, Ltd., 820 F.2d 98, 105 (4th Cir. 1987) (plaintiff must show jury could find defendant had no valid business reason or concern for efficiency); Satellite Television, 714 F.2d at 358 n.13 (reasoning applicable to Sherman Act claims governs Virginia antitrust statutes). For the same reasons, summary judgment will be granted for the defendants on the Virginia business conspiracy claims. Such claims require proof that the conspiracy had the purpose of "willfully and maliciously injuring" the plaintiff in his business, which could not be proved at trial on the facts submitted to this Court. Va. Code Ann. §§ 18.2-499, - 500; Allen Realty Corp. v. Holbert, 227 Va. 441, 318 S.E.2d 592, 596 (Va. 1984).

¹³ That statute provides:

HN17 [↑] Any person who, on or in connection with any goods or services, or any container for goods, uses in commerce any word, term, name, symbol, or device, or any combination thereof, or any false designation of origin, false or misleading description of fact, or false or misleading representation of fact, which --

(A) is likely to cause confusion, or to cause mistake, or to deceive as to the affiliation, connection, or association of such person with another person, or as to the origin, sponsorship, or approval of his or her goods, services, or commercial activities by another person, or

(B) in commercial advertising or promotion, misrepresents the nature, characteristics, qualities, or geographic origin of his or her or another person's goods, services, or commercial activities, shall be liable in a civil action by any person who believes that he or she is or is likely to be damaged by such act.

Monoflo International, Inc. v. Sahm, 726 F. Supp. 121, 126 n.10 (E.D. Va. 1989). The amendments extend the act to cover commercial defamation against any person. See id. (citing 15 U.S.C. § 1125).

However, the amendments do not save TE's Lanham Act claim. In Monoflo International, Judge Ellis ruled that the defendant's misrepresentations about the status of its relationship with the plaintiff did not trigger the Lanham Act. In an attempt to obtain Monoflo's product, the German corporate defendant sent a letter to Monoflo's distributor claiming that it was Monoflo's exclusive European sales agent. Id. at 123. The court ruled that the Lanham Act "reaches only misrepresentations that tend falsely to represent some aspect of a product or service; it does not reach, as here, misrepresentations essentially unconnected to a product or service. In misrepresenting its status as Monoflo's [41] exclusive European sales agent, [the defendant] said nothing that would tend falsely to represent anything about the quality, nature, or characteristic of any product or service." Id.

Although TE claims the defendants misrepresented its capability to deliver spot advertising time to its clients, the real dispute concerned only TE's status. Monoflo makes it clear that this is not actionable under the Lanham Act, even as amended.

VIII.

For the reasons hereinbefore stated, the defendants' Joint Motion for Summary Judgment will be GRANTED. An appropriate Order shall issue.

James R. Spencer

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Date: APR 18 1994

FINAL ORDER - April 18, 1994, Filed

THIS MATTER comes before the Court on the parties' cross-motions for summary judgment. For the reasons stated in the accompanying Memorandum Opinion, the defendants' Joint Motion for Summary Judgment is hereby GRANTED. Accordingly, the Plaintiff's claims are hereby DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE. The defendants' counterclaims for tortious interference with contractual relations are hereby DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

And it is SO ORDERED.

James R. Spencer

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Date: [42] APR 18 1994

End of Document

State ex rel. Fisher v. Louis Trauth Dairy

United States District Court for the Southern District of Ohio, Western Division

April 20, 1994, Decided ; April 23, 1994, Filed

CASE NO. C-93-0553

Reporter

856 F. Supp. 1229 *; 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8467 ; 30 Fed. R. Serv. 3d (Callaghan) 956; 1994-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,682

STATE OF OHIO EX REL. LEE FISHER, ATTORNEY GENERAL, Plaintiff, v. LOUIS TRAUTH DAIRY, INC., et al., Defendants.

Core Terms

conspiracies, school board, fraudulent concealment, Valentine Act, Dairy, joinder, bids, school district, due diligence, concealed, Defendants', allegations, occurrences, sovereign, motion to dismiss, discovery, parties, statute of limitations, tolling statute, transactions, antitrust, rigging, expressio unius est exclusio alterius, government entity, affirmative act, public entity, Overlapping, trusts

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN1 [down arrow] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) must be viewed in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion. A court must accept as true all allegations in the well pleaded complaint under attack. A court may grant the motion only if it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiffs can prove no set of facts in support of their claims which would entitle them to relief.

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Settlements, Settlement Agreements

It is established law in Ohio that settlement with one Defendant, with a reservation of rights against other Defendants does not act as bar to suit against another Defendant who may also be liable.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Torts > Procedural Matters > Commencement & Prosecution > Venue

856 F. Supp. 1229, *1229A 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8467, 8467

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Venue > General Overview

HN3 Justiciability, Standing

See Ohio Rev. Code § 1331.01\(A\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN4 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

A public board of education is not a "person," as defined in Ohio Rev. Code § 1331.01\(A\), when the board operates within its clear legal authority.

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > General Overview

HN5 Case or Controversy, Standing

Where a public entity is found to be a "person" for purposes of a statute the entity is usually engaged in a commercial or business activity rather than acting in its governmental capacity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN6 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

See Ohio Rev. Code § 109.81.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN7 Legislation, Interpretation

It is the duty of a court called upon to interpret a statute to breathe sense and meaning into it; to give effect to all its terms and provisions; and to render it compatible with other and related enactments whenever and wherever possible.

Civil Procedure > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling of Statute of Limitations > Fraud

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Civil Procedure > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling of Statute of Limitations > Fraudulent Concealment

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN8 Tolling of Statute of Limitations, Fraud

856 F. Supp. 1229, *1229LÁ994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8467, 8467

The statute of limitations applicable to private antitrust actions may be tolled where a plaintiff did not file its action in time because of ignorance resulting from a defendant's fraudulent concealment.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN9[] Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

There are strong policy reasons for the enforcement of statutes of limitations. They are vital to the welfare of society and are favored in the law. Stale conflicts should be allowed to rest undisturbed after the passage of time has made their origins obscure and the evidence uncertain. For this and other reasons the Federal Rules require that fraud which would toll the statute must be plead with particularity. Fed. R. Civ. P. 9\(b\).

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

HN10[] Statute of Limitations, Time Limitations

The Sixth Circuit has clarified that three elements must be pleaded in order to establish fraudulent concealment: (1) wrongful concealment of their actions by the defendants; (2) failure of the plaintiff to discover the operative facts that are the basis of his cause of action within the limitations period; and (3) plaintiff's due diligence until discovery of the facts.

Civil Procedure > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling of Statute of Limitations > Fraud

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Tolling

Civil Procedure > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling of Statute of Limitations > Fraudulent Concealment

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN11[] Tolling of Statute of Limitations, Fraud

The bedrock threshold for granting the equitable tolling of the statute of limitations for fraudulent concealment must be whether a plaintiff knew or through due diligence should have known of the existence of his claims.

Civil Procedure > Parties > Joinder of Parties > Permissive Joinder

Civil Procedure > Parties > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Parties > Joinder of Parties > General Overview

HN12[] Joinder of Parties, Permissive Joinder

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure allow for joinder of parties. All persons may join in one See Fed. R. Civ. P. 20\(a\).

Civil Procedure > Parties > Joinder of Parties > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Parties > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Joinder of Claims & Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Joinder of Claims & Remedies > Joinder of Claims

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Joinder of Claims & Remedies > Joinder of Remedies

HN13 [blue icon] Parties, Joinder of Parties

Joinder is generally favored under the federal rules. Under the Rules, the impulse is toward entertaining the broadest possible scope of action consistent with fairness to the parties; joinder of claims, parties and remedies is strongly encouraged. The intent of the rules is that all issues be resolved in one action, with all parties before one court, complex though the action may be. Joinder promotes judicial economy, trial convenience and expedites the final determination of disputes.

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Judges > Discretionary Powers

Civil Procedure > Parties > Joinder of Parties > Permissive Joinder

HN14 [blue icon] Judges, Discretionary Powers

Permissive joinder rests with the sound discretion of the district court.

Counsel: [\[1\]](#) For THE STATE OF OHIO, plaintiff: Doreen Claire Johnson, Ohio Attorney General, Columbus, OH. For LEE FISHER, plaintiff: James Rubin Cummins, Brown, Cummins & Brown -1, Cincinnati, OH. Stanley Morris Chesley, Waite, Schneider, Bayless & Chesley - 1, Cincinnati, OH. Doreen Claire Johnson, Ohio Attorney General, Columbus, OH.

For LOUIS TRAUTH DAIRY INC, DAVID E TRAUTH, defendants: G Jack Donson, Jr, Taft, Stettinius & Hollister - 1, Cincinnati, OH. For DAN SMITH, defendant: Brian Edward Hurley, Crabbe, Brown, Jones, Potts & Schmidt - 1, Cincinnati, OH. For H MEYER DAIRY COMPANY, defendant: Donald L Stepner, Adams, Brooking, Stepner, Woltermann & Dusing - 1, Covington, KY. For BORDEN INC, As a successor to Meadow Gold Dairies Inc, MEADOW GOLD DAIRIES INC, BORDEN INC AS SUCCESSOR TO VALLEY BELL DAIRY, VALLEY BELL DAIRY, defendants: William J Brown, Emens, Kegler, Brown, Hill & Ritter - 2, Columbus, OH. For REITER DAIRY INC, BROUGHTON FOODS CO, defendants: Donald S Scherzer, Kohrman, Jackson & Krantz, Cleveland, OH. For COORS BROTHERS COMPANY INC, defendant: Edward Schmertz Dorsey, Lindhorst & Dreidame -1, Cincinnati, OH. For SMITH DAIRY PRODUCTS COMPANY INC, defendant: John J Eklund, [\[2\]](#) Calfee, Halter & Griswold, Cleveland, OH. For GOSHEN DAIRY COMPANY, defendant: Ralph E Cascarilla, Cavitch, Familo & Durkin, Cleveland, OH. For HILLSIDE DAIRY CO, defendant: Stephen J Squeri, Jones Day Reavis & Pogue, Cleveland, OH. For SUPERIOR DAIRY INC, defendant: Richard L Stoper, Jr, Gold Rotatori & Schwartz Co LPA, Cleveland, OH. For UNITED DAIRY INC, defendant: Robert P Fitzsimmons, Fitzsimmons & Associates, Wheeling, WV.

For UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, for Limited Intervention under Rule 24, intervenor: Gerald Francis Kaminski, US Attorney, Cincinnati, OH.

Judges: Spiegel

Opinion by: S. ARTHUR SPIEGEL

Opinion

[*1232] ORDER DENYING DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO DISMISS

This matter is before the Court on Motions To Dismiss or for a More Definite Statement filed individually and jointly by the various Defendants (docs. 31, 32, 33, 35, 36, 41, 43, 63, 85, 93, and 94). The Plaintiff has responded to these motions (docs. 58, 86, and 106). The Defendants, in turn, have replied (docs. 72, 80, 81, and 99). The Plaintiff has requested leave to file a Surreply (108). The Defendants then filed a Joint Response to Plaintiff's request to surreply (doc. 114) and the Defendants themselves have asked for leave to file their own Supplemental [3] Memorandum (doc. 140).

In addition, the Defendants from Northeast Ohio have separately moved to be dropped from this suit or to sever and transfer the claims against them (doc. 115). The Plaintiff has responded (doc. 129), and the Northeast Defendants have replied (doc. 142). The Borden Defendants have also replied (doc. 138) in support to the Northeast Defendants.

Initially, we will grant all requests for leave to file additional briefs beyond those ordinarily permitted under Local Rule 7.2(a)(2). Due to the complexity and interdependence of these motions and out of an abundance of caution, we intend to consider all relevant arguments of the parties.

BACKGROUND

The Secretary of State has sued fifteen dairies doing business in Ohio, alleging price fixing in the sale of milk to schools. In addition the Amended Complaint names certain officers of the Defendant Dairies personally. Subsequent to the filing of some of the Defendants' Motions to Dismiss, the Plaintiff, as directed by the Court, filed Plaintiff's Outline Description of Overlapping Conspiracies (doc. 75). This document was ordered by the Court in response to the Defendants' requests for a more clear statement of the charges [4] leveled against them. At this time two dairies, Meyer Dairy and Coors Dairy, have settled with the Plaintiff and have been dismissed from this case. The Defendants have cooperated in the filing of these motions and many Defendants incorporate the motions of the others.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN1 [↑] A motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) must be viewed in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion. Great Lakes Steel v. Deggendorf, 716 F.2d 1101, 1105 (6th Cir. 1983). A court must accept as true all allegations in the well pleaded complaint under attack. Id. A court may grant the motion only "if it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiffs can prove no set of facts in support of their claims which would entitle them to relief." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957); Balderaz v. Porter, 578 F. Supp. 1491, 1494 (S.D. Ohio 1983).

DISCUSSION

Failure to State a Claim

The Defendants' original Motion to Dismiss or For a More Definite Statement challenged [5] the adequacy of Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint. Initially, the Defendants noted that the Complaint failed to name the actual school boards on whose behalf the Secretary is acting. Further, the Defendants protested that the allegations in the Complaint were conclusory and failed to give them adequate notice of the claims made against them. In the alternative the Defendants prayed for a more definite statement of the Plaintiff's claims. The Court found merit in these assertions by the Defendants and ordered in our Preliminary Pretrial Order [*1233] that the Plaintiff supplement his Amended Complaint as follows:

By November 15, 1993, the Plaintiff will file with the Court an Outline Description of the Overlapping Conspiracies alleged in the Complaint, including:

- (1) which dairies were involved in each conspiracy,
- (2) which school districts were the target of each conspiracy,
- (3) when each conspiracy began and ended,
- (4) what were the geographic boundaries of each conspiracy,
- (5) what overt acts by the dairies tend to prove the conspiracy theory.

Preliminary Pretrial Order, October 24, 1993, Document 38. The Plaintiff has submitted the Description (doc. 75) as ordered. Some Defendants [\[6\]](#) contend that even with this information the Plaintiff's Amended Complaint is inadequate. However, we hold that with the filing of the Plaintiff's Description of the Conspiracies, the requirements of notice pleading are satisfied. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\).

Satisfaction

Next the Defendants argue that the Settlement Agreement between Meyer Dairy and the State of Ohio constitutes full restitution, thereby leaving no claim for damages against the remaining Defendants. However, HN2[↑] it is established law in Ohio that settlement with one Defendant, with a reservation of rights against other Defendants does not act as bar to suit against another Defendant who may also be liable. See Whitt v. Hutchison, 43 Ohio St. 2d 53, 60, 330 N.E.2d 678 \(1975\). Therefore, the Defendants' Motion to Dismiss based on the Meyer Dairy settlement must be denied.

Standing

The Defendants argue that the Plaintiff lacks standing to bring their Valentine Act claims for damages. They base their contention primarily on the language of the Act in conjunction with the Thaxton case. Thaxton v. Medina City Board of Education, 21 Ohio St. 3d 56, 488 N.E.2d 136 \(1986\). [\[7\]](#)

There is nothing in the language of the Act which would prevent a school district from bringing an action. The Act states in pertinent part that:

HN3[↑] The person injured in his business or property by another person by reason of anything forbidden or declared to be unlawful in [this Act], may sue therefor in any court having jurisdiction and venue thereof,

Ohio Rev. Code § 1331.01\(A\). The Act provides this definition of "person":

(A) "Person" includes corporations, partnerships, and associations existing under or authorized by any state or territory of the United States, and solely for the purpose of the definition of division (B) of this section, a foreign governmental entity.

Ohio Rev. Code § 1331.01\(A\). As the Ohio Supreme Court has noted, the definition is not exclusive, and gives no indication that the legislature intended to eliminate school boards. Thaxton, 21 Ohio St. at 57.

The Defendants maintain that a school board is not a "person" within the meaning of the Act. They base this contention on the holding in Thaxton. In that case a school board was sued for Valentine Act violations. The Ohio Supreme Court held in the syllabus: [\[8\]](#)

HN4[↑] A public board of education is not a "person," as defined in R.C. 1331.01\(A\), when the board operates within its clear legal authority.

Thaxton v. Medina City Board of Education, 21 Ohio St. 3d 56, 488 N.E.2d 136 \(1986\). It would, at first glance, appear that Thaxton not only protect a school district from suit under the Valentine Act, but also would exclude school districts from becoming a plaintiff under the Act. However, upon closer analysis, we are persuaded that despite the broad language of the syllabus, the intent of the Ohio Supreme Court was only to provide protection from lawsuits against school boards. We do not find that it intended to deprive school districts the right to sue, if the districts should become the victims of price fixing.

[*1234] We must begin this analysis with a consideration of the significance of the syllabus in Ohio cases. The Ohio Supreme Court is required by statute to make a brief statement of the new and important points of law which each case establishes. Ohio Rev. Code § 2503.42. It is axiomatic that this brief statement, the syllabus, states the law of the case, and that all courts applying Ohio [9] law are bound to adhere to the principles set forth there. Smith v. Klem, 6 Ohio St. 3d 16, 18, 450 N.E.2d 1171 \(1983\); Grange Mut. Cas. Co v. Smith, 80 Ohio App. 3d 426, 431, 609 N.E.2d 585 \(Washington Cty. 1992\). However, the syllabus cannot be understood in a vacuum, but must be read in the context of the facts of the particular case upon which it is premised. It is not to be regarded as absolutely controlling authority in other cases where the material facts are different. Fenner v. Parkinson, 69 Ohio App. 3d 210, 214, 590 N.E.2d 339 \(Franklin Cty. 1990\). The Supreme Court of Ohio Rules for the Reporting of Opinions declares that "the syllabus . . . states the controlling point or points of law decided in and necessarily arising from the facts of the specific case before the Court for adjudication." S. Ct. R. Rep. Op. 1(B) (emphasis added). Therefore, the syllabus in the Thaxton case must be understood in terms of the facts of that case. Our analysis then must turn to those facts.

In Thaxton three school boards were being sued under [10] the Valentine Act. The plaintiffs claimed that the school boards were enforcing a monopoly on the students in regard to year book photographs. 21 Ohio St. 3d at 56. The court held that the school boards could not be sued under the Valentine Act, because the boards were not "persons" within the meaning of the Act. Id. at 57. The Thaxton court reached this conclusion on two grounds.

The first basis for the Thaxton court's holding is that HN5 where a public entity is found to be a "person" for purposes of a statute "the entity is usually engaged in a commercial or business activity rather than acting in its governmental capacity." 21 Ohio St. 3d at 57. For this proposition the court cites the case of United States v. Coumantaros, 165 F. Supp. 695, 698 (D. Md. 1958). In that case the United States was attempting to sue an individual person in the Superior Court of Baltimore City, in order to recover on a debt. The Baltimore ordinance allowed "persons" to sue and the defendant contested whether the United States had standing [11] as a "person." The Coumantaros court articulated several factors which when present make it reasonable to construe the sovereign to be a "person" under a statute.

Generally the sovereign entity involved is acting not in its sovereign capacity but rather is engaging in commercial and business transactions such as other persons, natural or artificial, are accustomed to conduct. Usually, in addition, when a statute is construed so as to include the sovereign within its terms no impairment of sovereign powers results thereby and remedies are given rather than taken away.

* * *

'When a state enters the market place seeking customers it divests itself of its quasi sovereignty, pro tanto, and takes on the character of a trader' Ohio v. Helvering, 292 U.S. 360, 369, 78 L. Ed. 1307, 54 S. Ct. 725 \(1934\).

Coumantaros, 165 F. Supp. at 698 (emphasis added). It is clear from these criteria that the standard the Coumantaros court is relying upon is basically the proprietary versus governmental function distinction. See Hack v. Salem, 174 Ohio St. 383, 387, 189 N.E.2d 857 \(1963\). [12] This proprietary versus governmental analysis is primarily concerned with whether a public entity is entitled to the protection of sovereign immunity. See id. Likewise, the Thaxton court's commercial versus governmental analysis, is essentially a sovereign immunity analysis. As such, since sovereign immunity is exclusively concerned with the public entity as defendant, the holding in Thaxton should be limited to a school board as defendant.

The second basis the Thaxton court offers for its holding that a school board is not a "person" under the Valentine Act is by application of the statutory principle "expressio unius est exclusio alterius." Under this principle "the express mention of but one class of persons in a statute implies the exclusion of all others." Thaxton, 21 Ohio St. 3d at 57 [*1235] (quoting State, ex re. Boda v. Brown, 157 Ohio St. 368, 372, 105 N.E.2d 643 (1952)). In this argument, it is even clearer that the Ohio Supreme Court viewed the school boards only as defendants.

856 F. Supp. 1229, *1234-994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8467, 12

Thaxton's expressio unius est exclusio alterius analysis focuses upon the last clause in [13] the Valentine Act's "person" definition:

(A) "Person" includes corporations, partnerships, and associations existing under or authorized by any state or territory of the United States, and solely for the purpose of division (B) of this section, a foreign governmental entity.

Ohio Rev. Code § 1331.01(B) (emphasis added). The Thaxton court held that the express mention of foreign governmental entities in the statute, makes the exclusion of any express reference to other governmental entities, such as school boards, fatal to the extension of the definition of "person" to school boards.

On closer inspection the application of the statutory principle of expressio unius est exclusio alterius reinforces the interpretation that the statute speaks only to government bodies as defendants. The phrase at issue begins "solely for the purpose of division (B) of this section . . ." When we look at division (B) of the Act, we find that it is the definition of a "trust," that is to say the target of the Valentine Act. Therefore, foreign governmental bodies are expressly included within the definition of trusts under the statute. Under the strict rule of expression unius [14] est exclusio alterius, this would mean that school boards are excluded from being Valentine Act trusts. Thus the holding of Thaxton is: school boards may not be trusts, that is they may not be Valentine Act defendants. Since the Act's express reference to foreign governmental bodies is explicitly limited by the language of the statute to foreign governmental bodies as defendants, the principle of expressio unius est exclusio alterius would only allow an inference about school boards as defendants. However, the exclusion of school boards from consideration as "trusts" or from being Valentine Act defendants does not prevent them from being plaintiffs under the Act.

The Thaxton case was applied by an Ohio appellate court in Stow v. Summit County, 70 Ohio App. 3d 298, 590 N.E.2d 1363 (Summit Cty. 1990). In Stow one city, Stow, sued another city, Akron, and a county, Summit County, under the Valentine Act. interestingly, while following the second Thaxton argument, the court specifically held that the defendants were not "persons" within the meaning of the Valentine Act, but made no mention of the standing of the plaintiff, [15] the City of Stow. Stow, 70 Ohio App. 3d at 300.

Both of the arguments which the Thaxton court offers for its holding are directed toward the exclusion of school boards as Valentine Act defendants. However, these arguments offer no impediment to school boards using the Valentine Act as plaintiffs. The first argument is at heart based on sovereign immunity, a defense. The second, based on expressio unius est exclusio alterius, excludes school boards from the definition of trusts, that is Valentine Act defendants.

Finally, the Thaxton holding, though directed at school districts in particular, by its own language applies to all Ohio government entities. Thaxton, 21 Ohio St. 3d at 57 (holding applies to a "board of education or other public entity"). If this were to be taken literally it would severely conflict with Section 109.81 of the Ohio Revised Code. That section explicitly empowers the Ohio Attorney General to bring lawsuits on behalf of Ohio's public entities:

HN6[] (A) The attorney general shall act as the attorney at law in any antitrust case for the state. He may act as the [16] attorney at law in any antitrust case for any political subdivision of the state, for the governing body of any political subdivision of the state, or, as parens patriae, for any natural person residing in the state.

Ohio Rev. Code § 109.81 (emphasis added). We are instructed by the Ohio courts, when interpreting the Revised Code to attempt to reconcile possible conflicts:

HN7[] It is the duty of a court called upon to interpret a statute to breathe sense and meaning into it; to give effect to all its terms and provisions; and to render it [*1236] compatible with other and related enactments whenever and wherever possible.

Commonwealth Loan Co. v. Downtown Lincoln Mercury Co., 4 Ohio App. 2d 4, 6, 33 Ohio Op. 2d 6, 7, 211 N.E.2d 57 \(Hamilton County 1964\).

Therefore, we hold that there is no impediment in Ohio law to a school district asserting the rights of a plaintiff under the Valentine Act. Accordingly, the Attorney General has standing to bring this action on behalf of the school boards of Ohio.

Fraudulent Concealment

The statute of limitations for an action under the Clayton Antitrust Act is four years. 15 U.S.C. § 15 [17] (b). Having filed this suit August 11, 1993, under this statute of limitations the Plaintiff would be limited to claims which arise after August 11, 1989. However, the First Amended Complaint alleges bid rigging which began as early as 1977 and continued until "at least 1989." In order to recover for this period the Plaintiff must overcome the statute of limitations. HN8 [↑] The statute of limitations applicable to private antitrust actions may be tolled where a plaintiff did not file its action in time because of ignorance resulting from a defendant's fraudulent concealment. Dayco Corp. v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 523 F.2d 389 \(6th Cir. 1975\); Akron Presform Mold Co. v. McNeil Corp., 496 F.2d 230 \(6th Cir.\), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 997, 42 L. Ed. 2d 270, 95 S. Ct. 310 \(1974\).

HN9 [↑] There are strong policy reasons for the enforcement of statutes of limitations. They are vital to the welfare of society and are favored in the law. Wood v. Carpenter, 101 U.S. 135, 139, 25 L. Ed. 807 \(1879\). "Stale conflicts should be allowed to rest [18] undisturbed after the passage of time has made their origins obscure and the evidence uncertain." Dayco, 523 F.2d at 394. For this and other reasons the Federal Rules require that fraud which would toll the statute must be plead with particularity. Fed. R. Civ. P. 9\(b\). HN10 [↑] The Sixth Circuit has clarified that three elements must be pleaded in order to establish fraudulent concealment:

(1) wrongful concealment of their actions by the defendants.

(2) failure of the plaintiff to discover the operative facts that are the basis of his cause of action within the limitations period; and

(3) plaintiff's due diligence until discovery of the facts.

Id. (citing Weinberger v. Retail Credit Co., 498 F.2d 552 \(4th Cir. 1974\)). We find that the Plaintiffs have met their pleading requirement in regard to these three elements.

The first element that must be pleaded in order to establish fraudulent concealment is "wrongful concealment of their actions by the defendants." Dayco, 523 F.2d at 394. When the underlying cause of action is for violations of antitrust law, the Plaintiff must allege some affirmative [19] misconduct preventing discovery and excusing delay. Pinney Dock & Transport Co. v. Penn Central Corp., 838 F.2d 1445, 1468-69 \(6th Cir.\) cert. denied, 488 U.S. 880, 102 L. Ed. 2d 166, 109 S. Ct. 196 \(1988\).

In his Amended Complaint the Plaintiff has alleged:

36. Despite the exercise of due diligence, Plaintiff was unaware of and did not discover the existence of the claim sued under because Defendants and their co-conspirators fraudulently concealed the existence of the combinations and conspiracies by the following affirmative acts:

(a) Submitting prearranged, complementary losing bids on milk supply contracts previously allocated for the purpose of concealing their contract allocation scheme and in order to give the illusion of competition among the Defendants and their coconspirators;

(b) Secretly conducting activities in furtherance of the conspiracies, avoiding reference to the conspiracies in documents, and confining information concerning the conspiracies to only key responsible individuals of involved companies; and

(c) Engaging in other fraudulent acts not now known to Plaintiff [20] in an attempt to continue to conceal as much of their illegal conduct as possible.

[*1237] First Amended Complaint at P 36, Document 25. The Plaintiff school districts created a system of sealed bids for milk contracts in order to assure the integrity of the bidding process. We are satisfied that the allegation of the use of prearrange rigged bids, which were secretly negotiated and subsequently concealed is sufficient to meet the affirmative misconduct requirement of fraudulent concealment.

The Defendants argue that the Plaintiff merely alleges silence on the part of the Defendants. See Pinney Dock, 838 F.2d at 1472 ("Mere silence, where there is no duty to speak, does not toll the statute.") The Pinney Dock court considered the issue of what constitutes an affirmative action sufficient to rise to the level of fraudulent concealment at some length. That court clarified with this example:

"In [the Complaint] the plaintiffs allege that the defendants performed certain acts in furtherance of the conspiracy which created the false impression that project bids were competitively made rather than rigged. This is something more than silence; if true, [21] it constitutes an attempt to deceive both the competition and the public into the belief that all of their bids were made legitimately and as the result of competitive considerations. It is precisely the sort of affirmative act of deception required by the jurisprudence." Ingram Corp. v. J. Ray McDermott & Co., 1980-1 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P 78,414 \(E.D. La. 1980\). The affirmative acts referred to in [the Complaint] included submitting prearranged losing bids by the company that had agreed not to receive the award, in order to give the illusion of competition among the corporate defendants, Pinney Dock, 838 F.2d at 1473. This citation give us ample grounds for finding that the sort of bid rigging alleged by the Plaintiffs constitutes affirmative acts, which if proved will be sufficient to meet the first element of the Sixth Circuits test for fraudulent concealment. See Dayco, 523 F.2d at 394.

The second element and third elements which the Sixth Circuit requires a plaintiff to plead in order to establish fraudulent concealment are (2) the failure of the plaintiff to discover the operative [22] facts of the alleged violation and (3) the plaintiff's due diligence until discovery. Dayco, 523 F.2d at 394. These two are closely related since the Supreme Court long ago recognized that in respect to fraudulent concealment "the means of knowledge are the same thing as actual knowledge" Wood v. Carpenter, 101 U.S. 135, 143, 25 L. Ed. 807 \(1879\). A plaintiff therefore must prove that he neither knew nor should have known of his potential claims, despite his due diligence. In the instant case, the Plaintiff claims that the school districts were unaware of and did not discover the existence of the claim sued upon because Defendants and their co-conspirators fraudulently concealed the existence of the combinations and conspiracies"

First Amended Complaint, at P 36, Document 25. In addition the Plaintiff claims that the school districts showed due diligence through their use of sealed bids and their diligent inquiry which finally lead to the discovery of their alleged claims. Id. at P 35.

As noted earlier, the Sixth Circuit has given abundant guidance in regard to the requirements [23] for pleading fraudulent concealment.¹ [\[25\]](#) In particular both the Plaintiff and the Defendants have referred repeatedly the Pinney Dock case, and rightly so, because the thorough analysis in that case has gained wide acceptance.² It is instructive that at the end of the Court of Appeals detailed discussion in Pinney Dock, the issue upon which the court focused for its decision [*1238] concerning fraudulent concealment is that the plaintiffs knew of the acts of the defendants well in advance of the filing of their complaint. Pinney Dock, 838 F.2d at 1477. The question of affirmative acts of concealment which the Court of Appeals considered at great length, and which the Defendants rely heavily upon for this motion was in the end not dispositive. The Court of Appeals concluded:

¹ Pinney Dock & Transport Co. v. Penn Central Corp., 838 F.2d 1445 (6th Cir.) cert. denied, 488 U.S. 880, 102 L. Ed. 2d 166, 109 S. Ct. 196 (1988); Campbell v. Upjohn, 676 F.2d 1122 (6th Cir. 1982); Dayco Corp. v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 523 F.2d 389 (6th Cir. 1975); Akron Presform Mold Co. v. McNeil Corp., 496 F.2d 230 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 997, 42 L. Ed. 2d 270, 95 S. Ct. 310 (1974).*

² See, for example, In Re Lower Lake Erie Iron Ore Antitrust Litigation, 998 F.2d 1144, 1179 \(3rd Cir. 1993\); Conmar Corp. v. Mitsui & Co. \(U.S.A.\) Inc., 858 F.2d 499, 505 \(9th Cir. 1988\); State of South Dakota v. Kansas City Southern Industries, 880 F.2d 40, 46 \(8th Cir. 1989\).

that [the relationship between the parties] may contain the seeds of support for the finding of the district judge that factual questions of actual concealment was presented. However, we also concluded that the record leads us to . . . the . . . conclusion . . . that the time eventually arrived when "the alleged conspiracy was no longer concealed and could have been discovered [24] by due diligence well within the statutory period."

Pinney Dock, 838 F.2d at 1477 (quoting from Gaetzi v. Carling Brewing Co., 205 F. Supp. 615 \(E.D. Mich. 1962\)). Therefore, the Court of Appeals based its final decision to deny the plaintiffs' claim of fraudulent concealment on its determination that the plaintiffs knew of their claims and had not exercised due diligence in pursuing them. The Court of Appeals pointed to evidence in the record that the Pinney Dock plaintiffs were advised by counsel that the defendants were engaging in acts in violation of the antitrust laws. Internal documents indicate that those plaintiffs were convinced that their attorneys' advice was correct. The Court of Appeals concluded:

To hold that a tolling or suspension of the limitations of action must continue unless or until proof positive existed of a wrong (which might never be established in fact) would abort the policy of the law of repose in statutes of limitations of diligence in the equitable principles permitting suspension of them.

Pinney Dock, 838 F.2d at 1478.

Indeed, in those fraudulent concealment cases where the courts have denied the plaintiffs the benefit of tolling of the statute of limitations, the courts repeatedly have focused on knowledge and due diligence. See Pinney Dock & Transport Co. v. Penn Central Corp., 838 F.2d 1445 (6th Cir.) cert. denied, 488 U.S. 880, 102 L. Ed. 2d 166, 109 S. Ct. 196 (1988); Campbell v. Upjohn, 676 F.2d 1122 \(6th Cir. 1982\) (holding that the plaintiff was not entitled to a tolling of the statute when he did not read the merger agreement at the time he signed it and should have learned of the alleged scheme more than two years [26] before suit was actually filed); Dayco Corp. v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 523 F.2d 389 \(6th Cir. 1975\) (denying tolling of statute when congressional hearings and press coverage should have alerted the plaintiff); Akron Presform Mold Co. v. McNeil Corp., 496 F.2d 230 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 997, 42 L. Ed. 2d 270, 95 S. Ct. 310 (1974) (holding that ignorance by the plaintiff of his legal rights would not toll the statute).

We find this emphasis on discovery and due diligence in the fraudulent concealment cases to be well taken. HN11[
▲] The bedrock threshold for granting the equitable tolling of the statute of limitations for fraudulent concealment must be whether a plaintiff knew or through due diligence should have known of the existence of his claims. In the case at bar, the Defendants make no allegations that the school boards had discovered the operative facts that form the basis of their bid rigging claims, or that the Plaintiffs could have discovered the alleged bid rigging through due diligence. The main thrust of the Defendants arguments in regard [27] to the issue of the Plaintiff's knowledge and diligence is that the Plaintiff has not pleaded these claims with sufficient particularity. We find that the Plaintiff's allegations are sufficient to overcome this motion to dismiss.

In ruling that the Plaintiff's Complaint, taken in conjunction with the Outline Description of Overlapping Conspiracies, contains allegations sufficient to survive these Motions to Dismiss, we make no judgment as to the actual merits of the Plaintiff's case. We must deny the Defendants' motion unless it appears beyond doubt that the Plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claims which would entitle him to relief. See Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 \(1957\); [Balderaz v. Porter, 578 F. Supp. 1491, 1494 \(S.D. Ohio \[*1239\] 1983\)](#). At trial the Plaintiff, after the benefit of discovery, bears the considerably greater burden of proving his allegations, in particular the threshold burden of proving fraudulent concealment, with respect to each defendant, individually.

Northeastern Districts Request to Sever

Defendants Smith Dairy Products [28] Company, Hillside Dairy, Goshen Dairy, and Superior Dairy have moved that the school districts and the six Defendants described by the Plaintiff as participants in the Northeast conspiracy be dismissed from this case or in the alternative that they be severed and transferred to the Northern District of Ohio. Defendant Borden Dairy has filed a Reply in support of this motion. These Defendants argue that their joinder in this case under the Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint is improper. They contend that the rights to relief asserted by the Plaintiff against them do not arise out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences as the claims against the other Defendants.

HN12[] The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure allow for joinder of parties.

Rule 20. Permissive Joinder of Parties

(a) Permissive Joinder. All persons may join in one action as plaintiffs if they assert any right to relief jointly, severally, or in the alternative in respect of or arising out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences and if any question of law or fact common to all these persons will arise in the action. All persons (and any vessel, cargo *29 or other property subject to admiralty process in rem) may be joined in one action as defendants if there is asserted against them jointly, severally, or in the alternative, any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences and if any question of law or fact common to all defendants will arise in the action. A plaintiff or defendant need not be interested in obtaining or defending against all the relief demanded. Judgment may be given for one or more of the plaintiffs according to their respective rights to relief, and against one or more defendants according to their respective liabilities.

Fed. R. Civ. P. 20(a) (emphasis added).

There is no dispute that common questions of law exist among the claims against various Defendants. However, the moving Defendants contest whether the occurrences or transactions are the same. They argue that the Plaintiff has alleged three separate conspiracies and that even if these allegations were correct, the existence of separate, similar conspiracies is not sufficient to permit joinder under this rule. See Saval v. BL Ltd., 710 F.2d 1027 (4th Cir. 1983) *30 (plaintiffs with similar complaints against same defendant denied joinder); Kenvin v. Newburger, Loeb and Company, 37 F.R.D. 473 (S.D.N.Y. 1965) (investor claiming fraud in identical manner by four separate investors denied joinder).

HN13[] Joinder is generally favored under the federal rules. United Mine Workers v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 724, 16 L. Ed. 2d 218, 86 S. Ct. 1130 (1966) ("Under the Rules, the impulse is toward entertaining the broadest possible scope of action consistent with fairness to the parties; joinder of claims, parties and remedies is strongly encouraged."); Lasa Per L'Industria Del Marmo Soc. Per Azioni v. Alexander, 414 F.2d 143, 147 (6th Cir. 1969) ("The intent of the rules is that all issues be resolved in one action, with all parties before one court, complex though the action may be."). Joinder promotes judicial economy, trial convenience and expedites the final determination of disputes. Mosley v. General Motors Corp., 497 F.2d 1330, 1332 (8th Cir. 1974); Peffers v. Bowman, 599 F. Supp. 353, 356 (D. Idaho 1984). *31 In Mosley the Eighth Circuit held that the terms "transaction or occurrence or series of transactions or occurrences" should be broadly interpreted to permit all reasonably related claims for relief by or against different parties to be tried in a single proceeding. Absolute identity of all events is unnecessary.

Mosley, 497 F.2d at 1333. Finally, HN14[] permissive joinder rests with the sound discretion of the district court. Swanigan v. Amadeo Rossi, S.A., 617 F. Supp. 66, 67 (E.D. Mich. 1985).

[*1240] The Plaintiff has claimed a series of overlapping and interwoven conspiracies. He has alleged three main conspiracies. However, individual Defendants are alleged to have participated in more than one of these three conspiracies. In exercising discretion under Rule 20, the district court must determine whether joinder will comport with principles of fundamental fairness. McIntyre v. Codman & Shurtleff, Inc., 103 F.R.D. 619, 622 (S.D.N.Y. 1984). We realize that the size and complexity of this suit is a burden for all the Defendants. However, we must balance the problems raised by joinder with the *32 advantages both judicial and practical of trying all the Attorney General's overlapping conspiracy claims together. We have attempted through the creation in Columbus of one central document depository to avoid some of the onus of document discovery. Therefore, we deny the Northeast Defendants motion to dismiss or to transfer to the Northern District of Ohio.

The McClave Report

Throughout their various Motions to Dismiss, the Defendants have argued that the First Amended Complaint, even as supplemented by the Plaintiff's Outline, is insufficient to put them on notice of the claims against them and consequently insufficient to allow them to properly prepare their defense. In their Supplemental Memorandum for a More Definite Statement (doc. 140), the Defendants, with the benefit of evidence uncovered in discovery, have renewed this contention. They have deposed what they represent as the Plaintiff's "key witnesses" with respect to the conspiracy. The Defendants contend that:

These depositions reveal that the Plaintiff's case against 10 of 13 Defendants rests entirely on a "market analysis" using methodology developed by James T. McClave and Info Tech. To date, Plaintiff has refused [33] to provide this "market analysis" to Defendants.

Defendants' Supplemental Memorandum at 2, Document 140. We agree that the Defendants should be entitled to the information in the McClave report.³ Accordingly, when the Plaintiff produces his list of expert witnesses on May 15, 1994, in accord with our Preliminary Pretrial Order, he will also provide the Defendants with any expert reports, preliminary or otherwise, including the McClave "market analysis."

CONCLUSION

Accordingly, the Defendants' Motions to Dismiss or for a More Precise Statement are hereby denied. The Northeast Defendants' Motion that they be dropped or transferred is also denied. Finally, the Plaintiff is ordered to provide the Defendants with the McClave market analysis, as directed herein.

SO ORDERED.

Dated: April [34] 20, 1994

S. Arthur Spiegel

United States District Judge

End of Document

³ In ordering the discovery of this report we find ourselves in agreement with Judge Bertelsman, in the Eastern District of Kentucky. Commonwealth v. Louis Trauth Dairy, Inc., No. 92-50 slip op. (E.D. Ky., June 25, 1992).

Seabury Management v. Professional Golfers' Ass'n of Am.

United States District Court for the District of Maryland

April 25, 1994, Decided ; April 26, 1994, FILED

CIVIL ACTION NO. MJG-92-530

Reporter

878 F. Supp. 771 *; 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20311 **

SEABURY MANAGEMENT, INC., Plaintiff vs. PROFESSIONAL GOLFERS' ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA, INC., et al., Defendants

Core Terms

golf, trade show, matter of law, monopolization, sectional, new trial, conspiracy, conspired, relevant market, east coast, damages, Antitrust, entitled to judgment, punitive damages, Sherman Act, subsidiary, entities, estimate, award of punitive damages, compensatory damages, actual malice, ambiguous, licensing, trademark, anti trust law, calculating, territorial, Counts, costs, logo

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Altering & Amending Judgments

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Judges > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > Directed Verdicts

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Motions for New Trials

HN1 [down arrow] Relief From Judgments, Altering & Amending Judgments

A motion for a new trial involves a comparison of opposing proofs. These opposing proofs are based on the judge's interpretation of the evidence. A motion for a new trial under Fed. R. Civ. P. 59, unlike a motion for a directed verdict under Fed. R. Civ. P. 50\(a\), may be based on the judge's personal weighing of the evidence and his own evaluation of the credibility of the witnesses.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > Directed Verdicts

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Motions for New Trials

HN2 Judgment as Matter of Law, Directed Verdicts

On such a motion it is the duty of the judge to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial, if he is of the opinion that the verdict is against the clear weight of the evidence, or is based upon evidence which is false, or will result in a miscarriage of justice, even though there may be substantial evidence which would prevent the direction of a verdict.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Motions for New Trials

HN3 Trials, Judgment as Matter of Law

A judgment as a matter of law should be granted where there is no substantial evidence in opposition and, without weighing the credibility of witnesses, there can be but one reasonable conclusion as to the verdict. Unlike a motion for a new trial, where the court examines the quality of the evidence, a motion for judgment as a matter of law requires the court to examine the sufficiency of the evidence. Under this standard, the court is required to view the evidence most favorably to the party against whom the motion is made and give that party the benefit of all reasonable inferences from the evidence.

Contracts Law > Defenses > Ambiguities & Mistakes > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > General Overview

HN4 Defenses, Ambiguities & Mistakes

Where there is an ambiguity in a contract, the question of interpretation is, generally, a question of fact to be resolved by the finder of fact.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Ambiguities & Contra Proferentem > General Overview

HN5 Trials, Judgment as Matter of Law

Only an unambiguous writing justifies judgment as a matter of law without resort to extrinsic evidence, and no writing is unambiguous if 'susceptible of two reasonable interpretations.'

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN6 [down] Sherman Act, Claims

To prevail on a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 claim under the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must establish a contract, combination or conspiracy in unreasonable restraint of trade. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. This section does not prevent business decisions made and behavior engaged in by a single economic unit. Rather, this section focuses on the joining of two groups whose actions then result in an unreasonable restraint of trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN7 [down] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Section 11-204\(a\)\(1\) of the Maryland Antitrust Act indicates that courts are to be guided by the interpretation given by the federal courts to the various federal statutes dealing with the same or similar matters. Md. Code Ann. Com. Law II § 11-204\(a\)\(1\) (1990).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN8 [down] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

A parent corporation is not legally capable of conspiring with its wholly-owned subsidiary corporation for purposes of the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN9 [down] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

To survive a motion for summary judgment or for a directed verdict, a plaintiff seeking damages for a violation of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 must present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN10 [down] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

To prevail on a monopolization claim, a plaintiff must demonstrate possession of monopoly power in a relevant market, willful acquisition or maintenance of that power in an exclusionary manner and causal injury. For attempted monopolization, the plaintiff must prove a specific intent to monopolize a relevant market, predatory or anticompetitive behavior, and a high probability of successful monopolization.

878 F. Supp. 771, *771 (1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20311, 20311

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN11 [L] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The determination of a relevant market is a question of fact.

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

HN12 [L] Testimony, Expert Witnesses

When an expert opinion is not supported by sufficient facts to validate it in the eyes of the law, or when indisputable record facts contradict or otherwise render the opinion unreasonable, it cannot support a jury verdict.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN13 [L] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

To prove monopolization, a plaintiff must show that defendant possesses monopoly power in relevant market.

Civil Procedure > ... > Relief From Judgments > Additur & Remittitur > General Overview

HN14 [L] Relief From Judgments, Additur & Remittitur

A jury is permitted to consider all the evidence in the record when calculating damages and that a damage award should not be overturned on the basis of speculation as to the manner in which the jurors arrived at it. However, there must be evidence in the record to support the verdict.

Civil Procedure > ... > Relief From Judgments > Additur & Remittitur > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Remedies > General Overview

HN15 [L] Relief From Judgments, Additur & Remittitur

Once liability is established, a reasonable estimate may be used to prove the amount of damage where such a measure is ordinarily difficult.

Contracts Law > ... > Types of Damages > Compensatory Damages > General Overview

HN16 [L] Types of Damages, Compensatory Damages

Under Maryland law, a plaintiff may use a "yardstick" measure of proving its damages, as long as its assumptions rest on adequate bases and there is a "reasonable compatibility" between the businesses.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Types of Damages > Punitive Damages

Evidence > Privileges > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

HN17 [] Types of Damages, Punitive Damages

A parent corporation has a privilege to interfere to protect its economic interests absent clear evidence that the parent employed wrongful means or acted with an improper purpose. To determine whether interference in a given case is proper, the court must examine a number of factors and decide "whether, upon consideration of the relative significance of the factors involved, the conduct should be permitted without liability, despite its effect of harm to another. Those factors include "(a) the nature of the actor's conduct, (b) the nature of the expectancy with which his conduct interferes, (c) the relations between the parties, (d) the interest sought to be advanced by the actor and (e) the social interests in protecting the expectancy on the one hand and the actor's freedom of action on the other hand.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Punitive Damages

Contracts Law > ... > Damages > Types of Damages > Punitive Damages

Torts > ... > Contracts > Intentional Interference > Elements

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

Torts > ... > Types of Damages > Punitive Damages > General Overview

HN18 [] Damages, Punitive Damages

In a tort case where punitive damages are permitted, in order to obtain such an award a plaintiff must prove actual malice or its legal equivalent.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Punitive Damages

Contracts Law > ... > Damages > Types of Damages > Punitive Damages

HN19 [] Damages, Punitive Damages

A basic but justified disagreement regarding the terms of the contract does not support an award of punitive damages.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Punitive Damages

Contracts Law > ... > Measurement of Damages > Foreseeable Damages > General Overview

Contracts Law > ... > Damages > Types of Damages > Punitive Damages

HN20 [] Damages, Punitive Damages

It is well settled law in Maryland that punitive damages may not be awarded in a pure breach of contract action.

Counsel: [1] FOR SEABURY MANAGEMENT, INC., plaintiff: Ty Cobb, Hogan & Hartson, Baltimore, MD. John B. Williams, Collier, Shannon and Scott, Washington, DC. James R. Loftis, III, Collier, Shannon and Scott, Washington, DC.

FOR PROFESSIONAL GOLFERS' ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA, INC., DICK SMITH, defendants: David Stewart Eggert, Stephen M. Sacks, Arnold and Porter, Washington, DC. John Henry Lewin, Jr., Venable, Baetjer and Howard, Baltimore, Md. FOR MIDDLE ATLANTIC SECTION, PROFESSIONAL GOLFERS' ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA, INC., defendant: Steven M. Nemeroff, Law Office, College Park, Md. Stephen M. Sacks, Arnold and Porter, Washington, DC. John Henry Lewin, Jr., Venable, Baetjer and Howard, Baltimore, Md. FOR THE PROFESSIONAL GOLFERS' ASSOCIATION, PHILADELPHIA SECTION, INC., defendants: Stephen M. Sacks, Arnold and Porter, Washington, DC. Gary R. Leadbetter, Clark, Leoner, Fortenbaugh and Young, Conshohocken, Pa. John Henry Lewin, Jr., Venable, Baetjer and Howard, Baltimore, Md.

FOR MIDDLE ATLANTIC SECTION PROFESSIONAL GOLFERS' ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA, INC., counter-claimant: Steven M. Nemeroff, Law Office, College Park, Md.

FOR SEABURY MANAGEMENT, INC., counter-defendant: Ty Cobb, Hogan & Hartson, Baltimore, MD.

Judges: Marvin J. Garbis, United States District Judge

Opinion by: Marvin J. Garbis

Opinion

[*774] MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

The Court has before it Defendants' Professional Golfers' Association of America, Inc. ("the PGA") and Middle Atlantic Section Professional Golfers' Association of America, Inc. ("the MAPGA") Post-Trial Motion for Judgment as a Matter of Law or, in the Alternative, for a New Trial. The Court has considered the legal memoranda submitted by the parties and has had the benefit of the arguments of counsel.

I. BACKGROUND

At issue in this jury trial was a dispute over a five-year contract ("the Contract") entered into by Plaintiff Seabury Management, Inc. ("Plaintiff" or "Seabury") and Defendant MAPGA in 1989 which allowed Seabury to "promote, produce, and conduct" a golf trade show. Seabury claims that this contract gave it the right to use the MAPGA name and logo to conduct and promote a golf trade show anywhere in the United States. The Defendants claim that the contract (consistent [*775] with the parties' intent) limited any MAPGA-sponsored golf trade show to an area within the MAPGA's territorial boundaries.

The case proceeded to trial on eleven Counts,¹ including: [2]

Count 1 Breach of Contract against the MAPGA

Count 2 Tortious Interference with Contract against the PGA

Count 3 Tortious Interference with Prospective Business Relations against the PGA

Count 4 Violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act (monopolization) against the PGA

Count 5 Violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act (attempted monopolization) against the PGA

Count 6 Violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act (conspiracy/combination to monopolize) against both Defendants

¹ Two Counts (8 and 13) alleging price-fixing practices had been dismissed on the Defendants' motion for summary judgment. In this memorandum, the Counts are referred to by their original numbers.

Count 7 Violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act (restraint of trade) against both Defendants

Count 9 Violation of Maryland's Antitrust Act (monopolization) against the PGA

Count 10 Violation of Maryland's Antitrust Act (attempted monopolization) against the PGA

Count 11 Violation of Maryland's Antitrust Act (conspiracy/combination to monopolize) against both Defendants

Count 12 Violation of Maryland's Antitrust Act (contract, combination or conspiracy to unreasonably restrain trade) against both Defendants Plaintiff sought actual damages, treble damages, punitive damages and reimbursement of Seabury's costs and fees, including attorney's fees.

[3] A special verdict form having been submitted to the jury, the jury returned a verdict for Plaintiff, finding specifically that: (1) the MAPGA breached its contract with Seabury; (2) the PGA and the MAPGA were not part of a single economic unit; (3) the PGA had conspired with both the MAPGA and the Golf Manufacturers and Distributors Association ("the GMDA") to illegally restrain trade; and (4) Seabury had established its monopolization and attempted monopolization claims against the PGA. The jury awarded Plaintiff $ 2.6 million in compensatory damages and $ 4.8 million in punitive damages.

The Defendants now move for judgment as a matter of law or, in the alternative, a new trial.

II. LEGAL STANDARDS

A. New Trial

HN1[] A motion for a new trial involves a "comparison of opposing proofs." Williams v. Nichols, 266 F.2d 389, 393 \(4th Cir. 1959\). These opposing proofs are based on the judge's interpretation of the evidence. A motion for a new trial under Fed. R. Civ. P. 59, unlike a motion for a directed verdict under Fed. R. Civ. P. 50 \(a\), may be based on the judge's personal weighing of the evidence and his own evaluation of the credibility of the witnesses. [4] Wyatt v. Interstate Ocean and Transport Co., 623 F.2d 888 \(4th Cir. 1980\). As stated by the Fourth Circuit:

HN2[] On such a motion it is the duty of the judge to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial, if he is of the opinion that the verdict is against the clear weight of the evidence, or is based upon evidence which is false, or will result in a miscarriage of justice, even though there may be substantial evidence which would prevent the direction of a verdict.

Aetna Casualty and & Surety Co. v. Yeatts, 122 F.2d 350, 352 \(4th Cir. 1941\). See also Gill v. Rollins Protective Services, 836 F.2d 194, 196 \(4th Cir. 1987\); Ellis v. International Playtex, Inc., 745 F.2d 292, 298 \(4th Cir. 1984\); Wyatt, 623 F.2d 888.

B. Judgment as a Matter of Law

HN3[] A judgment as a matter of law should be granted "where there is no substantial evidence in opposition and, without weighing the credibility of witnesses, there can be but one reasonable conclusion as to the verdict." [*776] Poynter v. Ratcliff, 874 F.2d 219, 222-23 \(4th Cir. 1989\). Unlike a motion for a new trial, where the Court examines the quality of the evidence, a motion for judgment as a matter of law [5] requires the Court to examine the sufficiency of the evidence. Under this standard, the Court is required to view the evidence "most favorably to the party against whom the motion is made and give that party the benefit of all reasonable inferences from the evidence." 9 Charles A. Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 2524, at 544-45. The Court notes that this is a stricter standard than that for granting a new trial.

III. DISCUSSION

A. Contract Claim

At the core of this dispute is the scope of the Contract rights Plaintiff received. Plaintiff asserts it could have held a MAPGA-sponsored golf trade show anywhere in the United States and Defendants assert that the contract limited this right to the MAPGA's territorial boundaries. As discussed below, the Court concludes that the Contract was ambiguous on the point at issue.

It is necessary to consider the Contract in its entirety, including the September 1989 amendment. When so read, there is a reasonable basis for a jury verdict for either side. Plaintiff's strongest argument is derived from Paragraph 3, which states, without reference to any geographic limitation, that Seabury was [6] responsible for selecting the location of the golf trade show. Of course, that is not the only pertinent provision. If it were, Seabury would likely have been entitled to summary judgment. However, there are also Contract provisions which support - but do not definitely establish - the Defendants' position.

Paragraph 1 reads, in pertinent part, "Seabury shall not use, display, make reference to, or otherwise incorporate the MAPGA name, logo, affiliation, sponsorship, etc., for any reason other than in furtherance of the purposes set forth in this Agreement, outside the territorial limits of MAPGA at any time without the express written consent of MAPGA."

Paragraph 2 contains a non-compete clause that prevents Seabury from holding a golf trade show within the MAPGA's boundaries for a two-year period of time should Seabury terminate its contract with the MAPGA.

The Defendants argue that these references to the MAPGA's geographic boundaries necessarily imply such limitations to the entire contract. Of course, this language permits such an implication but, in the view of the Court does not compel it.

The words of language of paragraph 1 could reasonably be interpreted as a limitation [7] on promotional materials only. In other words, they can be read as providing Seabury with the ability to use the MAPGA name and logo outside of the territory for any purpose related to the golf trade show but for no other purpose. The words of paragraph 2 could reasonably be viewed as a deliberate restriction of the "non-compete" protection given the MAPGA to an area less than, rather than co-extensive with, the geographical scope of the Contract.

HN4 [↑] Where there is an ambiguity in a contract, the question of interpretation is, generally, a question of fact to be resolved by the finder of fact. See Martin Marietta Corp. v. INTELSAT, 978 F.2d 140, 143 (4th Cir. 1992) ("The construction of ambiguous contract provisions is a factual determination."). In cases of contract ambiguity the Fourth Circuit has stated: "HN5 [↑] Only an unambiguous writing justifies [judgment as a matter of law] without resort to extrinsic evidence, and no writing is unambiguous if 'susceptible of two reasonable interpretations.'" World-Wide Rights Ltd. Partnership v. Combe, Inc., 955 F.2d 242, 245 (4th Cir. 1992) (quoting American Fidelity & Cas. Co. v. London & Edinburgh Ins. Co., 354 F.2d 214, 216 (4th Cir. [8] 1965)).

Since the contract language is ambiguous, it was necessary for the jury to consider evidence extrinsic to the four corners of the Contract to ascertain the parties' intent. In this case, the extrinsic evidence by no means pointed in only one direction. There was adequate evidence to support a verdict for either side. In the end, Plaintiff got the [*777] verdict on the breach of contract claim.² Since the verdict was a reasonable one - although by no means the only reasonable one - the Court will not grant the Defendants' judgment as a matter of law nor a new trial on Count 1.

B. Antitrust Conspiracy Claims

² The Court addresses Counts 2 and 3, tortious interference with contractual or prospective business relations, in its discussion of the punitive damages award.

HN6 To prevail on a § 1 claim under the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must establish a contract, combination or conspiracy in unreasonable restraint of trade. 15 U.S.C. § 1 (1973). This section does not prevent business decisions made and behavior [9] engaged in by a single economic unit. Rather, this section focuses on the joining of two groups whose actions then result in an unreasonable restraint of trade. Thus, the critical inquiry here is whether the Defendants were legally capable of conspiring under the Sherman Act.

Plaintiff argued that the PGA and the MAPGA, a PGA section, conspired to limit Seabury's ability to conduct a golf trade show in violation of the Sherman Act and/or the Maryland Antitrust Act.³ The Defendants assert that as a matter of law the PGA cannot conspire with its sections under the doctrine established in Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984). Accordingly, the Defendants argue, the conspiracy claims must be resolved in their favor.

[10] In Copperweld, the Supreme Court held that HN8 a parent corporation was not legally capable of conspiring with its wholly-owned subsidiary corporation for purposes of the antitrust laws. In reaching this result, the Supreme Court recognized that the corporations involved functioned as one integrated business entity despite being separately incorporated. The Supreme Court carefully limited its holding to the specific relationship of parent and wholly-owned subsidiary and expressly refused to decide under what circumstances, if any, affiliated but not wholly-owned entities could conspire. Rather, the Copperweld Court recommended that, in the future, courts consider whether affiliated corporate entities have a complete unity of interest in determining whether the entities could legally conspire for purposes of the antitrust laws. Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 771-72. This is a functional inquiry that looks to substance over form, id. at 773 n.21, and one which focuses on whether the "parent" organization controls the "subsidiary" (without regard to the particular corporate form involved). See, e.g., Oksanen v. Page Memorial Hosp., 945 F.2d 696 (4th Cir. 1991), cert. denied, [11] 502 U.S. 1074, 117 L. Ed. 2d 137, 112 S. Ct. 973 (1992).

Following the Supreme Court's guidance in Copperweld, this Court concludes that the Defendants are legally incapable of conspiring and that judgment as a matter of law in favor of the Defendants on this issue is appropriate. While the MAPGA is not a wholly-owned subsidiary of the PGA and these entities are separately incorporated, the evidence at trial established that as pertinent to this case the PGA and its member sections function as a single economic unit with the PGA possessing ultimate control over the actions of individual sections.

The Court finds it significant that the sections are governed by the PGA Constitution, by policies adopted either at PGA annual meetings or by the PGA Board of Directors, and by other pertinent policy documents, such as trademark licensing agreements. See Williams v. I.B. Fischer Nevada, 794 F. Supp. 1026, 1032 (D. Nev. 1992) ("The threshold requirement of concerted activity is missing among multiple corporations operated as a single entity when corporate policies are set by one individual or by a parent corporation."), aff'd, 999 F.2d 445 (9th Cir. 1993).

[*778] It is true that [12] each section maintains its own revenues, has its own by-laws, elects its own officers and often conducts programs intended to benefit members of that section only. The sections' actions, however, must be approved by the PGA to ensure that they are in the best interests of the organization as a whole. For example, when the MAPGA sought to enter into a credit card program for its membership, the PGA vetoed it because it conflicted with a program the PGA had in place to benefit the organization as a whole. More importantly, when the MAPGA sought to enter into the Contract and its amendments with Seabury, the PGA had to approve these actions.⁴ [13] This type of "ability to control" is perhaps the determinative factor in the Copperweld

³ The same result applies under the federal or state antitrust statutes. HN7 Section 11-204(a)(1) of the Maryland Antitrust Act indicates that courts are to be "guided by the interpretation given by the federal courts to the various federal statutes dealing with the same or similar matters." Md. Code Ann. Com. Law II § 11-204(a)(1) (1990 Repl. Vol.).

⁴ In this instance, while the PGA did approve the contract, it was Dan Daniels, in his capacity as PGA general counsel, who approved the contract immediately prior to resigning from the PGA to go to Seabury.

analysis. See Philip Areeda, VII Antitrust Law P 1467f, at 267 (1986) ("[Copperweld's] stress on the power to control as distinct from its day-to-day exercise seems equally apt when ownership is not totally in common.")⁵

Based on the evidence presented at trial and the dictates of the Supreme Court in Copperweld, this Court finds that the PGA and its member sections, as a matter of law, are not capable of conspiring in violation of the antitrust laws.⁶ Accordingly, the Defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law on Counts 7 and 12.

[14] C. The GMDA Conspiracy

Seabury claims that the PGA and the GMDA, an association of exhibitors, entered into an illegal conspiracy to limit the number of golf trade shows and to restrict non-PGA, third-party involvement in these shows, an agreement which restrained competition in violation of the antitrust laws.

Seabury argued that its East Coast Show was contrary to the financial interests of both the PGA and the GMDA and offered a document mentioning the PGA's concern that the growth of regional shows could "erode vendor dollars." Pl.'s Ex. 206, at 4. There was also evidence of the PGA's desire to control all national golf trade shows. In one document, the PGA states: "We believe there is an opportunity to operate up to three highly successful national trade shows and eliminate all other regional Section shows. One show would be conducted on the east coast." Pl.'s Ex. 83. In another document summarizing the activity of a September 11, 1990 meeting at Dulles airport, Rod Thompson wrote, "[The] PGA wants total control of all golf shows!" Pl.'s Ex. 278.

In addition, the PGA had discussed the significant concerns on the GMDA's part about the proliferation of golf trade shows [15] and the lack of PGA involvement. Pl.'s Ex. 83.⁷ The PGA was also aware that the GMDA "felt comfortable dealing with the PGA in the production of shows." Pl.'s Ex. 84. And at the famed "Basement Meeting," Jesse Holhouser, Deputy Executive Director and Chief Financial Officer of the PGA, "stressed the unification of PCA and GMDA on all shows." Id.

[*779] In reviewing the evidence presented with regard to this conspiracy, the Court is mindful of the Supreme Court's statement in Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986) that antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 [conspiracy] case. . . . Conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy. HNG To survive a motion for summary [16] judgment or for a directed verdict, a plaintiff seeking damages for a violation of § 1 must present evidence "that tends to exclude the possibility" that the alleged conspirators acted independently.

Id. at 588 (citations omitted).

⁵ Seabury points to the fact that at one point the MAPGA refused PGA's request for information because the information sought was proprietary to the MAPGA. See Defs.' Ex. 73. There were also allegations that the MAPGA was denied a request to view PGA's exhibitor waiting list because the waiting list was "proprietary." That a parent company would keep information from its subsidiary is not as troublesome to the Court as a subsidiary keeping information from the parent company; controlling information from the top down is consistent with a parent exercising control over a subsidiary.

⁶ Seabury presented evidence at trial that the PGA purchased the International Golf Show ("the West Coast Show") from the Southern California section. While it is true that the PGA did not simply pay a token sum for the purchase of the Show, there were several unrebutted reasons offered by the PGA for pursuing the transaction: (1) to be fair to the Southern California section members, who had developed the Show and (2) to support the Section's programs which had become dependent on revenues from the Show. Even assuming that the PGA made the payment to purchase an asset from the section, the fact remains that the PGA always had ultimate control over the section, which could not function as a section independent of the PGA.

⁷ "Recent discussions with GMDA indicate significant concerns about proliferation of Shows and lack of PGA involvement."

With this standard in mind, the Court finds that there is insufficient evidence to support a jury finding that the PGA and the GMDA conspired. None of the evidence offered by plaintiff, including that discussed above, establishes that the GMDA and Defendants agreed to act together either to control the number of successful golf trade shows or to eliminate third-party involvement, like Seabury, in golf trade shows. At no time did Plaintiff produce evidence that the GMDA did more than voice the concerns and preferences of its membership or that the PGA acted in response to the complaints and concerns of its customers. There is similarly no evidence that the PGA requested any action on the part of the GMDA. In essence, there is no evidence of any illegal agreement between the PGA and the GMDA.

Accordingly, judgment as a matter of law shall be entered for the Defendants on Counts 7 and 12 with regard to that part of the jury's verdict finding [17] that the PGA and the GMDA conspired to illegally restrain trade.

D. Monopolization Claims

HN10 [+] To prevail on a monopolization claim, a plaintiff must demonstrate possession of monopoly power in a relevant market, willful acquisition or maintenance of that power in an exclusionary manner and causal injury. See Advanced Health-Care Services, Inc. v. Radford Community Hosp., 910 F.2d 139, 147 (4th Cir. 1990). For attempted monopolization, the plaintiff must prove a specific intent to monopolize a relevant market, predatory or anticompetitive behavior, and a high probability of successful monopolization. Id.

1. Relevant Market

The Defendants assert that they are entitled to judgment as a matter of law or a new trial on the monopolization claims because the evidence did not establish Plaintiff's market definition of "large golf merchandise trade shows" or that such a product market, if it exists, should be limited to the PGA Orlando Show and Seabury's East Coast Show.

HN11 [+] The determination of a relevant market is a question of fact. See International Boxing Club v. United States, 358 U.S. 242, 245, 251, 3 L. Ed. 2d 270, 79 S. Ct. 245 (1959); United States v. E.I. duPont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 381 (1956). Thus, the issue presented is whether Plaintiff produced adequate evidence to support a jury finding that (1) the goods and services provided by golf trade shows are sufficiently distinct from marketing and distribution alternatives to constitute a relevant product market and (2) that such a market should include only the PGA Orlando Show and Seabury's East Coast Show.

Plaintiff describes the market at issue as the production of golf trade shows for professional golf buyers and their suppliers. Plaintiff further asserts that golf trade shows provide an opportunity for golf manufacturers and distributors to market their equipment and apparel to golf professionals and other buyers for later resale to the general public as well as to introduce new lines of golf equipment and apparel. A significant amount of the concentrated marketing of golf equipment and apparel occurs at golf trade shows. (Daniels Aff. P 4.)

At trial, Plaintiff presented evidence distinguishing golf trade shows from other alternative methods of marketing and distributing [*780] golf equipment and apparel, including direct mail, door-to-door and catalog sales. Besides having the [19] advantage of gathering together multiple retailers under one roof, golf trade shows offer a wide variety of "services," including business seminars, product demonstrations, apparel fashion shows, meeting opportunities and the ability to "network." See Martin Tr. at 24-26, 176; Maxwell Tr. at 19-20; Larner Tr. at 66-70. Thus, the package of products and collateral services present at a golf trade show is different from and appeals to buyers in a manner distinct from the sale of the various individual products when sold separately.

This Court does not believe that Plaintiff's evidence on the relevant market would have been inadequate to establish a relevant market including golf trade shows, and maybe even golf trade shows over a certain size (appropriately defined). Certainly, a level of expertise is needed in producing trade shows, whether it is for golf or any other sport, and the evidence establishes that trade shows provide sufficient collateral services that manufacturers and distributors desire to participate in these shows despite alternative channels of distribution.⁸ In fact, at least one other court has accepted a market definition as the production/sponsorship of an [20] industry trade show. See Expoconsul Int'l, Inc. v. A/E Systems, Inc., 711 F. Supp. 730 (S.D.N.Y. 1989) (building design and construction industry; accepting market definition without discussion). Accordingly, the Court finds that Plaintiff, as a matter of law and under the standard for a new trial, has established the relevant product market definition as golf trade shows.

However, [21] Plaintiff has sought to narrow the relevant market very substantially in order establish its monopolization claims. Seabury contends that the golf trade show market for purposes of its suit should be limited to the PGA's Orlando Show and Seabury's East Coast Show. Plaintiff's expert, Dr. Martin, excluded at least fifteen sectional golf trade shows as well as the International Golf Show ("the West Coast Show") in arriving at his market definition. Because Plaintiff has failed to produce sufficient evidence to justify excluding these regional and national golf shows, all of which provide the collateral services Plaintiff points to as distinguishing golf trade shows from other methods of marketing and distribution, the Defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

Apart from Dr. Martin's often conclusory and factually unsubstantiated opinions, Plaintiff has come forward with no evidence to support the exclusions. As the Supreme Court recently noted:

HN12[When an expert opinion is not supported by sufficient facts to validate it in the eyes of the law, or when indisputable record facts contradict or otherwise render the opinion unreasonable, it cannot support a jury verdict [22] Expert testimony is useful as a guide to interpreting market facts, but is not a substitute for them.

Brook Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., U.S. , 113 S. Ct. 2578, 2598 (1993).

With regard to the sectional shows, some of Dr. Martin's statements are simply conclusory pronouncements. See Martin Tr. at 19.⁹ [23] When Dr. Martin did attempt to offer reasons for excluding sectional shows as ineffective competitors he was merely expressing his personal, unsubstantiated opinion.¹⁰ In [*781] short, Plaintiff submitted no evidence on the number of booths, volume of sales or other indicia of the size and scope of sectional shows (i.e., exhibitor/attendee lists) that would support the conclusion that sectional shows are not effective competitors in the golf trade show market.¹¹

⁸ The PGA's exhibitor waiting list evidences manufacturers' and distributors' desire to participate in golf trade shows despite the fact that booth prices, which continued to increase every year, were thought to be "very expensive." Vincent Tr. at 62. Notably, both the PGA Orlando Show and the West Coast Show are able to maintain extensive waiting lists, despite complaints by exhibitors of "price gouging." Pl.'s Ex. 226. This evidence tends to show that pricing at golf trade shows is inelastic and that the booth prices charged by the PGA have no real effect upon demand, facts which support a finding of a relevant product market.

⁹ "They're not really effective competitors, effective in the sense that they really don't provide the kind of competition to the large national and regional shows that the kind of competition that would cause those other shows to do -- to act differently because the sectional shows are around."

¹⁰ For example, Dr. Martin opined that PGA rules limiting sectional shows to their boundaries meant that such shows "really service the exhibitors that are . . . located within [those] boundaries and the employees that are located within the boundaries," and that sectional shows are therefore, much smaller operations. Martin Tr. at 19-20. Dr. Martin, however, referred to no evidence in support of his conclusion.

¹¹ In fact, the only concrete evidence on this issue contradicts Dr. Martin. See Maxwell Tr. at 60 (testifying that would not be surprised if show conducted by the Pacific Northwest Section had just as many exhibitors and buyers of the East Coast Show), 61 (stating that North and South Texas Show "certainly draws very good attendance with respect to attendees and manufacturers.").

Dr. Martin's exclusion of the West Coast Show suffers from the same infirmities. When asked to give his reasons for excluding the West Coast Show from the relevant market, Dr. Martin testified that "the record really shows -- the evidence really shows that it doesn't -- that it doesn't compete." [\[24\]](#) Id. at 21; see also id. (stating that the West Coast Show "does not attract people, that is, attract buyers, in any significant numbers from the East Coast."). However, apart from deposition testimony from Mr. Sandefur that "he doesn't believe it does compete," id., neither Dr. Martin nor Plaintiff cites to anything (attendance lists, surveys, etc.) that would provide an adequate evidentiary basis for Dr. Martin's opinion that the West Coast Show should be excluded from the market.

Furthermore, undisputed testimony from other witnesses contradicts and renders unreasonable Dr. Martin's opinion that the sectional shows and the West Coast Show do not compete with the PGA Orlando Show and Seabury's East Coast Show. Robert Maxwell of the Marriott Corporation, a frequent participant in golf trade shows, testified that "section shows, the East Coast show, the West Coast Show, Orlando Show, they all compete with one another for the attention of professionals to come and buy." Maxwell Tr. at 61. Maxwell also noted that he went to some sectional shows, including the North and South Texas Show. Id. James Vincent, national sales manager for Cobra Golf, testified that he attended [\[25\]](#) over 100 golf shows yearly, and "over the years, the more successful shows in the northwest, truthfully the West Coast Show . . . , Denver, Salt Lake City, Dallas, New York, Boston, Florida, show in Carolina, so on a national basis, certainly." Vincent Tr. at 12. Even Seabury seemed to think that it was in competition with such shows, as indicated by its mailing to 2,000 golf industry executives advertising Seabury's first show, which stated: "You will no longer have to exhibit at several regional shows." Pl.'s Ex. 26.

Thus, because Dr. Martin's opinion that the sectional shows and West Coast Show should be excluded from the market is not supported by sufficient, much less any evidence, and since substantial record evidence provided by actual participants in the golf trade show market contradicts it, Dr. Martin's opinion that the market should include only the PGA Orlando Show and Seabury's East Coast Show cannot support a jury verdict.

The absence of an adequate market definition makes it impossible to approximate the PGA's share of the relevant market, the first step in any antitrust analysis under § 2.¹² See White v. Rockingham Radiologists, Ltd., 820 F.2d 98, 104 (4th Cir. [\[26\]](#) 1987) (HN13[↑]) to prove monopolization, plaintiff must show that defendant possesses monopoly power in relevant market). Consequently, the Defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law on Counts 4, 5, 6, 9, 10 and 11.

2. Copperweld

The second element of a § 2 Sherman Act claim requires Plaintiff to prove that [\[*782\]](#) the Defendants exercised monopoly power [\[27\]](#) to exclude Seabury from the relevant market. However, as this Court acknowledged at the summary judgment stage, it is not an exercise of monopoly power to actively protect the licensing and use of a properly-registered trademark. Memorandum and Order of Dec. 1, 1992, at 13-14; see also Sun Dun, Inc. v. Coca-Cola Co., 740 F. Supp. 381, 393-94 (D. Md. 1990). Thus, any finding of monopolization or attempted monopolization based on the PGA's refusal to license Seabury to use its own trademark is precluded as a matter of law.

Accordingly, at trial Plaintiff contended that the PGA's unlawful exercise of monopoly power consisted of preventing the MAPGA from licensing its "separately registered" trademarks to Seabury. However, the Court's finding that the PGA and the MAPGA are a single economic entity under Copperweld, over which the PGA exercises ultimate control, prevents a finding that the PGA engaged in monopolistic behavior. The MAPGA's trademarks (one of which explicitly references the PGA name and logo) are, given the Copperweld determination, "assets" of the PGA over which the PGA has control. The PGA's action in preventing the MAPGA from licensing its trademarks is thus [28] no more actionable as an antitrust violation than the PGA's refusal to license a PGA trademark. Accordingly, the Defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law on the monopolization and attempted monopolization counts on this alternate ground.

¹² Plaintiff stated at argument on the Defendants' post-trial motion that the issue of whether or not the sectional shows and the West Coast Show should have been included is irrelevant, given that the PGA has market power even if these other shows are included. Plaintiff may be right, although it presented no evidence at argument to support such a bold and significant conclusion. Even so, the fact that Plaintiff submitted no evidence at trial on the size of these other shows or their ownership renders the jury verdict invalid because the jury did not have the opportunity to establish the PGA's market share in a market that included such shows.

E. The Compensatory Damage Award

The jury awarded a total of $ 2.6 million in compensatory damages for all contract and antitrust claims. The Defendants argue that this award should be set aside as a matter of law because Plaintiff did not sufficiently establish damages, in this amount or any other, or, in the alternative, a new trial awarded. The Defendants argue that $ 2.6 million is an inappropriate measure of Seabury's lost value for a business which operated for two years at different dates and locations, had gross revenues decline by 25% in its second year of business and had a loss in its second year of business.¹³

[29] At the outset, the Court notes that the $ 2.6 million figure is grossly excessive. In fact, it is $ 300,000 greater than the highest estimate put forth by Plaintiff's expert.

Plaintiff is correct when it states that HN14 [↑] a jury is permitted to consider all the evidence in the record when calculating damages and that a damage award should not be overturned on the basis of speculation as to the manner in which the jurors arrived at it. However, there must be evidence in the record to support the verdict. See Klein v. Sears, Roebuck and Co., 773 F.2d 1421, 1428 \(4th Cir. 1985\) (trial court may set aside verdict if it is "so excessive that it cannot be justified by anything in the record or of which the court can take judicial notice"); Mid-West Underground Storage, Inc. v. Porter, 717 F.2d 493, 501 \(10th Cir. 1983\) (damage award will be upheld if within the range of evidence admitted); Narcisse v. Illinois C.G.R. Co., 620 F.2d 544, 548 \(5th Cir. 1980\) (verdict upheld because it was "within the universe of possible awards which are supported by the evidence").

At argument, Plaintiff's counsel could not offer any principled explanation as to how the jury could have reached its verdict [30] from the evidence presented to it. The Court, despite its own thorough review of the record, similarly cannot find any basis for the jury's "off the charts" verdict. Because the jury's verdict is not within the "universe of possible awards which are supported by the evidence," it must be set aside.

The Court has considered the possibility of remittitur. However, the Court finds that Plaintiff has failed to establish any amount of damages to a reasonable degree of [*783] certainty, thereby providing no basis for remittitur.

First, Plaintiff's methods for estimating its compensatory damages are insufficient as a matter of law. HN15 [↑] Once liability is established, a reasonable estimate may be used to prove the amount of damage where such a measure is ordinarily difficult. A.W.G. Farms v. Federal Crop Ins. Corp., 757 F.2d 720, 729 \(8th Cir. 1985\). However, Plaintiff has failed to produce evidence showing that any of its methods of calculating damages are reasonable.

The "direct profits" method offered by Plaintiff, involving a disingenuous, manipulative and scientifically unacceptable calculation, generates a meaningless and artificial number, and is thus useless.¹⁴ [32] The ¹³ The Court does not agree with the Defendants' argument that Seabury would be entitled to only the lost profits of the cancelled 1992 East Coast Show. The Defendants reason that the jury's verdict, if left intact, indicates Seabury was entitled to put on a MAPGA-sponsored show in Atlantic City. Then, according to the Defendants, Seabury could still produce the 1993-1995 golf trade shows and has simply abandoned the venture. The contractual relationship, however, has been fundamentally altered and the contract breached. Seabury is entitled to choose its remedy and is not now required to work with the breaching party.

¹⁴ In essence, under this method, Plaintiff's expert, Dr. Rey, arbitrarily subtracted certain expenses, but not others, from the gross revenues of the West Coast Show to come up with that show's "direct profits." The ratio between the price paid by the PGA for the West Coast Show and the Show's "direct profits" generated a multiplier, which Dr. Rey then applied to Seabury's "direct profits," calculated in the same fashion. Given Plaintiff's inability to explain why Dr. Rey left out certain expenses when calculating direct profits, it is apparent that Dr. Rey manipulated the calculations and in fact "invented" the concept of "direct

"discount cash-flow [31] analysis" performed by Plaintiff's expert is also invalid, due to Plaintiff's failure to subtract significant ordinary and necessary operating expenses.¹⁵ And Plaintiff's damage calculation which uses a wholly irrelevant multiple generated from the earnings and stock prices of a publicly-traded company in England (the "Blenheim multiplier") is preposterous.

In arriving at its damage estimate, Plaintiff utilized two other methods, which in turn made use of: (1) an average annual growth rate derived from years seven through thirteen of the West Coast Show and (2) the multiple that the PGA paid the Southern California Section for the West Coast Show when the PGA bought the Show in its thirteenth year of business. The growth rate and/or multiplier was applied to the gross receipts of Seabury's show in 1991, its second year of operation, and to an average of Seabury's 1990 and 1991 gross revenues from the two shows.¹⁶ profits" in order to make Seabury, a corporation showing no net profits, and actually operating at a loss, look like it had a profit. The West Coast Show, no matter which way you calculated it, would always show a profit. Thus, the direct profits calculation produces a meaningless number.

[33] The growth rate derived from the West Coast Show, which excluded the first six, base-building ¹⁷ [34] years of its existence, as well as the multiplier derived from the sale of the second largest golf trade show in the world in its thirteenth year of operation with revenues of over $ 1.5 million, cannot, as a matter of law, be a "reasonably comparable" yardstick ¹⁸ with which to estimate damages for Seabury's two-year operation that had a substantial net loss.¹⁹ The comparison between Seabury's fledgling [*784] business, operating at, if not below the line and the established, profitable operations of the West Coast Show is simply unreasonable.²⁰ [35] Furthermore, the financial data to which the growth rate and multiple were applied do not appear to be correct or consistent.²¹ Consequently, these final two methods offered by Plaintiff to prove its damages are invalid as a matter of law.

¹⁵ At argument, Plaintiff's counsel could not provide a complete list of which expenses were taken into account in the calculation of Seabury's profit forecast and which were not. However, based on those expenses which Plaintiff's counsel conceded were not taken into consideration, it is apparent that the cash-flow analysis is fatally flawed.

¹⁶ The growth rate was also used in the discount cash-flow analysis.

¹⁷ See Maxwell Tr. at 53 (stating that the first six years of the West Coast Show gave it a "fairly stable base" and that there was "no question that [it] . . . became some of the foundation that has made [the West Coast Show] successful").

¹⁸ HN16 Under Maryland law, a plaintiff may use a "yardstick" measure of proving its damages, as long as its assumptions rest on adequate bases and there is a "reasonable compatibility" between the businesses. See Metrix Warehouse, Inc. v. Daimler-Benz Aktiengesellschaft, 828 F.2d 1033, 1044 n.21 (4th Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1017 (1988).

¹⁹ See, e.g., Handley v. Guasco, 165 Cal. App. 2d 703, 332 P.2d 354, 360 (Cal. Dist. Ct. App. 1958) ("To base prospective profits of a business in a completely new location and city upon the experience of an old established business elsewhere would be highly speculative."); Belcher v. Import Cars Ltd., 246 So. 2d 584, 587 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App.) (established car dealership not comparable to new car dealership), cert. denied, 252 So. 2d 801 (Fla. 1971); Evergreen Amusement Corp. v. Milstead, 206 Md. 610, 112 A.2d 901, 904 (Md. 1955) (refusing to permit plaintiff to establish damages for start-up period by using profits that same business earned in later period); Plummer v. Fogley, 363 P.2d 238, 242 (Okla. 1961) (cannot compare experienced business to inexperienced business).

²⁰ Plaintiff claims in attempting to establish comparability that Seabury and the West Coast Show operating with comparable profits margins. However, in support of this claim, Plaintiff compares its "direct profits" from the 1991 East Coast Show, which as previously noted fail to take into account significant expenses, with the West Coast Show's actual profits. Seabury had no net profits from the 1991 Show, and in fact lost between $ 20,000 and $ 75,000 that year. It is thus clear that Plaintiff's claim regarding the comparability of the East and West Coast Shows' profit margins is incredible.

²¹ The Court also notes that using the multiple paid for the West Coast Show in its thirteenth year of operation would generate an inaccurate damage number. If usable at all, the multiple should have been discounted for one year given that the Seabury contract was only for five years and the multiple derived from the West Coast Show's thirteenth year is six years from the date from which calculation of the growth rate began.

Even if the Court were to ignore Plaintiff's proffered calculations, given the financial information in the record regarding Plaintiff's operations, any attempt to estimate Plaintiff's projected profits, much less whether Seabury would ever realize profits under the Contract, or the value of Seabury's business as a going concern would require that the Court improperly engage in speculation and conjecture.²² Between the 1990 and 1991 shows, Seabury's exhibitors declined from 269 to 193 and gross revenues declined from $ 399,000 to $ 293,000. (Rey Tr. at 79.) Seabury, as a corporation, experienced a loss of $ 136,000 in 1989. And, financial statements for 1991 show that [36] Seabury as a corporation had a loss of $ 32,000. (Id. at 83, 89.) There is simply no basis for concluding that Seabury would have realized any profits had the MAPGA not breached the contract and even if it would, what they would be. Nor is it possible to estimate Seabury's "going concern" value from the evidence produced.

The jury's $ 2.6 million verdict cannot be justified by anything in the record. Consequently, it must be set aside. In addition, because Plaintiff is unable to point to any valid method of calculating damages or to any evidence in the record which would support a reasonable estimate of damages, there is no basis for remittitur. In [37] short, Plaintiff has failed to satisfy its burden of establishing any damages with "reasonable certainty."²³ Accordingly, the Defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law.²⁴

[38] F. The Punitive Damage Award

Although convinced that the Defendants were entitled to judgment as a matter of law [*785] on Seabury's punitive damages claim, the Court permitted the issue to be presented to the jury as a matter of judicial economy.²⁵ At trial, the jury awarded Seabury $ 4.8 million in punitive damages.

In this case, the tort of intentional interference with a contractual relationship was the only asserted predicate for Seabury's punitive damages claim. The parties stipulated that the PGA would be liable for any damages awarded against the MAPGA. Accordingly, it was not necessary to submit a jury question regarding the tort itself. For, the compensatory damages for the tort would, inevitably, be the same as the damages for the breach of contract. [39] And, because of the stipulation, it was not necessary to establish the commission of the tort to hold the PGA liable for those compensatory damages. Therefore, as a procedural matter, the instructions regarding the tort were subsumed in the instructions and question regarding punitive damages.

²² See, e.g., LaVay Corp. v. Dominion Federal Savings & Loan Ass'n, 830 F.2d 522, 529 (4th Cir. 1987) ("Damages may not be awarded . . . where an award would be based on an estimate of lost profits which is speculative.") (citing Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 352 (1979), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 1065, 98 L. Ed. 2d 991, 108 S. Ct. 1027 (1988)).

²³ See John D. Copanos & Sons v. McDade Rigging & Steel Erection Co., Inc., 43 Md. App. 204, 206, 403 A.2d 402, 404-05 (1979); United States Life Ins. Co. v. Mechanics and Farmers Bank, 685 F.2d 887, 895-96 (4th Cir. 1982).

²⁴ Finally, although the jury's finding that the Defendants breached the Contract might permit an award in the amount of $ 1.00 as nominal compensatory damages, the Court's doubts concerning the propriety of setting damages by granting judgment as a matter of law compels it to exercise its discretion and deny Plaintiff nominal damages. If a $ 1.00 nominal damage award were to be viewed by the appellate court as a remittitur of damages, the Court would be required to offer Plaintiff the option of a new trial on damages. See Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp. v. Jacobson, 644 F. Supp. 1240, 1263 & n.16 (N.D. Ill. 1986) (setting aside compensatory damage award of $ 3 million and entering judgment in favor of plaintiff for $ 1.00 as nominal damages; however, offering option of remittitur/new trial should appellate court conclude that it is improper to set damages by granting JNOV), aff'd in part, rev'd in part, 827 F.2d 1119 (7th Cir. 1987) (not addressing issue), cert. denied, 485 U.S. 993 (1988). Because Plaintiff has utterly failed to prove that it sustained any damage as a result of the Defendants' breach or the extent of any such damage, a new trial on damages would be fruitless. Accordingly, the Court finds that Plaintiff's failure to establish any amount of damages requires that the jury verdict be set aside in its entirety and judgment entered in favor of the Defendants as a matter of law that there were no damages at all.

²⁵ The jury might have resolved the issue for the Defendants. Since it did not, in the event that the appellate court concludes that this Court should not have given the Defendants judgment as a matter of law, a new trial might not be necessary.

In analyzing the verdict to see if the punitive damages verdict can stand, it is necessary to determine whether the jury properly could find that the tort had been committed and that the standards for punitive damages had been met. As discussed below, the Court concludes that the jury properly could have found neither. That is, by virtue of the qualified privilege, discussed below, the tort was not committed. Moreover, even if the tort had been committed, Seabury has failed to establish the malice necessary to sustain a punitive damages award.

1. Tortious Interference - Qualified Privilege

HN17 A parent corporation has a privilege to interfere to protect its economic interests absent clear evidence that the parent employed wrongful means or acted with an improper purpose.²⁶ [41] To determine whether interference in a given case is proper, the court must examine a number of factors and decide [40] "whether, upon consideration of the relative significance of the factors involved, the conduct should be permitted without liability, despite its effect of harm to another." Restatement (Second) of Torts § 767 cmt. b (1979). Those factors include "(a) the nature of the actor's conduct, (b) the nature of the expectancy with which his conduct interferes, (c) the relations between the parties, (d) the interest sought to be advanced by the actor and (e) the social interests in protecting the expectancy on the one hand and the actor's freedom of action on the other hand." Id. The Court finds that the PGA and the MAPGA are in a relationship which was effectively that of a parent corporation and its subsidiary and that the PGA's actions were proper and within the scope of the qualified privilege.²⁷

There has been no suggestion that the PGA used any improper means to get the MAPGA to breach its contract with Seabury. Seabury has, however, argued that the PGA acted with the improper purpose of "taking Seabury out." (Seabury's Resp. to Defs.' Post-Trial Mot. at 32, 36.)

The Court finds, that while the parties may dislike each other, the PGA acted to protect its business interests. The PGA had a long-standing policy not to allow its sections to license their names, initials and/or logos or to otherwise endorse third-party services or products without PGA approval and also required [42] sections to sponsor events within their territorial boundaries. See, e.g., [*786] Pl.'s Ex. 83 ("Section entered into an agreement that is both illegal and in violation of PGA policy. This must be corrected. There is no way to correct this as long as Seabury owns the Show. The PGA is not interested in providing a third party with the use of its logo or initials to conduct a Show."); Pl.'s Ex. 91 ("We agree that it would have been in the best interests of the Association and our Members if the Section had approached us about the proposal rather than entering into an agreement with a third party without our knowledge. Rather than focusing on why this happened, however, we agreed to pursue a remedy that would be in everyone's best interests.").

The PGA was entitled to approve or disapprove the actions of its sections and to enforce the Section Guidelines to make sure that the goals of the PGA as a whole were furthered. The PGA simply required the MAPGA to follow the Section Guidelines and to abide by the PGA's interpretation of the contract. The evidence consistently indicates that the PGA, and many officials of the MAPGA, understood the contract to require Seabury to hold the East Coast [43] Show within the MAPGA's boundaries while Seabury believed otherwise. See Majewski Tr. at 28-29 (MAPGA President when the contract was signed); Pl.'s Ex. 74 (Rod Thompson's statement); Pl.'s Ex. 161; Pl.'s Ex. 162. While the result of this understanding was a breach of contract by the MAPGA, this action does not simply turn into a tort action because the PGA, as was its right, directed the MAPGA to breach its contract with Seabury.

²⁶ "Commonly included among improper means are violence, threats or intimidations, deceit or misrepresentation, bribery or defamation." Chase v. Weight, Civ. No. 87-570- FR, 1988 WL 107051, *2 (D. Or. Oct. 12, 1988) (citations omitted). None of the improper means are at issue in this case.

²⁷ The Court previously determined, as part of its antitrust analysis, that the PGA and the MAPGA are part of a single economic unit with the PGA having the ultimate control over the MAPGA's actions. A finding that two entities are unable to conspire under the antitrust laws, however, does not require a finding that one cannot interfere with the contractual relationship of the other. The relationship between the two though, may afford the "parent" a privilege to interfere with the contracts of its "subsidiaries."

In short, the PGA cannot be held to have interfered with the contracts of the MAPGA because the PGA was entitled to approve or disapprove of contract actions taken by the MAPGA. Having discovered that the MAPGA entered into an agreement against the PGA's best interests and that this agreement was approved by Dan Daniels immediately prior to his employment with Seabury, the PGA was entitled to instruct MAPGA, as a subordinate unit, to break its contract. The PGA acted with the confines of the qualified privilege a parent organization may exert over a subsidiary to protect its own financial interests and did not engage in tortious behavior. See Canderm Pharmacal, Ltd. v. Elder Pharmaceuticals Inc., 862 F.2d 597 (8th Cir. 1988) (holding that a parent [44] corporation was, in effect, the same entity as its subsidiary and was, therefore, privileged to become involved in the relations between the subsidiary and a third party).²⁸

2. Clear and Convincing Proof of Actual Malice

Even if the tort had been established, the evidence does not permit a punitive damages award. The punitive damage standards have been recently articulated in Owens-Illinois, Inc. v. Zenobia, 325 Md. 420, 601 A.2d 633 (1992) and Schaefer v. Miller, 322 Md. 297, 319-20, 587 A.2d 491, 502-02 (1991). [45]²⁹ [46] "HN18↑" In a tort case where punitive damages are permitted, in order to obtain such an award a plaintiff must prove actual malice or its legal equivalent." Schaefer, 587 A.2d at 492. With regard to interference with contractual relations, the tort at issue in this case, under Maryland law, the plaintiff must establish the existence of actual malice for there to be an award of punitive damages. Id. at 501. "Actual or express malice ... has been characterized as the performance of an act without legal justification or excuse, but with an evil or rancorous motive influenced by hate, the purpose being to deliberately and willfully injure the plaintiff." Id. at 492-93.³⁰ As "in any tort case a plaintiff must [*787] establish by clear and convincing evidence the basis for an award of punitive damages." Zenobia, 601 A.2d at 657 (emphasis in original).

In the present case, Seabury did not establish actual malice under the clear and convincing evidence standard. The evidence at trial consistently indicated that the PGA, and many officials of the MAPGA, simply held a different contract interpretation than did Seabury and understood the contract to require Seabury to hold the East Coast Show within MAPGA boundaries while Seabury believed otherwise. See Majewski Tr. at 28-29 (MAPGA President when the contract was signed); Pl.'s Ex. 74 (Rod Thompson's statement); Pl.'s Ex. 161; Pl.'s Ex. 162.³¹ In fact, Plaintiff's Exhibit 152 indicates that the PGA sought legal advice from both in-house and outside legal counsel before taking the position that the contract with Seabury contemplated [47] a show within the MAPGA's territorial boundaries. While the evidence indicates that the PGA was aware of a dispute over contractual interpretation and may have disliked Seabury management, a difference in interpretation alone is insufficient to establish actual malice

²⁸ Contrary to Plaintiff's assertion at argument, the parent/subsidiary privilege has been held applicable to tortious interference with an existing contract, and is not limited to interference with prospective business relations. See Canderm, 862 F.2d 597; MNC Commercial v. Park Jensen Co., Civ. No. HAR-90-1055, 1991 WL 74137 (D. Md. 1991) (permitting secured creditor to interfere with debtor's existing contracts); Bendix Corp. v. Adams, 610 P.2d 24, 29-30 (Ala. 1980).

²⁹ Zenobia articulated the relevant legal standards for the award of punitive damages in non-intentional tort cases and cited with approval Schaefer for the standards applicable to intentional tort cases, such as tortious interference with contract. Zenobia, 601 A.2d at n.21.

³⁰ The Defendants argue that Seabury had to prove that "the PGA actually knew that Seabury had the contractual right to have its 1992 or subsequent trade shows in Atlantic City." (Defs.' Mot. for J. As A Matter of Law Or, In the Alternative, for A New Trial at 30-31.) This is not the standard applicable to a punitive damage award in an intentional tort action.

³¹ Plaintiff did introduce a December 1991, letter from MAPGA President Holley to Mr. Awtrey asserting that the contract did not place any limits on Seabury's right to select the show location. This evidence is contradicted by: (1) a letter written by MAPGA counsel Nemeroff one year earlier stating that "the contract clearly contemplates a show within the geographical boundaries of the MAPGA," Pl.'s Ex. 73; and (2) Mr. Awtrey's response to Mr. Holley's letter stating the PGA's disagreement with Mr. Holley's conclusions, which were based on legal advice received by the PGA. Pl.'s Ex. 152.

under the clear and convincing standard. HN19³² A basic but justified disagreement regarding the terms of the contract does not support an award of punitive damages.³²

[48] Furthermore, much of Seabury's evidence in support of its actual malice claim is ambiguous and can just as easily support a finding that the PGA was acting to protect its own business interests.³³ Actions taken to protect one's legitimate economic or business interests does not constitute proof of actual malice. See, e.g., Glass Design Imports, Inc. v. Import Specialties, 867 F.2d 1139, 1144 \(8th Cir. 1989\) ("Legal malice for purposes of imposition of punitive damages arises when there is intentional doing of a wrongful act without just cause or excuse."); Composite Marine Propellers v. Van Der Woude, 962 F.2d 1263, 1268 \(7th Cir. 1992\) (reversing punitive award and noting the "uncharitable" and "unforgiving" nature of competition). The Court does not find the evidence adequate to support a punitive damages award.

[49] G. Legal Fees and Costs

Paragraph 9 of the Contract provides, in relevant part, that in the event any action or proceeding is brought by either party against the other party under this Agreement, the prevailing party shall be entitled to recover the court [*788] costs and fees of its attorney in such action or proceeding . . . in such amount as the court may adjudge [sic] reasonable as attorney's fees.

Consequently, since Seabury has "prevailed" on its breach of contract claim against the Defendants, it is entitled to the court costs and reasonable attorney's fees incurred in prosecuting its breach of contract action.

IV. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, Defendants' Motion for Judgment as a Matter of Law, or in the Alternative, for New Trial is GRANTED IN PART AND DENIED IN PART:

1. The Defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law with regard to all Counts except Count 1.
2. The Defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law with respect to the absence of any compensatory damages associated with Count 1.

3. The Plaintiff is entitled to recover its fees and expenses incurred in regard to the breach of contract. [50]
 - a. The parties shall make a good faith effort to stipulate to the amount of such fees.

³² HN20³² It is well settled law in Maryland that punitive damages may not be awarded in a pure breach of contract action. Schaefer, 587 A.2d at 492.

³³ For example, Pl.'s Ex. 80 states:

- 1) First choice of PGA of America - terminate contract between MAPGA and Seabury at all costs. Described as thermo nuclear!
- 2) Show can continue in our Section. We can use any logo and PGA will approve a licensing agreement for Seabury to use our logo (PGA of America).
- 3) Show can go on in Atlantic City, NJ in 1991 with no logos or reference to PGA (Seabury alone)

While this document indicates that there were hostile feelings between the PGA and Seabury, it also is ambiguous enough to indicate that the PGA was concerned with protecting its trademarks and making sure these marks were not used in conjunction with events violating the PGA Section guidelines. See also Dickey Tr. at 56-57 (where Dickey testified that Mr. Awtrey "was going to try to take the show out" but never discussed how this was to happen or the basis for this statement); Anderson Tr. at 31-32 (discussing Mr. Awtrey's desire to "take out" competition without directing that desire towards any one entity); Pl.'s Ex. 83 (where discussion indicated that the show would be better business for the Defendants if there was no third party involvement: "Q: Can we live with Seabury involvement through 1991 or 1992? A: No; however, probably could if we owned show. Makes much more sense for them to leave.").

- b. Any such stipulation shall be without prejudice to any party's appellate rights with regard to any other issues.
- c. Absent a stipulation as to the amount of fees/costs by May 15, 1994, counsel for Plaintiff shall arrange a telephone conference with the Court to schedule the ADR or trial procedures to be utilized to resolve the amount of fees/costs to be awarded.
- d. Please note that in the absence of a stipulation/settlement, there should be no disclosure to the Court of the settlement positions of either side as to the amount to be awarded.

SO ORDERED this 25th day of April, 1994.

Marvin J. Garbis

United States District Judge

End of Document

Yeager's Fuel v. Pennsylvania Power & Light Co.

United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit

July 21, 1994, Argued ; April 26, 1994, Filed

No. 93-1098

Reporter

22 F.3d 1260 *; 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 9150 ; 1994-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,576

YEAGER'S FUEL, INC.; ATLANTIC OIL AND HEATING COMPANY; MANSFELD FUEL OIL COMPANY; DEITER BROTHERS FUEL COMPANY, INC.; RALPH D. WEAVER, INC.; C.A. LESSIG, INC.; HARNED DURHAM OIL COMPANY, INC.; SCHWANGER BROTHERS & COMPANY, INC.; SICO COMPANY; WITHLOCK & WOERTH, INC.; ZONGORA FUEL, INC.; SENICK, INC.; CARLOS R. LEFFLER, INC.; H. JOHN DAVIS, INC.; ARTHUR J. ULRICH, INC.; UNION FUEL COMPANY; GUY HEAVENER, INC.; DESOUZA OIL AND SERVICE CORP.; W. C. REICHENBACH & SONS, INC.; APGAR OIL COMPANY, INC.; FREYMAN'S FUEL OIL COMPANY, INC. v. PENNSYLVANIA POWER & LIGHT COMPANY, (D.C. Civil No. 91-05176); LOSCH BOILER SALES AND SERVICE CO., Individually and on Behalf of All Persons Similarly Situated v. PENNSYLVANIA POWER & LIGHT CO., (D.C. Civil No. 92-02359); Yeager's Fuel, Inc.; Atlantic Oil and Heating Company, Mansfeld Fuel Oil Company; Deiter Brothers Fuel Company, Inc.; Ralph D. Weaver, Inc.; C.A. Lessig, Inc.; Harned Durham Oil Company; Schwanger Brothers and Company, Inc.; SICO Company; Whitlock & Woerth, Inc.; Zongora Fuel, Inc.; Senick, Inc.; Carlos R. Leffler, Inc.; H. John Davis, Inc.; Arthur J. Ulrich, Inc.; Union Fuel Company; Guy Heavener, Inc.; Desousa Oil and Service Corp.; W. C. Reichenbach & Sons, Inc.; Apgar Oil Company, Inc.; and Freyman's Fuel Oil Company, Inc.; and Losch Boiler Sales & Service Co., individually and on behalf of all persons similarly situated, Appellants.

Subsequent History: Panel Rehearing Denied June 6, 1994, Reported at: 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 14603.

Prior History: [\[*1\]](#) APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA. D.C. Civil No. 91-05176 and 92-02359

Core Terms

immunity, Dealers, Oil, state action, Bureau, programs, district court, development agreement, state policy, all-electric, load, heating, electric, energy conservation, regulations, developers, summary judgment, supervised, antitrust liability, anticompetitive, articulated, merits, rates, challenged activity, anti trust law, light bulb, electric utility, tariff, electric heat, offering

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN1 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The United States Supreme Court has refused to impose antitrust liability for state action because nothing in the language of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, or its history suggests that its purpose was to restrain a state or its officers or agents from activities directed by its legislature. Since then, state action immunity from antitrust liability -- the doctrine that federal antitrust laws are subject to supersession by state regulatory programs -- has evolved based upon the principle of freedom of action for the states, adopted to foster and preserve the federal system. Nevertheless, principles of federalism do not justify a broad interpretation of state action immunity; instead, such an interpretation is disfavored.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Local Governments & Private Parties

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

HN2 Parker State Action Doctrine, Local Governments & Private Parties

Private entities may claim state action immunity if their challenged activity was directed and supervised by the state. Private party conduct is immune from antitrust liability under the state action doctrine only if the party claiming immunity shows that its conduct satisfies two requirements. A state law or regulatory scheme cannot be the basis for antitrust immunity unless, first, the state has articulated a clear and affirmative policy to allow the anticompetitive conduct, and second, the state provides active supervision of anticompetitive conduct undertaken by private actors. There is a close relationship between the two requirements: Both are directed at ensuring that particular anticompetitive mechanisms operate because of a deliberate and intended state policy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > State Regulation

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > Antitrust Immunity

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > Utility Companies

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Cogeneration & Independent Companies > Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act > General Overview

HN3 Energy & Utilities, State Regulation

The fact that the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act (PURPA), 16 U.S.C.S. § 2601 et seq., does not affect the applicability of the antitrust laws cannot mean that PURPA reserves only antitrust liability but not antitrust defenses.

PURPA's plain statutory language establishes that it is to have no effect on the applicability of the state action doctrine to gas and electric utilities.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > Immunity

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

HN4 [down] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

State action immunity is an affirmative defense.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN5 [down] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

A state policy need not be aimed at restraining competition for a person acting pursuant to that policy to be immune from antitrust liability. The United States Supreme Court has stated: We have rejected the contention that this requirement can be met only if the delegating statute explicitly permits the displacement of competition. It is enough, the court has held, if suppression of competition is the foreseeable result of what the statute authorizes. Accordingly, to satisfy the clear articulation requirement, a defendant need only show that the legislature contemplated the kind of action complained of.

Energy & Utilities Law > Energy Conservation > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > Public Utility Commissions > General Overview

HN6 [down] Energy & Utilities Law, Energy Conservation

See 66 Pa. Cons. Stat. Ann. § 524\(a\)\(3\).

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > Public Utility Commissions > General Overview

HN7 [down] Regulators, Public Utility Commissions

See 66 Pa. Cons. Stat. Ann. § 524\(d\).

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > Public Utility Commissions > Authorities & Powers

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > Public Utility Commissions > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > ... > Public Utility Commissions > Authorities & Powers > Environmental Oversight

22 F.3d 1260, *1260 (1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 9150, 1

Energy & Utilities Law > Energy Conservation > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > General Overview

HN8 Public Utility Commissions, Authorities & Powers

In Pennsylvania, the Pennsylvania Public Utilities Commission (PUC) has been entrusted with full power and authority to enforce, execute and carry out, by its regulations, orders, or otherwise, the provisions of the Code and the full intent thereof. The PUC has the authority to evaluate the prudence and cost-effectiveness of utilities' energy conservation and load management programs.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

HN9 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

A private defendant reasonably relying on apparently lawful government action should not be deprived of state action immunity if the government later reverses its position.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN10 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Actual state involvement, not deference to private anticompetitive activity under the general auspices of state law, is the precondition for immunity from federal law. Immunity is conferred out of respect for ongoing regulation by the state, not out of respect for the economics of the challenged activity. It is this active supervision prong of the state action immunity test which prevents states from "casting a gauzy cloak of state involvement over what is essentially private anticompetitive activity." "The active supervision prong requires that state officials have and exercise power to review particular anticompetitive acts of private parties and disapprove those that fail to accord with state policy."

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > Monopolization

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN11 Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

The United States Supreme Court has stated that a nonmovant who will bear the burden of proof at trial must go beyond the pleadings in order to survive a motion for summary judgment, even when the moving party has not produced evidence to support its motion. However, as the Court also recognized: Of course, a party seeking summary judgment always bears the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its motion, and identifying those portions of the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, which it believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact.

Counsel: David L. Pennington, Esquire, Catherine P. Cox, Esquire, Harvey, Pennington, Herting & Renneisen, 1835 Market Street, Eleven Penn Center, 29th Floor, Philadelphia, PA 19103, Attorneys for Appellants.

Wayne M. Thomas, Esquire (ARGUED), Kohn, Nast & Graf, 1101 Market Street, 24th Floor, Philadelphia, PA 19107, Attorney for Appellant.

Losch Boiler, Sales & Service Co., Christopher C. Fennell, Esquire, Jeffrey H. Howard, Esquire (ARGUED), Crowell & Moring, 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W. Washington, DC 20004-2505, Attorneys for Appellee.

Thomas L. Welch, Esquire, 14th Floor, Office of Attorney General of Pennsylvania, Strawberry Square, Harrisburg, PA 17120, Attorney for Amicus-appellant, Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

Judges: BEFORE: MANSMANN, GREENBERG and LEWIS, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: LEWIS

Opinion

[*1262] OPINION OF THE COURT

LEWIS, Circuit Judge.

This appeal involves two related cases that were consolidated for summary judgment [*1263] disposition in the district court. In the first case, *Yeager's [2] Fuel, Inc. v. Pennsylvania Power & Light Co., 21 oil dealers and persons who supply related heating equipment sued Pennsylvania Power & Light Co. ("PP&L") alleging violations of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2; section 2\(c\) of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13\(c\); section 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 14; and section 1962\(c\) of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(c\). In the second case, Losch Boiler Sales & Service Co. v. PP&L, a fuel oil company which supplies and installs heating equipment brought a class action lawsuit against PP&L alleging violations of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act; sections 2 and 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 13, 13a; section 3 of the Clayton Act; and state law claims of unfair competition and civil conspiracy.

We agree with the district court that PP&L is immune from antitrust liability for offering builders and developers cash grants and other incentives, and for offering consumers [*3] a special electric rate for installation of high-efficiency electric heating systems. However, we also conclude that PP&L is not immune from antitrust liability to the extent it made these offers contingent upon "all-electric development agreements." Therefore, we will affirm the judgment of the district court except as to the plaintiffs' allegations that PP&L provided benefits to builders and developers in exchange for entry into all-electric development agreements. As to those allegations, we will reverse and remand so that the case may proceed to trial on both those claims and the Losch plaintiffs' state-law claims.

I.

Defendant/appellee PP&L is an electric utility servicing Allentown, Pennsylvania and surrounding areas. In addition to providing the Allentown area with electricity, PP&L competes with the plaintiffs (the "Oil Dealers") and others for customers in the residential heating market in Allentown and surrounding areas. Because of the costs associated with converting from one type of home heating system to another, the most intense competition is in the new construction market. See Losch complaint ("Losch") P 22, appendix ("app.") at 1040.

According to the Oil [4] Dealers' complaints, PP&L began promoting the use of electric heat pumps as conservation devices for use in new homes in the late 1970s. Yeager's amended complaint ("Yeager's") P 26, app. at 9. To encourage builders and developers to use electric heat pumps, PP&L offered them cash incentives for each new home in which an electric heat pump was installed. Yeager's PP 28-29, app. at 10; Losch P 15, app. at 1038; see app. at 1265-66, 4184-85. PP&L also provided builders and developers with other benefits by, for example, subsidizing developers' advertising efforts and paying for the installation of high-efficiency electric heat in model homes. See, e.g., app. at 4173, 4176. Although not specifically alleged in the Oil Dealers' complaints, PP&L apparently included in some of its incentive offers provisions such as the following:

Developer must agree that the entire development will consist of only electrically heated units during the term of this Agreement. Completion of a non-electrically heated unit shall void this Agreement and the System grants for future units in the development will revert to whatever applicable program, if any, is in effect at the [5] time.

App. at 1265. See Yeager's P 29, app. at 10. See also app. at 4177, 4185. (We will refer to agreements containing clauses such as this as "all-electric development agreements.")¹

[*1264] PP&L also offered reduced electric rates for a limited time to persons purchasing "Four-Star" homes equipped with electric [6] heat pumps and residential off-peak thermal heating ("RTS") systems.² Yeager's P 31, app. at 11; Losch PP 18-19, app. at 1038-39. RTS systems promote load management³ by heating water during off-peak hours (times during which the demand for electricity is at the lowest) and storing it for use during peak hours (times of highest demand). PP&L offered a special rate (the "RTS Rate") to homeowners purchasing homes with these units because RTS systems are more expensive than electric baseboard heating.

[7] The Oil Dealers allege that PP&L approached builders and developers about these programs and incentives shortly after receiving requests from them to provide electricity during construction. Losch P 15, app. at 1038. Thus, the Oil Dealers contend that PP&L is using its status as the sole provider of electricity in the Allentown area to monopolize the home heating market in that area. Losch P 25, app. at 1042. As support for this allegation, they allege that more than 70 percent of new homes constructed in the Allentown area since the early 1980s use electric heat rather than oil or other heating systems. Yeager's P 32, app. at 11; Losch P 20, app. at 1039.⁴

¹

Significantly, these agreements require only that all units in the development use electric heat, not that they utilize high-efficiency electric heating systems. Thus, while a builder or developer would not receive a grant for a home using less efficient electric baseboard heating, it would not lose potential grants for other homes in the development by building such a home. Through these agreements then, PP&L made a unit containing inefficient electric baseboard heating preferable to a unit using efficient gas or oil heating systems. The agreements would assist in efforts to "block the entry of fossil fuels, especially gas, into new developments." App. at 1624; see also app. at 4156.

²

It is unclear whether, as alleged in the complaints, a home had to use a high-efficiency heat pump to be designated as a Four-Star home. From the record, it appears that to qualify as a Four-Star home, and thus to receive the reduced rate, a home had to contain an RTS system and energy-efficient appliances. See app. at 1288-89, 3967.

³

Load management is the practice of shifting energy demand, or "load," from peak daytime hours (during which there is usually the most demand) to nighttime (off-peak) hours. App. at 172. By shifting the demand on their generation facilities to off-peak times, electric companies can avoid having to increase their generating capacity to serve all their customers.

⁴

In their brief on appeal, the Oil Dealers also challenge a fourth PP&L practice -- a fossil fuel conversion program pursuant to which PP&L offers cash grants to contractors and homeowners if they replace fossil fuel heating systems with electric heating systems. While the record contains documents to support this allegation, neither the district court's opinion nor [8] PP&L responded to the Oil Dealers' allegations in part by claiming that it was immune from antitrust liability for the challenged activities under the state action immunity doctrine. See Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 (1943). The district court agreed with PP&L and dismissed the Oil Dealers' antitrust claims on this basis.⁵ The Oil Dealers appeal.

II.

We need only address PP&L's state action immunity argument with respect to the RTS Rate and [9] incentive programs which were not offered as part of all-electric development agreements, for PP&L has conceded both in its brief and at oral argument that it does not seek state action immunity for benefits provided to builders and developers pursuant to all-electric development agreements. See PP&L's brief at 41. Instead, PP&L asks us to affirm the district court's grant of summary judgment as to the alleged all-electric development agreements on the merits without resort to the immunity defense. We will first address the state action immunity issue and then turn to PP&L's arguments regarding the all-electric development agreements.

The district court had jurisdiction over this case pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331, 1337 and 15 U.S.C. §§ 15, 26. We exercise jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1291. Our review of a grant of summary judgment is plenary; we evaluate the evidence using the same standard the district court was to [*1265] have applied in reaching its decision. Big Apple BMW, Inc. v. BMW of North America, Inc., 974 F.2d 1358, 1362 (3d Cir. 1992). [10] In this case in particular, we exercise plenary review in any event because the state action immunity issue is a question of law. Ticor Title Insurance Co. v. FTC, 922 F.2d 1122, 1129 (3d Cir. 1991) (Ticor I), rev'd on other grounds, 119 L. Ed. 2d 410, 112 S. Ct. 2169 (1992) (Ticor II, on remand, 998 F.2d 1129 (3d Cir. 1993) (Ticor III), cert. denied, 62 U.S.L.W. 3612, 3623 (March 21, 1994).⁶

In Parker, HN1⁷ the Supreme Court refused to impose antitrust liability for state action because "nothing in the language of the Sherman Act or its history . . . suggests that its purpose was to restrain a state or its officers or agents from activities directed by its legislature." Parker, 317 U.S. at 350-51.⁷ Since [11] then, state action either complaint refers to this practice. See Yeager's Fuel, Inc. v. Pennsylvania Power & Light Co., 804 F. Supp. 700, 702-03 (E.D. Pa. 1992). Because the complaints do not challenge activity other than that associated with new home construction, we will not consider the Oil Dealers' challenge to the alleged conversion program.

5

The court also dismissed the Yeager's plaintiffs' RICO claim for failure to state a claim and the Losch state-law claims pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c)(3) because no federal-law claims remained in the case. The Oil Dealers do not challenge the district court's disposition of the RICO claim on appeal; our disposition of the antitrust claims will result in reversal of the district court's dismissal of the state-law claims in Losch.

6

All citations to Ticor I will be to portions which were not reversed by the Supreme Court.

7

The Supreme Court in Parker thus first articulated the state action immunity doctrine after consulting the text and history of the Sherman Act. Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 351-52, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 (1943). Since Parker, however, when applying the state action immunity doctrine, courts and commentators have not distinguished between antitrust actions based on the Sherman Act and those based on other antitrust statutes. See, e.g., Porter Testing Laboratory v. Board of Regents for Oklahoma Agriculture & Mechanical Colleges, 993 F.2d 768 (10th Cir. 1993); Cine 42nd Street Theater Corp. v. Nederlander Organization, Inc., 790 F.2d 1032, 1039-40 (2d Cir. 1986); I Phillip Areeda & Donald F. Turner, Antitrust Law P 218 (1978). In FTC v. Ticor Title Insurance Co., 119 L. Ed. 2d 410, 112 S. Ct. 2169 (1992), the Supreme Court noted the possibility that state action immunity may not apply to alleged violations of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45(a)(1), but it declined to reach the issue because the parties had not raised it. Similarly, this case involves claims based on antitrust statutes other than the Sherman Act, but the Oil Dealers have not argued that the state action immunity doctrine does not apply to claims asserted under the other statutes. We therefore will not distinguish among the antitrust claims asserted in deciding the state action immunity issue.

immunity from antitrust liability -- "the doctrine that federal antitrust laws are subject to supersession by state regulatory programs" -- has evolved based upon "the principle of freedom of action for the States, adopted to foster and preserve the federal system." Ticor II, 112 S. Ct. at 2176. Nevertheless, principles of federalism do not justify a broad interpretation of state action immunity; instead, such an interpretation is disfavored. Ticor II, 112 S. Ct. at 2178.

[12] Although Parker did not involve private conduct, subsequent caselaw has made it clear that HN2 private entities may claim state action immunity if their challenged activity was directed and supervised by the state. E.g., Ticor II, 119 L. Ed. 2d 410, 112 S. Ct. 2169; Patrick v. Burget, 486 U.S. 94, 100 L. Ed. 2d 83, 108 S. Ct. 1658 (1988); Southern Motor Carriers Rate Conference, Inc. v. United States, 471 U.S. 48, 85 L. Ed. 2d 36, 105 S. Ct. 1721 (1985). "Private party conduct is immune from antitrust liability under the state action doctrine only if the party claiming immunity shows that its conduct satisfies two requirements." Nugget Hydroelectric, L.P. v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 981 F.2d 429, 434 (9th Cir. 1992). See California Retail Liquor Dealers Assoc. v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 105, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233, 100 S. Ct. 937 (1980). "A state law or regulatory scheme cannot be the basis for antitrust immunity [13] unless, first, the State has articulated a clear and affirmative policy to allow the anticompetitive conduct, and second, the State provides active supervision of anticompetitive conduct undertaken by private actors." Ticor II, 112 S. Ct. at 2175. There is a close relationship between the two requirements: "Both are directed at ensuring that particular anticompetitive mechanisms operate because of a deliberate and intended state policy." Id. at 2178.

A.

As a preliminary matter, we must decide whether state action immunity can shield electric utilities from antitrust liability. The Oil Dealers contend that to grant PP&L state action immunity based upon Pennsylvania's statutory scheme would be inconsistent with the Public Utility Regulatory Policies [\[*1266\]](#) Act of 1978, 16 U.S.C. § 2601 et seq. ("PURPA"). PURPA, which the Pennsylvania statutes implement, provides that nothing in it "affects . . . the applicability of the antitrust laws to any electric utility." 16 U.S.C. § 2603\(1\). The Oil Dealers thus argue that it is "totally inconsistent with PURPA to use the Pennsylvania [\[14\]](#) legislation implementing [it] to exempt the utility's conduct from the antitrust laws." Oil Dealers' brief at 23. We disagree.

PURPA's plain language, which indicates that it is not intended to affect antitrust laws as they apply to utility companies, necessarily implies that both theories of liability and defenses apply with full force to utilities. Thus, we agree with the district court's holding that HN3 the fact that PURPA does not "affect the applicability" of the antitrust laws "cannot mean that PURPA reserves only antitrust liability but not antitrust defenses." Yeager's Fuel, Inc. v. Pennsylvania Power & Light Co., 804 F. Supp. 700, 710 (E.D. Pa. 1992). PURPA's plain statutory language "establishes that [it] is to have no effect on the applicability of the state action doctrine to gas and electric utilities." Nugget Hydroelectric, 981 F.2d at 433.

B.

Having concluded that PP&L may assert state action immunity in response to plaintiffs' claims, we must determine which party bears the burden of proving that the doctrine applies. The Oil Dealers argue that PP&L bears the burden because state action immunity is an affirmative [\[15\]](#) defense. PP&L contends that the Oil Dealers bear the burden of showing that state action immunity does not shield the challenged activity from liability because, as plaintiffs, they bear the burden of establishing a cause of action under the antitrust laws.

In Parker, the Supreme Court treated the issue of state action immunity as one of preemption; it did not describe the doctrine as an affirmative defense. Cases since Parker, however, clarify that HN4 state action immunity is an affirmative defense as to which PP&L bears the burden of proof. See Ticor II, 112 S. Ct. at 2172 (state action immunity was "one of the principal defenses" asserted); Town of Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 38-39, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24, 105 S. Ct. 1713 (1985) ("municipalities must demonstrate" that their actions were taken pursuant to state policy to obtain immunity); Patrick, 486 U.S. at 94 ("respondents have not shown . . . the active supervision required to result in state action immunity") (emphasis added); Ticor III, 998 F.2d 1129, 1139 [\[16\]](#) ("The Supreme Court, however, expressly declared that when prices are initially set by private parties, the person claiming immunity must show that the state undertook steps to evaluate the rate setting scheme.") (emphasis added); Nugget Hydroelectric, 981 F.2d at 434 (party claiming immunity must demonstrate that its conduct satisfies requirements of state action immunity). See also Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., 428 U.S. 579, 600, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1141, 96 S. Ct. 3110 (1976) (Stevens, J.) (in a section of the majority opinion which did not represent the opinion of the court, stating, "a claim of immunity or exemption is in the nature of an affirmative defense to conduct which is otherwise assumed to be unlawful").

C.

PP&L thus bears the burden of proof, and first it must demonstrate that it offered its RTS Rate to consumers, and cash grants and other incentives free of all-electric development agreements to builders and developers, pursuant to a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy. Midcal, 445 U.S. at 105; [17] Ticor I, 922 F.2d at 1129. We conclude that it did.

Contrary to the Oil Dealers' contention, HN5 a state policy need not be aimed at restraining competition for a person acting pursuant to that policy to be immune from antitrust liability. In City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 111 S. Ct. 1344, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382 (1991), the Court stated,

We have rejected the contention that this requirement can be met only if the delegating statute explicitly permits the displacement of competition It is enough, we have held, if suppression of [*1267] competition is the "foreseeable result" of what the statute authorizes

Omni, 111 S. Ct. at 1350, quoting Hallie, 471 U.S. at 42.⁸ See also Ticor I, 922 F.2d at 1130-31. Accordingly, to satisfy the clear articulation requirement, a defendant need only show that "the legislature contemplated the kind of action complained of." Hallie, 471 U.S. at 44 [18] (quotation omitted). See also Hancock Industries v. Schaeffer, 811 F.2d 225 (3d Cir. 1987).

PP&L is regulated by the Pennsylvania Public Utilities Commission (the "PUC" or the "Commission"). The PUC is an independent state administrative commission authorized to regulate public utility companies doing business in Pennsylvania. [19] See 66 Pa. Cons. Stat. Ann. §§ 301, 501. Pursuant to its statutory authority, it has directed that utilities such as PP&L consider "conservation, load management, and alternate energy supply products" as alternatives to expanding capacity and cost-reduction measures. 52 Pa. Code § 69.31. See also 52 Pa. Code § 69.34. The Pennsylvania legislature requires each utility to submit annually information concerning its future plans to meet its customer demand, including . . . :

(3) HN6 A year-by-year examination of the potential for promoting and ensuring the full utilization of all practical and economical energy conservation for the next twenty years and a discussion of how existing and planned utility programs do or do not adequately reach this potential. Such programs should include, but not be limited to, educational, audit, loan, rebate, third-party financing and load management efforts to shift load from peak to off-peak periods.

66 Pa. Cons. Stat. Ann. § 524(a)(3).

The Oil Dealers agree that this statutory scheme expresses a state policy in favor of energy conservation and load management but argue that the policy cannot support a claim of immunity because [20] it is at best neutral as to competition. Community Communications Co., Inc. v. City of Boulder, 455 U.S. 40, 55, 70 L. Ed. 2d

8

Omni and Hallie involved immunity of municipalities under the state action immunity doctrine, but the test to be applied in determining whether a state policy can support a claim of immunity is the same for municipalities as it is for private actors. The distinction between the two types of cases lies in the fact that private actors, unlike municipalities, must prove a second proposition -- that their actions were actively supervised by the state -- to obtain immunity for their actions. See Town of Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 46, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24, 105 S. Ct. 1713 (1985).

810, 102 S. Ct. 835 (1982). See also Cantor, 428 U.S. 579, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1141, 96 S. Ct. 3110 (state policy giving a commission power to regulate rates is only neutral as applied to an electric utility's program, approved in rate tariff, to distribute free light bulbs to customers). In fact, the legislature has admonished that

HN7 [↑] Neither the submission to the commission of the information required by subsection (a) or [sic] the issuance by the commission of a report on the information, or anything contained in such reports, or any action taken by the commission as a result of the issuance of such reports, shall be considered or construed as approval or acceptance by the commission of any of the plans, assumptions or calculations made by the public utility and reflected in the information submitted.

66 Pa. Cons. Stat. Ann. § 524(d). Thus, the Oil Dealers argue that Pennsylvania's statutory scheme does nothing more than authorize PP&L's [*21] allegedly anticompetitive activity. If that were the case, PP&L would not be immune from liability for its actions. Omni, 111 S. Ct. at 1353; Parker, 317 U.S. at 351.

State approval of PP&L's activity is not required for immunity to attach, however. Southern Motor Carriers, 471 U.S. at 61 n.23 ("clearly articulated permissive policy" will suffice). Simply accepting the proposition that Pennsylvania did not intend to regulate competition between electric utilities and fossil fuel dealers does not mean that Pennsylvania intended to refrain completely from entanglement in any issue affecting the competitive interaction between the two. As noted previously, the issue in determining whether actions were taken pursuant to a clearly articulated state [*1268] policy is whether the challenged activity is a "foreseeable result" of what the statute authorizes." Omni, 111 S. Ct. at 1350, quoting Hallie, 471 U.S. at 42. [*22] Permitting companies to grant loans or rebates for energy-saving systems could easily be foreseen to provide one company with a competitive advantage over another, whether the other company provides the same or a competing service. Therefore, it is reasonably foreseeable that rebates, loans and other load management programs utilities are required to consider could have anticompetitive effects.

The Oil Dealers respond that PP&L's practices do not represent attempts to engage in energy conservation or load-shifting. Therefore, they argue, even if Pennsylvania's statutory scheme reasonably contemplates anticompetitive effects flowing from rebates and loans offered to further energy conservation and load management, PP&L cannot be immune from liability for engaging in the challenged activities. They contend that the district court engaged in fact-finding -- which, of course, would be impermissible at the summary judgment stage -- when it ruled that PP&L's activities represented energy conservation or load-shifting efforts.

In so arguing, the Oil Dealers misconstrue the court's function when deciding whether a practice was established pursuant to a state policy. The district court did [*23] not engage in fact-finding; rather, in recognizing that state law governs the issue whether Pennsylvania has articulated a state policy favoring PP&L's activities, it merely attempted to predict how the Pennsylvania Supreme Court would rule on that issue by examining and giving deference to PUC findings. See Yeager's Fuel, 804 F. Supp. at 708, citing Ticor I, 922 F.2d at 1132, 1134. We approve of both the manner in which the district court analyzed the issue and the conclusion it reached.

The PUC's Bureau of Conservation, Economics & Energy Planning (the "Bureau"), in response to inquiries from state legislators and outcry from the petroleum industry, examined PP&L's programs in 1989. In an internal report, the Bureau found that PP&L's offering of certain incentives to owners and builders to install high-efficiency electric heating systems in new homes was a legitimate load management program. App. at 1811-12.⁹

9

PP&L apparently did not mention to the Bureau or the PUC that some of these benefits were provided pursuant to all-electric development agreements. See Pennsylvania's amicus brief at 5. Because PP&L does not here contend that benefits given to builders and developers as part of all-electric development agreements merit state action immunity, we need only examine the Bureau's findings as to benefits provided in the absence of such agreements. Therefore, since we are not according immunity to PP&L for activity which may not have been revealed or which may have been misrepresented to the Bureau and the PUC, there is no need either to decide whether PP&L actually misrepresented or omitted certain information when describing its activity to the PUC, or to consider the Oil Dealers' argument that a [24] The Oil Dealers argue that we should not consider the views of a bureau of a state commission to determine state policy. HN8[↑] In Pennsylvania, the PUC has been entrusted with "full power and authority . . . to enforce, execute and carry out, by its regulations, orders, or otherwise, . . . the provisions of [the Code] and the full intent thereof." 66 Pa. Cons. Stat. Ann. § 501\(a\). The PUC has the authority to evaluate the prudence and cost-effectiveness of utilities' energy conservation and load management programs. 66 Pa. Cons. Stat. Ann. § 1319. Clearly, we may accord the PUC's views weight. See Ticor I, 922 F.2d at 1134.

The Bureau, of course, is one step removed from the PUC. The legislature itself, however, in addition to charging the Bureau with conducting studies and research and advising the PUC, has charged the Bureau with "the development of an effective program of energy conservation." 66 Pa. Cons. Stat. Ann. § 308\(c\). In an audit of the PUC, the legislature recognized that the Bureau in part "reviews company plans for new conservation programs and provides feedback to utilities on improvements for program design." App. at 2660. Therefore, it would [25] appear that the Bureau, even though [*1269] only a PUC bureau, is the authority on Pennsylvania's conservation policy. We will accord weight to its view that PP&L's programs were legitimate load management programs. Our decision to do so, in turn, requires the conclusion that PP&L engaged in the challenged activities in accordance with a clearly articulated state policy promoting load management.

We likewise reject the Oil Dealers' argument that we should not consider the Bureau report as an indication of state policy because it is only an "informal opinion." The PUC's Rules of Administrative Practice and Procedure provide that "informal opinions, whether oral or written, expressed by Commissioners, presiding officers, legal counsel, employees or representatives of the Commission are only considered as aids to the public, do not have the force and effect of law or legal determinations, and are not binding upon the Commonwealth or the Commission." 52 Pa. Code § 1.96. This provision does not appear to apply to the Bureau's report, even if it is purely internal, for the report does not constitute an "opinion" in the sense the term is used in the rule. In any event, the rule certainly does not [26] undermine the fact that the Bureau, which in Pennsylvania is charged with overseeing utilities' energy conservation efforts, believed that PP&L's programs, at least insofar as they did not involve all-electric development agreements, were undertaken in accordance with state conservation policy.

Since the district court's decision, the PUC has adopted new regulations which tend to discredit the Bureau's view of PP&L's activity. The PUC now requires that any demand-side management activity on the part of a utility company be approved prior to implementation. App. at 4683, 4693. It also now prohibits the use of cash to influence builders and developers. 52 Pa. Code § 57.63; see app. at 4688 (commenting that, under the new regulations, "utilities are specifically prohibited from delivery of allowances such as cash or appliances to builders and developers in order to influence their choice of energy for use in new residential developments").

The fact that the PUC now prohibits such actions does not mean that PP&L should be denied state action immunity for its past activity, however. As we recognized in Ticor I, HN9[↑] a private defendant reasonably relying on apparently lawful government [27] action should not be deprived of state action immunity if the government later reverses its position. Ticor I, 922 F.2d at 1133, citing P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law § 212.4b at 153 (1989 supp.). See also Lease Lights, Inc. v. Public Service Co. of Oklahoma, 849 F.2d 1330, 1334 \(10th Cir. 1988\); II American Bar Association Section on Antitrust Law, Antitrust Law Developments (Third) 972. Indeed, it would be entirely unfair to hold that PP&L did not act in accordance with state policy when its activity had received the imprimatur of the Bureau merely because the PUC later revised this position.

We now turn to the Oil Dealers' argument that according PP&L state action immunity in this case would be inconsistent with the Supreme Court's decision in Cantor. Leaving aside questions regarding the continued viability of Cantor's holding, see Yeager's Fuel, 804 F. Supp. at 711 n.18, we find no inconsistency. To the contrary, our conclusion that Pennsylvania has clearly articulated a state policy requiring energy conservation and load management efforts such as those challenged [28] in this lawsuit does not conflict with Cantor in any way.

In Cantor, a retail druggist who sold light bulbs alleged that the Detroit Edison Company ("Detroit Edison") was using its monopoly power as a provider of electricity to restrain competition in the sale of light bulbs. Cantor, 428 U.S. at 581-82. Detroit Edison implemented a "light bulb exchange program," pursuant to which it provided limited numbers of light bulbs to its customers, in the late 1800s, before the state of Michigan began regulating electric utilities. In 1916, the Michigan Public Utilities Commission (the "Michigan PUC") approved a Detroit Edison tariff explaining the program. It also approved Detroit Edison's subsequent tariffs and a decision on Detroit Edison's part to eliminate the program for large commercial customers, thus implying continued approval of the program. See [id. I*1270\] at 583, 96 S. Ct. at 3114](#). Neither the Michigan PUC nor the Michigan legislature "ever made any specific investigation of the desirability of a lamp exchange program or of its possible effect on competition in the light-bulb [29] market," but because the Michigan PUC had approved its tariff, Detroit Edison could not abandon the program until a new tariff was approved. Id. at 584-85.

Although the case was decided before the Court clearly delineated its two-pronged test for state action immunity, the Cantor Court in essence ruled that Michigan had not clearly articulated a policy encompassing the light bulb program. See Cantor, 428 U.S. at 585 ("We infer that the State's policy is neutral on the question whether a utility should, or should not, have such a program."). It based its conclusion on the facts that although the Michigan PUC was charged with rate regulation, Michigan did not regulate the distribution of light bulbs; no state statute mentioned light bulb exchange programs; neither the legislature nor the Michigan PUC investigated the program; the program began before the Michigan PUC was created; and no other electric utility in the state offered such a program. Id. at 583-85.

In contrast, in this case, Pennsylvania [30] statutes expressly provide for PUC regulation of rates, foresee the establishment of rebate and load management programs and authorize the PUC to evaluate such programs. The PUC has approved the RTS Rate and, acting through the Bureau, has investigated PP&L's rebate and incentive programs. Other utilities have similarly offered special rates to consumers, app. at 229-329, and may even have offered incentives to builders or developers. See, e.g., app. at 272, 285, 300, 307. Cantor does not compel a different conclusion from the one we reach here.

For all of these reasons, we think it is clear that PP&L offered its RTS Rate, cash grants and other incentives which were not part of all-electric development agreements pursuant to a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy of promoting load management and energy conservation.

D.

Second, PP&L must demonstrate that Pennsylvania actively supervised its incentive programs and RTS Rate. [HN10\[4\]](#) "Actual state involvement, not deference to private [anticompetitive activity] under the general auspices of state law, is the precondition for immunity from federal law. Immunity is conferred out of respect for ongoing regulation [31] by the State, not out of respect for the economics of [the challenged activity]." Ticor II, 112 S. Ct. at 2176-77. It is this "active supervision" prong of the state action immunity test which "prevents States from 'casting . . . a gauzy cloak of state involvement over what is essentially [private anticompetitive activity].'" Southern Motor Carriers, 471 U.S. at 61 n.23, quoting Midcal, 445 U.S. at 106. "The active supervision prong . . . requires that state officials have and exercise power to review particular anticompetitive acts of private parties and disapprove those that fail to accord with state policy." Ticor II, 112 S. Ct. at 2177, quoting Patrick, 486 U.S. at 100-01.

Ticor involved title insurance rates which were set by ratesetting bureaus which, in turn, were comprised of member title insurance companies. Faced with an antitrust challenge, the insurance companies argued that their ratesetting [32] action was immune because of their states' regulatory schemes, pursuant to which state commissions had "approved" the rates set by the bureaus by not rejecting them within a certain period of time. The Court explained:

Our decisions make clear that the purpose of the active supervision inquiry is not to determine whether the State has met some normative standard, such as efficiency, in its regulatory practices. Its purpose is to determine whether the State has exercised sufficient independent judgment and control so that the details of the rates or prices have been established as a product of deliberate state intervention, not simply by agreement among private parties. Much as in causation inquiries, the analysis asks whether the State has played [*1271]

a substantial role in determining the specifics of the economic policy. The question is not how well state regulation works but whether the anticompetitive scheme is the State's own.

Ticor II, 112 S. Ct. at 2177 (emphasis added). Because of the "negative option" method in which the rates were "approved," the Court held that the title insurance ratesetting in question was not actively [33] supervised and thus did not qualify for state action immunity. Id. at 2179.

The PUC unquestionably has the power to review PP&L's programs. 66 Pa. Cons. Stat. Ann. §§ 501, 1309(a). Therefore, we need only consider whether it actually did so in a manner which satisfies the Ticor test. Such an analysis is best understood by separately examining the challenged activities. We will first consider the RTS Rate.

1.

The PUC has actually approved PP&L's RTS Rate in the tariffs PP&L must file under state law. App. at 705-35; Pennsylvania Public Utility Commission v. Pennsylvania Power & Light Co., 55 P.U.R.4th 185 (1983) and 67 P.U.R.4th 30 (1985). Furthermore, its approval of this rate has amounted to more than mere examination for mathematical accuracy, cf. Ticor II, 112 S. Ct. at 2179, for it has actually considered complaints about the RTS Rate and decided that it served energy conservation and load management purposes. By law, PP&L now must charge this rate until the PUC approves a new tariff permitting it to charge some other rate or rates. 66 Pa. Cons. Stat. Ann. § 1303.

[34] Clearly, Pennsylvania has actively supervised the RTS Rate. Cf. DFW Metro Line Services v. Southwestern Bell Telephone Corp., 988 F.2d 601, 606 (5th Cir. 1993). The PUC has affirmatively approved it, after considered study which included more than a review for mathematical accuracy. App. at 705-35; Pennsylvania Public Utility Commission v. Pennsylvania Power & Light Co., supra; cf. Ticor II, 112 S. Ct. at 2179. Thus, we conclude that PP&L is immune from liability for its RTS Rate.

2.

Next, we will consider whether Pennsylvania has actively supervised PP&L's offering cash grants and other incentives to builders and developers insofar as those incentives were not part of all-electric development agreements. On this issue, PP&L makes much of the fact that, as required by statute, it annually has described its Four-Star Home program to the PUC through the Bureau. This reporting alone does not indicate active supervision because the Bureau does no more than review the reports. Cf. Ticor II, 112 S. Ct. at 2179. In fact, as [35] noted previously, the statute itself discounts any theory that the submission of the reports constitutes approval of them. 66 Pa. Cons. Stat. Ann. § 524(d).

It is nevertheless clear that the Bureau has considered these programs more extensively than simply reviewing PP&L's reports upon submission. As explained previously, in November, 1989, the Bureau issued a final staff report reviewing PP&L's programs in response to inquiries from the legislature and protests by fossil fuel dealers. In the report, it indicated that it believed that PP&L's programs constituted valid energy conservation and load management efforts. App. at 1810 et seq. See also app. at 1765. We do not view the PUC's refusal to release this report as affecting whether we should accord it weight.

It is also clear that the PUC was aware that PP&L's programs involved not just incentives to homeowners themselves but incentives to builders and developers as well. See, e.g., app. at 351, 362, 366. See also Pennsylvania's amicus brief at 4. Through the Bureau, the PUC also knew that PP&L's programs not only shifted current use of electricity but also attracted new electrical heating accounts. App. [36] at 1811.

Further, as noted previously, the PUC has issued new regulations governing programs such as PP&L's. These regulations were the result of meetings and planning sessions which were themselves an outgrowth of the Oil Dealers' having voiced the same complaints to the PUC as they have asserted in [*1272] this lawsuit. App. at 98-103, 361-66. The Oil Dealers have even commented on the proposed regulations which are now in effect. See app. at 339, 4681-88. Thus, the PUC heard and presumably considered the Oil Dealers' allegations but, until issuing its new regulations, considered PP&L's programs (insofar as they did not include all-electric development agreements) to be valid attempts to engage in energy conservation as the legislature required. Therefore, we conclude that PP&L is immune from antitrust liability for those programs, for they have been actively supervised.

III.

As noted previously, PP&L does not claim to be immune from antitrust liability for actions undertaken in connection with all-electric development agreements. It thus urges us to examine the merits of the Oil Dealers' claims regarding incentives offered in conjunction with all-electric development agreements. PP&L [37] asks that we affirm the district court's grant of summary judgment on those claims because the Oil Dealers have not advanced evidence to support them; however, a review of the procedural history of this case helps explain our disinclination to do so.

The Yeager's plaintiffs filed suit on August 12, 1991; the plaintiffs in Losch did not file suit until April 22, 1992. By that time, there had been a great deal of activity in the Yeager's case.

Specifically, in November, 1991, PP&L had moved for dismissal of the Yeager's case under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\), arguing both state action immunity and failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted. Attached to its motion were various documents offered in support of its state action immunity defense. Because it would be considering matters outside the pleadings in deciding that motion, the district court in January, 1992, ordered that PP&L's motion to dismiss be treated as a motion for summary judgment, permitted some discovery and granted the Yeager's plaintiffs additional time to reply.

In April, 1992, however, apparently for administrative reasons, the district court dismissed PP&L's pending motion to dismiss [38] without prejudice to its being refiled as a motion for summary judgment. PP&L did just that, filing a motion for summary judgment which relied solely on the reasons set forth in its previous motion, appendix and brief. Although PP&L finally argued in its reply brief that the Yeager's plaintiffs had not produced sufficient evidence to support their claims, rather than that they had simply failed to allege claims upon which relief could be granted, the district court denied both the Yeager's plaintiffs' motion to respond to that reply and their request for additional discovery under Rule 56\(f\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

After the Losch complaint was filed, the plaintiff in Losch moved to consolidate the two cases for pretrial purposes. The court held a hearing, at which the scope of PP&L's summary judgment motion was discussed. The district court did not explicitly decide whether PP&L's challenge to the merits of the Oil Dealers' claims would be considered under a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) or a Rule 56 standard. It did, however, grant the Losch plaintiff's motion to consolidate "the state action immunity issue and all federal claims . . . asserted in either the [39] Yeager or Losch cases." App. at 2457.

The confusion as to how the court would treat PP&L's arguments on the merits of the Oil Dealers' claims -- that is, whether it would consider only the sufficiency of their averments, or determine whether they had produced evidence sufficient to survive summary judgment -- continued through the argument on PP&L's motion. At that argument, the district court stated that a Rule 56 standard would apply, app. at 106-11, but in its opinion, the court ruled that it need not address the issue of which standard it should use to address the merits because it would grant summary judgment entirely on state action immunity grounds. See Yeager's Fuel, 804 F. Supp. at 703-04 n.3.

Relying upon Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 \(1986\), PP&L now argues that it should be granted summary judgment on the Oil Dealers' [*1273] claims of attempted monopolization of the heating market through all-electric development agreements because the Oil Dealers have not come forward with evidence to support their claims. In Celotex, HN11[] the Supreme [40] Court stated that a nonmovant who will bear the burden of proof at trial must go beyond the pleadings in order to survive a motion for summary judgment, even when the moving party has not produced evidence to support its motion. Celotex, 477 U.S. at 324. However, as the Court also recognized in Celotex:

Of course, a party seeking summary judgment always bears the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its motion, and identifying those portions of 'the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any,' which it believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact.

Id. at 323. In this case, PP&L did not meet its initial burden with respect to the merits. In its motion, it merely informed the court that the complaint itself was inadequate; it was not until it filed its reply brief, to which the Oil Dealers were precluded from responding, that it raised the argument that the Oil Dealers could not support their claims with adequate evidence.

[41] Furthermore, even if PP&L had argued insufficiency of the evidence on the merits earlier, the Oil Dealers had a right not to be "railroaded" by a premature motion for summary judgment." Id. at 326. In this case, the Oil Dealers sought further discovery through a Rule 56(f) affidavit and an opportunity to respond to PP&L's arguments that they could not carry their evidentiary burden in a surreply brief. The district court refused both requests.

In light of the confusion surrounding PP&L's arguments on the merits before the district court, and because the Oil Dealers may not have had the opportunity for full discovery and argument with respect to the merits, we will decline at this time to entertain PP&L's arguments that the Oil Dealers have failed to produce sufficient evidence to survive summary judgment on the merits of their remaining claims. Cf. J.F. Feeser, Inc. v. Serv-A-Portion, Inc., 909 F.2d 1524, 1542 n.18 (3d Cir. 1990) (recognizing that "it would be unfair" to require a plaintiff to specify evidence needed to substantiate Sherman Act claim in Rule 56(f) affidavit "when it was [42] without notice that the district court intended to consider and resolve the entire Sherman Act claim").

IV.

For the foregoing reasons, we will affirm the district court's grant of summary judgment to PP&L as to the Oil Dealers' claims based upon the RTS Rate and incentives which were not offered in conjunction with all-electric development agreements. We will reverse the district court's judgment insofar as it granted summary judgment to PP&L for incentives offered in conjunction with such agreements, however. Because this partial reversal reintroduces federal claims into each of the Losch and the Yeager's cases, we will also reverse the district court's dismissal of the Losch state-law claims pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c).

End of Document

Breaux Bros. Farms v. Teche Sugar Co.

United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit

May 4, 1994, Decided

No. 92-4968

Reporter

21 F.3d 83 *; 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 9596 ; 1994-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,581

BREAUX BROTHERS FARMS, INC., Plaintiff-Appellee, TECHE PLANTING CO., INC. and FRANCIS PAT ACCARDO, Plaintiffs-Appellees, Cross-Appellants, versus TECHE SUGAR CO., INC., SOUTH COAST SUGARS, INC., Defendants-Appellants, Cross-Appellees. TECHE PLANTING CO., INC., FRANCIS PAT ACCARDO, Plaintiffs-Appellees, Cross-Appellants, versus TECHE SUGAR CO., INC., SOUTH COAST SUGARS, INC., Defendants-Appellants, Cross-Appellees.

Subsequent History: [\[1\]](#) As Corrected.

Certiorari Denied October 31, 1994, Reported at: 1994 U.S. LEXIS 7585.

Rehearing denied by Breaux Bros. Farms, Inc. v. Teche Sugar Co., 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 40949 \(5th Cir. La., June 10, 1994\)

Writ of certiorari denied Breaux Bros. Farms v. Teche Sugar Co., 513 U.S. 963, 115 S. Ct. 425, 130 L. Ed. 2d 339, 1994 U.S. LEXIS 7585 (1994)

Prior History: Appeals from the United States District Court for the Western District of Louisiana. D.C. DOCKET NUMBER 90-CV-2536 c/w 90-2537. JUDGE Rebecca F. Doherty

Breaux Bros. Farms v. Teche Sugar Co., 792 F. Supp. 1436, 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14257 \(W.D. La., 1992\)

Disposition: REVERSED.

Core Terms

Sugar, sugar cane, farmers, lease, tying arrangement, market power, grinding, anti trust law, processing, conditioned, cane, sugar mill, competitors, antitrust, possessed, space

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Real Property Law > ... > Lease Agreements > Damages > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Tying Arrangements, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Lease Agreements > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

A tying arrangement is the sale or lease of one product on the condition that the buyer or lessee purchase a second product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Real Property Law > Ownership & Transfer > Public Entities

HN3 [down arrow] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

The essence of illegality in tying agreements is the wielding of monopolistic leverage; a seller exploits his dominant position in one market to expand his empire into the next.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

HN4 [down arrow] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

The fact that a case involves a required purchase of two goods that would otherwise be purchased separately does not make the contract illegal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5 [down arrow] Tying Arrangements, Defenses

The law draws a distinction between exploitation of market power by merely enhancing the price of the tying product, on the one hand, and by attempting to impose restraints on competition in the market for a tied product, on the other. When the seller's power is just used to maximize its return in the tying product market, where presumably its product enjoys some justifiable advantage over its competitors, the competitive ideal of the Sherman Act, 15

U.S.C.S. § 1, is not necessarily compromised. But if that power is used to impair competition on the merits in another market, a potentially inferior product may be insulated from competitive pressures.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN6 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Any inquiry into the validity of a tying arrangement must focus on the market or markets in which the two products are sold, for that is where the anticompetitive forcing has its impact.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Per Se Rule

HN7 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

To establish that a tying arrangement is illegal per se, the plaintiff must show that the defendant exerted sufficient control over the tying market to have a likely anticompetitive effect on the tied market, sugar cane grinding. Second, the plaintiff may prevail by establishing that the arrangement is an unreasonable restraint of trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > Output, Exclusive & Requirements Agreements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN8 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

The court evaluates the reasonableness of an arrangement by exploring the "actual effect of the exclusive contract on competition" in both the tying and tied markets. The court may find an antitrust violation to be an unreasonable restraint of trade only if the tying arrangement has had an actual adverse effect on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN9 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

A per se condemnation requires proof that the tying arrangement involved the use of market power to force consumers to buy goods they would not otherwise purchase.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN10 [down] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Possession of 17.5 percent, much less 9.4 percent, of a market is not normally sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the per se rule. Some circuit courts have used 30 percent as a rough benchmark for the minimum amount of market power necessary to give rise to a per se violation of antitrust law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN11 [down] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

The question is whether the seller has some advantage not shared by his competitors in the market for the tying product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN12 [down] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

When a party has no control over a tied market, the dangers usually created by a tying arrangement do not exist.

Counsel: For BREAUX BROS FARMS, INC., Plaintiff-Appellee: ALLAIN & ALLAIN, Raymond E. Allain, Sr., Jeanerette, LA. BREAZEALE, SACHSE & WILSON, Claude F. Reynaud, Jr., Jude C. Bursavich, BRLA.

For Defendants-Appellants, Cross-Appellees: TALBOT, CARMOUCHE, MARCHAND, MARCELLO & PARENTON, Sidney A. Marchand, III, Donaldsonville, LA. VINSON & ELKINS, John L. Carter, Karen Jewell, Houston, TX.

Judges: Before WISDOM, HIGGINBOTHAM, and JONES, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: HIGGINBOTHAM

Opinion

[*84] HIGGINBOTHAM, Circuit Judge:

Teche Sugar Company, Inc., offered to lease to Breaux Brothers Farms, Inc., Teche Planting, Inc., and Francis Accardo land for farming sugar cane. Teche Sugar conditioned its offer on its choice of a processing mill. All three sugar farmers sued in federal district court alleging that the lease tied land to milling in violation of the Sherman Act, HN1 [up] 15 U.S.C. § 1. The district court ruled in favor [*85] of the farmers and awarded damages. We are not persuaded that any tie of land to milling was supported by market power in the land or, relatedly, that any tie had the requisite effect on competition. We reverse.

I.

For several years Breaux Brothers, Teche Planting, and Accardo leased land in St. Mary Parish from the Prudential Insurance Company. They grew sugar cane on the leased land each year, which they processed at a mill they selected. The right to choose the mill is valuable. A mill that can ensure a supply of sugar cane in times of low sugar prices enjoys an economic advantage. [*82] The present dispute arose when Teche Sugar, then an owner of a mill, leased the land from Prudential. In an effort to assure cane for its mill, Teche Sugar offered to sublease land to Breaux Brothers, Teche Planting, and Accardo at a lesser rental rate than it paid Prudential. Teche Sugar conditioned its offer on a lessee's processing its cane at a mill selected by Teche Sugar. Breaux Brothers agreed, but Teche Planting and Accardo declined the offer.

Teche Sugar at first directed the sugar cane that Breaux Brothers produced to the Oak Lawn Mill, which Teche Sugar owned. Teche Sugar was still unable to generate enough cane for its mill and closed it before its lease with Prudential expired. Teche Sugar then designated the Raceland Sugar Mill--owned by South Coast Sugars, Inc., the co-defendant and Teche Sugar's sister company¹ --as the site for processing Breaux Brothers' sugar. Teche Sugar allowed Breaux Brothers to send excess sugar that Raceland could not process in a timely fashion to a nearby mill, Sterling Sugar Mill. Subsequently, South Coast sold the Raceland Sugar Mill. Teche Sugar then struck a deal with Sterling by which Teche Sugar would pay Sterling a flat rate of [3] $ 9 per ton to grind cane and Teche Sugar would then sell the product at whatever profit it could make. Teche Sugar had no financial interest in Sterling Sugar Mill.

II.

The farmers argue that the lease Teche Sugar offered constituted an illegal tying arrangement. HN2[↑] A tying arrangement is the sale or lease of one product on the condition that the buyer or lessee purchase a second product. See Northern Pacific R.R. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5-6, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 \(1958\). The land that Breaux rented and the grinding services of the mills are said to be separate products.

There is a strong support for the two product argument offered by the functional approach in Jefferson Parish Hospital District No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 21-25, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 \(1984\). [\[4\]](#) Whether two products exist "depends on whether the arrangement may have the type of competitive consequences addressed by the rule." Id. at 21 (footnote omitted). The argument continues that an owner of a dominant portion of a market in sugar cane land could route the cane its land produced to a mill under its control. This guaranteed source of sugar might allow it to drive other mills from the market. The land owner thus could transfer power in one market into power in another. This presents fairly straightforward antitrust doctrine, in theory. See, e.g., Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 611, 97 L. Ed. 1277, 73 S. Ct. 872 \(1953\) HN3[↑] ("The essence of illegality in tying agreements is the wielding of monopolistic leverage; a seller exploits his dominant position in one market to expand his empire into the next."). Professor Kaplow has analyzed this danger and suggested that tying arrangements may cause harm even when they do not create power in a second market. Louis Kaplow, Extension of Monopoly Power through Leverage, 85 Col. L. Rev. 515 \(1985\). [\[5\]](#) But we need not decide on these facts whether renting sugar cane land and grinding sugar cane constitute two separate goods. Assuming that they do and that the lease Teche Sugar offered therefore amounted to a tying arrangement, the farmers have nevertheless [\[*86\]](#) failed to establish that the lease violated the Sherman Act.

We begin with first principles. Not all tying arrangements are illegal. Jefferson Parish Hospital District No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 24-25, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 \(1984\) ("HN4[↑] The fact that [a] case involves a required purchase of two [goods] that would otherwise be purchased separately does not make the . . . contract illegal.") As Jefferson Parish explained it:

HN5[↑] The law draws a distinction between exploitation of market power by merely enhancing the price of the tying product, on the one hand, and by attempting to impose restraints on competition in the market for a tied product, on the other. When the seller's power is just used to maximize its return in the tying product market, where presumably its product enjoys some justifiable advantage over its competitors, the competitive ideal of the [\[*86\]](#) Sherman Act is not necessarily compromised. But if that power is used to impair competition on the merits in another market, a potentially inferior product may be insulated from competitive pressures.

¹ Teche Sugar Company and South Coast Sugars, Inc., the two defendants, are both wholly owned subsidiaries of South Louisiana Sugar, Inc.

Id. at 14.

The legality of a tying arrangement depends in part on its effect in the tied market. The farmers acknowledge that Teche Sugar could have raised the rent it charged for its land, allowing the farmers to process their sugar cane at the mill of their choice. It is doubtful that Teche Sugar's decision to seek similar gains by controlling the choice of mills violates the Sherman Act.² Our focus today is, however, whether the lease impaired competition in the sugar cane processing market such as creating barriers to the entry of new competitors into that market. Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 14. Our analysis focuses on Teche Sugar's economic strength in the sugar cane land and milling markets. Id. at 18 ("In sum, HN6[[↑]] any inquiry into the validity of a tying arrangement must focus on the market or [[7]] markets in which the two products are sold, for that is where the anticompetitive forcing has its impact.").

The farmers may prevail under either of two approaches. First, HN7[[↑]] to establish that the tying arrangement was illegal per se, the farmers must show that Teche Sugar exerted sufficient control over the tying market, sugar cane land, to have a likely anticompetitive effect on the tied market, sugar cane grinding. 466 U.S. at 15-18, 26-29. Second, the farmers may prevail by establishing that the arrangement is an unreasonable restraint of trade. Id. at 17-18, 29-31. See also Fortner Enters. v. United States Steel Corp., 394 U.S. 495, 499-500, 22 L. Ed. 2d 495, 89 S. Ct. 1252 (1969) [^{8}] ("Fortner I"). We evaluate the HN8[[↑]] reasonableness of the arrangement by exploring the "actual effect of the exclusive contract on competition" in both the tying and tied markets. Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 29. We may find an antitrust violation to be an unreasonable restraint of trade only if the tying arrangement has had an "actual adverse effect on competition." Id. at 31.

A.

HN9[[↑]] A per se condemnation requires proof that the tying arrangement involved "the use of market power to force [consumers] to buy [goods] they would not otherwise purchase." Id. at 26. The per se rule, of course, obviates the need for full consideration of actual market conditions; it does require a finding of "significant market power" in the tying market. See id.

The farmers allege that Teche Sugar controlled as much as 17.5% of the land in the relevant market. They base this percentage on a narrow definition of the market of sugar cane land. Sugar cane farmers can feasibly transport their crop for processing no farther [^{9}] than twenty five to thirty five miles from their farms. Five mills operated within approximately thirty five miles of the land that Teche Sugar offered to farmers, an area [^{*87}] encompassing the St. Mary and Iberia Parishes. Teche Sugar, South Coast and related companies controlled no more than 17.5% of the sugar cane farmland in St. Mary Parish and no more than 9.4% of the farmland in the two parishes combined.

The district court defined both products as the relevant market in sugar cane land. We find that even under the narrowest of reasonable definitions Teche Sugar lacked the requisite market power to trigger a per se violation.

Land that offers a distinct economic advantage based on its location may enhance market power. See Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 (1958). But HN10[[↑]] possession of 17.5%, much less 9.4%, of a market is not normally sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the per se rule. The Supreme Court in Jefferson Parish, for example, found control over 30% of a tying market to fall shy of "the kind of dominant market position that obviates the need for [^{10}] further inquiry into actual competitive practices." 466 U.S. at 27. Some circuit courts have used 30% as a rough benchmark for the minimum amount of market power necessary to give rise to a per se violation of antitrust law. See Grappone, Inc. v. Subaru of New England, Inc., 858 F.2d 792, 797 (1st Cir. 1988) (finding insufficient market power for per se antitrust violation); Will v.

² See, e.g., Richard Posner, Antitrust Law: An Economic Perspective 173 (1976) (claiming that no difference exists between profit from increase in price of tying product and similar gains made through forcing consumer to purchase tied product). But see Kaplow, supra, at 520-25 (arguing that method in which market power is deployed may affect extent of harm to consumer).

Comprehensive Accounting Corp., 776 F.2d 665, 672 \(7th Cir. 1985\), cert. denied, 475 U.S. 1129, 90 L. Ed. 2d 201, 106 S. Ct. 1659 (1986) (same).³

[11] The farmers contend that it is a mistake to gauge Teche Sugar's market power by considering the percentage of its holdings in the relevant land market. Sugar cane land is a rare commodity, they argue, and as a result Teche Sugar garnered significant market power. But it is only by defining the market for sugar cane land narrowly that the farmers can maintain that Teche Sugar controlled 9.4% of that market. This definition of the tying market includes only land in the St. Mary and Iberia Parishes and fully reflects the location of the land and the requirements of sugar cane production. All of the sugar cane grown in the parishes can be brought to the same set of mills for processing.

The farmers also allege that leases for sugar cane land generally span several years and that only a fraction of the sugar cane land in a market becomes available in a given year. As a result, they reason, Teche Sugar exercised considerable power over the market despite the relatively small amount of land it held. As proof of Teche Sugar's power, the farmers note that, although some sugar cane land was on the market, no adequate alternative land was available when Teche Sugar offered them a lease.

Were [12] we to accept the farmers' theory, any land owner in a market where sales occur only periodically would possess significant market power, and every party in control of sugar cane land in St. Mary Parish would possess such power. As the Supreme Court stated in U.S. Steel Corp. v. Fortner Enterprises, 429 U.S. 610, 51 L. Ed. 2d 80, 97 S. Ct. 861 \(1977\) ("Fortner II"): "HN11 The question is whether the seller has some advantage not shared by his competitors in the market for the tying product." [Id. at 620 (emphasis added). See also Will, 776 F.2d at 672 (citing Fortner II). The farmers offer no reason to believe that Teche Sugar had an advantage over its competitors in the market for sugar cane land in St. Mary Parish. All of the owners of sugar cane land in the parish possessed a scarce commodity. The farmers therefore provide an inadequate basis for the conclusion that Teche Sugar possessed sufficient power in the tying market to trigger per se condemnation of the lease.

[*88] The cases on which the farmers rely do not require [13] the contrary conclusion. The Sixth Circuit's opinion in Bell v. Cherokee Aviation Corp., 660 F.2d 1123 \(6th Cir. 1981\), is representative. The defendant in Bell controlled hangar and outdoor space at an airport. The defendant conditioned lease of the space on the plaintiff's purchase of all fuel, maintenance, and parts required to service the plaintiff's airplanes. Bell, 660 F.2d at 1125-26. The court found that the defendant possessed sufficient power in the market for airport space, the tying market, to render the tying arrangement a per se violation of antitrust law. Id. at 1127-30. The court based its conclusion on the fact that the defendant in Bell was "a dominant firm." Id. at 1129. Moreover, the court found that the defendant was "in a uniquely advantageous position" to sell space to a party attempting to establish a business of the plaintiff's variety. Id. at 1128 (internal quotation marks omitted). Other providers of airport space, the court noted, did not occupy the same advantageous position. See id. at 1128-29. [14] The farmers in the present case have not shown that Teche Sugar held a dominant position in the sugar cane land market or that Teche Sugar's land conferred a market advantage not possessed by its competitors.

Similarly, in Rosebrough Monument Co. v. Memorial Park Cemetery Ass'n, 666 F.2d 1130 \(8th Cir. 1981\), the defendants conditioned purchase of cemetery lots on the plaintiffs' purchase from defendants of any foundation preparation necessary for the plaintiffs' grave memorials. Id. at 1141. The defendants did not, however, merely tie purchase of one good to another; they also conspired to adopt a uniform tying arrangement policy in the industry. Id. at 1136-40. The court relied on the existence of this policy in concluding that the defendants' share of the market conferred significant economic power. See id. at 1143 ("[Defendants] accounted for 22 percent of the burials performed in the market area . . . , and the exclusive foundation preparation policy, upon which [plaintiff] bases its claim, is uniformly followed by nearly all of the cemeteries."). See [\[15\]](#) also Moore v. Jas. H. Matthews & Co., 550 F.2d 1207 \(9th Cir. 1977\) (finding antitrust violation where defendants controlled 78% of market in cemetery plots, to which they tied installation of grave markers). Cf. Ringtown Wilbert Vault Works v. Schuylkill Memorial Park Inc., 650 F. Supp. 823 \(E.D. Pa. 1986\).

³We do not imply that a plaintiff may not provide direct evidence of market power, obviating the need to inquire into the percentage of the tying market that the defendant commanded. See Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. ___, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 2088 \(1992\) ("It is clearly reasonable to infer that [a defendant] has market power to raise prices and drive out competition in the after-markets, [where a plaintiff] offers evidence that [the defendant] did so."). Cf. Stephen Calkins, Supreme Court Antitrust 1991-92: The Revenge of the Amici, 61 Antitrust L.J. 269, 301 (1993) ("The words 'per se' are conspicuously absent from Kodak's discussion of tying.").

The farmers' reliance on Ware v. Trailer Mart, Inc., 623 F.2d 1150 \(6th Cir. 1980\), is also misplaced. The defendant in Ware conditioned the lease of a lot in a trailer park on the purchase of a mobile home. Ware, 623 F.2d at 1152. The court held that the plaintiff had alleged in its complaint that the defendant possessed significant market power and further noted that even if the plaintiff had not made such an allegation, the omission would not preclude consideration of the plaintiff's claim under the rule of reason. Id. at 1153-54 (relying on Fortner I, 394 U.S. at 499). The court did not, however, address the issue of how much power the defendant had to possess [\[16\]](#) to render the tying arrangement a per se violation of antitrust law.

B.

The farmers nevertheless may prevail if the lease constituted an unreasonable restraint of trade. Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 29. Whether this arrangement was an unreasonable restraint of trade requires an additional "inquiry into the actual effect of the exclusive contract on competition" in the market for the tied good. Id. We need not explore whether Teche had sufficient market power in the market for sugar cane land, under a rule of reason test, because the tying arrangement did not hamper competition in the market for sugar cane grinding.

Teche Sugar not only failed to expand its presence in the sugar cane milling market, it also failed to maintain its presence. Teche Sugar closed the mill to which it first sent the sugar cane that Breaux Brothers produced. Teche Sugar then directed the sugar cane to the mill owned by its sister company, South Coast Sugars. Despite the advantage of a guaranteed source of sugar cane, South Coast sold its mill. The withdrawal of Teche Sugar and South Coast from the sugar mill [\[*89\]](#) grinding business belies the [\[17\]](#) claim that Teche Sugar increased its power in the tied market.

Moreover, the farmers' contentions notwithstanding, Teche Sugar's later deal with Sterling Sugar Mill posed no threat to competition. Its terms required Teche Sugar to pay Sterling a set price to grind the sugar cane that Breaux produced. Teche Sugar in essence hired out a mill for a fixed fee. Produced sugar would be sold at the market on shares with its lessee.

HN12 When a party has no control over a tied market, the dangers usually created by a tying arrangement do not exist. See generally 9 Philip E. Areeda, Antitrust Law P1726a, at 331-33 (1991). Teche Sugar had no incentive to dampen competition in the sugar milling market. Any decrease in competition would be contrary to its interests. Teche Sugar would have to pay any supracompetitive price its interference sparked. See id. at 332. Once Teche Sugar abandoned the business of grinding sugar, any threat that the tying arrangement might harm competition disappeared.

Teche Sugar did not eliminate competition among mills by directing sugar cane to its own mill. It attempted, unsuccessfully, to survive in the sugar milling market. This futile effort had no actual [\[18\]](#) adverse effect on competition. Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 31 ("Without a showing of actual adverse effect on competition, [the plaintiff] cannot make out a case under the antitrust laws" in the absence of per se liability.). As a result, there was no violation of antitrust law.

C.

As a final note, the tying arrangement held the potential to enhance competition. The sugar cane market is volatile. When sugar cane prices drop, farmers produce less cane. Mills have a difficult time weathering long seasons with slack demand. Once a period of economic duress has passed, significant costs confront any party entering into the sugar cane grinding industry. Mills may survive hard times by securing sources of sugar. The continued existence of the mills may ensure that there is greater competition when the sugar cane grinding business once again proves lucrative. Such a procompetitive effect tends to counter the anticompetitive tendencies of a tying arrangement and is relevant to any inquiry into an alleged antitrust violation. See Grappone, 858 F.2d at 799-80 (reviewing this line of cases).

[19] III.

The farmers complain about the lease terms Teche Sugar offered to them. All the farmers but Breaux rejected the lease. The problem is not, under these circumstances, a market failure. Rather, an excess of farmers eager to rent sugar cane land put the farmers in a vulnerable position. The farmers suffered because of competition, not its absence. Their personal plight is unfortunate. But competition has not been injured and the antitrust laws offer them no relief.

REVERSED.

End of Document

Lee v. Life Ins. Co. of N. Am.

United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit

May 4, 1994, Decided

No. 93-1988

Reporter

23 F.3d 14 *; 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 9592 ; 1994-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,582

TONY LEE, ET AL., Plaintiffs, Appellants, v. THE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NORTH AMERICA, ET AL., Defendants, Appellees.

Subsequent History: [1] Counsel Amended May 25, 1994.

Certiorari Denied October 31, 1994, Reported at: 1994 U.S. LEXIS 7596.

Prior History: APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF RHODE ISLAND. Hon. Raymond J. Pettine, Senior U.S. District Judge.

Core Terms

copier, costs, lock-in, district court, supplemental, matriculation, health clinic, allegations, purchaser, switching, sales, insurance premium, replacement part, tying product, aftermarket, derivative, coverage, healthcare services, insurance coverage, summary judgment, first semester, antitrust, increases, semesters, insurer, package, premium, clinic, tie-in, buyer

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Trademark Law > Conveyances > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

HN1 [?] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A tying arrangement is an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different or tied product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier. Generally speaking, an impermissible "tie-in" occurs if a seller enjoys either a monopoly or appreciable economic power in the tying product or service market, and uses its considerable market leverage to coerce a buyer already intent on purchasing the tying product from the seller into buying a second, tied product that the buyer would not have bought based solely on the quality or price of the tied product itself.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN2 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

"Market power" is the demonstrated ability of a seller to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market. Market power may be demonstrated, for example, if the seller holds a monopoly in the tying product, controls a very large share of sales in the tying product market, or produces a unique tying product, and therefore faces no significant competition from functionally similar products or services.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > General Overview

HN3 Standards of Review, De Novo Review

Review of dismissal under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) is de novo, crediting all allegations in the complaint and drawing all reasonable inferences favorable to plaintiff.

Counsel: Jay S. Goodman for The University of Rhode Island, et al.

William P. Devereaux and McGovern, Noel & Benik, Inc. on brief for The Life Insurance Company of North America.

Phillip A. Proger, with whom Gregory A. Castanias and Jones, Day, Reavis & Pogue were on brief for The Life Insurance Company of North America, and for all appellees on antitrust issues.

Judges: Before Torruella, Circuit Judge, Aldrich, Senior Circuit Judge, and Cyr, Circuit Judge.

Opinion by: CYR

Opinion

[*15] CYR, Circuit Judge. Three University of Rhode Island ("URI") students appeal from a district court order dismissing their federal antitrust, equal protection, and due process claims against URI, its Board of Governors, three URI officials, and URI's student-health insurer, Life Insurance Company of North America ("LINA"). Finding no error, we affirm the district court judgment.

I

BACKGROUND

As a precondition to reregistering each semester, URI requires all full-time undergraduate students to pay a fixed fee for the right to use URI's on-campus, walk-in medical clinic, University *2 Health Services ("UHS").¹ All students who pay the UHS clinic fee must also carry supplemental health insurance coverage for certain medical services, such as x-rays, lab tests and gynecological tests, that are available through UHS. Two supplemental insurance options are available. First, the student may obtain supplemental insurance through LINA, a private health care underwriter which URI sponsors as its "default" insurer. LINA purportedly "dovetails" its supplemental coverage so that the insured student pays an annual premium that minimizes duplicative coverage; that is, it lessens the risk that the LINA premium and the UHS clinic fee will reflect redundant coverage for the same medical procedures.² As a second option, students may secure "comparable [supplemental] coverage" from an off-campus health care insurer of their choice, except that URI does not consider either Rhode Island Blue Cross or Rhode Island-based HMOs "comparable coverage." Students who do not opt out of the LINA "default" coverage by a specified deadline are automatically billed for the annual LINA premium, and cannot reregister for the following semester until the LINA premium has been paid. The [3] automatic "default" scheme notwithstanding, only about 40% of the students who pay the UHS clinic fee insure through LINA.

¹ Graduate students are not required to pay the UHS clinic fee, provided they have health insurance coverage that meets URI's requirements.

Appellants initiated this class action in federal district court against URI and LINA in January 1992. The amended complaint alleges that the practice of conditioning continued matriculation at URI on payment of the UHS clinic fee and/or the LINA supplemental insurance premium violates the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 \(1993\), as well as the equal protection and due process guarantees under the United States Constitution. Following minimal discovery, URI and LINA moved to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\),³ and the district court dismissed all [4] claims. Lee v. Life Ins. Co. of N.A., 829 F. Supp. 529 \(D.R.I. 1993\).⁴

II

DISCUSSION

A. The Antitrust "Tying" Claim

Appellants challenge the dismissal of their claim that the URI health care-insurance [*16] scheme is an impermissible "tying" arrangement in violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 \(1993\) ("Every contract . . . in restraint of trade or commerce . . . is hereby declared to be illegal."). See Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 \(1992\) ("Kodak"). [HN1] A tying arrangement is 'an agreement by a party [5] to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier.' Id. at 2079 (quoting Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5-6, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 \(1958\)). Generally speaking, an impermissible "tie-in" occurs if a seller (viz., URI) enjoys either a monopoly or "appreciable economic power" ("AEP") in the "tying" product (or service) market, and uses its considerable market leverage to "coerce" a buyer already intent on purchasing the tying product from the seller into buying a second, "tied" product that the buyer would not have bought based solely on the quality or price of the tied product itself. See Fortner Enters., Inc. v. United States Steel Corp., 394 U.S. 495, 503, 22 L. Ed. 2d 495, 89 S. Ct. 1252 \(1969\); see generally Grappone, Inc. v. Subaru of New England, Inc., 858 F.2d 792, 794-96 \(1st Cir. 1988\) (describing procompetitive policy interests [6] animating per se tying analysis).⁵ Since many product "ties" may not prove anti-competitive, notwithstanding their somewhat misleading epithet, "per se" tie-ins may require a "fairly subtle antitrust analysis" of "market power," a fact-intensive inquiry aimed at winnowing out only those ties most likely to threaten anti-competitive harm. Id. at 795.

² LINA coverage requires the student to present for treatment at UHS in the first instance, pending possible referral to an outside health care provider.

³ Appellants' motion for class certification was stayed pending disposition of appellees' motions to dismiss.

⁴ At the same time, the district court declined to exercise jurisdiction over several pendent state-law claims, see 28 U.S.C. § 1337\(c\)\(3\) \(1993\). Cf. infra note 11.

⁵ The tie-in must also affect a substantial volume of commerce in the tied market, see Kodak, 112 S. Ct. at 2079, a factor not at issue in this case. Further, we assume, without deciding, that URI is a participant in the insurance "market," for antitrust purposes, simply because it receives a one-time $ 10 processing fee for each LINA policy sold to a URI student.

Appellants claim three "product" tie-ins: (1) between a university education (URI) and health insurance coverage (LINA); (2) between health care services (UHS) and health insurance coverage (LINA); and (3) between a university [7] education (URI) and health care services (UHS).⁶ We agree with the district court however, that appellants failed to allege any "tie-in" claim upon which relief could be granted. In particular, appellants failed to advance a colorable claim as to an indispensable element: that URI had AEP in the relevant tying markets (university education and health care services). AEP HN2 or "market power" is the demonstrated ability of a seller "to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market." Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 14, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 \(1984\); see also Grappone, 858 F.2d at 794. AEP may be demonstrated, for example, if the seller holds a monopoly in the tying product (e.g., a patented product), controls a very large share of sales in the tying product market, see id. at 796 (AEP "means significant market power" over an "'appreciable' number of buyers") (emphasis in original) (citation omitted), or produces a "unique" tying product, and therefore faces no significant competition [8] from functionally similar products or services, see Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 37-38 n.7 (O'Connor, J., concurring) (market must be [*17] defined to include "all reasonable substitutes for the product"); Grappone, 858 F.2d at 796 (market encompasses all "readily available substitutes").

[9] Appellants can assert no colorable claim that URI holds AEP either in the "tying" market for a university education or in the "tying" market for health care services. URI competes for new undergraduate and graduate students on a regional and national level with dozens of universities and colleges.⁷ Although URI obviously is a "unique" institution in a colloquial sense, appellants cannot claim that other institutions of higher education do not or cannot provide "functionally similar" educational offerings to potential URI applicants. Cf. id. at 798 (brand name alone does not establish product "uniqueness" necessary for AEP). And, of course, absent AEP in the university-education market it is a virtual given that URI cannot enjoy AEP in the student health care business.

Appellants attempt to circumvent URI's evident lack of AEP in the two relevant tying markets by contriving a so-called Kodak "lock-in." Kodak [10] involved distinct products: Kodak copiers (the "lock-in" product), Kodak copier replacement parts (the tying product), and Kodak copier servicing and repair (the tied product). In 1985, Kodak began to confine sales of Kodak copier parts to Kodak copier owners who contracted to have their copiers serviced by Kodak, rather than by Kodak's servicing competitors ("ISOs"). Kodak, 112 S. Ct. at 2077-78. Significantly, only Kodak parts would fit Kodak copiers. Id. at 2077. The ISOs initiated an antitrust action against Kodak under section 1 of the Sherman Act. After truncated discovery, the district court granted summary judgment for Kodak. Id. at 2078. The Ninth Circuit reversed, Kodak, 903 F.2d 612, 617 \(9th Cir. 1990\), and the Supreme Court affirmed, Kodak, 112 S. Ct. at 2092.

By reason of Kodak's very small market share in copier sales, the parties had stipulated that Kodak had no AEP in the copier market (assuming copier sales to be the relevant "tying" market), and hence, no unlawful "tie" could exist between Kodak copiers and Kodak parts-servicing. [11] Id. at 2081 n.10. The Supreme Court accordingly focused on whether an unlawful tie-in nonetheless existed between Kodak parts and Kodak servicing. Id. Kodak argued for the view that, either presumptively or as a matter of law, vigorous competition in the copier market would prevent Kodak from raising its parts and servicing contract prices above competitive levels, because any such price increases in these "derivative aftermarkets" would become known to copier-equipment consumers, and eventually cause Kodak to lose ground to its competitors in copier sales. Id. at 2081-82, 2083.

⁶ Notwithstanding certain misgivings, we further assume, without deciding, that the amended complaint adequately pleads two other essential "tying" claim elements. These assumptions merely facilitate clearer focus on the core deficiency in appellants' antitrust claim. First, we presume that the products at issue are distinct, i.e., that each is distinguishable by consumers in the relevant market, and that there would be sufficient consumer demand for each individual product, and not merely as part of an integrated product "package." See Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 21-22, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 \(1984\). But see id. at 39 (O'Connor, J., concurring) (noting obvious policy limits of "two product" rule, since almost every product could be broken down into smaller constituent parts that might be sold separately); Lee, 829 F. Supp. at 537 ("I do not believe plaintiffs have adequately alleged that this arrangement involved two separate products."). Second, we accept, arguendo, the questionable contention that URI students are "coerced" financially into buying LINA coverage because only LINA insurance "dovetails" with UHS clinic fee services.

⁷ As of 1991, for example, Rhode Island residents comprised only 56% of the URI student body.

The Court rejected Kodak's per se "cross-elasticity of demand" theory, identifying two different fact patterns which, if borne out by the evidence, might support a reasonable inference that parts and servicing contract price increases would not necessarily cause Kodak to lose copier sales. Under the first scenario, the evidence might demonstrate that a substantial number of consumers, at the time of their original copier purchases, would not enjoy cost-efficient⁸ access to the difficult-to-acquire pricing information needed to evaluate the total "life-cycle" cost of the entire [12] Kodak "package" — namely, the price of the copier, likely replacement parts, and product-lifetime servicing. Id. at 2085-87. Under the second scenario, the Court postulated that, in a market for complex durable goods like copiers, current Kodak-copier owners might tolerate even uncompetitive price increases in Kodak parts and servicing as long as the increases did not exceed the costs of abandoning their original investment in the Kodak [*18] copier and switching, for example, to a Canon or Xerox copier. Id. at 2087-88. Since Kodak's servicing competitors had produced some evidence of "very high" switching costs for Kodak copier owners, the Court opined that such "lock-ins" attendant as they are to the original copier purchase could conceivably enable the plaintiff ISOs to establish Kodak's AEP in the derivative "tying" aftermarket for Kodak parts. The Court accordingly concluded that the undetermined "information costs" and "switching costs" represented material issues of fact, and if in genuine dispute, would preclude summary judgment, even though Kodak lacked AEP in the "lock-in" product market for copiers. Id. at 2086-87.

[13] Appellants attempt to shoehorn their allegations into this Kodak "derivative aftermarket" mold, by proposing the following comparative model: first-semester matriculation at URI serves as the "lock-in" product, as did the Kodak copier; subsequent semesters at URI serve as the tying product, as did Kodak replacement parts; and health clinic services and health insurance coverage represent the tied products. Of course, URI, like Kodak, might contend, on summary judgment or at trial, that its lack of AEP in the locked-in product market ("sales" of first-semester university education) creates a "cross-elasticity of demand," which would prevent health clinic fees and LINA supplemental insurance premiums from being increased to uncompetitive levels. Nevertheless, because Kodak was a summary judgment case, rather than a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) case, appellants argue that they did enough to withstand URI's motion to dismiss simply by alleging the existence of unspecified "information" and "switching" costs, which must be credited for Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) purposes. See Rumford Pharmacy, Inc. v. City of East Providence, 970 F.2d 996, 997 \(1st Cir. 1992\) [14] (HN3 review of Rule 12\(b\)\(6\)) dismissal is de novo, crediting all allegations in the complaint and drawing all reasonable inferences favorable to plaintiff).

Appellants challenge the district court ruling that their "information cost" allegations were insufficient to defeat the motion to dismiss. First, appellants argue that URI cannot posit a "cross-elasticity of demand" in the present context because the prices charged for health clinic services and insurance premiums are too insignificant in relation to tuition and other university-education costs to be considered a meaningful factor in determining whether potential applicants for admission will attend URI or some other university. Alternatively, appellants argue that URI would bear the burden of proof on this issue at trial, and that on appeal it has not pointed to supportive evidence of consumer "sophistication."

Appellants exaggerate the role that summary-judgment burden shifting played in the Kodak analysis. Kodak simply pointed out that summary judgment was not yet in order on Kodak's "cross-elasticity of demand" theory (1) in light of the plaintiff ISOs' proffer on "information costs" — i.e., readily [15] inferable expenses associated with accumulating technical information relating to the costs of equipment, parts, and servicing over the lifetime of a "complex durable goods" item, and (2) in the absence of any conclusive evidence from Kodak that a substantial number of purchasers actually make accurate prepurchase assessments of the life-cycle "package" price of their Kodak copiers. Thus, the Court neither discussed any reallocation of burdens of proof at trial, nor in any way intimated a shift in the evidentiary burden of proof on the factual issues of "information costs" and "lock-in." See, e.g., Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 13-14 (assuming burden of proof rests with plaintiff to show AEP in tying-product market); Town Sound and Custom Tops, Inc. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 959 F.2d 468, 479 n.12 (3d Cir.) (plaintiff bears burden of proof on "tying market" definition), cert denied, 121 L. Ed. 2d 139, 113 S. Ct. 196 (1992). In order to withstand URI's motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, therefore, it was appellants' [16] burden (absent any colorable claim that URI had AEP in the locked-in product markets for university education and student health services) to allege "information costs" which would prevent a substantial number of URI students from accurately assessing the total costs of a URI education, including health [*19] clinic fees and insurance premiums, in determining whether to matriculate at URI.

⁸The Court noted that even assuming readily available price information, consumers rationally might decide not to investigate life-cycle costs if investigation would prove more costly than the potential savings. Id. at 2086.

Second, appellants argue that it is impossible to allege "information costs" because potential URI applicants cannot know or predict their future URI health clinic fees and LINA insurance premiums with any precision, since URI and LINA reserve the right to increase these charges each year. But appellants mistake the focus of the Court's concerns about the "information costs" in Kodak.

In Kodak, the information required by the customer pertained to the life-cycle pricing of a Kodak copier "package," information so patently "difficult and costly" to come by that it spontaneously gave rise to a reasonable inference that unsophisticated consumers would not have the information needed to evaluate their options at the time they made their decision to purchase a Kodak copier. Kodak, 112 S. Ct. at 2085. [17]⁹ [19] By contrast, before signing up for their first semester at URI, students are informed that their continued matriculation at URI is conditioned, inter alia, on their "purchase" of health clinic services at a stated annual fee, subject to historically predictable annual increases, and on their purchase of supplemental insurance coverage.¹⁰ See Philip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 1709.2, at 1174 (Supp. 1993) (Kodak does not focus on potential exploitation of the "irrational or foolish" purchaser, but the purchaser who makes the rational decision that comparative-shopping costs would outweigh any savings from a fully informed purchase; "the [Kodak] context was confined to hard-to-obtain information") (emphasis added); cf. id. at 1174 ("Relevant information need not be so comprehensive as a binding future price schedule"); see also supra note 8. Appellants have made no allegations sufficient to give rise to a reasonable inference that the health-care and insurance-cost information needed to make an informed decision whether to accept the preconditions to continued matriculation at URI is either difficult or expensive to obtain [18] or correlate.

The district court further ruled that appellants failed to state an actionable claim that they were "locked in"; that is, they failed to plead actual costs associated with switching from URI after [20] their first semester. Although

⁹ The Kodak Court elaborated on the complexity of the "information" needed to make an informed investment:

In order to arrive at an accurate price, a consumer must acquire a substantial amount of raw data and undertake sophisticated analysis. The necessary information would include data on price, quality, and availability of products needed to operate, upgrade, or enhance the initial equipment, as well as service and repair costs, including estimates of breakdown frequency, nature of repairs, price of service and parts, length of "down-time" and losses incurred from down-time.

Much of this information is difficult — some of it is impossible — to acquire at the time of purchase. During the life of a product, companies may change the service and parts prices, and develop products with more advanced features, a decreased need for repair, or new warranties. In addition, the information is likely to be customer specific; lifecycle costs will vary from customer to customer with the type of equipment, degrees of equipment use, and costs of down-time.

Kodak, 112 S. Ct. at 2085-86.

¹⁰ Considering the recent hyperinflationary trends in the health care industry as a whole, UHS clinic fees have increased at fairly predictable increments since 1987: 1987-88 ($ 179); 1988-89 ($ 188); 1989-90 ($ 200.50); 1990-91 ($ 227); 1991-92 ($ 248); 1992-93 ($ 312). LINA premiums have increased comparably over the same period, from $ 158 in 1987-88 to $ 369 in 1992-93. The record contains no evidence that prospective URI applicants would have great difficulty gaining access to this information from any number of reliable sources (e.g., URI application materials, URI admissions officials, past or current URI students, college entrance source books). Nor do appellants suggest that URI had any incentive to conceal the scope of past price increases. On the billing invoices it mails to students, URI routinely individualizes its charges for registration, tuition, UHS fees, LINA premiums, and taxes.

appellants now assert that they can amend their complaint to allege such costs, we conclude that further amendment to allege specific "switching costs" would be futile. See University of Rhode Island v. A.W. Chesterton Co., 2 F.3d 1200, 1219 n. 20 \(1993\).

First, there is an important distinction between Kodak and the present case. Kodak [*20] was a "derivative aftermarket" case involving "complex durable goods." Unlike the copier parts in Kodak, subsequent URI semesters are not "derivative aftermarket" components upon which the buyer's initial investment absolutely depends. As the Supreme Court noted, Kodak copiers are "expensive when new," incompatible with replacement parts used in other copiers, and retain "little resale value" presumably because complex durable goods depreciate so rapidly. Kodak, 112 S. Ct. at 2077. The "lock-in" would occur provided it could be shown that Kodak copier owners must either purchase replacement parts from Kodak or abandon their initial, unamortized investment in their Kodak copier. In contrast, a completed first semester at university [*21] is discretely priced — students do not pay for their entire four-year stint in advance — and the "college credit" value of the first semester is neither nontransferable nor without economic or educational value in the future even if the student does not remain at URI. Thus, appellants' attempt to extend Kodak, beyond the "derivative aftermarket" context to the educational context, is problematic at best.

Second, the timing of the "lock-in" at issue in Kodak was central to the Supreme Court's decision. Unsophisticated Kodak copier owners were destined for "lock-in" from the moment they purchased their Kodak copiers. At the time current Kodak copier owners bought their copiers, Kodak had not yet conditioned its sale of replacement parts on the purchase of Kodak servicing, and its later-announced policy to that effect was made applicable both to prospective and existing Kodak copier owners. Had previous customers known, at the time they bought their Kodak copiers, that Kodak would implement its restrictive parts-servicing policy, Kodak's "market power," i.e., its leverage to induce customers to purchase Kodak servicing, could only have been as significant [*22] as its AEP in the copier market, which was stipulated to be inconsequential or nonexistent. See Kodak, 112 S. Ct. at 2095-96 (Scalia, J., dissenting) (noting that even the Kodak majority probably would have found no "lock-in" had Kodak announced its parts-service "tie" at the time of its market entry); see generally Philip E. Areeda, supra, P 1709.2, at 1164-68 (same). In the instant case, however, students know before their matriculation that they are buying a URI "package" that includes at least two "tied" products — a URI education and on-campus health care services and insurance. As appellants failed to assert a colorable claim that URI had AEP in the primary (university education) market, no Kodak-type "lock-in" could have occurred in subsequent semesters, and even the most detailed allegations of "switching costs" would be wholly unavailing.

B.

The "Due Process" and "Equal Protection" Claims

Appellants attempt to raise two vaguely articulated constitutional challenges to the URI health services-insurance scheme. First, they argue that URI's conditioning of continued matriculation on the [*23] payment of a health clinic fee violates their constitutional right to procedural due process, by depriving them of a property interest (fees and premiums), and a liberty-privacy interest (the alleged right to retain a physician of one's choice). Unsurprisingly, appellants cite no case authority for either contention, nor have we found any.¹¹ Appellants purchased a [*21]

¹¹ The district court interpreted appellants' complaint as alleging claims based on substantive due process and the right to contract. Appellants concede that their "cumbersome briefing" contributed to this understanding, yet did not move for reconsideration. See Vanhaaren v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 989 F.2d 1, 4-5 \(1st Cir. 1993\) (issues raised for the first time on appeal are deemed waived). Unfortunately, the procedural due process claim asserted on appeal is no less unwieldy.

Inexplicably, appellants continue to urge that Rhode Island law disempowered URI from entering the "business" of health care and insurance, and that the LINA policies were merely a fraud or sham affording students no actual coverage. Although these allegations might be material to appellants' ultra vires claim under state law, which the district court dismissed without prejudice, cf. Boston Envtl. Sanitation Inspectors Ass'n v. City of Boston, 794 F.2d 12, 13 \(1st Cir. 1986\) (noting that state actor's "mere violation of state statutory requirements does not offend federal constitutional due process"), or conceivably may have served as a basis for some sort of consumer protection claim, appellants do not explain how URI's mere refusal to continue selling them a "product"- "service" from URI with full knowledge from the outset that health care fees and supplemental insurance premiums were a required component of the cost. We perceive no procedural infirmity.

[24] Second, appellants argue that the URI "package" infringes their constitutional right to equal protection of the laws because male and female students matriculating at URI must pay the same health care fees, even though male students will not utilize the UHS gynecological services. The district court aptly found that appellants failed to allege that URI imposed this unitary scheme with any discriminatory animus aimed at male students. See Nieves v. University of Puerto Rico, 7 F.3d 270, 276 (1993) (plaintiff contesting classification-neutral statutes on equal protection grounds must proffer not only evidence of disparate effect, but evidence that enactment resulted "because of," rather than "in spite of," classification) (citing Personnel Adm'r of Massachusetts v. Feeney, 442 U.S. 256, 278-80, 60 L. Ed. 2d 870, 99 S. Ct. 2282 (1979)); Lipsett v. University of Puerto Rico, 864 F.2d 881, 896 (1st Cir. 1988). Appellants advance no curative allegations for relieving this infirmity.

Affirmed.

End of Document

service (i.e., education) would constitute an actionable "deprivation" of their "property rights" for federal due process purposes. Cf. id. (noting that "an alleged breach of contract [by a state actor] does not amount to a deprivation of property without due process"); Jimenez v. Almodovar, 650 F.2d 363, 370 (1st Cir. 1981) (same).

Protectoseal Co. v. Barancik

United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit

February 14, 1994, Argued ; May 5, 1994, Decided

No. 93-3229

Reporter

23 F.3d 1184 *; 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 10108 ; 1994-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,583; 28 Fed. R. Serv. 3d (Callaghan) 1090

PROTECTOSEAL COMPANY, an Illinois corporation, Plaintiff-Appellant, v. CHARLES BARANCIK, Defendant-Appellee.

Prior History: [1] Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. No. 72 C 79. George W. Lindberg, Judge.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

undivided profit, surplus, injunction, Manufacturing, permanent injunction, interlocking, serving, aggregating, subsidiary, threshold

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 19.

Civil Procedure > ... > Relief From Judgments > Grounds for Relief from Final Judgment, Order or Proceeding > Extraordinary Circumstances

HN2 [down arrow] Grounds for Relief from Final Judgment, Order or Proceeding, Extraordinary Circumstances

See Fed. R. Civ. P. 60 \(b\)\(5\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Relief From Judgments > Grounds for Relief from Final Judgment, Order or Proceeding > Extraordinary Circumstances

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Permanent Injunctions

HN3 Grounds for Relief from Final Judgment, Order or Proceeding, Extraordinary Circumstances

Modification of a permanent injunction is extraordinary relief, and requires a showing of extraordinary circumstances. A reviewing court reviews decisions by a district court on Fed. R. Civ. P. 60 \(b\)\(5\) motions under an abuse of discretion standard. Deferential review does not mean no review at all. The reviewing court must be satisfied that the district court's decision was guided by established principles of law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Relief From Judgments > Grounds for Relief from Final Judgment, Order or Proceeding > Extraordinary Circumstances

HN4 Grounds for Relief from Final Judgment, Order or Proceeding, Extraordinary Circumstances

A court can modify an injunction that it has entered previously whenever the principles of equity require it to do so.

Civil Procedure > ... > Relief From Judgments > Grounds for Relief from Final Judgment, Order or Proceeding > Extraordinary Circumstances

HN5 Grounds for Relief from Final Judgment, Order or Proceeding, Extraordinary Circumstances

When a change in the law authorizes what had previously been forbidden it is an abuse of discretion for a court to refuse to modify an injunction founded on the superseded law. Sound judicial discretion may call for the modification of the terms of an injunctive decree if the circumstances, whether of law or fact, obtaining at the time of its issuance have changed, or new ones have arisen.

Counsel: For PROTECTOSEAL COMPANY, an Illinois corporation, Plaintiff - Appellant: Michael J. Abernathy, Scott M. Mendel, Julie M. Rubins, Victor E. Grimm, BELL, BOYD & LLOYD, Chicago, IL.

For CHARLES BARANCIK, Defendant - Appellee: Bradley P. Nelson, Steven A. Weiss, SCHOPF & WEISS, Chicago, IL.

Judges: Before CUMMINGS, BAUER and COFFEY, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: COFFEY

Opinion

[*1185] COFFEY, Circuit Judge. The Protectoseal Company (Protectoseal) appeals the dissolution of a permanent injunction prohibiting Charles Barancik from serving as one of Protectoseal's directors. We affirm.

BACKGROUND

Protectoseal is a privately-held Illinois corporation engaged in the manufacture and sale of products such as safety cans, storage cabinets, drum vents, and safety faucets designed to handle and store flammable liquids. Barancik and his wife Margery are the sole owners of Justrite Manufacturing Company, one of Protectoseal's business competitors.

[*1186] In September of 1971, Barancik purchased 16.2 percent of Protectoseal's shares and used the shares to become one of Protectoseal's directors. [2] Fearing a conflict of interest because Barancik "had put himself in a position to learn all of [Protectoseal's] operations including [Protectoseal's] manufacturing, merchandising and pricing policies, new products and full details respecting [Protectoseal's] costs and expenses as well as similar data respecting the business of Justrite Manufacturing Company[,] other Protectoseal board members served Barancik with a written demand that Barancik resign from Protectoseal's board of directors. Barancik refused, and Protectoseal filed a complaint under § 8 of the Clayton Act, which provided (in 1971) that:

HN1[] No person at the same time shall be a director in any two or more corporations, any one of which has capital, surplus, and undivided profits aggregating more than $ 1,000,000, engaged in whole or in part in commerce, . . . if such corporations are or shall have been theretofore, by virtue of their business and location of operation, competitors, so that the elimination of competition between them would constitute a violation of any of the provisions of any of the antitrust laws[.]

15 U.S.C. § 19. After a hearing the court determined that because [[3]] Justrite's capital, surplus, and undivided profits totalled more than $ 1,000,000, the district court issued a permanent injunction barring Barancik from serving as one of Protectoseal's directors and from voting any of his shares for the election of directors. This court affirmed the entry of the injunction, noting that "the statute reflects a public interest in preventing directors from serving in positions which involve either a potential conflict of interest or a potential frustration of competition." Protectoseal Co. v. Barancik, 484 F.2d 585, 589 \(7th Cir. 1973\).

Some seventeen years later, Congress in 1990 amended § 8 of the Clayton Act by increasing the minimum threshold amount of capital, surplus, and undivided profits necessary to prohibit interlocking directorates from $ 1,000,000 to $ 10,000,000, computed "at the end of that corporation's last completed fiscal year." Pub.L. 101-588. Because Justrite's capital, surplus, and undivided profits did not exceed $ 10,000,000, on April 1, 1991, Barancik returned to court and requested that the court vacate the permanent injunction. The judge conducted a hearing and set aside the injunction previously [[4]] granted after determining that Justrite's capital, surplus, and undivided profits did not exceed $ 10,000,000. Protectoseal appeals.

ISSUE

Whether the court erroneously granted Barancik's Fed. R.Civ.P. 60\(b\)\(5\) motion to lift the permanent injunction enjoining Barancik from serving as one of Protectoseal's directors.

DISCUSSION

Standard of Review

The trial court dissolved the injunction at issue pursuant to HN2[] Fed.R.Civ.P. 60\(b\)\(5\), which provides in part:

On motion and upon such terms as are just, the court may relieve a party or a party's legal representative from a final judgment, order, or proceeding for the following reasons: . . . (5) . . . it is no longer equitable that the judgment should have prospective application[.]

"Modification HN3[] of a permanent injunction is extraordinary relief, and requires a showing of extraordinary circumstances." Money Store, Inc. v. Harriscorp Finance, Inc., 885 F.2d 369, 372 \(7th Cir. 1989\) (citing United States v. City of Chicago, 663 F.2d 1354, 1360 \(7th Cir. 1981\) (en banc)). "We review decisions by the district court on Rule 60\(b\)\(5\) motions under an abuse of discretion [[5]] standard." Id. "However, deferential review does not mean no review at all. We must be satisfied that the district court's decision was guided by established principles of law." Id. (citations omitted).

A.

Initially Protectoseal contends the district judge did not employ established principles of law when assessing Barancik's Rule 60\(b\)\(5\) motion to set aside the permanent injunction. Specifically, Protectoseal [*1187] argues that the court should not have used the "flexible standard" for considering Rule 60\(b\)\(5\) motions adopted in Rufo v. Inmates of Suffolk County Jail, 112 S. Ct. 748, 116 L. Ed. 2d 867 (1992). It argues that Rufo, which concerned prison reform litigation, is inapplicable in the commercial context because prison reform litigation has a great impact on the public whereas commercial litigation of the type at issue in the instant case primarily affects only the parties to the suit. It favors the standard set forth in United States v. Swift & Co., 286 U.S. 106, 119, 52 S. Ct. 460, 464, 76 L. Ed. 999 (1932), requiring "nothing less than a clear showing of grievous [6] wrong evoked by new and unforeseen conditions" before a consent decree or injunction may be modified.

Just last year (1993) this court rejected Protectoseal's argument in Matter of Hendrix, 986 F.2d 195 (7th Cir. 1993), wherein we affirmed the modification of a defendant's bankruptcy discharge after noting that the bankruptcy discharge had "the force of an injunction[.]" Id. at 197. We observed that Rufo abandoned the "grievous wrong" standard of Swift and adopted a "flexible standard," one which "is no less suitable to other types of equitable cases. . . . So now HN4[] a court can modify an injunction that it has entered previously whenever the principles of equity require it to do so." Id. at 198.

Blatantly disregarding the very limiting language of the statute, Protectoseal contends that principles of equity do not require the dissolution of the injunction against Barancik from serving as one of Protectoseal's directors because if Barancik is allowed to serve on Protectoseal's board of directors, he will be privy to sensitive information that he can use to Justrite's advantage, thereby [7] harming Protectoseal. It submits that the 1990 amendment to the Clayton Act failed to alter the underlying purpose of the statute, which was to prevent directors from serving in positions which raise conflicts of interest and threaten competition.

We agree that Congress's intention in raising the threshold amount from $ 1,000,000 to $ 10,000,000 was not to alter the section's underlying purpose of protecting competition. Clearly Congress did not mean to prevent all conflicts of interest or all anticompetitive conduct. Had such been Congress's purpose, it would have imposed a flat ban on interlocking directorates between competing corporations. Instead, "rather than enacting a broad scheme to ban all interlocks between potential competitors, Congress approached the problem of interlocks selectively," Bankamerica Corp. v. United States, 462 U.S. 122, 127, 103 S. Ct. 2266, 2270, 76 L. Ed. 2d 456 (1983), and established a minimum net worth requirement, indicating its intent to regulate only those corporations which are engaged in a significant degree of commerce.

"When HN5[] a change in the law authorizes what had previously [8] been forbidden it is an abuse of discretion for a court to refuse to modify an injunction founded on the superseded law." American Horse Protection Ass'n v. Watt, 224 U.S. App. D.C. 335, 694 F.2d 1310, 1316 (D.C. Cir. 1982). "There can be no doubt but that sound judicial discretion may call for the modification of the terms of an injunctive decree if the circumstances, whether of law or fact, obtaining at the time of its issuance have changed, or new ones have arisen." System Federation No. 91, Railway Employees' Department, AFL-CIO v. Wright, 364 U.S. 642, 647, 81 S. Ct. 368, 371, 5 L. Ed. 2d 349 (1961). In this case, the lifting of the injunction was mandated by a significant change in circumstances, i.e., Congress's decision to raise the minimum amount under § 8 to $ 10,000,000. So long as Justrite's capital, surplus, and undivided profits do not exceed $ 10,000,000, Barancik is entitled to the extraordinary relief granted to him under Rule 60\(b\)\(5\).

B.

Protectoseal concedes that Justrite's capital, surplus, and undivided profits did not exceed $ 10,000,000, but contends [9] the court erred by failing to aggregate the capital, surplus, and undivided profits of four other companies in addition to Justrite which Barancik owns or controls under the name "Barancik [*1188] Industries."¹

¹ "Barancik Industries" is "not a corporation or any other kind of legal entity; it is merely a descriptive name that refers to the companies in which Mr. Barancik has a majority ownership."

Barancik's other companies are Hamilton Industries, Inc., Chicago Etching Corporation, Associated Sprinkler Company, and Northbrook Management Corporation. Protectoseal submits that Justrite is one of Barancik's subsidiaries and that Barancik's companies should be viewed as a single economic unit for purposes of calculating whether § 8's $ 10,000,000 threshold has been crossed.

"If the intent of Congress is clear, that is the end of the matter; for the Court . . . must give effect to the unambiguously expressed intent of Congress." Condo v. Sysco Corp., 1 F.3d 599, 603 \(7th Cir. 1993\), cert. denied, [10] 127 L. Ed. 2d 373, 114 S. Ct. 1051 (1994) (citing Chevron, U.S.A. v. Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc., 467 U.S. 837, 842-43, 104 S. Ct. 2778, 2782, 81 L. Ed. 2d 694 \(1984\)). The language of § 8 is clear in not applying the aggregation theory to overcome the $ 10,000,000 threshold. The statute prohibits interlocking directors between competing "corporations" if "each of the corporations" has capital, surplus, and undivided profits totalling more than $ 10,000,000. The two corporations at issue here are Protectoseal and Justrite. Although Barancik is chairman of the board of Justrite, Hamilton Industries, Inc., Chicago Etching Corporation, Associated Sprinkler Company, and Northbrook Management Corporation, we refuse to conclude that Barancik's companies are a "single enterprise" based solely on the fact that he owns or controls each corporation. Barancik's other companies are all independent of Justrite. Each is separately incorporated and has separate offices, manufacturing facilities, bank accounts, and customers. Each files separate tax returns and maintains separate records [11] and financial statements. Protectoseal's citations to United States v. Crocker National Corp., 656 F.2d 428 \(9th Cir. 1981\), rev'd on other grounds, Bankamerica Corp. v. United States, 462 U.S. 122, 127, 103 S. Ct. 2266, 2270, 76 L. Ed. 2d 456 \(1983\), Square D. v. Schneider S.A., 760 F. Supp. 362 \(S.D.N.Y. 1991\) and In re Borg-Warner Corp., 101 FTC 863 \(1973\), modified in part, 102 FTC 1164 \(1983\), rev'd on other grounds, 746 F.2d 108 \(2nd Cir. 1984\) fail to support its argument because each of these cases addressed the issue of § 8's requirement that the corporations be competitors (specifically whether the competition requirement applied to parent corporations whose subsidiary competed with the interlocked corporation), and not whether the assets of the parent should be aggregated to those of the subsidiary when determining net worth. In any event, Justrite is not a parent or subsidiary of any other corporation.

Protectoseal's theory fails for another reason, as well: § [12] 8 "prohibits only shared directors between competing corporations[]." Bankamerica Corp., 462 U.S. at 128, 103 S. Ct. at 2270 (emphasis added). Protectoseal has not refuted Barancik's evidence that his other companies do not compete with Protectoseal or Justrite. Hamilton manufactures drafting equipment and specialty laboratory furniture, Associated Sprinkler produces fire sprinkler equipment and provides related services, Dynacircuits manufactures printed circuits, and Northbrook Management provided personnel to Barancik's companies. Given that each of these companies, including Justrite, is separately incorporated and operates independently, that none is the other's parent or subsidiary, and that the companies manufacture different products and provide different services, we fail to understand how aggregating their capital, surplus, and undivided profits as Protectoseal urges will advance the Act's underlying purpose of protecting competition. In sum, we conclude that trial court did not abuse its discretion by considering only Justrite's capital, surplus, and undivided profits and that under the circumstances the court correctly [13] rejected Protectoseal's aggregation theory.

Finally, we reject Protectoseal's untimely argument that director interlocks falling outside the provisions of § 8 may yet be prohibited by the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 and 2 and the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45. Protectoseal did not sufficiently present this argument to the district court and has therefore waived it on [*1189] appeal. Hayden v. La-Z-Boy Chair Co., 9 F.3d 617, 621 \(7th Cir. 1993\) (citing Evans v. Fluor Distribution Cos., Inc., 799 F.2d 364, 366 \(7th Cir. 1986\)).

CONCLUSION

The district judge did not abuse his discretion in lifting the permanent injunction against Barancik pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 60\(b\)\(5\) because due to the increased threshold amount under § 8 of the Clayton Act, Barancik is no longer prohibited from serving as one of Protectoseal's directors. The judgment is affirmed.

End of Document

ACQUAIRE v. BEVERAGE, INC.

United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit

February 11, 1994, Argued ; May 13, 1994, Decided

Docket Nos. 93-7368, 93-7444

Reporter

24 F.3d 401 *; 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 10744 ; 1994-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,592

FRANK ACQUAIRE; BILO II REV. INC.; PAUL ADAMS; ADAMS BEV. INC.; V. AIELLO; ANDRE ALVES; A & A BEVERAGE DIST., INC.; WILLIAM ANDERSON; MOJO SATCHMO INC.; DANIEL BAKER; MELD BEVERAGE CORP.; DOUGLAS BARNES; BARNES DIST. INC.; RICHARD BEGAN; R.A. RICHIE BEV. DIST. INC.; FRANK BRADLEY; FRANK J. BRADLEY, SR.; SCOTT BROWNER; SCOTTO BEV. INC.; JOHN BRUNNER; JCQM BEVERAGE INC.; GREGORY BURKE; B.G.M. BEVERAGE INC.; JAMES BYRNES; J.I.M. BEV. INC.; NICHOLAS CAMPANELLI; NIKKI BEV. DIST. INC.; RUSSELL CANDELLA; RUSSLINO BEV. INC.; FRANK CARRELLI, JR.; HYLIN BEV. INC.; CARMINE CARUSO; LINCOLN BEV. INC.; NICKOLAS CASTRONVOVA; C & N BEVERAGE CORP.; JOHN CETRULO; J.V.C. MIXERS INC.; GREGORY CLEMENTE; G.A.C. BEVERAGE CORP.; RUSSELL COMPESE; COMPESE BEV. CO. INC.; 7650 ENTERPRISES INC.; ROCCO CORTESE; ANN-ROC BEV. DIST. INC.; ALLEN COWAN; MI-CIN BEV. DIST. INC.; ROBERT CUMMINGS; CUMMINGS BEVERAGE INC.; JACK CUTRONE; CAPT'N JACK BEV. INC.; PAT DATTALO; P & T BEVERAGE CORP. III, INC.; W.J. DEBELLA; BAD BEVERAGE INC.; A.J. DEBELLO; A.J. DEBELLO JR. INC.; ANTHONY DERUVO; ANTHONY DERUVO BEV. INC.; BEN DIASPARRA; B & T BEV. INC.; MICHAEL DIORIO; 3 DIORIO'S DIST. INC.; RICHARD DICARLO; R & A BEVERAGE INC.; MICHAEL DICICCO; CITY LIGHTS BEV. INC.; JOHN DREW; DREW DIST. INC.; MATTHEW DROHAN; MANDRO BEV. INC.; DEAN ELLERTHORPE; VERNON INC. OF LANDING, INC.; ROBERT FLORIO; R.R.M. BEVERAGE CORP.; ED FRANZ; E. FRANZ & SONS INC.; HERMAN GONZALES; D & H DIST. CORP. INC.; JOHN GREGG; RON & JACK BEV. CORP.; PHIL GUALIELMETTI; RAINBOW FALLS BEVERAGE INC.; ROBERT GULINO; R.J.G. & SONS BEV. INC.; ROBERT W. GUNNING; N & R BEVERAGE INC.; GEORGE HAMMER; KAMEL DIST. INC.; PAUL HARTMAN; G.P.H. DIST INC.; ROBERT HASENBEIN; ROB-LIZ BEV. DIST. INC.; BARRY HELSTROM; G.S.& M DIST. INC.; RUSSELL HOLHMAN; RUSLIN BEV. CORP.; RUSLIN BEV. DIST. INC.; ROBERT HOLGERSON; LANSON HYATT; HYATT DIST. INC.; EUGENE KELLY; E & K BEVERAGE INC.; PHILLIP LENZY; P.P.C. LENZY DIST. INC.; ROBERT LEVINE; B & L BEVERAGE INC.; STEVE LOBODA; S. LOBODA INC.; SALVATORE LOGGIA; S.L. & SONS BEV. INC.; MICHAEL LOMBARDO; LOMBARDI BEVERAGE, INC.; ROCCO LONGO; BROCK DIST., INC.; ARTHUR LOUGHREN; HEARTY ARTIE BEV., INC.; CARL LOWER; BOTTOMS UP DIST. INC.; ALLEN LUNDBERG; A.L. BEVERAGES INC.; KEN MACRI; K-MAC II DIST. INC.; FRANK MAITILASSO; F.P.M. DIST. INC.; MARK MATTILASSO; BETTER BUY BEV. INC.; ANTHONY MARAFINO; A. MARAFINO BEV., INC.; JAMES MARINO; A.W.M. BEV. DIST. INC.; ROB MARKANTES; RAINBOW CONNECTION, INC.; AL MARTIN; A & S DIST. INC.; HENRY MARTINEAU; H.E. MARTINEAU INC.; WALTER MATHEWSON; S & C BEV. DIST. INC.; DENNIS MCCROSSEN; JAG-D DIST INC.; EMILIO MONTESDEOCA; E.M.O. DIST. INC.; ROBERT MORTENSON; ROBERT MORTENSON CORP.; JOSEPH OBENAUER; J.S. BEV. INC.; STEVEN O'DONNELL; S.M.S. BEVERAGE, INC.; G. OLSEN; GUNNAR OLSEN INC.; ELLIOT PANITCH; GREY FALCON ENT. INC.; BRUNO PARISI; BRUNO PARISI & SONS, INC.; B. PERICH; BENRICH DIST. INC.; CHARLIE PETTIGRANO; JUST BEGINNING INC.; KENNETH PULFORD; SOUTHSIDE SODA INC.; SCOTT PYPER; S.R.P. BEV. CORP.; JAMES REYNOLDS; J. REYNOLDS LTD. INC.; PETER ROSENBERGER; PETE'S BEV. INC.; CIRO SANTACROCE; CIRO SANTACROCE, INC.; PHILLIP SANTOMASSI; YORKVILLE BEV. INC.; BURGHARDT SCHREPF; SCHREPF BEV. INC.; WILLIAM SCHWARTZ; B & D BEVERAGE INC.; ALEX SIMYAVSKY; VLADLEEN BEV. INC.; HENRY SMITH; HANK BEV. INC.; KEVIN SMITH; J & S BEVERAGE INC.; ANTHONY SOAVEDRO; J.A.S. BEVERAGE CORP.; JAMES SOWLAKIS; J.C.C. BEV. DIST. INC.; PETER SPARACIO; CHELSEA DIST. INC.; GERARD SPIGA; G.K. SPIGA INC.; JOHN STAFFIERI; STAFFIERI BEV., INC.; ROMAN STROCKYJ; STROCKYJ BEV. INC.; TIMOTHY SYNAN; SOUTH SHORE BEV. DIST., INC.; RALPH VENICE; VENICE BEVERAGE INC.; CARLOS VILAR; VILAR BEV. INC.; KEN WOOD; KEN WOOD BEV. INC., Plaintiffs, T & v. BEVERAGE, INC.; RALPH AMMIRATI; BEV. EXPRESS INC.; RUSSELL AMMIRATI; R & R BEVERAGE, INC.; BRIAN BACHMANN; OSPREY BEV. INC.; PETER CAFFERY; P.R. CAFFREY INC.; ANTHONY CONGIALOSI; FRANK DOLAN; GAIL BEV. DIST. INC.; THOMAS GIOELI; T & S BEV. INC.; RICHARD GRESIO; CARICH BEV. INC.; ANTHONY GULINO; ANTHONYS BEV. INC.; ALTON HEMBY; HEMBY BEV. DIST. INC.; WALTER HERGSTHAN; HERBY BEVERAGE, INC.; LARRY HOFT; L.M.P. DIST. INC.; ROBERT HOLGERSON; HOGIE BEV. CORP.; RONALD HUBBARD; HUBS BEV. INC.; ANTHONY INGRASSELLINO; DEANICK BEV. INC.; GARY LEVY; COUSINS BEV. DIST.; JOSEPH LOKITIS; JO-AIRE INC.; J. LOMBARDOZZI; 3 KIDS BEV., INC.; ROBERT MAGLIOLA; BOLYN BEV. INC.; THOMAS MARCIANO; T&L BEVERAGE, INC.; ROBERT MCCLEAN; T.J.K. BEVERAGE INC.; JOHN MEISTER; J. MEISTER CORP.; P. PARikh; RANI BEV. INC.; WALTER PEARCE; WE BEV. INC.; JOHN PETRAGLIA; JO-LYN BEV. CORP.; DIRK PRELLE; WEST ST. BEV. INC.; JAMES RICCIARDI; TOP SHELF BEV. INC.; ANTHONY SANTELIA; SANTELIA DIST., INC.; SAL SCRIMENTI; 5 SCRIMENTI BEV. INC.; MICHAEL SEDITA; S & D BEVERAGE CORP.; WALTER SIEGER; K & W DIST. CORP.; MIKE SOMMERMAN; 4 PLUS 1 BEV. INC.; TOM SPITZ; L.J.T. BEV. DIST., INC.; TOM UMSTATTER; TOM'S BEVERAGE CORP.; VINCENT VALENTINO; H & v. BEV. INC.; JETHRO WILLIAMS; WILL & LEE DIST. INC.; ANTHONY AIELLO; ANTHONY CIRELLI; TNT BEVERAGE; JOSEPH J. D'APUZZO; PHILIP J. GUGLIELMETTI; JOE DOL ENTERPRISES; J & R DIST; KELLY BEVERAGE INC.; JOSEPH PICARELLO; JUST THE BEGINNING BEV. CORP.; T. UMP'S FAMILY BEVERAGE INC.; JOHN DOES 3-10, Plaintiffs-Appellants-Cross-Appellees, v. CANADA DRY BOTTLING COMPANY OF NEW YORK, INC. Defendant-Appellee-Cross-Appellant, HAROLD HONICKMAN; STANLEY ISRAEL; DENNIS BERBERICH; RONALD J. SREIN; TRANSERVICE LEASE CORPORATION, INC.; EVANS CONGER BROUSSARD & MCCREA; SOFT DRINK WORKERS UNION LOCAL 812, INTERNATIONAL BROTHERHOOD OF TEAMSTERS AFL-CIO; COCA-COLA COMPANY; COORS BOTTLING COMPANY OF NEW YORK, INC.; KIRSCH BEVERAGES CORP., Defendants-Appellees.

Prior History: [1] Appeal from a judgment entered in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York (Sterling Johnson, Jr., Judge) granting in part and denying in part a motion for a preliminary injunction.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

distributors, discount, retailers, products, soft drink, invoices, resale price, withholding, trucks, preliminary injunction, wholesale price, district court, customer, pre-printed, promotions, signatures, prices, enjoining, Sherman Act, merits, irreparable harm, magistrate judge, recommended, loaded, likelihood of success, deliver, temporary restraining order, compliance, impounding, adherence

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Briefs

HN1 Appeals, Appellate Briefs

Under Fed. R. App. P. 28(a)(5) the argument must contain the contentions of the appellant on the issues presented, and the reasons therefor, with citations to the authorities, statutes, and parts of the record relied on.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Briefs

HN2[] Appeals, Appellate Briefs

Ordinarily, an argument not raised on appeal is deemed abandoned.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

HN3[] Injunctions, Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

A party is entitled to a preliminary injunction only if it establishes irreparable harm should the injunction not be granted and either a likelihood of success on the merits, or sufficiently serious questions going to the merits of its claims to make them fair ground for litigation, plus a balance of the hardships tipping decidedly in favor of the moving party.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Clearly Erroneous Review

HN4[] Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

A court reviews a decision to grant or deny a preliminary injunction only for an abuse of discretion, which, when found, usually consists of the application of an incorrect legal standard or the reliance on clearly erroneous findings of fact.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Resale Price Maintenance

HN5[] Vertical Restraints, Price Fixing

Not all vertical arrangements affecting price constitute resale price maintenance agreements that violate 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. The combination required under Section 1 must be demonstrated by proof of: (1) an express or implied agreement, or (2) the securing of actual adherence to prices by means beyond mere refusal to deal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN6[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

A supplier may not use coercion on its retail outlets to achieve resale price maintenance. Evidence of pricing suggestions, persuasion, conversations, arguments, exposition, or pressure is not sufficient to establish the coercion necessary to transgress § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Rather, evidence of threats of termination or other explicitly coercive conduct that secure adherence to fixed prices is what supports a finding of an illegal combination.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN7 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

Antitrust laws do not prohibit the undoubtedly persuasive conduct of a manufacturer suggesting a price for which the product should be available.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN8 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

Advertising of discount prices does not constitute coercion by a supplier even if such advertising causes an independent dealer's customers to expect or demand a lower price.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

HN9 Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

The abuse of discretion standard is utilized in reviewing a preliminary injunction. This limited review is necessitated because the grant or denial of a preliminary injunction is almost always based on an abbreviated set of facts, requiring a delicate balancing of the probabilities of ultimate success at final hearing with the consequences of immediate irreparable injury which could possibly flow from the denial of preliminary relief. Weighing these considerations is the responsibility of the district judge; only a clear abuse of his discretion will justify appellate reversal.

Counsel: KENNETH F. MCCALLION, New York, NY Barbara J. Hart, James W. Johnson, Goodkind Labaton Rudoff & Sucharow, NY, for Plaintiffs-Appellants-Cross-Appellees.

PETER E. GREENE, New York, NY Jonathan J. Lerner, Gary A. MacDonald, Alan J. Meese, Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom, NY for Defendant-Appellee-Cross-Appellant.

Judges: Before: PRATT AND MINER, Circuit Judges, CAMPBELL, * Senior Circuit Judge.

Opinion by: LEVIN H. CAMPBELL

Opinion

[*405] CAMPBELL, Senior Circuit Judge:

In these appeals we review the district court's order granting in part and denying in part a motion for a preliminary injunction. We affirm the order in its entirety.

* The Honorable Levin H. Campbell, United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit, sitting by designation.

Plaintiffs-appellants are independent distributors of soft drink products bottled and/or distributed by defendant-appellee, Canada Dry Bottling Company of New York, Inc. ("Canada Dry").¹ On November 21, 1990, they sued Canada Dry and others in the [2] United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York, alleging, inter alia, that Canada Dry had conspired to restrain the trade of soft drink products in violation of the Sherman Act, the Clayton Act, the Taft-Hartley Act, and the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organization Act.

Two days later, on November 23, 1990, Plaintiffs moved for a temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction to prevent Canada Dry "from engaging in certain conduct, including 'enforcing, directly or indirectly, against plaintiff-distributors any mandatory resale price [maintenance] policy or practice with respect to products distributed by Plaintiffs' and from committing any violations of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1."² Magistrate Judge's Report and Recommendation, at 2 (Mar. 5, 1993) (quoting Plaintiffs' Memorandum of Law (Nov. 21, 1990)). Judge Sifton, who was then assigned to this case, denied Plaintiffs' [3] application for a temporary restraining order, and, on December 7, 1990, heard argument on Plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction. Judge Sifton reserved judgment on Plaintiffs' motion. Thereafter, Plaintiffs and Canada Dry, as well as the other defendants, entered into "protracted, court assisted, negotiations in an effort to settle this action." Id. Plaintiffs' November 23, 1990, "motion for a preliminary injunction was never decided and appears to have been abandoned." Id.

Over two years later, on February 4, 1993, Plaintiffs brought a fresh motion for a temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction before Judge Weinstein, who was sitting as the "miscellaneous" judge. Plaintiffs say they filed this second application in response to new measures taken by Canada Dry to enforce its resale price maintenance policy. Plaintiffs assert in their appellate brief that these measures, which were associated with a funded promotional discount program implemented by Canada Dry, included

- (1) Canada Dry's requirement that customer signatures be obtained on company invoices with fixed prices pre-printed on them whenever promotional monies were used, and that participation [4] in promotional programs be conditioned on the use of company mandated prices; and (2) the withholding of product and refusal to release trucks for distributors who did not acquiesce to Canada Dry's promotional policy.

According to Plaintiffs, "these two enforcement mechanisms were not in place at the time of the filing of the November, 23, 1990, Motion For Preliminary Injunction."

Judge Weinstein, who was unaware of Plaintiffs' earlier injunctive applications in 1990, granted a temporary restraining order. He enjoined defendants Canada Dry, Harold Honickman, and Dennis Berberich (as well as their agents, servants, employees, attorneys, and all persons in active concert and participation with them) from:

- 1. engaging in coercive actions in order to force plaintiff-distributors into using "suggested" resale prices dictated by Canada Dry, including but not limited to, requiring the signature of customers on pre-printed invoices bearing company mandated prices printed on [them] before processing said invoices, and refusing to release loaded trucks of distributors who do not submit invoices with customers' signatures on them, and
- 2. otherwise fixing, maintaining and stabilizing [5] the resale prices at which the distributors must resell soft drinks.

Judge Weinstein referred Plaintiffs' application for a preliminary injunction to Magistrate Judge Carter.

After a hearing on February 8 and 9, 1993, Magistrate Judge Carter issued a report and [*406] recommendation on March 5, 1993. He found that Plaintiffs had established a likelihood of success on the merits on their claim that defendant's conduct in attempting to enforce resale price maintenance is a per se violation of the Sherman Act, but that the only irreparable harm of an imminent nature cognizable on this motion for emergency relief would be the destruction of any distributor's business that would result from [Canada Dry] withholding or otherwise refusing to provide product to plaintiff distributors.

In specifically considering activities associated with Canada Dry's promotional program, however, the magistrate judge found nothing wrong with Canada Dry's purpose "to ensure that [its] funded promotional discounts are passed on to retailers." Nevertheless, he rejected the company's policy of withholding product from and refusing to release the trucks of distributors who failed to adhere to promotional [6] discount procedures -- practices that he had found could lead to irreparable harm -- because such action provided Canada Dry with "a ready opportunity to enforce resale price maintenance in the guise of enforcing compliance with its promotional program." Accordingly, the magistrate judge recommended that Plaintiffs' motion for an order enjoining Canada Dry from refusing to release distributors' "loaded trucks or otherwise withholding product from plaintiff distributors as a means of enforcing [its] promotional discount policy be granted." But to the extent that Plaintiffs sought to enjoin Canada Dry "from engaging in other conduct designed to enforce compliance with [its] promotional discount policies, including [its] policy requiring customer signatures on pre-printed invoices," the magistrate judge recommended that Plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction be denied.

¹ Canada Dry is just one of several named defendants in this lawsuit.

In an order entered on April 15, 1993, the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York adopted and affirmed Magistrate Judge Carter's report and recommendation. The district court (1) granted Plaintiffs' motion for an order enjoining Canada Dry from refusing to release the distributors' [7] loaded trucks or otherwise withholding product from the distributors, (2) denied Plaintiffs' motion for an order enjoining Canada Dry from engaging in other conduct designed to enforce compliance with its promotional program, including its policy of requiring customer signatures on pre-printed invoices, and [(3)] ordered that, upon a particularized showing by [Canada Dry] that it cannot adequately protect itself against the loss of promotional monies expended through the use of accounting adjustment or other means, plaintiff distributors be required to post a bond adequate to secure the repayment to [Canada Dry] of promotional discount monies provided by [Canada Dry] but not passed on to retailers by plaintiff distributors.

On April 23, 1993, Plaintiffs filed a notice of appeal in which they appealed from the second part and the third part of [the district court's] order, which would allow [Canada Dry], under the guise of enforcing its "promotional policy," to fix the prices at which independent wholesale distributors resell Canada Dry products by offering discounts to distributors on the condition that the discounts be "passed through" to the distributors' customers as [8] a deduction from Canada Dry's "suggested" resale prices, and by requiring distributors to obtain customer signatures on pre-printed invoices with company resale prices for all products printed on them.

Canada Dry, in turn, appealed "from so much of the District Court's order entered on April 15, 1993, as preliminarily enjoined '[it] from refusing to release Plaintiffs' loaded trucks or otherwise withholding product from plaintiff distributors.'"

I.

Canada Dry's promotional program and its corresponding enforcement mechanisms (i.e., requiring customer signatures on company invoices, and withholding product and refusing to release trucks) constituted the central focus of Plaintiffs' preliminary injunction motion brought on February 4, 1993. In the following description of Canada Dry's arrangements with its distributors, we relate the details of the promotional program.

[*407] Canada Dry has the exclusive right in the greater New York City metropolitan area to bottle and deliver soft drinks under the Canada Dry label. These soft drinks are distributed to Canada Dry's retail customers by independent distributors, such as Plaintiffs, who operate in exclusive geographic territories. Canada [9] Dry's distributors do not purchase from Canada Dry the soft drink products that they deliver to retailers. Rather, at the beginning of each day, Canada Dry's distributors check out a certain quantity of Canada Dry's soft drink products from Canada Dry's warehouse and deliver the products to retailers. Canada Dry's cash customers pay the distributors for the soft drink products at the time of delivery, while Canada Dry's credit customers pay Canada Dry directly through a credit arrangement. At the end of each day, the distributors return to Canada Dry's warehouse the soft drink products that they did not deliver to retailers and remit payment (in the form of cash or verified charge tickets that they collected from credit accounts) to Canada Dry for the quantity of soft drink products that they did deliver.

In return for their delivery services, Canada Dry pays its distributors a commission for each case of soft drink that is delivered. At the end of each day, Canada Dry calculates the difference in quantity between the soft drink product checked out at the beginning of the day and the soft drink product returned. For each case of soft drink that was delivered, the distributor retains [10] a fixed percentage of Canada Dry's suggested wholesale price per case² -- that is, the recommended price to the retailer -- and remits the balance of the suggested wholesale price per case to Canada Dry.³ Hence, as described by Canada Dry, "if the suggested wholesale price is $ 10 per case and the per case commission is $ 2, a distributor that delivered 100 cases would remit to Canada Dry (100 x ($ 10-$ 2)) or $ 800 out of the $ 1000 collected, thus retaining a commission of $ 200."

Periodically, "Canada Dry . . . offers promotional events whereby the company provides special discounts for the benefit of retail establishments that purchase Canada Dry's products." Magistrate Judge's Report and Recommendation, at 17. Canada Dry makes these [11] discounts available to retailers by reducing the suggested wholesale price of Canada Dry soft drink products that are being promoted by the full amount of the promotional discount. "A promotional discount does not affect the amount of commission earned by the distributor on the products sold pursuant to the promotion." Id. Thus, using our prior example, if the suggested wholesale price is $ 10, the promotional discount is $ 1, and the commission is $ 2, a distributor that delivers 100 cases of soft drink would collect $ 900 (100 x ($ 10-$ 1)), keep $ 200 in commission, and remit $ 700 to Canada Dry.

There is evidence in the record to indicate that Canada Dry distributors are not required to participate in Canada Dry promotions, and that those who choose not to may sell Canada Dry products at prices above, at, or below Canada Dry's suggested wholesale prices.⁴ Participating distributors, however, are expected to pass along the discount to the retailer by "selling the products subject to the promotion at a price that equals the suggested [wholesale] price less the promotional discount." Id.

[12] On December 15, 1992, Canada Dry distributed a memorandum to its distributors in which it restated the policies and "proper procedures" to be followed by those distributors who wished to participate in a promotion. As a preliminary matter, the memorandum emphasized that Canada Dry's distributors, to be eligible for promotional support, must apply the stipulated promotion as a discount to Canada Dry's suggested wholesale [*408] price. The memorandum then went on to state that a distributor could not receive credit for a promotion unless the distributor submitted a *pre-printed invoice*⁵ [13] to Canada Dry that contained, among other things, the signatures of both the distributor and the retailer.⁶

Because the distributors did not uniformly follow promotional program procedures, Canada Dry informed its distributors by letter dated January 27, 1993, that, effective February 1, 1993, it would not process and accept for credit any claim for promotional allowances that failed to comply fully with the procedures described in the December 15, [14] 1992, policy announcement. Moreover, the letter stated:

² At any given time, Canada Dry has one recommended wholesale price for each of its product offerings.

³ For purposes of calculating the distributors' commissions, charge tickets obtained from approved Canada Dry credit customers are treated as though they are cash collected.

⁴ Therefore, as Canada Dry observes, "if the suggested wholesale price is $ 10 per case, and a distributor is able to charge $ 11 per case on 100 cases, it will realize $ 100 of income in excess of its commission."

⁵ Since March 1990, Canada Dry has required its distributors to use pre-printed invoices that list the suggested wholesale prices of all products offered by Canada Dry. Canada Dry will accept no other invoices from its distributors. To avoid showing retailers the pre-printed invoices listing the suggested wholesale prices of all Canada Dry products, some distributors would use their own invoices with their own prices handwritten on them and then, at the end of the day, transfer the information from their invoices onto Canada Dry's pre-printed invoices, which they would then submit to Canada Dry for credit.

⁶ According to Canada Dry, this dual-signature policy "is designed to verify that the customer has received the Canada Dry promotional discount and that it was not simply pocketed by distributors, falsely claiming that it had been provided to the retailer." Plaintiffs contend, however, that, because the dual-signature policy forces them to show retail customers the pre-printed invoices, which list the suggested wholesale prices of all Canada Dry products "regardless of whether or not they [are] subject to promotional discounts that particular week, the practical impact of the policy [is] to eliminate the distributors' ability to charge their own resale prices for any products while at the same time participating in [Canada Dry's] promotional program."

In the event that any distributor submits a claim for promotional credits that does not comply with the enclosed policy, the distributor will be required to pay the Company the amount improperly claimed as a promotional allowance at the same time the distributor satisfies his settlement sheet obligations with the Company for that day's sales. In the event such payments are not made, the Company retains its right to not load the distributor's truck.

(emphasis added).

Canada Dry first enforced its no-load policy on February 3, 1993. According to the affidavit of Dennis Berberich, President of Canada Dry, on that date distributors responsible for approximately 15 of Canada Dry's total of 121 distribution routes failed to comply with the Company's promotional policy but insisted on improperly claiming credit for the amount of the Canada Dry funded promotions against what they owed Canada Dry for the prior day's deliveries. . . . This resulted in those distributors owing Canada Dry money for the prior day's deliveries that they refused to pay. Accordingly, pursuant to its policy, Canada Dry refused to allow those distributors [15] to receive any Canada Dry product until they satisfied that monetary shortfall for the Canada Dry product that they had already delivered. However, any such distributor was permitted to remove its truck as soon as Canada Dry's products were unloaded from such vehicle.⁷

The following day, Plaintiffs moved for a temporary restraining order and for the instant preliminary injunction.

II.

As we have said, Plaintiffs appeal only from the second and third part of the district court's order -- that is, the decision (1) to deny Plaintiffs' motion for an order enjoining Canada Dry from engaging in conduct designed to further its promotional program, including the dual-signature requirement on pre-printed invoices, and (2) to require Plaintiffs to post a bond. Canada Dry, in turn, appeals only from the first part of the district court's order -- that is, [16] the district court's decision to enjoin Canada Dry from withholding product from its distributors or refusing to release its distributors' loaded trucks. Because the parties address these issues in their appellate briefs almost exclusively, we focus our review accordingly. See HN1[↑] Fed. [*409] R. App. P. 28(a)(5) ("The argument must contain the contentions of the appellant on the issues presented, and the reasons therefor, with citations to the authorities, statutes, and parts of the record relied on."); United States v. Babwah, 972 F.2d 30, 34 (2d Cir. 1992) ("HN2[↑] Ordinarily, . . . an argument not raised on appeal is deemed abandoned."). There is thus no occasion to review the magistrate judge's somewhat conclusory findings (1) that "the credible evidence in the instant record establishes that [Canada Dry] has consistently utilized devices, including price surveillance, to force adherence to its suggested resale prices"; (2) that Plaintiffs have "established that there is likelihood of success on the merits on their claim that [Canada Dry's] conduct in attempting to enforce resale price maintenance is a per se violation of the Sherman Act"; but (3) that these [17] devices do not threaten Canada Dry's distributors with imminent irreparable harm in that they (the devices) have "existed continuously from the onset of this lawsuit."

The standard for granting a preliminary injunction is well recognized. HN3[↑] A party is entitled to a preliminary injunction only if it establishes: "(1) irreparable harm [should the injunction not be granted] and (2) either (a) a likelihood of success on the merits, or (b) sufficiently serious questions going to the merits of its claims to make them fair ground for litigation, plus a balance of the hardships tipping decidedly in favor of the moving party." ICN Pharmaceuticals, Inc. v. Khan, 2 F.3d 484, 490 (2d Cir. 1993) (quoting Plaza Health Lab., Inc. v. Perales, 878 F.2d 577, 580 (2d Cir. 1989)). HN4[↑] We review a decision to grant or deny a preliminary injunction only for an abuse of discretion, "which, when found, usually consists of the application of an incorrect legal standard or the reliance on clearly erroneous findings of fact." Chemical Bank v. Haseotes, 13 F.3d 569, 573 (2d Cir. 1994); see ICN Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 2 F.3d at 490. [18]

⁷ Plaintiffs assert that Canada Dry actually impounded the trucks of those distributors who failed to obtain the retailers' signatures on the pre-printed invoices.

Plaintiffs argue that Canada Dry's promotional program deprives the distributors of their ability to price independently both promotional and non-promotional soft drink products. The magistrate judge found, and there seems to be no dispute, that when distributors participate in the promotions they are expected to sell promotional items at a price equal to Canada Dry's suggested wholesale price less the promotional discount. Plaintiffs maintain that Canada Dry's promotional program also makes it impossible for them to sell non-promotional soft drink products at market prices because the distributors must necessarily reveal Canada Dry's suggested wholesale prices on those items when they obtain retailers' signatures on the pre-printed invoices. Thus, Plaintiffs contend that Canada Dry's promotional program constitutes a vertical, maximum-price-fixing scheme that violates per se § 1 of the Sherman Act. The district court did not agree with Plaintiffs. It concluded that the described promotional program passed muster under antitrust laws except to the extent that the withholding of product and impounding of trucks provided Canada Dry with too ready an "opportunity to enforce resale [19] price maintenance in the guise of enforcing compliance with its promotional program." We do not think the court below applied an incorrect legal standard or relied on clearly erroneous findings of fact in reaching this conclusion.

To be sure, in Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145, 88 S. Ct. 869, 19 L. Ed. 2d 998 \(1968\), the Supreme Court held "that a vertical, maximum-price-fixing scheme was unlawful per se under § 1 of the Sherman Act because it threatened to inhibit vigorous competition by the dealers bound by it and because it threatened to become a minimum-price-fixing scheme." Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 335, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 1889, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 \(1990\) (assuming, "arguendo, that Albrecht correctly held that vertical, maximum price fixing is subject to the per se rule").⁸ Nevertheless, [*410] HN5 not all vertical arrangements affecting price constitute resale price maintenance agreements that violate § 1 of the Sherman Act. See AAA Liquors, Inc. v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Inc., 705 F.2d 1203, 1205 \(10th Cir. 1982\), [20] cert. denied, 461 U.S. 919, 103 S. Ct. 1903, 77 L. Ed. 2d 290 (1983). "The combination required under Section 1 must be demonstrated by proof of:

(1) an express or implied agreement, or

(2) the securing of actual adherence [21] to prices by means beyond mere refusal to deal."

Belfiore v. New York Times Co., 654 F. Supp. 842, 851 \(D. Conn. 1986\), aff'd, 826 F.2d 177, 181 \(2d Cir. 1987\) ("HN6 [A] supplier may not use coercion on its retail outlets to achieve resale price maintenance." (quoting Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 377 U.S. 13, 17, 84 S. Ct. 1051, 1054, 12 L. Ed. 2d 98 \(1964\)), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 1067, 108 S. Ct. 1030, 98 L. Ed. 2d 994 (1988); accord Yentsch v. Texaco, Inc., 630 F.2d 46, 52 \(2d Cir. 1980\) ("Coercion that achieves actual price-fixing is illegal."). Evidence of pricing suggestions, persuasion, conversations, arguments, exposition, or pressure is not sufficient to establish the coercion necessary to transgress § 1 of the Sherman Act. Yentsch, 630 F.2d at 53; Belfiore, 654 F. Supp. at 851. Rather, evidence of threats of termination or other explicitly coercive conduct that secure adherence to fixed prices is what [22] supports "a finding of an illegal combination." Yentsch, 630 F.2d at 53; see Belfiore, 654 F. Supp. at 851.

There is evidence in the record to indicate that Canada Dry does not require its distributors to participate in its promotions and that non-participating distributors may sell Canada Dry promotional products at, above, or below Canada Dry's suggested wholesale prices. Nonetheless, Plaintiffs assert that, as a practical matter, Canada Dry's distributors must participate in the promotions in order to survive. There is nothing in the record, however, forcing this conclusion.

⁸ Although the viability of Albrecht's principles is in some doubt following the Supreme Court's decision in Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 97 S. Ct. 2549, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568 \(1977\), Albrecht has not yet been overturned. 8 Phillip E. Areeda, Antitrust Law PP 1638, 1639 (1989) (suggesting, however, that the Supreme Court may have silently overruled Albrecht in its Sylvania decision); see Jack Walters & Sons Corp. v. Morton Bldg., Inc., 737 F.2d 698, 706-07 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1018, 105 S. Ct. 432, 83 L. Ed. 2d 359 \(1984\).

The district court found, moreover, that, other than with regard to the withholding of product and impounding of trucks, Plaintiffs did not "establish that there is any likelihood of success on the merits or any sufficiently serious question going to the merits relating to their claim that Canada Dry may not engage in conduct [-- including Canada Dry's policy requiring customer signatures on pre-printed invoices --] designed to ensure that Canada Dry funded promotional discounts are passed on to retailers." The court observed that a manufacturer, [\[23\]](#) who, from its own pocket, grants a discount (as Canada Dry does here) through its distributor to its retailer, has a legitimate interest in making sure that the distributor "is not pocketing the price support instead of passing it on." AAA Liquors, 705 F.2d at 1206 (quoting Lehrman v. Gulf Oil Corp., 464 F.2d 26, 40 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 1077, 93 S. Ct. 687, 34 L. Ed. 2d 665 (1972)). Other courts, as well as the court below, have concluded that a manufacturer should be allowed to implement reasonable procedures to ensure that the discount is, in fact, passed along to the retailer. See Jack Walters & Sons Corp. v. Morton Bldg., Inc., 737 F.2d 698, 708 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1018, 105 S. Ct. 432, 83 L. Ed. 2d 359 (1984). Provided it is established that Canada Dry's distributors voluntarily elect to take part in promotions, we would agree with the district court that requiring them to (1) sell Canada Dry promotional products at a price equal to the [\[24\]](#) suggested wholesale price less the discount, and (2) obtain retailers' signatures on invoices to document their receipt of the discount may be found to be reasonable and permissible ways for Canada Dry -- which is paying for the discounts -- to ensure that its distributors pass these along to the retailers.

The district court determined that Canada Dry's policy of requiring its distributors to obtain retailers' signatures on pre-printed invoices that disclose Canada Dry's suggested wholesale prices on non-promotional soft drink items does not constitute the coercion necessary to trigger a § 1 violation. The court noted that it is well established that the HN7[↑] "antitrust laws do not prohibit the undoubtedly persuasive conduct of a manufacturer suggesting a price . . . for which the product should be available." Martindell v. News I^{*}411 Group Publications, Inc., 621 F. Supp. 672, 678 \(E.D.N.Y. 1985\) (citing Jack Walters & Sons Corp., 737 F.2d at 707 ("It is perfectly lawful for a manufacturer to advertise his product to the ultimate consumer, whether or not he sells directly to the consumer, and to mention in that advertising the retail [\[25\]](#) price of the product -- the only price the consumer is interested in.")); Belfiore, 654 F. Supp. at 852 \(HN8\)[↑] "Advertising of discount prices does not constitute coercion by a supplier even if such advertising causes an independent dealer's customers to expect or demand a lower price.").

It is true that Canada Dry retailers who learn of Canada Dry's suggested wholesale prices may resent and even resist paying a higher price to the distributors. This result, however, simply "reflects the working of a free market in which [the retailers] have acquired relevant information," 8 Phillip E. Areeda, Antitrust Law P 1639d (1989), and does not amount to resale price maintenance. Hence, we cannot say, at least on the record as presently developed, that the district court abused its discretion by refusing to enjoin Canada Dry from requiring its distributors to use pre-printed invoices that list Canada Dry's suggested wholesale prices on both promotional and non-promotional items.

III.

The district court preliminarily enjoined Canada Dry from refusing to release the distributors' loaded trucks or otherwise withholding product from the distributors. Canada Dry, in [\[26\]](#) its cross appeal, argues that the district court abused its discretion in granting this relief. We do not agree. We find sufficient justification for the lower court's concern that, if Canada Dry remained free to make the product-withholding decision unilaterally, it would use this authority for illegal resale price maintenance purposes.

Canada Dry assigns error to the district court's conclusion that Plaintiffs demonstrated a likelihood of success on the merits, or at least sufficiently serious questions going to the merits, that Canada Dry's policy of withholding product violates § 1 of the Sherman Act. The court below found that, "if defendant is permitted to withhold product as a means of enforcing compliance with its promotional discount program, that privilege could readily be exploited as a pretext for enforcing resale price maintenance." In response to this finding, Canada Dry submits that Plaintiffs have offered "no evidence to support the claim that [it] has withheld product for reasons unrelated to promotional discounts." (emphasis in Canada Dry's brief).

Canada Dry also contests the district court's decision that Canada Dry's enforcement mechanism of withholding [\[27\]](#) product from non-complying distributors threatens the viability of the distributors' businesses and therefore constitutes irreparable harm. Canada Dry maintains that plaintiffs generally have an obligation to mitigate their damages and a failure to do so proscribes any finding of irreparable harm. Canada Dry asserts that the district court completely overlooked that the distributors could have avoided Canada Dry's enforcement mechanism either by opting out of the promotional program altogether or by following the promotional program's procedures. Therefore, Canada Dry insists, any irreparable harm to the distributors was self-inflicted in that Canada Dry withheld product only from those distributors who elected to participate in the promotional program but refused to abide by its terms. Under these circumstances, Canada Dry asserts that injunctive relief was appropriate only upon a showing by Plaintiffs, which Canada Dry argues they failed to make, that the distributors would be irreparably harmed either by foregoing the promotional program or by participating in it according to its terms.

The record, however, is not as entirely bereft of evidence as Canada Dry insists to support [28] the district court's concerns that product would be withheld improperly. There is some evidence permitting the inference that Canada Dry managers may, in fact, have withheld product from distributors who failed to turn in customer-signed, pre-printed invoices even when the invoices did not include claims for promotional discounts. Moreover, there is some evidence that Canada Dry impounded the truck of at least one distributor who failed to have all of his invoices signed by retailers even though many [*412] of the invoices did not involve promotional discounts. And finally, there are the magistrate judge's findings of credible evidence that Canada Dry "has consistently utilized devices, including price surveillance, to force adherence to its suggested retail prices," and of a likelihood of success by Plaintiffs on their price-fixing claim. The foregoing provides sufficient support for the district court's conclusions (1) that the withholding of product and impounding of trucks might be used by Canada Dry to enforce resale price maintenance rather than merely to police its promotional program, and (2) that any distributor who, during the pendency of this proceeding, was cut off from the [29] supply of product for refusing to sell at Canada Dry's suggested prices could be driven out of business and thereby irreparably harmed. Under the abuse of discretion standard utilized in reviewing a preliminary injunction, we cannot say the district court erred in temporarily enjoining Canada Dry pendente lite from withholding product from the distributors and impounding their trucks. See United States Steel Corp. v. Fraternal Ass'n of Steelhaulers, 431 F.2d 1046, 1048 (3d Cir. 1970) (HN9 "This limited review is necessitated because the grant or denial of a preliminary injunction is almost always based on an abbreviated set of facts, requiring a delicate balancing of the probabilities of ultimate success at final hearing with the consequences of immediate irreparable injury which could possibly flow from the denial of preliminary relief. Weighing these considerations is the responsibility of the district judge; only a clear abuse of his discretion will justify appellate reversal.").)

IV.

Finally, we have considered Plaintiffs' contention that the district court abused its discretion in ordering them -- upon a particularized showing by Canada Dry that [30] it cannot adequately protect itself against the loss of promotional monies expended through the use of accounting adjustment or other means -- to post a bond adequate to secure the repayment to Canada Dry of promotional discount monies provided by Canada Dry but not passed on to retailers by the distributors. We see nothing unreasonable about this order, especially in the absence of a concrete situation in which such a bond has yet been ordered.

The order of the district court entered April 15, 1993, is affirmed. Each party shall bear its own costs.

Pastore v. Bell Tel. Co.

United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit

May 2, 1994, Submitted Under Third Circuit LAR 34.1(a) ; May 16, 1994, Filed

No. 93-3556

Reporter

24 F.3d 508 *; 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 10838 ; 1994-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,588; 29 Fed. R. Serv. 3d (Callaghan) 344

GARY L. PASTORE, an individual; NATIONAL SECURITY SYSTEMS CORPORATION, a Pennsylvania corporation, Appellants v. THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY OF PENNSYLVANIA, a Pennsylvania corporation; BELL ATLANTIC CORPORATION, a Delaware corporation; RONALD DONALDSON, ROBERT S. FADZEN, JR.; RAYMOND J. WICKLINE; GEORGE CALDWELL

Prior History: [1] On Appeal from the United States District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania. (D.C. Civil No. 92-00923).

Core Terms

district court, summary judgment, monopolize, relevant market, probability, monopoly, antitrust, summary judgment motion, defendants', Sherman Act, installed, non-moving, discovery, predatory

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1[Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

HN2[Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

The court reviews a claim that the district court has prematurely granted summary judgment for abuse of discretion.

24 F.3d 508, *508LÁ994 U.S. App. LEXIS 10838, 1

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Affidavits

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN3 Supporting Materials, Affidavits

If a party believes that she needs additional time for discovery, Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(f\) specifies that the party must file an affidavit setting forth why the time is needed.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Affidavits

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pretrial Matters > Continuances

HN4 Supporting Materials, Affidavits

See Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(f\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > Memoranda in Opposition

HN5 Summary Judgment, Supporting Materials

The purpose of the affidavit is to ensure that the nonmoving party is invoking the protection of Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(f\) in good faith and to afford the trial court the showing necessary to assess the merit of a party's opposition. An unsworn memorandum opposing a party's motion for summary judgment is not an affidavit.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN6 Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The court reviews the districts court's decision to enter summary judgment de novo, applying the same standard as the district court. Once the moving party has carried the initial burden of showing that no genuine issue of material fact exists, the nonmoving party cannot rely upon conclusory allegations in its pleadings or in memoranda and briefs to establish a genuine issue of material fact. Instead, it must make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of every element essential to his case, based on the affidavits or by the depositions and admissions on file.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN7 Regulated Practices, Private Actions

The United States Supreme Court has recently affirmed that there is no special burden for summary judgment in antitrust cases.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8 Sherman Act, Claims

To demonstrate attempted monopolization for the purposes of proving a claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must prove (1) that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN9 Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Determining whether a dangerous probability exists requires inquiry into the relevant product and geographic market and the defendant's economic power in that market. A plaintiff has the burden of defining the market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN10 Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

The plaintiffs must show that the defendants possessed sufficient market power to come dangerously close to success within a particular market. There is no simple formula and the factors to be reviewed include: the strength of the competition, probable development of the industry, the barriers to entry, the nature of the anti-competitive conduct, and the elasticity of consumer demand.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN11 [] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

A showing of a dangerous probability of achieving monopolization in a relevant market was necessary to prevail on a 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN12 [] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Intent to monopolize alone is not sufficient to establish the dangerous probability of success that is the object of 15 U.S.C.S. § 2's prohibition of attempts. The law directs itself not against conduct which is competitive, even severely so, but against conduct which unfairly tends to destroy competition itself. Thus, courts have been careful to avoid constructions of § 2 which might chill competition, rather than foster it. For these reasons, § 2 makes the conduct of a single firm unlawful only when it actually monopolizes or dangerously threatens to do so. The concern that § 2 might be applied so as to further anticompetitive ends is plainly not met by inquiring only whether the defendant has engaged in "unfair" or "predatory" tactics.

Counsel: John R. Orie, Jr., Orie & Zivic, Pittsburgh, PA 15219, Attorney for Appellants.

Richard B. Tucker, III, Jeffrey J. Leech, Diane Heron Chavis, Tucker Arensberg, P.C., Pittsburgh, PA 15222, Attorney for Appellees Bell Telephone Co. of Pennsylvania; Bell Atlantic Corp.; Ronald Donaldson; Raymond J. Wickline; George Caldwell. Ralston S. Jackson, Odermatt & Jackson, Pittsburgh, PA 15219, Attorney for Appellee Robert S. Fadzen, Jr.

Judges: Before: SLOVITER, Chief Judge, HUTCHINSON, and SEITZ, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: SLOVITER

Opinion

[*509] OPINION OF THE COURT

SLOVITER, Chief Judge.

Gary Pastore and National Security Systems Corporation (NASSCO), plaintiffs-appellants, appeal from the entry of summary judgment in favor of defendants-appellees Bell Atlantic Corporation, its subsidiary, Bell Telephone Company of Pennsylvania, and four individual employees on plaintiffs' attempted monopolization claim under section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2 \(Supp. IV 1992\).

I.

FACTS AND PROCEDURAL HISTORY

The facts in this case are, for the most part, not in dispute. [2] Pastore established [*510] NASSCO in early 1986 to install a sophisticated custom-designed access control communications security network (CDACCSN) for Bell of Pennsylvania, which awarded it a contract for thirty of its facilities. Bell of Pennsylvania told Pastore that it planned to order the same system for all of its 800 facilities if this pilot project was successful and that it might extend to as many as 4,000 facilities in other subsidiaries of Bell Atlantic.

The pilot project was timely completed and Bell of Pennsylvania officials expressed satisfaction with NASSCO's performance. Thereafter, they repeatedly asked NASSCO to surrender the computer source codes and specific proprietary information and technical designs relating to the CDACCSN which NASSCO declined to do, but because Bell of Pennsylvania insisted on some guarantees in the event of NASSCO's bankruptcy, NASSCO agreed to deposit in escrow the requested proprietary information.

Nonetheless, Bell of Pennsylvania ceased doing business with NASSCO and told NASSCO in March 1990 that a project for a Pittsburgh facility had been placed "on hold." In December 1990, Pastore was informed that a security system had been installed by [3] an entity entitled Integrated Access Systems in the Monroeville Revenue Accounting Center, although the site was within the network of facilities to be installed and serviced exclusively by NASSCO. Other already-approved projects which were part of the first planned phase involving installation of the CDACCSN statewide were not carried forward, while none of the work planned for the second or third phase was initiated.

Plaintiffs filed this action in the District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania alleging that defendants attempted to monopolize the relevant market in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act ¹, as well as under a variety of pendent state law tort and contract theories.² Defendants moved to dismiss for failure to state a claim under the Sherman Act. The district court issued an order converting the motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment as to the Sherman Act claim only. After granting plaintiffs two extensions for further discovery, the court granted the summary judgment motion, holding that the plaintiffs had produced no evidence of a dangerous probability of the defendants monopolizing the relevant market, and dismissed the pendent state [4] law claims without prejudice. Plaintiffs filed this timely appeal.

II.

DISCUSSION

A.

Additional Discovery

Throughout their brief, plaintiffs argue that summary judgment was inappropriate because they did not have adequate time for discovery. As this court has previously noted, HN2 we [5] review a claim that the district court has prematurely granted summary judgment for abuse of discretion. See Radich v. Goode, 886 F.2d 1391,

¹ Section 2 provides:

HN1 Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony

15 U.S.C. § 2.

² The twelve count complaint included claims for defamation, promissory estoppel, anticipatory breach of contract, breach of contract, breach of duty of good faith, common law fraud and deceit, tortious interference with contractual and business relations, tortious bad faith and unfair dealing, interference with prospective economic advantage, and intentional infliction of emotional distress.

1393 (3d Cir. 1989). HN3 If a party believes that s/he needs additional time for discovery, Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(f\) specifies the procedure to be followed,³ and explicitly provides that the party must [\[*511\]](#) file an affidavit setting forth why the time is needed. Plaintiffs concede, however, that they did not submit an affidavit. This concession is usually fatal, because by not filing "a Rule 56\(f\) affidavit, [they have] not preserved [their] objection to [their] alleged inability to obtain necessary discovery." Falcone v. Columbia Pictures Indus., Inc., 805 F.2d 115, 117 n.2 \(3d Cir. 1986\).

[\[6\]](#) Plaintiffs contend that their brief opposing the defendants' motion for summary judgment constructively meets Rule 56\(f\)'s affidavit requirement. In the past we have rejected such arguments because "Rule 56\(f\) clearly requires that an affidavit be filed. HN5 'The purpose of the affidavit is to ensure that the nonmoving party is invoking the protection of Rule 56\(f\) in good faith and to afford the trial court the showing necessary to assess the merit of a party's opposition.' An unsworn memorandum opposing a party's motion for summary judgment is not an affidavit." Radich, 886 F.2d at 1394 (citations omitted).⁴

[\[7\]](#) Even if we were to regard the request in plaintiffs' brief opposing the defendants' motion for summary judgment that the court "belay [summary judgment] until a more complete factual record is developed," Plaintiff's Supplemental Memorandum of Law in Opposition to Motion for Summary Judgment, Docket No. 33 at 13, as the functional equivalent of a Rule 56\(f\) affidavit, see St. Surin v. Virgin Island Daily News, Inc., No. 93-7553, 1994 WL 131201 at * 3 \(3d Cir. Apr. 15, 1994\), the district court did not err in considering defendants' motion for summary judgment because plaintiffs did not specify "what particular information is sought; how, if uncovered, it would preclude summary judgment; and why it has not previously been obtained." Dowling v. City of Philadelphia, 855 F.2d 136, 140 \(3d Cir. 1988\).

Plaintiffs stated in their brief in the district court that a deposition of defendant Fadzen would demonstrate specific intent to monopolize. They claimed that Fadzen "may be a source of information not only as to specific intent but as to the product and the market as well, given his involvement with vendors and knowledge of software." Docket No. 33 at [\[8\]](#) 12 n.11. Even assuming that plaintiffs were referring to the defendants' market power, the issue relevant here, it would be insufficient under Rule 56\(f\). Such an amorphous allegation fails to explain what plaintiffs expected to discover, how it applied to their case and why they could not obtain that information elsewhere.

The district court granted summary judgment in this case because the defendants had not entered the relevant market and thus had no market power. Plaintiffs have not explained on appeal why information as to any entry by Bell of Pennsylvania was available only through Fadzen nor what other attempts plaintiffs made to discover this information. It is not readily apparent, for example, why Pastore himself was unable to submit an affidavit with such information. We therefore decline to reverse the district court's decision to consider the summary judgment motion, when plaintiffs failed to move beyond mere generalities in their attempt to delay that consideration.

B.

Standards for Summary Judgment

³ Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56\(f\) provides:

HN4 Should it appear from the affidavits of a party opposing the motion [for summary judgment] that the party cannot for reasons stated present by affidavit facts essential to justify the party's opposition, the court may refuse the application for judgment or may order a continuance to permit affidavits to be obtained or depositions to be taken or discovery to be had or may make such other order as is just.

(emphasis added).

⁴ Plaintiffs claim that the circumstances in this case are "somewhat similar" to Miller v. Beneficial Management Corp., 977 F.2d 834, 846 \(3d Cir. 1992\), where we held that the plaintiff's reliance on a Magistrate Judge's order waiving the Rule 56\(f\) affidavit requirement permitted this court to review the district court's termination of discovery, but we see no similarity (and plaintiffs have not articulated any) other than the fact that in neither case was an affidavit properly filed.

HN6[[↑]] We review the districts court's decision to enter summary judgment de novo, applying the same standard as the district court. Once the moving party has carried [9] the initial burden of showing that no genuine issue of material fact exists, see Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986), the nonmoving party cannot rely upon conclusory allegations in its pleadings or in memoranda and briefs to establish a genuine issue of material fact. Instead, it "must make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of every element essential to his case, based on the affidavits or by the depositions and admissions on file." Harter v. GAF Corp., 967 F.2d 846, 852 (3d Cir. 1992). It is true, however, [512] that "inferences should be drawn in the light most favorable to the non-moving party, and where the non-moving party's evidence contradicts the movant's, then the non-movant's must be taken as true." Big Apple BMW, Inc. v. BMW of North America, Inc., 974 F.2d 1358, 1363 (3d Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 122 L. Ed. 2d 659, 113 S. Ct. 1262 (1993).

Although we have stated in the past that summary judgment should be used sparingly in antitrust litigation because [10] of the fact-intensive nature of such claims, see Harold Friedman, Inc. v. Kroger Co., 581 F.2d 1068, 1080 (3d Cir. 1978), more recently we have taken note that "many courts, including the Supreme Court, have . . . held defendants entitled to summary judgment in antitrust cases," and that despite the "factually intensive" nature of antitrust cases "the standard of Fed. R. Civ. P. 56 remains the same." Town Sound & Custom Tops, Inc. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 959 F.2d 468, 481 (3d Cir.) (in banc) (citations omitted), cert. denied, 121 L. Ed. 2d 139, 113 S. Ct. 196 (1992). HN7[[↑]] In fact, the Supreme Court has recently affirmed that there is no "special burden . . . [for] summary judgment in antitrust cases." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 2083 (1992).

C.

Dangerous Probability of Achieving Monopoly Power

The Supreme Court has recently restated the necessary elements to state a claim under section 2 of the Sherman Act. "HN8[[↑]] To demonstrate attempted monopolization a plaintiff must [11] prove (1) that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power." Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884, 890-91 (1993) (citing 3 Phillip Areeda & Donald F. Turner, Antitrust Law P 820 at 312 (1978)).

The district court granted summary judgment based on the failure of the plaintiffs to meet the "dangerous probability" requirement, and this is the only issue before us on appeal. HN9[[↑]] Determining whether a "dangerous probability" exists requires "inquiry into the relevant product and geographic market and the defendant's economic power in that market." Spectrum Sports, 113 S. Ct. at 892.

The plaintiffs have the burden of defining the market. See Tunis Bros. Co., Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 952 F.2d 715, 726 (3d Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 120 L. Ed. 2d 903, 112 S. Ct. 3034 (1992). Plaintiffs claim that the relevant market is the very narrow one of the CDACCSN itself, see Appellants' [12] Brief at 15 ("the NASSCO product . . . constitutes the relevant market"),⁵ and that they themselves hold a monopoly over the CDACCSN. Id. at 14-15 ("NASSCO possessed monopoly power as to this product market"). Indeed, plaintiffs vigorously assert that the CDACCSN was a unique system that was incomparable to all others then or since on the market. App. at 110 (Pastore Affidavit) ("As late as 1990, it was believed that the system was unprecedented and unique . . . Since

⁵ At other times plaintiffs have argued the market should be "dial up, computer driven remotely-monitored card-access security systems in the geographic region served by Bell Atlantic." Memorandum of Law in Response to Defendants' Motion to Dismiss, Docket No. 11 at 6-7 n.2; see also App. at 24 (Complaint) ("remotely monitored security devices").

1990 other suppliers have advertised similar features However, NASSCO is not aware of any installation which duplicates all of the unique features of the NASSCO system installed at Bell of PA.").⁶

[13] [513] For purposes of the matter before us, we hold plaintiffs to their own contention, see Edward J. Sweeney & Sons, Inc. v. Texaco, Inc., 637 F.2d 105, 117 (3d Cir. 1980) (plaintiff bound by relevant market analysis proposed to district court), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 911, 68 L. Ed. 2d 300, 101 S. Ct. 1981 (1981), and we assume arguendo that the plaintiffs have demonstrated this to be the appropriate market definition.

HN10[] Plaintiffs must thus show that the defendants possessed "sufficient market power" to come dangerously close to success within that market. Fineman v. Armstrong World Indus., Inc., 980 F.2d 171, 197 (3d Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 122 L. Ed. 2d 677, 113 S. Ct. 1285 (1993); Barr Labs., Inc. v. Abbott Labs., 978 F.2d 98, 112 (3d Cir. 1992). There is no simple formula: factors to be reviewed "include the strength of the competition, probable development of the industry, the barriers to entry, the nature of the anti-competitive conduct, and the elasticity of consumer demand." Id. at 112. [14] Most significant, however, is the defendants' share of the relevant market. See id. (collecting cases). Indeed, a pair of the leading antitrust commentators state that "it is clear that the basic thrust of the classic rule is the presumption that attempt does not occur in the absence of a rather significant market share." Areeda & Turner, supra, P 831 at 336.

The defendants have submitted an affidavit which states they are not "engaged in the businesses of (i) remotely monitoring security alarms or (ii) the manufacture, sale or provision of equipment used to remotely monitor alarms or card access security systems." App. at 70. The plaintiffs offer no evidence that the defendants have entered the CDACCSN market. Indeed, they have confined their discussion to defendants' future entry into the market. See, e.g., App. at 24 (Complaint) (defendants are "intent upon entering"); App. at 119 (Pastore Affidavit) ("in the event that Bell Atlantic is determined to enter into the alarm monitoring market"); Memorandum of Law in Response to Defendants' Motion to Dismiss, Docket No. 11 at 2 (defendants are "poised to enter"). Thus, it is clear that the defendants presently have [15] no share of the CDACCSN market.⁷ Without any share in the relevant market as described by plaintiffs, there can be no inference that defendants hold sufficient economic power in that market to create a dangerous probability of monopoly. See Neumann v. Reinforced Earth Co., 252 U.S. App. D.C. 11, 786 F.2d 424, 428 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 851, 93 L. Ed. 2d 116, 107 S. Ct. 181 (1986); see also Fineman, 980 F.2d at 201.

[16] Plaintiffs argue that where there is high degree of predatory conduct coupled with a transparent intent to monopolize, the courts have required a less rigorous showing of market power. They cite Otto Milk Co. v. United Dairy Farmers Coop. Ass'n, 388 F.2d 789 (3d Cir. 1967), for this proposition, but nothing in that case supports this view. In Otto Milk the defendants argued that they were not liable because they did not in fact have a monopoly and we simply held that an attempt claim under Section 2 "does not require an actual monopoly of the territory sought." Id. at 798.

Three sources relied upon by the plaintiffs do support their position. A well-known 1956 law review article by Professor Turner argued that if "defendants are attempting to drive someone out of the market by foul means rather than fair, there is ample warrant for not resorting to any refined analysis as to whether . . . having taken over all the production of a particular commodity, the defendants would still face effective competition from substitutes." Donald F. Turner, Antitrust Policy and the Cellophane Case, 70 Harv. L. Rev. 281, 305 (1956); [17] see also Edwin [*514] S. Rockefeller, Antitrust Questions and Answers 27 (1974) ("If a sufficiently evil intent can be shown--to destroy or exclude a competitor, control prices, or coerce customers or suppliers--the Court might not look for any relevant market beyond the product immediately involved."). And the district court in Rea v. Ford Motor Co., 355 F. Supp. 842, 876-77 (W.D. Pa. 1973), rev'd, 497 F.2d 577 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 868, 42 L. Ed. 2d 106, 95 S. Ct. 126 (1974), held that a finding of dangerous probability of monopoly was unnecessary when overwhelming evidence of specific intent to monopolize existed.

⁶ See also Pastore Affidavit, Docket No. 21 at 6 ("At the time of the misconduct by Bell, to the best of my knowledge, NASSCO was the only supplier of such an integrated access control product."); Plaintiffs' Br. in Opposition to Motion for Summary Judgment, Docket No. 22 at 5 n.3 ("This is not an instance of a superior product among inferior competing products. It is an instance of a product without competitors."); Plaintiffs' Supplemental Memorandum of Law in Opposition to Motion for Summary Judgment, Docket No. 33 at 3 ("the NASSCO product constituted a unique product without parallel or substitute").

⁷ Plaintiffs' position as to the only specific facility that they did not install, the one at the Monroeville Revenue Accounting Center, is unclear. Even if this system was "pirated" from NASSCO, see Pastore Affidavit, Docket No. 21 at 9-10 (defendants "were simultaneously meeting with another contractor, using NASSCO's engineering design for the MRAC"); Plaintiffs' Br. in Opposition to Motion for Summary Judgment, Docket No. 22 at 12 ("an unsuccessful effort by defendants' to mimic the NASSCO product and install and implement that pirated technology at [MRAC]"), there is no evidence that the defendants attempted to market this system to others. The internal use at one site of the NASSCO product is insufficient to indicate a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power.

However, we reversed the district court in Rea and noted that HN11[¹⁸] a showing of "a dangerous probability of achieving monopolization in a relevant market" was necessary to prevail on a section 2 claim. 497 F.2d at 590 n.28. More generally, the principle proposed by the sources on which plaintiffs rely was that adopted by the Ninth Circuit in Lessig v. Tidewater Oil Co., 327 F.2d 459, 474-75 [18] (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 377 U.S. 993, 12 L. Ed. 2d 1046, 84 S. Ct. 1920 (1964), a decision this court rejected in Coleman Motor Co. v. Chrysler Corp., 525 F.2d 1338, 1348 n.17 (3d Cir. 1975), and again in Edward J. Sweeney & Sons, Inc. v. Texaco, Inc., 637 F.2d 105, 117 (3d Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 911, 68 L. Ed. 2d 300, 101 S. Ct. 1981 (1981).

Further, the Supreme Court unanimously interred Lessig in Spectrum Sports. In reversing a Ninth Circuit opinion which relied on Lessig, it held that HN12[¹⁹] intent to monopolize alone "is not sufficient[] to establish the dangerous probability of success that is the object of § 2's prohibition of attempts." Id. at 890. It explained that the "law directs itself not against conduct which is competitive, even severely so, but against conduct which unfairly tends to destroy competition itself. . . . Thus, this Court and other courts have been careful to avoid constructions of § 2 which might chill competition, rather than foster it. . . . For these [19] reasons, § 2 makes the conduct of a single firm unlawful only when it actually monopolizes or dangerously threatens to do so. The concern that § 2 might be applied so as to further anticompetitive ends is plainly not met by inquiring only whether the defendant has engaged in 'unfair' or 'predatory' tactics." Id. at 892 (citations omitted).

In any event, this is not the case in which we must consider whether predatory actions by defendants may reduce the amount of market share that is needed to show a dangerous probability of success. Having shown no market share by defendants, plaintiffs have nothing to couple with their alleged predatory behavior.

Accepting everything the plaintiffs say as true, it is ironic that they basically seek to protect their own monopoly power in the field of dial-up, computer-driven remotely-monitored card-access security systems by use of an antitrust suit. To the extent that plaintiffs may have rights to the product of their creativity and initiative, there are other legal doctrines to protect them. On this record, the district court did not err in holding that they have not shown enough to proceed further under the Sherman Act.

III.

For the foregoing [20] reasons we will affirm the judgment and order of the district court.

DU-BRO FOODS INC. -against- ARON STREIT INC., et al.

Supreme Court of New York, Queens County

May 18, 1994, Decided

INDEX NO. 2700/93

Reporter

1994 N.Y. Misc. LEXIS 762 *

DU-BRO FOODS INC. -against- ARON STREIT INC., et al.

Notice: THIS OPINION IS UNCORRECTED AND WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED IN THE PRINTED OFFICIAL REPORTS.

Core Terms

products, distributors, kosher, cause of action, defendants', termination, customers, alleges, deposition, summary judgment, counterclaim, asserts, food product, competitors, antitrust, relations, summary judgment motion, alleged conspiracy, sold and delivered, unfair competition, contractual, conspiracy, distribute, damages

Judges: [*1] MILANO, J.

Opinion by: MILANO

Opinion

MEMORANDUM

In this action to recover damages for an alleged violation of section 340 of the General Business Law and for tortious interference with contractual or business relations and unfair competition, defendants seek an order dismissing the complaint based upon admissions made by plaintiff's president. Defendant Streit also seeks summary judgment on its counterclaim for goods sold and delivered in the sum of $5,630.30 plus interest.

Plaintiff Du-Bro Foods Inc. (hereinafter "Du-Bro") is a distributor of kosher and non-kosher food products for numerous competing manufacturers. Du-Bro distributes these food products to small supermarkets, groceries and kosher butcher shops in the greater New York Metropolitan area.

Defendant Aron Streit Inc. (hereinafter "Streit") is a major manufacturer of kosher food products. Defendants Intercounty Food Distributors (hereinafter "Intercounty") and Kolpen Distributors Inc. (hereinafter "Kolpen") are distributors of kosher food products in competition with Du-Bro and other distributors. Kolpen and Intercounty distribute Streit products, as well as those of its competitors in the greater New York Metropolitan area.

In 1990 or 1991 Du-Bro purchased another distributor, I. Bernstein [*2] & Sons, Inc., which had been a distributor of Streit's products as well as other brands of kosher products. Du-Bro approached Streit and requested that it be given the right to distribute Streit's products. Streit declined to permit Du-Bro to distribute Streit's products without specifying a reason. Du-Bro, however, was permitted and able to sell Bernstein's inventory of Streit's products. In addition, Du-Bro purchased additional Streit products from Streit's other distributors, which it sold to its customers in 1991.

In September or October 1992 Streit agreed to permit Du-Bro to distribute Streit's products. There was no written agreement between Streit and Du-Bro, and no promises were made as to the length of time the distributorship arrangement would last. In December 1992, Streit terminated the distributorship with Du-Bro and refused to sell to Du-Bro. Du-Bro, however, continued to obtain some Streit products from other distributors and sold those products and other kosher products in competition with Streit's distributors and other distributors of kosher products.

Plaintiff commenced the within action on February 2, 1993 against Streit, Kolpen and Intercounty and has asserted five [*3] causes of action for violation of the State antitrust law, tortious interference with contractual or business relations and unfair competition. The first and second causes of action allege that the defendants conspired to terminate Du-Bro as a distributor of Streit kosher products, in violation of section 340 of the General Business Law, the State antitrust law. Plaintiff alleges that it was terminated because Intercounty and Kolpen had complained to Streit that Du-Bro was selling Streit products in their territory. Plaintiff further alleges that by virtue of Kolpen and Intercounty's market power, the termination of Du-Bro has substantially lessened competition in the relevant market. The third cause of action alleges that defendants tortiously interfered with plaintiff's contractual and business relations with its customers. The fourth cause of action alleges that defendants' actions constitute unfair competition. The fifth cause of action for price discrimination alleges that Streit gave special pricing to Intercounty and Kolpen which it did not provide to Du-Bro, resulting in unfair competition in violation of section 340 of the General Business Law.

Defendants have answered and Streit has asserted a counterclaim for goods sold and delivered in the sum of [*4] $5,630.30, plus interest. Plaintiff, in its amended reply to the counterclaim, asserts as an affirmative defense the failure to state a cause of action and breach of contract.

Defendants now seek an order granting summary judgment dismissing the complaint based upon admissions made by plaintiff's president Leslie Siegel at an examination before trial held on January 4, 1994. Defendants assert that plaintiff, by its own admissions, cannot establish its claims as matter of law. Defendant Streit also seeks an order granting summary judgment on its counterclaim for goods sold and delivered in the sum of $5,630.30.

Plaintiff, in opposition, asserts that the complaint sufficiently states valid causes of action and that defendants' motion is improper as they have not submitted an affidavit from a person with personal knowledge of the facts. Plaintiff also asserts that defendants' motion is premature, as plaintiff did not have an opportunity to review the transcript of Mr. Siegel's deposition. Finally, plaintiff asserts that triable issues of fact may exist to justify opposition but cannot be stated as the evidence of the alleged conspiracy is solely in defendants' possession. Plaintiff thus [*5] asserts that summary judgment should not be granted as discovery has not been completed.

At the outset, the court finds that defendants' motion for summary judgment is neither improper nor premature. Defendants' motion is sufficiently supported by admissible documentary evidence consisting of Mr. Siegel's deposition transcript and other documents, as well as the attorney's affirmation. (Olans v Farrell Lines Inc., 64 NY2d 1092; Gaeta v New York News, 62 NY2d 340.) Furthermore, defendants sent plaintiff's counsel a copy of the transcript of Mr. Siegel's deposition on February 9, 1994, prior to serving the within motion on February 11, 1994. Mr. Siegel did not sign the deposition and has not sought to make any changes in its form or substance. Inasmuch as Mr. Siegel has had ample time to review and sign the deposition between the time it was served and the time this motion appeared on the calendar of March 29, 1994, defendants are entitled to use the unsigned deposition as fully as though signed. (CPLR 3116\(a\).)

It is well settled that where, as here, the moving party has demonstrated that it is entitled to summary judgment, the opposing party must demonstrate by admissible evidence the existence of factual issues requiring a trial of the action or tender an acceptable [*6] excuse for the failure to do so. (Zuckerman v City of New York, 49 NY2d 557.) Plaintiff's opposing affidavits merely repeat the allegations set forth in the complaint and plaintiff's reliance on mere conclusions, expressions of hope and unsubstantiated allegations are insufficient to defeat a motion for summary judgment. (See generally, Corcoran Group Ins. v Morris, 107 AD2d 622, affd 64 NY2d 1034.) Contrary to plaintiff's assertions, the issue before the court is not the sufficiency of the complaint but the sufficiency of plaintiff's evidence. In view of the sworn admissions made by Mr. Siegel at his deposition, it is clear that plaintiff cannot establish its claims as a matter of law. Moreover, further discovery is not warranted as essential elements of plaintiff's claims are based upon plaintiff's own knowledge or can be established by statistical data. Plaintiff, however, has presented no such evidence to the court in opposition to defendants' motion for summary judgment.

Plaintiff's first and second causes of action allege violations of the antitrust provisions of section 340(1) of the General Business Law, commonly known as the Donnelly Act. A party claiming a violation of this statute, which is based on the Federal Sherman Antitrust Act \(15 USC § 1 et seq\); see, State of New York v Mobil Oil Corp., 38 NY2d 460) must (1) identify the relevant product market, (2) describe the nature and effects of the alleged conspiracy, [*7] (3) describe how the economic impact of the conspiracy restrained trade in the market in question and (4) identify a conspiracy or reciprocal relationship between two or more parties. (Home Town Muffler Inc. v Cole Muffler Inc., AD2d , 608 NYS2d 735; Creative Trading Co. v Larkin-Pluznick-Larkin Inc., 136 AD2d 461.)

Mr. Siegel identified the relevant market as kosher food products and the geographic market as the greater New York Metropolitan area. Mr. Siegel stated that Du-Bro and other kosher product distributors, including Intercounty and Kolpen, sell Streit's products and kosher products of Streit's competitors in competition with one another in the relevant geographic area. These distributors sell several brands of kosher products in competition with one other and their customers traditionally buy several brands of these products. Mr. Siegel admitted that there is active interbrand and intrabrand competition in the relevant market. Mr. Siegel also admitted that no one distributor or distributors control the market or has the ability to set prices that would prevent anyone from selling in competition with anyone else. While plaintiff asserts that Intercounty and Kolpen "control" approximately 90 percent of the "sales of Streit food products", Mr. Siegel stated that he had no statistical proof to substantiate [*8] this allegation. Mr. Siegel further acknowledged that Du-Bro has not attempted to acquire this information or to collect any data, and has no statistical information to show what share of the kosher products market any supplier or distributor has. Mr. Siegel testified that Streit did not place any restrictions on where Du-Bro could sell Streit's products. Mr. Siegel stated that Kolpen complained to Streit that Du-Bro was selling Streit products to its Brooklyn customers. However, when Streit advised Du-Bro of Kolpen's complaint, Streit did not threaten or coerce plaintiff to limit its sales to any particular area or customers. Mr. Siegel admitted that plaintiff did not have any evidence of any conspiracy between the defendants. Mr. Siegel, however, stated that active competition existed among kosher products distributors and suppliers, and that Streit's termination did not prevent Du-Bro from actively competing in the kosher product market.

In view of these admissions, Du-Bro cannot maintain its antitrust claims, as it cannot show that the termination has substantially lessened competition or has an anti-competitive effect. Du-Bro is also unable to establish that defendants' conduct [*9] constitutes a conspiracy in violation of the Donnelly Act. While direct evidence of a conspiracy is rarely available and must be proven by inferences from the behavior of the alleged conspirators (see, H.L. Hayden Co. of New York v Siemens Med. Sys., 879 F2d 1005), plaintiff at most can only establish that Kolpen may have complained to Streit. Terminating a distributor in response to complaints by other distributors is not sufficient to withstand a summary judgment motion. (See, Monsanto Co. v Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752; Capital Imaging Associates, P.C. v Mohawk Valley Medical Associates Inc., 791 F Supp 956, 965, 769 F2d 1005; Home Town Muffler Inc. v Cole Muffler Inc., supra.) An agreement will not be inferred from such acts and such actions do not indicate concerted behavior. Rather, there must be evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators were acting independently. (See, Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574.) Antitrust laws are only concerned with acts that harm "competition and not competitors". (Apex Oil Co. v DiMauro, 713 F Supp 587, quoting, Brunswick Corp. v Pueblo-Bowl-O-Mat Inc., 429 U.S. 477.) Therefore, behavior which hurts or even destroys an individual competitor is not illegal under the Sherman act unless it also adversely affects competition. (Apex Oil Co. v DiMauro, supra; Capital Imaging Associates, P.C. v Mohawk Valley Medical Associates Inc., supra.) These principles of law are equally applicable here under the Donnelly Act. (Bello v Cablevision Systems Corp., 185 AD2d 262; [Creative Trading Co. v Larkin-Pluznick-Larkin \[*101\] Inc., supra](#).)

Plaintiff's third cause of action alleges tortious interference with contractual relations. Therefore, plaintiff is required to establish (1) the existence of a contract between Du-Bro and its customers, (2) defendants' knowledge of the contract, (3) defendants' intentional inducement of the customers to breach the contract and (4) damages. (See, Kronos Inc. Avx Corp., 81 NY2d 90.) Mr. Siegel, at his deposition admitted that there were no contracts between Du-Bro and its customers. There was also no contract between Du-Bro and Streit and, in any event, a party cannot tortiously interfere with its own contract. At the most, plaintiff may be able to show the existence of future contractual relations or a contract terminable at will. In order to recover damages for such interference plaintiff is required to show that the defendants used wrongful means. The use of persuasion alone, as in the case at bar, even if knowingly directed at interfering with a contract, does not constitute wrongful means. (Guard-Life Corp. v Parker Hardware Mfg. Corp., 50 NY2d 183.) In addition, plaintiff admittedly cannot establish that it lost any customers as a result of Streit's termination.

Plaintiff's fourth cause of action for unfair competition is based on the alleged conspiracy [*11] and interference with business relations. Plaintiff has presented no evidence in support of this cause of action. The basic question in such an action is whether the acts complained of are fair or unfair. (Fisher v Star Co., 231 NY 414; Cigogne Inc. v Luxury Trading Corp., 13 AD2d 928.) Plaintiff herein has not made any showing of any act which contravenes any accepted commercial practice. In addition, plaintiff is unable to show that defendants either misappropriated something from plaintiff or attempted to palm itself off as the plaintiff. (See, Ruder & Finn Inc. v Seaboard Surety Co., 52 NY2d 663.) Mr. Siegel admitted that defendants did not engage in such conduct. While plaintiff alleges that it was induced by Streit to make add onal expenditures in connection with the distributorship, Mr. Siegel admitted that he had no records which would enable him to prove such expenditures. In addition, while plaintiff alleges in its complaint that defendants traded on its goodwill, Siegel admitted that Kolpen and Intercounty were selling Streit products before Du-Bro and that they had developed their own goodwill. Mr. Siegel further admitted that there has been no confusion, mistake or deception in the marketplace about the distributors or who they represented. Finally, Mr. Siegel admitted the Du-Bro did not lose any [*12] customers or that its reputation with its customers was damaged as a result of the termination by Streit. Plaintiff thus has sustained no damages.

Plaintiff's fifth cause of action for price discrimination in violation of the Donnelly Act is dismissed. It is well settled that the State antitrust law does not outlaw price discrimination and that no such cause of action exists under this statute. (State of New York v Mobil Oil Co., 38 NY2d 460; TDK Electronics Corp. v M & A Enterprises, 172 AD2d 603; see also, Jack's Cookie Co. Inc. v Du-Bro Foods, Inc., 145 Misc 2d 699.) In order to state a cognizable price discrimination claim, plaintiff must show that specific identified sales were lost due to the price advantage given to its competitor. (J. Truett Payne Co. Inc. v Chrysler Motors Corp., 451 U.S. 557.) Plaintiff herein cannot make any such showing. Mr. Siegel has admitted that no price advantages were given to his competitors. Rather, Mr. Siegel stated that, upon request, Streit gave plaintiff the same pricing, specials, discounts and nonrefundable policy as it gave to Kolpen and Intercounty. In addition, plaintiff is unable to establish that it lost any identifiable, specific sales as a result of special pricing given to Intercounty or Kolpen.

Streit's request for summary judgment on its counterclaim for goods sold and delivered in the sum of $5,630.30 is granted. The documentary evidence submitted establishes [*13] that goods were sold and delivered to plaintiff by Streit on December 9, 1992 in the sum of $5,630.30. An itemized bill was sent to Du-Bro on December 12, 1992 which had a term of "net 30 days". Mr. Siegel, at his deposition, admitted to receiving these goods and further admitted that the bill was not paid. While Du-Bro claims that Streit sought payment prior to the due date, it is undisputed that the bill is now past due and unpaid. Plaintiff's affirmative defense of breach of contract, offsetting Streit's counterclaim is based upon the termination of the distributorship. Inasmuch as plaintiff has no viable cause of action against Streit, this defense is without merit. Streit is therefore entitled to judgment in its favor in the sum of $5,630.30, together with interest from January 12, 1993.

In view of the foregoing, defendants' motion for summary judgment dismissing the complaint is granted and defendant Streit's request for summary judgment on its counterclaim is granted.

Settle order.

/s/ Milano

J.S.C.

End of Document

Maui Trucking v. Operating Eng'rs Local Union No. 3

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

August 9, 1993, Argued, Submitted, San Francisco, California ; May 18, 1994, Filed

No. 92-15321

Reporter

37 F.3d 436 *; 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 26567 ; 146 L.R.R.M. 2449; 128 Lab. Cas. (CCH) P11,102; 1994 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,743; 94 Cal. Daily Op. Service 3554; 94 Daily Journal DAR 13394

MAUI TRUCKING, INC.; DECOITE TRUCKING, INC.; and T.J. GOMES TRUCKING CO., INC., Plaintiffs-Appellants, and GENERAL CONTRACTORS LABOR ASSOCIATION and LABOR ASSOCIATION OF THE BUILDING INDUSTRY ASSOCIATION OF HAWAII, Plaintiffs-Intervenors-Appellees, v. OPERATING ENGINEERS LOCAL UNION NO. 3 INTERNATIONAL UNION OF OPERATING ENGINEERS AFL-CIO; DOUGLAS SADO dba DOUG'S TRUCKING; DOUG'S TRUCKING EQUIPMENT & REPAIR, INC.; SADO TRUCKING, INC. dba SADO TRUCKING CO.; and CHARLES BARTON dba C & N TRUCKING, Defendants-Appellees.

Subsequent History: [1] As Amended on Denial of Rehearing and Rehearing En Banc September 23, 1994.

Prior History: Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Hawaii. D.C. No. CV-91-00359-SPK. Samuel P. King, Senior Judge, Presiding.

Original Opinion Previously Reported at: 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 10870.

Disposition: REVERSED and REMANDED for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Core Terms

antitrust, truckers, preservation, employees, general contractor, subcontracting, exemption, hauling, union activity, labor law, Relations, nonunion, off-site, island, bargaining unit, restrictions, contractors, secondary, benefits, universe, boycott, lawsuit, Metal

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Unfair Labor Practices > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > General Overview

HN1 Exemptions & Immunities, Labor

See § 8(e) of the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C. § 158\(e\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

HN2 [down] Exemptions & Immunities, Labor

Federal antitrust law excepts traditional union activity from antitrust review.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > General Overview

HN3 [down] Exemptions & Immunities, Labor

The touchstone of § 8(e) of the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C.S. § 158\(e\), is whether the agreement is addressed to the labor relations of the contracting employer vis-a-vis his own employees, or whether it is tactically calculated to satisfy union objectives elsewhere.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > General Overview

HN4 [down] Exemptions & Immunities, Labor

Contractual clauses with a primary purpose serving the general institutional interest of the union in organizing or regulating the labor policies of employers with whom the union does not have a collective bargaining relationship are unlawful under § 8(e) of the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C.S. § 158\(e\), because they are not aimed at preserving either the work or the employment standards of unit employees.

Counsel: Jeffrey S. Harris, Torkildson, Katz, Jossem, Fonseca, Jaffe, Moore & Hetherington, Honolulu, Hawaii, for the plaintiffs-appellants.

Barry W. Marr and David P. Ledger, Carlsmith, Ball, Wichman, Murray, Case, Mukai & Ichiki, Honolulu, Hawaii, for the plaintiffs-intervenors-appellees.

T. Anthony Gill, Gill & Zukerman, Honolulu, Hawaii; Marsha S. Berzon, Altshuler, Berzon, Nussbaum, Berzon & Rubin, San Francisco, California; and Barbara A. Petrus, Goodsill, Anderson, Quinn & Stifel, Honolulu, Hawaii, for the defendants-appellees.

Judges: Before: Joseph T. Sneed, Cecil F. Poole, and Stephen S. Trott, Circuit Judges. Opinion by Judge Trott.

Opinion by: STEPHEN S. TROTT

Opinion

[*437] ORDER AMENDING OPINION and DENYING PETITION FOR REHEARING and REHEARING EN BANC

TROTT, Circuit Judge:

This lawsuit arises from a collective bargaining agreement [2] ("Master Agreement") entered into in Hawaii by the Operating Engineers Local Union No. 3 ("Local No. 3") on one hand, and the General Contractors Labor

Association and the Building Industry Labor Association ("Associations" or "General Contractors") on the other. Section 24E of this Master Agreement covers the subcontracting by the General Contractors of off-site work such as the hauling of construction materials to and from the General Contractors' job sites. With the alleged purpose of protecting the work and employment opportunities of all employees covered by the agreement, including the benefits of the Master Agreement itself, Section 24E requires the General Contractors to subcontract off-site work only to subcontractors who agree (1) to pay their employees a total wage and benefits package equal in value to the wage and benefits package payable under the Master Agreement; (2) to ensure that their employees work in accordance with the schedule of hours established in the Master Agreement; (3) to submit certified payroll records to Local 3 and to the Associations; and, (4) to submit any disputes regarding their compliance with these requirements to the grievance procedures set [3] forth in the Master Agreement.

The plaintiffs in this case are independent nonunion truckers with an established history of off-site hauling. When they learned of the impending implementation of Section [*438] 24E, they became concerned it would effectively prevent the General Contractors from continuing to do business with them. Accordingly, they threatened Local No. 3 and the Associations with a lawsuit. This development caused the Associations to refuse to sign and implement Section 24E out of concern that it might not be lawful. This refusal prompted Local No. 3 to file an action for declaratory judgment against the Associations seeking a declaration that the subcontracting restrictions in Section 24E were lawful under federal labor and antitrust law.

In that action, to which the independent nonunion truckers were not parties, Judge David A. Ezra ruled that Section 24E was facially valid and did not violate section 8(e) of the National Labor Relations Act¹ because Section 24E constituted a valid "union standards clause." See Associated Builders & Contractors v. N.L.R.B., 654 F.2d 1301, 1307 \(9th Cir. 1981\), aff'd in part, vacated in part, 456 U.S. 645, 72 L. Ed. 2d 398, 102 S. Ct. 2071 \(1982\). [4] Quoting and relying on General Teamsters Local 386, 198 N.L.R.B. 1038 \(1972\), Judge Ezra concluded that the disputed restrictions furthered the union's "legitimate interest in preventing the undermining of the work opportunities and standards of employees in a contractual bargaining unit by subcontractors who do not meet the prevailing wage scales and employee benefits covered by the contract." Id. In so holding, however, Judge Ezra noted that "where a union standards clause is intended not to protect or preserve the working standards of employees in the unit, but rather to control the employment practices of firms that seek to do business with the employer and to aid and assist union members generally, the object of that clause is secondary and unlawful." (citing General Teamsters Local 386, 198 N.L.R.B. at 1038). See Sheet Metal Workers Local 91, 294 N.L.R.B. 766, 770 \(1989\); National Woodwork Mfrs. Ass'n v. N.L.R.B., 386 U.S. 612, 644-45, 18 L. Ed. 2d 357, 87 S. Ct. 1250 \(1967\). Accordingly, Judge Ezra opined that although [5] Section 24E was facially valid, "it may nonetheless be unlawful as applied." (citing Building Materials and Construction Local 216, 198 N.L.R.B. 1046 \(1972\), aff'd sub nom. Building Material & Construction Local No. 216 v. N.L.R.B., 171 U.S. App. D.C. 440, 520 F.2d 172 \(D.C. Cir. 1975\)).

In Building Materials, the union sought to apply similar restrictions to subcontractors hauling pre-stressed concrete girders. Because the general contractors had never hauled pre-stressed girders and had no plans to do so, the court upheld the NLRB's conclusions (1) that the object of [6] the restrictions, as applied to the hauling of pre-stressed girders, was not the preservation or protection of unit work, and (2) that therefore their aim was "secondary" and thus a violation of section 8(e). Building Materials, 520 F.2d at 179. Noting that "the question of whether the restrictions are invalid, as applied, depends on specific factual situations that may in time unfold," Judge Ezra deferred resolution of this issue to a later date. See In re Bituminous Coal Wage Agreements, 756 F.2d 284, 290-291 \(3d Cir.\), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 863 \(1985\).

Building on his holding that the disputed clause did not violate section 8(c) and was a legitimate subcontracting restriction, Judge Ezra also held that the clause did not violate HN2 federal antitrust law which excepts traditional union activity from antitrust review. Continental Maritime v. Pacific Coast Metal Trades, 817 F.2d 1391, 1393 (9th Cir. 1987); California Dump Truck Owners Ass'n v. Associated General Contractors, 562 F.2d 607, 610 (9th Cir. 1977).

¹ HN1 Section 8(e) makes it an unfair labor practice for any labor organization and any employer "to enter into any contract or agreement, express or implied, whereby such employer . . . agrees to . . . cease doing business with any other person." 29 U.S.C. § 158\(e\) \(1988\). Any such contract shall to that extent be unenforceable and void.

Needless [7] to say, both Local No. 3 and the Associations were generally pleased with the outcome, but the independent nonunion truckers were not. Thus, the independent truckers filed the present lawsuit challenging the validity of Section 24E as applied to them. Because they were not parties to the earlier lawsuit, the independent truckers were permitted again to litigate the issues decided by Judge Ezra, including the "as applied" issue he did not decide. The independent [*439] truckers originally filed this lawsuit only against Local No. 3, but the district court permitted the Associations to intervene as plaintiffs seeking a declaration as to the legality and enforceability of Section 24E as applied to the facts of this case.

Eventually, motions and cross motions for summary judgment were joined, and Judge Samuel King ruled for the Associations and Local No. 3 and against the plaintiffs. On the central issue of whether Section 24E was valid as applied, Judge King held that it was because it served as a "union standards clause" designed appropriately (1) to preserve the work of the union, and (2) to preserve "union standards."

The independent truckers appeal this ruling. We have jurisdiction over [8] this timely appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1291, and we reverse and remand for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

I

A.

The first issue we must decide is whether the appropriate universe for work preservation analysis is the entire State of Hawaii, as the Associations and Local No. 3 claim, or whether it can be limited to just the island of Maui, as the independent truckers argue. Judge King held that the relevant work universe was coextensive with the bargaining unit, and thus that the universe to which we look in testing Section 24E as applied is the entire State of Hawaii. We agree. The record demonstrates that many General Contractors, including all the largest in the state, do business on all of the Hawaiian islands. Contractors move equipment from island to island, and union members move as well to find work. It would be senseless to break the state into parts for this analysis, possibly creating different rules for each island.

B.

Next, we must decide from the record whether, as a matter of law, and looking at the State of Hawaii as a whole, Section 24E is valid "as applied." To do this we must determine whether the contract [9] clause at issue has the "primary purpose of protecting unit work or unit standards" or, instead, the secondary purpose of promoting the broader goals of the union "by asserting control over the labor relations" of other employers. [Associated Gen. Contractors, 280 N.L.R.B. 698 (1986).] . . . As the Supreme Court has stated, HN3[] the touchstone of Section 8(e) is whether the agreement is addressed to "the labor relations of the contracting employer vis-a-vis his own employees" or whether it is "tactically calculated to satisfy union objectives elsewhere." National Woodwork Mfrs., 386 U.S. 612, 644-45, 18 L. Ed. 2d 357, 87 S. Ct. 1250 (1967).

Sheet Metal Workers Local 91, 294 N.L.R.B. at 770.

Judge King held, under this test, that if the appropriate universe for work preservation analysis was only the island of Maui, there would exist a genuine issue of material fact as to whether there was any relevant work to preserve. He added, however, that an examination of the state as a whole would reveal that Association members performed at least 2.5% to 7.5% of the total [10] amount of off-site hauling work ordinarily performed by the plaintiffs. Judge King concluded that this amount of off-site hauling was sufficient as a matter of law to establish that Section 24E had a legitimate work preservation purpose.

Although this is a close call, we respectfully disagree with Judge King. Although Maui might not be the sole universe to which one must look to determine this issue, neither can what we learn from Maui be ignored when we examine the situation statewide. Looking at the whole factual picture in the light most favorable to the non-moving party, it appears that on Maui only three of sixty-seven General Contractors ever perform the work at issue, and then only occasionally. On Oahu, there may be only three Generals who do such work whereas the other sixty-four or sixty-five do not do such work anywhere in the State. This scenario does not demonstrate that the [*440] disputed work has been "traditionally performed" by the General Contractors. In this respect, the present case is similar to Sheet Metal Workers Union Local 162 \(Associated Pipe and Fittings Manufacturer, et al.\), 207 N.L.R.B. 741 \(1973\), where the Board affirmed [11] a holding by an ALJ that the clause under consideration was secondary and violated § 8(e) because it did not have the purpose of preserving work:

Of some 35 contractors who appear to engage in any commercial work in excess of 3,200 square feet, the overwhelming majority purchase from 90 to 100 percent of the round pipe and fittings each uses on his construction jobs from mass production manufacturers, and . . . this has been a continuous practice on the part of most of the contractors for periods ranging up to 20 years. . . .

. . .

. . . The conclusion is inescapable that the fabrication of these items by unit employees has not been customary or traditional at any time. . . . While it has been shown that contractors can, and in some instances do, fabricate round pipe and fittings, this comes about only in exceptional situations and to meet special needs.

Id., at 748-49. Moreover, the Associations appear to concede that their involvement in this work "has been declining over time, yet some remains." Apparently, the General Contractors do not want to "tie their assets up into owning a whole lot of metal [and sometimes] letting it sit around idle."

[12] In summary, we conclude that the record demonstrates a genuine issue of material fact as to whether Section 24E, as applied to these facts, had a legitimate primary object of preserving relevant work. The work the Associations claim to want to preserve gives every appearance of being so scanty that Section 24E cannot be viewed as a matter of law as a legitimate means to address "the labor relations of the contracting employer vis-a-vis his own employees." National Woodwork Mfrs., 386 U.S. at 645. As Judge Ezra observed, an "as applied" analysis is heavily dependent on the facts, and the record in this regard is replete with conflicting affidavits. Accord In re Bituminous Coal, 756 F.2d at 293 ("Whether the clause is valid . . . must depend on individualized fact finding.").

Our holding as to Section 24E necessarily requires us to vacate the district court's grant of summary judgment in favor of the Associations and Local No. 3 on the issue of whether Section 24E violated Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act. We do so based in part on Richards v. Neilson Freight Lines, 810 F.2d 898 \(9th Cir. 1987\). [13]

In Richards, the plaintiff, a nonunion employer, alleged that the union pressured union employers to boycott the plaintiff because the union was attempting to organize the plaintiff's employees. The boycott was designed to force the plaintiff to change its substandard wages and working conditions. 810 F.2d at 906. The plaintiff argued that the union-led activity was not covered by the nonstatutory exemption from antitrust review because the activity constituted an unfair labor practice under section 8(e). We rejected that argument:

The Supreme Court's consideration . . . of the actual and potential anticompetitive effects of [such] agreements independently of the violation of section 158\(e\) suggests that the presence of a section 158\(e\) violation may not itself decide the exemption issue. . . . Connell Constr. Co. v. Plumbers & Steamfitters Local Union No. 100, 421 U.S. 616, 44 L. Ed. 2d 418, 95 S. Ct. 1830 (1975),] does not suggest that every violation of section 158\(e\) gives rise to an antitrust suit. It is not paradoxical that a labor law violation may still be within the antitrust exemption, [14] for the violation will carry its own remedies under the labor laws, although we recognize that in some cases a violation of the labor laws may involve conduct whose consequences are so far-reaching that it falls outside the exemption. Where, as here, there is no showing the alleged agreements pose actual or potential anticompetitive risks other than those related to a reduction in competitive advantages based on differential wage and working conditions, the nonstatutory [*441] labor exemption prevents antitrust scrutiny of the union activity.

810 F.2d at 906 (citation omitted).

The independent truckers argue that Richards is distinguishable on its facts, pointing out that the offending union activity in that case was limited in scope and market impact as compared to the alleged marketwide impact in this case. Quoting the Sixth Circuit for the proposition that "Richards goes to the extreme in protecting union activity . . ." In re Detroit Auto Dealers Assn., Inc., 955 F.2d 457, 466 (6th Cir. 1992), the independent truckers ask us to draw a line between Richards and the instant case. Because a trial is in the offing, however, we decline the independent [15] truckers' suggestion in favor of remanding this issue for resolution on a more complete record by the district court. See also Sun-Land Nurseries v. Southern California District Council, 793 F.2d 1110, 1117 (9th Cir. 1986) ("a valid subcontracting clause contained in a collective bargaining agreement cannot serve as the basis of an antitrust claim," unless it is an instrument of an antitrust conspiracy.). Parenthetically, we do not believe that such an approach in this case places the jurisdictional cart before the horse, as now claimed at the eleventh hour by the Associations. See Sun-Land Nurseries, 793 F.2d at 1118, n.1.

C.

Judge King held, however, that "even in the absence of work to preserve," Section 24E would be valid "as applied" because it also preserves "union standards." Judge King said:

While "work preservation" and "union standards" are often discussed together, they are two separate concepts and either or both may be legitimately sought by unions through subcontracting agreements. Protecting union wages and benefits for the unit employees serves the unit's interests, independent of preserving work. It [16] prevents the erosion of union wage rates by non-union truckers, and is thus a valid, primary goal of the union.

We disagree with this analysis. As we read the cases and consider the reasons why primary purpose agreements are acceptable but secondary boycotts are not, it is clear to us that without work to perform, the preservation of union standards per se is tantamount to attempting "to satisfy union objectives elsewhere." Sheet Metal Workers Local 91, 294 N.L.R.B. at 770. If there is no substantial work to preserve, if there is no substantial competition for the work, it does not appear, as Judge King believed, that the agreed upon union wage or work opportunities could be eroded by others doing different work.

Indeed, the district court's reliance on Sheet Metal Workers Local 91 for its conclusion appears misplaced given that the Board's justification for union standards clauses in that case was the protection of unit work:

It is also open to argument - again one not advanced by Respondents - that the clause simply protects union standards, that is, if the related firms paid union wages it would not be necessary for them to also sign union agreements. [17] Similar clauses are found to be lawful in other contexts subcontracting, for example, because they conceivably protect unit work.

294 N.L.R.B. at 771 (emphasis added). See also Plumbers & Steamfitters Local 342 v. N.L.R.B., 194 U.S. App. D.C. 297, 598 F.2d 216, 219 (D.C. Cir. 1979) ("The Supreme Court has made clear and the Board acknowledges, that not all so-called 'work preservation' agreements such as the union standards clause in the Agreement violate the National Labor Relations Act."); Building Material & Construction Teamsters Union Local No. 216, Etc. v. N.L.R.B., 171 U.S. App. D.C. 440, 520 F.2d 172, 179 n.6 (D.C. Cir. 1975) (court affirmed Board's holding that "since employers who [were] parties to the AGC contract were not engaged in [a particular] type of hauling, nor [were] shown even to have anticipated its performance, the object of [the union standards clause] was not the preservation or protection of unit work"); Truck Drivers Union Local No. 413 v. N.L.R.B., 118 U.S. App. D.C. 149, 334 F.2d 539, 548 n.13 [18] (D.C. Cir.) ("Since this clause is entitled 'Subcontracting,' we assume - in the absence of any indication to the contrary - that its scope is limited to the contracting out of work which [*442] otherwise would be performed by members of the bargaining unit."), cert. denied, 329 U.S. 916 (1964); In re Bituminous Coal, 756 F.2d at 289 ("A union standards clause is designed to inhibit subcontracting of work that would otherwise be performed by members of the bargaining unit."); Associated General Contractors, 280 N.L.R.B. 698, 701-02 HN4 [↑] ("Contractual clauses with a primary purpose serving the general institutional interest of the union in organizing or regulating the labor policies of employers with whom the union does not have a collective bargaining relationship are unlawful under Section 8(e) because . . . they are not aimed at preserving either the work or the employment standards of unit employees.") (emphasis added).

D.

Local No. 3 argues that even if off-site hauling is not found to be work "traditionally or customarily" performed by the members of the bargaining units, the work in question [19] is still "fairly claimable," i.e., work that requires the same skills and abilities as the traditional work of the unit employees. Under this doctrine, which has not yet been adopted in this circuit, where the employees have not actually done the work in dispute but where it is of the same type as their traditional work, a clause that would cover it may be upheld as a valid work preservation agreement. See Frito-Lay, Inc. v. Retail Clerks Local 7, 629 F.2d 653, 660 (10th Cir. 1980). The National Labor Relations Board has recognized the validity of this doctrine as a means of validating clauses that seek to recognize work regarded as fairly claimable. Teamsters Local Union No. 89, 254 N.L.R.B. 783, 786 (1981), aff'd sub nom. N.L.R.B. v. General Drivers, 684 F.2d 359 (6th Cir. 1982).

We are unable to address this argument. The district court did not consider it, and the record is insufficient for us to tell whether it applies to this case. On remand, the parties shall have another opportunity to address this issue, assuming they wish to do so.

REVERSED and REMANDED for further proceedings consistent [20] with this opinion.

ORDER

The opinion filed May 18, 1994, slip opinion page 5171, is amended as follows:

The second full paragraph on page 5180 of the slip opinion is ordered deleted in its entirety, and the following language (3 paragraphs) is ordered inserted in its place:

Our holding as to Section 24E necessarily requires us to vacate the district court's grant of summary judgment in favor of the Associations and Local No. 3 on the issue of whether Section 24E violated Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act. We do so based in part on Richards v. Neilson Freight Lines, 810 F.2d 898 (9th Cir. 1987).

In Richards, the plaintiff, a nonunion employer, alleged that the union pressured union employers to boycott the plaintiff because the union was attempting to organize the plaintiff's employees. The boycott was designed to force the plaintiff to change its substandard wages and working conditions. 810 F.2d at 906. The plaintiff argued that the union-led activity was not covered by the nonstatutory exemption from antitrust review because the activity constituted an unfair labor practice under section 8(e). We [21] rejected that argument:

The Supreme Court's consideration . . . of the actual and potential anticompetitive effects of [such] agreements independently of the violation of section 158(e) suggests that the presence of a section 158(e) violation may not itself decide the exemption issue. . . . Connell [Constr. Co. v. Plumbers & Steamfitters Local Union No. 100, 421 U.S. 616, 44 L. Ed. 2d 418, 95 S. Ct. 1830 (1975).] does not suggest that every violation of section 158(e) gives rise to an antitrust suit. It is not paradoxical that a labor law violation may still be within the antitrust exemption, for the violation will carry its own remedies under the labor laws, although we recognize that in some cases a violation of the labor laws may involve conduct whose consequences are so far-reaching that it falls outside the exemption. Where, as here, there is no showing the alleged agreements pose actual or potential anticompetitive risks other than those related to a reduction in competitive advantages based on differential wage and working conditions, the nonstatutory labor exemption prevents antitrust scrutiny of the union activity.

[22] 810 F.2d at 906 (citation omitted).

The independent truckers argue that Richards is distinguishable on its facts, pointing out that the offending union activity in that case was limited in scope and market impact as compared to the alleged marketwide impact in this case. Quoting the Sixth Circuit for the proposition that "Richards goes to the extreme in protecting union activity . . .

.," In re Detroit Auto Dealers Assn, Inc., 955 F.2d 457, 466 (6th Cir. 1992), the independent truckers ask us to draw a line between Richards and the instant case. Because a trial is in the offing, however, we decline the independent truckers' suggestion in favor of remanding this issue for resolution on a more complete record by the district court. See also Sun-Land Nurseries v. Southern California District Council, 793 F.2d 1110, 1117 (9th Cir. 1986) ("a valid subcontracting clause contained in a collective bargaining agreement cannot serve as the basis of an antitrust claim," unless it is an instrument of an antitrust conspiracy.). Parenthetically, we do not believe that such an approach in this case places the jurisdictional [23] cart before the horse, as now claimed at the eleventh hour by the Associations. See Sun-Land Nurseries, 793 F.2d at 1118, n.1.

With these amendments, the panel has voted to deny the petition for rehearing. Judges Poole and Trott have voted to reject the suggestion for rehearing en banc, and Judge Sneed so recommends. The full court has been advised of the suggestion for rehearing en banc, and no active judge has requested such a vote. Fed. R. App. P. 35.

Accordingly, the petition for rehearing is denied, and the suggestion for rehearing en banc is rejected.

End of Document

Hairston v. Pacific-10 Conference

United States District Court for the Western District of Washington

May 20, 1994, Decided ; May 20, 1994, FILED; May 23, 1994, ENTERED

NO. C93-1763R

Reporter

893 F. Supp. 1485 *; 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20495 **

RUSSELL HAIRSTON, et al., Plaintiffs, v. PACIFIC-10 CONFERENCE, an unincorporated association, Defendant.

Core Terms

players, antitrust, souvenir, damages, sellers, bowl, athletic, football, injunctive relief, competitors, consumers, injuries, antitrust violation, specific intent, ticket holder, allegations, factors, unfair, team, cause of action, Clayton Act, speculative, third-party, deprived, courts, season, cases

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

HN1 [] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

In considering motions to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\), a court construes the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff and takes its allegations as true. The court, however, still examines whether the allegations in the complaint follow from the description of the facts alleged by the plaintiff.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > Injury in Fact

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Justiciability > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN2 [] Standing, Injury in Fact

There is a three-part test for determining whether constitutional standing exists: (1) plaintiff must have suffered an injury in fact, i.e., an invasion of a legally protected, particularized, non-hypothetical interest; (2) there must be a causal connection between the injury and the conduct complained of; and (3) it must be likely, not speculative, that the injury will be remedied by a favorable decision.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

HN3 Remedies, Damages

Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, allows the recovery of treble damages by any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

HN4 Clayton Act, Claims

To bring a private action under § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, a plaintiff must establish that it has "antitrust standing." It may do so by showing that it is a proper party to bring a private antitrust action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN5 Private Actions, Standing

There are five factors to be considered in determining if a plaintiff is a proper party to bring an antitrust suit: (1) The nature of the plaintiff's claimed injury; (2) The directness of the injury; (3) The specific intent of the alleged conspirators; (4) The character of the damages, including the risk of duplicative recovery, the complexity of apportionment, and their speculative character; and (5) The existence of other, more appropriate plaintiffs.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > General Overview

HN6 Private Actions, Standing

The first factor of the five-factor antitrust standing test, which focuses on whether an "antitrust injury" has been alleged, is a threshold requirement for antitrust standing. If the plaintiff satisfies the requirement of antitrust injury, the court then must examine the other four factors. None of those remaining factors controls the decision and a court may find standing if the balance of factors so instructs.

893 F. Supp. 1485, *1485L^A994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20495, 20495

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN7 [down] Private Actions, Remedies

In determining if a plaintiff has alleged an antitrust injury, the courts generally look at whether it is a participant in the same market as the alleged wrongdoer, either as a consumer or as a competitor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN8 [down] Collectives & Cooperatives, Clayton Act

The Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., does not confine its protection to consumers, or to purchasers, or to competitors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN9 [down] Private Actions, Remedies

A direct antitrust injury is one close in the "chain of causation" to the violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN10 [down] Private Actions, Standing

The existence of another possible plaintiff does not automatically mean that other parties should be denied antitrust standing.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Injunctions

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

893 F. Supp. 1485, *1485 (1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20495, 20495

HN11 [blue download icon] Clayton Act, Claims

The requirements for standing when a plaintiff seeks injunctive relief under § 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 26, are less stringent than when it requests damages under § 4. Plaintiffs still must show, however, that: (1) they have alleged an antitrust injury; (2) their injury is cognizable in equity; and (3) their injury is the proximate result of the alleged antitrust violation. The allegation of antitrust injury is a threshold requirement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Monetary Damages

HN12 [blue download icon] Private Actions, Remedies

Plaintiffs asking for equitable relief for antitrust violations must demonstrate that there is a significant threat of irreparable injury. Allegations of monetary damages alone will not suffice for a showing of irreparable harm.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN13 [blue download icon] Private Actions, Remedies

Courts use the proximate cause test to ensure that injunctive relief, if granted, will prevent the antitrust injury from occurring.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN14 [blue download icon] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The Washington Consumer Protection Act, Wash. Rev. Code § 19.86.030, prohibits contracts or conspiracies in restraint of trade. The provision is the state equivalent of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. The state courts look to federal precedent in applying these analogous state statutes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > Federal Trade Commission Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN15 [blue download icon] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, Federal Trade Commission Act

The portion of the Washington Consumer Protection Act, Wash. Rev. Code § 19.86.020, prohibiting unfair methods of competition is equivalent to § 5(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 45\(a\)\(1\), which prohibits conduct in violation of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act.

893 F. Supp. 1485, *1485†994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20495, 20495

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN16 [blue icon] Consumer Protection, Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices

In order to prove a cause of action under the portion of the Washington Consumer Protection Act, Wash. Rev. Code § 19.86.020, prohibiting unfair or deceptive acts or practices, plaintiffs must establish five elements: (1) an unfair or deceptive act or practice; (2) occurring in trade or commerce; (3) public interest impact; (4) injury to plaintiff in his or her business or property; and (5) causation.

Contracts Law > Third Parties > Beneficiaries > Claims & Enforcement

Contracts Law > Third Parties > Beneficiaries > General Overview

HN17 [blue icon] Beneficiaries, Claims & Enforcement

In order to create a third-party beneficiary contract, the parties must intend that the promisor assume a direct obligation to the third party, and that performance of that obligation necessarily benefits that party.

Contracts Law > Third Parties > Beneficiaries > Claims & Enforcement

Contracts Law > Third Parties > Beneficiaries > General Overview

Contracts Law > ... > Beneficiaries > Types of Third Party Beneficiaries > General Overview

Contracts Law > ... > Beneficiaries > Types of Third Party Beneficiaries > Incidental Beneficiaries

HN18 [blue icon] Beneficiaries, Claims & Enforcement

One does not qualify as a third-party beneficiary of a contract merely because one is an incidental beneficiary of the performance of a contract or because the promisor had a general desire to advance the interests of a third party. The key is not whether the contracting parties had an altruistic motive or desire to benefit the third party, but rather, whether performance under the contract would necessarily and directly benefit that party.

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

HN19 [blue icon] Commercial Interference, Prospective Advantage

In order to qualify as tortious interference with business expectancies, the alleged interference must be intentional, not merely an incidental, indirect result of another act.

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Rights > Eminent Domain & Takings

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > General Overview

893 F. Supp. 1485, *1485†1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20495, 20495

Constitutional Law > Substantive Due Process > Scope

HN20 [+] Fundamental Rights, Eminent Domain & Takings

In order to establish state constitutional claims for deprivation of due process, plaintiffs must establish that state action deprived them of a constitutionally protected right or property interest without due process.

Counsel: For RUSSELL HAIRSTON, FRANK GARCIA, JOVAN MCCOY, KYLE ROBERTS, individuals, SCOREBOARD INC, a Washington corporation, TEAM SPIRIT INC, a Washington corporation, GRAHAM S. ANDERSON, an individual, plaintiffs: Michael D. Hunsinger, NEUBAUER & HUNSINGER, Seattle, WA. James L. Magee, GRAHAM & DUNN, SEATTLE, WA. .

For PACIFIC 10 CONFERENCE, an unincorporated association, defendant: AlVanKampen, Richard J. Wallis, Angela M. Luera, BOGLE & GATES, SEATTLE, WA. For NATIONAL COLLEGIATE ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION, an unincorporated association, defendant: Peter D. Byrnes, BYRNES & KELLER, SEATTLE, WA.

Judges: [1] BARBARA J. ROTHSTEIN, CHIEF UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Opinion by: BARBARA J. ROTHSTEIN

Opinion

[*1488] ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO DISMISS

THIS MATTER comes before the court on a motion under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) by defendant Pacific 10 Conference to dismiss plaintiffs' complaint. Having reviewed the motion together with all documents filed in support and in opposition, and being fully advised, the court finds and rules as follows:

I. BACKGROUND

Plaintiffs in this case are five student athletes ("the players") on the football team at the University of Washington ("UW"), two [*1489] football souvenir sellers who have licensing agreements with the UW, and a holder of a season ticket ("ticket holder") to UW football games.

Defendant Pacific 10 Conference ("Pac-10") is a private voluntary association of ten universities from the western United States, including the UW. The purpose of the association is to establish an athletic program, administer intercollegiate athletic events, and stage conference tournaments. The Pac-10 is in turn a member of the National Collegiate Athletic Association ("NCAA"), a national association of universities and colleges which supervises, [2] promotes, and sanctions athletic competition among its members. Both the Pac-10 and the NCAA promulgate and enforce rules governing the conduct of their members' athletic programs.

In August of 1993, the Pac-10 assessed penalties against the UW for infractions of NCAA rules governing the conduct of the football program. The penalties consisted of a ban for one year on receiving revenue from television coverage of football games and other sanctions lasting two years, including a probationary period, a ban on participation in bowl games, and a reduction in the number of available scholarships and permitted recruiting visits.

Plaintiffs brought this lawsuit alleging that the true purpose of the penalties was not to punish rules infractions, but to cripple the UW's ability to compete against the rest of the universities belonging to the Pac-10. Plaintiffs accordingly seek damages and injunctive relief on a variety of claims including violation of federal antitrust laws pursuant to the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 4 and 16; the Washington Consumer Protection Act, RCW 19.86.020 and -.030; breach of contract; tortious interference with a business expectancy; and deprivation of state constitutional [3] due process guarantees.

The Pac-10 now moves to dismiss all of plaintiffs' claims on numerous grounds.

II. LEGAL ANALYSIS

A. STANDARD FOR MOTIONS TO DISMISS

The Pac-10 moves to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\). HN1[↑] In considering such motions, the court construes the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff and takes its allegations as true. See Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90, 94 S. Ct. 1683 \(1983\); Brian Clewer, Inc. v. Pan American World Airways, Inc., 674 F. Supp. 782, 785 \(C.D. Cal. 1986\). The court, however, still examines whether the allegations in the complaint follow from the description of the facts alleged by the plaintiff. See Clewer, 674 F. Supp. at 785.

B. CONSTITUTIONAL STANDING

The Pac-10 first argues that plaintiffs lack standing to bring suit under Article III of the United States Constitution. The Supreme Court recently summarized HN2[↑] the three-part test for determining whether constitutional standing exists: (1) plaintiff must have suffered an injury in fact, i.e., an invasion of a legally protected, particularized, nonhypothetical interest; (2) there must be a causal connection between 4 the injury and the conduct complained of; and (3) it must be likely, not speculative, that the injury will be remedied by a favorable decision. Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 2136, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351 \(1992\).

The Pac-10 stresses two considerations which it feels plaintiffs fail to meet. First, it contends that plaintiffs are actually asserting the rights and interests of the UW, which was the entity penalized, in order to get relief from a perceived injury to themselves. See Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 509, 45 L. Ed. 2d 343, 95 S. Ct. 2197 \(1975\). Plaintiffs do not dispute that they have no standing to assert the UW's claims. See McCormack v. National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, 845 F.2d 1338, 1341 \(5th Cir. 1988\). But they insist that they are asserting their own rights based on injuries to their own separately protected interests: the players with their right to compete in a bowl game; the ticket holder with his right to enjoy the unhampered competitiveness of the UW football team; and the souvenir sellers with their right to unfettered sales of football paraphernalia, including bowl game souvenirs. The court concludes that plaintiffs 5 [\[*1490\]](#) have alleged their own rights separate and distinct from those of the UW.

Second, the Pac-10 argues that plaintiffs cannot show that their injuries are likely to be redressed by a favorable decision. The relief plaintiffs seek is injunctive relief stopping the Pac-10 from imposing the sanctions and treble damages (except for the ticket holder, who seeks no money damages). The court finds that plaintiffs have shown a sufficient relationship between the alleged injuries and the relief sought to survive this threshold requirement for establishing constitutional standing.

C. CLAYTON ACT ANTITRUST STANDING -- DAMAGES ACTION

HN3[↑] Section 4 of the Clayton Act allows the recovery of treble damages by "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws." 15 U.S.C. § 15. HN4[↑] To bring a private action under § 4, a plaintiff must establish that it has "antitrust standing." It may do so by showing that "it is a proper party to bring a private antitrust action." Associated Gen. Contractors v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 535 n.31, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 \(1983\) ("AGC"); see also Blue Shield [\[*61\]](#) of Va., Inc. v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 477, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, 102 S. Ct. 2540 \(1982\). The Supreme Court has listed HN5[↑] five factors to be considered in determining if a plaintiff is a proper party to bring suit:

- (1) The nature of the plaintiff's claimed injury;
- (2) The directness of the injury;
- (3) The specific intent of the alleged conspirators;
- (4) The character of the damages, including the risk of duplicative recovery, the complexity of apportionment, and their speculative character; and
- (5) The existence of other, more appropriate plaintiffs.

See AGC, 459 U.S. at 537-45; R.C. Dick Geothermal Corp. v. Thermogenics Inc., 890 F.2d 139, 146 \(9th Cir. 1989\) (en banc).

HN6 The first factor, which focuses on whether an "antitrust injury" has been alleged, is a threshold requirement for antitrust standing. See Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 \(1990\); Yellow Pages Cost Consultants, Inc. v. GTE Directories Corp., 951 F.2d 1158 \(9th Cir. 1991\). If the plaintiff satisfies the requirement of antitrust injury, the court then must examine the other four AGC factors. None of those remaining factors controls the decision [\[7\]](#) and "a court may find standing if the balance of factors so instructs." Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum Comm'n v. National Football League, 791 F.2d 1356, 1363 \(9th Cir. 1986\), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 826, 98 L. Ed. 2d 53, 108 S. Ct. 92 (1987). It is according to the AGC factors that the court analyzes the claims of the players and souvenir sellers in this case.¹

1. Antitrust Injury

HN7 In determining if a plaintiff has alleged an antitrust injury, the courts generally look at whether it is a participant in the same market as the alleged wrongdoer, either as a consumer or as a competitor. See AGC, 459 U.S. at 538-39; Eagle v. Star-Kist Foods, Inc., 812 F.2d 538, 540 \(9th Cir. 1987\). The players and souvenir sellers concede that they are not consumers or competitors. They note, however, that HN8 the Clayton Act "does not confine its protection [\[8\]](#) to consumers, or to purchasers, or to competitors" McCready, 457 U.S. at 472 (quoting Mandeville Island Farms, Inc. v. American Crystal Sugar Co., 334 U.S. 219, 236, 92 L. Ed. 1328, 68 S. Ct. 996 \(1948\)). The Supreme Court stated in McCready that "where the injury alleged is so integral an aspect of the conspiracy alleged, there can be no question but that the loss was precisely 'the type of loss that the claimed violations ... would be likely to cause.'" Id. at 479 (quoting Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 \(1977\)). In keeping [\[*1491\]](#) with McCready, the courts have allowed suits by plaintiffs who are not consumers or competitors, so long as they allege a direct injury. See, e.g., Radovich v. National Football League, 352 U.S. 445, 1 L. Ed. 2d 456, 77 S. Ct. 390 \(1957\); Ostrofe v. H.S. Crocker, Inc., 740 F.2d 739 \(9th Cir. 1984\).

In this case, the players have alleged a direct injury. The complaint alleges that the Pac-10 intended to harm both the UW as an institution and the UW football team. See Compl. at PP 46-51.² The Pac-10, however, insists that any harm was suffered only [\[9\]](#) by the UW. This contention misses the mark. The Pac-10 did not limit the sanctions to the UW itself. It also chose to penalize the players by banning them from bowl appearances. The players have thus alleged an antitrust injury for the purposes of a § 4 action.

Unlike the players, the souvenir sellers do not allege that they were directly harmed. They instead claim that their harm resulted from the misfortunes of the team, which in turn came about because of the Pac-10's actions. The situation of the souvenir sellers thus parallels that of the travel agents in Clewel, who claimed injuries due to the collapse of an airline. See 674 F. Supp. 782. In Clewel, the court held that those damages were indirect and derivative. Here, the souvenir sellers' injuries are similarly remote. The souvenir sellers, therefore, have failed to meet the threshold requirement [\[10\]](#) of an antitrust injury and may not sue for damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act.³

2. Directness of the Injury

HN9 A direct injury is one close in the "chain of causation" to the violation. AGC, 459 U.S. at 450. In this case, the players allege that the Pac-10's antitrust violations directly deprived them of the right to compete in a bowl game. The Pac-10 argues that this injury is derivative of the injury to the UW and thus too remote. It analogizes the ¹The ticket holder seeks injunctive relief and not damages. Therefore, only the standing of the players and souvenir sellers to bring an antitrust damages action is discussed below.

²As plaintiffs note, the UW football team and the players cannot logically be separated from one another. Pls.' Mem. in Opp. to Mot. to Dismiss at 14.

³The court's holding makes it unnecessary to analyze the claims of the souvenir sellers under the remaining AGC factors.

players to employees of the UW and cites cases denying antitrust standing to employees of an allegedly injured employer. See, e.g., Air Courier Conference v. American Postal Workers Union, 498 U.S. 517, 528 n.5, 112 L. Ed. 2d 1125, 111 S. Ct. 913 (1991); AGC, 459 U.S. at 540-41; Eagle, 812 F.2d at 541-42 (9th Cir. 1987); Exhibitors' Serv., Inc. v. American Multi-Cinema, Inc., 788 F.2d 574, 579 (9th Cir. 1986). [11] Yet in each of those cases there was only harm to the employer, from which the employees' harm derived. Because the players have alleged their own direct injuries, apart from those of the UW, the "derivative harm" cases cited by the Pac-10 are distinguishable and they do not weigh against a finding of antitrust standing in this case.⁴

3. Specific Intent of the Alleged Conspirators

The Pac-10 argues that this factor weighs against standing for the players. It relies on cases which state that the specific intent to harm a competitor does not constitute a specific intent to harm the competitor's employees. Reply in Supp. of Def.'s Mot. to Dismiss at 6. As noted above, those cases are distinguishable because they each involve claims of derivative harm. Here, the players have claimed [12] direct harm. Therefore, they have alleged a specific intent by a conspirator, the Pac-10.

4. Character of the Damages

The Pac-10 asserts that the "highly speculative" character of the players' alleged damages weighs against standing. See Mem. in Supp. of Def.'s Mot. to Dismiss at 13-14. It is true that the players' damages for the 1994 season are somewhat speculative, since the season has not yet begun. The damages for the 1993 season, however, may be calculated [*1492] with more precision. The 1993 record of the team indicates that it would have been invited to a bowl; thus, the players' claimed loss of the benefits associated with playing in a bowl game (airfare, hotel expenses and the like) "can be ascertained to the penny." McCready, 457 U.S. at 475.

The Pac-10 further insists that the players' damages are duplicative of the harm suffered by the UW and that calculating the amount would entail complex apportionment. Mem. in Supp. of Def.'s Mot. to Dismiss at 14. The court is not persuaded that those problems are present here. The players' damages are limited to benefits that non-players cannot claim. Moreover, separating those damages from the losses of the UW would not [13] be difficult. In all, the damages calculation in this case will not lead to what the Supreme Court feared, which was "complicated proceedings involving massive evidence and complicated theories." AGC, 459 U.S. at 544.

5. Existence of Other, More Appropriate Plaintiffs

The Pac-10 contends that the UW is a more appropriate party to bring suit because it has the "most important stake" involved. Mem. in Supp. of Def.'s Mot. to Dismiss at 9. Even if this claim were true, HN10 the existence of another possible plaintiff does not automatically mean that other parties should be denied standing. In AGC, the Supreme Court was concerned about the vindication of the public interest by private antitrust enforcement. The Court emphasized that denying standing to the more remote party in that case was "not likely to leave a significant antitrust violation undetected or unremedied." AGC, 459 U.S. at 542; see also Yellow Pages Cost Consultants, Inc. v. GTE Directories Corp., 951 F.2d 1158, 1163-64 (9th Cir. 1991) (noting that the purpose of the "more appropriate plaintiff" analysis is to ensure that antitrust violations will be identified and remedied), cert. denied, 504 U.S. 913, [14] 112 S. Ct. 1947, 118 L. Ed. 2d 552 (1992). The plaintiffs have pointed out that the UW has strong incentives not to sue the Pac-10. See Pls.' Mem. in Opp. to Mot. to Dismiss at 16. If the players were denied standing to bring suit, any antitrust violation would go unremedied.

On balance, the AGC factors weigh in favor of antitrust standing for the players. They have alleged a direct, antitrust injury and a specific intent to harm to them. Most of their damages are readily calculable and not speculative. Finally, denying standing to the players might frustrate the detection and punishment of an antitrust violation. For these reasons, the court finds that the players have standing to sue under § 4.

⁴ The more analogous case here is Ostrofe, where the court held that an employee had antitrust standing because he was a direct victim of a conspiracy to restrain interstate trade and commerce. 740 F.2d at 742-43.

D. CLAYTON ACT ANTITRUST STANDING -- INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

HN11 [↑] The requirements for standing when a plaintiff seeks injunctive relief under § 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 26, are less stringent than when it requests damages under § 4. Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colo., Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 111 n.6, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 \(1986\). Plaintiffs still must show, however, that: (1) they have alleged an antitrust injury; (2) their injury is cognizable in equity; and [15] (3) their injury is the proximate result of the alleged antitrust violation. See id. at 111; Lucas v. Bechtel Corp., 800 F.2d 839, 847 \(9th Cir. 1986\); Justice v. National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, 577 F. Supp. 356, 375 \(D. Ariz. 1983\). The allegation of antitrust injury is a threshold requirement. Cargill, 479 U.S. at 111.

1. Antitrust Injury

The same analysis for claimed antitrust injuries under § 4 applies to § 16. See id. at 113 (noting that § 4 and § 16 are complementary remedies for the same injuries). Thus, even though the players are not competitors with the Pac-10 or consumers of the product, they have alleged an antitrust injury for the purposes of § 16 by claiming that they were direct victims of the violations. By contrast, the souvenir sellers have not alleged the required antitrust injury because they have not claimed to be either consumers, competitors, or direct victims. Under Cargill, the souvenir sellers have failed to meet an essential element for § 16 standing.

[*1493] 2. Cognizability in Equity and Proximate Cause

HN12 [↑] Plaintiffs asking for equitable relief must demonstrate that there is a significant threat of irreparable injury. [16] Lucas, 800 F.2d at 847. Allegations of monetary damages alone will not suffice for a showing of irreparable harm. Id. In this case, the ticket holder alleges only monetary damages. Thus, he has failed to demonstrate a significant threat of irreparable injury and is not a proper party to sue for injunctive relief under § 16.⁵

While the losses of the players for the 1993 season may also be reduced to a monetary figure, their claims regarding the right to attend a bowl game in 1994 cannot be quantified. The latter are cognizable in equity. In addition, the players' allegations meet the proximate cause prong. HN13 [↑] Courts use the proximate cause test to ensure that injunctive relief, if granted, will prevent the injury from occurring. Justice, [577 F. Supp. at \[17\] 377](#). The threatened injury here may be redressed by injunctive relief.

In sum, the souvenir sellers and the ticket holder lack standing to sue under § 16 because they have failed to fulfill one of the three required elements. The players, on the other hand, have met all the requirements. As a result, they have standing to sue for injunctive relief under § 16 of the Clayton Act.

E. WASHINGTON CONSUMER PROTECTION ACT CLAIMS

1. Antitrust Claims Under RCW 19.86.020 and -.030

Plaintiffs bring suit under HN14 [↑] RCW 19.86.030 of the Washington Consumer Protection Act ("CPA"), which prohibits contracts or conspiracies in restraint of trade. This provision is the state equivalent of the Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C. § 1. Plaintiffs also allege claims under HN15 [↑] the portion of RCW 19.86.020 prohibiting unfair methods of competition. That provision is equivalent to Section 5(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45\(a\)\(1\), which prohibits conduct in violation of Sherman Act §§ 1 and 2. Seven Gables Corp. v. Sterling Recreation Org. Co., 1987-1 Trade Cas. P 67,637 at 60,826 n.28 (W.D. Wash. 1987).

The state courts look to federal precedent in applying these analogous [18] state statutes. See, e.g., Consol. Dairy Prod. Co. v. Bar-T Ranch Dairy, Inc., 97 Wash. 2d 167, 179, 642 P.2d 1240 \(1982\), in which the Washington Supreme Court used the then applicable federal "target area" standing analysis in considering claims brought under ⁵ This holding is dispositive of the ticket holder's claim that he has standing. See Lucas, 800 F.2d at 847. It is not necessary, therefore, for the court to consider the issues of antitrust injury and proximate cause as to the ticket holder.

RCW 19.86.020 and -.040. See also RCW 19.86.020, which provides that it is the legislature's intent to have state courts be guided by federal decisions interpreting the federal statutes on similar matters.

Applying the federal standards set forth above for determining the existence of standing to plaintiffs' claims under RCW 19.86.030 and the unfair methods of competition provision of RCW 19.86.020, the court concludes that the same result must be reached. The claims brought by the souvenir sellers and ticket holder must be dismissed for lack of antitrust standing. Because the players have established antitrust standing, the Pac-10's motion to dismiss their claims under RCW 19.86.030 and the unfair methods of competition provision of RCW 19.86.020 must be denied.

2. Failure to Allege Elements of RCW 19.86.020 Violation

In addition to alleging a cause of action under the unfair methods of competition portion of [19] RCW 19.86.020, plaintiffs also allege that the Pac-10 violated that portion of the statute prohibiting unfair or deceptive acts or practices. HN16[¹⁵] In order to prove the latter claim, plaintiffs must establish five elements: (1) an unfair or deceptive act or practice; (2) occurring in trade or commerce; (3) public interest impact; (4) injury to plaintiff in his or her business or property; and (5) causation. Hangman Ridge Training Inst¹⁴⁹⁴ Stables v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., 105 Wash. 2d 778, 780, 719 P.2d 531 \(1986\).

Regarding the first element, plaintiffs allege that the Pac-10 failed to administer its own rules in good faith and to comply with NCAA rules. The court concludes that plaintiffs do not allege the kind of misleading or fraudulent behavior which RCW 19.86.020 was intended to reach. Therefore, plaintiffs have failed to state a cause of action under that portion of the statute.

F. THIRD-PARTY BENEFICIARY CONTRACT CLAIM

The players allege breach of contract claims based on the theory that they are third-party beneficiaries of a contract between the Pac-10 and its member institutions. This allegation is based on some language in the contract stating that the purpose of the Pac-10 [20] is to provide its student athletes with "quality competitive opportunities" and to conduct its affairs so as to enrich the athletic and academic experiences of its student athletes.

HN17[¹⁶] In order to create a third-party beneficiary contract, the parties must intend that the promisor assume a direct obligation to the third party, and that performance of that obligation necessarily benefits that party. Postlewait Constr., Inc. v. Great American Ins., 106 Wash. 2d 96, 99-101, 720 P.2d 805 \(1986\). Thus, HN18[¹⁷] one does not qualify as a third-party beneficiary of a contract merely because one is an incidental beneficiary of the performance of a contract or because the promisor had a general desire to advance the interests of a third party. Id. As Postlewait holds, "the key is not whether the contracting parties had an altruistic motive or desire to benefit the third party, but rather, 'whether performance under the contract would necessarily and directly benefit that party.'" Id. at 99 (quoting Lonsdale v. Chesterfield, 99 Wash. 2d 353, 361, 662 P.2d 385 \(1983\)). See also Del Guzzi Constr. v. Global Northwest, 105 Wash. 2d 878, 887, 719 P.2d 120 \(1986\), in which the court held [21] that the mere fact that a construction project required minority participation in order to receive federal funding did not manifest an intent by the county or the general contractor to assume a direct legal obligation to the minority subcontractor.

The court concludes that the players have failed to state a cause of action for breach of contract on a third-party beneficiary theory. The only evidence before the court consists of vague, hortatory pronouncements in the contract between the Pac-10 and its member schools. By themselves, these pronouncements are not sufficient to support the players' claims that the Pac-10 intended to assume a direct contractual obligation to every football player on a Pac-10 team.

G. TORTIOUS INTERFERENCE WITH SOUVENIR SELLERS' CONTRACTS

The souvenir sellers allege that the Pac-10 intentionally interfered with their business expectancies involving future sales of UW souvenirs and bowl products. The court agrees with the Pac-10 that the souvenir sellers have failed to state a claim.

893 F. Supp. 1485, *1494L 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20495, 21

HN19 [↑] In order to qualify as tortious, the alleged interference must be intentional, not merely an incidental, indirect result of another act. Pleas v. City of Seattle, [*22] 112 Wash. 2d 794, 804, 774 P.2d 1158 (1989); Titus v. Tacoma Smeltermen's Union Local No. 25, 62 Wash. 2d 461, 465, 383 P.2d 504 (1963); Restatement (2d) of Torts, §§ 766, 766B, 767. In this case, the souvenir sellers themselves admit that they "do not contend that the Pac-10 set out to harm the business plaintiffs, though that harm was an inevitable consequence of its acts." Pls.' Mem. in Opp. to Mot. to Dismiss at 14. In other words, the souvenir sellers acknowledge that any harm they suffered was an incidental, indirect result of the Pac-10's decision to assess penalties against the UW. These circumstances cannot support a cause of action for tortious interference with a business expectancy.

H. THE PLAYERS' STATE CONSTITUTIONAL CLAIMS

HN20 [↑] In order to establish their state constitutional claims for deprivation of due process, the players must establish that state action deprived them of a constitutionally [*1495] protected right or property interest without due process. Kuehn v. Renton School Dist., 103 Wash. 2d 594, 598, 694 P.2d 1078 (1985).

On the issue of whether state action is involved, NCAA v. Tarkanian, 488 U.S. 179, 102 L. Ed. 2d 469, 109 S. Ct. 454 (1988), is dispositive. [*23] In that case, the Supreme Court held that the NCAA's disciplinary action against a state university did not constitute state action. The players' efforts to distinguish Tarkanian are unavailing. Moreover, the court finds that the players have failed to show that they were deprived of any constitutionally protected right or property interest. Their hopes and expectations of participating in a bowl game do not constitute the sort of entitlement required to support a constitutional claim. See, e.g., Parish v. NCAA, 506 F.2d 1028, 1034 (5th Cir. 1975); Hawkins v. NCAA, 652 F. Supp. 602, 610 (C.D. Ill. 1987).

III. CONCLUSION

Defendant's motion is GRANTED in part and DENIED in part. All of plaintiffs' claims are dismissed with the exception of the players' federal antitrust claims and their state claims under RCW 19.86.020 and -.030. As to those claims, the court finds that the players have stated a cause of action as to which relief could be granted.

DATED at Seattle, Washington this 20th day of May, 1994.

BARBARA J. ROTHSTEIN

CHIEF UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

End of Document

Petrocco v. Dover Gen. Hosp. & Med. Ctr.

Superior Court of New Jersey, Appellate Division

April 20, 1994, Argued ; May 20, 1994, Decided

A-4378-92T5

Reporter

273 N.J. Super. 501 *; 642 A.2d 1016 ; 1994 N.J. Super. LEXIS 254 ; 1994-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,847

ERNEST S. PETROCCO, D.C., PLAINTIFF-APPELLANT, v. DOVER GENERAL HOSPITAL AND MEDICAL CENTER; BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF DOVER GENERAL HOSPITAL; EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF DOVER GENERAL HOSPITAL; WAYNE C. SCHIFFNER, PRESIDENT OF DOVER GENERAL HOSPITAL, DEFENDANTS-RESPONDENTS, v. NEW JERSEY HOSPITAL ASSOCIATION AND THE MEDICAL SOCIETY OF NEW JERSEY, DEFENDANTS-RESPONDENTS-INTERVENORS.

Subsequent History: [1] Approved for Publication June 13, 1994.

Prior History: On appeal from the Superior Court of New Jersey, Chancery Division, Morris County.

Core Terms

chiropractors, bylaws, patients, staff, chiropractic, staff privileges, medical staff, antitrust, staff member, medical doctor, health-care, due process, conspiracy, privileges, summary judgment, qualifications, practitioners, intervenors, hospital staff, recommendation, defamation, defamatory, decisions, courts, cases, constitutional due process, general hospital, psychiatric, osteopathy, profession

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Rights Law > ... > Elements > Color of State Law > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Hospital Privileges > General Overview

HN1 [+] Elements, Color of State Law

A private hospital lacks the indicia of "state action" necessary to impose the duty to provide procedural due process to those who are refused staff privileges.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Scope of Protection

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Hospital Privileges > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > General Overview

HN2 Procedural Due Process, Scope of Protection

While aggrieved physicians may have no right to constitutional due process, they are entitled to the lesser standard of "fundamental fairness," i.e., that their request for privileges be considered according to procedures that adequately notify them of the hospital's proposed action and that provide a reasonable opportunity to respond.

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Judicial Review > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Hospital Privileges > General Overview

HN3 Business Administration & Organization, Judicial Review

If a hospital policy decision reasonably serves an evident public-health purpose, it will be sustained, even though it may have a discriminatory effect. Because an adverse or discriminatory impact upon some individual doctors or class of doctors is inevitable when a closed staff-admissions policy is adopted by a hospital, it will be upheld if the public-health objective is rationally advanced by the hospital's staff admissions policy. However, if it cannot be shown that a restrictive staff-admissions policy reasonably furthers a legitimate health-care objective, then the policy merely constitutes an unjustified vehicle of discrimination and is invalid.

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Judicial Review > General Overview

HN4 Business Administration & Organization, Judicial Review

The standard applied to a hospital's decision is even more deferential than the traditional "substantial competent credible evidence" test of agency decisions; rather, it is whether the decision was based on "sufficient reliable evidence, including hearsay." And a more tolerant test is used where the decision was based on broad institutional policy as opposed to adjudication in an individual case.

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Judicial Review > General Overview

HN5 Business Administration & Organization, Judicial Review

When the decision that is subject to judicial review involves the validity of a broad, general hospital policy determination, rather than a particularized, quasi-adjudicative decision in which a general policy is applied in an individual case, even greater informality can be tolerated. A hospital determining broad policy matters should be able to pursue all reasonable means to inform itself and to draw from a wide array of sources to reach an informed decision.

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Standards of Care > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Judicial Review > General Overview

HN6 Actions Against Facilities, Standards of Care

In developing a broad general policy, a hospital need not provide public notice, conduct formal proceedings, allow general participation, or develop a formal record in support of a managerial determination. Thus, a hospital decision of this character will be viewed favorably if it is reached in the normal and regular course of conducting the affairs of the hospital and is based on adequate information, regardless of form, origin, or authorship, that is generally considered reasonable and reliable by professional persons responsibly involved in the health-care field.

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Facility & Personnel Licensing > General Overview

HN7 Business Administration & Organization, Facility & Personnel Licensing

No license will be granted to a hospital facility unless the commissioner of health is satisfied that it is adequately prepared to provide all services and care required by the residents of the community wherein it is located. N.J. Stat. Ann. § 30:11-1.

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Facility & Personnel Licensing > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Hospital Privileges > General Overview

HN8 Business Administration & Organization, Facility & Personnel Licensing

N.J. Stat. Ann. § 30:11-1 is part of a licensing scheme for hospitals. It grants no remedies to individuals who have not been allowed to apply for staff privileges.

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defamation > Libel

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defamation > Procedural Matters

HN9 Defamation, Libel

The threshold inquiry in a libel action is whether defendant published a false statement of fact which was reasonably susceptible of a defamatory meaning as to plaintiff. Each of these preliminary questions must be decided by the court as a question of law.

Torts > ... > Defenses > Privileges > Qualified Privileges

Torts > ... > Defenses > Privileges > General Overview

HN10 Privileges, Qualified Privileges

New Jersey courts recognize a qualified privilege to make defamatory statements on matters lying within the publisher's interest or duty, where those statements are made to one having a corresponding interest or duty.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

HN11[] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

See N.J. Stat. Ann. § 56:9-3.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN12[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Sherman Act

In analyzing claims of anticompetitive conduct under N.J. Stat. Ann. § 56:9-3 and the cognate provision of the federal act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, New Jersey courts apply one of two rules: (1) the "per se rule" -- requiring no proof of the market power of the offending parties, or (2) the "rule of reason" -- calling for an assessment of the economic impact on the market.

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

HN13[] Antitrust Actions, Facilities

A hospital is incapable of conspiring with its staff under antitrust law in deciding whether to grant staff privileges.

Counsel: Eugene P. Dolan argued the cause for appellant (Mr. Dolan, on the brief).

Andrew F. McBride, III, argued the cause for respondents (Kalison & McBride, attorneys; Brian M. Foley, on the brief).

Todd C. Brower argued the cause for respondents-intervenors (Brach, Eichler, Rosenberg, Silver, Bernstein, Hammer & Gladstone, attorneys; Burton L. Eichler and Todd C. Brower, of counsel; Mr. Brower, on the brief).

Judges: Before Judges KING, HAVEY and Arnold M. STEIN. The opinion of the court was delivered by KING, P.J.A.D.

Opinion by: KING

Opinion

[*506] [1018] The opinion of the court was delivered by

KING, P.J.A.D.

Plaintiff, a chiropractor, appeals from a judgment of the Chancery Division denying his claim for staff privileges at Dover General Hospital and Medical Center, an acute-care private, general hospital. The hospital's bylaws did not provide for staff privileges for chiropractors and the institution declined to process plaintiff's application. The hospital board appointed an ad hoc [*507] committee, all non-physician board members, to consider whether to amend the bylaws. That committee decided there was no need to open the staff to chiropractors and the [2] board agreed. Under our highly deferential standard of review of a hospital's decision on how to structure its staff, we affirm the judgment.

[1019] I

Sometime in 1988 the plaintiff requested that the hospital send him an application for staff privileges. A hospital employee told him by telephone that chiropractors were not included as staff members under the bylaws of the hospital. On December 5, 1988 plaintiff wrote to the president of the hospital, asking him for a clarification of this policy. He confirmed in writing that the hospital's bylaws did not allow staff membership for chiropractors.

By letter dated February 22, 1989 plaintiff advised that he was interested in knowing the procedure for changing the bylaws. On March 21, 1989 the president replied and offered this rationale for the exclusion of chiropractors:

Dover General Hospital & Medical Center is not equipped or designed to handle patients requiring chiropractic care, nor is the Hospital in a position to effectively monitor the quality of chiropractic care which you propose to provide. Moreover, there currently is not a demonstrated need for chiropractic services to be provided in an acute care setting within our service [3] area. Consequently, an application for membership to our staff cannot be provided.

Unsatisfied, plaintiff continued to press his position upon the hospital officials for staff admission.

Prompted in part by plaintiff's inquiries, in March 1990 the hospital administration decided to create an ad hoc committee to consider the need for amending the bylaws to add chiropractors to the types of practitioners entitled to staff privileges. A four-member, non-physician committee was appointed. As part of its investigation, the committee requested information from two chiropractic associations. One did not respond; the other provided articles and materials relevant to other hospitals' experiences with chiropractors on hospital staffs. The committee also reviewed materials provided by the hospital's counsel, consisting of an [*508] article and a legal memorandum favoring exclusion of chiropractors. The committee met twice to discuss these materials.

On September 27, 1990 the committee issued its report advising the hospital's board of trustees of its unanimous vote to recommend that the bylaws not be revised to permit chiropractors staff privileges. The committee made thirteen findings, which we [4] summarize:

1. New Jersey statutory law did not require that hospitals admit chiropractors;
2. No acute-care hospital in New Jersey had chiropractors on its staff;
3. N.J.A.C. 13:44E-1.1 defined chiropractic as "that discipline whose methodology is the adjustment and manipulation of the articulations of the spine and related structures and whose purpose is the relief of certain abnormal clinical conditions of the human body causing discomfort resulting from the impingement upon associated nerves;"
4. If a chiropractor determined that a patient had a problem not treatable by a chiropractor, the chiropractor was required by law to refer the patient to a medical doctor;
5. Hospital bylaws required that each patient be examined by a doctor of medicine or osteopathy;
6. Under hospital bylaws the treatment of medical conditions had to be directed by a doctor of medicine or osteopathy;
7. The hospital's patients "generally suffer from an acute medical condition requiring medical and/or surgical care, including the use of pharmacological methods, none of which may be prescribed by chiropractors;"
8. The hospital had no record of any patient or staff member ever having requested chiropractic [5] care in the hospital;
9. The hospital had no administrative apparatus in place for the evaluation and approval of admission of chiropractors;
10. "The nature of chiropractic evaluation and treatment is fundamentally different from the evaluation and treatment of patients offered by doctors of medicine and osteopathy in acute care facilities such as the Hospital;"
11. The addition of chiropractors to the staff might expose the hospital to additional liability risks;
12. Chiropractors were authorized to refer their patients to the hospital's x-ray and laboratory facilities for testing, the results of which were sent to the chiropractor;

13. Chiropractors were authorized to refer their patients to the hospital's medical staff for diagnosis and treatment.

Based upon these findings, the committee reached these conclusions:

- [*509] 1. The addition of chiropractors to the Hospital's Medical Staff is not required by law.
- 2. The addition of chiropractors to the Hospital's Medical Staff is not necessary for the Hospital to carry out its mission of providing acute care services to the community.
- 3. Any benefits obtained by admitting chiropractors to the Hospital's Medical Staff would be enjoyed [6] by an insignificant number of patients, and would not be necessary to the provision of appropriate acute care services by the Hospital.
- 4. The admission of chiropractors to the Hospital's Medical Staff would result in substantial direct and indirect costs and an adverse effect on Hospital operations which would far outweigh any resulting benefit.
- 5. Although chiropractors might enjoy various benefits from admission to the Hospital's Medical Staff, the same would be true of many other health care professionals, such as nutritionists, physical therapists and psychiatric nurses. The Hospital's decision to expand its Medical Staff to include new categories of professionals must be based upon net benefit to the mission of the Hospital and the patients it serves.
- 6. We concur that chiropractors currently have the right and opportunity to refer their patients to Hospital facilities for x-rays and laboratory tests, and can refer patients to members of the Hospital's Medical Staff for all necessary, non-chiropractic diagnosis or treatment.

At a meeting on September 27, 1990 the hospital board of trustees voted to accept the committee's recommendation. The vote was ten "yes," zero "no," and [7] three abstentions.

In July 1991 plaintiff's counsel requested and was supplied with the hospital's bylaws. The bylaws defined "medical staff" as follows: "[A]ll doctors of medicine, osteopathy, dentistry and podiatry licensed to practice in the State of New Jersey and who are privileged to attend patients at Dover General Hospital." Staff membership was divided into three fields: medical, dental, and podiatric. All applicants for the medical staff were required to be "legally licensed to practice medicine and surgery" in New Jersey.

The bylaws set forth detailed procedures for the processing of applications for the medical staff. In addition, the bylaws granted a right to a formal hearing to any applicant receiving an unfavorable recommendation. If an applicant failed to prevail after a hearing, the applicant had the right to appeal to the board of trustees.

[*510] On August 9, 1991 plaintiff requested a hearing under Article 13.03 of the bylaws. On September 19, 1991 the hospital denied plaintiff's request on the ground that as a chiropractor, he did not qualify as an "applicant." In response to a request for further clarification, on October 25, 1991 the hospital again explained that the [8] bylaws afforded no procedural rights to chiropractors. In justification of its decision not to amend its bylaws to include chiropractors, the hospital explained it had "determined that it is not in the best interests of the Hospital and its patients to expand the medical staff to include chiropractors."

II

In January 1992 plaintiff filed a complaint in the Chancery Division and an order to show cause against defendant-hospital, its board of trustees, its executive committee, and its president. Plaintiff alleged that he had been damaged by the hospital's refusal to allow him to apply for staff privileges. He expressed his legal theories in five counts: (1) breach of contract under the hospital's bylaws; (2) common-law due process; (3) [1021] constitutional due process; (4) defamation; and (5) the New Jersey Antitrust Act.

The Medical Society of New Jersey and the New Jersey Hospital Association successfully moved for permission to intervene and to participate "as if" they "had been named as original party defendants." The hospital defendants moved for summary judgment and plaintiff filed a cross-motion for summary judgment. The hospital defendants prevailed.

Plaintiff raises these points [9] on this appeal:

1. THE JUDGE ERRED IN FINDING THAT PLAINTIFF WAS NOT ENTITLED TO HAVE HIS APPLICATION CONSIDERED UNDER THE PROCEDURAL SAFEGUARDS OF THE HOSPITAL BYLAWS OR OF CONSTITUTIONAL DUE PROCESS.
2. DISPUTED ISSUES OF FACT PREVENTED SUMMARY JUDGMENT.
3. N.J.S.A. 30:11-1 REQUIRES A HOSPITAL TO OFFER CHIROPRACTIC SERVICES. [*511]
4. THE JUDGE ERRED ON THE LAW IN DISMISSING THE DEFAMATION AND ANTITRUST CLAIMS.

III

Plaintiff's principal contention is a denial of procedural due process. As the sources of his alleged right to due process, he invokes the Fourteenth Amendment and the hospital's bylaws. Plaintiff claims that he has a federal constitutional right to have his application processed and considered on its individual merits. He also claims a right to a hearing if the hospital's initial decision is adverse.

Judge Stanton held that plaintiff had no individualized rights to procedural due process or a hearing, because there had been no adjudication of plaintiff's personal qualifications. The judge reasoned:

The decision made by the hospital here was not a decision which involved the evaluation of the credentials and qualifications of an individual practitioner who [10] was generically eligible to apply for membership on the hospital medical staff. It was not a quasi-judicial decision which involved the evaluation of this particular physician, Dr. Petrocco. It was really a management or policy decision as to whether a broad class of people should be eligible to be on the medical treatment staff of the hospital.

And it seems to me that because it was that kind of a decision that due process concepts do not apply. The physician was not, the individual person who wanted to apply, in this case Dr. Petrocco, was not entitled to have a hearing before the hospital at which he could question witnesses, question evidence, present his own evidence, present his own arguments, make arguments against arguments on the other side. He was not entitled to that kind of a hearing because there was no effort being made by the hospital to evaluate his individual qualifications and to pass either favorably or adversely on his qualifications and on his skills.

Instead, the hospital was saying as a matter of policy it did not think that there was a need for it or a utility for it to have this whole class of practitioners.

So in my judgment, [the decision] didn't even involve [11] due process determinations.

The most plaintiff was entitled to receive, the judge observed, was the assurance that the hospital followed its bylaws and that those bylaws reasonably served the public interest. The judge then applied the appropriate standard of review to the hospital's decision not to amend its bylaws to include chiropractors and ruled against plaintiff.

[*512] We agree that plaintiff had no individualized right to procedural due process. HN1 A private hospital lacks the indicia of "state action" necessary to impose the duty to provide procedural due process to those who are refused staff privileges. In Garrow v. Elizabeth Gen. Hosp. and Dispensary, 79 N.J. 549, 401 A.2d 533 (1979), a physician applied for but was denied staff privileges; he was a medical doctor and belonged to a class of practitioners eligible for admission. The Court rejected the doctor's claim that he was entitled to constitutional due process: "In the absence of a showing, allegation or admission that the Hospital's action reflected state action. . . , fundamental constitutional [1022] due process may not be invoked." Id. at 563, 401 A.2d 533. [*512] Accord Zoneraich v. Overlook Hosp., 212 N.J.Super. 83, 91, 514 A.2d 53 (App.Div.), certif. denied, 107 N.J. 32, 526 A.2d 126 (1986).

HN2 While aggrieved physicians may have no right to constitutional due process, they are entitled to the lesser standard of "fundamental fairness," i.e., that their request for privileges be considered according to procedures that adequately notify them of the hospital's proposed action and that provide a reasonable opportunity to respond. Garrow, supra, 79 N.J. at 564, 401 A.2d 533; Zoneraich, supra, 212 N.J.Super. at 91, 514 A.2d 53. But plaintiff has cited no case authority, and we have found none, granting procedural protections, under either "due process" or "fundamental fairness" concepts, to a member of a class seeking to have the hospital change its policy barring that class from staff membership, where the hospital has not attempted to adjudicate the merits of the member's personal qualifications. The reason for imposing procedural protections in staff privilege cases is to protect professional reputations [13] and ensure the ability to pursue the profession. Garrow, supra, 79 N.J. at 557, 401 A.2d 533. Neither concern is implicated here: the decision to exclude chiropractors as a class does not impugn plaintiff's personal reputation and his ability to practice chiropractic is not substantially impaired by denial of access to hospital patients through staff privileges.

[*513] Plaintiff also urges that he is a third-party beneficiary of the hospital's bylaws which grant him a contractual right to have his application processed under the bylaws, including the provisions for a hearing. He reasons that the bylaws "form a binding contract between the hospital and its existing medical staff and prospective medical staff." He cites a federal case recognizing that an applicant for hospital-staff privileges may be a third-party beneficiary of the hospital's bylaws, if such an intent may be inferred from the language and surrounding circumstances. Robinson v. Magovern, 521 F.Supp. 842, 925-26 (W.D.Pa.1981), aff'd, 688 F.2d 824 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 971, 103 S.Ct. 302, 74 L.Ed.2d 283 (1982). [14] But plaintiff fails to recognize that the court in Robinson found that no such intent was inferable in that case. Ibid. In addition, the doctor-applicant in Robinson was a thoracic surgeon, who met the threshold test for staff membership. Plaintiff in this case was not eligible for staff membership under the bylaws as written. Hence we will not infer that the bylaws were intended to protect plaintiff as a third-party beneficiary.

Plaintiff also relies on a series of cases recognizing that hospital bylaws form a contract between the hospital and its staff. In those cases the aggrieved persons were either already on the staff or were practicing in a field entitled to staff membership. See, e.g., Balkissoon v. Capitol Hill Hosp., 558 A.2d 304 (D.C.App. 1989) (medical doctor was denied staff privileges based on alleged professional deficiencies); Ishak v. Fallston Gen. Hosp. & Nursing Ctr., 50 Md.App. 473, 438 A.2d 1369 (1982) (hospital refused to renew privileges of staff physician).

While plaintiff was not entitled to any procedural protections under the bylaws or the Fourteenth Amendment, [15] he was entitled to have his claim reviewed under the special standard developed by our courts for review of administrative decisions treating exclusion of certain categories of practitioners, as distinguished from decisions on the qualifications of individual applicants. The earliest reported case is Davis v. Morristown Memorial Hosp., 106 N.J.Super. 33, 254 A.2d 125 (Ch.Div.1969), in which [*514] two obstetricians applied for admission to a hospital staff. The hospital refused, invoking its written policy deferring action on new staff applications until sufficient beds became available. The court upheld the policy as supported by evidence that there was a bed shortage and found the hospital "acted from honest motives." Id. at 53, 254 A.2d 125. The court applied the deferential guidelines for review announced by our Supreme Court in Greisman v. Newcomb Hosp., 40 N.J. 389, 192 A.2d 817 (1963), and Falcone v. Middlesex County Medical Soc'y, 34 N.J. 582, 170 A.2d 791 (1961). Those cases permitted judicial review [16] of exclusionary policies, on the theory that hospitals acted as fiduciaries for the public and could not exercise their discretion [1023] over staff composition without considering the interests of the medical profession and the public. Falcone, supra, 34 N.J. at 596-97, 170 A.2d 791.

Next, in Wrable v. Community Memorial Hosp., 205 N.J.Super. 438, 501 A.2d 187 (Law Div.1985), aff'd, 213 N.J.Super. 347, 517 A.2d 470 (App.Div.1986), certif. denied, 107 N.J. 150, 526 A.2d 210 (1987), a psychiatric nurse was denied staff membership on the ground that the hospital did not have a psychiatric department and was not equipped to handle patients needing psychiatric care. Also, the hospital's bylaws provided for staff membership for doctors of medicine, dentistry, osteopathy, and podiatry only. 205 N.J.Super. at 441, 501 A.2d 187.

The Law Division upheld the hospital's exclusion of psychiatric nurses and found a reasonable relationship between that policy and the hospital's health-care mission. Id. at 443-45, 501 A.2d 187. [17] The judge explained:

A hospital has a right and a duty not only to review the qualifications of the members of its staff, but also to consider the need for and impact of new and previously unadmitted persons to the hospital staff and how their admission to the staff would affect patient care. See Belmar v. Cipolla, 96 N.J. 199, 208 [475 A.2d 533] (1984). Since the hospital is unable to review effectively plaintiff's credentials and supervise her activities, it would therefore not be in the best interest of patient treatment and care to allow plaintiff, at this time, to become a member of the adjunct medical-dental staff.

[Id. 205 N.J.Super. at 443-44, 501 A.2d 187.]

Of particular relevance to the appeal before us, the judge added:

[*515] Merely because a professional may be able to provide medical aid or psychological comfort to a patient in a hospital does not justify a finding that the individual is entitled to adjunct medical-dental staff privileges. The testimony revealed that there are more than 200 health care professions in the State of New Jersey. In any given case a physical therapist, nutritionist, chiropractor or other professional health care specialist [18] may give aid and comfort to their patients while in the hospital, but this would not justify making them members of the adjunct medical-dental staff. A hospital is entitled to reasonably restrict eligibility for such privileges in order to insure that its patients receive the best care possible on a consistent basis.

[Id. at 444, 501 A.2d 187 (emphasis added).]

Finally, the judge noted that the exclusion had only a minimal impact on plaintiff's practice. Plaintiff was free to treat her patients outside the hospital; during her patients' infrequent hospitalizations, she could see them at visiting hours or talk on the telephone. Ibid.

In Desai v. St. Barnabas Medical Ctr., 103 N.J. 79, 510 A.2d 662 (1986), a medical doctor was denied staff privileges under a written policy granting preference to doctors who had professional associations with existing staff members. In evaluating the validity of the preference, the Supreme Court recognized the special standards of judicial review of hospital-management decisions.

In light of the specialized and sensitive nature of institutional public health care and the paramount responsibilities [19] and concerns of other branches of government in this area, courts are normally most circumspect when called upon to determine the validity or enforceability of managerial health-care decisions made by a hospital. HN3[↑] If a hospital policy decision reasonably serves an evident public-health purpose, it will be sustained, even though it may have a discriminatory effect. We have thus recognized that because an adverse or discriminatory impact upon some individual doctors or class of doctors is inevitable when a closed staff-admissions policy is adopted by a hospital, it will be upheld if the public-health objective is rationally advanced by the hospital's staff admissions policy. . . . However, if it cannot be shown that a restrictive staff-admissions policy reasonably furthers a legitimate health-care objective, then the policy merely constitutes an unjustified vehicle of discrimination [1024] and is invalid.

[Id. at 91, 510 A.2d 662 (citation omitted).]

The Court also acknowledged that HN4[↑] the standard applied to the hospital's decision is even more deferential than the traditional "substantial competent credible evidence" test of agency decisions; rather, it [20] is whether the decision was based on "sufficient reliable evidence, including hearsay." Id. at 92, 510 A.2d 662. Accord [*516] Nanavati v. Burdette Tomlin Memorial Hosp., 107 N.J. 240, 249, 526 A.2d 697 (1987). And a more tolerant test is used where the decision was based on broad institutional policy as opposed to adjudication in an individual case:

HN5[↑] When the decision that is subject to judicial review involves the validity of a broad, general hospital policy determination, rather than a particularized, quasi-adjudicative decision in which a general policy is applied in an individual case, even greater informality can be tolerated. A hospital determining broad policy matters should be able to pursue all reasonable means to inform itself and to draw from a wide array of sources to reach an informed decision.

[\[103 N.J. at 92, 510 A.2d 662.\]](#)

Finally, the Court reasoned, HN6[[↑]] in developing such a general policy the hospital need not provide public notice, conduct formal proceedings, allow general participation, or develop a formal record in support of a managerial determination. [21] Thus, a hospital decision of this character will be viewed favorably if it is reached in the normal and regular course of conducting the affairs of the hospital and is based on adequate information, regardless of form, origin, or authorship, that is generally considered reasonable and reliable by professional persons responsibly involved in the health-care field.

[\[Id. at 93, 510 A.2d 662.\]](#)

Applying these standards to the admissions preference at issue, the Court held that the record failed to support the hospital's claims of a public-health purpose or benefit; hence the policy was invidiously discriminatory. Id. at 93-97, 510 A.2d 662.

In Berman v. Valley Hosp., 103 N.J. 100, 510 A.2d 673 \(1986\), two doctors were denied admission under a policy refusing privileges "to doctors who practiced medicine in the hospital's service area for more than two years." Id. at 101, 510 A.2d 673. The reason for the policy was to avoid "a problem of overcrowding and overutilization that was attributable to doctors from surrounding areas obtaining staff [22] privileges" at defendant-hospital. Id. at 103, 510 A.2d 673.

As in Desai, the Court in Berman applied a most deferential standard of review: "in reviewing the validity of the kind of broad, quasi-legislative policy determination, such as presented in this case, the freedom of decisional action accorded a hospital is even greater and judicial review more tolerant." Id. 103 N.J. at 107, 510 A.2d 673. [*517] Such action is limited, however, by the requirements that: (1) it be reached in the normal course of hospital affairs; (2) it be based on adequate information; and (3) it reasonably advance the intended health-care objectives. Id. at 108, 510 A.2d 673. The Court struck the policy on these two grounds:

We conclude that the hospital has failed to marshall adequate information that demonstrates that its particular restrictive admissions policy is sufficiently related to a genuine and legitimate health-care objective. In its present formulation, the admissions policy ban against doctors from particular locations has not been justified and appears in most respects to be arbitrary. Further, the two-year [23] practice limitation has not been shown on this record to be sufficiently related to its professed health-care objective of securing staff physicians who are both highly-educated and also have few patients.

[\[Id. at 113, 510 A.2d 673.\]](#)

In dicta the Berman Court opined that "a staff-admissions policy that focuses upon an applicant's years of licensure, length and type of experience, quality of medical education, and caliber of medical training, as well as the volume and residences of private patients, would be entitled to favorable judicial consideration." Id. at 114, 510 A.2d 673.

Judge Stanton here followed this limited review function. He examined the hospital's [1025] response to plaintiff's request and was impressed by its diligence and fairness:

The hospital here did not simply reject this application. . . . [B]ecause the management of the hospital realized that there had not been a careful and recent look taken by the hospital at the question of whether chiropractors should be able to be on the treatment staff, it undertook to review that question, not in the sense of having formal adversarial type hearings, but [24] in the sense of making an inquiry, collecting information, trying to evaluate the information and make a sensible recommendation to the Board.

In my view, what the Board did here, or at least what the hospital management and the non-physician members of the Board, and by default the physician members of the Board, did was to have designated trustees review the situation, study it, make a recommendation to the Board, and then the Board decided that there was no current need or utility, net utility to having chiropractic doctors admitted to the staff.

In my view, the broad methodology followed was appropriate and the result reached was broadly reasonable. That is to say, it makes sense.

[*518] The judge was not concerned with whether the hospital's decision was "right" or whether he agreed with it. Rather, he was compelled to defer to the hospital's judgment of whether chiropractors were necessary to or compatible with the hospital's medical-care mission. And he found it significant that the Legislature had intervened specifically to recognize and approve staff access to dentists, N.J.S.A. 45:6-19.5, and podiatrists, N.J.S.A. 26:2H-12.1, but not to chiropractors. Hence the hospital's [25] decision contravened no statutory law or public policy. Moreover, our research discloses that no bill has ever been introduced in our legislature on the subject of admitting chiropractors to hospital staffs. At oral argument, plaintiff's counsel stressed that the chiropractic profession wanted admission to hospital staffs for economic reasons, that is, to insure their competitive position in the health-care service market. Such economic arguments are best addressed to the legislature. Also, our research discloses that state courts consistently reject claims in law suits by chiropractors for admission to hospital staffs. See Fort Hamilton-Hughes Memorial Hosp. Ctr. v. Southard, 12 Ohio St.3d 263, 12 Ohio B. 342, 466 N.E.2d 903 (1984); Boos v. Donnel, 421 P.2d 644 (Okla. 1966); Cohn v. Wilkes Regional Medical Ctr., 113 N.C.App. 275, 437 S.E.2d 889 (1994); Samuel v. Curry County, 55 Or.App. 653, 639 P.2d 687 (1982).

We find Judge Stanton's ruling unassailable. The hospital did more than the law required. Instead of simply [26] rejecting plaintiff's application offhandedly, it convened a special committee, which solicited evidence from both sides of the issue and reached a reasoned opinion not to change its bylaws. It acted deliberatively and in the course of the normal administration of hospital affairs, and only after receiving adequate information. Desai, supra, 103 N.J. at 93, 510 A.2d 662. The hospital board's opinion was grounded in a finding that the continued exclusion of chiropractors reasonably served genuine health-care objectives. Ibid. For example, the ad hoc committee found that chiropractors were not necessary to the hospital's acute-care mission, that an insignificant [*519] number of patients would require chiropractic services, and that the administrative costs of adding chiropractors would outweigh any benefits. The committee reached these conclusions only after studying a substantial compilation of materials obtained from the American Chiropractic Association.

Neither Judge Stanton nor this court should second-guess the hospital's honest administrative judgment. Plaintiff has identified no countervailing public policy, nor has he demonstrated that the [27] hospital fell short of the Desai-Berman standards for adopting a broad policy of exclusion. Plaintiff argues that chiropractic is a respectable health-care field which deserves treatment equal to dentists, podiatrists, osteopaths, and medical doctors. But he does not effectively refute the reasons offered by the hospital for differential treatment. As the judge recognized, those reasons "made sense" and may not be disregarded by a reviewing court. The hospital's decision was supported by the requisite [1026] "sufficient reliable evidence." Nanavati, supra, 107 N.J. at 249, 526 A.2d 697.

IV

Plaintiff next urges that the judge erred in failing to rule that N.J.S.A. 30:11-1 mandates the hospital to offer chiropractic services. N.J.S.A. 30:11-1 is part of the legislation governing state licensure of private hospitals. That provision announces a "public policy" of establishing and enforcing "basic standards" of hospital care. It forbids hospitals from operating without a license, issuance of which is dependent upon the Department of Health's judgment that the hospital is "adequately prepared" to provide the services it offers. In the sentence relied [28] on by plaintiff, the Legislature imposed a further condition: "HN7 [↑] No license shall be granted to a hospital facility unless the commissioner is satisfied that it is adequately prepared to provide all services and care required by the residents of the community wherein it is located." N.J.S.A. 30:11-1. Plaintiff reasons that, because chiropractic services are "required" in the community where the hospital is [*520] located, the denial of staff admission to chiropractors violates N.J.S.A. 30:11-1.

The judge did not expressly address the N.J.S.A. 30:11-1 argument which was not precisely presented to him. He impliedly rejected it when he reasoned that the courts must defer to the hospitals' and Commissioner of Health's judgment as to what services must be provided by each hospital.

As the hospital and intervenors observe, on its face the statute does not mandate chiropractic services. Rather, it demands only those services that are "required" by the community. The decision as to what services are required lies within the discretion of the hospital. This discretionary judgment, calling for the expertise of the hospital governing body, is entitled to substantial judicial deference. Here [29] the hospital determined, in effect, that chiropractic services were not required. That decision was supported by evidence. In his reply brief, plaintiff cites some contradictory evidence in the record but there was ample evidence supporting denial of privileges. Moreover, HN8[↑] N.J.S.A. 30:11-1 is part of a licensing scheme for hospitals. It grants no remedies to individuals who have not been allowed to apply for staff privileges.

V

Plaintiff next claims that he was libelled by three characterizations of chiropractors contained in an article submitted to the ad hoc committee during its investigation. He insists that the judge erred in ruling as a matter of law that the article was not actionable defamation.

The article was written by Richard J. Webb and Brian M. Foley and appeared in a 1989 publication called Health Span, a Prentice Hall release. Both Webb and Foley are members of the law firm representing the hospital in this case. Webb was the editor of Health Span, and Foley wrote the hospital's appellate brief.

The article was a review of then-recent history of attempts by chiropractors to obtain staff privileges. It cited a 1987 federal [*521] district court case holding that [30] each hospital had the right to make its own decision, based upon its own bylaws, applicable state law, and the needs of its patient community. See Wilk v. American Medical Association, 671 F.Supp. 1465 (N.D.Ill.1987), aff'd, 895 F.2d 352 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 982, 111 S.Ct. 513, 112 L.Ed.2d 524 (1990). It then reviewed the legal, regulatory, and judicial authorities that hospitals must consult in deciding whether to admit chiropractors.

Plaintiff alleges that the defamation consisted of the following:

In the first paragraph of the article, chiropractors are characterized as "an unscientific cult", "unscientific practitioners" and it further states that it is "unethical" for physicians to be associated with chiropractors.

Plaintiff terms these statements "false" and defamatory and alleges that they tainted the committee's findings.

Plaintiff's representations of the article are, at best, disingenuous. The offending phrases were quotations from American Medical Association comments, and the stated intent of Webb and Foley was to [31] show [1027] that such negative attitudes toward chiropractors had changed, such that chiropractors now enjoyed "professional recognition and acceptance." The tone of the article as a whole was not negative toward chiropractic; rather, its purport was as a neutral guide on how hospitals should respond to requests by chiropractors for admission. Far from counselling arbitrary rejection of such requests, the article urged hospitals to "proceed in a deliberate and fair manner" and to decide only "after due consideration of all reasonably available information."

HN9[↑] The threshold inquiry in a libel action is whether defendant published a false statement of fact which was reasonably susceptible of a defamatory meaning as to plaintiff. Kotlikoff v. The Community News, 89 N.J. 62, 67, 444 A.2d 1086 (1982); Salek v. Passaic Collegiate School, 255 N.J.Super. 355, 359, 605 A.2d 276 (App.Div.1992).

Each of these preliminary questions must be decided by the court as a question of law, usually in response to a motion to dismiss or for summary judgment. Kotlikoff, supra, 89 [*522] N.J. at 67, 444 A.2d 1086; [32] Salek, supra, 255 N.J.Super. at 359, 605 A.2d 276.

This article fell well short of satisfying the elements for a prima facie case. First, whether chiropractic is "scientific" and whether it is "unethical" for a doctor to associate with a chiropractor is arguably an opinion not provable as true or false. Second, and more clearly, the article was not susceptible of a defamatory meaning, whether of plaintiff or anyone else. Indeed, the article as a whole tended to bolster the reputation of chiropractic. Finally, even if the statements were defamatory, they were not published by the hospital. The hospital committee and board members may have read a defamatory article and considered it in reaching a decision but this does not render the hospital liable for defamation. The hospital neither re-published the article generally nor disseminated it to a person not having a legitimate interest in the subject matter.

The judge relied on the last ground, reasoning that the act of circulating documents among members of the committee could not constitute publication. Also, he impliedly held that any negative information was privileged:

[I]n terms of trying to [33] get quality decisions made, allowing hospitals to be sued for defamation, if members of their boards considered negative statements made by professional health groups, one about the other, would be to put shackles on the intellectual processes by which sound decisions could be made.

HN10 [↑] New Jersey courts recognize a qualified privilege to make defamatory statements on matters lying within the publisher's interest or duty, where those statements are made to one having a corresponding interest or duty. See Williams v. Bell Telephone Laboratories, Inc., 132 N.J. 109, 121, 623 A.2d 234 (1993).

VI

Plaintiff next complains of the dismissal of his antitrust cause of action. He insists that he "has provided a sufficient factual basis from which the elements of intent and conspiracy may be reasonably inferred." The participants in the conspiracy, he charges, [*523] were "defendant hospital along with the defendant hospital Association and the defendant Medical Society," all of whom joined "to successfully bring about a group boycott of chiropractic physicians in a hospital setting." Plaintiff deems this concerted action to be "a per se violation" [34] of the New Jersey Antitrust Act, N.J.S.A. 56:9-1 to -19. The pertinent prohibition is stated in HN11 [↑] N.J.S.A. 56:9-3: "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce, in this State, shall be unlawful."

HN12 [↑] In analyzing claims of anticompetitive conduct under N.J.S.A. 56:9-3 and the cognate provision of the federal act, 15 U.S.C.A. § 1, our courts apply one of two rules: (1) the "per se rule" --requiring no proof of the market power of the offending parties, or (2) the "rule of reason" --calling for an assessment of the economic impact on the market. Desai, supra, 103 N.J. at 97-98, 510 A.2d 662; Belmar, supra, 96 N.J. at 215-18, 475 A.2d 533. Though in dicta our Supreme Court has expressed a preference for the "rule of reason" in staff privileges cases, it has not yet chosen between the rules. [1028] Desai, supra, 103 N.J. at 98-99, 510 A.2d 662; Belmar, supra, 96 N.J. at 215, 475 A.2d 533. Because of an independent ground for disposing of this [35] issue, we need not choose between these rules.

Plaintiff pleaded this theory against the hospital defendants only. Both intervenors were permitted to participate "as if" they "had been named as original party defendants." Though plaintiff never amended his complaint to include intervenors, in moving for summary judgment on the antitrust count, he did include them in his allegation of a conspiracy.

The judge disposed of this claim this way:

Finally, there's no basis for anti-trust claims, either state or Federal, against the originally named defendants in this case. They all constitute a single entity for the purposes of considering anti-trust laws in doctoring. There simply is no capacity for there to be any conspiracy among the named defendants.

Theoretically, theoretically, there could be a conspiracy involving the hospital association and medical societies, theoretically. But the reality is they only became [*524] involved in this case after Dr. Petrocco brought it to Court and they simply wanted to be heard.

There's no reason why they shouldn't be heard; no conspiracy involved there. There isn't. There's no semblance of an anti-trust claim that's made here.

The hospital argues that [36] this court need not reach the merits of plaintiff's argument, since the hospital was exempt from the Antitrust Act. The hospital invokes N.J.S.A. 56:9-5b(5), which exempts from the reach of the act: "The bona fide religious and charitable activities of any not for profit corporation, trust or organization established exclusively for religious or charitable purposes, or for both purposes. . . ." The hospital in this case without dispute "is a private, nonprofit corporation organized under the laws of the State of New Jersey."

From this record it is unclear whether the hospital's purpose is "charitable," or, if so, whether "charitable activities" encompass decisions relating to staff privileges. One Chancery Division decision held, without analysis, that most of the defendant-hospitals in that case were exempt under N.J.S.A. 56:9-5\(b\)5. Borland v. Bayonne Hosp., 122 N.J.Super. 387, 405, 300 A.2d 584 \(Ch.Div. 1973\), aff'd o.b., 136 N.J.Super. 60, 344 A.2d 331 \(App.Div.1975\), aff'd, 72 N.J. 152, 369 A.2d 1, cert. denied, 434 U.S. 817, 98 S.Ct. 56, 54 L.Ed.2d 73 \(1977\). [37] More recently, our Supreme Court has expressly declined to decide whether the hospitals before it were exempt under N.J.S.A. 56:9-5\(b\)5. Desai, supra, 103 N.J. at 99 n. 9, 510 A.2d 662; Belmar, supra, 96 N.J. at 219, 475 A.2d 533. In light of the uncertainty over the scope of this exception in this context, we proceed to the merits of the antitrust argument.

As the judge implied, HN13[] a hospital is incapable of conspiring with its staff in deciding whether to grant staff privileges. See generally Tim A. Thomas, Annotation, Denial by Hospital of Staff Privileges or Other Health Care Practitioner as Violation of Sherman Act, 89 A.L.R.Fed. 419 \(1988\). Thus, in Nanavati v. Burdette Tomlin Memorial Hosp., 857 F.2d 96 \(3d Cir.1988\), cert. denied, 489 U.S. 1078, 109 S.Ct. 1528, 103 L.Ed.2d 834 \(1989\), the hospital's executive committee was authorized by the bylaws to make recommendations to the hospital's governing board on matters [*525] of staff privileges. The Third Circuit held [38] that, under principles of federal antitrust law, the hospital was not capable of conspiring with its executive committee, because the two entities had no conflicting interests. 857 F.2d at 118. Plaintiff concedes the foregoing rule but urges us to apply the well-established exception for cases when the conspiring employees or staff have an independent personal stake apart from the interest of the hospital.

Plaintiff attempts to bolster his theory by bringing the two intervenors into the alleged conspiracy. But, as the judge observed, there is no proof that the intervenors took any part in the hospital's decision; rather, they voluntarily joined this case in order to argue their legal position in favor of the decision that the hospital had already made. They had no input into the decision itself. Plaintiff contends that intervenors have "a stake" in upholding the ban on chiropractors, [1029] but he does not show or even allege that they did anything in concert with the hospital. It is not enough to assert that intervenors "have the ability to conspire;" there must be at least a prima facie showing of conspiratorial conduct in fact. The judge properly dismissed the [39] antitrust claim.

Finally, we reject plaintiff's contention that the matter was not ripe for summary judgment. Both parties moved for summary judgment. See Morton International v. General Acc. Ins., 266 N.J.Super. 300, 323, 629 A.2d 895 \(App.Div.1991\), aff'd, 134 N.J. 1, 629 A.2d 831 \(1993\).

Affirmed.

In re Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litig.

United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division

May 26, 1994, Decided ; May 27, 1994, Docketed

94 C 897, MDL 997

Reporter

1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7146 *

IN RE: BRAND NAME PRESCRIPTION DRUGS ANTITRUST LITIGATION; This Document Relates to: ALL CASES

Core Terms

Manufacturer, motion to dismiss, plaintiffs', Coordinated, prices, Sherman Act, Defendants', allegations, Robinson-Patman Act, antitrust, conspiracy, Prescription, complaints, Drugs, brand name, purchasers, products, pharmacies, favored, commodities, violations, discovery, commerce, notice

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > General Overview

HN1[Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim]

Defendants must meet a high standard in order to have a complaint dismissed for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted since, in ruling on a motion to dismiss, the court must construe the complaint's allegations in the light most favorable to the plaintiff and all well-pleaded facts and allegations in the plaintiff's complaint must be taken as true. The allegations of a complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond a reasonable doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief. Nonetheless, in order to withstand a motion to dismiss, a complaint must allege facts sufficiently setting forth the essential elements of the cause of action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN2 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In order to state a horizontal price-fixing claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, a plaintiff must allege the existence of a contract, combination or conspiracy intended to restrain competition and which actually has an anticompetitive effect.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To plead an anti-trust violation, a plaintiff need only set forth either direct or inferential allegations respecting all of the material elements necessary to sustain recovery under some viable legal theory. To state a claim for antitrust violations, the plaintiff must at least outline or adumbrate such a violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > Commerce Requirement

HN4 Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

It is unlawful for any person engaged in commerce to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefits of such discrimination or with customers of either of them. 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN5 Antitrust & Trade Law, Robinson-Patman Act

For a 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\) claim to survive dismissal, the plaintiffs must allege the following: (1) the same seller made two or more contemporaneous sales; (2) of commodities of similar grade and quality; (3) at different prices; (4) at least one of the sales was in interstate commerce; and (5) the price discrimination injured the plaintiff and (6) tended to lessen competition of the commodity line (7) substantially.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > Promotional Allowances & Services

HN6 Antitrust & Trade Law, Robinson-Patman Act

It is unlawful for any person engaged in commerce to pay or contract for the payment as compensation or in consideration for any services or facilities in connection with the offering for sale of any products or commodities unless such payment or consideration is available on proportionally equal terms to all other customers competing in the distribution of such products or commodities. 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(d\).

Judges: [*1] Kocoras

Opinion by: CHARLES P. KOCORAS

Opinion

MEMORANDUM OPINION

CHARLES P. KOCORAS, District Judge:

This matter is before the court on the Manufacturer Defendants' Motions to Dismiss pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. For the reasons that follow, Defendants' motions are denied.

BACKGROUND

This action arises out of alleged anti-trust and price discrimination violations of the brand name prescription drug industry. Presently pending before us in this coordinated proceeding are 11 actions in which over 400 retail pharmacies assert claims against 25 pharmaceutical product manufacturers ("the Manufacturer Defendants"), 8 wholesalers, and Medco Containment Services, Inc. ("Medco"), a mail order pharmacy, under the federal antitrust laws as well as under state statutory and common law. The plaintiffs of the various actions presently pending before us are retail drug stores ranging in size from individual, small pharmacies to large, multi-state chains. The actions have polarized into two somewhat distinct groups: (1) a "Consolidated Action," and (2) "Coordinated, Individual Actions".

The Consolidated Action consists of a group of plaintiffs alleging, on behalf of [*2] a purported nationwide class,¹ that the defendants unlawfully engaged in a "horizontal" conspiracy² in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. The Consolidated Action Plaintiffs assert that they were adversely impacted by a horizontal conspiracy entered into by virtually all the leading pharmaceutical manufacturers in the nation for the purpose of fixing, raising, maintaining and stabilizing the prices of "Prescription Brand Name Drugs".³

[*3] The Coordinated, Individual Plaintiffs, on the other hand, assert individual, non-class based claims. In addition to alleging Sherman Act violations, the plaintiffs in the Coordinated, Individual Actions allege that the Manufacturer Defendants have entered into certain price discrimination arrangements in violation of Sections 2(a), (d) and (f) of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 13\(a\), \(d\) and \(f\). Essentially, the Coordinated, Individual Plaintiffs claim that the Manufacturer Defendants sold prescription drugs to certain Health Maintenance Organizations ("HMOs") and mail order pharmacies at prices lower than those which the plaintiff pharmacies paid for the same products either to wholesalers or manufacturers. The Coordinated, Individual Plaintiffs also assert a claim against Defendant

¹ The Consolidated Class Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification is addressed in a separate opinion.

² A horizontal conspiracy is an agreement between "persons or firms in similar lines of endeavor or business, normally, therefore, between competitors." Austin T. Stickells, Federal Control of Business: Antitrust Laws § 6 (1972).

³ As defined in P 3(h) of the Consolidated and Amended Class Action Complaint, "Prescription Brand Name Drugs" are "drugs that are sold under the brand name of the Manufacturer rather than the drug's generic name."

Medco under section 2(f) of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13\(f\), alleging that Medco has knowingly induced or received from the Manufacturer Defendants Prescription Brand Name Drugs at discriminatory prices.⁴

[*4] The Manufacturer Defendants have filed two motions to dismiss. First, the defendants move to dismiss the Consolidated and Amended Complaint in its entirety, as well as the Sherman Act conspiracy claim in the Coordinated, Individual Actions. Second, the Manufacturer Defendants move to dismiss the Robinson-Patman claims asserted in the Coordinated, Individual Complaints. Each motion is essentially based upon the Manufacturer Defendants' contention that the plaintiffs have failed to plead their federal antitrust claims with specificity.⁵

Before addressing the merits of the defendants' motions,⁶ we first examine the legal principles regarding the scope of our analysis on a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss.

[*5] LEGAL STANDARD

The purpose of a motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) is to test the sufficiency of the complaint, not to decide the merits of the case. HN1[↑] Defendants must meet a high standard in order to have a complaint dismissed for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted since, in ruling on a motion to dismiss, the court must construe the complaint's allegations in the light most favorable to the plaintiff and all well-pleaded facts and allegations in the plaintiff's complaint must be taken as true. Ed Miniat, Inc. v. Globe Life Ins. Group Inc., 805 F.2d 732, 733 \(7th Cir. 1986\), cert. denied, 482 U.S. 915, 96 L. Ed. 2d 676, 107 S. Ct. 3188 (1987). The allegations of a complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim "unless it appears beyond a reasonable doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 \(1957\). See also Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59, 104 S. Ct. 2229 \(1984\); [*6] Doe on Behalf of Doe v. St. Joseph's Hospital, 788 F.2d 411 \(7th Cir. 1986\). Nonetheless, in order to withstand a motion to dismiss, a complaint must allege facts sufficiently setting forth the essential elements of the cause of action. Gray v. County of Dane, 854 F.2d 179, 182 \(7th Cir. 1988\). We turn to the motions before us with these principles in mind.

DISCUSSION

I. THE SHERMAN ACT CLAIMS

The Manufacturer Defendants move, pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, to dismiss each claim asserted by the plaintiffs under Section 1 of the Sherman Act. HN2[↑] In order to state a horizontal price-fixing claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must allege the existence of a contract, combination or conspiracy "intended to restrain competition and which actually has an anticompetitive effect." Greater Rockford Energy & Technology Corp. v. Shell Oil Co., 998 F.2d 391, 396 \(7th Cir. 1993\), cert. denied, 127 L. Ed. 2d 375, 114 S. Ct. 1054 (1994); 15 U.S.C. § 1 ("Every contract, [*7] combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce. . . is declared to be illegal"). Accord Quality Auto Body, Inc. v. Allstate Ins. Co., 660 F.2d 1195, 1200 \(7th Cir. 1981\), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 1020, 72 L. Ed. 2d 138, 102 S. Ct. 1717 (1982).

⁴ Defendant Medco has filed its own motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' claims under Section 2(f) of the Robinson-Patman Act. According to Medco, to state a Section 2(f) claim the plaintiffs must first adequately plead a cause of action under Section 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act. Medco maintains that the plaintiffs have failed to sufficiently plead a Section 2(a) claim. In support of its motion, Medco adopts and incorporates by reference the arguments made by the Manufacturer Defendants in support of their motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' claims under Section 2(a) of the Act.

⁵ Naturally, each of the Manufacturer Defendants is moving to dismiss the complaint only in those actions in which it has been named as a defendant and in which it has been served.

⁶ Medco's motion is contingent upon the resolution of the Manufacturer Defendants' motion to dismiss the Coordinated, Independent Plaintiffs' Robinson-Patman Act claims, and therefore will not be separately addressed.

In their motion to dismiss the defendants take issue with the plaintiffs' allegations regarding the existence of "a contract, combination or conspiracy". D's Memo at 8. According to the Manufacturer Defendants, the plaintiffs' various complaints must be dismissed because they lack the specific factual allegations regarding "the manner in which the conspiracy was formed and function, the nature of the agreement reached, and the means by which common goals were effectuated." D's Memo at 9-10. The Manufacturer Defendants maintain that the plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims must fail because the plaintiffs' respective complaints lack particularized allegations regarding what the defendants actually did that was conspiratorial or how they did it.

While it is true that antitrust conspiracy claims alleged in conclusory [*8] or "bare-bones" terms will not withstand a motion to dismiss, the standard for pleading a Sherman Act conspiracy is hardly as demanding and exacting as suggested by the defendants. The Manufacturer Defendants are asking us to hold the plaintiffs to an inordinate level of factual specificity, one which the plaintiffs could not reasonably meet at this stage of the proceedings, since most of the information which the defendants claim must be pled is in the hands of the defendants themselves. See Poller v. Columbia Broadcasting Sys., Inc., 368 U.S. 464, 473, 7 L. Ed. 2d 458, 82 S. Ct. 486 \(1962\) ("Summary procedures should be used sparingly in complex antitrust litigation where motive and intent play leading roles, the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators, and hostile witnesses thicken the plot.").

Rather, HN3 to plead an anti-trust violation, a plaintiff need only set forth "either direct or inferential allegations respecting all of the material elements necessary to sustain recovery under some viable legal theory." [Seglin v. Esau, 769 F.2d 1274, 1279 \(7th Cir. 1985\); Car Carriers, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 745 F.2d 1101, 1106 \(7th Cir. 1984\), [*9] cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1054, 84 L. Ed. 2d 821, 105 S. Ct. 1758 (1985). To state a claim for antitrust violations, the plaintiff must at least "outline or adumbrate" such a violation. Sutliff, Inc. v. Donovan Cos., 727 F.2d 648 \(7th Cir. 1984\). As will be discussed below we find that the plaintiffs have, in their respective complaints, sufficiently set forth sufficient details which give rise to an inference that the defendants allegedly engaged in industry wide price fixing of Prescription Brand Name Drugs and which therefore place the Manufacturer Defendants on notice as to the claims alleged and the grounds upon which they rest.

A. The Consolidated Action

For instance, in the Consolidated Action the plaintiffs allege that the defendants "engaged in a nationwide contract, continuing combination and conspiracy" which "consisted of a continuing agreement[,] undertaking and concert of action. . . to fix, raise, maintain and stabilize the prices of Prescription Brand Name Drugs sold to the plaintiffs. . . at supra-competitive levels." Consolidated Amended Complaint at P 78, 79. The plaintiffs [*10] support their claim with specific factual allegations that the defendants conspired to and actually "did" the following: acted jointly to fix prices; implemented a "charge-back" or rebate system; utilized systems of parallel pricing; signed contract agreements; refrained from price competition with one another; met together on numerous occasions; and acted in concert to keep prices high by using a "charge-back" system and refusing to extend to the plaintiffs any substantial discounts on Prescription Brand Name Drugs. Id. at P 80(a)-(g). Moreover, in paragraphs 71 through 77 of their Consolidated Complaint, the plaintiffs make specific allegations regarding the climate of the market during the relevant time period; these allegations give support to the plaintiffs' assertion that absent collusion among the defendants the prices of Prescription Brand Name drugs would not have increased as dramatically as alleged. Finally, in paragraph 74 of their complaint the Consolidated Action Plaintiffs provide specific examples of the striking difference between prices the defendants allegedly charged to the plaintiffs, and the prices they charged to Institutional Pharmacies for the same Prescription [*11] Brand Name Drugs. Accordingly, we find that the allegations of the Consolidated Action Complaint, as amended, are more than just conclusory and "bare-bones," such that they withstand the Manufacturer Defendants' motion to dismiss.

B. The Coordinated, Independent Actions

We likewise find that the Coordinated, Independent Plaintiffs have sufficiently pled a cause of action for violations of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. The plaintiffs in the Coordinated, Independent Action have specifically alleged that the Defendant Manufacturers "have acted in concert in refusing to extend to Plaintiffs the discounted prices that the Manufacturer Defendants have extended to [] Favored Purchasers." Consolidated Independent Action Amended Complaint at P 81. The plaintiffs further allege that the Manufacturer Defendants "have acted in concert in precluding wholesale distributors from . . . using the rebates or credits received from sales to Favored Purchasers to lower the prices at which they sell the same drugs to Plaintiffs and other non-favored purchasers." Id. at 82. The plaintiffs support their assertion with allegations which give rise to the inference that the alleged conduct of the Manufacturer [*12] Defendants lacks a legitimate business purpose and is contrary to the self-interest of each defendant, if it were acting alone. See e.g. Id. at P 59, 50, 58, 59, & 86.

The Defendant Manufacturers argue that the Coordinated Independent Plaintiffs' claim under the Sherman Act must fail because "there is a 'plausible explanation' why certain manufacturers may have independently decided, without collusion, to charge lower prices to [certain] buyers." Notwithstanding, the possibility that the Manufacturer Defendants could present "plausible explanations" for the alleged conduct at trial, such an inquiry at this juncture is not appropriate. While we will not "don blinders to commercial reality," we will not, as implicitly suggested by the Manufacturer Defendants, require the plaintiffs to prove their allegations on a motion to dismiss.

The plaintiffs have sufficiently placed the Defendant Manufacturers on notice as to the type of claim alleged and the grounds upon which it rests. Whether the plaintiffs can present enough evidence that "tends to exclude the possibility," Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986), [*13] that the Defendant Manufacturers either acted independently or acted in accordance with ordinary business motives is more appropriately resolved at a later stage of these proceedings. The allegations in the Coordinated, Independent Plaintiffs complaint, when viewed as a whole, provide a sufficient basis from which each element of the plaintiffs' Section 1 Sherman Act claim can be inferred. See Three Crown Ltd. Partnership v. Caxton Corp., 817 F. Supp. 1033, 1047 (S.D.N.Y. 1993). The Manufacturer Defendants' motion to dismiss the Sherman Act claim is therefore denied.

In conclusion, since this is a motion to dismiss we emphasize that our function is, as noted above, is not to decide the merits of the plaintiffs' claims. Rather, our inquiry is limited to whether the plaintiffs have stated a cognizable cause of action. The Manufacturer Defendants are suggesting that the plaintiffs are required to plead, at a minimum, specific and detailed facts such as where and when the alleged conspiratorial meetings were held, who attended, what was said or what was allegedly agreed upon. We are aware of the U.S. Supreme Court's suggestion that district courts should [*14] "insist on some specificity in pleading before allowing a potentially massive factual controversy to proceed." Associated Gen. Contractors, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 528 n.17, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983). See also Sutliff, 727 F.2d at 654 ("The heavy costs of modern federal litigation, especially antitrust litigation, . . . counsel against launching the parties into pretrial discovery if there is no reasonable prospect that the plaintiff can make out a cause of action from the events narrated in the complaint.") However, common sense dictates that a plaintiff should not be required to plead facts exclusively within the knowledge of the defendants themselves.

In fact, the U.S. Supreme Court has specifically cautioned against summary dismissal of antitrust suits since motive and intent are typically central issues. Poller, 368 U.S. at 473.⁷ Here, we find that the defendants' attacks on the Consolidated Plaintiffs' Complaint and the Coordinated, Independent Plaintiffs' Complaints are, [*15] for the most part, based on such "highly factual and subjective questions of intent and purpose," that the plaintiffs should be allowed to proceed on their claims. See Car Carriers, 745 F.2d at 1106 ("If a claim under the antitrust laws has been adequately set forth in the complaint, the highly factual and subjective questions of intent and purpose should be resolved after discovery and trial.")

⁷ The defendants question the vitality of Poller's cautionary instruction against summary dismissal of antitrust litigation. However, we note that all of the cases with the Manufacturer Defendants primarily cite in support of its proposition that Poller has been effectively overruled deal with summary judgment issues. See e.g. Matsushita, 475 U.S. 574 at 578, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986); Collins v. Associated Pathologists, Ltd., 844 F.2d 473, 477 (7th Cir. 1988), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 852, 102 L. Ed. 2d 110, 109 S. Ct. 137 (1988). Here, we are still in the preliminary stages of the suit where the plaintiffs must surpass a lesser threshold in avoiding summary dismissal of their claims.

[*16] Finally, we do not agree with the defendants' argument that the plaintiffs' complaints must be held to a heightened pleading standard simply because they set forth antitrust violations claims. As the U.S. Supreme Court recently confirmed in Leatherman v. Tarrant County Narcotics Unit, 122 L. Ed. 2d 517, 113 S. Ct. 1160 (1993), the liberal system of notice pleading applies to all actions, unless otherwise specified in the in the Federal Rules. Id. at 1163. The plaintiffs' complaints clearly meet the Federal Rules' notice pleading requirements.⁸

[*17] Accordingly, we find that the plaintiffs have sufficiently pled their claims under Section 1 of the Sherman Act. We will leave "whatever additional sharpening of the issues [that] is necessary" to the discovery process and other pre-trial procedures. Three Crown Ltd., 817 F. Supp. at 1048 (citations omitted). Defendants' motion to dismiss the plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims is denied.⁹

[*18] II. THE ROBINSON-PATMAN CLAIMS

The Manufacturer Defendants move to dismiss the Robinson-Patman claims asserted in the Coordinated Independent Actions,¹⁰ for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted. According to the defendants, the plaintiffs have failed to allege the fundamental facts necessary to support each element of a prima facie case of unlawful price discrimination under Sections 2(a) and 2(d)¹¹ of the Robinson-Patman Act.

[*19] HN4[]

Pursuant to Section 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act, it is unlawful:

for any person engaged in commerce. . . to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality. . . where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefits of such discrimination or with customers of either of them.

15 U.S.C. § 13(a). Accordingly, HN5[] for their Section 2(a) claim to survive dismissal, the plaintiffs must allege the following:

(1) the same seller made two or more contemporaneous sales[;] (2) of commodities of similar grade and quality[;] (3) at different prices; (4) at least one of the sales was in interstate commerce; and (5) the price discrimination injured the plaintiff and (6) tended to lessen competition of the commodity line (7) substantially.

⁸ The defendants cite to one of our own decisions, Ballard v. Johlic, No. 93 C3214, 1994 WL 11626, at *3 & n.5 (N.D.Ill. Jan. 3, 1994), in support of the proposition that we should hold the plaintiffs to a heightened pleading standard. In Ballard we noted that Rule 8 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure requires a plaintiff to state the grounds upon which his claim is based, and in stating such grounds the plaintiff is required to set forth factual allegations. Here, however, the plaintiffs have sufficiently buttressed the grounds for their antitrust claims with the minimum factual support necessitated by the Rules' notice pleading system.

⁹ Defendants Schering-Plough Corporation and Burroughs Wellcome Co. (collectively, "Schering and Burroughs") have filed a separate Reply Memorandum in support of the Manufacturer Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the Consolidated and Amended Complaint. Schering and Burroughs essentially argue that the Consolidated Action complaint must be dismissed because the plaintiffs have failed to state separate, individual claims against each Manufacturer Defendant. For reasons which are set forth below in our discussion of the defendants' motion to dismiss the Robinson-Patman claims, we are not persuaded that such specific and presumably redundant allegations would be either helpful or necessary at this juncture.

¹⁰ The Manufacturer Defendants' motion to dismiss the Robinson-Patman claims is addressed to the claims of price discrimination asserted in the following three sets of complaints: (1) Rite Aid Corporation, et al. v. American Home Products Corp. et al., No. 93c1200 ("Rite Aid"); (2) the six complaints filed by Duker & Barrett and Mary Boies & Associates and the three additional, nearly-identical complaints filed by other counsel (collectively, the "Duker-Boies" complaints); and (3) Albertson's, Inc. et al. v. Abbott Laboratories et al., Civ. No. C-1-94-160 (S.D.Ohio) ("Albertson's").

¹¹ The Rite-Aid and Duker-Boies complaint assert claims under Section 2(d) of the Robinson-Patman Act, a claim which is not asserted in the Albertson complaint.

Oreman Sales, Inc. v. Matsushita Elec. Corp., 768 F. Supp. 1174, 1184 (E.D.La. 1991). Accord American Academic Suppliers v. Beckley-Cardy, 922 F.2d 1317, 1322 (7th Cir. 1991). [*20]

According to the Manufacturer Defendants the plaintiffs cannot state a Section 2(a) Robinson-Patman violation without alleging with specificity: (1) what products were supposedly sold at discriminatory prices; (2) whether the plaintiff purchased products directly from a Manufacturer Defendant; (3) the price paid by the plaintiff for each product; and (4) who the allegedly favored purchaser was and the price it paid.

In support of their argument the defendants cite to Mountain View Pharmacy v. Abbott Laboratories, 630 F.2d 1383 (10th Cir. 1980). There, the Tenth Circuit affirmed the dismissal of a Section 2(a) Robinson-Patman claim because of the plaintiffs' failure to:

specify any products that were the subject of discriminatory treatment [and failure to] identify the favored and disfavored purchasers of a particular product.

Id. at 1388. Here, however, we believe that the plaintiffs' have sufficiently identified themselves as the disfavored purchasers, and have identified Medco, a representative mail order pharmacy, as a favored purchaser. Moreover, the plaintiffs have specifically alleged the anticompetitive effect [*21] of the defendants alleged actions.

Although the plaintiffs have not at this juncture specified the products that were subject to discriminatory treatment, we do not agree with the Tenth Circuit that this is a necessary allegation for the purpose of giving the defendants notice of the claims alleged and the grounds upon which they rest. Such facts are, as suggested by the plaintiffs, "neither desirable nor necessary" at this juncture, for pleading specific claims against each defendant on the basis of each product would "result[] only in a complaint doubled in length" with no resulting "gain in useful information." Nagler v. Admiral Corporation, 248 F.2d 319, 325 (2nd Cir. 1957).

In support of their argument that the plaintiffs must set forth separate pleadings for their separate claims against each defendant, the Manufacturer Defendants cite to Baim & Blank, Inc. v. Warren-Connelly Co., 19 F.R.D. 108 (D.N.Y. 1956), in which the court dismissed a Robinson-Patman Act complaint which failed to list and analyze each act of each defendant. The court in Baim & Blank criticized what they considered to be a "shotgun complaint." [*22] Id. at 100. However, a year after Baim & Blank was decided the Second Circuit harshly criticized the decision and analysis of the Baim & Blank court. Nagler v. Admiral Corp., 248 F.2d at 323. The court in Nagler observed that the Baim & Blank decision led "promptly to a new complaint, doubled in size, and some attempt at formal separation of the claims of different plaintiffs, with no appreciable gain in information. . . . no real progress has been made in the 2 1/3 years the case has pended." Id. at 323 n.3.

We are reluctant to take what we consider to be an unnecessary course of action which would result only in undue delay. We cannot at this juncture justify a summary dismissal of the plaintiffs' Robinson-Patman Act claims since each of the plaintiffs' complaints, as a whole, goes beyond merely reciting the elements of a Robinson-Patman Act violation. The plaintiffs have provided the defendants with a sufficient factual background evidencing their claim. See Leatherman, 113 S. Ct. at 1163. Of course, whether or not the plaintiffs will actually prevail [*23] on their claims and prove each exacting element of Section 2(a) of the Act cannot be determined until after the completion of discovery.

We find that the plaintiffs have sufficiently set forth "either direct or inferential allegations" respecting each of the material elements under Section 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act. Seglin, 769 F.2d 1274 at 1279; Car Carriers, 745 F.2d at 1106. Accordingly, the Manufacturer Defendants' motion to dismiss the Coordinated, Individual Plaintiffs' Section 2(a) Robinson-Patman Act claims is denied.

Likewise, the Manufacturer Defendants' motion to dismiss the Section 2(d) Robinson-Patman Act claims asserted in the Rite-Aid and Duker-Boies complaints is likewise denied. HN6 Pursuant to Section 2(d) of the act:

it is unlawful for any person engaged in commerce to pay or contract for the payment. . . as compensation or in consideration for any services or facilities. . . in connection with the . . . offering for sale of any products or commodities. . . unless such payment or consideration is available on proportionally equal terms to all other customers competing in the distribution [*24] of such products or commodities.

15 U.S.C. § 13(d). The Manufacturer Defendants argue that with the exception of one manufacturer and one product, the plaintiffs fail to allege which products are allegedly involved, who the "favored" competing customers are supposed to have been and the amount of the alleged payment. As with the defendants' Section 2(a) arguments for dismissal, we are likewise unpersuaded by their arguments for dismissal of the Section 2(f) claim. "If 'the defendants, before trial, desire more detailed information from [the] plaintiff[s] they can seek it by interrogatories, deposition or discovery'." Nagler, 248 F.2d at 323.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Manufacturer Defendants' motions to dismiss the plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims and Robinson-Patman Act claims are denied. Moreover, since Defendant Medco's motion to dismiss incorporates by reference and is contingent upon the Manufacturer Defendants' motion to dismiss the plaintiffs' Robinson-Patman Act claims, Defendant Medco's motion to dismiss is likewise denied.

Charles P. Kocoras

United States District Judge

Dated: May 26, [*25] 1994

End of Document

Massachusetts Sch. of Law v. American Bar Ass'n

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania

May 31, 1994, Decided ; May 31, 1994, Filed

CIVIL ACTION No. 93-6206

Reporter

853 F. Supp. 843 *; 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7219 ; 1994-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,605

MASSACHUSETTS SCHOOL OF LAW AT ANDOVER, INC. v. AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION, et al.

Prior History: [1] Original Opinion of March 11, 1994, Reported at: 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2924.

Core Terms

individual defendant, conspired, accreditation, personal jurisdiction, law school, conspiracy, medical staff, reconsideration motion, co-conspirator, organizational, Exhibits, contacts

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > General Overview

HN1 Pleadings, Complaints

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8\(a\)\(2\) requires a party provide a short and plain statement of the claim showing pleader is entitled to relief from the individual defendants.

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > Defenses

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > General Overview

HN2 Civil Conspiracy, Defenses

Only legally distinct entities can conspire with one another.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

HN3 Regulated Practices, Private Actions

In antitrust cases, courts look beyond legal form to the economic substance of an arrangement, which often depends upon the economic incentives of the parties.

Civil Procedure > General Overview

Civil Procedure

The rules of civil procedure are to be construed to secure the just, speedy, and inexpensive determination of every action. Fed. R. Civ. P. 1.

Counsel: For MASSACHUSETTS SCHOOL OF LAW AT ANDOVER, INC., PLAINTIFF: HAROLD E. KOHN, KOHN, SAVEETT, KLEIN & GRAF, P.C., PHILADELPHIA, PA, JOANNE ZACK, KOHN, NAST & GRAF, P.C., PHILADELPHIA, PA, LAWRENCE R. VELVEL, ANDOVER, MA, MICHAEL L. COYNE, ANDOVER, MA, CONSTANCE L. RUDNICK, ANDOVER, MA, PETER M. MALAGUTI, ANDOVER, MA, JOSEPH E. DEVLIN, ANDOVER, MA, ROBIN SHELDON, KOHN, NAST AND GRAF, P.C., PHILA, PA.

For AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION, DEFENDANT: L. SUZANNE FORBIS, PEPPER, HAMILTON & SCHEETZ, PHILA, PA, BARBARA W. MATHER, PEPPER, HAMILTON & SCHEETZ, PHILA, PA, CAREY A. DE WITT, ANN M. KELLY, BUTZEL AND LONG, DETROIT, MI, H. BLAIR WHITE, CHICAGO, IL, DAVID T. PRITIKIN, SIDLEY AND AUSTIN, CHICAGO, IL, WILLIAM H. BAUMGARTNER, SIDLEY AND AUSTIN, CHICAGO, IL. For LAW SCHOOL ADMISSION SERVICES, INC., LAW SCHOOL ADMISSION COUNCIL, DEFENDANTS: JOSEPH B. G. FAY, MARK P. EDWARDS, JAY H. CALVERT, JR., MORGAN, LEWIS & BOCKIUS, PHILA, PA, MICHAEL F. CLAYTON, MORGAN, LEWIS & BOCKIUS, WASHINGTON, DC, SCOTT A. STEMPLE, MORGAN, LEWIS AND BOCKIUS, WASHINGTON, DC, H. BLAIR WHITE, CHICAGO, IL, DAVID T. PRITIKIN, SIDLEY AND AUSTIN, CHICAGO, IL, WILLIAM H. BAUMGARTNER, SIDLEY AND AUSTIN, CHICAGO, IL. For THE ASSOCIATION [2] OF AMERICAN LAW SCHOOLS, INC., CARL C. MONK, DEFENDANTS: JACQUELINE R. DEPEW, ROBERT A. BURGOYNE, DAVID M. FOSTER, SALLY P. PAXTON, FULBRIGHT & JAWORSKI L.L.P., WASHINGTON, DC.

For UNIVERSITY OF DETROIT MERCY SCHOOL OF LAW, RESPONDENT: CAREY A. DE WITT, ANN M. KELLY, BUTZEL AND LONG, DETROIT, MI.

Judges: Ditter, Jr., J.

Opinion by: J. WILLIAM DITTER, JR.

Opinion

[*844] MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

Ditter, J.

This case involves law school accreditation and alleged violations of federal antitrust law.¹ [3] Plaintiff, the Massachusetts School of Law ("MSL"), alleges in its complaint that four organizational defendants² and 22 individual defendants³ conspired to fix the salaries of law school faculties and administrators, restrict professors'

¹ For a more detailed recitation of the facts and plaintiff's allegations, see Massachusetts School of Law at Andover, Inc. v. American Bar Ass'n, 846 F. Supp. 374, 376-77 \(E.D. Pa. 1994\).

² The organizational defendants are the American Bar Association, the American Association of Law Schools, Law School Admission Services, Inc., and the Law School Admission Council.

³ The 22 individual defendants are: James P. White, Nina Appel, Jose R. Garcia-Pedrosa, Laura N. Gasaway, Frederick M. Hart, Rudolph C. Hasl, Carl C. Monk, R.W. Nahstoll, Henry Ramsey, Jr., Norman Redlich, John E. Ryan, Gordon D. Schaber, Pauline output, raise law school tuitions, and foreclose from legal education people in lower socio-economic classes. Twenty-one of the 22 individual defendants filed a collective motion to dismiss the claims against them for lack of personal jurisdiction. The 22nd individual defendant, Carl C. Monk, filed a separate motion to dismiss.

I granted the 21 individual defendants' motion, holding there was no basis for the exercise of general or specific personal jurisdiction over the individual defendants. Massachusetts School of Law at Andover, Inc. v. American Bar Ass'n, 846 F. Supp. 374, 380 (E.D. Pa. 1994). None of the individuals is a resident or citizen of Pennsylvania, had been served in Pennsylvania, or consented to the exercise of personal jurisdiction by courts in [*845] Pennsylvania. Further, because plaintiff [4] had not alleged with particularity any contacts the individual defendants had with Pennsylvania that gave rise to plaintiff's cause of action, I held that plaintiff had not met its burden of establishing that its cause of action arose out of the individual defendants' contacts with Pennsylvania. Finally, I held that the theory of co-conspirator jurisdiction was inapplicable in this instance because plaintiff had not alleged substantial acts in Pennsylvania in furtherance of the conspiracy.

Plaintiff timely filed a motion for reconsideration, asserting that it now has evidence of co-conspirators' contacts with Pennsylvania and wants the chance to discover more. Such contacts, plaintiff argues, permit the exercise of personal jurisdiction over the individual defendants. In a subsequent filing, plaintiff made clear it was not challenging accreditation in general, but only the use of certain criteria that are reflected in various ABA accreditation standards.

⁴ [6] To support its motion for reconsideration of the order of dismissal, MSL submits several documents that MSL says show that some accreditation-related activities took place in Philadelphia. Exhibits C and D indicate that an ABA [5] workshop for law school deans took place in Philadelphia in 1988, although I note that the workshop does not appear to have been solely, or even mostly, focused on accreditation. ⁵ Similarly, plaintiff's reply memorandum in support of its motion for reconsideration shows that in 1988 and 1992, the LSAC's Board of Trustees, which included some of the individual defendants, met in Pennsylvania. The minutes of the meeting show that the board discussed cooperation with the AALS and ABA on certain issues. There is no reference to any consideration of the specific standards that MSL contends violate the antitrust laws.

Other documents submitted by MSL do not support its contention that activities in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy took place in Pennsylvania. For example, MSL submits numerous letters from law school deans who, in 1987, expressed concern or disagreement with the ABA accreditation criteria concerning student-faculty ratios. The letters were all addressed to a law school dean in San Francisco; some mention a scheduled deans' meeting in New Orleans.⁶

[7] Similarly, MSL asserts that several of the individual defendants participated in meetings of the "Mayflower Group," which apparently includes representatives of the ABA, AALS, and LSAC. Plaintiff states that discovery "may show meetings in Philadelphia." By the same token, discovery may show meetings in Nome, Honolulu, or Timbuktu. However, the only definite locations of Mayflower Group meetings that can be gleaned from plaintiff's documents are Washington, D.C. (Exhibits I, J, K, L) and San Francisco (Exhibits P and R).

Schneider, Steven R. Smith, Claude R. Sowle, Robert A. Stein, Rennard Strickland, Roy T. Stuckey, Leigh H. Taylor, Frank K. Walwer, Sharp Whitmore, and Peter A. Winograd.

⁴ MSL challenges six criteria that encompass several of the more than 50 ABA standards: salary levels (ABA Standard 405); student-faculty ratios, limits on teaching hours and sabbatical requirement (ABA Standards 201 and 401-405); use of the Law School Admission Test or other test (ABA Standard 503); guidelines for law libraries (ABA Standards 602, 603, and 704); prohibition of for-credit bar review courses (ABA Standard 302(b)); and limits on hours that students may be employed (ABA Standard 305).

⁵ In addition to a program by the accreditation committee -- which may or may not have included discussion of the criteria and standards complained of -- topics for panels and discussions included fund raising, lawyer competency, law school administration, and budgeting.

⁶ MSL's contention that the documents "show that a large number of deans present at the Philadelphia workshop believed the ABA's student-faculty ratio to be unrelated to quality" (emphasis added) requires a leap of faith I am unwilling to make. While some letters, dated 1988, mention the Philadelphia deans' workshop, the majority of letters are from 1987 and refer to the New Orleans workshop.

Despite plaintiff's urging otherwise, I do not find that the documents MSL presents suggest, much less show, substantial acts in Pennsylvania in furtherance of the conspiracy claimed to have injured MSL in its bid for, and subsequent denial of, accreditation.

An even more important reason for affirming the March 11 order lies in the fact that plaintiff has failed, as required by HN1[↑] Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8\(a\)\(2\), to provide a "short and plain statement of the claim showing pleader is entitled to relief" from the [*846] individual defendants. Plaintiff has not alleged in its complaint nor asserted in its arguments, a legal theory upon which the liability of any 8 individual can rest. What the complaint does do is to name twenty-two persons and associate each of them with one of four organizational defendants. It asserts that "defendants have engaged in combinations, conspiracies, and agreements, and have organized and enforced a group boycott," and that they have "engaged in a conspiracy to monopolize [and] an attempt to monopolize."

The complaint can only be logically understood as asserting that the individual defendants conspired with the organizational defendants of which they are alleged to have been a part, or whose activities they are said to have carried out. Such an allegation is not a short, plain statement showing that plaintiff is entitled to relief from the individual defendants because, as a matter of law, the individual defendants cannot conspire with their own organizational defendant.⁷

9 HN2[↑] Only legally distinct entities can conspire with one another. Oksanen v. Page Memorial Hosp., 945 F.2d 696, 703 \(4th Cir. 1991\), cert. denied, 117 L. Ed. 2d 137, 112 S. Ct. 973 (1992); Weiss v. York Hosp., 745 F.2d 786, 813 \(3d Cir. 1984\), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1060, 84 L. Ed. 2d 836, 105 S. Ct. 1777 (1985). Weiss, a case involving peer-review by a medical staff empowered to make decisions about granting hospital privileges to applicant doctors, is instructive as an analogy to this, an accreditation case in which individuals are empowered by the ABA to evaluate law schools and make recommendations to the ABA about accreditation.

In Weiss, an osteopath was denied staff privileges at a hospital. 745 F.2d at 791. He alleged Sherman Act violations by the hospital and its medical staff, composed of doctors who have privileges at the hospital. The Third Circuit said that the hospital could not, as a matter of law, conspire with the medical staff because the latter, empowered to make decisions 10 on behalf of the hospital, acted as corporate officers would in relation to a corporation.⁸ 745 F.2d at 817. The medical staff had no economic interest in competition with the interests of the hospital and therefore could not conspire with it. Id.

11 As Weiss points out, HN3[↑] in antitrust cases, courts look beyond legal form to the economic substance of an arrangement, which often depends upon the economic incentives of the parties. Here the individual defendants may be separate economic units competing with each other, although that is not alleged, but if the complaint ties them to anything in this case, it is to their respective organizations. In short, the complaint can only be understood to assert that in effect they acted in the way corporate officers would act in relation to a corporation.

⁷ If it be argued that the complaint could be interpreted to allege that the individual defendants each conspired with some or all of the others, the complaint becomes vague to the point of absurdity.

⁸ This analogy of the medical staff acting as corporate officers would act in relation to the corporation does not mean that personal jurisdiction over the corporation supports personal jurisdiction over the individual corporate officers. A corporate officer's or director's actions taken in his or her corporate capacity do not, by themselves, bring the officer or director personally within the jurisdiction of the court. Simkins Corp. v. Gourmet Resources Int'l, 601 F. Supp. 1336, 1345 \(E.D. Pa. 1985\). See also Amplifier Research Corp. v. Hart, 144 Bankr. 693, 696 \(E.D. Pa. 1992\) (president of defendant corporation dismissed for lack of personal jurisdiction when plaintiff did not set forth what president did to subject himself to jurisdiction); Donner v. Tams-Witmark Music Library, Inc., 480 F. Supp. 1229, 1233 \(E.D. Pa. 1979\) (courts generally have not exercised personal jurisdiction over individuals for their acts done in a corporate capacity). It is for that reason that the documents referred to on page 3 do not establish a basis for jurisdiction over an individual defendant even though he or she may have participated in the activity in question.

The situation of the individual defendants vis a vis the organizational defendants is much the same as that of the medical staff in Weiss. Individual defendants who, on behalf of the ABA, assume accreditation responsibilities and undertake accreditation activities, such as visiting a law school under evaluation, are the ears and eyes of the ABA. It is not merely that their interests are consistent with those of the ABA -- for that particular accreditation matter, they are the ABA. [*847] James P. White, Consultant on Legal Education to the ABA, is a particularly good example. He is, according to the complaint, in charge of the accreditation [12] process for the ABA. On accreditation matters, therefore, he is not legally distinct from the ABA and cannot, as a matter of law, conspire with it. Therefore, the ABA's contacts with Pennsylvania cannot be the basis for the exercise of co-conspirator personal jurisdiction over the individual defendants because the individual defendants cannot be co-conspirators with the ABA. Similarly, individual defendants on the board of trustees of the LSAC cannot, in their capacity as board members, conspire with the LSAC.

The Third Circuit in Weiss, while agreeing with the district court that the medical staff could not conspire with the hospital during the peer-review process, recognized that the individuals comprising the medical staff could conspire with each other, as they had independent economic interests in competition with one another and, presumably, with any doctor seeking privileges at the hospital. 745 F.2d at 817. Here, it may well be that the individual defendants, who have independent interests as law school professors, administrators, or practitioners, could have, as a matter of law, conspired with one another. Plaintiff, however, has not alleged [13] which of them conspired with which others, and to do what.⁹ The global allegation about combinations, conspiracies, and agreements; the organization of a group boycott; and the organization of a monopolization conspiracy, rich in jargon though it may be, is not a short and plain statement showing why the individual defendants are liable to the plaintiff for anything.

By way of further illustration: Norman Redlich is one of the individual defendants named in MSL's complaint. The complaint alleges only that "Norman Redlich was Chairman of the Council of the Section of Legal Education from 1989-1990." No doubt, he acted through that council for the ABA. [14] And that is exactly the point: he was not legally distinct from the ABA and cannot have conspired with it. Neither the complaint nor subsequent filings allege what Redlich, independent of his ABA ties, had to do with establishing, evaluating, or enforcing the accreditation criteria of which MSL complains, or that Redlich was involved in the decision not to accredit MSL. MSL has asserted that it is not attacking the virtues of accreditation as a whole, but only specific criteria alleged to be anticompetitive restraints. The only thing that can be gleaned from the complaint about Redlich is that he acted for and with the ABA. Since he cannot have conspired with the ABA, whatever is said about him is not a short and plain statement showing why MSL is entitled to relief from Redlich.

MSL's own allegations and exhibits illustrate precisely the significance of this point. MSL's motion for reconsideration includes exhibits indicating that Redlich was on a panel during the 1988 deans' workshop in Philadelphia (Exhibit D) and may have attended a Mayflower Group meeting in 1989 (Exhibit K). The deans' workshop in which Redlich participated was sponsored by the ABA; Redlich's panel addressed [15] ABA council matters. Similarly, the document concerning the Mayflower Group is on LSAC letterhead and specifically indicates that Redlich's appearance was for, or on behalf of, the ABA: it lists to whom the meeting's agenda was sent and reads, "Norman Redlich (ABA)." While MSL may assert that the ABA, through Redlich, conspired with the LSAC, or that Redlich as an individual conspired with the LSAC, this document cannot suggest both allegations. Theoretically it is possible for Redlich to have conspired with the other defendants in his individual, not ABA, capacity. But until or unless MSL can allege with whom, and for what, Redlich -- or any other individual defendant -- conspired, there is no basis for the assertion of co-conspirator jurisdiction over any of them.

HN4 The rules of civil procedure are to be construed to secure the just, speedy, and inexpensive determination of every action. [*848] Fed. R. Civ. P. 1. The rule should be more than an idea or fuzzy, though noble, abstraction. If the plaintiff cannot state a claim against one or more of these individual defendants, that individual should not be subjected to the expensive and time-consuming arsenal of interrogatories, document demands, [16] and depositions that plaintiff will understandably use in the hope of establishing a basis for personal jurisdiction. If the plaintiff can allege with whom and for what an individual conspired, it may do so. If not, that should end the matter for that defendant.

⁹ I am aware of the Supreme Court's admonition that courts should not impose heightened pleading requirements in the absence of such requirements in the Federal Rules. Leatherman v. Tarrant County Narcotics Unit, 122 L. Ed. 2d 517, 113 S. Ct. 1160, 1163 (1993). In this instance I am merely requiring the plaintiff to identify the alleged wrong and wrongdoer.

Although this court can exercise personal jurisdiction over the four organizational defendants, when form yields to economic substance, plaintiff has not alleged the legally possible conspiracy(ies) that could give rise to the exercise of co-conspirator personal jurisdiction over any of the individual defendants. Therefore, although plaintiff's motion for reconsideration of the order dismissing the 21 individual defendants for lack of personal jurisdiction has been granted, the order must be affirmed.

An appropriate order follows.

ORDER

AND NOW, this 31st day of May, 1994, the plaintiff's motion for reconsideration is hereby granted, and the order of March 11, 1994, dismissing plaintiff's claims against 21 individual defendants is hereby affirmed.

BY THE COURT:

J. William Ditter, Jr.

End of Document

Roth v. Rhodes

Court of Appeal of California, Fourth Appellate District, Division Three

May 31, 1994, Decided

No. G013651.

Reporter

25 Cal. App. 4th 530 *; 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 706 ; 1994 Cal. App. LEXIS 529 ; 94 Cal. Daily Op. Service 4003; 94 Daily Journal DAR 7372; 1994-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,612

IVAR ROTH et al., Plaintiffs and Appellants, v. FRANK A. RHODES et al., Defendants and Respondents.

Prior History: [1] Superior Court of Orange County, No. 625223, C. Robert Jameson, Judge.

Disposition: The judgment is affirmed.

Core Terms

cause of action, restraint of trade, declaration, medical doctor, continuance, tenants, vertical, medical building, trial court, profession, civil rights, cases, conspiracy, patients, Cartwright Act, pleadings, lease, summary adjudication, podiatrists, landlord, tenancy, triable, arbitrary discrimination, personal characteristics, prohibits, policies, religion, appears, business establishment, civil rights statute

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Public Versus Private Discrimination

HN1[Protection of Rights, Public Versus Private Discrimination

A policy or a classification, in itself permissible, may nevertheless be illegal if it is merely a device employed to accomplish prohibited discrimination.

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Public Versus Private Discrimination

HN2[Protection of Rights, Public Versus Private Discrimination

Legitimate business interests may justify limitations on consumer access to public accommodations. Operators of commercial buildings have legitimate reasons to designate the purposes for which they wish to let them by limiting their tenants to certain trades or professions or with respect to the type of merchandise sold.

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Public Versus Private Discrimination

HN3 Protection of Rights, Public Versus Private Discrimination

Discrimination in leasing office space based on profession, as long as it is not a stratagem designed to disguise discrimination based on personal characteristics protected under the Unruh Civil Rights Act (Act), Cal. Civ. Code § 51 et seq., is not prohibited under the Act.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

HN4 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

The Cartwright Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16700 et seq., prohibits a lease from containing a condition the lessee shall not deal with a competitor where the effect of such lease or such condition may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

HN5 Summary Judgment, Supporting Materials

A party cannot successfully resist summary judgment on a theory not pleaded.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

HN6 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

Vertical restraints are subject to a rule-of-reason analysis to determine their impact on competition which requires a threshold inquiry into the defendant's market power. As a practical matter, market power is usually equated with market share. Since market power can rarely be measured directly by the methods of litigation, it is normally inferred from possession of a substantial percentage of the sales in a market carefully defined in terms of both product and geography. To meet his initial burden in establishing that the practice is an unreasonable restraint of trade, a plaintiff must show that the activity is the type that restrains trade and that the restraint is likely to be of significant magnitude. Ordinarily, a plaintiff to do this must delineate a relevant market and show that the defendant plays enough of a role in that market to impair competition significantly.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

HN7 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Cartwright Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16700 et seq., like the Sherman Act, prohibits "combinations" for the purpose of restraining trade. A combination means a concert of action by individuals or entities maintaining separate and independent interests. In the absence of any purpose to create or maintain a monopoly, traders engaged in an entirely private business have the right to freely exercise their own independent discretion as to the parties with whom they will deal. Absent such a monopolistic purpose, and unless prohibited by other statutes, landlords may freely rent to whomever they please and likewise not rent to whomever they please.

25 Cal. App. 4th 530, *530L⁸⁰ Cal. Rptr. 2d 706, 706L⁹⁹⁴ Cal. App. LEXIS 529, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8 [down] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16726 declares that "trusts" are unlawful, against public policy, and void. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720 defines a "trust" as a combination of capital, skill, or acts by two or more persons for certain defined purposes. The statute defines combinations to create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce among these illegal purposes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN9 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

An individual acting alone through his agent or a corporation acting alone through its officers is not a combination in restraint of trade proscribed by the Cartwright Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16700 et seq.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Voluntary Dismissals > Court Order > Motions for Dismissal

HN10 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The law does not require a plaintiff to join all coconspirators in the action. Antitrust coconspirators are jointly and severally liable for all damages caused by the conspiracy; thus a plaintiff may choose to sue any or all of them.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

HN11 [down] Summary Judgment, Supporting Materials

Admissions made in the course of a party's deposition cannot be contradicted solely by that party's declaration in opposition to summary judgment.

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Commercial Interference > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

HN12 [💡] Intentional Interference, Elements

An essential element of the tort of intentional interference with prospective business advantage is the existence of a business relationship with which the tortfeasor interfered. Although this need not be a contractual relationship, an existing relationship is required.

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN13 [💡] Business Torts, Unfair Business Practices

Before there may be liability for intentional interference with the right to pursue a lawful calling, such interference must be either by unlawful means or by means which are otherwise lawful but without sufficient justification or privilege.

Civil Procedure > Pretrial Matters > Continuances

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN14 [💡] Pretrial Matters, Continuances

See Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 437c\(h\).

Civil Procedure > Pretrial Matters > Continuances

HN15 [💡] Pretrial Matters, Continuances

Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 437c\(h\) makes it a condition that the party moving for a continuance show facts essential to justify opposition may exist.

Headnotes/Summary

Summary

CALIFORNIA OFFICIAL REPORTS SUMMARY

A doctor of podiatry brought an action against medical building operators alleging that defendants illegally refused to lease offices to him on the basis of their policy of only leasing to medical doctors. The trial court granted defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings as to plaintiff's cause of action for interference with prospective business advantage, and granted defendants' motion for summary adjudication on all other causes of action, which included violations of the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.), the Unruh Civil Rights Act (Civ. Code, § 51 et seq.), and common law prohibitions on restraint of trade, unfair competition, and intentional interference with the right to practice a profession. (Superior Court of Orange County, No. 625223, C. Robert Jameson, Judge.)

The Court of Appeal affirmed. It held that discrimination in leasing office space based on profession, as long as it is not a stratagem designed to disguise discrimination based on personal characteristics protected under the Unruh

Civil Rights Act, is not prohibited under the act. The court also held that plaintiff's claim that defendants' refusal to lease constituted a vertical restraint of trade in violation of Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16727 (lease may not contain condition that lessee may not deal with competitor where effect of lease or condition may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create monopoly), was not encompassed within the causes of action pleaded, which were based on a conspiracy to restrain trade, not on an attempt to monopolize by refusing to deal. These are independent bases for recovery, and a party cannot successfully resist summary judgment on a theory not pleaded. The court further held that the trial court properly granted defendants' summary adjudication motion as to plaintiff's claim of conspiracy to restrain trade, since defendants, who were all each other's agents, could not conspire among themselves, and the evidence offered by them concerning the absence of any agreement or conspiracy with medical doctors (whom plaintiff had dismissed from the action) was uncontradicted. As to plaintiff's claim of interference with prospective business advantage, the trial court properly granted defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings, as the allegations only directly charged that tort against the now dismissed medical doctors. Finally, the court held, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying plaintiff's motion for a continuance, which he made at the hearing on the motions for summary adjudication and judgment on the pleadings. (Opinion by Rylaarsdam, J., * with Sills, P. J., and Crosby, J., concurring.)

Headnotes

CA\(1a\) [] (1a) CA\(1b\) [] (1b)

Civil Rights § 5—Housing and Other Property—Lease of Office Space Based on Profession—Refusal to Lease to Other Than Medical Doctors.

--Discrimination in leasing office space based on profession, as long as it is not a stratagem designed to disguise discrimination based on personal characteristics protected under the Unruh Civil Rights Act (Civ. Code, § 51 et seq.), is not prohibited under the act. Hence, in an action by a doctor of podiatry alleging that defendant medical building operators illegally refused to rent to him because he was not a medical doctor, the trial court properly granted defendants' motion for summary adjudication as to plaintiff's cause of action under the act. Plaintiff made no allegation that defendants' policy of renting only to medical doctors had the ulterior purpose of excluding classes enumerated in the act or within the penumbra of categories identified in case law as being protected by the civil rights laws.

[See 8 Witkin, Summary of Cal. Law (9th ed. 1988) Constitutional Law, §§ 753, 754A; 5 Miller & Starr, Cal. Real Estate (2d ed. 1989) § 11:41.]

CA\(2\) [] (2)

Civil Rights § 1—Unruh Civil Rights Act—Statutory Classifications as Nonexclusive.

--The classifications of Civ. Code, § 51, prohibiting discrimination by business establishments based on sex, race, color, religion, ancestry, national origin, or disability, are not exclusive but illustrative only; the statute prohibits all arbitrary discrimination by business establishments. Civ. Code, § 51.5, expands on Civ. Code, § 51, by specifying forms of discrimination, including refusal to deal. The classifications specified in Civ. Code, § 51.5, which are identical to those of Civ. Code, § 51, are likewise not exclusive and encompass other personal characteristics identified in the case law.

CA\(3\) [] (3)

* Judge of the Orange Superior Court sitting under assignment by the Chairperson of the Judicial Council.

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 6—Under Cartwright Act—Applicability of Act to Professions.

--The Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.), which prohibits restraints of trade, applies to professions.

CA(4a)[] (4a) CA(4b)[] (4b)Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 7—Under Cartwright Act—Prohibited Agreements and Combinations—Vertical Restraints of Trade—Refusal to Lease Office Space to Other Than Medical Doctors.

--In an action by a doctor of podiatry alleging that defendant medical building operators illegally refused to rent to him because he was not a medical doctor, the trial court properly granted defendants' motion for summary adjudication as to plaintiff's cause of action for restraint of trade, notwithstanding plaintiff's claim that defendants' refusal to lease constituted a vertical restraint of trade in violation of Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16727 (lease may not contain condition that lessee may not deal with competitor where effect of lease or condition may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create monopoly). The claim was not encompassed within the causes of action pleaded, which were based on a conspiracy to restrain trade, not on an attempt to monopolize by refusing to deal. These are independent bases for recovery, and a party cannot successfully resist summary judgment on a theory not pleaded. In any event, the services offered by defendants did not place them in the same stream of commerce as the services offered by plaintiff, and on this ground alone, a "vertical restraint of trade" analysis was inappropriate. Further, defendants' share of the relevant market was too small to support a vertical restraint claim.

CA(5)[] (5)Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 6—Under Cartwright Act—Interpretation of Act—Applicability of Cases Interpreting Sherman Act.

--The Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.), which prohibits restraints of trade, is patterned after the Sherman Act and both statutes have their roots in the common law. Consequently, federal cases interpreting the Sherman Act are applicable to problems arising under the Cartwright Act.

CA(6)[] (6)Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 2—Definitions and Distinctions—Combination: Words, Phrases, and Maxims—Combination.

--Under the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.), which, like the Sherman Act, prohibits "combinations" for the purpose of restraining trade, "combination" means a concert of action by individuals or entities maintaining separate and independent interests.

CA(7)[] (7)Monopolies and Other Restraints of Trade § 3—Particular Agreements and Combinations—Leases.

--In the absence of any purpose to create or maintain a monopoly, traders engaged in an entirely private business have the right to freely exercise their own independent discretion as to the parties with whom they will deal. Thus, absent such a monopolistic purpose and unless prohibited by other statutes, such as the civil rights statutes, landlords may freely rent to whomever they please and likewise not rent to whomever they please.

CA(8a)[] (8a) CA(8b)[] (8b)Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 5—Actions—Conspiracy to Restraine Trade—Refusal to Rent Office Space to Other Than Medical Doctors—Summary Adjudication.

--In an action by a doctor of podiatry alleging that defendant medical building operators illegally refused to rent to him because he was not a medical doctor, the trial court properly granted defendants' motion for summary adjudication as to plaintiff's cause of action for conspiracy to restrain trade, since there was no triable issue of fact as to whether defendants acted in concert with others to deprive plaintiff of the desired tenancy. Any alleged agreement among defendants could not support the claim, since defendants jointly engaged in the single enterprise of managing a medical building; as such, each was the agent for the others, and an individual acting alone through his or her agent or a corporation acting alone through its officers is not a combination in restraint of trade. Further, although all antitrust coconspirators need not be joined in the action, the evidence offered by defendants concerning the absence of any agreement or conspiracy with medical doctors (whom plaintiff had dismissed from the action) was uncontradicted.

CA(9)[] (9)Summary Judgment § 5—Depositions—Contradiction of Deposition Admission by Declaration in Opposition to Summary Judgment.

--Admissions made in the course of a party's deposition cannot be contradicted solely by the party's declaration in opposition to summary judgment.

CA(10)[] (10)Interference § 7—With Prospective Economic Advantage—Actions and Remedies—Judgment on Pleadings—Refusal to Lease Office Space to Other Than Medical Doctors.

--In an action by a doctor of podiatry alleging that defendant medical building operators illegally refused to rent to him because he was not a medical doctor, the trial court did not err in granting judgment on the pleadings for defendants as to plaintiff's cause of action for interference with prospective economic advantage. The essence of the cause of action was the allegation that medical doctors induced the medical building operator defendants not to lease space to plaintiff, but, at the time of the motion for judgment on the pleadings, the medical doctor defendants had been dismissed, and the allegation only charged those defendants. Further, an essential element of the tort of intentional interference with prospective business advantage is the existence of a business relationship with which the tortfeasor interfered, but plaintiff's case was predicated on the claim that a tenancy in plaintiff's building would have resulted in future referrals and patient contacts. From the very nature of this claim it followed that plaintiff could not have had an existing relationship with these speculative "future patients."

CA(11)[] (11)Interference § 1—With Right to Pursue Lawful Profession—Refusal to Lease Office Space to Other Than Medical Doctors.

--In an action by a doctor of podiatry alleging that defendant medical building operators illegally refused to rent to him because he was not a medical doctor, the trial court properly granted defendants' motion for summary adjudication as to plaintiff's cause of action for interference with plaintiff's right to practice his profession. Before there may be liability for intentional interference with the right to pursue a lawful calling, such interference must be either by unlawful means or by means that are otherwise lawful but without sufficient justification or privilege.

Defendants did not act unlawfully, and there was no triable issue of fact regarding justification; defendants' legitimate business purposes in renting only to medical doctors (quality control and increased reputation for the facility) were uncontradicted. Further, there was no claim that plaintiff was prevented from practicing his profession or was unable to obtain adequate facilities to treat his patients as a result of defendants' conduct.

CA(12) (12)

Continuance § 4—Review—Denial of Motion in Hearing on Motions for Summary Adjudication and Judgment on Pleadings.

--In an action by a doctor of podiatry alleging that defendant medical building operators illegally refused to rent to him because he was not a medical doctor, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to grant plaintiff's motion for a continuance at the hearing on defendants' motions for summary adjudication and judgment on the pleadings. The court did not hear the summary adjudication motion until six weeks after it had been filed, the court had already once continued the hearing to permit plaintiff to file late opposition, and Code Civ. Proc., § 437c, subd. (h) (continuance of hearing on summary judgment or summary adjudication motion), does not provide for an unlimited number of continuances. At the time of the motion, the case had been pending two and one-half years, and it was close to trial. Adequate bases for denial of the continuance existed in that plaintiff did not request it until the time of the hearing and gave no reason for the lateness of his request. Further, the declaration requesting the continuance failed to suggest what facts might exist to support the opposition to the motions, as required by subd. (h).

Counsel: James F. McGee for Plaintiffs and Appellants.

Layman, Jones & Dye, Kevin P. Bjerregaard and Robert B. Beauchamp for Defendants and Respondents.

Judges: Opinion by Rylaarsdam, J., * with Sills, P. J., and Crosby, J., concurring.)

Opinion by: RYLAARSDAM, J.

Opinion

[*535] [707] * --May operators of medical buildings limit acceptable tenants to medical doctors or do statutory or common law prohibitions require them to lease space to other health care practitioners, in this instance, a podiatrist, or even the world at large? We conclude under the facts presented here, no legal requirement compels landlords to accept tenants who are not medical doctors.

[2] Respondents Frank A. Rhodes, Gene Rhodes, Susan Rhodes, Rhodes Development Company, and Newport Center Medical Buildings (Rhodes or the Rhodes respondents) operate medical buildings in Newport Beach. According to the allegations of the complaint and as acknowledged by them, the Rhodes respondents only lease space to persons holding M.D. degrees. Appellants Ivar Roth and Ivar E. Roth, Podiatric Corporation (Roth) predicate all causes of action [708] asserted in the complaint upon a refusal of Rhodes to rent space to Roth because of Rhodes' policy only to lease space to holders of M.D. degrees. Roth is not a medical doctor; he holds the degree of doctor of podiatric medicine. Roth appeals from a judgment entered following the granting of motions

* Judge of the Orange Superior Court sitting under assignment by the Chairperson of the Judicial Council.

* Judge of the Orange Superior Court sitting under assignment by the Chairperson of the Judicial Council.

for summary adjudication and judgment on the pleadings which disposed of all causes of action asserted in the complaint.¹

I. FACTS [3] AND CONTENTIONS

In his third amended complaint, Roth attacked Rhodes' policy limiting tenants to medical doctors as violations of the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. I^{*536} Code, § 16700 et seq.) and common law prohibitions on restraint of trade, unfair competition, interference with prospective business advantage, intentional interference with the right to practice a profession, and violations of the Unruh Civil Rights Act. (Civ. Code, § 51 et seq.) The trial court granted summary adjudication on all causes of action except the cause of action for interference with prospective business advantage. Roth argues his opposition to the motion presented triable issues of material fact which require resolution by a fact finder as to each of these causes of action. The trial court granted judgment on the pleadings on the cause of action for interference with prospective business advantage. Roth argues the complaint states sufficient facts to constitute a cause of action. We disagree on all counts.

At the hearing on the motions, Roth's counsel presented the court with a declaration requesting a continuance. The declaration stated Roth needed further discovery and time to obtain expert opinions. [4] The court denied the continuance on grounds the request was untimely and the declaration was insufficient to support a continuance. Roth argues the court had a mandatory duty to continue the hearing. There was no such mandatory duty under the facts of this case, and we hold the trial court did not abuse its discretion.

Roth's factual allegations may be summarized as follows: (1) Rhodes operates medical buildings in the Fashion Island section of Newport Beach, including a building at 1401 Avocado. (2) This building, as well as the others operated by Rhodes in the area, is prestigious and offers a uniquely comprehensive range of medical services. (3) Tenancy in the Avocado building offers unique opportunities for professional referrals. (4) The Rhodes respondents conspired among themselves and with the (since dismissed) medical doctors to deny Roth's civil rights, restrain his trade, interfere with his prospective economic advantage, and prevent Roth from successfully practicing his profession by prohibiting podiatrists, including Roth, from practicing in the medical building to prevent competition with these medical doctors. (5) In furtherance of this conspiracy, Rhodes refuses to [5] rent space to Roth in the Avocado building. (6) As a result, Roth lost potential referrals and potential direct patient contacts which would have benefited him economically.

II. ISSUES SUMMARIZED

The issue whether Rhodes can refuse to lease space to podiatrists is analytically no different from the question of whether the law requires a department store which caters to the high end of the market to purchase [^{*537}] shoes from a manufacturer who makes less expensive, lower quality shoes. Or we could ask, does the law prohibit a landlord from limiting his tenancies to lawyers, merchants, or any specific trade or profession? If managers of stores or office buildings adopt such policies, may a disappointed supplier or prospective tenant claim the right to a jury trial under the civil rights acts because such discrimination against inferior or superior merchandise or between various types of tenancies may constitute arbitrary discrimination by a business establishment? Does [^{709}] such discrimination constitute a violation of the antitrust laws? We answer these questions in the negative.

III. DO THE CALIFORNIA CIVIL RIGHTS STATUTES PROHIBIT DISCRIMINATION BETWEEN MEDICAL DOCTORS AND DOCTORS [6] OF PODIATRY IN THE LEASING OF OFFICE SPACE?

CA\(1a\)[] (1a) May operators of office buildings limit their tenants to tinkers, tailors, physicians, or podiatrists? Do such restrictions violate the statutory civil rights of prospective tenants who fail to meet the landlord's occupational or professional qualifications? Do such restrictions at least raise questions of fact as to whether the exclusion constitutes arbitrary discrimination? Unless the landlord uses such restrictions as a pretext to exclude persons having the types of personal characteristics protected by the civil rights statutes (such as race, gender, or religion), they do not.

¹ Originally Roth also sued a number of medical doctors, tenants of Rhodes, on various conspiracy theories; he voluntarily dismissed as to them.

Roth claims Rhodes, who as a commercial landlord operates a business establishment, violated the Unruh Civil Rights Act (Civ. Code, § 51 et seq.). Section 51 prohibits discrimination by business establishments based on "sex, color, race, religion, ancestry, national origin, or disability." CA(2)↑ (2) A number of cases hold that the classifications of section 51 are not exclusive but illustrative only; they note the statute prohibits all arbitrary discrimination by business establishments. (See, e.g., O'Connor v. Village Green Owners Assn. (1983) 33 Cal.3d 790 [191 Cal.Rptr. 320, 662 P.2d 427] [7] [age]; Marina Point, Ltd. v. Wolfson (1982) 30 Cal.3d 721, 744 [180 Cal.Rptr. 496, 640 P.2d 115, 30 A.L.R.4th 1161] [family status]; In re Cox (1970) 3 Cal.3d 205, 218 [90 Cal.Rptr. 24, 474 P.2d 992] [personal appearance]; Pines v. Tomson (1984) 160 Cal.App.3d 370 [206 Cal.Rptr. 866] [religion]; Rolon v. Kulwitzky (1984) 153 Cal.App.3d 289 [200 Cal.Rptr. 217] [homosexuality].) Section 51.5 expands on section 51 by, inter alia, specifying forms of discrimination, including refusal to deal. The rationale of Cox and Marina Point compels the conclusion that the classifications specified in section 51.5, which are identical to those of section 51, are likewise not exclusive and encompass other personal characteristics identified in earlier cases.

[*538] CA(1b)↑ (1b) How expansive is the prohibition on arbitrary discrimination under these statutes? All economic decisions involve choices and hence require decision makers to discriminate between alternatives in making [8] these choices. If the issue whether or not discrimination is arbitrary may require a determination in a trial before a fact finder, are all discriminators to be subjected to such a trial to defend the rational basis for their discrimination? If law firms adopt policies not to hire associates who failed to do well in law school or only those who graduated from certain highly rated law schools, may they be put in the dock for a jury to determine whether the services offered by the firm could only be performed by excellent law students? If a university insists it will only hire holders of a Ph.D. as assistant professors, would a fact finder be permitted to determine the policy represents arbitrary discrimination, and therefore violates the civil rights statutes, because many persons not holding such a degree would be able to teach as well or better?

If such policies are subterfuges for invidious discrimination, the answer is yes. HN1↑ A policy or a classification, in itself permissible, may nevertheless be illegal if it is merely a device employed to accomplish prohibited discrimination. For example, a case decided under title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C.A. § 2000e [91 et seq.]), involving policies similar to those in the Unruh Civil Rights Act, held an employer rule prohibiting law school attendance, which was applied to female employees but not to males, violated the act. (Chescheir v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co. (5th Cir. 1983) 713 F.2d 1142.) There is no suggestion in the case that the discrimination against law students, in and of itself, violated title VII. Similarly, Griggs v. Duke Power Co. (1971) 401 U.S. 424 [28 L.Ed.2d 158, 91 S.Ct. 849], another title VII case, held an employer could not use the requirement of a high school diploma as a pretext to exclude a racial group, where the possession [710] of such a diploma was unrelated to the skills required for the performance of the work.

Roth makes no allegation that Rhodes' policy had any such ulterior purpose. He does not suggest the true reason for his exclusion was his membership in any of the classes enumerated in the statute or within the penumbra of categories identified in case law as being protected by the civil rights laws. There is no hint that the policy adopted by Rhodes was applied in light of the [10] prospective tenant's race, sex, religion, or any other personal characteristic. Indeed, we have nothing in the record to suggest that Rhodes was a member of any minority group other than podiatrists.

Cases noted above, expanding application of the Unruh Civil Rights Act to categories of persons other than those specified in the statute, have used the general statement, ". . . the Legislature intended to prohibit all arbitrary [539] discrimination by business establishments." (In re Cox, supra, 3 Cal.3d 205, 216.) In spite of this broad language, all these cases involve "discrimination based on personal characteristics similar to the statutory classifications of race, sex, religion, etc. . ." (Harris v. Capital Growth Investors XIV (1991) 52 Cal.3d 1142, 1156 [278 Cal.Rptr. 614, 805 P.2d 873].) The court in Harris dealt with economic discrimination; it held the Unruh Civil Rights Act did not prohibit a landlord from rejecting tenants who failed to meet a minimum income standard. (Id. at pp. 1143, 1163-1164.) In reviewing the legislative history of California's civil rights statutes, the court concluded, "In [11] order to give significance to the Legislature's specific and repeated emphasis on these categories [i.e.

race, color, religion, etc.], we must ascertain their common element. The categories involve personal as opposed to economic characteristics--a person's geographical origin, physical attributes, and personal beliefs." (Id. at p. 1160.)

Furthermore, apparently referring to classifications other than those statutorily protected, Harris notes, ". . . the California appellate cases have also recognized that HN2[[↑]] legitimate business interests may justify limitations on consumer access to public accommodations." (Harris v. Capital Growth Investors XIV, supra, 52 Cal.3d at p. 1162.) Such a legitimate business interest is obvious here. Operators of commercial buildings have legitimate reasons to designate the purposes for which they wish to let them by limiting their tenants to certain trades or professions or with respect to the type of merchandise sold. If a shopping mall is intended to appeal to a particular segment of the market, it serves no social or economic purpose for the law to demand tenants not in keeping with this objective, [12] be granted leases. If operators of an office building perceive a niche in the market for a particular type of tenant, no useful purpose is to be served by our interfering with their economic decision to so limit the tenancy. It may well be that the very prestige which Roth attributes to Rhodes' medical building, and on which Roth desires to trade, is in part the result of Rhodes' leasing policies. Unless legally prohibited discrimination results, a court should not insinuate itself into the market place to prohibit Rhodes from maintaining such policies as have resulted in the commercial success attributed to him by Roth.

The election to practice a particular profession represents a professional and, frequently, an economic choice, rather than a personal characteristic of the type enumerated in the act. We therefore conclude HN3[[↑]] discrimination in leasing office space based on profession, as long as it is not a stratagem designed to disguise discrimination based on personal characteristics protected under the Unruh Civil Rights Act, is not prohibited under the act. Hence, the trial court properly concluded Roth could not recover on the basis of the asserted cause of action for violation [13] of his statutory civil rights.

[*540] IV. DOES THE CARTWRIGHT ACT PROHIBIT THE LANDLORD OF A MEDICAL BUILDING FROM REFUSING TO LEASE TO ANYONE BUT MEDICAL DOCTORS?

Roth bases four causes of action in his third amended complaint on restraint of trade: (1) restraint of trade under the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, 16700 et seq.); (2) common law restraint of trade; (3) damages for unfair competition; and (4) injunction for unfair competition. Roth stipulated at the hearing below and acknowledges in his brief the second, third, and fourth of these depend upon the viability of the Cartwright Act cause of action. Since we conclude the court properly granted the motion for summary adjudication of issues on the Cartwright Act cause of action, further discussion of the other three causes of action is unnecessary.

Does any principle of antitrust law give Roth the right to rent from Rhodes? Roth alleges, and we will accept as a fact, podiatrists compete with medical doctors with respect to certain procedures. CA\(3\)[[↑]] (3) The Cartwright Act, which prohibits restraint of trade, applies to professions. ([Cianci v. Superior Court \(1985\) 40 Cal.3d 903, 916 \[221 Cal.Rptr. 575, 710 P.2d 375\].](#)) [14] Roth argues that Rhodes' refusal to lease constitutes a vertical restraint of trade (apparently relying on Business and Professions Code section 16727) and that the Rhodes respondents conspired among themselves and with some of the tenants (the dismissed medical doctors) to restrain his trade (relying on Business and Profession Code sections 16720 and 16726). Although he commingles arguments relating to vertical restraint and conspiracy to restrain trade, the two theories represent distinct violations of antitrust laws. However, under either theory, if the conduct charged against Rhodes constitutes an illegal restraint of trade, we should reverse the decision of the trial court granting summary adjudication in favor of Rhodes on the restraint of trade causes of action.

Roth does not contend Rhodes prevented him from practicing his profession. He does not contend Rhodes' building was the only place where he could treat his patients. He does not contend he is limited in his ability to practice his profession or patients will not come to his office because of its undesirable location or inadequate facilities. Roth's only contention is that Rhodes' building is more prestigious than others [15] and, were he granted a tenancy, he would reap greater economic reward than in the accommodations available to him.

[*541] Do the facts asserted by Roth support a potential finding of a "vertical restraint of trade" in an attempt to monopolize?

CA(4a)[¹] (4a) Roth characterizes his claim as a "vertical restraint of trade." Although no statutory reference is provided, this claim appears to be made under Business and Professions Code section 16727 which [HN4\[¹\]](#) prohibits a lease ² from containing a condition the lessee shall not deal with a competitor "where the effect of such lease . . . or such condition . . . may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly"

[16] First, this claim is not encompassed within the causes of action pleaded; Roth bases these on a conspiracy to restrain trade, rather than on an attempt to monopolize by refusing to deal. As noted, these are independent bases for recovery. [HN5\[¹\]](#) A party cannot successfully resist summary judgment on a theory not pleaded. ([580 Folsom Associates v. Prometheus Development Co. \(1990\) 223 Cal.App.3d 1, 18 \[272 Cal.Rptr. 227\].](#))

In any event, we question whether a vertical restraint analysis is appropriate under the facts presented. All cases cited by Roth in support of his analysis and all cases disclosed through our research dealing with vertical restraints, involve claims against suppliers in the same stream of commerce as the person or entity claiming the restraint. Business and Professions Code section 16727 expressly refers to "competitors."

Reviewing the cases cited by Roth: [G.H.I.I. v. MTS, Inc. \(1983\) 147 Cal.App.3d 256 \[195 Cal.Rptr. 211\]](#) deals with the relationship between, on the one hand, retail record stores and, on the other, producers and distributors of records and tapes; [Bert G. Gianelli Distributing Co. v. Beck & Co. \(1985\) 172 Cal.App.3d 1020 \[219 Cal.Rptr. 17121 203\]](#); [17] the relationship between a brewer and, independent local beer distributors; Columbia Broadcasting Sys. v. Am. Soc. of Composers \(2d Cir. 1980\) 620 F.2d 930; television networks and the holders of copyrights to music performed on the networks; [Redwood Theatres, Inc. v. Festival Enterprises, Inc. \(1988\) 200 Cal.App.3d 687 \[248 Cal.Rptr. 189\]](#); film distributors and theater chains. The one case cited by Roth for the proposition the parties need not be in the same product line, [Lowell v. Mother's Cake & Cookie Co. \(1978\) 79 Cal.App.3d 13 \[144 Cal.Rptr. 664\]](#), did not concern the issue of vertical restraints at all and held, albeit on unrelated grounds, the Cartwright Act did not apply. Here the services offered by Rhodes (commercial leasing) do not place him in [*542] the same stream of commerce as the services offered by Roth (podiatry). On this ground alone, a "vertical restraint of trade" analysis appears to be inappropriate.

However, even if concepts of vertical restraint of trade were to be applied, we nevertheless conclude no triable issues of fact exist on [18] this theory. CA(5)[¹] (5) The complaint is framed under California's Cartwright Act; however "[a] long line of California cases has concluded that the Cartwright Act is patterned after the Sherman Act and both statutes have their roots in the common law. Consequently, federal cases interpreting the Sherman Act are applicable to problems arising under the Cartwright Act." ([Marin County Bd. of Realtors, Inc. v. Palsson \(1976\) 16 Cal.3d 920, 925 \[130 Cal.Rptr. 1, 549 P.2d 833\]; Redwood Theatres, Inc. v. Festival Enterprises, Inc., supra, 200 Cal.App.3d at p. 694.](#)) Redwood Theatres, in accordance with this principle, reviews a number of federal cases applying the federal antitrust laws to marketing practices in the motion picture industry. Although the court notes, "[t]he unusual competitive conditions of the theatre business, marked by the presence of a unique product in short supply, put an entirely different complexion on the issue of market power" (id. at p. 707), the case nevertheless provides us with certain basic principles which aid in our analysis here.

Redwood Theatres characterizes [19] the refusal of a supplier to deal with a potential customer as a "vertical restraint" and holds, "[u]nder Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc. [(1977)] [433 U.S. 36 \[53 L.Ed.2d 568, 97 S.Ct. 2549\]](#), such [HN6\[¹\]](#) vertical restraints are subject to a rule-of-reason analysis to determine their impact on competition." (Redwood Theatres, Inc. v. Festival Enterprises, Inc., supra, 200 Cal.App.3d at p. 703, fn. omitted.) "Since the Sylvania decision, several other federal courts applying the rule of reason to vertical restraints have required [a] threshold inquiry into the defendant's market power. [Citations.] As a practical matter, market power is usually equated with market share. 'Since market power can rarely be measured directly by the methods of litigation, it is normally inferred from possession of a substantial percentage of the sales in a market carefully defined in terms of both product and geography.' [Citations.]" (Id. at p. 704.) "To meet his initial burden in establishing that the practice is an unreasonable restraint of trade, plaintiff must show that the activity [20] is the type that restrains trade and that the restraint is likely to be of significant magnitude. [Citation.] Ordinarily, a plaintiff to do this must delineate a relevant market and show that the defendant plays enough of a role in that market to impair competition significantly." (Bhan v. NME Hospitals, Inc. (9th Cir. 1991) 929 F.2d 1404, 1413.)

² On its face, the statute appears to be limited to chattel leases; no similar California statute relating to leases of real property exists. However, we do not suggest that, on appropriate facts, restrictions in real property leases may not violate antitrust laws. (See, e.g., [People v. Mobile Magic Sales, Inc. \(1979\) 96 Cal.App.3d 1 \[157 Cal.Rptr. 749\].](#))

CA(4b)[¹] (4b) Rhodes supported his motion with the declaration of a qualified economist. This declaration demonstrated neither the building in which Roth [*543] sought a tenancy, nor the other buildings operated by Rhodes, constituted separate relevant geographic markets. Roth's admission that the area from which he draws his patients includes southern Orange County and Newport Beach, Irvine, Costa Mesa, and Huntington Beach also supports his conclusion. According to the economist, that market consists at least of the Newport Beach, Irvine, Costa Mesa, and Huntington Beach area. Within this area alone, there are some 59 medical buildings, 5 of which Rhodes operates. None of this was contradicted by Roth.

Applying the market share test to the facts, we find, on the basis of the number of [713] buildings in the relevant market [21] area, Rhodes controls less than 10 percent of the market. Were we to include all of southern Orange County, which is included in the area from which Roth acknowledges drawing his patients, the percentage would be even lower. Although we were not presented with square footage, which might give us a more refined measure of market share, as noted in Redwood Theatres, a market share of 16 percent fails "conspicuously to pass the threshold test establishing the defendant's market power." (200 Cal.App.3d at p. 704.) It is obvious there is no violation of the antitrust statutes, under the market share test, the basis for the rule of reason. Therefore, even if a vertical restraint analysis was appropriate, we must conclude summary adjudication in favor of Rhodes was proper, unless there is a triable issue of fact as to whether Rhodes engaged in a conspiracy to restrain trade.

Is there a triable issue of fact whether Rhodes engaged in a conspiracy to restrain trade?

CA(6)[¹] (6) HN7[¹] The Cartwright Act, like the Sherman Act, prohibits "combinations" for the purpose of restraining trade. "[A] combination means a concert of action by individuals or entities [22] maintaining separate and independent interests." (Bondi v. Jewels by Edwar, Ltd. (1968) 267 Cal.App.2d 672, 678 [73 Cal.Rptr. 494]. See also State of California ex rel. Van de Kamp v. Texaco, Inc. (1988) 46 Cal.3d 1147 [252 Cal.Rptr. 221, 762 P.2d 385].) CA(7)[¹] (7) Early in the history of federal antitrust law, the United States Supreme Court recognized in United States v. Colgate & Co. (1919) 250 U.S. 300, 307 [63 L.Ed. 992, 997, 39 S.Ct. 465, 7 A.L.R.443], "[i]n the absence of any purpose to create or maintain a monopoly, . . . [traders] engaged in an entirely private business [have the right to] freely . . . exercise [their] own independent discretion as to the parties with whom [they] will deal . . ." Absent such a monopolistic purpose, and unless prohibited by other statutes, such as the civil rights statutes, discussed above, landlords may freely rent to whomever they please and likewise not rent to whomever they please.

However, a concerted refusal to deal may run afoul of the antitrust statutes. HN8[¹] Business and Professions* [23] *Code section 16726 declares, with exceptions not relevant here, "trusts" are "unlawful, against public policy and [*544] void." Business and Professions Code section 16720 defines a "trust" as "a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons" for certain defined purposes. The statute defines combinations "[t]o create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce" among these illegal purposes. CA(8a)[¹] (8a) Therefore, if there is a triable issue of fact as to whether Rhodes may have acted in concert with others for the purpose of depriving Roth of the desired tenancy, the court should not have granted the motion for summary adjudication. We next examine whether a triable issue exists.

Roth argues the Rhodes respondents "agreed amongst each other and with the dismissed doctors to restrict the competition of Podiatrists, and in particular Dr. Roth, with medical doctors located in the Buildings." The alleged agreement or combination among the Rhodes respondents, the owners and operators of the building, cannot support the claim under the Cartwright Act. The Rhodes respondents jointly engage in the single enterprise of managing the medical building; as such each is the agent for [24] the others. HN9[[↑]] "[A]n individual acting alone through his agent or a corporation acting alone through its officers is not a combination in restraint of trade proscribed by the statute." (Bondi v. Jewels by Edwar, Ltd., supra, 267 Cal.App.2d at p. 678.)

Therefore, we need to determine whether facts exist from which a fact finder could conclude the Rhodes respondents conspired with others to restrain Roth's trade. The complaint alleges: "From the opening of the Medical Building and up until the present time, the Defendants, and each of them, have combined, conspired, and agreed together and continue to combine, conspire, and agree to restrain trade by prohibiting Podiatrists, and Plaintiffs in particular, from opening a practice in the medical buildings. . ." Other than Rhodes, Roth only mentions as defendants certain medical doctors, tenants in the building. Although these [714] defendants were originally served, Roth voluntarily dismissed them some time prior to the hearing on the motions. Their absence from the case, in and of itself, is not fatal to Roth's claim. HN10[[↑]] The law does not require a plaintiff to join all coconspirators in the action. [25] "[A]ntitrust coconspirators are jointly and severally liable for all damages caused by the conspiracy" (William Inglis, Etc. v. ITT Continental Baking Co. (9th Cir. 1981) 668 F.2d 1014, 1052-1053); thus a plaintiff may choose to sue any or all of them. (Walker Distributing Co. v. Lucky Lager Brewing Co. (9th Cir. 1963) 323 F.2d 1, 8.)

In support of their motion, the Rhodes respondents relied on declarations by three of their principals and deposition testimony of Roth. The declarations show the "M.D. only" policy was adopted unilaterally and had been in effect since the development of the buildings in 1967. The declarations also [*545] demonstrate the economic justification for the policy: quality control and enhancing the reputation of the building in the eyes of the medical profession and the general public. The declarations explicitly deny Rhodes ever entered into any agreements with anyone to deprive Roth of space in the building. In his deposition Roth testified he had no knowledge of any agreement between Rhodes and the medical doctors.

In opposition to the motion, Roth submitted only his own declaration. The [26] only "evidence" submitted by Roth to contradict Rhodes' denial of the existence of an agreement or conspiracy, was his statement: "By the systematic way in which I was continually rejected as a tenant to the Defendants' buildings and given the sometimes contradictory statements on each occasion given by the Defendants in refusing me as a tenant, it appears that there exists an understanding, agreement, and combination of each of the Defendants to refuse me as a tenant." Since Roth had already dismissed the medical doctors when his declaration was filed, this statement appears to refer only to an agreement among the Rhodes respondents. Even if the statement is read to include the medical doctors, it amounts to mere speculation and Rhodes properly objected on this ground. CA\(9\)[[↑]] (9) Furthermore, HN11[[↑]] admissions made in the course of a party's deposition cannot be contradicted solely by that party's declaration in opposition to summary judgment. (Thompson v. Williams (1989) 211 Cal.App.3d 566, 573 [259 Cal. Rptr. 518].) The trial court presumably disregarded this portion of Roth's declaration or should have done so.

CA\(8b\)[[↑]] (8b) The evidence offered by the Rhodes respondents [27] concerning the absence of any agreement or conspiracy was uncontradicted. Absent such contradictory evidence, the trial court correctly concluded there was no triable issue of fact with respect to any agreement or conspiracy. In the absence of proof of an agreement or conspiracy, there cannot be a violation of Business and Professions Code sections 16720 and 16726. The court properly granted the motion for summary adjudication on the causes of action based on the Cartwright Act.

V. DOES THE COMPLAINT STATE FACTS SUFFICIENT TO CONSTITUTE A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR INTERFERENCE WITH PROSPECTIVE ECONOMIC ADVANTAGE?

CA\(10\)[[↑]] (10) The trial court granted judgment on the pleadings on Roth's cause of action for interference with prospective economic advantage. A motion for judgment on the pleadings performs the same function as a general [*546] demurrer and " ' admits all material and issuable facts pleaded. " ' " (Baillargeon v. Department of Water & Power (1977) 69 Cal.App.3d 670, 676 [138 Cal.Rptr. 338].) The essence of this cause of action is the allegation "the Orthopod Defendants induced the Rhodes Defendants not to lease space in the Medical Building [28] to plaintiffs so that plaintiffs would not compete with the Orthopod Defendants for patients." At the time of the motion the Rhodes defendants were the only defendants remaining in the case. The allegation only charges the dismissed medical doctors. Since the complaint does not allege Rhodes interfered with the relationship between Roth and future patients, it was appropriate for the trial court [715] to determine no cause of action was stated against Rhodes.

In addition, HN12[[↑]] an essential element of the tort of intentional interference with prospective business advantage is the existence of a business relationship with which the tortfeasor interfered. ([Asia Investment Co. v. Borowski \(1982\) 133 Cal.App.3d 832, 840-841 \[184 Cal.Rptr. 317, 30 A.L.R.4th 561\]](#).) Although this need not be a contractual relationship, an existing relationship is required. ([Buckaloo v. Johnson \(1975\) 14 Cal.3d 815, 829 \[122 Cal.Rptr. 745, 537 P.2d 865\]](#)) None is alleged. Roth's case is predicated on the claim a tenancy in Rhodes' building would result in future referrals and patient contacts. Therefore, [29] from the very nature of this claim it follows Roth cannot have an existing relationship with these speculative "future patients."

The trial court correctly concluded "[t]he pleadings do not allege any other specific economic relationship with which Rhodes interfered." The motion for judgment on the pleadings was properly granted.

VI. DO THE FACTS SUPPORT A POTENTIAL RIGHT OF ROTH TO RECOVER FOR INTERFERENCE WITH HIS RIGHT TO PRACTICE HIS PROFESSION?

CA\(11\)[[↑]] (11) Citing [Lewin v. St. Joseph Hospital of Orange \(1978\) 82 Cal.App.3d 368 \[146 Cal.Rptr. 892\]](#), Roth acknowledges that, HN13[[↑]] before there may be liability for intentional interference with the right to pursue a lawful calling, such interference must be either by unlawful means or by means which are otherwise lawful but without sufficient justification or privilege. (Id. at p. 392; [Blank v. Palo Alto-Stanford Hospital Center \(1965\) 234 Cal.App.2d 377, 384 \[44 Cal.Rptr. 572\]](#).) For all of the reasons discussed in the preceding parts of this opinion, we conclude Rhodes did not act unlawfully. Nor was there a triable issue of fact regarding justification; Rhodes' [30] legitimate business purposes (quality control and increased reputation for the facility) were uncontradicted. Finally, there was no basis for claiming an [*547] interference at all in light of the absence of any contention by Roth that he was prevented from practicing his profession or was unable to obtain adequate facilities to treat his patients as a result of Rhodes' conduct. The motion for summary adjudication on this cause of action was properly granted.

VII. DID THE TRIAL COURT ABUSE ITS DISCRETION IN REFUSING TO GRANT A CONTINUANCE OF THE HEARING ON THE MOTIONS?

CA\(12\)[[↑]] (12) At the time of the hearing on the motions, Roth presented the court with a declaration requesting a continuance. Roth claimed he needed time to conduct further discovery and interview his expert witnesses. The court denied the request, finding the declaration was untimely and insufficient to support a continuance. We conclude the court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to accede to the late request for continuance.

Code of Civil Procedure section 437c, subdivision \(h\), provides, HN14[[↑]] "If it appears from the affidavits submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication or both that [31] facts essential to justify opposition may exist but cannot, for reasons stated, then be presented, the court shall deny the motion, or order a continuance to permit affidavits to be obtained or discovery to be had or may make any other order as may be just." Roth claims this imposed a mandatory duty on the court to grant the continuance. We disagree for a number of reasons.

We first note the court did not hear the motion until six weeks after it had been filed. Next, the court had already once continued the hearing at Roth's request to permit him to file late opposition. The statute does not provide for an unlimited number of continuances. At the time of the motion, the case had been pending two and one-half years, well beyond the goals of the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act of 1990. (Gov. Code, 68600 et seq.) The case was close to trial. Although the trial was subsequently continued, at the time the motion was noticed, it was scheduled to be heard near the last day [716] permitted by Code of Civil Procedure section 437\(c\), subdivision \(a\), which requires the motion to be heard no later than 30 days before the date of trial. Roth did not request the continuance until the time of the hearing. [32] This, in and of itself, is an adequate basis for denial of the continuance. Being mindful of the preparation time required of the trial judge for a motion of this type, we recognize where such a request is made after the court reviewed the matter in preparation for the hearing, substantial inefficiencies [*548] result if continuance is granted. No reason was given for the lateness of the request.³ This too, was a sufficient basis for the denial of the continuance.

Finally, the declaration failed to satisfy the requirements of Code of Civil Procedure section 437c, subdivision (h). It is not sufficient under the statute merely to indicate further discovery or investigation is contemplated. HN15↑ The statute makes it a condition that the party moving for a continuance show "facts essential to justify opposition may exist." The [33] declaration indicates two depositions remained to be completed and Roth had not yet received his expert opinions. However, there is no statement which suggests what facts might exist to support the opposition to the motions. The trial court was fully justified in finding the declaration insufficient to support a continuance.

The judgment is affirmed.

Sills, P. J., and Crosby, J., concurred.

End of Document

³ In passing, we note the lack of courtesy to court and opposing counsel implied in such a last minute request for continuance, absent any excuse being tendered for the lateness of the request.

K.M.B. Warehouse Distrib. v. Walker Mfg. Co.

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

June 1, 1994, Decided ; June 1, 1994, Filed

92 Civ. 1167 (LBS)

Reporter

1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7253 *; 1994-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,609

K.M.B. WAREHOUSE DISTRIBUTORS, INC. and KMB/ CT, INC., Plaintiffs, v. WALKER MANUFACTURING COMPANY; PRIME AUTOMOTIVE PARTS, CO., INC.; WOODBURY AUTOMOTIVE WAREHOUSE ENTERPRISES, INC.; and MOTOR AGE, INC., Defendants

Core Terms

intrabrand, distributor, Tri-State, market share, antitrust, summary judgment, defendants', interbrand, exhaust, muffler, rule of reason, products, market power, automotive, customers, effects

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN1 [] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Genuine Disputes

Summary judgment is appropriate where the moving papers and affidavits submitted by the parties show that there is no genuine issue as to any material facts and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN2 Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

The moving party in a summary judgment motions has the burden of showing the absence of a genuine issue as to any material fact, and the court must view the evidence in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. The court's role in such a context is not to resolve disputed factual issues, but rather to determine whether the record, taken as a whole, supports any issues that require a trial. The very language of the summary judgment standard provides that the mere existence of some alleged factual dispute will not defeat an otherwise properly supported motion for summary judgment; the requirement is that there be no genuine issue of material fact. Materiality is determined by reference to the substantive law applicable to the case at hand, and factual disputes irrelevant to its outcome will not be counted.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, provides that any contract, combination, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, is illegal. Although the Sherman Act speaks of restraint of trade in absolute terms, it has long been established that § 1 proscribes only unreasonable restraints. Since the early years of this century a judicial gloss on this statutory language has established the rule of reason as the prevailing standard of analysis. Under this standard of analysis, the finder of fact weighs all the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition. Certain business relationships are deemed unreasonable per se, however, because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue. These business practices and agreements are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use. Examples of per se unreasonable arrangements are horizontal territorial restrictions, horizontal price-fixing schemes, and vertical price-fixing schemes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Nonprice Restraints

HN4 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The market impact of vertical non-price restrictions is complex because of their potential for a simultaneous reduction of intra-brand competition and stimulation of inter-brand competition. In such cases, a rule of reason analysis is inherently better suited than applying the per se rule, because the former takes into account the complexities and subtleties of such restraints.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN5 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Under the rule of reason approach, plaintiff bears the initial burden of demonstrating that the challenged action has had a substantially harmful effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market. It is not sufficient for a plaintiff to prove it has been harmed as an individual competitor. Once the plaintiff has met its threshold burden of proof under the rule of reason, the burden shifts to the defendant to offer evidence of the pro-competitive redeeming virtues of the restraint. Assuming defendant comes forward with such proof, the burden shifts back to plaintiff for it to show that any legitimate objectives proffered by defendant could have been achieved by less restrictive alternatives, that is, those that would be less prejudicial to competition as a whole. Ultimately, the finder of fact must weigh the harms and benefits of the challenged behavior and decide if it purports to promote or destroy competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN6 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

Intra-brand competition alone can be a significant concern of antitrust law. However, a vertical restraint on trade involves some reduction in intra-brand competition. Therefore, courts balance the harms and benefits through a systematic comparison of the negative effects of the restraint on intra-brand competition and inter-brand competition, if any, with any alleged positive effects on inter-brand competition stemming from the restraint. Ultimately, the effects of a restraint on intra-brand competition on consumer welfare cannot be viewed in isolation from the inter-brand market structure. A plaintiff must establish that the inter-brand market structure was such that intra-brand competition was a critical source of competitive pressure on price, and hence of consumer welfare. Moreover, a plaintiff must demonstrate that the nature and effects of the restraint were such as to be substantially adverse to market competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

HN7 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

A manufacturer generally has the right to select those with whom it will deal and the corresponding right to refuse to deal with others.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN8 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

In evaluating a plaintiff's contention that a defendant's conduct had a substantially harmful effect on competition, the court views evidence of defendant's market power as a highly relevant factor because it bears a particularly strong relationship to a party's ability to injure competition. Market power is the ability to raise price significantly above the competitive level without losing all of one's business.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HNG[] Market Definition, Relevant Market

In order to establish a defendant's market power, plaintiff must first offer proof of a well-defined relevant market upon which the challenged anticompetitive actions would have had a substantial impact.

Counsel: [*1] LAW OFFICE OF FREDERICK R. DETTMER, Attorney for Plaintiffs, 711 Third Avenue, Suite 1505, New York, New York 10017, FREDERICK R. DETTMER, ESQ., HOWARD OCKMAN, ESQ., KAREN STEISFELD, ESQ., Of Counsel.

DONOVAN LEISURE NEWTON & IRVINE, Attorney for Defendant Walker Manufacturing Company, 30 Rockefeller Plaza, New York, NY 10112, KENNETH E. NEWMAN, ESQ., Of Counsel.

MISROK & ROSENBAUM, Attorney for Defendant Prime Automotive Parts Co., Inc., 30 South Central Avenue, Valley Stream, NY 11580, ELLIOT M. ROSENBAUM, ESQ., Of Counsel.

BLEECKER & ASEN, Attorney for Defendant Woodbury Automotive Warehouse Enterprises, Inc., 501 Fifth Avenue, Suite 1901, New York, NY 10017, LLOYD M. BLEECKER, ESQ., Of Counsel.

HOFFINGER FRIEDLAND DOBRISH, Attorney for Defendant Motor Age, Inc., 110 East 59th Street, New York, NY 10022, DAVID B. BERNFELD, ESQ., Of Counsel.

Judges: Sand

Opinion by: LEONARD B. SAND

Opinion

OPINION

SAND, J.

Plaintiffs, KMB Warehouse Distributors, Inc. and KMB/CT, Inc. (collectively "KMB"), bring this action pursuant to federal antitrust laws, particularly the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, et seq., and the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15. [*2] Subject matter jurisdiction is founded on the presence of a federal question (28 U.S.C. § 1337) and supplemental jurisdiction (28 U.S.C. § 1337). Plaintiffs bring this suit against a manufacturer of automobile exhaust equipment, defendant Walker Manufacturing Company ("Walker"), and against three distributors of exhaust equipment, defendants Prime Automotive Parts Co., Inc. ("Prime"), Woodbury Automotive Warehouse Enterprises, Inc. ("Woodbury"), and Motor Age, Inc. ("Motor Age").

KMB alleges that certain conduct engaged in by defendants constitutes an unreasonable restraint of trade in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. In addition, KMB charges breach of contract for the sale of goods, promissory estoppel, and tortious interference with contractual relations. Defendants each move for summary judgment. For the reasons stated below, we grant defendants' motions for summary judgment.

BACKGROUND

KMB sells automotive parts -- including mufflers, catalytic converters, exhaust piping and related accessories (collectively referred to as "exhaust equipment") [*3] -- to jobbers, which are automotive parts stores, in New York, New Jersey and Connecticut (the "Tri-State Area"). Defendant Walker is a manufacturer of exhaust equipment. Defendants Prime, Woodbury, and Motor Age are distributors of Walker products, in contrast to KMB which is a distributor of AP Parts Company ("AP"). KMB and defendants Prime, Woodbury, and Motor Age compete in the distribution of automotive parts or equipment to jobbers.

In a complaint filed February 18, 1992, plaintiffs allege Walker entered into an agreement in or, about September 1991 whereby KMB would, among other things, become a Walker muffler equipment distributor and sell Walker muffler equipment in the Tri-State Area to existing and new customers. Complaint at P 15. Plaintiffs contend that under the alleged agreement, Walker would supply KMB's long-term requirements for muffler equipment, sponsor a joint promotional program, and "change over" KMB's inventory and the inventory of about fifty of KMB's customers. Id. In support of the existence of such an agreement, plaintiffs claim that two of Walker's representatives prepared a "Changeover Proposal" which was included as part of a larger "Changeover Package", [*4] an instrument allegedly binding Walker to the distributorship arrangement with KMB. Plaintiffs' Mem. in Opp. at 6. Moreover, plaintiffs allege that one of Walker's representatives told a KMB representative, "We have a deal," and shook hands. Id. at 8; Pls.' 3(g) Statement, Specific Comments on Defendants' Offering of "Undisputed Facts" at No. 18. Defendant Walker argues the Changeover Package was not binding because it contained only four of seven signatures allegedly necessary to approve a new Walker account. Defendants' Joint Reply at 26; Def. Walker's 3(g) Statement at PP 17-18.

KMB avers that Prime, Woodbury, and Motor Age complained to Walker that they would be unable to compete with KMB because they feared KMB would excessively discount Walker exhaust equipment and offer additional services to customers (such as extra delivery service). Complaint at P 22. Plaintiffs further contend the defendant distributors influenced, coerced, pressured and caused Walker to repudiate its distributorship agreement with KMB by threatening to reduce or terminate their purchases of Walker equipment. *Id.*¹ Furthermore, plaintiffs claim that Prime, Woodbury, and Motor Age visited many of [*5] KMB's customers advising them that they could only buy Walker products from the defendant distributors, not from KMB. Complaint at P 26. Walker eventually put the decision to contract with KMB as a distributor "on hold" in September 1991, and this lawsuit was filed in February 1992.

Plaintiffs argue that the events described above prove that defendants engaged in a "combination and conspiracy to boycott Plaintiffs and/ or to cause Walker to refuse to deal with Plaintiffs in order to deprive Plaintiffs of the opportunity or ability to purchase and sell Walker muffler equipment in the Tri-State Area and thereby to compete with Prime, Woodbury and Motor Age." Complaint at P 33. This conduct, [*6] plaintiffs contend, "has and, if unrestrained, will continue to injure competition in the market by, among other things, depriving consumers, including customers of Prime, Woodbury and Motor Age, of the benefits of competitive and superior pricing and service." Id. at P 34. Defendants move for summary judgment claiming, among other things, that there has been no injury to competition in the muffler equipment aftermarket in the Tri-State Area.

DISCUSSION

Standard of Review

HN1[] Summary judgment is appropriate where the moving papers and affidavits submitted by the parties "show that there is no genuine issue as to any material facts and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). HN2[] The moving party has the burden of showing the absence of a genuine issue as to any material fact, and the court must view the evidence in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. Adickes v. S.H. Kress & Co., 398 U.S. 144, 157, 26 L. Ed. 2d 142, 90 S. Ct. 1598 (1970).

¹ For instance, as evidence of these threats, plaintiffs point to a statement by Prime's President, Robert Scheer, who testified that he had told Walker representatives, "If you are going to sell K.M.B., it might affect our relationship. We'd have to see what happens to our business and act accordingly." Pls.' Mem. in Opp. at 10.

The court's role in such a context is not to resolve disputed factual issues, but rather to determine whether the record, [*7] taken as a whole, supports any issues that require a trial. See Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986). Nevertheless, the very language of the summary judgment standard provides that "the mere existence of some alleged factual dispute will not defeat an otherwise properly supported motion for summary judgment; the requirement is that there be no genuine issue of material fact." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 247-48, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986) (emphasis in original). This characteristic of the summary judgment standard is especially relevant in the instant case, because the facts in dispute do not create a genuine issue of material fact. Materiality is determined by reference to the substantive law applicable to the case at hand, and factual disputes irrelevant to its outcome "will not be counted." Id. at 248.

The Antitrust Claim

HN3 [↑] Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides that any contract, [*8] combination, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, is illegal. 15 U.S.C. § 1 (1988). Although the Sherman Act speaks of restraint of trade in absolute terms, it has long been established that section 1 proscribes only unreasonable restraints. Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 55 L. Ed. 619, 31 S. Ct. 502 (1911). "Since the early years of this century a judicial gloss on this statutory language has established the 'rule of reason' as the prevailing standard of analysis." Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 49, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 (1977) (hereinafter Sylvania (citing Standard Oil)). Under this standard of analysis, the finder of fact weighs all the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition. *Id.*² [*10] Certain business relationships are deemed unreasonable per se, however, "because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any [*9] redeeming virtue." Northern P. R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 (1958). These business practices and agreements "are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use." Id. Examples of per se unreasonable arrangements are horizontal territorial restrictions, horizontal price-fixing schemes, and vertical price-fixing schemes.³

² Offering little guidance on how the rule of reason standard can actually be applied, the Sylvania Court instead recited the classic articulation of the rule by Justice Brandeis in Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238, 62 L. Ed. 683, 38 S. Ct. 242 (1918):

The true test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. To determine that question the court must ordinarily consider the facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied; its condition before and after the restraint was imposed; the nature of the restraint and its effect, actual or probable. The history of the restraint, the evil believed to exist, the reason for adopting the particular remedy, the purpose or end sought to be attained, are all relevant facts. This is not because a good intention will save an otherwise objectionable regulation or the reverse; but because knowledge of intent may help the court to interpret facts and to predict consequences.

As is discussed below, many courts have "narrowed the broad-ranging inquiry called for by the rule of reason by insisting, at the threshold, that a plaintiff attacking vertical restrictions establish the market power of the defendant." Graphic Products Distributors, Inc. v. Itek Corp., 717 F.2d 1560, 1568 (11th Cir. 1983). Accord Capital Imaging Assocs., P.C. v. Mohawk Valley Medical Assocs., 996 F.2d 537, 546 (2d Cir. 1993) ("The Supreme Court has never explicitly endorsed such a preclusive threshold approach Still, we recognize that . . . market power remains a highly relevant factor in rule of reason analysis").

³ Horizontal restraints are agreements between competitors at the same level of market structure. Vertical restraints are combinations of persons at different levels of the market structure, such as manufacturers and distributors. Oreck Corp. v. Whirlpool Corp., 579 F.2d 126 (2d Cir. 1978). Horizontal restraints have been characterized as "naked restraints of trade with no purpose except stifling competition." White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, 263, 9 L. Ed. 2d 738, 83 S. Ct. 696 (1963).

In the case before us, plaintiffs concede that the rule of reason standard is the correct framework for evaluating the alleged conspiracy motivating Walker's refusal to deal with KMB, because such conduct constitutes a vertical nonprice restraint. Pls.' Mem. in Opp. at 41. We agree that rule of reason analysis is appropriate here. The Supreme Court has noted, HN4 "The market impact of vertical [nonprice] restrictions is complex because of their potential for a simultaneous reduction of intrabrand competition and [*11] stimulation of interbrand competition." Sylvania, 433 U.S. at 51-52.⁴ In such cases, a rule of reason analysis is inherently better suited than applying the per se rule, because the former takes into account the complexities and subtleties of such restraints.

HN5 Under the rule of reason approach, KMB bears the initial burden of demonstrating that the challenged action has had a substantially harmful effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market. Capital Imaging Assocs., P.C. v. Mohawk Valley Medical Assocs., 996 F.2d 537, 543 \(2d Cir. 1993\). [*12] In other words, plaintiffs must show that the restraint had an anticompetitive purpose or effect with respect to the exhaust equipment aftermarket industry as a whole, not simply with respect to that portion handling the Walker brand. Borger v. Yamaha International Corp., 625 F.2d 390, 397 \(2d Cir. 1980\); Morse v. Swank, Inc., 493 F. Supp. 110, 115 \(S.D.N.Y. 1980\).⁵ It is not sufficient for a plaintiff to prove it has been harmed as an individual competitor. "Insisting on proof of harm to the whole market fulfills the broad purpose of the antitrust law that was enacted to ensure competition in general, not narrowly focused to protect individual competitors." Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 543 (citing Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 343-44, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 \(1990\)).

[*13] Once the plaintiff has met its threshold burden of proof under the rule of reason, the burden shifts to the defendant to offer evidence of the pro-competitive "redeeming virtues" of the restraint. *Id.*⁶ Assuming defendant comes forward with such proof, the burden shifts back to plaintiff for it to show that any legitimate objectives proffered by defendant "could have been achieved by less restrictive alternatives, that is, those that would be less prejudicial to competition as a whole." Id. Ultimately, the finder of fact must weigh the harms and benefits of the challenged behavior and decide if it purports to promote or destroy competition. See Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238, 62 L. Ed. 683, 38 S. Ct. 242 \(1918\) ("The true test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition"). As discussed below, we find plaintiff has not met its initial burden of demonstrating the challenged action has had a substantially harmful effect on competition as a whole in the relevant [*14] market.

Plaintiffs argue that by excluding KMB from becoming a distributor of Walker products, Walker, in conjunction with the other defendants, suppressed intrabrand competition. See, e.g., Pls.' Mem. in Opp. at 47. By contrast,

⁴ "Interbrand competition is the competition among the manufacturers of the same generic product [e.g., among manufacturers of exhaust equipment] . . . and is the primary concern of antitrust law In contrast, intrabrand competition is the competition between the distributors -- wholesale or retail -- of a product of a particular manufacturer [e.g., among distributors of Walker exhaust equipment]." Id. at 52, n.19.

⁵ Both of these cases reiterated the requirement set out in Oreck Corp. v. Whirlpool Corp., 579 F.2d 126, 133 \(2d Cir. 1978\). "The Court [in Oreck] clearly intended that the anti-competitive purpose or effect of the vertical restriction in that case had to be judged with respect to the vacuum cleaner industry as a whole, not simply that portion which handled the Whirlpool brand." Yamaha, 625 F.2d at 397.

As in the case before us, Yamaha and Swank each involve a manufacturer's unilateral refusal to deal with a distributor seeking to handle, for the first time, the manufacturer's products. Oreck, by contrast, involves a manufacturer's decision not to renew an existing distributorship arrangement.

⁶ "Vertical restrictions promote interbrand competition by allowing the manufacturer to achieve certain efficiencies in the distribution of his products. These 'redeeming virtues' are implicit in every decision sustaining vertical restrictions under the rule of reason." Sylvania, 433 U.S. at 54. Moreover, interbrand competition, when it exists, "provides a significant check on the exploitation of intrabrand market power because of the ability of consumers to substitute a different brand of the same product." Id. at 52, n.19.

defendant Walker contends that 1) intrabrand competition should not be the focus of the Court's analysis, and 2) by refusing to deal with KMB, [*15] Walker's conduct maintained the status quo, or, alternatively stimulated interbrand competition. Def. Walker's Mem. of Law at 8-15. These contentions are addressed in turn.

The Second Circuit has found that HN6 intrabrand competition alone can be a significant concern of antitrust law, Eiberger v. Sony Corp. of America, 622 F.2d 1068 \(2d Cir. 1980\), notwithstanding the Sylvania Court's observation that interbrand competition is "the primary concern of antitrust law." Sylvania, 433 U.S. at 52, n.19; see also Graphic Products, 717 F.2d at 1572, n.20. However, courts have also recognized that "a vertical restraint on trade, almost by definition, involves some reduction in intrabrand competition." Graphic Products, 717 F.2d at 1571. Therefore, courts have tried to balance the harms and benefits through "a systematic comparison of the negative effects of the restraint on intrabrand competition and interbrand competition, if any, with any alleged positive effects on interbrand competition stemming from the restraint." Id. Ultimately, [*16] "the effects of a restraint on intrabrand competition on consumer welfare cannot be viewed in isolation from the interbrand market structure." Id. A plaintiff must "establish that the interbrand market structure was such that intrabrand competition was a critical source of competitive pressure on price, and hence of consumer welfare." Id. at 1573. Moreover, KMB must demonstrate that "the nature and effects of the restraint were such as to be 'substantially adverse' to market competition." Id. (citation omitted).

As an initial matter, we are not convinced that Walker's refusal to deal with KMB suppressed intrabrand competition. Rather, the status quo ante was that KMB was an AP distributor,⁷ and this status quo was not affected by Walker's refusal to deal. HN7 A manufacturer generally has the right to select those with whom it will deal and the corresponding right to refuse to deal with others. United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 63 L. Ed. 992, 39 S. Ct. 465 \(1919\).

[*17] But even assuming arguendo that our starting point is that a contract was formed binding Walker and KMB in a distributorship arrangement,⁸ [*18] plaintiffs have not shown that the impact on intrabrand competition was anything but de minimis. H & B Equipment Co. v. International Harvester Co., 577 F.2d 239, 246 \(5th Cir. 1978\).⁹ Beyond the affidavits reflecting the opinion of a few jobbers that they would prefer to purchase Walker products from KMB because of KMB's better services, plaintiffs do not offer evidence tending to show that competition for Walker products (intrabrand competition) overall has been suppressed. This case is unlike Graphic Products in which intrabrand competition was totally foreclosed. In that case, the court said, "To the extent that intrabrand competition continues after imposition of intrabrand restraints, the effects of the intrabrand restraints on competition may be de minimis." 717 F.2d at 1574, n.25.¹⁰ In the instant case, intrabrand competition continued even after Walker refused to deal with KMB.

⁷ There is no dispute that the practice among distributors is to only carry one line of exhaust equipment at a time, due to space requirements. Transcript at 3 & 19, Dec. 16, 1993.

⁸ We express no opinion on the validity of this point, which of course plaintiffs are free to pursue in state court.

⁹ In this case, the court said:

Even adopting the view that International Harvester reduced intrabrand competition by putting H & B out of business, H & B has not proven the effect to be any other than de minimis. Rivalry from International Harvester's other dealers makes this situation far different from the exclusive territorial arrangements which introduced the intrabrand competition concept into antitrust law.

Id.

¹⁰ In Graphic Products, the court added, "Situations in which intrabrand competition continues to be vigorous differ dramatically from those where the effect of the intrabrand restraint is to shut off all intrabrand competition." Id. (citing Muenster Butane, 651 F.2d at 298 (defendant's efforts to restrict intrabrand competition largely ineffectual, intrabrand competition continued unabated) & H & B Equipment Co., 577 F.2d at 246).

KMB has also failed to demonstrate the restraint had an anticompetitive effect on the industry as a whole. HN8↑
In evaluating KMB's contention that defendants' conduct [*19] had a substantially harmful effect on competition, the Court views evidence of defendants' market power as "a highly relevant factor" because it "bears a particularly strong relationship to a party's ability to injure competition." Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 546.¹¹ "Market power is the ability to raise price significantly above the competitive level without losing all of one's business." Graphic Products, 717 F.2d 1560, 1570 \(11th Cir. 1983\). The Second Circuit has recognized that:

firms lacking substantial market power act against their own self-interest when they raise prices, reduce output, or otherwise restrain trade. The marketplace itself will discipline such misguided efforts as buyers switch to substitutes or new sources of supply enter the market. When market power is lacking, antitrust litigation is not needed to police restraints and maintain competition

Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 546 (citation omitted).

[*20] HN9↑ In order to establish the defendants' market power, plaintiffs must first offer proof of "a well-defined relevant market upon which the challenged anticompetitive actions would have had a substantial impact." Graphic Products, 717 F.2d at 1569. In the case before us, KMB defines the "relevant market" as "the aftermarket for muffler equipment sold to warehouse distributors for resale to jobbers in the tri-state area." Pls.' Mem. of Law at 39.

¹² [*22] While plaintiffs sought and were denied discovery of national market share information, defendant Walker was compelled to produce market share information for the Tri-State Area, as well as any data underlying Walker's national market share analyses which relate to the Tri-State Area. Order per Mag. Judge Grubin, filed 2/17/93. Plaintiffs have not produced any direct evidence of Walker's Tri-State market share.¹³ Instead, KMB offers national market share estimates¹⁴ as circumstantial evidence, contending "Walker's market share in the Tri-State Area, without detailed market analysis by offering proof of actual detrimental effects, such as a reduction of output. . . . Yet, where the plaintiff is unable to demonstrate such actual effects, it must at least establish that defendants possess the requisite market power so that their arrangement has the potential for genuine adverse effects on competition. Market power in that way serves as a surrogate for detrimental effects.

¹¹ The Second Circuit has stated a plaintiff may satisfy the initial burden:

Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 546 (internal citations and quotes omitted).

¹² Defendants' contest this definition, arguing that it excludes "such major suppliers of exhaust equipment as Midas and Meineke, who sell a fully competitive product line and who plaintiffs admit are active participants in the competitive process." Defs.' Joint Reply Mem. at 8. In a deposition, KMB's President, William Bastardi responded affirmatively when asked whether Midas and Meineke "appear to be taking business that otherwise might go to the customers of your customers." Bastardi II Tr. at 154-55 (attached as Ex. G to Def. Walker's Rule 3(g) Statement).

However, Midas and Meineke are not participants in the exhaust equipment aftermarket. An aftermarket can be defined as a separate market. C.f., Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 60 U.S.L.W. 4465, 112 S. Ct. 2072 (U.S. June 8, 1992) (No. 90-1029).

Even under the more narrow definition of the relevant market offered by plaintiffs, we find plaintiffs have not produced adequate evidence demonstrating the defendants' conduct had a substantially harmful effect on competition when viewed in the context of the market structure.

¹³ "Market share is frequently used in litigation as a surrogate for market power [It] directly relates to the effectiveness of interbrand competition in minimizing the anticompetitive effects of a restraint on intrabrand competition." Graphic Products, 717 F.2d at 1570.

¹⁴ According to the affidavit of Gregory A. Worny, Vice President, Marketing for AP, one of Walker's chief competitors, Walker controls at least 55-60 percent of the national aftermarket for exhaust equipment ultimately distributed to jobbers. Worny Aff. at P 5 (Ex. 2). Moreover, when asked if it would surprise him that Walker's national market share is at least 70 percent, Jim Lown, Walker's Market Information Manager, replied "no." Lown Dep. at 83-84 (Ex. 8). Mr. Lown also indicated that he doubted that AP, which is probably Walker's closest competitor, has more than 10 percent market share. Id. at 69-71. It was not clear whether this is a national or regional figure.

which is the geographical market in this case, is about the same as its national market share." Pls' Mem. in Opp. at 45. As support for this contention, [*21] plaintiffs cite to the deposition of Frank Grosser, Vice President of Marketing and Sales for North America. Counsel for KMB asked Mr. Grosser, "Do you have reason to believe that the percentage of the total sales for which Walker is responsible in New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut varies materially from the percentage of the total sales for which Walker is responsible nationally?" Mr. Grosser responded, "No, I'd say it's pretty much in line." Grosser Dep. at 49 (Ex. 5). At another point, however, when asked, "Do you have any reason to believe that the percentage of the total sales for which Walker is responsible varies significantly in different areas of the country?", Mr. Grosser responded, "There are differences in Walker's market shares . . . in different areas." Id. at 47. This is hardly the stuff upon which an antitrust action can be based.

The Court finds plaintiffs' evidence too attenuated. Even if no data on Walker's Tri-State market share [*23] existed, plaintiffs could have commissioned an expert to conduct such a market study. However, in the absence of any significant data on Walker's Tri-State market share or other evidence demonstrating the defendants' conduct was substantially adverse to market competition, the Court concludes plaintiffs have not met their initial burden to sustain this antitrust action.¹⁵

Having [*24] dismissed the antitrust claim, we have no basis for retaining jurisdiction over the common law claims. Toys "R" Us, Inc. v. R.H. Macy & Co., 728 F. Supp. 230, 236 (S.D.N.Y. 1990); 28 U.S.C.A. § 1367(a)(3).

The defendants' motions for summary judgment are granted. The complaint is dismissed, and the case is closed.

SO ORDERED.

Dated: June 1, 1994

New York, New York

Leonard B. Sand

U.S.D.J.

End of Document

¹⁵ See Borger v. Yamaha, 625 F.2d 390, 397 (2d Cir. 1980) (finding it was reversible error to instruct a jury to find liability based on suppression of intrabrand competition when there was no evidence of either a purpose or effect related to interbrand competition); Morse v. Swank, 493 F. Supp. 110, 115 (S.D.N.Y. 1980) (granting defendants' summary judgment motion, finding plaintiff would not be excluded from cigarette lighter business; rather, he would only be prevented from marketing a particular brand (i.e., Pierre Cardin) of lighters, which in and of itself is not a market).

Nghiem v. NEC Elec.

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

November 4, 1993, Argued and Submitted as to Defendants-Appellees; Submitted as to Plaintiff-Appellant, November 4, 1993, San Francisco, California ; June 3, 1994, Filed

No. 92-16155

Reporter

25 F.3d 1437 *; 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 13086 ; 64 Fair Empl. Prac. Cas. (BNA) 1669; 64 Empl. Prac. Dec. (CCH) P43,075; 1994-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,604; 94 Cal. Daily Op. Service 4033; 94 Daily Journal DAR 7547

PETER P. NGHIEM, Plaintiff-Appellant, v. NEC ELECTRONIC, INC., a California corporation; NEC CORPORATION; JAPAN (NIPPON ELECTRIC COMPANY), a Japanese corporation; HIRO HASHIMOTO; H. YOSHIZAWA, Dr.; GRANT HULSE, Defendants-Appellees.

Subsequent History: [\[1\]](#) Certiorari Denied December 5, 1994, Reported at: 1994 U.S. LEXIS 8673.

Prior History: Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of California. D.C. No. CV-92-20135-RMW. Ronald M. Whyte, District Judge, Presiding.

Core Terms

arbitration, antitrust, antitrust claim, binding arbitration, district court, subject to arbitration, arbitration award, parties

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Arbitration > Federal Arbitration Act > Arbitration Agreements

Civil Procedure > ... > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Arbitration > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Arbitration > Federal Arbitration Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Arbitration Clauses

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Formation > Execution & Delivery

International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > International Commercial Arbitration > Arbitration

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Labor Arbitration > Enforcement

HN1 [down arrow] Federal Arbitration Act, Arbitration Agreements

The Federal Arbitration Act (FAA), 9 U.S.C.S. §§ 1-14, requires that an agreement to arbitrate be in writing. 9 U.S.C.S. § 2. While the FAA requires a writing, it does not require that the writing be signed by the parties.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Pretrial Matters > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Validity of ADR Methods

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Labor Arbitration > Enforcement

HN2 [down] Alternative Dispute Resolution, Validity of ADR Methods

An agreement to arbitrate an issue need not be express; it may be implied from the conduct of the parties.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Pretrial Matters > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Judicial Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Arbitration > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Labor Arbitration > Arbitrators > Authority

HN3 [down] Alternative Dispute Resolution, Judicial Review

A party may not submit a claim to arbitration and then challenge the authority of the arbitrator to act after receiving an unfavorable result.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Arbitration > Arbitrability

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Waiver & Preservation of Defenses

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Pretrial Matters > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Judicial Review

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Labor Arbitration > Enforcement

HN4 [down] Arbitration, Arbitrability

As a matter of federal law, any doubts concerning the scope of arbitrable issues should be resolved in favor of arbitration, whether the problem at hand is the construction of the contract language itself or an allegation of waiver, delay, or a like defense to arbitrability.

Civil Procedure > ... > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Arbitration > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Title VII Discrimination > Remedies > Alternative Dispute Resolution

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Labor Arbitration > Arbitrators > Authority

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Labor Arbitration > Enforcement

HN5 [down] Alternative Dispute Resolution, Arbitration

The test of whether a statutory claim may be subject to arbitration is congressional intent.

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Title VII Discrimination > Remedies > Alternative Dispute Resolution

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Labor Arbitration > Arbitrators > Authority

Labor & Employment Law > Discrimination > Title VII Discrimination > General Overview

HN6 [down] Remedies, Alternative Dispute Resolution

Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 claims are subject to arbitration.

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

HN7 [down] Courts, Judicial Precedent

The court is bound by decisions of prior panels unless an en banc decision, United States Supreme Court decision or subsequent legislation undermines those decisions.

Civil Procedure > ... > Arbitration > Federal Arbitration Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

Governments > Legislation > Statutory Remedies & Rights

Civil Procedure > ... > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Arbitration > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > International Commercial Arbitration > Arbitration

HN8 [down] Arbitration, Federal Arbitration Act

The federal policy favoring arbitration established by the Federal Arbitration Act, 9 U.S.C.S. §§ 1-14, is not diminished when a party bound by an agreement raises a claim founded on statutory rights.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Labor Arbitration > Arbitrators > Authority

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Res Judicata

HN9 [down] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

Arbitrators are not precluded from entertaining antitrust claims.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions > Preservation for Review

HN10 [blue icon] Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions, Preservation for Review

An appellate court will dismiss arguments not raised at the district court unless there are exceptional circumstances.

Counsel: David H. Tollner, San Jose, California, for the plaintiff-appellant.

David J. Murphy and Keith R. Black, Littler, Mendelson, Fastiff & Tichy, San Jose, California, for the defendants-appellees.

Judges: Before: Alex Kozinski and Diarmuid F. O'Scannlain, Circuit Judges; Paul G. Hatfield, * District Judge. Opinion by Judge O'Scannlain.

Opinion by: O'SCANNLAIN

Opinion

[*1439] OPINION

O'SCANNLAIN, Circuit Judge:

In this challenge to an arbitrator's award, we are asked to decide, among other issues, whether the so-called "American Safety doctrine" continues to prevent submission of antitrust claims to arbitration.

I

Peter Nghiem, an American citizen of Vietnamese heritage, was employed by NEC Electronics, Inc. in California from August 31, 1989 until he was fired in June 1990. Nghiem brought suit against NEC Electronics, Inc., NEC Corporation (Tokyo) Japan, and co-employees (collectively "NEC") alleging, inter alia, wrongful termination, race discrimination, [*2] and an antitrust violation. Nghiem claims that NEC had represented that it would provide a long-term management position to Nghiem if he accepted its employment offer.

On August 31, 1989, Nghiem signed an employment contract which did not contain an arbitration clause. Paragraph 11 of the contract states, in part: "No terms or provisions of this Agreement shall be varied or modified by any prior or subsequent act of either me or the Company except that the Company and I may subsequently amend this agreement by written instruments that specifically refer to this agreement and that are executed in the same manner as this agreement." Nghiem claims that he did not sign a modified version of NEC's employment contract because it contained a clause for binding arbitration.

On September 5, 1989 and May 7, 1990, Nghiem signed acknowledgments for receipt of NEC's company handbook. The handbook explained that NEC had a four-step "Problem Resolution Process" for employee complaints. Nghiem claims that he felt compelled to use this process because the language of the handbook said that this was the only process for resolving employee complaints. Step Four of the process is "final and binding arbitration." [*3] Nghiem followed the four-step process, including initiating arbitration pursuant to Step Four.

Through the spring of 1991, Nghiem presented evidence and argument in the arbitration hearings, including a fifty-page closing brief. On November 18, 1991, the arbitrator rendered a decision in favor of NEC. On November 27,

* The Honorable Paul G. Hatfield, Chief Judge for the District of Montana, sitting by designation.

1991, Nghiem wrote the American Arbitration Association ("AAA") to request a trial de novo and to confirm that the arbitration was not binding on him.

Meanwhile, on June 10, 1991, Nghiem had filed suit in state court on substantially the same issues. NEC removed to federal district court on March 6, 1992. On June 9, 1992, the district court granted NEC's motion for confirmation of the arbitration award and dismissed Nghiem's suit in its entirety, including the statutory claims of employment discrimination and an antitrust violation.

II

Nghiem contends that he is not bound by the arbitrator's decision because the Federal Arbitration Act ("FAA" or "the Act"), 9 U.S.C. §§ 1-14, HN1¹ requires that an agreement to arbitrate be in writing. 9 U.S.C. § 2. Nghiem points out that the contract he signed does not have an [\[4\]](#) arbitration clause and that he did not sign a proposed subsequent contract which did. Although Nghiem claims that NEC told him he had to pursue arbitration, that is inconsistent with his claim that he consciously avoided signing any agreement which would require him to pursue arbitration. The district court found that Nghiem voluntarily initiated binding arbitration and this finding is not clearly erroneous.

Nghiem further claims that he intended the arbitration to be nonbinding against him, but binding against NEC; his position is not persuasive. While the FAA "requires a writing, it does not require that the writing be signed by the parties." Genesco, Inc. v. T. Kakiuchi & Co., 815 F.2d 840, 846 \(2d Cir. 1987\). In addition to the employee handbook, which provides for binding arbitration and which Nghiem acknowledges [\[*1440\]](#) receiving, on September 21, 1990, Nghiem wrote a letter to NEC's Human Resource Director, Denny Mitchell, requesting to proceed with Step Four of NEC's problem resolution process - final and binding arbitration. This constitutes a writing memorializing an agreement to arbitrate.

Furthermore, even if these writings are insufficient, HN2² "an [\[5\]](#) agreement to arbitrate an issue need not be express; . . . it may be implied from the conduct of the parties." Fortune, Alsweet & Eldridge, Inc. v. Daniel, 724 F.2d 1355, 1356 \(9th Cir. 1983\); see also Teamsters Local Union No. 764 v. J.H. Merritt and Co., 770 F.2d 40, 42 \(3d Cir. 1985\) (citing Daniel). In Daniel, this court reasoned that Daniel's conduct manifested an intent to arbitrate his dispute with his union because he sent a representative to the arbitration who listened to the union's evidence, presented limited evidence himself, and requested a second continuance. Two weeks later, Daniel's representative sent a letter to the arbitration board, claiming Daniel had no obligation to arbitrate and refusing to attend future hearings. The arbitrator issued a decision adverse to Daniel who appealed, arguing that the arbitrator had no such authority.

This court confirmed the arbitration award, holding that "we have long recognized a rule that HN3³ a party may not submit a claim to arbitration and then challenge the authority of the arbitrator to act after receiving an unfavorable result." Daniel, 724 F.2d at 1357. [\[6\]](#) The court held that even though Daniel attempted to deny the arbitrator's authority before a decision was issued, "it would be unreasonable and unjust to allow Daniel to challenge the legitimacy of the arbitration process, in which he had voluntarily participated over a period of several months, shortly before the arbitrator announced her decision." Id.

Similarly in this case, Nghiem initiated the arbitration, attended the hearings with representation, presented evidence, and submitted a closing brief of fifty pages. Although he filed suit in state court before the arbitrator announced his final decision, that decision is still binding on Nghiem under Daniel. Once a claimant submits to the authority of the arbitrator and pursues arbitration, he cannot suddenly change his mind and assert lack of authority. Nghiem is bound by the arbitrator's decision.

Furthermore, Nghiem's voluntary initiation of arbitration can be interpreted as waiver of any objection he may have had over the authority of the arbitrator. The Fifth Circuit has reasoned that "on whatever basis it rests, waiver, estoppel or new contract, the result is that the grievance submitted to the arbiter defines his authority [\[7\]](#) without regard to whether the parties had a prior legal obligation to submit the dispute." Piggly Wiggly Operators' Warehouse, Inc. v. Piggly Wiggly Operators' Warehouse Independent Truck Drivers Union, Local No. 1, 611 F.2d

580, 584 \(5th Cir. 1980\). This court in Daniel concluded that the appellant's "conduct demonstrated he agreed to submit this conflict to arbitration and waived any right to object." Daniel, 724 F.2d at 1357.

Finally, the Supreme Court has held that HN4 "as a matter of federal law, any doubts concerning the scope of arbitrable issues should be resolved in favor of arbitration, whether the problem at hand is the construction of the contract language itself or an allegation of waiver, delay, or a like defense to arbitrability." Mitsubishi Motors Corp. v. Soler Chrysler-Plymouth Inc., 473 U.S. 614, 626, 87 L. Ed. 2d 444, 105 S. Ct. 3346 (1985) (quoting Moses H. Cone Memorial Hosp. v. Mercury Constr. Corp., 460 U.S. 1, 24-25, 74 L. Ed. 2d 765, 103 S. Ct. 927 (1983)) (emphasis added). [\[8\]](#) Therefore, we hold that Nghiem has waived any objection to the arbitrator's authority to decide his claims.

NEC argues, as it did before the district court, that if the federal courts do not confirm the arbitration award pursuant to the FAA, the courts should, in the alternative, dismiss Nghiem's action or grant summary judgment based on res judicata or collateral estoppel, or both. Like the district court, we do not reach these arguments because we conclude that Nghiem clearly submitted his claim to binding arbitration.

III

Even if the arbitration is valid, Nghiem nevertheless claims that his employment discrimination complaint cannot be settled through such process and must be adjudicated [\[*1441\]](#) in federal court. Although the earlier Supreme Court cases precluded Title VII cases from being subjected to compulsory arbitration, Alexander v. Gardner-Denver Co., 415 U.S. 36, 39 L. Ed. 2d 147, 94 S. Ct. 1011 (1974), the Court has recently opened the door to arbitration of these claims. Gilmer v. Interstate/Johnson Lane, Corp., 500 U.S. 20, 111 S. Ct. 1647, 114 L. Ed. 2d 26 (1991). [\[9\]](#) Before Gilmer, this court read Alexander as holding "that an employee's statutory right to trial de novo under Title VII is not foreclosed by prior submission of her claim to final arbitration under a collective-bargaining agreement." Perugini v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 935 F.2d 1083, 1086 (9th Cir. 1991). Although "the Supreme Court [did] not overrule Alexander in Gilmer, it [did] reject a reading of Alexander as prohibiting the arbitration of employment discrimination claims." Willis v. Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc., 948 F.2d 305, 308 (6th Cir. 1991).

HN5 The test of whether a statutory claim may be subject to arbitration is congressional intent. Shearson/American Express, Inc. v. McMahon, 482 U.S. 220, 227, 96 L. Ed. 2d 185, 107 S. Ct. 2332 (1987). Nghiem does not argue that Congress intended to exclude Title VII claims from arbitration. In any event, subsequent to Gilmer, this court has specifically upheld an employer's ability to arbitrate a Title VII claim. Mago v. Shearson Lehman Hutton, Inc., 956 F.2d 932, 935 (9th Cir. 1992) [\[10\]](#) (plaintiff did not meet "her burden of showing that Congress, in enacting Title VII, intended to preclude arbitration of claims under the Act").

Nghiem rather argues that Gilmer does not apply because the 1991 amendments to Title VII provide for jury trial. We conclude, however, that establishing a right to jury trial for Title VII claims does not evince a congressional intent to preclude arbitration; it merely defines those procedures which are available to plaintiffs who pursue the federal option, as opposed to arbitration.

HN6 Title VII claims are clearly subject to arbitration and Nghiem's argument, therefore, fails.

IV

Nghiem further contends that his antitrust claims should be heard in federal court because antitrust claims are not subject to arbitration. Nghiem relies on American Safety Equipment Corp. v. J.P. Maguire & Co., 391 F.2d 821 (2d Cir. 1968). In American Safety, the Second Circuit held that antitrust claims cannot be arbitrated because of the public interest in enforcing antitrust laws, the potential bias and limited expertise of arbitrators, the complexity of antitrust law, and the procedural differences between trials and arbitrations. [\[11\]](#) Id. at 826-27. Until now, this circuit has followed the holding and reasoning of American Safety. Lake Communications, Inc. v. ICC Corp., 738 F.2d 1473, 1479 (9th Cir. 1984).

In light of more recent Supreme Court decisions, however, we must review whether it is appropriate to continue to follow American Safety. HN7 "We are bound by decisions of prior panels' unless an en banc decision, Supreme Court decision or subsequent legislation undermines those decisions." United States v. Washington, 872 F.2d 874, 880 (9th Cir. 1989) (quoting Montana v. Johnson, 738 F.2d 1074, 1077 (9th Cir. 1984)). In Mitsubishi Motors Corporation v. Soler Chrysler-Plymouth Inc., 473 U.S. 614, 632-35, 87 L. Ed. 2d 444, 105 S. Ct. 3346 (1985), however, the Supreme Court has indeed undermined the reasoning behind American Safety. In Mitsubishi, the Court held that an antitrust claim could be submitted to an international arbitral tribunal.

Although Mitsubishi found "it unnecessary to assess the legitimacy of the [12] American Safety doctrine as applied to agreements to arbitrate arising from domestic transactions," Mitsubishi, 473 U.S. at 629, we are persuaded that the decision is not restricted to the international context. Several reasons support this conclusion. First, the Supreme Court has subsequently cited Mitsubishi for the general proposition that antitrust claims can be arbitrated. Gilmer, 111 S. Ct. at 1652.

Second, in Mitsubishi the Supreme Court specifically refuted the analysis of American Safety, confessing its "skepticism of certain aspects of the American Safety doctrine." Mitsubishi, 473 U.S. at 632. Initially, the Court reasoned [*1442] that "the mere appearance of an antitrust dispute does not alone warrant invalidation of the selected forum on the undemonstrated assumption that the arbitration clause is tainted." Id. With respect to complexity, the Court explained that "the anticipated subject matter of the dispute may be taken into account when the arbitrators are appointed, and [13] arbitral rules typically provide for the participation of experts either employed by the parties or appointed by the tribunal." Id. at 633. The Court concluded that "the factor of potential complexity alone does not persuade us that an arbitral tribunal could not properly handle an antitrust matter." Id. at 633-34. Regarding arbiter bias, the Court took note that international arbitrators are frequently drawn from the legal and business communities, and "declined to indulge the presumption that the parties and arbitral body conducting a proceeding will be unable or unwilling to retain competent, conscientious, and impartial arbitrators." Id. at 634. Finally, the Court addressed "the core of the American Safety doctrine," that the private cause of action is fundamental to enforcing antitrust laws, by concluding that "the importance of the private damages remedy . . . does not compel the conclusion that it may not be sought outside an American court." Id. at 635. [14] Given the Court's meticulous step-by-step disembowelment of the American Safety doctrine, this circuit will no longer follow American Safety. We hold that Mitsubishi effectively overruled American Safety and its progeny, including Lake Communications.

Third, Mitsubishi may be seen as evidence of the Supreme Court's desire to make statutory rights subject to arbitration. In holding that claims brought under section 10(b) of the Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U.S.C. § 78j(b), and RICO, 18 U.S.C. § 1961, can be subject to arbitration, the Supreme Court noted that HN8↑ the "federal policy favoring arbitration" established by the FAA "is not diminished when a party bound by an agreement raises a claim founded on statutory rights." Shearson/American Express v. McMahon, 482 U.S. 220, 226, 96 L. Ed. 2d 185, 107 S. Ct. 2332 (1987). One scholar summed up the situation concisely:

The reasoning used by the Court in McMahon to support its holding regarding the arbitrability of 1934 Act and RICO claims, however, suggests that domestic antitrust [15] disputes are likewise subject to arbitration. . . . The McMahon Court made no distinction between the international and domestic arbitral forums, but rather stated that domestic and international arbitrators are equally able to handle complex statutory schemes involving treble damage remedies. Such reasoning, in combination with the FAA can only mean the judicially implied antitrust exemption to the FAA no longer exists.

G. Richard Shell, "Res Judicata and Collateral Estoppel Effects of Commercial Arbitration," 35 UCLA L. Rev. 623, 624 n.7 (1988) (citations omitted) (emphasis added). Because HN9↑ arbitrators are not precluded from entertaining antitrust claims, Nghiem's argument fails.

V

Finally, Nghiem argues that the arbitrator's decision was arbitrary and capricious. Not only was this argument not made in the district court, but Nghiem raises it for the first time in his reply brief. Nghiem now alleges witness perjury, procurement of arbitration award by undue means, arbitrator's manifest disregard of the law, and misconduct.

25 F.3d 1437, *1442 (1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 13086, 15

We dismiss these arguments as untimely raised. HN10 [↑] An appellate court will dismiss arguments not raised at the district court [16] unless there are exceptional circumstances. FSLIC v. Butler, 904 F.2d 505, 509 \(9th Cir. 1990\). Nghiem does not even attempt to show exceptional circumstances.

VI

We conclude that the arbitrator had authority over the claim because Nghiem voluntarily submitted to binding arbitration and is, therefore, bound by the arbitrator's decision. The arbitrator was not precluded from deciding the Title VII and antitrust claims.

AFFIRMED.

End of Document

Sullivan v. Tagliabue

United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit

June 6, 1994, Decided

No. 93-2153

Reporter

25 F.3d 43 *; 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 13286 ; 1994-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,606

CHARLES W. SULLIVAN, Plaintiff, Appellant, v. PAUL TAGLIABUE, ET AL., Defendants, Appellees.

Prior History: [1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF MASSACHUSETTS. Hon. Edward F. Harrington, U.S. District Judge.

Core Terms

antitrust, factors, damages, stadium, teams, football, stadia, anti trust law, lease, antitrust violation, speculative, district court, competitor, conspiracy, restrained, indirect, professional football, claim for damages, psychologists, renovations, refinancing, injuries, causal, stock, antitrust action, anticompetitive, reimbursement, relocation, ownership, motive

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

HN1 [down arrow] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

An appellate court's review of a grant of summary judgment is plenary.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

HN2 [down] Clayton Act, Claims

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN3 [down] Private Actions, Standing

The Supreme Court has outlined a series of factors to be evaluated on a case-by-case basis to determine whether a plaintiff has standing to bring an antitrust action. These factors are: (1) the causal connection between the alleged antitrust violation and harm to the plaintiff; (2) an improper motive; (3) the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury and whether the injury was of a type that Congress sought to redress with the antitrust laws ("antitrust injury"); (4) the directness with which the alleged market restraint caused the asserted injury; (5) the speculative nature of the damages; and (6) the risk of duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN4 [down] Private Actions, Standing

The presence of an improper motive on the part of the defendants is not, by itself, determinative of antitrust standing.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN5 [down] Private Actions, Standing

The absence of antitrust injury weighs heavily against a grant of standing to sue under 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN6 [down] Clayton Act, Claims

To recover treble damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act, a plaintiff must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN7 [down] Private Actions, Standing

Whether a landlord has standing to sue for antitrust injury to its tenant depends, in part, on the relationship of the landlord to the relevant market and to the antitrust violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN8 [down] Private Actions, Remedies

The circuits are split over the question of whether a plaintiff must be either a consumer or competitor in the market harmed by the antitrust violation at issue in order to establish antitrust injury. Some courts have held that a plaintiff may establish antitrust injury by proof that he is a consumer or competitor in the relevant market, or by showing that his injury is inextricably intertwined with the injury to competition, in that the plaintiff was manipulated or utilized by defendant as a fulcrum, conduit or market force to injure competitors or participants in the relevant product and geographic market. Other courts interpret caselaw and the antitrust laws more narrowly, holding that a plaintiff must be a market participant in order to establish antitrust injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN9 [down] Private Actions, Standing

Existence of an identifiable class of persons whose self-interest is likely to motivate them to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement diminishes the justification for allowing a more remote party to sue.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN10 [down] Private Actions, Standing

In considering the risk of duplicativeness and complex apportionment of damages, courts are concerned with keeping antitrust actions within judicially manageable limits by curtailing litigation involving apportionment of damages among an array of parties claiming injury. In considering directness, courts are concerned with the question of which among the affected parties are most likely to be motivated to pursue an antitrust action. While in the usual case, this would be those most directly affected by the antitrust violation, in some cases, more remote parties might be more likely to detect and pursue an antitrust action.

Counsel: Joseph L. Alioto with whom Angela M. Alioto, Frederick P. Furth, Bruce J. Wecker, Michael P. Lehmann and Alan R. Hoffman were on brief for appellant.

John Vanderstar with whom Sonya D. Winner, Ethan M. Posner, Jeremiah T. O'Sullivan, Sarah Chapin Columbia, Joseph W. Cotchett and Susan Illston were on brief for appellees.

Judges: Before Breyer, * Chief Judge, Coffin, Senior Circuit Judge, and Torruella, Circuit Judge.

Opinion by: COFFIN

Opinion

[*44] COFFIN, Senior Circuit Judge.

Plaintiff Charles Sullivan brought this action individually and as assignee of the assets of Stadium Management Corporation (SMC) challenging, as an illegal restraint in trade, a National Football League (NFL) Rule prohibiting the sale of shares in an NFL franchise to any company not engaged in the business of professional football, [2] in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act.¹ See 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2. The district court held that plaintiff lacked standing to bring this claim and granted summary judgment for defendants.² After a review of the record, we affirm.

[3] I. Factual Background.

Charles Sullivan (plaintiff or Sullivan) is the former owner and sole stockholder of SMC, which owned the stadium where the New England Patriots play their games. His father, William Sullivan, was the Patriots' owner at all relevant times.

In 1987, William Sullivan sought to sell a 49% interest in the Patriots to an investment banking firm not in the business of football, which, in turn, was to sell the shares to the public. Through this transaction, plaintiff, through SMC, expected to obtain financing for his stadium.

Under the terms of the NFL Constitution and By-Laws, member teams are not permitted to sell shares to the public unless three-fourths of the members approve. William Sullivan was unable to persuade the other NFL owners to allow his proposed deal, and in October 1988, he instead sold the team to a private buyer. In February 1988, SMC [*45] filed a Chapter 11 petition in bankruptcy, and the stadium subsequently was sold for the "bargain basement price" of $ 25 million.

In May 1991, William Sullivan sued the NFL, alleging that its policy against public ownership violated the federal antitrust laws because it unreasonably restrained trade in ownership [*4] interests in NFL teams.³ Charles

* Chief Judge Stephen Breyer heard oral argument in this matter but did not participate in the drafting or the issuance of the panel's opinion. The remaining two panelists therefore issue this opinion pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 46(d).

¹ Sullivan also alleged supplemental state law claims of breach of fiduciary obligations, interference with prospective advantageous contract, unfair trade practices, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. When the district court granted summary judgment on the federal antitrust claims, it declined to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the state law claims. See Sullivan v. Tagliabue, 828 F. Supp. 114, 120 n.6 (D. Mass. 1993).

² Defendants named in this action are the NFL, current NFL Commissioner Paul Tagliabue and his predecessor Pete Rozelle. Paragraph 7 of the complaint also names the following 21 organizations owning NFL franchises: The Five Smiths, Inc.: Indianapolis Colts, Inc.; Buffalo Bills, Inc.; Chicago Bears Football Club, Inc.; Cincinnati Bengals, Inc.; Cleveland Browns, Inc.; Dallas Cowboys Football Club, Ltd.; PDB Sports, Ltd.; The Detroit Lions, Inc.; Green Bay Packers, Inc.; Houston Oilers, Inc.; Los Angeles Rams Football Co.; Minnesota Vikings Football Club, Inc.; New Orleans Saints LP; New York Jets Football Club, Inc.; B & B Holdings, Inc.; Pittsburgh Steelers, Inc.; Tampa Bay Area NFL Football, Inc.; Pro-Football, Inc.; Chargers Football Co.; and Seattle Professional Football Club, Inc.

The caption of plaintiff's complaint names a slightly different set of defendants. It fails to include either the Los Angeles Rams Football Co. or the Charges Football Co. as defendants, and adds the New York Football Giants, Inc. to the list.

³ On October 22, 1993, a jury awarded William Sullivan $ 38 million, which was reduced by the district court upon motion by the defendants to $ 17 million, before trebling. The NFL defendants have appealed this verdict.

Sullivan filed this lawsuit several months later against the NFL and other parties allegedly responsible for enforcing the challenged rule. He claims that, had the public offering of Patriots' stock been permitted, SMC would have received a $ 40 million dollar loan from the investment banking firm that would have been used to pay off debts and to make significant renovations to the stadium. In addition, in 1987, the stadium held a lease with the Patriots which extended until 2002, which Sullivan alleges would have been extended for 20 years had the sale of the Patriots stock gone through. Finally, he claims, the NFL policy prevented the Patriots from making their own investment in the maintenance of the stadium, thus undermining SMC's ability to keep the Patriots from breaking their lease with SMC and moving to another location.⁴

[5] As damages, plaintiff claims the amount of the enhanced market value of the stadium that would have resulted from the planned renovations and the lease extension.

The district court granted summary judgment for defendants, holding that Sullivan lacked antitrust standing. The court reached this conclusion by determining that the materials submitted indisputably showed that the injury plaintiff suffered was not within the type contemplated by the antitrust laws; that its impact was too indirect; and that the damages claimed were too speculative. Plaintiff now appeals.

HN1 Our review of a grant of summary judgment is plenary. Mendes v. Medtronic, Inc., 18 F.3d 13, 15 (1st Cir. 1994).

II. General Principles of Antitrust Standing

Sullivan asserts that under Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15(a) (1994), he has standing both individually and on behalf of SMC to maintain a private damage action against the NFL. Under Section 4, HN2 "Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the [6] district in which the defendant resides or is found . . . without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of the suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee."⁵

This statutory language is broad, conferring the right to sue on "any person" claiming an injury causally related to an antitrust injury. However, the class of persons entitled to recover damages under Section 4 has been limited by caselaw through the doctrine of "antitrust standing." See *Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 529-35, [46] 103 S. Ct. 897, 903-07, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983); [7] Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 472-73, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, 102 S. Ct. 2540 (1982).

⁴ During the bankruptcy proceedings, plaintiff received an assignment of all SMC's causes of action in consideration of the release of claims against SMC by plaintiff.

The NFL argues that Sullivan, as SMC's assignee, is precluded from pursuing its antitrust claims against the NFL defendants because SMC did not disclose these claims during the course of the bankruptcy proceedings. They contend that, at least by October, 1990, when he entered into a stipulation with the bankruptcy trustee resolving claims by and against him, Sullivan was fully aware of all of the facts upon which his complaint is based and that his antitrust claims should have been raised in the bankruptcy proceedings. In their view, SMC is therefore estopped from bringing a legal action to enforce the claims against the NFL defendants.

For the purposes of this decision, we assume, without deciding, that SMC is not estopped from bringing a legal action to enforce these claims.

⁵ It is unquestioned that the requirements of antitrust standing exceed those of standing in a constitutional sense. See Associated General Contractors, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 535 n.31, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1977); see also Daniel Berger & Roger Bernstein, An Analytical Framework for Antitrust Standing, 86 Yale L.J. 809, 813 n.11 (1977).

In Associated General Contractors, HN3[↑] the Supreme Court outlined a series of factors to be evaluated on a case-by-case basis to determine whether a plaintiff has standing to bring an antitrust action.⁶ These factors are: (1) the causal connection between the alleged antitrust violation and harm to the plaintiff; (2) an improper motive; (3) the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury and whether the injury was of a type that Congress sought to redress with the antitrust laws ("antitrust injury"); (4) the directness with which the alleged market restraint caused the asserted injury; (5) the speculative nature of the damages; and (6) the risk of duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages. 459 U.S. at 537-45; See also Lovett v. General Motors Corp., 975 F.2d 518, 520 (8th Cir. 1992) (listing factors).

[8] Though Associated General Contractors outlined a comprehensive approach to the question of antitrust standing, it gives little guidance as to how to weigh the various factors, and whether the absence of a particular factor would be fatal to standing in every instance. In Associated General Contractors itself, the Court found that two factors, the causal connection between the Union's alleged injuries and the violation of the antitrust laws, and the allegation of improper motive, supported a grant of standing, 459 U.S. at 537, but that a consideration of the remaining relevant factors weighed heavily against standing, id. at 545. The Court concluded that, in the circumstances of that case, these latter factors were controlling, and denied standing to the plaintiffs. Id. at 545-46.

We draw from the Court's discussion in Associated General Contractors the requirement that courts consider the balance of factors in each case in an effort to guard against "engrafting artificial limitations on the § [9] 4 remedy." McCready, 457 U.S. at 472. See also Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum v. NFL, 791 F.2d 1356, 1363 (9th Cir. 1986) ("Most cases will find some factors tending in favor of standing . . . , and some against . . . , and a court may find standing if the balance of factors so instructs."); accord Southaven Land Co. v. Malone & Hyde, Inc., 715 F.2d 1079, 1085-86 (6th Cir. 1983); Ashmore v. Northeast Petroleum Corp. of Cape Cod, 843 F. Supp. 759, 765 (D. Me. 1994).

III. Application to Claims Brought on Behalf of SMC

A. Factors Supporting Standing

Sullivan argues that the district court was correct when, evaluating the relevant factors as they applied to claims brought on behalf of SMC, it found that plaintiff had alleged, and presented evidence of, a causal connection between the alleged antitrust violation and the harm to the plaintiff, and an improper motive on the part of defendants; and when it found no significant risk of duplicate recoveries or danger of complex apportionment in this case. He maintains, [10] however, that the court erred in its determination that the absence of the remaining Associated General Contractors factors required the court to deny standing. He contends that he has satisfied the remaining factors, and that the court should have granted him standing to [*47] press his antitrust suit, both individually and on behalf of SMC.

We agree that the district court correctly found that Sullivan's complaint met three of the Associated General Contractors factors. Sullivan alleged, and presented evidence, of a causal connection between the application of the NFL Rule and SMC's inability to refinance the stadium because the sale of Patriots' stock to the public was prohibited. Sullivan also alleged an improper motive on the part of defendants in that they "sought to restrain and monopolize interstate commerce in professional football" and took the actions they did in furtherance of that goal. In addition, Sullivan indicated that defendants intended to block the refinancing of the stadium by their actions, or, at the very least, that such a harm was a foreseeable consequence of the application of the Rule to the Patriots.⁷ Nor does there appear to be a significant risk of [11] duplicate recovery or danger of complex apportionment in this case, as the injuries of which Sullivan complains are sufficiently distinct from those alleged by William Sullivan, the only other plausible litigant in this case.⁸

⁶ Prior to Associated General Contractors, circuit courts had crafted a variety of tests to determine whether a party injured by an antitrust violation had standing to bring an action for treble damages under Section 4 of the Clayton Act. The two most commonly stated tests focused on the "directness of the injury" to the alleged antitrust violation, and whether a plaintiff was in the "target area" of the antitrust conspiracy. See Associated General Contractors, 459 U.S. at 535-36 & n.33 (citations omitted); Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, P 334.1 (1993 Supp.). A third test considered whether the injury was "arguably within the zone of interests protected by the antitrust laws." Associated General Contractors, 459 U.S. at 536 n.33 (citation omitted). In Associated General Contractors, the Court, noting that it was "virtually impossible to announce a black-letter rule that will dictate the result in every case," 459 U.S. at 536, drew on these tests to outline a series of factors to guide courts in deciding whether a private plaintiff should have standing to pursue an antitrust action in a particular case. See id. at 536-46.

[12] B. Factors Defeating Standing

We are not persuaded, however, by Sullivan's argument that he satisfies the remaining Associated General Contractors' factors. The existence of antitrust injury is a central factor in the standing calculus.⁹ In this case, its absence, together with the indirectness of the injury to Sullivan, and the speculative nature of the claimed damages, outweighs the remaining factors. We therefore conclude that plaintiff lacks standing to pursue the claims brought on behalf of SMC.

[13] 1. The Nature of the Injury: Is it Antitrust Injury?

Sullivan contends that he has suffered "antitrust injury," that is, the type of injury that the antitrust laws were designed to prevent. He relies principally on McCready, 457 U.S. at 465, and Los Angeles Coliseum, 791 F.2d at 1356, to support this claim.

The Supreme Court first articulated the concept of "antitrust injury" in Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, 429 U.S. 477, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977). In Brunswick, several small bowling centers brought suit, challenging the acquisition of several of their competitors by the much larger Brunswick Corporation as an anticompetitive merger under Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18, and seeking treble damages under Section 4 for profits they would have made had the acquired centers gone out of business. Id. at 480-81.

Although plaintiffs had alleged that Brunswick had engaged in predatory practices designed [14] to lessen competition in the markets it had entered, they could prove only that [*48] Brunswick's acquisitions had deprived them of profits they would have made had the acquired firms closed. Id. at 488, 490 & nn.15, 16. The Court noted that, in essence, plaintiffs were not complaining that Brunswick's actions had reduced competition, but preserved it, thereby depriving plaintiffs of the benefits of increased concentration. Id. at 488. Rejecting the lower court's holding that any loss "causally linked" to "the mere presence of the violator in the market" was compensable, id. at 486-87, the Court found that plaintiffs' injury was not of "the type the [antitrust laws] were intended to forestall," 429 U.S. at

⁷ Of course, as the Supreme Court has noted, HN4[] the presence of an improper motive on the part of the defendants is not, by itself, determinative of antitrust standing. See Associated General Contractors, 459 U.S. 519, 537 & n.37 (noting that "the availability of the § 4 remedy to some person who claims its benefit is not a question of the specific intent of the conspirators") (quoting McCready, 457 U.S. at 479).

⁸ We recognize that there is a risk of duplicate recovery and complex apportionment of damages as between Sullivan, in his individual capacity, and SMC, in light of their seemingly overlapping injuries. We think that this can be avoided, however, given that plaintiff brings this single action for damages suffered by both.

⁹ Some courts have concluded that a consideration of antitrust injury is of threshold significance in the Section 4 standing inquiry. See, e.g., Balaklaw v. Lovell, 14 F.3d 793, 797-98 & n.9 (2d Cir. 1994); Todorov v. DCH Healthcare Authority, 921 F.2d 1438, 1449 (11th Cir. 1991); see also State of South Dakota v. Kansas City Southern Industries, 880 F.2d 40, 46 (8th Cir. 1989) (noting primacy of antitrust injury requirement). Cf. Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 110, n.5, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 (1986) (pointing out, in the course of considering antitrust injury requirement for private plaintiffs seeking an injunction under Section 16 of the Clayton Act, that a showing of antitrust injury was a necessary (though not always sufficient) element of standing to sue for damages under Section 4).

We agree that HN5[] the absence of antitrust injury weighs heavily against a grant of standing. We need not consider, however, whether this should be fatal to standing in every instance, because in the circumstances of this case, we conclude that the balance of factors as a whole weighs against a grant of standing.

487-88 (citation omitted). The Court held that HN6 to recover treble damages under Section 4, a plaintiff must prove "antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes [\[15\]](#) defendants' acts unlawful." Id. at 489 (emphasis in original).

In Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, 102 S. Ct. 2540 \(1982\), the first case explicitly to address antitrust standing, the Court incorporated a focus on "antitrust injury" into its Section 4 standing inquiry. The plaintiff in McCready was a subscriber of Blue Shield, a health insurance plan that did not provide reimbursement for psychotherapy treatment rendered by psychologists (unless "prescribed" by and billed through a medical doctor), while providing reimbursement for the same treatment if given by a psychiatrist. McCready was treated by a psychologist, and Blue Shield refused to reimburse her for this treatment. McCready brought suit, alleging that Blue Shield and an association of psychiatrists had engaged in an unlawful conspiracy "to exclude and boycott clinical psychologists from receiving compensation under" the Blue Shield plans, and that Blue Shield's failure to reimburse was in furtherance of this conspiracy. McCready, 457 U.S. at 470. [\[16\]](#)

The defendants argued that McCready had not suffered "antitrust injury" because her injury did not reflect the anti-competitive effect of the alleged antitrust violation. Id. at 481-82. McCready had not paid inflated fees for psychotherapy to psychiatrists, the supposed beneficiaries of the conspiracy; nor had she alleged that her psychologists' bills were higher than they would have been had the conspiracy not existed. Id. at 481.

The Court, however, refused to so limit recovery. While not a competitor of the conspirators, the injury McCready suffered -- sanction in the form of the unreimbursed psychologists' services -- "was inextricably intertwined with the injury the conspirators sought to inflict" on the market. Id. at 483-84. McCready suffered injury by virtue of the role she played in Blue Shield's anticompetitive scheme. Denying reimbursement to patients of psychologists was the "very means" by which Blue Shield coerced her to choose between becoming an unwilling participant in its illegal campaign [\[17\]](#) to boycott the services of psychologists, or to pay the costs of treatment for the therapist of her choice from her own pocket. The harm to McCready was thus a "necessary step in effecting the ends of the alleged illegal conspiracy." Id. at 479. The Court therefore found that McCready's injury "flowed from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful," within the meaning of Brunswick, falling "squarely within the area of congressional concern." Id. at 484.

Sullivan argues that the logic of McCready supports his standing. In Sullivan's view, the NFL rule at issue affected competition in the market for football stadia by preventing SMC from obtaining refinancing to pay for renovations that would have led the Patriots to extend their lease, and by interfering with the Patriots' capacity to invest money in the maintenance of their stadium, thus undermining SMC's ability to keep the Patriots from breaking their lease with SMC and moving to another location. Further, the injury to SMC was "inextricably intertwined" with that to the owner of the New England Patriots, [\[18\]](#) since SMC expected to benefit from a joint proposal to conduct a public offering of a minority ownership in the team; and was an "integral aspect" of the conspiracy against the owner of the Patriots and was [\[*49\]](#) likely to result from the implementation of that conspiracy.

Like McCready, Sullivan claims, neither the fact that SMC stood in a vertical relationship to the intended victim of the alleged antitrust violation (purchasers of NFL franchises), nor the fact that SMC's injuries might be characterized as "indirect" deprive SMC of standing. Likewise, Sullivan's failure to show an increase in price or a lessening of supply in the stadia market, and the fact that Sullivan's personal losses might be derivative of those suffered by SMC are not dispositive. Sullivan points out that McCready's losses, for example, were at least in part derivative of those suffered by her employer, who as the direct purchaser of the group health insurance from Blue Shield, presumably did not get the benefit of its bargain with Blue Shield.

We disagree that McCready favors Sullivan's right to sue.

Sullivan is correct that McCready did stand, in part, for the Court's refusal to limit recovery to those [\[19\]](#) whose injuries result from the anti-competitive effect of the violation, and to extend available recovery at least to some parties who stand in vertical relationship (such as customers) to the direct victim of an antitrust violation.¹⁰ Thus, the fact that SMC was not a competitor in the market for professional football teams, the direct victim of the alleged antitrust violation, but in the related market for football stadia, does not by itself mean that he lacks standing here. See McCready at 472 (refusing to engraft artificial constraints on Section 4, stating that "the statute does not confine its protection to consumers, or to purchasers, or to competitors, or to sellers") (internal citation omitted).

[20] HN8[

The circuits are split, however, over the question of whether a plaintiff must be either a consumer or competitor in the market harmed by the antitrust violation at issue in order to establish antitrust injury. Some courts have held that a plaintiff may establish antitrust injury by proof that he was a consumer or competitor in the relevant market, or by showing that his injury was "inextricably intertwined" with the injury to competition, in that the plaintiff was "manipulated or utilized by defendant as a fulcrum, conduit or market force to injure competitors or participants in the relevant product and geographic market." Province v. Cleveland Press Pub. Co., 787 F.2d 1047, 1052 \(6th Cir. 1986\) (quoting Southaven, 715 F.2d at 1086); see Ostrofe v. H.S. Crocker Co., Inc., 740 F.2d 739, 745-46 \(9th Cir. 1984\) (though neither a consumer nor competitor in the relevant market, fact that injury to plaintiff was a necessary means to achieve the conspirators' illegal end sufficient to establish antitrust injury); Ashmore v. Northeast Petroleum Division of Cargill, 843 F. Supp. 759, 769-70 [21] (same); Donahue v. Pendleton Woolen Mills, 633 F. Supp. 1423, 1435-39 \(S.D.N.Y. 1986\) (following Ostrofe).¹¹

Other courts have interpreted Supreme Court caselaw and the antitrust laws more narrowly, holding that a plaintiff must be a market participant in order to establish antitrust injury. See Bichan v. Chemetron Corp., 681 F.2d 514, 519 \(7th Cir. 1982\) [22] (Section 4 protects only parties injured as customers or competitors in a defined market, or in a discrete area of the economy); see also Winther v. DEC International, Inc., 625 F. Supp. 100, 102-03 \(D. Colo. 1985\). We need not resolve this conflict, because even under a broad reading of McCready, SMC cannot support its claim of antitrust injury.

[*50] Read broadly, McCready extends antitrust standing to parties who can establish that their injury was a "necessary step" and the "means" employed by the conspirators to achieve their illegal ends, regardless of the parties' direct market participation. See McCready, 457 U.S. at 479, 484 n.21; Ostrofe, 740 F.2d at 745-46; Ashmore, 843 F. Supp. at 768-70 & nn.16, 18. Unlike McCready and her co-plaintiffs, neither Sullivan nor SMC were "necessary" instruments to effectuate the alleged conspiracy. Denying stadium refinancing was not a "necessary step" in restraining competition in the market for professional football franchises, nor the "very means" by which the defendants sought [23] to do so. Indeed, according to plaintiff's own complaint, the purpose of the NFL policy was to "exclude competitive entry into the business of professional football by . . . television companies, motion picture producers, investment bankers, owners of other professional sports teams, home entertainment companies, and entertainment companies generally." The policy is not alleged to have a similar anticompetitive effect on stadia. Moreover, the instruments of the alleged conspiracy were the NFL and member club owners, not Sullivan or SMC.

Nor does the Ninth Circuit's holding in Los Angeles Coliseum bolster Sullivan's claim that he suffered antitrust injury. In that case, the Los Angeles Coliseum and the Oakland Raiders attempted to negotiate a deal to relocate

¹⁰ In this respect, we disagree with defendants' argument that SMC, merely by virtue of its status as the Patriots' landlord, is necessarily barred from bringing suit for injury to its tenant. HNT[

Whether a landlord has standing to sue for injury to its tenant depends, in part, on the relationship of the landlord to the relevant market and to the antitrust violation. For example, a landlord may have standing to sue for injuries to a tenant based on its status as a competitor in an adjacent market, see Los Angeles Coliseum, 791 F.2d at 1363-65.

¹¹ These courts reason that the injury suffered by a plaintiff used as a means to effect an antitrust violation is within the core of Congressional concern underlying the antitrust laws, which is "to create a private enforcement mechanism that would deter violators and deprive them of the fruits of their illegal actions and would provide ample compensation to the victims of antitrust violations." Ashmore, 843 F. Supp. at 770 (quoting McCready, 457 U.S. at 472); see also Ostrofe, 740 F.2d at 746-47.

the Raiders to Los Angeles to play in the Coliseum (the Rams' old home field), following the Rams' move to Anaheim. In its effort to block this move, the NFL invoked a league rule requiring three-fourths of the member teams to approve a team's relocation into another team's league territory. The Coliseum and the Raiders brought suit, claiming that this was an unlawful restraint of trade, in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman [24] Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. A jury found that the NFL rule violated the antitrust laws, and awarded damages to both the Coliseum and the Raiders.

In holding that the Coliseum had standing to bring this antitrust action, the court found that the Coliseum had suffered "antitrust injury," because the NFL had "restrained competition . . . among football stadia by restraining the Raiders['] attempt to move and operate in Los Angeles." 791 F.2d at 1364 (emphasis in original). Had the Raiders been permitted to move to Los Angeles, the Coliseum would have been able to bid effectively to have them as a tenant. The rule restraining such a move, the court held, was precisely of the type that the antitrust laws were designed to prevent. Id.

The rule at issue here posed no similar restraint on SMC's capacity to compete for a pro football team's tenancy. In fact, in 1987, the year of the attempted sale, SMC and the Patriots had a lease that ran until the year 2002, regardless of the team's ownership.

2. Directness of the Injury

Sullivan argues that SMC suffered direct harm as a result of the NFL's restraints on the stadia market. He [25] maintains that Los Angeles Coliseum supports this claim, and compares SMC's status to that of the Coliseum.

In Los Angeles Coliseum, the Coliseum had been engaged in a bidding struggle with a rival stadium for the tenancy of the Oakland Raiders when the NFL's invocation of its restrictive relocation rule foreclosed further negotiations, thus depriving the Coliseum of expected revenue for leasing the facility to the Raiders for their games. 791 F.2d at 1365. The Ninth Circuit concluded that the NFL's illegal territorial restraints directly and foreseeably restrained competition in the stadia market, in which the Coliseum participated, and that the harm it suffered was a direct result of the NFL's illegal territorial restraints. Id.

In an attempt to limit the reach of this holding, the court stated that it was "confident that [this] ruling will not be misinterpreted as being a broad endorsement of antitrust standing for all parties who might have contracted with the Raiders had they not been restrained in their relocation plans. Football stadia constitute a special market distinguished from those comprised by, say, hotels, laundering establishments, [26] or limousine services, by their indispensable and intimate connection with professional football [*51] and football teams. An injury such as that suffered by the Coliseum in the present case cannot be characterized fairly as an indirect 'ripple effect.'" Id. at 1365.

Sullivan seems to argue that since SMC, like the Coliseum, is a participant in the market for football stadia, it enjoys similar distinguished status by virtue of its "indispensable and intimate connection with professional football and football teams," and should be able likewise to recover. The injury to SMC, and its relation to the rule at issue in this case, are, however, clearly distinguishable.

The rule at issue in Los Angeles Coliseum affected where a team could be located. In precluding a team from relocating in a particular area, the rule necessarily restrained competition in the related market for football stadia. Once the NFL invoked its rule to block the Raiders from moving into the Rams' territory, the Coliseum (and, indeed, all other stadia in that location) was barred from competing with other stadia for the Raiders' tenancy.

The rule at issue in this case had no similar direct [27] effect on SMC, nor on the market in which it was a participant. Plaintiff claims that the NFL rule restricting public ownership of NFL teams was the "but for" cause of the loss of his stadium, injuring SMC as follows: the NFL rejected William Sullivan's plan to sell 49% of his stock to an investment bank, which, in turn, would sell the stock to the public; as a result, SMC did not get refinancing; SMC therefore could not pay its debts, nor complete renovations; SMC could not get an extension on its lease (which was contingent on the sale of Patriots' stock), and was forced to file for bankruptcy. We think that any injury suffered by SMC as a result of the NFL rule was indirect, and a consequence of the direct injury inflicted on the Patriots' owner.

In addition, the fact that William Sullivan, the party most directly harmed by the alleged violation, has pursued (and indeed, obtained a verdict in) his own antitrust action diminishes another possible rationale for allowing Sullivan to proceed in this case. See Associated General Contractors, 459 U.S. at 542 HN9¹² (existence of an identifiable class of persons whose self-interest [28] likely to motivate them to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement diminishes the justification for allowing a more remote party to sue).¹²

[29] 3. Speculative Nature of the Damages

The district court found that "given that an extended chain of independent events would have had to have occurred to give credence to the Plaintiff's damages claim on behalf of SMC," the damages claims were "at best, highly speculative." 828 F. Supp. at 118. Sullivan claims that damages to SMC are measurable in terms of the enhanced market value of the stadium which would have resulted from the planned renovations, the extension of the lease with the Patriots, and the potential for deals with promoters for other entertainment and sports events. We think that calculating these damages would "necessitate wide ranging speculation," Southaven Land Co., 715 F.2d at 1088, about the future value of a refinanced, renovated, debt-free stadium with a new lease. Because the harm to SMC was indirect, and was caused, in part, by independent intervening [*52] factors (notably, its prior serious indebtedness, as well as its failure to secure additional sources of commercial financing), we agree with the district court that SMC's damages claims are "highly speculative," and are an additional factor weighing [30] against a grant of standing in this case. See Associated General Contractors, 459 U.S. at 542 (finding that damages were speculative because injury was indirect, and because it may have been produced by independent intervening factors).

The Ninth Circuit's holding in Los Angeles Coliseum is not to the contrary. In that case, the estimated damages claimed by the Coliseum included claims for lost profits that would have been earned had luxury stadium boxes been built in the Coliseum and rented for the 1980 football season. 791 F.2d at 1366. The court noted these estimates may have been unfounded due to lack of proof of causation. Id. Nonetheless, the court upheld the damages award, holding that even without considering the elements in question (lost profits from would-have-been luxury boxes), there was sufficient evidence, including attendance and seat price estimates offered by the Raiders, to uphold the total award of damages. Id.

Los Angeles Coliseum is distinguishable in several important respects. As the Ninth Circuit found, the Coliseum suffered direct harm as a result of the NFL's [31] antitrust violation: but for the NFL's interference in its negotiations with the Raiders, the Coliseum likely would have secured their tenancy. Id. at 1365. The damages suffered were therefore intimately connected with the antitrust violation. Moreover, losses based on attendance and ¹² Contrary to plaintiff's assertion, the district court's finding that there was no significant risk of duplicative recoveries or danger of complex apportionment of damages is not at odds with its determination that the fact that William Sullivan was pursuing his own antitrust action weighed against a grant of standing. HN10¹² In considering the risk of duplicativeness and complex apportionment of damages, courts are concerned with keeping antitrust actions within judicially manageable limits by curtailing litigation involving apportionment of damages among an array of parties claiming injury. See Associated General Contractors, 459 U.S. at 543-45 & nn.50-51; see also Southaven, 715 F.2d at 1087. In considering directness, courts are concerned with the question of which among the affected parties are most likely to be motivated to pursue an antitrust action. While in the usual case, this would be those most directly affected by the antitrust violation, in some cases, more remote parties might be more likely to detect and pursue an antitrust action. See Associated General Contractors, 459 U.S. at 542; see also Ashmore, 843 F. Supp. at 766-67 (appropriate to grant standing to employees discharged for refusal to implement discriminatory pricing system, because purchasers, though directly damaged by anticompetitive effect of violation, are least likely to discover it).

ticket price estimates were the foreseeable result of these damages, and are precisely the type of damages courts can calculate easily. By contrast, the asserted harm here is indirect, and likely the result, at least in part, of independent intervening factors; nor is the enhanced market value of a refinanced, renovated, debt-free stadium with a new lease easy to calculate. It is the combination of these factors that leads us to conclude that any damages to SMC as a result of the alleged antitrust violation are highly speculative. See Associated General Contractors, 459 U.S. at 542.

Having considered the relevant Associated General Contractors' factors, we conclude that the balance in this case weighs against a grant of standing. We therefore conclude that Sullivan may not pursue an antitrust action on behalf [32] of SMC.

IV. Application to Sullivan's Personal Damages Claims

Sullivan also claims that the NFL's restrictive rule directly damaged him in his individual capacity, by charging him with an array of expenses arising out of the SMC bankruptcy, including the payment of legal and other professional fees associated with the bankruptcy proceeding itself, lost opportunity to purchase debt at a discounted rate, lost compensation and benefits, and anguish and emotional distress. In that, as the district court found, these damages "merely flow from the alleged injuries to SMC," 828 F. Supp. at 120, they are that much further removed from the injuries claimed on behalf of SMC. We therefore conclude, consistent with our conclusion that SMC did not suffer "antitrust injury," and that any damages suffered were too indirect and speculative to sustain an action on its behalf, that Sullivan likewise lacks standing to pursue an antitrust action for damages suffered in his individual capacity.

The decision of the district court is AFFIRMED.

End of Document

Heisen v. Pacific Coast Bldg. Prods.

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

May 24, 1994,  Submitted; June 9, 1994, Filed

No. 92-16661

Reporter

1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 14332 *; 1994-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,839

CHARLES HEISEN, Plaintiff-Appellant, v. PACIFIC COAST BUILDING PRODUCTS, INC., a California Company; DAVID LUCCHETTI; ALBERT K. MUELLER; JEAN RODNEY, Esq.; MARK BEGNAUD, Esq., Defendants-Appellees.

Notice: [*1] THIS DISPOSITION IS NOT APPROPRIATE FOR PUBLICATION AND MAY NOT BE CITED TO OR BY THE COURTS OF THIS CIRCUIT EXCEPT AS PROVIDED BY THE 9TH CIR. R. 36-3.

Subsequent History: Reported as Table Case at: 26 F.3d 130, 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 21736.

Prior History: Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Nevada. D.C. No. CV-92-00210-HDM(R). Howard D. McKibben, District Judge, Presiding

Disposition: AFFIRMED.

Core Terms

antitrust, allegations, district court, markets, anti trust law, Sherman Act, defendants', competitor, failure to state a claim, silica, leave to amend, federal court, state court, anticompetitive, requisite, damages, parties, gypsum, injure, amend

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN1[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The district court's dismissal of an action under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) for failure to state a claim is reviewed de novo.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

 The panel unanimously finds this case suitable for decision without oral argument. Fed. R. App. P. 34(a); 9th Cir. R. 34-4.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN2 [down] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

If matters outside the pleadings are presented and not excluded by the district court, a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim must be treated as one for summary judgment and disposed of as provided by Fed. R. Civ. P. 56. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\). Nevertheless, on a motion to dismiss a court may properly look beyond the complaint to matters of public record and doing so does not convert a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to one for summary judgment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To state a claim under either section 1 or section 2 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must allege antitrust injury, i.e., injury to the market or to competition in general, not merely injury to individuals or individual firms. The factual support needed to show injury to competition must include proof of the relevant geographic and product markets and demonstration of the restraint's anticompetitive effects within those markets.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4 [down] Sherman Act, Claims

To establish a violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must demonstrate three elements: (1) an agreement, conspiracy, or combination among two or more persons or distinct business entities; (2) which is intended to harm or unreasonably restrain competition; and (3) which actually causes injury to competition, beyond the impact on the claimant, within a field of commerce in which the claimant is engaged (i.e., "antitrust injury"). To establish a section 2 violation for an attempt to monopolize, a plaintiff must demonstrate four elements: (1) specific intent to control prices or destroy competition; (2) predatory or anti-competitive conduct directed toward accomplishing that purpose; (3) a dangerous probability of success; and (4) causal antitrust injury.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN5 [down] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

When a complaint is dismissed for failure to state a claim, leave to amend should be granted unless it can be determined that no possible amendment would cure the complaint's deficiencies. Moreover, an amended complaint may only allege other facts consistent with the challenged pleading.

Judges: Before: HUG, D.W. NELSON, and FERNANDEZ, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

MEMORANDUM *

Charles Heisen appeals pro se HN1[] the district court's dismissal of his antitrust action under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) for failure to state a claim. We review de novo, Les Shockley Racing, Inc. v. National Hot Rod Ass'n, 884 F.2d 504, 507 \(9th Cir. 1989\), and we affirm.

The discord between the parties to this appeal dates back to July 30, 1988, when Heisen hired a bulldozer and directed its operator to sever the primary commercial access road to a plant owned by [\[*2\]](#) pacific Coast Building Products, Inc. ("PABCO"). PABCO sued Heisen and his employer, International Silica Corporation, in federal court. In March 1991, the district court awarded PABCO $ 40,000 in compensatory damages and $ 5,000 in punitive damages. In April 1991, Heisen filed a complaint in Nevada state court alleging fifteen state antitrust claims against the same defendants whom he sued in this action. In November 1991, the state court entered judgment in favor of the defendants.

In March 1992, Heisen filed the complaint that is the subject of this appeal. The allegations in Heisen's complaint are identical to those asserted in the state court action, except that Heisen claimed violations of federal antitrust law rather than state antitrust law. The defendants filed a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted.¹ After a hearing, the district court granted the defendants' motion and dismissed the complaint with prejudice. This appeal followed.

[\[*3\]](#) Heisen contends that the district court erred by dismissing his complaint pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(6\). We disagree.

Heisen's complaint does not specify the section of the Sherman Act upon which his claims are based.² Nevertheless, HN3[] to state a claim under either section 1 or section 2 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must allege antitrust injury, i.e. "injury to the market or to competition in general, not merely injury to individuals or individual firms[.]" McGlinchy v. Shell Chem. Co., 845 F.2d 802, 812 \(9th Cir. 1988\); Rutman Wine Co. v. E. & J. Gallo Winery, 829 F.2d 729, 734 \(9th Cir. 1987\) ("indispensable to any section 1 claim is an allegation that competition has been injured rather than merely competitors"); see also Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 8

* This disposition is not appropriate for publication and may not be cited to or by the courts of this circuit except as provided by 9th Cir. R. 36-3.

¹ The defendants attached to their motion to dismiss several documents that had been filed in the other state and federal lawsuits. Generally, HN2[] if matters outside the pleadings are presented and not excluded by the district court, a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim must be treated as one for summary judgment and disposed of as provided by Fed. R. Civ. P. 56. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\). Nevertheless, "on a motion to dismiss a court may properly look beyond the complaint to matters of public record and doing so does not convert a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to one for summary judgment." Mack v. South Bay Beer Distribrs., Inc., 798 F.2d 1279, 1282 \(9th Cir. 1986\). Accordingly, the district court properly considered the defendants' motion as one brought under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\). See id.

² HN4[] To establish a violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, "a plaintiff must demonstrate three elements: (1) an agreement, conspiracy, or combination among two or more persons or distinct business entities; (2) which is intended to harm or unreasonably restrain competition; and (3) which actually causes injury to competition, beyond the impact on the claimant, within a field of commerce in which the claimant is engaged (i.e., 'antitrust injury')."McGlinchy v. Shell Chem. Co., 845 F.2d 802, 811 \(9th Cir. 1988\). To establish a section 2 violation for an attempt to monopolize, a plaintiff must demonstrate four elements: (1) specific intent to control prices or destroy competition; (2) predatory or anti-competitive conduct directed toward accomplishing that purpose; (3) a dangerous probability of success; and (4) causal antitrust injury." Id.

L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962) (the antitrust laws were enacted for the "protection of competition, not competitors"). "Ordinarily, the factual support needed to show injury to competition must include proof of the relevant geographic and product markets and demonstration [*4] of the restraint's anticompetitive effects within those markets. Les Shockley Racing, 884 F.2d at 508. Moreover, "the pleader may not evade these requirements by merely alleging a bare legal conclusion; if the facts do not at least outline or adumbrate a violation of the Sherman Act, the plaintiff[] will get nowhere merely by dressing them up in the language of antitrust." Rutman, 829 F.2d at 736 (quoting Car Carriers, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 745 F.2d 1101, 1106 (7th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1054, 84 L. Ed. 2d 821, 105 S. Ct. 1758 (1985)).

[*5] Here, Heisen's complaint alleges that the defendants' actions have injured his own business interests. But the complaint is devoid of any facts that demonstrate an "antitrust injury." See McGlinch, 845 F.2d at 811. Heisen's complaint does not allege a reduction of competition in the gypsum and silica markets in general; instead, he alleges injury only to his own position as a competitor in these markets. Such allegations are insufficient to state a claim under the Sherman Act. See Les Shockley Racing, 884 F.2d at 508 (although proof of plaintiffs' allegations of market exclusion and resulting loss of income would establish harm to their business interests, such proof would not show injury to competition in the market as a whole); McGlinch, 845 F.2d at 811-12; Rutman, 829 F.2d at 736; Car Carriers, 745 F.2d at 1109 ("tortious activities in the form, for example, of unfair competition do not contravene the antitrust laws unless accompanied by the requisite anticompetitive effect").³ Accordingly, the district court correctly determined [*6] that Heisen's complaint failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted.⁴

[*7] Heisen next argues that he should have been allowed to amend his complaint before it was dismissed. This argument fails.

HN5 When a complaint is dismissed for failure to state a claim, leave to amend should be granted unless it can be determined that no possible amendment would cure the complaint's deficiencies. Reddy v. Litton Indus., Inc., 912 F.2d 291, 296 (9th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 116 L. Ed. 2d 272, 112 S. Ct. 332 (1991). Moreover, an "amended complaint may only allege other facts consistent with the challenged pleading." Id. at 297 (quotation omitted).

Our review of Heisen's complaint and its attachments convinces us that no amendment would produce a federal claim in this case.⁵ [*9] As we already have explained, Heisen did not allege that the defendants' actions were intended to injure, or did injure, competition in the silica or gypsum market. To the contrary, Heisen specifically alleged that the defendants' actions were motivated by their animosity toward Heisen, and that they intended to prevent him from becoming a competitor in these markets. Because "it would not be [*8] possible for [Heisen] to amend his complaint to allege a completely new injury . . . without contradicting any of the allegations of his original complaint[,]" the district court did not err by dismissing Heisen's complaint without giving him leave to amend. See id. at 296-97; cf. Rutman, 829 F.2d at 736 (affirming Rule 12(b)(6) dismissal of antitrust complaint because "the specific intent to harm competition [was] insufficiently pleaded"); Car Carriers, 745 F.2d at 1106 ("when the requisite elements are lacking, the costs of modern federal antitrust litigation and the increasing caseload of the federal courts counsel against sending the parties into discovery when there is no reasonable likelihood that the plaintiffs can construct a claim from the events related in the complaint").⁶

³ Nor has Heisen alleged any facts that suggest that "the relevant market is both narrow and discrete and the market participants are few." See Les Shockley Racing, 884 F.2d at 508-09. Accordingly, this is not a case in which injury to one market competitor is tantamount to injury to competition. See id.

⁴ The district court found that Heisen's complaint failed to state a claim because the defendants were all agents or employees of PABC, and therefore could not be conspirators within the meaning of the Sherman Act. See Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 769, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984) ("officers or employees of the same firm do not provide the plurality of actors imperative for a § 1 conspiracy"). We decline to rest our decision on this ground. See Smith v. Block, 784 F.2d 993, 996 n.4 (9th Cir. 1986) ("in reviewing a district court decision, we may affirm on any ground finding support in the record").

⁵ "If a complaint is accompanied by attached documents, . . . these documents are part of the complaint and may be considered in determining whether the plaintiff can prove any set of facts in support of the claim." Durning v. First Boston Corp., 815 F.2d 1265, 1267 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 944 (1987).

Accordingly, we affirm the district court's judgment.⁷

[*10] AFFIRMED.

End of Document

⁶ All fifteen claims in Heisen's complaint also refer to the Clayton Act, but do not cite to any specific section. Nevertheless, Heisen fails to state a claim under the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, because the complaint does not allege any conduct prohibited by the statute. See 15 U.S.C. § 13\(a\) (prohibiting price discrimination); 15 U.S.C. § 14 (prohibiting exclusive dealing contracts).

⁷ In his briefs, Heisen also argues that the district court erred by (1) failing to consider all of his causes of action, (2) failing to consider his request for punitive sanctions against opposing counsel, (3) failing to consider that Heisen appeared pro se, (4) threatening to sanction Heisen if he filed future actions against the same defendants, (5) denying discovery, and (6) depriving Heisen of his rights to a jury trial and to due process. We have considered these issues and conclude that they are meritless.

Phoenix Bit & Tool v. Texaco

Court of Appeals of Texas, Fourteenth District, Houston

June 9, 1994, Rendered ; June 9, 1994, Filed

No. B14-93-00158-CV

Reporter

879 S.W.2d 277 *; 1994 Tex. App. LEXIS 1344 **

PHOENIX BIT & TOOL, INC., Appellant v. TEXACO INC., TEXACO PRODUCING INC., TEXACO OILS INC., FOUR STAR OIL AND GAS COMPANY, AND TEXACO SERVICES INC., Appellees

Subsequent History: Writ denied by, 12/08/1994

Rehearing of writ of error overruled, 01/12/1995

Prior History: [1] On Appeal from the 157th District Court. Harris County, Texas. Trial Court Cause No. 90-65585. Norman R. Lee, Judge.

Disposition: Affirmed

Core Terms

drill bit, exclusive right, trial court, dispose, seller, summary judgment, mediation, quantity, parties, output contract, anti trust law, unenforceable, competitors, blanket order, ambiguous, mutuality, buyer, summary judgment motion, contracts, construe, contends, buy

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review

HN1 Summary Judgment, Burdens of Proof

In reviewing a summary judgment, the appellate court must determine whether the movant has shown that there is no genuine issue of material fact and that it is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. In deciding whether or not there is a disputed fact issue, the court must take as true all evidence favorable to the non-movant, indulging all reasonable inferences and resolving all doubts in the non-movant's favor.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Pretrial Matters > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Validity of ADR Methods

Estate, Gift & Trust Law > ... > Conservators & Guardians > Conservators > General Overview

Family Law > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Mediation

HN2 [down arrow] Alternative Dispute Resolution, Validity of ADR Methods

See Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 154.002 (1994).

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Ambiguities & Contra Proferentem > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > General Overview

Contracts Law > Defenses > Ambiguities & Mistakes > General Overview

HN3 [down arrow] Contract Interpretation, Ambiguities & Contra Proferentem

Where there is no ambiguity, the construction of a contract is a question of law for the court. In interpreting contracts, the primary concern is to ascertain and give effect to the intentions of the parties as expressed in the instrument.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

HN4 [down arrow] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

See Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 15.05\(c\) (1987).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > Output, Exclusive & Requirements Agreements

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Output & Requirements Contracts

HN5 [down arrow] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

An output contract measures the quantity to be sold by an amount equal to the seller's total good-faith output and even if it requires the sale of products exclusively to one buyer, it is usually not a violation of Texas antitrust laws. An ordinary supply contract measures the quantity to be sold by stating a specific, fixed amount and such a contract requiring the sale of the product to one buyer may violate antitrust laws.

Contracts Law > Defenses > Ambiguities & Mistakes > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > General Overview

HN6[] Defenses, Ambiguities & Mistakes

A written instrument is not ambiguous if it is so worded that it can be given a certain or definite legal meaning or interpretation.

Counsel: Robert D. Lemon of Perryton, TX, John Sullivan of Denver, CO., for appellant.

William T. Hankinson, Lori L. Dalton of Dallas, TX, for appellees.

Judges: Panel consists of Justices Sears, Lee, and Morse (sitting by designation).

Opinion by: ROBERT E. MORSE, JR.

Opinion

[*278] MAJORITY OPINION

This is a summary judgment case. Appellant, Phoenix Bit & Tool, Inc., brought a breach of contract suit against appellees, claiming that a contract gave appellant the exclusive right to purchase used drill bits. Appellees, Texaco Inc., Texaco Producing Inc., Texaco Oils Inc., Four Star Oil and Gas Company, and Texaco Services Inc., moved for summary judgment and the trial court granted this motion. Appellant raises one point of error. We affirm.

[*279] In 1986, Texaco sent out an invitation for bids on a proposed blanket order covering the sale of used drill bits. Texaco awarded the contract to Phoenix and a blanket order, dated September 16, 1986, was prepared by Texaco providing that it covered the following material: "Such quantities [*2] of used drill bits in various sizes, that Seller may want to dispose of from the Denver, Los Angeles, Midland and New Orleans operations of [Texaco]." The contract effective term was from September 15, 1986 through March 15, 1987, but the contract continued thereafter. The contract provided for termination upon thirty days written notice. Phoenix gave Texaco thirty days written notice and the contract was terminated on March 8, 1991.

Phoenix filed suit against appellees, contending that the contract gave Phoenix the exclusive right to buy all of the used drill bits Texaco wanted to dispose of and that Phoenix was obligated to purchase such bits. The trial court entered a mediation scheduling order and the parties commenced mediation on September 11, 1992. The mediation was immediately recessed for three months because Texaco requested time to complete an audit of their records regarding used drill bits sold by Texaco. On this same day, Texaco filed a motion for summary judgment, which the court granted.

In point of error one, Phoenix contends the trial court erred in granting Texaco's motion for summary judgment. Under this broad point, Phoenix presents the following arguments: [*3] (1) the trial court violated Texas public policy, as stated in Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. 154.002, 154.003, in granting Texaco's motion pending the results of an on-going mediation proceeding which the court had ordered on its own motion; (2) the rules of construction for an unambiguous contract call for an interpretation granting the buyer the exclusive right to purchase such used drill bits that the seller may want to dispose of; (3) the exclusive right to purchase does not render the contract illegal and unenforceable pursuant to the Texas antitrust statute; (4) the intent of the parties under the contract must be drawn exclusively from the language used in the contract and not from extrinsic evidence; and (5) alternatively, the contract is ambiguous and genuine issues of material fact were present regarding the intent of the parties to the contract.

HN1[] In reviewing a summary judgment, we must determine whether the movant has shown that there is no genuine issue of material fact and that it is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Nixon v. Mr. Property Mgmt. Co., 690 S.W.2d 546, 548-49 \(Tex. 1985\). In deciding whether or not there is a disputed fact issue, we must take [4] as true all evidence favorable to the non-movant, indulging all reasonable inferences and resolving all doubts in the non-movant's favor. Id. at 549.

Phoenix first claims the trial court violated public policy by granting summary judgment while mediation was ongoing. Public policy regarding mediation is stated in the following statute:

HN2[[↑]] It is the policy of this state to encourage the peaceable resolution of disputes, with special consideration given to disputes involving the parent-child relationship, including the mediation of issues involving conservatorship, possession, and support of children, and the early settlement of pending litigation through voluntary settlement procedures.

Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. 154.002 (Vernon Supp. 1994). Section 154.003 imposes upon all trial and appellate courts the responsibility of implementing this policy. Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. 154.003 (Vernon Supp. 1994). Other than these statutes, Phoenix admits there is no law supporting its argument.

Appellees respond that Phoenix waived this argument by failing to present it to the trial court and that no authority supports this argument. We agree with appellees that [5] Phoenix's argument is without merit. Phoenix did not seek an order staying the summary judgment proceedings pending the outcome of mediation. Furthermore, summary judgment is a method for orderly disposition of cases.

Phoenix next claims that the rules of construction require a finding that the contract granted Phoenix the exclusive right to purchase Texaco's used drill bits. Both parties contend the contract is unambiguous. HN3[[↑]] [*280] Where there is no ambiguity, the construction of a contract is a question of law for the court. Westwind Exploration, Inc. v. Homestate Sav. Ass'n, 696 S.W.2d 378, 382 \(Tex. 1985\). In interpreting contracts, the primary concern is to ascertain and give effect to the intentions of the parties as expressed in the instrument. Zieben v. Platt, 786 S.W.2d 797, 800 (Tex. App.--Houston [14th Dist.] 1990, no writ).

Based on these rules of construction, Phoenix contends that the language of this contract expresses the intent that Phoenix was to have an exclusive right to purchase drill bits that Texaco wanted to sell. In support of this contention, Phoenix cites Ives v. City of Willimantic, 121 Conn. 408, 185 A. 427 \(Conn. 1936\). In Ives [6] , the city contracted to sell "such quantity of ice . . . as the city owns or shall harvest [in] that period of time . . ." Id. at 427. Because the contract stated that the quantity of ice to be sold was the amount the city "shall harvest," the Connecticut court held that the city was only bound to sell ice to Ives if any ice was harvested, but that the plain language of the contract did not require the city to harvest any ice. Id. at 428.

This case does not support appellant's position. In fact, this case supports appellees' argument that Texaco was not obligated to sell any, much less all, used drill bits to appellant. The language of the blanket order indeed does not require Texaco to sell Phoenix such drill bits as it shall dispose of. Rather, the contract allows Texaco to sell Phoenix such drills as it wants to dispose of. Thus, the plain language of this order reveals that there was no intent to require Texaco to sell all used drill bits to Phoenix. Absent any indication of intent, we may not imply an obligation on Texaco's part to sell drill bits exclusively to Phoenix. Were we to imply an obligation by Texaco to sell all used drill bits exclusively to [7] Phoenix, as Phoenix suggests, we would be revising the order and creating an agreement different from that actually entered by the parties. We are not at liberty to do this. See General Am. Indem. Co. v. Pepper, 161 Tex. 263, 339 S.W.2d 660, 661 \(1960\).

Appellees argue that the plain language of the contract reveals no mutuality of obligations. In support of this argument, Texaco cites Texarkana Casket Co. v. Binswanger & Co., 3 F.2d 611 \(E.D. Tex. 1924\) and Streich v. General Motors Corp., 5 Ill. App. 2d 485, 126 N.E.2d 389 \(1955\). Texaco did not expressly raise this specific argument in its motion for summary judgment and thus, lack of mutuality may not be raised for the first time in the appellate court. See McConnell v. Southside Indep. School Dist., 858 S.W.2d 337, 341 \(Tex. 1993\).

Phoenix next challenges the summary judgment on the ground that an exclusive right to purchase does not render the contract illegal and unenforceable pursuant to the Texas antitrust statute. Although appellees raised this illegality argument in the trial court, they do not argue it on appeal as a ground for affirming the judgment.

The statute upon which appellees relied in [8] the trial court HN4[↑] was Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. 15.05\(c\) (Vernon 1987), which provides:

(c) It is unlawful for any person to sell, lease, or contract for the sale or lease of any goods, whether patented or unpatented, for use, consumption, or resale or to fix a price for such use, consumption, or resale or to discount from or rebate upon such price, on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the purchaser or lessee shall not use or deal in the goods of a competitor or competitors of the seller or lessor, where the effect of the condition, agreement, or understanding may be to lessen competition substantially in any line of trade or commerce.

We first note that this statute does not make unlawful any required exclusivity of a seller's commitment to deal only with the purchaser, and not the purchaser's competitors. Thus, we find that the language of the statute itself indicates its inapplicability to our facts. Furthermore, the case law construing this statute reveals another basis for upholding the trial court's judgment.

In Brown v. Faulk, 231 S.W.2d 743, 744 (Tex. Civ. App.--San Antonio 1950, orig. proceeding), the appellant alleged that a note and [9] chattel mortgage were void because it [*281] required appellant to sell all of his milk to appellee. The court disagreed, saying:

A producer of milk has the right to contract or sell all of his production to one person if he sees fit to do so, and such an agreement is not an illegal contract in the absence of a showing that the intention was to form a monopoly or an illegal combination in restraint of trade.

Id. at 745. The court also noted that the chattel mortgage contained no agreement regarding price and did not bind appellee to purchase the milk. Id. at 744.

In Cooper v. Fortney, 703 S.W.2d 217 (Tex. App.--Houston [14th Dist.] 1985, writ ref'd n.r.e.), a panel of this court noted the differences between output contracts and ordinary supply contracts. HNS[↑] An output contract "measures the quantity to be sold by an amount equal to the seller's total good-faith output" and even if it requires the sale of products exclusively to one buyer, it is usually not a violation of Texas antitrust laws. Id. at 219. An ordinary supply contract "measures the quantity to be sold by stating a specific, fixed amount" and such a contract requiring the sale [10] of the product to one buyer may violate antitrust laws. Id. Even if the court determines that the contract is an ordinary supply contract, it does not violate antitrust laws unless its provisions unduly restrict trade. See id.

The blanket order did contain information about price, but it did not bind appellees to sell all used drill bits or to sell all of them to appellant. Consequently, we do not find his order to be either an output contract or an ordinary supply contract. We have scrutinized the provisions of the order and we find no intention to form a monopoly or an illegal combination in restraint of trade. In fact, the order does not even require appellees to sell anything to appellant. Thus, we find no illegality or violation of the Texas antitrust statute and this ground cannot support the summary judgment.

Appellant also complains that Texaco relied on inadmissible extrinsic evidence that the trial court should not have considered in ruling on the motion for summary judgment. Even if it was error for the trial court to consider the affidavits submitted by Texaco, any such error is harmless because the lack of intention to create an exclusive obligation to sell drill [11] bits to Phoenix is apparent from the express language of the order. See Medical Towers, Ltd v. St. Luke's Episcopal Hosp., 750 S.W.2d 820, 822-24 (Tex. App.--Houston [14th Dist.] 1988, writ denied).

Finally, Phoenix argues in the alternative that the contract is ambiguous and that genuine facts issues exist regarding the parties' intent. HN6[↑] A written instrument is not ambiguous if it is so worded that it can be given a certain or definite legal meaning or interpretation. Coker v. Coker, 650 S.W.2d 391, 393 \(Tex. 1983\). We find no error by the trial court in determining that the provisions of the blanket order could be given a definite legal meaning. We overrule appellant's point of error.

We affirm the judgment of the trial court.

Robert E. Morse, Jr.

Justice

Judgment rendered and Majority and Dissenting Opinions filed June 9, 1994.

Panel consists of Justices Sears, Lee, and Morse (sitting by designation).

Dissent by: NORMAN R. LEE

Dissent

DISSENTING OPINION

Because I disagree with the majority's holding that the contract does not give appellant the exclusive right to buy all used drill bits that appellees dispose of, I respectfully dissent. I would hold [12] that appellees failed to meet their summary judgment burden of proving (1) that the contract does not give appellant the exclusive right to buy the used drill bits appellees dispose of, and (2) failed to prove that such a construction renders the contract unenforceable.

The contract in question is a form "sale order" covering "sale of [the following materials] on 'as is - where is' basis:" MATERIAL: Such quantities of used drill bits in various sizes, that Seller, may want to dispose of from the Denver, Los Angeles, Midland and New Orleans operations of:
Texaco Inc. - Producing Texaco Producing Inc. Texaco Oils Inc. Getty Oil Company

Appellees asserted in their motion for summary judgment the following arguments:

- (1) the language of the contract is inconsistent with appellant's position that it had [*282] the exclusive right to purchase used drill bits from appellees; and
- (2) even if the contract does give appellant the exclusive right to purchase used drill bits from appellees, the contract is illegal and unenforceable under the Texas Antitrust Statute, Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. 15.05\(c\) (Vernon 1968).

In support of its claim that [13] the contract did not give appellant the exclusive right to purchase used drill bits, appellees attached the affidavits of four of its employees, including Richard N. Johnson, the custodian of the blanket orders and a senior buyer in the Purchasing Department, J. E. Toumbs, a senior clerk, H. O. Baker, a materials coordinator, and T. W. LeBlanc, a yard foreman. Johnson testified that appellees did not intend to give appellant an exclusive right to purchase used drill bits. Toumbs testified that, on two occasions, appellant refused to purchase drill bits offered. Baker testified that communication with appellant was difficult, they often failed to keep appointments, and they were selective about the drill bits they would purchase. LeBlanc testified that appellant failed to keep appointments, was often late, and that he was never advised that appellant was to only company to whom he could sell used drill bits.

We may not consider any of this summary judgment proof because to do so would violate the rules of contract construction. In construing a contract, we are to "take the wording of the instrument, considering the same in the light of the surrounding circumstances, and apply the pertinent [14] rules of construction. . ." Sun Oil Co. v. Madeley, 626 S.W.2d 726, 731 \(Tex. 1981\). If the contract is unambiguous, we must give effect to the parties' intention as expressed or as is apparent in the writing. Id. Usually, the intention of the parties will be determined from the instrument alone because it is the objective, and not the subjective, intent that controls. Id. Parol evidence is inadmissible to render a contract ambiguous, which on its face can be given a definite legal meaning. Id. at 732. Neither party contends the contract is ambiguous; therefore, we may not consider the extrinsic evidence attached to appellees' motion. See id.

Furthermore, we should construe a contract in such a way as to make the obligation imposed on the parties mutually binding. Portland Gasoline Co. v. Superior Marketing Co., 150 Tex. 533, 243 S.W.2d 823, 824 \(Tex. 1951\). This coincides with the rule that courts should construe contracts in a way that renders them effective, rather than ineffective. Id.; Harris v. Rowe, 593 S.W.2d 303, 306 \(Tex. 1980\).

Appellant argues that if we construe this contract to deny an exclusive right to buy appellees' used drill bits, 15 there is a lack of mutuality of obligation rendering it unenforceable and such a construction would violate the rules of contract construction. The majority holds that the contract does not give appellant the exclusive right to buy all used drill bits appellees want to dispose of. This holding means that appellees are not obligated to sell the drill bits to appellant, but may sell to whomever they wish. Where a contract imposes no definite obligation on one party to perform, it lacks mutuality. Bank of El Paso v. T.O. Stanley Boot Co., Inc., 809 S.W.2d 279, 285 \(Tex. App.--El Paso 1991\), aff'd in part, rev'd in part on other grounds, 847 S.W.2d 218 \(Tex. 1992\). I disagree with the majority's approach because it renders the contract unenforceable for lack of mutuality.

Appellant contends that the language of the contract creates an output contract. An output contract is one in which the quantity of materials sold consists of the seller's good faith output. [Cooper v. Fortney, 703 S.W.2d 217, 219 \(Tex. App.--Houston \[14th Dist.\] 1985, writ ref'd n.r.e.\)](#). Even if an output contract requires the seller to sell only to one buyer, it is usually not violative of Texas antitrust 16 laws. Because this contract gives appellant the right to purchase those used drill bits that appellees want to dispose of, I would hold that the contract in question is an output contract, for which the quantity of drill bits sold consists of appellees' good faith output, i.e. the bits they decide to sell.

Appellees argue that, even if the contract is an output contract, it is illegal and unenforceable because it violates Texas antitrust laws. Texas antitrust law makes unlawful any contract in restraint of trade or commerce. Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. 15.05\(a\) *283 (Vernon 1987). The portion of the statute upon which appellees relied in their motion provides:

(c) It is unlawful for any person to sell, lease, or contract for the sale or lease of any goods, whether patented or unpatented, for use, consumption, or resale or to fix a price for such use, consumption, or resale or to discount from or rebate upon such price, on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the purchaser or lessee shall not use or deal in the goods of a competitor or competitors of the seller or lessor, where the effect of the condition, agreement, or understanding may be to lessen competition 17 substantially in any line of trade or commerce.

Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. 15.05\(c\) (Vernon 1987) (emphasis added). The italicized portion of this statute indicates that a contract is unlawful if it precludes the buyer from dealing in the goods of competitors of the seller. This section is inapplicable to the contract here because there is no condition limiting appellant's right to deal with any of appellees' competitors.

In conclusion, I would find that appellees failed to meet their burden of establishing that the contract does not give appellant the exclusive right to purchase appellees' used drill bits. Likewise, appellees failed to establish that the contract violates Texas antitrust laws. Therefore, I would sustain appellant's point of error, reverse the judgment, and remand the cause for trial.

Norman R. Lee

Justice

Judgment rendered and Majority and Dissenting Opinions filed June 9, 1994.

Panel consists of Justices Sears, Lee, and Morse (Morse, J. sitting by designation).

Advo, Inc. v. Philadelphia Newspapers

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania

June 10, 1994, Filed; June 13, 1994, Entered

CIVIL ACTION NO. 93-3253

Reporter

854 F. Supp. 367 *; 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7987 ; 1994-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,663

ADVO, INC., Plaintiff, v. PHILADELPHIA NEWSPAPERS, INC. d/b/a PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER and PHILADELPHIA DAILY NEWS, Defendant

Core Terms

advertising, Circulars, competitors, customers, newspaper, delivery, prices, monopolize, monopoly power, Inquirer, players, preprinted, mail, probability, percent, advertising material, anti trust law, alternate, predatory, markets, market share, monopoly, printed, high density, distribute, leveraging, discount, targeted, households, recoupment

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN1 [down arrow] Attempts to Monopolize, Sherman Act

The Sherman Act makes it unlawful for every person to monopolize, or attempt to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States. 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Legal Entitlement

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN2 [down arrow] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Genuine Disputes

Summary judgment is appropriate if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). At the summary judgment stage, the court does not weigh the evidence and determine the truth of the matter. Rather it determines whether or not there is a genuine issue for trial. The moving party has the burden of showing there are no genuine issues of material fact, and the non-moving party may not rely merely upon bare assertions, conclusory allegations or suspicions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN3 Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

A significantly larger market share than 55 percent is required to demonstrate prima facie monopoly power. Monopoly power is the power to force a purchaser to do something that a purchaser would not do in a competitive market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN4 Sherman Act, Scope

The Sherman Act does not proscribe anti-competitive unilateral conduct that falls shy of threatened monopolization. Section 2 of the Sherman Act makes the conduct of a single firm unlawful only when it actually monopolizes or dangerously threatens to do so. The antitrust laws protect competition, not competitors. Consumers benefit from unilateral competition. To hold that the antitrust laws protect competitors from the loss of profits due to price competition would, in effect, render illegal any decision by a firm to cut prices in order to increase market share.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN5 Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

Application of the antitrust laws to price competition requires caution to avoid costly, mistaken inferences. Courts should treat with great skepticism complaints by competitors who are injured by low prices that customers adore, when the customers are content.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN6 Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

A prerequisite to hold a competitor liable under the antitrust laws for charging low prices is a demonstration that the competitor had a dangerous probability of recouping its investment in below-cost prices. In other words, a successful monopolist must be able to sustain charging supracompetitive prices. It is not enough simply to achieve monopoly power, as monopoly pricing may breed quick entry by new competitors eager to share in the excess profits. Evidence of below-cost pricing is not alone sufficient to permit an inference of probable recoupment and injury to competition. The success of any predatory scheme depends on maintaining monopoly power long enough to recoup the predator's losses and to harvest some additional gain.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN7 Sherman Act, Scope

The Sherman Act is not to protect businesses from the working of the market; it is to protect the public from the failure of the market. That below-cost pricing may impose painful losses on its target is of no moment to the antitrust laws if competition is not injured.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN8 Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

A seller faced with a choice of making a sale at above marginal costs but below total costs, or foregoing the sale, will choose to make the sale. Such a profit maximizing sale cannot be indicative of predatory intent.

Counsel: [1] For ADVO, INC., PLAINTIFF: JOHN R. EMBICK, KITTREDGE, DONLEY, ELSON, FULLEM AND EMBICK, PHILA, PA, MARGARET M. ZWISLER, WASHINGTON, DC, DIMITRI J. NIONAKIS, EDWARD B. SCHWARTZ, DAVID T. SMUTNY, HOWREY & SIMON, WASHINGTON, DC.

For PHILADELPHIA NEWSPAPERS, INC. d/b/a PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER, PHILADELPHIA DAILY NEWS, DEFENDANT: JUDY L. LEONE, ROBERT C. HEIM, RICHARD C. RIZZO, DECHERT, PRICE & RHOADS, PHILA, PA, DONALD T. PETROSA, PETRIKIN, WELLMAN, DAMICO, CARNEY & BROWN, MEDIA, PA.

Judges: KATZ

Opinion by: BY THE COURT; MARVIN KATZ

Opinion

[*369] ORDER AND MEMORANDUM

AND NOW, this 10th day of June, 1994, upon consideration of the parties' submissions, and after a hearing, it is hereby ORDERED that Defendant Philadelphia Newspapers Inc.'s Motion for Summary Judgment is GRANTED on the federal claims and the state law claims are DISMISSED without prejudice.

I. FACTS

A. Overview

A newspaper chain is competing to distribute advertising circulars in the Philadelphia area with the country's largest full-service direct mail marketing firm. The newspaper chain's Motion for Summary Judgment raises the viability of its competitor's predatory pricing claim in this antitrust case. I find that there [2] is no showing of a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power in the relevant market.

Plaintiff Advo, Inc. (Advo) brings claims against defendant Philadelphia Newspapers, Inc. (PNI) for allegedly violating Section 2 of the Sherman Act.¹ Advo accuses PNI of monopolizing and attempting to monopolize the market for high density distribution of printed Advertising Materials² and Advertising Circulars.³ Compl. PP 30-49.

¹ HN1  The Sherman Act makes it unlawful for "every person [to] monopolize, or attempt to monopolize . . . any part of the trade or commerce among the several States." 15 U.S.C. § 2.

² Advo defines the "Advertising Materials market" as the market for the distribution of all printed advertising materials including Run of Press (ROP) advertising and advertising circulars. Compl. P 31.

Plaintiff also brings a claim against PNI for tortious interference with Advo's contractual relations with its customers in violation of state law. Compl. PP 50-55.

[3] Advo distributes printed advertising materials to households via mail and hand deliveries. Compl. P 4. Advo is the nation's largest full-service direct mail marketing company. Def. Ex. 12. Advo's revenues in fiscal year 1993 were $ 911 million. Stipulated Facts, P 3. Advo delivers more than 24 billion pieces of advertising annually, and reaches, on average, more than 53 million households each week. Def. Ex. 12. In October, 1992, Advo acquired CBA Shared Mail Systems, Inc. (CBA). Compl. P 26. Prior to the acquisition, CBA competed against Advo in the Advertising Circulars market. Compl. P 22.

Defendant PNI owns and operates the Philadelphia Inquirer (Inquirer) and the Philadelphia Daily News (Daily News). Stipulated Facts, P 12. The Inquirer and the Daily News are the only two newspapers that cover the entire eight county greater Philadelphia area.⁴ Pl.'s Ex. 31, p. 2. Run-of-Press (ROP) advertisements are the advertisements that are printed on newsprint and appear directly on a newspaper's editorial pages. Compl. P 10. PNI serves many different ROP advertisers. Pl.'s Ex. 31, p. 5. No ROP advertiser accounts for more than five (5) percent of PNI's ROP advertising revenues. Id. [4]

Broadly stated, this action concerns the market for high density advertising in the eight county greater Philadelphia area. Compl. P 31, 44. For purposes of this motion, [370] the court examines three markets: 1) the Advertising Circulars market; 2) the ROP advertising market; and 3) the Advertising Materials market, including both advertising circulars and ROP advertisements. Printed advertising materials are distributed through newspapers, by direct mail and by hand delivery to consumers in the Philadelphia market. Compl. P 6. Participants in these markets seek distribution of their circulars to 95 percent of the households in a targeted area. See Def. Ex. 8; Pl.'s Ex. 8, DiMartino Dep. Ex. 13, p. 6.

Advo delivers circulars in one of two ways: either shared mail or hand delivery. Companies that make deliveries [5] in this manner are known in the trade as alternate delivery companies. Shared mail combines the circulars of multiple advertisers in one mailed package. Compl. P 12. Shared mail and hand delivery packages can be targeted to specific zip codes for delivery. Compl. P 12. The mix of circulars in these packages may vary from week to week and from place to place. Compl. P 14.

Traditionally, newspapers included preprinted advertising circulars as inserts in their papers. These circulars, however, only reached subscribers and other purchasers of the papers. Consequently, traditional newspaper advertising circular distribution could not offer advertisers the desired 95% saturation rates achieved by alternate delivery companies. Pl.'s Ex. 8, DiMartino Dep. Ex. 13, p. 6. In response to the success of alternate delivery companies, newspaper companies like PNI developed programs to provide advertisers with circular distribution to non-newspaper subscribers by mail and/or hand-delivery. Compl. P 18. These programs generally are known as Total Market Coverage (TMC) plans. Id. By 1991, ten of twelve of PNI's newspaper competitors had implemented TMC programs. Pl.'s Ex. 8, DiMartino Dep. Ex. [6] 13, p. 6.

Principal advertisers or "base players" are key to a firm's successful entry into the Advertising Circulars market.⁵ An alternate delivery company will not typically enter a new market without securing a base player. See Pl.'s Ex. 15, Kamerschen Dep., p. at 146.

³ The "Advertising Circulars market" is the market for the high density distribution of preprinted advertising circulars. Compl. P 44; see also Pl.'s Ex. 31 at 10. Plaintiff's complaint asserts the two monopolization claims in the alternative. See Compl. P 41. The second count asserts that PNI used its monopoly position in the ROP market to monopolize the "Advertising Circulars market" as defined above. Compl. 47.

⁴ The eight county greater Philadelphia area consists of Bucks, Chester, Delaware, Montgomery and Philadelphia counties in Pennsylvania, and Burlington, Camden and Gloucester counties in New Jersey. Compl. P 8.

⁵ A base player is an advertiser who advertises every single week and whose advertising circular weighs at least half an ounce. Pl.'s Ex. 15, Kamerschen Dep., p. 135. Super Fresh, Acme, Bradlees, Circuit City and Kmart are examples of base player advertisers. Stipulated Facts, P 22.

In the greater Philadelphia area, there are a limited number of base players. Pl.'s Ex. 31 at p. 21. Acme and Super Fresh, two supermarket chains, are the only base players who on their own "could support an alternate delivery program" in the Advertising Circulars market.⁶ Pl.'s Mem. at 11. Acme and Super Fresh are both Advo alternate delivery customers. PNI stated that until it obtains a base player for the Pennsylvania suburbs it will not be able to make a profit [7] on its TMC program. Pl.'s Ex. 26, Rossi Dep. at 355.

Base players typically utilize ROP advertising in addition to preprinted circular distribution in their advertising plans. Base players use ROP advertising to build images, foster comparison shopping and to create multiple weekly presence. Pl.'s Ex. 31 at p. 10. In 1992, Super Fresh and Acme placed, respectively, $ 1,099,000 and $ 2,300,000 worth of ROP advertising with PNI. Id. at 34-35. Base players use advertising circulars principally as "impact" advertising to induce customers to purchase in a given week. Id. at 10.

B. Lost Accounts & Revenues

Since 1988, PNI's Inquirer has been Advo's principal competitor for the high density distribution of advertising circulars in the relevant geographic market. Compl. P 21. In [8] the years prior to 1991, the Inquirer lost substantial advertising dollars ($ 10 million) to alternate delivery competitors Advo and CBA. Pl.'s Ex. 8, DiMartino Dep. Ex. 13, p. 6. Plaintiff alleges that PNI used predatory pricing of PNI's ROP advertising [*371] to induce advertisers to use PNI's TMC program.⁷ Compl. P 24.

In 1991, PNI developed a TMC plan to enter the Advertising Circulars market. Pl.'s Ex. 8, DiMartino Dep. Ex. 13. The goal of this plan was to position PNI as the "one-stop buy" for both newspaper and non-newspaper advertising in the Delaware Valley market." [9] Id. at 5. At that time, PNI's biggest competitors in the Advertising Circulars market were Advo and CBA. Id. at 13.

PNI's TMC program was scheduled to begin in 1992. Id. at 3. The plan had three phases. Id. at 5, 20. The first phase required 18 to 24 months to develop and implement an alternate delivery network. Id. at 5, 10. This phase was categorized by PNI as "primarily defensive." Id. at 20, 22. In 1993, the TMC program was budgeted to lose $ 1.81 million. Def. Ex. 46, p. 325-26.

Plaintiff claims that the Inquirer sought to contract with CBA's and Advo's "base players" by offering these customers free or deeply discounted ROP advertising in conjunction with extremely discriminatorily low rates for distributing advertising circulars via PNI's TMC program. Through these offers, the Inquirer successfully induced Kmart, a principal CBA customer to cease doing business with CBA.⁸ Compl. P 24.

[10] Advo identified six present or former customers that it asserts PNI solicited in violation of the antitrust laws. Def. Ex. 20, p. 2 (Advo's Supp. Resp. to Def.'s Second Set of Interrogs. to Pl.).

PNI gave advertisers with large ROP contracts credit towards their ROP contract commitments if they participated in the TMC program.⁹ Def. Ex. 42. Special discounts were also targeted at key Advo/CBA customers. See, e.g., Pl.'s Ex. 22, Montgomery Dep. Ex. 6 (PNI proposal to Super Fresh), Ex. 24 (PNI proposal to Acme Markets). For example, the Sunday Inquirer has "Basic Food Special Rates." Under this rate schedule, PNI sells the first full page

⁶ PNI's National Account Sales Manager, Donald Montgomery, posited "that if you lost one (of the two accounts) you were in trouble but if you lost both you were out of business in Philadelphia." Pl.'s Ex. 22, Montgomery Dep. Ex. 15.

⁷ For purposes of this motion, the court assumes arguendo that to the extent that ROP advertising constitutes a separate market (the "ROP market") from the Advertising Circulars market, PNI has monopoly power over the ROP market. See Def.'s Mem., p. 33 n.24; see also, Pl.'s Ex. 8, DiMartino Dep. Ex. 13, p. 13 ("PNI, with advertising revenues of nearly $ 300 million, controls the dominant advertising mediums in the Philadelphia market.").

⁸ Advo does not assert a claim against PNI for soliciting Kmart in violation of the Sherman Act. See Def. Ex. 20, p. 2.

⁹ PNI maintains rate cards that list the standard ROP rates that PNI charges by the inch. Stipulated Facts, P 17.

of advertising to customers at the normal contract rate and sells the second page at a 50% discount. Pl.'s Ex. 22, Montgomery Dep. Ex. 16. PNI proposed that if Super Fresh used PNI's TMC program, it could receive a 50% discount on all Sunday Inquirer Food Section pages. Id. If Super Fresh accepted PNI's proposal, it would have raised its yearly advertising with PNI from $ 1,193,948.50 a year to $ 3,017,330.50 a year. Id. While PNI encouraged linking ROP advertising with its TMC program, see Pl. Ex. 22, Montgomery Dep. Ex. 15, there [11] is no evidence in the record that advertisers were denied ROP contracts if they failed to participate in PNI's TMC program. See Def. Ex. 35.

Advo alleges that PNI targeted Super Fresh with predatory pricing. Compl. P 27. PNI offered to distribute preprinted Super Fresh circulars for $ 29.00 per thousand to nonsubscribers and $ 32.00 per thousand for distribution by inserted preprinted circulars in the newspapers. Def. Ex. 20, p. 3. In response, Advo was forced to drop its price (from $ 44.00 per thousand to $ 36.00 per thousand) in order to maintain the Super Fresh contract. Def. Ex. 20, p. 3. Thus, in order to maintain the Super Fresh account, Advo sustained a loss of revenue. While PNI's solicitation of Super Fresh resulted in a "direct and substantial decrease in profits for Advo," it did not cause Advo to operate its contract with Super Fresh at a loss. Def. Ex. 20, p. 3; Def. Ex. 19, p. 462.

[12] Advo alleges that PNI targeted Advo customers Circuit City and Gordon Furniture. Circuit City contracted with the Inquirer for its high density distribution of advertising circulars. Def. Ex. 20, p. 4-5. Due to PNI's solicitations, Gordon Furniture moved a substantial amount of its preprinted advertising [*372] circular distribution business from Advo to PNI. Id. at 4.

The plaintiff alleges that PNI also enlisted other competing newspapers to distribute the Acme account. Compl. P 29. While Advo did retain the Acme account, the plaintiff maintains that it did not receive an anticipated four to five percent rate increase from Acme due to PNI's conduct. Def. Ex. 19, p. 194-95; Def. Ex. 20, p. 4. Nevertheless, Advo is currently making a profit of between $ 250,000 and $ 500,000 on the Acme account. Id. Similarly, the plaintiff alleges that it was unable to secure rate increases from Bradlees and Fleming Foods due to PNI's actions. Def. Ex. 20, p. 5.

Advo asserts that if PNI continues to offer Advo customers "predatory rates for distribution of preprints and leveraging of its monopoly power in ROP by linking saving in ROP to distribution of preprints," the financial consequences "would [13] be so severe as to cause Advo to exit the Philadelphia market." Def. Ex. 31, p. 36.

C. Ease of Market Entry

Advo claims that the barriers to entry¹⁰ [14] in this market are high.¹¹ [15] Advo asserts that PNI maintains a 57.6 percent market share of the ROP market and a 40.1 percent market share of the Advertising Circulars market.

¹⁰ There are two alternative definitions of "entry barriers." Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 409' (1993 Supp.). Under the "Stiglerian" definition, a barrier to entry is identified by "additional long-run costs that were not incurred by incumbent firms but must be incurred by new entrants." Id. Under the "Bainin" definition, entry barriers are factors in the market that deter entry while permitting incumbent firms to earn monopoly returns. Id.

¹¹ The entry question focuses on whether competitors will choose to enter the relevant market in the event of supracompetitive pricing by PNI, not on whether this particular plaintiff would choose to reenter the market, if it first chooses to leave the Philadelphia market due to PNI's alleged predatory conduct. See Chillicothe Sand & Gravel v. Martin Marietta Corp., 615 F.2d 427, 431 (7th Cir. 1980) (monopoly pricing must be assessed in light of its effect on competition rather than on a competitor). Plaintiff's expert opines that predation "might" discourage entry. Pl.'s Ex. 25, Rapp Dep. p. 263; see also, Pl.'s Surreply Ex. 6, Rapp. Dep. Ex. 7 p. 602-03 ("The 'bodies on the lawn' problem does not mean that recoupment can never be disproved by invoking the structural facts. Rather, this line of research has shown that there are specific market circumstances in which invoking easy entry is not enough to dispel the possibility of recoupment from a predatory pricing campaign.") (emphasis added).

Advo choose not to reenter the Hartford market because "Hartford regional resources would be better spent developing more potentially lucrative opportunities in Boston, Long Island and New York City." Pl.'s Ex. 15, Kamerschen Dep. Ex. 3, p. 1. Plaintiff

¹² Pl.'s Ex. 31, Beyer Report Ex. 12. Advo/CBA does not participate in the ROP market and maintains a 31.3 percent market share of the Advertising Circulars market.¹³ Id. The other competitors in the relevant markets are other daily newspapers,¹⁴ [16] South Jersey Shoppers Guide, both paid and non-paid [*373] weekly newspapers, and Shoppers.¹⁵ Id.

In 1989, Super Fresh, an Advo customer, became unhappy with Advo. Def. Ex. 3, p. 128. Super Fresh contacted CBA about entering the Philadelphia market.¹⁶ Def. Ex. 5, pp. 20-22. At that time, CBA operated in the northern New Jersey and Long Island markets, but not in the Philadelphia market. Id. at 21-22. At Super Fresh's urging, CBA entered the Philadelphia market and within five months created a program that reached two million households each week.¹⁷ Def. Ex. 8. In the first five month period, CBA signed exclusive contracts with Caldor, Channel and Ames in addition to a contract with Super Fresh. Id. Within this same period, CBA also recruited Shop-Rite, Bradlees, Shop N Bag, Pharmor, Modell's, Thriftway, McCrory's, Sears, Rickel, JC Penney, and Mr. Goodbuys as regular customers. Id. A conclusory contention that entry is difficult¹⁸ is [17] no substitute for these facts.

In deposition testimony, Advo's President stated that a couple of months would be a reasonable period for someone to enter a new market and turn a profit. Def. Ex. 18, p. 114.

II. DISCUSSION

The plaintiff's complaint asserts three different claims against the defendant. In Count One, Advo accuses PNI of monopolizing and attempting to monopolize the market for high density distribution of printed Advertising Materials. In Count Two, Advo accuses PNI of monopolizing and attempting to monopolize the market for high density [18]

has not demonstrated a predicate for using the Hartford market experience as a predictor of the likelihood of reentry into the Philadelphia market if Advo withdraws due to PNI's predatory pricing. Plaintiff's withdrew from the Hartford market because of its "lackluster performance." Id. at 1, 8. After its exit, a new entrant became "quickly profitable." Id. at 8.

¹² High market share does not necessarily demonstrate an entry barrier. Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law § 518.3b (1993 Supp.); see also, Fineman v. Armstrong World Indus., Inc., 980 F.2d 171, 201 (3d Cir. 1992) ("As a matter of law, absent other relevant factors, a 55 percent market share will not prove the existence of monopoly power."), cert. denied, 122 L. Ed. 2d 677, 113 S. Ct. 1285 (1993).

¹³ The total estimated market revenues for the entire ROP market are $ 242,478,172. Pl.'s Ex. 31, Beyer Report Ex. 12. The total estimated market revenues for the entire Advertising Circulars market are $ 109,171,869. Id.

To the extent to which there is a single Advertising Materials market (combining the ROP and Advertising Circulars markets), the total estimated market revenues for this market would be $ 351,650,041. See Id. PNI's revenues of $ 183,357,403 equal a 52.2 percent share of this market. See Id. Advo's revenues of $ 34,161,665 equal a 9.7 percent market share.

¹⁴ Twelve major suburban daily newspaper serve the greater Philadelphia market. Pl.'s Ex. 31, Beyer Report Ex. 15, p. 1. Ten of these newspapers have entered the Advertising Circulars Market. Pl.'s Ex. 8, DiMartino Dep. Ex. 13, pp. 6 and 2-A. These newspapers have a 13.3 percent share of the Advertising Circulars market. Pl.'s Ex. 31, Beyer Report Ex. 12.

¹⁵ "Shoppers" are free weekly newspapers that contain less than 10 percent editorial content. Pl.'s Ex. 31, Beyer Report Ex. 15, p. 7-8. Shoppers have a 7.0 percent share of the Advertising Circulars market. Pl.'s Ex. 31, Beyer Report Ex. 12.

¹⁶ There are more than 100 alternate delivery companies of various sizes serving advertisers throughout the United States. Def. Ex. 33.

¹⁷ CBA's start-up costs were approximately $ 3 million. Pl.'s Ex. 20, Matzner Dep. at p. 53; Def. Ex. 34, p. 17. It took CBA 14 months to make a profit. Id. at 108. On October 14, 1992, Advo acquired CBA's Philadelphia operations for $ 4.93 million. Stipulated Facts, P 8.

¹⁸ Pl.'s Ex. 20, Matzner Dep. at p. 20.

distribution of printed Advertising Circulars. In Count Three, Advo accuses PNI of tortiously interfering with Advo's contractual relations with its customers in violation of state law. The court will address each count in turn.¹⁹

[19] A. Count One

To succeed on Count One, Advo must show that PNI possessed or could possess monopoly power "in the relevant market." Fineman v. Armstrong World Indus., Inc., 980 F.2d 171, 197 (3d Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 122 L. Ed. 2d 677, 113 S. Ct. 1285 (1993). "The relevant product market is defined as those commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes." Id. at 198.

The plaintiff has failed to show that a genuine issue of material fact exists as to the existence of the "Advertising Materials market" as defined in Count One of the Complaint. The plaintiff's expert report does not support the existence of an "Advertising Materials market." The plaintiff's expert has concluded that "there are two relevant product markets for the distribution of printed advertising in the Philadelphia area: ROP (run-of-press) advertising and preprinted advertising." [*374] Pl.'s Ex. 31 at 9 (emphasis added). These two product markets are different. Id. at 10. Advertisers use ROP advertising and preprinted advertising to achieve different goals. Id. The products [20] are not interchangeable. Additionally, the plaintiff summarizes its claim against the defendant as one of "predatory pricing" and use of PNI's "monopoly power over 'ROP,' or run-of-press, advertising to drive Advo from the eight-county Philadelphia metropolitan preprint market." Pl.'s Mem. p. 1 (emphasis added). These contentions go to Count Two which concerns monopolization of the Advertising Circulars market. Since no genuine issues of material fact in the record support the existence of a single "Advertising Materials" market, judgment in favor of the defendant on Count One is appropriate.

B. Count Two

In order to prevail on its monopolizing and attempt to monopolize the Advertising Circulars market claims as alleged in Court Two, the plaintiff must prove that (1) the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power. Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884, 890-91 (1993); Pastore v. Bell Tel. Co. of Pa., 24 F.3d 508 (Cir. 1994). For the purposes of this [21] motion, the court will assume arguendo that there are genuine issues of material facts with respect to the first two elements.²⁰ Accordingly, the issue is whether plaintiff has made a showing that PNI poses a dangerous probability of monopolizing the Philadelphia Advertising Circulars market. Brooke Group, Inc. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 125 L. Ed. 2d 168, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 2587 (1993); Pastore, 1994 WL 189478 at 5.

¹⁹ For an extensive discussion of the standard of review on a motion for summary judgment see Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986) and Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986). HN2 Summary judgment is appropriate if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). At the summary judgment stage, the court does not weigh the evidence and determine the truth of the matter. Rather it determines whether or not there is a genuine issue for trial. Anderson, 477 U.S. at 249. The moving party has the burden of showing there are no genuine issues of material fact, Gans v. Mundy, 762 F.2d 338, 340-41 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 1010, 88 L. Ed. 2d 467, 106 S. Ct. 537 (1985), and the non-moving party may not rely merely upon bare assertions, conclusory allegations or suspicions. Fireman's Ins. Co. of Newark v. DeFrense, 676 F.2d 965, 969 (3d Cir. 1982).

²⁰ The court notes that there is nothing inherently predatory about basing a discount on an advertiser's total volume of business. Each sale increases marginal profitability. See O. Hommel Co. v. Ferro Corp., 659 F.2d 340, 351 (3d Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 1017, 72 L. Ed. 2d 134, 102 S. Ct. 1711 (1982). Assuming that PNI intended to monopolize the relevant market, this fact alone is not sufficient to establish the dangerous probability of success that is the object of the Sherman Act's section 2 prohibition of attempts. Pastore, 1994 WL 189478 at 5.

[22] Advo has not shown that PNI's 40.1 percent market share establishes monopoly power in the relevant market.²¹ See Fineman, 980 F.2d at 201-02 HN3 (a significantly larger market share than 55 percent is required to demonstrate "prima facie monopoly power"). Monopoly power²² [24] is the power "to force a purchaser to do something that [the purchaser] would not do in a competitive market." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Serv., Inc., 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 2080 (1992). The major customers or "base players" in the Advertising Circulars market, such as the supermarkets and discounters, are highly sophisticated buyers who have significant countervailing economic power.²³ Plaintiff is a vibrant and aggressive competitor in the market.²⁴ It controls 31.3 percent of the Advertising Circulars market. It has the [*375] majority (5 out of 6) of the supermarket base players under contract. See Pl.'s Ex. 15, Montgomery Dep. Ex. 15. Moreover, the record demonstrates that when customers in the Advertising Circulars market are unhappy with one supplier they will seek and be able to acquire the services of [23] a new supplier, even if, as in the case of CBA, this new supplier is not presently competing in the market. See, e.g., Def. Ex. 5, Gasparro Dep. pp. 60-62.

Entry into the Advertising Circulars market is comparatively easy. See Def. Ex. 1, pp. 29, 81; Def. Ex. 18, p. 114;²⁵ Def. Ex. 39, P 7.²⁶ [27] Ten of PNI's twelve newspaper competitors have entered the market and obtained a 13.3 percent market share. Pl.'s Ex. 8, DiMartino Dep. Ex. 13, pp. 6 and 2-A; Pl.'s Ex. 31, Beyer Report Ex. 12. As ²¹ Although the size of a defendant's market share is a significant determinant of whether a defendant has a dangerous probability of successfully monopolizing the relevant market, it is not the exclusive factor. Barr Lab. Inc. v. Abbott Lab., 978 F.2d 98, 112 (3d Cir. 1992); see also, Fineman, 980 F.2d at 201-02. Other factors to be considered include the strength of competition, probable development of the industry, the barriers to entry, the nature of the anti-competitive conduct, and the elasticity of consumer demand. Id.

Because PNI has conceded for purposes of this motion that it has monopoly power over the ROP market, the court assumes that PNI already charges or can charge ROP advertisers whatever price it believes will maximize its profits.

²² "Market power" is a synonym for "monopoly power." International Distrib. Ctrs., Inc. v. Walsh Trucking, 812 F.2d 786, 791 n.3 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 482 U.S. 915, 96 L. Ed. 2d 676, 107 S. Ct. 3188 (1987).

²³ See discussion supra I.C.

²⁴ The court notes that when PNI undercut Advo's price, Super Fresh chose to remain an Advo customer, despite Advo's comparatively higher price. See Def. Ex. 20, p. 3. The inelasticity of demand in this market, i.e., relatively low sensitivity to just price as a determining factor in relationships, blunts predatory pricing as a weapon. See supra note 19 and pp. 11-12.

²⁵ Joseph P. Durrett, Advo's President and Chief Operating Officer, was asked the following question during his deposition:

So it's your testimony that you think a reasonable time period for someone coming into a market and starting up a new market they should be able to turn a profit within a couple of months?

Mr. Durrett answered: "Yes." Def. Ex. 18, p. 114.

²⁶ In an earlier antitrust action, Cassidy Distrib. Serv. v. Advo-Systems, Inc., 1987 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13737, Civ. Action No. 84-3464 (E.D. Pa.), Advo's expert concluded that:

Entry into the market is comparatively easy. Little initial capital is required relative to many other businesses. Mailing lists and operational expertise are available from many sources. Indeed, clients of ADVO could individually or in groups easily enter the production of a service much like that of ADVO if ADVO and competitors attempted to charge unreasonable, supracompetitive prices. In fact, entry into the "shared mail" business appears to be proliferating. This takes several forms. For example, third class bulk mailers have started new, directly competitive shared mail programs or have expanded prior programs. Newspapers are using third class mail for total market coverage ("TMC") of advertising inserts as a supplement to their regular subscriber base. And, in addition, many utilities and credit card companies use a form of "shared mail" with their billings.

Def. Ex. 39, P 7.

Although plaintiff claims that this finding is not supported by subsequent developments of the Advertising Circulars market, it points to no such developments which would vitiate the finding.

CBA demonstrated by creating in five months a program that reached two million Philadelphia households,²⁷ the market can successfully be entered in well under a year with the support of a single base player.²⁸ See Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law § 518.3b (1993 Supp.) (one year standard for determining ease of entry into market); [25] cf. Barr Lab. Inc. v. Abbott Lab., 978 F.2d 98, 113 (3d Cir. 1992) (six-month to two-year waiting period to enter pharmaceutical drug market is not significant barrier to entry). Moreover, with annual revenues in excess of $ 100,000,000, Pl.'s Ex. 31, Beyer Report Ex. 12, CBA's initial three million dollar investment required to enter the Advertising Circulars market is not significant.²⁹ Cf. International Distrib. Ctrs., Inc. v. Walsh Trucking, 812 F.2d 786, 792-93 (2d Cir.) (relatively large capital outlays for trucking industry do not constitute significant entry barriers), cert. denied, 482 U.S. 915, 96 L. Ed. 2d 676, 107 S. Ct. 3188 (1987). While plaintiff contends there are reputational barriers to entry, the record translates this notion into a lower level of abstraction, i.e., management and selling skills. Pl. Advo, Inc.'s Surreply to Def.'s Reply to Pl.'s Opp'n to Def.'s Mot. for Summ. J., Ex. 1 Matzner Dep. p. 54; Ex. 2 Schiro Dep. pp. 48-61, 73-75. Such competence is a prerequisite to enter any business, not a special or significant entry barrier [26] to this one.

The plaintiff's basic complaint is that PNI engaged in unilateral price competition causing [*376] Advo to lose profits. See Fineman v. Armstrong World Indus., Inc., 980 F.2d 171, 205 (3d Cir. 1992) [28] HN4 [↑] (the Sherman Act "does not proscribe anti-competitive unilateral conduct that falls shy of threatened monopolization"), cert. denied, 122 L. Ed. 2d 677, 113 S. Ct. 1285 (1993). Section 2 makes the conduct of a single firm unlawful only when it actually monopolizes or dangerously threatens to do so. Spectrum Sports, 113 S. Ct. at 890; Pastore, 1994 WL 189478 at 5. The antitrust laws protect competition, not competitors. Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977). Consumers benefit from unilateral competition. See Brook Group, 113 S. Ct. at 2588. "To hold that the antitrust laws protect competitors from the loss of profits due to . . . price competition would, in effect, render illegal any decision by a firm to cut prices in order to increase market share." Id.

HN5 [↑] Application of the antitrust laws to price competition requires caution to avoid costly, mistaken inferences. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 594, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986); [29] A.A. Poultry Farms, Inc. v. Rose Acre Farms, Inc., 881 F.2d 1396, 1403-04 (7th Cir. 1989) ("courts should treat with great skepticism complaints by competitors who are injured by low prices that customers adore, when the customers are content."), cert. denied, 494 U.S. 1019, 108 L. Ed. 2d 501, 110 S. Ct. 1326 (1990).

HN6 [↑] A prerequisite to hold a competitor liable under the antitrust laws for charging low prices is a demonstration that the competitor had a dangerous probability of recouping its investment in below-cost prices. Brook Group, 113 S. Ct. at 2588. In other words, a successful monopolist must be able to sustain charging supracompetitive prices. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., 475 U.S. at 589 ("It is not enough simply to achieve monopoly power, as monopoly pricing may breed quick entry by new competitors eager to share in the excess profits."). Evidence of below-cost pricing is not alone sufficient to permit an inference of probable recoupment and injury to competition. Brook Group, 113 S. Ct. at 2589. [30] "The success of any predatory scheme depends on maintaining monopoly power long enough to recoup the predator's losses and to harvest some additional gain." Id. at 2592.

²⁷ See discussion supra p. 11-12.

²⁸ PNI's failure to attract sufficient business in the Advertising Circulars market to make a profit demonstrates the competitive nature of the market.

²⁹ The case at bar is distinguishable from Kelco Disposal, Inc. v. Browning-Ferris Indus. of Vermont, Inc., 845 F.2d 404 (2d Cir. 1988), aff'd 492 U.S. 257, 106 L. Ed. 2d 219, 109 S. Ct. 2909 (1989). In Kelco, the costs of entering a $ 440,000 market exceeded $ 300,000. Id. at 408. Moreover, the Kelco defendants' market share was always greater than 55% and at one time was 100%. Id. at 409.

The court notes that CBA's initial three million dollar investment turned into a significant profit when CBA sold this part of its business to Advo for $ 4.93 million in October, 1992. Stipulated Facts, P 8.

Even if there is a genuine issue of material fact as to whether PNI operated its TMC program at a loss during the relevant time period,³⁰ the nature of the Advertising Circulars market suggests that recoupment is not a dangerous probability.³¹ See Id. at 2589 ("plaintiff must demonstrate that there is a likelihood that the predatory scheme alleged would cause a rise in prices above a competitive level that would be sufficient to compensate for the amounts expended on the predation."); A.A. Poultry Farms, 881 F.2d at 1401 ("Only if market structures makes recoupment feasible need a court inquire into the relations between price and cost."). Advo did not buy protection against vigorous competition in the market when it acquired CBA, its former competitor.³² See Spectrum Sports, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884 at 891-92 HN7[↑] (The Sherman Act "is not to protect businesses from the working of the market; it is to protect the public [31] from the failure of the [*377] market."); Brook Group, 113 S. Ct. at 2588 ("That below-cost pricing may impose painful losses on its target is of no moment to the antitrust laws if competition is not injured.").

[32] This is not a case of tying abuses by a monopolist. Cf. Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Serv., Inc., 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 (1992). A tying arrangement is "an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product, or at least that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier." Id. at 2079. While evidence suggests that PNI offered ROP discounts to companies that participated in the TMC program, nothing suggests that PNI required advertisers to purchase ROP advertising in order to participate in its TMC program. Additionally, advertisers who purchased ROP advertising in the Inquirer and Daily News were free to, and did, place their advertising circular business with PNI, Advo, and other competing companies.

The plaintiff cannot maintain this action based upon a monopoly leveraging theory. In order for Advo to prevail upon a theory of monopoly leveraging, Advo must prove more than a mere "competitive advantage" by PNI in the advertising circulars market based on its monopoly position in the ROP market. See Fineman, 980 F.2d at 204. [33] Advo would have to prove threatened or actual monopoly in the leveraged market (i.e., the advertising circulars market) by PNI to prevail.³³ Fineman, 980 F.2d at 206; see also Alaska Airlines, Inc. v. United Airlines, Inc., 948 F.2d 536, 547 (9th Cir. 1991) (the Berkey Photo Inc. V. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263 (2d Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1093, 62 L. Ed. 2d 783, 100 S. Ct. 1061 (1980), monopoly leveraging doctrine rejected as an ³⁰ The court notes that HN8[↑] "[a] seller faced with a choice of making a sale at above marginal costs but below total costs, or foregoing the sale, will choose to make the sale. Such a profit maximizing sale cannot be indicative of predatory intent." O. Hommel Co. v. Ferro Corp., 659 F.2d 340, 351 (3d Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 1017, 72 L. Ed. 2d 134, 102 S. Ct. 1711 (1982).

³¹ Any alleged "recoupment" from PNI raising its ROP rates at some later point is irrelevant. The ROP market is a separate and distinct market from the Advertising Circulars market. Because this court assumes that PNI has a monopoly over the ROP market, PNI already has the power to maximize its profits in the ROP market.

³² Advo's Philadelphia Region saw the acquisition of CBA as its "Single Greatest Strategic Accomplishment" for fiscal year 1993, because the acquisition eliminated a competitor. Def. Ex. 13. Advo's Atlantic Division also saw the acquisition of CBA as its "Single Greatest Strategic Accomplishment" for fiscal year 1993, because the acquisition "prevented [a] major pricing war." Def.'s Reply Br., Ex. 3.

³³ The Fineman court explicitly rejected the Second Circuit's monopoly leveraging theory articulated in Berkey Photo Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263 (2d Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1093, 62 L. Ed. 2d 783, 100 S. Ct. 1061 (1980). Fineman, 980 F.2d at 206.

SmithKline Corp. v. Eli Lilly & Co., 575 F.2d 1056 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 838, 58 L. Ed. 2d 134, 99 S. Ct. 123 (1978) is distinguishable from the case at bar. In SmithKline, all the drugs in issue were part of a single relevant product market - the cephalosporin market. 575 F.2d at 1065. Additionally, the defendant controlled from 100% to 89.8% of the cephalosporin market and the barriers to entering the market were substantial (plaintiff's entry required five-year $ 20,000,000 research and development program). Id. In contrast, in the case at bar, the ROP market and the Advertising Circulars market constitute two separate product markets and the defendant only maintains a 57.6 percent market share of the ROP market and a 40.1 percent market share of Advertising Circulars market. Pl.'s Ex. 31, Beyer Report Ex. 12. Additionally, the Advertising Circulars market entry barriers are much less severe.

independent theory of liability under Section 2). For the reasons enumerated above, there is no dangerous probability that a monopoly will be created by PNI's alleged leveraging conduct.

[34] C. Count Three

The state law claim for tortious interference is dismissed without prejudice because the court declines to exercise supplemental jurisdiction when the federal claims have been disposed of at this stage.³⁴ See Growth Horizons, Inc. v. Delaware County, 983 F.2d 1277, 1284 (3d Cir. 1993); 28 U.S.C. § 1367\(c\)\(3\).

III. CONCLUSION

The bottom line is that this is a case about price competition. The antitrust law does not protect competitors against even what may be perceived as unfair, unilateral price cutting below cost designed to drive those competitors out of business, [\[35\]](#) absent a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power. Because this result is harsh, a jury might reach a verdict which could not stand, based on sympathy, after an expensive trial. To avoid discouraging competition, courts are skeptical of antitrust claims where consumers and the public benefit from lower prices. Given the history of this market, its competitors and powerful buyers, it would be sheer speculation to posit a dangerous probability [\[*378\]](#) of defendant's achieving monopoly power in the Philadelphia area advertising circular distribution market.

BY THE COURT:

MARVIN KATZ, J.

End of Document

³⁴ The plaintiff's complaint asserts that this court has jurisdiction over the subject matter of this suit pursuant to 15 U.S.C. §§ 15 and 26 and 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331 (federal question jurisdiction), 1337 (commerce and antitrust jurisdiction) and 1367 (supplemental jurisdiction). Compl. P 2.

Breaux Bros. Farms, Inc. v. Teche Sugar Co.

United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit

June 10, 1994, Decided

No. 92-4968

Reporter

1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 40949 *; 1994 WL 16471176

BREAUX BROTHERS FARMS, INC., Plaintiff-Appellee, TECHE PLANTING CO., INC. and FRANCIS PAT ACCARDO, Plaintiffs-Appellees, Cross-Appellants, versus TECHE SUGAR CO., INC., SOUTH COAST SUGARS, INC., Defendants-Appellants, Cross-Appellees. TECHE PLANTING CO., INC., FRANCIS PAT ACCARDO, Plaintiffs-Appellees, Cross-Appellants, versus TECHE SUGAR CO., INC., SOUTH COAST SUGARS, INC., Defendants-Appellants, Cross-Appellees.

Prior History: [*1] Appeal from the United States District Court for the Western District of Louisiana. (6:90-CV-2536).

Breaux Bros. Farms v. Teche Sugar Co., 21 F.3d 83, 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 9596 \(5th Cir. La., 1994\)

Core Terms

district court, expenses, owner of land, lease, tying arrangement, disallowance, negotiations, ambiguity, reimburse, improved, renting, farmer, lessee, repair

Judges: Before WISDOM, HIGGINBOTHAM, and JONES, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

ON PETITION FOR REHEARING

PER CURIAM: *

Breaux Brothers Farms, Teche Planting, and Francis Pat Accardo sought relief from an alleged tying arrangement instituted by Teche Sugar and South Coast Sugars. Breaux Brothers entered the arrangement, and Teche Planting and Accardo refused to do so. We found the tying arrangement, if one existed, not to violate antitrust law. We deny rehearing for the reasons stated in our opinion.¹

[*2] Teche Planting and Accardo also seek augmentation of the amounts awarded to them by the district court for work performed before negotiations over renting the land failed. The district court found ambiguous the agreement

* Local Rule 47.5 provides: "The publication of opinions that have no precedential value and merely decide particular cases on the basis of well-settled principles of law imposes needless expense on the public and burdens on the legal profession." Pursuant to that Rule, the Court has determined that this opinion should not be published.

¹ Breaux Brothers Farms v. Teche Sugar Co., 21 F.3d 83 \(May 4, 1994\).

that Teche Sugar would compensate Teche Planting and Accardo for the expenses they incurred during lease negotiations. The court appropriately appealed to the Civil Code for guidance in resolving the ambiguity.² The court compared the agreement to one between an owner of land and a lessee who improves the land, the legal relationship which most closely resembled Teche Sugar's arrangement with Teche Planting and Accardo.³ To determine the value of the expenses allowed according to this approach, the court appropriately did not include overhead expenses and profit.⁴

Teche Planting and Accardo claim that the district court mistook Teche Sugar for the owner of land when [*3] in fact Teche Sugar merely let the land. The court did not, however, make this error. The court merely employed the relationship between land owner as lessor and farmer as lessee as an instructive analogy. The court acted appropriately in doing so.

Teche Planting and Accardo also request reimbursement for costs that the court disallowed. The court estimated the work and material that Teche Planting and Accardo provided in anticipation of the lease and from which they would not benefit. The repairs improved the equipment that Teche Planting and Accardo took with them when they left the farmland. Moreover, the district court's disallowance of the cost of renting equipment finds adequate support in the possibility that the farmers would have possessed the equipment regardless of the expectation of a lease.

We find the legal basis of the court's award sound, and conclude that the court did not make any clearly erroneous factual findings in refusing to require Teche Sugar to reimburse Teche Planting and Accardo for repair work from which they would later benefit or by disallowing rental expenses. The district court award stands in regard to the amount owed Teche Planting and Accardo.

[*4] Petition for panel rehearing is denied.

End of Document

² See La. Civ. Code art. 2054.

³ See La. Civ. Code Art. 2726.

⁴ Cross-appellants acknowledge as much.

Poindexter v. American Bd. of Surgery

United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia, Atlanta Division

June 10, 1994, Decided ; June 14, 1994, order filed

CIVIL ACTION FILE NO. 1:93-CV-0097-JTC

Reporter

911 F. Supp. 1510 *; 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20783 ; 1996-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,357

JAMES M. POINDEXTER, JR., M.D., Plaintiff, v. AMERICAN BOARD OF SURGERY, INC., Defendant.

Core Terms

vascular, certification, surgery, accredited, surgeons, fellowship, programs, antitrust, training, conspiracy, summary judgment, motions, parties, conspire, promise, restraint of trade, business relationship, general surgery, residency, surgical, promissory estoppel, material fact, unaccredited, privileges, courts, education requirement, anticompetitive, examinations, nonmoving, specialty

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN1 [blue icon] Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c) defines the standard for summary judgment. Courts should grant summary judgment when there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. The general rule of summary judgment in the Eleventh Circuit states that the moving party must show the court that no genuine issue of material fact should be decided at trial. Unless the movant for summary judgment meets its burden under Rule 56, the obligation of the opposing party does not arise even if no opposing evidentiary material is presented by the party opposing the motion. While all evidence and factual inferences are to be viewed in a light most favorable to the nonmoving party, the mere existence of some alleged factual dispute between the parties will not defeat an otherwise properly supported motion for summary judgment; the requirement is that there be no genuine issue of material fact. An issue is not genuine if it is unsupported by evidence, or if it is created by evidence that is merely colorable or is not significantly probative. Similarly, a fact is not material unless it is identified by the controlling substantive law as an essential element of the nonmoving party's case.

911 F. Supp. 1510, *1510LÁ1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20783, 20783

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

HN2 Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

Where neither party can prove either the affirmative or the negative of an essential element of a claim, the movant meets its burden on summary judgment by showing that the opposing party will not be able to meet its burden of proof at trial. The moving party must demonstrate that the nonmoving party lacks evidence to support an essential element of its claim. Thus, the movant's burden is discharged by showing, that is, pointing out to the district court that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case. In either situation, only when the movant meets this burden, does the burden shift to the opposing party, who must then present evidence to establish the existence of a material issue of fact. The nonmoving party must go beyond the pleadings and submit evidence in the form of affidavits, depositions, admissions and the like, to demonstrate that a genuine issue of material fact does exist.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

International Trade Law > General Overview

HN3 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Thus, § 1 requires some form of agreement to restrain trade. Courts generally do not distinguish between the terms "contract," "combination," or "conspiracy," often using the terms interchangeably.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Evidence > Types of Evidence > Circumstantial Evidence

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN4 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

911 F. Supp. 1510, *1510LÁ994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20783, 20783

The elements of a conspiracy to restrain trade under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 include: (1) an agreement to enter a conspiracy; (2) designed to achieve an unlawful objective; and (3) proof of an actual unlawful effect or facts that show a potential for future harm to competition. 15 U.S.C.S. §2, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 does not demand proof of a specific intent to restrain trade. A § 1 plaintiff need not prove an intent on the part of the co-conspirators to restrain trade or to build a monopoly. So long as the purported conspiracy has an anticompetitive effect, the plaintiff has made out a case under §1. However, federal antitrust law imposes a heightened standard of proof on a plaintiff attempting to demonstrate the existence of an agreement to restrain trade with circumstantial evidence. Plaintiff must introduce evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the defendants acted independently or legitimately.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Generally, a corporation and its officers or directors cannot form a 15 U.S.C.S. §1 conspiracy. The Eleventh Circuit has determined, however, that an exception to this general rule exists where plaintiff demonstrates that corporate officers have a personal stake in achieving the object of the alleged conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

HN6 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A 15 U.S.C.S. §1 conspiracy requires a plaintiff to present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged co-conspirators acted legitimately. In other words, the joint activity or agreement must be designed to achieve an unlawful objective, rather than enhancing competition or promoting procompetitive conduct.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > Injury in Fact

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Justiciability > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Remedies > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Hospital Privileges > General Overview

HN7 Standing, Injury in Fact

Standing is a question of law. In the antitrust context, standing is a far more complex matter than the usual search for the constitutionally mandated injury in fact. Antitrust standing involves a more comprehensive inquiry, turning on an analysis of prudential considerations aimed at preserving the effective enforcement of the antitrust laws. The analysis requires a court to evaluate the plaintiff's harm, the alleged wrongdoing by the defendants, and the relationship between them. Ultimately, a court must determine whether the alleged injury derives from some form of anticompetitive conduct and is the kind of injury that Congress intended to redress with treble damages. A leading Eleventh Circuit case on standing, defines a two-pronged approach to determine whether a plaintiff is a proper party to bring an antitrust suit: (1) plaintiff must suffer an antitrust injury, and (2) plaintiff must be an efficient enforcer of the antitrust laws. An antitrust injury results from anticompetitive conduct. In the process of evaluating whether plaintiff has suffered an antitrust injury, a court will often resolve one or more elements of the underlying antitrust claim as well.

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Interference With Business Relations

Torts > ... > Business Relationships > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Business Relationships > General Overview

HN8 [down arrow] Causes of Action, Interference With Business Relations

Georgia law provides a cause of action for interference with business relationships. To establish a claim for tortious interference with business relations, a plaintiff must prove that the defendant: (1) acted improperly and without privilege; (2) purposefully, with malice, and with intent to injure, (3) induced a third party or parties not to enter into or continue a business relationship with the plaintiff, and (4) plaintiff suffered some financial injury as a result.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Consideration > Detrimental Reliance

Contracts Law > ... > Consideration > Enforcement of Promises > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Formation > Consideration > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Consideration > Promissory Estoppel

HN9 [down arrow] Consideration, Detrimental Reliance

A promise which the promisor should reasonably expect to induce action or forbearance on the part of the promisee or a third person and which does induce such action or forbearance is binding if injustice can be avoided only by enforcement of the promise." Ga. Code Ann. § 13-3-44\(a\). Thus, to prevail on a promissory estoppel claim under Georgia law, plaintiff must prove that: (1) defendant made a promise; (2) expecting plaintiff to rely on the promise; and (3) plaintiff did reasonably rely to his detriment. Promissory estoppel cannot be applied unless the promisee reasonably relied on the promise.

Counsel: [1] For JAMES M. POINDEXTER, M.D., F.A.C.S., plaintiff: Phillip A. Bradley, Carl Wilson Mullis, III, Jan James Johnson, Long Aldridge & Norman, Atlanta, GA. Jeffrey L. Mann, Office of DeKalb County Attorney, Decatur, GA. Paul E. Bateman, phv, Burke Warren & MacKay, Chicago, IL.

For AMERICAN BOARD OF SURGERY, INC., defendant: James B. Hiers, Jr., Susan A. Dewberry, Swift Currie McGhee & Hiers, Atlanta, GA.

Judges: JACK T. CAMP, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Opinion by: JACK T. CAMP

Opinion

[*1514] ORDER OF THE COURT

This action is before the Court on Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment [# 16], which is GRANTED. The Court has also considered the following Plaintiff's motions: Motion for Hearing on Summary Judgment [# 32], which is DENIED; Motion for Leave to File Additional Motions [# 42], which is DENIED except as to the motion for jury trial; Motion for Jury Trial [# 43], which is GRANTED; and Motions for Pretrial Conference [# 47-1], which is DENIED; Entry of Scheduling Order [# 47-2], which is DENIED; Extension of Discovery Period [# 47-3], which is DENIED; Extension of Time to File Pretrial Order [# 47-4], which is DENIED; [2] and Motion for Leave to File Surreply Brief [# 52], which is DENIED.

I. BACKGROUND

Plaintiff is a certified general surgeon seeking additional board certification as a vascular surgeon. Defendant American Board of Surgery, Inc. (the "Board") refuses to grant the certification because Dr. Poindexter has not completed a vascular surgery fellowship at an accredited training program. The Complaint, filed January 14, 1993, charges Defendant with antitrust, business tort, and civil rights violations. Plaintiff alleges financial damages in excess of $ 2 million and seeks injunctive action to force Defendant to administer the certification examination and to award the certificate upon his successful completion of the test.

This case was assigned to an eight-month discovery track, which closed on January 3, 1994. Defendant filed a timely summary judgment motion on January 21, 1994. The Court placed the action on the March trial calendar, but later removed it due to an extension of time to permit Plaintiff to file a summary judgment response. In a joint motion [# 27] filed February 14, Plaintiff asked for an extension through March 7, 1994, stating: "Plaintiff further stipulates [3] that Plaintiff shall file no motion requesting any additional time to respond, beyond March 7, 1994, nor any other motion." Based on this representation, the Court granted Plaintiff's request with the following provision: "And it is further ordered that no motion by Plaintiff for any further extension of time, nor any other motion by Plaintiff, will be considered."

Plaintiff has now engaged new counsel who proposes to submit a revised pretrial schedule, reopen discovery with Defendant and third parties, designate experts, and amend the Complaint to add at least one additional defendant.

II. PLAINTIFF'S MOTIONS

Plaintiff's motions are DENIED on two independent grounds. First, Plaintiff promised Defendant that he would refrain from further motions in exchange for Defendant's consent to an extension of time to respond to Defendant's summary judgment motion. The extension was granted by the Court with the express provision that further motions would not be considered. For that reason, Plaintiff's motions are improper.

Second, the Court has examined each of Plaintiff's motions and Defendant's objections, and finds that Plaintiff's requests would cause unwarranted delay as [4] well as prejudice to Defendant. Moreover, the matters Plaintiff seeks to address concerning an alleged failure to adequately prepare for trial resulted merely from what is now characterized as the inadvertence of Plaintiff's previous attorney. The Court sees no substantial reason to permit additional delay and expense in concluding this matter. Plaintiff's motions are DENIED.

The single exception is Plaintiff's motion for a jury trial [# 43], which is GRANTED. Having considered the five factors enumerated in Parrott v. Wilson, 707 F.2d 1262, 1267 \(11th Cir. 1983\), the Court concludes that the general rule should be applied in this case and Plaintiff's belated motion should be granted. Counsel for Defendant straightforwardly admits that she did not conduct discovery in the expectation of a bench trial and [*1515] argues only that inadvertence is an insufficient excuse for this late request. Although the Court's interest in enforcing its previous Order prohibiting further motions is strong, Plaintiff's "right" to trial by jury is even more compelling.

III. SUMMARY JUDGMENT STANDARD

HN1 [↑] Rule 56(c), Fed. R. Civ. P., defines the standard for summary judgment: Courts should [5] grant summary judgment when "there is no genuine issue as to any material fact . . . and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." The general rule of summary judgment in the Eleventh Circuit states that the moving party must show the court that no genuine issue of material fact should be decided at trial. Clark v. Coats & Clark, Inc., 929 F.2d 604 (11th Cir. 1991). "Unless the movant for summary judgment meets its burden under Rule 56, the obligation of the opposing party does not arise even if no opposing evidentiary material is presented by the party opposing the motion." Id.

While all evidence and factual inferences are to be viewed in a light most favorable to the nonmoving party, Rollins v. TechSouth, Inc., 833 F.2d 1525, 1529 (11th Cir. 1987); Everett v. Napper, 833 F.2d 1507, 1510 (11th Cir. 1987), "the mere existence of some alleged factual dispute between the parties will not defeat an otherwise properly supported motion for summary judgment; the requirement is that there be no genuine issue of material fact." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. 242, 248, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986). An issue is not genuine [6] if it is unsupported by evidence, or if it is created by evidence that is "merely colorable" or is "not significantly probative." Id. at 250. Similarly, a fact is not material unless it is identified by the controlling substantive law as an essential element of the nonmoving party's case. Id. at 248.

HN2 [↑] Where neither party can prove either the affirmative or the negative of an essential element of a claim, the movant meets its burden on summary judgment by showing that the opposing party will not be able to meet its burden of proof at trial. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 325, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986). In Celotex, the Supreme Court interpreted Rule 56(c) to require the moving party to demonstrate that the nonmoving party lacks evidence to support an essential element of its claim. Thus, the movant's burden is "discharged by 'showing' -- that is, pointing out to the district court -- that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case." Id.

In either situation, only when the movant meets this burden, does the burden shift to the opposing party, who must then present evidence to establish the existence of a material issue [7] of fact. Id. The nonmoving party must go beyond the pleadings and submit evidence in the form of affidavits, depositions, admissions and the like, to demonstrate that a genuine issue of material fact does exist. Id.

IV. UNDISPUTED FACTS

Based on the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories and admissions and affidavits on file, as well as the parties' statements of undisputed material facts and the responses thereto, and viewing all evidence and factual inferences in a light most favorable to the non-moving party, the following facts emerge as undisputed.

Plaintiff received a medical degree from Washington University in 1980. As early as 1983, prior to completing his general surgery residency, Plaintiff investigated and applied for vascular surgery fellowship programs by interviewing at least eighteen different institutions. Plaintiff was offered positions at two programs, both unaccredited. In 1985, Dr. Poindexter completed his general surgery residency at the University of Connecticut, a graduate medical education program accredited by the Accreditation Counsel of Graduate Medical Education ("Accreditation Counsel"). From July, 1985 through June, 1986, Plaintiff [*8] attended New York Medical College, an unaccredited vascular surgery [*1516] fellowship program.¹ Upon graduation, the school's program director told Dr. Poindexter that Plaintiff's cases would be used to apply for accreditation with the Accreditation Counsel.

¹ Vascular surgery is one of seven primary components of general surgery. In plain terms, vascular surgery involves the blood vessels, excluding those associated with the brain and heart. During the year he trained at New York Medical College, Plaintiff performed and assisted in reconstructive vascular surgery, peripheral bypasses, microscopic vessel surgery, and trauma cases.

New York Medical College did apply, but in 1988 the Accreditation Counsel denied accreditation to the school's vascular fellowship program.

In January, 1987, Plaintiff began his career, as an assistant professor of surgery at Morehouse Medical School in Atlanta. Dr. Poindexter continued as a full-time faculty member until he went into private practice in July, 1989. He began private practice [9] as a sole proprietorship, doing business as "Midtown Vascular Surgery." Dr. Poindexter is currently the sole shareholder of "Georgia Vascular Surgery," a professional corporation devoted exclusively to vascular surgery services. He and his wife also own "Georgia Vascular Diagnostics, Inc.," a non-invasive vascular laboratory serving two Atlanta area hospitals.² Plaintiff has staff and clinical privileges in vascular surgery at nine hospitals in the metropolitan Atlanta area. He is a "specialty provider" for five managed-care organizations. Plaintiff is a member of the Atlanta Vascular Society, the Peripheral Vascular Society, and the American College of Surgeons. Dr. Poindexter has always limited his medical practice to vascular surgery.

[10] Defendant American Board of Surgery (the "Board"), established in 1937, is a private, non-profit corporation that conducts examinations and awards certifications to qualified candidates in the practice of surgery. The Board itself does not provide health care services. The Board is a member of the American Board of Medical Specialties ("ABMS"), an umbrella organization for 24 medical specialty boards. ABMS authorizes its member boards to issue various certificates of qualification. The Board awards a certificate in general surgery, often referred to as a "primary certificate," and also awards certificates in certain surgical subspecialties. One is vascular surgery.

The Board is governed by Directors who serve rotating six-year terms. Directors are elected annually from various national and regional surgical specialty organizations. Except for two salaried administrative positions, Directors are not compensated. Directors have sole authority to establish Board policy. Surgeons who have been awarded certificates by the Board, known as "Diplomates," have no authority or control over Board actions or policies.³ The Board's Directors are practicing clinical surgeons and physicians involved [11] in medical education. Directors act as examiners for certifying examinations and determine standards for awarding primary and specialty certificates.

Prior to 1981, there were a number of vascular surgery "fellowships" available for post-residency training, but there was no accreditation process and no guiding principles or standards for fellowship program directors to follow. In the words of the Board's present Executive Director, the Board "believed there was need for improvement of the vascular component of general surgery residencies, and also need for improvement of the existing vascular fellowship programs and development of more programs which met the essentials for developing competent vascular surgeons." Griffen Affidavit [# 16], P 11. The Board applied to the American Board of Medical Specialties to issue a general vascular surgery certificate.

Although the Accreditation Council is the governing body [12] for accreditation, the actual program evaluation is performed by the Residency Review Committee ("RRC") for the particular field of medicine involved. For [*1517] example, surgical residency programs are reviewed and evaluated by the Residency Review Committee for Surgery. There are recognized essentials for residency training programs, and "accreditation" indicates that the program is in substantial compliance with the published requirements. The Board believed, in 1981, that if accreditation was available to vascular surgery fellowship programs, program directors would be encouraged to improve educational and training opportunities to prospective vascular surgeons. Also, by offering a certificate tied to accredited fellowships, the Board hoped to prompt students to seek accredited programs in vascular surgery. Id. at PP 13, 14. The American Board of Medical Specialties approved the issuance of a vascular surgery certificate in 1982. The Board conducted the first examinations and awarded the first certificates in 1983.

The Board aimed to make satisfactory completion of an accredited fellowship program a non-waivable education requirement for receiving its vascular surgery certificate. [13] However, when the first certificates were awarded in 1983, there were no accredited fellowship programs. The Board therefore implemented a transitional scheme, providing certification options to established vascular surgeons and those who had completed non-accredited training programs. One option permitted graduates from so-called "PEEC" approved vascular surgery training programs to take the examination for a vascular certificate, if they also met other requirements. In 1984, there were 56 PEEC approved programs, each having at least one fellowship position and some more than one. Many of the PEEC programs later gained accreditation by the Accreditation Council. For the educational year July, 1984 to June, 1985, there were 36 fellowship positions in 20 accredited vascular surgery programs. For the year July 1985 to June 1986, there were 61 positions in 40 accredited programs.

² As of August, 1993, Georgia Vascular Surgery employed three vascular surgeons, including Plaintiff. In 1992, Georgia Vascular Surgery had a gross profit of over $ 787,000 on gross income of approximately $ 851,000. Georgia Vascular Diagnostics had gross receipts of $ 220,000 and a gross profit of $ 202,000. Poindexter Depo., pp. 254-55

³ Plaintiff is a diplomate of the Board, having received the Board's general surgery certificate.

Another transition period option for satisfying the Board's education requirement was a "grandfathering" plan intended to accommodate those practicing certified surgeons who did not participate in either a PEEC approved or an accredited vascular fellowship. These surgeons could apply for individual consideration, [14] if they had at least five years of practice in general or thoracic surgery as of the cut-off date on June 30, 1989. This interim "practice mode" period extended for six years from the date the certification process was first implemented.

Of the total number of surgeons who finished their fifth year of general surgery training in 1985 (hereinafter "Plaintiff's class"), eleven surgeons, including Plaintiff, attended vascular fellowship programs that were neither PEEC approved nor accredited by the Accreditation Council. The Board denied admission to the examination for the vascular surgery certificate to all eleven, based on their failure to meet the education requirement. Eighty-five surgeons in Plaintiff's class were admitted to the examination; 81 had attended accredited fellowship programs and 4 had completed PEEC approved programs.

Plaintiff became Board certified in general surgery in 1988, but the Board refused to permit him to sit for the vascular surgery examination because he did not attend an accredited fellowship program. Plaintiff is not Board certified in vascular surgery today. However, certification is voluntary and a certified general surgeon is permitted to perform [15] vascular surgery. The Board explains: "While the fact that a surgeon holds a certificate in the subspecialty of General Vascular Surgery is an indication that the surgeon possessed, at the time the certificate was issued, certain qualifications, the lack of a certificate . . . is not necessarily an indication that the surgeon is not as qualified to perform general vascular surgery as one who holds the vascular certificate." Griffen Aff. [# 16], P 35. Although Plaintiff has been denied Board certification, Plaintiff's competence as a vascular surgeon is not an issue in this case.

V. PLAINTIFF'S ANTITRUST CLAIM

A. Conspiracy in Restraint of Trade

Simply put, Plaintiff contends that Board certified vascular surgeons enjoy significant competitive advantages over non-certified [*1518] vascular surgeons. According to the Complaint:

Certification in general vascular surgery is a requirement of many hospitals in the metropolitan Atlanta, Georgia area in the granting of general vascular surgery privileges, by physicians in making referrals of patients' cases, by insurance companies in the setting of malpractice insurance premiums, by managed health care providers and health maintenance [16] organizations in contracting for services, by courts and other adjudicative panels in determining the expertise of general vascular surgeons whose testimony is offered as expert witnesses, and by aspiring general vascular surgeons choosing a practice to which to affiliate.

Complaint, P 9. Dr. Poindexter illustrates the nature of the alleged competitive disadvantage by providing undisputed evidence that several large Atlanta hospitals will not grant vascular surgery privileges to a surgeon who is not Board certified or eligible to receive such a certificate. See Plaintiff's Statement of Material Facts [# 34], PP 74-79. Moreover, Plaintiff says that his present vascular surgery privileges have been threatened at his primary hospital, whose by-laws also require specialty certification as a condition to vascular surgery privileges. Complaint, P 30; Statement of Facts, P 82.

Count I of the Complaint charges the Board, its Directors, and the American Board of Medical Specialties with conspiring to restrain trade, in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. Complaint, P 34. Plaintiff initially calls this illegal conduct a "group boycott," referring to an alleged horizontal [17] agreement among competing surgeons to exclude competition by restricting access to the Board's vascular surgery certificate.⁴

Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides:

HN3[] Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal.

15 U.S.C. § 1. Thus, Section 1 requires some form of agreement to restrain trade. Courts generally do not distinguish between the terms "contract," "combination," or "conspiracy," often using the terms interchangeably. See, e.g., Bogosian v. Gulf Oil Corp., 561 F.2d 434, 445-46 (3d Cir. 1977) ("we perceive no distinction between the terms combination and conspiracy").

[18] This circuit has defined HN4[] the elements of a conspiracy to restrain trade under Section 1 to include: (1) an agreement to enter a conspiracy; (2) designed to achieve an unlawful objective; and (3) proof of an actual unlawful effect or facts that show a potential for future harm to competition. See U.S. Anchor Mfg., Inc. v. Rule Indus., Inc., 7 F.3d 986, 1001 (11th Cir. 1993). Unlike Section 2, Section 1 does not demand proof of a specific intent to restrain trade. "A section 1 plaintiff . . . need not prove an intent on the part of the co-conspirators 'to restrain trade or to build a monopoly.' So long as the purported conspiracy has an anticompetitive effect, the plaintiff has made out a case under section 1." Bolt v. Halifax Hosp. Medical Ctr., 891 F.2d 810, 819-20 (11th Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). However, federal antitrust law imposes a heightened standard of proof on a plaintiff attempting to demonstrate the existence of an agreement to restrain trade with circumstantial evidence. Plaintiff must "introduce evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the defendants acted independently or legitimately." U.S. Anchor, 7 F.3d at 1002.

As a threshold matter, [19] the parties debate whether Defendant Board is legally capable of conspiring with its Directors to restrain trade. HN5[] Generally, a corporation and its officers or directors cannot form a Section 1 conspiracy. See Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 2741-42, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984). This circuit has determined, however, [*1519] that an exception to this general rule exists where plaintiff demonstrates that corporate officers have a personal stake in achieving the object of the alleged conspiracy. Tiftarea Shopper, Inc. v. Georgia Shopper, Inc., 786 F.2d 1115, 1116 (11th Cir. 1986); see also Bolt, 891 F.2d at 819 (holding that a hospital can conspire with members of its medical staff).

The nonprofit Defendant in this case is a separate legal entity. Its Directors, who set Board policy and administer certification examinations, are at the same time practicing or academic physicians who compete with non-certified doctors in the marketplace. Because Directors might benefit by excluding competition from other providers of surgical services, the general rule that a corporation cannot conspire with its officers does not apply to this case. The Court [20] finds that Defendant is legally capable of conspiring with its Directors.

The fact that the Directors and the Board are capable of conspiring with each other does not mean that every Board action satisfies the conspiracy requirement of Section 1. The Board by its nature involves collective action by individual competitors. Proof of a conspiracy requires a showing that the conspirators had a rational economic motive for entering into the conspiracy, as well as a conscious commitment to cooperate in a scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective. Bolt, 891 F.2d at 819.

First, Defendant argues that no legitimate motive exists to conspire because no economic benefit accrues to the individual Directors as a result of their role in setting accreditation standards. The Board itself does not provide health care services and, Defendant says, no Directors practiced surgery in the Atlanta area during the relevant time period. Thus, no individual Director actually competed with Dr. Poindexter. Defendant concludes that because the parties do not directly compete for surgical patients, no rational economic motive exists for the Directors as a group to conspire to deny Plaintiff a vascular [21] certificate.

⁴ The Court refuses to analyze this case as a "group boycott" insofar as Plaintiff may be seeking to invoke a per se determination of illegality. See FTC v. Indiana Federation of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 106 S. Ct. 2009, 2018, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445 (1986) ("the category of restraints classed as group boycotts is not to be expanded indiscriminately Moreover, we have been slow to condemn rules adopted by professional associations as unreasonable per se").

Defendant's analysis overlooks the fact that the Board sets national standards determining which general surgeons qualify for its specialty certification in vascular surgery. The individual Directors practice surgery in various local areas throughout the country. As the Bolt court pointed out, "one of the first principles of economics is the inverse relationship of supply to price." Bolt, 891 F.2d at 820. If the Directors, acting together, can prevent non-certified surgeons from competing effectively in local areas like Atlanta, then the Board certified physicians can charge a higher price. Therefore, Defendant's ability to control the supply of certified vascular surgeons may give its Directors a rational economic incentive to conspire against applicants such as Plaintiff.

HN6 A Section 1 conspiracy also requires Plaintiff to present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged co-conspirators acted legitimately. U.S. Anchor, 7 F.3d at 1002. In other words, the joint activity or agreement must be designed to achieve an unlawful objective, rather than enhancing competition or promoting procompetitive conduct. Plaintiff has not met this burden.

[22] Courts have long recognized that establishing and monitoring product and service standards is a legitimate and beneficial function of trade and professional associations. See, e.g., Consolidated Metal Prod., Inc. v. American Petroleum Inst., 846 F.2d 284, 294 (5th Cir. 1988) ("Even if user reliance gives [Defendant] significant influence over the market, that influence may enhance, not reduce, competition and consumer welfare." Id. at 296 (footnote omitted)). Although disappointed competitors sometimes file antitrust actions against associations that refuse accreditation or professional certification, "restrictions on access by imposition of educational and training requirements and a degree of self-regulation are definitional aspects of the term 'profession.'" Sherman College of Straight Chiropractic v. American Chiropractic Ass'n, Inc., 654 F. Supp. 716, 722 (N.D. Ga. 1986) (Evans, J.), aff'd 813 F.2d 349 (11th Cir. 1987). Moreover, in evaluating the antitrust implications of a profession's self-imposed restrictions, "the general presumption is that the public interest is served [*1520] by the promotion of enhanced education and training requirements." Id.

Plaintiff [23] fails to rebut the general presumption that the Board's certification standards serve competition and the public interest, complaining only that the Board's refusal to waive its educational requirement does not serve his interest in expanding his medical practice. However, there is no direct evidence showing that the Board or its Directors desired to achieve an unlawful objective when they devised the requisite educational qualifications or when they denied Plaintiff a certificate. Nor has Plaintiff introduced circumstantial evidence tending to exclude the possibility that the Board acted legitimately. Instead, the record suggests only that Defendant's policies reflect a sensible concern for the quality of specialized medical training and the standards of surgical practice.

Finally, there is no proof that the Board acted to constrain Plaintiff's ability to compete. Hospitals, patients and insurers voluntarily rely on the Board's certification decision, much like an ordinary consumer might rely on a trade group's seal of approval. After the Board expresses its informed opinion regarding the sufficiency of a surgeon's academic training or credentials, users of that information have [24] the sole power to determine whether that surgeon is entitled to patronage, surgical privileges, or preferred insurance rates.⁵

As courts are fond of observing, the antitrust laws protect competition, not individual competitors. See Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 1521, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962). In this regard, it is important to note that Defendant Board's recommendations do not have the force of law and do not determine whether a qualified surgeon can practice vascular surgery. Plaintiff has not been foreclosed from competition. By all accounts, [25] Plaintiff is a successful practitioner. The Board's certification procedure was not conceived or applied as an attempt to deny consumers the right to purchase Plaintiff's services, or to require hospitals to exclude Plaintiff from the surgical staff, or to persuade insurance carriers to charge Plaintiff a higher price for malpractice insurance. The Board does not even ask courts to view Plaintiff less favorably as an expert witness. In short, the Board's decision to withhold certification does not restrain Plaintiff from competing as a vascular surgeon and does not impose sanctions on those who use his services. As Judge Easterbrook observed, "there can be no restraint of trade without a restraint." Schachar v. American Academy of Ophthalmology, 870 F.2d 397, 397 (7th Cir. 1989). The Court concludes that Defendant's restrictive educational standard and its refusal to award Plaintiff its vascular certification does not constitute an unlawful restraint of trade.

⁵ Plaintiff's reliance on American Society of Mechanical Eng'rs, Inc. v. Hydrolevel Corp., 456 U.S. 556, 102 S. Ct. 1935, 72 L. Ed. 2d 330 (1982), is misplaced. That association's codes, though only advisory, had a "powerful influence: federal regulations have incorporated many of them by reference, as have the laws of most States, the ordinances of major cities, and the laws of all the provinces of Canada." 102 S. Ct. at 1938-39.

B. Plaintiff's Standing

Defendant contends that Plaintiff does not have standing to bring this antitrust action. Specifically, Defendant says Dr. Poindexter has not suffered an antitrust injury and seeks only to enjoy [26] the benefits of Defendant's alleged anticompetitive conspiracy.

HN7 Standing is a question of law. Austin v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield, 903 F.2d 1385, 1387 (11th Cir. 1990). In the antitrust context, standing is a far more complex matter than the usual search for the constitutionally mandated injury in fact. Antitrust standing involves a more comprehensive inquiry, turning on "an analysis of prudential considerations aimed at preserving the effective enforcement of the antitrust laws." Todorov v. DCH Healthcare Auth., 921 F.2d 1438, 1448 (11th Cir. 1991) (denying antitrust standing to physician seeking hospital privileges so as to reap the alleged monopoly profits received by staff radiologists). The analysis requires a court to "evaluate the plaintiff's harm, the alleged wrongdoing by the defendants, and the relationship between [*1521] them." Associated Gen. Contractors, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 103 S. Ct. 897, 907, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983). Ultimately, a court must determine whether the alleged injury derives from some form of anticompetitive conduct and is the kind of injury that Congress intended to redress with treble damages.

Todorov, [27] a leading Eleventh Circuit case on standing, defines a two-pronged approach to determine whether a plaintiff is a proper party to bring an antitrust suit: (1) plaintiff must suffer an "antitrust injury," and (2) plaintiff must be an "efficient enforcer" of the antitrust laws. 921 F.2d at 1449. An antitrust injury results from anticompetitive conduct. In the process of evaluating whether plaintiff has suffered an antitrust injury, a court will often resolve one or more elements of the underlying antitrust claim as well. In this case, the Court concluded that there is no factual evidence of an unlawful objective nor proof of an anticompetitive effect arising from the Board's adverse certification decision. Consequently, there is no need to expressly decide the matter of antitrust standing.

VI. STATE LAW CLAIMS

The Court has original jurisdiction over Plaintiff's state law claims pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1332. The parties agree that Georgia law applies.

A. Tortious Interference

Count II purports to be a claim for "Intentional Interference With Right to Practice Profession," and Count IV alleges "Tortious Interference With Business Relationships." The parties treat the two [28] counts as the same legal claim.

Plaintiff alleges that "Defendant has intentionally and improperly, without privilege, interfered with Plaintiff's business relationships by inducing third parties not to enter into and continue business relationships with Plaintiff . . ." Complaint, P 35. Plaintiff does not assert that Defendant has actually contacted his existing or prospective patients, hospitals, or other business associates to induce them not to enter into relations with Dr. Poindexter. Instead, the intentional interference alleged concerns the Board's efforts to promote public recognition of certified doctors, as well as the adverse effects of Defendant's refusal to permit Plaintiff to take the certification examination. Plaintiff explains:

ABS's refusal to allow Dr. Poindexter to take the vascular surgery exam [] has interfered with Dr. Poindexter's advancement in academics and business relations with his former employer, Morehouse Medical School, and with Dr. Poindexter's ability to engage in his business and profession at various hospitals and other health care organizations.

Plaintiff's Response [# 34], p. 21, n.8.

HN8 Georgia law provides a cause of action [29] for interference with business relationships. To establish a claim for tortious interference with business relations, a plaintiff must prove that the defendant: "(1) acted improperly and without privilege; (2) purposefully, with malice, and with intent to injure, (3) induced a third party or parties not to enter into or continue a business relationship with the plaintiff, and (4) plaintiff suffered some financial injury as a result." Southern Business Communications, Inc. v. Matsushita Elec. Corp., 806 F. Supp. 950, 962 (N.D. Ga. 1992) (Carnes, J.) (citing DeLong Equip. v. Washington Mills Abrasive Co., 887 F.2d 1499, 1518 (11th Cir. 1989)).

Without deciding whether Defendant's actions have "induced" third parties not to enter into business relations with Plaintiff, the Court concludes from a careful review of the record that there is no evidence that Defendant at any time acted with "malice." Although the consequences to Plaintiff may have been adverse, Defendant's decision to adhere to its educational requirement and its subsequent denial of specialty certification falls far short of the type of malicious and wrongful conduct prohibited by Georgia courts. See generally [30] NAACP v. Overstreet, 221 Ga. 16, 20-22, 142 S.E.2d 816 (1965). Because Plaintiff has produced no evidence that Defendant acted with malice, he cannot recover for tortious interference with business relations.

[*1522] B. Promissory Estoppel

Count III contends that, in a letter sent in 1987, Defendant made an unambiguous promise to Plaintiff that Plaintiff was qualified to apply for the vascular surgery certificate. Dr. Poindexter says he relied on this promise and "reasonably chose not to take certain action that might have otherwise made him eligible to apply for the qualifying examinations." Complaint, PP 33-35.

While in general surgery residency in 1983, Dr. Poindexter learned that the American Board of Surgery was issuing a certificate in vascular surgery. He began to investigate fellowship programs in vascular surgery, having discovered in the Graduate Medical Education Directory (the "Green Book") that there were as yet no accredited programs. By 1984, Plaintiff was seeking an accredited vascular fellowship to satisfy the Board's education requirement to sit for the examination. Plaintiff was accepted by two unaccredited programs, and chose the one he felt had the better prospect [31] of gaining future accreditation. When he accepted a fellowship position at New York Medical College in December, 1984, he knew that the program was unaccredited and had not yet applied for accreditation, "but they had plans to submit their application to ACGME and felt very confident that they would get approval." Poindexter Depo., p. 93. Plaintiff knew that enrolling in an unaccredited program was risky, but explains that "I took the best risk that I had an opportunity to take at that time." Id. at p. 95.

Dr. Poindexter attended the fellowship program at New York Medical College from July, 1985 to June, 1986. In March, 1987, he contacted the Board and requested information regarding its vascular surgery examination. In a letter dated March 30, 1987, the Board enclosed a one page form asking about Plaintiff's medical training. Plaintiff submitted the information in early April, indicating that he had finished general surgery residency in 1985 and completed a vascular fellowship at New York Medical College in 1986. Plaintiff was aware when he returned the preliminary evaluation form that the Board required completion of an accredited fellowship program as a prerequisite to sitting [32] for the examination. On May 8, 1987, the Board sent Plaintiff a form letter stating: "According to the preliminary information which you have provided us, you May apply for the Certificate of Special Qualifications in General Vascular Surgery." Plaintiff's Exh. D.

The May, 1987, letter was sent in error. The Board discovered the error eleven months later, in April, 1988. The Director spoke with Dr. Poindexter and wrote him on April 8, 1988, informing him that because his fellowship training was taken at an unaccredited school he could not be admitted to the vascular surgery examination. See Plaintiff's Exh. E. When he received the letter acknowledging the Board's error, Plaintiff still anticipated that his unaccredited fellowship program would obtain approval from the accrediting body. Moreover, Plaintiff knew that if New York Medical College's fellowship program subsequently gained accreditation, he would be accepted as a graduate of an accredited program and become eligible for Board certification. Plaintiff did not learn that his fellowship program had been denied accreditation until after he received the Board's April 8, 1988, letter.

Plaintiff contends that he relied [33] on the Board's erroneous May, 1987 letter and took no further action to fulfill the education requirement:

If the American Board of Surgery had indicated in May 1987 that Dr. Poindexter was not eligible to apply for the board examination in general vascular surgery, Dr. Poindexter definitely would have taken a different course of action. He would not have waited to see if the New York Medical College received accreditation. He would have gone back to various vascular accredited fellowship programs to see whether there were any last minute openings for July 1987 at those institutions.

Plaintiff's Statement of Material Facts [# 34], P 57. Dr. Poindexter explains his failure to enroll in an accredited program after receiving the Board's corrective letter of April, 1988, by stating that his "personal and professional situations had changed significantly." Id. at P 64. He had purchased a home in Atlanta and his wife had begun [*1523] M.B.A. studies at a local university. Thus, "it would have been extremely burdensome and difficult to have attempted to apply for and complete an ACGME accredited vascular fellowship at that time." Id.

Plaintiff appealed the Board's decision, [34] but was denied admission to the examination. He now argues that the equitable doctrine of promissory estoppel should apply to compel Defendant to admit him to the vascular surgery examination.

Georgia has codified the common law doctrine of promissory estoppel as articulated in the Restatement of Torts: HN9 [↑] "A promise which the promisor should reasonably expect to induce action or forbearance on the part of the promisee or a third person and which does induce such action or forbearance is binding if injustice can be avoided only by enforcement of the promise." O.C.G.A. § 13-3-44(a). Thus, to prevail on a promissory estoppel claim under Georgia law, plaintiff must prove that: (1) defendant made a promise; (2) expecting plaintiff to rely on the promise; and (3) plaintiff did reasonably rely to his detriment. See Doll v. Grand Union Co., 925 F.2d 1363, 1371 (11th Cir. 1991).

In this case, Plaintiff's purported reliance was not reasonable. "Promissory estoppel cannot be applied unless the promisee reasonably relied on the promise." Fidelity & Deposit Co. v. West Point Constr. Co., 178 Ga. App. 578, 580, 344 S.E.2d 268 (1986). Defendant's form letter of May, 1987, lacked any indication [35] that it was intended to relieve Plaintiff of the Board's educational requirements concerning accredited fellowship training. Plaintiff had been aware of the accreditation problem since first applying to vascular programs in 1983. The hope that New York Medical College eventually would gain accreditation was a risk he accepted as his best opportunity of qualifying for the examination. Plaintiff knew when he submitted the preliminary form -- and when he received the erroneous response -- that certification was conditioned on completion of an accredited fellowship. The Court finds that Defendant's promise, assuming it did exist, was so inconsistent with Plaintiff's knowledge of Board policy that reliance would not be reasonable.

Defendant suggests that the more likely explanation for Plaintiff's failure to apply to an accredited program during that eleven month period before the Board corrected its error is simply that Plaintiff was still hoping that his gamble with New York Medical College would pay off and he would not have to interrupt his career to repeat a year of vascular surgery training. Plaintiff responds that the May, 1987, letter "indicated he had already met ABS's training [36] requirements," and so he made other financial and lifestyle commitments instead of applying to another program. Plaintiff's Response [# 34], p. 16. Because Dr. Poindexter knew without question he had not met Defendant's education requirements, interpreting the Board's letter to say that he had defies reasonable comprehension.

C. Breach of By-Laws; Civil Rights

Count V alleges as a cause of action "Breach of By-Laws and Rules and Regulations." Essentially, Plaintiff contends that Defendant incorporated provisions into its bylaws permitting the Board to consider the merits of individual cases and that the Board has failed to do so in this case. Plaintiff points to language in the "Rules Governing Admissibility to the Examinations" which presumably gives the Board flexibility to dictate different admission requirements in individual cases. The parties argue at some length over the legal meaning of the term "and/or" as used in Defendant's rules.

Before undertaking the semantic squabble, Plaintiff observes that the Board's alleged failure to follow its own rules should be considered not as a separate cause of action, but as weighing in the equities of the promissory estoppel claim. [37] The Court agrees that this is the best use of Plaintiff's imaginary tort claim and has given the allegations appropriate consideration. The Court's determination that promissory estoppel does not apply remains unaffected.

Count VI, "Violation of the Civil Rights Act of 1870," was dismissed by stipulation of the parties. See Docket [# 19].

[*1524] VII. CONCLUSION

Whether Plaintiff is qualified to become a "certified" vascular surgeon is not a legal question. This Court has not determined whether Defendant's criteria for certification are appropriate or correct, only that those requirements do not constitute an unlawful restraint of trade. In examining the record, the Court found that Plaintiff failed to meet his burden of setting forth specific facts sufficient to show the existence of a genuine, material issue concerning either Defendant's unlawful objective or an actual anticompetitive effect of the certification scheme.

Plaintiff's state law claims also cannot survive summary judgment. The Court found no evidence of malicious conduct to support Plaintiff's claim of intentional interference and no promise or reasonable reliance to justify invoking equitable estoppel under Georgia [38] law.

Accordingly, Defendant's motion for summary judgment is GRANTED. The Clerk is DIRECTED to enter judgment accordingly.

SO ORDERED, this 10 day of June, 1994.

JACK T. CAMP

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

End of Document

Bond v. Cedar Rapids Television Co.

Supreme Court of Iowa

June 22, 1994, Filed

No. 187 / 92-1434

Reporter

518 N.W.2d 352 *; 1994 Iowa Sup. LEXIS 153 **

THOMAS G. BOND, Individually and as the General Partner of Dubuque T.V. Limited Partnership, and WILLIAM MORRIS ABERNATHY, Appellees, v. CEDAR RAPIDS TELEVISION COMPANY, Appellant.

Subsequent History: Rehearing Denied July 25, 1994.

Prior History: [1] Appeal from the Iowa District Court for Dubuque County, Robert J. Curnan, Judge. Appeal from judgment for plaintiff in suit for tortious interference with a contract.

Disposition: REVERSED ON THE APPEAL; AFFIRMED ON THE CROSS-APPEAL.

Core Terms

sham, affirmative defense, baseless, allegations, station, litigated, preponderance of evidence, abuse of process, cable system, anticompetitive, prerequisite, television, parties

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom to Petition

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > General Overview

HN1[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The Noerr doctrine provides that civil liability may not be imposed on a party for exercising the right, under the First Amendment to the United States Constitution, to petition for governmental action.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

HN2[] Defenses, Demurrs & Objections, Affirmative Defenses

Iowa R. Civ. P. 101 provides in part: Any defense which alleges any matter in justification, excuse, release or discharge, or which admits the facts of the adverse pleading but seeks to avoid their legal effect, must be specially pleaded.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions > Preservation for Review

HN3 Responses, Defenses, Demurrs & Objections

An affirmative defense is one resting on facts not necessary to support plaintiff's case. Under Iowa R. Civ. P. 101 these matters must be specially pleaded, and a motion for directed verdict or a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict do not qualify as special pleadings. Without such a pleading, the question may not be entertained on appeal. Further, mere denials of specific paragraphs in the plaintiff's petition are insufficient to raise affirmative defenses.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

HN4 Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The Noerr doctrine provides that the Sherman Act does not prohibit persons from associating together in an attempt to persuade the legislature or the executive branch to take particular action with respect to a law that would produce a restraint or a monopoly. While initially applied only to antitrust actions, the doctrine was later extended to the approach of citizens to administrative agencies and the courts. It also applies to claims of tortious interference with contract.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN5 Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The Noerr doctrine is subject to what is called the "sham" exception. Immunity from suit is withheld from those situations where the petitioning activity, extensively directed towards influencing government action, is a mere sham to cover an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of the competitor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN6 Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Conduct does not qualify as a sham under the Noerr doctrine unless it is objectively baseless. The definition of "sham litigation" has two parts. First, the lawsuit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits. If the litigation is objectively baseless the court should look to the subjective intent and ask whether the baseless lawsuit conceals an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor through the use of the governmental process, as opposed to the outcome of that process, as an anticompetitive weapon. Under this formulation intent is irrelevant where the underlying suit or petition is not itself "objectively baseless."

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

HN7[] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

The doctrine of issue preclusion prevents parties to an action in which a judgment has been entered from relitigating in a subsequent action issues raised and resolved in the previous action. The four prerequisites to application of the doctrine are:(1) The issue precluded must be identical;(2) The issue must have been raised and litigated in the prior action;(3) The issue must have been material and relevant to the disposition of the prior action; and (4) The determinations made of the issue in the prior action must have been necessary and essential to the resulting judgment.

Administrative Law > Agency Adjudication > Decisions > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Administrative Law > Agency Adjudication > General Overview

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > Reviewable Agency Action

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

HN8[] Decisions, Collateral Estoppel

Final determinations of administrative agency acting in a judicial capacity are to be accorded preclusive effect in substantive judicial proceedings.

Administrative Law > ... > Formal Adjudicatory Procedure > Hearings > General Overview

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Torts > Intentional Torts > Abuse of Process > Elements

HN9[] Formal Adjudicatory Procedure, Hearings

In the absence of a special statute establishing a higher standard, the burden in federal administrative proceedings is a preponderance of evidence.

Counsel: Stephen J. Holtman, Iris E. Muchmore, and Carolyn M. Hinz of Simmons, Perrine, Albright & Ellwood, Cedar Rapids, for appellant.

G. Stephen Wiggins of Roberts, Davidson, Wiggins & Crowder, Tuscaloosa, Alabama, and David J. Dutton, Thomas L. Staack, and Bruce L. Braley of Dutton, Braun, Staack, Hellman & Iversen, P.L.C., Waterloo, for appellees.

Judges: Considered by Harris, P.J., and Larson, Neuman, Snell, and Andreasen, JJ.

Opinion by: HARRIS

Opinion

[*353] HARRIS, Justice.

A Dubuque television station recovered a substantial verdict against a Cedar Rapids television station in this tort suit for interfering with a contract. We set aside the recovery because we find as a matter of law that the actions complained of were protected under a principle rooted in the First Amendment to the United States Constitution.

Although the plaintiffs vigorously dispute the point, we are convinced the appeal calls for application of the principle of issue preclusion. The application is interesting, though certainly [*2] not unique, because it overcomes the rubric that, on appeal, disputed facts are taken in the light most consistent with the verdict. See Iowa R. App. P. 14(f)(2). In this case the parties presented diametrically opposed versions concerning which parties to the dispute were victims of the other's culpability. By its verdict the jury resolved that conflict (we do not reach the challenges to certain trial rulings that preceded the verdict) in favor of the plaintiffs who would [*354] ordinarily have the advantage of their version of the facts. Under the issue preclusion principle they are denied this advantage, however, because their version of a crucial element had already been considered and rejected by another tribunal in preliminary litigation.

The Dubuque Television Limited Partnership (DTV), a plaintiff, bought an ABC affiliate television station, KDUB-TV, for $ 3.25 million in 1985. Thomas Bond, a second plaintiff, is DTV's general partner. At the time, the Dubuque cable system was authorized by the federal communications commission (FCC) to provide KDUB with nonduplication protection. This protection allowed the cable system to black out transmissions of other ABC affiliates on the [*3] system when their programming through the national ABC network duplicated that offered by KDUB. Cedar Rapids Television Co. (CRTV), the defendant, owned KCRG-TV, an ABC affiliate on the system that was subject to blackout.

At the time of purchase in 1985, Bond was aware of the FCC-approved protection and thereafter chose not to seek extension of the FCC order when it expired in January of 1986. Even though the order expired, a Dubuque city cable ordinance continued to provide blackout protection. All parties agreed the ordinance was unenforceable, but the cable system retained the protections. CRTL officials vigorously protested the protections, while DTV and the City of Dubuque supported them.

DTV persuaded the cable system to retain the blackout and either remove KCRG from the system or move it to a higher channel. In 1987 the cable system was purchased by TCI Cablevision, which, in March of 1988, announced it would terminate protection. At the same time TCI moved KCRG to a higher channel. Such a move is highly undesirable because viewers are less likely to watch stations at higher channels.

Prior to this announcement DTV entered into an agreement to sell KDUB to Sage Broadcasting [*4] Corporation (Sage) for $ 4 million. DTV then filed a copy of the agreement with the FCC.

The agreement contained a clause that stated "pursuant to a verbal agreement with the local cable company, the said cable company blacks out station KCRG-TV, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, whenever said station's programming is identical with that of the station." After obtaining a copy of the agreement and upon seeing this clause, CRTC filed a petition with the FCC to deny DTV's application to transfer its license. This petition was the catalyst for the present litigation. In its petition CRTC alleged the nonduplication "verbal agreement," referenced in the transfer agreement, violated FCC nonduplication rules and antitrust laws. CRTC requested denial of the transfer and a review of DTV's fitness as an FCC licensee.

DTV filed an "opposition" to the petition, following which the video services division, mass media bureau, of the FCC, issued a memorandum opinion and order denying the petition and allowing the transfer. The denial was affirmed on intra-agency appeal to the FCC commission members.

Shortly after the FCC final ruling, DTV countered by filing a petition seeking revocation of CRTC's license. DTV [5] claimed CRTC was unfit to be a licensee because its petitions, in seeking denial of the transfer, were said to be baseless and filed only to delay or destroy a license transfer. The FCC rejected this abuse of process argument and, in the matter that controls this suit, found that CRTC raised colorable allegations of uncompetitive conduct.

The proposed transfer of KDUB to Sage collapsed in October 1989 after an agreed deadline passed. DTV then filed this action, alleging CRTC tortiously interfered with the transfer contract.

After a lengthy trial the jury awarded $ 2.1 million on the interference claim and $ 10,000 to Bond individually for his emotional distress. CRTC appealed and DTV cross-appealed. Because this was a law action we review the district court's determination for error. Iowa R. App. P. 4.

I. The core issue in the case is the applicability of HN1 the Noerr doctrine which provides that civil liability may not be imposed on a party for exercising the right, under the [\[*355\] First Amendment to the United States Constitution](#), to petition for governmental action. Eastern R.R. Presidents Conf. v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 138, 81 S. Ct. 523, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 471 \(1961\). [6] Defendant CRTC contends this doctrine covered its activities before the FCC and immunized it from liability.

CRTC raised the Noerr doctrine in its motion for directed verdict, motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and motion for new trial. CRTC also objected to the district court's refusal to include a Noerr-based jury instruction. CRTC did not however raise the doctrine in its answer or in a motion for summary judgment. In the belief that the doctrine is an affirmative defense, the plaintiffs contend CRTC did not preserve error on the question in accordance with Iowa rule of civil procedure 101. ¹

HN3 We have defined an affirmative defense as "one resting on facts not necessary to support plaintiff's case." Erickson v. Wright Welding Supply, Inc., 485 N.W.2d 82, 86 \(Iowa 1992\); [7] Foods, Inc. v. Leffler, 240 N.W.2d 914, 920 \(Iowa 1976\). Under Iowa rule of civil procedure 101 these matters must be specially pleaded, and a motion for directed verdict or a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict do not qualify as special pleadings. Foods, 240 N.W.2d at 920. Without such a pleading, the question may not be entertained on appeal. Id. Further, mere denials of specific paragraphs in plaintiffs' petition are insufficient to raise affirmative defenses. ²

Although plaintiffs contend otherwise, we are convinced the [\[*8\]](#) Noerr doctrine is not an affirmative defense, but rather an element of plaintiffs' recovery in an action of this kind. McGuire Oil Co. v. MAPCO, Inc., 958 F.2d 1552, 1559 n.9 \(11th Cir. 1992\); Hospital Bldg. Co. v. Trustees of Rex Hosp., 791 F.2d 288, 292-93 \(4th Cir. 1986\); see Litton Sys., Inc. v. AT&T Co., 700 F.2d 785, 810 \(2d Cir. 1983\); Defino v. Civic Ctr. Corp., 780 S.W.2d 665, 668

¹ HN2 Iowa rule of civil procedure 101 provides in pertinent part: "Any defense . . . which alleges any matter in justification, excuse, release or discharge, or which admits the facts of the adverse pleading but seeks to avoid their legal effect, must be specially pleaded."

² Plaintiffs cite Foods, Inc. for the proposition that all First Amendment protections must be raised prior to the close of trial. Foods, Inc. does not stand for such a broad proposition. It merely holds that, when a First Amendment does constitute an affirmative defense, it must be properly raised under rule 101 in order to preserve error. Foods, Inc., 240 N.W.2d at 920-21.

(Mo. App. 1989); Phillip Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law § 203.4C, at (1992). The burden is clearly on the plaintiffs to raise and negate Noerr immunity. MAPCO, 958 F.2d at 1558 n.9 (stating plaintiff has burden to show Noerr immunity did not attach to plaintiff's action); Hospital Bldg. Co., 791 F.2d at 292-93 (stating that "complainant in an antitrust case has burden of proving that its competitor's conduct was a sham"); Defino, 780 S.W.2d at 668 (Noerr doctrine is an essential element in plaintiff's case, not an affirmative defense borne by defendants). [9] ³

Although we have not previously been called upon to apply the Noerr doctrine, the federal authorities holding it to be an affirmative defense, and in placing the burden on the plaintiffs, are consistent with our holding in a somewhat analogous situation. Erickson, 485 N.W.2d at 86 (statutory immunity from suit not an affirmative defense, but part of plaintiff's burden to establish strict liability).

We hold the Noerr doctrine is not an affirmative defense and find the issue was preserved.

II. As originally stated in 1961, *HN4*⁴ the Noerr doctrine provided that "the Sherman Act does not prohibit . . . persons from associating [10] together in an attempt to persuade the legislature or the executive branch to take particular action with respect to a law that would produce a restraint or a monopoly." Noerr, 365 U.S. at 136, 81 S. Ct. at , 5 L. Ed. 2d at 470. While initially applied only to antitrust actions, the doctrine was later [*356] extended to "the approach of citizens . . . to administrative agencies . . . and the courts." California Motor Transp. Co. v. Trucking, Unltd., 404 U.S. 508, 510, 92 S. Ct. 609, , 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 646 (1972).

Since California Motor Transport, the federal courts have expanded the doctrine to claims of tortious interference with contract. Missouri v. National Org. for Women, Inc., 620 F.2d 1301, 1316-17 (8th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 499 U.S. 842, 66 L. Ed. 2d 49, 101 S. Ct. 122 (1982); Havoco of Am. Ltd. v. Holloway, 702 F.2d 643, 649-51 (7th Cir. 1953); Surgidev Corp. v. Eye Technology, Inc., 625 F. Supp. 800, 803 (D. Minn. 1986); see also Feminist Women's Health Center, Inc. v. Mohammad, 586 F.2d 530, 551 (5th Cir. 1978) [11] (petitioning activity protected from state law liability as well as federal antitrust liability), cert. denied 444 U.S. 924, 62 L. Ed. 2d 180, 100 S. Ct. 262 (1979). The California Supreme Court has also extended the doctrine. 50 Cal. 3d 1118, , 270 Cal. Rptr. 1, 10-12, 791 P.2d 587, (1990). These extensions are not only supported by Noerr, but also by the underlying right to petition government under the First Amendment.

Plaintiffs point out that *HN5*⁵ the doctrine is subject to what is called the "sham" exception. Immunity is withheld from those situations where the petitioning activity, "extensively directed towards influencing government action, is a mere sham to cover . . . an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of the competitor." Noerr, 365 U.S. at 144, S. Ct. at , 5 L. Ed. 2d at 475. Until 1993 the standard by which sham analysis proceeded was not clearly defined by the United States Supreme Court, although Noerr was thought to be informative.

[12] Under an opinion filed after trial of this case in district court, it is now clear that *HN6*⁶ conduct does not qualify as a sham unless it is objectively baseless. Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., Inc., U.S. , , 113 S. Ct. 1920, , 123 L. Ed. 2d 611, (1993). The definition of "sham litigation" is now understood to have two parts. First, "the lawsuit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits." Id. at , St. Ct. at , 123 L. Ed. 2d at . If the litigation is objectively baseless the court should look to the subjective intent and ask "whether the baseless lawsuit conceals an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor . . . through the use of the governmental process--as opposed to the outcome of that process--as an anticompetitive weapon." Id., St. Ct. at , 123 L. Ed. 2d at . Under this formulation intent is irrelevant where the underlying suit or petition is not itself "objectively baseless." We note that the trial court did [13] not have advantage of the Columbia Pictures opinion in making its challenged trial rulings.

³ Plaintiffs cite only one case they claim to be contra: North Carolina Elect Membership Corp. v. Carolina Power & Light Co., 666 F.2d 50, 52 (4th Cir. 1982). Plaintiffs' interpretation of North Carolina was however rejected by the 4th circuit in Hospital Building Co., 791 F.2d 288 at 292-93.

III. In applying the sham exception to the present case the question becomes whether CRTC's FCC petitions were objectively baseless. If as a matter of law they were not, the judgment must be reversed. If as a matter of law the petitions were a baseless sham, we must turn to CRTC's other assignments of error.

In denying CRTC's petition, the FCC found that allegations of anticompetitive conduct are insufficient to disqualify a licensee, that a prior adjudication of anticompetitive practices by another tribunal is required before the FCC will consider anticompetitive activity with respect to character determination (unless circumstances shock the conscience or would evoke universal disapprobation). In denying DTV's subsequent petition against CRTC, the FCC acknowledged that petitions to deny may be filed by interested parties, including competing broadcasters. Significantly, the FCC expressly found that "we cannot say in this case that 'there was an absence of any reasonable basis' for CRTC's allegations. CRTC raised colorable allegations of anticompetitive conduct by DTV which, in [14] proper circumstances, is an area of legitimate commission concern." In re Dubuque T.V. Ltd. Partnership, 4 FCC Rcd 1999 \(1989\).

CRTC contends this FCC determination bound the district court through HN7⁴ the [*357] doctrine of issue preclusion.⁴ The doctrine prevents parties to an action in which a judgment has been entered from relitigating in a subsequent action issues raised and resolved in the previous action. Hunter v. City of Des Moines, 300 N.W.2d 121, 123 \(Iowa 1981\). The four prerequisites to application of the doctrine are

- (1) The issue precluded must be identical;
- (2) The issue must have been raised and litigated in the prior action;
- (3) The issue must have been material and relevant to the disposition of the prior action; and
- (4) The determinations made of the issue in the prior action must have been necessary and essential to the resulting judgment.

Id. Only the first element (identical issue) and the second element (previously litigated) are in dispute here.

[15] The first (identical issue) prerequisite is disputed on the claim that differing standards of proof are implicated. Plaintiffs contend their burden before the agency was greater than a preponderance of evidence, the standard for this litigation in district court. This is a crucial issue because, if the plaintiff did indeed face a higher standard of proof in the prior FCC proceeding than here, the issue is not precluded by the FCC determination.

The FCC determination involved plaintiff DTV's allegations before the FCC that CRTC's actions before that commission constituted an abuse of process warranting sanctions. Authorities make it clear that DTV's burden was to establish its claim only by a preponderance of the evidence. HN9⁵ In the absence of a special statute establishing a higher standard, the burden in federal administrative proceedings is a preponderance of evidence. Steadman v. SEC, 450 U.S. 91, 102, 101 S. Ct. 999, , 67 L. Ed. 2d 69, 79 \(1981\); Bender v. Clark, 744 F.2d 1424, 1429 \(10th Cir. 1984\); 2 Am. Jur. 2d Administrative Law § 363, at 364 (1994); see also In re High Sierra Broadcasting, Inc., 96 F.C.C.2d 423 \(1983\). [16]

Some question might persist on the commonality of issues prerequisite because of language in the FCC ruling. The FCC order refers to a "high burden" on those alleging abuse of process. Plaintiffs cite this language and argue the burden placed on them was higher before the FCC. The quoted language does not indicate the higher standard

⁴ HN8⁴ Final determinations of administrative agency acting in a judicial capacity are to be accorded preclusive effect in substantive judicial proceedings. Toomer v. Iowa Dep't of Job Serv., 340 N.W.2d 594, 598 \(Iowa 1983\). Plaintiffs do not object to the general applicability of issue preclusion analysis in this case.

⁵ A higher standard is usually reserved for situations where particularly important constitutional rights, such as deportation, are at stake. When this type of interest is implicated a clear and convincing evidentiary standard is generally utilized. See Woody v. Immigration & Naturalization Serv., 385 U.S. 276, 286-87, 87 S. Ct. 483, , 17 L. Ed. 2d 362, 369 \(1966\). There is no claim here by any party that such an interest was involved in the proceedings before the FCC.

518 N.W.2d 352, *357A 994 Iowa Sup. LEXIS 153, 16

was employed. The language referred to the nature of the elements making up a showing for an abuse of process before the FCC. It clearly did not refer [17] to the evidentiary standard required to prove those elements.⁶

The standard of proof in this action in Iowa district court is also, of course, a preponderance of the evidence. Iowa R. App. p. 14(f)(6).

The FCC held that DTV had failed to establish the "absence of any reasonable basis for CRTV's allegations," and that "CRTV raised colorable allegations [in] an area of legitimate commission concern." In order to avoid application of the Noerr doctrine under [18] the sham exception, DTV is required to show [*358] the same thing. Both showings are to be established by a preponderance of the evidence.

We conclude that CRTV has established identity of issues and proceed to the second contested element (whether the issue was previously litigated).

IV. Plaintiffs also contend the second prerequisite for issue preclusion (previously litigated) was not met. Plaintiffs note that the FCC order was a denial of hearing with respect to their abuse of process claim. Because no hearing was held, the plaintiffs argue they could not have "litigated" the issue.

The FCC order was essentially a summary judgment on the pleadings and papers submitted. The plaintiffs did not appeal so the order became a final agency determination. We think the FCC determination on submission of DTV's request for sanction satisfies the second prerequisite. The plaintiffs had a chance to further litigate the question, but declined. They are barred from relitigating this in the same manner as any party subject to summary judgment. Bascom v. Jos. Schlitz Brewing Co., 395 N.W.2d 879, 884 (Iowa 1986); 73 Am. Jur. 2d Summary Judgment § 40, at 768 (1974).

V. [19] What we have said renders all other issues moot, including both those on appeal and cross-appeal.⁷ CRTV's motions for directed verdict should have been sustained.

REVERSED ON THE APPEAL; AFFIRMED ON THE CROSS-APPEAL.

End of Document

⁶ In context, the phrase read:

The factors set out above concerning the pleading requirements for strike petition allegations impose a high burden on those seeking to raise a strike petition issue. With regard to the matters DTV has alleged, we reviewed the CRTV pleading individually and cumulatively. Considering all the facts and circumstances of this matter, we cannot find that DTV has presented a substantial question of fact requiring a hearing with respect to abuse of process by CRTV.

Dubuque T.V., 4 FCC Rcd 1999.

⁷ On cross-appeal plaintiff Bond complains he was entitled to prejudgment interest. Under our holding he is not entitled to judgment so the claim for any interest also fails.

Syscomm Int'l Corp. v. Synoptics Communications

United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York

June 28, 1994, Decided

CV 94-2025

Reporter

856 F. Supp. 135 *; 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8837 ; 1995-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,923

SYSCOMM INTERNATIONAL CORPORATION, Plaintiff, v. SYNOPTICS COMMUNICATIONS, INC., ANIXTER, INC. and WESTCON, INC., Defendants.

Subsequent History: [1] Counsel Amended July 12, 1994.

Core Terms

arbitration, antitrust claim, domestic, compel arbitration, termination, arbitration proceedings, agreement to arbitrate, arbitration clause, products, anti trust law, transactions, distributor, antitrust, parties

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pretrial Matters > Alternative Dispute Resolution > General Overview

HN1[] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

Antitrust claims arising from domestic transactions are arbitrable.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Arbitration > Federal Arbitration Act > Stay Pending Arbitration

International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > International Commercial Arbitration > Arbitration

Civil Procedure > Pretrial Matters > Alternative Dispute Resolution > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Arbitration > Federal Arbitration Act > General Overview

HN2[] Federal Arbitration Act, Stay Pending Arbitration

In passing on a 9 U.S.C.S. § 3 application for a stay while the parties arbitrate, a federal court may consider only issues relating to the making and performance of the agreement to arbitrate. The court may not refuse to grant a stay under § 3 based on considerations of judicial economy.

Counsel: For Plaintiff: BLODNICK, ABRAMOWITZ & BLODNICK, ESQS., BY: EDWARD K. BLODNICK, ESQ., Roslyn Heights, New York.

For SYNOPTICS, Defendant: SHEARMAN & STERLING, ESQS., William J.F. Roll, III, Esq., New York, New York. For WESTCON, INC., Defendant: WILSON, ELSER, MOSKOWITZ, EDELMAN & DICKER, ESQS., BY: FRED N. KNOPF, ESQ., New York, New York.

Judges: WEXLER

Opinion by: LEONARD D. WEXLER

Opinion

[*135] MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

WEXLER, District Judge

Plaintiff Syscomm International Corporation ("Syscomm") brings this action against defendants SynOptics Communications, Inc. ("SynOptics"), Anixter, Inc. ("Anixter") and Westcon, Inc. ("Westcon") for violations of the antitrust laws. Upon commencing this action, Syscomm requested a stay of a certain ongoing arbitration proceeding between Syscomm's assignees and SynOptics. SynOptics opposes the motion and requests that this Court compel arbitration of the antitrust claims against it. For the reasons below, Syscomm's motion for a stay is denied, and SynOptics' request to compel arbitration is granted.

I. BACKGROUND

As alleged in the complaint, Syscomm, through a former wholly-owned subsidiary Romel Technology, Inc. ("Romel"),¹ was a wholesale distributor of computer products. SynOptics is a manufacturer [*2] of computer networking products. Anixter and Westcon sell, install and service computer network systems and related products, and are non-exclusive distributors of SynOptics' products.

On or about June 11, 1991, Romel and SynOptics entered into a distributor agreement, whereby Romel was appointed a nonexclusive authorized distributor of designated [*136] SynOptics' products (the "Agreement"). The Agreement was for a one year term, to renew automatically for a successive one-year period unless terminated by mutual agreement of the parties or in accordance with the terms of the Agreement.

By letter dated November 3, 1993, SynOptics purported to cancel the Agreement effective February 3, 1994 (the "November 3 Termination Notice"). As of November 4, 1993, Romel's sales of SynOptic's products was about $ 12 million.

On November 15, 1993, by a Demand for Arbitration (the "Demand"), Romel commenced an arbitration [*3] proceeding against SynOptics under the auspices of the American Arbitration Association in San Francisco, California, pursuant to an arbitration clause in the Agreement,² for "breaches of contract, bad faith termination of ¹ Romel did business as Management Systems Group, which was formerly known as Information Technology Distributors, Inc.

² The arbitration clause provides:

K.9 Arbitration. Any controversy or claim arising out of or relating to this Agreement, or the breach thereof, shall be settled by arbitration at the office of the American Arbitration Association ("AAA") in Santa Clara or San Francisco County in accordance with the rules of the AAA and judgment upon the award rendered may be entered in any court having jurisdiction. The arbitrator shall not have the authority to change or revise any decisions made by SynOptics where, by the terms of this Agreement SynOptics has been given sole discretion. In the event a dispute is submitted to arbitration, the arbitrator may award costs and reasonable attorney's fees to the prevailing party.

the contract, breach of duty of good faith, failure to honor commitment to pay soft dollars, unfair competition, predatory and anti-competitive conduct" (the "Arbitration Proceeding").

[4] On or about December 31, 1993, Romel amended its arbitration claim to specify that it sought damages of not less than $ 1,240,095; the original Demand indicated "Claim or Relief Sought: Total monetary damages are unknown at this time." Affidavit of Edward K. Blodnick ("Blodnick Aff.") PP 5-6. In addition, Syscomm agreed to limit its claim against SynOptics to three areas: (1) failure of SynOptics to pay Syscomm certain "soft dollars" earned prior to termination; (2) damages relating to delivery of product to Syscomm in a timely fashion; and (3) inequitable conduct by SynOptics toward Syscomm including, but not limited to, disclosure of Syscomm's customer lists to other distributors, preferential pricing, training and seminars, for which Syscomm sought reinstatement. Blodnick Aff. P 7.

In the meantime in December 1993, CMS Enhancements, Inc. and CDS Distribution, Inc. (collectively, "CDS") entered into a plan and agreement of merger with Syscomm for Syscomm's wholly-owned subsidiary Romel for certain consideration, including shares of CDS common stock. As Syscomm's President explains further in an affidavit in support of the motion for a stay, as a result of the termination, 100,000 [5] shares of CDS common stock, part of the consideration for the merger, were placed in escrow, conditioned on Syscomm obtaining a reinstatement of the Agreement between Romel and SynOptics. Affidavit of John Spielberger ("Spielberger Aff.") P 5. Subsequently, CDS, as successor to Romel, assigned to Syscomm all of Romel's right, title and interest in any and all claims, including antitrust claims, against SynOptics, Anixter and Westcon.

Prior to the commencement of this action, the parties exchanged some 6000 pages of documents in the course of the Arbitration Proceeding and completed some four full or partial weeks of hearings, which included 15 days of testimony. In the meantime, by an order dated February 1, 1994, the arbitrator denied a motion by Romel for a preliminary injunction preventing SynOptics, pending the resolution of the Arbitration, from terminating the Agreement on February 3, 1994, pursuant to the November 3 Termination Notice.

Spielberger states that in testimony during the course of the Arbitration Proceeding, Larry Goodwin ("Goodwin"), formerly Vice President for North America for SynOptics, acknowledged discriminatory practices by SynOptics favoring Anixter and [6] Westcon in regard to certain "key seller programs" and special pricing, purportedly clear violations of the antitrust laws. Spielberger Aff. P 9. Spielberger claims that up until that point, Syscomm suspected that SynOptics may have been violating the antitrust laws by certain [*137] discriminatory conduct, "but never had any hardcore proof" until Goodwin's testimony. Id. P 9. Based upon these activities discovered in the Arbitration Proceeding, Syscomm commenced the present action for antitrust violations.

Upon commencing this action, Syscomm requested a stay of the Arbitration Proceeding. Syscomm contends that it will be prejudiced if it is not permitted to pursue its antitrust claims in this action first, and, in any event, Syscomm may not pursue antitrust claims in arbitration as it violates public policy. Moreover, Syscomm contends that it has no agreement to arbitrate antitrust claims with Anixter and Westcon, and it should have the opportunity to pursue its antitrust claims in one forum, this Court, against all defendants.

In a conference call with the Court on June 17, 1994, Syscomm's and SynOptics' attorneys agreed that the language of the arbitration clause in the Agreement [7] encompassed Syscomm's antitrust claims against SynOptics. As a result, the attorneys further agreed that it was unnecessary for SynOptics to bring a formal motion to compel arbitration of these claims and SynOptics' opposition to the stay motion would be treated as a motion to compel arbitration of the antitrust claims against it. Both parties confirmed this understanding in letters to the Court that same day.

II. DISCUSSION

Because Syscomm and SynOptics agree that the arbitration clause applies to Syscomm's antitrust claims against SynOptics, the issue presented is whether antitrust claims arising from domestic transactions are arbitrable where the parties have agreed to arbitrate them. While, at one time, the answer to this question in the Second Circuit would have been that such claims are nonarbitrable, see American Safety Equipment Corp. v. J.P. Maguire & Co.,

391 F.2d 821 \(2d Cir. 1968\), this Court believes that the Second Circuit and the Supreme Court, if faced with this issue, would conclude that HN1[ antitrust claims arising from domestic transactions are arbitrable.

Syscomm argues that the Second Circuit's decision in American Safety, supra, 8 which held that domestic antitrust claims are nonarbitrable, controls the decision in this case. SynOptics, on the other hand, argues that the American Safety doctrine has been implicitly overruled by recent Supreme Court decisions upholding the enforceability of agreements to arbitrate international antitrust disputes, see Mitsubishi Motors Corp. v. Soler Chrysler-Plymouth, Inc., 473 U.S. 614, 87 L. Ed. 2d 444, 105 S. Ct. 3346 \(1985\), and agreements to arbitrate domestic securities law claims and RICO claims, see Rodriguez de Quijas v. Shearson/American Express, Inc., 490 U.S. 477, 104 L. Ed. 2d 526, 109 S. Ct. 1917 \(1989\) (holding that claims under the Securities Act of 1933 are arbitrable); Shearson/American Express, Inc. v. McMahon, 482 U.S. 220, 96 L. Ed. 2d 185, 107 S. Ct. 2332 \(1987\) (holding that claims under the Securities Act of 1934 and RICO claims are arbitrable). Because this Court agrees that the Second Circuit would no longer adhere to the American Safety doctrine, this Court 9 grants SynOptics' request to compel arbitration and denies Syscomm's request for a stay of the pending Arbitration Proceeding.

In Mitsubishi, the Supreme Court upheld the enforceability of an agreement to resolve antitrust claims by arbitration when the agreement arises from an international commercial transaction. Although the Mitsubishi court found it "unnecessary to assess the legitimacy of the American Safety doctrine as applied to agreements to arbitrate arising from domestic transactions," it "confessed to some skepticism of certain aspects of the American Safety doctrine." Mitsubishi, 473 U.S. at 629, 632. Upon identifying four ingredients or concerns of the American Safety doctrine, id. at 632, the Court first rejected as unjustified the concern that there is a "strong possibility that contracts which generate antitrust disputes may be contracts of adhesion." Id. Rather, the Court observed that a party resisting arbitration may attack directly the validity of the agreement or make a showing that would warrant setting aside the forum-selection 10 clause. Id. The Court then determined that the "potential complexity [of antitrust issues] should *138 not suffice to ward off arbitration," thereby rejecting the concern that antitrust issues are "ill-adapted to the arbitral process." In this respect the Court noted, in particular, that "adaptability and access to expertise are hallmarks of arbitration," and that "even the courts following American Safety . . . have agreed that an undertaking to arbitrate antitrust claims entered into after the dispute arises is acceptable." Id. at 633 (emphasis in original). Next, the Court rejected, as another concern of the American Safety doctrine, the "proposition that an arbitration panel will pose too great a danger of innate hostility to the constraints on business conduct that antitrust law imposes." Id. at 634. Lastly, the Court addressed the ingredient it considered the "core of the American Safety doctrine -- the fundamental importance to American democratic capitalism of the regime of the antitrust laws." Id. After noting that the private cause 11 of action, designed to afford compensation to injured competitors and to pose a deterrent to potential violators, plays a central role in enforcing this regime, and finding no reason to assume at the outset of the dispute that international arbitration will not provide an adequate mechanism, the Court concluded that "so long as the prospective litigant effectively may vindicate its statutory cause of action in the arbitral forum, the statute will continue to serve both its remedial and deterrent function." Id. at 636-37. Thus, the Court found none of the four ingredients or concerns of the American Safety doctrine justified denying enforcement of an agreement to arbitrate antitrust claims arising from an international commercial transaction.

Syscomm contends that the American Safety doctrine is "still good law and has not been overturned by the United States Supreme Court or any other decision." In support of its position, Syscomm relies on Stendig International, Inc. v. B & B Italia, S.p.A., 633 F. Supp. 27 \(S.D.N.Y. 1986\), a 1986 district court decision, which held that because Mitsubishi 12 did not overrule American Safety, American Safety was still binding on the court. The Stendig court therefore refused to compel arbitration of an antitrust claim arising from a domestic transaction. See id. at 28. However, Stendig was decided prior to the Supreme Court's decisions in Rodriguez de Quijas and McMahon, and more recent lower court cases have held that American Safety would no longer be followed by the Second Circuit, see, e.g., Hough v. Merrill, Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 757 F. Supp. 283, 286 \(S.D.N.Y.\), aff'd without opinion, 946 F.2d 883 \(2d Cir. 1991\); Gemco Latinoamerica, Inc. v. Seiko Time Corp., 671 F. Supp. 972, 978-80 \(S.D.N.Y. 1987\), adhered to in part and dismissed in part on reconsideration, 685 F. Supp. 400 \(S.D.N.Y. 1988\); see also GKG Caribe, Inc. v. Nokia-Mobira, Inc., 725 F. Supp. 109, 111-13 \(D.P.R. 1989\) (concluding that the Supreme Court "would most certainly discard [the American Safety] doctrine").

Plaintiff also relies on a 1987 [13] Second Circuit decision in Genesco, Inc. v. T. Kakiuchi & Co., 815 F.2d 840 (2d Cir. 1987), which Plaintiff misconstrues. Plaintiff contends that in Genesco the Second Circuit "ruled that agreements containing arbitration clauses involving international commerce permitted antitrust claims to be arbitrated while domestic commerce antitrust claims despite having broad arbitration clauses in their agreements was [sic] not arbitrable." Plaintiff's Reply Memorandum of Law, at 3. The Second Circuit held no such thing. Contrary to Syscomm's contention, the Second Circuit, although presented with the issue, did not rule in Genesco that domestic antitrust claims are not arbitrable. Rather, the Second Circuit recognized that the Supreme Court in McMahon would "decide the continued applicability of the American Safety doctrine to domestic commercial transactions," and remanded the issue to the district court with the suggestion that the district court not go forward with trial until the Supreme Court decided McMahon. Genesco, 815 F.2d at 854. Indeed, a more recent Second Circuit decision than Genesco is [14] indicative of the continued expansion of the types of federal statutory claims that may be arbitrated. See Bird v. Shearson Lehman/American Express, Inc., 926 F.2d 116, 118-22 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 501 U.S. 1251, 115 L. Ed. 2d 1056, 111 S. Ct. 2891 (1991). In Bird, the Second Circuit held that an agreement to arbitrate [*139] statutory ERISA claims is enforceable. Id. at 118-22.

While American Safety has not been explicitly overruled, this Court believes that in light of the federal policy favoring arbitration agreements that has fueled the expansion of the types of federal statutory claims that may be arbitrated, the Second Circuit would now hold that the principle of Mitsubishi is not limited to antitrust claims arising in international transactions, and that domestic antitrust claims are arbitrable. See Hough, 757 F. Supp. at 286; see also Gemco, 671 F. Supp. at 980 ("We find that none of the justifications for the American Safety doctrine retain their vigor and that our Court of Appeals would now hold that domestic antitrust [15] claims are subject to arbitration."); cf. Bird, 926 F.2d at 118-22 (agreement to arbitrate statutory ERISA claims held enforceable).

Because Syscomm's antitrust claims fall within the Agreement's arbitration clause, and because those claims are arbitrable, SynOptics' request to compel arbitration is granted and Syscomm's motion for a stay of the pending Arbitration Proceeding is denied. Consequently, Syscomm must submit its antitrust claims against SynOptics to arbitration in accordance with the Agreement.³

Syscomm's claim of prejudice if it is not permitted to pursue its antitrust claims in this action first is unavailing as a basis for refusing to compel arbitration and denying a stay of this action. See Seguros Banvenez, S.A. v. S/S Oliver Drescher, 761 F.2d 855, 862 (2d Cir. 1985). [16] In rejecting a district court's view that section 3 of the Federal Arbitration Act, 9 U.S.C. § 3, grants a federal court plenary discretion over the proceedings, the Second Circuit cautioned in Seguros Banvenez:

Contrary to the [district] court's view, that section does not grant a court plenary discretion over the proceedings. Rather, *HN2*⁴ "in passing on a § 3 application for a stay while the parties arbitrate, a federal court may consider only issues relating to the making and performance of the agreement to arbitrate." The court may not refuse to grant a stay under section 3 based on considerations of judicial economy.

Seguros Banvenez, 761 F.2d at 862 (quoting Prima Paint v. Flood & Conklin, 388 U.S. 395, 404, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1270, 87 S. Ct. 1801 (1967)). In addition, the fact that Syscomm does not have agreements with Anixter or Westcon to arbitrate antitrust claims between them does not justify denying the motion to compel or require one trial in this court, rather than sending only one of the three defendants, i.e., SynOptics, to arbitration. [17] See Seguros Banvenez, 761 F.2d at 862; see, e.g., Steinberg & Lyman v. Takacs, 774 F. Supp. 885, 888 (S.D.N.Y. 1991) (holding that plaintiff's claim that notions of judicial economy favored court trying action at one time, rather than sending only two out of a number of defendants to arbitration, does not withstand mandate of 9 U.S.C. § 3).⁴

³ Syscomm also requested a stay of the Arbitration Proceeding in the event this Court determined that its antitrust claims are nonarbitrable. Based on the determination that Syscomm's antitrust claims are arbitrable, this Court need not reach this issue.

⁴ As neither Anixter nor Westcon has answered or moved in response to the complaint as of this date, this Order does not stay this action as against them.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons above, plaintiff Syscomm's motion for a stay of a certain pending arbitration proceeding is denied, and defendant SynOptics' request to compel arbitration is granted. Based on this determination, this action is stayed as against SynOptics pending arbitration.

SO ORDERED.

LEONARD D. WEXLER

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Dated: Hauppauge, New York

June 28, 1994

End of Document

Tice v. Hoff

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

November 1, 1993, Argued and Submission deferred; June 3, 1993, Submitted, Honolulu, Hawaii ; June 28, 1994, Filed

No. 92-15786

Reporter

1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 16407 *

THORNTON TICE, doing business as Kama'aina News, Plaintiff-Appellant, v. DAVID HOFF; MAUI PUBLISHING CO., publishers of Maui News, Defendants-Appellees.

Notice: [*1] THIS DISPOSITION IS NOT APPROPRIATE FOR PUBLICATION AND MAY NOT BE CITED TO OR BY THE COURTS OF THIS CIRCUIT EXCEPT AS PROVIDED BY THE 9TH CIR. R. 36-3.

Subsequent History: Reported in Table Case Format at: 29 F.3d 634, 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 26137.

Prior History: Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Hawaii. D.C. No. CV-91-00323-HMF. Harold M. Fong, Chief District Judge, Presiding

Disposition: AFFIRMED

Core Terms

interstate commerce, Sherman Act, advertised, instrumentalities, insubstantial, summary judgment, district court, local activity, identification, exclusionary, allegations, conclusory, antitrust, merits

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Jurisdiction

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1 [] Sherman Act, Jurisdiction

Actions founded on federal antitrust law must allege certain facts in order to establish that the federal courts have jurisdiction under the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN2 Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Section 2 of the Sherman act makes it illegal to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several states. 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Jurisdiction

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3 Sherman Act, Jurisdiction

Jurisdiction may not be invoked under the Sherman Act unless the relevant aspect of interstate commerce is identified; it is not sufficient merely to rely on identification of a relevant local activity and to presume an interrelationship with some unspecified aspect of interstate commerce. To establish jurisdiction a plaintiff must allege the critical relationship in the pleadings.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Plaintiff must show as a matter of practical economics that the defendant's activities, taken as a whole, have a not insubstantial effect on the interstate commerce involved.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The competitive significance of plaintiff's exclusion from the market must be measured, not just by a particularized evaluation of his own business, but rather, by a general evaluation of the impact of the restraint on other participants and potential participants in the market from which he has been excluded.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Jurisdiction

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6 Sherman Act, Jurisdiction

Conclusory allegations are not sufficient to bring an action within the scope of the Sherman Act.

Judges: Before: POOLE, WIGGINS, T.G. NELSON, Circuit Judges

Opinion

MEMORANDUM *

Appellant Thornton Tice, doing business as the Kama'aina News ("Appellant"), appeals the district court's entry of summary judgment against him in his antitrust action against the Maui News and its editor, David Hoff ("Appellees"). We affirm.

HN1[] Actions founded on federal antitrust law must allege certain facts in order to establish that the federal courts have jurisdiction under the Sherman Act. HN2[] Section 2 of the Sherman act makes it illegal to monopolize "any part of the trade or commerce among [*2] the several States. . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 2. The Supreme Court has stated that:

HN3[] jurisdiction may not be invoked under [the Sherman Act] unless the relevant aspect of interstate commerce is identified; it is not sufficient merely to rely on identification of a relevant local activity and to presume an interrelationship with some unspecified aspect of interstate commerce. To establish jurisdiction a plaintiff must allege the critical relationship in the pleadings . . .

McLain v. Real Estate Bd. of New Orleans, 444 U.S. 232, 242, 62 L. Ed. 2d 441, 100 S. Ct. 502 \(1980\). The Ninth Circuit has interpreted McLain to require that the HN4[] plaintiff show "as a matter of practical economics" that the defendant's activities, taken as a whole, "have a not insubstantial effect on the interstate commerce involved." Palmer v. Roosevelt Lake Log Owners Ass'n, 651 F.2d 1289, 1291 \(9th Cir. 1981\). More recently, the test was liberalized somewhat by Summit Health, Ltd. v. Pinhas, 500 U.S. 322, 111 S. Ct. 1842, 114 L. Ed. 2d 366 \(1991\)[*3] aff'g Pinhas v. Summit Health, Ltd., 894 F.2d 1024 \(9th Cir. 1989\). The majority there held that "HN5[] the competitive significance of [plaintiff's] exclusion from the market must be measured, not just by a particularized evaluation of his own [business,] but rather, by a general evaluation of the impact of the restraint on other participants and potential participants in the market from which he has been excluded." 500 U.S. at , 111 S. Ct. at 1848.

Appellant's complaint contains only one reference to interstate commerce. It alleges that defendant Hoff caused Maui News to publish his editorial "for general distribution and via instrumentalities of interstate commerce." That statement does not suffice as identification of the aspect of interstate commerce affected, both because of its vagueness and because the local activity from which Appellant is allegedly being excluded has no apparent connection to distribution by instrumentalities of interstate commerce. Appellant, who denies any competition for potential subscribers, distributes his paper for free, though he does aspire to sell it once he can afford boxes for vending the publication. Appellant [*4] has not indicated how his alleged exclusion from the market would affect any distribution by the "instrumentalities of interstate commerce."

Indeed, Appellant maintains that the relevant market is for advertising targeted narrowly at the residents of the island of Maui. In addition, the specific exclusionary behavior alleged--denial of access to the only printing facilities on Maui and inducing a secondary boycott by readers on Maui--is also limited by its own terms to a locale that is only a fraction of the state of Hawaii. Though that market is decidedly local in nature, it does not prohibit Appellant from establishing that it somehow affects interstate commerce. Palmer, 651 F.2d at 1291. Nor must Appellant prove an actual effect on interstate commerce. Summit Health, 500 U.S. at , 111 S. Ct. at 1848. He must only show a potential, but "not insubstantial," impact if the complained-of actions succeed. McLain, 444 U.S. at 246.

However, Appellant has not suggested any such impact. Our own inquiry reveals that the only evidence in the record pertinent to the market from which Appellant [*5] claims he was excluded is a list of those who have advertised in the Kama'aina News. Out of approximately 150 advertisers, only four have addresses outside Hawaii. This evidence only indirectly addresses the effect of Appellee's allegedly exclusionary tactics, the focus of the jurisdictional inquiry, and is therefore of questionable value. Moreover, it fails to establish any substantial impact on interstate commerce. Four customers, fewer than three percent of those who have ever advertised with Appellant, and perhaps a smaller proportion by dollar value,¹ is an "insubstantial" impact on interstate commerce if there ever was one.

* This disposition is not appropriate for publication and may not be cited to or by the courts of this circuit except as provided by 9th Cir. R. 36-3.

When given the opportunity, after argument, to brief the issue of Sherman Act jurisdiction, Appellant failed once again to allege any connection to interstate commerce other than a [*6] conclusory assertion that the Maui News was "a business in interstate commerce." Appellant chose not to file a reply brief even after Appellees cited case law holding that such HNC[[↑]] conclusory allegations are not sufficient to bring the action within the scope of the Sherman Act. See Thornhill Publishing Co. v. General Tel. & Elec., 594 F.2d 730, 738 (9th Cir. 1979).

Though we are loath to resolve an action on such grounds, we must conclude that Appellant cannot present any facts establishing that the actions of which he complains fall within the scope of the Sherman Act. The district court and this court are therefore without jurisdiction to consider the merits of either the claims raised under that statute or the pendent claims. The district court originally entered summary judgment against Appellant on the merits, but such a disposition is also appropriate for a failure to establish jurisdictional facts under the Sherman Act, see Thornhill Publishing, 594 F.2d at 739, and this court may affirm on any ground fairly presented by the record. Rano v. Sipa Press, Inc., 987 F.2d 580, 584 (9th Cir. 1993). [*7] We therefore conclude that Appellant stated no claim upon which relief could be granted and AFFIRM the judgment entered against the Appellant.

AFFIRMED

End of Document

¹ We note that two of the four out-of-state advertisers are non-profit advocacy groups. There is no evidence to suggest that these out-of-state advertisers were repeat customers for Appellant's services.

Diskin v. Daily Racing Form

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

July 7, 1994, Decided ; July 7, 1994, Filed

92 Civ. 6374 (MBM)

Reporter

1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9129 *; 1994-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,649

ROBERT DISKIN, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated, Plaintiff, v. DAILY RACING FORM, INC. and K-III INFORMATION COMPANY, INC., Defendants.

Core Terms

purchaser, distributors, retailers, Sherman Act, retail price, overcharge, prices, direct-purchaser, producer, indirect, racetracks, wholesalers, monopolize, customers, papers, cases, Clayton Act, chain, sales, monopoly power, circulation, competitors, antitrust, organizer, resale, block

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Indirect Purchasers

HN1 [down arrow] Standing, Clayton Act

"Indirect purchasers" have no standing to sue manufacturers and distributors under § 4 of the Clayton Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Resale Price Maintenance

Business & Corporate Law > Agency Relationships > Duties & Liabilities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Agency Relationships > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Establishment > Elements > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

HN2 Vertical Restraints, Resale Price Maintenance

A manufacturer is permitted to set resale prices so long as a distributor is not an independent entrepreneur, but rather is merely a broker, agent or employee. The United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit has formulated a generally applicable test for determining whether two actors constitute distinct economic entities for purposes of the Sherman Act. In the context of the principal/agent relationship this analysis requires consideration of a number of elements which include: whether the agent performs a function on behalf of his principal other than securing an offer from a buyer for the principal's product; the degree to which the agent is authorized to exercise his discretion concerning the price and terms under which the principal's product is to be sold; and finally whether use of the agent constitutes a separate step in the vertical distribution of the principal's product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN3 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

For purposes of the Sherman Act, a producer's setting of a retail price does not, by itself, determine whether the producer and a retailer are distinct economic entities. Resale price maintenance cases take as a starting point the allegation that a manufacturer is attempting to fix the price at which its distributors resell its products, and thus turn on other indicia of entrepreneurial independence.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

HN4 Amendment of Pleadings, Leave of Court

Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a) provides leave to amend a complaint shall be freely given when justice so requires.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Indirect Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5 Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Certain Sherman Act § 2 claims that do not involve passed-on monopoly overcharges are outside the scope of Illinois Brick's holding that "indirect purchasers" have no standing to sue.

Counsel: [*1] For Plaintiff: Paul D. Wexler, Esq., Raymond A. Bragar, Esq., BRAGAR & WEXLER, P.C., New York, New York.

For Defendants: LLoyd Constantine, Esq., Mitchell C. Shapiro, Esq., McDermott, WILL & EMERY, New York, New York.

Judges: Mukasey

Opinion by: MICHAEL B. MUKASEY

Opinion

OPINION AND ORDER

MICHAEL B. MUKASEY, U.S.D.J.

Plaintiff brought this action pursuant to Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15, alleging that defendants violated Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2, and Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18, in connection with their purchase of assets from a competitor newspaper. Defendants move for summary judgment, and plaintiffs cross-move for leave to amend the complaint.¹ For the reasons set forth below, both motions are denied.

[*2] I.

The following facts are uncontested. Plaintiff Robert Diskin has attended racetracks in New York, California, Florida and New Jersey, among other states, an average of at least 50 times a year for approximately 30 years. (Diskin Aff. P 2) On the vast majority of the days that Diskin attended the racetrack, he purchased a copy of The Daily Racing Form (the "DRF"). (Diskin Aff. P 3) Diskin has always paid the stated cover price for the DRF, except in Florida where he paid the cover price plus sales tax. (Diskin Aff. P 3) He has never seen the DRF offered for retail sale at any price other than the cover price plus applicable sales tax. (Diskin Aff. P 4)

In February 1992, defendant The Daily Racing Form, Inc. ("DRF") -- publisher of the DRF -- purchased certain assets of The Racing Times, Inc. -- the former publisher of a daily racing newspaper called The Racing Times. (Dow Aff. PP 1-2) Thereafter, DRF increased the suggested retail price of the DRF. (Dow Aff. P 2)

Approximately 92% of the circulation of the DRF is, and at all relevant times has been, sold to independent distributors, racetracks, or organizations representing racetracks. (Dow Aff. P [*3] 3) About 7% of circulation consists of sales by union drivers employed by DRF to independent retailers such as newsstands. (Dow Aff. P 3; Brooks Dep. at 37) The remaining 1% consists of sales direct to consumers through mail subscriptions and sales at DRF's offices. (Dow Aff. P 3; Brooks Dep. at 37) All of Diskin's purchases of the DRF occurred at racetracks and newsstands. (Diskin Aff. P 3; Pl. 10/20/92 Adm.)

Defendants do not own, operate, or control any wholesalers, racetracks, or newsstands. (Dow Aff. PP 5-6; Brooks Dep. at 34; Dow Rep. Aff. P 3) These entities are separate and distinct from defendants. (Dow Rep. Aff. P 3) DRF sells copies of the DRF to wholesalers and retailers. (Wexler 12/13/93 Aff. Exh. D; Dow Aff. P 7; Dow Rep. Aff. PP

¹ In his memorandum replying to defendants' arguments against granting his motion, plaintiff also sur-replied to defendants' reply memorandum supporting their motion. Because my rules of practice generally prohibit sur-replies, and because plaintiff did not request permission to sur-reply, this portion of plaintiff's memorandum has been disregarded.

3-6, 10) The terms of these sales allow for the return for full credit of all unsold papers. (Wexler 12/13/93 Aff. Exh. D; Brooks Dep. at 45, 64; Dow Rep. Aff. PP 10-11) Under this arrangement, wholesalers and retailers bear the risk of loss between the time they purchase the papers and the time they return any papers to DRF. (Dow Rep. Aff. P 12) The price per copy that DRF bills the wholesalers varies. (Wexler 12/13/93 Aff. Exh. D; [*4] Dow Rep. Dep. P 4)

The New York Racing Association ("NYRA") -- the organization that operates the Aqueduct, Belmont, and Saratoga racetracks -- is one example of a DRF distributor. (Dow Rep. Aff. P 3) NYRA's employees sell the DRF to the public at stands located at NYRA's racetracks. (Wexler 12/13/93 Aff. Exh. E) NYRA charges retail customers the printed cover price for a copy of the DRF. (Brooks Dep. at 52-53) Like other distributors, NYRA bears the risk of loss between the time it purchases the papers and the time it returns any unsold papers to DRF. (Brooks Dep. at 45-46; Dow Rep. Aff. P 12) NYRA sells also its own competing publications. (Dow Rep. Aff. P 7)

Further, the evidence before me, when viewed in the light most favorable to Diskin, see United States v. Diebold, Inc., 369 U.S. 654, 655, 8 L. Ed. 2d 176, 82 S. Ct. 993 (1962), raises two issues of disputed fact: whether defendants control the price at which retailers sell the DRF, and whether NYRA sells the DRF on a commission basis.

With respect to the first issue, DRF's Chief Executive Officer ("CEO"), and its circulation manager both deny that [*5] defendants control the DRF's retail price, with the CEO stating that distributors "are free to make their own decisions regarding the resale and pricing of the paper after it is sold to them" by DRF. (Dow Aff. P 7; Brooks Dep. at 79; Dow Rep. Aff. P 3) Defendants supplement this evidence with a list of retail prices charged by 37 Las Vegas casinos. (Dow Rep. Aff. Exh. A) These prices are highly idiosyncratic, including both unadorned prices ranging from $ 1.00 to $ 2.85 per copy, as well as more complicated pricing arrangements. Under these arrangements, the Sahara, for example, charges a $ 1.00 deposit that is refundable if the paper is returned at the end of the day, and the Sands generally charges $ 3.00 but gives a free copy to players who wager $ 300 or more. (Dow Rep. Aff. Exh. A) While defendants concede sending "ambiguously worded" letters discussing retail prices (Def. Rep. Mem. at 6 n.6), they explain that the letters refer to "suggested retail prices." (Dow Rep. Aff. P 5)

In response, plaintiff has proffered three letters from DRF to wholesalers (Wexler 12/13/93 Aff. P 5) that suggest defendants may control the retail price. (Wexler 12/13/93 Aff. Exh. D) The first letter [*6] is from a DRF circulation director in New Jersey, stating that the DRF's "single copy price . . . will increase to $ 2.85 per copy effective with the issue of Monday, April 6, 1992" and asking its recipients to "make sure all drivers are notified of this price change." The second letter is a March 24, 1992 "inter-office communication" (original all in capitals) from DRF's Los Angeles office. This letter states:

Effective with the issue of Monday, April 6, 1992, the retail price for ALL editions of THE DAILY RACING FORM will be increased to $ 2.85 per copy. Our rate to you will be $ 1.50 per copy. It is important that you notify your dealers of this change so that their customers do not pay the old price.

(emphasis and paragraph break omitted) The third letter is from a DRF circulation director in Chicago, providing:
Please be advised that, effective with issue [sic] dated Monday, April 6, 1992, the price structure of DAILY RACING FORM will be changed as follows:

PRICE TO PUBLIC:	$ 2.85
PRICE TO RETAILERS:	2.46
PRICE TO YOU:	2.41

Please make certain this new price schedule is put into effect.

The revised price structure is designed to increase [*7] your income as well as our income while maintaining the relative gross profit margins each as [sic] traditionally enjoyed.

As proof that NYRA sells the DRF on commission, plaintiff has proffered an April 10, 1992 letter from the President of NYRA, to the President and CEO of DRF. In this letter, NYRA's president states that "NYRA presently earns a $ 0.35 distributor's commission for each [copy of the DRF] sold at its racetracks." (Wexler 12/13/93 Aff. Exh. E) Defendant counters this evidence with an affidavit suggesting that NYRA's President "was simply mistaken in his choice of words, or perhaps was attempting to revise the distribution arrangement between NYRA and DRF." (Dow Rep. Aff. P 8)

II.

Defendants contend that plaintiff is an "indirect purchaser" of the DRF and that, therefore, he is barred by the rule of Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061 (1977), from seeking antitrust damages from them. Plaintiff responds that Illinois Brick is no obstacle to this action because the distributors of the DRF are merely sales agents of DRF and, therefore, he purchased [*8] the DRF direct from defendants. Moreover, plaintiff contends that even if Illinois Brick's direct-purchaser rule bars his Sherman Act § 1 claim, it does not bar his Sherman Act § 2 claim.

In Illinois Brick, purchasers of concrete block brought an action under § 4 of the Clayton Act against manufacturers and distributors of the concrete block. 431 U.S. at 726. These purchasers did not buy the concrete block direct from the defendants, however. Id. Rather, they bought the concrete block from general contractors, who bought it from masonry contractors, who in turn bought it from the defendants. Id. The Illinois Brick Court held that as HN1 "indirect purchasers," the plaintiffs had no standing to sue the defendants under § 4 of the Clayton Act.

This holding has two rationales. First, the bar on suits by indirect purchasers shields defendants from multiple recoveries. In an earlier case, Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231, 88 S. Ct. 2224 (1968), the Court invalidated the so-called "pass on" defense [*9] which previously had relieved antitrust defendants from liability for monopoly overcharges that plaintiffs, as intermediaries, had passed on to their customers further down the chain of distribution. In abolishing this defense, Hanover Shoe made antitrust defendants liable to those to whom they sold directly for the entire amount of the antitrust overcharge. Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 730-31. Therefore, allowing indirect purchasers to recover for overcharges would expose antitrust defendants, already faced with liability for trebled damages, to multiple recoveries from purchasers all along the distribution chain. Id.

Second, precluding suits by indirect purchasers obviates the need to trace the effect of a monopoly overcharge throughout the distribution chain. Analyzing the indirect effect of a monopoly overcharge would require a court to reconstruct the pricing decisions of intermediate purchasers at each step in the distribution chain, an enterprise fraught with "evidentiary complexities and uncertainties." Id. at 732. The Court reasoned that "however [*10] appealing [an] attempt to allocate the overcharge [among direct purchasers, middlemen, and ultimate customers] might seem in theory, it would add whole new dimensions of complexity to treble-damages suits and seriously undermine their effectiveness." Id. at 737.

The Illinois Brick Court anticipated two exceptions to the prohibition against suits by indirect purchasers. The first is where there is a "pre-existing cost-plus contract" that insulates the direct purchaser "from any decrease in its sales as a result of attempting to pass on the overcharge, because its customer is committed to buying a fixed quantity regardless of price." Id. at 736. The second exception is where "the direct purchaser is owned or controlled by its customer." Id. at 736 n.16. Other courts have added to these exceptions situations in which the direct purchaser buys from a seller owned or controlled by the defendant, see In re Chicken Antitrust Litig. Am. Poultry, 669 F.2d 228, 239 (5th Cir. 1982), [*11] or from a co-conspirator of the defendant. See Arizona v. Shamrock Foods Co., 729 F.2d 1208, 1211-15 (9th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1197, 83 L. Ed. 2d 982, 105 S. Ct. 980 (1985).

Plaintiff does not argue that his claims fall within an exception to the rule of Illinois Brick. Rather, plaintiff contends that the distributors of the DRF are nothing more than sales "agents or subagents," and therefore he purchases copies of the DRF direct from defendants.² (Pl. Opp. Mem. at 3, 7-14) Nonetheless, it bears mention that the Supreme Court has repeatedly refused to "carve out exceptions to the [direct purchaser] rule for particular types of markets" because the "possibility of allowing an exception, even in rather meritorious circumstances, would undermine the rule." Kansas v. Utilicorp United, Inc., 497 U.S. 199, 110 S. Ct. 2807, 2817, 111 L. Ed. 2d 169 (1990) (quoting Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 744). Too readily concluding that a particular industry [*12] structure constitutes a principal-agent arrangement outside the direct-purchaser rule would also undermine the rule.

² Plaintiff makes no attempt to reconcile this argument with his argument that Sierra News Co., allegedly one of the nation's largest wholesalers of the DRF, has standing as a direct purchaser from DRF. (See infra pp. 9-10) Presumably, these are alternative arguments.

To support his contention that DRF distributors are merely agents, plaintiff relies on resale price maintenance cases in which distributors claim that producers are illegally attempting to control resale prices. Under these cases, HN2 [↑] a manufacturer is permitted to set resale prices so long as the distributor is not an independent entrepreneur, see Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 377 U.S. 13, 20-21, 12 L. Ed. 2d 98, 84 S. Ct. 1051 (1964), but rather is merely a broker, agent or employee. See Fuchs Sugars & Syrups, Inc. v. Amstar Corp., 602 F.2d 1025, 1029, 1031 n.5 [*13] (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 917, 62 L. Ed. 2d 172, 100 S. Ct. 232 (1979); Bowen v. New York News, Inc., 522 F.2d 1242, 1252-53 (2d Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 425 U.S. 936, 48 L. Ed. 2d 177, 96 S. Ct. 1667 (1976); North Am. Produce Corp. v. Nick Penachio Co., 705 F. Supp. 746, 750 (E.D.N.Y. 1988). In one of these cases, the Second Circuit formulated a more generally applicable test for determining whether "two actors constitute distinct economic entities for purposes of the Sherman Act":

In the context of the principal/agent relationship this analysis requires consideration of a number of elements which include: whether the agent performs a function on behalf of his principal other than securing an offer from a buyer for the principal's product; the degree to which the agent is authorized to exercise his discretion concerning the price and terms under which the principal's product is to be sold; and finally whether use of the agent constitutes a separate step in the vertical distribution [*14] of the principal's product.

602 F.2d at 1031 n.5.

At the outset, it bears emphasis that HN3 [↑] a producer's setting of the retail price does not, by itself, determine whether the producer and the retailer are distinct economic entities. Resale price maintenance cases take as a starting point the allegation that a manufacturer is attempting to fix the price at which its distributors resell its products, and thus turn on other indicia of entrepreneurial independence. Therefore, the dispute over whether defendants fix the retail price of the DRF does not in itself preclude summary judgment.

However, the undisputed fact that DRF distributors have the right to return unsold papers to DRF at cost favors the conclusion that the distributors do not function as independent entrepreneurs. In Bowen, the Second Circuit viewed as "significant[]" to its determination that newspaper distributors were not agents of the publisher the fact that the distributors did not have the right to return unsold papers at cost, because this arrangement "was intended to cast some risk, although relatively slight, on the franchise dealer." 522 F.2d at 1252 & n.8. [*15] Even the "slight" risk sustained by the distributors in Bowen is greater than the risk borne by the distributors here. Like the distributors in this case, the Bowen distributors presumably faced the risk of loss and theft. In addition, the Bowen distributors had a less favorable right of return, and, unlike the distributors here, they bore the risk of non-payment by home delivery customers. Id. at 1252. Although Bowen does not compel the conclusion that DRF distributors are merely agents of DRF, it suggests that DRF's return policy is an important factor weighing in favor of a finding of mere agency.

The return policy alone, like the assumed fact of retail price setting, is not dispositive proof of entrepreneurial insignificance. However, both of these facts, together with evidence that NYRA may sell the DRF on a commission basis, reasonably could give rise to the inference that DRF retailers do not constitute a distinct entrepreneurial link in the chain of distribution. Accordingly, defendants' motion for summary judgment must be denied. See Diebold, 369 U.S. at 655. [*16]

III.

Plaintiff moves to amend his complaint principally by adding a former distributor, Sierra News Co., as a plaintiff. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15\(a\) HN4 [↑] provides leave to amend a complaint "shall be freely given when justice so requires." Plaintiff argues that Sierra, as an alleged direct purchaser from defendants, would not be barred from suing defendants by Illinois Brick's direct-purchaser rule. Therefore, plaintiff contends, granting the motion "will cure any procedural issues and, in large part, moot defendants' motion to dismiss for lack of standing." (Pl. Opp. Mem. at 18)

But there is a contradiction between Diskin's argument that he, as a retail purchaser of the DRF, is a direct purchaser, and his argument that Sierra, as a distributor, is a direct purchaser. Accordingly, if Diskin has standing as a direct purchaser, Sierra does not. Diskin, however, argues that he may pursue his Sherman Act § 2 claim as an indirect purchaser, leaving open the possibility, if Diskin is correct, that Sierra could have standing as a direct purchaser for the purposes of the Sherman Act § 1 claim while Diskin has standing on the Sherman Act § 2 claim.

Plaintiff argues that Illinois Brick [*17] "does not apply to a monopolization count under § 2 of the Sherman Act." (Pl. Opp. Mem. at 15-17) However, the Supreme Court's direct-purchaser rule cases attach no significance to which section of the Sherman Act is alleged to have been violated in Clayton Act § 4 claims, which undermines plaintiff's argument. The case in which the direct-purchaser rule is ultimately rooted, Hanover Shoe, involved a claim based in Sherman Act § 2. 392 U.S. at 483. Although Illinois Brick itself involved a claim based in § 1, the Court attributed no significance to the fact that Hanover Shoe involved § 2, rather than § 1. Indeed, Illinois Brick relied on Hanover Shoe in reasoning that the direct-purchaser rule avoids multiple liability. 430 U.S. at 730-31. Likewise, Utilicorp treated Hanover Shoe and Illinois Brick as a single line of cases, notwithstanding that the cases involved different sections of the Sherman Act. 110 S. Ct. at 2812. Against this backdrop, it cannot be contended seriously that [*18] the applicability of the direct-purchaser rule depends, as a general matter, upon whether a Clayton Act § 4 claim alleges violations of Sherman Act § 1 or Sherman Act § 2.³

However, HN5 certain Sherman Act § 2 claims that do not involve passed-on monopoly overcharges are outside the scope of Illinois Brick. In Crimpers Promotions, Inc. v. Home Box Office, Inc., 724 F.2d 290 (2d Cir. 1983), the organizer of a trade show alleged that the defendants harmed it by organizing a boycott of the show in an attempt to monopolize the cable television industry. 724 F.2d at 293-94. [*19] The Second Circuit held that this claim was not barred by Illinois Brick's direct-purchaser rule because there was "no danger of double recovery." Id. at 293. The alleged boycott may have harmed persons other than the organizer of the show, namely, the potential participants in the trade show -- cable television producers and stations -- who were allegedly denied the opportunity to negotiate directly prices more favorable to each. Id. at 294. However, this harm was "distinct and different" from the harm allegedly suffered by the organizer of the show, which included the expenditures on the failed show and loss of reasonably anticipated profits. Id. at 293-94.

In Dart Drug Corp. v. Corning Glass Works, 480 F. Supp. 1091, 1101-02 (D. Md. 1979), the Court held that the direct-purchaser rule did not block a claim that the defendant overcharged plaintiff as a result of its monopoly power, where the overcharge was not passed on by an intermediary. Specifically, the claim was that defendant permits certain of plaintiff's competitors on the retail level to [*20] purchase directly from defendant, while it does not afford plaintiff the same opportunity. Thus plaintiff has access to defendant's products only by purchasing them from intermediaries, i.e., wholesale distributors. Plaintiff claims that its exclusion from this wholesale distribution level results in discrimination in prices and services which it receives and in the availability of particular lines of merchandise which plaintiff and its competitors sell in the retail market.

480 F. Supp. at 1096 n.7 Thus, the defendant's monopolization allowed it to engage in price discrimination that resulted in the plaintiff paying a higher price than others for defendants' goods. 480 F. Supp. at 1101. The Dart Drug Court reasoned that proof of the damages caused by this price discrimination "would not involve proof of the amount of the overcharge which was passed down the chain of distribution, but instead simply a comparison of the relative prices paid by plaintiff and its competitors" who benefited from the price discrimination. Id. In addition, the court noted that "no one else has standing to claim that plaintiff was injured [*21] by defendant's alleged abuse of monopoly power." Id.

In a similar case from this District, Chatham Brass Co. v. Honeywell, Inc., 512 F. Supp. 108 (S.D.N.Y. 1981), the Court held that an indirect purchaser had a Sherman Act § 2 claim where it alleged that a producer, as part of an attempt at monopolization, charged other companies, including that plaintiff's competitors, a lower price than it was willing to charge that plaintiff, forcing that plaintiff to purchase from some of these other companies. Id. at 110-11. Here, plaintiff's Sherman Act § 2 claim -- that he was injured by "an increased price to a retail consumer based upon the monopoly power that defendants were able to exercise over the relevant product in the relevant market" (Pl. Opp. Mem. at 16-17) -- does not, on its face, raise the issue of price discrimination. On the contrary, plaintiff contends that the retail price of the DRF is fixed at a uniform price. Moreover, plaintiff does not allege that DRF refused to sell to him directly, or that DRF offered to sell to him only on terms that forced him to purchase through an intermediary. Therefore, [*22] plaintiff's § 2 claim is not taken outside Illinois Brick by either Dart Drug or Chatham.

³ Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., 442 U.S. 330, 60 L. Ed. 2d 931, 99 S. Ct. 2326 (1979), does not dictate a contrary conclusion. The Sonotone Court explicitly stated that it was not deciding the issue of whether the plaintiff's claim was barred by Illinois Brick's direct-purchaser rule. 442 U.S. at 338 n.3.

Nonetheless, plaintiff seizes on general language in Chatham that, on its face, would appear to save his claim from the direct-purchaser rule:

Illinois Brick does not bar a damages claim . . . since [plaintiff] is complaining, not of injury resulting from the passing on of a price-fixing overcharge by a middleman, but rather of direct injury from [defendant's] alleged success in creating sufficient monopoly power to raise prices; the proof required does not raise the difficulties foreseen in Illinois Brick of separating out passed-on overcharges from legitimate price increases imposed by a middleman, but rather is limited to a comparison of the prices [plaintiff] actually paid for goods to the prices it would have paid if [defendant] had not attempted to monopolize this market.

512 F. Supp. 116 (citing Dart Drug). This language could be taken to imply that where a producer's attempt to monopolize is a direct cause of a retail price above the competitive price -- as where, as alleged here, the producer uses its market power to coerce [*23] retailers into charging a supra-competitive retail price -- there is no need to apportion the overcharge between the producer and the retailer, because the producer can be deemed liable for the entire overcharge.

Reading Chatham that broadly would establish a rule incompatible with Illinois Brick in any case where the producer exercises its monopoly power to increase also its price to retailers. In such a case, retailers also will have a Sherman Act § 2 claim against the producer, exposing the producer to double liability under the rule of Hanover Shoe. A similar incompatibility was recognized in Dart Drug:

To the extent that plaintiff will seek to prove injury incurred by reason of prices generally set above the competitive market level, the rule announced in Illinois Brick applies. Plaintiff does not purchase directly from defendant, and could therefore only be injured by such an overcharge if it was passed on to plaintiff.

480 F. Supp. at 1102 (footnote omitted). Because a producer would have no incentive to monopolize a market and fix retail prices unless it also increases its price to retailers, it will be the rare case in [*24] which a broad reading of Chatham is compatible with Illinois Brick.

Regardless, this is not such a case. Assuming arguendo that defendants controlled the retail price of the DRF, as opposed to merely setting a suggested retail price, the evidence before me on the issue of whether defendants increased the price they charge distributors simultaneously with an increase in the retail price shows that the two prices increased together. (Wexler 12/13/93 Aff. Exh. D) On this record, the direct-purchaser rule bars plaintiff from bringing a Sherman Act § 2 claim as an indirect purchaser.

Therefore, Diskin's claims and Sierra's claims are mutually exclusive: if Diskin, as a retail purchaser of the DRF has standing as a direct purchaser, Sierra, as a distributor, cannot have standing as a direct purchaser, and vice versa. Accordingly, plaintiff is in no position to move for Sierra's joinder. If Sierra wants to intervene in this case -- and there is nothing before me to prove that it does -- it is free to move for intervention pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 24.

SO ORDERED:

Michael B. Mukasey,

U.S. District Judge

Dated: New York, New York

July 7, [*25] 1994

End of Document

Reiman v. Garcia

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

June 16, 1994,  Submitted, San Francisco, California; July 12, 1994, Filed

No. 92-17118

Reporter

1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 17195 *

JUDY A. REIMAN; JOHN K. REIMAN, Plaintiffs-Appellants, v. H. F. GARCIA; TODD S. STOLP, et al., Defendants-Appellees.

Notice: [*1] THIS DISPOSITION IS NOT APPROPRIATE FOR PUBLICATION AND MAY NOT BE CITED TO OR BY THE COURTS OF THIS CIRCUIT EXCEPT AS PROVIDED BY THE 9TH CIR. R. 36-3.

Subsequent History: Reported in Table Case Format at: 29 F.3d 634, 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 26139.

Prior History: Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of California. D.C. No. CV-92-00341-EJG. Edward J. Garcia, District Judge, Presiding

Disposition: AFFIRMED.

Core Terms

res judicata, contends, subject matter jurisdiction, substantially identical, first action, grounds, first complaint, anti trust law, allegations, conspiracy, immunity, military

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Governments > Courts > Judges

Torts > Public Entity Liability > Immunities > Judicial Immunity

HN1 [down arrow] Courts, Judges

Judges are immune from damage actions for judicial acts taken within the jurisdiction of their courts.

Governments > Federal Government > Claims By & Against

HN2 [down arrow] Federal Government, Claims By & Against

 The panel unanimously found this case suitable for decision without oral argument. Fed. R. App. P. 34(a) and Ninth Circuit Rule 34-4.

Members of the armed services cannot sue the government for injuries that arise out of or are in the course of activity incident to service. Further, enlisted military personnel may not maintain a suit to recover damages from a superior officer for alleged constitutional violations.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Clearly Erroneous Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

HN3 Standards of Review, Clearly Erroneous Review

The existence of subject matter jurisdiction is a question of law which the appellate court reviews de novo. The district court's factual findings on jurisdictional issues must be accepted unless clearly erroneous.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Torts > ... > Types of Damages > Property Damages > Measurements

Torts > ... > Types of Damages > Property Damages > General Overview

HN4 Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

To recover under the RICO statute, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961, a plaintiff must show proof of concrete financial loss, and not merely injury to a valuable intangible property interest.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

International Law > Authority to Regulate > Anticompetitive Activities

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN5 Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

To support a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, the plaintiff must allege a contract, combination, or conspiracy among the several states or with foreign nations. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. To support a claim under § 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, a plaintiff must allege an objective to monopolize or attempt to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several states or with foreign nations.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN6 Standards of Review, De Novo Review

A dismissal for failure to state a claim pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) is a ruling on a question of law and as such is reviewed de novo. Review is limited to the contents of the complaint. All allegations of material fact are taken as true and construed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. A complaint should not be dismissed unless it appears beyond doubt that plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Denial of Allegations

Civil Procedure > Parties > Pro Se Litigants > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Parties > Pro Se Litigants > Pleading Standards

HN7 Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections, Denial of Allegations

The allegations in a pro se complaint will be construed liberally. Pro se plaintiffs are not entitled to the benefit of every conceivable doubt. Rather, a court is required to draw every reasonable or warranted factual inference in the plaintiff's favor. And, even under the more liberal standard applied to pro se plaintiffs, a court must use common sense in interpreting their frequently diffuse pleadings.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN8 Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

A district court may properly on its own motion dismiss an action as to defendants who have not moved to dismiss where such defendants are in a position similar to that of moving defendants or where the claims against such defendants are integrally related.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Res Judicata

HN9 Standards of Review, De Novo Review

A district court's dismissal on res judicata grounds is subject to de novo review. The doctrine of res judicata or claim preclusion insures the finality of decisions, conserves judicial resources and protects litigants from multiple lawsuits. Res judicata operates to bar all grounds for recovery which could have been asserted, whether they were or not, in a prior suit between the same parties, or their privies, on the same cause of action, if the prior suit concluded in a final judgment on the merits rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN10[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A dismissal for failure to state a claim under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) is a judgment on the merits.

Constitutional Law > ... > Immunities > Qualified Immunity > Executive Branch Officials

HN11[] Qualified Immunity, Executive Branch Officials

A former president of the United States is entitled to absolute immunity from damages liability predicated on his official acts.

Judges: Before: GOODWIN, PREGERSON, and RYMER, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

MEMORANDUM *

OVERVIEW

Dr. John Karl Reiman ¹ appeals from the Eastern District Court's order dismissing Reiman's second action brought in the Ninth Circuit against Dr. Todd Stolp, other officials associated with Tuolumne County General Hospital, and various United States government officials. Reiman contends that Appellees conspired to deny him due process and equal protection in violation of federal law and the United States Constitution, violated antitrust laws, obstructed justice, violated the RICO [*2] statute, and violated the Employment Discrimination Act. We have jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1291. We affirm.

BACKGROUND

On August 13, 1990, Appellant, Dr. John Karl Reiman, filed his first action in the United States District Court for the Central District of California against Dr. Todd S. Stolp, other officials associated with Tuolumne County General Hospital, United States Federal Judge H. F. Garcia, and various United States government officials, the majority of which were military officers. Reiman's first complaint alleged a global conspiracy involving the United States government, the United States military, and private individuals, in retaliation for Reiman's whistleblowing activities while Reiman served as a military doctor in the United States Air Force in Europe.² Specifically, Reiman's first complaint alleged that the defendants: (1) conspired to deny him due [*3] process and equal protection of the law in violation of federal law and the United States Constitution; (2) violated antitrust laws; and (3) violated the RICO statute, 18 U.S.C. § 1961. On January 22, 1991, the District Court dismissed Reiman's first action because Reiman lacked standing and because the Court lacked subject matter jurisdiction. Reiman appealed.

* This disposition is not appropriate for publication and may not be cited to or by the courts of this circuit except as provided by 9th Cir. R. 36-3.

¹ The Appellants include Dr. Reiman's wife, Judy Andrea Reiman, and Dr. Reiman's stepson, Kevin Beckley.

² Reiman's allegations included, but were not limited to, charges of narcotics trafficking aboard United States military aircraft and at United States bases in Europe, malpractice at a United States military hospital in Europe, and a conspiracy to prevent Reiman's efforts to attain world peace.

On August 10, 1992, we affirmed the District Court's dismissal as to Judge Garcia on grounds of judicial immunity,³ and as to all United States government and military defendants under the Feres doctrine.⁴ Further, we affirmed the District Court's dismissal of Reiman's claims against Stolp and the other civilian defendants. [*4] As the District Court correctly determined, Reiman failed to establish a federal claim against Stolp and the other civilian defendants under either the RICO statute 18 U.S.C. § 1961, or antitrust law.⁵

[*5] While Reiman's appeal in his first action in the Central District was pending, Reiman filed a second action in the Northern District of California. This second complaint was substantially identical to Reiman's first complaint, and named virtually the identical parties, including Stolp.⁶ The Northern District transferred the matter to the Eastern District. In his order transferring the case, Judge Legge noted the striking similarity between Reiman's first and second actions, and ordered that further proceedings be consistent with and conform to the pending decision in Reiman's first appeal to this Court.

On November 16, 1992, the Eastern District Court dismissed Reiman's second action on several grounds: (1) pursuant to Stolp's motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(1\) for lack of subject matter jurisdiction; (2) pursuant to Stolp's Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss Reiman's action for failure to state [*6] a claim upon which relief could be granted; (3) the District Court dismissed, sua sponte, the action as to all remaining defendants who had not answered Reiman's complaint because the complaint was found to be inadequate as a matter of law; (4) the District Court noted that Reiman's second complaint was substantially similar to Reiman's first complaint, the dismissal of which had been affirmed by this Court; (5) a substantially identical action which Reiman had filed in the Western District of Texas had been dismissed;⁷ (6) as to President George Bush, the action was dismissed on grounds of absolute presidential immunity from civil suits. In addition, the District Court dismissed the suit as to Reiman's wife, Judy Andrea Reiman and Reiman's stepson, Kevin Beckley, because their claims were derivative of Reiman's claims and therefore lacked an independent basis for relief.

[*7] ANALYSIS

1. Lack of Subject Matter Jurisdiction

Reiman contends that the District Court erroneously dismissed his complaint because subject matter jurisdiction exists via his federal claims against Stolp and the other named defendants. Specifically, Reiman first asserts that the actions of Appellees violated the RICO statute, 18 U.S.C. § 1961.

HN3 [↑] The existence of subject matter jurisdiction is a question of law which we review de novo. Reebok Int'l Ltd. v. Marnatech Enterprises, Inc., 970 F.2d 552, 554 \(9th Cir. 1992\). The district court's factual findings on jurisdictional issues must be accepted unless clearly erroneous. Id. at 554.

³ HN1 [↑] Judges are immune from damage actions for judicial acts taken within the jurisdiction of their courts." Ashelman v. Pope, 793 F.2d 1072, 1075 \(9th Cir. 1988\).

⁴ In Feres v. United States, 340 U.S. 135, 95 L. Ed. 152, 71 S. Ct. 153 \(1950\), the Supreme Court held that HN2 [↑] members of the armed services could not sue the government for injuries that "arise out of or are in the course of activity incident to service." Further, "enlisted military personnel may not maintain a suit to recover damages from a superior officer for alleged constitutional violations." Chappell v. Wallace, 462 U.S. 296, 305, 76 L. Ed. 2d 586, 103 S. Ct. 2362 \(1983\).

⁵ Reiman's primary claim against Stolp and the other civilian defendants appeared to be a state law claim of defamation. We found that because the District Court properly dismissed Reiman's federal claims before trial, this pendent state law claim was also properly dismissed. See Cook, Perkiss & Liehe v. Northern Cal. Collection Serv., 911 F.2d 242, 247 \(9th Cir. 1990\).

⁶ Reiman's second complaint did, however, add one additional defendant -- President George Bush.

⁷ The Western District of Texas, Judge Edward C. Prado, ruled that its dismissal of Reiman's action with prejudice would have a res judicata effect on similar cases filed by Reiman throughout the United States.

Our review of the record convinces us that the District Court did not err in dismissing Reiman's current action for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. As we stated in our dismissal of Reiman's first appeal, Reiman's alleged personal injuries are not compensable under RICO. Oscar v. University Students Co-Op. Ass'n, 965 F.2d 783, 785-6 \(9th Cir. 1992\), cert. denied, 121 L. Ed. 2d 581, U.S. , 113 S. Ct. 655 (1992). [*8] HN4 To recover under RICO, a plaintiff must show proof of concrete financial loss, and not merely injury to a valuable intangible property interest. Id. at 785. Reiman has not alleged any financial loss as a direct or indirect result of racketeering activity by Appellees. Reiman merely claims he has suffered damages in the billions of dollars. "RICO was intended to combat organized crime, not to provide a federal cause of action and treble damages to every tort plaintiff." Id. at 786. Therefore, Reiman's RICO claim fails.

Reiman also contends that subject matter jurisdiction exists because the Appellees violated federal antitrust laws. We disagree. HN5 To support a claim under section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, the plaintiff must allege a contract, combination, or conspiracy among the several states or with foreign nations. 15 U.S.C. § 1; Western Concrete Structures Co. v. Mitsui & Co., 760 F.2d 1013, 1016 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 903, 88 L. Ed. 2d 229, 106 S. Ct. 230 (1985). To support a [*9] claim under section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, a plaintiff must allege an objective to monopolize or attempt to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several states or with foreign nations. Id. at 1017-18.

Here, Reiman has not alleged a conspiracy that would support a claim under section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act. In addition, Reiman has not alleged facts amounting to anti-competitive conduct by the Appellees. Specifically, Reiman has failed to allege intentional predatory or anticompetitive conduct by the Appellees. Id. at 1017-18. Therefore, the District Court's dismissal of Reiman's antitrust claim was proper.

2. Failure to State a Claim

Reiman contends that the District Court erred in granting Stolp's Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) motion because valid claims existed upon which relief could be granted.

HN6 A dismissal for failure to state a claim pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) is a ruling on a question of law and as such is reviewed de novo. Oscar v. University Students Co-Op. Ass'n, 965 F.2d 783 (9th Cir.) (en banc), cert. denied, 121 L. Ed. 2d 581, U.S. , 113 S. Ct. 655 (1992). [*10] Review is limited to the contents of the complaint. Buckey v. Los Angeles, 968 F.2d. 791, 794 (9th Cir.) cert. denied, U.S. , 113 S. Ct. 599 (1992). All allegations of material fact are taken as true and construed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Love v. United States, 915 F.2d 1242, 1245 \(9th Cir. 1989\). A complaint should not be dismissed unless it appears beyond doubt that plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief. Id. at 1245.

We note that HN7 the allegations in a pro se complaint will be construed liberally. King v. California, 784 F.2d 910, 912 \(9th Cir. 1986\), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 802, 98 L. Ed. 2d 11, 108 S. Ct. 47 (1987). Pro se plaintiffs are not entitled to the benefit of every conceivable doubt. Rather, a court is required to draw every reasonable or warranted factual inference in the plaintiff's favor. McKinney v. De Bord, 507 F.2d 501, 504 \(9th Cir. 1974\). [*11] And, even under the more liberal standard applied to pro se plaintiffs, a court must use common sense in interpreting their frequently diffuse pleadings. Id. at 504. Here, Reiman's pleadings include allegations of a conspiracy to publicize that Reiman suffered a delusional disorder, allegations of incarceration, nonconsensual spinal taps, mental abuse, and the attempt to destroy his efforts to bring about world peace. Reiman's present action is replete with the same irrelevant legal sources and specious legal arguments that existed in his first action.⁸ Further, as the District Court noted, Reiman's second complaint was "convoluted and prolix and difficult to understand." Therefore, we affirm the District Court's dismissal of Reiman's action on Stolp's Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion.

3. Sua Sponte Dismissal

⁸ For example, Reiman apparently contends that both the Preamble and Ninth Amendment to the United States Constitution provide a basis for subject matter jurisdiction.

Reiman contends that [*12] the District Court erred in dismissing, sua sponte, his claims against all remaining defendants who failed to answer his complaint. We reject this contention. The District Court properly dismissed Reiman's complaint as to all remaining defendants because the complaint was inadequate as a matter of law. "HN8[ A District Court may properly on its own motion dismiss an action as to defendants who have not moved to dismiss where such defendants are in a position similar to that of moving defendants or where the claims against such defendants are integrally related." Silverton v. Department of Treasury Etc., 644 F.2d 1341 (9th Cir.) cert. denied, 454 U.S. 895, 70 L. Ed. 2d 210, 102 S. Ct. 393 (1981). Reiman's claims are integrally related because Reiman alleges that the Appellees were involved in a conspiracy. Thus, the District Court's sua sponte dismissal was proper.

4. Substantially Identical Actions

Reiman also contends that the District Court erred in dismissing as res judicata his action because the District Court found the claims to be substantially identical to those in his first action. Additionally, [*13] Reiman contends that res judicata cannot apply because his first suit did not result in a trial on the merits. We disagree.

HN9[ A district court's dismissal on res judicata grounds is subject to de novo review. Palomar Mobilehome Park Assn. v. City of San Marcos, 989 F.2d 362, 363 (9th Cir. 1993).

The doctrine of res judicata or claim preclusion "insures the finality of decisions, conserves judicial resources and protects litigants from multiple lawsuits." McClain v. Apodaca, 793 F.2d 1031, 1032-33 \(9th Cir. 1986\). Res judicata "operates to bar all grounds for recovery which could have been asserted, whether they were or not, in a prior suit between the same parties (or their privies) on the same cause of action, if the prior suit concluded in a final judgment on the merits rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction." Ross v. International Bhd. of Elec. Workers, 634 F.2d 453, 457 \(9th Cir. 1980\).

In both his first and second actions, Reiman sought redress for alleged wrongs he suffered in retaliation for his whistleblowing activities while in the United States military. In effect, what Reiman [*14] seeks is a renewal of his first action with essentially the same theories in search of basically the same remedies. See, e.g. Moore's Federal Practice § 405[1]-[11]. (2nd ed. 1993). Thus, it is consistent with the principles of res judicata that Reiman's second action is barred.

Moreover, it is well established that HN10[ a dismissal for failure to state a claim under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) is a judgment on the merits. Federated Department Stores, Inc. v. Moitie, 452 U.S. 394, 399 n. 3, 69 L. Ed. 2d 103, 101 S. Ct. 2424 (1981); Cook v. Peter Kiewit Sons Co., 775 F.2d 1030, 1035 (9th Cir. 1985) cert. denied, 476 U.S. 1183, 91 L. Ed. 2d 547, 106 S. Ct. 2919 (1986). Therefore, Reiman is not entitled to a trial before res judicata can attach.

5. The Texas Dismissal

Reiman contends that the District Court erred in finding that the dismissal of a substantially identical action filed by Reiman in the Western District of Texas was res judicata on Reiman's current action in the Ninth Circuit. Reiman asserts that res judicata does not attach [*15] because his current action was filed before his lawsuit in the Western District of Texas was dismissed. We disagree.

As we noted above, the doctrine of res judicata prevents parties who have contested an issue from relitigating the results of that contest. The Western District Court in Texas dismissed Reiman's complaint with prejudice, stating that the doctrine of res judicata would bar Reiman from further litigation of substantially identical actions. Despite the different filing dates of Reiman's Texas lawsuit and the present case, a finding of res judicata by the Western District of Texas bars a second suit on the same cause of action. We uphold the Eastern District Court's finding that Reiman's Texas action was virtually identical to Reiman's second action in the Eastern District of California. The Texas Court had competent jurisdiction and rendered a final judgment on the merits. Therefore, we affirm the District Court's decision that the dismissal of Reiman's complaint by the Western District Court in Texas serves as res judicata, and bars Reiman's current action.

6. President George Bush

Reiman next contends that the Eastern District Court erred in dismissing his claim against [*16] President George Bush on grounds of absolute presidential immunity. Reiman apparently asserts that United States presidents should not be immune from civil suits. We find Reiman's argument to be meritless. As the United States Supreme Court has made clear, HN11 a former president of the United States is entitled to absolute immunity from damages liability predicated on his official acts. Nixon v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 731, 749, 73 L. Ed. 2d 349, 102 S. Ct. 2690 \(1982\). Therefore, the District Court properly dismissed Reiman's claim against President George Bush.

7. Derivative Claims

Finally, Reiman contends that the District Court erred in dismissing the claims of his wife, Judy Andrea Reiman, and his stepson, Kevin Beckley, because the District Court found their claims to be derivative of Reiman's claims. We disagree. All of Judy Reiman's and Kevin Beckley's claims against the Appellees emanate from Dr. Reiman's claims.⁹ For example, Judy Reiman and Kevin Beckley contend the Appellees violated the RICO statute, violated antitrust laws, and conspired to deny them their due process and equal protection rights. As we noted above, [*17] to the extent that any new claims or parties are involved in Appellant's second complaint, these could have been raised or added in the first complaint because identical allegations form the basis of Reiman's two complaints.

CONCLUSION

We affirm the dismissal of the Reimans' action on all grounds delineated by the District Court. As the District Court noted, this is Reiman's seventh or eighth attempt to obtain relief in the federal courts for the same alleged wrongs. So far, he has managed to avoid both the imposition of sanctions and the label of a vexatious litigant. He is likely to receive one or both penalties if he continues to litigate this action. AFFIRMED.

End of Document

⁹ Judy Reiman and Kevin Beckley were parties to John Reiman's first action in the Central District of California. But, Judy Reiman and Kevin Beckley were not parties to Reiman's appeal to this Court. However, failure to appeal does not change the fact that their claims were derivative of John Reiman's.

National Basketball Ass'n v. Williams

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

July 18, 1994, Decided ; July 18, 1994, Filed

94 Civ. 4488 (KTD)

Reporter

857 F. Supp. 1069 *; 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9759 ; 129 Lab. Cas. (CCH) P11,267; 1994-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,671

NATIONAL BASKETBALL ASSOCIATION, ATLANTA HAWKS, L.P., CAPITAL BULLETS BASKETBALL CLUB, INC., BOSTON CELTICS LIMITED PARTNERSHIP, CHARLOTTE NBA LIMITED PARTNERSHIP, CHICAGO PROFESSIONAL SPORTS LIMITED PARTNERSHIP, DALLAS BASKETBALL LIMITED, THE DENVER NUGGETS LIMITED PARTNERSHIP, DETROIT PISTONS BASKETBALL COMPANY, GOLDEN STATE WARRIORS, ROCKET BALL, LTD., JAZZ BASKETBALL INVESTORS, INC., LAC BASKETBALL CLUB, INC., THE LOS ANGELES LAKERS, INC., MADISON SQUARE GARDEN CORPORATION, MEADOWLANDS BASKETBALL ASSOCIATES, THE MIAMI HEAT LIMITED PARTNERSHIP, MILWAUKEE BUCKS, INC., MINNESOTA PROFESSIONAL BASKETBALL LIMITED PARTNERSHIP, GUND BUSINESS ENTERPRISES, INC., ORLANDO MAGIC, LTD., PACERS BASKETBALL CORPORATION, THE PHILADELPHIA 76ERS BASKETBALL CLUB, INC., PHOENIX SUNS LIMITED PARTNERSHIP, SACRAMENTO KINGS LIMITED PARTNERSHIP, L.P., SAN ANTONIO SPURS, LTD., ACKERLY COMMUNICATIONS, INC., and TRIAL BLAZERS, INC., Plaintiffs, v. CHARLES L. WILLIAMS, CHARLES D. SMITH, DANIEL R. MANNING, ROLANDO A. BLACKMAN, MARK E. EATON, LAFAYETTE LEVER, HERBERT L. WILLIAMS, JAMES A. JACKSON, DIKEMBE MUTOMBO, GLENN A. RIVERS, DAVID M. ROBINSON, REGGIE WILLIAMS, ERIC ANDERSON, MARTY CONLON, CHRISTIAN LAETTNER, ADRIAN AUTRY, ERIC MOBLEY, TREVOR RUFFIN and SHAWNELLE SCOTT, on behalf of themselves and all persons similarly situated, Defendants. DOMINIQUE WILKINS, HORACE GRANT, BRIAN SHAW, DALE DAVIS, TERRELL BRANDON, DONYELL MARSHALL, CHARLES L. WILLIAMS, CHARLES D. SMITH, DANIEL R. MANNING, ROLANDO A. BLACKMAN, MARK E. EATON, LAFAYETTE LEVER, HERBERT L. WILLIAMS, JAMES A. JACKSON, DIKEMBE MUTOMBO, GLENN A. RIVERS, DAVID M. ROBINSON, REGGIE WILLIAMS, ERIC ANDERSON, MARTY CONLON, CHRISTIAN LAETTNER, ADRIAN AUTRY, SHAWNELLE SCOTT, on behalf of themselves and all persons similarly situated, and the NATIONAL BASKETBALL PLAYERS ASSOCIATION, Counterclaim-plaintiffs, v. NATIONAL BASKETBALL ASSOCIATION, ATLANTA HAWKS, L.P., CAPITAL BULLETS BASKETBALL CLUB, INC., BOSTON CELTICS LIMITED PARTNERSHIP, CHARLOTTE NBA LIMITED PARTNERSHIP, CHICAGO PROFESSIONAL SPORTS LIMITED PARTNERSHIP, DALLAS BASKETBALL LIMITED, THE DENVER NUGGETS LIMITED PARTNERSHIP, DETROIT PISTONS BASKETBALL COMPANY, GOLDEN STATE WARRIORS, ROCKET BALL, LTD., JAZZ BASKETBALL INVESTORS, INC., LAC BASKETBALL CLUB, INC., THE LOS ANGELES LAKERS, INC., MADISON SQUARE GARDEN CORPORATION, MEADOWLANDS BASKETBALL ASSOCIATES, THE MIAMI HEAT LIMITED PARTNERSHIP, MILWAUKEE BUCKS, INC., MINNESOTA PROFESSIONAL BASKETBALL LIMITED PARTNERSHIP, GUND BUSINESS ENTERPRISES, INC., ORLANDO MAGIC, LTD., PACERS BASKETBALL CORPORATION, THE PHILADELPHIA 76ERS BASKETBALL CLUB, INC., PHOENIX SUNS LIMITED PARTNERSHIP, SACRAMENTO KINGS LIMITED PARTNERSHIP, L.P., SAN ANTONIO SPURS, LTD., ACKERLY COMMUNICATIONS, INC., and TRIAL BLAZERS, INC., Counterclaim-defendants.

Core Terms

Players, collective bargaining agreement, team, exemption, expiration, antitrust, collective bargaining, anti trust law, salary cap, bargaining, parties, negotiations, right of first refusal, policies, nonstatutory, disputes, federal labor, immunity, settlement agreement, antitrust immunity, labor law, practices, Football, season, preliminary injunction, district court, labor market, manufacturers, conditions, continues

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > Colleges & Universities

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Federal Preemption > Primacy of Labor Policy

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > Football

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Enforcement of Bargaining Agreements

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Federal Preemption

HN1 [down] Higher Education & Professional Associations, Colleges & Universities

Federal labor law applies to the disputes that arise between collective bargaining parties.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Bargaining Subjects

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Nonstatutory Exemptions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Enforcement of Bargaining Agreements

HN2 [down] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

There is a three pronged test for application of the nonstatutory labor exemption to antitrust laws. First, the restraint on trade must primarily affect only the parties to the collective bargaining relationship. Second, the agreement must concern mandatory subjects of collective bargaining. Finally, the agreement seeking to be exempted is the product of bona fide arms-length bargaining.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

857 F. Supp. 1069, *1069L^A994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9759, 9759

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Enforcement of Bargaining Agreements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Antitrust immunity exists as long as a collective bargaining relationship exists and labor law remedies are available.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Enforcement of Bargaining Agreements

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Bargaining Subjects

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN4 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Where a dispute implicates the labor market, antitrust actions are not be allowed to subvert federal labor law policies.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Bargaining Subjects

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN5 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

It is recognized that any contract between an employer and employee is a restraint of trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN6 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The rule of reason considers whether challenged contracts or acts are unreasonably restrictive of competitive conditions. Unreasonableness under the test is based either (1) on the nature or character of the conduct or (2) on surrounding circumstances giving rise to the inference or presumption that it is intended to restrain trade and enhance prices. Under either branch of the test, the inquiry is confined to a consideration of impact on competitive conditions.

Counsel: [1] Attorneys for Plaintiffs and Counterclaim-defendants: PROSKAUER ROSE GOETZ & MENDELSOHN, 1585 Broadway, New York, NY 10036, Of Counsel: Howard L. Ganz, Esq.. SKADDEN, ARPS,

857 F. Supp. 1069, *1069A 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9759, 1

SLATE, MEAGHER & FLOM, 919 Third Avenue, New York, NY 10022, Of Counsel: Frank Rothman, Esq., Shepard Goldfein, Esq.. Jeffrey A. Mishkin, Senior Vice-President, Legal and Business Affairs, NATIONAL BASKETBALL ASSOCIATION, 645 Fifth Avenue, New York, NY 10022.

Attorneys for Defendants and Counterclaim-plaintiffs: CRAVATH, SWAINE & MOORE, Worldwide Plaza, 825 Eighth Avenue, New York, NY 10019, Of Counsel: Frederick A.O. Schwartz, Jr., Esq., Robert S. Rifkind, Esq., Rowan D. Wilson, Esq., Michelle K. Jacobs, Esq., Sara M. Dareshori, Esq.. BREDHOFF & KAISER, 1000 Connecticut Avenue, N.W., Washington, DC 20036, Of Counsel: George H. Cohen, Esq., Robert M. Weinberg, Esq., Andrew D. Roth, Esq..

Attorneys for Counterclaim-Plaintiff National Basketball Players Association: Simon P. Gourdine, Esq., General Counsel, NATIONAL BASKETBALL PLAYERS ASSOCIATION, 1775 Broadway, Suite 2401, New York, NY 10019, Of Counsel: Ronald Klempner, Esq..

Of counsel for Counterclaim-Plaintiff Donyell Marshall: LESTER BRYANT SOLANO & GANZ, [2] P.C., 119 North Robinson, Oklahoma City, OK 73102, Of Counsel: James S. Bryant, Esq., Robinson Renaissance, Esq..

Attorneys for Counterclaim-defendant Chicago Professional Sports Limited Partnership: KATTEN MUCHIN & ZAVIS, 525 West Monroe Street, Suite 1600, Chicago, IL 60661-3693, Of Counsel: Stephen D. Libowsky, Esq., Joel G. Chefitz, Esq.. KATTEN MUCHIN & ZAVIS, 40 Broad Street, Suite 2000, New York, NY 10004-2382, Of Counsel: John N. Romans, Esq..

Judges: DUFFY

Opinion by: KEVIN THOMAS DUFFY

Opinion

[*1071] OPINION

KEVIN THOMAS DUFFY, D.J.:

The National Basketball Association (the "NBA") and the 27 teams (the "NBA Teams" or "Teams") that compete in the NBA commenced a declaratory action on June 17, 1994 against a class of NBA players as well as prospective NBA players, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2201. In particular, the NBA and the Teams seek a declaration that continued implementation of: (1) the college draft; (2) the right of first refusal; and (3) the salary cap does not violate federal antitrust laws. (Am. Compl. P 105). Alternatively, the NBA contends that these measures are not unreasonable restraints of trade and therefore do not violate the antitrust laws. (Am. Compl. [3] P 113).

The same class of players who are defendants in the declaratory judgment claim, along with the National Basketball Players Association (the "NBPA") (collectively the "Players"), brought counterclaims alleging, in effect, that continuation of these policies are unreasonable restraints of trade not exempt from antitrust law and thereby violate the Sherman Act. (Counterclaims PP 43, 47, & 51). Shortly after initiating the counterclaims, the Players moved for a temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction: (1) to enjoin the Teams from entering into player contracts with current or prospective professional basketball players, and (2) schedule an expedited trial on the merits. On June 28, 1994, the Honorable John F. Keenan granted the temporary restraining order and set a hearing date for the preliminary injunction motion. On July 1, 1994, I was assigned this case, and a hearing was conducted on July 8, 1994. At the hearing, I informed the parties that the preliminary injunction hearing would be consolidated with the trial on the merits, pursuant Rule 65\(a\)\(2\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. A consolidated factual hearing was conducted on July 12, 1994.¹

¹ Counsel for the NBA objected to the shortness of the trial as well as its expedited nature. The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure authorize me to order a speedy hearing for a declaratory judgment action. Fed. R. Civ. P. 57. Thus, they cannot be heard to

[4] BACKGROUND

This case is the fourth lawsuit initiated by either of the parties as a result of disputes that have arisen during collective bargaining negotiations. Indeed, I am convinced that this is a case where neither party cares about this litigation or the result thereof. Both are simply using the court as a bargaining chip in the collective bargaining process. Each is truly guilty of this practice.² A recitation of the history of these lawsuits demonstrates this and puts this litigation in its proper context, i.e., a labor dispute that does not belong in litigation.

In 1970, the Players commenced a class action suit against the NBA in the federal district court for the Southern District of New York, challenging certain NBA imposed player restrictions on antitrust grounds. [*1072] The [5] NBA moved for summary judgment, arguing that the practices were shielded from antitrust laws by a labor exemption. The district court denied the NBA's motion on the ground that the exemption only shields unions and not employers. Robertson v. National Basketball Ass'n, 389 F. Supp. 867, 884-89 (S.D.N.Y. 1975).

In 1976, the parties in Robertson entered, and the district court approved, a settlement agreement. This agreement effected a number of changes in the operation of the NBA, including modification of the college draft and institution of the right of first refusal. (Am. Compl. PP 63-64). The settlement agreement provided that it would expire at the end of the 1986-1987 NBA season. In addition, it expressly provided that the Players had not waived their right to challenge in court any unilateral imposition of any rule, policy, practice or agreement by the NBA. When the Robertson settlement agreement was adopted in 1976, the Players and the NBA also entered into a multi-year collective bargaining agreement incorporating the substantive terms of the settlement agreement. The 1976 Collective Bargaining Agreement expired on June 1, 1979, and on [6] October 10, 1980, the parties again entered into a multi-year collective bargaining agreement that expressly incorporated the terms of the Robertson settlement agreement, including the college draft and the right of first refusal. (Granik Decl., July 6, 1994, PP 12-15).

The 1980 agreement expired on June 1, 1982. (1980 Collective Bargaining Agreement, Granik Decl., July 6, 1994, Ex. 2, Art. XXVI). In 1983, the NBA sought for the first time to introduce the salary cap. The NBA contended that such a restriction was necessary because the majority of NBA teams were losing money, due in part, to rising player salaries and benefits. (See Grantham Trial Decl., July 11, 1994, PP 3, 13). The players responded by filing a lawsuit challenging the legality of the salary cap. Lanier v. National Basketball Ass'n, 82 Civ. 4935 (S.D.N.Y.). A special master appointed to hear disputes under the Robertson settlement agreement determined that the salary cap would violate the terms of the settlement agreement and, therefore, could not be imposed without a modification of that agreement. (Granik Decl., July 6, 1994, PP 17-19). The Players and the NBA entered into a Memorandum of Understanding [7] that modified the expired 1980 Collective Bargaining Agreement to include a salary cap, and it continued in force through the end of the 1986-1987 season. (Granik Decl., July 6, 1994, Ex. 3).

On June 8, 1987, the NBA and the Players entered into a Moratorium Agreement to facilitate negotiations, whereby the challenged practices would remain in effect but no new contracts would be signed. The Moratorium Agreement expired on October 1, 1987. (Grantham Decl. 31 & Ex. A). The day the Moratorium Agreement expired, the Players commenced an action in the District of New Jersey, seeking a ruling that the college draft, the right of first refusal, complain about the expedited nature of a case they initiated. In addition, several other reasons exist for speeding this case along. First, the Teams and the Players use this period to sign contracts and prepare for the upcoming season. It would be unfair to allow this litigation to create a legal cloud over contract negotiations. (See Trial Testimony of David J. Stern, July 12, 1994, at 155-60 (hereinafter "Tr.")). Moreover, the raw facts that underlie this action are not in dispute. The dispute centers on the applicable legal standard. Therefore, the parties simply needed an opportunity to put the facts on the record. The parties had ample time to do so before, during, and after trial. Finally, I received the parties' papers on July 5, 1994. In such a complicated case that must be resolved quickly, only a judge unwilling to have an open mind would attempt to rule prior to a detailed factual hearing. Therefore, I ordered a trial on the merits for July 11, 1994.

² The initiation of the declaratory judgment action cannot be said to violate Rule 11 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. It does, however, constitute sharp and shady practices of the type that most ethical lawyers shun.

and the salary cap violated the antitrust laws. Bridgeman v. National Basketball Ass'n, 675 F. Supp. 960, 961 (D.N.J. 1987). The Players represented to the court that they would never agree to these restrictive practices. (Granik Decl., July 6, 1994, Ex. 4). After a ruling on the labor exemption issue, discussed more fully below, the parties reached an agreement in principle, the final terms of which were memorialized in the 1988 Collective Bargaining Agreement. (Granik Decl., July 6, 1994, PP 29). The 1988 Collective [8] Bargaining Agreement continued the college draft, the right of first refusal and the salary cap. (1988 Collective Bargaining Agreement, Granik Decl., July 6, 1994, Ex. 5, Arts. IV, V, & VII).

The 1988 Collective Bargaining Agreement formally expired on June 23, 1994, the day following the last playoff game of the 1993-1994 NBA playing season. (Grantham Decl., June 26, 1994, P 4). At a formal bargaining session, held in New York on April 7, 1994, the Players demanded that the three disputed employment practices be eliminated. (Grantham Decl., June 26, 1994, PP 39-40). In a position paper delivered to the NBA at that meeting, the Players expressly stated their view that the college draft, right of first refusal and the salary cap would "be subject to successful challenge under the antitrust laws." This position was reiterated at a second [*1073] formal bargaining session, held on May 4, 1994. (Granik Decl., July 6, 1994, P 33).

On June 15, 1994, in a letter addressed to the NBA, the Players, while asserting that further negotiations would be futile, said that the Players would attend another meeting, but only in late June or mid-July. In that letter, the NBPA again threatened that the NBA's [9] continuation of the employment conditions at issue would be "subject to scrutiny under the antitrust laws and . . . are clearly in violation of those laws." (Granik Decl., July 6, 1994, P 33). At the preliminary injunction hearing on July 8, 1994, I informed the parties of my belief that this litigation was simply being used as a bargaining chip in the collective bargaining negotiations, and I advised them that the best course of action would be to resolve the dispute through negotiations. (Transcript of Preliminary Injunction Hearing, July 8, 1994, at 8-9). Apparently, the parties did attempt to negotiate, but such efforts were unsuccessful. (Stern Testimony, Tr. at 153).

The Challenged Measures

The College Draft

The college draft is held annually shortly after the NBA season concludes. It is a mechanism in which each team is allotted two selections. A team may exercise its selections or trade them to another team. The order of selection is generally determined by the records of the 27 Teams for the season immediately preceding the draft, i.e., the weaker teams select earlier. In the end, 54 prospective players are selected by the Teams. A player who is selected by a [10] particular team may only negotiate with that team. Any team that negotiates with a player it did not select is severely penalized. Prospective players who are not drafted are free to negotiate with any NBA team. (1988 Collective Bargaining Agreement, Granik Decl., July 6, 1994, Ex. 5, Art. IV).

The Right of First Refusal

Under the 1988 Collective Bargaining Agreement, the Teams maintain a right of first refusal over players who have played fewer than four seasons or who have not completed at least two contracts. When a player's contract expires, he is able to negotiate a new contract with any team. If a team has a right of first refusal over that player, however, it may match any offer another team makes. If there is a matching offer, the player may not sign with the new team, and his services are retained by his current team. (1988 Collective Bargaining Agreement, Granik Decl., July 6, 1994, Ex. 5, Art. V).

The Salary Cap

The salary cap is part of a complex player/owner revenue sharing arrangement in which the Players are guaranteed a percentage of the defined gross revenue of the team. This arrangement also operates as a ceiling on the total amount a team may spend on salaries [11] for its players. As part of this arrangement, each team is also required to pay a minimum amount of salaries to its players (1988 Collective Bargaining Agreement, Granik Decl., July 6, 1994, Ex. 5, Art. VII, Pt. A, Sec. 1\(e\)-\(f\)). The salary cap may be exceeded by a team that wishes to pay a veteran player it currently employs. A team may, however, not exceed the salary cap to acquire a new player. (1988 Collective Bargaining Agreement, Granik Decl., July 6, 1994, Ex. 5, Art. VII, Pt. F).

DISCUSSION

(1) The Nonstatutory Labor Exemption

As a threshold matter, the NBA argues that antitrust law does not apply in this case because a collective bargaining relationship currently exists between the players and the NBA.³ In particular, the NBA contends [*1074] that the nonstatutory labor exemption applies, and therefore, any antitrust claim the Players may seek must fail.

[12] The parties do not dispute that prior to the formal expiration of the Collective Bargaining Agreement on June 23, 1994, the NBA as well as the Players were immune from antitrust claims. Wood v. National Basketball Ass'n, 809 F.2d 954, 963 \(2d Cir. 1987\). In Wood, the Second Circuit specifically held that an antitrust challenge to the NBA's salary cap and college draft, inter alia, failed because antitrust laws may not "be used to subvert fundamental principles of our federal labor policy . . ." Id. at 959. Thus, the law in this Circuit appears to be where a collective bargaining relationship exists, HN1 [↑] federal labor law applies to the disputes that arise between the bargaining parties. Id.

In a 1976 case involving player restraints in the National Football League (the "NFL"), the Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit analyzed the nonstatutory exemption as it applies to the market for player services and established a HN2 [↑] three pronged test for application of the exemption. Mackey v. National Football League, 543 F.2d 606, 615 \(8th Cir. 1976\), cert. dismissed, 434 U.S. 801 (1977). [13] First, the restraint on trade must primarily affect only the parties to the collective bargaining relationship. Second, the agreement must concern mandatory subjects of collective bargaining. Finally, the agreement sought to be exempted is the product of bona fide arms-length bargaining. Id. Mackey reasoned that these tests are necessary to ensure that the exemption is applied only when it is clear that federal labor policies trump antitrust concerns. Id. Thus, Mackey also depends on a resolution of the conflicting labor and antitrust policy concerns.

The dispute here arises because the 1988 Collective Bargaining Agreement has formally expired. The issue is whether antitrust immunity that existed while the Collective Bargaining Agreement was in effect continues after its formal expiration, and if so, for what length of time. I can find only four non-binding decisions addressing this precise issue. Unfortunately, each decision fashioned a different standard to apply.

The first case to address this issue was Bridgeman v. National Basketball Ass'n, 675 F. Supp. 960 \(D.N.J. 1987\). As noted in the factual summary supra, in Bridgeman, the [14] Players alleged that the continued effect of the college draft, the right of first refusal and the salary cap after the formal expiration of the 1983 Collective Bargaining Agreement violated federal antitrust laws. Id. at 961. The NBA moved for summary judgment contending that the ³ In addition to the objection outlined in the text, the NBA objected to the July 11, 1994 trial, contending that jurisdiction did not exist because of the Norris-LaGuardia Act's prohibition against injunctions involving labor disputes. See 29 U.S.C. § 101 et seq. Putting aside the merits of this dubious proposition, but see Jackson v. National Football League, 802 F. Supp. 226, 233 (D.Minn. 1992); Cordova v. Bache & Co., 321 F. Supp. 600, 606 (S.D.N.Y. 1970), the trial was necessary to elicit the facts of the claims set forth in the NBA's declaratory judgment action. It astounds me to no end that the NBA initiated this action, and then attempted to hinder the court from taking the necessary steps to decide this matter quickly. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 57. But, it may be merely the continuation of the practices referred to in footnote 2.

857 F. Supp. 1069, *1074-1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9759, 14

nonstatutory exemption immunized them from suit even though the 1983 Collective Bargaining Agreement had formally expired. Thus, the issue before the Bridgeman court was identical to the issue here.

The court refused to accept the Players' contention that antitrust immunity ends at the moment the collective bargaining agreement formally expires. Id. at 965. The court noted that such a result would not be consistent with the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C. § 151 et seq. (the "NLRA"). Id. Under the NLRA, the owners have an obligation, even after the collective bargaining agreement expires, to bargain fully and in good faith before altering a term or condition of employment that is a mandatory subject of collective bargaining. One can easily imagine the howls to be heard from the Players if the [\[15\]](#) Teams unilaterally terminated medical coverage for them and their families at the formal expiration of the Collective Bargaining Agreement. It is for the good of our entire society that such is not the law. See 29 U.S.C. § 158\(a\)\(5\). The Bridgeman court determined that the practical effect of this duty on employers is that the "terms and conditions of employment that are the subject of mandatory bargaining survive expiration of collective bargaining agreement." Bridgeman, 675 F. Supp. at 965.

The Bridgeman court also found the NBA's contention that antitrust immunity lasts indefinitely equally unavailing. Id. at 966. In particular, the court reasoned that such a rule would discourage unions from entering into agreements, for fear of forever [\[*1075\]](#) binding themselves with restraints that they could not subsequently attack in the courtroom. Id. After considering the elements of the Mackey test, the issue turned on whether the disputed terms will likely become part of a subsequent collective bargaining agreement. Thus, the test that Bridgeman established was that antitrust [\[16\]](#) immunity survives only as long as the employer continues to impose the restrictions unchanged, and reasonably believes that the challenged practice or a close variant of it will be incorporated in the next collective bargaining agreement. Id. at 967.

In Powell v. National Football League, 678 F. Supp. 777 \(D.Minn. 1988\), Judge Doty of the District Court of Minnesota addressed whether the NFL could continue to restrict player movement after the formal expiration of a collective bargaining agreement. Judge Doty agreed with Bridgeman to the extent that immunity does not cease with the formal expiration of the collective bargaining agreement. Nor does it continue indefinitely. Id. at 786-88. Judge Doty, however, held that the Bridgeman standard did not give proper regard for federal labor policy because it could encourage unions to be uncompromising while bargaining. Id. at 787. Rather, Judge Doty adopted the so-called impasse standard to be the appropriate standard. Id. at 788. Impasse was then defined as the point at which [\[*17\]](#) "there appears no realistic possibility that continuing discussions concerning the provision at issue would be fruitful." Powell, 678 F. Supp. at 788. Thus, by "allowing a labor exemption to survive only until impasse, the law will not insulate a practice from antitrust liability, but will only delay enforcement of the substantive law until continued negotiations over the challenged provision become pointless." Id. at 789.

Powell was reversed by the Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit in Powell v. National Football League, 930 F.2d 1293, 1304 \(8th Cir. 1989\), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 1040, 112 L. Ed. 2d 700, 111 S. Ct. 711 (1991) ("Powell II"). Specifically, Powell II held that the nonstatutory labor exemption extends beyond a mere impasse in negotiations and for as long as the labor relationship continues. Id. at 1303-04. The Eight Circuit reasoned that once a collective bargaining relationship is established, federal labor policies become pre-eminent. As such, labor laws provide [\[18\]](#) the opposing parties with sufficient tools to settle a dispute. For instance, employees may strike, employers may lock players out, and both parties may petition the National Labor Relations Board to prohibit unfair labor practices. Therefore, to provide the union with the ability to sue for treble damages under antitrust law "would . . . improperly upset the careful balance established by Congress through the labor law." Id. at 1302.

The essence of Powell II is that once a collective bargaining arrangement is established, and a valid and bona fide collective bargaining agreement is formed, federal labor law and its policies control. In other words, the disputes that arise from collective bargaining arrangements are labor disputes, and Congress has enacted laws that provide various remedies to these disputes. Id. at 1302-03. As the Eighth Circuit stated:

The labor arena is one with well established rules which are intended to foster negotiated settlements rather than intervention by the courts. The League and the Players have accepted this "level playing field" as the basis for their often tempestuous relationship, [\[*19\]](#) and we believe that there is substantial justification for requiring the parties to continue to fight on it, so that bargaining and the exertion of economic force may be used to bring about legitimate compromise. Id. at 1303.

In sum, Powell II effectively held that HN3⁴ antitrust immunity exists as long as a collective bargaining relationship exists and labor law remedies are available. *Id. at 1303-04.*⁴

[*1076] In Brown v. Pro Football, Inc., 782 F. Supp. 125 (D.D.C. 1991), [20] the District Court for the District of Columbia set forth yet another approach to this issue. There, the court held that the continuing implementation of a collective bargaining agreement's salary provisions by the NFL after the agreement had expired was not shielded by the nonstatutory labor exemption. Instead, the exemption ended with expiration of the agreement. Id. at 130. The court reasoned that the purpose of the exemption was to foster a non-coercive environment conducive to the serious negotiation of a new agreement. If an employer was satisfied with the terms of the previous agreement, the extension of the exemption beyond contracted expiration date would discourage serious negotiation on its part. Id. at 131. In addition, the court reasoned that the extension of the exemption would deprive labor of an important bargaining chip -- the threat of treble damages under the antitrust laws. Id. at 133. As such, immunity from antitrust law does not extend past the formal expiration of the collective bargaining agreement. *Id. at 131.*⁵

[21] This review of the case law establishes that, if nothing else, opinions vary a great deal on this issue. See, e.g., Kieran M. Corcoran, When Does the Buzzer Sound?: The Nonstatutory Labor Exemption in Professional Sports, 94 Colum. L. Rev. 1045, 1071 (1994) (favoring a standard based on union consent); Ethan Lock, The Scope of the Labor Exemption in Professional Sports, 1989 Duke L.J. 339, 400 (favoring ending the exemption at the formal expiration of the collective bargaining agreement). Obviously, this issue stems from the underlying conflict between antitrust and labor law policies. The issue, at its most basic level, is what role, if any, does antitrust policy play when a valid collective bargaining relationship exists. To find an answer to this question, I believe it is necessary to review the origin of the nonstatutory exemption.

The nonstatutory exemption was created by the Supreme Court to reconcile the conflicting policies between antitrust and labor laws.

We have two declared congressional policies which it is our responsibility to try to reconcile. The one seeks to preserve a competitive business economy; [22] the other to preserve the rights of labor to organize to better its conditions through the agency of collective bargaining. We must determine here how far Congress intended activities under one of these policies to neutralize the results envisioned by the other.

Allen Bradley Co. v. Local Union No. 3, IBEW, 325 U.S. 797, 806, 89 L. Ed. 1939, 65 S. Ct. 1533 (1945). See also Connell Constr. Co. v. Plumbers & Steamfitters Local Union No. 100, 421 U.S. 616, 622, 44 L. Ed. 2d 418, 95 S. Ct. 1830 (1975).

The genesis of the labor exemption is Allen Bradley. In Allen Bradley, a group of New York City electrical equipment manufacturers and contractors -- in furtherance of a broad industry-wide conspiracy to prevent electrical equipment manufacturers located outside of New York from selling their products within the City -- entered into various collective bargaining agreements with a New York City union. In the agreements, the contractors agreed to purchase equipment only from local manufacturers, who had entered into closed-shop agreements with the union.

[23] In return, the manufacturers agreed to confine their New York City sales to contractors employing the union's members. Several equipment manufacturers located outside New York City brought an antitrust suit against the union. 325 U.S. at 799-800. The Court concluded that the union's participation in the employers' conspiracy in restraint of trade was not sufficient to immunize the parties' agreement from antitrust liability. Id. at 808.

⁴ Senior Judge Heaney dissented in Powell II and Chief Judge Lay, along with Judge McMillian, dissented from a denial of a rehearing en banc. These dissents argue that Powell II will discourage collective bargaining, fails to consider that in order for the exemption to apply union consent is necessary, and encourages union decertification. Powell II, 930 F.2d at 1304-10 (dissenting opinions). Both dissents favor application of the impasse standard enunciated by the district court. Id.

⁵ Brown alternatively held that the exemption does not extend past the point of impasse. Brown, 782 F. Supp. at 137.

The Supreme Court rendered a similar conclusion in United Mine Workers of America v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 \(1965\). In Pennington, a group of large coal companies -- in furtherance of a conspiracy with the United Mine Workers to drive smaller companies out of [*1077] the coal industry -- entered into a multi-employer collective bargaining agreement with the union that provided for increased wages and royalty payments into union pension and welfare fund. In return for those benefits, the union agreed that it would seek to impose the benefit provision of the multi-employer agreement on all industry employers without regard to their ability to pay. Id. at 660. [24] Two smaller companies that had been pressured into paying the higher benefits brought an antitrust suit. The Court noted that a union may conclude a wage agreement that is shielded from antitrust laws, but it forfeits such immunity when it conspires with the employers "to eliminate competitors from the industry." Id. at 665-66.

In Local Union No. 189, Amalgamated Meat Cutters & Butcher Workmen of North America v. Jewel Tea Co., 381 U.S. 676, 14 L. Ed. 2d 640, 85 S. Ct. 1596 \(1965\), a group of food store owners entered into a multi-employer collective bargaining agreement with a union to limit the hours and days of operation of the stores' meat departments. When a competing food store refused the union's demand that it agree to this same limitation, the union struck the employer to obtain that limitation. The competing food store sued the union and the employers who were party to the multi-employer agreement for antitrust violations. Id. at 679-81. A three member plurality ruled that the union was shielded [25] from antitrust liability because it obtained these provisions "through bona fide, arm's length bargaining in pursuit of [its] own labor union policies, and not at the behest of or in combination with nonlabor groups." Id. at 689-90.⁶

In the case at bar, the Players cite these cases for the proposition that union consent, while not always sufficient, is necessary for the labor exemption to apply. Indeed, Mackey's third element, that the agreement be the product of bona fide arm's-length bargaining, is derived from the view that [26] Allen-Bradley, Pennington, and Jewel Tea stand for this proposition. Mackey, 543 F.2d at 611-14. See also Powell, 678 F. Supp. at 784-85; Bridgeman, 675 F. Supp. at 964-65 (adopting similar approach). Thus, the Players argue that absent union consent to the challenged measures through a valid collective bargaining agreement, the exemption no longer applies. Moreover, they contend that union consent ended on June 23, 1994, with the formal expiration of the 1988 Collective Bargaining Agreement.

The Players' reading of these Supreme Court cases is, however, fundamentally flawed. These decisions involve "injuries to employers who asserted that they were being excluded from competition in the product market." Wood, 809 F.2d at 963 (emphasis in original). The fact is that no Supreme Court decision has addressed whether a dispute between collective bargaining parties, duly authorized under the labor laws to represent either the employers or employees at the bargaining table, are immune from antitrust liability.

From Allen-Bradley to Pennington, [27] the majority of the Court has insisted that one factor be present before the Sherman Act applies to arrangements arrived at through collective bargaining: one group of employers must conspire to use the union to hurt their competitors. The line the Court has consistently sought to draw, therefore, is the line between the product market and the labor market.

Michael S. Jacobs & Ralph K. Winter, Jr., Antitrust Principles and Collective Bargaining by Athletes: Of Superstars in Peonage, 81 Yale L. J. 1, 26 (1971). Thus, to apply the exemption as enunciated in Allen Bradley, Pennington, and Jewel Tea to disputes between employees and employers in a collective bargaining relationship does not fully ⁶ On behalf of a concurring panel of three, Justice Goldberg urged a holding that "a union acting as a union, in the interests of its members, and not acting to fix prices or allocate markets in aid of an employer conspiracy to accomplish these objects . . . is not subject to challenge under the antitrust laws." Jewel Tea, 381 U.S. at 710 (Goldberg, J., concurring).

857 F. Supp. 1069, *1077-1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9759, 27

account for the policies underlying federal labor law. Moreover, such a ruling would exaggerate federal antitrust concerns. See Wood, 809 F.2d at 959-63.

[*1078] Collective bargaining seeks to order labor markets through a system of countervailing power. Thus it is often referred to by economists as bilateral monopoly. If such a structure is to be protected by law, then logically the antitrust claims between employers and employees [28] must be extinguished.

Jacobs & Winter, Antitrust Principles, 81 Yale L. J. at 22. Indeed, Wood noted this distinction between the product and labor markets and, by implication, concluded that HN4 where a dispute implicates the labor market, antitrust actions should not be allowed to subvert federal labor law policies. Wood, 809 F.2d at 963. In this case, labor market disputes are the central concern. As such, this dispute is one to be resolved by federal labor law.

This reasoning mandates that the appropriate standard to apply is the Powell II standard. Antitrust immunity exists as long as a collective bargaining relationship exists. Powell II, 930 F.2d at 1303-04. Accordingly, the NBA is granted the declaration it seeks -- the continued implementation of these challenged measures by the NBA do not violate the antitrust laws as long as the collective bargaining relationship exists.

This does not mean that the Players are "stuck" with these provisions forever. Certainly, they can attempt to bargain these provisions away -- including exerting economic pressure by means of a strike. Or, [29] the Players may request decertification of the NBPA as a collective bargaining agent. I do not mean by this ruling to encourage the Players to decertify their union so that they may bring an antitrust claim. But, decertification is certainly an option the Players have. In fact, this is exactly what the National Football League Players Union did following Powell II. See Powell and McNeil v. National Football League, 764 F. Supp. 1351, 1356 \(D.Minn. 1991\). Decertification, however, brings with it other consequences, namely the elimination of many federal labor remedies. In other words, the NBPA is a private actor with a variety of available choices. It is up to the Players to weigh the risks of all their actions. While I am not unconcerned that this decision may affect their decision to decertify, I simply note that the Players may not have it both ways. They may not avail themselves to the benefits of federal labor and antitrust law at the same time.

(2) Antitrust Analysis

It appears that even if the nonstatutory exemption did not apply, the Players' charge of a per se violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, [30] is insufficient to carry the day. HN5 It has often been recognized that any contract between an employer and employee is a restraint of trade. Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238, 62 L. Ed. 683, 38 S. Ct. 242 \(1918\). Therefore,

Certain agreements, such as horizontal price fixing and market allocation, are thought so inherently anti-competitive that each is illegal per se without inquiry into the harm it has actually caused. Other combinations, such as mergers, joint ventures, and various vertical agreements, hold the promise of increasing a firm's efficiency and enabling it to compete more effectively. Accordingly, such combinations are judged under a rule of reason, an inquiry into market power and market structure designed to assess the combination's actual effect.

Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 768, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 \(1984\) (citations omitted). See also Continental T.V. Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 49-51, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 \(1977\). [31] Professional athletic associations are more generally, and appropriately, characterized as joint ventures. North American Soccer League v. National Football League, 670 F.2d 1249, 1251 \(2d Cir. 1982\). As the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia put it, describing the National Football League:

The NFL clubs which have "combined" to implement the draft are not competitors in any economic sense. The clubs operate basically as a joint venture in producing an entertainment product -- football games and telecasts. No NFL club can produce this product without agreements and joint action with every other team. To this end, the League not only determines franchise [*1079] locations, playing schedules, and broadcast terms, but also ensures that the clubs receive equal shares of telecast and ticket revenues. These economic joint venturers "compete" on the playing field, to be sure, but here as well cooperation is essential if the entertainment product is to attain a high quality: only if the teams are "competitively balanced" will spectator interest be maintained at a high pitch. No NFL team, in short, is interested in driving another team out of business, [32] whether in the counting-house or on the football field, for if the League fails, no one team can survive.

Smith v. Pro Football, Inc., 193 U.S. App. D.C. 19, 593 F.2d 1173, 1178-79 (D.C. Cir. 1978) (emphasis in original). See also Mackey, 543 F.2d at 619 ("Although businessmen cannot wholly evade the antitrust laws by characterizing their operation as a joint venture, we conclude that the unique nature of the business of professional football renders it inappropriate to mechanically apply per se illegality rules here, fashioned in a different context."). As the College Draft, Right of First Refusal, and Salary Cap do not meet stringent per se conditions, (North American Soccer League, 670 F.2d at 1258), the legitimacy of these restraints depends upon their reasonableness.

HN6 [↑] The rule of reason, as set forth in National Soc'y of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637, 98 S. Ct. 1355 (1978), considers whether the challenged contracts or acts "were unreasonably restrictive of competitive [33] conditions." Id. at 690 (quoting Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 58, 55 L. Ed. 619, 31 S. Ct. 502 (1911)).

Unreasonableness under that test could be based either (1) on the nature or character of the [conduct] or (2) on surrounding circumstances giving rise to the inference or presumption that [it was] intended to restrain trade and enhance prices. Under either branch of the test, the inquiry is confined to a consideration of impact on competitive conditions.

Id. (citations omitted)

Even under a rule of reason analysis, however, it appears that the Players have failed to show that the alleged restraints of trade are on balance unreasonably anti-competitive. The pro-competitive effects of these practices, in particular the maintenance of competitive balance, may outweigh their restrictive consequences. Indeed, the Salary Cap seems to operate as a mechanism to distribute 53 per cent defined gross revenue to the Players. (Tr. at 108-09). See Mackey, 543 F.2d at 623 ("It may be that some reasonable restrictions [34] relating to player transfers are necessary for the successful operation of the NFL. The protection of mutual interests of both the players and the clubs may indeed require this.").

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the NBA and Teams' continued implementation of the college draft, right of first refusal, and the salary cap is hereby declared not to violate antitrust laws. This ruling mandates that the Players' counterclaims be denied. Parties are once again urged to pursue the only rational course for the resolution of their disputes; that is, a course of collective bargaining pursued by both sides in good faith. No court, no matter how highly situated, can replace this time honored manner of labor dispute resolution. Rather than clogging the courts with unnecessary litigation, the parties should pursue this course.

DATED: New York, New York

July 18, 1994

KEVIN THOMAS DUFFY, U.S.D.J.

Morgenstern v. Wilson

United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

March 14, 1994, Submitted ; July 20, 1994, Filed

No. 93-2446

Reporter

29 F.3d 1291 *; 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 17768 ; 1994-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,645

Dan A. Morgenstern, M.D., Plaintiff - Appellee, v. Charles S. Wilson, M.D.; Deepak Gangahar, M.D.; Herbert E. Reese, M.D.; Walt F. Weaver, M.D.; Christopher C. Caudill, M.D.; Joseph R. Gard, M.D.; Sabyasachi Mahapatra, M.D.; Robert J. Buchman, M.D.; Michael A. Breiner, M.D.; Alan D. Forker, M.D.; Stephen W. Carveth, M.D., Defendants - Appellants. Cardiovascular & Thoracic Surgery, P.C.; Cardiology Consultants, P.C., Defendants. Nebraska Heart Institute, P.C., Defendant - Appellant.

Subsequent History: [1] Certiorari Denied February 21, 1995, Reported at: 1995 U.S. LEXIS 1048.

Prior History: Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Nebraska. District No. CV 90-L-34. Honorable Warren K. Urbom, District Judge.

Disposition: Reversed

Core Terms

cardiac, geographic, district court, surgery, patients, surgeons, cardiologists, monopolization, injunction, injunctive relief, interlocutory, defendants', jury's verdict, Antitrust, programs

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Altering & Amending Judgments

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > Interlocutory Orders

HN1[] Relief From Judgments, Altering & Amending Judgments

28 U.S.C.S. § 1292\(a\) provides, in pertinent part, that the courts of appeal shall have jurisdiction of appeals from interlocutory orders of the district courts granting, continuing, modifying, refusing or dissolving injunctions. Thus, by the plain language of 28 U.S.C.S. § 1292\(a\), interlocutory orders granting "injunctions" are appealable.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > Interlocutory Orders

HN2[] Appellate Jurisdiction, Interlocutory Orders

28 U.S.C.S. § 1292\(a\) invokes two separate avenues of analysis. 28 U.S.C.S. § 1292\(a\)\(1\) provides appellate jurisdiction for orders that grant or deny injunctions as well as those orders that merely have the practical effect of granting or denying injunctions and have serious, perhaps irreparable, consequence. Thus, the first question that must be addressed is whether the order appealed from specifically granted or denied an injunction or merely had the practical effect of doing so. If an interlocutory order expressly grants or denies a request for injunctive relief, the Carson requirements need not be met and the order is immediately appealable as of right under 28 U.S.C.S. § 1292\(a\)\(1\). By contrast, if an order merely has the practical effect of granting or denying an injunction, the Carson irreparable injury test must be satisfied.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > Interlocutory Orders

HN3 Judgments, Relief From Judgments

In determining whether the district court acted specifically to grant injunctive relief for purposes of the appealability of an interlocutory order, the court examines, the language of the order, the grounds on which it rests, and the circumstances in which it was entered.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 26.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Geographic Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN5 Relevant Market, Geographic Market Definition

To establish that defendants have the market power required for monopolization liability, plaintiff has to establish that defendants have a dominant market share in a well-defined relevant market. The "relevant market" is defined in terms of both product market and geographic market. An actual monopolization claim often succeeds or fails strictly on the definition of the product or geographic market. The geographic market encompasses the geographic area to which consumers can practicably turn for alternative sources of the product and in which the antitrust defendants face competition. The burden of establishing that a specified area constitutes a relevant geographic market in a particular case rests with the plaintiff.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN6 Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The relevant geographic area is the market area in which the seller operates, and to which the purchaser can practicably turn for supplies.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN7 Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

An 80 percent market share is within the permissible range from which an inference of monopoly power can be drawn. As a matter of law, absent other relevant factors, a 30 percent market share will not prove the existence of monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN8 Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Distance and its counterpart convenience are important in determining the relevant geographic market.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

HN9 Admissibility, Expert Witnesses

When an expert opinion is not supported by sufficient facts to validate it in the eyes of the law, or when indisputable record facts contradict or otherwise render the opinion unreasonable, it cannot support a jury's verdict.

Counsel: Counsel who presented argument on behalf of the appellant was Joe Sims, Washington, D.C. Additional attorneys appearing on the brief were Kathryn M. Fenton and James D. Wareham.

Counsel who presented argument on behalf of the appellee was Daniel Klaus, Lincoln, NE.

Judges: Before McMILLIAN and WOLLMAN, Circuit Judges, and VIETOR,^{*} District Judge.

Opinion by: McMILLIAN

Opinion

[*1293] McMILLIAN, Circuit Judge.

Charles S. Wilson, M.D., and others, (hereinafter referred to as defendants), appeal from an interlocutory order entered in the United States District Court for the District of Nebraska compelling either the dissolution or the restructuring of the Nebraska Heart Institute (NHI). Morgenstern v. Wilson, Civ. No. 90-L-34 (D. Neb. Apr. 26, 1993). For reversal, defendants argue the district court erred in granting an injunction because (1) several legal theories of anti-competitive conduct that were presented to the jury were erroneous as a matter of law, and (2) there was insufficient evidence to support the jury's verdict that Wilson, along with the associated cardiac surgeons, thoracic and vascular surgeons, and cardiologists who comprised NHI, violated S2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15

* The Honorable Harold D. Vietor, United States District Judge for the Southern District of Iowa, sitting by designation.

U.S.C. § 2. Appellee Dan A. Morgenstern, [2] M.D., filed a motion to dismiss the appeal for lack of appellate jurisdiction. For the reasons discussed below, we reverse the judgment of the district court.

I.

In 1987, NHI, a professional corporation, was formed in Lincoln, Nebraska, to provide administrative, clinical and marketing services to its members. The members of NHI were Cardiology Consultants, P.C. (CCPC), a group cardiology practice consisting of six cardiologists, and Cardiovascular & Thoracic Surgery, P.C. (CVTS), a cardiac surgical group practice comprised of three cardiac surgeons and two thoracic and vascular surgeons. The cardiologists of CCPC referred their patients in need of open-heart surgery, angioplasty, and other cardiac surgical procedures to the surgeons of CVTS.

In July 1987 CVTS employed Morgenstern as a cardiac surgeon. After practicing one year with CVTS, CVTS informed Morgenstern that he would not be made a partner with the group. However, at Morgenstern's request, his employment contract with CVTS was extended for a second year during which he continued to perform cardiac surgical procedures on patients referred to CVTS by CCPC. While associated with NHI as a member of CVTS, Morgenstern performed [3] approximately 180 cardiac surgeries.

Upon leaving CVTS in 1989, Morgenstern opened his own cardiac surgery practice in Lincoln. Although the thoracic and vascular aspects of Morgenstern's practice thrived, Morgenstern's cardiac surgery practice failed. During the nine months he practiced cardiac surgery after leaving CVTS, he performed [*1294] only six surgeries. None of the six patients was referred to Morgenstern by CCPC.

Morgenstern filed suit in federal district court against NHI, CCPC, CVTS, and the individual cardiologists and surgeons affiliated with those groups, alleging numerous violations of the Sherman Antitrust Act. After abandoning his conspiracy to monopolize claim under § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, and attempted monopolization and conspiracy to monopolize claims under § 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, Morgenstern proceeded to trial solely on a claim of actual monopolization of cardiac surgery pursuant to § 2. The jury failed to reach a verdict, and the district court ordered a new trial on the actual monopolization claim. The district court denied defendants' motion for judgment as a matter of law.

Following the second trial, the jury exonerated CCPC and CVTS of liability, [4] but found the individual physicians and NHI liable for monopolizing the "adult cardiac surgery market." The jury found that Morgenstern had suffered $ 1,467,000 in damages as a result of the formation of NHI and the failure of the cardiologists to refer patients to Morgenstern, or their referral of patients only to the surgeons associated with NHI. The district court, denying defendants' renewed motion for judgment as a matter of law, upheld the jury's verdict on a theory of "monopolization by combination of individuals and corporations, acting in concert." However, the district court found insufficient evidence to support the jury's award of damages and granted a new trial on that issue. The district court, implementing the jury's verdict on liability, granted injunctive relief to Morgenstern pursuant to § 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 26, and ordered defendants to dissolve or restructure NHI to eliminate common ownership by cardiologists and surgeons and to prevent joint marketing on behalf of CCPC and CVTS. This appeal by defendants followed. Morgenstern filed a motion to dismiss the appeal for lack of appellate jurisdiction.

II.

We consider [5] first our appellate jurisdiction. Morgenstern argues that the injunction in question, implementing the jury's verdict, is not an appealable interlocutory decision within the provisions of 28 U.S.C. § 1292(a)(1). We disagree.

Section 1292(a) provides, in pertinent part, that HN1 "the courts of appeal shall have jurisdiction of appeals from: (1) interlocutory orders of the district courts . . . granting, continuing, modifying, refusing or dissolving injunctions." Thus, by the plain language of § 1292(a), interlocutory orders granting "injunctions" are appealable. Nevertheless, Morgenstern argues that, under Carson v. American Brands, Inc., 450 U.S. 79, 67 L. Ed. 2d 59, 101 S. Ct. 993 (1981) (Carson), unless a litigant is able to show that an interlocutory order of the district court (1) will have serious, perhaps irreparable, consequences, and (2) the order can be effectually challenged only by immediate appeal, the general congressional policy against piecemeal review will preclude interlocutory appeal. Morgenstern contends that, because the order at issue in the present case does not [6] require defendants to take any action until sixty days "following completion of the appellate process," it fails both prongs of the Carson test. We believe Morgenstern misunderstands the law developed on § 1292\(a\) appeals. Section 1292\(a\) HN2[¹] invokes two separate avenues of analysis. The United States Supreme Court has stated that § 1292\(a\)\(1\) provides appellate jurisdiction for "orders that grant or deny injunctions" as well as those "orders that merely have the practical effect of granting or denying injunctions and have 'serious, perhaps irreparable, consequence.'" Gulfstream Aerospace Corp. v. Mayacamas Corp., 485 U.S. 271, 287-88, 99 L. Ed. 2d 296, 108 S. Ct. 1133 (1988), quoting Carson, 450 U.S. at 84. Thus, the first question that must be addressed "is whether the order appealed from specifically [granted or] denied an injunction or merely had the practical effect of doing so." Kausler v. Campey, 989 F.2d 296, 298 (8th Cir. 1993) (Kausler). We are in accord with the majority of circuits which have held that, if an interlocutory [7] order expressly grants or denies a request for injunctive [*1295] relief, the Carson requirements need not be met and the order is immediately appealable as of right under § 1292\(a\)\(1\). See, e.g., MAI Basi c Four, Inc. v. Basis, Inc., 962 F.2d 978, 982 (10th Cir. 1992); Sherri A.D. v. Kirby, 975 F.2d 193, 203 (5th Cir. 1992); United States v. Bayshore Assocs., 934 F.2d 1391, 1395-96 (6th Cir. 1991); Cohen v. Board of Trustees, 867 F.2d 1455, 1466 (3d Cir. 1989); International Ass'n of Machinists & Aerospace Workers v. Eastern Airlines, Inc., 270 U.S. App. D.C. 352, 849 F.2d 1481, 1486 n.11 (D.C. Cir. 1988); Donovan v. Robbins, 752 F.2d 1170, 1173-74 (7th Cir. 1985); Cable Holdings of Battlefield, Inc. v. Cooke, 764 F.2d 1466, 1471 (11th Cir. 1985). By contrast, if an order merely has the practical effect of granting or denying an injunction, the Carson irreparable injury test must be satisfied. Kausler, 989 F.2d at 298. [8]

HN3[¹] In determining whether the district court acted specifically to grant injunctive relief, we examine "the language of the order, the grounds on which it rests, [and] the circumstances in which it was entered." Kausler, 989 F.2d at 299. An examination of the district court's order reveals that the district court explicitly granted Morgenstern injunctive relief, and, thus, Carson is inapposite. The district court order, styled as "Order for Injunctive Relief," expressly granted the specific injunctive relief prayed for in Morgenstern's complaint. The district court stated that, in accordance with its "equitable powers" under 15 U.S.C. § 26,¹ defendants "are permanently enjoined as follows: within sixty days after this order becomes final following completion of the appellate process," (1) NHI shall be dissolved, or (2) restructured to eliminate common ownership by cardiologists and surgeons and to prevent joint marketing on behalf of CCPC and CTS. The district court imposed upon defendants an affirmative obligation, and then stayed that obligation pending appellate review. The district court specifically granted [9] Morgenstern the injunctive relief he requested, and, therefore, we conclude that we have jurisdiction over the present appeal as one coming within the parameters of § 1292\(a\)\(1\). Accordingly, we deny Morgenstern's motion to dismiss the appeal.

III.

We now turn to the merits of defendants' appeal. For reversal, defendants argue that several of the legal theories of anti-competitive conduct that were presented to the jury were erroneous as a matter of law, and that there was insufficient evidence to support the jury's verdict that NHI, and the individual physicians who comprise NHI, violated § 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. Because we conclude [10] that Morgenstern produced insufficient evidence of defendants' anti-competitive power within a well-defined relevant geographic market, we reverse the judgment of the district court.²

¹ 15 U.S.C. § 26 provides, in pertinent part, that any HN4[¹] "person, firm, corporation or association shall be entitled to sue for and have injunctive relief, in any court of the United States having jurisdiction over the parties, against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws."

² Our resolution of the issue of the relevant geographic market has made it unnecessary for us to reach all of the issues presented on appeal. Defendants raise several challenges to the theories of liability upon which the present case was submitted to the jury. Defendants first argue that, as a matter of law, a medical referral from one specialist to another is an act of medical judgment and cannot support antitrust liability. Defendants also argue that an actual monopolization claim must be predicated on the market domination of a single defendant or single economic entity and cannot be established by combining the market power of multiple defendants. There is a split in authority on this question. See generally Julian O. von Kalinowski, Antitrust Laws and [11] HN5 To establish that defendants have the market power required for monopolization [*1296] liability, Morgenstern had to establish that defendants have "a dominant market share in a well-defined relevant market." Flegel v. Christian Hosp., Northeast-Northwest, 4 F.3d 682, 689 (8th Cir. 1993) (quoting Assam Drug Co. v. Miller Brewing Co., 798 F.2d 311, 318 (8th Cir. 1986)). The "relevant market" is defined in terms of both product market (here, adult cardiac surgery) and geographic market. An actual monopolization claim often succeeds or fails strictly on the definition of the product or geographic market. Alexander v. National Farmers Organization, 687 F.2d 1173, 1181 (8th Cir. 1982) (citing Julian O. von Kalinowski, Antitrust Laws and Trade Regulation, §§ 8.02[3]c, 9.01[3] (1982) (collecting cases)), cert. denied, 461 U.S. 937, 77 L. Ed. 2d 313, 103 S. Ct. 2108 (1983). The geographic market encompasses the geographic area to which consumers can practicably turn for alternative sources of the product and in which the antitrust defendants face [12] competition. Baxley-DeLamar Monuments, Inc., v. American Cemetery Ass'n, 938 F.2d 846, 850 (8th Cir. 1991). The burden of establishing that a specified area constitutes a relevant geographic market in a particular case rests with the plaintiff. United States v. Empire Gas Corp., 537 F.2d 296 (8th Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1122, 51 L. Ed. 2d 572, 97 S. Ct. 1158 (1977).

In the present case, Morgenstern proposed a relevant market of patients of adult cardiac surgery to include Lincoln and twenty-six surrounding Nebraska counties extending in certain directions over 200 miles beyond Lincoln. However, Morgenstern's relevant geographic market excluded the heart programs in Omaha and all other regional and national heart programs. Defendants' relevant geographic market included, at a minimum, Omaha. The question before this Court is whether Morgenstern provided sufficient evidence from which the jury could reasonably have found that defendants possessed market power within the relevant geographic market.³ A close examination of the record reveals that Morgenstern's [13] evidence regarding the relevant geographic market failed to address a critical legal question: where could consumers of the product (adult cardiac surgery) practicably turn for alternative sources of the product. See Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 331-32, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580, 81 S. Ct. 623 (1961) (defining HN6 the relevant geographic area as "the market area in which the seller operates, and to which the purchaser can practicably turn for supplies"). The evidence provided by Morgenstern to support his geographic market definition consisted primarily of expert testimony regarding the residences of the cardiac surgery patients in the Lincoln and Omaha heart surgery programs, and the Nebraska counties that supplied the largest number of patients to each program. Morgenstern's proposed geographic market was also based upon evidence that cardiologists in Lincoln seldom refer their patients to cardiac surgeons in Omaha. Joint Appendix Vol. IV at 1692, 1791. Morgenstern's expert focused upon where Lincoln and Omaha residents actually went, as opposed to where they could practicably go, for their cardiac [14] surgery services, and specifically presented insufficient evidence regarding whether or not CVTS patients could practicably turn for alternative sources of the product to Omaha or other more distant heart programs. Morgenstern's [*1297] expert Trade Regulation §§ 17.01[2], 19.06 (1993); II E. Kinter, Federal Antitrust Law, § 16.2, at 482 (1980) (indicating that several firms acting in concert can be guilty of actual monopolization). Defendants further contend that, if this Court recognizes such a joint monopolization claim, it should treat such a claim as a conspiracy to monopolize claim, and, thus, require an agreement among defendants to commit an anti-competitive act. The jury in the present case was not instructed regarding the finding of an agreement. We are cognizant that no circuit has squarely addressed these questions. Even were we to rule in Morgenstern's favor on these issues, defendants would still be entitled to judgment in their favor. We consequently leave resolution of these issues for an appropriate case.

³ Within the relevant geographic market found by the jury (Lincoln and twenty-six surrounding counties, but not including Omaha), defendants possessed close to eighty percent of the market share of the patients. HN7 An eighty percent market share is within the permissible range from which an inference of monopoly power can be drawn. If, as defendants contend, the relevant geographic market includes Omaha, then defendants have only a thirty percent market share. As a matter of law, absent other relevant factors, a thirty percent market share will not prove the existence of monopoly power. See, e.g., Fineman v. Armstrong World Indus., Inc., 980 F.2d 171, 201 (3d Cir. 1992) (fifty-five percent market share is insufficient to constitute monopoly power), cert. denied, 122 L. Ed. 2d 677, 113 S. Ct. 1285 (1993); Domed Stadium Hotel, Inc. v. Holiday Inns, Inc., 732 F.2d 480, 489 (5th Cir. 1984) (ninety percent is enough, sixty percent is not likely to suffice, and thirty-three is insufficient) (citations omitted); Lektro-Vend Corp. v. Vendo Co., 660 F.2d 255 (7th Cir. 1981) (thirty percent market share insufficient), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 921, 71 L. Ed. 2d 461, 102 S. Ct. 1277 (1982); United States v. Empire Gas Corp., 537 F.2d 296 (8th Cir. 1976) (forty-seven to fifty percent share in liquid propane gas market held insufficient), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1122, 51 L. Ed. 2d 572, 97 S. Ct. 1158 (1977).

concluded that Lincoln and Omaha must be in different geographic markets "because patients overwhelmingly went to the closest hospital." Brief for Appellee at 20. Morgenstern further provided no evidence that patients viewed Lincoln as a market separate from Omaha, located only fifty-eight miles from Lincoln.

[15] The evidence produced in the present case falls far short of establishing Lincoln and surrounding counties, to the exclusion of Omaha, as the relevant geographic market. By contrast, the record shows that Omaha should have been included in the relevant geographic market definition. The Supreme Court has recognized the importance of HN8[↑] distance and its counterpart convenience in determining the relevant geographic market. See United States v. Philadelphia Nat'l Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 358, 10 L. Ed. 2d 915, 83 S. Ct. 1715 (1963). Defendants' evidence showed that Lincoln residents need travel only fifty-eight miles by main highway to receive cardiac surgical care in Omaha. Morgenstern himself traveled from Lincoln to Omaha on more than thirty occasions in a single year to assist in performing cardiac surgery. The defendants also provided testimony from health care providers in various professions throughout Nebraska who uniformly confirmed the existence of vigorous competition between Lincoln and Omaha. Lincoln cardiologists and cardiac surgeons testified to strong competition between them and the six Omaha heart programs. Joint [16] Appendix Vol. II at 810-18, 904, 979-80; Vol. III at 1174-76, 1215-17, 1466-68. Omaha cardiac surgeons and hospital administrators testified to strong competition from CVTS and the cardiologists of CCPC. Moreover, the evidence showed that, throughout Nebraska, primary care physicians considered both Lincoln and Omaha as feasible sources of healthcare when making recommendations to their patients in need of cardiac surgery services. Joint Appendix Vol. II at 766-72, 775, 935; Vol. III at 1079-83, 1227-28. In Lincoln itself, physicians would refer patients to Omaha if, in their medical judgment, better treatment was available there. Joint Appendix Vol. II at 777-80. Defendants' expert provided further corroborative evidence consisting of three distinct economic studies designed to determine reasonable, practicable substitutes for Lincoln's residents in need of cardiac surgery services. Each analysis concluded that the relevant geographic market consisted of, at a minimum, Lincoln and Omaha.

Morgenstern argues that market determination, including the relevant geographic market, is necessarily a factual question for the jury, and emphasizes that the jury evidently credited the testimony [17] of Morgenstern's expert and found the relevant geographic market to exclude Omaha. However, HN9[↑] "when an expert opinion is not supported by sufficient facts to validate it in the eyes of the law, or when indisputable record facts contradict or otherwise render the opinion unreasonable, it cannot support a jury's verdict." Brooke Group v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Co., 125 L. Ed. 2d 168, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 2598 (1993). Morgenstern has failed to overcome the overwhelming evidence that cardiac surgery programs in Lincoln and Omaha occupy the same relevant geographic market. As discussed above in footnote three, within the properly defined relevant geographic market, no permissible inference of monopoly power can be drawn. Absent monopoly power, Morgenstern's monopoly claim must fail.

Accordingly, we reverse the judgment of the district court.

USS-POSCO Indus. v. Contra Costa County Bldg. & Constr. Trades Council

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

August 12, 1993, Argued, Submitted, San Francisco, California ; July 26, 1994, Filed

No. 92-15497

Reporter

31 F.3d 800 *; 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 18725 ; 146 L.R.R.M. 2961; 128 Lab. Cas. (CCH) P11,147; 1994-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,647; 94 Cal. Daily Op. Service 5703; 94 Daily Journal DAR 10458

USS-POSCO INDUSTRIES, a California general partnership, Plaintiff, and BE&K CONSTRUCTION COMPANY, a Delaware corporation, Plaintiff-Appellant, v. CONTRA COSTA COUNTY BUILDING & CONSTRUCTION TRADES COUNCIL, AFL-CIO, a voluntary, unincorporated association; STEAMFITTERS LOCAL UNION NO. 342 OF THE UNITED ASSOCIATION OF JOURNEYMEN & APPRENTICES OF THE PLUMBING & PIPEFITTING INDUSTRY OF THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA, AFL-CIO, Defendants-Appellees.

Subsequent History: Related proceeding at BE & K Constr. Co., 329 N.L.R.B. 717, 1999 NLRB LEXIS 735 \(Sept. 30, 1999\)

Prior History: [\[1\]](#) Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of California. D.C. No. CV-87-04829-DLJ. D. Lowell Jensen, District Judge, Presiding.

USS-Posco Industries v. Contra Costa Bldg. & Constr. Trades Council, 1990 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11360 \(N.D. Cal., June 8, 1990\)

Core Terms

non-labor, exemption, antitrust, district court, combine, anti trust law, sham, summary judgment, lawsuits, discovery, entities, amended complaint, self-interest, antitrust liability, contractors, petitioning, proceedings, merits, cases, statutory exemption, labor union, allegations, bargaining, competitor, sanctions, unionized, baseless, lobbying, protests, purposes

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Nonstatutory Exemptions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Statutory Exemptions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Strikes & Work Stoppages

HN1 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

The interlacing Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq.; Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 12 et seq.; and Norris-LaGuardia Act give unions a statutory exemption to the antitrust laws. So long as a union acts in its self-interest and does not combine with non-labor groups, the licit and the illicit are not to be distinguished by any judgment regarding the wisdom or unwisdom, the rightness or wrongness, the selfishness or unselfishness of the end of which the particular union activities are the means.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Strikes & Work Stoppages

HN2 [] Exemptions & Immunities, Labor

There is a two-prong test for the statutory labor exemption: (1) Did the union combine with a non-labor group? (2) Did the union act in its legitimate self-interest?

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Statutory Exemptions

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Strikes & Work Stoppages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

HN3 [] Labor, Statutory Exemptions

When a labor union combines with an entity that is competing in the plaintiff's market, this normally is deemed to be a combination with a non-labor group, stripping the union of the statutory labor exemption. Thus, in most statutory labor exemption cases, the focus has been on whether the union combined with a competitor of the targeted employer.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Statutory Exemptions

Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Lease Agreements > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Strikes & Work Stoppages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

HN4 [] Labor, Statutory Exemptions

Labor unions carrying out their normal functions must be free to hire law firms, contract for lease space and negotiate with other business entities, without risking antitrust liability. Even though many of the entities that unions deal with on a daily basis cannot fairly be described as labor groups, they are not deemed non-labor groups for purposes of the statutory labor exemption.

31 F.3d 800, *800LÁ994 U.S. App. LEXIS 18725, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Statutory Exemptions

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Strikes & Work Stoppages

HN5 Labor, Statutory Exemptions

The definition of non-labor group must not stray too far from the paradigm of the union combining with the employer's competitors. To constitute a non-labor group for purposes of the statutory labor exemption, therefore, the entity in question must operate in the same market as the plaintiff to a sufficient degree that it would be capable of committing an antitrust violation against the plaintiff, quite independent of the union's involvement. A competitor of the plaintiff clearly falls within that definition, as would a supplier or purchaser of the plaintiff's goods or services. When the union combines with such an entity, it loses the protections of the antitrust exemption.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Strikes & Work Stoppages

HN6 Exemptions & Immunities, Labor

A union that combines only with other labor groups may nonetheless lose the statutory exemption.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Strikes & Work Stoppages

HN7 Exemptions & Immunities, Labor

A union may violate the antitrust laws - in other words, that it may lose the benefit of the labor exemption - even when it does not combine with a non-labor group.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Strikes & Work Stoppages

HN8 Exemptions & Immunities, Labor

A union must act in pursuit of its legitimate self-interest. Whether the interest in question is legitimate depends on whether the ends to be achieved are among the traditional objectives of labor organizations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Strikes & Work Stoppages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

HN9[] Scope, Exemptions

The means employed by the union bear on the degree of scrutiny the court will cast on the legitimacy of the union's interest. Thus, where a union engages in activities normally associated with labor disputes, these will be presumed to be in pursuit of the union's legitimate interest absent a very strong showing to the contrary. Where the union's activities are farther afield, the scrutiny is more searching.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Statutory Exemptions

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Strikes & Work Stoppages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

HN10[] Labor, Statutory Exemptions

Encouraging the use of unionized labor is an objective well within the legitimate interests of labor unions and, so long as this end is pursued by activities normally associated with labor disputes, there's a strong presumption that the unions are protected from antitrust liability by the statutory labor exemption.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Strikes & Work Stoppages

HN11[] Exemptions & Immunities, Labor

The question with regard to the statutory labor exemption is whether the non-traditional means are appropriate - in other words, whether the non-traditional means are not only lawful, but necessary because the goals could not be achieved through traditional tactics. And the burden to show this lies with the unions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom to Petition

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN12[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The Noerr-Pennington doctrine provides broad antitrust protection for those who petition the government for a redress of grievances. This protection extends to lobbying of government officials, and petitioning of administrative agencies and courts. In those contexts, immunity from antitrust liability is lost only if a party engages in "sham" petitioning.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN13 [+] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

There is a two-part test for sham litigation: First, the suit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits; second, the baseless lawsuit must conceal an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor. The two parts of the test operate in succession: Only if the suit is found to be objectively baseless does the court proceed to examine the litigant's subjective intent.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN14 [+] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

If the suit turns out to have objective merit, the plaintiff can't proceed to inquire into subjective purposes, and the action is perforce not a sham.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Strikes & Work Stoppages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

HN15 [+] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The filing of a whole series of lawsuits and other legal actions without regard to the merits has far more serious implications than filing a single action, and can serve as a very effective restraint on trade. When dealing with a series of lawsuits, the question is not whether any one of them has merit - some may turn out to, just as a matter of chance - but whether they are brought pursuant to a policy of starting legal proceedings without regard to the merits and for the purpose of injuring a market rival. The inquiry in such cases is prospective: Were the legal filings made, not out of a genuine interest in redressing grievances, but as part of a pattern or practice of successive filings undertaken essentially for purposes of harassment?

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Waiver & Preservation of Defenses

HN16 [+] Pleadings, Amendment of Pleadings

A plaintiff waives all causes of action alleged in the original complaint which are not alleged in the amended complaint.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Appealability

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Waiver & Preservation of Defenses

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

HN17 [blue icon] Appellate Review, Appealability

The London rule only applies to amended complaints that follow upon dismissal with leave to amend, and not to those that follow summary judgment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Strikes & Work Stoppages

HN18 [blue icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Labor

Unions can forfeit the statutory labor exemption even without combining with non-labor groups if the union acts outside this legitimate self-interest.

Counsel: James G. Gilliland, Jr., Ann Julius, Khourie, Crew & Jaeger, San Francisco, California, June D. Beltran, Townsend and Townsend and Crew, San Francisco, California, for plaintiff-appellant BE&K Construction Co.

Peter D. Nussbaum, Fred H. Altshuler, Altshuler, Berzon, Nussbaum, Berzon & Rubin, San Francisco, California, for defendant-appellee Steamfitters Local Union No. 342 of the United Association of Journeymen & Apprentices of the Plumbing & Pipefitting Industries of the United States and Canada, AFL-CIO.

Sandra Rae Benson, Victor J. Van Bourg, Van Bourg, Weinberg, Roger & Rosenfeld, San Francisco, California, for defendant-appellee Contra Costa County Building & Construction Trades Council, AFL-CIO.

Judges: Before: Alex Kozinski, David R. Thompson and Thomas G. Nelson, Circuit Judges. Opinion by Judge Kozinski.

Opinion by: KOZINSKI

Opinion

[*803] OPINION

KOZINSKI, Circuit Judge.

We explore the nether reaches of two areas of antitrust law: the statutory labor exemption and the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

[*804] /

USS-POSCO Industries (UPI) is a joint venture [2] between USX Corporation (formerly U.S. Steel) and Pohang Iron and Steel Co. of South Korea, formed to modernize and operate an old steel facility in Pittsburg, California (PITCAL). Interested unions allegedly attempted to coerce UPI into awarding the general contract to a unionized contractor. After bidding, UPI nevertheless awarded the $ 350 million construction contract - involving over 800 jobs - to appellant BE&K, a merit-shop contractor. See Henry Weinstein, Workers Are Steeling Themselves to Fight Non-Union Upgrading of Pittsburg Plant, L.A. Times, Mar. 16, 1987, at 3.

BE&K alleges the unions then began a campaign to eliminate non-union construction in Northern California by making an example of PITCAL. Although none of the unions had a collective bargaining agreement with BE&K, defendants allegedly filed automatic protests to BE&K's permits in order to cause it gratuitous expense and delay; lobbied for a local toxic waste disposal ordinance that would require BE&K to obtain more permits; sued to enforce the ordinance at the PITCAL site; encouraged BE&K's subcontractors to protest nonexistent safety violations; brought suit against BE&K for allegedly violating environmental [3] laws (the Piledrivers suit); and brought numerous grievances, arbitrations and enforcement proceedings against BE&K's partner, Eichleay Constructors, Inc. (the Eichleay actions). According to BE&K, the unions' purpose was not to organize BE&K's employees, but to cause such delay and expense that future project owners would only hire unionized contractors and subcontractors.

UPI and BE&K originally brought suit alleging unfair labor practices under the LMRA, and the unions defended on the ground that their lobbying efforts, the Piledrivers suit and the Eichleay actions were immunized from LMRA liability under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. See Bill Johnson's Restaurants, Inc. v. NLRB, 461 U.S. 731, 76 L. Ed. 2d 277, 103 S. Ct. 2161 \(1983\) (applying Noerr-Pennington to labor context); see also Eastern R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 144, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 \(1961\) (legitimate petitioning of government immunized from antitrust laws). Rejecting BE&K's argument that the suits fell within [4] the sham exception to Noerr-Pennington, the district court found that the lobbying of state and local bodies and the Eichleay actions were valid attempts to petition the government. After discovery, the court granted partial summary judgment for the unions. ER 199.

BE&K filed an amended complaint which realleged the above-described conduct, this time claiming that it violated the Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts.¹ The court granted the unions' subsequent motion to dismiss on the ground that the amended complaint was foreclosed by the prior partial summary judgment. BE&K then filed its second amended complaint, basing it in part on the same activities the district court had ruled were protected by Noerr-Pennington. The court granted the unions' motion to strike those portions of the complaint dealing with the toxic waste ordinance, the Piledrivers suit and the Eichleay grievances. It also imposed Rule 11 sanctions on BE&K. ER 235 at 8-10.

[5] The unions then advised the district court they intended to seek partial summary judgment on the antitrust claim on the ground that the surviving allegations involved activities protected by the statutory labor exemption. The court ruled that, in order to overcome the statutory exemption, BE&K would have to prove "both a combination with non-labor groups and an illegitimate purpose in such combination." ER 283 at 8 (emphasis added). The court then limited BE&K's discovery to the first of these elements. Because BE&K was unable to show a triable issue of fact as to whether there was a combination with non-labor groups, the court granted the unions' subsequent motion for partial summary judgment.

[*805] BE&K stipulated to dismissal of its remaining claims with prejudice. It appeals only the antitrust claims and the imposition of sanctions.

//

In United States v. Hutcheson, 312 U.S. 219, 232, 85 L. Ed. 788, 61 S. Ct. 463 (1941), the Supreme Court examined HN1[↑] the "interlacing" Sherman, Clayton and Norris-LaGuardia Acts, and held that they gave unions a statutory exemption to the antitrust laws:²

¹ UPI voluntarily dismissed its complaint against all defendants in February 1990, and is no longer a party to this suit. See Firm, Building Trades, Settle Feud Over Environmental Concerns at Steel Plant, Daily Lab. Rep. (BNA), Mar. 1, 1990, at A-8.

² There is also a non-statutory exemption for agreements between unions and employers that are intimately related to the unions' vital concern with wages, hours and working conditions. Connell Construction Co. v. Plumbers & Steamfitters Local No. 100, 421 U.S. 616, 622, 44 L. Ed. 2d 418, 95 S. Ct. 1830 \(1975\); Richards v. Neilson Freight Lines, 810 F.2d 898, 905 \(9th Cir. 1987\). As no such collective bargaining relationship existed here, the non-statutory exemption is not at issue.

[6] So long as a union acts in its self-interest and does not combine with non-labor groups, the licit and the illicit . . . are not to be distinguished by any judgment regarding the wisdom or unwisdom, the rightness or wrongness, the selfishness or unselfishness of the end of which the particular union activities are the means.

Hutcheson, 312 U.S. at 232 (emphasis added). This passage has been read as establishing HN2 a two-prong test for the statutory labor exemption: (1) Did the union combine with a non-labor group? (2) Did the union act in its legitimate self-interest? See, e.g., United Mine Workers of America v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 662, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 (1965); Allen Bradley Co. v. Local No. 3, IBEW, 325 U.S. 797, 806-07, 89 L. Ed. 1939, 65 S. Ct. 1533 (1945); Bodine Produce, Inc. v. United Farm Workers Org. Comm., 494 F.2d 541, 557-58 (9th Cir. 1974). A key question in this case is whether these two prongs of Hutcheson are to be [7] read in the conjunctive (i.e., that plaintiff must establish both elements in order to get around the exemption), or in the disjunctive (i.e., that plaintiff can bypass the exemption by proving either element).

The district court read the Hutcheson test in the conjunctive and granted summary judgment on the antitrust claim because BE&K was unable to establish a triable issue of fact as to the first element - whether the unions had combined with non-labor groups. BE&K appeals this ruling, arguing first, that the district court defined non-labor group too narrowly; and second, that BE&K should have been allowed to show the union acted for an improper purpose, as an alternative avenue for defeating the statutory labor exemption.³

[8] A. What constitutes a non-labor group for purposes of the antitrust laws has never been very clearly defined.⁴ It is possible, [*806] however, to derive a fair approximation of what the term means based on certain common-sense observations.

[9] On the one hand, HN3 when a labor union combines with an entity that is competing in the plaintiff's market, this normally is deemed to be a combination with a non-labor group, stripping the union of the statutory labor exemption. But see n.5 infra. Thus, in most statutory labor exemption cases, the focus has been on whether the union combined with a competitor of the targeted employer. See, e.g., H.A. Artists, 451 U.S. at 715 (discussing nonlabor group as "one or more employers"); Federal Maritime Comm'n v. Pacific Maritime Ass'n, 435 U.S. 40, 51

³ BE&K also complains that the district court improperly assigned to it the burden of proving that the statutory labor exemption did not apply, since defendants normally bear the burden of proving exceptions to the antitrust laws. See Feather v. UMWA, 711 F.2d 530, 542 (3d Cir. 1983); Consolidated Express, Inc. v. New York Shipping Ass'n, 602 F.2d 494, 521 (3d Cir. 1979), vacated on other grounds, 448 U.S. 902 (1980); 9 Julian O. von Kalinowski, Antitrust Laws and Trade Regulation, § 81.09[2] (1993). But the statutory exemption is not an affirmative defense; it's an element of any claim that unions violated the antitrust laws. Plaintiff bears the burden of proof. See Pennington, 381 U.S. at 669 ("the alleged agreement between UMW and the large operators . . ., if proved, was not exempt from the antitrust laws"); Richards, 810 F.2d at 902 ("failure on the part of the plaintiff to produce evidence from which a jury could infer reasonably that conduct was conspiratorial, not unilateral, will lead to summary judgment for the defendant"); Bodine Produce, 494 F.2d at 561 (plaintiff must specifically allege non-labor group combination); Mid-America Regional Bargaining Ass'n v. Will County Carpenters Dist. Council, 675 F.2d 881, 886 (7th Cir. 1982) ("if the defendants' conduct is to fall outside the statutory exemption, the plaintiffs must allege a conspiracy under Allen Bradley"). But see United States Steel Corp. v. Fraternal Ass'n of Steelhaulers, 431 F.2d 1046, 1051 (3d Cir. 1970) (union failed to meet burden of proving element of statutory exemption).

⁴ Indeed, the case law is saturated with confusing formulations. See Jacksonville Bulk Terminals, Inc. v. International Longshoremen's Ass'n, 457 U.S. 702, 721, 73 L. Ed. 2d 327, 102 S. Ct. 2672 (1982) (labor group depends on "the presence of a job or wage competition or some other economic interrelationship affecting legitimate union interests") (quoting American Federation of Musicians v. Carroll, 391 U.S. 99, 106, 20 L. Ed. 2d 460, 88 S. Ct. 1562 (1968)); H.A. Artists & Assocs. v. Actors' Equity Ass'n, 451 U.S. 704, 717, 68 L. Ed. 2d 558, 101 S. Ct. 2102 (1981) ("nonlabor group" consists of "persons who are not 'parties to a labor dispute' within the meaning of the Norris-LaGuardia Act) (quoting Hutcheson, 312 U.S. at 232); Allen Bradley, 325 U.S. at 798, 801, 809 (union lost statutory exemption where it combined with "employers and manufacturers of goods" to "aid and abet business men to do the precise things which the Act prohibits"; "when [a union participates] with a combination of business men who had complete power to eliminate all competition among themselves and to prevent all competition from others, a situation [is] created not included within the exemptions of the Clayton and Norris-LaGuardia Acts").

n.15, 55 L. Ed. 2d 96, 98 S. Ct. 927 (1978) (considering whether there is "combination with nonlabor groups, i.e., whether there is no conspiracy with management"); Pennington, 381 U.S. at 665-66 (union forfeited statutory exemption where it "agrees with one set of employers" to eliminate competition from the industry); Allen Bradley, 325 U.S. at 811 ("Congress evidently concluded . . . [10] that the chief objective of Anti-trust legislation, preservation of business competition, could be accomplished by applying the legislation primarily only to those business groups which are directly interested in destroying competition."); Bodine, 494 F.2d at 560 ("alliance between the defendant union and non-labor business groups engaged in competition with the plaintiffs" constituted combination with non-labor group); see also Phillip Areeda & Donald F. Turner, Antitrust Law Par. 229e (1978).

At the other end of the spectrum, HN4[¹] labor unions carrying out their normal functions must be free to hire law firms, contract for lease space and negotiate with other business entities, without risking antitrust liability. Even though many of the entities that unions deal with on a daily basis cannot fairly be described as labor groups, they are not deemed "non-labor groups" for purposes of the statutory labor exemption. Were it otherwise, this requirement - which lies at the heart of the test announced by Hutcheson - would be rendered utterly meaningless in the sense that everything unions do would become a combination with a non-labor group and [11] possibly subject to antitrust liability.

To allow unions breathing space in carrying out their legitimate functions without giving them free rein to extend their substantial economic power into markets for goods and services other than labor, we conclude that HN5[¹] the definition of non-labor group must not stray too far from the paradigm of the union combining with the employer's competitors. To constitute a non-labor group for purposes of the statutory labor exemption, therefore, the entity in question must operate in the same market as the plaintiff to a sufficient degree that it would be capable of committing an antitrust violation against the plaintiff, quite independent of the union's involvement. See R.C. Dick Geothermal Corp. v. Thermogenics, Inc., 890 F.2d 139, 148 (9th Cir. 1989) (en banc) ("The requirement that the alleged [antitrust] injury be related to anticompetitive behavior requires, as a corollary, that the injured party be a participant in the same market as the alleged malefactors.") (quoting Bhan v. NME Hospitals, Inc., 772 F.2d 1467, 1470 (9th Cir. 1985)); see also Associated Gen. Contractors v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 539, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983); [12] Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law at 400 Par. 334.1b (1993 Supp.).

As noted, a competitor of the plaintiff clearly falls within that definition, as would a supplier or purchaser of the plaintiff's goods or services. See, e.g., E.W. French & Sons, Inc. v. General Portland, Inc., 885 F.2d 1392 (9th Cir. 1989) (ready-mix concrete supplier bringing antitrust suit against cement producer); [*807] Zidell Explorations, Inc. v. Conval Int'l Ltd., 719 F.2d 1465 (9th Cir. 1983) (distributor of valves bringing antitrust action against suppliers). Other entities, though more remote, may nevertheless stand in such a relationship to the plaintiff that they are deemed to be operating in the same market. See, e.g., Allied Tube & Conduit Corp. v. Indian Head, Inc., 486 U.S. 492, 100 L. Ed. 2d 497, 108 S. Ct. 1931 (1988) (antitrust suit by manufacturer against private standard-setting organization); Brown v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 982 F.2d 386 (9th Cir. 1992) (antitrust class action by title insurance consumers against insurers for participation [13] in state-licensed rating bureaus). When the union combines with such an entity, it loses the protections of the antitrust exemption.⁵

[14] BE&K took discovery on this issue and, although the initial order seemed to restrict discovery to BE&K's competitors, ER 283 at 14, the court subsequently explained that it did not mean to "cut off any discovery reasonably designed to identify contractors, manufacturers or other commercial entities with whom the defendants may have formed illegal combinations." IBEW SER 304 at 3. This was sufficiently broad to allow BE&K to identify anyone falling under the definition of non-labor group as explicated above, but BE&K has been able to point to no such entity. We therefore agree with the district court that BE&K has failed to raise a material issue of fact as to whether the unions combined with non-labor groups, and therefore did not carry its burden under this prong of the Hutcheson test.

⁵ There appears to be at least one exception to this general rule. In some cases, a party that would otherwise meet the definition of a "non-labor group" was considered a "labor group" because of an "economic interrelationship" between that party and the union. See, e.g., Jacksonville Bulk Terminals, 457 U.S. at 721 (status as "labor group" depends on "whether there is 'some . . . economic interrelationship affecting legitimate union interests'"); Carroll, 391 U.S. at 106 ("labor group" characterized by "job or wage competition or some other economic interrelationship affecting legitimate union interests between the union members" and the purported "labor group"); accord H.A. Artists, 451 U.S. at 718.

[3] B. The district court didn't allow BE&K discovery on the alternate prong of Hutcheson because it took the view that failure as to one prong was fatal to BE&K's case. In its most recent pronouncement on the subject, however, the Supreme Court clearly held that HN6[↑] a union that combines only with other labor groups may nonetheless lose the statutory exemption under the second prong of Hutcheson 15. H.A. Artists & Assocs. v. Actors' Equity Ass'n, 451 U.S. 704, 68 L. Ed. 2d 558, 101 S. Ct. 2102 \(1981\), involved a challenge under the Sherman Act to certain rules of the Actors' Equity Union, including the exaction of a franchising fee from theatrical agents licensed by the union.

The Supreme Court first inquired whether there was a combination between the union and any "non-labor groups," or persons who are not "parties to the labor dispute." Id. at 717. The Court found that the theatrical agents were not a "non-labor group" for purposes of the statutory exemption. Id. Had this been sufficient to establish the union's entitlement to the labor exemption, the Court could have stopped right there. Instead, it proceeded to evaluate whether the union's activities were undertaken in pursuit of its legitimate self-interest. While it found the union's activity generally exempt because the regulations were "clearly designed to promote the union's legitimate self-interest," id. at 721, it found "the 16 fees that [the union] levied upon the agents" might not be "a permissible component of the exempt regulatory system," id. at 722. Because no evidence had been presented at trial "to show that the costs justified the fees actually levied," id. at 712, the case was remanded for further factfinding.

Had the Court in H.A. Artists eventually approved all aspects of the arrangement between the union and the agents, its examination of the fee structure might have been explainable on a belt-and-suspenders rationale. But the Court found fault with the fee structure - or at least found that there might be fault. Since H.A. Artists was an antitrust case, the only possible fault could be a violation *808 of the antitrust laws. We read this as a clear holding that HN7[↑] a union may violate the antitrust laws - in other words, that it may lose the benefit of the labor exemption - even when it does not combine with a non-labor group. Although, prior to H.A. Artists, there was some doubt on this point,⁶ there no longer is. See Daralyn J. Durie & Mark A. Lemley, The Antitrust 17 Liability of Labor Unions for Anticompetitive Litigation, 80 Cal. L. Rev. 757, 783 & n.155 (1992).

18 What, then, does it mean for a union to pursue an illegitimate purpose? In the broadest sense, everything a union does serves its self-interest. But Hutcheson requires that HN8[↑] it act in pursuit of its legitimate self-interest. Whether the interest in question is legitimate depends on whether the ends to be achieved are among the ⁶ Some cases had suggested that the union must combine with a non-labor group as a predicate for antitrust liability. In Allen Bradley, 325 U.S. at 810, the Court explained that whether union activities violated the Sherman Act was "dependent upon whether the union acts alone or in combination with business groups." See, e.g., Hunt v. Crumboch, 325 U.S. 821, 89 L. Ed. 1954, 65 S. Ct. 1545 \(1945\) (unilateral actions of union to drive petitioner out of business are immune from Sherman Act liability); Embry-Riddle Aeronautical Univ. v. Ross Aviation, Inc., 504 F.2d 896, 903-04 \(5th Cir. 1974\) ("A Union can, without forfeiting the exemption, . . . act with a purpose to injure or even eliminate the business of an employer What makes the exemption disappear is sufficient proof of a concerted purpose, between the union and a favored employer.") (emphasis in original); Bodine Produce, 494 F.2d at 550 ("Following Hutcheson, the issue became primarily one of whether there existed an improper combination with non-labor groups.").

Other cases had suggested that illegitimate purpose alone might bring a union outside the statutory exemption. See, e.g., Jacksonville Bulk Terminals, 457 U.S. at 714 ("the protections of [the statutory labor exemption] do not extend to labor organizations when they cease to act as labor groups or when they enter into illegal combinations with non-labor groups in restraint of trade") (emphasis added); Allied Int'l, Inc. v. International Longshoremen's Ass'n, 640 F.2d 1368, 1380 & n.12 \(1st Cir. 1981\) (although ILA didn't conspire with any non-union group, its boycott of Soviet cargo was not immunized by statutory exemption because it didn't relate to "legitimate union interest"), aff'd, 456 U.S. 212, 72 L. Ed. 2d 21, 102 S. Ct. 1656 \(1982\); Bodine, 494 F.2d at 558 (activities of non-labor group combination remain within statutory exemption because union was pursuing own interests).

traditional objectives of labor organizations. Thus, if a union forces employers to funnel money into a commercial enterprise from which the union derives profits; or if it forces the employer to hire the union president's spouse; or if a union is involved in illegal activities unrelated to its mission, such as dealing drugs or gambling, those would not be objectives falling within the union's legitimate interest. In such cases, the unions "cease to act as labor groups." Jacksonville Bulk Terminals, 457 U.S. at 714.

Of course, HN9↑ the means employed by the union bear on the degree of scrutiny we will cast on the legitimacy of the union's interest. See Local No. 189, Amalgamated Meat Cutters & Butcher Workmen v. Jewel Tea Co., 381 U.S. 676, 689-90, 14 L. Ed. 2d 640, 85 S. Ct. 1596 (1965) [19] (plurality opinion) (restraints on the product market must be "so intimately related to wages, hours and working conditions that the unions' successful attempt to obtain that provision through bona fide, arm's length bargaining in pursuit of their own labor union policies, and not at the behest of or in combination with nonlabor groups, falls within the protection of the national labor policy and is therefore exempt from the Sherman Act"). Thus, where a union engages in activities normally associated with labor disputes, see, e.g., 29 U.S.C. § 104,⁷ these will be presumed to be in pursuit of the union's legitimate interest absent a very strong showing to the contrary. See, e.g., Bodine Produce, 494 F.2d at 557 (group boycott and demands for recognition were "intimately related to wages, hours, and working conditions which . . . places it within the protection of national labor policy and exempt from the Sherman Act"). Where the [^{*}809] union's activities are farther afield, the scrutiny is more searching. See, e.g., H.A. Artists, 451 U.S. at 722 (examining [20] whether franchise fees are sufficiently related to legitimate union ends); Carroll, 391 U.S. at 112 ("the price-list requirement is brought within the labor exemption under the finding that the requirement is necessary to assure that scale wages will be paid to the sidemen and the leader").

H.A. Artists casts a highly instructive light on this issue. The activity there - collection of franchise fees from the agents for the direct [21] benefit of union members - was not a traditional union activity; it looked like the union may have been using its bargaining power with theatrical agents to generate a collateral source of revenue. The Court did not say the franchise fees violated the antitrust laws per se, but placed a substantial burden on the union to prove why this method of collecting revenues was not merely convenient but necessary. "Without the fees . . .," the Court reasoned, "the dues of [the union's] members would perhaps have to be increased to offset the loss of a general revenue source," but there was "no reason to believe that any of its legitimate interests would be affected." 451 U.S. at 722. The Court's concern thus seemed to be that the union may have funneled the market power granted to it by the labor laws into a money-making enterprise. That the money would then be used to finance labor-related activities was not, in the Court's view, exculpatory, unless the union could show it could not achieve those objectives some other way.

Many of the activities of which BE&K complains are traditional organizational activities, closely related to traditional [22] union ends. For example, the unions allegedly "picketed and handbilled the plaintiffs' premises" after BE&K refused to "recognize them as the exclusive collective bargaining representative for the employees of BE&K and its subcontractors, and enter into a collective bargaining agreement with the defendants . . ." SAC Par. Par. 31(e)(i), (iii). And the unions encouraged work stoppages by unionized employees because of well-founded safety concerns at the project site. See Contra Costa SER 3-5, 316-40; 348-52.⁸

That these activities were not undertaken to unionize this particular employer but in order to eliminate non-union shops [23] altogether by making an example of BE&K does not matter. See Pennington, 381 U.S. at 666 ("a consequence of [legitimate] union activity may be to eliminate competition based on differences in [labor] standards"); Bodine Produce, 494 F.2d at 549 (unions' purpose is "to eliminate competition based on differences in labor standards"). HN10 Encouraging the use of unionized labor is an objective well within the legitimate interests of labor unions and, so long as this end is pursued by activities normally associated with labor disputes, there's a strong presumption that the unions are protected from antitrust liability by the statutory labor exemption.

⁷ Congress has provided special protection for certain traditional union activities in 29 U.S.C. § 104, which, inter alia, prohibits restraining orders or injunctions where persons involved in a labor dispute engage in work stoppage, publicize the existence or facts of their dispute, assemble or organize to promote their interest in the dispute, advise or notify persons of their intent to do any of these acts, or advise, urge, cause or induce without fraud or violence any of these acts.

⁸ BE&K also vaguely alleged that there were violent pickets. But violence alone is not sufficient to turn protected conduct like labor picketing into an antitrust violation. See Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, 310 U.S. 469, 513, 84 L. Ed. 1311, 60 S. Ct. 982 (1940); Bodine Produce, 494 F.2d at 559.

More troublesome are certain other activities allegedly undertaken by the unions, such as pressing frivolous lawsuits, automatically protesting against permits sought by BE&K, pressing for the passage of a regulatory measure and then agitating for its enforcement against BE&K - all allegedly to make an example of BE&K and discourage use of merit shop contractors by parties such as UPI. Taking a cue from H.A. Artists, we cannot say that pursuing legitimate 24 labor goals through this kind of activity is per se exempted from the antitrust laws. See Durie & Lemley, 80 Cal. L. Rev. at 759-62 (using BE&K as case study). HN11 The question here, as in H.A. Artists, is whether the non-traditional means were appropriate - in other words, whether the non-traditional means were not only lawful, but necessary because the goals could not be achieved through traditional tactics. And the burden to show this lies with the unions. See H.A. Artists, 451 U.S. at 722.

[\[*810\]](#) Because the district court erroneously construed Hutcheson's two-part test in the conjunctive, it did not allow discovery on this issue. In this, we conclude, the district court erred. Plaintiff was entitled to try to raise a triable issue of fact on this point by gathering evidence in support of its allegations.

///

That's not the end of the matter, however, because the unions raise another defense. HN12 The Noerr-Pennington doctrine provides broad antitrust protection for those who "petition the government for a redress of grievances." City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 111 S. Ct. 1344, 1353, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382 \(1991\) 25 (quoting First Amendment). This protection extends to lobbying of government officials, Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. at 144, and petitioning of administrative agencies and courts, California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 510, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S. Ct. 609 \(1972\). In those contexts, immunity from antitrust liability is lost only if a party engages in "sham" petitioning.

BE&K argues that the unions engaged in a pattern of "automatic petitioning of governmental bodies . . . without regard to and regardless of the merits of said petitions." SAC Par. 27; see also id. at Par. 32(a) (alleging that unions filed "a series of overlapping, repetitive and sham lawsuits against plaintiffs, their employees and attorneys . . . with or without probable cause and regardless of the merits of the claims asserted therein") (emphasis added); id. at Par. 30(a) (describing published article by the Business Manager of the Contra Costa Building Trades Council describing a computer system through which "all permits for known non-union 26 contractors would automatically be protested, regardless of size or amount of permit"). BE&K relies on California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, where the Supreme Court held the allegations "that petitioners 'instituted the proceedings and actions . . . with or without probable cause, and regardless of the merits of the cases,'" 404 U.S. at 512, were "on their face . . . within the 'sham' exception," id. at 516.

The unions counter that the Supreme Court's most recent pronouncement on the sham exception forecloses reliance on California Motor Transport. In Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., 123 L. Ed. 2d 611, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 1928 \(1993\), the Court set out HN13 a two-part test for sham litigation: First, the suit must be "objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits"; second, the baseless lawsuit must conceal "an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor." 27 Id. at 1928 (quoting Noerr, 365 U.S. at 144) (emphasis in original). The two parts of the test operate in succession: Only if the suit is found to be objectively baseless does the court proceed to examine the litigant's subjective intent. Id.; Liberty Lake Investments, Inc. v. Magnuson, 12 F.3d 155 \(9th Cir. 1993\). Under this two-prong test, the unions argue, BE&K must show that each individual suit the unions brought was objectively baseless - a task it abandoned by phrasing the question on appeal as follows: "Whether litigation that is not objectively baseless can still constitute 'sham litigation' sufficient to eliminate . . . Noerr-Pennington immunity." BE&K Opening Br. at 1 (emphasis added).

We're not persuaded that Professional Real Estate Investors effectively overrules California Motor Transport. Far from criticizing or limiting California Motor Transport, the Professional Real Estate Investors majority cited it with approval. The Court acknowledged that the cases dealt with different questions and noted that "nothing in California Motor Transport [28] retreated from the[] principle[]" that "unprotected activity [must] lack objective reasonableness

... regardless of intent or purpose." 113 S. Ct. at 1926-27.

We reconcile these cases by reading them as applying to different situations. Professional Real Estate Investors provides [*811] a strict two-step analysis to assess whether a single action constitutes sham petitioning. This inquiry is essentially retrospective: HN14↑ If the suit turns out to have objective merit, the plaintiff can't proceed to inquire into subjective purposes, and the action is perforce not a sham. See 113 S. Ct. at 1928 & n.5.

California Motor Transport deals with the case where the defendant is accused of bringing a whole series of legal proceedings. Litigation is invariably costly, distracting and time-consuming; having to defend a whole series of such proceedings can inflict a crushing burden on a business. California Motor Transport thus recognized that HN15↑ the filing of a whole series of lawsuits and other legal actions without regard to the merits has far more serious implications than filing a single action, and [*29] can serve as a very effective restraint on trade. When dealing with a series of lawsuits, the question is not whether any one of them has merit - some may turn out to, just as a matter of chance - but whether they are brought pursuant to a policy of starting legal proceedings without regard to the merits and for the purpose of injuring a market rival. The inquiry in such cases is prospective: Were the legal filings made, not out of a genuine interest in redressing grievances, but as part of a pattern or practice of successive filings undertaken essentially for purposes of harassment?

The allegations in BE&K's complaint track the language of California Motor Transport and, if proven, would be sufficient to overcome the unions' Noerr-Pennington defense. The record, as developed to date, however, forecloses any possibility that BE&K could substantiate its claim. As noted, the fact that a small number in the series of lawsuits turn out not to be frivolous will not be fatal to a claim under California Motor Transport; even a broken clock is right twice a day. Here, however, fifteen of the twenty-nine lawsuits alleged by BE&K as part of the pattern of filings "without regard [30] to the merits" have proven successful.⁹ The fact that more than half of all the actions as to which we know the results turn out to have merit cannot be reconciled with the charge that the unions were filing lawsuits and other actions willy-nilly without regard to success. Given that the plaintiff has the burden in litigation, a batting average exceeding .500 cannot support BE&K's theory. BE&K therefore cannot sustain its burden of showing that the unions' conduct falls within the sham exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.¹⁰

[31] /V

Finally, BE&K challenges the sanctions awarded against it by the district court because of its persistent reincorporation of stricken parts of the complaint in the amended complaints. The district court found that BE&K "clearly violated the Court's . . . Order by repleading causes of action for which summary judgment was granted for defendants." Order of 8/24/89 at 9. BE&K responds that its repleading was required by our decision in London v. Coopers & Lybrand, 644 F.2d 811, 814 \(9th Cir. 1981\), which held that HN16↑ "a plaintiff waives all causes of ⁹ The twenty-nine actions are listed in paragraph 32(b) of the Second Amended Complaint. BE&K lists separately seven suits in federal court and eight arbitration actions the unions filed against Eichleay Corporation. All were successful and ultimately enforced by the Third Circuit in Eichleay Corp. v. International Assoc. of Bridge, Structural and Ornamental Iron Workers, 944 F.2d 1047 \(1991\).

¹⁰ Before us, the unions have moved for sanctions on the ground that BE&K's continued prosecution of this issue after the Supreme Court decided Professional Real Estate Investors was frivolous. We obviously disagree.

action alleged in the original complaint which are not alleged in the amended complaint." Accord King v. Atiyeh, 814 F.2d 565, 567 \(9th Cir. 1987\).

BE&K's lawyers could find no case applying this rule where the amended complaint was filed after summary judgment rather than after a motion to dismiss. Nonetheless, they claim a good faith belief that [*812] they were required to replead the claims on which the court had granted summary judgment in order to preserve them for appeal.

We agree with the district court that HN17 the London rule only applies to amended complaints that [32] follow upon dismissal with leave to amend, and not to those that follow summary judgment. Nonetheless, we have found no case drawing this distinction. Counsel were not required to risk forfeiting their client's right to appeal in order to avoid sanctions. BE&K's reading of London is not frivolous and, in the absence of authority on point, counsel's decision to err on the side of caution cannot be faulted.

* * *

We conclude that HN18 unions can forfeit the statutory labor exemption even without combining with non-labor groups if the union acts outside this legitimate self-interest. While most of the unions' activities alleged here were protected by the statutory labor exemption, the lawsuits, permit protests and lobbying activities allegedly designed to make an example of BE&K may not have been. The district court therefore erred by precluding discovery into whether these means were intimately related to legitimate union ends. Nonetheless, the error was harmless because these petitioning activities were protected from antitrust liability under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. We also [33] reverse the award of sanctions against BE&K.

AFFIRMED IN PART; REVERSED IN PART.

End of Document

Manufacturers Life Ins. Co. v. Superior Court

Court of Appeal of California, First Appellate District, Division Two

July 29, 1994, Decided

No. A052795, No. A055038.

Reporter

32 Cal. App. 4th 821 *; 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 424 ; 1994 Cal. App. LEXIS 785 ; 94 Cal. Daily Op. Service 5899; 94 Daily Journal DAR 10686

MANUFACTURERS LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY et al., Petitioners, v. THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, Respondent; WEIL INSURANCE AGENCY, INC., Real Party in Interest; WEIL INSURANCE AGENCY, INC., Petitioner, v. THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, Respondent; MANUFACTURERS LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY et al., Real Parties in Interest.

Notice: NOT CITABLE - SUPERSEDED BY GRANT OF REVIEW

Subsequent History: [1] Review Granted October 13, 1994 (S031022), Reported at: 1994 Cal. LEXIS 5393.

Reprinted without change to permit tracking pending disposition on review by the Supreme Court. (See Preface to Cumulative Subsequent History Table. Previous cite [27 Cal. App. 4th 67.)] (See 10 Cal. 4th 257)

Prior History: Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, No. 920327, Alex J. Saldamando and Ira A. Brown, Jr., Judges.

Disposition: In No. A052795, let a peremptory writ of mandate issue directing the superior court to set aside its order of January 25, 1991, insofar as that order overruled defendants' demurrers to the third cause of action (Unruh Civil Rights Act) and the fourth cause of action (Ins. Code, § 790.03, subd. \(c\)), and to sustain those demurrers to said causes of action without leave to amend. The alternative writ is otherwise discharged.

Core Terms

Cartwright Act, remedies, cause of action, superseded, counts, review den, annuities, defendants', settlement, demurrers, practices, dictum, violations, implied repeal, regulation, preserves, Unfair, repeal, right of action, anti trust law, provisions, displace, italics, courts, unfair competition, antitrust, exemption, appears, Amend, cases

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

HN1 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

The Cartwright Act states a general prohibition against conduct effecting a combination in restraint of trade, i.e., a "trust." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16720, 16721.5. One common species of a trust is a concerted refusal to deal with other traders, or, as it is often called, the group boycott. The prohibition on such conduct extends to every type of business, including insurance.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN2 Legislation, Interpretation

Courts are not at liberty to impute a particular intention to the Legislature when nothing in the language of the statute implies such intention. The statute must be construed with reference to the whole system of law of which it is a part, so that each part may be harmonized and have effect. This rule applies even if the statutes to be harmonized appear in different codes. The different codes blend into each other and constitute a single statute for the purposes of statutory construction and legislative intent may be determined not only from an individual code but the whole body of law.

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Presumptions > Conflicting Presumptions

Governments > Legislation > Expiration, Repeal & Suspension

HN3 Presumptions, Conflicting Presumptions

The law shuns repeals by implication. They are recognized only when there is no rational basis for harmonizing two potentially conflicting laws. The presumption against implied repeal is so strong that. To overcome the presumption the two acts must be irreconcilable, clearly repugnant, and so inconsistent that the two cannot have concurrent operation. The courts are bound, if possible, to maintain the integrity of both statutes if the two may stand together. There must be no possibility of concurrent operation. Implied repeal should not be found unless the later provision gives undebatable evidence of an intent to supersede the earlier.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Governments > Legislation > Statutory Remedies & Rights

HN4 Legislation, Interpretation

Courts are particularly reluctant to view a statute as affording an exclusive remedy when it appears inadequate to redress the wrong toward which it is directed.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN5 Legislation, Interpretation

The rule of subsequent ratification applies to statutes which have previously been judicially construed.

Governments > Legislation > Statutory Remedies & Rights

HN6 Legislation, Statutory Remedies & Rights

Before a court may imply a right of action based on violations of a substantive statute it must appear that the plaintiff belongs to the class of persons the statute is intended to protect; a private remedy will appropriately further the purpose of the legislation; and such a remedy appears to be needed to assure the effectiveness of the statute.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN7 Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

The Unfair Competition Act defines as "unfair competition" any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200. It broadly authorizes any person to sue on behalf of the general public for injunctive and restitutionary relief based on such practices. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17204, 17203. The act declares that unless otherwise expressly provided, its remedies are cumulative to each other and to the remedies or penalties available under all other laws of this state.

Counsel: Khourie, Crew & Jaeger and Townsend & Townsend, Khourie & Crew, Eugene Crew, Timothy F. Perry and Amy Slater for Real Party in Interest in A052795 and for Petitioner in A055038.

Daniel E. Lungren, Attorney General, Roderick Walston, Chief Assistant [2] Attorney General, Sanford Gruskin, Assistant Attorney General, Thomas P. Dove and Jesse W. Markham, Jr., Deputy Attorneys General, as Amici Curiae on behalf of Petitioner in A055038 and Real Party in Interest in A052795.

Howard, Rice, Nemirovski, Canady, Robertson & Falk, Jerome B. Falk, Jr., H. Joseph Escher III, Pauline E. Calande and Theresa M. Beiner for Petitioners in A052795 and for Real Parties in Interest in A055038.

Buchalter, Nemer, Fields & Younger, Marcus M. Kaufman and Hugh A. Linstrom as Amici Curiae on behalf of Petitioners in A052795 and Real Parties in Interest in A055038.

No appearance for Respondent.

Judges: Opinion by Benson, J., * with Smith, Acting P. J., and Phelan, J., concurring.

Opinion by: BENSON, J.

Opinion

[*827] [426] BENSON, J. * --Plaintiff Weil Insurance Agency, Inc. (Weil), brought this action for damages alleging primarily an unlawful boycott in the sale of annuities used to fund structured settlements of personal injury claims. Various defendants successfully demurred to the complaint, [3] insofar as it asserted statutory causes of action, mainly on the ground that such causes of action are superseded by provisions of the Insurance Code. We have concluded that this contention is unsound and that plaintiff can state a cause of action under the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16720, 16721.5). Plaintiff can also state a cause of action under the Unfair Competition Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200- 17208), insofar as the claim is predicated on a violation of the Cartwright Act. However, plaintiff cannot state a private cause of action under, or predicated on violations of, the Unfair Insurance Practices Act (Ins. Code, § 790- 790.10).

* Retired Associate Justice of the Court of Appeal, First District, sitting under assignment by the Chairperson of the Judicial Council.

* Retired Associate Justice of the Court of Appeal, First District, sitting under assignment by the Chairperson of the Judicial Council.

BACKGROUND

The action concerns plaintiff's attempt to engage in business as a broker of, and consultant in connection with, settlement annuities. A settlement annuity is an annuity purchased by a liability carrier to fund [4] a structured settlement in a personal injury action. A structured settlement is one in which the injury claimant agrees to accept periodic payments (i.e., the proceeds of an annuity) rather than a single lump sum. It appears to be conceded by all concerned that such an annuity is classified in this state as a form of life insurance. (See Ins. Code, § 101.)

The gist of the complaint's allegations contained in the four statutory counts with which we are now concerned is that defendants boycotted plaintiff's brokerage business because of opposition to plaintiff's conduct in providing injury claimants and their attorneys with information concerning the underlying features of settlement annuities, in particular their actual costs. Such disclosures were inimical to a plan defendants had formed to market settlement annuities as a way for liability carriers to settle injury claims below their cash settlement value. Therefore defendants schemed to prevent claimants from acquiring such information. They pursued this scheme, in part, by boycotting and disparaging plaintiff, as a broker and consultant supplying such information to injury claimants.

Plaintiff alleges it built a successful [5] brokerage and consulting business based upon advising and educating claimants and their attorneys in connection with various aspects of settlement annuities including those which [*828] concerned defendants. This conduct, however, interfered with defendants' marketing scheme. Accordingly, defendants coerced or induced suppliers of annuities to stop doing business with plaintiff. As a result, plaintiff's settlement annuities business was destroyed.

[427] The first four surviving counts ¹ allege violations of (1) Business and Professions Code section 16720, part of the Cartwright Act; (2) Business and Professions Code section 16721.5, also part of that act; (3) Insurance Code section 790.03, subdivision \(c\), part of the Unfair Insurance Practices Act; and (4) Business and Professions Code section 17200 et seq., the Unfair Competition Act (UCA). ² Three other counts sound in tort and are not at issue in these writ proceedings.

[6] In the earliest ruling before us, the trial court sustained demurrers to the Cartwright Act claims (counts 1 and 2) with leave to amend. However, it concluded that plaintiff had stated causes of action under the UIPA and the UCA (counts 4 and 5). Defendants filed petition No. A052795 seeking a writ of mandate directing the trial court to sustain the demurrers to these counts. We issued an alternative writ.

¹ At oral argument plaintiff expressly abandoned a fifth statutory cause of action, based on the Unruh Civil Rights Act (Civ. Code, § 51.5). Our discussion of the complaint will, naturally, disregard this count. In light of plaintiff's abandonment, however, we will direct the trial court to sustain the demurrer to this count.

² Insurance Code sections 790- 790.10 are often referred to as the "Unfair Practices Act." (See [Moradi-Shalal v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Companies \(1988\) 46 Cal.3d 287, 292 \[250 Cal.Rptr. 116, 758 P.2d 58\]](#); [Royal Globe Ins. Co. v. Superior Court \(1979\) 23 Cal.3d 880, 883 \[153 Cal.Rptr. 842, 592 P.2d 329\]](#), overruled in Moradi-Shalal, supra, 46 Cal.3d at pp. 292, 304.) The Legislature, however, has mysteriously labeled this portion of the Insurance Code the "Unfair Trade Practices Act." (Ins. Code, § 1620.2, subd. \(a\), italics added.) It has given the name "Unfair Practices Act" to sections 17000 through 17101 of the Business and Professions Code. (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17000) The Supreme Court has used that name to refer not only to those sections but also to section 17200 et seq. ([Farmers Ins. Exchange v. Superior Court \(1992\) 2 Cal.4th 377, 395 \[6 Cal.Rptr.2d 487, 826 P.2d 730\]](#); [State of California ex rel. Van de Kamp v. Texaco, Inc. \(1988\) 46 Cal.3d 1147, 1169 \[252 Cal.Rptr. 221, 762 P.2d 385\]](#); cf. [Bank of the West v. Superior Court \(1992\) 2 Cal.4th 1254, 1260 \[10 Cal.Rptr.2d 538, 833 P.2d 545\]](#) [describing § 17200 as part of "Unfair Business Practices Act"].)

To avoid this confusion of terms we will adopt our own nomenclature for the affected statutes. Thus we refer to Insurance Code sections 790 through 790.10 as the Unfair Insurance Practices Act (UIPA), Business and Professions Code sections 17000 through 17101 as the Unfair Business Practices Act (UBPA), and Business and Professions Code sections 17200 through 17208 as the Unfair Competition Act (UCA).

While that matter was pending, plaintiff amended the complaint and various defendants again demurred to the Cartwright Act counts. The trial court sustained those demurrers without leave to amend. Plaintiff filed petition No. A055038, seeking a writ which would direct the trial court to [*829] overrule the demurrers to those counts. We initially denied plaintiff's petition. Plaintiff sought review in the Supreme Court. That court granted the petition and retransferred the matter to us with directions to issue an alternative writ. We have done so.

I. CARTWRIGHT ACT

A. Introduction

HN1[[↑]] The Cartwright Act states a general prohibition against conduct effecting a combination in restraint of trade, i.e., a "trust." (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16720, 16721.5) One common species [7] of a trust is a "concerted refusal to deal with other traders, or, as it is often called, the group boycott." ([Marin County Bd. of Realtors, Inc. v. Palsson \(1976\) 16 Cal.3d 920, 931 \[130 Cal.Rptr. 1, 549 P.2d 833\]](#).) The prohibition on such conduct extends to "every type of business," including insurance. ([Speegle v. Board of Fire Underwriters \(1946\) 29 Cal.2d 34, 43, 44, 46 \[172 P.2d 867\]](#); see Marin County Bd. of Realtors, Inc. v. Palsson, supra, 16 Cal.3d at pp. 927-928.)

At the same time, the UIPA prohibits acts of "boycott, coercion, or intimidation resulting in or tending to result in unreasonable restraint of, or monopoly in, the business of insurance." ([Ins. Code, § 790.03, subd. \(c\) \[section 790.03\(c\)\]](#).) The major issue before us is whether the UIPA supplants the Cartwright Act so as to provide the sole basis by which unlawful conduct of the type alleged here may be subjected to legal restraint or may otherwise produce legal consequences.

In dealing with any problem of statutory effect, we begin and often end with the [428] words of the statute. HN2[[↑]] "[C]ourts are not at liberty to impute a particular intention to the Legislature when nothing in the language [8] of the statute implies such intention." ([Dunn-Edwards Corp. v. Bay Area Air Quality Management Dist. \(1992\) 9 Cal.App.4th 644, 658 \[11 Cal.Rptr.2d 850\]](#), review den. [rejecting claim of implied exemption from general statute]; see Code Civ. Proc., § 1858.) The statute "must be construed with reference to the whole system of law of which it is a part, so that each part may be harmonized and have effect." ([Yoffie v. Marin Hospital Dist. \(1987\) 193 Cal.App.3d 743, 748 \[238 Cal.Rptr. 502\]](#), review den.; see Code Civ. Proc., § 1858.) "This rule applies even if the statutes to be harmonized appear in different codes." (193 Cal.App.3d at p. 748.) "[T]he different codes blend into each other and constitute a single statute for the purposes of statutory construction and ... legislative intent may be determined not only from an individual code but the whole body of law. ([Pesce v. Dept. Alcoholic Bev. Control \(1958\) 51 Cal.2d 310, 312 \[333 P.2d 15\]](#); [American Friends Service \[*830\] Committee v. Procurier \(1973\) 33 Cal.App.3d 252, 260 \[109 Cal.Rptr. 22\]](#))." ([Winzler & Kelly v. Department of Industrial Relations \(1981\) 121 Cal. App.3d 120, 125 \[174 Cal.Rptr. 191 744\]](#).)

As explained in the following discussion, we have concluded that the UIPA expressly preserves existing remedies for unlawful conduct in the business of insurance. Such preservation is consistent with the history of the UIPA and with the interpretational presumption against the implied repeal of statutory remedies. A contrary holding is not warranted by case law or by any claimed legislative ratification. Accordingly, the demurrers to the Cartwright Act claims should have been overruled.

B. Express Preservation of Existing Remedies

The UIPA itself expresses an affirmative intention and expectation that it will preserve intact existing remedies for insurance industry misconduct. Insurance Code section 790.09 states that the commissioner's issuance of a cease-and-desist order shall not obstruct or impede the imposition of "civil liability or criminal penalty under the laws of this State" arising from the same conduct.³

³ Insurance Code section 790.09 provides: "No order to cease and desist issued under this article directed to any person or subsequent administrative or judicial proceeding to enforce the same shall in any way relieve or absolve such person from any administrative action against the license or certificate of such person, civil liability or criminal penalty under the laws of this State arising out of the methods, acts or practices found unfair or deceptive."

[10] Defendants have never offered a plausible interpretation of this statute consistent with the view that the UIPA supersedes the Cartwright Act. To be sure, the statute only refers to situations in which the commissioner issues a cease and desist order. Numerous absurdities would arise, however, if we concluded that the UIPA supersedes other laws in most cases, but preserves existing remedies when the commissioner issues such an order. This would make the commissioner's jurisdiction exclusive only so long as it is not exercised-a result which would appear to maximize the potential for jurisdictional conflict without creating any discernible benefit. Under such a regime, mere administrative inaction would cloak all manner of insurance misconduct with immunity. Furthermore, there would be no textual basis for withholding this immunity from criminal prosecutions as well, since Insurance Code section 790.09 mentions criminal penalties in tandem with civil remedies.

At oral argument defendants' counsel appeared to agree that a cease-and-desist order could not have the effect of restoring liability from which an insurer had otherwise become immune. Yet if Insurance Code section 790.09 [*831] does not have that effect it becomes meaningless under defendants' regime, for there is no "civil remedy" for the statute to preserve; any such remedy has been superseded by the UIPA as a whole. Section 790.09 can only be given meaning by acknowledging a subsisting "civil liability ... under the laws of this State," to which violators are already subject when the commissioner issues a cease-and-desist order, and from which no such order "shall in any way relieve or absolve" them.

The history of the UIPA indicates that the original bill did not contain a provision preserving civil remedies, but only a section [429] preserving the commissioner's powers under existing law.⁴ The first amended version of the bill and each successive version contained what is now Insurance Code section 790.09. (Assem. Amend. to Assem. Bill No. 1530 (1959 Gen. Sess.) Apr. 8, 1959; see Assem. Amend. to id., May 6, 1959; Sen. Amend. to Assem. Bill No. 1530 (1959 Gen. Sess.) June 11, 1959; Stats. 1959, ch. 1737, § 1, p. 4191.) This provision originated even earlier, however, in the 1947 "Chicago Draft" of the Model Unfair Insurance Practices Act proposed by the National Association [12] of Insurance Commissioners (NAIC).⁵ Its pointed adoption in California may have emphasized a legislative perception that the UIPA effected little if any change in existing law. Indeed, at the time of the enactment of the UIPA the Legislative Analyst wrote that the bill would "make[] no substantive change in existing law." (Ops. Legis. Analyst, "Analysis of Assembly Bill No. 1530" (May 20, 1959) p. 1, italics added; exhibit 1 to Request for Judicial Notice filed Sept. 20, 1991, in A055038.)

[13] If the Legislature wished to exempt the insurance industry from the Cartwright Act, it knew full well how to do so. The Insurance Code contains no fewer than four express exemptions of specified classes of insurance from other laws. (Ins. Code, § 795.7 [senior citizens' health insurance]; 1860.1 [casualty insurance]; 11758 [workers' compensation]; 12414.26 [title insurance].) All of these statutes would be superfluous if defendants' view of the UIPA were correct. Yet two of them were enacted well after the effective date of that act. (Stats. 1973, ch. 1130, § 15, p. 2314 [§ 12414.26]; Stats. 1963, ch. 2055, § 1, p. 4301 [§ 795.7].)

Our view that the UIPA effects no displacement of general laws is consistent with the commissioner's interpretation of the UIPA, not only as [*832] amicus curiae in this proceeding but as adviser to the Governor and litigant in other proceedings. Beginning when the UIPA was initially adopted, the Department of Insurance repeatedly expressed the view that the act would have little or no effect on California law, but was enacted primarily, if not entirely, to conform to the actions of other states.⁶ Somewhat later, in Royal Globe [14] Ins. Co. v. Superior Court, supra,

⁴ "§ 790.11. The powers vested in the commissioner in this article shall be additional to any other powers to enforce any penalties, fines or forfeitures authorized by law with respect to the methods, acts and practices hereby declared to be unfair or deceptive." (Assem. Bill No. 1530 (1959 Reg. Sess.) § 1; see now Ins. Code, § 790.08.)

⁵ "No order of the Commissioner under this Act or order of a court to enforce the same shall in any way relieve or absolve any person affected by such order from any liability under any other laws of this state." (Exhibit B to Rep. of Joint Com. on Federal Legislation etc. (Jan. 24, 1947) § 8(d); Proceedings, 78th Ann. Sess., NAIC (1947) p. 398.)

⁶ In a memorandum to the Governor, the Chief Assistant Insurance Commissioner indicated that the UIPA had been enacted in all but one other state and that it was expected to add little if anything to California law. He concluded, "The Department is neither opposed to nor an advocate for this Bill. We know of nothing in the Bill which is detrimental to the public interest." (J.

23 Cal.3d at page 897 (dis. opn.), Justice Richardson quoted the commissioner as flatly asserting that the UIPA "does not supplant other remedies available under state law."

[15] Defendants assert that we should give no particular weight to the commissioner's interpretation. But the department's long standing interpretation, first conveyed to the Governor at the time of the act's adoption and espoused with apparently perfect consistency since, reinforces our view that the statute simply cannot support the interpretation defendants urge upon us. (See Truta v. Avis Rent A Car System, Inc. (1987) 193 Cal.App.3d 802, 814 [238 Cal.Rptr. 806], review den.; Gay Law Students Assn. v. [430] Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1979) 24 Cal.3d 458, 491 [156 Cal.Rptr. 14, 595 P.2d 592].)

Defendants' claim of implied supersession also runs afoul of the interpretational presumption against implied repeal. An "implied repeal" occurs " [w]hen a later statute supersedes or substantially modifies an earlier law but without expressly referring to it." (Department of Personnel Administration v. Superior Court (1992) 5 Cal.App.4th 155, 191 [6 Cal.Rptr.2d 714], review den., quoting Sacramento Newspaper Guild v. Sacramento County Bd. of Suprs. (1968) 263 Cal.App.2d 41, 54 [69 Cal.Rptr. 480].) Under this definition, defendants' argument must be viewed as relying on [16] an implied partial repeal of the Cartwright Act, i.e., a repeal insofar as that act would otherwise apply to the business of insurance.

HN3 [↑] "[T]he law shuns repeals by implication." (Board of Supervisors v. Lonergan (1980) 27 Cal.3d 855, 868 [167 Cal.Rptr. 820, 616 P.2d 802]; Kennedy Wholesale, Inc. v. State Bd. of Equalization (1991) 53 Cal.3d 245, 249 [279 [833] Cal.Rptr. 325, 806 P.2d 1360].) They "are recognized only when there is no rational basis for harmonizing two potentially conflicting laws." (Fuentes v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1976) 16 Cal.3d 1, 7 [128 Cal.Rptr. 673, 547 P.2d 449], italics added.) "The presumption against implied repeal is so strong that, 'To overcome the presumption the two acts must be irreconcilable, clearly repugnant, and so inconsistent that the two cannot have concurrent operation. The courts are bound, if possible, to maintain the integrity of both statutes if the two may stand together.' (Penziner v. West American Finance Co. [(1937) 10 Cal.2d 160, 176 [74 P.2d 252].) There must be 'no possibility of concurrent operation.' (Hays v. Wood (1979) 25 Cal.3d 772, 784 ...) ... [I]mplied repeal [17] should not be found unless '... the later provision gives undebatable evidence of an intent to supersede the earlier' (Ibid. ...)" (Western Oil & Gas Assn. v. Monterey Bay Unified Air Pollution Control Dist. (1989) 49 Cal.3d 408, 419-420 [261 Cal.Rptr. 384, 777 P.2d 157], first and second italics added; see Roberts v. City of Palmdale (1993) 5 Cal.4th 363, 379 [20 Cal.Rptr.2d 330, 853 P.2d 496].)⁷

[18] Amici curiae California Chamber of Commerce et al. suggest that the presumption against implied repeal does not fully apply where a general statute overlaps an "administrative regulatory scheme." We find no support for this assertion in the case cited by amici curiae (Gordon v. New York Stock Exchange (1975) 422 U.S. 659 [45 L.Ed.2d 463, 95 S.Ct. 2598]), or in any other authority. At most, schemes regulating in minute detail may produce such pervasive conflicts with preexisting laws that the two cannot coexist and are, for that reason, mutually repugnant. (See I. E. Associates v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., supra, 39 Cal.3d at p. 285.) The mere presence of

Thomas, Mem. from Dept. of Ins. to Hon. Edmund G. Brown (June 30, 1959) pp. 1-2; exhibit 1 to Request for Judicial Notice filed Sept. 20, 1991, in A055038.)

A few years later, the same author wrote that the Model Act "had only a psychological application to states, such as New York and California[,] which already had extensive laws regulating practically every phase of the business [P] California and some of the other active states hesitated [to adopt the Act] because it was difficult to justify the expense and time expenditure of enacting and having in the books an Act which, for all practical purposes, was unnecessary." (J. Thomas, Interdepartmental Mem. (May 17, 1960) pp. 1-2; exhibit 3 to Request for Judicial Notice filed Sept. 20, 1991, in A055038.)

⁷ Statutes are also presumed to be consistent with the common law. (Dry Creek Valley Assn., Inc. v. Board of Supervisors (1977) 67 Cal.App.3d 839, 844 [135 Cal.Rptr. 726]; see Rojo v. Kliger (1990) 52 Cal.3d 65, 75 [276 Cal.Rptr. 130, 801 P.2d 373]; Lacher v. Superior Court (1991) 230 Cal.App.3d 1038, 1050 [281 Cal.Rptr. 640], review den.; cf. I. E. Associates v. Safeco Title Ins. Co. (1985) 39 Cal.3d 281, 285 [216 Cal.Rptr. 438, 702 P.2d 596].) In this regard, we observe that plaintiff's antitrust claims have their roots in common law. (See Speegle v. Board of Fire Underwriters, supra, 29 Cal.2d at pp. 44, 45, 46.)

administrative regulation, no matter how broad the regulatory authority, does not in itself create an irreconcilable conflict or otherwise warrant an inference of intent to repeal.

Nor may defendants avoid the presumption against implied repeal by relying on different terminology. In particular we reject the claim that the UIPA presumptively provides an "exclusive remedy" for conduct covered by its terms. Repeal by any other name is still repeal, and a claim of implied repeal is viewed with skepticism no matter how it [19] is characterized. (See Physicians & Surgeons Laboratories, Inc. v. Department of Health Services (1992) 6 Cal.App.4th 968, 985-986 [8 Cal.Rptr.2d 565], review den. [applying presumption against implied repeal in rejecting claim that new regulation [*834] superseded existing ones]; Rojo v. Kliger, supra, 52 Cal.3d at p. 80 [new statutory remedy deemed exclusive only if it exhibits "a legislative intent to displace all preexisting or alternative remedies"]; [431] McKee v. Bell-Carter Olive Co. (1986) 186 Cal.App.3d 1230, 1244-1245 [231 Cal.Rptr. 304], review den. [new statutory remedy generally regarded as cumulative, not exclusive]; Hentzel v. Singer Co. (1982) 138 Cal.App.3d 290, 301 [188 Cal.Rptr. 159, 35 A.L.R.4th 1015]; Glaser v. Meyers (1982) 137 Cal.App.3d 770, 774 [187 Cal.Rptr. 242]; 3 Witkin, Cal. Procedure (3d ed. 1985) Actions, § 8, p. 39.)

We also observe a certain illogic in referring to the UIPA as providing an "exclusive remedy" when, as we conclude in the following section, it provides no private remedy at all. Nor does it empower the commissioner to redress private injuries. (See Shernoff v. Superior Court (1975) 44 Cal.App.3d [20] 406, 409 [118 Cal.Rptr. 680] [commissioner's authority "is limited to restraint of future illegal conduct, and he possesses no authority to enter money judgments for past injuries"]; Greenberg v. Equitable Life Assur. Society (1973) 34 Cal.App.3d 994, 1001 [110 Cal.Rptr. 470] ["the sole disciplinary authority of the commissioner would be to issue a cease and desist order or obtain an injunction to restrain the illegal conduct"].) HN4⁸ Courts are particularly reluctant to view a statute as affording an exclusive remedy when it appears inadequate to redress the wrong toward which it is directed. (3 Witkin, op. cit. supra, § 9, p. 40; Orloff v. Los Angeles Turf Club (1947) 30 Cal.2d 110, 113 [180 P.2d 321, 171 A.L.R. 913]; see Rojo v. Kliger, supra, 52 Cal.3d at pp. 80-82 [given various limitations, Fair Employment and Housing Act did not displace other remedies]; Farmers Ins. Exchange v. Superior Court, supra, 2 Cal.4th 377, 391-392, fn. 9 [discretionary relief from "primary jurisdiction" doctrine where administrative remedy inadequate].) Here, the denial of a Cartwright Act claim would deprive plaintiff, and others in its position, of any [21] remedy whatsoever for substantial damages resulting from concededly unlawful conduct. No justification for such a regime has been proposed, and we discern none.

Nothing in the UIPA suggests a purpose, unmistakable or otherwise, to displace existing state-law remedies. Rather the avowed purpose of the act was to displace federal law to the maximum extent possible in accordance with the offer of federal abstention embodied in the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 United States Code Annotated sections 1011-1015 (hereafter McCarran).⁸ (See Karlin v. Zalta (1984) 154 Cal.App.3d 953, 966 [201 Cal.Rptr. 379]; American Internat. Group, Inc. v. Superior [835] Court (1991) 234 Cal.App.3d 749, 756-758 [285 Cal.Rptr. 765], review den.) Under McCarran, federal law is inapplicable to insurance insofar as the state "generally proscribes" (or permits) certain conduct. (Ohio AFL-CIO v. Insurance Rating Board (6th Cir. 1971) 451 F.2d 1178, 1181, 1184, cert. den. (1972) 409 U.S. 917 [34 L.Ed.2d 180, 93 S.Ct. 215]; California League of Ind. Ins. Pro. v. Aetna Cas. & S. Co. (N.D.Cal. 1959) 175 F.Supp. 857, 860.) "The condition of state regulation is satisfied by 'a state [22] regulatory scheme possess[ing] jurisdiction over the challenged practice.' " (In re Insurance Antitrust Litigation (N.D.Cal. 1989) 723 F.Supp. 464, 474, revd. on other grounds (9th Cir. 1991) 938 F.2d 919; quoting Feinstein v. Nettleshop Co. of Los Angeles (9th Cir. 1983) 714 F.2d 928, 933, cert. den. (1984) 466 U.S. 972 [80 L.Ed.2d 82, 104 S.Ct. 2346]; brackets in Antitrust.) In other words, the mere assertion of state jurisdiction is sufficient to preclude the application of federal antitrust law under McCarran.

⁸ "The purpose of this article is to regulate trade practices in the business of insurance in accordance with the intent of Congress as expressed in the Act of Congress of March 9, 1945 (Public Law 15, Seventy-ninth Congress), by defining, or providing for the determination of, all such practices in this State which constitute unfair methods of competition or unfair or deceptive acts or practices and by prohibiting the trade practices so defined or determined." (Ins. Code, § 790.)

[23] By enacting the UIPA, the Legislature explicitly accepted the federal offer of abstention on the broadest possible terms, using language designed to ensure that the entire insurance industry was brought under the state's jurisdiction. Nothing in the statute suggests an intent to shelter the insurance industry from state laws.⁹ (See Rojo v. [432] Kliger, supra, 52 Cal.3d at p. 81 [statute expressing intent to "occupy the field" displaced local regulation, not other state legislation].)

[24] C. Case Law

Defendants' challenge to the Cartwright Act claims ultimately rests on a single sentence in Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Great Western Financial Corp. (1968) 69 Cal.2d 305, 322 [70 Cal.Rptr. 849, 444 P.2d 481]: "These statutes and the common law which once constituted 'the protection of the public against combinations in restraint of the insurance trade' (Speegle v. Board of Fire Underwriters, 29 Cal.2d 34, 45 [172 P.2d 867]) are now expressly superseded and contravened by the specific provisions of the Insurance Code." After scrutinizing this statement in context, we have concluded that Chicago Title is neither compelling nor persuasive authority for a rule holding the Cartwright Act superseded by the UIPA. [*836]

The quoted statement is dictum. Dictum is the "statement of a principle not necessary to the decision." (People v. Squier (1993) 15 Cal.App.4th 235, 240 [18 Cal.Rptr.2d 536], internal quotation marks omitted.) The holding of Chicago Title is that the complaint failed to adequately plead the elements of a Cartwright Act cause of action, or any other claim. The court undertook a painstaking count-by-count analysis of the [25] complaint, identifying numerous factual and legal deficiencies.¹⁰ If the Supreme Court had believed that the statutes cited by the plaintiffs (including the Cartwright Act) were superseded by the Insurance Code, there would have been no occasion for this discussion. But the court explicitly identified factual insufficiency as the "determinative" issue.¹¹

[26] Dictum, of course, is not controlling authority even when it emanates from the Supreme Court. (Grange Debris Box & Wrecking Co. v. Superior Court (1993) 16 Cal.App.4th 1349, 1358 [20 Cal.Rptr.2d 515]; cf. Auto Equity Sales, Inc. v. Superior Court (1962) 57 Cal.2d 450, 455 [20 Cal.Rptr. 321, 369 P.2d 937]; Brown v. Kelly Broadcasting Co. (1989) 48 Cal.3d 711, 734-735 [257 Cal.Rptr. 708, 771 P.2d 406].) Nonetheless it " 'carries persuasive weight and should be followed where it demonstrates a thorough analysis of the issue or reflects compelling logic.' " (Grange, supra, at p. 1358; citations omitted.) Chicago Title's statement concerning Insurance Code exclusivity satisfies neither of these requirements.

⁹ Amici curiae California Chamber of Commerce et al. describe the UIPA as "answer[ing] a concern expressed by the California Supreme Court" in Speegle v. Board of Fire Underwriters, supra, 29 Cal.2d 34, 45. It is true that the court noted the absence of "special legislation" in this state against combinations in restraint of the insurance trade. But the only "concern" expressed in the cited passage is the potential effect of denying enforcement of the Cartwright Act in the insurance business. Certainly the court had no intention of prognosticating upon the hypothetical preemptive effect of statutes which did not then exist.

¹⁰ For example: "We are persuaded ... that appellants' vague and conclusionary pleadings fail to allege facts which might reasonably be construed to reveal a wrongful combination." (Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Great Western Financial Corp., 69 Cal.2d at p. 315.)

"[T]he factual allegations, as illustrated, fail in each instance to support the charge. Just as the earlier counts state facts insufficient to establish proscribed conduct on the parts of the alleged actors and thus cannot reach their purported conspirators, so the final counts charging antitrust infringements fall for similar reasons." (69 Cal.2d at p. 323, brackets original.)

"The allegation of boycott cannot be supported in this instance because everyone has the unrestricted right to select customers and sources of supply." (69 Cal.3d at p. 324.)

¹¹ "We must determine ... whether the superior court has jurisdiction to entertain an action based upon appellants' theories, or any of them, and, if so, whether appellants have stated a cause of action against any of the various named defendants. The latter finding, which is determinative, is in the negative." (Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Great Western Financial Corp., supra, 69 Cal.2d at p. 313, italics added.)

Like most of the opinion in Chicago Title, the quoted statement was authored by a Court of Appeal and "adopted" by the Supreme Court. (69 Cal.2d at p. 311.) This in itself does not warrant lessened deference, but the statement also betrays a certain lack of authorial [433] attention. To begin with, it confuses the Cartwright Act with the UBPA. The subject dictum is immediately preceded by a citation to Business and Professions Code sections 17040- 17051. [27] (69 Cal.2d at p. 322.) These statutes are part of the UBPA and not, as the author of the dictum seemed to believe, the Cartwright Act. (See [*837] ibid.; cf. id. at pp. 315, 322 [correctly defining "Cartwright Act"]; Food & Agr. Code, § 66524, 65521 [same]; Speegle v. Board of Fire Underwriters, supra, 29 Cal.2d at p. 42 [same]; cf. Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17000 [defining "Unfair Practices Act"].) ¹² The statement that "these statutes" have been superseded by the Insurance Code is thus burdened with a glaring anomaly.

Moreover, the court never identified any provision of the Insurance Code which "expressly superseded and contravened" any other statute. In particular, the opinion never mentioned the UIPA. Instead it cited certain provisions of the Insurance Code involving the regulation of title insurance rates. (Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Great Western Financial [28] Corp., supra, 69 Cal.2d at pp. 322-323, citing Ins. Code, § 12404- 12412.) None of those provisions could be said to "expressly abrogate" any other statute. Indeed, some five years later the Legislature did enact an express exemption covering some of the activities authorized by the cited portion of the code. (Ins. Code, § 12414.26, added by Stats. 1973, ch. 1130, § 15, p. 2314.) The absence of such a statute in 1968 renders the Chicago Title dictum nearly unintelligible. Certainly the Legislature could not have given that case the meaning defendants do, or it would not have bothered to enact the cited statute.

The two paragraphs immediately following the subject dictum suggest that three of the complaint's eleven counts might intrude upon the commissioner's jurisdiction over title insurance rates. (Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Great Western Financial Corp., supra, 69 Cal.2d at pp. 322-323.) None of these three counts invoked the Cartwright Act. We note sharp historical and analytical distinctions between the regulation of rate-setting practices and the broad prohibitions in the UIPA. (See Karlin v. Zalta, supra, 154 Cal.App.3d at pp. 973-977.)

The [29] court thus seemed to say no more than that part of the complaint might intrude upon regulatory turf. Even with respect to that part of the complaint, however, the court ultimately returned to its holding, declaring that the factual allegations under scrutiny "fail in each instance to support the charge" and that the counts discussed to that point "state facts insufficient to establish proscribed conduct." (Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Great Western Financial Corp., supra, 69 Cal.2d at p. 323.) The court only then turned to claims having any bearing here, declaring that "... the final counts charging antitrust infringements fall for similar reasons." (Ibid.) On the next page, the Supreme Court itself inserted a declaration that the Cartwright Act counts failed "because plaintiffs' vague and conclusionary pleadings fail to allege sufficient facts." (Id. at p. 324.)

It thus appears that the subject dictum means at most that the three claims concerning rates were repugnant, or potentially repugnant, to the "specific [*838] provisions of the Insurance Code" concerning rate setting. The allusion to the Speegle case, and thus apparently to the Cartwright [30] Act, was not only dictum, but unsound. (See 9 Witkin, op. cit. supra, Appeal, § 795, p. 768, quoting [In re Johnson \(1949\) 92 Cal.App.2d 467, 470 \[207 P.2d 123\]](#).)

Indeed, if we held California's general antitrust laws superseded by the UIPA, we would stand alone in opposition to "general law throughout the country." (9 Witkin, op. cit. supra, Appeal, § 799, p. 772.) Every court to address the issue has concluded that its version of the UIPA does not displace general laws regulating unlawful trade restraints or unfair competition. ([Mead v. Burns \(1986\) 199 Conn. 651 \[509 A.2d 11, 18\]](#); [Dodd v. Commercial Union Ins. Co. \[434\] \(1977\) 373 Mass. 72 \[365 N.E.2d 802, 803-806\]](#); Fischer, etc. v. Forrest T. Jones & Co. \(Mo. 1979\) 586 S.W.2d 310 [general antitrust law applied to claimed conspiracy to withhold necessary information from potentially competing brokers]; St. ex rel. [Stratton v. Gurley Motor Co. \(1987\) 105 N.M. 803 \[737 P.2d 1180, 1182-1184\]](#); Ray v. United Family Life Ins. Co. \(W.D.N.C. 1977\) 430 F.Supp. 1353, 1356-1357, approved in [Ellis v. Smith-Broadhurst, Inc. \(1980\) 48 N.C.App. 180 \[268 S.E.2d 271, 273\]](#); [Skinner v. Steele \[31\] \(Tenn.App. 1987\) 730](#)

¹² Concerning our use of the term "Unfair Business Practices Act," see footnote 2, ante.

S.W.2d 335, 337-338 [purpose of act was to "oust federal antitrust jurisdiction as completely as possible," not to exempt insurance from other state statutes]; Attorney General of Tex. v. Allstate Ins. Co. (Tex.Civ.App. 1985) 687 S.W.2d 803, 805; Grams v. Boss (1980) 97 Wis.2d 332 [294 N.W.2d 473, 480].) Several of these courts expressly cited their states' respective versions of Insurance Code section 790.09. (See Mead v. Burns, supra, 509 A.2d at p. 17; Dodd v. Commercial Union Ins. Co., supra, 365 N.E.2d at p. 804; Skinner v. Steele, supra, 730 S.W.2d at p. 338; Attorney General of Tex. v. Allstate Ins. Co., supra, 687 S.W.2d at p. 805.)¹³

[32] Defendants cite Greenberg v. Equitable Life Assur. Society, supra, 34 Cal.App.3d 994, where the court stated in a footnote that under Chicago Title, the Cartwright Act was "superseded and contravened" by the Insurance Code. (34 Cal.App.3d 994, 999, fn. 2.) However, the court explained Chicago Title's lengthy discussion of pleading issues by attributing it to tacit recognition of a private right of action under Insurance Code section 790.03. This reading of Chicago Title is untenable. As previously noted, the court in Chicago Title never mentioned the UIPA. The only sections of the Insurance [*839] Code cited in proximity to the "superseded and contravened" language dealt with title insurance rates. (69 Cal.2d at pp. 322-323.)

Furthermore, the premise on which the Greenberg interpretation of Chicago Title rests that the UIPA itself affords a private right of action has been flatly repudiated by the Supreme Court in Moradi-Shalal v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Companies, supra, 46 Cal.3d at page 304. While rejecting the attempt to predicate new rights of action on the UIPA, the court in Moradi-Shalal emphasized that existing remedies were unaffected [33] by that act. It "urge[d] the Insurance Commissioner and the courts to continue to enforce the laws forbidding [unlawful insurance] practices to the full extent consistent with our opinion," and declared that "... the courts retain jurisdiction to impose civil damages or other remedies against insurers in appropriate common law actions, based on such traditional theories as fraud, infliction of emotional distress, and (as to the insured) either breach of contract or breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing." (Id. at pp. 304-305, italics added.)

Defendants assert that Moradi-Shalal recognizes only the preservation of common law claims, not those based on statute. Such a scheme, how ever, would fail to protect the putative exclusivity of regulatory jurisdiction, while forcing prospective plaintiffs, for no apparent reason, to attempt to conform their claims to obsolete pre-Cartwright forms. We are no more willing to attribute such bizarre distinctions to the Supreme Court than to the Legislature.

We understand the reference to the common law in Moradi-Shalal to rest on the premise that the cause of action asserted there--unfair claims [34] practices--had no statutory basis outside the UIPA. Since the UIPA itself afforded no right of action, the plaintiff was relegated to such common law claims as might be available.

[435] Moradi-Shalal marks a return to the fundamental principle that the UIPA, like all statutes, is to be applied according to its terms. Its language neither creates new private rights nor destroys old ones. This was the view of Justice Richardson, whose dissent in Royal Globe Ins. Co. v. Superior Court, supra, 23 Cal.3d at pages 895-898, was heavily cited in Moradi-Shalal. (46 Cal.3d at pp. 294-296.) He wrote that section 790.09 "preserves any preexisting civil or criminal liability which the insurer might face under other statutory or decisional law." (Royal Globe, supra, 23 Cal.3d at p. 893, some italics added; see id. at p. 896.) Similarly, the court in Shernoff v. Superior Court, supra, 44 Cal.App.3d 406, 409, acknowledged that Insurance Code section 790.09 "expressly reserves to litigants all civil and criminal remedies against [*840] persons who have violated the law." (Italics added.) These authorities are consistent with the language of the statute [35] and with the unanimous view of courts elsewhere. Insofar as Greenberg reached a contrary conclusion, it must be considered unsound.

¹³ Apparently failing to discover this solid edifice of adverse sister-state authority, defendants cite only Chick's Auto Body v. State Farm, etc. (1979) 168 N.J.Super. 68 [401 A.2d 722], affd. (1980) 176 N.J.Super. 320 [423 A.2d 311]. That case is patently inapposite because it rests on an express exemption from that state's antitrust laws for the activities of insurers " 'to the extent that such activities are subject to regulation by the Commissioner of Insurance.' " (401 A.2d at p. 724, citing N.J. Stat. Ann. § 56:9-5, subd. (b)(4).) We can find no fault with the court's analysis. Nor can we find any guidance in it, for this state has no such statute.

For these reasons we are disinclined to follow later cases which, in dicta, uncritically accepted Greenberg's view of UIPA exclusivity. The court in [Liberty Transport Inc. v. Harry W. Gorst Co. \(1991\) 229 Cal.App.3d 417, 432 \[280 Cal.Rptr. 159\]](#), disapproved on another point in [Adams v. Murakami \(1991\) 54 Cal.3d 105, 116 \[284 Cal.Rptr. 318, 813 P.2d 1348\]](#), followed Greenberg because, due to the limited retroactivity of Moradi-Shalal, it had to apply the law in effect under Royal Globe. (229 Cal.App.3d at p. 426, fn. 1.) In Karlin v. Zalta, supra, 154 Cal.App.3d 953, the court ultimately concluded that the claims before it were not governed by the UIPA but by the McBride-Grunsky Insurance Regulatory Act. (At p. 979.) It had no occasion to reconsider Greenberg's reading of Chicago Title since it found both cases (along with Royal Globe) inapposite. (Ibid.)

We reject any notion that defendants' claim of exemption from the antitrust laws, however unsound, rests upon a settled rule and is therefore [36] sheltered by the doctrine of stare decisis. (See 9 Witkin, op. cit. supra, Appeal, § 787, 795, pp. 758, 768-769.) No court has ever held that insurance companies are immune from civil liability for antitrust injuries. Rather, some cases--notably Greenberg and Royal Globe--mistook the statute under which such remedy should be pursued. Defendants seek to blend those discredited cases with the anomalous and misleading dictum in Chicago Title, and the corrective holding of Moradi-Shalal, to fashion a new immunity made of odds and ends and resting neither on statute nor principle but on misconstrued precedents. We decline to adopt such a course based on the false invocation of stare decisis.

D. Subsequent Ratification

Defendants contend that the Legislature ratified Chicago Title and Greenberg by amending the UIPA on several occasions "without altering the rule articulated in those opinions." This contention is unsound.

HN5  The rule of subsequent ratification applies to statutes which "have previously been judicially construed." ([Marina Point, Ltd. v. Wolfson \(1982\) 30 Cal.3d 721, 734 \[180 Cal.Rptr. 496, 640 P.2d 115, 30 A.L.R.4th \[37\] 1161\]](#), cert. den., 459 U.S. 858 [74 L.Ed.2d 111, 103 S.Ct. 129].) (Italics added.) No case has construed the UIPA to bar Cartwright Act claims. The court in Greenberg merely cited Chicago Title for the proposition that unspecified provisions of the Insurance Code superseded the Cartwright Act. (Greenberg v. I*841 Equitable Life Assur. Society, supra, 34 Cal.App.3d at p. 999, fn. 2, citing Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Great Western Financial Corp., 69 Cal.2d at p. 322.) As we have already noted, Chicago Title never so much as mentioned the UIPA. Ensuing cases repeated Greenberg's conclusion without seeking or offering any justification in the language of the UIPA or any other statute. Since none of the cases purports to "construe" a statute, an inference of legislative approval is wholly unwarranted.

Moreover, the holding in Greenberg, and then in Royal Globe, granted persons suffering antitrust injuries the substantial remedial equivalent of a Cartwright Act claim. These [436] developments deprived the Legislature of any concrete reason to correct the courts' error. As the Supreme Court has acknowledged, the Legislature is concerned with "[38] 'bottom-line' results" and is unlikely to fine-tune judicial decisions. ([Harris v. Capital Growth Investors XIV \(1991\) 52 Cal.3d 1142, 1157 \[278 Cal.Rptr. 614, 805 P.2d 873\].](#))

E. Proposition 103

The parties devote considerable attention to Proposition 103, by which the voters in 1988 substantially revised the McBride-Grunsky Insurance Regulatory Act of 1947, Insurance Code sections 1850- 1860.3 (McBride Grunsky). (See Stats. 1947, ch. 805, § 1 et seq., p. 1896 et seq.) That act previously authorized casualty insurers to cooperate in rate setting and other matters in ways which might otherwise violate antitrust laws. (See Ins. Code, former § 1853-1853.8.) Proposition 103 repealed these provisions. It also added a declaration that the insurance industry "shall be subject to the laws of California applicable to any other business, including, but not limited to, the Unruh Civil Rights Act ..., and the antitrust and unfair business practices laws" (Ins. Code, § 1861.03, subd. \(a\).)

If Insurance Code section 1861.03 stood by itself it would easily dispose of this case by explicitly subjecting defendants to state antitrust law. In context, however, it is unclear whether [39] the statute reaches life insurance. McBride-Grunsky is by its terms inapplicable to life insurance. (Ins. Code, § 1851, subd. \(b\).) On the other hand, if section 1861.03 does not subject defendants to the Cartwright Act, Proposition 103 appears to be irrelevant to this case.

Defendants point out that the ballot summary concerning Proposition 103 stated that under then-existing law, insurance companies were "not subject to the state's antitrust laws." However, such a summary " 'cannot supply language which does not appear [on the face of the initiative].'" ([Sanford v. Garamendi \(1991\) 233 Cal.App.3d 1109, 1123 \[284 Cal.Rptr. 1*842\] 897](#), review den., brackets in original; quoting [Metropolitan Water District v. Dorff \(1979\) 98 Cal.App.3d 109, 115 \[159 Cal.Rptr. 211\]](#).) Obviously, it cannot supply language missing from existing laws. Indeed, courts are never bound by a legislative statement concerning the intent of a prior enactment. ([Droeger v. Friedman, Sloan & Ross \(1991\) 54 Cal.3d 26, 44, fn. 14 \[283 Cal.Rptr. 584, 812 P.2d 931\]](#).)

We conclude that the UIPA does not pose an impediment to plaintiff's claims under the Cartwright Act.

II. UNFAIR INSURANCE [40] PRACTICES ACT

As previously noted, the Supreme Court has already determined that the UIPA does not create a private right of action for violations of its terms. (Moradi-Shalal v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Companies, supra, 46 Cal.3d 287, 304.) Plaintiff asks us to distinguish that case on the ground that it involved unfair claims practices prohibited by Insurance Code section 790.03, subdivision \(h\), whereas this case involves an unlawful boycott in violation of subdivision (c). We see no basis, however, for such a distinction here.

Moradi-Shalal's conclusion that the UIPA does not create private rights of action appears fully applicable to any unlawful conduct in the business of insurance. The court in effect concluded that Royal Globe had misconstrued Insurance Code section 790.09 to recognize a right of action, when in fact there was no textual basis for such a right. It may remain possible, at least theoretically, to judicially "imply" a right of action for some violations of the UIPA. Even were we to accept that theoretical possibility, however, the conditions for such an implied right of action are not satisfied here.

HN6 [↑] Before a court may imply a right [41] of action based on violations of a substantive statute it must appear that (1) the plaintiff belongs to the class of persons the statute is intended to protect; (2) a private remedy will appropriately further the purpose of the legislation; and (3) such a remedy appears to be "needed to assure the effectiveness" of the statute. (Rest.2d Torts, § 874A, quoted and applied in [Middlesex Ins. Co. v. Mann \(1981\) 124 Cal.App.3d 558, 570 \[177 Cal.Rptr. 495\]](#).)

[437] In this case the third element of this test is not satisfied, if only because the Cartwright Act already grants plaintiff remedies which will "assure the effectiveness" of section 790.03\(c\). Accordingly, there is occasion to "imply" a private remedy under the UIPA and plaintiff has not stated a cause of action under that statute. (See [Arriaga v. Loma Linda University \(1992\) 10 Cal.App.4th 1556, 1564 \[13 Cal.Rptr.2d 619\]](#), review den.)

[*843] III. UNFAIR COMPETITION ACT

HN7 [↑] The UCA defines as "unfair competition" any "unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice." (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200.) It broadly authorizes "any person" to sue on behalf of the general public for injunctive and restitutionary relief [42] based on such practices. (§ 17204, 17203.) The act declares that "[u]nless otherwise expressly provided," its remedies are "cumulative to each other and to the remedies or penalties available under all other laws of this state." (§ 17205.)

Plaintiff seeks to base UCA claims on both the Cartwright Act and the UIPA. The former theory is sound; the latter is not.

Violations of the Cartwright Act may constitute the predicate acts for a claim under the UCA. ([People v. National Association of Realtors \(1981\) 120 Cal.App.3d 459, 473-475 \[174 Cal.Rptr. 728\]](#), later appeal (1984) 155 Cal.App.3d 578 [202 Cal.Rptr. 243]; B.W.I. Custom Kitchen v. Owens-Illinois, Inc. (1987) 191 Cal.App.3d 1341, 1348, fn. 6 [235 Cal.Rptr. 228], review den.)

Existing authority, however, precludes reliance on the UCA to " 'plead around' absolute barriers to relief by relabeling the nature of the action as one brought under the unfair competition statute." (Rubin v. Green (1993) 4 Cal.4th 1187, 1201 [17 Cal.Rptr.2d 828, 847 P.2d 1044]) It is thus settled that the UCA cannot be utilized to confer private standing to enforce the UIPA. In Rubin v. Green, supra, the Supreme Court [43] cited approvingly three decisions which, as the court put it, "held that the bar on ... implied private causes of action, imposed by our decision in Moradi-Shalal ... may not be circumvented by recasting the action as one under Business and Professions Code section 17200." (Id. at p. 1202, citing Safeco Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1990) 216 Cal.App.3d 1491 [265 Cal.Rptr. 585]; Maler v. Superior Court (1990) 220 Cal.App.3d 1592 [270 Cal.Rptr. 222], review den.; Industrial Indemnity Co. v. Superior Court (1989) 209 Cal.App.3d 1093 [257 Cal.Rptr. 655]; see also American Internat. Group, Inc. v. Superior Court, supra, 234 Cal.App.3d at p. 768.)

It follows that the demurrs to the UCA cause of action were properly overruled because plaintiff has stated a viable cause of action predicated on defendant's alleged violations of the Cartwright Act. Plaintiff may pursue the equitable remedies afforded by the UCA insofar as those allegations are borne out in further proceedings. Plaintiff may not pursue remedies under the UCA based upon posited violations of the UIPA.

DISPOSITION

In No. A052795, let a peremptory writ of mandate issue directing the superior [44] court to set aside its order of January 25, 1991, insofar as that order [*844] overruled defendants' demurrs to the third cause of action (Unruh Civil Rights Act) and the fourth cause of action (Ins. Code, § 790.03, subd. (c)), and to sustain those demurrs to said causes of action without leave to amend. The alternative writ is otherwise discharged.

In No. A055038, let a peremptory writ of mandate issue directing the superior court to set aside its order of July 23, 1991, insofar as that order sustained defendants' demurrs to the first and second causes of action (Cartwright Act) and to overrule the demurrs to those causes of action.

The alternative writ is otherwise discharged.

Smith, Acting P. J., and Phelan, J., concurred.

End of Document

Roy B. Taylor Sales v. Hollymatic Corp.

United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit

August 3, 1994, Decided

No. 93-1211

Reporter

28 F.3d 1379 *; 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 19888 ; 1994-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,672

ROY B. TAYLOR SALES, INC., Plaintiff-Appellee, versus HOLLYMATIC CORPORATION, Defendant-Appellant.

Subsequent History: [\[1\]](#) As Corrected. Second Correction. Certiorari Denied January 9, 1995, Reported at: 1995 U.S. LEXIS 464.

Prior History: Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas.

Disposition: REVERSED.

Core Terms

machines, customers, dealer, tie, consumers, manufacturer, products, competitors, prices, sales, tying arrangement, purchasing, market power, monopoly, selling, Sherman Act, buy, distributors, antitrust, possessed, restrain

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN1[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

An illegal tie may be shown by proof that the tying firm exerts sufficient control over the tying market to have a likely anticompetitive effect on the tied market. This is sometimes described as "per se" illegality.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN2 [down] Tying Arrangements, Defenses

Unlike other "per se" illegal arrangements, not every refusal to sell two products separately can be said to restrain competition. Rather, there must be proof, as a threshold matter, of a substantial potential for impact on competition in order to justify per se condemnation of a tie.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Nonprice Restraints

HN3 [down] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Vertical non-price restraint is an agreement between entities at different levels of distribution that does not purport to affect prices charged for goods. Vertical non-price restraints are generally not subject to per se analysis. Ties, however, are often instrumental to suspect vertical non-price restraints. They may enable an entity to circumvent laws proscribing anticompetitive or other behavior. Thus, for example, a firm may avoid price regulation, may engage in price discrimination, or may undertake predatory pricing through the use of a tie.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN4 [down] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Tying arrangements that threaten competition come in myriad industries. A seller of machines, for example, may condition the availability of parts on the purchase of repair services, or a hospital may provide care only if patients use particular anesthesiologists. Their common ground is ultimate consumers have to buy one product or service to receive another, removing them from the market for the tied good.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN5 [down] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Where only dealers are subject to a tie, competitors do not lose a segment of the tied market if there are genuine alternative paths to consumers. Ties that constrain only dealers create relatively little danger to competition, provided consumers may purchase the two goods separately.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN6 [down] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Where a dealer serves as an intermediate link in a distribution chain, if one manufacturer is foreclosed from selling to a dealer because of an arrangement, it is likely going to find another way to take its product to market, providing a profit potential continues to exist. In such a case, there is no ultimate foreclosure to the consumer of a choice of goods. In other more traditional tying arrangements there is an ultimate foreclosure of choice to the ultimate consumer. Thus, a foreclosure of choice to an ultimate consumer appears to be the principal key to a tie that is illegal per se. No such foreclosure occurs or is threatened in a typical line forcing situation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN7 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

A tie that does not foreclose choice by the ultimate consumer is nevertheless illegal if it has an actual adverse effect on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN8 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

The fact that consumers might buy goods because of convenience created by a tie does not suffice as evidence of an unreasonable restraint on competition. Speculation about anticompetitive effects is not enough.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > Commerce With Foreign Nations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN9 Sherman Act, Claims

The elements necessary to establish a conspiracy in violation of S.1 of the Sherman Act are (1) joint or concerted action between more than one party (2) that unreasonably restrains trade (3) in interstate or foreign commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN10 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

To establish an unreasonable restraint of trade, a plaintiff's proof must include evidence from which the jury could find that defendant's actions had a substantially adverse impact on competition. Assessing such an impact requires an inquiry into the conditions of the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN11 Market Definition, Relevant Market

An assessment of market power requires a definition of the relevant market. This definition requires two limiting terms: characterization of the product itself and characterization of the relevant geographic market in which that product is sold.

Counsel: For Plaintiff-Appellee: Donald M. Hunt, Gary M. Bellair, CARR, FOUTS, HUNT, CRAIG, TERRILL & WOLFE, Lubbock, TX.

For Defendant-Appellant: John H. Ehrlich, SACHNOFF & WEAVER, Chicago, IL. Lawrence R. Levin, LEVIN & FUNKHOUSER, LTD, Chicago, IL.

Judges: Before GOLDBERG, HIGGINBOTHAM, and EMILIO M. GARZA, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: HIGGINBOTHAM

Opinion

[*1380] HIGGINBOTHAM, Circuit Judge:

Roy B. Taylor Sales, Inc., a dealer of hamburger patty machines and patty paper, sues its supplier, Hollymatic Corporation, a manufacturer of patty products. Taylor alleges that Hollymatic violated the antitrust laws by requiring Taylor to purchase patty paper as a condition to purchasing patty machines. A Texas jury found that Hollymatic illegally tied the products in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act¹ and § 3 of the Clayton Act,² [*1381] that Hollymatic conspired with its paper supplier, Bomarko Corporation, to restrain trade in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act,³ and that Hollymatic established or attempted to establish a monopoly in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act.⁴ The district court trebled the jury's award and entered judgment for Taylor. We find insufficient evidence of either a threat or injury to competition and reverse.

I.

Roy B. Taylor Sales, Inc. sells and services food handling equipment and supplies. Hollymatic Corporation manufactures food processing equipment and related products, including machines for making hamburger patties and paper for handling hamburger patties. Bomarko Corporation supplies Hollymatic with paper goods to make patty paper.

Taylor began selling Hollymatic products in 1970 subject to an agreement requiring Taylor not to stock or sell the merchandise of Hollymatic's competitors. The parties forged a different agreement in 1979 requiring Taylor to make its "best efforts" to promote, sell, and service the full line of Hollymatic products. Taylor alleges that while the 1979 agreement did not formally prohibit Taylor from selling products other than Hollymatic's, Hollymatic informally maintained the requirement. Taylor claims that Hollymatic required Taylor, and other dealers and distributors, to purchase exclusively Hollymatic patty paper as a condition for the purchase of patty machines.

[*1381] According to Taylor, Hollymatic and Bomarko conspired to resist a decline in patty paper prices. Taylor suggests that Hollymatic could sustain prices above the market rate for patty paper because dealers and consumers were dependent on Hollymatic for supplying and servicing its patty machines. Taylor further alleges that Hollymatic offered rebates on patty paper only to some customers. Taylor sought such rebates, but claims that it

¹ 15 U.S.C. § 1.

² 15 U.S.C. § 14.

³ 15 U.S.C. § 2.

⁴ 15 U.S.C. § 1.

received only a slight reduction in price in one instance and that it was refused any reduction in others.⁵ After selling no patty paper other than Hollymatic's for years, Taylor began in 1988 to purchase a substitute.

Hollymatic officials confronted Taylor's president, Ronnie Taylor, in 1990 about Taylor's decreased demand for Hollymatic's product. When Mr. Taylor acknowledged purchasing patty [4] paper from another company, Hollymatic expressed an intention to end the relationship with Taylor. Taylor offered to sell only Hollymatic patty paper in the future and Hollymatic responded with a new agreement that would result in probation rather than termination. After the parties failed to come to terms over the amount of patty paper that Taylor would purchase each month, Hollymatic severed relations.

Taylor adduced statements made by Hollymatic executives indicating a policy of requiring dealers to purchase exclusively Hollymatic patty paper as a condition for purchasing other Hollymatic products, and evincing an intent to make an example of Taylor for failing to abide by that requirement. Hollymatic in turn acknowledges that its dissatisfaction with Taylor stemmed in part from Taylor's decision not to purchase patty paper from Hollymatic beginning in 1988. Indeed, Hollymatic also accuses Taylor of purchasing "counterfeit" Hollymatic spare parts. Nevertheless, Hollymatic claims that its termination in 1990 of its relationship with Taylor was not a response to Taylor selling the products of other companies.

Taylor seeks damages for the loss of profits it suffered in the five years [5] subsequent to Hollymatic's cessation of business relations. Taylor asserted at trial that it could have made profits of approximately $ 80,000 each year for a present value total of roughly $ 370,000. Taylor acknowledged that, after a lapse of five years, it could recover from the loss of Hollymatic's product line. The jury found for Taylor and awarded $ 296,662.60 in damages, trebled as a matter of law to $ 889,987.80.⁶

[6] [*1382] II.

Hollymatic argues that insufficient evidence supported the jury's finding of a tie. Hollymatic also contends that the evidence did not support the conclusion that Hollymatic threatened, or caused the kind of harm, to competition necessary for an antitrust violation. We do not pause over the question of whether there was a tie because we conclude that, assuming there was one, Taylor failed to prove that it was illegal.⁷ We also conclude that the insufficiency of the evidence is fatal to Taylor's alternative theories.

⁵ Taylor does not claim that Hollymatic used the tie to effect price discrimination in violation of the Robinson-Patman Act. See 15 U.S.C. § 13, et seq.

⁶ Hollymatic appeals the district court's denial of its motion to dismiss Taylor's complaint, its motion for summary judgment, its motion for judgment as a matter of law, its renewed motion for judgment as a matter of law, and its motion for a new trial. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\), 56, 50\(a\), 50\(b\), and 59\(a\). As a jury ruled on the evidence at trial, we need not consider whether at any given stage Hollymatic might have prevailed. We assess instead the propriety of the jury verdict. See, e.g., Bealmer v. Texaco, Inc., 427 F.2d 885, 886 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 926, 27 L. Ed. 2d 185, 91 S. Ct. 187 (1970) (refusing to entertain appeal of denial of summary judgment after final resolution of case). Compare Savarin Corporation v. National Bank of Pakistan, 447 F.2d 727, 732 \(2d Cir. 1971\) (entertaining challenge of denial of summary judgment after final resolution of case) with Glaros v. H.H. Robertson Co., 797 F.2d 1564, 1573 \(Fed.Cir. 1986\) (criticizing Savarin and refusing to entertain appeal of denial of summary judgment).

Hollymatic provides support only for the contention that it may appeal the district court's denial of its Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) and summary judgment motions. Hollymatic cites two cases in which we entertained interlocutory appeals of, respectively, denial of a motion for summary judgment and of a motion under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\), both requested on the basis of qualified immunity. See Spann v. Rainey, 987 F.2d 1110, 1112 \(5th Cir. 1993\); Jackson v. Beaumont Police Dept., 958 F.2d 616, 618 \(5th Cir. 1992\). Qualified immunity provides a rare exception to the general rule that we will not address on appeal a denial of summary judgment. Hollymatic offers no grounds for entertaining appeals of motions denied prior to the jury's verdict in cases that do not involve qualified immunity.

⁷ We review the evidence to determine whether a reasonable jury could have found for Taylor. R.D. Imports Ryno Indus. v. Mazda Distrib., 807 F.2d 1222, 1224 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 818, 98 L. Ed. 2d 38, 108 S. Ct. 75 (1987). Hollymatic

[7] A.

Taylor does not claim that Hollymatic limited the choices available to consumers. Hollymatic required Taylor, a dealer, to provide only Hollymatic patty paper. Customers purchasing patty machines from Taylor remained free to buy paper elsewhere. Only Taylor was bound. As we examine Taylor's complaints about this restriction, we must keep in mind that the antitrust laws protect competition, not competitors.⁸ Ultimately, the consumer is the beneficiary.

HN1 [↑] An illegal tie may be [8] shown by proof that the tying firm "exerts sufficient control over the tying market . . . to have a likely anticompetitive effect on the tied market."⁹ This is sometimes described as "per se" illegality. This label makes sense when describing price fixing or horizontal market division, but is confusing here because it insists on an inquiry into market power as a predicate to "per se" illegality.

This odd use of the term "per se" is descriptive of a rule located between a per se and a rule of reason inquiry. The best that can be said for it is that it reflects the intermediate danger tying arrangements pose to the market: HN2 [↑] unlike other "per se" illegal arrangements, "not every refusal to sell two products separately can be said to restrain [9] competition."¹⁰ Rather, there must be proof "as a threshold matter . . . [of] a substantial potential for impact on competition in order to justify per se condemnation" of a tie.¹¹

The alleged tying arrangement between Hollymatic and Taylor was a form of [*1383] HN3 [↑] vertical nonprice restraint, that is, "an agreement between entities at different levels of distribution that does not purport to affect prices charged for . . . goods."¹² [11] Vertical nonprice restraints are generally not subject to per se analysis.¹³ Ties, however, are often instrumental to suspect vertical nonprice restraints. They may enable an entity to circumvent laws proscribing anticompetitive [10] or other behavior. Thus, for example, a firm may avoid price regulation,¹⁴ may engage in price discrimination,¹⁵ or may undertake predatory pricing through the use of a tie.¹⁶ also contends that the district court committed reversible error in instructing the jury. We do not address this issue because we rule for Hollymatic on other grounds.

⁸ See Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962) (antitrust laws provide "protection of competition, not competitors."); Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 53 n.21, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 (1977) (antitrust jurisprudence deals primarily with "market considerations," not with "restrictions on the autonomy of independent businessmen").

⁹ Breaux Bros. Farms v. Teche Sugar Co., 21 F.3d 83, 86 (5th Cir. 1994) (citing Jefferson Parish Hops. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 15-18, 26-29, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984)).

¹⁰ See Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 11. See also id. at 32-44 (O'Connor, J., concurring) (arguing that per se analysis should not apply to tying arrangements).

¹¹ Id. at 16.

¹² Smith Machinery Co., Inc. v. Hesston Corp., 878 F.2d 1290, 1295 (10th Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 1073, 107 L. Ed. 2d 1026, 110 S. Ct. 1119 (1990) (footnote and citations omitted). See Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 730, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, 108 S. Ct. 1515 (1988) ("Restraints imposed by agreement between competitors have traditionally been denominated as horizontal restraints, and those imposed by agreement between firms at different levels of distribution as vertical restraints.") (footnote omitted).

¹³ See Business Electronics, 485 U.S. at 735-36 ("Economic analysis supports the view, and no precedent opposes it, that a vertical restraint is not illegal per se unless it includes some agreement on price or price levels.").

¹⁴ See Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 36 n.4 (O'Connor, J., concurring) ("In a regulated industry a firm with market power may be unable to extract a supercompetitive profit because it lacks control over the prices it charges for regulated products or services. Tying may then be used to extract that profit from sale of the unregulated, tied products or services.") (citations omitted).

Taylor does not allege that Hollymatic pursued any of these specific ends. More generally, a firm may leverage power in one market into additional power in another. This leveraging can force existing competitors from the tied market or create barriers to entry.¹⁷ [12] As the tied market weakens, the tying firm's market power may increase.¹⁸

HN4 Tying arrangements that threaten competition come in myriad industries. A seller of machines, for example, may condition the availability of parts on the purchase of repair services,¹⁹ or a hospital may provide care only if patients use particular anesthesiologists.²⁰ Their common ground is ultimate consumers have to buy one product or service to receive another, removing them from the market for the tied good.

HN5 Where, however, only dealers are subject to a tie,²¹ competitors do not lose a segment of the tied market if there are [13] genuine alternative paths to consumers. Here, assuming a tie was in place, customers could purchase Hollymatic patty machines from Taylor and purchase patty paper elsewhere. Alternative distributors did not have to be robust to compete; they merely had to exist. Companies entering the patty paper market could attract Taylor's customers provided they charged a lower price, produced a superior product, or both. Ties that constrain only dealers, like the one Taylor complains of, create relatively little danger to competition,²² provided consumers may purchase the two goods separately.²³

[14] [*1384] As we have suggested, mechanical inquiry into the fit of per se categories has little utility in exposing any injurious impact upon competition of ties. Inquiry into Hollymatic's power in the tying market tells us nothing of other patty paper distributors. Ronnie Taylor testified, "Patty paper was I guess always available through paper companies if customers called and asked paper companies about it." When asked if paper "was always available to end users in [his] territory," he replied, "Yes." The evidence suggests that competition in patty paper sales was fierce, and that Hollymatic was dependent on Taylor's aggressive efforts to move its product. Under these circumstances, any obligation on Taylor to carry only Hollymatic's patty paper would have enhanced competition by ensuring Hollymatic access to the market. Yet assessing Hollymatic's power in the tying market, and whether there was a not insubstantial amount of commerce in the tied market, would not uncover this fact.

¹⁵ See id. ("Tying may . . . help the seller engage in price discrimination by 'metering' the buyer's use of the tying product.") (citations omitted).

¹⁶ See generally E. Thomas Sullivan and Jeffrey L. Harrison, Understanding Antitrust and Its Economic Implications 183-85 (2d ed. 1994) (summarizing rationales for proscribing tying arrangements).

¹⁷ See Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 14-15; id. at 36-40 (O'Connor, J., concurring).

¹⁸ See generally Louis Kaplow, Extension of Monopoly Power Through Leverage, 85 Colum. L. Rev. 515, 520-25 \(1985\).

¹⁹ See Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 \(1992\).

²⁰ See Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 4-5.

²¹ Cf. Fortner Enterprises, Inc. v. U.S. Steel Corp., 394 U.S. 495, 22 L. Ed. 2d 495, 89 S. Ct. 1252 \(1969\) (consumers and intermediaries in line of distribution required to purchase home to receive loans on favorable terms) and 429 U.S. 610, 97 S. Ct. 861, 51 L. Ed. 2d 80 \(1977\) (same case).

²² See Phillip E. Areeda, Antitrust Law, P 1725b, at 316-18 (1991).

²³ Where the only competition for an item occurs at the level of the distributor, a tie at that level may foreclose part of the market to competitors in the tied good. If a company sells canning machinery on condition that a canner also buys cans, the consumers will purchase the two as a single product. Competitors will not be able to sell cans directly to consumers of canned goods. See id. P 1725b, at 317 (providing this example). A similar situation arose in United States v. Loew's, Inc., 371 U.S. 38, 9 L. Ed. 2d 11, 83 S. Ct. 97 \(1962\). Distributors conditioned purchases by television stations of desirable films on purchases of undesirable films. Consumers received transmission of both.

The present situation is analogous to others in which a manufacturer requires a dealer to carry one product in its line to receive another. The Tenth Circuit addressed these circumstances in Smith Machinery Co. v. Hesston Corp.,²⁴ in which a manufacturer conditioned sale of farm equipment to a dealer on purchase of its tractors.²⁵ The court acknowledged that the arrangement constituted a tie but focused on the risk posed to competition rather than on labels.²⁶ Although free to sell tractors from other manufacturers, the dealer complained that in light of its limited resources purchase of one tractor would foreclose purchase of another. The court responded that this claim "even if true" would not affect its analysis.²⁷ The court reasoned:

HN6 [↑] Where a dealer is serving as an intermediate link in a distribution chain, [16] if one manufacturer is foreclosed from selling to a dealer because of [an] arrangement, it is likely going to find another way to take its product to market, providing a profit potential continues to exist. In such a case, there is no ultimate foreclosure to the consumer of a choice of goods. In other more traditional tying arrangements there is an ultimate foreclosure of choice to the ultimate consumer. Thus, a foreclosure of choice to an ultimate consumer appears to be the principal key to a tie that is illegal per se. No such foreclosure occurs or is threatened in a typical line forcing situation such as that at bar.²⁸

[17] We find the same to be true of the alleged tie in the present case. The claimed arrangement between Hollymatic and Taylor constituted a vertical nonprice restraint between a manufacturer and a dealer on goods that the dealer offered to customers independently. It was in effect an exclusive-dealing agreement in which Hollymatic required Taylor to sell Hollymatic, and only Hollymatic, patty paper.²⁹ [18] Such an arrangement is not the sort "that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease [*1385] output."³⁰ It does not threaten competition to the same extent as tying arrangements that bind ultimate customers. Regardless of whether the restraint also constitutes a tying arrangement, subjecting it to per se analysis would ignore our directive from the Court.³¹ The measure of legality of relationships between manufacturers and independent distributors must not be

²⁴ 878 F.2d 1290 \(10th Cir. 1989\), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 1073, 107 L. Ed. 2d 1026, 110 S. Ct. 1119 (1990).

²⁵ Id. at 1291-92.

²⁶ See id. at 1295 (citing Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 21 n.34).

²⁷ Id. at 1296.

²⁸ Id. at 1297 (citing Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 5; Loew's Inc., 371 U.S. at 40; Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 3, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 (1958); International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 393, 92 L. Ed. 20, 68 S. Ct. 12 (1947)).

²⁹ See Roland Machinery Co. v. Dresser Indus., Inc., 749 F.2d 380, 393-94 (7th Cir. 1984) (Posner, J.) (arguing that exclusive-dealing agreements which require dealer to sell only manufacturers product line are assessed under "Rule of Reason") (cited with approval in Stitt Spark Plug Co. v. Champion Spark Plug Co., 840 F.2d 1253, 1258 n.18 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 890, 102 L. Ed. 2d 214, 109 S. Ct. 224 (1988)).

³⁰ Business Electronics, 485 U.S. at 723 (quoting Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 289-290, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202, 105 S. Ct. 2613 (1985) (quoting Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 19-20, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1, 99 S. Ct. 1551 (1979))) (internal quotation marks omitted).

³¹ 485 U.S. at 726 ("departure from [the rule-of-reason] standard must be justified by demonstrable economic effect, such as the facilitation of cartelizing, rather than formalistic distinctions") (interpreting Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984) and Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 (1977)); Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 21 n.34 ("The legality of . . . conduct depends on its competitive consequences, not on whether it can be labeled 'tying.' If the competitive consequences of [an] arrangement are not those to which the per se rule is addressed, then it should not be condemned irrespective of its label.").

allowed to turn on labels. Here the language of per se violations has little utility in the absence of price fixing or horizontal division of markets.

[19] B.

HN7 The alleged tie was nevertheless illegal if it "had an actual adverse effect on competition." ³² Taylor's dissatisfaction resulted from competition in the patty paper market. Taylor claims to have lost business because Hollymatic's prices made it difficult for Taylor to compete. Ronnie Taylor, a member of the family that owned and ran Taylor Sales, Inc., complained that because of Hollymatic's high patty paper prices, Taylor "began to lose customers to competition." These signs of a healthy market in patty paper belie Taylor's claim that the tying arrangement harmed patty paper purchasers.

Taylor's claim was, ironically, that it lost customers to competitors; that the consumer's response to the asserted high price of paper was to purchase paper elsewhere. Now, this may have cost Taylor money--injured it--but it [20] belies its claim of injury to competition. Purchasers of machines from Taylor simply found a different seller. Taylor's incentive to accept Hollymatic's requirement that Taylor buy its paper rested on the profitability of its machine sales.

Taylor characterizes as a threat to competition the possibility that patty paper purchasers bought Hollymatic's paper at supracompetitive prices. The claim is:

A customer receiving Hollymatic machines, parts, and service from a Hollymatic dealer may well buy the Hollymatic Patty Paper because of that "common tie" to the dealer. After all, that is more convenient to the customer than seeking an independent source who could sell patty paper at a competitive price.

The Supreme Court rejected such reasoning in Jefferson Parish. HN8 The fact that consumers might buy goods because of convenience created by a tie does not suffice as evidence of an unreasonable restraint on competition. ³³ Speculation about anticompetitive effects is not enough. Taylor had to show that the tie "as it actually operated in the market" ³⁴ harmed competition. The record does not indicate that consumers continued to purchase Hollymatic patty paper at prices [21] above the market.

III.

This lack of evidence also defeats Taylor's claim of conspiracy under § 1 of the Sherman Act. ³⁵ Taylor claims that Hollymatic conspired with Bomarko to restrain trade. HN9 The elements of a § 1 claim are: "1) joint or concerted action between more than one party [*1386] that 2) unreasonably restrains trade in 3) interstate or foreign commerce." ³⁶

[22] Taylor's claim of conspiracy is derivative of its tying claim. Taylor contended in its closing argument:

Hollymatic was being pressured to buy more paper than it could sell. Hollymatic in turn was putting pressure on its dealers. Why? Because Bomarko and Hollymatic together could not compete in a free market--not and both of them take double digit profits they were taking.

³² Breaux Brothers, 21 F.3d at 86 (quoting Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 31) (internal quotation marks omitted).

³³ Id. at 29-30.

³⁴ Id. at 29.

³⁵ 15 U.S.C. § 1.

³⁶ R.D. Imports Ryno Indus. v. Mazda Distrib., 807 F.2d 1222, 1224 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 818, 98 L. Ed. 2d 38, 108 S. Ct. 75 (1987). Hollymatic argues that it and Bomarko were not distinct entities and that the two therefore could not have conspired. We need not address this issue because Taylor's § 1 claim fails in any case.

Taylor implicated Bomarko in the alleged tying arrangement. This accusation is consistent with the request for damages resulting from termination, which followed from enforcement of the claimed tie. The conspiracy claim fails because the underlying tie was not illegal--the concert of action did not unreasonably restrain trade.

HN10[³⁷] To establish an unreasonable restraint of trade, Taylor's proof must have included evidence from which the jury could have found that Hollymatic's actions had a "substantially adverse" impact on competition.³⁷ [23] Assessing such an impact requires an inquiry into the conditions of the relevant market.³⁸ As we explained, Taylor provided no basis for concluding that Hollymatic's actions affected competition adversely.

Taylor also contends that Hollymatic amassed monopoly power in the patty machine market in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act. Market power is the ability to control prices or exclude competition.³⁹ [24] HN11[³⁹] An assessment of market power requires a definition of the relevant market.⁴⁰ This definition requires two limiting terms: "characterization of the product itself and characterization of the relevant geographic market in which that product is sold."⁴¹ Hollymatic complains that Taylor has never defined the market in which Hollymatic wields power. We agree.

Taylor argues that its sales area drew the geographical lines for the market in which Hollymatic possessed power. We find that Taylor failed to offer evidence to support a jury finding that Hollymatic possessed the requisite power in the market for any particular product in Taylor's sales area. We assume without deciding that the sales area was the appropriate geographical area for measuring competition.⁴²

[25] Taylor's claim of monopoly tracks its allegation of a tying arrangement. Taylor describes the "Hollymatic Patty Machine" as the tying product, suggesting that Hollymatic amassed power in the market for this machine and its competitors. However, Hollymatic contends, and the record confirms, that the "Hollymatic Patty Machine" does not exist. Taylor's arguments on appeal and the record indicate that Taylor may have intended to refer to either of two possible product markets: the market for the Super Patty Machine, a particularly successful Hollymatic product; or the market for all Hollymatic patty machines.⁴³ Taylor failed to prove that [*1387] Hollymatic possessed monopoly power in either market, or that the Super Patty Machine and comparable machines were sufficiently insulated from competition to constitute a distinct market.

³⁷ Id.

³⁸ Id. ("Market considerations provide the objective benchmark for the measurement of competitive impact.") (citing Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 54, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 (1977); Daniels v. All Steel Equipment, Inc., 590 F.2d 111, 113 (5th Cir. 1979)).

³⁹ See Spectrofuge Corp. v. Beckman Instruments, Inc., 575 F.2d 256, 276 (5th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 939, 59 L. Ed. 2d 499, 99 S. Ct. 1289 (1979).

⁴⁰ See Seidenstein v. National Medical Enterprises, Inc., 769 F.2d 1100, 1106 (5th Cir. 1985) ("Before a defendant's market power can be determined, the relevant market must be defined.").

⁴¹ R.D. Imports, 807 F.2d at 1224-25.

⁴² See id. at 1225 ("the geographic dimensions of [a] market encompass[] the areas of effective competition in which the particular product or its reasonably interchangeable substitutes are traded") (quoting Hornsby Oil Co. v. Champion Spark Plug Co., 714 F.2d 1384, 1393 (5th Cir. 1983)) (internal quotation marks omitted).

⁴³ Taylor relies on the pretrial order and the jury instructions as identifying the "Hollymatic Patty Machine." The pretrial order, however, describes "Hollymatic hamburger patty machines as a tying product and Hollymatic patty paper as a tied product." The district court's instruction to the jury similarly explains, "Taylor has alleged that Hollymatic established a tying arrangement whereby Hollymatic sold Taylor hamburger patty machines (the tying product) conditioned on Taylor purchasing Hollymatic patty paper (the tied product)." These sources indicate that the jury addressed Hollymatic's power in the market for patty machines in general, not in the market for the Super Patty Machine.

[26] We could assume that Taylor meant the tying market to include Hollymatic's Super Patty Machine and comparable machines sold by other manufacturers. Taylor at times adopts this approach, noting that all parties to the litigation acknowledge the prominent place in the market of the Super Patty Machine. This testimony sometimes suggested that the Super Patty Machine was a "lead product," "flagship product," "market leader," "dominant," and "premiere product." Beyond these general descriptions of market success, however, Taylor provides little basis for a conclusion that Hollymatic possessed monopoly power in the market consisting of the Super Patty Machine and its competitors. Taylor does not specify the percentage of sales attributable to the Super Patty Machine in any market⁴⁴ [27] or provide any basis for even a rough estimate of such a figure, nor does Taylor recount information useful in assessing the strength and scope of competition in the market for the Super Patty Machine.⁴⁵

Significantly, there was inadequate evidence about other products available to Hollymatic's customers. Hollymatic faced competition, for example, from manufacturers of machines that produced patties on a larger scale than the Super Patty Machine. In the mid-1980s, Wendy's, at the time a faithful customer of Hollymatic, abandoned the Super Patty Machine for larger machines sold by a rival of Hollymatic, which Wendy's stationed in central locations. This event indicates that larger machines provided a viable alternative to the Super Patty Machine, at least in a substantial segment of the market. It also increased the supply of used Super Patty Machines, which decreased sales in new machines. Ronnie Taylor acknowledged selling used Super Patty Machines at a profit equal to or greater than the profits available from selling new machines, both before and after Hollymatic terminated his dealership. These competitive threats to the Super Patty Machine are at odds with a claim of market power--a [28] concept that is not interchangeable with market success. Despite these disquieting features of the market, Taylor provided no evidence of the size and strength of the market in used machines or the incidence of customers changing to larger machines. This illustrates the absence of focus upon market power. Without such basic information about the market, the jury had no means to assess the market power the Super Patty Machine conferred on Hollymatic.

Taylor may have meant the term "Hollymatic Patty Machine" to refer, instead, to all of Hollymatic's patty machines. Thus, Roy B. Taylor, a member of the family that owns Taylor, was asked, "And you are saying that the continuation of being able to sell the Super Machine is what forced you to sell paper at a higher price at that amount of profit?" He responded, "No, sir. I am saying the failure to sell all their patty machines." The jury did not, however, have a sufficient basis for concluding that Hollymatic possessed monopoly power in the market for all patty machines.

Taylor relies on only two statements that Roy B. Taylor made about Hollymatic's presence in the patty machine market. First, Mr. Taylor provided "just an estimate" that [29] in 1979 of the 200 to 300 patty machines in his territory, no more than five were manufactured by Hollymatic's competitors. This statement casts little light on Hollymatic's [*1388] power in the patty machine market at relevant times. Second, Mr. Taylor responded to the question, "What percentage or share of the patty machine market to the customers that you were serving, customer base that you were serving, did you have as a Hollymatic distributor?" Mr. Taylor answered, "Conservatively I think I could honestly say 95 percent of the business." While Mr. Taylor acknowledged that there were machines competitive with Hollymatic's products, he claimed that they did not "perform efficiently" and that "some" of them were no longer on the market. Mr. Taylor did not define his "patty machine market" such as the range of patty machines that the market included. Testimony indicated that Hollymatic was "the industry leader" in certain lines of patty machines but, as we explained, did not suggest the share of the market Hollymatic controlled or the nature of the competition Hollymatic faced. The evidence indicates that customers could purchase used machines or replace several small patty machines with [30] a single large one sold by a competitor of Hollymatic.

⁴⁴ See, e.g., Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 26-28 (identifying percentage of particular market garnered by tying product); Breaux Bros., 21 F.3d at 86-88 (same).

⁴⁵ See Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 26-28.

Importantly, there was no evidence of significant barriers to entry. In the absence of barriers to entry such as a capital intensive industry or patents, a competitor waiting on the sidelines can deny those in the market the power to control prices--because current players cannot exclude competition.

In short, Taylor offered no direct evidence that Hollymatic could control prices in the market for patty machines or for any particular machine, and offered no evidence of Hollymatic's share in either market. As a result, "there was simply no evidence from which the jury could begin to measure [Hollymatic's] power to control prices or to exclude competition in [any] relevant market." ⁴⁶ Taylor offers no reason to believe that Hollymatic acquired or maintained, ⁴⁷ [31] or threatened to acquire or maintain, ⁴⁸ a monopoly. Taylor cannot succeed under § 2 of the Sherman Act.

Finally, Taylor claims that Hollymatic's actions violated the Texas Free Enterprise and Antitrust Act. ⁴⁹ The [32] parties agree that Texas antitrust law mirrors federal law as applied to the present case. ⁵⁰ State law does not offer an alternative grounds for affirmance.

REVERSED.

End of Document

⁴⁶ Spectrofuge Corp., 575 F.2d at 286.

⁴⁷ Domed Stadium Hotel, Inc. v. Holiday Inns, Inc., 732 F.2d 480, 487 \(5th Cir. 1984\) ("The offense of monopoly under § 2 [of the Sherman Act] has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.") (quoting United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 \(1966\)) (internal quotation marks omitted).

⁴⁸ 732 F.2d at 490 ("The offense of attempted monopolization has two elements: (1) specific intent to accomplish the illegal result; and (2) a dangerous probability that the attempt to monopolize the relevant market will be successful.") (quoting Dimmitt Agri Indus., Inc. v. CPC Int'l, Inc., 679 F.2d 516, 525 \(5th Cir. 1982\), cert. denied, 460 U.S. 1082, 103 S. Ct. 1770, 76 L. Ed. 2d 344 \(1983\); Spectrofuge Corp. v. Beckman Instruments, Inc., 575 F.2d 256, 276 (5th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 939, 59 L. Ed. 2d 499, 99 S. Ct. 1289 \(1979\)) (internal quotation marks omitted). See Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884, 892 \(1993\) (requiring proof of dangerous probability of monopoly for attempt claim under § 2 of Sherman Act).

⁴⁹ Tex. Bus. & Comm. Code Ann. § 15.05\(a\)-\(c\).

⁵⁰ See Caller-Times Pub. Co. v. Triad Communications, Inc., 826 S.W.2d 576, 580 \(Tex. 1992\).

Staudinger v. Educational Comm'n for Foreign Medical Graduates

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

August 3, 1994, Decided ; August 3, 1994, Filed

92 Civ. 8071 (JFK)

Reporter

1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10580 *; 1994 WL 410875

ROBERT STAUDINGER, Plaintiff, v. EDUCATIONAL COMMISSION FOR FOREIGN MEDICAL GRADUATES and MARIE SHAFFRON, Defendants.

Core Terms

antitrust, monopolization, residency program, certification, motion to dismiss, Sherman Act, Graduates

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN1[Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim should be granted only if it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim that would entitle him to relief. Plaintiff must show that the complaint contains allegations concerning all the material elements necessary to sustain recovery under a viable legal theory.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

HN2[Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

Giving leave to amend a pleading in order to insert what may be a viable claim does not make that claim automatically acceptable upon submission of the amendment and does not collaterally estop a defendant from seeking to dismiss the amended claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Accreditation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3 Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

Under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §2, a claimant must allege (1) monopolization; (2) attempted monopolization; or (3) conspiracy to monopolize.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Market Definition

HN4 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A monopolization claim requires claimant to demonstrate monopolizing conduct coupled with monopoly power in the relevant market. Monopolizing conduct is the willful acquisition or maintenance of monopoly power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN5 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To have standing to sue under §2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §2, plaintiff must allege an "antitrust injury"--an injury the antitrust laws were intended to prevent against business or property.

Counsel: [*1] For Plaintiff: SVI ZER, ESQ., New York, New York, Of Counsel: Svi Zer.

For Defendants: DAVIS, SCOTT, WEBER & EDWARDS, P.C., New York, New York, Of Counsel: George F. Hritz, John Houston Pope. LAPIN, HUBBARD & JOHNSON, P.C., Denver, Colorado, Of Counsel: Bruce A. Hubbard.

Judges: KEENAN

Opinion by: JOHN F. KEENAN

Opinion

OPINION AND ORDERJOHN F. KEENAN, United States District Judge:

Before the Court is the motion of defendants, Educational Commission for Foreign Medical Graduates ("ECFMG") and Marie Shaffron (collectively, "Defendants"), to dismiss the "Complaint Dated Nov. 93" ("Third Amended Complaint"), for failure to state a claim pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\). Jurisdiction in this court is based upon 15 U.S.C. §§ 15 and 26 and 28 U.S.C. § 1337. For the reasons set forth below, Defendants' motion is granted.

BACKGROUND

The Court assumes familiarity with the Opinion and Order of former United States District Judge Louis J. Freeh dated April 27, 1993 ("Judge Freeh's Opinion").¹ Robert Staudinger ("Plaintiff") is a citizen of Austria, a permanent resident of the United States living in New York County, and [*2] a graduate of the medical school of the University of Innsbruck, Austria. He is currently employed by New York Medical College as a research associate. See Zer Affirmation, Exhibit B P 2. He wishes to enter a hospital residency program in the United States. His applications, however, have been rejected because he has not been certified by defendant ECFMG.

ECFMG is a non-profit organization that assesses the qualifications of Foreign Medical Graduates ("FMGs") applying to residency programs in the United States. See Defendants' Memorandum in Support at 3-4. Defendant Marie Shaffron is a Vice President of Operations at ECFMG. See Zer Affirmation, Exhibit B P 4. Hospitals apparently rely upon the ECFMG certification process when choosing candidates for their residency programs. See Zer Affirmation, Exhibit B P 27. The process as is relevant to this case entails [*3] medical science and English exams, as well as proof that the FMG is licensed to practice in the country in which he received his medical degree. See Defendants' Memorandum in Support at 3-4.

In the present case, ECFMG has denied Plaintiff's application for certification because he is not licensed to practice medicine in Austria.² Austria has not licensed plaintiff because he never completed a hospital residency program in Austria. See Defendants' Memorandum in Support at 4. His failure to obtain a license to practice in Austria has led the ECFMG to deny his certification request, which has effectively precluded plaintiff from gaining admission to residency programs in the United States.

Plaintiff initiated this lawsuit in November of 1992, alleging, under various theories of liability, that ECFMG's standards for certification are arbitrary. The complaint has been amended three times,³ and all claims have been dismissed except for those [*4] addressed here.

DISCUSSION

¹ This case was reassigned to the Court following Judge Freeh's appointment to the position of Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigations.

² Plaintiff has passed ECFMG's medical science and English exams.

³ Plaintiff's original complaint was filed in November of 1992. On January 5, 1993, Plaintiff filed an Amended Complaint. In June of 1993, Plaintiff sought permission to file a Second Amended Complaint. The proposed Second Amended Complaint was submitted to the Court on July 29, 1993, but never formally filed with the Clerk of the Court. Following the reassignment of the case, this Third Amended Complaint, different in content from the proposed Second Amended Complaint, was filed on November 30, 1993. See Defendants' Memorandum in Support at 2-3.

Plaintiff's Third Amended Complaint states claims against Defendants for (1) violations of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2; (2) violations of New York's Executive Law § 296; and (3) tortious interference with contract. Defendants have moved to dismiss the entire complaint for failure to state a claim.

HN1[] A motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim should be granted only if it appears beyond [*5] doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim that would entitle him to relief. See Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 \(1957\). Plaintiff must show that the Complaint contains allegations concerning all the material elements necessary to sustain recovery under a viable legal theory. Connolly v. Havens, 763 F. Supp. 6, 9 \(S.D.N.Y. 1991\).

A. Collateral Estoppel

Plaintiff contends that under the doctrine of collateral estoppel, Defendants are precluded from relitigating the existence of an antitrust claim, based upon Judge Freeh's Opinion and this Court's "confirmation" of that antitrust claim at a status conference held on October 18, 1993. See Zer Affirmation PP 2-3. At the status conference, the Court did not "confirm" the existence of this claim, but rather supported the Opinion of Judge Freeh. In his Opinion, Judge Freeh stated that the Court could not find, at the initial stage of the litigation, that ECFMG did not exercise monopoly power in the market for testing of FMGs or that competition in that market had not been [*6] reduced as a result of ECFMG's conduct. See Judge Freeh's Opinion at 14. Significantly, at that time, plaintiff had not yet pled the antitrust theory that is the subject of this motion; instead, Plaintiff first raised this theory in his opposition to Defendants' motion to dismiss the original complaint. Id. at 13. Thus, in his Opinion, Judge Freeh stated that a claim may exist if it was properly pleaded. He did not state that a claim actually existed. HN2[] Giving leave to amend a pleading in order to insert what may be a viable claim does not make that claim automatically acceptable upon submission of the amendment and does not collaterally estop a defendant from seeking to dismiss the amended claim.

B. Sherman Act Violations

HN3[] Under the Sherman Act, a claimant must allege (1) monopolization; (2) attempted monopolization; or (3) conspiracy to monopolize. See Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Hearst/ABC Viacom Entertainment Servs., 746 F. Supp. 320, 326 \(S.D.N.Y. 1990\). Plaintiff has attempted to assert that Defendants have monopolized the market for certification of FMGs and that ECFMG and the Accreditation Council for Graduate [*7] Medical Education ("ACGME") have "teamed up" to adopt the ECFMG's standards. HN4[] A monopolization claim requires claimant to:

demonstrate monopolizing conduct coupled with monopoly power in the relevant market. Monopolizing conduct is "the willful acquisition or maintenance of [monopoly] power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." [\[Delaware & Hudson Ry. Co. v. Consolidated Rail Corp., 902 F.2d 174, 178 \(2d Cir. 1990\)\]](#) (quoting United States v. Grinnell, 384 U.S. 563, 570-571, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 \(1966\)). This requirement is in keeping with the cornerstone precept of antitrust law that competition is to be safeguarded, not competitors.

See Broadcast Music, 746 F. Supp. at 326 (citations omitted).

As the claimant must demonstrate conduct in a particular market, it follows that the plaintiff must first define that market. In this case, Plaintiff has made repeated attempts to define the relevant market. In the Third Amended Complaint, plaintiff has defined the market [*8] as "the annual 'pool' of FMGs (Foreign Medical Graduates) candidates [sic] for residency positions available for residency programs administered in New York state, from which New York Hospitals draw their candidates for residency each year when they fill up the vacant positions." See Zer Affirmation, Exhibit B P 12. ECFMG is clearly not part of the pool of FMGs nor is it a candidate for a residency position. Plaintiff has yet again failed to properly define the relevant market, which in this case is, as Judge Freeh stated, the market for certifying the credentials of FMGs. See Judge Freeh's Opinion at 13. This failure, standing alone, is sufficient to dismiss the Third Amended Complaint. See Walker Process Equip. Inc. v.

Food Mach. Chem. Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 177, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247, 86 S. Ct. 347 (1965); American Hoist & Derrick Co. v. Sowa & Sons, 725 F.2d 1350, 1366 (Fed. Cir. 1984).

Assuming, arguendo, that Plaintiff had pled the proper relevant market, this motion to dismiss would still have been granted because Plaintiff lacks standing to sue. In order HN5[[↑]] to have standing to sue [*9] under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, Plaintiff must allege an "antitrust injury"--an injury the antitrust laws were intended to prevent against business or property. See Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 110-111, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 (1986). For example, a failure to meet the academic standards set by leading medical schools is not an antitrust injury. See Selman v. Harvard Medical School, 494 F. Supp. 603, 621 (S.D.N.Y. 1980). Similarly, Plaintiff's failure to meet the ECFMG certification requirements is not an antitrust injury.

Plaintiff may have been able to assert standing had he been seeking to enter the business of certifying the credentials of FMGs. Even if plaintiff claims that he is seeking to certify himself, he still fails to obtain standing because the market that he is interested in is merely the market to certify himself. The antitrust laws were not intended to apply to such economically insignificant markets. See Arthur S. Langenderfer, Inc. v. S.E. Johnson Co., 917 F.2d 1413, 1421 (6th Cir. 1990), cert. denied [*10] 116 L. Ed. 2d 29, 112 S. Ct. 51 (1991). See also Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 336-37, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962) (defined market must correspond to economic realities of the industry and be economically significant). The mere fact that he is affected by ECFMG's standards is insufficient to give him standing to sue under the antitrust laws. See Selman, 494 F. Supp. at 621. Thus, plaintiff's monopolization claim must be denied.

Without standing to sue, Plaintiff's remaining Sherman Act claim must also be dismissed.

C. State Law Claims

Having dismissed Plaintiff's grounds for subject matter jurisdiction, this Court lacks jurisdiction over the state law claims and declines to address them. Accordingly, the state law claims against both defendants are also dismissed.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, this motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim is hereby granted. The Court orders the Clerk of the Court to close this case and remove it from the Court's active docket.

SO ORDERED.

Dated: New York, [*11] New York

August 3, 1994

JOHN F. KEENAN

United States District Judge

Northlake Mktg. & Supply v. Glaverbel S.A.

United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division

August 4, 1994, Decided ; August 8, 1994, Docketed

No. 92 C 2732

Reporter

861 F. Supp. 653 *; 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11017 ; 1994-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,767

NORTHLAKE MARKETING & SUPPLY, INC., Plaintiff, v. GLAVERBEL S.A., et al., Defendants.

Subsequent History: [1] Supplemental Opinion of September 29, 1994, Reported at: 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13990.

Core Terms

patent, antitrust claim, antitrust, infringement, ceramic, welding, relevant market, hearsay, repair, reasonable inference, unfair competition, Counts, summary judgment, market power, evidentiary, predicate, genuine, patent infringement, memorandum opinion, present evidence, Sherman Act, procurement, invalidity, nonmovant, steel

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN1[Entitlement as Matter of Law, Genuine Disputes

Fed. R. Civ. P. 56 principles impose on the movant the burden of establishing the lack of a genuine issue of material fact. For that purpose the court is not required to draw every conceivable inference from the record--only those inferences that are reasonable--in the light most favorable to the nonmovant.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN2[Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

When a defendant moves for summary judgment on the ground that the plaintiff lacks evidence of an essential element of his claim, the plaintiff is required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 56, if he wants to ward off the grant of the motion, to present evidence of evidentiary quality--either admissible documents or attested testimony, such as that found in depositions or in affidavits--demonstrating the existence of a genuine issue of material fact.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN3 [] Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

The non-movant in a motion for summary judgment may not rely upon mere allegations, but must present specific facts to show that a genuine issue of material fact exists. Not just any tendered material will suffice to meet that burden. Such proffered material must meet the strictures of the Federal Rules of Evidence so as to be admissible at trial. Where a nonmovant fails to present evidence that satisfies its burden in opposing the movant's Fed. R. Civ. P. 56 motion, the motion must be granted.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > Fraud

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

HN4 [] Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse, Fraud

Sherman Act liability may not be imposed merely for the fraudulent procurement of a patent. It must also be shown that the patent has been used after its issuance in an anticompetitive fashion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > Fraud

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

861 F. Supp. 653, *653A 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11017, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

HN5 Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse, Fraud

The mere possession of a patent does not establish presumption of market power in the antitrust sense.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Monopoly Power

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, violations must involve (1) a contract, combination or conspiracy; (2) a resultant unreasonable restraint of trade in the relevant market; and (3) an accompanying injury. In comparison, Sherman Act § 2 requires a showing of (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Monopoly Power

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, requires a showing of (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

861 F. Supp. 653, *653A994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11017, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8 Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

Crucial both to the rule of reason analysis and to assessing the existence of Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, monopoly power are the delineation of the relevant market and evidence of the defendant's power in that market. "Relevant market" is defined as being made up of commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes. Identification of the relevant market is crucial in evaluating an antitrust claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

HN9 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

A common misconception has been that a patent or copyright, a high market share, or a unique product that competitors are not able to offer suffices to demonstrate market power. While each of these three factors might help to give market power to a seller, it is also possible that a seller in those situations will have no market power: for example, a patent holder has no market power in any relevant sense if there are close substitutes for the patented product.

Counsel: For Plaintiff: ANTHONY S. DiVINCENZO, CAMPBELL & DiVINCENZO, CHICAGO, IL.

For Defendants: JEROLD I. SCHNEIDER of SPENCER, FRANK & SCHNEIDER, WASHINGTON, D.C. BLAKE L. HARROP of SONNENSCHEIN, NATH & ROSENTHAL, CHICAGO, IL.

Judges: Shadur

Opinion by: MILTON I. SHADUR

Opinion

[*655] MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

After two false starts, Northlake Marketing & Supply, Inc. ("Northlake") has filed its five-count Second Amended Complaint ("SAC") against Glaverbel S.A. ("Glaverbel"), Foseco, Inc. ("Foseco") and Fosbel, Inc. ("Fosbel") (the latter two are collectively termed "Foseco-Fosbel" for convenience).¹ Three counts seek judicial declarations only against Glaverbel and Fosbel as to United States Patent Nos. 4,792,468 ("'468"), 4,920,084 ("'084") and 4,489,022 ("'022"), all owned by Glaverbel and exclusively licensed to Fosbel: Count I requests a ruling that ¹ Only Foseco and Fosbel have been served with process. Glaverbel has not and hence is not subject to this Court's jurisdiction.

Northlake is not infringing Patents '468 and '084, while Counts II and III allege that all three patents (1) are invalid under 35 U.S.C. §§ 101, 102, 103 and 112 and \(2\) are unenforceable for having been fraudulently or inequitably obtained. Counts IV and V accuse all three defendants of having obtained and of seeking to enforce those allegedly invalid patents in violation of (1) the Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts (15 U.S.C §§ 1, 2 and 15) and [\[2\]](#) (2) the common law of unfair competition.²

In earlier litigation Glaverbel and Fosbel had sued Northlake and other parties in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Indiana, asserting two claims of patent infringement. On those claims Magistrate Judge Andrew Rodovich granted summary judgment in Northlake's favor, finding that Glaverbel and Fosbel had failed to meet their burden of establishing a genuine factual issue as to the existence of such infringement. Northlake had also responded with counterclaims asserting both the invalidity of Patent '022 (and another patent not at issue here-see [\[3\]](#) n.11) and violations of federal antitrust and state unfair competition law. After a bench trial Magistrate Judge Rodovich dismissed those counterclaims on March 31, 1992 on the ground that Northlake had failed to meet its burden of proof.

As a consequence of that last ruling this Court's December 9, 1992 memorandum opinion and order held that this is not the proper forum for Northlake to advance its claims based on Patent '022, so all such claims were stricken from the SAC. This Court's April 7, 1993 memorandum opinion and order summarized the effect of two other rulings that it had made:

In combination, this Court's oral ruling of December 17, 1992 and its brief February 26, 1993 memorandum opinion and order (the "Opinion") held that to the extent that Northlake's current antitrust and unfair competition claims arise out of any alleged conduct up to and including the date of Judge Rodovich's decision, those claims are barred against all three defendants on claim preclusion grounds.

Now before this Court is the Foseco-Fosbel Fed. R. Civ. P. \("Rule"\) 56 motion for summary judgment on the remaining temporal segment of Northlake's antitrust and unfair competition claims--that is, [\[4\]](#) any such claims covering the period from April 1, 1992 to the present.³ For the reasons set forth in this memorandum opinion and order, the Foseco-Fosbel motion is granted, those claims are dismissed with prejudice and Foseco is dismissed as a party to this action.

Summary Judgment Standards

HN1 Familiar Rule 56 principles impose on the movant the burden of establishing the lack of [\[*656\]](#) a genuine issue of material fact (Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322-23, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 \(1986\)). [\[5\]](#) For that purpose this Court is "not required to draw every conceivable inference from the record--only those inferences that are reasonable"--in the light most favorable to the nonmovant (Bank Leumi Le-Israel, B.M. v. Lee, 928 F.2d 232, 236 \(7th Cir. 1991\) and cases cited there).

But it is not the movant alone that bears a burden under Rule 56. In accordance with the teaching of Celotex, 477 U.S. at 322-23 and the plain command of Rule 56\(c\) and \(e\), a nonmovant plaintiff has the burden of coming forth with evidence in support of its case. Here is how Winskunas v. Birnbaum, 23 F.3d 1264, 1267 \(7th Cir. 1994\) has framed the issue:

² Although neither the SAC nor any of the submissions on the current motion suggest just which jurisdiction's law should supply the rules of decision in that last respect, this Court's disposition of Count V renders it unnecessary to address that choice of law question.

³ Neither side has filed the General Rule 12 statements that are required by this District Court to facilitate the resolution of Rule 56 motions, though each has submitted evidentiary materials together with its memoranda. All of this opinion's factual recitals are therefore gleaned from those memoranda (when properly supported by attached exhibits, deposition testimony or affidavits). This opinion refers to only one other submission: Northlake's January 18, 1994 Further Supplemental Response, which will be cited as "F. Supp. Mem.--."

HN2When as in the present case a defendant moves for summary judgment on the ground that the plaintiff lacks evidence of an essential element of his claim, the plaintiff is required by [Fed.R.Civ.P. 56, if he wants to ward off the grant of the motion, to present evidence of evidentiary quality--either admissible documents or attested testimony, such as that found in depositions or in affidavits--demonstrating the existence of a genuine [[6]] issue of material fact.

And Buscaglia v. United States, 25 F.3d 530, 534 \(7th Cir. 1994\) has paraphrased Rule 56\(e\) to convey the same message:

HN3[The non-movant may not rely upon mere allegations, but must present specific facts to show that a genuine issue of material fact exists.

Not just any tendered material will suffice to meet that burden. Such proffered material must meet the strictures of the Federal Rules of Evidence so as to be admissible at trial (Winskunas, 23 F.3d at 1267; Waldrige v. American Hoechst Corp., 24 F.3d 918, 921 n.2 \(7th Cir. 1994\)).⁴ Where a nonmovant fails to present evidence that satisfies its burden in opposing the movant's Rule 56 motion, the motion must be granted (Waldrige, 24 F.3d at 920-21).

[[7]] Parties

Northlake is a competitor of Foseco, Fosbel and Glaverbel in the United States market for the ceramic welding and repair of industrial ovens used principally by the steel, glass and copper industries (Foseco's Vice President of Administration Anthony Money ("Money") Dep. 11, 24; Northlake's President James Hamilton ("Hamilton") Aff. PP1,4). Foseco is a wholly-owned Delaware-incorporated great-grandchild subsidiary of Dutch company Foseco Holding BV (Money Dep. 4, 14). Fosbel is an Ohio corporation whose stock is held 51% by Foseco Holding BV and 49% by Glaverbel (Money Dep. 21).⁵ Of the nine seats on Fosbel's Board of Directors, Foseco controls five and Glaverbel controls the other four (Money Dep. 23).

Under the joint venture agreement pursuant [[8]] to which the participants formed Fosbel, Foseco manages Fosbel and supplies it with the powders used in ceramic welding, while Glaverbel supplies technical advice and has made Fosbel the exclusive licensee of its Patents '468 and '084 (Money Dep. 10-11; Fosbel's Director of Business Development Chuck Zvosec Dep. 28, 73; P. Supp. Mem. Ex. C at 2). Fosbel supplies the actual ceramic welding services to industrial customers (Money Dep. 24).

Lack of Evidence Supporting Northlake's Claims

For nearly 30 years (ever since the decision in Walker Process Equip., Inc. v. Food Mach. & Chem. Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 176-77, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247, 86 S. Ct. 347 \(1965\)) it [[657]] has been established that a suit for violation of the antitrust laws may be predicated on a defendant's attempted enforcement of a fraudulently procured patent (though since Walker v. FMC the Federal Circuit has supplanted the concept of "fraud on the Patent Office" with a term that has somewhat broader connotations--" inequitable conduct"--the basis for an antitrust claim remains that of actual fraud in the procurement; see, e.g., FMC Corp. v. Manitowoc Co., 835 F.2d 1411, 1417-18 \(Fed. Cir. 1987\) [[9]] and cases cited there). Northlake's SAC alleges just such conduct by Foseco and Fosbel, but that is not enough for

⁴ While affidavits are not ordinarily the proper form in which to admit evidence at trial, they are clearly sufficient to meet a nonmovant's burden under Rule 56\(e\) as long as they are "admissible in content, in the sense that a change in form but not in content, for example a substitution of oral testimony for a summary of that testimony in an affidavit, would make the evidence admissible at trial" (Winskunas, 23 F.3d at 1268).

⁵ To be more precise, Money Dep. 21 discloses only that "a Glaverbel Group Company" is the other shareholder. Because this Court has no jurisdiction over Glaverbel anyway, that other shareholder will simply be referred to as Glaverbel for ease of designation.

Rule 56 purposes. In response to Foseco-Fosbel's motion Northlake must present sufficient evidence to support the reasonable inference that Foseco or Fosbel or both acted or attempted to act in such a manner after March 31, 1992. Northlake runs aground on that requirement.

More specifically, Northlake invokes Walker v. FMC by alleging that defendants hindered its ability to secure ceramic welding work by telling prospective customers that Northlake was infringing Glaverbel's patents (remember that it is a predicate of Northlake's claim, which is being accepted as true solely for purposes of dealing with the current motion, that the patents were procured by inequitable conduct). To support that allegation Northlake cites to Hamilton's affidavit. What follows is a summary of what he says there.

In June 1992 Hamilton asked Inland Steel ("Inland") about the possibility of Northlake's replacing Fosbel in performing such work on Inland's coking ovens (Hamilton Aff. P4). On August 5, 1992 Northlake performed a trial repair to Inland's satisfaction, and Northlake was [10] then invited to submit a price for such repair work and was also advised that Fosbel would be told of Northlake's successful trial and would be "given the opportunity to submit a new price in response to Northlake's quotation" (Hamilton Aff. PP5,6). During an October 1992 meeting with Inland supervisor Willie Johnson ("Johnson") Hamilton was told that Northlake had submitted a lower bid than Fosbel but that Fosbel's Vice President of Sales Ernie Goffe ("Goffe") and salesman Jerry Verdi ("Verdi") had told Johnson that Fosbel was going to sue Northlake for patent infringement, a warning that Johnson had reported to his supervisor Alan Ellis (Hamilton Aff. PP9-10). Johnson suggested that Northlake should present evidence to Inland of its "legal rights" to use the ceramic welding process, and it then submitted a copy of Magistrate Judge Rodovich's grant of summary judgment in its favor in the Indiana litigation (Hamilton Aff. PP11-12). Northlake ultimately secured Inland's business and began doing ceramic repair work for it on January 25, 1993 (Hamilton Aff. P13).

Northlake's problem is that the key pieces of evidence in that account--the claimed statements by Fosbel employees Goffe and [11] Verdi that interfered with Northlake's effort to get business from Inland--face problems posed by the hearsay rule and other rules of evidence. Although Johnson's testimony as to the making of such statements would clearly have been admissible as nonhearsay under Fed. R. Evid. ("Rule" ⁶) 801(d)(2)(D), the asserted statements were not heard directly by Hamilton but were rather relayed to him by Johnson. If the story of what Johnson told Hamilton were being offered for the truth of the matter asserted (that is, to prove that Goffe and Verdi had really said what Johnson reported to Hamilton), those purported Goffe-Verdi statements would be inadmissible hearsay (Rule 801(c) and 802). With those statements thus out of the case for that purpose, this Court would have been tendered no evidence that Fosbel or Foseco voiced any warnings or threats of suits for infringement of Glaverbel's patents (Wigod v. Chicago Mercantile Exch., 981 F.2d 1510, 1518-19 (7th Cir. 1992) (stating the rule in connection with a similar Rule 56 motion brought against antitrust claims); accord, Winskunas, 23 F.3d at 1268; Randle v. LaSalle Telecommunications, Inc., 876 F.2d 563, 570 [*658] n.4 (7th Cir. 1989) [12] and cases and treatises cited there).

But suppose that Hamilton's affidavit testimony as to what Johnson told him were somehow independently admissible when viewed in a clearly nonhearsay sense--that is, simply as evidence of the fact and of the content of Johnson's statement, rather than for its truth. In that event the Hamilton testimony itself could be admissible, but not to serve Northlake's ultimate goal of establishing the truth of Johnson's account of the Fosbel threats (the impermissible hearsay purpose described in the last paragraph). Would the result be any different in the special environment of a summary judgment motion, remembering that Northlake's Rule 56 task is not to prove the asserted fact, but only to create a reasonable inference [13] of its existence?

Factfinders are regularly instructed, as provided in Rule 105, as to the limited use of evidence that is admissible only for one purpose, rather than unconditionally (see, e.g., Moylan v. Meadow Club, Inc., 979 F.2d 1246, 1247-48, 1250 (7th Cir. 1992); Thronson v. Meisels, 800 F.2d 136, 143 (7th Cir. 1986)). And just as the constraints of the hearsay rule prevent Hamilton's testimony from being employed to prove that Johnson was truthful in attributing the claimed statements to Goffe and Verdi, so too those constraints forbid the use of that same testimony to create an inference to the same effect (see generally 1 Jack Weinstein & Margaret Berger, Weinstein's Evidence P10503 (1993); G. Michael Fenner, Law Professor Reveals Shocking Truth About Hearsay, 62 Mo. -K.C. L. Rev. 1, 58-62 (1993))--even as logical as such an inference might be if the Johnson statement were permitted to be taken as gospel.⁷ Again Northlake would strike out, even on the most favorable basis on which Hamilton's statement could arguably be considered.

⁶ No confusion should be engendered by this opinion's dual use of the term "Rule" to denote both the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (all of which bear single-digit or two-digit numbers) and the Federal Rules of Evidence (all of which bear three-digit numbers).

[14] Indeed, even if that had not been the case Northlake could not survive the present summary judgment motion on the basis of the evidence now under consideration. It will be remembered that the Rule 56 standard coincides with that under Rule 50(a), which asks whether "there is no legally sufficient evidentiary basis for a reasonable jury to have found for [Northlake] with respect to that issue"--that is the teaching of Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 250-52, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986). If a jury were to find on the sole strength of Hamilton's affidavit that the asserted Goffe-Verdi statements had been made to Johnson, the purposes that underlie the hearsay rule would be seriously subverted: Look at the impossible task that faces a cross-examiner who is required to challenge the truth of such a twice-removed alleged statement--to pierce two levels of absent witnesses. That is the stuff of which a Rule 403 exclusion is fashioned: Attenuated probative force of the purported underlying statement, heavily overbalanced by unfair prejudice to the party opposing admissibility. So even if such a hypothetical [15] (though analytically unsound) premise were to be adopted, this Court would perforce still exclude the testimony under discussion.

That then leads to consideration of the next proposed item of evidence. Hamilton also says that Northlake has pursued other welding work but with very limited success: Other than Inland it has obtained work only from Geneva Steel, and that not until February 1993 (Hamilton Aff. P17). Hamilton has attempted to solicit work from other companies, including six for whom Northlake had done such work before the Indiana litigation, but in each case the prospect raised the possibility of Northlake's continued infringement of Glaverbel's patents and the consequential threat of lawsuits by Fosbel and Glaverbel (Hamilton Aff. PP16, 18). Although Hamilton does not say so expressly, he clearly seeks to imply that Northlake's limited success in securing work stems from actions by Fosbel or Foseco or both.

In those respects Northlake does not even reach a level that would bar the evidence in hearsay terms. This time it does not offer even hearsay evidence, by way of Hamilton's [*659] affidavit or otherwise, that the various companies learned of Northlake's alleged patent problems [16] from Foseco or Fosbel (or even from Glaverbel for that matter). Given that evidentiary void, Northlake fails to create a reasonable (that is, a fact-based) inference that it was actually Fosbel's or Foseco's conduct that had created the concerns voiced by those companies--the necessary predicate for Northlake's claim that Fosbel or Foseco has threatened to enforce the patents in a manner violating federal antitrust and state unfair competition laws. It is Northlake's burden to present evidence sufficient to create a genuine issue, and not for this Court to indulge pure speculation as to the requisite causal connection. Total silence of the evidentiary record on that crucial issue is necessarily fatal to Northlake under Rule 56(e). Thus that second part of Hamilton's affidavit cannot create a reasonable inference of improper conduct by either Fosbel or Foseco during the relevant time frame.

Still another piece of evidence to which Northlake refers is this April 15, 1992 letter sent to Northlake's lawyers by Glaverbel's Washington, D.C. counsel (P. Supp. Mem. Ex. P):

As you know, this office represents Glaverbel, S.A. in patent matters. We wish to "formally" bring the following [17] to your attention.

The use in the United States of ceramic welding powder by Exo-Ram⁸ and/or Northlake of the type which was seized by Court Order in Belgium and tested by an independent laboratory designated by a Court-appointed expert, for refractory repair, infringes at least claim 1 of U.S. Patent No. 4,792,468. Furthermore, the powder mixture per se infringes at least claim 1 of U.S. Patent No. 4,920,084. Duplicate copies of each patent are enclosed by fax and mail. As you know, the corresponding Belgian patent has been asserted against your clients in the litigation in Belgium.

⁷ After all, the other alternative would seem to be that Johnson had fabricated the making of the Goffe-Verdi statements--and with what motive, to what end?

⁸ Exo-Ram is "an affiliate of Northlake" (P. Supp. Mem. 5).

The first tentative corroboration we had from Northlake that the same type of powder was actually used in the United States was the November 22nd, 1991 Declaration of Samuel E. May. This information was, of course, confirmed by Mr. May's testimony in the recent case of Glaverbel and Fosbel v. Northlake et al.

In Germany, the challenges to validity of the corresponding German patent by Northlake Marketing & Supply, Inc. and by Lichtenberg Feuerfest GmbH have been rejected by the German Patent Office, and neither has appealed this determination.

Your "invalidity defense" that the "modified *18" drawing of the '468 patent" which showed a refractory particle distribution from U.S. Patent No. 3,684,560, was also the distribution curve of the oxidizable particles (of '560) has been established as mathematically impossible at the deposition of Mr. Mottet which Mr. Brezina took in August 1991.

If you have any other defenses to validity and/or infringement, we invite you to share them with us promptly. Absent very strong, credible, non-cumulative evidence supporting invalidity and/or non-infringement received in this office by Friday, April 24th, 1992, we have been authorized to proceed with a patent infringement lawsuit against your clients based upon infringement of U.S. Patent Nos. 4,792,468 and 4,920,084.⁹

As against Glaverbel that letter would unquestionably be admissible, and it is just as unquestionably evidence of Glaverbel's conduct during the relevant time period.

*19 But the difficulty here is that Northlake seeks to use the letter as evidence of improper conduct by Foseco or Fosbel, and not against the defense chair that is unoccupied by Glaverbel. It was after all Glaverbel's counsel who wrote the letter and who put Northlake on notice of a threatened patent infringement suit by Glaverbel itself. Nothing in the letter suggests any conduct by Foseco or Fosbel: Neither is mentioned in the letter, and nothing in the letter suggests 660 that either is joining in Glaverbel's indicated enforcement activity.

To rely on that item of evidence in opposition to the Foseco-Fosbel Rule 56 motion, Northlake must present some evidence linking one or both of them to Glaverbel by way of "contract, conspiracy or combination" so that it may reasonably be inferred that the content of the letter--assuming only for the moment that it states a sufficient predicate for an antitrust claim--is ascribable to one or both of them (Greater Rockford Energy & Technology Corp. v. Shell Oil Co., 998 F.2d 391, 397 (7th Cir. 1993)). It is not enough that Fosbel as Glaverbel's licensee would derive benefit from the latter's successful enforcement of *20 the '468 and '084 Patents against Northlake.

One added factor bears mention. By definition any evidence against Fosbel or Foseco or both must reflect its or their post-March 31, 1992 conduct, because only that conduct is now at issue in this case. Even if some inference could be drawn that either or both of them was or were involved in triggering Glaverbel's letter (again a matter of sheer speculation), nothing has been offered to support an inference that such hypothetical conduct antedated April 1, 1992 rather than taking place during the ensuing two weeks.

Hence this additional proposed item of evidence is also of no help to Northlake in creating any reasonable inference that Foseco or Fosbel or both engaged in conduct after March 31, 1992 that is violative either of federal antitrust law (see, e.g., Greater Rockford, 998 F.2d at 397; Wigod, 981 F.2d at 1519; Reserve Supply Corp. v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp., 971 F.2d 37, 48-55 (7th Cir. 1992)) or of the common law of unfair competition.

That leaves, as the final gossamer strand in Northlake's effort to weave an evidentiary web, its *21 reference to this Glaverbel "Press Release" (P. Supp. Mem. Ex. S):

The High Court of Justice in London recently gave a decision in favor of Glaverbel in the action for infringement of its ceramic welding process brought, in June or 1987, against the British Coal Corporation (BCC) and other companies of that group. The compensation which will have to be paid by BCC is likely to amount to several millions of sterling pounds; the definitive amount, however, must still be determined by the court. We have not yet been advised if BCC will file an appeal.

⁹ [Footnote by this Court] As of the parties' last submission in this case (on March 23, 1994) no such suit had been filed.

The ceramic welding process is a novel process developed by Glaverbel for the hot repair of industrial furnaces, mainly in the glass, coke, steel and copper metallurgy fields. It consists of repairs to the refractory linings of these furnaces by means of physicochemical reactions between oxidizing gases, finely divided metals and refractory particles at temperatures in excess of 2000degree C.

This technique, considered revolutionary at the time of its invention, remains today the process with the highest performance. It is protected throughout the world by patents and commercialized by Fosbel, a joint venture established in 1981 [22] between the Belgian Glass Group, Glaverbel and the British Group, Foseco. Fosbel has a worldwide commercial network at its disposal, with companies established in Europe, Japan, the United States and Brazil.

Although the version of the Press Release tendered to this Court is undated, the final Foseco-Fosbel reply memorandum acknowledges that it was issued after March 31, 1992. Moreover, Hamilton asserts without contradiction that he received the Press Release in the mail from Fosbel and also that it was "published in several trade publications" (Hamilton Aff. PP14-15). At last, then, Northlake has presented some evidence of conduct that both (1) occurred after the watershed date and (2) is at least linked to one of the defendants over whom this Court has jurisdiction.

That however is not enough. To advance its antitrust claims Northlake must also create at least a reasonable inference of bad faith enforcement of Patents '084 and '468 against it.¹⁰ But when the Press [*661] Release is viewed alone--as it must be because it is really Northlake's only evidence in opposition to the current Rule 56 motion--it is unreasonable to construe the document as supporting any such inference.

[23] In principal part the Press Release is a forthright factual report of the result of Glaverbel's U.K. litigation, coupled with a general description of Glaverbel's ceramic welding process. Its only assertion that is even arguably relevant to this case is that Glaverbel's process is also covered by other patents elsewhere (inferentially including the United States) and is commercialized by Fosbel. But those mere avowals of fact cannot reasonably be construed as being the type of action that rises to the level of enforcement (or threatened enforcement) of a patent, which is an essential predicate of Northlake's antitrust claims.

Case law in this area (involving claims of patent misuse) consistently rest on actual lawsuits charging infringement of the tainted patents (see FMC Corp., 835 F.2d at 1412, 1417-18; Argus Chem. Corp. v. Fibre Glass-Evercoat Co., 812 F.2d 1381, 1381, 1384-85 (Fed. Cir. 1987); Loctite Corp. v. Ultraseal Ltd., 781 F.2d 861, 876-77 (Fed. Cir. 1985); Brunswick, 752 F.2d at 265-66, 268; Handgards, Inc. v. Ethicon, Inc., 601 F.2d 986, 993 (9th Cir. 1979)). [24] That is hardly surprising, for such claims (as was also true in the seminal Walker v. FMC litigation) are most typically brought as counterclaims to patent infringement suits (Brunswick, 752 F.2d at 265).

It may be possible, though this Court is aware of no case that has expressly so held, that some conduct short of instituting a suit (or directly threatening such a suit) could constitute the requisite enforcement action. But whatever that hypothetical lesser quantum of conduct might be, it surely would have to be more than the Delphic reference to the existence of a patent or patents that Northlake offers here. If it were otherwise, any such reference--however innocuous--could trigger exposure to an antitrust claim. Any such rule would be absurd, for common sense teaches that some more assertive conduct is required before a patent holder can be said, within the meaning of the antitrust laws, to be enforcing its patent.

It is also worth noting that the Press Release does not refer to any particular United States patent. At the time that the Press Release was issued and sent to Hamilton, Glaverbel had licensed to Fosbel not only the patents that [25] are the subject of this litigation-- '468 and '084--but also '022, the validity of which is not open to challenge here.¹¹ That ambiguity only serves further to underscore the unreasonableness of the inference that Northlake wishes to call into play here: when the subject of an assertion is itself unclear, it is hard to ascribe any specific assertion to the speaker.¹²

¹⁰ Northlake's Supp. Mem. 2 suggests that Sherman Act HN4 liability may be imposed merely for the fraudulent procurement of a patent. That is simply wrong--it must also be shown that the patent has been used after its issuance in an anticompetitive fashion (Brunswick Corp. v. Riegel Textile Corp., 752 F.2d 261, 266 (7th Cir. 1984)).

[26] And so this final strand, like the others already discussed, cannot support the weight that Northlake wishes it to bear. It has produced no admissible evidence that reasonably supports the inference of conduct that is a sufficient predicate for an antitrust claim.

Northlake's Substantive Claims

What has been said to this point suffices to dispatch Northlake's Counts IV and V. But this opinion should not close without a few words about the lack of any showing of at [*662] least one essential element of any such antitrust claims as those asserted in Count IV.

This Court of course realizes that Northlake has been responding to the Fosbel-Foseco motion and that the focus of that motion has been on the insufficiency of the evidence already discussed. But the fact remains that the teaching of Celotex Corp., 477 U.S. 317, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 is that the Rule 56 movant need not "support its motion with affidavits or other materials negating the opponent's claim." As plaintiff, it is Northlake that bears the burden of proof of its antitrust claims in the summary judgment context, just as it would at trial (id. at 324-25). [27]

It might therefore have been expected that Northlake would at least have taken a pass at addressing, in the form of admissible evidence, the prima facie elements of its antitrust claim. After all, Rule 56(e) could not make it more plain that the nonmovant plaintiff cannot rest on its pleadings, just as it could not at trial. Having said that, however, this Court would be reluctant to rest its own ruling here on a ground that Northlake might argue that it had not understood it was obligated to meet (even though it should have had such an understanding). What follows, then, is a brief exposition of another fundamental gap in Northlake's support for its antitrust claims--but as an independent deficiency on Northlake's part, unnecessary to the already-pronounced defeat of those claims.

As already stated, the purported basis for Northlake's Sherman Act claims is the type of conduct proscribed by Walker v. FMC: the alleged fraudulent procurement and the later maintenance and enforcement of patents (Abbott Lab. v. Brennan, 952 F.2d 1346, 1354 (Fed. Cir. 1991); Brunswick, 752 F.2d at 264-66). But HN5 [↑] the mere possession of a "patent [28] does not establish presumption of market power in the antitrust sense" (Abbott Lab. 952 F.2d at 1354; accord, American Hoist & Derrick Co. v. Sowa & Sons, Inc., 725 F.2d 1350, 1367 (Fed. Cir. 1984)). So even if Northlake had established a reasonable inference of such conduct by Foseco or Fosbel or both after March 31, 1992, Northlake would still have to show by the same standard that "the other elements necessary to a [Sherman Act] § 2 case are present" (Walker v. FMC, 382 U.S. at 174). Although far less common, Sherman Act § 1 cases can also be based on the fraudulent procurement and bad faith enforcement of patents (see, e.g., United States v. Singer Mfg. Co., 374 U.S. 174, 200, 10 L. Ed. 2d 823, 83 S. Ct. 1773 (1963) (White, J., concurring)), in which event the antitrust elements required by that section must be similarly shown.

¹¹ Northlake and Foseco-Fosbel agree that the British patent referred to in the Press Release corresponds to Glaverbel's United States Patent No. 3,684,560--a patent that had expired as of March 31, 1992. That being so, the only United States patents to which the Press Release could have referred were one or more of Patents '468, '084 and '022.

¹² Northlake's Supp. Mem. 20 argues that because it "prevailed on Glaverbel's infringement claims under the '022 patent" in the Indiana litigation, the Press Release can logically be referring only to Patents '468 and '084. That contention is seriously misleading. In that prior litigation Magistrate Judge Rodovich did grant summary judgment to Northlake on Glaverbel's claim of patent infringement, but after a trial on the merits he held that Patent '022 was valid. Thus the statement in the Press Release that Glaverbel's ceramic welding process "is protected throughout the world by patents and commercialized by Fosbel" cannot by any stretch of the imagination be labeled a bad faith assertion. At least as to Patent '022, Glaverbel held and holds a patent that enjoys a judicial finding of validity.

Sherman Act § 1 HN6¹³ violations must involve (Denny's Marina, Inc. v. Renfro Productions, Inc., 8 F.3d 1217, 1220 \(7th Cir. 1993\)):

(1) a contract, [\[29\]](#) combination or conspiracy; (2) a resultant unreasonable restraint of trade in the relevant market; and (3) an accompanying injury.

In comparison, Sherman Act § 2 HN7¹⁴ requires a showing of (United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 \(1966\)):

(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.

Those respective requirements of "unreasonable restraint of trade" and "monopoly power"¹³ share the essential ingredient of demonstrating [\[*663\]](#) an adverse effect on competition in the "relevant market."

[\[30\]](#) As for Northlake's Section 1 claim, the determination of that competitive impact must be undertaken using the Rule of Reason, for Northlake has offered no evidence that the patents were used in a "manifestly anticompetitive" manner so as to justify the conclusion that defendants' actions are per se Sherman Act violations (Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 49-50, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 \(1977\)). And what are HN8¹⁵ crucial both to the Rule of Reason analysis and to assessing the existence of Section 2 "monopoly power" are the delineation of the relevant market (Fishman v. Estate of Wirtz, 807 F.2d 520, 531-32 \(7th Cir. 1986\)) and evidence of the defendant's power in that market (Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. at 571; Wilk v. American Medical Ass'n, 895 F.2d 352, 359 \(7th Cir. 1990\)). "Relevant market" is defined as being made up of "commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes" (du Pont, 351 U.S. at 395). [\[31\]](#) Identification of the relevant market is crucial in evaluating an antitrust claim because, as Justice O'Connor observed in her concurrence to Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 37 n.7, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 \(1984\):

HN9¹⁶ A common misconception has been that a patent or copyright, a high market share, or a unique product that competitors are not able to offer suffices to demonstrate market power. While each of these three factors might help to give market power to a seller, it is also possible that a seller in those situations will have no market power: for example, a patent holder has no market power in any relevant sense if there are close substitutes for the patented product.

Here Northlake has offered no evidence whatever as to the relevant market. Without data on such issues (for example) as (1) the relevant customer base (whether just coke ovens used by steel companies or whether also encompassing, for example, industrial ovens utilized in other industries¹⁷) or (2) even more critically, whether the relevant market is limited to the type of ceramic welding process offered by Fosbel and [\[32\]](#) Northlake (rather than other methods of repair being "reasonably interchangeable" with that process), it is impossible to draw any reasoned inference as to the presence or absence of Fosbel's market power. That problem is further compounded ¹³ Sherman Act § 1's "restraint of trade" element is assessed in terms of "the competitive significance" of defendant's conduct (National Soc'y of Professional Eng'rs v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 692, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637, 98 S. Ct. 1355 \(1978\); see also Wisconsin Music Network, Inc. v. Muzak Ltd. Partnership, 5 F.3d 218, 221-22 \(7th Cir. 1993\); Banks v. NCAA, 977 F.2d 1081, 1087-88 \(7th Cir. 1992\), quoting Car Carriers, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 745 F.2d 1101, 1107-08 \(7th Cir. 1984\)). Sherman Act § 2 also applies a competition-based definition (United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 391, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 \(1956\)):

Monopoly power is the power to control prices or exclude competition.

Accord, such cases as American Academic Suppliers, Inc. v. Beckley-Cardy, Inc., 922 F.2d 1317, 1319 \(7th Cir. 1991\); Indiana Grocery, Inc. v. Super Valu Stores, Inc., 864 F.2d 1409, 1414 \(7th Cir. 1989\).

¹⁴ Fosbel says that it services ovens used by the steel, glass and copper industries, while Northlake's filings mention only its repair work of coke ovens used by the steel industry.

by the total lack of information as to the presence or absence of other competitors in the marketplace. Perhaps Northlake and Fosbel are the only suppliers in the relevant market (whatever it may be), but it is entirely possible that they are only two entrants in a market filled with numerous other competitors. And uncertainty is Northlake's enemy. Silence on that issue (as on the several other issues) cuts against Northlake, as the plaintiff having the burden of proving (or in this instance, of creating reasonable inferences in support of) its claim.

Northlake's failure to present evidence as to [\[33\]](#) the relevant market, which is crucial element of its antitrust claim would independently justify the granting of summary judgment in Foseco-Fosbel's favor (American Hoist, 725 F.2d at 1366; cf. Abbott Lab. 952 F.2d at 1354-55 (a like holding in the Rule 12(b)(6) dismissal context)). As already stated, though, this Court has no wish to court still another claim of wounded surprise (however unjustified) on Northlake's part. This opinion will rest on Northlake's utter failure of proof in evidentiary terms, which has occupied the principal part of the discussion.¹⁵

[34] [*664] Conclusion

As to Northlake's Count IV antitrust claim, it has not met its Rule 56 burden of creating a genuine issue of material fact. Because Northlake's Count V common law unfair competition claim is based on the same alleged conduct by Foseco or Fosbel or both, each of them is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law on both counts. Those counts are therefore dismissed with prejudice.

No claim against Foseco now remains in this action, and it is hence dismissed entirely as a defendant. In accordance with National Metalcrafters v. McNeil, 784 F.2d 817, 821 \(7th Cir. 1986\) this Court expressly determines under Rule 54(b) that there is no just reason for delay and expressly directs the entry of final judgment in favor of Foseco.

As to Fosbel, however, Northlake's Counts I through III remain alive. Accordingly this Court sets a status hearing for 8:45 a.m. August 18, 1994, at which time those remaining parties will be expected to discuss the necessary future proceedings in the case.

Milton I. Shadur

Senior United States District Judge

Date: August 4, 1994

End of Document

¹⁵ This may be somewhat more charitable than Northlake deserves. Celotex, 477 U.S. at 325 teaches that:

the burden on the moving party under [Rule 56\(c\)] may be discharged by "showing"--that is, pointing out to the district court--that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case.

And Foseco-Fosbel did just that when they said this in their May 26, 1993 memorandum opposing Northlake's motion to vacate this Court's earlier grant of summary judgment in favor of Foseco-Fosbel:

We are aware of no authority which allows Northlake, in response to summary judgment, to selectively avoid certain issues of proof. For example, there is no basis to avoid proof of the relevant market in an antitrust suit.

When this Court granted that motion to vacate, Northlake had clearly and specifically been placed on notice of its burden to prove the relevant market as part of its antitrust claim. It should really make no difference that Foseco-Fosbel did not advert to the issue on the current go-round, for the burden on Northlake never changed--and it was never met. All the same, this Court does not (though it well might) rest this opinion on that failure by Northlake.

Valley Disposal v. Central Vt. Solid Waste Management Dist.

United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit

February 14, 1994, Argued ; August 5, 1994, Decided

Docket No. 93-7818

Reporter

31 F.3d 89 *; 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 20683 ; 1994-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,680

VALLEY DISPOSAL, INC., PALISADES LANDFILL AND RECYCLING CORPORATION; ROBERT C. DOWDELL, JR., Plaintiffs-Appellants, v. CENTRAL VERMONT SOLID WASTE MANAGEMENT DISTRICT; C.V. LANDFILL, INC., Defendants-Appellees.

Prior History: [\[1\]](#) Appeal from the judgment of the United States District Court for the District of Vermont (Franklin S. Billings, Jr., Judge).

Core Terms

Landfill, solid waste, Disposal, district court, Plaintiffs', ordinance, interstate commerce, Counts, Recycling, lined, antitrust claim, dormant, flow control, unlined, collateral estoppel, state court, preclusion, motion to dismiss, proceedings, regulations, Sherman Act, designated, municipal, facilities, res judicata, summary judgment, allegations, monopolize, antitrust, commerce

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN1 [\[down arrow\]](#) Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The appellate court reviews de novo the lower court's granting of a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

31 F.3d 89, *89L994 U.S. App. LEXIS 20683, 1

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Res Judicata

HN2 [down arrow] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

The appellate court reviews de novo the district court's ruling on summary judgment that claims are barred by res judicata and collateral estoppel.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

HN3 [down arrow] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The court reviews the grant of a motion for summary judgment de novo, construing all facts in favor of the nonmoving parties.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Jurisdiction

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4 [down arrow] Sherman Act, Jurisdiction

There are two ways to establish the interstate commerce component of jurisdiction under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §1. First, a plaintiff may allege and prove that defendant's conduct is "within" the stream of interstate commerce. Alternatively, plaintiff may allege and prove that defendant's conduct, although entirely local or confined to one state, nonetheless "affects" interstate commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Transportation Law > ... > Federal Powers > Powers of Congress > Substantial Relations

HN5 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A plaintiff must allege sufficient facts concerning the alleged antitrust violation and its likely effect on interstate commerce to support an inference that the defendants' activities infected by illegality either have had or can reasonably be expected to have a substantial effect on commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Transportation Law > ... > Federal Powers > Powers of Congress > Substantial Relations

HN6 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Mere bald assertions that activities restrain interstate commerce generally, along with references to statutory language, are not substitutes for concrete allegations from which a substantial effect on interstate commerce can be inferred.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > Constitutional Limits

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Full Faith & Credit > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Full Faith & Credit > Full Faith & Credit Statutes

HN7 [down] In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction, Constitutional Limits

The preclusive effect of a state court judgment in a subsequent federal lawsuit generally is determined by the full faith and credit statute, which provides that state judicial proceedings shall have the same full faith and credit in every court within the United States as they have by law or usage in the courts of such state from which they are taken. 28 U.S.C.S. § 1738.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > Constitutional Limits

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Res Judicata

HN8 [down] In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction, Constitutional Limits

Vermont's preclusion law does not foreclose matters that another court lacked jurisdiction to entertain.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > Constitutional Limits

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Full Faith & Credit > General Overview

HN9 [down] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

Issues actually litigated in a state-court proceeding are entitled to the same preclusive effect in a subsequent 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983 suit as they enjoy in the courts of the state where the judgment was rendered.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

31 F.3d 89, *89L994 U.S. App. LEXIS 20683, 1

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

HN10 [↴] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

Collateral estoppel should be found only when the following criteria are met: (1) preclusion is asserted against one who was a party or in privity with a party in the earlier action; (2) the issue was resolved by a final judgment on the merits; (3) the issue is the same as the one raised in the later action; (4) there was a full and fair opportunity to litigate the issue in the earlier action; and (5) applying preclusion in the later action is fair.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

HN11 [↴] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

The court must balance its desire not to deprive a litigant of an adequate day in court against a desire to prevent repetitious litigation of what is essentially the same dispute.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > Pretrial Matters > General Overview

HN12 [↴] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

In deciding whether essentially the same dispute is involved in earlier and later proceedings, several factors exist: (1) there is a substantial overlap in the evidence and argument between the two proceedings; (2) the same rule of law is involved in both proceedings; (3) the pretrial preparation and discovery in the first proceeding cover the issues in the second proceeding; and (4) the claims involved in the two proceedings are closely related.

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > Dormant Commerce Clause

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Federal Powers

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Commerce Clause > Interstate Commerce > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Commerce Clause > Interstate Commerce > Prohibition of Commerce

Governments > Federal Government > US Congress

HN13 [↴] Commerce Clause, Dormant Commerce Clause

The dormant Commerce Clause is a non-textual offshoot of the Commerce Clause, which ascribes to Congress the power to regulate Commerce among the several States. U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 3. Ascription of this power to Congress limits, by negative implication, the power of the states to interfere with interstate commerce.

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Balancing Tests

HN14 [] Congressional Duties & Powers, Commerce Clause

Where the statute regulates evenhandedly to effectuate a legitimate local public interest, and its effects on interstate commerce are only incidental, it will be upheld unless the burden imposed on such commerce is clearly excessive in relation to the putative local benefits. If a legitimate local purpose is found, then the question becomes one of degree. The extent of the burden that will be tolerated will depend on the nature of the local interest involved and on whether it could be promoted as well with a lesser impact on interstate activities.

Business & Corporate Law > Corporations > Corporate Finance > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Corporations > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Governance > Shareholders > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholder Duties & Liabilities > Piercing the Corporate Veil > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Piercing the Corporate Veil > Alter Ego > Inadequate Capitalization

HN15 [] Corporations, Corporate Finance

To determine whether the separate existence of the corporation should be disregarded, courts examine a number of factors, including: (1) whether the shareholder sought to be charged owns all or most of the stock of the corporation; (2) whether the shareholder has subscribed to all of the capital stock of the corporation or otherwise caused its incorporation; (3) whether the corporation has grossly inadequate capital; (4) whether the shareholder uses the property of the corporation as his own; (5) whether the directors or executives of the corporation act independently in the interest of the corporation or simply take their orders from the shareholder in the latter's interest; and (6) whether the formal legal requirements of the corporation are observed.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Contracts Law > Breach > Breach of Contract Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

HN16 [] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

The traditional test for privity is whether the parties have really and substantially the same interest in the property in issue.

Environmental Law > Solid Wastes > Disposal Planning

Environmental Law > Solid Wastes > Disposal Standards

HN17 [blue icon] Solid Wastes, Disposal Planning

Municipalities are responsible for the management and regulation of the storage and collection of solid wastes within their jurisdiction in conformance with the state solid waste management plan authorized under chapter 159 of Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 10, § 6601\(5\).

Environmental Law > Solid Wastes > Disposal Standards

HN18 [blue icon] Solid Wastes, Disposal Standards

See Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 10, § 6605a\(c\)\(d\) (Supp. 1992).

Environmental Law > Solid Wastes > Disposal Standards

HN19 [blue icon] Solid Wastes, Disposal Standards

See Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 10, § 6605e\(b\)\(1\) (Supp. 1992).

Environmental Law > Solid Wastes > Disposal Standards

HN20 [blue icon] Solid Wastes, Disposal Standards

See Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 10, § 6601\(5\) (Supp. 1992).

Counsel: JOHN L. FRANCO, McNeil & Murray, Burlington, Vermont, for plaintiffs-appellants.

MICHAEL B. ROSENBERG, Miller, Eggleston & Rosenberg, Burlington, Vermont, for defendant-appellee C.V. Landfill, Inc.

GLENN C. HOWLAND, JR., McKee, Guiliani & Cleveland, Montpelier, Vermont, for defendant-appellee Central Vermont Solid Waste Management Dis.

Judges: Before: Mahoney and Walker, Circuit Judges, and Campbell, * Senior Circuit Judge.

Opinion by: CAMPBELL

Opinion

[*90] CAMPBELL, Senior Circuit Judge:

In this appeal we review the district court's rulings (1) granting one defendant's motion to dismiss certain counts in the complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted and for lack of subject matter jurisdiction, and (2) holding that all claims are barred by the doctrines of res judicata and collateral estoppel.

* The Honorable Levin H. Campbell of the United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit, sitting by designation.

BACKGROUND

Plaintiffs-appellants are Valley Disposal, Inc., a solid waste hauler, Palisades Landfill and Recycling Corporation ("Palisades [2] Landfill"), operator of a lined landfill in Moretown, Vermont, and Robert C. Dowdell, Jr., president of Valley Disposal and Palisades Landfill. Dowdell and his wife are the sole shareholders and directors of Valley Disposal and Palisades Landfill. Dowdell is also the president, sole director, and sole shareholder of the now defunct Palisades Recycling Corporation, Inc. ("Palisades Recycling") -- operator of an unlined landfill in Moretown, Vermont -- which is not a party.

Defendants-appellees are Central Vermont Solid Waste Management District (the "District"), a Vermont union municipal district created by the Vermont General Assembly pursuant to Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 24, §§ 4861-4868 (1975), and C.V. Landfill, Inc., owner and operator of an unlined landfill in East Montpelier, Vermont.

In the spring of 1992, the District requested quotations from and negotiated Interim Disposal Agreements with both Palisades Recycling and C.V. Landfill for solid waste disposal for municipalities within the District. Although Palisades Recycling refused to enter into the District's proposed Interim Disposal Agreement, C.V. Landfill agreed, on June 1, 1992, to provide landfill services commencing [3] July 1, 1992. The contract's terms provided, inter alia, that the District, "immediately upon the execution of these presents, . . . shall proceed to enact a District-wide solid waste flow control ordinance" that would, at a minimum, "contain solid waste hauler licensing and enforcement provisions, as well as a mechanism for designating [C.V. Landfill's] facilities as an authorized solid waste disposal site." On June 3, 1992, the District adopted the "Flow Control Ordinance" referred to in the Interim Disposal Agreement. The ordinance (1) regulated the collection, transportation, recycling, resource recovery, and disposal of solid waste within the District, (2) required licenses for the transportation of solid waste within the District, (3) directed the delivery of all solid waste generated within the District to facilities described in the ordinance, (4) prohibited the unlawful disposal of solid waste, and (5) provided for enforcement and penalties. The Flow Control Ordinance also established a District Regulatory Board, which, on July 29, 1992, adopted "Rules and Regulations Pertaining to the Collection, Transport and Disposal [*91] of Solid Waste Pursuant to the Waste Flow Control [4] Ordinance."

Plaintiffs have alleged in their district court complaint that the Interim Disposal Agreement, the Flow Control Ordinance, and the rules and regulations adopted thereunder, operating in concert, provide C.V. Landfill with the exclusive right to provide solid waste facility services to municipalities located within the District, and prohibit haulers from exporting any and all solid waste generated within the District to any facility located outside of the District -- although C.V. Landfill is permitted to accept solid waste generated and brought in from outside of the District. In support of these allegations, Plaintiffs point out paragraph two of the District's Interim Disposal Agreement with C.V. Landfill, which states:

[C.V. Landfill] shall . . . have the exclusive right to receive solid waste for processing . . . and disposal from the District waste service areas as shown on the map which is attached hereto as Addendum (B); and District shall so designate [C.V. Landfill's] facilities as the exclusive destination of such solid waste. In addition, [C.V. Landfill] may receive waste from non-District towns that so designate [C.V. Landfill's] facilities[:]

paragraph [5] thirteen of the Interim Disposal Agreement, which reads:

District, by ordinance, shall prohibit the exportation of District-generated solid waste for disposal at any facility not designated by the District[:]

and paragraph 5.1 of the Flow Control Ordinance, which provides:

Solid Waste collected or generated in the District shall be delivered to a transfer station or Facility designated by the District. No person shall deliver, or cause to be delivered, Solid Waste in the District except to such Facilities designated by the District.

Palisades Landfill's lined landfill in Moretown, Vermont, is, as of November 1992, located outside of the District, and is not a facility designated by the District for the receipt of solid waste generated or collected in the District.

On July 22, 1992, Palisades Recycling, Dowdell's wholly-owned corporation, reacting to the Interim Disposal Agreement between C.V. Landfill and the District, as well as to the Flow Control Ordinance and its rules and regulations, sued the District in Washington County, Vermont, Superior Court. C.V. Landfill intervened as a defendant. Palisades Recycling sought to enjoin (1) the District from designating [6] C.V. Landfill as the exclusive facility for all solid waste generated within the District if Palisades Recycling declined to execute the Interim Disposal Agreement as written, (2) the Flow Control Ordinance from taking effect on August 4, 1992, and (3) the District's contract with C.V. Landfill from continuing in effect. Palisades Recycling alleged, inter alia, that the District's actions infringed the dormant Commerce Clause, see U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, and were ultra vires under state law. After hearings in early September 1992, the Washington Superior Court denied Palisades Recycling's request for a preliminary injunction on September 21, 1992. The Vermont court found, among other things, that (1) the District's contract with C.V. Landfill and its proposed contract with Palisades Recycling "do not go beyond the District's grant of authority concerning its ability to assess and recover a surcharge on solid waste disposed of within the District"; (2) "the evidence does not establish that the Flow Control Ordinance[,] as applied, violates the Commerce Clause of the United States Constitution"; and (3) "the evidence does not establish irreparable harm to Plaintiff." On [7] November 16, 1992, the Washington Superior Court entered summary judgment for the defendants -- the District and C.V. Landfill -- on all counts of the complaint. Palisades Recycling did not appeal from that decision.

A few months later, on February 23, 1993, Palisades Landfill, Valley Disposal, and Robert Dowdell brought the present complaint in the United States District Court for the District of Vermont against the District, C.V. Landfill, and Vermont Integrated Waste Solutions, Inc.¹ Plaintiffs charged that the District [*92] and C.V. Landfill had contracted, combined, and conspired to exclude Plaintiffs from competition in providing lined landfill disposal services to customers residing in the member municipalities that form the District. The five-count complaint alleged:

[I] the contract, ordinance and regulations are unconstitutional in that they violate the "dormant Commerce Clause" of the U.S. Constitution Article I, Section 8;[;]²

[II] the actions of defendants constitute an[] unlawful contract, combination or conspiracy in the form of a trust or otherwise in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1 [8] [of the Sherman Act], damaging plaintiffs[;]

[III] the actions of the defendants constitute an unlawful monopolization, attempt to monopolize, or a combination or conspiracy to monopolize solid waste disposal of any municipal solid waste generated within the member towns of the District, thus monopolizing a part of trade or commerce among the states in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 2 [of the Sherman Act], damaging plaintiffs[;]

¹ On March 8, 1993, Plaintiffs voluntarily dismissed Vermont Integrated Waste Solutions, Inc.

² As amended on March 3, 1993, Count I came to read:

The contract, ordinance and regulations unconstitutionally discriminate facially and in effect against interstate commerce in violation of the "dormant" Commerce Clause of the U.S. Constitution Article I Section 8. Said discrimination on the part of the defendant District constitutes a deprivation under color of ordinance and regulation of the plaintiffs' rights, privileges and immunities secured by the U.S. Constitution in violation of 42 U.S.C. § 1983.

On March 22, 1993, Plaintiffs, pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a), moved to amend their complaint again primarily to seek declaratory and compensatory damages. See infra part II.A (setting forth the amended paragraph 2 of the complaint). The district court granted this motion. Then, on June 3, 1993, Plaintiffs sought leave for a further amendment. This request was followed on June 7, 1993, by yet a third motion to amend the complaint -- bringing the total number of amendments or requested amendments to four (including the initial amendment as a matter of course). On July 23, 1993, the district court, upon granting C.V. Landfill's motion to dismiss and the District's motion for summary judgment, ruled that Plaintiffs' second and third motions to amend were moot.

[IV] by designating the C.V. Landfill as the exclusive "designated facility" for the disposal of solid waste, the "District Regulatory Board's" actions are ultra vires and void[; and]

[V] there is no primary or overriding public municipal purpose in the District's grant of exclusive monopoly rights to receive solid waste to the unlined C.V. Landfill. Rather the primary purpose is to promote the private ends of the C.V. Landfill. Any public purpose is at best incidental, set up as a mere pretext to conceal a private purpose, and is therefore ultra vires and void.

Plaintiffs sought compensatory damages and requested preliminary and permanent injunctions against the "operation and [9] enforcement of the 'flow control' provisions of the contract [between the District and C.V. Landfill], [the] ordinance, and [the] regulations." Following an evidentiary hearing on March 11, 1993, the district court, on March 16, 1993, denied Plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction, finding that Plaintiffs had failed to demonstrate "they are likely to suffer irreparable harm if the injunction is not issued."

[10] Before the March 11, 1993, hearing, C.V. Landfill, on March 8, 1993, moved to dismiss the antitrust claims (Counts II and III) for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\). C.V. Landfill also moved to dismiss Plaintiffs' supplemental state law claims (Counts IV and V), as well as their § 1983 claim (Count I), for lack of subject matter and/or personal jurisdiction. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(1\), \(2\). At the same time, the District moved to dismiss all counts and for summary judgment. The District contended that the claims in Counts I, IV, and V were barred by collateral estoppel (issue preclusion), having been earlier decided by the Washington Superior Court. The District joined in C.V. Landfill's motion to dismiss the antitrust claims (Counts II and [*93] III) for failure to state a claim, and additionally argued that Counts II and III were barred by res judicata (claim preclusion). Plaintiffs submitted memoranda in opposition to the motions to dismiss and for summary judgment. Then, on April 2, 1993, Valley Disposal filed a cross-motion for partial summary judgment on Counts I and IV.

The district court heard argument on all motions on May 26, 1993. [11] ³ On July 23, 1993, the court issued an opinion and order in which it (1) granted C.V. Landfill's motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' antitrust claims (Counts II and III) with prejudice, (2) found that Count I of Plaintiffs' complaint stated a claim only against the District, (3) declined to retain jurisdiction over Plaintiffs' state law claims (Counts IV and V) against C.V. Landfill, and (4) granted the District's motion for summary judgment, ruling that Counts I, IV, and V were barred by collateral estoppel and that Counts II and III were barred by res judicata. Plaintiffs filed a notice of appeal on August 10, 1993.

DISCUSSION

I.

Standards of Review

HN1 We review de novo the lower court's granting of C.V. Landfill's motion to dismiss [12] Counts II and III (the antitrust claims) for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.⁴ Sykes v. James, 13 F.3d 515,

³ The district court heard, among other things, (1) Plaintiffs' motion to amend their complaint, (2) C.V. Landfill's motion to dismiss, (3) the District's motion to dismiss and for summary judgment, and (4) Valley Disposal's cross-motion for summary judgment on Counts I and IV.

⁴ Whether a motion to dismiss an antitrust claim such as that brought by C.V. Landfill is more properly considered under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(1\) or Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) is an issue that has divided courts and commentators. See, e.g., Seglin v. Esau, 769 F.2d 1274, 1278-79 \(7th Cir. 1985\) (observing that "at least two commentators and one federal district court have argued persuasively that a failure to allege an effect on interstate commerce is a failure to state a claim and not a failure to allege subject matter jurisdiction"). Regardless of which rule is preferable, our review is de novo because "the trial court dismissed on the basis of the complaint alone." Rent Stabilization Ass'n v. Dinkins, 5 F.3d 591, 594 \(2d Cir. 1993\).

519 (2d Cir. 1993), cert. denied, 114 S. Ct. 2749, 129 L. Ed. 2d 867, 1994 WL 122993 (1994). In so doing, "we accept as true the factual allegations of the complaint, and draw all inferences in favor of the pleader." Mills v. Polar Molecular Corp., 12 F.3d 1170, 1174 (2d Cir. 1993) (citing IUE AFL-CIO Pension Fund v. Herrmann, 9 F.3d 1049, 1052 (2d Cir. 1993), cert. denied, 1994 U.S. LEXIS 5612 (U.S. 1994).

[13] HN2[↑] We also review de novo the district court's ruling on summary judgment that Counts II and III (the antitrust claims) are barred by res judicata and that Counts I, IV, and V (the dormant Commerce Clause claim and the supplemental state law claims) are barred by collateral estoppel. Sundance Cruises Corp. v. American Bureau of Shipping, 7 F.3d 1077, 1080 (2d Cir. 1993) HN3[↑] ("We review the grant of a motion for summary judgment de novo, construing all facts in favor of [Plaintiffs], the nonmoving parties."), cert. denied, 128 L. Ed. 2d 72, 114 S. Ct. 1399 (1994).

II.

Dismissal of Antitrust Claims (Counts II & III)

5

[14] A.

In dismissing the antitrust claims, the district court agreed with C.V. Landfill that Plaintiffs had not established federal jurisdiction, having failed to plead facts sufficient to show that the District's and C.V. Landfill's activities had "a not insubstantial effect on the interstate commerce involved." McLain v. Real Estate Bd., 444 U.S. 232, 246, 100 S. Ct. 502, 62 L. Ed. 2d 441 (1980).⁶

[15] [*94] Plaintiffs now challenge that ruling. They argue that the complaint's bare allegations of an effect on commerce, general and conclusory as they were, nonetheless satisfied minimum notice pleading requirements. Plaintiffs further assert that the testimony they presented at the March 11, 1993, preliminary injunction hearing adequately demonstrated that the District's and C.V. Landfill's conduct had "a not insubstantial effect" on interstate commerce, and that this sufficed. The testimony indicated, they say, that the defendants' activities adversely affected Plaintiffs' ability (1) to pay for out-of-state equipment and supplies, consultants, engineers, and contractors used to build and operate the lined landfill run by Palisades Landfill, and (2) to secure out-of-state permanent financing for that facility.

Like the district court, we think the complaint failed to meet standards enunciated by the Supreme Court in McLain and by this court in Furlong v. Long Island College Hospital, 710 F.2d 922 (2d Cir. 1983) (affirming district court's dismissal of antitrust claim for failure adequately to plead antitrust jurisdiction). In McLain, the plaintiffs [16] filed a complaint in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana, alleging that real estate brokers in the Greater New Orleans area had "engaged in a price-fixing conspiracy in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act." McLain, 444 U.S. at 234. After considering briefs, deposition testimony, documents, and oral argument on the issue, the district court dismissed the complaint "for failure to establish the interstate commerce component of ⁵The District joined in C.V. Landfill's motion to dismiss, adopting and incorporating its memoranda in support thereof on all issues. Similarly, on appeal, "the District specifically adopts and incorporates . . . the arguments made by . . . C.V. Landfill . . . as to the propriety of the district court's dismissal of the [antitrust] counts."

⁶This court has said HN4[↑] there are two ways to establish the interstate commerce component of Sherman Act jurisdiction.

First, plaintiff may allege and prove that defendant's conduct is "within" the stream of interstate commerce. Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 95 S. Ct. 2004, 44 L. Ed. 2d 572 (1975). Alternatively, plaintiff may allege and prove that defendant's conduct, although entirely local or confined to one state, nonetheless "affects" interstate commerce. United States v. Employing Plasterers Association, 347 U.S. 186, 189, 74 S. Ct. 452, 454, 98 L. Ed. 618 (1954).

Furlong v. Long Island College Hosp., 710 F.2d 922, 925 (2d Cir. 1983).

Sherman Act jurisdiction.⁷ Id. The Fifth Circuit affirmed. Although the Supreme Court vacated the decision below, holding that, "on the record thus far made, it cannot be said that there is an insufficient basis for petitioners to proceed at trial to establish Sherman Act jurisdiction," id. at 245, it also stated that jurisdiction under the Sherman Act may not be invoked "unless the relevant aspect of interstate commerce is identified; it is not sufficient merely to rely on identification of a relevant local activity and to presume an interrelationship with some unspecified aspect of interstate commerce," [17] id. at 242. In this vein, the Court continued: "To establish jurisdiction a plaintiff must allege the critical relationship in the pleadings." Id. (emphasis added); see Furlong, 710 F.2d at 926. Only when allegations in the complaint are controverted did the Court place a further duty upon the plaintiff to "proceed to demonstrate by submission of evidence beyond the pleadings either that the defendants' activity is itself in interstate commerce or, if it is local in nature, that it has an effect on some other appreciable activity demonstrably in interstate commerce." McLain, 444 U.S. at 242; see Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 232.1, at 295 (1993 Supp.). Nowhere did the Court suggest that this latter burden was a substitute for minimally adequate allegations in the complaint of a relationship with some delineated aspect of interstate commerce.

[18] While this court has said, "we are mindful of the generous approach to pleading [*95] outlined in Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 101-02, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957), which has been applied in the antitrust context," Furlong, 710 F.2d at 927 (citing McLain, 444 U.S. at 246), neither Conley nor McLain allows "conclusory statements to substitute for minimally sufficient factual allegations," id. Rather, HN5[↑] "a plaintiff must allege sufficient facts concerning the alleged violation and its likely effect on interstate commerce to support an inference that the defendants' activities infected by illegality either have had or can reasonably be expected to have a not insubstantial effect on commerce." 710 F.2d at 926. We went on to say in Furlong, a more detailed pleading requirement . . . obliges a plaintiff to give some thought to the theory of his case, thought that may well reveal to him that he does not, after all, have a case worth pursuing in a federal jurisdiction; it also obliges his attorney to reckon with [19] the "good ground" standard of Fed. R. Civ. P. 11 when he endeavors to plead factual allegations.

Id. at 928.

Against these standards, Plaintiffs' original complaint, their complaint amended once as a matter of course, their complaint amended by leave of court, and their proposed amended complaints, are all plainly lacking. None of these pleadings asserts "any facts from which it is inferable that the defendants' activities, infected with the particular illegality alleged, are likely to have a substantial effect on [interstate] commerce." Id. at 927. Plaintiffs' original complaint asserts:

[(1)] defendants . . . have contracted, combined, and conspired to restrain trade and . . . have formed an unlawful combination to monopolize a part of trade or commerce among the states in violation of the dormant Commerce Clause of the U.S. Constitution and of 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2. By such activities defendants have acted

⁷ The complaint in McLain contained the following allegations pertinent to establishing federal jurisdiction:

- (1) that the activities of the respondents are "within the flow of interstate commerce and have an effect upon that commerce";
- (2) that the services of respondents were employed in connection with the purchase and sale of real estate by "persons moving into and out of the Greater New Orleans area";
- (3) that respondents "assist their clients in securing financing and insurance involved with the purchase of real estate in the Greater New Orleans area," which "financing and insurance are obtained from sources outside the State of Louisiana and move in interstate commerce into the State of Louisiana through the activities of the [respondents]"; and
- (4) that respondents have engaged in an unlawful restraint of "interstate trade and commerce in the offering for sale and sale of real estate brokering services."

to exclude the plaintiffs from competition in providing lined landfill disposal services to customers residing in the member municipalities which form the Central Vermont Solid Waste Management District[.]

[(2)] the actions [20] of defendants constitute an unlawful contract, combination or conspiracy in the form of a trust or otherwise in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1; and]

[(3)] the actions of defendants constitute an unlawful monopolization, attempt to monopolize, or a combination or conspiracy to monopolize solid waste disposal of any municipal solid waste generated within the member towns of the District, thus monopolizing a part of trade or commerce among the states in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 2⁸

Even after the District and C.V. Landfill, on March 8, 1993, had moved to dismiss the antitrust claims for failure to allege facts sufficient to support an inference of a not insubstantial effect upon interstate commerce, Plaintiffs did not seek to amend their complaint so as to remedy this deficiency. All they did, on March 22, 1993, along these lines was amend introductory paragraph 2 of the complaint to read:

Accordingly, the plaintiffs seek a declaratory judgment declaring unlawful and/or unconstitutional, and an order to prevent the defendants from enforcing [21], relevant provisions of a contract, ordinance, and rules and regulations by which this unlawful restraint of interstate commerce and of competition is effectuated, plus damages, treble damages, and reasonable litigation costs and attorney's fees.

(amendments emphasized).⁹ [23] But, as we have indicated, HN6[[↑]] mere bald assertions that defendants' [*96] activities restrain interstate commerce generally, along with references to statutory language, are not substitutes for concrete allegations from which a not insubstantial effect on interstate commerce can be inferred.¹⁰ E.g., Furlong, 710 F.2d at 926-27; see Rutman Wine Co. v. E. & J. Gallo Winery, 829 F.2d 729, 736 (9th Cir. 1987) ("The pleader may not evade these requirements by merely alleging a bare legal conclusion; if the facts 'do not at least outline or adumbrate' a violation of the Sherman Act, the plaintiffs 'will get nowhere merely by dressing them up in the language of antitrust.'" (quoting Car Carriers, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 745 F.2d 1101, 1106 (7th Cir. 1984) (quoting Sutliff, Inc. v. Donovan Cos., 727 F.2d 648, 654 (7th Cir. 1984)), [22] cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1054, 105 S. Ct. 1758, 84 L. Ed. 2d 821 (1985))). We agree with the district court's finding that, "despite the fact that plaintiffs have amended their complaint twice and seek to amend it again, they have never sought to amend so as to plead facts sufficient to support an antitrust claim."

Notwithstanding this basic deficiency, Plaintiffs argue that they established antitrust jurisdiction by introducing, during the March 11, 1993, hearing on their motion for preliminary injunction, evidence that the District's and C.V. Landfill's activities have had a not insubstantial effect on interstate commerce.¹¹ At [24] that hearing, Plaintiffs

⁸ The district court viewed this third allegation, paragraph thirty-two of the complaint, as the sole suggestion that the District's and C.V. Landfill's activities have any nexus to interstate commerce. The district court found, however, and we agree, that this . . . allegation does no more than identify a relevant local activity and "presume an interrelationship with some unspecified aspect of interstate commerce." McLain, 444 U.S. at 242. It does not support and plaintiffs have not pleaded any facts to support an inference that the local activity has a "not insubstantial effect" on interstate commerce.

⁹ Nor did Plaintiffs' subsequent proposed amended complaints of June 3 and June 7, 1993, add any factual allegations that would satisfy antitrust jurisdictional requirements.

¹⁰ The inadequacy of Plaintiffs' allegations here becomes even more apparent when compared with the jurisdictional allegations made by the plaintiffs in McLain, see supra note 7, and by the plaintiff in Furlong. In the latter case, to establish that her claim was cognizable under federal antitrust law, Dr. Furlong alleged several connections between the parties' business activities and interstate commerce. The connections specified were Dr. Furlong's receipt of third-party payments from out-of-state, [Long Island Anesthesiology Associates'] receipt of such payments, LIAA's practice of purchasing goods and services in interstate commerce, and [Long Island College Hospital's] receipt of federal subsidies.

Furlong, 710 F.2d at 924.

called Scott Bennett, General Manager of Palisades Landfill, to testify. He stated, inter alia, that the lined landfill, in its daily operations, (1) uses equipment manufactured outside of the State of Vermont, (2) purchases fuel from New Hampshire suppliers, and (3) obtains credit from sources in Georgia and Kentucky. Furthermore, he testified that, in constructing the lined landfill, (1) the native Vermont soil was mixed with bentonite -- pursuant to contracts with Illinois and New York companies -- which is a naturally occurring clay found in Wyoming, (2) the plastic liner for the landfill was provided by an Illinois company, and (3) quality control was handled by a company out of New Hampshire. According to Bennett, the lined landfill does not generate sufficient revenues to pay the approximately $ 2,500,000 owed to out-of-state suppliers, contractors, and financiers who participate in the operation and assisted in the development of the lined landfill. He attributed the revenue shortfall to the inability of trash haulers in the District -- who are subject to the Flow Control Ordinance and the rules and regulations adopted thereunder -- to take solid [25] waste generated within the District to facilities located outside of the District, such as Palisades Landfill's lined landfill. Moreover, Bennett testified that, because of the revenue shortfall, the lined landfill has been unable to secure additional credit, which could be used to satisfy the $ 2,500,000 obligation.

Why Plaintiffs never amended their complaint to refer tersely to these matters is a mystery. Enough could easily have been asserted concerning the alleged violation and its effect on interstate commerce to withstand a motion to dismiss for failure adequately to plead antitrust jurisdiction. See, e.g., Hospital Bldg. Co. v. Trustees of Rex Hosp., 425 U.S. 738, 744, 96 S. Ct. 1848, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338 \(1976\) [26] (holding that acts that affect an intrastate business's ability to purchase out-of-state supplies, generate out-of-state revenues, and secure out-of-state financing provide a sufficient basis for establishing Sherman Act jurisdiction). But, for reasons already discussed, the complaint, as it now stands, does not satisfy jurisdictional [*97] pleading requirements. Nor was the complaint's deficiency cured by the testimony at the March 11, 1993, hearing. While once allegations of an effect on interstate commerce are controverted, "the plaintiff must 'demonstrate' an interstate effect by evidence," Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 232.1, at 295 (1993 Supp.), the Supreme Court has nowhere indicated that plaintiffs have the option of omitting proper factual allegations from the complaint, tendering the relevant assertions, instead, at some later hearing of their own choosing.¹² The Court's statement in McLain -- that "to establish jurisdiction a plaintiff must allege the critical relationship in the pleadings," 444 U.S. at 242 -- cannot be ignored.

[27] We cannot say, therefore, that the court erred in dismissing Counts II and III when, after having ample opportunity, Plaintiffs did not amend their complaint to plead facts indicating the "critical relationship" between the defendants' activities and some aspect of interstate commerce. Still, we are loath to sustain the dismissal with prejudice of the two counts where the record so obviously reflects the means to remedy the pleading deficiency. We vacate the district court's Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) dismissal of Counts II and III, and allow Plaintiffs thirty (30) days from the issuance of mandate to file with the district court an amended complaint that is consistent with the principles discussed herein. Should the district court thereafter determine that Plaintiffs have still failed to comply, it may reenter its order dismissing Counts II and III with prejudice.

B.

The district court concluded that Plaintiffs' antitrust claims (Counts II and III) were barred by the doctrine of res judicata -- also referred to as claim preclusion. The district court was unimpressed by Plaintiffs' argument, which they repeat on appeal, that they should be permitted to bring their Sherman Act claims in federal [28] court

¹¹ Plaintiffs asserted in their March 11, 1993, Memorandum in Opposition to Defendants' Motions to Dismiss that they would show at the March 11, 1993, "preliminary injunction hearing that the jurisdictional threshold for the application of the [Sherman Act] is met here."

¹² Plaintiffs have not argued that they can gain relief from Fed. R. Civ. P. 15\(b\). Rule 15\(b\) provides that "when issues not raised by the pleadings are tried by express or implied consent of the parties, they shall be treated in all respects as if they had been raised in the pleadings." In any event, we would reject such an argument under present circumstances. The case has yet to go to trial, and we do not think a district court must accept evidence submitted by a plaintiff at a preliminary hearing as automatically amending an inadequate complaint. Cf. Charles A. Wright, Arthur R. Miller & Mary Kay Kane, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1494, at 53 (1990) ("If the issue in fact has not been tried with the consent of the parties, then an amendment to conform to the pleadings will not be permitted no matter when made.").

because the state court, in the earlier proceeding, did not have subject matter jurisdiction over those claims. In response, the district court ruled that, when Dowdell and Palisades Recycling initially decided to challenge the District's actions, they, being in the offensive position, had the choice of proceeding in either state or federal court. Because they made a strategic decision to proceed in state court rather than federal court, the district court determined that Dowdell should not be entitled subsequently to bring his Sherman Act claims in federal court simply because the state court was not the proper forum for his antitrust claims.

Whatever might be said for the district court's approach as an initial proposition, it would seem to be foreclosed by Supreme Court precedent. In Marrese v. American Academy of Orthopaedic Surgeons, 470 U.S. 373, 105 S. Ct. 1327, 84 L. Ed. 2d 274 (1985), the United States Supreme Court considered "whether a state court judgment may have preclusive effect on a [subsequent] federal antitrust claim that could not have been raised in the [earlier] state proceeding." 470 U.S. at 379. [29] There, as here, plaintiffs filed their initial suit in state court, but did not allege violations of state antitrust law; nor did they bring contemporaneous federal antitrust actions. Plaintiffs' claims were dismissed. "In March 1980, [plaintiffs] filed a federal antitrust suit in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois based on the same events underlying their unsuccessful state court actions." Id. at 376. Following proceedings in the district court, the Seventh Circuit, sitting en banc, held, in a plurality opinion, "that a state court judgment bars the subsequent filing of a federal [*98] antitrust claim if the plaintiff could have brought a state antitrust claim under a state statute 'materially identical' to the Sherman Act." Id. at 377. The plurality found the Illinois Antitrust Act, Ill. Rev. Stat., ch. 38, P 60-3(2) (1981), to be sufficiently similar to the Sherman Act to bar plaintiffs' federal antitrust claims. The Supreme Court granted certiorari and reversed.¹³

[30] The Court first observed:

HNT [↑] The preclusive effect of a state court judgment in a subsequent federal lawsuit generally is determined by the full faith and credit statute, which provides that state judicial proceedings "shall have the same full faith and credit in every court within the United States . . . as they have by law or usage in the courts of such State . . . from which they are taken." 28 U.S.C. § 1738. This statute directs a federal court to refer to the preclusion law of the State in which judgment was rendered.

Marrese, 470 U.S. at 380 (emphasis added). The Court further noted that, "with respect to matters that were not decided in the state proceedings, . . . claim preclusion generally does not apply where 'the plaintiff was unable to rely on a certain theory of the case or to seek a certain remedy because of the limitations on the subject matter jurisdiction of the courts' Restatement (Second) of Judgments § 26(1)(c) (1982)." Id. at 382. Against this backdrop, the Court held that, "if state preclusion [31] law includes this requirement of prior jurisdictional competency, which is generally true, a state judgment will not have claim preclusive effect on a cause of action within the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal courts." Id. (emphasis in original).

In accordance with Marrese, we must determine whether Vermont's doctrine of res judicata, which might otherwise bar claims asserted in a subsequent proceeding, applies when the court that rendered the earlier judgment did not have subject matter jurisdiction over such claims. In Town of Waterford v. Pike Industries, 135 Vt. 193, 373 A.2d 528 (Vt. 1977), "the Town of Waterford petitioned the Caledonia County (now Superior) Court to permanently enjoin Pike Industries, Inc. . . . from operating its plant facilities within the town because of its violation of the town's zoning ordinance, and for the recovery of a fine of $ 25 for each day during which the defendant had been in violation." Pike Indus., 373 A.2d at 529. In response, Pike "asserted as an affirmative defense that the town could not rely upon the zoning ordinance for its [32] permanent injunction," id., because it was invalid. The trial court, however, "invoking the doctrine of res judicata, . . . held that Pike was barred from raising the claim of invalidity." Id. It decided that Pike could have litigated the validity of the ordinance previously when the company, in 1970 and 1971, "petitioned the local zoning board of adjustment for a variance for its plant facilities."¹⁴ Id.

¹³ For a thorough discussion of Marrese, see 18 Charles A. Wright, Arthur R. Miller & Edward H. Cooper, Federal Practice and Procedure § 4470, at 443-49 (1993 Supp.).

The Supreme Court of Vermont, in striking the Caledonia Superior Court's decision, allowed Pike to assert its affirmative defense that the zoning ordinance was invalid. It ruled:

The challenge [33] of the validity of the ordinance for failure to comply with statutory procedures of necessity involved the adjudication of factual issues. Since the board could not adjudicate the validity of the ordinance, ¹⁵ [34] the county court, with its limited appellate jurisdiction, could not properly make determinations with respect to these factual matters.¹⁶ We therefore hold [99] that, inasmuch as Pike has not had a proper forum in which to challenge the validity of the ordinance, the trial court erred in barring the defendant from raising this issue in the present case.

373 A.2d at 530 (emphasis and footnotes added). We read Pike Industries as indicating that HN8 Vermont's preclusion law does not foreclose "matters that [another] court lacked jurisdiction to entertain," Marrese, 470 U.S. at 383. We hold, therefore, that Plaintiffs are not barred by res judicata from bringing their federal antitrust claims in federal district court.

III.

Dismissal of Plaintiffs' Dormant Commerce Clause Claim Brought Pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983 (Count I)

A.

The district court ruled that Count I of the complaint, seeking relief only from the District, did not state a claim against C.V. Landfill. Plaintiffs conceded as much in their Supplemental Points of Authority in Support of Preliminary Injunction and in their Memorandum in Opposition to Defendants' Motions to Dismiss. They have not assigned error on appeal to the district court's ruling, which accordingly stands.

B.

The district court held that Plaintiffs' dormant Commerce Clause claim against the District, brought pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983, is barred by collateral estoppel (i.e., issue preclusion). In Allen v. McCurry, 449 U.S. 90, 101 S. Ct. 411, 66 L. Ed. 2d 308 \(1980\), [35] the Supreme Court "made clear that HN9 issues actually litigated in a state-court proceeding are entitled to the same preclusive effect in a subsequent federal § 1983 suit as they enjoy in the courts of the State where the judgment was rendered." Migra v. Warren City Sch. Dist. Bd. of Educ., 465 U.S. 75, 83, 104 S. Ct. 892, 79 L. Ed. 2d 56 \(1984\); see Kremer v. Chemical Constr. Corp., 456 U.S. 461, 102 S. Ct. 1883, 72 L. Ed. 2d 262 \(1982\); Anderson v. City of New York, 611 F. Supp. 481, 486 \(S.D.N.Y. 1985\) ("There is no question that state court judgments can have collateral estoppel effect in subsequent section 1983 proceedings. . . . To determine the preclusive effect of a state court judgment, we look to the law of the state where the judgment was rendered."). As the allegedly preclusive proceeding here was in a Vermont state court, we must look to the law of Vermont to determine whether Plaintiffs' claim is barred by the judgment entered in the 1992 state court proceeding brought by Palisades Recycling against the District and C.V. [36] Landfill.

¹⁴ "This variance request was denied by the board and an appeal was taken to the Caledonia County Court which affirmed the board's decision." Pike Indus., 373 A.2d at 529. In L. M. Pike & Son, Inc. v. Town of Waterford, 130 Vt. 432, 296 A.2d 262 \(Vt. 1972\), the Supreme Court of Vermont affirmed the county court's decision.

¹⁵ By virtue of Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 24, § 4473, "the board is precluded . . . from invalidating any development plan or bylaw of any municipality or the implementation or enforcement thereof." Pike Indus., 373 A.2d at 529.

¹⁶ Although Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 24, § 4472\(a\) "currently provides for a de novo hearing before the superior court, at the time that Pike took its appeal to the county court this provision was not in effect." Pike Indus., 373 A.2d at 530.

In Trepanier v. Getting Organized, Inc., 155 Vt. 259, 583 A.2d 583 \(Vt. 1990\), the Supreme Court of Vermont held that HN10 [collateral estoppel] should be found only when the following criteria are met: (1) preclusion is asserted against one who was a party or in privity with a party in the earlier action; (2) the issue was resolved by a final judgment on the merits; (3) the issue is the same as the one raised in the later action; (4) there was a full and fair opportunity to litigate the issue in the earlier action; and (5) applying preclusion in the later action is fair.

Trepanier, 583 A.2d at 587. Plaintiffs argue that, under this test, they should not be collaterally estopped from proceeding with their § 1983 claim. They assert, inter alia, that the constitutional issue in this case, while brought under the dormant Commerce Clause, differs from the Commerce Clause claim addressed by the Washington Superior Court because circumstances have changed. We agree.

It has been recognized that "one of the most difficult problems in the application of [collateral estoppel] is to delineate 37 the issue on which litigation is, or is not, foreclosed by the prior judgment." Restatement \(Second\) of Judgments § 27 cmt. c (1982). HN11 We must "balance our 'desire not to deprive a litigant of an adequate day in court' against 'a desire to prevent repetitious litigation of what is essentially the same dispute.'" Berlin Convalescent Ctr., Inc. v. Stoneman, 159 Vt. 53, 615 A.2d 141, 145-46 \(Vt. 1992\) (quoting Restatement \(Second\) of Judgments § 27 cmt. c (1982)). HN12 In deciding whether "essentially the same dispute" is involved in earlier and later *100 proceedings, the Supreme Court of Vermont has examined several factors set out in the Restatement, namely, whether

(1) . . . there [is] "a substantial overlap" in the evidence and argument between the two proceedings[]; (2) . . . the "same rule of law" [is] involved in both proceedings[]; (3) . . . the "pretrial preparation and discovery" in the first proceeding cover the issues in the second proceeding[]; and (4) ". . . the claims involved in the two proceedings [are closely related.]"

Stoneman, 615 A.2d at 146 (quoting [Restatement \(Second\) of \[Judgments § 27 cmt. c\]\(#\) \(1982\)](#)).

Starting with the second and fourth factors first, we observe that the "same rule of law" is involved in both the state and federal proceedings -- that is, the principles of the dormant, or negative, Commerce Clause of the United States Constitution -- and the claims involved in the two proceedings are closely related. Nevertheless, in view of the changed circumstances since the state court case, we do not think "there is 'a substantial overlap' in the evidence and argument between the two proceedings," id., or that "the 'pretrial preparation and discovery' in the first proceeding cover the dormant [Commerce Clause] issues in the second proceeding," id.

HN13 The dormant Commerce Clause is a nontextual offshoot of the Commerce Clause, which "ascribes to Congress the power 'to regulate Commerce . . . among the several States.' U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 3. Ascription of this power to Congress limits, by negative implication, the power of the States to interfere with interstate commerce." New York State Trawlers Ass'n v. Jorling, 16 F.3d 1303, 1307 \(2d Cir. 1994\) (citing Fort Gratiot Sanitary Landfill, Inc. v. Michigan 39 Dep't of Natural Resources, U.S. , , 112 S. Ct. 2019, 2023, 119 L. Ed. 2d 139 \(1992\)). In City of Philadelphia v. New Jersey, 437 U.S. 617, 98 S. Ct. 2531, 57 L. Ed. 2d 475 \(1978\), the United States Supreme Court, in discussing the dormant Commerce Clause, observed that its opinions "through the years have reflected an alertness to the evils of 'economic isolation' and protectionism, while at the same time recognizing that incidental burdens on interstate commerce may be unavoidable when a State legislates to safeguard the health and safety of its people." 437 U.S. at 623-24. In this context, the Court explained that "where simple economic protectionism is effected by state legislation, a virtually per se rule of invalidity has been erected. . . . But where other legislative objectives are credibly advanced and there is no patent discrimination against interstate trade, the Court has adopted a much more flexible approach, the general contours of which were outlined in Pike v. Bruce Church, Inc., 397 U.S. 137, 142, 90 S. Ct. 844, 25 L. Ed. 2d 174 \(1970\)." 40 " 437 U.S. at 624. In Pike, the Court ruled:

HN14 Where the statute regulates evenhandedly to effectuate a legitimate local public interest, and its effects on interstate commerce are only incidental, it will be upheld unless the burden imposed on such commerce is clearly excessive in relation to the putative local benefits. . . . If a legitimate local purpose is found, then the question becomes one of degree. And the extent of the burden that will be tolerated will of course depend on the nature of the local interest involved, and on whether it could be promoted as well with a lesser impact on interstate activities.

Pike, 397 U.S. at 142; see Jorling, 16 F.3d at 1307 ("Provided a state does not discriminate against non-residents, . . . it may impose incidental burdens on interstate commerce when exercising its police power to promote safety or general welfare." (citing Laurence H. Tribe, American Constitutional Law § 6-5, at 408 (2d ed. 1988) ("State regulation affecting interstate commerce will be upheld if (a) the regulation is rationally related to a legitimate state end, and (b) [41] the regulatory burden imposed on interstate commerce, and any discrimination against it, are outweighed by the state interest in enforcing the regulation."))).

These principles were relevant when the Washington Superior Court considered Palisades Recycling's dormant Commerce Clause claim and the arguments opposing it. Hence C.V. Landfill, in its state court memorandum in opposition to Palisades Recycling's motion [*101] for a preliminary injunction, maintained that any incidental burden placed on interstate commerce by provisions of the Flow Control Ordinance and the Interim Disposal Agreement was "clearly justified" by the District's need to achieve "health, safety and public welfare objectives." C.V. Landfill explained that the Flow Control Ordinance and the Interim Disposal Agreement gave the District the power to guaranty that facilities with which it contracts will receive a certain quantity of waste. This, in turn, provides those facilities with a steady stream of revenues, which may be used to develop solid waste facilities (e.g., lined landfills) needed by the District.¹⁷ Accordingly, in deciding that "the evidence does not establish that the Flow Control Ordinance[,] as [42] applied, violates the Commerce Clause of the United States Constitution," the Washington Superior Court may very well have concluded that, notwithstanding any incidental burdens placed on interstate commerce, there were indeed local benefits to be achieved by allowing the District to require member towns to send trash to one particular unlined landfill as opposed to another unlined landfill.

In the [43] present case, however, the district court's focus would not be the same because the circumstances are different. First, as Plaintiffs point out, they now operate a lined landfill, which they say is environmentally superior to the unlined landfill operated by Palisades Recycling. This difference is significant, they contend, because the District and C.V. Landfill can no longer argue that there is any local benefit -- that would justify any encumbrance on interstate commerce -- to designating C.V. Landfill as the exclusive recipient of solid waste generated within the District.¹⁸ Plaintiffs submit that, while C.V. Landfill and the District could, in the state case, argue that an ordinance that directs the flow of solid waste to one unlined landfill as opposed to another unlined landfill provides local benefits that justify any incidental burden on interstate commerce, they cannot make that same argument here when solid waste is being directed to one facility to the exclusion of a new and adequate lined landfill. This arrangement, argue Plaintiffs, does not provide local benefits justifying the incidental burden on interstate commerce.

[44] Plaintiffs further point to recent changes in the contract between C.V. Landfill and the District, as well as the Supreme Court's May 1994 decision in C & A Carbone, Inc. v. Town of Clarkstown, U.S. , 114 S. Ct. 1677, 128

¹⁷ Indicative of the District's intent that C.V. Landfill would construct a lined landfill was paragraph 3 of the Interim Disposal Agreement, which read:

During the initial term of this agreement, Operator shall provide disposal capacity (until exhausted or prohibited) for District waste, only at its unlined facility. In anticipation of exhaustion of unlined capacity, Operator will commence to permit and prepare for construction [of] materials processing and long-term disposal facilities consisting of a source separated organic waste composting process and lined landfill cell

(emphasis added).

¹⁸ The district court did not find this distinction compelling. It held that "the fact that the state court action pertained to the unlined landfill and this action pertains to a lined landfill does not alter the Court's opinion that the issues before us, i.e., the legality of the District's actions under state law and the Commerce Clause, are identical to the issues previously contested in state court."

L. Ed. 2d 399 (1994) (holding that a flow control ordinance that required all solid waste to be processed at a designated transfer station before leaving the municipality violated the dormant Commerce Clause).¹⁹ Because of these, the Flow Control Ordinance and Interim Disposal Agreement are said to violate per se the dormant Commerce Clause: that is, Plaintiffs contend that the ordinance and the agreement operating in conjunction do not merely burden interstate commerce incidentally, but "facially" discriminate against it. In support of this argument, Plaintiffs point to evidence in the record indicating that the State of Vermont shut down C.V. Landfill's unlined landfill as of August 6, 1993, and C.V. Landfill, pursuant to a 1993-94 renewal of the Interim Disposal Agreement, now acts as the exclusive transfer station for solid waste generated within [*102] the District.²⁰ [46] Moreover, although there is no [45] evidence in the record to this effect, Plaintiffs say they can prove that C.V. Landfill, in its capacity as a transfer station, ships all solid waste generated within the District to a lined landfill in Bethlehem, New Hampshire. According to Plaintiffs, because this new arrangement requires C.V. Landfill to process solid waste generated by the District prior to out-of-state shipment -- to the exclusion of all other in-state or out-of-state entities -- the Flow Control Ordinance and the Interim Disposal Agreement are protectionist measures that directly violate the dormant Commerce Clause.²¹

Having considered Plaintiffs' current position, the described changed circumstances, and the Supreme Court's ruling in C & A Carbone, we do not think the evidence introduced and the arguments made in the state court proceeding can be said to have adequately addressed Plaintiffs' present dormant Commerce Clause claim. Pretrial preparation and discovery in the state case would not have covered the key issues here. We hold that Plaintiffs' present dormant Commerce Clause claim relies on facts that differ so materially from the ones before the Washington Superior Court that Plaintiffs must be allowed to proceed with their claim. See 18 Charles A. Wright, Arthur R. Miller, Edward [47] H. Cooper, Federal Practice and Procedure § 4417, at 153 (1981) (stating that preclusion is inappropriate when the facts of the second suit are "separable" from the facts of the first suit, and the new facts are distinguishable from the facts found in the first suit "for purposes of the substantive rules applied in the first suit"). We reverse the district court's ruling that Plaintiffs' § 1983 claim is barred by collateral estoppel.

We add that it is also doubtful -- although we do not decide this point -- whether there was privity between the state plaintiff, Palisades Recycling, and two of the three present Plaintiffs. The district court found privity because "[Palisades Recycling, Palisades Landfill, and Valley Disposal] are all alter egos of Robert Dowdell."

We have no doubt the district court was correct in finding that Robert Dowdell was in privity with Palisades Recycling. He owned and controlled the company, and freely admitted to initiating and controlling the state court action brought by Palisades Recycling, in which he had a financial stake. Whether, however, Palisades Landfill and Valley Disposal, the current corporate plaintiffs, were also in privity with Palisades [48] Recycling, the state court plaintiff, by virtue of their alter ego relationships with Robert Dowdell is much more dubious.

¹⁹ The Supreme Court had not yet decided C & A Carbone when Plaintiffs submitted their briefs. They cited it, however, as a case that involves facts very similar to those here, and as a decision that could potentially strengthen their dormant Commerce Clause claim.

²⁰ Indeed, the renewal agreement states:

Paragraph 3. is deleted and is replaced by the following Paragraph 3.:

3. During the first renewed term of this Agreement, Operator shall provide disposal capacity (until exhausted or prohibited) for District waste, only at its unlined facility. In anticipation of exhaustion or prohibition of unlined capacity, Operator will continue its efforts to permit and prepare for construction of a materials processing and long-term disposal facility consisting of a lined landfill cell If Operator is prohibited by law from disposal of solid waste at its unlined facility, and in any event at a time no later than October 9, 1993, Operator will provide the District transfer services to a lined facility, effective immediately upon closure of the unlined facility. . . .

²¹ Plaintiffs described these new events and this new claim, among others, in their proffered amended complaint of June 7, 1993. The district court disallowed the amendment, apparently believing that its dismissal of the complaint as earlier amended rendered the new claim moot. Upon remand, the district court is instructed to allow Plaintiffs' to amend their complaint to include their updated allegations and claims.

"The rationale behind the alter ego theory is that if the shareholders themselves, or the corporations themselves, disregard the legal separation, distinct properties, or proper formalities of the different corporate enterprises, then the law will likewise disregard them so far as is necessary. . . ." 1 Charles R. P. Keating & Gail O'Gradney, Fletcher Cyclopedia of the Law of Private Corporations § 41.10, at 614 (1990). HN15[↑] To determine whether the separate existence of the corporation should be disregarded, courts have examined a number of factors, including:

(1) whether the shareholder sought to be charged owns all or most of the stock of the corporation; (2) whether the shareholder [\[*103\]](#) has subscribed to all of the capital stock of the corporation or otherwise caused its incorporation; (3) whether the corporation has grossly inadequate capital; (4) whether the shareholder uses the property of the corporation as his own; (5) whether the directors or executives of the corporation act independently in the interest of the corporation or simply take their orders [\[49\]](#) from the shareholder in the latter's interest; and (6) whether the formal legal requirements of the corporation are observed.

Id. § 41.10, at 616. As to the first consideration, the record reveals that Robert Dowdell solely owns Palisades Recycling and jointly owns Palisades Landfill and Valley Disposal. But as to the remaining factors, the record is relatively silent. While additional evidence might reveal that the corporate plaintiffs here and Palisades Recycling are indeed the alter egos of Robert Dowdell, we doubt whether the record, in its present state, supports such a finding.²² We need not, however, rule finally, as, even assuming privity, the issues are, as we have found, too dissimilar to support a determination of collateral estoppel.

[50] IV.

Dismissal of Plaintiffs' State Law Claims (Counts IV & V)

A.

The district court thought it was unclear from Plaintiffs' complaint whether they were bringing their supplemental state law claims (Counts IV and V) against C.V. Landfill or solely against the District. To the extent that the claims were brought against C.V. Landfill, the district court declined to retain jurisdiction, having already dismissed the federal antitrust claims. See United Mine Workers of Am. v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 726, 86 S. Ct. 1130, 16 L. Ed. 2d 218 (1966) ("Certainly, if the federal claims are dismissed before trial, . . . the state claims should be dismissed as well."). By vacating the district court's decision to dismiss Plaintiffs' federal antitrust claims, however, see supra part II.A, we have eliminated the grounds upon which the district court dismissed Plaintiffs' supplemental state law claims. Accordingly, we vacate the judgment dismissing Plaintiffs' state law claims against C.V. Landfill so that the district court may, in its discretion, exercise supplemental jurisdiction. See Block v. First Blood Assocs., 988 F.2d 344, 351 (2d Cir. 1993) [\[51\]](#) ("The decision whether to exercise pendent jurisdiction is within the discretion of the district court.").

B.

²² Were the district court free to write on a clean slate, it might have relied on a theory other than the alter ego doctrine to satisfy the first element of Vermont's Trepanier test (i.e., "preclusion is asserted against one who was a party or in privity with a party in the earlier action," 583 A.2d at 587). While HN16[↑] the traditional test for privity -- "whether the parties have really and substantially the same interest in the property in issue," First Wis. Mortgage Trust v. Wyman's, Inc., 139 Vt. 350, 428 A.2d 1119, 1124 (Vt. 1981) -- might not have yielded any clear result one way or the other, the district court might have looked to "some recent decisions [that] have stretched traditional doctrine and allowed collateral estoppel to be used against nonparties in some situations," Hiroshi Motomura, Using Judgments as Evidence, 70 Minn. L. Rev. 979, 1026 \(1986\). The "virtual representation" doctrine, for example, which says "that a nonparty is bound if a party who had the same interests litigated the prior case, even though the nonparty was neither a participant nor in privity with a party in the prior proceeding," id. at 1029, might apply if it were found "that . . . two corporations were taking advantage of their corporate separateness in order to sue [the same defendant] twice," American Renaissance Lines, Inc. v. Saxis S.S. Co., 502 F.2d 674, 678 (2d Cir. 1974).

Finding that Palisades Recycling brought the same claims in the earlier state court proceeding, the district court dismissed Plaintiffs' supplemental state law claims (Counts IV and V) against the District on the grounds that they were barred by collateral estoppel. Plaintiffs argue that the district court's decision must be reversed because the issues involved in the supplemental state law claims in this case are not the same as the questions put before the Washington Superior Court. Although Plaintiffs conceded below in their Memorandum in Opposition to Issue Preclusion that "there is [a] similarity in some of [the] issues at bar with those [*104] brought in the earlier litigation such as claims that the District's actions are ultra vires," they maintain that the ultra vires analysis changes when the claimant is an operator of a lined landfill as opposed to an operator of an unlined landfill. We agree with Plaintiffs.

Pursuant to Vermont law, HN17 "municipalities are responsible for the management and regulation of the storage and collection of solid wastes within their jurisdiction [52] in conformance with the state solid waste management plan authorized under chapter 159 of Title 10." ²³ Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 24, § 2202a\(a\) (Supp. 1991). Chapter 159 of Title 10 contains several provisions pertaining to lined and unlined landfills. While we do not describe them all, one provision, for instance, states that "new landfills placed in operation after July 1, 1987[,] shall be lined and shall collect and treat leachate." Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 10, § 6605\(d\) (Supp. 1992). Others provide:

HN18 (c) No later than July 1, 1991[,] the operating portion of each landfill shall be lined, if required under the provisions of 10 V.S.A. § 6605\(d\), except that those in operation as of July 1, 1987[,] that are certified to receive or actually receive less than 1,000 tons of municipal waste per year may be exempted from this requirement according to the provisions of subsection (d) of this section, or if, considering the factors established in subdivision (a)(3) of this section, the secretary finds that they will not create a significant risk to public health and that they will not cause irreparable harm to the environment.

(d) The secretary [of the agency of natural resources] may [53] authorize continued operation of a municipally owned unlined landfill which is in operation on July 1, 1992[,] and which will receive less than 1000 tons per year of waste for disposal

Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 10, § 6605a\(c\), \(d\) (Supp. 1992). Another provision requires the secretary, under certain circumstances, to "extend to July 1, 1992[,] the period for operating and closing an unlined landfill that has capacity available through July 1, 1992." Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 10, § 6605c\(b\) (Supp. 1992). Moreover, the secretary could, upon making certain findings, issue, until December 31, 1992, landfill extension orders "for the purpose of extending the July 1, 1992[,] landfill closure date for existing, operating, unlined landfills receiving waste as of January 1, 1992. This extension [could] run until October 9, 1993." Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 10, § 6605e\(a\) (Supp. 1992). The prerequisite findings for such an extension order includes, inter alia, a determination

HN19 (1) that the continued use of the unlined facility is necessary. Before finding that continued use of an unlined facility is necessary, with respect to a facility qualifying for an exemption under subdivision (a)(2) [54] of this section, the secretary shall first find that the planning entity lacks a lined landfill alternative that is reasonably available.

Vt. Stat. Ann. § 6605e\(b\)\(1\) (Supp. 1992) (emphasis added).

²³ Chapter 159 is entitled "Waste Management," and its purpose is to HN20 provide technical and financial leadership to municipalities for the siting of solid waste management facilities and the implementation of a program for the management and reduction of wastes that over the long term is sustainable, environmentally sound, and economically beneficial, and that encourages innovation and individual responsibility. The program should give priority to reducing the waste stream through recycling and through the reduction of nonbiodegradable and hazardous ingredients.

Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 10, § 6601\(5\) (Supp. 1992).

These statutes indicate that the Vermont General Assembly wished to promote the development and operation of lined landfills. A court deciding Plaintiffs' present claims must, therefore, consider whether [55] the District's actions, which allegedly adversely affect Dowdell's and Palisades Landfill's lined landfill, are ultra vires; that is, whether they exceed the powers conferred upon it by the Vermont laws cited above and others. The Washington Superior Court, which considered the impact of the District's action on unlined landfills, did not address this same issue. Indeed, the state court concluded that the District's actions were not ultra vires because its "contract with C.V. Landfill, Inc. . . . does not go beyond the District's grant of authority concerning its ability to [*105] assess and recover a surcharge on solid waste disposed of within the District." Therefore, because the issues underlying Plaintiffs' supplemental state law claims in this case differ from those presented in the previous state case, the district court's decision that Plaintiffs are barred by collateral estoppel from asserting Counts IV and V of their complaint must be reversed.

V.

Are Plaintiffs Entitled to Partial Summary Judgment on Count I for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief?

In the proceedings below, Plaintiffs²⁴ countered the District's motion for summary judgment, which sought dismissal [56] of Plaintiffs' claims on the grounds of res judicata and collateral estoppel, with their own cross-motion for partial summary judgment on Count IV and on their § 1983 -- dormant Commerce Clause -- claim (Count I). The district court, having decided to grant the District's motion, did not reach the merits of Plaintiffs' cross-motion, dismissing it as moot. Now that we have reversed the district court's preclusion rulings, Plaintiffs ask us to enter summary judgment in their favor on their dormant Commerce Clause claim. We decline to do so. Instead, we remand the issue to the district court so that it may decide the merits of Plaintiffs' motion. Cf. Hotel & Restaurant Employees Union Local 217 v. J.P. Morgan Hotel, 996 F.2d 561, 568 (2d Cir. 1993) (observing that, where a plaintiff's motion for summary judgment was denied as moot in light of the district court's dismissal of the complaint for lack of subject matter jurisdiction, the ordinary procedure, upon reinstatement of the complaint, is to remand the issue to the district court so that it may "have an opportunity to rule on the merits of the motion" (citing Cruden v. Bank of New York, 957 F.2d 961, 978 (2d Cir. 1992) [57] and Goetz v. Windsor Central School District, 698 F.2d 606, 610 (2d Cir. 1983))).

CONCLUSION

In accordance with the discussion herein, we (1) vacate the district court's decision granting C.V. Landfill's motion to dismiss Counts II and III (i.e., the federal antitrust claims) for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, and we remand these claims for further proceedings consistent with this opinion; (2) do not disturb the district court's ruling that C.V. Landfill's motion to dismiss Count I (i.e., the dormant Commerce Clause claim brought pursuant to § 1983) is moot because Count I asserts a claim only against the District; (3) vacate the district court's decision granting C.V. Landfill's motion to dismiss Counts IV and V (i.e., the state law claims) for lack of subject matter jurisdiction; (4) reverse the district court's decision granting the District's motion for summary judgment as to Counts [58] II and III on res judicata grounds; (5) reverse the district court's decision granting the District's motion for summary judgment as to Counts I, IV, and V on collateral estoppel grounds; and (6) vacate the district court's ruling that Plaintiffs' cross-motion for partial summary judgment as to Count I is moot so that the district court may have an opportunity to rule on the merits of this motion.

So ordered.

End of Document

²⁴ Valley Disposal was actually specified as the moving party.

United States v. Airline Tariff Publ'g Co.

United States District Court for the District of Columbia

August 10, 1994, Decided ; August 10, 1994, Filed, Entered

Civil Action: No. 92-2854 (SSH)

Reporter

1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11904 *; 1994-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,687

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Plaintiff, v. AIRLINE TARIFF PUBLISHING COMPANY, et al., Defendants.

Subsequent History: Petition granted by United States v. Am. Airlines, Inc., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27052 \(D.D.C., Sept. 22, 2004\)

Core Terms

fare, final judgment, airline, ticket, disseminating, compliance, Antitrust, airport, pair, visible, changes, distributing, advertising, designated, documents, modify, certification

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

HN1[Sherman Act, Jurisdiction

The United States district court has jurisdiction of the subject matter of an action under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, and over the parties thereto.

Judges: [*1] Harris

Opinion by: STANLEY S. HARRIS

Opinion

FINAL JUDGMENT

Plaintiff, United States of America, filed its Complaint on December 21, 1992. Plaintiff and defendants, by their respective attorneys, have consented to the entry of the Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law. This Final Judgment shall not be evidence against or an admission by any party with respect to any issue of fact or law. Therefore, before the taking of any testimony and without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and upon consent of the parties, it is hereby

ORDERED, ADJUDGED, AND DECREED, as follows:

I.

JURISDICTION

HN1[] This Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this action and of each of the parties consenting hereto. The Complaint states a claim upon which relief may be granted against the defendants under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1.

II.

DEFINITIONS

As used herein, the term:

(A) "airline" means any scheduled air passenger carrier as defined in 49 U.S.C. § 1301(3), its officers, directors, employees, agents, and any other persons acting on its behalf;

(B) "ATP" means the Airline [2] Tariff Publishing Company;

(C) "change" means abandon, add, alter, modify, discontinue, drop, exchange, replace, substitute, switch, or transform;

(D) "coupon" means a coupon or similar voucher offering either a discount off existing fares or a special fare not otherwise available;

(E) "CRS" means computer reservation system;

(F) "defendant airlines" means Alaska Airlines, Inc., American Airlines, Inc., Continental Airlines, Inc., Delta Air Lines, Inc., Northwest Airlines, Inc., and Trans World Airlines, Inc.;

(G) "defendants" means ATP, Alaska Airlines, Inc., American Airlines, Inc., Continental Airlines, Inc., Delta Air Lines, Inc., Northwest Airlines, Inc., and Trans World Airlines, Inc.;

(H) "document" means all "writings and recordings" as that phrase is defined in Rule 1001(1) of the Federal Rules of Evidence;

(I) "fare" means the price charged for domestic U.S. passenger transportation by any airline, and any ticket dates, restrictions, rules, terms or conditions governing the availability or use of any such price, but does not include any contract or other negotiated price or any coupon;

(J) "fare class" means a group of fares treated similarly for seat allocation purposes;

[3] (K) "first ticket date" means the first date that a fare is available for sale;

(L) "footnote" means the mechanism used by ATP to store and transmit first ticket dates, last ticket dates, and other limitations on the use of a fare;

(M) "footnote designator" means an alphanumeric designator used to identify a footnote;

(N) "including" means including but not limited to;

(O) "last ticket date" means the last date that a fare is available for sale;

(P) "matching city or airport pair" means a city or airport pair whose origin and destination points, respectively, are the same or within 100 miles of the origin and destination points, respectively, of the city or airport pair as to which the other airline's fare is applicable;

(Q) "new fare" means a fare that is different from an airline's existing fares in regard to price or any restrictions, rules, terms or conditions;

(R) "person" means any natural person, corporation, firm, company, sole proprietorship, partnership, association, institution, governmental unit, or other legal entity;

(S) "promotional fare" means a new fare that, in conjunction with its first being offered for sale, is advertised as being available for purchase for a [*4] specified and limited period of time;

(T) "relate to" means discuss, refer to, reflect, evidence, concern, or pertain to, in whole or in part;

(U) "sale fare" means a new fare that has a last ticket date at the time it is first offered for sale;

(V) "tag" means a code used by an airline solely to identify a group of fares for similar processing by ATP; and

(W) "travel date" means a date that limits when a passenger may travel on a fare.

III.

APPLICABILITY

(A) This Final Judgment applies to the defendants and to each of their successors, assigns, and to all other persons in active concert or participation with any of them who shall have received actual notice of the Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise.

(B) Nothing herein contained shall suggest that any portion of this Final Judgment is or has been created for the benefit of any third party and nothing herein shall be construed to provide any rights to any third party.

IV.

PROHIBITED CONDUCT

(A) Each of the defendant airlines is enjoined and restrained from:

(1) agreeing with any other airline to fix, establish, raise, stabilize, or maintain any fare;

(2) disseminating any first ticket dates, last ticket dates, [*5] or any other information concerning the defendant's planned or contemplated fares or changes to fares;

(3) making visible or disseminating its own tags or any other similar designating mechanism to any other airline;

(4) making visible or disseminating to any other airline any fare that is intended solely to communicate a defendant's planned or contemplated fares or changes to fares;

(5) making visible or disseminating two or more footnote designators that identify footnotes that contain identical information, or making visible or disseminating any footnote designator that identifies a footnote that contains no information; and

(6) using fare codes that convey information other than fare class or terms and conditions of sale or travel. (B) ATP is enjoined and restrained from:

(1) disseminating or conveying any fare with a first ticket date;

(2) making visible or disseminating an airline's tags or any other similar designating mechanism to any person other than that airline;

- (3) making visible or disseminating two or more footnote designators for any airline that identify footnotes that contain identical information, or making visible or disseminating any footnote designator that identifies [*6] a footnote that contains no information;
- (4) making visible or disseminating to any airline changes to any other airline's fares prior to disseminating or conveying such changes to the domestic CRSs; and
- (5) after reasonable inquiry, knowingly making visible or disseminating any changes to fares more frequently than the number of times a day that at least one domestic CRS updates its fare data base with such changes to fares.

V.

LIMITING CONDITIONS

(A) Nothing in this Final Judgment shall prohibit any defendant airline from submitting its fare changes to ATP for processing, or disseminating to CRSs or other reservations systems rules that do not contain or describe any first ticket date, last ticket date, or planned or contemplated fare level.

(B) Nothing in this Final Judgment shall prohibit any defendant airline from engaging in communications with another airline when such communications are reasonably necessary to establish, implement, or modify: (i) a joint, code share, commuter, or other interline fare with that airline; or (ii) an otherwise lawful transaction involving the provision of management services which may include pricing and yield management services.

(C) (1) [*7] Nothing in this Final Judgment shall prohibit any defendant airline from advertising that a promotional fare shall cease to be available for purchase on a specified date or after a specified period of time, or that a last ticket date on a fare shall be extended to a later date, and in conjunction therewith otherwise disseminating such information, provided that such advertising occurs (i) in media of general circulation or through mass mailings, and (ii) in a manner designed to directly reach a meaningful number of potential consumers likely to purchase such fare, provided further that, where a group of fares is being so advertised, it shall be sufficient to provide a general description of included city or airport pairs and fare levels without specifically identifying each city or airport pair and fare level.

(2) After any defendant airline, United Air Lines, Inc. or USAir, Inc. has disseminated a fare with a last ticket date or extended a last ticket date, or any non-defendant airline has disseminated a sale fare or extended the last ticket date on a sale fare, in any city or airport pair, nothing in Section IV(A)(1)-(3) and (5)-(6) of this Final Judgment shall prohibit a defendant [*8] airline from promptly thereafter, in matching city or airport pairs, (i) disseminating a new fare with the same price, restrictions, and last ticket date as that airline's fare, or (ii) extending to the same date, the last ticket date on a fare with the same price and restrictions as that airline's fare, provided that no defendant airline shall extend the last ticket date on any fare more than one time pursuant to Section V(C)(2).

(3) The dissemination of a last ticket date in accordance with Section V(C), in and of itself, does not constitute a violation of this Final Judgment.

(D) Nothing in this Final Judgment shall prohibit any defendant airline from disseminating public statements regarding contemplated changes in fares, provided such statements describe neither effective dates nor the particular amounts or rules relating to particular city or airport pairs or sets of city or airport pairs.

(E) Nothing in this Final Judgment shall prohibit any defendant from advocating or discussing, in accordance with the doctrine established in Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L.Ed. 2d 464, 81 S.Ct. 523 (1961), [*9] and its progeny, legislative, judicial or regulatory actions, or governmental policies or actions.

(F) The dissemination of travel dates, in and of itself, does not constitute a violation of this Final Judgment.

(G) Nothing in this Final Judgment shall be construed to prohibit any defendant airline, in unilaterally determining its own fares, from considering all publicly available information relating to the fares of other airlines.

(H) Regardless of what fares any airline offers in any city or airport pair, offering any fare in the same or any other city or airport pair, in and of itself, does not constitute a violation of this Final Judgment.

VI.

COMPLIANCE PROGRAM

(A) Each defendant is ordered to maintain an antitrust compliance program which shall include designating, within 30 days of entry of this Final Judgment, an Antitrust Compliance Officer with responsibility for accomplishing the antitrust compliance program and with the purpose of achieving compliance with this Final Judgment. The Antitrust Compliance Officer shall, on a continuing basis, supervise the review of the current and proposed activities of his or her defendant company to ensure that it complies with this [*10] Final Judgment.

(B) The Antitrust Compliance Officer for a defendant airline shall be responsible for accomplishing the following activities:

(1) distributing, within 60 days from the entry of this Final Judgment, a copy of this Final Judgment to all officers and employees who have any responsibility for approving, disapproving, analyzing, monitoring, studying, recommending, or implementing any fares, or disseminating any fares to ATP, CRSs or any airlines;

(2) distributing in a timely manner a copy of this Final Judgment to any officer or employee who succeeds to a position described in Section VI(B)(1);

(3) briefing annually those persons designated in Section VI(B)(1) on the meaning and requirements of this Final Judgment and the antitrust laws and advising them that the defendant's legal advisors are available to confer with them regarding compliance with the Final Judgment and the antitrust laws;

(4) obtaining from each officer or employee designated in Section VI(B)(1) an annual written certification that he or she: (1) has read, understands, and agrees to abide by the terms of this Final Judgment; and (2) has been advised and understands that his or her failure to comply [*11] with this Final Judgment may result in conviction for criminal contempt of court; and

(5) maintaining a record of recipients to whom the Final Judgment has been distributed and from whom the certification in Section VI(B)(4) has been obtained.

(C) The Antitrust Compliance Officer for ATP shall be responsible for accomplishing the following activities:

(1) distributing, within 60 days from the entry of this Final Judgment, a copy of this Final Judgment to all officers of ATP;

(2) distributing in a timely manner a copy of this Final Judgment to any person who succeeds an officer;

(3) briefing annually all officers on the meaning and requirements of this Final Judgment and the antitrust laws and advising them that the defendant's legal advisors are available to confer with them regarding compliance with the Final Judgment and the antitrust laws;

(4) obtaining from each officer an annual written certification that he or she: (1) has read, understands, and agrees to abide by the terms of this Final Judgment; and (2) has been advised and understands that his or her failure to comply with this Final Judgment may result in conviction for criminal contempt of court; and

(5) maintaining [*12] a record of recipients to whom the Final Judgment has been distributed and from whom the certification in Section VI(C)(4) has been obtained.

(D) At any time, if a defendant's Antitrust Compliance Officer learns of any past or future violations of Section IV of this Final Judgment, that defendant shall, within 45 days after such knowledge is obtained, take appropriate action to terminate or modify the activity so as to comply with this Final Judgment.

(E) For each last ticket date a defendant airline disseminates through ATP or a CRS pursuant to Section V(C), that defendant airline (1) shall retain a record of the dates that such last ticket date was disseminated in the system and the specific fares and city or airport pairs to which the last ticket date was attached, and (2) shall retain either (a) a representative copy or transcript of its advertisement that was used in conjunction with any such last ticket date and a record of the use of any such advertising or (b) a representative record of the fare to which the defendant was responding. Such records and representative copies or transcripts shall be maintained in a manner that facilitates prompt retrieval and review of the documentation [*13] required by this section. These documents shall be retained for a period of three years from the first date any such advertising appeared or the first date any such last ticket date appeared in ATP or a CRS.

VII.

CERTIFICATION

(A) Within 75 days after the entry of this Final Judgment, each defendant shall certify to the plaintiff whether it has designated an Antitrust Compliance Officer and has distributed the Final Judgment in accordance with Section VI above.

(B) For 10 years after the entry of this Final Judgment, on or before its anniversary date, each defendant shall file with the plaintiff a statement as to the fact and manner of its compliance with the provisions of Section VI.

VIII.

PLAINTIFF ACCESS

(A) To determine or secure compliance with this Final Judgment and for no other purpose, duly authorized representatives of the plaintiff shall, upon written request of the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to any defendant made to its principal office, be permitted, subject to any legally recognized privilege:

- (1) access during such defendant's office hours to inspect and copy all documents in the possession or under [*14] the control of such defendant, who may have counsel present, relating to any matters contained in this Final Judgment; and
- (2) subject to the reasonable convenience of such defendant and without restraint or interference from it, to interview officers, employees or agents of such defendant, who may have counsel present, regarding such matters.

(B) Upon the written request of the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division made to any defendant's principal office, such defendant shall submit such written reports, under oath if requested, relating to any matters contained in this Final Judgment as may be reasonably requested, subject to any legally recognized privilege.

(C) No information or documents obtained by the means provided in Section VIII shall be divulged by the plaintiff to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Executive Branch of the United States, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party, or for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment, or as otherwise required by law.

(D) If at the time information or documents are furnished by any defendant to plaintiff, such defendant [*15] represents and identifies in writing the material in any such information or documents to which a claim of protection may be asserted under Rule 26(c)(7) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, and such defendant marks each pertinent page of such material, "Subject to claim of protection under Rule 26(c)(7) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure," then 10 days notice shall be given by plaintiff to such defendant prior to divulging such material in any legal proceeding (other than a grand jury proceeding) to which that defendant is not a party.

IX.

FURTHER ELEMENTS OF THE FINAL JUDGMENT

- (A) This Final Judgment shall expire ten years from the date of its entry.
- (B) Section IV(B) of this Final Judgment shall become effective three months from the date of entry of this Final Judgment.
- (C) If, subsequent to the entry of this Final Judgment, it or a previously entered stipulated final judgment in this matter is modified in any respect, any defendant, in its sole discretion, may move this Court, and the Court shall grant such a motion, to substitute such modified stipulated final judgment for this Final Judgment.
- (D) Jurisdiction is retained by this Court for the purpose of enabling [*16] any of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to this Court at any time for further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out or construe this Final Judgment, to modify or terminate any of its provisions, to enforce compliance, and to punish violations of its provisions.
- (E) Entry of this Final Judgment is in the public interest.

DATED: August 10, 1994

Stanley S. Harris

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

End of Document

Allen-Myland, Inc. v. IBM Corp.

United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit

January 24, 1994, Argued ; August 12, 1994, Filed

No. 93-1586

Reporter

33 F.3d 194 *; 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 21368 ; 1994-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,685

ALLEN-MYLAND, INC., Appellant V. INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS MACHINES CORPORATION

Subsequent History: [\[1\]](#) Certiorari Denied December 11, 1994, Reported at: 1994 U.S. LEXIS 8975.

Prior History: ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA. (D.C. Civil Action No. 85-06166).

Core Terms

upgrades, district court, mainframes, pricing, installation, leasing company, relevant market, market power, inventory, antitrust, large-scale, smaller, lease, machines, software, manufacturers, peripherals, costs, market share, technology, users, customers, submarket, percent, memory, tied product, terms, tying product, compete, reconfiguration

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN1 [↓] Tying Arrangements, Sherman Act Violations

In a tying arrangement, the seller sells one item, known as the tying product, on the condition that the buyer also purchases another item, known as the tied product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN2 Tying Arrangements, Clayton Act

Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, declares only contracts in restraint of trade illegal. The antitrust concern over tying arrangements is limited to those situations in which the seller can exploit its power in the market for the tying product to force buyers to purchase the tied product when they otherwise would not, thereby restraining competition in the tied product market. Market power is defined as the ability to raise prices or to require purchasers to accept burdensome terms that could not be exacted in a completely competitive market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN3 Tying Arrangements, Defenses

The first inquiry in any tying case under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, is whether the defendant has sufficient market power over the tying product, which requires a finding that two separate product markets exist and a determination of precisely what the tying and tied product markets are. If the defendant is found to have sufficient market power in the tying product market, then the tie may be a "per se" violation of the Sherman Act. This tie is condemned if the probability that the contractual arrangement improperly restrains trade is so high that a judicial inquiry into the actual prevailing market conditions, including possible pro-competitive justifications for the tie, is deemed unprofitable.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN4 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Assuming the court finds sufficient market power, it must then decide whether a substantial amount of interstate commerce has been affected by the tie. The United States Supreme Court has defined "substantial" in absolute dollar terms as an amount which is not de minimis in terms of the total volume of sales tied by the sales policy under challenge.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN5 Private Actions, Standing

To have standing to bring a private antitrust action, the plaintiff must show "fact of damage," defined as some harm flowing from the antitrust violation. The amount of the damage is not important for antitrust standing; it is sufficient that some damage has occurred. There must, however, be some causal link between the damage and the violation of the antitrust laws. Put another way, the harm must be one that the antitrust laws were designed to prevent.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

HN6 Standards of Review, De Novo Review

To the extent that the court's alleged errors were in formulating or applying legal principles, a court's review is, of course, plenary.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Clearly Erroneous Review

HN7 Standards of Review, Clearly Erroneous Review

Courts review a court's findings of fact under the clearly erroneous standard of review.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN8 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The relevant product market is composed of products that have reasonable interchangeability for the purposes for which they are produced: price, use and qualities considered.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN9 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The key test for determining whether one product is a substitute for another is whether there is a cross-elasticity of demand between them: in other words, whether the demand for the second good would respond to changes in the price of the first.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN10 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

When a business allows its own important judgments constantly to be affected by a statistical survey unflaggingly made, diligently kept current, and repeatedly consulted at least by subordinate advisers to the officers, then the statistical material may be used by a court to some degree as reliable evidence against the business.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN11 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Market share is just a way of estimating market power, which is the ultimate consideration. When there are better ways to estimate market power, the court should use them.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN12 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Notwithstanding the extent of an antitrust defendant's market share, the ease or difficulty with which competitors enter the market is an important factor in determining whether the defendant has true market power, the power to raise prices.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN13 [Regulated Practices, Market Definition]

Rapid technological progress may provide a climate favorable to increased concentration of market power rather than the opposite. Moreover, a decline in prices does not necessarily imply an absence of monopoly power; a fair profit might have been made at even lower cost to users.

Counsel: ROBERT G. LEVY, ESQUIRE (Argued), WILLARD K. TOM, ESQUIRE, JOEL E. HOFFMAN, ESQUIRE, JAMES H. CLINGER, ESQUIRE, Sutherland, Asbill & Brennan, 1275 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W. Washington, DC 20004-2404, CARL A. SOLANO, ESQUIRE, Schnader, Harrison, Segal & Lewis, 1600 Market Street, Suite 3600, Philadelphia, PA 19103, Attorneys for Appellant.

ROBERT N. FELTOON, ESQUIRE, Conrad, O'Brien, Gellman & Rohn, 1515 Market Street, 16th Floor, Philadelphia, PA 19102, EVAN R. CHESLER, ESQUIRE (Argued), PETER T. BARBUR, ESQUIRE, Cravath, Swaine & Moore, 825 Eighth Avenue, Worldwide Plaza, New York, NY 10019-7415, HOWARD WEBER, ESQUIRE, Davis, Scott, Weber & Edwards, P.C. 100 Park Avenue, New York, NY 10017, Attorneys for Appellee.

ALAN J. WEINSCHEL, ESQUIRE, ROBERT P. STEFANSKI, ESQUIRE, LUCIA MANDARINO, ESQUIRE, Weil, Gotshal & Manges, 767 Fifth Avenue, New York, NY 10153, Attorneys for Amici-Appellants.¹

Judges: Before: [2] MANSMANN and NYGAARD, Circuit Judges and SEITZ, Senior Circuit Judge.

Opinion by: NYGAARD

Opinion

[*198] OPINION OF THE COURT

NYGAARD, Circuit Judge.

Allen-Myland, Inc. ("AMI") appeals from the district court's judgment in favor of IBM in this intricate antitrust tying case. We conclude that the district court erred and will vacate its judgment and remand the cause for further proceedings.²

[3] I. FACTS and PROCEDURE

¹ Amici consist of the Computer Dealers and Lessors Association, Inc. Digital Dealers Association, and National Association of Telecommunications Dealers.

² Although upon review we concentrate on errors, it is well to say at the outset that in a case that has been litigated as vigorously as this one, either finding facts or reviewing those findings for clear error is no easy task. The thirty-volume record on appeal contains 17,469 pages of court filings, trial and deposition transcripts, and exhibits. The district court, of course, was in even a more difficult position. Over 3.5 million pages of discovery documents were produced and 65 days of deposition testimony were taken. The trial transcript alone fills 1,750 pages, there were 2,750 pages of deposition testimony admitted, and there were no fewer than 734 trial exhibits.

A. Mainframes and Upgrades

The facts underlying this nine-year-old dispute are minutely detailed and quite voluminous. The district court has set forth these facts in great detail in its forty-four page opinion, Allen-Myland, Inc. v. IBM Corp., 693 F. Supp. 262 \(E.D. Pa. 1988\), and we will present only a brief summary here.

IBM is the world's largest manufacturer of large-scale mainframe computers. These machines have the capacity to process millions of records at a time and manage a tremendous volume of information, making modern operations possible for large corporations, public utilities and government agencies. Without them, business would soon slow or halt. Mainframes are physically large machines, generally occupying significant floor space and requiring a full-time staff to keep them in operation. Needless to say, they are quite expensive, with prices commonly in excess of $ 1 million.

Mainframes are available in a wide range of computing capacities, to fit the needs of each individual customer. One common measure of capacity is computing speed, measured in millions of instructions per second ("MIPS"). IBM mainframes [4] may also be upgraded, as its customers' computing needs change over time, in what is known as a MIPS upgrade.

Many IBM mainframes are not purchased outright from IBM by their end users, but [*199] are instead leased through third-party leasing companies such as CMI and Comdisco.³ A mainframe will typically be leased to several end users during its life cycle, and then when obsolete will be scrapped. Often, when the lease term expires and the mainframe returns to the lessor, the computer will need to be reconfigured to meet the needs of the next lessee.

Companies like AMI found a profitable market reconfiguring mainframe computers such as the IBM 303X series.⁴ Lessors could not afford to have their machines idle and generating no revenue while waiting for a reconfiguration, yet IBM often took months to install an upgrade. AMI, on the other hand, would turn the [5] job around in a matter of only a few days. Either AMI or the leasing company would buy the required parts outright from IBM for inventory on what were known as SWRPQ terms, meaning that IBM installation was not included. It would then install the parts in the user's computer, set up the appropriate software and test the system. Old parts could often then be used on another computer. Because the 303X series of computers was based on "MST" circuit board technology, which required significant technical skill and time to reconfigure, AMI was in a position to add considerable value in terms of its labor. As a result, AMI grew into a company with $ 50 million in annual revenue.

In 1980, however, IBM introduced its next generation of mainframe computers, the 308X series, which caused a major erosion in AMI's reconfiguration business. These machines used a new technology, the thermal conduction [6] module, or TCM. A TCM is essentially a water-cooled can containing a much greater density of circuits than the system it replaced. Because more circuitry can be placed in a TCM, there are fewer TCMs to replace; hence, there is much less labor involved in performing an upgrade on a TCM-based computer than on earlier models.

In marketing its 308X series, IBM used a policy known as net pricing. Under this policy, IBM installation labor was bundled in with the price of the parts for TCM-based MIPS upgrades; SWRPQ pricing was either eliminated or was priced prohibitively high. In addition, any old TCMs recovered from a mainframe during reconfiguration became IBM's property. As a result, customers desiring non-IBM installation of upgrades were required to pay IBM's labor charge anyway. And because the net pricing policy limited the supply of the TCMs on the open market, acquiring parts from sources other than IBM became impractical.

IBM contended that net pricing's purpose was to insure that the old TCMs recovered from reconfigured machines were returned to IBM. TCMs are extremely durable and can easily be refurbished to "equivalent to new" condition.

³ IBM itself is barred from leasing computers to end users under the terms of a 1956 consent decree entered into with the United States in another antitrust case.

⁴ An "X" in an IBM model number indicates that several numerical designators may be used in that position, e.g., 3031, 3033.

IBM, faced with a manufacturing capacity [7] shortage, stated that it merely wanted to refurbish TCMs that were returned for later reuse in a future upgrade or in a brand-new machine. As for bundling the labor charge, IBM contended its purpose was to ensure that it got its TCMs back, which was enhanced when IBM personnel performed the labor.

B. Procedural History

AMI, however, soon found that much of its reconfiguration business was drying up and filed this action. AMI's four-count complaint alleged that IBM violated sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2, and also asserted state law unfair competition and tortious interference claims. IBM counterclaimed for copyright infringement of its software programs and documentation manuals; IBM also asserted state law counterclaims for breach of contract and tortious interference.

AMI's section 1 claim was tried in a bench trial, contending that IBM had tied its upgrade installation services to the parts needed to perform the upgrades.⁵ AMI [*200] alleged that this tying arrangement constituted a per se violation of the Sherman Act; alternatively, it asserted that the tie was still a section 1 violation under the rule of reason.

[8] The district court found that IBM's net pricing structure did not constitute a per se section 1 violation, for two reasons: first, that IBM's share of the relevant market was not high enough to impose per se liability, id. at 270-83; and second, that net pricing did not foreclose AMI from a "viable business opportunity," id. at 283-93. The court also found that net pricing did not violate section 1 under a rule of reason analysis because sufficient procompetitive reasons existed for it.⁶ Id. at 293-98.

Later, the district court tried most of the remaining claims and counterclaims, and concluded that AMI was liable to IBM for copyright infringement and violations of the Lanham Act. Allen-Myland, Inc. v. IBM Corp., 746 F. Supp. 520 \(E.D. Pa. 1990\).⁷ The court also entered judgment for IBM on AMI's Sherman Act section 1 claim, concluding that such a claim could not possibly succeed unless its earlier ruling on market power were reversed. Id. at 525 n.1, 559.

Meanwhile, IBM had filed another Lanham Act action against AMI in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, which was transferred to the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. Moreover, certain issues concerning IBM's relief against AMI on its counterclaims remained unresolved. On AMI's motion, the district court issued an order under Fed. R. Civ. P. 54\(b\) declaring that its 1988 opinion resolving the antitrust issues constituted a final judgment. Allen-Myland, Inc. v. IBM Corp., 1993-1 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P 70,244, 25 Fed. R. Serv. 3d

(Callaghan) 1353, 1993 WL 169849 (E.D. Pa. May 14, 1993). This appeal followed.

II. OVERVIEW [10] of the LAW of TYING ARRANGEMENTS

The overarching issue in this appeal is AMI's claim that the district court erred when it found that net pricing was not a per se violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act. HN1⁸ In a tying arrangement, the seller sells one item, known as the tying product, on the condition that the buyer also purchases another item, known as the tied product. Town Sound & Custom Tops, Inc. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 959 F.2d 468, 475 \(3d Cir.\) (in banc), cert. denied, 121 L. Ed. 2d 139, 113 S. Ct. 196 (1992). HN2⁹ Section 1 of the Sherman Act declares only contracts in restraint of trade illegal. Thus, the antitrust concern over tying arrangements is limited to those situations in which the seller can exploit its power in the market for the tying product to force buyers to purchase the tied product when they otherwise would not, thereby restraining competition in the tied product market. Market power is defined as the ability "to raise prices or to require purchasers to accept burdensome terms that could not be exacted in a completely competitive market." United States Steel Corp. v. Fortner Enters., Inc. ("Fortner II"), 429 U.S. 610, 620, 97 S. Ct. 861, 867-68, 51 L. Ed. 2d 80 \(1977\). [11]

⁵ In addition, AMI alleged that IBM's Installation and Warranty Service Charge (IWSC) constituted an unreasonable restraint of trade. The district court found for IBM on this theory, and AMI has not appealed from that finding.

⁶ The district court's decision under the rule of reason has not been appealed.

⁷ AMI later moved for reconsideration, but that motion was denied. Allen-Myland, Inc. v. IBM Corp., 770 F. Supp. 1004 \(E.D. Pa. 1991\).

On the other hand, if the seller does not have sufficient power in the tying product market, buyers wanting to purchase the tied product from another source will simply avoid the tie by buying the tying product from another supplier. See Town Sound, 959 F.2d at 476 (discussing Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 11-14, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 1558-59, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 (1984)). Such a tie will not restrain an appreciable amount of trade, and accordingly, will not constitute an antitrust violation.

HN3[] The first inquiry in any section 1 tying case is whether the defendant has sufficient market power over the tying product, which requires a finding that two separate product markets exist and a determination of precisely what the tying and tied product markets [*201] are. See Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 21, 104 S. Ct. at 1562-63. If the defendant is found to have sufficient market power in the tying product market, then the tie may be a "per se" violation of the Sherman Act. This tie is condemned if the probability that the contractual [12] arrangement improperly restrains trade is so high that a judicial inquiry into the actual prevailing market conditions, including possible procompetitive justifications for the tie, is deemed unprofitable. Id. at 15-18 & n.25, 104 S. Ct. at 1560-61 & n.25; Town Sound, 959 F.2d at 477.

HN4[] Assuming the court finds sufficient market power, it must then decide whether "a substantial amount of interstate commerce" has been affected by the tie. See, e.g., Town Sound, 959 F.2d at 477. The Supreme Court has defined "substantial" in absolute dollar terms as an amount which is not de minimis in terms of the "total volume of sales tied by the sales policy under challenge . . ." Fortner Enters., Inc. v. United States Steel Corp.

("Fortner I"), 394 U.S. 495, 501-02, 89 S. Ct. 1252, 1257-58, 22 L. Ed. 2d 495 \(1969\) ($ 190,000 sufficient).

Finally, HN5[] to have standing to bring a private antitrust action, the plaintiff must show "fact of damage," defined as some harm flowing from the antitrust violation. Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 114 n.9, 89 S. Ct. 1562, 1571-72 n.9, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129 \(1969\); [13] Pitchford v. Pepsi, Inc., 531 F.2d 92, 98-99 \(3d Cir. 1975\), cert. denied, 426 U.S. 935, 96 S. Ct. 2649, 49 L. Ed. 2d 387 (1976). The amount of the damage is not important for antitrust standing; it is sufficient that some damage has occurred. There must, however, be some causal link between the damage and the violation of the antitrust laws. Put another way, the harm must be one that the antitrust laws were designed to prevent. Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488-89, 97 S. Ct. 690, 697, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 \(1977\).

III. SCOPE of the RELEVANT MARKET

A. Introduction

AMI asserts that the tying product is the "large-scale mainframe computer," defined as computers that are "among the largest in memory capacity, the fastest in computing speed, and the most expensive of computers available." Allen-Myland, 693 F. Supp. at 270-71. Alternatively, it sets forth two submarkets consisting of the parts and services required for the conversion and upgrade of either IBM mainframes or all [*14] manufacturers' mainframes. AMI defines the tied product as the labor required to install upgrades.

The district court found AMI's proposed market definition and submarkets to be too narrow. When the court broadened the market to include various substitutes that it believed shared cross-elasticity of demand ⁸ with large-scale mainframes, IBM's market share dropped from as high as 79% to under 34.4%, too low to impose per se liability. See Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 26-27, 104 S. Ct. at 1566 (30% market share insufficient); Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 611-12, 73 S. Ct. 872, 882, 97 L. Ed. 1277 \(1953\) (33-40% market share insufficient). The court stated:

⁸ "The outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 1523-24, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 \(1962\).

[15]

Standing alone, AMI's market share evidence tends to show that IBM enjoys substantial economic power. However, AMI's definitions of large scale mainframes and the relevant market are flawed in several respects and tend to overstate IBM's market share and power.

Allen-Myland, 693 F. Supp. at 271. The district court defined the relevant market to include not only large-scale mainframes, but also added upgrades to large-scale mainframes, leased and smaller capacity computers, peripheral products and software, "box swaps," and upgrades using customer-provided parts to the relevant market. HN6 To the extent that the district court's alleged errors were in formulating or applying legal principles, our review is, of course, plenary. HN7 We review the district court's findings of fact, however, under the clearly erroneous standard of review.

[*202] B. Leasing Companies

The district court first added leasing companies into AMI's proposed market definition. It reasoned as follows:

Leasing companies, such as Comdisco and CMI, purchase computer equipment from manufacturers and lease it to users. From a consumer's standpoint, they are an alternative source [16] of computer equipment. They compete with IBM. Leasing companies own approximately 40 percent of all large scale mainframe computers, as defined by AMI. Prof. Levin testified that IBM's share of the market would be reduced by an amount he was unable to determine if leasing companies were taken into account in AMI's market definition. If leasing company transactions involving computers comparable and in many cases identical to the large scale mainframes marketed by IBM are included in the relevant market, and the market is measured on a "transaction basis," IBM's share of the market, according to Prof. Almarin Phillips, who testified for IBM as an expert economist, drops to 34.4 percent. Prof. Phillips testified that such a share would not reflect "overwhelming" activity in the market on IBM's part.

Allen-Myland, 693 F. Supp. at 273-74 (footnote and record citations omitted). We cannot affirm the district court's finding that leasing companies form a part of the relevant market.

First, the district court relied on the testimony of Professor Levin, AMI's own expert, as an admission that IBM's market share would have to be reduced if leasing companies [17] were added to the relevant market. This reliance is misplaced. Although Professor Levin did affirmatively answer the tautological question whether "leasing companies are competitors of IBM when they market IBM manufactured equipment in competition with IBM," this and our review of the trial transcript indicate that he neither addressed the issue of market share reduction nor made an admission about it.

More importantly, we think that the opinion reveals an analytical flaw. Leasing companies lease both new and used computers. They purchase new mainframes from IBM and lease them to end users; when the lease term is up, if the mainframe is not obsolete and can be leased again, the leasing company will place it with another end user. In addition, leasing companies deal in both IBM and non-IBM computers. There are important legal and competitive distinctions between the various types of equipment in which the leasing companies deal, so they cannot be lumped together.

New computers are, of course, already in the relevant market as defined by AMI. It was therefore incorrect to add them in again when end users lease new computers rather than purchase them outright. In this situation, leasing [18] companies provide nothing more than an alternate way of financing a new computer, but do nothing to increase the supply of new machines. See Transamerica Computer Co. v. IBM Corp. \(In re IBM Peripheral EDP Devices Antitrust Litig.\), 481 F. Supp. 965, 979 \(N.D. Cal. 1979\), aff'd, 698 F.2d 1377 \(9th Cir.\), cert. denied, 464

U.S. 955, 104 S. Ct. 370, 78 L. Ed. 2d 329 (1983). They do not increase the number of new mainframes, as leasing companies still must purchase them from their manufacturers. Thus, to the extent that IBM had the power to set prices, that power would not be diminished, or at most would only be slightly diminished,⁹ by its sales to leasing companies rather than end users. Since these purchases are already in the relevant market, it was double counting to also include them as part of the leasing market. Cf. id.

[19] With respect to leases of used computers, there is a significant difference whether those machines were made by IBM or by some other manufacturer. Where used IBM computers are leased, we think that United States v. Aluminum Co. of America ("Alcoa"), 148 F.2d 416 \(2d Cir. 1945\)¹⁰ is [*203] apposite. There, Alcoa controlled 90 percent of the market for virgin aluminum ingot. It sought to reduce its market share for antitrust purposes by arguing that secondary ingot derived from scrap competed with virgin ingot for sales. The court held that because all secondary ingot was ultimately derived from virgin ingot, Alcoa, by properly exercising its power over the supply of virgin, could indirectly control the supply of secondary as well. Id. at 425.

[20] Alcoa's analysis is persuasive. Indeed, we think the case is even stronger here for excluding the secondary market. Refined aluminum can be melted down and reused repeatedly, and in any event, products made with it may last for decades before they are scrapped and the aluminum is recycled. It therefore may have been quite difficult for Alcoa to estimate future supply and demand for aluminum ingot over a long period of time with sufficient accuracy to maximize its profits by manipulating the supply of virgin ingot it produced. See 2 Phillip Areeda & Donald F. Turner, Antitrust Law § 530c (1978).

Computers, however, have considerably more limited lives than aluminum ingot. Technology and price/performance ratios have been advancing so rapidly in the computer industry that used machines cannot be re-leased indefinitely.¹¹ Accordingly, a powerful manufacturer like IBM was in a position to maximize its profits by carefully controlling the number of mainframes that would later appear on the used leasing market. This is particularly true when, as here, that control was enhanced by IBM's policy of recapturing old parts that could otherwise have been used to extend the useful [21] service lives of existing used mainframes by allowing them to be upgraded and placed with new customers. We therefore conclude that the district court erred when it added leases of used IBM mainframes into the relevant market.¹²

⁹ Conceivably, a few large, sophisticated buyers could place certain limits on even a dominant seller's power to set prices. There is no evidence that such pressure was applied here.

¹⁰ Although Alcoa was decided by the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, the procedural circumstances under which it reached that court give it added weight as precedent. Under the then-existing version of 15 U.S.C. § 29, appeals from the decrees of district courts in antitrust cases where the United States was a complainant would lie only to the Supreme Court. In Alcoa, however, a sufficient number of justices were recused that a quorum could not be obtained; accordingly, the Supreme Court, pursuant to the above statute, remanded the case to the three most senior judges of the Second Circuit: Learned Hand (the author of Alcoa), Augustus N. Hand, and Swan. The Supreme Court itself has recognized the special weight of the Alcoa opinion. See American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 811-13 & n.10, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 1140 & n.10, 90 L. Ed. 1575 \(1946\).

¹¹ Moreover, IBM's net pricing and parts recapture policies further reduced whatever control the leasing companies might have had over the prices of used equipment. By recapturing old parts from upgraded mainframes, IBM effectively curtailed the leasing companies' ability to reconfigure their used machines into different models that could have competed against IBM's offerings over the medium term. This effect is similar to that caused by IBM's past practices of offering tabulating and computer equipment only for lease and not for sale. These practices also spawned antitrust litigation, resulting in a 1935 injunction and a 1956 consent decree. See Control Data Corp. v. IBM Corp., 306 F. Supp. 839 \(D. Minn. 1969\), aff'd, 430 F.2d 1277 \(8th Cir. 1970\).

¹² We also disagree with the district court's view that AMI admitted that leasing companies "compete with IBM and constrain IBM's ability to set prices or exclude competition in the market for new large scale main frame computers." Allen-Myland, 693 F. Supp. at 274. The district court cited AMI's proposed finding of fact 29 in support of its conclusion, but AMI asserted only that IBM and lessors compete in the placement of mainframes with end users; in other words, IBM installs computers, and so do Comdisco and CMI. This does not constitute an admission on market cross-elasticity or the scope of the relevant market.

[22] On the other hand, to the extent that leasing companies deal in used, non-IBM mainframes that have not already been counted in the sales market, these machines belong in the relevant market for large-scale mainframe computers. Unlike IBM, there is no allegation that the manufacturers of these computers possess the market power to control prices, much less that they would do so in concert with IBM.¹³ When these computers are placed in service by leasing companies, they provide an alternative that limits IBM's power in the market.¹⁴

[23] [*204] Accordingly, we conclude that the district court erred when it included all leasing company transactions in the relevant market. On remand, the court should include only leases of used, non-IBM mainframes and determine the extent to which those leases reduce IBM's market share.

C. Box Swaps

The district court also added "box swaps" -- replacing an existing computer with a more powerful, new or used computer -- into the relevant market, although it did not calculate the degree to which these box swaps eroded IBM's market share.

The analytical problem with this finding is similar to the error with respect to leasing companies. To the extent that a box swap involves purchasing a new IBM or a new or used non-IBM mainframe computer, it constitutes double counting to add box swaps to the market because those sales are already included in the market definition. On the other hand, if a used IBM computer is used in the swap, then to include that machine in the market is incorrect under Alcoa for the same reason it was error to include them in the leasing market.

D. Used Parts Upgrades

Including "used parts upgrades" in the relevant market was also error. A used parts upgrade [24] is an upgrade performed with parts obtained from another computer, either one belonging to the organization needing the upgrade or one belonging to a leasing company. See Allen-Myland, 693 F. Supp. at 277.

The district court correctly recognized that the viability of used parts upgrades could be limited by the scarcity of the necessary parts. It then relied on the many memory and channel upgrades and downgrades that had been performed with used parts not acquired from IBM. The record indicates, however, that most memory and channel upgrade parts are not based on TCM technology and were thus not subject to IBM's net pricing and parts recapture policies. The parts required for MIPS upgrades, however, were mostly TCM-based and subject to net pricing and recapture. Thus, that other non-net priced parts were readily available does not support the implicit conclusion that there was no scarcity of MIPS upgrade parts.

Even if used parts were available to perform MIPS upgrades, the record does not suggest any manufacturer of those parts other than IBM. Hence, the reasoning of Alcoa is as controlling here as it was for used IBM computers. To the extent [25] that IBM controls the supply and price of the new mainframes from which upgrade parts must be salvaged, it has the power to indirectly control those upgrades as well. Accordingly, it would have been error to include used parts upgrades in the relevant market even if parts had been available.

E. Smaller Capacity Computers

¹³Indeed, the so-called "plug-compatible manufacturers" have built their businesses around providing mainframes and peripherals compatible with, but in competition with those of IBM.

¹⁴This holds most true for plug-compatible mainframes. There is actually a considerable question to what extent non-compatible computers are a realistic short-run alternative for a customer whose computer software and data are tailored to IBM mainframes. We do not reach the issue, however, as Allen-Myland is constrained by its own definition of the market as "large scale mainframe computers," regardless of manufacturer or compatibility. See Edward J. Sweeney & Sons, Inc. v. Texaco, Inc., 637 F.2d 105, 117 \(3d Cir. 1980\) (antitrust plaintiff held to theory advanced in district court), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 911, 101 S. Ct. 1981, 68 L. Ed. 2d 300 \(1981\).

The district court considered AMI's proposed market definition to be too narrow because it failed to include "smaller capacity computers" -- computers below the size and sophistication of a large-scale mainframe that nevertheless would be reasonable substitutes, either singly or in combination. See Allen-Myland, 693 F. Supp. at 274-75. AMI argues that it was error for the district court to include these smaller machines because there was not sufficient evidence of substitutability between these two types of computers. The district court rejected AMI's argument, citing evidence that smaller computers had effectively displaced mainframes in certain applications and noting a trend toward the replacement of large, centralized systems with "distributed" systems consisting of greater numbers of smaller capacity computers. Id.

AMI [26] argues on appeal that this reasoning was flawed because it failed to consider the rapid development of technology over the life [*205] cycle of a typical computer. It agrees that some installations that initially required older generation mainframes might be satisfied with "smaller" machines when it came time to replace their mainframes, because the smaller machines would by then have all the power of the earlier mainframes. Nevertheless, AMI contends, the fact that some users of older mainframe computers might switch to smaller capacity machines proves nothing about whether those smaller machines effectively compete against IBM's current, more powerful mainframes, which are the focus of this litigation. AMI's argument is sound, but unavailing. There was testimony admitted at trial indicating that at least one smaller capacity computer, the Hewlett-Packard HP 3000 series, competed against the IBM 308X series "in many applications." The district court was entitled to, and did, credit this evidence. Allen-Myland, 693 F. Supp. at 275.

The amici argue that the district court failed to consider the problem of "lock-in." Although mainframes and smaller capacity computers [27] may be substitutable when a new computer application is being developed or when an existing application is no longer useful and must be rewritten anyway, they argue that there are significant switching costs that prevent this from happening in the short run. For example, to "port" an existing application from a mainframe to a smaller computer, the applications software may have to be rewritten, the data files may have to be converted to new formats, and personnel may have to be extensively trained on the new system. The costs of doing so and the delay involved could well cause the computer user to remain with a mainframe-based system rather than convert to a smaller computer; indeed, one court has noted that, for compatibility reasons, over 80 percent of users remain loyal to the manufacturer of their original systems. See Transamerica, 481 F. Supp. at 980 & n.32.

Ordinarily, we would not consider this argument because it was not raised in the district court. This case, however, is unusual in that the district court reached its decision in 1988, but the antitrust issues did not become final and appealable until 1993. During that hiatus, the Supreme Court [28] issued its decision in Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. ___, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 \(1992\). Because Kodak is directly relevant to the lock-in argument and the district court never had the opportunity to consider the effect of that case, we would be remiss if we did not analyze the issue now.

Eastman Kodak manufactured photocopying equipment that it sold in a competitive market. According to the plaintiffs, who provided service and repair to those copiers, Kodak sought to maintain control over service by restricting the availability of necessary repair parts. Although Kodak argued that it did not have sufficient market power to restrain trade because the market for new copiers was competitive, the Supreme Court held that, under certain circumstances, the fact that the buyer of such equipment was locked into a single supplier could give rise to a finding of market power:

If the cost of switching is high, consumers who already have purchased the equipment, and are thus "locked-in," will tolerate some level of service-price increases before changing equipment brands. Under this scenario, a seller profitably could maintain supracompetitive [29] prices in the aftermarket if the switching costs were high relative to the increase in service prices, and the number of locked-in customers were high relative to the number of new purchasers.

112 S. Ct. at 2087.

The situation may be analogous here. If it is prohibitively expensive to switch to a smaller capacity computer before the normal end of an application system's life cycle, then IBM, at least for those locked-in customers, would not face any realistic competition from smaller machines and would thus possess market power as if they did not exist.

The district court cited several anecdotes in the record suggesting that smaller machines are vigorously competing with large-scale mainframes and are often winning out over them. Our review of the record, however, shows that in none of the incidents mentioned was there a mainframe user with a significant base of applications software and data that would [*206] have to be rewritten and converted before the application could be moved to a smaller computer. Indeed, in the vast majority of cases, the customer was developing a new application and had an unfettered choice of which type of computer to purchase. In [30] a few others, the system was approaching the end of its useful life and was slated for replacement. This evidence, then, does not support the conclusion that there was not a significant lock-in problem.

Nevertheless, this remains an issue of fact for the district court to resolve in the first instance. However, whether to consider new issues on remand is not for us to determine, but is properly a matter for the district court's discretion as presider over subsequent proceedings. Therefore, we express no view on whether the district court should permit a new argument to be pursued at this stage of the litigation. The district court may conclude, for example, that allowing AMI to pursue a new theory not raised until after discovery and the completion of an entire trial would result in undue prejudice to IBM. See Habecker v. Clark Equipment Co., 942 F.2d 210, 218 (3d Cir. 1991). We hold only that the determination whether to consider the lock-in argument, to permit further discovery on the issue, and to hear additional evidence are all within the district court's sound discretion.¹⁵ See id.

[31] F. Peripheral Devices and Software

AMI also argues that the district court erred when it added peripheral devices and software into the relevant market. The court found that these items, which provide data input, storage and output capabilities and direct the computer in its processing of information, "provided significant and reasonable alternatives to a wide variety of upgrades and modifications of large scale mainframes." Allen-Myland, 693 F. Supp. at 276.

Similar or substitute products are those that "have the ability -- actual or potential -- to take significant amounts of business away from each other." SmithKline Corp. v. Eli Lilly & Co., 575 F.2d 1056, 1063 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 838, 99 S. Ct. 123, 58 L. Ed. 2d 134 (1978). Thus, HN8¹⁶ the relevant product market "is composed of products that have reasonable interchangeability for the purposes for which they are produced -- price, use and qualities considered." Id. at 1062-63 (quoting United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 404, 76 S. Ct. 994, 1012, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956)) [32] (The Cellophane Case); Tunis Bros. Co. v. Ford Motor Co., 952 F.2d 715, 722 (3d Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 120 L. Ed. 2d 903, 112 S. Ct. 3034 (1992).

"Interchangeability" implies that one product is roughly equivalent to another for the use to which it is put; while there might be some degree of preference for the one over the other, either would work effectively. A person needing transportation to work could accordingly buy a Ford or a Chevrolet automobile, or could elect to ride a horse or bicycle, assuming those options were feasible. HN9¹⁷ The key test for determining whether one product is a substitute for another is whether there is a cross-elasticity of demand between them: in other words, whether the demand for the second good would respond to changes in the price of the first. Tunis Bros., 952 F.2d at 722.

¹⁵ If it does so, the district court should then proceed to determine the percentage of the mainframe market occupied by existing mainframe users who are locked in to that type of computer by prohibitively high switching costs; the greater that percentage is, the more power IBM has to maintain supracompetitive prices in the mainframe market. See Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 521.1a, at 604-05 (1993 Supp.). The court can then determine if IBM's power in the large-scale mainframe market is constrained by the existence of smaller capacity computers, and if so, whether such computers should be included in the relevant market. It may be that the district court will conclude that, while smaller capacity computers cannot be fully excluded from the market, neither can they be fully included. The court may, after considering the evidence and the nature of the market, exercise its discretion and reduce IBM's market share by a number greater than zero percent but less than the full extent of the market for smaller capacity computers.

In the six years since the district court issued its opinion, the personal computer has consolidated its position in modern life, and what once seemed mired in impenetrable technical jargon is now within the vocabulary [*207] of the general public. Moreover, technology changes [*33] rapidly and if one has an older computer and wishes to use the latest software applications, one often must either upgrade the central processor -- the equivalent of a MIPS upgrade -- or buy a new computer. Increasing the size of the disk drive, buying more memory or installing the latest version of the operating system may help in some cases but in many others will be ineffective. It thus may be argued that the same situation obtains in the case of larger computers; that is, peripherals and software are complementary goods but are not substitutes for mainframe computers.

The issue, nevertheless, remains a factual one for the district court to resolve. Here, if peripherals and software are reasonable substitutes for mainframes, we should expect to see an increased demand for them as the price of mainframes rises, but the district court cited no evidence of this type. Instead, it relied on the fact that IBM considers peripheral products and software when pricing its computer systems. Allen-Myland, 693 F. Supp. at 276. Pricing a large mainframe system on the basis of peripherals included with it against competitive offerings by other manufacturers, [*34] however, is simply not evidence that peripherals and mainframes are substitutes for one another.

The district court relied even more heavily on several anecdotes in which large mainframe users had upgraded memory, disks, software or other peripherals rather than perform a MIPS upgrade. Id. at 276-77. This testimony fell into two categories. First, some users testified that it was possible to delay a MIPS upgrade for a while by upgrading peripherals or software: akin perhaps to saying that installing new brakes may delay the necessity of purchasing a new car, but it is not sufficient evidence on which to conclude that the products are reasonably interchangeable in use. See Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 652 F.2d 1324, 1331-32 (7th Cir. 1981) ("specialties," which delayed the necessity of replacing refractory bricks in furnaces, did not belong in the same relevant market).

Second, there was testimony to the effect that there are many ways to enhance the performance of a computer system, including MIPS upgrades and peripheral/software upgrades. Although it is doubtless true that improvements to peripherals [*35] or software will improve a computer's performance somewhat under certain circumstances, we find no evidence on how much or under what conditions improvement could be expected. There was thus no evidence from which to conclude whether peripheral and software upgrades were reasonably interchangeable with either a MIPS upgrade or a different mainframe computer in enough cases that those alternate upgrades could properly be termed substitutes. Nor was there evidence that, because of a price change in mainframes, there was a greater or lesser demand for peripheral/software upgrades. In sum, the evidence was insufficient to support the wholesale inclusion of peripherals and software into the relevant market for large-scale mainframes.

We emphasize, however, that we are not holding that peripheral and software must be excluded from the relevant market, only that, upon review, the evidence cited in the district court's opinion is insufficient to warrant including them. On remand, the district court will of course determine whether there is some degree of interchangeability or other evidence of cross-elasticity of demand. If there is, then the court is free to adjust IBM's share of the market [*36] by its best estimate of the true competition from peripherals and software.

G. AMI's Proposed Submarkets

As a separate ground for reversal, AMI argues that the district court erred by rejecting its two alternate submarkets: the parts and services required for the upgrade and conversion of all large-scale mainframes, and an even narrower submarket confined to parts for upgrading IBM mainframes. The district court rejected the larger submarket based on evidence that upgrades to large-scale mainframes competed with various alternatives, including large-scale mainframes themselves. Allen-Myland, 693 F. Supp. at 282-83. It rejected the narrow submarket because "courts have generally rejected [*208] market definitions limited to a defendant's products." Id. at 282 n.43.

In Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 1524, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962), the Supreme Court stated that within a broader product market "well-defined submarkets may exist which, in themselves, constitute product markets for antitrust purposes."¹⁶ Thus, if upgrades and mainframes [37] are not reasonably interchangeable with each other, a valid submarket would exist here. The district court, however, found that replacing the computer itself is an alternative to an upgrade. Moreover, it found that IBM priced upgrades and mainframes so that buyers would be indifferent whether to purchase an upgrade or install a more powerful computer. These factual findings are not disputed on appeal, and so the district court's conclusion on the larger submarket must stand. By implication, if the broader submarket fails, the narrower one would appear to fail as well.

[38] Instead of arguing that the district court's factfinding was clearly erroneous, AMI attempts to revive its narrow submarket by relying on the testimony of its expert, Professor Levin, that certain IBM mainframe users were locked into upgrading their computers and lacked the alternative of replacing the whole machine. By so arguing, it attempts to bring this issue within the ambit of Kodak, which was decided four years after the district court's opinion in this case.

In Kodak, as we have already discussed, the Supreme Court held that when users are locked into a particular vendor by the sunk cost of the product, market power may exist in the aftermarket for parts even though the equipment market is competitive. Here, while the district court found that large-scale mainframes were generally reasonable substitutes for upgrades, its opinion did not address whether there was a subpopulation of IBM mainframe users who for economic reasons were locked into MIPS upgrades when they needed increased computing power. AMI's argument appears to be that if a sufficient number of users actually were locked into using upgrades rather than replacing their computers, then IBM may have had [39] the power to set prices for MIPS upgrades, wholly separate from whether it possessed that power over the large-scale mainframe market, including upgrades. Under this reasoning, we should remand and allow the district court to determine the extent, if any, to which this was the case.

Such a remand would be futile, however, since if IBM had market power over upgrades with respect to a large number of mainframe users, we would expect it to charge supracompetitive prices for upgrades. Yet, the district court found that IBM prices its upgrades such that the user pays the same amount for an upgrade as the price differential between the prices of the more powerful and the existing computers if purchased new. Allen-Myland, 693 F. Supp. at 282. This belies any special power over an upgrade submarket; IBM's power is limited to whatever control it is able to maintain over the larger relevant market. Hence, we will affirm the district court's finding that a valid IBM-only parts submarket did not exist.

H. The "Significant Win/Loss Reports"

Additionally, AMI argues that the district court improperly rejected one of its strongest pieces of evidence in support of [40] its proposed market definition, the "Significant Win/Loss Reports," also known as the SWLRs. These reports were prepared monthly for the top management of IBM and showed, for each competitive situation IBM faced, IBM's product offering, the offering of its competitors, and whether IBM won or lost the sale. See Allen-Myland, 693 F. Supp. at 272. According to the testimony of AMI's expert who reviewed the SWLRs (Professor Levin), in 97.6 percent of the reported cases in which the [*209] IBM offering was a large-scale mainframe, the competitor's offering was also a large-scale mainframe or an upgrade. AMI asserts that these reports proved that a distinct product market for large-scale mainframe computers exists.

The district court rejected this evidence for several reasons. First, it noted that IBM itself viewed the SWLRs as "poor and unrepresentative indicators of actual market activity" and eventually stopped using them. Id. at 273. In ¹⁶ The use of the term "submarket" is somewhat confusing, and tends to obscure the true inquiry: whether IBM is constrained by the prices of large scale mainframe computers when pricing its upgrades. If it is so constrained, then the relevant market consists of both mainframes and upgrades. If not, then it is simpler and more accurate to say that the relevant market itself, not some submarket of it, contains only upgrades. See Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, P 581.1c, at 535-36 (1993 Supp.). Nevertheless, because the term has been commonly used in the reported cases over the years, we will also continue to use it, being nonetheless mindful that it is inaccurate and of the true question before us.

the alternative, it relied on the SWLRs themselves, which contained many examples in which non-IBM mainframes competed against IBM computers smaller than IBM mainframes. The district court believed [41] that this additional competition undermined AMI's definition of the relevant market.

Reports such as the SWLRs, which are used by IBM's management, can be powerful evidence in an antitrust case. In United States v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 110 F. Supp. 295, 304 (D. Mass. 1953), aff'd per curiam 347 U.S. 521, 74 S. Ct. 699, 98 L. Ed. 910 (1954), the court stated:

HN10 [↑] When a business allows its own important judgments constantly to be affected by a statistical survey unflaggingly made, diligently kept current, and repeatedly consulted at least by subordinate advisers to the officers, then the statistical material may be used by a court to some degree as reliable evidence against the business.

Nevertheless, notwithstanding the potentially probative value of this type of evidence, there is nothing that requires courts to credit such evidence. Here, as the district court pointed out, the record shows that IBM itself found the SWLRs were unreliable. As the trier of fact, the district court was entitled to credit that testimony and reject the SWLRs.¹⁷ Based on our conclusions about the relevant [42] market and the various additions to it, however, it is possible that the district court may wish to reconsider the probative value, if any, of the SWLRs. On remand, of course, it is free to do so.

IV. OTHER FACTORS BEARING ON MARKET POWER

Market share, of course, [43] is only one type of evidence that may prove the defendant has sufficient market power to impose per se antitrust liability. HN11 [↑] "Market share is just a way of estimating market power, which is the ultimate consideration. When there are better ways to estimate market power, the court should use them." Ball Memorial Hosp., Inc. v. Mutual Hosp. Ins., Inc., 784 F.2d 1325, 1336 (7th Cir. 1986). The district court, in addition to its findings on market share, also held that the lack of entry barriers and the rapid technological change of the computer industry independently precluded any finding of market power.

A. Ease of Entry Into the Relevant Market

HN12 [↑] Notwithstanding the extent of an antitrust defendant's market share, the ease or difficulty with which competitors enter the market is an important factor in determining whether the defendant has true market power -- the power to raise prices.

In many cases a firm's share of current sales does indicate power. . . . In other cases, however, a firm's share of current sales does not reflect an ability to reduce the total output in the market, and therefore it does not convey power over price. . . . The lower [44] the barriers to entry, and the shorter the lags of new entry, the less power existing firms have. When the supply is highly elastic, existing market share does not signify power.

Id. at 1335.

The district court relied on three pieces of evidence that purportedly showed that competitors [*210] were relatively free to enter the relevant market. First, it noted:

A number of companies other than IBM manufacture a wide range of computers having the processing power of IBM large-scale mainframe computers. Several of these (including Digital Equipment Corporation, Data ¹⁷ We do not accept the district court's alternative reason for discrediting the SWLRs. Although it may well be true that in some circumstances non-IBM mainframes competed with smaller IBM computers, we must be aware of the true market inquiry in an antitrust tying case: can the defendant exercise market power over the tying product to restrain trade in the tied product market? Although the above evidence could lead to the conclusion that the relevant market here is somewhat broader than mainframes only, a user seeking to avoid IBM's tie needs an alternative to an upgrade or a computer of the type it currently has installed. To the extent that the user needs more computing power, a smaller IBM computer would not appear to be much of a substitute.

General, Hewlett Packard, Tandem, and NCR) were admittedly excluded from the report upon which Prof. Levin relied to determine what constitute large-scale mainframes.

Allen-Myland, 693 F. Supp. at 278.

This statement is somewhat ambiguous. First, we have already noted that the district court may wish to reconsider the issue of whether the relevant market includes the smaller capacity computers these manufacturers produce in light of the Supreme Court's opinion in Kodak. Thus, to the extent the court finds on remand that these computers do not belong in [\[45\]](#) the relevant market, its conclusion will have to be re-evaluated. More importantly, the district court's reasoning conflates ease of entry into the market with what belongs in the relevant market in the first instance. Even if all the computers made by these manufacturers were properly included in the market, that would say nothing about how easy or difficult it currently is to enter the market. It is conceivable that all these firms have been in the market for many years and that there has been very little recent entry. To use an example from another industry, just because there may be a sizable number of steelmakers of various sizes and specialties, that does not necessarily make it easy to build a steel mill and enter the business today. Accordingly, the district court's finding of ease of market entry is not supported by the mere presence of these manufacturers of smaller capacity computers.

Second, the district court relied on the recent growth of leasing companies as evidence that the market was easy to enter. Again, we have already held that, except for certain leases of used, non-IBM computers, leasing companies do not belong in the relevant market. Because of this, the ease [\[46\]](#) of entry into the leasing market is legally irrelevant; if IBM has market power over the supply of large-scale mainframes, the immediate entry into the market of these essentially financial intermediaries can do nothing to increase the supply of such computers. Accordingly, leasing companies prove nothing about ease of entry into the relevant market here.

Finally, the district court cited the relative ease of entry into the computer reconfiguration business itself as evidence of a lack of barriers to market entry. The question, however, in an antitrust tying case is whether the defendant can use its power over the tying product market to control the tied product market as well. If IBM has market power over large-scale mainframes (including upgrade parts), that power could not be curtailed even to the slightest degree by the fact that it is easy to enter the tied market of installing upgrades. Indeed, it seems likely that in most if not all tying cases, the tied product market will be competitive, otherwise the defendant would have no reason to impose the tie and restrain competition in the first place.

Accordingly, because the district court's reasons for finding ease of entry [\[47\]](#) into the relevant market were erroneous, its finding that ease of entry vitiated IBM's market power cannot stand.

B. Technological Innovation and Declining Prices

The district court also believed that market power was inconsistent with the fact that technology in the computer industry was rapidly advancing.

Although the performance of computers has been rapidly increasing as costs for performance have plummeted, it proves too much to say that this improvement is inconsistent with market power. Indeed, in Greyhound Computer Corp. v. IBM Corp., 559 F.2d 488, 497 \(9th Cir. 1977\), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1040, 98 S. Ct. 782, 54 L. Ed. 2d 790 (1978), another antitrust action brought against IBM and relied upon by the district court, the court stated:

[\[*211\]](#) IBM also contends that price reduction and product improvement are characteristics of the industry and are inconsistent with the existence of monopoly power. But HN13 rapid technological progress may provide a climate favorable to increased concentration of market power rather than the opposite. Moreover, a decline in prices does not necessarily [\[48\]](#) imply an absence of monopoly power; a fair profit might have been made at even lower cost to users.

559 F.2d at 497 (footnote omitted) (citing Alcoa, 148 F.2d at 427). Indeed, were we to accept the district court's reasoning, a great many defendants with market power, such as Alcoa in the 1920s and perhaps even the former AT&T telephone monopoly, could be insulated from antitrust attack. Here, technology was improving and prices were steadily falling, but the district court cited no evidence that these changes had any connection with a decrease in IBM's market power. We hold that the district court erred when it ruled that innovation and price reductions precluded a finding of market power.¹⁸

C. Conclusion

Accordingly, [49] we will vacate the district court's finding that IBM lacked sufficient market power for per se antitrust liability and remand for further proceedings, during which the district court should re-examine the issue de novo.

V. "VIABLE BUSINESS OPPORTUNITY"

In addition to finding that IBM lacked sufficient market power for per se liability to be imposed on it, the district court also found that AMI had not been foreclosed from a "viable business opportunity" by IBM's net pricing policy. Allen-Myland, 693 F. Supp. at 283. The court found that the labor-saving advantages of TCM technology changed what had once been a lucrative reconfiguration business involving a great deal of added value into one whose labor content had become de minimis, averaging only 1.2 percent of the net upgrade price. Id. According to the district court, because AMI would be required to inventory a supply of upgrade parts in order to compete with IBM, its carrying costs would be so high in comparison to its projected revenues from performing upgrades that AMI would have actually lost over $ 35 million if IBM had provided upgrades on non-net priced (SWRPQ) terms. Id. at 288. [50] Accordingly, because the antitrust laws protect competition rather than competitors, the court held that net pricing was not worthy of condemnation under the antitrust laws.

There is no requirement that one be deprived of a "viable business opportunity" to recover under section 1 of the Sherman Act. We instead interpret the district court as holding that AMI failed to prove the following two prongs of the orthodox framework for a section 1 tying case: first, that two separate markets existed for the tying and tied products; second, that a substantial volume of interstate commerce was affected by the tie. Additionally, the district court's analysis appears to bear on the "fact of damage" issue of whether AMI has standing to bring a private antitrust suit against IBM.

A. Separate Product Markets

In Jefferson Parish, the Supreme Court said that, in a tying case, "the answer to the question whether one or two products are involved turns not on the functional relation between them, but rather on the character of the demand for the two items." 466 U.S. at 19, 104 S. Ct. at 1562. It then went on to hold that a tying arrangement [51] cannot exist unless there is a sufficient demand for the purchase of the tied product separate from the purchase of the tying product so as to identify a market structure in which it is efficient to offer the tied product separately from the tying product. Id. at 21-22, 104 S. Ct. at 1563. There, the tying product was hospital services and the tied product was anesthesiological services; because on the facts presented, there was evidence of separate patient demands for specific anesthesiologists, [*212] the Court held that separate markets existed. Id. at 22, 24, 104 S. Ct. at 1564-65.

At least at one time, there was a demand for third-party installations of upgrades separate from the demand for parts; the successful operation of AMI's business before IBM imposed its net pricing policy is conclusive evidence of that. The district court, however, believed that TCM technology, not net pricing, destroyed the separate market for AMI's labor, finding: (1) that customers would not be willing to have upgrades installed by AMI at any price higher than what IBM would charge if [52] forced to provide the service; and (2) that, at the IBM price, AMI would lose massive amounts of money if it attempted to install upgrades in the same way as before net pricing. Allen-Myland, 693 F. Supp. at 283-91.

1. Customer Willingness to Pay Premium Prices

¹⁸ We do not, however, hold as a matter of law that price reductions and technological improvements can never evidence a lack of market power. Each case must be decided on its own facts, and facts must be found on the evidence presented.

The district court credited the testimony of end-user witnesses who said they had no interest in having upgrades installed by a third party such as AMI. It then went on to acknowledge that representatives of leasing companies did indicate an interest in third-party installation, but only at prices competitive with IBM's net price. Id. at 290.

The court properly found that, with a few adjustments, IBM would charge $ 165 per hour for installing upgrades. Id. at 287. AMI takes strong exception to the next logical step in the court's reasoning: that AMI would not be able to charge its customers any more than IBM for its services. We are convinced by AMI's argument.

At trial, two leasing company witnesses testified that they would not be interested in paying AMI significantly more than IBM's effective hourly rate for installation of [53] upgrades. Comdisco's Mr. Lewis said that he would use AMI installation service only if it were, at most, slightly more expensive than IBM's price. Id. at 291. On cross examination, however, he admitted that AMI had performed an "E to B" upgrade at an effective hourly rate of $ 2,400 and admitted that such an amount (thought by counsel to be $ 1,500 per hour) was more than slightly greater than IBM's price. See id. at 291 & n.75. The district court, irrespective of this contradiction, opined:

Mr. Lewis of Comdisco explained that he would use AMI installation service only if it were "lesser than, the same as, or in rare exceptions, only a slight premium above the prevailing IBM list price." Using an E to B upgrade as an example, Mr. Lewis testified that he would not regard an AMI hourly rate of $ 1500 for installation service as only slightly greater than an IBM hourly rate of $ 180 or $ 200.

Id. at 291 (record citation omitted). In a footnote, the court continued:

Using customer-owned parts, AMI charged Comdisco between $ 25,000 and $ 30,000 for installing an E to B upgrade, requiring [54] approximately 20 man hours. Based on Mr. Ross's calculations, the value of IBM installation service for an E to B upgrade, requiring about 13 man hours of labor, is $ 2,400. Based on these facts and Mr. Lewis' assertions, it is fair to conclude that Comdisco would not select AMI over IBM to install a new E to B upgrade if it had the choice. In view of this evidence, I do not accept AMI's assertion at closing argument that leasing companies "don't care whether the service costs $ 2400 or $ 20,000."

Id. at 291 n.75 (record citations omitted). We conclude that this finding, at least as supported by the district court's opinion, is clearly erroneous. The court did not adequately address why, if Comdisco was unwilling to pay anything more than a slight premium over IBM's rate, it paid not $ 165 per hour, but a full $ 2,400 hourly rate. Its statement, that Comdisco would never pay the $ 2,400 rate if it "had the choice," is true enough, but explains nothing; we would all like to pay the lowest possible price whenever we purchase goods and services. On the other hand, AMI's explanation for its ability to charge a higher price is supported: IBM commonly [55] took so long to price and perform upgrades that the leasing companies' losses from having their machines idle exceeded the [*213] premium charged by AMI -- which was often able to complete the job within a few days.¹⁹

In a similar vein, "Mr. Smith of CMI testified that, other things being equal, he did not wish to pay 10, 20 or 30 times more than necessary to obtain installation service." Id. at 291. For the reasons stated above, this does not show that CMI, under certain special circumstances such as the need for fast turnaround, would be unwilling to pay a considerable premium, even if under [56] normal conditions it would pay only the IBM rate. This finding too cannot stand as presently supported.

2. Alleged Lack of Demand for Third-Party Installation

The district court additionally supported its finding of lack of demand for AMI-installed upgrades by referring to evidence that, in the few occasions in which IBM had made SWRPQ pricing available for MIPS upgrades, there were few such upgrades sold without IBM labor. The court reasoned as follows:

¹⁹ We again stress, however, that we cannot and will not substitute our view of the facts for that of the district court. We hold only that the district court's finding of fact is not adequately supported by the elaboration contained in its opinion. On remand, the court may of course re-examine this issue and again reach the same conclusion, if it is supported by sufficient evidence and findings of fact.

There is insufficient evidence of demand for upgrade labor at prices AMI would have to charge to support a conclusion that a competitive market for 308X upgrade labor does or could exist. Leasing companies have purchased virtually no 308X model, memory, or channel upgrades without IBM labor included (in order, for instance, to have AMI install the upgrade) when such upgrades were available on an SWRPQ basis (which roughly equals the price IBM would be entitled to charge for its parts). Every J to K upgrade purchased by CMI and Comdisco was bought with IBM installation service included even though IBM also sold the feature on an SWRPQ basis.

Id. at 290-91 (footnotes and record citations omitted). [57] In a footnote, the court responded to AMI's argument that the reason there were so few SWRPQ orders was that the unbundled prices were not well-publicized:

Witnesses from CMI and Comdisco testified that neither company knew that IBM sold upgrades (including the J to K) without IBM labor included. I do not credit such testimony, as there was documentary evidence (requests for IBM "SW" prices) to the contrary. Further, the SWRPQ procedure has existed since 1975. SWRPQ prices are readily available from IBM. AMI acknowledged that SWRPQ prices are made available from IBM when specifically requested.

Id. at 291 n.74. (record cites omitted) AMI argues that this determination was based on insupportable impeachments of witnesses and was clearly erroneous.

Mr. Lewis, Vice-President of Comdisco, the largest leasing company, admitted that, as of the trial date, he knew that IBM installation was not mandatory. He was then cross-examined on the issue of one particular 308X MIPS upgrade, the J to K model conversion. He then stated that he acquired nine such upgrades in the past, all with IBM labor included. But when asked whether he knew that IBM installation [58] was optional at the time he purchased the J to K upgrades, he said he did not. Quite simply,

Lewis' admission does not impeach his testimony that he was unaware of SWRPQ pricing during the relevant time period.

The district court then used certain documentary evidence to impeach Lewis. DX 2260 is a request from Lewis for SWRPQ pricing on three upgrades, J16-J24, K16-K24 and G16-G24. None of these are the J-K upgrade that Lewis testified about at trial. Moreover, their designations are consistent with memory upgrades, not MIPS upgrades.²⁰ DX 2266 is more explicit, specifically [*214] stating that memory upgrades are involved. 308X memory was usually neither TCM-based nor subject to net pricing and is thus not at issue. Accordingly, the conclusion to be drawn from this evidence is that Lewis was unaware that MIPS upgrades were SWRPQ-priced, although he had purchased some unrelated memory upgrades without IBM installation in the past. Lewis' testimony that he was unaware of SWRPQ pricing for 308X MIPS upgrades was not impeached. Therefore, nothing can be concluded from Comdisco's failure to purchase MIPS upgrades under SWRPQ terms other than it was unaware they were available.

[59] The district court also noted the testimony of Mr. Loria, a CMI Vice-President. He testified that, to his knowledge, IBM would not sell upgrades without a labor charge. Much of this testimony centered on the year 1976, years before IBM introduced the 308X series of computers. He also stated that he thought that SWRPQ terms meant simply that IBM did not retain the old parts. Except for the J-K upgrade, the only SWRPQ upgrades he testified about were not MIPS upgrades.

The district court believed that this testimony was impeached by three exhibits, DX 2261, DX 2262 and DX 2263. DX 2261, however, is just a 1986 request for SWRPQ pricing on a 96 to 128 megabyte memory upgrade; Loria never testified that non-net priced memory upgrades did not exist. DX 2262 and DX 2263 are IBM's responses to CMI requests for SWRPQ-priced memory upgrades. None of these documents tend to show that Loria knew that a few MIPS upgrades were available without IBM installation; accordingly, his testimony to the contrary was not impeached by this evidence.

²⁰ 308X model numbers appear to be classified as follows: 308X-YMM; where X is the CPU family, e.g., 3081, 3083, 3084; Y is the CPU power indicator within the family, e.g., 3081-J, 3081-K; and MM is the main memory in megabytes, e.g., 3081-J16, 3081-J24. This is consistent with the numbering scheme for memory upgrades in DX 2266.

Another Vice-President of CMI, a Mr. Smith, testified similarly to Loria, stating that he was not aware that the J to K MIPS upgrade was available without [60] IBM installation. The district court found that DX 2265 impeached Smith's testimony. That document is a computer printout of requests for price quotations ("RPQs") with the name "Gary Smith" handwritten at the top. Some of these RPQs were for SWRPQ terms, but none were for MIPS upgrades. Once again, this evidence does not impeach Smith's testimony.

In short, that to which the district court refers does not bear out its conclusion that these witnesses were untruthful when they claimed not to know of a few MIPS upgrades without IBM installation.²¹ Thus, the fact that a few MIPS upgrades were sold under SWRPQ terms does not prove that there was no separate demand for installation services, particularly considering that IBM had every economic incentive to protect its revenues and avoid widely publicizing the existence of such upgrades.

[61] 3. AMI's "Massive Losses" From Inventory Costs

In addition to finding that AMI would attract no customers at the price the court believed it would have to charge for its service, the district court also found that AMI would suffer massive losses at the IBM hourly rate. It based this conclusion on its belief that AMI would have to maintain an inventory of expensive upgrade parts to provide adequate turnaround time. Because IBM's revenues would average only 1.2 percent of the net price for the upgrade and its carrying costs for the parts inventory would average 3 percent, the district court concluded that AMI stood to lose over $ 35 million by competing with IBM. Id. at 288. Although the court acknowledged that AMI's principal argument was that leasing companies inventoried their own parts and thus saved AMI the costs of doing so, it nevertheless included these carrying [*215] costs when calculating AMI's ability to make a profit, based on a purported admission by AMI.

It is, of course, true that AMI would have to carry an inventory of parts to give its customers fast turnaround on upgrade installations. This is exactly what AMI did for the earlier 303X [62] series of computers. The exception would be if the customer itself maintained an inventory of parts. Thus, to the extent AMI intended to compete for the business of end-users, who typically do not inventory parts, AMI would have to maintain an inventory, which would be presumably unprofitable given the revenue generated by the installation. Leasing companies, on the other hand, constituted over 90 percent of AMI's business and were known to inventory their own parts. So, while the relatively minuscule end-user business may have been foreclosed from AMI by the low margins generated by TCM-based upgrades, the business from leasing companies was not.

It would be both a non-sequitur and clearly erroneous on its face to find that AMI's argument that leasing companies would inventory their own parts and relieve AMI of that cost is invalid solely because AMI admitted it will incur such costs on its own inventory. The district court, however, relied on its belief that Mr. Allen admitted that AMI would incur inventory costs if it were permitted to compete in the market of 308X net priced upgrades. Id. at 288-89. The record contains the following exchange: [63]

Q. And according to Mr. Hamilton's report on damages, he indicates that you have told him that AMI must maintain a certain worth of inventory of upgrades and parts, and that a fair estimate of AMI's carrying costs for that inventory, just for the carrying costs of the interest involved is approximately three percent of IBM's price, whatever you happen to pay for those parts.

²¹ In addition, the district court relied on the fact that the SWRPQ procedure has existed since 1975, that "SWRPQ prices are readily available from IBM," and that AMI acknowledged this fact. This all appears to be true, in general, but there is no indication in the portions of the record cited by the court below that these facts impeached the testimony of the Comdisco and CMI witnesses that they were unaware of SWRPQ-priced MIPS upgrades for 308X series computers. That these prices were available for memory upgrades and for earlier series of computers could not have reasonably put these witnesses on notice that a very small number of SWRPQ-priced MIPS upgrades were made available for the 308X series, given IBM's well-publicized policy of net pricing.

Did you tell Professor Hamilton that, sir?

A. I identified for Professor Hamilton, when he was doing a damage study, he asked me, if you were permitted to compete in this market of net priced MESs, what would be your costs?

I identified it would be AMI's intent, similar to the volume procurement agreement, to order many parts from IBM.

There was a question whether these parts would come from the parts center on a very rapid response or whether AMI would have to inventory, virtually millions of dollars of inventory.

From going on prior experience with the VPA, where we ordered large quantities for inventory and were not using the parts center, he said, wouldn't you have some type of carrying charges?

Now, that number that he picked of three percent was if the prime rate [64] were 12 percent. . . .

I don't know further the -- all the economic data in regard to what -- Mr. Hamilton went further from that, but the question was asked.

On the next page of the transcript, Allen then stated that as long as upgrade parts could arrive quickly from the IBM Parts Center, there would be no need for AMI to maintain an inventory. This "admission," (Allen stated only that the question was asked), does not admit that AMI would be required to carry an inventory for all of its customers. It was therefore insufficient grounds upon which to conclude that inventory costs must be included in every situation in which AMI does business.²²

[65] [*216] 4. Low Margins and Separate Markets

The district court also found that the value of the labor content of 308X MIPS upgrades was de minimis for antitrust purposes. Id. at 283. Later, it referred to another purported admission by AMI's counsel, to the effect that, if the labor content of upgrades was de minimis, then parts and labor would have to be considered a single market. Id. at 289 n.71.

To the extent it might be argued that AMI admitted that a 1.2 percent margin caused parts and installation to fold into one market, as a matter of law we cannot agree. The record indicates that the total value of all 308X MIPS upgrades performed between 1981 and 1985 was over $ 2 billion. 1.2 percent of a $ 2 billion market amounts to over $ 20 million. See Allen-Myland, 693 F. Supp. at 292. This amount is not de minimis within the meaning of the antitrust laws. See Fortner I, 394 U.S. at 501-02, 89 S. Ct. at 1257-58 ($ 190,000 not considered de minimis by the Supreme Court).

5. Conclusion

The district court's finding that [66] no separate market existed for installations of upgrades cannot stand. We will accordingly vacate it and remand for further proceedings. On remand, the district should re-examine the issue de novo.

B. Substantial Volume of Commerce

²² Earlier in its opinion, the district court found that Allen had admitted that AMI could not make a profit on a labor value of 1.2 percent of the net upgrade price. Allen-Myland, 693 F. Supp. at 284. The trial testimony shows that counsel for IBM asked Allen whether he would take on an upgrade for $ 25,500 labor charge when the net price was $ 2,090,000, a 1.2% margin. Allen replied that he would, and that he thought it was a viable business opportunity. Counsel then tried to impeach him with a letter he wrote to IBM in the context of settlement negotiations. On the witness stand, Allen admitted the existence of this letter but claimed that counsel was taking it out of context. We do not think this letter can be fairly read to concede that AMI could never make a profit on a 1.2 percent margin. Like the statement discussed in the above text, it admits no more than that, to the extent AMI must buy and inventory the parts, it cannot earn a profit on that margin.

As part of its "viable business opportunity" inquiry, the district court also found that AMI had not proved that IBM's tying arrangement foreclosed a substantial volume of commerce. Allen-Myland, 693 F. Supp. at 292-93. Although the court acknowledged that the $ 20 million market for upgrade installations was quantitatively more than sufficient, it found that AMI had not shown "that it engaged in an activity foreclosed by IBM's net pricing." Id. The district court believed that it was the changes brought about by the 308X's TCM technology, not net pricing, that foreclosed AMI from the upgrade business. Thus, according to the court, competition with IBM in the installation of upgrades had become unprofitable because of advancing technology, quite apart from any anticompetitive effects of the tie.

First of all, to the extent the district court based this conclusion on its findings that AMI lacked a viable business [67] opportunity, it necessarily erred. We have already pointed out the factual and analytical errors behind those conclusions. Although we do not decide those factual issues ourselves, it appears likely from this record on appeal that AMI could have successfully performed upgrades and made a profit in the absence of net pricing; at least, the district court's findings that no one would pay AMI any more than IBM and that AMI would be burdened with across-the-board inventory costs were not supported by the evidence it cited.

Second, and more importantly, there is no requirement that an antitrust plaintiff show profitability in addition to showing some foreclosure of commerce. If the competition foreclosed by a tying arrangement had to be profitable, then many anticompetitive tying arrangements would be immunized from antitrust attack. For example, a new competitor attempting to break into a dominated market might well lose money for a time, either because of aggressive introductory pricing or because its sales had not yet grown to the point where economies of scale made its production operations sufficiently inexpensive to turn a profit. Yet, the defendant could exploit its market power [68] with impunity on the ground that the plaintiff could not profitably compete against it, and continue using that power to keep all new competitors out of the tied market. Such a result would be contrary to the purpose of the antitrust laws. Accordingly, we hold that the district court erred when it found that a substantial amount of commerce was not foreclosed.

C. Fact of Damage

An antitrust plaintiff must also prove what is known as "fact of damage," defined as harm of a type which the antitrust laws were designed to prevent. See supra typescript at 10. The district court declined to rule on this issue, but noted that its earlier findings that AMI was not deprived of a viable business opportunity seemed to preclude [*217] any finding that AMI suffered the requisite damage. Allen-Myland, 693 F. Supp. at 298. We, of course, make no finding, but observe that the district court's errors on what it termed the business opportunity issue call its tentative conclusion on fact of damage into question as well. The matter remains, however, an issue for that court to resolve in the first instance.

VI. CONCLUSION

We will accordingly vacate the [69] district court's judgment in favor of IBM and remand for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

American Ass'n of Cruise Passengers v. Cunard Line

United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit

December 13, 1993, Argued ; August 16, 1994, Decided

No. 92-7168

Reporter

31 F.3d 1184 *; 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 21829 ; 308 U.S. App. D.C. 177; 1994 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,684; 1995 AMC 263

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF CRUISE PASSENGERS, APPELLANT v. CUNARD LINE, LTD.; CARNIVAL CRUISE LINES, INC.; PRINCESS CRUISES COMPANY, ALSO KNOWN AS PRINCESS CRUISES; P&O, INC., ALSO KNOWN AS PRINCESS CRUISES; PAQUET CRUISES, INC.; OCEAN CRUISE LINE, INC.; SITMAR CRUISES, INC.; MARRIOTT CORPORATION, ALSO KNOWN AS SUN LINE CRUISES; ROYAL CARIBBEAN CRUISE LINE, INC.; REGENCY CRUISES, INC.; CRUISE LINES INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION; AMERICAN SOCIETY OF TRAVEL AGENTS, INC., APPELLEES

Subsequent History: [1] As Amended November 3, 1994.

Prior History: Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Columbia (86cv00571).

Core Terms

district court, cruise line, carriage, Clayton Act, proceedings, non-common, antitrust, Cruise, primary jurisdiction, common carrier, boycott

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > Abstention

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > Exclusive Jurisdiction

HN1[Federal & State Interrelationships, Abstention

Federal courts are generally assumed to have a virtually unflagging obligation to exercise the jurisdiction given them.

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Primary Jurisdiction

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Jurisdiction

HN2 [down arrow] Separation of Powers, Primary Jurisdiction

A district court may dismiss a suit on the ground that an agency has primary jurisdiction over it, and that the agency is best suited to make the initial decision on the issues in dispute, even though the district court has subject matter jurisdiction. In cases raising issues of fact not within the conventional experience of judges or cases requiring the exercise of administrative discretion, agencies created by the U.S. Congress for regulating the subject matter should not be passed over.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Employment Practices > Adverse Employment Actions > Discharges & Failures to Hire

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > Railroads

HN3 [down arrow] Procedural Matters, Jurisdiction

Enforcement of the antitrust laws against a regulated industry insofar as it steps outside the regulated domain is part of the work of the district court. There is no per se exemption from antitrust law for activities of carriers beyond the control of the regulatory agency. Antitrust concerns are within the usual province of the court and require no special regulatory expertise.

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Jurisdiction

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Primary Jurisdiction

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Jurisdiction

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > Primary Jurisdiction

HN4 [down arrow] Separation of Powers, Jurisdiction

In general, when primary jurisdiction lies with an administrative agency, the district court should stay the proceedings in front of it, not dismiss the suit. Dismissal under the primary jurisdiction doctrine is not appropriate if dismissal would prejudice the plaintiff's right to obtain antitrust relief at the appropriate time.

Counsel: Stephen L. Snyder argued the cause for appellant. With him on the brief were Sheldon N. Jacobs and Amy B. Chappell.

J. Michael Kavanaugh argued the cause for appellees. With him on the brief were Dewey Ballantine, Saul P. Morgenstern, Jill D. Bicks, Burton A. Schwald, Edward Schmeltzer, Phillip H. Rudolph, and David L. Roll. Arnold B. Calmann, Mark E. Warren, Mary B. Denison, and Deana F. Dudley entered appearances.

Judges: Before GINSBURG and RANDOLPH, Circuit Judges, and WILL, Senior District Judge. * Opinion for the Court filed by Circuit Judge GINSBURG.

Opinion by: GINSBURG

Opinion

[*1185] GINSBURG, Circuit Judge: The American Association of Cruise Passengers appeals from the district court's order dismissing without prejudice its antitrust suit against the defendant cruise lines on the ground that the claims within the jurisdiction of the Federal Maritime Commission predominate over the claims within the court's Clayton Act jurisdiction. Because predominance [2] is not the relevant standard, nor dismissal the appropriate response, we remand this matter for the district court to reinstate the suit insofar as it concerns non-common carriage.

I. BACKGROUND

In 1986 the AACP, a travel agency, sued a number of cruise lines and their two trade associations, alleging that the cruise lines had boycotted the plaintiff in violation of the federal and Maryland antitrust laws. The defendants moved to dismiss the case, asserting that a cruise line is a "common carrier" within the meaning of the Shipping Act of 1984, 46 U.S.C. App. § 1702(6), and that any agreement among cruise lines is therefore subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of the FMC. The district court dismissed defendant Cunard Line, holding that it is a common carrier, but denied the motion as to the other defendants on the ground that they are not common carriers.

The remaining defendants filed an interlocutory appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. App. § 1292, and this court reversed the district court's decision that they are not common carriers. On appeal, this court reversed. See American Association of Cruise Passengers v. Carnival Cruise Lines, Inc. ("Cruise Passengers I"), 286 U.S. App. D.C. 44, 911 F.2d 786 \(D.C. Cir. 1990\). We held that a cruise line is a "common carrier" within the meaning of the Shipping Act of 1984 only to the extent that it operates between a United States port and a foreign port; "insofar as it travels only between foreign ports," it is not operating as a common carrier. Id. at 792. We therefore concluded that "to the extent [3] that a cruise line is a common carrier, but to that extent only, a boycott agreement to which cruise lines are parties is subject to the prohibitions [*1186] and procedures of the Shipping Act, rather than to those of the Clayton Act." Id.

We remanded the case to the district court for further proceedings on the claim(s) within its jurisdiction under the Clayton Act. Recognizing that our decision "may potentially result in some parallel litigation" in the court and before the FMC, we left it to the district court "to consider whether, when the FMC has jurisdiction over some aspect of an agreement in suit before the court, there is a mechanism that would enable it to avoid proceedings duplicative of those before the Commission." Id. at 792, 793.

On remand the district court dismissed the case in its entirety. "The Court of Appeals," it said, "simply did not contemplate an all-or-nothing exercise of jurisdiction in situations where it is alleged that a boycott involving common and non-common carriage exists." Asserting that "here common carriage activity predominates the alleged agreement," the district court dismissed the suit "without prejudice in order to permit proceedings [4] before the only body--the FMC--that may exercise jurisdiction over common carriage aspects of an alleged boycott agreement." American Association of Cruise Passengers v. Carnival Cruise Lines, 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10759, No. 86-571 (D.D.C. July 21, 1992). The AACP appeals to this court.

* Of the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, sitting by designation pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 294(d).

II. ANALYSIS

The district court's order dismissing this suit was based upon its assertion that the aspects of the suit over which it has no jurisdiction "predominate" over the aspects of the suit over which it has exclusive jurisdiction, and upon the court's belief that dismissal would result in a more efficient use of its resources. As we recently noted, however, the HN1 [↑] "federal courts are generally assumed to have a "virtually unflagging obligation ... to exercise the jurisdiction given them.' " Reiman v. Smith, 304 U.S. App. D.C. 196, 12 F.3d 222, 223 (D.C. Cir. 1993) (quoting Colorado River Water Conservation District v. United States, 424 U.S. 800, 817, 47 L. Ed. 2d 483, 96 S. Ct. 1236 (1976)) (omission in original). To be sure, the inefficiency of parallel or overlapping litigation should be minimized, but that [\[5\]](#) is not a warrant for denying a suitor the access to court that the Congress gave it.

Having in mind both the district court's obligatory jurisdiction and our decision in Cruise Passengers I, the AACP's suit must be understood to consist of two distinct claims: one, which pertains only to the defendant cruise lines' common carriage operations, alleges that they violated the Shipping Act; the other, which pertains only to the defendants' non-common carriage operations, alleges that they violated the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 15, 26 (and the analogous provisions of Maryland law). Although there are issues of fact common to both claims, the claims are nonetheless legally distinct, and must be brought in separate fora--the FMC and the district court respectively. Hence, the district court ought presumptively to have retained jurisdiction over the Clayton Act claims involving non-common carriage.

There is an exception to this general rule which the district court did not specifically mention but which it must have had in mind. HN2 [↑] A district court may dismiss a suit "on the ground that [\[6\]](#) [an agency] has primary jurisdiction [over it], i.e., that [the agency] is best suited to make the initial decision on the issues in dispute, even though the district court has subject matter jurisdiction." Allnet Communication Service, Inc. v. National Exchange Carrier Association, Inc., 296 U.S. App. D.C. 156, 965 F.2d 1118, 1120 (D.C. Cir. 1992). This doctrine is rooted in the teaching that "in cases raising issues of fact not within the conventional experience of judges or cases requiring the exercise of administrative discretion, agencies created by Congress for regulating the subject matter should not be passed over." Far East Conference v. United States, 342 U.S. 570, 574, 96 L. Ed. 576, 72 S. Ct. 492 (1952); see also Allnet Communication, 965 F.2d at 1120 ("The primary jurisdiction doctrine rests both on a concern for uniform outcomes (which may be defeated if disparate courts resolve regulatory issues inconsistently) and on the advantages of allowing an agency to apply its expert judgment") (citations omitted).

This is not [\[7\]](#) a case that implicates the primary jurisdiction of the FMC, however. There are common issues of fact between the two claims (e.g., whether the defendants boycotted the plaintiff), but there are no common regulatory issues. The Congress applied two different legal regimes to common [\[*1187\]](#) and non-common carriers, involving not only different fora but distinctly different remedies for a violation. Compare 46 U.S.C. App. § 1710(g) (permitting FMC to award up to double damages for violation of Shipping Act) and id. § 1710(h)(2) (permitting private party to petition district court to enjoin conduct in violation of Shipping Act during pendency of FMC proceedings) with 15 U.S.C. § 15 (requiring court to award treble damages for violation of Clayton Act) and id. § 26 (permitting court to enjoin future violation of Clayton Act). As we noted in Cruise Passengers I, the relationship between these two regimes does not involve:

the sort of jurisdictional overlap that the Congress sought to avoid when it passed the Shipping Act. Instead, the Congress was concerned about a carrier being subject to "parallel [\[8\]](#) jurisdiction,' i.e., remedies and sanctions for the same conduct made unlawful by both the Shipping Act and the antitrust laws.

911 F.2d at 792 (emphasis added). Because common and non-common carriage are distinct activities, there is no chance that a cruise line will be subject to different regulations and different sanctions for the same act. (An agreement to boycott the AACP with respect to common carriage is not the same as an agreement to do so with respect to non-common carriage, although of course one agreement may cover both.) Whether disparate legal treatment of the alleged boycott(s) is unwise from a policy perspective is not our concern; nor is the possibility that the boycott might be found illegal in one context but legal in the other a sufficient reason to dismiss the putative victim's suit. In addition, HN3 [↑] enforcement of the antitrust laws against a regulated industry insofar as it steps outside the regulated domain is part of the work-a-day world of the district court. See, e.g., Barnes v. Arden Mayfair, Inc., 759 F.2d 676, 679 (9th Cir. 1985) ("There is no per se exemption [from antitrust ^{9} law] for activities of carriers beyond the control of the [regulatory] agency") (citing Georgia v. Pennsylvania Railroad Co., 324 U.S. 439, 456, 89 L. Ed. 1051, 65 S. Ct. 716 (1945)); American Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Eastern Pay Phones, Inc., 767 F. Supp. 1335, 1343 (E.D. Va. 1991) ("Antitrust concerns are within the usual province of the Court and require no special regulatory expertise"). Therefore, the district court ought to have retained jurisdiction over that part of the suit within its exclusive jurisdiction.

Even were it not so clear that the doctrine of primary jurisdiction is inapplicable to this case, we would still be hesitant to see the case dismissed in its entirety. HN4[↑] In general, when primary jurisdiction lies with an administrative agency, the district court should stay the proceedings in front of it, not dismiss the suit. See, e.g., Reiter v. Cooper, 122 L. Ed. 2d 604, 113 S. Ct. 1213, 1220 (1993). Moreover, in this case in particular, the AACP notes that a new suit filed against the cruise lines after the completion of proceedings ^{10} before the FMC might be barred by the Clayton Act statute of limitations. If so, then dismissal would have too harsh a consequence to impose upon the plaintiff merely because the FMC has jurisdiction over a distinct part of its suit, particularly where the district court could effortlessly hold the suit in abeyance pending the outcome of proceedings before the FMC. See Carnation Co. v. Pacific Westbound Conference, 383 U.S. 213, 222-23, 15 L. Ed. 2d 709, 86 S. Ct. 781 (1966) (holding that dismissal under primary jurisdiction doctrine is not appropriate if "dismissal would ... prejudice the plaintiff's right to obtain antitrust relief at the appropriate time"). Further, the AACP informed the district court that in light of our earlier decision requiring it to proceed in two fora, it would likely not pursue any of its claims respecting the common carriage operations of the cruise lines and would instead pursue only its Clayton Act claims in the district court. The district court should certainly have explored that possibility, which would have left before it only a claim unarguably within its exclusive and obligatory jurisdiction.

[11] III. CONCLUSION

To sum up, in Cruise Passengers I, we held that the district court has jurisdiction over the non-common carriage claims brought by the plaintiff AACP. Today we hold that the doctrine of primary jurisdiction being inapplicable, the district court must exercise that jurisdiction. We observe that [*1188] even where a court could justifiably stay its hand for proceedings to go forward before the agency with primary jurisdiction, it should hold the suit in abeyance if outright dismissal could impair the rights of a party.

Accordingly, we remand this case to the district court for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion. The order of the district court dismissing the suit is Reversed.

New York v. Panex Indus.

United States District Court for the Western District of New York

August 16, 1994, Decided

94-CV-0400E(H)

Reporter

860 F. Supp. 977 *; 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11959 ; 25 ELR 20228

THE STATE OF NEW YORK and LANGDON MARSH, as Acting Commissioner of the New York State Department of Environmental Conservation and Trustee of the Natural Resources, Plaintiffs, v. PANEX INDUSTRIES, INC., PANEX INDUSTRIES, INC. LIQUIDATING TRUST, DANIEL ROSENBLOOM and PAUL LAZARE, as Trustees of Panex Industries, Inc. Liquidating Trust, ALPINE GROUP, INC., ROCHESTER BUTTON COMPANY, INC., TURBODYNE ELECTRIC POWER CORPORATION, MCGRAW-EDISON COMPANY, INC., DRESSER-RAND COMPANY, ABB AIR PREHEATER, INC. and VILLAGE OF WELLSVILLE, Defendants.

Core Terms

preliminary injunction, plaintiffs', defendants', freeze, injunction, circumstances, Winds, money judgment, settlement, decree, enjoin, cases

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

HN1 [down arrow] Injunctions, Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

The extraordinary remedy of a preliminary injunction will not issue unless the plaintiffs carry their burden of showing (a) irreparable harm, and (b) either (1) likelihood of success on the merits, or (2) sufficiently serious questions going to the merits to make them a fair ground for litigation and a balance of hardships tipping decidedly toward the party requesting the preliminary relief.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

HN2 [down arrow] Injunctions, Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Preservation of the status quo pendente lite is the purpose of a preliminary injunction.

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > Irreparable Harm

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Monetary Damages

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

HN3 Grounds for Injunctions, Irreparable Harm

A showing of irreparable harm is the sine qua non of a plaintiffs' burden in pursuing a preliminary injunction, and such harm must be neither remote nor speculative, but actual and imminent. Further, the harm must be one requiring a remedy of more than mere money damages -- i.e., the remedy at law must be inadequate.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Equity > General Overview

HN4 Preliminary Considerations, Equity

The general federal rule of equity is that a court may not reach a defendant's assets unrelated to the underlying litigation and freeze them so that they may be preserved to satisfy a potential money judgment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > Injunctions

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

HN5 Civil Actions, Injunctions

A preliminary injunction is appropriate when it is necessary to preserve a fund or property which is the subject of the provisions of any final decree in a cause or to enjoin an action which would ultimately be subject to injunction by a final decree. Injunctions are warranted in those situations because a preliminary injunction is always appropriate to grant intermediate relief of the same character as that which may be granted finally.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

HN6 Injunctions, Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

A preliminary injunction concerning a matter lying wholly outside the issues in a suit -- i.e., property which in no circumstances could be dealt with in any final injunction that may be entered, is inappropriate.

Counsel: [1] For Plaintiff: Roberta G. Gordon, Esq., Asst. Attorney General, Environmental Protection Bureau, 120 Broadway - 26th Floor, New York, NY 10271.

For Defendants: Richard G. Leland, Esq., Joseph Zuckerman, Esq., Rosenman & Colin, 575 Madison Ave., New York, NY 10022-2585, (Panex defendants). Daniel Riesel, Esq., Sive, Paget & Riesel, P.C., 460 Park Ave., New York, NY 10022, (Edison-McGraw). Richard A. Palumbo, Esq., Boylan, Brown, Code, Fowler & Wilson, 900 Midtown Tower, Rochester, NY 14604, (Village of Wellsville). Thomas Moore Griffin, Esq., 40 West 5th Street, New York, NY 10019, (Alpine Group). Morgan G. Graham, Esq., Kevin M. Hogan, Esq., Philips, Lytle, Hitchcock, Blaine & Huber, 3400 Marine Midland Center, Buffalo, NY 14203, (ABB Air Preheater). Laurie Styka Bloom, Esq., Nixon, Hargrave, Devans & Doyle, 1600 Main Place Tower, Buffalo, NY 14202, (Dresser-Rand and Turbodyne Electric). John Osnato, Esq., Kavanagh Peters Powell & Osnato, 415 Madison Avenue, New York, NY 10017, (Rochester Button).

Judges: Elvin

Opinion by: JOHN T. ELFVIN

Opinion

[*978] MEMORANDUM and ORDER

The plaintiffs brought this action pursuant to New York's common law and the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation & Liability Act [2] ("CERCLA"), 42 U.S.C. § 9601 et seq., seeking from the defendants costs for the cleanup of the Wellsville-Andover landfill ("the Site") in which defendant Panex Industries Inc. ("Panex") -- a Delaware corporation -- allegedly disposed of chemicals that subsequently leached into the soil, groundwater, wells and springs near the Site. Before this Court is the plaintiffs' motion to enjoin preliminarily the Trustees of defendant Panex Industries, Inc. Liquidating Trust ("the Trust") from expending its assets until the Trustees shall have provided the plaintiffs with discovery re the current assets and expenditures of the Trust and set aside assets of the Trust for the plaintiffs' claims pursuant to a plan for the equitable distribution of such assets as allegedly is required by Delaware law. The motion will be denied. The facts as set forth in the defendants' papers and uncontested by the plaintiffs follow.

Panex, formerly known as Duplan, was a clothing manufacturer. One of its divisions -- Rochester Button Company, Inc. -- manufactured buttons in Wellsville, N.Y. and, along with others of the defendants, allegedly illegally disposed of in the [3] Site chemical wastes which New York's Department of Environmental Conservation ("the DEC") estimates will cost $ 14.6 million to eradicate.

In 1976 Duplan petitioned for reorganization under Chapter XI of the Bankruptcy Act and subsequently the bankruptcy judge appointed a trustee. Duplan emerged from bankruptcy in 1981 as the renamed, reorganized and recapitalized entity, Panex Industries, Inc.

After the sale of various of its assets, Panex's stockholders adopted a Plan of Liquidation September 21, 1984 and Panex filed a Certificate of Dissolution with Delaware's Secretary of State April 15, 1985. Thereafter it sold its manufacturing facilities, distributed specified assets to its shareholders and, on September 12, 1985, formed the Trust to wind up its affairs in compliance with Delaware law. Such was accomplished before the plaintiffs had asserted any of their instant claims.

The Trust was established

"for the sole purpose of holding the Assets transferred to it by Panex on behalf of the Beneficiaries [Panex's shareholders], enforcing the rights of the Beneficiaries thereto, collecting the income thereon, satisfying any and all liabilities of Panex which are not paid or otherwise [4] discharged, distributing the Trust Property to the Beneficiaries, and taking such other action as is necessary to conserve and protect the Trust Property and to provide for the orderly liquidation of any and all of the Assets." Panex Industries Stockholders' Liquidating Trust Agreement ("the Agreement"), at Section 3.1 (see Affidavit of Roberta G. Gordon, Esq. in support of Plaintiffs' Motion for a Preliminary Injunction, at Exh. B, and Affidavit of Joseph Zuckerman, Esq. in Opposition to said Motion, at Exh. E.)

The Trust was to terminate after three years but was to continue for up to nine additional years "for the limited purpose of discharging any known liabilities of the Trust or of Panex or liabilities of the Trust or of Panex which the Trustees have reasonable grounds to believe may be asserted * * *." The Agreement, at Section 8.1. The Trust currently has approximately $ 1.275 million in assets, together with the possibility of indemnification from liability insurers.

In 1988 the plaintiffs informed Panex that they were asserting a CERCLA claim against it and requested that it take remedial action to clean up the Site. Periodically thereafter the plaintiffs requested [5] that Panex provide information to them but they did not file the instant suit until May 25, 1994 after they had learned of the existence of the [*979] Trust and that Panex and the Trustees were also defendants in other CERCLA suits -- namely, in two CERCLA actions brought in 1992 in the United States Virgin Islands because of Panex's alleged polluting of the "Tutu Aquifer" there. In one such action -- Four Winds Plaza Partnership v. Texaco, Inc. et al. ("Four Winds"), 1994 V.I. LEXIS 8, Civil Action No. 1989-224 -- Panex and the Trustees reached, in January 1994, a tentative settlement wherein they agreed to pay $ 890,000 of the $ 35 million originally sought by that plaintiff. After further negotiations the parties presented a settlement agreement dated April 27, 1994 to United States District Judge Stanley S. Brotman ¹ who signed an Order and Decree stating that such was binding and effective and that payment was required. The other action -- Harthman et al. v. Texaco et al., 1994 V.I. LEXIS 8, Civil Action No. 1989-220 -- is ongoing. Various of the defendants in both actions have asserted cross-claims for contribution. Additionally, the United States Environmental Protection Agency has begun an investigation [\[6\]](#) of the Tutu Aquifer and has notified the Trustees that they are "potentially responsible parties."

Between the time the settlement was signed and Judge Brotman's effectuation of such, the plaintiffs filed the instant action and thereafter (on June 28th) the Trustees filed a petition with Delaware's Court of Chancery seeking an order approving the payment of the Four Winds settlement or, in the alternative, for instruction re the payment of the settlement as that Court determines is proper under Delaware law.

The plaintiffs first argue that section 281(b) of Title 8 of Delaware's Corporation Code ² [\[8\]](#) and the Agreement itself require the Trustees to distribute ratably the Trust assets to contingent claimants such as the plaintiffs and thus that no payment should be made in the Four Winds (or any other) action until the [\[7\]](#) Trustees devise a plan for such. However, section 281(b) was enacted two years after Panex had dissolved and the sparse relevant Delaware precedent is unclear as to whether it applies retroactively. Given that neither side disputes that Delaware law controls the Trust, this Court agrees with the defendants that Delaware is the proper forum in which to resolve this question and any other questions concerning the Trustees' duties under the Trust. Thus, because the defendants have petitioned the Delaware Court to resolve such questions and the plaintiffs will have a full opportunity to be heard there, and because the defendants have represented to this Court (during oral argument on July 8th) that, in the interim,³ no or "minimal"⁴ funds of the Trust would be expended to settle the Four Winds (or the other) action, the plaintiffs' arguments re the dictates of Delaware law are premature and need not be addressed.

HN1[↑] The extraordinary remedy of a preliminary injunction will not issue unless the plaintiffs carry their burden of showing

"(a) irreparable harm and (b) either (1) likelihood of success on the merits or (2) sufficiently serious questions going to the [\[*980\]](#) merits to make them a fair ground for litigation and a balance of hardships tipping decidedly toward the party requesting the preliminary relief." Jackson Dairy, Inc. v. H.P. Hood & Sons, 596 F.2d 70, 72 \(2d Cir. 1979\).

HN2[↑] Preservation of the status quo pendente lite is the purpose of a preliminary injunction, Guinness & Sons v. Sterling Pub. Co., 732 F.2d 1095 \(2d Cir. 1984\).

¹ Judge Brotman is a United States District Court Judge for the District of New Jersey and was temporarily assigned to the United States District Court for the District of the Virgin Islands.

² "A dissolved corporation or successor entity * * * shall pay or make reasonable provision to pay all claims and obligations, including all contingent, conditional, or unmatured claims known to the corporation or such successor entity and all claims which are known to the dissolved corporation or such successor entity but for which the identity of the claimant is unknown. Such claims shall be paid in full and any such provision for payment made shall be made in full if there are sufficient funds. If there are insufficient funds, such claims and obligations shall be paid or provided for according to their priority and, among claims of equal priority, ratably to the extent of funds legally available therefor. Any remaining funds shall be distributed to the stockholders of the dissolved corporation."

³ According to counsel for the defendants, the Delaware hearing is set for October 4th.

⁴ Defense counsel Zuckerman stated at the July 8th oral argument that the defendants might expend some trust assets (not exceeding $ 100,000 or so) if such were needed as a "deal closer" should the defendants' insurers agreed to pay most but not all of the $ 890,000 Four Winds settlement. Trust funds also will be expended for ongoing attorneys' fees, but plaintiffs' counsel Gordon stated at the oral argument that the plaintiffs do not seek to enjoin the payment of such.

HN3 A showing of irreparable harm is the sine qua non of the plaintiffs' burden, Citibank, N.A. v. Citytrust, 756 F.2d 273, 275 \(2d Cir. 1985\), and such harm must be "neither remote nor speculative, but actual and imminent." Tucker Anthony Realty Corp. v. Schlesinger, 888 F.2d 969, 975 \(2d Cir. 1989\). Further, the harm "must be one requiring a remedy of more than mere money damages" -- i.e., the remedy at law must be inadequate. Ibid; In re Feit & Drexler, Inc., 760 F.2d 406, 409 \(2d Cir. 1985\). Thus, HN4 "the general federal rule of equity is that a court may not reach a defendant's assets unrelated to the underlying litigation and freeze them so that they may be preserved to satisfy a potential money judgment." Mitsubishi Int'l v. Cardinal Textile Sales, 14 F.3d 1507, 1521 \(11th Cir. 1994\), petition for cert. filed (June 30, 1994), (quoting from In re Fredeman Litigation, 843 F.2d 821, 824 \(5th Cir. 1988\)); 10 accord, Home-Stake Production v. Talon Petroleum, C.A., 907 F.2d 1012, 1021 \(10th Cir. 1990\). As was explained in De Beers Mines v. United States, 325 U.S. 212, 222-223, 89 L. Ed. 1566, 65 S. Ct. 1130 \(1945\) (the case upon which the just-cited cases relied), a contrary rule would create the situation where

"every suitor who resorts to chancery for any sort of relief by injunction may, on a mere statement of belief that the defendant can easily make away with or transport his money or goods, impose an injunction on him, indefinite in duration, disabling him to use so much of his funds or property as the court deems necessary for security or compliance with its possible decree. And, if so, it is difficult to see why a plaintiff in any action for a personal judgment in tort or contract may not, also, apply to the chancellor for a so-called injunction sequestering his opponent's assets pending recovery and satisfaction of a judgment in such a law action. No relief of this character has been thought justified in the long history of equity jurisprudence."

Because the relief the plaintiffs 11 seek -- enjoining the defendants to "set aside" assets of the Trust for the plaintiffs' claims pursuant to a plan for ratable distribution of such -- is closely analogous to (if not identical to) freezing assets to secure a potential money judgment, the issue before this Court is whether there exists an applicable exception to the abovementioned general rule that would permit such relief.

Analysis of this question begins with De Beers, which involved an antitrust prosecution wherein the government sought pretrial a preliminary injunction to freeze the defendants' assets to ensure that they would be able to satisfy any contempt sanction the district court might impose should the defendants disobey any order granting the relief (i.e., enjoining the defendants from future antitrust law violations) sought by the government from the district court. A preliminary injunction was reversed for the reasons noted above. Instructive (and ultimately dispositive of the instant motion) were the cited situations in which HN5 preliminary injunctions would be appropriate -- viz., when it was necessary to preserve "a fund or property which would have been the subject of the provisions of any 12 final decree in the cause, or [to enjoin] action which would ultimately have been subject to injunction by final decree." Id. at 220. Injunctions are warranted in those situations because "[a] preliminary injunction is always appropriate to grant intermediate relief of the same character as that which may be granted finally." Ibid. Contrarily, the district court's HN6 injunction in De Beers concerned "a matter lying wholly outside the issues in the suit" -- i.e., "property which in no circumstances [could] be dealt with in any final injunction that may be entered," ibid. -- and thus was not appropriate.

With these principles in mind, the untenability of the plaintiffs' position becomes clear. The intermediate relief 981 sought -- freezing the defendants' assets -- is not "of the same character as that which may be granted finally" because the ultimate relief sought is not equitable -- i.e., they do not seek to enjoin future illegal conduct or to freeze permanently the assets -- but legal -- i.e., a money judgment. Although there are other exceptions where a court may preliminarily freeze assets to ensure 13 satisfaction of a money judgment, none is applicable here. (See discussion below.) Further, the plaintiffs are not seeking to preserve a specific fund or res whose ownership is contested and which would be "the subject of the provisions of any final decree in the cause." Rather, the defendants' assets are unrelated to their alleged CERCLA liability in the sense that the plaintiffs in no way premise their claims on the existence of the assets or the manner in which they came to be. That is, the assets were neither a cause nor an effect of the alleged illegality, and thus De Beers bars intermediate relief. See In re Fredeman Litigation, 843 F.2d at 827-828.

The plaintiffs cite several cases for the proposition that "a preliminary injunction is proper to prevent a defendant from making a judgment uncollectible," Plaintiffs' Memorandum of Law in Support of a Preliminary Injunction and Order at 13, but this proposition needs to be qualified with the phrase "in exceptional circumstances." An examination of these cases reveals that the exceptional circumstances upon which the respective courts relied to freeze defendants' assets preliminarily are inapposite [14] to the instant circumstances. For example, in In re Feit & Drexler, Inc., supra, wherein the defendant had engaged in numerous and substantial efforts to hide and secrete its assets from the court and the plaintiff, the district court's preliminary injunction was upheld, the appellate court noting that, "even where the ultimate relief sought is money damages," a preliminary injunction would issue "where it has been shown that the defendant 'intended to frustrate any judgment on the merits' by 'transferring its assets out of the jurisdiction.'" Id. at 416, quoting from Productos Carnic, S.A. v. Cent. Am. Beef, Etc., 621 F.2d 683, 686 (5th Cir. 1980). However, no such stealthy and disingenuous antics have been alleged herein. Republic of Philippines v. Marcos, 806 F.2d 344, 356 (2d Cir. 1986), is inapposite because the assets which were the subject of that preliminary injunction, unlike those at bar, were also the subject of the suit itself and thus the intermediate relief sought was "of the same character as that which [might] be granted finally," a situation [15] "always appropriate for a preliminary injunction." De Beers, 325 U.S. at 220. Others of the plaintiffs' cases are inapposite because they involved situations where fraud or illegality was afoot or likely with respect to the assets at issue.⁵ See, e.g., S.E.C. v. Unifund Sal., 910 F.2d 1028 (2d Cir. 1990); Securities & Exchange Commission v. Manor Nursing Ctrs., Inc., 458 F.2d 1082, 1106 (2d Cir. 1972).

[16] The plaintiffs place greatest reliance on Deckert v. Independence Corp., 311 U.S. 282, 85 L. Ed. 189, 61 S. Ct. 229 (1940). Deckert was a suit brought pursuant to the Securities Act of 1933 by purchasers of securities against a vendor of such for its alleged fraudulent misrepresentations concerning its sales of the securities. The issuance of a preliminary injunction restraining the transference or disposal of assets in a trust fund that consisted in part of payments made by the purchasers was upheld. In essence, the plaintiffs argue that the Deckert defendant's insolvency, that it was "threatened with many lawsuits, * * * that preferences to creditors [were] probable, and that its assets [were] in danger of dissipation and depletion," id. at 285, were the material facts upon which the preliminary injunction was upheld and thus, given the analogous circumstances, that Deckert controls [*982] the instant motion. This Court disagrees. First, the ultimate relief sought by the Deckert plaintiffs was equitable, id. at 289, [17] and thus the preliminary relief sought was "of the same character as that which [might] be granted finally." Second and most telling, the trust fund, unlike the instant one, contained the very funds that were the subject of the lawsuit. That this (and not the defendant's insolvency, or the danger of depletion of assets, etc.) was the basis for the upholding of the preliminary injunction was made clear in De Beers, wherein Deckert was specifically cited as an example of an exceptional case where a freezing of assets was appropriate because it involved "a fund or property which would have been the subject of the provisions of any final decree in the cause." De Beers, 325 U.S. at 220. Third, Deckert concluded only that the trial judge did not abuse his discretion in granting the preliminary injunction, thus suggesting that a judge could also have reasonably ruled otherwise. See Roland Machinery Co. v. Dresser Industries, 749 F.2d 380, 390 (7th Cir. 1984) (in reviewing a district judge's granting of a preliminary injunction, "the question for [an appellate court] is whether the [18] judge exceeded the bounds of permissible choice in the circumstances, not what [the appellate court] would have done if [it] had been in his shoes.")

In summary, the plaintiffs have failed to establish an applicable exception to the general rule that a preliminary injunction may not issue to freeze a defendant's assets to protect a potential money judgment. The defendants' assets are unrelated to the underlying suit and the preliminary relief sought differs from what is ultimately sought (making the De Beers exceptions inapplicable) and there are no allegations either of fraud or of attempts to transfer assets out of the jurisdiction (making inapplicable In re Feit, supra and the securities fraud cases cited by the plaintiff).⁶

⁵ The plaintiffs argue that an expenditure of assets by the defendants in the Four Winds settlement would constitute an illegality because Delaware law requires that the assets of a dissolved corporation be ratably distributed but, as mentioned, whether Delaware law so requires in this instance is not clear and the defendants have assured this Court they will not act until this question shall have been decided in Delaware. However, if it is there ruled that ratable distribution is required and if the defendants thereafter manifest an intention to act contrary to that ruling, this Court would be willing, at the least, to entertain a renewed preliminary injunction motion.

[19] Assuming arguendo that the instant circumstances warranted an exception to this general rule, the plaintiffs' motion would still fail because they have not made the requisite showing that the purported irreparable harm (i.e., the defendants' alleged inability to satisfy a money judgment) "is neither remote nor speculative, but actual and imminent." Tucker, supra, 888 F.2d at 975. For example, although the plaintiffs' claim that cleanup of the Site will cost $ 14.6 million they have made no representations re the percentage for which the instant defendants are responsible.⁷ Given that there are five other named defendants which, for all this Court knows, may be responsible for most of the alleged pollution, that it is possible that the instant defendants' insurers will indemnify them for the Four Winds settlement, and that the defendants have $ 1.275 million in assets plus possible partial indemnification from their insurers for liability in the instant action, it is speculation rather than an actuality that the defendants' assets will fall short of their liabilities. The defendants also have assured this Court that no or minimal assets [20] (beyond attorneys' fees) will be expended before the Delaware Chancery Court rules [*983] on October 4th, and that they will comply with any order of that Court, including one mandating the very relief the plaintiffs seek -- viz., a plan for ratable distribution of the trust assets -- thus attenuating further any assertions that the alleged harm is "actual and imminent."

As to the plaintiffs' motion that an injunction issue to expedite discovery, the proper route to accomplish such would be to make discovery requests and then, if the defendants are recalcitrant or dilatory, to move this Court to compel discovery.⁸

[21] Accordingly, it is hereby ORDERED that the plaintiffs' motions are denied.

DATED: Buffalo, N.Y.

August 16, 1994

John T. Elfvin

U.S.D.J.

End of Document

⁶ Although the plaintiffs do not mention it, there is a split among the United States Courts of Appeal as to the extent of the exceptions allowable under De Beers. Compare, e.g., ITT Community Development Corp. v. Barton, 569 F.2d 1351 (5th Cir. 1978), and Rosen v. Cascade Intern., Inc., 21 F.3d 1520 (11th Cir. 1994), both of which narrowly read the exceptions allowable under De Beers, with Hoxworth v. Blinder, Robinson & Co., Inc., 903 F.2d 186 (3rd Cir. 1990), and Teradyne, Inc. v. Mostek Corp., 797 F.2d 43 (1st Cir. 1986), both of which expand the exceptions. Teradyne is particularly relevant to the plaintiffs' argument (although they did not cite it) because it characterized Deckert, supra, as holding that "a preliminary injunction, designed to freeze the status quo and protect the damages remedy is an appropriate form of relief when it is shown that the defendant is likely to be insolvent at the time of judgment." Teradyne, 797 F.2d at 52. However, as mentioned this is a misreading of Deckert in light of De Beers's characterization of Deckert (i.e., that insolvency vel non was not material to its decision), and we agree with the criticism of these cases by the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit that allowing such expansive exceptions "tortures the express language of De Beers and runs counter to established equitable principles." Rosen, 21 F.3d at 1529. Further, the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit has never allowed such exceptions.

⁷ The plaintiffs do allege joint and several liability, but they have made no suggestion that the other defendants would be unable to satisfy their respective liabilities.

⁸ At oral argument, counsel agreed that there could be a cross-utilization of discovered evidence -- viz., that what may be discovered herein may be used in the Delaware's Chancery Court and vice versa.

Vinci v. Waste Management

United States District Court for the Northern District of California

August 19, 1994, Decided ; August 23, 1994, Filed; August 25, 1994, Entered

No. C 94-1946 FMS

Reporter

1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12071 *; 1994-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,774

LEONARD G. VINCI, Plaintiff (s) v. WASTE MANAGEMENT, INC., an Illinois corporation, and WASTE MANAGEMENT OF ALAMEDA COUNTY, a California corporation, Defendant (s).

Core Terms

antitrust, antitrust violation, conspiracy, competitors, shareholder, alleges, recycling, Clayton Act, intentional infliction of emotional distress, anti trust law, Sherman Act, motion to dismiss, terminated, consumer, damages

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN1[Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim]

A motion to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) tests only the sufficiency of the complaint. Dismissal of an action pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) is appropriate only where it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief. In reviewing the motion, the court must assume all factual allegations to be true and must construe them in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. The court may dismiss the complaint, or any claims within it, for failure to state a claim if it appears to a certainty that the plaintiff would not be entitled to relief under any set of facts that could be proved. In considering a motion to dismiss, the district court must take all allegations of material fact as true and construe them in the light most favorable to the non-moving party.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

HN2 Clayton Act, Claims

Antitrust standing derives from § 4 of the Clayton Act which provides that any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court for the United States and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including reasonable attorney's fees. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

HN3 Clayton Act, Claims

A plaintiff must prove more than injury causally linked to an illegal presence in the market. In order to recover threefold damages under the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, a plaintiff must prove the existence of antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. An injury will not qualify as an antitrust injury unless it is attributable to an anti-competitive aspect of the defendant's practices. The determination of antitrust standing is a question of law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholder Actions > Actions Against Corporations > General Overview

HN4 Private Actions, Standing

A shareholder of a corporation injured by antitrust violations has no standing to sue in his or her name. This rule is applicable even if the injured shareholder is the sole stockholder of the corporation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN5 Clayton Act, Claims

There are various policy factors that the court considers in determining whether a class of plaintiffs should be allowed to bring suit under the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15: (1) whether the alleged injury is of the type the antitrust laws were intended to forestall; (2) the directness of the injury; (3) the speculative measure of the harm; (4) the risk of duplicative recovery; (5) the complexity in apportioning damages. These factors favor antitrust standing for consumers of products or services and competitors in the market in which trade is restrained.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

HN6 Regulated Practices, Private Actions

The requirement that an alleged injury be related to anticompetitive behavior requires as a corollary, that the injured party be a participant in the same market as the alleged malefactors. In other words, the party alleging the injury must be either a consumer of the alleged violator's goods or services or a competitor of the alleged violator in the restrained market. This factor is of tremendous significance and weighs heavily against those who are neither competitors nor consumers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

HN7 Regulated Practices, Private Actions

A plaintiff can satisfy the participant in the marketplace prong of the antitrust standing test if his injury is inextricably intertwined with the antitrust violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Sherman Act (Act) distinguishes between concerted and independent actions. Section 1 of the Act reaches unreasonable restraints of trade effected by a conspiracy between separate entities. (15 U.S.C.S. § 1) Employees of a firm do not provide the plurality of actors imperative for a § 1 conspiracy, nor does the coordinated activity of a parent and its wholly owned subsidiary.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN9 Sherman Act, Claims

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 requires a claimant to allege and prove three elements: (1) an agreement or conspiracy among two or more persons or distinct business entities; (2) by which the persons or entities intend to harm or restrain competition; (3) which actually injures competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Acts & Mental States > Mens Rea > Specific Intent

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

HN10 [blue download icon] Sherman Act, Claims

In an antitrust action, the conduct of a single firm is governed by 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 and is unlawful only when the firm's conduct poses a danger of monopolization. An attempted monopolization claim has three essential elements: (1) specific intent to eliminate competition; (2) anticompetitive conduct directed at accomplishing this unlawful objective; and (3) a dangerous probability of success.

Civil Procedure > Parties > Real Party in Interest > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Parties > Joinder of Parties > General Overview

HN11 [blue download icon] Parties, Real Party in Interest

Every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest, except as otherwise provided by statute. Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 367.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Torts > Intentional Torts > Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress > General Overview

Torts > Procedural Matters > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN12 [blue download icon] Statute of Limitations, Time Limitations

Personal injury torts are foreclosed, by statute, after one year. Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 340. This includes actions based on intentional infliction of emotional distress.

Judges: [*1] SMITH

Opinion by: FERN M. SMITH

Opinion

ORDER OF DISMISSAL

ISSUES

Defendant's motion to dismiss requires the Court to determine whether plaintiff can maintain a treble damages action against the defendant under the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15 \(1994\), for defendant's alleged violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2 \(1994\). The Court must also decide whether plaintiff has standing to seek damages for breach of contract and whether his claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress is time-barred.

BACKGROUND

In 1989, plaintiff Leonard Vinci ("Vinci"), entered into a settlement agreement with defendant Waste Management, Inc. ("Waste Management"), involving his company, Vinci Enterprises, Inc. ("VEI"), and an acquired subsidiary of Waste Management, Oakland Scavenger (now known as Waste Management of Alameda County). Under the agreement, defendant allegedly promised to provide Vinci and/or VEI¹ substantial quantities of recyclable materials. Subsequently, Waste Management employed Vinci who was then terminated in December, 1992.

[*2] Vinci alleges that Waste Management breached the settlement agreement in order to drive Vinci out of business and to control competition in the recycling business. The alleged breach included: (a) encouraging other recycling haulers to solicit accounts from Waste Management to take business away from VEI; (b) refusing to deliver specific accounts to VEI; (c) diverting accounts from VEI; (d) intercepting and diverting materials destined for VEI; (e) procrastinating in procuring a lucrative account promised for VEI. Vinci further alleges that Waste Management employed Vinci in order to prevent him from providing relevant testimony in an alleged lawsuit involving Vinci's successor and Waste Management. Vinci alleges that, during the course of his employment, he was repeatedly asked to cooperate with Waste Management's predatory schemes and conspiracies designed to destroy competition in the recycling business. He further alleges that he was ultimately terminated for refusing to assist in these illegal activities.

Vinci filed an action in California Superior Court on January 12, 1994, alleging antitrust claims under the California Cartwright Act, Cal. B. & P. Code § 16,700, et [*3] seq, which were virtually identical to the claims made by Vinci here. The claims were dismissed by a demurrer.

Vinci filed this action against Waste Management and Waste Management of Alameda County for violation of the Sherman Act and for breach of contract and intentional infliction of emotional distress. Waste Management filed this motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) based on Vinci's lack of antitrust standing and, alternatively, for Vinci's failure to allege a Sherman Act violation by Waste Management. Waste Management also seeks to dismiss Vinci's claim of intentional infliction of emotional distress as time-barred and Vinci's contract claim based on lack of standing and failure to allege the necessary elements for breach of contract.

DISCUSSION

I. The Legal Standard

HN1 [↑] A motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) tests only the sufficiency of the complaint. North Star Int'l v. Arizona Corp. Comm'n, 720 F.2d 578, 581 (9th Cir. 1983). Dismissal of an action pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) is appropriate only where it "appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him [*4] to relief." Levine v. Diamanthuset, Inc., 950 F.2d 1478, 1482 (9th Cir. 1991) (quoting Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 101-02, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957)). In reviewing the motion, the Court must assume all factual allegations to be true and must construe them in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. North Star, 720 F.2d at 580. The Court may dismiss the complaint, or any claims within it, for failure to state a claim if it "appear[s] to a certainty that the plaintiff would not be entitled to relief under any set of facts that could be proved." Wool v. Tandem Computers, Inc., 818 F.2d 1433, 1439 (9th Cir. 1987). In considering a motion to dismiss, the district court must take all allegations of material fact as true and construe them in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. Id.

II. Vinci Lacks Antitrust Standing to Sue Waste Management Under the Clayton Act

¹ Plaintiff did not include a copy of the settlement agreement with the complaint.

HN2 [↑] Antitrust standing derives from section 4 of the Clayton Act which provides that "any person who shall be injured in his business [*5] or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court for the United States . . . and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including reasonable attorney's fees." 15 U.S.C. § 15 \(1994\).

Although a literal reading of the statute arguably encompasses almost every conceivable harm remotely related to antitrust violations, "Congress did not intend the antitrust laws to provide a remedy in damages for all injuries that might be traced to an antitrust violation." Associated Gen. Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters ("AGC"), 459 U.S. 519, 103 S. Ct. 897, 906, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 \(1983\) (quoting Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., 405 U.S. 251, 92 S. Ct. 885, 891 n.14, 31 L. Ed. 2d 184 \(1972\)). HN3 [↑] A plaintiff "must prove more than injury causally linked to an illegal presence in the market." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 97 S. Ct. 690, 697, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 \(1977\). [*6] In order to recover threefold damages under 15 U.S.C. § 15, "a plaintiff must prove the existence of 'antitrust injury,' which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 1889, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 \(1990\) (quoting Brunswick, 97 S. Ct. at 697 (emphasis in original)). An injury will not qualify as an "antitrust injury" unless it is attributable to an anti-competitive aspect of the defendant's practices. Id. The determination of antitrust standing "is a question of law." Bubar v. Ampco Foods, Inc., 752 F.2d 445, 449 \(9th Cir. 1985\).

Vinci alleges that he was directly harmed as a result of Waste Management's efforts to eliminate his presence in the relevant marketplace. This was allegedly accomplished by first forcing him from the business of recycling and then firing him due to his refusal to cooperate in a predatory price plan. [*7] The Court must evaluate Vinci's antitrust standing under both scenarios.

At oral argument, counsel for plaintiff suggested that evaluating Vinci's antitrust claims separately (i.e. as shareholder of a competing corporation and as employee of defendant) disregards the teaching of Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide, 370 U.S. 690, 82 S. Ct. 1404, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777 \(1962\). In Continental Ore, a series of acts performed in furtherance of a conspiracy by "defendants and others acting in concert with them" resulted in harm to a plaintiff corporation's business. Id. at 1407-08. The Supreme Court ruled that, in determining defendant's liability, the individual acts by the co-conspirators against the corporation should not be treated as "separate and unrelated lawsuits." Id. at 1410.

This Court's analysis does not run counter to the above principle. Vinci's claims allege separate harms to two distinct legal entities - harm to the corporation of which he is a shareholder and harm to Vinci personally, as a Waste Management employee. A separate analysis of these claims is essential in order to properly distill the legal issues [*8] involved in each, be fair to the litigants, and not threaten to obfuscate the presence of any alleged conspiracy.

A. Vinci Lacks Antitrust Standing as a Shareholder of an Injured Corporation

HN4 [↑] "A shareholder of a corporation injured by antitrust violations has no standing to sue in his or her name . . ." Solinger v. A&M Records, Inc., 718 F.2d 298, 299 \(9th Cir. 1983\). This rule is applicable even if the injured shareholder is the sole stockholder of the corporation. Sherman v. British Leyland Motors, Ltd., 601 F.2d 429, 439 \(9th Cir. 1979\).

Vinci's complaint alleges that Waste Management deprived VEI of recyclable material needed to continue operations through a variety of anti-competitive practices intended to drive Vinci out of business. As a competitor of Waste Management in the relevant marketplace, VEI would have standing to file suit under the Clayton Act for any alleged wrongdoing on the part of Waste Management. See AGC, 103 S. Ct. at 908. Vinci contends, however, that he should be given individual antitrust standing because Waste Management's practices [*9] were targeted directly at him and were intended to put Vinci himself out of business. This argument lacks merit.

In Stein v. U.A. Corp., 691 F.2d 885 (9th Cir. 1982), the primary shareholder and officer of a corporation attempted to sue the defendant corporation for antitrust injuries. Like Vinci, Stein alleged that the defendant's actions were intended "to drive him out of the industry." Id. at 897 (emphasis added). In denying standing to the individual shareholder, the court noted that regardless of whether the actions taken were focused on the corporation or the individual shareholder, the apparent wrongdoing was carried out against the corporation. Id.

As in Stein, Vinci alleges wrongful acts carried out against the injured corporation, VEI. Accordingly, the Court finds that Vinci lacks antitrust standing solely by virtue of his status as a VEI shareholder.

B. Vinci Lacks Antitrust Standing as an Employee that was Terminated by Waste Management

The Supreme Court has enunciated HN5¹ various policy factors that courts should consider in determining whether a class of plaintiffs should be allowed to bring suit [*10] under 15 U.S.C. § 15:

- (1) whether the alleged injury is of the type the antitrust laws were intended to forestall;
- (2) the directness of the injury;
- (3) the speculative measure of the harm;
- (4) the risk of duplicative recovery;
- (5) the complexity in apportioning damages.

Bubar, 752 F.2d at 448-49. These factors favor antitrust standing for consumers of products or services (see Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 102 S. Ct. 2540, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149 (1982)) and competitors in the market in which trade is restrained (see United States v. Topco Assoc., Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 92 S. Ct. 1126, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515 (1972)). AGC, 103 S. Ct. at 908-09.

In addition, the Ninth Circuit has allowed an employee that has been terminated by a corporation to sue his employer under the Clayton Act. Ostrofe v. H.S. Crocker Co., Inc., 740 F.2d 739 (9th Cir. 1984). In Ostrofe, the plaintiff was forced to [*11] resign as marketing director for the defendant corporation because he refused to take part in a conspiracy to restrain trade in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1. Id. at 741-42. The plaintiff violated the agreement between the defendant corporation and the co-conspirator corporations by soliciting accounts with businesses not involved in the conspiracy. The plaintiff was then forced to resign his position and boycotted from future employment in the industry. Id. The court held that conferring antitrust standing on this plaintiff was consistent with the purposes of the Clayton Act. Id. at 747.

As subsequent Ninth Circuit opinions have noted, the marketing director in Ostrofe was granted antitrust standing because (1) his injury was directly caused by an intentional boycott of his services; (2) his injury was of a type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent; and (3) he was the natural vindicator of the antitrust violation. Lucas v. Bechtel Corp., 800 F.2d 839, 846 (9th Cir. 1986) (citing Ostrofe, 740 F.2d at 742-43).

Vinci [*12] maintains that Ostrofe is directly on point, compelling denial of Waste Management's motion to dismiss. Ostrofe, however, is readily distinguishable and its application to the facts of this case would unnecessarily expand a relatively narrow holding of the ninth circuit.²

² See, e.g. Gregory Marketing Corp. v. Wakefern Food Corp., 787 F.2d 92, 96 (3d. Cir. 1986) (the view that discharged employees have antitrust standing generally rejected); Rafferty v. Nynex Corp., 744 F. Supp. 324 (D.D.C. 1990) (most courts which have considered the issue in Ostrofe have rejected the holding); Boisjoly v. Morton Thiokol, Inc., 706 F. Supp. 795, 805 (D. Utah 1988) ("Ostrofe's holding is . . . contrary to virtually all other decisions addressing the issue."); Winther V. DEC Int'l, Inc., 625 F. Supp. 100, 103 (D. Colo. 1985) ("Nothing in Associated General Contractors supports [Ostrofe's] interpretation of the scope of antitrust law.").

[*13] 1. Vinci's Alleged Injury was not Caused by an Intentional Boycott of His Services

Vinci has not alleged in his complaint an intentional boycott of his services. This factor is of particular importance because the court in Ostrofe expressly based its holding on the presence of the boycott.³

[*14] 2. Vinci's Alleged Injury was not of a Type the Antitrust Laws Were Intended to Prevent

HN6[↑] "The requirement that the alleged injury be related to anticompetitive behavior requires as a corollary, that the injured party be a participant in the same market as the alleged malefactors." Bhan v. NME Hospitals, Inc., 772 F.2d 1467, 1470 (9th Cir. 1985). "In other words, the party alleging the injury must be either a consumer of the alleged violator's goods or services or a competitor of the alleged violator in the restrained market." Eagle v. Star-Kist Foods, Inc., 812 F.2d 538, 540 (9th Cir. 1987). This factor is of "tremendous significance", Bhan, 772 F.2d at 1470 n.3, and weighs heavily against those who are neither competitors nor consumers. Lucas, 800 F.2d at 844.

Although the plaintiff in Ostrofe was neither a competitor nor a consumer, his position as marketing director was critical to the success of the price-fixing agreement, and his failure to participate in the conspiracy by his employer "stood as a clear impediment to its effectuation." Exhibitors' Serv., Inc. v. American Multi-Cinema, 788 F.2d 574, 580 (9th Cir. 1986) [*15] (citing Ostrofe, 740 F.2d at 745-46). "Ostrofe was an 'essential participant' in the scheme, which could not succeed without his active participation." Id. (quoting Ostrofe, 740 F.2d at 745-46). HN7[↑] A plaintiff can, therefore, satisfy the participant in the marketplace prong if his injury is "inextricably intertwined" with the antitrust violation. Fallis v. Pendleton Woolen Mills, Inc., 866 F.2d 209, 211 (6th Cir. 1989).

Vinci is neither a consumer nor a competitor in the same market as Waste Management. This fact alone "weighs heavily" against Vinci but does not automatically preclude standing. Id. at 211. What does ultimately prove fatal to Vinci's claim of antitrust standing is his failure to allege facts showing that his injury is "inextricably intertwined" with Waste Management's alleged antitrust violation. Vinci has not alleged that he was an "essential participant" in Waste Management's alleged conspiracy or that the conspiracy could not succeed without his participation. He, therefore, has no standing to pursue the alleged antitrust violations.

This [*16] conclusion finds support in the state court's disposition of Vinci's claims against Waste Management under the Cartwright Act, Business & Professions Code § 16,700 et seq (analogous to the Sherman Act). Vinci v. Waste Management, Inc., No. 957805 (Cal. Super. Ct. May 4, 1994) ("Vinci") (order sustaining defendant's demurrer in part and overruling it in part). The San Francisco Superior Court (Cahill, J.) sustained Waste Management's demurrer and specifically declined to extend antitrust standing to Vinci under Ostrofe, noting that "[Ostrofe] requires that a fired employee must show that the antitrust violation will be unremedied without the employee's lawsuit and that the Plaintiff is an essential participant in the alleged wrongful conduct and that the conduct could not succeed without his cooperation." Id.

3. Vinci is not the Natural Vindicator of Waste Management's Alleged Antitrust Violation

³ Ostrofe first reached the Ninth Circuit in 1982 where the court found standing. Ostrofe v. H.S. Crocker Co., 670 F.2d 1378 (9th Cir. 1982) ("Ostrofe I"). The Supreme Court vacated this holding and remanded "for further consideration in light of [AGC]." 460 U.S. 1007 (1983). On remand, the ninth circuit noted that AGC did not dictate reversal even if the court had "expanded" the concept of "antitrust injury" too broadly. Ostrofe, 740 F.2d at 746. This conclusion was predicated on a footnote in the majority opinion of AGC which reserved the question "of whether the direct victim of a boycott, who suffers a type of injury unrelated to antitrust policy, may recover damages when the ultimate purpose of the boycott is to restrain competition in the relevant economic market." Id. (quoting AGC, 103 S. Ct. at 910 n.44).

"The 'existence of an identifiable class of persons whose self-interest would normally motivate them to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement diminishes the justification for allowing a more remote party . . . to perform the office of a private [*17] attorney general.'" Atlantic Richfield, 110 S. Ct. at 1895.

According to Vinci's complaint, Waste Management's alleged antitrust violation primarily involved an attempt to monopolize the garbage collection and recycling business through a series of acquisitions and the use of predatory means to destroy competitors. Vinci's injury is a byproduct of the alleged antitrust violation; the wrongful result Waste Management allegedly sought was the reduction of competition and competitors. See Fallis, 866 F.2d at 211. Waste Management's "competitors are much more immediate victims of the alleged conspiracy." Lucas, 800 F.2d at 844.

Ostrofe is distinguishable here as well. The court in Ostrofe noted that although others might have been more directly victimized by the alleged conspiracy, it was unlikely that anyone else would have "equal incentive to bring the antitrust violators to account" and would therefore leave a significant antitrust violation unremedied. Ostrofe, 740 F.2d at 747. In this case, however, Waste Management's competitors [*18] would be directly injured and would have ample incentive to seek relief under the Clayton Act, if their existence was threatened by Waste Management's practices. Any alleged antitrust violation would, therefore, not go undetected if Vinci is denied standing.⁴

III. Vinci Has Failed to Allege a Sherman Act Violation

HN8 [↑] The Sherman Act distinguishes between concerted and independent actions. Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 1469, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984). Section 1 of the Act reaches unreasonable restraints of trade effected by a conspiracy between separate entities. Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tribe Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 2740, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628. Employees of a firm "do not provide the plurality of actors imperative for a section 1 conspiracy," nor does "the coordinated activity of a parent and its [*19] wholly owned subsidiary." Id. at 2741. Vinci sued only Waste Management and its subsidiary, Waste Management of Alameda County, and failed to allege in his complaint a "contract, combination . . . or conspiracy between separate entities." Id. at 2740 (emphasis in original). The only multi-party conduct alleged in Vinci's complaint is Waste Management's intentional encouragement of other recycling haulers to solicit accounts from Waste Management. Such encouragement is not necessarily a section 1 agreement; furthermore, Vinci fails to allege that anyone other than Waste Management ever had any wrongful intent. See, e.g. Monsanto, 104 S. Ct. at 1473.⁵

[*20] HN10 [↑] The conduct of a single firm is governed by 15 U.S.C. § 2 and is unlawful only when the firm's conduct poses a danger of monopolization. Copperweld, 104 S. Ct. at 2739-740. An attempted monopolization claim has three essential elements: (1) specific intent to eliminate competition; (2) anticompetitive conduct directed at accomplishing this unlawful objective; and (3) "a dangerous probability of success." Thurman Indus. v. Pay 'N Pak Stores, 875 F.2d 1369, 1378 (9th Cir. 1989). Vinci has failed to allege in his complaint both specific intent and likelihood of success of an attempted monopoly. The absence of these elements in Vinci's complaint makes it susceptible to a motion for dismissal. See Rutman Wine Co. v. E. & J. Gallo Winery, 829 F.2d 729, 736 (9th Cir. 1987).

For these reasons, the Court finds that Vinci has failed to allege a claim against Waste Management consistent with a violation of the Sherman Act.

⁴ See also Vinci, No. 957805 at 2.

⁵ HN9 [↑] 15 U.S.C. § 1 requires a claimant to allege and prove three elements: "(1) an agreement or conspiracy among two or more persons or distinct business entities; (2) by which the persons or entities intend to harm or restrain competition; (3) which actually injures competition." Les Shockley Racing, Inc. v. National Hot Rod Ass'n, 884 F.2d 504, 507 (9th Cir. 1989).

IV. Vinci Lacks Standing to File the Breach of Contract Claim Against Waste Management

HN11 [↑] "Every action must [*21] be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest, except as otherwise provided by statute." Cal. Code Civ. P. § 367. Vinci's breach of contract claim revolves around Waste Management's alleged breach of a settlement agreement between Waste Management and VEI. As a shareholder of VEI, Vinci does not have a cause of action for damages to the corporation. Anderson v. Derrick, 220 Cal. 770, 773, 32 P.2d 1078 \(1934\). It is VEI, not Vinci, that contracted with Waste Management; therefore, only VEI can seek judicial enforcement of the agreement.

V. Vinci's Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress Claim is Time-Barred

HN12 [↑] Personal injury torts are foreclosed, by statute, after one year. Cal. Code Civ. P. § 340. This includes actions based on intentional infliction of emotional distress. Eisenberg v. Ins. Co. of North America, 815 F.2d 1285, 1292 \(9th Cir. 1987\). Vinci was terminated by Waste Management on December 2, 1992, and his complaint was filed more than one year later, on June 1, 1994. Vinci's claim is time-barred.

Conclusion

For all the reasons herein set forth, the Court grants defendant's [*22] motion to dismiss this complaint. The claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress is dismissed with prejudice. For all remaining causes of action, the Court dismisses without prejudice and grants plaintiff fifteen days (15) from issuance of this Order to properly allege standing and a cognizable Sherman Act claim. Any amended complaint filed pursuant to this Order shall include a copy of the alleged settlement agreement.

SO ORDERED.

DATED: August 19, 1994

FERN M. SMITH

United States District Judge

End of Document

Leyba v. Renger

United States District Court for the District of New Mexico

August 23, 1994, FILED

No. CIV 90-0252 LH/LFG

Reporter

874 F. Supp. 1229 *; 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20157 **

LAWRENCE LEYBA, Plaintiff, -vs- HARTMUT RENGER, ANESTHESIA SPECIALISTS OF ALBUQUERQUE, a New Mexico partnership and ST. JOSEPH'S HEALTHCARE CORP., a New Mexico corporation, Defendants.

Subsequent History: Judgment entered by Leyba v. Renger, 874 F. Supp. 1229, 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21835 (D.N.M., 1994)

Prior History: Leyba v. Renger, 874 F. Supp. 1218, 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21826 (D.N.M., 1994)

Core Terms

anesthesiology, monopolization, osteopathic, tying arrangement, geographic, relevant market, Defendants', summary judgment, anesthesiologists, market share, percent, tying product, Memorandum, group boycott, entitled to summary judgment, metropolitan area, market power, staff privileges, horizontal, anesthesia, conspiracy, privileges, genuine issue of material fact, no evidence, allopathic, figures, summary judgment motion, matter of law, competitors, outpatient

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN1[] Summary Judgment, Motions for Summary Judgment

To prevail on their motions for summary judgment, the defendants must first demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. Upon such a showing, the plaintiff may not rest upon mere allegations or denials of the defendants' pleadings, but must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. Fed. R. Civ. P.

56(e). If the plaintiff does not show that a genuine issue of material fact exists, then summary judgment shall be entered against him.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

A so-called tying arrangement exists when a seller conditions the sale of one product or service, the tying product or service, on the buyer's purchase of another product or service, the tied product or service. The essential characteristic of an invalid tying arrangement lies in the seller's exploitation of its control over the tying product to force the buyer into the purchase of a tied product that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms. When such forcing is present, competition on the merits in the market for the tied item is restrained and the antitrust laws are violated. No illegal tying arrangement can exist, however, unless the supplier of the tying product or service receives a direct economic benefit from the sale of the tied product or service.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN3 [down arrow] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Tying arrangements are said to run afoul of the antitrust laws when the seller has some special ability, usually called market power, to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market. Per se condemnation of a tying arrangement is therefore appropriate when the existence of forcing is probable. When the seller's share of the market is high, or when the seller offers a unique product that competitors are not able to offer, the Court has held that the likelihood that market power exists and is being used to restrain competition in a separate market is sufficient to make per se condemnation appropriate. When, however, the seller does not have either the degree or the kind of market power that enables him to force customers to purchase a second, unwanted product in order to obtain the tying product, an antitrust violation can be established only by evidence of an unreasonable restraint on competition in the relevant market. Any inquiry into the validity of a tying arrangement must focus on the market or markets in which the two products are sold, for that is where the anticompetitive forcing has its impact.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN4 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

874 F. Supp. 1229, *1229LÁ1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20157, 20157

Section 2 of the Sherman Act addresses the actions of single firms that monopolize or attempt to monopolize, as well as conspiracies and combinations to monopolize.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN5 Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

To prove monopolization, a plaintiff must show that defendants have possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident. In this context, plaintiff has the burden of proving the "relevant market." In defining the scope of the relevant market, both the product market and the geographic market must be considered.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > Memoranda in Opposition

HN6 Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

A relevant product market is composed of products that have reasonable interchangeability for the purposes for which they are produced, price, use, and qualities considered. A product market is defined to include interchangeable products or services. The interchangeability between substitutes is measured by a consumer's disposition to substitute a product in response to a price change.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

HN7 Amendment of Pleadings, Leave of Court

A motion to amend may properly be denied when there has been undue delay in moving for leave to amend or when amendment would be futile.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN8 Horizontal Refusals to Deal, Boycotts

A concerted, horizontal refusal to deal, which is often referred to as a group boycott, is an agreement among competitors not to deal with a third party or parties. To prove that a conspiracy exists which violates Section 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must show either that the conspiracy results in an unreasonable restraint on competition, referred to as the rule of reason, or that the conduct falls into one of the categories of "per se" illegality.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

HN9 [down arrow] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

For the plaintiff to establish that a group boycott is per se illegal, he must prove the existence of an agreement among conspirators whose market positions are horizontal to each other. The offending competitors need not be at the same market level as the plaintiff, but plaintiff must show concerted activity between two or more competitors which are positioned at the same market level with each other.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN10 [down arrow] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

A vertical restraint on trade is said to occur when persons or firms at different market levels in the chain of distribution of a specific product conspire to restrain trade.

Counsel: [1] For Plaintiff: Joseph Goldberg, Raymond G. Sanchez, Freedman, Boyd, Daniels, Peifer, Hollander, Guttmann & Goldberg, Albuquerque, New Mexico.

For Defendant Renger: Peter H. Johnstone, Thomas C. Bird, Russell Moore, Keleher & McLeod, P. A., Albuquerque, New Mexico. E. W. Shepherd, Hatch, Allen & Shepherd, Albuquerque, New Mexico. For Defendant ASA: Ranne B. Miller, Miller, Schlenker, Torgerson & Schlenker, P. A., Albuquerque, New Mexico. For Defendant SJH: D. James Sorenson, Sorenson & Rhoades, Albuquerque, New Mexico.

Judges: C. LeROY HANSEN, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Opinion by: C. LeROY HANSEN

Opinion

[*1231] MEMORANDUM OPINION

THIS MATTER is before the Court on the following three motions filed by Defendants on February 18, 1992: 1) Joint Motion for Partial Summary Judgment Dismissing Plaintiff's Tying Arrangement Claim (Docket No. 171); 2) Joint Motion for Partial Summary Judgment Dismissing Plaintiff's Monopolization Claim (Docket No. 173); and, 3) Joint Motion for Partial Summary Judgment Dismissing Plaintiff's Group Boycott Claim (Docket No. 177).

Having reviewed the memoranda of the parties and their exhibits, and being fully apprised of the applicable law, the Court finds that [2] Defendants are entitled to summary judgment on the tying arrangement claim, that defendants are entitled to summary judgment on the monopolization claim, and that defendants are entitled to summary judgment on the group boycott claim.¹

This case arises out of St. Joseph's Healthcare Corp.'s (hereafter "St. Joseph") acquisition of Heights General Hospital ("Heights") in the Spring of 1988. St. Joseph is staffed predominantly by allopathic physicians while Heights had been staffed by osteopathic physicians. Plaintiff, Dr. Lawrence Leyba, is an osteopathic anesthesiologist who had practiced at Heights for approximately twelve years prior to the acquisition. Defendant Anesthesiology Specialists of Albuquerque (hereafter "ASA") had [3] an exclusive contract with St. Joseph whereby it was agreed that ASA would be the sole provider of anesthesiology services at all St. Joseph hospitals. Defendant, Dr. Hartmut Renger, was the managing partner of ASA at the time.

Plaintiff commenced this lawsuit on March 13, 1990, claiming that the actions of Defendants violate state and federal antitrust laws.² [4] The factual basis for Plaintiff's claims is that he was denied staff privileges at St. Joseph after the acquisition of Heights and that he was denied acceptance into ASA. Plaintiff claims that these denials were improperly motivated for anticompetitive purposes and resulted in him being excluded from practicing anesthesia in New Mexico. Plaintiff specifically claims that the exclusive agreement between ASA and St. Joseph created an illegal tying arrangement, that the defendants attempted to and did monopolize the provision of anesthesiology services in the Albuquerque metropolitan area, and that defendants engaged in a group boycott in an attempt to exclude Plaintiff from the market. [*1232] After a brief discussion of the facts, each of these claims is addressed below.³

Factual Background

In the Spring of 1988, St. Joseph, a predominantly allopathic health care provider, acquired the Heights hospital, which was then known as an osteopathic hospital. As a result of the acquisition, St. Joseph mandated that all physicians with staff privileges at Heights be required to reapply for privileges under the St. Joseph system. With regard to any Heights' anesthesiologists who wished to continue practicing at Heights, there were two requirements. First, because of the exclusive agreement between ASA and St. Joseph, anesthesiologists wishing to practice at any of the three St. Joseph facilities would need to be a member of the ASA group. Second, because ASA exclusively provided anesthesiology services for St. Joseph, an anesthesiologist who wished to practice at St. Joseph needed to have staff privileges at all three hospitals.

When Plaintiff first learned that St. Joseph intended to acquire Heights and that ASA's exclusive agreement would be extended to cover Heights, he became concerned that [5] he would no longer be allowed to practice at that hospital. Plaintiff's concern stemmed from his belief that Dr. Renger, managing partner of ASA, held negative views of osteopathic physicians and would not allow Plaintiff to join ASA. Apparently, prior to even seeking membership in ASA, Plaintiff applied for staff privileges at all three St. Joseph hospitals. In March of 1988, the credentials committees of the three hospitals met to consider Plaintiff's application and voted to deny him privileges.

There is no indication from the record that St. Joseph's agreement with ASA played any part in the denials of privileges. Instead, the decisions were based upon Plaintiff's alleged inadequate training and upon adverse letters of recommendation. In June of 1988, Plaintiff was eventually granted privileges at Heights and at St. Joseph's West Mesa hospitals. It was not until November of 1988, however, that Plaintiff was finally granted privileges at St.

¹ Plaintiff brought his antitrust claims under both state and federal statutes. The New Mexico antitrust statute, NMSA 1978, § 57-1-15, is construed in harmony with the federal law. Hence, the Court's conclusions as to the federal antitrust claims apply equally to the state claims.

² Plaintiff also brought claims of defamation and tortious interference with contractual relations. Those claims were addressed in an opinion dated May 18, 1994.

³ Additional facts are contained in the May 18, 1994 opinion.

Joseph's downtown facility. By that time, Plaintiff claims, his practice had been destroyed. Based upon the initial denials and the subsequent delays in granting of privileges, Plaintiff brings his claims.

Standard for Summary Judgment [\[6\]](#) HN1

To prevail on their motions for summary judgment, the defendants must first demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. Upon such a showing, the plaintiff may not rest upon mere allegations or denials of the defendants' pleadings, but must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(e\). If the plaintiff does not show that a genuine issue of material fact exists, then summary judgment shall be entered against him. Id.

I. TYING ARRANGEMENT CLAIM.

Counts II and III of Plaintiff's complaint allege that Defendants, Dr. Renger, ASA and St. Joseph, "have contracted, combined and conspired with others in an unreasonable restraint of trade or commerce in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act" and "in violation of N.M. Stat. Section 57-1-1 (1987)." Complaint PP 43, 48. These allegations encompass Plaintiff's federal and state tying arrangement claims.

In essence, Plaintiff claims that the exclusive contract between ASA and St. Joseph resulted in an illegal tying arrangement. Defendants contend that they are entitled to summary judgment on the tying arrangement claim because no illegal tying arrangement [\[7\]](#) exists between St. Joseph and ASA and because the arrangement between St. Joseph and ASA is not per se illegal.

A. Existence of a Tying Arrangement.

HN2 "A so-called tying arrangement exists when a seller conditions the sale of one product or service, the tying product or service, on the buyer's purchase of another product or service, the tied product or service." Beard v. Parkview Hosp., 912 F.2d 138, 140 \(6th Cir. 1990\) (citing Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5-6, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 (1958)).

The essential characteristic of an invalid tying arrangement lies in the seller's exploitation of its control over the tying product to force the buyer into the purchase of a tied product that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms. When such 'forcing' is present, competition on the merits in the market for the tied item is restrained and [the antitrust laws are] violated.

Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 12, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984).

No illegal tying arrangement can exist, however, unless the supplier of the tying product [\[8\]](#) or service receives a direct economic benefit from the sale of the tied product or service. See Beard v. Parkview Hosp., 912 F.2d 138 \(6th Cir. 1990\); White v. Rockingham Radiologists, Ltd., 820 F.2d 98 (4th Cir. 1987). Defendants contend that, pursuant to the exclusive agreement, St. Joseph receives no part of the revenues earned by ASA and thus receives no economic benefit.

In an attempt to controvert that statement of fact, Plaintiff states as follows:

The St. Joseph administration believes it benefits from the exclusive contract it has with its anesthesiologists. The St. Joseph-ASA contract requires that ASA charge reasonable and customary fees, which protects St. Joseph from losing patients because of outrageous fees being charged by the physicians on its medical staff. The contract provides St. Joseph some desirable 'leverage' over its anesthesiologists, and provides what the hospital administration perceives to be more reliable coverage than would be provided by anesthesiologists practicing independently.

Plaintiff's Counterstatement of Material Facts, P 1. Such indirect benefits are insufficient to create a genuine issue of material fact as to whether [\[9\]](#) St. Joseph received direct economic benefits from ASA as a result of the exclusive agreement. Scara v. Bradley Memorial Hosp., 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19908, 1993-2 Trade Cases 70,353, 1993 WL 404150 (W.D. Tenn. 1993). Hence, as a matter of law, Defendants are entitled to summary judgment on Plaintiff's federal and state tying arrangement claims.

B. Per Se Illegality.

Even if the direct benefits rule did not apply here, Defendants contend that the contractual arrangement between St. Joseph and ASA is not per se illegal under the Sherman Act because St. Joseph does not enjoy a sufficient market share with regard to the tying product or service--that is, medical procedures provided at the hospital which require the services of an anesthesiologist.

HN3 Tying arrangements are said to run afoul of the antitrust laws "when the seller has some special ability - usually called 'market power' - to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market." Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. 2, 13-14, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (citations omitted). "Per se condemnation" of a tying arrangement is therefore appropriate when the existence of forcing is probable. Id. at 15.

As stated by [10] the Supreme Court,

When the seller's share of the market is high, or when the seller offers a unique product that competitors are not able to offer, the Court has held that the likelihood that market power exists and is being used to restrain competition in a separate market is sufficient to make per se condemnation appropriate. . . . When, however, the seller does not have either the degree or the kind of market power that enables him to force customers to purchase a second, unwanted product in order to obtain the tying product, an antitrust violation can be established only by evidence of an unreasonable restraint on competition in the relevant market.

Any inquiry into the validity of a tying arrangement must focus on the market or markets in which the two products are sold, for that is where the anticompetitive forcing has its impact.

Id. at 17-18.

In sum, if patients are forced to purchase ASA's services because of St. Joseph's market [*1234] power, then the arrangement would be said to have anticompetitive consequences. Conversely, if no forcing is present, and patients are free to enter a competing hospital and utilize another anesthesiology group, then [11] there has been no antitrust violation. Id. at 25. The tied product in this instance is anesthesiology services provided by ASA. The focus, therefore, is upon St. Joseph's market power in the relevant product market for the tying product; i.e., those hospital services provided by St. Joseph to its patients which require the anesthesiology services of ASA.⁴

It is uncontested that the Albuquerque, New Mexico, metropolitan area is the relevant geographic market in which St. Joseph competes. Plaintiff's Memorandum on Monopolization Claim, P 14. In that geographic market there are seven hospital systems available to the consumer. They are Lovelace Medical Center, Southwest Community Health Services ("Presbyterian"), St. Joseph, UNM Hospital, the New Mexico Federal Medical Center ("VA Hospital"), Indian Health Service Hospital, [12] and the United States Air Force Hospital at Kirtland. Of those seven, the VA Hospital, Indian Health Service Hospital, and the United States Air Force Hospital, serve limited segments of the consumer population and Plaintiff concedes that they are not a part of the relevant market in this case. Plaintiff's Memorandum on Monopolization Claim, PP 13, 14.

In their motion for summary judgment on the tying arrangement claim, Defendants contend that as a matter of law St. Joseph lacks market power in the relevant market for the tying product, and that the arrangement is therefore not per se illegal. In support of this contention, Defendants have put forth the following:

Market share for anesthesiology services can best be measured by hospital discharges in the areas of hospital services most related to surgical procedures (which are medical-surgical, obstetrics, and pediatrics). This information has been compiled by the New Mexico Hospital Association. This data has been analyzed by Dr. McCarthy, the Defendants' expert in antitrust economics. Dr. McCarthy concluded that, relying on the relevant discharge and outpatient surgery data, at no time during the relevant period of time [13] has St. Joseph and ASA controlled more than 23% of the market for anesthesiology services in the Albuquerque area.

⁴ In this case, just as in Jefferson Parish, the provision of anesthesia services at the hospital is a medical service which is separate from the other services provided by St. Joseph.

Defendants' Memorandum on Tying Arrangement Claim, P 5.

In essence, Defendants' statement of fact is that those hospital services most related to surgical procedures, and thus, necessitating anesthesiology services, are medical-surgical, obstetrics, pediatrics, and outpatient surgery. Furthermore, they contend that during the relevant period of time, St. Joseph controlled no more than 23 percent of the market for those hospital services requiring anesthesiology. Defendants claim, therefore, that since St. Joseph has never had more than 23 percent of the market for the tying product, its arrangement with ASA cannot, as a matter of law, be per se illegal.

To controvert these facts, Dr. Leyba baldly states that,

Based on the facts and for the reasons outlined in his Memorandum Brief in Opposition to Defendants' Joint Motion for Partial Summary Judgment Dismissing Plaintiff's Monopolization Claim . . . it is clear that defendants control a substantially greater share of the relevant market in this case. Even assuming defendants' market definition, which Dr. [14] Leyba disputes, defendants' share of the market is greater than 23%.

Plaintiff's Corrected Memorandum on Tying Arrangement at 1. In seeking to defeat summary judgment on the issue of per se illegality, Plaintiff relies entirely upon his brief on monopolization.

Looking to Plaintiff's monopolization brief, Plaintiff apparently contends that the information relied upon by Defendants in determining market share for the tying product is flawed. Specifically, Plaintiff points to the numbers of cases in which anesthesiology services were actually administered at St. [*1235] Joseph in 1988 as indicating that the numbers relied upon by Defendants are too low, resulting in a lower market share. Plaintiff's Memorandum on Monopolization Claim, P 22.

For example, Plaintiff notes that the 1988 figures, relied upon by Defendants as most indicative of surgical procedures requiring anesthesiology at St. Joseph, would signify that 15,286 patients required anesthesiology. However, Plaintiff points out that St. Joseph has admitted that the actual number of cases in which anesthesiology was administered at St. Joseph in 1988 was 22,970.

What Plaintiff has not accounted for is the fact that Defendants' [15] expert has specifically stated that figures for outpatient surgery were not available for 1988. Hence, those figures were not included in the discharge summary prepared by NMHA. When looking at the figures for 1990, the first year data was available for outpatient surgery, it is readily apparent that NMHA's utilization reports are consistent with St. Joseph's discharge figures. When the figures for both inpatient and outpatient discharges are included in the determination of 1990 market share for the tying product, St. Joseph still has less than 25 percent of the market.⁵ McCarthy Affidavit, P 2(f).

[16] Plaintiff has not disputed Defendants' contention that the hospital services which are most related to surgical procedures requiring anesthesia are medical-surgical, obstetrics, pediatrics, and outpatient surgery. Plaintiff has not disputed that the discharge figures for such services are indicative of the anesthesiology services provided at St. Joseph. Plaintiff merely challenges Defendants' figures for 1988 because they apparently do not account for outpatient surgery.

Plaintiff has not adequately set forth specific facts to dispute Defendants' description of the relevant product market for the tying product and has failed to show that St. Joseph's market share for the tying product gives rise to a probability of forcing. Plaintiff simply concludes that Defendants' market share calculation is based upon data of questionable relevance and is also "probably too low."

⁵ For 1990, total discharges for St. Joseph medical-surgical, obstetrics, and pediatrics were 14,700. Among the four non-federal hospitals, this represents a 21.4 percent market share. Total outpatient surgeries for 1990 were 9,263, representing a 26.9 percent market share for the non-federal hospitals. Adding the raw numbers together results in a total of 23,963 patients in need of hospital services which require anesthesiology. St. Joseph's figures for actual cases where anesthesiology was administered is 22,480.

The facts put forth by Defendants indicate that St. Joseph's market share of the relevant product market for the tying product is somewhere between 23 percent and 25 percent. Plaintiff has come forward with no evidence which would show that St. Joseph's market share exceeds 25 percent. Even 25 percent of the relevant [17] market does not represent the kind of market dominance which would permit St. Joseph to exploit its control over the tying product and force patients to purchase the services of ASA. Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 26-27. Therefore, the exclusive contract between St. Joseph and ASA is not per se illegal under the Jefferson Parish analysis.

In light of the above conclusions, Defendants are entitled to summary judgment on Plaintiff's federal and state tying arrangement claims.

II. MONOPOLIZATION CLAIMS.

Defendants next move for summary judgment on Plaintiff's monopolization claims which are contained in Counts I and III of the complaint. The complaint alleges that Defendants have monopolized and have attempted to monopolize with the intent to exclude or inhibit competition by Plaintiff. Complaint, P 38. HN4 [↑] Section 2 of the Sherman Act "addresses the actions of single firms that monopolize or attempt to monopolize, as well as conspiracies and combinations to monopolize." Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884, 889 (1993).

HN5 [↑] To prove monopolization, Plaintiff must show that Defendants had "possession of monopoly power in the relevant [18] market" and "the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior [*1236] product, business acumen, or historic accident." City of Chanute, Kan. v. Williams Natural Gas Co., 955 F.2d 641, 653-54 (10th Cir. 1992) (quoting United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1976)). In this context, Plaintiff has the burden of proving the "relevant market."

In defining the scope of the relevant market, both the product market and the geographic market must be considered. City of Chanute, 955 F.2d at 654; Rural Tel. Serv. v. Feist Publications, 957 F.2d 765, 768 (10th Cir. 1992).

In the complaint, under the paragraph heading entitled "Relevant Market," Plaintiff has alleged that: "The provision of anesthesiology services within the Albuquerque, New Mexico metropolitan area is the relevant market for antitrust purposes." Complaint, P 13.

As is evident from the above allegation, Plaintiff originally characterized the product market to be "the provision of anesthesiology services," and the geographic market to be "the Albuquerque, New Mexico metropolitan area." Later [19] in the complaint, however, Plaintiff alleges that Defendants have caused anticompetitive effects "in the market for anesthesia services at St. Joseph Hospital." Complaint, P 63. This allegation similarly characterizes the product market as "anesthesia services" but appears to recharacterize and limit the geographic market to "St. Joseph Hospital."

Focusing specifically on the two different geographic markets alleged, Defendants moved for summary judgment. Defendants first contend that the more limited characterization of geographic market as a single hospital fails as a matter of law. Defendants also contend that even using Plaintiff's broader characterization of the geographic market as the Albuquerque metropolitan area, Defendants are still entitled to summary judgment because there is no genuine issue of material fact as to whether Defendants possessed monopoly power in that particular geographic market.

A. St. Joseph Hospital as Geographic Market.

A review of the several cases which have addressed this issue indicates that it would be inappropriate to limit the geographic market to a single hospital. Collins v. Associated Pathologists, 676 F. Supp. 1388, 1404-05 I201 \(C.D. Ill. 1987\); Dos Santos v. Columbus-Cuneo-Cabrini Medical Ctr., 684 F.2d 1346, 1353 \(7th Cir. 1982\); Drs. Steuer and Latham v. National Medical Enters., 672 F. Supp. 1489, 1514 \(D.S.C. 1987\).

In his response to the motion for summary judgment, Plaintiff denies that he seeks to limit the geographic market to one hospital. Instead, Plaintiff claims to reaffirm his position that the relevant geographic market is the Albuquerque metropolitan area, excluding the VA Hospital, Kirtland Air Force Base Hospital, and the Indian Health Service hospitals. Plaintiff's Memorandum on Monopolization Claim, PP 13, 14. It being undisputed that the relevant geographic market is the Albuquerque metropolitan area, the Court need not address the issue of a single hospital geographic market.

B. Metropolitan Albuquerque as Geographic Market.

Defendants' second contention is that there is no genuine issue of material fact as to whether Defendants possess sufficient market power in the Albuquerque metropolitan area to support a monopolization claim. Defendants base this argument on Plaintiff's own characterization of product market, specifically alleged in the complaint, as the "provision [21] of anesthesia services." Seeking to avoid summary judgment, Plaintiff responds by stating that "the relevant product market in this case is 'osteopathic' anesthesia services--that is, anesthesiology services provided by an osteopathically trained physician in a hospital which traditionally draws patients from osteopathic physicians." Plaintiff's Memorandum on Monopolization, P 11.

Plaintiff's recharacterization of product market appears to be a departure from the allegation contained in paragraph 13 of the complaint and is an apparent attempt to exclude allopathic anesthesiology services from the relevant product market. This contention [*1237] is raised by Plaintiff without moving to amend the complaint to narrow the relevant product market from anesthesiology services to osteopathic anesthesiology services.

In light of the above, the following two analyses must be made: first, can Plaintiff resist the motion for summary judgment using the relevant product market asserted in his complaint; and, second, if permitted to amend the complaint, can Plaintiff defeat summary judgment using the relevant product market asserted in his memorandum in opposition to the motion?

As to the first inquiry, [22] the relevant market is the provision of anesthesia services in the Albuquerque metropolitan area. Defendants have asserted that in this relevant market, they have never possessed more than 23 percent of that market. As discussed in the section on tying arrangements, the Court concludes that Defendants have put forth sufficient evidence showing that they have not controlled more than 23 percent to 25 percent of the relevant market. Under the case law, this percentage is not, as a matter of law, sufficient to establish monopolization. Pennsylvania Dental Ass'n. v. Medical Serv. Ass'n. of Pa., 745 F.2d 248, 261 \(3d Cir. 1984\) (32 to 35 percent share of market is insufficient as a matter of law to establish monopolization); United Air Lines, Inc. v. Austin Travel Corp., 867 F.2d 737, 742 \(2d Cir. 1989\) (31 percent market share is insufficient); United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416, 424 \(2d Cir. 1945\) (33 percent of relevant market is "certainly" not a monopoly). Defendants have met their initial Rule 56 burden of showing that no genuine issue of material fact exists on this issue. It is now for Plaintiff to come forward with evidence to show that Defendants [23] do possess a sufficient portion of the relevant market (in this instance the market defined in paragraph 13 of the complaint) to establish a question of fact as to whether Defendants had monopolized the market.

Again, Plaintiff has not disputed the contention that "market share for anesthesiology services can best be measured by hospital discharges in the areas of hospital services most related to surgical procedures." Using this measurement, the Court has concluded that Defendants' evidence shows no more than a 23 percent to 25 percent market share for anesthesiology services in the Albuquerque metropolitan area.

In an attempt to controvert such evidence, and to show that Defendants possess a greater market share, Plaintiff refers to evidence concerning numbers of "operational hospital beds" and to statistics concerning hospital-based osteopathic anesthesiology services. This evidence is not material to the issue at hand. With respect to the issue of Defendants' market share as calculated by hospital discharges, Plaintiff merely repeats that "the jury could find that St. Joseph's market was well in excess of 23 percent." Plaintiff's Memorandum on Monopolization at 22.

Market share [24] may indicate Defendants' market power and it may also indicate a lack of market power. Plaintiff has made no showing, has offered no evidence, as to what share of the relevant market Defendants possess. Of equal importance, is the fact that Plaintiff has made no showing of Defendants' power or ability to control prices or to exclude competition in the relevant market. United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 391-92, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 \(1956\). Plaintiff has simply failed to show that there exists a genuine issue of material fact as to Defendants' monopoly power or market power in the market for anesthesiology services.

Based upon the definition of relevant market as put forth by Plaintiff in paragraph 13 of the complaint, Defendants are entitled to summary judgment on the claim of monopolization.

The Court's next inquiry addresses whether Plaintiff may withstand a motion for summary judgment based upon the narrow definition of the relevant product market as presented in Plaintiff's brief in opposition to the motion for summary judgment--that is, hospital-based osteopathic anesthesiology. In determining whether the relevant product market may be narrowed as contended by Plaintiff, [25] it is necessary to examine the competing services and service providers. HNG A relevant [*1238] product market is "composed of products that have reasonable interchangeability for the purposes for which they are produced -- price, use, and qualities considered."

United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 404, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 \(1956\). A product market is defined to include interchangeable products or services. Telex Corp. v. IBM Corp., 510 F.2d 894, 917-919 \(10th Cir. 1975\). The interchangeability between substitutes is measured by a consumer's disposition to substitute a product in response to a price change.

An argument similar to that made by Plaintiff regarding product market was made in Morgan, Strand, Wheeler & Biggs v. Radiology Ltd., 924 F.2d 1484 \(9th Cir. 1991\), in which the court affirmed a summary judgment against the plaintiffs for failure to establish a relevant product market. In that case, the plaintiffs were asserting that the services of osteopathic radiologists were distinct from the market for radiology services generally. The same services are provided by osteopathic or allopathic practitioners. Despite their different training and standards for admission to [26] practice, they satisfy the same consumer needs and therefore, operate in the same product market and are competitors. Wilk v. American Medical Assn., 671 F. Supp. 1465 \(N.D. Ill. 1987\), aff'd, 895 F.2d 352 \(7th Cir. 1990\), cert. denied, 496 U.S. 927 (1990); see also Weiss v. York Hosp., 745 F.2d 786 \(3d Cir. 1984\), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1060, 84 L. Ed. 2d 836, 105 S. Ct. 1777 (1985); Oltz v. St. Peter's Community Hosp., 861 F.2d 1440, 1443 \(9th Cir. 1988\); Bhan v. NME Hosps., Inc., 929 F.2d 1404 \(9th Cir. 1991\).

The Court concludes that osteopathic anesthesia services and allopathic anesthesia services are reasonably interchangeable and, hence, part of the same relevant market. Therefore, Plaintiff has failed to sustain his position that the relevant product market may be limited to hospital-based osteopathic anesthesiology.

Finally, and in any event, the court concludes that Plaintiff should not be permitted to amend his complaint to narrow his definition of the relevant product market. HNT A motion to amend may properly be denied when there has been undue delay in moving for leave to amend or when amendment would be futile. Foman v. Davis, 371 U.S. 178, 182, 9 L. Ed. 2d 222, 83 S. Ct. 227 \(1962\); In re Beef Indus. Antitrust Litig., 600 F.2d 1148, 1162 \(5th Cir. 1979\), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 905 (1980). Defendant's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment Dismissing Plaintiff's Monopolization Claim was filed on February 18, 1992. The suit was filed on March 13, 1990. The plaintiff has had ample time to seek to amend his complaint, but has failed to do so during the more than two years since he filed his brief in opposition. Moreover, in light of the Court's analysis above, it would be futile to seek to do so because such a narrow characterization of the product market is not supported by the evidence or the law. Defendants are entitled to summary judgment on Plaintiff's monopolization claims.⁶

⁶ Both the monopolization and attempt to monopolize claims are disposed of. As is made clear by the Supreme Court's decision in Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884 \(1993\), both claims require an adequate showing of

[28] III. GROUP BOYCOTT CLAIMS.

Finally, Defendants have moved for summary judgment on Plaintiff's group boycott claims. These claims are contained in Counts II and III of the Complaint. It is Plaintiff's contention that Defendants engaged in a collective or group boycott in that they combined to exclude him from the practice of anesthesiology. In their motion for summary judgment, Defendants raise three arguments: (i) that Plaintiff's claim fails because there is no evidence of concerted activity between two or more of his competitors whose market positions are horizontal to each other; (ii) that there is no evidence of per se liability; and, (iii) that there is no [*1239] evidence which would support liability under the rule of reason. For the reasons stated below, Defendants are entitled to summary judgment on the group boycott claims.

Plaintiff's group boycott claim alleges that, "Defendants Dr. Renger, ASA and St. Joseph have contracted, combined and conspired with others in an unreasonable restraint of trade or commerce." Complaint, P 43. The essence of Plaintiff's theory is that Defendants conspired to exclude him from performing his services in the market because of their [29] animosity toward osteopathic physicians and because they wanted to limit the competition for ASA.

Specifically, Plaintiff contends that St. Joseph's denial of staff privileges took place in the context of allopathic bias against osteopathic practitioners. Plaintiff's Memorandum on Group Boycott at 22. Plaintiff states that the allopathic physicians involved in the decision making were suspicious of and held prejudices and animosity toward the osteopaths at Heights. Id. at 23. Plaintiff states that in particular, Renger was biased against osteopaths and Leyba and that Renger was "intimately involved" in the denial of privileges. Id. at 22.

A. Horizontal Restraint.

HN8 "A concerted, horizontal refusal to deal - which is often referred to as a group boycott - is an agreement among competitors not to deal with a third party or parties." Von Kalinowski, Antitrust Laws and Trade Regulation, Vol. 2, § 6D.01. "To prove that a conspiracy exists which violates Section 1 of the Sherman Act, [Leyba] must show either that the conspiracy results in an unreasonable restraint on competition (referred to as the rule of reason), or that the conduct falls into one of the categories [30] of 'per se' illegality." Coffey v. Healthtrust, Inc., 955 F.2d 1388, 1392 (10th Cir. 1992) (citing Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery and Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 289, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202, 105 S. Ct. 2613 (1985)).

HN9 For the plaintiff to establish that a group boycott is per se illegal, he must prove the existence of an agreement among conspirators whose market positions are horizontal to each other. Coffey, 955 F.2d at 1392 (citing Westman Comm'n Co. v. Hobart Int'l, Inc., 796 F.2d 1216, 1224, n.1 (10th Cir. 1986); Key Fin. Planning Corp. v. ITT Life Ins. Corp., 828 F.2d 635, 641 (10th Cir. 1987)). The offending competitors need not be at the same market level as the plaintiff, but Plaintiff must show concerted activity between two or more competitors which are positioned at the same market level with each other. Key, 828 F.2d at 641. Defendants contend that there is no genuine issue of material fact as to whether they as a group are horizontal competitors, and as to whether there is evidence of concerted activity.

To controvert these claims, Plaintiff argues that "there is substantial evidence in this record of a horizontal combination [31] or conspiracy." Plaintiff's Memorandum on Group Boycott at 15. Again, Plaintiff must show both a horizontal relationship and a conspiracy. In support of Plaintiff's contentions, Plaintiff states that "the initial denial of staff privileges resulted from the actions of the physicians on the medical staff of the St. Joseph hospitals." Id. at 21. Plaintiff cites to the fact that "Dr. Renger, on behalf of ASA, was intimately involved in [Leyba's] denial of privileges through the medical staff credentialing process." Id. at 22. Moreover, he cites to "numerous contacts" relevant market. As stated in Spectrum Sports, "demonstrating the dangerous probability of monopolization in an attempt case . . . requires inquiry into the relevant product and geographic market and the defendant's economic power in that market." Id. at 892. Because no such showing has been made by Plaintiff, summary judgment is appropriate on both claims.

between Renger and other allopathic physicians which would warrant a jury finding that Renger had combined and conspired with others to prevent Plaintiff from obtaining anesthesiology privileges at the St. Joseph hospitals. *Id.*⁷

[32] [*1240] Of critical importance, however, is the fact that Plaintiff has put forth absolutely no direct evidence of an agreement between Renger, ASA, St. Joseph or staff physicians to exclude Plaintiff from the market, or to deny him staff privileges. Moreover, there is insubstantial circumstantial evidence put forth on the issue of conspiracy. The evidence Plaintiff does put forth is ambiguous and is consistent with legitimate activities.

As stated in Key,

In an antitrust action based on section one of the Sherman Act . . . ambiguous evidence, standing alone, is not enough to survive a defendant's motion for summary judgment. 'Antitrust law' limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case' . . . To survive a motion for summary judgment . . . [a plaintiff] must present evidence 'that tends to exclude the possibility' that the alleged conspirators acted independently.'

If the evidence is as consistent with permissible independent business interests as with an illegal conspiracy, then the plaintiff fails to create a fact issue on the existence of a section one conspiracy unless the ambiguity is negated by evidence tending to exclude the [33] possibility that the defendants were pursuing independent interests.

Key, 828 F.2d 635, 638-9 (citations omitted).

The Court concludes that there is just no evidence of a Section 1 conspiracy. As pointed out in the opinion on defamation, at minimum, there is evidence of independent action by one anesthesiologist, but no evidence of agreement or concerted action by the defendants herein.

Moreover, Plaintiff has failed to put forth sufficient evidence to show that the relationship between Dr. Renger, ASA, St. Joseph and the alleged "other physicians" is horizontal. Dr. Renger and ASA are not in competition with each other, and neither Renger nor ASA are in competition with St. Joseph for the provision of anesthesiology services. In light of the above, I conclude that Defendants are entitled to summary judgment on the claim of horizontal restraint of trade.

B. Vertical Restraint.

The evidence shows that St. Joseph is not at the same market level as either Dr. Renger or ASA, and is not in competition with either of these parties for the provision of anesthesiology services. Hence, their relationship is not horizontal. If anything, the evidence shows that the relationship [34] between the defendants is vertical. See Coffey, 955 F.2d 1388 (10th Cir. 1992). HN10 A vertical restraint on trade is said to occur "when persons or firms at different market levels in the chain of distribution of a specific product conspire to restrain trade." Key, 828 F.2d at 640, n.3; Business Elecs. Corp. v. Sharp Elecs. Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 730, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, 108 S. Ct. 1515 (1988). It is not clear from the case law whether the vertical restraint concept would be directly applicable in this situation, in light of the fact that this is not a classic "product distribution" case. But even applying this concept, I find no antitrust violation under either the per se rule or the rule of reason analysis.

Applying first the "per se" rule, the Court notes that it is only appropriate when it relates to conduct that is manifestly anticompetitive. Key, 828 F.2d at 640 (quoting Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 49-50, 53

⁷ The specific facts cited to by Leyba in an effort to defeat summary judgment are as follows: "Members of the St. Joseph administration, including Kirk and Dr. Floyd, had numerous meetings and other communications with Dr. Renger and other ASA anesthesiologists about dealing with the D.O. anesthesiologists practicing at Heights General. There were numerous communications among Mr. Kirk, Dr. Duncan, and Dr. Renger concerning Dr. Leyba's participation in the ASA group. The St. Joseph administration had numerous meetings and communications with members of its medical staff concerning the Heights General acquisition and how to deal with the heavily osteopathic medical staff already credentialed there." Plaintiffs Counterstatement of Material Facts, P 12; Memorandum on Group Boycott.

L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 (1977)). The Tenth Circuit only applies a per se rule to vertical restraints of trade if they include price fixing motives. Id. at 640 (citing Westman, 796 F.2d 1216, 1222-24 (10th Cir. 1986)). [35] Here, as in Key, there are no allegations, nor is there any hint of evidence, that price fixing has occurred. Hence, there is no per se illegality.

With regard to the second inquiry, "in order to satisfy the rule of reason, the plaintiff must prove that [his denial of staff privileges] had an adverse impact on competition." Key, at 642. That is, the plaintiff must show that the complained of activity unreasonably restrained competition among anesthesiologists within the relevant geographic market.

[*1241] The relevant geographic market is that set out in paragraph 13 of the complaint: the Albuquerque metropolitan area, and the relevant product market is the provision of anesthesiology services.⁸ Defendants contend that there is no issue of material fact with regard to whether there has been an adverse effect upon competition among anesthesiologists in the relevant geographic market. Specifically, Defendants assert an absence of evidence regarding the effect on the price, the quality, or the supply or demand for anesthesiology services.

[36] In response, Plaintiff offers no evidence concerning effect upon the price or quality of anesthesiology services. Instead, Plaintiff offers evidence which he claims shows that the supply of anesthesiology services has been adversely affected. In support of this contention, Plaintiff cites to the fact that three individual osteopathic anesthesiologists were impacted by St. Joseph's takeover of the Heights hospital. First, Plaintiff cites to the fact that Dr. Langford reached an agreement with Defendants whereby he agreed that he would not practice in the Albuquerque area after ninety days. Dr. Langford eventually moved away from New Mexico. Second, Plaintiff cites to Dr. Margel, who was concerned that the takeover would make it impossible for him to continue his practice in Albuquerque. But Plaintiff himself acknowledges that Dr. Margel was granted staff privileges at St. Joseph and became associated with ASA. Hence, there was an osteopathic anesthesiologist offering his services at St. Joseph. Finally, Plaintiff cites to his own situation of being denied staff privileges in support of his contention that the supply of anesthesiologists in the Albuquerque market was adversely impacted.

[37] Plaintiff's evidence, that two osteopathic anesthesiologists left the Albuquerque market, without more, is insufficient to defeat summary judgment. Plaintiff failed to set forth sufficient evidence regarding the impact upon consumers, if any, by the loss of the osteopathic anesthesiologists. A close look at the evidence offered by Plaintiff makes clear that the true nature of the "impact" upon the competition is the direct harm suffered by Dr. Leyba. As in Coffey, Plaintiff has simply shown that he suffered a detrimental effect, not that the competition in general was adversely impacted and not that there was a negative impact upon consumers.

Finally, Defendants assert a lack of evidence of market power on the part of Defendants and, hence, argue that there is no anticompetitive effect under the rule of reason. As noted in the Court's opinion on monopolization and on tying arrangements, I agree that Defendants did not, as a matter of law, possess sufficient market power to warrant liability under the rule of reason. Again, the relevant geographic and product market is the provision of anesthesiology services in the Albuquerque metropolitan area. (The product market is not [38] limited to osteopathic anesthesiology services.) Looking at that market, there is no suggestion that there has been a negative impact upon price, quality, or the supply or demand for anesthesiology services generally. But even if you only looked at osteopathic anesthesiology services as the product market, there is insufficient evidence to defeat summary judgment that competition was negatively impacted. For all of the above reasons, Defendants are entitled to summary judgment on the group boycott claim.

An order in accordance with this memorandum opinion shall be entered.

C. LeROY HANSEN

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

⁸ As noted earlier, Plaintiff does not assert a relevant geographic market of a single hospital.

End of Document

Hammes v. AAMCO Transmissions

United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit

May 11, 1994, Argued ; August 24, 1994, Decided

No. 93-3884

Reporter

33 F.3d 774 *; 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 22955 ; 1994-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,695

JOSEPH W. HAMMES, Trustee of the Estate in Bankruptcy of BONNIE J. COOKSEY and CLAUDE W. COOKSEY; and COOKSEY AAMCO, INCORPORATED, Plaintiffs-Appellants, v. AAMCO TRANSMISSIONS, INCORPORATED; INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA, AAMCO DEALERS' ADVERTISING POOL; MARC BRITTLER; et al., Defendants-Appellees.

Subsequent History: [\[1\]](#) Petition for Rehearing with Suggestion for Rehearing En Banc Denied October 20, 1994, Reported at: 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 29368.

Prior History: Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of Indiana, Indianapolis Division. No. 92 C 678. S. Hugh Dillin, Judge.

Core Terms

interstate commerce, dealers, cases, antitrust, commerce, conspiracy, Sherman Act, arbitration, advertising, cartel, pool, customers, allegations, defendants', anti trust law, transmissions, numbers, franchise agreement, violations, phantom, courts

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN1 Pleadings, Rule Application & Interpretation

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure do not require the plaintiff to plead the particulars of his claim, Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\) \(1\) with the exceptions, of which the best known is fraud, listed in rule 9(b). The rules regarding the statement of the claim in the complaint and the jurisdictional allegations use the same formula, "short and plain statement," for both. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\) \(1\), \(2\). Jurisdiction is a threshold issue, normally not litigated at all; and the court has an independent duty to satisfy itself that it has jurisdiction. The court relies on the complaint to say enough about jurisdiction to create some reasonable likelihood that the court is not about to hear a case that it is not supposed to have the power to hear.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2 [down] Private Actions, Remedies

When the jurisdictional prerequisite to a claim is the effect on interstate commerce, the pleading of a conclusion should be good enough, since the number of cases that fail at that threshold has become minuscule.

Constitutional Law > ... > Commerce Clause > Interstate Commerce > Prohibition of Commerce

International Trade Law > Authority to Regulate > General Overview

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Federal Powers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > Commerce With Other Nations

Constitutional Law > ... > Commerce Clause > Interstate Commerce > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > Limitations

HN3 [down] Interstate Commerce, Prohibition of Commerce

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, forbids conspiracies in restraint of trade or commerce among the states or with foreign nations. The U.S. Congress's power over interstate commerce is understood not to be limited to activities that substantially involve or affect such commerce. The power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce is plenary and extends to all such commerce be it great or small.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Where dealers are merely the last intermediary in an interstate transaction, conspiracies among local sellers affect interstate commerce within the meaning of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > Commerce With Other Nations

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

HN5 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Even activity that is purely intrastate in character may be regulated by the U.S. Congress, where the activity, combined with like conduct by others similarly situated, affects commerce among the states or with foreign nations.

33 F.3d 774, *774LÁ994 U.S. App. LEXIS 22955, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6 [down] Private Actions, Remedies

It is quite enough, probably more than enough, if an antitrust complaint alleges that the plaintiff was engaged in interstate commerce and was injured by the alleged antitrust violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Market Allocation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7 [down] Sherman Act, Scope

The most elementary prohibition of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, is that of conspiracies between competitors to fix prices, and the prohibition extends to conspiracies between dealers in the same brand. A type of conspiracy that has effects almost identical to those of price-fixing and is treated the same by the law is a conspiracy between competitors to rotate or otherwise allocate customers among the conspirators, so that each customer faces a monopoly seller.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Market Allocation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN8 [down] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Market Allocation

An out-and-out scheme of customer allocation is a per se violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Market Allocation

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN9 [down] Private Actions, Standing

Losses inflicted by a cartel in retaliation for an attempt by one member to compete with the others are certainly compensable under the antitrust laws.

Counsel: For JOSEPH W. HAMMES, Trustee of the Estate of Bonnie J. Cooksey and Claude W. Cooksey, COOKSEY AAMCO, INCORPORATED, Plaintiff - Appellant: Philip A. Whistler, Curtis W. McCauley, ICE, MILLER, DONADIO & RYAN, Indianapolis, IN.

For AAMCO TRANSMISSIONS, INCORPORATED, Defendant - Appellee: Abraham C. Reich, FOX, ROTHSCHILD, O'BRIEN & FRANKEL, Philadelphia, PA. Richard J. Darko, Susan P. Stuart, LOWE, GRAY, STEELE & HOFFMAN, Indianapolis, IN. Kevin A. Norris, AAMCO TRANSMISSIONS, INCORPORATED, Corporation Counsel, Bala Cynwyd, PA. For INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA, AAMCO DEALERS' ADVERTISING POOL, MARC BRITTLER, TOM SCHROEDER, DARRYL DIEG, Defendant - Appellee: Bernard L. Pylitt, Jeffrey A. Hearn, KATZMAN, KATZMAN & PYLITT, Indianapolis, IN. For CHUCK KELLERMEYER, Defendant - Appellee: John A. Kitley, Jr. Beech Grove, IN.

Judges: Before POSNER, Chief Judge, and CUDAHY and ROVNER, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: POSNER

Opinion

[*777] POSNER, Chief Judge. The plaintiffs appeal from a judgment that dismissed their antitrust suit on the surprising ground that the complaint had failed adequately [2] to allege that the defendants' violations had affected interstate commerce. The defendants defend the judgment on other grounds as well, so we have a number of issues to resolve; but the most important is the issue of commerce, and it is entangled with a procedural issue: how detailed federal pleadings must be.

The complaint alleges the following facts. By reciting them we do not of course vouch for their truth, but they are all we have at this stage. Bonnie and Claude Cooksey were franchised by AAMCO Transmissions, Inc. (ATI) to operate an AAMCO transmission repair center in Indianapolis. To obtain the franchise they had been required by ATI to join the Indianapolis, Indiana, AAMCO Dealers' Advertising Pool, an unincorporated association that along with ATI and the dealers belonging to the pool is a defendant in this suit. The pool buys an advertisement in the yellow pages that lists the address and telephone number of each of the pool's members, who in the relevant period were five in number including the Cookseys' dealership, Cooksey AAMCO, Inc. It lists five other phone numbers with only a general indication of location (a neighborhood or other area in Indianapolis) rather than [3] street addresses corresponding to these numbers. The reason for the omission of the street addresses is that these five "dealers" are phantoms--apparently nothing new in this industry. McAlpine v. AAMCO Automatic Transmissions, Inc., 461 F. Supp. 1232, 1263 (E.D. Mich. 1978). A call to one of the five numbers is automatically forwarded, in accordance with a preexisting agreement, to one of the dealers in the pool-- presumably, we were told at argument, one near the location designated in the advertisement for the "dealer" with the phantom number. Because the other members wanted to stifle the Cookseys' competition, the pool refused to include the Cooksey dealership in the call-forwarding network, and as a result no calls to phantom numbers were forwarded to Cooksey. Its phone number and address were listed in the advertisement, so it got some business that way, but, without any calls being forwarded from the phantom numbers, not enough to stay afloat. And when it tried to advertise outside the pool, it was enjoined at the suit of the other dealers for violating the pool agreement. So eventually Cooksey went belly-up. The injunction was issued in the [4] course of a suit in state court that the defendants had brought against the Cookseys for failing to pay their share of the advertisement in the yellow pages. That suit was stayed when the Cookseys went into bankruptcy, so its merits have never been determined.

Since the Cookseys' dealership was operated in the corporate form, we do not understand why their trustee in bankruptcy is a plaintiff along with the corporation. Shareholders do not have standing to sue for harms to the corporation, or even for the derivative harm to themselves that might arise from a tort or other wrong to the corporation. Singletary v. Continental Illinois National Bank & Trust Co., 9 F.3d 1236, 1240 (7th Cir. 1993); Mid-State Fertilizer Co. v. Exchange National Bank, 877 F.2d 1333, 1335 (7th Cir. 1989); Southwest Suburban Board of Realtors, Inc. v. Beverly Area Planning Ass'n, 830 F.2d 1374, 1378 (7th Cir. 1987); cf. Associated General

Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983). [5] There is no suggestion that the Cookseys incorporated during rather than before the alleged [*778] violations took place, in which event they would have sustained a direct injury to themselves as well as the derivative injury resulting from their ownership of the corporation. Although the complaint states that the corporation declared bankruptcy along with its owners, and has been liquidated, there is no mention of a trustee. Maybe the rights of the bankrupt estate were assigned to the Cookseys. But if so why would--how could--the corporation, liquidated without a trace as it were, be a plaintiff?

These are deep mysteries, but not ones we have to solve. The defendants do not question the Cookseys' standing, and, despite the suggestive terminology, "antitrust standing" is not a jurisdictional requirement and is therefore waivable. The issue is not whether the Cookseys were hurt by the injury to their corporation--no doubt they were, albeit obliquely, but that would be enough to confer standing in the Article III sense. It is whether they have a legal right to obtain damages for that hurt, North Shore Gas Co. v. EPA, 930 F.2d 1239, 1242 (7th Cir. 1991), and that [6] is a question about the merits. It has been waived, so we shall pay no further attention to it, except that in the balance of our opinion we shall pretend that there is one plaintiff and call it "Cooksey."

The complaint alleges that ATI sells franchises in several states and that pursuant to the franchise agreements Cooksey and the other AAMCO dealers in Indianapolis mailed substantial fees to ATI at its Pennsylvania headquarters, contributed money to ATI's national advertising, "and purchased equipment and inventory sold by ATI (or otherwise meeting ATI's specifications)," "all of which activities occurred in and had a substantial effect on interstate commerce." There are no allegations concerning the amount of equipment or inventory purchased or where the stuff came from. There are no numbers. Nor is it expressly alleged that the defendants' violations of the Sherman Act, as distinguished from the specific activities of the plaintiffs and the defendants that the complaint describes in the passages we have just quoted, activities none of which is unlawful, affected interstate commerce.

So what? HN1[[↑]] The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure do not require the plaintiff to plead the particulars [7] of his claim, Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(1) with the exceptions (of which the best known is fraud) listed in Rule 9(b). Early v. Bankers Life & Casualty Co., 959 F.2d 75, 79 (1992). A nascent movement in the lower courts to add judge-made exceptions to those listed in Rule 9(b), well described in Boston & Maine Corp. v. Town of Hampton, 987 F.2d 855, 862-64 (1st Cir. 1993), was scotched by the Supreme Court in Leatherman v. Tarrant County Narcotics Unit, 113 S. Ct. 1160, 1163 (1993); see also Lujan v. National Wildlife Federation, 497 U.S. 871, 889, 111 L. Ed. 2d 695, 110 S. Ct. 3177 (1990). We continue to be puzzled why lawyers insist on writing prolix complaints that can only get them into trouble, as in Conn v. GATX Terminals Corp., 18 F.3d 417, 419 (7th Cir. 1994), and Fryman v. United States, 901 F.2d 79, 82 (7th Cir. 1990).

But we have been speaking so far of the statement of the claim in the complaint and it may be necessary to distinguish between that and the jurisdictional [8] allegations, even though the rules use the same formula, "short and plain statement," for both. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(1), (2). Jurisdiction is a threshold issue, normally not litigated at all; and the court has an independent duty to satisfy itself that it has jurisdiction. Naturally, therefore, it relies on the complaint to say enough about jurisdiction to create some reasonable likelihood that the court is not about to hear a case that it is not supposed to have the power to hear. In a diversity case, for example, it is not enough for the plaintiff to allege that the claim is within the diversity jurisdiction; the complaint must allege the citizenship of the parties and the amount in controversy. Fed. R. Civ. P., Form 2(a); Hemmings v. Barian, 822 F.2d 688, 693 (7th Cir. 1987).

But HN2[[↑]] when the jurisdictional prerequisite is effect on interstate commerce, the pleading of a conclusion should be good enough, since the number of cases that fail at that threshold has become minuscule; "there are astonishingly few offenses to antitrust principles that do not 'affect commerce.' " [*779] Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law: An Analysis of Antitrust [9] Principles and Their Application § 232.1f, at p. 286 (1992 Supp.). At a time when the interstate character of certain restraints of trade in the health-care industry (namely those that involved the denial of staff privileges at one hospital for one doctor) was in doubt, more particularized allegations were necessary to assure the court that the plaintiff's claim satisfied the commerce requirement, as in Marrese v. Interqual, Inc., 748 F.2d 373, 379-83 (7th Cir. 1984). That time is past. See Summit Health, Ltd. v. Pinhas, 500 U.S. 322, 111 S. Ct. 1842, 114 L. Ed. 2d 366 (1991).

Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, which the dealers' practice of allocating customers through the callforwarding system is alleged to violate, HN3 forbids conspiracies in restraint of trade or commerce among the states or with foreign nations. It would therefore have been enough for the plaintiff to have alleged, without further particulars, that the defendants' conduct in excluding it from the call-forwarding feature of the advertising pool restrained (impeded, impaired, diminished--there 10 is no magic word) interstate commerce. Though some cases state otherwise, the complaint would not have had to add that the restraint was substantial. No such limitation is stated in the Act. When the Act was passed back in 1890, a limitation to cases in which the defendant's conduct had a "direct" effect on interstate commerce (thus excluding all of manufacturing) was implicit because of the narrow construction that the Supreme Court had placed on the power of Congress to regulate such commerce. But the Act has been held to go to the limit of that power as expanded by interpretations of the Constitution in later decisions. Summit Health, Ltd. v. Pinhas, supra, 111 S. Ct. at 1846 and n. 10; Hospital Building Co. v. Trustees of Rex Hospital, 425 U.S. 738, 743 n. 2, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338, 96 S. Ct. 1848 (1976); Fuentes v. South Hills Cardiology, 946 F.2d 196, 200 (3d Cir. 1991). Congress's power over interstate commerce is now understood not to be limited to activities that substantially involve or affect such commerce. "The power of 11 Congress to regulate interstate commerce is plenary and extends to all such commerce be it great or small." NLRB v. Fainblatt, 306 U.S. 601, 606, 83 L. Ed. 1014, 59 S. Ct. 668 (1939).

If the Sherman Act goes to the constitutional limit, an antitrust conspiracy that by raising the price of some good or service made in one state and sold in another reduced the quantity sold would be within the reach of the Act even if both the traffic affected, and the conspiracy's effect on that traffic, were small. Cf. Hospital Building Co. v. Trustees of Rex Hospital, supra, 425 U.S. at 745. We shall see that despite what the cases say, or rather what some of them say, it is not certain that the word "commerce" in the Sherman Act means exactly the same thing as "commerce" in Article I of the Constitution. But it is certain that they are very close, so that cases like Heille v. City of St. Paul, 671 F.2d 1134 (8th Cir. 1982), holding that local rubbish collection is beyond the reach of the Sherman Act, clearly are outmoded.

Although all the complaint 12 had to allege, therefore, was that the defendants had restrained interstate commerce, this was not the character of the allegation actually made. It was instead that certain activities of the dealers (including Cooksey), such as purchasing equipment and mailing fees, either occurred in or affected interstate commerce. But this allegation was sufficient to confer jurisdiction when read together with the substantive allegations of the complaint. Provided that some of the transmissions and parts purchased by Indianapolis AAMCO dealers from ATI come from other states--as the complaint alleges, and the defendants have not denied--a conspiracy among the dealers to exclude the plaintiff would have to restrain interstate commerce, the HN4 dealers being merely the last intermediary in an interstate transaction that ends with the purchase of a transmission or a part by the consumer. Cases almost too numerous to cite either find or, because the proposition is rarely questioned, assume on this basis that conspiracies among local sellers affect interstate commerce within the meaning of the Sherman 780 Act. E.g., United States v. Frankfort Distilleries, Inc., 324 U.S. 293, 298, 89 L. Ed. 951, 65 S. Ct. 661 (1945); 13 Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 213, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741, 79 S. Ct. 705 (1959); Burke v. Ford, 389 U.S. 320, 19 L. Ed. 2d 554, 88 S. Ct. 443 (1967) (per curiam); Hospital Building Co. v. Trustees of Rex Hospital, supra, 425 U.S. at 744; McLain v. Real Estate Board, 444 U.S. 232, 245, 62 L. Ed. 2d 441, 100 S. Ct. 502 (1980).

Even if Indiana were a vehicular autarky, so that all the parts that the AAMCO dealers install in the transmissions they repair and all the transmissions they sell as replacements of unrepairable transmissions were fabricated in Indiana, a conspiracy among the Indianapolis dealers to eliminate competition among themselves would restrain interstate commerce. For it would raise the price of automobile transportation, much of which is interstate, thereby reducing the amount of interstate transportation demanded and so supplied. The effect on interstate commerce would be small. No doubt it is small in this 14 case. But it is not required to be large, or even measurable; there are sound practical reasons for this, as we shall see.

It is true that many cases, such as McLain v. Real Estate Board, supra, 444 U.S. at 242, and Hospital Building Co. v. Trustees of Rex Hospital, supra, 425 U.S. at 743-44, say that the Sherman Act requires proof of a substantial, or at least a not insubstantial, effect on interstate commerce, either by the antitrust violation itself, or by the activities affected by the antitrust violation. But the cases do not indicate where the line between substantial and insubstantial lies, and their reference to substantiality is in tension with the cases which hold that the Sherman Act goes to the constitutional limit--and some of them are the same cases, such as Rex Hospital. It seems that the approach actually taken (as distinct from articulated) by a majority of the Justices "comes so close to covering virtually every restraint that the judicial formulae covering proof of jurisdiction seem mainly to complicate, confuse, and lengthen antitrust [15] litigation without affecting the outcome. Simplification seems called for." Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, § 232.1a, at pp. 271-72. The authors opine that the "not insubstantial" formula of McLain "appears to state only a nominal requirement," id., § 232.1a, at p. 271, but they consider the opinion as a whole ambiguous. Id., § 232.1d, at p. 280; § 232.1f, at p. 285.

So there is a deep tension in the cases between the go-to-the-constitutional-limit position and the must-prove-substantial-effect position, as well as a variety of uninformative and possibly inconsistent verbal tests (are "substantial" and "not insubstantial" the same or different?). Simplification is indeed overdue. One possibility would be to adopt an irrebuttable proposition that all violations of antitrust law affect commerce. This approach would be consistent with economic reality, because the United States has an integrated economy, but it is an approach that the Supreme Court has shied away from taking. Another possibility would be to deem beyond the reach of the Sherman Act those conspiracies and other offenses that have only a trivial effect on interstate commerce, provided (the significance of the [16] proviso will become apparent shortly) that the entire class of cases represented by the case in question would also have only a trivial effect. If two children operating competing lemonade stands decided to fix prices, the effect on interstate commerce would be trivial; and even if an epidemic of price-fixing occurred among child operators of lemonade stands, the effect on the national economy would be slight. Although the exclusion of such cases from the Sherman Act's reach would be consistent with the outcomes and most of the language of the Supreme Court's decisions, Areeda and Hovenkamp warn that "a de minimis threshold . . . would be hard to administer." Id., § 232.1f, at p. 286. The principle de minimis non curat lex is applied in many areas of law, without undue mischief or inconvenience, Hessel v. O'Hearn, 977 F.2d 299, 302-04 (7th Cir. 1992), but applied here it would invite arcane disputes over economic incidence and it would sit uncomfortably with the Court's repeated assertions that the Sherman Act goes to the constitutional [*781] limit. For there is no de minimis exception to the power of Congress to regulate commerce--though there [17] is also no reason why the statute and the Constitution should be exactly coterminous. It is one thing for Congress to assert a plenary power over commerce, and another for it to require the courts to entertain cases involving trivial local disputes.

We need not attempt to resolve the question whether a de minimis exception to the otherwise unlimited scope of the Sherman Act with respect to interstate commerce should be recognized. It would not help the defendants in this case. For they argue, contrary to the conclusion we reached earlier, that a Sherman Act plaintiff must allege and prove not merely a nontrivial, but a large, effect on interstate commerce. They rely on two cases of ours, both involving the suspension of hospital privileges, Seglin v. Esau, 769 F.2d 1274 (7th Cir. 1985), and Doe on behalf of Doe v. St. Joseph's Hospital, 788 F.2d 411, 417 (7th Cir. 1986). The authority of these cases, and of the Ninth Circuit's decision in Mitchell v. Frank R. Howard Memorial Hospital, 853 F.2d 762, 764-66 (9th Cir. 1988), a similar case, has been greatly undermined by subsequent decisions [18] in medical antitrust cases, notably Summit Health, Ltd. v. Pinhas, supra, and our own Nelson v. Monroe Regional Medical Center, 925 F.2d 1555, 1566-67 (7th Cir. 1991). The plaintiffs in Seglin, Doe, and Mitchell had shown merely that a defendant hospital was engaged in interstate commerce; and this was deemed insufficient to support an inference that the antitrust violations themselves had had any effect on commerce. The plaintiff in each case was a physician not alleged to be engaged in interstate commerce, and it was not apparent to the courts that decided these cases how suspending him would affect commerce in the slightest. The courts' puzzlement was understandable. But Summit Health, Ltd. v. Pinhas was the same kind of case--one doctor, dropped by one hospital--and the Supreme Court held that the commerce requirement was satisfied. 111 S. Ct. at 1848-49. Our case is stronger for finding the requirement satisfied because the plaintiff, as well as the defendants, is alleged to be engaged in interstate commerce, so that [19] it is manifest that a conspiracy aimed at driving the plaintiff out of business--and succeeding in that aim, as it is alleged to have done--would affect that commerce.

A particularly questionable feature of Seglin, explicitly rejected by the Supreme Court in Summit Health (see id. at 1848), is the attempt to evaluate impact on interstate commerce on the basis of the facts of an individual case, as distinct from the class of cases to which it belongs. Obviously if the entire health-care industry, or all of retail trade, were cartelized, the effect on interstate commerce would be profound. The prices and probably the costs as well of the services produced by these vast sectors of the economy would be higher and the output smaller, and these effects would reverberate throughout the economy. In an industry or sector, however immense, in which most units of production are small--and both health care and retail trade are such sectors--an insistence by the courts that each cartel be shown to have a demonstrable effect on interstate commerce would allow the entire industry to be cartelized, piecemeal, with impunity. Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., supra, 359 U.S. at 213. [\[20\]](#) The law does not require such a showing. HN5 "Even activity that is purely intrastate in character may be regulated by Congress, where the activity, combined with like conduct by others similarly situated, affects commerce among the States or with foreign nations." Fry v. United States, 421 U.S. 542, 547, 44 L. Ed. 2d 363, 95 S. Ct. 1792 \(1975\).

The defendants could prevail on the issue of the adequacy of the complaint's allegations concerning interstate commerce only if such a complaint had to allege that running this plaintiff out of business would have a substantial impact on interstate commerce, or if the facts alleged in the complaint negated an inference that the defendants' conduct could affect interstate commerce, or if the plaintiff had to allege a connection between the mechanics of the conspiracy (here, the allocation of customers through phantom numbers) and interstate commerce, [\[*782\]](#) or if the complaint had explicitly to state that the defendants' conduct affected interstate commerce even though the effect could be inferred from other facts alleged (such as that the plaintiff was engaged in interstate commerce and [\[*21\]](#) the defendants drove it out of business). None of these things is required, and the defendants' argument therefore fails. HN6 It is quite enough, probably more than enough, if the complaint alleges that the plaintiff was engaged in interstate commerce and was injured by the alleged antitrust violation.

So the defendants lose on commerce; but they have several fall-back positions. The first is that the complaint does not state a claim of violation of section 1; at most it shows a deceptive practice. But the complaint's description of the defendants' practice is certainly consistent with an antitrust conspiracy, and no more is required at this stage, Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59, 104 S. Ct. 2229 \(1984\); Hrubec v. National R.R. Passenger Corp., 981 F.2d 962, 963 \(7th Cir. 1992\), for again we remind that a plaintiff is not required to plead the particulars of his claim. The inference of a heightened pleading requirement in antitrust cases that the court in Boston & Maine Corp. v. Town of Hampton, supra, 987 F.2d at 864, drew from our opinion [\[22\]](#) in Sutliff, Inc. v. Donovan Co., 727 F.2d 648, 654 \(7th Cir. 1984\), cannot be considered authoritative after Leatherman. Properly understood, Sutliff is simply another of those cases in which the plaintiff pleaded himself out of court.

