Date and Time: Wednesday, September 27, 2023 2:46:00 PM CST

Job Number: 206717966

Documents (100)

1. G. Heileman Brewing Co. v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc., 676 F. Supp. 1436

   Client/Matter: -None-

   Search Terms: "antitrust law"

   Search Type: Natural Language

   Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

2. Pennsylvania ex rel. Zimmerman v. Pepsico, Inc., 836 F.2d 173

   Client/Matter: -None-

   Search Terms: "antitrust law"

   Search Type: Natural Language

   Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

3. Creative Trading Co. v. Larkin-Pluznick-Larkin, Inc., 136 A.D.2d 461

   Client/Matter: -None-

   Search Terms: "antitrust law"

   Search Type: Natural Language

   Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

4. Ford Piano Supply Co. v. Steinway & Sons, 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 523

   Client/Matter: -None-

   Search Terms: "antitrust law"

   Search Type: Natural Language

   Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

5. Rosefielde v. Falcon Jet Corp., 701 F. Supp. 1053

   Client/Matter: -None-

   Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

6. Anitora Travel, Inc. v. Lapian, 677 F. Supp. 209

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

7. United States v. Seville Industrial Machinery Corp., 696 F. Supp. 986

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

8. In re Super Premium Ice Cream Distribution Antitrust Litigation, 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7366

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

9. Stead v. GTE Directories Corp., 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18323

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

10. Boise Cascade Corp. v. FTC, 837 F.2d 1127

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

11. Cemar, Inc. v. Nissan Motor Corp., 678 F. Supp. 1091

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

12. Oahu Gas Service, Inc. v. Pacific Resources, Inc., 838 F.2d 360

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

13. McElderry v. Cathay Pacific Airways, Ltd., 678 F. Supp. 1071

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

14. North Cent. Watt Count, Inc. v. Watt Count Engineering Systems, Inc., 678 F. Supp. 1305

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

15. Pinney Dock & Transp. Co. v. Penn Cent. Corp., 838 F.2d 1445

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

16. Chanute v. Williams Natural Gas Co., 678 F. Supp. 1517

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

17. Federal Paper Bd. Co. v. Amata, 693 F. Supp. 1376

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

18. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. v. Abrams, 71 N.Y.2d 327

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

19. America West Airlines, Inc. v. Burnley, 838 F.2d 1343

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

20. Puckett v. Cook, 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15156

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

21. Boyd International, Ltd. v. Honeywell, Inc., 837 F.2d 1312

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

22. H & W Industries, Inc. v. Formosa Plastics Corp., 687 F. Supp. 271

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

23. Phototron Corp. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 687 F. Supp. 1061

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

24. United Air Lines, Inc. v. Austin Travel Corp., 681 F. Supp. 176

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

25. Indiana Grocery Co. v. Super Valu Stores, Inc., 684 F. Supp. 561

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

26. Boone v. Redevelopment Agency of San Jose, 841 F.2d 886

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

27. Jaffee v. Horton Memorial Hospital, 680 F. Supp. 125

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

28. Lancaster Community Hosp. v. Antelope Valley Hosp. Medical Center, 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12689

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

29. United States v. Western Elec. Co., 714 F. Supp. 1

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

30. State v. Thompson, 751 P.2d 805

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

31. United States Football League v. National Football League, 842 F.2d 1335

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

32. Nurse Midwifery Associates v. Hibbett, 689 F. Supp. 799

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

33. Bobrowicz v. Chicago, 168 Ill. App. 3d 227

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

34. Ford Motor Co. v. Insurance Comm'r of Pennsylvania, 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2489

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

35. Outlet Communications, Inc. v. King World Productions, Inc., 685 F. Supp. 1570

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

36. Parkway Gallery Furniture, Inc. v. Kittinger/Pennsylvania House Group, Inc., 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19634

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

37. Stitt Spark Plug Co. v. Champion Spark Plug Co., 840 F.2d 1253

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

38. Burchett v. General Tel. Co. of South, 699 F. Supp. 114

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

39. Flip Side Prods. v. Jam Prods., 843 F.2d 1024

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

40. Pope v. Mississippi Real Estate Com., 695 F. Supp. 253

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

41. Harkins Amusement Enterprises, Inc. v. General Cinema Corp., 850 F.2d 477

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

42. Tominaga v. Shepherd, 682 F. Supp. 1489

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

43. [Vannelli v. National Collegiate Athletic Asso., 1988 Minn. App. LEXIS 361]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

44. [Local 210, Laborers' International Union v. Labor Relations Div. Associated General Contractors, etc., 844 F.2d 69]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

45. [Collins v. Associated Pathologists, 844 F.2d 473]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

46. [Kelco Disposal, Inc. v. Browning-Ferris Industries of Vermont, Inc., 845 F.2d 404]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

47. [McGlinchy v. Shell Chemical Co., 845 F.2d 802]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

48. Redwood Theatres v. Festival Enters., 200 Cal. App. 3d 687

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

49. GWC Restaurants, Inc. v. Hawaiian Flour Mills, Inc., 691 F. Supp. 247

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

50. In re Baker, 86 B.R. 234

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

51. Gene Cope & Associates, Inc. v. Aura Promotions, Ltd., 692 F. Supp. 724

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

52. New York v. Cedar Park Concrete Corp., 684 F. Supp. 1229

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

53. Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. 717

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

54. Environmental Tectonics v. W.S. Kirkpatrick, Inc., 847 F.2d 1052

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

55. Jeanery, Inc. v. James Jeans, Inc., 849 F.2d 1148

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

56. Federal Paper Bd. Co. v. Commissioner, 90 T.C. 1011

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

57. Seven Gables Corp. v. Sterling Recreation Organization Co., 686 F. Supp. 1418

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by

Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

58. Volvo North America Corp. v. Men's International Professional Tennis Council, 687 F. Supp. 800

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

59. Telectronics Proprietary, Ltd. v. Medtronic, Inc., 687 F. Supp. 832

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

60. Byrd v. Salvation Army, 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5576

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

61. Sorisio v. Lenox, Inc., 701 F. Supp. 950

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

62. Disher v. Information Resources, Inc., 691 F. Supp. 75

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

63. United States v. BNS, Inc., 848 F.2d 945

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

64. Consolidated Metal Products, Inc. v. American Petroleum Institute, 846 F.2d 284

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

65. Ferguson v. Greater Pocatello Chamber of Commerce, Inc., 848 F.2d 976

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

66. C & W Constr. Co. v. Brotherhood of Carpenters & Joiners, Local 745, 687 F. Supp. 1453

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

67. Fischer v. NWA, Inc., 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12590

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

68. Telerate Sys., Inc. v. Caro, 689 F. Supp. 221

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

69. [Allied Tube & Conduit Corp. v. Indian Head, 486 U.S. 492]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

70. [Beer Wholesalers, Inc. v. Miller Brewing Co., 426 N.W.2d 438]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

71. [McLaughlin v. Liu, 849 F.2d 1205]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

72. [R.C. Bigelow, Inc. v. Unilever N.V., 689 F. Supp. 76]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

73. [Christianson v. Colt Indus. Operating Corp., 486 U.S. 800]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

74. Nat'l Ass'n of Pharm. Mfrs., Inc. v. Ayerst Labs., 850 F.2d 904

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

75. In re Super Premium Ice Cream Distribution Antitrust Litigation, 691 F. Supp. 1262

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

76. Health Care Equalization Committee of Iowa Chiropractic Soc. v. Iowa Medical Soc., 851 F.2d 1020

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

77. Drabbant Enterprises, Inc. v. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., 688 F. Supp. 1567

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

78. Lease Lights, Inc. v. Public Service Co., 849 F.2d 1330

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by

Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

79. Dreiling v. Peugeot Motors of America, Inc., 850 F.2d 1373

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

80. Gould v. Sacred Heart Hosp., 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17434

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

81. Clamp-All Corp. v. Cast Iron Soil Pipe Inst., 851 F.2d 478

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

82. United States v. Seluk, 691 F. Supp. 525

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

83. Genetic Systems Corp. v. Abbott Laboratories, 691 F. Supp. 407

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

84. West Allis Memorial Hospital, Inc. v. Bowen, 852 F.2d 251

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

85. FTC v. Illinois Cereal Mills, Inc., 691 F. Supp. 1131

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

86. Corrosion Resistant Materials Co. v. Steelite, Inc., 692 F. Supp. 407

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

87. Winter Hill Frozen Foods & Services, Inc. v. Haagen-Dazs Co., 691 F. Supp. 539

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

88. Allen-Myland, Inc. v. International Business Machines Corp., 693 F. Supp. 262

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

89. Kowalski v. Chicago Tribune Co., 854 F.2d 168

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

90. Ocean State Physicians Health Plan, Inc. v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield, 692 F. Supp. 52

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

91. New York Public Interest Research Group, Inc. v. Insurance Information Institute, 140 Misc. 2d 920

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

92. Odishelidze v. Aetna Life & Casualty Co., 853 F.2d 21

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

93. Crane & Shovel Sales Corp. v. Bucyrus-Erie Co., 854 F.2d 802

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

94. Bolt v. Halifax Hosp. Medical Ctr., 851 F.2d 1273

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

95. Colonial Penn Group, Inc. v. American Asso. of Retired Persons, 698 F. Supp. 69

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

96. Sandcrest Outpatient Services, P.A. v. Cumberland County Hospital System, Inc., 853 F.2d 1139

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

97. Kerasotes Michigan Theatres, Inc. v. National Amusements, Inc., 854 F.2d 135

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

98. Dunnivant v. Bi-State Auto Parts, 851 F.2d 1575

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

99. Sollenbarger v. Mountain States Tel. & Tel. Co., 121 F.R.D. 417

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by

Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

100. Williams Elec. Co. v. Honeywell, Inc., 854 F.2d 389

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Dec 01, 1984 to Dec 31, 2022

G. Heileman Brewing Co. v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Wisconsin

December 31, 1987, Decided ; December 31, 1987, Filed

Nos. 84-C-738, 84-C-511

Reporter

676 F. Supp. 1436 *; 1987 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12343 ; 6 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1481 ; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,881

G. Heileman Brewing Company, Inc., Plaintiff-Counterdefendant, v. Anheuser-Busch Incorporated, Defendant-Counterclaimant; Miller Brewing Company, Plaintiff-Counterdefendant, v. Anheuser-Busch Incorporated, Defendant-Counterclaimant

Core Terms

beer, alcohol, trademark, consumers, Brewing, advertising, labels, Exhibits, unfair competition, counterclaimant's, marketing, generic, parties, secondary meaning, brand, burden of proof, brand name, competitors, Display, time of trial, infringement, monopolize, initials, register, preponderance of evidence, trademark infringement, plaintiffs', user, surveys, marks

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Causes of Action Involving Trademarks > Infringement Actions > Determinations

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Trade Dress Protection > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Advertising > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Designation of Origin > Elements of False Designation of Origin

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > General Overview

HN1[] Infringement Actions, Determinations

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125(a).

Trademark Law > ... > Particular Subject Matter > Names > General Overview

Trademark Law > Subject Matter of Trademarks > General Overview

HN2[] Particular Subject Matter, Names

The term "trademark" includes any word, name, symbol, or device or any combination thereof adopted and used by a manufacturer or merchant to identify and distinguish his goods, including a unique product, from those manufactured or sold by others and to indicate the source of the goods, even if that source is unknown. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1127.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Causes of Action Involving Trademarks > Infringement Actions > Determinations

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Trade Dress Protection > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Unfair Competition > Federal Unfair Competition Law > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Advertising > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Designation of Origin > Elements of False Designation of Origin

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > General Overview

Trademark Law > Causes of Action Involving Trademarks > Infringement Actions > General Overview

HN3[] Infringement Actions, Determinations

Section 43(a) of the Lanham Trademark Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125(a), and the common law of unfair competition encompass causes of action for trademark infringement as well as a wide range of causes of action for deceitful practices involving the misuse of trademarks.

Trademark Law > ... > Eligibility for Trademark Protection > Evidence of Secondary Meaning > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Unfair Competition > Federal Unfair Competition Law > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Advertising > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Designation of Origin > Elements of False Designation of Origin

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Trade Dress Protection > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Causes of Action Involving Trademarks > Infringement Actions > Determinations

HN4[] Eligibility for Trademark Protection, Evidence of Secondary Meaning

To prevail on a claim of unfair competition under § 43(a) of the Lanham Trademark Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125(a), based on an unregistered trademark, the claimant must prove: (a.) that it was the first to adopt and use the mark in commerce; (b.) that the trademark is valid, in other words, distinctive enough to warrant protection; the trademark must be found to be arbitrary or suggestive or it may be merely descriptive, if it has developed a secondary meaning linking the product with its source in the minds of the consuming public; and (c.) that there is likelihood of confusion on the part of the consuming public.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Causes of Action Involving Trademarks > Infringement Actions > Determinations

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > General Overview

HN5[] Infringement Actions, Determinations

The quantum of proof necessary to establish a claim of unfair competition is a preponderance of the evidence.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Causes of Action Involving Trademarks > Infringement Actions > Determinations

HN6[] Infringement Actions, Determinations

In the case of a claimant seeking relief for the alleged infringement of an unregistered mark, the burden is upon the claimant to establish its right to the exclusive use of the mark. This burden is carried by showing that the claimant has acquired the ownership of the unregistered mark by the appropriation and use of the mark in commerce prior in time to the occurrence of the use of the mark by the claimed infringer.

Trademark Law > Trademark Cancellation & Establishment > Priority > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Particular Subject Matter > Names > General Overview

HN7[] Trademark Cancellation & Establishment, Priority

The common-law right to a trademark is based upon prior use, that is, the first use of the mark in connection with a peculiar line of business. Registration does not create the underlying right in a trademark. That right which accrues from the use of a particular name or symbol is essentially a common-law property right.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Trademark Cancellation & Establishment > Registration Procedures > Federal Registration

HN8[] Registration Procedures, Federal Registration

Refusal by the United States Patent and Trademark Office to register a mark does not preclude the owner of the mark from its right to use it.

Trademark Law > Trademark Cancellation & Establishment > Priority > General Overview

HN9[] Trademark Cancellation & Establishment, Priority

Common-law trademark rights are acquired on a state-by-state basis.

Trademark Law > Trademark Cancellation & Establishment > Commercial Use > General Overview

HN10[] Trademark Cancellation & Establishment, Commercial Use

When a mark is not registered, there is no presumption of the mark's validity and the claimant has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that its mark is protectible.

Trademark Law > ... > Eligibility for Trademark Protection > Distinctiveness > General Overview

Trademark Law > Subject Matter of Trademarks > Eligibility for Trademark Protection > Strength of Trademark

HN11[] Eligibility for Trademark Protection, Distinctiveness

Courts have identified four categories of trademark distinctiveness or strength. Arrayed in an ascending order which roughly reflects their eligibility to trademark status and the degree of protection accorded, these classes are: (1) generic or common descriptive, (2) merely descriptive, (3) suggestive, and (4) arbitrary or fanciful.

Trademark Law > ... > Names > Generic Names > General Overview

HN12[] Names, Generic Names

A generic term is one that refers, or has come to be understood as referring, to the genus of which the particular product is a species.

Trademark Law > ... > Names > Generic Names > General Overview

HN13[] Names, Generic Names

The test for whether a term is generic is whether its primary significance in the minds of the consuming public is a product category or genus rather than a product's source or producer.

Trademark Law > ... > Terms Requiring Secondary Meaning > Descriptive & Laudatory Terms > General Overview

HN14[] Terms Requiring Secondary Meaning, Descriptive & Laudatory Terms

A merely descriptive term specifically describes a characteristic, quality or ingredient of an article of trade, as, for example, its color, odor, function, dimension, or ingredients.

Trademark Law > ... > Terms Requiring Secondary Meaning > Descriptive & Laudatory Terms > General Overview

HN15[] Terms Requiring Secondary Meaning, Descriptive & Laudatory Terms

The descriptiveness of a mark, when applied to the goods involved, is to be determined from the standpoint of the average prospective purchaser.

Trademark Law > ... > Eligibility for Trademark Protection > Evidence of Secondary Meaning > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Terms Requiring Secondary Meaning > Descriptive & Laudatory Terms > General Overview

HN16[] Eligibility for Trademark Protection, Evidence of Secondary Meaning

A mark which is merely descriptive can, by acquiring a secondary meaning, become a valid trademark.

Trademark Law > ... > Eligibility for Trademark Protection > Evidence of Secondary Meaning > General Overview

HN17[] Eligibility for Trademark Protection, Evidence of Secondary Meaning

A mark has acquired secondary meaning when it has been used so long and so exclusively by one producer with reference to its article that, in that trade and to that branch of the purchasing public, the word or phrase has come to mean that the article was the first producer's trademark.

Trademark Law > ... > Eligibility for Trademark Protection > Evidence of Secondary Meaning > General Overview

HN18[] Eligibility for Trademark Protection, Evidence of Secondary Meaning

Proof of secondary meaning entails rigorous evidentiary requirements, and the party seeking to prove secondary meaning has a heavy burden of showing that the efforts undertaken to associate the product with one source have been effective.

Trademark Law > ... > Eligibility for Trademark Protection > Evidence of Secondary Meaning > General Overview

HN19[] Eligibility for Trademark Protection, Evidence of Secondary Meaning

Secondary meaning can be proved by direct or circumstantial evidence. The variables to be considered in determining whether a mark has secondary meaning include: 1. the duration, continuity, and exclusive use of the mark; 2. the efforts made in the direction of promoting a conscious connection, in the public's mind, between the mark and a particular source of origin, including the extent of advertising and promotion and the amount of money spent thereon; 3. the volume of sales, including figures showing sales of the claimant's product or the number of people who have consumed it; 4. identification of the parties' respective markets; and 5. direct evidence of public recognition in the form of consumer testimony and consumer surveys.

Trademark Law > Subject Matter of Trademarks > Terms With Inherent Distinctiveness > Suggestive Terms

HN20[] Terms With Inherent Distinctiveness, Suggestive Terms

A suggestive term suggests rather than describes an ingredient or characteristic of the goods and requires the observer or listener to use imagination and perception to determine the nature of the goods. Such a term can be protected without proof of a secondary meaning.

Trademark Law > Subject Matter of Trademarks > Eligibility for Trademark Protection > Strength of Trademark

HN21[] Eligibility for Trademark Protection, Strength of Trademark

Arbitrary or fanciful marks are designated as strong marks. They may be coined words or words that are common in linguistic usage but which, when used with the products they represent, neither suggest nor describe any characteristic of those goods. Arbitrary or fanciful marks are entitled to protection against all users and are not vulnerable to possible attack as being merely descriptive.

Trademark Law > Subject Matter of Trademarks > Particular Subject Matter > Abbreviations, Acronyms & Monograms

Trademark Law > ... > Eligibility for Trademark Protection > Evidence of Secondary Meaning > General Overview

HN22[] Particular Subject Matter, Abbreviations, Acronyms & Monograms

Under trademark law an abbreviation, like any other unregistered mark, will only be protected if it has acquired secondary meaning.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Designation of Origin > Elements of False Designation of Origin

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Trade Dress Protection > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Advertising > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > General Overview

Trademark Law > Trademark Cancellation & Establishment > Priority > General Overview

HN23[] False Designation of Origin, Elements of False Designation of Origin

If a senior user of a mark cannot demonstrate that the mark is distinctive enough to warrant protection, the senior user can still maintain a claim under § 43(a) of the Lanham Trademark Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125(a) if there is a likelihood of consumer confusion due to the failure of the junior user to identify itself adequately as the source of the product.

Trademark Law > Likelihood of Confusion > Consumer Confusion > General Overview

HN24[] Likelihood of Confusion, Consumer Confusion

The claimant has the burden of proving likelihood of confusion by a preponderance of the evidence.

Trademark Law > Likelihood of Confusion > Consumer Confusion > General Overview

HN25[] Likelihood of Confusion, Consumer Confusion

When a mark is recently adopted and is not registered, doubts about the likelihood of confusion are resolved against the party claiming exclusive rights to the mark.

Trademark Law > ... > Similarity of Marks > Appearance, Meaning & Sound > General Overview

Trademark Law > Likelihood of Confusion > Consumer Confusion > General Overview

HN26[] Similarity of Marks, Appearance, Meaning & Sound

Likelihood of confusion exists when consumers viewing the mark would probably assume that the product or service it represents is associated with the source of a different product or service identified by a similar mark.

Trademark Law > Likelihood of Confusion > Consumer Confusion > General Overview

HN27[] Likelihood of Confusion, Consumer Confusion

Whether or not a likelihood of confusion exists must be determined from the viewpoint of the general public and without regard to any particular geographic area.

Trademark Law > ... > Eligibility for Trademark Protection > Evidence of Secondary Meaning > General Overview

Trademark Law > Likelihood of Confusion > Consumer Confusion > General Overview

HN28[] Eligibility for Trademark Protection, Evidence of Secondary Meaning

Although secondary meaning must be shown to exist at the time the second user commences using the allegedly infringing mark, there is no such limitation on proving likelihood of confusion.

Trademark Law > ... > Similarity of Marks > Appearance, Meaning & Sound > General Overview

Trademark Law > Likelihood of Confusion > Consumer Confusion > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Factors for Determining Confusion > Intent of Defendant to Confuse > General Overview

HN29[] Similarity of Marks, Appearance, Meaning & Sound

The factors to be considered in determining whether there is a likelihood of confusion are: 1. the degree of similarity between the owner's mark and the alleged infringing mark; 2. the strength of the owner's mark; 3. whether the goods are marketed through the same channels of trade and advertised through the same media; 4. the extent to which the targets of the parties' sales efforts are the same; 5. the relationship of the goods in the minds of the public because of the similarity of function; 6. the price of the goods and other factors indicative of the care and attention expected of consumers when making a purchase; 7. the intent of the defendant in adopting the mark; 8. the length of time the defendant has used the mark without evidence of actual confusion arising; 9. the evidence of actual confusion; 10. other facts suggesting that the consuming public might expect the prior owner to manufacture a product in the defendant's market.

Trademark Law > Trademark Cancellation & Establishment > Priority > General Overview

HN30[] Trademark Cancellation & Establishment, Priority

Knowledge of prior use alone does not in itself constitute a showing of bad faith.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Likelihood of Confusion > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

Trademark Law > Special Marks > Trade Names > Infringement Actions

Trademark Law > Causes of Action Involving Trademarks > Infringement Actions > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Causes of Action Involving Trademarks > Infringement Actions > Determinations

HN31[] Consumer Protection, Likelihood of Confusion

One infringes a trademark if without a privilege to do so, he uses on or in connection with his goods, services or business a designation which so resembles the other's previously used mark or trade name as to be likely to (a) cause confusion, mistake or deception, or (b) cause prospective purchasers to believe that (i) the actor's goods or services are those of the other, or (ii) the actor's goods or services emanate from the same source as the other's goods or services, or (iii) the actor's goods or services are approved or sponsored by the other, or (iv) the actor's business is the business of, or is in some manner associated or connected with, the other, even though the actor does not use the designation with a purpose to deceive.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Causes of Action Involving Trademarks > Infringement Actions > Determinations

Trademark Law > ... > Particular Subject Matter > Names > General Overview

Trademark Law > Causes of Action Involving Trademarks > Infringement Actions > General Overview

HN32[] Infringement Actions, Determinations

A claimant can show infringement without showing that the trademark has previously been identified with a product. It is sufficient to show that the trademark was one used to identify the claimant's product and that the use of the name by another caused confusion or mistake in respect to the sponsorship of the goods.

Trademark Law > ... > Similarity of Marks > Appearance, Meaning & Sound > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Infringement Actions > Jurisdiction > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Remedies > Equitable Relief > General Overview

Trademark Law > Special Marks > Trade Names > General Overview

HN33[] Similarity of Marks, Appearance, Meaning & Sound

See Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 140, § 22.

Trademark Law > ... > Eligibility for Trademark Protection > Distinctiveness > Evidence of Distinctiveness

Trademark Law > ... > Eligibility for Trademark Protection > Distinctiveness > General Overview

HN34[] Distinctiveness, Evidence of Distinctiveness

In determining the distinctiveness of a trademark, the court looks to whether the mark is arbitrary, the length of time the first user has employed the mark, the scope of the first user's advertising, the nature and extent of the first user's business, and the scope of the first user's reputation.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Causes of Action Involving Trademarks > Infringement Actions > Determinations

Trademark Law > ... > Similarity of Marks > Appearance, Meaning & Sound > General Overview

HN35[] Infringement Actions, Determinations

In determining whether a subsequent user has diluted an alleged mark, the court should look to the similarity of the marks and the extent of the subsequent user's marketing efforts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN36[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, no person may monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN37[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A company attempts to monopolize in violation of 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 when it engages in a course of conduct which would, if successful, accomplish monopolization, and which, though falling short, so closely approaches monopolization as to create a dangerous probability of it.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN38[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

In order to prove an attempt to monopolize, a plaintiff must prove by a preponderance of the evidence: (1) a specific intent to achieve a monopoly in a relevant market; (2) predatory or anticompetitive conduct in furtherance of the purpose to monopolize; and (3) a dangerous probability of success in the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN39[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The test to be applied in determining whether a trademark is being unlawfully used to confer a monopoly in a certain product is the same as in any other case wherein an unlawful monopoly, or attempt to monopolize, is alleged under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2. There is a violation of that provision only if the defendant's actions have led to or resulted in a dangerous probability that it will gain a monopoly over the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Acts & Mental States > Mens Rea > General Intent

HN40[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

In the context of an attempted monopoly claim, specific intent refers not to the defendant's general intent to do a particular act, but to an overall anticompetitive intent expressed through its actions to destroy competition and to build monopoly.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN41[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

The specific intent element requires proof that the defendant acted with the purpose of achieving monopoly power in the relevant market. Specific intent does not merely mean intent to prevail over one's rivals; it goes beyond that to include an intent to control prices or to restrain competition unreasonably.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN42[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

A manifestation of intent to triumph in the competitive market, or to exclude competition and to expand one's own business, in the absence of unfair, anticompetitive or predatory conduct, is not enough to establish an antitrust violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN43[] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

To be labeled anticompetitive or predatory, the conduct involved must be such that its anticipated benefits are dependent upon its tendency to frustrate or eliminate competition and thereby enhance the defendant's long term ability to reap the benefits of monopoly power. Such conduct leads to the acquisition of monopoly power by means other than superior product or business acumen.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN44[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

In proving whether the defendant possessed sufficient power to come dangerously close to achieving monopoly power, the plaintiffs must prove the relevant geographic and product markets within which that dangerous probability occurred.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

HN45[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The invocation of the judicial process is protected from antitrust scrutiny by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine which holds that the U.S. Const. amend. I immunizes from antitrust liability bona fide lobbying and litigation efforts, regardless of any anticompetitive motive behind those efforts. The Noerr-Pennington doctrine does not immunize sham lawsuits brought for the purpose of harming one's competitors, not by the result, but by the process of the litigation.

Civil Procedure > ... > Declaratory Judgments > Federal Declaratory Judgments > Discretionary Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Declaratory Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Declaratory Judgments > Federal Declaratory Judgments > General Overview

HN46[] Federal Declaratory Judgments, Discretionary Jurisdiction

Declaratory relief is available at the discretion of the district court. 28 U.S.C.S. § 2201.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Case & Controversy Requirements > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Declaratory Judgments > General Overview

HN47[] Justiciability, Case & Controversy Requirements

The test for an actual case or controversy is an objective one. Reasonable apprehension and the other jurisdictional prerequisites must exist at the time suit is filed.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Causes of Action Involving Trademarks > Infringement Actions > Determinations

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Trade Dress Protection > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Advertising > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Designation of Origin > Elements of False Designation of Origin

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > General Overview

HN48[] Infringement Actions, Determinations

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125(a).

Counsel: [1] Laurence C. Hammond, Jr., Allan Leiser, George Whyte, Jr., Wayne Babler, Quarles & Brady, Attorneys for Plaintiff-Counterdefendant, Miller Brewing Company.

David E. Beckwith, Michael Lechter, Mark Foley, Foley & Lardner, Attorneys for Plaintiff-Counterdefendant, G. Heileman Brewing Company, Inc.

Beverly Pattishall, Pattishall, McAuliffe & Hofstetter, George Solveson, Glenn O. Starke, Andrus, Sceales, Starke & Sawall, Peter E. Moll, Howrey & Simon, Attorneys for Defendant Anheuser-Busch Incorporated.

Judges: Thomas J. Curran, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: CURRAN

Opinion

[*1483] [*1446] MEMORANDUM OF DECISION

Thomas J. Curran, United States District Judge.

The G. Heileman Brewing Company, Inc. and the Miller Brewing Company, plaintiffs in the above-captioned consolidated cases, compete with defendant Anheuser-Busch, Inc. in the business of brewing and selling beer. Hoping to repeat Miller's success in marketing low calorie LITE beer, Anheuser-Busch developed and began to market a beer with low alcohol content which it [*1447] called "LA." [1] When Heileman announced plans to use the LA name on its own low alcohol beer, Anheuser-Busch demanded that it cease and desist. Shortly thereafter, Heileman, later joined by Miller, filed suit asking this court to declare that, [2] by using the LA mark, they are not engaging in trademark infringement or unfair trade practices. The plaintiffs claim that Anheuser-Busch, by attempting to prevent competitors from using the LA name, has engaged in unfair trade practices and has attempted to monopolize the low alcohol beer market.

I. PRETRIAL PROCEEDINGS

Several days after filing [3] its complaint, Heileman brought a motion for a temporary restraining order asking this court to enjoin all proceedings in a mirror-image lawsuit which Anheuser-Busch had filed against Heileman in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Illinois. In part, because the Illinois case was filed several hours after Heileman's action, the court granted Heileman's motion. See Temporary Restraining Order of April 24, 1984. Heileman then moved for a preliminary injunction, while Anheuser-Busch moved to vacate the restraining order and to dismiss the complaint. On May 12, 1984, following a hearing, the court denied Anheuser-Busch's motion, but granted Heileman preliminary relief, ordering that:

> Defendant is hereby ENJOINED from proceeding with its claims against Heileman in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Illinois and from commencing any other action involving the same claims or arising out of the same transactions or occurrences, pending final judgment, including any appeal, in this action.

Order of May 12, 1984, at 6.

After the preliminary injunction was in effect, the defendant moved for an order temporarily restraining Heileman from using [4] the term "LA" in its advertising until after the issuance of a decision in a related case pending in the Eastern District of Missouri in which Anheuser-Busch was suing to enjoin another competitor, the Stroh Brewery Company, from using the LA mark. See Anheuser-Busch, Inc. v. Stroh Brewery Company, 587 F. Supp. 330 (E.D. Mo.), aff'd, 750 F.2d 631 (8th Cir. 1984). After a hearing, this court denied the Anheuser-Busch motion on May 21, 1984. [2]

With its preliminary motions denied, Anheuser-Busch filed its answer and asserted a counterclaim for trademark infringement, [1484] unfair competition and trademark dilution. The defendant also moved for a preliminary injunction preventing Heileman from using the name "LA" during the pendency of this action. This motion was held open until trial. Meanwhile, on June 4, 1984, the Miller Brewing Company filed a parallel action against Anheuser-Busch which was consolidated with [5] Heileman's case for all purposes. See Decision and Order of August 21, 1984.

---

[1] Depending upon their positions at the time, the parties to these lawsuits have used the letters "L" and "A" with or without periods. Whether or not periods are used, the name is always pronounced in two syllables, as two letters. Yet, throughout these proceedings, Anheuser-Busch has maintained that the two letters are not initials for anything. In attempting to explain why Anheuser-Busch at one time used periods after the letters, Michael Roarty, spokesperson for the Anheuser-Busch LA project, testified that:

> L period A period was simply an effort to get people to pronounce these two letters L A as opposed to La, which we were afraid that some people might misinterpret.

Transcript at 1131. See also Transcript at 1141, 1145-47.

For convenience, the court will use the term "LA" without periods throughout this opinion.

[2] Four days later the Missouri district court issued an order permanently enjoining Stroh from using the "LA" mark throughout the United States. See Anheuser-Busch, Inc. v. Stroh Brewery Company, 587 F. Supp. 330 (E.D. Mo.), aff'd, 750 F.2d 631 (8th Cir. 1984).

II. CLAIMS AND ISSUES

By the time the pleadings closed, Heileman, asserting jurisdiction under 15 U.S.C. §§ 15 and 26 and 28 U.S.C. §§ 1332(a), 1337 and 1338, had alleged four causes of action against Anheuser-Busch:

[*1448] Count I: seeking injunctive relief and a declaratory judgment of noninfringement under the trademark laws;

Count II: seeking injunctive relief and a declaratory judgment that it is not unfairly competing with Anheuser-Busch under federal law, Wisconsin statutory law, or the common law;

Count III: seeking damages, claiming that Anheuser-Busch is engaging in unfair competition under 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a) and the common law;

Count IV: seeking treble damages, claiming that Anheuser-Busch is attempting to monopolize the low alcohol beer market in the United States in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 2.

Based on these claims, Heileman seeks a declaration and judgment as follows:

1. Declaring:

(a) Plaintiff's use of "BLATZ L.A.", "CARLING BLACK LABEL L.A.", "OLD STYLE L.A.", "SCHMIDT L.A.", "LONE * L.A.", and "RANIER L.A." on its low alcohol beers does not infringe any rights of or [6] constitute unfair competition with defendant;
(b) Plaintiff's use of the description [sic] and generic terms "low alcohol", "LA" or "L.A." is not in violation of any right of defendant;
(c) The term "L.A." is a generic and descriptive term properly denominating and describing beers, particularly those beers having a low alcohol or lesser alcoholic content than regular beer; and
(d) Plaintiff's use of the term "BLATZ L.A.", "CARLING BLACK LABEL L.A.", "OLD STYLE L.A.", "SCHMIDT L.A.", "LONE * L.A.", or "RANIER L.A." is not confusingly similar to, or in conflict with, the use of the word "L.A." and/or "LA" as asserted to be the mark(s) of defendant.

2. Ordering:

(a) In accordance with 15 U.S.C. §§ 1119 and 1056, that defendant disclaim the descriptive and generic term "L.A." and/or "LA" as forming any part of its registration to issue on said application Serial No. 461,853 filed January 20, 1984 and Serial No. 462,371 filed January 23, 1984;
(b) That all or a portion of the trademark registration applications Serial No. 461,853 filed January 20, 1983 and Serial No. 462,371 filed January 23, 1984 be cancelled; and

(c) That defendant advise the trade that it no longer will threaten [7] suit or make demands against persons using the generic and descriptive term "L.A." and/or "LA" to denominate and describe low alcohol beer, or otherwise assert purported rights to the terms "low alcohol", "LA" or "L.A." for low alcohol beer.

3. Preliminarily and permanently enjoining defendant, its officers, agents, servants, employees, representatives, successors and assigns, and all persons in active concern or participation with them, and any and all persons acting by, through or under authority from defendant, either separately or jointly, from:
(a) in any way interfering or threatening to interfere with use by plaintiff or its distributors or retailers of the generic and descriptive term "L.A." to denominate and describe low alcohol beer, particularly its beer sold in association with the labels illustrated herein as "BLATZ", "CARLING BLACK LABEL", "OLD STYLE", "SCHMIDT", "LONE *" and "RANIER" labels;
(c) interfering with plaintiff's use of the abbreviation "L.A." to describe its low alcohol beers, or from otherwise engaging in unlawful acts complained of herein.

4. Awarding to Plaintiff:

(a) any and all damages it has or will sustain by reason of defendant's aforesaid unfair [8] competition;
(b) the sum of $ 500,000 as punitive damages for defendant's deliberate and willful unfair competition;

(c) the costs of this action, including reasonable attorneys' fees pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 1117;

(d) treble the amount of damages sustained by plaintiff as the proximate result of defendant's aforesaid violations of the antitrust laws, including costs and [*1449] reasonable attorneys' fees incurred by plaintiff; and

(e) such other and further relief as this court may deem just and equitable. [1485]

Amended Complaint [of G. Heileman Brewing Company, Inc.] at 12-15.

Miller Brewing Company's complaint raises similar claims and asks for the following relief:

(a) For a declaration that "LA," or its equivalents, as used for low alcohol beer, is an unprotectable designation, that A-B has no protectable rights therein, and that Miller is free to use the same as it sees fit.

(b) For an order permanently enjoining A-B, and any person or party in privity or concert with it, from claiming, seeking (by registration or otherwise), asserting, or attempting to enforce any rights in "LA," or its equivalents, as against Miller or its customers, or otherwise engaging in the unlawful acts complained [9] of.

(c) For an award to Miller of its damages, trebled, all profits of A-B attributable to its unlawful acts, costs and attorneys' fees.

(d) For such other and further relief as this court may deem just or equitable.

Complaint [of Miller Brewing Company] at 5.

Anheuser-Busch answered both complaints and filed counterclaims against both plaintiffs. Alleging jurisdiction under 15 U.S.C. § 1121 and 28 U.S.C. §§ 1332 and 1338, the counterclaimant asserts causes of action for trademark infringement and unfair competition, arising under 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a) and the common law, and for trademark dilution, arising under the laws of Illinois and "various other states," asking that:

1. Counterdefendant, its officers, agents, servants, employees, attorneys and all others in active concert or participation with counterdefendant, be enjoined and restrained, during the pendency of this action and permanently thereafter, from:

(a) using, in the advertising, promotion or sale of counterdefendant's beer, counterclaimant's LA trademark or any colorable imitation thereof which is likely to dilute the distinctiveness of counterclaimant's LA trademark, or counterclaimant's distinctive advertising for [10] its LA beer;

(b) using, in the advertising, promotion or sale of counterdefendant's beer, counterclaimant's LA trademark or any colorable imitation thereof which is likely to be mistaken or confused with counterclaimant's LA trademark; and

(c) doing any other acts that are likely to cause confusion, mistake or deception with counterclaimant or counterclaimant's business, or that are likely to cause counterclaimant's LA trademark to lose its distinctiveness by becoming a generic designation for a type of beer, or that are likely to destroy the commercial value of counterclaimant's LA trademark or the business and good will represented and symbolized by said trademark.

2. Counterdefendant be required to deliver up for destruction, in accordance with the court's directions, all labels, signs, prints, packages, wrappers, displays and advertisements bearing the LA trademark, and all plates, molds, matrices and other means of making the same.

3. Counterdefendant be required to account for and pay to counterclaimant all profits derived by counterdefendant from its aforesaid wrongful use of LA.

4. Counterdefendant be required to pay counterclaimant any and all damages it has or will sustain [11] by reason of counterdefendant's aforesaid acts.

5. Counterdefendant be required to pay to counterclaimant a sum of money sufficient to enable counterclaimant to have effective corrective advertising to overcome the dilution of counterclaimant's LA trademark and distinctive advertising in each market in which counterdefendant has used LA or has advertised that LA is a generic or descriptive term for low alcohol beer.

6. Counterdefendant be required to pay to counterclaimant punitive damages in an amount sufficient to deter counterdefendant from further unfair competition, infringement or dilution of counterclaimant's LA trademark in the future.

[*1450] 7. Counterdefendant be required to pay to counterclaimant the costs of this action, together with counterclaimant's reasonable attorneys' fees.

8. Counterclaimant have such other and further relief as this court deems just and equitable.

Answer to Amended Complaint and Amended Counterclaim at 13-15.

III. TRIAL

A trial on the merits of these two cases was heard by the court, sitting without a jury, for nine days, with the following witnesses testifying:

Mortimer Brenner: plaintiffs' expert witness; consultant to the brewing industry; [12]

Michael J. Roarty: executive vice president of Anheuser-Busch, Inc.; director of marketing; spokesperson for Anheuser-Busch's LA beer;

Russell G. Cleary: president and chairman of the board of the G. Heileman Brewing Company, Inc.; [1486]

John S. Isherwood: senior executive vice president of operations for the G. Heileman Brewing Company, Inc.;

John S. Pedace: executive vice president of marketing for the G. Heileman Brewing Company, Inc.;

Henry Ostberg: plaintiffs' expert witness; president of Admar Research Company, Inc.;

John A. Bunge: plaintiffs' expert witness; president of Legal Marketing Research, Inc.;

John R. Nevin: plaintiffs' expert witness; professor of business at the University of Wisconsin Graduate School of Business;

Victor F. Imbimbo, Jr.: brand manager of new products for the Miller Brewing Company;

Dennis P. Long: at the time of trial, president and chief operating officer of Anheuser-Busch, Inc.;

Arch M. Ahern: associate general counsel of Anheuser-Busch Companies, Inc.; [3]

Yoram Wind: defendant's expert witness; Lauder Professor and Professor of Marketing and Management at the Wharton School, University of Pennsylvania.

[13] The following three witnesses did not appear at trial, but portions of their deposition testimony were read during trial:

James R. Buell, Jr.: Anheuser-Busch director of new product planning and development;

Mark C. Lamping: Anheuser-Busch product manager for LA;

David R. Wood: president of Interbrand Corporation, a company which developed brand names for Anheuser-Busch's low alcohol beer.

In addition, almost 700 exhibits were offered by the parties and, after the close of testimony, the parties designated for inclusion in the transcript several sets of interrogatory responses plus 250 pages of deposition testimony from the following additional witnesses [4] who did not appear at trial:

---

[3] Anheuser-Busch Companies, Inc. is the holding company of Anheuser-Busch, Inc. See Transcript at 239, 1324.

[4] Some of these witnesses were not identified in the parties' final pretrial report and were not otherwise identified by the party offering the testimony. Therefore, the court was left to guess the identity of the witnesses from the portions of deposition testimony offered.

Robert A. Toledo: vice president, brand management, Miller Brewing Company;

Jon B. Reynolds: marketing services manager, G. Heileman Brewing Company, Inc.;

Donald R. O'Brien: director of advertising, G. Heileman Brewing Company, Inc.;

Thomas Godwin: director of brand development, G. Heileman Brewing Company, Inc.;

Thomas J. Myers: vice president, brand [14] management, G. Heileman Brewing Company, Inc.;

James G. Martin: vice president of marketing, Ranier Brewing Company;

[*1451] Donald S. McDonald: vice president and senior counsel, Anheuser-Busch;

Charles W. Wirtel: head of beer planning department, Anheuser-Busch;

John F. Bruemmer: senior vice president of D'Arcy MacManus Masius, an advertising agency retained by Anheuser-Busch;

Paul J. Siemer: executive vice president of Fleishman-Hillard, Inc., a public relations firm retained by Anheuser-Busch;

Alvin L. Kacin: former chairman of D'Arcy MacManus Masius, an advertising agency retained by Anheuser-Busch;

August A. Busch III: president and chairman of Anheuser-Busch Companies, Inc.

Finally, the plaintiffs offered additional deposition excerpts which are not included in the transcript. Besides eleven witnesses already identified above, the plaintiffs' deposition witnesses include:

William [15] J. Morgan: account executive for D'Arcy MacManus Masius, an advertising agency retained by Anheuser-Busch;

James L. Morice: executive vice-president of Fleishman-Hillard, Inc., a public relations firm retained by Anheuser-Busch;

James M. Palumbo: employee of D'Arcy MacManus Masius, an advertising agency retained by Anheuser-Busch; Zanvel A. Zack: director of creative services within the merchandising department of Anheuser-Busch.

Having now considered the testimony and exhibits received at trial as well as the posttrial submissions, the court sets forth its Findings of Fact separately from its Conclusions of Law pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 52.

IV. UNCONTESTED FACTS

In their final pretrial report the parties stipulated to the following facts, which the court adopts and incorporates into this decision:

1. Plaintiff G. Heileman Brewing Company, Inc. ("Heileman") is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the [1487] State of Wisconsin, having its principal place of business at 100 Harborview Plaza, LaCrosse, Wisconsin 54601.

2. Plaintiff Miller Brewing Company ("Miller") is a Wisconsin corporation with its principal place of business at 3939 West [16] Highland Boulevard, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

3. Defendant, Anheuser-Busch, Inc. ("Busch") is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Missouri, having its principal place of business at 1 Busch Place, St. Louis, Missouri 63118. Defendant is registered to do business and conducts business in Wisconsin and in the Eastern District of Wisconsin.

. . . . [5]

6. Busch, Miller and Heileman have for many years been engaged in the business of brewing, packaging, marketing, distributing and selling brewed fermented malt beverages, including beer, and are direct competitors in that business throughout the United States.

7. The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (BATF) of the U.S. Government regulates labeling of alcoholic malt beverages pursuant to 27 CFR Part 7.

8. Early in 1981, August A. Busch III ("Mr. Busch"), Busch's Chairman and Chief Executive Officer, toured various breweries in Australia, including the Tooth brewery, and learned of the success of its low alcohol beer.

9. At a meeting in September 1983, Busch's Beer Planning Group presented a Phase II New Venture Analysis recommending that Busch produce a 1.7% alcohol beer.

10. On November 21, 1983, Busch filed [17] applications with BATF for approval [*1452] of three beer labels having the letters "L.A.", L.A.B.", "L.A.D.", respectively.

. . . . [6]

12. Busch's President and Chief Operating Officer, Dennis P. Long, and its Executive Vice President, Michael J. Roarty, were selected as spokespersons within Busch to handle media inquiries and to be available for interviews regarding its new product.

13. On February 16, 1984, Busch filed applications with BATF for approval of four beer labels having the letters "R.A.," "X.L.A.," "U.L.A., " and "N.A."

14. On March 16, 1984 Busch conducted a kickoff meeting at the Clarion Hotel in St. Louis, Missouri for those wholesalers who would be participating in the test marketing of Busch's new beer.

15. On March 29, 1984, Heileman issued a press release announcing its intent to introduce two low alcohol beers in April 1984, called "BLATZ" L.A. and "BLACK LABEL" L.A.

16. On April 18, 1984 Busch filed separate suits against The Stroh Brewery Company and Heileman for an injunction against their use of "LA" or "L.A." on beer. Earlier that same day, Heileman brought this action for, inter alia, a declaratory judgment that the letters "LA" were a generic description for [18] a type or category of beer and inherently not protectible as a trademark.

17. On May 11, 1984, Busch conducted a teleconference via satellite originating from the Chase Hotel in St. Louis, Missouri in which Busch announced the rollout of its new product to all Busch's U.S. wholesalers and distributors.

18. Busch is the largest brewer in the United States, with annual revenues in excess of $ 5 billion. In 1983, Busch sold approximately 60.5 million barrels of beer. Miller, the second largest brewer in the U.S., sold approximately 37.7 million barrels of beer that year. Heileman sold approximately 17.5 million barrels of beer in 1983, making it the fourth largest U.S. brewer. U.S. beer sales totalled 180.5 million barrels in 1983.

19. The two names initially presented to Miller as brand names for its 1.7% alcohol beer product were SHARP's and BARKING DOG.

20. In March, 1984, Miller decided to use Sharp's LA for its 1.7% alcohol beer.

21. On August 13, 1984, Miller began marketing a 1.7% alcohol beer with LA and the "Sharp's" name in test markets in Atlanta, Georgia, Columbus, Ohio, Houston, Texas, Springfield, Illinois and San Diego, California. Presently Miller is not marketing [19] Sharp's L.A. in any other markets.

---

[5] In paragraphs 4 and 5 the parties attempted to stipulate to jurisdiction and venue, which are not "facts" but conclusions of law. Parties may not stipulate to conclusions of law or confer jurisdiction by consent. See Kanzelberger v. Kanzelberger, 782 F.2d 774, 776-77 (7th Cir. 1986).

[6] Anheuser-Busch later withdrew its agreement to paragraph 11. See Defendant-Counterclaimant's Supplement to the Joint Pretrial Report at 2.

V. FINDINGS OF FACT

In addition to the foregoing uncontroverted facts, the following facts [7] have been established by a preponderance of the evidence or a higher burden, where applicable. [1488]

A. Parties

1. Plaintiff and counterclaim defendant G. Heileman Brewing Company, Inc. is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Wisconsin. It has its principal place of business at 100 Harborview Plaza, LaCrosse, Wisconsin 54601.

2. Plaintiff and counterclaim defendant Miller Brewing Company [20] is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Wisconsin. It has its principal place of business at 3939 Highland Boulevard, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

3. Defendant and counterclaimant Anheuser-Busch, Inc. is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Missouri. It has its principal place of business at 1 Busch Place, St. Louis, Missouri 63118. The defendant is registered to do business and conducts business [*1453] in Wisconsin and in the Eastern District of Wisconsin.

4. For many years the parties have been engaged in the business of brewing, packaging, marketing, distributing and selling brewed fermented malt beverages, including beer, and are direct competitors in that business throughout the United States.

B. Low Alcohol Beer

5. Low alcohol beer was launched in Australia in 1979. Among the low alcohol beers sold in Australia have been Tooth LA, South Australian LA, Courage LA, and Carling LA. See Trial Exhibits 74, 77, 100, 101, 102, 103, 400, 401, 426, 427. See also Transcript at 41-43, 68, 82-85, 109-10, 240, 944-48, 959, 2132-34.

6. The United States Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (BATF) regulates the labeling and advertising [21] of alcoholic malt beverages pursuant to the Federal Alcohol Administration Act (FAA), 27 U.S.C. §§ 201-211, and the regulations implementing the FAA, particularly 7 C.F.R. § 7. [8] See Trial Exhibit 63. See also Transcript at 1357-59. Beer cannot be shipped in commerce unless the BATF has approved the label. See Transcript at 1358.

7. The BATF has defined low alcohol beer as a beer containing less than 2.5% alcohol by volume and less than 2% alcohol by weight. See Trial Exhibits 63, 762. See also Transcript at 49-50, 103, 245, 294, 2152. Regular malt beverages contain 3.5-5.0% alcohol by volume. See Trial Exhibits 63, 762.

8. Low alcohol beers contain less alcohol than regular malt beverages and they can also contain fewer calories. See Transcript at 49-50, 102, 245, 294, 332, 412, 435, 1311, 2063, 2073-74.

9. Low alcohol beer can be produced [22] in a number of ways: (1) by diluting conventional beer with water; (2) by removing the alcohol through distillation, vacuum distillation, or reverse osmosis; or (3) by following the usual brewing process using a slightly reduced bill of materials and altering the time and temperatures to reduce the amount of fermentable sugars available to the yeast to use during the fermentation part of the process, thus limiting the formation of alcohol. See Transcript at 411. See also Transcript at 48-49, 1313.

---

[7] Some of these findings of fact will duplicate, at least in part, certain of the uncontroverted facts set forth above. However, the court's findings will add essential detail to the stipulations.

[8] Laws and regulations governing alcoholic beverages are more properly the subject of judicial notice. However, this information has been included among the court's findings as background information and because the court found that one or more of the parties had actual knowledge of these laws and regulations.

10. Prior to April 27, 1984, the BATF, acting pursuant to its interpretation of the FAA, would not approve beer labeling or advertising describing a product as having a low or reduced alcoholic content. See Transcript at 58-59, 297-99, 434, 951, 984-85, 1226-35, 1294.

11. Under the Twenty-First Amendment to the United States Constitution, the states may choose to adopt the FAA or they may choose to enact their own regulations of alcoholic beverages. See Transcript at 2154-59.

12. Prior to April 27, 1984, seventeen states did not permit advertising the alcoholic strength or weakness of beer. See, e.g., Trial Exhibit 65. See also Transcript at 370, 2155-59.

13. The [23] laws of some states which did not adopt the FAA allowed advertising the alcoholic weakness of beer. See Transcript at 984-85, 2154. Thus, in 1983, the Hudepohl Brewery marketed reduced alcohol beer under the PACE trademark in Ohio and the Christian Schmidt Brewing Company marketed a reduced alcohol beer under the BREAK trademark in Pennsylvania. See Transcript at 294, 369-72, 385-86, 976-92, 2134-35, 2234. See also Trial Exhibit 24. The labels and advertising of these two beers used the description "reduced alcohol." See Trial Exhibits 701, 702, 702A, 704, 704A, 705 and 706. Neither brewery used the term "LA." See Transcript at 372, 991. No other brewers in the United States were marketing low alcohol beer prior to December of 1983. See Transcript at 369-76, 427-28, 495-96, 923, 976-92, [*1454] 1164, 1179-80, 1191, 1308, 1329, 2060, 2117, 2132, 2135, 2161, 2233-34. [1489]

C. Unfair Competition

(1) Adoption of LA Mark

(a) Anheuser-Busch

14. In 1981, August A. Busch III, the president and chief executive officer of Anheuser-Busch Companies, studied the production and marketing of low alcohol beer while traveling in Australia. See Transcript at 240-42, 2212-13.

[24] 15. Sometime after returning from Australia, Mr. Busch directed his company to begin research and development of a low alcohol beer. [9] See Transcript at 126, 129, 242, 1360-63. See also Trial Exhibit 300.

16. In September of 1983, Anheuser-Busch engaged the Interbrand Corporation to develop and test potential names for a low alcohol beer. See Transcript at 140, 262, 1095.

17. On November 21, 1983, Anheuser-Busch obtained BATF approval for beer labels using the names "L.A.," "L.A.B.," and "L.A.D." See Trial Exhibits 44, 55, 280, 760. See also Transcript at 169, 993-94, 1213, 1363-65, 1475-85. There is no evidence that the BATF was aware that these labels might be used on low [25] alcohol beer products. See Transcript at 169-70, 1343-45, 1478-84, 2216. See also Trial Exhibit 526.

18. On November 28, 1983, Interbrand submitted a report recommending against marketing a low alcohol beer as a line extension [10] of an existing brand. Interbrand believed that, in the long run, a line extension would weaken the parent brand, particularly if the new product was not successful. The company also pointed out that a new "breakthrough" product, which would be heavily advertised in the hope that it would become the leading seller in its category, should not be presented as an extension of an existing brand. Instead, Interbrand recommended "power branding," using a single brand name stressing the unique quality of the product. See Trial Exhibits 20, 113, 114. See Transcript at 180-81, 2148-49.

---

[9] Mr. Busch testified at his deposition that he first directed the development of a low alcohol beer in the summer or fall of 1983. See Transcript at 242. James Buell, director of new product planning and development for Anheuser-Busch, testified that development of a low alcohol beer was underway when he joined the company in April of 1982. See Transcript at 126, 129. See also Trial Exhibit 758 (trademark search for LA dated February 24, 1981); Transcript at 1360-63, 1456.

[10] According to David Wood, president of Interbrand, a "line extension" is "the extension of an existing names [sic] into new products," e.g., BUDWEISER LA. See Transcript at 235-36. See also Transcript at 281-83, 899-902.

19. On December 20, 1983, Interbrand submitted its final brand name report and recommendations. See Transcript at 179, 236-37, 2169. [26] See Trial Exhibits 12, 116, 116A. Interbrand warned Anheuser-Busch that using "LA" as a brand name would lead to problems:

> Our problem with the use of L.A. as a stand-alone brand name is that it clearly and obviously stands for low alcohol, and as such has two major problems:
>
> * it would not, in all likelihood, be protectible since it clearly and obviously stands for low alcohol, and as such is clearly an abbreviation of the generic decriptor.
>
> * Since products in the segment can all claim low alcohol, it is reasonable to assume that the category will be known as, and referred to as, the low, low alcohol or L.A. category. And since A-B will not be the only entrant there would be ample opportunity for confusion, switching, etc.

Trial Exhibit 12.

20. Based on the Interbrand research, James Buell, director of new product planning and development, issued a report recommending rejection of the line extension [11] names and recommending a corporate source approach using the name "L.A. from Anheuser-Busch." See Trial Exhibits 18, 18A, 18B, 87. See also Transcript at 144-45, 151-52.

[27] [*1455] 21. Within a month, Mr. Busch decided to adopt the name "LA from Anheuser-Busch." See Trial Exhibits 19, 304. See also Transcript at 170, 203, 249-50, 993, 995-96, 1140, 2179, 2215-18.

22. On January 20, 1984, Anheuser-Busch issued a press release announcing its new product. The release stated that:

> The new product, which will be called "L.A. from Anheuser-Busch," has an alcohol content of approximately half that of regular beer. "L.A. from Anheuser-Busch" will be covered by all laws regulating the sale of alcoholic beverages, offering customers of legal drinking age a light alcohol product with the full taste of beer.

Trial Exhibit 22. See also Transcript at 202-04, 264, 996, 1146-47, 1236-37; Trial Exhibit 303.

23. At the outset Anheuser-Busch encountered problems planning a marketing strategy for LA because, on one hand, it was trying to use LA as an arbitrary or suggestive [1490] trademark, while, on the other hand, it needed to describe the unique low alcohol characteristic of the new type of beer to consumers without running afoul of state, federal and television [28] network regulations forbidding the advertising of alcoholic weakness. See Transcript at 1102-03, 1139, 1216-35, 2152-59. See also Trial Exhibits 12, 50, 51, 52, 53, 64, 65, 244, 396.

24. Anheuser-Busch retained Fleischman-Hillard, Inc., a public relations firm, to develop public awareness of LA. See Transcript at 156, 203, 267-68, 1183-87, 1211-12, 1237, 1239-44, 253, 254, 256, 257, 259, 262, 264, 265, 268, 271, 272, 274, 275, 336, 337, 338, 343, 355.

25. Many of the popular news media (often aided by interviews or background briefings with employees of Fleischman-Hillard or Anheuser-Busch) reported that "LA" means "low," "less," or "light" alcohol. See, e.g., Trial Exhibits 194, 246, 330, 332, 333, 457, 458, 460, 462, 463, 464, 465, 466, 470, 472, 473, 474, 477, 479; Transcript at 264-74, 996-1001, 1183-87.

26. Although Anheuser-Busch executives reviewed many of these articles for accuracy, there is no evidence that Anheuser-Busch took any steps to discourage or correct this publicity equating "LA" with "low alcohol." [12] See Transcript at 264-74, 1084-86, 1211-13, 1237-84, 2196-2204, 2218-19.

[29] 27. On February 16, 1984, after beginning its efforts to publicize its LA beer, Anheuser-Busch filed applications for BATF approval of labels containing the names: "X.L.A.," "U.L.A.," "R.A.," and "N.A." On February

---

[11] At his deposition Buell professed not to know the meaning of the term "line extension." See Transcript at 181.

[12] Michael Roarty, spokesperson for the Anheuser-Busch LA project, explained that consultants "advised that to make an issue out of these things would just confuse the marketplace." Transcript at 1259. See also Transcript at 1141.

22, 1984, the BATF approved these names "for trademark purposes only," meaning that the initials could not be used as labels for beer. See Trial Exhibits 55, 298, 529. See also Transcript at 171-72, 1213-15, 1487-1505.

28. Anheuser-Busch, through its attorney Donald S. McDonald, made an effort to persuade the BATF to change its interpretation of the FAA to permit labels and advertising to describe beer as being low in alcoholic content. See Transcript at 1228, 1294-1301, 2153-54. See also Trial Exhibits 59, 64.

29. On March 7, 1984, the Stroh Brewery Company obtained BATF approval for two beer labels: SCHAEFER LA and OLD MILWAUKEE LA. See Transcript at 301. See also Anheuser-Busch, Inc. v. Stroh Brewery Company, 587 F. Supp. 330, 333 (E.D. Mo.), aff'd., 750 F.2d 631 (8th Cir. 1984). Shortly thereafter, Stroh announced plans to market a low alcohol beer labeled with the LA mark. See Transcript at 210, 434, 2111-12.

30. On March 13, 1984, Anheuser-Busch [30] filed applications for BATF approval of labels for a beer can and beer bottle bearing the LA mark. These applications were approved on March 13, 1984. See Trial Exhibits 296, 761.

31. On March 16, 1984, Anheuser-Busch filed an application for BATF approval of a label for draught beer bearing [*1456] the LA mark. This label was approved on March 21, 1984. See Trial Exhibit 297.

32. On April 27, 1984, the BATF issued a circular announcing that it now interpreted 27 U.S.C. § 205(e) and (f) as not prohibiting the labeling and advertising of alcoholic weakness. The circular provided that:

> . . . the Bureau has determined that statements of low or reduced alcohol content when used with malt beverage products containing less than 2.5 percent alcohol by volume are not misleading. Since the alcohol content of regular malt beverages falls within the range of 3.5 to 5.0 percent alcohol by volume, malt beverage products containing less than 2.5 percent content by volume have a substantially lower alcohol content and may accurately be described as low alcohol or reduced alcohol malt beverages.

Trial Exhibits 63, 762. See also Transcript at 58-59, 1300-03.

33. After the BATF issued this circular, [31] affected states changed their laws and regulations to allow descriptive references to low alcohol on beer labeling and advertising. By the time of trial, all the states had made these revisions. See Transcript at 2156-59.

(b) Heileman

34. In early 1982, Heileman (aware of the Australian experience) began to develop a low alcohol beer. See Transcript at 291-93, 407-10, 2036, 2229.

35. In March of 1984, Heileman decided to use brand or line extensions, e.g., BLATZ LA, BLATZ II, in positioning its low alcohol beer. See Transcript at 281-83, 325-28, 330-33, 344-46, 356-59, 2037-39, 2076, 2114-15.

36. With knowledge of the Anheuser-Busch LA product, of the Stroh Brewery Company's announced plans to market SCHAEFER LA, and of the BATF approval of the Anheuser-Busch and Stroh labels, Heileman announced on March 29, 1984, that it would market low alcohol beers under labels using its house marks with "L.A." as a [1491] category descriptor, e.g., CARLING BLACK LABEL L.A. and BLATZ L.A. See Transcript at 291-309, 328-38, 343, 359-79, 385-91, 425-37, 493-96, 2037-55, 2057-64, 2076-81, 2108-17, 2229. See also Trial Exhibits 514, 515, 521.

(c) Miller

37. In March [32] of 1984, Miller began to develop a low alcohol beer. Victor Imbimbo, brand manager of new products for the Miller Brewing Company, traveled to Australia to study the low alcohol beer market there. See Transcript at 931-39, 2010-13, 2126, 2132-34, 2237.

38. After consultation with its advertising agency, Leo Burnett, Miller adopted a single product mark, "Sharp's," combined with "L.A." as a category descriptor, as the name for its low alcohol beer. At the time this name was selected, Miller was aware of Anheuser-Busch's low alcohol product and of the BATF labeling decisions. See Transcript at 940-48, 2012-20, 2024-25, 2124-41, 2232-42. See also Trial Exhibit 748.

(2) Use of LA Mark

39. On March 16, 1984, Anheuser-Busch began continuous use of the LA mark in commerce by shipping its low alcohol beer with LA labels affixed to wholesalers. [13] See Transcript at 1013-18, 1158, 1454-55.

[33] [*1457] 40. On April 2, 1984, Anheuser-Busch began retail sales of its LA beer in twelve test markets in Arizona, California, Florida, Georgia, Iowa, Nebraska, North Carolina, Ohio, Oregon, Rhode Island, Washington and Wisconsin. See Transcript at 207-08, 1014, 1017-18, 1027, 1205, 1229, 1454-55. See also Trial Exhibits 713, 714, 767 (received except for first three pages).

41. On May 21, 1984, Anheuser-Busch began shipping LA beer to retail outlets in twenty additional states: Alabama, Arkansas, Illinois, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, Nevada, New Jersey, New York, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, Virginia, West Virginia and the District of Columbia. See Transcript at 1018, 2174. See Trial Exhibit 714.

42. By the time of trial, Anheuser-Busch was selling LA beer in all states except Connecticut. See Transcript at 1043-44. See also Trial Exhibit 714.

43. In April of 1984, Heileman began to use the "LA" mark on beer shipped and sold in interstate commerce. On April 19, 1984, Heileman shipped two half-barrels of BLATZ LA from Illinois to LaCrosse, Wisconsin. On April 24, 1984, cans of Heileman's low alcohol [34] beer, affixed with labels bearing the mark BLATZ LA, were shipped from a brewery in Belleville, Illinois and sold to retailers in Wisconsin. See Transcript at 334, 363-66, 392-93, 414, 438-41, 467-68. See also Trial Exhibit 379.

44. In May of 1984, Heileman began selling its low alcohol beer in California. By June of 1984, [14] Heileman was selling its low alcohol beers in Illinois, Maryland, Minnesota, Montana, North Dakota and Washington. See Transcript at 365-66, 467-79. See also Trial Exhibit 379.

45. By the time of trial, Heileman was using the LA mark on beer sold throughout "most of the United States." See Transcript at 446, 466.

46. Miller began to use the mark Sharp's LA on beer shipped and sold in interstate commerce on August 13, 1984. See Transcript at 2007.

47. By the time of trial, Miller [35] was selling Sharp's LA at retail outlets in five test markets: Atlanta, Georgia; Houston, Texas; Columbus, Ohio; Springfield, Illinois; and San Diego, California. See Transcript at 2007.

---

[13] Anheuser-Busch attempted to prove that it made token use of the L.A. (with periods) mark in interstate commerce on December 5, 1983, by offering into evidence a three-page document consisting of an Anheuser-Busch invoice and two cash receipts from a dealer, Illinois Distributing Company. See Transcript at 1366-1434. See also Trial Exhibit 764 (not received). Because of lack of foundation and lack of indicia of reliability, the court refused to receive the third page of the exhibit. See Transcript at 1408. Moreover, substantial doubts were raised about the reliability of the other two pages. For example, the invoice described the beer shipped as containing 5% alcohol, indicating that it was not a low alcohol beer, which would contain 1.8% alcohol. Arch Ahern, associate general counsel of Anheuser-Busch Companies, Inc., testified that this misdescription was made "to shield the fact that there were any shipments of low alcohol beer being made from other employees within the company . . . ." Id. at 1412. See also Transcript at 1426-34; Trial Exhibits 765, 766 (not received) (purported records of token shipment of beer labeled with LA (without periods) mark made on January 20, 1984).

[14] Russell Cleary, chief executive officer of the G. Heileman Brewing Company, testified that he thought Heileman's LA beers were being sold in Illinois and other midwestern states in April or May of 1984. See Transcript at 365-66, 467-68. However, this belief was not supported by the shipping documents received in evidence. See Trial Exhibit 379.

48. Anheuser-Busch has met its burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence [1492] that it was the first or senior user [15] of the "LA" mark on beer sold in Wisconsin and at least thirty-one other states.

(3) Trademark Registration Applications

49. On January 20, 1984, Anheuser-Busch filed application No. 461853 with the federal Patent and Trademark Office to register "LA" as a trademark. See Trial Exhibit 315. See also Transcript at 1485-87, 1508.

50. On January 23, 1984, Anheuser-Busch filed application No. 462371 with the federal Patent and Trademark Office to register "L.A." as a trademark. See Trial Exhibits 299, 387. [36] See also Transcript at 1506.

51. On February 9, 1984, Anheuser-Busch filed an application with the federal Patent and Trademark Office to register "L.A.B." as a trademark. See Trial Exhibits 49, 388. See also Transcript at 1507.

52. On February 9, 1984, Anheuser-Busch filed an application with the federal Patent and Trademark Office to register [*1458] "L.A.D." as a trademark. See Trial Exhibit 389. See also Transcript at 1507.

53. On May 11, 1984, Anheuser-Busch filed an application with the federal Patent and Trademark Office to register "LA" and an accompanying trade dress design as a trademark. See Trial Exhibits 319, 530. See also Transcript at 1510-13.

54. On May 23, 1984, the federal Patent and Trademark Office rejected the applications to register "L.A." and "LA," on the ground that the initials designated "Los Angeles." See Trial Exhibits 316, 318, 387. See also Transcript at 1508-10.

55. At the time of trial Anheuser-Busch had not succeeded in obtaining a federal trademark registration for "L.A.B.," "L.A.D.," "L.A.," or "LA". Anheuser-Busch had not withdrawn any of the applications which had not yet been rejected by the Patent and Trademark Office. [37] See Transcript at 1514.

56. There is no evidence in the record that Heileman attempted to obtain federal trademark registration for "L.A." or "LA."

57. There is no evidence in the record that Miller attempted to obtain federal trademark registration for "L.A.," "LA," or "Sharp's LA."

(4) Strength of Mark

58. Before Anheuser-Busch began to market its low alcohol beer in interstate commerce in 1984, this type of beer was not being produced or sold in the United States except in two local markets. See Transcript at 369-76, 427-28, 495-96, 923, 976-92, 1164, 1179-80, 1191, 1308, 1329, 2060, 2117, 2132, 2135, 2161, 2233-34.

59. Due to BATF policy in effect prior to April 27, 1984, consumers in most states had not been exposed to beer advertising or labels describing the alcoholic weakness of beer. See Transcript at 58-59, 297-99, 434, 984-85, 1226-35.

60. Prior to April of 1984, beer consumers used no generic or common descriptive name for low alcohol beer -- a product that did not exist, except in two local markets. See Transcript at 427-28, 488, 923, 1308-09, 1603, 1609-12, 1628-29, 2060-62, 2078-80, 2132, 2218. See also Trial Exhibits 773, 774.

---

[15] As terms of art in the field of trademark law, "senior user" denotes "the first seller to adopt and use a mark in the United States," and "junior user" denotes "the second seller to adopt the mark, even though the junior user may be the first in time within a given remote territory." 1 J. McCarthy, Trademarks and Unfair Competition § 26:1 at 204 (1973).

61. Anheuser-Busch [38] has met its burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that LA was not a generic name for a type of beer when it began to market LA; when its competitors Heileman and Miller began to market their low alcohol beers; or by the time of trial. See Transcript at 1515-1874. See also Trial Exhibits 773, 774.

62. Anheuser-Busch copied the name "LA" from Australian beers such as Tooth LA. See Transcript at 2214-15, 2217. In Australia, the name "LA" is used to signify low or light alcohol beers. See Transcript at 51-54, 68, 109-16, 240-42, 944-48, 959, 2212-13. See also Trial Exhibits 74, 77, 100, 101, 102, 103, 400, 401, 426, 427.

63. After adopting and using the LA mark, Anheuser-Busch made superficial efforts to avoid genericizing the name LA and to use the name LA as a trademark. See Transcript at 158, 1027, 1224, 1244, 2223.

64. Although Anheuser-Busch personnel equated "LA" with low alcohol in communiques within the company and in some advertising and point-of-sale materials, it later attempted to disclaim the initialism by removing the periods from the letters; by testifying that the letters have no meaning; by changing its advertising message from "low [39] alcohol" to "half the alcohol"; and by trying to promote the term "reduced alcohol" as the category descriptor for the new beer. See Transcript at 64, 100, 158-65, 169-70, 236-39, 247, 491-502, 1072, 1089-91, 1096-98, 1110, 1116-17, 1131-33, 1141, 1161, 1183-89, 1191-96, 1198-99, 1202-03, 1213-15, 1236-44, 1283, 1287-88, 1293, 1306-09, 2165, 2218-21, 2224. See also Trial Exhibits 10, 12, 39, 43, 50, 52, 53, 73, 76, 156, 243, [1493] 278, 301, 396, 397, 398, 442A, 442B, 442C, 442D, 521, 523, 723.

65. Anheuser-Busch was motivated to deny that "L" and "A" are initials for low alcohol because of BATF interpretation of advertising and labeling regulations prior to April 27, 1984, and because it was attempting to protect "LA" as a trademark. [*1459] See Transcript at 1166-67, 1213-15, 1226-35, 2216, 2223.

66. When introducing its new beer to consumers, Anheuser-Busch engaged in a publicity campaign in which it tacitly encouraged public relations and advertising agencies it had retained as well as media reporters and others unconnected with the company to describe LA to consumers as low, less or light in alcohol. See Transcript at 264-74 (and exhibits received therein), 432-33, 888-93 (and [40] exhibits received therein), 1071-73 (and exhibits received therein), 1084-86, 1089-91, 1149-55, 1184, 1233-84 (and exhibits received therein), 2191, 2196-2204, 2206-07, 2218-19. See also Trial Exhibits 194, 278, 333, 456, 459, 463, 523.

67. Ordinary consumers, as well as secondary sources such as the news media, who have been exposed to LA beer in the context of its trade dress, packaging and advertising, perceive the initials "L" "A" as descriptive of beer containing low, light or less alcohol than regular beer. See Transcript at 334, 530-31, 673-74, 703-04, 708-12, 924, 1170-72, 1685, 2063, 2078, 2228, 2235, 2243. See also Trial Exhibits 194, 333, 435, 436, 456, 459, 463, 774.

68. Based on the evidence adduced at trial and having evaluated the credibility of the witnesses, the court finds that Anheuser-Busch's contention that the letters "L" "A" have no direct meaning when used in association with beer is not credible.

69. Regardless of whether the name LA is written with or without periods, it is pronounced as the initials "L" and "A". These initials directly denote the words "low alcohol" (or synonyms such as "less alcohol" or "light in alcohol") which describe the [41] unique characteristic that distinguishes the beer at issue from other beers.

70. Because the "LA" mark conveys to the relevant public an immediate idea of the unique, low alcohol characteristic of the beer to which it is affixed, the court finds that "LA" is not an arbitrary or suggestive name as applied to beer.

71. "LA," the initials for words which describe the alcoholic weakness of beer, is a merely descriptive term for beer.

72. The court finds that Anheuser-Busch has failed to meet its heavy burden of proving that, by the time Heileman and Miller began to use the LA mark, it had used the LA name so long and so extensively in the same markets that significant numbers of consumers believed that the LA product emanated from a single source. In other words, based on the following subsidiary findings, the court finds that Anheuser-Busch has failed to prove that its merely descriptive LA mark had acquired secondary meaning at any time relevant to these actions:

(a) Anheuser-Busch had been continuously and exclusively [16] using the LA mark for beer for approximately one month when Heileman began to use the LA mark. See Transcript at 207-08, 334, 365, 392, 440-41, 467, 1014, 1017-18, [42] 1027, 1229, 1454-55. See also Trial Exhibits 379, 713, 714, 767.

(b) Anheuser-Busch had been continuously, but not exclusively, using the LA mark on beer sold in commerce for approximately four and one-half months when Miller began to use the LA mark. See Transcript at 207-08, 1014, 1017-18, 1027, 1229, 1454-55, 2007. See also Trial Exhibits 713, 714, 767.

(c) Anheuser-Busch extensively advertised and publicized its LA beer in all media covering national, regional and local markets. Through August of 1984, Anheuser-Busch spent approximately $ 17,000,000.00 advertising its LA beer. In addition, Anheuser-Busch had committed $ 9,500,000.00 for permanent and paper point of sale materials. See Transcript at 1019-22, 1026-51, 1086-91. See also Trial Exhibits 723, 724, 725, 728, 729, 730, 733.

(d) By the time of trial Heileman had spent approximately [43] $ 1,650,000.00 advertising its LA beers, plus an additional [*1460] $ 80,000.00 for point-of-sale displays. See Transcript at 444, 460-65, 2068. See also Trial Exhibit 399.

(e) By the time of trial Miller had spent approximately one and one half million dollars developing a market for its low alcohol beer. See Transcript at 950, 2006-10.

(f) At the time of trial Anheuser-Busch had sold approximately 200,000 barrels of its LA beer. One barrel is equivalent to 13,777 cases of twenty-four units of 12-ounce beers. [1494] Through August of 1984, Anheuser-Busch's sales of LA grossed approximately $ 20,000,000.00. See Transcript at 1051-52. See also Trial Exhibit 714.

(g) At the time of trial Heileman had sold approximately 60,000 barrels of its LA beers. See Transcript at 2068.

(h) At the time of trial Anheuser-Busch was marketing its LA beer in all states except Connecticut. See Transcript at 1043-44. Heileman was marketing its LA beers under seven house marks in "most" states. See Id. at 446, 466. And Miller was marketing its Sharp's LA in five test markets in Georgia, Texas, Ohio, Illinois and California. See Id. at 2007. Within these markets the LA beers are all [44] sold through the same channels. See Id. at 95, 342, 486, 1315.

(i) A majority of consumers who have been introduced to the LA mark on beer in the context of its trade dress, packaging and advertising recognize that LA describes the beer as containing low, light, or less alcohol. See Transcript at 334, 530-31, 673-74, 703-04, 708-12, 924, 1171, 1685, 2063, 2078, 2228, 2235, 2243. See Trial Exhibits 435, 436, 774.

73. Anheuser-Busch has failed to meet its burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that LA, as applied to beer, is a valid, legally protectible common-law trademark.

74. The court finds that "LA" is a merely descriptive mark for beer which had not acquired secondary meaning by the time Heileman or Miller began to use the mark on beer.

(5) Likelihood of Confusion

75. Based on the following factors, the court finds that there is no significant likelihood that consumers will confuse "LA" from Anheuser-Busch with the LA beers sold by Heileman and Miller:

---

[16] Anheuser-Busch's use was exclusive with the exception of Stroh's use of the mark on SHAEFER LA which was briefly marketed in one town in Texas. See Transcript at 496, 2112. See also Anheuser-Busch, Inc. v. Stroh Brewery Company, 587 F. Supp. 330, 338 (E.D. Mo.), aff'd, 750 F.2d 631 (8th Cir. 1984).

(a) The LA marks used by Anheuser-Busch, Heileman and Miller are virtually identical on the levels of sight, sound and meaning. The only differences are the type fonts of the initials and the use of [45] periods by Heileman. See, e.g., Trial Exhibits 210, 407, 410, 413, 416, 419, 422, 428, 429, 707, 708. See also Transcript at 1141.

(b) Heileman prominently displays its established house marks with L.A. as a category descriptor on all its low alcohol beers. See Trial Exhibits 407, 410, 413, 416, 419, 422. See also Transcript at 331.

(c) Miller prominently displays the single brand name "Sharp's" with LA as a category descriptor on its low alcohol beer. See Trial Exhibits 428, 429.

(d) Anheuser-Busch displays the corporate source designating phrase "from Anheuser-Busch" on its LA beer. See Trial Exhibits 210, 707.

(e) "LA" is a weak mark in that the court has found that it is merely descriptive and has not acquired secondary meaning.

(f) The LA beers of Anheuser-Busch, Heileman and Miller are marketed through the same channels of trade; advertised through the same media; compete for the same customers; and fulfill the same function. See Transcript at 61, 94-99, 103-04, 342, 420-22, 442-43, 484-86, 723-25, 728-30, 1311-19, 2084-85, 2116.

(g) Anheuser-Busch, Heileman and Miller positioned their LA beers in the premium price category. See Transcript at [46] 96-98, 485, 1148, 1311, 1329.

(h) While beer is a low priced item, consumers use some degree of care and attention when making a beer purchase because of brand loyalty. See Transcript at 903, 1203.

[*1461] (i) Although Heileman and Miller adopted the name LA only after they learned that Anheuser-Busch had adopted the name and only after they learned that Anheuser-Busch had received BATF approval for its "L.A." label, Heileman and Miller did not copy the LA mark with the intent to deceive the public into falsely believing that their LA beers emanate from Anheuser-Busch. They adopted and used the LA mark to convey the purpose and unique, low alcohol characteristic of their beers. See Transcript at 325-33, 345-48, 433-37, 446-48, 2131, 2138-40, 2236, 2246.

(j) Anheuser-Busch produced no evidence of actual confusion among consumers after Heileman began to use the LA mark in April of 1984, or after Miller began to use the mark in August of 1984. Cf. Transcript at 346-48, 446, 904-09.

(k) Survey evidence indicates that fewer than five percent of consumers are likely to be confused about the source of the parties' LA beers. See Transcript at 717-34. See also Trial Exhibit 440.

(6) [47] Liability

76. Anheuser-Busch Incorporated has not met its burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the G. Heileman Brewing Company, Inc., by using the LA mark, has engaged in trademark infringement or any other acts of unfair competition.

77. Anheuser-Busch Incorporated has not met its burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the Miller Brewing Company, by using the LA mark, has engaged [1495] in trademark infringement or any other acts of unfair competition.

D. Trademark Dilution

78. As among the parties, Anheuser-Busch was the first to adopt and use the LA mark on beer sold in commerce in Illinois. See Trial Exhibits 379, 714. See also Transcript at 365-66, 467-79, 2007.

79. Based on the following factors, the court finds that the LA mark used by Anheuser-Busch on beer is not distinctive:

(a) The LA mark is not arbitrary. The court has found that LA is a merely descriptive mark which had not acquired secondary meaning in Illinois or any other state by the time the plaintiffs began to use it.

(b) Anheuser-Busch began to use the LA mark in Illinois in May of 1984, followed by Heileman in June of 1984, and by Miller in August of 1984. See [48] Trial Exhibits 379, 714. See also Transcript at 365-66, 467-79, 2007.

(c) By the time of trial, Anheuser-Busch had spent approximately $ 27,000,000.00 advertising its LA beer. See Transcript at 1019-22, 1026-51, 1086-91. See also Trial Exhibits 723, 724, 725, 728, 729, 730, 733. However, there is no evidence showing what share of this advertising was directed toward Illinois.

(d) Anheuser-Busch, Heileman and Miller are all major brewers with national reputations.

80. The LA marks used by Heileman and Miller are virtually identical to the LA mark used by Anheuser-Busch. In addition, Heileman and Miller each spent over one and one half million dollars advertising their LA beers in states including Illinois. See Transcript at 444, 460-65, 950, 2006-10, 2068. See also Trial Exhibit 399. Nevertheless, LA is a weak mark, incapable of being diluted.

81. Anheuser-Busch, Heileman and Miller are competitors and their LA beers are directly competing products. See Transcript at 1203, 1313-18, 1327, 2032, 2086. The court has found that, by using the LA mark, Heileman and Miller did not engage in trademark infringement or unfair competition.

82. Anheuser-Busch Incorporated [49] has not met its burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the G. Heileman Brewing Company, Inc. diluted the LA mark used by Anheuser-Busch.

83. Anheuser-Busch Incorporated has not met its burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the Miller Brewing Company diluted the LA mark used by Anheuser-Busch.

[*1462] E. Attempt to Monopolize

(1) Elements of Claim

SPECIFIC INTENT:

84. Although Anheuser-Busch personnel frequently spoke of plans to "preempt" the LA beer market, [17] the court finds that Heileman and Miller have failed to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that Anheuser-Busch had specific intent to control prices or to restrain competition unreasonably.

ANTICOMPETITIVE OR PREDATORY CONDUCT:

85. On April 2, 1984, Anheuser-Busch sent Heileman a letter stating [50] that:

> The March 30, 1984 edition of THE WALL STREET JOURNAL reported an announcement by G. Heileman Brewing Company that in April it will begin producing two low-alcohol beers, to be marketed as Blatz L.A. and Black Label L.A.
>
> In 1983, our subsidiary, Anheuser-Busch, Inc., adopted and used, and is continuing to use, LA as its trademark for its new brand of beer.
>
> We therefore request that the G. Heileman Brewing Company refrain from any future use of LA in connection with any of its products.

---

[17] See e.g., Transcript at 168, 179, 1097, 1105-06, 1112-13, 1133, 1138, 1165, 1169, 1177-78, 1182, 1187-88, 1193, 1195, 1199, 1319-22, 1333, 1339, 2175, 2187, 2201-02, 2221-23. The court regards these preemption statements as little more than sales promotion bluster, even though Heileman and Miller attempted to endow them with a sinister connotation throughout the trial.

> Please know that if you fail to comply strictly with this request, we will take all legal steps necessary to protect our rights in the name of our new brand of beer.

Complaint [of G. Heileman Brewing Company, Inc.] at Exhibit J. See also Transcript at 2116-17.

86. Heileman filed the instant complaint against Anheuser-Busch at 10:26 A.M. on April 18, 1984, according to the file stamp on the complaint. [18] Later that same day Anheuser-Busch filed a mirror-image lawsuit against Heileman in the United States [1496] District Court for the Southern District of Illinois. See Affidavit of Peggy L. Jones (April 26, 1984).

[51] 87. Anheuser-Busch filed a counterclaim for trademark infringement against Heileman on May 24, 1984. See Answer and Counterclaim [of Anheuser-Busch Incorporated].

88. Anheuser-Busch made no oral or written demand to Miller to cease and desist or refrain from using or making plans to use the LA mark prior to the time Miller filed its lawsuit against Anheuser-Busch. See Transcript at 2029.

89. Anheuser-Busch filed a counterclaim for trademark infringement against Miller on August 24, 1984, after Miller had begun to use the LA mark on beer sold in commerce on August 13, 1984. See Answer and Counterclaim [of Anheuser-Busch Incorporated]. See also Transcript at 2007.

90. On April 18, 1984, Anheuser-Busch filed a trademark infringement action against another competitor, the Stroh Brewery Company, which had announced plans to use the LA mark. After finding that the LA mark was suggestive and deserving of trademark protection, the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Missouri enjoined Stroh from using the LA mark in the United States and its territories and possessions. See Transcript at 368, 1057, 1305-06. See also Anheuser-Busch, Inc. v. Stroh [52] Brewery Company, 587 F. Supp. 330 (E.D. Mo.), aff'd, 750 F.2d 631 (8th Cir. 1984).

91. Based on Anheuser-Busch's vigorous prosecution of its case against Stroh and of its counterclaims in the instant lawsuits, the court finds that Anheuser-Busch was primarily motivated by a desire to obtain court-ordered relief rather than by a desire to achieve anticompetitive goals merely through the filing and maintenance of lawsuits. See Transcript at 1306.

[*1463] 92. Heileman and Miller have failed to prove by clear and convincing evidence, or even by a preponderance of the evidence, that Anheuser-Busch made its cease and desist demand to Heileman in bad faith or that it engaged in any sham litigation over the LA mark.

93. Heileman and Miller have failed to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that Anheuser-Busch, by attempting to register LA as a trademark [19] or by using judicial process, engaged in anticompetitive or predatory conduct.

DANGEROUS PROBABILITY OF SUCCESS:

94. The court finds that the United States is the geographic market relevant to the plaintiffs' attempt to monopolize claims because, at the time of trial, [53] Anheuser-Busch was distributing its LA beer in all states except Connecticut; Heileman was distributing its regional LA beers in most states; and Miller was planning to distribute its Sharp's LA nationally. Therefore, the United States is the market area in which the seller operates and purchasers can practicably turn to competitors for supplies. See Transcript at 88-89, 446, 1043. See also Trial Exhibits 379, 714.

---

[18] The court notes that Heileman's Certificate of Interest and other forms usually filed simultaneously with the Complaint were filed at 4:12 P.M. on April 18, 1984.

[19] See Findings of Fact in Part III(C)(3), above.

95. Based upon the following factors, the court finds that Heileman and Miller have not met their burden of establishing the existence of a relevant product submarket in low alcohol beer:

(a) Although there is some evidence that the beer industry recognized low alcohol beer as a distinct economic subcategory or segment, see, e.g., Transcript at 884, 2226, no consumer submarket in low alcohol beer had been established at the time of trial. A preponderance of the evidence shows that low alcohol beer was, at best, an emerging segment. See Transcript at 156-57, 280, 500, 881, 883-84, 1098-99, 1137, 1164, 1169, 1179-83, 1191-92, 1201, 1328, 1329, 1332, 1346, 2132, 2161-63, 2174-75, 2178, 2199-2202, 2221. See also Trial Exhibit 205.

(b) The production facilities, [54] customers, pricing structure, and channels of distribution are the same for low alcohol beer as for many other types of beer. See Transcript at 61, 94-96, 103-04, 342, 420-22, 442-43, 484-86, 723-25, 728-30, 733, 1311-19, 2084-85, 2116. See also Trial Exhibit 835.

(c) Other beverages, which contain less alcohol than regular beer or no alcohol, are close substitutes for low alcohol beer. See Transcript at 99, 2034-35, 2117-20.

(d) Light beer [20] is reasonably interchangeable with LA beer. Light and LA are both sold at premium retail prices. See Transcript at 1311, 1329. Both products are intended to be used to reduce or moderate unwanted effects of drinking regular beer. [1497] See Transcript at 293-94, 999-1001, 1111, 1157. Most, if not all, light beers contain less alcohol than regular beers, even though they may not contain as little alcohol as low alcohol beers. Most low alcohol beers contain fewer calories than regular beers. See Transcript at 50-51, 102, 245, 297, 411-12, 435, 533-34, 1329-30, 2063-69, 2073-74, 2122, 2152, 2178, 2193, 2228. But see Transcript at 297, 883. [55]

(e) Low alcohol beer is not so unique or dominant in the market that there is no practical substitute for it. See Transcript at 99, 1318, 2034-35.

96. Based on the findings numbered 95(a)-(e) above, the court finds that, at a minimum, the relevant product market consists of all beers containing less alcohol than regular beer.

97. Based on the following factors, the court finds that it was not possible for Anheuser-Busch to achieve the monopoly power to control prices or exclude competition from the relevant market at the time [*1464] the alleged anticompetitive events occurred:

(a) At the time of trial Anheuser-Busch had sold approximately 200,000 barrels of LA beer, while Heileman has sold approximately 60,000 barrels of its L.A. beers. See Transcript at 1051-52, 2068. No sales figures were presented for Miller's low alcohol beer sales, however Miller had captured a 52-55% share of the light beer market. See Transcript at 2210. See also Transcript at 60, 286, 438. At the time of trial light beer sales comprised twenty percent of the total beer market. See Transcript at 286, 2199. Low alcohol beer sales were estimated to comprise less than one percent of total beer sales. [56] See Transcript at 2199. Other competitors were selling beer with less alcohol than regular beer, but the record contains no evidence of their actual numbers or market shares. See Transcript at 380-85, 890-91, 1056-58. See also Trial Exhibits 734, 735.
(b) The record contains no evidence of Anheuser-Busch's capacity to control prices.
(c) Although the Stroh Brewing Company was enjoined from using the LA mark, there is no evidence that Stroh or any other competitor was excluded from the relevant market or from selling beer with a low alcoholic content.

(2) Liability

---

[20] Light beer is a low calorie beer. See Transcript at 50-51, 157, 423. Light beer is a recognized segment of the beer industry among consumers. See Transcript at 51, 279, 435, 882, 1164. Heileman and Anheuser-Busch positioned their LA beers to compete with Miller LITE. See Transcript at 244-45, 2064-65, 2075, 2089-92, 2193. See also Trial Exhibit 301.

98. The G. Heileman Brewing Company, Inc. has not met its burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that it suffered an antitrust injury stemming from any predatory or anticompetitive conduct of Anheuser-Busch Incorporated or that Anheuser-Busch attempted to monopolize any relevant market of the beer industry by attempting to register trademarks or by filing or threatening to file lawsuits asserting trademark rights in the name "LA."

99. The Miller Brewing Company has not met its burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that it suffered an antitrust injury stemming from any predatory [57] or anticompetitive conduct of Anheuser-Busch Incorporated or that Anheuser-Busch attempted to monopolize any relevant market of the beer industry by attempting to register trademarks or by filing or threatening to file lawsuits asserting rights in the name "LA."

F. Attorney Fees

100. Although Heileman and Miller have prevailed on their claims for declaratory relief, they have failed to meet their burden of proving by clear and convincing evidence or by a preponderance of the evidence that these cases involve exceptional circumstances. Anheuser-Busch has not engaged in misconduct during the course of these lawsuits, or fraud, or vexatious or frivolous litigation.

VI. CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

A. Jurisdiction

1. This court has diversity jurisdiction over the state statutory claims and the common-law claims in these consolidated cases in that the plaintiffs and the defendant are citizens of different states and the amounts in controversy are more than $ 10,000.00. See 28 U.S.C. § 1332(a) & (c).

2. The court has personal jurisdiction over the parties to these actions in that they have been served pursuant to Wisconsin law, have appeared, and have submitted to the jurisdiction [58] of this court. See U.S. Const. amends. V & XIV; Wis. Stat. § 801.05 (1985-1986).

3. This court has jurisdiction over the claims and counterclaims for unfair competition (including trademark infringement) arising under 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a) and the common law. See 15 U.S.C.A. § 1121 (West Supp. 1987); 28 U.S.C. § 1332(a) & (c).

4. Because Heileman and Miller have established that they compete with Anheuser-Busch in the sale of beer and that, at the time they filed their complaints, they were likely to use the challenged LA mark, they have standing to raise their unfair competition claims under section 43 (a) of the Lanham Trademark Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a), under [1498] the test set forth in Chromium Industries, Inc. v. Mirror Polishing [*1465] & Plating Company, Inc., 448 F. Supp. 544, 555 (N.D. Ill. 1978). See also Exxon Corporation v. Humble Exploration Company, Inc., 695 F.2d 96, 103 n.10 (5th Cir. 1983); Johnson & Johnson v. Carter-Wallace, Inc., 631 F.2d 186, 189 (2d Cir. 1980).

5. Because none of the parties have perfected federal registration of the LA mark, the parties do not have standing to seek relief under sections 1111, 1114, 1116, 1117, 1118, 1119 or 1120 of the Federal [59] Trademark Act of 1946, as amended, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1051-1127. [21]

6. The court has jurisdiction over the plaintiffs' claims for relief for violations of section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. See 15 U.S.C. §§ 15 & 26; 28 U.S.C. § 1337.

B. UNFAIR COMPETITION

[21] The Federal Trademark Act of 1946 is popularly known as the Lanham Trademark Act. This is the name which will be used throughout this opinion.

7. Section 43 (a) of the Lanham Trademark Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a), forbids the use of false designations of origin and false descriptions or representations in the advertising and sale of goods and services. The primary purpose of the Act is to eliminate deceitful practices in interstate commerce involving the misuse of trademarks. [22] Section 43 (a) provides in relevant part that:

> HN1[] (a) Any person who shall affix, apply, or annex, or use in connection with any goods or services, . . . a false designation of origin, or any false description or representation, including words or other symbols tending falsely to describe or represent the same, and shall cause such goods or services to enter into commerce, . . . shall be liable to a civil action by . . . any person who believes [60] that he is or is likely to be damaged by the use of any such false description or representation.

15 U.S.C. § 1125(a).

8. HN3[] Section 43 (a) of the Lanham Trademark Act and the common law of unfair competition encompass causes of action for trademark infringement as well as a wide range of causes of action for deceitful practices involving the misuse of trademarks. See W.H. Brady Company v. Lem Products, Inc., 659 F. Supp. 1355, 1364 (N.D. Ill. 1987). The same legal standards are applied to all types of unfair competition claims brought under either federal or state law. See A.J. Canfield Company v. Concord Beverage Company, 629 F. Supp. 200, 206 (E.D. Pa. 1985), aff'd sub nom. A.J. Canfield Company v. Honickman, [61] 808 F.2d 291 (3d Cir. 1986).

9. HN4[] To prevail on a claim of unfair competition under section 43 (a) of the Lanham Trademark Act based on an unregistered trademark, the claimant must prove:

> (a.) that it was the first to adopt and use the mark in commerce;
> (b.) that the trademark is valid, in other words, distinctive enough to warrant protection; the trademark must be found to be arbitrary or suggestive or it may be merely descriptive, if it has developed a secondary meaning linking the product with its source in the minds of the consuming public;
> (c.) that there is likelihood of confusion on the part of the consuming public.

See W.H. Brady Company v. Lem Products, Inc., 659 F. Supp. 1355, 1364-65 (N.D. Ill. 1987); Pedi-Care, Inc. v. Pedi-A-Care Nursing, Inc., 656 F. Supp. 449, 453 (D.N.J. 1987); Brooks Shoe Manufacturing Company, Inc. v. Suave Shoe Corporation, 533 F. Supp. 75, 77 (S.D. Fla. 1981), aff'd, 716 F.2d 854 (11th Cir. 1983).

10. HN5[] The quantum of proof necessary to establish a claim of unfair competition is a preponderance of the evidence. See Keebler Company v. Rovira Biscuit Corporation, 624 F.2d 366, 373 (1st Cir. 1980); [*1466] Big O Tire Dealers, Inc. v. [62] Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, 561 F.2d 1365, 1370 (10th Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1052, 54 L. Ed. 2d 805, 98 S. Ct. 905 (1978).

(1) Appropriation and Use

11. HN6[] In the case of a claimant seeking relief for the alleged infringement of an unregistered mark, the burden is upon the claimant to establish its right to the exclusive use of the mark. See Reese Publishing Company, [1499] Inc. v. Hampton International Communications, Inc., 620 F.2d 7, 11 (2d Cir. 1980). This burden is carried by showing that the claimant has acquired the ownership of the unregistered mark by the appropriation and use of the mark in commerce prior in time to the occurrence of the use of the mark by the claimed infringer. See United Drug Company v. Theodore Rectanus Company, 248 U.S. 90, 97, 63 L. Ed. 141, 39 S. Ct. 48 (1918); Keebler Company v. Rovira Biscuit Corporation, 624 F.2d 366, 373 (1st Cir. 1980); Kardex Systems, Inc. v. Sistemco N.V., 583 F. Supp. 803, 810 (D. Me. 1984).

---

[22] HN2[] The term "trademark" includes any word, name, symbol, or device or any combination thereof adopted and used by a manufacturer or merchant to identify and distinguish his goods, including a unique product, from those manufactured or sold by others and to indicate the source of the goods, even if that source is unknown. See 15 U.S.C.A. § 1127 (1982 West & Supp. 1987). See also Eagle Snacks, Inc. v. Nabisco Brands, Inc., 625 F. Supp. 571, 579 (D.N.J. 1985).

12. HN7[] The common-law right to a trademark is based upon prior use, that is, the first use of the mark in connection with a peculiar line of business. Registration does not create the underlying right in a trademark. That right which accrues from the use of a particular [63] name or symbol is essentially a common-law property right. See Volkswagenwerk Aktiengesellschaft v. Wheeler, 814 F.2d 812, 815-16 (1st Cir. 1987); Pedi-Care, Inc. v. Pedi-A-Care Nursing, Inc., 656 F. Supp. 449, 454 (D.N.J. 1987); Caesars World, Inc. v. Caesars Palace, 490 F. Supp. 818, 822 (D.N.J. 1980).

13. HN8[] Refusal by the United States Patent and Trademark Office to register a mark does not preclude the owner of the mark from its right to use it. See Volkswagenwerk Aktiengesellschaft v. Wheeler, 814 F.2d 812, 819 (1st Cir. 1987).

14. HN9[] Common-law trademark rights are acquired on a state-by-state basis. See SODIMA v. International Yogurt Company, Inc., 662 F. Supp. 839, 853 & n.8 (D.Or. 1987).

(2) Strength of Mark

15. HN10[] When a mark is not registered, there is no presumption of the mark's validity and the claimant has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that its mark is protectible. See Gimix, Inc. v. J S & A Group, Inc., 699 F.2d 901, 907-08 (7th Cir. 1983); National Conference of Bar Examiners v. Multistate Legal Studies, Inc., 692 F.2d 478, 488 (7th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 814, 78 L. Ed. 2d 83, 104 S. Ct. 69 (1983); Reese Publishing Company v. [64] Hampton International Communications, Inc., 620 F.2d 7, 11 (2d Cir. 1980); Merritt Forbes & Company, Inc. v. Newman Investment Securities, Inc., 604 F. Supp. 943, 954 (S.D.N.Y. 1985).

16. HN11[] Courts have identified four categories of trademark distinctiveness or strength. Arrayed in an ascending order which roughly reflects their eligibility to trademark status and the degree of protection accorded, these classes are: (1) generic or common descriptive, (2) merely descriptive, (3) suggestive, and (4) arbitrary or fanciful. See Abercrombie & Fitch Company v. Hunting World, Inc., 537 F.2d 4, 9 (2d Cir. 1976).

GENERIC OR COMMON DESCRIPTIVE:

17. HN12[] A generic term is one that refers, or has come to be understood as referring, to the genus of which the particular product is a species. See Park 'n Fly, Inc. v. Dollar Park and Fly, Inc., 469 U.S. 189, 193-94, 83 L. Ed. 2d 582, 105 S. Ct. 658 (1985); Abercrombie & Fitch Company v. Hunting World, Inc., 537 F.2d 4, 9 (2d Cir. 1976). A corollary verbal formulation of the meaning underlying the word "generic" is the phrase "the common descriptive name" as a designation for a product. Neither designation affords trademark protection. This is true even though the name [65] acquires a secondary meaning by becoming identified with a particular producer. See National Conference of Bar [*1467] Examiners v. Multistate Legal Studies, Inc., 692 F.2d 478, 487 (7th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 814, 78 L. Ed. 2d 83, 104 S. Ct. 69 (1983).

18. HN13[] The test for whether a term is generic is whether its primary significance in the minds of the consuming public is a product category or genus rather than a product's source or producer. See Kellogg Company v. National Biscuit Company, 305 U.S. 111, 118, 83 L. Ed. 73, 59 S. Ct. 109 (1938); Surgicenters of America, Inc. v. Medical Dental Surgeries, Company, 601 F.2d 1011, 1016 (9th Cir. 1979); Bayer Company, Inc. v. United Drug Company, 272 F. 505, 509 (S.D.N.Y. 1921).

19. Anheuser-Busch, as claimant to protection for an unregistered mark, bears the burden of proving that "LA" is not generic. See Technical Publishing Company v. Lebhar-Friedman, Inc., 729 F.2d 1136, 1139 (7th Cir. 1984); National Conference of Bar Examiners v. Multistate Legal Studies, Inc., 692 F.2d 478, 488 (7th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 814, 78 L. Ed. 2d 83, 104 S. Ct. 69 (1983). [1500]

MERELY DESCRIPTIVE:

20. HN14[] A merely descriptive term specifically describes a characteristic, quality or ingredient of an article [66] of trade, as, for example, its color, odor, function, dimension, or ingredients. See Park 'n Fly, Inc. v. Dollar

Park and Fly, Inc., 469 U.S. 189, 193-94, 83 L. Ed. 2d 582, 105 S. Ct. 658 (1985); Henri's Food Products Company, Inc. v. Tasty Snacks, Inc., 817 F.2d 1303, 1306 (7th Cir. 1987); Soweco, Inc. v. Shell Oil Company, 617 F.2d 1178, 1183 (5th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 981, 67 L. Ed. 2d 816, 101 S. Ct. 1516 (1981); Union Carbide Corporation v. Ever-Ready, Inc., 531 F.2d 366, 378 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 830, 97 S. Ct. 91, 50 L. Ed. 2d 94 (1976).

21. HN15[] The descriptiveness of a mark, when applied to the goods involved, is to be determined from the standpoint of the average prospective purchaser. See In re Omaha National Corporation, 819 F.2d 1117, 1119 (Fed. Cir. 1987); Application of Abcor Development Corporation, 588 F.2d 811, 814 (C.C.P.A. 1978); Bayer Company, Inc. v. United Drug Company, 272 F. 505, 509 (S.D.N.Y. 1921). What the designation means to those in the industry is not determinative. See Big O Tire Dealers v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, 561 F.2d 1365, 1369 (10th Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1052, 54 L. Ed. 2d 805, 98 S. Ct. 905 (1978).

22. Evidence of the public's understanding of a term may be obtained from any competent [67] source, such as purchaser testimony, consumer surveys, listings in dictionaries, trade journals, newspapers, and other publications. See In re Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner and Smith, Inc., 828 F.2d 1567, 1570 (Fed. Cir. 1987). Evidence of the context in which a mark is used on labels, packages, or in advertising material directed to the goods is also probative of the reaction of prospective purchasers to the mark. See Application of Abcor Development Corporation, 588 F.2d 811, 814 (C.C.P.A. 1978).

23. HN16[] A mark which is merely descriptive can, by acquiring a secondary meaning, become a valid trademark. See Miller Brewing Company v. G. Heileman Brewing Company, Inc., 561 F.2d 75, 79 (7th Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1025, 54 L. Ed. 2d 772, 98 S. Ct. 751 (1978); Union Carbide Corporation v. Ever-Ready, Inc., 531 F.2d 366, 380 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 830, 97 S. Ct. 91, 50 L. Ed. 2d 94 (1976).

24. HN17[] A mark has acquired secondary meaning when it has been used so long and so exclusively by one producer with reference to its article that, in that trade and to that branch of the purchasing public, the word or phrase has come to mean that the article was the first producer's trademark. See G & C Merriam Company v. [68] Saalfield, 198 F. 369 (6th Cir. 1912), cert. denied, 243 U.S. 651, 61 L. Ed. 947, 37 S. Ct. 478 (1917). See also Gimix, Inc. v. JS & A Group, Inc., 699 F.2d 901, 907 (7th Cir. 1983); Union Carbide Corporation v. Ever-Ready, Inc., 531 F.2d 366, 380 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 830, 97 S. Ct. 91, 50 L. Ed. 2d 94 (1976).

[*1468] 25. HN18[] Proof of secondary meaning entails rigorous evidentiary requirements and the party seeking to prove secondary meaning has a "heavy" burden of showing that the efforts undertaken to associate the product with one source have been effective. See 20 th Century Wear v. Sanmark-Stardust, Inc., 815 F.2d 8, 10 (2d Cir. 1987); Eagle Snacks, Inc. v. Nabisco Brands, Inc., 625 F. Supp. 571, 582 (D.N.J. 1985).

26. HN19[] Secondary meaning can be proved by direct or circumstantial evidence. The variables to be considered in determining whether a mark has secondary meaning include:

1. the duration, continuity, and exclusive use of the mark;

2. the efforts made in the direction of promoting a conscious connection, in the public's mind, between the mark and a particular source of origin, including the extent of advertising and promotion and the amount of money spent thereon;

3. the volume of sales, including figures [69] showing sales of the claimant's product or the number of people who have consumed it;

4. identification of the parties' respective markets;

5. direct evidence of public recognition in the the form of consumer testimony and consumer surveys.

See Union Carbide Corporation v. Ever-Ready, Inc., 531 F.2d 366, 380 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 830, 97 S. Ct. 91, 50 L. Ed. 2d 94 (1976); Sears, Roebuck and Company v. Sears Financial Network, 576 F. Supp. 857, 862

(D.D.C. 1983); Brooks Shoe Manufacturing Company, Inc. v. Suave Shoe Corporation, 533 F. Supp. 75, 78 (S.D. Fla. 1981), aff'd, 716 F.2d 854 (11th Cir. 1983). [1501]

27. To establish secondary meaning it is not necessary for the public to be aware of the name of the manufacturer from which a product emanates. It is sufficient if the public is aware that the product comes from a single, though anonymous, source. See Union Carbide Corporation v. Ever-Ready, Inc., 531 F.2d 366, 380 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 830, 97 S. Ct. 91, 50 L. Ed. 2d 94 (1976).

28. Anheuser-Busch has the burden of proving that secondary meaning existed at the time Heileman and Miller commenced using the LA mark in commerce. See 20 th Century Wear, Inc. v. Sanmark-Stardust, Inc., 747 [70] F.2d 81, 90 (2d Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1052, 84 L. Ed. 2d 818, 105 S. Ct. 1755 (1985); Scott Paper Company v. Scott's Liquid Gold, Inc., 589 F.2d 1225, 1231 (3d Cir. 1978).

SUGGESTIVE:

29. HN20[] A suggestive term suggests rather than describes an ingredient or characteristic of the goods and requires the observer or listener to use imagination and perception to determine the nature of the goods. Such a term can be protected without proof of a secondary meaning. See Miller Brewing Company v. G. Heileman Brewing Company, 561 F.2d 75, 79 (7th Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1025, 54 L. Ed. 2d 772, 98 S. Ct. 751 (1978); Eagle Snacks, Inc. v. Nabisco Brands, Inc., 625 F. Supp. 571, 580 (D.N.J. 1985).

ARBITRARY OR FANCIFUL:

30. HN21[] Arbitrary or fanciful marks are designated as "strong marks." They may be coined words or words that are common in linguistic usage but which, when used with the products they represent, neither suggest nor describe any characteristic of those goods. Arbitrary or fanciful marks are entitled to protection against all users and are not vulnerable to possible attack as being merely descriptive. See Miller Brewing Company v. G. Heileman Brewing Company, 561 F.2d 75, 79 (7th Cir. 1977), cert. [71] denied, 434 U.S. 1025, 98 S. Ct. 751, 54 L. Ed. 2d 772 (1978); Tisch Hotels, Inc. v. Americana Inn, 350 F.2d 609, 611 (7th Cir. 1965); Eagle Snacks, Inc. v. Nabisco Brands, Inc., 625 F. Supp. 571, 580 (D.N.J. 1985); Exxon Corporation v. Humble Exploration Company, 524 F. Supp. 450, 459-60 (N.D. Tex. 1981) (name "Humble" as applied to oil company found [*1469] to be "arbitrary"), aff'd in relevant part, 695 F.2d 96 (5th Cir. 1983).

31. In prior litigation in which Anheuser-Busch, Inc. was the plaintiff, the federal district court in the Eastern District of Missouri found that the mark "LA" is not an arbitrary or fanciful mark when affixed to a can or bottle of beer. See Anheuser-Busch, Inc. v. Stroh Brewery Company, 587 F. Supp. 330, 335 (W.D. Mo.), aff'd, 750 F.2d 631 (8th Cir. 1984). Therefore, as a matter of law the doctrine of nonmutual collateral estoppel precludes Anheuser-Busch, Inc. from relitigating the issue of whether "LA" is an arbitrary or fanciful mark entitled to protection against all users. See Blonder-Tongue Laboratories, Inc. v. University of Illinois Foundation, 402 U.S. 313, 332-34, 28 L. Ed. 2d 788, 91 S. Ct. 1434 (1971); Miller Brewing Company v. Falstaff Brewing Corporation, 655 F.2d 5, 9 (1st Cir. [72] 1981); Miller Brewing Company v. Jos. Schlitz Brewing Company, 605 F.2d 990, 992-96 (7th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1102, 62 L. Ed. 2d 787, 100 S. Ct. 1067 (1980).

VALIDITY:

32. HN22[] Under trademark law an abbreviation, like any other unregistered mark, will only be protected if it has acquired secondary meaning. See Continental Corrugated Container Corporation v. Continental Group, Inc., 462 F. Supp. 200, 204 (S.D.N.Y. 1978).

33. Letters may be valid trademarks if they are entirely fanciful and arbitrary, if they have no connection with the article or any of its features, or if they are designed solely, or at least primarily, to indicate origin. They are not valid if they describe or refer to the article or its characteristics. See Nature's Bounty, Inc. v. Basic Organics, 432 F. Supp. 546, 551 (E.D.N.Y. 1977) (term "B-100" held merely descriptive as applied to vitamins).

34. Having found that "LA" (or "L.A.") is a merely descriptive mark which has not acquired secondary meaning at any time relevant to the claims asserted in these actions, the court concludes as a matter of law that "LA" (with out without periods) is not a valid, legally protectible trademark.

(3) Likelihood of Confusion

[73] 35. HN23[] If a senior user of a mark cannot demonstrate that the mark is distinctive enough to warrant protection, the senior user [1502] can still maintain a claim under section 43 (a) of the Lanham Trademark Act if there is a likelihood of consumer confusion due to the failure of the junior user to identify itself adequately as the source of the product. See Miller Brewing Company v. Jos. Schlitz Brewing Company, 605 F.2d 990, 997 (7th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1102, 62 L. Ed. 2d 787, 100 S. Ct. 1067 (1980). See also Liquid Controls Corporation v. Liquid Control Corporation, 802 F.2d 934, 939-41 (7th Cir. 1986); Blau Plumbing, Inc. v. S.0.S. Fix-It, Inc., 781 F.2d 604, 610 (7th Cir. 1986); Technical Publishing Company v. Lebhar-Friedman, Inc., 729 F.2d 1136, 1142 (7th Cir. 1984); W.H. Brady Company v. LEM Products, Inc., 659 F. Supp. 1355, 1365-55 (N.D. Ill. 1987).

36. HN24[] The claimant has the burden of proving likelihood of confusion by a preponderance of the evidence. See E.I. DuPont de Nemours and Company v. Yoshida International, Inc., 393 F. Supp. 502, 510 n.4 (E.D.N.Y. 1975). HN25[] When a mark is recently adopted and is not registered, doubts about the likelihood of confusion are resolved against [74] the party claiming exclusive rights to the mark. See AMF Incorporated v. Sleekcraft Boats, 599 F.2d 341, 352 n.13 (9th Cir. 1979).

37. HN26[] Likelihood of confusion exists when consumers viewing the mark would probably assume that the product or service it represents is associated with the source of a different product or service identified by a similar mark. See James Burrough Ltd. v. Sign of the Beefeater, Inc., 540 F.2d 266, 275 (7th Cir. 1976).

38. HN27[] Whether or not a likelihood of confusion exists must be determined from the viewpoint of the general public and without regard to any particular geographic [*1470] area. See Tisch Hotels, Inc. v. Americana Inn, 350 F.2d 609, 614 n.6 (7th Cir. 1965).

39. HN28[] Although secondary meaning must be shown to exist at the time the second user commences using the allegedly infringing mark, there is no such limitation on proving likelihood of confusion. See Amstar Corporation v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 615 F.2d 252, 259 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 899, 66 L. Ed. 2d 129, 101 S. Ct. 268 (1980); Brooks Shoe Manufacturing Company, Inc. v. Suave Shoe Corporation, 533 F. Supp. 75, 77-78 n.4 (S.D. Fla. 1981), aff'd, 716 F.2d 854 (11th Cir. 1983).

40. HN29[] The factors to be [75] considered in determining whether there is a likelihood of confusion are:

1. the degree of similarity between the owner's mark and the alleged infringing mark;

2. the strength of the owner's mark;

3. whether the goods are marketed through the same channels of trade and advertised through the same media;

4. the extent to which the targets of the parties' sales efforts are the same;

5. the relationship of the goods in the minds of the public because of the similarity of function;

6. the price of the goods and other factors indicative of the care and attention expected of consumers when making a purchase;

7. the intent of the defendant in adopting the mark;

8. the length of time the defendant has used the mark without evidence of actual confusion arising;

9. the evidence of actual confusion;

10. other facts suggesting that the consuming public might expect the prior owner to manufacture a product in the defendant's market.

See Ziebart International Corporation v. After Market Associates, Inc., 802 F.2d 220, 226 (7th Cir. 1986); Scott Paper Company v. Scott's Liquid Gold, Inc., 589 F.2d 1225, 1229 (3d Cir. 1978); Caesars World, Inc. v. Caesar's Palace, 490 F. Supp. 818, [76] 823-24 (D.N.J. 1980).

41. No one factor is conclusive, nor are the presence of all factors necessary. See Schmidt v. Honeysweet Hams, Inc., 656 F. Supp. 92, 96 (N.D. Ga. 1986). However, the similarity of the marks, the intent of the claimed infringers, and evidence of actual confusion are the "more important" factors. See Ziebart International Corporation v. After Market Associates, Inc., 802 F.2d 220, 226 (7th Cir. 1986).

42. HN30[] Knowledge of prior use alone does not in itself constitute a showing of bad faith. See E.R. Squibb & Sons, Inc. v. Cooper Laboratories, Inc., 536 F. Supp. 523, 532 (S.D.N.Y. 1982). Moreover, selecting a mark because it conveys the product's purpose or characteristics has been held to demonstrate good faith. See E.S. Originals, Inc. v. Stride Rite Corporation, 656 F. Supp. 484, 490 (S.D.N.Y. 1987).

43. The use of a strong house mark virtually precludes confusion between similar [1503] marks. See Vitarroz Corporation v. Borden, Inc., 644 F.2d 960, 968-69 (2d Cir. 1981); McGregor-Doniger Inc. v. Drizzle Inc., 599 F.2d 1126, 1133-34 (2d Cir. 1979); E.S. Originals Inc. v. Stride Rite Corporation, 656 F. Supp. 484, 488 (S.D.N.Y. 1987); Victory [77] Pipe Craftsmen, Inc. v. Faberge, Inc., 582 F. Supp. 551, 557 (N.D. Ill. 1984); Uniroyal, Inc. v. Kinney Shoe Corporation, 453 F. Supp. 1352, 1355-56 (S.D.N.Y. 1978).

(4) Common Law of Wisconsin

44. The Wisconsin Supreme Court has adopted the elements of the tort of unfair competition found in the Restatement (Second) of Torts §§ 715-17 (Tent. Draft No. 8, 1963) [23] as the common law of Wisconsin. [*1471] See generally First Wisconsin National Bank of Milwaukee v. Wichman, 85 Wis. 2d 54, 63, 270 N.W.2d 168 (1978). The Restatement takes the position that adoption and use of a trademark gives rise to the right to bring an action for infringement. However mere use of a trademark does not lead automatically to exclusive rights in that name. Rather, to be entitled to prevent others from using a name, the claimant must first prove that it is a valid technical, or strong, mark or that it is a nontechnical mark which has acquired secondary meaning. Then, the claimant must show that the effect of the use has been to identify the particular product and to distinguish it from others and that the alleged infringer's use is likely to cause confusion and deception. See First [78] Wisconsin National Bank of Milwaukee, 85 Wis.2d at 62-63, 270 N.W.2d at 172, citing Restatement (Second) of Torts § 17 comment a (Tent. Draft No. 8, 1963). See also Blue Ribbon Feed Company, Inc. v. Farmers Union Central Exchange, Inc., 731 F.2d 415, 418 (7th Cir. 1984); Hirsch v. S.C. Johnson & Son, Inc., 90 Wis. 2d 379, 399-403, 280 N.W.2d 129 (1979).

45. HN31[] Section 717 of the Restatement (Second) of Torts provides that one infringes a trademark if:

> without a privilege to do so, he uses on or in connection with his goods, services or business a designation which so resembles the other's previously used mark or trade name as to [79] be likely to > (a) cause confusion, mistake or deception, or > (b) cause prospective purchasers to believe that

---

[23] The Restatement (Second) of Torts in its final form does not have sections dealing with the fields of unfair competition and trade regulation. The American Law Institute takes the position that these fields have evolved into bodies of law in their own right, no longer dependent upon tort law. Nevertheless, the Restatement test continues to be followed by Wisconsin's and other states' courts. See American Association for the Advancement of Science v. Hearst Corporation, 498 F. Supp. 244, 259 n.5 (D.D.C. 1980).

(i) the actor's goods or services are those of the other, or
(ii) the actor's goods or services emanate from the same source as the other's goods or services, or
(iii) the actor's goods or services are approved or sponsored by the other, or
(iv) the actor's business is the business of, or is in some manner associated or connected with, the other, even though the actor does not use the designation with a purpose to deceive.

Restatement (Second) of Torts § 717 (Tent. Draft No. 8, 1963).

46. HN32[] Under Wisconsin law a claimant can show infringement without showing that the trademark has previously been identified with a product. It is sufficient to show that the trademark was one used to identify the claimant's product and that the use of the name by another caused confusion or mistake in respect to the sponsorship of the goods. See Hirsch v. S.C. Johnson & Son, Inc., 90 Wis. 2d 379, 401-02, 280 N.W.2d 129, (1979).

(5) Liability

47. Having found that the LA mark is not distinctive and that there is insufficient evidence of a likelihood of consumer confusion between the [80] Heileman and Anheuser-Busch LA beers, the court concludes that the G. Heileman Brewing Company, Inc. is not liable to Anheuser-Busch Incorporated for unfair competition by using the LA mark in violation of section [1504] 43 (a) of the Lanham Trademark Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a), the law of Wisconsin, or common law.

48. Having found that the LA mark is not distinctive and that there is insufficient evidence of a likelihood of consumer confusion between the Miller and Anheuser-Busch LA beers, the court concludes that the Miller Brewing Company is not liable to Anheuser-Busch Incorporated for unfair competition by using the LA mark in violation of section 43 (a) of the Lanham Trademark Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a), or common law.

C. Trademark Dilution

49. The Illinois Anti-Dilution Act, Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 140, § 22 provides in pertinent part that:

> HN33[] every person . . . adopting and using a mark [or] trade name, . . . may proceed [*1472] by suit, and the circuit court shall grant injunctions, to enjoin subsequent use by another of the same or any similar mark [or] trade name . . . if there exists a likelihood of injury to business reputation or of dilution of the distinctive quality of the mark [or] trade [81] name . . . of the prior user notwithstanding the absence of competition between the parties or of confusion as to the source of goods or services.

Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 140, § 22.

50. Under the Illinois Anti-Dilution Act, the relevant factors to be considered by the court are: (1) the distinctiveness of the mark, and (2) whether the mark is being diluted. See Hyatt Corporation v. Hyatt Legal Services, 736 F.2d 1153, 1157 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1019, 83 L. Ed. 2d 361, 105 S. Ct. 434 (1984). See also McGraw-Edison Company v. Walt Disney Productions, 787 F.2d 1163, 1174 (7th Cir. 1986); W.H. Brady Company v. LEM Products, Inc., 659 F. Supp. 1355, 1368 (N.D. Ill. 1987); Source Services Corporation v. Source Telecomputing Corporation, 635 F. Supp. 600, 615 (N.D. Ill. 1986).

51. HN34[] In determining the distinctiveness of a trademark, the court looks to whether the mark is arbitrary, the length of time the first user has employed the mark, the scope of the first user's advertising, the nature and extent of the first user's business, and the scope of the first user's reputation. See Hyatt Corporation v. Hyatt Legal Services, 736 F.2d 1153, 1158 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1019, 83 L. Ed. 2d 361, 105 S. Ct. 434 (1984); [82] W.H. Brady Company v. LEM Products, Inc., 659 F. Supp. 1355, 1368 (N.D. Ill. 1987).

52. HN35[] In determining whether a subsequent user has diluted an alleged mark, the court should look to the similarity of the marks and the extent of the subsequent user's marketing efforts. See Hyatt Corporation v. Hyatt

Legal Services, 736 F.2d 1153, 1158 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1019, 83 L. Ed. 2d 361, 105 S. Ct. 434 (1984); W.H. Brady Company v. LEM Products, Inc., 659 F. Supp. 1355, 1368 (N.D. Ill. 1987).

53. The protections of the Illinois Anti-Dilution Statute are unavailable to a competitor which cannot obtain relief under the laws of trademark infringement or unfair competition. See EZ Loader Boat Trailers, Inc. v. Cox Trailers, Inc., 746 F.2d 375, 380 (7th Cir. 1984), citing Filter Dynamics International, Inc. v. Astron Battery, Inc., 19 Ill. App. 3d 299, 314-15, 311 N.E.2d 386, 398-99 (1974); Victory Pipe Craftsmen, Inc. v. Faberge, Inc., 582 F. Supp. 551, 559 (N.D. Ill. 1984).

54. Having found that the LA mark is not distinctive and that, by using the LA mark, Heileman did not engage in trademark infringement or unfair competition, the court concludes that the G. Heileman Brewing Company, [83] Inc. is not liable to Anheuser-Busch Incorporated for trademark dilution under the Illinois Anti-Dilution Act, Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 140, § 22.

55. Having found that the LA mark is not distinctive and that, by using the LA mark, Miller did not engage in trademark infringement or unfair competition, the court concludes that the Miller Brewing Company is not liable to Anheuser-Busch Incorporated for trademark dilution under the Illinois Anti-Dilution Act, Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 140, § 22.

D. Attempt to Monopolize

56. HN36[] Under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, no person may "monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 2.

57. HN37[] A company attempts to monopolize in violation of Section 2 when it engages in a course of conduct which would, if successful, accomplish monopolization, and which, though falling short, so closely approaches monopolization as to create a dangerous probability of it. See Lektro-Vend Corporation v. Vendo Company, 660 F.2d 255, 269-70 (7th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 921, 71 L. Ed. 2d 461, 102 S. Ct. 1277 (1982).

[*1473] (1) Elements [84] of Claims

58. HN38[] In order to prove an attempt to monopolize, a plaintiff must prove by a preponderance of the evidence: (1) a specific intent to achieve a monopoly in a relevant market; (2) predatory or anticompetitive conduct in furtherance of the purpose to monopolize; and (3) a dangerous probability of success in the [1505] relevant market. See Lektro-Vend Corporation v. Vendo Company, 660 F.2d 255, 270 (7th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 921, 71 L. Ed. 2d 461, 102 S. Ct. 1277 (1982); Chillicothe Sand & Gravel Company v. Martin Marietta Corporation, 615 F.2d 427, 430 (7th Cir. 1980). These elements are conjunctive. See Conoco, Inc. v. Inman Oil Company, Inc., 774 F.2d 895, 906 (8th Cir. 1985).

59. HN39[] The test to be applied in determining whether a trademark is being unlawfully used to confer a monopoly in a certain product is the same as in any other case wherein an unlawful monopoly, or attempt to monopolize, is alleged under Section 2 of the Sherman Act. There is a violation of that provision only if the defendant's actions have led to or resulted in a dangerous probability that it will gain a monopoly over the relevant market. See Car-Freshner Corporation v. Auto Aid Manufacturing Corporation, 438 F. [85] Supp. 82, 87 (N.D.N.Y. 1977).

60. In general, the power that manufacturers have over their trademarked products is not the power that makes an illegal monopoly. See United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Company, 351 U.S. 377, 393, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 (1956).

SPECIFIC INTENT:

61. HN40[] In the context of an attempted monopoly claim, specific intent refers not to the defendant's general intent to do a particular act, but to an overall anticompetitive intent expressed through its actions to destroy competition and to build monopoly. See Times-Picayune Publishing Company v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 626, 97 L. Ed. 1277, 73 S. Ct. 872 (1953).

62. HN41[] The specific intent element requires proof that the defendant acted with the purpose of achieving monopoly power in the relevant market. Specific intent does not merely mean intent to prevail over one's rivals; it goes beyond that to include an intent to control prices or to restrain competition unreasonably. See Aspen Skiing Company v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corporation, 472 U.S. 585, 600-05, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, 105 S. Ct. 2847 (1985); United States v. Empire Gas Corporation, 537 F.2d 296, 302 (8th Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1122, 51 L. Ed. 2d 572, 97 S. Ct. 1158 (1977).

63. Specific intent can be proven by direct evidence of statements [86] made by responsible officers or employees of the defendant or it can be inferred indirectly from the defendant's per se unlawful conduct or from otherwise lawful conduct, if the natural and predictable result of the conduct is to control prices or to exclude or destroy competition in the relevant market. See Conoco Inc. v. Inman Oil Company, Inc., 774 F.2d 895, 905 (8th Cir. 1985).

64. HN42[] A manifestation of intent to triumph in the competitive market, or to exclude competition and to expand one's own business, in the absence of unfair, anticompetitive or predatory conduct, is not enough to establish an antitrust violation. See Great Escape, Inc. v. Union City Body Company, Inc., 791 F.2d 532, 541 (7th Cir. 1986); Lektro-Vend Corporation v. Vendo Corporation, 660 F.2d 255, 273 (7th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 921, 71 L. Ed. 2d 461, 102 S. Ct. 1277 (1982).

ANTICOMPETITIVE OR PREDATORY CONDUCT:

65. HN43[] To be labeled "anticompetitive" or "predatory" the conduct involved must be such that its anticipated benefits are dependent upon its tendency to frustrate or eliminate competition and thereby enhance the defendant's long term ability to reap the benefits of monopoly power. Such conduct leads to the [87] acquisition of monopoly power by means other than superior product or business acumen. See *Chillicothe [1474] Sand & Gravel Company v. Martin Marietta Corporation, 615 F.2d 427, 430 (7th Cir. 1980). See also Aspen Skiing Company v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corporation, 472 U.S. 585, 600-05, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, 105 S. Ct. 2847 (1985). To be anticompetitive, it is not necessary that such conduct be unlawful in and of itself, so long as it has the effect of achieving monopoly power. However, anticompetitive conduct is conduct without legitimate business purpose that makes sense only because it eliminates competition. See General Industries Corporation v. Hartz Mountain Corporation, 810 F.2d 795, 804 (8th Cir. 1987); Great Escape, Inc. v. Union City Body Corporation, Inc., 791 F.2d 532, 541 (7th Cir. 1986).

66. If litigation is used as an integral part of a scheme attempting to monopolize and exclude competition from the marketplace, that litigation can lose its first amendment protection and constitute forbidden anticompetitive conduct. See Walker Process Equipment v. Food Machinery & Chemical Corporation, 382 U.S. 172, 174, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247, 86 S. Ct. 347 (1965).

DANGEROUS PROBABILITY OF SUCCESS:

67. The plaintiffs must prove that there [88] was a dangerous probability that the defendant would sooner or later succeed in achieving its intended monopoly if it continued to engage in anticompetitive conduct that is the same or similar to that charged. See American [1506] Tobacco Company v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 785, 90 L. Ed. 1575, 66 S. Ct. 1125 (1946). "The Sherman Act's prohibition against attempted monopolization does not require that the attempt in fact ripen into an actual monopoly. It is the attempt which is the offense." Lektro-Vend Corporation v. Vendo Company, 660 F.2d 255, 270 (7th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 921, 71 L. Ed. 2d 461, 102 S. Ct. 1277 (1982).

68. The dangerous probability should be evaluated as of the time the alleged anticompetitive events occurred. See General Industries Corporation v. Hartz Mountain Corporation, 810 F.2d 795, 807 (8th Cir. 1987).

69. In evaluating whether it was possible for the defendant to achieve its goal of monopoly power at the time the alleged anticompetitive events occurred, the court can consider: the defendant's market power, including sales and profits; the defendant's subsequent market performance; the size and number of competitors in the market; increasing or decreasing concentration within the relevant market; [89] and the defendant's capacity to control prices and exclude competitors. See Lektro-Vend Corporation v. Vendo Company, 660 F.2d 255, 270-71 (7th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 921, 71 L. Ed. 2d 461, 102 S. Ct. 1277 (1982).

RELEVANT MARKET:

70. HN44[] In proving whether the defendant possessed sufficient power to come dangerously close to achieving monopoly power, the plaintiffs must prove the relevant geographic and product markets within which that dangerous probability occurred. See Photovest Corporation v. Fotomat Corporation, 606 F.2d 704, 711-13 (7th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 917, 63 L. Ed. 2d 601, 100 S. Ct. 1278 (1980); United States v. Empire Gas Corporation, 537 F.2d 296, 302 (8th Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1122, 51 L. Ed. 2d 572, 97 S. Ct. 1158 (1977); Bernard Food Industries, Inc. v. Dietene Company, 415 F.2d 1279, 1284 (7th Cir. 1969), cert. denied, 397 U.S. 912, 25 L. Ed. 2d 92, 90 S. Ct. 911 (1970).

71. A relevant geographic market is defined as the area of effective competition within which the seller operates and to which the purchaser can practically turn for supplies. See Otter Tail Power Company v. United States, 410 U.S. 366, 369 n.1, 35 L. Ed. 2d 359, 93 S. Ct. 1022 (1973).

72. A relevant product market is comprised of those commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers [90] for the same purpose. In determining the product market, the court must decide whether the [*1475] product is unique or has close substitutes, as to which there are substantial cross-elasticities of demand. See Fishman v. Estate of Wirtz, 807 F.2d 520, 531 (7th Cir. 1986).

73. Price, use and qualities must be considered in determining whether products are reasonably interchangeable. See United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Company, 351 U.S. 377, 404, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 (1956).

74. The outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity [24] of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it. However, within this broad market, well-defined submarkets may exist which, in themselves, constitute product markets for antitrust purposes. The boundaries of such a submarket may be determined by examining such practical indicia as industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate economic entity, the product's peculiar characteristics and uses, unique production facilities, distinct customers, distinct prices, sensitivity to price changes, and specialized vendors. See Brown Shoe Company v. United States, 370 U.S. [91] 294, 325, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962); Photovest Corporation v. Fotomat Corporation, 606 F.2d 704, 712 (7th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 917, 100 S. Ct. 1278, 63 L. Ed. 2d 601 (1980).

75. A single product will only qualify as a submarket when it is so unique and dominant in the market that there is no practical substitute. See Frito-Lay, Inc. v. Bachman Company, 659 F. Supp. 1129, 1136-37 (S.D.N.Y. 1986).

ANTITRUST INJURY:

76. Because this is a private antitrust action in which the plaintiffs are seeking relief under Sections 4 (treble damages) and 16 (injunctive relief) of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 15 and 26, the plaintiffs must prove that they have suffered an "antitrust [92] injury," which is an "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendant's acts unlawful." See Brunswick Corporation v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977). See also generally Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 107 S. Ct. 484, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986); Matsushita Electric Industrial Company, Ltd. v. Zenith Radio [1507] Corporation, 475 U.S. 574, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986); Local Beauty Supply, Inc. v. Lamaur, Inc., 787 F.2d 1197 (7th Cir. 1986). In other words, in a private antitrust action, the plaintiffs must allege specific damage to themselves arising from the allegedly wrongful acts of the defendant. See Matsushita Electric Industrial Company, Ltd., 106 S. Ct. at 1356. See also Fishman v. Estate of Wirtz, 807 F.2d 520, 532 (7th Cir. 1986) (the concept of antitrust injury is akin to a standing requirement). The plaintiffs must also prove an adverse effect on competition as distinguished from the effects upon the plaintiffs' own businesses. See Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 488; General Industries Corporation v. Hartz Mountain Corporation, 810 F.2d 795, 807 (8th Cir. 1987).

---

[24] Products that are similar to each other or that are substitutes for each other display positive cross-elasticity. That is, if the price of "A" remains constant, an increase in the price of "B" will generate more sales of "A" as buyers switch to it. High cross-elasticity means that if the price of "A" remains constant, an X% increase in the price of "B" will generate a greater X% increase in the sales of "A." See Photovest Corporation v. Fotomat Corporation, 606 F.2d 704, 713 n.12 (7th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 917, 63 L. Ed. 2d 601, 100 S. Ct. 1278 (1980).

(2) The Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

77. HN45[] The [93] invocation of the judicial process is protected from antitrust scrutiny by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine which holds that the First Amendment to the United States Constitution immunizes from antitrust liability bona fide lobbying and litigation efforts, regardless of any anticompetitive motive behind those efforts. See generally California Motor Transport Company v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S. Ct. 609 (1972); *United Mine Workers of America v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 [1476] (1965); Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 (1961); Premier Electrical Construction Company v. National Electrical Contractors Association, Inc., 814 F.2d 358, 371 (7th Cir. 1987).

78. The Noerr-Pennington doctrine does not immunize "sham" lawsuits brought for the purpose of harming one's competitors, not by the result, but by the process of the litigation. See Winterland Concessions Company v. Trela, 735 F.2d 257, 263-64 (7th Cir. 1984); Grip-Pak, Inc. v. Illinois Tool Works, Inc., 694 F.2d 466, 472 (7th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 461 U.S. 958, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1317, 103 S. Ct. 2430 (1983). A suit brought only because of the costs litigation imposes also fits the "sham" exception [94] to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. See Premier Electrical Construction Company v. National Electrical Contractors Association, Inc., 814 F.2d 358, 372 (7th Cir. 1987).

79. In the Seventh Circuit, the plaintiffs need not show a pattern of baseless repetitive claims in order to recover under the antitrust laws; even a single baseless, sham lawsuit lacks "the constitutional significance that warrants immunity from the antitrust laws." MCI Communications v. American Telephone and Telegraph Company, 708 F.2d 1081, 1155 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 891, 78 L. Ed. 2d 226, 104 S. Ct. 234 (1983).

80. In invoking the "sham exception" to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, the plaintiffs have the burden of proving that the defendant's activities were not really efforts to vindicate rights in court, but instead were efforts to interfere directly with their businesses. The plaintiffs must prove the defendant's bad faith by clear and convincing evidence. See MCI Communications v. American Telephone and Telegraph Company, 708 F.2d 1081, 1155 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 891, 78 L. Ed. 2d 226, 104 S. Ct. 234 (1983). [25]

[95] 81. The "sham exception" focuses attention on the factors motivating the initiation and prosecution of the suit. It is not dispositive that the ultimate relief will be beneficial to the petitioner and will serve its purposes. It must be shown that the desire for relief was a significant factor underlying the actual bringing and prosecution of the suit. Thus, determining whether the petitioning conduct was a sham often involves questions of motive or subjective intent. The issue of intent that controls is whether the litigant wished to obtain its anticompetitive end through obtaining court-ordered relief or simply through the filing and maintenance of the lawsuit. See In re Burlington Northern, Inc., 822 F.2d 518, 527-28 (5th Cir. 1987).

---

[25] Other circuits allow the proponent of the sham exception to meet the lesser, preponderance of the evidence quantum of proof. See, e.g., Litton Systems, Inc. v. American Telephone and Telegraph Company, 700 F.2d 785, 813-14 (2d Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 1073, 79 L. Ed. 2d 220, 104 S. Ct. 984 (1984).

82. Petitioning must be motivated by a genuine desire for relief which is both honest and reasonable. Where a party had no reasonable expectation of obtaining a favorable ruling, its efforts to do so were a sham. See [In re Burlington Northern, Inc., 822 F.2d 518, 529 (5th Cir. 1987)]; [Litton Systems, Inc. v. AT&T, 700 F.2d 785, 811-12 (2d Cir. 1983)], cert. denied, 464 U.S. 1073, 79 L. Ed. 2d 220, 104 S. Ct. 984 (1984).

83. Success on the merits does not necessarily preclude [96] antitrust plaintiffs from proving that the defendant's earlier litigation activities were a sham. [26] The determinative inquiry is not whether the suit was won or lost, but whether it was significantly motivated by a genuine desire for judicial relief. Of course, the success of the claim presented is persuasive evidence that the litigant in fact [1508] wanted the relief. It is highly unlikely that a party with a meritorious claim will not be significantly motivated by a desire to obtain relief [*1477] on that claim. Thus, antitrust plaintiffs attempting to base liability on successful petitioning must overcome a strong inference that Noerr-Pennington applies and in many cases may be unable to do so. But reliance on the success of the earlier claim cannot substitute for proper consideration of any evidence the plaintiffs might provide of the defendant's motivation. See [In re Burlington Northern, Inc., 822 F.2d 518, 528 (5th Cir. 1987)].

[97] (3) Liability

84. Having found that the G. Heileman Brewing Company, Inc. failed to meet its burden of proving essential elements of its claim for attempted monopolization, the court concludes that Anheuser-Busch Incorporated is not liable to the G. Heileman Brewing Company, Inc. for attempting to monopolize trade in violation of [Section 2] of the Sherman Act, [15 U.S.C. § 2].

85. Having found that the Miller Brewing Company failed to meet its burden of proving essential elements of its claim for attempted monopolization, the court concludes that Anheuser-Busch Incorporated is not liable to the Miller Brewing Company for attempting to monopolize trade in violation of [Section 2] of the Sherman Act, [15 U.S.C. § 2].

E. Relief

86. Because none of the parties to these consolidated cases are registrants of the mark at issue, the parties do not have standing to seek the statutory remedies provided in the Lanham Trademark Act, [15 U.S.C. §§ 1111], [1114], [1116], [1117], [1118], [1119], [1120]. See [Reliable Tire Distributors, Inc. v. Kelly Springfield Tire Company, 592 F. Supp. 127, 136 (E.D. Pa. 1984)].

87. In deciding whether to enter a permanent injunction, the court must determine whether the [98] plaintiffs have succeeded on the merits of their claims and whether a balancing of the equities favors the grant of injunctive relief. See [Banff, Ltd. v. Federated Department Stores, Inc., 657 F. Supp. 336, 338 (S.D.N.Y. 1987)].

88. HN46[] Declaratory relief is available at the discretion of the district court. See [28 U.S.C. § 2201]. See also [Tempco Electric Heater Corporation v. Omega Engineering, Inc., 819 F.2d 746, 747 (7th Cir. 1987)]; [Chesebrough-Pond's, Inc. v. Faberge, Incorporated, 666 F.2d 393, 396] (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 967, 74 L. Ed. 2d 277, 103 S. Ct. 294 (1982).

89. Federal courts are not empowered to issue advisory opinions. See U.S. Const. art. III. See also [Aetna Life Insurance Company v. Haworth, 300 U.S. 227, 241, 81 L. Ed. 617, 57 S. Ct. 461 (1937)].

90. Parties seeking relief under the Declaratory Judgment Act, [28 U.S.C. §§ 2201-02], must present a "case or controversy" within the meaning of Article III of the United States Constitution. See [Aetna Life Insurance Company v. Haworth, 300 U.S. 227, 240, 81 L. Ed. 617, 57 S. Ct. 461 (1937)]; [Koch Refining v. Farmers Union Central Exchange, Inc., 831 F.2d 1339, 1353 (7th Cir. 1987)].

---

[26] But see [Coca-Cola Company v. Overland, Inc., 692 F.2d 1250, 1257 n.17 (9th Cir. 1982)] (noting that the court had discovered no case directly supporting the proposition that the bringing of meritorious trademark infringement suits can constitute sham suits violative of the antitrust laws).

91. The test for determining whether an actual case or controversy exists in a declaratory [99] judgment action involving trademarks is two-pronged: (1) the declaratory plaintiff must have a real and reasonable apprehension of litigation; and (2) the declaratory plaintiff must have engaged in a course of conduct which brought it into adversarial conflict with the declaratory defendant. See Windsurfing International v. AMF Incorporated, 828 F.2d 755, 757 (Fed. Cir. 1987).

92. In an action seeking a declaratory judgment of noninfringement, the actual controversy requirement is satisfied when a defendant's conduct has "created on the part of the declaratory plaintiff a reasonable apprehension that it will face an infringement suit if it commences or continues the activity in question" and when the plaintiff has actually used the trademark at issue or has prepared to use it. See Indium Corporation of America v. Semi-Alloys, Inc., 781 F.2d 879, 883 (Fed. Cir. 1985) (patent action) [27] (quoting *Jervis B. Webb [1478] Company v. Southern Systems, Inc., 742 F.2d 1388, 1398-99 (Fed. Cir. 1984)), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 820, 107 S. Ct. 84, 93 L. Ed. 2d 37 (1986).

[100] 93. The declaratory judgment plaintiff carries the burden of proving the existence of facts underlying his allegations of the existence of an actual controversy. See Jervis B. Webb Company v. Southern Systems, Inc., 742 F.2d 1388, 1399 (Fed. Cir. 1984).

94. A purely subjective apprehension of an infringement suit is insufficient to satisfy the actual controversy requirement. See Indium Corporation of America v. Semi-Alloys, [1509] Inc., 781 F.2d 879, 883 (Fed. Cir. 1985), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 820, 107 S. Ct. 84, 93 L. Ed. 2d 37 (1986). The threat of injury must be real and immediate, not conjectural or hypothetical. See Foster v. Center Township of LaPorte County, 798 F.2d 237, 242 (7th Cir. 1986). See also Koch Refining v. Farmers Union Central Exchange, Inc., 831 F.2d 1339, 1353 (7th Cir. 1987); Merrick v. Sharp & Dohme, 185 F.2d 713, 717 (7th Cir. 1950); cert. denied, 340 U.S. 954, 71 S. Ct. 573, 95 L. Ed. 2d 687 (19510.

95. HN47[] The test for an actual case or controversy is an objective one. Reasonable apprehension and the other jurisdictional prerequisites must exist at the time suit is filed. See Indium Corporation of America v. Semi-Alloys, Inc., 781 F.2d 879, 883 (Fed. Cir. 1985), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 820, 107 S. Ct. 84, 93 L. Ed. 2d 37 (1986).

96. Consolidation does not result [101] in a merger of suits or parties such that federal jurisdiction in one case can be engrafted upon a case with which it is consolidated. See Johnson v. Manhattan Railway Company, 289 U.S. 479, 496, 77 L. Ed. 1331, 53 S. Ct. 721 (1933); Xaros v. U.S. Fidelity and Guaranty Company, 820 F.2d 1176, 1180 n.1 (11th Cir. 1987).

97. Because Heileman has established that it had a reasonable apprehension that it would face an infringement suit and because, at the time of filing, it was prepared to use the LA trademark, the court concludes that Heileman has standing to maintain its claims for declaratory relief against Anheuser-Busch. See Windsurfing International Inc. v. AMF Incorporated, 828 F.2d 755, 757 (Fed. Cir. 1987).

98. Because Miller has established that it competes with Anheuser-Busch in the sale of beer and that, at the time it filed its complaint, it was likely to use the challenged LA mark, the court concludes that Miller has standing to maintain its claims for declaratory relief under the test set forth in Chromium Industries, Inc. v. Mirror Polishing & Plating Company, Inc., 448 F. Supp. 544, 555 (N.D. Ill. 1978).

99. In actions arising under section 43(a) of the Lanham Trademark Act, 15 U.S.C. [102] § 1125(a), a prevailing party requesting attorney fees pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 1117 bears a heavy burden of proving exceptional circumstances by clear and convincing evidence. Exceptional circumstances include inequitable conduct during litigation, fraud, and vexatious or frivolous litigation. See Olsonite Corporation v. Bemis Manufacturing Company, 610 F. Supp. 1011, 1026 (E.D. Wis. 1985).

---

[27] Declaratory judgment actions involving trademarks are analogous to those involving patents. Thus, guidance in trademark cases is often taken from patent cases. See Windsurfing International, Inc. v. AMF Incorporated, 828 F.2d 755, 757 (Fed. Cir. 1987).

100. Because Heileman and Miller have not met their burden of proving that this case involves "exceptional circumstances," the court concludes that Anheuser-Busch Incorporated is not liable to the G. Heileman Brewing Company, Inc. or to the Miller Brewing Company for attorney fees under 15 U.S.C. § 1117.

VII. DISCUSSION

A. Standing

(1) Statutory Relief

Heileman framed its complaint in this action as if Anheuser-Busch had succeeded in obtaining federal registration for the LA mark. Although the record shows that Anheuser-Busch applied for registrations, its initial applications were [*1479] rejected and other applications had not been acted upon by the time of trial. [28] Nevertheless, Heileman's prayer for relief included a request for a declaratory judgment of noninfringement under the Lanham [103] Trademark Act; for cancellation of Anheuser-Busch's trademark registrations for LA pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 1114(1); and for an order that Anheuser-Busch disclaim LA as a trademark pursuant to 15 U.S.C. §§ 1056 and 1119. An opponent of a trademark does not have standing to seek such relief in a district court unless the mark at issue has been registered by the United States Patent and Trademark Office (PTO). Cf. Reliable Tire Distributors, Inc. v. Kelly Springfield Tire Company, 592 F. Supp. 127, 136 (E.D.Pa. 1984). Because Anheuser-Busch was not a registrant of the LA mark, Heileman's claims for statutory relief, which were never withdrawn, must be dismissed for lack of standing.

(2) Declaratory Relief

Because the LA mark is not registered, the plaintiffs must look to section 43 (a) of the Lanham Trademark Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a), and common law as the source of their causes of action for declaratory [104] relief. Federal courts are not empowered to issue advisory opinions, see U.S. Const. art. III, so Heileman and Miller have standing to seek a declaratory judgment only if their actions [1510] present a justiciable case or controversy. [29] See Aetna Life Insurance Company v. Haworth, 300 U.S. 227, 240, 81 L. Ed. 617, 57 S. Ct. 461 (1937).

One district court in this circuit has construed the "likely to be damaged" language of section 43(a) to provide standing to a broad class of suitors. [30] [106] In Chromium Industries v. Mirror Polishing & Plating Company,

---

[28] Although Heileman and Miller could have filed an opposition to registration in the Patent and Trademark Office pursuant to 15 U.S.C.A. § 1063 (West Supp. 1987), the record does not reveal that they did so. Instead, they have attempted to accomplish the same ends in this court.

[29] In general, an actual trademark infringer is allowed to seek relief under the Declaratory Judgments Act when there is a trademark infringement controversy because:

> One who is subjected to charges of infringement and the threat of legal proceedings need not wait until his accuser chooses to bring suit to secure a determination of his rights. One of the purposes of the Declaratory Judgments Act is to avoid the unfairness of allowing one party to create a controversy by making such charges but, by withholding suit, to prevent the other party from conclusively refuting them.

Topp-Cola Company v. Coca-Cola Company, 314 F.2d 124, 125 (2d Cir. 1963).

[30] Section 43 (a) of the Lanham Trademark Act provides that:

> HN48[] Any person who shall affix, apply, or annex, or use in connection with any goods or services, or any container or containers for goods, a false designation of origin, or any false description or representation, including words or other symbols tending falsely to describe or represent the same, and shall cause such goods or services to enter into commerce,

[105] Inc., 448 F. Supp. 544, 555 (N.D. Ill. 1978), the court stated that: "For trademarks, standing under § 43 (a) is established if the plaintiff competes with defendant in the sale of goods covered by the term and uses or is likely to use the challenged mark." Id. at 555. Both Heileman and Miller are competitors of Anheuser-Busch and both alleged in their complaints that they were likely to use the LA mark. Therefore, under the Chromium Industries test, they have standing to maintain their claims for declaratory judgments. However, this court does not believe that the Chromium Industries test, which was modeled on a trademark registration opposition proceeding under 15 U.S.C.A. § 1063 (West Supp. 1987), is supported by the weight of authority. [31]

[*1480] More recently, the Seventh Circuit has explained that a declaratory judgment is available where a party desires a declaration of the legal effect of a proposed or past course of action. Essentially, two related but distinct fact situations are contemplated: (1) the controversy has ripened to a point where one of the parties could invoke a coercive remedy (i.e. [107] a suit for damages or an injunction) but has not done so; and (2) although the controversy is real and immediate, it has not ripened to such a point, and it would be unfair or inefficient to require the parties to wait for a decision. See Tempco Electric Heater Corporation v. Omega Engineering, Inc., 819 F.2d 746, 749 (7th Cir. 1987). These consolidated cases are, at best, of the second type.

Even in situations of the second type, an actual controversy must exist. In Windsurfing International Inc. v. AMF Incorporated, 828 F.2d 755 (Fed. Cir. 1987), a case involving a registered trademark, the Federal Circuit rejected the contention that the mere competitor status of the parties can serve as a basis for the court's jurisdiction. Id. at 758-59. Instead, the court held that:

> The test for determining whether an actual case or controversy exists in a declaratory judgment action involving trademarks is two-pronged. First, the declaratory plaintiff must have a real and reasonable apprehension of litigation. Second, the declaratory plaintiff must have engaged in a course of conduct which brought it into adversarial conflict with the declaratory defendant.

Id. at 757 (citations [108] omitted). These jurisdictional prerequisites [1511] must exist at the time the suit is filed. See Indium Corporation of America v. Semi-Alloys, Inc., 781 F.2d 879, 883 (Fed. Cir. 1985), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 820, 107 S. Ct. 84, 93 L. Ed. 2d 37 (1986).

At trial Heileman established that it had received a cease and desist letter from Anheuser-Busch and that, at the time it filed its complaint, it was ready, willing and able to use the LA mark. The evidence also revealed that Heileman actually used the LA mark in commerce the day after it filed its lawsuit (although it waited until it had secured a temporary restraining order before selling its LA beers through retail outlets). Based on these facts, Heileman had standing to maintain its claims for declaratory relief at the time it filed its complaint. See Windsurfing International, 828 F.2d at 757.

Miller's standing, however, is more problematical. The evidence reveals that it had never received a threat or a demand to cease and desist from Anheuser-Busch. Miller's only basis for considering itself threatened was the fact > and any person who shall with knowledge of the falsity of such designation or origin or description or representation cause or procure the same to be transported or used in commerce or deliver the same to any carrier to be transported or used, shall be liable to a civil action by any person doing business in the locality falsely indicated as that of origin or in the region in which said locality is situated, or by any person who believes that he is or is likely to be damaged by the use of any false description or representation.

---

15 U.S.C. § 1125(a).

[31] There is no appellate decision affirming the Chromium Industries judgment and the ruling regarding standing has never been cited as authority or precedent in any Seventh Circuit appellate decision. But see Exxon Corporation v. Humble Exploration Company, Inc., 695 F.2d 96, 103 n.10 (5th Cir. 1983); Johnson & Johnson v. Carter-Wallace, Inc., 631 F.2d 186, 189 (2d Cir. 1980). Moreover, the Chromium Industries court applied its standing test in the context of a threshold motion to dismiss. The court ruled that, although the parties were competitors, the plaintiff had not alleged an injury even under its broadly construed test for standing because it had "not alleged that it currently uses or is likely to use this term ["easy release"] in its marketing efforts." Chromium Industries, 448 F. Supp. at 556.

that Anheuser-Busch had recently filed suits against Heileman and Stroh. See Complaint [of the Miller Brewing Company] at para. 11. Moreover, [109] there was no evidence that Miller had actually brewed any low alcohol beer, announced its new product, or engaged in any introductory advertising at the time it filed its complaint. The only evidence that Miller had made any preparations to sell a low alcohol beer was some vague testimony that Miller had spent money developing a market and that its new products brand manager had traveled to Australia to study the low alcohol beer market there. See Transcript at 931-39, 2010-13, 2126, 2132-34, 2237. Miller did not begin to sell its beer in test markets for over two months after it filed its complaint. Given these facts, its claims were not ripe at the time it filed its complaint. See Wembley, Inc. v. Superba Cravats, Inc., 315 F.2d 87, 89-90 (2d Cir. 1963) ("Major stress should be placed on the 'definite' intention of the plaintiff to take 'immediate' action to utilize its potential and this intention should be 'evident' from the preparatory steps outlined in its complaint."); [*1481] Banff, Ltd. v. Federated Department Stores, Inc., 657 F. Supp. 336, 339 (S.D.N.Y. 1987) ("Without actual use or the immediate intention to use the trademark at issue, there is no justiciable controversy [110] or case within the meaning of Article III of the United States Constitution.").

In ruling that a party in much the same circumstances did not have standing to maintain a declaratory judgment action, the Windsurfing court reasoned that:

> In its complaint and counterclaim, AMF alleged merely that "AMF is interested in using the mark descriptively in connection with its products." AMF cites testimony that AMF has a "desire" to use "windsurfer" in its advertising and promotion, and that other members of the trade have the same "desire." Rather than use the mark, get sued, and fight it out in court, AMF was saying, "We would like to use the mark, but before we do, we want a court to say we may do so safely." Thus AMF's complaint and counterclaim sought an advisory opinion, something a federal court may not give. Aetna Life Ins., 300 U.S. at 241, 57 S. Ct. at 464.

Windsurfing International, 828 F.2d at 758.

Similarly, in Polaroid Corporation v. Berkey Photo, Inc., 425 F. Supp. 605, 607 (D. Del. 1976), Berkey counterclaimed for a judgment declaring that it was free to use the registered trademark "POLAROID" in a generic sense. Berkey had not actually tried to use the POLAROID [111] name and Polaroid had not charged Berkey with any infringing activity, although Polaroid admitted that it would take steps to protect its mark should Berkey attempt to use it. The court outlined the controversy as follows:

> Berkey bottoms its claim of justiciability on its desire to use the Polaroid trademark generically, which presently is being thwarted by plaintiff's vigilance in protecting its trademark; thereby placing defendant in "reasonable apprehension" of litigation . . . should it attempt to transgress the Polaroid guidelines. Defendant further complains that at least on one occasion in the past it altered its advertising practices to comport with the Polaroid regulations.

Id. at 607 (citation omitted).

The court then stated that:

> The emerging issue is whether a justiciable controversy is presented where there is no current infringing activity, nor charge of infringement, but only the ever ready vigilance of Polaroid to protect its mark should it be used by a competitor. It is concluded that where the record is devoid, as it is here, of any current activity which effectuates an actual injury suffered by this defendant, a justiciable controversy does not exist.

[112] Id. In granting Polaroid's motion to dismiss the court explained that: [1512]

> At this stage in the proceedings, Berkey's interest is no more adverse to that of Polaroid than any other distributor or would-be distributor of cameras. Berkey's bald assertion, that because it happens to be in the same field as Polaroid, it "contemplates" using the name now enjoyed by Polaroid, is insufficient to defeat plaintiff's motion. While competitors may be loosely considered adversaries in a business sense, they are not per se adversaries in a legal sense, until there is demonstrated some concrete controversy between them. Moreover, even though litigation need not be over, even though litigation need not be actually threatened to > procure relief under the Federal Declaratory Judgment Act, the most liberal interpretation of justiciability will not admit to an active controversy in the absence of either some imminent infringing conduct or some assertion of same.

Id. at 609 (citation omitted).

The same considerations apply to the instant action. However, Anheuser-Busch did not challenge Miller's standing and the facts which could have defeated jurisdiction were not revealed until the trial. Meanwhile, [113] Miller's claims had become ripe. On August 13, 1984, it began to sell its Sharp's LA in test markets and on August 24, 1984, Anheuser-Busch filed a counterclaim alleging trademark infringement and unfair [*1482] competition. Miller's premature filing allowed it to choose its own forum and benefit from the rulings made in the Heileman case before actually risking use of the mark. Several of the witnesses testified that the parties to these lawsuits had learned a lesson from the Miller LITE litigation in which the defendant, Heileman, ultimately won a Pyrrhic victory when the court of appeals declared that the LITE mark is generic. See Transcript at 283-86, 1115, 2209-10, 2221-23. See also Miller Brewing Company v. G. Heileman Brewing Company, Inc., 561 F.2d 75 (7th Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1025, 54 L. Ed. 2d 772, 98 S. Ct. 751 (1978). Meanwhile, the injunction entered by the district court prevented Heileman from using the LITE (or light) name for seven months. During that time Miller gained the ascendency in the low calorie beer market and it remains the leading seller of low calorie beer today. See Transcript at 285, 346, 2088, 2187, 2222.

The lesson learned from this prior litigation accounts [114] for the overeagerness of Heileman and Miller to gain a procedural advantage by being the ones to initiate the litigation. This court, however, does not believe that federal courts should be placed in the position of serving as part of a marketing strategy for beer or any other product. It would be inefficient to dismiss Miller's declaratory judgment claims at this point, particularly since they did ripen into a justiciable controversy before trial, but to avoid this situation in the future the court will have to hold a hearing at the outset to determine whether a declaratory judgment plaintiff has standing to maintain its claims.

B. CHOICE OF LAW

Heileman, Miller and Anheuser-Busch are each asserting claims for unfair competition under the common law of "various states," as well as under federal law. See Complaint [of the G. Heileman Brewing Company, Inc.] at para. 28; Complaint [of the Miller Brewing Company] at para. 12; Answer to Amended Complaint and Amended Counterclaim at para. 30; Answer and Counterclaim at para. 25. Common-law unfair competition is a tort which is governed by state law. See Data Cash Systems, Inc. v. JS & A Group, Inc., 480 F. Supp. 1063, 1071 [115] (N.D. Ill. 1979), aff'd, 628 F.2d 1038 (7th Cir. 1980). See also Terry v. International Dairy Queen, Inc., 554 F. Supp. 1088, 1098 (N.D. Ind. 1983). This is because common-law rights in a trademark are acquired on a state-by-state basis by using a specific trademark in a specific area. See Natural Footwear Limited v. Hart, Schaffner & Marx, 760 F.2d 1383, 1406 n.61 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 920, 106 S. Ct. 249, 88 L. Ed. 2d 257 (1985). The forum state's choice of law principles are supposed to determine which states' laws apply. See generally Klaxon Company v. Stentor Electric Manufacturing Company, 313 U.S. 487, 85 L. Ed. 1477, 61 S. Ct. 1020 (1941). However, in this case the parties have made no attempt to brief or argue whether the law of one state as opposed to that of another is controlling or would make any difference. [32] The unfair competition claims alleged by all three parties are centered on the issue of whether Anheuser-Busch should be entitled to the exclusive use of the LA mark on beer. Thus, in [1513] situations such as this, where Anheuser-Busch is using the disputed mark nationally in competition with Heileman in most states and with Miller in five states, the laws of each of the fifty states potentially apply. [116]

Courts have long recognized the choice of law problems inherent in multistate unfair competition actions, calling them "bewilderingly complicated." See Campbell Soup Company v. Armour & Company, 175 F.2d 795, 796 (3d [32] The only exceptions are Heileman's request for a judgment declaring that it is not unfairly competing with Anheuser-Busch under any Wisconsin Statute, see Complaint [of the G. Heileman Brewing Company] at para. 23(c), and Anheuser-Busch's claim for relief under the Illinois Anti-Dilution Act, see Answer to Amended Complaint and Amended Counterclaim at para. 29; Answer and Counterclaim at para. 24.

Cir.), cert. denied, 338 U.S. 847, 94 L. Ed. 518, 70 S. Ct. 88 (1949). See also generally Note, The [*1483] Choice of Law in Multistate Unfair Competition: A Legal-Industrial Enigma, 60 Harvard Law Review 1315 (1947). Courts which have confronted the problem (which is often ignored by the parties), have managed to avoid having to make a choice of law or having to analyze the claims on a state-by-state basis by concluding that choosing a particular state's law would make no difference to the outcome because there are no discernible modulations from jurisdiction to jurisdiction or [117] under federal law. See International Order of Job's Daughters v. Lindeburg and Company, 633 F.2d 912, 915-17 (9th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 452 U.S. 941, 69 L. Ed. 2d 956, 101 S. Ct. 3086 (1981); Keebler Company v. Rovira Biscuit Corporation, 624 F.2d 366, 372 (1st Cir. 1980); La Societe Anonyme des Parfums Le Galion v. Jean Patou, Inc., 495 F.2d 1265, 1270 n.5 (2d Cir. 1974). See also Maternally Yours, Inc. v. Your Maternity Shop, Inc., 234 F.2d 538, 545 (2d Cir. 1956) (Clark, C.J., concurring) ("so far as I can discover, we have never found any difference in ultimate result, and so quite often lump federal and New York law together . . . or -- even more conveniently -- eschew all reference to the matter"). After observing that unfair competition law is either undeveloped or not significantly different in the various states, one court resolved the problem pragmatically by deciding that:

> In view of the miniscule likelihood of any effect upon the result to be achieved, the Court has no hesitation in applying the law as articulated in what appear to it to be the best-reasoned cases, whether state or federal and wherever arising.

Kardex Systems, Inc. v. Sistemco N.V., 583 F. Supp. 803, 810-11 [118] n.3 (D. Me. 1984). In the absence of any showing by the parties of any outcome determinative conflicts among the various states' laws, this court has adopted this approach and has based its judgment on the body of law set forth in the Conclusions of Law above. See Maternally Yours, 234 F.2d at 546 ("we are entitled to go directly to the apposite federal precedents without subterfuge or ornamental rationalization").

C. Strength of LA Mark

The parties devoted most of their efforts at trial to litigating their dispute over the classification of the LA mark. In its pleadings, Anheuser-Busch, the first user of the mark, claimed that LA is a "unique, arbitrary and fanciful" mark or, in the alternative, that it is "suggestive." See Answer to Amended Complaint and Amended Counterclaim at paras. 7 & 8. After trial, Anheuser-Busch appears to have abandoned its theory that "LA" is arbitrary and now argues that:

> LA is merely suggestive of a number of concepts, including "low alcohol" or "light alcohol" or "light adventure" or "lifestyle alternative" or "Light Alcohol from Anheuser-Busch."

Defendant-Counterclaimant's Post-Trial Brief at 8. Heileman and Miller, on the other hand, maintain [119] that LA is a common descriptive or generic term. See Complaint [of the G. Heileman Brewing Company] at para. 8; Complaint [of the Miller Brewing Company] at para. 6. After these lawsuits were commenced, the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Missouri held that LA is a suggestive mark. See Anheuser-Busch, Inc. v. Stroh Brewery Company, 587 F. Supp. 330, 337-38 (E.D. Mo.), aff'd, 750 F.2d 631 (8th Cir. 1984). Based on the evidence adduced at trial, this court has found that the term "LA" is merely descriptive when applied to beer.

Numerous courts have commented on the difficulty of classifying a mark within one of the four traditional categories of trademark strength: (1) arbitrary, (2) suggestive, (3) merely descriptive, or (4) generic. See, e.g., A.J. Canfield Company v. Honickman, 808 F.2d 291, 296-97 & n.8 (3d Cir. 1986) (and cases cited therein). Given the overlap of these categories, it is not unusual for courts ruling on the same marks under similar facts to arrive at different conclusions Compare A.J. Canfield Company v. Honickman, 808 F.2d 291 (3d Cir. 1986) ("chocolate fudge" a generic mark for a soft drink) with A.J. Canfield Company [120] v. Vess Beverages, Inc., 796 F.2d 903 (7th Cir. 1986) ("chocolate fudge" a merely descriptive mark for a soft drink).

[*1484] Dissatisfied with simply assigning marks to the traditional four categories, the Seventh [1514] Circuit, in recent years, has focused instead on the function of the mark at issue. See Blau Plumbing, Inc. v. S.0.S. Fix-It, Inc., 781 F.2d 604, 608 (7th Cir. 1986) ("Labels should not determine rights."). See also Scandia Down Corporation v. Euroquilt, Inc., 772 F.2d 1423, 1431 n.3 (7th Cir. 1985), cert. denied, 475 U.S. 1147, 106 S. Ct. 1801, 90 L. Ed. 2d

346 (1986); Walt-West Enterprises, Inc. v. Gannett Company, Inc., 695 F.2d 1050, 1057 (7th Cir. 1982). The court has pointed out that the main function of trademark protection is:

> to allow a firm to affix an identifying mark to its product . . . offering that will, because it is distinctive and no competitor may use a confusingly similar designation, enable the consumer to discover in the least possible amount of time and with the least possible amount of headscratching whether a particular brand is that firm's brand or a competitor's brand.

Blau Plumbing, 781 F.2d at 609. Trademarks are not properly used as patent substitutes to further [121] or perpetuate product monopolies. Rather, they are meant to protect consumers from being misled as to the enterprise from which the goods emanate. It is this source denoting function which trademark laws protect, and nothing more. See Calvin Klein Cosmetics Corporation v. Lenox Laboratories, 815 F.2d 500, 503 (8th Cir. 1987); Smith v. Chanel, Inc., 402 F.2d 562, 566-69 (9th Cir. 1968).

The traditional method of testing whether a mark is generic is by use of a "primary significance" test. This type of test has its origin in the case of Kellogg Company v. National Biscuit Company, 305 U.S. 111, 83 L. Ed. 73, 59 S. Ct. 109 (1938), where Kellogg was claiming that it was entitled to the exclusive use of the term "shredded wheat." The Court ruled that:

> To establish a trade name in the term "shredded wheat" the plaintiff must show more than a subordinate meaning which applies to it. It must show that the primary significance of the term in the minds of the consuming public is not the product but the producer.

Id. at 118. See also Bayer Company v. United Drug Company, 272 F. 505, 509 (S.D.N.Y. 1921) ("The single question . . . in all these cases, is merely one of fact: What do buyers understand [122] by the word for whose use the parties are contending?"); 15 U.S.C.A. § 1064(c) (West Supp. 1987). Even though it is unlikely that the name of a completely new product such as LA beer could have any significance to consumers, the parties, in support of their respective positions, each offered survey evidence aimed at determining the primary meaning of "LA" in the minds of ordinary beer buyers.

(1) The Primary Significance Surveys

As is true in too many cases, the "method of poll taking adopted by each of the parties reflects their respective views of the law and each method was designed to elicit the kind of evidence each wished to bring out." American Thermos Products Company v. Aladdin Industries, Inc., 207 F. Supp. 9, 20 (D. Conn. 1962), aff'd sub nom. King-Seeley Thermos Company v. Aladdin Industries, Inc., 321 F.2d 577 (2d Cir. 1963). Well before the four primary meaning surveys were taken, each party had chosen to use the LA mark in a manner calculated to elicit "correct" responses from possible interviewees. Anheuser-Busch rejected a line extension approach and decided to use "LA" as a single brand mark with a less prominent corporate source indicator, "from Anheuser-Busch." [123] Heileman, on the other hand, chose to pursue the line extension approach by using its well-established house marks followed by an equally prominent "L.A." as a category descriptor. Early in its marketing efforts, Heileman included an asterisk after the L.A. initials directing the consumer to the explanation "low alcohol." See Transcript at 335, 366-67, 437, 481, 483, 2051-52, 2087. The use of the asterisk was soon discontinued, but both Heileman and Anheuser-Busch continued to educate the public about the meaning of LA through advertising and point-of-sale materials. See, e.g., Trial Exhibits 442, 740. Miller took a third [*1485] approach by adopting a single brand name, Sharp's, followed by an equally prominent "LA" as a category descriptor. It was obvious that Anheuser-Busch hoped that consumers surveyed would perceive LA as a brand name, while Heileman and Miller hoped it would be viewed as the common descriptor of a beer category. The plaintiffs also hoped that consumers would exhibit minimum confusion due to the equal prominence given to the house or single brand marks on their LA beer labels.

Despite this built-in bias, the parties attempted to qualify their respective surveys [124] as trustworthy and accurate by establishing that:

1. the proper universe was selected and examined; [1515]

2. a representative sample was drawn from that universe;

3. a fair and correct method of questioning the interviewees was used;

4. the persons conducting the survey were recognized experts;

5. the data gathered was accurately reported;

6. the sample, the questionnaire and the interviewing were in accordance with generally accepted standards of objective procedure and statistics in the field of such surveys;

7. the sample and the interviews were conducted independently of the attorneys in the case;

8. the interviewers were adequately trained in the field and had no knowledge of the litigation purposes for which the survey was to be used.

See Handbook of Recommended Procedures for the Trial of Protracted Cases, 25 F.R.D. 365, 429 (1960). See Transcript at 509-658, 661-874, 1515-1875. Nevertheless, the surveys were severely flawed and of little value to the court. [33]

[125] Anheuser-Busch offered two surveys in support of its claim that LA is a legally protectible mark. Both were conducted by Dr. Yoram Wind, Lauder Professor and Professor of Marketing at the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania. See Trial Exhibit 772. Wind's own testimony established that he exercised little supervision over the collection or interpretation of data for either survey. See Transcript at 1564-68, 1574-98. His first study (Wind I) was conducted among 1,051 consumers at shopping malls in fifteen cities on April 19, 20 and 21, 1984. See Trial Exhibit 733. Potential interviewees were screened for the following characteristics:

-- meet security requirements (not known by interviewer, has not participated in any survey other than a political poll in the past six months, does not work for a company that manufactures or distributes beer, a market research company or an advertising agency, gives the interviewer his/her telephone number);
--is legal drinking age or older and fits within age/sex quotas;
-- has purchased beer;
-- fits income and race quotas;
-- agrees to participate.

See Transcript at 1544-45. The objective of the survey was "to determine [126] whether consumers perceived LA as a brand name of beer produced by Anheuser-Busch or alternatively as a generic non-brand designation for the category of low or light-alcohol beer." See Transcript at 1542. After being screened, those selected were shown a can of LA from Anheuser-Busch or LA advertising [34] or both. Then each person was asked: How do you describe the product?; What type of beer is it?; What is the brand name of the new product?; and, What company produces the brand? Finally, the consumer was asked whether he or [*1486] she had ever seen, heard about or tried LA. See Transcript at 1548-54.

Dr. Wind purposely set out to isolate the responses of consumers who had not been "contaminated" by advertising or any other exposure to LA. See Transcript at 1569-73, 1772-94. At the time this survey was taken Heileman had only made a token shipment of its LA beer and Miller had not publicized or sold any Sharp's LA. Anheuser-Busch had been selling its LA beer to retail customers for less than three weeks in eight of [127] the fifteen cities where the survey was conducted. Seven of the fifteen sites selected had had no LA sales and were in jurisdictions where [33] It is the burden of the proffering party to prove the quality of survey evidence. However, even though a survey may not meet all criteria, the results may still be admitted and given lesser weight. See SquirtCo v. Seven-Up Company, 628 F.2d 1086, 1091 (8th Cir. 1980); American Home Products Corporation v. Barr Laboratories, Inc., 656 F. Supp. 1058, 1062 (D.N.J. 1987).

---

[34] The promotional material used the phrases "light in alcohol," "half the alcohol," or "reduced alcohol," but not "low alcohol." See Transcript at 1546.

advertising the alcoholic weakness of beer was forbidden. See Transcript at 1543. See also Id. at 367, 2157 (beer could not be advertised as being low in alcohol in Mississippi). Moreover, the questionnaires of those who had had prior exposure to LA (369 out of 1,051) were disregarded in tabulating the answers to the first three questions about the description, type and brand of the product. See Trial Exhibit 773 at 300016. It is not surprising, then, that only about 4.9% of those surveyed who had had no prior exposure to LA associated the name "LA" with light, low or less alcohol. See Transcript at 1613. It is equally unsurprising that 76.5% of these same consumers guessed that the brand [35] name of the new beer was "LA." [1516] See Transcript at 1614, 1757-58, 1806. Hoping for this type of response, Anheuser-Busch had deliberately designed its label with large "L" "A" letters dominating the trade dress. See Deposition of Zanvel A. Zack at 28. See also Transcript at 1756-58. Under these circumstances, the court agrees with [128] the dissenting judge in the Stroh appeal who observed that: "The perceptions of a group of wholly uninformed consumers are . . . simply legally irrelevant." Anheuser-Busch, Inc. v. Stroh Brewery Company, 750 F.2d 631, 645 (8th Cir. 1984). See also Burgunder, An Economic Approach to Genericism, 23 American Business Law Journal 391, 413-14 n.84 (1985).

[129] The survey also revealed that about 80% of those who had had prior exposure to LA, as well as those who had not, named Anheuser-Busch as the source of the beer after being shown a can labeled "LA from Anheuser-Busch." See Transcript at 1628, 1692. The responses led Dr. Wind to conclude that "LA" is perceived and understood by consumers as the brand name of the new product, and not a generic descriptor of the type of beer. See Transcript at 1628-29. However, the court believes that this only shows that a mark can have a dual function when there is only one producer of the product. [36] See Transcript at 910, 914, 1885.

During the cross-examination of Dr. Wind, Miller and Heileman were able to point out many coding errors which affected the results of the survey. [130] See Transcript at 1808-29, 1880-82. Some of the criticized coding was plainly erroneous. Other disputes arose because the consumers surveyed gave multiple answers or answers which could arguably be classified in more than one category. Wind's report gave no indication of the order in which the multiple responses came to mind. Cf. Coverdale, [*1487] Trademarks and Generic Words: An Effect-on-Competition Test, 51 University of Chicago Law Review 868, 886 (1984) (if many survey respondents give multiple responses, the court would have to consider absolute frequency of use and the order in which the terms came to mind). While a certain number of errors and good-faith disputes are unavoidable in quantifying survey data, these errors, combined with the built-in bias, plus the flaws in the universe, design and supervision of the survey have caused the court to place very little weight on the results of Wind I.

Wind II fares little better. See Trial Exhibit 774. This survey was conducted among 800 beer drinking consumers in eight cities [37] in September of 1984. The objectives of this study were to determine: (1) whether consumers perceive LA to be the brand name for a low alcohol [131] beer or a descriptor of the low alcohol beer category, and (2) how consumers describe this type of beer. See Transcript at 1666. These consumers, prescreened to [35] The Wind survey respondents were not tested to determine what they understood by the concept "brand name." See Transcript at 1568-70. Many courts have recommended the methodology of the survey conducted in the case of E.I. DuPont de Nemours & Company v. Yoshida International, Inc., 393 F. Supp. 502 (E.D.N.Y. 1975) in which the term "Teflon" was at issue. That survey offered the examples of "Chevrolet" to illustrate what it meant by a brand name and "automobile" to illustrate what it meant by a product type. Then, respondents were asked to classify other brand names and product names among which was "Teflon." However, other courts have cautioned that this type of test is helpful only when the distinction between the brand name and the product genus is obvious. See A.J. Canfield Company v. Honickman, 808 F.2d 291, 303 (3d Cir. 1986). These courts have expressed doubts that any consumer survey can be helpful when a category descriptor is used as a brand name. See Id. at 302.

---

[36] A trademark has a dual function if it identifies particular product characteristics while at the same time indicating its source. See A.J. Canfield v. Honickman, 808 F.2d 291, 300 (3d Cir. 1986); American Thermos Products Company v. Aladdin Industries, Inc., 207 F. Supp. 9, 20 (D. Conn. 1962), aff'd. sub nom. King-Seeley Thermos Company v. Aladdin Industries, Inc., 321 F.2d 577 (2d Cir. 1963).

[37] LA from Anheuser-Busch and at least one other low alcohol beer was being sold in each of the survey sites. See Transcript at 1864-69.

select only those who had consumed beer within the past thirty days, were shown five photographs of low alcohol beers, including the Anheuser-Busch product, but not including any product from Miller or Heileman. [38] See Transcript at 1834, 1869. Sixty-two percent of those surveyed described the beers as some form of low alcohol; while sixty percent identified LA as the brand name. See Transcript at 1686, 1693. Again, the plaintiffs were able to point out numerous coding errors in this survey. See Transcript at 1675-81, 1714-21, 1843-58, 1872-75, 1883-85, 1901-07.

Miller offered its own version of a primary meaning survey taken by the Admar [132] Research Company, Inc. and directed by Dr. Henry Ostberg, Admar's president. See Trial Exhibit 435. Eight hundred and ten male and female beer drinkers at twelve shopping malls in eight cities were questioned during the period June 21-23, 1984. After an initial screening which included a determination that the subjects had consumed beer during [1517] the past seven days and were familiar with LA from Anheuser-Busch, the interviewees were shown photographs of a can and bottle of Budweiser, Schlitz, Miller High Life and "LA from Anheuser-Busch." Those who were familiar with LA were then asked what "LA" on the Anheuser-Busch can and bottle means, if anything. See Transcript at 525. Fifty-two percent said the meaning of LA is low or light alcohol. [39] See Transcript at 530, 567. Eleven percent said LA is a brand name. See Transcript at 532-33. While the Ostberg survey does not indicate whether consumers think of LA or low alcohol as a type of beer, it does show that a majority of consumers, who by June had been exposed to advertising and sales of LA, recognized that LA stands for low alcohol.

[133] Heileman also contributed a survey designed to discover what, if anything, the term LA, as used in connection with beer, means to consumers. See Trial Exhibit 436; Transcript at 672. Its Beer Display Study was conducted by Legal Marketing Research, Inc. and directed by its president John Bunge. From July 11 through August 4, 1984, 536 consumers, who had purchased beer within the past month, were interviewed in shopping malls in five cities in which Heileman and Anheuser-Busch LA beers were being sold. Those selected were first asked to name all the types of beer they could remember. Only 6.3% (37 people) mentioned LA or low alcohol beer. See Transcript at 745. This stage of the survey was described as "unaided awareness" by Bunge. See Transcript at 687-88. [*1488] The next stage was "aided" (by advertising and probing questions) awareness. See Id. at 687-91. At this stage each interviewee was shown one of two displays meant to simulate beer sections in liquor stores: 271 saw Display 1, made up of only Anheuser-Busch LA products and accompanying advertising; 265 saw Display 2, made up of both Anheuser-Busch and Heileman LA products and advertising. The interviewee was then [134] led away from the display and asked: "Does the term LA, as used in connection with beer, mean anything in particular to you?" Transcript at 693. A majority (69.4% of those viewing Display 1 and 75.8% of those viewing Display 2) said "yes." Next, those who said "yes" were asked: "As used in connection with beer, what does the term LA mean?" Of those who said LA has some meaning, 67% of those viewing Display 1 and 71% of those viewing Display 2 said that meaning was "low alcohol." [40] Based on these statistics, Bunge concluded that "the term LA as used in connection with beer really has several [meanings]. The primary meaning of which, . . . is the concept of low, light, less alcohol." Transcript at 673.

Anheuser-Busch attacked this survey as biased because the Heileman advertising and point-of-sale materials included in Display 2 translated LA as "low alcohol." See Transcript at 755-63. However, the disparity between the responses to the two displays was small, so these materials could have had little effect on the ultimate result. See Transcript at [135] 866. The defendant also criticized the validity of the percentages because many of the subjects gave multiple answers and were counted in more than one category. See Transcript at 747-99. The court

---

[38] See Loctite Corporation v. National Starch and Chemical Corporation, 516 F. Supp. 190, 206 (S.D.N.Y. 1981) (criticizing a primary significance survey in which test subjects were not shown the products of each party).

[39] The survey results appear to have been somewhat stretched to reach a percentage over 50%. Multiple answers given by a single respondent were all tallied. See Transcript at 531. Seventeen percent gave answers that fell into more than one category, see Transcript at 608, leading to numerous discretionary coding decisions which were challenged by the defendant. See Transcript at 569-633.

[40] When all 536 interviewees are considered, 50.2% (269) stated that LA means low alcohol. See Transcript at 716.

agrees that there was too much aiding of awareness and probing. However, Bunge did attempt to record the answers which first came to mind in his study's tables.

Within the context of this survey's design, the central question "As used in connection with beer, what does the term LA mean?" leads the interviewee to "translate" the LA initials rather than to name the type of beer on display (even though, ultimately, the two answers may be identical). Therefore, the court believes that the Beer Display Study does little to establish that LA is the generic name for a type of beer. However, it does indicate that by the time this survey was conducted a majority of consumers understood LA to be descriptive of the low alcohol characteristic of the beer.

(2) Classification of the LA Mark

In many trademark infringement or cancellation suits, properly conducted surveys can be of assistance to the finder of fact in evaluating consumer perceptions. However, the situation at hand presents an atypical [136] factual situation. In the usual "genericide" case a venerable mark has come under attack because, over the course of years consumers have come to regard it as a name for the genus of a product rather than as a brand name of a particular product from a single [1518] source. See, e.g., Kellogg Company v. National Biscuit Company, 305 U.S. 111, 83 L. Ed. 73, 59 S. Ct. 109 (1938) (shredded wheat); Donald E. Duncan, Inc. v. Royal Tops Manufacturing Company, 343 F.2d 655 (7th Cir. 1965) (yo-yo). In contrast, low alcohol beer was virtually a new product when Anheuser-Busch began to use the LA mark in 1984. Prior to April 27 of that year, the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (BATF) and the laws of many states would not allow beer to be advertised or labeled with any indication of the level of alcoholic strength or weakness.

Were it not for these historical facts, the court would have no trouble finding that LA is a generic or common descriptive term for a type of beer, [41] [140] despite [*1489] any survey results to the contrary. The initials clearly stand for low alcohol -- the adjectives which describe the unique characteristic of a kind of beer. See Henri's Food Products Company v. Tasty Snacks, Inc., 817 F.2d [137] 1303, 1305-06 (7th Cir. 1987). Some courts, without benefit of consumer surveys, have held that a term is a common descriptor primarily because the word or words are the most common terms which can be used to denominate the product genus. See, e.g., Technical Publishing Company Division of Dun-Donnelley Publishing Corporation v. Lebhar-Friedman, Inc., 729 F.2d 1136 (7th Cir. 1984) ("Software News" generic when applied to a trade magazine dealing with the softwear industry). In A.J. Canfield Company v. Honickman, 808 F.2d 291, 301-03 (3d Cir. 1986), the court ruled that the name "chocolate fudge," as used for a soft drink, is generic [42] because "to the extent that a trademark also communicates functional characteristics, it does not function as a trademark." Id. at 305. Until shortly before that case arose, the plaintiff Canfield had been the sole user of the unregistered "Chocolate Fudge" mark and the sole producer of Diet Chocolate Fudge Soda. The name had only recently been appropriated for use by the defendant and other soft drink manufacturers. In this situation the court reasoned that the survey Canfield offered had no probative value:

> In contrast to the advocates [138] of this survey technique, we do not believe that a direct survey of public views can truly measure consumer understanding if a term identifies a product that arguably constitutes its own genus. As we have discussed above, generic marks signifying goods produced by only one manufacturer may function both as generic terms, signifying the product genus, and as brand names, indicating continuity of [41] Recently, the Seventh Circuit has explained that "an adjective can be generic term when that word is a part of a common descriptive name of a kind of goods. In order to be generic, however (as the word implies), the word in question must serve to denominate a type, a kind, a genus or a subcategory of goods." Henri's Food Products Company, Inc. v. Tasty Snacks, Inc., 817 F.2d 1303, 1305-06 (7th Cir. 1987) (footnote omitted).

---

[42] The court determined that "chocolate fudge soda" rather than "soda" or "chocolate soda" was the product genus and held that: "If a producer introduces a product that differs from an established product class in a particular characteristic, and uses a common descriptive term of that characteristic as the name of the product, then the product should be considered its own genus. Whether the term that identifies the product is generic then depends on the competitors' need to use it." A.J. Canfield Company, 808 F.2d at 305-06.

> source. Faced with a mark like shredded wheat, the consumer has no reason to define it either as the name of a brand or as the name of a genus because the term functions most efficiently as both. Accordingly, a survey inquiring whether a designation like shredded wheat is a brand name or a product name forces respondents to make a false dichotomy. Because consumers will never have had a reason to consider the question before, such a survey might not elicit real attitudes but merely answers developed on the spot that would be highly susceptible to the influences of survey phraseology.
>
> Perhaps more significantly, directly surveying the public without first differentiating the product brand from the product genus -- or at least without first offering a definition for the distinction -- would not, [139] in the context of this case, test the meaning of words to the public but would rather request a legal conclusion. A conscientious survey respondent, when asked whether a term is a brand name or product name, might ask, "Exactly what do you mean by product name and what do you mean by brand name?" Using the primary significance test and taking account of the anonymous source rule, we would be compelled to answer: "A brand name primarily signifies a product brand while a product name primarily signifies a product genus." The respondent then asks: "How do I distinguish a product brand from a product genus?" If we seek to answer this question with the results of this survey, we can only answer in a circular fashion: "That question depends on the answers we obtain [1519] from you and other respondents." We simply cannot circumvent the requirement of defining the distinction between product brand and product genus by asking the public to tell us if a name is a brand name or the name of a product genus; we can only ignore it.

A.J. Canfield Company v. Honickman, 808 F.2d at 302 (footnotes omitted).

[*1490] For the same reasons, Dr. Wind's conclusion that consumers understood "LA" to be a brand name are of no probative value under the circumstances of this case. Nevertheless, the surveys have been of some help to Anheuser-Busch in sustaining its burden of proving that "LA" is not a generic term. The Wind surveys, as well as those of Ostberg and Bunge, reveal that many consumers were not aware of low alcohol beer at all, so it was not surprising that the poll takers found that these consumers, as well as those with only recent exposure to the product, had not formed a consensus that "LA" or "low alcohol" is the name of a distinctive type of beer. While Canfield's [141] "Diet Chocolate Fudge" had been on the market for thirteen years when Canfield's trademark claim arose, LA had been sold to consumers for less than a month when Heileman filed its lawsuit. As the surveys indicate, consumers had had no reason to call beer with less alcohol anything until it became available in the marketplace. Nevertheless, the law requires that generic or common descriptive usage be determined from the point of view of the relevant consumer. [43] [142] See Kellogg Company v. National Biscuit Company, 305 U.S. 111, 118, 83 L. Ed. 73, 59 S. Ct. 109 (1938); In re Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner and Smith, 828 F.2d 1567, 1569 (Fed. Cir. 1987). For this reason, the court cannot find that "LA" was born generic. [44] See Greenbaum, Ginsburg & Weinberg, A Proposal for Evaluating Genericism After "Anti-Monopoly," 73 Trademark Reporter 101, 105 (1984).

---

[43] The plaintiffs attempted to show that LA and "low alcohol" were generic terms within the beer industry and that LA had gained currency as a category descriptor for beer in Australia. See, e.g., Transcript at 51-54, 68, 109-16, 240-42, 415, 944-48, 959, 2212-13, 2225-28. See also Trial Exhibits 74, 77, 100, 101, 102, 103, 400, 401, 426, 427. However, industry and foreign usage are not indicative of a term's generic use by ordinary consumers. See Big O Tire Dealers v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, 561 F.2d 1365, 1369 (10th Cir. 1977) (industry usage not determinative), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1052, 54 L. Ed. 2d 805, 98 S. Ct. 905 (1978); Donald F. Duncan, Inc. v. Royal Tops Manufacturing Company, Inc., 343 F.2d 655, 661-62 (7th Cir. 1965) (generic use of term "yo-yo" in Philippine Islands not dispositive of whether "yo-yo" is generic among consumers in the United States).

[44] At the time LA beer was introduced there was merely a hope or expectation by those entering the low alcohol field that LA would become a product category. In its introductory stage, LA beer was little more than a fad. "One can capitalize on a market or fad created by another provided that it is not accomplished by confusing the public into mistakenly purchasing the product in the belief that the product is the product of the competitor." American Footwear Corporation v. General Footwear Company, Limited, 609 F.2d 655, 662 (2d Cir. 1979) (term "bionic" could be used in the absence of confusion). See also International Order of Job's Daughters v. Lindeburg and Company, 633 F.2d 912, 919 (9th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 452 U.S. 941, 69 L. Ed. 2d 956, 101 S. Ct. 3086 (1981).

Faced with a similar situation in Gimix, Inc. v. JS & A Group, Inc., 699 F.2d 901 (7th Cir. 1983), the Seventh Circuit explained that:

> Words may be classified as generic in two distinct ways. A manufacturer may select a word which is already in common use and apply it to his product according to that common meaning; the use of "light" in relation to beer is an example of this first type of generic term. [45] However, a manufacturer [143] may also invent a word which thereafter enters common usage and becomes generic. See 3 R. Callman, The Law of Unfair Competition and Monopolies § 74.2 (3d ed. 1969).

Gimex, 699 F.2d at 905. In that case the court of appeals ruled that "Auto Page" is not a generic term for an automatic dialing device which connects an automatic telephone answering service with a paging terminal. The court noted that, although the words "auto" and "page" are generic, they are each capable of multiple meanings and were not combined as the name "Auto Page" until used by the plaintiff Gimex in [*1491] its patent application. At that time the public had not been exposed to the type of product at issue. Thus, because "Auto [1520] Page" was not a commonly understood or commonly used term prior to its association with the plaintiff's invention, the court concluded that it is not a generic term, but is merely descriptive. Id. at 906-07. See also Trak Inc. v. Benner Ski KG, 475 F. Supp. 1076, 1079 (D. Mass. 1979) (no consumer consensus as to generic term for new product). Likewise, in Anheuser-Busch's case against Stroh, Stroh's vice president testified that at the time of that trial (May 7, 1984) LA was [144] not a generic name as far as consumers were concerned, but that if Anheuser-Busch and several other breweries used it, it would become generic. See Anheuser-Busch, Inc. v. Stroh Brewery Company, 587 F. Supp. 330, 338 (E.D. Mo.), aff'd, 750 F.2d 631 (8th Cir. 1984).

Although the Stroh prediction had not materialized by the time of this trial, the record shows that, after several weeks of exposure to LA beer through retail outlets, advertising and news reports, a majority of consumers surveyed recognized that LA describes the beer as being low in alcoholic content. See Trial Exhibits 435, 436, 774. Anheuser-Busch contends that the media publicity and advertising -- some of which it generated itself -- "contaminated" [145] these consumer perceptions by translating "LA" as low alcohol. However, as the plaintiffs correctly point out, in determining whether a mark is merely descriptive, a fact finder must consider the mark as it is applied to the goods in question:

> Evidence of the context in which a mark is used on labels, packages, or in advertising material directed to the goods is probative of the reaction of prospective purchasers to the mark. To hold otherwise would be to separate the concept of the average prospective purchaser from the world of reality.

Application of Abcor Development Corporation, 588 F.2d 811, 814 (C.C.P.A. 1978). See also Transcript at 539, 1601, 1779-86, 1792, 2078-87.

Anheuser Busch points out that it has never objected to competitors using the phrase "low alcohol" or any of its variants to describe beer. See Answer to Amended Complaint and Amended Counterclaim at paras. 18, 19, 20. See also Transcript at 1303-04. It is only claiming trademark rights to the term "LA." Despite the evidence that LA is descriptive, Anheuser-Busch maintains that it is a protectible mark because the letters "L" and "A" are not initials for low alcohol or anything else, but are [146] merely suggestive of a number of things, including low alcohol, light in alcohol, less alcohol, light adventure, lifestyle alternative, and "low in alcohol from Anheuser-Busch."

The problem with this theory is that even these suggested meanings are words beginning with "L" and "A," so that, even under the defendant's reasoning, the letters are being used as initials. Initials do not "suggest" or "connote" the words for which they stand, they directly denote those words. [46] [148] For example, [*1492] throughout the trial [1521] the plaintiffs drew the court's attention to internal communiques among Anheuser-Busch executives which were signed with initials. See, e.g., Transcript at 131-32, 181, 184, 201, 243, 1106, 1250, 1253, 1282, 1325. When shown memos signed by "A.A.B. III" none of the defendant's personnel testified that these initials suggest a variety of possibilities or that the letters have no meaning. They all recognized that when the initials "A.A.B. III" are attached to an Anheuser-Busch document they directly denote the chief executive officer, August A. Busch III. Similarly, the initials "L" and "A" on a can of beer directly denote low alcohol. Other meanings, such as "light adventure," [147] which were later concocted by the parties, are little more than plays on words or initials. [47] Despite any other possible associations, the primary function of the LA initialism is to describe to consumers the unique selling point of the beer -- namely, that it is low in alcohol.

---

[45] In the Miller LITE litigation, the court of appeals relied heavily on a standard dictionary definition of "light" in ruling that "LITE" (or light) is a common descriptor for beer. See Miller Brewing Company v. G. Heileman Brewing Company, 561 F.2d 75, 80-81 (7th Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1025, 54 L. Ed. 2d 772, 98 S. Ct. 751 (1978). In the instant case none of the parties presented evidence that either "LA" or "low alcohol" is defined by any lexicon as a type of beer.

The Seventh Circuit has explained that merely descriptive terms are unsuited to the function of trademarks because they are poor means of distinguishing one source of goods from another and because they are often necessary to the description of all goods of a similar nature. See Gimix, Inc. v. JS & A Group, Inc., 699 F.2d 901, 909 (7th Cir. 1983); M.B.H. Enterprises, Inc. v. WOKY, Inc., 633 F.2d 50, 54 (7th Cir. 1980).

Anheuser-Busch witnesses testified that it is not necessary to use "LA" to describe the beer in question because other phrases such as "low alcohol," "light in alcohol," "less alcohol," and "reduced alcohol" remain available for common use. See Transcript at 1310, 2245. However, the plaintiffs' expert John Nevin disagreed, pointing out that "LA" is the most acceptable term because consumers naturally tend to shorten or abbreviate product names. See Transcript at 884-89. Accord American Thermos Products Company v. Aladdin Industries, Inc., 207 F. Supp. 9, 20 (D. Conn. 1972), aff'd [149] sub nom. King-Seely Thermos Company v. Aladdin Industries, Inc., 321 F.2d 577 (2d Cir. 1963). Moreover, the words "less" and "low" are thought to have negative connotations, while the phrase "light in alcohol" could be confused with a different product -- light alcohol. See Transcript at 297, 941-42, 1114, 1154, 2195.

---

[46] The dictionary defines "initial" as: "Denoting the first letter or letters of a word." American Heritage Dictionary of the English Language 676 (1969). "Denote" is defined as: "To refer to specifically; mean explicitly." Id. at 353. In contrast "connote" means: "To suggest or imply in addition to literal meaning." Id. at 283.

In the Stroh case, the district court stated that:

> It is apparent from the [Wind] study that consumers do not generally recognize the term LA to immediately connote low alcohol when they see such on plaintiff's product. Rather, it is this Court's opinion that the study supports a conclusion that LA, when placed prominently on a can of beer as the sole brand name, stands for an idea which requires some operation of the imagination to connect it with the product, and therefore is suggestive in nature.

Anheuser-Busch, Inc. v. Stroh Brewery Company, 587 F. Supp. 330, 337 (E.D. Mo.), aff'd, 750 F.2d 631 (8th Cir. 1984) (emphasis supplied). It is well-established that "[a] term is suggestive if it requires imagination, thought and perception to reach a conclusion as to the nature of the goods." Abercrombie & Fitch v. Hunting World, Inc., 537 F.2d 4, 11 (2d Cir. 1976); Gear, Inc. v. L.A. Gear California, Inc., 670 F. Supp. 508, 514 (S.D.N.Y. 1987). However, the "imagination, thought and perception" refers to the mental process required to connect a name that is incongruous or figurative with the product (e.g., "Roach Motel" with an insect trap or "TIDE" with soap), not the intermediate thought process needed to translate initials into the name which directly describes the salient characteristic of the product.

The Missouri court also referred to "LA" as an acronym. See Anheuser-Busch, 587 F. Supp. at 334-35 & n.7. However, "LA" is not a true a acronym which is a "word formed from the initial letters of a name." See American Heritage Dictionary of the English Language 12. As noted throughout this opinion, the initials "L" "A" are not used or pronounced as a word when they are applied to beer. A true acronym could be a word which is arbitrary or suggestive on its own without reference to the underlying words. See, e.g., Merritt Forbes & Company Incorporated v. Newman Investment Securities, Inc., 604 F. Supp. 943, 955-56 (S.D.N.Y. 1985) (denying summary judgment because the acronym "TOP's" standing for the generic term "tender option security program," may conceivably constitute a valid and protectible service mark). In contrast, "LA" is nothing more than initials.

[47] Reporters have even joined in this play. See Trial Exhibit 493 (Advertising Age headline from August 23, 1984, proclaiming "Light Audience so far for 'L.A.'").

After the BATF abandoned its restrictions on the advertising of alcoholic weakness, the use of "LA" as a subterfuge for denoting low alcohol without spelling it out became moot. However, the testimony from both sides revealed that the main value of the LA initialism lay in the hope that "LA" would become "the bar call of the Eighties." See Trial Exhibit 243 at 12. See also Transcript at 806, 1114, 1167, 1180, 1198. While the parties extolled the virtues of low alcohol beer as being part of a trend toward moderate drinking and a healthier lifestyle, see Transcript at 883, 1110-11, they also implied that customers who are supposedly seeking these values would be embarrassed to ask for a low alcohol beer in a public establishment. See Transcript at 941-42. Consequently, although there are alternate terms which can describe LA beer, the LA name is clearly [150] the most desirable. See Transcript at 912, 2019, 2028, 2217, 2221.

[*1493] Under the law of this circuit, abbreviations for generic phrases are themselves treated as generic. [48] See National Conference of Bar Examiners v. Multistate Legal [1522] Studies, 692 F.2d 478, 488 (7th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 814, 78 L. Ed. 2d 83, 104 S. Ct. 69 (1983). Likewise, an abbreviation for a merely descriptive term will be protected only if it has acquired secondary meaning. See Continental Corrugated Container Corporation v. Continental Group, Inc., 462 F. Supp. 200, 204 (S.D.N.Y. 1978).

[151] Anheuser-Busch made no serious attempt to establish that the "LA" mark had acquired secondary meaning during the brief interval between April 2, 1984, when it began using the LA mark and April 24, when Heileman also began to use the mark. A merely descriptive term has acquired secondary meaning if, through long and exclusive use, the public has come to associate the mark only with the senior user's business. See American Footwear Corporation v. General Footwear Company, 609 F.2d 655, 663 (2d Cir. 1979); Union Carbide Corporation v. Ever-Ready, Inc., 531 F.2d 366, 380 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 830, 97 S. Ct. 91, 50 L. Ed. 2d 94 (1976). The senior user has the burden of proving that its mark possessed secondary meaning at the time the junior user commenced its use of the mark. See Saratoga Vichy Spring Company, Inc. v. Lehman, 625 F.2d 1037, 1043 (2d Cir. 1980).

The undisputed evidence shows that Anheuser-Busch sold 200,000 barrels of LA beer and spent $ 27,000,000.00 on advertising by the time of trial. However, a large expenditure of money does not in itself create legally protectible rights. See American Footwear Corporation, 609 F.2d at 663; Eagle Snacks, Inc. v. Nabisco Brands, [152] Inc., 625 F. Supp. 571, 583 (D.N.J. 1985). This evidence cannot overcome the fact that there had not been adequate time for the "LA" mark to acquire secondary meaning. See Transcript at 734-35. The court has found no other case in which there has been a finding that secondary meaning had developed in a matter of weeks. To the contrary, in Gimix, Inc. v. JS & A Group, Inc., 699 F.2d 901, 907 (7th Cir. 1983), the court stated that "the period of time involved here from the introduction of the plaintiff's product in 1975 until the introduction of Iwata's similar product in 1980, is so brief as to cast serious doubt upon the very possibility of having established a strong secondary meaning . . . ." Under even less doubtful circumstances, this court has found that the "LA" mark had not acquired a secondary meaning at any time relevant to these actions.

---

[48] A few courts in other districts have advanced the proposition that the abbreviation itself must have become generic or descriptive by virtue of being commonly understood in order to be ineligible for trademark status. See, e.g., Merritt Forbes & Company Incorporated v. Newman Investment Securities, Inc., 604 F. Supp. 943, 956 (S.D.N.Y. 1985) (and cases cited therein); Kampgrounds of America v. North Delaware A-OK Campground, Inc., 415 F. Supp. 1288, 1292 (D. Del. 1976) (and cases cited therein). However, in Merritt Forbes and in Kampgrounds of America more than merely initials were at issue. In Merritt Forbes the initials formed an acronym, TOP's, while in Kampgrounds, the KOA mark was deemed protectible when considered in combination with other aspects of trade dress. These cases fail to recognize that initials are merely short forms of the words for which they stand and should be accorded the same degree of protection as those words.

In another case cited by the defendant, Modern Optics v. Univis Lens Company, 43 C.C.P.A. 970, 234 F.2d 504 (C.C.P.A. 1956), the court ruled that the initials "CV," standing for continuous vision, were not merely descriptive of trifocal lenses. The court reasoned that trifocal lenses had been sold for over fifty years without the terms "continuous vision" or "CV" being used to describe them. Id. at 505. Thus, the court found that the term "CV" was neither the necessary nor the obvious descriptor for the product. In contrast, "LA" was used from the outset to describe the unique characteristic of the new type of beer.

In sum, although Anheuser-Busch met its burden of proving that "LA" was not generic when it first began to use the mark or by the time of trial, it failed to prove that LA is a suggestive or arbitrary mark or that it had acquired secondary meaning at the time Heileman began to use it. Therefore, the court has found that, by using [153] the LA mark, Heileman and Miller have not engaged in common-law trademark infringement or any other form of unfair competition.

[*1494] (3) Likelihood of Confusion

Because this is not a trademark opposition or cancellation action, the parties' efforts to establish that LA is either a generic or a suggestive mark were disproportionate to their efforts to address the issue of confusion. These actions have been brought under the Lanham Trademark Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a), and the common law of trademark infringement and unfair competition. The crucial issue in any action for unfair competition is whether there is any likelihood that an appreciable number of ordinary purchasers are likely to be misled, or indeed simply confused, as to the source of the goods in question. See Mushroom Makers, Inc. v. R.G. Barry Corporation, 580 F.2d 44, 47 (2d Cir. 1978) (per curiam), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 1116, 59 L. Ed. 2d 75, 99 S. Ct. 1022 (1979); Maternally Yours, Inc. v. Your Maternity Shop, Inc., 234 F.2d 538, 542 (2d Cir. 1956). Even if the court had ruled that LA is a generic mark, Anheuser-Busch, as the first user, could maintain a claim for unfair competition by showing a likelihood of confusion. See Technical Trademark [154] Publishing Company Division of Dun-Donnelley Publishing Corporation v. Lebhar-Friedman, Inc., 729 F.2d 1136, 1142 (7th Cir. 1984).

Anheuser-Busch, as the claimant to trademark protection, bears the burden of proving a likelihood of confusion. See Lindy Pen Company, Inc. v. Bic Pen Corporation, 725 F.2d 1240, 1243 (9th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1188, 83 L. Ed. 2d 962, 105 S. Ct. 955 (1985). However, the defendant did not offer a relevant consumer survey or any evidence of actual confusion in its case-in-chief. The evidence at trial revealed that, although the LA marks used by the parties are virtually identical on the levels of sight, sound and meaning, Heileman displayed the L.A. mark with an equally prominent house mark, while Miller displayed the LA mark with an equally prominent single brand name, Sharp's. The weight of authority holds that the conspicuous [1523] use of housemarks virtually dispels any confusion that might otherwise result from the use of identical marks. See Lindy Pen Company, 725 F.2d at 1245 & n.4 (no confusion where "BIC" and "LINDY" prominently displayed on "Auditor's" pens); Vitarroz Corporation v. Borden, Inc., 644 F.2d 960, 968-69 (2d Cir. 1981) ("Bravo's" and "Bravo" [155] not confusing on snack food where name of manufacturers prominently displayed); McGregor-Doniger Inc. v. Drizzle Inc., 599 F.2d 1126, 1133-34 (2d Cir. 1979) ("DRIZZLE" and "drizzler" coats not confusing where latter paired with prominent display of manufacturer's name); Uniroyal, Inc. v. Kinney Shoe Corporation, 453 F. Supp. 1352, 1355-56 (S.D.N.Y. 1978) (no likelihood of confusion between "KEDS" and "Kinney KIDS" children's sneakers); Ye Olde Tavern Cheese Products, Inc. v. Planters Peanuts Division, 261 F. Supp. 200, 206 (N.D. Ill. 1966) ("Planters Ye Olde Tavern Nuts" not likely to be confused with competitor's "Ye Olde Tavern" food products where "Planters" name is very well known), aff'd mem., 394 F.2d 833 (7th Cir. 1967) (per curiam). See also Transcript at 905-09.

In addition, the court has found that the LA mark is a weak, merely descriptive mark which had not acquired secondary meaning. The parties' beers bearing this mark are all sold at the same prices, through the same channels. They are advertised through the same media, compete for the same customers, and fulfill the same function. See Transcript at 94-99, 104, 485-86, 1311-19, 1329. However, [156] by law, beer can only be sold in licensed outlets and in standard sized containers with labels approved by the BATF. Thus, consumers presumably are used to choosing among competing beers and, although beer is a relatively low priced item, they do exhibit a degree of brand loyalty. See Transcript at 903, 1203.

More importantly, there was no evidence or contention that Heileman and Miller hoped to pass off their low alcohol beers as "LA from Anheuser-Busch." Rather, in adopting and using the LA mark, they were motivated by a desire to use a name which described the product and which was most likely to be accepted by consumers. See Transcript at 325-33, 345-48, 433-37, [*1495] 446-48, 2131, 2138-40, 2236. Although Heileman and Miller were fully aware that Anheuser-Busch had already adopted the LA mark when they named their own LA beers, knowledge of prior use alone does not in itself constitute bad faith. Selecting a mark because it conveys the product's purpose or characteristics has been held to demonstrate good faith. See E.S. Originals Inc. v. Stride Rite Corporation, 656 F.

Supp. 484, 490 (S.D.N.Y. 1987); Eagle Snacks, Inc. v. Nabisco Brands, Inc., 625 F. Supp. 571, 583 [157] (D.N.J. 1985).

None of the parties offered any probative evidence of actual confusion among consumers, but Heileman introduced its Beer Label Study which was meant to determine whether there is a significant likelihood of confusion. See Trial Exhibit 440. This survey was conducted by Legal Marketing Research, Inc. under the direction of its president John Bunge during the period from July 11 through August 4 of 1984 in five cities where Heileman and Anheuser-Busch LA beers were being sold.

Five hundred and thirty consumers who said they had purchased beer within the past month were shown either a can of LA from Anheuser-Busch or a can of a Heileman LA beer. After being allowed to examine the can at length, each consumer was asked: "What company or organization puts out that product?" The interviewee was then shown the other can and the question was repeated. Those who answered either question with "I don't know" were asked whether they thought the beers were put out by the same or different companies. Out of all 530 respondents, only twenty-four (4.5%) of the interviewees said they thought both low alcohol beers were put out by the same producer because both were labeled with [158] the LA mark. See Transcript at 728-29. Most of the 400 people who recognized that the beers came from different producers said they came to this conclusion by reading the names of the producers on the beer labels. See Transcript at 731, 801-03, 826.

The Beer Display Study's method of presentation did little to duplicate market conditions. Cf. Calvin Klein Cosmetics Corporation v. Lenox Laboratories, Inc., 815 F.2d 500, 504 (8th Cir. 1987) ("A realistic evaluation of consumer confusion must attempt to recreate the conditions in which buying decisions are made, and the court should try to determine not what it would do, but what a reasonable purchaser in market conditions would do."). However, by showing the beer products to the interviewees in monadic sequence, Bunge managed to avoid the criticisms made of side-by-side comparisons. "The test is not whether the consumer will know the difference if he sees the competing products on the same shelf. It is whether he will know the [1524] difference if [one product] is singly presented and he has heard of [the competing product]." American Home Products v. Johnson Chemical Company, 589 F.2d 103, 107 (2d Cir. 1978). See also [159] James Burrough Ltd. v. Sign of the Beefeater, Inc., 540 F.2d 266, 275 (7th Cir. 1976); Union Carbide Corporation v. Ever-Ready Incorporated, 531 F.2d 366, 382 (7th Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 830, 50 L. Ed. 2d 94, 97 S. Ct. 91 (1976); Sterling Drug, Inc. v. Lincoln Laboratories, Inc., 322 F.2d 968, 971 (7th Cir. 1963); American Automobile Association (Incorporated) v. AAA Insurance Agency, Inc., 618 F. Supp. 787, 792 (W.D. Tex. 1985); American Association for Advancement of Science v. Hearst Corporation, 498 F. Supp. 244, 259 (D.D.C. 1980).

Anheuser-Busch made little headway challenging the design and methodology of the Beer Label Study, [49] but it did dispute the finding of a 4.5% level of confusion. The defendant contends that all 62 people who thought the two beers were produced by the same source should have been counted as confused, not just those who attributed their confusion to the presence of the LA mark on both cans. See Transcript at 803-18. Under this reasoning, [*1496] 11.6% of the interviewees were confused, and at least two courts have found that this percentage indicates a significant level of confusion. See James Burrough Ltd. v. Lesher, 309 F. Supp. 1154 (S.D. Ind. [160] 1969) (11%); Jockey International, Inc. v. Burkard, 185 U.S.P.Q. 201 (S.D. Cal. 1975) (11.4%).

Within the confines of the classifications made by Bunge, the 4.5% percentage of confusion falls well within the range which other courts have determined weighs against a finding of infringement. See Henri's Food Products Company, Inc. v. Kraft, Inc., 717 F.2d 352, 358-59 (7th Cir. 1983) (and cases cited therein); James Burrough Ltd. v. Sign of the Beefeater, Inc., 540 F.2d 266, 277-79 (7th Cir. 1976) (and cases cited therein); Union Carbide Corporation v. Ever-Ready Inc., 531 F.2d 366, 386 (7th Cir.) (and cases cited therein), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 830, 97 S. Ct. 91, 50 L. Ed. 2d 94 (1976).

---

[49] The defendant also suggests that even those people who named different sources for each beer should have been asked whether they thought the different sources were part of the same company. See Transcript at 818-25. The court finds no merit to this proposal, since this was not a survey of consumers' knowledge of corporate structures.

Despite the narrowness of Bunge's classification of "confused" responses, the court has given some weight to the results of the Beer Label Study, particularly because [161] the defendant offered no contradictory survey of its own. The low level of consumer confusion found, plus the plaintiffs' lack of intent to deceive or "pass off," and the lack of evidence of actual confusion have lead the court to find that it is unlikely that a significant number of consumers will be confused among the LA beers of Anheuser-Busch, Heileman and Miller.

D. Plaintiffs' Unfair Competition Claims

In addition to claims for declaratory relief and antitrust violations, Heileman and Miller both asserted claims, arising under section 43 (a) of the Lanham Trademark Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a), and common law, alleging that Anheuser-Busch engaged in unfair competition. [50] Heileman contends that Anheuser-Busch's claimed exclusivity in the LA mark would effectively deny it entry into the low alcohol beer market; that Anheuser-Busch has threatened litigation over use of the LA mark; and that Anheuser-Busch has misused its trademark applications for LA to restrain trade in the low alcohol beer market. As a result, Heileman concludes that: "Defendant's aforesaid acts and false representations constitute violations of the federal law of unfair competition as set forth in 15 U.S.C. [162] § 1125(a)" and the common law. Complaint at paras. 28 & 29.

Heileman explains that it is alleging:

> . . . that the abbreviation L.A. is a generic term when used with low alcohol beer, and hence cannot become a trademark under any circumstances. Busch fully knew the generic nature of the L.A. abbreviation, but nevertheless, filed various trademark applications, and adopted a label on which the abbreviation L.A. is marked with the symbol "TM." Busch also represented to Heileman and others, that it holds preemptive [1525] trademark rights [163] in the abbreviation L.A. for use in connection with L.A. beer. Count III further alleges that Busch's false representations constitute violations of the Lanham Act, that Heileman and defendant are in competition with respect to L.A. beers, and that Heileman is damaged by Busch's false representations. Thus, Count III properly pleads a cause under § 43 (a).

Plaintiff's Brief in Opposition to Motion for Dismissal at 23-24 (footnote and citations omitted).

Similarly, Miller alleges that:

> A-B's assertion of exclusive rights in the initialism "LA," and its efforts to enforce the same, are inconsistent with the trademark laws of the United States [*1497] (15 U.S.C. §§ 1051 et seq.) and of the various states, and with principles of unfair competition embodied in federal law (15 U.S.C. § 1125(a)) and the various states' common and statutory law all of which contemplate protection only for designations capable of distinguishing the goods of one party from those of others.
>
> A-B's use of "LA" and its assertion of and attempts to enforce exclusive rights therein constitute unfair competition, in that such actions give an erroneous impression of ownership by A-B and will hinder Miller in competing under [164] the most apt, convenient and desirable term for indicating low alcohol content.

Complaint at paras. 12, 13 & 14.

In moving to dismiss these claims at the outset of this litigation, Anheuser-Busch pointed out that they are merely restatements of the plaintiffs' antitrust allegations and are not actionable under section 43 (a) of the Lanham Trademark Act. See Memorandum in Support of Defendant's Motion to Dismiss at 7-8. Section 43 (a) has been interpreted broadly to provide a cause of action for a wide variety of deceptive practices. See, e.g., Data Cash Systems, Inc. v. JS & A Group, Inc., 480 F. Supp. 1063, 1070 (N.D. Ill. 1979), aff'd, 628 F.2d 1038 (7th Cir. 1980);

---

[50] The plaintiffs have not pressed these unfair competition claims in their posttrial summations or briefs. Therefore, it appears that these claims have been abandoned. See 20 th Century Wear, Inc. v. Sanmark-Stardust, Inc., 747 F.2d 81, 92 & n.14 (2d Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1052, 84 L. Ed. 2d 818, 105 S. Ct. 1755 (1985); Fogel v. Chestnutt, 533 F.2d 731, 738 n.7 (2d Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 824, 50 L. Ed. 2d 86, 97 S. Ct. 77 (1976); E.S. Originals Inc. v. Stride Rite Corporation, 656 F. Supp. 484, 485 & n.1, 491 & n.13 (S.D.N.Y. 1987). Even if the plaintiffs do not consider these claims abandoned, the court, in its ruling above, concludes that they are not entitled to relief.

In re Uranium Antitrust Litigation, 473 F. Supp. 393, 407 (N.D. Ill. 1979) ("Act covers something more than just trademark misuse and something less than all forms of unfair competition"). But there is no direct precedent for the type of claims the plaintiffs are raising.

Heileman relies on the single case of Chromium Industries v. Mirror Polishing & Plating Company, Inc., 448 F. Supp. 544 (N.D. Ill. 1978), in which the court ruled that the defendant's claim of exclusivity in a federally registered [165] trademark posed a sufficient threat of harassment and litigation to create a cognizable injury. However, the threat of harassment and litigation in Chromium Industries was directed toward customers of the plaintiff Chromium, not toward Chromium itself. The court noted that: "Mirror's [the defendant's] claim of exclusivity will tend to divert purchasers from Chromium to Mirror so as to avoid potential harassment of patent or trademark infringement suits." Id. at 554. By contrast, in the cases at hand, the record contains no evidence that purchasers have been diverted or threatened with litigation. Furthermore, at trial the plaintiffs were unable to show that they had been effectively denied entry into the low alcohol beer market or that Anheuser-Busch had successfully used its registration applications to restrain trade. The only injury the plaintiffs have been able to allege is that they incurred the expense of this litigation. But because Heileman and Miller did not meet their burden of proving that Anheuser-Busch has engaged in unfair competition, they are not entitled to attorney fees or any other relief for these claims.

E. Attempt to Monopolize

In Count IV of its complaint, [166] Heileman alleged that Anheuser-Busch is attempting to monopolize the low alcohol beer submarket in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, by "making excessive, unfounded and reckless complaints, demands and threats of litigation." Complaint [of G. Heileman Brewing Company, Inc.] at para. 32. Heileman further charges that:

> Defendant by its aforesaid acts, seeks to forestall plaintiff and others in their lawful use of the abbreviation "L.A." in the normal and proper promotion and sale of low alcohol beers; defendant's acts constitute a misuse of defendant's alleged trademark which defendant employs as one of its means of effectuating its aforesaid attempted monopolization and unreasonable restraint in violation of the antitrust laws.

Id. at P 34.

Miller's complaint alleges that:

> On information and belief, A-B's assertion of exclusive rights in "LA" and attempted enforcement thereof have not been done in good faith to prevent confusion, but rather have been done in an attempt to monopolize trade among the [*1498] several States in the low alcohol beer market, in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 2.

Complaint [of the Miller Brewing Company] at para. 15. [1526]

The gravaman of the plaintiffs' [167] Sherman Act claims is that Anheuser-Busch attempted to monopolize the low alcohol beer market in the United States by preventing competitors from using the LA name. The defendant allegedly tried to accomplish this illegal end by applying for LA trademark registrations (even though, according to the plaintiffs, the mark is clearly unprotectible) and by threatening competitors with baseless litigation. However, the excessive "threats," "demands," and "complaints" alleged in Heileman's complaint turned out to be nothing more than one cease and desist letter the plaintiff received from Anheuser-Busch. See Complaint [of the G. Heileman Brewing Company, Inc.] at Exhibit J. Anheuser-Busch's lawsuits against Heileman and Stroh and the counterclaims in these cases were not filed until after Heileman commenced its own case in this court.

At trial, the plaintiffs' antitrust claims failed because they were unable to prove that the trademark applications, or the "threats," or the actual litigation constituted predatory or anticompetitive acts which resulted in Anheuser-Busch's achieving a dangerous probability of successfully monopolizing the relevant market. The evidence at trial revealed [168] that Anheuser-Busch had a colorable basis for attempting to register the LA trademark, even though this court ultimately concluded that the mark is not protectible. Likewise, the court was not persuaded that the threatened or actual litigation was merely a sham. [51] One favorable court ruling does [*1499] not necessarily negate claims of this type. See In re Burlington Northern, Inc., 822 F.2d 518, 528 (5th Cir. 1987). However, the plaintiffs' position that Anheuser-Busch pursued trademark registrations and infringement [1527] suits in bad faith was undeniably damaged when, prior to this trial, the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Missouri ruled in Anheuser-Busch's favor that "LA" is a suggestive and therefore protectible trademark. See generally Anheuser-Busch Incorporated v. Stroh Brewery Company, 587 F. Supp. 330 (E.D. Mo.), aff'd, 750 F.2d 631 (8th Cir. 1984).

[169] Besides being unable to prove that Anheuser-Busch engaged in predatory, anticompetitive acts of filing sham trademark applications and lawsuits, the plaintiffs were unable to prove their contention that the low alcohol beer market in the United States is the relevant product market. [52] The court was not persuaded that a consumer submarket in low alcohol beer had actually been established or that there are no close substitutes for low alcohol beer. The plaintiffs' own marketing expert, John Nevin, testified without dispute that it takes a minimum of three months to create consumer awareness of a new product and a minimum of three months after that to reinforce that awareness. See Transcript at 923. By the time of trial, LA beers were just beginning to be sold throughout the [51] Courts have ruled that even a single sham lawsuit can serve as the basis for a cognizable claim under Section 2 of the Sherman Act. See, e.g., MCI Communications v. American Telephone and Telegraph Company, 708 F.2d 1081, 1155 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 891, 78 L. Ed. 2d 226, 104 S. Ct. 234 (1983). However, such claims have been notably unsuccessful in the context of trademark and copyright litigation. See Coca-Cola Company v. Overland, Inc., 692 F.2d 1250, 2157 n.17 (9th Cir. 1982) ("We merely pause to note that we have found no case directly supporting the proposition that the bringing of meritorious suits can constitute sham suits violative of the antitrust laws."). See also Columbia Pictures Industries, Inc. v. Redd Horne, Inc., 749 F.2d 154, 161 (3d Cir. 1984) ("a good faith attempt to enforce a copyright does not violate the antitrust laws"); Alberto-Culver Company v. Andrea Dumon, Inc., 466 F.2d 705, 711 (7th Cir. 1972) ("plaintiff's good faith effort to enforce its copyright and trademark is not the kind of exclusionary conduct condemned by § 2 of the Sherman Act"); Drop Dead Company v. S.C. Johnson & Son, Inc., 326 F.2d 87, 96 (9th Cir. 1963) (registering multiple marks for wax products, mass advertising, mass sales and bringing of colorable infringement suits are lawful acts which do not "constitute the sort of aggressive competition and promotion that antitrust law seeks to protect, particularly within the limits of lawful monopolies granted by Congress"); Toro Company v. R & R Products Company, 600 F. Supp. 400, 401-02 (D. Minn. 1984) ("The good faith attempt to protect a copyright interest, even if unsuccessful, is a defense to an action for attempted monopolization."), aff'd, 787 F.2d 1208 (8th Cir. 1986); Car-Freshner Corporation v. Auto Aid Manufacturing Corporation, 438 F. Supp. 82, 87 (N.D.N.Y. 1977) (". . . under any set of facts which could be proven by the defendants in support of their antitrust counterclaim, the acts of the plaintiffs in registering and enforcing the trademark in issue did not create a dangerous probability that the plaintiff would gain monopoly power in the market for auto air freshners. Rather, the acts complained of merely represent fair and aggressive competition which does not constitute a violation of the antitrust laws."); Armstrong Cork Company v. Armstrong Plastic Covers Company, 434 F. Supp. 860, 872 (E.D. Mo. 1977) ("good faith enforcement by the plaintiff of its trademark rights does not constitute an antitrust violation or a trademark misuse"); Sam S. Goldstein Industries, Inc. v. General Electric Company, 264 F. Supp. 403, 406 (S.D.N.Y. 1967) (plaintiff's antitrust claim that defendant, by seeking to monopolize the word "Americana" as a trademark, seeks to render it impossible for any other company to represent that its products are American in origin is patently frivolous).

---

In contrast, misuse of patent claims have met with more success. See, e.g., Walker Process Equipment, Inc. v. Food Machinery & Chemical Corporation, 382 U.S. 172, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247, 86 S. Ct. 347 (1965). In Alberto-Culver Company v. Andrea Dumon, Inc., 295 F. Supp. 1155, 1158 (N.D. Ill. 1969), aff'd in part, rev'd in part, 466 F.2d 705 (7th Cir. 1972), the court explained that "the consequences of a label copyright or trademark infringement case are different than those of a patent infringement case" in which a claimant is more likely to prevail on antitrust grounds. The owner of a patent is granted a monopoly over a particular product or invention, while the owner of a trademark merely acquires rights to a name. See Calvin Klein Cosmetics Corporation v. Lenox Laboratories, 815 F.2d 500, 503 (8th Cir. 1987). Thus, a patent owner can exclude competitors from marketing a particular product, whereas a trademark owner can only exclude competitors from using a particular name. Even if Heileman and Miller were not able to use the LA name, they could still market low alcohol beers under other names.

[52] An antitrust plaintiff has the burden of proving that the defendant possessed sufficient power to come dangerously close to achieving monopoly power and the plaintiff must also prove the boundaries of the relevant geographic and product markets within which that dangerous probability occurred. See Photovest Corporation v. Fotomat Corporation, 606 F.2d 704, 711-13 (7th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 917, 100 S. Ct. 1278, 63 L. Ed. 2d 601 (1980). Anheuser-Busch maintains that the relevant product market is simply beer. See Defendant-Counterclaimant's ("Busch") Pretrial Memorandum of Law at 21-22.

United States and, despite statements to the contrary by witnesses for Heileman, a preponderance of the evidence shows that the development of a low alcohol segment of the beer market remained only a hope or expectancy. See Transcript at 156-57, 280, 500, 881, 883-84, 1098-99, 1137, 1164, 1169, 1179-83, 1191-92, 1201, 1328-29, 1332, 1346, 2132, 2161-63, 2174-75, 2178, 2199-2202, 2221. See also Trial [170] Exhibit 205.

The evidence also shows that there are close substitutes for low alcohol beer. The unique selling point of LA beer is that it contains less alcohol than regular beer. However, the record contains substantial evidence that light (low calorie) beer also contains less alcohol, while low alcohol beer, in turn, can contain fewer calories than regular beer. See Transcript at 102, 245, 297, 411-12, 423, 435, 533-34, 1329-30, 2063, 2065, 2073-74, 2122, 2152, 2193, 2228.

In the Miller LITE litigation, the Seventh Circuit ruled that LITE (or light) is a generic name for a category of beer, in part [171] because a dictionary defined the word "light" as meaning "low alcohol content." See Miller Brewing Company v. G. Heileman Brewing Company, 561 F.2d 75, 80 (7th Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1025, 54 L. Ed. 2d 772, 98 S. Ct. 751 (1978). Miller, which had registered LITE as a trademark, grudgingly conceded that "the caloric content of beer depends primarily on alcoholic content," Id. at 81; while Heileman, which was arguing that "light" or "LITE" is a generic category descriptor, assured the court that "low in calories" adds nothing to "low in alcoholic content." [53] Id. at 81 n.11. The court of appeals accepted these representations and noted that: "In any event, we can take judicial notice that alcoholic and caloric content go hand in hand." Id.

[*1500] In the instant cases the parties did not go so far as to admit that low alcohol beer is simply old beer in new bottles, [172] but the plaintiffs did not meet their burden of showing that LA beer is so unique and dominant in the market that there is no acceptable substitute. See Frito-Lay, Inc. v. Bachman Company, 659 F. Supp. 1129, 1136-37 (S.D.N.Y. 1986). Consequently, the court has ruled that, at a minimum, the relevant product market is comprised of light beers and all other beers which contain less alcohol than regular beer. The plaintiffs made no attempt to show that Anheuser-Busch had a reasonable probability of dominating this submarket, nor could they. Light beer sales far exceed the sales of all other beers in this submarket and it is undisputed that Miller has captured a better than fifty-percent share of light beer sales. See Transcript at 60, 286, 438, 2210.

In the end, the plaintiffs failed to meet their burden of proving any of the elements of their Sherman Act claims (with the exception of the relevant geographic market). Accordingly, relief will be denied and judgment will be entered in favor of Anheuser-Busch on the antitrust claims. [1528]

ORDER

Based on the Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law set forth above, the court ORDERS that judgment be entered declaring that the use of the [173] term "LA" (or "L.A.") by the G. Heileman Brewing Company, Inc. and by the Miller Brewing Company on their low alcohol beers does not infringe any rights of or constitute unfair competition with Anheuser-Busch Incorporated.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the plaintiffs' requests for permanent injunctive relief ARE DENIED. Given the court's findings and conclusions, the court would not expect that Anheuser-Busch will continue to interfere with the use of the "LA" name for low alcohol beer by Heileman and Miller. The plaintiffs have produced no evidence that Anheuser-Busch will continue to threaten lawsuits, nor have they otherwise established the possibility of prospective irreparable injury.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the G. Heileman Brewing Company, Inc.'s claims for relief pursuant to 15 U.S.C. §§ 1056, 1114 & 1119 ARE DISMISSED for lack of standing.

---

[53] Heileman tried to change its position in the instant case. On direct examination Heileman's chief executive officer Russell Cleary was asked: "Does your low-calorie products or do your low-calorie products have low alcohol?" Cleary answered, "No." See Transcript at 297. See also Transcript at 50, 102, 297, 435, 883.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that judgment be entered against plaintiffs G. Heileman Brewing Company, Inc. and the Miller Brewing Company and in favor of defendant Anheuser-Busch Incorporated on the plaintiffs' claims that the defendant is engaging in acts of unfair competition under 15 U.S.C. § 1125 (a) or the common law.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED [174] that judgment be entered against plaintiffs G. Heileman Brewing Company, Inc. and the Miller Brewing Company and in favor of defendant Anheuser-Busch Incorporated on the plaintiffs' claims that the defendant has attempted to monopolize the low alcohol beer market in the United States in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 2.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the plaintiffs' requests for attorney fees pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 1117 ARE DENIED.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Anheuser-Busch Incorporated's Motion for Preliminary Injunction (filed June 11, 1984) IS DENIED.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that judgment be entered in favor of plaintiffs G. Heileman Brewing Company, Inc. and the Miller Brewing Company and against defendant Anheuser-Busch Incorporated on the defendant's claims that the plaintiffs engaged in common-law trademark infringement of the LA mark.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that judgment be entered in favor of plaintiffs G. Heileman Brewing Company, Inc. and the Miller Brewing Company and against defendant Anheuser-Busch Incorporated on the defendant's claims arising under 15 U.S.C. § 1125 (a) and the common law that the plaintiffs engaged in acts of unfair competition.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that judgment [175] be entered in favor of plaintiffs G. Heileman Brewing Company, Inc. and the Miller Brewing Company and against defendant Anheuser-Busch Incorporated on [*1501] the defendant's claims arising under the Illinois Anti-Dilution Act, III, Rev. Stat. ch. 140, § 22, that the plaintiffs have diluted the LA mark.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Anheuser-Busch Incorporated's requests for attorney fees and costs ARE DENIED.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Civil Action No. 84-C-511 IS DISMISSED with each party to bear its own costs.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Civil Action No. 84-C-738 IS DISMISSED with each party to bear its own costs.

Done and Ordered in Chambers at the United States Courthouse, Milwaukee, Wisconsin this 31st day of December, 1987.

End of Document

Pennsylvania ex rel. Zimmerman v. Pepsico, Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit

November 17, 1987, Argued ; January 4, 1988, Filed

No. 87-5351

Reporter

836 F.2d 173 *; 1988 U.S. App. LEXIS 16 ; 1987-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,814; 1988 WL 84

Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, ex rel. LeRoy S. Zimmerman, Attorney General of Pennsylvania Appellant v. PepsiCo, Inc., Allegheny Pepsi-Cola Bottling Company, Inc., and Confair Bottling Company, Inc.

Prior History: [1] Appeal from the United States District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania, D.C. Civil No. 86-1799.

Core Terms

soft drink, resellers, bottlers, territory, amended complaint, conspiracy, horizontal, allegations, antitrust, group boycott, manufacturer, products, licensing, retailers, sales, anti trust law, district court, Sherman Act, transshipping, defendants', effective, trademark, boycott, syrup, consumers, prices, co-conspirators, complaints, customers, practices

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

HN1[] Clayton Act, Remedies

On appeal of an order dismissing a case for failure to state a claim under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), the court's standard of review is whether, taking the allegations of the complaint as true, and liberally giving the plaintiff the benefit of all inferences that may be drawn therefrom, it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts upon which relief could be granted.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Trademark Law > Conveyances > Franchises

Trademark Law > Conveyances > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Trademark Law > Conveyances > Licenses

Trademark Law > ... > Licenses > Licensable Subject Matter > Tying Arrangements

HN2[] Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Licenses

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 3501.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Trademark Law > Conveyances > Licenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Trademark Law > Conveyances > Franchises

Trademark Law > ... > Licenses > Licensable Subject Matter > Tying Arrangements

HN3[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 3502.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions > Preservation for Review

HN4[] Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions, Preservation for Review

A trial court should not be reversed on grounds that were never urged or argued in the court below.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Exempt Cartels & Joint Ventures

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

HN5[] Exemptions & Immunities, Exempt Cartels & Joint Ventures

The Soft Drink Interbrand Competition Act of 1980, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 3501-3503, explicitly provides for the enforcement of agreements limiting extraterritorial sales both directly and indirectly and is aimed at combating both bottlers and third parties who transship. Providing for the limitation of manufacture, distribution, and sale only for ultimate resale to consumers within a defined geographic area, the language of the Act squarely applies to the entire chain of distribution, from initial manufacture right through the ultimate sale to the consumer.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

HN6[] Horizontal Refusals to Deal, Boycotts

The Soft Drink Interbrand Competition Act of 1980, 15 U.S.C.S. § 3502, exempts from the Act's protection price-fixing agreements, horizontal restraints of trade, or group boycotts, if such agreements, restraints, or boycotts would otherwise be unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7[] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, forbids any contract, combination or conspiracy, in restraint of trade.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

Criminal Law & Procedure > Preliminary Proceedings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN8[] Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure do not require a claimant to set out in detail the facts upon which he bases his claim. To the contrary, all the Rules require is a short and plain statement of the claim that will give the defendant fair notice of what the plaintiff's claim is and the grounds upon which it rests.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN9[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

The plaintiff must allege sufficient facts in the complaint to survive a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Motion Practice > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Motion Practice > Opposing Memoranda

HN10[] Pleadings, Amendment of Pleadings

A complaint may not be amended by the briefs in opposition to a motion to dismiss.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN11[] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

The Soft Drink Interbrand Competition Act of 1980, 15 U.S.C.S. § 3502, contains an exception for price fixing agreements, horizontal restraints of trade, or group boycotts, if such agreements, restraints, or boycotts would otherwise be unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

HN12[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

A classic boycott exists where there is concerted action with a purpose either to exclude a person or group from the market, or to accomplish some other anti-competitive object, or both.

Counsel: Eugene F. Waye (Argued), LeRoy S. Zimmerman, Carl S. Hisiro, Kelly H. Greensmith, Office of the Attorney General, for Appellant.

Fred A. Freund (Argued), Richard M. Steuer, Kaye, Scholer, Fierman, Hays and Handler, Rod J. Pera, Alan R. Boynton, Jr., McNees, Wallace & Nurick, Gerard W. Casey, Robert K. Biggart, PepsiCo, Inc., For Appellees PepsiCo., Inc. and Allegheny Pepsi-Cola Bottling Co., Inc.

James B. Kobak, Jr., (Argued), Robert J. Sisk, David W. Wiltenburg, Hughes, Hubbard & Reed, J. David Smith, McCormick, Rieder, Nichols, Sarno, Bahl & Knecht, for Appellee Confair Bottling Company, Inc.

Judges: Seitz, Hutchinson, and Aldisert, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: ALDISERT

Opinion

[*174] OPINION OF THE COURT

ALDISERT, Circuit Judge.

The question for decision in this antitrust case of first impression under the Soft Drink Interbrand Competition Act of 1980, 15 U.S.C. §§ 3501-3503, is whether the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, as a parens patriae plaintiff, properly set forth a claim on which relief could be granted in its [2] complaint against PepsiCo, Inc., a soft drink manufacturer, and two Pepsi-Cola bottlers. After affording Pennsylvania an opportunity to amend, the district court analyzed the amended complaint's allegations and, concluding that the plaintiff had failed to mount the hurdles imposed by the Soft Drink Act, dismissed the action for failure to state a claim under Rule 12(b)(6), F.R. Civ. P., 658 F. Supp. 816. Pennsylvania has appealed and we will affirm.

The district court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1337. Jurisdiction on appeal is proper based on 28 U.S.C. § 1291.

I.

PepsiCo, Inc. makes soft drink syrup and concentrate, the flavoring ingredients in its trademarked soft drinks. Allegheny and Confair are two Pepsi-Cola bottlers; Allegheny is a wholly-owned subsidiary of PepsiCo. The bottlers buy syrup and concentrate from PepsiCo to produce and sell carbonated soft drinks. Each is licensed by PepsiCo to produce and market its soft drinks within an exclusive geographic territory in Pennsylvania. Both Allegheny and Confair sell soft drinks to distributors, retailers, and other resellers. These resellers are independent [3] operators having no licensing agreements with either PepsiCo or the bottlers.

Although resellers generally sell retail, some sell wholesale to other resellers. Under such circumstances, the wholesaling reseller becomes a competitor of the wholesaling bottler. When resellers sell to other [*175] resellers outside of their bottler's territory, the practice is known as "transshipping."

Pennsylvania alleges that PepsiCo, Allegheny, and Confair have conspired to eliminate horizontal competition between bottlers and resellers by prohibiting sales between resellers. Specifically, Pennsylvania claims that the three defendants have engaged in the following practices: using a coding identification system to trace and monitor soft drink sales; fining bottlers when their product is shipped out of their territory; refusing to deal with resellers who enage in transshipping; refusing to deal with resellers who buy from or sell to other resellers; threatening termination of resellers who engage in such sales; and limiting sales to resellers to the amount the reseller needs solely for its own retail sales, in order to prevent that reseller from wholesaling.

Pennsylvania brought a parens [4] patriae action in the district court, alleging that defendants' practices violated section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and seeking an injunction against defendants pursuant to the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 26. Defendants moved to dismiss for failure to state a claim on which relief could be granted. Rule 12(b)(6), F.R. Civ. P. Pennsylvania filed an amended complaint. Defendants again moved to dismiss. On April 28, 1987, the district court granted defendants' motion. HN1[] Our standard of review of the district court's dismissal is whether, taking the allegations of the complaint as true, and liberally giving the plaintiff the benefit of all inferences that may be drawn therefrom, it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts upon which relief could be granted. Wisniewski v. Johns-Manville Corp., 759 F.2d 271, 273 (3d Cir. 1985).

II.

Pennsylvania's case stands or falls on federal statutory authority. Just as the Sherman and Clayton Acts were designed to define antitrust violations, the Soft Drink Act [5] was enacted to remove certain soft drink industry practices from the reach of the antitrust laws:

> HN2[] Nothing contained in any antitrust law shall render unlawful the inclusion and enforcement in any trademark licensing contract or agreement . . . of provisions . . . limiting the licensee, directly or indirectly, to the manufacture, distribution, and sale of such product only for ultimate resale to consumers within a defined geographic area: Provided, That such product is in substantial and effective competition with other products of the same general class in the relevant market or markets.

15 U.S.C. § 3501.

The Act insures that "nothing contained in any antitrust law" shall render enforcement of territorial restraints unlawful, except where it is alleged and proved that competition among soft drink brands -- i.e., interbrand competition -- is not substantial and effective.

The Act also includes a second substantive section that provides:

> [6] HN3[] Nothing in this chapter shall be construed to legalize the enforcement of provisions described in section 3501 of this title in trademark licensing contracts or agreements described in that section by means of price fixing agreements, horizontal restraints of trade, or group boycotts, if such agreements, restraints, or boycotts would otherwise be unlawful.

15 U.S.C. § 3502.

The genesis of the Act is in the Supreme Court's rulings on vertical restraints, and in the effect of those rulings on standard soft drink industry distribution practices. See Note, The Soft Drink Interbrand Competition Act of 1980: Antitrust Loses its Fizz, 18:1 Harv. J. on Legis. 91 (1981) (hereinafter "Note"). In 1967, the Supreme Court, in the now overruled Schwinn decision, held that, under certain circumstances, manufacturer-imposed territorial restraints are per se illegal under section 1 of the Sherman Act. United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., 388 U.S. 365, 382, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1249, 87 S. Ct. 1856 (1967). The Schwinn decision helped launch a Federal Trade Commission investigation into soft drink industry distribution practices. [7] In 1971, that investigation culminated [*176] in the filing of complaints against seven soft drink syrup companies. See Note, supra, at 108.

During the pendency of those actions, the Supreme Court overruled the Schwinn decision in Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 (1977). In Sylvania, the Court held that the law should "return to the rule of reason that governed vertical restrictions prior to Schwinn." Id. at 59. In 1978, relying in part on Sylvania, the FTC ruled that certain territorial restrictions existing in the soft drink industry were unlawful. Coca Cola Co., 91 F.T.C. 517 (1978), 207 U.S. App. D.C. 1, 642 F.2d 1387 (D.C. Cir. 1981) (remanding for dismissal); PepsiCo, Inc., 91 F.T.C. 680 (1978), 207 U.S. App. D.C. 1, 642 F.2d 1387 (D.C. Cir. 1981) (same). Those decisions were the primary stimuli to the enactment of the Soft Drink Act in 1980. See H.R. Rep. No. 1118, 96th Cong., 2d Sess. 6, reprinted in 1980 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 2373, 2375; Note, supra, at 106.

The Soft Drink Act was adopted after [8] Congress conducted an intensive investigation into the soft drink industry. In passing the Act, Congress determined that the exclusive territorial distribution agreements common to the soft drink industry warranted protection because that industry was a prototype of industries in which territorial restraints foster interbrand competition. See H. Rep. No. 1118, reprinted in 1980 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News at 2377. Such restraints encourage each bottler to invest and promote in his own territory, and prevent "free riding" by sellers from outside the territory on the bottler's investment and effort. As described in the Senate Report accompanying the Act:

> Under the trademark licensing system which exists in the soft drink industry, the franchise company produces and sells syrups or flavoring concentrates pursuant to trademark licensing agreements with independent > bottlers, participates in advertising and promotional expenditures made in connection with the trademarked products, provides advice and technical assistance on production, quality control, management, and sales problems, and assists in development and test marketing of new products and containers.

>
> The bottler, [9] in turn, manufactures, distributes and sells the trademarked products and provides the capital investment necessary for his market. He determines the plant and equipment to be used, the volume of production by size and type of container, the product mix, the wholesale price to be charged, and the manner in which he can maximize his market penetration to secure the widest possible distribution of his products throughout the territory.

S. Rep. No. 645, 96th Cong., 2d Sess. 3 (1980).

Congress considered what would happen if the long-standing practice of territorial exclusivity was eradicated:

> If territories are eliminated, wholesale prices for non-returnable packages may fall temporarily for large volume accounts, principally chain stores. However, it is the committee's opinion that it is unlikely that chain stores will pass on these reduced prices to their customers because their past practice has been to maintain a retail price differential between their own private label soft drinks and the franchised brands. Moreover, it is clear that prices in non-chain stores, which account for 55-60 percent of sales, would rise and the cheaper returnable bottles would be more [10] difficult to find.

Id. at 9. From these findings, Congress concluded that "the public policy stated in the antitrust laws would be better served by retention of the existing, competitive structure of the soft drink industry under the standards of this bill." Id.

III.

Having examined the statute at issue, we turn to the questions presented. At the outset, we must address a threshold issue. Pennsylvania alleges that the district court erred in concluding that the Soft Drink Act applied to defendants' conduct without first making factual findings on the existence of substantial and effective competition in the relevant market. In the district court, [*177] Pennsylvania made no effort to contend by factual allegations or otherwise that the Act did not apply because of an absence of "substantial and effective competition with other products of the same general class in the relevant market or markets." 15 U.S.C. § 3501. The House Report recommending passage of the bill placed this burden squarely on the plaintiff. "If a plaintiff cannot establish that there is an absence of substantial and effective competition within the territory, then [11] the existence and enforcement of such arrangements would not violate the antitrust laws." H. Rep. No. 1118, reprinted in 1980 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News at 2389. Neither the original complaint nor the amended complaint alleged that PepsiCo's products do not face "substantial and effective competition" from other products in the same general class in the relevant market.

As Justice Stevens stated in Associated General Contractors of Cal. v. California State Counsel of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 526, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983), "it is not proper to assume that [a plaintiff] can prove facts that it has not alleged or that the defendants have violated the antitrust laws in ways that have not been alleged." But there is another reason for putting this issue aside. We have held on numerous occasions that HN4[] "a trial court should not be reversed on grounds that were never urged or argued in the court below." Caisson Corp. v. Ingersoll-Rand Co., 622 F.2d 672, 680 (3d Cir. 1980). Thus, we cannot conclude that the district court erred in applying [12] the Act without making findings on the issue of substantial and effective competition in the relevant market.

IV.

The centerpiece of Pennsylvania's complaint was the allegation that not only did PepsiCo prohibit bottlers from transshipping directly into other territories, but that all three defendants prohibited both bottlers and resellers from aiding and abetting third party transshippers. The plain language of the Act flies in the face of these crucial allegations. HN5[] The Act explicitly provides for the "enforcement" of agreements limiting extraterritorial sales both "directly or indirectly," and is aimed at combatting both bottlers and third parties who transship. Providing for the limitation of manufacture, distribution, and sale "only for ultimate resale to consumers within a defined geographic area," the language of the Act squarely applies to the entire chain of distribution, from initial manufacture right through the ultimate sale to the consumer. We believe that it is unquestionably permissible for PepsiCo to require a bottler to ensure that the "ultimate" resales of the PepsiCo products [13] it produces will be to consumers within its own territory.

We do not find it necessary to go beyond the plain language of the Act to conclude that it applies to transshipments by retailers as well as by bottlers. Yet were it necessary, a resort to the legislative history makes no doubt about the intent of Congress. A number of transshippers testified against the Act, but the record shows that Congress unequivocally rejected their position. See Hearings Before the Subcomm. on Monopolies and Commercial Law of the Comm. on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives on H.R. 3567 and H.R. 3573, 96th Cong., 1st and 2d Sess. 196-317 (hereinafter 1980 Hearings); see also S. Rep. No. 645, 96th Cong., 2d Sess. 10 (1980) (bill precludes "indirect evasions" of license agreements); Exclusive Territorial Allocation Legislation: Hearings Before the Subcomm. on Antitrust and Monopoly of the Comm. on the Judiciary of the United States Senate, 92d Cong., 2d Sess. 356 (1972) ("If we don't have this territorial exclusivity law, [transshipment] is just what is going to happen") (remark by P. Chumbris); id. at 381-83 (remark by C. Bangert); 1980 Hearings, 229-30, 518, 528 [14] (questions posed by Chairman Rodino) ("under this legislation, the retailer would not be able to purchase soft drinks outside the territory"); 126 Cong. Rec. 11358 (1980) (remarks by Sen. Baucus); S. Rep. No. 188, 93d Cong., 1st Sess. 5-6 (1973) (bill makes lawful license provisions which have the effect of precluding indirect evasions of the licensing agreement).

[*178] V.

We now turn to the question of horizontal restraint. Pennsylvania has alleged a conspiracy among PepsiCo, Allegheny, and Confair to eliminate competition for sales of Pepsi-Cola to third parties. The Commonwealth alleged that the defendants were consciously committed to a common scheme of withholding the product from certain resellers so that the resellers could not compete with the bottlers. At argument, Pennsylvania emphasized that it does not rely on theories of vertical restraint and that such allegations in the complaint were set forth only "to show the total scheme of restraints." Its brief makes the same point: "This is a case of first impression, as no court has considered the Soft Drink Act in the context of a horizontal conspiracy among soft drink bottlers and their syrup manufacturer to restrain [15] sales between resellers." Br. for appellant at 8.

Section 3502 of the Soft Drink Act HN6[] exempts from the Act's protection "price-fixing agreements, horizontal restraints of trade, or group boycotts, if such agreements, restraints, or boycotts would otherwise be unlawful." 15 U.S.C. § 3502. According to appellant, its allegations of horizontal conspiracy and group boycott are sufficient to invoke the exemption provision of section 3502. It thus contends that defendants are constrained from interposing the Soft Drink Act as a total legal defense to the amended complaint.

We shall now proceed to examine Pennsylvania's horizontal conspiracy contention, but before we do we make clear that we need not, and do not, decide the extent to which the Act protects vertical restraints. Rather, our inquiry is confined to the single issue of whether, given the protection of the Soft Drink Act afforded the defendants, Pennsylvania's complaint can be fairly read as properly alleging an illegal horizontal conspiracy. [1]

---

[1] Because this Act is sui generis to the soft drink industry, we need not analyze at length the many cases on which Pennsylvania relies. Thus, even if the holding of Cernuto Inc. v. United Cabinet Co., 595 F.2d 164 (3d Cir. 1979), survives the holding and rationale of Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984), it is of no help. In Cernuto, there were no exclusive territories. The supplier had two competing dealers in the same area and the first dealer allegedly undertook to eliminate the second. The same was true in Tunis Bros. Co. v. Ford Motor Co., 763 F.2d 1482 (3d Cir. 1985), vacated and remanded, 475 U.S. 1105, 106 S. Ct. 1509, 89 L. Ed. 2d 909 (1986), on remand 823 F.2d 49 (3d Cir. 1987). In United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127, 16 L. Ed. 2d 415, 86 S. Ct. 1321 (1966), the supplier had many dealers. Some of them discounted and the non-discounters persuaded the supplier to take action against the discounters. Pennsylvania's so-called group boycott cases are not relevant either. These spring from scenarios in which a group of competitors hatched a plan to eliminate a competitor at the same level of competition among themselves. They then issued ultimatums to all the

[16] A.

A horizontal conspiracy is governed by section 1 of the Sherman Act, HN7[] which forbids "any contract, combination . . . or conspiracy, in restraint of trade. . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Economic values have played an important role in the development of statutes and case law regulating the market by permitting or prohibiting particular economic conduct. See, e.g., Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). The dominant value, of course, is the maintenance of competitive commercial and industrial activity in those areas to which the Sherman Act applies. See Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 (1976). In the present case, the concern is with the maintenance of competition in those areas controlled by the Soft Drink Act. The other value to which the courts have attached importance, as did Congress in adopting the Soft Drink Act, is economic efficiency. See, e.g., Broadcast Music, Inc. v. CBS, 441 U.S. 1, 20, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1, 99 S. Ct. 1551 [*179] (1979). [17] In a competitive economy, there is a clear goal of efficiency in production, distribution, and resource allocation. We must agree that there is no basic conflict between competition and efficiency.

Congress decided that the distribution practices of the soft drink industry merited special protection on the theory that territorial restraints foster the competitive spirit by encouraging each bottler to invest and promote in its own territory. See H. Rep. No. 1118, reprinted in 1980 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News at 2390. Congress also made the calculated judgment that sellers outside a territory could not be intrusive beneficiaries of a bottler's investment and effort. This summarizes, albeit in simplistic form, the basic foundation upon which we must analyze Pennsylvania's allegation of a horizontal conspiracy.

B.

The issued is joined head-on by the parties before us. Pennsylvania asserts that the Soft Drink Act does not apply. It argues that the amended complaint alleges a per se unlawful horizontal conspiracy, and that the Act excludes such per se unlawful restraints from its coverage. PepsiCo, Allegheny, and Confair contend that the conduct alleged in the amended [18] complaint falls within the protection of the Act. The question presented on this appeal comes down to whether the appellant adequately pleaded a per se illegal horizontal conspiracy, which would be excluded from the Act's protection. 15 U.S.C. § 3502. If not, the Act applies, and we must affirm the district court's dismissal of the amended complaint.

Before examining the specifics of the complaint, we summarize the ruling case law governing the pleading obligation of a plaintiff in an antitrust case. Our starting point is Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957):

> HN8[] The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure do not require a claimant to set out in detail the facts upon which he bases his claim. To the contrary, all the Rules require is "a short and plain statement of the claim" that will give the defendant fair notice of what the plaintiff's claim is and the grounds upon which it rests. The illustrative forms appended to the Rules plainly demonstrate this. Such simplified "notice pleading" is made possible by the liberal [19] opportunity for discovery and the other pretrial procedures established by the Rules to disclose more precisely the basis of both claim and defense and to define more narrowly the disputed facts and issues.

Id. at 47-48 (footnotes omitted).

---

suppliers or customers in their market. See St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Bamy, 438 U.S. 531, 57 L. Ed. 2d 932, 98 S. Ct. 2923 (1978); Los Angeles Meat & Provision Drivers Union v. United States, 371 U.S. 94, 9 L. Ed. 2d 150, 83 S. Ct. 162 (1961); Radiant Burners, Inc. v. Peoples Gas Light & Coal Co., 364 U.S. 656, 5 L. Ed. 2d 358, 81 S. Ct. 365 (1961); Fashion Originators' Guild v. FTC, 312 U.S. 457, 85 L. Ed. 949, 61 S. Ct. 703 (1941); Paramount Famous Lasky Corp. v. United States, 282 U.S. 30, 75 L. Ed. 145, 51 S. Ct. 42 (1930).

Speaking through Judge Seitz, this court in 1968 admonished that "we should be extremely liberal in construing antitrust complaints." Knuth v. Erie-Crawford Dairy Coop., 395 F.2d 420, 423 (3d Cir. 1968), cert. denied, 410 U.S. 913, 35 L. Ed. 2d 278, 93 S. Ct. 966 (1973). But, as Judge Joseph S. Lord III ably pointed out in 1980, "while antitrust complaints are not subject to especially stringent pleadings, see Knuth, supra, neither are they exempt from the federal rules." Sims v. Mack Truck Corp., 488 F. Supp. 592, 608 (E.D. Pa. 1980). Judge Friendly hammered home the same point in Klebanow v. New York Produce Exch., 344 F.2d 294, 299 (2d Cir. 1965):

> A mere allegation that defendants violated the antitrust laws as to a particular plaintiff and commodity no more complies with Rule 8 than an allegation which says only [20] that a defendant made an undescribed contract with the plaintiff and breached it, or that a defendant owns a car and injured plaintiff by driving it negligently.

Even given the teachings of Conley, which we must follow in all events, HN9[] the plaintiff must allege sufficient facts in the complaint to survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion. Confronted with such a motion, the court must review the allegations of fact contained in the complaint; for this purpose the court does not consider conclusory recitations of law. Rule 8(a) requires "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Rule 8(a), F.R. Civ. P. (emphasis added). The Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit has [*180] held that dismissal with prejudice of a "bare bones" allegation of antitrust conspiracy without any supporting facts is appropriate where, as here, the plaintiff has already amended his complaint once with leave of the court. Heart Disease Research Found. v. General Motors Corp., 463 F.2d 98, 100 (2d Cir. 1972). Moreover, in a case involving dismissal [21] of an amended complaint, the Supreme Court noted that the plaintiff "had an adequate opportunity to amend its pleading to add failed allegations demonstrating that the District Court's decision to dismiss the complaint was based on a misunderstanding of its antitrust claim." Associated Gen. Contractors of Cal. v. California State Counsel of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983). Speaking through Justice Stevens, the Court stated:

> As the case comes to us, we must assume that the [plaintiff] can prove the facts alleged in its amended complaint. It is not, however, proper to assume that the [plaintiff] can prove facts that it has not alleged or that the defendants have violated the antitrust laws in ways that have not been alleged.

Id. at 526 n.11.

Accordingly, we will review the plaintiff's amended complaint in detail, keeping in mind that Pennsylvania's rights rise no higher than the facts it has alleged, and that the defendants cannot be said to have violated the antitrust laws in ways that have not been alleged.

C.

Both the original and the amended complaints alleged that PepsiCo had granted [22] two bottlers, Allegheny and Confair, exclusive trademark licenses to bottle and sell PepsiCo soft drinks within exclusive geographic territories located in sections of Pennsylvania. App. at 6, 56. In both complaints Pennsylvania alleged that pursuant to the licenses, "defendants and their co-conspirators" refused to sell to retailers or other resellers who made a practice of reselling PepsiCo products to customers located outside the territory, in other bottlers' territories. Id. at 10, 59.

Both complaints also asserted that "defendants and their co-conspirators" refused to sell to resellers who bought PepsiCo products from or sold them to other resellers wherever located. Id. The Commonwealth alleged that bottlers were subject to monetary penalties if resellers in their territory engaged in shipping to customers located outside the territory. Id. The amended complaint added the allegation that "defendants and their co-conspirators" tracked any such shipping by means of a coding identification system. Id. at 58. Further, the original complaint alleged that "defendants and their co-conspirators" had "told" retailers not to sell to other retailers, and had "terminated" [23] them as customers or "limited" their volume if they failed to comply. Id. at 10. The amended complaint revised this allegation, asserting that "defendants and their co-conspirators" would "combine with resellers not to sell soft drink to other resellers," and would "threaten" to either terminate them or limit their volume if they did not comply. Id. at 59.

The most prominent new feature in the amended complaint consisted of eight paragraphs of background allegations. The first of these substituted the word " resellers" for "retailers" (the term used in the original complaint), but defined "resellers" to include virtually every type of retailer who bought soft drinks from a bottler. Id. at 57. The amended complaint alleged that these resellers were independent from the bottlers and from PepsiCo. Id. at 58. It further alleged that Allegheny and Confair had territories that were proximate to one another, that they sometimes charged different prices from one another for the same item, and that they sometimes charged different prices to different customers for the same item within their own territories. Id. Finally, the amended complaint alleged that resellers bought [24] from other resellers because their local bottler "charge[d] higher prices," refused to supply them, or limited their volume. Id.

In addition to the factual allegations, the amended complaint set forth two averments of law:

> [*181] 23. Defendants' conduct consisted of, among other things, horizontal restraints of trade, group boycotts and agreements which, directly or indirectly, fixed or stabilized prices.
>
> 24. Defendants' conduct is not exempt from the antitrust laws under the defense provided by the Soft Drink Interbrand Competition Act of 1980, 15 U.S.C. §§ 3501 et seq.

App. at 59-60.

In both the original and amended complaints, appellant concluded by requesting that the alleged agreements be "decreed per se unreasonable restraints of trade in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1," and that an injunction be issued against refusals to deal with resellers and against imposing any system "to enforce geographic bottling territories against resellers." App. at 11-12, 61.

VI.

It is one thing to set forth theories in a brief; it is quite another to make proper allegations [25] in a complaint. Because the soft drink industry is involved, Pennsylvania has a pleading burden much higher than that in a mine-run antitrust complaint. In a Rule 12(b)(6) motion resting on the Soft Drink Act, the district court should look only to the complaint's averments in order to make two critical determinations: what specific antitrust conduct was alleged in the complaint, and what conduct was permitted or not covered by the Act. Thus, in the case at bar, the legal theories set forth in Pennsylvania's brief are helpful only to the extent that they find support in the allegations set forth in the complaint. "It is axiomatic that HN10[] the complaint may not be amended by the briefs in opposition to a motion to dismiss." Car Carriers, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 745 F.2d 1101, 1107 (7th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1054, 84 L. Ed. 2d 821, 105 S. Ct. 1758 (1984). Accordingly, we cannot see much strength in two pillars supposedly constructed as mighty structures in Pennsylvania's horizontal conspiracy case.

A.

First, Pennsylvania contends that it alleged [26] in its complaint "[a] conspiracy between two soft drink bottlers, with or without the help of their syrup manufacturer, to eliminate competition by resellers and to boycott resellers. . . ." Br. for appellant at 19. The representation in the brief, however, does not properly describe what was said in the complaint. The allegations in the amended complaint consistently refer to conduct by "defendants and their co-conspirators" -- not otherwise identified. The complaint does not allege any agreement or conspiracy attributable solely to the competing bottlers, without PepsiCo. Moreover, Pennsylvania cannot base its claim on any conspiracy between PepsiCo and Allegheny. A parent company cannot conspire with its wholly owned subsidiary for purposes of section 1 of the Sherman Act. Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984); Garshman v. Universal Resources Holding Inc., 824 F.2d 223, 230 (3d Cir. 1987).

Equally significant is the fact that Pennsylvania did not allege any meetings between Allegheny and Confair, any communications between them, or any other means by which their alleged conspiracy [27] came about. This notwithstanding that in this circuit, "only allegations of conspiracy which are particularized . . . will be deemed sufficient." Garshman v. Universal Resources Holding, Inc., 641 F. Supp. 1359, 1370 (D.N.J. 1986), aff'd 824 F.2d 223 (3d Cir. 1987) (quoting Kalmanovitz v. G. Heileman Brewing Co., 595 F. Supp. 1385, 1400 (D. Del. 1984), aff'd, 769 F.2d 152 (3d Cir. 1985)). Instead, all that appellant was apparently prepared to plead was a naked conclusion dropped into the amended complaint, reciting a bare-bones assertion that there had been a "horizontal" conspiracy.

Although the Supreme Court in Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986), addressed our present concern in the context of a motion for summary judgment and not a motion to dismiss, what the court said there is not [*182] irrelevant to our present inquiry: "To survive a motion for summary judgment . . . plaintiff . . . must present evidence 'that tends to exclude the possibility' that the alleged conspirators acted independently." Id. at 588 [28] (quoting Monsanto v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984).

In Car Carriers, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 745 F.2d 1101, 1108 (7th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1054, 84 L. Ed. 2d 821, 105 S. Ct. 1758 (1985), the court stated that the attachment of per se labels to defendants' conduct is inadequate in itself to sustain a complaint. "The defendants' alleged activity must be scrutinized to determine whether such a characterization is appropriate." Id. The court further remarked that the pleader may not evade the requirements of proper pleading "by merely alleging a bare legal conclusion." Id. at 1106. Thus, a plaintiff must plead the essential facts of a horizontal restraint or group boycott in order to plead either properly.

What this court said on this subject almost 50 years ago bears repeating:

> The vital allegations [in stating a cause of action under the Sherman or Clayton Acts] are similar to those in any civil conspiracy case. A general allegation of conspiracy without a statement of the facts is an allegation of a legal conclusion and insufficient [29] of itself to constitute a cause of action. Although detail is unnecessary, the plaintiffs must plead the facts constituting the conspiracy, its object and accomplishment. The plaintiffs have pleaded none of these facts. Neither the date of the alleged conspiracy nor its attendant circumstances are set forth. Nor is it averred who made the statements, where, when or to whom.

Black & Yates v. Mahogany Ass'n, 129 F.2d 227, 231-32 (3d Cir. 1941). The law in this regard has not changed. See Garshman v. Universal Resources Holding, Inc., 824 F.2d 223, 230 (3d Cir. 1987) ("The allegation of unspecified contracts with unnamed other entities to achieve unidentified anticompetitive effects does not meet the minimum standards for pleading a conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act.") (citing Black & Yates); Kalmanovitz v. G. Heileman Brewing Co., 595 F. Supp. 1385, 1400 (D. Del. 1984), aff'd, 769 F.2d 152 (3d Cir. 1985).

In Car Carriers, the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit emphasized the importance of a consideration that has motivated this court over the years in insisting upon reasonable [30] specificity in antitrust complaints. The court recognized that litigation today is too expensive a process to waste time on fanciful claims:

> When the requisite elements are lacking, the costs of modern federal antitrust litigation and the increasing caseload of the federal courts counsel against sending the parties into discovery when there is no reasonable likelihood that the plaintiffs can construct a claim from the events related in the complaint.

Car Carriers, 745 F.2d at 1106.

The same sentiment was expressed by Judge Pollak in Pao v. Holy Redeemer Hospital, 547 F. Supp. 484, 491 (E.D. Pa. 1982), where the court dismissed a complaint with prejudice, saying:

> Although this is plaintiff's second attempt to state a valid Sherman Act claim, the complaint still offers only uncertain clues as to plaintiff's theory of liability and the facts which would support a finding of Sherman Act liability. It is simply not fair to the defendants, and it would be an onerous imposition on the judicial process, to permit litigation to go forward on the basis of such conclusory and speculative allegations.

Likewise, in [31] Havoco v. Shell Oil Co., 626 F.2d 549, 553 (7th Cir. 1980), affirming dismissal of a complaint for failure to state a claim, the court stated:

> [If] the allegations of the complaint fail to establish the requisite elements of the cause of action, our requiring costly and time consuming discovery and trial work would represent an abdication of our judicial responsibility.

There is no disagreement that the second section of HN11[] the Soft Drink Act contains an exception for "price fixing agreements, horizontal restraints of trade, or group [*183] boycotts, if such agreements, restraints, or boycotts would otherwise be unlawful." 15 U.S.C. § 3502. The purpose of this section was to ensure that certain per se violations would be excluded from the approved enforcement of territorial exclusivity. H. Rep. No. 1118, reprinted in 1980 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News at 2389. But the factual allegations of the amended complaint did not come close to adequately pleading conduct amounting to any of these per se offenses, and this [32] failure cannot be cured by simply reciting that appellees' conduct "consisted of" such offenses. Nor does it add anything to tack on an ipse dixit legal conclusion that appellees' conduct "is not exempt" under the Act.

B.

Pennsylvania's other major contention supporting its horizontal conspiracy theory is the naked allegation, considerably fleshed out by brief and oral argument, that there was a group boycott by the defendants designed "to eliminate competition by resellers and to boycott resellers." Br. for appellant at 19. Here again, Pennsylvania recognizes the existence of the Soft Drink Act, but says that it does not apply because the defendants' activities come within the purview of the Act's exceptions for per se violations, including group boycotts. See 15 U.S.C. § 3502. But Pennsylvania cannot travel very far on its group boycott argument.

This court has consistently limited application of the per se rule to the "classic" boycott. See Malley-Duff & Assocs. v. Crown Life Ins. Co., 734 F.2d 133, 142 (3d Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1072, 105 S. Ct. 564, 83 L. Ed. 2d 505 (1984) (quoting Larry V. Muko, Inc. v. Southwestern Pa. Bldg. & Constr. Trades Council, 670 F.2d 421, 430 [33] (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 916, 74 L. Ed. 2d 182, 103 S. Ct. 229 (1982)). HN12[] A classic boycott exists where there is concerted action with "a purpose either to exclude a person or group from the market, or to accomplish some other anti-competitive object, or both." Id. (quoting De Filippo v. Ford Motor Co., 516 F.2d 1313, 1318 (3d Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 912, 46 L. Ed. 2d 141, 96 S. Ct. 216 (1975)).

Although dressed in the pejorative appellation "group boycott," the specific conduct complained of in this case, stripped of name-calling or label-pasting, is nothing more than conduct expressly permitted by the provisions of section 3501. What Pennsylvania now describes as a "group boycott" is precisely the conduct specifically authorized by the clear unambiguous language of the Soft Drink Act and its legislative history as set forth in Part II of this opinion. As we stated before, the Act provides for the "enforcement" of agreements limiting extraterritorial sales either "directly or indirectly." It is designed to [34] combat and prevent transshipping by both bottlers and third parties. It is not for us to determine in this case what conduct would be permitted by a business enterprise not engaged in the manufacture and distribution of soft drinks. For our purposes here and now, we have decided that the Soft Drink Act applies to the entire chain of distribution -- from the manufacturer all the way through to the consumer. It permits the manufacturer to require a bottler to ensure that the ultimate resale of the PepsiCo products it produces will be to consumers within its own territory. Thus, it allows bottlers to refuse to sell to resellers whose actions impede this goal.

C.

This, too, must be said. We believe that to adopt Pennsylvania's view that section 3502 prevents the conduct described above would lead to a great inconsistency. On the one hand, this view would say that the Act grants suppliers the right to establish exclusive bottler territories; on the other hand, those territories could not be enforced because to do so would amount to a "horizontal restraint" or a "group boycott." We will not so implement this statute. It is well settled that "a statute should be interpreted so as not [35] to render one part inoperative." Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379, 392, 58 L. Ed. 2d 596, 99 S. Ct. 675 (1979).

[*184] Equally important, we reject Pennsylvania's interpretation because it contradicts the express intent of Congress. When Congress enacted section 3502, it explicitly did not "tak[e] away . . . what it gave in § [3501]." 126 Cong. Rec. 16,576 (1980) (remarks by Rep. Butler). Nor did it intend "to vitiate the t[h]rust of section [3501]." Id. at 16,570 (remarks by Rep. Hall) (the Act "contemplates not only the existence but also the enforcement of bottler territories"). Rather, Congress enacted section 3502 to ensure that section 3501 did not sanction bottler-instigated market division or conspiracies among syrup manufacturers.

At the hearings on the Act, an attorney for a transshipper testified that unless a qualifying proviso like section 3502 were added, the first section of the Act would permit "bottlers [to] get together and form their own policing committees" and would permit the major syrup manufacturers to join together to "boycott" supermarket chains that transshipped. See 1980 Hearings 191-92. His interpretation [36] of section 3501 concerned Judiciary Chairman Rodino that bottlers might create restraints on their own, and foist them upon their supplier. The Chairman asked the attorney if section 3501 would permit "bottlers [to] conspire[] to divide markets or allocate customers, and have their supplier . . . enforce the agreement. . . ." Id. at 195. The attorney replied that, unless qualified, it would. Id. This is the conduct that section 3502 was intended to address. But no such conduct was alleged in this case.

Section 3502 does not render bottlers impotent to seek enforcement of exclusive territories lawfully granted by the supplier, and that is all that is alleged here. On these facts, we reject the contention that section 3502 prevents the interposition of the Soft Drink Act as a total legal defense to the appellant's amended complaint.

VII

We have carefully considered the contentions of the appellant, the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. The judgment of the district court will be affirmed.

Creative Trading Co. v. Larkin-Pluznick-Larkin, Inc.

Supreme Court of New York, Appellate Division, First Department

January 5, 1988

No Number in Original

Reporter

136 A.D.2d 461 *; 523 N.Y.S.2d 102 ; 1988 N.Y. App. Div. LEXIS 20 ; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,980

Creative Trading Company, Inc., et al., Respondents, v. Larkin-Pluznick-Larkin, Inc., Doing Business as National Fashion & Boutique Show, et al., Appellants cause of action, conspiracy, Donnelly Act, plaintiffs', exhibitors, Boutique, favored, defendants', reciprocal, Antitrust, asserting, contracts, pleadings, entities, replead, smaller, space

Core Terms

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN1[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

A party claiming a violation of the Donnelly Act, N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340, which was modeled on the Federal Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, must identify a relevant product market, describe the nature and effects of a purported conspiracy and allege how the economic impact of that conspiracy is to restrain trade in the market in question.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

HN2[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The Donnelly Act, N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340, mandates that there be a conspiracy or reciprocal relationship between two or more entities before liability can be found.

Judges: [*1] Concur -- Kupferman, J. P., Sullivan, Ross and Milonas, JJ.

Opinion

[*461] [102] Order of the Supreme Court, New York County (Alfred M. Ascione, J.), entered on January 14, 1987, which denied defendants' motion pursuant to CPLR 3211 to dismiss the third and fourth causes of action, is unanimously reversed on the law and the motion granted with leave to plaintiffs to replead, without costs or disbursements.

Plaintiffs are small businesses engaged in the retailing of women's clothing, accessories and jewelry. Defendants organize and sponsor fashion and boutique shows and, in that regard, produced the National Fashion and Boutique Show, which was held at the Jacob Javits Convention Center on May 17th through 20th of 1986. It is plaintiffs' contention that defendants, as a result of their contracts and arrangements with the Javits Convention Center, advertising [103] firms, manufacturers and others, have gained exclusive control over exhibition space at this most premier of trade shows and throughout the metropolitan area. According to plaintiffs, defendants have utilized their monopoly power to allocate the most desirable space to favored exhibitors and then sell the booths having the poorest location [2] and access to smaller exhibitors at exactly the same charge per square foot. Thus, plaintiffs urge, the smaller exhibitors have been placed at a substantial competitive disadvantage in relation to the favored ones, and, in effect, the former are forced to subsidize the latter.

Plaintiffs' complaint contains four causes of action, the third and fourth of which derive from New York's antitrust law, section 340 of the General Business Law, commonly known as the Donnelly Act. Defendants moved pursuant to CPLR 3211 to dismiss the third and fourth causes of action for legal insufficiency. In denying the motion, the Supreme Court determined that in view of the principle favoring the liberal construction of pleadings, plaintiffs' factual assertions are adequate to make out a cognizable cause of action. Defendants have appealed.

[*462] HN1[] A party claiming a violation of the Donnelly Act, which was modeled on the Federal Sherman Antitrust Act (15 USC § 1; see, State of New York v Mobil Oil Corp., 38 NY2d 460), must identify the relevant product market, describe the nature and effects of the purported conspiracy and allege how the economic impact of that conspiracy [3] is to restrain trade in the market in question (Internationl Tel. Prods. v Twentieth Century-Fox Tel. Div., 622 F Supp 1532 [SD NY 1985]). While the complaint herein sufficiently pleads these elements, there is one further requirement for a valid claim under the Donnelly Act, the lack of which renders plaintiffs' third and fourth causes of action defective. As the Court of Appeals declared in State of New York v Mobil Oil Corp. (supra, at 464), in discussing the type of contract or agreement deemed by the statute to constitute an unlawful restraint of trade, "the term, 'arrangement' * * * must be interpreted as contemplating a reciprocal relationship of commitment between two or more legal or economic entities similar to but not embraced within the more exacting terms, 'contract', 'combination' or 'conspiracy'". Thus, HN2[] the Donnelly Act mandates that there be a conspiracy or reciprocal relationship between two or more entities before liability can be found (see also, Saxe, Bacon & Bolan v Martindate-Hubbel, Inc., 710 F2d 87 [2d Cir 1983]; International Tel. Prods. v Twentieth Century-Fox Tel. Div., supra).

[*4] In the instant situation, defendant Larkin-Pluznick-Larkin, Inc., doing business as National Fashion & Boutique Show, is a corporation of which the individual defendants are all officers or agents. Plaintiffs have failed to identify any alleged coconspirator(s) and may not remedy the defect in their complaint by asserting, in conclusory fashion, the existence of a generalized conspiracy arising out of defendants' various contracts and arrangements or by referring to unilateral business actions taken by them (see, International Tel. Prods. v Twentieth Century-Fox Tel. Div., supra). Consequently, the third and fourth causes of action should be dismissed with leave to plaintiffs to replead in accordance with the foregoing.

End of Document

[Ford Piano Supply Co. v. Steinway & Sons]

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

January 7, 1988, Decided; January 13, 1988

No. 85 Civ. 1284-CSH

Reporter

1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 523 *; 1987-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,828

Ford Piano Supply Company, Plaintiff v. Steinway and Sons, Defendants

Core Terms

piano, relevant market, Sherman Act, monopoly, Robinson-Patman Act, manufacturer, price-fixing, prices

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > Exclusive Dealing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1[] Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing, Exclusive Dealing

With respect to monopoly and exclusive dealing claims under sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.A. § § 1, 2 , a plaintiff must allege as a threshold matter that the agreement in question resulted in a substantial foreclosure of competition in an area of effective competition, that is, in a relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Robinson-Patman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN2[] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

In order to have standing to raise a claim under the Robinson-Patman Act, a plaintiff must allege either: (1) a causative link between illegal price discrimination and injury to the plaintiff which is direct rather than incidental, or (2) that the plaintiff's business or property falls within the "target area" of the allegedly illegal conduct.

Counsel: [*1] RUBENSTEIN & McCALLA, Attorneys for Plaintiff, Martin Rubenstein, Esq. of Counsel.

MILLER & WRUBEL, P.C., Attorneys for Defendant, Martin Edel, Esq. of Counsel.

Opinion by: HAIGHT

Opinion

HAIGHT, District Judge:

Defendant, Steinway and Sons ("Steinway"), moves, pursuant to F.R.Civ. P. 12(b)(6), for an order dismissing the complaint for failure to state a claim, and for award of costs including attorney fees under F.R.Civ.P. 11. Plaintiff defends its complaint as legally sufficient or, in the alternative, requests leave to file an amended complaint to remedy any deficiencies. For the reasons set forth below, I dismiss the complaint in its entirety, grant limited leave to amend, and grant defendant's motion for sanctions under Rule 11.

Plaintiff, Ford Piano Supply Company ("Ford"), is a supplier of piano parts. Ford accuses Steinway, a manufacturer and supplier of pianos and piano parts, of conspiring with Louis Renner Stuttgart ("Renner"), a German manufacturer of piano parts, to violate the federal antitrust laws. Ford claims that in October 1984, Steinway and Renner conspired to create a monopoly in certain piano parts manufactured by Renner which fit Steinway pianos. The facts alleged in [*2] the complaint, which must be assured to be true for purposes of this motion, are that until October 1984, Ford bought certain piano parts known as "shanks, flanges st, repetitions, whipper st and various other action parts" (Complaint para. 7) from Renner, (the "Renner parts"). Ford then resold these parts to its own customers. On or about October or November 1984, Ford alleges that Steinway entered into a contract with Renner "to prevent plaintiff from obtaining piano parts" from Renner. Although the nature of the Renner/Steinway contract is not made explicit in the complaint, plaintiff's memorandum of law in opposition to the present motion makes clear that it was an exclusive distributorship agreement, casting Steinway as the distributor of Renner piano parts.

In a nutshell, Ford claims that as a result of this exclusive distributorship agreement, Ford and all other purchasers of these particular Renner piano parts may no longer purchase such parts directly from Renner, but instead must purchase them through Steinway. Plaintiff alleges that this arrangement has resulted in higher prices and greater delay in filling orders for Renner parts.

By parsing the single count contained [*3] in Ford's complaint, one may identify eight antitrust claims alleged by Ford: (1) unlawful pricefixing in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 (1984); (2) a refusal by Renner to deal with Ford as a result of its exclusive distributorship agreement with Steinway, in violation of the same statutory provision; (3)-(5) monopolization, attempted monopolization and a conspiracy to monopolize the market for Renner piano parts, in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2 (1984) and (6)-(8) violations of section 13(a), (d) and (f) of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. (Sec.Sign) 13 (1984). Steinway contends that all of these claims are legally insufficient.

A. Monopoly and Exclusive Dealing claims

HN1[] With respect to its monopoly and exclusive dealing claims under sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, Ford must allege as a threshold matter "that the agreement in question result[ed] in a substantial foreclosure of competition in an area of effective competition, that is, in a relevant market." Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 327-28, 81 S.Ct. 623, 5 L.Ed.2d 580 (1961); Twin City Sportservice. Inc. v. Charles O. Finley & Co., 676 [*4] F.2d 1291, 1301-02 (9th Cir. 1982); Dos Santos v. Columbus-Cuneo-Cabrini Medical Center, 684 F.2d 1346, 1352 (7th Cir. 1982). Steinway claims that Ford has failed to allege an anticompetive effect in a "relevant market." I agree.

Ford alleges that the relevant market over which Steinway exercises monopolistic control in violation of the Sherman Act (the "Act") is the market for Renner parts. This allegation is not sufficient to state a claim under the Act unless the market for Renner parts is a market capable of competitive structure. As the Supreme Court recognized in United States v. Du Pont & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 393 (1956), any non-standarized commodity [1] could theoretically be described as a "market" over which the manufacturer of the commodity exercises "monopolistic" control. The Court explained in Du Pont that although

" . . . one can theorize that we have monopolistic competition in every nonstandardized commodity with each manufacturer having power over the price and production of his own product . . . this power is not the power that makes an illegal monopoly. Illegal power must be appraised in terms of the competitive market for the product."

United States [*5] v. Du Pont & Co., supra, 351 U.S. at 393.

Whether a particular product market controlled by one interest constitutes an illegal monopoly under the Act depends on whether and to what extend substitutes to that produce are available. To be a "substitute" does not require that the alternatives be fungible; rather, the relevant inquiry is whether there are "market alternatives that buyers may readily use for their purposes." Id. at 394. Economists refer to this inquiry as one into the "cross-elasticity" of demand for the product. See Hayden Publishing Co.. Inc. v. Cox Broadcasting Corp., 703 F.2d 63, 70 (2d Cir. 1984).

Ford argues that Renner parts are recognized in the industry as unique in that they are of superior quality. Quality differences between products can, in some circumstances, be relevant to a determination of the relevant market for anti-trust purposes, as the quality of a product may affect the cross-elasticity of demand. I do not reach the issue on the present motion, which, however, is limited to the sufficiency of the complaint as filed. F.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6). The complaint fails to identify [*6] a relevant market and thus fails to sufficiently allege illegal monopolization. See U.S. v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 571 (1965) (allegation and proof of monopoly power over a relevant market is an essential element of § 2 violation under the Act).

Accordingly, I dismiss the complaint in so far as it attempts to state a claim or claims for monopoly and exclusive dealing under § § 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. Plaintiff is granted leave to replead these claims, if so advised after adequate inquiry into the facts and law concerning the allegedly relevant market.

B. Price-Fixing Conspiracy

Plaintiff's allegations of a price-fixing conspiracy under section 1 of the Sherman Act are deficient not only for failure to identify a relevant product market, as discussed supra, but also for failure to allege joint conspiratorial activity between Renner and Steinway. Plaintiff's complaint at paragraph 22 states:

That defendant participated in a price-fixing conspiracy which it was enabled to adopt, follow and adhere to a pricing formula established by itself which enabled it to raise prices and maintain raised prices set by itself in interstate commerce. (emphasis added).

[*7] Such unilateral price determination by Steinway fails to state a claim for unlawful price-fixing under the Sherman Act. Car Carriers Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 745 F.2d 1101, 1110 (7th Cir. 1984). I therefore dismiss plaintiff's price fixing claims. I decline to grant leave to re-plead these claims because plaintiff has failed to offer any legal theory or proposed factual allegation which might support the claims.

C. Robinson-Patman Act Claims

HN2[] In order to have standing to raise a claim under the Robinson-Patman Act, a plaintiff must allege either: (1) a causative link between illegal price discrimination and injury to the plaintiff which is direct rather than incidental, or

[1] As opposed to standard commodities such as salt or wheat.

(2) that the plaintiff's business or property falls within the "target area" of the allegedly illegal conduct. See Reborn Enterprises, Inc. v. Fine Child. Inc., 590 F.Supp. 1423, 1450 (SDNY 1986); Litton Systems, Inc. v. AT&T, 700 F.2d 785, 821 (2d Cir. 1983).

Plaintiff's Robinson-Patman claim is contained in paragraph 34 of the complaint, which states:

That upon information and belief, defendant violated Section 2 of the Robinson-Patman Act (15 U.S.C.A. Section 13a, d, f) in that, upon information [*8] and belief, it made two or more sales by itself, at different prices, commodities (piano parts) of like grade and quality with sales in inter-state commerce which adversely affected competition including that of the plaintiff and proximately caused injury to plaintiff.

This paragraph does not provide sufficient information to determine whether plaintiff is within the "target area" of the challenged conduct, or whether the plaintiff suffered direct rather than incidental injury. I therefore dismiss the complaint in so far as it purports to state a claim under the Robinson-Patman Act because plaintiff's standing to bring the claim is not sufficiently alleged. Plaintiff is granted leave to re-plead this claim, if so advised after adequate inquiry.

D. Rule 11 Sanctions

Steinway's motion for an award of sanctions, including reasonable attorneys, fees incurred in connection with this motion to dismiss is granted. Ford's papers in opposition to the motion fail to show that its complaint is "well grounded in fact and . . . warranted by existing law or a good faith argument for the extension, modification or reversal of existing law." Fed.R.Civ.P. 11.

Plaintiff's counsel virtually admitted [*9] violation of Rule 11 when, during oral argument, he responded to a question put on the relevant market issue by saying "I agree with your Honor that the law in this would be of greater interest, and I believe that we would unfortunately have to do a review of cases, but I feel very confident that we would find many instances where a unique product market was found on those bases, design, competition and workmanship." (Transcript at 39-40). This statement reveals that plaintiff's counsel's investigation into antitrust law prior to filing this complaint fell well short of the reasonable prefiling inquiry required by Rule 11. An allowance to Steinway is mandatory under the rule. [2]

[*10] In the circumstances of this case, I believe the only appropriate sanction is one which completely compensate's defendant for the costs it incurred as a result of this motion. Steinway is directed to file and serve, within thirty (30) days of the date of this order, appropriate affidavits giving the details of the expenses and fees it claims. These affidavits must be accompanied by copies of lawyers, time sheets and other appropriate proof. Within fourteen (14) days thereafter, Ford may certify its agreement with the amount, or file an affidavit and memorandum of authorities in opposition. Any dispute will be resolved in such further proceedings as may be appropriate.

The remaining question is whether the costs should be borne by Ford or its attorneys. The rule permits either or a combination. Because the deficiencies of the complaint are legal in nature, and there is no evidence of misleading behavior or bad faith on the part of Ford, I direct that Ford's counsel pay these charges, without recourse to the client.

Ford's amended complaint, if any, is to be served and filed within thirty (30) days of the date of this Memorandum Opinion and Order.

---

[2] This necessary motion practice is particularly offensive where, as here, defendant raised objections to the legal sufficiency of plaintiff's pleading at the initial pretrial conference before this Court; the Court instructed the parties to meet and candidly review the complaint together; defendant spelled out to plaintiff informally all of the arguments that it eventually had to make formally to this Court; and the plaintiff chose merely to stand, on its pleading without amendment. This waste of both the Court's and opposing counsel's time is not acceptable.

It is SO ORDERED.

DATED: New York, [*11] New York, January 7, 1988

Rosefielde v. Falcon Jet Corp.

United States District Court for the District of New Jersey

January 11, 1988, Decided ; January 11, 1988, Filed

Civil Action Nos. 82-3788, 85-4671

Reporter

701 F. Supp. 1053 *; 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14360 ; 1990-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P69,091

Alan Rosefielde, et al. v. Falcon Jet Corporation; Gulfstream III Associates, Inc. v. Falcon Jet Corporation

Subsequent History: [1] As Amended February 2, 1989.

Core Terms

Jet, Defendants', Plaintiffs', manufacturers, prices, conspiracy, aircraft, business jet, summary judgment, anticompetitive, purchasers, price information, competitors, summary judgment motion, contracts, resales, damages, sales, parties, new business, co-conspirators, price-fixing, price fixing, exchanged, antitrust, deter, Sherman Act, alleged conspiracy, assigned, policies

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Legal Entitlement

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Discovery Materials

HN1[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, summary judgment should be granted if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). Accordingly, to defeat a motion for summary judgment, the non-moving party must respond by setting forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e).

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN2[] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

On a motion for summary judgment, the evidence of the non-movant is to be believed, and all justifiable inferences are to be drawn in his favor. At the summary judgment stage the judge's function is not himself to weigh the evidence and determine the truth of the matter but to determine whether there is a genuine issue for trial. This determination must be guided by the substantive evidentiary standards that apply to the case. A motion for summary judgment may be granted unless the evidence, construed in favor of the non-moving party, is sufficient for a reasonable jury to return a verdict for that party.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

HN3[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

A summary judgment motion in an antitrust case should be granted if the plaintiff's allegations are unsupported or if defendant has introduced probative evidence rebutting the antitrust allegations in the complaint, and plaintiff fails to come forward with factual support for his allegations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN4[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The elements of a cause of action under section one of the Sherman Act are (1) that the defendants contracted, combined or conspired among each other or with other co-conspirators; (2) that the combination or conspiracy produced adverse, anti-competitive effects, within relevant product and geographic markets; (3) that the objects of and the conduct pursuant to that contract or conspiracy were illegal; and (4) that the plaintiff was injured as a proximate result of that conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Concerted action is an essential element of a § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, claim. Unilateral or independent action, irrespective of its intent, does not violate § 1 of the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN6[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, states, in pertinent part, that every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states is declared to be illegal.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN7[] Conspiracy, Elements

A conspiracy may be inferred from circumstantial evidence. However, the extent to which such inferences can be made is limited.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

HN8[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Once the plaintiff in an action pursuant to § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, establishes a conspiracy can be inferred from circumstantial evidence, the defendants may deny the existence of the conspiracy and offer an innocent explanation of the questioned conduct. In some cases, sworn denials of the defendants may be sufficient to shift the burden of proof back to the plaintiff.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN9[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Even if the plaintiffs present circumstantial evidence from which a conspiracy can be inferred, such evidence without more is insufficient unless the circumstances under which it occurred make the inference of rational, independent choice less attractive than that of concerted action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN10[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Summary judgment will be entered against a plaintiff under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, if he cannot show the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action or colusive action that could not have harmed plaintiff.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Partial Summary Judgment

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN11[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Price Fixing

The reciprocal exchange of price information among competitors is sufficient to establish a combination or conspiracy, the initial ingredient of a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Price information exchanged in some markets may have no effect on truly competitive price. The mere showing of an exchange of price information among competitors, without more, is insufficient to establish a violation of the antitrust laws. Plaintiffs must also show that the information exchange had an anticompetitive effect on prices.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN12[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

In markets which are oligopolistic, where the competition is for a fungible product, and demand is inelastic, the exchange of price information has the anticompetitive effect of stabilizing prices. But, where the exchange of information takes place in a market which is competitive, where the product is not fungible, competition is based on quality rather than price, and the market is elastic, then no anticompetitive effect exists.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Inferences

HN13[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A plaintiff in an action based on § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, should present direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove that the defendants' had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective. The plaintiffs may alternatively show the defendants had an anticompetitive intent in entering into the agreement. To support an inference of more than a mere exchange of information, that is a conspiracy in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, the plaintiffs must show the inference of rational, independent choice is less attractive than that of concerted action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN14[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The extent to which an inference of a conspiracy can be drawn from circumstantial evidence is limited. One of these limits is the plausibility of the conspiracy claim. As the Supreme Court reemphasized in Matsushita, the jury should not be permitted to infer conspiracies when such inferences are implausible, because the effect of such practices is often to deter procompetitive conduct. A court must consider the "practical obstacles" to the implementation of the alleged conspiracy in connection with defendants' motion for summary judgment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Merger Guidelines

HN15[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In markets where the products are heterogeneous, or where there is rapid technological change, in order for a price-fixing cartel to function it may be necessary to establish and enforce a complex schedule of prices corresponding to gradations in actual or perceived quality attributes among the competing products.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN16[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

It is not unlawful for a business to take the prices charged by its competitors into account when setting its own prices, or to follow or copy the prices of a competitor, if the decision to do so is the result of a unilateral business judgment, and not the result of collusive agreement.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

HN17[] Judgments, Summary Judgment

Granting summary judgment in an antitrust action is disfavored when issues of motive and intent are central to the case.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN18[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

With fungible goods, the goods of competing manufacturers are virtually identical, so the primary, if not the only, source of competition among manufacturers is in price.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN19[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

In determining what constitutes a relevant market no more definite rule can be declared than that commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes make up the relevant market. The relevant market must be determined in terms of both product and geographic markets.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Remedies > General Overview

HN20[] Private Actions, Remedies

It is an essential element of any antitrust claim that the plaintiff demonstrate injuries of the type the antitrust laws were meant to protect. In alleging antitrust damages, the plaintiffs have a lesser burden of proof than they do on the other elements of their claim. Antitrust damage calculations need not be proven with certainty. Plaintiffs have satisfied their burden with respect to the fact of damages if they demonstrate merely a "causal relationship" between defendants' illegal acts and plaintiffs' alleged injuries.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Documentary Evidence > Writings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN21[] Regulated Industries, Higher Education & Professional Associations

Although an antitrust plaintiff may not be allowed to defeat a motion for summary judgment with an expert report that lacks factual support in the record, the credibility of the evidence submitted should not be a factor in deciding a motion for summary judgment. In the Third Circuit it is even disfavored to give careful scrutiny to the assumptions underlying and inferences made in an expert report when considering the admissibility of the report.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Direct Purchasers

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Indirect Purchasers

HN22[] Purchasers, Direct Purchasers

The holding in Illinois Brick precludes indirect purchasers from bringing lawsuits alleging antitrust damages. The Illinois Brick rule limits standing to assert price fixing claims to direct purchasers of the defendant's products because to permit both indirect and direct purchasers to sue would subject the defendants to the risk of multiple liability for the same antitrust violation and because of the uncertainties and difficulties in analyzing price and output decisions in the real economic world rather than in the economist's hypothetical model.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Contracts Law > Defenses > Ambiguities & Mistakes > General Overview

HN23[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Inferences of conspiracy made from ambiguous evidence of consciously parallel business behavior cannot be made without the existence of certain "plus factors". A high level of interfirm communications is one of the "plus factors" which may indicate the defendants were engaged in collusive anticompetitive behavior.

Counsel: Edwin R. Alley, Esq., Carpenter, Bennett & Morrissey, Newark, New Jersey, Stephen M. Hudspeth, Esq. and Darrell E. Prescott, Esq., Coudert Brothers, New York, New York, Harold C. Kohn, Esq. and Joanne Zack, Esq., Kohn, Savett, Klein & Graf, P.C., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, (Attorneys for Plaintiffs).

Allyn Z. Lite, Esq., Goldstein, Till & Lite, Newark, New Jersey, John J. Reilly, Esq. and Gary D. Sesser, Esq., Haight, Gardner, Poor & Havens, New York, New York, (Attorneys for Defendants).

Judges: Alfred J. Lechner, Jr., United States District Judge.

Opinion by: LECHNER, JR.

Opinion

[*1055] ALFRED J. LECHNER, JR., UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

This case is a consolidation of the two above-mentioned cases (the "Rosefielde" and "Gulfstream" cases). The Rosefielde case was filed in the District of New Jersey in November, 1982. It involves a protracted dispute concerning the imposition of a warranty transfer fee by defendant Falcon Jet Corporation ("Falcon Jet") upon plaintiff Alan Rosefielde. In October, 1983 the Rosefielde complaint was amended to add two antitrust claims. Count sixteen of the Rosefielde Amended Complaint charges Falcon Jet and seven other business jet manufacturers conspired to fix the base price of new business jets in the United States. Count seventeen of the Rosefielde Amended Complaint alleges a conspiracy among Falcon Jet and three other business jet manufacturers to limit the contractual terms of sale of new business jets so as [2] to inhibit their resale.

The Gulfstream case was originally filed in the Central District of California in June, 1985, but was consolidated with the Rosefielde case by Judge Barry in April, 1986. The Gulfstream case alleges a price-fixing conspiracy, the operative facts of which are identical to those of count sixteen of the Rosefielde Amended Complaint. The Gulfstream case and count sixteen of the Rosefielde Amended Complaint will be referred to collectively as the "price-fixing claims."

The court is now faced with cross-motions for summary judgment with respect to the price fixing claims, and defendants' motion for summary judgment on count seventeen of the Rosefielde Amended Complaint ("count seventeen"). [1] Defendants' motion on the price fixing claims is granted with respect to the existence of an express agreement to fix prices, and is denied in all other respects. Plaintiffs' cross-motion for summary judgment on the price-fixing claims is partially granted and partially denied. Finally, defendants' motion for summary judgment on count seventeen is granted.

[3] Background

Plaintiff Alan Rosefielde is a former practicing tax attorney who is presently [*1056] engaged in the business of purchasing, selling and leasing business jet aircraft. (Plaintiff's Memorandum in Opposition to Defendants' Motion for Partial Summary Judgment and in Support of Plaintiffs' Cross-Motion for Summary Judgment, dated September 30, 1986 ("Plaintiffs' Mem.") at page "a", Table I.) [2] Mr. Rosefielde organized each of the other plaintiffs, which are closely held corporations or limited partnerships, for the purpose of purchasing Falcon Jet or Gulfstream [3] business jets. (Memorandum in Support of Defendants' Motion for Partial Summary Judgment with Respect to the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Counts of the Rosefielde Amended Complaint and for Summary Judgment in Gulfstream III Associates, dated August 1, 1986, ("Defendants' Mem.") at 7.) Mr. Rosefielde conducts all of the business affairs of each of the plaintiffs. (Plaintiffs' Mem. at page "a", Table I.) Typically, Mr. Rosefielde, through one of his corporations, [4] purchases new business jets in the United States and then assigns the contract to a subsequent purchaser. (Defendants' Mem. at 9.) During the period [4] between the purchase of the aircraft by the plaintiffs and the assignment to a subsequent purchaser, the planes are managed by Jet Leasing Corporation, of which William F. Handy, a close associate of Mr. Rosefielde, is the president and principal shareholder. (Defendants' Mem. at 8.)

Defendant Falcon Jet Corporation is the United States subsidiary of defendant Avions Marcel Dassault-Breguet Aviation ("AMD-BA"), a French aircraft manufacturer. AMD-BA manufactures military and civilian aircraft, including the "Falcon" series of business jet aircraft. (Defendants' Mem. at 6-7.) Falcon [5] Jet is responsible for marketing and selling Falcon business jets in the western hemisphere. (Defendants' Mem. at 6.) In most instances Falcon Jet purchases "green" aircraft (i.e., aircraft sold without exterior paint, completed interiors, or permanent avionics packages) from AMD-BA and ships them to the United States for completion according to the specifications of Falcon Jet customers (Defendants' Mem. at 7.)

The Falcon Jet aircraft which plaintiffs purchased from defendants were "completed" aircraft sold with a standard equipment package for a "base" price. (Defendants' Mem. at 15.) The base price is the price of an aircraft equipped to a standard specification set by the manufacturer before the addition of optional equipment or price escalation. [5] (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 13 n. 25.)

---

[1] Motions are also pending to exclude certain testimony of plaintiffs' expert witnesses and to bar use of certain government reports. Because these motions have not been argued and because these motions concern rulings which may be more appropriately addressed immediately prior to or during trial, these motions will be addressed by Judge Wolin, the judge to whom this case has been re-assigned. For the purpose of this opinion, all evidence submitted by both parties is assured to be admissible.

[2] Because of the mass of supporting material accompanying the parties' motions, citations in most instances are to the appropriate briefs, which in turn cite to the supporting data.

[3] Gulfstream business jets are manufactured by the Gulfstream Aerospace Corporation, an American aircraft manufacturer. (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 1, n. 1.) Gulfstream Aerospace and defendant Falcon Jet Corporation are two of the alleged co-conspirators which exchanged price information with the other business jet manufacturers.

[4] Mr. Rosefielde has not purchased or sold any aircraft personally. (Defendants' Mem. at 8.)

[5] Falcon Jet did not subject the Rosefielde contracts to price escalation. (Defendants' Mem. at 15.)

The Rosefielde plaintiffs contracted to purchase eight Falcon jets over a period of two years beginning in 1978. (Defendants' Mem. at 19.) Six of these contracts were assigned to subsequent purchasers who accepted legal title to the aircraft prior to the time of delivery. (Id.) Three [6] of those assignees are not parties in this action. (Defendant's Mem. at 10.) In 1981, the Gulfstream plaintiffs contracted to purchase two Gulfstream Aerospace Jets. One of these contracts was cancelled and the other was assigned to a non-plaintiff. (Defendants' Mem. at 11.) In addition, plaintiffs terminated three options to purchase Gulfstream IV aircraft. (Reply Memorandum in Support of Defendants' Motion for Partial Summary Judgment with Respect to the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Counts of the Rosefielde Amended Complaint and for Summary Judgment in Gulfstream III Associates; Memorandum in Opposition to Plaintiffs' Cross-Motion for Summary [*1057] Judgment, dated November 12, 1986 ("Defendants' Reply") at 55.)

In July, 1982, a dispute arose between Mr. Rosefielde and Falcon Jet concerning the imposition of a $ 100,000 assignment fee to transfer the warranty of a Falcon Jet aircraft from Mr. Rosefielde to another customer. (DX-454; Defendant's Mem. at 11.) In November, 1982, the Rosefielde plaintiffs filed a fifteen count complaint in the District of New Jersey. [6] The first six counts of the complaint, alleging that the defendants attempted to monopolize the business jet [7] market, were dismissed with prejudice in June of 1985. (Defendants' Mem. at 13.) The remaining nine counts are contract and tort claims based on defendants' warranty transfer policy. (Defendants' Mem. at 11.)

In October, 1983, plaintiffs amended their complaint to add two additional counts alleging conspiracies in violation of Section One of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. Count sixteen alleges a horizontal price-fixing conspiracy among defendants and seven international business jet manufacturers. [7] (Defendants' Mem. at 11.) Count seventeen alleges a conspiracy among the same manufacturers to fix the contractual terms of sale for the purpose of inhibiting the resale of new business jets. (Defendants Mem. at 11.)

Defendants have filed several previous motions for summary judgment. The first motion, directed at counts one through six, the monopolization counts of plaintiff's original Complaint, was not adjudicated because [8] plaintiffs dropped these counts shortly before their response was due, and agreed to a dismissal with prejudice. (See Defendants' Mem. at 12; Plaintiffs' Mem. at 20, n. 52.) Defendants then filed a motion for partial summary judgment as to plaintiffs' contract and tort claims in June of 1985. (Defendants' Mem. at 13.) Finally, in August, 1985, defendants filed a motion for partial summary judgment with respect to the sixteenth and seventeenth counts of plaintiffs' Amended Complaint. Defendants also filed motions in limine to exclude certain testimony of plaintiffs' expert witnesses.

Ruling on defendants' motions, Judge Lacey denied in part and granted in part summary judgment on the contract and tort claims. He also ruled that plaintiffs' expert witnesses would be precluded from testifying unless they filed supplemental reports and submitted to further depositions. He then denied defendants' motion for summary judgment as to counts sixteen and seventeen without prejudice to renewal after plaintiffs' experts submitted to the supplemental discovery orders. [8] After plaintiffs' experts complied with Judge Lacey's orders, defendants renewed their summary judgment motion with respect [9] to the price fixing claims and count seventeen of the Rosefielde case. (Defendants' Mem. at 13.) Plaintiffs then filed a cross-motion for summary judgment with respect to liability on the price fixing claims, seeking to leave for trial only the matter of plaintiffs' damages. (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 103.)

Facts

---

[6] The Gulfstream case was filed in the Central District of California in June, 1985. (Defendants' Mem. at 12.)

[7] The operative facts of count sixteen are identical to the price-fixing conspiracy alleged in the Gulfstream case. (Defendants' Mem. at 12.)

[8] Judge Lacey subsequently retired from the bench. The Rosefielde case was then transferred to Judge Barry, who consolidated Rosefielde and Gulfstream in April, 1986 in this district.

1. The Price Fixing Claims

Since the early 1970's eight business jet manufacturers which sell their product in the United States have engaged in a regular exchange of price and other information on a reciprocal reciprocal basis. (Plaintiff's Mem. at 13, pages "a" and "b", Table II.) This exchange took place primarily during monthly telephone conversations between the sales engineers of the various manufacturers. (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 15; Defendant's Mem. at 18.) The sales engineers exchanged information relating to the "base" price of the aircraft for the next available delivery. (Plaintiff's Mem. at 13; Defendants' Mem. at 18.) This information [*1058] was recorded in internal Falcon [10] Jet documents called "price list comparisons." (e.g., PX-147, Defendants' Mem. at 18.) These documents listed the base price, the next available delivery, production rate, price of typical options, and escalated and equipped prices of Falcon Jet and other aircraft. (Defendants' Mem. at 18.)

The price list comparisons were widely circulated among sales representatives as well as executives of Falcon Jet. (Defendants' Mem. at 19; Plaintiff's Mem. at 5, 46.) Plaintiffs allege Falcon Jet executives used this information to set the prices of their aircraft. (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 5, 26, page "c", Table III.) Defendants claim, to the contrary, the information exchange was not authorized by executives of Falcon Jet, but the practice merely evolved over time among sales engineers, who had or have no pricing authority. (Defendants' Mem. at 18.) It is contended this information exchange was meant to assist the sales engineers in their efforts to sell Falcon aircraft -- not to set prices.

Since 1980 Falcon Jet was responsible for publishing the Business Jet Activity Report ("BJAR") which reported detailed order and delivery information including the names of individual purchasers. [9] (Plaintiffs' [11] Mem. at 16. [10]) The BJAR was distributed monthly to all of the aircraft manufacturers who contributed information to it. (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 17-18.) Plaintiffs also claim representatives of the various aircraft manufacturers exchanged information following the annual convention of the National Business Aircraft Association. (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 16.)

Defendants concede there "is no question that sales engineers for aircraft companies routinely exchanged information relating to the published list price and performance characteristics of aircraft." (Defendants' Mem. at 18.) However, the defendants disagree with the inferences plaintiffs draw from these facts.

In opposition to the plaintiffs' allegation of conspiracy, defendants have offered sworn statements of the senior executives of all the business jet manufacturers denying the existence of any agreement [12] or understanding among them with respect to price fixing. (Defendants' Mem. at 30.) In addition, plaintiffs' economic expert, Richard Barber, has consistently stated he is unaware of any evidence which suggests the alleged co-conspirators set prices pursuant to an express agreement to fix or adhere to the prices exchanged. (Barber Tr. 501-502, 8/14/87 Tr. 69-70, 84-85.)

Defendants argue to infer the existence of any agreement, whether express or tacit, is implausible because there was a high level of competition among business jet manufacturers throughout the relevant period of the lawsuit. [11] For example, the defendants have produced scores of advertisements relating to the price competitiveness of various aircraft. (Defendants' Reply at 47-48.) Additionally, two government reports have stated that the general aviation industry is highly competitive. (Defendants' Mem. at 4, 17, 28-29; cf. Plaintiffs' Mem. at 12 n. 22, 17 n. 42.) Intense rivalry is especially apparent between domestic and foreign business jet manufacturers. Defendants have introduced a mailing campaign initiated by American business jet manufacturers in an attempt to discredit and draw business away from foreign [13] manufacturers including Falcon Jet. (Defendants' Mem. at 28 (citing DX-1600).) Defendants also have shown the market shares of the alleged co-conspirators fluctuated widely during the period in

---

[9] Prior to 1980 the BJAR was published by Rockwell International. In that year, Rockwell ceased selling business jets, so the compilation and distribution of the BJAR was taken over by Falcon Jet.

[10] See also, Report of Plaintiffs' Economic Expert Richard J. Barber, dated June 28, 1985 ("Barber Report") at 31-34.)

[11] The relevant period of this lawsuit is roughly 1978 through 1982, the years during which defendants and other business jet manufacturers allegedly agreed to fix prices. (10/19/87 Tr. at 101.)

which the alleged conspiracy existed. (Defendants' Mem. at 31; Report of Defendants' Economic Expert, M.A. [*1059] Adelman ("Adelman Report") at Figure 1, Table 1, Figure 6, Table 6.)

Plaintiffs have argued that the information exchange was a per se violation of the antitrust laws because, as they claim, the exchange of price information had the anticompetitive effect of raising or stablizing business jet prices. (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 57.) As evidence of this anticompetitive effect, the plaintiffs have introduced the reports of their expert witnesses Richard Barber and Seymor Laskow. The Barber Report examines the prices recorded in the price list comparisons and concludes that new business jet prices rose or remained stable from 1979 to 1983 while the demand for business jets dropped by over 80%. Plaintiffs [14] claim this fact is highly probative of the existence of a conspiracy to fix prices within the business jet aircraft industry. (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 34, 77.) The Laskow Report supports Mr. Barber's conclusion by showing that the majority of sales by Falcon Jet during this period were at or above the Falcon Jet prices as reported in the price list comparisons. (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 61.)

The defendants object to both these reports. They claim that not only are the conclusions reached by Barber and Laskow fallacious, but the methods which they employed to reach these conclusions are deceptive. (See, e.g., Defendants' Mem. at 17-25.) Defendants further offer the reports of their own economic experts, Morris Adelman and Bruce Stangle which show that discounts from list price occurred during periods of slackened demand, and prices in the industry actually dropped during the 1979 to 1983 period. (Defendants' Mem. at 18.)

The parties also debate a number of factual issues including whether the prices exchanged were actual prices charged to customers or merely list prices, whether the price information was publicly available, and whether the manufacturers exchanged "secret" pricing information. [15] Both parties can support their factual assertions with cites to the voluminous record of documents and depositions which accompanies these motions, however the resolution of these issues is not material to the outcome of the parties' motions for summary judgment. Therefore, they are not considered at length in this opinion.

2. Count Seventeen

Plaintiffs' second antitrust claim alleges that four business jet manufacturers -- Falcon Jet, British Aerospace, Gates Learjet Corporation and Cessna Aircraft Company -- engaged in a conspiracy to deter the resale of new business jets by including in their contracts clauses which impede contract assignment and warranty transfers. This claim is based upon evidence that the four business jet manufacturers each had policies of deterring resales, that representatives of various aircraft manufacturers discussed the effect of business jet resales at "forecasting meetings," and that executives from Falcon Jet and British Aerospace contacted executives of other business jet manufacturers on two separate occasions to discuss their policies on deterring resales and the number of jets each manufacturer had up for resale. These facts will be considered [16] in greater detail in the section of this memorandum granting defendants' motion for summary judgment on count seventeen.

Summary Judgment

HN1[] Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, summary judgment should be granted "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. Rule 56(c). Accordingly, to defeat a motion for summary judgment, the non-moving party must respond by setting forth "specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial." Fed. R. Civ. P. Rule 56(e).

HN2[] On a motion for summary judgment, "the evidence of the non-movant is to be believed, and all justifiable inferences are to be drawn in his favor." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. 242, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 2513, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986); See, Fragale & Sons Beverage Co. v. Dill, 760 F.2d 469, 472 [*1060] (3d Cir. 1985). Moreover, "at the summary judgment stage the judge's function is not himself to weigh the evidence and determine the truth of the matter but to determine whether there is a genuine issue for [17] trial." Anderson, 106 S. Ct. at 2511. This determination "must be guided by the substantive evidentiary standards that apply to the case." Id. at 2514. Thus, a motion for summary judgment may be granted unless the evidence, construed in favor of the non-moving party, is sufficient for a reasonable jury to return a verdict for that party. Id.

Summary judgment is an appropriate means of disposing of complex cases where factual contentions lack support in the record. See, Matsushita Electric Industrial Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corporation, 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986) (antitrust action); Anderson, supra (libel action); Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986) (wrongful death action). Granting summary judgment is appropriate against "a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial." Celotex Corp., 106 S. Ct. at 2552. Similarly, HN3[] a summary judgment motion in an antitrust case should be granted if the plaintiff's allegations are unsupported or "if defendant has introduced probative evidence rebutting [18] the antitrust allegations in the complaint, and plaintiff fails to come forward with factual support for his allegations." 10A Wright, Miller & Kane, Federal Practice & Procedure, § 2732.1, p. 328.

The Third Circuit has determined that HN4[] the elements of a cause of action under section one of the Sherman Act [12] are:

> (1) that the defendants contracted, combined or conspired among each other [or with other co-conspirators]; (2) that the combination or conspiracy produced adverse, anti-competitive effects, within relevant product and geographic markets; (3) that the objects of and the conduct pursuant to that contract or conspiracy were illegal; and (4) that the plaintiff was injured as a proximate result of that conspiracy.

Martin B. Glauser Dodge v. Chrysler Corp., 570 F.2d 72, 81 (3d Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 436 U.S. 913, 56 L. Ed. 2d 413, 98 S. Ct. 2253 (1978); Arnold Pontiac-GMC, Inc. v. General Motors Corp., 786 F.2d 564, 572 (3d Cir. 1986). HN5[] Thus, concerted action is an essential element of a Section One claim. Link v. Mercedes Benz of North America, Inc., 788 F.2d 918, 922 (3d Cir. 1986). Unilateral or independent action, irrespective of its intent, does not violate Section 1. Monsanto [19] Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984); Hudson's Bay Co. v. American Legend Co-op., 651 F. Supp. 819, 838 (D.N.J. 1986).

Because direct evidence of a conspiracy is often difficult to HN7[] show, a conspiracy may be inferred from circumstantial evidence. However, the extent to which such inferences can be made is limited. Matsushita, 106 S. Ct. at 1360. For example, plaintiff has not provided evidence of the existence of a conspiracy if he has merely shown the existence of an opportunity to conspire, Fragale & Sons, 760 F.2d at 473, or consciously parallel business behavior, Schoenkopf v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 637 F.2d 205, 208 (3d Cir. 1980). In order for an antitrust plaintiff to carry his burden of proof upon a claim of concerted price fixing, he must provide evidence that "tends to exclude the possibility" of independent action on the parts of the alleged conspirators. Matsushita, 106 S. Ct. at 1357 (quoting [20] Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764).

HN8[] Once the plaintiff establishes a conspiracy can be inferred from circumstantial evidence, the defendants may deny the existence of the conspiracy and "offer an innocent explanation of the questioned conduct." [*1061] Kreuzer v. American Academy of Periodontology, 237 U.S. App. D.C. 43, 735 F.2d 1479, 1488 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In some cases, sworn denials of the defendants may be sufficient to shift the burden of proof back to the plaintiff. See, Apex Oil Co. v. DiMauro, 641 F. Supp. 1246, 1257 (S.D.N.Y. 1986); aff'd in part, 822 F.2d 246 (2d Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 977, 98 L. Ed. 2d 487, 108 S. Ct. 489 (1987); Zenith Radio Corp. v. Matsushita Electric Industrial Co., 513 F. Supp. 1100, 1141 (E.D. Pa. 1981), rev'd in part, 723 F.2d 238 (3d Cir. 1983), rev'd, 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986).

Therefore, HN9[] even if the plaintiffs present circumstantial evidence from which a conspiracy can be inferred, such evidence without more "is insufficient unless the circumstances under which it occurred make the inference of rational, independent choice less attractive than that of concerted action." Bogosian v. Gulf Oil, 561 F.2d 434, 446 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1086, [21] 55 L. Ed. 2d 791, 98 S. Ct. 1280 (1978); accord Matsushita, 106 S. Ct. at 1357. Moreover, "if the factual context renders [plaintiff's] claim implausible - if the claim is one that simply makes no economic sense - [plaintiffs] must come forward with morey persuasive evidence to support their claim than would otherwise be necessary." Matsushita, 106 S. Ct. at 1356.

---

[12] HN6[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act states, in pertinent part:

> Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states . . . is declared to be illegal.

Therefore, in order for plaintiffs to survive defendants' motion for partial summary judgment with respect to the price fixing claims and count seventeen of the instant complaints, plaintiffs must proffer evidence (to be construed in their favor) such that a reasonable jury might find that the inferences of conspiracy are stronger than the possibility of independent action by the defendants. This burden of proof may be heightened if the allegations of conspiracy make "no economic sense." Matsushita, 106 S. Ct. at 1356. HN10[] Summary judgment will be entered against a plaintiff if he cannot show "the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action or colusive action that could not have harmed [plaintiff]." Matsushita, 106 S. Ct. at 1357.

Discussion

I. The Price Fixing Claims

The most [22] probative evidence of a conspiracy to fix prices within the business jet industry is the reciprocal exchange of price information among the sales engineers of the various manufacturers, as evidenced by the Falcon Jet price list comparisons. (e.g., PX-147, PX-149), and reams of deposition testimony (see, Plaintiffs' Mem. at page "a", Table II). [13]

Plaintiffs cite United States v. Container Corp., 393 U.S. 333, 21 L. Ed. 2d 526, 89 S. Ct. 510 (1969) which states that HN11[] the reciprocal exchange of price information among competitors "is of course sufficient to establish the combination or conspiracy, the initial ingredient of a violation of [section one] of the Sherman Act." Id. at 335 (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 46.) Plaintiffs will be granted partial summary judgment with respect to this element of their claim. However, [23] this fact alone does not entitle plaintiffs to complete summary judgment on the price fixing claims. As the Container case itself states, "price information exchanged in some markets may have no effect on truly competitive price." Id. at 337. [14] Thus, the mere showing of an exchange of price information among competitors, without more, is insufficient to establish a violation of the antitrust laws. Plaintiffs must also [*1062] show that the information exchange had an anticompetitive effect on prices. Id. at 339 (Fortas, J. concurring); United States v. United States Gypsum, 438 U.S. 422, 436 n. 13, 449 n. 16, 57 L. Ed. 2d 854, 98 S. Ct. 2864 (1978).

[24] This results from the rule that "conduct as consistent with permissible conduct as with [an] illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy." Matsushita, 106 S. Ct. at 1357 (citing Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764). HN13[] A plaintiff "should present direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove that the [defendants'] had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective." Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764 (quoting Edward J. Sweeney & Sons v. Texaco, Inc., 637 F.2d 105, 111 (3d Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 911, 68 L. Ed. 2d 300, 101 S. Ct. 1981 (1981)). In other words, the plaintiffs may alternatively show the defendants had an anticompetitive intent in entering into the agreement. Gypsum, 438 U.S. at 436 n. 13. To support an inference of more than a mere exchange of information, that is a conspiracy in violation of section one of the Sherman Act, the plaintiffs must show "the inference of rational, independent choice [is] less attractive than that of concerted action." Bogosian, 561 F.2d at 446; accord Matsushita, 106 S. Ct. at 1357.

---

[13] Plaintiffs admit there is no direct evidence of an express agreement to fix prices in the industry (see 10/18/87 Tr. at 97); therefore, defendants are granted summary judgment with respect to the existence of an express agreement to fix prices. However, plaintiffs argue the information exchange itself facilitated a tacit agreement to adhere to the prices exchanged. (Id. at 100.)

[14] HN12[] In markets which are oligopolistic, where the competition is for a fungible product, and demand is inelastic, the exchange of price information has the anticompetitive effect of stabilizing prices. See Container, 393 U.S. at 337; Gypsum, 438 U.S. at 426, 457. But, where the exchange of information takes place in a market which is competitive, where the product is not fungible, competition is based on quality rather than price, and the market is elastic, then no anticompetitive effect exists. See, Von Kalinowski, 16A Business Organizations, § 6A.02[2] n. 58.

Before considering whether the plaintiffs have offered sufficient probative [25] evidence that the agreement to exchange price information had an anticompetitive motive or effect, it is necessary to address the defendants' contention that the inference of conspiracy should not be drawn in this case because the factual context of the plaintiffs' claim renders such an inference implausible.

A. The Existence of a Conspiracy to Fix Prices

As HN14[] mentioned, the extent to which an inference of a conspiracy can be drawn from circumstantial evidence is limited. One of these limits is the plausibility of the conspiracy claim. As the Supreme Court reemphasized in Matsushita, the jury should not be permitted "to infer conspiracies when such inferences are implausible, because the effect of such practices is often to deter procompetitive conduct." Matsushita, 106 S. Ct. at 1360 (citing Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 762-764). A court must consider the "practical obstacles" to the implementation of the alleged conspiracy in connection with defendants' motion for summary judgment. Matsushita, 106 S. Ct. at 1357.

Implausibility is established if the plaintiffs' claim "simply makes no economic sense." Id. at 1356. Although this standard is vague, Matsushita is [26] instructive. In that case, American manufacturers of electronic products alleged a two-fold horizontal conspiracy among Japanese electronics manufacturers to drive the American competitors out of business. The first facet of the alleged conspiracy was an agreement among the Japanese manufacturers to charge artificially high prices for their products in Japan. The second step involved using those profits to support artificially low predatory pricing of Japanese electronics products in the United States.

The Matsushita Court held that the Japanese defendants "had no motive to enter into the alleged conspiracy" and affirmed the District Court's order of summary judgment for the defendants. 106 S. Ct. at 1360. The Supreme Court based this conclusion in part on the fact that predatory pricing schemes are inherently risky because all the firms must agree together to forego short term profits for the sake of a long term uncertainty. Id. at 1357. Because this scheme had allegedly existed for over twenty years without reaching its intended goal of driving American manufacturers out of business, the Matsushita Court found the existence of such a conspiracy was implausible and required [27] the plaintiffs to show "more persuasive evidence to support their claim than would otherwise be necessary" to infer a conspiracy. Id. at 1356.

Unlike Matsushita, the conspiracy alleged in this case involves raising prices rather than lowering them. This means the conspiracy alleged by plaintiffs is inherently [*1063] more plausible in terms of a motive for the defendants to enter into the agreement. Moreover, although the information exchange has existed for at least fifteen years, [15] the plaintiffs allege the price-fixing agreement existed only for a four year period. [16]

Notwithstanding these distinctions, defendants argue the conspiracy alleged by plaintiffs is implausible because of competition within the industry. For example, defendants cite two reports prepared by government agencies which define the general aviation industry as highly competitive. [28] International Trade Commission, Competitive Assessment of the U.S. Commuter and Business Aircraft Industries, 1817 USITC Publication 5 (March 1986) ("ITC Report") [17]; Department of Commerce, A Competitive Assessment of the U.S. General Aviation Aircraft Industry,

---

[15] See, Plaintiffs' Mem. at 13 ("Since at least the early 1970's, defendants and the other seven manufacturers of business jets sold in the United States exchanged among themselves on a regular quid pro quo basis large amounts of information on their current and future prices.")

[16] See 10/19/87 Tr. at 101.

xviii (June 1986) ("DOC Report"). These reports attribute the declining competitiveness of domestic aircraft producers in the business jet industry and market since the early 1980's in part to "strong competition from foreign manufacturers." ITC Report at ix; accord DOC Report at 34.

Rivalry between American and foreign business jet manufacturers, as separate groups, is also evident in the formation of the American Business Aircraft Committee ("ABAC") which was organized as a response to the pressures of foreign competition on the U.S. market. ITC Report at 108. Gulfstream Aerospace and Cessna Aircraft, both manufacturers of business jets and alleged co-conspirators along with defendants, were members of the ABAC. (DX-1600.) [29] One of the tasks of the ABAC was to develop a large mailing campaign to encourage U.S. companies to buy American manufactured business aircraft. (Defendants' Mem. at 27-28.) A brochure mailed out by the ABAC specifically targeted Falcon Jet as one of the foreign business jet manufacturers which the members of the ABAC were trying to discredit. (DX-1600.) Defendants claim it is implausible that two of the alleged members of the conspiracy, Gulfstream Aerospace and Cessna Aircraft, would engage in a campaign designed to draw business away from another member of the conspiracy and expect the conspiracy to continue. This is especially so during the period of suppressed demand, 1980-82. [18] [30] Other evidence of competition in the business aircraft industry is the price competitive advertising of all the manufacturers throughout the relevant time period (Defendants' Reply at 47-48), as well as the fluctuating market shares of the alleged co-conspirators. [19] (Defendants' Mem. at 31; Adelman Report, Table 1, Table 6.) The fluctuating market shares of the business jet manufacturers suggest a significant [*1064] level of competition among the manufacturers. Donald S. Clark, Price-Fixing Without Collusion: An Antitrust Analysis of Facilitating Practices After Ethyl Corp., 1983 Wis. L. Rev. 887, 906; Richard A. Posner, Antitrust Law, 62 (1976). These data also suggest the maintenance of a conspiracy among the business jet manufacturers would be prohibitively difficult because the co-conspirators would have to devise a formula for equalizing the differences in market share among the co-conspirators.

HN15[]

[31] In markets where the products are heterogeneous, or where there is rapid technological change, in order for a price-fixing cartel to function "it may be necessary to establish and enforce a complex schedule of prices corresponding to gradations in actual or perceived quality attributes among the competing products." United States Department of Justice, 1984 Merger Guidelines, 2Trade Reg. Rep. (CCH) para. 4493.401. There is no evidence in the record to support such a finding.

It therefore appears implausible that a conspiracy among business jet manufacturers could exist in an industry where there is direct evidence of a high level of competition among the manufacturers over price as well as the fluctuating market shares. To enter into such an agreement would not be economically feasible because the individual profits gained by artificially high prices would be offset by the competition over market share. There is no evidence present in the record to suggest that a conspiracy of the type which would be necessary to account for all

---

[17] Both plaintiffs and defendants cite to the ITC Report. (Defendants' Mem. at 3, 16, 28; Plaintiffs' Reply to Defendants' Memorandum of 11/12/86, dated 12/10/86 ("Plaintiffs' Reply") at 15.)

[18] The one point on which plaintiffs' and defendants' experts agree is that demand for business jets rose steadily from 1976, peaked in 1979, and then declined steadily to a low in 1982. Plaintiffs' expert Barber reports that 346 aircraft were ordered by customers in 1979, while in 1982 that number dropped to 65 orders. (Barber Report at 20.) Defendants' expert Adelman measures demand by quarterly sales. In the first part of 1979, sales were approximately 130 contracts per quarter, while in the third quarter of 1982 sales hit a low of 15 planes. (Adler Report at 35.)

[19] The Barber Report does not present an analysis of the relative market shares of the competing business jet manufacturers. Although Mr. Barber recognizes the possibility of such an analysis, he relies solely upon abstract calculations to determine market concentration. (Barber Report at 13-17.) The Barber Report does not address directly the fluctuation of market shares. (p. 24, n. 11.) For example, according to the Adelman Report, Falcon Jet's market share in the years 1977 through 1983 was 19.0%, 12.3%, 16.4%, 28.3% (industry leader), 13.2%, 13.3% and 17.2%, assuming the plaintiffs' market definition (Table I), or 3.8%, 4.1%, 3.6%, 7.5%, 8.5%, 17.3% (industry leader), and 8.0%, including sales of used business jets. (Table 6.)

of these factors could have existed. [20] Nonetheless, plaintiffs have offered substantial evidence of both an anticompetitive purpose and effect based [32] on the information exchange. Giving the plaintiffs the benefit of all inferences which can be drawn, a genuine issue of material fact exists as to whether the information exchange facilitated a tacit agreement among business jet manufacturers to adhere to the exchanged prices. Therefore, defendants' motion is granted with respect to the question of an express agreement to adhere to the exchanged prices, but plaintiffs' and defendants' motions are denied in all other respects.

B. Anticompetitive Intent

Evidence of an anticompetitive intent to enter into the agreement to exchange information in this case is offered through the testimony of plaintiffs' witness Mr. William Handy, a former Falcon Jet sales engineer and presently a close business associate of Mr. Rosefielde. Mr. Handy explained that by [33] using the information obtained from the price list comparisons, Falcon Jet salesmen could "neutralize the competition" by eliminating the uncertainty as to what price and delivery date the competition was offering for a comparable model aircraft. (Handy Tr. 634-635; Plaintiff's Mem. at 76.) Plaintiffs have also introduced evidence that the senior executives of Falcon Jet and other business jet manufacturers were aware of the price information exchange and considered the data obtained by the sales engineers to set the price of business jets. (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 26-27, 76; e.g., Rosanvallon Tr. 321-325, PX-1307, PX-896.)

Faced with this evidence, defendants have offered the sworn denials of the senior executives of all the aircraft manufacturers which are charged with participating in the conspiracy. (Defendants' Mem. at 30.) In addition, the defendants have offered an "innocent explanation of the questioned conduct." Kreuzer, 735 F.2d at 1488. Defendants cite the testimony of sales engineers from the various business jet manufacturers stating they only exchanged publicly available price information to compare their aircraft to those of their competitors and thereby assisted [34] their salesmen to promote sales of their own aircraft. (Defendants' Mem. at 31.) Additionally, defendants note even plaintiffs' economic expert Richard Barber has stated [*1065] there was not a conspiracy to set prices. (Defendants' Mem. at 24; Barber Tr. at 501-502.)

A Court may not determine the credibility of these witnesses or weigh the evidence offered by the parties. Anderson, 106 S. Ct. at 2513. Giving the benefit of all favorable inferences, and assuming the facts cited by both parties are true, the inferences of rational, independent conduct appear equal to those of concerted action. "HN16[] It is not unlawful for a business to take the prices charged by its competitors into account when setting its own prices, or to follow or copy the prices of a competitor, if the decision to do so is the result of a unilateral business judgment, and not the result of collusive agreement." Wilcox Development v. First Interstate Bank of Oregon, 605 F. Supp. 592, 595 (D. Or. 1985), aff'd 815 F.2d 522 (9th Cir. 1987) (citing United States v. International Harvester, 274 U.S. 693, 71 L. Ed. 1302, 47 S. Ct. 748 (1927).) However, in this case the inferences of independent action in setting prices does not outweigh the evidence [35] of an anticompetitive objective to enter the agreement. Accordingly, defendants' motion for summary judgment on the intent issue is denied. [21]

[20] Because the opportunity to compete over factors other than price is present in this context, a complex system of discovering and penalizing such deviations would also have to be arranged. Clark, supra. There is no direct evidence of such a system; however, plaintiffs argue the alleged co-conspirators gave "mutual assurances" there would be no discounts. (10/19/87 Tr. at 109.)

[21] HN17[] Granting summary judgment in an antitrust action is disfavored when issues of motive and intent are central to the case. Poller v. CBS, 368 U.S. 464, 473, 7 L. Ed. 2d 458, 82 S. Ct. 486 (1962). But see, Anderson, 106 S. Ct. at 2514; Zenith v. Matsushita, 513 F. Supp. at 1144. In granting summary judgment for the defendants in an extremely complex antitrust litigation, Judge Becker in Zenith v. Matsushita, noted

> The number of antitrust cases the Supreme Court and courts in the Third Circuit have granted or upheld the grant of summary judgment on the merits, either partial or complete, since the Poller decision in 1962 is extremely large. It is now settled that summary judgment is appropriate in those antitrust cases where plaintiffs, after having engaged in extensive discovery, fail to produce "significant probative evidence" in support of the allegations in their complaint.

[36] Plaintiffs claim "the issues of motive and intent need not be reached in order to grant summary judgment in favor of plaintiffs on liability on the issue of an anticompetitive effect on prices." (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 11, n. 20.) The plaintiffs themselves have admitted that if summary judgment is to be granted in their favor it must be based entirely on the question of the effect of the information exchange on competition. Accordingly, plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment concerning anticompetitive intent is denied.

C. Anticompetitive Effect

Both parties in this case claim they are entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law based upon the effect of the information exchange on industry prices. The plaintiffs claim the business jet industry is oligopolistic and highly concentrated with price inelastic demand; therefore, they claim the reciprocal exchange of price information most likely has an anticompetitive effect and constitutes a per se violation of section one of the Sherman Act. United States v. United States Gypsum, 438 U.S. 422, 457-458, 57 L. Ed. 2d 854, 98 S. Ct. 2864 (1978); VI P. Areeda, Antitrust Law, para. 1407e at 35 (1986). (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 45.)

Conversely, the defendants contend [37] the business jet industry is highly competitive and non-oligopolistic. They claim the reciprocal exchange of price information among competitors does not have an anti-competitive effect in this case because the alleged co-conspirators only exchanged publicly available list price information, and the manufacturers did not adhere to these prices in making sales of business jets. (Defendants' Mem. at 18, 30-32.) Moreover, the prices exchanged were base prices which would not account for the fact that each of the jets were different in terms of range, passenger capacity, fuel consumption and standard equipment. (Defendants' Mem. at 2.)

For the reasons set forth below, neither of the moving parties has sufficiently established their position with regard to the effect of the information exchange on competition [*1066] as a matter of law without a genuine dispute over the material facts. The plaintiffs have failed to show that business jets are fungible goods. (See discussion of fungibility in sub-section 1, infra.) Therefore, their per se argument must be rejected, and their cross-motion with respect to the price-fixing claims must be denied. Questions of fact regarding the relevant product [38] market of business jets, and the concentration of the business jet industry make it impossible to determine as a matter of law the effect of the information exchange on competition. Thus, the motions of both parties must be denied with respect to the effect of the information exchange.

1. Fungibility

Plaintiffs have misguidedly relied on two inapposite cases to support their argument that they are entitled to summary judgment because the exchange of price information in this case constitutes a per se violation of Section One of the Sherman Act. United States Gypsum affirmed a reversal by the Third Circuit of criminal convictions of several officials of major gypsum board manufacturers who had engaged in interseller price verification. 438 U.S. at 465. This is a practice whereby competitors would call each other to determine the actual price currently being offered by a competing seller to a particular customer. Id. at 429. Plaintiffs also draw support for their per se argument from the Container case wherein the Supreme Court in a five page opinion struck down a scheme in which a seller of corrugated containers, upon the request of another seller, would furnish [39] information as to the most recent price charged or quoted to an individual customer. 393 U.S. at 338. The Court found as a matter of law that this arrangement stabilized prices in violation of Section One of the Sherman Act. Id. at 336-37.

The plaintiffs have attempted to mold the instant facts into the holdings of Gypsum and Container, however both cases are distinguished from the instant case by the fact that gypsum board and corrugated containers are HN18[] fungible goods. Gypsum, 438 U.S. at 426; Container, 393 U.S. at 337. That is to say, the goods of competing manufacturers are virtually identical, so the primary, if not the only, source of competition among manufacturers is in price.

---

513 F. Supp. at 1140 (footnote omitted). In the instant action, where the plaintiffs have met their burden of proof to support the inference of an anticompetitive intent to exchange prices Poller does prevent the grant of summary judgment for defendants with respect to the intent issue.

Competition for sales of business jets occurs on a variety of levels of which price is only one. Range, passenger capacity and fuel efficiency are among the factors which business jet buyers take into consideration when purchasing an aircraft. (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 36; Defendants' Mem. at 14; Defendants' Reply at 12-13.) As well, it is difficult to make comparisons among different models of business jets because their characteristics vary widely. (Defendants' Reply at 14; Taylor Tr. [40] 53-54; Roden Tr. 137; Handy Tr. 654-655, 664.) Thus, the plaintiffs concede business jet aircraft are not fungible. (Plaintiffs' Post-Hearing Summary Judgment Memorandum at 36.) Because business jets are not fungible products, an exchange of price information among manufacturers of business jets cannot be found to be a per se violation of Section One of the Sherman Act under the rules of either Container or Gypsum. Plaintiffs' cross-motion for summary judgment must be denied. [22]

[41] The Container Court found:

> the corrugated container industry is dominated by relatively few sellers. The product is fungible and the competition for sales is price. The demand is inelastic, as buyers place orders only for immediate, [*1067] short-run needs. The exchange of price data tends toward price uniformity. For a lower price does not mean a larger share of the available business but a sharing of the existing business at a lower return.

393 U.S. at 337. The Container case is plainly inapposite to plaintiffs' price fixing claims because in addition to the facts that business jets are not fungible, that competition for sales relies on many factors of which price is only one, and that there is evidence of competition over market shares, factual disputes exist concerning the number of sellers in the industry (see subsection 2, infra), and the elasticity of demand for business jets. Plaintiffs claim demand is inelastic (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 36; Barber Supplemental Report at 26-31), while defendants argue demand is elastic. (Defendants' Reply at 15-16.) [23] [42] These disputes create a second ground upon which to reject plaintiffs' per se argument. [24]

2. Market Definition

[22] Courts subsequent to the Container case have distinguished its per se rule when the facts of the instant dispute do not fit the Container holding because the product is not fungible. See Belliston v. Texaco, Inc., 455 F.2d 175, 181 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 408 U.S. 928, 33 L. Ed. 2d 341, 92 S. Ct. 2494 (1972); Flav-O-Rich, Inc. v. North Carolina Milk Comm'n, 593 F. Supp. 13, 15 (E.D.N.C. 1983). Cf. L.C.L. Theatres, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Industries, 421 F. Supp. 1090, 1096 (N.D. Tex. 1976), aff'd, 566 F.2d 494 (5th Cir. 1978) (distinguishing Container where the product is inter alia not fungible). See also Note, Antitrust Implications of the Exchange of Price Information Among Competitors, 68 Mich. L. Rev. 720, 722 (1970).

[23] Elasticity is an economic concept reflecting the effect an increase in prices will have on the demand for a product. The concept of elasticity, like that of relevant market depends almost entirely upon the degree to which products are interchangeable. A product which is said to be price elastic has many substitutes. A slight increase in price of a price elastic product will result in a large drop in demand as customers begin to use the substitute product. Inelastic products do not have substitutes. An increase in price of an inelastic product will result in a relatively small drop in demand because most customers would rather use the product at a higher price than forego its use at all.

In this case, the elasticity of the business jet industry may depend upon the extent to which used business jets may be used for the same purposes as new business jets. If the two products are interchangeable, as defendants argue, (Defendants' Mem. at 28), then the demand for new business jets would most likely be price elastic; price increases for new business jets would simply compel purchasers to buy retrofitted used business jets. (See Adelman Report at 18-20.) The interchangeability of used and new business jet aircraft is one of the factual issues which cannot be resolved as a matter of law based on the evidence present in the record. Therefore, a determination of the demand elasticity of new business jets is impossible to make at this time.

[24] Subsequent to the Container decision, the Supreme Court explicitly stated "the dissemination of price information is not itself a per se violation of the Sherman Act." United States v. Citizens & Southern National Bank, 422 U.S. 86, 113, 45 L. Ed. 2d 41, 95 S. Ct. 2099 (1975) (citing, inter alia, Container, 393 U.S. at 338 (concurring opinion); see also Gypsum 438 U.S. at 441 n. 16; Zenith Radio v. Matsushita, 513 F. Supp. at 1152-53. Therefore, if the per se rule of Container is to be followed, it must be closely tailored to the facts pattern of that case. See Container, 393 U.S. at 338.

Both of the parties have devoted considerable portions of their extensive submissions to forwarding contradictory definitions of the business jet industry. As stated, this is because the nature of the industry will often determine whether the exchange of information relating to price among competitors has an anticompetitive or procompetitive effect.

The anticompetitive effect of a price information exchange in an oligopolistic industry was discussed in the Gypsum case:

> "Regardless of its putative purpose, the most likely consequence of any such [reciprocal] [43] agreement to exchange price information would be the stabilization of industry prices. . . . Especially in oligopolistic industries, . . . the exchange of price information among competitors carries with it the added potential for the development of concerted price-fixing arrangements which lie at the core of the Sherman Act's prohibitions."

Gypsum, 438 U.S. at 457. [25]

Plaintiffs offer evidence that the market for new business jets is a highly concentrated [*1068] oligopoly. For one thing, the two government reports cited earlier define it as [44] such. ITC Report at 5. ("The general aviation industry is highly competitive . . . . The industry is also highly concentrated . . . ."); (DOC Report at 22.) However, these are the same reports which show there is a high level of competition in the business jet industry. Therefore, based upon these reports alone there is a genuine issue of a material fact sufficient to reject the arguments offered by plaintiffs and defendants in support of their respective motions on the issue of anticompetitive effect. This is not the only disputed evidence, however. Substantial issues of fact also exist concerning the relevant product market.

The relevant product market definition [26] is important in this case because it will determine the level of concentration in the industry. Plaintiffs define the relevant product market in this case as sales of new business jet aircraft in the United States. (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 32.) For this market, the plaintiffs' economic expert, Richard Barber, shows that the Herfindhal-Hirschman Index ("HHI") and the four firm concentration ratio, both of which measure the concentration of relevant markets, are well above established guidelines for highly concentrated markets. [45] (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 32.) The defendants, to the contrary, show that if sales of used business jets and resales of new business jets are included in the definition of relevant product market, then the HHI is well below 1000, which is the Justice Department's limit for unconcentrated markets. (Defendants' Reply at 28-29.)

[46] Both parties have amply supported their competing definitions of the relevant product market with cites to evidence from the record and other authorities. For example, plaintiffs' economic expert relies upon the perceptions of the business jet manufacturers as evidenced by the type of information exchanged among them, their testimony, and their internal documents. (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 17; see Barber Supp. Report at 10-12.) Defendants rely primarily upon the relationship between prices of new and used business jets, as well as the perceptions of purchasers of business jets to establish that new and used business jets compete in the same market. (Defendants' Reply at 28-35.) Thus, both parties have offered probative evidence of their opposing definitions of the relevant product market.

---

[25] Plaintiffs' reading of Gypsum is strained when they argue that even in a non-oligopolistic market, the exchange of current and future prices constitutes a per se violation of section one of the Sherman Act. (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 57.) Plaintiffs cite Gypsum, 438 U.S. at 441, n. 16, in support of their proposition. However, the passage they quote clearly states the exchange of current price information is "not per se unlawful" without a showing of an anticompetitive effect. Id. As will be shown, there is sufficient dispute of material fact on the issue of anticompetitive effect to preclude establishing a per se violation.

[26] In United States v. E.I. DuPont De Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 395, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 (1956), the Supreme Court states that HN19[] in determining what constitutes a relevant market "no more definite rule can be declared than that commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes make up" the relevant market. Accord Rothery Storage and Van Co. v. Atlas Van Lines, 253 U.S. App. D.C. 142, 792 F.2d 210 (D.C. Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 1033, 107 S. Ct. 880, 93 L. Ed. 2d 834 (1987); Hudson's Bay, 651 F. Supp. at 834-835. The relevant market must be determined in terms of both product and geographic markets. Brown Shoe Co. v. U.S., 370 U.S. 294, 324, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962). Plaintiffs claim the geographic market in this case is the United States. (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 32.) The defendants do not appear to dispute this issue, however they vigorously contend plaintiffs' definition of the relevant product market.

Because the determination of the relevant product market in this case depends upon whether used business jets are reasonably interchangeable by consumers of new business jets for the same purposes, [27] and because both parties have offered evidence to support their positions, the determination of the relevant product market in this case is a finding of fact which cannot be determined on a summary judgment [47] motion. See Westman Commission Co. v. Hobart International, Inc., 796 F.2d 1216, 1220 (10th Cir. 1986).

3. No Price Reductions Theory

Plaintiffs have shown there is a dispute over the material issue of whether the information exchange had an anticompetitive effect on price sufficient to preclude granting the defendants' motion. In considering defendants' motion, the court must believe all of the evidence of plaintiffs and draw all justifiable inferences of fact in their favor. Anderson, 106 S. Ct. at 2513. In this context, [*1069] it must be assumed the relevant market for business jets is oligopolistic and highly concentrated. Although the exchange of current price information is not a per se violation of Section One the Sherman Act, it carries great "potential" for such a violation. Gypsum, 438 U.S. at 441, n. 16. A mere potential violation of the Sherman Act, however, is not enough to permit the case to go to trial. The plaintiffs "must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts." Matsushita, 106 S. Ct. at 1356.

The Barber and [48] Laskow reports conclude that the exchanged prices were adhered to by the various manufacturers thereby stabilizing the price of business jet aircraft. Specifically, Mr. Barber shows that during 1979 to 1983 while demand for business jets dropped over 80%, business jet prices remained at a constant level. The Report of Mr. Laskow shows that this level was at or above the Falcon Jet list prices in the great majority of Falcon Jet sales. (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 61.) Therefore, plaintiffs conclude these reports together are highly probative of the fact that the exchange of price information had the effect, whether by tacit agreement or not, of stabilizing the price of business jets at a point far above demand.

The defendants have waged numerous attacks on the Barber and Laskow reports; [28] however, if the reports are found to be admissible evidence, then their factual assertions must be accepted as true, and this would provide sufficient evidence to suggest that the exchange of price information would have an anticompetitive effect in stabilizing business jet prices. Even if the reports are not found to be admissible, the plaintiffs claim they have established their proposition that the prices [49] exchanged became the actual prices "in no less than five different ways." (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 9, 60.)

The defendants have also introduced the reports of their economic experts, Morris Adelman and Bruce Stangle. These reports show that prices actually dropped during the 1979-1983 slump in demand and that non-price discounts and inducements such as free option packages were also given. (Defendants' Mem. at 18.) Therefore, the contradictory expert reports of the parties create a genuine issue of material fact concerning whether there was an anticompetitive effect on prices. The summary judgment motion of defendants with respect to the issue of effect must be denied.

D. Damages and Standing

Falcon Jet and AMB-BA have also argued for summary judgment on the price fixing claims in their favor because (1) plaintiffs cannot show they were injured by the exchange of price information among business jet manufacturers, and (2) plaintiffs do not have standing to assert their price-fixing claims with respect to all of the business jets purchased from Falcon Jet. The plaintiffs have not argued for summary judgment on the issue of damages.

[50] 1. Damages

HN20[] It is an essential element of any antitrust claim that the plaintiff demonstrate injuries of the type the antitrust laws were meant to protect. Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 538-540, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983). In alleging antitrust damages, the plaintiffs have a lesser burden of proof than they do on the other elements of their claim. Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 114 n. 9, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129, 89 S. Ct. 1562 (1969); Out Front Productions, Inc. v. Magid, 748 F.2d 166, 169 (3d Cir. 1984). Antitrust damage calculations need not be proven with certainty, Zenith, 395 U.S. at 123-124. Moreover, plaintiffs have satisfied their burden with respect to the fact of damages if they (demonstrate merely a "causal relationship" between defendants' illegal acts and plaintiffs' alleged injuries. Out Front Productions, 748 F.2d at 169; Bogosian, 561 F.2d at 454.

---

[27] As well, the impact of resales of new business jets appears to be a consideration.

[28] Defendants' Mem. at 32-37; Defendants' Reply at 17-25.

[*1070] Defendants claim "summary judgment is appropriate because the opinion of plaintiffs' expert that the information exchange had an 'anti-competitive effect' lacks factual support in the record." (Defendants' Mem. at 41.) This argument not only ignores [51] the relevant burdens of proof, but appears to be nothing more than an extension of defendants' previous attempts to discredit the expert report of plaintiffs' witness, Mr. Barber.

As to the fact of damages, the record demonstrates the Barber report is based upon a review of the contracts and exchanged prices of three of the alleged co-conspirators, and testimony from executive officers of the other companies that they adhered to their base prices. (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 61; see Plaintiffs' Mem. at 245, n. 59.) From this evidence, Mr. Barber finds (1) the prices exchanged were base prices (Barber Report at 22), (2) the business jet manufacturers adhered to the base prices in selling business jets (Barber Report at 26-29 [29]); and (3) the prices exchanged were the actual prices at which transactions were made. (Barber Report at 26.) The effect of the exchange, according to the Barber Report, was to "facilitat[e] stabilization [of prices] by providing each seller with knowledge that was not otherwise available and minimizing the risk of competitive price cutting." (Barber Report at 51.) Therefore, the Barber Report concludes that plaintiffs' injuries are equal to the percentage of the [52] purchase price which they were overcharged as a result of the price stabilization of the information exchange.

Despite the asserted factual basis for Mr. Barber's conclusions, the defendants insist this report does not present significant probative evidence of an anticompetitive effect on prices because (1) Mr. Barber relied on improper evidence (Defendants' Mem. at 33), (2) Mr. Barber ignored relevant data (Defendants' Mem. at 34, 35), and (3) the evidence relied upon by Mr. Barber will also support conflicting interpretations. The defendants do not contend, however, that the evidence relied upon by Mr. Barber does not support his conclusion.

These arguments are directed at the credibility of Mr. Barber's Report, and the merit of the "no price reductions" theory as persuasive evidence of an anticompetitive effect. HN21[] Although an antitrust plaintiff may not be allowed to defeat a motion for summary judgment with an expert report that lacks factual support in the record, Pennsylvania Dental Association v. Medical Service [53] Association of Pennsylvania, 745 F.2d 248, 262 (3d Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1016, 85 L. Ed. 2d 303, 105 S. Ct. 2021 (1985), the credibility of the evidence submitted should not be a factor in deciding a motion for summary judgment. Anderson, 106 S. Ct. at 2513. In the Third Circuit it is even disfavored to give careful scrutiny to the assumptions underlying and inferences made in an expert report when considering the admissibility of the report. See, In re Japanese Electronic Products Antitrust Litigation, 723 F.2d 238, 279 (3d Cir. 1983), rev'd on other grounds, 475 U.S. 574, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986). Therefore, Mr. Barber's reliance on the recorded contracts, price list comparisons and testimony of the alleged co-conspirators establishes sufficient probative evidence of a causal relationship between the defendants' acts and the plaintiffs' alleged injuries.

As to the amount of damages, defendants further object to Mr. Barber's damage calculation, which is based upon a comparison of isolated sales during the period when overcharges were incurred and post-complaint pricing behavior of the defendants. (Plaintiff's Mem. at 94.) From this comparison Mr. Barber concludes prices in the business jet industry were [54] generally fifteen percent higher than they would have been under free competition and plaintiffs can claim damages of fifteen percent of the purchase price of the jets they purchased from Falcon Jet. (Barber Report at p. 59.) Defendants claim this damage calculation is "irrational," yet plaintiffs claim it is a common method of measuring the [*1071] quantum of damages in an antitrust conspiracy case. (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 95-95.)

---

[29] Mr. Barber admitted in his deposition, however, that there was no express agreement among manufacturers to adhere to the exchanged prices. (Barber Tr. at 501-502.)

Given the low threshold for admissibility of expert reports in the Third Circuit, see Japanese Electronic Products, 723 F.2d at 279, and the minimal burden of proof for showing damages, see Zenith, 395 U.S. at 114 n. 9, even assuming defendants arguments are true, the arguments concerning damage calculation will not warrant granting summary judgment for defendants where plaintiffs have presented significant probative evidence of a causal relation of their injuries to defendants' acts.

2. Standing

The issue of damages is closely related to defendants' standing argument. Defendants challenge the standing of plaintiffs to assert their price-fixing claims as to certain business jets they purchased from Falcon Jet. [30] Specifically, defendants contend the standing [55] of plaintiffs with respect to four contracts which were either cancelled or terminated, and four contracts which plaintiffs assigned to third parties who are not plaintiffs in this action. (Defendants' Reply at 61-62.)

As to the cancelled or terminated contracts, defendants are correct. Plaintiffs could not possibly have incurred overcharge damages on contracts which were never consummated. In cases where plaintiffs have made deposits on their contracts, the deposits were returned. (Defendants' Reply at 55). Therefore, with respect to these contracts, plaintiffs have not established a "causal connection" of defendants' acts to plaintiffs' alleged injuries. It is interesting to note that although plaintiffs' opposition brief specifically lists the serial numbers of [56] the Falcon Jet aircraft which were assigned to third parties, the aircraft contracts which were cancelled or terminated are referred to only as "a Gulfstream IV aircraft" or "a Gulfstream III aircraft," suggesting plaintiffs never even knew the serial numbers of those aircraft. (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 83.) Moreover, plaintiffs' brief fails to address defendants' challenges with respect to these aircraft. Therefore, plaintiffs cannot be allowed to assert their price-fixing claims with respect to the three Gulfstream IV options terminated by plaintiffs and for which plaintiffs received a full refund of their deposit, or the purchase agreement for a Gulfstream III, aircraft which was cancelled and the downpayment on which was returned.

As to the contracts of which plaintiffs were assignors, defendants raise the issue of duplicative recovery. Defendants assert it is inconsistent to allow plaintiffs to assert "price fixing damages both for aircraft purchase agreements which they assigned to others and for aircraft purchase agreements which were assigned to them from others." (Defendants' Mem. at 45, emphasis in original.) [31] Defendants then assert "the assignees should be considered [57] the 'direct purchasers' of aircraft with standing to sue for price-fixing damages under Illinois Brick v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061 (1977)." (Defendants' Mem. at 46). Specifically, the defendants contest the standing of plaintiffs to assert their price-fixing claims with respect to the purchase agreements for Falcon 20-404, Falcon 50-69, Falcon 50-87 and Gulfstream III s/n 426, all of which were assigned to parties not represented in this action.

HN22[] The holding in Illinois Brick precludes indirect purchasers from bringing lawsuits alleging antitrust damages. Id. at 728-729. The Illinois Brick rule limits standing to assert price fixing claims to direct purchasers of the defendant's products. Id. at 729. The Supreme Court gave three reasons for this rule. First, the Court reasoned *Hanover [1072] Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231, 88 S. Ct. 2224 (1968), which held it is no defense in an action brought by a direct purchaser that the indirect rather than the direct purchasers were the parties injured by the antitrust violation, [58] must apply equally to plaintiffs and defendants.

---

[30] Defendants do not claim that plaintiffs lack standing to assert their claims with respect to all of the aircraft they purchased from Falcon Jet. (Defendants' Reply at 60 ("Defendants have never challenged the standing of Rose Associates as a direct purchaser of Falcon 50-81. . . .")). Therefore, the standing argument is really a question of whether plaintiffs can show they were injured through certain transactions.

[31] The plaintiffs erroneously argue "there is no issue of duplicative recovery, since no other plaintiff has sued." (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 28.)

Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 729. Second, the Court noted that to permit both indirect and direct purchasers to sue would subject the defendants to the risk of multiple liability for the same antitrust violation. Id. at 730. Finally, the Court noted "the principal basis for the decision in Hanover Shoe was the Court's perception of the uncertainties and difficulties in analyzing price and output decisions 'in the real economic world rather than in the economist's hypothetical model.'" Id. at 731-732 (citing Hanover Shoe, 392 U.S. at 493.) Thus the Court decided direct purchasers, not indirect purchasers, should have standing to sue because if the plaintiff were an indirect purchaser, "the demonstration of how much of the overcharge was passed on by the first purchaser must be repeated at each point at which the price-fixed goods changed hands before they reached the plaintiff." Id. at 732-733 (footnote omitted). These calculations would be prohibitively complex; therefore, the antitrust laws are better served by allowing direct purchasers to recover fully for the defendant's overcharges. Id. at 735; [59] see, also Gregory Marketing v. Wakefern Food Corp., 787 F.2d 92, 94 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 821, 93 L. Ed. 2d 40, 107 S. Ct. 87 (1986).

Standing in this case rests upon whether the plaintiffs or their subsequent assignees were the direct purchasers of the aircraft. The record demonstrates that the assignments to the non-plaintiffs were independently negotiated between plaintiffs and their customers. (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 86-87.) For example, Rosefield & Gitomer [32] purchased Falcon 20-404 from Falcon Jet on December 26, 1978 for a total price of $ 4,119,606. (PX-113.) The date of delivery was scheduled for November 1979. (Id.) Falcon 20-404 was later assigned to E.L. Cox on July 14, 1979 for $ 4,250,000 plus the cost of optional equipment and interest. (DX-628.) The price paid by Cox was not only more than that paid by Rosefielde & Gitomer, it was below the typical purchase price of $ 4,665,000 for a new Falcon 10F, as reported in the Falcon Jet internal pricing documents at that time. (PX-252, p. 9.) Therefore, if standing to sue were given to E.L. Cox rather than the plaintiffs, all of the difficulties inherent in the pass-on defense would squarely be raised in an attempt to trace the amount [60] of overcharges passed on from Rosefielde & Gitomer to E.L. Cox. [33]

The fact Rosefielde & Gitomer charged E.L. Cox a higher price for the aircraft is not a reason to deny plaintiffs standing. As defendants argue, the Supreme Court in Matsushita stated that competitors could not recover damages for a conspiracy to raise prices artificially because competitors [61] would "stand to gain from any conspiracy to raise the market price . . . ." 106 S. Ct. at 1354. (Defendants's Reply at 57.) However, this reading of Matsushita does not apply to the plaintiffs in this case because they are not asserting their price-fixing claims as competitors, but as purchasers.

In Hanover Shoe, the Supreme Court directly addressed the issue of purchasers who compensate for artificially high prices by reselling their goods at even higher prices. In that case, the Supreme Court held, "the buyer is equally entitled to damages [*1073] if he raises the price for his own product. As long as the seller continues to charge the illegal price, he takes from the buyer more than the law allows. At whatever price the buyer sells, the price he pays the seller remains illegally high, and his profits will be greater were his costs lower . . . ." Hanover Shoe, 392 U.S. at 489; P. Areeda, Antitrust Law, para. 337c p. 186 (1978). Thus, defendants' contention that "if plaintiffs bought high, they sold their contracts at an even higher price" may create an issue of fact concerning the quantum of damages suffered by plaintiffs, but it is not a reason to deny plaintiffs standing.

[62] Defendants' motion for summary judgment cannot be granted on the theory that plaintiffs do not have standing to assert their price fixing claims with respect to Falcon 20-404, Falcon 50-69, Falcon 50-87, or Gulfstream III s/n 426.

---

[32] Rosefielde & Gitomer was a law firm which dissolved prior to the commencement of this action. (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 84.) Mr. Rosefielde, a plaintiff, was a partner in that firm and is the successor in interest to those parts of the Rosefielde & Gitomer business that dealt with business jet aircraft. (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 84, citing Rosefielde Affidavit, para. 1.) Therefore, Mr. Rosefielde will have standing to sue for any aircraft assigned by Rosefielde & Gitomer.

[33] The assignment to E.L. Cox does not fit within the narrowly defined exception to the rule of Illinois Brick which permits an indirect purchaser to sue when its purchase is made pursuant to a pre-existing, cost-plus contract. See Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 736; Mid-West Paper Products Co. v. Continental Group, 596 F.2d 573 (3d Cir. 1979).

II. Count Seventeen

The first essential element of plaintiffs' antitrust claim is an agreement among would-be competitors. Section One of the Sherman Act prohibits only a "contract, combination . . ., or conspiracy in restraint of trade." 15 U.S.C. § 1. An agreement can be shown directly, or through inference from circumstantial evidence; however, if the plaintiff can provide only circumstantial evidence, it must tend "'to exclude the possibility' that the alleged conspirators acted independently." Matsushita, 106 S. Ct. at 1357 (quoting Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764). Independent action, no matter how egregious the restraint of trade, no matter how reprehensible the motivation, simply does not constitute a violation of the antitrust laws. See Fragale & Sons, 760 F.2d at 473.

With respect to count seventeen, although plaintiffs can show each of the four alleged conspirators took significant steps to deter the resale of new business jets, an [63] anticompetitive objective under the Sherman Act, the plaintiffs cannot show these manufacturers acted pursuant to an agreement or conspiracy. Therefore defendant's motion for summary judgment with respect to count seventeen must be granted.

The plaintiffs direct their second antitrust claim at four business jet manufacturers: Falcon Jet, British Aerospace, Gates Learjet Corporation and Cessna Aircraft Company. All of these companies attempted to deter the resale of new business jets through severely restricting the assignability of purchase agreements or the transferability of warranties to third parties. Each manufacturer admits the purpose and effect of these policies was to deter or prevent competition from "speculators," such as the plaintiffs in this case, who would purchase new business jets and resell the delivery contracts to customers in the new business jet market. (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 38.) Oftentimes, speculators could make substantial profits in short periods of time by taking advantage of the sharply rising prices of business jets during the early 1980's. (See e.g., Defendants' Reply at 57.)

The record substantiates plaintiffs' allegations that each of the four aircraft [64] manufacturers took significant steps to deter competition from speculators; however, as the plaintiffs admit, the four alleged co-conspirators "attempted to prevent or impede resales by a variety of methods." (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 38.) For example, while Falcon Jet, British Aerospace and Gates Learjet incorporated "right of first refusal" clauses into their contracts, Cessna used a reassignment clause that it rarely enforced. (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 97-98; DX -16.) Prior to 1981, Gates Learjet charged $ 125,000 for a warranty transfer. After 1981, Gates Learjet made the contract non-assignable until six months after the buyer accepted delivery of the aircraft and retained the right of first refusal. (DX-16.) After 1982, Falcon Jet charged four percent of the purchase price of the aircraft to assign a contract and warranty, or one percent to transfer the warranty only. (PX-54.) British Aerospace charged from $ 10,000 to $ 50,000 to assign a contract but neither British Aerospace nor Cessna ever charged to transfer a warranty. (DX-16; Defendants' Mem. at 48-49.)

[*1074] Although Falcon Jet, Gates Learjet, British Aerospace and Cessna all adopted policies designed to prevent the resale of new business [65] jet contracts, HN23[] inferences of conspiracy made from ambiguous evidence of consciously parallel business behavior cannot be made without the existence of certain "plus factors". Apex Oil, 822 F.2d at 253.

A high level of interfirm communications is one of the "plus factors" which may indicate the defendants were engaged in collusive anticompetitive behavior. See In re Plywood Antitrust Litigation, 655 F.2d 627, 634 (5th Cir. 1981), cert. dismissed 462 U.S. 1125, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1358, 103 S. Ct. 3100 (1983). Presumably in an attempt to show a high level of interfirm communications, plaintiffs claim business jet manufacturers discussed the subject of resales and how to prevent them on numerous occasions. (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 102.) There are only two sources of evidence for this claim. First, plaintiffs point to notes taken at "forecasting meetings" of business jet manufacturers. (e.g. PX 1309, PX 835 p. 5, PX-1346.) The topic of speculators was discussed at forecasting meetings in Dallas on June 14, 1982 and in Washington D.C. on October 22, 1982. (PX-144A, B.) However, as the notes taken at these meetings show, the manufacturers in attendance [34] could only agree upon the fact that speculators existed. There [66]

---

[34] Falcon Jet did not attend these meetings, but received copies of the notes from participants at the meetings. (Plaintiffs' Mot. at 42, no. 81.)

was anything but agreement as to what should be done about them, or even whether they were beneficial or harmful to the industry. In fact, Mitsubishi and Canadair "were encouraging speculation in order to build their order books for their stockholders." (PX-151 pp. 4-5; Bergstron Tr. 154-157; Defendants' Mem. at 48.)

Second, plaintiffs point to surveys conducted by L.E.S. Tuck of British Aerospace in 1981, and Corwin Meyer, former president of Falcon Jet, in 1982. The Tuck survey was conducted in the Fall of 1981 for the purpose of finding out how many aircraft sold by competitors of British Aerospace were up for resale. (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 41.) Mr. Tuck obtained this information from his sales engineers who had contacted British Aerospace competitors. (Id.) On the basis of his findings, Mr. Tuck learned that Lear used warranty transfer fees and right of first refusal clauses to deter resales and recommended that British Aerospace adopt policies similar to those of Lear. (PX 1310; Plaintiffs' Mem. at 41, 99.)

Mr. Meyer's survey [67] in May, 1982 involved direct contact with senior executives of most of Falcon Jet's competitors. (Plaintiffs' Mem. at 40.) Specifically, Mr. Meyer contacted his competitors to discuss their policies with respect to deterring resales. Id. [35] He set forth the results of his survey in a letter to his successor as president of Falcon Jet, Frank Wisekal. (DX-16.)

The plaintiffs claim these communications indicate Falcon Jet was engaged in a conspiracy to deter business jet resales. To the contrary, the record demonstrates that the Meyer and Tuck surveys were commenced because of unfamiliarity with competitors' policies. Mr. Meyer's letter clearly states the survey was commenced in response to "pressure from our customers who wanted to liquidate their excess aircraft after the recession started, and asked us to help them eliminate this onerous contract clause . . . ." DX-16, p. 1. The letter goes on to suggest Falcon Jet had even lost customers as a result of their policies. DX-16, p. 2.

[68] Despite the allegation that only four manufacturers participated in the conspiracy, none of the evidence proffered by plaintiffs shows only Falcon Jet, British Aerospace, Gates Learjet and Cessna communicated about transfer and assignment policies. Rather, the evidence presented shows that communications among business jet manufacturers concerning "speculation" [*1075] consistently involved non-conspirators. For instance, Mr. Meyer contacted Gulfstream American, Westwind, and Canadaire in addition to the three alleged co-conspirators to conduct his survey. Similarly, Mr. Tuck included information gathered from Westwind in his survey. (PX-1309.) Additionally, the forecasting meetings were attended by all business jet manufacturers, except Falcon Jet. It is unlikely the four alleged co-conspirators would routinely discuss warranty transfer policies with competitors who are not alleged to be members of the illegal conspiracy.

The only evidence of a conspiracy among the four alleged co-conspirators is their common desire to deter business jet resales. This evidence is insufficient to meet the plaintiffs' burden of proof under the Monsanto standard. See 465 U.S. at 764. Drawing all [69] inferences of fact in their favor, the documentary evidence introduced by plaintiffs is barely sufficient to draw the inference of consciously parallel business behavior among the four alleged co-conspirators. Moreover, plaintiffs have not presented evidence which tends to exclude the possibility that Falcon Jet, British Aerospace, Gates Learjet and Cessna acted independently in designing their policies to deter the resale of new business jets. Because plaintiffs have failed to present evidence of any concerted action on the parts of the alleged co-conspirators, an essential element of their claim, the defendants' motion for summary judgment with respect to count seventeen is granted. Celotex Corp., 106 S. Ct. at 2553.

SO ORDERED, this 11th day of January, 1988.

End of Document

---

[35] Mr. Meyer has denied the existence of the alleged conspiracy in a sworn affidavit (Corwin H. Meyers Aff., para. 5), as have the other alleged co-conspirators. (Defendants' Reply at 65, n. 82.)

Anitora Travel, Inc. v. Lapian

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

January 20, 1988, Decided

No. 87 CIV. 0015 (PKL)

Reporter
677 F. Supp. 209 *; 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 656 **

Anitora Travel, Inc., Plaintiff, v. Zvi (Steve) Lapian, Defendant

Core Terms

tickets, travel, amended complaint, enterprise, airline, pattern of racketeering activity, alleges, fraudulent, discount, customer, mail, commissions, defrauded, schemes, discount fare, predicate act, wire fraud, purposes, coupons, pleaded, sales, plaintiff's claim, returning, boarding, dummy, common purpose, communications, violations, invested, damages

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN1[ ] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

On a motion to dismiss, the complaint must be read generously and every reasonable inference drawn in favor of the plaintiffs. The complaint should only be dismissed if it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Remedies

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

HN2[ ] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations, Remedies

18 U.S.C.S. § 1964(c) provides a civil remedy to any person injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of § 1962 of this chapter. To claim a violation of 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962(c), a plaintiff must allege 1) conduct 2) of an enterprise 3) through a pattern 4) of racketeering activity. To claim a violation of § 1962(a), a plaintiff must allege that 1) income derived from a pattern of racketeering activity 2) has been used or invested 3) to acquire an interest in, or establish or operate 4) an enterprise. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962(a).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN3[] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

A viable claim for damages under the RICO statute requires a proper allegation that the defendant has committed two or more "predicate" acts, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961(1), constituting a "pattern of racketeering activity." 18 U.S.C.S. §§ 1961(5), 1962, 1964(a), 1964(c).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

HN4[] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

Where mail and/or wire fraud violations are treated by a plaintiff as "predicate acts" constituting a pattern of racketeering activity, those fraud violations must be pleaded with the specificity and particularity required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b).

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

HN5[] Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b), an exception to the generally liberal pleadings allowed by Fed. R. Civ. P. 8, requires that in all averments of fraud or mistake, the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake shall be stated with particularity. Pleadings of fraud, in order to satisfy Rule 9(b), must specify the time, place, speaker, and sometimes even the content of the alleged misrepresentations. More generally, the complaint's fraud allegations must be specific enough to allow the defendant a reasonable opportunity to answer the complaint and must give adequate information to allow the defendant to frame a response.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud > Wire Fraud > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

HN6[] Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

The mail and wire fraud statutes also require a showing of intentional fraud. Although Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) provides that intent and "other condition of mind" may be averred generally, plaintiffs must nonetheless provide some factual basis for conclusory allegations of intent. These factual allegations must give rise to a "strong inference" that the defendants possessed the requisite fraudulent intent. A common method for establishing a strong inference of scienter is to allege facts showing a motive for committing fraud and a clear opportunity for doing so. Where motive is not apparent, it is still possible to plead scienter by identifying circumstances indicating conscious behavior by the defendant, though the strength of the circumstantial allegations must be correspondingly greater.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

HN7[] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

18 U.S.C.S. § 1964(c) only authorizes a private suit by any person injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of § 1962. It is by now well established that a plaintiff thus only has standing if, and can only recover to the extent that, he has been injured in his business or property by conduct constituting the violation of § 1962.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > General Overview

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

HN8[] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations, Claims

The language of 18 U.S.C.S. § 1964(c) makes clear that a party must actually have been injured -- that is, subject to injury or inevitably to be subject to a future injury -- in order to have standing to bring a civil RICO claim. Mere speculation that some injury might occur -- for example, that an injury might be inflicted if some third party would choose to bring a lawsuit to determine potential liability of the plaintiff -- is insufficient to state a civil RICO claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

HN9[] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

A civil RICO suit must allege an injury resulting from a violation of 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962. Section 1962(a) makes it unlawful to use money derived from a pattern of racketeering activity to invest in or operate an enterprise; 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962(c) makes it unlawful to conduct an enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN10[] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

18 U.S.C.S. § 1961(4) defines an "enterprise" as any individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal entity, and any union or group of individuals associated in fact although not a legal entity. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961(4).

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

HN11[] Pleadings, Heightened Pleading Requirements

In the context of 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962(c), an "enterprise" is a group of persons associated together for a common purpose of engaging in a course of conduct and is proved by evidence of an ongoing organization, formal or informal, and by evidence that the various associates function as a continuing unit. Under § 1962(c), the enterprise be a continuing operation and that the predicate acts be related to the common purpose. A civil RICO pleading must allege the common purpose of the "enterprise" and allege that the predicate acts are related to that common purpose.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

HN12[] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

With respect to 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962(c)--as opposed to 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962(a)--the enterprise and the defendant cannot be the same person or entity.

Counsel: [1] J. Owen Zurhellen, III, Esq., Attorney for Plaintiff.

Wistendahl & Folkenflik, Max Folkenflik, Esq., Douglas Capuder, Esq. of counsel, Attorneys for Defendant.

Judges: Leisure, District Judge.

Opinion by: LEISURE

Opinion

[*211] OPINION AND ORDER

LEISURE, District Judge

Plaintiff filed an amended complaint (the "amended complaint") in this action on April 23, 1987, seeking damages for breach of an employment contract, and treble damages pursuant to the civil provisions of the RICO statute, 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961-1964. Plaintiff also seeks injunctive relief directing defendant to return any business records he took from plaintiff and impressing a constructive trust on the proceeds of certain moneys obtained by defendant.

This Court has federal question jurisdiction over plaintiff's RICO claim. 28 U.S.C. § 1331. All other claims are pendent state law claims.

Defendant has moved to dismiss the amended complaint pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) and 12(b)(6).

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

HN1[] On a motion to dismiss, the complaint must be read generously and every reasonable inference drawn in favor of the plaintiffs. Pross v. Katz, 784 F.2d 455, 457 (2d Cir. 1986); Yoder v. Orthomolecular Nutrition Institute, Inc., 751 F.2d 555, 558 (2d Cir. 1985); [2] Metzner v. D.H. Blair & Co., Inc., 663 F. Supp. 716, 719 (S.D.N.Y. 1987) (Weinfeld, J.). The complaint should only be dismissed if it "appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957); Stone v. Chung Pei Chemical Industry Co. Ltd., 790 F.2d 20, 22 (2d Cir. 1986).

So reading the complaint for purposes of defendant's motion, the relevant facts are as follows:

Plaintiff, Anitora Travel, Inc., is a New York corporation. Plaintiff is a registered travel agency selling tickets for interstate passenger air travel.

Defendant is a resident of New York. Beginning in May 1983, defendant was employed by plaintiff as an "outside sales agent." The parties entered into an agreement [*212] (the "Employment Agreement") which provided, inter alia, that:

a) plaintiff would provide office, local telephone, and other facilities to defendant;
b) defendant would arrange for and sell travel services to customers under plaintiff's name;

c) commissions earned for services sold by defendant would be shared, 62% to defendant and 38% to plaintiff, with the exception of one client, [3] Emerson Radio Corporation, to which a different arrangement applied;
d) defendant would pay, or reimburse plaintiff for, certain expenses, including messenger and courier charges and long-distance telephone charges;
e) defendant would repay to plaintiff any commission share previously paid to defendant when later events, such as a ticket refund by an airline, required plaintiff to refund the commission to the vendor;
f) all sales of travel services made by defendant would be subject to the commission-sharing arrangement; and

g) defendant would be responsible for the payment of all airline or "ARC" debit memos for unpaid tickets, under-paid tickets, or any ticket irregularities, as well as any fines resulting therefrom, and for payment of like amounts due to suppliers other than airlines, such as hotel and car rental services.

Defendant resigned from his employment as plaintiff's outside sales agent in October 1986. During the same period in late 1986, plaintiff became aware that defendant had engaged in certain conduct which plaintiff believed breached defendant's obligations under the employment agreement, breached defendant's fiduciary and implied obligations to plaintiff, [4] and violated the federal mail and wire fraud statutes. Plaintiff determined that defendant's improper conduct involved four general types of activity.

First, plaintiff determined that defendant had sold travel services, while acting under the terms of the Employment Agreement, solely for defendant's own account and that defendant had failed to pay to plaintiff its share of commissions on such sales. Amended Complaint at para. 6(a).

Second, plaintiff determined that defendant, in order to prevent disclosure of his wrongful activities, had intercepted mail addressed to plaintiff. Amended Complaint at para. 6(c).

Third, plaintiff determined that defendant had taken possession of business records belonging to plaintiff and had refused to return them, despite plaintiff's demand to do so. Amended Complaint at para. 6(d).

Fourth, plaintiff determined that defendant, apparently acting in concert with certain customers, defrauded certain airlines by selling discount fare tickets and thereafter converting the tickets to non-discounted, or lesser discounted, tickets without obtaining the price differential. Plaintiff determined that these fraudulent acts were committed through [5] three types of schemes.

In one type of scheme allegedly used by defendant, upon receipt of a request for an airline ticket, defendant would prepare and issue a ticket (which consists of multiple copies, or coupons) for travel on a date sufficiently in the future to permit a discounted fare, but would call in to the relevant airline reservations for travel on a different date actually requested by the customer. The ticket would state the correct price for travel on the dates shown. Defendant then would put stickers on the "flight coupons" (the portions which are presented to, and kept by, the airlines) providing for travel on the false future travel date, and would issue a boarding pass for the actual travel date. The price of travel on the actual travel date was greater than the discounted price charged to, and paid by, the customer. The ticket portions, or "coupons", given to plaintiff (the "agency coupon") and sent by mail to the Airline Reporting Corporation (the "auditor's coupons") for audit purposes, were not changed to show the actual travel dates.

Plaintiff alleges, for example, that on or about October 1, 1984, defendant received a [*213] request from United Feather & Down Co., [6] of Brooklyn, New York, for tickets for a Mr. Belfer and Mr. Palmer to travel from New York City to Chicago on October 2, 1984, and return on October 3, 1984. Defendant issued two tickets for travel from New York to Chicago for October 10, 1984, with return tickets for October 16, 1984, at the discount price appropriate for such travel. On October 10, 1984, defendant caused an invoice to be issued to United Feather & Down Co., showing travel on October 2 and 3, 1984, but listing tickets which were written for travel on October 10 and 16, 1984.

Plaintiff alleges that when defendant himself was unable to issue a boarding pass, defendant employed a slightly different scheme. Upon receipt of a request for a ticket, defendant would issue a ticket to his customer showing the correct date(s) of travel -- but also showing a discount fare not actually available for that travel date. Defendant would also create a "dummy" ticket showing travel on the same date(s) at the correct price, and would show the "dummy" ticket at the airline office in order to obtain a boarding pass. Upon returning to plaintiff's office, defendant would then "void" the dummy ticket and affix the boarding pass to the discount [7] ticket issued to the customer. The customer would pay the discounted price.

For example, plaintiff alleges that on or about May 1, 1985, defendant received a request for two tickets, one for a Mrs. Rosenbrand and the other for a Mrs. Asoulay, for travel from new York to West Palm Beach on May 2, 1985, and returning May 5, 1985. Defendant issued two "dummy" tickets for that travel showing a correct price ($ 278 per ticket), and defendant used those "dummy" tickets to obtain boarding passes from Delta Airlines. The same day, and very shortly after issuing the "dummy" tickets, defendant issued two other tickets, which bore the very next two serial numbers, but which showed a price of $ 178 each -- the price actually paid by the customers.

In a third type of scheme, defendant would issue tickets out of sequence by back-dating the tickets, in order to take advantage of advance purchase discounts. Defendant would issue tickets for a discount fare, and the customers would pay the discount fare, even though in fact the tickets were not purchased sufficiently in advance of travel to permit the discount fare. Auditors coupons would be sent by mail to the Airline Reporting Corporation showing [8] dates of travel which would allow the discount fare.

For example, plaintiff alleges that during the week of May 18, 1986, defendant submitted "auditors coupons" for 5 members of the Azouly family for travel from New York to Florida and back in late May 1986. However, the tickets themselves all show an issue date of April 28, 1986.

DISCUSSION

HN2[] 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c) provides a civil remedy to "any person injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of section 1962 of this chapter." In its complaint, plaintiff alleges that the fraudulent schemes employed by defendant violated " 18 U.S.C.A. § 1962(a) and/or (c)." Amended Complaint at para. 8.

It is well established that to claim a violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c), a plaintiff must allege 1) conduct 2) of an enterprise 3) through a pattern 4) of racketeering activity. Sedima, S.P.L.R. v. Imrex, 473 U.S. 479, 496, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346, 105 S. Ct. 3275 (1985). To claim a violation of § 1962(a), a plaintiff must allege that 1) income derived from a pattern of racketeering activity 2) has been used or invested 3) to acquire an interest in, or establish or operate 4) an enterprise. 18 U.S.C. § 1962(a).

Defendant argues that plaintiff's amended complaint must [9] be dismissed because plaintiff has failed properly to plead the existence of a pattern of racketeering activity; has failed to plead the existence of an enterprise; and has failed to plead that it has been injured in its person or property by the conduct constituting the RICO violation. Additionally, defendant argues that plaintiff has not shown a violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1962(a), because plaintiff has not [*214] alleged that any income derived from a pattern of racketeering activity was invested or used to purchase an interest in any enterprise engaged in interstate or foreign commerce.

A. Pattern of Racketeering Activity: Adequacy of the Mail Fraud and Wire Fraud Pleadings

HN3[] A viable claim for damages under the RICO statute requires a proper allegation that the defendant has committed two or more "predicate" acts, 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1), constituting a "pattern of racketeering activity." 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961(5), 1962, 1964(a), 1964(c). Beck v. Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co., 820 F.2d 46, 51 (2d Cir. 1987); see also Sedima, 473 U.S. at 495-96.

In its complaint, plaintiff claims that defendant engaged in a pattern of racketeering activity within the meaning of § 1961(1) because, on at [10] least two occasions between January 5, 1984 and October 1986, defendant's airline ticket sale schemes were "in violation of, inter alia, 18 U.S.C.A. § 1341 ('mail fraud') and § 1343 ('wire fraud')." [1] Amended Complaint at para. 8.

HN4[] Where mail and/or wire fraud violations are treated by a plaintiff as "predicate acts" constituting a pattern of racketeering activity, those fraud violations must be pleaded with the specificity and particularity required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). See Beck, 820 F.2d at 49-51; see also Connors v. Lexington Ins. Co., 666 F. Supp. 434, 450 (E.D.N.Y. 1987); Equitable Life Assurance Society v. Alexander Grant & Co., 627 F. Supp. 1023, 1028 (S.D.N.Y. 1985); Rich-Taubman Associates v. Stamford Restaurant Operating Co., Inc., 587 F. Supp. 875, 878 (S.D.N.Y. 1984).

---

[1] Nowhere in the complaint does plaintiff mention any other state or federal laws to which the term "inter alia" might refer. Thus, the complaint can only be read, at this stage, to allege predicate acts of mail fraud and wire fraud.

HN5[] Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b), an exception to the generally liberal pleadings allowed by Rule 8, requires that "in all averments of fraud or mistake, [11] the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake shall be stated with particularity." As Judge Winter recently explained, pleadings of fraud, in order to satisfy Rule 9(b), must specify the time, place, speaker, and sometimes even the content of the alleged misrepresentations. Luce v. Edelstein, 802 F.2d 49, 54 (2d Cir. 1986). More generally, the complaint's fraud allegations must be specific enough to allow the defendant "a reasonable opportunity to answer the complaint" and must give "adequate information" to allow the defendant "to frame a response." Ross v. A.H. Robins Co., 607 F.2d 545, 557-58 (2d Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 446 U.S. 946, 64 L. Ed. 2d 802, 100 S. Ct. 2175 (1980).

Moreover, HN6[] the mail and wire fraud statutes also require a showing of intentional fraud. Beck, 820 F.2d at 49. As Judge Newman has explained:

> Although Rule 9(b) provides that intent and "other condition of mind" may be averred generally, plaintiffs must nonetheless provide some factual basis for conclusory allegations of intent. These factual allegations must give rise to a "strong inference" that the defendants possessed the requisite fraudulent intent. A common method for establishing a strong inference of scienter [12] is to allege facts showing a motive for committing fraud and a clear opportunity for doing so. Where motive is not apparent, it is still possible to plead scienter by identifying circumstances indicating conscious behavior by the defendant, though the strength of the circumstantial allegations must be correspondingly greater.

Beck, 820 F.2d at 49-50 (citations omitted).

The acts of mail or wire fraud mentioned in the amended complaint have been pleaded with adequate particularity to satisfy the requirements of Rule 9(b). Specifically, plaintiff has detailed the three types of fraudulent schemes alleged to have been employed by the defendant; plaintiff has stated the general time period during which these schemes are alleged to have been employed; and for each of the three types of schemes, plaintiff has provided at [*215] least one specific example specifying not only the time, place, and the fraudulent speaker, but also the content of the misrepresentations. For example, with regard to the first type of fraudulent scheme listed -- where defendant would himself issue a boarding pass -- plaintiff alleges in paras. 11(a) and 11(b) that:

> a. For example, on October 1, 1984, or shortly [13] before, defendant received a request from United Feather & Down, of 77 Commercial Street, Brooklyn, New York for tickets for a Mr. Belfer and Mr. Palmer to travel from LaGuardia (NYC) airport to O'Hare (Chicago) airport on October 2, 1984, and returning on October 3, 1984. Defendant issued two tickets for travel from LaGuardia to O'Hare for October 10, 1984, and returning October 16, 1984, at the discount price appropriate for such travel. On October 10, 1984, defendant caused an invoice to be issued to United Feather & Down showing travel on October 2nd and 3rd, 1984, listing tickets which were written for travel for October 10th and 16th, 1984.
>
> b. And for another example, on November 8, 1984, or shortly before, the defendant received a request from Belgo Diamond Co., 2 West 46th Street, New York, New York, for a ticket for a Mr. Avital to travel from Kennedy (NYC) airport to Los Angeles (Calif.) for November 11, 1984, and returning to Kennedy airport for November 14, 1984. Defendant issued a ticket for travel from Kennedy for November 15, 1984, and returning November 22, 1984, at the discount price appropriate for such travel. On November 8, 1984, defendant caused an invoice to [14] be issued to Belgo Diamond Co. showing travel on November 11th and 14th, 1984, listing a ticket written for travel for November 15th and 22nd, 1984.

These paragraphs, read in conjunction with paras. 10-11, give adequate information to allow the defendant to frame a response to the fraud allegations. Plaintiff has provided two dates on which the alleged fraud occurred. The amended complaint makes clear that this scheme involved wire communications to the airlines to report the reservations involved, communications which are alleged to have been made across state lines. Amended Complaint at para. 11. The transactions described in these paragraphs clearly indicate that these communications were made on or about October 1, 1984, and November 8, 1984; that defendant performed the fraudulent acts; that the acts occurred from plaintiff's office; that the fraudulent communications misrepresented the travel dates in order to provide a discount fare not actually allowed by the airline involved; and that these communications were used in a scheme which allowed defendant to defraud certain airlines and plaintiff. [2] [16] While no airline is named specifically with regard to the examples of the first [15] fraudulent scheme, the plaintiff has identified five airlines that were the subject of defendant's schemes. [3] Plaintiff has sufficiently indicated details of a fraud against the travel agency.

Moreover, plaintiff, with regard to the scheme, has sufficiently alleged that the fraud was intentional. Plaintiff has alleged facts showing a motive for committing fraud -- namely to sell tickets to his [*216] customers at a discounted price, allowing him to earn commissions on sales he might otherwise not have made -- and showing a clear opportunity for doing so. See Beck, 820 F.2d at 49-50. Moreover, even were defendant's motive not clearly apparent, plaintiff has properly pleaded the scienter requirements of the mail and wire fraud statutes because the facts alleged indicate conscious behavior by the defendant to misrepresent travel information and allow sale of tickets at an improper discount price. See id.

Similarly sufficient detailed allegations have been made with regard to the two other types of schemes alleged in the complaint. See Amended Complaint at paras. 12-13.

B. INJURY

HN7[] 18 [17] U.S.C. § 1964(c) only authorizes a private suit by "any person injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of § 1962." It is by now well established that a plaintiff thus "only has standing if, and can only recover to the extent that, he has been injured in his business or property by conduct constituting the violation [of § 1962]." Sedima, 473 U.S. at 496.

Defendant correctly argues that plaintiff will only have standing if it alleges the existence of an actual, present injury, not some speculative injury that might only possibly occur in the future. Generally, courts have treated as unripe for adjudication claims that involve contingent future events that may not occur as anticipated, or indeed may not occur at all. See, e.g., Thomas v. Union Carbide Agricultural Products Co., 473 U.S. 568, 580-81, 87 L. Ed. 2d 409, 105 S. Ct. 3325 (1985) (where a party, for example, wants to challenge constitutionality of jurisdiction of a court, standing exists only if claimant can demonstrate that it has been or inevitably will be subject to such unconstitutional jurisdiction); see also 13A C. Wright, A. Miller, & E. Cooper, Federal Practice and Procedure § 3532 (1984).

Similarly, HN8[] the language of [18] § 1964(c) makes clear that a party must actually have been injured -- that is, subject to injury or inevitably to be subject to a future injury -- in order to have standing to bring a civil RICO claim. Mere speculation that some injury might occur -- for example, that an injury might be inflicted if some third party would choose to bring a lawsuit to determine potential liability of the plaintiff -- is insufficient to state a civil

---

[2] See, e.g., Connors v. Lexington Insurance Co., 666 F. Supp. 434, E.D.N.Y. 1987). Where information similar to that in the present complaint was provided, Judge Glasser found that the pleadings were sufficient to satisfy the requirements of Rule 9(b). As Judge Glasser there observed:

> With respect to the allegations of mail fraud, plaintiff's complaint satisfies the particularity requirements of rule 9(b). Specifically, plaintiff has described where and how the alleged scheme occurred, given the approximate dates of his transactions with IGBE and thus, by inference, the approximate dates of mailings, and identified the alleged misrepresentations and omissions, as well as the "speakers." It is not necessary for plaintiff to provide more detail at this stage of the proceedings. As one court has noted, rule 9(b) is satisfied if enough information is given to allow the defendants to frame a responsive pleading and to assure the court that a sufficient basis exists for the allegations made.

Id. at 450-51 (citations omitted).

[3] The Court does note, however, that if plaintiff chooses to file a new amended complaint, as provided by this Order, allegations naming the airlines involved in each example of the fraudulent schemes would bolster the complaint's compliance with the requirements of Rule 9(b).

RICO claim. See, e.g., Bank Leumi Le Israel, B.M. v. Lippe, slip op. No. 84 C. 9700 (N.D. Ill. Dec. 16, 1986); [4] see also Jones v. Baskin, Flaherty, Elliot and Mannino, P.C., 670 F. Supp. 597, 598-600 (W.D.Pa. 1987).

[19] The language of plaintiff's amended complaint makes reference to two types of "injuries": first, plaintiff claims to be subject "to liability to the defrauded carriers for the price differential [created by defendant's fraudulent ticket sales], which is believed to amount to $ 175,000," Amended Complaint at para. 6(b); second, the complaint makes reference to commissions lost by plaintiff as a result of defendant's actions, Amended Complaint at para. 6(a).

Plaintiff's claim that it is subject "to liability to the defrauded carriers", as pleaded in the amended complaint, is insufficient to meet the "injury" requirement of [*217] § 1964(c). Nowhere in the amended complaint does plaintiff allege that it has been sued by any defrauded airline; nor does plaintiff allege that such a suit is reasonably certain to occur. Nor does plaintiff allege that it has actually been made liable to the airlines either by court order, agreement, or any other instrument or set of facts. That some airline might seek to collect funds from plaintiff at some future date is an insufficient basis for an "injury" claim -- especially where it is mere speculation that any airline will actually seek to collect any funds. [20] [5] > even if the Bank did owe a duty to Lippe to disclose material information, his alleged "injury" is not adequately pled. He alleges that Tomcat is now an entity of questionable financial viability based solely on the fact that at some future date two investors may have a defense to notes that may be outstanding. The problem with this allegation is that it is too speculative. Essentially, Lippe is alleging that his partnership interest has been tarnished. It is significant that Lippe does not allege that the two investors actually have outstanding loans or that the Bank has unsuccessfully demanded payments on these notes. Hence, his allegation that Tomcat is of a questionable financial viability as a result of the Bank's failure to disclose material facts is not adequately pled.

---

[4] Where a RICO counterclaim alleged predicate act violations of § 10(b) of Securities and Exchange Commission Rule 10(b)(5), the court found:

Bank Leumi Le Israel, B.M. v. Lippe, slip. op. No. 84 C. 9700 (N.D. Ill. Dec. 16, 1986).

[5] Plaintiff correctly points out that a party can recover present damages for injuries that will accrue in the future. But none of the cases cited by plaintiff stands for the principle that a plaintiff can recover speculative damages. For example, plaintiff states in its brief that:

> Similarly, plaintiff [sic] under the antitrust laws can recover damages for future injuries. In Lehrman v. Gulf Oil Corp., 464 F.2d 26 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 1077, 93 S. Ct. 687 [34 L. Ed. 2d 665] (1972), the plaintiff was put out of business by the anticompetitive conduct of the defendant. The court permitted recovery of damages for future lost profits against the defendant's assertion that future injuries could not be compensated under the Sherman Act. To the extent that recovery of damages for yet-to-be-sustained injuries injects a measure of uncertainty, both in whether injury will be suffered at all and in the amount, the court held that "the wrongdoer must bear the risk of the uncertainty in measuring the harm he causes." 464 F.2d, at 45. So long as future injuries are "proved with reasonable certainty", an antitrust plaintiff can recover damages for them. Volasco Products Co. v. Lloyd A. Fry Roofing Co., 308 F.2d 383 (6th Cir. 1962), cert. denied [372] U.S. 907, 83 S. Ct. 721 [9 L. Ed. 2d 717] (1963).

Plaintiff's Memorandum of Law at 4-5.

Whether or not plaintiff's interpretation of antitrust law is correct, plaintiff's claim that it is liable to airlines cannot be considered similar in this context to the lost profits claim in Lehrman which plaintiff discusses. In Lehrman, the court determined that as a result of the antitrust violations of defendant, plaintiff had lost future profits, and an award of damages for those lost profits could be made, even if the exact amount of those losses could not be ascertained at the time of trial. Indeed, the court in Lehrman claimed only to be applying "the familiar rule that a wrongdoer is responsible for uncertainty in calculating the damages proximately caused by his own wrongdoing." 464 F.2d at 45. In contrast, in the present case, it would not be possible, based on the allegations in the complaint, for this Court to determine at trial that plaintiff had in fact, or will in the future, become subject to liability to the airlines. While in Lehrman, the court could determine, with reasonable certainty, that future profits would be lost, in the present case plaintiff can only speculate that any of the defrauded airlines would seek to collect damages from plaintiff or, for that matter, anyone else.

[21] In contrast, plaintiff can claim to have been "injured" to the extent it alleges that, as a proximate result of defendant's predicate acts, plaintiff was denied its proper share of commissions on ticket sales. As defendant correctly points out, however, the only damages sought in the amended complaint under plaintiff's RICO claim are damages relating to plaintiff's alleged liability to the defrauded airlines. Plaintiff claims, in para. 6(b) of the Amended Complaint, that its liability to the defrauded airlines "is believed to amount to $ 175,000." With respect to the RICO claim, plaintiff's second claim for relief, plaintiff only seeks an award of "$ 175,000, and trebled damages and attorneys fees." Amended Complaint at para. 18(b). While plaintiff does state that it "is liable to the airlines for the difference between the price charged to defendant's clients and the correct price, less any additional commission to which plaintiff would be entitled," Amended Complaint at para. 10, this only mention of the commissions in the RICO claim makes them conditional on plaintiff's speculative liability to the airline. Indeed, the discussion of lost commissions in para. 6(a) of the amended [22] complaint only relates to plaintiff's first claim for relief, which concerns defendant's alleged violations of the "obligations, terms and conditions of his employment." Amended Complaint at para. 7. Thus, while plaintiff may wish to read the amended complaint to imply that defendant's fraudulent activities had the proximate result of denying plaintiff its proper share of commissions on airline ticket sales, the language of the complaint itself simply makes no such allegation. Absent such an allegation, or some other allegation of an injury to plaintiff's business or property that was the proximate result of defendant's predicate acts, the amended complaint fails to state a civil [*218] cause of action under the RICO statute. 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c).

C. ENTERPRISE REQUIREMENT

HN9[] A civil RICO suit must allege an injury resulting from a violation of § 1962. In the present case, plaintiff claims to have been injured by acts which violated § 1962(a) and/or § 1962(c). Section 1962(a) makes it unlawful to use money derived from a pattern of racketeering activity to invest in or operate an enterprise; § 1962(c) makes it unlawful to conduct an enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity. [23] See, generally, Sedima, 473 U.S. at 479.

In response to defendant's argument that the amended complaint fails to allege properly the existence of the "enterprise" required by both § 1962(a) and § 1962(c), plaintiff claims:

> The enterprise requirement of the RICO statute is here met in two ways. First, plaintiff (a corporation) is clearly an "enterprise" within the literal terms and underlying purpose of the RICO statute. Defendant's scheme was, equally clearly, perpetrated "in connection with the conduct" (Sedima, supra) of plaintiff's business. Second, defendant himself, especially by virtue of the nature and persistence of his conduct, was an "enterprise."

Plaintiff's Memorandum at 8.

§ 1962(a)

HN10[] Section 1961(4) defines an "enterprise" as "any individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal entity, and any union or group of individuals associated in fact although not a legal entity." 18 U.S.C. § 1961(4). Whatever the term "enterprise" may mean in the context of § 1962(a), it is clear that the amended complaint does not identify an enterprise, engaged in interstate commerce, in which defendant purchased an interest, or which defendant established [24] or operated, through the use or investment of funds derived from the alleged pattern of racketeering activity.

Certainly, plaintiff, which claims to have been defrauded and deprived of moneys illegally obtained by defendant in his pattern of racketeering activity, cannot also claim that such moneys were invested or used by defendant to purchase an interest in or to operate plaintiff; thus, plaintiff cannot allege that plaintiff itself is the enterprise for purposes of stating a civil claim relating to violations of § 1962(a).

As to plaintiff's argument that defendant himself is the "enterprise", the complaint fails to allege that any moneys obtained by defendant, through his pattern of racketeering activity, were invested or used by defendant to operate, or obtain an interest in, "himself." While plaintiff does state, in para. 6(a) of the Amended Complaint, that defendant "sold travel services . . . solely for his own account and failed to pay plaintiff its share of commissions on such sales," Amended Complaint at para. 6(a), it is clear that this activity is not alleged to be included in the predicate acts, involving fraud against the airlines, which are actually alleged to constitute [25] the pattern of racketeering activity in the civil RICO claim. Amended Complaint at paras. 8-17.

Thus, the Amended Complaint fails to state a civil RICO claim based upon an alleged violation of § 1962(a).

§ 1962(c)

In Beck, supra, the Second Circuit explained that, HN11[] in the context of § 1962(c), an "enterprise" is "'a group of persons associated together for a common purpose of engaging in a course of conduct' and 'is proved by evidence of an ongoing organization, formal or informal, and by evidence that the various associates function as a continuing unit.' United States v. Turkette, 452 U.S. 576, 583 [69 L. Ed. 2d 246, 101 S. Ct. 2524] (1981)." Beck, 820 F.2d at 51. The Court in Beck then explained that, "this circuit requires that, under section 1962(c), the enterprise be a continuing operation and that the [predicate] acts be related to the common purpose." Beck, 820 F.2d at 51 (citing United States v. Ianniello, 808 F.2d 184, 191 (2d Cir. 1986), cert. denied, Cohen v. United States, 483 U.S. 1006, 107 S. Ct. 3229, 97 L. Ed. 2d 736 (1987)) (emphasis in original).

[*219] At the very least, Beck requires that a civil RICO pleading allege the common purpose of the "enterprise", and allege [26] that the predicate acts are related to that common purpose. See, e.g., Newman v. L.F. Rothschild, 662 F. Supp. 957, 958 (S.D.N.Y. 1987) (Sweet, J.). [6]

As to plaintiff's argument, in its brief, that plaintiff itself is the "enterprise" whose affairs defendant conducted through a pattern of racketeering activity under § 1962(c), it should first be observed that nowhere in the amended complaint does plaintiff identify itself as an "enterprise." But [27] even if the amended complaint is read to identify plaintiff as the "enterprise" for purposes of a violation of § 196 (c), the complaint still fails to allege a "common purpose" of the enterprise to which defendant's predicate acts were related. Thus, with respect to plaintiff itself being the "enterprise", defendant has failed to properly allege that defendant "conducted the affairs of an enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity."

For purposes of violations of § 1962(c), plaintiff has also failed to state a civil RICO claim even if the complaint is read to allege that defendant himself is the enterprise. It is well established in this Circuit that HN12[] with respect to § 1962(c) -- as opposed to § 1962(a) -- the enterprise and the defendant cannot be the same person or entity. See Bennett v. United States Trust Co. of New York, 770 F.2d 308, 315 (2d Cir. 1985), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 1058, 88 L. Ed. 2d 776, 106 S. Ct. 800 (1986); see also Haroco, Inc. v. American National Bank & Trust Company of Chicago, 747 F.2d 384, 399-403 (7th Cir. 1984).

Plaintiff states in its brief that "recent authority affirms that the enterprise may be the defendant-perpetrator of the predicate criminal conduct himself. [28] DeMuro v. E.F. Hutton & Co., 643 F. Supp. 63 (S.D.N.Y. 1986)," Plaintiff's Memorandum at 8; yet the Demuro case, cited by plaintiff, actually only addresses the question of whether the defendant in that action could "be both the person and enterprise for purposes of a cause of action pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 1962(a)," DeMuro, 643 F. Supp. at 65 (emphasis added). In fact, in DeMuro, Judge Knapp recognizes that the very cases which have indicated that the defendant and the enterprise can be the same for purposes of § 1962(a) have also held that under § 1962(c) "the person and the enterprise must be distinct." Id.

---

[6] In Newman, plaintiffs alleged that:

> Defendant L. F. ROTHSCHILD is an enterprise as that term is defined in 18 U.S.C. 1961 engaged in interstate commerce and the activities of which affect interstate commerce. Such activities in and affecting interstate commerce include, among other things, the purchase and sale of securities, which have moved in interstate commerce.

Judge Sweet dismissed the complaint, stating that "missing are allegations of common purpose, as well as allegations that the alleged predicate acts are related to that common purpose. Consequently, under Beck, the Amended Complaint fails to allege 'enterprise' properly, and the RICO count will be dismissed." Newman, 662 F. Supp. at 958.

CONCLUSION

Thus, plaintiff's amended complaint fails to state a civil RICO claim pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c), and thus plaintiff's second claim for relief must be dismissed.

Plaintiff's remaining claims are pendent state law claims. Because these pendent claim provide no other basis for federal jurisdiction, and because no considerations of judicial economy would be served at this stage of the litigation by retaining jurisdiction over the pendent claims, those claims are likewise dismissed. See United Mine Workers of America v. Gibbs, [29] 383 U.S. 715, 16 L. Ed. 2d 218, 86 S. Ct. 1130 (1966); see also Mastercraft Industries Inc. v. Breining, 664 F. Supp. 859, 861 (S.D.N.Y. 1987); In Re Investors Funding Corp. of N.Y. Securities Litigation, 523 F. Supp. 550, 560 (S.D.N.Y. 1980).

Plaintiff is hereby given leave to serve a second amended complaint, consistent with this order, within twenty days.

SO ORDERED.

End of Document

United States v. Seville Industrial Machinery Corp.

United States District Court for the District of New Jersey

January 20, 1988, Decided ; January 21, 1988, Filed

Cr. No. 87-31

Reporter
696 F. Supp. 986 *; 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 392 ; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,979

United States of America v. Seville Industrial Machinery Corporation, et al., Defendants

Subsequent History: [1] Sentencing Opinion Reported at: 696 F. Supp. 986 at 993.

Core Terms

bid, indictment, auction, defraud, rigging, bankruptcy court, Sherman Act, conspiracy, Defendants', charges, compete, prices, antitrust, restraint of trade, per se violation, alleged scheme, public auction, multiplicitous, impermissibly, competitors, conspiring, courts

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN2[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The U.S. Supreme Court narrows the reach of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, to restraints of trade which are unreasonable: Section 1 necessarily calls for the exercise of judgment which requires that some standard should be resorted to for the purpose of determining whether the prohibition contained in the statute has or has not in any given case been violated. Thus not specifying, but indubitably contemplating and requiring a standard, it follows that it is intended that the standard of reason which has been applied at the common law and in this country in dealing with subjects of the character embraced by the statute is intended to be the measure used for the purpose of determining whether in a given case a particular act has or has not brought about the wrong against which the statute provided.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Presumptions > Rebuttal of Presumptions

HN3[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Certain patterns of anticompetitive business conduct provide conclusive presumptions of unreasonableness. Application of this conclusive presumption of unreasonableness to certain anticompetitive behavior is known as the "per se doctrine."

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN4[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Bid rigging is a per se violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN5[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A simple agreement not to bid is itself a per se antitrust violation, even in the absence of prior price fixing. Where two or more persons agree that one will submit a bid for a project higher or lower than the others or that one will not submit a bid at all, then there has been an unreasonable restraint of trade which violates the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > Intent

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Acts & Mental States > Mens Rea > General Intent

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Acts & Mental States > Mens Rea > Specific Intent

HN6[] Criminal Actions, Intent

Action undertaken with knowledge of its probable consequences and having the requisite anticompetitive effects can be a sufficient predicate for a finding of criminal liability under the antitrust laws. Thus, general intent rather than specific intent is the mens rea standard for antitrust crimes.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud Against the Government > Conspiracy to Defraud > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud > Fraud Against the Government > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud Against the Government > Conspiracy to Defraud > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud Against the Government > Conspiracy to Defraud > Penalties

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Penalties

HN7[] Conspiracy to Defraud, Elements

18 U.S.C.S. § 371 provides that if two or more persons conspire either to commit any offense against the United States, or to defraud the United States, or any agency thereof in any manner or for any purpose, and one or more of such persons do any act to effect the object of the conspiracy, each shall be fined not more than $ 10,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud Against the Government > Conspiracy to Defraud > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud Against the Government > Conspiracy to Defraud > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud Against the Government > Mail Fraud > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud Against the Government > Mail Fraud > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN8[] Conspiracy to Defraud, Elements

The use of 18 U.S.C.S. § 371 is endorsed against schemes directed at the deprivation of intangible rights to governmental integrity.

Bankruptcy Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > Federal District Courts

Governments > Courts > Authority to Adjudicate

Bankruptcy Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN9[] Jurisdiction, Federal District Courts

A bankruptcy court is a unit of the United States District Court charged with jurisdiction of any case arising under the bankruptcy code. 28 U.S.C.S. § 151. A bankruptcy trustee is an agent and officer of the bankruptcy court.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Defective Joinder & Severance > Multiplicity > General Overview

HN10[] Defective Joinder & Severance, Multiplicity

Counts of a complaint are multiplicitous if each count requires proof of the same facts as each other count.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Religion > Free Exercise of Religion

Criminal Law & Procedure > Trials > Burdens of Proof > Prosecution

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Religion > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Trials > Burdens of Proof > Defense

Criminal Law & Procedure > Defenses > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Defenses > Selective Prosecution

HN11[] Freedom of Religion, Free Exercise of Religion

A defendant claiming impermissibly selective prosecution by the government bears a heavy burden of proof. He or she must overcome the principle that the choice of whom to prosecute and the strategy of prosecution are generally matters left wholly to the government's control. Thus, defendants must make the twin showing (1) that while others similarly situated have not generally been proceeded against because of conduct of the type forming the basis of the charge against them, they have been singled out for prosecution, and (2) that the government's discriminatory selection of them for prosecution has been invidious or in bad faith, i.e., based upon such impermissible considerations as race, religion, or the desire to prevent their exercise of constitutional rights.

Counsel: Todd P. Leff, Esq.

Stanley A. Teitler, P.C.

Andrew K. Ruotolo, Jr., Esq.

J. Michael Farrell, Esq., Sleet & Farrell, Esqs.

Barry I. Fredericks, Esq.

Larry J. Silverman, Esq., Budd, Larner, Gross, Picillo, Rosenbaum, Greenberg & Sade, Esqs.

Michael R. Koblenz, Esq., Mound, Cotton & Wollan, Esqs.

Wendell B. Alcorn, Esq., Cadwalader, Wickersham & Taft, Esqs.

Brian J. Neary, Esq.

Richard A. Norris, Esq., Norris, McLaughlin & Marcus, Esqs.

Charles H. Nugent, Esq., c/o F. Hartman, Esq.

Anthony Napolitano, Esq., Probstein & Napolitano, Esqs.

Mark A. Klugheit, Esq., Dechert, Price & Rhods, Esqs.

Thomas J. Curley, Jr., Esq., Goodwin, Proctor & Hoar, Esqs.

Edward A. Geltman, Esq., Squire, Sanders & Dempsey, Esqs.

Beatriz Souviron D'Amico, Federal Defender.

Judges: H. Lee Sarokin, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: SAROKIN

Opinion

[*988] H. LEE SAROKIN, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

The defendants in this criminal antitrust case move for dismissal of the indictment. The motion is denied.

BACKGROUND

On September 10, 1987, a grand jury indicted nineteen corporate and seventeen individual defendants [1] for violating federal antitrust law and for conspiring to defraud the United States. The court has accepted guilty pleas from, and sentenced, a number of the defendants. The remaining [2] defendants now move to dismiss the indictment for legal insufficiency. Because defendants contend that the facts alleged in the indictment, even if proved beyond a reasonable doubt, do not charge a violation of federal law, the court must review the allegations.

On December 2, 1985, a company called S & S Corrugated was declared bankrupt under Chapter 7 of the bankruptcy code. The United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of New York entered an order on February 12, 1986 authorizing the trustee to hold an auction of S & S Corrugated's commercial equipment. That auction, administered by the Daley-Hodking Corporation under the trustee's supervision, occurred on March 11, 1986. The bankruptcy court entered an order on March 14 confirming and approving the auction and authorizing the trustee to execute documents consummating the sale.

According to the indictment, the defendants agreed before the public auction not to bid against one another, and implemented their plan at the auction. Then, immediately [3] after the auction, the defendants held their own private auction of the equipment they had just purchased. Once all items were resold at the private auction, the defendants divided up and shared the difference between the higher prices paid at the private auction and the lower prices paid at the public bankruptcy auction. That difference was in excess of $ 75,000.

Count One of the indictment charges a violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. The defendants' plan, according to the indictment, was a "combination and conspiracy in unreasonable restraint of interstate trade and commerce." It had the effects of restraining and eliminating competition among the defendants, enabling the defendants to pay artificially low prices for equipment at the public auction, and depriving S & S Corrugated and its creditors of full compensation and the benefits of free competition.

Count Two charges a violation of 18 U.S.C. § 371, which forbids conspiracies to defraud the United States. The theory of the indictment is that the defendants defrauded the United States "by impeding, impairing, obstructing and defeating the lawful government function of the Bankruptcy Court in the due administration [4] and enforcement of the Bankruptcy Code," and by deceiving the bankruptcy court into believing that the bids submitted at the auction were products of full and fair competition. The indictment charges the commission of a large number of overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy, including defendants' attendance at the auction, agreement not to bid competitively, agreement to rebid privately any item bought at the public auction, attendance at the private auction, bidding at the private auction, payment for items, and sharing of the second auction's profits.

DISCUSSION

[1] The nineteen corporate defendants are dealers of commercial equipment. Most of the seventeen individual defendants are top officers or employees of the corporate defendants.

Moving to dismiss the indictment in its entirety, the defendants now argue that the indictment fails to charge a violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1 or of 18 U.S.C. § 371, that the counts of the indictment are multiplicitous, and that the indictment represents an impermissibly selective prosecution. The court considers each contention in turn.

[*989] I. The Sherman Act

A. Bid Rigging as a Per Se Violation

HN1[] Under 15 U.S.C. § 1, "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." [5] As written, the Sherman Act is of extraordinary breadth. Indeed, it would appear to render illegal even the simplest commercial contract, since the contracting parties' agreement to trade with one another entails, for the purposes of their transaction, an implicit agreement to trade with no other. Despite the Act's breadth, the Supreme Court has upheld the Sherman Act over the objection that it is unconstitutionally vague. See Nash v. United States, 229 U.S. 373, 57 L. Ed. 1232, 33 S. Ct. 780 (1913).

HN2[] The Court, however, has also narrowed the reach of the Sherman Act to restraints of trade which are unreasonable:

> [Section 1 of the Act] necessarily called for the exercise of judgment which required that some standard should be resorted to for the purpose of determining whether the prohibition contained in the statute had or had not in any given case been violated. Thus not specifying, but indubitably contemplating and requiring a standard, it follows that it was intended that the standard of reason which had been applied at the common law and in this country in dealing with subjects of the character embraced by the statute was intended to be the measure used for the purpose of determining whether in a given [6] case a particular act had or had not brought about the wrong against which the statute provided.

Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 60, 55 L. Ed. 619, 31 S. Ct. 502 (1911) (emphasis added). Applying this "rule of reason" over the years, the courts became so familiar with HN3[] certain patterns of anticompetitive business conduct that they began to apply to those patterns conclusive presumptions of unreasonableness. See Northern Pacific Railway v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 (1958) ("there are certain agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use"). Application of this conclusive presumption of unreasonableness to certain anticompetitive behavior has become known as the "per se doctrine." See also United States v. Trenton Potteries, 273 U.S. 392, 71 L. Ed. 700, 47 S. Ct. 377 (1927).

It is beyond question that HN4[] bid rigging is a per se violation of the Sherman Act. See, e.g., United States v. H & M, Inc., 565 F. Supp. 1, 2 (M.D.Pa. 1982) (bid rigging is a "per se violation[] which [7] go[es] to the heart of the Sherman Act"); United States v. Koppers Co., 652 F.2d 290, 294 (2d Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1083, 70 L. Ed. 2d 617, 102 S. Ct. 639 (1981); United States v. Brighton Building and Maintenance Co., 598 F.2d 1101, 1106 (7th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 840, 62 L. Ed. 2d 52, 100 S. Ct. 79 (1979); United States v. Portsmouth Paving, 694 F.2d 312, 317 (4th Cir. 1983); United States v. Rubbish Removal, Inc., 602 F. Supp. 595, 602 (N.D.N.Y. 1984). Indeed, "in cases involving behavior such as bid rigging, which has been classified by courts as a per se violation, the Sherman Act will be read as simply saying: 'An agreement among competitors to rig bids is illegal.'" United States v. Koppers Co., 652 F.2d at 294 (quoting United States v. Brighton Building, 598 F.2d at 1106).

Defendants attempt to distinguish their alleged behavior from classic bid rigging on the grounds that their alleged scheme involved no pre-auction fixing of prices and allowed for unfettered competition at the second, private auction. However, neither of these features, even if true, removes the alleged scheme from the domain of the per se violation. In the first place, courts have repeatedly held that HN5[] a simple [8] agreement not to bid is itself a per se antitrust violation, even in the absence of prior price fixing. "Where two or more persons agree that one will submit a bid for a [*990] project higher or lower than the others or that one will not submit a bid at all, then there has been an unreasonable restraint of trade which violates the Sherman Antitrust Act." United States v. W.F. Brinkley and Son, 783 F.2d 1157, 1161 (4th Cir. 1986) (emphasis added). See also United States v. Portsmouth Paving, 694 F.2d 312, 325 (4th Cir. 1982) ("any agreement between competitors pursuant to which contract offers are to be submitted to or withheld from a third party constitutes bid rigging per se violative of 15 U.S.C. § 1" (emphasis added)); Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U.S. 375, 400, 49 L. Ed. 518, 25 S. Ct. 276 (1905) ("the defendants cannot be ordered to compete, but they properly can be forbidden to give directions or to make agreements not to compete").

More importantly, the alleged scheme of the defendants is indistinguishable from schemes which courts have held per se violative of the Sherman Act. In Addyston Pipe & Steel Co v. United States, 175 U.S. 211, 44 L. Ed. 136, 20 S. Ct. 96 (1899), six manufacturers of cast-iron [9] pipe formed an "association" to protect themselves from the adverse effects of the competition that normally existed between them. The association first divided their sales region into "pay" territory, in which each association member had to pay a bonus to the other members for his sales, and "free" territory, in which the members could sell freely without paying a bonus. However, > the system of bonuses, as a means of restricting competition and maintaining prices, was not successful. A change was therefore made by which prices were to be fixed for each contract by the association, and, except in reserved cities, the bidder was determined by competitive bidding of the members, the one agreeing to the highest bonus for division among the others getting the contract.

United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 85 F. 271 (6th Cir. 1898) (emphasis added), mod. and aff'd, 175 U.S. 211, 44 L. Ed. 136, 20 S. Ct. 96 (1899). In other words, the members of the association bid for the right to be the low bidder, and the association split the premium that each member was willing to pay for the advantage of no competition from other association members. The scheme in Addyston Pipe is therefore the mirror [10] image of the alleged scheme of the defendants in this case; the only important distinction is that the Addyston Pipe conspirators competed before the public bidding, while these defendants allegedly competed after the public bidding.

The Supreme Court held that the association's scheme was an illegal combination in restraint of trade. In doing so, the Court emphasized that the illegality of the association's activity flowed from the scheme's effect not only on the actual public bidding, but on the members' freedom to compete at that bidding:

> It is also urged that as but one contract would be awarded for the work proposed at any place, and therefore only one person would secure it by virtue of being the lowest bidder, the selection by defendants of one of their number to make the lowest bid as among themselves could not operate as any restraint of trade. . . . This takes no heed of the purpose and effect of the combination to restrain the action of the parties to it so that there shall be no competition among them to obtain the contract for themselves. . . . It is the effect of the combination in limiting and restricting the right of each of the members to transact [11] business in the ordinary way, as well as its effect upon the volume or extent of the dealing in the commodity, that is regarded.

175 U.S. at 244-45 (emphasis added). It is crucial to note that in Addyston Pipe, as in the case before the court, there was free competition among the members of the association; the Supreme Court did not view this private competition as salvaging the corrupt agreement. Similarly, this court cannot attach any legal significance to the defendants' post-auction competition. That competition has no effect whatever on the illegality of the agreement not to compete at the public auction.

United States v. Walker, 653 F.2d 1343 (9th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 908, 71 L. Ed. 2d 446, 102 S. Ct. 1253 (1982), is [*991] another case which presents facts virtually indistinguishable from the case before the court. In Walker, the defendant made payments to a number of his competitors to prevent them from bidding competitively at a timber sale administered by the United States Forest Service. The defendant was convicted of conspiring to defraud the United States through bid rigging. The economic effect of the scheme in Walker is identical to the effect of the scheme charged in [12] this case. Whether would-be competitors split the economic premium which results from restrained competition before or after the bidding process is a matter only of timing, not of legality. Both schemes are equally violative of the Sherman Act.

Any argument that the unlawfulness of the agreement not to bid competitively was cured by the defendants' alleged post-auction competition is refuted by United States v. Bensinger Co., 430 F.2d 584 (8th Cir. 1970). In Bensinger, a restaurant twice accepted bids for the sale and installation of a dishwasher. It rejected all of the bids received in the first round, and then accepted a bid after reopening the bidding process. The government prosecuted defendant for rigging bids at the first bidding. The defendant argued that it could not be convicted of rigging bids at the first bidding, since the restaurant rejected all of the rigged bids. The court rejected this argument. Bensinger therefore reinforces the proposition that a Sherman Act violation occurs when competitors agree to bid non-competitively. Just as the Bensinger defendant could not escape criminal liability by the fortuity that its corrupt plan did not succeed, the [13] defendants in this case cannot escape criminal liability by the fortuity that other innocent bidders attended the public auction or that the alleged co-conspirators valued the purchased equipment sufficiently to trigger competitive bidding at their private auction. Their alleged crime was nothing more and nothing less than their agreement not to compete.

B. Mens Rea

Defendants contend that the indictment fails to allege specific intent, and that this deficiency requires dismissal of the indictment. The answer to this contention is that the indictment's failure to allege specific intent is not a deficiency. In United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 438 U.S. 422, 57 L. Ed. 2d 854, 98 S. Ct. 2864 (1978), the Supreme Court held that HN6[] "action undertaken with knowledge of its probable consequences and having the requisite anticompetitive effects can be a sufficient predicate for a finding of criminal liability under the antitrust laws." 438 U.S. at 444 (emphasis added). The Court thus chose general intent as the mens rea standard for antitrust crimes, explicitly rejecting a specific intent standard. This court therefore concludes that the indictment adequately charges the requisite level of criminal intent [14] by alleging an "agreement, understanding and concert of action" to refrain from bidding "for the purpose of purchasing commercial equipment at artificially low and noncompetitive prices." Indictment at para. 14.

II. Conspiracy to Defraud the United States

Defendants attack Count Two of the indictment on the grounds that it fails to charge a violation of 18 U.S.C. § 371. HN7[] That statute provides that > if two or more persons conspire either to commit any offense against the United States, or to defraud the United States, or any agency thereof in any manner or for any purpose, and one or more of such persons do any act to effect the object of the conspiracy, each shall be fined not more than $ 10,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

Defendants' theory is that their alleged scheme defrauded, if anyone, only the creditors of S & S Corrugated, but not "the United States or any agency thereof."

Defendants rely on two recent Supreme Court decisions: McNally v. United States, 483 U.S. 350, 107 S. Ct. 2875, 97 L. Ed. 2d 292 (1987), and Tanner v. United States, 483 U.S. 107, 107 S. Ct. 2739, 97 L. Ed. 2d 90 [*992] (1987). In McNally, the Supreme Court resolved an issue long debated in the district and circuit courts by holding that [15] the mail fraud statute, 18 U.S.C. § 1341, is "limited in scope to the protection of property rights," as opposed to the intangible right of the citizenry to good government. 107 S. Ct. at 2880. In Tanner, the Court held that a conspiracy to defraud a private entity that receives "financial assistance and some supervision" from the United States is not a conspiracy to defraud the United States under § 371. 107 S. Ct. at 2752-53.

Neither of these cases is of any assistance to defendants. Defendants argue that the indictment is prohibited by McNally because it charges a deprivation only of an intangible right to the integrity of the bankruptcy courts, rather than of a tangible property interest. However, the McNally opinion will not support such a contention. The statute at issue in that case was 18 U.S.C. § 1341, the mail fraud statute. The Supreme Court was careful to note in its opinion that the scope of the mail fraud statute is narrower than the scope of 18 U.S.C. § 371, the statute at issue in this case. 107 S. Ct. at 2881 n.8. Indeed, the McNally Court endorsed HN8[] the use of 18 U.S.C. § 371 against schemes directed at the deprivation of intangible rights to governmental [16] integrity. Id. Defendants' reliance on McNally is therefore wholly misplaced. See also Tanner v. United States, 107 S. Ct. at 2751 ("the fraud covered by the statute 'reaches "any conspiracy for the purpose of impairing obstructing, or defeating the lawful function of any department of Government"" (citations omitted)).

Tanner is of no greater help to defendants. In Tanner, the defendants fraudulently obtained a loan from a private bank. That loan was guaranteed by the federal Rural Electrification Administration. The government obtained an indictment of defendants for conspiring to defraud the United States by fraudulently procuring the loan. The Court held that the defrauded private bank did not, by virtue of a limited amount of supervision by a federal agency, become "the United States or any agency thereof" for the purposes of § 371.

Tanner is readily distinguishable from the case before the court. In the first place, the target of the fraud in Tanner was a private intermediary between the government and the defendants. In this case, by contrast, the target of the alleged fraud was the government agency itself, which functioned as intermediary between [17] the defendants and the private creditors. See Indictment, Count Two at paras. 2, 3. More importantly, unlike the charge in Tanner, this indictment charges that the defendants directly impaired government agents in their carrying out of the bankruptcy court's lawful functions. HN9[] A bankruptcy court is a unit of the United States District Court charged with jurisdiction of any case arising under the bankruptcy code. 28 U.S.C. § 151. A bankruptcy trustee is an agent and officer of the bankruptcy court. See Callaghan v. Reconstruction Finance Corporation, 297 U.S. 464, 468, 80 L. Ed. 804, 56 S. Ct. 519 (1936); Red Carpet Corporation v. Miller, 708 F.2d 1576, 1579 (11th Cir. 1983); In re Power, 115 F.2d 69, 72 (7th Cir. 1940). In this case, the bankruptcy court is the actual seller of a debtor's property at a bankruptcy auction. In re Blue Coal Corporation, 59 Bankr. 157, 160 (Bkrtcy. M.D. Pa. 1986). Furthermore, the bankruptcy trustee was appointed by the bankruptcy court and was explicitly authorized by bankruptcy court order to hold the auction of S & S Corrugated's equipment. Defendants' argument based on Tanner must therefore fail, since the alleged fraud in this case was perpetrated directly [18] on an agency of the United States. Count Two of the indictment properly charges a violation of 18 U.S.C. § 371.

III. Multiplicity and Selectivity

Defendants argue that the two counts of the indictment are multiplicitous and that the indictment itself represents an impermissibly selective prosecution. Both arguments are meritless.

HN10[] Counts of a complaint are multiplicitous if each count requires proof of the [*993] same facts as each other count. That is simply not the case here, for > an overt act is required for a § 371 conviction, but not for a Sherman § 1 violation. The two statutes, besides requiring proof of a fact that the other does not, serve separate and distinct purposes. Sherman § 1 is aimed at avoiding collusive activity to restrain trade; the United States need not be the victim. In contrast, § 371 forbids fraud practiced against any federal government agency. Because the essence of one offense is anti-competitive activity and of the other, deceptive acts, each of which impose diverse social harms, . . . the two charges are not multiplicitous.

United States v. Walker, 653 F.2d 1343, 1351 (9th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 908, 71 L. Ed. 2d 446, 102 S. Ct. 1253 (1982). The court finds the reasoning [19] of Walker persuasive, and concludes that the two counts of the indictment are not multiplicitous.

HN11[] A defendant claiming impermissibly selective prosecution by the government bears a heavy burden of proof. He or she must overcome the principle that "the choice of whom to prosecute and the strategy of prosecution are generally matters left wholly to the government's control." United States v. Herman, 589 F.2d 1191, 1210 (3rd Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 441 U.S. 913, 60 L. Ed. 2d 386, 99 S. Ct. 2014 (1979). Thus defendants must make the twin showing

> (1) that while others similarly situated have not generally been proceeded against because of conduct of the type forming the basis of the charge against [them], [they have] been singled out for prosecution, and (2) that > the government's discriminatory selection of [them] for prosecution has been invidious or in bad faith, i.e., based upon such impermissible considerations as race, religion, or the desire to prevent [their] exercise of constitutional rights.

United States v. Berrios, 501 F.2d 1207, 1211 (2nd Cir. 1974).

Defendants do not advance the slimmest piece of evidence suggesting bad faith in their prosecution. Nor have they identified others similarly [20] situated who have not been proceeded against for the same conduct. Accordingly, the court must reject the contention that the indictment must be dismissed as the product of impermissibly selective prosecution.

CONCLUSION

The court finds no deficiency in the indictment. Defendants' motion to dismiss it must therefore be denied. [2]

---

[2] Defendants have also moved for extensive discovery from the government. The court concludes, however, that the government is under no obligation to provide the defendants with any materials or information other than that which it must disclose under Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 83 S. Ct. 1194, 10 L. Ed. 2d 215 (1963), the Jencks Act, 18 U.S.C. § 3500(b), and F.R.Crim.P. 16, and that which it has already promised to disclose voluntarily.

LexisNexis®

In re Super Premium Ice Cream Distribution Antitrust Litigation

United States District Court for the Northern District of California

January 23, 1988, Decided and Filed

MDL Docket No. 682

Reporter
1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7366 *

In Re Super Premium Ice Cream Distribution Antitrust Litigation; This document relates to: ALL CASES

Core Terms

ice cream, distributor, termination, summary judgment, products, brands, summary judgment motion, cause of action, parties, relevant market, manufacturers, genuine, monopoly power, conspiracy, distribute, geographic, interbrand, antitrust, dealer, material fact, Sherman Act, customers, marketing, compete, retail, cases, alleged conspiracy, antitrust claim, anti trust law, allegations

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN1[] Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

The parties opposing summary judgment must do more than simply show that there is some doubt as to material facts. They must come forward with specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. And where the record taken as a whole could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the opposing parties, there is no genuine issue for trial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Nonprice Restraints

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

HN2[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Alleged vertical restraints which do not constitute price fixing are to be judged under the rule of reason. The per se illegality rule does not apply to such non-price restraints. In such a setting interbrand competition is the primary concern of the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN3[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Injury to competition, rather than injury to a competitor, is indispensable to a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4[] Sherman Act, Defenses

Once allegations of conspiracy made in the complaint are rebutted by probative evidence supporting an alternative interpretation of a defendant's conduct, the plaintiff must come forward with specific factual support of its allegations of conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Nonprice Restraints

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > Antitrust Issues

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > General Overview

HN5[] Vertical Restraints, Nonprice Restraints

A manufacturer is free to impose a non-price restraint on a dealer so long as there is no pernicious economic effect on interbrand competition. A manufacturer's attempt to prevent "free riding" on its marketing efforts for the benefit of other lines which the distributor is selling is both legitimate and lawful. It is widely recognized that in most circumstances dealer terminations or substitutions do not adversely affect competition in a market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Acts & Mental States > Mens Rea > Specific Intent

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN6[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The elements of a monopolization claim are: (1) possession of monopoly power in the relevant market, (2) willful acquisition or maintenance of that power, and (3) causal "antitrust" injury. The elements of a claim of attempted monopolization are: (1) specific intent to control prices or destroy competition in the relevant market, (2) predatory or anticompetitive conduct directed to accomplishing the unlawful purpose, and (3) a dangerous probability of success.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Jury Trials > Province of Court & Jury

HN7[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The issue of relevant market is generally a fact question for a jury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN8[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

In analyzing the relevant product market, the appraisal is one of cross-elasticity of demand; that is, the reasonable interchangeability of commodities.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN9[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Courts reject efforts to define markets by price variances or product quality variances. Such distinctions are economically meaningless where the differences are actually a spectrum of price and quality differences.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN10[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

An alleged conspiracy between a corporate parent and its wholly owned subsidiary is legally insufficient to support a claim of conspiracy under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq.

Counsel: [*1] PILLSBURY, MADISON & SUTRO, William C. Miller, Reginald D. Steer, Brian D. Bellardo, San Francisco, CA

Opinion by: LEGGE

Opinion

OPINION AND ORDER FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

CHARLES A. LEGGE, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Cross motions for summary judgment have been made by all of the present parties to this litigation, Haagen-Dazs, Double Rainbow and Two Count. The motions were briefed, argued and submitted. The court has reviewed the moving and opposing papers, the factual record on which the motions and oppositions are based, the record in the case, the arguments of counsel, and the applicable authorities. The court directs that summary judgment be entered in favor of Haagen-Dazs and against Double Rainbow and Two Count, as discussed below.

The Cases

This multi-district litigation presently consists of three actions. No. C-05-6553 is brought by Haagen-Dazs against Double Rainbow and Two Count. Haagen-Dazs seeks a declaration that its arrangements with its distributors do not violate law, and that certain acts of Double Rainbow constitute unfair competition under California law. No. C-86-0853 is brought by Double Rainbow against Haagen-Dazs, It alleges violations of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act [*2] and two common law torts. Action No. C-87-2471 is brought by Two Count against Haagen-Dazs. It alleges violations of California's Cartwright Act; breach of contract, unfair business practices under California statute, and three state law torts.

All three of these actions have one central issue: Whether Haagen-Dazs can lawfully have exclusive distribution. That is, whether Haagen-Dazs can sell only to distributors who agree not to sell competing brands of ice cream. The central facts are simple and undisputed. Two Count was formerly a Haagen-Dazs distributor. When Two Count decided to sell other brands of ice cream competing with Haagen-Dazs, including Double Rainbow ice cream, Haagen-Dazs advised Two Count that it would terminate Two Count as a distributor unless Two Count agreed to handle only Haagen-Dazs. Two Count declined to do so. Haagen-Dazs then terminated Two Count and obtained another distributor. Haagen-Dazs believes that exclusive distribution is in compliance with law, while Two Count and Double Rainbow contend that exclusive distribution violates state and federal antitrust laws.

The Summary Judgment Motions

Discovery is virtually completed. A trial date had been [*3] set, but was vacated for the making and determination of these summary judgment motions.

In its summary judgment motion, Haagen-Dazs in essence seeks complete summary judgment against Double Rainbow and Two Count on their claims against Haagen-Dazs. In No. C-86-0853, it seeks summary judgment on Double Rainbows' three antitrust claims and two common law claims. It also seeks summary judgment in No. C-87-2471 on Two Count's state antitrust claims, breach of contract claim, and three common law claims. In its own action, No. C-85-6553, Haagen-Dazs seeks a declaration that its distribution arrangements do not violate law. [1]

---

[1] The court does not interpret Haagen-Dazs' motion to seek summary judgment on its second cause of action in No. C-85-6553.

Double Rainbow and Two Count oppose Haagen-Dazs' motion, and seek summary judgment of their own declaring (a) that the relevant market is "super premium" ice cream, and (b) that by virtue of collateral estoppel, Haagen-Dazs' policy of exclusive distribution is coercive.

The Factual Record

Since discovery has been completed, the parties have been able to submit to. the court an extensive factual record. In evaluating that factual record, [*4] and its effect on these summary judgment motions, the court is guided by the principles for evaluating summary judgment motions in antitrust cases stated by the United States Supreme Court in Matsushita Elec. Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio, 475 U.S. 574, 585-588 (1986). HN1[] The parties opposing summary judgment, here primarily Double Rainbow and Two Count, must do more than simply show that there is some doubt as to material facts. They must come forward with "specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial." Id. at 587 (emphasis in original). And where the record taken as a whole could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the opposing parties, there is no genuine issue 'for trial. [2] Id. The record in this case demonstrates that most of the material facts are indeed undisputed.

Haagen-Dazs [3] manufactures and sells ice cream products and other frozen deserts, including [*5] Haagen-Dazs brand ice cream. Its products are sold to distributors, who in turn resell them to grocery stores, restaurants and other retailers. Haagen-Dazs ice cream is (a) made of high quality natural ingredients, (b) contains a low volume of air, and (c) is high in butterfat. These three characteristics cause Haagen-Dazs' ice cream to be referred to in the industry as "super premium" or "luxury" ice cream. Haagen-Dazs was the first such high quality ice cream to be distributed throughout the United States.

Two Count is a wholesale distributor of ice cream. It sells to retail outlets located throughout Northern California. It buys products from various manufacturers and resells them to retailers for Two Count's own account.

Double Rainbow manufacturers and sells its own brands of ice cream product's, which are of a quality that competes with Haagen-Dazs' ice cream.

Haagen-Dazs' marketing strategy is that its products be distributed only in accordance with its announced marketing policies and procedures. Pursuant to its marketing [*6] policies, Haagen-Dazs refuses to sell its products to any distributor who also sells another brand of ice cream that Haagen-Dazs regards as comparable and competitive, based on such considerations as quality, image, packaging, price, and public perception. Haagen-Dazs' policy of distributor loyalty, or exclusive distribution, was announced to its distributors as early as 1981.

Two Count became a distributor of Haagen-Dazs ice cream in Northern California in 1976. The arrangements between Two Count and Haagen-Dazs were oral. No term of duration was stated or agreed upon by implication. For many years, Two Count exercised its best efforts to establish and build sales of Haagen-Dazs products in Northern California. However, in February 1985 Two Count entered into a written distribution agreement with Double Rainbow, providing for Two Count's distribution of Double Rainbow's ice cream. Two Count was aware of Haagen-Dazs' policy that if a distributor represents brands competing with Haagen-Dazs, that would create a conflict of interests unacceptable to Haagen-Dazs. Two Count was aware, prior to agreeing to distribute Double Rainbow's products, of Haagen-Dazs' distribution policies and [*7] that Haagen-Dazs was concerned about Two Count's handling competitive lines such as Double Rainbow. The agreement between Two Count and Double Rainbow required Two Count to exert its best efforts in distributing Double Rainbow products, and contained a minimum purchase requirement of one million pints in the years 1985 and following. Two Count did not inform

---

[2] Haagen-Dazs has filed objections to certain portions of Double Rainbow's and Two Count's factual record. The objections are based on various evidentiary grounds. The court has reviewed each of the objections, and believes that each is well taken. The objections are therefore sustained.

[3] Haagen-Dazs is a wholly owned subsidiary of The Pillsbury Company. Haagen-Dazs and The Pillsbury Company are collectively referred to here as Haagen-Dazs.

Haagen-Dazs of this arrangement until after Two Count and Double Rainbow executed their written contract. Two Count then advised Haagen-Dazs that it intended to distribute Double Rainbow products, in order to generate additional sales volume for Two Count.

In March 1985, Haagen-Dazs confirmed that Two Count was undertaking distribution of Double Rainbow products. In May 1985 Haagen-Dazs notified Two Count that effective August 1, 1985, the distribution arrangements between Haagen-Dazs and Two Count would end. The distribution arrangements did end on that day. Haagen-Dazs terminated Two Count because, in Haagen-Dazs' opinion, Two Count's distribution of Double Rainbow created a conflict of interests that impaired Haagen-Dazs' ability to effectively compete, and permitted Double Rainbow to "free ride" on Haagen-Dazs' goodwill, reputation, [*8] and distribution.

Haagen-Dazs initially replaced Two Count with another distributor, but that arrangement was terminated in 1986, and Haagen-Dazs now does its own distributing in this area. Two Count has continued to represent Double Rainbow. Two Count also handles Steve's, Perche No!, and Bud's brands of quality ice creams. Two Count's sales have "substantially increased since Haagen-Dazs ceased dealing with Two Count and Two Count has devoted itself to the other brands. Double Rainbow has also been able to find distributors in other areas of the United States where it competes with Haagen-Dazs.

Haagen-Dazs makes other assertions of fact which Double Rainbow and Two Count oppose. It is therefore necessary to examine the record of those asserted facts, using the standard defined by the U.S. Supreme Court in Matsushita. The inquiry is of course whether there is a genuine issue of material fact to be tried. Most of Haagen-Dazs' record is based upon documents and witness testimony which it obtained from Double Rainbow and Two Count. In addition, Haagen-Dazs has submitted an affidavit of Jerry A. Hausman, a professor of economics, which sets forth his findings from the record that [*9] he reviewed. Double Rainbow and Two Count have not submitted an affidavit by an expert witness, and they base their opposition upon testimony and documents obtained in discovery.

Vertical Restraints and Dealer Terminations

Subsequent to the filing of these cases, several important appellate decisions have been made regarding vertical restraints under the antitrust laws.

The United States Supreme Court recently discussed the issue in Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., __ U.S. __ 99 L.Ed.2d 808 (1988). The Court reaffirmed its position that HN2[] alleged vertical restraints which do not constitute price fixing are to be judged under the rule of reason. The Court said that the per se illegality rule does not apply to such non-price restraints. [4] The Court also noted that in such a setting interbrand competition is the primary concern of the antitrust laws.

This court also has the guidance of the recent Ninth Circuit decision Rutman Wine Co. v. E. & J. Gallo Winery, 829 F.2d 729 (9th Cir. 1987). Rutman was a dealer termination case, involving non-price commercial activities, which were [*10] alleged to be violations of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. The court of appeals affirmed the district court's dismissal of the action for failure to state a cause of action. The court of appeals stated that the applicable analysis was under the rule of reason, and not under the per se rule. Id. at 734. The court also reaffirmed the principle that HN3[] injury to competition, rather than injury to a competitor, is indispensable to a claim under section 1. Id. The court recognized that harm to a terminated distributor can result from termination, but that harm does not necessarily mean that there has been an antitru+st violation. The court also affirmed dismissal of the section 2 allegations, because the defendant did not possess monopoly power in the relevant geographic market, and the plaintiff had not sufficiently alleged a specific intent to monopolize. Id. at 736. The analysis of the [4] Price restraints are not involved in this case.

Ninth Circuit in Rutman is particularly relevant to the antitrust claims between Haagen-Dazs and Two Count, and this court is particularly guided by the discussion on pages 734-736 of Rutman.

In another recent decision, OSC Corp. v. Apple Computer Inc., 792 F.2d 1464 [*11] (9th Cir. 1986), the Ninth Circuit again affirmed a summary judgment in a dealer termination case. The termination was challenged under section 1 of the Sherman Act. Summary judgment was granted and was affirmed on the ground that the claimants had not presented a record sufficient to support a reasonable finding in their favor. In regard to the burden of proof, the court stated: HN4[] "Once allegations of conspiracy made in the complaint are rebutted by probative evidence supporting an alternative interpretation of a defendant's conduct, the plaintiff must come forward with specific factual support of its allegations of conspiracy." Id. at 1467. The court reaffirmed that dealer termination cases involve the rule of reason and not the per se rule, and that injury to the terminated dealer is not enough to prove injury to competition. Id. at 1469.

The Ninth Circuit specifically stated in OSC that HN5[] a manufacturer "is free to impose a non-price restraint on a dealer so long as there is no pernicious economic effect on interbrand competition." Id. The court also stated that a manufacturer's attempt to prevent "free riding" on its marketing efforts for the benefit of other lines [*12] which the distributor is selling is "both legitimate and lawful" Id. at 1468.

In addition, in A. H. Cox Co. v. Star Machinery Co., 653 F.2d 1302, 1306-1307 (9th Cir. 1981), the Ninth Circuit affirmed a summary judgment against a distributor, stating that it is widely recognized that in most circumstances dealer terminations or substitutions do not adversely affect competition in a market.

Two Count and Double Rainbow attempt to avoid the application of the above principles by reliance on Industrial Bldg. Materials, Inc. v. Interchemical Corp., 437 F.2d 1336 (9th Cir. 1971). From that case they contend that this court should look beyond the. termination of the distributorship and view the charges in the context of an attempt to monopolize and a conspiracy. However, as will be discussed below, there is no evidence to support the allegation of conspiracy. In addition, the insufficiency of the monopoly charges are also discussed below.

In any event, it is clear from a reading of the Ninth Circuit cases together that the mere discharge of a distributor is not itself a violation of the antitrust laws. Double Rainbow and Two Count must establish more. Basically they must establish [*13] an injury to competition. However, they have not done so. They have not made a sufficient showing of a genuine issue of fact regarding an antitrust injury. In fact, the record establishes that there is increasing interbrand competition. Two Count continues to represent Double Rainbow and other manufacturers, and has prospered. Double Rainbow has been able to obtain other distributors nationwide. Haagen-Dazs' market share, on the other hand, has declined in several respects. Two Count and Double Rainbow have not established that competition has suffered because Haagen-Dazs terminated Two Count, whether the relevant geographic market is a nationwide market or the San Francisco Bay Area. Separate distribution has led to increased and successful interbrand competition.

Monopoly

Two Count and Double Rainbow argue that Haagen-Dazs has a monopoly, or is attempting to monopolize, in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act and the California Cartwright Act.

HN6[] The elements of a monopolization claim are: (1) possession of monopoly power in the relevant market, (2) willful acquisition or maintenance of that power, and (3) causal "antitrust" injury. Rutman, 829 F.2d at 736. The elements [*14] of a claim of attempted monopolization are: (1) specific intent to control prices or destroy competition in the relevant market, (2) predatory or anticompetitive conduct directed to accomplishing the unlawful purpose, and (3) a dangerous probability of success. Id. The claims of Two Count and Double Rainbow fail here because there is no genuine issue of material fact that Haagen-Dazs has monopoly power in a relevant market, or any intent to control prices or destroy competition in a relevant market, or any dangerous probability of success.

The first factor is the 'necessity to define the relevant product market. Haagen-Dazs contends that the relevant product market is all frozen desserts, or at least all ice creams. Two Count and Double Rainbow contend that it is super premium ice creams. While HN7[] the issue of relevant market is generally a fact question for a jury, Syufy Enterprises v. American Multi Cinema Inc., 783 F.2d 878, 882 (9th Cir. 1986) in this case there is no genuine issue of material fact for the jury in that regard.

The U.S. Supreme Court has said that HN8[] in analyzing the relevant product market, the appraisal is one of cross-elastcity of demand; that is, the reasonable [*15] interchangeability of commodities. United States v. DuPont & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 394-95, 404 (1956); Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325 (1962). As stated, Haagen-Dazs ice creams are distinguishable, at least for purposes of marketing, by the fact that they have higher butterfat content, lower air volume, and more natural ingredients. Haagen-Dazs' internal documents support the claim that its products have high customer recognition and sales because of those characteristics. However, it is clear from the record that gradations among various qualities of ice cream are not sufficient to establish separate relevant markets for the purposes of determining market power. HN9[] Courts have repeatedly rejected efforts to define markets by price variances or product quality variances. Such distinctions are economically meaningless where the differences are actually a spectrum of price and quality differences. See, e.g, Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 326; United States v. Jos. Schlitz Brewing Co., 253 F.Supp. 129, 145-6 (N.D. Cal. 1966), affm'd 385 U.S. 37 (1967); Ron Tonkin Grand Tourismo v. Fiat, 637 F.2d 1376, 1379-80 (9th Cir. 1981) cert. denied, 454 U.S. [*16] 831 (1981); JBL Enterprises v. Jhirmack Enterprises, Inc., 509 F.Supp. 357, 371-2 (N.D. Cal. 1981); Beatrice Foods v. FTC, 540 F.2d 303. 309-310 (7th Cir. 1976).

That is this case. The record demonstrates that all grades of ice creams compete with one another for customer preference and for space in the retailers' freezers. Double Rainbow and Two Count have not shown that any of the differences among ice cream products, such as physical or price differences, have antitrust significance. They have not presented sufficient facts to create an issue of fact that people who buy so called "super premium" or "luxury" ice creams do not buy others which are lower in the spectrum of price or quality. And to the contrary, Haagen-Dazs has established a record that permits no reasonable inference other than that the relevant market is ice cream generally. There is significant overlap among the various grades and brands. All grades of ice cream compete for both retail shelf space and for consumers' attention. The various adjectives used to describe brands of ice creams do not alone establish separate markets.

Because of this conclusion regarding the product market, the court need not discuss [*17] the relevant geographic market extensively. In fact, the 'parties mention the geographic market only in passing. Since the relevant product market is all ice creams, what evidence there is before this court establishes no meaningful distinctions in result depending upon whether the geographic market is nationwide or the San Francisco Bay Area. That is, Haagen-Dazs has too small a share of either geographic market to approach monopoly power or to establish any dangerous probability of such monopoly power. For example, Haagen-Dazs' statistics indicate that its share of the ice cream market in the San Francisco area is only four to five percent. The parties present no direct statistics on a nationwide market. And Two Count and Double Rainbow's statistics do not demonstrate any monopoly power, or reasonable probability of monopoly power, in any geographic market. [5]

[*18] The record also demonstrates the absence of any power on the part of Haagen-Dazs to exclude competitors. It instead affirmatively demonstrates that competitors are entering the market and obtaining significant market shares. These facts are evidenced in part by the success which Two Count, Double Rainbow, and other manufacturers of alleged super premium ice cream have had in obtaining market shares. As noted from the above authorities, one of the key elements for analysis is the degree of interbrand competition. The record is abundantly clear, beyond any contrary determination which could reasonably be made by a jury, that there is extensive interbrand competition, and that such competition has been increasing.

---

[5] Double Rainbow's and Two Count's statistics refer to the San Francisco Bay Area, using only super premium ice creams as the product market. Those statistics appear to be flawed, because of their exclusion of some alleged super premium brands. And even those statistics show that Haagen-Dazs' share of the alleged super premium market has dropped from 1984 through 1987.

Estoppel

Double Rainbow and Two Count argue that Haagen-Dazs is collaterally estopped from denying that its exclusive distribution policy is illegal, and from denying that its conduct is coercive. In doing so, they rely upon a decision of the United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts, Ben and Jerry's Homemade v. Haagen-Dazs, Civil Action No. 87-2785-C (1987). However, that decision does not have the collateral estoppel effect that Two Count and [*19] Double Rainbow seek. First, that decision was made on the application by that plaintiff for a preliminary injunction. It was not a final adjudication which is entitled to collateral estoppel effect. Kuzinich v. County of Santa Clara, 689 F.2d 1345, 1350-51 (9th Cir. 1982). In addition, the decision was based primarily, if not entirely, upon the breach of a written settlement agreement between the plaintiff there and Haagen-Dazs. It was not an adjudication of alleged violations of the antitrust laws. The settlement agreement at issue there is not at issue in this case.

Conspiracy

Two Count and Double Rainbow also argue that there was a conspiracy between Haagen-Dazs and other parties, and that the existence of a conspiracy is a defense to Haagen-Dazs' summary judgment motion.

However, the record does not establish any genuine issue of material fact on the existence of any conspiracy. One argument is that there was a conspiracy between Haagen-Dazs and its parent Pillsbury. However, HN10[] an alleged conspiracy between a corporate parent and its wholly owned subsidiary is legally insufficient. Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 US. 752 (1984). In addition, Double Rainbow [*20] and Two Count have apparently conceded in their briefs that there is insufficient evidence to establish any conspiracy between Haagen-Dazs and any other manufacturer or distributor to keep Double Rainbow or Two Count out of the market. Two Count and Double Rainbow have simply not come forward with a specific factual showing to support their allegations of conspiracy, as required by the Ninth Circuit's holding in OSC. 792 F.2d at 1467.

Based upon the relevant authorities, and upon the record in this case, which established either undisputed facts or facts as to which there is no genuine issue, the court concludes that summary judgment should be granted (a) in favor of Haagen-Dazs and against Two Count on Two Count's two antitrust claims, and against Double Rainbow on Double Rainbow's three antitrust claims, (b) and in favor of Haagen-Dazs against Two Count and Double Rainbow on the first cause of action in C-85-6553

Common Law Claims

Two Count has also alleged common law claims. One is an alleged breach of the distribution agreement between Haagen-Dazs and Two Count. However, that contract was oral, contained no term of duration, and was terminable at will. Two Count argues that [*21] the agreement was to last in perpetuity because Two Count was "assured that it would grow with Haagen-Dazs." But that is legally insufficient. See Alpha Distrib. Co. v. Jack Daniel Distillery, 454 F.2d 442, 447-8 (9th Cir. 1972) cert. denied, 419 U.S. 842 (1974); Connelly v. Venus Foods, Inc., 174 Cal.App.2d 582, 585-6 (1959). Even if the agreement were interpreted as being more than "at will," and required good cause for termination, the record establishes that there was good cause. Two Count's taking on competitive lines of ice cream was good cause. Two Count's obligation was at least to use its best efforts on behalf of Haagen-Dazs, and when Two Count agreed to also use its best efforts on behalf of competitor Double Rainbow, Haagen-Dazs was justified in terminating the distribution agreement. There is no doubt that Haagen-Dazs gave reasonable notice to Two Count of the termination, and the court does not understand Two Count to be complaining about the method or reasonableness of the notice of termination.

Two Count's other state law allegations are unfair business practices, interference with prospective advantages, interference with contractual relationships, and [*22] breach of the covenant of good faith. They are based upon

Two Count's allegation that Haagen-Dazs somehow interfered with Two Count's relationships with its customers and suppliers. However, discovery has not substantiated those allegations. There is not sufficient evidence in the record to support an allegation of such interference. And as stated, Two Count has increased its number of brands, its customers and its revenues.

Double Rainbow also makes common law allegations of interference with prospective advantages and interference with contractual relationships. Again, however, there is not sufficient evidence to support those allegations. [6] The undisputed record shows that although Haagen-Dazs is in competition with Double Rainbow, it has not unlawfully interfered with Double Rainbow's contractual relationships or its prospective business advantages. There is no material evidence that the contract between Double Rainbow and Two Count has been interfered with by Haagen-Dazs. Nor is there any evidence of interference with any contract that Double Rainbow had with any other customers. Double Rainbow's general argument of possible inference with potential distributors, retail [*23] customers or franchisees is not legally sufficient. Such general expectations do not constitute economic relationships sufficient for protection. Blank v. Kirwan, 39 Cal.3d 311, 330 (1985); Buckaloo v. Johnson, 14 Cal.3d 815, 828 (1975).

Conclusion

In summary, Haagen-Dazs terminated Two Count because Haagen-Dazs has a marketing policy of requiring exclusive distribution, which Two Count violated by agreeing to distribute the ice creams of Double Rainbow, as well as other brands that compete with Haagen-Dazs. Haagen-Dazs was legally entitled to terminate Two Count. Double Rainbow and Two Count have not provided sufficient evidence from which a reasonable trier of fact could find any violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, Section 2 of the Sherman Act, or the California Cartwright Act, or could find in favor of Double Rainbow and Two Count on their state law claims.

Competition in the ice cream market is flourishing, and interbrand competition is intense. Antitrust lawsuits [*24] are no substitute for such true competition. The public interest is protected by such competition, and antitrust suits are only an adjunct to promoting that public interest in cases where competition has been improperly curtailed. When there is, as here, real and intense competition, antitrust suits are simply not for the purpose of protecting a distributor's or a competitor's economic desires.

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED as follows:

(1) The motion for summary judgment by Double Rainbow in action C-86-0853 is denied.

(2) The motion for summary judgment by Two Count in action C-87-247l is denied.

(3) The motion of Haagen-Dazs for summary judgment is granted as follows:

(a) In C-86-0853, in favor of Haagen-Dazs and against Double Rainbow on all causes of action.

(b) In C-87-2471, in favor of Haagen-Dazs and against Two Count on all causes of action.

(c) In C-85-6553, in favor of Haagen-Dazs and against Double Rainbow and Two Count on the first cause of action.

(4) The court understands that there is a second cause of action in C-85-6553 by Haagen-Dazs alleging unfair competition. But the court does not interpret Haagen-Dazs' motion for summary judgment to address that cause of action. If [*25] Haagen-Dazs wishes to proceed with that cause of action, it should advise the court and the parties, and a status conference will be scheduled to set dates for the prosecution of that cause of action. If, in view of the above rulings, Haagen-Dazs wishes to abandon that cause of action, it should file with this court and serve on the parties a proposed form of judgment which is consistent with this opinion and which states that Haagen-Dazs is dismissing the second cause of action of C-85-6553.

---

[6] From the briefs in the summary judgment motions, the court does not understand Double Rainbow to argue that it has shown sufficient facts to contest Haagen-Dazs' motion on these common law claims.

Dated: June 23, 1988.

[Stead v. GTE Directories Corp.]

United States District Court for the Northern District of California

January 27, 1988, Decided ; January 27, 1988, Filed

No. C-85-20364 WAI

Reporter

1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18323 *

BERT STEAD, d/b/a/ YELLOW PAGES COST CONSULTANTS, et al., Plaintiffs, v. GTE DIRECTORIES CORPORATION, et al., Defendants.

Core Terms

relevant market, summary judgment, Directories, consultants, advertising, collateral estoppel effect, monopoly power, Sherman Act, courts, summary judgment motion

Judges: [*1] INGRAM

Opinion by: WILLIAM A. INGRAM

Opinion

ORDER

Defendants' motions for summary judgment are DENIED as set forth below. Defendants' motion pursuant to Rule 43(e), Fed. R. Civ. P., is DENIED. Defendants' alternative motion for a bifurcated trial pursuant to Rule 42(b), Fed. R. Civ. P., is GRANTED. The issue of relevant market will be tried separately before the remaining issues.

DEFENDANTS' FIRST MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Defendants first submitted a motion for summary judgment based upon the following grounds: (1) Yellow Page consulting service is not a separate relevant market, (2) Plaintiffs have failed to show any conspiracy to monopolize a relevant market, (3) There can be no tying claim as plaintiffs allege because Yellow Page consulting and the sale of Yellow Page advertising all relate to a single product, (4) There can be no Section 1 Sherman Act violation setting forth an unreasonable restraint of trade, since no party is restricted or prevented from dealing with any other party, and (5) State pendent claims (alleged violations of state antitrust laws) must be dismissed because none of the federal Sherman Act violations can stand.

Relevant Market: The parties have cited [*2] a number of cases in support of their respective positions. [1] The court finds this issue is best governed by the decision of the United States Supreme Court in Jefferson Parish Hospital

---

[1] For cases supporting defendants' position, see MAP Oil Company v. Texico, 691 F.2d 1303 (9th Cir. 1982); RFD Publications v. Oregonian Publishing Co., 749 F.2d 1327 (9th Cir. 1984); and Grason Electric Company v. Sacramento Municipal Utility District, 571 F. Supp. 504 (E.D. Cal. 1983).

District No 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2 (1984). In that case, the Supreme Court set forth what were similar or separate products in a tying case. The hospital had a contract with a firm of anesthesiologists to provide all anesthesiology services for patients of the hospital. The issue was whether anesthesiology services were a separate product from other hospital services. The court held that this did not depend on the nature of the services, but rather whether there was a separate demand for the services. It then found that there was a separate demand for anesthesiology services and it was a separate product.

[*3] In the present case, the record clearly demonstrates that there is a separate demand for the services of Yellow Page consultants by advertisers in Yellow Pages. The record shows that there are Yellow Page customers who clearly desire the services of the consultants. The court finds therefore that Yellow Page consultants can constitute a separate relevant market.

The court takes note of the case of Best Advertising Corp v. Illinois Bell Telephone Co., 229 F. Supp. 275 (S.D. Ill. 1964), aff'd 339 F.2d 1009 (7th Cir. 1965). There, under facts similar to the present case, no Section 1 or Section 2 Sherman Act violations were found. However, that decision was based on the finding that the Yellow Page company and the Yellow Page consultants were not in competition with each other and the relevant market issue was substantially ignored by the courts. This court finds that the Supreme Court decision in Jefferson Parish Hospital District No 2 v. Hyde, supra, mandates a different result on the relevant market issue and Section 2 of the Sherman Act.

Both parties have cited the recent decision of the Court of Appeals for [*4] the Eleventh Circuit in Ad-Vantage Telephone Directory Consultants v. GTE Directories Corporation, F.2d , 56 U.S.L.W. 2161, 7987-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,683 (11th Cir. August 27, 1987). There, national advertisers wished to place their ads in a number of directories simultaneously rather than bargaining separately with each publisher of a directory. The directories formed a national association called The National Yellow Pages Service Association (NYPSA) and a classification entitled Authorized Selling Representative (ASR). An ASR could sell advertising to a national advertiser on behalf of any directory that was a member of NYPSA.

The plaintiff was an ASR who became embroiled in a dispute with GTE and brought suit under Federal and Florida antitrust laws. Plaintiff could not prove his monopoly claims because GTE Directories had very little market power with respect to national advertising. He was permitted at trial to amend his complaint to allege that GTE Directories had a monopoly with respect to local advertising, the same issue that is present in the instant case.

On the local advertising issue, the Eleventh Circuit found in [*5] favor of GTE Directories. However, its decision was based on the finding that the ASRs (including plaintiff in that case) were not in competition with GTE Directories but rather were agents of the advertisers. Thus, there was no relevant market or monopoly issue. In that respect, the issue before the Eleventh Circuit differs from the case before this court.

For the above reason, summary judgment on the issue of relevant market in the present case is denied.

Monopoly Power. On the present record, this court is unwilling to grant summary judgment on the issue of monopoly power. There is a material factual conflict in the exhibits, declarations and deposition testimony on this issue. A trial is necessary to resolve the differences assuming there is a separate relevant market for Yellow Page consultants.

Assuming arguendo that defendant possess monopoly power, [2] the issue still exists as to whether defendants had a legitimate business reason for refusing to deal directly with Yellow Page consultants. Aspen Skiing Company v.

For cases tending to show the existence of a separate relevant market, see Cass Student Advertising, Inc., v. National Educational Advertising Services, Inc., 516 F.2d 1092 (7th Cir. 1975); and Twenty-Nine Productions v. Rollins Telecasting, Inc., 365 F.2d 478 (5th Cir. 1966).

[2] The court finds it unnecessary at this time and on the present record to determine whether defendants possess monopoly power.

Aspen Highlands, 472 U.S. 585, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, 105 S. Ct. 2847 (1985). On the present record, this [*6] court cannot determine this issue.

Further, still assuming that defendants had monopoly power, there would remain an issue as to whether the alleged defendant monopolists would have a duty to aid their competitors. Such a duty may exist in a proper case. Oahu Gas Service, Inc., v. Pacific Resource, Inc., 829 F.2d 1471 (9th Cir. 1987). This is a further issue which the present record cannot resolve for purposes of summary judgment.

Summary judgment will be denied to defendants on the issue of monopoly power.

Tying. For the reasons set forth above with respect to the relevant market, summary judgment is denied to defendants on this issue.

Plaintiffs are entitled to go to trial on the issues of relevant market, monopoly power and tying under Section 2 of the Sherman Act.

Competition. In view of the above ruling that a separate relevant market may exist for [*7] Yellow Page consultant services, the court cannot find on the present record that plaintiffs and defendants are not in competition with each other. The material facts in the record are in conflict as to whether such competition exists. Best Advertising Corp. v. Illinois Bell Telephone Co., supra, and Ad-Vantage Telephone Directory Consultants v. GTE Directories Corporation, supra, would tend to support a holding that such competition does not exist, but this court finds a trial is necessary to determine whether the facts in this proceeding meet the criterion of those cases. On the present conflicting record, this cannot be answered. Summary judgment is denied on the Section 1, Sherman Act claims.

Pendent Claims. For the reasons set forth above, the court finds it is not appropriate to rule on the state antitrust issues at this time.

DEFENDANTS' SECOND MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Defendants have filed a further motion for summary judgment based upon a state court decision in the state of Florida which defendants claim has collateral estoppel effect in the matter before this court.

The Florida case was brought [*8] in the Circuit Court of Pinellas County, a trial court. Plaintiffs were GTE Directories Corporation, a defendant in this proceeding, and General Telephone Company of Florida who is not a party to this action. The defendants were Tel-Ad Advisors, a Florida corporation who is not a party to this proceeding and Tel-Ad Advisors, an Oregon corporation, who is a plaintiff in this proceeding.

The Florida litigation had two counts. Count 1 alleged interference with and between GTE Directories and its customers. Count 2 alleged restraint of trade in violation of Florida's antitrust law. The Florida court granted plaintiffs in that action summary judgment on Count 1. It held that trial was required on the issue of liability and damages under Count 2.

In the case before this court, defendants have based an answer and counterclaim in part on alleged interference with contractual relations with their customers by the Yellow Page consultants. Defendants assert that the Florida decision constitutes collateral estoppel before this court on the issue of whether Yellow page consultant Tel-Ad has interfered with the contracts between defendants and Yellow Page advertisers. Defendants maintain [*9] further that the Florida decision constitutes a holding that defendants had good reason to cease doing business directly with Yellow Page Consultants.

Under Florida law, a judgment pending appeal is entitled to collateral estoppel effect unless it is subject to de novo review on appeal. Reese v. Domato, 44 Fla. 692, 33 So. 462 (1902). The defendants in the Florida case have appealed the Circuit Court decision to higher courts in that state. However, de novo is not involved since the review is based upon the record in the Circuit Court. Therefore, under Florida law, the Circuit Court decision would be entitled to collateral effect.

Also under Florida law, a partial summary judgment on a separate and independent cause of action is given collateral estoppel effect. Mendez v. West Flagler Family Association, 303 So. 2d 1 (1974). Plaintiff would distinguish the Mendez decision on the ground that, there, the appeal was from a partial summary judgment dismissing a claim where in the present situation, the appeal in the Florida courts is from a partial summary judgment granting a claim. This court finds however that [*10] no distinction can be made.

This court must conclude that the Florida courts would give collateral estoppel effect to the partial summary judgment of the Circuit Court of Pinellas County regardless of the fact that decision is on appeal.

The United States Supreme Court has held that federal courts should give collateral estoppel effect to state court decisions. Marrese v. American Academy of Orthopedic Surgeons, 470 U.S. 373, 84 L. Ed 2d 274, 105 S. Ct. 1327 (1985).

However, the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit has held that federal courts will not give collateral estoppel effect to state court decisions which are not final orders until the completion of appellate review. Luben Industries v. United States, 707 F.2d 1037 (9th Cir. 1983).

This court finds no necessary inconsistency between the Supreme Court and the Ninth Circuit decisions cited above. Following the law of this circuit, the court declines to give collateral estoppel effect at this time to the decision of the Circuit Court of Pinellas County of the State of Florida in GTE Directories et al. v. Tel-Ad Advisors et al., Circuit Civil No. 84-4387-20, [*11] until such time as the appellate process in Florida has been completed.

Defendants' motion for summary judgment on the basis of collateral estoppel is denied.

DEFENDANTS' MOTIONS UNDER RULES 43(e) and 42(b), FED. R. CIV. P.

Defendants have filed a motion in the alternative, either (1) under Rule 43(e), Fed. R. Civ. P. to have an oral hearing on the issue of whether plaintiffs and defendants compete, or (2) at trial under Rule 42(b), Fed. R. Civ. P., the issues be bifurcated and that the court try separately first the issue of relevant market.

Defendants' alternative motion for a bifurcated trial is granted. The court finds that judicial economy would best be served by first trying the issue of relevant market.

DATED: January 27, 1988

WILLIAM A. INGRAM, United States District Judge

End of Document

Boise Cascade Corp. v. FTC

United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit

March 2, 1987, Argued ; January 29, 1988, Decided

No. 86-1240

Reporter

837 F.2d 1127 *; 1988 U.S. App. LEXIS 1256 ; 267 U.S. App. D.C. 124; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,870

Boise Cascade Corporation, Petitioner v. Federal Trade Commission, Respondent

Subsequent History: [1] As Amended January 29, 1988. Petition for Rehearing Denied February 29, 1988.

Prior History: Petition for Review of an Order of the Federal Trade Commission.

Core Terms

discounts, wholesalers, dealers, manufacturers, retailers, buyer, price discrimination, products, sales, Salt, competitive injury, distributors, arbitrage, prices, favored, disfavored, competitors, purchasers, customers, Robinson-Patman Act, seller, jobbers, differential, dual, cases, slip opinion, resale, functions, costs, Big

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > Buyer Liability

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > General Overview

HN1[] Price Discrimination, Buyer Liability

Section 2(f) of the Robinson-Patman Act , 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(f), makes it unlawful for any person knowingly to induce or receive a discrimination in price which is prohibited under the Robinson-Patman Act. Since the Act directly proscribes only a seller's activities, the liability of a buyer under § 2(f) depends on whether the seller discriminated in the buyer's favor in violation of § 2(a) of the Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > General Overview

HN2[] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

Section 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act , 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(a), prohibits price discrimination between different purchasers where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > Buyer Liability

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN3[] Price Discrimination, Buyer Liability

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(f).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN4[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Robinson-Patman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(a).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > Cost Justification Defense

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > Buyer Liability

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > Meeting Competition Defense

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Defenses

HN5[] Defenses, Cost Justification Defense

To establish a prima facie case under 15 U.S.C.S. §13(f), the Federal Trade Commission must establish two things: first, that the buyer received a lower price than its competitors, and second, that the price discrimination caused, or reasonably might cause, competitive injury. The statute also specifies two defenses to a seller's and therefore to a buyer's derivative liability. No violation exists where the discount reflects the lower cost to the seller of selling to the favored customer the "cost-justification" defense, nor where the seller granted the discount in good faith to meet a competing seller's price the "meeting competition" defense. 15 U.S.C.S.§ 13(a)-(b).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > Promotional Allowances & Services

HN6[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Robinson-Patman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(b).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > General Overview

HN7[] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

The Robinson-Patman Act is directed to the preservation of competition. Indeed, the terms of the statute itself mandate that, in order for a price differential to be unlawful, it must tend to injure, destroy, or prevent competition. 15 U.S.C.S.§ 13(a).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Inferences

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

HN8[] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

A sustained and substantial price discrimination raises an inference, but it manifestly does not create an irrebuttable presumption of competitive injury. Specific, substantial evidence of absence of competitive injury is, in the court's view, sufficient to rebut what is, after all, only an inference.

Counsel: Victor E. Grimm, with whom John T. Loughlin, R. Clifford Potter, Scott M. Mendel and Donald Mitchell were on the brief for Petitioner.

Arnold C. Celnicker, Attorney, Federal Trade Commission, with whom Ernest J. Isenstadt, Assistant General Counsel, Jerold D. Cummins, Deputy Assistant General Counsel and Chris M. Couillou, Attorney, Federal Trade Commission were on the brief, for Respondent.

R. Bruce Rich was on the brief for Amicus Curiae, National Association of Service Merchandising, urging reversal of the Federal Trade Commission decision on functional discounts.

Judges: Mikva, Starr and Williams, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: STARR

Opinion

[*1128] *R, Circuit Judge:

This case comes before us on petition for review of a decision of the Federal Trade Commission holding Boise Cascade Corporation in violation of section 2(f) of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13(f) (1982). The Commission determined that Boise's receipt of price discriminations, in the form of discounts on office products [2] it purchased for resale to consumers, tended to cause competitive injury to dealers in the office products industry with whom Boise competes. In so concluding, the Commission relied upon the "inference" of competitive injury, articulated by the Supreme Court in FTC v. Morton Salt, 334 U.S. 37, 92 L. Ed. 1196, 68 S. Ct. 822 (1948), that arises when a substantial price discrimination exists over time. For the reasons to [*1129] be set forth, we grant the petition for review.

I

A

Before examining the facts in this case, we first pause briefly to describe the pertinent statutory framework. Section 2(f) of the Robinson-Patman Act HN1[] makes it unlawful for any person "knowingly to induce or receive a discrimination in price which is prohibited [under the Robinson-Patman Act]." [1] 15 U.S.C. § 13(f). Since the Act directly proscribes only a seller's activities, the liability of a buyer under section 2(f) depends on whether the seller discriminated in the buyer's favor in violation of section 2(a) of the Act. See, e.g., [3] Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. v. FTC, 440 U.S. 69, 76-77, 59 L. Ed. 2d 153, 99 S. Ct. 925 (1979); Automatic Canteen Co. v. FTC, 346 U.S. 61, 70-71, 97 L. Ed. 1454, 73 S. Ct. 1017 (1953). Section 2(a) HN2[] prohibits price discrimination between different purchasers "where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them." [2] Id. § 13(a).

[4] HN5[] To establish a prima facie case under section 2(f), the Commission must establish two things: first, that the buyer received a lower price than its competitors, and second, that the price discrimination caused, or reasonably might cause, competitive injury.

The statute also specifies two defenses to a seller's (and therefore to a buyer's derivative) liability. No violation exists where the discount reflects the lower cost to the seller of selling to the favored customer (the "cost-justification" defense), nor where the seller granted the discount in good faith to meet a competing seller's price (the

---

[1] Section 2(f) provides:

> HN3[] It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, knowingly to induce or receive a discrimination in price which is prohibited by this section.

15 U.S.C. § 13(f).

[2] Section 2(a) HN4[] provides in pertinent part:

> It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality, where either or any of the purchases involved in such discrimination are in commerce, where such commodities are sold for use, consumption, or resale within the United States or any Territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, and where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them[.]

15 U.S.C. § 13(a).

"meeting competition" defense). [3] Id. § 13(a)-(b); see also Automatic Canteen, 346 U.S. 61, 97 L. Ed. 1454, 73 S. Ct. 1017 (interpreting "cost-justification" defense); FTC v. Sun Oil Co., 371 U.S. 505, 9 L. Ed. 2d 466, 83 S. Ct. 358 [*1130] (1963) (interpreting "meeting competition" defense). In addition to these statutory defenses, the Commission recognizes a defense, or more precisely, finds an absence of competitive injury, where the discounts are generally and practically available to competitors of the favored customer [5] (the "practical availability" defense). See, e.g., FLM Collision Parts, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 543 F.2d 1019, 1025-26 (2d Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1097, 51 L. Ed. 2d 545, 97 S. Ct. 1116 (1977).

[6] B

On April 23, 1980, the Commission issued a complaint, over vigorous dissent, charging that Boise, as a "dual distributor" (both wholesaler and retailer) of office products, had violated section 2(f) of the Robinson-Patman Act. The complaint alleged that Boise's receipt of wholesale discounts from manufacturers on products that it then resold in a retail capacity to consumers constituted price discrimination for purposes of section 2(a). (No charge as to wholesale discounts for products that Boise thereafter sold in a wholesale capacity was pursued). The complaint alleged that Boise received these discounts knowingly and that the effect of Boise's receipt of such favorable pricing (and the resulting differential in prices) "has been or may be substantially to lessen, injure, destroy, or prevent competition" with dealers that were ineligible for the wholesale discounts. See Complaint, Boise Cascade Corp., FTC No. 9133 (Apr. 23, 1980), Joint Appendix ("J.A.") at 3-4.

In issuing the complaint, the Commission directed the Administrative Law Judge to receive evidence and to make findings of fact sufficient for disposition of the case under the competing standards [7] of two FTC cases, namely Mueller Co., 60 F.T.C. 120 (1962), aff'd, 323 F.2d 44 (7th Cir. 1963), cert. denied, 377 U.S. 923, 12 L. Ed. 2d 215, 84 S. Ct. 1219 (1964), and an earlier FTC case that Mueller had overruled, Doubleday & Co., 52 F.T.C. 169 (1955). Doubleday, in brief, had articulated an additional defense under section 2(f) when the amount of the price disparity was reasonably related to the buyer's cost (as distinguished from the seller's cost savings) of providing additional marketing services. As we shall presently see in fuller detail, Mueller rejected entirely Doubleday's rationale, but both cases nonetheless seemed to live on within FTC chambers as competing strains of Robinson-Patman thought.

II

At the outset of our examination of the office products industry, it is appropriate to sound a note of caution as the applicable law meets the rich web of facts. The voluminous record of this case eloquently attests to the fact that the manufacture and sale of office products have given rise to a complex, dynamic industry with a variety of players performing discrete but interrelated [8] roles. Resolving the controversy at hand requires applying to this complex

---

[3] Section 2(a) provides with regard to the cost justification defense:

> Nothing herein contained shall prevent differentials which make only due allowance for differences in the cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such commodities are to such purchasers sold or delivered[.]

15 U.S.C. § 13(a).

Section 2 (b) contains the meeting competition defense:

> HN6[] Upon proof being made, at any hearing on a complaint under this section, that there has been discrimination in price or services or facilities furnished, the burden of rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing justification shall be upon the person charged with a violation of this section, and unless justification shall be affirmatively shown, the Commission is authorized to issue an order terminating the discrimination: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing that his lower price or the furnishing of services or facilities to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or the services or facilities furnished by a competitor.

15 U.S.C. § 13(b).

business environment a set of legal ground rules which are in a state of considerable uncertainty. We are therefore well advised to follow the lead of courts which, confronted with cases arising under Robinson-Patman, have found it necessary to map out in some detail the competitive terrain upon which the players do battle. See, e.g., FLM Collision Parts, 543 F.2d 1019; see also Edward J. Sweeney & Sons, Inc. v. Texaco, 637 F.2d 105 (3d Cir. 1980), cert. denied 451 U.S. 911, 68 L. Ed. 2d 300, 101 S. Ct. 1981 (1981). We hasten to observe that this fact-intensive approach is dictated by the statute itself, which as we indicated at the outset calls for an inquiry into whether the effect of a price discrimination has been or "may be substantially to lessen . . . injure, destroy or prevent competition." 15 U.S.C. § 13(a).

A

The office products industry involves the manufacture, distribution, and sale of stationery, office supplies and office furniture. [4] ALJ Finding 6, J.A. at 46. A wide [*1131] range of items falls within [9] the broad compass of "office products," including, to name just a few, business forms, appointment books, portfolios, address books, file cabinets, desk stands, ring binder notebooks, work sheet pads, and paper punches. See generally id. 103-06, 157-59, 202-20, 252, 287-90, 330-40; J.A. at 66, 76, 83-85, 89-90, 95, 102-04.

The sale of office products has traditionally occurred at three levels: manufacture, wholesale, and retail.

Manufacturers. Manufacturers in this industry sell their goods to wholesalers, dealers, and, on occasion, directly to end-users. Id. 7, J.A. at 46. Although the record provides no precise numbers, compare id., J.A. at 46 with id. 65, J.A. at 59, office products are apparently produced by at least 1,000 manufacturers in the United States. Id. 7, [10] J.A. at 46. These manufacturers produce and market a bewildering array of products. For instance, Shaeffer Eaton, a division of Textron Inc., one of the six manufacturers that the Commission selected in its effort to demonstrate that Boise had violated section 2(f), produces writing instruments, social stationery, record books, typewriter paper, and other sundry items. Transcript at 1059. These products are, of course, manufactured in a wide variety of colors and sizes, creating hundreds of separate Shaeffer Eaton items. This proliferation of products and product lines is apparently not at all unusual in the industry.

Wholesalers. Wholesalers are defined as firms or individuals that buy goods for resale to dealers. Id. 23, J.A. at 50. There are approximately 100 wholesalers in the industry. Most are small, privately-owned businesses. Id. 27, J.A. at 51; Transcript at 6587-88. Sales at the wholesale level are dominated by five nationwide companies (the largest of which is Boise). These "Big Five" firms account for about 60 % of the total volume of wholesale sales. ALJ Findings 26, 28, J.A. at 50-51. Boise, as we shall presently see, fits within the category of "dual distributors, [11] " that is to say an integrated wholesaler that carries on retail as well as wholesale functions.

Dealers. Dealers, by definition, purchase office products from manufacturers or wholesalers (or both) for resale to consumers. Id. 43, J.A. at 54. Within the broad genus of dealers (also referred to as "retailers"), one finds a number of species. Take, for example, the "contract stationer," a title generally used to denote large dealers (but sometimes employed to refer to any dealer that has on-going contracts with industrial customers). Id. 44, J.A. at 54. There is also (1) the "rack jobber," a specialized breed that maintains the stock of one line of products on a lease-type basis with retail stores; (2) the more familiar "mass marketer," which is a food or variety chain store, such as K-Mart or Walmart; (3) the "mail order house," which advertises and sells to consumers through the mail; and (4) the "converter," which buys component parts, assembles them, and markets them under the manufacturer's or its own label. See, e.g., Transcript at 1209, 1292-95. In addition, formal and informal dealer "buying groups" -- coalitions of dealers formed in order to garner advantageous [12] discounts -- exist in most areas of the country. ALJ Finding 455, J.A. at 129. There are approximately 8,000 dealers in the industry. Id. 47, J.A. at 55.

Dual Distributors. In addition to these three major categories of participants, there is another player on the office products field, as we alluded to above. The "dual distributor" purchases products for resale to both dealers and end-users. Id. 5, J.A. at 46. Although the record does not specify how many wholesalers engage in dual distribution, Boise contends that most do. Boise's Brief at 5; Transcript at 5090. Of the "Big Five" wholesalers, however, only Boise (and possibly one other) is a dual distributor. Commission's Brief at 5. Due to the understandable reluctance of dealers to buy from their competitors, dealers rarely move into the class of dual distributors. See Transcript at 3597; see also ALJ Findings 63, JA. at 58.

---

[4] Although "office products" may be defined also to include office equipment and office machines, the ALJ expressly excluded those items from consideration of the industry in this case. ALJ Finding 6, J.A. at 46.

[*1132] B

In the office products industry, price is typically expressed in the form of a "manufacturer's suggested list price," less a discount, if any. To illustrate by way of a simple example, suppose the manufacturer's suggested list price for a product is $ 1.00. If [13] the manufacturer offers a buyer a 50 % discount, the list price is reduced by 50 % and the product is thus sold to that buyer for 50 cents. If the manufacturer offers a 50-20 % discount, the list price is reduced first by 50 %. A 20 % discount is then applied to that amount (50 cents), thus leaving 40 cents as the net price to the buyer. Id. 8, J.A. at 46.

Manufacturers' discounts take many forms. [5] Perhaps best-known are quantity and volume discounts. To state the obvious, quantity discounts are lower per unit prices charged for large orders of a product or group of products, as opposed to smaller orders. Id. 9-10, J.A. at 47. Volume discounts, on the other hand, are tied to the aggregate annual amount purchased from the manufacturer by a particular buyer. Id. 10, J.A. at 47. In addition, promotional discounts, which range from additional year-end discounts to extension of payment deadlines, are prevalent in the industry. Id. 20-22, J.A. at 49-50.

[14] To a more limited extent, manufacturers also offer bid discounts. These may arise when large end-users -- typically government entities -- that need substantial quantities of office products solicit bids from marketing intermediaries (wholesalers and retailers) and seek prices different from those normally offered to end-users. Id. 15-19, J.A. at 49. Manufacturers offer the same "bid" discounts to all distributors submitting bids to these end-users, regardless of their identity as wholesalers or dealers.

Most significant for purposes of this case, however, are functional and trade discounts. A trade discount is one given to purchasers on the basis of the level of trade at which they operate. The discount depends solely on to whom the purchaser resells; it is entirely independent of marketing functions performed by the purchaser. Id. 517, J.A. at 141. A functional discount, in contrast, is offered by a manufacturer to a purchaser for assuming and performing a function that would otherwise be performed by the manufacturer. Id. 518, J.A. at 141. The pure functional discount operates independently of the purchaser's level of trade. In other words, any purchaser that performs [15] the required functions would be eligible for the discount regardless of whether it is nominally a wholesaler or retailer.

At issue in this case is the validity of a hybrid discount which partakes of both a trade and functional discount. This discount, which for purposes of clarity and consistency we will call a "wholesale discount," has existed, without change, for many years in the office products industry. Indeed, the wholesale discount has been extended by most manufacturers of office supplies since well before Boise entered the industry. [6] Id. 489, J.A. at 136. Its purpose is to induce wholesalers to undertake distribution and marketing functions on behalf of manufacturers. Id. 447, 460, J.A. at 127, 130. Manufacturers therefore extend the discount to any company, regardless of size, that meets the objective criteria contained in their respective definitions of "wholesaler. "

---

[5] The breadth and variety of discounts led one witness to observe that "pricing in this industry is a jungle. Any given person in any given city on any given day could buy equal to, better than, or worse than someone else." Commission's Exhibit 672-Z-94, 95.

[6] Boise's expert witness, Dr. Kenneth Elzinga, a professor of economics at the University of Virginia, opined that these discounts are not prevalent in the office products industry. The ALJ, however, found Dr. Elzinga's testimony outweighed by that of knowledgeable industry members who estimated that 50 % to 70 % of manufacturers offer such discounts. Id. 11-13, J.A. at 47-48.

[16] In defining "wholesaler," all manufacturers in this industry require that the candidate resell products to dealers. Significantly, however, manufacturers do not require that the candidate resell exclusively to dealers (or other non-end-users). Nor do [*1133] manufacturers limit the availability of the discount to those goods that are resold to dealers. Instead, manufacturers typically consider membership in the Wholesale Stationers Association (which, as its name suggests, is a trade association for wholesalers of office products) determinative of eligibility to receive the wholesale discount. Transcript at 1219, 1280-82, 1691-92, 2334. Under the Association's guidelines, any company that resells at least 20 % of its office products to dealers qualifies as a wholesaler. Commission's Exhibit 2002D. As a result of this generous definition, most "dual distributors" clear the first definitional hurdle for wholesale discount eligibility, whereas those dealers which sell exclusively to end-users naturally do not. ALJ Findings 449, 454, J.A. at 128, 129.

Beyond the universal requirement that a buyer resell (at least 20 %) to dealers, manufacturers differ in their respective criteria [17] for granting wholesale discounts. To illustrate with the Commission's six selected manufacturers in this case, both Rediform Office Products, a division of Moore Business Forms, Inc., and Sheaffer Eaton define a wholesaler as a purchaser which not only sells to dealers but also warehouses and promotes their products, publishes a catalog, and employs and trains salespeople who call on dealers. Id. at 447, 450, J.A. at 127, 128. Kardex Systems, Inc. defines a wholesaler as a purchaser which maintains inventory on a variety of product lines for resale to dealers, publishes a price list, may (but apparently does not have to) publish a catalog, and employs outside salespeople. Id. 449, J.A. at 128. In contrast, the sole criterion imposed by both Boorum & Pease Company and Master Products Manufacturing Co. is that the purchaser resell to dealers and contract stationers. Id. at 451, 453, J.A. at 128, 129. Finally, Bates Manufacturing Company requires that the purchaser resell to dealers, carry an inventory of Bates' products, and publish a catalog. Id. 452, J.A. at 128-129.

Thus, wholesale discounts are trade discounts insofar as they are awarded on the basis of the identity [18] of those to whom the marketing intermediary resells. To the extent that these manufacturers require the recipient to perform functions (such as publication of a catalog and warehousing) in order to qualify for the discount, the wholesale discount partakes of a functional discount. See generally Transcript at 6838-71.

III

With this overview of the office products industry and its pricing structure in mind, we turn to the specifics of the case before us.

A

Boise is an integrated forest products company. It entered the office products industry in 1964 as a dual distributor through the acquisition of Associated Stationers Company. ALJ Finding 3, J.A. at 45. From this beginning, Boise's Office Products Division quickly grew, to the point where today its combined wholesale and retail sales make it the largest distributor of office products in the United States. Id. 5, 52, J.A. at 46, 56. From 1976 to 1980, Boise's sales in its wholesale capacity amounted to slightly over half its total sales. Id. 54-58, J.A. at 56-57. Excluding the Division's retail sales, Boise is one of the two largest wholesalers in the United States. Id. 53, J.A. at 56. Notwithstanding [19] its considerable size, Boise's purchases typically account for less than 5 % of any single manufacturer's total sales. See Transcript at 6087.

Headquartered in Itasca, Illinois, Boise's Office Products Division operates through distribution centers located in 27 cities. ALJ Finding 2, J.A. at 45. Each distribution center is responsible for marketing, inventory management, purchasing, warehousing, sales, and customer service. Id. 4, J.A. at 46. Accordingly, the purchasing department at each of the 27 locations places its orders directly with manufacturers, which in turn ship the goods directly to and bill the individual distribution center. Id. 67, 463, J.A. at 59, 131. Likewise, each distribution center employs its own sales force to call on Boise's dealer and commercial [*1134] (end-user) accounts. [7] Id. 76, J.A. at 60a.

---

[7] Boise's distribution centers typically focus their sales efforts either on dealers or on consumers. Thirteen of the 27 distribution centers, for example, do not solicit end-user accounts. Id. 59, J.A. at 57-58. Of the eight centers that the Commission selected

[20] Although in its capacity as a dealer Boise performs essentially the same marketing functions for manufacturers as do other dealers, Boise is, by virtue of being a dual distributor, able to obtain wholesale discounts unavailable to the 23 dealers selected by the Commission for review in this case. Id. 95, J.A. at 64. These discounts are received on goods of like grade and quality that Boise sells in competition with those dealers. Id. 95-100, J.A. at 64-66. As we previously indicated, see supra text at 8-9, all six manufacturers studied in this case extend to companies (including Boise) that qualify as wholesalers, wholesale discounts that represent reductions in list prices beyond those offered to dealers. [8] [21] As a result of the difference between dealer and wholesaler discounts, the 23 selected dealers pay between 5 % and 33 % more for their purchases from manufacturers than does Boise. [9]

[22] At the same time, Boise played no role in the adoption or formulation of the manufacturers' standards for offering wholesale discounts. Transcript at 1660-61, 2004, 2345. And, although the Commission points to evidence of Boise's successful negotiation for the discounts, Commission's Brief at 20 n.19, the Commission candidly [*1135] admits that the ALJ did not find that Boise had in any way coerced or pressured the manufacturers into extending it the wholesale discounts. Id. at 16-17.

B

The office products industry is characterized by intense competition. Id. 408, J.A. at 117. The industry, moreover, has flourished during the period in question. From 1976 to 1982, there was a steady rise in the number of dealers in the industry, both nationwide and in the individual States where the FTC's selected dealers are located. Id. 47, J.A.

---

for study in this case, seven made over 80 % of their sales to consumers (the eighth center made less than half of its sales to consumers). Id. 60-61, J.A. at 58. As might be expected, the proportion of its sales force devoted to dealer and end-user sales at each of the eight distribution centers roughly mirrors the percentage of dealer and consumer sales at the respective center. Id. at 77-82, J.A. at 60a.

In part because Boise's distribution centers are, for all practical purposes, autonomous, the marketing functions that Boise performs for manufacturers in its capacity as a dealer are similar to those performed by other dealers in the industry. Id. 522, J.A. at 142. For instance, like most dealers, the Boise distribution centers with substantial commercial sales tend to stock only those products that are frequently purchased. Id. 70, J.A. at 60. In addition, based on his review of the 23 selected dealers, the ALJ found that the dealers, like Boise, incur storage and resale expenses that reduce manufacturers' inventory costs, distribute catalogs that they produce or purchase from wholesalers, and employ outside salespeople to make regular calls on accounts. Id. 503-14, J.A. at 139-40. While noting these similarities, the ALJ did not expressly find that any of the individual dealers provide the quality and quantity of services that Boise does.

[8] Specifically, Rediform extends dealers a 50 % discount and wholesalers a 50-20 % discount. ALJ Findings 116-17, J.A. at 67-68. Sheaffer Eaton gives dealers a 50 % discount, contract stationers a 50-10 % discount, and wholesalers a 50-20 % discount. Id. 165-70, J.A. at 77. On its "visible equipment" line, Kardex grants dealers a 40 % discount, "key" dealers (those with annual purchases of $ 5,000) a 50 % discount, and wholesalers a 50-10 % discount. Id. 224-26, J.A. at 85. On its "insulated files" line, Kardex extends dealers a 40-5 % discount, "key" dealers (those with annual purchases of $ 15,000) a 50 % discount, and wholesalers a 50-10 % discount. Id. 227-30, J.A. at 85-86. Boorum & Pease gives dealers a 50 % discount, contract stationers a 50-10 % discount, and wholesalers a 50-10-5 % discount. Id. 261-64, J.A. at 91. Bates extends discounts to dealers between 40 % and 50 % (based on quantity purchased) on most of its products, and contract stationers and wholesalers a 50-10 % discount on those items. Id. 293-300, J.A. at 96-97. Finally, Master Products gives dealers product- and quantity-specific discounts ranging from 40 % to 60 %, and wholesalers product-specific discounts ranging from 50 % to 60 %. Id. 343-345, J.A. at 104-05.

[9] Although Boise played no part in instituting this pricing system, the ALJ concluded that Boise knew or should have known that the price disparity existed. Id. 368-69, 383, J.A. at 109, 112. Among other evidence of such knowledge were schedules in Boise's files documenting the size of dealer discounts and the reporting of dealer discounts in Boise's Buyer's Guide. Id. 148-49, 151, 195, 241, 243, 280-82, 326, 363-64, J.A. at 75, 82, 88, 94, 102, 108. In addition Boise's salespeople and those of the selected dealers call on many of the same accounts, and Boise acquired dealers that had previously purchased at the less favorable dealer discounts. Moreover, Boise received complaints from disfavored dealers, id., 36, J.A. at 52-53, and knowledge of the range of discounts is common within the industry. Id. 194, 276-78, J.A. at 82, 93-94. And, of course, Boise knew that the manufacturers classify it as a wholesaler for purposes of wholesale discounts even as to goods that Boise resells to end-users. Id. 367, J.A. at 109. Based on these findings, the Commission determined that Boise had the requisite knowledge that its receipt of the discounts was not cost-justified.

at 55. Boise's economic expert, Dr. Kenneth Elzinga, see supra note 6, interpreted this upward trend as indicating an absence of anti-competitive forces operating in the market. Transcript at 6103-6114.

More relevantly for Robinson-Patman purposes, an analysis of the financial condition of 18 of the selected dealers revealed [23] that all 18 had enjoyed an increase in sales during the period in question. Phoenix-based Wist Supply & Equipment Co., for instance, increased total sales from $ 1.6 million in 1977 to $ 4 million in 1980. Boise's Exhibits 300, 804. Yorkship Business Supply of Cherry Hill, New Jersey similarly increased sales from $ 1.3 million in 1977 to $ 3.5 million in 1980. Id. Pomerantz & Company in Philadelphia increased sales from $ 14.6 million in 1977 to $ 36.3 million in 1980. Id. Overall, the average annual growth and increase in gross profits of the dealers from 1977 to 1980 was in excess of 22 %. Id. 431, J.A. at 121-22. What is more, this substantial growth occurred during a period of recession in the economy. ALJ Finding 431-32, J.A. at 121-23.

Along with their growth, the selected dealers' credit ratings with Dun & Bradstreet were, on the whole, quite favorable. Id. 432, J.A. at 122-23. And those companies that experienced a change in credit rating from 1977 to 1980 generally improved, again in the teeth of a recessionary economy. Id., J.A. at 122-23.

Data compiled by the National Office Products Association, the major industry trade association, revealed [24] that in each year from 1967 to 1980, dealers' median net profit before taxes as a percent of sales ranged from 3.0 % to 3.9 % (except in 1974, when the median net profit was a heftier 4.3 %). Id. 423-29, J.A. at 120-21. According to Mr. Ronald Rowe, the Commission's accounting expert, the median net profit for the selected dealers ranged from 2.3 % to 3.5 % for the years 1976 to 1981. Id. 430, J.A. at 121. From 1976 to 1979, Boise's combined wholesale and retail median net profit before taxes as a percent of sales ranged from 3.1 % to 5.6 %. Id. 87, J.A. at 62. This return on sales, as Boise's 1979-83 Business Plan explained, was comparable to the leading industrial stationers in the industry. Id., J.A. at 62.

C

In addition to this undisputed evidence of competitive health of the selected dealers and in the industry as a whole, there is another aspect of this case that is relevant to resolution of this controversy and unusual in the context of a Robinson-Patman proceeding -- a virtually complete absence of sales lost to Boise by the selected dealers traceable to the price differential caused by wholesale discounts to Boise. Although the Commission aggregated [25] 23 dealers, each of which carries hundreds, and in some cases thousands, of accounts, the record shows only 162 specific accounts identified by the dealers as lost to Boise. Commission's Brief at 33. This stability of dealer accounts is of especial note in an industry where switching of accounts is common. Id. 422, J.A. at 120. Significantly, none of the selected dealers that lost accounts in whole or in part to Boise was able to conclude that the losses were due to the fact that Boise received a greater discount from the six manufacturers. Id. 407, J.A. at 117.

To be more specific, the Commission's selected dealers testified that they lost accounts to Boise, in whole or in part, due to Boise's lower prices, better service, or a combination of these factors. Id. 384, J.A. at 112-13. For example, Victoria Station, a restaurant chain headquartered near San [*1136] Francisco, switched from one dealer, Gilbert-Clarke, to Boise because of the latter's pricing and services. Id. 390, J.A. at 114. The City of Seattle switched the majority of its business from the incumbent dealer to Boise because of Boise's sophisticated invoicing system, depth of inventory, high fill [26] rates, and usage reports. Id. 393, J.A. at 114. G. E. Stimpson, another dealer, lost the account of one valued customer to Boise's lower prices. Id. 396, J.A. at 115. New England Telephone switched from Union Office Supply to Boise because the latter had a computerized backup system that Union did not possess at the time. Id. 398, J.A. at 115. See also id. 385-406, J.A. at 113-17.

In addition to the small number of lost accounts, the record shows many instances where accounts shifted not because of price or service, but because sales representatives shifted. See, e.g., Transcript at 3855-56, 3276-78, 2498-99, 2527, 2544-45, 2953, 2041, 2071, 3467, 2444-45, 3170-74, 3188, 3402-03. The ALJ quoted Dr. Elzinga's testimony in this respect:

> If you were trying to develop a theory of account shifting in the office products industry, probably the most robust theory you could develop is that accounts shift when salespeople shift. Over and again, as I am reading testimony about account shifting, I find that the real reason the account shifted is because a salesperson left. That is, Boise hires a salesperson away from Yorkship, and they get some accounts from Yorkship. [27] Although in that case, if you read on, you find later Yorkship gained some of those back.
> . . . . It is so common in this industry I think they have a term for it. It is called following; the salespeople have a following. The thing that struck me is the amount of evidence that seemed unambiguous of an account shifting that was explicable not by lower prices, not by better service, but by the simple pristine fact that the salesperson shifted.

ALJ Finding 434, J.A. at 123a-124 (quoting Transcript at 6118-19) (footnote omitted).

Further diluting the Commission's attempted showing of diverted sales, Boise introduced considerable evidence of sales that it had lost to the selected dealers. The ALJ, moreover, made specific findings to this effect. For instance, Boise's Philadelphia distribution center lost four large accounts in 1982 to dealers that offered lower prices. Id. 418, J.A. at 119. Likewise, Boise's Boston distribution center lost several accounts to Monroe, one of the selected dealers, because Monroe offered significantly lower prices. Id. 420, J.A. at 120. Seven accounts switched from Boise's Phoenix distribution center to Wist due to Wist's lower prices. [28] Id. 421, J.A. at 120.

In addition to evidence of accounts actually lost, Boise identified many instances where lower prices were offered by the selected dealers and their competitors. Id. 409, J.A. at 117. One of Boise's Washington, D.C. salespersons, for example, testified that a dealer's price list obtained from one of Boise's customers revealed that the dealer was offering prices on average 30 % lower than those offered by Boise. Id. 412, J.A. at 118. In the same vein, a sales representative from Boise's Salt Lake City distribution center testified that although he had submitted pricing to two school districts which was only 4 % to 5 % over Boise's costs, Boise received only 10 % to 20 % of the districts' business. Id. 414, J.A. at 119. See also id. 410-421, J.A. at 118-120.

The ALJ quoted Boise's expert's analysis and conclusions in this regard:

> The evidence that I have studied and reflected on with regard to lost accounts persuades me that you simply cannot look at that evidence and conclude that injury to competition has occurred or is occurring here.
>
> In fact the thing that really strikes me -- and here again I speak as an economist -- is you [29] look at these [selected] dealers who . . . have literally hundreds and hundreds and in some cases thousands of accounts, and when they are asked to give illustrations and to document the accounts they have lost to Boise, they are able to come up with a handful at [*1137] best. I was really struck at the tiny number, in fact.
> In fact, it was in a way even troubling to me as an economist that there were not more accounts being diverted around just through normal market processes. I would have expected much more just through almost random competitive shocks.
> . . . The striking thing to me is how few accounts were lost, and then when you start to get into the record as to the precise facts about those purportedly lost accounts, I find over and again that it is not clear to me they were lost to Boise, much less were they lost to Boise because Boise buys products at lower prices from manufacturers.

Id. 433, J.A. at 123-23a (quoting Transcript at 6119-22).

IV

Notwithstanding his findings (1) that the selected dealers were competitively healthy and (2) that "accounts lost to Boise were counter-balanced by accounts which Boise lost to the dealers," the ALJ [30] concluded that that evidence went only to the price discrimination's lack of effect on market structure. J.A. at 153-54. By virtue of that characterization, the ALJ determined that market-structure evidence was by its nature inadequate to rebut the inference of competitive injury raised by the sustained and substantial price discrimination that Boise received. J.A. at 154-55; see FTC v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U.S. at 46-47. The ALJ stated his position in the following way: "It is inconceivable that the substantial and sustained price differences documented in this record can have had no substantial effect on the ability of the dealers to compete with Boise." J.A. at 155.

Having determined that a prima facie violation of section 2(f) existed, the ALJ went on to conclude that the discounts were not practically available to the selected dealers, J.A. at 155-57, and that Boise knew, or should have known, that the discriminations in price were neither cost-justified nor given in good faith to meet competition, J.A. at 161-70. In addition, the ALJ recommended that the Commission adhere to its decision in Mueller. J.A. at 159-61. On the possibility that the Commission [31] would reembrace the Doubleday rule, the ALJ determined that, because Boise did not perform services not performed by the selected dealers, Boise did not qualify for that "defense." J.A. at 161.

The Commission heard oral argument on the case in June 1984, and in February 1986 issued its order and opinion adopting and affirming the ALJ's findings of fact and conclusions of law. Boise Cascade Corp., FTC No. 9133 (Feb. 11, 1986), J.A. at 174 [hereinafter Commission Decision]. In its opinion, the Commission expressly relied on Morton Salt's inference that substantial price discrimination between competing purchasers over time causes, or tends to cause, competitive injury. Id. at 187. In doing so, the Commission expressly recognized that the inference "'may be overcome by evidence breaking the causal connection between a price differential and lost sales or profits.'" Id. (quoting Falls City Industries, Inc. v. Vanco Beverage, Inc., 460 U.S. 428, 435, 75 L. Ed. 2d 174, 103 S. Ct. 1282 (1983)). Specifically, the Commission suggested that the Morton Salt inference could be overcome by a showing that market conditions unrelated to the price [32] discrimination explained the lost accounts or shifted sales or the effects on the disfavored competitors (presumably lost profits or market share). Commission Decision, J.A. at 191.

The Commission nonetheless determined that Boise's showing of dealer-specific and industry-wide competitive health, in conjunction with the relative absence of lost sales, "fails to rebut the 'self-evident' inference of causation." Id. at 191-92. Indeed, with virtually no elaboration, the Commission concluded that Boise's elaborate evidentiary showing did "not address the causal connection at all." Id. at 191. The FTC emphasized that under Robinson-Patman actual injury to competition need not be shown, but only "'a reasonable possibility that a price difference may harm competition.'" Id. at 192 (quoting Falls City, 460 U.S. at 434-35).

[*1138] Having found the two essential elements to a prima facie case (price discrimination and resulting competitive injury), the Commission concluded that Boise did not satisfy any of the defenses, statutory or Commission-fashioned, to Robinson-Patman liability. Id. at 204-18. In addition, for reasons that we will detail [33] shortly, the Commission decided that Doubleday should not be revitalized and, accordingly, reaffirmed the anti-Doubleday holding of Mueller. Id. at 193-204. [10]

V

The Commission's decision confronts us with a difficult issue arising under a statute that does not represent the highwater mark of skillful draftsmanship. As Justice Frankfurter well put [34] it in speaking for the Court a generation ago in Automatic Canteen Co. v. FTC, 346 U.S. at 65, "precision of expression is not an outstanding characteristic of the Robinson-Patman Act." More recently, Justice Powell, joined by Justices Brennan, Marshall and Blackmun, decried judicial interpretations and applications that "increase[] the uncertainty inherent in the generalities of the Robinson-Patman Act." J. Truett Payne Co. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 451 U.S. 557, 570, 68 L. Ed. 2d 442, 101 S. Ct. 1923 (1981) (dissenting opinion).

The need for clarity, obviously a desideratum for any body of law, has been evidenced by judicial recognition that Robinson-Patman is not to be viewed as an act of Congressional schizophrenia, an anti-competitive island situated in an otherwise turbulent sea of pro-competitive efficiency and maximization of consumer welfare, the hallmarks of the Nation's antitrust laws. The Supreme Court warned early on of the dangers of doctrinaire interpretations of [10] Concluding that Boise's receipt of wholesale discounts on goods it resold to end-users violated section 2(f), the Commission fashioned the following order: that Boise "cease and desist from directly or indirectly inducing, receiving or accepting from any seller a net price that Boise Cascade knows or has reason to know is below the net price at which office products of like grade and quality are being offered or sold by such seller to other purchasers with whom Boise Cascade is competing in the resale or distribution of said office products to end-users." Final Order, Boise Cascade Corp., FTC No. 9133, at 2 (Feb. 11, 1986), J.A. 220, 221.

---

Robinson-Patman that could lead to "conflict with the purposes of other antitrust legislation." Automatic Canteen, 346 U.S. at 63. That warning has been [35] repeated in more recent times. See also United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 438 U.S. 422, 450-51, 57 L. Ed. 2d 854, 98 S. Ct. 2864 (1978); Great A & P Tea Co., 440 U.S. at 80.

The imprecision infecting the statutory language has frequently led courts construing the measure to repair to the backdrop against which the Robinson-Patman amendments were crafted in 1937. For it is in its genesis that the purposes animating Congress in passing this ambiguous statute can best be discerned and then borne carefully in mind in contemporary judicial applications.

The Supreme Court has summarized the statute's background in the following way:

> The Robinson-Patman Act was passed in response to the problem perceived in the increased market power and coercive practices of chainstores and other big buyers that threatened the existence of small independent retailers.

Great A & P Tea Co., 440 U.S. at 75-76. Robinson-Patman was thus aimed at protecting small retail businesses against favoritism toward their larger competitors, a threat seen as eventuating from an exception carved out by the original Clayton Act, passed in [36] 1914, permitting discriminations in price based on "differences in the grade, quality or quantity of the commodity sold." Clayton Act, ch. 323, § 2, 38 Stat. 730 (1914), 15 U.S.C. § 13 (1982) (emphasis added). Robinson-Patman, in short, sought to remove the competitive advantage conferred solely by virtue of the size of the buyer's appetite. "The legislative history of the Robinson-Patman Act makes it abundantly clear that Congress considered it to be an evil that a large buyer could secure a competitive advantage over a small buyer solely because [*1139] of the large buyer's quantity purchasing ability." Morton Salt, 334 U.S. at 43. See also Falls City, 460 U.S. at 436; F. Rowe, Price Discrimination Under the Robinson-Patman Act 3-23 (1962) [hereinafter "Rowe"]. [11]

[37] The Supreme Court addressed early on the operation of Robinson-Patman in the paradigm setting envisioned by Congress -- a quantity discount to large buyers. In Morton Salt, the Court was confronted with a salt manufacturer's discount pricing system under which only the five largest retail grocery chains in the country were able to buy enough salt to qualify for the manufacturer's most lucrative discount. The Court found that competitive injury, a prerequisite to liability under section 2(a) of Robinson-Patman, [12] [38] was "self-evident" simply by virtue of the longstanding and substantial price disparity:

> Here the Commission found what would appear to be obvious, that the competitive opportunities of certain merchants were injured when they had to pay [Morton Salt] substantially more for their goods than their competitors had to pay.

Morton Salt, 334 U.S. at 46-47. [13]

---

[11] This is not to say that Robinson-Patman applies only as to cases involving large buyers. The Supreme Court has held squarely to the contrary. FTC v. Sun Oil Co., 371 U.S. 505, 522, 9 L. Ed. 2d 466, 83 S. Ct. 358 (1963); see also Falls City, 460 U.S. at 436.

[12] "Competitive injury," as used throughout our opinion, refers to the broader definition of injury under the Robinson-Patman Act. As the Supreme Court established early on, "the statute does not require that the discriminations must in fact have harmed competition, but only that there is a reasonable possibility that they 'may' have such an effect." Corn Products Co. v. FTC, 324 U.S. 726, 742, 89 L. Ed. 1320, 65 S. Ct. 961 (1945). See also Falls City, 460 U.S. at 434-35 (Commission "must show . . . a reasonable possibility that a price difference may harm competition.").

In recent years, the Supreme Court has reaffirmed the viability of the Morton Salt inference of competitive injury arising from a substantial price difference existing over time. It has, moreover, declined to cabin the Morton Salt inference to "cases involving 'large buyer preference or seller predation.'" Falls City, 460 U.S. at 436. See also J. Truett Payne Co., 451 U.S. at 561. To the contrary, the Falls City Court upheld application of Morton Salt's rule to a discriminatory pricing system based upon the geographical location of the buyer. (In that case, Indiana distributors of Falls City beer were charged higher prices than Kentucky beer distributors.)

The Morton Salt inference is thus alive and well in the law. The case before us, however, presents the [39] Commission's modern-day invocation of that inference in the setting of a pricing system which is entirely different from quantity and regional discounts. [14] For as we have seen, the Morton Salt inference has been applied in the case at hand to a system of wholesale discounts. (The Commission uses the term "functional discount" generically to describe the wholesale discounts at issue here. We will therefore proceed to use these terms interchangeably. Cf. supra text at 1132.) Acting Chairman Calvani, in writing for the Commission, succinctly described the legislative landscape as to wholesale functional discounts: "The Act does not expressly address functional discounts, and the legislative history is inconclusive." J.A. at 194. Thus, the imprecise statutory language of which the Supreme Court has complained, [*1140] see supra text slip op. at 22-23, beclouds the area of functional discounts as well.

[40] The rather chaotic state of the law as to functional discounts was aptly summarized by then-Professor Calvani who, as fate would have it, was destined in another capacity to author the decision now before us:

> The uncertain status of functional discounting is primarily due to the failure of Congress, the Federal Trade Commission, and the courts to give explicit and independent recognition to the practice and to define with any modicum of specificity its permissible contours. The result of this failure of recognition has been a lack of focus upon the validity of the functional discount which, in turn, has left the law in a state of confusion, causing often legitimate practices to be condemned.

Calvani, Functional Discounts Under the Robinson-Patman Act, 17 Boston C. Indus. & Com. L. Rev. 543, 543-44 (1976).

Eloquent attestation as to the unsettled nature of the law of functional discounts is found in events surrounding the complaint that brought this case to life. In considering whether to issue a complaint, the Commission divided three to two in favor of sending the staff forward, with Commissioner Clanton and now-Dean Pitofsky in dissent. Dean Pitofsky set forth [41] his views in a thorough opinion, which opened with the following warning:

> The Commission today has issued an extremely unwise Robinson-Patman complaint. I would not ordinarily dissent from the issuance of a complaint (and certainly not at such length), but this one has such a profound anticompetitive potential that it ought not to go by without comment.

Complaint, Boise Cascade Corp. (dissenting statement of Comm'r Pitofsky), J.A. at 12.

Further evidencing the divided state of the Trade Commission's house was its order directing the administrative law judge to receive evidence and enter findings sufficient to dispose of the case under two warring doctrines articulated in the corpus of FTC law. As we saw above, see supra text slip op. at 5, the earlier doctrine was the Doubleday rule, first clearly enunciated in Doubleday & Co., 52 F.T.C. 169, involving a publishing company's disparately favorable discounts bestowed upon three large jobber-distributors. To remind the patient reader, the Doubleday rule briefly stated is as follows: no injury to competition is occasioned by a buyer's receipt of a discount

---

[13] The Court in Falls City expressly referred to the forbidden form of discrimination as one continuing "over time." 460 U.S. at 435. A contrary approach would suffer from the danger of rigidly forbidding market adjustments to changing or temporary conditions.

[14] With all respect, this is scarcely a paradigmatic Robinson-Patman Act case, contrary to what our colleague in dissent argues at such length. The Commission recognized at the creation of this long-lived proceeding that it was venturing into relatively new territory, namely into the area of dual distribution. This has been a hard fought venture by the Commission, with powerful and eloquent voices, such as that of now-Dean Pitofsky, railing against what some deem to be a quixotic application of Robinson-Patman. This case is simply not of the lineage of Morton Salt.

from a seller-supplier if that [42] discount simply compensates the buyer for additional useful services it performs for the seller-supplier's benefit.

Doubleday recognized that the world of commerce, like the rest of life, is not simple. As complex distribution systems developed, the lines along the distribution chain became blurred. No longer was there a straightforward, three-tiered structure of manufacturer-wholesaler-retailer. In Doubleday, then-Chairman Howrey commented on this development as follows:

> More complex types of distributors . . . were beginning to dominate our market structure-distributors whose functions ranged from only partial performance of the wholesale function to those who were almost wholly integrated, that is, who were both wholesalers and retailers and often consumers as well.
>
> Under these conditions classification of buyers became unprecise and shifting in meaning. Wholesalers and retailers no longer comprised clear-cut separate links between the producer and the ultimate consumer, each responsible for a clearly defined set of duties. Marketing functions became scrambled, with many permutations and combinations. . . . The number of patterns was legion and diverse.

[43] Id. at 208. This presumably beneficial dynamism in the marketplace was threatened by what Chairman Howrey viewed as "a suspended state of confusion" in the law, which did not recognize that distributive activities traditionally carried out by sellers could often efficiently be shifted to buyers, in return for which the buyers could legitimately secure compensating discounts from the sellers. Id. And thus to bring clarity into this chaotic state of affairs, [*1141] Chairman Howrey posited the following principle:

> In our view, to relate functional discounts solely to the purchaser's method of resale without recognition of his buying function thwarts competition and efficiency in marketing, and inevitably leads to higher prices. . . . Where a businessman performs various wholesale functions, such as providing storage, traveling salesmen and distribution of catalogues, the law should not forbid his supplier from compensating him for such services.

Id. at 209. Chairman Howrey condemned as arbitrary an exclusionary rule that would forbid an integrated wholesaler from proving that it was indeed performing the wholesaling [44] function. The matter, rather, should "be put to proof." Id. The evidentiary burden on the integrated wholesaler was not, the Chairman warned, to be insubstantial:

> The Commission should tolerate no subterfuge. Only to the extent that a buyer actually performs certain functions, assuming all the risks and costs involved, should he qualify for a compensating discount. The amount of the discount . . . should not exceed the cost of that part of the function he actually performs on that part of the goods for which he performs it.

Id.

But as befits an imprecise statute which reflects, in Dean Pitofsky's words, a "tension between the philosophies of the Sherman Act and the Robinson-Patman Act -- a conflict created by Congress and left unresolved on the FTC's doorstep many years ago," Complaint, Boise Cascade Corp., (dissenting statement of Comm'r Pitofsky), J.A. at 12, Chairman Howrey's suggested approach did not find fertile soil even within the offices of his fellow Commissioners. Foreshadowing what was destined to be the second competing approach, the Mueller rule, Commissioner Secrest in writing separately in Doubleday took issue with the Chairman's [45] thinking. Commissioner Secrest advocated the approach adopted by the hearing examiner, who refused to consider evidence by three large book jobbers that the discount extended to them was offset by the costs of assuming wholesale functions which Doubleday would otherwise have to perform. In Commissioner Secrest's view, a discount is improper to the extent it compensates a buyer for services which, albeit helpful to the seller, also redound to the buyer's own benefit. Neither altruism nor servility were at work in the marketplace; the integrated buyer was out for its own welfare, even if its activities did in fact further the seller's commercial purposes. Calling for simplicity in enforcement, Commissioner Secrest laid down a warning if Chairman Howrey's approach were embraced:

> Enforcement of the law would be extremely difficult if not impossible, if, in each 2(a) case, the Commission were required to divide a common service which may benefit both the buyer and the seller. Each case would require an operation as delicate and difficult as the separation of Siamese twins.

52 F.T.C. at 211 (Comm'r Secrest, concurring in result).

This contrary (soon [46] to be called Mueller) principle was thus informed by both instrumentalist and conceptual concerns: the Doubleday rule would be an immense headache to administer, and the rule would justify a discount where the buyer, by providing such services, was improving its own competitive position with other buyers. And this latter reality raised the spectre of Robinson-Patman's core concern for little fish competing with whales (or at least larger fish). Doubleday's rule, in short, "would undoubtedly give the larger buyer a price advantage in the resale of the seller's goods." Id. This same concern was echoed by Commissioner Mead, who likewise took issue with Chairman Howrey's approach:

> Whether or not [the Chairman's view] is good economics, I am not prepared to say. . . . [But] it is not the law as expressed in the Robinson-Patman Act. . . . [It] paves the way for the ultimate annihilation of small retail dealers who are unable, by reason of their inability to perform the same marketing functions as [*1142] their larger dual-functioning competitors to successfully compete with them.

Id. at 211-12 (Comm'r Mead, concurring in result).

[47] The cacophony occasioned by Doubleday was short-lived. For in Mueller Co., 60 F.T.C. 120, the Commission squarely and unanimously rejected Doubleday's treatment of functional discounts. The Doubleday approach, in the Commission's later view, "ignores the fact that the favored buyer can derive substantial benefit to his own business in performing the distributional function paid for by the seller." Id. at 127. In the course of its decision, the Commission overturned the hearing examiner's finding that there was a failure of proof as to competitive injury. The Commission went on to hold in broad terms that a Robinson-Patman Act violation would lie even if the challenged discount (1) had been carefully limited to specific goods that Mueller's favored ("limit") jobbers had actually warehoused and (2) at most merely covered the jobbers' increased costs incurred by virtue of the warehousing services performed on those specified goods:

> These findings mean only that [Mueller] has subsidized in whole or in part the "limit" jobbers' warehousing of certain products. . . . By doing so, [Mueller] has given this class of customers a [48] substantial competitive advantage in the resale of such products. In this connection, the items on which the higher discount is given are . . . the smaller, most commonly used products -- those which are needed most frequently by the ultimate user, often to meet an emergency. That a jobber who has products of this type on hand is in a more favorable position than the jobber who does not is so obvious as to require little comment.

Id. at 128-29.

The Commission did not stop at this conceptually pure juncture, however. It went on to explore at some length the darker side of Mueller's purportedly benign regime of functional discounts. In contrast to Robinson-Patman's aim at securing a "level playing field" for all players, large and small, Mueller had in fact been bestowing the extra discounts on large jobbers with which it had longstanding relationships.

As so frequently happens in antitrust litigation, a documentary "smoking gun" found its way into evidence in Mueller indicating that the discount pricing system was not founded solely on a cold, economically rational decision to reimburse the favored jobbers for distributive functions performed by [49] them. The tell-tale document in that case was a "get lost" letter from Mueller to one of its second-class ("regular") jobbers who sought to move into the more desirable ranks of Mueller's first-class ("limit") jobbers. The regular jobber had had the effrontery to request the higher discount because the ambitious jobber was planning "to stock several items which [the jobber maintained] should qualify [it] as a stocking distributor [or "limit" jobber]." Id. at 129. Mueller would have none of it.

> We cannot see our way clear to change your 15 % discount, for we do not have a 20 % discount. We do have a greater one, however it applies only to those large stocking jobbers who place hundreds of orders with us throughout the year, totaling thousands of dollars.

Id. To leave no lingering doubts in the mind of the aspiring second-class jobber, the powers-that-be at Mueller administered the follow coup de grace:

> These old established jobbers, who have been carrying MUELLER goods in large quantities for a number of years, are entitled to this protection, and until there might be some major change in your State and surrounding states, it will [50] be necessary to continue the same differential that we have been allowing you.

Id. at 130.

Thus, upon analysis, Mueller's two-tiered structure of jobbers smacked of the regime of favoritism that had been condemned by the Supreme Court in Morton Salt. After all was said and done, Mueller was playing favorites based upon such factors as the volume of jobber purchases and whether the jobber was a member of the exclusive club, as it were, of "old established jobbers." [*1143] Mueller's distribution system had succumbed to calcification.

Examination of this darker side of Mueller appears to bring the case closer to the ultimate holding in Doubleday. For while in the latter case the publishing company had won the battle over the principle of law, the victory proved empty as Doubleday lost the war. The Commission concluded that Doubleday, like Mueller and Morton Salt, was just another in a long line of manufacturers who play favorites among distributors with anticompetitive consequences of the sort that Congress intended in Robinson-Patman to condemn. Doubleday had, upon analysis, stacked the distribution deck in favor of a very limited class, [51] "the so-called 'Big Three' jobbers," 52 F.T.C. at 206, who simply "treated the higher discounts as price reductions and not payments or allowances for services rendered." Id. at 209.

So it is that Mueller and Doubleday, the two warring rules spawned almost a generation ago by the Commission, shared a salient characteristic with Morton Salt and, years later, Falls City. In each instance, a manufacturer or supplier's idiosyncratic, non-economically justified pricing regime favored certain identified distributors (big distributors in Morton Salt, Doubleday and Mueller; home-State, or more precisely, non-Indiana distributors in Falls City), with nothing but favoritism -- the evil sought to be remedied through the Robinson-Patman Act -- to explain the disparate treatment.

VI

This case loomed at the Commission as the test of whether Mueller or Doubleday would survive in the present generation. The ALJ, whose thoroughness and care in this proceeding we would be remiss not to acknowledge, was thus presented with the unenviable task of trying two cases -- one under Doubleday's teaching and the other under the [52] starkly different approach enunciated by Mueller. The unorthodoxy of this two-pronged directive from Commission headquarters did not escape the Commissioners' notice. "The majority of the Commission today issues a complaint proceeding on two mutually exclusive, inconsistent theories of violation of the Robinson-Patman Act," was the apt description penned by Commissioner Clanton in dissent. Complaint, Boise Cascade Corp. (dissenting statement of Comm'r Clanton), J.A. at 11; see also id. (dissenting statement of Comm'r Pitofsky), J.A. at 21-22.

At day's end, as we have seen, the Commission (affirming the ALJ) embraced Mueller. And thus the case is now heralded as a battle of the Robinson-Patman titans, of Mueller versus Doubleday, with eminent authority summoned to support each of the two competing approaches. But we see a preliminary difficulty that precludes our declaring in this case whether the champions of Mueller or those of Doubleday should be the ultimate winners in the long-lived struggle over the application of Robinson-Patman to dual distributors in modern-day distribution systems. And that has to do with the threshold question whether [53] in this case competitive injury, even as expansively defined under Robinson-Patman, see supra note 12, has been shown. Competitive injury, which no one disputes is the condition precedent for establishing violations of the Act, is a critical element. For, as we have seen, Robinson-Patman HN7[] is directed to the preservation of competition. Indeed, the terms of the statute itself mandate that, in order for a price differential to be unlawful, it must tend "to injure, destroy, or prevent competition." 15 U.S.C. § 13(a). Cf. also Foremost Pro Color, Inc. v. Kodak Co., 703 F.2d 534, 548 (9th Cir. 1983), cert. denied 465 U.S. 1038, 79 L. Ed. 2d 712, 104 S. Ct. 1315 (1984); Whitaker Cable Corp. v. FTC, 239 F.2d 253, 256 (7th Cir. 1956), cert. denied 353 U.S. 938, 1 L. Ed. 2d 761, 77 S. Ct. 813 (1957). Injury to competition is thus the name of the Robinson-Patman game.

In its opinion, the FTC waved aside substantial evidence (1) that competition among dealers generally was healthy, (2) that the selected [54] dealers singled out for FTC examination were thriving, and (3) that this happy picture of prosperity was apparently unclouded by instances of diverted [*1144] sales attributable to the challenged discounts. The Commission flatly concluded that this entire body of evidence was irrelevant. Indeed, in the Commission's view, for reasons that we fail to discern and the FTC failed to articulate, this evidence did "not address the causal connection [between the price differentials and competitive injury] at all." Commission Decision, J.A. at 191. This cannot be. In our view, the Commission's conclusion that Boise's dealer-specific evidence was irrelevant to the inference of competitive injury is wrong as a matter of law.

It is clear that Morton Salt's inference of competitive injury "may be overcome by evidence breaking the causal connection between a price differential and lost sales or profits," Falls City, 460 U.S. at 435. In reason, the inference can also be overcome by evidence showing an absence of competitive injury within the meaning of Robinson-Patman. That is to say, [55] HN8[] a sustained and substantial price discrimination raises an inference, but it manifestly does not create an irrebuttable presumption of competitive injury. Specific, substantial evidence of absence of competitive injury, see supra note 12, is, in our view, sufficient to rebut what is, after all, only an inference. The Commission, in effect, employed the Morton Salt inference to presume competitive injury conclusively in this case, and would only treat as relevant evidence "breaking the causal connection" between that assumed injury and the price discrimination to rebut the inference. This approach defies both logic and the import of Morton Salt that the inference of injury is rebuttable; for if the respondent's evidence demonstrates that there is no competitive injury (or reasonable possibility of competitive injury) to begin with, then evidence breaking the causal connection is obviously impossible to adduce. There is, under those circumstances, no causal connection to break.

As a result of its interpretation of Robinson-Patman, the Commission found it unnecessary to sift and weigh Boise's evidence of absence of injury. All those days of trial before the ALJ were, it seems, [56] largely for naught. In reaching this odd result, the Commission simply failed to determine whether Boise's evidence demonstrated that no injury or "reasonable possibility" of competitive injury existed. See Falls City, 460 U.S. at 434-35.

First. Important among the salient facts that the Commission chose to ignore was the ALJ's finding that the selected dealers were not wallowing in a hopeless or deteriorating environment. Quite to the contrary, as we have already recounted, the ALJ found that all selected dealers for which data was available enjoyed an increase in sales and gross profits in excess of 22 % annually during the period in question, despite the recessionary condition of the economy. ALJ Finding 431, J.A. at 121-22. Indeed, Judge Parker observed that various indicators showed high profitability and financial health on the part of the selected dealers. Id. 433-34, J.A. at 123-24. Although we need not decide the matter, this tends, if anything, to point to an absence of "lost profits" of the sort described in Falls City as one possible manifestation of injury to competition; accordingly, this evidence merited consideration by [57] the Commission rather than the out-of-hand dismissal that it received.

There is yet another portion of the record relating to profitability left unexamined by the Commission and, in our view, deserving of attention in reaching a reasoned result. As computed by the Commission's accounting expert, Mr. Rowe, the selected dealers' median net profit before taxes as a percent of sales over the years 1976 to 1981 ranged from 2.3 % to 3.5 %. Id. 430, J.A. at 121. Their net profit was thus apparently lower than those of dealer-members of NOPA, whose net profit ranged from 3.0 % to 3.9 % from 1967 to 1980. Id. 423-27, J.A. at 120-21. See supra text slip op. at 16. Although these statistics pose obvious comparative problems (in light of the fact that they are spread across different years and were computed by different entities), this apparent discrepancy in profitability obviously deserved consideration. But it received none. Likewise, the Commission failed to [*1145] analyze the relationship of Boise's higher net profit (which, of course, reflected both its sales as a wholesaler and a dealer) to that of the selected dealers. See supra text slip op. [58] at 16.

In addition, the evidence, as found by the ALJ, failed to demonstrate "displaced sales," another form the Falls City Court indicated injury could take. The ALJ found that switches of accounts from one supplier to another were "not uncommon"; to the contrary, they were the order of the day. Id. 422, J.A. at 120. See supra text slip op. at 17. While on the one hand twenty-one of the twenty-three dealers testified that they had lost accounts to Boise's lower prices or better service in recent years, ALJ Finding 384, J.A. at 112-13; see also id. 385-406, J.A. at 113-17, the phenomenon of lost accounts was very much a two-way street. As the ALJ extensively recounted, Boise also lost accounts and it too was unable to meet competitors' prices in some instances. See ALJ Finding 408-21, J.A. at 117-20. (The list is long, and as we have provided various examples, see supra text slip op. at 18, we will avoid the temptation common in antitrust cases of proliferating the record. Automatic Canteen, 346 U.S. at 65-66 & n.3.) Indeed, considered together, the number of accounts that switched from the selected dealers to Boise was quite small. See [59] supra text slip op. at 17-18. And the proportion of switched accounts to a dealer's total accounts was strikingly low. Whereas a typical dealer might have a thousand accounts (or more), only a handful of accounts were shown to have switched. On top of that, the reasons for the switches were manifold. The following finding by Judge Parker makes the key point:

> None of the selected dealers who lost accounts in whole or in part to Boise were able to conclude that the losses were due to the different prices charged them and Boise by the six manufacturers (citations omitted).

Id. 407, J.A. at 117. In short, the switches to Boise apparently cannot be explained as sales diverted through operation of the wholesale discount. [15]

---

[15] Notwithstanding this welter of dealer-specific evidence marshalled by Boise and painstakingly sifted by Judge Parker, the Commission apparently viewed Boise's efforts as an attempt to muddy the Robinson-Patman waters by implanting market-structure analyses in alien legal soil. To be sure, Judge Parker made pertinent and seemingly well-founded observations as to the competitive health and vibrancy of the office products industry at large. Here is one such point:

> The battle between dealers in the office-products industry is highly competitive and it is inevitable that when Boise competes with the selected dealers it will lose accounts to them.

Id. para. 408, J.A. at 117. And it is also clear that Boise argued in favor of a market-structure analysis under Robinson-Patman.

But that is not to say that Judge Parker found only evidence going broadly to the structure of the industry and the competitive health of that industry overall. There was in this respect no commingling of market-structure analysis appropriate under other provisions of the Clayton Act, such as section 7, 15 U.S.C. § 18 (1982), but, as the Commission claims, off-target as to Robinson-Patman's less global perspective. The ALJ's findings, set forth in a thorough and careful 131-page opinion, are replete with the most specific, detailed facts about the twenty-three selected dealers and the six representative manufacturers, not just the structure of the entire industry. In short, Judge Parker did not lose sight of the trees in the midst of this vast forest. It seems to us, therefore, that the Commission mischaracterizes Boise's evidence as going to market structure, rather than to the twenty-three selected dealers themselves, when Boise, in fairness, adduced evidence as to both.

The dissent criticizes us for not telling the Commission with specificity how it should evaluate or weigh the evidence that was amassed before it in this case. We decline, with gratitude, the invitation to venture too deeply into areas where the Commission has yet to tread. The very fact of the Commission's expertise and knowledge of the industry, featured elsewhere by the dissent, counsels powerfully at this stage in favor of restraint and of permitting the expert agency to perform its assigned functions which it failed to carry out the first time around. This approach strikes us as achieving a more prudent balance between court and agency than that beguilingly suggested to us by the dissent.

[60] Second. To explain its refusal to consider Boise's evidence (and, indeed, the countervailing evidence) of absence of actual competitive injury, the Commission asserted that "the competitive injury requirement of Section 2(a) is satisfied by a showing of 'a reasonable possibility that a price [*1146] difference may harm competition.'" Commission Decision, J.A. at 192 (quoting Falls City, 460 U.S. at 434-35). While true, that principle does not justify abdication of the duty to consider evidence indicating that a "reasonable possibility" of harm does not, in fact, exist in the particular industry. Robinson-Patman has not ushered in a bizarre rule of law that exalts theory "no matter what" in the face of hard, cold facts. That curious rule, if it ever was a rule, has been scotched by Falls City's teaching. [16]

[61] In this case, the Commission is attacking a long-established, widespread practice within a vibrant, dynamic industry. The ALJ specifically found that the wholesale discounts are no new-fangled concoctions. For example, Bates, a distinguished manufacturer whose products appear to enjoy considerable customer loyalty, "has had its wholesale discount since the 1940's, and Boise has been receiving that discount from Bates as long as it has been a customer." ALJ Finding 302, J.A. at 97. Forty years is a long time for evil, anticompetitive practices to have flourished unchallenged either by Washington, D.C. regulators or private entities which find themselves on the short end of the discount stick. Much the same can be said of Master Products. That firm's system of wholesale discounts has been unchanged for almost 40 years. Id. 345, J.A., at 105. So too with Boorum & Pease, whose even-handed pricing structure has been in effect for many years. Id. 263, J.A. at 91.

To be sure, the prevalence and longstanding nature of the discounts does not preclude the possibility that the discount regime posed a threat of injury to competition in the future. In light of the flourishing condition [62] of the industry generally and the selected dealers specifically, however, one would reasonably expect that any potential for injury, if indeed there was one, would have manifested itself by now in the form of some dragging down. As yet, however, there appears to be no such damper. [17]

[63] Third. In assuming, without analysis, the existence of competitive injury, we believe that the Commission erred in another way as well. It entirely failed to inform its application of Morton Salt's inference of injury with the purposes of the Robinson-Patman Act. As we have previously detailed, see supra text slip op. at 23-24, it is [*1147] fairness, as Congress perceives it, that Robinson-Patman is all about. That Act, a legislative monument to smallness in a century which rewards bigness, is aimed at putting a halt to singling out the "Big Fives" and "Big Threes" of the world for disparately favorable treatment (unless, of course, a statutory defense lies).

---

[16] Our dissenting colleague suggests throughout his opinion that we have fashioned a novel rule of law under the Robinson-Patman Act, namely a new evidentiary burden on the FTC to prove injury to competition. The charge, with all respect, is quite unfounded. To the contrary, we have steadfastly adhered to traditional principles of Robinson-Patman law in concluding that the Morton Salt inference was properly relied upon here to establish a prima facie case of competitive injury. In light of the Commission's success in this respect, the burden therefore shifted to Boise to rebut the FTC's prima facie case by breaking, if it could, the "causal connection." Our quarrel with the Commission, and now with our colleague, is that the FTC proceeded deliberately to ignore the wealth of evidence submitted by Boise, including fact-specific evidence going directly to the Commission-annointed "victims," namely the selected dealers. This was no open-ended Sherman or Clayton Act case going broadly to the structure of the market or "market dynamics," dissent op. at 1154: Boise's evidence could hardly have been more targeted. And Boise's target is clear to us, as it should have been to the Commission -- the selected dealers themselves and their specific circumstances in the competitive arena with Boise.

[17] We recognize, of course, that the Falls City Court included the longstanding nature of a price difference in articulating when the existence of such a difference gives rise to Morton Salt's inference of injury. 460 U.S. at 435. We believe that the Court meant to suggest that long-term price differences more likely could lead to injury than differences of an equivalent magnitude maintained for only a short time or sporadically. See supra n.13. Our point is unrelated to this common-sense observation; it is that a price difference with the potential for causing injury will eventually result in measurable effects, such as diverted sales or lost profits. The more time that passes without such effects showing up, the more likely it becomes that the price difference does not in fact pose a threat of competitive injury. Cf. Matsushita Electrical Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 1358, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). Thus, evidence suggesting a lack of injury over the many years during which the challenged discounts have prevailed is clearly relevant to determining whether the statutory prerequisite of a "reasonable possibility" of injury exists.

This is not a case of the "Big Five" retailers (Morton Salt), the "Big Three" book distributors (Doubleday), the long-established, large jobbers who enjoyed manufacturer protection from uppity newcomers (Mueller) or the Hoosier beer distributor which happened to be on the "wrong" side of the Indiana-Kentucky state line (Falls City). Quite to the contrary, there is among the six manufacturers selected in this case no regime of favoritism towards Boise. There is not the slightest hint in the [64] ALJ's opinion, or in the Commission's for that matter, that the manufacturers were singling out Boise (and other big fish) for disparately favorable treatment. Rather, in accordance with a practice prevalent well before Boise even entered the industry, it is undisputed that the six manufacturers in question treated all wholesalers alike and provided the wholesale discount to Boise solely because it met their respective definitions of "wholesaler." There is simply no cabal between Boise and the six manufacturers to give Boise an additional price break. [18]

To recap briefly, there are five national wholesalers, ALJ Finding 26, 28, J.A. at 50-51, of which Boise is one of the two largest, and a host of smaller wholesalers. The "little [65] fish" are typically "small, privately-owned businesses with annual volumes of under $ 10 million." Id. 27, J.A. at 51. Judge Parker's findings of fact show beyond doubt that equal treatment of all that qualify as "wholesalers," whether great or small, is the order of the day as to all six selected manufacturers. See, e.g., id. 447, J.A. at 127-28 (Rediform); id. 450, J.A. at 128 (Sheaffer-Eaton); id. 449, J.A. at 128 (Kardex); id. 451, J.A. at 128 (Boorum & Pease); id. 452, J.A. at 128-29 (Bates); id. 453, J.A. at 129 (Master Products).

This evenhandedness might strike Robinson-Patman aficionados as a rather odd choice as a basis for a claim of illegal price discrimination. Indeed, one attuned to such matters might more naturally expect that, if such a discrimination claim were to lie, the charge would be (1) that Boise (and perhaps the other national wholesalers, "the Big Five," as it were) was receiving higher discounts than smaller firms that qualified as "wholesalers," see e.g., Automatic Canteen, 346 U.S. 61, 97 L. Ed. 1454, 73 S. Ct. 1017; Morton Salt, 334 U.S. 37, 92 L. Ed. 1196, 68 S. Ct. 822, or (2) that Boise [66] had coerced the manufacturers into framing their "wholesaler" definitions in a manner favorable to Boise's method of doing business. In either of these contexts, one could readily understand why the Robinson-Patman complaint would be levelled against Boise as a power buyer exerting its muscle to win additional pricing concessions from amenable, or at least nervous, vendors anxious to please the big-fish buyer. But, again, that is not this case. Boise has not been accused of piggishly demanding more than its equal share at the wholesale discount trough.

Fourth. We note, finally, the irony of the Commission's concept of Robinson-Patman liability, namely that these egalitarian-minded manufacturers with their long-settled commercial practices now stand condemned as price discriminators in violation of federal law. As the Supreme Court has made abundantly clear, a buyer's liability under section 2(f) is entirely derivative in nature. Great A & P Tea Co., 440 U.S. at 76-77. See supra text slip op. at 3. For there to be a guilty buyer, there must be a guilty seller. And thus it cannot pass unnoticed that under the Commission's approach, Bates, Master Products, [67] Boorum & Pease and the other three manufacturers have run afoul of Robinson-Patman even though they have followed neutral, objective criteria in determining what buyers are to be considered wholesalers. [*1148] It cannot be clearer that the Commission's sweeping attack, not narrowly focused on some anti-competitive, discriminatory pocket within an industry, carries with it dangers that the FTC is marching rapidly down a road leading to a regime of "price uniformity and rigidity" that has long stood condemned by the Supreme Court as antithetical to our law. This is nothing less than an all-out attack on uniform wholesale prices to dual distributors. Id. at 80; Automatic Canteen, 346 U.S. at 63.

In sum, although the Commission (and the ALJ) correctly took the view that the Morton Salt inference is rebuttable, its rejection on relevancy grounds of Boise's evidence of the absence of competitive injury (or reasonable possibility of competitive injury) was in error. [19] The petition for review is therefore granted, and the case is remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

---

[18] For instance, although Boise looms big as Boorum & Pease's largest single customer, id. 275, J.A. at 93 (at least in one fiscal year), Boise received over the years only the plain vanilla wholesaler discount offered to every other wholesaler. Id. 263, J.A. at 91.

[68] It is so ordered.

Concur by: WILLIAMS

Concur

WILLIAMS, Circuit Judge, concurring:

I willingly concur in Judge Starr's excellent opinion and write separately to indicate the extraordinary difficulties facing the Commission if it should attempt to pursue this case on remand. On my reading of the law (which is somewhat less generous to the Commission than that of the majority), the practices complained of cannot be found to be illegal price discriminations.

In 1980, the Commission filed a complaint charging Boise with "knowingly [receiving] a discrimination in price" that may substantially lessen or injure competition in violation of § 2(f) of the Robinson-Patman Act. 15 U.S.C. § 13(f) (1982). The complaint attacked Boise's receipt of "functional discounts" -- discounts that its suppliers offered to each and every customer who met certain objective criteria. The most important of these criteria was that the customer resell a minimum percentage of its purchases at wholesale. In the face of powerful evidence that the discounts in no way injured competition, the Commission assumed injury. Instead of evaluating the evidence of competitive injury, it considered [69] only evidence that might "break the causal connection" between the imagined injury and the contested discounts. In support of this odd set of blinkers, it invoked FTC v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U.S. 37, 92 L. Ed. 1196, 68 S. Ct. 822 (1948), which allows an inference of competitive injury from the mere fact of price discrimination. [1] As Judge Starr points out so well, Maj. slip op. at 35, Morton Salt clearly cannot justify this complete dismissal of the issue of competitive injury vel non.

[70] In my view, however, the case suffers graver faults than those identified by the [*1149] court. The Commission's theory seems to me to place the Robinson-Patman Act in hopeless and complete conflict with the other antitrust laws, in violation of innumerable Supreme Court injunctions that it must be construed to avoid such conflict. E.g., Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. v. FTC, 440 U.S. 69, 80-81 & n.13, 59 L. Ed. 2d 153, 99 S. Ct. 925 (1979); United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 438 U.S. 422, 447-59, 57 L. Ed. 2d 854, 98 S. Ct. 2864 (1978);

---

[19] Our disposition obviates any need to choose sides once and for all between Mueller and Doubleday. Mueller may, of course, be viewed as a strict application of the Morton Salt inference of competitive injury, because Mueller does not allow a finding that the amount of a functional discount is reasonably related to the recipient's cost of performing additional functions for the seller to negate the possibility of competitive injury. But we believe, for reasons previously set forth, that the inference can nonetheless be rebutted by a showing that injury is nonexistent. That view is clearly supported by Falls City, not to mention common sense.

[1] I question whether the Morton Salt inference can ever be applied in a § 2(f) case. The Supreme Court has clearly held that the Commission cannot shift the burden of production onto the buyer simply by showing that the buyer knew that it was receiving a price discount unavailable to others. Automatic Canteen Co. v. FTC, 346 U.S. 61, 79, 97 L. Ed. 1454, 73 S. Ct. 1017 (1953). The Commission cites no Supreme Court precedent applying the inference in a § 2(f) case, see Brief for Commission at 28-29 n.26, and the only supporting circuit court case that it cites, Kroger Co. v. FTC, 438 F.2d 1372, 1378-79 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 871, 30 L. Ed. 2d 115, 92 S. Ct. 59 (1971), has been strictly limited to its unique facts, see Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. v. FTC, 440 U.S. 69, 81-82 n.15, 59 L. Ed. 2d 153, 99 S. Ct. 925 (1979). In A & P, the Court held that a buyer accepting the lower of two prices competitively offered does not violate § 2(f) if seller has a "meeting competition" defense; it confined Kroger, which denied a buyer that defense, to instances of a "lying buyer." The decision appears to implement Automatic Canteen's unwillingness to foist onto a defendant buyer production burdens that are appropriate only for a seller responsible for a price discrimination.

Automatic Canteen Co. v. FTC, 346 U.S. 61, 63, 74, 73 S. Ct. 1017, 97 L. Ed. 1454 (1953). As a matter of law the very conditions on which sellers offer the discounts should preclude their being illegal price discriminations.

* * *

The Robinson-Patman Act has been no favorite among enthusiasts of competition. Price differentials may be found violative of the Act even when they represent the opening wedge of competition in a market that is largely cartelized or in which for some other reason competition is sluggish. See R. BORK, THE ANTITRUST PARADOX 385-91 (1978); R. POSNER, [71] THE ROBINSON-PATMAN ACT 37-38 (1976). But the Act is law, together with the pro-competitive provisions of the antitrust laws. The courts accordingly have struggled to reconcile the two. In practice, they have read the Act to protect certain fairness goals, at the expense of competition. In no case, so far as I know, have they read the Act to stamp out a pro-competitive practice that in no way permits any competitor an unfair advantage.

Price discrimination in an economic sense -- and I will shortly address the issue of Robinson-Patman cases that might be seen as extending the Act's reach beyond discrimination in that sense -- causes disfavored purchasers to bear a disproportionate share of the seller's total costs of production. If variable production costs per unit are $ 1 and fixed costs $ 2, and a firm sells in equal amounts to A at $ 2.50 and to B at $ 3.50, B will bear 5/8 of fixed costs while A will bear only 3/8. (E.g., if 100 units are sold to each, sales to B will account for $ 250 of the $ 400 in total fixed costs, while those to A will account for only $ 150.) Such differentials appear to give the favored purchaser an edge over his competitors in the resale market, [72] even where he has no superior efficiency to justify the advantage. The advantage has at least a look of unfairness. Thus it is not altogether surprising that Congress might seek to prevent such unfairness by prohibiting the practice, even though to do so may inhibit competition or injure consumers. [2]

[73] We deal here, however, with a practice that cannot entail such an unequal allocation of costs. In instances of genuine price discrimination, the seller is able to extract a higher proportion of fixed costs from the disfavored customers because he has segmented the market. Critical to that segmentation is the existence of a barrier preventing resales by favored customers to disfavored ones -- resales known as "arbitrage." In the absence of such a barrier, the favored customers would make such resales. Thus they would displace their own supplier and would capture for themselves the revenue that the original supplier sought to secure by his price discrimination.

Accordingly, it is black letter economics that price discrimination cannot occur if the favored customers can resell to the disfavored. See, e.g., P.R.G. LAYARD & A.A. WALTERS, MICRO-ECONOMIC THEORY 240-41 (1978); E. MANSFIELD, MICROCONOMICS: THEORY & APPLICATIONS 286 (2d ed. 1975); W. BAUMOL, ECONOMIC THEORY AND OPERATIONS [*1150] ANALYSIS 347-48 (3rd ed. 1972); A. ALCHIAN & W. ALLEN, EXCHANGE AND PRODUCTION: THEORY IN USE 136-37 (1969).

Obviously the principle cannot apply if arbitrage is obstructed, and barriers [74] may take a variety of forms. A physical problem is common. If, for example, local gas companies discriminate in favor of residential gas customers and against industrial ones, clearly the residential customers cannot increase their purchases and resell to industrial users: they lack control over the pipes necessary to reship the gas to their hypothetical purchasers. But physical barriers are hardly essential. The law itself may obstruct arbitrage, [3] as may firm behavior. For example, a seller can sometimes monitor the favored customers' resales and credibly threaten to cut off their supplies if they resell to disfavored ones. The defendant salt manufacturer in Morton Salt, for example, surely possessed that modest monitoring capability. (The absence of discussion of the subject in that case, cf. Dissent slip op. at 19, is hardly a sturdy basis for an inference that the salt seller could not penalize attempted arbitrage.) Discount recipients could conceivably organize a group boycott of disfavored buyers. Cf. Dissent at 1162 (reference to "price umbrella").

---

[2] See Statement of Representative Utterback, presenting Conference Report to the House, 80 Cong. Rec. 9413, 9416 (1936) (contrasting unfair advantages said to accrue to some firms with "the assurance of equal opportunity and fair play" afforded by the bill); Report of House Judiciary Committee, H.R. Rep. No. 2287, 74th Cong., 2d Sess., pt. 1 at 8 (1936) (favored buyers' partial non-contribution to costs and profits leads to "burden and injury" to disfavored customers); Report of Senate Judiciary Committee, S. Rep. No. 1502, 74th Cong., 2d Sess. 3 (1936) (committee's goal has been "the preservation of equal opportunity" to those engaged in distribution "comportably with their ability . . . to serve . . . with real efficiency"); FTC v. Simplicity Pattern Co., 360 U.S. 55, 69, 3 L. Ed. 2d 1079, 79 S. Ct. 1005 (1959) (smaller firms said to suffer "hopeless competitive disadvantage" unrelated to cost).

[75] The present case is not merely bereft of evidence of any such barrier, but plainly demonstrates its absence. Far from restricting favored customers' sales to disfavored ones, or relying on any physical or legal barrier to their doing so, Boise's suppliers demand of the favored customers that they resell to disfavored ones. Indeed, the only condition uniformly imposed upon recipients of the discounts is that they make a minimum proportion of their sales to dealers (the disfavored customers). Boise's suppliers seek not to segment the market; they demand its integration. Far from seeking to discourage arbitrage, or relying on any physical or legal barrier to arbitrage, they insist on it. These are not the acts of a price discriminator.

Once the absence of any barrier to arbitrage is clear, [4] [77] the exact terms under which wholesalers resell to dealers, whatever they may be, cannot support a claim that manufacturers are offering wholesalers unmerited discounts. Suppose, for example, that wholesalers do not share any of their discounts with retailers to whom they sell. Cf. Dissent at 1162 ("It is not to [dual distributors'] advantage to reduce prices for competing retailers. [76] "). If this be so, [5] there appear to be two imaginable explanations. (1) There are no unmerited discounts; the costs of selling to wholesalers are lower or they perform services of offsetting value to manufacturers (or some combination). As the wholesalers have already given value for the nominal discounts, there is nothing for them to "pass" through to dealers. (2) The manufacturers are giving wholesalers unmerited discounts [*1151] and, given the availability of arbitrage, are allowing them to capture the "excess profits" available on sales to the disfavored customers. The principle accepted without dissent by economists is that the second hypothesis is utterly implausible. So it seems to me. Nothing in the record appears to support the notion that office supply manufacturers are engaged in such a bizarre charitable program.

The Dissent suggests that the inferences from arbitrage-availability are undercut by findings that "disfavored retailers performed many of the functions that Boise performed." Dissent at 1155; see also id. slip op. at 18. There is, however, no finding nor even a contention that any single retailer performs all the services provided by Boise or other wholesalers. See J.A. 139-40 (listing of some services provided by some dealers); Maj. Op. at 1134 n.7. Nor is there any qualitative or quantitative evaluation of the services provided by the two classes of intermediaries. Thus there seems no reason to question the inferences that are normally to be drawn from ease of arbitrage.

---

[3] This appears to have been the case in Falls City Industries, Inc. v. Vanco Beverage, Inc., 460 U.S. 428, 75 L. Ed. 2d 174, 103 S. Ct. 1282 (1983). Falls City sold beer to Kentucky wholesalers at a lower price than to Indiana ones (evidently solely because of a quirk in Indiana law). The Indiana wholesalers could not simply turn around and buy from Kentucky wholesalers across the border. It is a crime for an Indiana wholesaler to purchase beer from an out-of-state seller who does not hold a valid brewer's permit. The prerequisites to such a permit include not holding a disqualifying interest in another liquor permit, posting a bond to cover taxes, and agreeing to file reports with Indiana. See Ind. Code §§ 7.1-5-8-9; 7.1-5-9-1 to -13; 7.1-3-2-4 and -5 (1984). While the Falls City Court does not discuss the matter, the tone of the opinion strongly suggests that the Kentucky wholesaler did not hold the requisite permit.

[4] The Dissent's suggestion slip op. at 22 that wholesalers cannot discover disfavored buyers of substantial quantities of discriminatorily priced goods reflects a robust imagination. It is, of course, the business of wholesalers to sell to retailers. Recipients of the wholesale discounts are typically listed as members of the Wholesale Stationers Association. Maj. Op. slip op. at 11. Thus the wholesaler seeking to engage in arbitrage can simply start with all firms in the business downstream from manufacture, subtract members of the Association, and have a prima facie list of the target group.

[5] There is in fact substantial competition for sales to dealers between and among the wholesalers, and the suppliers. See AF 7, 30, 33, 38, J.A. at 46, 51-53. Accordingly, if sellers in fact gave wholesalers unmerited discounts, competition among wholesalers would shift the benefit forward to dealers.

I must confess puzzlement at the Dissent's contrasting "realistic appraisals of relevant competitive [78] facts" with "general economic theorems." Dissent at 1161. The theorems relied on, if they should be so labelled, are hardly metaphysical speculations; they are inferred from widely shared propositions about human behavior, e.g., that firms do not gratuitously turn profit opportunities over to other firms for no reason. The Dissent contends that this proposition is not at issue, id. slip op. at 19-20, evidently on the basis of various theories which, if 100 % true, would show only that wholesalers do not pass their discounts on to retailers. But the issue is precisely whether there are any unmerited discounts to pass on. [6]

Of course the fact that obstruction of arbitrage is a necessary condition of "price discrimination" as economists use the term would not prevent Congress from enacting a prohibition that spoke more broadly. Indeed, the Supreme Court has explicitly said that price [79] discrimination for Robinson-Patman Act purposes means no more than a price differential. See FTC v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc., 363 U.S. 536, 549, 4 L. Ed. 2d 1385, 80 S. Ct. 1267 (1960). Under this view -- which of course is authoritative -- the price differential offered by Boise's suppliers to wholesalers is price discrimination. But the Act prohibits only price discrimination whose effect "may be substantially to lessen . . . or to injure . . . competition." 15 U.S.C. § 13(a). The issue is whether this "price discrimination" can injure competition in any sense that Congress might have intended. Cf. F. ROWE, PRICE DISCRIMINATION UNDER THE ROBINSON-PATMAN ACT 96-97 (1962) (discussing Anheuser-Busch).

Even Falls City Industries, Inc. v. Vanco Beverage, Inc., 460 U.S. 428, 75 L. Ed. 2d 174, 103 S. Ct. 1282 (1983), which the Commission appears to regard as the Court's most expansive extension of Morton Salt's readiness to infer injury to competition, makes clear that the Act is not intended to reach losses that are consistent with fairness. There a brewer charged an Indiana beer distributor more than it charged a competing [80] Kentucky distributor. The Court held that unlawful price discrimination could be found (and that anticompetitive effect could be inferred from the price discrimination itself) even though the favored buyer was not "extraordinarily large." 460 U.S. at 436. Although this holding extended Robinson-Patman liability beyond the core image animating Congress -- the buyer that uses sheer size to secure unfair advantages -- it in fact did not disconnect Robinson-Patman liability from the economic concept of price discrimination or from a concern over unfair competitive advantages.

The economists' definition of price discrimination requires, to be sure, that the seller have market power (i.e., a power to raise the price above competitive levels [*1152] without loss of all sales): otherwise the discriminatees would simply buy from alternative sources. Although Falls City does not refer to any finding of market power, as it was not at issue, the record might well have sustained such a finding. The seller was a regional brewer with an established brand name, and brand name loyalties typically enable a seller to raise prices without all customers abandoning it for [81] alternative suppliers.

Moreover, Falls City expressly limited the permissibility of inferring competitive injury. It pointed out that the defendant brewer had identified no "economic reason" why the inference should not be drawn. 460 U.S. at 436. So far as appeared, the brewer's pricing practices enabled Kentucky wholesalers to increase their sales at the expense of Indiana ones regardless of the latters' efficiencies. As the Court noted, Indiana and Kentucky retailers competed in a single interstate market, so that the relatively high prices paid by Indiana wholesalers would necessarily impede their sales. Id. The message of the case is that where some inherent aspect of the practice supplies an economic reason why it could not generate such an unfair competitive advantage, the inference cannot be drawn.

The "price discrimination" here cannot lead to the sort of competitive injury evidently feared by Congress -- an impaired ability to compete regardless of the losers' efficiency. [7] If the disfavored customers bore a disproportionate

---

[6] As Holmes said, "A fact taken in its isolation . . . is gossip." 1 M. Howe, ed., Holmes-Laski Letters 129 (1953).

[7] This analysis is not altered in the slightest by the fact that sellers generally give the discount on all products bought by a wholesaler, even though many of them may be resold to end users. So long as the resale condition assures that non-discount customers are not saddled with a disproportionate share of fixed costs and profits, the sort of injustice at which the Act strikes is necessarily absent.

share of their suppliers' costs, their ability to buy from the favored ones would enable them to escape the burden. The terms [82] of the discounts themselves assure this result.

[83] Because the nature of the challenged practice compels the conclusion that it could confer no competitive advantage of the sort the Robinson-Patman Act sought to eradicate, the practice should be absolved as a matter of law. The Supreme Court's mandate to construe the Robinson-Patman Act consistently with the other antitrust laws demands no less.

I am frankly unable to see how the Commission can resurrect this case, nor any reason beyond bureaucratic momentum why it should try to do so. With luck, however, it will make use of the remand to develop an intellectually coherent policy on functional discounts, one that addresses economic reality.

Dissent by: MIKVA

Dissent

MIKVA, Circuit Judge, dissenting:

The majority today tells the Federal Trade Commission ("FTC") that manufacturers who charge different prices to competing retailers cannot be held to have violated price discrimination law -- unless the FTC somehow overcomes evidence that competition persists in the affected business sector. Apparently, the majority imposes this new evidentiary burden to avoid a result it finds economically unappealing. Even if the majority is right in its economic [*1153] appraisal, however, [84] the choice is not ours to make. Though born of good intentions, today's decision disregards the policies that Congress purposefully created more than fifty years ago.

There can be no doubt that Congress' chief aim in enacting Robinson-Patman was to combat discrimination that favored big retailers -- to counter "the impact upon secondary-line competition of the burgeoning of mammoth purchasers, notably chain stores." FTC v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc., 363 U.S. 536, 544, 4 L. Ed. 2d 1385, 80 S. Ct. 1267 (1960) (footnote omitted). Congress thus sought to ensure the survival of small retailers by requiring that they be placed on an equal footing with larger competitors.

Congress had a second objective in enacting Robinson-Patman. As I demonstrate below on the basis of its legislative history, Robinson-Patman was passed by a Congress that believed price discrimination favoring large buyers ultimately harmed competition itself. Congress was convinced that, by protecting small businesses, it was also protecting the operation of a competitive economy.

Two factors thus set Robinson-Patman apart from the rest of antitrust law. First, the fate of small retailers remained the [85] Act's primary concern. Secondly, Congress determined that the proscribed activity -- price discrimination between competing buyers (so-called "secondary-line" injury) -- tended by its very nature to injure

---

Moreover, a rule requiring suppliers to limit the discounts to items actually sold at wholesale would work to the detriment of Boise's purchasers, including dealers. Enforcement of such a rule would entail substantial administrative costs, see Calvani, Functional Discounts Under the Robinson-Patman Act, 17 B.C. Ind. & Com. L. Rev. 543, 556 (1976) (a company that had insisted on certification of resale scrapped the requirement "as unworkable because it was not adopted by its competitors, was resented by its customers, and resulted in falsehood and inaccuracy"), which would doubtless be passed on to customers. Because of these administrative costs, Commission insistence on such market segregation might well eliminate the use of functional discounts and the substantial efficiencies they generate for dealers, see ALJ Finding ("AF") 46, J.A. at 54-55 (dealers recognize that wholesalers provide them with valuable services unavailable from manufacturers), and for end users, see AF 393, J.A. at 114 ("'The City of Seattle buys from Boise because of usage reports, because of some of the sophistication in the invoicing system, because of depth of inventory and high [fill] rates.'"); see also AF 385, 392, 398, 402, J.A. at 113-16. The high administrative costs, as well as the tendency of the resulting efficiencies to spill over in sales to end users, likely account for sellers' disinclination to so restrict the discounts.

competition. Unlike many Sherman and Clayton Act cases, then, price discrimination suits would not require every court to reestablish the likelihood of market injury. Under Robinson-Patman, Congress had already identified and condemned the harmful consequences of this discrimination.

Today's decision disregards these crucial facts about Robinson-Patman law. It ignores, first, how much this case resembles the paradigm of Robinson-Patman discrimination. A giant, favored buyer here competes with smaller disfavored retailers. Secondly, the majority injects Sherman and Clayton Act doctrine into the distinct jurisprudence of Robinson-Patman's secondary-line cases. The majority in effect holds that, where a party can demonstrate continuing competition in a business sector -- the sort of showing that might shield a conventional antitrust defendant from liability for restraint of trade -- that party avoids liability for price discrimination, too. This novel proposition contradicts numerous [86] judicial precedents concerning the evidence required to show secondary-line injury. It also threatens to frustrate FTC enforcement of Robinson-Patman. Because "the determination whether to alter the scope of [Robinson-Patman] must be made by Congress, not this Court," Falls City Industries v. Vanco Beverage, Inc., 460 U.S. 428, 436, 75 L. Ed. 2d 174, 103 S. Ct. 1282 (1983), I dissent.

1. Evidentiary Showing Required

Evidence concerning the competitive structure of a business sector is precisely the sort that the Supreme Court has said need not be presented by complaint counsel in § 2(a) cases and need not be considered before a court finds unlawful price discrimination. In FTC v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U.S. 37, 92 L. Ed. 1196, 68 S. Ct. 822 (1948), the Supreme Court explained the advisability of dispensing with such evidence. "It would greatly handicap effective enforcement of the Act," the Court held, "to require testimony to show that which we believe to be self-evident, namely, that there is a 'reasonable possibility' that competition may be adversely affected by a practice under which manufacturers and producers sell their goods [87] to some customers substantially cheaper than they sell like goods to the competitors of these customers." Id. at 50. Of course, not every disparity in the prices charged to competing retailers justifies the inference of an "adverse effect" on competition. But, "where the record indicates a price differential substantial enough to cut into the purchaser's profit margin . . . [or one] that, if reflected in a resale price cut, would have a noticeable effect on the decisions of customers in the retail market, an inference of injury may properly be indulged." Foremost Dairies, Inc. v. FTC, 348 F.2d 674, 680 (5th Cir.) (footnote omitted), [*1154] cert. denied, 382 U.S. 959, 15 L. Ed. 2d 362, 86 S. Ct. 435 (1965).

Once the inference of injury is justified, the burden logically shifts to the defendant to rebut the presumption. The Supreme Court made this evidentiary consequence explicit when it recently reaffirmed the "inference of injury" doctrine in Falls City Industries v. Vanco Beverage, Inc., 460 U.S. 428, 75 L. Ed. 2d 174, 103 S. Ct. 1282 (1983). The effect of invoking the inference, the Court said, is that [88] the Robinson-Patman defendant can then present a specific type of rebuttal evidence. "In the absence of direct evidence of displaced sales, this inference may be overcome by evidence breaking the causal connection between a price differential and lost sales or profits." Id. at 435.

The Falls City Court cited a Fifth Circuit decision as an illustration of the type of evidence that could refute a "causal connection." Id. In Chrysler Credit Corp. v. J. Truett Payne Co., 670 F.2d 575 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 908, 74 L. Ed. 2d 169, 103 S. Ct. 212 (1982), the court rejected a car dealer's claim that a manufacturer's bonus program constituted price discrimination. Ultimately, the court found the price differential too small to warrant an inference of injury. But, the court also noted that plaintiff's franchise (unlike its competitors') was not located in an expanding sector of the city, that plaintiff had been unable to obtain financing for its used cars, and that plaintiff had shifted its sales focus from new car purchasers to fleet purchasers. Id. at 581. These factors supplied independent reasons [89] for plaintiff's poorer performance among car dealers and thus could have broken a "causal connection" between the price differential and any decline in relative profits or market share.

As these precedents demonstrate, data concerning the level of competition in a given business sector usually does not fall within the range of rebuttal evidence. Thus, the majority today instructs the FTC to consider evidence that Falls City and Morton Salt say it is not obliged to assess. The majority rebukes the FTC for having "waved aside" evidence that "competition among dealers generally was healthy," maj. op. at 1143, and specifically directs the FTC to consider (1) the relative profit margins of retailers, wholesalers, and dual distributors, maj. op. slip op. at 36, (2) the "longstanding nature" of discounts given to Boise, "in light of the flourishing condition of the industry generally and the selected dealers specifically," id. at 1146, (3) the absence of a "cabal between Boise and the six manufacturers," id. at 1147, and (4) the fact that the discriminating sellers "have followed neutral, objective criteria" in establishing price differentials. Id. at 1147.

Though [90] it requires the Commission to assimilate this electric array of evidence, the majority insists it is "adher[ing] to traditional principles of Robinson-Patman law." Maj. op. at 1146 n.16. The majority cannot cite a single precedent, however, that finds this broad range of evidence to be a proper "rebuttal" to Morton Salt's inference of injury. The majority also protests that it has not imposed a "new evidentiary burden on the FTC." Id. But obviously the majority expects the Commission to do more with this evidence than simply accept it into the record. As the majority makes clear with its repeated references to the "intense competition" and the "absence of anti-competitive forces" in the office supplies sector, maj. op. at 1135, the FTC must somehow undercut or overcome such evidence of "competition" before the majority will countenance a finding of competitive injury. The practical effect of today's remand, then, is to force the Commission to "rebut the rebuttal." This does impose a new evidentiary burden on the FTC. Moreover, nothing in Robinson-Patman commands such an inquiry into market dynamics, and the Supreme Court has expressly pronounced it unnecessary.

As I read [91] today's decision, my colleagues offer two justifications for diverging from the Supreme Court's evidentiary guidelines. First, "this is not a case of the 'Big Five' retailers (Morton Salt), the 'Big Three' book distributors (Doubleday), the long-established, large jobbers who enjoyed manufacturer protection from uppity newcomers (Mueller) or the Hoosier beer distributor [*1155] which happened to be on the 'wrong' side of the Indiana-Kentucky state line (Falls City)." Maj. op. at 1147. The majority goes too far in reading any "big vs. small" element out of this record. It is true that many small wholesalers benefit from the functional discounts at issue. But the only wholesaler charged with using those discounts to compete against disfavored retailers is the largest distributor of office products in the nation: the Boise Cascade Corporation. J.A. at 46.

The majority's second reason for believing that "this case is simply not of the lineage of Morton Salt," maj. op. at 1139 n.14, is that it involves dual distributors. Applying price discrimination law to a dual distributor, however, is hardly a novel proposition. Indeed, the mass distributor of the '20s [92] and '30s, against whom Robinson-Patman was originally aimed, "invested capital in facilities for performing bulk storage, redelivery, and financing, so as to 'integrate' the retailing and wholesaling functions within his own organization and to eliminate middleman profits by dealing with the manufacturer directly." F. Rowe, Price Discrimination Under the Robinson-Patman Act 4 (1962). See, e.g., Purolator Products, Inc. v. FTC, 352 F.2d 874, 882 (7th Cir. 1965), cert. denied, 389 U.S. 1045, 19 L. Ed. 2d 837, 88 S. Ct. 758 (1968) (even discounts that do no more than compensate an integrated competitor for the cost of its integration are proscribed; "some WDs [warehouse distributors] have costs peculiar to their manner of doing business[, which] does not show . . . that competitors of these WDs would not be injured if some of those costs are paid by" the manufacturer).

Thus, the majority's true reason for contending that the FTC is "venturing into relatively new territory," maj. op. at 1139 n.14, is not that the case involves dual distributors. Rather, the majority is impressed by the "powerful and eloquent voices . . . railing against" the [93] type of enforcement action presented in this case. Id. Among those voices, my colleagues are particularly persuaded by Dean Pitofsky who, as a Commissioner, dissented from the FTC's complaint against Boise. Id.

Though I share my colleagues' regard for Dean Pitofsky's eloquence, I must point out that his dissent as a Commissioner was -- much like today's decision -- based more on economic philosophy than on an application of the statute before us. Commissioner Pitofsky conceded that Boise's price advantage "arguably . . . leads to an injury to competition, and therefore Section 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act is violated." J.A. at 15. The Commissioner nevertheless opposed FTC action in this case because he found "the Mueller rule[, holding that functional discounts are not exempt from Robinson-Patman's proscriptions,] is anticompetitive, anti-consumer and anti-efficient." J.A. at 17. Such economic judgments may well be appropriate when the Commission is deciding upon its enforcement priorities, but this court does not have the same discretion once the FTC has found a Robinson-Patman violation and that finding is brought before us on appeal.

Moreover, Commissioner [94] Pitofsky's reason for opposing the complaint against Boise is now moot. The Commissioner said he would be willing to judge Boise's price advantage by the less stringent Doubleday rule (which permits functional discounts under certain conditions), rather than the Mueller doctrine. But the Commissioner was unsure, on the basis of the initial staff investigation, whether a violation could be proven under Doubleday. J.A. at 21 n.*. That uncertainty has now been resolved. Both the ALJ and the Commission found that the price discrimination favoring Boise was proscribed even under the more accommodating Doubleday rule because disfavored retailers performed many of the functions that Boise performed but Boise alone received a discount. J.A. at 159-61, 200-03. I note that the majority does not challenge that legal conclusion.

In sum, the majority's two reasons for disregarding traditional Robinson-Patman doctrine -- that the price differentials in this case benefit small wholesalers and that they encourage dual distribution -- are insufficient. These reasons do not negate the harm that such price discrimination [*1156] may inflict on retail competitors and competition. [95] Applying price discrimination law to dual distributors may well bring with it inefficiencies. But they are the type of inefficiencies that Congress accepted when it enacted Robinson-Patman. As I explore more fully below, Congress in 1936 set out to help independent retailers at the expense of large chain stores. It cannot have escaped Congress' notice that the giant retailers were often more efficient.

This case does implicate, then, some of the same concerns about the economic fate of smaller retailers that gave rise to Robinson-Patman. And, even if this case did not implicate such "originalist" concerns, it has long since been established that the Robinson-Patman Act "is of general applicability and prohibits discriminations generally." FTC v. Sun Oil Co., 371 U.S. 505, 522, 9 L. Ed. 2d 466, 83 S. Ct. 358 (1963). "Neither the scope nor the intent of the statute was limited to th[e] precise situation" that generated the Robinson-Patman amendments. Id. at 520.

2. Frustrating FTC Enforcement

Just as price discrimination is proscribed regardless of the size of its victims, so the new evidentiary burden imposed by the majority threatens [96] to frustrate Robinson-Patman enforcement in every setting. The majority does not confine today's holding to cases involving dual distributors or even functional discounts. And, by generally instructing the FTC to consider evidence of competitive health in a business sector, the court does much more than expand the record. Even if injury to the structure of competition were the focus of Robinson-Patman (and I indicate below that it is not), the burden of proof that my colleagues impose on the FTC undermines the Supreme Court's objective in Morton Salt. It permits a Robinson-Patman defendant, once he introduces any evidence that competition persists in his business sector, to stall or frustrate FTC action by forcing complaint counsel to assemble a detailed and time-consuming record.

In some cases, such a record will be irrelevant since we may be asking the Commission to prove something that has not yet occurred. As the Supreme Court has often reminded us, "§ 2(a) is a prophylactic statute which is violated merely upon a showing that 'the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition.'" J. Truett Payne Co. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 451 U.S. 557, 561, 68 L. Ed. 2d 442, 101 S. Ct. 1923 (1981) [97] (emphasis in original). Even when the injury is assumed to have already occurred, however, the proof required by the majority will be inappropriate. Where a seller has imposed (or a buyer has benefited from) a substantial price difference that is not cost-justified, placing the burden of proof on that seller (or buyer) to rebut an inferred injury best accords with the equities of the situation. That burden of proof will be meaningless if it can be satisfied (and shifted back to the Commission) by simply showing that competition still exists in the relevant market.

Not only will the majority's evidentiary innovation often prove irrelevant or inappropriate; it will doubtless prove confusing, too. While the majority does specify which evidence the FTC must consider on remand in this case, maj. op. slip op. at 36-42, my colleagues provide a murky standard for evaluating this evidence. The majority tells the Commission to "determine whether Boise's evidence demonstrated that no injury or 'reasonable possibility' of competitive injury existed." Maj. op. at 1144. But this simply begs the question: What constitutes such injury? The majority implies, without clearly stating, that competitive [98] injury is manifested only when competition itself threatens to disappear from a given market. If that is the majority's standard, the majority still needs to tell the Commission how serious that threat must be. But, aside from such questions of degree, the majority's standard also raises a more fundamental legal issue.

3. Distinguishing Robinson-Patman From Other Antitrust Laws

The majority's willingness to increase the evidentiary burden on the FTC reflects, in my view, a misunderstanding of Robinson-Patman [*1157] doctrine. The majority proclaims that "Robinson-Patman is directed to the preservation of competition." Maj. op. at 1143. This description of the statute's purpose is simply too restrictive. The Congress that enacted Robinson-Patman did not focus on the process of competition to the exclusion of the living players in that process. This point is revealed in the statutory language itself. The majority presents the statute as proscribing only price differentials that tend to "injure, destroy, or prevent competition." Id. But the full text of this crucial passage banishes discrimination that would "injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person [99] who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with the customers of either of them." 15 U.S.C. § 13(a) (1982) (emphasis added).

Thus, as the Supreme Court long ago realized, "Congress intended to protect a merchant from competitive injury attributable to discriminatory prices. . . ." Morton Salt, 334 U.S. at 49 (emphasis added). The amendment to the Clayton Act "was intended to justify a finding of injury to competition by a showing of 'injury to the competitor victimized by the discrimination.'" Id. (footnote omitted; emphasis added). On the facts of Morton Salt, the FTC could thus find a § 2 (a) violation because "less-than-carload purchasers [of salt] might have been handicapped in competing with the more favored carload purchasers by the differential in price. . . ." Id. at 50.

The Morton Salt result exemplifies Professor Sullivan's summary of price discrimination case law:

> Robinson-Patman . . . secondary line cases lack any requirement that injury be shown to competitive structure or process; they rely instead on injury to particular firms in the market. [100] . . . There is warrant in the history of the statute for construing it so and the courts have regularly done so.

L. Sullivan, Handbook of the Law of Antitrust 694 (1977) (footnote omitted). Often, injury to competitors does involve (or at least foreshadow) some impact on competition. As the Ninth Circuit pointed out very recently, "competition does not exist in a vacuum; it consists of rivalry among competitors." Hasbrouck v. Texaco, Inc., 830 F.2d 1513, 1518 (9th Cir. 1987). "With respect to price discrimination claims, the significance of harm to competitors is particularly clear." Id.

In Morton Salt, for example, the court found that "the competitive opportunities of certain merchants were injured when they had to pay respondent substantially more for their goods than their competitors had to pay." 334 U.S. at 46-47 (emphasis added). The Fifth Circuit has similarly held that "a substantial price advantage can afford a favored buyer a material capital advantage by enlarging his profit margin in a highly competitive field or it can enable him to offer customer-attracting services which will give him a substantial advantage [101] over his competition." Foremost Dairies, Inc. v. FTC, 348 F.2d 674, 680 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 382 U.S. 959, 15 L. Ed. 2d 362, 86 S. Ct. 435 (1965). Indeed, the ALJ in the present case found that even if victimized retailers experienced growth in their own sales this did not foreclose injury to their ability to compete. "Their growth would have been even greater, and their profits would have increased substantially, if they had enjoyed the pricing which the six manufacturers extended to Boise." J.A. at 155.

As these examples illustrate, the relationship between injury to competitors and injury to the structure of competition is highly variable. When the former injury does produce the latter, that market impact can be anything from severe to attenuated. The academic commentators are agreed on this range of market effects. See L. Sullivan, Handbook of the Law of Antitrust 681-82 (1977); H. Hovenkamp, Economics and Federal Antitrust Law 344-45 (1985); F. Scherer, Industrial Market Structure and Economic Performance 323-25 (2d ed. 1980).

Notwithstanding the ambiguous relationship between injury to competitors and injury to competitive [102] structure, Congress saw fit to proscribe price discrimination in [*1158] secondary-line cases even when only the first of these injuries could be proven. To be sure, not every court has recognized this fact. Indeed, Boise identifies several decisions that renounce injury to competitors as a sufficient basis for § 2(a) liability. See Petitioner's Brief at 31. Most of these cases, however, involve distinguishable (and sometimes unusual) facts. E.g., General Foods Corp., 103 F.T.C. 204 (1984) (primary-line injury); Edward J. Sweeney & Sons v. Texaco, Inc., 637 F.2d 105 (3d Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 911, 68 L. Ed. 2d 300, 101 S. Ct. 1981 (1981) (price difference consisted only of a hauling allowance that was even-handedly applied); American Oil Co. v. FTC, 325 F.2d 101 (7th Cir. 1963), cert. denied, 377 U.S. 954, 12 L. Ed. 2d 498, 84 S. Ct. 1631 (1964) (price difference was of very brief duration). The remaining opinions that Boise cites are simply aberrations. See, for example, Foremost Pro Color, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 703 F.2d 534 (9th Cir. 1983), [103] cert. denied, 465 U.S. 1038, 79 L. Ed. 2d 712, 104 S. Ct. 1315 (1984).

If there were any doubt that decisions like Foremost Pro Color stray from the proper reading of Robinson-Patman, it is laid to rest by Robinson-Patman's own legislative history. That record clearly demonstrates that Congress equated any significant injury to competitors with injury to competition. As the House Report explained the need to amend the Clayton Act:

> The existing law has in practice been too restrictive in requiring a showing of general injury to competitive conditions in the line of commerce concerned, whereas the more immediately important concern is in injury to the competitor victimized by the discrimination. Only through such injury in fact can the larger, general injury result. Through this broadening of the jurisdiction of the act, a more effective suppression of such injuries is possible and the more effective protection of the public interest at the same time is achieved.

H.R. Rep. No. 2287, 74th Cong., 2d Sess. 8 (1936). See also S. Rep. No. 1502, 74th Cong., 2d Sess. 4 (1936) (similar language). Congress could not have stated more clearly its [104] conviction that, where a competitor was substantially injured, the market would eventually be injured, too. "To catch the weed in the seed," the Senate Report observed, "will keep it from coming to flower." Id.

The reason for limiting Robinson-Patman's proscription to price differences that tend to "injure, destroy or prevent competition" was simply to exclude "from the bill otherwise harmless violations of its letter." Id. In other words, the "injury to competition" test was not intended to leave substantial numbers of price differentials intact. According to the House Report, the bill "prohibit[ed] discriminations in price between purchasers where such discriminations cannot be shown to be justified by differences in the cost. . . ." H.R. Rep. No. 2287, 74th Cong., 2d Sess. 3 (1936) (emphasis added). The same document reiterated Congress' overriding concern "that the survival of independent merchants, manufacturers, and other businessmen is seriously imperiled and that remedial legislation is necessary." Id.

At bottom, today's decision refuses to recognize the inherent tension between the Robinson-Patman Act and the rest of antitrust law. The majority claims [105] the Supreme Court has instructed us not to interpret Robinson-Patman in ways that "'conflict with the purposes of other antitrust legislation.'" Maj. op. at 1138 (quoting Automatic Canteen Co. v. FTC, 346 U.S. 61, 63, 97 L. Ed. 1454, 73 S. Ct. 1017 (1953)). But my colleagues have wrenched this quotation from its context; the Supreme Court counsels us to bend price discrimination law to antitrust principles only when FTC enforcement threatens to "extend beyond the prohibitions of the [Robinson-Patman] Act." Id. (emphasis added). Indeed, what the Court in Automatic Canteen (and in two subsequent cases) declined to do was "to read [Robinson-Patman's] ambiguous language" about a seller's meeting-competition defense in ways that would violate "congressional policy as expressed in other antitrust legislation." Id. at 73. See also Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co. v. FTC, 440 U.S. 69, 80 & n.13, 99 S. Ct. 925, 59 L. Ed. 2d 153 [*1159] (1979); United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 438 U.S. 422, 458-59, 57 L. Ed. 2d 854, 98 S. Ct. 2864 (1978).

When, however, a case falls within Robinson-Patman's [106] clear prohibitions, the Supreme Court recognizes that a special concern for small business and "fairness" animates Robinson-Patman -- and that these values sometimes conflict with the free operation of competitive markets. "Congress intended to assure, to the extent reasonably practicable, that businessmen at the same functional level would start on equal competitive footing so far as price is concerned." FTC v. Sun Oil Co., 371 U.S. 505, 520, 9 L. Ed. 2d 466, 83 S. Ct. 358 (1963). "The Robinson-Patman Act was passed to deprive a large buyer of [certain] advantages," the justices declared in Morton Salt, and its "avowed purpose [was] to protect competition from all price differentials except those based in full on cost savings." 334 U.S. at 43, 44 (1948).

Commentators have framed the conflict with antitrust principles more starkly. As Professor Scherer observes, > it seems clear that the courts and the Federal Trade Commission are more inclined to err on the side of protecting competitors than protecting competition when the two goals are not congruent. And in this respect, the criteria applied when enforcing the Robinson-Patman Act [107] are at odds with the broader pro-competitive objectives of antitrust.

F. Scherer, Industrial Market Structure and Economic Performance 578 (2d ed. 1980). Professor Hovenkamp is even more blunt in making this point: "While the Robinson-Patman Act is quite hostile toward competition it is nevertheless disguised as an antitrust law." H. Hovenkamp, Economics and Federal Antitrust Law 346 (1985).

Obviously, protecting competitors from this type of price competition does not always maximize "consumer welfare." Yet, the majority insists that Robinson-Patman enforcement must not diverge from "maximization of consumer welfare," maj. op. at 1138, because to do so would violate the underlying principles of antitrust. Such a result, the majority says, would suggest "Congressional schizophrenia." Id. The majority mistakenly equates clearheadedness with singlemindedness. Congress has enacted many laws, under many different circumstances, to serve many disparate purposes. Our role as courts is to apply the laws at issue in a given case without doing violence to related statutes. It is not for us to legislate a consistency that Congress did not enact.

Thus, we may "harmonize" [108] laws so that enforcement of one does not produce violations of another, cf. Automatic Canteen Co. v. FTC, 346 U.S. at 73, but we must not entirely subjugate one law to another. I think that the majority has overstepped this fine line by a quantum leap. The court today makes price discrimination law subservient to the rest of antitrust doctrine, when it declines to enforce Robinson-Patman in any way that might undermine "maximization of consumer welfare." As the Supreme Court has said of Robinson-Patman enforcement, "we are not free on the basis of our own economic predilections to make the choice between harm to [two groups] . . .; that choice is foreclosed by the determination in the statute itself in favor of equality of [price] treatment." FTC v. Sun Oil Co., 371 U.S. 505, 519, 9 L. Ed. 2d 466, 83 S. Ct. 358 (1963). The majority today has opted for what it thinks is good free-market philosophy -- at the expense of faithfully interpreting the law that Congress passed. That is not the role of a court interpreting policy made by others.

4. The Commission's Determination Should be Upheld

Since I decline to impose a new evidentiary burden [109] upon the FTC, the question that I believe is before this court is whether the Commission abused its discretion or was unsupported by substantial evidence in holding that the functional discounts in this case constitute proscribed price discrimination. See Ash Grove Cement Co. v. FTC, 577 F.2d 1368, 1378 (9th Cir.) ("appellate [*1160] review of [FTC] fact-findings [is confined] to a determination whether they are supported by substantial evidence"), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 982, 58 L. Ed. 2d 653, 99 S. Ct. 571 (1978); Colonial Stores Inc. v. FTC, 450 F.2d 733, 740 n.14 (5th Cir. 1971) ("even when the Commission's findings[] are framed in terms of legal conclusions, their presumptive validity is considerable. FTC v. Mary Carter Paint Co., 1965, 382 U.S. 46, 48-49, 15 L. Ed. 2d 128, 86 S. Ct. 219 (1965).").

Ultimately, the ALJ's and the Commission's finding of competitive injury rested on one essential fact: the size of the functional discounts that Boise received (which ranged from 5 to 33 percent) exceeded the net profit rates of the dealers. These profit margins were quite low because of the intense [110] competition in the office supplies business. "Considering these facts," the ALJ stated, "the only possible inference is that the effect of the substantial and sustained price discriminations favoring Boise may be to destroy or prevent competition with the unfavored dealers." J.A. at 152.

The fact that a substantial price discount exceeds the disfavored dealers' profit margins or occurs in a highly competitive sector has been found to justify the Morton Salt inference of injury in many cases. See, e.g., Corn Products Refining Co. v. FTC, 324 U.S. 726, 742, 89 L. Ed. 1320, 65 S. Ct. 961 (1945); Hasbrouck v. Texaco, Inc., 830 F.2d 1513, 1519 (9th Cir. 1987); Kroger Co. v. FTC, 438 F.2d 1372 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 871, 30 L. Ed. 2d 115, 92 S. Ct. 59 (1971); Foremost Dairies, Inc. v. FTC, 348 F.2d 674 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 382 U.S. 959, 15 L. Ed. 2d 362, 86 S. Ct. 435 (1965); United Biscuit Co. v. FTC, 350 F.2d 615 (7th Cir. 1965), cert. denied, 383 U.S. 926, 15 L. Ed. 2d 845, 86 S. Ct. 930 (1966); Monroe Auto Equip. Co. v. FTC, 347 F.2d 401 (7th Cir. 1965), [111] cert. denied, 382 U.S. 1009, 86 S. Ct. 613, 15 L. Ed. 2d 525 (1966).

In this case, the inference of injury was not rebutted by any evidence that the price differences were somehow offset or otherwise would not harm disfavored retailers. Indeed, there was evidence reinforcing the likelihood of harm: the ALJ found that many of the wholesaling functions that ostensibly justified Boise's discounts were also performed by the retailers who received no discounts. J.A. at 139, 141, 159. Thus, the retailing costs incurred by Boise and its disfavored competitors were likely to be similar. Additional evidence suggested that profit margins were higher for Boise than for its disfavored competitors -- although, as the majority points out, these statistics were not strictly comparable. Maj. op. slip op. at 36. Given this evidence and the numerous precedents supporting the Commission's treatment of substantial price differentials, I believe the Commission's result must be upheld. Especially is this so, since "the precise impact of a particular practice on the trade is for the Commission, not the courts, to determine." FTC v. Motion Picture Advertising Service Co., 344 U.S. 392, 396, 97 L. Ed. 426, 73 S. Ct. 361 (1953). [112] See also Corn Products Refining Co. v. FTC, 324 U.S. at 739.

5. Deference to the Commission's Expertise

The advisability of deferring to the Commission's reading of close cases is highlighted, I think, by Judge Williams' concurrence. In counseling the Commission on what it can conclude from this case, Judge Williams relies on abstract economic models to interpret ambiguous facts and solve real market problems. Apparently, my colleague prefers "black letter economics," concurring opinion ("con. op.") at 1149, to black letter law.

The particular economic model that Judge Williams invokes is the process of arbitrage. Judge Williams believes there can be no price discrimination unless there is a "barrier preventing resales by favored customers to disfavored ones." Con. op. at 1149. Since, in this case, favored wholesalers do sell to disfavored retailers, my colleague assures us that "the 'price discrimination' here cannot lead to the sort of competitive injury evidently feared by Congress." Con. op. at 1152 (emphasis added). Despite a record clearly demonstrating that disfavored dealers have paid thousands of [*1161] dollars more than Boise for [113] the same office supplies, Judge Williams is confident that no injury has occurred for one reason: this record does not exhibit any of the "textbook" barriers to arbitrage. I do not share my colleague's willingness to exalt the model over the record -- nor, I imagine, did those who drafted the Robinson-Patman Act.

I indicate below why reliance on a simplified model to infer crucial facts may be misplaced. But it is important to note at the outset that, by focusing upon arbitrage, my colleague transforms Robinson-Patman doctrine in two substantial and related ways. First, Judge Williams is willing to assume that arbitrage (or a viable threat of arbitrage) has done its work if favored purchasers who receive price discounts "perform services of offsetting value to manufacturers." Con. op. at 1150. Such a showing may satisfy Judge Williams, but it does not satisfy Robinson-Patman. Even under the more accommodating Doubleday rule, a price discount is not legal simply because the beneficiary performs "offsetting services." Rather, all buyers who perform similar services must also be eligible for the discount. In this case, the FTC expressly found that disfavored retailers perform [114] services similar to those performed by Boise yet are ineligible for the discount. J.A. at 201-02. Thus, the discounts in this case run afoul of Robinson-Patman, even if they pass the "economic" test for injury that my colleague has newly fashioned.

The second way in which the focus upon arbitrage transforms Robinson-Patman doctrine is that it effectively alters the litigation burden. Just as the majority opinion imposes a new evidentiary duty on the FTC, so the concurring opinion, for its part, creates a new presumption favoring defendants. Despite Morton Salt's inference of injury whenever substantial price differences are imposed on competing buyers, Judge Williams creates an inference of noninjury whenever his model predicts that arbitrage must have occurred. Evidently, if no physical or other "barriers" between favored and disfavored buyers appear in the record, the courts should presume (whether rebuttably or irrebuttably, I am not sure) that arbitrage has eliminated any ill effects of price discrimination.

Thus, Judge Williams' reliance on the concept of arbitrage is not compatible with current Robinson-Patman doctrine. Even if it were compatible, however, I would [115] still question my colleague's willingness to infer that effective arbitrage has occurred (and that competitive injury has been eliminated) on the basis of abstract principles about resale "barriers." Numerous Robinson-Patman precedents demonstrate the defect in Judge Williams' approach. Those precedents counsel reliance on "realistic appraisals of relevant competitive facts," FTC v. Sun Oil Co., 371 U.S. 505, 527, 9 L. Ed. 2d 466, 83 S. Ct. 358 (1963), not general economic theorems. The "relevant competitive facts" in Morton Salt, for example, suggested none of the barriers to arbitrage that Judge Williams would make prerequisite to § 2(a) violations. Indeed the five buyers who benefited from the lowest prices for Blue Label salt were precisely the sort of integrated retailers that Boise exemplifies in the present case. 334 U.S. at 41 n.4. The opinion cited no evidence of barriers -- physical, legal, contractual or otherwise -- that prevented favored buyers from engaging in arbitrage by reselling the salt to disfavored buyers. Nevertheless, the Court found price discrimination and competitive injury.

Judge Williams' economic model yields only [116] two explanatory "hypotheses" for the facts in Morton Salt. Con. op. slip op. at 6. Since arbitrage is clearly "available" according to the model, either (1) manufacturers are giving "unmerited discounts" to the favored buyers or (2) "there are no unmerited discounts." Id. "The principle accepted without dissent by economists," Judge Williams reminds us, "is that the first hypothesis is utterly implausible." Id. My colleague is right, of course, that economists would not expect "office supply manufacturers [to] engage[] in . . . a bizarre charitable program." Id. But simply to recite this conclusion is to recognize its emptiness. The real question is whether economists "accept without dissent" the [*1162] Hobson's choice of explanatory "hypotheses" that Judge Williams offers.

Are there "relevant competitive facts," more compelling than my colleague's "hypotheses," that may explain why integrated retailers like Boise (or like Safeway and A & P, in Morton Salt) do not engage in arbitrage? I believe there are. Without trespassing on the work of the FTC, whose familiarity with this record and general expertise in analyzing trade restraints leave it best equipped [117] to evaluate Boise's price advantage, I would at least point out some aspects of this case that may have thwarted the process of arbitrage. These factors operate on the two levels at which the arbitrage sales might occur: retail and wholesale.

Consider, first, the possibility of arbitrage sales from favored to disfavored retailers. Although retail sales account for only forty-two percent of Boise's office supplies business, J.A. at 57, this average is misleading. Boise's proportion of retail business in particular sales regions is usually much lower or much higher. In seven of the eight distribution centers that the FTC examined in this case, Boise's proportion of retail sales ranged between eighty and ninety percent. J.A. at 58. When a dual distributor chiefly functions in a retail capacity (but purchases its inventory at wholesale rates), it is not to the distributor's advantage to reduce prices for competing retailers by engaging in arbitrage. Boise's profit margins are higher if it takes the same items it could sell to competing retailers and, instead, sells them directly to end users. Moreover, if Boise undercuts the prevailing price to the other retailers, those retailers can [118] then lower their own prices to customers, which in turn would adversely affect Boise's direct sales to end users.

The logic of this economic calculus undoubtedly informed the strategies of mass retailers in the '20s and '30s. Indeed, the FTC investigation that spawned the Robinson-Patman Act concluded that "lower selling prices are a very substantial, if not the chief, factor in the growth of chain-store merchandising, and . . . lower buying prices than are available to independent [stores] are a most substantial, if not the chief, factor in these lower selling prices." Federal Trade Commission, Final Report on the Chain-Store Investigation, S. Doc. No. 4, 74th Cong., 1st Sess. 53 (1935). Judge Williams' conclusion that price discrimination could not occur in such circumstances (because there were no barriers to arbitrage) is unpersuasive. It cannot explain why Robinson-Patman was enacted or why disfavored retailers complained so bitterly before Congress stepped in.

Notwithstanding the fact that the competitive injury in this case is inflicted by dual distributors acting in their retail capacity, Judge Williams expects the injury to be mitigated by arbitrage occurring in [119] a different context:

sales by favored wholesalers to disfavored retailers. Con. op. slip op. at 6. One difficulty with this view is that, even if arbitrage effectively eliminated discrimination between wholesalers and disfavored retailers, it still might not mitigate such injury inflicted by favored retailers. This would be true, for example, if wholesalers who engage in arbitrage cannot cut their resale prices as low as favored retailers can because the wholesalers perform more costly "offsetting services."

Even assuming, however, that arbitrage between wholesalers and retailers could eliminate all competitive injury, there are factors in this record that might interfere with that process. To begin with, the record shows that wholesalers try very hard to stay informed of the prices that manufacturers charge to retailers. Such information largely determines wholesalers' own pricing toward retailers. J.A. at 51-54. This suggests that manufacturers may be exerting price leadership. If they have indeed established some sort of price umbrella, wholesalers may be forsaking arbitrage for the predictable profits of somewhat higher prices.

Effective arbitrage also entails some [120] threshold costs of identifying disfavored buyers of substantial quantities of each good that is discriminatorily priced and of fashioning the appropriate discount on each of those items for each of those buyers. [*1163] Price competition on office supplies may be especially difficult -- and unrewarding -- because wholesalers like Boise carry more than 8,000 products in their catalogue, J.A. at 51, and many retailers may purchase only a small number of items or from only a few manufacturers' product lines. The record supports this conclusion. Favored wholesalers more frequently compete for retail accounts on the basis of their overall service or their salespersons than by selectively discounting their catalogue prices. J.A. at 54, 61, 123a-124.

The record also reveals that net profit rates for Boise and other wholesalers are significantly higher than among disfavored retailers. J.A. at 62, 121. This suggests that whatever price competition occurs among wholesalers to win retailer accounts is constrained. In other words, wholesalers will not cut their prices below a certain level that preserves their higher profits. Once again, the fact that wholesalers more often compete on the [121] basis of their service than on the basis of discounts supports this conclusion that price competition is limited.

Merely describing these factors that may hinder the process of arbitrage illustrates why a close understanding of a particular market is crucial for determining whether price discrimination has occurred. It is precisely that detailed familiarity with the facts that the FTC possesses and that this court lacks. Absent some indication that the Commission has erred in the law or not supported its conclusions with the evidence, I would refrain from foisting this court's own theory of the case upon the FTC. The operation vel non of a process of arbitrage is one of those matters on which "the inferences to be drawn from [the facts proven] are for the Commission to determine, not the courts." Corn Products Refining Co. v. FTC, 324 U.S. at 739.

Implicit in Judge Williams' instructions to the FTC is a fear that Robinson-Patman doctrine will not accommodate economic realities like arbitrage unless this court forces the issue. But the defense of availability, which has been repeatedly recognized by the courts, allows a defendant to defeat a charge of price [122] discrimination precisely by proving that the lower prices were available to the disfavored purchasers from some other source -- i.e., from an arbitrager. See Tri-Valley Packing Ass'n v. FTC, 329 F.2d 694 (9th Cir. 1964). In this case, Boise raised the availability defense, and the FTC found it was unsupported by the evidence. J.A. at 124-29.

The majority today rewrites a controversial law with its decision to send the case back to the FTC. I may share my colleagues' doubts about whether the price discrimination enjoined in this case produces such pernicious effects. But I am unwilling to create new doctrine in order to accommodate my policy views. Just as "the Fourteenth Amendment does not enact Mr. Herbert Spencer's Social Statics," Lochner v. New York, 198 U.S. 45, 75, 49 L. Ed. 937, 25 S. Ct. 539 (1905) (Holmes, J., dissenting), so Congress did not mandate a "turbulent sea of pro-competitive efficiency and maximization of consumer welfare," maj. op. at 1138, when it enacted Robinson-Patman. That Act has been held repeatedly to proscribe price differences of the substantial size and duration that are exhibited here. I would uphold the Commission's [123] injunction.

I dissent.

Cemar, Inc. v. Nissan Motor Corp.

United States District Court for the District of Delaware

January 29, 1988

Civil Action No. 87-165 - CMW

Reporter

678 F. Supp. 1091 *; 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 646 ; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,922

Cemar, Inc., t/a Rising Sun Motors, Plaintiff, v. Nissan Motor Corporation in U.S.A., Defendant; Nissan Motor Corporation in U.S.A., Counter-Plaintiff, v. Cemar, Inc., t/a Rising Sun Motors, and William T. Murray, Counter-Defendants dealers, alleges, per se violation, franchise, competitors, anticompetitive, enterprise, delivery, motion to dismiss, terms, rule of reason, unpopular, conspired, notice, Sherman Act, manufacturer, supplier, courts, tied product, distributor, cases, competitive injury, wire fraud, discriminated, practices, argues, fails, mail, alleged violation, concerted refusal

Core Terms

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN1[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

In a motion to dismiss, the facts alleged by plaintiff in its complaint will be taken as true for the purpose of deciding the motion.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN2[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) states that a motion to dismiss can be granted for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. The court can dismiss the complaint only if it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of its claim that would entitle it to relief. To decide whether to grant defendant's motion to dismiss, the court must take plaintiff's allegations as true and draw any reasonable inferences in favor of plaintiff.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN3[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

Plaintiff is required only to plead a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief. A more liberal standard is often applied to antitrust pleadings. Thus, in antitrust cases, where the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators, dismissals prior to giving the plaintiff ample opportunity for discovery should be granted very sparingly. Plaintiff is required to plead enough data so that the elements of the claim for relief can be identified.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, prohibits every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce. However, because almost all business agreements may be interpreted as restraining trade to some degree, § 1 has been construed for the most part to proscribe only those combinations that unduly restrain trade. Therefore, courts usually apply a rule of reason and examine the anticompetitive effects of the challenged activity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN5[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Courts have developed a list of activities which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use. These per se violations are made out solely by alleging the conduct. No public injury or anticompetitive effects need be specifically alleged because the courts assume that activities falling within per se categories have an anticompetitive effect.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN6[] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

Certain group boycotts are per se violations of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Even though concerted refusals to deal are a form of group boycott, courts have not accepted the notion that all concerted refusals to deal fall automatically as per se violations of the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN7[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

A plaintiff seeking application of the per se rule must present a threshold case that the challenged activity falls into a category likely to have predominantly anticompetitive effects. The mere allegation of a concerted refusal to deal does not suffice because not all concerted refusals to deal are predominantly anticompetitive.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN8[] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

A concerted activity is a per se group boycott if the purpose is to exclude a person or group from the market, or to accomplish some other anti-competitive objective, or both.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > Exclusive Dealing

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > Antitrust Issues

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Nonprice Restraints

HN9[] Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing, Exclusive Dealing

A vertical restraint is not usually subject to per se rules because manufacturers are given wide latitude with marketing decisions concerning exclusive dealerships. However, the horizontal nature of a conspiracy between existing dealers and a manufacturer to pressure a discounter has the requisite anticompetitive effects to be a per se violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN10[] Sherman Act, Claims

Although a unilateral decision to refuse to deal is not in and of itself a violation of the antitrust laws, if the decision is not purely unilateral but is the product of competitors working in concert with themselves or in conjunction with the company to exclude a person or group from the market, the necessary elements of a boycott in the classical sense may be present, and hence a violation may be made out under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > Antitrust Issues

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > General Overview

HN11[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

Because a manufacturer can deal or refuse to deal with whomever it likes if it does so independently, a terminated distributor must produce evidence which tends to exclude the possibility that the manufacturer and nonterminated distributors were acting independently. Thus, although dealer substitution in response to complaints, or at the suggestion of another dealer, is not per se illegal, it may be per se illegal if the decision was prompted by dealer coercion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > Antitrust Issues

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

HN12[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

When a marketing decision, although ostensibly taken by a manufacturer, is in fact the result of pressure from another customer, such a decision must be scrutinized more closely than solely unilateral action might be. If the action of a manufacturer or other supplier is taken at the direction of its customer, the restraint becomes primarily horizontal in nature in that one customer is seeking to suppress its competition by utilizing the power of a common supplier.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > Antitrust Issues

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN13[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

The "key element" in maintaining a case under a per se theory is simply probative evidence of some form of collusion between a supplier and a competing distributor which interjects horizontal conflict.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN14[] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

Price considerations in antitrust law and the centrality of price maintenance are essential to a court's decision that a per se rule be applied.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Denial of Allegations

HN15[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

If a plaintiff's allegations do not meet the standard for a per se violation under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, the facts are evaluated under the rule of reason. Under that rule, the plaintiff must show that the combination or conspiracy produced adverse, anti-competitive effects within relevant product and geographic markets.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN16[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

A rule of reason inquiry consists of examining the anticompetitive effects of an alleged restraint. Thus, to succeed, a plaintiff must allege the actual anticompetitive impact of the alleged conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN17[] Private Actions, Remedies

It is well established that the antitrust laws protect competition, not individual competitors. Thus, a plaintiff must allege antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Jurisdiction

HN18[] Tying Arrangements, Clayton Act

A tie-in is an agreement by a party to sell one product, the tying product, but only on the condition that the buyer also purchase a different or tied product. The vice of tying arrangements lies in the use of economic power in one market to restrict competition on the merits in another. Although § 3 of the Clayton Act specifically deals with tying, many cases do not meet the Clayton Act's jurisdictional requirements. Thus, courts also analyze tying claims under the Sherman Act's, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., prohibition of contracts in restraint of trade or commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Per Se Rule

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN19[] Tying Arrangements, Per Se Rule

Certain tying arrangements are unreasonable per se. To succeed in a per se claim, a plaintiff must prove that a tying arrangement exists and that the defendant has sufficient economic power with respect to the tying product to appreciably restrain free competition in the market for the tied product and a not insubstantial amount of interstate commerce is affected.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN20[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

For a per se violation in a typing arrangement, there must be a threshold determination of a substantial potential for impact on competition for the per se rule to be applicable. It emphasized that forcing is an indication that there is a restraint in competition for the tied product and that whether the per se rule applies depends on whether forcing is probable and on the probability of anticompetitive consequences in the market for the tied product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN21[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

A tying claim must be evaluated under the rule of reason when the requirements for a per se violation are not met.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN22[] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

The Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(a), makes it unlawful to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > General Overview

HN23[] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

Price discrimination under the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13, is simply defined as charging different prices to different purchasers. However, many courts have concluded that this means the net price actually received by the seller for the goods, including all discounts and allowances.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > Meeting Competition Defense

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN24[] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

A plaintiff must allege competitive injury in a Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(a) action. The two elements of a § 13(a) violation are price discrimination and injury to competition. In order to meet this requirement, a plaintiff must show actual competitive injury, as shown by market analysis, or predatory intent, as shown by a competitor sacrificing short-term revenues to drive plaintiff out of the market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN25[] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

A naked demonstration of injury to a specific competitor without more is not sufficient to sustain a claim under the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN26[] Price Discrimination, Competitive Injuries

A plaintiff must allege a connection between an alleged discrimination in delivery practices and a difference in price.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > General Overview

HN27[] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

The Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13, only covers discrimination in actual sales and does not cover refusals to deal. Likewise, a refusal to supply as much as a plaintiff wanted is also a refusal to deal that is not covered by § 13(a).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > Promotional Allowances & Services

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN28[] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

The Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(e) concerns discrimination in services or facilities connected with the processing, handling, sale, or offering for sale of such commodity to purchasers in the resale business. It applies to discrimination in advertising and promotional services because these are connected with resale rather than an original sale. A plaintiff need not allege competitive injury to claim under this section. Liability under § 13(e), unlike § 13(a), does not depend upon competitive injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > Promotional Allowances & Services

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN29[] Price Discrimination, Competitive Injuries

Delivery is not a service or facility within the meaning of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(e).

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

Securities Law > Civil Liability Considerations > Securities Litigation Reform & Standards > General Overview

HN30[] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

To establish a violation of § 1962(c) of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962(c), a plaintiff must allege (1) conduct (2) of an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity. In order to maintain a private suit for treble damages, a plaintiff must also prove that it was injured in its business or property by reason of a violation of § 1962.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN31[] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act, Elements

See 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962(c).

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

HN32[] Pleadings, Rule Application & Interpretation

To establish that an association is a Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations enterprise, a plaintiff must demonstrate (1) that the enterprise is an ongoing organization with some sort of framework or superstructure for making or carrying out decisions; (2) that the members of the enterprise function as a continuing unit with established duties; and finally (3) that the enterprise must be separate and apart from the pattern of activity in which it engages. This is a difficult burden to meet. However, the burden of pleading an enterprise is less than the burden of proof. Thus, a plaintiff need plead nothing more than a bare allegation that defendant and others formed an enterprise.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

HN33[] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations, Claims

A violation of the federal mail fraud statute, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1341, requires a scheme to defraud and the mailing of a letter in furtherance of the scheme. Similarly, a violation of the federal wire fraud statute, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1343, requires a scheme to defraud and the use of an interstate wire in furtherance of the scheme. Although a defendant need not be convicted under these criminal statutes for a plaintiff to maintain a civil claim against it under the Racketeer Influenced and Corruption Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961 et seq., the plaintiff must allege a violation of at least one of the criminal statutes listed in § 1961(1) to maintain a suit.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

HN34[] Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) requires that the circumstances of fraud be stated with particularity. This rule applies to allegations of fraud under Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961 et seq. The circumstances of fraud include such matters as the time, place and contents of false representations, as well as the identity of the person making the misrepresentation and what was obtained or given up thereby. Courts must balance this strict standard with the notice-pleading idea of Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a). Thus, a plaintiff is free to use alternative means of injecting precision and some measure of substantiation into their allegations of fraud. A plaintiff need not plead with temporal or geographic specificity, but must plead with sufficient particularity to place the defendants on notice of the conduct of which they are charged and to safeguard against spurious allegations.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN35[] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act, Elements

To constitute a pattern of racketeering activity, there must be at least two acts of racketeering activity within ten years. While two acts are necessary to establish a pattern, they may not be sufficient. A continuity plus relationship is required. However, a single scheme can constitute a racketeering pattern and the scheme need not be ongoing or open-ended. Continuity should not be subject to one verbal formula but should instead be reviewed on a case-by-case basis. The relevant factors include the number of unlawful acts, the length of time over which the acts were committed, the similarity of the acts, the number of victims, the number of perpetrators, and the character of the unlawful activity.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN36[] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act, Elements

The target of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961 et seq., as its name suggests, is criminal activity that, because of its organization, duration, and objectives poses, or during its existence posed, a threat of a series of injuries over a significant period of time.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

HN37[] Amendment of Pleadings, Leave of Court

Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a) instructs that leave to amend shall be freely granted when justice so requires.

Counsel: [1] Kenneth W. Lewis, Esquire of Daley & Lewis, of Counsel: David F. Albright, Esquire, Franklin T. Caudill, Esquire and Paul J. Cohen, Esquire of Semmes, Bowen & Semmes, Attorneys for Plaintiff and Counter-Defendants.

Robert K. Payson, Esquire of Potter, Anderson & Corroon, of Counsel: Reed E. Hundt, Esquire and Eric A. Stern, Esquire of Latham & Watkins, Attorneys for Defendant.

Judges: Wright, Senior Judge.

Opinion by: WRIGHT

Opinion

[*1093] WRIGHT, Senior Judge.

This action is a motion to dismiss arising out of a suit filed by an automobile dealer against its supplier. Cemar, Inc., the plaintiff, alleges that the defendant, Nissan Motor Corporation in U.S.A., engaged in a pattern of conduct to discriminate against it with respect to the processing, handling, and sale of motor vehicles and parts, and to eventually replace it with a more favored dealer. Cemar seeks damages under the Dealer's Day in Court Act, the Sherman Act, the Robinson-Patman Act, the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"), the Maryland Transportation Code, and common law theories of fraud, negligent misrepresentation and breach of contract. Nissan Motor Corporation in U.S.A., in turn, counterclaims [2] against Cemar, Inc., and William T. Murray, the president and principal shareholder of Cemar, Inc.

The suit was originally filed in the District of Maryland on June 28, 1985. On September 20, 1985, the defendant filed a Motion to Dismiss the counts under the Sherman Act, the Robinson-Patman Act, and RICO. The case was transferred to this Court on April 1, 1987, with this motion pending. The parties have since updated their briefs and reargued the Motion before this Court.

I. FACTS ALLEGED BY CEMAR

Because this action is HN1[] a motion to dismiss, the facts alleged by Cemar in its complaint will be taken as true for the purpose of deciding the motion. Hospital Bldg. Co. v. Rex Hospital Trustees, 425 U.S. 738, 740, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338, 96 S. Ct. 1848 (1976). Plaintiff, Cemar, Inc., t/a Rising Sun Motors ("Cemar"), is a Delaware corporation which, at the time of the activities in question, operated an automobile dealership in Rising Sun, Maryland. Defendant, Nissan Motor Corporation in U.S.A. ("Nissan"), is a California corporation owned and controlled by Nissan Motor Corp. [3] , Ltd., a Japanese corporation. Cemar became an authorized dealer in August 1974, and it operated under "Datsun Dealer Sales and Service Agreements" until it sold its dealership on May 6, 1983. Cemar alleges that Nissan discriminated against it while it was a dealer and conspired with Aubrey J. Cox, Tillman B. Cox, Cox Enterprises, Inc., and Tim Cox Enterprises, Inc. ("the Coxes"), and possibly others, to replace Cemar with the Coxes as an authorized Nissan dealer.

Cemar alleges that Nissan discriminated against it with respect to the delivery and allocation of vehicles and parts by making them more readily available to other dealers and on more favorable terms. Nissan [*1094] allegedly allotted Cemar a disproportionately large number of unpopular vehicles, which Cemar did not desire and which were difficult to sell for a profit, in comparison to what Nissan allotted to other similarly situated dealers. Nissan then coerced Cemar into buying the unpopular vehicles by refusing to sell Cemar popular vehicles without its also buying the unpopular ones. Under Nissan's "Equitable Distribution System", dealers' potential sales are supposed to be considered when allocating vehicles. [4] Cemar alleges that Nissan ignored this system and instead allocated new vehicles to dealers based on past sales, the "travel rate". Cemar's sales were lower than other dealers due to its receiving a higher percentage of unpopular vehicles. This lower travel rate caused Cemar to continue to receive high proportions of unpopular vehicles. Nissan "compounded" this problem by delaying shipments to Cemar in order to further decrease Cemar's travel rate, and by knowingly using false Retail Delivery Reporting Cards submitted by other dealers in calculating their travel rates. With respect to the sale of parts, Cemar alleges discriminatory delivery and allocation practices. In addition, it claims that Nissan discriminated against it with respect to credit terms, requiring it to accept parts C.O.D. while allowing other dealers to maintain open accounts.

Cemar claims that the cause of the discrimination was that Nissan had personal antipathy towards it and had developed friendships with other dealers. It also alleges that other dealers used bribes, kickbacks, and other improper incentives in order to gain favorable treatment. Cemar refused to engage in such improper activities and sought [5] a better location and fairer allocation. Consequently, Nissan treated it unfavorably.

Cemar alleges that Nissan's ultimate goal was to eliminate it as a dealer and replace it with the Coxes. Nissan carried this plan out with the consent and collaboration of the Coxes. Cemar desired to move to a potentially more lucrative location. Nissan led Cemar to believe that it approved of the move and would grant Cemar another franchise in perpetuity. However, after the deal was consummated and Cemar had moved from its old location and invested a substantial amount of money in the new location, Nissan informed Cemar that it would offer Cemar only a one-year franchise agreement, in breach of Cemar's understanding of the terms of its move. Cemar had no choice but to sign the agreement. The one-year agreement and Nissan's discriminatory practices created pressure for Cemar to sell its franchise. However, Nissan informed Cemar that the only dealer it would approve for that location was the Coxes, and it threatened not to renew the franchise agreement unless Cemar sold the dealership to the Coxes.

Cemar claims that Nissan engaged in several improper activities concerning the sale in addition [6] to Nissan's discriminating against Cemar, conspiring with the Coxes, and using coercive methods. Nissan "transmitted" a false written notice to the Maryland Motor Vehicles Administration stating that Cemar was no longer a dealer and had already sold the franchise to the Coxes. This was done prior to the approval of the Coxes as a dealer and was allegedly designed to make it illegal for Cemar to sell vehicles in the future. Nissan made similar statements to other dealers. Nissan also gave confidential business information concerning Cemar to the Coxes that enabled them to obtain an advantage in negotiating with Cemar. The Coxes in turn disrupted employee relations at Cemar and bribed Cemar employees. Cemar finally sold the franchise to the Coxes and leased certain property to them with a purchase option on May 6, 1983. Cemar alleges that this sale and lease were at prices lower than what it could have obtained in a market free of improper behavior.

II. MOTION TO DISMISS

Rule 12(b)(6) HN2[] states that a motion to dismiss can be granted for "failure to state a claim upon which relief can be [7] granted." Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6). The Court can dismiss the complaint only if "it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of its claim which would entitle it to relief." *Conley v. Gibson, [1095] 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957). To decide whether to grant Nissan's motion, the Court must take Cemar's allegations as true and draw any reasonable inferences in favor of Cemar.

Cemar HN3[] is required only to plead "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed.R.Civ.P. 8(a)(2). A more liberal standard is often applied to antitrust pleadings. 5 C. Wright & A. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1228 (1969) [hereinafter "Wright & Miller"]. Thus, "in antitrust cases, where 'the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators,' . . . dismissals prior to giving the plaintiff ample opportunity for discovery should be granted very sparingly." Hospital Bldg. Co., 425 U.S. at 746 (citation omitted). Cemar is required to plead "enough data [8] [so that] the elements of the claim for relief can be identified." 5 Wright & Miller, supra § 1228. The elements of each claim will be described in the discussion of each count.

III. COUNT II - CONCERTED REFUSAL TO DEAL

In Count II, Cemar incorporates the facts described above and claims that "Defendant contracted, combined, and conspired with the Coxes, competitors of Plaintiff, to terminate the Plaintiff's franchise, and to perform numerous acts of discrimination and bad faith, coercion, and intimidation in order to accomplish said termination, all of which constitutes a concerted refusal to deal in per se violation of [the Sherman Act,] 15 U.S.C. § 1." Complaint para. 24 (emphasis added). Cemar then alleges that it suffered damages including lost profits and business opportunities "as a result of the acts complained of." Complaint para. 25. Nissan argues that its activities do not rise to the level of a per se violation and that Cemar cannot succeed under a rule of reason inquiry because it has not alleged "antitrust injury."

Section 1 [9] of the Sherman Act HN4[] prohibits "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce." 15 U.S.C. § 1 (1982). However, "because almost all business agreements may be interpreted as restraining trade to some degree, § 1 of the Sherman Act has been construed for the most part to proscribe only those combinations that 'unduly' restrain trade." Cernuto, Inc. v. United Cabinet Corp., 595 F.2d 164, 166 (3d Cir. 1979). Therefore, courts usually apply a "rule of reason" and examine the anticompetitive effects of the challenged activity. Malley-Duff & Assoc. v. Crown Life Ins. Co., 734 F.2d 133, 139 (3d Cir. 1984), cert. denied sub nom. Agency Holding Corp. v. Malley-Duff & Assoc., Inc., 469 U.S. 1072, 83 L. Ed. 2d 505, 105 S. Ct. 564 (1984). However, the HN5[] courts have developed a list of activities "which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate [10] inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use." Northern Pac. R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 (1958). These per se violations are made out solely by alleging the conduct. No "public injury" or anticompetitive effects need be specifically alleged because the courts assume that activities falling within per se categories have an anticompetitive effect. See, e.g., Radiant Burners, Inc. v. Peoples Gas Light & Coke Co., 364 U.S. 656, 660, 5 L. Ed. 2d 358, 81 S. Ct. 365 (1961) (need only allege a violation and that plaintiff was damaged by it).

The Supreme Court has held that HN6[] certain group boycotts are per se violations of the Sherman Act. See United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127, 16 L. Ed. 2d 415, 86 S. Ct. 1321 (1966); Klor's Inc. v. Broadway Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 79 S. Ct. 705, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741 (1959). Even though concerted refusals to deal are a form of group boycott, courts have not accepted "the notion that [11] all concerted refusals to deal fall automatically as per se violations of the antitrust laws." Larry V. Muko, Inc. v. Southwestern Pa. Bldg. & Constr. Trades Council, 670 F.2d 421, 429 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 916, 74 L. Ed. 2d 182, 103 S. Ct. 229 (1982). Thus, HN7[] "[a] plaintiff seeking application of the per [*1096] se rule must present a threshold case that the challenged activity falls into a category likely to have predominantly anticompetitive effects. The mere allegation of a concerted refusal to deal does not suffice because not all concerted refusals to deal are predominantly anticompetitive." Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 298, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202, 105 S. Ct. 2613 (1985). Although the Third Circuit has not addressed this issue since the Supreme Court's decision in the Northwest Wholesale case, it has previously stated that it has "attempted to limit the application of the per se rule to the 'classic' boycott." Larry v. Muko, 670 F.2d 421, 430. [12] Thus, HN8[] a concerted activity is a per se group boycott if the "purpose is to" exclude a person or group from the market, or to accomplish some other anti-competitive objective, or both." De Filippo v. Ford Motor Co., 516 F.2d 1313, 1318 (3d Cir.) (action by manufacturer and dealers that denied special terms to plaintiff but did not deny the opportunity to be a Ford dealer was not a per se violation) (citation omitted), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 912, 46 L. Ed. 2d 141, 96 S. Ct. 216 (1975).

A. Per Se Analysis

Cemar alleges that Nissan conspired with the Coxes to eliminate it as a Nissan dealer and replace it with the Coxes by coercing it to sell its franchise to the Coxes. The Coxes are not parties to this suit. This forced sale of the franchise situation is analogous to the situation where a supplier terminates a franchise. Such HN9[] a "vertical" restraint is not usually subject to per se rules because manufacturers are given wide latitude with marketing decisions [13] concerning exclusive dealerships. See Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 58-59, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 (1977) (vertical non-price restrictions are subject to the rule of reason); see also Tunis Bros. Co. v. Ford Motor Co., 763 F.2d 1482, 1497 (3d Cir. 1985) (distinguishing horizontal and vertical restraints), vacated, 475 U.S. 1105, 106 S. Ct. 1509, 89 L. Ed. 2d 909 (1986) (consideration of new precedent), aff'd. on remand, 823 F.2d 49 (3d Cir. 1987). On the other hand, the Supreme Court has concluded that the horizontal nature of a conspiracy between existing dealers and a manufacturer to pressure a discounter has the requisite anticompetitive effects to be a per se violation. General Motors, 384 U.S. 127, 16 L. Ed. 2d 415, 86 S. Ct. 1321.

Some actions by suppliers against dealers have sufficient anticompetitive effects to be per se violations. Thus,

> HN10[] although a unilateral decision to refuse to deal is not in and of itself a violation of the antitrust [14] laws, if the decision is not purely unilateral but is the product of competitors working in concert with themselves or in conjunction with the company to exclude a person or group from the market, the necessary elements of a boycott in the classical sense may be present, and hence a § 1 violation may be made out.

Malley-Duff, 734 F.2d at 133 (emphasis added); cf. Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761-64, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984) (HN11[] Because a manufacturer can deal or refuse to deal with whomever it likes if it does so independently, a terminated distributor must produce evidence which "tends to exclude the possibility that the manufacturer and nonterminated distributors were acting independently."). Thus, although dealer substitution in response to complaints, or at the suggestion of another dealer, is not per se illegal, A. H. Cox & Co. v. Star Machinery Co., 653 F.2d 1302, 1306 (9th Cir. 1981), it may be per se illegal if the decision was prompted by dealer coercion. Id [15] . at n.3 (citing Cernuto, 595 F.2d 164).

Cemar relies on Cernuto, 595 F.2d 164, to support its argument that the conduct it alleges constitutes a per se violation. In Cernuto, a former distributor sued another distributor and the manufacturer because of its termination at the urging of the other distributor. The court stated that HN12[] "when a marketing decision, although ostensibly taken by a manufacturer, is in fact the result of pressure from another customer, such a decision must be scrutinized more closely than solely unilateral action might [*1097] be." Id. at 168. The court held that the facts alleged by plaintiff could make out a per se violation. Judge Adams reasoned that "if the action of a manufacturer or other supplier is taken at the direction of its customer, the restraint becomes primarily horizontal in nature in that one customer is seeking to suppress its competition by utilizing the power of a common supplier." Id. (emphasis added).

Later cases have applied this concept and held that concerted [16] activities between competing distributors and a manufacturer or supplier may be per se unlawful. For example, in Edward J. Sweeney & Sons, Inc. v. Texaco, Inc., 637 F.2d 105 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 911, 68 L. Ed. 2d 300, 101 S. Ct. 1981 (1981), Sweeney alleged that his hauling allowance as a Texaco dealer had been reduced because of complaints from competing distributors that he had been undercutting their prices. The court held that Sweeney had sufficiently alleged a per se violation, but had not presented sufficient evidence of a conspiracy. Likewise, in Fragale & Sons Beverage Co. v. Dill, 760 F.2d 469 (3d Cir. 1985), plaintiff alleged that its distributors and a competitor conspired to refuse to deal with it in order to restrain price competition by forcing it out of the market. The court held that Fragale did allege a per se violation. In Malley-Duff, 734 F.2d 133, the court held that there was sufficient evidence of a group boycott by plaintiff's insurance competitors to submit the case to a jury on a per se theory. Finally, in Tunis Bros, 763 F.2d 1482, a [17] competing Ford dealer allegedly conspired with Ford to eliminate the plaintiff's franchise by terminating it and rejecting its credit applications. Judge Higginbotham stated that HN13[] the "key element" in maintaining the case under a per se theory was "simply probative evidence of some form of collusion between a supplier and a competing distributor which interjects horizontal conflict." Id. at 1498 (emphasis added).

The common element in all of these cases is that the plaintiffs alleged concerted activities between competitors and suppliers or manufacturers to accomplish anticompetitive results. All of them involved alleged conspiracies where existing competitors influenced the decision of their common supplier, and each case fits into a known category of per se violations. In Malley-Duff, there was a group boycott where several competitors sought to oust a competitor, thus reducing the number of competitors and competition in the market. Similarly, in Tunis Bros., a competitor sought to expand its geographic territory and reduce competition [18] by eliminating the plaintiff's franchise. Finally, Cernuto, General Motors, and Sweeney each involved resale price maintenance or other price restraints. In his Cernuto opinion, Judge Adams emphasized the "pre-eminence of HN14[] price considerations in antitrust law," and the centrality of price maintenance to the court's decision that a per se rule applied. Cernuto, 595 F.2d at 168-69. Cemar has alleged no price restraint, territorial restriction, or group boycott.

Cemar alleges that Nissan "collaborated" with the Coxes in an effort to replace its franchise with the Coxes and that they conspired to coerce Cemar into selling to the Coxes. It alleges that Nissan collaborated with the Coxes, rather than acting independently, by revealing confidential information to the Coxes and coercing Cemar to sell only to the Coxes. These allegations are insufficient to make out a per se violation of section 1.

The first problem is that Cemar does not allege that the Coxes were Nissan dealers at the time of the activities in question. Although Cemar stated in Count II [19] that the Coxes were "competitors of the plaintiff," Complaint para. 24, nowhere in the facts or description of the parties did Cemar allege that the Coxes were Nissan dealers. In fact, Cemar alleged to the contrary when it claimed that Nissan falsely advised the State "prior to the approval of the Coxes as a dealer." Complaint para. 19(b).

The pernicious effect on competition in the Cernuto line of cases is that existing competitors conspire to eliminate another competitor, thus reducing their competition and creating a horizontal restraint. Cemar has instead alleged a dealer substitution between it and the Coxes, thus leaving the [*1098] same number of Nissan dealers and not adversely affecting competition. A.H. Cox & Co., 653 F.2d at 1307. Even under the liberal standard of a motion to dismiss, the Court cannot infer from the pleadings that the Coxes were Nissan dealers in competition with Cemar. As such, the horizontal element of restraint referred to in Cernuto is not present here.

The Court recognizes that Cemar has alleged concerted activity to coerce Cemar into selling its franchise at below-market value. This may well be improper, but it is [20] not a per se violation of section 1. Taking all allegations as true, and drawing all inferences in favor of Cemar, the Court finds that Cemar has not alleged the facts necessary to turn a dealer substitution or termination into a restraint in per se violation of the Sherman Act. Because Cemar has not alleged a claim upon which relief can be granted, Count II must be dismissed.

B. Rule of Reason Analysis

In most cases, HN15[] if the plaintiff's allegations do not meet the standard for a per se violation, the facts are evaluated under the rule of reason. Under that rule, Cemar would have to show "that the combination or conspiracy produced adverse, anti-competitive effects within relevant product and geographic markets." Martin B. Glauser Dodge Co. v. Chrysler Corp., 570 F.2d 72, 81 (3d Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 436 U.S. 913, 56 L. Ed. 2d 413, 98 S. Ct. 2253 (1978). Cemar limited its allegations to a per se violation of section 1. Complaint para. 24. Even if it had alleged a violation under the rule of reason, however, the claim would be [21] dismissed.

Cemar's rule of reason claim would fail because Cemar alleges injury only to itself, not to competition. HN16[] A rule of reason inquiry consists of examining the anticompetitive effects of an alleged restraint. Glauser, 570 F.2d at 81. Thus, to succeed, Cemar must allege the actual anticompetitive impact of the alleged conspiracy.

HN17[] It is also well established that the antitrust laws protect competition, not individual competitors. Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977). Thus, Cemar must allege "antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent." Id. at 489 (emphasis in original). Cemar has failed to do this. Although injury to an individual competitor can sometimes injure competition, Cemar has not alleged such an injury. Cemar simply alleges a case of improper dealer substitution. Although it is necessary that one dealer [22] be injured in such a situation, there is usually no anticompetitive effect. A.H. Cox & Co., 653 F.2d at 1307. Therefore, because Cemar did not allege any anticompetitive effect and the Court cannot reasonably infer one, Cemar has not sufficiently alleged a section 1 violation under the rule of reason and Nissan's Motion to Dismiss Count II must be granted.

IV. COUNT III - TYING

Cemar alleges that Nissan "utilized its total control of the allocation of scarce and unique popular Datsun vehicles, in order to force plaintiff, as a condition of receiving said vehicles, to accept delivery of unpopular vehicles which plaintiff did not order or desire, all of which constituted a tie-in in violation of [the Sherman Act,] 15 U.S.C. § 1." Complaint para. 27. It further alleges that this activity caused it severe damages, including "loss of profits and business opportunities." Complaint para. 28. Nissan argues that Cemar has not alleged the necessary elements for a tying claim under the Sherman Act.

HN18[] A tie-in is an "agreement by a party to sell one product [23] [the tying product] but only on the condition that the buyer also purchase a different (or tied) product." Northern Pac. R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 (1958). "The vice of tying arrangements lies in the use of economic power in one market to restrict competition on the merits in another." Id. at 11. Although section 3 of the Clayton Act specifically deals with tying, many cases do not meet the Clayton Act's jurisdictional requirements. Thus, courts also analyze tying claims under the Sherman Act's prohibition [*1099] of contracts "in restraint of trade or commerce." See, e.g., id. at 1.

A. Per Se Violations

The Supreme Court has held that HN19[] certain tying arrangements are unreasonable per se. International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 396, 92 L. Ed. 20, 68 S. Ct. 12 (1947). To succeed in a per se claim, Cemar must prove that a tying arrangement exists and that Nissan "has sufficient economic power with respect to the tying product to appreciably restrain [24] free competition in the market for the tied product and a 'not insubstantial' amount of interstate commerce is affected." Northern Pac., 356 U.S. at 6, (citation omitted); Ungar v. Dunkin' Donuts of America, Inc., 531 F.2d 1211 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 823, 50 L. Ed. 2d 84, 97 S. Ct. 74 (1976).

The Supreme Court in Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984), raised the threshold needed HN20[] for a per se violation. It stated that there must be a threshold determination of a "substantial potential for impact on competition" for the per se rule to be applicable. Id. at 16. It emphasized that "forcing" is an indication that there is a restraint in competition for the tied product and that whether the per se rule applies depends on whether "forcing is probable" and on "the probability of anticompetitive consequences" in the market for the tied product. Id. at 15-16.

Cemar alleges that Nissan used its total control [25] over popular vehicles, the tying product, to force Cemar into buying unpopular vehicles, the tied product. Cemar bases its claim that the arrangement is unlawful on the fact that it was forced to buy something it did not want. It relies on the language in Jefferson Parish "that the essential characteristic of an invalid tying arrangement lies in the seller's exploitation of its control over the tying product to force the buyer into the purchase of a tied product that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms." Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 12 (emphasis added).

Nissan does not challenge that Cemar properly alleged two separate products and evidence of forcing. Nissan instead argues that Cemar has not alleged any restraint on competition in the market for the tied product, unpopular vehicles. Nissan claims that, even if Cemar were forced to buy vehicles it did not want, there would be no violation because no competition could be foreclosed. It relies on the language in Jefferson Parish that "when a purchaser is 'forced' to buy a product he would not have otherwise bought even from another seller [26] in the tied-product market, there can be no adverse impact on competition because no portion of the market which would otherwise have been available to other sellers has been foreclosed." Id. at 16.

The Court agrees with Nissan that Cemar cannot prove the probable anticompetitive consequences that Jefferson Parish requires. Cemar alleged that Nissan had "total control over the allocation of the popular vehicles." Complaint para. 16(c). It did not allege that it would have, or even could have, bought the unpopular vehicles elsewhere, and instead alleged that it did not want them at all. It is important to note that because Cemar was exclusively a Nissan dealer, it could only sell Nissan vehicles. Thus, there were no other sellers competing with Nissan to sell unpopular vehicles to Cemar [1] and the alleged tying arrangement could not foreclose competition in the market for unpopular vehicles. [*1100] See Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 16.

[27] An analogous situation in which one party controlled the sales of both products existed in the preseason football ticket cases. In this line of cases, plaintiff season ticketholders challenged the policy of certain teams that a customer could only purchase season tickets if it agreed to also purchase tickets to the team's preseason games. In Coniglio v. Highwood Services, Inc., 495 F.2d 1286 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1022, 42 L. Ed. 2d 296, 95 S. Ct. 498 (1974), the Second Circuit held that the plaintiff could not make out a tying claim because the fact that the defendant had a monopoly over the tied product meant that it could not restrain competition in that market. Likewise, in Driskill v. Dallas Cowboys Football Club, Inc., 498 F.2d 321, 323 (5th Cir. 1974), the Fifth Circuit held that because the Cowboys had a complete monopoly in the tied product, "there can thus be no adverse effect on any competitors, even if a tying scheme exists." Thus, because Nissan had no competitors in selling unpopular vehicles to Cemar, the alleged situation could not restrain competition in that market and Cemar cannot make out a per [28] se tying violation under section 1 of the Sherman Act.

B. Rule of Reason

---

[1] During oral argument, counsel for Cemar discussed the fact that Cemar could buy Nissan vehicles from other dealers, albeit at inflated prices. This was not specifically alleged in the complaint. If there were other suppliers for the unpopular vehicles, substitutes could be available and competition could be foreclosed because Cemar may be forced to buy the vehicles from Nissan rather than from other sources. However, the fact that Cemar would not have bought the vehicles elsewhere means that no other sellers were foreclosed from the market because of the alleged tying arrangement.

As with Cemar's allegation of a concerted refusal to deal, its HN21[] tying claim must be evaluated under the rule of reason because the requirements for a per se violation are not met. See, e.g., Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 29; see also Innovation Data Processing v. IBM Corp., 603 F. Supp. 646 (D.N.J. 1984). Cemar does not allege any injury to competition, only injury to its own ability to compete. The Court has demonstrated that the alleged scheme cannot adversely affect competition in the tied product. Thus, for the same reasons described in Section IIIB, supra, Cemar has not sufficiently alleged a violation under the rule of reason, and Count III must be dismissed.

V. COUNT IV - ROBINSON-PATMAN ACT

Cemar alleges that Nissan "has discriminated against plaintiff with respect to the processing, handling, sale, and offering for sale of vehicles and other automotive products, all in violation of [the Robinson-Patman Act,] 15 U.S.C. § 13. [29] " Complaint para. 30. Cemar alleges that it suffered damages including "loss of profits and business opportunities." Complaint para. 31. Although the complaint does not allege violations of specific sections of the Robinson-Patman Act, the parties have narrowed the claim down through the briefing to two sections: price discrimination, section 13(a), and discrimination in services and facilities regarding products sold for resale, section 13(e).

A. Section 13(a)

Section 13(a) HN22[] makes it unlawful "to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality . . . where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce." 15 U.S.C. § 13(a) (1982). Cemar alleges three situations that it believes violate this section. First, it alleges that Nissan required it to pay for parts C.O.D. while allowing other dealers to maintain open accounts. Cemar also alleges that Nissan engaged in discriminatory delivery practices by delaying deliveries to Cemar. Finally, it [30] alleges that Nissan discriminated in the allocation of vehicles and parts, and that it was injured by Nissan's refusal to sell all that it wanted. Nissan argues that Cemar fails to state a claim in that it fails to allege any discrimination in price and fails to allege any competitive injury resulting from such discrimination.

1. Credit Terms

In the body of the complaint, Cemar alleged that Nissan discriminated against it "with respect to credit terms for purchases of parts, by requiring C.O.D. payments by plaintiff in circumstances in which other, similarly situated dealers were allowed to maintain open accounts." Complaint [*1101] para. 16(i). Although not stated in the complaint, Cemar now argues that this difference constitutes a price discrimination within the scope of section 13(a).

HN23[] Price discrimination under the Robinson-Patman Act is simply defined as charging different prices to different purchasers. FTC v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc., 363 U.S. 536, 4 L. Ed. 2d 1385, 80 S. Ct. 1267 (1960). However, many courts have concluded that this means the net [31] price actually received by the seller for the goods, including all discounts and allowances. Conoco, Inc. v. Inman Oil Co., Inc., 774 F.2d 895, 902 (10th Cir. 1985). Cemar argues that the difference in credit terms meant that Cemar had to pay when receiving the goods while other similarly situated dealers kept their money and were able to invest it. This lost opportunity meant that other dealers were charged less relative to Cemar.

It is clear that the decision whether to extend credit is influenced by business judgment and the borrower's financial history, among other factors. Thus, some courts have "uniformly held that discrimination in credit terms is outside the Act's coverage." Diehl & Sons, Inc. v. Int'l Harvester Co., 426 F. Supp. 110, 122 (E.D.N.Y. 1976). However, the Tenth Circuit stated that it did not rule out the possibility that there could "be a discrimination in credit of such magnitude or nature as to constitute a violation." Craig v. Sun Oil Co. of Pa., 515 F.2d 221, 224 (10th Cir. 1975) (no violation because extreme situation not alleged), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 829, 50 L. Ed. 2d 92, 97 S. Ct. 88 (1976). [32] Thus, in Robbins Flooring, Inc. v. Federal Floors, Inc., 445 F. Supp. 4 (E.D.Pa. 1977), the court denied a Rule 12(b)(6) motion and held that the plaintiff had sufficiently alleged that different credit terms were given to different purchasers. In doing so, the court held that business justifications were defenses not properly considered on a motion to dismiss. Id. at 9. Thus, Cemar could make out a claim of discrimination on credit terms. This is because, even though not specifically alleged, the difference between open accounts and no credit at all, or requiring C.O.D. payments, is extreme enough that it could affect the price paid by Cemar.

The Court will grant Nissan's Motion to Dismiss this claim, however, because Cemar fails to allege that there was a reasonable probability that the price difference caused by the discrimination in credit terms may harm competition. Falls City Indus., Inc. v. Vanco Beverage, Inc., 460 U.S. 428, 438, 75 L. Ed. 2d 174, 103 S. Ct. 1282 (1983). It is well established that HN24[↑] a plaintiff must allege competitive [33] injury in a section 13(a) action. See, e.g., Conoco, 774 F.2d 895 (the two elements of a section 13(a) violation are price discrimination and injury to competition). In order to meet this requirement, Cemar would have to show actual competitive injury, as shown by market analysis, or predatory intent, as shown by a competitor sacrificing short term revenues to drive Cemar out of the market. Double H. Plastics, Inc. v. Sonoco Prods. Co., 732 F.2d 351 (3d Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 900, 105 S. Ct. 275, 83 L. Ed. 2d 212 (1984); O. Hommel Co. v. Ferro Corp., 659 F.2d 340 (3d Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 1017, 72 L. Ed. 2d 134, 102 S. Ct. 1711 (1982). Cemar alleged injury only to itself, not to competition, and this is "not enough from which a court may infer that an alleged price discrimination may 'substantially' injure competition." Foremost Pro Color, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 703 F.2d 534, 548 (9th Cir. 1983) (12(b)(6) motion granted for failure to allege competitive injury), cert. denied, 465 U.S. 1038, 79 L. Ed. 2d 712, 104 S. Ct. 1315 (1984). [34] Because HN25[↑] "the naked demonstration of injury to a specific competitor without more is not sufficient," id., the Court grants Nissan's Motion as to credit term discrimination.

2. Delivery Practices

Cemar also alleges that Nissan "arbitrarily and in bad faith, delayed the shipping of vehicles" to Cemar. Complaint para. 16(h). It claims that it also was injured by this practice. This claim fails because, as with the credit discrimination claim, it fails to allege any competitive injury. Furthermore, Cemar failed to HN26[↑] allege any connection [*1102] between the alleged discrimination in delivery practices and a difference in price. Cemar cites Corn Products Refining Co. v. FTC, 324 U.S. 726, 89 L. Ed. 1320, 65 S. Ct. 961 (1945), and FTC v. A. E. Staley Mfg. Co., 324 U.S. 746, 89 L. Ed. 1338, 65 S. Ct. 971 (1945), for the proposition that discrimination in delivery terms can constitute price discrimination. These cases, however, involved the "base-point [35] pricing" delivery system, and thus dealt with the price of delivery. Cemar has made no such allegation concerning the price of delivery. Thus, Nissan's Motion to Dismiss the section 13(a) claim of discrimination in delivery practices must be dismissed.

3. Allocation of Vehicles and Parts

Cemar also alleges that Nissan "made vehicles and automotive products available to other dealers more readily, and on more favorable terms, than with respect to plaintiff," Complaint para. 16(a), and that Nissan "arbitrarily and in bad faith, refused to honor orders placed by plaintiff, while honoring similar orders placed by similarly situated other dealers." Id. at para. 16(g). As with the other section 13(a) claims, this claim must be dismissed for failing to allege injury to competition. Even if competitive injury were alleged, however, Cemar would not have sufficiently alleged a section 13(a) claim because it did not allege any price effect.

Both of Cemar's claims involve a refusal to sell. Cemar alleged that Nissan refused to make some products readily available and refused to honor some orders altogether. [36] HN27[↑] The Robinson-Patman Act only covers discrimination in actual sales and does not cover refusals to deal. L & L Oil Co., Inc. v. Murphy Oil Corp., 674 F.2d 1113, 1120 (5th Cir. 1982); Reliable Tire Dist. Inc. v. Kelly Springfield Tire Co., 592 F. Supp. 127, 132 (E.D.Pa. 1984). Likewise, a refusal to supply as much as Cemar wanted is also a refusal to deal that is not covered by section 13(a). Black Gold, Ltd. v. Rockwool Indus., Inc., 729 F.2d 676, 682 (10th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 854, 105 S. Ct. 178, 83 L. Ed. 2d 113 (1984). Thus, Cemar's section 13(a) claims dealing with the allocation of vehicles and parts must be dismissed.

B. Section 13(e)

Section 13(e) HN28[] concerns discrimination in "services or facilities connected with the processing, handling, sale, or offering for sale of such commodity" to purchasers in the resale business. 15 U.S.C. § 13(e) (1982). It applies to discrimination in advertising and promotional services because these are connected with resale rather than [37] an original sale. L & L, 674 F.2d 1113, 1119-29; Cole v. Ford Motor Co., 566 F. Supp. 558, 567 (W.D. Pa. 1983). Cemar need not allege competitive injury to claim under this section. Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co., Inc. v. FTC, 440 U.S. 69, 79, 99 S. Ct. 925, 59 L. Ed. 2d 153 (1979) ("liability under [section 13(e)], unlike [section 13(a)], does not depend upon competitive injury"). The Court grants Nissan's motion to dismiss, however, because Cemar does not allege the kind of discrimination that is covered under section 13(e).

The only claim Cemar has pressed under this section is for discriminatory delivery practices. Whether section 13(e) applies to this type of claim is a controversial issue. Cemar cites Centex-Winston Corp. v. Edward Hines Lumber Co., 447 F.2d 585 (7th Cir. 1971), cert. denied, 405 U.S. 921, 30 L. Ed. 2d 791, 92 S. Ct. 956 (1972), which held that discrimination in delivery practices promotes and facilitates (or hinders) resale. Many courts and commentators have criticized that decision. See, e.g., L & L, 674 F.2d 1113, 1118 ("Centex-Winston has met [38] with much criticism and has been distinguished and rejected by other courts."); see also Foremost, 703 F.2d at 546; Purdy Mobile Homes, Inc. v. Champion Home Builders Co., 594 F.2d 1313 (9th Cir. 1979); Cecil Corley Motor Co. v. General Motors Corp., 380 F. Supp. 819 (N.D. Tenn. 1974). The Court agrees with the Fifth Circuit that "the overwhelming view . . . is that HN29[] delivery is not a service or facility within the meaning of [section 13(e)]." L & L, 674 F.2d 1113, 1119. Thus, Cemar fails to state a claim for which relief can be granted [*1103] under section 13(e), and Nissan's Motion to Dismiss Count IV is granted.

VI. COUNT V - RICO

A. The Claims

In Count V, Cemar alleges that "Defendant and its co-conspirators, including the Coxes, established an enterprise or joint venture, the purpose of which was to acquire, by illegal means, the franchise and related business property of Plaintiff, and in furtherance of said enterprise Defendant and its co-conspirators performed numerous predicate acts in interstate [39] commerce or by use of the mails, including, but not necessarily limited to, antitrust violations and bribery, all in violation of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961 et. seq." Complaint para. 33 (emphasis added). It alleges that it substained damaged in the form of lost profits and the receipt of less money for its franchise than was warranted. Complaint para. 16.

Count V alleges specifically only antitrust violations and bribery as predicate acts. It contains no facts unto itself but incorporates other sections of the complaint. Through the exchange of briefs, however, Cemar has apparently withdrawn the claim that the predicate acts were antitrust violations and bribery, and instead argues that the predicate acts were violations of the federal mail fraud statute, 18 U.S.C. § 1341 (1982), and the federal wire fraud statute, 18 U.S.C. § 1343 (1982). In support of this claim, Cemar refers to its prior allegation that "well prior to the Plaintiff's sale of the franchise, Defendant transmitted a written notice to the Motor Vehicle Administration of Maryland, [40] falsely advising that Plaintiff was no longer a franchised dealer." Complaint para. 19(b) (emphasis added). It also alleges that Nissan "falsely advised other dealers that the Coxes had replaced Plaintiff as a dealer, prior to the sale to the Coxes and prior to the approval of the Coxes as a dealer." Id. (emphasis added).

B. RICO

HN30[] To establish a violation of section 1962(c) [2] of RICO, Cemar must allege "(1) conduct (2) of an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity." Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., Inc., 473 U.S. 479, 496, 87 L. Ed.

---

[2] Section 1962(c) reads: HN31[] "It shall be unlawful for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity or collection of unlawful debt." 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c) (1982).

2d 346, 105 S. Ct. 3275 (1985) (footnote omitted). In order to maintain a private suit for treble damages, Cemar must also prove that it was "injured in [its] business or property by reason of a violation of section 1962." 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c) (1982). The Court holds that Count V must be dismissed because Cemar has failed to sufficiently allege a pattern of racketeering activity.

[41] 1. Enterprise

Cemar alleges that Nissan conspired with the Coxes and other unnamed co-conspirators to establish an enterprise to acquire Cemar's franchise. It claims that the alleged unlawful activities were done by Nissan with the collaboration and consent of the Coxes. Cemar alleges that this conspiracy constitutes "a group of individuals associated in fact although not a legal entity." 18 U.S.C. § 1961(4) (1982). This allegation is sufficient to put Nissan on notice of what its alleged enterprise is.

HN32[] To establish that an association is a RICO enterprise, Cemar must demonstrate "(1) that the enterprise is an ongoing organization with some sort of framework or superstructure for making or carrying out decisions; (2) that the members of the enterprise function as a continuing unit with established duties; and finally (3) that the enterprise must be separate and apart from the pattern of activity in which it engages." Seville Indus. Mach. v. Southmost Mach. Corp., 742 F.2d 786, 789-90 (3d Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1211, 105 S. Ct. 1179, 84 L. Ed. 2d 327 (1985). [42] This is a difficult burden to meet, and Cemar has not specifically alleged all of the characteristics of a RICO enterprise. However, the burden of [*1104] pleading an enterprise is less than the burden of proof. Id. at 791. Thus, Cemar need plead "nothing more at this early junction than that bare allegation" that Nissan and the Coxes formed an enterprise. Id. It has done so.

2. Racketeering Activity

Cemar claims that the predicate acts committed by the enterprise were acts of mail fraud and wire fraud. HN33[] A violation of the federal mail fraud statute, 18 U.S.C. § 1341 (1982), requires a scheme to defraud and the mailing of a letter in furtherance of the scheme. United States v. Murr, 681 F.2d 246 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 973, 74 L. Ed. 2d 286, 103 S. Ct. 307 (1982). Similarly, a violation of the federal wire fraud statute, 18 U.S.C. § 1343 (1982), requires a scheme to defraud and the use of an interstate wire in furtherance of the scheme. Harris Trust and Savings Bank v. Ellis, 609 F. Supp. 1118, 1122 (N.D.Ill. 1985). [43] Although Nissan need not be convicted under these criminal statutes for Cemar to maintain a civil claim against it under RICO, Sedima, 473 U.S. 479, 105 S. Ct. 3275, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346, Cemar must allege a violation of at least one of the criminal statutes listed in 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1) (1982) to maintain the suit.

Rule 9(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure HN34[] requires that the "circumstances" of fraud "be stated with particularity." Fed.R.Civ.P. 9(b). This rule applies to allegations of fraud under RICO. See, e.g., Seville, 742 F.2d 791 (applying Rule 9(b) to mail and wire fraud allegations). The circumstances of fraud "include such matters as the time, place and contents of false representations, as well as the identity of the person making the misrepresentation and what was obtained or given up thereby." Bennett v. Berg, 685 F.2d 1053, 1062 (8th Cir. 1982) (paragraph alleging fraud by "various other defendants" stricken). Courts must balance this strict standard with the notice-pleading idea of Fed.R. [44] Civ.P. 8(a). Seville, 742 F.2d at 791. Thus, Cemar is "free to use alternative means of injecting precision and some measure of substantiation into their allegations of fraud." Id. Cemar need not plead "with temporal or geographic specificity," but must plead "with sufficient particularity to place the defendants on notice of the conduct of which they are charged and to safeguard against spurrious allegations." Klapper v. Commonwealth Realty Trust, 657 F. Supp. 948, 959 (D.Del. 1987).

Cemar does not sufficiently allege either mail fraud or wire fraud. Nowhere in the complaint does Cemar allege that the racketeering activity consisted of mail or wire fraud. The two factual allegations it now makes contain no allegation of a use of the mail, 18 U.S.C. § 1343 (1982), or the use of an interstate wire communication. 18 U.S.C. § 1341 (1982). Even applying the more liberal standard for pleading fraud advocated in Seville, 742 F.2d at 791, the allegations in this complaint are insufficient.

The first allegation involves "transmitting" a notice to the Motor Vehicle Administration. [45] Cemar identified the agency which received the notice, a rough idea of its content, and that it was "written." This allegation does not have sufficient "means of injecting precision and substantiation into" the claim. The complaint does not state that the notice was mailed, only that it was transmitted. Nor does it give any indication of the date of its transmittal. This is insufficient to put Nissan on notice of a mail fraud violation.

Cemar's allegation about false notices to other dealers is even more problematic. Not only does it fail to give the "date, place or time" of the notices, it fails to allege what dealers received them or the method of transmittal. The Court presumes that Nissan, as a supplier, frequently notifies its dealers of a variety of important information and uses a variety of methods of transmittal. Therefore, Cemar's allegation fails to have "the means of injecting precision and substantiation into" the claim and fails to place Nissan on notice of what the alleged violation is. Because Cemar has failed to adequately allege predicate acts of racketeering activity, Count V must be dismissed.

3. Pattern of Racketeering Activity

Even if Cemar had sufficiently [46] alleged mail and wire fraud, however, its [*1105] claim would be dismissed because it failed to sufficiently allege a pattern of racketeering activity. HN35[] To constitute a pattern, there must be "at least two acts of racketeering activity . . . within ten years." 18 U.S.C. § 1961(5) (1982) (emphasis added). The Supreme Court stated that "while two acts are necessary [to establish a pattern], they may not be sufficient." Sedima, 473 U.S. at 496 n.14. The Court emphasized that "continuity plus relationship" is required. Id., (citing legislative history).

The Third Circuit recently clarified the requirements for a pattern of racketeering activity. The court held that a "single scheme can constitute a RICO pattern" and that the scheme need not be "ongoing or open-ended." Barticheck v. Fidelity Union Bank/First Nat'l State, 832 F.2d 36, 39 (3d Cir. 1987). It stated that the "continuity" referred to in Sedima should not be subject to one verbal formula but should instead be reviewed on a case-by-case basis. The [47] relevant factors include "the number of unlawful acts, the length of time over which the acts were committed, the similarity of the acts, the number of victims, the number of perpetrators, and the character of the unlawful activity." Marshall-Silver Const. Co. v. Mark, 835 F.2d 63, 66 (3d Cir. 1987) (quoting Barticheck, 832 F.2d at 39).

Cemar alleges one scheme in which Nissan conspired with the Coxes to coerce it to sell its franchise to the Coxes at below market value. It alleges several predicate acts, all dealing with notifying various people that Cemar was no longer a dealer. Cemar does not allege any time span for the activities in question, and it does not allege that any other dealers were the target of the scheme.

These allegations are insufficient to constitute a pattern of racketeering activity. As Judge Stapleton said in Marshall-Silver:

> HN36[] the target of the RICO statute, as its name suggests, is criminal activity that, because of its organization, duration, and objectives poses, or during its existence posed, a threat of a series [48] of injuries over a significant period of time. Here we have a single victim, a single injury, and a single short-lived scheme with only two active perpetrators [footnote omitted]. This is not criminal activity with the kind of continuity of which we spoke in Barticheck."

Marshall-Silver at 66-67. Therefore, Count V would have to be dismissed, even if Cemar had succeeded in making out its mail and wire fraud allegations.

VII. AMENDING THE COMPLAINT

The Court holds that Nissan's Motion to Dismiss Counts II through V shall be granted. Cemar desires to amend its complaint under Rule 15(a). Nissan argues that amending the complaint is unnecessary and would unduly delay trying the case.

This lawsuit has an unusual procedural posture. This motion to dismiss was filed more than two years ago in the District of Maryland. Since then, the parties have continuously engaged in discovery. Rule 15(a) HN37[] instructs that leave to amend "shall be freely granted when justice so requires." Fed.R.Civ.P. 15(a). The fact that Cemar has not previously amended its complaint means that the Court [49] should strongly consider granting its request for leave to amend. Also, the fact that the case has not been set for trial means that no actual trial date will be delayed if the complaint is amended. Furthermore, the Court considers that Cemar may be prejudiced if the Court denies its request because discovery may have revealed that Cemar can prove its allegations.

The Court will grant Cemar thirty days to amend its complaint. However, because of the unusual posture of the case, the Court wishes to avoid purely cosmetic repairs to the complaint. If the Court were to allow Cemar to amend its complaint facially, there may be needless duplicative discovery and delay that would be prejudicial to Nissan. Therefore, the Court requires that Cemar proffer evidence to support the amendments. This is a procedure usually used only when a plaintiff seeks to amend a complaint after a summary judgment motion has been filed. See, e.g., Carey [*1106] v. Beans, 500 F. Supp. 580, 582 (E.D.Pa. 1980) (requiring substantial evidence to support the new claims), aff'd. mem., 659 F.2d 1065 (3d Cir. 1981). It is warranted here because of the substantial discovery already [50] conducted and the fact that Cemar should now know whether it can prove the allegations of Counts II through V. The Court will then rule on whether the amended complaint and supporting evidence are sufficient to allege the claims.

The Court also holds that Cemar must reimburse Nissan for any duplicative discovery not initiated by it and caused by the amended complaint. See Outboard Marine Corp. v. Pezetel, 535 F. Supp. 248, 253 n.8 (D.Del. 1982) (conditioning leave to amend of plaintiff's compensating defendant for fees and expenses on the duplicative discovery).

An Order will issue in conformity with this Opinion.

End of Document

Oahu Gas Service, Inc. v. Pacific Resources, Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

August 10, 1987, Argued and Submitted ; February 1, 1988, Filed

No. 86-2250

Reporter

838 F.2d 360 *; 1988 U.S. App. LEXIS 1198 ; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,895; 1988 WL 5636

Oahu Gas Service, Inc., Plaintiff-Appellee, v. Pacific Resources Inc., Gasco, Inc., Defendants-Appellants

Prior History: [1] Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Hawaii, Paul G. Rosenblatt, District Judge, Presiding. D.C. No. CV-77-0444-PGR.

Disposition: Reversed.

Core Terms

propane, monopoly power, market share, customers, islands, prices, relevant market, Resources, barriers, refinery, energy, market power, antitrust liability, residential, jury's finding, monopolist's, competitors, users, price control, supplies, offers, sales, cases, outer, monopolization, predatory, anti trust law, geographical, contracts, campaign

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN1[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The offense of monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

HN2[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Both market definition and market power are essentially questions of fact. Thus, an appellate court reviews the evidence on these factual issues in the light most favorable to the non-movant and draw all reasonable inferences in its.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN3[] Market Definition, Relevant Market

A determination of the relevant market typically requires an inquiry into the nature of the product and the geographical area of effective competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > Substantial Evidence > General Overview

HN4[] Regulated Industries, Sports

The appellate court's review is limited to an assessment of the evidence in the light most favorable to the prevailing party. Thus, if the evidence was sufficient to allow a reasonable jury to determine the facts the court is required to accept the jury's fact-finding on an issue.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Trademark Law > ... > Consumer Confusion > Circuit Court Factors > Federal Circuit Court

HN5[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Inquiries into the existence of monopoly power focus generally on a firm's ability to control prices or exclude competition. Although no single factor has been held determinative as to the existence of such power, inquiries in this area often depend heavily upon market share and barriers to entry. A firm with a high market share may be able to exert market power in the short run, but substantial market power can persist only if there are significant and continuing barriers to entry.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN6[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Market share is just the starting point for assessing market power. A high market share, though it may ordinarily raise an inference of monopoly power will not do so in a market with low entry barriers or other evidence of a defendant's inability to control prices or exclude competitors. By the same token, a declining market share may reflect an absence of market power, but it does not foreclose a finding of such power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The second element of monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, is the willful acquisition or maintenance of monopoly power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN8[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Determinations that specific conduct was anticompetitive in violation of the Sherman Act are questions of law that the appellate court reviews de novo.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN9[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Because of a monopolist's special position, the antitrust laws impose what may be characterized as affirmative duties. These duties are not absolute, however; they arise only when there is no justification for refusing to aid a competitor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN10[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Where a monopolist's refusal to aid a competitor is based partially on a desire to restrict competition, a court determines antitrust liability by asking whether there was a legitimate business justification for the monopolist's conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Liquefied Natural Gas

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN11[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Economic necessity distinguishes some conduct from willful acquisition or maintenance of monopoly power because it involved the "business acumen" that is specifically exempted from antitrust liability.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN12[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The test of willful maintenance or acquisition of monopoly power is whether the acts complained of unreasonably restrict competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Employment Contracts > Conditions & Terms > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN13[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The goal of the antitrust laws, unlike that of business tort or unfair competition laws, is to safeguard general competitive conditions, rather than to protect specific competitors. While it may be a tort for a defendant to induce another to deal in violation of his contract with the defendant's rival, it should not be an exclusionary practice. Buying an employee away from a rival, for example, does not impair competition any more when that employee was under a long term contract than when he was not. The competitive effect, if any, results from the transfer of resources or patronage away from the rival and to the monopolist. If there is a tort, so be it. But antitrust law should not make liability depend upon the existence or nonexistence of contracts which do not affect the competitive results.

Counsel: William S. Boyd, Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, for the Defendants-Appellants.

Maxwell Blecher, Blecher, Collins & Weinstein, for the Plaintiff-Appellee.

Judges: Eugene A. Wright, Jerome Farris and David R. Thompson, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: FARRIS

Opinion

[*362] ORDER

The Opinion filed October 9, 1987 and amended November 27, 1987 is withdrawn.

FARRIS, Circuit Judge:

Oahu Gas Services, Inc., sued Pacific Resources, Inc., under Section 2 of the Sherman Act for monopolization and attempted monopolization of propane sales in Hawaii. Oahu Gas alleged that Pacific Resources' unlawful conduct included: (1) a decision in 1974 not to begin producing propane and (2) a campaign in 1982 to force Oahu to lower prices by offering sham cut-rate contracts to Oahu's customers. After trial, a jury found in favor of Oahu and awarded treble damages of $ 4,963,998.00. Pacific Resources appeals the denial of its motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

BACKGROUND

Until 1972, Gasco, a subsidiary of Pacific Resources, [2] was the sole retail seller of propane gas in Hawaii. It received virtually all its propane from Chevron, which operated the only propane refinery in Hawaii. In 1972, Oahu Gas Service was formed and began selling propane on Oahu. Its propane supplies also came from Chevron. Beginning in 1973, the federal government controlled the price and allocation of propane. The base period for determining allocations was May 1972, before Oahu Gas had begun business. Oahu therefore had to apply to the Department of Energy for a "base period volume" of propane that Chevron would be required to supply.

During the energy crisis, price controls on domestically produced propane led Chevron to produce the minimum required by the Department of Energy. Gasco bought increasing amounts of propane from foreign suppliers. During these years, Oahu Gas repeatedly applied to the Department of Energy for larger allocations of propane. Gasco opposed these applications because giving Oahu more low-cost domestic propane would require Gasco to buy more expensive foreign propane, thus increasing Oahu's cost advantage. The Department of Energy denied Oahu's requests until, in July 1979, the Department increased Oahu's [3] share of domestic propane on the condition that Oahu pay Gasco $ 163,108.00 to offset some of Gasco's additional costs for importing more foreign propane.

One basis for Oahu's Sherman Act allegations was the decision of Hawaiian Independent Refinery, Inc. -- a subsidiary of Pacific Resources -- not to produce propane in the 1970s. Hawaiian Independent Refinery [*363] began operating a petroleum refinery in 1972, producing chiefly military fuels. In early 1973, before price controls went into effect, Hawaiian planned to modify its refinery to permit production of propane and gasoline. The plans assumed that the modifications could be completed by 1976 and that Gasco would be the chief customer for propane. Under price controls, however, Hawaiian's propane would have had the same ceiling price as Chevron's. Thus the refinery expanded only to permit gasoline production, which began in May 1975. After price controls ended in 1981, the refinery was modified to produce propane. It has sold propane to Gasco and to Aloha Gas, a small new propane distributor. It has expressed a willingness to sell propane to Oahu Gas.

Another basis for Oahu's allegations was Gasco's marketing program [4] in 1982. During the energy crisis, demand for propane fell as consumers turned to alternative energy sources. With the end of regulation in 1981 and the beginning of propane production at Hawaiian's refinery in 1982, propane supplies became more plentiful. Gasco began a marketing program in 1982 that included offers of low-cost long-term contracts to large-volume purchasers, both its own customers and customers served by Oahu Gas. The prices offered were above Gasco's average total cost of supplying propane, but Oahu asserted at trial that the offers were "shams," designed to force Oahu to cut prices to its own customers. Oahu did cut prices to those customers, resulting in such low profits, Oahu claims, that it was nearly put out of business. None of Oahu's customers accepted Gasco's offers. Several of Gasco's own customers accepted the offers. In June 1982, Oahu sought and obtained an injunction prohibiting Gasco from soliciting Oahu's customers while they were under contract to Oahu.

The record indicates several uncontroverted facts relating to the relevant market and market shares of Gasco and Oahu Gas. Before Oahu began business in 1972, Gasco served 100 % of the propane market [5] on Oahu and in the "outer islands." After Oahu Gas began operating, Gasco's share of the market on Oahu declined steadily. By 1983, before the trial, Oahu sold about 30 % of the propane in Oahu. Oahu Gas dominated sales to high-volume commercial and industrial users on Oahu, supplying 78 % of that sub-market in 1985. Gasco supplied about 20 % of those customers; Aloha Gas supplied the remaining 2 %. Oahu Gas did not sell propane in the outer islands.

Oahu's claims of monopolization and attempted monopolization went to trial in 1985. The jury returned a verdict in favor of Oahu and found treble damages of $ 4,963,998.00. The court also awarded attorneys fees of $ 873,324.00.

DISCUSSION

I. MONOPOLY POWER IN THE RELEVANT MARKET

HN1[] The offense of monopolization under Section 2 of the Sherman Act has two elements: "(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966); [6] see also Catlin v. Washington Energy Co., 791 F.2d 1343, 1347 (9th Cir. 1986) (making explicit as a third factor the implicit requirement of "causal antitrust injury"). We review first the jury's finding that Gasco possessed monopoly power in the Hawaiian propane market from 1972 to 1983, the relevant period for purposes of Oahu's allegations of exclusionary conduct. Our previous decisions establish that HN2[] both market definition and market power are essentially questions of fact. See, e.g., Twin City Sportservice v. Charles O. Finley & Co., 676 F.2d 1291, 1299 (9th Cir. 1982) ("The definition of the relevant market is basically a fact question dependent upon the special characteristics of the industry involved . . ."); Greyhound Computer Corp. v. International Business Machines Corp., 559 F.2d 488, 496-97 (9th Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1040, [*364] 54 L. Ed. 2d 790, 98 S. Ct. 782 (1978) (reviewing the jury's finding of monopoly power for sufficiency of the evidence). We thus review the evidence on these factual [7] issues in the light most favorable to Oahu and draw all reasonable inferences in its favor, for this is an appeal from the denial of a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. See Peterson v. Kennedy, 771 F.2d 1244, 1252 (9th Cir. 1985), cert. denied, 475 U.S. 1122, 106 S. Ct. 1642, 90 L. Ed. 2d 187 (1986) ("A JNOV is improper if reasonable minds could differ over the verdict").

A. Market Definition

HN3[] A determination of the relevant market typically requires an inquiry into the nature of the product, see, e.g., United States v. E.I. duPont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 391, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 (1956), and the geographical area of effective competition. United States v. Grinnell, 384 U.S. at 575-76. Although product definition and geographical definition are theoretically separable inquiries, in this case they are intimately intertwined. Oahu asks us to affirm the jury's finding that the relevant market was inclusive of all propane sales in Hawaii. Gasco, on the other hand, argues that the relevant market was limited to high-volume industrial and commercial users of propane. These high [8] volume users, the evidence suggested, were located either primarily or exclusively in Oahu. The arguments made at trial and pressed before us, though not extensive on the issue of market definition, make clear that the crux of the parties' dispute is product definition rather than geographical definition. We thus focus on product definition first, keeping in mind the importance of delineating the geographical market as well for its bearing on Gasco's market power.

The issue of product definition, though always an inexact science often requiring distinctions in degree rather than kind, see 2 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law para. 518 (1978), is especially complicated in this case. During the course of the litigation, three plausible product markets have been suggested by the parties as the proper subjects of focus for purposes of our antitrust inquiry. On the broad end of the scale, it was suggested by Gasco at trial and in its motions before the district court, though not before us, that the jury erred by failing to include in its product definition numerous alternative energy sources that were said to constrain significantly any potential control over prices or competition [9] in the propane market. A second possible delineation of the product market, the one with an intuitive if not necessarily a strong economic appeal, is all propane distribution in Hawaii; this is the market definition that the jury adopted. A third approach, first suggested by Gasco before the district court in its brief in support of its motion for a new trial and renewed on appeal, would be to define the relevant market in a relatively narrow fashion, limiting it to high-volume commercial and industrial users of propane.

HN4[] Our review is limited, of course, to an assessment of the evidence in the light most favorable to Oahu. Thus, if the evidence was sufficient to allow a reasonable jury to define the relevant market for antitrust purposes in terms of propane distribution in Hawaii, we are required to accept the jury's fact-finding on this issue. See Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum Commission v. National Football League, 726 F.2d 1381, 1392 (9th Cir.), cert. denied sub nom. National Football League v. Oakland Raiders, Ltd., 469 U.S. 990, 83 L. Ed. 2d 331, 105 S. Ct. 397 (1984). [10]

Unfortunately, a review of the evidence that was presented to the jury in this case does not shed considerable light on the proper market definition. The jury did hear testimony from Oahu's expert, Dr. Meier, to the effect that propane was the relevant market because conversion to alternative energy sources, such as electricity or heat pumps, would be too expensive for many propane users. This argument was made, of course, in response to Gasco's contention that the product market should have been defined more broadly than just propane, and we must view it in that light. It is clear from Dr. Meier's testimony, however, that his impression of [*365] the constraints upon cross-elasticity of demand was more applicable to small residential users of propane than to high volume commercial buyers. Arguably, in responding to the argument for a broader product market, Dr. Meier may be said to have opened the door inadvertently to a logical inference in favor of a narrow market definition.

This narrow definition also finds support in other materials relied upon by Oahu. In its memorandum before the district court in opposition to Gasco's motion to set aside the verdict, Oahu made [11] much of the testimony of Howard Lee that "once a house is gassed, it's gassed, probably for ten, twenty, thirty years and to change it back to electricity, financially it's not practical." There was also the testimony of Lambert Lui-Kwan, Oahu's Director of Sales, that Oahu did not want residential customers because it viewed their business as unprofitable, and that Oahu therefore referred inquiries about residential service to Gasco. As a result, Oahu Gas, by 1983, had come to dominate sales to high-volume commercial and industrial users on the island of Oahu but had no business among either residential users on Oahu or on the outer islands.

Had Gasco reinforced this testimony regarding the differences between residential and commercial use of propane with further evidence of the constraints upon which residential and commercial suppliers operate, it is possible that a reasonable jury would have had no alternative but to conclude that high-volume industrial sales were the relevant market in this case. Gasco did not do this, however, preferring instead to focus at trial upon the theoretical interchangeability between propane and other energy sources. Gasco made no effort at trial [12] to distinguish between residential and commercial use of propane. Consequently, the question submitted to the jury with regard to product definition was limited to its assessing the evidence of user substitutes and deciding whether alternative energy sources significantly impacted upon propane distribution. Viewing the evidence from this perspective and in the light most favorable to Oahu, we cannot say that the jury acted unreasonably in concluding that the relevant market included commercial and residential propane, but not other sources of energy such as electricity.

As to geography, this segment of the inquiry into market definition is clearly subsidiary to product definition. No effort was ever made, for example, to differentiate between commercial and residential propane sales on the island of Oahu on the one hand and propane sales on all the islands on the other. This is partly because commercial sales on the outer islands are negligible and partly because Oahu Gas sold only to commercial users on the island of Oahu. In either case, we are convinced, in part because of some of Gasco's own arguments, that the jury could reasonably have defined the geographical market for propane [13] to include the outer islands. In contending that the ease of entry into the propane distribution business precluded its exercise of monopoly power, Gasco states, perhaps inadvertently: "The undisputed evidence surrounding [Oahu Gas]'s own entry into the propane business in 1972 demonstrated that [Pacific Resources] and Gasco had no power to exclude new entrants from selling propane in Hawaii." (Emphasis added). Gasco presented no evidence to the jury, nor to us, regarding transportation costs to the outer islands or other barriers between the island of Oahu and its smaller compatriots. Accordingly, we affirm the jury's definition of the geographical market to include all of Hawaii.

Our conclusion that the jury acted reasonably in its market definition is made with some questions as to whether the correct result was reached. These reservations might ordinarily give us pause, especially since our affirmance leads inexorably to the conclusion that Gasco wielded considerable power in the relevant market. See Section IB, infra. However, as our discussion of the second part of the test for monopolization demonstrates below, a finding of monopoly power has no bearing in [14] this case on liability. We are therefore content to assume arguendo the existence of monopoly power, as we have done in [*366] previous cases in which the other requirements for maintaining a Section 2 action were in doubt. See, e.g., Transamerica Computer Co., Inc. v. International Business Machines Corp., 698 F.2d 1377, 1382 (9th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 955, 78 L. Ed. 2d 329, 104 S. Ct. 370 (1983); California Computer Products, Inc. v. International Business Machines Corp., 613 F.2d 727, 739 (9th Cir. 1979).

B. Market Power

The jury found that Gasco possessed monopoly power in the Hawaiian propane market. Our review of that finding is limited again to an assessment of the evidence in the light most favorable to Oahu. The evidence demonstrated that Gasco was the exclusive seller of propane to residential sellers on Oahu and on the outer islands. As a result of this dominance of certain parts of the market, Gasco's overall market share in the Hawaiian propane market was consistently above 68 % from 1972 to 1983. The parties are essentially in agreement on the computations of Gasco's market share, which [15] declined from a figure of 100 % in 1972 to 95.5 % in 1973, to 89.7 % in 1974, to 69.6 % in 1981, and finally to 68.2 % in 1983. They disagree as to the legal conclusions that may be drawn from these statistics and other evidence. Oahu maintains that the evidence of Gasco's high market share and the lack of evidence of "meaningful entry" by other firms into the Hawaiian propane market from 1973 to 1984 support an inference of monopoly power. Gasco maintains that the evidence of its steadily declining market share during the relevant period, combined with what it contends is the absence of evidence in the record of barriers to entry or an ability on Gasco's part to control prices, precludes any finding that it possessed monopoly power.

HN5[] Inquiries into the existence of monopoly power focus generally on a firm's ability to "control prices or exclude competition." Greyhound Computer, 559 F.2d at 496 (quoting United States v. duPont, 351 U.S. at 391). Although no single factor has been held determinative as to the existence of such power, inquiries in this area [16] often depend heavily upon market share and barriers to entry. See Ball Memorial Hospital, Inc. v. Mutual Hospital Ins., Inc., 784 F.2d 1325, 1336 (7th Cir. 1986). A firm with a high market share may be able to exert market power in the short run, but "substantial market power can persist only if there are significant and continuing barriers to entry." 2 Areeda & Turner, supra, at para. 505; accord Cargill Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, 479 U.S. 104, 107 S. Ct. 484, 494 n. 15, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986).

Keeping these factors in mind and viewing the evidence most favorably to Oahu Gas, we now address the parties' contentions. Oahu makes two arguments in support of the jury's finding of monopoly power. First, Oahu maintains that Gasco's high market share constitutes substantial evidence of monopoly power in spite of the evidence that that share constantly declined throughout the relevant period. Gasco argues, to the contrary, that the decline in its market share reflects an absence of monopoly power. Second, Oahu claims that the record, which reflects a virtual lack of entry by new firms into the Hawaiian propane market during the relevant time period, [17] falls short of establishing the kind of competitive marketplace necessary to rebut the inference of monopoly power raised by Gasco's high market share. See Hunt-Wesson Foods, Inc. v. Ragu Foods, Inc., 627 F.2d 919, 925 (9th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 921, 67 L. Ed. 2d 348, 101 S. Ct. 1369 (1981).

If any conclusion may be gleaned from our prior decisions and those of the Supreme Court with regard to the first issue, it is that HN6[] "market share is just the starting point for assessing market power." Id. A high market share, though it may ordinarily raise an inference of monopoly power, see United States v. Grinnell, 384 U.S. at 571, will not do so in a market with low entry barriers or other evidence of a defendant's inability to control prices or exclude competitors. By the same token, "A declining market share may reflect an absence of market power, but it does not foreclose a finding of such power." Greyhound Computer, 559 F.2d at 496 n. 18 [*367] (citations omitted). Applied to this case, these principles [18] lead to the conclusion that provided the jury heard substantial evidence of Gasco's high market share throughout the relevant period, the decline in its market share could not preclude a finding of monopoly power as a matter of law. If, however, the sole basis for the jury's finding was Gasco's high market share, this finding could not stand up in the face of a showing of low entry barriers or other significant constraints on Gasco's power over the marketplace.

Because the jury clearly heard substantial evidence relating to Gasco's market share, we proceed to the question of entry barriers, which are in dispute. Oahu maintains that the lack of entry by competitors into the market is sufficient to support an inference of high entry barriers. Gasco argues that the entry of Oahu and Aloha demonstrated that Gasco lacked the ability to control prices or to exclude new entrants.

We note preliminarily that both parties could theoretically be correct, if in fact Gasco lacked the power to exclude but there were external factors at work precluding entry into the market. In ordinary times, the failure of other firms to challenge Gasco on the outer islands and in the Oahu residential market [19] might have supported an inference that Gasco had the power to exclude competitors or to control the price without much detailed inquiry. But because of the price controls that were in place from 1974 to 1981, Gasco clearly could not control the price and may not have had any control in the marketplace whatsoever. Thus, the question is whether Gasco could exclude rivals. In this regard, the jury learned of two entrants into the market from 1972 to 1984: Oahu and Aloha. Oahu entered the market in 1972 and consistently increased its market share thereafter, even during the period of price controls. Although this evidence of entry might tend to suggest that as of 1972, Gasco -- which was dependent upon Chevron for propane supplies -- could not exclude rivals, the jury also considered evidence that the founder of Oahu, once an executive with Gasco, took some large accounts with him when he left Gasco. This evidence supports an inference that Oahu's success may have owed not so much to its competition on the merits in an open market as to the "insider" status of its founder, and does not negate the inference of high entry barriers. The second entrant, Aloha Gas, did win some accounts, but [20] the evidence that that firm remained very small could reasonably preclude a decision that Aloha's entry reflected a breakdown of barriers to entry. Viewed in the light most favorable to Oahu, therefore, the evidence reasonably supports the conclusion that high barriers to entry existed in the Hawaiian propane market throughout the relevant time period.

The ultimate focus of our inquiry, however, is Gasco's power, not barriers to entry. Oahu points to no further evidence of Gasco's ability to exclude competition, and Gasco's arguments regarding price controls go to its ability to control price, not to exclude competitors. Consequently, the question before us is whether the jury could reasonably have found that a firm with a consistently high, albeit declining, market share in a market with high barriers to entry possessed monopoly power. The answer is yes. "While market share is just the starting point for assessing market power, we think that market share, at least above some level, could support a finding of market power in the absence of contrary evidence." Hunt, 627 F.2d at 925. Clearly, Gasco had a high market share, and the record does not permit us to infer [21] "contrary evidence" that would negate a finding of market power. Hence, we affirm the jury's finding that Gasco possessed monopoly power. [1]

II. ALLEGEDLY MONOPOLISTIC BEHAVIOR

HN7[] The second element of monopolization under Section 2 of the Sherman Act is "the willful acquisition or maintenance of [monopoly] [*368] power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." United States v. Grinnell, 384 U.S. at 570-71. The jury was asked to determine whether two courses of conduct by Gasco -- a 1972 decision not to modify its refinery to permit propane production and a 1982 marketing campaign targeted at Oahu's clientele -- constituted predation within the [22] meaning of Section 2. The jury found in the affirmative on both counts. These HN8[] determinations that specific conduct was anticompetitive in violation of the Sherman Act are questions of law that we review de novo. Western Concrete Structures Co. v. Mitsui & Company (U.S.A.), Inc., 760 F.2d 1013, 1016 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 903, 88 L. Ed. 2d 229, 106 S. Ct. 230 (1985).

A. The Decision Not to Expand the Refinery

The factual questions about Pacific Resources' allegedly exclusionary conduct in the early 70s were resolved at trial. It was clear that expanding the refinery to permit propane production would have been uneconomical under federal price controls in place at the time. It was also clear, however, that the decision not to produce propane had been based not only on economic factors but also on a desire to restrict the supply of propane potentially available to Oahu Gas. There is evidence in the record that the management of Pacific Resources feared that increasing the supply of propane in Hawaii would result in Oahu's getting more propane [23] to sell, increasing its market share.

The desire to maintain or increase one's market share is not in itself an antitrust violation, of course. Nor is a decision to forego the production of propane an illegal act per se. But a monopolist must take care that otherwise lawful acts do not have anticompetitive effects because of its monopoly power.

---

[1] Because we uphold the jury's finding of monopoly power, we need not consider the attempted monopolization claim that was an alternative ground for the jury's verdict.

We therefore reject Pacific Resources' broad contention that the antitrust laws may never impose duties on a monopolist to aid its competitors. HN9[] Because of a monopolist's special position the antitrust laws impose what may be characterized as affirmative duties. [2] These duties are not absolute, however; they arise only when there is no justification for refusing to aid a competitor.

[24] HN10[] Where a monopolist's refusal to aid a competitor is based partially on a desire to restrict competition, we determine antitrust liability by asking whether there was a legitimate business justification for the monopolist's conduct. See Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, 105 S. Ct. 2847 (1985); Dimidowich v. Bell & Howell, 803 F.2d 1473, 1478 (9th Cir. 1986); Drinkwine v. Federated Publications, Inc., 780 F.2d 735, 740 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 475 U.S. 1087, 106 S. Ct. 1471, 89 L. Ed. 2d 727 (1986).

The investment required of Pacific Resources to produce propane would have resulted in a negative return. In light of the then-existing price controls, it was not economically efficient for Pacific Resources to invest its resources in propane production. The decision to forego propane production did not exclude competition unnecessarily. The economic rationale, even if not the only rationale for the decision, excluded competition necessarily. [25] HN11[] Economic necessity distinguished this conduct from "willful acquisition or maintenance of [monopoly] power," United States v. Grinnell, 384 U.S. at 570-71, because it involved the "business acumen" that Grinnell specifically exempts from antitrust liability. Id.

The jury was instructed improperly. It was given an either/or choice: it could decide whether Pacific Resources' decision was based on economic motives or on a desire to maintain its market share. [3] It [*369] should have been instructed that the desire to maintain market power -- even a monopolist's market power -- cannot create antitrust liability if there was a legitimate business justification for refusing to produce propane.

[26] Two lines of cases support our holding, though they are not directly controlling. A line of "product innovation" cases has consistently rejected antitrust liability for a monopolist's decision about when or whether to market new products. See, e.g., Foremost Pro Color, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 703 F.2d 534, 545 (9th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 465 U.S. 1038, 79 L. Ed. 2d 712, 104 S. Ct. 1315 (1984); California Computer Products v. I.B.M. Corp., 613 F.2d 727 (9th Cir. 1979); see also GAF Corporation v. Eastman Kodak Co., 519 F. Supp. 1203, 1232 (S.D.N.Y. 1981) ("No court has yet found a monopolist's failure to market a product as satisfying § 2's conduct requirement.").

These cases, involving technological innovations, have held that the contested marketing decisions derived from "a superior product", and are therefore exempt from antitrust liability. Oahu Gas contends that such cases are inapposite, because the product at issue here is propane, hardly an innovation. But business acumen -- the economics of timing a technological innovation -- is also an aspect of these cases.

In California Computer we [27] addressed specifically the issue of when a question of legitimate business purpose may go to a jury. Where IBM redesigned products in such a way that they were incompatible with a competitor's product, and where such design changes were justified "by reason of lower manufacturing cost and

---

[2] For example, a ski resort with monopoly power was required to continue a marketing arrangement with its small neighbor where there was no legitimate business justification for discontinuing it, and the arrangement increased competition and benefited consumers. Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, 105 S. Ct. 2847 (1985).

[3] The jury instruction on this issue was:

> To sum up, you must determine whether PRI and Gasco maintained monopoly power in a relevant market by policies and conduct which were not legitimate business decisions but were instead designed primarily to further any domination of a relevant market. . . . You should seek to determine if the challenged conduct is supported by legitimate business reasons or whether it was a deliberate effort to injure a smaller rival which caused defendants to sacrifice short-run benefits and consumer good will.

price or improved performance[,] . . . the reasonableness of IBM's conduct . . . did not present a jury issue." California Computer Products, 613 F.2d at 744.

Another line of cases that Oahu asks us to consider are "supply restriction" cases. It contends that Pacific Resources impermissibly sought to restrict the supply of propane in the Hawaiian Islands. See, e.g., NCAA v. Board of Regents, 468 U.S. 85, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1984); Litton Systems, Inc. v. AT & T, 700 F.2d 785 (2d Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 1073, 79 L. Ed. 2d 220, 104 S. Ct. 984 (1984); Pacific Coast Agricultural Export Ass'n v. Sunkist Growers, Inc., 526 F.2d 1196 (9th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 425 U.S. 959, 48 L. Ed. 2d 204, 96 S. Ct. 1741 (1976). A theory of liability based on "supply restriction" [28] must fail because Pacific Resources had no monopoly power over supplies of propane to Hawaii. Chevron produced all Hawaiian propane until 1982. [4] Contrary to Oahu's argument, the regulatory scheme in place in the 70s did not give Pacific Resources control over propane supplies. Oahu appealed to the Department of Energy for larger allocations of propane, and it was ultimately successful. Oahu's supply restriction theory cannot support antitrust liability for Pacific Resources' decision not to produce propane.

As a matter of law, we reverse the judgment of antitrust liability based on the refinery episode. Pacific Resources' decision to refrain from producing propane because it was [29] not economically efficient is sufficient justification to preclude antitrust liability.

B. Gasco's 1982 Marketing Campaign

The jury found that Gasco's 1982 campaign to offer cut-rate contracts to large propane purchasers was anticompetitive and predatory. Oahu defends this result on the ground that Gasco "made false 'offers' [*370] without ever intending to compete for that business." Gasco disputes the finding of predatory conduct, arguing that it "had the absolute right to offer reduced prices so long as those offers were not shown to be below costs or shown to be predatory by clear and convincing evidence."

The parties' legal dispute may be summarized as follows. Neither party argues that Gasco set prices below its costs for the purposes of alluring Oahu's customers. The allegation of exclusionary conduct is not founded, therefore, on a theory of predatory pricing. Rather, Oahu's claim is that the insincerity or "sham" nature of Gasco's offers is sufficient to support a finding of predatory conduct.

The first question -- whether the offers were "shams" -- may be disposed of quickly. Reviewing the factual evidence in this appeal from a denial of a JNOV motion, we [30] draw all reasonable inferences in Oahu's favor. The jury having returned a general verdict, we must presume it to have accepted Oahu's claim that Gasco's offer of cut-rate contracts were "shams." This finding was reasonably supported by the evidence. The jury heard evidence, for example, that most of the customers of Oahu Gas that Gasco solicited were known to have long-term contracts with Oahu that they would be unlikely to break. A Gasco employee testified, moreover, that when making an offer to an Oahu customer, she invited the customer to ask Oahu to meet or beat the offered price-cut. This testimony provides support for an inference that Gasco's true goal was not to attract customers, but to cut into Oahu's profits. Oahu also offered evidence, which we must presume the jury found credible, that Gasco did not make the same offers to its own customers as it did to Oahu's. This evidence, taken in full, is substantial enough to sustain Oahu's claim that Gasco's offer did not reflect a business risk on its part but only constituted a ploy to entice Oahu to lower its prices.

The harder question is whether this "sham" offer violated Sherman Act Section 2. Although the evidence [31] supports the jury's finding of a predatory intent underlying Gasco's marketing campaign, the net result of this campaign seems to have been to increase competition in the market by inducing Oahu to lower its prices. Thus, we have before us a situation in which conduct with a predatory rationale had a procompetitive effect.

---

[4] For this reason the "essential facilities" theory would not apply either. See MCI Communications Corp. v. AT & T Co., 708 F.2d 1081, 1132 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 891, 78 L. Ed. 2d 226, 104 S. Ct. 234 (1983) (plaintiff must show control of the essential facility by a monopolist).

In order to sustain the jury's finding of predation, we would have to turn our back on a large body of case law holding that HN12[] "the test of willful maintenance or acquisition of monopoly power is whether the acts complained of unreasonably restrict competition." Drinkwine v. Federated Publications, Inc., 780 F.2d 735 (9th Cir. 1985), cert. denied, 475 U.S. 1087, 106 S. Ct. 1471, 89 L. Ed. 2d 727 (1986). Here, there was no restriction on competition, let alone an unreasonable restriction. To be sure, Gasco's intent is not irrelevant to the inquiry. See id. (citing Aspen Skiing, 472 U.S. at 602-03) ("Intent must also exist but is subsumed in an analysis of the exclusionary conduct"). But a finding of anticompetitive [32] intent will not sustain a Section 2 claim in the face of evidence of procompetitive effects.

This analysis should not be taken as an endorsement of Gasco's conduct. A campaign to harm or destroy rivals through deceptive marketing smacks of unfair competition, whose hallmark is harm to competitors. In seeking to induce Oahu's clients to abandon Oahu or to force Oahu to accept lower profits, Gasco engaged in activity that in some jurisdictions is actionable under the law of torts.

HN13[] The goal of the antitrust laws, however, unlike that of business tort or unfair competition laws, is to safeguard general competitive conditions, rather than to protect specific competitors. Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977). Professors Areeda and Turner, in their discussion of the antitrust liability of firms that engage in unfair competition, stated in a passage of particular relevance here:

> While it may be a tort for a defendant to induce another to deal in violation of his contract with the defendant's rival, it [33] should not be an exclusionary practice. Buying an employee away from a rival, for example, does not impair competition any more when that employee was under [*371] a long term contract than when he was not. The competitive effect, if any, results from the transfer of resources or patronage away from the rival and to the monopolist. . . . If there is a tort, so be it. But antitrust law should not make liability depend upon the existence or nonexistence of contracts which do not affect the competitive results.

P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law para. 7381 (1978).

We reverse the jury's finding of antitrust liability growing out of Gasco's 1982 marketing campaign. The undisputed evidence in the record that this campaign resulted in no anticompetitive effects precludes a finding of liability even though we accept the jury's conclusion that Gasco intended the campaign to harm Oahu and thereby to increase its market share.

CONCLUSION

We reverse the jury's findings of antitrust liability with respect to both the refinery decision and the marketing campaign. Consequently, we need not address the parties' respective contentions on the subject of damages.

REVERSED.

McElderry v. Cathay Pacific Airways, Ltd.

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

February 2, 1988, Decided ; February 3, 1988, Filed

No. 86 Civ. 7783(MEL)

Reporter

678 F. Supp. 1071 *; 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 660 ; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,878

Andrea McElderry, on behalf of herself and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff, v. Cathay Pacific Airways, Ltd., Defendant

Subsequent History: As Amended, March 15, 1988.

Core Terms

baggage, flight, airline, air carrier, weight-based, passengers, tariffs, Allowance, antitrust, charges, piece-based, sanctions, private right of action, commerce, Sherman Act, overcharged, alleges, travel, air, destination, carriers, aboard, federal court, anticompetitive, originating, undisputed, Transport, violates, ticket

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Commercial Airlines > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Federal Common Law > General Overview

HN1[] Justiciability, Standing

There is no private right of action under §§ 403(b) and 404(b) of the Federal Aviation Act, 49 U.S.C.S. §§ 1373(b), 1374(b). Four factors are considered in determining whether a private right of action exists. First, is the plaintiff one of the class for whose especial benefit the statute was enacted, that is, does the statute create a federal right in favor of the plaintiff? Second, is there any indication of legislative intent, explicit or implicit, either to create such a remedy or to deny one? Third, is it consistent with the underlying purposes of the legislative scheme to imply such a remedy for the plaintiff? And finally, is the cause of action one traditionally relegated to state law, in an area basically the concern of the states, so that it would be inappropriate to infer a cause of action based solely on federal law?

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Rates & Tariffs

Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Airline Deregulation Act > General Overview

Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Commercial Airlines > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Tariffs

Transportation Law > Commercial Vehicles > Foreign Commerce

HN2[] Common Carrier Duties & Liabilities, Rates & Tariffs

§ 403(b) of the Federal Aviation Act, 49 U.S.C.S. § 1373(b), states that no foreign air carrier shall charge a greater or less or different compensation for air transportation, or for any service in connection therewith, than the rates, fares, and charges specified in then currently effective tariffs of such foreign air carrier.

Transportation Law > Commercial Vehicles > Foreign Commerce

Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Airline Deregulation Act > General Overview

Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Commercial Airlines > General Overview

HN3[] Commercial Vehicles, Foreign Commerce

§ 404(b) of the Federal Aviation Act, 49 U.S.C.S. § 1374(b), states that no foreign air carrier shall make, give, or cause any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person or subject any particular person to any unjust discrimination or any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Airline Deregulation Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Federal Common Law > General Overview

Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Commercial Airlines > General Overview

HN4[] Justiciability, Standing

A plaintiff who simply alleges that she was over-charged for her baggage because of its weight, and does not allege that she was a member of a group subject to discrimination, cannot claim that either § 403(b) or § 404(b) of the Federal Aviation Act, 49 U.S.C.S. §§ 1373(b), 1374(b), was passed especially for her benefit.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Sales of Goods > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Federal Common Law > General Overview

HN5[] Sales of Goods, Remedies

Only where there is some countervailing national interest should the federal courts imply a federal private remedy when an adequate state remedy already exists.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

International Law > Authority to Regulate > Anticompetitive Activities

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > International Application of US Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Jurisdiction

International Law > Authority to Regulate > General Overview

HN6[] International Aspects, Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

Under the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvement Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 6a(1)(A) (1982), federal courts do not have jurisdiction under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., over conduct involving trade or commerce with foreign nations unless such conduct has a "direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect" on United States domestic, import, or export commerce. An anticompetitive effect on United States commerce is required for jurisdictional nexus, regardless of whether there is anticompetitive conduct in the United States. The applicable test is whether the effect would have been evident to a reasonable person making practical business judgments.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Penalties

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7[] Sherman Act, Penalties

An allegation of mere monetary injury is not enough to state a claim under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq. A Sherman Act plaintiff must show injury to a market or to competition in general, not merely injury to individuals.

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Act of State Doctrine

International Law > Authority to Regulate > Anticompetitive Activities

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Comity Doctrine > General Overview

HN8[] Dispute Resolution, Act of State Doctrine

Where there is a direct conflict between the United States and another country, the continuance of which could clearly exacerbate stated differences between the two countries, the proper course is to avoid the unnecessary irritant of a private antitrust action by declining jurisdiction. The related "act of state" doctrine constitutes a further basis for declining jurisdiction in such a case. This doctrine is a principle of law designed primarily to avoid judicial inquiry into the acts and conduct of the officials of the foreign state, its affairs and its policies and the underlying reasons and motivations for the actions of the foreign government.

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Act of State Doctrine

HN9[] Dispute Resolution, Act of State Doctrine

In a case in which the causal chain between a defendant's alleged conduct and plaintiff's injury cannot be determined without an inquiry into the motives of a foreign government, and where the conduct of the defendant has been compelled by the foreign government, the defendant is entitled to assert the defense of foreign government compulsion and the act of state doctrine is applicable.

Civil Procedure > Attorneys > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Sanctions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Sanctions > Baseless Filings > General Overview

HN10[] Civil Procedure, Attorneys

Fed. R. Civ. P. 11 sanctions do not, of course, automatically attach as a result of the dismissal of plaintiff's claims. Rather, the relevant inquiry is whether a competent attorney could have formed the reasonable belief that plaintiff's pleading was warranted by existing law or a good faith argument for the extension, modification or reversal of existing law.

Counsel: [1] Kreindler & Kreindler, Esqs., Attorneys for Plaintiff, of Counsel: Paul S. Edelman, Esq., Henry Gluckstern, Esq. and Lori B. Lasson, Esq.

Robert H. Morse, Esq., Galland, Kharasch, Morse & Garfinkle, P.C., Albert F. Grisard, Esq., Susan B. Jollie, Esq., Andrew B. Sacks, Esq., Bruce Regenstreich, Esq., Callan, Regenstreich & Kosher, Esqs., Attorneys for Defendant.

Judges: Morris E. Lasker, U.S.D.J.

Opinion by: LASKER

Opinion

[*1072] MORRIS E. LASKER, U.S.D.J.

Plaintiff Andrea McElderry challenges, on antitrust and Federal Aviation Act grounds, a ten dollar excess baggage charge assessed against her by defendant Cathay Pacific Airways, Ltd. ("Cathay Pacific") prior to her flight aboard Cathay Pacific from Hong Kong to Taipei.

In May 1986, McElderry purchased a round-trip airplane ticket which included flights from Louisville, Kentucky to Tokyo, Tokyo to Hong Kong, and Hong Kong to Taipei, ending with a flight back to Louisville by way of domestic stops in Chicago and San Francisco. All the flights on this itinerary were aboard United Airlines, Inc., except for the flight from Hong Kong to Taipei, which was aboard Cathay Pacific. On May 24, 1986, McElderry flew aboard United Airlines from Louisville, Kentucky to Tokyo, Japan. On June 8, 1986, McElderry [2] flew from Tokyo to Hong Kong, again aboard United Airlines. When she landed in Hong Kong, McElderry removed her baggage from the United Airlines airplane. Eight days later, on June 16, 1986, McElderry flew from Hong Kong to Taipei, Republic of China, this time aboard Cathay Pacific Flight 450. When McElderry checked her baggage with Cathay Pacific before boarding this flight, Cathay Pacific assessed her a $ 10.64 baggage charge on the grounds that her baggage weighed seven kilograms over the twenty kilogram free baggage allowance which Cathay Pacific alleges was applicable to McElderry on that flight. McElderry claims that this weight-based baggage allowance system [*1073] was not applicable to her, that she should not have been charged $ 10.64 for her baggage, and that, instead, Cathay Pacific should have applied a piece-based allowance system to her baggage, under which she alleges that she would have been able to check her baggage for free.

McElderry, who alleges that she "is one of a class of thousands of passengers who have paid improper excess baggage charges on defendant's airline since 1976," [1] claims that she is entitled to relief for the infliction of this excess baggage charge [3] under §§ 403 and 404(b) of the Federal Aviation Act ("FAA"), 49 U.S.C. §§ 1373, 1374(b); §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2; and § 1 of the Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13. [2]

Cathay Pacific moves to dismiss the complaint under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1) and 12(b)(6) and moves for sanctions against McElderry's attorneys under Fed. R. Civ. P. 11. As discussed below, Cathay Pacific's motion to dismiss is granted [3] and its motion for sanctions is denied.

[4] I. Federal Aviation Act Claims

McElderry claims that the weight-based baggage charge assessed against her by Cathay Pacific is prohibited by Civil Aeronautics Board ("CAB") No. 55, Rule No. 16, [4] [5] a tariff applicable to Cathay Pacific and in effect at the time of McElderry's flight. McElderry argues that this "tariff, on its face, did not permit a weight-based system to apply to plaintiff's journey, and specifically required application of a piece-based allowance and overcharge system . . . ." [5] McElderry also asserts that Cathay Pacific's baggage charge system violates a 1976 Civil Aeronautics Board ("CAB") decision, Baggage Allowance Tariff Rules in Overseas and Foreign Air Transportation ("Baggage Allowance"), Docket No. 24869, [6] which invalidated two then-existing tariffs under which passengers were allowed to check baggage weighing up to a certain amount freely, but were charged at a rate of one percent of the applicable first-class fare per kilogram above that weight. McElderry contends that she is entitled to relief for these alleged violations under FAA §§ 403(b) and 404(b), 49 U.S.C. §§ 1373(b), 1374(b).

---

[1] Second Amended Complaint at para. 8 (October 2, 1987).

[2] McElderry also seeks relief under common law principles of fraud, breach of contract and unjust enrichment. Given the dismissal of McElderry's federal claims by this opinion, as discussed below, the court declines to exercise pendent jurisdiction over McElderry's state law claims, and they are accordingly dismissed. Diversity jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1332 is not alleged.

[3] The primary basis for dismissal of both McElderry's Federal Aviation Act claims and her antitrust claims is lack of subject matter jurisdiction under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1). To the extent that the motion to dismiss was also brought under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, the motion is properly converted to a motion for summary judgment under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56, as required by Rule 12(b) when "matters outside the pleading are presented to and not excluded by the court." See Goldman v. Belden, 754 F.2d 1059, 1065-66 (2d Cir. 1985). Here, conversion is appropriate because both parties have availed themselves of the opportunity to provide affidavits, numerous exhibits and other materials outside the pleadings and the court has considered such materials. Moreover, regardless of how the motion is labelled, dismissal is warranted: it is clear not only that "there is no genuine issue as to any material fact" as required by Rule 56, but also that McElderry can prove no set of facts in support of her claims which would entitle her to relief, the standard for dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6), see Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957).

[4] See Memorandum in Support of Motion to Dismiss and For Sanctions ("Cathay Pacific Memorandum"), Exhibit 11, Passenger Rules Tariff No. PR-3, Local and Joint Rules and Regulations Governing the Carriage of Passengers and Baggage Applicable Between Points Throughout the World, Rule No. 16 ("Rule 16").

[5] Second Amended Complaint at para. 14.

[6] See affidavit of Paul S. Edelman, Counsel for McElderry ("Edelman Affidavit") (Feb. 26, 1987), Exhibit A, CAB Decision of Feb. 25, 1976.

McElderry's FAA claims are without merit. First, I determine that HN1[] there is no private right of action under these provisions of the FAA under the four-factor analysis set forth in Cort v. Ash, 422 U.S. 66, 78, 45 L. Ed. 2d 26, 95 S. Ct. 2080 [*1074] (1975). [7] The Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit has concluded, under similar circumstances, that there is no private right of action available under either § 403(b), see Wolf v. Trans World Airlines, Inc., 544 F.2d 134, 137 (3d Cir. 1976) (no private right of action where airline passengers allegedly provided with airline package tour accommodations impracticably far from airport), cert. denied, 430 U.S. 915, 51 L. Ed. 2d 593, 97 S. Ct. 1327 (1977), or § 404(b), see Polansky v. Trans World Airlines, Inc., 523 F.2d 332 (3d Cir. 1975) (no private right of action where airline passengers allegedly provided with unacceptable ground accommodations in airline package tour). Although these decisions are not binding on this court, they are persuasive and I conclude that they are correct.

[6] HN2[]

Section 403(b) states that:

> No . . . foreign air carrier . . . shall charge . . . a greater or less or different compensation for air transportation, or for any service in connection therewith, than the rates, fares, and charges specified in then currently effective tariffs of such . . . foreign air carrier . . . .

49 U.S.C. § 1373(b). HN3[] § 404(b) states that:

> No . . . foreign air carrier . . . shall make, give, or cause any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person . . . or subject any particular person . . . to any unjust discrimination or any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever.

49 U.S.C. § 1374(b). In finding no private right of action under either section, the Third Circuit focussed on the first and fourth factors articulated in Cort, which inquire whether the plaintiff is "'one of the class for whose especial benefit the statute was enacted,'" and whether the cause of action is "one traditionally relegated to state law, in an area basically the concern of the States," Cort, 422 U.S. at 78 (citation omitted and emphasis in the original). [8]

[7] Applying the first Cort factor to § 403(b), the Third Circuit found in Wolf:

> Plaintiffs here are not the special beneficiaries of § 403(b). That section prohibits the charging of fares either higher or lower than those established by the tariff. Yet a passenger could claim to be injured only by a higher charge. Because § 403(b) proscribes violations of the tariff that inure to passengers' benefit as well as to their detriment, we conclude that § 403(b) could not have been passed especially for the benefit of those in plaintiffs' position.

Wolf, 544 F.2d at 137. As to § 404(b), the Third Circuit found in Polansky that plaintiffs, who complained of poor ground accommodations provided by an airline package tour, were not the special beneficiaries of § 404(b) under Cort because they had not suffered the harm that § 404(b) was designed to prevent:

---

[7] The four factors articulated in Cort are:

> First, is the plaintiff "one of the class for whose especial benefit the statute was enacted," -- that is, does the statute create a federal right in favor of the plaintiff? Second, is there any indication of legislative intent, explicit or implicit, either to create such a remedy or to deny one? Third, is it consistent with the underlying purposes of the legislative scheme to imply such a remedy for the plaintiff? And finally, is the cause of action one traditionally relegated to state law, in an area basically the concern of the States, so that it would be inappropriate to infer a cause of action based solely on federal law?

Cort v. Ash, 422 U.S. at 78 (citation omitted) (emphasis in original).

[8] For reasons similar to those discussed above, the third Cort factor -- whether implication of a private remedy is consistent with the underlying purpose of the legislative scheme -- also cuts against a finding of a private right under §§ 403(b) and 404(b), see Wolf, 544 F.2d at 136-37; Polansky, 523 F.2d at 337-38, while the second Cort factor -- indication of legislative intent -- sheds no light on the question, Wolf, 544 F.2d at 138 n.3; Polansky, 523 F.2d at 336.

> [§ 404(b)] aims to protect the right of to air facilities from discriminatory interference by the air carrier. The airline is required to treat all potential passengers and users equally. Thus, the airline may not prohibit minority groups from equal access to flights or terminal facilities . . . . It is this denial [8] of access [*1075] to air facilities, whether caused directly, by outright refusal of permission to board, or indirectly, by burdening the potential user with special requirements not applied to the general public, which is critical.

Polansky, 523 F.2d at 335-36 (emphasis in original). See also Sanders v. Air India, 454 F. Supp. 1371, 1374-78 (S.D.N.Y. 1978) (travel agents' claim of discrimination in compensation did not fall within interest to be protected by § 404(b)).

Application of the first Cort factor to the case at hand would lead to a similar negative result as to both § 403(b) and § 404(b). Because, as in Wolf, McElderry can "claim to be injured only by a higher charge," 544 F.2d at 137, and HN4[] she simply alleges that she was over-charged for her baggage because of its weight, and does not, as in Polansky, allege that she was a member of a group subject to discrimination, she can not claim that either § 403(b) or § 404(b) was passed especially for her benefit.

Turning next to the fourth Cort factor -- whether the cause of action is traditionally relegated to state courts -- both the Polansky and the Wolf courts concluded that this inquiry cut against [9] implication of a private right of action under §§ 403(b) and 404(b):

> As the premise of this discussion, we recognize that a state remedy for breach of contract, breach of warranty and fraudulent misrepresentation was and, perhaps, still is, readily available. HN5[] Only where there is some countervailing national interest should the federal courts imply a federal private remedy when an adequate state remedy already exists. No countervailing national interest has been brought to the attention of the court in this case.
>
> . . . .
>
> Where little reason for implying a federal remedy can be articulated, federal courts should be wary of bringing entirely new areas of conduct under federal control . . . . In the instant case, appellants have never alleged, and could not rightly allege, that state remedies for breach of contract are inadequate. Neither have they suggested any reason why the efficacy of the Federal Aviation Act would be improved by a federal breach of contract remedy in this case.

Polansky, 523 F.2d at 337-38; accord, Wolf, 544 F.2d at 138. This analysis applies equally in the case at hand. McElderry has pointed to no reason why she can not pursue her over-charge claim in state court. [10] In sum, I conclude that McElderry has no private right of action under either § 403(b) or § 404(b).

Furthermore, even if McElderry had the right to press her claims under the FAA in federal court, her claims are without merit. It is undisputed that Cathay Pacific charges for excess baggage originating in the United States under the following method:

> Baggage that originates in the United States is assessed on the United States' "piece" system, regardless of the number of stopovers or changes of aircraft, so long as the baggage is either checked through from point of origin or is rechecked within 24 hours onto a connecting flight. On the other hand, baggage removed from the system and then rechecked onto a continuing flight, except where the connection time is less than 24 hours, is assessed based on the system applicable in the country where it is rechecked. [9]

McElderry alleges that this baggage charge policy violates Rule 16, the Cathay Pacific tariff filed with CAB which governs, among other things, baggage charges. However, there is no possible reasonable interpretation of Rule 16 which could support this claim. To the contrary, for the following reasons, Rule 16 indicates [11] that while Cathay Pacific must maintain a piece-based baggage charge system for flights to or from the United States, it is allowed to maintain a weight-based baggage charge system for those flights for which both the point of origin and the point of destination are outside the United States.

---

[9] Affidavit of Hans B. Olsen, Commercial Director of Cathay Pacific, at para. 6 (Jan. 8, 1987).

[*1076] Section (E) of Rule 16 explicitly provides that a weight-based baggage charge system may be employed on certain Cathay Pacific flights. Because Rule 16(E) clearly states that this weight-based system is not applicable to Cathay Pacific "between points in the U.S.A. and points outside the U.S.A./Canada," [10] it appears to follow that the weight-based system is allowable on Cathay Pacific flights between two foreign destinations. While Section (V) of Rule 16 provides for a piece-based baggage charge system, the very title of the rule -- "Free Baggage Allowance and Baggage Charges Between Points in the U.S.A. and Points Outside the U.S.A." -- indicates that Rule 16(V) applies only to flights where either the point of origin or the point of destination is in the United States. [11] Here, [12] it is undisputed that McElderry's flight on Cathay Pacific originated in Hong Kong and landed in Taipei.

McElderry makes two arguments in support of her claim that, despite the language of Rule 16 cited above, Rule 16(V) rather than Rule 16(E) controls the appropriate baggage charge applicable to her on the flight in question. First, McElderry argues that because she was travelling on a round-trip ticket -- of which only the Hong Kong-Taipei leg was on Cathay Pacific -- and her final destination was Louisville, Kentucky, "the flight in question must be construed, under DOT requirements and other authority, as a flight between the U.S.A. and points outside the U.S.A.," [12] which would then be governed by Rule 16(V). However, there is insufficient legal support for this interpretation: the cases which McElderry cites in support of it are not on point. In re Alleged Food Poisoning Incident, March 1984, 770 F.2d 3 (2d Cir. 1985), concerned the correct interpretation of the phrase "place of destination" under the Warsaw Convention in a flight with stop overs and using different [13] air carriers. Here, however, Rule 16 does not use the "destination" phraseology, using instead the "point to point" language cited above, and, of course, interpretation of the Warsaw Convention is not at issue. Barkanic v. General Admin. of Civil Aviation, 822 F.2d 11 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 964, 108 S. Ct. 453, 98 L. Ed. 2d 393 (1987), involving jurisdictional issues under the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act, has no direct bearing on this issue. Moreover, the undisputed fact that McElderry stayed in Hong Kong for eight days and had been out of the United States for more than three weeks before she took the Cathay Pacific flight -- as well as the undisputed fact that at that time Cathay Pacific provided no airplane service to or from the United States -- further undercuts McElderry's argument that her Cathay Pacific flight from Hong Kong to Taipei can reasonably be viewed as a flight to or from the United States.

Second, McElderry argues that only Rule 16(V) rather than Rule 16(E) may be legitimately applied to her because Rule 16(V) "conform[s] on its face" to CAB's 1976 Baggage Allowance [14] decision, [13] whereas Rule 16(E) does not. However, the Baggage Allowance decision and the subsequent CAB and Department of Transportation ("DOT") orders reaffirming the principles underlying it, [14] upon which McElderry relies, are not applicable to Cathay Pacific: these orders, on their face, refer only to tariffs filed with CAB by members of The International Air Transport Association ("IATA"), a trade organization of air carriers which seeks to establish joint tariffs and rates for its members. It is undisputed that Cathay Pacific is not an IATA member. Moreover, these orders do not, on their face, prohibit the weight-based charges: instead, they reflect CAB's policy of granting antitrust immunity only to those rate-setting air carrier organizations [*1077] whose members employ the piece-based baggage system.

In sum, even if a private right of action existed under the relevant sections of the FAA, Rule 16(E)'s weight-based rules rather than Rule 16(V)'s piece-based rules governed the appropriate [15] baggage charge system on McElderry's Cathay Pacific flight from Hong Kong to Taipei, and hence the $ 10 excess baggage fee charged to McElderry was legal.

II. Antitrust Claims

---

[10] Cathay Pacific Memorandum at Exhibit 11, Rule 16(E) at 32-B.

[11] Id., Rule 16(V) at 44-P.

[12] Letter to the court of Paul S. Edelman, Counsel to McElderry, at 3 (Oct. 1, 1987) ("Edelman letter").

[13] Edelman letter at 4 (emphasis deleted).

[14] See Memorandum in Support of Motion to Dismiss and For Sanctions, Exhibits 1-10, ten of the CAB and DOT orders cited in Complaint.

McElderry alleges that Cathay Pacific's baggage charge system violates §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1-2, and § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15. She argues that Cathay Pacific violated § 1 of the Sherman Act because it > knowingly and unlawfully did combine or conspire with other air carriers, in restraint of trade or commerce of American-based carriers in foreign markets, to adopt an unapproved and illegal baggage charge system for application to passengers with itinerary origins or termination within the United States, [15]

and violated § 2 of the Sherman Act because it > knowingly and unlawfully did combine or conspire with other air carriers to monopolize a part of the trade or commerce with foreign nations by adopting baggage allowance and excess baggage charges which had been agreed to by the International Air Transport Association . . . for application to service not involving itineraries with origins or terminations in the United States. By doing so, defendant applied a schedule [16] of charges which are economically disadvantageous to travelers like plaintiff. . . . The charges imposed by defendant are economically advantageous to air carriers. [16]

For the reasons discussed below, these claims are dismissed for failure to meet the requirements of the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvement Act, 15 U.S.C. § 6a(1)(A) (1982), and for reasons of comity. [17]

[17] HN6[]

Under the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvement Act, federal courts do not have jurisdiction under the Sherman Act over conduct involving "trade or commerce . . . with foreign nations" unless such conduct has a "direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect" on United States domestic, import or export commerce. 15 U.S.C. § 6a(1)(A). An anticompetitive effect on United States commerce is required for jurisdictional nexus, regardless whether there was anti-competitive conduct in the United States, see Liamuiga Tours v. Travel Impressions, Ltd., 617 F. Supp. 920, 924 (E.D.N.Y. 1985), and the applicable test is "whether the effect would have been evident to a reasonable person making practical business judgments," Eurim-Pharm GmbH v. Pfizer Inc., 593 F. Supp. 1102, 1106 n.4 (S.D.N.Y. 1984).

Although McElderry's second amended complaint does allege that Cathay Pacific's acts have a direct anticompetitive effect on United States commerce, the complaint presents no facts in support of those allegations. In McElderry's memorandum of law, however, she contends that:

> Every time a passenger protected by the CAB/DOT-approved tariff scheme is overcharged, there is a direct and cognizable [18] effect on U.S. commerce . . . . Furthermore, the overcharges present both an immediate competitive disadvantage [*1078] to complying, essentially United States-based carriers through reduced revenues as compared to their competitors, as well as an indirect loss through adverse effects on business good will when a United States-based joint fare through-ticketing carrier is concerned. In Professor

---

[15] Second Amended Complaint at para. 40.

[16] Id. at para. 41.

[17] McElderry also alleges that Cathay Pacific violated § 1 of the Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13, by establishing > a baggage allowance and charge system which resulted in the discrimination in price between different purchasers of commodities of like quality, to wit, an airline through-ticket providing for passage from Hong Kong to Taipei on defendant's airline and a similar passage on an airline obeying United States laws and tariff requirements.

Second Amended Complaint at para. 42. This claim is without merit: the Robinson-Patman Act applies only to the sale of goods, not services, and applies only to discriminatory sales that take place in the United States. See generally, ABA Antitrust Section, Antitrust Law Developments at 222, 226-27 (2d Ed. 1984 and Supp.).

> McElderry's case, United Airlines lost out as compared to Cathay Pacific -- it was compromised as the issuer of a ticket on which a passenger was improperly overcharged. [18]

These arguments are without merit. First, even accepting, for the purposes of this motion to dismiss, McElderry's contention that thousands of American passengers have been overcharged for their baggage by Cathay Pacific, HN7[] an allegation of mere monetary injury is not enough to state a Sherman Act claim: a Sherman Act plaintiff must "show injury to a market or to competition in general, not merely injury to individuals." Fine v. Barry and Enright Productions, 731 F.2d 1394, 1399 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 881, 83 L. Ed. 2d 186, 105 S. Ct. 248 (1984); accord, McGlinchy v. Shell Chemical Co., 1985-2 Trade Cas. CCH para. 66,672 at 63,169 (N.D. [19] Cal. 1984). Second, McElderry's argument that Cathay Pacific's weight-based system is anticompetitive because it increases Cathay Pacific's revenues as compared to those air carriers which follow the piece-based baggage charge system is illogical, even assuming in McElderry's favor that 1) Cathay Pacific in fact has any United States competitors on its Hong Kong-Taipei flights -- which it denies, and 2) the weight-based system necessarily generates more revenue than the piece-based system -- which Cathay Pacific also denies. As Cathay Pacific points out, > if U.S. carriers ever did compete with Cathay Pacific on this route, the U.S. carriers' allegedly beneficial baggage pricing would, under Plaintiff's theory, cause consumers to choose the U.S. carriers over Cathay Pacific. Rather than harm hypothetical U.S. competitors, Cathay Pacific['s] challenged baggage charges would benefit them. [19]

Finally, McElderry's assertion that Cathay Pacific causes loss of good will to United States-based air carriers which issue tickets which include flights on Cathay Pacific is, at best, speculative. In sum, it cannot be concluded that Cathay Pacific's excess baggage charge system has a [20] direct, substantial and reasonably foreseeable anticompetitive effect on United States commerce.

Moreover, even if McElderry's claim were held to have met the requirements of the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act, the better course would still be to decline to exercise jurisdiction under principles of international comity. See O.N.E. Shipping v. Flota Mercante Grancolombiana, 830 F.2d 449, 451 (2d Cir. 1987) (affirming district court's dismissal of antitrust action involving interests of Colombian government on comity grounds). The United States and the United Kingdom disagree on the appropriate method for measuring and assessing excess baggage: since the 1976 CAB Baggage Allowance decision the United Kingdom has continued to approve weight-based systems for its air carriers and has objected to any attempts to impose a piece-based system on foreign air carriers engaged in purely foreign travel. [20]

[21] In this case, the United Kingdom has filed a diplomatic note with the Department of State expressing the view that this court has no jurisdiction over this dispute under principles of international law:

> Her Majesty's Government can see no basis in international law for the exercise of jurisdiction by the United States. Neither Hong Kong nor Taiwan are US territories. [*1079] Cathay Pacific Airways is a United Kingdom airline which at the time of the plaintiff's flight did not operate to the United States. The right for it to fly between Hong Kong and Taipei, and the conditions on which passengers may be carried on such flights, is a matter within the jurisdiction of Hong Kong and Taiwan. The fact that the plaintiff is a US citizen and the ticketing for the journey between Hong Kong and Taipei (but not the carriage) had been effected by United Airlines in the United States, where she happened to begin her series of journeys, is insufficient to justify the exercise of jurisdiction by the United States.

---

[18] Plaintiff's Memorandum of Law In Opposition to Defendant's Motion to Dismiss and for Sanctions at 87.

[19] Defendant's Reply to Plaintiff's Memorandum of Law in Opposition to Defendant's Motion to Dismiss and For Sanctions at 8-9 (April 8, 1987).

[20] See Affidavit of Robert H. Morse, Counsel for Cathay Pacific, ("Morse Affidavit"), at paras. 5-7 and Exhibits 6-8 (describing history of U.S./U.K conflict over baggage charges) (April 8, 1987).

> . . . If in such circumstances the governments of courts of third States were entitled to superimpose unilaterally their own conditions of carriage the resulting conflicts between national [22] rules would result in total uncertainty as to which conditions applied to any particular passenger on any particular flight.
>
> Whereas uniform conditions of carriage may be a desirable objective -- particularly for passengers who make a series of journeys using two or more airlines -- the objective cannot be achieved by the purported exercise of extra-territorial jurisdiction which infringes the sovereignty of other States. [21]

HN8[] Where, as here, there is a direct conflict between the United States and United Kingdom, the continuance of which could clearly exacerbate the stated differences between the two countries, the proper course seems clearly to be to "avoid the unnecessary irritant of a private antitrust action" by declining jurisdiction. O.N.E. Shipping, 830 F.2d at 454 (2d Cir. 1987). [22]

[23] Moreover, the related "act of state" doctrine constitutes a further basis for declining jurisdiction in this case. The court of appeals for the this circuit has recently explained that this doctrine > is a principal of law designed primarily to avoid judicial inquiry into the acts and conduct of the officials of the foreign state, its affairs and its policies and the underlying reasons and motivations for the actions of the foreign government.

O.N.E. Shipping, 830 F.2d at 452. Here, Cathay Pacific has convincingly demonstrated that its baggage charge system for baggage originating in the United States is necessitated by the United Kingdom's regulatory system. Hans B. Olsen, the Commercial Director of Cathay Pacific, explains in his affidavit that:

> Cathay Pacific's applicable tariffs filed in the United States state that the piece-system would apply for travel to or from the United States. Cathay Pacific's applicable tariffs filed with the United Kingdom state that the weight-based system would apply for travel to or from Hong Kong, except for direct flights to or from the United States. Cathay Pacific has reconciled these two conflicting regulatory schemes with regard to travel [24] originating in the United States passing through Hong Kong to points outside of Hong Kong, consistent with the principles contained in the U.S.-U.K. Bilateral Aviation Agreement, by implementing the . . . excess baggage charge policy [outlined above]. [23]

J.T. Thorpe, Director of Civil Aviation of the Civil Aviation Department of the Government of Hong Kong, confirms in his affidavit that:

> Cathay Pacific has been authorized by the appropriate aeronautical authorities to operate air services between Hong Kong and Taiwan based on specified tariffs . . . . At present, the utilization by Cathay Pacific Airways of any other excess [*1080] baggage charge system [than the weight-based system] would be outside its operating authority. [24]

These affidavits establish that this is HN9[] case in which, as in O.N.E. Shipping, "the causal chain between a defendant's alleged conduct and plaintiff's injury cannot be determined without an inquiry into the motives of the foreign government," and because "the conduct of the [defendant] has been compelled by the foreign government,"

---

[21] Morse Affidavit at Exhibit 6, Note No. 21.

[22] It is also noted that it is undisputed that Cathay Pacific, which is incorporated in Hong Kong and has its principal place of business there, did not provide any airplane service to or from the United States at the time of McElderry's flight, and that the conduct complained of in this action also took place outside of the United States, two factors which cut against assertion of jurisdiction in cases raising comity concerns. Cf. Joseph Muller Corp. Zurich v. Societe Anonyme de Gerance et D'Armement, 451 F.2d 727, 729 (2d Cir. 1971) (per curiam) (articulating comity balancing test), cert. denied, 406 U.S. 906, 31 L. Ed. 2d 816, 92 S. Ct. 1609 (1972).

[23] Olsen Affidavit at para. 6.

[24] Affidavit of J.T. Thorpe at para. 2 (Jan. 6, 1987).

the defendant "is entitled to [25] assert the defense of foreign government compulsion and the act of state doctrine is applicable." O.N.E. Shipping, 830 F.2d at 453.

For the reasons stated above, McElderry's antitrust claims are dismissed.

III. Rule 11 Sanctions

Cathay Pacific has moved for sanctions against McElderry's attorneys under Fed.R.Civ.P. 11. Although, in view of the disposition above it can not be said that the motion was made without reason, it is nevertheless denied. HN10[] Rule 11 sanctions do not, of course, automatically attach as a result of the dismissal of McElderry's claims. Rather, the relevant inquiry is whether a competent attorney could have formed the reasonable belief that McElderry's pleading was warranted by existing law or a good faith argument for the extension, modification or reversal of existing law. Eastway Construction Corp. v. City of New York, 762 F.2d 243, 254 (2d Cir. 1985).

Here, McElderry presented novel claims which are essentially of first impression. While I have concluded that McElderry's claims may not be presented in a federal court and are otherwise lacking in merit, McElderry's theories in support of jurisdiction and on the merits of her claims were at least colorable. [26] The advisory committee notes to Rule 11 warn that Rule 11 "is not intended to chill an attorney's enthusiasm or creativity in pursuing . . . legal theories," and that "the court is expected to avoid using the wisdom of hindsight and should test the signer's conduct by inquiring what was reasonable to believe at the time the pleading . . . was submitted," including whether "the pleading . . . was based on a plausible view of the law . . . ." Under these circumstances, Cathay Pacific's motions for sanctions is denied. See Skepton v. County of Bucks, PA, 613 F. Supp. 1013, 1022 (E.D. Pa. 1985) (denying sanctions after dismissal of antitrust claims, where "although . . . plaintiff's complaint [was found] to be without merit, . . . plaintiff's complaint was an attempt, albeit unsuccessful, to create a novel cause of action"); Florida Monument Builders v. All Faiths Memorial Gardens, 605 F. Supp. 1324, 1326 (S.D.Fl. 1984) (denying sanctions after dismissal of antitrust claims because "plaintiff did have at least a colorable claim based on an extension of existing law").

* * *

McElderry's complaint is dismissed. Cathay Pacific's motion for sanctions is [27] denied. It is so ordered.

End of Document

![LexisNexis]

North Cent. Watt Count, Inc. v. Watt Count Engineering Systems, Inc.

United States District Court for the Middle District of Tennessee, Nashville Division

February 2, 1988, Decided

No. 3-86-0836

Reporter

678 F. Supp. 1305 *; 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 958 ; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,940

North Central Watt Count, Inc. v. Watt Count Engineering Systems, Inc., et al.

Core Terms

territorial, dealers, entity, enterprise, horizontal, defendants', Licensing, upstream, restrictions, Contractor, dealership, summary judgment motion, vertical, heatshield, sales, downstream, courts, racketeering activity, interstate commerce, price competition, competitor, conspiracy, extortion, franchise, per se violation, present evidence, antitrust claim, circuits, commerce, restrain

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

HN1[] Judgments, Summary Judgment

Historically, courts have been reluctant to dispose of complex antitrust litigation on motions for summary judgment. This reluctance stems from the crucial role that intent and motive have in antitrust claims and the difficulty of proving conspiracy by means other than factual inference. This does not mean, however, that summary judgment should never be granted in antitrust actions. To survive a motion for summary judgment, the plaintiff must provide some factual basis from which elements of intent and conspiracy may be reasonably inferred. In disposing of such motions, the evidence must be viewed in a light most favorable to the nonmoving party, giving that party the benefit of all reasonable inferences. Only if the evidence is not disputed as to any genuine issue of material fact should the case be decided as a matter of law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > Commerce With Foreign Nations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN2[] Sherman Act, Claims

Section 1 of the Sherman Act proclaims that every contract, combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce is illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. To establish a claim under § 1, a plaintiff must prove: (1) that the defendant entered into a contract, combination, or conspiracy; (2) that the contract, combination, or conspiracy was either "in" or affected interstate or foreign commerce; and (3) that the contract, combination, or conspiracy unreasonably restrained such commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Remedies > General Overview

HN3[] Private Actions, Remedies

It is well established that proof of actual "antitrust injury" is a necessary prerequisite to recovering damages under 15 U.S.C.S. § 15. Similarly, in order to obtain injunctive relief under 15 U.S.C.S. § 26, a plaintiff must show a threat of "antitrust injury." The plaintiff must show more than an injury causally linked to an antitrust violation. It must show both an actual and threatened injury of the type the antitrust laws were designed to prevent and that flows from that which makes a defendants' acts unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Business & Corporate Law > Foreign Corporations > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > Commerce With Foreign Nations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Sherman Act

Traditionally, courts have applied a "rule of reason" approach to determine whether a particular business arrangement unreasonably restrains interstate or foreign commerce in violation of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. The true test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition, or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. To determine that question the court must ordinarily consider the facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied; its condition before and after the restraint was imposed; the nature of the restraint, and its effect, actual or probable. The history of the restraint, the evil believed to exist, the reason for adopting the particular remedy, the purpose or end sought to be obtained, are all relevant facts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

Although most business arrangements are analyzed under the "rule of reason" approach, courts have characterized certain types of business agreements or practices as per se violations of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Such agreements or practices because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use. It is only after considerable experience with certain business relationships, however, that courts will classify them as per se violations of § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Nonprice Restraints

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Restraints of trade generally are characterized as either vertical or horizontal. Although there may be occasional problems in distinguishing between vertical and horizontal restrictions, such a distinction is critical. Vertical restraints are agreements between persons or business entities at different levels of the market structure. Horizontal restraints, on the other hand, are agreements between competitors at the same level of the market structure. Because vertical non-price restraints are generally found to be potentially beneficial to interbrand competition, such restrictions traditionally have been scrutinized under the "rule of reason" approach. Horizontal restraints, however, have been characterized as naked restraints of trade with no purpose except stifling competition. Such restraints, therefore, are generally regarded as per se violations of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

HN7[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

Although a particular market restriction may, at first glance, appear to be vertical in nature, a more thorough examination of the underlying business arrangement involved may reveal that the restriction is, in fact, a per se unreasonable horizontal restraint. To determine whether a particular market restriction is vertical or horizontal in nature, district courts in this circuit must focus their inquiry upon the effect and purpose of the restriction. The purpose of a given market restriction may be discovered by identifying the source of the restriction and determining whether the restriction is consistent with the source's market strategy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN8[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

Some circuit courts have held that such an agreement constitutes a per se violation of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 if the "upstream" entity's refusal to deal was primarily motivated by a desire to protect the "downstream" entity from price competition at the horizontal level. These circuits subscribe to the view that although the "upstream" entity's refusal to deal appears to be a unilaterally-imposed vertical restraint, if the refusal to deal is made at the direction of a "downstream" entity seeking to suppress its competition by utilizing the power of a common "upstream" entity, the restraint's purpose and effect becomes primarily horizontal in nature. If the purpose and effect of the challenged conduct is to restrain price movement and the free play of market forces, it is illegal per se. The court agrees that if the "upstream" entity's decision to refuse to deal with the horizontal competitor was in fact its own, the result of its own marketing strategy and judgment, the alleged conduct would be unilateral in nature and might be found to possess the pro-competitive redeeming virtues that would defeat the application of a per se rule. If, however, the "upstream" entity's decision was made at the "downstream" entity's request and with an intent to restrain intrabrand price competition, application of a per se rule would be appropriate.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN9[] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

In order to establish a violation under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organization Act, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962(c), a plaintiff must prove: (1) the existence of an enterprise which affects interstate or foreign commerce; (2) that the defendant was employed by or associated with the enterprise; (3) that the defendant participated in the conduct of the enterprise's affairs; and (4) that the defendant participated through a pattern of racketeering activity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN10[] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

18 U.S.C.S. § 1962(c) provides: It shall be unlawful for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity or collection of unlawful debt.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > General Partnerships > Management Duties & Liabilities > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN11[] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

The term "enterprise" includes any individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal entity, and any union or group of individuals associated in fact although not a legal entity. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961(4). An enterprise is proven by the existence of a continuing organization and by evidence that members function as a continuing unit for a common purpose. Although the existence of an enterprise is a separate element of a 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962(c) violation, there need not be proof of an enterprise distinct from proof of a pattern of racketeering. It is well settled that the enterprise need only have a minimal impact upon interstate commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN12[] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

18 U.S.C.S. § 1962(c) applies to legitimate as well as illegitimate enterprises.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Extortion > Hobbs Act > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Extortion > Hobbs Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN13[] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

A plaintiff must prove more than the existence of an enterprise which affects interstate commerce. It must also prove that each individual defendant participated in the conduct of that enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity. The term "racketeering activity" encompasses a variety of federal and state crimes, including the racketeering activity alleged in this case; extortion in violation of 18 U.S.C.S. § 1951 and Tenn. Code Ann. § 39-2-701 (1982), and mail fraud in violation of 18 U.S.C.S. § 1341. A "pattern" of racketeering activity requires at least two acts of racketeering activity the last of which occurred within 10 years after the commission of a prior act of racketeering activity. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961(5). These acts are more commonly referred to as "predicate acts." In order to prove that defendants conducted the affairs of the alleged enterprise "through" a pattern of racketeering activity, there must be a nexus between the enterprise and the racketeering activity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

HN14[] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

Tenn. Code Ann. § 39-2-701 (1982) makes it unlawful for any person to: maliciously threaten to accuse another of a crime, offense, or immoral act, or to do any injury to the person, reputation or property of another, with intent to extort any money, property, or pecuniary advantage whatever, or to compel the person so threatened to do any act against his will.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Extortion > Hobbs Act > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Extortion > Hobbs Act > General Overview

HN15[] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

18 U.S.C.S. § 1951(a) makes it unlawful for any person to obstruct, delay, or affect commerce or the movement of any article in commerce by using, attempting to use, or conspiring to use extortionate means. An essential element of a § 1951(a) violation, therefore, is proof that the extortionate transaction has at least a de minimus effect on interstate commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Extortion > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Extortion > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Extortion > Hobbs Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Extortion > Hobbs Act > Elements

HN16[] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

"Extortion" is defined in 18 U.S.C.S. § 1951(b)(2) as the obtaining of property from another, with his consent, induced by wrongful use of actual or threatened force, violence, or fear, or under color of official right. It is well settled that fear of economic loss may be a sufficient basis for a finding of extortion, but only if it is actual and reasonable and the defendant knew of and intentionally made use of such actual fear.

Counsel: [1] Michael A. Meyer, David N. Burn, Burn & Meyer, for Plaintiff also for Third-Party Defts. Ray Busby and Allen Bowman.

Gail P. Pigg, Esq., for Defendant.

Henry E. Hildebrand, Jane P. North, Passino, Delaney & Hildebrand, for Third-Party Deft. Michael Busby.

Judges: Thomas A. Wiseman, Jr., Chief Judge.

Opinion by: WISEMAN

Opinion

[*1306] MEMORANDUM

THOMAS A. WISEMAN, JR., CHIEF JUDGE

Plaintiff North Central Watt Count, Inc. (NCWC) initiated this lawsuit in September, 1986 against defendants Watt Count Engineering Systems, Inc. (WCES), Watt Count Marketing Corporation (WCM), Watt Count of Middle Tennessee, Inc. (WCMT), and several individually-named defendants. [1] In its complaint, NCWC alleged that defendants violated both the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq. (1973), and the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C. § 1961-68 (1984). In October, 1986, the Court issued a preliminary injunction against defendants, restraining them from engaging in certain types of activity. [2] Defendants subsequently moved to dismiss NCWC's complaint for failing to state a claim upon which relief could be granted and for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction. The Court denied defendants' motions on July 2, 1987. The case is presently before [2] the Court on cross-motions for summary judgment filed by NCWC and defendants on both the antitrust and RICO

[1] The individually-named defendants are all members of WCES' Board of Directors: Donald Terrell, Keith Crowe, Reese Smith, Jr., Reese Smith, III, Stephen B. Smith, and W. C. Allen. Defendants Terrell, Crowe, Smith, Jr., Smith, III, and Stephen Smith were also members of WCMT's Board of Directors.

[2] Specifically, the Court enjoined defendants from:

1. Refusing to provide engineering, design or other consulting or support services to North Central Watt Count;

2. Refusing to sell heatshield, caulking or other materials or supplies which defendants offer for sale to Watt Count franchises and/or refusing to sell or attempting to sell such items at prices which are higher than the regularly posted prices for such items;

3. Revoking or suspending plaintiff's Watt Count franchise or engaging in, or attempting to do any act to restrict plaintiff's business activities to any specified area;

4. Engaging in any other conduct or causing others to engage in any conduct which would restrict or interfere with plaintiff's conduct of business under its Watt Count franchise.

In doing so, the Court held that NCWC had shown a likelihood of success on the merits of its antitrust claim.

claims. For the reasons explained below, the Court denies both NCWC's and defendants' motions for summary judgment on the antitrust claim, and grants defendants' motion for summary judgment on the RICO claim.

[3] I. Factual Background

A. The Watt Count Organization and System

WCES and WCM, its wholly-owned subsidiary, form the basis of a business organization that provides and markets energy conservation systems primarily for new and existing single and multi-family residential housing units. WCES, the parent corporation, provides computerized engineering analyses, designs insulation, ventilation and air-conditioning specifications, and issues written guarantees which insure that annual energy consumption levels in units equipped with the Watt Count System will not exceed a particular guaranteed amount. The issuance of these written guarantees is what distinguishes the service provided by the Watt Count Organization from that provided by other energy conservation system businesses. [3] [4] In return [*1307] for its services, WCES charges its area dealers a flat rate of fourteen cents per square foot of conditioned living space. [4]

WCM is the marketing arm of the Watt Count Organization. Although its primary function is to sell Watt Count area dealerships, WCM also provides area dealers with certain technical support, and marketing and promotional aids and supplies. In return for its services, WCM receives approximately four percent of an area dealer's gross sales.

The Watt Count System is actually promoted, sold, and installed by Watt Count area dealers. At the time this lawsuit was filed, Watt Count area dealers were located in several states. [5] In addition to caulking the framework of a structure, blowing insulation into cavities created by wall t's and corners, and installing heatshield -- a metallized polyethylene material that is placed between the structure's insulation and dry wall on virtually all exterior walls and top-floor ceilings -- area dealers inspect the installation of insulation, and heating and cooling duct systems to make certain that such installation complies with the design specifications provided by WCES.

[5] B. The Present Dispute

In essence, this lawsuit involves a rather convoluted territorial dispute between two Watt Count area dealers -- NCWC and WCMT. WCMT first became associated with the Watt Count Organization in 1982 when it purchased the Watt Count area dealership for Williamson County, Tennessee. [6] Shortly thereafter, WCMT purchased the Watt Count area dealership for Davidson County, Tennessee. [7] Defendants Keith Crowe, Reese Smith, Jr., Reese Smith, III, and Stephen B. Smith were the original shareholders of WCMT and were members of WCMT's original Board of Directors. Defendant Donald Terrell was a member of WCMT's original Board, but only recently became a WCMT shareholder. WCMT has had no other shareholders or directors since its incorporation. Although collectively the Smiths constitute a majority of WCMT's Board, defendants Terrell and Crowe are responsible for conducting WCMT's daily operations.

Like WCMT, NCWC first became involved in the Watt Count Organization in 1982. At that time, NCWC purchased the Watt Count area dealership [6] for Sumner, Macon, Trousdale, Smith, and Wilson counties in Tennessee. NCWC originally was owned by a group of investors which included William Cutting, Charles Parks, Porter Jones, and WCES. WCES' interest in NCWC was represented by its President at the time, Michael Busby. Michael Busby,

---

[3] Various companies throughout the Middle and Northern Tennessee area provide services similar to those provided by Watt Count. Only Your Energy Service, however, issues a written guarantee similar to the one provided by Watt Count. Compared to the Watt Count Organization, Your Energy Service controls a relatively insignificant share of the relevant market.

[4] For certain repeat work, however, WCES charges its area dealers seven cents per square foot of conditioned space.

[5] As of April 11, 1987, there were 19 Watt Count area dealers located in nine different states. See Deposition of Keith Crowe at 32.

[6] WCMT paid $ 37,500 for the Williamson County dealership.

[7] WCMT paid an additional $ 40,000 for the Davidson County dealership.

who has been named as a counterclaim defendant in this lawsuit, served as President of WCES until the fall of 1986. In 1983, the ownership of NCWC changed hands. Since that time, NCWC has been owned by Raymond Busby -- Michael Busby's father and Secretary-Treasurer of NCWC -- and Allen Bowman -- Michael Busby's brother-in-law and President of NCWC.

Toward the latter part of 1983, WCMT learned that NCWC was actively soliciting customers and engaging in business in Davidson County. Believing that such conduct violated NCWC's dealership agreement, which WCMT interpreted as providing for exclusive sales territories, [8] [8] defendants [*1308] Terrell and Crowe contacted Michael Busby, then President of WCES, and asked him to stop NCWC from engaging in business in WCMT's territory. According to both Michael Busby and defendant Crowe, Michael Busby informed defendants Terrell and Crowe that WCES could not legally [7] impose territorial restrictions on NCWC in order to stop it from doing business in WCMT's territory. [9] According to defendant Terrell, however, Michael Busby informed them that he had talked to and reprimanded NCWC, and that he had taken care of the problem. [10]

In September, 1983, WCMT's attorney sent a letter to Michael Busby objecting to NCWC's continued intrusion into WCMT's territory. In a letter addressed to WCMT's attorney dated October 28, 1983, Michael Busby purportedly set forth WCES' response to WCMT's complaint. In that letter, he stated:

> First, as to the matter of exclusivity of geographical area, the franchise prospectus was prepared to provide that no other [area dealership] would be established by Watt Count in the franchisee's territory during the term of his contract . . . . To avoid a violation of antitrust laws, Watt Count could not prohibit the salespersons of one franchise from selling in another franchise territory. [11]

According to this letter, therefore, WCES' position, was that it never intended to restrict or prohibit salespersons of one area dealer from selling in another area dealer's territory, and that neither WCES nor any of its sales representatives made any representations to the contrary. It was WCES' belief that the most it could do was prohibit area dealers from establishing [9] an office or place of business in another area dealer's territory. [12] [10] This was also the understanding of both the original and present owners of NCWC. [13]

---

[8] Both NCWC and WCMT entered into identical dealership agreements with WCM. By the express terms of those agreements, WCM granted area dealers "the exclusive right to promote, sell, and service the Watt Count System. . . in the geographic area specified in Paragraph 1.4" See Authorized Total Energy Center Dealership Agreement, Paragraph 1.1. Paragraph 1.4 of the agreements required the area dealer to operate a business, and maintain a retail sales outlet in a defined area, and provided that WCM would not grant any other "dealer franchise" in a particular geographic territory. In Paragraph 1.6 of the agreements, the area dealers acknowledged WCM's right to authorize other area dealers to sell and promote the Watt Count System "outside the geographic area specified in Paragraph 1.4." The agreements, however, did not explicitly and unambiguously state that one franchise's salespersons could not solicit business in another franchise's territory.

[9] See Deposition of Michael Busby at 27; Deposition of Keith Crowe at 19.

[10] See Deposition of Donald Terrell at 56.

[11] Defendants Terrell and Crowe claim that a franchise prospectus was not used when they negotiated to purchase WCMT's two area dealerships. See also Affidavit of Jim Pemberton at 2 (Pemberton, along with Michael Busby, negotiated the sale of WCMT's two area dealerships on behalf of WCM). In any event, although the franchise prospectus is somewhat ambiguous, it may reasonably be construed to support defendants' claim that WCES and WCM initially intended to impose territorial sales restriction. Section 13(ii) of the prospectus provided that "[WCM] limits the geographic area in which . . . [a] franchise may promote and sell the Watt Count System." Section 13(iii) further provided that "[WCM] does provide territorial protection . . . in that [it] agrees not to establish another . . . franchise within the geographic area designated in the . . . Dealership Agreement."

[12] WCES' position is supported by the testimony of Michael Busby, Clinton Swafford, Thomas Moody, and Robert Brown. See Deposition of Michael Busby at 16-17; Affidavit of Clinton Swafford at 2; Affidavit of Thomas Moody at 3; Affidavit of Robert Brown at 2.

[13] See Deposition of Charles Parks at 7-10; Transcript of October 3, 1986 Preliminary Injunction Hearing at 25-26 (testimony of Raymond Busby); 82 (testimony of Allen Bowman).

WCMT's Board was "stunned" by WCES' response. Defendants contend that at the time defendants Terrell and Crowe negotiated for the purchase of the Williamson and Davidson County area dealerships, both Michael Busby and Jim Pemberton, then President of WCM, represented that the dealership territories would be exclusive and that area dealers would not be permitted to solicit or do business in another area dealer's territory. [14] It is the defendants' [*1309] position that the dealership agreements were intended to, and did in fact impose such territorial restrictions. [15] Defendants further contend that Michael Busby never presented WCMT's letter to WCES' Board, that the Board, therefore, never addressed WCMT's objection to NCWC's actions, and that Michael Busby falsified the portion of WCES' response which concerned that objection. [16] [12] NCWC, however, claims that Busby distributed a copy of the letter to all directors present at WCES' October 25, 1983 Board meeting, and that the Board addressed all of the issues [11] presented by the letter and directed Busby to draft the above response. [17]

During the months following this exchange of letters, both NCWC and WCMT solicited customers and engaged in business in each other's territories. [18] [13] WCMT, however, continued to complain and object. Apparently in response to WCMT's complaints, Michael Busby prepared and WCES' Board, at its September 25, 1984 meeting, adopted a proposed policy statement which would have required area dealers who solicited and did business in another dealer's territory to pay that dealer a five percent commission on any completed project. By its terms, however, the policy did not become effective unless it was approved by all area dealers. Because NCWC refused to approve the policy, it was never adopted. [19] Interterritory competition between NCWC and WCMT, therefore, continued.

In late 1985 and early 1986, WCES was sold to a group of investors, including defendants Terrell, Crowe, and the Smiths. Following the completion of that transaction, the composition of WCES' Board changed drastically. The new board consisted of defendants Terrell, Crowe, the Smiths, W. C. Allen, and Michael Busby. Although defendants

---

[14] The testimony of defendants Terrell and Crowe, as well as that of Jim Pemberton support this contention. See Deposition of Donald Terrell at 15-19; Deposition of Keith Crowe at 10-11; Affidavit of Jim Pemberton at 1-2. Furthermore, defendants contend that Michael Busby, himself, acknowledged the truth of this contention at an informal WCES Board meeting just three days prior to the preliminary injunction hearing held in this case on October 3, 1986. For testimony in support, see Affidavit of W. C. Allen at 3; Affidavit of Kimberly Redd at 2. Finally, the testimony of Glenn Lawrence, who served as a WCES director until January, 1986, also supports this contention. See also Affidavit of John Baugh at 2 (a member of WCES' Board at time dealership first sold and considered).

[15] Defendants argue persuasively that it would have made no economic sense for them to have paid $ 40,000 for a second area dealership, unless they truly believed that the dealership agreements imposed protective territorial sales restrictions.

[16] WCMT's letter contained two objections; one concerning NCWC's territorial crossings and another concerning engineering fees. The response drafted by Michael Busby addressed both of these complaints. The minutes of the October 25, 1983 board meeting, however, do not indicate that the Board discussed WCMT's objection to NCWC's actions, nor do they indicate that a copy of WCMT's letter was distributed to the directors. NCWC has not offered any explanation for these omissions. Furthermore, John Baugh, who in his affidavit claims to have been on WCES' Board until mid-1985 but who NCWC alleges was not present at the time WCES' Board discussed its response to WCMT's letter, contends that Michael Busby never advised the Board that NCWC was selling in another dealer's territory, and that the Board was never asked to change its original policy and permit territorial crossings. See Affidavit of John Baugh at 3.

[17] This version of the facts is supported by the testimony of both Michael Busby and Clinton Swafford, a member of WCES' Board at the time who was present at the October 25, 1983 meeting and who drafted the cover letter under which WCES' response was sent to WCMT. See Affidavit of Clinton Swafford at 4-5.

[18] According to defendant Terrell, at the time WCMT received Michael Busby's response to their letter, WCMT had no reason to believe that he was misrepresenting the position of WCES and thought that the best thing to do was avoid a costly court battle and begin selling in NCWC's territory. See Affidavit of Donald Terrell at 4.

[19] All other area dealers were willing to sign and approve the policy statement.

Terrell, Crowe, and the Smiths acquired only 44 percent of WCES, they constituted a majority of WCES' newly-formed Board.

Shortly after ownership of WCES changed hands, WCMT lost several jobs in Davidson County in direct competition with NCWC. Had WCMT secured those jobs, it would have received approximately $ 120,000 to $ 150,000 in gross revenues. WCMT admittedly lost those jobs because NCWC submitted a lower bid for identical service. According to WCMT, NCWC was able to submit a lower bid solely because it "took a [*1310] free ride" on WCMT's good will and reputation in Davidson County.

Following the loss of these jobs, defendants took several actions. First, in June, 1986, defendant Terrell, acting independently [20] but admittedly on behalf of WCMT, decided to stop selling heatshield to NCWC. [14] WCES, through WCM, initially purchased heatshield in bulk quantities from Metallized Products, Inc., a company located in Boston, Massachusetts. WCM then resold the heatshield to area dealers at a price substantially lower than that charged by any other area supplier. Sometime in 1983, because WCES was financially unable to continue this practice, WCMT voluntarily assumed the responsibility for doing so. According to a letter written by defendant Terrell to Ace Insulation Company dated August 12, 1985, WCMT was appointed by Metallized Products, as an authorized heatshield dealer. Despite this letter, defendants contend that WCMT was simply a Watt Count area dealer purchasing material in bulk and selling to other area dealers as a professional courtesy. At no time were Watt Count dealers required to purchase heatshield from WCES, WCM, or WCMT.

Second, in late July or early August, 1986, defendants Terrell and Crowe began contemplating filing a complaint against NCWC with the State of Tennessee Board of Licensing Contractors (Contractor [15] Licensing Board). The idea to file the complaint originated shortly after NCWC obtained a job in WCMT's territory worth approximately $ 70,000 to $ 80,000. Defendant Crowe initiated the process by calling the Contractor Licensing Board to determine whether NCWC was required to obtain a license for such a large job. After describing the nature of NCWC's work to the Contractor Licensing Board representative, Crowe asked whether a complaint against NCWC should be filed. According to Crowe, the representative advised him to do so. Crowe, therefore, asked the representative to send him a complaint form and a copy of the contractors' license law. On August 6, 1986, after reading the license law, defendants Terrell and Crowe, believing that NCWC was required to obtain a contractors' license, filed a complaint against NCWC for engaging in heating, ventilating and air-conditioning subcontractor work worth in excess of $ 50,000. At the time the complaint was filed, defendant Crowe was aware that defendant Smith, III was a member of the Contractor Licensing Board. Defendants Smith, Jr., Smith, III, and Stephen Smith, however, did not know that the complaint was contemplated or filed until after [16] the fact. [21] The Contractor Licensing Board subsequently dismissed the complaint. Smith, III took no part in the decision and had nothing to do with processing the complaint.

Finally, in August, 1986, defendant Terrell, speaking on behalf of WCMT, asked WCES' Board to stop NCWC from soliciting or doing business in WCMT's territory. [22] After discussing the problem at length, the Board passed a resolution directing WCES' attorney to write letters to both NCWC and WCMT. [23] The letters were to inform both companies that WCES would refuse to provide engineering services for or guarantee any work performed outside an area dealer's assigned territory. The letters were also to warn both companies that WCES would terminate their franchises if they violated the territorial restrictions. At the time this resolution was passed, the board of WCMT constituted a majority of WCES' Board. With the [17] exception of Michael Busby, who voted against the resolution, and defendant [*1311] Smith, III, [24] who was not present at the meeting, all of WCES' board members -

---

[20] NCWC contends that although defendants Crowe and the Smiths were not directly involved, they either approved of or acquiesced in Terrell's action.

[21] NCWC contends, however, that WCMT's remaining board members subsequently approved of or acquiesced in defendants Terrell and Crowe's actions. NCWC further contends that the complaint was meritless and that it was filed by defendants Terrell and Crowe with full knowledge of its groundless nature.

[22] Prior to addressing WCES' Board, Terrell consulted with WCMT's remaining board members on an informal basis.

[23] Defendant Allen moved that the Board adopt the resolution.

- defendants Terrell, Crowe, Smith, Jr., Stephen Smith, and Allen -- voted for the resolution. WCES' attorney sent a letter to this effect to NCWC on August 21, 1986. [25] This litigation followed.

II. Legal Discussion

A. Antitrust Claim

HN1[] Historically, courts have been reluctant to dispose of complex antitrust litigation on motions for summary judgment. See Smith v. Northern Michigan Hospitals, Inc., 703 F.2d 942, 947 (6th Cir. 1983). This reluctance "stems from the crucial role that intent and motive have in antitrust claims and the difficulty of proving conspiracy by means other than factual [18] inference." Id. This does not mean, however, that summary judgment should never be granted in antitrust actions. To survive a motion for summary judgment, "the plaintiff must provide some factual basis from which elements of intent and conspiracy may be reasonably inferred." Potters Medical Center v. The City Hospital Association, 800 F.2d 568, 572 (6th Cir. 1986). In disposing of such motions, the "evidence must be viewed in a light most favorable to the nonmoving party, giving that party the benefit of all reasonable inferences." Davis-Watkins Co. v. Service Merchandise, 686 F.2d 1190, 1197 (6th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 466 U.S. 931, 80 L. Ed. 2d 190, 104 S. Ct. 1718 (1984). [26] "Only if the evidence is not disputed as to any genuine issue of material fact should the case be decided as a matter of law." Hand v. Central Transport, Inc., 779 F.2d 8, 10 (6th Cir. 1985).

HN2[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act proclaims that "every [19] contract, combination . . . or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce . . . is . . . illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1 (1973). To establish a claim under section 1, a plaintiff must prove:

(1) that the defendant entered into a contract, combination, or conspiracy;

(2) that the contract, combination, or conspiracy was either "in" or affected interstate or foreign commerce; and

(3) that the contract, combination, or conspiracy unreasonably restrained such commerce. [27]

See White and White, Inc. v. American Hospital Supply Corp., 723 F.2d 495, 504 (6th Cir. 1983); Continental Cablevision of Ohio, Inc. v. American Electric Power Co., 715 F.2d 1115, 1118 (6th Cir. 1983).

[20] In their motion for summary judgment, defendants argue that NCWC has failed to present evidence sufficient to create a genuine issue for trial as to both the alleged conspiracy in this case and the alleged restraint's effect on interstate commerce. Defendants' arguments, however, are unpersuasive. Although evidence of WCES'

---

[24] Although Smith, III was not present, NCWC claims that he impliedly approved of the Board's action and the content of the letter sent to NCWC by failing to subsequently dissent.

[25] It is unclear whether a similar letter was ever sent to WCMT.

[26] But see Matsushita Electric Industrial Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 553, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986) ("antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case").

[27] NCWC seeks both damages under 15 U.S.C. § 15 (Supp. 1987) and permanent injunctive relief under 15 U.S.C. § 26 (Supp. 1987). HN3[] It is well established that proof of actual "antitrust injury" is a necessary prerequisite to recovering damages under section 15. See Brunswick v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 712, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977). Similarly, in order to obtain injunctive relief under section 26, NCWC must show a threat of "antitrust injury." See Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 438, 107 S. Ct. 484 (1986). NCWC must show more than an injury causally linked to an antitrust violation. Id. 93 L. Ed. 2d at 435. It must show both an actual and threatened injury "of the type the antitrust laws were designed to prevent and that flows from that which makes a defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick, 50 L. Ed. 2d at 712. Contrary to defendants' contention, NCWC has met this burden by presenting evidence which tends to show that defendants' alleged unlawful conduct reduced competition in the Middle Tennessee market for Watt Count services and that NCWC has been and will be injured by that reduction in competition. Defendants' motion for summary judgment, therefore, to the extent that it was based on this issue, is denied.

[*1312] refusal to deal with NCWC cannot, by itself, support a finding of antitrust liability under section 1, see Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 782-86, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984), NCWC clearly has presented evidence that reasonably "'tends to exclude the possibility' that [WCES and WCMT] acted independently." Matsushita, 89 L. Ed. 2d at 553. [28]. Futhermore, although the alleged restraint in this case was not itself "in commerce," NCWC has presented evidence of conduct that, "'as a matter of practical economics' . . . [has] a not insubstantial effect" on interstate commerce. [29] McLain v. Real Estate Bd. of New Orleans, 444 U.S. 232, 62 L. Ed. 2d 441, 453, 100 S. Ct. 502 (1980) (quoting Hospital Building Co. v. Rex Hospital Trustees, 425 U.S. 738, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338, 344, 96 S. Ct. 1848 (1976)). Accordingly, defendants' motion [21] for summary judgment on NCWC's antitrust claim is denied. [30]

Although NCWC [22] has presented sufficient evidence from which a reasonable finder of fact could conclude that WCES conspired with WCMT and the individually-named defendants to restrain interstate commerce, the difficult issue presented by this case is whether NCWC has presented evidence sufficient to create a genuine issue for trial as to the reasonableness of that restraint. Defendants argue that NCWC has not, and therefore that NCWC's motion for summary judgment on this issue should be denied.

HN4[] Traditionally, courts have applied a "rule of reason" approach to determine whether a particular business arrangement unreasonably restrains interstate or foreign commerce in violation of section 1. See United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515, 525 92 S. Ct. 1126 (1972). The United States Supreme Court described this "rule of reason" approach in Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 62 L. Ed. 683, 38 S. Ct. 242 (1918):

> The true test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition, or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. To determine that question the court must ordinarily [23] consider the facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied; its condition before and after the restraint was imposed; the nature of the restraint, and its effect, actual or probable. The history of the restraint, the evil believed to exist, the reason for adopting the particular remedy, the purpose or end sought to be obtained, are all relevant facts.

62 L. Ed. at 687, quoted with approval in Davis-Watkins, 686 F.2d at 1196.

HN5[] Although most business arrangements are analyzed under this "rule of reason" approach, courts have characterized certain types of business agreements or practices as per se violations of section 1. Such "agreements or practices . . . because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use." Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 549, 78 S. Ct. 514 [*1313] (1958). "It is only after considerable experience with certain business relationships," however, that courts will classify them as per se violations of section [24] 1. Topco, 31 L. Ed. 2d at 525.

---

[28] It is undisputed that WCES and WCMT, while separate economic entities, are commonly-controlled corporations. Furthermore, defendants do not dispute that WCES' refusal to deal with NCWC was designed to either impose or enforce territorial sales restrictions, and that WCMT had a practical economic motive for encouraging such action on WCES' part. Finally, it is clear that WCES' alleged misconduct did not occur until after WCMT gained some measure of control over WCES.

[29] As NCWC points out, by threatening to terminate NCWC's franchise, WCES effectively restricted NCWC's business activity to a limited territory. NCWC's consumption of heatshield -- a product that traveled in interstate commerce -- therefore, decreased. The record clearly shows that NCWC purchased heatshield produced by Metallized Products, Inc., a corporation located in Boston, Massachusetts. It is therefore irrelevant that NCWC could have obtained heatshield from an intrastate source.

[30] See also, supra, n. 25 (disposing of defendants' only other argument -- that NCWC has not presented evidence of an "antitrust injury").

HN6[] Restraints of trade generally are characterized as either vertical or horizontal. Although "there may be occasional problems" in distinguishing between vertical and horizontal restrictions, Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 585 n.28, 97 S. Ct. 2549 (1977), such a distinction is critical. Vertical restraints are agreements between persons or business entities at different levels of the market structure. See Topco, 31 L. Ed. 2d at 526. Horizontal restraints, on the other hand, are agreements between competitors at the same level of the market structure. Id. at 525. Because vertical non-price restraints "are generally found to be potentially beneficial to interbrand competition," Davis-Watkins, 686 F.2d at 1196, such restrictions traditionally have been scrutinized under the "rule of reason" approach. Horizontal restraints, however, "have been characterized as 'naked restraints of trade with no purpose except stifling competition.'" Oreck Corp. v. Whirlpool Corp., 579 F.2d 126, 131 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 946, 58 L. Ed. 2d 338, 99 S. Ct. 340 (1978) (quoting White Motor Co. v. United [25] States, 372 U.S. 253, 9 L. Ed. 2d 738, 746, 83 S. Ct. 696 (1963)), quoted in, Com-Tel, Inc. v. Dukane Corp., 669 F.2d 404, 409 (6th Cir. 1982). Such restraints, therefore, are generally regarded as per se violations of section 1.

The truly difficult question presented by this case is whether defendants' conduct should be characterized as a vertical or horizontal restraint of trade. HN7[] Although a particular market restriction may, at first glance, appear to be vertical in nature, a more thorough examination of the underlying business arrangement involved may reveal that the restriction is, in fact, a per se unreasonable horizontal restraint. See, e.g., United States v. Sealy, Inc., 388 U.S. 350, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1238, 87 S. Ct. 1847 (1967); Topco, supra. To determine whether a particular market restriction is vertical or horizontal in nature, district courts in this circuit must focus their inquiry upon the effect and purpose of the restriction. See Davis-Watkins, 686 F.2d at 1197; Advisory Information and Management Systems, Inc. v. Prime Computer, Inc., 598 F. Supp. 76, 84-85 (M.D. Tenn. 1984). The purpose of a given market restriction may be discovered [26] by identifying the source of the restriction and determining whether the restriction is consistent with the source's market strategy. Id.

NCWC argues that defendants' conduct constitutes a per se unreasonable horizontal restraint. It contends that WCMT and the individually-named defendants conspired with WCES to prevent NCWC from competing with WCMT in the Middle Tennessee market for Watt Count area dealer services. More specifically, NCWC claims that defendants, after acquiring control over WCES, attempted to force NCWC to comply with territorial sales restrictions by refusing to deal with NCWC and threatening to terminate NCWC's franchise. According to NCWC, territorial sales restrictions were never intended and are inconsistent with WCES' market strategy.

NCWC further contends, and presents sufficient evidence from which a reasonable finder of fact could conclude, that defendants were motivated by a desire to protect WCMT from price competition in the Middle Tennessee area. Although the majority of the economic pressure exerted upon NCWC appears to have been applied unilaterally by WCES -- a vertical "upstream" entity -- NCWC argues that WCES was nothing more than a tool [27] "for the imposition and enforcement of horizontal restrictions." According to NCWC, defendants took advantage of their control over WCES "to initiate a course of conduct that could benefit only [WCMT]." Com-Tel, 669 F.2d at 412. Such conduct, NCWC argues, "must be viewed as a horizontal attempt to exclude a competitor on the horizontal level and to restrict intrabrand [*1314] competition without an offsetting benefit to interbrand competition. Id.

Defendants disagree. They contend that their conduct should be characterized as a vertical attempt to enforce territorial sales restrictions and, therefore, analyzed under the "rule of reason" approach. Defendants have presented evidence which suggests that territorial sales restrictions were always intended and that Watt Count area dealerships were sold based upon that understanding. According to defendants' version of the facts, WCES did not alter that policy until after Michael Busby's father and brother-in-law purchased NCWC and began selling the Watt Count System in WCMT's territory.

Defendants deny that their attempt to enforce territorial sales restrictions was motivated by a desire to protect WCMT from legitimate price competition. [28] Instead, defendants claim that they merely sought to enforce NCWC's area dealership agreement as it was written and originally intended. According to defendants, such territorial restrictions remain vital if WCES is to compete successfully with other energy conservation system providers. [31]

The peculiar facts of this case present an unresolved question in this circuit: Does an agreement between a single "upstream" entity, such as WCES, and a single "downstream" entity, such as WCMT, under which the "upstream" entity agrees to refuse to deal with a price-cutting horizontal competitor of the "downstream" entity, constitute a per se violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act? The United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit specifically avoided reaching this issue in Dunn & Mavis, Inc. v. Nu-Car Driveaway, Inc., 691 F.2d 241, 245 (6th Cir. 1982). See also Com-Tel, [29] 669 F.2d at 413 n.16. Fortunately, this question has been the subject of considerable litigation in other circuits. Those circuits, however, have disagreed on how to resolve the issue.

Several circuit courts have held that such an agreement does not constitute a per se violation of section 1 unless the refusal to deal was made pursuant to a price-maintenance agreement between the "upstream" and "downstream" entities. See McCabe's Furniture, Inc. v. La-Z-Boy Chair Co., 798 F.2d 323, 329 (8th Cir. 1986); Morrison v. Murray Biscuit Co., 797 F.2d 1430, 1435 (7th Cir. 1986); Westman Commissions Co. v. Hobart Int., Inc., 796 F.2d 1216, 1222-24 (10th Cir. 1986); Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 780 F.2d 1212, 1216 (5th Cir. 1986). According to these circuits, it is not enough for the jury to find that the "upstream" entity refused to deal with the competitor to reduce price competition at the horizontal level. See, e.g., Business Electronics, 780 F.2d at 1216. There must be evidence that the horizontal competitor was terminated pursuant to an agreement between the "upstream" and "downstream" entities to fix prices at a specific [30] level. Id. "The mere fact that the ["upstream" entity] may be motivated by antipathy to price competition is irrelevant." Morrison, 797 F.2d at 1440. The rationale of these circuits appears to be that because the "upstream" entity's motivation in refusing to deal with the competitor may be either legitimate [32] or illegitimate, and because regardless of the "upstream" entity's motivation its attitude will appear to be "one of hostility toward price cutters," neither the jury nor the court should be permitted to choose which motive may have predominated. See, e.g., Morrison, 797 F.2d at 1440; Business Electronics, 780 F.2d at 1217-18. But see McCabe's, 798 F.2d at 329 ("jury must determine whether . . . nonprice justifications . . . are legitimate, or are mere pretext to disguise a per se illegal agreement . . . to maintain resale prices").

[31] HN8[]

[*1315] Other circuit courts, however, have held that such an agreement constitutes a per se violation of section 1 if the "upstream" entity's refusal to deal was primarily motivated by a desire to protect the "downstream" entity from price competition at the horizontal level. See O.S.C. Corp. v. Apple Computer, Inc., 792 F.2d 1464, 1467 (9th Cir. 1986); Victorian House, Inc. v. Fisher Camuto Corp., 769 F.2d 466, 469 (8th Cir. 1985); Zidell Explorations, Inc. v. Conval International, Ltd., 719 F.2d 1465, 1469-71 (9th Cir. 1983); Cernuto, Inc. v. United Cabinet Corp., 595 F.2d 164, 170 (3d Cir. 1979). These circuits subscribe to the view that although the "upstream" entity's refusal to deal appears to be a unilaterally-imposed vertical restraint, if the refusal to deal is made "at the direction of [a "downstream" entity] . . . seeking to suppress its competition by utilizing the power of a common ["upstream" entity]," the restraint's purpose and effect becomes primarily horizontal in nature. See Cernuto, 595 F.2d at 168. According to these circuits, "if the purpose and effect of the challenged conduct is to restrain price movement and the free play of market forces, [32] it is . . . illegal per se." Id. at 169.

This Court agrees with the Cernuto court that if the "upstream" entity's decision to refuse to deal with the horizontal competitor "was in fact its own -- the result of its own marketing strategy and judgment -- . . . the alleged conduct would be unilateral in nature and might be found to possess the pro-competitive redeeming virtues that would defeat the application of a per se rule." Id. at 170. If, however, the "upstream" entity's decision was made at the [31] According to defendants, territorial restrictions also enhance intrabrand competition "by forcing each dealer to develop and promote his own territory rather than take a free ride off another dealer's efforts." Brief of Defendants in Opposition to Plaintiff's Motion for Summary Judgment at 12.

[32] For example, an "upstream" entity's refusal to deal may be motivated by a desire to enforce a reasonable non-price vertically-imposed territorial restriction. Defendants contend that this is exactly what WCES was doing in this case.

"downstream" entity's request and with an intent to restrain intrabrand price competition, application of a per se rule would be appropriate. The plaintiff need not present evidence of a price-fixing agreement between the "upstream" and "downstream" entities. Such an approach is consistent with the limited direction provided by the Sixth Circuit in Davis-Watkins.

In light of the above, it is clear that the merits of NCWC's antitrust claim must ultimately turn on the question of motive. The ultimate question must be: Was WCES' refusal to deal motivated by a desire to enforce pre-existing, vertically-imposed territorial sales restrictions as defendants suggest, [33] or did WCES refuse to deal with NCWC at WCMT's request in order to eliminate intrabrand price competition in the Middle Tennessee market for Watt Count area dealer services and thereby enable WCMT to maintain prices at its own preferred levels? Given that both parties have presented sufficient conflicting evidence concerning WCES' original market strategy and defendants' motive in refusing to deal with NCWC, this question must be answered by the finder or fact. Summary judgment on this claim, therefore, is inappropriate.

B. RICO Claim

NCWC also claims that defendants violated the substantive RICO offense set forth in 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c) (1984). [33] HN9[] In order to establish a section 1962(c) violation, NCWC must prove:

(1) the existence of an enterprise which affects interstate or foreign commerce;

(2) that the defendant was employed by or associated with the enterprise;

(3) that the defendant participated in the conduct of the enterprise's affairs; and

(4) that the defendant participated through a pattern of racketeering activity.

See United States v. Sinito, 723 F.2d 1250, 1260 (6th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 817, 83 L. Ed. 2d 33, 105 S. Ct. 86 (1984). [34]

HN11[] The term "enterprise" includes "any individual, partnership, corporation, association, [*1316] or other legal entity, and any union or group of individuals associated in fact although not a legal entity." [34] 18 U.S.C. § 1961(4) (1984). An enterprise "is proven by the existence of a continuing organization and by evidence that members function as a continuing unit" for a common purpose. Sinito, 723 F.2d at 1262. Although the existence of an enterprise is a separate element of a section 1962(c) violation, there need not be "proof of an enterprise distinct from proof of a pattern of racketeering." United States v. Qaoud, 777 F.2d 1105, 1115 (6th Cir. 1985) (citing with approval United States v. Mazzei, 700 F.2d 85, 89 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 461 U.S. 945, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1304, 103 S. Ct. [35] 2124 (1983)). But see United States v. Lemm, 680 F.2d 1193, 1198 (8th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1110, 74 L. Ed. 2d 960, 103 S. Ct. 739 (1983) (holding that enterprise must have existence separate and apart from the alleged pattern of racketeering activity). It is well settled that the "enterprise need only have a minimal impact upon interstate commerce." United States v. Robinson, 763 F.2d 778, 781 (6th Cir. 1985). [35]

---

[33] HN10[] Section 1962(c) provides:

> It shall be unlawful for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity or collection of unlawful debt.

18 U.S.C. § 1962(c) (1984).

[34] It is well settled that HN12[] section 1962(c) applies to legitimate as well as illegitimate enterprises. See United States v. Turkette, 452 U.S. 576, 69 L. Ed. 2d 246, 253, 101 S. Ct. 2524 (1981).

[35] It is the enterprise itself, not the conduct of each individual defendant that must affect interstate commerce. See United States v. Groff, 643 F.2d 396, 400 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 828, 70 L. Ed. 2d 103, 102 S. Ct. 121 (1981).

Defendants argue that NCWC has not presented sufficient evidence of an enterprise distinct from the individual RICO defendants. In addition, defendants contend that the enterprise alleged by NCWC has no effect whatsoever on interstate commerce. The Court disagrees. NCWC has presented uncontroverted evidence [36] which establishes the existence of a legitimate "association in fact" consisting of Watt Count area dealers, WCM, and WCES. It is undisputed that this "association in fact" is a continuing organization, the purpose of which is to provide and sell energy conservation systems. Its individual members function as a continuing unit and engage in business in several states. While it is true that some courts have held that a defendant cannot simultaneously be both a "person" and an "enterprise" under section 1962(c), see, e.g., Bennett v. United States, 770 F.2d 308, 315 (2d Cir. 1985), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 1058, 88 L. Ed. 2d 776, 106 S. Ct. 800 (1986), the facts of this case do not present such a dilemma. NCWC has presented uncontroverted evidence of a distinct RICO enterprise. The fact that defendants WCMT, WCM, and WCES are members of that enterprise is irrelevant.

HN13[] NCWC, however, must prove more than the existence of an enterprise which affects interstate commerce. It must also prove that each individual defendant participated in the conduct of that enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity. [36] The term "racketeering activity" encompasses a variety [37] of federal and state crimes, including the racketeering activity alleged in this case; extortion in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1951 (1984) and Tenn. Code Ann. § 39-2-701 (1982), and mail fraud in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1341 (1984). See 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1) (Supp. 1987). A "pattern" of racketeering activity "requires at least two acts of racketeering activity . . . the last of which occurred within ten years . . . after the commission of a prior act of racketeering activity." 18 U.S.C. § 1961(5) (1984). These acts are more commonly referred to as "predicate acts." In order to prove that defendants conducted the affairs of the alleged enterprise "through" a pattern of racketeering activity, "there must be a nexus between the enterprise and the racketeering activity." Qaoud, 777 F.2d at 1115.

NCWC alleges that defendants have committed four predicate acts of racketeering activity. It argues that defendants extorted or attempted to extort property from NCWC in violation of both 18 U.S.C. § 1951 and Tenn. Code Ann. § 39-2-701 by: (1) threatening [38] to terminate NCWC's Watt Count franchise unless NCWC agreed to [*1317] comply with territorial sales restrictions; (2) refusing to sell NCWC heatshield; and (3) filing a meritless complaint against NCWC with the Contractor Licensing Board. NCWC also argues that defendants committed a single act of mail fraud in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1341 by using the mails for the purpose of executing a scheme to fraudulently induce the Contractor Licensing Board to take action against NCWC. According to NCWC, defendants intentionally misrepresented to the Licensing Board that NCWC was doing business in violation of Tenn. Code Ann. § 62-6-103 (1986). In response, defendants argue, and the Court agrees, that NCWC has not presented sufficient evidence to establish a valid civil RICO claim for the predicate offenses it alleges.

Even if the Court assumes that defendants knew that the complaint filed against NCWC with the Contractor Licensing Board was meritless and contained false representations of fact, such conduct is neither chargeable under Tenn. Code Ann § 39-2-701, nor indictable under either 18 U.S.C. § 1341 or 18 U.S.C. § 1951. By filing a meritless and false complaint against NCWC, defendants may [39] have attempted to harass, but they did not "maliciously threaten" NCWC in violation of Tenn. Code Ann. § 39-2-701. [37] Furthermore, because defendants did not, in any way, delay, obstruct, interrupt or otherwise adversely affect interstate commerce by taking such action, no violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1951 has occurred. [38] [40] Finally, because the alleged misrepresentations made by [36] It is undisputed that defendants are all "employed by or associated with" the alleged enterprise. See 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c) (1984).

---

[37] HN14[] Tenn. Code Ann. § 39-2-701 (1982) makes it unlawful for any person to:

> maliciously threaten to accuse another of a crime, offense, or immoral act, or to do any injury to the person, reputation or property of another, with intent . . . to extort any money, property, or pecuniary advantage whatever, or to compel the person so threatened to do any act against his will . . . .

[38] HN15[] 18 U.S.C. § 1951(a) (1984) makes it unlawful for any person to obstruct, delay, or affect commerce or the movement of any article in commerce by using, attempting to use, or conspiring to use extortionate means. An essential element defendants in the complaint "could not have been reasonably calculated to deceive" a government entity such as the Contractor Licensing board, NCWC has not established a "scheme to defraud" -- an essential element of mail fraud in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1341. [39]

Similarly, WCMT's refusal to sell heatshield to NCWC, although admittedly motivated by NCWC's territorial crossings, does not constitute an act of extortion under either Tenn. Code Ann. § 39-2-701 [40] or 18 U.S.C. § 1951. HN16[] "Extortion" is defined in 18 U.S.C. § 1951(b)(2) as "the obtaining of property from another, with his consent, induced by wrongful use of actual or threatened force, violence, or fear, or under color of official right." It is well settled that fear of economic loss may be a sufficient basis for a finding of extortion, but "only if it [is] actual and reasonable and [the] defendant knew of and intentionally made use of such actual fear." United States v. Russo, 708 F.2d 209, 214 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 993, 78 L. Ed. 2d 682, 104 S. Ct. 487 (1983). See also United States v. Cusmano, 659 F.2d 714, 715 (6th Cir. 1981). Given that the individual [41] defendants effectively controlled WCMT, WCM, and WCES at the time, WCMT's refusal to sell heatshield to NCWC could have created in NCWC a reasonable fear of economic loss -- a fear of further economic reprisals. There is absolutely no evidence in the extensive record of this case, however, which suggests that NCWC [*1318] actually had such a fear. [41] Furthermore, even if WCMT's refusal aroused an actual fear of economic loss in NCWC, there is no evidence to indicate that defendants did anything to exploit or use that fear in an attempt to obtain property from NCWC.

Consequently, even if defendants committed an act of extortion in violation of Tenn. Code Ann. § 39-2-701 and/or 18 U.S.C. § 1951(a) by threatening to terminate NCWC's franchise, NCWC has not presented sufficient evidence [42] from which a reasonable finder of fact could conclude that defendants conducted or participated in the conduct of a RICO enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity. Defendants' motion for summary judgment on this claim, therefore, is granted. Defendants, however, are not entitled to an award of attorney's fees and costs incurred as a result of defending this claim.

ORDER

For the reasons stated in the accompanying Memorandum, the Court denies both plaintiff's and defendants' motions for summary judgment on the antitrust claim and grants defendants' motion for summary judgment on the RICO claim. Defendants, however, are not entitled to an award of attorney's fees and costs incurred as a result of defending the RICO claim.

End of Document

---

of a section 1951(a) violation, therefore, is proof that the extortionate transaction has at least a de minimus effect on interstate commerce. See United States v. Harding, 563 F.2d 299, 301-02 (6th Cir. 1977).

[39] The Court is convinced that an ordinary and prudent government board such as the Contractor Licensing Board would not have merely accepted the representations made in the complaint. In fact its function is to verify those representations and determine whether a license is required. Cf. Blount Financial Services, Inc. v. Walter E. Heller and Co., 819 F.2d 151, 153 (6th Cir. 1987).

[40] By refusing to sell heatshield to NCWC, defendants in no way "maliciously threatened" to take any action against NCWC. Such conduct, therefore, did not violate Tenn. Code Ann. § 39-2-701.

[41] In fact, Allen Bowman, President of NCWC at the time, has admitted that he did not even now why WCMT refused to sel NCWC heatshield. See Transcript of October 3, 1986 Preliminary Injunction Hearing at 104.

Pinney Dock & Transp. Co. v. Penn Cent. Corp.

United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit

October 29, 1985, Argued ; February 3, 1988, Decided ; February 3, 1988, Filed

Nos. 84-3653, 84-3654, 84-3876, 84-3877

Reporter
838 F.2d 1445 *; 1988 U.S. App. LEXIS 1514 ; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,876; 1988 WL 6387

Pinney Dock and Transport Co., Plaintiff-Appellant (84-3653), Plaintiff-Cross Appellee (84-3654), and Litton Industries, Inc.; Litton Systems, Inc.; Litton Great Lakes Corp.; and Erie Marine, Inc., Plaintiffs-Appellees (84-3876), Plaintiffs-Cross Appellants (84-3877) v. Penn Central Corp.; The Chessie System Co.; N & W Railway Co.; NWS, Inc.; and Bessemer & Lake Erie Railroad Co., Defendants-Appellees (84-3653), Defendants-Cross Appellants (84-3654), Defendants-Appellants (84-3876), Defendants-Cross Appellees (84-3877), Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Co.; Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co.; and CSX Corp., Defendants-Appellants (84-3876), Defendants-Cross Appellees (84-3877)

Subsequent History: [1] Petition for Rehearing and Petition for Rehearing En Banc Denied April 13, 1988.

Prior History: On Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio.

Core Terms

docks, district court, concealment, rates, railroads, antitrust, statute of limitations, defendants', self-unloaders, iron ore, conspiracy, handling, anti trust law, damages, cases, fraudulent concealment, affirmative act, charges, vessels, competitors, transportation, Lakes, cause of action, limitations, commodities, plaintiffs', meetings, immunity, parties, discovery

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Rates & Tariffs

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > US Interstate Commerce Commission

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > Rates & Tariffs

HN1[] Common Carrier Duties & Liabilities, Rates & Tariffs

Under the Interstate Commerce Act, 49 U.S.C.S. §§ 10101-11917, the carriers themselves initiate rates and include them in tariffs which must be filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission. § 10762(a)(1). Unless and until suspended, set aside or disapproved, these rates become the lawful rate as between carrier and shipper.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > Railroads

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > Rates & Tariffs

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

HN2[] Transportation, Railroads

Under the Interstate Commerce Act, 49 U.S.C.S. §§ 10101-11917, rail carriers have long been permitted to act jointly in setting rates despite the potential for antitrust liability.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Charters

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > Rates & Tariffs

HN3[] Regulated Industries, Transportation

Parties to an Interstate Commerce Commission-approved rate agreement are exempt from the antitrust laws with respect to making and carrying out the agreement. 49 U.S.C.S. § 10706(a)(2)(A).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > Common Carriers

Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Damages

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > Rates & Tariffs

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

HN4[] Filed Rate Doctrine, Common Carriers

The Keogh doctrine, as developed and announced in Keogh v. Chicago & Northwestern Ry., 260 U.S. 156, 67 L. Ed. 183 (1922), protects carriers from antitrust damages based on alleged discriminatory rates which have been approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > Railroads

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Rates & Tariffs

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > Rates & Tariffs

HN5[] Transportation, Railroads

The Reed-Bulwinkle Act, 49 U.S.C.S. § 10706, gives the parties to an Interstate Commerce Commission-approved ratemaking agreement immunity from the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > Rates & Tariffs

HN6[] Regulated Industries, Transportation

See 49 U.S.C.S. § 10706(a)(2)(A).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > Rates & Tariffs

HN7[] Regulated Industries, Transportation

The Reed-Bulwinkle Act exempts the parties to a rate agreement from antitrust liability with respect to carrying out the agreement. Thus, if the parties to a rate agreement conform with the agreement when setting rates, they are exempt from antitrust liability.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions > Preservation for Review

HN8[] Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions, Preservation for Review

It is the general rule that a federal appellate court does not consider an issue not passed upon below. This rule is not jurisdictional; the Supreme Court of the United States has referred to it as a "practice" and a "rule of procedure." Deviations are permitted in exceptional cases or particular circumstances, or when the rule would produce a plain miscarriage of justice.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN9[] Private Actions, Standing

When considering antitrust standing, a court should consider the following factors: (1) the causal connection between the antitrust violation and the harm to plaintiff and whether that harm was intended to be caused; (2) the nature of plaintiff's alleged injury including the status of plaintiff as consumer or competitor in the relevant market; (3) the directness or indirectness of the injury, and the related inquiry of whether the damages are speculative; (4) the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages, and; (5) the existence of more direct victims of the alleged antitrust violation. This list of factors is not exhaustive.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Torts > ... > Elements > Causation > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Judges > General Overview

HN10[] Justiciability, Standing

Like common-law adjudication, antitrust standing analysis must be done case-by-case. There is a similarity between the struggle of common-law judges to articulate a precise definition of the concept of "proximate cause," and the struggle of federal judges to articulate a precise test to determine whether a party injured by an antitrust violation may recover treble damages. It is common ground that the judicial remedy cannot encompass every conceivable harm that can be traced to alleged wrongdoing. In both situations the infinite variety of claims that may arise makes it virtually impossible to announce a black-letter rule that will dictate the result in every case.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN11[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

A conspiracy to charge higher than competitive prices is an antitrust violation but actually benefits the conspirators' competitors.

Civil Procedure > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling of Statute of Limitations > Fraud

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Civil Procedure > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling of Statute of Limitations > Fraudulent Concealment

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Tolling

HN12[] Tolling of Statute of Limitations, Fraud

Under the doctrine of fraudulent concealment, if defendant conceals from plaintiff the existence of a cause of action, the statute of limitations is tolled. To toll the statute, plaintiff must allege in the complaint that: (1) defendant concealed the conduct that constitutes the cause of action; (2) defendant's concealment prevented plaintiff from discovering the cause of action within the limitations period; and (3) until discovery plaintiff exercised due diligence in trying to find out about the cause of action.

Civil Procedure > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling of Statute of Limitations > Fraudulent Concealment

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Tolling

HN13[] Tolling of Statute of Limitations, Fraudulent Concealment

The equitable doctrine of fraudulent concealment represents a longstanding exception to the rule that plaintiff must commence his action within the period provided by the relevant statute of limitations.

Civil Procedure > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling of Statute of Limitations > Fraudulent Concealment

Civil Procedure > ... > Affirmative Defenses > Statute of Limitations > Statutory Construction

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Tolling

HN14[] Tolling of Statute of Limitations, Fraudulent Concealment

Where the ignorance of the fraud has been produced by affirmative acts of the guilty party in concealing the facts from the other, the statute will not bar relief provided suit is brought within proper time after the discovery of the fraud. However, because statutes of limitation are vital to the welfare of society and are favored in the law, plaintiff who invokes the doctrine of fraudulent concealment will be held to stringent rules of pleading and evidence, and especially must there be distinct averments as to the time when the fraud, mistake, concealment, or misrepresentation was discovered, and what the discovery is, so that the court may clearly see whether, by ordinary diligence, the discovery might not have been before made.

Civil Procedure > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling of Statute of Limitations > Fraudulent Concealment

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Tolling

HN15[] Tolling of Statute of Limitations, Fraudulent Concealment

In the context of private anti-trust actions the doctrine of fraudulent concealment is well recognized by the federal courts.

Civil Procedure > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling of Statute of Limitations > Fraud

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling of Statute of Limitations > Fraudulent Concealment

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Tolling

HN16[] Tolling of Statute of Limitations, Fraud

The statute of limitations applicable to private anti-trust actions may be tolled where plaintiff did not file its action in time because of ignorance resulting from defendant's fraudulent concealment.

Civil Procedure > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling of Statute of Limitations > Fraud

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Governments > Fiduciaries

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Tolling

Torts > Intentional Torts > Breach of Fiduciary Duty > General Overview

Torts > Intentional Torts > Breach of Fiduciary Duty > Defenses

HN17[] Tolling of Statute of Limitations, Fraud

Although self-concealing misconduct may be sufficient for purposes of the first element of fraudulent concealment, the cases involving such conduct are not incompatible with the rationale underlying the principle that affirmative acts of concealment must be shown except in cases founded on fraud or breach of fiduciary duty. Self-concealment of a conspiracy sufficient to toll the statute of limitations refers to activities in furtherance of the conspiracy which by their nature defy detection. Mere silence, or one's unwillingness to divulge one's allegedly wrongful activities, is not sufficient. Where the underlying cause of action is based upon alleged antitrust violations not fraud, plaintiff should be required to prove affirmative acts of concealment, particularly in light of the strong policy in favor of statutes of limitations.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

HN18[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

When an appellate court reviews a grant of summary judgment, the district court decision is reviewed de novo.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

HN19[] Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

In reviewing a district court's ruling denying a summary judgment motion on grounds that a material issue of fact exists appellate review is governed by an abuse of discretion standard.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN20[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Discretion plays no real role in the grant of summary judgment: the grant of summary judgment must be proper under the above principles or the grant is subject to reversal. The trial court may, however, exercise a sound discretion in denying summary judgment where, although the movant may have technically shouldered his burden, the court is not reasonably certain there is no triable issue of fact; where a portion of an action may be ripe for summary judgment but is intertwined with another claim(s) that must be tried; and in certain other situations.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Tolling

Torts > Procedural Matters > Statute of Repose > Tolling of Statutory Period

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN21[] Statute of Limitations, Tolling

To hold that a tolling or suspension of the limitation of actions must continue unless or until proof positive existed of a wrong (which might never be established in fact) would abort the policy of the law of repose in statutes of limitations of diligence in the equitable principles permitting suspension of them.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN22[] Private Actions, Standing

See Oh. Rev. Code Ann. § 1331.12.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > Pendent Claims

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN23[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Federal antitrust actions are limited by the four-year period of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15b.

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Federal Common Law > General Overview

HN24[] Federal & State Interrelationships, Federal Common Law

State law in a given field can be preempted either entirely or to the extent that it conflicts with federal law. A conflict between state and federal law arises when compliance with both federal and state regulations is a physical impossibility, or when state law stands as an obstacle to the accomplishment and execution of the full purposes and objectives of Congress.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Affirmative Defenses > Statute of Limitations > Federal Preemption

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN25[] Private Actions, Standing

The four-year federal statute of limitations, under 15 U.S.C.S. § 15b, does not preempt Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 1331.12.

Counsel: Attorneys in Case No. 84-3653:

Richard T. Colman, Robert G. Abrams, and Thomas N. Heyer, Howrey & Simon; Harry C. Nester, Hahn, Loeser, Freedheim, Dean and Wellman, for Appellants.

Stephen J. Pollak, Shea & Gardner; Kenneth N. Hart, (Penn Central), Donovan, Leisure, Newton & Irvine; Richard J. Flynn, Stephen S. Hill, Sidley & Austin; R. Merinda Wilson and Thomas H. Yancey; Kenneth C. Anderson, Squire, Sanders & Dempsey, Sean F. Boland, James V. Dick, Timothy W. Bergin, and John Doar; William C. Leiper (Bessemer & Lake Erie R.R. Co.), for Appellees.

Anthony J. Celebrezze, Jr., Attorney General of Ohio, Amicus Curiae - State of Ohio.

Lawrence R. Velvel, Memel, Jacobs, Pierno, Gersh & Ellsworth; Bruce J. Ennis, Ennis, Friedman, Bersoff & Ewing, Amicus Curiae for C.D. Ambrosia Trucking Company, David W. Reaney, Reaney Dock Company.

Attorneys in Case No. 84-3654:

Richard J. Flynn, Thomas H. Yancey, Stephen S. Hill and R. Merinda Wilson, Sidley & Austin; Kenneth C. Anderson, James V. Dick, and [2] Timothy W. Bergin, Squire, Sanders & Dempsey; Sean F. Boland and John Doar, John Doar Law Offices; Stephen J. Pollak, Richard T. Conway, and Stephen J. Hadley, Shea & Gardner, Shea & Gardner; Kenneth N. Hart, Donovan, Leisure, Newton & Irvine; John D. Morrison and William C. Leiper (Bessemer & Lake Erie Railroad Co.), for Appellants.

Richard T. Colman, Howrey & Simon, Robert G. Abrams and Thomas N. Heyer; Harry C. Nester, Hahn, Loeser, Freedheim, Dean & Wellman, for Appellees.

Anthony J. Celebrezze, Jr., Attorney General of Ohio, Amicus Curiae - State of Ohio.

Attorneys in Case Nos. 84-3876 and 84-3877:

Richard J. Flynn, Stephen S. Hill, Thomas H. Yancey, and R. Merida Wilson, Sidley & Austin; Kenneth C. Anderson, James V. Dick, Timothy W. Bergin, Squire, Sanders & Dempsey; Sean F. Boland; Richard T. Conway and Stephen J. Hadley, Shea & Gardner, (Baltimore & Ohio Chesapeake & Ohio; The Chessie System; CSX Corp.); John D. Morrison and William C. Leiper, Bessemer & Lake Erie Railroad Company; Donald L. Flexner and Richard McMillan, Jr., Crowell & Moring, for Cross-Respondents.

Richard T. Colman, Howrey & Simon; Robert G. Abrams and Thomas N. Heyer; Harry C. Nester, Hahn, Loeser, [3] Freedheim, Dean & Wellman, for Cross-Petitioner.

Judges: Engel and Kennedy, Circuit Judges, and Higgins, * District Judge.

Opinion by: ENGEL

Opinion

[*1448] ENGEL, Circuit Judge.

These consolidated antitrust cases are before the court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b) after a panel of this court granted permission on August 14, 1984 to appeal several orders of the United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio.

Plaintiffs originally commenced these separate actions in district court, seeking treble damages and injunctive relief for injuries to their business and property allegedly caused by defendants' violations of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2; section 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 14; and parallel provisions of Ohio's antitrust laws under the Valentine Act, Ohio Rev. Code §§ 1331.01-02, 1331.04, 1331.06, 1331.08, 1331.12, and 1331.14. Plaintiffs' actions are based on similar allegations that "from at least the mid-1950's" the defendant railroads [4] conspired to restrain trade in, and monopolize, the movement of iron ore by ship across the Great Lakes to docks located on the south shore of Lake Erie, the unloading of these ships at those docks, and the subsequent movement of the ore to steel mills located inland.

The issues certified for interlocutory appeal involve a number of jurisdictional questions, including antitrust immunity under the Interstate Commerce Act, 49 U.S.C. § 10706, application of the Keogh doctrine which bars antitrust damage claims in certain situations, exclusive and primary jurisdiction [*1449] of the Interstate Commerce Commission, standing, statute of limitation/fraudulent concealment under the antitrust laws, and federal preemption of the Ohio antitrust statute of limitations.

I.

A. The Parties

The plaintiffs in this consolidated action are Pinney Dock and Transport Company (Pinney) and Litton Industries, Inc., Litton Great Lakes Corporation, and Erie Marine, Inc., (collectively Litton). Pinney provides dock services at Ashtabula, Ohio, for iron ore and other bulk commodities moving over the Great Lakes by ship. For at least part of the time period [5] relevant to these cases, Litton was engaged in the design and construction of large self-unloading vessels and the operation of these vessels, along with conventional bulker vessels, in the movement of iron ore and other commodities over the Great Lakes. In 1974, however, Litton ceased operating such vessels on the Great Lakes.

The defendants are certain railroad companies, including Penn Central Corporation (Penn Central), Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company (B & O), Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company (C & O), CSX Corporation, Chessie Systems Company (Chessie), Norfolk & Western Railway Company (N & W), and Bessemer & Lake Erie Railroad Company (B & LE). [1] The defendant railroad companies are all engaged in the business of providing common carriage of goods and commodities by rail to or from Lake Erie docks. In addition, each of the railroad companies owns or has owned, was affiliated with, or operated one or more of these Lake Erie docks.

* Honorable Thomas A. Higgins, United States District Judge for the Middle District of Tennessee, sitting by designation.

[6] B. Historical Background

Pursuant to its authority under the Interstate Commerce Act, [2] [7] the Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC) has for many years regulated the rates set by railroads for the common carriage of goods and commodities by rail to and from Lake Erie. See Iron Ore Rate Cases, 44 I.C.C. 181 (1916), as supplemented, 44 I.C.C. 368 (1917). HN1[] Under the Act, the carriers themselves initiate rates and include them in tariffs which must be filed with the ICC. 49 U.S.C. § 10762(a)(1). [3] Unless and until suspended, set aside or disapproved, these rates become the lawful rate as between carrier and shipper. [4]

[8] [*1450] In setting rates under the Act, a carrier may provide interstate transportation services only at the rate specified and the tariff filed with the ICC. Id. § 10761. In addition, a carrier is strictly prohibited from charging any person a different rate for a "like and contemporaneous service in the transportation of a like kind of traffic under substantially similar circumstances." Id. § 10741(a). These provisions reflect one of the preeminent purposes of the Act: the prevention of unjust discrimination in interstate commerce. [5] Differences in rates, classifications,

---

[1] Pursuant to Rule 27(a) of the Local Rules of this court, and the order of the district court of May 23, 1985, we entered an order on June 5, 1985 dismissing from Nos. 84-3653 and 84-3654 B & O, C & O and CSX, collectively referred to as the "Chessie defendants," the parties having reached a settlement.

[2] The initial Act to Regulate Commerce was enacted in 1887. Ch. 104, 24 Stat. 379. Its successor, the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, was subsequently codified at 49 U.S.C. §§ 1-66. These and related provisions were repealed and recodified by Act of Oct. 17, 1978, Pub. L. No. 95-473, 92 Stat. 1337, and are currently codified in scattered sections of 49 U.S.C. §§ 10101-11917. Although this recodification was not intended to effect any "substantive change," see § 3(a), 92 Stat. 1337, 1466, it substantially revised the language and structure of the Act. The parties have cited the old version of the Act, but we have cited the current version.

For a good overview of the Interstate Commerce Act, including subsequent amendments, and its relationship to the antitrust laws, see Dempsey, Rate Regulation and Antitrust Immunity in Transportation: The Genesis and Evolution of this Endangered Species, 32 Am. U. L. Rev. 335 (1983).

[3] A tariff is a filed publication in which a carrier states its rates and charges and which may include rules governing other related services. See Rosenak, Rate Procedures and Proceedings, 12 Transp. L. Inst. 1, 1 (1979).

[4] Once a proposed tariff is filed with the ICC, the Commission has a limited time within which to suspend or reject the tariff. During this notice period the ICC may suspend the tariff either on its own motion or on the motion of an interested party. 49 U.S.C. § 10707(a). If the ICC fails to reject the proposed tariff within the applicable notice period the tariff automatically becomes effective. 49 U.S.C. § 10707(b). After a rate becomes effective, the Commission can still investigate violations of the Act and compel compliance with the Act. Id. § 11701(a). Judicial review of the ICC's decision under these proceedings is also available but subject to certain limitations. Thus, a decision by the Commission following a § 10707(a) investigation to approve or disapprove a set of rates is a judicially reviewable final decision as is a decision to approve or disapprove a set of rates following a § 11701(a) investigation. In addition, although a decision not to investigate the lawfulness of a proposed rate schedule under § 10707(a) is not reviewable, an interested party may require the Commission to "investigate the lawfulness of any rate at any time -- and may secure judicial review of any decision not to do so -- by filing a § [11701(a)] complaint." Southern Ry. Co. v. Seaboard Allied Milling Corp., 442 U.S. 444, 454, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1017, 99 S. Ct. 2388 (1979).

[5] See Louisville & Nashville R.R. v. Maxwell, 237 U.S. 94, 59 L. Ed. 853, 35 S. Ct. 494 (1915):

> Under the Interstate Commerce Act, the rate of the carrier duly filed is the only lawful charge. Deviation from it is not permitted upon any pretext. Shippers and travelers are charged with notice of it, and they as well as the carrier must abide by it, unless it is found by the Commission to be unreasonable. . . . This rule is undeniably strict, and it obviously may work hardship in some cases, but it embodies the policy which has been adopted by Congress in the regulation of interstate commerce in order to prevent unjust discrimination.

rules, or practices, however, do not violate the anti-discrimination provisions of the Act if they reflect substantive differences in services performed.

[9] HN2[] Under the Interstate Commerce Act, rail carriers have long been permitted to act jointly in setting rates despite the potential for antitrust liability. Indeed, although the Interstate Commerce Act of 1887 was silent on the issue of collective ratemaking, the ICC condoned the practice even after the enactment of the federal antitrust laws. See In re Trans-Continental Freight Bureau, 77 I.C.C. 252 (1923). [6] Beginning in the 1940's, however, the Department of Justice began enforcing the antitrust laws against related common carriers. In 1944, the State of Georgia brought an action against 21 railroads alleging rate discrimination, antitrust violations and price fixing. This suit culminated in Georgia v. Pennsylvania Railroad, 324 U.S. 439, 89 L. Ed. 1051, 65 S. Ct. 716 (1945), in which the Supreme Court held that a conspiracy "to use coercion in the fixing of rates and to discriminate against Georgia in the rates which are fixed" stated a cause of action under the antitrust laws. Id. at 462. In so holding, however, the Court emphasized that the State could not directly challenge the continuance of any tariff, since such an action [10] would be within the jurisdiction of the ICC.

Congress responded to this decision in 1948 with the Reed-Bulwinkle Act. [7] This Act specifically authorizes rate bureaus to agree collectively upon "rates . . ., classifications, divisions, or rules related to them, or procedures for joint consideration, initiation, publication, or establishment of them. . . ." 49 U.S.C. § 10706(a)(2)(A). This Act further provides that HN3[] parties to an ICC-approved rate agreement are exempt from the antitrust laws with respect to making and carrying out the agreement. 49 U.S.C. § 10706(a)(2)(A). [11] [8] In addition to the qualified immunity under the Reed-Bulwinkle Act, HN4[] the Keogh doctrine [9] has long [*1451] protected carriers from antitrust damages based on alleged discriminatory rates which have been approved by the ICC.

[12] Although these protections from the antitrust laws are considerable, an aggrieved party is not without a remedy for injuries inflicted in violation of the Act. The Act permits any person to bring a complaint at any time for violations of the Act. The Commission must investigate the complaint unless the complaint "does not state reasonable grounds for investigation and action." 49 U.S.C. § 11701(b). Also, a person injured by a violation of the Act can seek damages in a civil action or in a proceeding before the ICC. Id. § 11705. In addition to these private remedies, a carrier which willfully violates the Act may be subject to various penalties, fines, and civil damages, as well as other equitable relief, which may be sought by the Government. Id. §§ 11703, 11901-11907.

C. Factual Background

The defendant railroads in the instant case formed a rate bureau and entered into a collective ratemaking agreement shortly after the passage of the Reed-Bulwinkle Act. This agreement was subsequently approved by the ICC in 1950 pursuant to 49 U.S.C. § 5b (now codified at 49 U.S.C. § 10706). See Eastern Railroads -- Agreements, 277 I.C.C. 279 (1950). [13] No challenge is made here to the original agreement or to the defendants' right collectively to set rates pursuant to the terms and conditions of this agreement. Rather, plaintiffs challenge an

---

Id. at 97.

[6] This collective ratemaking was, and continues to be, effected through rate bureaus, which are associations of two or more carriers that disseminate information regarding the rates to be charged for various services by participating rate bureau members. See Dempsey, supra note 2, at 354.

[7] Pub. L. No. 80-662, 62 Stat. 472 (1948) (originally codified at 49 U.S.C. § 5b, and currently codified at 49 U.S.C. § 10706).

[8] Although the Reed-Bulwinkle Act has been substantially amended by the Railroad Revitalization and Regulatory Reform Act of 1976, Pub. L. No. 94-210, 90 Stat. 31 (1976), there is no claim that this amendment is applicable to the facts of the instant case.

[9] The Keogh doctrine was announced in Keogh v. Chicago & Northwestern Ry., 260 U.S. 156, 67 L. Ed. 183, 43 S. Ct. 47 (1922), and recently reaffirmed in Square D Co. v. Niagara Frontier Tariff Bureau, Inc., 476 U.S. 409, 106 S. Ct. 1922, 90 L. Ed. 2d 413 (1986).

alleged anticompetitive conspiracy which, plaintiffs contend, was formulated outside the scope of the agreement and in response to the emergence of self-unloaders and the threat they posed to defendants' control of the dock unloading and land transportation business. According to plaintiffs:

> Historically, iron ore had been carried across the Lakes in "bulker" vessels, which had to be unloaded by shore-side cranes, called huletts. Defendants owned all of the docks equipped with huletts, and their docks were exclusively used for unloading bulkers. Defendants collected "handling charges" for unloading bulkers and "line-haul rates" for carrying ore from their lake front docks to inland steel mills. By use of a conveyor system built into a self-unloading vessel, these boats could unload without the assistance of huletts. Self-unloaders threatened to render obsolete defendants' investment in huletts, and elevated the competitive importance of non-railroad docks such as Pinney because they [14] were not incumbered by huletts and were ideally suited for self-unloaders. To eliminate the competitive threat of non-railroad docks and to monopolize the dock handling business, defendants, inter alia assessed the bulker handling charge to self-unloaders even though no unloading services were performed, thereby eliminating the primary economic incentive to develop self-unloaders, and refused to publish a commodity line-haul rate from Pinney for the movement of iron ore, thereby eliminating the economic incentive to use Pinney instead of defendants' docks.
>
> Litton entered the Great Lakes transportation market in the mid-1960's and embarked on a venture to construct and operate large, technologically advanced self-unloading vessels. Litton's venture was frustrated by defendants' efforts to exclude self-unloaders and non-railroad dock competition and by defendants' concerted refusals to deal with Litton. In particular, defendants refused to cooperate with Litton in developing an unloading dock facility and refused to sell or lease dock space to Litton. Defendants' boycott of Pinney prevented Litton froin using Pinney even though Pinney was capable of handling Litton's large self-unloaders. [15] As a result, Litton withdrew from the market after constructing only two vessels.

According to plaintiffs, therefore, it was in response to this competitive threat posed by the development of self-unloaders that the defendants entered into a new and separate agreement and took actions pursuant to this agreement "from at least the mid-1950's," all of which plaintiffs alleged were outside the permissible bounds and protection [*1452] of the original ICC approved agreement of 1950.

D. The Parties' Allegations

In its amended complaint, Pinney's principal allegation is that the defendants conspired to restrain trade in, eliminate competition in, and monopolize the business of providing both dock services for iron ore and other goods moving over docks on the lower Great Lakes and water carriage for iron ore moving to the same docks. Pinney alleges that the defendants accomplished their illegal purposes by engaging in secret meetings, by refusing to grant non-railroad owned docks, such as Pinney, a competitive rail rate (i.e., a commodity line-haul rate), by arbitrarily placing Pinney in a switching district where it would be ineligible for rail rates competitive [16] with those available at railroad owned docks, by imposing an arbitrarily and unjustifiably high switching charge on cars of a railroad competitor which sought to carry iron ore from Pinney Dock at competitive rail rates, by intentionally impeding the construction and use of self-unloading vessels through the imposition of artificial, arbitrary, and unjustifiably high dock handling charges on such vessels and thereby foreclosing Pinney Dock's development as an iron ore handling facility, and by forcing railroads to forgo their right to independent action with respect to rail rates and services and other matters. [10]

Pinney alleges that as a result of the defendants' acts and violations, it was injured in its business and property because it was "forestalled and excluded [17] from participating in the business of providing dock services for various commodities, including iron ore, coal and coke." Pinney seeks to recover damages based on the amount of business it lost as a result of the defendants' efforts to drive it out of the iron ore business. They state that "one way to calculate the amount of business Pinney lost is to determine the amount of iron ore Pinney would have handled absent defendants' conspiracy and multiply that amount by the charges Pinney would have assessed for handling the ore." Pinney also claims that it was injured in its business by the defendants' assessment of bulker handling charges to self-unloaders, which, according to Pinney, was intended to impede the development and operation of such vessels, vessels which Pinney claims it was uniquely capable of handling.

---

[10] In paragraph 18 of its amended complaint, Pinney incorporates by reference and realleges, with respect to coal and coke shipments, the allegations and claims regarding iron ore shipments as set forth in paragraph 13 of the amended complaint.

Litton's damage claims are in many respects similar to those of Pinney. Litton's principal allegation is that the defendants conspired to restrain trade in, eliminate competition, and monopolize the business of providing dock services for iron ore and other bulk commodities moving over the docks on the Great Lakes, and also conspired to restrain and suppress trade in [18] the business of carrying iron ore and other bulk commodities in self-unloading and certain bulker vessels moving on the Great Lakes. Litton also claims that the defendants conspired to foreclose and prevent Litton from developing, selling, or chartering, or using technically advanced vessel, dock and related products and services.

Litton asserts that the defendants accomplished these illegal purposes by continuous secret meetings, by refusing to permit Litton to purchase, lease or use dock facilities which could have accommodated self-unloading vessels, by refusing to handle self-unloading vessels, by taking affirmative action to prevent non-railroad controlled docks from handling bulk commodities transported in self-unloading vessels, by arbitrarily placing unjustifiably high dock handling charges on iron ore discharged from self-unloading vessels, and by forcing railroads to forego their right of independent action. Litton claims that as a result of the defendants' acts and violations, it was forced to cease the design, construction, sale and charter of its advanced self-unloading vessels, the operation of its self-unloading and bulker vessels for the transportation of iron ore [19] and other bulk commodities, and prevented in its efforts to secure and operate dock facilities. [*1453] Litton claims that, as a result, it was forced to withdraw from the Lake Erie transportation market in 1974.

E. History of the Proceedings

Pinney filed its complaint on September 17, 1980, and a first amended complaint on October 8, 1980, in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio. Litton filed its complaint on March 5, 1981. After extensive discovery was taken, defendants filed a number of motions for summary judgment seeking to dismiss all or some of plaintiffs' claims on jurisdictional grounds. When this onslaught was concluded, United States District Judge Thomas had issued over six rulings consisting of over 500 pages of written memoranda and orders.

In the first two opinions, issued June 21, 1983, Judge Thomas denied defendants' summary judgment motions in Pinney. In the first opinion, Judge Thomas rejected each of the defendants' five grounds for dismissal of Pinney's claims: (1) express immunity from antitrust liability under the Reed-Bulwinkle Act; (2) immunity from antitrust damages under the Keogh doctrine; (3) exclusive [20] jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission; (4) primary jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission; and (5) lack of standing to raise certain claims. Pinney Dock & Transport Co. v. Penn Central Corp., 600 F. Supp. 859 (N.D. Ohio 1983). In the second opinion, Judge Thomas denied defendants' motions for summary judgment on Pinney's claims which predate the four-year statute of limitations under section 4B of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15b. In denying the motions, Judge Thomas held that there was a genuine issue of fact whether the fraudulent concealment exception under Dayco Corp. v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 523 F.2d 389 (6th Cir. 1975), tolled the statute of limitations. Pinney Dock & Transport Co. v. Penn Central Corp., 1983-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) para. 65,608 (N.D. Ohio 1983). Defendants thereafter moved for reconsideration, or certification of these issues for interlocutory appeal. On March 29, 1984, Judge Thomas again fully analyzed defendants' arguments and reaffirmed the June 21, 1983, decision on exclusive jurisdiction, express immunity and standing. The court also directed Pinney [21] to respond to its inquiries concerning the possible application of the Keogh doctrine and primary jurisdiction.

On May 10, 1984, the court reaffirmed its June 21, 1983, decision on Keogh and primary jurisdiction, and certified both of its Pinney decisions for interlocutory appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b). This court granted defendants' petition to appeal on August 8, 1984.

On October 4, 1984, Judge Thomas issued an exhaustive written Memorandum and Order in Litton denying defendants' motions for summary judgment on statute of limitations grounds. The court held that the legal principles relied upon in the Pinney statute of limitations opinion were equally applicable in Litton and further found that the facts of Litton raised a genuine issue of fact of fraudulent concealment by the defendants. In addition, after finding the jurisdictional issues in Litton virtually the same as in Pinney, the court, on October 5, 1984, adopted its holding in Pinney on all issues except standing, which defendants had not challenged. Judge Thomas also certified the Litton rulings pursuant to section 1292(b) for interlocutory [22] appeal. On October 25, 1984, a panel of this court granted defendants' petition for leave to appeal the interlocutory orders and consolidated the Pinney and Litton appeals for briefing and oral argument.

On February 2, 1982, Judge Thomas had also denied defendants' motions for summary judgment to dismiss Pinney's pendent state claims under Ohio's Valentine Act. Although the court sustained pendent jurisdiction, the court noted that an issue was raised as to whether the four-year statute of limitations governing federal antitrust actions, 15 U.S.C. § 15b, preempts Ohio Rev. Code § 1331.12, which provides that no statute of limitations shall bar claims under the Valentine Act. At the court's invitation, the parties submitted briefs on this issue. On October 1, 1982, Judge Thomas issued a written Memorandum and Order, [*1454] finding that the statute of limitations provision under the Valentine Act was preempted by federal law. The court therefore held that Pinney's pendent antitrust claims under the Valentine Act were subject to the Clayton Act's four-year statute of limitations. See Pinney Dock & Transport Co. v. Penn Central Corp., 1982-83 Trade Cas. (CCH) para. 65,053 (N.D. Ohio 1982). [23] On May 10, 1984, Judge Thomas again considered the preemption issue and reaffirmed his original decision. The court also certified this issue for interlocutory appeal pursuant to section 1292(b). On August 8, 1984, this court granted Pinney's petition for interlocutory appeal.

On October 4, 1984, Judge Thomas issued a written Memorandum and Order in the Litton case adopting his October 1, 1982, preemption ruling in the Pinney litigation. Judge Thomas also certified this order for interlocutory appeal pursuant to section 1292(b), and, on October 25, 1984, this court granted Litton's petition to appeal and consolidated Pinney and Litton for briefing and oral argument.

Judge Thomas' meticulous care and scholarship have been immensely helpful to the parties and to us.

On appeal, defendants have challenged virtually every ruling of the district court. Defendants argue that the district court erred in finding that they are not expressly immune from antitrust liability under the Interstate Commerce Act; that the court erred in finding that the Keogh doctrine does not bar plaintiffs' antitrust damage claims; and that the court erred in finding that the matters at [24] issue are not within the exclusive jurisdiction of the ICC. The defendants also contend that the district court's refusal to refer certain issues to the ICC under the doctrine of primary jurisdiction was erroneous. The defendants further argue that both Pinney and Litton lack standing to seek antitrust relief for certain claims. Finally, the defendants contend that the district court erred when it applied the doctrine of fraudulent concealment to toll the Clayton Act's four-year statute of limitations. Pinney and Litton, joined by the State of Ohio as amicus, also challenge the district court's ruling that the four-year statute of limitations governing federal antitrust actions preempts the statute of limitations provision under Ohio's Valentine Act. [11]

[25] II.

Initially, we address plaintiffs' contention that defendants are attempting to raise issues in this appeal which were not properly certified pursuant to section 1292(b) and which could not have been within the contemplation of the district court when it certified its orders for interlocutory appeal. Specifically, plaintiffs contend that defendants should not be able to raise the issue of primary jurisdiction, nor should defendants be able to challenge Litton's standing. Plaintiffs further contend that issues involving the fraudulent concealment exception to the statute of limitations should not be addressed to the extent that they do not involve "controlling questions of law."

---

[11] Following oral argument, C.D. Ambrosia Trucking Company, Inc., and David W. Reaney and Reaney Dock Company sought leave to file a post-argument amicus brief pursuant to Rule 29 of the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure. Because of the complexity of this case, and the possibility that the interest of amicus could be affected by the outcome of this case, we granted this motion on January 3, 1986. In disposing of the issues raised in this appeal, we have considered the arguments raised by amicus. Although amicus has raised some arguments which have not been raised by the principal parties to this action, it is sufficient to note that the position of amicus is similar to that of Pinney and Litton.

Upon a review of the district court's order of certification in the Pinney case, dated May 10, 1984, and the court's order of certification in the Litton case, dated October 5, 1984, we find it difficult to determine precisely whether certain issues were certified for interlocutory appeal. The district court concluded that its jurisdictional orders in the Pinney and Litton cases, its statute of limitations orders in those cases, and its orders relating to the preemption of the [26] Ohio Valentine Act's statute of limitations, involve "controlling question[s] of law for which there is a [*1455] substantial ground for difference of opinion and that immediate appeal may materially advance the ultimate termination of this litigation," and the court did not elaborate further. In any event we recognize that even those issues not properly certified are subject to our discretionary power of review if otherwise necessary to the disposition of the case. See Alexander v. Aero Lodge No. 735, Intern'l. Ass'n, 565 F.2d 1364, 1370 (6th Cir. 1977); 9 Moore's Federal Practice para. 110.25[1] at 270 (2d ed. 1987). Accordingly, we address only those issues necessary to the disposition of this case and to the extent this opinion is construed not to address an issue, that issue is, for the purposes of this appeal, decertified.

III. KEOGH

Defendants argue that Keogh v. Chicago & N.W. Railway Co., 260 U.S. 156, 67 L. Ed. 183, 43 S. Ct. 47 (1922), bars the claims that unreasonable freight and handling charges caused plaintiffs to lose business.

The plaintiff in Keogh, a shipper of commodities, sued for antitrust damages [27] on the ground that the defendant railroads restrained competition by conspiring to fix rates for shipment by rail. The ICC had approved the rates as reasonable and nondiscriminatory. The plaintiff claimed damages for the difference between these rates and earlier, lower rates that he alleged would have remained in effect if not for the conspiracy. The Supreme Court held that the plaintiff did not have a cause of action.

The Court listed four reasons for its holding. First, the Court observed that when the ICC finds a rate to be illegal because it is unreasonably high or discriminatory, the shipper can recover damages under the Interstate Commerce Act. The Court asked rhetorically whether Congress intended for the antitrust laws to provide an additional remedy, suggesting that the Court would not easily infer one. Second, the Court explained that "the paramount purpose" of the Interstate Commerce Act is "prevention of unjust discrimination." Id. at 163. This required that ICC-approved rates be the sole source of a shippers' rights against a carrier. If a shipper could recover under the antitrust laws for ICC-approved rates, Congress' purpose might be defeated, because [28] the amount recovered would give that shipper an advantage over his competitors. Third, the Court reasoned that an antitrust plaintiff would have to show that the rate that would have prevailed but for the conspiracy would have been approved by the ICC. There was no proceeding in which the ICC could issue an opinion on a hypothetical rate. Finally, the Court said that the plaintiffs' damages were speculative because all shippers paid the same rate and the benefit of a lower rate might have gone to the plaintiffs' customers or to the ultimate consumer. Id. at 162-65.

Plaintiffs argue, and the district court held, that Keogh does not apply because they are defendants' competitors, not customers seeking damages that would give them an advantage over defendants' other customers. Also, the plaintiffs distinguish Keogh on the basis that there the plaintiff asked for a rebate from the rates he had paid, whereas here plaintiffs claim damages for loss of business.

The Second and Third Circuits have held that Keogh does not apply when the plaintiff is in competition with the defendant. In City of Groton v. Connecticut Light & Power Co., 662 F.2d 921 (2d Cir. 1981), [29] the plaintiffs were municipal power companies who bought electricity at wholesale rates from a larger power company, the defendant. The plaintiffs competed with the defendant in selling power to industrial companies in the different municipalities, and the plaintiffs alleged that the defendant tried to squeeze them out of this competition by selling them power at a wholesale price that was higher than the retail price that the defendant charged its industrial customers. The plaintiffs claimed damages resulting from the industrial enterprises' decision to operate outside of the plaintiffs' territories. Id. at 927, 934-35. The court held that the discrimination problem of Keogh was absent because in Keogh the plaintiff's competitors were not represented in the lawsuit, whereas in City of [*1456] Groton the plaintiffs had no competitors other than the defendant. See id. at 929-31.

In Essential Communications Systems, Inc. v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 610 F.2d 1114 (3d Cir. 1979), plaintiff Essential was in the business of distributing a telephone answering device called Code-a-Phone. The defendants provided [30] telephone service and also competed with Essential in the distribution of Code-a-Phone. Defendants filed a tariff that required customers who installed an Essential Code-a-Phone to install an additional device as well, which Essential alleged was unnecessary. The tariff did not require customers who bought a Code-a-Phone from defendants to install the additional device. Essential alleged it was the victim of an antitrust conspiracy and claimed damages for loss of business.

The court allowed the claim. The court reasoned that in both Keogh and Essential the intended beneficiaries of regulation were customers, not competitors of the regulated utility. Thus, the court stated that the Keogh rule "has little or nothing to do with [the utility's] duties under the antitrust laws toward its competitors." Id. at 1121. Also, the court noted that the plaintiffs did not ask for a rebate from rates paid, as the plaintiff had in Keogh. Id. at 1122.

Plaintiffs' argument against extending Keogh to competitor suits finds some support in Square D Co. v. Niagara Frontier Tariff Bureau Inc., 760 F.2d 1347 (2d Cir. 1985) (Friendly, [31] J.), aff'd, 476 U.S. 409, 106 S. Ct. 1922, 90 L. Ed. 2d 413 (1986), where the Keogh situation was repeated in a suit by the purchasers of truck transportation services. The Second Circuit argued that post-Keogh developments undercut all four reasons for the Keogh rule. First, the Supreme Court has allowed an antitrust remedy even when a regulatory remedy is available. Second, the existence of class actions can alleviate the danger of a rebate to a single plaintiff. Third, judicial proceedings can be stayed pending a regulatory proceeding to determine whether a hypothetical rate would have been reasonable. Fourth, the Supreme Court has held that a direct purchaser can recover antitrust damages for the full amount of an overcharge, regardless whether he passed part or all of it on to customers. Id. at 1352-53. See Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231, 88 S. Ct. 2224 (1968).

The Second Circuit followed Keogh but urged the Supreme Court to overrule it. The Supreme Court praised Judge Friendly's opinion as "characteristically thoughtful and incisive" and did not take issue [32] with his description of the developments since Keogh, but reaffirmed the Keogh rule for the sake of stability in the law.

> The developments in the six decades since Keogh was decided are insufficient to overcome the strong presumption of continued validity that adheres in the judicial interpretation of a statute. . . . We are especially reluctant to reject this presumption in an area that has seen careful, intense, and sustained congressional attention. If there is to be an overruling of the Keogh rule, it must come from Congress, rather than from this Court.

Square D, 476 U.S. 409, 106 S. Ct. 1922 at 1930-31, 90 L. Ed. 2d 413.

We do not read this deferential language as an adoption of Judge Friendly's rationale, for on its face it is a polite refusal of an invitation. Since the Supreme Court did in fact uphold the ruling in Keogh we construe its cited language to be that the Keogh rationale, whatever else might be said of it, still commands, in the Supreme Court's view, the support of Congress. Justice Stevens emphasized "Keogh's role as an essential element of the settled legal context in which Congress has repeatedly [33] acted in this area." Square D, 106 S. Ct. at 1930.

Furthermore, we do not believe that either Keogh or Square D was intended to be limited solely to antitrust damage claims brought by shippers. It is true that in both Keogh and Square D the plaintiffs were shippers, i.e., customers of the defendants, [*1457] rather than direct competitors. [12] We may also assume that plaintiffs will not gain a

---

[12] However, in Georgia v. Pennsylvania R.R. Co., 324 U.S. 439, 89 L. Ed. 1051, 65 S. Ct. 716 (1945), the Supreme Court did see fit to apply Keogh in a case where Georgia was both a customer and a competitor. The Court noted that "Georgia sues as a proprietor to redress wrongs suffered by it as the owner of a railroad and as the owner and operator of various public institutions." Id. at 447. The Court then stated "we think it is clear from the Keogh case alone that Georgia may not recover damages even if the conspiracy alleged were shown to exist." Id. at 453. While Georgia presents a special case because it was preference over their trade competitors if permitted to recover antitrust damages resulting from the defendants' alleged conspiracy. In our view, however, it does not follow that plaintiffs' action for damages is therefore outside the scope of Keogh.

[34] When the ICC approves a rate, including a rate purportedly arrived at under the type of joint rate agreement permitted under Reed-Bulwinkle, it necessarily takes an anticompetitive action. This action is justified by the ICA because the statute assumes that the pro-competition policies of the antitrust laws have been taken into account but also assumes that the ICC possesses and ought to have the power to override those policies in order to further national transportation policy as expressed in the Act. Rates must not only protect against overcharging captive customers but must also keep in mind the economic costs of delivery of the service. Regulation of one aspect inevitably begets regulation of the other. Thus, the ICC is the sole source of the rights not only of shippers, but of the entire public, including competitors. Plaintiffs here had a right under the ICC to complain to the Commission. We should not easily infer that the Reed-Bulwinkle amendments were not intended to extend to competitor's suits. While such actions may be aimed at achieving some of the objectives of the antitrust laws, they nonetheless can be inconsistent with the statutory delegation of power to the Interstate [35] Commerce Commission and with the allowance of joint ratemaking activities as expressly authorized by Reed-Bulwinkle.

We recognize that the anti-discrimination arguments behind the Keogh doctrine lose their force in competitor lawsuits such as this. For those who believe that the original reasons expressed in Keogh still have some substantive persuasive force, in the face of Square D's expressed reservations, the other reasons in Keogh, we observe, still have considerable applicability here.

In sum, we conclude that the Keogh doctrine bars the plaintiffs' antitrust damage claims insofar as these claims are based either on the defendants' own handling charges or on the line-haul rate that was applied from Pinney Dock. To the extent that these rates and charges are otherwise unlawful, we believe that plaintiffs must seek whatever remedies are available under the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act. At the same time, however, at least some of the plaintiffs' claims for antitrust damages appear to be outside the scope of the Keogh doctrine. Litton contends that the defendants refused to permit Litton to purchase, lease or use dock facilities which could have [36] accommodated the technologically advanced self-unloading vessels being designed and constructed by Litton. These allegations are plainly not related to the defendants' handling charges or to the commodity line-haul rate applied from Pinney Dock and, to that extent, Keogh would not bar antitrust damage claims based on such allegations. Plaintiffs allege that defendants used harassing tactics and spurious challenges to try to forestall legitimate business activities of competitors. To the extent that these alleged acts are unrelated to defendants' rates, any damages suffered therefrom would not be barred by Keogh.

Plaintiffs have raised other claims as well, but it is less clear from the face of these claims that they are not rate-related and therefore within the scope of Keogh. Plaintiffs contend that defendants refused to handle self-unloading vessels at docks [*1458] owned or operated by defendants and that defendants boycotted Pinney Dock. However, if this boycott or refusal to deal took the form of assessing higher rates and charges, it would again appear that these claims are within the scope of Keogh. Plaintiffs also allege that defendants divided markets, [37] but if the effect of such division is the lack of rate competition, Keogh again would bar recovery. Rather than requiring outright dismissal of these claims, however, we believe that plaintiffs should be afforded an opportunity on remand to amend their complaint in order to clarify these allegations to state a claim for damages consistent with Keogh. We note that this is the approach taken by Judge Friendly in Square D, 760 F.2d at 1365, and this ruling was specifically mentioned by the Supreme Court and left undisturbed when it affirmed the Second Circuit decision in Square D. 106 S. Ct. at 1930 n.28. [13] decided prior to the passage of the Reed-Bulwinkle Act in 1948, we find the Supreme Court's application of Keogh to a competitor to be relevant even under these circumstances. Georgia is discussed in greater depth in section IV of this opinion.

---

[13] An additional argument which may be equally applicable to competitors and is addressed in Keogh and in Square D is the speculative nature of any damages. As we have pointed out, their existence necessarily presupposes alternate activity which might have been undertaken by the plaintiffs but for the allegedly violative conduct of the defendants.

[38] IV. ANTITRUST IMMUNITY UNDER THE ICA

Defendants argue that they are immune from antitrust liability for their ratemaking activities because they are parties to the ICC-approved 1950 Eastern Railroad Agreement. HN5[] The Reed-Bulwinkle Act, which was enacted in 1948 [14] as an amendment to the Interstate Commerce Act, gives the parties to an ICC-approved ratemaking agreement immunity from the antitrust laws:

> HN6[] If the Commission approves the agreement, it may be made and carried out under its terms and under the conditions required by the Commission, and the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. 1, et seq.), the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. 12, et seq.), the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 41, et seq.), sections 73 and 74 of the Wilson Tariff Act (15 U.S.C. 8 and 9), and the Act of June 19, 1936, as amended (15 U.S.C. 13, 13a, 13b, 21a) do not apply to parties and other persons with respect to making or [39] carrying out the agreement.

49 U.S.C. § 10706(a)(2)(A).

The district court held that the immunity in this provision does not cover a conspiracy to eliminate a competitor. Pinney Dock, 600 F. Supp. at 878. On appeal the defendants attack the district court's reasoning, while the plaintiffs endorse it and ask this court to uphold it.

The district court held that the language of Reed-Bulwinkle excludes anti-competitive conspiracies from the grant of immunity. The court found support in the legislative history for this reading of the statute. First the court considered the meaning of the statutory language:

> The issue confronting this court is whether the ICC's approval of the defendants' [ratemaking] agreement operates as either an express or implied approval of a later "agreement" to eliminate a competitor and monopolize a market.

[40]

600 F. Supp. at 866-67.

This definition of the issue is correct insofar as it refers to the statutory provision that the parties to a rate agreement are exempt from the antitrust laws "with respect to making" the agreement. This definition protects the defendants from liability for their conduct in making the 1950 Eastern Railroads agreements, however, it does not necessarily protect them from liability for any other agreement, including the alleged anticompetitive conspiracy.

But HN7[] Reed-Bulwinkle also exempts the parties to a rate agreement from antitrust liability "with respect to . . . carrying out the agreement." Thus, if the parties to a rate agreement conform with the agreement when setting rates, they are exempt from antitrust liability.

So long as defendants stay within the framework of the rate agreement and conform their rates to those approved by the [*1459] Commission, it cannot make a difference that their underlying intent may be anti-competitive. The difficulty with the district court's conclusion is that while it takes into account the exemption [41] for making a rate agreement, it is irreconcilable with the exemption for carrying out a rate agreement:

> Nothing in the present record indicates that the ICC ever "approved" or even was aware of defendants' alleged predatory conspiracy to boycott and eliminate plaintiff as a competitor. The 1950 Eastern Railroads Agreement, which merely establishes the procedures for discussing rate matters and reaching rate agreements, cannot be read as impliedly or expressly "approving" such a predatory conspiracy.

600 F. Supp. at 867. Assuming that this reasoning is adequate as far as it goes, it still ignores the reality that the Agreement was only the first, not the last word, in the Acts of the defendants which it contemplated. It was the establishing of rates which was the purpose of the Agreement, and it is the rates and the incorporated provisions concerning their application which lie at the heart of plaintiff's complaint. It is difficult if not impossible to contemplate how the railroads could establish rates under the Agreement without communication with one another and even more difficult to hypothesize how such communication, in an area which [42] is undeniably anti-competitive even in its effect, could not always be construed as capable of anti-competitive motivation.

---

[14] Pub. L. No. 80-662, 62 Stat. 472 (1948) (current version at 49 U.S.C. § 10706).

Therefore, the challenged activities must be measured against the fact that concerted activity was contemplated by the Commission in its original recognition of the 1950 Agreement. The real issue is whether in such circumstances the task is one of determining if the defendants' conduct was within the framework of permissible activity condoned by the Commission's approval of the Agreement. It is asserted that much of the evidence in this case will concern private communications among the alleged conspirators and allegations of the withholding of certain exchanges from the plaintiffs. Such contentions, however, seem to us to be inextricably intertwined with the question of whether the 1950 Agreement itself was violated, a question which should be addressed, at least first, to the wisdom and expertise of the ICC.

The district court also held that the legislative history of Reed-Bulwinkle shows that Congress intended to exclude anticompetitive conspiracies from the antitrust exemption. The court inferred this from legislative history indicating that Reed-Bulwinkle [43] left intact the Supreme Court's decision in Georgia v. Pennsylvania Railroad Co., 324 U.S. 439, 89 L. Ed. 1051, 65 S. Ct. 716 (1945). 600 F. Supp. at 871, 873-74. We are unable to agree.

In Georgia, the State of Georgia sued several northern and southern railroads under the antitrust laws. Georgia alleged that the railroads conspired to fix rates in a manner that prevented her shippers and sellers from gaining access to national markets. Georgia also alleged that the northern railroads forced the southern railroads to take part in the conspiracy. The rates were approved by the ICC. However, the defendants acted through rate bureaus that were not approved by the ICC; at the time the law did not provide for ICC approval of rate bureaus. Georgia alleged that the setting of rates through rate bureaus violated the antitrust laws. The complaint asked for damages and an injunction to end the conspiracy. 324 U.S. at 443-44, 455.

The Court held that Keogh barred the claim for damages because the rates were approved by the ICC. 324 U.S. at 453. But because Keogh only addresses damage claims, the Court allowed the injunctive [44] claim to proceed. Id. In this regard the Court made a statement that the plaintiffs in the present case rely on to argue that there is no immunity for a anticompetitive conspiracy:

> We find no warrant in the Interstate Commerce Act and the Sherman Act for saying that the authority to fix joint through rates clothes with legality a conspiracy to discriminate against a State or a region, to use coercion in the fixing of [*1460] rates, or to put in the hands of a combination of carriers a veto power over rates proposed by a single carrier.

Id. at 458.

The legislative history that led the district court to conclude that Reed-Bulwinkle left Georgia intact included several statements to that effect by the law's sponsors. For example, after the law passed Representative Bulwinkle said:

> The charge made against the railroads in the Georgia case is that they combined and conspired to fix rates by coercion and to discriminate against Georgia. A combination or conspiracy of that kind would not be protected or immunized [under the new law].

600 F. Supp. at 871 (quoting 94 Cong. Rec. App. 4033-34 (1948)). The [45] district court also cited the final House and Senate Reports:

> The bill leaves the antitrust laws to apply with full force and effect to carriers, so far as they are now applicable, except as to such agreements or arrangements between them as may have been submitted to the Interstate Commerce Commission and approved by that body upon a finding that, by reason of furtherance of the > national transportation policy as declared in the Interstate Commerce Act, relief from the antitrust laws should be granted.

600 F. Supp. at 871 (quoting H.R. Rep. No. 1100, 80th Cong., 2d Sess., reprinted in 1948 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 1848 (1948)) (emphasis added).

We do not read the statement from the House and Senate Reports that "The bill leaves the antitrust laws to apply with full force and effect" as preserving the Georgia rule that injunctive relief is available against anticompetitive conspiracies. This statement was qualified, as emphasized above, by a statement that the antitrust laws will not apply to agreements that have been approved by the ICC. Thus, if the Georgia case had arisen after the enactment of Reed-Bulwinkle, and if the rate [46] agreement had been approved by the ICC, the Supreme Court would have dismissed the injunctive claim.

Our view of the legislative history finds support in two Supreme Court cases. In Pan American World Airways v. United States, 371 U.S. 296, 9 L. Ed. 2d 325, 83 S. Ct. 476 (1963), the Court stated that the result in Georgia "might today be different as a result of the Act of June 17, 1948, 62 Stat. 472, which gives the Interstate Commerce Commission authority to approve combinations of the character involved in that case and give them immunity from the antitrust laws." Id. at 306 n.11. Similarly, in Square D the Court stated:

> The legislative history of Reed-Bulwinkle explains that it was enacted, at least in part, in response to this Court's decision in Georgia . . . . In that case, after restating the holding in Keogh, the Court held that, although Georgia could not maintain a suit under the antitrust laws to obtain damages, it could obtain injunctive relief against the collective ratemaking procedures employed by the railroads. The Reed-Bulwinkle Act thus created an absolute immunity from the antitrust laws for approved [47] collective ratemaking activities.

106 S. Ct. at 1927-28 (footnotes omitted).

In light of plaintiffs' waiver of claims that defendants failed to comply with the rate agreement, there is no need to remand the compliance issue to the district court. Indeed, if such claims were to go forward, the question would arise whether they should be referred to the ICC. Such a referral is what plaintiffs wanted to avoid by waiving claims of noncompliance with the rate agreement. In sum, the effect of Reed-Bulwinkle together with the waiver is that all rate-related claims should be dismissed. [15]

---

[15] In United States v. Bessemer and Lake Erie R. Co., 230 U.S. App. D.C. 316, 717 F.2d 593 (D.C. Cir. 1983), the D.C. Circuit upheld the criminal conviction of appellant railroad for Sherman antitrust violations arising out of a 1956 agreement to eliminate or inhibit competition from private docks in handling iron ore on Lake Erie. Speaking of intent, the court observed:

> The activities described in the indictment do not fit within the narrow [§ 10706] privilege. First, the indictment does not attack the rate bureau itself. It alleges, instead, that some members of the rate bureau entered into a separate agreement. This agreement only incidentally touched upon the setting of rates; its real purpose was to ward off the outside competition heralded by the advent of the self-unloaders.
>
> More than mere purpose or "intent" distinguished this separate conspiracy from the rate bureau. Several of the actions taken by this separate conspiracy were not "in conformity with" the rate bureau's [10706] rate agreement.
>
> Some of the actions were procedurally inconsistent with section [10706]. Paragraph 23(d) of the indictment alleges that defendants "quot[ed] the same charges for handling iron ore from self-unloaders as from bulkers even though services identified in the applicable tariffs were not to be performed." The crux of this charge is that handling the self-unloaders represented a significantly different type of service. Rather than promulgating a new rate for this new service in accordance with ICC requirements, the conspirators shielded the new joint rate from ICC scrutiny.

[48]  f838k147 M417 m004 415 m414

[*1461] V. ANTITRUST STANDING

Defendants argue that Pinney does not have standing to bring claims concerning the assessment of handling charges on self-unloaders, the refusal to let self-unloaders operate at docks owned by the railroads, and the refusal to sell or lease dock space to Litton. Defendants also argue that Litton lacks standing to recover for the refusal to grant Pinney a competitive rail rate, the assessment of handling charges on self-unloaders, and the monopolization of land transportation.

In the district court, defendants challenged Pinney's standing on certain claims, including apparently the ones on which defendants argue lack of standing now. But defendants did not challenge Litton's standing below. Plaintiffs argue that because of this the court should not address the arguments about Litton's standing.

HN8[] "It is the general rule . . . that a federal appellate court does not consider an issue not passed upon below." Singleton v. Wulff, 428 U.S. 106, 120, 49 L. Ed. 2d 826, 96 S. Ct. 2868 (1976). [16] This rule [49] is not jurisdictional; the Supreme Court has referred to it as a "practice" and a "rule of procedure." Hormel v. Helvering, 312 U.S. 552, 557, 85 L. Ed. 1037, 61 S. Ct. 719 (1941). Deviations are permitted in "exceptional cases or particular circumstances," id., or when the rule would produce "a plain miscarriage of justice." Id. at 558. The Supreme Court has declined to list comprehensively the circumstances that should prompt an appellate court to reach an issue not raised below. See Singleton v. Wulff, 428 U.S. at 121. Furthermore, the Court has stated that this matter is "left primarily to the discretion of the courts of appeals, to be exercised on the facts of individual cases." Id. We have carefully considered the case law of our circuit and elsewhere involving the exercise of this limited area of discretion and conclude that to the extent the issue is presented with sufficient clarity and completeness and its resolution will materially advance the progress of this already protracted litigation, we should address it. Alexander v. Aero Lodge No. 735, 565 F.2d 1364, 1370-71 (6th Cir. 1977). We realize [50] that the importance of our discussion of this issue has been largely subsumed by our rulings on the Keogh and Reed-Bulwinkle issues.

[*1462] A. General Principles of Antitrust Standing

In Associated General Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983) (hereinafter AGC), the Supreme Court took a fresh look HN9[] at antitrust standing. See Southaven Land Co., Inc. v. Malone & Hyde, Inc., 715 F.2d 1079, 1085 (6th Cir. 1983) (AGC was "an obvious attempt [51] to implement uniformity among the circuits"). AGC did not repudiate the Supreme Court's previous antitrust standing cases, but rather tried to synthesize them.

Our court has summarized the AGC factors:

Id. at 600-01 (citations and footnotes omitted). The D.C. Circuit also correctly confined itself to the special role of the United States in enforcing the criminal aspects of the Sherman Act, noting that:

> The offense charged in this case is not subject to ICC remedial jurisdiction. The government does not seek to amend the [10706] rate agreement or to alter prospectively the rates set by the [10706] rate bureau; it seeks to punish an illegal antitrust combination which happened to employ a rate bureau. The ICC is not equipped to "remedy" criminal violations of the antitrust laws.

Id. at 600. The court rejected the concept of an immunity argument under Bulwinkle as untimely and declined to address a primary jurisdiction argument. Id. at 599-600. We do not find our holdings here necessarily at odds with those in U.S. v. Bessemer involving entirely different considerations of the role of the United States in the criminal enforcement of the Sherman Act.

[16] This rule applies to a party seeking reversal. Cf. Dandridge v. Williams, 397 U.S. 471, 475 n.6, 25 L. Ed. 2d 491, 90 S. Ct. 1153 (1970) ("The prevailing party may . . . assert in a reviewing court any ground in support of his judgment, whether or not that ground was relied upon or even considered by the trial court.")

> (1) the causal connection between the antitrust violation and the harm to the plaintiff and whether that harm was intended to be caused;
> (2) the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury including the status of the plaintiff as consumer or competitor in the relevant market;
> (3) the directness or indirectness of the injury, and the related inquiry of whether the damages are speculative;
> (4) the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages; and
> (5) the existence of more direct victims of the alleged antitrust violation.

Province v. Cleveland Press Publishing Co., 787 F.2d 1047, 1050-51 (6th Cir. 1986) (quoting Southaven Land Co., 715 F.2d at 1085). Southaven said this list of factors is not exhaustive. See Southaven Land Co., 715 F.2d at 1085 n.6. This reading of AGC seems correct. See 459 U.S. at 538.

AGC's attempt to synthesize precedents reflected [52] the Court's view that the antitrust standing doctrine is rooted in the common law. The Court argued that when Congress enacted the first antitrust laws in 1890, it assumed they "would be subject to constraints comparable to well-accepted common-law rules." Id. at 533. These include "foreseeability and proximate cause, directness of injury, certainty of damages, and privity of contract." Id. at 532-33. HN10[] Like common-law adjudication, antitrust standing analysis must be done case-by-case:

> There is a similarity between the struggle of common-law judges to articulate a precise definition of the concept of "proximate cause," and the struggle of federal judges to articulate a precise test to determine whether a party injured by an antitrust violation may recover treble damages. It is common ground that the judicial remedy cannot encompass every conceivable harm that can be traced to alleged wrongdoing. In both situations the infinite variety of claims that may arise make [sic] it virtually impossible to announce a black-letter rule that will dictate [53] the result in every case.

Id. at 535-36. Therefore, while the AGC checklist is the starting point of antitrust standing analysis, a consideration of earlier cases is relevant to the interpretation of the AGC factors.

B. Defendants' Standing Arguments

(1) The refusal to grant Pinney a commodity line-haul rate and the imposition of handling charges on self-unloaders

The steel companies, who in the course of shipping iron ore paid the rail and handling charges, were the immediate victims of the defendants' refusal to grant Pinney a commodity line-haul rate and imposition of handling charges on self-unloaders at defendants' docks. Defendants argue that plaintiffs' damages from the handling charges are too indirect. The same argument can be made about Litton's damages from the rail rate. We must apply the five AGC factors to determine whether defendants' contention has merit.

The first AGC factor focuses both on the directness of the injury and the intention of the defendant. The leading case on directness of injury is Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061 (1977), where [54] the Supreme Court held that an indirect purchaser cannot sue a manufacturer for overcharges imposed on a middleman and passed on to the indirect purchaser.

[*1463] In Illinois Brick the State of Illinois alleged that the defendant, a manufacturer of concrete block, engaged in a price-fixing conspiracy in violation of the antitrust laws. The defendant sold block to masonry contractors, who used the block in masonry structures that they sold to general contractors. The general contractors incorporated the masonry structures into larger structures that the state bought. The state sued the manufacturer for the amount of the overcharge that passed from the masonry contractors through the general contractors and then on to the state.

The Court held that the state did not have standing to sue the manufacturer for antitrust damages. The primary reason for this holding was that allowing indirect purchasers to sue "would transform treble-damages actions into massive efforts to apportion the recovery among all potential plaintiffs that could have absorbed part of the overcharge -- from direct purchasers to middlemen to ultimate consumers." 431 U.S. at 737. See id. at 741-45. [55] Apportioning damages along the chain of distribution would "weigh[] down treble-damages actions with . . . 'massive evidence and complicated theories.'" Id. at 741 (quoting Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 493, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231, 88 S. Ct. 2224 (1968)).

The Court also refused to make an exception for businesses in which the direct purchaser typically passes on the entire cost of a certain component, for example an item that is resold without alteration. The Court reasoned that proving that this is the practice would also entail "massive evidence and complicated theories." Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 745 (quoting Hanover Shoe).

The other reason for the Court's allowing only direct purchasers to recover was that such a rule would best serve antitrust enforcement. Id. at 745-47 Because the injury to direct purchasers is usually greater than the injury to indirect purchasers, direct purchasers have a greater stake in the outcome of litigation and are more likely to sue. Id. at 747 Direct purchasers will have even more incentive to sue if they are allowed [56] to recover the full amount of the overcharge. Thus, the Court "elevat[ed] direct purchasers to a preferred position as private attorneys general. . . ." Id. at 746.

While directness of injury favors the defendants, the other consideration in the first AGC factor, intent, tends to favor the plaintiffs. They allege that the object of defendants' ratemaking decisions has been to drive plaintiffs out of business. The Court stated that "there no doubt are cases in which such an allegation [of defendants' intent] would adequately support a plaintiff's claim." AGC, 459 U.S. at 537 n.35. The Court also cited an article for the proposition that the "specific intent of [a] defendant to cause injury to a particular class of persons should 'ordinarily be dispositive' in creating standing to sue." Id. (citing Handler, The Shift from Substantive to Procedural Innovations in Antitrust Suits, 71 Colum. L. Rev. 1, 30 (1971)). The Court further cited an article that "suggest[ed] that standing in a group boycott situation should be based on the purpose of the boycott." 459 U.S. at 537 n.35 (citing Lytle & Purdue, [57] Antitrust Target Area Under Section 4 of the Clayton Act: Determination of Standing in Light of the Alleged Antitrust Violation, 25 Am. U. L. Rev. 795, 814-16 (1976)). However, the Court stated that "an allegation of improper motive . . . is not a panacea that will enable any complaint to withstand a motion to dismiss." AGC, 459 U.S. at 537. Thus, intent must be balanced with the rest of the AGC factors.

The second AGC factor relates to the status of the plaintiff as consumer or competitor. As Pinney competes with defendants in the provision of dock services, and Litton also tried to enter that business, this factor also favors the plaintiffs.

The third AGC factor, the degree to which the damages involved are speculative, favors the defendants. To assess the effects of a hypothetical change in line-haul [*1464] rates or handling charges, the district court would need to undertake the difficult and uncertain task of ascertaining demand elasticities, the input of the challenged charge and other costs in the prices charged by the plaintiff and its competitors, and the role of non-profit considerations in pricing decisions. See [58] Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 742-43. Further, for Pinney and Litton to prove the extent of their losses from the unavailability of the commodity rail rate and from the imposition of handling charges, they would have to produce evidence on the following questions: What non-price factors (such as relationships with railroads, docks, and water transport companies) influenced the steel mills' purchase of transport for iron ore? Assuming plaintiffs can prove how much more demand there would have been for shipment by self-unloader, how much of the increase could Pinney and Litton have absorbed? Assuming that Pinney and Litton could have absorbed all the extra demand for shipping iron ore by self-unloader, would competitors have taken business away from them? If there were no competitors during the time in question, would new competitors have appeared to take advantage of the increased opportunities? Under Illinois Brick and AGC courts cannot be saddled with the time-consuming and speculative task of sifting through massive evidence to decide such questions.

AGC's fourth factor, the potential for complex apportionment of damages between plaintiffs, also favors defendants. [59] Pinney and Litton could themselves become adversaries: Pinney could argue that lower water transport charges would have caused increased demand for dock services, which would have led to higher charges for dock services; Litton could argue that cheaper dock services would have caused greater demand for shipment by self-unloaders, which in turn would have led to higher prices for Litton's services.

AGC's fifth and final factor is the existence of more direct victims. Plaintiffs argue that the direct purchasers here, the steel mills, cannot sue because of Keogh. Thus, if Pinney and Litton cannot sue there will be no "private attorney general" to enforce the antitrust laws in this case. [17] While the steel mills cannot sue for antitrust damages, the mills do, however, have a role that takes antitrust policy into account. As Keogh mentions, the shippers can challenge rates under the ICA. In adjudicating such a challenge, one factor that the ICC will consider is whether the benefits to transportation policy of uniform rates, which are anticompetitive by nature, outweigh the procompetitive policies of the antitrust laws. Thus, it appears that this factor favors the defendants. [60]

On balance, the AGC factors clearly favor the defendants. It is true that plaintiffs are defendants' competitors and that these claims involve allegations of intentional harm. However, it is more significant that plaintiffs are not the direct victims of the defendants' acts. Further, it would be an extremely complex, if not impossible task for the district court to cope with the problems of computation and apportionment of damages. Given these factors, we conclude that we must dismiss the handling charge claim as to both defendants and the rate claim as to Litton.

(2) The refusal to handle self-unloaders at railroad docks or to sell or lease docks to Litton

Defendants argue that Pinney cannot claim damages for the refusal to handle self-unloaders at railroad docks, because this would have sent the self-unloaders to Pinney. This [61] argument finds support in a recent decision, Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986), where the Supreme Court stated that HN11[] a conspiracy to charge higher than competitive prices is an antitrust violation but "actually benefit(s)" the conspirators' competitors. Id. at 583 (emphasis in original).

As for the refusal to sell or lease docks to Litton, defendants apparently overlooked [*1465] the fact that this claim is not in Pinney's complaint.

(3) The monopolization of land transportation of iron ore

The district court dismissed Pinney's claim based on the monopolization of land transport, and defendants argue that Litton's claim is even more remote than Pinney's. Plaintiffs do not contest this argument.

Thus, for the reasons enumerated above, we reverse the holding of the district court and find plaintiffs Pinney and Litton lack standing to assert the claims addressed above.

VI. FEDERAL STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS

A. Fraudulent Concealment

In the district [62] court, the defendants moved to dismiss the plaintiffs' claims insofar as they were based upon events or activities which occurred before the four-year limitations period of section 4B of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15b. Treating these motions as motions for summary judgment under Rule 56 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the district court found that there was a genuine issue of material fact whether the defendants had fraudulently concealed plaintiffs' causes of action which may have accrued before the four-year limitations period. The district court therefore denied the motions. Pinney Dock & Transport Co. v. Penn Central Corp., 1983-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) para. 65,608 (N.D. Ohio 1983).

HN12[] Under the doctrine of fraudulent concealment, if a defendant conceals from the plaintiff the existence of a cause of action, the statute of limitations is tolled. To toll the statute, the plaintiff must allege in the complaint that: (1) the defendant concealed the conduct that constitutes the cause of action; (2) defendant's concealment prevented plaintiff [63] from discovering the cause of action within the limitations period; and (3) until discovery plaintiff exercised due diligence in trying to find out about the cause of action. Dayco Corp. v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 523 F.2d 389, 394 (6th Cir. 1975). The burden of proving the elements of fraudulent concealment is upon plaintiff. Akron Presform Mold Co. v. McNeil Corp., 496 F.2d 230, 233, 234 n.5 (6th Cir. 1974); In re Beef Industry Anti-Trust Litigation, 600 F.2d 1148, 1171 (5th Cir. 1979). But see Hobson v. Wilson, 237 U.S. App. D.C. 219, 737 F.2d 1, 35 (D.C. Cir. 1984), holding that the burden of showing lack of due diligence shifts to defendant.

[17] It does appear, however, that the same area of activity challenged here has been made the subject of scrutiny by the Justice Department. See note 15, supra.

In denying the defendants' motions for summary judgment the district court ruled that a genuine issue of material fact existed as to each element of Dayco. Defendants attack this ruling and also argue that the district court applied the wrong theory to the first Dayco element.

HN13[] The equitable doctrine of fraudulent concealment represents a longstanding exception [64] to the rule that the plaintiff must commence his action within the period provided by the relevant statute of limitations. "The authorities are without conflict in support of the doctrine that HN14[] where the ignorance of the fraud has been produced by affirmative acts of the guilty party in concealing the facts from the other, the statute will not bar relief provided suit is brought within proper time after the discovery of the fraud." Bailey v. Glover, 88 U.S. (21 Wall.) 342, 347-48, 22 L. Ed. 636 (1874). However, because "statutes of limitation are vital to the welfare of society and are favored in the law," the plaintiff who invokes the doctrine of fraudulent concealment will be "held to stringent rules of pleading and evidence, 'and especially must there be distinct averments as to the time when the fraud, mistake, concealment, or misrepresentation was discovered, and what the discovery is, so that the court may clearly see whether, by ordinary diligence, the discovery might not have been before made.'" Wood v. Carpenter, 101 U.S. (11 Otto) 135, 139-40, 25 L. Ed. 807 (1879) [65] (citation omitted). [18]

[*1466] HN15[] In the context of private anti-trust actions the doctrine of fraudulent concealment is well recognized by the federal courts, including our own court. See Akron Presform Mold Co. v. McNeil Corp., 496 F.2d 230 (6th Cir. 1974); Dayco Corp. v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 523 F.2d 389 (6th Cir. 1975). See also Annotation, Application of Fraudulent Concealment Doctrine to Statute of Limitations in Antitrust Cases (15 U.S.C.S. § 15b), 72 A.L.R. Fed. 431. As we held [66] in Dayco: "We have recognized that HN16[] the statute of limitations applicable to private anti-trust actions may be tolled where a plaintiff did not file its action in time because of ignorance resulting from a defendant's fraudulent concealment." 523 F.2d at 394.

B. The element of wrongful concealment.

On appeal, the defendants initially contend that the district court below erred in holding that Dayco's first element, "wrongful concealment," does not require proof of affirmative acts of concealment. The district court, however, held:

> It does not make sense to rigidly apply a statute of limitations where the defendant has carried out its illegal activities in "a manner which precluded detection." As the Supreme Court stated in Bailey v. Glover, 88 U.S. (21 Wall.) 342, 22 L. Ed. 636 (1874):
>
>> [Statutes of Limitation] were enacted to prevent frauds; to prevent parties from asserting rights after the lapse of time had destroyed or impaired the evidence which should show that such rights never existed, or had been satisfied, transferred, [67] or extinguished, if they ever did exist. To hold that by concealing a fraud, or by committing a fraud in a manner that it concealed itself until such time as the party committing the fraud could plead the statute of limitations to protect it, is to make the law which was designed to prevent fraud the means by which it is made successful and secure. [Emphasis added.]

Pinney Dock, 1983-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) para. 65,608 at 69,041 n.6. According to the defendants, the district court's reliance upon Bailey v. Glover for the proposition that "wrongful concealment" may also be established by conduct which causes a conspiracy to be carried out "in a manner which precludes detection" or "self-concealing

---

[18] This rule of "particularity" has been codified in Rule 9(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, which states in part: "In all averments of fraud or mistake, the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake shall be stated with particularity." In the instant case, there is no dispute that plaintiffs failed to comply with this rule.

misconduct" is misplaced. We agree with defendants at least to the extent that the Sixth Circuit has apparently not conclusively decided the issue of whether the element of wrongful concealment requires proof of affirmative acts.

In Campbell v. Upjohn Co., 676 F.2d 1122 (6th Cir. 1982), the Sixth Circuit, although not actually confronted with the issue of whether fraudulent concealment required proof of affirmative acts, did recognize [68] that there was a distinction between non-active and active concealment. Plaintiff alleged that a corporation fraudulently induced him to sign a merger agreement and then took additional steps to fraudulently conceal from him the terms of that agreement. The district court held that because the plaintiff failed to satisfy the requirement of due diligence in discovering his cause of action, he was barred by the statute of limitations. On appeal, the plaintiff argued that the due diligence requirement should not apply to cases of "active" fraudulent concealment where the defendant has engaged in affirmative acts of concealment beyond the original fraud itself. Our court rejected this argument, holding "that alleged additional acts of concealment by the defendant beyond the original fraud did not exempt the plaintiff from the requirement of diligence in pleading the federal equitable tolling doctrine of fraudulent concealment." Id. at 1128. The court did state, however, that "active concealment by the defendant will be considered in determining the reasonableness of the behavior of the plaintiff under the circumstances" in discovering his cause of action. Id. In reaching [69] this conclusion, the court emphasized that:

> [Plaintiff] would have the statute tolled indefinitely, while evidence stales, memories [*1467] fade and courts and adversaries wait, until the plaintiff at his leisure alleges actual discovery, despite the avalanche of evidence that would put all but the most indiligent plaintiffs on notice of a cause of action.
>
>> Statutes of limitations are vital to the welfare of society and are favored in the law. Stale conflicts should be allowed to rest undisturbed after the passage of time has made their origins obscure and the evidence uncertain. Dayco Corp. v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., supra, 523 F.2d 389 at 394 (citations omitted).
>
> A plaintiff who requests the avoidance of these important objectives owes the courts, the public and his adversaries a duty of diligence in discovering and filing his lawsuit.

Id. In holding that affirmative acts of concealment by the defendant beyond the original fraud do not relieve the plaintiff of the requirement of due diligence, the court therefore joined "those circuits which have declined to formulate a separate rule for cases involving active [70] concealment by the defendant." Id.

The Supreme Court has apparently had only two occasions to discuss the doctrine of fraudulent concealment at any length, and both of these cases are quite old. In Bailey v. Glover, 88 U.S. (21 Wall.) 342, 22 L. Ed. 636 (1874), which the district court placed heavy reliance upon in the instant case, the Supreme Court held upon the facts then before it that plaintiff's action was not barred by the statute of limitations because, "to hold that by concealing a fraud, or by committing a fraud in a manner that it concealed itself until such time as the party committing the fraud could plead the statute of limitations to protect it, is to make the law which was designed to prevent fraud the means by which it is made successful and secure." Id. at 349.

In Wood v. Carpenter, 101 U.S. (11 Otto) 135, 25 L. Ed. 807 (1879), however, the Supreme Court held:

> Concealment by mere silence is not enough. There must be some trick or contrivance intended to exclude suspicion and prevent inquiry.
>
> There must be reasonable diligence; and the means of knowledge are the same thing in effect as knowledge itself. [71]
> The circumstances of the discovery must be fully stated and proved, and the delay which has occurred must be shown to be consistent with the requisite diligence.

Id. at 143.

Thus, while Bailey v. Glover indicates that the commission of a fraud which "is of such a character as to conceal itself," may be sufficient to toll the statute of limitations under the fraudulent concealment doctrine, Wood v. Carpenter holds that "concealment by mere silence is not enough. There must be some trick or contrivance intended to exclude suspicion and prevent inquiry."

Bailey v. Glover was subsequently followed by the Supreme Court in Exploration Co. v. United States, 247 U.S. 435, 62 L. Ed. 1200, 38 S. Ct. 571 (1918). The government argued that the principles of Bailey v. Glover were applicable to the instant action, and argued further that "there were affirmative acts of concealment; but it is enough that the fraud was such as to conceal itself." Id. at 445.

The Supreme Court affirmed the court of appeals, holding:

> When Congress passed the Act in question the rule of Bailey v. Glover was the established [72] doctrine of this court. It was presumably enacted with the ruling of that case in mind. We cannot believe that Congress intended to give immunity to those who for the period named in the statute might be able to conceal their fraudulent action from the knowledge of the agents of the government. We are aware of no good reason why the rule, now almost universal, that statutes of limitations upon suits to set aside fraudulent transactions shall not begin to run until the discovery of the fraud, should not apply in favor of the government as well as a private individual.

[*1468] Id. at 449. See also United States v. Diamond Coal Co., 255 U.S. 323, 65 L. Ed. 660, 41 S. Ct. 335 (1921).

Bailey v. Glover was likewise followed in Rosenthal v. Walker, 111 U.S. 185, 28 L. Ed. 395, 4 S. Ct. 382 (1884), which also distinguished Wood v. Carpenter. In Walker, plaintiff alleged that the bankrupt transferred certain property to the defendant in order to prevent the plaintiff from claiming an interest in that property in bankruptcy proceedings. Although the action was brought after the applicable statute of limitations [73] had expired, plaintiff alleged that the bankrupt and the defendant kept concealed from him the fact of the sale, transfer, and conveyance of the goods.

On appeal to the Supreme Court, the defendant argued that plaintiff's action was barred by the statute of limitations. The Supreme Court rejected this argument stating:

> The case of Bailey v. Glover is a decision construing the statute which is relied on in this case, and unless subsequently overruled by this court is conclusive of the point under discussion. It has never been overruled. The plaintiff in error relies on the case of Wood v. Carpenter, 101 U.S. 135, 25 L. Ed. 807, and National Bank v. Carpenter, Id. 101 U.S. (11 Otto) 567, 25 L. Ed. 815 (1879). The first was an action at law, the second a suit in equity. The court in both cases was called on to construe a statute of limitations of the State of Indiana, and it followed the adjudication of the Supreme Court of that State upon the same statute. Neither case refers to the opinion of the court in Bailey v. Glover, or can be held to overrule or modify it. The case of Bailey v. Glover has been often cited by this court, but [74] has never been doubted or qualified. Wood v. Bailey, 88 U.S. 640, 21 Wall. 640, 22 L. Ed. 689; Wiswall v. Campbell, 93 U.S. (3 Otto) 347, 23 L. Ed. 923; Gifford v. Helms, 98 U.S. (8 Otto) 248, 25 L. Ed. 57; Upton v. McLaughlin, 105 U.S. (15 Otto) 640, 26 L. Ed. 1197. We are of opinion, therefore, that the assignment of error under consideration is not well founded.

Walker, 111 U.S. at 190-91. Thus, according to Rosenthal v. Walker, Wood v. Carpenter is limited to the particular case in which the Court was construing a state statute of limitations and following the adjudications of the Supreme Court of Indiana. See also Traer v. Clews, 115 U.S. 528, 538, 29 L. Ed. 467, 6 S. Ct. 155 (1885) ("The case of Bailey v. Glover, has never been overruled, doubted, or modified by this court. On the contrary, in Rosenthal v. Walker, it was reaffirmed, and was distinguished from the case of Wood v. Carpenter . . ."). See, however, Felix v. Patrick, 145 U.S. 317, 12 S. Ct. 862, 36 L. Ed. 719 (1892), which neither cites to, nor makes any attempt [75] to reconcile, Bailey v. Glover with Wood v. Carpenter.

The last reference made to Wood v. Carpenter by the Supreme Court occurred in United States v. Kubrick, 444 U.S. 111, 117, 62 L. Ed. 2d 259, 100 S. Ct. 352 (1979), where the Supreme Court cited that case for the proposition that, "statutes of limitations, . . . 'are found and approved in all systems of enlightened jurisprudence,' Wood v. Carpenter, 101 U.S. (11 Otto) 135, 139, 25 L. Ed. 807 (1879). . . ." Apart from one oblique reference in Kubrick, however, the Supreme Court has not recently had occasion to cite or otherwise discuss either Wood v. Carpenter or Bailey v. Glover. One distinguished commentator has explained the difference between active and passive fraudulent concealment as follows:

> "Where undiscovered "fraud" was the basis of liability, it was universally agreed that no new concealment was necessary and the wrongdoer might remain wholly passive, provided no avenues were open to the plaintiff for discovery of the fraud. But in cases that fell outside the elastic boundaries of the "fraud" exception new difficulties appeared. To permit suspension of [76] the statute of limitations in all cases where the suitor was ignorant of his claim must have seemed hazardous. Behind the decisions there must have lain a conviction that for suspension of the statute outside the field of "fraud" there should be added to the suitor's ignorance some affirmative misconduct by the opposite party, preventing [*1469] discovery and excusing delay. And when the "fraudulent concealment" exception had once been formulated, the language of the formula itself gave a new direction to judicial inquiries. In examining the factual cases for suspension of the statute they were led beyond a scrutiny of the original cause of action and of the plaintiff's later opportunities for discovery, to an emphasis on the means by which the defendant obstructed discovery.
>
> There can be found in the cases innumerable statements that "fraudulent concealment" involves affirmative efforts by the defendant to prevent discovery. But qualifications are often attached. It is said that the defendant's concealment need not be subsequent to the original wrongdoing, but may proceed or accompany it, provided all his conduct taken together is calculated to mislead or allay [77] suspicion. It is sometimes added that all requirements are satisfied if the original misconduct was of such a kind as to "conceal itself." And finally, in some cases the further requirement is added that defendant's efforts must include some element of "fraud" or moral turpitude, though numerous decisions reject such a test. From such a welter of conflicting generalities one can only draw the conclusion that generalities are being overworked, that in each case too wide a variety of fact situations is being included in a single formula."

Dawson, Fraudulent Concealment and Statutes of Limitation, 31 Mich. L. Rev. 875, 880-82 (1933) (footnotes omitted).

Most of the appellate cases which have addressed the issue in the context of antitrust actions have required allegations or proof of affirmative concealment under the first element of the doctrine of fraudulent concealment. See, e.g., Hennegan v. Pacifico Creative Service Inc., 787 F.2d 1299 (9th Cir. 1986); Berkson v. Del Monte Corp. 743 F.2d 53 (1st Cir. 1984); Rutledge v. Boston Woven Hose and Rubber Co., 576 F.2d 248 (9th Cir. 1978); City of Detroit v. Grinnell Corp., 495 F.2d 448, 461 (2d Cir. 1974); [78] Laundry Equipment Sales Corp. v. Borg-Warner Corp., 334 F.2d 788, 792 (7th Cir. 1964).

The defendants rely on these and other cases to argue that "proof of affirmative acts of concealment such as those involved in the cases cited . . . is essential to protect the important policies underlying the statute of limitations." As defendants point out:

> In Dayco, after noting that the statute of limitations in private antitrust cases may be tolled by fraudulent concealment, this court cautioned nonetheless that, "as the Supreme Court observed in Wood v. Carpenter, 101 U.S. [at 139]: 'Statutes of limitations are vital to the welfare of society and are favored in the law.' Stale conflicts should be allowed to rest undisturbed after the passage of time has made their origins obscure and the evidence uncertain." 523 F.2d at 394. The policies of protecting defendants and courts from stale claims counsel against a broad interpretation of tolling doctrines, and the reasons for that approach "are particularly persuasive when viewed against the strong congressional policy in favor of repose in antitrust suits." (citations omitted).

Although [79] the district court below acknowledged the Ninth Circuit's opinion in Rutledge, Pinney Dock & Transport v. Penn Central Corp., 1983-2 Trade Cas. para. 65,608 at 69,040, the court nevertheless concluded that the first Dayco element did not necessarily require proof of affirmative acts of concealment. According to the district court:

> Thus, under Dayco's first element, the type of actions of defendants which might wrongfully conceal a conspiracy to violate the antitrust laws can embrace, but are not limited to, fraudulent misrepresentations as articulated in the Rutledge reference, supra. The actions of defendants can also be those which cause a conspiracy to be carried out in "a manner which precludes detection," e.g., "self-concealing misconduct." See Gaetzi v. Carling Brewing company, 205 F. Supp. 615, 620-621 (E.D. Mich. 1962). Cf. King & King Enterprises v. Champlin [*1470] Petroleum Co., 657 F.2d 1147, 1154 (10th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1164, 71 L. Ed. 2d 320, 102 S. Ct. 1038 (1982). Hence, the Court finds impermissible the implication of the defendants that "in order [80] to make out the first element of fraudulent concealment Pinney must show affirmative acts of concealment by the defendants" which constitute fraudulent misrepresentations.

Id. at 69,041.

While Judge Thomas appropriately cites Gaetzi, Judge McCree's analysis in that opinion leads us to a different result. In Gaetzi, a former distributor of Carling Beer brought an antitrust action in 1961 seeking damages for defendant's allegedly wrongful termination of his Carling distributorship. Defendant then filed a motion for summary judgment on the ground that the cause of action was barred by the four year statute of limitations applicable to private antitrust actions. Plaintiff in turn argued that the period of limitations was suspended by reason of the defendant's fraudulent concealment.

In addressing this issue, then District Judge Wade H. McCree, Jr., initially noted that, "the contours of this doctrine in relation to private antitrust actions unfortunately are by no means as precise as either of the parties insists." 205 F. Supp. at 619-20. In this regard, plaintiff argued that fraudulent concealment did not require proof of affirmative acts, while [81] the defendant argued that the doctrine did require such proof. Judge McCree initially observed:

> It does appear to be settled that where the gravamen of an action is fraud and "the party injured by the fraud remains in ignorance of it without any fault or want of diligence or care on his part, the bar of the statute does not begin to run until the fraud is discovered, though there be no special circumstances or efforts on the part of the party committing the fraud to conceal it from the knowledge of the other party." Bailey v. Glover, supra, 88 U.S. at 348.
>
> * * *
>
> The cause of action asserted in the present case, however, is predicated neither on fraud nor on breach of a fiduciary duty, but on violation of the antitrust laws. The first question to be considered then is whether plaintiff is correct in his assertion that in an antitrust action ignorance of the facts constituting the cause of action suspends the prescriptive period, absent affirmative acts of concealment by defendant.

Gaetzi, 205 F. Supp. at 620. After examining the cases cited by plaintiff, Judge McCree noted that "each of the cases upon which plaintiff relies involved [82] something more than mere silence on the part of the defendant." Id. He further noted:

> The illegal conspiracies proceeded in a manner which precluded detention [sic]. The activities of the defendants can be characterized as 'self-concealing.' The fact that the defendant did not take further steps to impede discovery after the plaintiff had sustained injury is unimportant, for the conduct which is denominated 'concealment' may take place before the cause of action accrues as well as afterwards.

Id.

Next, Judge McCree examined the cases cited by defendant for the proposition that an affirmative act of concealment is required in order to toll the statute of limitations. After examining these cases, Judge McCree concluded:

> Although the cases cited by plaintiff have sometimes been regarded as supporting the argument that no affirmative act of concealment is required to toll the statute in restraint of trade conspiracy cases, on analysis they all involve self-concealing misconduct and are not incompatible with the rationale underlying the principle that affirmative acts of concealment must be shown except in cases founded on fraud or breach of fiduciary [83] duty.

Id. at 621.

Applying the foregoing principles to the facts of Gaetzi, Judge McCree concluded that no genuine question of fact existed with respect to circumstances which would [*1471] toll the four year statute of limitations. At least two of Judge McCree's factual conclusions are instructive:

> 2. Failure to respond to plaintiff's inquiries. Plaintiff states that his repeated efforts to obtain from defendant an explanation as to the reason for his loss of the Carling distributorship were unsuccessful. He does not claim that defendant, by a false but plausible explanation, dissuaded him from seeking out the facts. All that defendant did was to remain silent. Clearly the silence of defendant could not have been calculated to deter plaintiff from other inquiry, but could only have compounded plaintiff's suspicions. With reason to suspect that the loss of his business was the result of illegal conduct by defendant, plaintiff was obliged to do more by way of investigation then simply to make fruitless inquiries of the suspected wrongdoer. We have previously indicated that concealment necessitates the commission of affirmative acts. [84] Mere silence, where there is no duty to speak, does not toll the statute.

Id. at 622. Judge McCree also concluded:

> 4. Self-concealment of the alleged conspiracy. "Self-concealment" of a conspiracy sufficient to toll the statute of limitations refers to activities in furtherance of the conspiracy which by their nature defy detection. Plaintiff asserts that defendant concealed its unlawful activities by operating through its parent corporation. However, unlike the American Tobacco Co. v. People's Tobacco Co., 204 F. 58 (5th Cir. 1913) case, supra, the relationship existing between the two companies was well known or readily ascertainable. As the uncontroverted affidavit of the executive vice-president of Canadian Breweries Ltd. indicates, the parent-subsidiary relationship between Canadian Breweries and defendant has been a matter of record in Canadian's annual report to shareholders since 1945. Furthermore, there is quoted in defendant's brief an excerpt from the plaintiff's deposition in the United States District Court suit in Pennsylvania, in which plaintiff admitted that he had been informed in 1952 that the controlling [85] interest in defendant had been purchased by someone in Canada.
>
> . . . .
>
> The report condemned the acquisition by Canadian Breweries as a monopolistic activity. Since this official document was printed and available to the public according to plaintiff's own allegation, even before plaintiff's distributorship had been terminated, it would appear that the alleged conspiracy was no longer concealed and could have been discovered by due diligence well within the statutory period for bringing suit.

Id. at 623. Based in part on the foregoing, Judge McCree therefore granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment dismissing the plaintiff's complaint as being time-barred by the Clayton Act's four year statute of limitations period. Apparently, this case was not appealed to the Sixth Circuit. [19] [19] The other case cited by the district judge here to support his conclusion is King & King Enterprises v. Champlin Petroleum Co., 657 F.2d 1147 (10th Cir. 1981), wherein the Tenth Circuit held "both of the tests which were set forth in Ashland Oil Co., 567 F.2d 984 (1977), were met here. The evidence showed that the defendant actively sought to conceal its price fixing activities, and the defendant's conduct, by reason of its fraudulent nature, was inherently self concealing." Id. at 1156. See also Baker v. F. & F. Investment, 420 F.2d 1191, 1199 (7th Cir. 1970) ("where, as in the case of many conspiracies in violation of federal antitrust laws, the wrong is self-concealing, little need be added in order to justify tolling the statute.").

---

[86] Thus, according to Gaetzi, HN17[] although self-concealing misconduct may be sufficient for purposes of the first element of fraudulent concealment, the cases involving such conduct "are not incompatible with the rationale underlying the principle that affirmative acts of concealment must be shown except in cases founded on fraud or breach of fiduciary duty." Gaetzi, 205 F. Supp. at 621. Moreover, Judge McCree emphasized that "'self-concealment' of a conspiracy sufficient to toll the statute of limitations refers to activities in furtherance of the [*1472] conspiracy which by their nature defy detection." Id. at 623. Mere silence, or one's unwillingness to divulge one's allegedly wrongful activities, is not sufficient. As the underlying cause of action here is based upon alleged antitrust violations not fraud, we agree with Judge McCree's rationale in Gaetzi that a plaintiff should be required to prove affirmative acts of concealment, particularly in light of the strong policy in favor of statutes of limitations.

3. Scope of Review of Denial [87] of Summary Judgment

HN18[] When an appellate court reviews a grant of summary judgment, the district court decision is reviewed de novo. See, e.g. National Bank of Detroit v. Shelden, 730 F.2d 421, 423 (6th Cir. 1984); Glenway Industries, Inc. v. Wheelabrator-Frye Inc., 686 F.2d 415, 417 (6th Cir. 1982).

However, HN19[] in reviewing a district court's ruling denying a summary judgment motion on grounds that a material issue of fact exists appellate review is governed by an "abuse of discretion" standard. See, e.g., United States v. Merchants National Bank of Mobile, 772 F.2d 1522, 1524 (11th Cir. 1985); Marcus v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 651 F.2d 379, 382 (5th Cir. 1981); McLain v. Meier, 612 F.2d 349, 356 (8th Cir. 1979). The difference in the standards of review has been explained as follows:

> HN20[] Discretion [88] plays no real role in the grant of summary judgment: the grant of summary judgment must be proper under the above principles or the grant is subject to reversal. The trial court may, however, exercise a sound discretion in denying summary judgment where, although the movant may have technically shouldered his burden, the court is not reasonably certain there is no triable issue of fact; where a portion of an action may be ripe for summary judgment but is intertwined with another claim(s) that must be tried; and in certain other situations.

6 Moore's Federal Practice para. 56.15[8] (2d ed. 1985).

4. Review of Evidence on Whether there are Issues of Fact on Dayco Elements

a. Whether there is Sufficient Evidence of Affirmative Acts of Concealment in Pinney Dock

The defendants apparently do not dispute the district court's conclusion that their conduct was sufficient to satisfy the self-concealment standard. That is, if our court should conclude that a self-concealment standard is appropriate in this case, defendants apparently would concede that the district court's application of that standard to the facts of this case and his factfindings was not erroneous.

[89] We have, however, concluded that defendants are correct in their argument that the doctrine of fraudulent concealment requires proof of affirmative acts under facts such as those presented here and in Gaetzi. The issue then becomes what kind of conduct is sufficient to satisfy that standard and whether that standard was satisfied here. According to the defendants "the weight of judicial authority holds that in order to demonstrate affirmative concealment, a plaintiff must present evidence of destruction of records, falsification of accounts, or the use of other covert devices. . . ." The defendants note that the district court in Pinney found evidence of two instances of acts of concealment: (1) that Penn Central had not been "open and honest with Pinney as to the reasons Pinney was denied a commodity rate," Pinney Dock, 1983-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) para. 65,608 at 69,046; and (2) that Penn Central had "affirmatively misled Pinney into believing that it was willing to 'take care' of Pinney Dock's iron ore requests." Id. They contend that this evidence, when analyzed, does not constitute affirmative acts of concealment sufficient to meet Dayco's requirements. [90]

In Ohio Valley Electric Corp. v. General Electric Co., 244 F. Supp. 914 (S.D.N.Y. 1965), a case involving an alleged antitrust conspiracy in the electric industry, Judge Feinberg held that the plaintiffs had presented:

> [*1473] abundant proof that defendants affirmatively and deliberately concealed the existence of the conspiracy. The conspirators concealed their activities from their customers, the government, and officers and employees of defendants who did not participate. To achieve and preserve secrecy, the conspirators falsified their expense accounts to hide the true nature and purpose of their meetings and trips, made telephone calls at night from pay telephones rather than from their offices, destroyed notes taken at conspiratorial meetings, and instructed newcomers to the conspiracy not to divulge its existence.

Id, at 931-32. Significantly, Judge Feinberg believed that his conclusion was consistent with both Judge McCree's analysis in Gaetzi, 205 F. Supp. 615 and with the policies underlying the doctrine of fraudulent concealment discussed by the Supreme Court in Bailey v. Glover, 88 U.S. 342, 22 L. Ed. 636. [91]

In Ingram Corp. v. J. Ray McDermott & Co., 1980-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) para. 63,277 (E.D. La. 1980), rev'd on other grounds, 698 F.2d 1295 (5th Cir. 1983), another case cited by the defendants, the district court discussed what kind of acts are and are not sufficient for purposes of affirmative concealment. According to the district court:

> Subparagraph (a) speaks of "clandestine meetings in hotel rooms" at which the rigging of bids was discussed. This allegation amounts to very little, for there is no obligation on the part of antitrust conspirators to advertise their conduct. One cannot expect bid riggers to hold a public meeting for that purpose. However subparagraphs (b) and (c) are quite different. In each plaintiffs allege that the defendants performed certain acts in furtherance of the conspiracy which created the false impression that project bids were competitively made rather than rigged. This is something more than silence; if true, it constitutes an attempt to deceive both the competition and the public into the belief that all of their bids were made legitimately and as the result of competitive considerations. It is precisely the [92] sort of affirmative act of deception required by the jurisprudence.

Id. at 78,414. The affirmative acts referred to in subparagraphs (b) and (c) included submitting prearranged losing bids by the company that had agreed not to receive the award, in order to give the illusion of competition among the corporate defendants, and maintaining agreed-upon ratios of major equipment spreads and positioning equipment in particular localities throughout the world, so as to give the false impression that excessive bids on particular projects were the result of equipment availability rather than of the unlawful conspiracy.

In the instant case, Judge Thomas discussed several instances in which he believed the defendants' actions constituted affirmative acts of concealment, notwithstanding his general conclusion that the defendants' alleged antitrust conspiracy was self-concealing conduct for purposes of the fraudulent concealment exception to the statute of limitations. The first instance of affirmative acts discussed by Judge Thomas involved certain memoranda and letters written in late 1969 and early 1970. In this regard plaintiff submitted evidence of a series of meetings in [93] 1968 and 1969 and argued that they were deliberately kept concealed. For example, a July 17, 1968, letter from J. K. Thorney, B & O director of coal commercial planning, to the general coal traffic managers-rates of Penn Central and N & W, stated, inter alia:

> following our day long meeting held in New York on July 9, the matter of handling charges on ex-lake iron ore received from self-unloader vessels was very briefly discussed. . . .
>
> . . . Our records also indicate that there was a verbal agreement made by all lines to assess the same charges as bulk freights. [Emphasis added by district court.]

Pinney Dock, 1983-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) para. 65,608 at 69,043.

As additional evidence of the defendants' secrecy, the district court notes that on August 25, 1969, Thorney again wrote to [*1474] C. S. Baxter, Chairman, Coal, Coke & Iron Ore Committee (CCIOC) -- Eastern Railroads, and stated:

> I have just received information that some of the members of the Coal, Coke & Iron Ore Committee, are now in the process of reissuing their ex-lake iron ore tariffs, and there are indications that deviations may be made > from the previous tariffs [94] insofar as the manner of publication of such reissues. Under the circumstances, I believe this matter should be discussed by all members at the conclusion of the next meeting, which is to be held on September 11.

>
> This subject, of course, should not be listed on the regular docket but handled informally after the regular meeting. [Emphasis added by district court.]

Id. at 69,043-44.

In addition, the district court notes that on March 26, 1970, Thorney also sent a memo to G. A. Sandmann marked "Personal" detailing a discussion on March 24, 1970, about ex-lake iron ore handling charges. In that letter, Thorney stated:

> There was no committee record other than the subject had been reviewed. . . . The above for your personal information only, and not to be disclosed to anyone in any manner at this time.

Id. at 69,044.

Although defendants apparently did not controvert Pinney Dock's assertion that the above mentioned meetings and dealings were kept secret, they argued that they were not obligated to disclose their private business communications and proposals. Pinney Dock, in turn, argued that under the terms of the railroads' 5A Agreement, [95] they had a duty to issue public notices of meetings, proposals, and rate decisions. [20]

[96] In sum, Judge Thomas concluded that the memoranda and letters discussed above permit an inference that the defendants took steps to insure that their actions would not become public. According to Judge Thomas, "these affirmative acts may be found by the trier of fact to constitute both wrongful concealment of the alleged conspiracy in violation of the antitrust laws and acts in furtherance of the conspiracy." Id.

In their brief, the defendants apparently do not dispute these findings of "affirmative acts" by the district judge. Indeed, it would appear that these meetings and dealings, which were apparently done in secret and possibly not in compliance with the ICC requirements requiring open and public meetings, are analogous to the secret phone calls in Ohio Valley Electric Corp. On the other hand, such secret meetings may be more analogous to the "clandestine meetings in hotel rooms" which were not deemed sufficient for purposes of affirmative concealment in Ingram Corp.

Apart from this evidence, the district court also concluded that a genuine issue of fact existed as to whether a series of letters written in 1968 and 1969 by Penn Central in response to Pinney's [97] request for a line-haul commodity rate demonstrated that the defendants concealed the antitrust conspiracy through affirmative misrepresentations to Pinney. Significantly, Judge Thomas found that this evidence was consistent with the Rutledge requirement that "one means of wrongful concealment of an ongoing antitrust conspiracy is a co-conspirator's fraudulent misrepresentations." Pinney Dock, 1983-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) para. 65,608 at 69,044. According to Pinney, this correspondence led Pinney to believe [*1475] that Penn Central was acting unilaterally in denying Pinney a line-haul rate and that it was also working to get a commodity iron ore rate established off Pinney's dock.

---

[20] To the extent that plaintiffs are arguing that the defendants kept their meetings and dealings secret in violation of their statutory duty to issue public notices of meetings, proposals, and rate decisions, it would appear that plaintiffs' argument would involve an interpretation of ICC rules, regulations and statutes. This in turn would seem to implicate the issue of primary jurisdiction, an argument which the defendants also raised in support of their contention that this action should be dismissed, or at least deferred to until the ICC has an opportunity to address the issues. However, Judge Thomas seems to have anticipated this problem because he states: "The present issue is not whether defendants had a statutory duty to disclose to plaintiff the details of their informal discussions. For purposes of the present motion, the court need only decide whether a genuine issue of fact exists as to the alleged agreement and communications being carried out in a manner which eluded discovery by plaintiff." Pinney Dock, 1983-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) para. 65,608 at 69,044.

Sometime in 1968 George Weir, who was fifty percent owner of Pinney, requested from Penn Central a commodity line-haul rate off Pinney Dock equivalent to that which was applied to the railroad owned docks. Penn Central's Wilkins wrote to Weir on September 4, 1968, stating:

> I am informed by our rate people that the subject of publishing rates on pellets originating at private docks on Lake Erie has been considered at a recent meeting of the Coal, Coke & Iron Ore Committee at which [98] time there was a recommendation against extending the application of ex-lake iron ore rates to apply from privately owned docks other than those equipped to handle iron ore from bulk carriers. Under the circumstances, Penn Central must be governed by this recommendation.

Id. at 69,045. On October 3, 1968, Weir responded to this letter by stating that he was "still le[ft] . . . in the dark because you have not given me the justification on which this recommendation was supposedly based." Id.

Funkhouser, who was also an executive of Penn Central, responded to this letter by explaining that the basic reason for Penn Central's refusal to publish ex-lake rates from the Pinney Dock was that it would be financially unsound to do so:

> The Coal, Coke, and Iron Ore Committee of the Eastern Railroads has recommended against extending the application of ex-lake iron ore rates from additional docks. Traditionally, rates have been confined to apply from a relatively few docks from which ore moves in large and steady volume. . . . This had been advantageous to the shipping public and to the railroads. It seems clear that to depart from this scheme . . . would be damaging [99] both to the railroads and to the iron ore shippers. [21]

Id.

On March 28, 1969, Weir made a further request that Penn Central extend its ex-lake iron ore rates to Pinney Dock, to which Funkhouser again responded: "It seems clear that to depart from this scheme of transportation by making the ex-lake iron ore rates applicable on spasmodic shipments from what would unquestionably grow to [100] be a sizeable number of small docks would be at variance with the concept underlying said rates and would be damaging both to the railroads and to the iron ore shippers." Id.

Pinney argued before the district court that this correspondence led Pinney to believe that the reason why Penn Central was unwilling to publish a rate was its unilateral concern about Pinney's ability to meet volume requirements. According to Pinney, as late as August 19, 1974, Penn Central continued informing Pinney "that the level of ex-lake ore rates was constructed on a volume basis and the extensions of these rate[s] to facilities which could load only relatively small amounts of ore would make the rates unrealistic." Id. Although the defendants attempted to argue before the district court that this correspondence, rather than misrepresenting its actions, actually disclosed both to Pinney and to the ICC that its refusal to extend a commodity rate to Pinney was related to efficiency considerations, Judge Thomas nevertheless concluded that a genuine issue of fact existed as to whether the defendants had misrepresented their reasons for denying the rate to Pinney. According to Judge Thomas: [101]

> The inference drawn by defendants can properly be argued to the trier of fact. However, the evidence, read in a light most favorable to Pinney, does not [*1476] as a matter of law show that defendants were open and honest with Pinney as to the reasons Pinney was denied a commodity rate. A genuine issue of fact exists as to whether Penn Central misrepresented the reasons for its actions so as to conceal the alleged conspiracy.

Id. at 69,046.

---

[21] Notwithstanding this apparently valid explanation for Penn Central's refusal to extend an ex-lake rate from Pinney Dock, the district court concluded that "the trier of fact could find from the documents in the record that the true justification for the 'recommendation against extending the application of ex-lake iron ore rates from privately-owned docks other than those equipped to handle iron ore from bulk carriers' was the continuing secret agreement of February 26, 1958, to deny an iron ore commodity rate from Pinney's dock." Pinney Dock, 1983-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) para. 65,608 at 69,045.

Thus, Pinney initially alleges that the reasons why the defendants denied it a line-haul commodity rate was in order to effect the conspiracy to drive self-unloaders off Lake Erie. The defendants then brought forth evidence in the form of memoranda and correspondence that the reason they denied Pinney such rates was due to a concern with Pinney's low volume.

The final instance of affirmative acts of concealment discussed by the district court involves certain memoranda and correspondence between Pinney Dock and Penn Central during the period of 1973 to 1975. Based on these documents Pinney Dock argued before the district court that "Penn Central periodically misled Pinney into believing that it was ready, willing and [102] able to do business with it. The effect of such misrepresentations was to leave Pinney with the clear impression that Penn Central could, and might, change its mind on rates from Pinney at any moment." Id. at 69,046. As the district court noted, Pinney pointed to communications it had with George Wallace of Penn Central in 1970 about granting Pinney a rate. "Several Wallace letters to Pinney indicate that Penn Central was 'glad to discuss . . . the question of a modern rail loading facility to be built by [Pinney],' a facility which Penn Central might use in return for issuing an ex-lake iron ore rate from Pinney Dock. Yet, other exhibits show that during this same period, Mr. Wallace was actively participating in meetings and discussions with other railroads on how to limit the use of self-unloaders." Id.

As further evidence of misrepresentations by the defendants during the 1973-1975 period, the district court pointed to the deposition of Maynard Walker, president of Pinney Dock, who testified that:

> Jim Royston at one time said to me, "Don't worry," he said to me and Joe Del Priore, "Don't worry, boys, Uncle Jim will take care of you."

Id. The [103] district court also noted that in an internal memorandum of October 1, 1975, which was prepared by Royston of Penn Central it was stated that:

> Pinney was reassured that our modification plans for Ashtabula included serious consideration of including Pinney Dock in, or as an adjunct to the consolidated A & B and Union Docks.

Id.

Finally, the district court noted that Pinney presented evidence to show that Royston may have been intentionally misleading Pinney. For example, a former Penn Central employee testified in a special proceeding that:

> I was told to meet with Mr. Royston up at Pinney Dock to discuss it. Pinney Dock had offered to pay the entire cost of this conveyor system that would traverse from Pinney Dock over the Union fence tracks. After the meeting we went back. I discussed it with Mr. Ward, and I discussed it with Mr. Royston. Mr. Royston said that it was a lesson in futility, that we were just trying to appease Pinney Dock and keep them quiet. He said Pinney Dock would never get into the Ashtabula switching district, and it would be over his dead body before it got there. Those were the exact words used.

Id. According to Judge [104] Thomas, "these letters and statements of Penn Central in the 1970's would permit the trier of fact to find that Penn Central affirmatively misled Pinney into believing that it was willing to 'take care' of Pinney Dock's iron ore requests." Id.

The defendants argue in their brief that both of these conclusions by the district court should be rejected because the evidence in the record as a whole establishes as a matter of law that Pinney's purported reliance on Penn Central's representations was not "reasonable." See Rutledge v. Boston Woven Hose & Rubber Co., 576 F.2d at 250. [*1477] In support of this argument, the defendants claim:

> As early as August 31, 1971, Mr. Walker, Pinney's president, stated that he expected Penn Central to "say 'no' to our rate request or, at the least, attempt to stall us, as they had been doing in the past." On October 7, 1971, Mr. Walker again stated his belief that "Penn Central and the B & O/C & O do not want a private dock with lower handling rates in the picture during this time period, which could well be 5/10 years, due to the effect this new rate would have on existing handling rates of their lessees and possibly [105] themselves." On February 4, 1972, Mr. Walker wrote to Pinney's legal counsel, Mr. Beery, that it "does appear that we will not obtain the > iron ore rate from Penn Central on a friendly basis," to which Beery on February 10, 1972 responded that "the present combination will last for at least another decade."

As described above, in 1968 and 1969, when Pinney asked Penn Central for a line-haul rate, Penn Central refused. Penn Central explained that it was following a recommendation made at a CCIOC meeting and that the reason for the refusal was that the interest of the railroads and the iron ore shippers was to restrict line-haul rates to a few docks from which ore moved in large and steady volume. However, Pinney's Mr. Weir testified in a deposition that he did not believe that Penn Central was governed by the CCIOC recommendation, because he "knew that the Penn Central had the right" to act independently of the CCIOC. Pinney Dock, 1983-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) para. 65,608 at 69,049. Weir also testified that he believed the reason that Penn Central gave for the recommendation: "Being a traffic man, I could conceive of no other reason [for Penn Central denying [106] a commodity rate] than that they had some reservations as to whether we could handle the minimum tonnage required on this iron ore rate." Id. at 69,049 n.16.

In denying summary judgment, the district court stated that it was unclear whether Weir should have known that Penn Central had submitted to the CCIOC recommendation. The judge stated that "the trier of fact may infer . . . that Weir was warranted" in doubting that Penn Central had surrendered its right of independent action. Id. Also, the court ruled that Penn Central's report of the CCIOC recommendation "did not as a matter of law inform Pinney of the existence of the alleged railroad conspiracy." Id. at 69,050.

We have, as did the district judge, reviewed the evidence concerning the relationship of the parties quite thoroughly. We conclude that it may contain the seeds of support for the finding of the district judge that a factual question of actual concealment was presented. However, we also conclude that the record leads us to the same conclusion reached by Judge McCree in Gaetzi, namely that the time eventually arrived when "the alleged conspiracy was no longer concealed and could have been discovered [107] by due diligence well within the statutory period for bringing suit." Gaetzi, 205 F. Supp. at 623.

In August 1970 Beery wrote a file memo that was a record of his meeting with Weir and Pinney's president, Walker. The memo said: "It appears that we have an antitrust action. . . . I advised that I had no knowledge as to antitrust actions but that I would obtain and consult the services of someone who is knowledgeable." Walker's desk calendar contains a notation referring to the meeting: "Will sue [Penn Central] under antitrust laws. . . ." A memo by Weir also mentions the possibility "of filing an antitrust action."

In September 1971 Beery wrote to Walker:

> You should consider the formal complaint to the Interstate Commerce Commission possibly followed by an anti-trust action against Penn Central. It would appear that the first action taken must be to the Interstate Commerce Commission, as that agency has the jurisdiction of the dispute.
>
> * * *
>
> We are considering coupling any administrative action with some widely based investigation of the conditions now prevailing upon the Great Lakes in relation [*1478] to the unloading of iron ore and the monopolistic [108] conditions there that may significantly affect the public.

In February 1972 Beery wrote Walker a letter strongly urging that Pinney fight Penn Central under the antitrust and interstate commerce laws. This four-page letter contained only one legal argument: "If you can show that the self-unloader vessel will only be built after the rates are established for this type of unloader, then you can show that you are being damaged by Penn Central's refusal to publish competitive rates." The rest of the letter emphasized the business advantages to Pinney Dock of fighting. The tone of the letter is captured in its final sentence: "We can provide the technical means with which to fight this combination, but you have to provide the spirit and the perseverance." In a postscript Beery offered to go to Pinney Dock's office the next month to discuss "possible solutions and alternatives."

In January 1973 Walker responded that he thought that legal action "would be a waste of time and money," that he preferred to wait until Pinney had more self-unloader capacity, and that it would not harm Pinney to "delay court action" until then.

In holding that there is an issue of fact as to whether [109] Pinney knew of its cause of action, the district court relied on Walker's testimony that Beery "didn't know what he was saying" about monopolistic conditions and on Beery's testimony that he was not familiar enough with the federal antitrust laws to understand what "monopoly" means under them. Pinney Dock, 1983-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) at 69,051. Defendants argued in the district court that if Pinney had been diligent, Beery's advice would have at least prompted the filing of an antitrust action, which "would have provided broad-based discovery of the detailed facts now alleged by Pinney." The court rejected the notion that obtaining discovery would have been a proper motive for filing an antitrust action. Id. at 69,055. This observation may in itself have been correct, but it has little relevancy to the realistic question of concealment. The knowledge that the railroads were acting in concert through their joint rate-making activities and any plain understanding of their self-interest was, in our opinion, bound to dispel any uncertainty as to their motive in failing to publish competitive rates. [110] HN21[] To hold that a tolling or suspension of the limitation of actions must continue unless or until proof positive existed of a wrong (which might never be established in fact) would abort the policy of the law of repose in statutes of limitations of diligence in the equitable principles permitting suspension of them. The plaintiffs are therefore limited in their remaining causes of action to acts and damages occurring within the statutory four year period preceding the filing of their action.

b. Affirmative Acts of Concealment of Litton's Cause of Action

The district court ruled that there also existed an issue of fact whether the Chesapeake & Ohio and Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Companies (C&O/B&O) created a false impression that they were willing to lease dock facilities to Litton.

The district court based its ruling on evidence of a meeting on April 30, 1971 between Litton's president, Preisser, and C&O/B&O's vice president, Sandmann. Before the meeting, Sandmann said in an internal memo that he planned to tell Preisser that C&O/B&O was willing to negotiate for the rental of "the so-called Grove Storage area." Sandmann also stated in the memo:

> A lease to Litton would, [111] in effect, create a private dock, and the ore could conceivably be trucked . . . to inland mills. The railroad would lose control of the property. Other efforts have been made over the years to establish such private docks along Lake Erie and have been successfully resisted by the railroads.

Defendants argue that the ruling below was wrong, because the district court did not cite evidence that the railroad's expressions of interest in leasing were false or purposely misleading. As for Sandmann's statements that the railroad feared that a lease would allow Litton to "create a private dock" and that the railroads had in the [*1479] past "successfully resisted" attempts to create such private docks, defendants argue that such statements "merely recognized one disadvantage of arranging a lease."

The district court also based its holding on a letter that Litton received from Penn Central on March 19, 1971. Penn Central had filed a proposal with the CCIOC to establish a charge of $ 1.41 a ton for handling ore from self-unloading vessels. Litton protested what it described as an increase over the current rate of $.41 a ton. Penn Central responded in the March 19 letter that [112] that rate of $.41 had never applied to self-unloaders. Penn Central closed the letter with the statement that the district court read as evidence of misrepresentation:

> As I have indicated to your Company before, we are ready at any time to join with you in attempting to improve the facilities and resolve the cost problems involved in lake-rail movements of iron ore and pellets.

Defendants argue that this "conclusory expression of good will cannot, without more, constitute evidence of active concealment of the alleged railroad conspiracy." We are compelled to agree. No reasonable person could read this letter in its context as anything other than a stiff rebuff of Litton's protest.

Further, defendants argue that the record shows that Litton was not misled by Penn Central's expression of good will. We agree. It was error to conclude otherwise upon this record.

The district court ruled that there existed a question of fact as to whether Litton knew of the facts constituting its cause of action before the statute of limitations expired. Some of the evidence at issue concerns the railroads' setting handling charges together. In March 1970 one Andberg, the president [113] of a Litton subsidiary, told Preisser that the "railroads are meeting next week to discuss rate and future position." In an undated letter, Andberg said that he was told that Litton "could have difficulties with the railroads banding against [it]." Also, Andberg testified in a deposition that "it was common knowledge to me before I ever went to work for Wilson [the Litton subsidiary] that the railroads didn't want self-unloaders delivering iron ore." Id. Preisser knew that Sandmann, before their meeting on April 30, 1971, was planning to meet with other railroads "to discuss their terminal strategy on the Great Lakes and the relationship of that strategy to the new jumbo self-unloaders." In the same file memorandum Preisser described another conversation in which he had said that "we would not like the idea of the railroads colluding and/or meeting to determine their strategy on lake transfer terminals."

Andberg gave the following testimony in a deposition. When he was told that the railroads were banding against Litton, he "didn't know really" what that meant. He was aware of the rate bureau meetings but he "was not aware that they had meetings after their rate meetings [114] and collectively got together" to make decisions directed against Litton. Preisser testified similarly:

> There were . . . ratemaking bureaus and rate filings which were published; and I presumed if they were having a meeting and they were going to discuss rates, they would do so in, you know, the proper form, whether it was at rate bureau meetings or public filing of a rate change or decision.

The district court held that there was an issue of fact as to whether Litton knew that the railroads acted collectively apart from rate bureau meetings.

On April 30, 1971 Sandmann told Preisser that C & O/B & O would not give Litton a lower handling charge for self-unloaders. After the meeting Preisser said that Sandmann "was intimidated by the other railroads and capitulated. He will not offer us an advantageous rate over their existing docks." In June 1971 Andberg was told that if C & O/B & O reduced its charges, "Penn Central would equalize. This would start a rate war."

Preisser testified about what he meant by his comment that Sandmann was intimidated:

> [*1480] He may have been intimidated by the other railroads' financial power, their responsiveness, [115] their engineering, their car fleet size, the rapidity with which they could move and update their docks, arrangements which they might proceed to enter into with American Ship Building or some other Lake transportation carrier.

Plaintiffs argued in the district court that when they heard that Penn Central would match any reduction in C & O/B & O's handling charges, plaintiffs thought this meant that the railroads were willing to compete with each other, not that they were conspiring against Litton.

The district court held that Litton indeed might have understood Penn Central's threat "as a sign of competition and not collusion." As for the meeting in which Sandmann succumbed to the other railroads' pressure, the court stated:

> Even if plaintiffs knew that defendants met privately on April 29, this is not as a matter of law the equivalent of plaintiffs having knowledge that defendants had previously entered into and were furthering their alleged conspiracy to restrain the use and development of self-unloaders. Further, it may be found, as Preisser testified, that when he stated Sandmann was "intimidated" by the April 29 meeting, Preisser was referring to natural [116] economic pressures rather than pressure resulting from a conspiracy. . . .

When Preisser became aware of Sandmann's meeting with the other railroads on April 29, 1971, Preisser knew in defendants' words "that the defendants were acting jointly to Litton's detriment with respect to handling charges," and should have suspected and investigated a possible conspiracy. As we have described above, on April 30, 1971 Sandmann and Preisser discussed C & O/B & O's handling charges and the possibility of Litton's leasing C & O/B & O dock facilities. The district court held that this meeting and other negotiations continuing through mid-1972 may have reasonably deterred Litton from investigating any suspicion of a conspiracy.

Once again our review of the evidence satisfies us that even if the defendants might conceivably have misled Litton initially, no reasonable person in the position of Litton could have long relied on such impressions nor have been dissuaded from exercising due diligence in investigating possible antitrust liability within the statutory period.

In conclusion, while we could properly have declined to address the statute of limitations issue upon the basis that [117] a lenient standard of abuse of discretion applies to the denial of motions for summary judgment, we have concluded that the principles of Alexander v. Aero Lodge, 565 F.2d 1364, strongly counselled us to reach and decide this issue. There was as much before the district court and before us as there is likely ever to be. And since we conclude that no genuine issue of fact exists to warrant the tolling of the federal four year statute of limitations, the task for the parties and the court will be substantially lessened by our so ruling at this juncture. In short, therefore, the plaintiffs are limited in their proof of federal antitrust violations to conduct occurring within four years of their commencement of action.

As we shall shortly illustrate, we realize that this ruling does not affect plaintiffs' cause of action under the Valentine Act. The impact of our ruling will be summarized in the "conclusion" section of this opinion.

VII. PREEMPTION OF OHIO'S NO-LIMITATION STATUTE

Ohio Revised Code § 1331.12 provides: HN22[] "No statute of limitation shall prevent or be [118] a bar to any suit or proceeding for any violation of" Ohio's antitrust law, the Valentine Act, Ohio Rev. Code §§ 1331.01-1331.14. HN23[] Federal antitrust actions are limited by the four-year period of section 4B of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15b. Plaintiffs appeal the district court's ruling that section 4B preempts application of section 1331.12 to pendent claims that are brought under the Valentine Act and could [*1481] be brought under federal antitrust law if not for the statute of limitations.

The standards for deciding a preemption question are well established. HN24[] State law in a given field can be preempted either entirely or to the extent that it conflicts with federal law. A conflict between state and federal law arises when "'compliance with both federal and state regulations is a physical impossibility,' . . . or when state law 'stands as an obstacle to the accomplishment and execution of the full purposes and objectives of Congress.'" Hillsborough County v. Automated Medical Laboratories, Inc., 471 U.S. 707, 713, 85 L. Ed. 2d 714, 105 S. Ct. 2371 (1985) [119] (citations omitted). See also Jones v. Rath Packing Co., 430 U.S. 519, 525-26, 51 L. Ed. 2d 604, 97 S. Ct. 1305 (1977).

In the present case there is no suggestion that Congress has preempted the entire field of antitrust regulation or that it is impossible to comply with both federal and Ohio law. The issue, then, is whether Ohio's no-limitation statute "stands as an obstacle to the accomplishment of the full purposes and objectives of Congress" in enacting a four-year statute of limitations.

Before the enactment of section 4B of the Clayton Act in 1955, there was no federal statute of limitations for antitrust claims, and courts borrowed analogous state limitation periods and applied them to federal claims. See Chattanooga Foundry & Pipeworks v. Atlanta, 203 U.S. 390, 51 L. Ed. 241, 27 S. Ct. 65 (1906). When Congress was considering the proposed section 4B, twenty-two of the forty-eight states were applying limitations periods of over four years. See S. Rep. No. 619, 84th Cong., 1st Sess., reprinted in 1955 U.S. Cong. & Admin. News 2328, 2331-32. Some states had enacted their own antitrust laws by then, and Congress presumably knew that [120] courts might continue to apply statutes of limitation longer than four years to state claims. Congress' silence in the face of this possibility can be seen as acquiescence.

Ohio's no-limitation provision was itself in effect when section 4B was enacted. See Act of May 18, 1910, 101 Ohio Laws 274, 276 (1910). We cannot apply the normal presumption that Congress knew of the existence of the provision, see New York State Dept. of Social Services v. Dublino, 413 U.S. 405, 414, 37 L. Ed. 2d 688, 93 S. Ct. 2507 (1973), because in fact Congress did not know of it. In 1952 a United States district judge in the Northern District of Ohio, ignoring the no-limitation provision, held that federal antitrust claims were governed by Ohio's six-year limitation on actions to enforce a liability created by statute. See Reid v. Doubleday & Co., 109 F. Supp. 354

(N.D. Ohio 1952). The Senate Report, supra, at 2331, cited this case as the source for the Ohio statute of limitations applicable to antitrust claims and did not cite the Valentine Act.

One apparent reason for enacting section 4B of the Clayton Act was that Congress at the same time enacted section [121] 4A, 15 U.S.C. § 15a, which provides for antitrust damages actions by the United States. See Act of July 7, 1955, Pub. L. 84-137, 69 Stat. 282 (1955). These actions are also subject to the limitation period in section 4B. 15 U.S.C. § 15b. In allowing the federal government to sue for damages, Congress had good reasons to set a federal statute of limitations. If Congress had not set a federal statute of limitations, damage suits by the federal government would have been hampered in states having a limitation period of less than four years. Furthermore, it would look unfair for the federal government to sue one party and not another, when the conduct of both violated federal antitrust law but they operated in different states. Thus, enforcement of federal law would have justified enacting section 4B and leaving state limitation periods intact.

There are indications, however, that Congress might have intended to preempt state statutes of limitation. The Senate Report noted the following problems that inconsistent statutes cause:

(1) Plaintiffs in different states injured by the same interstate conduct do not have the same opportunities [122] to recover.

(2) The plaintiff can shop for the forum with the longest statute of limitations, and "the defendant remains in constant jeopardy [*1482] until the longest period of limitations has transpired."

(3) When there is a choice between two states' statutes of limitation, the question of which state's law applies -- that of the forum or that of the situs of the injury -- creates confusion.

After setting out these problems, the Senate Report stated: "It is one of the primary purposes of this bill to put an end to the confusion and discrimination present under existing law. . . ." Senate Report, supra, at 2331.

The main reason for the district court's decision was that if state statutes of limitation are not preempted -- a question that has arisen only recently and only in regard to Ohio, see Ohio ex rel. Brown v. Klosterman French Baking Co., 1977-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) para. 61,361 (S.D. Ohio 1976) -- the confusion in choice of law may return along with differences in defendants' exposure time and plaintiffs' ability to recover.

We have very carefully considered the trial court's conclusion that Ohio's antitrust law, as provided under the Valentine [123] Act, should be subject to the federal four-year limitation period notwithstanding Ohio's provision that no statute of limitation should be a bar to any proceeding for the violation of its antitrust law. The trial judge's ruling is appealing in many respects. Although we recognize the disadvantages which must inherently exist in a statute which is subject to no limitation, we are not convinced that the correct result was reached below.

Congress primarily focused on limiting federal antitrust actions. It was concerned that private enforcement of federal rights would be subject to a wide variety of state borrowing statutes. Congress was even more intent upon limiting the enforcement powers of the federal government itself. The establishment of a federal statute of limitations eliminated the possibility that federal enforcement would vary with the law of the jurisdiction in which the cause of action arose. We believe this is what the Senate Report was primarily addressing. Since Congress was well aware that there were state antitrust laws in effect and chose not to preempt them, we believe that neither did it intend to preempt anything in them, including statutes of limitations or provisions [124] excluding them. We make no comment, of course, on what other constitutional, statutory or common law inhibitions there may be under Ohio law which might act as a bar to keeping such actions open in perpetuity. In short, to the extent to which the district court has pendent jurisdiction to adjudicate the rights of the parties under the Valentine Act, we hold that HN25[] the four-year federal statute of limitations does not preempt Ohio Revised Code § 1331.12.

CONCLUSION

We harbor no illusions that we have resolved all of the problems which face the parties and the court in this extended litigation. Given the nature of the many rulings and the vagueness of the certification procedure employed both by the district court and by our court, we are not even certain that we have addressed all of the issues which arguably may have been included in the certification. To the extent the trial court and the parties are unable to glean any resolution of those unresolved questions that may have been certified, those questions are decertified.

Summarizing what we have reached here and decided on interlocutory [125] appeal, we hold as follows:

(1) With regard to immunity under Keogh and under the Interstate Commerce Act all rate-related claims made by the plaintiffs, whether state or federal, must be dismissed.

(2) Following Square D and its disposition by the Supreme Court on remand, certain non-rate-related claims must survive, at least at this stage, and are therefore remanded to the district court for further proceedings, as follows:

(a) the claim that the defendants refused to permit Litton to purchase, lease or use dock facilities that could take self-unloaders;

(b) the claim that defendants used harassing tactics to try to forestall legitimate [*1483] business activities of competitors [to the extent that this claim is not rate-related];

(c) the claim that defendants refused to handle self-unloading vessels at defendants' docks;

(d) plaintiffs' claim that defendants boycotted Pinney;

(e) the claim that defendants divided markets; and

(f) any other non-rate claim that plaintiffs might make by amendments, subject always of course to the exercise of its discretion in that regard by the trial court.

(3) With respect to standing, all rate-related claims except [126] for Pinney's claim that defendants did not grant it a commodity line-haul rate, which were not raised on appeal, again are subject to dismissal on the alternate basis of standing. Further, claims (a) and (c), referring to the defendants' refusal to permit Litton to purchase, lease or use dock facilities and the defendants' refusal to handle self-unloading vessels at their own docks, are dismissed as to Pinney Dock in their entirety.

(4) The federal four-year statute bars all claims under federal law that occurred four years before the lawsuit was commenced. Plaintiffs' claim in that regard that accrual of the cause of action was tolled by fraudulent concealment is rejected because if in fact concealed, any such causes of action were nonetheless discovered or could with reasonable diligence have been discovered notwithstanding such a concealment and well within the appropriate time for commencing such actions. We do not hold that all claims are time-barred and the defendants' motion to dismiss on that has not sought such relief.

(5) The provision in Ohio's Valentine Act providing for no statute of limitations is not preempted by the federal four-year statute.

(6) All issues not [127] otherwise addressed in this opinion are decertified and the case is remanded to the district court for further proceedings consistent herewith.

Chanute v. Williams Natural Gas Co.

United States District Court for the District of Kansas

February 5, 1988, Decided ; February 5, 1988, Filed

No. 87-1463-K

Reporter

678 F. Supp. 1517 *; 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 957 ; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,977

City of Chanute, Kansas; City of Auburn, Kansas; City of Cleveland, Oklahoma; City of Garnett, Kansas; City of Humboldt, Kansas; City of Iola, Kansas; City of Neodesha, Kansas; and City of Osage, Kansas, Plaintiffs, v. Williams Natural Gas Company, Defendant

Subsequent History: On Motion to Modify February 9, 1988.

Core Terms

pipeline, transportation, contracts, customers, long-term, natural gas, injunction, prices, producers, take-or-pay, open access, interstate, sales, third party, preliminary injunction, Sherman Act, terminated, purchaser, exposure, relevant market, facilities, regulation, suppliers, monopoly power, consumers, duplicate, irreparable, open-access, competitor, conditions

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Natural Gas Act > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Distribution & Sale

Energy & Utilities Law > Oil & Petroleum Products > Processing & Refining > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Pipelines > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Buying & Selling of Power

HN1[] Natural Gas Industry, Natural Gas Act

The fundamental goal of the Natural Gas Act of 1938 (NGA) is still intact, that being to protect consumers from exploitation at the hands of natural gas companies. Under the NGA, the Federal Power Commission, the predecessor to Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, set price ceilings for sales from producers to pipelines and also regulated the prices pipelines could charge to their downstream customers.

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Distribution & Sale

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Natural Gas Policy Act > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Natural Gas Policy Act > Wellhead Price Regulation

HN2[] Natural Gas Industry, Distribution & Sale

In the Natural Gas Policy Act, Congress substantially terminated the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission's wellhead price regulation by defining eight categories of natural gas production and setting ceiling prices for "first sales" in each category. 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 3311-33.

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Natural Gas Act > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > ... > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > Hearings & Orders > Judicial Review

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Common Carriage Obligations

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Distribution & Sale

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Marketing & Transportation > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Natural Gas Policy Act > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > ... > Purchase Contracts > Take-or-Pay Contracts > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Access

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Certification & Licenses

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Natural Gas Transportation

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Pipelines > General Overview

HN3[] Natural Gas Industry, Natural Gas Act

Federal Energy Regulatory Commission Order No. 436 is a highly complex order. It basically imposes open access commitment on any pipeline that (1) secures a "blanket certificate" to provide gas transportation pursuant to § 7 of the Natural Gas Act of 1938, 15 U.S.C.S. § 717f, or (2) actually provides transportation under § 311 of the Natural Gas Policy Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 3371. It further provides that if a pipeline holds itself out as a transporter of gas for others, the pipeline's local distribution company customers then have an opportunity to convert their existing contract demand from an obligation to purchase gas to an obligation to use or pay for transportation services.

Energy & Utilities Law > Oil, Gas & Mineral Interests > Purchase Contracts > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Natural Gas Policy Act > General Overview

HN4[] Oil, Gas & Mineral Interests, Purchase Contracts

Federal Energy Regulatory Commission Order No. 451 established procedures for the renegotiation of low, old, pre-Natural Gas Policy Act (NGPA) gas prices and the release of gas covered by such pre-NGPA gas purchase contracts. 18 C.F.R. § 270.201 (1987).

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Common Carriage Obligations

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Distribution & Sale

Energy & Utilities Law > Financing > Grants & Reservations > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Access

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Certification & Licenses

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Pipelines > General Overview

HN5[] Natural Gas Industry, Common Carriage Obligations

Under the good faith negotiation process, a producer is permitted to abandon a contract only if the producer first seeks a higher price for its old gas, is unable to agree with the purchaser on a suitable price, and finds another purchaser. 18 C.F.R. § 270.201(b) and (c) (1987). Further, if a tentative new purchaser is not a firm sales customer of the existing purchaser, and the existing purchaser is not an open-access transporter under Federal Energy Regulatory Commission Order No. 436, firm sales customers of the existing purchaser have a right of first refusal. 18 C.F.R. § 270.201(g) (1987). Finally, interstate pipelines that are not open access transporters under the provisions of Order No. 436 will be granted blanket transportation certificates and will be deemed to have agreed to deliver on behalf of any shipper any gas released under this rule to any of its existing customers or interconnected pipelines. 18 C.F.R. § 270.201(h) (1987). Thus, while pipelines will not become open-access transporters by virtue of such transportation, they may be obligated to transport gas to their own customers under certain conditions.

Energy & Utilities Law > ... > Purchase Contracts > Take-or-Pay Contracts > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Distribution & Sale

Energy & Utilities Law > Oil, Gas & Mineral Interests > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Pipelines > General Overview

HN6[] Purchase Contracts, Take-or-Pay Contracts

Federal Energy Regulatory Commission Order No. 500 basically provides a crediting mechanism whereby pipelines which transport gas for producers under Order No. 436 may receive a credit against their obligations to take a similar volume of gas under take-or-pay contracts with those same producers.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > Public Interest

HN7[] Injunctions, Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Before a preliminary injunction may be granted, four prerequisites must be satisfied by the moving party. The movant must establish: (1) a showing that the movant will suffer irreparable injury unless the injunction issues; (2) proof that the threatened injury outweighs whatever damage the proposed injunction may cause the opposing party; (3) a showing that the injunction, if issued, would not be adverse to the public interest; and (4) a substantial likelihood that the movant will eventually prevail on the merits. Where the first three requirements for a preliminary injunction are satisfied, the United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit has lessened the moving party's burden of proof on the fourth requirement. If the other elements are present, it will ordinarily be enough that the plaintiff has raised questions going to the merits so serious, substantial, difficult and doubtful as to make them a fair ground for litigation and thus for more deliberate investigation. The function of a preliminary injunction is to preserve the status quo pending the outcome of the case. As a preliminary matter, the court must consider whether the grant of a preliminary injunction would preserve or upset the status quo.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Monetary Damages

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

HN8[] Damages, Monetary Damages

The most important prerequisite for the issuance of a preliminary injunction is a showing that if the injunction is not granted, the movant will suffer "irreparable harm" before a decision on the merits can be rendered. A preliminary injunction will usually be denied if monetary damages are sufficient to compensate a plaintiff.

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Distribution & Sale

Communications Law > Regulators > US Federal Communications Commission > Jurisdiction

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Marketing & Transportation > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Natural Gas Act > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Natural Gas Transportation

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Buying & Selling of Power

HN9[] Natural Gas Industry, Distribution & Sale

Section 4(b) of the Natural Gas Act of 1938 provides that no natural-gas company shall, with respect to any transportation or sale of natural gas subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, (1) make or grant any undue preference or advantage to any person or subject any person to any undue prejudice or disadvantage, or (2) maintain any unreasonable difference in rates, charges, service, facilities, or in any other respect, either as between localities or as between classes of service. 15 U.S.C.S. § 717c(b).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN10[] Sherman Act, Claims

In order to prevail on the merits, plaintiffs must prove the defendant has violated § 2 of the Sherman Act. The offense of monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act has two elements: (1) The possession of monopoly power in the relevant market; and (2) The willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident. The United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit has defined monopoly as the ability to control prices and exclude competition. While the two elements are closely related, both must be demonstrated to establish the existence of monopoly power.

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Distribution & Sale

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > Monopolization

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Common Carriage Obligations

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Marketing & Transportation > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Access

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Natural Gas Transportation

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Pipelines > General Overview

HN11[] Natural Gas Industry, Distribution & Sale

Under the essential facilities or bottleneck doctrine, a business or group of businesses which control a scarce facility has an obligation to give competitors reasonable access to it. The bottleneck theory differs from traditional monopolization analysis in that the intent factor is de-emphasized and emphasis is placed instead on the surrounding market conditions. Further, the doctrine is particularly applicable to natural gas pipelines and their refusal to transport third party gas.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN12[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The four elements necessary to establish liability under the essential facilities doctrine are: (1) Control of the essential facility by a monopolist;(2) A competitor's inability to duplicate the facility; (3) Denial of the use of the facility to a competitor; and (4) The feasibility of providing the facility.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN13[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The relevant market must be proven regardless of the type of § 2 of the Sherman Act claim utilized by plaintiff.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN14[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The existence or absence of monopoly power cannot be determined in a vacuum but rather must be measured within a defined market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Geographic Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN15[] Relevant Market, Geographic Market Definition

Determining the relevant market typically requires an inquiry into the nature of the product and the geographical area of effective competition. The relevant product market is generally defined to be that area of goods or services in which the product or products offered by the defendant effectively compete while the relevant geographic market is generally defined to be the geographic area of effective competition in which the product or services is traded.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN16[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The essential facility doctrine is applicable only where the firm which controls the essential facility refuses to allow access to the facility to a competitor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN17[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The promotion of self-interest alone does not invoke the rule of reason to immunize otherwise illegal conduct. The same may properly be said of § 2 cases under the Sherman Act. That Act assumes that an enterprise will protect itself against loss by operating with superior service, lower costs, and improved efficiency.

Counsel: [1] Wheatley & Wollesen, Stumbo, Stumbo, Hanson & Hendricks, for Plaintiff.

Hall, Estill, Hardwick, Gable, Golden & Nelson, Adams, Jones, Robinson & Malone, B. E. Potts, Gen. Counsel, Williams Natural Gas Co., for Defendant.

Judges: Patrick F. Kelly, Judge.

Opinion by: KELLY

Opinion

[*1519] MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

PATRICK F. KELLY, JUDGE

Plaintiffs, Cities of Chanute, Auburn, Garnett, Humboldt, Iola, Neodesha, and Osage City, Kansas, and Cleveland, Oklahoma ("Cities"), seek an injunction compelling defendant Williams Natural Gas Company ("Williams" or "WNG") to permanently open access to its interstate natural gas pipeline which is connected to each of the plaintiff Cities. The Cities allege Williams' failure to open access to its pipeline to alternate suppliers of natural gas constitutes an intentional monopoly in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2.

This action was filed on August 3, 1987, and on August 7, 1987 a hearing was held before the Honorable Frank G. Theis on plaintiffs' motion for a temporary restraining order. In a ruling from the bench, Judge Theis denied the plaintiffs' motion. The Cities subsequently filed the motion for preliminary injunction now pending before this court.

A hearing on the preliminary injunction motion was [2] held on October 20-23, 27-28 and November 16-19, 1987 (hereafter referred to as "hearing"). After the hearing, the parties submitted extensive briefs detailing their proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law. Final oral argument on the motion was held January 25, 1988, at which time the court announced that it would grant the requested injunction. However, the court stated the injunction would not take effect until it issued a full written memorandum and order. Accordingly, the court is now prepared to make written findings and conclusions on the plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction.

Factual Background

Plaintiff Cities are each municipalities with their own natural gas distribution systems. The Cities purchase natural gas at wholesale and then resell it to residential, commercial and industrial customers within the Cities and surrounding areas.

Defendant Williams Natural Gas is a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business in Tulsa, Oklahoma. Williams is engaged in the business of interstate sale and transportation of natural gas, and as such is regulated by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission ("FERC" or "the Commission"). Williams obtains gas [3] from producing fields in various states, transmits the gas to its service areas, and delivers it to customers in Kansas, Oklahoma, Missouri and Nebraska. Williams' customers are primarily of two types: (1) local distribution companies ("LDCs"), such as the plaintiff Cities, which purchase gas from WNG at a "margin" or "markup", and resell the gas to the ultimate consumers; and (2) industrial gas users which purchase gas directly from WNG.

Each of the plaintiff Cities in this action can be characterized as an "LDC" and has or has had a "full requirements" contract with WNG. Under such contracts, the Cities must purchase all of their gas requirements from WNG, and WNG must maintain sufficient gas reserves to meet those requirements. For purposes of this case, there are essentially two types of rates and services available to the Cities [*1520] under "full requirements" contracts: firm service (F-2 rates -- $ 3.16 and $ 3.26/mcf), which is primarily for residential customers; and large industrial service (I-2 rates -- $ 2.75/mcf). Under either service, the gas is purchased by the Cities for resale to residential and industrial users.

In addition to these full requirements contracts, all of the [4] Cities, except Auburn and Cleveland, have direct sale contracts with WNG to purchase gas for delivery to and use by the Cities in their municipal electric power plants. These contracts are known as "interruptible service" contracts and differ substantially from "full requirements" contracts. Interruptible service is provided on a "when available" basis, and accordingly, may be interrupted during periods when demand for gas is greatest. Further, either party can terminate such contracts upon 30 days' notice.

With the exception of the cities of Cleveland and Garnett, all of the plaintiff Cities currently have "full requirements" contracts in place with WNG, and the parties continue to operate under those contracts. Cleveland and Garnett's contracts with WNG expired by their own terms in May of 1987. [1] However, those two cities continue to purchase natural gas from WNG under the full requirements resale service provided under WNG's FERC certificate and tariff.

[5] WNG's pipeline is the only major interstate pipeline serving plaintiff Cities, and prior to December, 1986, other natural gas suppliers did not have access to Williams' pipeline. However, prompted by the FERC's issuance of Order No. 436 (see discussion at pp. 12-14), WNG opened its pipeline to transportation gas on an interim basis on December 22, 1986. Under this "open-access" system, the Cities had an opportunity to purchase natural gas from third parties (e.g., other producers and marketing companies) and have that gas transported over WNG's pipeline. In return for transporting the gas, Williams received a fee called a "transportation rate". In order that the Cities could purchase gas from other sources, FERC temporarily waived its certificate and tariff provisions and Williams temporarily waived its "full requirements" contract provisions with the Cities.

Thus, while the "full requirements" provisions were waived, WNG's customers (including the plaintiff Cities) were free to replace all or any part of the gas they normally purchased from WNG with third party gas.

By April of 1987, WNG's customers were purchasing from third parties large volumes of gas previously purchased from [6] WNG. WNG's vice president of marketing and supply, Jack Finch, testified at the hearing that by July of 1987, 80 % of WNG's sales of system supply gas had been converted to transportation. Finch further testified that as a result of the reduced sales, WNG's "take-or-pay" exposure increased dramatically during the period of open access. (Note: "take-or-pay" contracts between pipelines and producers commonly require a pipeline to pay for a specified percentage of delivered gas whether or not it is in fact taken).

---

[1] Williams' firm service contracts with Chanute, Humboldt and Neodesha will expire on April 22, 1988. The Osage City contract expires August 22, 1989, while Iola's contract expires December 22, 1989. Auburn's contract is the last to expire, on December 22, 1990.

Despite increasing take-or-pay exposure, WNG was able to keep the pipeline open until August 1, 1987, by negotiating with its producers (primarily Amoco Oil Company) for take-or-pay relief.

During the period of interim open access, each of the plaintiff Cities obtained gas from Vesta Energy Company ("Vesta"), a marketing company engaged in the sale at the wellhead of natural gas supplies. Some of the Cities contracted directly with Vesta while others contracted with a consultant, Leo Edison, who, in turn, contracted with Vesta. The contracts were of varying terms and duration but can be generally categorized as follows:

Cleveland

On December 9, 1986, the City of Cleveland, [7] Oklahoma entered into a "natural gas sale agreement" with Leo Edison, whereby the City agreed to purchase gas from Edison [*1521] for a period of five years at a specified price of $ 2.71/mcf, and thereafter at $.50/mcf less than the price of WNG's gas. Pursuant to a written transportation agreement, WNG commenced transportation of that third party gas to the City of Cleveland in February, 1987.

Auburn, Humboldt, Iola and Osage City

The Cities of Auburn, Humboldt, Iola and Osage City also commenced the purchase of third party transport gas in June and July of 1987 under gas purchase agreements with Leo Edison. These agreements were of short-term duration ending in September or October of 1987, or were month-to-month arrangements which could be cancelled by either party on 30 days' notice. The gas purchased by these Cities was transported by WNG under written transportation agreements with each City.

The source of supply for Edison's contracts with the City of Cleveland, as well as with the Cities of Auburn, Humboldt, Iola and Osage City, was a five-year contract between Edison and Vesta. The contract provided for a base price of $ 1.50/mcf at the delivery point, to be adjusted every [8] six months based on 70 % of the increase or decrease in WNG's average resale price to its customers.

Neodesha, Garnett and Chanute

The Cities of Neodesha, Garnett and Chanute also commenced transportation under WNG's interim open-access program in June, 1987, pursuant to written transportation agreements with WNG and direct sale agreements with Vesta. The City of Chanute purchased gas from Vesta under a month-to-month arrangement while the City of Neodesha purchased gas from Vesta under an agreement covering the months of June and July, 1987 (Pltfs' Ex. 5). The City of Garnett's agreement with Vesta covered only the month of June, 1987. While none of these three cities actually entered into a long-term contract with Vesta, the evidence at the hearing showed that negotiations for a long-term arrangement had been completed between these cities and Vesta when WNG announced the closing of its pipeline effective August 1, 1987. Vesta's vice president of gas sales, David Tudor, testified that except for the starting price, the terms of the long-term agreement contemplated by these three cities and Vesta were identical to the terms of the Vesta/Edison agreement. Tudor further testified [9] that the contracts were not formalized because of uncertainty as to how long WNG would keep its pipeline open.

To summarize, at the time WNG closed its pipeline, the City of Cleveland, Oklahoma, and the Cities of Auburn, Humboldt, Iola and Osage City, Kansas, had available a long-term, low-cost supply of Vesta gas. While the Cities of Garnett, Neodesha and Chanute had no long-term contract in effect with either Vesta or Edison, the essential terms of such a contract had been agreed upon.

When WNG closed its pipeline on August 1, 1987, the Cities were again required to purchase gas from Williams at a price substantially higher than the price of gas available to them through Vesta. The Cities subsequently filed the instant action, alleging WNG's refusal to open the pipeline constitutes monopolization in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, and seeking an injunction ordering WNG to open access to its pipeline to the plaintiff Cities.

Economic and Regulatory Environment

It is clear to the court that any analysis of this case must take into account the economic and regulatory environment in which the parties were operating. Accordingly, prior to discussing the elements [10] required to issue a preliminary injunction, and whether plaintiffs have met those elements, the court first briefly summarizes relevant regulatory actions and their impact upon the natural gas industry, with particular emphasis on their effect upon the parties to this action.

Since the enactment of the Natural Gas Act of 1938, 15 U.S.C. § 717 et seq., the natural gas industry has undergone substantial and complicated changes. Yet HN1[] the fundamental goal of the NGA is still intact -- that being to protect consumers from exploitation at the hands of natural gas [*1522] companies. FPC v. Hope Natural Gas Co., 320 U.S. 591, 610 88 L. Ed. 333, 64 S. Ct. 281 (1944); Associated Gas Distributors v. F.E.R.C., 263 U.S. App. D.C. 1, 824 F.2d 981, 995 (D.C. Cir. 1987). Under the NGA, the Federal Power Commission (the predecessor to FERC) set price ceilings for sales from producers to pipelines and also regulated the prices pipelines could charge to their downstream customers. Transcontinental Pipe Line v. Oil & Gas Bd., 474 U.S. 409, 420, 106 S. Ct. 709, 88 L. Ed. 2d 732 (1986). However, the price of interstate gas at the wellhead was fixed well below market and a discrepancy developed between the price for interstate [11] gas and unregulated intrastate gas, and gas production was withheld from the interstate market. Maryland People's Counsel v. F.E.R.C., 245 U.S. App. D.C. 365, 761 F.2d 768, 770 (D.C. Cir. 1985).

By the early 1970s, a serious gas shortage had developed, apparently caused in part by an imbalance between supply and demand brought on by the NGA's artificial pricing scheme. Thus, in 1978, Congress enacted "a new system of natural gas pricing" under the Natural Gas Policy Act ("NGPA"), 15 U.S.C. § 3301 et seq. Transcontinental Pipe Line v. Oil & Gas Bd., 474 U.S. at 421.

HN2[] In the NGPA, Congress substantially terminated the Commission's wellhead price regulation by defining eight categories of natural gas production and setting ceiling prices for "first sales" in each category. 15 U.S.C. §§ 3311-33. [2]

[12] The effect of the NGPA on producers, as compared to interstate pipelines, has been summarized by FERC as follows:

> As a direct result of the NGPA, . . . a natural gas producer can now sell "new" gas to any purchaser -- an intrastate pipeline, an interstate pipeline, a local distribution company served by an intra- or interstate pipeline, an end user, a nonprofit consumer cooperative or what have you -- without federal restrictions as to market entry, market exit or price attaching to the sale. Similarly, an independent marketer can acquire a portfolio of gas purchase agreements and sell gas supply to any person, again without coming under any market entry, market exit or price regulation over the sale. In short, with respect to sales of the commodity by producers or marketers, Congress removed controls in recognition of the competitive nature of the commodity market for gas.
> An interstate pipeline, however, seeking to sell gas from its system supply (a commingled stream of gas that was at the wellhead both NGA-jurisdictional and NGA-nonjurisdictional) is subject to the full panoply of statutory regulation governing market entry, market exit and price. . . .
>
> The rationale for maintaining [13] utility-type market entry, exit, and price regulation over the sales for resale of interstate pipelines while removing that regulation for similar sales by other market entities is only implicit in the NGPA but appears plain enough: While Congress concluded that gas production was sufficiently competitive to remove regulation, the control which interstate pipelines exercised over transportation still conferred on them the same kind of market power over their customers as had existed at the time of enactment of the NGA.

[2] The NGPA provided for the almost immediate deregulation of certain "high cost" gas, while for most "new gas" it established new ceilings and provided for gradual increases until scheduled deregulation on January 1, 1985 or July 1, 1987. The NGPA did not deregulate "old" interstate gas, but instead provided for adjustment of the price ceilings for inflation and authorized the Commission to raise former ceilings to higher "just and reasonable" levels. Associated Gas Distributors v. F.E.R.C., 824 F.2d at 994.

Order No. 436, 50 Fed. Reg. 42,408, 42,418 (1985) (footnotes omitted).

Thus, interstate pipelines, like WNG, are still subject to pervasive regulation by FERC. For instance, pipelines must secure a certificate of convenience and necessity prior to performing any significant act -- e.g., construction of new facilities or initiation of new transportation service or new sales for resale. 15 U.S.C. § 717f(c). Pipelines also must obtain commission approval when they abandon any "certificated" facility, transportation or sale. 15 U.S.C. [*1523] § 717f(b). Additionally, the commission limits to "just and reasonable" levels the prices at which the interstate pipelines sell gas for [14] resale or provide transportation services. 15 U.S.C. § 717c(a).

During the natural gas shortage which occurred in the 1970s, pipelines were encouraged by the commission to develop supply reserves and enter into long-term contracts with producers. The long-term contracts commonly incorporated high prices (and provisions for escalation upward) as well as "take-or-pay" provisions, requiring pipelines to either take some specified percentage of the deliverable gas, or to make "prepayments" for that percentage anyway. Associated Gas Distributors v. F.E.R.C., 824 F.2d at 995-96, 1021.

It was during this period of time that Williams Natural Gas acquired extensive new gas reserves from Amoco Production Company in the Wamsutter and Moxa regions of Wyoming, most of which contained high NGPA incentive prices. WNG was able to add this high-priced gas to its system and still sell it at a competitive price by "rolling in" the cost of the high-priced Wyoming gas with the cost of inexpensive "old gas" (e.g., from the Hugoton field) to reach a relatively low weighted average cost of gas (WACOG).

However, by 1982 the combination of a number of factors (including energy conservation, mild winters [15] and lower prices of competing fuels such as petroleum) resulted in falling gas prices and a natural gas surplus. Further, various economic factors raised the wellhead price of gas. Producers of gas, responding to high prices and high take-or-pay terms, continued to develop new supply sources of gas. But since gas demand had fallen off, and the market could not absorb supplies at prevailing prices, a surplus of gas deliverability resulted. Thus, producers sought open access to pipeline transportation as an alternative to pipeline sales for marketing their gas. Moreover, purchasers of natural gas sought to purchase gas directly from the producer and have it transported in competition with the system supplies the pipeline retained under uneconomic long-term contracts. Finally, interstate pipelines, seeking new markets and lower prices for both surplus gas supplies and surplus pipeline capacity, expressed reluctance to provide transportation services to other suppliers, particularly where transportation of gas would displace the pipeline's own sales volumes, subjecting the pipeline to substantial take-or-pay exposure.

Order No. 436

In response to these conditions, FERC promulgated [16] Order No. 436, 50 Fed. Reg. 42,408 (1985), (codified at various sections of C.F.R.). This order was motivated by the Commission's determination that the pipelines' refusal to transport gas for third parties had caused serious market distortions.

The essence of Order No. 436 is "a tendency, in the industry metaphor, to 'unbundle' the pipelines' transportation and merchant roles." Associated Gas Distributors v. F.E.R.C., 824 F.2d at 994. While HN3[] Order No. 436 is a highly complex order, it basically imposes open access commitment on any pipeline that (1) secures a "blanket certificate" to provide gas transportation pursuant to § 7 of the NGA, 15 U.S.C. § 717f, or (2) actually provides transportation under § 311 of the NGPA, 15 U.S.C. § 3371. It further provides that if a pipeline holds itself out as a transporter of gas for others, the pipeline's LDC customers then have an opportunity to convert their existing contract demand ("CD") from an obligation to purchase gas to an obligation to use (or pay for) transportation services.

In Associated Gas Distributors v. F.E.R.C., 263 U.S. App. D.C. 1, 824 F.2d 981, the District of Columbia Circuit Court of Appeals upheld the substance of Order No. 436, but recognized [17] that FERC had failed to deal with the problem of uneconomic take-or-pay contracts between pipelines and producers. Accordingly, the court remanded Order No. 436 to the Commission with the directive to determine to what extent certain policy considerations may justify the Commission's inaction on the uneconomical producer-pipeline contracts. 824 F.2d at 1030.

[*1524] As has already been discussed, WNG commenced interim open access on December 23, 1986, in response to FERC's issuance of Order No. 436. By July, 1986, WNG had filed with FERC an Order 436 "Stipulation and Agreement" which detailed Williams' plans for a permanent open-access program. FERC approved Williams' stipulation and agreement on February 20, 1987, subject to substantial modifications and conditions. Williams found these conditions unacceptable, however, and began revising its stipulation and agreement. In October of 1987, a revised stipulation and agreement was distributed to WNG's customers and submitted for Commission approval. At this time, the Commission has still not approved WNG's permanent open-access proposals, and WNG is no longer operating under the interim open-access program.

Order No. 451

On June 6, 1986, [18] FERC issued Order No. 451, 51 Fed. Reg. 22,168 (1986). HN4[] Order No. 451 established procedures for the renegotiation of low, old, pre-NGPA gas prices and the release of gas covered by such pre-NGPA gas purchase contracts. 18 C.F.R. § 270.201 (1987). [3]

The commission issued Order No. 451 in an attempt to revise its methodology of regulating producer sales of "old gas" in response to changes in market conditions. The commission also recognized that the existing rate structure for old flowing gas had created at least three problems for natural gas consumers:

> First, the existing rates for most old gas are below the replacement cost of gas reserves. . . . Most producers of old gas are not receiving revenues equivalent to the marginal costs of replacing depleted old gas reserves, and gas reserves are being consumed faster than they are being replaced.. . .
>
> Second, the existing rates for old, flowing gas vary widely by vintage, based on the date of its dedication to interstate commerce. The overall prices consumers [19] pay for gas depend directly on the access of their pipeline suppliers to these cheaper vintages of gas. Therefore, wide variations in pipeline access to old gas have created huge disparities in the prices consumers pay for gas at the burner-tip around the country. . . .
> Third, the pricing of old, flowing gas below replacement cost gives pipelines with large "cushions" of such gas the ability to "roll-in" their prices of new and deregulated gas with artificially low old gas prices. This allows the pipelines to effectively subsidize the prices of new and deregulated gas above what consumers would otherwise be willing to pay, and therefore frustrates the efficient working of competitive wellhead markets.

51 Fed. Reg. at 22,172.

Order No. 451 establishes a single alternative ceiling price for categories of "old gas" committed or dedicated to interstate commerce before enactment of the NGPA, and eliminates the various ceiling prices for different "vintages" of old gas previously set according to when the gas reserves were produced.

However, before a producer may collect a higher price for its old gas under an existing contract, it must first enter into what is known as a "good faith negotiation" [20] ("GFN") process with the purchaser. HN5[] Under the GFN process, a producer is permitted to abandon a contract only if the producer first seeks a higher price for its old gas, is unable to agree with the purchaser on a suitable price, and finds another purchaser. 18 C.F.R. § 270.201(b)&(c) (1987). Further, if a tentative new purchaser is not a firm sales customer of the existing purchaser, and the existing purchaser is not an open-access transporter under Order No. 436, firm sales customers of the existing purchaser have a right of first refusal. 18 C.F.R. § 270.201(g) (1987). Finally, interstate pipelines that are not open access transporters under the provisions of Order No. 436 will be granted blanket transportation certificates and will [*1525] be deemed to have agreed to deliver on behalf of any shipper any gas released under this rule to any of its existing customers or interconnected pipelines. 18 C.F.R. § 270.201(h) (1987). Thus, while pipelines will not become open-access transporters by virtue of such transportation, they may be obligated to transport gas to their own customers under certain conditions.

[3] A case seeking review of Order No. 451 is currently pending before the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals. See Mobil Oil Exploration Co. v. F.E.R.C., Case No. 86-4940.

As for the instant case, testimony at hearing indicated that several producers have [21] entered into or completed the GFN process with WNG, and "451 gas" released pursuant to those negotiations has been made available to the Cities in at least three instances. Specifically, since June of 1987, Cabot Petroleum Corporation, Dakar Operating Company, and Mesa Petroleum have offered 451 gas to the Cities.

The Cities declined to accept the Cabot offer because it was for interruptible gas with prices and quantities to be renegotiable each month. The Dakar offer required the buyer to construct and maintain pipelines and meters at the wells located approximately 800 to 1,000 miles from Chanute. The Mesa proposal, which called for a price of $ 2.85/mcf, plus a transportation charge of $.52/mcf, was not acceptable to the Cities because it was "not competitive with Vesta." Finally, both Tenneco Oil Exploration & Production Company and Mobil Oil Corporation have entered into the Order No. 451 GFN process with WNG, but the process is not yet complete. Accordingly, the terms at which that gas will be offered to the Cities are not yet known.

Order No. 500

In response to the remand of Order No. 436 by the Court of Appeals in Associated Gas Distributors, the Commission issued [22] Order No. 500 on August 7, 1987. HN6[] Order No. 500 basically provides a crediting mechanism whereby pipelines which transport gas for producers under Order No. 436 may receive a credit against their obligations to take a similar volume of gas under take-or-pay contracts with those same producers.

There are, however, some situations in which pipelines must transport gas without credits. The most obvious situation occurs when the pipeline does not have a take-or-pay contract with the producer who owned the gas being transported by the pipeline. In such a case, there could be no credits because there would be no qualifying take-or-pay contract against which to apply any credits.

A second situation in which a pipeline must transport a producer's gas without credits occurs when a pipeline transports gas which it previously purchased under a terminated take-or-pay contract, and which is not presently committed to the pipeline. For instance, if a producer-pipeline contract has been terminated under Order No. 451, no credits would be available to a pipeline which later transported the same producer's gas. However, for a contract to be considered terminated under Order No. 451, sales of all gas [23] covered by that contract must have been abandoned or terminated under No. 451's GFN rule.

Conclusions of Law

HN7[] Before a preliminary injunction may be granted, four prerequisites must be satisfied by the moving party. The movant must establish: (1) a showing that the movant will suffer irreparable injury unless the injunction issues; (2) proof that the threatened injury outweighs whatever damage the proposed injunction may cause the opposing party; (3) a showing that the injunction, if issued, would not be adverse to the public interest; and (4) a substantial likelihood that the movant will eventually prevail on the merits. Amoco Oil Co. v. Rainbow Snow, Inc., 809 F.2d 656, 661 (10th Cir. 1987); City of Chanute v. Kansas Gas & Electric Co., 754 F.2d 310, 312 (10th Cir. 1985). Where the first three requirements for a preliminary injunction are satisfied, the Tenth Circuit has lessened the moving party's burden of proof on the fourth requirement. The court has held: "'If the other elements are present . . . it will ordinarily be enough that the plaintiff has raised questions going to the merits so serious, substantial, difficult and doubtful as to make them a fair ground [24] for litigation and thus for more deliberate investigation.'" [*1526] Lundgrin v. Claytor, 619 F.2d 61, 63 (10th Cir. 1980), (quoting Continental Oil Co. v. Frontier Refining Co., 338 F.2d 780, 781-86 [10th Cir. 1964]). The function of a preliminary injunction is to preserve the status quo pending the outcome of the case. Tri-State Generation v. Shoshone River Power, Inc., 805 F.2d 351, 355 (10th Cir. 1986).

Thus, as a preliminary matter, the court must consider whether the grant of a preliminary injunction would preserve or upset the status quo.

Williams argues a preliminary injunction could only alter the status quo because Williams' pipeline is currently closed to transportation of third party gas and the plaintiffs seek to open the pipeline. The Cities point out, however, that Williams' pipeline was open until August 1, 1987, and the Cities, by filing the instant action, were only attempting to preserve the status quo as it existed prior to August 1, 1987. The court finds the Cities' argument persuasive, particularly in light of the fact the Cities filed this action on August 3, 1987, only two days after WNG had ceased open access.

Irreparable Harm

Perhaps HN8[] the most important [25] prerequisite for the issuance of a preliminary injunction is a showing that if the injunction is not granted, the movant will suffer "irreparable harm" before a decision on the merits can be rendered. 11 Wright & Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure: Civil § 2948. A preliminary injunction will usually be denied if monetary damages are sufficient to compensate a plaintiff. Tri-State Generation v. Shoshone River Power, Inc., 805 F.2d at 355; Holly Sugar v. Goshen County Co-op. Beet Growers, 725 F.2d 564, 570 (10th Cir. 1984).

The question of whether the Cities have suffered "irreparable injury" must focus on the Cities' long-term contracts with Vesta. The Cities' contentions with respect to this issue are simple and persuasive. When Williams closed its pipeline on August 1, 1987, each of the plaintiff cities had available a dependable, long-term source of gas at a substantially lower cost than the gas supplied by Williams. The Cities argue when Williams closed its pipeline, it effectively terminated the Cities' arrangements for such gas, and this loss constituted "irreparable injury" to the Cities.

Williams contends, however, the loss of the Vesta contracts cannot [26] form the basis for the Cities' claims of "irreparable injury" because (1) three of the plaintiff cities had no long-term contracts in place at the time WNG closed its pipeline; and (2) the Cities' contracts with Vesta were "suspended" rather than "terminated" by WNG's closing of the pipeline.

WNG apparently concedes that the Edison/Vesta contract was for a long-term supply of gas, and that this gas was "earmarked" for the cities of Auburn, Humboldt, Iola and Osage City, Kansas and Cleveland, Oklahoma. WNG focuses instead on the cities of Chanute, Garnett and Neodesha, and argues these cities had no long-term contracts in place on August 1, 1987, and thus could not be irreparably harmed.

However, testimony at hearing showed that these three cities (Chanute, Garnett and Neodesha) were in the process of negotiating long-term contracts directly with Vesta when WNG closed its pipeline. For instance, Vesta's "letter agreements" with these three cities for the sale of "spot gas" in June and July of 1987 specifically noted that Vesta would flow the short-term gas to the Cities while the long-term agreements were being finalized. Moreover, Vesta's representative, David Tudor, testified that [27] Vesta "fully intended to offer and enter into" a long-term gas sales contract with the cities of Chanute, Neodesha and Garnett and the essential terms of the agreement had been finalized (e.g., a five-year contract for the sale of gas at the rate of $ 1.45/mcf, adjusted according to 70 % of WNG's sales service charge). Tudor further stated that the agreement was not actually entered into because it was uncertain how long Williams would keep its pipeline open. Thus, it is clear that had Williams not closed its pipeline, each of the plaintiff Cities would now have a supply of long-term, low price gas available through Vesta.

[*1527] Williams asserts, however, that even if the court finds that each of the Cities had a long-term source of supply available through Vesta, the Cities cannot show that such contracts were lost as a result of Williams closing its pipeline. WNG notes that the Edison/Vesta contract (which was the source of supply for five of the Cities) contained a "force majeure" provision which arguably "suspended" rather than "terminated" the contract in the event the gas could not be transported over WNG's line. Thus, Williams reasons that should it decide at some indefinite point [28] in the future to open access to its pipeline, the Vesta contract will, in effect, "pick up where it left off."

Accordingly, Williams argues the Cities have not suffered irreparable injury because the contracts have not been terminated, and any loss suffered by the Cities will be compensable in money damages.

This argument is not supported by the evidence. First, the contract provision in question provides:

> 14.1 The term "force majeure" as used in this Gas Purchase Contract shall mean Acts of God, strikes, lockouts or other industrial disturbances . . . and causes of like or similar kind, whether herein enumerated or not, and not within the control of the party claiming suspension and which by the exercise of due diligence such party is unable to overcome.
>
> 14.3 It specifically is recognized and agreed by the parties hereto that the gas to be made available for sale and delivery by Seller which is purchased by Buyer hereunder may be transported by third party pipelines for Seller's account in order to effect delivery to Buyer at the delivery point(s). Accordingly, in addition to such other events of force majeure also shall exist when any third party pipeline is unable or otherwise [29] declines to transport any volume of gas subject hereto during any period of time.

(Pltfs' Ex. 13, pp. 11-12.)

While it is clear that a pipeline's refusal to transport gas is a "force majeure" event under the contract, it is not clear from the contract the effect such an event has upon the parties' obligations to perform. It is probable that a determination of this question would require an examination of the entire contract and the intent of the parties as well as a consideration of the indefinite duration of the "force majeure" event in this instance. In any event, that question is not before this court. What is properly before the court is the testimony of Vesta's vice president, David Tudor, who stated that when WNG closed its pipeline, the gas which would have been sold to the plaintiff cities was resold on the spot market and transported over an open-access pipeline. Moreover, Tudor testified that if Williams' pipeline were to open again six months to a year after this case is tried on the merits, Vesta might not be willing to enter into a long-term gas purchase agreement with the plaintiff cities.

Tudor's testimony supports two findings: (1) the Cities' contracts with Vesta [30] were effectively terminated when WNG closed its pipeline; and (2) if an injunction is not granted in this case, the Cities may lose the opportunity to contract with Vesta for a long-term, dependable supply of low cost gas.

This determination raises a final question with respect to this issue, e.g., can the loss of the Vesta contracts constitute "irreparable injury"?

A similar situation was addressed by the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals in City of Chanute v. Kansas Gas & Electric Co., 754 F.2d 310, and a brief discussion of that case is helpful here.

In City of Chanute, the plaintiffs were three cities which generated electric power through their own operation and distribution systems, and also purchased wholesale electric power from defendant Kansas Gas and Electric Company (KG&E). A dispute arose between the parties when the plaintiff cities attempted to contract with additional suppliers of electricity [4] and thus [*1528] approached KG&E (which maintained the only transmission lines into the plaintiff cities) to arrange for the "wheeling" (or transfer) of the power. While KG&E was willing to wheel power to the cities, it would do so only on the condition that the cities would enter [31] into new, higher priced contracts with KG&E for the purchase of wholesale power. When the cities refused to accept these conditions, KG&E refused to wheel power to them. 754 F.2d at 311-12. Plaintiffs subsequently filed an action against KG&E alleging violations of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and of § 3 of the Clayton Act.

The trial court granted plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction requiring KG&E to wheel power to the cities pending the outcome of the suit, and in so doing found that all three cities would suffer irreparable harm if the injunction were not granted. City of Chanute v. Kansas Gas and Elec. Co., 564 F. Supp. 1416 (D. Kan. 1983).

---

[4] The Cities of Chanute and Iola contracted with the Southwestern Power Administration (SWPA) and were to begin receiving five-year allocations of federally generated hydro-electric power on January 1, 1984. The City of Fredonia contracted with the Kansas Municipal Energy Agency to begin receiving power from the Nearman Creek Generating Plant on June 1, 1983, and was liable for demand charges whether or not the energy was transmitted. 564 F. Supp. at 1418.

On appeal, the Tenth Circuit affirmed the district court's finding [32] of irreparable harm as to the Cities of Chanute and Iola, but reversed that finding as to the City of Fredonia. The appeals court determined that because Chanute and Iola would lose their allotment of power without wheeling, they suffered irreparable damages. The court reasoned:

> The difference in energy cost incurred by Chanute and Iola with and without SWPA power may be ascertainable, at least for the immediate future. The value of the availability of potential supplier, however, cannot always be measured in dollars, particularly when, as here, such availability changes the competitive structure of the market and the supplier may be necessary to meet the long-term electrical demands of the cities.

754 F.2d at 313 (emphasis added).

However, the court in City of Chanute distinguished Fredonia's situation on the ground that Fredonia's right to power from the Nearman Creek Project was not contingent on the issuance of the injunction. Rather, the court held that absent the injunction, the city "would merely be forced to pay for power it did not receive. This injury can be measured and compensated in dollars." 754 F.2d at 313.

The position of the plaintiff Cities in the instant [33] case can be likened to that of Chanute and Iola in City of Chanute. For instance, unless an injunction is issued here, the Cities stand to lose a potential supplier of low-cost, long-term gas -- a supply which may be necessary to meet the Cities' long-term gas needs. Moreover, it is difficult to estimate the effect of the loss of such gas on the Cities' customers -- whether residential, commercial or industrial.

Williams contends that even if the Cities were to lose the Vesta supply of gas, the Cities would not be irreparably harmed because there are alternative supplies of gas available to the Cities at comparable or perhaps even better prices.

First, WNG cites the availability of 451 gas as an "alternative" source of gas to the Cities. WNG asserts that "enough gas will be available to the Cities through the Order 451 GFN process to satisfy the Cities' combined peak day requirements 10 times over." (Def.'s Brief, p. 42.) Defendant's argument is misplaced. Plaintiffs have never suggested that there is not enough gas available to satisfy their needs. Rather, the issue is whether the Cities have been irreparably harmed by their inability to purchase low-cost, long-term gas from a [34] dependable third party supplier and to have that gas transported over Williams' pipeline.

While it is true that if the Cities were to purchase 451 gas WNG would be required to transport the gas over its line, it is also true that the Cities have not yet received any offers for 451 gas comparable to the supply they can obtain from Vesta. Further, [*1529] Order 451 provides that the producer need only offer the released gas to a pipeline's customers after the pipeline's offer has been rejected, and after an offer from a third party has been obtained. Therefore, it seems unlikely that the Cities will be able to obtain 451 gas comparable in price and term to that obtained through Vesta. In any event, as stated earlier, the 451 gas which has been offered to the Cities to date has been unacceptable either because of price or term or other conditions attached to the offer.

Defendant also suggests that in addition to the availability of 451 gas, the Cities have available substantial volumes of "local gas". [5] Defendant points out that the City of Chanute currently has a contract to purchase local gas from Chooch, Inc. and a pipeline from Chooch's wells to the City is nearly complete. Additionally, [35] the City of Neodesha is currently connected to the local gas supply of Willis Gas Company and has purchased some gas from Willis in the past.

---

[5] WNG's full requirements contracts with the Cities contain an exception which permits the Cities to purchase "local gas" from a third party without violating their full requirements contracts. While "local gas" may be defined in various ways, when used in this case it refers to gas reserves located in geographic proximity to the plaintiff Cities.

The evidence showed, however, that the Chooch contract covered only a small percentage of Chanute's total requirements and was not contemplated to save the City's long-term needs. Moreover, the City of Neodesha is no longer purchasing gas from Willis because of quality problems experienced with Willis' gas in the past.

The evidence simply does not show that local gas of sufficient quality, price and volume is available to satisfy the needs of the Cities on a long-term basis. Further, even if the local gas did meet all of the necessary criteria, since Williams' pipeline is closed, the Cities in most instances would be required to construct pipelines from the gas reserves to the Cities. This is [36] neither a feasible nor reasonable alternative.

The court therefore holds that the Cities have sufficiently shown that they will suffer irreparable injury unless the injunction issues.

Balance of Harms

Plaintiffs must next show that the threatened injury to plaintiffs outweighs whatever damage the proposed injunction may cause defendant. This element presents a difficult question, as both the Cities and WNG argue they will suffer injury if the court were to impose an injunction. However, for the reasons detailed below, the court finds the balance of hardships must weigh in favor of the Cities in this case.

The Cities point to the loss of an inexpensive, long-term gas supply, higher prices to customers and the potential loss of businesses and sales as evidence that the injury to the Cities, if the injunction is not granted, would outweigh any injury to the defendant if the injunction is granted. WNG maintains, however, the balance of harms must lie in its favor because of the substantial take-or-pay exposure it would allegedly incur if the injunction is granted.

WNG, relying on § 4(b) of the NGA, reasons that if the court orders WNG to open access to its pipeline to the plaintiff cities, [37] Williams would subsequently be forced to open access to its pipeline on a system-wide basis.

HN9[] Section 4(b) of the NGA provides:

> (b) No natural-gas company shall, with respect to any transportation or sale of natural gas subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, (1) make or grant any undue preference or advantage to any person or subject any person to any undue prejudice or disadvantage, or (2) maintain any unreasonable difference in rates, charges, service, facilities, or in any other respect, either as between localities or as between classes of service.

15 U.S.C. § 717c(b) (emphasis added).

Based on this statute, Williams argues FERC would not permit WNG to provide transportation service to the Cities alone, but instead would require that any service offered to the Cities be offered to all WNG customers on a nondiscriminatory basis. [*1530] Further, Williams estimates that under system-wide open access, transportation service would substantially displace gas sales and the company would be subject to take-or-pay exposure in the amount of $ 90 million to $ 140 million. WNG reasons that the injury to WNG in the form of take-or-pay exposure would outweigh the "small benefit" of [38] reduced gas rates to the Cities.

Noting that § 4(b) of the NGA prohibits only "undue" or "unreasonable" differences, the Cities argue that a difference in the treatment or services provided to WNG's customers would not by itself violate the NGA. See Michigan Consol. Gas Co. v. Federal Power Commission, 203 F.2d 895, 901 (3d Cir. 1953). Further, the Cities correctly point out that this court has not been asked to open access to WNG's entire pipeline. Rather, the issue currently before this court is whether Williams maintains an intentional monopoly in the eight cities which are parties to this action, and whether the Cities are entitled to a preliminary injunction ordering WNG to open its pipeline to those cities.

Accordingly, the court concludes that an injunction ordering Williams to open its pipeline to the plaintiff Cities would result in only minimal take-or-pay exposure to the defendant, while a denial of the requested injunction may result in the loss to the Cities of a steady, assured supply of natural gas at a price far more reasonable than that presently assessed by Williams.

Public Interest

The issue of whether the injunction, if issued, would adversely affect the [39] public interest requires an examination of the effect of an injunction on the customers of the Cities as well as the effect of an injunction on WNG's customers.

There can be no doubt that substantially lower wholesale gas prices would benefit, rather than adversely affect, the customers of the plaintiff Cities, as the Cities would pass the cost savings on to their retail customers.

WNG once again suggests that it will be exposed to substantial take-or-pay liability if the court grants the requested injunction, and it is likely that at least part of these costs will ultimately be passed on to all of WNG's customers, thereby adversely affecting the public interest.

As already discussed, such an argument improperly clouds the issue in this case. This court has not been asked to order open access to Williams' entire pipeline -- or to, in effect, force Williams' compliance with Order No. 436. Rather, this court is here concerned only with whether WNG has an intentional monopoly in the eight plaintiff cities in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act. Moreover, as this court commented in its ruling from the bench on this motion, it cannot be in the public interest for anyone to be forced to [40] accept WNG gas at its present rate, knowing full well that such rate is not competitive in a real world setting.

Accordingly, the court finds the grant of the requested injunction would not adversely affect the public interest.

The final element plaintiffs must show is that they can demonstrate a likelihood of success on the merits.

As earlier stated, where the first three requirements are met, the moving party's burden of proof on the fourth requirement is lessened. Accordingly, plaintiffs will satisfy the fourth requirement if they raise questions going to the merits "so serious, substantial, difficult and doubtful" as to make them a fair ground for litigation and thus for more deliberate investigation.

HN10[] In order to prevail on the merits, plaintiffs must prove the defendant has violated § 2 of the Sherman Act. The offense of monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act has two elements:

> (1) The possession of monopoly power in the relevant market; and
>
> (2) The willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.

United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, [41] 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966); see also Bright v. Moss Ambulance Service, 824 F.2d 819, 823 [*1531] (10th Cir. 1987); Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp. v. Aspen Skiing Co., 738 F.2d 1509, 1519 (10th Cir. 1984), aff'd, 472 U.S. 585, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 (1985). The Tenth Circuit has defined monopoly power as the ability to control prices and exclude competition. While the two elements are closely related, both must be demonstrated to establish the existence of monopoly power. Bright v. Moss Ambulance Service, Inc., 824 F.2d at 824 (citing Shoppin' Bag of Pueblo, Inc. v. Dillon Companies, Inc., 783 F.2d 159, 164 [10th Cir. 1986]).

Plaintiffs seek to prove liability under § 2 by utilizing the "essential facilities" or "bottleneck" doctrine. HN11[] Under this doctrine, a business or group of businesses which control a scarce facility has an obligation to give competitors reasonable access to it. Byars v. Bluff City News Co., Inc., 609 F.2d 843, 856 (6th Cir. 1979). The bottleneck theory differs from traditional monopolization analysis in that the intent factor is de-emphasized and emphasis is placed instead on the surrounding market conditions. Kintner, Federal Antitrust [42] Law § 10.25 n. 484 (1980). Further, the doctrine is particularly applicable to natural gas pipelines and their refusal to transport third party gas. McNulty, Freeing the Captives: Nondiscriminatory Access to Transportation in the Interstate Gas Market, 47 U. Pitt. L. Rev. 843 (Spring 1986).

The Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals recently discussed and applied the doctrine in Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp. v. Aspen Skiing Co., 738 F.2d 1509. The court there defined HN12[] the four elements necessary to establish liability under the essential facilities doctrine as follows:

(1) Control of the essential facility by a monopolist;
(2) A competitor's inability to duplicate the facility;
(3) Denial of the use of the facility to a competitor; and

(4) The feasibility of providing the facility.

738 F.2d at 1520 (quoting MCI Communications v. AT&T, 708 F.2d 1081, 1132-33 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 891, 78 L. Ed. 2d 226, 104 S. Ct. 234 (1983)).

Prior to discussing the application of each of the above elements, a preliminary issue must first be addressed. Specifically, plaintiffs contend that when the "essential facilities" doctrine is utilized, proof of its elements is proof of monopoly power, and plaintiffs need [43] not show "the relevant market". Defendant, on the other hand, argues proof of the relevant market is always a threshold element in determining whether there has been a violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act.

In support of its contention, defendant cites Consul Ltd. v. Transco Energy Co., 805 F.2d 490 (4th Cir. 1986). In Consul, as in the instant case, plaintiff urged the court to find that under the "essential facilities" doctrine, the court need not concern itself with market definition. The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals, after reviewing a number of "essential facility" cases, ruled that HN13[] the relevant market must be proven regardless of the type of § 2 claim utilized by plaintiff. 805 F.2d at 494.

Conversely, plaintiffs contend market analysis is not an indispensable means of proving monopoly power. Plaintiffs cite Woods Exploration & Producing Co. v. Aluminum Company of America, 438 F.2d 1286 (5th Cir. 1971), in support of their contention. In Woods, owners of wells in the Appling Field in Texas filed an antitrust action against other producers, contending the defendants possessed monopoly power over the extraction of gas from the Appling Field, and that the relevant [44] area of competition was the field. The court held:

> "When one must look for a monopoly, determining a relevant market in which to look and in which to evaluate competitive effects is obviously an essential first step. But when, with an illegal practice such as is present here in mind, one can look at an area and see the existence of monopoly power, not by inference from market share, but by determining actual ability to exclude competition and control prices, there appears no real need to go further."

[*1532] 438 F.2d at 1306 (quoting Denver Petroleum Corp. v. Shell Oil Co., 306 F. Supp. 289 [D. Colo. 1969]).

The Woods court, however, then went on to find that the Appling Field was the relevant market and to determine that the defendant possessed monopoly power in that field. Hence, the Woods case does not stand for the proposition advanced by plaintiffs here.

The court thus holds HN14[] the existence or absence of monopoly power cannot be determined in a vacuum but rather must be measured within a defined market. 3 Von Kalinowski, Antitrust Laws and Trade Regulation § 8.02[2] (1986). While it is certainly true that under the "essential facilities" doctrine, analysis of the relevant market [45] may not take on the same implications as it does in other cases, this court concurs with the Consul court's determination that the "relevant market" must be proven in every case.

HN15[] Determining the relevant market typically requires an inquiry into the nature of the product and the geographical area of effective competition. The relevant product market is generally defined to be that area of goods or services in which the product or products offered by the defendant effectively compete while the relevant geographic market is generally defined to be the geographic area of effective competition in which the product or services is traded. United States v. E. I. duPont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 388, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956).

With that stated, the court finds the relevant product market in this case is natural gas. It has not been shown that there is an adequate substitute for natural gas that would be acceptable to the large majority of industrial, commercial, or residential consumers of the Cities. Nor has it been shown that sufficient interchangeability exists between gas and other sources of energy. As for the relevant geographic area, it is clear to the court that [46] while Williams Natural Gas Company operates in a several state geographic area, the plaintiff Cities can practicably turn to supplies only through Williams. Thus, the court concludes the relevant geographic market in this case is the area encompassing the plaintiff Cities.

With this determination of the relevant market in mind, the court now moves on to a consideration of whether this case satisfies the elements of the "essential facilities" doctrine.

The first element, control of the essential facility by a monopolist, has been met here. WNG owns the only natural gas pipeline connected to the plaintiff Cities and also maintains complete control over that pipeline. If WNG refuses to transport third party gas to the Cities, the Cities simply cannot compete for or obtain such gas.

The second element requires a showing of the competitor's inability to duplicate the essential facility. This element must be broken down into two questions for purposes of the court's analysis: (1) do the Cities compete with WNG; and (2) can the Cities duplicate the essential facility?

HN16[] The essential facility doctrine is applicable only where the firm which controls the essential facility refuses to allow [47] access to the facility to a competitor. Olympia Equip. Leasing v. Western Union Telegraph, 797 F.2d 370, 376-77 (7th Cir. 1986); MCI Communications v. AT&T, 708 F.2d at 1147 n. 100. Thus, Williams reasons that the Cities in this case are "customers" rather than "competitors" of WNG and cannot utilize the essential facility doctrine.

The Cities do not attempt to argue that competition exists between Williams and the Cities for retail customers. Rather, the Cities point out that Williams directly serves a number of industrial customers within and around the Cities -- customers the Cities could potentially serve if the Cities could obtain lower priced gas.

WNG counters that direct sales to end users comprise only about 16 % of its total sales. Further, WNG's president and vice president testified at the hearing that WNG has always viewed the Cities as customers rather than competitors.

[*1533] Regardless of how small a percentage of WNG's business consists of direct sales, and regardless of how WNG views the plaintiff Cities, the court finds the Cities do compete to some degree with WNG for direct sale customers. Moreover, there is no question that by denying access to its pipeline [48] to Vesta and other potential suppliers, WNG has foreclosed competition and prevented the plaintiff Cities from obtaining competitively priced gas. Thus, the court finds plaintiffs are entitled to utilize the essential facility doctrine.

Plaintiffs must next show that they are unable to "duplicate" the essential facility. This element does not require plaintiff to show that it would be impossible to duplicate the facility or that the facility is indispensable. Rather, it is sufficient if duplication of the facility would be economically infeasible, and if denial of its use would inflict a severe handicap on potential market entrants. Fishman v. Estate of Wirtz, 807 F.2d 520, 539-40 (7th Cir. 1986); Hecht v. Pro-Football, Inc., 187 U.S. App. D.C. 73, 570 F.2d 982, 992 (D.C. Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 436 U.S. 956, 57 L. Ed. 2d 1121, 98 S. Ct. 3069 (1978); Consolidated Gas Company of Florida, Inc. v. City Gas Company of Florida, 665 F. Supp. 1493, 1534 (S.D. Fla. 1987).

While conflicting evidence was presented at hearing regarding the cost to the Cities of constructing a four-inch pipeline (estimates range from $ 10,000/mile to $ 50,000/mile), the court finds that constructing such a pipeline is neither feasible nor required.

[49] Defendant additionally suggests that the fact that two cities are currently connected to local gas supplies is evidence that the Cities are able to duplicate defendant's facility.

In MCI Communications v. AT&T, 708 F.2d at 1147, the court, faced with an analogous situation, held that the fact that MCI was building its own facilities in at least one area was not evidence that it could duplicate AT&T's local service facilities at every point. Similarly, in this case the evidence does not show that each of the plaintiff Cities is capable of constructing a pipeline to local gas supplies. More importantly, the evidence does not show that even if such pipelines were built that local gas supplies would be of the same quality, dependability or price as could be obtained through access to Williams' pipeline. The court therefore finds that plaintiffs are unable to duplicate the essential facility.

Thirdly, the Cities must show denial of use of the facility to a competitor.

WNG argues it has not denied use of the pipeline to the Cities because it continues to supply gas to them through its pipeline, and further, because WNG is required to transport 451 gas to the Cities if they should contract [50] for such gas with the producer. As previously discussed, 451 gas has not been shown to be available to the Cities on a long-term, low-cost basis. Moreover, while WNG continues to provide the Cities with its own gas, it has denied the Cities the opportunity to use the facility to purchase third party gas. Accordingly, the court finds the third element has also been met.

Finally, the Cities must show it is feasible for WNG to provide its facility to the plaintiffs.

WNG has contended throughout these proceedings that it cannot feasibly open access to its pipeline because to do so would result in substantially reduced sales and increased take-or-pay exposure.

First, the court has already determined that if it were to order open access only to the eight plaintiff Cities, minimal or no take-or-pay exposure would be incurred by defendant. Further, WNG would continue to receive a transportation fee in exchange for transporting third party gas to the Cities.

Secondly, even if take-or-pay exposure was incurred by the defendant as a result of this court's order, the "justification of self-preservation" has not been successfully asserted as a defense to denial of access to an essential facility. [51] Consolidated Gas Company of Florida v. City Gas Company of Florida, 665 F. Supp. at 1536. A similar argument to that made by the defendant [*1534] here was made in Otter Tail Power Co. v. United States, 410 U.S. 366, 93 S. Ct. 1022, 35 L. Ed. 2d 359 (1973). In Otter Tail, an electric power company was held to have violated § 2 of the Sherman Act by monopolizing and attempting to monopolize the retail distribution of electric power in its service area by attempting to prevent communities in which its retail distribution franchise had expired from replacing it with a municipal distribution system. The power company argued that if it did not prevent the establishment of municipal electric systems, more and more municipalities would turn to public power and the company would go downhill. The Supreme Court held:

> The argument is a familiar one. It was made in United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., 388 U.S. 365, 18 L Ed 2d 1249, 87 S Ct 1856, a civil suit under § 1 of the Sherman Act dealing with a restrictive distribution program and practices of a bicycle manufacturer. We said: HN17[] "The promotion of self-interest alone does not invoke the rule of reason to immunize otherwise illegal conduct." [52] Id., at 375, 18 L Ed 2d 1249.
>
> The same may properly be said of § 2 cases under the Sherman Act. That Act assumes that an enterprise will protect itself against loss by operating with superior service, lower costs, and improved efficiency. Otter Tail's theory collides with the Sherman Act as it sought to substitute for competition anticompetitive uses of its dominant economic power.

410 U.S. at 380 (footnote omitted).

Accordingly, the court finds the defendant cannot rely on the threat of take-or-pay exposure as a defense to the Cities' antitrust claim. The Cities have shown it is feasible for WNG to provide its facility to plaintiffs.

Plaintiffs have thus established the likelihood they will prevail on their "essential facility" claim and have raised questions going to the merits "so serious, substantial, difficult and doubtful as to make them a fair ground for litigation." With this determination made, plaintiffs have satisfied each of the requirements necessary to obtain a preliminary injunction.

IT IS ACCORDINGLY ORDERED this 5th day of February, 1988, that plaintiffs' motion for preliminary injunction is granted. Defendant is ordered to open access to its pipeline to [53] the eight plaintiff Cities for the transport of third party gas. The Cities are thus advised to formalize their respective contracts for the purchase of gas from Vesta. Once such contracts are in place, the Cities will have waived their present contracts with Williams and any rights or claims that may exist under those contracts.

A status conference is scheduled in chambers on February 26, 1988, at 1:00 P.M.

Federal Paper Bd. Co. v. Amata

United States District Court for the District of Connecticut

February 10, 1988, Decided

Civil No. H-86-1415(MJB)

Reporter

693 F. Supp. 1376 *; 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9818 ; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P68,088

FEDERAL PAPER BOARD COMPANY, INC. v. GIACINTO (a/k/a JESSE) P. AMATA, HAROLD KIRSTEIN, UNITED PAPER AND METAL CO., INC., INTERNATIONAL RECLAMATION CORP., CONNECTICUT RECYCLING COMPANY, INC., JAMES D. HERSHMAN, I. HERSHMAN & CO., INC., DAVID GOODMAN, TRI-CITY RECYCLING, INC., HARRY GOODMAN, INC., CAPITAL FIBERS, HARVEY LURIE, WILMINGTON PAPER CORP., TESSA INDUSTRIES, INC., JAMES A. DERRICO, SR., TIFFANY FIBERS, INC., JAMES A. DERRICO, JR., AUTOMATED MATERIAL HANDLING, INC., KIMBERLY KIRKER AND JAMES KIRKER, TRUSTEE

Core Terms

suppliers, wastepaper, enterprise, amended complaint, allegations, antitrust, Robinson-Patman Act, anticompetitive, Sherman Act, defendants', predicate act, conspiracy, bribes, counts, violation of section, relevant market, pleaded, alleged violation, anti trust law, rule of reason, terminating, paperboard, purchaser, pattern of racketeering activity, treble damages, Clayton Act, purposes, recycled, damages, sales

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

The standards that apply to a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim brought under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) are the same as the standards for deciding a motion for judgment on the pleadings for failure to state a claim brought under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c), as authorized by Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(h)(2). All well-pleaded allegations of plaintiff will be taken to be true, and plaintiff's claims will not be dismissed unless it appears beyond doubt that plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of its claims which would entitle it to relief.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2[] Private Actions, Remedies

Every antitrust suit should begin by identifying the ways in which a challenged restraint might possibly impair competition. This step occasionally reveals that competition is not implicated at all and thus that the parties' dispute is not an antitrust case. If a plaintiff fails to allege any anticompetitive impact, dismissal is proper. To avoid dismissal, a plaintiff must allege that competition in a specific market has been restrained. Such an examination of the anticompetitive impact that the defendants' alleged conduct might have had requires a definition of the relevant market. The relevant market is comprised of a geographic and a product market. The geographic market encompasses the area in which the defendant effectively competes with other individuals or businesses for the distribution of the relevant product. The relevant product market is composed of products that have reasonable interchangeability for the purposes for which they are produced -- price, use and qualities considered.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3[] Private Actions, Remedies

In order to establish an anticompetitive effect adequate to avoid dismissal under the Sherman Act, it is not sufficient to allege an injury to a competitor. Rather, the inquiry under the rule of reason is directed at the challenged restraint's overall impact on competitive conditions, rather than whether a particular party has been restrained by the conduct at issue.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN4[] Standing, Clayton Act

To have standing to bring an antitrust claim plaintiff must suffer an antitrust injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Bribery > Commercial Bribery > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5[] Sherman Act, Claims

Commercial bribery, standing alone, does not establish a violation of the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Types of Price Discrimination > Brokerage, Commissions & Compensation

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > Promotional Allowances & Services

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Robinson-Patman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > Commerce Requirement

HN6[] Types of Price Discrimination, Brokerage, Commissions & Compensation

Section 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act (Act) provides that: It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to pay or grant, or to receive or accept, anything of value as a commission, brokerage, or other compensation, or any allowance or discount in lieu thereof, except for services rendered in connection with the sale or purchase of goods, wares, or merchandise, either to the other party to such transaction or to an agent, representative, or other intermediary therein where such intermediary is acting in fact for or in behalf, or is subject to the direct or indirect control, of any party to such transaction other than the person by whom such compensation is so granted or paid. 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(c). Section 2(c) of the Act defines conduct that is per se illegal. As such, a plaintiff does not have to prove injury to competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > Damages

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Robinson-Patman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > General Overview

HN7[] Remedies, Damages

In order for a plaintiff to maintain a Robinson-Patman Act claim, plaintiff must demonstrate that it has standing under § 4 of the Clayton Act, and that it satisfies the common law tests for standing that have been developed to limit the scope of § 4, codified as amended at 15 U.S.C.S. § 15(a). In addition to proving a violation of the substantive antitrust law, plaintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation. The antitrust injury requirement means a plaintiff suing for treble damages for violations of § 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13 (a), must show that the probable affect of the discrimination would be to allow the favored competitor to draw sales or profits from him, the unfavored competitor.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

HN8[] Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) provides that in all averments of fraud or mistake, the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake shall be stated with particularity. Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). Malice, intent, knowledge, and other condition of mind, however, may be averred generally. Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b).

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Good Faith & Fair Dealing

HN9[] Contract Interpretation, Good Faith & Fair Dealing

Under Connecticut law, a breach of good faith requires only a showing that a party was not "honest in fact." That is a much lighter burden than is required for establishing fraud.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud > Wire Fraud > Elements

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

HN10[] Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

Section 1962(c) of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act provides: It shall be unlawful for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity or collection of unlawful debt. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962(c). Racketeering activity is defined to include specific predicate offenses, including mail fraud indictable under 18 U.S.C.S. § 1341 and wire fraud indictable under 18 U.S.C.S. § 1343. The predicate acts of mail and wire fraud must be pleaded in conformity with the particularity requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). The mail and wire fraud statutes prohibit "everything designed to defraud."

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud Against the Government > Mail Fraud > Elements

Torts > ... > Fraud & Misrepresentation > Nondisclosure > Elements

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Criminal Offenses > Fraud > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud > Wire Fraud > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud > Wire Fraud > Elements

HN11[] Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

The United States Supreme Court defines the elements of fraud to be (1) a false representation (2) in reference to a material fact (3) made with knowledge of its falsity (4) and with the intent to deceive (5) with action taken in reliance upon the representation. Fraud is not limited to affirmative misrepresentations, but may also be proved through the defendant's non-action or non-disclosure of material facts intended to create a false and fraudulent representation. Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) requires that each element of fraud listed above be pleaded with particularity, except for knowledge and intent which "may be averred generally." Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). A complaint must specifically allege the facts that amount to fraud. If a claim is based on an alleged failure to inform the plaintiff of a material fact, the complaint should also allege the basis for the defendant's duty to disclose. Although allegations of knowledge of falsity and intent to defraud are not subject to the requirements of Rule 9(b), plaintiffs are not relieved of their burden to plead a factual basis for those allegations. Plaintiffs must still specifically plead events from which one can infer intent and knowledge.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN12[] Pleadings, Heightened Pleading Requirements

18 U.S.C.S. § 1962(d) of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act provides: It shall be unlawful for any person to conspire to violate any of the provisions of this section. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962(d). To be liable under § 1962(d), the defendant must have objectively manifested an agreement to participate, directly or indirectly, in the affairs of an enterprise through the commission of two or more predicate acts. Although Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) does not apply to claims of conspiracy because it is not one of the averments enumerated in the Rule, plaintiffs must nevertheless provide some factual basis for the legal conclusion that a conspiracy existed. As with a claim of fraud tested under Rule 9(b), conclusory allegations are insufficient.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN13[] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

Under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961(5) states: "pattern of racketeering activity" requires at least two acts of racketeering activity, one of which occurred after the effective date of this chapter and the last of which occurred within 10 years (excluding any period of imprisonment) after the commission of a prior act of racketeering activity. In the Second Circuit a RICO plaintiff need not plead or prove the existence of multiple schemes of criminality in order to establish a pattern of racketeering activity. A pattern of racketeering is established whenever a person commits at least two acts that have the common purpose of furthering a continuing criminal enterprise with which that person is associated.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN14[] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act, Elements

In the Second Circuit, the requirements of relatedness and continuity under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) referred to by the United States Supreme Court are addressed in the concept of enterprise under 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962(c). "Enterprise" is defined by statute to include both legal entities such as corporations as well as individuals "associated in fact." 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961(4). The latter consists of a group of persons associated together for a common purpose of engaging in a course of conduct and is proved by evidence of an ongoing organization, formal or informal, and by evidence that the various associates function as a continuing unit. Relatedness and continuity are provided for through the requirement that a RICO enterprise be "a continuing operation" and the predicate acts be "related to the common purpose."

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN15[] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

As a starting point for finding a Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) enterprise, there must be "a continuing operation" and the predicate acts must be "related to the common purpose." In addition, when an enterprise is purely criminal in nature, the Second Circuit Court of Appeals appears to have developed a transactional test for continuity. If the predicate acts are related to a single transaction that has an "obvious terminating goal or date," then the requirement of relatedness and continuity are not satisfied, and there is no RICO enterprise. If, however, the criminal enterprise is one that is intended to continue indefinitely over the course of several transactions and whose purpose is achieved through multiple transactions involving predicate acts, then the plaintiff has established the existence of a RICO enterprise. If the alleged enterprise dissolves or ends upon commission of the predicate acts, it cannot be a RICO enterprise.

Counsel: [1] Attorneys for Plaintiff: George E. O'Brien, Esquire, Christopher F. Wanat, Esquire, Mark V. Connolly, Esquire, John W. O'Meara, Esquire, Tyler, Cooper & Alcorn, New Haven, Connecticut.

Attorneys for Defendants: William R. Moller, Esquire, Hartford, Connecticut, Jacob D. Zeldes, Esquire, David P. Atkins, Esquire, Zeldes, Needle & Cooper, Bridgeport, Connecticut, Eliot Gersten, Esquire, Hartford, Connecticut, David L. Belt, Esquire, Ira B. Grudberg, Esquire, Alice Miskimin, Esquire, New Haven, Connecticut, John Wirzbicki, Esquire, Milton Jacobson, Esquire, Norwich, Connecticut, Hugh F. Keefe, Esquire, New Haven, Connecticut, Henry B. Hurvitz, Esquire, Hartford, Connecticut, Carl Yeich, Esquire, Hartford, Connecticut, V. James Ferraro, Esquire, New Haven, Connecticut.

Judges: Blumenfeld, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: BLUMENFELD

Opinion

[*1379] RULING ON MOTIONS TO DISMISS

BLUMENFELD, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

This case arises out of alleged bribes and kickbacks paid to Federal Paper Board Company's former employee, Giacinto P. Amata. The amended complaint alleges violations of section 1 of the Sherman Act (Count I), section 2 of the Sherman Act (Count II), section 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act (Count III), and RICO (Count IV), along with several violations of state law (Counts V to XII). This ruling responds to [2] the motions of defendants James D. Hershman and I. Hershman & Co., Inc. ("Hershman") (as to Counts I to IV), Automated Material Handling, Inc. and James A. Derrico, Jr. ("Automated") (as to all counts), David Goodman, Tri-City Recycling Co., Inc., Harry Goodman, Inc., and Capital Fibers ("Goodman") (as to all counts), Harold Kirstein, United Paper and Metal Co., Inc., International Reclamation Corp., and Connecticut Recycling Co., Inc. ("Kirstein") (as to Counts I to IV), James A. Derrico, Sr. and Tiffany Fibers, Inc. ("Tiffany") (as to all counts), and Giacinto P. Amata ("Amata") (as to Counts I to IV) to dismiss Federal's amended complaint.

The motions have been brought both as motions to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and as motions for judgment on the pleadings pursuant to Rule 12(c). With respect to those defendants that have filed pleadings, the motions are properly treated as motions for judgment on the pleadings. [1] See Falls

[1] Answers have been filed by the Kirstein group and Amata.

Riverway Realty, Inc. v. City of Niagara Falls, 754 F.2d 49, 53 (2d Cir. 1985). HN1[] The standards that apply to a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim brought under Rule 12(b)(6) are the same as the [3] standards for deciding a motion for judgment on the pleadings for failure to state a claim brought under Rule 12(c), as authorized by Rule 12(h)(2). See Andreo v. Friedlander, Gaines, Cohen, Rosenthal & Rosenberg, 660 F. Supp. 1362, 1365 (D. Conn. 1987) [hereinafter Andreo II]. For purposes of this ruling, therefore, all well-pleaded allegations of Federal will be taken to be true, see 2A J. Moore, J. Lucas & G. Grotheer, Moore's Federal Practice para. 12.15 at 12-106 (2d ed. 1987), and Federal's claims will not be dismissed "unless it appears 'beyond doubt that [Federal] can prove no set of facts in support of [its] claim[s] which would entitle [it] to relief.'" Goldman v. Belden, 754 F.2d 1059, 1065 (2d Cir. 1985) (quoting Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957) (footnote omitted)).

Allegations

The amended complaint alleges the following facts. Federal Paper Board Company, Inc. ("Federal") is a New York corporation with executive offices in New Jersey. Federal manufactures and sells wood and paper products, including recycled paperboard and paperboard cartons. Federal's claims in this case [4] relate to Federal's manufacture and sale of recycled paperboard at its mill in Sprague, Connecticut. Recycled paperboard is produced principally from wastepaper and is used to make folding paperboard cartons.

[*1380] From 1970 to 1985, Giacinto P. Amata was responsible for purchasing the wastepaper used as the raw material at the Sprague mill. Federal expected Amata "to purchase wastepaper for Federal at the most advantageous price and delivery terms, from the numerous competing suppliers of wastepaper." In 1985, Federal discovered that Amata had been accepting bribes and kickbacks from the wastepaper suppliers with whom he had been dealing (including defendants Hershman, Automated, Goodman, Kirstein, and Tiffany). Federal alleges that Amata would not permit wastepaper suppliers who refused to pay him bribes to sell in significant amounts to the Sprague mill and that Amata suggested to the uncooperative suppliers that they sell their wastepaper to Amata's favored suppliers who would then resell the wastepaper to Federal at a higher price. By 1985, Amata had concentrated the purchases of wastepaper so that the majority of the Sprague mill's wastepaper came from the suppliers making payments [5] to Amata. The cost of the bribes was passed on to Federal through the price charged for wastepaper sold to the Sprague mill. Following Amata's discharge, Federal was able to purchase wastepaper at more favorable prices from a wider source of suppliers.

In connection with Federal's claim under section 1 of the Sherman Act, Federal alleges that Amata entered into conspiracies "between and among" the defendant wastepaper suppliers for the purposes of gaining commercial advantage, fixing prices of wastepaper supplied to the Sprague mill, and restraining competition. In connection with its Robinson-Patman Act claim, Federal alleges that the payments received by Amata were not for bona fide services rendered, but were commercial bribes. In connection with its RICO claim, Federal alleges that Amata "conspired, established, conducted, and participated" with the defendant wastepaper suppliers, both individually and as a group, in enterprises engaged in a pattern of racketeering activity. Federal also alleges that Amata participated in the affairs of Federal through a pattern of racketeering activity. The purposes of the alleged enterprises included fixing the price of wastepaper supplied to [6] the Sprague mill, reducing competition among the suppliers of wastepaper to the Sprague mill, and defrauding Federal. As predicate acts for the RICO count, Federal alleges violations of the federal mail fraud and wire fraud statutes, 18 U.S.C. §§ 1341 and 1343 (1982), and the Hobbs and Travel Acts, 18 U.S.C. §§ 1951 and 1952 (1982 & Supp. IV 1986).

Discussion

I. Sherman Act Count

Federal alleges a violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, which provides in relevant part:

> Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal.

15 U.S.C. § 1 (1982). [2] [7] Defendants assert that Federal has failed to state a claim under section 1 of the Sherman Act. [3] In particular, they argue that Federal has failed to plead a per se violation of the act or an injury to competition, and that it has inadequately alleged a relevant market or a conspiracy.

Although section 1 of the Sherman Act on its face prohibits every restraint of trade, the Supreme Court has long held that section 1 prohibits only unreasonable restraints on trade. See Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 49, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 (1977). "[A] restraint may be adjudged unreasonable [*1381] either because it fits within a class of restraints that has been held to be 'per se' unreasonable, or because it violates what has come to be known as the 'Rule of Reason' . . . ." Federal Trade Comm'n v. Indiana Fed'n of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 106 S. Ct. 2009, 2017, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445 (1986). Under the rule of reason, "the factfinder weighs all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition." Continental T.V., 433 U.S. at 49. A particular restraint on trade is unreasonable if its anticompetitive effects [8] outweigh its procompetitive effects. International Distribution Centers, Inc. v. Walsh Trucking Co., 812 F.2d 786, 793 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 482 U.S. 915, 107 S. Ct. 3188, 96 L. Ed. 2d 676 (1987). Some forms of conduct, however, "because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use. The principle of per se unreasonableness . . . avoids the necessity for an incredibly complicated and prolonged economic investigation into the entire history of the industry involved, as well as related industries, in an effort to determine at large whether a particular restraint has been unreasonable -- an inquiry so often wholly fruitless when undertaken." Northern Pac. Ry. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 (1958). [4] Per se rules of liability involve generalizations about the social utility of certain practices, but as with a claim under the rule of reason, the ultimate issue in a claim of per se liability is whether the challenged conduct is an unreasonable restraint of trade. See Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical [9] Soc'y, 457 U.S. 332, 344 & n.16, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48, 102 S. Ct. 2466 (1982).

A. Impact on Competition is Essential To a Sherman Act Claim

A determination of the reasonableness of defendants' [10] conduct, whether through detailed analysis under the rule of reason or through classification of the conduct as a per se violation of section 1, is only significant if there has been a showing that the defendants' conduct had some negative impact on competition in a relevant market. The rule of reason and the per se rules are simply different approaches to the issue of reasonableness once a restraint on trade has been found, see NCAA v. Board of Regents of the Univ. of Okla., 468 U.S. 85, 103, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70, 104 S. Ct. 2948 (1984), and both approaches presuppose the presence of an anticompetitive impact. It is not necessary to engage in a balancing of pro and anticompetitive effects under the rule of reason if there is "no anticompetitive effect at all." Columbia Broadcasting Sys. v. American Soc'y of Composers, Authors and Publishers, 620 F.2d 930, 934, 939 (2d Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 970, 67 L. Ed. 2d 621, 101 S. Ct. 1491 (1981). "'Proof

---

[2] Standing to sue for violations of the Sherman Act is provided by section 4 of the Clayton Act. Section 4 gives the right to bring a treble damages action to "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws." 15 U.S.C. § 15(a) (1982). The standing doctrine is discussed in more detail infra at part II. B.

[3] Count II of the amended complaint, alleging a violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act, was dismissed without prejudice by stipulation at oral argument, April 9, 1987, and is therefore not considered in this ruling.

[4] At first glance, it might appear that the arrangements alleged by Federal should be treated as per se violations of the Sherman Act since Federal has alleged conspiracies among Amata and the wastepaper suppliers with the purpose "to fix prices and elements of prices for the supply of wastepaper to Federal's Sprague mill," and "[a] horizontal agreement to fix prices is the archetypal example of [a per se violation]." catalano, Inc. v. Target Sales, Inc., 446 U.S. 643, 647, 64 L. Ed. 2d 580, 100 S. Ct. 1925 (1980) (per curiam). "The mere attachment of a per se label" by Federal, however, "does not automatically invoke the per se doctrine." Bunker Ramo Corp. v. United Business Forms, Inc., 713 F.2d 1272, 1284 (7th Cir. 1983). "The defendants' conduct must be analyzed to determine whether it should receive per se treatment." Id. As the text makes clear, because Federal has not alleged facts from which this court can infer a restraint on competition, the defendants' conduct does not amount to a per se violation of section 1.

that the defendant's activities had an impact upon competition in a relevant market is an absolutely essential element of the rule of reason case.'" Hayden Publishing Co. v. Cox Broadcasting Corp., 730 F.2d 64, 69-70 (2d Cir. 1984) (quoting Kaplan [11] v. Burroughs Corp., 611 F.2d 286, 291 (9th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 447 U.S. 924, 65 L. Ed. 2d 1116, 100 S. Ct. 3016 (1980)) (emphasis added). Similarly, although the plaintiff's burden of [*1382] proof is reduced considerably if the defendants' conduct is placed in the per se category, see Northern Pac. Ry., 356 U.S. at 5, it is still essential to allege conduct which results in some restraint on trade in order to maintain a claim of per se liability. "In characterizing . . . conduct under the per se rule, our inquiry must focus on whether the effect and . . . the purpose of the practice are to threaten the proper operation of our predominantly free-market economy -- that is, whether the practice facially appears to be one that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition . . . ." Broadcast Music, Inc. v. CBS, 441 U.S. 1, 19-20, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1, 99 S. Ct. 1551 (1979) (citation and footnote omitted). See also Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 16, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984) ("As a threshold matter there must be a substantial potential for impact on competition in order to justify per se condemnation."). [5] In sum, HN2[] "every antitrust suit should begin by identifying the ways in which a challenged restraint might [12] possibly impair competition. This step occasionally reveals that competition is not implicated at all and thus that the parties' dispute is not an antitrust case." 7 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law para. 1503a at 372 (1986) (footnote omitted). If a plaintiff fails to allege any anticompetitive impact, dismissal is proper. See Bunker Ramo, 713 F.2d at 1285 (dismissing complaint where "plaintiff [had] not alleged any anticompetitive effect arising from the defendants' conduct," and the court could not "infer such an effect from the facts alleged"). To avoid dismissal, Federal "must allege that competition in a specific market has been restrained." 7 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law para. 1502 at 371 (1986) (emphasis added).

Such an examination of the anticompetitive impact that the defendants' alleged conduct might have had requires a definition of the relevant market. "An antitrust policy divorced [13] from market considerations would lack any objective benchmarks," Continental T.V., 433 U.S. at 53 n.21, and "without market analysis, the competitive impact of the challenged restraint cannot be assessed," Business Foods Serv., Inc. v. Food Concepts Corp., 533 F. Supp. 992, 996 (E.D.N.Y. 1982). In Carlo C. Gelardi Corp. v. Miller Brewing Co., 421 F. Supp. 237 (D.N.J. 1976), the court provided a succinct definition of relevant market:

> The relevant market is comprised of a geographic and a product market. The geographic market encompasses the area in which the defendant effectively competes with other individuals or businesses for the distribution of the relevant product. The relevant product market is composed of products that have reasonable interchangeability for the purposes for which they are produced -- price, use and qualities considered.

Id. at 243 (citations omitted).

B. Federal's Allegations of Anticompetitive Impact

Federal's Sherman Act claim must fail because Federal has not alleged facts that establish an injury to competition in a relevant market. Amata's demand for and receipt of bribes and his redirection of the wastepaper supply through cooperative [14] suppliers may have injured Federal, but it does not, standing alone, constitute an injury to competition. Assuming arguendo that the relevant market in this case is the market alleged by Federal, that is the supply of wastepaper to be used in making paperboard by Federal at its Sprague mill, [6] [*1383] competition in that market would arise in two ways. First, there would be competition among suppliers for sales to Federal. Second, [5] Because per se liability is predicated on the existence of a substantial threat to competition, the "per se rules may require considerable inquiry into market conditions before the evidence justifies a presumption of anticompetitive conduct." NCAA, 468 U.S. at 104 n.26.

---

[6] Although the definition of relevant market is most often a question of fact, see Hayden Publishing Co., 730 F.2d at 70 & n. 8, except in unusual circumstances a single purchaser cannot usually constitute a relevant geographical market, see Jayco Sys., Inc. v. Savin Business Mach. Corp., 777 F.2d 306, 319 & n. 43 (5th Cir. 1985), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 816, 107 S. Ct. 73, 93 L. Ed. 2d 30 (1986). Since the court finds that there has been no anticompetitive effect in the market alleged by Federal, however, it is not necessary to consider whether Federal's allegation of a single-purchaser market is insufficient as a matter of law.

there would be Federal's efforts to make purchases on competitive terms with the various suppliers. With respect to each of these aspects of market competition, the requisite impact on competition is lacking.

[15] 1. Anticompetitive Effect on Competition for Sales to Federal

The amended complaint fails to allege an injury to competition with respect to the ability of wastepaper suppliers to compete against each other for sales to Federal. The payment of bribes by suppliers to a purchasing agent does not by itself establish an anticompetitive effect. Although the bribes may have been illegal and unfair methods of competition, their illegality and unfairness does not support an inference that the bribes restrained competition. On the contrary, bribery could have been consistent with intense competition among the suppliers -- some of which resorted to illegal measures to gain an advantage. Indeed, it is ironic that, in addition to its antitrust claims, Federal has brought a claim under the Connecticut Unfair Trade Practices Act, Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. §§ 42-110a to -110q (West 1987) (as amended by 1987 Conn. Acts 297 (Reg. Sess.)). The Sherman Act is intended to protect competition, "whereas 'unfair competition is still competition and the purpose of the law of unfair competition is to impose restraints on that competition.'" Mid-West Underground Storage, Inc. v. Porter, 717 F.2d 493, [16] 497 (10th Cir. 1983) (quoting Northwest Power Prods., Inc. v. Omark Indus., Inc., 576 F.2d 83, 88 (5th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 1116 59 L. Ed. 2d 75, 99 S. Ct. 1021 (1979)). The fact that Amata dealt primarily with suppliers who paid him bribes does not mean that the uncooperative sellers could no longer compete. For example, they might have informed Federal about Amata's behavior. In any event, without allegations of additional facts that demonstrate how those suppliers were precluded from taking competitive actions in order to secure sales with Federal, the amended complaint does not sufficiently allege anticompetitive effect. [7]

HN3[]

[17] In order to establish an anticompetitive effect adequate to avoid dismissal, it is not sufficient to allege an injury to a competitor. See Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977) (antitrust laws designed to protect competition not competitors). Rather, "the inquiry under the rule of reason is directed at the challenged restraint's overall impact on competitive conditions, rather than whether a particular party has been restrained by the conduct at issue." Berman Enter., Inc. v. Local 333, United Marine Div., Int'l Longshoremen's Ass'n, 644 F.2d 930, 937 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 965, 70 L. Ed. 2d 381, 102 S. Ct. 506 (1981). See also NCAA, 468 U.S. at 104 ("Under the Sherman Act the criterion to be used in judging the validity of a restraint on trade is its impact on competition.").

2. Antitrust Injury to Federal

As regards Federal's ability to buy wastepaper on competitive terms, the court finds nothing in the amended complaint which indicates that the kickback arrangements between Amata and some of the wastepaper suppliers foreclosed Federal from negotiating purchases with individual suppliers. Put another way, Federal has not suffered any antitrust injury [18] with respect to its Sherman Act claim. [8] [20] Amata [*1384] did not control Federal,

---

[7] This court also finds that Amata's refusal to purchase from the wastepaper suppliers that were unwilling to pay him bribes does not amount to a refusal to deal as in Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741, 79 S. Ct. 705 (1959), where a refusal to deal was held to be a monopoly forbidden by the antitrust laws. Klor's involved a concerted refusal by "manufacturers, distributors and a retailer" to deal with the petitioner. Id. at 213. Amata's actions, by contrast, amounted at most to "a single trader refusing to deal with another," a scenario that the Court in Klor's distinguished from the group boycott. See id. at 212.

[8] An antitrust injury is an "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 489. Analysis of a plaintiff's antitrust injury is also relevant for determining whether that plaintiff has standing to sue for treble damages under section 4 of the Clayton Act. See Eastway Constr. Corp. v. City of New York, 762 F.2d 243, 250 (2d Cir. 1985) HN4[] (to have standing to bring an antitrust claim plaintiff must suffer an antitrust injury). The concept of antitrust injury and its relation to standing is discussed infra at part II. B.

nor is there any allegation that Amata and the suppliers paying him bribes could have prevented any other supplier from dealing with Federal had Federal attempted to purchase from such other supplier. A fair reading of the amended complaint indicates that the potential existed for Federal to obtain competitive prices from a wide range of suppliers. Of course, Amata's disloyalty and Federal's ignorance thereof resulted in depriving Federal from actually obtaining the benefits of competition among wastepaper suppliers. Nevertheless, there is no allegation that Federal could not have obtained the benefits of competition had it tried to do so. Indeed, as mentioned above, when Federal terminated Amata it did gain the benefits of a competitive market. When the only source of its injury is a disloyal employee, a plaintiff cannot complain of an antitrust injury in order to elevate claims based on an employee's breach of fiduciary duty into Sherman Act claims. The absence of an antitrust injury is fatal to Federal's section 1 claim because in this case, where the alleged misconduct involved several suppliers selling to [19] one purchaser, the lack of an antitrust injury to the purchaser reveals that the defendant's activities did not have any anticompetitive effect at all in the relevant market. If a purchaser like Federal has the opportunity to buy from competing sellers at competitive prices, that purchaser cannot make the necessary showing that competition has been restrained. Since Federal cannot establish an "impact on competitive conditions," Berman Enter., 644 F.2d at 937, defendants' conduct does not amount to a Sherman Act violation under the rule of reason or the per se rules. [9]

[21] [*1385] In sum, Federal has alleged nothing more than commercial bribery. The amended complaint lacks additional allegations that might support a Sherman Act claim. [10] [22] Other courts have also reached the

---

The analysis of "antitrust injury" that this court undertakes with respect to Federal's Sherman Act claim should be distinguished from the "antitrust injury" analysis with respect to Federal's Robinson-Patman Act claim. As explained in the text infra, under section 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act there is no requirement that a plaintiff allege or prove antitrust injury or anticompetitive effect in order to establish a prima facie violation of section 2(c). The antitrust injury requirement for Federal's Robinson-Patman Act claim is imposed solely by common law standing doctrine. Moreover, since an antitrust injury is an "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent," Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 489, an antitrust injury for purposes of a claim arising under section 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act is different from an antitrust injury for purposes of a claim arising under section 1 of the Sherman Act. Section 1 of the Sherman Act is intended to protect free competition, NCAA, 468 U.S. at 104 & n.27, so that a plaintiff's Sherman Act injury must reflect the anticompetitive consequences of the defendants' conduct, see Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 489. Section 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act, on the other hand, was enacted to close a loophole in the price discrimination laws. See infra part II. B. To establish antitrust injury for purposes of standing to sue for a violation of section 2(c), a plaintiff must show that the violation "adversely affected his ability to compete with favored competitors." World of Sleep, Inc. v. La-Z-Boy Chair Co., 756 F.2d 1467, 1480 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 823, 88 L. Ed. 2d 63, 106 S. Ct. 77 (1985).

[9] There is no restraint in this case because the way was open to Federal to do business with individual suppliers. The fate of the blanket-license arrangement examined by the Supreme Court in Broadcast Music and on remand by the Second Circuit Court of Appeals in Columbia Broadcasting System provides a more sophisticated example of this concept. The blanket licenses at issue gave the licensees "the right to perform any and all of the compositions owned by the members or affiliates [of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers and Broadcast Music, Inc.] as often as the licensees desired for a stated term." Broadcast Music, 441 U.S. at 5. In Broadcast Music, the Court refused to apply per se analysis to the blanket-license arrangement. Id. at 24. The Court observed that "the individual composers and authors have neither agreed not to sell individually in any other market nor use the blanket license to mask price fixing." Id. at 23-24. As the Court later commented in Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S. at 355, "although there was little competition among individual composers for their separate compositions, the blanket-license arrangement did not place any restraint on the right of any individual copyright owner to sell his own compositions separately to any buyer at any price." On remand, the court of appeals examined the blanket-license arrangement under the rule of reason. Columbia Broadcasting Sys., 620 F.2d at 932. After observing that the plaintiff CBS had never attempted to purchase songs from individual copyright owners, the court "agree[d] with the defendants that if that opportunity [to purchase from the individual owners] is fully available, and if the copyright owners retain unimpaired independence to set competitive prices for individual licenses to a licensee willing to deal with them, the blanket license is not a restraint of trade." Id. at 936. These cases demonstrate that anticompetitive effect is not to be blithely assumed.

[10] The fact that the wastepaper suppliers were able to pass the cost of bribing Amata on to Federal and charge an excessive price for raw wastepaper does not mean there has been a restraint of trade for purposes of the Sherman Act. Presumably, the suppliers were able to pass these costs on to Federal because of Amata's willingness to bind Federal to purchase contracts that were not in Federal's interest in return for bribes and kickbacks. While it is true that every purchase negotiated by Amata "restrained" trade in that it involved the "fixity" of a price, the same is true of any contract between a buyer and a seller, and the conclusion that HN5[] commercial bribery, standing alone, does not establish a violation of the Sherman Act. See Bunker Ramo, 713 F.2d at 1275, 1284-85; [11] Calnetics Corp. v. Volkswagen of America, Inc., 532 F.2d 674, 687 (9th Cir.) (per curiam), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 940, 50 L. Ed. 2d 309, 97 S. Ct. 355 (1976). Count I of the amended complaint must therefore be dismissed.

II. Robinson-Patman Act Count

In Count III of the amended complaint, Federal alleges that defendants violated HN6[] [23] section 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act, which provides that:

> It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to pay or grant, or to receive or accept, anything of value as a commission, brokerage, or other compensation, or any allowance or discount in lieu thereof, except for services rendered in connection with the sale or purchase of goods, wares, or merchandise, either to the other party to such transaction or to an agent, representative, or other intermediary therein where such intermediary is acting in fact for or in behalf, or is subject to the direct or indirect control, of any party to such transaction other than the person by whom such compensation is so granted or paid.

15 U.S.C. § 13(c) (1982). Defendants claim that Count III should be dismissed on the grounds that Federal has failed to allege an anticompetitive injury. The main thrust of defendants' argument is that an anticompetitive injury is both a necessary element of a violation of section 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act and a prerequisite to standing under section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15(a) (1982). Federal responds that it does not have to allege anticompetitive [24] injury to sue under section 2(c), but if anticompetitive injury is required, it has alleged such injury.

A. Establishing a Prima Facie Violation Of Section 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act

The language of section 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act is broad enough to encompass the alleged payments to Amata [*1386] from the wastepaper suppliers. See Seaboard Supply Co. v. Congoleum Corp., 770 F.2d 367, 372 (3d Cir. 1985) (citing cases that have applied section 2(c) to schemes of commercial bribery). Payments were made to Amata, an agent of the buyer Federal, that were not for services rendered. [12] To require Federal to make additional allegations of anticompetitive effect in order to establish a prima facie violation of section 2(c) would be to impose a common law limitation on the broad language enacted by Congress. At least a few courts appear to have held that in order for payments to constitute a violation of section 2(c) the payments must have an anticompetitive effect. See e.g., Allen Pen Co. v. Springfield Photo Mount Co., 653 F.2d 17, 25 (1st Cir. 1981) (plaintiff must show that payments give a favored buyer a competitive advantage); Bunker Ramo Corp. v. Cywan, [25] 511 F. Supp. 531, 533 (N.D. Ill. 1981) (plaintiff must allege "competitive injury of the type which the Robinson-Patman Act was designed to protect against"). This court finds, however, that long-standing Second Circuit precedent and Supreme Court dicta refute any claim that competitive injury is an element of a violation of section 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act.

Sherman Act has never been interpreted to impose a general prohibition on commercial contracts. See NCAA, 468 U.S. at 98; United States v. Topco Assocs., 405 U.S. 596, 606, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515, 92 S. Ct. 1126 (1972).

[11] The facts of Bunker Ramo are similar to the facts in this case. In Bunker Ramo, the plaintiff alleged that one of its employees and a supplier had been engaged in a scheme in which the supplier submitted false invoices for goods never received by the plaintiff. The employee filled out false delivery receipts so that the plaintiff paid the supplier for the goods never received, and in return the employee received bribes from the supplier. 713 F.2d at 1275. The Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals reversed the district court's denial of the defendants' motion to dismiss the plaintiff's Sherman Act claim. The court found that bribing an agent as part of a scheme to defraud -- without allegations of additional behavior by the defendants that might give rise to an antitrust violation -- did not constitute a per se violation of the Sherman Act and was deficient under the rule of reason for lack of any anticompetitive effect. Id. at 1284-85. Although Bunker Ramo involved only one supplier, the logic of Bunker Ramo applies equally well to this case.

[12] The "services rendered" defense has been limited to services performed by the seller's own broker. Hansen, Robinson-Patman Law: A Review and Analysis, 51 Fordham L. Rev. 1113, 1156 (1983).

In Biddle Purchasing Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 96 F.2d 687 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 305 U.S. 634, 83 L. Ed. 407, 59 S. Ct. 101 (1938), the court of appeals was confronted with the argument that > section 2(c) . . ., under which this proceeding is brought, is to be construed in the light of section 2(a), and that, so construed, the payment or receipt of the brokerage is illegal only when it has such effect upon competition as is provided in section 2(a). The argument is that the receipt of [payments] here would be illegal only if it restricts competition or restrains trade or injures a competitor.

Id. at 690. [13] [27] The court rejected this argument [26] on the grounds that "section 2(c) contains no classification provision nor is there anything in it which would justify the conclusion that it would not be uniformly applied." Id. The court also held that the lack of a competitive injury requirement did not render section 2(c) unconstitutional. Id. at 690, 692. As the court of appeals later commented in Grand Union Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 300 F.2d 92, 99 (2d Cir. 1962), section 2(c) defines conduct that is per se illegal. As such, a plaintiff does not have to prove injury to competition. Id. The conclusion reached in Biddle is also supported by dicta in Federal Trade Comm'n v. Simplicity Pattern Co., 360 U.S. 55, 3 L. Ed. 2d 1079, 79 S. Ct. 1005 (1959). In Simplicity Pattern, the Court contrasted sections 2(c), (d), and (e) with section 2(a). Id. at 65. "Unlike § 2(a)," the Court wrote, "[neither § 2(c), (d), nor (e)] requires, as proof of a prima facie violation, a showing that the illicit practice has had an injurious or destructive effect on competition." Id. [14]

B. Standing

Section 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act defines certain conduct as illegal. It does not, however, create a private right of action to sue for damages caused by violations of the act. Private plaintiff standing to sue for treble damages for violations of the Robinson-Patman Act is provided by section 4 of the Clayton Act. [15] See Genesco, Inc. v. T. Kakiuchi & Co., 815 F.2d 840, 853 (2d Cir. 1987). HN7[] In order for Federal to maintain a Robinson-Patman Act claim, [*1387] Federal must demonstrate that it has standing under section 4 of the Clayton Act and that it satisfies the common law tests for standing that have been developed to limit the scope of section 4.

If Federal does not have standing, its Robinson-Patman Act claim must be dismissed despite the fact that it has alleged conduct by the defendants that violates the act. Even though, as Biddle [28] and Simplicity Pattern demonstrate, the defendants' conduct might support a Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order, [16] an additional inquiry into standing is necessary if Federal's claim for damages is to survive dismissal. For purposes of standing analysis, cases like Biddle and Simplicity Pattern are irrelevant. Those cases involved Federal Trade Commission enforcement actions in which the standing limitations on private plaintiff claims do not apply. See Lomar Wholesale Grocery, Inc. v. Dieter's Gourmet Foods, Inc., 824 F.2d 582, 600 (8th Cir. 1987) (for purposes of standing analysis under section 4 of the Clayton Act, "citations to Federal Trade Commission enforcement actions are clearly inapposite").

Although standing requirements impose several hurdles for plaintiffs, "the single most striking development in the law of private antitrust [29] enforcement . . . is the 'antitrust injury' concept associated with the Supreme Court's

---

[13] Section 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act prohibits price discrimination "where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with the customers of either of them." 15 U.S.C. § 13(a) (1982).

[14] The Second Circuit is not alone in refusing to graft a competitive injury requirement onto section 2(c). See, e.g., Seaboard Supply, 770 F.2d at 372; Metrix Warehouse, Inc. v. Daimler-Benz Aktiengesellschaft, 716 F.2d 245, 247 (4th Cir. 1983).

[15] Codified as amended at 15 U.S.C. § 15(a) (1982).

[16] 15 U.S.C. § 45 (1982) empowers the Federal Trade Commission to order persons to cease and desist from using unfair methods of competition. Unfair methods "encompass[es] . . . practices that violate the Sherman Act and the other antitrust laws." Indiana Fed'n of Dentists, 476 U.S. at 454, 106 S. Ct. at 2016.

Brunswick decision . . . ." P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law para. 335.1 at 224 (Supp. 1986). The reference is to Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977), in which the Court examined a petitioner's attempt to sue for treble damages pursuant to section 4 of the Clayton Act for injury resulting from a merger in violation of section 7 of the Clayton Act. [17] To recover damages under section 4, the Court held that the petitioner had to do more than prove that the defendant violated section 7. Id. at 486. In addition to proving a violation of the substantive antitrust law, "plaintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation." Id. at 489 (emphasis in original).

The Brunswick analysis has been applied to violations [30] of the Robinson-Patman Act, and it governs Federal's claim for treble damages. In J. Truett Payne Co. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 451 U.S. 557, 68 L. Ed. 2d 442, 101 S. Ct. 1923 (1981), the petitioner alleged a violation of section 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act. [18] In its analysis of the petitioner's claim, the Court noted that "our decision here is virtually governed by our reasoning in [Brunswick]." Id. at 562. The petitioner had to prove more than just a violation of section 2(a), "since such proof establishes only that injury may result." Id. (quoting Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 486). "To recover treble damages . . . a plaintiff must make some showing of actual injury attributable to something the antitrust laws were designed to prevent." Id. The Court remanded the case to the court of appeals to determine whether the petitioner had produced sufficient evidence to support a finding of a violation of section 2(a). Id. at 568. If the court of appeals determined on remand that respondent violated section 2(a), it would then have to decide whether the petitioner had antitrust standing. Id. In the final paragraph of the opinion, the Court gave the court of appeals the following instruction: [31] "we emphasize that even if there has been a violation of the Robinson-Patman Act, petitioner is not excused [*1388] from its burden of proving antitrust injury and damages." Id. Although J. Truett Payne involved section 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act, there is no reason why its analysis should not also apply to claims arising out of section 2(c) since in both instances the right to treble damages is granted by section 4 of the Clayton Act. Cf. World of Sleep, Inc. v. La-Z-Boy Chair Co., 756 F.2d 1467, 1480 (10th Cir.) (holding that J. Truett Payne is "equally applicable to a plaintiff seeking damages for a violation of section 2(e) [of the Robinson-Patman Act] because such damages are also governed by section 4 of the Clayton Act, the damages provision construed in J. Truett Payne"), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 823, 88 L. Ed. 2d 63, 106 S. Ct. 77 (1985).

J. Truett Payne makes it clear that Federal must allege an antitrust injury in order to have standing to sue for treble damages. Defining antitrust injury for purposes of claims arising out of section 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act is more difficult. Keeping in mind that an antitrust injury is an "injury of the [32] type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful," Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 489, however, it is possible to formulate a meaningful test for antitrust injury in section 2(c) cases. "The Robinson-Patman Act was enacted in 1936 to curb and prohibit all devices by which large buyers gained discriminatory preferences over smaller ones by virtue of their greater purchasing power." Federal Trade Comm'n v. Henry Broch & Co., 363 U.S. 166, 168, 4 L. Ed. 2d 1124, 80 S. Ct. 1158 (1960). Section 2(c) was added to supplement section 2(a)'s prohibition on price discrimination and was primarily intended to attack indirect price discrimination through the use of "brokerage" payments to the agents of large buyers. The agents would pass the payments on to the buyers, giving the buyers an effective price reduction without violating section 2(a). See id. at 168-69, 171. Even though there is evidence in the legislative history that Congress may have additionally intended for section 2(c) to prohibit commercial bribery, see id. at 169 n.6, it appears that the main purpose of section 2(c) was to close the "brokerage" loophole in the laws regulating price discrimination. [33] See id. at 171 (stating that section 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act "was enacted by Congress because § 2(a) was not considered adequate to deal with abuses of the brokerage function"). See also Fuchs Sugars & Syrups, Inc. v. Amstar Corp., 447 F. Supp. 867, 881-82 (S.D.N.Y. 1978) (discussing the legislative history of section 2(c)), rev'd on other grounds, 602 F.2d 1025 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 917, 62 L. Ed. 2d 172, 100 S. Ct. 232 (1979). In light of the primary purpose of section

---

[17] Codified as amended at 15 U.S.C. § 18 (1982 & Supp. IV 1986).

[18] See supra note 13.

2(c), this court believes that the antitrust injury requirement of Brunswick and J. Truett Payne requires a plaintiff suing for treble damages for violations of section 2(c) to show "that the probable affect of the discrimination would be to allow the 'favored competitor to draw sales or profits from him, the unfavored competitor.'" Best Brands Beverage, Inc. v. Falstaff Brewing Corp., 842 F.2d 578 at 585 (2d Cir. 1987) (quoting J. Truett Payne, 451 U.S. at 569-70 (Powell, J., dissenting in part)).

Professors Areeda and Hovenkamp reach a similar conclusion in their analysis of J. Truett Payne. The plaintiff in J. Truett Payne, a Chrysler automobile dealer, had challenged [34] a Chrysler incentive program that paid bonuses to dealers who achieved certain sales quota. See 451 U.S. at 559-60. As part of its holding, the Court rejected the rule of "automatic damages" under which a plaintiff who proves a violation of section 2(a) is automatically entitled to damages in the amount of the price discrimination. Instead, as described above, the Court held that a plaintiff must make an additional showing of antitrust injury before he can recover damages for a violation of section 2(a). Id. at 561-63. According to Professors Areeda and Hovenkamp's "simplest reading of this decision," the automatic damage measure was defective because "[it] did not reflect any actual injury to the plaintiff, for the bonuses received by his rivals were not shown to have [*1389] been translated into any retail price cuts (or other activities) by his rivals that took business away from him." P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law para. 335.2c at 233-34 (Supp. 1986).

Applying these standards to this case, Federal's Robinson-Patman claim must be dismissed for lack of standing. Although Federal contends that it has suffered an "anticompetitive [35] injury," the facts alleged in the amended complaint do not support a finding of antitrust injury sufficient to confer standing to sue for damages for violations of section 2(c). With respect to injury, Federal alleges (1) that the wastepaper suppliers passed the cost of bribing Amata on to Federal so that Federal paid more than it would otherwise have paid in the absence of the payments to Amata and (2) that the cost of wastepaper supplied to Federal's Sprague mill dropped after Amata's termination. The most this court is willing to infer from those allegations is that Federal's profits might have been lowered as a result of the bribes paid to Amata -- and the court cannot even be certain about reduced profits since Federal may have been able to pass the additional cost of wastepaper through to its customers. This court is unwilling to infer from the allegations in the amended complaint that the payments to Amata and the increased cost of wastepaper resulted in a price discrimination that disadvantaged Federal with respect to its competitors. [19] [37] There is no allegation that other manufacturers of recycled paperboard were purchasing wastepaper from the same suppliers at a lower cost [36] or that the alleged arrangements resulted in a transfer of profits from Federal to one of Federal's competitors. Nor is there any allegation that the higher cost of wastepaper supplied to the Sprague mill caused Federal to lose sales of the recycled paperboard manufactured from raw wastepaper or that the payments to Amata and the resulting overcharge to Federal allowed Federal's rivals in the recycled paperboard business to undercut Federal's prices and thereby increase their sales volume at Federal's expense. [20] Once again, Federal

---

[19] Federal cites Grace v. E.J. Kozin Co., 538 F.2d 170, 174 (7th Cir. 1976), for the proposition that whenever bribery of a purchasing agent results in a higher price to the buyer there is injury "entitled to redress under Section 2(c)." Federal's reliance on that case is inapposite for two reasons. First, the case is easily distinguishable. Grace involved bribes paid by the defendant, a wholesaler of seafood, to a purchasing agent of another wholesaler, the plaintiff, in order to induce the plaintiff to purchase seafood from the defendant at unreasonably high prices. Id. at 172. Moreover, the two wholesalers shared some of the same customers. Id. Thus, the plaintiff and defendant were direct competitors in the same consumer market. Under those facts, it is possible to infer that the higher cost of seafood that the plaintiff paid as a result of the kickback scheme disadvantaged the plaintiff in its ability to compete with the defendant. In this case, however, Federal and the wastepaper suppliers do not compete, see infra note 20, and they do not share any of the same customers. Second, and more importantly, the court in Grace, which was decided before Brunswick and J. Truett Payne, appears to adopt the automatic measure of damages that the Supreme Court rejected in J. Truett Payne. See Grace, 538 F.2d at 174 (upholding the district court's award of damages in the amount of "commissions" paid to the unfaithful purchasing agent). Indeed, Grace is cited by the Court in J. Truett Payne as a case approving the automatic damages theory. See 451 U.S. at 561 n.2. In light of the recent Supreme Court developments in the law of standing, it would be improper to rely on Grace.

[20] In its briefs, Federal argues that it competes with the defendant wastepaper suppliers because -- to the extent that the defendant suppliers went along with Amata and bought wastepaper from uncooperative suppliers and resold it to Federal -- they competed with Federal to make purchases of wastepaper. This argument does not withstand close analysis and cannot provide has tried to cast commercial torts in the language of antitrust in order to have a chance at treble damages. As with its Sherman Act claim, however, the facts alleged in the amended [*1390] complaint simply do not amount to an antitrust violation.

III. Rule 9(b)

Defendants contend that the amended complaint fails to satisfy the pleading requirements of Rule 9(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. HN8[] Rule 9(b) provides that "in all averments [38] of fraud or mistake, the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake shall be stated with particularity." Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). "Malice, intent, knowledge, and other condition of mind," however, "may be averred generally." Id. Defendants argue (1) that the requirements of 9(b) apply to the entire complaint since "the allegations of conduct comprising the purported 'fraudulent schemes' are incorporated into all counts" and (2) that the entire amended complaint should be dismissed for failure to plead with sufficient particularity. Federal, on the other hand, argues that application of 9(b) is limited to Count IV (RICO) and Count VII (fraud by agent) since those are the only counts "that allege fraud" and that Rule 9(b) is satisfied with respect to those two counts.

Rule 9(b) must be satisfied with respect to a particular count whenever fraud is a necessary element of that count. See In re LILCO Sec. Litig., 625 F. Supp. 1500, 1503 (E.D.N.Y. 1986). If "fraud is not required for a [] claim, [that claim] need not be pleaded pursuant to Rule 9(b)." Id. Despite defendants' argument to the contrary, the mere fact that the transactions alleged in the amended complaint give [39] rise to some claims grounded in fraud does not mean that all the claims rising out of the same transactions are subject to 9(b).

To the extent that the RICO count is based on predicate acts of mail and wire fraud, it must satisfy Rule 9(b). See Andreo II, 660 F. Supp. at 136. The sufficiency of the RICO pleading is discussed below. Count VII, alleging fraud by an agent, is also clearly covered by Rule 9(b). [21] The only other counts that might arguably trigger Rule 9(b) are Counts X and XI. Count X, based on the Connecticut Unfair Trade Practices Act (CUTPA), Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. §§ 42-110a to 110q (West 1987) (as amended by 1987 Conn. Acts 297 (Reg. Sess.)), alleges that the wastepaper suppliers engaged in "unfair and deceptive acts" in violation of section 42-110b. Fraud, however, is not a necessary element for a claim under the CUTPA, which is broader in scope than traditional common law remedies for fraud. See Bailey Employment Sys., Inc. v. Hahn, 545 F. Supp. 62, 66-67 (D. Conn. 1982), aff'd, 723 F.2d 895 (2d Cir. 1983); Hinchliffe v. American Motors Corp., 184 Conn. 607, 616-17, 440 A.2d 810, 815-16 (1981). Since Federal does not need to prove fraud in order [40] to recover under Count X, Federal does not need to plead Count X pursuant to Rule 9(b). Count XI alleges that the wastepaper suppliers breached a contractual duty to deal in good faith. HN9[] Under Connecticut law, a breach of good faith requires only a showing that a party was not "honest in fact." Funding Consultants, Inc. v. Aetna Casualty & Sur. Co., 187 Conn. 637, 643, 447 A.2d 1163, 1165-66 (1982). That is a much lighter burden than is required for establishing fraud. See Miller v. Appleby, 183 Conn. 51, 54-55, 438 A.2d 811, 813 (1981) (listing the elements for an action in fraud). Again, since Federal need not prove fraud in order to recover under its breach of contract claim, Count XI need not be pleaded pursuant to Rule 9(b).

IV. RICO Count

A. Sufficiency of Pleading of Predicate Acts

Defendants argue that the RICO count is inadequately pleaded under Rule 9(b). Without specifying under which subsection it is proceeding, Federal alleges a violation of section 1962 of RICO. There are two relevant subsections [41] of section 1962 which will be considered in turn.

---

the basis for finding that Federal has standing. The defendant suppliers, when they bought wastepaper from uncooperative sellers, bought the wastepaper in order to resell it to Federal. They were acting as brokers. Federal, however, has not made any allegation that it has been injured in its ability to compete with the defendant suppliers in the brokerage business. All that Federal has alleged is that it purchases wastepaper to recycle it into paperboard. Since Federal has not alleged that it brokers wastepaper, it cannot argue that it has been injured in its ability to compete in the wastepaper brokerage business.

[21] Since Count VII is directed only at Amata, who has not moved to have that count dismissed, the sufficiency of Count VII is not at issue in this motion.

1. Section 1962(c)

HN10[] Section 1962(c) of RICO provides:

> [*1391] It shall be unlawful for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity or collection of unlawful debt.

18 U.S.C. § 1962(c) (1982). Racketeering activity is defined to include specific predicate offenses, including mail fraud indictable under 18 U.S.C. § 1341 and wire fraud indictable under 18 U.S.C. § 1343. The predicate acts of mail and wire fraud must be pleaded in conformity with the particularity requirements of Rule 9(b). Andreo II, 660 F. Supp. at 1368. [22]

The mail and wire fraud statutes prohibit "everything designed to defraud." McNally v. United States, 483 U.S. 350, 107 S. Ct. 2875, 2880, 97 L. Ed. 2d 292 (1987) (quoting Durland v. United States, 161 U.S. 306, 313, 40 L. Ed. 709, 16 S. Ct. 508 (1896)). [23] HN11[] The Supreme Court has defined [42] the elements of fraud to be "(1) a false representation (2) in reference to a material fact (3) made with knowledge of its falsity (4) and with the intent to deceive (5) with action taken in reliance upon the representation." Pence v. United States, 316 U.S. 332, 338, 86 L. Ed. 1510, 62 S. Ct. 1080 (1942). Fraud is not limited to affirmative misrepresentations, but may also be proved "through the defendant's non-action or non-disclosure of material facts intended to create a false and fraudulent representation." United States v. O'Malley, 707 F.2d 1240, 1247 (11th Cir. 1983).

Rule 9(b) requires that each element of fraud listed above be pleaded with particularity, except for knowledge and intent which "may be averred generally." Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). A complaint must specifically allege the facts that amount to fraud. Ross v. A.H. Robins Co., 607 F.2d 545, 557 (2d Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 446 U.S. 946, 64 L. Ed. 2d 802, 100 S. Ct. 2175 (1980); Segal v. Gordon, 467 F.2d 602, 607 (2d Cir. 1972). [43] It will not suffice to merely quote language taken from the mail and wire fraud statutes such as scheme to "defraud." See Ross, 607 F.2d at 557. If a claim is based on an alleged failure to inform the plaintiff of a material fact, the complaint should also allege the basis for the defendant's duty to disclose. Nordlicht v. New York Telephone Co., 617 F. Supp. 220, 228 (S.D.N.Y. 1985), aff'd, 799 F.2d 859 (2d Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 1055, 107 S. Ct. 929, 93 L. Ed. 2d 981 (1987). Although allegations of knowledge of falsity and intent to defraud are not subject to the requirements of Rule 9(b), plaintiffs are not relieved of their burden to plead a factual basis for those allegations. Plaintiffs must still specifically plead events from which one can infer intent and knowledge. Connecticut Nat'l Bank v. Fluor Corp., 808 F.2d 957, 962 (2d Cir. 1987). [24]

---

[22] Federal has also alleged other predicate acts which are not covered by 9(b) and which are sufficient to support a RICO claim. See infra note 25.

[23] Although McNally dealt with mail fraud, case law interpreting the mail fraud statute also applies to the wire fraud statute. United States v. Giovengo, 637 F.2d 941, 944 (3d Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 1032, 68 L. Ed. 2d 228, 101 S. Ct. 1743 (1981).

[24] The case law has elaborated on the specificity requirements of Rule 9(b). When factual allegations are based on information and belief, "the complaint must set forth the source of the information and the reasons for the belief." Andreo v. Friedlander, Gaines, Cohen, Rosenthal & Rosenberg, 651 F. Supp. 877, 880 (D. Conn. 1986) [hereinafter Andreo I]. In addition, "fraud allegations ought to specify the time, place, speaker, and content of the alleged misrepresentation." DiVittorio v. Equidyne Extractive Indus., Inc., 822 F.2d 1242, 1247 (2d Cir. 1987). At the same time, however, Rule 9(b) does not require a plaintiff to set forth a complete history of every transaction. Accord General Accident Ins. Co. of Amer. v. Fidelity and Deposit Co. of Ind., 598 F. Supp. 1223, 1232 (E.D. Pa. 1984) ("If the fraud allegedly involved a course of conduct over an extended period of time or series of transactions, it is not necessary to recite, in detail, the facts of each transaction of the fraudulent scheme."). Nonetheless, to survive a motion to dismiss and to satisfy Rule 9(b)'s purpose of providing fair notice to defendants, protecting defendants from unwarranted harm to reputation, and reducing the frequency of strike suits, see DiVittorio, 822 F.2d at 1247 (discussing the purpose of Rule 9(b)), a plaintiff must specify at least one occasion of fraud. Additional instances of fraud can be elicited with the tools of discovery.

[44] [*1392] Applying the foregoing principles to the present case, the court believes that Federal's amended complaint should not be dismissed for failure to comply with Rule 9(b). Although the facts alleged are not directed to the five elements of fraud, the arrangements described in the amended complaint support an inference of facts that would satisfy the elements of a fraud claim. At this stage of the proceedings, it would be putting form before substance if defendants' 9(b) motions were granted immediately. Rather, the court grants Federal 20 days in which to amend the amended complaint to add allegations of specificity that clearly describe each element of fraud. Cf. Devaney v. Chester, 813 F.2d 566, 569 (2d Cir. 1987) (when a complaint is dismissed for failure to comply with Rule 9(b), leave to replead should be freely granted unless there is a legitimate reason for denial). [25]

[45] 2. Section 1962(d)

Along with a violation of section 1962(c), Federal appears to allege a conspiracy to violate RICO. HN12[] Section 1962(d) provides:

> It shall be unlawful for any person to conspire to violate any of the provisions . . . of this section.

18 U.S.C. § 1962(d) (1982). To be liable under this section, the defendant "'must have objectively manifested an agreement to participate, directly or indirectly, in the affairs of an enterprise through the commission of two or more predicate acts.'" Andreo I, 651 F. Supp. at 883 (quoting Laterza v. American Broadcasting Co., 581 F. Supp. 408, 413 (S.D.N.Y. 1984)). See also United States v. Ruggiero, 726 F.2d 913, 921 (2d Cir.) (conviction for RICO conspiracy requires that the "defendant himself at least agreed to commit two or more predicate crimes"), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 831, 83 L. Ed. 2d 60, 105 S. Ct. 118 (1984). "The agreement proscribed by section 1962(d)," however, "is conspiracy to participate in a charged enterprise's affairs, not conspiracy to commit predicate acts." United States v. Persico, 832 F.2d 705, 713 (2d Cir. 1987).

As this court has previously noted, "although Rule 9(b) does not apply to claims of conspiracy because it [46] is not one of the averments enumerated in the Rule, plaintiffs must nevertheless provide some factual basis for the legal conclusion that a conspiracy existed." Andreo I, 651 F. Supp. at 883 (citations omitted). As with a claim of fraud tested under 9(b), conclusory allegations are insufficient. Id.

Under this standard, the amended complaint does not state a claim against any of the defendants for conspiracy to violate RICO. With respect to each defendant wastepaper supplier and the suppliers as a group, the amended complaint alleges that "Amata conspired, established, conducted, and participated, with [such defendant suppliers], in an enterprise engaged in a pattern of racketeering activity which affected interstate commerce." It then gives the goals and purposes of the conspiracies and states that such conspiracies were carried out through "repeated acts" in violation of [*1393] 18 U.S.C. §§ 1341, 1343, and 1951. This claim must fail because the amended complaint does not allege "any objective manifestation of an agreement," and it does not "set forth the facts upon which the conspiracy claim is based." See Andreo I, 651 F. Supp at 883. The allegations of a RICO conspiracy are [47] merely conclusory allegations.

---

[25] To the extent that Federal's RICO claim is brought under section 1962(c) and relies on predicate acts other than mail and wire fraud, amendment is not necessary. In particular, Federal has alleged a violation of "the Hobbs Act, Title 18, United States Code, Section 1951 et seq." Presumably, Federal means 18 U.S.C. § 1952, which prohibits interstate travel or the use of interstate facilities, including the mail, to "promote, manage, establish, carry on, or facilitate the promotion, management, establishment, or carrying on, of any unlawful activity." 18 U.S.C. § 1952(a) (1982). Unlawful activity includes commercial bribery prohibited by state law, Perrin v. United States, 444 U.S. 37, 50, 62 L. Ed. 2d 199, 100 S. Ct. 311 (1979), and in Connecticut commercial bribery is a crime, see Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. §§ 53a-160 and -161 (West 1985). The court notes that section 53a-160 requires that the bribes be made with "intent to influence [the employee's] conduct in relation to his employer's or principal's affairs." Id. § 53a-160. As noted in the text supra, the specificity requirements of Rule 9(b) do not apply to allegations of intent. Nonetheless, Federal must still plead facts which give rise to a strong inference of intent. See Connecticut Nat'l Bank, 808 F.2d at 962. The court believes that Federal's allegations that bribes were paid by the defendant wastepaper suppliers to a purchasing agent of Federal are sufficient to establish intent on the part of the suppliers to influence the affairs of Federal.

B. Sufficiency of Pattern of Racketeering and Enterprise Allegations

1. The Pattern Requirement

Defendants contend that Federal has failed to allege a "pattern of racketeering." [26] Defendants cite several cases for the proposition that a pattern of racketeering is limited to "a series of separate and discrete ongoing criminal episodes or schemes." See e.g., Superior Oil Co. v. Fulmer, 785 F.2d 252, 257 (8th Cir. 1986) (more required in order to establish a pattern of racketeering activity). Such cases have relied on the now famous footnote 14 in Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex. Co., 473 U.S. 479, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346, 105 S. Ct. 3275 (1984), in which the Court quoted a Senate Report for the proposition that "pattern of racketeering activity" requires "continuity plus relationship." Id. at 496 n.14 (emphasis in original) (quoting S. Rep. No. 91-617, p. 158 (1969)). See also, e.g., Superior Oil, 785 F.2d at 257 (citing footnote 14).

[48] Whatever may be the law in other circuits, however, it is now settled that in the Second Circuit a RICO plaintiff need not plead or prove the existence of multiple schemes of criminality in order to establish a pattern of racketeering activity. See United States v. Ianniello, 808 F.2d 184, 192 (2d Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 483 U.S. 1006, 107 S. Ct. 3230, 97 L. Ed. 2d 736 (1987). See also Beck v. Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co., 820 F.2d 46, 51 (2d Cir. 1987) (stating that Ianniello "expressly rejected a multiple episodes requirement"), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 1005, 108 S. Ct. 698, 98 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1987). According to Ianniello, a pattern of racketeering is established whenever "a person commits at least two acts that have the common purpose of furthering a continuing criminal enterprise with which that person is associated." Ianniello, 808 F.2d at 192. See also Andreo II, 660 F. Supp. at 1369-70 (applying Ianniello). [27]

[49] This court finds that Federal has alleged a pattern of racketeering under the standard set forth in Ianniello. Federal's amended complaint pleads at least two related acts of commercial bribery through the use of interstate facilities in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1952 in furtherance of a single scheme to bribe Federal's employee in order to obtain commercial advantage and "defraud" Federal. That is sufficient to satisfy the pleading requirement for pattern of racketeering activity. See Beck, 820 F.2d at 51.

2. The Enterprise Requirement

HN14[] In the Second Circuit, the requirements of relatedness and continuity referred to by the Supreme Court in Sedima are addressed in the concept of enterprise under section 1962(c). "Enterprise" is defined by statute to include both legal entities such [*1394] as corporations as well as individuals "associated in fact." 18 U.S.C. § 1961(4) (1982). The latter consists of "'a group of persons associated together for a common purpose of engaging in a course of conduct' and 'is proved by evidence of an ongoing organization, formal or informal, and by evidence that the various associates function as a continuing unit.'" Ianniello, 808 F.2d at 191 [50] (quoting United States v. Turkette, 452 U.S. 576, 583, 69 L. Ed. 2d 246, 101 S. Ct. 2524 (1981)). Relatedness and continuity are provided for through the requirement that a RICO enterprise be "a continuing operation" and the predicate acts be "related to the common purpose." Id.

---

[26] HN13[] 18 U.S.C. § 1961(5) (1982) states:

> "pattern of racketeering activity" requires at least two acts of racketeering activity, one of which occurred after the effective date of this chapter and the last of which occurred within ten years (excluding any period of imprisonment) after the commission of a prior act of racketeering activity[.]

[27] Ianniello involved a "continuing criminal enterprise" to skim profits from bars and restaurants owned by the defendants and to evade taxes. 808 F.2d at 189. Some district courts in this circuit have apparently tried to limit Ianniello by requiring that a plaintiff allege separate criminal episodes when the enterprise is a lawful entity, rather than a "continuing criminal enterprise." See e.g., Mastercraft Indus., Inc. v. Breining, 664 F. Supp. 859, 860-61 (S.D.N.Y. 1987). This court believes, however, that Beck eliminates the multiple episode requirement in all cases. Although Beck also involved a criminal enterprise, see 802 F.2d at 48-49, the court in Beck clearly stated that "Ianniello confirms that two related predicate acts will suffice to establish a pattern under 18 U.S.C. sec. 1961(5)." Id. at 51. In any event, since this court has determined that Federal has alleged criminal enterprises made up of Amata and the wastepaper suppliers, Ianniello clearly applies.

The facts of four recent cases decided by the court of appeals give substance to this definition of enterprise. In Ianniello, the court examined an open-ended scheme to skim profits and evade taxes on restaurants and bars owned by the defendants. 808 F.2d at 186-89. The court decided that there was a "common purpose" with "no obvious terminating goal or date," and that the scheme "clearly establish[ed] the enterprise requirement." Id. at 191-92. In Beck, the court applied Ianniello to the defendants' "allegedly improper treatment of bonds held by Mexico and the sale and disposition of the proceeds of the U.S. collateral." 820 F.2d at 49. Because of the fact that "the enterprise alleged by [the] plaintiffs had but one straightforward, short-lived goal -- the sale of the U.S. collateral at a reduced price," [28] and the fact that after the sale "the alleged [51] enterprise ceased functioning," the court concluded that the association was "not sufficiently continuing to constitute an 'enterprise' under [RICO]." Id. at 51. Similarly, in Albany Insurance Co. v. Esses, 831 F.2d 41 (2d Cir. 1987), the court relied on Ianniello and Beck to find that the defendants' efforts to induce an insurance company to pay a single false insurance claim did not constitute an enterprise. Although the scheme involved several incidents of fraudulent representations by the defendants, all of the fraud related to one insurance claim arising out of a fire at one of the defendants' warehouses. Id. at 43. As such, "the purpose of the enterprise . . . had an 'obvious terminating goal or date' -- inducing the insurer of its goods to pay a false insurance claim. There [was] nothing in [the] amended complaint that indicate[d] a threat of continuing criminal activity beyond this terminating goal." Id. at 44. Finally, in Furman v. Cirrito, 828 F.2d 898, 903 (2d Cir. 1987), the court held that a partnership could not be a RICO enterprise when the partnership was terminated by the alleged acts of racketeering.

[52] Ianniello, Beck, Esses, and Furman establish the following guidelines. HN15[] As a starting point for finding a RICO enterprise, there must be "a continuing operation" and the predicate acts must be "related to the common purpose." Ianniello, 808 F.2d at 191. In addition, when an enterprise is purely criminal in nature, the court of appeals appears to have developed a transactional test for continuity. If the predicate acts are related to a single transaction that has an "obvious terminating goal or date," Ianniello, 808 F.2d at 192, then Sedima's requirement of relatedness and continuity are not satisfied, and there is no RICO enterprise. See Nassau-Suffolk Ice Cream, Inc. v. Integrated Resources, Inc., 662 F. Supp. 1499, 1505 (S.D.N.Y. 1987) ("At the very least, Beck mandates that an alleged scheme whose goal is 'straightforward [and] short-lived,' and which has an obvious termination date, should be dismissed."). Thus, enterprise was absent in Beck and Esses because the defendants' ultimate goal involved only one transaction. If, however, the criminal enterprise is one that is intended to continue indefinitely over the course of several [53] transactions and whose purpose is achieved through multiple transactions involving predicate acts, then the plaintiff has established the existence of a RICO enterprise. Finally, Furman teaches that if the alleged enterprise dissolves or ends upon commission [*1395] of the predicate acts, it cannot be a RICO enterprise. [29]

Applying these guidelines to the present case, Federal has adequately alleged RICO enterprises composed of Amata and individual suppliers as well as an enterprise composed of Amata and all the suppliers. [30] A fair reading of the amended complaint reveals that Federal has alleged that each enterprise had a common purpose to obtain commercial advantage and "defraud" Federal through the predicate acts of illegal bribery. Although not all suppliers were making sales to Federal for the entire period, the schemes lasted over a period of several years and involved multiple transactions between Federal and the various defendants. The enterprises had no "obvious terminating [28] Part of the plaintiffs' amended complaint in Beck was dismissed on other grounds, so that the only remaining claims related to the sale of the U.S. collateral. See 820 F.2d at 49-50.

---

[29] Although Furman involved a legitimate partnershp regulated by New York law, see 828 F.2d at 900, this court sees no reason why its logic would not apply to criminal enterprises as well.

[30] The fact that the defendants who are alleged to have engaged in a pattern of racketeering activity are also the members of the alleged enterprises is not fatal to a RICO complaint. Although an enterprise is "an entity separate and apart from the pattern of activity in which it engages," United States v. Turkette, 452 U.S. 576, 583, 69 L. Ed. 2d 246, 101 S. Ct. 2524 (1981), there is "no reason why a single entity could not be both the RICO 'person' and one of a number of members of the RICO 'enterprise.'" Cullen v. Margiotta, 811 F.2d 698, 729-30 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 483 U.S. 1021, 107 S. Ct. 3266, 97 L. Ed. 2d 764 (1987).

[54] goal or date," Ianniello, 808 F.2d at 192, and the enterprises continued after commission of the predicate acts. [31] These facts are sufficient to satisfy the test for enterprise.

[55] V. Liability of Individual Defendants

Defendant Automated seeks dismissal of all counts against the individual officers of the corporate defendants on the grounds that the amended complaint does not contain allegations sufficient to render the individual officers liable for the torts of the corporate defendants. It is not necessary to consider this argument in detail, however, for it is clearly alleged in the amended complaint that the individual defendants themselves committed the wrongful acts. They are not named as defendants merely by virtue of their positions as officers in the defendant corporations.

VI. Conclusion

Count I of the amended complaint, alleging a violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, must be dismissed for failure to allege an impact on competition in a relevant market. Count III of the amended complaint, alleging a violation of section 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act, must be dismissed for lack of standing. To the extent that Count IV alleges a violation of section 1962(d) of RICO, it must be dismissed for failure to adequately allege conspiracy. To the extent that Count IV alleges a violation of section 1962(c) of RICO based [56] on the predicate acts of mail and wire fraud, it is [*1396] not dismissed, provided, however, that Federal amend the amended complaint within 20 days of this ruling to add allegations of specificity that describe each element of fraud. To the extent that Federal's section 1962(c) claim is based on predicate acts of commercial bribery, it is not dismissed and no amendment is necessary.

SO ORDERED.

Dated at Hartford, Connecticut, this 10th day of February, 1988.

End of Document

[31] Although Federal's amended complaint is not specific in its allegations of the several criminal enterprises, and indeed the RICO count merely states that Amata "conspired, established, conducted, and participated" with the various defendants "in an enterprise engaged in a pattern of racketeering activity," the necessary elements of a RICO enterprise can be inferred from the amended complaint as a whole. In particular, the amended complaint describes the conduct and the goals of the members of the enterprises. To "plead the RICO enterprise in terms of the conduct and goals of those allegedly a part of the enterprise is not a bar to the RICO cause of action." In re Gas Reclamation, Inc. Sec. Litig., 659 F. Supp. 493, 516 (S.D.N.Y. 1987). The allegations in the amended complaint are sufficient to put the defendants on notice of the claims against them and are satisfactory under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedures. See Seville Indus. Mach. Corp. v. Southmost Mach. Corp., 742 F.2d 786, 790 (3d Cir. 1984) (notice pleading sufficient for the enterprise element of a RICO claim), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1211, 84 L. Ed. 2d 327, 105 S. Ct. 1179 (1985). This court disagrees with the conclusion reached in Plount v. American Home Assurance Co., 668 F. Supp. 204, 206-07 (S.D.N.Y. 1987), that Ianniello and its progeny presuppose and therefore require a specifically pleaded complaint. Rule 9(b) limits specificity in pleading to averments of fraud. With respect to allegations of enterprise, Federal need only provide some factual basis for the legal conclusion that an enterprise existed. Cf. Andreo I, 651 F. Supp. at 883 (addressing the pleading requirements for allegations of conspiracy). To require more would conflict with RICO's remedial purpose, see Sedima, 473 U.S. at 498, and the Supreme Court's directive that "RICO is to be read broadly," id. at 497.

Anheuser-Busch, Inc. v. Abrams

Court of Appeals of New York

January 6, 1988, Argued ; February 11, 1988, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

71 N.Y.2d 327 *; 520 N.E.2d 535 ; 525 N.Y.S.2d 816 ; 1988 N.Y. LEXIS 85 *; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,890

Anheuser-Busch, Inc., Respondent, v. Robert Abrams, as Attorney-General of the State of New York, Appellant; In the Matter of Subpoenas Duces Tecum Served by the Attorney-General of the State of New York, Upon the New York State Beer Wholesalers Association, Inc., et al., Respondents; Attorney-General of the State of New York, Appellant; In the Matter of G. Heileman Brewing Company, Inc., Respondent, v. Robert Abrams, as Attorney-General of the State of New York, Appellant; In the Matter of Miller Brewing Company, Respondent, v. Robert Abrams, as Attorney-General of the State of New York, Appellant; In the Matter of Stroh Brewery Company, Respondent, v. Robert Abrams, as Attorney-General of the State of New York, Appellant; In the Matter of Forbee Bros. Corporation et al., Respondents, v. Robert Abrams, as Attorney-General of the State of New York, Appellant

Subsequent History: [*1] As Amended November 8, 1988.

Prior History: Appeal, in the six above-entitled proceedings, by permission of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court in the First Judicial Department, from an order of that court, entered March 5, 1987, which (1) reversed, on the law, six judgments (denominated orders) of the Supreme Court at Special Term (Hortense W. Gabel, J.), entered in New York County, denying applications by petitioners to quash subpoenas duces tecum and interrogatories served upon them by the Attorney-General, dismissing the petitions and directing petitioners to comply with the subpoenas and to answer the interrogatories, and (2) granted the applications by petitioners to quash the subpoenas duces tecum and interrogatories. The following question was certified by the Appellate Division: "Was the order of this Court, which reversed the six judgments (denominated orders) of the Supreme Court, properly made?"

Anheuser-Busch, Inc. v Abrams, 126 AD2d 197, reversed.

Matter of New York State Beer Wholesalers Assn. (Attorney-General of State of N. Y.), 126 AD2d 197, reversed.

Matter of Heileman Brewing Co. v Abrams, 126 AD2d 197.

[2] Matter of Miller Brewing Co. v Abrams, 126 AD2d 197.

Matter of Stroh Brewery Co. v Abrams, 126 AD2d 197.

Matter of Forbee Bros. Corp. v Abrams, 126 AD2d 197.

Disposition: Order reversed, with costs, and the judgments of Supreme Court, New York County, reinstated. Certified question not answered as unnecessary.

Core Terms

vertical, territorial, Donnelly Act, legality, courts, subpoenas, wholesaler, decisions, brewers, beer, distributorships, investigate, restraint of trade, anti trust law, rule of reason, interrogatories, interpreting, petitioners', powers

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN1[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 343 authorizes the Attorney-General to investigate marketing practices which may violate state's antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

HN2[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

A vertical" restraint is one imposed by an agreement between noncompetitors who occupy different levels in the distribution chain -- as opposed to a horizontal restraint, which results from an agreement among competitors at the same level of distribution.

Administrative Law > ... > Scope of Authority > Methods of Investigation > Subpoenas

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

HN3[] Methods of Investigation, Subpoenas

An application to quash a subpoena should be granted only where the futility of the process to uncover anything legitimate is inevitable or obvious or where the information sought is utterly irrelevant to any proper inquiry. In defending his inquiry, the Attorney-General enjoys a presumption that he is acting in good faith and must show only that the materials sought bear a reasonable relation to the subject matter under investigation and to the public purpose to be achieved.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN4[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The Donnelly Act declares, among other things, that every contract, agreement, arrangement or combination whereby competition or the free exercise of any activity in the conduct of any business, trade or commerce or in the furnishing of any service in this state is or may be restrained is against public policy, illegal and void. N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340(1).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN5[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

As construed by State and Federal courts, the Donnelly Act and Sherman Act antitrust laws prohibit only "unreasonable" restraints on trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN6[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Donnelly Act -- often called a "Little Sherman Act -- should generally be construed in light of Federal precedent and given a different interpretation only where State policy, differences in the statutory language or the legislative history justify such a result.

Administrative Law > ... > Scope of Authority > Methods of Investigation > Subpoenas

HN7[] Methods of Investigation, Subpoenas

The Attorney-General's subpoena power does not abate by reason of any action or proceeding brought by him. N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 343.

Headnotes/Summary

Headnotes

Monopolies -- Donnelly Act -- Use in Beer Industry of Exclusive Territorial Distributorships -- "Vertical" Restraint of Trade -- No Rule of Per Se Legality -- Power of Attorney-General to Investigate

1. General Business Law § 343 authorizes the Attorney-General to investigate the pervasive use in the beer industry of exclusive territorial distributorships, which result in a "vertical" restraint of trade with respect to intrabrand competition in the beer industry and which the Attorney-General alleges may violate the State's antitrust laws (Donnelly Act; General Business Law § 340 et seq.); therefore it was error to quash the subpoenas duces tecum and interrogatories served upon petitioners -- four brewers, several beer wholesalers and a beer wholesalers' trade association -- by [*3] the Attorney-General pursuant to that investigation. Case law does not conclusively establish a rule of per se legality for vertical territorial arrangements. Nor does the language of the Donnelly Act foreclose the Attorney-General's position that such arrangements, if shown to result in an unreasonable restraint of trade under the circumstances, are prohibited. In the absence of such a rule of per se legality, the Attorney-General is authorized to conduct an investigation to test the legality of petitioners' practices.

Attorney-General -- Subpoena Power of Attorney-General -- Monopolies -- Donnelly Act -- Effect of Commencement of Civil Action in Federal Court by Attorney-General

2. Subpoenas duces tecum served upon petitioners by the Attorney-General pursuant to an investigation into marketing practices in the beer industry which the Attorney-General alleges may violate the State's antitrust laws (Donnelly Act; General Business Law § 340 et seq.) need not be quashed because the Attorney-General has commenced a civil action in Federal court, charging petitioners with violations of the Sherman and Donnelly Acts. General Business Law § 343 specifically provides that the [*4] Attorney-General's subpoena power does not abate by reason of any action or proceeding brought by him.

Counsel: Robert Abrams, Attorney-General (Alan Pfeffer, O. Peter Sherwood, Lloyd Constantine, Katherine L. Frank, Elizabeth M. O'Neill, Richard M. Weinberg and Alice McInerney of counsel), for appellant. I. Exclusive territorial vertical restraints are covered by the Donnelly Act. (Columbia Gas v New York State Elec. & Gas. Corp., 28 NY2d 117; State of New York v Glen & Mohawk Milk Assn., 61 NY2d 705; Matter of Aimcee Wholesale Corp. [Tomar Prods.], 21 NY2d 621; Continental T. V. v GTE Sylvania, 433 U.S. 36; State of New York v Mobil Oil Corp., 38 NY2d 460; People v Roth, 52 NY2d 440; LaRossa, Axenfeld & Mitchell v Abrams, 62 NY2d 583; Lafayette v Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389; Big Top Stores v Ardsley Toy Shoppe, 64 Misc 2d 894, 36 AD2d 582; Alexander's Dept. Stores v Ohrbach's, Inc., 266 App Div 535, 291 NY 707.) II. The Attorney-General is authorized [*5] to investigate all restraints of competition. (Sanders v Winship, 57 NY2d 391; Matter of Smathers, 309 NY 487; Eiberger v Sony Corp. of Am., 622 F2d 1068; State of New York v Mobil Oil Corp., 38 NY2d 460; Matter of Freeman, 34 NY2d 1; People v Hobson, 39 NY2d 479; Big Top Stores v Ardsley Toy Shoppe, 64 Misc 2d 894, 36 AD2d 582; Columbia Gas v New York State Elec. & Gas Corp., 28 NY2d 117; Matter of American Tel. & Tel. Co. v State Tax Commn., 61 NY2d 393; Matter of Hamptons Hosp. & Med. Center v Moore, 52 NY2d 88.)

Thomas H. Milch, Jerome I. Chapman, Wayne C. Holcombe, David Rees Davies, Adeeb Fadil, Terrence Sheehy, Peter Moll, Roxann Henry, William Pelster, David Elkind, David Beckwith, Michael Fischer, Gary Hoppe, Eugene D'Ablemont, Robert Getman, Robert Crotty, Ernest Gellhorn, Adrian Wager-Zito, Hugh Latimer, Robert Skitol, Richard Nash, Henry B. Gutman, Douglas Richards, Richard C. Stein and Matthew Feigenbaum for respondents. I. The Attorney-General lacks [*6] authority to investigate vertical territorial arrangements because such restraints are legal under New York law. (Matter of Kates v Lefkowitz, 28 Misc 2d 210; Stemmerman v Kelly, 150 App Div 735, 220 NY 756; Dawn to Dusk v Brunckhorst Co., 23 AD2d 780; Revlon Prods. Corp. v Bernstein, 204 Misc 80, 285 App Div 1139; People v Roth, 52 NY2d 440; Marsich v Eastman Kodak Co., 244 App Div 295, 269 NY 621; Port Chester Wine & Liq. Shop v Miller Bros. Fruiterers, 253 App Div 188, 281 NY 101; Matter of Jackson, 57 Misc 1; Bradford v New York Times Co., 501 F2d 51; Matter of Davies, 168 NY 89.) II. The per se legality of vertical exclusive territories requires that the subpoenas be quashed. (Matter of Kates v Lefkowitz, 28 Misc 2d 210.) III. The Attorney-General's Federal lawsuit vitiates any legitimate purpose the subpoenas might have had. (People v Anaconda Wire & Cable Co., 45 Misc 2d 151, 23 AD2d 823, 16 NY2d 871; [*7] Dellwood Foods v Abrams, 109 Misc 2d 263.)

Judges: Judges Simons, Alexander, Titone and Hancock, Jr., concur with Chief Judge Wachtler; Judge Bellacosa dissents and votes to affirm in a separate opinion; Judge Kaye taking no part.

Opinion by: WACHTLER

Opinion

[*330] [536] [817] OPINION OF THE COURT

The petitioners -- four brewers, several beer wholesalers and a beer wholesalers' trade association -- brought these proceedings to quash subpoenas duces tecum and interrogatories served upon them by the Attorney-General pursuant to an investigation into marketing practices in the beer industry which the Attorney-General alleges may violate the State's antitrust laws. The central issue posed by this appeal, here by leave of the Appellate Division, [1] is whether that court properly granted the applications on the ground that the focus of the investigation is an activity which is per se legal under State law and therefore beyond the scope of the Attorney-General's investigatory powers.

[8] [818] We hold that General Business Law § 343 HN1[] authorizes the Attorney-General to investigate the practice in question and that it was error, therefore, to quash the subpoenas and interrogatories.

[*331] I.

The subpoenas and interrogatories now challenged were issued to the petitioners beginning in May 1985 as part of an investigation by the Attorney-General into the pervasive use in the beer industry of exclusive territorial distributorships. The Attorney-General alleges -- and petitioners do not dispute for purposes of these proceedings -- that since 1982 brewers and wholesaler distributors have entered into agreements establishing exclusive territorial rights to sell each brewer's products to retail outlets. According to the Attorney-General, under this scheme, the brewer agrees to sell its products to only one designated wholesaler in a given territory and that wholesaler, in turn, agrees not to sell the brewer's products outside that territory or to anyone inside the territory who would resell the products elsewhere. The aim of these agreements, allegedly, is to eliminate intrabrand competition by "transshippers", independent wholesalers who, prior to the advent of these agreements, [*9] could buy beer from a franchised wholesaler in one territory and sell it in another territory, in competition with another franchised wholesaler.

The parties agree that, to the extent that this arrangement results in a restraint of trade, it is HN2[] a "vertical" restraint -- that is, one imposed by an agreement between noncompetitors who occupy different levels in the distribution chain -- as opposed to a "horizontal" restraint, which results from an agreement among competitors at the same level of distribution. The Attorney-General contends that, although such vertical restraints are not per se illegal under New York's antitrust law (the Donnelly Act; General Business Law § 340 et seq.), they may be found to be illegal if, under all the circumstances, they impose an unreasonable restraint on competition. Petitioners concede that the "rule of reason" analysis urged by the Attorney-General would [537] be employed to determine if the practice violates Federal antitrust law (see, e.g., Continental T. V. v GTE Sylvania, 433 U.S. 36), but they argue that the courts of this State have ruled that such vertical restraints are per se legal under the Donnelly Act. Accordingly, [*10] they conclude, the Attorney-General lacks authority to conduct an investigation designed to facilitate a rule of reason analysis of the brewing industry practice.

II.

HN3[] An application to quash a subpoena should be granted "[only] where the futility of the process to uncover anything [*332] legitimate is inevitable or obvious" (Matter of Edge Ho Holding Corp., 256 NY 374, 382) or where the information sought is "'utterly irrelevant to any proper inquiry'" (Matter of La Belle Creole Intl., S. A. v Attorney-General of State of N. Y., 10 NY2d 192, 196, quoting Matter of Dairymen's League Coop. Assn. v Murtagh, 274 App Div 591, 595, affd 299 NY 634). In defending his inquiry, the Attorney-General enjoys a presumption that he is acting in good faith (Matter of Ryan v Lefkowitz, 26 AD2d 604, affd 18 NY2d 977) and must show only that the materials sought bear "a reasonable relation to the subject matter under investigation and to the public purpose to be achieved" (Carlisle v Bennett, 268 NY 212, 217; see also, Virag v Hynes, 54 NY2d 437, 442; [*11] Matter of

[1] The Appellate Division also certified the following question: "Was the order of this Court, which reversed the six judgments (denominated orders) of the Supreme Court, properly made?" Because the order appealed from finally determines these special proceedings (see, Matter of Abrams [Anonymous], 62 NY2d 183, 192), the certified question was unnecessary and need not be answered.

Goldin v Greenberg, 49 NY2d 566, 572; Matter of La Belle Creole Intl., S. A. v Attorney-General of State of N. Y., supra, at 196).

Thus, the precise question presented by these proceedings is brought into focus. The question is not whether all vertical restraints of this type should, in the context of these proceedings, be declared legal per se or, on the other hand, subject to a rule of reason analysis. Instead, the question [819] is whether the Attorney-General has authority under the Donnelly Act to issue the subpoenas and interrogatories challenged here, a question which must be answered in the affirmative unless the legality of the brewers' marketing practice is so well established, either by the plain language of the statute or by existing judicial interpretation, as to be free from doubt. If the legality of the brewing industry's vertical restraints is arguable, then the subpoenas issued pursuant to the Attorney-General's broad powers to investigate possible violations of the Donnelly Act (see, General Business Law § 343) [2] must be sustained (see, Matter of Nicholson v State Commn. on Judicial Conduct, 50 NY2d 597, 610-611). [*12]

Petitioners effectively concede as much, because the focus of their argument is not that we should announce a rule of per [*333] se legality, but rather that such a rule has already been established by "seven [*13] decades of unanimous precedent" and that the Legislature has acquiesced in such an interpretation of the Donnelly Act by failing to amend the statute to overrule those decisions. We conclude, however, that the cases cited by petitioners do not conclusively establish, either singly or in combination, a rule of per se legality for vertical territorial arrangements. Nor does the statutory language foreclose the Attorney-General's position that such arrangements, if shown to result in an unreasonable restraint of trade under the circumstances, are prohibited.

[538] III.

HN4[] The Donnelly Act declares, among other things, that "[every] contract, agreement, arrangement or combination whereby * * * [competition] or the free exercise of any activity in the conduct of any business, trade or commerce or in the furnishing of any service in this state is or may be restrained [is] against public policy, illegal and void" (General Business Law § 340 [1]). This language is clearly broad enough, on its face, to encompass the vertical restraints in issue. There is no dispute for present purposes that the target of the Attorney-General's investigation -- exclusive territorial distributorships -- [*14] restricts intrabrand competition in the beer industry.

We recognize that neither the Donnelly Act nor the Sherman Act, after which it was modeled, has been interpreted as prohibiting every agreement that has the effect of restraining trade, no matter how minimal. Instead, HN5[] as construed by State and Federal courts, the antitrust laws prohibit only "unreasonable" restraints on trade (see, Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5; Atkin v Union Processing Corp., 90 AD2d 332, affd 59 NY2d 919, cert denied 465 U.S. 1038). Even in light of this general judicial gloss, however, the statutory language easily accommodates the Attorney-General's position that petitioners' practice may be prohibited if it can be shown to be unreasonable. [3]

---

[2] Pertinent language from General Business Law § 343, the provision which confers investigatory powers on the Attorney-General, illustrates the broad scope of that authority. The statute authorizes an investigation "[whenever] it shall appear to the attorney general * * * that any person or persons, partnership, corporation, company, trust or association shall have engaged in or engages in or is about to engage in any act or practice by this article [the Donnelly Act] prohibited or declared to be illegal, or * * * has assisted or participated in any plan, scheme, agreement or combination of the nature described herein, or whenever he believes it to be in the public interest that an investigation be made". That such an investigation may include the use of subpoenas and interrogatories is not disputed here.

[3] Thus, the dissent's major premise -- that the Donnelly Act does not expressly declare the brewers' practice to be illegal -- is flawed. The Act, by its very broad terms, declares all restraints on trade to be illegal; it is only by judicial interpretation that some practices have been held to be outside the act's scope. And, as noted above (supra, at 332, n 2), the Attorney-General's investigatory powers are equally broad. Thus, our decision to allow this investigation to proceed does not, as the dissent suggests, depend on the kind of extrapolation of legislative intent that we resisted in CPC Intl. v McKesson Corp. (70 NY2d 268).

[15] [*334] [820] Petitioners' efforts to extract a rule of per se legality from the case law dealing with vertical territorial arrangements are unavailing for several reasons. First, the issue of per se legality of all vertical territorial arrangements was not presented in the cases cited by petitioners. In Dawn to Dusk v Brunckhorst Co. (23 AD2d 780 [2d Dept]), Stemmerman v Kelly (150 App Div 735 [1st Dept], judgment after remand affd no opn 163 App Div 892, affd no opn 220 NY 756), and Revlon Prods. Corp. v Bernstein (204 Misc 80, affd no opn 285 App Div 1139 [1st Dept]), the issue before the courts was the legality, under specific circumstances, of specific arrangements. The courts decided no more than that those arrangements did not constitute unreasonable restraints of trade.

For example, in Stemmerman (supra), the Appellate Division held that the trial court had erred in declaring the contract void without allowing the plaintiff to introduce proof tending to show the limited impact [*16] of the territorial restriction on the asphalt market -- evidence relevant to a rule of reason analysis. Thus, the decision did not establish a rule of per se legality; it simply rejected the trial court's rule of per se illegality. The Revlon Prods. (supra) decision is open to a similar interpretation (see, Robinson, Restraints on Trade and the Orderly Marketing of Goods, 45 Cornell LQ 254, 261, n 32; 263, n 40) and, in any event, was colored by the defendant's concession that the restriction in question did not restrain trade (see, 204 Misc, at 81, supra).

In addition, this court, the final arbiter of questions of State law, did not issue or pass directly upon any of the decisions cited for the proposition advanced by petitioners. Nor do these isolated decisions from two judicial departments represent the kind of unanimous judgment of the intermediate appellate courts deserving of similar weight (cf., Matter of Knight-Ridder Broadcasting v Greenberg, 70 NY2d 151). Thus, even if the cited decisions unequivocally supported petitioners' contention, we [539] would not [*17] be persuaded that legislative inaction should be interpreted as acquiescence (see, Matter of Hellerstein v Assessor of Town of Islip, 37 NY2d 1, 9-10).

Finally, such a tenuous inference is even less compelling in this case, because it would result in an interpretation of the Donnelly Act at odds with the settled interpretation of its [*335] Federal counterpart. Although we do not move in lockstep with the Federal courts in our interpretation of antitrust law (see, People v Roth, 52 NY2d 440), HN6[] the Donnelly Act -- often called a "Little Sherman Act" -- should generally be construed in light of Federal precedent and given a different interpretation only where State policy, differences in the statutory language or the legislative history justify such a result (see, State of New York v Mobil Oil Corp., 38 NY2d 460, 463; Matter of Aimcee Wholesale Corp. [Tomar Prods.], 21 NY2d 621, 626; Givens, Practice Commentaries, McKinney's Cons Laws of NY, Book 19, General Business Law § 340, 1988 Cum Ann Pocket Part, at 182). Thus, we should not be eager to find that a contrary State rule has been established by a [*18] combination of equivocal pronouncements from the lower courts and legislative inaction in response to such decisions.

IV.

We conclude, therefore, that no rule of per se legality must inexorably be gleaned from the case law or the statutory language. In the absence of such a rule, we hold that the Attorney-General is authorized to conduct an investigation to test the legality of petitioners' practices. In addition, we find no merit to petitioners' alternative argument that the subpoenas must be quashed because the Attorney-General has commenced a civil action in Federal court, charging them with violations of the Sherman and Donnelly Acts. Section 343 specifically provides that HN7[] the Attorney-General's [821] subpoena power does not abate by reason of any action or proceeding brought by him (see, Matter of Grandview Dairy v Lefkowitz, 76 AD2d 776, 777; State of New York v Mobil Oil Corp., 40 AD2d 369, affd 33 NY2d 627).

Accordingly, the order of the Appellate Division should be reversed and the judgments of Supreme Court reinstated.

Dissent by: BELLACOSA

Dissent

Bellacosa, J. (dissenting). I vote to affirm. The investigatory and enforcement powers [*19] of the Attorney-General under the Donnelly Act should not be expanded by judicial construction to include vertical restraints, as that is a policy choice and authorization uniquely reserved to the legislative branch (compare, Boreali v Axelrod, 71 NY2d 1).

The Donnelly Act (General Business Law § 340 et seq.) does not expressly declare illegal or prohibit vertical restraint agreements establishing exclusive territorial distributorships between noncompetitors in different positions in the distribution [*336] chain, nor does it vest authority in the Attorney-General to investigate and prosecute such commercial arrangements. The courts of this State have never, up to now, found such a prohibition or power even by implication in the provisions of the act. Indeed, the opposite has prevailed over many years. Moreover, the Legislature has evidenced its acquiescence in these decisions by repeatedly refusing to adopt legislation sought by the Attorney-General restricting vertical restraints and granting that office such enforcement powers. Most pertinently, the Legislature has even specifically refused to adopt legislation prohibiting vertical distribution agreements [*20] between brewers and beer wholesalers.

The determination of the issue as to whether the Attorney-General has the authority to issue the subpoenas and interrogatories which respondents seek to quash necessarily hinges upon whether vertical restraint agreements creating exclusive territorial distributorships are prohibited or illegal under the Donnelly Act, not whether the legality of such arrangements is "arguable", [540] as suggested by the majority. Such a tenuous predicate for the issuance of formal, duplicative and burdensome investigatory process by the chief law enforcement officer of the State should not be countenanced by this court.

General Business Law § 340, "[the] determinative provision of the Donnelly Act" (State of New York v Mobil Oil Corp., 38 NY2d 460, 462), provides that "[every] contract, agreement, arrangement or combination whereby * * * [a] monopoly * * * is or may be established or maintained, or whereby [competition] * * * is or may be restrained * * * is hereby declared to be against public policy, illegal, and void". The act authorizes the Attorney-General to bring actions "to restrain and prevent the doing in this state of any act [*21] herein declared to be illegal" or prohibited (General Business Law § 342). In the performance of these enforcement responsibilities, the Attorney-General is empowered to investigate any person or business enterprise who is or is about to be engaged in any act "by this article prohibited or declared to be illegal"; who "assisted or participated" in any such act; or "whenever he believes it to be in the public interest that an investigation be made" (General Business Law § 343). The investigation provisions of section 343 do not create new categories of illegal or prohibited acts, but merely provide when and how an investigation should be effectuated.

In Marsich v Eastman Kodak Co. (244 App Div 295, affd 269 [*337] NY 621), this court affirmed a decision upholding the right of a producer and its dealers to refuse to sell their product to one who violated a price scale established by the producer. The court distinguished that situation from one where the agreement was between several manufacturers or producers which would be covered under General Business Law § 340. It stated that "[the] soundness of the economic [*22] theories embodied in such a statute is a legislative question, and the [822] courts may not obtrude their economic theories into a statute under the guise of interpreting it" (id., at 296 [emphasis supplied]). Similarly, in Stemmerman v Kelly (150 App Div 735, affd 220 NY 756), we affirmed a decision upholding a vertical restraint agreement establishing a sole source distributorship within an exclusive territory. The court there noted that "there may lawfully be a partial restraint of trade, sufficient to protect the interests of a party and not so great as to interfere with the interests of the public" (id., at 738; see also, Alexander's Dept. Stores v Ohrbach's, Inc., 266 App Div 535, appeal dismissed 291 NY 707).

The most direct and recent pronouncement on the legal propriety under State law of vertical restraint agreements concerning exclusive territorial distributorships arose in Dawn to Dusk v Brunckhorst Co. (23 AD2d 780). The manufacturer's exclusive distributor and the [*23] exclusive subdistributor within a designated area refused to sell to the plaintiff because the latter refused to deal solely through the subdistributor. Relying upon General Business Law § 340, the court noted that "[not] every agreement or combination which is in restraint of trade is proscribed by the statute" (id., at 781), and specifically held "[an] agreement or arrangement among parties in a vertical relationship, which restricts the territory within which the buyer, here the defendant jobber Vaccaro, may resell the goods in question does not violate section 340 of the General Business Law" (id., at 781 [citations omitted]).

Against the backdrop and long history of the statute and cases interpreting it, the court now discerns an implied power for the Attorney-General to investigate and litigate against vertical restraints. Recently, we rejected just such an analysis seeking to create by implication a private action under the Martin Act (see, CPC Intl. v McKesson Corp., 70 NY2d 268, 276-277). In direct contradiction of our past opinions on the Donnelly Act that a "ruling of a Federal court interpreting a Federal statute [*24] has [541] no direct bearing upon a State court's analysis of an analogous provision enacted by the State Legislature" [*338] (People v Roth, 52 NY2d 440, 447; see also, State of New York v Mobil Oil Corp., 38 NY2d 460, 463, supra; and Marsich v Eastman Kodak Co., 244 App Div 295, affd 269 NY 621, supra), the majority relies upon Federal court precedents interpreting the Sherman Antitrust Act and borrows their "rule of reason" analysis from that quite different and explicit statute. Surely, had the New York State Legislature deemed that our State court "decisions gave to the statute [Donnelly Act] a meaning or scope different from that [originally] intended, it would have amended the statute as to give it the effect intended", especially since it was specifically importuned to do so (Marsich v Eastman Kodak Co., 244 App Div 295, 297, affd 269 NY 621, supra). In fact, the Attorney-General has made the effort to align the requirements of the Donnelly Act with those of the Sherman Antitrust Act and [*25] "has sought to obtain procedural tools comparable to those available under federal law" because of "the absence of a state per se rule and * * * vertical restraints" (Givens, Practice Commentaries, McKinney's Cons Laws of NY, Book 19, General Business Law § 340, 1988 Cum Ann Pocket Part, at 187). He is even in this very matter litigating the same subject under Federal law in the Federal courts.

At least seven recent bills would, in varying degrees, have restructured the Donnelly Act (see, Bill No. S. 8399 [introduced 1986]; Bill No. A. 5835 [introduced 1985]; Bill No. A. 1876 [introduced 1985]; Bill No. S. 420 [introduced 1985]; Bill No. A. 6055 [introduced 1984]; Bill No. S. 5121 [introduced 1984]; and Bill No. S. 1591 [introduced 1984]). New and modified provisions directly relevant to this case would have mandated that State courts "give due [823] consideration and great weight" to the Federal courts' interpretations of Federal antitrust statutes specifically including the Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts, and "to the per se doctrine to restraints of trade" (see, e.g., Bill No. S. 8399 [introduced 1986]). Other changes would have provided the Attorney-General greater investigatory [*26] and enforcement powers and would have made it a specific violation to allocate customers or markets functionally or geographically. Five bills directly and particularly regulating vertical restraints in the malt beverage industry, explicitly declaring such agreements unlawful and empowering the Attorney-General to investigate and litigate such restraints, were rejected (Bill No. A. 5754 [introduced 1985]; Bill No. A. 4077 [introduced 1985]; Bill No. S. 2325 [introduced [*339] 1985]; Bill No. A. 4284 [introduced 1983]; Bill No. S. 2668 [introduced 1983]).

All extant judicial construction of General Business Law § 340 refused to prohibit vertical restraint agreements; yet, the Legislature on no less than 12 occasions refused to change that and rejected bills to give the Attorney-General the very power now conferred.

In Matter of Knight-Ridder Broadcasting v Greenberg (70 NY2d 151), this court used the unanimity of precedents in all four Appellate Divisions construing the Shield Law statute (Civil Rights Law § 79-h) as protecting only confidential news sources, coupled with subsequent failed legislative efforts to amend the statute to broaden the privilege, as [*27] "compellingly persuasive evidence" (id., at 159) that the Legislature did not intend that such a broad privilege should exist. The court said that legislative history must be "reviewed in light of the existing decisional law which the Legislature is presumed to be familiar with and to the extent it left it unchanged, that it accepted" that decisional law (id., at 157, citing Arbegast v Board of Educ., 65 NY2d 161, 169; Hammelburger v Foursome Inn Corp., 54 NY2d 580, 588; Engle v Talarico, 33 NY2d 237, 242). Building on this reasoning, in Boreali [542] v Axelrod (71 NY2d 1, supra) the court relied, in part, upon negative legislative history, resulting from some 40 failed efforts to expand the prohibitions against smoking in public places (see, Public Health Law art 13-E), as evidence that the New York Public Health Council had exceeded the scope of its broad authority to protect the public health by promulgating regulations limiting smoking in certain public places.

If the executive branch, under the separation doctrine, must respect the legislative [*28] branch prerogatives and history in a particular area, so must the judicial branch. Conflicting and selective applications of recently announced principles by this court do not well serve the judicial process and its purposes. I would affirm and quash the subpoenas.

America West Airlines, Inc. v. Burnley

United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit

January 12, 1988, Argued ; February 19, 1988, Decided

No. 87-1639

Reporter
838 F.2d 1343 *; 1988 U.S. App. LEXIS 2068 ; 267 U.S. App. D.C. 393; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,894

America West Airlines, Inc., Petitioner v. James H. Burnley, IV, Secretary U.S. Department of Transportation, Respondents, USAir Group, Inc., Piedmont Aviation, Inc., Intervenors

Prior History: [1] Petition for Review of an Order of the United States Department of Transportation.

Core Terms

final order, merger, slots, redressed, grievances, city-pair, pointedly, contends, injuries, reversal, transfer of ownership, fail to demonstrate, supplemental brief, license renewal, personal injury, alleged injury, acquisition, handicapped, ownership, Airlines, eastward, Airport, approve, markets, parties, serving, causal, stem, fly

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Constitutional Law > The Judiciary > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Justiciability > General Overview

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

To demonstrate its standing, plaintiff must allege and prove three elements: (1) personal injury; (2) fairly traceable to the defendant's allegedly unlawful conduct; and (3) likely to be redressed by the requested relief.

Counsel: John E. Gillick, with whom, Robert Reed Gray and Robert A. Burka, were on the brief, for Petitioner.

Diane R. Liff, Assistant General Counsel for Litigation, Department of Transportation, with whom, B. Wayne Vance, General Counsel, Department of Transportation, was on the brief, for Respondent. Thomas L. Ray, Counsel, Department of Transportation, also entered an appearance for Respondent.

Michael S. Sundermeyer, with whom, Brendan V. Sullivan, Jr., Lee M. Hydeman, Stephen H. Lachter, James T. Lloyd, for USAir Group, Inc.; Robert M. Lichtman, Joseph F. Healy, Jr. and David R. Murchison, for Piedmont Aviation, Inc., were on the brief, for Intervenors, USAir Group, Inc. and Piedmont Aviation, Inc.

Judges: Silberman and Sentelle, Circuit Judges, and Greene, * District Judge.

Opinion by: PER CURIAM

Opinion

[*1344] Opinion PER CURIAM. This matter is before the Court on petition of America West Airlines, Inc. (America West) for review of Department of Transportation [2] orders approving the merger of USAir Group, Inc. (USAir) and Piedmont Aviation, Inc. (Piedmont). America West contends that the merger will result in impermissible entry barriers, increased market power and a substantial reduction of competition in the relevant markets. Since it appeared to the Court that a threshold question -- the standing of America West to bring the petition -- could be dispositive, the Court requested supplemental briefs on that issue. [1] Upon review, the Court finds, for the reasons stated below, that America West lacks standing and therefore dismisses the petition.

In a Final Order dated October 30, 1987, the Department of Transportation (DOT), acting pursuant to 49 U.S.C. § 1378, approved the acquisition by USAir of Piedmont. On November 1, 1987, America West petitioned this Court for review of that final order. USAir and Piedmont were permitted to intervene and [3] America West's motion to stay the order was denied. The merits were then briefed by the parties on an expedited basis and the Court heard oral argument on January 12, 1988, at which time it directed the parties to submit supplemental briefs limited to the question of America West's standing, both Article III and antitrust/competitor, [2] to challenge DOT's order.

To invoke this Court's Article III powers, America West must demonstrate standing in a constitutional sense. HN1[] To demonstrate its standing, America West must allege and prove three elements: (1) personal injury; (2) fairly traceable to the defendant's allegedly unlawful conduct; and (3) likely to be redressed by the requested relief. Allen v. Wright, 468 U.S. 737, 751, 82 L. Ed. 2d 556, 104 S. Ct. 3315 (1984). [4]

America West has alleged two injuries. First, it contends that the approval of the merger will inhibit eastward expansion of its airline service, although it does not specify any city-pair markets. Second, it contends that the merger will make it more difficult for America West to obtain slots at Washington National Airport (DCA) and LaGuardia (LGA), specifically because the increased concentration of the slots will increase their value to the post-merger USAir. [3] Assuming that these two "injuries" constitute personal injury for purposes of constitutional standing, America West has, nevertheless, failed to demonstrate the existence of the remaining two elements as set out in Allen, supra.

In California Association of the Physically Handicapped, Inc. v. FCC, 250 U.S. App. D.C. 202, 778 F.2d 823 (D.C. Cir. 1985), CAPH challenged use [5] of a "short form" process to approve a transfer in ownership of Metromedia. CAPH [*1345] claimed it was injured by Metromedia's alleged neglect of its responsibilities to the handicapped. Id. at 825. This Court held that CAPH did not satisfy the causation requirement because "CAPH's alleged injury occurred before, existed at the time of, and continued unchanged" after the transfer of ownership. Id. at 827. CAPH also did not satisfy the redressability requirement because "even if the Commission had denied the transfer application, Metromedia, despite its allegedly bad record, would remain in control of the stations." Id. The Court also pointed out that CAPH's grievance "is properly and pointedly raised in a license renewal proceeding," not in a transfer of ownership proceeding. Id. at 826.

---

* Of the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, sitting by designation pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 292(a).

1 See Juidice v. Vail, 430 U.S. 327, 51 L. Ed. 2d 376, 97 S. Ct. 1211 (1977).

2 49 U.S.C. § 1378(b)(1)(A) prohibits approval of any merger "if it would result in a monopoly. . . ." Cf. Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18.

3 It is by no means certain that a value increase will in fact result. We assume it will, since it makes no difference to the outcome.

Applying California Association to the instant case, neither of America West's alleged injuries are sufficient to confer Article III standing. First, America West's generalized allegations about flying eastward are neither causally related to the Department's Final Order nor redressable by reversal of the Order. Just as CAPH's injuries did not stem from the FCC's approval [6] of a transfer in ownership, America West's alleged inability to fly in "the East" does not stem from the Department's Final Order. There is no causal link to the Order because America West did not prove or even allege any interest in serving any city-pair market affected by this merger, or indeed any city-pair market. In addition, even if the merger were overturned by this Court, America West would be no better off because it has not identified any interest in serving any identified market actually affected by the merger, certainly none as to which it would have greater access without the Department's order.

Second, America West's inability to purchase slots at DCA and LGA is neither caused by the Final Order nor redressed by a reversal of that Order. The Final Order cannot be the cause of an injury related to slots because neither the merger nor the Final Order deny slots to America West. [4] America West has simply failed to demonstrate that reversal of the Final Order would result in its acquisition of any slots at either airport. Moreover, just as the Court in California Association pointed out that the grievances about the handicapped are "properly and pointedly raised [7] in a license renewal proceeding," 778 F.2d at 826, America West's grievances about slots are "properly and pointedly" raised in the Department's ongoing rulemaking proceeding about slots.

America West has clearly failed to establish the necessary elements of standing and it is therefore unnecessary to reach the substantive issues. The petition is dismissed. [5]

[8]

End of Document

---

[4] America West admits that, despite its efforts, it was unable to secure slots at DCA and LGA before this merger.

[5] Since we have determined that America West has no Article III standing, it is unnecessary for us to reach the question of antitrust/competitor standing. However, if the Court were to reach that issue, it would seem to be controlled by Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 107 S. Ct. 484, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986), and the result would appear to be the same. Cargill involved determination of standing under § 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18, the section on which the relevant portion of 49 U.S.C. § 1378 is modeled, and held the status of competitor does not confer antitrust standing in the absence of an antitrust injury as defined by cases applying the Clayton Act.

Puckett v. Cook

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Arkansas, Western Division

February 19, 1988, Decided and Filed

No. LR-C-87-244

Reporter

1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15156 *; 1988 WL 142628

PAUL PUCKETT, PLAINTIFF v. SANDY COOK, DARRELL CARTER, and SANYO MANUFACTURING CORPORATION, DEFENDANTS

Core Terms

antitrust, alleges, resignation, fired, anti trust law, federal claim, Sherman Act, Defendants', termination

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Constitutional Law > Substantive Due Process > Scope

HN1[] Constitutional Law, Substantive Due Process

The due process clause of the Fifth Amendment forbids the federal government from depriving an employee of a constitutionally protected interest in his job. However, in order to pursue such a claim, there must be some federal government involvement in the alleged conduct and a government created right.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Bribery > Public Officials > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN2[] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

The federal Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961 et seq., requires the specific pleading that a plaintiff has been injured through the defendant's commission of one of several enumerated federal or state criminal offenses listed in 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Bribery > Public Officials > General Overview

HN3[] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

Bribery under both federal law (18 U.S.C.S. § 201) and Arkansas law (Ark. Stat. Ann. §§ 41-2703 et seq.) provide that payment to or from a public official is an essential element of the offense.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4[] Clayton Act, Claims

The type of injury the plaintiffs suffered is not the type the antitrust laws were intended to redress. As employees, the only market the plaintiffs would have a personal stake in would be the labor market in that industry, not the TENS market at which the conspiracy was aimed.

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > Standing

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Justiciability > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > Injury in Fact

HN5[] Reviewability, Standing

In an antitrust action, standing goes beyond the constitutional standard of injury in fact and focuses instead on whether the injury was of the type that Congress sought to redress through the antitrust laws and whether a link was demonstrated between the injury and the market restraint. Mere causal connection between an antitrust violation and harm to a plaintiff cannot be the basis for antitrust compensation unless the injury is directly related to the harm the antitrust laws were designed to protect.

Counsel: [*1] Keith Blackman, Jonesboro, Arkanasas for Plaintiff

Donna Galchus, Wallace, Dover & Dixon, Little Rock, Arkansas, for Defendant

Opinion by: FORSTER, JR., Magistrate

Opinion

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

JOHN F. FORSTER, JR., UNITED STATES MAGISTRATE

This action for wrongful discharge from employment was initially filed in the Circuit Court of St. Francis County, Arkansas on November 17, 1986. Following the filing of Plaintiff's third amended complaint, in which he alleged violation of federal law, the case was removed to Federal court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1441(b). By consent of the parties, the claims presented are before the Magistrate for final disposition, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 636. Before the Court is a motion for summary judgment and dismissal of all claims filed by the Defendants.

Plaintiff, Paul Puckett, is a fifty (50) year-old electrical worker. He was employed by Sanyo Manufacturing Corporation as an industrial engineer from April 14, 1982 until June 5, 1985 when he tendered his resignation. By all appearances, Plaintiff was an at-will employee. There was no written agreement outlining the terms or duration of his employment.

The essence of Plaintiff's related claims is his contention that his [*2] resignation from his job at Sanyo was improperly coerced and was therefore a "constructive discharge", rather than a voluntary resignation. Based upon this premise that he was fired, Plaintiff alleges that he is entitled to damages against Sanyo Manufacturing Company and two of its employees, Darrell Carter, a vice president at Sanyo, and Sandy Cook, a 45 year-old female who was Plaintiff's immediate supervisor, for wrongful termination of his job under both state and federal law.

Plaintiff alleges that Cook and Carter had a meretricious sexual relationship and engaged along with other Sanyo employees in a conspiracy and practice of inducing Sanyo to purchase its goods from certain suppliers in return for kickback payments from the suppliers receiving Sanyo's business. Plaintiff alleges that the Defendants conspired to get him out of the Sanyo organization when he made it known that he would not participate in their scheme. Plaintiff alleges that the Defendants demoted him, reduced his income, denied him raises, and gave him a false and defamatory work performance evaluation that left him no alternative except to resign from his job.

Plaintiff asserts state law tort claims for tortious [*3] interference with a contract, defamation, and wrongful demotion and termination of an at-will employee. Additionally, Plaintiff alleges that his forced resignation constituted deprivation of property without due process. He also asserts that the Defendants' alleged practice of bid-rigging and soliciting bribes from existing and potential suppliers doing business with Sanyo are violations of federal antitrust and racketeering laws. Accordingly, Plaintiff seeks redress for his federal claims under the Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution, 15 U.S.C. § 15(a) (Clayton Act), and 18 U.S.C. § 1964(e) (Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organization Act) (hereinafter referred to as RICO). In reviewing the Defendants' motion for dismissal and summary judgment, the Court will consider Plaintiff's federal claims first.

I.

Plaintiff's due process and RICO claims must fail, and for essentially the same reason. That reason is Plaintiff's failure to allege any government involvement in the conduct giving rise to his claims.

It is settled beyond debate that HN1[] the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment forbids the federal government from depriving an employee of a constitutionally protected [*4] interest in his job. Davis v. Passman, 442 U.S. 228, 99 S.Ct. 2264 (1979). See also Bush v. Lucas, 462 U.S. 374, 103 S.Ct. 2404 (1983). However, in order to pursue such a claim, there must be some federal government involvement in the alleged conduct and a government created right. Warren v. Government National Mortgage Association 611 F.2d 1229 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 847 (1980). Plaintiff makes no claim of federal government involvement nor does he explain the origin of his alleged constitutional interest in his job with a private employer. The same rules would apply if Plaintiff's claim were construed to invoke the Fifth Amendment through the Fourteenth Amendment, or the Fourteenth Amendment directly prohibiting the deprivation of life, liberty or property through state conduct. Absent allegations of state conduct and the creation of a constitutionally protected interest in his job, the claim must fail. Cf. Flagg Brothers, Inc. v. Brooks, 436 U.S. 149 (1978). Plaintiff's due process claim is wholly without merit.

HN2[] The Federal RICO statute, 18 U.S.C. § 1961 et seq., through which Plaintiff seeks relief, requires the specific pleading that a Plaintiff [*5] has been injured through the defendant's commission of one of several enumerated federal or state criminal offenses listed in 18 U.S.C. § 1961. Sedima, S.P.R.I. v. Imrex Company, Inc., 473 U.S. 479, 105 S.Ct. 3275 (1985). Plaintiff did not plead violation of any of the enumerated offenses and it does not appear to the Court that he can. The requisite § 1961 predicate offense most analogous to Plaintiff's kickback allegations is bribery. However, HN3[] bribery under both federal law (18 U.S.C. § 201) and Arkansas law (Ark. Stat. Ann. §§ 41-2703 et seq.) provide that payment to or from a public official is an essential element of the offense. Plaintiff's allegations do not allege any involvement by public officials. Plaintiff merely contends that the alleged conduct is illegal. The RICO claim is insufficiently pleaded to state a cause of action.[1] Therefore, this claim is also dismissed. Cf. Flowers v. Continental Grain Co., 775 F.2d 1051 (8th Cir. 1985).

[*6] Plaintiff's third federal claim, that the Defendants' practice of accepting kickbacks from Sanyo suppliers was a conspiracy in violation of antitrust law, creates a closer question. The provisions of the Sherman and Robinson-Patman Acts, codified as 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 13(c), appear to encompass such conduct. The Defendants cite Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519 (1983), for the proposition that Plaintiff does not have standing to sue. The Defendants argue that an employee who is fired as a result of conduct in violation of the Sherman Act has not suffered an "antitrust injury" and thus has no "antitrust standing". Indeed, in Associated General Contractors, supra, the Supreme Court denied antitrust standing to the plaintiff trade unions because they were "neither a consumer nor a competitor" in the market where trade was restrained, but held that standing would exist if the alleged injury was the type that the antitrust statute was intended to forestall.

The Circuit Courts of Appeal have split over the issue of standing by an employee who was fired for whistle-blowing or other reason resulting from his [*7] employer's alleged conduct in violation of antitrust laws under 15 U.S.C. § 15. The Plaintiff cites Ostrofe v. H.S. Crocker Co., 740 F.2d 739 (9th Cir. 1984), for the proposition that a fired employee has standing. The Defendants cite Bichan v. Chemetron Corp., 681 F.2d 514 (7th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 460 U.S. 1016 (1983), for the proposition that a fired employee does not have antitrust standing. Both cases are on point, but are only persuasive authority and do not resolve the issue. However, the Court finds that McDonald v. Johnson & Johnson, 722 F.2d 1370 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 870, 105 S.Ct. 219 (1983), establishes the standard for standing in antritrust cases in this Circuit.

In McDonald, the plaintiffs sold their interests in a company to the defendants and then accepted employment contracts to work for the company under the defendants' control. The defendants operated the company in a fraudulent manner and eventually fired the plaintiffs from their jobs. The McDonald plaintiffs filed suit under the antitrust civil provisions of the Sherman Act and Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15 for an alleged Sherman Act violation. The Eighth Circuit Court [*8] of Appeals denied standing. In so doing, the Court stated:

. . . HN4[] the type of injury the plaintiffs suffered is not the type the antitrust laws were intended to redress. . . . As employees, the only market the plaintiffs would have a personal stake in would be the labor market in that industry, not the TENS market at which the conspiracy was aimed.

---

[1] The Court rejects the Defendants' arguments that Komm v. McFliker, 662 F.Supp. 924 (E.D. Mo. 1987), misconstrued Terre Du Lac Association, Inc. v. Terre Du Lac, Inc., 772 F.2d 467 (8th Cir. 1985), in holding that a discharged employee has standing to sue under RICO. Terre Du Lac correctly reaffirmed its earlier holding in Alexander Grant & Company v. Tiffany Industires, Inc., 742 F.2d 408 (8th Cir. 1984) (vacated on other grounds, in light of Sedima, 105 S.Ct. 3275 (1985), that a Plaintiff need not be a target of racketeering activity to have standing. Thus standing requirements for RICO civil suits and antitrust suits are not comparable despite similarly worded statutes.

Id., 722 F.2d at 1379.

The principles set forth in McDonald were reaffirmed in General Industries Corp. v. Hertz Mountain Corp., 810 F.2d 795 (8th Cir. 1987). In General Industries, the Court denied standing to sue, under 15 U.S.C. § 15 for a Sherman Act violation, to a brokerage firm that worked for defendant on a commission basis because the brokerage firm was neither a consumer nor competitor of the defendant. Citing the Supreme Court's holding in Associated General Contractors, supra, and its own holding in McDonald, the Court of Appeals stated:

HN5[] In an antitrust action, standing goes beyond the constitutional standard of injury in fact and focuses instead on whether the injury was of the type that Congress sought to redress through the antitrust laws and whether a link was demonstrated between the injury and [*9] the market restraint. Mere causal connection between an antitrust violation and harm to a plaintiff cannot be the basis for antitrust compensation unless the injury is directly related to the harm the antitrust laws were designed to protect. (citations omitted).

Id., 810 F.2d at 809.

In view of the holdings in McDonald and General Industries, the Court finds that the Plaintiff in the present action lacks standing to sue for injuries allegedly received as a result of violations of the Sherman and Robinson-Patman Acts. Therefore, Plaintiff's antitrust claims are dismissed for lack of standing.

II.

The remaining issues are Plaintiff's pendent state law tort claims. The Defendants urge the Court to dismiss Plaintiff's interference of contract claim against Cook and Carter on the pleadings and to grant summary judgment for the Defendants on Plaintiff's defamation and wrongful termination claims. In support of their motion for judgment on the termination claim, the Defendants have submitted a copy of an order issued by the Arkansas Court of Appeals affirming an administrative agency's determination that Plaintiff voluntarily resigned from his job and, thus, was not "constructively [*10] discharged".

Although the Court is persuaded that Plaintiff is collaterally estopped from asserting his termination claim in federal court because of the state court affirmance of the agency finding, Gahr v. Tranmel, 796 F.2d 1063, 1067 (8th Cir. 1986) (see also Steffen v. Housewright, 665 F.2d 245, 247 (8th Cir. 1981)), to so hold would fail to dispose of all of Plaintiff's claims and at the same time risk an intrusion upon the state's right to resolve a delicate question of state law unnecessarily. [2] [*11] Therefore, in view of the early dismissal of all federal claims from which this Court derived its jurisdiction, Plaintiff's pendent state law tort claims are hereby remanded to the Circuit Court of St. Francis County. [3] United Mine Workers v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 86 S.Ct. 1130 (1966); Terre Du Lac Association, Inc. v. Terre Du Lac, Inc., 772 F.2d 467, 475 (8th Cir. 1985).

IT IS, THEREFORE, ORDERED that the Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment is granted or denied as follows: Plaintiff's Fifth Amendment claims under the United States Constitution and his federal statutory. claims

---

[2] The merits of Plaintiff's wrongful termination claim, including his contract theory, are dubious at best. Nonetheless, the remainder of this case belongs in state court. There is no true diversity jurisdiction. Aldinger v. Howard, 427 U.S. 1, 96 S.Ct. 2413 (1976). Nor does it appear from the cases cited by the parties that the Arkansas appellate courts have squarely decided whether, under what circumstances, and to what effect an administrative factual determination arising from the denial of unemployment benefits is deemed to constitute an absolute bar to further litigation concerning the reason that a plaintiff became unemployed. Cf. Burford v. Sun Oil Co., 319 U.S. 315, 63 S.Ct. 1098 (1943) (requiring abstension and dismissal by the federal court where state law is unclear or unsettled).

[3] Accordingly, the trial previously scheduled before this Court is cancelled. All outstanding motions not decided in this opinion have become moot as a result of this Court's decision and are thereby denied without ruling upon their merits.

under the Sherman Act, the Clayton Act, the Robinson-Patman Act and RICO be, and the same hereby are, dismissed with prejudice. Plaintiff's remaining pendent state law tort claims are hereby remanded to the Circuit Court of St. Francis County, Arkansas.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

JUDGMENT - February 19, 1988, Filed

Pursuant to the Memorandum and Order filed in this matter this date, it is Considered, Ordered and Adjudged that all federal claims asserted are hereby dismissed with prejudice; the relief sought is denied.

DATED this 19th of February, 1988.

Boyd International, Ltd. v. Honeywell, Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit

February 22, 1988

No. 87-1042

Reporter
837 F.2d 1312 *; 1988 U.S. App. LEXIS 2094 **

Boyd International, Ltd., Plaintiff-Appellee, v. Honeywell, Inc., Defendant-Appellant

Prior History: [1] Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas.

Core Terms

notice, requirement of notice, claim for damages, damages, deceptive trade practices, treble damages, file suit, trial court, pleadings

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN1[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act , Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 17.50(a) (Supp.1987) lays out several theories for relief for consumers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN2[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

Among other things, the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act grants a right of action for "unconscionable action" and "deceptive trade practices" by a seller. Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 17.50(a)(1), (3). Unconscionable action is defined by Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 17.45(5) and deceptive trade practices are defined by Tex. Bus. &

Com. Code Ann. § 17.46(b). Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 17.50(b)(1) gives consumers a right to actual damages and provides for treble damages against a seller whose acts are committed knowingly.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN3[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

As a prerequisite to filing a suit seeking damages under Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 17.50 (b)(1) against any person, a consumer shall give written notice to the person at least 30 days before filing the suit. Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 17.50A(a).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN4[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

If the giving of 30 days' written notice is rendered impracticable by reason of the necessity of filing suit in order to prevent the expiration of the statute of limitations or if the consumer's claim is asserted by way of a counterclaim, the notice is not required. Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 17.50A(b).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

HN5[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

The Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act notice requirement, Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 17.50A(a), is to discourage litigation and encourage settlement, in particular, out-of-court settlement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

HN6[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Several Texas appeals court cases provide that the only way to correct a Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act (DTPA), Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 17.50(a), suit filed with inadequate notice is to stop and start over again: a dismissal with leave to refile the suit 30 days after giving notice.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Relation Back

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

HN7[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

In a contract suit later amended to include a Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act (DTPA), Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 17.50(a), damage claim, the notice requirement relates back to the time when suit was initially filed, not to the time of the amendment. A relation back of pleadings is allowed when based on the same transaction or occurrence.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

HN8[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 17.50A states specifically that the required notice must come before the suit is filed; it does not speak to causes of action added by amended pleadings.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

HN9[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

A judgment under the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act (DTPA), Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 17.50(a), is reversible for the giving of the required 30 day notice where the only evidence that any notice whatever had been given is testimony by the plaintiff's attorney that a demand letter was sent pursuant to the DTPA. The DTPA requires that notice be given of the amount of actual damages claimed as well as attorney's fees and other expenses. Where the testimony quoted wholly fails to establish that this was done, and that the statute is to be enforced as interpreted by its express language, the court can reverse.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Reviewability > Waiver > Admission of Evidence

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions > Preservation for Review

HN10[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

A defendant who, until appeal, raises no objection whatever to the inadequacy of the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act (DTPA), Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 17.50(a), notice or to testimony about the DTPA cause of action waives its right to object on appeal.

Counsel: A. W. Sorelle, III, Marty L. Rowley, William E. Wickens, Paul A. Koches, SuzAnne C. Nyland, for Appellant.

Tracey D. Conwell, Michael A. Caddell, for Appellee.

Judges: Wisdom, Gee and Carolyn Dineen King, * Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: PER CURIAM

Opinion

[*1313] This appeal concerns notice requirements under the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act ("DTPA").

Boyd International, Ltd., was the contractor and Honeywell, Inc., a subcontractor on an officer's quarters building constructed at Sheppard Air Force Base near Wichita Falls, Texas. Specifications for the building include requirements for two elements of the structures climate control system: an Energy Monitoring and Control System ("EMCS") for the entire quarters and temperature controls for each of the quarters individual apartments. The specifications require that all EMCS work be done by Honeywell, but designate no particular party to supply and install the temperature controls.

Disputes arose between them and, on October 17, 1984, Boyd filed suit against Honeywell. Boyd's complaint asserts [2] that Boyd had "paid Honeywell's full price for the EMCS and the temperature controls," that "Plaintiff has given written notice to Defendant of its specific complaint and the amount of damages, expenses and fees," and that Honeywell had "illegally tied" the sale of the EMCS and temperature controls. The first six counts of the complaint assert violations of the federal antitrust laws and the Texas Free Enterprise and Antitrust Act. The seventh count claims damages from an unspecified "deceptive trade practice in violation of the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act", cites to Tex.Bus. & Comm.Code Ann. § 17.46 (which defines and outlaws over 20 "deceptive trade practices"), and demands the treble damages provided for by the DTPA.

Contrary to its assertions, however, Boyd had not in fact sent Honeywell any written notice of its intent to file a DTPA claim before doing so and sent none until October 23, 1984. On December 4, 1984, Boyd filed an amended complaint asserting a new theory (noticed by its October 23 letter) for Boyd's DTPA damage claim -- the "'gross disparity' between the value received by Boyd pursuant to its contract with Honeywell and the amount charged by [*1314] [3] Honeywell for this work" -- and citing to a different portion of the Tex.Bus. & Comm. Code Ann. -- § 17.45, which uses this language to define "unconscionable action" by a seller. As did Boyd's first complaint, the amended complaint seeks treble damages under the DTPA. After further developments unnecessary to an understanding of our decision, a jury found, among other things, that there was indeed a "gross disparity," and that Boyd's actual damages resulting from the "gross disparity" were $ 211,092. The jury awarded Boyd treble damages, the maximum punitive damages allowed by the DTPA. The jury also found for Boyd and awarded treble damages under the federal antitrust law. Because the DTPA and antitrust claims derived from the same facts, Boyd was required to elect a claim for recovery. Boyd elected the DTPA claim.

The trial court's judgment and order awarded Boyd $ 513,826 in damages, penalties, attorneys' fees and costs. In addition, the court awarded prejudgment interest on $ 211,092 through August 12, 1985 -- the date of Honeywell's payment to Boyd -- but later reduced the principal by the amount of a payment on account made earlier by Honeywell.

Honeywell appeals, challenging [4] the sufficiency of Boyd's notice of its DTPA damage suit and other aspects of the trial. Because we must reverse on the notice issue, we need not discuss its other claims.

Notice Under DTPA

* Formerly Carolyn Dineen Randall.

HN1[] DTPA Section 17.50 lays out several theories for "relief for consumers." Tex.Bus. & Comm.Code Ann. § 17.50(a) (Vernon Sup.1987). [1] Boyd's original complaint, filed without notice to Honeywell, contains a damage claim based on the "deceptive trade practices" theory. The amendment to Boyd's complaint, filed more than 30 days after Boyd had sent its notice letter to Honeywell, contains a damage claim based on the "unconscionable action" theory.

[5] We must determine the effect on Boyd's action of the DTPA's notice requirement. That requirement states:

> HN3[] As a prerequisite to filing a suit seeking damages under Subdivision (1) of Subsection (b) of Section 17.50 of this subchapter against any person, a consumer shall give written notice to the person at least 30 days before filing the suit . . .

Id. § 17.50A(a) (emphasis added).

Boyd maintains that "filing a suit" includes amending a "suit" already on file, one that contains a damage claim under Section 17.50, by adding a damage claim under another DTPA theory. In Boyd's view, because its "gross disparity" claim was different from the DTPA claim in its first complaint, the notice requirement for that claim should be measured from the date Boyd's complaint was amended to include the new claim. [2] Boyd cites Foster v. Daon Corp., 713 F.2d 148, 151 (5th Cir. 1983), which can be read as offering a degree of implicit support to this view. Foster involved a plaintiff who, like Boyd, failed to give adequate notice before filing her DTPA claim. Our Court reversed the trial court for failing to grant the plaintiff's initial request for [6] a temporary nonsuit without prejudice to allow her to refile the claim in thirty days. Id. After her request for a nonsuit was rejected, the Foster plaintiff, like Boyd here, tried to salvage her DTPA action by giving notice to the defendant and then adding a different DTPA claim. Because the two-year statute of limitations had all but run on her DTPA claims, however, the Foster plaintiff could not wait 30 days to file the new DTPA claim. The trial court disallowed the amendment, citing the 30-day limit. We held that the trial court should have allowed the addition of the new DTPA [*1315] claim under the statutory exception in Section 17.50A(b). [3] Id. at 152. Implicit is that a failure to give notice before filing a DTPA suit does not bar the addition of a different DTPA damage claim by amendment, so long as adequate notice is given before the date of the amendment.

[7] Honeywell maintains, for its part, that no effective notice can be given while a DTPA lawsuit is pending, another unnecessarily broad contention that we need not accept or reject in toto in order to decide today's case. This argument is powerfully supported, however, by clear language in Section 17.50A(a): Because Boyd failed to give notice 30 days before "filing a suit" asking for DTPA damages, Boyd's original DTPA claim as well as any new DTPA claims Boyd seeks to add to the same suit are disallowed by Section 17.50A(a). Honeywell correctly notes that HN5[] the primary purpose of the DTPA notice requirement is to discourage litigation and encourage settlement, in particular, out-of-court settlement. See Jim Walter Homes, Inc. v. Valencia, 679 S.W.2d 29, 36 (Tex.App. -- Corpus Christi 1984), aff'd as modified, 690 S.W.2d 239 (Tex.1985); Blumenthal v. Ameritex Computer Corp., 646 S.W.2d 283, 286 (Tex.App. -- Dallas 1983, no writ). This purpose is frustrated if plaintiffs are permitted to evade the notice requirements by filing suit first and giving the initial notice later, at a time when fees and expenses

---

[1] HN2[] Among other things, it grants a right of action for "unconscionable action" and "deceptive trade practices" by a seller. Id. § 17.50(a)(1), (3). " Unconscionable action" is defined by Section 17.45(5) and "deceptive trade practices" are defined by Section 17.46(b). Section 17.50(b)(1) gives consumers a right to actual damages and provides for treble damages against a seller whose acts are "committed knowingly."

[2] As will become apparent, we need not and do not address or decide this contention in today's case: one in which no notice of any kind was given before the initial action was filed.

[3] Section 17.50A(b) provides:

> HN4[] If the giving of 30 days' written notice is rendered impracticable by reason of the necessity of filing suit in order to prevent the expiration of the statute of limitations or if the consumer's claim is asserted by way of a counterclaim, the notice . . . is not required. Id. § 17.50A(b).

have already been incurred, [8] when the matter is already before the court, and when the hope of a settlement without litigation has been cast away; nor does Texas authority appear to countenance such a course of procedure.

HN6[] Several Texas Appeals court cases, for example, provide that the only way to correct a DTPA suit filed with inadequate notice is to stop and start over again: a dismissal with leave to refile the suit thirty days after giving notice. Reed v. Israel National Oil Company, Ltd., 681 S.W.2d 228, 239-40 (Tex.App. -- Houston [1st Dist.] 1984, no writ), held that, HN7[] in a contract suit later amended to include a DTPA damage claim, the notice requirement related back to the time when suit was initially filed, not to the time of the amendment. Id. at 240. [4] Reed cites the "relation back" theory applied in Providence Hospital v. Truly, 611 S.W.2d 127 (Tex.App. -- Waco 1981, writ dism'd) as offering guidance. See Reed, 681 S.W.2d at 240. The court in Truly, though silent on causes of action added by amended pleadings, is cited for allowing a "relation back" of pleadings based on the "same transaction or occurrence." Id. [9] This reasoning must apply a fortiori where, as here, the initial complaint contains a DTPA claim. The Reed court noted that:

> HN8[] Section 17.50A . . . states specifically that the required notice must come "before the suit was filed"; it does not speak to causes of action added by amended pleadings.

Id. (Emphasis added).

Honeywell also cites authority for the proposition that, in a DTPA suit filed without adequate notice that erroneously proceeds to a treble damage award, either the case must be remanded for an abatement proceeding, or the damages [10] must be reduced to actual damages, see Sunshine Datsun, 680 S.W.2d at 654-55; see Hollingsworth Roofing v. Morrison, 668 S.W.2d at 872, 875 (Tex.App. -- Ft. Worth 1984, no writ); Blumenthal, 646 S.W.2d at 287. The most recent decision which our research has discovered is to like effect as these authorities. In Certainteed Corporation v. Cielo Dorado Development, Inc., 733 S.W.2d 246 (Tex.App. -- El Paso 1987, writ granted), HN9[] a judgment under the DTPA [*1316] was reversed for the giving of the required thirty day notice where the only evidence that any notice whatever had been given was testimony by the plaintiff's attorney that "a demand letter was sent . . . pursuant to the Deceptive Trade Practices Act." Id. at 249. Holding that the DTPA required that notice be given of "the amount of actual damages claimed as well as attorney's fees and other expenses," that the testimony quoted wholly failed to establish that this was done, and that "the statute is to be enforced as interpreted by its express language," [5] the court reversed.

[11] In today's case, no notice whatever was given before suit was filed; and the DTPA judgment therefore cannot stand. To countenance such an entire failure to comply with the Act's notice requirement before bringing suit would frustrate its purpose to encourage settlement and minimize litigation, and we cannot do so. Faced with the extreme case presented, we need not and do not decide whether, in view of Texas's policy allowing free amendment of pleadings, the amending of a properly-noticed existing DTPA action to incorporate a new DTPA theory after thirty days notice of the proposed new theory would suffice to permit the eventual entry of judgment on that theory. We decide only that proper notice of a DTPA action must be given before suit is initially brought if the treble damages remedies of the DTPA are to be granted in the case. Insofar as Foster v. Daon, supra, may be read to the contrary, we conclude that Texas decisions handed down subsequent to it require that we hold as we do.

Waiver

---

[4] Although the Texas Supreme Court apparently has not addressed this issue, Sunshine Datsun, Inc. v. Ramsey, 680 S.W.2d 652, 655 (Tex.App. -- Amarillo 1984, no writ), suggests that the Texas Supreme Court's construction of the mandatory presuit notice requirements of statutes similar to the DTPA supports Honeywell (citing Schepps v. Presbyterian Hospital of Dallas, 652 S.W.2d 934 (Tex.1983)).

[5] Citing to Cail v. Service Motors, Inc., 660 S.W.2d 814, 815 (Tex.1983).

Boyd contends that even if its notice was inadequate Honeywell waived any objection to it. Boyd's brief states that the holding of Pool Company v. Salt Grass Exploration, 681 S.W.2d 216 [12] (Tex.App. -- Houston [1st Dist.] 1984, no writ), is that > failure to raise with specificity the defects in a DTPA notice letter by either motion or a plea in abatement constitutes a waiver [sic] of such claim. (Emphasis added).

Boyd Brief at 18. [6] This greatly overstates the holding. Pool Company held that HN10[] a defendant who, until appeal, raised no objection whatever to the inadequacy of the DTPA notice or to testimony about the DTPA cause of action waived its right to object on appeal. See Id. at 219.

Boyd's other waiver arguments are based on minor deficiencies in Honeywell's amended answer: Honeywell's pleadings refer to the lack of notice as an "affirmative defense" and do not specify that it was a lack [13] of DTPA notice that Honeywell asserts. Boyd contends that Federal Rules of Civil Procedures 8(b) and 9(c), among other pleading rules, require that Honeywell be held to have waived its right to object to Boyd's notice. We reject these arguments. There is no doubt that Boyd's DTPA notice letter was in issue in the trial court; its order in connection with its judgment address the matter. There was no waiver.

Conclusion

For the reasons stated, the judgment of the trial court is REVERSED and the cause is REMANDED for further proceedings consistent with our holdings.

End of Document

[6] The brief's use of "emphasis added," in parenthesis, gives the (doubtless unintended) impression that Boyd is quoting from Pool Company. While some of the words come from different parts of the opinion, we do not find this precise language in it.

H & W Industries, Inc. v. Formosa Plastics Corp.

United States District Court for the Northern District of Mississippi, Eastern Division

February 22, 1988, Decided

No. EC87-382-NB-D

Reporter

687 F. Supp. 271 *; 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4486 ; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,914

H & W Industries, Inc., Plaintiff v. Formosa Plastics Corporation, USA, Formosa Plastics Corporation, Texas , and J-M Manufacturing Company, Defendants

Subsequent History: [1] Motion for Reconsideration Denied, May 13, 1988. Reported at: 687 F. Supp. 271 at 276.

Core Terms

resin, pipe, pounds, plants, preliminary injunction, terminated, supplies, monopolization, cancellation, injunction, antitrust, Plastics, shortage, notice, prices, ship

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Trade Secrets Law > Federal Versus State Law > Antitrust Law

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > Fraud

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > Misappropriation

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > Public Interest

Trade Secrets Law > Breach of Contract > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Misappropriation Actions > General Overview

HN1[] Injunctions, Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

To secure a preliminary injunction, a plaintiff must show: (1) a substantial likelihood of success on the merits; (2) a substantial threat of irreparable injury if an injunction is not issued;(3) the threatened injury to the plaintiff outweighs the damage the injunction might cause the defendant; and(4) the injunction will not disserve the public interest.

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Form, Formation & Readjustment > General Overview

HN2[] Sales (Article 2), Form, Formation & Readjustment

A party may waive a provision in a contract limiting modification to a signed writing through a persistent pattern of conduct which ignores the limiting provisions. Miss. Code Ann. § 75-2-209(4) (1972).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Oral Agreements

Commercial Law (UCC) > ... > Form, Formation & Readjustment > Statute of Frauds > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Types of Statutes

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Form, Formation & Readjustment > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > ... > Statute of Frauds > Exceptions > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > ... > Statute of Frauds > Exceptions > Merchant Rule

Contracts Law > Statute of Frauds > General Overview

Contracts Law > Statute of Frauds > Requirements > Signatures

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Output & Requirements Contracts

HN3[] Types of Contracts, Oral Agreements

The Uniform Commercial Code provision, Miss. Code Ann. § 75-2-201(2) allows merchants to enter oral contracts for over $ 500.00 by sending a confirmation letter. Unless the letter is signed by the party to be charged, it must be performed within 15 months or it falls within Mississippi's general statute of frauds, Miss. Code Ann. § 15-3-1 (1972).

Contracts Law > Statute of Frauds > General Overview

Contracts Law > ... > Estoppel > Equitable Estoppel > General Overview

Contracts Law > ... > Affirmative Defenses > Estoppel > Statute of Frauds

HN4[] Contracts Law, Statute of Frauds

Neither past performance nor a claim of equitable estoppel can avoid the defense of the statute of frauds.

Commercial Law (UCC) > ... > Contract Terms > Gap Filler Provisions > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > ... > Contract Provisions > Contract Terms > General Overview

HN5[] Contract Terms, Gap Filler Provisions

A contract for an indefinite period cannot be perpetual but may be terminated at any time after giving reasonable notice. Miss. Code Ann. § 75-2-309 (1972).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Defenses > Impossibility

HN6[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

In order to show specific intent to monopolize, a plaintiff must show that a defendant has the ability to do so. A low market share may make attempted monopolization an impossibility as a matter of law. Absent special circumstances, a defendant must have a market share of at least 50 percent before he can be guilty of monopolization.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN7[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

As a matter of law, a parent corporation may favor its subsidiary so long as it does not lead to control of the relevant market.

Counsel: John M. Edgar, Ronald L. Holt, Kansas City, Missouri, James R. Moore, Jr., Jackson, Mississippi, H. Scott Spragins, Oxford, Mississippi, for Plaintiff.

Thomas J. Suszek, Oxford, Mississippi, for Defendant.

Judges: Neal B. Biggers, Jr., United States District Judge.

Opinion by: BIGGERS

Opinion

[*272] MEMORANDUM OPINION

NEAL B. BIGGERS, JR., UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Comes now before the court the motion of the plaintiff, H & W Industries, Inc. ("H & W"), seeking a preliminary injunction against the defendants, Formosa Plastics Corporation, USA and Formosa Plastics Corporation, Texas ("Formosa"). Having considered the evidence, the parties' memoranda, and being otherwise fully advised of the premises, the court is in a position to rule on the merits.

I.

In 1978, Randy Heath began H & W Industries in Booneville, Mississippi to produce PVC pipe. H & W made the pipe by taking resin it purchased, adding materials to it, and forming pipe by a plastic extruding machine. Soon after Heath built the plant, H & W established another facility in Springfield, Kentucky.

In 1981, Heath traveled to the Formosa Plastics headquarters in Florham Park, New Jersey to discuss a resin supply contract. Heath met with the chairman and vice-president of Formosa, Y. C. Wang and Robert Chou. At the meeting Heath agreed [2] that H & W would purchase a portion of its resin needs from Formosa.

On August 17, 1983, Formosa and H & W signed an "evergreen" contract in which Formosa agreed to supply H & W 4,000,000 pounds of resin each month. The contract contained a provision which stated the contract could only be modified by an agreement signed by both parties. It also included a clause which provided the contract could be cancelled 120 days after receipt of written notice.

In 1983, Formosa formed a subsidiary, J-M Manufacturing ("J-M") which purchased eight PVC pipe plants from Johns-Manville Corporation. Initially, J-M had the capacity to produce 300,000,000 pounds of PVC pipe each year. Formosa supplied J-M with most of its resin requirements.

According to Heath, at the time J-M entered the market the PVC pipe market was highly competitive. The market had numerous pipe producers and had an overabundance of resin selling at low prices. He testified that Formosa could not sell all the resin it produced.

In 1984, Robert Chou called Heath and asked him to purchase more resin from Formosa. According to Heath, Chou wanted Heath to run his plant at full capacity and to expand his business. Heath testified [3] that he agreed to purchase more resin if Formosa would extend H & W's credit terms. Heath said Chou agreed to this, and H & W began to purchase 4,000,000 to 8,000,000 pounds of resin each month from Formosa.

In the summer of 1985, Robert Chou asked Heath to come to New Jersey to meet with Y. C. Wang. Heath and Wayne Hamilton, H & W's vice-president, went to Florham Park, New Jersey on August 22, 1985. According to Heath and Hamilton, Wang wanted H & W to purchase all of its resin supplies from Formosa and wanted H & W to run its plants at optimum capacity. Hamilton and Heath testified that Heath agreed to purchase 80% of the resin requirements for the Booneville and Springfield plants. In return, Heath said Wang agreed to sell resin at a competitive price and promised not to curtail H & W's resin supplies during a time of shortage. After returning to Booneville, Hamilton wrote a letter to Bob Chou setting forth his understanding of the parties' agreement. The letter indicated that Formosa would supply 80% of H & W's resin needs and Formosa would charge H & W the same price Formosa's competitors charged for resin. (Plaintiff's Exhibit 1.) Hamilton testified that after the August meeting [4] he believed [*273] Formosa and H & W had entered a long-term contract which could only be terminated by a mutual agreement.

Between September, 1985 and March, 1986, H & W purchased between 88% and 174% of H & W's resin requirements from Formosa. (Plaintiff's Exhibit 37.) According to Heath and Hamilton, H & W accommodated Formosa by purchasing more resin than the Springfield and Booneville plants needed. In March, 1986, Heath refused to purchase resin from Formosa because their price was too high. (Plaintiff's Exhibit 4.)

On April 1, 1986, H & W began to operate the Hunter PVC pipe plant in Lincoln, Alabama and started shipping resin there in June. In November, 1986, Hamilton formed Southern Louisiana Plastics and leased a PVC plant in Slidell, Louisiana. H & W began shipping resin there too.

According to Heath, in the fall of 1986, there was less resin available in the U. S. market. In December, 1986, Formosa began to cut H & W's resin supply. Heath said he continually asked Formosa for 11,000,000 pounds per month and tried to purchase resin from other suppliers, but the market was tight and prices were high.

In early 1987, J-M purchased PVC pipe manufacturing plants in Horton, Texas and [5] Fontana, California. While J-M was expanding, Formosa increased its supply of resin to J-M and decreased its supply to H & W. In February, 1987, Formosa began charging H & W more for resin than it charged J-M. (Plaintiff's Exhibit 56.)

On February 1, 1987, H & W owed Formosa $ 13,700,000 for resin of which $ 6,600,000 was overdue. On February 10, 1987, Gordon Miller, Formosa's new assistant credit manager, wrote Heath and asked that H & W pay its overdue account to get it within 90-day payment terms. (Plaintiff's Exhibit 7.)

In early February, Robert Chou told H & W that Formosa would reduce H & W's resin shipments. Hamilton sent a mailgram objecting to the reduction and demanding more resin. (Plaintiff's Exhibit 9.) Ben Chein, Formosa's coordination manager, wrote Hamilton asking that H & W get its account in order. Chein explained that Formosa was concerned about releasing a resin shipment when H & W's account was $ 4,784,382.61 overdue. (Plaintiff's Exhibit 8.) On March 2, Ben Chein wrote Hamilton that Formosa would send only four rail cars. He told Hamilton that Formosa would not fill H & W's entire order because of a price disagreement and because H & W owed $ 5,178,280.38 which [6] was past due. Chein warned Hamilton that if H & W failed to pay, Formosa would stop making any shipments. (Plaintiff's Exhibit 11).

The same day, Hamilton responded to Chein's February 24 letter. In his letter, Hamilton disagreed with the amount H & W owed and demanded that Formosa ship twenty-one rail cars to make a 10,000,000 pound per month quota he claimed Formosa agreed to. (Plaintiff's Exhibit 10.)

On March 3, Hamilton and Heath met with Ben Chein, Bob Chou and Gordon Miller to arrange a payment schedule for H & W. At the meeting H & W agreed to accept 4,500,000 pounds of resin per month until June and promised to pay Formosa to get its account within 90-day payment terms. During the meeting, Heath invited Miller to Booneville to examine H & W's records. (Plaintiff's Exhibits 12 & 14.)

Miller went to Booneville on March 10 and examined H & W's inventory and accounts receivable. Miller testified that he asked Heath for an audited financial statement. Miller said Heath told him H & W did not have an audited statement but claimed H & W was worth between $ 22,000,000.00 and $ 27,000,000.00. A financial statement introduced into evidence indicated that H & W was worth $ 5,159,901.05 [7] in March, 1987. (Defendant's Exhibit 1A.)

On June 3, 1987, Ben Chein wrote Heath in reply to an order for 8,000,000 pounds of resin. Chein told Heath he could only ship 6,800,000 pounds in June because of production problems. (Plaintiff's Exhibits 15 & 17.) On June 30, 1987, Chein wrote Heath explaining that he could only ship 6,000,000 pounds of resin in July due to Formosa's production problems. (Plaintiff's [*274] Exhibit 19.) Heath objected to these reductions. (Plaintiff's Exhibit 18.)

On August 25, Occidental Chemical Corporation sent J-M notice of cancellation of "a resin supply contract" with J-M. (Defendant's Exhibit 915.) On August 21, Formosa sent H & W notice of cancellation of the resin supply contract and told Heath that Formosa wanted to operate under a new contract with H & W. (Plaintiff's Exhibits 20 & 22.) On December 16, 1987, Formosa sent Heath the new contract in which Formosa agreed to supply H & W 4,500,000 pounds of resin each month. Formosa asked Heath to sign the contract and return it by December 31, 1987. (Plaintiff's Exhibit 27.)

Instead of signing the new contract, H & W sought relief from this court by way of a temporary restraining order. On December 31, 1987, [8] this court entered an ex parte temporary restraining order on the representation of counsel that Formosa had a contractual obligation to supply 11,000,000 pounds of resin to H & W each month. H & W asks the court to keep that order in effect by way of a preliminary injunction and asserts that H & W also is entitled to an injunction because Formosa's resin reduction would enable J-M to succeed in monopolizing the PVC pipe market, contrary to federal law.

II.

HN1[] To secure a preliminary injunction, H & W must show:

(1) a substantial likelihood of success on the merits;

(2) a substantial threat of irreparable injury if an injunction is not issued;

(3) the threatened injury to H & W outweighs the damage the injunction might cause Formosa; and

(4) the injunction will not disserve the public interest.

Canal Authority of the State of Florida v. Callaway, 489 F.2d 567, 576 (5th Cir. 1974). H & W asserts six causes of action against Formosa, namely: breach of contract; fraud; misappropriation of trade secrets; defamation; wrongful interference with business relations; and antitrust violations. Initially, the court will ascertain whether H & W has a breach of contract claim against Formosa.

[9] At trial and in its briefs, H & W claims the parties agreed to a new contract on August 22, 1985. Heath and Hamilton testified that Wang agreed to supply H & W with 11,000,000 pounds of resin each month at the same price Formosa's competition charged and that Formosa would not terminate the contract during a resin shortage. H & W points to the letter Hamilton sent Formosa as a confirmation of the contract. See Miss. Code Ann. § 75-2-201 (2) (1972). Formosa argued that their 1983 contract with Formosa limited its modification to an agreement signed by both parties. Formosa pointed out that the letter was not signed by Formosa; thus, it is not enforceable. See Miss. Code Ann. § 75-2-209(2) (1972).

HN2[] A party may waive a provision in a contract limiting modification to a signed writing through a persistent pattern of conduct which ignores the limiting provisions. Miss. Code Ann. § 75-2-209(4) (1972); Corenswet, Inc. v. Amana Refrigeration, Inc., 594 F.2d 129, 136 (5th Cir. 1979); City of Mound Bayou v. Roy Collins Constr. Co., 499 So. 2d 1354, 1359-60 (Miss. 1986). By supplying H & W with more than 4,000,000 pounds of resin each month as agreed to in the 1983 contract, Formosa [10] waived the provision limiting modification. Even so, the agreement H & W claims Formosa made in August, 1985, must meet the requirements of the statute of frauds. Miss. Code Ann. § 75-2-209(3) (1972).

H & W argues that Hamilton's letter to Formosa confirmed the terms of H & W's agreement with Formosa, thus meeting the requirements of Miss. Code Ann. § 75-2-201(2) (1972).

This statute, however, does not provide an exception to Mississippi's general statute of frauds, Miss. Code Ann. § 15-3-1 (1972), rather it compliments it. HN3[] The Uniform Commercial Code provision, § 75-2-201(2) allows merchants to enter oral contracts for over $ 500.00 by sending a confirmation letter. Unless the letter is [*275] signed by the party to be charged, it must be performed within fifteen months or it falls within Mississippi's general statute of frauds. See Roberts v. Southern Wood Piedmont Co., 571 F.2d 276, 278 (5th Cir. 1978) (applying the general statute of frauds to an oral output agreement).

Both Heath and Hamilton testified that Formosa and H & W made a permanent agreement in August, 1985, which they expected to last several years. As such the oral agreement falls within the general statute of frauds. [11] Roberts v. Southern Wood Piedmont Co, 571 F.2d at 278 (5th Cir. 1978); Stahlman v. National Lead Co. 318 F.2d 388, 395 (5th Cir. 1963). HN4[] Neither past performance nor a claim of equitable estoppel can avoid the defense of the statute of frauds. Ivey's Plumbing & Elec. v. Petrochem Maintenance, Inc., 463 F. Supp. 543, 552-554 (N.D. Miss. 1978); Affiliated Investments, Inc. v. Turner, 337 So. 2d 1263, 1268 (Miss. 1976).

Even if the court could ignore the statute of frauds and accepted Hamilton's letter as a contract, H & W is not entitled to specific performance by way of a preliminary injunction. Hamilton's letter did not provide a termination date. Hamilton and Heath claimed that Formosa orally agreed to a long-term contract which could not be terminated during a resin shortage.

HN5[] A contract for an indefinite period cannot be perpetual but may be terminated at any time after giving reasonable notice. Miss. Code Ann. § 75-2-309 (1972); King v. Exxon Co. USA, 618 F.2d 1111, 1118-1119 (5th Cir. 1980); Bel-Mar Ford Tractor v. Woods & Copeland Mfg., 602 F.2d 1199, 1200 (5th Cir. 1979). Formosa sent H & W notice of cancellation on August 31, 1987, four months before it [12] cancelled the contract. Consequently, Formosa effectively terminated its supply contract with H & W.

H & W is not entitled to a judgment on its contract claim as a matter of law. As a result, the claim will be dismissed and cannot serve as a basis for a preliminary injunction. The only remaining claim which gives rise to the possibility for injunctive relief is H & W's claim that Formosa violated section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act. See Walker v. U-Haul Co. of Mississippi, 734 F.2d 1068 (5th Cir. 1984).

III.

H & W claims that Formosa and J-M tried to monopolize the PVC pipe market and that Formosa is likely to achieve that end. See [Spectrofuge Corp. v. Beckman Instruments, Inc., 575 F.2d 256, 275 (5th Cir. 1978)], cert. denied., 440 U.S. 939, 59 L. Ed. 2d 499, 99 S. Ct. 1289 (1979).

H & W argued that the court should look solely to the area of the country in which H & W sold its pipe and determine whether Formosa seeks to control that market. Heath testified that in 1986 J-M controlled between 30% and 50% of the market in the Southeastern United States where H & W sold pipe. He claimed Formosa secured a 40% to 70% market share by 1987. Heath based his figures on a general [13] feeling he got from talking to sales people in the PVC business.

Even if the court accepts H & W's definition of the relevant market, the plaintiff's own document shows that J-M controlled only 19% of the PVC market in the Southeast and 17.5% in the United States. (Plaintiff's Exhibit 47.) HN6[] In order to show specific intent to monopolize, H & W must show J-M has the ability to do so. Dimmitt Agri Industries, Inc. v. CPC Int'l, Inc., 679 F.2d 516, 533 (5th Cir. 1982). A low market share may make attempted monopolization an impossibility as a matter of law. Domed Stadium Hotel, Inc. v. Holiday Inns, Inc., 732 F.2d 480, 490 (5th Cir. 1984). ". . . Absent special circumstances, a defendant must have a market share of at least fifty percent before he can be guilty of monopolization." Id. at 489.

H & W claims the shortage of resin gives Formosa and J-M the ability to control the PVC pipe market. H & W did not show what part of the resin market Formosa controlled. The only proof of this was the testimony of the defendant's expert, Dr. Paul Oliver. He testified that Formosa has 11.6% of the resin market in the United States. Consequently, neither Formosa nor J-M has the ability [14] to control either the [*276] resin or the PVC market. This is evidenced by Formosa's attempt and failure to raise the resin prices in March, 1986.

H & W failed to show the degree to which the resin shortage was a barrier of entry into the PVC pipe producing industry. The only evidence before the court was Heath's testimony that resin supplies were growing short and resin prices were rising. Heath admitted he had been offered resin at higher prices than he paid Formosa, but he declined to purchase the resin. He complained that by limiting the amount he could purchase, Formosa made J-M more competitive than H & W.

As the market price for resin rose, Formosa charged J-M less for it and supplied J-M with all the resin it needed. When Formosa did this, J-M became competitive and began showing a profit in 1987. It made economic sense for Formosa to favor its wholly owned subsidiary. HN7[] As a matter of law, a parent corporation may favor its subsidiary so long as it does not lead to control of the relevant market. J.T. Gibbons, Inc. v. Crawford Fitting Co., 704 F.2d 787, 795 (5th Cir. 1983). The proof showed that J-M would probably have 22% of the PVC market in the Southeastern United States in [15] 1988. This share is not enough to give J-M control of the PVC pipe market.

H & W's antitrust claim relies on Heath's unsupported conclusions about the PVC industry and the resin market. Such evidence is insufficient to establish the essential elements of an antitrust suit. See J. T. Gibbons, 704 F.2d at 793. As a result, this claim will be dismissed.

An order in accordance with this memorandum opinion will issue.

THIS, the 22nd day of February, 1988.

AMENDED ORDER

In accordance with the memorandum opinion issued this day, it is hereby ORDERED that:

(1) the plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction is DENIED;

(2) Count I of the plaintiff's complaint for breach of contract is dismissed; and

(3) Count VI of the plaintiff's complaint for violation of section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act is dismissed.

THIS, the 22nd day of February, 1988.

Phototron Corp. v. Eastman Kodak Co.

United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas, Fort Worth Division

February 22, 1988, Decided ; February 22, 1988, Filed

Civil Action No. CA4-87-910-E

Reporter
687 F. Supp. 1061 *; 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5128 **

Phototron Corporation, v. Eastman Kodak Company, et al.

Core Terms

finishing, wholesale, pricing, antitrust, enjoined, market share, markets, preliminary injunction, competitors, predatory, retail, Clayton Act, photofinishing, labs, injunctive relief, photographic, combined, amateur, Colorwatch, chemicals, percent, color, film, monopoly, parties, entity, sales, limited record, merger, acquisition

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Injunctions

HN1[] Private Actions, Standing

Section 16 of the Clayton Act provides in part that any person, firm, corporation, or association shall be entitled to sue for and have injunctive relief, in any court of the United States having jurisdiction over the parties, against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws, when and under the same conditions and principles as injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity, a preliminary injunction may issue. 15 U.S.C.S. § 26.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Section 7 of the Clayton Act prohibits mergers when the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly. 15 U.S.C.S. § 18.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Evidence > Types of Evidence > Demonstrative Evidence > Photographs

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > Public Interest

HN3[] Injunctions, Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

When seeking injunctive relief, the moving partying bears the burden of persuasion on each of the following elements: (1) substantial likelihood that it will prevail on the merits; (2) a substantial threat that it will suffer irreparable injury if the injunction is not granted; (3) that the threatened injury to it outweighs the threatened harm the injunction may do to the defendant, and (4) that the granting the preliminary injunction will not disserve the public interest.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Injunctions

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

HN4[] Remedies, Injunctions

An entitlement to injunctive relief requires a showing that the purported injury cannot be undone through monetary remedies.

Counsel: [1] Richard Lee Brown, S. Gary Werley, Bishop, Payne, Lamsens & Brown, Fort Worth, Texas, for Phototron Corporation.

Joseph L. Alioto, Joseph M. Alioto, Alioto & Alioto, San Francisco, California, for Phototron Corporation.

Daniel R. Shulman, Gray, Plant, Mooty, Mooty & Bennett, Daniel R. Shulman, Minneapolis, Minnesota, for Phototron Corporation.

Marvin S. Sloman, Fletcher L. Yarbrough, Tyler A. Baker, Vikram Chandhok, Carrington, Coleman, Sloman & Blumenthal, Dallas, Texas, for Eastman Kodak Company.

E. Glen Johnson, Kelly, Appelman, Hart & Hallman, Fort Worth, Texas, for Fuqua Industries, Inc. and Colorcraft Corporation.

Charles E. Koob, Joseph F. Tringali, Kathryn A. Clokey, Simpson Thacher & Bartlett, New York, New York, for Fuqua Industries, Inc. and Colorcraft Corporation.

Judges: Eldon B. Mahon, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: MAHON

Opinion

[*1062] MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

ELDON B. MAHON, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Phototron seeks a preliminary injunction to enjoin Kodak and Colorcraft from combining their United States photo finishing operations. The requirement that the judiciary be candid is perhaps absolute: [1] the Court admits that the question presented here is close. But for the reasons stated below, the Court finds that the proposed combination must be [2] preliminarily enjoined [2] [3] until the merits of this action can be reached, as the Defendants' consolidated operations may tend to harm competition in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act. [3]

In sum, the Court concludes the following solely for the purpose of determining whether a preliminary injunction should issue:

1. Phototron has standing to challenge the proposed combination;

2. For the purposes of analyzing the proposed combination under Section 7 of the Clayton Act, wholesale photo finishing is the relevant product market;

3. In light of alleged predatory pricing activities and preferential pricing practices, the proposed combination may substantially lessen competition in the national market for the procurement of wholesale photo finishing services in violation Section 7 of the Clayton Act; and,

4. Phototron is threatened with significant loss or damage within the meaning of Section 16 of the Clayton Act as a result of the proposed combination, and preliminary injunctive relief should enter to prevent threatened violations of the Act.

I. FACTS AND PROCEEDINGS

---

[1] Shapiro, In Defense of Judicial Candor, 100 Harv. L. Rev. 731, 750 (1987).

With characteristic honesty and eloquence, Learned Hand recognized this fundamental tension, perhaps paradox, reposed in the antitrust laws. Having concluded that Congress "did not condone good trusts and condemn bad ones; it forbad all," he announced with equal fervor, "the successful competitor, having been urged to compete, must not be turned upon when he wins." United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416, 430 (2d Cir. 1945).

[2] HN1[] Section 16 of the Clayton Act provides in pertinent part:

> Any person, firm, corporation, or association shall be entitled to sue for and have injunctive relief, in any court of the United States having jurisdiction over the parties, against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws . . ., when and under the same conditions and principles as injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity . . . ., a preliminary injunction may issue.

15 U.S.C.A. § 26 (West Supp. 1987).

[3] HN2[] Section 7 of the Clayton Act prohibits mergers when the "effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly . . . ." 15 U.S.C.A. § 18 (West Supp. 1987).

The parties mutually agreed that Phototron's Application for Preliminary Injunction would [4] be decided upon affidavits and memoranda of law without an evidentiary hearing. On February 5, 1988, oral argument was heard; counsel for both sides presented fine and thoroughly-prepared arguments. The Court emphasizes that this issue is being decided based upon limited documentary evidence; this limitation results solely from the parties' agreement. There has been no discovery. While the evidence submitted in support of and in opposition to the preliminary injunction "need not be repeated" at trial, [4] it should be understood that any fact finding made here is not irrevocably set in stone. Since the scope and weight of the evidence may change as the action proceeds, so may these fact findings. With that admonition in mind, the Court submits the following. [5] [*1063] These findings of fact and conclusions of law are based solely upon the affidavits, exhibits, briefs, arguments, and file developed thus far in this cause.

[5] The Plaintiff Phototron Corporation ("Phototron") has brought an action against Defendants Eastman Kodak Company ("Kodak"), Fuqua Industries, Inc. ("Fuqua"), and Colorcraft Corporation ("Colorcraft"). In addition to its causes of action under Texas common law, Phototron has asserted that the Defendants have violated Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, and Section 7 of the Clayton Act.

The Defendants Kodak, Fuqua, and Colorcraft have entered into an agreement to combine the photo finishing operations of Kodak and Colorcraft. Kodak and Colorcraft have agreed to postpone the consummation of this transaction until February 22, 1988. The Court agreed to issue a ruling on Phototron's Motion for Preliminary Injunction at that time.

Colorcraft is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Fuqua Industries. Fuqua conducts its photo finishing operations through Colorcraft. Phototron, Kodak, and Colorcraft all provide wholesale photo finishing services. The photo finishing industry is composed of amateur and professional laboratories. There is no dispute that, for purposes of market determination, professional and amateur labs are essentially noncompeting and that only the labs developing the photographs [6] of amateurs must be considered here.

Nor is there any serious dispute between the parties that the amateur photo finishing industry is divided, basically, into four segments or "product markets": [6] [7] (1) "instant" photo finishing services where photo finishing is accomplished on-site at "minilabs"; (2) large integrated processing labs ("captive photofinishing labs") tied to major retail establishments, who process photographs in their own facilities; [7] (3) retail "mail-order" operations where

---

[4] Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(a).

[5] Rule 52(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provides in pertinent part: "In granting or refusing interlocutory injunctions the court shall similarly set forth the findings of fact and conclusions of law which constitute the grounds of its action. Requests for findings are not necessary for purposes of review."

Rule 65(a) recognizes this fact-finding requirement. It states that even when the hearing on the application for a preliminary injunction is not consolidated with a trial on the merits, "any evidence received upon an application for a preliminary injunction which would be admissible upon the trial on the merits becomes part of the record on the trial and need not be repeated upon the trial."

[6] The "relevant market" concept entails two separate considerations: (1) the product market or "line of commerce"; and (2) the geographic market or "section of the country." See, e.g., Indiana Farmer's Guide Publishing Co. v. Prairie Farmer Publishing Co., 293 U.S. 268, 279, 79 L. Ed. 356, 55 S. Ct. 182 (1934).

> The outer boundaries of a product market are determined by reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it. However, within this broad market, well-defined submarkets may exist which, in themselves, constitute product markets for antitrust purposes.

Brown Shoe Company v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 82 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962).

[7] Wal-Mart and Eckerd Drugs would be stores with their own "minilab" for film processing.

photographs are sent to large-scale photo finishing laboratories for processing; and, (4) wholesale processing labs that market photo finishing to retailers on a competitive basis.

The parties also agree, or at least for the purposes of argument assume, that the relevant geographic market is the national market. Based upon the record, the Court also agrees that the national market is the applicable one. It is at this point -- the point of determining the relevant product market -- that the parties and the experts part company.

The Plaintiff's expert contends that wholesale photo finishing is the relevant economic market for antitrust analysis. Kodak and Colorcraft each have engaged an expert. Their experts contend that all sources of photo finishing services that are available to amateurs -- in addition to the wholesale photo finishing market -- should be included in the relevant market. All three experts are knowledgeable, well-qualified, and respected economists.

For the limited purpose of determining whether a preliminary injunction should issue, the Court finds that Phototron's expert is the most persuasive since he emphasizes the actual conditions in the photo finishing marketplace [8] [9] and the theoretical [*1064] implications of the proposed combination. [9] Hence, for [8] the consideration of the issue at hand, the relevant product market will be that segment of the amateur photo finishing market defined above as "wholesale photofinishing labs that market photofinishing to retailers on a competitive basis."

In 1954, Kodak had a near absolute monopoly in the color photo finishing market. [10] During that same year, Kodak entered into a consent decree with the Justice Department which dramatically changed the structure of this market. "Kodak was forbidden to link photofinishing to film sales, and it agreed to make its processing technology, chemicals and paper available to rivals at reasonable rates." [11] As a result of the consent decree, Kodak reduced its overall market share in photo finishing from 96 % in 1954 to 10% in 1976. However, since 1976, Kodak appears to have embarked upon a series of acquisitions to increase its share of the wholesale photo finishing market.

In 1985, Kodak owned 10 photo finishing laboratories. In December of 1986, Kodak purchased Fox Photo ("Fox") which itself had previously acquired a number of photo finishing plants. At the time of its acquisition, Fox owned 20 such laboratories. In October of 1987, Kodak acquired American Photo Group Corporation, gaining 20 more wholesale photo finishing plants [10] with this acquisition, Qualis Photofinishing Company, and CX Corporation.

---

[8] In his Affidavit Professor Saving writes:

> The "quick" finishing market is separate and distinct from the wholesale photofinishing market in that it represents those consumers who place a high value on time. The Photofinishing Industry Report indicates that in 1986 minilab processing had an average cost of $ 8.23. Film processed in large labs ranged in cost from $ 5.36 retailed at Department Stores, $ 5.34 retailed at Drug Stores, $ 4.71 retailed at Discount Stores, $ 4.23 retailed at Supermarkets, and $ 3.85 retailed through mail order. The weighted average retail cost of photofinishing in large labs was $ 4.57. Thus, minilab film processing was 80 percent more costly than large lab processing. This large price differential is suggestive of significant market segmentation.
>
> . . . .
>
> Important for the issue at hand is the fact the "captive" labs do not represent a source of processing for retail outlets that are not part of the integrated system. Thus, even though the "captive" photofinishing labs are part of the overall supply of photofinishing services, they may not exert significant competitive pressure on the price and terms upon which the independent wholesale photofinishing lab services are available.

Affidavit of Thomas R. Saving at pp. 5-6.

[9] See infra slip op. at pp. 8-10.

[10] Berkey Photo, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263, 270 (2d Cir. 1979).

[11] Berkey, 603 F.2d at 271.

Fuqua has also demonstrated a proclivity for acquiring its competitors. In 1985, Fuqua purchased Berkey Photo, Inc. In 1987, Colorcraft, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Fuqua, bought Magnicolor Photo Labs, which had six wholesale photo finishing plants. If the Kodak-Colorcraft combination takes place, there will be a dramatic concentration of the wholesale photo finishing industry compared to the industry that existed just three years ago. [12]

In 1986, the amateur photo finishing market had a 4.169 billion-dollar value. Wholesale photo finishers account for approximately 17 to 22 percent of the amateur photo finishing market by value. According to Phototron's expert, this 17 to 22 percent market share translates into a dollar volume [11] for wholesale finishers of between $ 704 and $ 911 million. Kodak is estimated by industry sources to have sales of wholesale photo finishing of $ 300 million. Using the conservative figure of $ 911 million, Kodak now has approximately a 33 percent share of the wholesale photo finishing market.

The proposed merger with Colorcraft would increase this market share. Colorcraft owns 41 photo finishing labs. It had wholesale photo finishing sales of almost $ 300 million in 1986. [13] [12] The Kodak-Colorcraft transaction would result in a firm with 94 large wholesale photo finishing laboratories and projected sales of $ 600 million in sales. Since the entire wholesale photo finishing market is $ 911 million, the [*1065] combination of Kodak and Colorcraft will have a market share of 66 percent. The market share of the proposed Kodak-Colorcraft firm measured in terms of sheer numbers of large photo finishing labs is also in line with the dollar-value percentage. [14] The Kodak-Colorcraft combination will produce a combined market share between these two entities of somewhere between 66 to 85 percent in wholesale photo finishing.

This increased market share is particularly relevant since Kodak maintains a dominant position in both producing and supplying raw materials that are used in photo finishing. The materials market consists of photochemicals and paper. Of the firms that supply these materials, Kodak possesses almost 80 percent of the materials market. Kodak occupies a similar position in regard to color and black and white film used by amateur photographers. Phototron's expert states that the "amateur photographer, the largest customer of photographic products and services, purchases more than 80 percent of his film from Kodak." [15] Based upon the record as presented, Kodak will have achieved, after the proposed combination, extensive vertical integration in all three related markets: (1) wholesale photo finishing, (2) photo finishing materials, and (3) color film.

This vertical [13] integration is particularly enhanced by Kodak's "Colorwatch" program. "Colorwatch" is an advertising program which requires retail outlets to limit their selection of wholesale photo finishing firms to those who exclusively utilize Kodak photo finishing materials. Phototron's expert describes the program as follows:

> Kodak requires that wholesale processing labs that process film for Colorwatch customers use only Kodak chemicals and paper for all their photofinishing independent of whether or not that photofinishing is for a Colorwatch customer. Kodak's unique advantage over its competitors stem from the fact that Kodak can advertise its name, thereby enhancing sales of both film, photofinishing materials, and photofinishing services. Because Kodak, owns only a small market share of retail outlets, it cannot directly control the retailers' selection of a wholesale photofinishing firm. However, if through advertising of the Colorwatch seal, Kodak can gain customer preference for retail outlets displaying the colorwatch seal, then Kodak can expand its sales of photofinishing materials. [16]

---

[12] After the proposed combination, there will be only four or five separate entities with more than local scope in the wholesale photofinishing market. They are: the Plaintiff Phototron, Fotomat, and Guardian Photo (a member of the Kodak "Colorwatch" program). None of the remaining competitors operating a national scale will have one-fifth of the combined size of the defendants.

[13] Colorcraft had $ 265 million and Magnicolor, a newly acquired subsidiary, had $ 35 million.

[14] The Kodak-Colorcraft combination would represent more than 55 percent of all wholesale photofinishing labs, or 94 out 170 large non-captive wholesale photofinishing labs in the United States. Affidavit of Thomas R. Saving at p. 8.

[15] Affidavit of Thomas R. Saving at p. 9; Affidavit of Joseph T. Borkowski at p. 4.

[16] Affidavit of Thomas R. Saving at p. 10. The Colorwatch program is also fully explained in paragraph 15 of the Plaintiff's Complaint.

[14] The Kodak's expansion into the wholesale photo finishing labs through the proposed combination gives Kodak the ability to limit entry into the wholesale photo finishing market. This is especially onerous where Phototron and its Affiant, Joseph T. Borkowski, have alleged predatory pricing activities on the part of the Defendants. It is alleged, both in Phototron's verified Complaint and in President's Affidavit, that Kodak and Colorcraft have quoted prices to retailers which demonstrate their subsidiary wholesale photo finishers are either "operating at a loss, or are receiving discounts from Kodak on color print paper and chemicals." [17] Although the record before the Court is limited, it will support a finding that the proposed Kodak-Colorcraft combination will enable the combined entity to effectuate the below-cost pricing activity Phototron alleges it has already engaged in.

In light of the alleged predatory pricing activities, the dominant position that the proposed Kodak-Colorcraft entity would occupy in the wholesale photo finishing market -- considered jointly with the leverage Kodak maintains through its vertical integration [15] in related markets of photo finishing materials and color film -- severely threatens Phototron's ability to compete [*1066] for business from retail outlets. After the proposed combination, Kodak and Colorcraft will have significantly increased power to purchase paper and chemicals at reduced prices, while forcing Phototron to purchase the same items at a higher price.

Thus, considered as a whole, the limited record before the Court supports two findings of the utmost importance: (1) that the alleged below-cost pricing activities and preferential pricing practices of Kodak and Colorcraft will "lessen competition" and "tend to create a monopoly;" [18] and (2) that these predatory practices will create a substantial likelihood of significantly impairing, perhaps even destroying, Phototron's business. The loss of Phototron as an independent competitor in the wholesale photo finishing marketplace would further reduce competition and increase the combined entity's alleged monopoly power.

II. LEGAL DISCUSSION AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

A. Standing to Enjoin

Phototron's standing to enjoin the proposed Kodak-Colorcraft combination is heavily disputed. In [16] this regard, the applicability of only one case is in issue: Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 107 S. Ct. 484, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986). The Defendants insist that this recent Supreme Court case prevents the Court from reaching the substance of Phototron's antitrust claims. When viewed in the aftermath of Cargill, the Defendants argue, the Plaintiff lacks standing to challenge this joint venture. The Court disagrees. Phototron has standing to enjoin the proposed combination.

In Cargill, the Excel Corporation, [19] the second-largest entity in both the cattle slaughtering and boxed beef production markets, sought to merge with the third largest competitor in those markets, Spencer Foods. [20] IBP, Inc., not a party to the Cargill action, was the largest beef packer in the United States. After the proposed combination, the relative market shares in the beef industry would have appeared as follows:

Market		Market
IBP, Inc.	24.4%	IBP, Inc.	27.3%
Defendants	20.4%	Defendants	20.4%
Plaintiff	5.5%	Plaintiffs

[17] Affidavit of Joseph T. Borkowski at p. 5.

[18] 15 U.S.C.A. § 18 (West Supp. 1987).

[19] Excel was a wholly-owned subsidiary of Cargill.

[20] Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 107 S. Ct. 484, 487, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986).

[17] It is important to note that even after the Excel-Spencer merger, their combined market share would still not have exceeded that of the largest market participant, IBP. The Plaintiff, Monfort, the nation's fifth largest beef packer, brought an action under section 16 of the Clayton Act seeking to enjoin the prospective merger. [21]

The parties in Cargill agreed to consolidate, under Rule 65(a), the motion for preliminary injunction with a full trial on the merits. Plaintiff Monfort never alleged or proved a scheme of predatory pricing on the part of the Defendants. The District Court in its Memorandum Opinion twice made note of this omission. [22] Yet, the District Court found "that the effect of the proposed acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly . . . ." [23] The District Court, pursuant to section 16 of the Clayton [18] Act, permanently enjoined the merger. The Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed the District Court's ruling but was reversed on appeal to the Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court defined predatory pricing as "pricing below an appropriate measure of cost for the purpose of eliminating competitors in the short run and reducing competition in the long run." [24] [19] [*1067] The Court found that Monfort's allegations and proof did not support a finding of this essential form of antitrust injury. The Supreme Court found that Monfort's injury resulted only from increased competition, not anticompetitive tactics on the part of the Defendants. Since price competition was not a predatory activity and no allegation had been made that Excel would act with predatory intent after the merger, the Court concluded that "Monfort neither raised nor proved any claim of predatory pricing before the District Court." [25] The linchpin of the Cargill decision is the requirement that a plaintiff seeking to permanently enjoin an allegedly unlawful business combination must allege and prove an actionable antitrust injury which results from the proscribed combination. [26]

In this cause, the Defendants' insistence that Phototron lacks standing to attack the Kodak-Colorcraft joint venture stems from their overly broad interpretation of Cargill. The case at hand is distinguishable on three grounds.

First, in Cargill, the Supreme Court reached its conclusion after there had been a complete trial on the merits. Hence, the requirement that a plaintiff seeking relief under section 16 of Clayton Act plead and prove a related antitrust injury. The parties in Cargill agreed to a consolidated trial on both the preliminary injunction and the merits of the case. Here, the parties reached no similar agreement. Only the issue of preliminary injunctive relief is before the Court. Thus the holding of Cargill applies [20] to this case in a more limited sense. Phototron must allege an antitrust injury which flows from the proposed Kodak-Colorcraft combination and sustain only that burden of proof which would entitle it to preliminary, not permanent, injunctive relief.

---

[21] Cargill, 107 S. Ct. at 487-88.

[22] Cargill, 107 S. Ct. at 494.

[23] Monfort of Colorado, Inc. v. Cargill, 591 F. Supp. 693, 710 (D. Colorado 1983).

[24] Cargill, 107 S. Ct. at 493. The caselaw of the Fifth Circuit is in accord with the requirement that pricing to be predatory must be "below cost." In Adjusters Replace-A-Car v. Agency Rent-A-Car, Inc., 735 F.2d 884, 890-91 (5th Cir. 1984), the Court wrote:

> In sum, although we follow with interest the continuing debate over theories of predation, the law in this circuit is that where barriers to entry are not pronounced predatory pricing is not established unless the defendant has set his price below his average variable cost.

The Court pointed out in a footnote that "when a legitimate dispute arises as to the characterization of certain costs [fixed or variable], the question is one of fact to be resolved by the jury." Adjusters, 735 F.2d at 891.

[25] Cargill, 107 S. Ct. at 494.

[26] Cargill, 107 S. Ct. at 491 (citing Brunswick Corporation v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977)). The Court wrote: "We conclude that in order to seek injunctive relief under § 16, a private plaintiff must allege threatened loss or damage of the type the antitrust laws were designed to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Id.

Second, unlike the plaintiff in Cargill, Phototron has made the requisite allegations in its Complaint and, as will be seen in Part II(B) of this Opinion, made the applicable showing required for equitable injunctive relief. [27]

In paragraph 15(i) of its verified Complaint, Phototron alleges a predatory pricing scheme:

> Wholesale photo finishing plants owned by defendant Kodak, [21] defendant Colorcraft, and Guardian have charged prices for photo finishing services to actual and potential retail customers of plaintiff that are substantially below the prices plaintiff can charge and still operate profitably, and that reflect that defendant Kodak's wholly owned plants and plants owned by defendant Colorcraft, Guardian, and others are either paying substantially lower prices for Kodak photographic paper and chemicals than is plaintiff, receiving concession, inducements, and other considerations that are equivalent to lower prices for Kodak photographic paper and chemicals, or operating unprofitably or at substantially reduced profit margins for at least the [*1068] short term, until plaintiff is forced to go out of business or sell to defendants or their surrogates.

Below-cost pricing is further alleged in the Affidavit of Joseph T. Borkowski, President of Phototron:

> Wholesale photo finishers controlled by Kodak and Colorcraft have approached major retail accounts of Phototron with photo finishing prices competitive with or below the photo finishing prices offered to these same customers by Phototron. The prices quoted by wholesale photo finishers controlled by Kodak [22] and Colorcraft demonstrate either that such wholesale photo finishers are operating at a loss, or are receiving discounts from Kodak on color print paper and chemicals . . . . [28]

Thus, Phototron has adequately alleged "threatened loss or damage of the type the antitrust laws were designed to prevent . . . ." [29]

Third, the antitrust injury Phototron claims it has or will suffer is sufficiently related to the Defendants' proposed, and allegedly unlawful, combination. [30] This related antitrust injury is markedly different than the injury the plaintiff in Cargill alleged -- an injury which resulted only from increased competition. Two striking differences between the case at hand and Cargill bear this out.

[23] The first critical distinction arises in terms of market share. Even after the proposed merger in Cargill, the defendants would have had only 20.4 % of the relevant market. The Cargill defendants would have occupied only a second-place position of dominance in the relevant market in vigorous competition with the dominant firm, IBP. But this is not the case before the Court. Here, the Defendants are the two largest competitors in the wholesale photo finishing market. They will double this market share through the proposed combination. This dominant market share is particularly important in light of Kodak's strong position in two related markets. Kodak is the dominant supplier to the photo finishing industry. It is also the dominant manufacturer of conventional color photographic film. [31] Kodak's

---

[27] The movant bears the burden of proving the four elements necessary for the issuance of a preliminary injunction:

> (1) a substantial likelihood of success on the merits; (2) a substantial threat that the movant will suffer irreparable injury if the injunction is not issued; (3) that threatened injury to the movant outweighs any damage the injunction might cause to the opponent; and (4) that the injunction will not disserve the public interest.

Gearhart Industries, Inc. v. Smith International, Inc., 741 F.2d 707, 710 (5th Cir. 1984).

[28] Affidavit of Joseph T. Borkowski at pp. 4-5. See also Plaintiff's Supplemental Memorandum of Law at p. 4 ("Kodak and Colorcraft photo finishers have been quoting prices to Phototron customers at levels that are either below cost or that reflect paper and chemicals pricing substantially below list.") (emphasis added).

[29] Cargill, 107 S. Ct. at 491.

[30] "The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation." Brunswick Corporation v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977).

[31] The record before the Court supports this finding. Mr. Borkowski states in his Affidavit:

dominance in these related markets leads the Court to the second distinguishing factor concerning relevant and related markets which arises in this case but was not present in Cargill.

[24] Cleverly, the Defendants argue that Phototron's injury does result from the proposed Kodak-Colorcraft transaction. "Rather, the allegation complains of actions allegedly taken by Kodak in the implementation of the Colorwatch program." [32] This argument is not without merit. But based upon the record as presented and considered as a whole, the Court finds that the Colorwatch program is sufficiently related to the Kodak-Colorcraft transaction so that it could reasonably be said that the proposed combination will further expand and aggravate the antitrust injury which flows from the Defendant's alleged predatory pricing activity. The further facilitation of these alleged activities would constitute "threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws" to Phototron's business. [33]

[*1069] A review of the limited record before the Court uncovered no convincing evidence which would militate against such a finding. Rather, Kodak's dominance in related markets supports it. The Cargill case is particularly dissimilar in this regard. There, the proposed combination [25] created no threat of dominance in either the relevant or related markets. [34]

For the reasons stated above, Phototron has standing to challenge the proposed combination.

B. Standards Governing the Issuance of an Injunction

HN3[] When seeking injunctive relief, the moving partying bears the burden of persuasion on each of the following elements: (1) substantial likelihood that it will prevail on the merits; (2) a substantial threat that it will suffer irreparable injury if the injunction is not granted; (3) that the threatened injury to it outweighs the threatened harm the injunction may do to the defendant, and (4) that the granting the preliminary injunction will not disserve the public interest. [35] When the wholesale photo finishing is considered the relevant product market, Phototron has met its burden of persuasion on each of these elements.

[26] 1. Substantial Likelihood of Success on the Merits

Section 7 of the Clayton Act prohibits acquisitions or combinations the effect of which is substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly. [36] Based upon the limited record before the Court and its preliminary finding that wholesale photo finishing is the relevant product market, the combination in issue here is the type precluded by section 7.

The Kodak Colorcraft combination will possess between 66 and 85 percent of the wholesale photo finishing market. Because of previous acquisitions, [37] the whole sale photo finishing market has diminished in size to only two major national entities (the Defendants). If this combination is not enjoined, at least until the structure of the wholesale

---

Kodak both sells the film that customers return to retailers for processing by wholesalers, and supplies the materials, i.e., color print paper and chemicals, that wholesale photo finishers primarily use to develop the film delivered to them by retail customers. In both markets, Kodak possesses a dominant share, at least 80%.

[32] Defendants' Memorandum in Opposition to Plaintiff's Motion for Preliminary Injunction at p. 8.

[33] 15 U.S.C.A. § 26.

[34] Cargill, 107 S. Ct. at 487. See also Plaintiff's Supplemental Memorandum of Law at p. 8 ("this case presents vertical aspects that render the injury to Phototron much different from that threatened in Cargill . . . .").

[35] Canal Authority v. Callaway, 489 F.2d 567, 572 (5th Cir. 1974); Gearhart Industries, Inc. v. Smith International, Inc., 741 F.2d 707, 710 (5th Cir. 1984).

[36] 15 U.S.C.A. § 18 (West Supp. 1987).

[37] See supra note 12 and accompanying text.

photo finishing market can be thoroughly examined, a strong case can be made that there will be only one wholesale photo finishing entity operating on a national scale. The concentration threatened here is even more severe than that condemned in other Supreme Court cases. [38]

[27] This proposed combination also has another menacing aspect: vertical integration. Kodak is not only a horizontal competitor of Colorcraft, but also a substantial, arguably predominant, supplier of raw materials to the wholesale photo finishing industry. This position of dominance and control, considered in conjunction with Kodak's influence over Colorcraft through the "Colorwatch" program, seriously threatens competition not only in the wholesale photo finishing services market but also in the color print paper and chemicals market. This form of vertical integration when analyzed in conjunction with the horizontal aspects of the proposed combination leads the Court to the conclusion that if combination is not enjoined, at least preliminarily, its effect will be to substantially less competition and tend to create a monopoly. [39] The need for immediate temporary relief is further support by Phototron's prima facie showing of predation at the photo finishing level. [40]

[*1070] Moreover, the Court cannot ignore Kodak's long history of anticompetitive behavior. [41] In United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 334 U.S. 131, 68 S. Ct. 915, 92 L. Ed. 1260 (1948), the Supreme [28] Court stated that "the fact that the power created by size was utilized in the past to crush or prevent competition is potent evidence that the prerequisite purpose or intent attends the presence of monopoly power." [42] The limited record currently developed in this cause -- a record replete with conflicting expert and lay affidavits -- requires the Court to cautiously heed the direction given by the Supreme Court, its master all judicial matters.

The Court's analysis has focused primarily on the Phototron's likelihood of success on its section 7 claim. Having found that Phototron has met [29] its burden of persuasion in proving a likelihood of success on this claim, the Court mentions only in passing that Phototron bears a similar chance success on its claims arising under sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. This likelihood of success on the Sherman Act claims rests on the Court's preliminary determination of the applicable product market. Based upon the limited record before the Court, it has found that the wholesale photo finishing market is the relevant one. The alleged 66 to 85 percent market share that the Kodak-Colorcraft combination would possess clearly evidences the type of combination, monopoly, or attempted monopolization that sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act prohibit.

For the reasons stated above, Phototron has sustained its burden of persuasion and shown that it has a substantial likelihood of success on the merits of its claim arising under section 7 of the Clayton Act. [43] [30] Section 7 is

---

[38] See, e.g., United States v. Pabst Brewing Co., 384 U.S. 546, 551, 16 L. Ed. 2d 765, 86 S. Ct. 1665 (1966); United States v. Von's Grocery Co., 384 U.S. 270, 277, 16 L. Ed. 2d 555, 86 S. Ct. 1478 (1966); Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 300, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962).

[39] 15 U.S.C.A. § 18 (1982)

[40] See supra slip op. at pp. 15-16.

[41] See Eastman Kodak Co. v. Southern Photo Materials Co., 273 U.S. 359, 71 L. Ed. 684, 47 S. Ct. 400 (1927) (verdict upheld against Kodak for monopolizing photographic material and supply markets); United States v. Eastman Kodak Co., No. 6450, 1954 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,920 (W.D.N.Y. Dec. 21, 1954) (consent decree eliminating Kodak processing charge included in purchase of film); Berkey Photo, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263, 299-305 (2d Cir. 1979) (upholding Kodak's violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act), affirming in part, 457 F. Supp. 404 (S.D.N.Y. 1978).

[42] 334 U.S. 131, 174, 92 L. Ed. 1260, 68 S. Ct. 915 (1948).

[43] See, e.g., Productos Carnic, S.A. v. Central American Beef & Seafood Trading Co., 621 F.2d 683, 686 (5th Cir. 1980) ("a showing of some likelihood of success on the merits will justify temporary injunctive relief") (emphasis original).

designed to stop "mergers at a time when the trend to a lessening of competition in a line of commerce [is] still in its incipiency." [44]

2. Substantial Threat of Irreparable Injury

This "lessening of competition" is precisely the type of harm that Phototron and other remaining competitors are threatened with in the wholesale photo finishing marketplace. "Antitrust laws . . . were enacted for the protection of competition, not competitors." [45] This threat of harm is significantly acerbated by (1) the predominant share of the wholesale photo finishing market the Kodak-Colorcraft combination would possess, [46] (2) the horizontal and vertical leverage in both the relevant and related markets that the combined entity could exercise, and indeed in the past has exercised, and (3) the prima facie showing made by Phototron that Kodak has priced its wholesale photo finishing services and raw materials below cost.

[31] From this predation and loss of competition flows antitrust injury. Activities which threaten this form of injury are may [*1071] be enjoined under section 16 of the Clayton Act if under similar circumstances a court of equity would grant injunctive relief. [47] HN4[] An entitlement to injunctive relief requires a showing that the purported injury cannot be undone through monetary remedies. [48] As the movant, Phototron bore the burden of proving that monetary damages would not be an adequate remedy for the alleged antitrust injury.

Phototron has met that burden. Based on the limited record before the Court, the present situation demonstrates the threat of irreparable injury and no adequate legal remedy. Phototron is threatened with the loss of its business. As its verified complaint states, Phototron has already lost several major accounts. If this pattern persists, Phototron could go out of business, further reducing competition in an arguably already monopolized wholesale photo [32] finishing market.

Over the last two years, Phototron has sustained substantial losses; sales have fallen nearly 50 percent. This limited record supports a finding that these losses may be attributable to the predatory pricing practices of Kodak and Colorcraft. [49] This inference is further sustained by the fact finding that Kodak occupies a dominant position in the conventional photographic film and the color print paper and chemicals markets. Both are major competitors in the wholesale photo finishing markets; if combined, no comparable competitor will exist on a national scale.

---

[44] Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 317-18, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962).

[45] Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 107 S. Ct. 484, 489, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986) (quoting Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977), and Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962)).

[46] The Court again emphasizes, in an overabundance of caution, that it refers only to the relevant product market as the Court has defined it for the limited purpose of determining whether preliminary injunctive relief should issue.

[47] 15 U.S.C.A. § 26 (West Supp. 1987).

[48] See, e.g., Interox America v. PPG Industries, Inc., 736 F.2d 194, 202 (5th Cir. 1984); Spiegel v. City Houston, 636 F.2d 997, 1001 (5th Cir. 1981).

[49] See Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 130, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129, 89 S. Ct. 1562 (1969) (injunctive relief is available "even though the plaintiff has not yet suffered actual injury; he need only demonstrate a significant threat of injury from an impending violation of the antitrust law or from a contemporary violation likely to continue or recur"); Humana, Inc. v. Jacobson, 804 F.2d 1390, 1394 (5th Cir. 1986) (threatened loss of 50 % of plaintiff's business entitled it to preliminary injunction).

Two other factors which require injunctive relief must also be considered here in addition to Phototron's [33] irreparable harm. First, Courts continue to struggle with the question of divestiture as a private remedy. [50] Second, Phototron and other competitors may close. Indeed, as a result of the Kodak-Colorcraft combination, the Defendants will begin the "rationalization of production facilities and labor forces." [51] Jobs will be lost, physical assets sold, and commercial arrangements permanently altered. This is the sort of "scrambled eggs" that cannot be "unscrambled" through monetary damages. [52]

For the reasons stated above, Phototron has persuasively demonstrated the threat of irreparable harm if the proposed combination is not preliminarily enjoined.

3. Threatened Injury Verses [34] the Damage of Injunctive Relief

Given the lengthy explication of its decision to grant injunctive relief, the Court will briefly address the remaining two elements required for the issuance of a preliminary injunction.

As noted above, the third required element is that the threatened injury to the movant outweigh any damage the injunction might cause the opponent. Here, this requirement poses little difficulty; Phototron has again met its burden of persuasion. The severe and potentially devastating injury threatened to competition in the wholesale photo finishing marketplace and to Phototron's ability to continue as a going concern far outweigh any damage that the injunction may cause the Defendants. [*1072] The interests of the Defendants will be adequately protected by Phototron's posting of security to cover any losses that may result from an improper delay of the combination. As noted below in the Court's Order, a hearing to determine the amount of the bond has already been scheduled.

4. Preliminary Injunction Will Not Disserve the Public

The fourth requirement for the issuance of a preliminary injunction has also been met by Phototron; namely, that the injunction will not disserve the [35] public interest. Clearly, preserving competition is the underlying purpose of the federal antitrust laws. [53] The public has an interest in maintaining a free and open marketplace. In light of Phototron's prima facie showing of predation and antitrust jury here, this interest will be preserved by temporarily enjoining the proposed combination until the nature of the wholesale photo finishing market can be completely and fully examined.

ORDER

For the reasons set forth fully above, the Defendants Kodak, Fuqua, and Colorcraft are PRELIMINARILY ENJOINED from consummating their agreement to combine the photo finishing operations of Kodak and Colorcraft. A hearing is set for 2:00 p.m., Tuesday, February 23, 1988, to determine the amount of security to be provided by Phototron pursuant to Rule 65(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

End of Document

---

[50] Compare International Tel. & Tel. Corp. v. General Tel. & Elec. Corp., 518 F.2d 913, 920-25 (9th Cir. 1975) (no divestiture allowed) with NBO Industries Treadway Cos. v. Brunswick Corp., 523 F.2d 262, 278-79 (3d Cir. 1975), vacated on other grounds, 429 U.S. 477, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977) (allowing divestiture).

[51] Affidavit of William P. McCarrick at p. 4.

[52] See, e.g., Doran v. Salem Inn, Inc., 422 U.S. 922, 932, 45 L. Ed. 2d 648, 95 S. Ct. 2561 (1975) (irreparable injury present when businesses would be closed).

[53] Brunswick Corporation v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977).

United Air Lines, Inc. v. Austin Travel Corp.

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

February 24, 1988, Decided ; February 24, 1988, Filed

No. 87 Civ. 1262 (MP)

Reporter

681 F. Supp. 176 *; 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1318 ; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,903

United Air Lines, Inc., Plaintiff, v. Austin Travel Corporation, et al., Defendants

Subsequent History: As Modified, February 29, 1988.

Core Terms

Travel, contracts, airline, liquidated damages, monopoly power, air, charges, terms of the contract, monthly, termination, markets, convention, override, counterclaims, variable, monopolization, vendors, lease, terms, Subscriber, represents, antitrust, bookings, invoiced, probative evidence, genuine, statute of frauds, travel agency, travel agent, calculated

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > Directed Verdicts

HN1[] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

Summary judgment will be rendered only when no genuine issue as to any material fact exists. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). In assessing whether the evidence presents a genuine dispute as to a material fact, the court must apply the same standard that governs a directed verdict, i.e., whether, under the governing law, there can be but one reasonable conclusion as to the verdict. There is no issue for trial unless there is sufficient evidence favoring the nonmoving party for a jury to return a verdict for that party.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Implausible Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Allocation

HN2[] Burdens of Proof, Implausible Claims

The moving party in summary judgment bears the initial burden of establishing that no relevant facts are in dispute. The movant may discharge that burden upon a showing of an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case. Then, if the nonmoving party fails to make a sufficient showing on an essential element of its case with respect to which it has the burden of proof, no genuine issue of material fact exists and the moving party is entitled to summary judgment. The non-moving party must come forward with more persuasive evidence to support its claim than would otherwise be necessary if the factual context indicates that the claim is "implausible."

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3[] Sherman Act, Claims

There are two elements to a valid monopolization claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act, codified at 15 U.S.C.S. § 2: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market, and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Antitrust

HN4[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

It must be established that a business possesses a dominant position in the market to establish a valid monopolization claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN5[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The existence of monopoly power is the primary requisite to a finding of monopolization. Monopoly power is defined as the power to control prices or exclude competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6[] Sherman Act, Claims

Three elements must be established in an attempt to monopolize claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2: 1) anticompetitive or exclusionary conduct; 2) specific intent to monopolize, and 3) a dangerous probability that the attempt will succeed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN7[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

A tying arrangement is an agreement by a party to sell one product, the tying product, but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different, or tied, product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN8[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

The law requires proof of the existence of five elements to establish an antitrust violation due to illegal tying: (1) two distinct products; (2) evidence of actual coercion by the seller that forced the buyer to accept the tied product; (3) sufficient economic power in the tying product market to coerce purchaser acceptance of the tied product; (4) anticompetitive effects in the tied market; and (5) involvement of not an insubstantial amount of interstate commerce in the tied product market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > General Overview

HN9[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

The element of control is crucial. Tying arrangements are condemned when the seller has some special ability -- usually called "market power" -- to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market. Market power is synonymous with monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Lease Agreements > General Overview

HN10[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Tying arrangements need only be condemned if they restrain competition by forcing purchases or leases that would not otherwise be made; there must be a showing of acceptable evidence that an unreasonable restraint of competition occurred.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > Exclusive Dealing

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

HN11[] Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing, Exclusive Dealing

An exclusive dealing arrangement does not violate § 3 of the Clayton Act unless it is probable that performance of the contract will foreclose competition in a substantial share of the line of commerce affected.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN12[] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

Under 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act, three elements are necessary to state a claim for an actionable violation. A plaintiff must complain that (1) the alleged price discrimination meets the "in commerce" requirement, i.e., that either or any of the purchases involved are in commerce; (2) there has been discrimination in price between different purchasers of products of like grade and quality; and (3) the effect of the discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN13[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Robinson-Patman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(a).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN14[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Convention booking does not constitute a special submarket; rather such business is a treatment of volume bookings within the relevant general market of computerized reservations which neither requires nor utilizes special vendors or distinct customers. A discount operation for computerized reservations does not create a separate economic entity nor does it create a separate product so as to constitute a submarket.

Contracts Law > ... > Measurement of Damages > Foreseeable Damages > General Overview

Contracts Law > Breach > General Overview

Contracts Law > ... > Damages > Types of Damages > Liquidated Damages

HN15[] Measurement of Damages, Foreseeable Damages

A liquidated damage clause in a contract provides an estimate, made by the parties at the time they enter into their agreement, of the injury that would be sustained due to a breach of the agreement. Such provisions are enforced if the court is convinced that it is a genuine pre-estimate by the parties of the extent of injury that will be caused by a future breach of the contract.

Contracts Law > ... > Measurement of Damages > Foreseeable Damages > General Overview

Contracts Law > ... > Damages > Types of Damages > Liquidated Damages

HN16[] Measurement of Damages, Foreseeable Damages

A sum becomes a penalty rather than an enforceable damage liquidation clause if it is disproportionate to the damage which could have been anticipated from a breach of the contract, and which is agreed upon in order to enforce performance of the main purpose of the contract by the compulsion of this very disproportion.

Contracts Law > ... > Damages > Types of Damages > Liquidated Damages

HN17[] Types of Damages, Liquidated Damages

Under New York law, where the actual damages are uncertain and difficult to ascertain or prove, or are of a peculiarly speculative character, and the contract furnishes no data for their ascertainment, a stipulated amount which on the face of the contract does not appear to be unreasonable or disproportionate to the probable loss will be held to be one for liquidated damages rather than a penalty. The standard applicable is whether the provision constitutes a reasonable attempt to estimate damages which, though real, may be uncertain in amount.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions

Contracts Law > Personal Property > Personalty Leases > General Overview

Real Property Law > ... > Mortgages & Other Security Instruments > Transfers > Due on Sale Clauses

Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Lease Agreements > General Overview

HN18[] Contracts, Contract Conditions & Provisions

Acceleration clauses are upheld in long-term leases for equipment.

Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Waivers > General Overview

HN19[] Contract Conditions & Provisions, Waivers

Although either party to a contract may waive any of its provisions made for his benefit, the intent to waive must be clear and unambiguous.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Parol Evidence > General Overview

Evidence > Admissibility > Statements as Evidence > Parol Evidence

HN20[] Contract Interpretation, Parol Evidence

When an agreement has been reduced to writing, evidence of prior or contemporaneous agreements may not be offered to contradict, vary, or subtract from the terms of the writing.

Contracts Law > Statute of Frauds > General Overview

HN21[] Contracts Law, Statute of Frauds

An agreement not reduced to writing is not enforceable if by its terms it is not to be performed within one year from the making of the agreement. N.Y. Gen. Oblig. Law § 5-701 (1978 & Supp. 1987).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Oral Agreements

Contracts Law > ... > Affirmative Defenses > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

Contracts Law > Statute of Frauds > General Overview

Contracts Law > Statute of Frauds > Exceptions > General Overview

Contracts Law > Statute of Frauds > Exceptions > Partial Performance

Contracts Law > Statute of Frauds > Requirements > Performance

HN22[] Types of Contracts, Oral Agreements

Part performance that is clear, certain, and definite in object and design as to be unequivocally referable to the agreement, and which will precipitate a fraud if the agreement is not enforced, removes the action from the defense of the statute of frauds. The criteria for estopping the use of the statute of frauds defense are (i) a fraudulent oral promise by the defendant; (ii) upon which the plaintiff justifiably relies; (iii) by engaging in acts which are "unequivocally referable" to the oral promise; (iv) resulting in substantial injury to plaintiff. If the part performance is equally consistent with an explanation having a basis in other than the alleged oral agreement, however, such as an agreement that could be performed within a year, the part performance relied upon does not remove the agreement from the statute of frauds.

Counsel: [1] Covington & Burling, Roberts B. Owen, S. William Livingston, Jr., Carolyn F. Corwin, John E. Hall, Kaye, Scholer, Fierman, Hays & Handler, Michael Malina, Attorneys for Plaintiff.

Cravath, Swaine & Moore, David Boies, Stephen S. Madsen, Alan B. Vickery, Rodney L. Stenlake, Attorneys for Defendants.

Judges: Milton Pollack, Senior United States District Judge.

Opinion by: POLLACK

Opinion

[*178] DECISION AND OPINION

PLAINTIFF'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

MILTON POLLACK, Senior United States District Judge

Plaintiff United Air Lines, Inc. ("United") moves for dismissal of the defendant's defenses and counterclaims and for judgment in plaintiff's favor on the complaint, pursuant to Rule 56, Fed. R. Civ. P. The suit is brought to recover unpaid accrued rentals and damages for breach of leases of equipment by plaintiff to defendant Austin Travel Corporation ("Austin") upon the latter's premature termination of the leases.

United contends that there is no genuine defense or counterclaim available to or asserted by Austin herein.

Austin has interposed affirmative defenses to the suit and asserted counterclaims, both of which are largely posited on purported anti-trust law violations by United, its lessor. The defendant's pleading is predicated on the premise [2] that United possesses monopoly power in the relevant CRS market and in the air passenger business. Four species of anti-trust violation are charged against plaintiff, viz., 1) monopolization and attempt to monopolize; 2) exclusive dealing contracts foreclosing competition; 3) tie-ins in restraint of trade and [*179] competition; and 4) price discrimination in restraint of competition.

Defendant's counterclaims include demands for an injunction and voiding of plaintiff's subscriber agreements allegedly as part of an unlawful scheme to monopolize the local and national markets for computerized reservation systems and airline passenger services and to engage in unlawful anticompetitive practices in those markets, in violation of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and §§ 2 and 3 of the Clayton Act. The counterclaims also assert violations of New York antitrust law.

Austin also claims it had a five year oral contract to be paid 5% override commissions on airline flown revenue in addition to the stipulated 10% commission provided for in the written contract of the parties. United denies any such obligation as is claimed by Austin and points to the written contracts which contain no such provision.

[3] I. Procedural History

The complaint herein was filed February 26, 1987. After the Answer was interposed the parties engaged in extensive discovery of documents and took the depositions of a number of witnesses.

On October 15, 1987, plaintiff served notice of motion pursuant to Rule 56, Fed. R. Civ. P., and Rule 3(g) of the Civil Rules of this Court for summary judgment in plaintiff's favor on the grounds that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that as a matter of law plaintiff is entitled to relief and defendants are not entitled to relief.

In response thereto, defendant filed five and one-half inches of briefs and appendices containing governmental reports, e.g., Comments and Proposed Rules of the Department of Justice, Notice of Proposed Rulemaking from the Civil Aeronautics Board (CAB), Rules of the CAB, Report from the General Accounting Office on Airline Competition and Hearings before the Subcommittee on Aviation of the Senate. In addition, the materials include affidavits, letters, the lease agreements, their assignments and lengthy (yet sometimes misleading) deposition excerpts.

The motion was duly argued and on November 30, 1987 the Court entered [4] an order directing that specified matters would be heard further on oral testimony. The Court's order stated in part that:

> The Court's effort to extract the facts significant to the motion has been significantly impeded by the nature and scope of the defendant's enormous submission. To pierce the doubts created whether genuine factual controversies, as distinct from mere differences of details, exist so as to warrant a trial of issues, the Court will direct that the following matters be heard further on oral testimony (Rule 43(e), Fed. R. Civ. P.). [The order details these matters.]

Prior to the hearing, defendant requested and was granted leave to take depositions of persons who had submitted affidavits in support of the motion for summary judgment.

The Court heard the alleged evidence on the specified issues which the defendant proffered to show the existence of a genuine issue for trial on relevant matter and due deliberation was had thereon. The requisite evidence thereof is found wanting. The defendant failed to submit admissible specific probative evidence in support of the relevant matter involved herein.

II. Standard for Decision -- Rule 56

HN1[] Summary judgment will be rendered [5] only when no genuine issue as to any material fact exists. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). In assessing whether the evidence presents a genuine dispute as to a material fact, the Court must apply the same standard that governs a directed verdict, i.e., whether, "under the governing law, there can be but one reasonable conclusion as to the verdict." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 2511, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). "There is no issue for trial unless there is sufficient evidence favoring the nonmoving party for a jury to return a verdict for that party." Id.

HN2[] The moving party bears the initial burden of establishing that no relevant facts are in dispute. Heyman v. Commerce & Indus. Ins. Co., 524 F.2d 1317, 1320 (2d Cir. 1975). The movant may discharge that [*180] burden upon a showing of an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 2554, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). Then, if "the nonmoving party . . . fail[s] to make a sufficient showing on an essential element of [its] case with respect to which [it] has the burden of proof," no genuine issue of material fact exists and the moving party is entitled to summary judgment. Id. at 2553. The non-moving party [6] must come forward with "more persuasive evidence to support [its] claim than would otherwise be necessary" if the factual context indicates that the claim is "implausible." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 1356, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986).

As stated by the Advisory Committee Notes to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the purpose of the summary judgment procedure is to pierce the pleadings and to assess the proof to see whether there is a genuine need for a trial. To that end, the Court employed the summary procedure of Rule 43(e), Fed. R. Civ. P., by ordering a hearing to assay the alleged probative evidence on several issues. See Argus Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 612 F. Supp. 904, 908-909 (S.D.N.Y. 1985), aff'd, 801 F.2d 38 (2d Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 1088, 107 S. Ct. 1295, 94 L. Ed. 2d 151 (1987). A hearing was held to aid the Court in extracting from the avalanche of submissions by Austin the facts significant to the motion solely on the issues of market share of United in the relevant markets, alleged substantial foreclosure of the competition of other vendors, United's use of alleged market power to force Austin to lease United's systems to the exclusion of [7] other systems, alleged price discrimination in restraint of trade, and the claimed unreasonableness of the liquidated damages provisions of the Apollo contracts.

At the hearing, defendant introduced literally no relevant admissible specific probative evidence on any of these issues. Austin relied upon inadmissible hearsay from irrelevant governmental publications, testimony of witnesses without first-hand knowledge of any facts relating to United's practices or to the relevant Long Island market, and speculative assertions unaccompanied by specific direct evidence. As described below, defendant has not raised any genuine issue of material fact by acceptable factual evidence. In fact, Austin introduced expert testimony that readily disposes of the monopolization and attempt to monopolize and tying counterclaims altogether. Plaintiff's motion for summary judgment will be granted for the reasons indicated herein.

III. Background

The underlying facts as to which it is admitted by defendant in the response to the Rule 3(g) statement by the plaintiff that there is no genuine issue to be tried are the following:

Plaintiff United Air Lines owns and markets to travel agents in Long Island [8] a computerized reservation system ("CRS") known as Apollo. Subscription agreements for Apollo require payment of installation, equipment and subscription charges and permit a travel agent to have access to a vast data bank that includes listings of flights of virtually all airlines, as well as information on many hotels, rental car companies, and other travel services. The agent can use the system to make bookings (or to change or cancel bookings), to print tickets and itineraries, to store relevant information about customers and their travel plans, and to perform a variety of other travel-related functions. United also markets a so-called Apollo Business System (ABS), which is a back-office accounting system that performs travel agency accounting, reporting and management reporting functions.

Among the CRS vendors in the United States are: American Airlines (which markets the "SABRE" system); United Air Lines (which markets "Apollo"); SystemOne Holdings Inc., a subsidiary of the Texas Air Group, which includes Continental and Eastern Airlines as well as others that have been merged into Continental (which markets the "SystemOne", or "SODA", system); Pars Marketing Corp., which is [9] owned by TWA and Northwest Airlines (and markets the "PARS" system); and [*181] Delta Airlines (which markets the "DATAS II" system).

American's SABRE system is the largest CRS in the United States. SABRE's national market share of CRS transactions for the years 1983 through 1985 exceeded 45%. Approximately 28% of the more than 28,000 travel agency locations in the United States use SABRE as the principal CRS.

Defendant Austin Travel is located and is the largest travel agency of the more than 1,000 travel agencies on Long Island. It is undisputed that prior to 1985 Austin Travel had always used the SABRE CRS at a majority of Austin's locations.

This suit involves United's subscription agreements covering three of Austin's thirteen agency locations on Long Island.

In 1985, Austin Travel had acquired two travel agencies on Long Island, both of which were Apollo subscribers: Karson Travel in Oceanside, New York and Fantasy Adventures in Great Neck, New York.

In August, 1985, Austin Travel executed an assignment agreement pursuant to which it assumed Karson's contract for Apollo Business Systems ("ABS").

In October, 1985, Austin Travel executed an assignment agreement pursuant to which it [10] assumed Fantasy Adventures' Apollo contract.

Also in October, 1985, Austin Travel executed a contract (with United) for use of Apollo in offices in Oceanside and in Mitchell Field, New York.

Austin Travel moved competing CRS systems into the three locations covered by its Apollo contracts. It moved SABRE into the Oceanside and Great Neck locations within a few months after it signed the Apollo contracts. Austin used SABRE along with Apollo at the Mitchell Field location, and it ultimately replaced Apollo with SystemOne at that location.

IV. United's Breach of Contract Claim

United seeks $ 423,155.09, representing unpaid accrued rentals and liquidated and consequential damages for breach of the contracts involved.

In or about June 1986 Austin Travel informed United that Austin intended to install SystemOne at the Mitchell Field location and that Austin Travel would prefer, if United would agree, to have the Apollo equipment installed at Mitchell Field picked up by United, rather than continuing to use it. In or about October 1986, Austin Travel repeated its request to United to remove Apollo equipment from the Austin Travel locations. As of June 1986, the Apollo contracts had not [11] expired and by their terms are stated to extend for periods of more than a year after June 1986. Austin Travel never paid United any amounts for the use of the equipment and services furnished to Austin under the said Apollo contracts referred to above.

Austin Travel informed United that Austin Travel did not intend to use Karson's ABS equipment. Consequently, in or about February 1986, United sent an ABS Suspension Amendment Agreement to Austin Travel, providing that Austin Travel could discontinue its use of ABS, but if it ceased to use Apollo before November 30, 1989, Austin Travel would be obligated to pay United $ 90,511.43 in liquidated damages under the July 1983 ABS Agreement. Austin contended in its papers that United had orally agreed to relieve Austin of its ABS obligations for a mere deinstallation fee. Austin failed to proffer any specific probative evidence, however, as to why the written agreement should not be enforced.

Austin Travel no longer uses United's Apollo CRS or United's ABS system. Austin Travel never purchased CRS terminals or other CRS equipment from United.

On June 3, 1986, William S. Lush, vice-president, Marketing Automation, Eastern Air Lines, wrote [12] to Austin Travel as follows:

Mr. Jeffrey Austin
Austin Travel
15 Charles Lindbergh
Mitchell Field, NY 11533
Dear Mr. Austin:

This letter is in reference to your existing agreement with United Airlines, Inc. for automated services with the APOLLO system at the above location.

[*182] If you should enter into an agreement with Eastern Air Lines, Inc. for automated reservations and ticketing services with Eastern's SYSTEMONE, this is to advise that Eastern will indemnify you with respect to liability to United Airlines arising from the APOLLO agreement, including any expenses and settlement costs associated with litigation that may stem from the termination, but excluding charges outlined in Paragraph 21C.

Very truly yours,

William S. Lush

The said letter was stamped "CONFIDENTIAL".

Since this lawsuit was initiated, Austin Travel has refused to permit United's sales representative to make sales calls at Austin Travel.

With respect to Austin's defenses to United's claim for damages for breach of contracts, Austin frivolously contends that plaintiff did not give notice of breach or an opportunity to cure and now fails to identify the nature of the breach. Plaintiff sent monthly invoices [13] which was sufficient notice and clearly identified defendant's breach, enumerating the damages sought. Austin agreed to the terms of the contracts; it used the Apollo Service, but it has never paid a penny for that use. Austin walked away from its contract obligations before the expiration of the terms of the contracts. The mathematics of United's claim are indisputable.

V. Defendant's Antitrust Counterclaims

A. Monopolization and Attempt to Monopolize

Defendant first counterclaims that plaintiff has a monopoly in the CRS or air passenger business and used its monopoly power to obtain, retain and enhance its power in those businesses, by engaging in exclusionary practices -- liquidated damage provisions in the subscription agreements, and so-called rollover and tying requirements -- in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2.

1. Monopolization

HN3[] There are two elements to a valid monopolization claim under Section 2: "(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." [14] United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966).

The relevant market is Long Island; that is the effective area of competition; defendant's travel agencies are located there and defendant would contract for United's services only in that area.

HN4[] It must be established that United possesses a dominant position in that market. Berkey Photo, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263, 272 (2d Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1093, 62 L. Ed. 2d 783, 100 S. Ct. 1061 (1980). Austin's experts conceded on cross-examination that no airline, excluding American Airlines, enjoys a monopoly in either the air carriage or the CRS market in the New York/Long Island area. Since the crux of a claim of monopolization is possession of monopoly power, and since United lacks monopoly power, Austin's claim fails.

HN5[] The "existence of monopoly power . . . is 'the primary requisite to a finding of monopolization.'" Id. Monopoly power is defined as "the power to control prices or exclude competition." United States v. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 391, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 (1956).

The record herein permits no reasonable inference other than that United lacks monopoly power in the CRS and the air passenger businesses in Long Island, or [15] elsewhere for that matter. The record contains no significant probative evidence concerning the market structure of the CRS and air passenger businesses to show that United's share of those markets give it monopoly power. See Broadway Delivery Corp. v. United Parcel Service of America, 651 F.2d 122, 129 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 968, 70 L. Ed. 2d 384, 102 S. Ct. 512 (1981); *Nifty Foods Corp. v. [183] Great Atlantic & Pac. Tea Co., 614 F.2d 832, 841 (2d Cir. 1980). There is an ample supply of substitutes for United to whom travel agents can turn to obtain CRS and ABS systems. Since United lacks monopoly power in the relevant market, the monopolization claim must be dismissed.

2. Attempt to Monopolize

Austin also claims an attempt to monopolize by United, in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. HN6[] Three elements must be established: 1) anticompetitive or exclusionary conduct; 2) specific intent to monopolize, and 3) a dangerous probability that the attempt will succeed. International Distrib. Centers, Inc. v. Walsh Trucking Co., 812 F.2d 786, 790 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 482 U.S. 915, 107 S. Ct. 3188, 96 L. Ed. 2d 676 (1987).

Austin's expert conceded on cross-examination that no reasonable or realistic risk exists [16] that United will achieve a monopoly of the CRS or air carrier business in the New York City/Long Island area. There being no probability, let alone a dangerous probability, that an alleged attempt to monopolize will succeed, Austin's claim must be dismissed.

B. Unreasonable Restraint of Trade

Austin's second antitrust counterclaim is for an unreasonable restraint of trade, resulting from supposed tie-in and exclusive dealing provisions in United's contracts with Austin, in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act and Section 3 of the Clayton Act.

1. Tying

HN7[] A tying arrangement is "an agreement by a party to sell one product [the tying product] but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product." Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 (1958).

HN8[] The law requires proof of the existence of five elements to establish an antitrust violation due to illegal tying: (1) two distinct products; (2) evidence of actual coercion by the seller that forced the buyer to accept the tied product; (3) sufficient economic power in the tying product market to coerce purchaser acceptance of the tied product; (4) anticompetitive effects in the tied market; [17] and (5) involvement of not an insubstantial amount of interstate commerce in the tied product market. Power Test Petroleum Distribs. v. Calcu Gas, Inc., 754 F.2d 91, 96 (2d Cir. 1985).

Once again, HN9[] the element of control is crucial. Tying arrangements are condemned "when the seller has some special ability -- usually called 'market power' -- to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market." Jefferson Parish Hospital Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 13-14, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984). Market power is synonymous with monopoly power. International Distrib. Centers, 812 F.2d at 791 n.3.

The defendant asserts that United promotes an invalid tying arrangement in the leasing of its Apollo systems. However the record does not provide a basis for applying the per se rule against tying to the presumed arrangement, not shown in fact to exist by admissible, specific probative evidence.

HN10[] Tying arrangements need only be condemned if they restrain competition by forcing purchases or leases that would not otherwise be made; there must be a showing of acceptable evidence that an unreasonable restraint of competition occurred. The evidence thereof is lacking. There has been no [18] showing that the market as a whole for CRS or ABS has been in anywise affected by the Apollo contracts through unreasonable restraint of competition. There is no evidence to show that United has power in the alleged tying product market; nor is there any admissible evidence to shed light on how the alleged tying arrangement appreciably affected consumer demand for separate arrangements with a specific travel agent. See Jefferson Parish Hospital, 466 U.S. 2, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551.

Austin failed to establish at the Rule 43(e) hearing or otherwise that United possesses market power in any product market; indeed the proof established the absence [*184] thereof, thus United could not possibly force a purchase of another product. Austin's tying claim must be dismissed.

2. Exclusive Dealing

HN11[] An exclusive dealing arrangement "does not violate [Section 3 of the Clayton Act] unless . . . it [is] probable that performance of the contract will foreclose competition in a substantial share of the line of commerce affected." Tampa Elec. Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 327, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580, 81 S. Ct. 623 (1961).

Austin alleges de facto exclusive dealing in United's rollover, minimum use and liquidated damages provisions. Austin theorized, [19] but gave no evidentiary proof, that any of these provisions deter agents or make it impossible for them to fulfill contracts with other vendors or deterred Austin from switching CRS vendors. Austin's witness acknowledged that the rollover clause was not employed in any part of the Austin Travel contracts.

The Apollo contract itself states that it is nonexclusive:

> United and Subscriber acknowledge that this is a nonexclusive agreement and nothing in this Agreement will be construed as precluding or prohibiting Subscriber from using any other computerized reservation service or system in its operations. United and Subscriber also acknowledge, however, that the monthly fixed charges under this Agreement have been established at a level which reflects the expectation that Subscriber will actively use Apollo Services in its operations to process Apollo Transactions.

There is an entire absence of probative evidence of a foreclosure of competition by United or that Austin or any other agent was prevented from the use of the CRS services or air passenger services of another vendor. Austin has always used SABRE, PARS, SystemOne and DATAS II (all of which are competitive CRS systems) under [20] five-year contracts and Austin in fact rejected the Apollo system and had United remove it. The Apollo contracts affect only three of thirteen Austin Travel locations. With 1000 agencies on Long Island and 28,000 in the United States, any market foreclosure would be de minimis (approximately 0.77%). In addition, other major carriers, such as American Airlines and TWA, have five-year contracts with travel agencies similar to United's.

In practical application the United contract does not prevent lessees of CRS or Business Systems from using or dealing in the systems of a competitor and competition has not been foreclosed in a substantial share of the line of commerce affected. See Tampa Elec., 365 U.S. at 327.

The market area in which United operates and to which Austin can turn for CRS systems -- the area of effective competition in the known line of commerce -- is Long Island. Id. "Since it is the preservation of competition which is at stake, the significant proportion of coverage is that within the area of effective competition." Id. at 328 (quoting Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 337 U.S. 293, 299 n.5, 93 L. Ed. 1371, 69 S. Ct. 1051 (1949)).

United's share of the only relevant market, 3% [21] of the agencies and 8% of the revenues from CRSs, was insubstantial and was not sufficient to foreclose competition in that area. See Tampa Elec., 365 U.S. at 328. That dictates a finding that United's Apollo contracts were not a clog on competition required to be removed by the application of antitrust legislation. Since the contracts of United do not fall within the broader proscription of § 3 of the Clayton Act it follows that they are not forbidden by §§ 1 or 2 of the Sherman Act.

C. Price Discrimination

Austin's final antitrust counterclaim alleges illegal price discrimination in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and Section 2 of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act. [1] HN12[] Under the Robinson-Patman Act,

> [*185] Three elements are necessary to state a claim for an actionable violation . . . Plaintiff must complain that (1) the alleged price discrimination meets the 'in commerce' requirement, i.e., that 'either or any' of the purchases involved are in commerce; (2) there has been discrimination in price between different purchasers of products of like grade and quality; and (3) the effect of the discrimination 'may be substantially to lessen competition [22] or tend to create a monopoly.'

Energex Lighting Indus. v. North American Philips Lighting Corp., 656 F. Supp. 914, 919 (S.D.N.Y 1987) (quoting Hoyt Heater Co. of Northern California v. American Appliance Mfg. Co., 502 F. Supp. 1383, 1386-87 (N.D. Cal. 1980)).

Austin alleges that United offered override commissions and Apollo contracts to other agents on more favorable terms than to Austin, and that United's power affects competition among agents and therefore among airlines and CRS vendors. Austin argues that there exists a genuine issue of fact as to its [23] allegations.

Not a scintilla of specific identifiable evidence is proffered to show that alleged price discrimination led to a substantial lessening of competition or even a possibility that competition may be lessened; no injury to competition is even mentioned in Austin's inflated papers. Since Austin's experts readily acknowledged on the witness stand

---

[1] The Robinson-Patman Act provides, in pertinent part:

> HN13[] It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality, where either or any of the purchases involved in such discrimination are in commerce, where such commodities are sold for use, consumption, or resale within the United States . . . and where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce . . . .

15 U.S.C. § 13(a).

that United does not have monopoly or market power in either the CRS or air passenger business, United is perforce unable to wield power to affect competition. [2]

The law is crystal clear: Absent monopoly power coupled with an improper monopolistic purpose the claimed antitrust violations fall to the ground. The evidence shows that the assertion by Austin that United had or has monopoly power in the CRS business or in the air passenger business was frivolous and had no basis in fact. There [24] is no genuine basis on which to claim that United's contracts or activities interfered with competition in the relevant market or threatened to do so.

Austin made no effort to defend the original monopoly allegations of the pleadings. However, Austin advances two ploys not revealed by its pleading; it now asserts in its opposing papers that United possesses and has abused its alleged monopoly power in the "convention market on Long Island" and in "the market for airline access to travel agents who use Apollo." [3]

The alleged antitrust violations are mere bald contentions without any admissible specifically identifiable evidence submitted to support them. None is supported by the requisite show of evidence to provide a hook on which to hang violative conduct, viz., exclusive dealing contracts (here, suggesting use of the Apollo contract prevents use of the CRS contracts of another vendor of CRS), tie-ins to foreclose competition (here, suggesting use of supposed market power in one product to force a purchase of another), or of price discrimination in restraint of trade and competition. Not a scintilla [25] of specific identifiable evidence is proffered to show that alleged price discrimination led to a substantial lessening of competition; no evidence of injury to competition is even mentioned by Austin.

In addition, the "convention market" allegations are illusory. HN14[] Convention booking does not constitute a special submarket; [*186] rather such business is a treatment of volume bookings within the relevant general market of computerized reservations which neither requires nor utilizes special vendors or distinct customers. Cf. Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962). A discount operation for computerized reservations does not create a separate economic entity nor does it create a separate product so as to constitute a submarket.

Apart from the foregoing, United has no monopoly of the convention business. Convention business for an airline involves provision of transportation for people who are traveling from around the country to a convention. There is no "Long Island market" for convention travel. Every major airline competes for convention travel, just as they compete for travel of other persons and groups, and each offers special deals to attract convention business. [26] [4] Austin Travel itself entered into convention agreements with most other airlines besides United. A monopoly is not created simply because United offered a form of contract that differed from some used by other air carriers. Other airlines, including Texas Air, are obviously in a position to offer competitive convention packages by providing discounted fares, for example. Even if United offered the most lucrative convention contract, that would show only that United offered the most competitive price, and would neither confer nor reflect monopoly power.

Neither can a cognizable "market for airline access to travel agents who use Apollo" be defined. By owning the Apollo system, United possesses a share of this "market" that approaches 100 percent. United never possessed monopoly power of "airline access" to Austin Travel or any other agency. Austin Travel always used other CRS systems, principally SABRE, and other airlines [27] had continuous access to Austin Travel and to other agents.

---

[2] The issue of whether the Robinson-Patman Act even applies to this case, i.e., whether "commodities" are involved, need not be addressed. As to the Sherman Act, price discrimination "is not and never has been within the purview of the Sherman Act." State v. Mobil Oil Corp., 38 N.Y.2d 460, 344 N.E.2d 357, 381 N.Y.S.2d 426, 428 (1976).

[3] Austin's counterclaim contained no reference to monopolization of these markets.

[4] Examples of advertising and promotional materials relating to the convention offerings of other carriers have been submitted. They include a boast by Eastern Airlines (a Texas Air affiliate) that it was the "preferred carrier" for 5000 conventions in 1986.

Austin's sales of airline tickets on other carriers greatly exceed its sales on United, and it treats American and Texas Air as its "preferred carriers."

Austin Travel has made no showing of admissible evidence that United has the power to control price and exclude entry in the semantically created convention or the imaginary "airline access to travel agent" markets or in any other markets.

VI. Liquidated Damages Defense

Austin raises a defense that United's liquidated damages clause is void and unenforceable as a penalty. [5]

[28] Under the contract with Austin, United received from the agent a monthly fixed fee for usage of the system. In addition, United received certain "variable" charges based upon the agent's generation of tickets or itineraries. When an agent terminates its Apollo contract prior to the end of its term, United loses the monthly fixed charges it was scheduled to receive during the remainder of the contract term. In addition, it loses the variable charges that Austin would have paid if it had continued to generate tickets and itineraries through Apollo Services rather than through the [*187] replacement system. The amount of variable charges paid by the agent in the month preceding the contract termination has been selected by United as the best approximation of the charges an agent would have continued to pay if it had adhered to the Apollo contract.

When an existing subscriber abandons Apollo prior to expiration of the contract term, United does not recoup part of its loss by placing that subscriber's equipment elsewhere. In effect, United loses the entire amount of the subscriber's business.

Most of the costs associated with Apollo are either fixed or incurred in the early stages of a contract. [29] However, there are some costs that United will not incur after Apollo is removed from an agency. In consultation with individuals in Apollo Services, United determined that, generally, these avoidable costs were less than 20 percent of the amount of revenue from the monthly fixed usage fees and variable charges. United therefore drafted the liquidated damage provision in such a way as to permit United's recovery of only 80% of its fixed and variable charges and thus to provide the agent with more than ample benefit for the costs United avoids as a result of an agent's premature termination of an Apollo contract.

Each time a travel agent makes a booking on an airline or with another vendor through the Apollo Services, that airline or vendor pays a booking fee to United. When an agent terminates Apollo prematurely, United loses the booking fees it otherwise would have received as a result of the agent's use of Apollo. For contracts entered into after early 1985 United has included in the calculation of liquidated damages a minimum amount of lost booking fees.

United's Apollo contract requires an agent to book only a minimum amount of business through Apollo -- 50 percent of the [30] average level of bookings the agent made on Apollo in the early months of its contract. In drafting the liquidated damage provision, United based an element of liquidated damages on the minimum level that the agent

---

[5] United's contract provides, in pertinent part:

> Subscriber will pay to United liquidated damages in an amount calculated as follows:
>
> A. The amount of the monthly fixed charge . . . will be multiplied by the number of months, including any portion thereof, remaining under the term of this Agreement and the product thereof multiplied by.80;
>
> B. The amount of the variable charges . . . paid by Subscriber for the calendar month immediately preceding the date of termination will be multiplied by the number of months, including any portion thereof, remaining under the term of this Agreement and the product thereof multiplied by.80;
>
> C. The Monthly Minimum Guarantee will be multiplied by the amount of the airline booking fee in effect on the date of termination and the product thereof will be multiplied by the product of the number of months, including any portion thereof, remaining under the term of this Agreement multiplied by the number of Apollo CRTs . . .; and was expected and required to book under the Agreement. Thus, even if the agent in fact has continued to book far more than this minimum level, United's liquidated damages formula conservatively assumes only the revenue from other airlines associated with the agent's minimum booking level.
>
> D. The amount of the liquidated damages will equal the sum of the amounts derived under [A., B., and C.].

HN15[] A liquidated damage clause in a contract provides an estimate, made by the parties at the time they enter into their agreement, of the injury that would be sustained due to a breach of the agreement. 5 Williston, Contracts § 776 (3d ed. 1961). Such provisions are enforced "if the Court is convinced that it is a genuine pre-estimate by the parties of the extent of injury that will be caused by a future breach of the contract." 5 Corbin, Contracts § 1059 (1964).

HN16[] A sum becomes a penalty rather than an enforceable damage liquidation clause if it is disproportionate to the damage which could have been anticipated from a breach of the contract, and which is agreed upon in order to enforce [31] performance of the main purpose of the contract by the compulsion of this very disproportion. 5 Williston, Contracts § 776.

HN17[] Under New York law, where the actual damages are uncertain and difficult to ascertain or prove, or are of a peculiarly speculative character, and the contract furnishes no data for their ascertainment, a stipulated amount which on the face of the contract does not appear to be unreasonable or disproportionate to the probable loss will be held to be one for liquidated damages rather than a penalty. 36 N.Y. Jur. 2d, Damages § 160 (1984). The standard applicable is "whether the provision constitutes a reasonable attempt to estimate damages which, though real, may be uncertain in amount." Staten Island Rapid Transit Ry. Co. v. S.T.G. Constr. Co., 421 F.2d 53, 59 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 398 U.S. 951, 90 S. Ct. 1871, 26 L. Ed. 2d 291 (1970).

The Second Circuit has applied this standard:

> Contractual provisions fixing liquidated damages in the event of breach will not be voided as unconscionable or contrary [*188] to public policy if the amount liquidated bears a reasonable proportion to the probable loss and the amount of actual loss is incapable or difficult of precise estimation.

Leasing [32] Service Corp. v. Justice, 673 F.2d 70, 73 (2d Cir. 1982). In that case the Second Circuit upheld a lease provision permitting the lessor to resell trucks and heavy equipment repossessed upon breach by the lessee and deduction of 15% of the total rent required for the entire unexpired term. The value of the lessor's interest in the repossessed equipment depended upon the equipment's condition and market conditions when the equipment was returned. Both of these were "incapable of precise estimation" at the time of execution of the lease. Id. at 74.

HN18[] Acceleration clauses are upheld in long-term leases for equipment. Walter E. Heller & Co. v. Video Innovations Co., 730 F.2d 50 (2d Cir. 1984).

The Court is convinced that the United liquidated damage clause is standard and vindicated by industry practice. Indeed, the CRS contracts of the competitors of United were even more stringent; they called for payment of 100% of the rentals for the unexpired term while the United contract obligated Austin for only 80% thereof. The terms of United's contract were a genuine pre-estimation by sophisticated parties fully aware of the terms and of the nature of the injury that would be [33] caused by a future breach of the lease. Defendant has failed to show the existence of any proof available to it to the contrary. The disputable analysis of presumed cost savings belatedly submitted by Austin does not discredit the reasonableness of United's anticipatory estimate in light of the anticipated or actual loss caused by the breach and the difficulties of proof.

The elements of cost avoidance to United following a breach of an Apollo contract merely demonstrate in theory that there was reasonable ground for the agreed-in-advance quantum of lost future benefits to United at 80% thereof as stated in the contract rather than the 100% thereof charged by United's competition.

Clearly the actual damages from the breach of contract were uncertain when the parties sat down to contract and were difficult both to ascertain or prove thereafter and the contract furnishes no data for their ascertainment. The estimate of damages was made by knowledgeable, sophisticated businessmen in the industry on both sides acting at arm's length without any coercion or inability to contract freely. The amount of United's actual loss was difficult, indeed incapable of precise estimation, and the [34] amount liquidated has been shown without contradiction to bear a reasonable proportion to the probable loss.

The only element that could be said to be capable of objective estimation precisely in the liquidated damages formula was the amount of the loss of the booking fees payable by the airlines. But these could be ascertained only retrospectively since they are being pocketed by Eastern based on the transactions of SystemOne which substituted for Apollo at Austin. As to these, the damage clause does not call for all the amount reaped by SystemOne, but only the pre-estimated amount thereof calculated at the minimum booking level of Austin, which would yield a lower figure than the amount reaped by SystemOne.

It is interesting to note that the Department of Justice after its investigation of liquidated damage clauses came to the conclusion that "a rule abrogating liquidated damages should be approached cautiously because there may be good reasons for the new liquidated damage clauses, such as the need for vendors to compensate themselves for the shorter 5-year contract period required by the rules. A prohibition on liquidated damages clauses might also handicap potential entrants more [35] than it assists them." The defendant's expert was asked, "Are you in disagreement with the conclusion stated there by the Department of Justice?" He responded: "No, I am not."

Invoices covering amounts owed to United by Austin Travel Corporation under the terms of two subscriber lease agreements for Apollo Reservations and Ticketing Services were prepared and forwarded by United to Austin. Contract number 79566 [*189] covers Apollo Services for Austin Travel's Oceanside, New York, and Mitchell Field, New York, locations. Contract number 60195, which was assumed by Austin Travel pursuant to an assignment agreement, covers Apollo Services for Fantasy Adventures, Great Neck, New York. The total amount invoiced to Austin Travel under the terms of the two Apollo agreements referred to above is $ 305,205.56. Austin Travel has never paid this amount or any portion thereof.

The total amount invoiced in connection with Apollo for the Oceanside location was $ 72,866.04. Of this amount, $ 10,222.09 represents unpaid monthly fixed and variable charges and installation fees accrued by Austin Travel for the period February 1986 through November 1986; $ 541.25 represents a deinstallation charge; and [36] $ 62,102.70 represents liquidated damages owed by Austin Travel as a result of its termination of Apollo at the Oceanside location, calculated pursuant to paragraph 21 of Contract No. 79566. The figure for liquidated damages for the Oceanside location includes amounts representing a percentage of the monthly fixed charges and variable charges that would have been paid to United during the remainder of the contract term and an amount representing a minimum level of booking fees United would have received as a result of Austin Travel's use of the Apollo system during the remainder of the contract term.

The total amount invoiced in connection with Apollo for the Mitchell Field location was $ 217,185.06. Of this amount, $ 16,127.90 represents unpaid monthly fixed and variable charges accrued by Austin Travel for the period January 1986 through November 1986; $ 1,604.00 represents a charge for partial deinstallation; $ 1,317.60 represents a charge for final deinstallation; and $ 198,135.56 represents liquidated damages owed by Austin as a result of its termination of Apollo at the Mitchell Field location, calculated pursuant to paragraph 21 of Contract No. 79566. The figure for liquidated [37] damages for the Mitchell Field location includes the same components as those described above in connection with the Oceanside location. The final summary invoice for this location inadvertently included $ 5,808.47 in Apollo Business System (ABS) charges and this amount has been deducted in reaching the total amount owed under the Apollo contract for this location ($ 217,185.06).

The total amount invoiced in connection with Apollo at the Great Neck location was $ 15,154.46. Of this total, $ 5,168.06 represents unpaid monthly charges accrued by Austin Travel for the period December 1985 through October 1986; $ 540 represents a deinstallation fee; and $ 9,446.40 represents liquidated damages owed by Austin as a result of its termination of Apollo at the Great Neck location, calculated pursuant to paragraph 21 of Contract No. 60195. The figure for liquidated damages for the Great Neck location includes amounts representing a percentage of the monthly fixed charges and variable charges that would have been paid to United during the remainder of the contract term.

The total amount invoiced in connection with ABS at the Mitchell Field location was $ 117,949.53. This includes monthly charges [38] and liquidated damages calculated pursuant to paragraph 21 of Contract No. 59484.

The total amount owed to United by Austin Travel for unpaid Apollo and ABS invoices is $ 423,155.09.

Attachment A to this decision shows the manner in which liquidated damages were calculated for Apollo for each of the three Austin locations at issue herein.

Attachment B to this decision shows the manner in which United calculated the early termination charges owed by Austin Travel in connection with its decision to remove the ABS system in late 1986.

The liquidated damage clauses in United's contract are reasonable and no valid proof has been shown by the defendant to be available to it to the contrary and the terms thereof are enforceable.

VII. Other Affirmative Defenses

A. Waiver

Defendant's third affirmative defense is that plaintiff waived its right to recover [*190] liquidated damages because United released other agents from paying them. Austin has failed to produce probative evidence of factual support for this defense.

The Apollo contracts contain a provision dealing with waiver: "The right of either party to require strict performance and observance of any obligations hereunder will not be [39] affected in any way by any previous waiver, forbearance or course of dealing." From the terms of the contracts, therefore, it appears that United has not waived its right to liquidated damages.

Furthermore, HN19[] although "either party to a contract may waive any of its provisions made for his benefit[,] the intent to waive must be clear and unambiguous." Liberty Mut. Ins. Co. v. Lodha, 131 Misc.2d 670, 500 N.Y.S.2d 989, 991 (Sup. Ct. 1986).

United certainly gave no indication of an intent to relinquish its right to collect liquidated damages from Austin. Moreover, Larry Austin recognized United's policy of enforcement of these clauses. The only evidence that Austin offers is testimony of a United representative describing United's use of "suspension agreements," under which United would allow an agency to terminate Apollo use at one location in exchange for the right to install Apollo if the agency opened a new location. The deponent did not know whether Apollo demanded payment of liquidated damages in those instances. In addition, a former United employee testified at the Rule 43(e) hearing that United's policy was to enforce its contracts with travel agencies.

B. Failure [40] to Install Terminals

Austin raises as its fourth affirmative defense United's alleged failure to install Apollo terminals at the Great Neck location. Austin admits, however, that it had no intention of preparing that office for installation and it never did prepare it.

C. Coercion and Duress

Austin also raises as a defense that any contracts with United were executed by Austin under coercion and duress, due to United's alleged exercise of monopoly power and illegal tying arrangements. No probative evidence was adduced to support this extreme suggestion.

It has already been shown that United possesses no monopoly power and was not engaged in any illegal tying arrangements whatsoever, which alone preclude any possibility of coercion or duress by United.

VIII. Breach of Override Contract Counterclaim

Austin claims that United breached an oral agreement under which United allegedly promised to pay override commissions of a flat additional 5% for five years on all United sales. The parties allegedly entered into this oral agreement prior to the execution of the written override contracts between Austin and United that did not provide for such a flat fee but instead linked [41] overrides to Austin's volume of United sales. United raises the parol evidence rule and the statute of frauds as defenses to Austin's claim. Either or both of these constitutes a complete defense to the claimed oral override.

A. Parol Evidence Rule

HN20[] When an agreement has been reduced to writing, "evidence of prior or contemporaneous agreements may not be offered to contradict, vary, or subtract from the terms of the writing." Wallace Steel, Inc. v. Ingersoll-Rand Co., 739 F.2d 112, 115 (2d Cir. 1984) (finding that the oral testimony permitted to be introduced by the district court did not vary the terms of the contract). See also Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 215 ("evidence of prior or contemporaneous agreements of negotiations is not admissible in evidence to contradict a term of the writing").

Conversations between Larry Austin and the United sales representative(s), in which United allegedly promised the flat additional override commissions, could be offered solely to contradict the terms of the written 10% override contracts subsequently executed and are thus inadmissible under the parol evidence rule.

[*191] B. Statute of Frauds

HN21[] An agreement not reduced to writing [42] is not enforceable if by its terms it is not to be performed within one year from the making of the agreement. N.Y. Gen. Oblig. Law § 5-701 (McKinney 1978 & Supp. 1987); Nifty Foods Corp. v. Great Atlantic & Pac. Tea Co., 614 F.2d 832, 837 (2d Cir. 1980) ("By its terms the alleged contract could not have been performed within one year, and [plaintiff] failed to present a writing . . . .").

The alleged oral agreement falls within the Statute of Frauds and is therefore unenforceable as an agreement not to be performed within one year.

Austin argues that, even if the alleged agreement falls within the Statute of Frauds, Austin relied on United's oral representations and would not have entered into Apollo contracts otherwise. Austin relies on L. Fatato, Inc. v. Miller Brewing Co., 582 F. Supp. 1377, 1379 (E.D.N.Y. 1984), in which the court denied a motion for summary judgment, stating that although the doctrine of promissory estoppel has not been given a "warm reception in New York," the plaintiff should have an opportunity to establish the facts which might support an estoppel. Austin has not claimed any such facts.

Austin further argues that it partially performed the override contract, [43] which, it posits, removes the agreement from the Statute of Frauds.

HN22[] "Part performance that is clear, certain and definite in object and design as to be unequivocally referable to the agreement, and which will precipitate a fraud if the agreement is not enforced, removes the action from the defense of the statute of frauds." Marcraft Recreation Corp. v. Francis Devlin Co., 506 F. Supp. 1081, 1085 (S.D.N.Y. 1981). The criteria for estopping the use of the statute of frauds defense are "(i) a fraudulent oral promise by the defendant; (ii) upon which the plaintiff justifiably relies; (iii) by engaging in acts which are 'unequivocally referable' to the oral promise; (iv) resulting in substantial injury to plaintiff." Id. at 1086. If the part performance is "equally consistent with an explanation having a basis in other than the alleged oral agreement," however, such as an agreement that could be performed within a year, the part performance relied upon does not remove the agreement from the statute of frauds. Cunnison v. Richardson Greenshields Securities Inc., 107 A.D.2d 50, 485 N.Y.S.2d 272, 276-77 (1st Dep't 1985).

Austin contends that it began to promote United as one of [44] its preferred carriers, something it had never done before, which is partial performance that refers to the oral override contract. Austin's acts could, however, be equally consistent with performance under the written override contracts, and Austin's breach of override contract claim must be dismissed.

IX. Conclusion

Plaintiff is entitled to judgment in its favor dismissing the defenses and counterclaims asserted in the Answer. The Clerk is directed to enter judgment in plaintiff's favor for $ 408,375., together with interest from February 26, 1987 and costs.

The foregoing shall constitute the Court's findings of fact and conclusions of law.

So Ordered

ATTACHMENT A

1. Oceanside Location (Contract No. 79566, para. 21) - early termination charge of $ 62,102.70.

a) $ 630 (monthly fixed charge for Oceanside location per Attachment A to contract) times 44 (months remaining in term of contract) times.80 = $ 22,176.

b) No variable charge component.

c) 163.5 (50% of average of bookings per CRT for first six months for Oceanside and Mitchell Field locations) times 44 (months remaining in term of contract) times $ 1.85 (booking fee) times 3 (number of CRTs at Oceanside) = [45] $ 39,926.70.

2. Mitchell Field Location (Contract No. 79566, para. 21) early termination charge of $ 198,135.56.

a) $ 1,330 (monthly fixed charge for Mitchell Field location per Attachment A to contract) times 44 (months remaining in term of contract) times.80 = $ 46,816.00.

[*192] b) $ 139.82 (variable charges from 10/86 invoice) times 44 (months remaining in terms of contract) times.80 = $ 4,921.66.

c) 163.5 (50% of average of bookings per CRT for first months for Oceanside and Mitchell Field locations) times 44 (months remaining in term of contract) times $ 1.85 (booking fee) times 11 (number of CRTs at Mitchell Field) = $ 146,397.90.

3. Great Neck Location (Contract No. 60195, para. 21) - early termination charge of $ 9,446.40.

a) $ 492 (monthly fixed charge per Attachment A to contract, with 8% escalation per contract) times 24 (months remaining in term of contract) times.80 = $ 9,446.40.

b) No variable charge component.

ATTACHMENT B

Apollo Business Systems (Contract No. 59484, paras. 16D, 21) - early termination charge of $ 73,884.47.

a) $ 1,732.12 (monthly continuing use charge) times 21 (months remaining in term of contract) times.80 = $ 29,099.62.

b) $ 44,784.85 (remaining [46] principal under contract at time of termination).

Indiana Grocery Co. v. Super Valu Stores, Inc.

United States District Court for the Southern District of Indiana, Indianapolis Division

February 26, 1988, Decided

Cause No. IP 85-176-C

Reporter
684 F. Supp. 561 *; 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5845 ; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,917

Indiana Grocery Co., Inc., and Preston-Safeway, Inc., Plaintiffs, v. Super Valu Stores, Inc., d/b/a Cub Foods, Markkay of Indiana, Inc., d/b/a Cub Foods, and The Kroger Company, Defendants

Core Terms

pricing, predatory, plaintiffs', predation, monopoly, competitors, Grocery, losses, recoup, rivals, market share, anti trust law, antitrust, monopolize, summary judgment, costs, consumers, variable, profits, summary judgment motion, alleges, probability of success, enter a judgment, levels, retail, cases, specific intent, probability, inferred, injure

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

The elements of an attempted monopoly case reflect the concern of the courts over the tension between the competing economic benefits of market control and market freedom. Those elements are: (1) specific intent to control prices or destroy competition with respect to a part of commerce; (2) predatory or anti-competitive conduct directed to accomplishing the unlawful purpose; and (3) a dangerous probability of success in the relevant market that requires evidence that the defendant had sufficient market power to have been reasonably able to create a monopoly.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Courts must carefully evaluate the theories on each element of an attempted monopoly claim and observe the interrelationships of the three elements. The Ninth Circuit, unlike the Seventh, considers the elements so closely related that they are willing to infer a dangerous probability of success from intent and conduct in some circumstances.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Penalties

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Penalties

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

HN3[] Sherman Act, Penalties

Intent to monopolize not mean that "intent to harm rivals" is not a useful standard in antitrust cases. Intent to harm rivals without more offers too vague a standard in a world where executives may think no further than "let's get more business" and long term effects on consumers depend in large measure on competitors' responses. Neither is "intent to do more business," which amounts to the same thing. Vigorous competitors intend to harm rivals, to do all the business they can. To penalize this intent is to penalize competition. Culpable intent in a § 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., attempted monopoly antitrust law does not mean intent to do more business, to increase market shares, or to harm rivals.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Competition and not competitors is the protected entity under § 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

The element of intent is a specific intent to monopolize, that is, to gain the power to control prices or to exclude competition in a line of commerce. The relationship of the specific intent requirement and the second requirement of predatory conduct to accomplish the monopoly end. While specific intent to monopolize can sometimes be inferred from predatory acts, the plaintiff must show that the defendant's actions were not primarily motivated by legitimate business purposes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6[] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Liability for predatory pricing represents an exception to the general antitrust regime which contemplates that no limits on price competition shall be imposed. Predatory pricing is prohibited because of the fear that a monopoly or dominant firm will deliberately sacrifice present revenues for the purpose of driving rivals from the market and then recoup its losses through higher profits earned in the absence of competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7[] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

The gravamen of predation is not the recoupment of losses from increased market sales at competitive prices, it is the recoupment of losses from monopoly prices. Predatory pricing is pricing by a monopoly or at least a dominant firm that will cause that firm to suffer losses, the purpose for which is to allow the predator to recoup losses through higher prices set in the no longer competitive market. This again is the concept that distinguishes anticompetitor conduct from anticompetitive conduct. Predation is a two-fold notion: prey and recoup at higher prices than a competitive market would permit.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8[] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

The success of any predatory scheme depends on maintaining monopoly power for long enough both to recoup the predator's losses and to harvest some additional gain. The loss to be recouped is more than the dollar amount of the loss suffered.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN9[] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

A showing of specific intent to control prices and destroy competitors is insufficient to make a case for attempted monopoly. Predatory behavior must also be shown.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN10[] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

The classic case of predation is the deliberate sacrifice of present revenues for the purpose of driving rivals out of the market and then recouping the losses through higher profits earned in the absence of competition. Thus, predatory pricing would make little economic sense to a potential predator unless he had: (1) greater staying power than his rivals; and (2) a very substantial prospect that the losses he incurs in the predatory campaign will be exceeded by the profits to be earned after his rivals have been destroyed. It should be recognized that predation cannot be successful and therefore is unlikely to occur when the predator's rivals possess resources comparable to his own. Thus, pricing is not predatory unless the predator has greater staying power and resources than his rivals.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN11[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

It is not enough that a single firm appears to "restrain trade" unreasonably, for even a vigorous competitor may leave that impression. In part because it is sometimes difficult to distinguish robust competition from conduct with long-run anticompetitive effects, Congress authorized Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., scrutiny of single firms only when they pose a danger of monopolization. Judging unilateral conduct in this manner reduces the risk that the antitrust laws will dampen the competitive zeal of a single aggressive entrepreneur.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN12[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

While size is an element of monopoly power, a substantial part of the market must be controlled by the monopolist to enable the raising and lowering of prices and the undue restriction on competition. Of nine cases condemning monopolies under § 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., the percentage of market share ranges from 70 percent to 100 percent.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN13[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

To predict dangerous future probability, it must be shown that the defendant possesses a measure of present proximity to completed monopoly - a measure of power in a relevant market. As with monopoly, the requisite market position is normally measured through an analysis of market share. Although precise definition of the requisite position is no easier here than in the case of monopoly itself, it is clear that the basic thrust of the classic rule is the presumption that attempt does not occur in the absence of a rather significant market share. The defendant need not have present market power, but its position must be sufficiently "proximate" to monopoly that the challenged conduct threatens success. The presumption resting on market share may be overcome on a showing that the market is so narrowly defined, or entry so free, that "success" would not yield the substantial market power needed for the offense of completed monopolization.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN14[] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Predatory pricing is presumed not to have occurred if market circumstances will not permit later recoupment of the losses resulting from the pricing. If predation can't be successful (market circumstances would not permit later recoupment), it may reasonably be presumed that it has not occurred, even before an inquiry is made into price-cost relationships. Thus, the concept of dangerous probability of success is intertwined with predation and intent.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

HN15[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

Summary judgment procedure is properly regarded not as a disfavored procedural shortcut but rather as an integral part of the Federal Rules as a whole, which are designed to secure the just, speedy, and inexpensive determination of every action. The plain language of Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c) mandates the entry of summary judgment, after adequate time for discovery and upon motion, against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which the party will bear the burden of proof at trial. In such a situation there can be "no genuine issue as to any material fact," since a complete failure of proof concerning an essential element of the non-moving party's case necessarily renders all other facts immaterial.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > Directed Verdicts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

HN16[] Judgment as Matter of Law, Directed Verdicts

The clear-and-convincing standard of proof that should be taken into account in ruling on summary judgment motions does not denigrate the role of the jury. It by no means authorizes trial on affidavits. Credibility determinations, the weighing of evidence, and the drawing of legitimate inferences from the facts are the jury functions, not those of a judge, whether he is ruling on a motion for summary judgment or for a directed verdict. The evidence of the non-movant is to be believed, and all justifiable inferences are to be drawn in his favor.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Jury Instructions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN17[] Jury Trials, Jury Instructions

There is no genuine issue for trial unless a properly instructed jury could return a verdict for the non-moving party.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN18[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

To determine whether, as a matter of substantive law or policy, a court should permit a jury to draw from the undisputed material facts the inferences necessary to sustain liability, the court should answer the following questions: (1) whether evidentiary or historical facts material to the disposition of the motion are disputed; and (2) if not, whether the mixed question of fact and law arising under the governing substantive law must be submitted to the jury.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

HN19[] Summary Judgment, Burdens of Proof

Other factors that may determine the question of summary judgment include whether the issue calls for the application of a regulatory scheme or other technical considerations, the interpretation of a statute or a written instrument, or consistency and adherence to precedent. These kinds of issues, although involving fact questions, are often treated as questions of law. On the other hand, questions involving reasonableness of human conduct, the adequacy of care exercised by a person, and the timeliness of action are the kinds of fact questions within the common experience of jurors and normally left for decision at trial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN20[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

There is a need for a competing inference in antitrust cases, i.e., a competing inference to the traditional summary judgment inferences that favor the non-moving party. That inference is necessary because the substantive law from the statute and precedent is reflective of competing economic benefits of controlling a given market and allowing it to remain uncontrolled, and reflective of the policymaking difficulty inherent in determining what is competitive and what is anticompetitive. The inference is that the factual behavior of the defendant was motivated by competitive rather than monopolistic intent.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Inferences

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Implausible Claims

HN21[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

A limitation on inference in antitrust cases is that the inference of monopolistic intent under all the facts must be a plausible inference. If the factual context renders a claim implausible - if the claim is one that simply makes no economic sense - plaintiffs must come forward with more persuasive evidence to support their claim than would otherwise be necessary to defeat a summary judgment motion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN22[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Matters of antitrust substantive law and policy reflected in statutory language and precedent require a closer scrutiny in antitrust litigation at the summary judgment level. Of particular importance in an antitrust case is the question of whether a party can properly overcome an inference of competitiveness by reliance on an inference of intent from behavior they insist is per se predatory and again rely on that same inference to support an inference of dangerous probability of success.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN23[] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

To be predatory it is generally agreed that a price must be below the short-run profit maximizing level and must discipline or destroy rivals such that the predator thereafter gains sustained excess (that is, monopoly) profits far larger than those lost during the rival-bashing period. The uncertain future gains must greatly exceed the present actual losses to overcome the uncertainty that rivals will be destroyed or disciplined and that monopoly profits can be reaped in the face of future entry. If rivals survive or entry occurs, not only will predation be unsuccessful, but the very prospect reduces the likelihood that a challenged low price is in fact predatory. Whenever the market circumstances make such predation unlikely, it is probably absent.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN24[] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Although sacrifice of short-run profits is a necessary condition for the existence of predation, not every such sacrifice is predatory. A firm might charge less than it could get away with in the short-run to forestall government price ceilings, to discourage long-run substitution of other products, or to expand the market. The predatory behavior is not itself predatory unless the predator intends to recoup and if unabated will acquire the ability to recoup his losses in a non-competitive market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN25[] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

A statement of intent to compete, even if perceived as a threat, is not unlawful. Such a manifestation of intent to triumph in the competitive market, in the absence of unfair, anticompetitive or predatory conduct, is not enough to establish an antitrust violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN26[] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

In order for behavior to be a violation of § 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., it must be done with the intent to control prices and destroy competition so that losses sustained thereby may be recouped by the exercise of monopoly pricing. The element "dangerous probability of success" requires an analysis of the market and defendant's ability to succeed in controlling prices above market factors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN27[] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Analysis of dangerous probability of success further requires an understanding of the concept of monopoly power. Monopoly power is the power to control prices or exclude competition. Every seller of nonfungible commodities has power over the price and production of his own product, but this is not the power that makes an illegal monopoly.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Common Law

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN28[] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Supplemental Jurisdiction

Indiana law does not recognize low pricing as a common law tort.

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

HN29[] Business Torts, Unfair Business Practices

Underselling can be tortious where its purpose is to injure a rival. If the same tradesman, singly or with others, advertises his goods, undersells, solicits, and wins away the customers of his rival by false representation, intimidation or artifice, not to better himself, but to injure his rival, he has committed an actionable wrong. The gravamen of the tort, therefore, is underselling by means of false representation, intimidation or artifice, not underselling in and of itself.

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

HN30[] Business Torts, Unfair Business Practices

The test of unfair competition is whether the acts of the defendant are such as are calculated to deceive the ordinary buyer making his purchases under the ordinary conditions that prevail in the particular trade to which the controversy relates.

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

HN31[] Business Torts, Unfair Business Practices

A searching analysis only of motive is not, in most instances, enough to send tortious interference cases to the jury. There must still under Indiana cases be something "illegal" about the means employed. Illegality means violence or intimidation, defamation, injurious falsehood or other fraud, violation of the criminal law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN32[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Competitors may sue other competitors under the antitrust laws only when their business losses derive from injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent. The antitrust laws are designed to benefit consumers by encouraging low prices, not to protect competitors. The threshold issue is whether a competitor as opposed to the government has standing to attack an agreement to set low prices absent an allegation of predation. The standard requirement is that plaintiffs must show that the conspiracy caused them an injury for which the antitrust laws provide relief. That showing depends in turn on proof that the petitioners conspired to price predatorily in the American market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN33[] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Elements

A plaintiff must prove the following for a conspiracy to monopolize claim: (1) the existence of a combination or conspiracy; (2) overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy; (3) an effect upon a substantial amount of interstate commerce; and (4) the existence of specific intent to monopolize. The mere intention to exclude competition and to expand one's own business is not sufficient to show a specific intent to monopolize.

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > General Overview

HN34[] Concerted Action, Civil Conspiracy

Indiana law is clear that there is no cause of action for conspiracy as such. If a complaint is to state a valid cause of action, the plaintiff must allege that the defendants conspired to accomplish an unlawful purpose or a lawful purpose by unlawful means.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > Predatory Pricing

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN35[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

No Indiana precedent establishes price fixing or predatory pricing as a tort. Such conduct is unlawful only if it violates § 1 or § 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq.

Judges: [1] Larry J. McKinney, Judge United States District Court Southern District of Indiana.

Opinion by: McKINNEY

Opinion

[*563contd] [EDITOR'S NOTE: The page numbers of this document may appear to be out of sequence; however, this pagination accurately reflects the pagination of the original published document.]

ORDER OF DISMISSAL

Larry J. McKinney, Judge United States District Court Southern District of Indiana

The Court, having on this date entered its Judgment Entry in this cause,

IT IS ORDERED that the plaintiff take nothing by their complain against the defendants and their complaint is now dismissed with prejudice.

JUDGMENT ENTRY

The Court having made its Entry on February 26, 1988 on a summary judgment motion filed by Kroger addressed to Counts I, II and III, a summary judgment motion by Super Valu on Counts II through VII, and a summary judgment motion by Markkay on Counts II through VII, which said Entry is in the following words and figures, to-wit:

(H.I.)

the Court now enters Judgment in favor of defendant Kroger Company and against plaintiffs Indiana Grocery Co., Inc. and Preston-Safeway, Inc. as to Count I.

The Court further enters Judgment in favor of defendant Kroger Company and against plaintiffs Indiana Grocery Co., Inc. and Preston-Safeway, Inc. as to Count II.

The Court further enters Judgment in favor of defendant Super Valu Stores, Inc., d/b/a Cub Foods, and against plaintiffs Indiana Grocery Co., Inc. and Preston-Safeway, Inc. as to Count II.

The Court [2] further enters Judgment in favor of defendant Markkay of Indiana, Inc., d/b/a Cub Foods, and against plaintiffs Indiana Grocery Co., Inc. and Preston-Safeway, Inc. as to Count II.

The Court further enters Judgment in favor of defendant Kroger Company and against plaintiffs Indiana Grocery Co., Inc. and Preston-Safeway, Inc. as to Count III.

The Court further enters Judgment in favor of defendant Super Valu Stores, Inc., d/b/a Cub Foods, and against plaintiffs Indiana Grocery Co., Inc. and Preston-Safeway, Inc. as to Count III.

The Court further enters Judgment in favor of defendant Markkay of Indiana, Inc., d/b/a Cub Foods, and against plaintiffs Indiana Grocery Co., Inc. and Preston-Safeway, Inc. as to Count III.

The Court further enters Judgment in favor of defendant Super Valu Stores, Inc., d/b/a Cub Foods, and against plaintiffs Indiana Grocery Co., Inc. and Preston-Safeway, Inc. as to Count IV.

The Court further enters Judgment in favor of defendant Markkay of Indiana, Inc., d/b/a Cub Foods, and against plaintiffs Indiana Grocery Co., Inc. and Preston-Safeway, Inc. as to Count IV.

The Court further enters Judgment in favor of defendant Super Valu Stores, Inc., d/b/a Cub Foods, [3] and against plaintiffs Indiana Grocery Co., Inc. and Preston-Safeway, Inc. as to Count V.

The Court further enters Judgment in favor of defendant Markkay of Foods, and against plaintiffs Indiana Grocery Indiana, Inc., d/b/a Cub Co., Inc. and Preston-Safeway, Inc. as to Count V.

The Court further enters Judgment in favor of defendant Super Valu Stores, Inc., d/b/a Cub Foods, and against plaintiffs Indiana Grocery Co., Inc., and Preston-Safeway, Inc. as to Count VI.

The Court further enters Judgment in favor of defendant Markkay of Indiana, Inc., d/b/a Cub Foods, and against plaintiffs Indiana Grocery Co., Inc. and Preston-Safeway, Inc. as to Count VI.

The Court further enters Judgment in favor of defendant Super Valu Stores, Inc., d/b/a Cub Foods, and against plaintiffs Indiana Grocery Co., Inc. and Preston-Safeway, Inc. as to Count VII.

The Court further enters Judgment in favor of defendant Markkay of Indiana, Inc., d/b/a Cub Foods, and against plaintiffs Indiana Grocery Co., Inc. and Preston-Safeway, Inc. as to Count VII.

IT IS SO ORDERED this 26th day of February, 1988.

Plaintiff Indiana Grocery filed its complaint against defendants Super Valu Stores, Inc., d/b/a Cub Foods, Markkay [4] of Indiana, Inc., d/b/a Cub Foods, and The Kroger Company on February 4, 1985. Plaintiffs, Indiana Grocery, Inc., and Preston-Safeway, Inc., filed an amended seven count complaint against the same defendants on January 30, 1986. This cause is before the Court on a motion for summary judgment filed by Kroger addressed to Counts I, II and III, and on motions for summary judgment by Super Valu and Markkay addressed to Counts II through VII. Also pending before the Court are a motion to dismiss filed by Kroger on Counts II and III, and motions to dismiss filed by Super Valu and Markkay on Counts II, III, VI, and VII. The motions to dismiss will not be discussed since the Court's disposition of the motions for summary judgment will render these motions to dismiss moot.

Paragraph I of plaintiffs' complaint alleges that both Kroger and Super Valu attempted to create a monopoly in the Indianapolis, Indiana, retail grocery market in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act found at 15 U.S.C. § 1 et. seq. The plaintiffs having dismissed its § 2 claim against Super Valu now proceed in Paragraph I only as against Kroger. The Court will set out its findings of fact and then proceed [5] to deal with issues paragraph by paragraph of the complaint.

FINDINGS OF FACT

1. During the period at issue in this litigation, Kroger faced competition in the Indianapolis area from a large corporation (Super Valu Stores, Inc.), which had both the intent and the resources to remain in Indianapolis as a significant competitor.

2. Given Super Valu's size and resources, Kroger could not reasonably have expected that it would be able to drive the Cub stores out of the Indianapolis area.

3. Kroger thought it could force Super Valu to "re-think" its plans in Indianapolis and elsewhere through its aggressive response to Cub Foods' entry into Indianapolis. Kroger hoped that Super Valu would introduce subsequent Cub stores in Indianapolis on a smaller, less aggressive scale. More recently, Kroger planned to "co-exist" with Cub at "acceptable profit levels".

4. During the period at issue in this litigation, Kroger did not have the power to control the supply of groceries to consumers in the Indianapolis Metropolitan Statistical Area ("MSA") or in any part thereof.

5. During the period at issue in this litigation, Kroger did not have the power, in the Indianapolis MSA or any of the alleged [6] "submarkets" defined by plaintiffs, to control market prices for any products typically sold in retail grocery stores.

[*564] 6. During the period at issue in this litigation, there was not a dangerous probability that Kroger would acquire the power to control the supply of groceries to consumers in the Indianapolis MSA or in any part thereof.

7. During the period at issue in this litigation, there was not a dangerous probability that Kroger would acquire the power, in the Indianapolis MSA or any of the alleged "submarkets" defined by plaintiffs, to control market prices for any products typically sold in retail grocery stores.

8. At the time Super Valu entered the Indianapolis market in August 1983, Kroger operated 32 grocery stores in the Indianapolis MSA. Kroger's competitors included the following companies, who operated approximately the following numbers of stores: Marsh Supermarkets, Inc. -- 29 stores; Preston-Safeway, Inc. -- 15 stores; Indiana Grocery ("Standard", "Super Standard" and "No Frills") -- 29 stores; The Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. ("A&P") -- 11 stores; O'Malia Food Markets, Inc. -- 6 stores; Dietel's, Inc. ("Mr. D's") -- 4 stores; Aldi, Inc., -- 4 stores; and Seven-Eleven [7] Supermarkets, Inc. -- 4 stores. There were at least 40 additional full-line grocery stores operated by others in the Indianapolis metropolitan area and numerous small markets such as convenience stores.

9. The "numerous small markets and convenience stores" are not in the relevant product market as defined by plaintiffs' experts.

10. Commencing in 1983, Super Valu opened four Cub stores in Indianapolis. The first, located on Lafayette Road on the west side of Indianapolis, began operating Labor Day weekend of 1983. The second, which was on East Washington Street on the east side of Indianapolis, opened in December 1983. The third, in Greenwood, opened in July 1984, and the fourth, located in the Castleton area on the north side of Indianapolis, opened in May 1986.

11. In the spring of 1984, plaintiff Indiana Grocery acquired six retail grocery stores from plaintiff Preston-Safeway. After that transaction, Preston-Safeway had six remaining stores.

12. In 1985, the owners of Indiana Grocery [8] acquired all of the capital stock of Preston-Safeway. Since that time, the two corporations have been affiliated companies. Commencing in early 1986, Indiana Grocery converted all of its stores in the Indianapolis MSA to the "Preston-Safeway" name.

13. As of September 1987, Kroger had 33 stores in the Indianapolis MSA. Kroger's multi-store competitors include the following companies, who operate approximately the following numbers of stores: Marsh -- 30; Indiana Grocery/Preston-Safeway -- 24; Cub -- 4; O'Malia -- 9; Mr. D's -- 5; Aldi -- 5; Seven-Eleven -- 4. There are approximately 38 additional full-line grocery stores operated by others in the Indianapolis area, as well as numerous smaller retailers such as convenience stores.

14. The entry of Cub stores into Indianapolis in 1983 engendered intense price competition among retail grocery firms. Retail price levels were reduced from the levels that had previously existed in the market.

15. After the entry of the Cub stores, retail price levels gradually increased somewhat from the lowest levels that prevailed in the months immediately after the entry of those stores. Nevertheless, retail price levels have remained lower than they [9] were before Cub's entry.

16. The pricing of Kroger complained of by plaintiff has ended.

17. Kroger's retail prices were never at a level at which the company's revenues in the Indianapolis MSA as a whole failed to cover its variable costs in the MSA.

18. In the alleged north "submarket" that plaintiffs have defined, Kroger's revenues never fell below its variable costs.

19. According to plaintiffs' expert, Kroger's revenues exceeded its variable costs in the alleged south, east and west "submarkets" during all accounting periods except for the following: south -- 2 periods; east -- 3 periods; west -- 5 periods.

[*565] 20. Super Valu is a public company which operates primarily as a wholesale grocer.

21. Super Valu also owns and operates a limited number of retail grocery stores in various parts of the United States.

22. One of Super Valu's retail operations is the Cub Foods division.

23. Super Valu acquired Cub Foods from the Hooley family in 1980.

24. Super Valu has subsequently expanded operations of corporately-owned and franchised Cub Foods stores into other states.

25. Markkay was formed in 1983.

26. Markkay owns and operates a Cub Foods franchise in Indianapolis.

27. Markkay's principals [10] are George McKay and Donald Murphy, both of whom are retired former executives of Super Valu.

28. Markkay's store, which is located across the street from Lafayette Square Shopping Center, was opened on August 31, 1983.

29. A corporately-owned Cub Foods store, located at the Eastgate Shopping Center, was opened in December 1983.

30. A corporately-owned Cub Foods store, located in the Greenwood area, was opened in July 1984.

31. A franchise Cub Foods store, located in the Castleton area, was opened in May 1985.

32. Under the Cub Foods franchise program, a franchisee acquires from Super Valu the right to use the "Cub Foods" name.

33. Under the Cub Foods franchise program, a franchisee is provided a site screening and development service, a preopening training program for certain of the franchisee's employees and subsequent access to management advice and other forms of technical assistance.

34. All Cub Foods franchisees execute an Affiliates Agreement, which establishes the basic terms of the franchise.

35. All Cub Foods franchisees also enter into a Policy Agreement, which outlines the basic features of the Cub Foods' marketing concept.

36. Franchisees may also enter into an Umbrella [11] Agreement.

37. Under the Umbrella Agreement, Super Valu provides additional supervisory and marketing services, the right to participate with other area Cub Foods stores in a joint advertising program, assistance in coordinating the franchisee's scanner pricing program, and advice concerning the optimum levels at which the more than 10,000 items in a Cub Foods store should be priced.

38. The Umbrella Agreement expressly states that the pricing service to be provided by Super Valu will be to recommend prices.

39. Markkay entered into an Umbrella Agreement with Super Valu.

40. The Cub Foods price lists are stored in computer programs maintained by Super Valu at its Minneapolis, Minnesota, headquarters and its Ft. Wayne, Indiana, warehouse.

41. The information on the Cub Foods price lists for the local and regional markets where stores are located is kept current by Super Valu employees in the regional offices, who review changes in the cost of items to be sold by the stores and assign to the items new retail prices to reflect such changes.

42. These cost changes, together with other changes to reflect special promotions or desired responses to local competitors' prices, are transmitted [12] electronically to the central computer system where they are entered in the system and transmitted back to the regional offices as revised price lists.

43. The information on the Cub Foods price lists is then printed out in hard copy in a price book.

44. The prices in the price book are checked by the local store's pricing coordinator to assure that the store's posted shelf prices conform with the revised price book, after which they are ready to be transferred onto the store's cash register [*566] scanning system for use at checkout counters.

45. At a corporately-owned Cub Foods store, prices that are entered on the basic price lists are automatically used unless the store manager requests, and the regional merchandiser approves, a different price.

46. At a franchisee Cub Foods store, price changes that originate with the regional merchandising manager need not be accepted and may be rejected by declining to transfer the changes onto the store's cash register scanning system.

47. In late 1983, Super Valu granted Markkay a $ 500,000 credit against sums it owed to the Ft. Wayne warehouse after it became apparent that Markkay's losses had nearly exhausted the initial working capital that had [13] been earmarked to carry the company through its first 12 months of operations.

48. In 1984, the Ft. Wayne warehouse discovered an accounting error which had produced a build-up of approximately $ 450,000 in Markkay's accounts receivable.

49. Markkay was allowed to pay back this amount in installments of $ 12,500 per month, without interest.

MEMORANDUM OF LAW

For its attempted monopoly claim plaintiffs allege that defendant Cub Foods entered the Indianapolis retail grocery market in September 1983. Cub Foods is a super warehouse store [1] owned by defendant Super Valu. Plaintiffs complain that the aggressive response of Kroger, a supermarket, [2] to the entrance of Cub Foods into the Indianapolis retail grocery market was in fact Kroger attempting to monopolize the Indianapolis grocery market. Plaintiffs allege that Kroger's response to Cub Foods' entry was to sell its groceries for a substantial period of time for less than its average variable costs. Plaintiffs allege that this pricing strategy amounts to predatory pricing and that it has resulted in substantial and intentionally incurred losses to Kroger. Plaintiffs allege that these predatory pricing practices in the Indianapolis [14] market and Kroger's willingness to incur these substantial losses are part of Kroger's strategy to drive other competition from the relevant market so that Kroger can raise its prices in the future to abnormally high levels which will permit Kroger to recoup its losses.

---

[1] As defined in Amended Statement on Opinions of Bruce W. Marion [plaintiffs' expert] filed June 15, 1987, p. 9.

[2] As defined in Amended Statement of Opinions of Bruce W. Marion filed June 15, 1987, p. 3.

Plaintiffs go on to allege that the retail grocery market in Indianapolis is inelastic in consumer demand. They urge that price increases or decreases do not greatly affect the total amount of groceries sold in any market or submarket. Plaintiffs claim that because Kroger sold at such low prices in response to Cub's entry in the market place Kroger raised a substantial barrier to new entries into the market further injuring competition. That is, no one will want to enter the Indianapolis grocery market if they are to be subjected to the substantial below average variable cost pricing of which Kroger has allegedly shown itself capable. Plaintiffs complain that if Kroger's pricing had continued unabated plaintiffs [15] and other independent competitors would have been driven out of business in the Indianapolis market and Kroger would have attained monopoly status able to charge monopoly prices.

Further, plaintiffs specifically complain that as a result of Kroger's present and potential market power, its financial resources, its intent to monopolize the Indianapolis market, its pricing policies, the inelasticity of demand in the market, and deterrents to market entry caused by Kroger's pricing policies, there is and has been a dangerous probability that Kroger would succeed in its perceived attempt to eliminate competitors and obtain the power to control prices in the Indianapolis retail grocery market. This conduct, plaintiffs claim, amounts to a violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act, as an attempted monopoly.

Plaintiffs have survived a motion to dismiss on these allegations of a § 2 violation. [*567] Indiana Grocery Co., Inc. v. Super Valu Stores, Inc., 647 F. Supp. 254 (S.D. Ind. 1986). The issue of whether plaintiffs alleged the proper matters has been put to rest. The question now is whether the plaintiffs can survive a motion for summary judgment.

Plaintiffs' complaint involves concepts of market [16] share, market power, market definition, market deterrents, monopoly power, monopoly pricing, predatory pricing, and competition. These are not easily definable concepts nor does their interface with a given set of facts admit to facile process. The stage upon which all of these terms play a part is sometimes lighted by the penumbra cast by the caution that "we must be concerned lest a rule or precedent that authorizes a search for a particular type of undesirable pricing behavior end up by discouraging legitimate price competition." Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 594, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986) quoting Barry Wright Corp. v. ITT Grinnell Corp., 724 F.2d 227, 234 (1st Cir. 1983). Unsanctioned tampering with free market pricing by monopolists can damage competition and ultimately the consumer. Separation of injury to competitors from injury to competition and ultimately consumers can be as difficult as it is crucial.

HN1[] The very elements of an attempted monopoly case reflect the concern of the courts over the tension between the competing economic benefits of market control and market freedom. Those elements are "(1) specific intent to control prices or destroy [17] competition with respect to a part of commerce, (2) predatory or anti-competitive conduct directed to accomplishing the unlawful purpose, and (3) a dangerous probability of success." Chillicothe Sand and Gravel v. Martin Marietta Corp., 615 F.2d 427, 430 (7th Cir. 1980) quoting Gough v. Rossmoor Corp., 585 F.2d 381, 390 (9th Cir. 1978). The case of Lektro-Vend Corp. v. Vendo Co., 660 F.2d 255 (7th Cir. 1981), added a further clarification to the third element: "a dangerous probability of success in the relevant market which requires evidence that the defendant had sufficient market power to have been reasonably able to create a monopoly." Id. at 270 (citations omitted).

As each of these elements has been discussed post Chillicothe, lower HN2[] courts have been cautioned to carefully evaluate the theories on each element and to observe the interrelationships of the three elements. The Ninth Circuit, unlike the Seventh, considers the elements so closely related that they are willing to infer a dangerous probability of success from intent and conduct in some circumstances. See William Inglis & Sons Baking Co. v. ITT Continental Baking Co., 668 F.2d 1014 (9th Cir. 1981). [18]

Addressing the requirement of HN3[] intent to monopolize, Judge Easterbrook, in Ball Memorial Hospital, Inc. v. Mutual Hospital Insurance, Inc., 784 F.2d 1325 (7th Cir. 1986) reminds us what intent does not mean: "'intent to harm rivals' is not a useful standard in antitrust." Id. at 1338. Judge Easterbrook further quotes from Barry Wright Corp. v. ITT Grinnell Corp., 724 F.2d 227, 232 (1st Cir. 1983): "Intent to harm [rivals] without more offers too vague a standard in a world where executives may think no further than 'Let's get more business' and long term effects on consumers depend in large measure on competitors' responses." Further, Judge Easterbrook states "Neither is 'intent to do more business', which amounts to the same thing. Vigorous competitors intend to harm rivals, to do all the business they can. To penalize this intent is to penalize competition." Ball Memorial, 784 F.2d at 1338-39. Judge Easterbrook does not decide what culpable intent means. He decides what it does not mean. Culpable intent in a § 2 attempted monopoly antitrust law does not mean intent to do more business, to increase market shares or to harm rivals. See also Great Escape, Inc. v. [19] Union City Body Co., 791 F.2d 532 (7th Cir. 1986) and MCI Communications Corp. v. American Telephone and Telegraph Co., 708 F.2d 1081 (7th Cir. 1983).

Having pointed out that HN4[] competition and not competitors is the protected entity under § 2, Judge Easterbrook in Ball Memorial, [*568] supra, acknowledges that the distinction is not as easy as it sounds:

> "Sometimes injury to rival firms can be a precursor to injury to the consumers; after knocking rivals out of the market, a firm may curtail output and raise prices. Section 2 may be used to prevent this conduct. Yet it must be used with the greatest caution. Action that injures rivals may ultimately injure consumers, but it is also perfectly consistent with competition, and to deter aggressive conduct is to deter competition. Thus the plaintiff faces a stiff burden in any § 2 litigation." 784 F.2d at 1338 (emphasis in original.)

Plaintiffs in the instant case face a stiff burden. They must show more than the intent to injure competitors. They must show the intent to subsequently injure consumers by the raising of prices to monopoly levels, the second portion of the two-fold definition of monopoly. The culpable intent must include [20] the intent to injure consumers with prices unrestrained by competitive forces.

Lektro-Vend, supra, elaborated on the intent issue stating that HN5[] element number one was "a specific intent to monopolize, i.e., to gain the power to control prices or to exclude competition in a line of commerce." 660 F.2d at 270. Further, Judge Pell, speaking for the court, pointed out the relationship of the specific intent requirement and the second requirement of predatory conduct to accomplish the monopoly end. At page 272, Judge Pell acknowledges, "While specific intent to monopolize can sometimes be inferred from predatory acts, the plaintiffs have failed to show that Vendo's actions relating to Stoner were not primarily motivated by legitimate business purposes." A monopolizer generally doesn't leave a paper trail, and revelation from an examination of his conduct would of necessity assist in the finding of intent. The predatory acts and the intent deduced therefrom require examination. Were there legitimate business purposes in the actions? Were the actions predatory because of the intent to control prices or exclude competition?

The second requirement of a showing of attempted monopoly is evidence [21] of predatory or anticompetitive conduct directed to accomplishing the unlawful end. Of the kinds of predatory conduct that have been discussed by the courts, plaintiffs herein accuse Kroger of predatory pricing. Again, this is not an easy concept. Judge Easterbrook in his article entitled Predatory Strategies and Counter Strategies, 48 U. Chi. L. Rev. 263 (1981) says,

> "There is a highly competitive market for predatory pricing theories. Scholars have produced a blizzard of rules defining unlawful predatory practices. Some of the rules depend on the relationship between price and cost, some on the relationship between price and time, some on the relationship between quantity sold and time. One approach eschews rules altogether and suggests the courts examine the totality of the circumstances. The proponents of cost-based tests do not agree among themselves. Should the rule depend on marginal, average, variable, or average total cost? What is the rule of intent and intent to do what? The most recent approaches propose a collection of cost-based tests; which one applies depends on the structure of the industry and the availability of other strategies that the alleged predator could [22] have pursued." Id. at 263-64.

In this quagmire of theories, courts should be cautious of inferences and per se rules based On predatory pricing theories.

Judge Cudahy addressed the principle in MCI Communications v. American Telephone and Telegraph Co., 708 F.2d 1081 (7th Cir. 1983):

> HN6[] "Liability for predatory pricing represents an exception to the general antitrust regime which contemplates that no limits on price competition shall be imposed. Predatory pricing is prohibited because of the fear that a monopoly or dominant firm will deliberately sacrifice present revenues for the purpose of driving rivals from the market and then recoup its losses through higher profits earned in the absence of competition." Id. at 1112.

[*569] HN7[] The gravamen of predation is not the recoupment of losses from increased market sales at competitive prices, it is the recoupment of losses from monopoly prices. Predatory pricing is pricing by a monopoly or at least a dominant firm that will cause that firm to suffer losses, the purpose for which is to allow the predator to recoup losses through higher prices set in the no longer competitive market. This again is the concept that distinguishes anticompetitor [23] conduct from anticompetitive conduct. Predation is a two-fold notion: prey and recoup at higher prices than a competitive market would permit.

Justice Powell in Matsushita, supra, quotes Professor Bork, for this notion of predation:

> "Any realistic theory of predation recognizes that the predator as well as his victims will incur losses during the fighting, but such a theory supposes it may be a rational calculation for the predator to view the losses as an investment in future monopoly profits (where rivals are to be killed) or in the future undisturbed profits (where rivals are to be disciplined). The future flow of profits appropriately discounted must then exceed the present size of the losses." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 589, quoting R. Bork, The Antitrust Paradox 145 (1978).

Again, there is nothing predatory about recouping from increased market sales or competitive prices.

This concept of predation is extremely important in the § 2 scheme. If a predatory act itself will support an inference of intent as Judge Pell suggests in Vendo, supra, then the predatory behavior must be examined closely.

Note that while the predatory conduct is two-fold as explained above, [24] the predatory intent is also two-fold: To prey and to recoup. As Justice Powell further points out in Matsushita, HN8[] "The success of any predatory scheme depends on maintaining monopoly power for long enough both to recoup the predator's losses and to harvest some additional gain." 475 U.S. at 589. The loss to be recouped is more than the dollar amount of the loss suffered.

Having examined the first two thresholds of an attempted monopoly case, it is clear that by itself HN9[] a showing of specific intent to control prices and destroy competitors is insufficient to make the case. Predatory behavior must also be shown. Applied to the instant case, the requisite intent to monopolize can be found in defendants' pricing below cost only if appended thereto is the goal of recouping losses and more in a competitor free market. Matsushita; MCI, supra.

Areeda and Turner are cited continually in antitrust matters. In Volume III of their work on antitrust, An Analysis of Antitrust Principles And Their Application (1978) Areeda and Turner make the following contribution to the theory of predation:

> "Indeed, HN10[] the classically feared case of predation has been the deliberate sacrifice of present revenues [25] for the purpose of driving rivals out of the market and then recouping the losses through higher profits earned in the absence of competition. Thus, predatory pricing would make little economic sense to a potential predator unless he had (1) greater staying power than his rivals, and (2) a very substantial prospect that the losses he incurs in the predatory campaign will be exceeded by the profits to be earned after his rivals have been destroyed . . . . [It] should, of course, be recognized that predation cannot be successful and therefore is unlikely to occur when the predator's rivals possess resources comparable to his own." 3 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law, para. 7116 (1978). (Hereinafter "Areeda & Turner".)

Thus, specifically, pricing is not predatory unless the predator has greater staying power and resources than his rivals. A theory of predation would not be plausible under the above scenario.

It is fair to conclude from the cases and literature on predation that the behavior of an alleged attempted monopolizer requires scrutiny. When the intent to monopolize is sought to be supplied by one of the theories [*570] of predation, the predatory label should not be applied to the [26] behavior under analysis without some view to the staying power of the alleged predator's rivals, some inquiry into the probability of the prospect of the costs of the pricing being recouped, and some examination of the comparable resources of the alleged predator's rivals.

This scrutiny of the second element, predatory behavior, shows its relationship to the third element, substantial probability of success. Did the alleged monopolizer intend to finance his predatory behavior by higher monopoly profits and could he have plausibly done so, had his behavior continued unchecked? Was there a substantial probability of success?

Judge Easterbrook in Ball Memorial, supra, quotes from Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984), which while reflecting on the balancing of interests between regulation and freedom in the market points out the interrelationship between the requisite monopolistic intent and the danger of realizing that intent.

> HN11[]
>
> "It is not enough that a single firm appears to 'restrain trade' unreasonably, for even a vigorous competitor may leave that impression. . . . In part because it is sometimes difficult to distinguish robust competition from [27] conduct with long-run anticompetitive effects, Congress authorized Sherman Act scrutiny of single firms only when they pose a danger of monopolization. Judging unilateral conduct in this manner reduces the risk that the antitrust laws will dampen the competitive zeal of a single aggressive entrepreneur." Copperweld, 467 U.S. 767-68.

Hiland Dairy, Inc. v. Kroger Company, 402 F.2d 968 (8th Cir. 1968) addresses the dangerous probability of success criterion. The size of an alleged monopolist's market share and its relationship to the probability of success is discussed.

> HN12[]
> "While size is an element of monopoly power, a substantial part of the market must be controlled by the monopolist to enable the raising and lowering of prices and the undue restriction on competition.
>
> Of nine cases condemning monopolies under § 2 of the Act the percentage of market share ranges from 70 percent in United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 334 U.S. 131, 167, 68 S. Ct. 915, 92 L.Ed 1260 (1948) to 100 percent in the [sic] United States v. Pullman Co., [50 F. Supp. 123 (E.D. Pa. (1943)].

These nine cases considered are:

	Percent Market Share
United States of America v. American Tobacco Company, 221 U.S. 106, 162, 31 S. Ct. 632, 55 L. Ed. 663 (1911)	86%
Standard Oil Company of New Jersey v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 33, 31 S. Ct. 502, 55 L. Ed. 619 (1911)	90%
United States v. Eastman Kodak Co., 226 F. 62, 79 (W.D.N.Y. 1915), appeal dismissed, 255 U.S. 578, 41 S. Ct. 321, 65 L. Ed. 795	75-80%
United States v. Pullman Co., 50 F. Supp. 123,

	Percent Market Share
135 (E.D.Pa. 1943) aff'd per curiam, 330 U.S. 806, 67 S. Ct. 1078, 91 L. Ed. 1263	100%
United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416, 425 (2d Cir. 1945)	90%
United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 334 U.S. 131, 167, 68 S. Ct. 915, 92 L. Ed. 1260 (1948)	70%
United States v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 110 F.Supp 295, 343 (D.Mass. 1953), aff'd per curiam, 347 U.S. 521, 74 S. Ct. 699, 98 L. Ed. 910	75%
International Boxing Club of New York, Inc. v. United States, 358 U.S. 242, 249, 79 S. Ct. 245, 3 L. Ed. 2d 270 (1959)	81%
United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 567, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966)	87%"

[28] [*571] Id. at 974, and 974 n.6

Further, the Hiland Dairy Court cites United States v. United States Steel Corp., 251 U.S. 417, 444, 40 S. Ct. 293, 64 L. Ed. 343 (1920) in which the Supreme Court declined to find a monopoly on a market share of 50 percent or less stating "the power attained was much greater than that possessed by any one competitor - it was not greater than that possessed by all of them. Monopoly, therefore, was not achieved." In United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416 (2d Cir. 1945) the Court found a 90 percent share a monopoly, but said ". . . it is doubtful whether sixty or sixty-four percent would be enough and certainly 33 percent is not." 148 F.2d at 424.

Areeda and Turner offer the following explanation of the relationship between market share and market power as they relate to a dangerous probability of monopolistic success:

> "Perhaps as an aid HN13[] to predicting dangerous future probability, the cases also require that the defendant possess a measure of present proximity to completed monopoly - a measure of power in a relevant market. As with monopoly, the requisite market position is normally measured through an analysis of market share. Although precise definition of the [29] requisite position is no easier here than in the case of monopoly itself, it is clear that the basic thrust of the classic rule is the presumption that attempt does not occur in the absence of a rather significant market share. The defendant need not have present market power, but its position must be sufficiently 'proximate' to monopoly that the challenged conduct threatens success. Moreover, the presumption resting on market share may be overcome on a showing that the market is so narrowly defined, or entry so free, that 'success' would not yield the substantial market power needed for the offense of completed monopolization." 3 Areeda & Turner para. 831 (emphasis in original).

Areeda and Turner conclude re attempted monopoly cases:

> "We suggest the following rules of thumb, but caution, however, that such refined judgments of conduct and power are very difficult to make and may often be illusory:

(1) Claims involving 30 percent or lower market shares should presumptively be rejected, with the two 'no power' exceptions mentioned above. [3]

(2) In the 30-50 percent range, we would normally reject an attempt claim (with the usual exceptions) [see footnote 3]. We do, however, [30] reserve two categories of conduct - which may or may not exist in a given case - that would justify an attempt finding; (a) conduct which, given the defendant's market share, is very likely, but not quite as certainly as in the first unusual exception, to achieve monopoly; and (b) conduct which is so invidious as to almost, but not quite, satisfy the criteria for per se liability developed in para. 836.
(3) Claims involving 50 percent or larger market shares should presumptigvely be treated as attempts where the conduct requirements of para. 825-830 are also satisfied." Areeda & Turner at para. 835c.

This later Areeda and Turner quotation is included not to show that this Court agrees or disagrees with these attempted objective guidelines. The quotation is included to illustrate the role of market share in the determination of market power as it applies to attempted monopoly cases. All these rules are qualified as not helpful if predation can be shown. Additionally, HN14[] predatory pricing is presumed not to have occurred if market circumstances will not [*572] permit later recoupment of the losses resulting from the pricing. Areeda and Turner can but caution that ". . . if predation can't be [31] successful [market circumstances would not permit later recoupment], we may reasonably presume that it has not occurred, even before we inquire into price-cost relationships." Areeda & Turner para. 836b.

Thus, the concept of dangerous probability of success is intertwined with predation and intent.

Kearney & Trecker Corp. v. Giddings & Lewis, Inc., 452 F.2d 579 (7th Cir. 1971) says this about the dangerous probability test:

"A reliable or accurate measure of the actual likelihood that plaintiff would have achieved monopoly status if Beall's wrongful conduct had never been disclosed is, of course, not possible. However, we do not understand the 'dangerous probability' test to involve an evaluation of the actual likelihood that an attempt would have succeeded if not frustrated by an intervening event. Rather, it requires an appraisal of the alleged offender's ability [32] to achieve the forbidden result, his intent, and the nature of his overt actions. In an antitrust context we must consider the firm's capacity to commit the offense, the scope of its objective, and the character of its conduct. The ultimate concern is the firm's actual or threatened impact on competition in the relevant market." Id. at 598.

Kearney involved a patent wherein the court found that the patent was procured "by violation of conflict of interest principles." The character of that conduct was the predatory act, not the pricing. Kearney is quoted and applied in Lektro-Vend Corp. v. Vendo Co., supra, for the above principles. In any case, the relationship of the three requirements for prevailing in an attempted monopoly cause of action is clearly shown. There must be present intent to control prices in order to recoup the cost of predatory behavior with a dangerous probability of successfully recouping.

This cause is presented to the Court on defendant Kroger's Motion For Summary Judgment. The United States Supreme Court has recently addressed through a trilogy of cases the summary judgment standard. In Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., [33] 475 U.S. 574, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986) the Court approved of the summary judgment granted by the district court in a complex antitrust action dealing with both § 1 and § 2 of the Sherman Act. The case involved claims that Matsushita and other Japanese electronic manufacturers had conspired to drive their American competitors from the American market by charging predatory prices for consumer electronic products exported from Japan to the United States. The other two cases approving

[3] Areeda and Turner suggest those two exceptions should be those for instance in which it is clear that the challenged conduct will achieve market power and where there is clearly invidious conduct. See 3 Areeda & Turner at para. 836a. Areeda and Turner further suggest that the predatory pricing is invidious.

grants of summary judgment within different legal contexts are Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986) and Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). These cases taken together provide the guidance from which the instant case may be resolved. A statement from Celotex Corp. v. Catrett is illustrative and sets the tone for this summary judgment analysis. HN15[] "Summary judgment procedure is properly regarded not as a disfavored procedural shortcut but rather as an integral part of the Federal Rules as a whole, which are designed to secure the just, speedy and inexpensive determination of every action." 106 S. Ct. at 2555. The Celotex court had just prior stated:

> "the plain language of Rule 56(c) [34] mandates the entry of summary judgment, after adequate time for discovery and upon motion, against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which the party will bear the burden of proof at trial. In such a situation there can be 'no genuine issue as to any material fact', since a complete failure of proof concerning an essential element of the non-moving party's case necessarily renders all other facts immaterial." Id. at 2252-2253.

Under Celotex then, defendant Kroger's motion which was properly made and supported by affidavits and references to discovery [*573] responses, must be met with affidavits and discovery responses of admissible evidence showing a genuine issue for trial.

Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc. adds to these procedural guidelines. The Supreme Court says:

> "Our holding that HN16[] the clear-and-convincing standard of proof should be taken into account in ruling on summary judgment motions does not denigrate the role of the jury. It by no means authorizes trial on affidavits. Credibility determinations, the weighing of evidence and the drawing of legitimate inferences from the facts [35] are the jury functions, not those of a judge, whether he is ruling on a motion for summary judgment or for a directed verdict. The evidence of the non-movant is to be believed, and all justifiable inferences are to be drawn in his favor." 106 S. Ct. at 2513.

This quotation follows the statement of the rule that HN17[] there is no genuine issue for trial unless a properly instructed jury could return a verdict for the non-moving party.

The Honorable William W. Schwarzer, United States District Judge, Northern District of California, in his article Summary Judgment and Case Management, 56 Antitrust L.J. 213 (1987) focuses on the Court's use of the phrase "justifiable inferences" in dealing with the import of Anderson, supra. Judge Schwarzer says "Upon analysis Anderson is simply an application of the same rationale that underlay the earlier decision in Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., that undisputed evidence submitted by a plaintiff may be insufficient to sustain a verdict which turns on a mixed question of law and fact under the applicable substantive law." 56 Antitrust L.J. at 218.

Judge Schwarzer's analysis is of assistance in the instant case. [36] He finds the issue in the above three cases to be the same, i.e., HN18[] "whether as a matter of substantive law or policy, the court should permit a jury to draw from the undisputed material facts the inferences necessary to sustain liability." Id. at 218-19. He suggests the courts answer the following questions:

> "(1) whether evidentiary or historical facts material to the disposition of the motion are disputed;
> (2) if not, whether the mixed question of fact and law arising under the governing substantive law must be submitted to the jury."

He offers no easy guidelines to separate these mixed questions of law and fact into those appropriate for the jury and those appropriate for the judge. He does suggest that Anderson and Zenith indicate the need to probe for elements of substantive law and policy that may circumscribe the freedom of the jury to reach an adverse finding. He writes:

> HN19[] "Other factors that may determine on which side of the line an issue falls include whether the issue calls for the application of a regulatory scheme or other technical considerations, the interpretation of a statute or a written instrument, or consistency and adherence to precedent. These [37] kinds of issues, although involving fact questions, are often treated as questions of law. On the other hand, questions involving reasonableness of human conduct, the adequacy of care exercised by a person, and the timeliness of action are the kinds of fact questions within the common experience of jurors and normally left for decision at trial." Id. at 220.

The instant case is one wherein certain behavior is alleged to be violative of antitrust law. The facts regarding the behavior itself are not materially at issue. The behavior of Kroger is admitted. At issue are the inferences to be drawn from the behavior. These inferences deal with issues of intent, predation and dangerous probability of success; statements are facts, pricing is a fact, market definition and share are taken as facts. The inferences are the precise mixed law and fact questions referred to in the previously cited article. The issues of fact are the same as the issues of law, namely, is there an intent to monopolize, was the pricing predatory, and was there a dangerous probability of success. Under Judge Schwarzer's analysis, this is not a question of the reasonableness [*574] of conduct. Whether Kroger's responses [38] to Cub's entry were reasonable or not isn't the issue. The issue is not a question of timeliness of action or the adequacy of care exercised. The issues are of substantive law and policy, interpretation of statute and adherence to precedent. In Matsushita the Supreme Court has determined that the inferences are already limited by the very fact that this case is an antitrust case.

Specifically, the Supreme Court in Matsushita recognized the HN20[] need for a competing inference in antitrust cases, i.e., a competing inference to the traditional summary judgment inferences which favor the non-moving party. That inference is necessary because the substantive law from the statute and precedent is reflective of competing economic benefits of controlling a given market and allowing it to remain uncontrolled, and reflective of the policymaking difficulty inherent in determining what is competitive and what is anticompetitive. The inference is that the factual behavior of the defendant was motivated by competitive rather than monopolistic intent. "Respondents in this case, in other words, must show that the inference of conspiracy [illegal behavior] is reasonable in light of the competing [39] inferences of independent action or collusive action that could not have harmed respondents." Matsushita, 475 US. at 588.

HN21[] A further limitation on inference in antitrust cases is that the inference of monopolistic intent under all the facts must be a plausible inference.

> "It follows from these settled principles that if the factual context renders respondent's claim implausible - if the claim is one that simply makes no economic sense - respondents must come forward with more persuasive evidence to support their claim than would otherwise be necessary [to defeat a summary judgment motion]." Matsushita 474 U.S. at 587.

Having set out the facts in the instant case and having reviewed the three proofs necessary for a finding of attempted monopoly, an attempt will be made to determine for summary judgment purposes the plausibility of plaintiffs' proffered inference that Kroger Co. is an attempted monopolizer as measured against the competing inference that the company is a legitimate, albeit tough, competitor.

The Supreme Court in Matsushita has recognized that HN22[] matters of antitrust substantive law and policy reflected in statutory language and precedent require [40] a closer scrutiny in antitrust litigation at the summary judgment level. Of particular importance in an antitrust case is the question of whether a party can properly overcome an inference of competitiveness by reliance on an inference of intent from behavior they insist is per se predatory and again rely on that same inference to support an inference of dangerous probability of success. This Court thinks the answer to that question is no.

An examination of plaintiffs' evidence and argument will reveal further why this motion for summary judgment must be granted.

Plaintiffs argue in this case that they have substantial evidence that Kroger engaged in predatory pricing. They accuse Kroger of engaging in the "deliberate sacrifice of present revenue for the purpose of driving rivals out of the market and then recouping the losses through higher prices earned in the absence of competition." It should be noted again that the "higher prices" of which the law is concerned are the prices required to recoup the losses created by the low pricing and set not according to free market forces. Ball Memorial Hospital, Inc. v. Mutual Hospital Ins., supra, Lektro-Vend Corp. v. Vendo, supra, [41] MCI Communications v. American Tel. & Tel., supra.

As proof of the predatory nature of Kroger's pricing, plaintiffs allege that Kroger priced below its average variable costs as part of its strategy upon the entrance of defendant Super Valu into the market place. Plaintiffs' expert, Dr. Bruce Marion, divides the Indianapolis market into four zones. Plaintiffs' expert accountant, Robert L. Grottke, concludes that in three of those four zones Kroger priced its products [*575] below its average variable costs. For purposes of the summary judgment, the Court will treat Dr. Marion's market definitions as factual and Grottke's average variable cost conclusions as factual.

Plaintiffs, using these guidelines, then point out that Kroger, on the entry of Super Valu in the west submarket, dropped its prices below average variable costs in seven nearby Kroger stores for six 4-week accounting periods. Kroger then raised its prices in those stores to levels above average variable costs but below total costs. Plaintiffs allege and the Court will take as true that when Cub entered the east submarket, Kroger dropped prices below variable costs in five stores for four 4-week accounting periods. In the south [42] submarket, they did the same in three stores for two 4-week accounting periods. Plaintiffs admit that if the Indianapolis market is not divided into four zones, and the total Indianapolis market is considered together, there can be no showing that Kroger's pricing was below average variable costs.

Plaintiffs argue that evidence of pricing below average variable costs is the single best test of predation and refer the Court to Areeda and Turner, 88 Harv.L.Rev. at 733 [4] for the notion that this pricing should be conclusively presumed unlawful. Plaintiffs' expert economist, Dr. Marion, is cited for additional inferences of predation. Professor Marion concludes Kroger intended to eliminate weaker competitors and intended to protect and expand its market share in response to Super Valu's entry. Plaintiffs point out Kroger sales rose in seven Kroger stores in the west zone by 54 percent from 1983 to 1986 and that there were similar gains in the east and south zones. Plaintiffs further urge that in the west submarket, Kroger kept its prices below total cost for almost a year and a half, in the east submarket for one year and one month, and in the south for more than a year. Kroger kept [43] its prices below total cost in the entire Metropolitan Statistical Area (MSA) for twelve 4-week periods.

Plaintiffs' expert concludes that Kroger's pricing is predatory. He bases that judgment on the pricing itself, its persistence, the growth in Kroger's sales, the existence of barriers to entry, and the level of concentration in the market.

Plaintiffs urge that the average variable cost standard is a substitute for intent since tests solely based on intent are unworkable, citing MCI, 708 F.2d at 1113. They cite Chillicothe, 615 F.2d at 431-32, for the notion that cost-based standards provide an objective means for distinguishing between (1) pro-competitive price-cuts that are intended to maximize short run profits or minimize short run losses, and (2) prices that make the seller worse off in the short run and can therefore be justified only by their effects on competition and the goal of later raising prices to above normal levels. From this, plaintiffs wish to draw the inference that Kroger was pricing for the purpose of harming competition.

[44] To sum up, plaintiffs believe that since they can show evidence of pricing below average variable costs in three of four submarkets for up to 24 weeks and since they can show pricing below total costs for over almost a year in the total Indianapolis market and since a cost-based theory of predation is the best proof of intent, they are entitled to a presumption that the second half of the definition of predation is present. That is, that Kroger's goal was to recoup its losses from above competitive prices in the future.

---

[4] Areeda and Turner, Predatory Pricing and Related Practices Under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 88 Harv.L.Rev. 697 (1975).

Addressing initially the argument by plaintiffs that defendant Kroger engaged in predatory conduct, the concept of predatory pricing must be examined. The previous quotation from Areeda and Turner re per se predation from low pricing has been elaborated upon in P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp Antitrust Law para. 711.2c, (Supp. 1987):

> "Indeed the main text confined itself to possible predation by a monopolist, and most commentators have taken the position that predatory pricing is plausible strategy only for a firm that begins with [*576] a very substantial market share. Although no single market share number can be offered as a guaranteed minimum below which predation is [45] exceedingly unlikely, it seems reasonable to presume that a market share below 60 percent is too small to make predation likely."

Areeda & Turner's treatise does not, in contravention to plaintiffs' assertion, support plaintiffs' view that from Kroger's pricing predation can be presumed. Plaintiffs have no support for their argument that Kroger's pricing was per se predatory. Plaintiffs have not shown that the inference of anticompetitive predation excludes the inference of legal competitive behavior. They have not shown predatory acts. Plaintiffs' predation argument may work in theory, but it does not work in practice. It does not work because there is no evidence in the record from which it could be plausibly inferred that Kroger intended to or could have recouped its losses in a competitor free market.

Professor Areeda in his article Monopolization, Mergers and Markets: A Century Past and the Future, 75 Calif.L.Rev. 959 (1987), further defines the issue:

> HN23[] "To be predatory it is generally agreed that a price must be below the short-run profit maximizing level and must discipline or destroy rivals such that the predator thereafter gains sustained excess (that is, monopoly) [46] profits far larger than those lost during the rival-bashing period. The uncertain future gains must greatly exceed the present actual losses to overcome the uncertainty that rivals will be destroyed or disciplined and that monopoly profits can be reaped in the face of future entry. If rivals survive or entry occurs, not only will predation be unsuccessful, but the very prospect reduces the likelihood that a challenged low price is in fact predatory. Whenever the market circumstances make such predation unlikely, it is probably absent." Id. at 965.

Further, at p. 967,

> HN24[] "Although sacrifice of short-run profits is a necessary condition for the existence of predation, not every such sacrifice is predatory. A firm might charge less than it could get away with in the short-run to forestall government price ceilings, to discourage long-run substitution of other products, or to expand the market."

Here again is the well accepted notion that the predatory behavior is not itself predatory unless the predator intends to recoup and if unabated will acquire the ability to recoup his losses in a non-competitive market. Here, again, is a reasonable, competitive motive for Kroger's pricing [47] behavior, to increase market share and make increased profit from increased profits at competitive prices which we have seen is neither predatory nor against antitrust laws.

Michael Malina, as if in anticipation of this very case, in an article entitled Some Thoughts on Monopoly, Markets and Mergers, 75 Calif.L.Rev. 997 (1987), discusses the element of intent and costs and echos the Supreme Courts summary judgment concerns:

> "But with this sound shift of focus from the seller's hard-to-prove intentions to his demonstrable costs, there is a serious risk that, in the guise of protecting competitors from predation, courts will deprive the consumer of the lower cost prices that antitrust ultimately seeks to promote. For that reason, the Supreme Court recently reminded us in the Matsushita case that a price below incremental cost is predatory only if it is likely to lead to supracompetitive price and excess profits once the monopolist has eliminated his competition." Id. at 1001.

There is no per se predatory pricing in this case.

Dr. Marion offers some instructive evidence on the issue of predatory conduct. At page 27 of his deposition he states that he thought Kroger intended [48] to drive fringe competition from the market but not all competitors. At page 10 of his Statement of Opinions of May 20, 1987, on Kroger's intent to recoup, he says:

> "Over time, I expect both Kroger and Cub will increase prices, gross profits and net profits. Whether Kroger will [*577] raise prices above pre-Cub level is not clear. I do believe they will be able to raise prices above the level they would have, absent the price war between Kroger and Cub that eliminated several competing supermarkets, substantially weakened others and raised market barriers."

This, it seems to the Court, falls short of evidence that Kroger engaged in predatory conduct or intended to so engage because there is no evidence that Kroger intended to be able to set its prices above competitive levels so as to recoup the losses it suffered to the detriment of the consumer. Dr. Marion would not infer the intent to do so nor the possibility of successfully doing so. The possibility of unrecouped losses is very real in this case. To inflict losses on oneself doesn't appear to be an antitrust violation. To do so intentionally, creating the possibility of recouping from monopoly pricing, appears to be the violative [49] behavior.

> "Competition is a ruthless process. A firm that reduces cost and expands sales injures rivals - sometimes fatally. The firm that slashes costs the most captures the greatest sales and inflicts the greatest injury. The deeper the injury to rivals, the greater the potential benefit. These injuries to rivals are byproducts of vigorous competition, and the antitrust laws are not balm for rivals' wounds. The antitrust laws are for the benefit of competition and not competitors. Ball Memorial, 784 F.2d at 1338.

In law the plaintiffs are not entitled to either a presumption or an inference that Kroger intended to recoup its pricing loses from monopoly power pricing. Dr. Marion would not infer it. Such an inference would clearly be implausible under Matsushita. There is no evidence therefore that defendant's conduct was predatory.

The weakness of plaintiffs' case can be shown further by addressing the intent requirement. Intent, culpable intent, is the intent to control prices and exclude competition, and the Court will look to see the evidence presented by the plaintiffs on both issues. Plaintiffs begin their argument on this issue by stating that they have evidence that [50] Kroger intended to sacrifice revenues and recoup losses. This evidence, they say, is both direct and circumstantial.

Plaintiffs argue that intent to monopolize can itself be inferred from Kroger's pricing practices, citing William Inglis & Sons Baking Co. v. ITT Continental Baking Co., 668 F.2d 1014 (9th Cir. 1981). This is simply not the law in the Seventh Circuit. MCI, supra. There is no doubt that there are three requirements for proof of an attempted monopoly in the Seventh Circuit.

Plaintiffs next cite various statements of Kroger executives pointing out that Kroger embarked on an aggressive course. Kroger executive Ted Engle is quoted as writing of the need to impress Super Valu. "Needless to say, this will take a significant investment in gross margins and net profit to prevent him (Super Valu) from taking away a substantial portion of our sales. If we can do this, then it is logical to assume that at some point in the future we should be able to move gross margins to a more profitable level." Kroger 1984 Business Plan.

Plaintiffs cite Kroger's Indianapolis market net loss projection for 1984 of eleven million dollars and for that period between 1984 and 1986 as twenty [51] million dollars. Plaintiffs must then wish the Court to infer that Kroger expected to be able to recover its losses by exercising monopoly power since the losses were so high. This argument is in direct contrast to the previously cited expectations of their expert, Dr. Marion, who had no opinion on the level of pricing going above pre-Cub (Super Valu) entry. Plaintiffs are not entitled to a summary judgment defeating inference that since there was a loss Kroger would have recouped it with monopoly pricing. This does not defeat the competing inference that the loss could be recouped by increased profits from increased sales at competitive prices.

Plaintiffs say that the Kroger business plans show gross profits rising from an intent to increase market share. Intent to increase market share by itself is not [*578] intent to monopolize. Ball Memorial Hospital, supra. Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 107 S. Ct. 484, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986). They again point out anticompetitor statements. These statements amount to no more than those found by Lektro-Vend Corp. v. Vendo Co., supra, to be unharmful without establishing also predatory behavior or a dangerous probability of success:

> "Finally, [52] appellants rely upon various statements made by Vendo officials which are scattered throughout the voluminous record in this case. In the first place, we would not necessarily regard all of the appellants' examples as evidence of specific intent to monopolize. Secondly, while some of the references might arguably support a finding of specific intent if the evidence had established the existence of predatory acts or dangerous probability, we cannot say that the district court's finding of no specific intent was clearly erroneous in light of the plaintiffs' failure to establish these other factors. We agree with the Fifth Circuit's affirmation in Hayes v. Solomon, 597 F.2d 958 (5th Cir. 1979) . . . that HN25[] a statement of intent to compete, . . . even if perceived as a threat, is not unlawful. Such a manifestation of intent to triumph in the competitive market, in the absence of unfair, anticompetitive or predatory conduct, is not enough to establish an antitrust violation." See Agrashell, Inc. v. Hammons Products Co., 479 F.2d 269, 285 (8th Cir.) cert. denied, 414 U.S. 1022, 94 S. Ct. 445, 38 L. Ed. 2d 313 (1973) (Court attaches little significance to statement that the other [53] party "had no right in the walnut shell business. This is my domain.") Dahl, Inc. v. Roy Cooper Co., 448 F.2d 17, 19 (9th Cir. 1971) (Court characterizes remark that the defendant would drive the plaintiff out of business if it chose to compete as a "manifestation of intent to triumph in the competitive market, [which] in the absence of unfair, anticompetitive or predatory conduct, is not enough to establish a violation of § 2.)" Lektro-Vend, 660 F.2d at 255.

Plaintiffs try to find the requisite intent to recoup from Kroger's projections of profit after the building of new stores. Nowhere do plaintiffs maintain that these projections show a pricing structure that would operate independent of a competitive market. At best they show an intent to increase profit through increased market share.

Plaintiffs then wish to infer intent from Kroger's failure to analyze the antitrust implication of their planned actions. Plaintiffs cite Tasty Baking Co. v. Ralston Purina, Inc., 653 F. Supp. 1250 (E.D.Pa. 1987). Therein the Court was aware of such an analysis but was never treated to written copies. Such is not the case at hand. Intent in this instance cannot be inferred plausibly from [54] a failure of antitrust planning.

On the issue of intent plaintiffs' proof fails to override a competing inference that Kroger's behavior was legitimate competitive behavior. Intent cannot be inferred from the pricing behavior nor from the competitive statements of Kroger executives nor from an intent to increase market share.

Plaintiffs finally argue that there was a dangerous probability that Kroger would gain monopoly power and injure consumers. An analysis of that argument shows the same lack of proof as the recoupment issue. They argue that that probability should be inferred from specific intent, the specific intent being inferred from the predatory pricing. There can be no question that "dangerous probability of success" is in fact an independent element of attempted monopoly. Ball Memorial Hospital, supra, Lektro-Vend, supra. Plaintiffs want a presumed intent from a per se illegal pricing scheme with an inferred dangerous probability of success. The Court rejects that invitation as not meeting the Matsushita summary judgment standard. A per se rule not adopted by this Circuit will not support an inference on presumption and thus defeat a summary judgment motion.

Plaintiffs [55] spend quite a bit of time pointing out that Kroger has disciplined [*579] competitors and therefore has violated antitrust law. The discipline complained of is no different than the destroying of competitors. HN26[] In order for the behavior to be a violation of § 2 it must be done with the intent to control prices and destroy competition so that losses sustained thereby may be recouped by the exercise of monopoly pricing.

The element "dangerous probability of success" requires the analysis previously set out in Kearney, supra. It requires an analysis of the market and defendant's ability to succeed in controlling prices above market factors. The market in this case is a retail market. It is a retail market with at least three strong players; plaintiffs, 24 stores, Super Valu (Cub), 4 stores, and Kroger, 33 stores. It is a market with other players, Marsh, 30 stores, Joe O'Malia, 9 stores, Mr. D's, 5 stores, Aldi, 5 stores, and Seven-Eleven, 4 stores. It is a market of which plaintiffs' economic expert, Bruce Marion, said, "There is no evidence that Kroger thought they could prevent Cub from successfully entering . . ." (Marion Aff., para. 21) It is a market in which Super Valu had enormous [56] staying power (Marion Dep., p. 485). It is a market, accepting plaintiffs' figures, of which Kroger has less than one-half. On this evidence and the statement of Dr. Marion, regarding price levels, it is not plausible to believe Kroger had or has a "dangerous probability of success."

HN27[] Analysis of dangerous probability of success further requires an understanding of the concept of monopoly power. Monopoly power is "the power to control prices or exclude competition." United States v. E. I. DuPont deNemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 391, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956). The Supreme Court in DuPont went on to say that every seller of nonfungible commodities has "power over the price and production of his own product," but this is "not the power that makes an illegal monopoly." Id. at 393. The plaintiffs' evidence on monopoly power comes from Dr. Marion. When asked at pages 50 to 52 of his deposition, "Now is it your position that Kroger has the power to control prices in Indianapolis" he replied, "No." He later said, "I'm not suggesting that Kroger can dictate or control marketwide prices or prices in any trading area just by itself."

In sum, plaintiffs' burden is to present evidence from which a rational [57] trier of fact could conclude that (1) defendant Kroger had the intent to destroy competition and control prices, (2) Kroger committed predatory acts with the intent to injure competition and to recoup losses from elevating prices in a non-competitive market and (3) there was a dangerous probability of Kroger achieving these goals. Plaintiffs' response to defendant's motion for summary judgment is devoid of evidence that Kroger intended to recoup losses from pricing behaviors by doing anything other than increasing market share. Plaintiffs' response is devoid of any evidence that Kroger preyed on competition with the intent to recoup losses by raising profits above competitive levels as no one has suggested that pre-price-war prices weren't competitive or that post-war prices will exceed pre-war prices. Plaintiffs' response is devoid of any evidence that Kroger came dangerously close to acquiring the forbidden monopoly power as there remains a market with at least two strong participants in Kroger and Super Valu and other participants in Marsh's, Mr. D's, O'Malia's, Indiana Grocery and Preston-Safeway, Aldi's and Seven-Eleven.

The Court GRANTS defendant Kroger's Motion for Summary [58] Judgment on Count I for the foregoing reasons.

Having granted the Motion for Summary Judgment of Kroger addressed to Count I, the Court now moves to a consideration of the Motions for Summary Judgment by defendants Kroger, Super Valu Stores, Inc. and Markkay of Indiana, Inc. on Counts II and III of the Amended Complaint.

Count II alleges that Cub Foods and Kroger have engaged in a pricing which plaintiffs characterize as predatory pricing with the intent and/or effect of injuring the plaintiffs and driving them out of business. Plaintiffs complain that that alleged predatory pricing conduct by Cub Foods [*580] and Kroger constitutes unfair competition. Plaintiffs further accuse Cub Foods in Count II of engaging in price discrimination with the intent and/or effect of injuring Indiana Grocery and Preston-Safeway and driving them out of business. They allege that that price discrimination constitutes unfair competition. They allege that the unfair competition by defendants has injured their business.

Count III alleges a tortious interference with business relationships and prospective business advantages. Count III alleges that the defendants Cub Foods and Kroger knew or had reason to know [59] that the plaintiffs had valid and established business relationships with their retail grocery customers. It alleges that Cub Foods and Kroger acted with the purpose of interfering with the plaintiffs' prospective advantage in plaintiffs' relationships with their customers. It alleges that no legitimate business reason justified the defendants' predatory pricing. It further alleges that the predatory pricing constitutes tortious interference with plaintiffs' business relationships and prospective business advantages. Finally, it alleges that the plaintiffs lost customers and suffered injury to their business as a result of the defendants' predatory pricing and interference with plaintiffs' relationships with their customers.

It appears to this Court that HN28[] Indiana law does not recognize low pricing as a common law tort and this Court will decline to exercise its pendent jurisdiction over the plaintiffs' common law claims.

The pricing scheme of Kroger being complained of in Counts II and III is the same scheme complained of in Count I. The scheme of Super Valu and Markkay is not quite the same. Plaintiffs allege the Markkay store sold its products at below their average variable costs [60] for 4 months and below its average total costs for 14 months. Plaintiffs allege Super Valu caused its products in their Cub Foods' store in the east zone to be sold at below average variable costs for some 45 days and below total costs for 13 months. Plaintiffs allege that Super Valu caused its products in the south zone to be sold at below average total costs for approximately 16 months. As in their argument under Count I, plaintiffs feel a characterization of pricing as predatory carries with it both allegations and beneficial inferences of culpable intent to injure rivals and competition. Indiana courts have rejected this approach.

Plaintiffs in their memorandum rely strongly on the case of Karges Furniture v. Amalgamated Woodworkers Local Union No. 131, 165 Ind. 421, 75 N.E. 877 (1905) for the proposition that Indiana law recognizes HN29[] "Underselling can be tortious where its purpose is to injure a rival." A complete statement of the law from the Karges case provides:

> "If the same tradesman, singly or with others, advertises his goods, undersells, solicits, and wins away the customers of his rival by false representation, intimidation or artifice, not to better himself, [61] but to injure his rival, he has committed an actionable wrong." 75 N.E. at 779-80.

The gravamen of the tort, therefore, is underselling by means of false representation, intimidation or artifice, not underselling in and of itself. The acceptance of the plaintiffs' use of the Karges case at face value would amount to a finding that Indiana law would prohibit one competitor from underpricing another competitor in order to outsell that competitor.

The Court can find no assistance from the plaintiffs' citation to Indiana State Fair Board v. The Hockey Corporation of America, 165 Ind. App. 544, 333 N.E.2d 104 (1975), vacated on other grounds, 429 N.E.2d 1121 (Ind. 1982). In that case, which does not involve any charge of price cutting, the court explained that the tort of unfair competition is one that applies to claims of passing off and other similar situations involving consumer deceit. 333 N.E.2d at 108. The Prosser (Prosser, Law of Torts (4th Ed. 1971), hereinafter "Prosser") quotation contained in Indiana State Fair Board, supra, at 109, shows his broad concerns, indicating that ". . . where the defendant is not seeking to [*581] acquire the business diverted from the plaintiff [62] for himself, but to gratify ill will or further some unrelated interest . . .", the tort claim ought to exist. It appears that Prosser's concern is that the motive of the action by the defendant is important, that the business diverted from the plaintiff is not being sought just to increase the defendant's market share but to gratify ill will or for some further unrelated purpose. Nowhere in the amended complaint is it alleged that the defendant's motive for its pricing in Indianapolis was ill will toward the plaintiffs. To the contrary, the plaintiffs have alleged that Kroger and Super Valu were motivated by profit, not by ill will.

In Durakool, Inc. v. Mercury Displacements Industries, Inc., 422 N.E.2d 680 (Ind. App. 1981), the court announced that:

> HN30[] "the test of unfair competition is whether the acts of the defendant are such as are calculated to deceive the ordinary buyer making his purchases under the ordinary conditions which prevail in the particular trade to which the controversy relates." Id. at 682, n.3.

This Court refuses the invitation of the plaintiffs to expand the tort law of the state of Indiana in the discretionary exercise of pendent jurisdiction, there [63] being no allegations of deceit or ill will in plaintiffs' complaint in Count II.

The Court therefore GRANTS Kroger's, Super Valu's and Markkay's Motions For Summary Judgment on Count II of the plaintiffs' Amended Complaint for the same reason.

Plaintiffs have alleged in Count III that the defendants' pricing scheme previously discussed in the Court's opinion amounts to a tortious interference with the plaintiffs' business relationships by the defendants. Plaintiffs contend that a tortious interference with prospective business advantage claim will survive a motion to dismiss if the allegations are either that the defendants' sole motive in causing the interference was a desire to harm the plaintiff or that the means used in effecting the harm were illegal. Great Escape, Inc. v. Union City Body Co., Inc., 791 F.2d 532 (7th Cir. 1986) contradicts plaintiffs' position. In Great Escape, at 542-43, the Court reviewed the Indiana law on the nature of the tort, and concluded:

> "We do not believe HN31[] a searching analysis only of motive is in most instances enough to send these cases to the jury. There must still under Indiana cases be something 'illegal' about the means employed."

[64] Citing Prosser, the Court said illegality means "violence or intimidation, defamation, injurious falsehood or other fraud, violation of the criminal law." Id.

Plaintiffs have failed to satisfy their pleading requirement in this Count. The Court has already found that defendants did not engage in predatory pricing. Plaintiffs' claim is therefore deficient as it alleges no illegal behavior. All that is alleged is that Kroger lowered its prices. The absense of an allegation of illegal behavior is fatal. There is nothing inherently tortious about reducing prices.

Defendant Kroger Company's, defendant Super Valu Stores, Inc.'s and defendant Markkay's Motions For Summary Judgment on Count III are GRANTED.

In Count IV, the plaintiffs allege that the defendants Super Valu and Markkay are corporations independent of one another and that they are competitors in the Indianapolis market. They allege that by agreement Super Valu controlled the prices of Markkay and that this agreement and the conduct pursuant to it equaled unreasonable restraining of trade to fix prices among competitors in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. Defendants Super Valu and Markkay maintain that the plaintiffs, [65] as the competitors of the defendants, have no standing to challenge any alleged agreement to set low prices unless the agreement was to set prices predatorily.

Plaintiffs have responded that because price fixing is illegal per se, they have standing as competitors to recover damages under § 1 of the Sherman Act without a showing that the alleged agreement was predatory. Plaintiffs do not suggest that they are prepared to prove any agreement to set prices at a predatory level. The [*582] standard of review for an antitrust summary judgment was discussed by the Court in Count I.

Under the case of Brunswick Corporation v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977) HN32[] competitors may sue other competitors under the antitrust laws only when their business losses derive from "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent. Id. at 489. The antitrust laws are designed to benefit consumers by encouraging low prices, not to protect competitors. Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 488.

The threshold issue in this cause is whether or not a competitor as opposed to the government has standing to attack an agreement to set low prices absent an allegation of predation. This issue has been [66] addressed recently by the United States Supreme Court in Matsushita Electric Industrial Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986), and Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 107 S. Ct. 484, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986).

In Matsushita, a case involving an alleged horizontal price fixing agreement among Japanese manufacturers to sell their goods at low prices in the United States, the Supreme Court made clear what the standard requirement was: "respondents must show that the conspiracy caused them an injury for which the antitrust laws provide relief . . . . That showing depends in turn on proof that the petitioners conspired to price predatorily in the American market." Matsushita, supra at 584, n.7 (citations omitted).

Cargill involved a claim by one competitor against two others to enjoin a merger alleging that it was threatened with the possibility that, after the merger, the defendants would lower prices to cost or above cost in an attempt to increase their market share. The Supreme Court analyzed the plaintiff's allegations under two theories of injury:

> "1) a threat of a loss of profits stemming from the possibility that Exel, after the merger, would lower its [67] prices to a level at or only slightly above its costs;
> 2) a threat of being driven out of business by the possibility that Exel, after the merger, would lower its prices to a level below its costs." 107 S. Ct. at 491.

The Court rejected both theories. As to the first theory, the Court said:

> "Brunswick holds that the antitrust laws do not require the court to protect small businesses from the loss of profits due to continued competition, but only against the loss of profits from practices forbidden by the antitrust laws. The kind of competition that Monfort alleges here, competition for increased market share, is not activity forbidden by the antitrust laws. It is simply, as petitioners claim, vigorous competition. To hold that the antitrust laws protect competitors from the loss of profits due to such price competition would, in effect, render illegal any decision by a firm to cut prices in order to increase market share. The antitrust laws require no such perverse result, for "it is in the interest of competition to permit dominant firms to engage in vigorous competition, including price competition." 107 S. Ct. at 492 [citations omitted].

The Court rejected the second [68] theory because there was no evidence of predatory pricing.

Herein the plaintiffs admit that no evidence exists of predatory pricing. Their claim is that they lost market share and suffered greater losses than they would have under what they term legal competitive conditions (plaintiffs' Brief In Opposition, p. 54). Therefore, plaintiffs' claim in the instant action is akin to plaintiff's claim in Cargill, i.e., loss of market share and profit as a result of defendants' low prices. The Cargill quote applies herein. Small businesses are not protected from loss of profits due to continued vigorous competition. The courts do not protect competitors from practices not forbidden by antitrust laws. Loss of market share is not by itself a protected loss.

The issue has been addressed by the case of Jack Walters & Sons Corp. v. Morton Building, Inc., 737 F.2d 698 (7th Cir. 1984).

[*583] In Jack Walters the plaintiff attacked an alleged vertical price fixing agreement to set low but not predatory prices. The court found that Walters did not suffer an injury of the type which the antitrust laws were intended to forbid. The court found that the loss to Walters from lawful price competition [69] was a gain to consumers and stated: "Walters will not be heard to complain about having to meet lawful price competition which antitrust law seeks to encourage merely because the competition may have been enabled by an antitrust violation." Id. at 708-09. The United States Supreme Court also recently addressed this issue in the Matsushita case, 475 U.S. 574.

Plaintiffs argue that the agreement entered into by the defendants was a price fixing agreement which was illegal per se, thus meeting the standing requirement of an injury which the antitrust laws were intended to prevent. The plaintiffs base their argument on Arizona v. Maricopa Medical Society, 457 U.S. 332, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48, 102 S. Ct. 2466 (1982). In that case the Court found that the maximum fee price fixing agreements entered into by two county medical societies representing approximately 70% of the county's doctors were per se unlawful under § 1 of the Sherman Act. The Court there said: "The per se rule 'is grounded on faith in price competition as a market force. " Id. at 348 (citation omitted). The Court was unpersuaded by the argument that the agreements were alleged to have pro-competitive justifications. Id. at 351. However, in the [70] 1987 supplement to their treatise on antitrust law, Areeda and Hovenkamp, whom both plaintiffs and defendants cite frequently in their pleadings and papers, specifically addressed the situation set forth in Arizona and said:

> "For example, imagine that physicians agree upon their maximum prices, which the Supreme Court has condemned as per se unlawful because it tampers with the market or because the price fixed might be a disguised minimum. In addition, a maximum price fix can limit the provision of services consumers desire. Suppose that a rival physician attacks the price-fixers and proves that he lost patients who shifted their patronage solely because the defendant physicians offered lower prices. Such injury-in-fact proximately caused by the illegal price fix is not antitrust injury, because protecting high-price suppliers against lower-priced competition desired by consumers is not an injury that the antitrust laws are designed to prevent, nor does it flow from the rationale for condemning maximum price fixing." Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, para. 335.1c at 263 (1987 Supplement) (footnotes omitted).

They went on to note that the only exception to this rule might [71] arise if the prices were fixed at a predatory level. Id., n.27. Of course, there is no such allegation of predatory pricing in this Count. In light of this and relying on the recent decisions in Jack Walters and Matsushita, this Court is not persuaded by the plaintiffs' reasoning and reliance on the Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society case.

Any injury which the plaintiffs suffered in this case was as a result of lawful price competition, not as a result of anything forbidden by the antitrust laws. The purpose of the antitrust injury standing requirement is to carve out instances where even though there may be an antitrust violation and resulting injury, the allowance of recovery would be inimical to the purposes of the antitrust laws. Brunswick, supra, 429 U.S. at 488. Thus, the Court here finds that the plaintiffs have not met the standing requirement and cannot recover for a § 1 violation.

Having so found, the Court hereby GRANTS summary judgment to defendants Super Valu and Markkay on Count IV.

In Count V, the plaintiffs allege that the defendants Super Valu and Markkay conspired to monopolize the Indianapolis market and geographic submarkets in violation [72] of § 2 of the Sherman Act. In Great Escape, supra, at 540-541, the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals stated that the HN33[] plaintiff must prove the following for a conspiracy to monopolize claim:

> [*584] "1) the existence of a combination or conspiracy;
>
> 2) overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy;
> 3) an effect upon a substantial amount of interstate commerce; and
> 4) the existence of specific intent to monopolize."

The Court went on to state: ". . . the mere intention to exclude competition and to expand one's own business is not sufficient to show a specific intent to monopolize." 791 F.2d at 541. Here the plaintiffs withdrew their attempted monopolization claim against the two defendants after the plaintiffs' expert concluded that the pricing practices employed by Super Valu and Markkay were not predatory. The plaintiffs have not suggested in their opposition to summary judgment that they will seek to introduce any evidence to support the existence of defendants' specific intent to monopolize. Having failed to satisfy their burden as to an essential element, the plaintiffs' § 2 claim must fall.

The Court hereby GRANTS summary judgment to the defendants Super Valu and Markkay on [73] Count V.

Count VI of the plaintiffs' Amended Complaint alleges a civil conspiracy between the defendants Super Valu and Markkay alleging that they have combined and conspired to accomplish unlawful purposes or lawful purposes through unlawful means. Plaintiffs further allege that defendants have conspired to fix their prices and the prices have been predatory and intended to injure competition and defendants' competitors.

HN34[] Indiana law is clear that "there is no cause of action for conspiracy as such." Indianapolis Horse Patrol, Inc. v. Ward, 247 Ind. 519, 217 N.E.2d 626, 628 (1966). "If the complaint is to state a valid cause of action, the plaintiff must allege that the defendants conspired to accomplish an unlawful purpose or a lawful purpose by unlawful means." Durakool, Inc., 422 N.E.2d at 682. The unlawful means alleged in this count of the complaint is the price fixing at predatory levels with the intention of injuring competitors. That same allegation provided the basis of the plaintiffs' fourth and fifth counts. Again, HN35[] no Indiana precedent establishes price fixing or predatory pricing as a tort. Such conduct is unlawful only if it violates § 1 or § 2 of the Sherman [74] Act. The Court rejects plaintiffs' invitation to expand the state law in Indiana not recognized by controlling Indiana precedents.

The Motions by the defendants Super Valu and Markkay for summary judgment on Count VI are therefore GRANTED.

Count VII of the amended complaint alleges essentially the same price discrimination claim that was dismissed by this Court in its entry of June 18, 1986. The Court now GRANTS summary judgment to defendants Super Valu and Markkay on Count VII for the same reasons set out by Judge Barker in her opinion of June 18, 1986, found at 647 F. Supp. 254.

Boone v. Redevelopment Agency of San Jose

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

January 4, 1988, Submitted ; March 1, 1988, Filed

No. 87-15046

Reporter
841 F.2d 886 *; 1988 U.S. App. LEXIS 2442 ; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,911

David A. Boone; Stephen P. Fox, Individually and as General Partners of DSC-3 Group, a California Limited Partnership and as General Partners of Market/Post, Ltd., a California Limited Partnership; Dave Goglio; Donald Goglio, individually and as General Partners of Three G's, a California Limited Partnership, Plaintiffs-Appellants, v. Redevelopment Agency of the City of San Jose, a Public Body Corporate and Politic of the State of California; City of San Jose, a Municipal Corporation and Subdivision of the State of California; The Koll Company, a California corporation, Defendants-Appellees

Prior History: [1] Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, D.C. No. CV-84-20772-WAI, William A. Ingram, District Judge, Presiding.

Core Terms

developers, redevelopment, allegations, antitrust, municipal, immunity, parking, downtown, redevelopment plan, public official, city official, anti-competitive, promises, Sherman Act, adjudicatory, state action, blight, amend, city council, regulation, processes, campaign, estoppel, garage, secret, urban, equal protection, building permit, ordinances, authorize

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN1[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The appellate court reviews the dismissal of an action for failure to state a claim de novo. Reading the allegations in the complaint in a light most favorable to the nonmovant, and taking all of the allegations in the complaint as being true, the court will affirm only if it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Anticompetitive acts of a municipality that would normally give rise to liability under the Sherman Act are shielded if the municipality acts pursuant to a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy to displace competition with regulation. Pursuant to this test, the appellate court must undertake a two-part inquiry to determine whether state action immunity applies. The court must first determine whether the state legislature authorizes the challenged actions. Then the court must determine whether the legislature intends to displace competition with regulation. Both elements are prerequisites to proper application of the state action exception to municipal action. A state policy is considered clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed if the statutory provision empowering the municipality's action plainly shows that the legislature contemplates the kind of action complained of.

Governments > Courts > Authority to Adjudicate

Governments > Public Improvements > Community Redevelopment

HN3[] Courts, Authority to Adjudicate

Decisions made by municipalities acting under the California's Community Redevelopment Law, Cal. Health & Safety Code §§ 33000-33738, are reviewable in state courts.

Constitutional Law > Equal Protection > Nature & Scope of Protection

Constitutional Law > Substantive Due Process > Scope

Constitutional Law > Equal Protection > Judicial Review > Standards of Review

HN4[] Equal Protection, Nature & Scope of Protection

The standard governing attacks on economic regulations brought under the equal protection clause is well established. Unless a classification trammels fundamental personal rights or is drawn upon inherently suspect distinctions, court decisions presume the constitutionality of the ordinances and require only that the ordinance challenged be rationally related to a legitimate state interest. Similarly, ordinances survive a substantive due process challenge if they are designed to accomplish an objective within the government's police power, and if a rational relationship exists between the provisions and purpose of the ordinances.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Efforts to influence public officials do not violate the antitrust laws even though intended to eliminate competition. Such conduct is not illegal, either standing alone or as a part of a broader scheme itself violative of the Sherman Act.

Counsel: Herbert F. Kaiser, for the Plaintiffs-Appellants.

Michael N. Khourie and James G. Gilliland, Jr., Khourie & Crew, P.C., for the Defendants-Appellees-San Jose.

David T. Alexander, Jackson, Tufts, Cole & Black, for the Defendant-Appellee-Koll.

Judges: J. Clifford Wallace and Cecil F. Poole, * Circuit Judges, and Robert J. Kelleher,  District Judge.

Opinion by: WALLACE

Opinion

[*888] WALLACE, Circuit Judge:

Boone and others (developers) appeal from an order dismissing their antitrust and civil rights action against the Redevelopment Agency of the City of San Jose (agency), the City of San Jose, and the Koll [*889] Company (Koll). We have jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1291, [2] and we affirm.

I

This case involves a decision by the agency and the City Council of San Jose (council) not to construct a multi-story parking garage at a certain location in downtown San Jose. The agency is a municipal corporation created under California's Community Redevelopment Law, Cal.Health & Safety Code §§ 33000-33738 (redevelopment act), for the purpose of facilitating urban renewal in the downtown San Jose area. On November 17, 1978, the council, on recommendation of the agency, enacted a comprehensive plan for combatting urban blight in the city's downtown area. Under the plan, the city was to finance construction of a multi-story parking garage.

The developers are in the real estate business and, pursuant to the city's redevelopment plan, began construction of an office building in downtown San Jose in mid-1983. They allege that they began construction of this building with the understanding that the city would provide them with adequate parking in the proposed downtown parking building. Because of this understanding, the developers did not construct adequate on-site parking.

Koll is also a real estate developer. On March 29, 1984, the council approved an amendment [3] to the redevelopment plan, which allowed Koll to build an office building in downtown San Jose. This amendment required the relocation of the proposed municipal parking garage to the periphery of the redevelopment area. The developers allege that in return for not protesting the amendment, unnamed city officials promised to reserve a section of the relocated municipal parking structure for the developers' exclusive use. Unlike the developers, Koll planned and constructed adequate on-site parking for its building.

The developers allege that after they finished construction of their building, the city reneged on its promise to provide them with parking in the proposed municipal garage. The developers subsequently brought suit against Koll, the agency, and the city which included claims under the Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2, 16, and the equal protection and due process clauses of the fourteenth amendment, alleging that Koll had conspired with members of the agency and the council to relocate the proposed parking structure and not to give the developers exclusive parking in that structure, in order to force the developers to sell their building [4] to Koll at a bargain price. This "forced sale," in turn, would allegedly have given Koll a monopoly on office space in the downtown San Jose area.

The district court dismissed the developers' initial and first amended complaints with leave to amend. The first two claims for antitrust and civil rights violations in their second amended complaint were dismissed with prejudice for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). The pendent claims for promissory reliance and inverse condemnation were dismissed without prejudice so that they could be pursued in state court. The developers then timely filed this appeal from dismissal of the first two claims.

---

* Judge Poole was drawn to replace Judge Kennedy. He has read the briefs, reviewed the record, and listened to the tape of oral argument held on 5/13/87, in case No. 86-2506.

 Honorable Robert J. Kelleher, United States District Judge, Central District of California, sitting by designation.

II

HN1[] We review the dismissal of an action for failure to state a claim de novo. Fort Vancouver Plywood Co. v. United States, 747 F.2d 547, 552 (9th Cir. 1984). Reading the allegations in the complaint in a light most favorable to the nonmovant, and taking all of the allegations in the complaint as being true, see Western Reserve Oil & Gas Co. v. New, 765 F.2d 1428, 1430 (9th Cir. 1985) (Western Reserve), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 1056, 106 S. Ct. 795, 88 L. Ed. 2d 773 (1986), [5] we will affirm only if "it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957).

We discuss first the claims against the city and agency and then the claim against Koll.

[*890] A.

The city and agency argue that they are immunized from liability by the state action exception from the antitrust laws created in Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 (1943) (Parker). The basis of the state action exception is that the free market principles embodied by the Sherman Antitrust Act must give way to the countervailing principles rooted in federalism and state sovereignty that states must be free to act upon local concerns, even if these actions have anticompetitive results. See id. at 350-51. This exception was later expanded to protect municipalities in Community Communications Co., Inc. v. City of Boulder, 455 U.S. 40, 51-52, 70 L. Ed. 2d 810, 102 S. Ct. 835 (1982) (Boulder). The Court ruled in Boulder that HN2[] anticompetitive acts of [6] a municipality that would normally give rise to liability under the Sherman Act are shielded if the municipality acted pursuant to a "clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed" state policy to displace competition with regulation. Id.; see also Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 39, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24, 105 S. Ct. 1713 (1985) (Hallie). Pursuant to this test, we must undertake a two-part inquiry to determine whether state action immunity applies. We must first determine whether the California legislature authorized the challenged actions of the city and the agency. Then we must determine whether the legislature intended to displace competition with regulation. Both elements are prerequisites to proper application of the state action exception to municipal action.

A state policy is considered clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed if the statutory provision empowering the municipality's action plainly shows that "the legislature contemplated the kind of action complained of." Hallie, 471 U.S. at 44, quoting City of Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 415, 55 L. Ed. 2d 364, 98 S. Ct. 1123 (1978). [7]

Applying these principles to the instant case, the city and agency argue that they are immunized because all of their actions were carried out under the state authority of the redevelopment act. The purpose of the redevelopment act was to combat what the state legislature perceived to be a "serious and growing menace" created by blighted areas. Redevelopment Act § 33035(a). Redevelopment agencies, such as San Jose's, were authorized by the redevelopment act to facilitate urban redevelopment. The agencies and the municipalities were granted powers by the redevelopment act as broad as the problem they faced. The redevelopment act declares that it is the policy of the state to eliminate blight "through the employment of all appropriate means," id. § 33037(a). To this end, the redevelopment act authorizes municipalities to enact rehabilitation plans, id. § 33131(a), zone and rezone and grant exceptions from building regulations and ordinances, id. § 33220(d), issue bonds, id. § 33341, and condemn property, id. § 33342. In addition, the redevelopment act specifically authorizes the redevelopment agency, with city council approval, to "amend or modify" redevelopment [8] plans as necessary to carry out urban renewal, see Redevelopment Act § 33450, as was done here. These acts, which are clearly and affirmatively authorized by the California legislature, are precisely the types of activity that the developers challenge. Hence, the activities of the city and agency satisfy the first part of our two-prong test.

Moreover, the nature of activities enumerated in these provisions expresses an intent by the legislature to authorize the city to do a number of things that are clearly anticompetitive. The power to zone and rezone, for example, by its very nature encompasses the power to exclude competition. These "state statutes need not require anti-competitive conduct for the exemption to apply when it is apparent that anti-competitive effects would result from a broad authority to regulate." Mercy-Peninsula Ambulance, Inc. v. County of San Mateo, 791 F.2d 755, 757 (9th Cir. 1986).

We have ruled that similar broad grants of authority alone are sufficient to immunize "virtually any anti-competitive effect," id. at 758, which "logically would result from [such] broad authority to regulate." *Id., [891] quoting [9] Grason Electric Co. v. Sacramento Municipal Utility District, 770 F.2d 833, 838 (9th Cir. 1985), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 1103, 106 S. Ct. 886, 88 L. Ed. 2d 921 (1986). Accordingly, we conclude that the second part of our test, which requires that we find a legislative intent to displace the free market with state regulation, has been satisfied.

This specific grant of authority, coupled with the broad power to remedy blight discussed above, convinces us that the state legislature "clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed" a policy to permit anti-competitive acts, and that the state legislature contemplated the kind of municipal action about which the developers complain. See Hallie, 471 U.S. at 39, 44. Our conclusion is in accord with that of other courts that have considered the state action immunity exception in light of redevelopment statutes similar to California's, which authorize instrumentalities of the state to engage in activities that could have anticompetitive consequences. See, e.g., Cine 42nd Street Theater Corp. v. Nederlander Organization, Inc., 790 F.2d 1032, 1048 (2d Cir. 1986); Scott v. City of Sioux City, 736 F.2d 1207 (8th Cir. 1984), [10] cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1003, 85 L. Ed. 2d 158, 105 S. Ct. 1864 (1985); Reasor v. City of Norfolk, 606 F. Supp. 788 (E.D. Va. 1984).

Nevertheless, the developers argue that the redevelopment act does not apply because downtown San Jose was not a "blighted area" at the time the city acted. By its own terms, the redevelopment act was intended to promote redevelopment of "blighted areas." Redevelopment Act § 33037(a). Such areas are defined as those that constitute a "serious physical, social, or economic burden on the community" that they "cannot reasonably be expected to be reversed or alleviated by private enterprise acting alone." Redevelopment Act §§ 33030, 33032. According to the developers, the necessary prerequisites to finding blight were absent at the time the city used the redevelopment act to amend the plan. From this, they conclude that the city and agency cannot rely on the statute to immunize their actions.

Because this is an appeal from a dismissal for failure to state a claim, we must assume as true all factual allegations of material fact in the developers' complaint. See Western Reserve, 765 F.2d at 1430. Thus, [11] we must assume, as the developers allege, that the council erroneously determined that, at the time of the amendment, its downtown area was eligible for action under the redevelopment act. Nevertheless, it does not follow that the city and agency would be stripped of antitrust immunity merely because they imperfectly exercise their power under state law. A similar claim was made in Llewellyn v. Crothers, 765 F.2d 769, 774 (9th Cir. 1985) (Llewellyn), where we ruled that Oregon's Worker's Compensation Department was immune from antitrust liability, despite allegations made by a group of chiropractors that the Board had erroneously set reimbursement rates for chiropractic services artificially low. Although Llewellyn involved the action of a state agency, and not a municipality, the same concerns that were raised in Llewellyn about the role of this court in reviewing decisions by state actors apply to this case:

> "'Ordinary' errors or abuses in the administration of powers conferred by the state should be left for state tribunals to control." . . . A contrary rule would tempt aggrieved parties to forego available state corrective processes in hopes [12] of obtaining the treble damages remedy conferred by the Sherman Act. Here state corrective processes were available, and the aggrieved parties could resort to them.

Id. at 774 (citations omitted).

HN3[] Decisions made by municipalities acting under the redevelopment act are reviewable in state courts. See, e.g., Berggren v. Moore, 61 Cal. 2d 347, 38 Cal. Rptr. 722, 392 P.2d 522 (1964); Kehoe v. City of Berkeley, 67 Cal. App. 3d 666, 135 Cal. Rptr. 700 (1977); Babcock v. Community Redevelopment Agency of the City of Los Angeles, 148 Cal. App. 2d 38, 306 P.2d 513 (1957). The developers have filed suit in state court, [*892] seeking review of the city's and agency's action. In this situation, the concerns over federalism and state sovereignty raised in Hallie and Llewellyn dictate that the developers not be allowed to use federal antitrust law to remedy their claim that the city and the agency exceeded their authority under state law. They do not forfeit their immunity merely because their execution of the powers granted to them under the redevelopment act may have been imperfect in operation. [13] See Llewellyn, 765 F.2d at 774.

The developers next argue that their allegations that city officials acted in bad faith and as participants in a larger conspiracy, if proven, would strip the city of its antitrust immunity. This claim is also controlled by Llewellyn. There, we affirmed a summary judgment against the plaintiffs on their antitrust claims, "despite the possibility of improper motivation on the part of [agency officials]," on the grounds that:

> The availability of Parker immunity . . . does not depend on the subjective motivations of the individual actors, but rather on the satisfaction of the objective standards set forth in Parker and authorities which interpret it. This must be so if the state action exemption is to remain faithful to its foundations in federalism and state sovereignty. A contrary conclusion would compel the federal courts to intrude upon internal state affairs whenever a plaintiff could present colorable allegations of bad faith on the part of defendants.

765 F.2d at 774.

For the reasons discussed previously, the city and agency were acting pursuant to a clearly articulated and affirmatively [14] expressed state policy to replace competition, and therefore the objective standards set forth in Parker and Llewellyn are met. The district court properly dismissed the developers' antitrust claims against the city and agency.

B.

The developers' next claim, brought pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983, alleges that the city and agency denied them their fourteenth amendment equal protection, substantive due process, and procedural due process rights. We first discuss their equal protection and substantive due process claims.

The developers base their equal protection and substantive due process challenge on the claim that the city and agency induced them into constructing an office building through promises of providing adequate parking facilities, and then denied them access to such facilities, which were financed in part through tax assessments on the developers' property. Such actions by the city and agency are alleged to have discriminatorily deprived them of economically viable use of their investment and to have unlawfully diverted funds from property tax assessments to Koll's exclusive use.

HN4[] The standard governing attacks on economic regulations [15] brought under the equal protection clause is well established. "Unless a classification trammels fundamental personal rights or is drawn upon inherently suspect distinctions . . . our decisions presume the constitutionality of the [ordinances] . . . and require only that the [ordinance] challenged be rationally related to a legitimate state interest." City of New Orleans v. Dukes, 427 U.S. 297, 303, 49 L. Ed. 2d 511, 96 S. Ct. 2513 (1976). Similarly, "ordinances survive a substantive due process challenge if they were designed to accomplish an objective within the government's police power, and if a rational relationship existed between the provisions and purpose of the ordinances." Scott v. City of Sioux City, 736 F.2d 1207, 1216 (8th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1003, 85 L. Ed. 2d 158, 105 S. Ct. 1864 (1985); see Construction Industry Association of Sonoma County v. City of Petaluma, 522 F.2d 897, 906 & n. 11 (9th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 424 U.S. 934, 47 L. Ed. 2d 342, 96 S. Ct. 1148 (1976).

Here, the developers have not alleged that the interest of the city and agency in urban [16] redevelopment is illegitimate. Such a claim would be patently frivolous. [*893] Moreover, the municipality's regulation of parking is facially "rationally related" to the ends of urban renewal. Thus, we find no violation of the developers' equal protection or substantive due process rights.

Nor have the developers stated a claim under the procedural due process clause. To do so, the developers must allege facts from which we can conclude that they had a vested property right to parking in the proposed garage.

Whether a property right exists is determined by state law. The developers allege that they acquired a property right in the original parking structure, either by the city and agency issuing a building permit, or by common-law estoppel. Under state law, however, we find no basis for such a claim of entitlement under either theory.

The developers' reliance on the building permit issued to them by the city is misplaced. In their complaint, they did not allege that the city promised to provide parking in the building permit itself. The complaint states only that the permit was issued after discussions with the city and agency officials concerning the proposed garage. Absent [17] allegations of a specific provision in the building permit requiring the city to provide parking, the permit alone is insufficient to create a cognizable property interest.

The claim that a property interest in the proposed parking facility was created by estoppel is similarly deficient. The developers have cited no case, nor have we found one, to support their claim that a property interest can be created by estoppel under the facts of this case.

We need not reach that issue, however, because even if estoppel could create a property interest under California law, their pleading is insufficient to state a claim for estoppel. The alleged promises on which the developers argue they relied are pleaded in an entirely conclusory fashion. Moreover, the complaint fails to disclose facts which establish that these promises were made by persons with the authority, or apparent authority, so that the developers, as experienced businessmen, would be justified in relying on them. Nowhere in any of their three complaints do they identify who made the promises, or what the person's legal authority, if any, was to make them. Nowhere in their complaint is there an allegation that the council promised [18] them parking. Under the redevelopment act, it appears that such authority is granted only to the council. See, e.g., Redevelopment Act § 33366-67 (city council approval required for redevelopment plan); id. § 33368 (decision of city council will be final); id. § 33450 (redevelopment plan can be amended only by city council, subject to referendum). In short, the developers plead no facts from which we can infer that their reliance on the alleged promises was in any way justifiable. Absent such allegations, the developers cannot properly assert a claim of estoppel.

III

The developers also brought antitrust claims against Koll, alleging that it conspired with city officials to amend the redevelopment plan, thereby limiting the amount of parking available to the developers, in order to drive down the value of their building. Koll argues, and the district court ruled, however, that Koll's involvement in the alleged conspiracy consisted of legitimate lobbying activities that are immunized from liability by the Noerr-Pennington exception to the Sherman Act. In United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 (1965) [19] (Pennington), the Supreme Court ruled that

> HN5[] Efforts to influence public officials do not violate the antitrust laws even though intended to eliminate competition. Such conduct is not illegal, either standing alone or as a part of a broader scheme itself violative of the Sherman Act.

Id. at 670; see also Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 136, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 (1961) (Noerr). A contrary rule, according to the Court, could impede first amendment [*894] rights to petition the government. See 365 U.S. at 137-38.

In our analysis of this issue, we will first determine whether the activities of Koll are of the type that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine seeks to protect and then discuss whether any exceptions to the Noerr-Pennington protections apply. Our review of the developers' arguments, however, is guided in part by the fundamental first amendment values that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine is designed to protect. In order not to chill legitimate lobbying activities, it is important that a plaintiff's complaint contain specific allegations [20] demonstrating that the Noerr-Pennington protections do not apply. See Franchise Realty Interstate Corp. v. San Francisco Local Joint Executive Board of Culinary Workers, 542 F.2d 1076, 1080-81 (9th Cir. 1976) (Franchise Realty), cert. denied, 430 U.S. 940, 51 L. Ed. 2d 787, 97 S. Ct. 1571 (1977). Conclusory allegations are insufficient to strip them of their Noerr-Pennington protection. Id. at 1081. Although we may be more generous in reviewing complaints in other contexts, our responsibilities under the first amendment in a case like this one require us to demand that a plaintiff's allegations be made with specificity. Id. at 1082.

A.

The developers' complaint contains four basic allegations against Koll: (1) that Koll "developed close relationships" with city officials; (2) that Koll made "false reports and misrepresentations" to the council concerning the availability of parking downtown; (3) that Koll had "ex parte secret contact[s]" with city officials that culminated in "secret . . . agreements" to amend the redevelopment plan; and (4) that Koll "hired key city officials" and "made direct payments" [21] to city and agency officials.

The first allegation goes to the very heart of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. Successful petitioning of government often depends on the development of close relations between government officials and those who seek government benefits. Indeed, cultivating close ties with government officials is the essence of lobbying. Such conduct certainly falls within the ambit of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

The same is true of the developers' allegation that Koll misrepresented facts concerning the availability of parking in the redevelopment district. As pointed out by the Court in Noerr, attempts to influence public officials may occasionally result in "deception of the public, manufacture of bogus sources of reference, [and] distortion of public sources of information." 365 U.S. at 140. Such deception, as "reprehensible as it is, can be of no consequence so far as the Sherman Act is concerned." Id. at 145. While we do not condone misrepresentations, we trust that the council and agency, acting in the political sphere, can "accommodate false statements and reveal their falsity." Clipper Exxpress v. Rocky Mountain Motor Tariff Bureau, Inc., 674 F.2d 1252, 1271 [22] (9th Cir.) (Clipper Exxpress), amended, 690 F.2d 1240, 1261 (9th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1227, 103 S. Ct. 1234, 75 L. Ed. 2d 468 (1983).

The developers' allegations of shadowy secret meetings and covert agreements do not take their claim outside of Noerr-Pennington. They have not alleged the nature of these secret agreements and secret meetings, nor have they identified the "key city officials" allegedly involved. Moreover, they have not alleged that these activities were either illegal or outside the "traditional protection[s] afforded this activity by the First Amendment." Franchise Realty, 542 F.2d at 1085. Most notably, the developers did not allege that these activities were perpetrated for reasons other than legitimate petitioning of government.

Even if they had made such specific allegations, the behavior they ostensibly describe falls squarely within the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. In In re Airport Car Rental Antitrust Litigation, 766 F.2d 1292, 1295 (9th Cir. 1985), cert. denied, 476 U.S. 1141, 106 S. Ct. 2248, 90 L. Ed. 2d 694 (1986), we ruled that private meetings [23] between government officials and individuals seeking to monopolize the airport car rental market was a form of advocacy protected [*895] by the Noerr-Pennington rule. The redevelopment process, by its very nature, allows for ex parte deliberations between decision makers and advocates of a particular view. See In re Airport Car Rental Antitrust Litigation, 521 F. Supp. 568, 588 (N.D. Cal. 1981) (evidence of a series of ex parte meetings between defendants and public officials resulting in a contract to exclude competitors "prove[s] nothing other than a classic case for application of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine"), aff'd, 693 F.2d 84 (9th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 462 U.S. 1133, 103 S. Ct. 3114, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1368 (1983).

The developers' allegations of "payments to" and the "hiring of" key city officials suffer a similar fate. Again, they make these allegations in the most conclusory of fashions. We are not told who, when, how much, or for what purpose. More important, even if these allegations had been made with the requisite specificity, the alleged activities are facially valid. Former government officials are [24] often times hired by organizations seeking to petition government. Their expertise makes them particularly well suited for such a role. Payments to public officials, in the form of honoraria or campaign contributions, is a legal and well-accepted part of our political process. As stated by the Seventh Circuit:

> Clearly, allegations concerning campaign contributions do not convert into a Sherman Act violation conduct which Noerr held was not covered by the Act. We do not condone the giving or acceptance of campaign contributions as inducements to support the donor's interests in the legislative process. We merely hold that this conduct was not intended to be covered by the Sherman Act.

Metro Cable Co. v. CATV of Rockford, Inc., 516 F.2d 220, 231 (7th Cir. 1975) (Metro Cable); see also Noerr Motor Freight, Inc. v. Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference, 155 F. Supp. 768, 803-04 (E.D. Pa. 1957), aff'd, 273 F.2d 218 (3d Cir. 1959), rev'd, Noerr, 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 (1961) (allegations that competitors made campaign contributions and worked in close liaison with public [25] officials are insufficient to state an antitrust claim).

The developers did not allege that the hiring of, or payments to, the public officials was otherwise illegal. Thus, even if these alleged activities were carried out solely to influence the agency and the council, they fall within the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

B.

That the complained about conduct is the type protected by the Noerr-Pennington rule does not end the dispute. Such conduct may be excepted from the protection in certain circumstances. The developers' argument that such exceptions apply will now be considered.

While the developers' brief is far from clear, they appear to contend that we should apply any one of three possible exceptions to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. The first exception that they argue is known as the "sham exception," and is based on a suggestion made by the Court in Noerr that when "a publicity campaign, ostensibly directed toward influencing governmental action, is a mere sham to cover what is actually nothing more than an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor . . . [then] application of the Sherman Act would be justified." 365 U.S. at 144. [26] The developers have neither alleged the existence of a publicity campaign nor that Koll was not genuinely seeking official action from the city and agency. Such allegations are necessary to state a claim under this exception. See Franchise Realty, 542 F.2d at 1080-81.

The developers next contend that their allegations of misrepresentations, payments to public officials, and "secret backroom dealings" on the part of Koll fall within a second exception to Noerr created in California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S. Ct. 609 (1972) (Trucking Unlimited). In Trucking Unlimited, the Court ruled that illegal or fraudulent lobbying activities that would normally be immunized [*896] by Noerr-Pennington lose their protection if they occur in a judicial or quasi-judicial setting:

> There are many other forms of illegal and reprehensible practice which may corrupt the administrative or judicial processes and which may result in antitrust violations. Misrepresentations, condoned in the political arena, are not immunized when used in the adjudicatory process.

Id. at 513; [27] see also Clipper Exxpress, 674 F.2d at 1271. Our analysis of the developers' claim, therefore, is guided in part by the role played by the agency and the council when the plan was amended and the developers' parking was limited. If the agency and the council were acting as adjudicative bodies, the range of lobbying activities immunized by Noerr-Pennington would be much narrower.

We faced a similar situation in Franchise Realty. In that case, the plaintiff sued two associations of restaurant and hotel employers which had allegedly conspired to oppose the plaintiff's efforts to secure building permits from the San Francisco Board of Permit Appeals. 542 F.2d at 1078. We ruled that the Board of Permit Appeals was "as much a political as an adjudicatory body." Id. at 1079. Like the Board of Permit Appeals in Franchise Realty, the agency and the council have broad discretion to amend the plan, and approve or disapprove of new projects, whenever they deem it is "necessary or desirable" to carry out the ends of redevelopment. Redevelopment Act § 33450. Determination of what is "necessary or desirable" is vested exclusively with [28] the agency and the council. As in Franchise Realty, "the absence of more definite standards suggests that the [agency] is as much a political as an adjudicatory body." 542 F.2d at 1079. Indeed, nowhere in their complaint do the developers specifically allege that the agency and the council were acting as adjudicatory bodies when they carried out the complained of activities. Rather, they alleged that they were barred access to the city's administrative and "legislative" processes.

The developers now specifically contend that the agency and council's decision was adjudicatory. Their reliance on Horn v. County of Ventura, 24 Cal. 3d 605, 156 Cal. Rptr. 718, 596 P.2d 1134 (1979), for this proposition is misplaced. In Horn, the court ruled that the approval of a subdivision redevelopment by a planning department that would result in a "substantial" deprivation in the value of adjoining property was an adjudicatory act to which procedural due process protections attached. Id. at 612. The court based its holding primarily on the fact that "subdivision approvals, like variances and conditional use permits, involve the application [29] of general standards to specific parcels of real property. Such governmental conduct, affecting the relatively few, is 'determined by facts peculiar to the individual case' and is 'adjudicatory' in nature." Id. at 614. The court distinguished this situation from one involving "general rezoning" of a large area, which is more akin to a legislative process. Id. at 613; see also San Diego Building Contractors Association v. City Council, 13 Cal. 3d 205, 208, 118 Cal. Rptr. 146, 529 P.2d 570 (1974), appeal dismissed, 427 U.S. 901, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1195, 96 S. Ct. 3184 (1976). A redevelopment plan and its amendments obviously involve a large area and affects virtually every member of the community. In addition, all amendments to the redevelopment plan must be approved by the city council, which is defined by the redevelopment act as a "legislative body." Redevelopment Act § 33007. Thus, even though proceedings before the agency have some of the trappings normally associated with adjudicatory procedures, all final decisions are made by the council, a distinctly legislative body. Although this case does not require us to [30] draw a bright line between adjudicative and legislative processes, these considerations convince us that, like the Board of Permit Appeals involved in Franchise Realty, the agency and council were carrying out essentially legislative tasks in amending the plan.

[*897] The legislative nature of the city's decision distinguishes this case from Ernest W. Hahn, Inc. v. Codding, 615 F.2d 830 (9th Cir. 1980) (Hahn). There, the plaintiff (Hahn) alleged that the defendant (Codding) had filed a series of frivolous lawsuits solely to interfere with Hahn's attempt to build a shopping center. Id. at 836. We applied the Trucking Unlimited exception on the grounds that "Codding has invoked the judicial process not once, but thirteen times, in what the Hahn complaint describes as a thus far successful effort to prevent a competitor from entering the marketplace." Hahn, 615 F.2d at 842. Hahn clearly involves the misuse of judicial and not legislative processes. We conclude that the Trucking Unlimited exception to the Noerr protection does not apply to the actions of the city and the agency.

The developers' final [31] argument is that because they have alleged that city officials were active participants in the alleged conspiracy, we should apply the so-called "co-conspirator" exception to Noerr-Pennington. In Harman v. Valley National Bank of Arizona, 339 F.2d 564, 566 (9th Cir. 1964), a case decided before Pennington, we suggested in dicta that Noerr might not apply if a public official were a participating conspirator in the alleged agreement to restrain trade. See id. This view, however, was repudiated by Pennington. As we stated in Sun Valley Disposal Co. v. Silver State Disposal Co., 420 F.2d 341, 342-43 (9th Cir. 1969):

> The Supreme Court decisions have eroded the authority of . . . Harman . . .
>
> . . . .
>
> Pennington held that efforts to influence public officials are not illegal even if part of a broader anti-competitive scheme. Harman was based on this view that an attempt to influence an official when part of a larger scheme is subject to the federal antitrust laws.

Thus, Noerr-Pennington cannot be circumvented by merely alleging that a government official was involved in the alleged conspiracy. [32] See also Metro Cable, 516 F.2d at 230 (rejecting co-conspirator exception because it would "abrogate" the Noerr doctrine).

IV

The developers have been given two opportunities to amend their complaint to state a cause of action against the city and Koll. The allegations made against the city in their second amended complaint fall squarely within the Parker state action antitrust exception. Their allegations against Koll consist of activities clearly protected by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. Their civil rights claims are facially deficient. Therefore, the district court's dismissal of the developers' action is affirmed.

AFFIRMED.

Jaffee v. Horton Memorial Hospital

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

March 2, 1988, Decided

No. 87 Civ. 1842 (CLB)

Reporter

680 F. Supp. 125 *; 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1596 ; 1988-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P68,147

Robert M. Jaffee, M.D., Plaintiff, v. Horton Memorial Hospital, John W. Norton, Marvin Corn, M.D., Kenneth Adams, M.D., Edward Fisher, M.D., John Tortorella, M.D., James M. Pierce, the Horton Hospital Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat Department, Arden Hill Hospital, A. Gordon McAleer, Mark Stamm, M.D., Leslie Green, M.D., and the Arden Hill Ophthalmology Department, Defendants interstate commerce, anti trust law, privileges, staff

Core Terms

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Sherman Act may be invoked in a medical staff privileges action if the defendant is shown to be involved in interstate commerce since the alleged restraint on competition would affect interstate commerce.

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Judges > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Law of the Case

HN2[] Judicial Officers, Judges

Rulings made pre-trial by a district judge are subject to modification by the district judge at any time prior to final judgment. There is no imperative duty to follow the earlier ruling - only the desirability that suitors shall, so far as possible, have reliable guidance how to conduct their affairs.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3[] Private Actions, Remedies

A claim under federal antitrust laws is not established simply by showing that some aspects of a defendant's business have a relationship to interstate commerce. Rather the inquiry must be whether the defendant's activity that has been infected by unlawful conduct can be shown as a matter of practical economics to have a not insubstantial effect on the interstate commerce involved.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4[] Private Actions, Remedies

Though a price-fixing conspiracy or a group boycotting scheme can be shown as a matter of practical economics to have an adverse effect on the perpetrator's interstate activities, a complaint must allege facts from which it is inferable that the defendant's activities, infected with the particular illegality alleged, are likely to have a substantial effect on commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5[] Private Actions, Remedies

Even when monopolistic or anticompetitive activity is alleged, a complaint will be deemed insufficient unless some rational factual support for the allegations is offered.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6[] Private Actions, Remedies

The antitrust laws endure despite vigorous criticism. There is no reason to extend them to activities, such as the delivery of medical care, that their nineteenth century authors surely would have considered purely local, and therefore beyond the statutory scope. Medical practice per se and without more is a local activity.

Counsel: [1] Rochman, Platzer & Fallick, By: Irwin Rochman, for Plaintiff.

Horton, Malvean, Lewis, Sherwin, McDermott & Rosenstein, By: Monte Rosenstein.

Arden Hill: Hayt, Hayt & Landay: By: Aaron R. Cahn.

Stamm & Green: Feinman, Greher & Kave; By: Warren Greher.

Judges: Charles L. Brieant, Ch. J.

Opinion by: BRIEANT

Opinion

[*125] MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

Brieant, Ch. J.

By motion granted on January 13, 1988 and fully submitted on January 29th in this action under the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 15 and 26, the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2, and certain provisions of New York State law, defendants move, under F.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6), to dismiss the complaint of plaintiff Robert M. Jaffee, M.D., for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. For the reasons discussed below, that motion is granted.

Background

Plaintiff is a licensed physician, board certified in ophthalmology and practicing primarily in Orange County, New York. On various occasions from 1983 to 1986, he sought and was denied staff membership or professional privileges at the Elizabeth A. Horton Memorial Hospital ("Horton") and Arden Hill Hospital ("Arden Hill"). Alleging that the denials by Horton were motivated by an impermissible monopolistic motive, rather [2] than by consideration of his ability or character, Dr. Jaffee filed suit against Horton, its President and Chief Executive Officer, John W. Norton, its Vice President of Professional Services, James M. Pierce, and the Horton Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat Department, along with the Department [*126] Chairman, Dr. Marvin Corn (the "Horton defendants") in March of 1987.

On August 8, 1987, the Horton defendants moved under F.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) to dismiss the complaint for failure to state a claim, alleging that the facts described therein were insufficient to establish jurisdiction under the Sherman Act. Thereafter, on October 5, 1987, plaintiff amended his complaint with leave of this Court to include (a) Drs. Kenneth Adams, Edward Fisher and John Tortorella of Horton (also "Horton defendant"), and (b) Arden Hill Hospital, its Executive Director A. Gordon McAleer, and all doctors practicing ophthalmology and enjoying staff privileges at Arden Hill, including specifically but not exclusively Drs. Mark Stamm and Leslie Green (the "Arden Hill defendants").

This Court denied the motion of the Horton defendants to dismiss, granting leave to renew at the conclusion of all pre-trial proceedings. This ruling, [3] made in a brief oral decision announced from the bench, derived at least in part from Konick v. Champlain Val. Physicians Hosp. Med. Ctr., 561 F. Supp. 700, 710 and n.10 (N.D.N.Y. 1983), aff'd, 733 F.2d 1007 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 884, 105 S. Ct. 253, 83 L. Ed. 2d 190 (1984), which held in substance that HN1[] the Sherman Act may be invoked in a medical staff privileges action if the defendant is shown to be involved in interstate commerce, since the alleged restraint on competition would affect interstate commerce.

On January 13, 1988 the newly-joined Arden Hill defendants were heard on a motion grounded on the same contentions of fact and law as the Horton defendants' earlier motion. Primarily by reference to the case of Furlong v. Long Island College Hosp., 710 F.2d 922 (2d Cir. 1983), discussed infra, the Arden Hill defendants convinced this Court to reconsider whether the law of this Circuit requires more specific pleading of facts showing an effect on interstate commerce, than that provided in Dr. Jaffee's amended complaint. The Horton defendants were permitted to, and did, join the Arden Hill motion on January 27, 1988.

The Court allowed plaintiff's counsel two weeks to respond to these [4] motions, and advised him not to rely on our prior ruling of October 5th. This caveat notwithstanding, plaintiff's counsel informed the Court by letter dated January 19, 1988, that he would merely resubmit his opposing papers from the Horton motion, since "this motion is the same motion, based on the same reasoning and the same cases, which was made previously by defendant Horton Memorial Hospital." Thus, the notice afforded all parties concerning the Court's reconsideration of the motion was sufficient.

Disposition

While this Court is naturally reluctant to alter a pretrial ruling in a pending case, it is empowered to do so. "It is well established that . . . HN2[] rulings made pre-trial by a district judge are subject to modification by the district judge at any time prior to final judgment." In re "Agent Orange" Product Liability Litigation, 733 F.2d 10, 13 (2d Cir. 1984), citing, Slotkin v. Citizens Casualty Co. of New York, 614 F.2d 301, 312 (2d Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 981, 66 L. Ed. 2d 243, 101 S. Ct. 395, 101 S. Ct. 396 (1980). Indeed, "there is no imperative duty to follow the earlier ruling -- only the desirability that suitors shall, so far as possible, have reliable guidance how to conduct their [5] affairs." Dictograph Products Co. v. Sonotone Corp., 230 F.2d 131, 135 (2d Cir.) (L. Hand, C.J.), petition for cert. dismissed per stipulation, 352 U.S. 883, 77 S. Ct. 104, 1 L. Ed. 2d 82 (1956), quoted in, In re "Agent Orange" Product Liability Litigation, supra, 733 F.2d at 13.

We believe it appropriate to reexamine our holding of October 5, 1987 in this litigation in light of the Furlong case. That opinion was not noted by this Court or cited by the parties at our October 5, 1987 hearing, and since it does not cite or distinguish the Konick case upon which this Court relied, it was not specifically considered. Plaintiff seeks to invoke federal antitrust laws against denial of medical staff privileges. Such HN3[] a claim is not > "established simply by showing that some aspects of a defendant's business have a relationship to interstate commerce. [*127] Rather the inquiry must be whether the defendant's activity that has been "infected" by unlawful conduct can be shown "'as a matter of practical economics' to have a not insubstantial effect on the interstate commerce involved."

Furlong, supra, 710 F.2d at 926, quoting, McLain v. Real Estate Board of New Orleans, Inc., 444 U.S. 232, 242, 62 L. Ed. 2d 441, 100 S. Ct. 502 (1980), [6] quoting, Hospital Building Co. v. Rex Hosp. Trustees, 425 U.S. 738, 745, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338, 96 S. Ct. 1848 (1976).

Our Court of Appeals did not endorse the view of the trial judge in Furlong that such a showing could never be made for a claim based on denial of medical staff privileges, but it did concede that such actions are "at the very margin of the Sherman Act's coverage." Furlong, supra, 710 F.2d at 927. The panel concluded HN4[] "though we do not doubt that a price-fixing conspiracy or a group boycotting scheme can be shown 'as a matter of practical economics' to have an adverse effect on the perpetrator's interstate activities," a complaint must allege "facts from which it is inferable that the defendant's activities, infected with the particular illegality alleged, are likely to have a substantial effect on commerce." Furlong, supra, 710 F.2d at 927 (Emphasis added).

The Furlong Court acknowledged the liberal pleading requirements of Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957), but concluded that "Conley permits a pleader to enjoy all favorable inferences from facts that have been pleaded, [but] does not permit conclusory statements to substitute for minimally sufficient factual [7] allegations." Furlong, supra, 710 F.2d at 927. Subsequent cases have accepted this view that, HN5[] even when monopolistic or anticompetitive activity is alleged, a complaint will be deemed insufficient unless some rational factual support for the allegations is offered. See, Seglin v. Esau, 769 F.2d 1274, 1280 (7th Cir. 1985) (dismissing psychiatrist's complaint for failure to demonstrate "the required nexus with interstate commerce"); and, Mamakos v. Huntington Hosp., 653 F. Supp. 1447, 1451 (E.D.N.Y. 1987) ("Because the 'complaint boil[ed] down to the single assertion that [plaintiff's] . . . suspension had an effect on defendant's interstate commerce activities . . . [it was] insufficient to establish the required [jurisdictional] nexus'", quoting, Seglin, supra, 769 F.2d at 1274).

The amended complaint in this action contains no facts in support of its allegations of impermissible monopolistic or anti-competitive motive by the defendants. We agree with Judge McLaughlin that the "talismanic invocation of antitrust argot does nothing to cure the amended complaint's failure to set forth facts from which a conspiracy to restrain trade or monopolize might fairly be inferred." [8] Mamakos, supra, 653 F. Supp. at 1450.

This case presents an almost classic example of use of the antitrust laws to obtain relief of doubtful social or economic value, which was never contemplated by the 19th Century trustbusters who drafted these laws. New learning in the field of economic behavior has exploded myths of economic conduct upon which the twin concepts of trebled damages and legal fee shifting, so attractive to pleaders, rested. See, R. Posner, Economic Analysis of Law, at 3; R. Bork, The Antitrust Paradox, 225-45 (1978); R. Blair and D. Kaserman, Law and Economics of Vertical Integration and Control, 31-36 (1983); P. Areeda and D. Turner, Antitrust Law, paras. 1000-109 (1980). See also, United States v. American Cyanamid Co., 556 F. Supp. 361 (S.D.N.Y. 1983), aff'd in part, rev'd and remanded in part, 719 F.2d 558 (2d Cir. 1983), on remand, 598 F. Supp. 1516 (S.D.N.Y. 1984).

Recently, the Supreme Court has twice declined to consider possession of a significant market share indicative of an anti-competitive effect, U.S. v. General Dynamics Corp., 415 U.S. 486, 94 S. Ct. 1186, 39 L. Ed. 2d 530 (1974); U.S. v. Citizens & Southern Nat'l Bank, [9] 422 U.S. 86, 95 S. Ct. 2099, 45 L. Ed. 2d 41 (1975). Yet, HN6[] the antitrust laws endure despite vigorous criticism. This Court perceives no reason to extend them to activities, such as the delivery [*128] of medical care, that their nineteenth century authors [1] surely would have considered purely local, and therefore beyond the statutory scope. See, Marrese v. Interqual, Inc., 748 F.2d 373, 380 (7th Cir. 1984) ("medical practice per se and without more is a local activity", quoting, Williams v. St. Joseph Hosp., 629 F.2d 448, 454 (7th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 472 U.S. 1027, 105 S. Ct. 3501, 87 L. Ed. 2d 632 (1985)). While federal "commerce clause" jurisdiction has expanded greatly since the passage of these laws, McLain v. Real Estate Bd. of New Orleans, 444 U.S. 232, 241, 62 L. Ed. 2d 441, 100 S. Ct. 502 (1980), the abuses of monopolies and trusts that provoked their passage, to the extent they ever existed, have substantially abated. Thus, our Courts increase the dosage of medicine after the patient is cured.

Recent cases suggest a new realization that federal antitrust litigation is often harmful. See, e.g., Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort, 479 U.S. 104, 107 S. Ct. 484, 55 U.S.L.W. [10] 4027, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986) (showing of loss or damage due to increased competition caused by proposed merger not adequate under § 16 of the Clayton Act, absent allegations of predatory pricing); Hosp. Corp. of America v. F.T.C.,, 807 F.2d 1381, 1386 (7th Cir. 1986), ("The Supreme Court, echoed by the lower courts, has said repeatedly that the economic concept of competition, rather than any desire to preserve rivals as such, is the lodestar that shall guide the contemporary application of the antitrust laws") (collecting cases); See also, Ball Mem. Hosp. v. Mutual Hosp. Insur., Inc., 784 F.2d 1325 (7th Cir. 1986).

Because the amended complaint in this case is insufficient to state a claim under the federal antitrust laws, it is dismissed. The pendent state claims are dismissed without prejudice.

The Clerk shall enter a final judgment.

So Ordered.

Charles L. Brieant, Chief Judge.

End of Document

[1] The "Sherman Act", 15 U.S.C. §§ 1-7, was enacted July 2, 1890.

[Lancaster Community Hosp. v. Antelope Valley Hosp. Medical Center]

United States District Court for the Central District of California

March 2, 1988, Decided and Filed

CV No. 87-722-WMB

Reporter

1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12689 *; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,933

LANCASTER COMMUNITY HOSPITAL, Plaintiff, v. ANTELOPE VALLEY HOSPITAL MEDICAL CENTER, et al., Defendants

Core Terms

immunity, hospital district, Antitrust, state action, municipality, cases, anticompetitive, exemption, anti trust law, articulated, argues, regulation, political subdivision, antitrust liability, Cartwright Act, violations, enabling legislation, healthcare provider, local hospital, entities, courts

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Governmental Entities

HN1[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

In proving that a state policy to displace competition exists, the municipality need not be able to point to a specific, detailed legislative authorization in order to assert a successful state action defense to an antitrust suit. Rather it would be sufficient for a municipality to show that it acts pursuant to a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Governmental Entities

HN2[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit construes the state action exception to antitrust liability very liberally. So long as the anticompetitive activity is a "foreseeable result" which results logically from a broad grant of regulatory authority to a city, the "clear articulation" requirement of the exception is satisfied.

Governments > Police Powers

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Facility & Personnel Licensing > General Overview

HN3[] Governments, Police Powers

The powers delegated to California hospital districts include: (1) the power to establish, maintain and operate one or more health facilities within or without the district for the benefit of the district; (2) to exercise the right of eminent domain; (3) to do any and all other acts and things necessary to carry out this division. Cal. Health & Safety Code § 32121 (Supp. 1987).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Judges > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN4[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Judges should seek only to determine whether the challenged anticompetitive conduct was contemplated by the legislature when it enacted the statute at issue.

Civil Rights Law > ... > Elements > Color of State Law > General Overview

HN5[] Elements, Color of State Law

Most courts essentially ignore any distinction between proprietary and traditional functions of the state.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > Clayton Act

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Governmental Entities

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

HN6[] Costs & Attorney Fees, Clayton Act

The Antitrust Act provides that no damages, interest on damages, costs, or attorney's fees may be recovered under federal antitrust law from any local government. 15 U.S.C.S. § 35.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Governmental Entities

HN7[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The Antitrust Act is designed to protect localities from an increasing number of lawsuits which interfere with their ability to effectively govern.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

HN8[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

The Cartwright Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16600, prohibits restraints on trade and anticompetitive conduct generally.

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Section 1983 Actions > Scope

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Employment Issues > Employment Discrimination

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

HN9[] Protection of Rights, Section 1983 Actions

For purposes of civil rights claims brought under 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983, hospital districts are organized under state statutes and therefore are subdivisions of a state. Local hospital districts are "public entities" for purposes of statutes restricting an individual's ability to sue such entities.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Full Faith & Credit > General Overview

HN10[] Scope, Exemptions

There are several opinions which hold that the Sherman Act and the Cartwright Act are similar and that Sherman Act cases apply in construing the Cartwright Act. California district hospitals are eligible for immunity from federal antitrust liability under more than one theory.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Torts > Procedural Matters > Settlements > Settlement Offers

HN11[] Statute of Limitations, Time Limitations

Failure to provide the required 100-day notice of a claim, which is failure to comply with Cal. Gov't Code § 911.2 (1980), bars a tort claim.

Opinion by: [*1] BYRNE

Opinion

ORDER GRANTING DEFENDANT ANTELOPE VALLEY HOSPITAL'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

WM. MATTHEW BYRNE, JR., UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

I. INTRODUCTION

Antelope Valley Hospital (AV) is a medical facility located in Lancaster, California and owned and operated by the Antelope Valley Hospital District. Antelope Valley Hospital District was established in 1953 under the California local Hospital District Law. Lancaster Community Hospital (Lancaster) is also a health care provider in competition with AV. Lancaster filed this complaint alleging state and federal antitrust violations and certain state law tort claims.

Lancaster alleges that AV used its position as the only health care provider in the relevant geographic area to offer perinatal services to pressure large insurance carriers such as Maxicare and Blue Cross to send to AV patients requiring inpatient medical/surgical services. Allegedly, AV accomplished this by threatening to make it difficult for the customers of a particular carrier to obtain perinatal services at AV unless that carrier also sent AV a certain portion of its inpatient medical/surgical business.

Lancaster alleges that these and other actions constituted violations [*2] of both state and federal antitrust laws. Moreover, Lancaster alleges that in taking the actions it did, AV interfered with its contractual relationships and its prospective economic advantage.

AV moves for summary judgment claiming that it is immune from federal antitrust liability pursuant to the common law state action exemption and under the Antitrust Act of 1984. Moreover, AV contends that it is not liable for state antitrust violations because political subdivisions are immune from such actions. Finally, AV argues that it is immune from state tort claims due to common law immunity doctrines and because Lancaster failed to provide the required statutory notice of its claim.

II. DISCUSSION

A. Federal Antitrust Claims

1. State Action Immunity

The Supreme Court most recently discussed state action Immunity in Town of Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 105 S. Ct. 1713 (1985). In that case, the Court squarely faced an issue substantially identical to the one before this Court: whether a municipality's anticompetitive activities are protected by the state action exemption to federal antitrust laws when the anticompetitive activities are authorized, but not compelled, by the [*3] state. In Hallie, the state of Wisconsin delegated to the City of Eau Claire the authority to construct, alter and repair sewage systems as well as the power to describe, with reasonable particularity, the area to be served.

Determining that the municipality was entitled to the state action exemption from liability under federal antitrust laws, the Court stated:

HN1[] [I]n proving that a state policy to displace competition exists, the municipality need not "be able to point to a specific, detailed legislative authorization" in order to assert a successful [state action, defense to an antitrust suit. Rather, . . . it would be sufficient . . . for a municipality to show that it acted pursuant to a "clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed . . . state policy. . . ."

Id. at 1716-17 (citations omitted). The Court held that pursuant to the powers delegated to the City, the state had clearly articulated a policy to replace competition with regulation in the area of sewer service. Id. at 1720. Accordingly, the municipality was immune from damage suits for federal antitrust violations.

The Ninth Circuit has on numerous occasions determined whether a state grant of authority [*4] to a municipality was such that it constituted a clearly articulated policy to replace competition with regulation. In Grason Elec. Co. v. Sacramento Mun. Utility Dist., 770 F.2d 833 (9th Cir. 1985), the court held that a municipality which employed anticompetitive techniques, in connection with its administration of a public utility, qualified for state action immunity. The state statute in Grason authorized the Sacramento Municipal Utility District to "acquire, construct, own, operate, control or use . . . works for supplying the inhabitants of the district . . . with light [and] power . . . and may do all things necessary or convenient to the full exercise of the powers herein granted" Id. at 837. Interpreting the statute, the court found this grant of authority to constitute a clearly articulated state policy to displace competition with regulation. Therefore, the state action exemption immunized the utility district from federal antitrust liability.

HN2[] The Ninth Circuit has construed the state action exception very liberally. In Springs Ambulance Service v. City of Rancho Mirage, 745 F.2d 1270 (9th Cir. 1984), the court interpreted the following language to contain a [*5] clearly articulated purpose of replacing competition with regulation: "The legislative body of a city may contract for ambulance service to serve the residents of the city as convenience requires." Id. at 1273. The court determined that the anticompetitive acts complained of were "surely within the contemplation of the legislature" when it enacted the code section quoted above. Id.

In a recent Ninth Circuit opinion, Kern-Tulare Water Dist. v. City of Bakersfield, 828 F.2d 514 (9th Cir 1987), the court adopted language from the Hallie decision in stating that "[s]o long as the [anticompetitive activity] is a 'foreseeable result' which results logically from a broad grant of regulatory authority to a city, the 'clear articulation' requirement is satisfied". Id. at 518-19 (quoting Town of Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 105 S. Ct. 1713, 1718 (1985)).

The authority granted by the state to the AV hospital district is at least as broad as that passed upon in the cases discussed above. HN3[] The powers delegated to hospital districts include: (1) the power to "establish, maintain and operate one or more health facilities within or without the district for the benefit of the district; [*6] (2) to exercise the right of eminent domain; (3) to do any and all other acts and things necessary to carry out this division. See Cal. Health & Safety Code §§ 32121 (West Supp. 1987). While the district is empowered with other authority, the powers listed above appear to satisfy the Ninth Circuit test for "a clearly articulated policy to replace competition with regulation." See also Coastal Neuro-Psychiatric Assoc. v. Onslow Memorial Hosp., 795 F.2d 340 (4th Cir. 1986) (holding hospital immune from antitrust liability under state action exemption).

Before AV can be protected by state action immunity, this Court must decide whether a hospital district qualifies as a municipality eligible for immunity. While there appears to be no Ninth Circuit authority, the Court concludes that the hospital district does qualify as a municipality for purposes of state action immunity. Faced with facts very similar to those present in this case, a district court in Florida held that a hospital district was immunized by means of the state action doctrine. Hospital Dev. & Serv. Co. v. North Broward Hosp. Dist., 619 F. Supp. 535, 538 (S.D. Fla. 1985); see also Interface Group, Inc. v. [*7] Massachusetts Port Auth., 816 F.2d 9, 13 (1st Cir. 1987) (listing factors similar to the factors present in this case as making an entity eligible for protection under the state action doctrine). Moreover, in one piece of legislative history, the districts are referred to as political subdivisions of the state. See Exhibit A at 35 attached to memorandum in support of motion.

Lancaster raises three points to counter AV's analysis. First, Lancaster asserts that California has clearly articulated a policy of promoting competition among health care providers and therefore could not be said to sanction the anticompetitive activities attributed to AV. Second, plaintiff argues that the Ninth Circuit authorities discussed above are not controlling because they involve authorizing statutes other than the California Local Hospital District Law. Finally, plaintiff argues that those cases involved municipal functions traditionally reserved to the state or local governments, unlike the operation of a hospital.

In an effort to establish that California maintains a policy to promote competition among health care providers, plaintiff points to three recent amendments to the California Local [*8] Hospital District Law. These amendments (1) allow hospital districts to transfer assets; (2) allow closed door meetings of hospital district boards of directors; and (3) provide a trade secret exemption for district hospitals. Plaintiff claims that these changes in the law were designed to protect the ability of local hospitals to compete with private health care providers.

Plaintiff's contentions are not well taken. Although in enacting these amendments the legislature recognized that competition existed among health care providers, this is not persuasive evidence that the California legislature did not intend or could not foresee that hospital districts would engage in anticompetitive activities. Moreover, these amendments appear to have been an effort to strengthen the position of district hospitals rather than to announce a policy favoring competition over regulation.

These recent amendments were discussed by a California court in Yoffie v. Marin Hosp. Dist., 193, Cal. App. 3d 743, 238 Cal. Rptr. 502 (Cal. Ct. App. 1987). There, the court recognized that the express goal of the amendments was "to enable local hospital districts to remain competitive with non public hospitals." [*9] Id. at 509. However, the Court did not construe these revisions as signaling a policy in favor of competition. More likely, the legislature determined that where competition did exist, even more authority was required to buttress the position of local hospitals.

More importantly, in Hallie, the Supreme Court cautioned trial judges not to engage in searching analysis of legislative history. Hallie, 105 S. Ct. at 1719 & n.7. Rather, the Court instructed that HN4[] judges should seek only to determine whether the challenged anticompetitive conduct was contemplated by the legislature when it enacted the statute at issue. Id. Here, the broad grant of authority clearly indicates that the complained of anticompetitive acts were within the contemplation of the legislature.

Plaintiff's allegation that the Ninth Circuit authority cited does not concern the California Local Hospital District law is not compelling. Courts constantly analogize to cases similar, but not identical, to the case before them. The authority cited above is substantially similar to the present case and the Court finds it persuasive.

Finally, plaintiff argues that state action immunity is only available in situations [*10] where the state is performing a function traditionally reserved to the state. In areas traditionally of a proprietary nature, plaintiff argues that the doctrine should not apply. Plaintiff cites no Ninth Circuit authority to support this proposition. He relies on two points: (1) that the authority defendant cites concerns functions traditionally performed by the state; (2) an except from Professor Areeda's treatise on antitrust law supporting such a dichotomy. With respect to the Ninth Circuit, plaintiff cites no authority specifically recognizing the dichotomy he wishes this Court to adopt. Moreover, Professor Areeda noted that the majority of the Supreme Court has rejected this dichotomy. Additionally, HN5[] most courts have essentially ignored any distinction between proprietary and traditional functions of the state. Wall v. City of Athens, 663 F. Supp. 747, 761 (M.D. Ga. 1987); P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law*,* at 93-94 (Supp. 1986); see also Garcia v. San Antonio Metro. Transit Auth, 105 S. Ct. 1005 (1985) (rejecting distinctions between traditional and integral governmental functions when determining state immunity from federal regulation under the Commerce Clause).

[*11] From the broad grant of authority delegated to the hospital districts, the Court finds that AV is immune from liability under the state action exception to federal antitrust laws.

2. Antitrust Act of 1984

HN6[] The Antitrust Act provides that "[n]o damages, interest on damages, costs, or attorney's fees may be recovered under [federal antitrust law*] from any local government. . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 35 (Supp. 1987). In Palm*

Springs Medical Clinic Inc. v. Desert Hosp., 628 F. Supp. 454, 456-64 (C.D. Cal. 1986), the district court exhaustively analyzed the legislative history surrounding the Act. Concluding that a hospital district was immune from antitrust liability under the Act, the court dismissed the federal antitrust claims against a district hospital. Id. at 464

Plaintiff argues that the Antitrust Act should not apply to AV because it has failed to comply with its enabling legislation by engaging in profit making activities. Plaintiff cites a number of cases it contends support the proposition that a party must establish strict adherence to its enabling legislation to secure the benefits of any exemption associated with that legislation. Plaintiff's cases do not support that [*12] proposition and its contention is not well taken.

Plaintiff initially cites Wall v. City of Athens, 663 F. Supp. 747, 760 (M.D. Ga. 1987). In Wall, what the court held was that the municipality's conduct was not foreseeable from the state's grant of authority. It did not hold that because the municipality violated its enabling legislation, it lot its antitrust immunity. Plaintiff's other citations are equally unpersuasive. In those opinions, courts applied antitrust laws to certain activities which fell outside the parameter of exempted conduct. See Carnation Co. v. Pacific Westbound Conference, 383 U.S. 213 (1966); Maryland & Virginia Milk Producers Ass'n v. United States, 362 U.S. 458 (1960); Board of Trade v. ICC, 646 F.2d 1187 (7th Cir. 1981). These cases do not involve situations where an entity allegedly violated its enabling legislation.

Moreover, plaintiff's argument was explicitly rejected in Palm Springs, 628 F. Supp. at 459 n.4. As that court observed, HN7[] the Antitrust Act was designed to protect localities from an increasing number of lawsuits which interfered with their ability to effectively govern. Allowing plaintiffs to sidestep the antitrust exemption [*13] by finding violations of enabling legislation would inhibit a municipality in the performance of its function and would defeat the purpose of the Act. Plaintiff's argument is unsupported by case authority and inconsistent with the goal of the Antitrust Act.

For the above reasons, the Court finds that AV is insulated from antitrust liability under the Antitrust Act of 1984. [1]

B. State Antitrust Claims

AV argues that it is immune from liability under the Cartwright Act [2] pointing to a number of cases which held that political subdivisions are so immune. Blank v. Kirwan, 39 Cal. 3d 31, 322-23, 216 Cal. Rptr. 718, 725, 703 P.2d 58 (Cal. S. Ct. 1985). Defendant, however, correctly notes that no California case has addressed the issue whether a hospital district qualifies as a political subdivision for purposes of the Cartwright Act.

[*14] AV cites cases in which courts have, in other contexts, treated hospital districts as political subdivisions or government entities. For example, in Heath v. Redbud Hospital District, 436 F. Supp. 766, 768 (N.D. Cal. 1977), the court determined that HN9[] for purposes of civil rights claims brought under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 hospital districts were organized under state statutes and therefore were subdivisions of a state. Other cases have found local hospital districts to be "public entities" for purposes of statutes restricting an individual's ability to sue such entities. Lutz v. Tri-City Hosp., 179 Cal. App. 3d 807, 224 Cal. Rptr. 787 (Cal. Ct. App. 1986); see also Cal. Health & Safety Code § 32492 (West 1973).

---

[1] Although the Court need not reach the issue, it believes there are serious questions as to whether AV actually violated its enabling legislation.

[2] HN8[] The Cartwright Act, found at California Business and Professions Code Sections 16600, prohibits restraints on trade and anticompetitive conduct generally. Although the California Supreme Court initially determined that the Cartwright Act did not apply to the medical profession, the court reversed itself in a later opinion. See Cianci v. Superior Court, 40 Cal. 3d 903, 16-25, 221 Cal. Rptr. 575, 582-87, 710 P.2d 375 (1985), overruling Willis v. Santa Ana Hosp. Assoc., 58 Cal. 2d 806, 26 Cal. Rptr. 640, 376 P.2d 568 (1962).

Also, HN10[] there are several opinions which hold that "the Sherman Act and the Cartwright Act are similar and that Sherman Act cases apply in construing the Cartwright Act." Derish v. San Mateo-Burlingame Bd. of Realtors, 724 F.2d 1347, 1350 (9th Cir. 1983), disapproved on other grounds, Marrese v. American Academy of Orthopaedic Surgeons, 105 S. Ct. 1327 (1985); Palm Springs, 628 F. Supp. at 466; Rosack v. Volvo of Am. Corp., 131 Cal. App. 3d 741, 751, 182 [*15] Cal. Rptr. 800 (Cal. Ct. App. 1982). As the Court has concluded above, district hospitals are eligible for immunity from federal antitrust liability under bore than one theory. The Court considers this persuasive in deciding whether hospital districts are eligible for immunity for state antitrust violations.

The Court believes that when faced with the issue, California courts interpreting the Cartwright Act will hold that local hospital districts qualify as political subdivisions for purposes of immunity from state antitrust claims. Accordingly, the Court grants AV's motion for summary judgment with respect to plaintiff's Cartwright Act claim.

C. State Tort Claims

AV contends it is immune from tort liability under the California Tort Claims Act. Cal. Gov't Code §§ 815, 815.2, 820.2 (West 1980). Plaintiff argues that immunity under the Act accrues only if the acts complained of are discretionary acts. While this may be true for vicarious liability under sections 815.2 and 820.2 of the Government Code, it is not the rule where, as with the present case, plaintiff alleges direct liability. Additionally, the actions complained of here are more properly characterized as "planning" [*16] rather than operational" and should therefore be considered discretionary. H & M Assoc. v. City of El Centro, 109 Cal. App. 3d 399, 406-07, 167 Cal. Rptr. 392, 397 (Cal Ct. App. 1980).

Finally, Lancaster failed to provide the required 100 day notice of its claim. Cal. Gov't Code § 911.2 (West 1980). HN11[] Failure to comply with this statute bars the claim. Lutz v. Tri-City Hosp., 179 Cal. App. 3d 807, 224 Cal. Rptr. 787 (Cal. Ct. App. 1986). Plaintiff offers three reasons why the Court should ignore the notice requirements (1) AV had actual notice of the tort claims; (2) AV hospital did not raise the 100 day requirement in its Answer; (3) AV hospital has rejected a settlement offer from plaintiff. However, plaintiff offers no authority which allows a Court to set aside the 100 day limit let alone setting it aside for the reasons stated above.

Accordingly, the Court grants defendant's summary judgment motion with respect to plaintiff's state law tort claims.

III. CONCLUSION

Defendant's motion for summary judgment is granted in its entirety.

DATED: March 2, 1988

End of Document

United States v. Western Elec. Co.

United States District Court for the District of Columbia

March 7, 1988, Decided ; March 7, 1988, Filed

Civil Action No. 82-0192

Reporter

714 F. Supp. 1 *; 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3066 ; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,918

United States of America, Plaintiff, v. Western Electric Company, Inc., et al., Defendants information service, transmission, providers, storage, gateway, decree, electronic, consumers, telephone, directories, retrieval, Pages, users, videotex, capabilities, functions, network, generation, technology, manipulation, billing, parties, protocol, infrastructure, monopoly, restrictions, conversion, effective, markets, reasons

Core Terms

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Communications Law > ... > Regulated Entities > Telephone Services > General Overview

HN1[] Regulated Entities, Telephone Services

The employment of various infrastructure components is necessary to an effective information gateway.

Communications Law > ... > Regulated Practices > Content Regulation > General Overview

HN2[] Regulated Practices, Content Regulation

Service menus of the information providers are a matter of editorial control, closely interrelated with information content.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > General Overview

HN3[] Regulated Industries, Communications

It is of course a fundamental principle of jurisprudence that the antitrust laws protect competition, not competitors. These laws seek to foster competition by increasing the number of providers in the marketplace and thereby allowing the consumer, through demand for services, to select the winning firm.

Judges: Harold H. Greene, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: [1] GREENE

Opinion

[*2] HAROLD H. GREENE, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Under the terms of the decree, [1] the Regional Companies are prohibited from providing "information services." AT&T, 552 F. Supp. at 227. An information service is defined as "the offering of a capability for generating, acquiring, storing, transforming, processing, retrieving, utilizing or making available information which may be conveyed via telecommunications." Id. at 229. On September 10, 1987, the Court stated that it was prepared to exempt from the information services restriction the transmission of information generated by others, and it invited the parties and intervenors to submit proposed orders and memoranda detailing with particularity the necessary ingredients of an information transmission system. United States v. Western Electric Co., Inc., 673 F. Supp. 525, 597 (D.D.C. 1987) (hereinafter referred to as "Opinion, 673 F. Supp."). A total of some 59 organizations and individuals have filed comments, a number of them several documents (including responses, replies, and the like).

[2] As the Court has had occasion to indicate before, unlike the interexchange and manufacturing issues, which are largely open and shut, the information services questions are closer and more debatable. After carefully considering the matter once again, the Court, for the reasons elaborated on below, has made the following decisions, based upon competitive considerations and upon issues of public policy relating to the economic and social benefits that may be derived from a substantial expansion of information services.

First, the Regional Companies will be permitted to engage in the transmission of information, but the generation of information content, one of the core ingredients of the decree growing out of the AT&T case, will continue to be prohibited. Second, for the present, the transmission system to be used will be that delineated in the Court's September 10, 1987 Opinion; however, the Regional Companies may freely develop and use differing applications of that system. Third, the Regional Companies will be allowed to employ alternative transmission systems as and when they are able to propose methodology [*3] that will in practice preserve the content-transmission dichotomy. Fourth, [3] the Regional Companies will be permitted to enter the voice storage and retrieval markets.

In brief, the Court's decision combines the grant of wide flexibility to the Regional Companies with respect to transmission systems and voice storage applications, with a continued prohibition on the generation and manipulation of information content. It is the Court's expectation that this easing of the information services restriction will avoid anticompetitive effects, and that it will at the same time bring this nation closer to the enjoyment of the full benefits of the information age.

I

Need for Retention of the Restriction on the Provision of Information Content

In the consideration of the papers filed with the Court, it is useful, first of all, to consider, most broadly (1) what it is that the Regional Companies must continue to be prohibited from doing and why, and (2) what segment of the information services market may now be opened to them.

The comments from several Regional Companies indicate that they may not have adequately understood the reasons for the line of business restrictions in the decree. Arguments are advanced again and again that, if only the companies were allowed [4] to enter the markets forbidden to them under the decree, they would be able to innovate unlike independent corporations in the same markets, and that they would be able to improve America's foreign trade position, competing vigorously and effectively with foreign manufacturers and other providers. There are two major reasons why these recurring arguments are not well taken.

---

[1] United States v. Am. Tel. & Tel. Co., 552 F. Supp. 131 (D.D.C. 1982), aff'd sub nom. Maryland v. United States, 460 U.S. 1001, 75 L. Ed. 2d 472, 103 S. Ct. 1240 (1983) (hereinafter referred to as "AT&T, 552 F. Supp.").

At the most elementary level, the Regional Company contentions are irrelevant: the decree provides in so many words that the restrictions [2] "shall not be removed unless any particular Regional Company makes a showing . . .. that there is no substantial possibility that it could use its monopoly power to impede competition in the market it seeks to enter." Section VIII(C) of the decree.

In the context of the triennial review of the decree, [3] the Regional Companies supported the Department of Justice motion for, inter alia, a complete removal of the restriction on the provision of information services, without distinction between content and transmission. The Court found, however, that the Regional [5] Companies continue to possess bottleneck control over the local exchange facilities, [4] and that information services are especially vulnerable to even slight manipulation and discrimination by the entity providing transmission. Opinion, 673 F. Supp. at 562-67. Because the requirements of section VIII(C) had not been met, the Court concluded that the restriction on the sale by the Regional Companies of information content must be maintained. Id. at 567. The situation is thus unchanged and, inasmuch as the Regional Companies are unable to make the requisite section VIII(C) showing, they continue as a matter of law to be bound by the section II(D)(1) restriction.

[6] [*4] In any event, it is wholly unlikely that the removal of the restrictions would lead to a flowering of research and of more and better competition with foreign producers.

In the first place, the Regional Companies have no experience with the generation of information. The production of and changes in the form of information are the province of hundreds of professions, occupations, and trades, from book publishers to stock market analysts to the providers of theater and music admission tickets. Those involved in these businesses possess the necessary expertise; the Regional Companies do not. It would be absurd to lift the restriction on the provision of information content based on the theory that the Regional Companies know more about and are better able to capitalize on these businesses than those who have made these endeavors their lives' work.

Furthermore, the Regional Companies are not needed in these aspects of American business; they could flourish therein only if they used their telecommunication monopolies to disadvantage competitors in these markets; and their participation therein merely because they are in the business of transmission would be an aberration. [5]

[7] Furthermore, an entry of the Regional Companies into the content-generation markets would be positively harmful. Experience has shown that there is less innovation and hence less effective competition with products manufactured abroad when the significant players in the American market are monopolists than when the

[2] This includes the restriction on the provision of information services in section II(D)(1) of the decree.

[3] At the time the decree was entered, the Department of Justice agreed to report to the Court every three years concerning the continuing need for the restrictions imposed by the decree. See AT&T, 552 F. Supp. at 195. The first such report was submitted on February 2, 1987. After consideration of that filing, the responses of parties and intervenors, and three days of oral argument, the Court issued the Opinion referred to at p. 2, supra, granting in part and denying in part the Department's motion.

[4] For example, the Court found, based on the studies of the Department of Justice's own expert, that only one-tenth of one percent of inter-LATA traffic volume, generated by one customer out of one million, is carried through non- Regional Company facilities to reach an interexchange carrier. Opinion, 673 F. Supp. at 540. The local monopolies in the various areas where the Regional Companies operate are thus virtually as tight as they were in 1982 when the decree was signed, when the restrictions were first imposed, and when the same bottleneck monopolies were controlled by the Bell System.

[5] Interestingly, the French Teletel (see infra) operates quite successfully as a transmission system that (1) transmits requests from subscribers for information and (2) furnishes requested material from independent information providers to the requesting parties. Teletel's absence from the information content market is not compelled, as here, by an antitrust judgment, but the French creators of their system must have known that to make the telephone company a potential competitor for every provider of information in France could only have had disastrous consequences.

participants are free of monopoly pressure and thus have the incentive that exists, in a market characterized by vigorous and broad competition, to lower price and to offer better products. [6]

[8] The American economic system proceeds on the basis of the assumption -- closely related to the assumption underlying our political system -- that competition is far more likely to lead to the production of more and better products and their distribution to consumers at affordable prices than a market dominated by a monopoly, whether governmental or corporate. In fact, as the Court has previously noted, [7] more new and innovative telephone products have appeared on the shelves of this country's retailers in the four years since divestiture than in the preceding twenty. It is ironic that, at the very time that several of America's opponents -- e.g., the Soviet Union and the Peoples Republic of China -- have finally learned and have begun to implement the lesson that competition is superior to monopoly, [8] [9] some of the largest American corporations [9] have been [*5] successful in persuading the Department of Justice that a return to monopoly, their monopoly, is in the public interest.

In brief, even if the legal barrier of section II(D)(1) of the decree were not crystal clear, there would be no warrant for a removal of the restriction on the provision by the Regional Companies of the content of information services, one of the core restrictions of the decree. That restriction will accordingly remain.

II

Removal of the Restriction on Information Transmission

In its analysis of the restriction on information services, the Court recognized last fall that substantially different considerations govern Regional Company entry into the transmissions aspect of information services, also known as information gateway services, [10] than would their participation in the market for the compilation, origination, or manipulation of information. Opinion, 673 F. Supp. at 587-97. The potential for anticompetitive behavior by the Regional Companies with respect to transmission only is very much limited, if only because, in the absence of their participation in the generation [10] or manipulation of content, these companies have little incentive for discrimination against competitors in the information market.

Moreover, broad public policies in addition to those stemming from antitrust law favor the elimination of the restriction on transmission. [11] The Court has previously found that the efficient, rapid, and inexpensive

---

[6] For example, the Court found with respect to manufacturing, where there has been four years of experience in a competitive market to compare against the market dominated by the Bell System monopoly, that "there has been a flowering of research, development, innovation, introduction of new products, and quality assurance; new firms have entered the market; prices of equipment have declined dramatically (according to some by as much as fifty percent in some categories); and competition flourishes in a market that had seen relatively little of it before. The equipment market now consists of some six or eight very large firms, one to two hundred medium-sized firms, and hundreds of still smaller, vigorous and inventive firms, some of them in profitable relationships with one or more of the Regional Companies." Opinion, 673 F. Supp. at 560 (footnotes omitted).

[7] Opinion, 673 F. Supp. at 601 n.330.

[8] For reasons similar to those that led to the AT&T divestiture, other nations, e.g., the French, British, and Japanese, have also begun the process of transforming their telecommunications industry into a competitive one on the American model. See Washington Post, "Japan's Phone Monopoly Goes Private," April 1, 1985, section A12; CommunicationsWeek, "New Initiatives in France, Germany May Open Telecom Markets," September 21, 1987, at 1.

[9] In terms of assets, seven out of twenty of the largest corporations in the United States are the regional telephone companies. In terms of sales, all seven Regional Companies rank in the Fortune 50.

[10] The networks in which these services are performed are also sometimes referred to as value-added networks (VANS).

[11] In its approval of the decree in this case, the Court took account of such public policies as the congressional expectation of universal telephone service and the desirability under the First Amendment of achieving diversity in the sources of public information. AT&T, 552 F. Supp. at 183, 191-94; see also Opinion, 673 F. Supp. at 583-87.

dissemination of specific information as called for by individuals in all segments of the population will benefit the nation and its economy. Opinion, 673 F. Supp. at 589-90. The Court now reaffirms and underlines that finding.

The videotex [12] industry, which has the potential for furnishing wide varieties of information, as needed or wanted, to large segments of the population, [11] has grown only slowly. This is so particularly with respect to the home videotex market. The fact is that, unlike in some foreign countries, consumer-oriented videotex services on a substantial scale remain largely in the future in the United States. Opinion, 673 F. Supp. at 587-88. [13]

[12] Yet if consumer-oriented videotex services were made available on a large scale, the economic and social welfare of the American people could be substantially advanced. It is difficult to overestimate the significance of this potential. Information services, as the experience of existing domestic providers and with the foreign systems has shown, can come in an amazing [*6] scope and variety. [14] If developed to their full potential, these services could in some ways revolutionize American intellectual, social, cultural, and economic life.

[13] In a practical sense, the pervasive services network necessary to create a large and vigorous nationwide market is unlikely to develop without the participation of the Regional Companies. [15] Because of their presence everywhere and their relationship with every user of the telephone, only these companies would be able to furnish the necessary infrastructure components for the distribution of efficient videotex services on an integrated basis; at a minimum they could furnish these components more easily and at less cost than other potential suppliers. Opinion, 673 F. Supp. at 591.

---

[12] The term "videotex" refers to a great variety of easy-to-use interactive data services. According to the Huber Report submitted by the Department of Justice in connection with the triennial review, "videotex arranges information in a text or graphic format on a video display with user input through a keyboard." P. Huber, "The Geodesic Network: 1987 Report on Competition in the Telephone Industry," (hereinafter referred to as the "Huber Report") at 1.29 n.46. The Department has asserted that the Huber Report formed the principal factual basis for its position in this Court on the decree restrictions.

[13] Indeed, several efforts to provide videotex services have failed. In March 1986, Knight-Ridder Newspaper Inc.'s viewtron service, which provided home subscribers in several markets with news, stock prices, and shopping information, folded without having made a profit. Around the same time, the Times Mirror Company's gateway videotex services closed down after losing approximately $ 30 million. Washington Post, "Videotex's Timing is Questioned," March 20, 1986, section E1. However, Compuserve, Inc., a videotex provider, claims to have 375,000 subscribers to its consumer information services at the present time, offering 1,100 consumer information services and data bases.

[14] The Court last fall listed some of the potential information services, as follows:

> Without attempting to be exhaustive, the following lists some of the more obvious videotex-related economic services that exist elsewhere and that might be made available in this country: (1) in banking, videotex could give customers direct and immediate account information and fund transfer capability; (2) in brokerage, there could be instant evaluation of current portfolios and access to alternative investment opportunities; (3) with respect to customer service by a variety of business enterprises, arrangements could be made for immediate access to information about outstanding balances, order fulfillment, accrued interest, and the like; and (4) with respect to shopping services, videotex could provide direct and immediate access to the prices and descriptions of a wide range of products and services that could be purchased electronically.
>
> Outside the economic sphere, videotex is used in France, and could presumably be applied in the United States, for such services as (1) travel information, restaurant reviews and reservations, hotel and rental car information, and airline schedules; (2) instantaneous access to ticketing for sports, musical, cultural, and entertainment events; (3) information concerning meetings of associations, including schedules, performers, and speakers; (4) social messaging; (5) access to federal and local governmental information; (6) language instruction; (7) reprints of newspaper and magazine articles; and (8) employment services.

Opinion, 673 F. Supp. at 589-90 (footnotes omitted).

[15] In this respect, the transmission of information services is unlike the provision of information content, telecommunications manufacturing, and long distance services -- all of which can and do function exceedingly well without Regional Company participation.

To be sure, some of the requisite services can be and currently are being provided through the customer premises equipment market, [16] and through existing independent videotex suppliers. What is missing, however, is the easy access, both for the providers of information services and for consumers, to a vast, pervasive system that only the [14] local telephone companies, operating in every state of the Union, can readily supply. It is only on that basis that the mass market can be created that will allow information services to become available and used on a truly national basis. [17]

Beyond that, while entry of the Regional Companies into information gateway services entails some risk to fair competition, such entry, by a group of companies which collectively serve practically every business and household in the country, may actually lead to an increase in competition, as awareness of the services and their potential grows, and as the customer base becomes much more widespread.

Having weighed the wide benefits potentially accruing to the American economy and its consumers against the narrow likelihood of monopolistic behavior on the part of the Regional Companies were they to be permitted to enter [18] the transmission market, the Court concluded on September 10, 1987, that a limited relaxation of [15] the information services restriction was warranted. It is on this basis that the Court announced its intention to modify the decree pursuant to section VIII(C) so as to permit the Regional Companies to compete for the provision of transmission facilities to the information [*7] services industry, and that it invited comments from interested parties and intervenors with respect to modes of implementation. Opinion, 673 F. Supp. at 597. Having received and considered these comments, the Court sees no reason to alter its view on the fundamental question at issue.

The Court was and is an enthusiastic supporter of large-scale information services for the benefit particularly of individual consumers and small businesses. Members of these groups will be able to partake of these revolutionary new services only if a mass market therefor is established, while vast commercial enterprises generally have access to such services now.

The decree in this case has been responsible for a number of favorable developments: long distance rates have dropped substantially; [16] [19] the price of telephone equipment has similarly been reduced; [20] innovations in telephone equipment available to the average person have appeared on retail shelves in astounding numbers and configurations; [21] and although the Regional Companies, which retain their local monopolies, initially raised local rates, that increase appears to have been largely halted during the current year.

[17] Now would appear to be the time for adding to the achievements built on the competitive market established by the decree a system of broad-based, efficient, reasonably-priced information services available to all who want them. On this basis, the Court will rescind the restriction on the provision of information services in section II(D)(1) of the decree insofar as the transmission of such services is concerned. What remains to be discussed are the specific applications of this decision.

---

[16] See Reply of Hayes Microcomputer Products, Inc., at 4.

[17] Whether such a mass market will actually be created will depend of course on the organizational, technical, and marketing skill of the Regional Companies.

[18] Under the decree as it now stands, the Regional Companies may not perform most of the "gateway" functions necessary to information transmission.

[19] The decrease in rates nationally is estimated at thirty-five percent since divestiture in 1984.

[20] Prior to the AT&T divestiture, the Bell System furnished telephones to subscribers only on the basis of an unending monthly rental, without any opportunity for purchase. Now telephone instruments are available for sale in all colors, shapes, and degrees of sophistication, at prices amounting to a small fraction of the total amount of the overall rental fees.

[21] To cite only the most obvious, features such as automatic call repetition; one-button calling for dozens, even hundreds, of numbers; cordless phones; phones that respond to verbal commands -- all of them non-existent or exceedingly rare just three or four years ago -- are now commonplace in many households. Mobile phones in automobiles and airplanes are fast coming to match the ubiquity of these features.

III

The Teletel System

In its September 10, 1987 Opinion, the Court relied heavily upon the description of the services provided by Teletel, the French videotex system, in reaching conclusions about the feasibility and the likely structure of information services in the United States. This was so largely because the French system was and is the best known, the most widespread, and the one technologically most advanced, at least on a large scale basis. Moreover, Teletel had been supported by various parties to this litigation as an example of the technological benefits the Regional Companies could supply if the decree restrictions were relaxed. U.S. West especially [22] called the Minitel network "the [18] model upon which we would build" the American system. [23] That company also repeatedly touted the French experience as representing the cutting edge of the Information Age. [24]

However, the French experience is merely one of the possible permutations that a coherent information services network [*8] in this country might take. In the first place, the United States is not France. [19] This country, unlike France, has a healthy and growing personal computer market with which direct interaction will be possible. Also, there has been here some movement into the information services field by non-telephone enterprises. [25] Most importantly, the French government's subsidization of millions of "dumb" terminals [26] would be difficult to duplicate in this country either on a government-subsidy or a telephone company-subsidy basis. [27]

[20] It is obvious from this discussion that here the most effective method of interconnection between the information providers, through the Regional Companies, to the consumers could turn out to be different, at least in theory and in the longer run, from that employed in France, and so could the infrastructure.

---

[22] The U.S. West proposal was advanced jointly with the Regional Companies' traditional opponent in this field, the American Newspaper Publishers Association. As such, it represented the most substantial and fully considered of the concrete submissions. The proposals of the other Regional Companies were far more diffuse. See infra.

[23] Hearing of July 1, 1987, Tr. at 362.

[24] In a characteristic reversal of position, U.S. West dismissed the French Teletel system as already obsolete and not particularly well suited to the American environment, just as soon as the Court appeared to have accepted the original U.S. West position in its September 10, 1987 Opinion, and as it might have appeared to that company that its demands could therefore be safely ratcheted upward. See U.S. West Memorandum at 2-3.

[25] Networks have been developed by entities such as CompuServe, The Source, Trinex, General Electric Information Services, Quantum Computer Services, and the two independent telephone companies, each with its own idiosyncracy and particular modes of technology.

[26] These terminals are relatively inexpensive and unsophisticated, but they are adequate as parts of an information system.

[27] Some commentators have suggested that information services will not survive in this country without such a program for the cost-free dissemination of dumb terminals. That may well be the case, but it is not an issue for the Court to decide. The United States government is unlikely to adopt such a policy, and the Court has neither reason nor power to require it or the Regional Companies to do so. This is, to be sure, an option that might be pursued by those interested in entering the market, but it involves a business decision unrelated to questions of antitrust law or enforcement.

In fact, the Court's influence in this matter is limited to resolution of the question whether the Regional Companies will be permitted to engage in the transmission of information services. Once such permission is granted, it is solely for the individual companies to determine whether their entry into that market would be economically feasible and otherwise desirable. See also note 17, supra.

Under the decree, the Regional Companies may not engage in the manufacture of consumer premises equipment, see section VIII(A), and dumb terminals fall within that prohibition. Opinion, 673 F. Supp. at 596. However, nothing in the decree would preclude the Regional Companies from providing such hardware to the consumers, if it were obtained from a third source.

Additionally, advances in the communications and computer fields are said to have occurred since the unveiling of the French system, and further and broader advances are likely to occur in the future. On that basis, too, the existing Teletel system should not be cast in concrete as the sole option available to United States providers of transmission services.

IV

Other Alternatives

It was with these considerations in mind that the Court requested the parties to make further submissions following the issuance of the September 10, 1987 Opinion, and it was on that basis that it expected to receive detailed contentions and recommendations both of a legal and a technical nature concerning the requirements of an effective infrastructure for the transmission of information services. Unfortunately, the response was disappointing.

In the first place, the Regional Companies by and [21] large emphasized their determination to have the Court reconsider its September 10, 1987 ruling against removal of the entire restriction on information services, including content. A reprise of that controversy was clearly not the purpose of the post-September round of briefs and, to the extent that this concentration on what had by then become a moot subject consumed space and energy, it was of assistance neither to the authors of the submissions nor to the Court. [28]

[22] [*9] Beyond that, the Regional Companies repeatedly expressed their need and desire for flexibility with regard to their construction of an infrastructure, and some of the companies' submissions begin and end with such a plea. Even memoranda which do provide details, however, do not demonstrate that the flexible authority sought therein would preclude the generation or manipulation of the content of information -- the key issue in view of the Court's previous rulings. [29] [23] For obvious reasons, the Court may not, consistently with its obligations under the decree, rely for such preclusion on so important a subject on Regional Company self-restraint. [30] Authorizing

---

[28] The Department of Justice likewise expended much effort on matters already decided. Thus, the Court was told once again that the Department would prefer a complete removal of the information services restriction as of all other restrictions on the Regional Companies; that the Court's imposition of restrictions to prevent anticompetitive activities would amount to an assumption of regulatory functions; that requirements of nondiscrimination or of structural separation to prevent cross-subsidies are beyond judicial authority, and the like. See Response of the Department of Justice, filed November 16, 1987. In what must be a unique occurrence, at least in this litigation, the Department of Justice actually found the proposal submitted by U.S. West, a Regional Company not known for the modesty of its ambitions, to be too restrictive. Response of the Department of Justice at 6-9. The Department's position becomes more understandable perhaps when it is considered that its officials met ex parte with Regional Company executives regarding the removal of the decree restrictions long before the triennial review (see note 3, supra) and even long before the Huber Report (see note 12, supra) was written and submitted.

[29] For example, NYNEX proposes that the Court expand permitted infrastructure components to include store and forward, navigation translation, custom screens, and transaction support. Its only justification for this expansion is that those features would "create a network environment that encourages the offering and use of a wide variety of information services." NYNEX Memorandum at 8. NYNEX neglects to explain, however, how the Regional Companies might offer these services without manipulating content. While some of these activities might be accomplished without interfering with content, there is no guarantee that it will be so. Take, for example, credit validation services, which NYNEX would seek to provide as a "transaction support." One method of validation involves the use of computer software to verify the identity of a merchant, route the query to a proper back-end network, log the response, record the data, and send confirmation to the merchant -- a clear manipulation of content. Huber Report at 12.7-12.8

[30] Some of the Regional Companies freely acknowledge that their proposals would cross the line between transmission and content. See, e.g., Southwestern Bell's comment that "it is not enough that the telephone network be open only to the accurate transmission of information" (Memorandum at 18), and Pacific Telesis' observation that "some may claim that our proposed order goes beyond the intent of the Opinion in permitting Regional Company activities" (Memorandum at 1).

As explained in greater detail below, despite the Court's willingness to permit divergences from the Teletel model, it will not endorse Regional Company entry into transmission activities absent a showing that these activities will not involve content.

language with technologically amorphous descriptions of what will actually be done constitutes the equivalent of a carte blanche to depart from transmission into content, and such a departure, as indicated, cannot be approved. [31]

Having received no submissions that could be regarded as acceptable alternatives to the system tentatively approved last fall, the Court could have decided not to conduct any further inquiry [24] of its own but simply to rest on its existing decision: to permit the use of the Teletel system as described on September 10, 1987, without exploration of other alternatives. However, as pointed out above, it is the Court's belief that information services have a very large potential value for the American public. In view of that consideration, and in view of the possibility that the transmission of such services could be achieved, either now or in the future, by means more advanced, more economical, or both, than those described on September 10, 1987, the Court decided to consider the various other alternatives that appear to exist.

A. Prohibition of Content Generation

One means of achieving the Court's objective of encouraging the broadest flowering of technology for the transmission of information would be simply to prohibit the generation and manipulation of the content of information, without further definition or explanation. This would authorize the Regional Companies to engage in transmission activities, again without bounds or boundaries, and it would leave completely open the means to be used for in the exercise of the transmission function. This, [*10] however, would be impractical [25] for two interrelated reasons.

In the first place, such broad, and unbridled prohibitions and authorizations would almost inevitably lead to an incessant involvement of the Court with the industry. Either the Regional Companies would be flooding the Court with requests for construction of the decree prior to entering fields that could legitimately be regarded as being close to the line between transmission and content, [32] or the companies' competitors or potential competitors would be inundating the Court with requests for enforcement or sanctions based upon their perception that the Regional Companies had crossed the line from the permitted to the prohibited.

An alternative to that scenario, and one that likewise cannot be excluded based on past performance, would see the Regional Companies simply resolving all reasonable and unreasonable doubts in their own favor, [33] and entering the content-based information services market [26] on a wholesale basis, leaving it to the Department of Justice and to the Court to initiate and pursue the enforcement actions necessary to rein these companies into what the decree actually allows. This kind of approach would thus have the perverse effect of substantially

[31] It may be that some of the parties' submissions are deliberately vague to achieve a quick entry into content, or it may be, on the other hand, that it is not possible to describe the ingredients of an as yet unknown and untried system that is limited to transmission.

[32] As indicated infra, some transmission activities necessitate relatively slight changes in content. For that reason, among others, the line between permissible transmission and impermissible generation or manipulation of content is not always obvious.

[33] For example, following the Court's decision with respect to the manufacturing restriction, some of the Regional Companies claimed that they had made elaborate plans regarding research and development preparatory to fabrication, on the theory that this was clearly permitted to them, although the trial record and the Court's Opinion which described that record clearly showed that research and development had been the facet of manufacturing that was the primary means for Bell System discrimination. United States v. Western Electric Co., 675 F. Supp. 655, 662-63 (D.D.C. 1987). One of the Regional Companies, Bell Atlantic, actually claimed that the "decision unlawfully expands the scope of the manufacturing prohibition" and another, Bell South, expressed "utter frustration at a ruling which goes far beyond clarifying any ambiguity . . . ." Telecommunications Reports, December 7, 1987, at 2. Even the Department of Justice, otherwise entirely in agreement with the Regional Companies, concluded, based on the record, that "manufacturing" includes research and development for purposes of the decree. Opinion, 675 F. Supp. at 664-65.

At least one Regional Company, Southwestern Bell, was found to have engaged in activity which violated the manufacturing restriction when it acquired Tsunami Technologies Corporation. See Report of the United States Concerning Southwestern Bell Corporation's Violations of the Modification of Final Judgment, February 12, 1988.

increasing rather than decreasing detailed judicial involvement with the telecommunications industry -- an obviously undesirable development.

[27] In short, while a simple prohibition on content generation, with an equally simple authorization to engage in transmission, would have the virtue of making the Court's task easier today, for the long run it would sow the seeds of enormous difficulties and disputes, harmful to the parties, to the Court, and to the industry.

B. Electronic Publishing

A somewhat similar approach -- one that was suggested by a number of parties, including some Regional Companies [34] -- would be to make the decree's electronic publishing definition the benchmark of information content. Electronic publishing is defined in section VIII(D) of the decree as:

> the provision of any information which AT&T or its affiliates has, or has caused to be, originated, authored, compiled, collected, or edited, or in which it has a direct or indirect financial or proprietary interest, and which is disseminated to an unaffiliated person through some electronic means. [35]

[28] The suggestion is made that the information services restriction of section II(D)(1) be amended to provide that only the activities [*11] encompassed under section VIII(D) remain prohibited. In the eyes of some commentators, this definitional approach will "avoid[] dragging the Court into the endless task of listing the technical capabilities needed for an effective gateway." [36] These commentators also emphasize the rapid pace of market and technological change in the industry, and they suggest that unless this method of proceeding is adopted, the Court will be inundated with requests for rulings on a function-to-function basis.

There is some merit to this argument. Simplicity is always a virtue, especially in a case as complex as this. Beyond that, the Court has no desire, nor reason, to become the arbiter of disputes over the merits of the details of particular technologies, nor does it have an interest in establishing a waiver process that would delay the implementation of advances in infrastructure technology.

However, while the proposed definition is simple, it is also inexact and underinclusive. "Electronic publishing" [29] is not all that must continue to be prohibited to the Regional Companies, for information content is a wider concept than that. For example, if a Regional Company were prohibited only from entering the electronic publishing business, it could validly offer such services as timesharing, credit checking, and electronic mail, although each of these services involves the generation or manipulation of content and for that reason should remain prohibited to the Regional Companies under any general restriction on content. [37] Thus, wholesale adoption of the electronic publishing definition does not constitute an appropriate alternative any more than does the straight prohibition on content.

Moreover, the electronic publishing proposal suffers from the same vice as that discussed under Subpart A, supra -- it leaves too large a scope for interpretation and hence evasion. It is the Court's experience that, regardless of the level at which a line is drawn between the permissible and the impermissible, the Regional Companies [30] will challenge that line, and either turn to the Court for a ruling or enter the field and await enforcement proceedings, if any. The electronic publishing alternative is therefore rejected.

C. Detailed Approvals

---

[34] See, e.g., Bell Atlantic Memorandum at 1-2, 3-6; Southwestern Bell Memorandum at 4.

[35] Under the decree, the section VIII(D) electronic publishing restriction reins in AT&T. The suggestion presently made is that this restriction be extended to the Regional Companies in lieu of the section II(D)(1) information restriction. See note 39, infra.

[36] Bell Atlantic Memorandum at 4.

[37] The Court today approves Regional Company entry into the electronic mail market, but this is done after a separate evaluation of that market in a concrete setting.

For obvious reasons, the Court will not establish a procedure that would avoid altogether the adoption of a definition either of transmission of information or of information content. The adoption of this alternative would require the Regional Companies to apply to the Court, again and again, for a function-by-function approval of relevant technology as such technology may occur to a Regional Company and as its installation may seem to be called for.

Such an approach would be a certain prescription for paralysis in the information services market. No responsible company would venture to expend capital on the design and installation of a technology if permission for proceeding with various facets was entirely uncertain but had to be applied for and secured some time in the future. Such a micromanagement approach by the Court would also be undesirable from the point of view of the Court and from that of certainty and stability in the industry as a whole.

V

Permitted and [31] Prohibited Transmission Services

Having found unsatisfactory the various alternatives discussed supra, the Court will now describe what it is the Regional Companies may and may not do under the newly liberalized information services restriction on the basis of the fundamental decisions made herein.

First. To the extent that the Court has already determined in the September 10, 1987 Opinion that HN1[] the employment of various infrastructure components is necessary [*12] to an effective information gateway, see Opinion, 673 F. Supp. at 592-95, these components are conclusively presumed to constitute transmission functions that the Regional Companies will be hereafter permitted to perform. No useful purpose would be served by repeating in this Opinion the parameters of these components or functions, [38] and the Court hereby adopts their description in the September 10, 1987 Opinion, as modified in Part VI, infra.

Second. The Regional Companies are being granted flexibility [32] also to develop applications of these five components that differ in technology or detail from the Teletel system or the Court's September 10, 1987 description. However, such latitude is only permitted to the extent that (1) all specific restrictions and conditions laid down in the September 10, 1987 Opinion and this Opinion as to scope of the particular categories are observed; (2) no application of these categories involves entry into content-based functions; and (3) the services provided via these five categories of gateway functions are restricted to the transmission of information generated by others.

Third. At the other end of the spectrum, a categoric restriction is being maintained on those aspects of information services that are plainly content-based. These are, at a minimum, the kinds of services that are described in the decree as electronic publishing, [39] [33] see Part IV-B, supra, but they extend, of course, beyond that. See slip op. at pp. 28-29, supra. [40]

Fourth. It may be that the function of transmitting information without infringing on the content prohibition can be achieved by means of a system or systems using components other than those listed above. The Regional

---

[38] The five functions referred to in the September 10, 1987 Opinion are (1) data transmission, (2) address translation, (3) protocol conversion, (4) billing management, and (5) introductory information content.

[39] Naturally, the text of this definition will have to be changed slightly to accommodate the present problem, so that the minimum prohibition will read as follows:

> . . . the provision by a Regional Company of any information which that Regional Company or its affiliates has, or has caused to be, originated, authored, compiled, collected, or edited, or in which it has a direct or indirect financial or proprietary interest, and which is disseminated to an unaffiliated person through telecommunications.

[40] Among other services that are also clearly outside the transmission function are the maintenance of user profiles and their sale or release to others. See U.S. West Memorandum at 12-14; PacTel Memorandum at 16. Such profiles typically contain detailed information on users' favorite services, times of use, monthly expenditures, and usage habits, which would provide the Regional Companies with an almost insuperable advantage vis-a-vis other providers as a marketing tool. Regional Company control of such data would also raise very sensitive privacy questions. See Response of CompuServe at 14-15.

Companies have not suggested any such system or systems thus far, [41] and there is thus nothing before the Court in that regard. However, should such entirely new means to transmit information services without trenching on content be proposed in the future, the Court will consider such proposals sympathetically, in line with its general view of the importance to [34] the public of advanced, broadly-available information services, and its general approach to refrain from straightjacketing the fledgling information services industry by imposing an unnecessarily rigid structure [42] through which it must develop. [43] Such proposals must of [*13] course respect the no-content prohibition, and they should not merely constitute rearguments of issues previously rejected by this Court.

[35] VI

Components of Transmission System

As indicated supra, the Court is authorizing use by the Regional Companies of a system for the transmission of information generated by others that consists of the five components referred to in the September 10, 1987 Opinion, either in their present form or as appropriately modified. In this part of the Opinion, the Court discusses various questions that have been briefed by the parties regarding the configuration of these components, as well as several ancillary issues.

A. Audiotex and Videotex

In its September 10, 1987 Opinion, the Court focused its analysis of transmission functions on those currently performed by Teletel, since it was that system which had been touted by various Regional Companies as the model through which the United States could enter the Information Age. The French system, however, is limited to videotex -- it does not offer the wide range of services that would be available through the complimentary audiotex format. [44] The Court sees no reason to create a competitive imbalance between voice and other services, and for that reason it will permit the Regional Companies to engage in the transmission of audiotex [36] on the same basis as they may transmit videotex.

Audiotex services are available through ordinary touchtone telephones, and they therefore have the potential to become the largest and fastest growing segment of the information services market. To date, the widespread application of audiotex has been largely limited to time-of-day information and "976" services, [45] [37] but [41] It is possible that no transmission functions other than those so described are conceptually or technologically feasible. See also note 31, supra.

---

[42] The direction of technology and the molding of the network must be informed by the whims of the consumer and the state of scientific experience. In order for the United States to develop a vigorous information services network, and to establish and maintain a leadership position in the world market, the Regional Companies should have available the means to design and administer a networking facility. Insofar as this goal is attainable without interfering with the core decree restrictions (e.g., the generation and manipulation of content), the Court will not seek to introduce any artificial hurdles.

[43] In this respect, proposals with the imprimatur of the Federal Communications Commission will be considered to be prima facie valid, as the Court recognizes that that body, through its studies in Computer III and enhanced services, has experience in this field.

[44] Audiotex allows consumer access to information through a regular telephone line and the use of a touchtone keypad. Huber Report at 6.3 n.8. Unlike in videotex, the information is not received in written form either on a video display screen or on paper. Huber Report at 1.29.

[45] "976" services are public announcement services, accessed through the local exchange companies, which provide short, uncomplicated, low-value, mass market information. Information flow is one way -- to the user. To encourage frequent, impulse usage, billing is direct to the telephone number, on a per-call basis, without prior subscription. The access lines linking the switches of the information services providers to the public network have a 976 dial code that engages special telephone company billing services. The user is billed an additional per-call amount on his monthly telephone bill; the revenue from that extra charge is divided between the Regional Company and the information service provider. See Huber Report at 8.1, 8.3, 8.6.

expansion of the technical infrastructure could spur a radical transformation in that industry. Many of the services cited in the September 10, 1987 Opinion as ripe for provision over the information services network can easily be provided via vehicles other than videotex, [46] vehicles that may be equally valuable to a broad range of consumers, if not more so. [47]

Consistent with the goal of making "possible the transmission, on a massive scale, of information services originated by others, directly to the ultimate consumer," Opinion, 673 F. Supp. at 603, then, the Court will make no distinction between videotex and audiotex with respect to Regional Company involvement in the transmission of information services. [48] Any and [*14] all references to videotex, either in this Opinion or the September 10, 1987 Opinion, may be construed to include audiotex applications.

[38] B. Electronic Directory Service

On September 10, 1987, the Court stated that it would not remove the prohibition against Regional Company provision of electronic "Yellow Pages" directory services because such removal would give the companies the incentive and ability to discriminate against competing providers of directory services and against competing providers of directory services and against the publishers of classified and other advertisements. Opinion, 673 F. Supp. at 596. On the other hand, the Court decided that the Regional Companies would be allowed to offer electronic "White Pages" directories with respect to which such an anticompetitive potential did not exist. Id. From those simple declarations several Regional Companies have parsed an invitation to engage in the broadest possible electronic directory services, some so broad as to subsume almost all distinctions between White and Yellow pages.

These Regional Companies have interpreted the Court's statements regarding electronic directories as vesting in them the authority to provide electronic directory services that list general product and business categories, the service or product providers under those categories, [39] the names, telephone numbers, and addresses of these providers, as well as services that allow customers to search the directory through the use of any of those categories. [49] BellSouth would add to these assumed grants of authority the capability to search by geographic location, and it would provide hours of operation, alternative phone numbers, and similar information for business and government listings. [50] And Bell Atlantic carries these misinterpretations to their ultimate logical conclusion: it suggests that everything except display advertising could be provided under the rubric of "White Pages". [51]

Section VIII(B) of the decree grants to the Regional Companies the authority to produce, publish, and distribute printed "Yellow Pages" directories. Yellow Pages are described therein as "directories [40] which contain

---

[46] Home banking, brokerage, retail services information, messaging, bulletin boards, and other such services are particularly adaptable to audiotex. See Opinion, 673 F. Supp. at 589-90.

[47] Most American consumers already own or rent the access device required by audiotex -- the telephone. Thus, audiotex could be enjoyed without the additional expense and bother of obtaining a separate terminal. See Response of Public Utilities Commission of California at 3-4.

[48] Limited objections to this expansion have been expressed by some competing audiotex providers. See Phonequest, et al., Response at 3-4. The primary objection of the opponents appears to be that "there is no possible way in which the independents could compete with the [Regional Companies]." Id. at 4. These competitors fail to explain, however, why the potential for anticompetitive behavior is stronger in the audiotex field than in videotex. The mere fact that entry of the Regional Companies into the field will provide stiffer competition is not grounds for excluding them from the market. See note 88, infra.

[49] See, e.g., Pacific Telesis Memorandum at 19; Bell Atlantic Memorandum at 18; BellSouth Memorandum at 18.

[50] BellSouth Memorandum at 18.

[51] Bell Atlantic Reply at 10. These bizarre interpretations of the scope of "White Pages" directories are yet another example of how the Regional Companies, or some of them, would abuse any flexibility that might be afforded to them.

advertisements and which list general product and business categories, the service or product providers under these categories, and their names, telephone numbers, and addresses." As the above discussion indicates, some Regional Companies now expect to have the right to provide electronic directories of that same nature under the label of electronic "White Pages," although they are not permitted to produce electronic Yellow Pages under the decree itself. AT&T, 552 F. Supp. at 194. That attempted usurpation of authority was rejected once before, and it is now again rejected. [52]

The provision of electronic "White Pages" directories encompasses only a listing of telephone subscribers, arranged in alphabetical order by name, with address and telephone number appended. No discrete directory of businesses, products, or services is allowed under the "White Pages" exception, nor is searching by [41] any of those categories.

A reading of the draft orders and explanatory memoranda submitted on this particular issue indicates that some parties may have confused the Court's ruling in regard to the "White" and "Yellow Pages" directories with that on introductory information content as a gateway component. For example, U.S. West argues that electronic White Pages services should not be artificially restricted because "[a] purely alphabetical [*15] listing would not attract users to the gateway and would not serve to familiarize users with the use of information services." [53] Familiarization with information services is not the purpose of White Pages; that purpose is effected by gateway introductory information. The two types of services are completely unrelated in function and design: to be listed in electronic "White Pages" directories an individual or a business needs no more than a telephone number; by contrast, gateway introductory information serves as a guide only to those individuals and businesses who are information services providers accessible through the gateway.

The Court has endorsed the provision of welcoming pages and provider listings in the [42] gateway context. Opinion, 673 F. Supp. at 594-95. In the Regional Companies' role as the providers of gateways to information services, they may list names, addresses, service and business categories, and other information which would assist the user in identifying a service provider, as long as such information is not offered in a way so as to discriminate among providers. The gateway should allow the customer without much difficulty to search the data base in any of these categories. This service does not, however, extend beyond the group of entities that provides services through the gateway; those who merely have a telephone and a telephone number are not in that category.

To the extent that use of the gateway can be made user friendly, the Regional Companies should be encouraged to assist novice and veteran users alike. Therefore, in addition to those items previously identified as appropriate introductory information content, the Regional Companies may provide a "help" capability and directions for navigating within their gateway. Information as to how to locate different providers, how to use the listing of providers, how to select an information service, how to exit the network, [43] and the like would be appropriate subjects of a gateway "help" function. [54] Once again, however, this capability will be limited to information about using the gateway -- it will not extend to information about an individual service provider's own system. [55] The information service provider may of course make such assistance to navigation available to its subscribers as part of its menu, but that would be a function under its control, not that of the Regional Company.

C. Kiosk and Revenue Sharing

---

[52] By the same token, the Court hereby denies requests by competitors of the Regional Companies for a reexamination of its decision to allow Regional Companies to provide "White Pages" electronic directories. See, e.g., Digital Directory Assistance, Inc., Memorandum at 3.

[53] U.S. West Reply at 7.

[54] See National Consumers League, et al., Memorandum at 7-8.

[55] As the Court has previously noted, HN2[] service menus of the information providers are a matter of editorial control, closely interrelated with information content. Opinion, 673 F. Supp. at 595. Menu service may not be provided as part of gateway introductory information.

The Court has previously indicated that any type of consolidated billing system will be permitted as long as it does not provide for the sharing of revenue. Opinion, 673 F. Supp. at 594. Because the "kiosk" billing system used by the French Teletel, in which the telephone company bills the consumer on a flat-rate-per-service basis, appeared to [44] be a form of revenue sharing, the Court indicated that it would preclude the Regional Companies from adopting a similar system. Opinion, 673 F. Supp. at 594 n.310. Subsequent to that determination, the Court has analyzed further the kiosk billing arrangement, and it has now become persuaded that it should rescind that categoric preclusion.

The French kiosk system appears to have been a key factor in the growth and expansion of Teletel by simplifying consumer access to and use of the network. Users pay for Teletel calls on their regular telephone bills, and the French telephone company in turn transfers a prearranged portion of the collected sums to remunerate the individual information service providers. These payments are based on traffic statistics: the more popular a service, the greater the service provider's income. [56]

Because a simple, constant price is charged for a wide variety of services, consumers [*16] are encouraged to browse in the system. This facilitates their familiarity with the various information providers and increases the competitiveness of services offered. The French telephone company's [45] only interest, as it relates to billing, is in collecting a flat fee for each time increment that the system is accessed by a particular consumer. [57] It is apparently largely because of the practical simplicity of the kiosk system that Teletel has become widely used in France. [58]

Technically speaking, this type of billing arrangement involves a measure of revenue sharing; as service providers' revenue increases, the telephone company's income from the network rises. However, this cooperative arrangement benefits everyone [46] -- service provider, gateway provider, and consumer alike -- by lowering administrative costs and establishing a uniform billing mechanism which can easily be understood by the novice user.

There is little, if any, offsetting potential for discriminatory behavior, since the network has no incentive to prefer one provider over another. In fact, the kiosk system is in many ways comparable to billing arrangements currently used by the Regional Companies for "976" services. In that market, telephone company charges are based on a percentage of the information provider's revenue. [59] [47] The Court has not been apprised of any negative effects this arrangement has had on competition in the industry; and the French kiosk billing system, or any other billing mechanism which charges on a flat rate, per call, or per minute basis, would seem to fall in that same category. [60] Therefore, the Court will withdraw its prior conclusion that kiosk-type billing arrangements would necessarily involve harmful revenue sharing agreements, and it will allow the Regional Companies to bill on any basis, provided, of course, that the billing method is not discriminatory in any way.

D. Protocol Conversion

Businesses and consumers in this country are already using a broad and disparate array of computer terminals with a wide variety of operating characteristics. An effective gateway, to be fully useful, should be able to communicate

---

[56] "Keys of success," Teletel Newsletter, Special Issue No. 2, 1987, at 5.

[57] As the Teletel network has become more sophisticated, the French telephone company has refined the kiosk system. Initially, a single charging rate was in effect for all services. To boost growth in kiosk services for businesses and professional users, which may cost more to develop but often receive fewer calls than services aimed at the general public, Teletel introduced multirate kiosk charging in the summer of 1987. Accessing services in the higher billing category is thus more expensive for users, but in return, the service providers receive a larger payment for each call.

[58] "Keys of Success," Teletel Newsletter, Special Issue No. 2, 1987, at 5.

[59] Department of Justice Memorandum at 18-19.

[60] See, e.g., Department of Justice Response at 13; Ameritech Response at 13-14.

readily with all these terminals, and it would therefore be advantageous if it were more sophisticated than the French model (which needs to communicate only with dumb terminals).

The Court has previously ratified the use of one particular type of protocol conversion, asynchronous-to-X.25 packet signals. However, it does not follow from the fact that this is the Teletel protocol conversion mechanism, as well as the most prevalently used conversion mode today, that the Regional Companies should be restricted to this technology. Other types of protocol conversion are in effect even now, each with a particular application. For example, a gateway which provides electronic mail would have to be able to convert individual users' protocols to X.400 protocols, the international standard for electronic mail; [61] similarly, synchronous, [62] rather than [48] asynchronous [*17] protocols, are widely used by hospitals and state governments in data communication. [63]

The Court has concluded that the correct approach to this question is one which allows flexibility for change and choice, and which encourages innovation. To the extent that protocol conversion methods exist or are developed other than asynchronous-to-X.25 which do not involve the manipulation of content, their use is permitted without further specific sanction from the Court. [64]

[49] E. Procedural Requirements

Many commenters argue that transmission of information services should be allowed only in tandem with tailored provisions of a procedural nature. [65] [50] While the interests to be protected by such provisions are important, it is also true that the imposition of many new procedural requirements, willy-nilly, would seriously impair the development of a healthy and vigorous information services market. The Court is particularly reluctant to duplicate on the judicial level a vast and complex scheme of procedures where regulation exists on the federal and state regulatory commission levels having similar purposes. [66] This is not to say, however, that the objectives of the commenters, to the extent that they are substantial, cannot and should not be attained, either through the requested requirements or by alternative means.

Two issues predominate: discrimination and cross-subsidization.

---

[61] Bell Atlantic Memorandum at 15 n.18.

[62] Synchronous data transmission differs from asynchronous data transmission in that the transmitting and receiving devices can have character synchronization for a significant period of time. During the time that the devices are synchronized, it is possible to transfer data without marking the extremes of each character. This makes it possible to omit stop and start bits and increase transmission efficiency and speed. J. Hammond & P. O'Reilly, Performance Analysis of Local Computer Networks at 38 (1986).

[63] Ameritech Reply at 4.

[64] However, it appears that the Regional Companies have requested the FCC only for authority to perform async./X.25 and async./X.75 protocol conversion services. Tynmet-McDonnell Douglas Memorandum at 11. If the FCC adopts that standard, the Regional Companies will of course not be free to exceed the limits set by that body.

[65] Among the safeguards advocated are provisions requiring non-discriminatory disclosure of network interface changes, see Hayes Microcomputer Products, Inc., Reply at 12-14, provisions against cross-subsidization, see Consumer Federation of America Memorandum at 4-6; Computer and Business Manufacturer's Association Response at 11-12, equal access, see Information Industry Association Memorandum at 13-17; ADAPSO Memorandum at 3-4, non-discrimination safeguards, see Electronic Yellow Pages and Information Association Memorandum at 3, 11-13; TRINITEX Reply at 6-8, requirements regarding colocation, see Dun & Bradstreet Memorandum at 12, and operation through separate subsidiaries, see, U.S. Sprint Memorandum at 18.

[66] The Court sees no reason, at this stage of the AT&T case, to endorse a return to the detailed and complicated framework considered and rejected by the parties as a possible means of settlement in that suit. As might be inferred from the names by which those negotiations have become known, Quagmire I & II, the entire subject became a hopeless web of intricate, issue-by-issue micromanagement that was destined for failure. See, generally, S. Coll, The Deal of the Century: The Breakup of AT&T, at 252-56; 297-301.

The decree in its present form already sets out in general and broad terms restrictions against discriminatory behavior. Thus, section II(B) provides that "no [Regional Company] shall discriminate between AT&T and its affiliates and their products and services and other persons and their products and services in the . . . interconnection and use of the [Regional Company's] telecommunications service and facilities or in the charges for each element of service." See also § II(A). These restrictions will continue to govern the Regional Companies in their provision of information gateway services, [51] [67] and the Court sees no reason to add yet another requirement of this nature to the safeguards already in place.

Moreover, the Federal Communications Commission is apparently establishing mechanisms to address both the discrimination issue and the issue of cross-subsidization. For example, in the Async/X.25 Proceedings and the Third Computer Inquiry, the FCC has established a number of competitive safeguards to govern the provision of enhanced information services -- including [*18] protocol conversion -- by the Regional Companies. [68] The efficacy of these safeguards is of course still uncertain. See Opinion, 673 F. Supp. at 576. The Court retains jurisdiction over this question, however, and if it appears that the Regional Companies are abusing the authority granted herein, and that FCC regulatory control is insufficient [52] to curb violations, the Court will take the requisite enforcement action.

Today's ruling will allow the Regional Companies to strike out into new and uncharted waters. In an effort to grant sufficient flexibility to build a workable network, the Court has resisted tying the companies' entry into the field to a host of strict new procedural requirements. That approach may increase the potential for unfair practices; certainly it places initial responsibility for complying with the decree in the hands of the Regional Companies themselves.

In the exercise of the Court's continuing jurisdiction over the decree, however, as well as pursuant to the Department of Justice enforcement authority, [53] Regional Company behavior in the information services field will be closely monitored. Should it become apparent that the flexibility granted herein is being abused, that local bottlenecks are being used to discriminate against competitors in the information services market, or that the information services are being subsidized by funds contributed by the ratepayers, the Court will take appropriate enforcement action. In fact, if the behavior of a particular Regional Company proves particularly egregious, the Court will not hesitate to rescind that violator's authority to engage in information transmission services altogether. [69]

VII

Voice Storage and Retrieval

Although not discussed in substance in the September 10, 1987 Opinion, Regional Company participation in the voice storage and retrieval market generated substantial debate in the most recent round of comments. [70]

---

[67] In the Order appended hereto, the decree will be amended to except from the prohibition of section II(D)(1) Regional Company provision of certain "transmission" functions as they relate to information services. Concurrently, the amendment makes clear that the Regional Companies' non-discrimination obligations are to continue in the face of that relaxation.

[68] Async/X.25 Order, 100 F.C.C.2d at 1104-12; Computer III Phase II Order, 2 FCC Rcd. at 3078-82. The fundamental precepts underlying the safeguards adopted by the FCC are that: (1) transparent transmission services should continue to be available to the public; (2) the Regional Companies should not be allowed to discriminate against competing information service vendors or their customers; and (3) the Regional Companies' monopoly ratepayers should not bear the costs of these competitive services.

[69] The announcement of the possible use of this sanction, while severe, is intended to place the Regional Companies on notice that the Court expects their complete fidelity to the decree in entering this new market.

[70] Since the Court did not discuss this topic in its September 10, 1987 Opinion, somewhat greater elaboration is necessary here than with respect to the "transmission" discussion, supra.

[54] The positions taken on this issue, as on many others, are in diametric opposition to each other. A number of parties, including both the Regional Companies and others [71] see no barrier to entry into this market, arguing that no manipulation of content is involved in the service. [72] Other parties and intervenors postulate that, due to the Regional Company monopoly of the local switching services, a competitive market for the delivery of these services to consumers is likely to develop only if the Regional Companies remain prohibited [73] [55] from providing them. [74] Yet other parties support [*19] Regional Company provision of certain storage and messaging capabilities, but only if limitations are clearly defined by the Court. [75]

There are three quite distinct settings in which storage capabilities of the Regional Companies could be used in the information services market.

First, and most basic, is very short [56] term storage. This transient storage and retrieval of information is an integral part of the transmission of communications and is currently being performed within the network in a variety of ways. Data is routinely stored each time a telephone call is made; the network stores the digits dialed by the calling party until a sufficient number of digits are input to allow direction of the call to its destination. [76] In the context of speed calling and call forwarding, storage of user-identified numbers occurs over time, not merely during the course of the transmission of a telephone call. Even the basic packet switching function, performed on an intra-LATA basis by Regional Companies, involves the breakdown of data or voice communications into small bits of information that are then collected and transmitted between nodes. These bits of data are subject to constant storage, error checking, and retransmission, as required for accurate transmission.

The information services gateway as contemplated by the September 10, 1987 Opinion will also necessarily require some storage capability to house the welcoming message, the Information Service Provider [57] (ISP) directory, and information for the provision of billing services. At least at this elementary level, the Regional Companies must plainly be and will be permitted to engage in storage and retrieval functions. [77]

Second, the Regional Companies might provide storage space in their gateways for databases created by others and lease that space to information service providers and end users. Making storage facilities available at the gateway level will make communication more efficient by moving information closer to the end user, thereby

---

[71] E.g., National Consumers League Memorandum at 14-15; Voice Message Desk Systems, Inc., Memorandum at 2-6; MessagePhone, Inc., Memorandum at 3-11; Florida Public Service Commission Memorandum at 11-12; Michigan Public Service Commission Memorandum at 4.

[72] E.g., NYNEX Memorandum at 8-9; Ameritech Memorandum at 7-10; BellSouth Reply at 8.

[73] The decree prohibits the Regional Companies, inter alia, from "storing" and "retrieving" information. Sections II(D)(1), IV(J). Of course, like all restrictions, they are subject to removal pursuant to section VIII(C).

[74] Enhanced Service Providers Memorandum at 4-5; MCI Memorandum at 2; Compuserve Memorandum at 8; Consumer Federation of America Memorandum at 3. It is also argued that the Regional Companies would possess "substantial potential" to subsidize these services illegally and to discriminate in providing competitors access to essential facilities. Compuserve Memorandum at 9-10; Committee of Corporate Telecommunications Users Response at 8.

[75] E.g., Information Industry Association Response at 4-11; Committee of Corporate Telecommunications Users Response at 7-9. One draft order, submitted jointly by U.S. West and the ANPA, proposes that the Regional Companies be permitted to provide storage on a wholesale basis to information providers, but prohibited from such provision on a retail basis to end users. U.S. West Memorandum at 14-16; ANPA Memorandum at 15. The Court rejects this distinction as being too difficult to administer in practice without the endless submission of requests for construction.

[76] Southwestern Bell Memorandum at 9.

[77] There is little dispute as to the desirability of allowing the Regional Companies to engage in storage to this limited extent. See, e.g., Consumer Federation of America Reply at 5, "The only storage and messaging functions in which the Regional Companies should engage are those internal network functions which are fundamental to prompt, high-quality interconnection between ISPs and end-users."

reducing transmission costs. [78] [58] It is also possible that gateway storage would reduce entry costs to the information providers by obviating the need for their purchase of their own storage hardware. [79]

This use of storage capabilities, while not technically necessary to an information infrastructure, would substantially assist in attracting to the system providers of information services, and it consequently would help to ensure that a "critical mass" of services would be available through the network. There is no significant potential for discriminatory behavior in this market, and this use of storage capabilities will also be permitted.

The third, and most encompassing use of storage capabilities would be in the provision [*20] of services such as voice messaging, [80] [60] voice storage and retrieval (VSR), [81] and electronic mail. [82] Provision of these services would not involve [59] the Regional Company in the generation or manipulation of information content [83] for provision to the public. [84]

Although there is some dispute [61] on this issue, the Court is persuaded that voice information services are likely to become much more affordable and much more widely used in this country [85] if the Regional Companies

---

[78] Ameritech Memorandum at 8; Bell Atlantic Memorandum at 8.

[79] See Ameritech Memorandum at 9; Bell Atlantic Memorandum at 8. It may be true that some information providers would choose to obtain storage capabilities from the Regional Companies should that service be available through the gateway. However, this service, like many others relating to computer technology, is also available through independent providers, and it is therefore neither necessary that the gateway furnish this facility, nor will the gateway necessarily provide the most cost efficient storage.

[80] The term "voice messaging" encompasses a wide assortment of caller-directed, transient storage, limited-duration exchange telecommunications services.

The technology allows a caller, in response to a busy signal or no answer, to record a brief message and then provide the calling instrument, the originating PBX, or the local exchange central office with routing instructions and a limited duration during which the system will attempt to complete the call and let the called party accept the recorded message at his discretion. In the event of an interexchange call, the originating caller rather than the local carrier selects the interexchange carrier. Because the caller must identify himself, the called party can accept the message or merely hang up; by agreeing to receive the message the called party becomes liable for the cost of the service. MessagePhone Memorandum at 3-4.

Voice messaging is thus a purely unidirectional transmission. It is strictly caller-directed and can be initiated with as little as a single digit or character code. There is little to differentiate voice messaging from a standard telephone call other than by the incorporation of a short time delay for message delivery.

[81] Voice storage and retrieval systems, in generic terms, act as sophisticated versions of an answering machine. Typically, incoming calls are intercepted by equipment which acquires analog speech, converts it to digital forms, and stores the digital version until it is required for retrieval in analog form. Huber Report at 10.1.

[82] VSR and electronic mail services are much alike, except in the form of the information content: in VSR, the information is stored as a voice message, in electronic mail services, it is stored as a printed message.

[83] In the simplest sense, such use of storage capability allows for time-delay services, that is, messages from an information provider or a user are stored until the particular telephone line is available or the called person or machine becomes free.

[84] The fact that content might be converted to digital form for storage, and then returned to analog form for retrieval and transmission to the called party does not place it within the realm of content manipulation. For practical purposes, the stored information reaches the intended recipient in the same content form as it was in when it was delivered.

[85] The experience of foreign telephone companies shows that these services are an important gateway function. Although the French Teletel system does not provide electronic mail now, it is installing that capability. In Japan, Canada, West Germany, Ireland, Denmark, Belgium, and Holland, the telephone companies all provide this service. Bell Atlantic Memorandum at 11. Voice messaging has become so popular in Japan that consumers send 60,000 voice messages each day. See Communications Week, September 28, 1987, at 56; How Tokyo Is Turning Telephones Into Answering Machines, Business Week, February 16, 1987 at 104C.

were permitted to provide storage to accommodate messages and other information until the intended recipient was ready to receive the transmission. [86]

Objections to a wholesale Regional Company entry into markets requiring storage capabilities fall generally into two categories: first, that these are not functions "necessary" to a gateway, [62] and for that reason were not contemplated by the September 10, 1987 Opinion; and second, that there has been no showing under section VIII(C) of the decree as to lack of competitive harm.

To the extent that objections to Regional Company entry into this market depend on a finding that storage is not a function "necessary" to the provision of transmission services, the argument succeeds in part and fails in part. As indicated supra, some amount of storage is necessary to any transmission activity over the local exchange network, be it in the context of information services or in routine telephone communication. These types of storage functions are therefore "necessary" to the gateway infrastructure in the narrowest sense of the word. It is, however, debatable whether the broader and more sophisticated storage functions briefly described above are necessary to transmission. Although the Regional Companies could transmit information without having the [*21] ability to perform these functions, the functions are certainly helpful to transmission. [87]

[63] In any event, however, whether or not the provision of such services is necessary to the performance of the functions of a transmission gateway, the Court may remove the restriction if it concludes that the section VIII(C) test has been met. In this regard, the opponents of Regional Company entry into the voice storage and retrieval markets contend that such entry would result in the displacement of independent firms. [88]

[64] It may safely be assumed that a large potential market exists for voice storage and retrieval services, far beyond the relatively meager market that is serviced by the existing providers. Entry of the Regional Companies into this market would be bound to enlarge it manifold, and new economic opportunities would be created for many new providers as well as for those who now supply the market. What has until now been a relatively quiescent market is likely to become a broad, vigorous, and competitive one. On the other hand, it may well be that the Regional Companies, not satisfied with the market share they are likely to acquire, would attempt also to drive out, or reduce the opportunities for, those who independently service that market, either as voice storage providers or as manufacturers or sellers of answering machines.

The issue as to the potential for anticompetitive activity is thus a close one; valid arguments can be made to support either outcome, and the Court is not convinced that a showing has been made to militate in either direction.

In the Court's opinion, several factors tip the balance in favor of Regional Company entry.

First. In view of the fact that the core violations [65] that were the subject of proof during the AT&T trial did not involve this market at all, there is less reason to believe that Regional Company involvement in this industry will lead to anticompetitive behavior than would, for example, its involvement in long distance, provision of information content, or manufacture of telecommunications products.

---

[86] See, e.g., OCTEL Memorandum at 12.

[87] In one sense, call answering, voice mail, and electronic mail offerings are independent services for which competitive markets currently exist. See, e.g., MCI Memorandum at 3. In this view, the question simply is whether Regional Company entry into these markets would have positive or negative competitive effects.

[88] HN3[] It is of course a fundamental principle of jurisprudence that the antitrust laws protect competition, not competitors. Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962). These laws seek to foster competition by increasing the number of providers in the marketplace and thereby allowing the consumer, through demand for services, to select the winning firm. It is likewise the purpose of the decree to allow consumers to reap the benefits of competition in telecommunications. The Regional Companies should not be excluded from this market simply because, due to their size and interest in the communications field, they would likely be formidable competitors therein. To decide otherwise would be in effect to grant exclusive franchises to the current providers. See also note 48, supra.

Second. Due to the subtle competitive pressure exerted on this market by the presence of service bureaus, answering services, and particularly home answering machines, the ability to control prices and otherwise to operate monopolistically will be substantially diluted.

Answering machines are used by about ten percent of American households. [89] The consumer's choice between answering machines and Regional Company sponsored voice storage and retrieval will most likely be cost-sensitive -- should the price of automated services greatly exceed the amortized cost of an answering machine, few individuals are apt to subscribe. This economic impetus will, to a large extent, remove the ability of Regional Companies to raise prices unreasonably.

Third. In view of the largely inconclusive [66] and speculative nature of the competitive considerations, other public policy [*22] factors should also be considered. [90] In this context, the public interest heavily tips the balance in favor of the requests of the Regional Companies.

[67] The likelihood is that truly ubiquitous access to these services will not be had by the residential and small business consumer in the absence of Regional Company involvement. [91] Despite the emergence of several independent providers, the market for voice storage services, particularly for the occasional user, has not developed in this country to anywhere near its potential. As a practical matter, small and medium-sized businesses as well as consumers have to date had very limited opportunity to enjoy the benefits of these services, for reasons very much like those that explain the limited development of videotex itself in the United States. See Opinion, 673 F. Supp. at 590-91.

[68] In-house voice information systems require large up-front investments that are cost-effective only when spread over a large number of users, and only large businesses are therefore willing to make this capital investment. Further, high start-up and operating costs have limited the emergence of individual service providers, and where such providers do exist, economic factors have generally required them to deploy large, centralized facilities that, in order to serve broad areas, depend upon expensive long-haul transmission capabilities. To minimize their transmission costs, existing providers of voice information services have, once again, focused their business on service to larger business users, especially those located near the provider's own facility. [92] More generally, consumer and small business awareness has been low, and the need for presubscription has kept potential users from joining the system.

Given these conditions and limitations, it is appropriate for the Court to take into account values in addition to those stemming exclusively from an environment free of anticompetitive activity. In this case, such values revolve largely around the [69] interest of providers and potential consumers to attain the widest possible availability of voice

---

[89] Voice Message Desk Systems, Inc., Memorandum at 5.

[90] As indicated above (p. 5 n.11, supra), this is not the first time that the Court has weighed matters of public import in ruling on questions of interpretation under the decree. The earliest such consideration occurred when the decree itself was modified and approved six years ago, in part because of public policy considerations which extended beyond the category of antitrust violations. At that time, the Court noted that the interests of universal service, for example, strongly supported entry of the decree, as well as the adoption of changes that allowed the Regional Companies to market customer premises equipment and Yellow Pages directories. The most recent such consideration occurred only last month, when the Court approved waivers of the terms of the decree, the public interest in receiving a particular service being at issue. See, e.g., United States v. Western Electric Co., C.A. No. 82-0192, slip op. 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13536 (D.D.C. Feb. 8, 1988) (time and weather information).

[91] See, e.g., National Consumers League Memorandum at 14-15; MessagePhone Memorandum at 5; Voice Message Desk Systems, Inc., Memorandum at 3-6. This conclusion is disputed by AMVOX, a recently formed provider of telephone answering and voice messaging, which claims to have targeted the small business and residential customer as its prime service audience. AMVOX Memoranda at 4. This news is encouraging, and it is to be hoped that this trend will continue. However, the fact that this independent company has entered the market and seeks to reach all small business and residential customers is of course not a guarantee that this objective will be met.

[92] OCTEL Memorandum at 3-4.

storage and retrieval services to all segments of American society. As indicated, this objective can most readily be achieved by allowing Regional Company participation in the market for voice storage and retrieval type services. On this basis, and since the risk of anticompetitive activity is small, the Court will allow such participation. The Regional Companies will accordingly be authorized to enter the markets for voice storage and retrieval, voice messaging, and electronic mail. [93]

[*23] VIII

Order

For the reasons and on the bases described above, it is this 7th day of March, 1988

ORDERED that the decree entered herein on August 24, 1982, be and it is hereby amended by the addition of the following new subsection of section VIII:

K. Notwithstanding the provisions of section IV(J):

1. The separated BOCs shall be permitted to engage in the transmission of information as part [70] of a gateway to an information service, but not in the generation or manipulation of the content of information. "Transmission" shall mean the performance of the following functions: data transmission, address translation, protocol conversion, billing management, and introductory information content.
2. The separated BOCs shall be permitted to engage in voice storage and retrieval services, including voice messaging and electronic mail services.
3. In the performance of the services authorized herein, no BOC shall discriminate between and among providers of information or against other providers of information services or of voice storage and retrieval services.

---

[93] This ruling in no way exempts the Regional Companies from complying with the more general ban against engaging in information services activities which involve the manipulation or generation of content.

State v. Thompson

Court of Appeals of Utah

March 9, 1988, Filed

No. 860357-CA

Reporter

751 P.2d 805 *; 1988 Utah App. LEXIS 32 ; 77 Utah Adv. Rep. 34; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,925

STATE of Utah, Plaintiff and Respondent, v. L. Brent Fletcher, Michael C. THOMPSON, Bruce A. Conklin and Michael Ziemski, Defendants and Appellants

Core Terms

group boycott, defendants', Antitrust, trial court, bribes, commercial bribery, convictions, specific intent, racketeering, bribery, pattern of racketeering activity, Sherman Act, federal court, RICE Act, anticompetitive, conspiracy, restraint of trade, competitors, episodes, counts, rule of reason, instant case, security guard, violations, bid, good faith, enterprise, subpoenas, vertical, boycott

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Criminal Law & Procedure > Commencement of Criminal Proceedings > Arrests > Probable Cause

Criminal Law & Procedure > Search & Seizure > Seizure of Persons

HN1[] Arrests, Probable Cause

An illegal arrest or detention does not void a subsequent conviction under Utah law.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Search & Seizure > Warrants

Criminal Law & Procedure > Search & Seizure > Expectation of Privacy

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Discovery > Subpoenas

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Search & Seizure > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Search & Seizure > Scope of Protection

Criminal Law & Procedure > Search & Seizure > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Search & Seizure > Search Warrants > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Witnesses > Subpoenas > General Overview

HN2[] Search & Seizure, Warrants

The enforcement of a subpoena duces tecum is subject to U.S. Const. amend. IV restrictions against unreasonable searches and seizures, although not to the extent of a search warrant.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Preliminary Proceedings > Pretrial Motions & Procedures > Suppression of Evidence

HN3[] Pretrial Motions & Procedures, Suppression of Evidence

Evidence is suppressed or excluded only if the same was obtained by a violation of U.S. Const. amend. IV, designed to protect a person's right to privacy and property.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Exclusionary Rule > Exceptions to Exclusionary Rule > Good Faith

Criminal Law & Procedure > Search & Seizure > Exclusionary Rule > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Exclusionary Rule > Exceptions to Exclusionary Rule > Reasonable Reliance Upon Warrant

HN4[] Exceptions to Exclusionary Rule, Good Faith

Where an officer acts in objectively reasonable reliance on a subsequently invalidated warrant, the exclusionary rule does not apply.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

Evidence > Admissibility > Procedural Matters > Rulings on Evidence

HN5[] Appeals, Standards of Review

A reviewing court may affirm a trial court's decision to admit evidence on any proper ground, even though a trial court assigned another reason for its ruling.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Penalties

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN6[] US Department of Justice Actions, Criminal Actions

See Utah Code Ann. § 76-10-926.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN7[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See Utah Code Ann. § 76-10-914(1).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN8[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

See Utah Code Ann. § 76-10-920.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Bribery > Commercial Bribery > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Crimes Against Persons > Bribery > General Overview

HN9[] Sherman Act, Claims

While it is true that commercial bribery alone is not conduct in violation of federal antitrust law, when the bribery is coupled with other acts tending to restrain trade, a claim under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., may be established.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN10[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Whether a particular action or agreement violates the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., depends on whether it is an unreasonable restraint on trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

HN11[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To determine whether a restraint is unreasonable, the factfinder must decide whether under all the circumstances of the case the restrictive practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN12[] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

There are certain agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use. These per se practices include price fixing, division of markets, group boycotts, and tying arrangements.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN13[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

A classic per se group boycott exists where two or more competitors on the same level of the market structure agree to eliminate a target horizontal competitor by combining to deny the target of elements needed in order to compete.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Nonprice Restraints

HN14[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Vertical nonprice restraints, i.e., combinations of persons at different levels of the market structure, are generally not treated under the per se doctrine but are examined under the rule of reason standard.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Penalties

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

HN15[] Clayton Act, Penalties

Utah Code Ann. § 76-10-920 of the Utah Antitrust Act criminalizes only the four types of conduct that have been clearly labeled as per se violations of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Boycotts

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Acts & Mental States > Mens Rea > Specific Intent

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

HN16[] Horizontal Refusals to Deal, Boycotts

Under Utah Code Ann. § 76-10-920, the prosecution is required to prove a defendant engaged in a group boycott with the specific intent of eliminating competition.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Acts & Mental States > Mens Rea > Specific Intent

HN17[] Mens Rea, Specific Intent

When the specific intent of a defendant is an element of the criminal offense charged, the intent may be inferred from the defendant's conduct and surrounding circumstances.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN18[] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

See Utah Code Ann. § 76-10-1603(1).

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN19[] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

See Utah Code Ann. § 76-10-1602(4).

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Scope of Protection

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN20[] Procedural Due Process, Scope of Protection

The Utah Racketeering Influences and Criminal Enterprise Act, Utah Code Ann. §§ 76-10-1601 through 1608, is not limited in application to persons affiliated with organized crime.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Fines

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Bribery > Commercial Bribery > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Bribery > Commercial Bribery > Penalties

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Vagueness

HN21[] Sentencing, Fines

The Utah Racketeering Influences and Criminal Enterprise Act, Utah Code Ann. §§76-10-1601 through 1608, is sufficiently explicit to inform the ordinary reader what conduct is prohibited, and is therefore not unconstitutionally vague.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN22[] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

The definition of pattern under the Utah Racketeering Influences and Criminal Enterprise Act, Utah Code Ann. §§ 76-10-1601 through 1608, requires separate but related criminal episodes as the basis for a pattern.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > Output, Exclusive & Requirements Agreements

Criminal Law & Procedure > Juries & Jurors > Province of Court & Jury > General Overview

HN23[] Sales of Goods, Output, Exclusive & Requirements Agreements

Determining the existence of a single offense or multiple offenses is a question of intent to be determined by the particular facts and circumstances of each case.

Civil Procedure > Trials > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Trials > Motions for Mistrial

HN24[] Civil Procedure, Trials

With regard to motions for mistrial, the Utah Supreme Court has stated that the critical inquiry should be whether there is a reasonable likelihood that the incident so prejudiced the jury that in its absence there might have been a different result. Due to his advantaged position and consistent with his responsibilities as the authority in charge of the trial, the inquiry is necessarily addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court. He should view such an episode in the light of the total proceeding, and if he thinks that there has been such prejudice that there is a reasonable probability that the defendant cannot have a fair and impartial determination of his guilt or innocence, he should of course grant a mistrial.

Counsel: [1] Max D. Wheeler, Rodney R. Parker (argued), Snow, Christensen & Martineau, Salt Lake City, Utah, Attorneys for Defendants and Appellants.

David L. Wilkinson, State Attorney General, Stephen J. Sorenson, Chief, Litigation Division, Richard M. Hagstrom (argued), David J. Schwendiman (argued), Robert N. Parrish, Stanley H. Olsen, Assistant Attorneys General, Attorneys for Plaintiff and Respondent.

Judges: Judges Bench, Davidson and Orme. I concur: Richard C. Davidson, Judge. Orme Judge: dissenting in part.

Opinion by: BENCH

Opinion

[*807] Defendants appeal their convictions on several counts of bribery, antitrust, and racketeering. This appeal was initially filed with the Utah Supreme Court and was transferred to this Court pursuant to R. Utah S. Ct. 4A. We affirm the convictions.

Facts

Between 1976 and early 1984, L. Brent Fletcher was employed as security officer for Utah Power and Light Company (UP & L). As security officer, Fletcher's duties were to determine the security needs of the company, make recommendations to management, and act as coordinator between management and the security guard services. In 1978, UP & L decided to hire the services of a security guard company on a full-time basis. On Fletcher's recommendation, UP & L executed a contract with defendant [2] Michael Thompson's company, Mike Thompson Associates (MTA), in February 1978. This contract was not competitively bid.

In 1979, Jack Wall, Fletcher's brother-in-law, was hired by MTA. At Fletcher's request, Wall opened a bank account in the name of Security Management Consultant Services. Between January and June 1979, Wall deposited approximately $ 23,000 in checks from MTA into this account. In June 1979, Wall turned over the account and its records to Fletcher at his request. UP & L and MTA renewed their contract in March 1981.

Thompson left MTA in 1982 and formed Information Associates, a security consulting firm, with defendant Bruce Conklin, a former employee of MTA. Defendant Michael Ziemski, also a former employee, took control of MTA and signed a new contract with UP & L in October 1982. Ziemski later changed the name of MTA to Vanguard International Associates, Inc. In 1983, Ziemski transferred control of Vanguard to Conklin. An assignment of the UP & L contract was executed in March 1984.

During the spring of 1983, Information Associates deposited approximately $ 25,000, in seven separate payments, into the account of Augie Investments, also owned by Fletcher. Meanwhile, Vanguard [3] deposited about $ 163,000 into the account of Information Associates.

The State of Utah, alleging these multiple payments to Fletcher were bribes as part of a scheme to eliminate competition for the UP & L security contract, charged Thompson with seven counts of commercial bribery, each a class B misdemeanor in violation of Utah Code Ann. § 76-6-508(b) (1978), one count of antitrust group boycott, a second degree felony in violation of Utah Code Ann. §§ 76-10-914 and -920 (1979), and two counts of racketeering, second degree felonies in violation of Utah Code Ann. § 76-10-1603 (1981). Ziemski and Conklin were each charged with seven counts of bribery, one count of antitrust group boycott, and one count of racketeering. Fletcher, also a defendant, was charged with counts similar to Thompson. Fletcher was tried separately and convicted prior to defendants' trial. His appeal is also decided this date. See State v. Fletcher, 751 P.2d 822 (Utah App. 1988).

Pretrial motions to dismiss all counts were denied. Defendants' motion to suppress evidence obtained pursuant to a secret investigation in Emery County was also denied. The case was tried to a jury on July 18 through August [4] 1, 1985, the Honorable Judith M. Billings presiding. The jury found each defendant guilty of five counts of bribery and of all racketeering and antitrust counts. Motions for mistrial were denied. Thompson was sentenced to serve not less than one nor more than fifteen years in the Utah State Prison. Conklin and Ziemski were each sentenced to serve one year in the Salt Lake County Jail on work release. Each defendant was fined $ 25,000 for the antitrust violations. Based on the racketeering convictions, the court also ordered forfeiture of all business interests of defendants in the guard companies involved in the case. The sentences were all stayed pending appeal.

[*808] On appeal, defendants challenge the jurisdiction of the trial court and the court's denial of their motion to suppress certain evidence. Defendants also challenge specific jury instructions, each of their convictions, and the trial court's denial of their motion for a mistrial.

Jurisdiction and Probable Cause for Arrest

Defendants first argue the affidavit upon which their arrest warrants were based failed to establish probable cause. The arrest warrants were therefore allegedly invalid, and the trial court was deprived [5] of jurisdiction over defendants. The Utah Supreme Court has "reject[ed] the position that the probable cause requirement for arrest warrants is jurisdictional." State v. Schreuder, 712 P.2d 264, 272 (Utah 1985). In Schreuder, the defendant challenged her conviction on the ground that the statement presented in support of the arrest warrant failed to establish the requisite probable cause. The Court, assuming lack of probable cause for the purposes of discussion, adopted the majority rule that HN1[] an "illegal arrest or detention does not void a subsequent conviction." Id. at 271 (quoting Gerstein v. Pugh, 420 U.S. 103, 119, 43 L. Ed. 2d 54, 95 S. Ct. 854 (1975)). The Court explained:

> [The] probable cause requirement for an arrest warrant becomes moot by the time a defendant has been convicted because the much more stringent requirements of proof at trial have been employed to protect the defendant.

712 P.2d at 272. In light of Schreuder, we hold defendants' challenge to the trial court's jurisdiction is moot.

Admissibility of Evidence

Defendants next argue the trial court erred in denying their motion to suppress certain evidence. The instant case began with a secret investigation conducted [6] in Emery County under the authority of Judge Boyd Bunnell, Seventh District Court, and pursuant to Utah Code Annotated §§ 77-22-1 through -3 (1982), commonly referred to as the Subpoena Powers Act or the Utah Mini-Grand Jury Act. During the investigation, the prosecution used subpoenas duces tecum to accumulate most of the evidence used at trial, including tax and bank records from defendants' accountants and banks. Upon a motion by defendants challenging the constitutionality of the Act, Judge Bunnell concluded the Act had been abused and was subject to continual abuse due to its broad terms and provisions. Judge Bunnell declared the Act unconstitutional, dismissed the investigation, and quashed all outstanding subpoenas. The prosecution's appeal of that ruling is now pending before the Utah Supreme Court. In the Matter of a Criminal Investigation, No. 20268 (Utah filed Oct. 25, 1984).

Based on Judge Bunnell's ruling, defendants filed a motion to suppress all evidence seized pursuant to the investigation. After a hearing on December 27, 1984, Judge Billings held Judge Bunnell's ruling to be the law of the case. However, in a memorandum decision dated January 10, 1985, Judge [7] Billings denied defendants' motion to suppress. The evidence was subsequently admitted to prove the substance of the crimes charged.

The basis for the trial court's denial of defendants' motion to suppress was as follows:

> The appropriate standard for suppression of the evidence acquired under the "Subpoena Powers Act" in this case requires that the defendants show, as the State contends, a "substantial violation" of defendants' constitutional rights and that the violation was "not committed in good faith," as required by Rule 12(g), Utah Rules of Criminal Procedure (Section 77-35-12(g)). Defendants have neither acknowledged this Rule, nor attempted to meet the required showing for suppression of evidence.

On appeal, defendants claim the evidence in the instant case was obtained without legal process and should therefore be suppressed. Defendants contend the government's actions were in violation of their individual rights to and expectations of privacy.

HN2[] The enforcement of a subpoena duces tecum is subject to fourth amendment [*809] restrictions against unreasonable searches and seizures, although not to the extent of a search warrant. Oklahoma Press Pub. Co. v. Walling, 327 U.S. 186, 90 L. Ed. 614, 66 S. Ct. 494 [8] (1946). Defendants' claims to an expectation of privacy are rights protected under the fourth amendment. Rakas v. Illinois, 439 U.S. 128, 58 L. Ed. 2d 387, 99 S. Ct. 421 (1978). Furthermore, HN3[] "evidence is suppressed or excluded only if the same was obtained by a violation of the Fourth Amendment, designed to protect a person's right to privacy and property." State v. Montayne, 18 Utah 2d 38, 41, 414 P.2d 958, 960 (1966).

In United States v. Leon, 468 U.S. 897, 82 L. Ed. 2d 677, 104 S. Ct. 3405 (1984), the United States Supreme Court created the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule: HN4[] where an officer acts in objectively reasonable reliance on a subsequently invalidated warrant, the exclusionary rule does not apply. The Utah state legislature codified the Leon good faith exception in Utah Code Ann. § 77-35-12(g) (1982). As previously discussed, the trial court denied defendants' motion to suppress for failure to meet the requirements of section 77-35-12(g).

However, the Utah Supreme Court recently invalidated section 77-35-12(g). In State v. Mendoza, 748 P.2d 181 (Utah 1987), the Court rejected the prosecution's argument that the good faith exception should apply to an invalid, warrantless stop and search of a vehicle. The [9] Court explained that because "no outside authority on which the officers could reasonably rely expressly authorized the search . . . ., the policy foundations of the Leon exception do not appear in searches of [this kind]." Id. at 185. Furthermore, section 77-35-12(g) went beyond the scope of the good faith exception in requiring defendants to prove a substantial violation of their fourth amendment rights. Since section 77-35-12(g) purported to create a good faith exception to an investigatory stop and search and because it improperly shifted the burden of proof, the Court found the statute violated the fourth amendment of the United States Constitution.

Although section 77-35-12(g) is now invalid, the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule under Leon is still valid.

Defendants argue the good faith exception applicable to search warrants does not apply to the execution of subpoenas issued pursuant to a statute subsequently declared unconstitutional. This position is contrary to Illinois v. Krull, 480 U.S. 340, 107 S. Ct. 1160, 94 L. Ed. 2d 364 (1987). In Krull, the Court granted certiorari to determine whether the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule should be recognized when officers [10] act in objectively reasonable reliance upon a statute authorizing warrantless administrative searches where the statute is ultimately found to be unconstitutional. An Illinois statute permitted government officers to conduct warrantless searches of the records of dealers in automobiles and automobile parts. Such a search showed Krull to be in possession of stolen automobiles. Subsequent to the search, a federal court in an unrelated matter held the Illinois law to be unconstitutionally broad. Upon motion by defendant, the trial court suppressed the evidence based on the federal court ruling. The Illinois Supreme Court affirmed, rejecting the state's good faith exception argument.

The United States Supreme Court reversed. The Court explained the good faith exception was established because the deterrent effect and remedial purpose of the exclusionary rule are not served where an officer acts in objectively reasonable reliance on a search warrant issued by a neutral magistrate. Likewise, the Court held, "if [a] statute is subsequently declared unconstitutional, excluding evidence obtained pursuant to it prior to such a judicial declaration will not deter future Fourth Amendment violations [11] by an officer who has simply fulfilled his responsibility to enforce the statute as written." Id. at 1167. In Mendoza, the Utah Supreme Court noted, "Krull does not affect our characterization of Leon. In both cases, the officers conducting the searches did so in objectively reasonable reliance on prior, external authorization." 748 P.2d at 185 n.3. Likewise, in the instant case, the subpoenas duces tecum were executed in [*810] objectively reasonable reliance on prior, external authorization.

This Court HN5[] may affirm a trial court's decision to admit evidence on any proper ground, even though the trial court assigned another reason for its ruling. State v. Barber, 747 P.2d 436 (Utah App. 1987). Regardless of the decision of the Utah Supreme Court on the constitutionality of the Utah Mini-Grand Jury Act, we hold the evidence obtained pursuant to the subpoenas duces tecum was admissible under the principle set forth in Krull. The trial court's denial of defendants' motion to suppress is affirmed.

Antitrust and "Group Boycott"

Defendants contend they were improperly charged with and convicted of conduct in violation of the Utah Antitrust Act, Utah Code Ann. §§ 76-10-911 [12] through -926 (1979). This is the first criminal prosecution under the Utah Antitrust Act and is thus a case of first impression. The general provisions of the Utah Antitrust Act are similar in many respects to their federal counterparts in the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 through 7 (1987). HN6[] Section 76-10-926 provides, "The legislature intends that the courts, in construing this act, will be guided by interpretations given by the federal courts to comparable federal antitrust statutes and by other state courts to comparable state antitrust statutes."

Section 76-10-914(1) of the Utah Antitrust Act, like section 1 of the Sherman Act, states, HN7[] "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce is declared to be illegal." Section 76-10-920 further provides:

> HN8[] Any person who violates section 76-10-914 by price fixing, bid rigging, agreeing among competitors to divide customers or territories, or by engaging in a group boycott with specific intent of eliminating competition shall be punished, if an individual, by a fine not to exceed $ 50,000 or by imprisonment for an indeterminate time not to exceed one year, or both or, if by a [13] person other than an individual, a fine not to exceed $ 100,000.

Defendants point out there are three elements to the offense charged in the instant case: (A) a contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade in violation of section 76-10-914; (B) in the form of a group boycott; and (C) with specific intent to eliminate competition.

(A)

Defendants argue federal courts uniformly have refused to find commercial bribery to be a contract, combination, or conspiracy in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act. Commercial bribery is defined in Utah Code Ann. § 76-6-508(b) (1978) as follows:

> A person . . . . without the consent of the employer or principal, contrary to the interests of the employer or principal . . . . confers, offers, or agrees to confer upon the employee, agent, or fiduciary of an employer or principal any benefit with the purpose of influencing the conduct of the employee, agent, or fiduciary in relating to his employer's or principal's affairs[.]

In United States v. Boston and Maine Railroad, 380 U.S. 157, 162, 13 L. Ed. 2d 728, 85 S. Ct. 868 (1965), the United States Supreme Court held, "It is doubtful that this indictment . . . . alleges anything more in substance than a bribe. Bribery [14] might well be in the family of offenses covered under a conflict of interest statute. But it is more remote from an antitrust frame of reference." In Calnetics Corp. v. Volkswagen of America, Inc., 532 F.2d 674, 687 (9th Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 940, 50 L. Ed. 2d 309, 97 S. Ct. 355 (1976), the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals held, "Commercial bribery, standing alone, does not constitute a violation of the Sherman Act." And in Municipality of Anchorage v. Hitachi Cable, Ltd., 547 F. Supp. 633, 645 (D. Alaska 1982), the court held, "Commercial bribery does not in itself constitute a violation of the Sherman Act."

HN9[] While it is true that commercial bribery alone is not conduct in violation of federal antitrust law, "when the bribery is coupled with other acts tending to restrain trade, a claim under the Sherman Act may [*811] be established." Hitachi, 547 F. Supp. at 645; see also Associated Radio Serv. Co. v. Page Airways, Inc., 624 F.2d 1342 (5th Cir. 1980). In the cases cited by defendants, there was no evidence of any affirmative acts, coupled with the bribery, to restrain trade. In the instant case, however, the prosecution presented substantial evidence of other affirmative acts in restraint [15] of trade, e.g., Fletcher's refusal to accept proposals from other security guard companies.

The dissent suggests that, under the majority opinion's view, every commercial bribery in which the payee performs his end of the bargain would be an antitrust violation. Such is not the case. Commercial bribes paid to an employee, agent, or fiduciary of UP & L could be for other purposes, including rate adjustments, waiver of service fees, and waiver of safety requirements. Such purposes are clearly not in restraint of trade or anticompetitive. Furthermore, had defendants paid Fletcher the bribes in order to influence him to deal exclusively with them only after he had received other bids, their actions arguably would not have been a conspiracy entered into primarily to eliminate competition or restrain trade. However, in the instant case, the primary purpose of the bribes was to restrain trade by eliminating all competition for the UP & L security contract. The first element of the offense was therefore established.

(B)

Defendants next argue their alleged agreement with Fletcher did not constitute a group boycott, and, therefore, the prosecution failed to establish the second element of the offense. [16] Federal courts have long held that HN10[] whether a particular action or agreement violates the Sherman Act depends on whether it is an unreasonable restraint on trade. Board of Trade of City of Chicago v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 62 L. Ed. 683, 38 S. Ct. 242 (1918). In Chicago Board of Trade, the United States Supreme Court established the "rule of reason" standard to determine whether a restraint was unreasonable. "

> To determine that question the court must ordinarily consider the facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied; its condition before and after the restraint was imposed; the nature of the restraint, and its effect, actual or probable. The history of the restraint, the evil believed to exist, the reason for adopting the particular remedy, the purpose or end sought to be attained, are all relevant facts. This is not because a good intention will save an otherwise objectionable regulation, or the reverse; but because knowledge of intent may help the court to interpret facts and to predict consequences.

Id. at 238. In other words, HN11[] "the factfinder [must] decide whether under all the circumstances of the case the restrictive practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition." [17] Arizona v. Maricopa County Med. Soc., 457 U.S. 332, 343, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48, 102 S. Ct. 2466 (1982).

While federal courts have utilized the rule of reason in determining the legality of most restraints alleged to be in violation of the Sherman Act, they have also, by experience, been able to categorize certain business practices or relationships as per se unreasonable. In Northern Pacific Railway Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 (1958), the United States Supreme Court held, HN12[] "There are certain agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use." These per se practices include price fixing, division of markets, group boycotts, and tying arrangements. Id. Recognition of the per se rule obviates the costly and complex litigation a complete rule of reason inquiry entails. Id.; see also Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery and Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202, 105 S. Ct. 2613 (1985).

[*812] Although there is a "marked lack of uniformity" [1] among the federal courts in defining the [18] term group boycott, HN13[] a classic per se group boycott exists where two or more competitors on the same level of the market structure agree to eliminate a target horizontal competitor by combining to deny the target of elements needed in order to compete. Federal Maritime Comm'n v. Aktiebolaget Svenska Amerika Linien, 390 U.S. 238, 250, 19 L. Ed. 2d 1071, 88 S. Ct. 1005 (1968); United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127, 140, 16 L. Ed. 2d 415, 86 S. Ct. 1321 (1966); Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 212, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741, 79 S. Ct. 705 (1959). See also L. Sullivan, Handbook of the Law of Antitrust 230 (1977). The restraining agreement need not "entirely exclude its victims from the market," but only "[prevent them] from making free choices between market alternatives . . . ." Associated Gen. Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 528, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983). It is the horizontal effect of a group boycott, a "naked [restraint] of trade with no purpose except stifling of competition," which typically warrants application of per se illegality. White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, 263, 9 L. Ed. 2d 738, 83 S. Ct. 696 (1963).

HN14[] Vertical nonprice [19] restraints, i.e., combinations of persons at different levels of the market structure, are generally not treated under the per se doctrine but are examined under the rule of reason standard. Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 (1977). As the United States Supreme Court has explained:

> We do not know enough of the economic and business stuff out of which these arrangements emerge to be certain. They may be too dangerous to sanction or they may be allowable protections against aggressive competitors or the only practicable means a small company has for breaking into or staying in business and within the "rule of reason." We need to know more than we do about the actual impact of these arrangements on competition to decide whether they have such a "pernicious effect on competition and lack . . . . any redeeming virtue."

White Motor Co., 372 U.S. at 263 (quoting Northern Pacific, 356 U.S. at 5) (citations omitted). In Continental T.V., the Court further explains that while "vertical restrictions reduce intrabrand competition by limiting the number of sellers of a particular product competing for the business of a given group of buyers . . . ., [they [20] also] promote interbrand competition by allowing the manufacturer to achieve certain efficiencies in the distribution of his products." 433 U.S. at 54.

Under the Sherman Act, both classic group boycotts and vertical restraints determined unreasonable are subject to criminal penalties. Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides:

> Every person who shall make any contract or engage in any combination or conspiracy hereby declared to be illegal shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding one million dollars if a corporation, or, if any other person, one hundred thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding three years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

HN15[] Section 76-10-920 of the Utah Antitrust Act, however, criminalizes only the four types of conduct that have been clearly labeled as per se violations of the Sherman Act. [2] The rule of reason analysis has no part in the criminal provisions of the Utah Antitrust Act. Therefore, unless defendants' conduct was in the form of a [*813] group boycott, it was not criminal under Utah law.

---

[1] St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Barry, 438 U.S. 531, 543, 57 L. Ed. 2d 932, 98 S. Ct. 2923 (1978).

[2] In contrast to the Sherman Act, the Utah Antitrust Act "attempts to provide both the prosecutor and the community at large with a clear definition of what conduct is criminally proscribed." J. Dibble & J. Jardine, The Utah Antitrust Act of 1979: Getting Into The State Antitrust Business, 1980 Utah L. Rev. 73, 83.

[21] The instant case is not a classic group boycott. The prosecution claims this is an arrangement between a group of horizontal competitors, i.e., the three defendants. At no time, however, did any two of defendants co-exist as competitors. Rather, they were successive owners of the same security guard company, albeit the company had different names under different owners. Therefore, the alleged agreement between defendants and Fletcher did not constitute a classic group boycott under the federal definition.

However, the group boycott specified in section 76-10-920 is not the classic group boycott recognized by federal courts. Under the classic (per se) group boycott definition, proof of intent and/or effect is not required, but it is conclusively presumed the boycott is anticompetitive and in violation of antitrust laws. Northern Pacific, 356 U.S. at 5. HN16[] Under section 76-10-920, the prosecution is required to prove a defendant engaged in a group boycott "with [the] specific intent of eliminating competition." When interpreting a statute, we assume the legislature used each term advisedly and in its proper sense. Horne v. Horne, 737 P.2d 244, 247 (Utah App. 1987); State v. [22] 735 P.2d 34, 37 (Utah 1987). We construe the statute "on the assumption . . . . that the intent of the Legislature is revealed in the use of the term in the context and structure in which it is placed." Ward v. Richfield City, 716 P.2d 265, 266 (Utah 1984). By requiring a separate element of "specific intent of eliminating competition," the legislature clearly did not adopt the classic group boycott definition formulated by the federal courts.

The term group boycott as used by the Utah state legislature more closely resembles the general definition of boycott: "a method of pressuring a party with whom one has a dispute by withholding, or enlisting others to withhold, patronage or services from the target." St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Barry, 438 U.S. 531, 541, 57 L. Ed. 2d 932, 98 S. Ct. 2923 (1978). In the instant case, defendants, through bribes, enlisted Fletcher to refuse any bids from their competitors, the targets of the boycott. A group boycott under the Utah Antitrust Act requires at least two conspirators, but neither the number of boycotters nor their market relationship with the target is determinative of criminal liability. Rather, the intent of the contract, combination, or conspiracy [23] is the deciding element.

The dissent proposes an alternative interpretation of section 76-10-920, suggesting the specific anticompetitive intent element is intended to narrow the scope of the federal definition of a classic group boycott. The dissent also suggests the majority opinion fails to consider the anticompetitive effect of defendants' actions in the relevant marketplace. In essence, the dissent suggests we adopt the classic per se definition of group boycott but that we use the rule of reason in evaluating the elements of proof. Federal courts have consistently held that classic group boycotts include, by definition, the elements of anticompetitive intent and effect in the relevant marketplace. See National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n v. Board of Regents of Univ. of Oklahoma, 468 U.S. 85, 103, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70, 104 S. Ct. 2948 (1984) ("Per se rules are invoked when surrounding circumstances make the likelihood of anticompetitive conduct so great as to render unjustified further examination of the challenged conduct."). It makes no sense to adopt the classic per se definition of group boycott and then to require proof of anticompetitive intent and market effect. We therefore cannot accept the dissent's [24] interpretation of section 76-10-920.

Our interpretation of the Utah Antitrust Act is in line with a current trend in federal case law to focus not on the form of the conspiracy, but on the intent of the conspirators. In Continental T.V., the United States Supreme Court, after establishing the rule of reason analysis as the general standard for vertical restraints, stated "we do not foreclose the possibility that particular applications of vertical restrictions might justify per se prohibition." [*814] 433 U.S. at 58. Increasingly, federal courts are recognizing per se group boycotts between a single horizontal competitor and a vertically related company. See Cascade Cabinet Co. v. Western Cabinet and Millwork, 710 F.2d 1366 (9th Cir. 1983); Com-Tel, Inc. v. DuKane Corp., 669 F.2d 404 (6th Cir. 1982); Corey v. Look, 641 F.2d 32 (1st Cir. 1981). See also Sullivan, Antitrust, at 231 n.1; Decker, The Numerosity Requirement For Group Boycotts: Toward a Horizontal Benefit Analysis, 18 U.S.F.L. Rev. 577 (1984); Bauer, Per Se Illegality of Concerted Refusals to Deal: A Rule Ripe for Reexamination, 79 Colum. L. Rev. 689 (1979). These cases and commentators urge [25] that when applying the per se rule to a group boycott, the key inquiries should not be the number or nature of the conspirators, but their intent and/or the effect of the restraint on competition. No logic supports ignoring defendants' anticompetitive conduct in the instant case solely because they failed to recruit a second horizontal competitor into their conspiracy. See Decker, The Numerosity Requirement, 18 U.S.F.L. Rev. at 587 ("If a single firm has the necessary influence to effectuate an exclusionary boycott with a supplier or customer, such conduct should not escape the per se rule simply because that firm did not combine with others at its own market level to exert its influence."). Although the coercive pressure was applied vertically, the stifling of competition was horizontal. Com-Tel, Inc., 669 F.2d at 409. A conspiracy in the form of a group boycott was therefore established.

(C)

Under our interpretation of sections 76-10-914 and -920, therefore, the group boycott involving defendants and Fletcher would be criminal upon a proper showing of a specific intent to eliminate competition. HN17[] When the specific intent of a defendant is an element of the criminal offense [26] charged, the intent may be inferred from the defendant's conduct and surrounding circumstances. State v. Fowler, 745 P.2d 472, 475 (Utah App. 1987); State v. Kennedy, 616 P.2d 594, 598 (Utah 1980). In the instant case, not one of the contracts between UP & L and defendants was competitively bid. Representatives of other large companies testified the usual course of action when selecting a security guard company is open bidding. Several representatives of other security guard companies testified their attempts to submit bid proposals to Fletcher were either refused or ignored. Sufficient evidence was presented to the jury to infer a specific intent of eliminating competition on the part of defendants. The third element of the offense was clearly established.

We hold defendants were properly charged with engaging in a criminal group boycott under sections 76-10-914 and -920. Under our interpretation of the Utah Antitrust Act, an individual is clearly on notice that if he (or she) engages in a contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade, with the specific intent of eliminating competition, regardless of who his co-conspirators are, he will be criminally liable.

[27] Because there is some evidence, including reasonable inferences, to support every element of the jury's verdict, we will not disturb it on appeal. State v. Garcia, 744 P.2d 1029 (Utah App. 1987). Defendants' convictions on the antitrust counts are affirmed.

Racketeering and "Pattern" of Activity

Defendants argue they were improperly charged with and convicted of conduct in violation of the Utah Racketeering Influences and Criminal Enterprise Act, Utah Code Ann. §§ 76-10-1601 through -1608 (1981) (the RICE Act). When this case was tried, section 76-10-1603(1) provided:

> HN18[] It shall be unlawful for any person who has received any proceeds derived, whether directly or indirectly, from a pattern of racketeering activity in which such person has participated, as a principal, to use or invest, directly or indirectly, any part of such proceeds, or the proceeds derived from the investment or use thereof, in the acquisition of any interest in, or the establishment or operation of, any enterprise.

[*815] A "pattern of racketeering activity" was defined in section 76-10-1602(4) as:

> HN19[] engaging in at least two episodes of racketeering conduct which have the same or similar objectives, results, [28] participants, victims, or methods of commission, or are otherwise interrelated by distinguishing characteristics and are not isolated events, provided at least one of such episodes occurred after the effective date of this part and the last of which occurred within five years after the commission of a prior episode of racketeering conduct. [3]

Violation of the RICE Act is a second degree felony punishable by up to 15 years imprisonment, a fine of $ 10,000, and forfeiture of all property associated with the racketeering enterprise.

---

[3] In 1987, the state legislature substantially revised the RICE Act and renamed it the "Pattern of Unlawful Activity Act." After the 1987 revision, "at least three episodes of unlawful activity" are now required.

Defendants first contend the RICE Act, patterned after the federal Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961 through 1968 (1984) (the RICO Act), was enacted to prevent the infiltration of organized crime into Utah. Therefore, defendants argue, the RICE Act should extend only to cases involving offenses committed by organized crime.

Although the legislative histories of both the RICE and RICO Acts suggest they were [29] intended to apply to persons engaged in acts traditionally associated with organized crime, a nexus to organized crime was not included as an element of the offense. The United States Supreme Court concluded that the RICO Act applies to "any person" who engages in conduct the Act forbids. Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., Inc., 473 U.S. 479, 105 S. Ct. 3275, 3285, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346 (1985). Similarly, we hold HN20[] Utah's RICE Act is not limited in application to persons affiliated with organized crime.

Defendants contend that not limiting application of the RICE Act to serious and aggravated offenses by organized crime renders the Act unconstitutionally vague. Vagueness is a question of procedural due process, namely "whether the statute adequately notices the proscribed conduct." State v. Frampton, 737 P.2d 183, 192 (Utah 1987). Defendants claim without requiring that the conduct proscribed demonstrate characteristics traditionally associated with organized crime, the RICE Act does not specifically define for persons of ordinary intelligence the outer perimeter of acceptable conduct. State v. Owens, 638 P.2d 1182, 1183 (Utah 1981). The RICE Act proscribes the use of proceeds derived from a pattern [30] of racketeering activity in an enterprise. Under the statute, "enterprise," "racketeering activity," and "pattern of racketeering activity" are all clearly defined. "Episode" is defined in Utah Code Ann. § 76-1-401 (1978). We hold that HN21[] the RICE Act is "sufficiently explicit to inform the ordinary reader what conduct is prohibited," and is therefore not unconstitutionally vague. State v. Theobald, 645 P.2d 50, 51 (Utah 1982).

Under section 76-10-1602(1)(h), bribery was included as an act of racketeering, sometimes referred to as a predicate act. [4] Defendants argue that using commercial bribery, a class B misdemeanor punishable by up to six months in jail and a fine of up to $ 299, to satisfy the RICE Act requirement of predicate offenses violates the constitutional restraint against disproportionate punishment. In reviewing a claim of disproportionate punishment, the question is "whether the sentence imposed in proportion to the offense committed is such as to shock the moral sense of all reasonable men as to what is right and proper under the circumstances." State v. Hanson, 627 P.2d 53, 56 (Utah 1981) (quoting State v. Nance, 20 Utah 2d 372, 438 P.2d 542, 544 (1968)). [31]

Defendants' argument ignores the additional elements required under the RICE Act, i.e., a pattern of racketeering activity, existence of an enterprise, and use [*816] of proceeds derived from the racketeering activity to establish, acquire, or operate the enterprise. Defendants claim these elements are illusory. We disagree. It is not the commercial briberies that are being punished in the present case, but the broader conduct which is forbidden by the RICE Act. Cf. United States v. Field, 432 F. Supp. 55 (S.D.N.Y. 1977), aff'd 578 F.2d. 1371 (2nd Cir. 1978), cert. dismissed, 439 U.S. 801, 99 S. Ct. 43, 58 L. Ed. 2d 94 (1978) (Congress entitled to make pattern of racketeering an independent criminal offense punishable more severely than simply twice the penalty for each constituent offense). We do not find defendants' sentences for the RICE violations unconstitutionally "shocking."

Defendants also argue the use of misdemeanors as predicate acts under the RICE Act is inconsistent with Utah's habitual criminal statute, Utah Code Ann. § 76-8-1001 [32] (1978), and the enhancement provision of the Utah Controlled Substances Act, Utah Code Ann. § 58-37-8(1)(b)(iii) (1987). Under section 76-8-1001, upon proof that a person has been twice convicted, sentenced, and committed for a felony, one of which is at least of the second degree, the person may be sentenced as a habitual criminal for a period of five years to life. Under section 58-37-8(1)(b)(iii), upon a second conviction for production or distribution of a controlled substance, a class A misdemeanor, a person is guilty of a third degree felony.

---

[4] After the 1987 revision, section 76-10-1602 now lists the several statutory types of bribery individually, including commercial bribery under section 76-6-508.

The RICE Act is not inconsistent with these criminal provisions. The RICE Act does not simply punish multiple violations of statutes prohibiting the acts enumerated in section 76-10-1602(1). Instead, the RICE Act punishes participation in a pattern of racketeering activity bearing the required relationship to an enterprise. See subsections 76-10-1603(1) through (4).

Finally, defendants argue the evidence at trial failed to establish a pattern of racketeering activity. "Pattern of racketeering activity" was defined in section 76-10-1602(4) as "at least two episodes of racketeering conduct which have the same or similar objectives, results, [33] participants, victims, or methods of commission, or are otherwise interrelated by distinguishing characteristics and are not isolated events . . . ." Defendants claim the several counts of bribery of which they were convicted were, as a matter of law, part of only a single episode of racketeering conduct and thus cannot establish a pattern. In support of their argument, defendants cite several federal cases involving civil claims under the RICO Act. The federal definition of a pattern of racketeering activity differs significantly from the definition of the same term in section 76-10-1602(4). [5] Federal cases which elaborate on the federal definition of "pattern of racketeering activity" are, however, helpful in our analysis.

[34] Federal case law after Sedima has attempted judicially to refine the definition of "pattern of racketeering activity" of the RICO Act. Those cases have emphasized the concepts of "continuity plus relatedness" discussed in Sedima. Against this backdrop, some federal courts have fashioned requirements that there be "multiple [*817] schemes" or "multiple criminal episodes" rather than several acts to accomplish a single criminal objective in order to establish a pattern of racketeering activity.

The case of Torwest DBC, Inc. v. Dick, 628 F. Supp. 163 (D. Colo. 1986), cited by defendants, alleged multiple acts of mail/wire fraud in connection with a single scheme to defraud. The district court held that no pattern existed where the defendants' conduct had a single purpose, a single result, one set of participants, a single victim, and one method of commission. The district court thus concluded there was "no continuity and, therefore, no patter of racketeering activity." Id. at 166. The Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed, but differentiated the case from one where "the RICO claim is based on one scheme involving one victim, but the plan contemplates open-ended fraudulent activity [35] and does not have a single goal that, when achieved, will bring the activity to an end." Torwest DBC, Inc. v. Dick, 810 F.2d 925, 929 (10th Cir. 1987). Other federal courts have noted that an ongoing scheme involving the same perpetrators, victims, and method of commission may in itself demonstrate a sufficient pattern of racketeering activity. See Thompson v. Wyoming Alaska, Inc., 652 F. Supp. 1222, 1227-28 (D. Utah 1987); Temporaries, Inc. v. Maryland National Bank, 638 F. Supp. 118, 123 (D. Md. 1986) ("A more flexible and accurate approach to identifying patterns may be to require either 1) more than one scheme or 2) an open-ended continuous scheme which contains a multiplicity of predicate acts.").

We conclude HN22[] the RICE Act's definition of pattern requires separate but related criminal episodes as the basis for a pattern. We also conclude that the facts of the case before us satisfy the requirement of separate but related criminal episodes suggested by the federal cases and implicit in the definition of pattern of racketeering activity contained in section 76-10-1602(4). Defendants were each charged with seven different bribes paid in

---

[5] 18 U.S.C. § 1961(5) defines "pattern of racketeering activity" as "at least two acts of racketeering activity . . . ." This definition has been the subject of considerable judicial attention following the landmark United States Supreme Court decision in Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., Inc., 473 U.S. 479, 105 S. Ct. 3275, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346 (1985). In its now famous footnote 14, the Court noted the lack of specificity in the federal definition of pattern of racketeering activity. After a brief discussion of suggestions in the legislative history that "pattern" connotes "continuity plus relationship" rather than merely an enumeration of acts, the Court observed:

> Significantly, in defining "pattern" in a later provision of the same bill, Congress was more enlightening: "criminal conduct forms a pattern if it embraces criminal acts that have the same or similar purposes, results, participants, victims, or methods of commission, or otherwise are interrelated by distinguishing characteristics and are not isolated events." 18 U.S.C. § 3575(e). This language may be useful in interpreting other sections of the Act.

105 S. Ct. at 3285. The pattern definition noted by the Supreme Court is substantially identical to the definition contained in the RICE Act. Thus, the pattern analysis under the RICE Act does not operate from the same sparse language of the RICO Act.

approximately two week intervals [36] between February and May 1983. An episode is defined in section 76-1-401 as "all conduct which is closely related in time and is incident to an attempt or an accomplishment of a single criminal objective." The trial court instructed the jury as follows:

> If you should find one or more of the defendants guilty of bribery, you must then determine whether the seven identified payments constitute seven separate bribes, or a series of payments on a single bribe. If you find beyond a reasonable doubt that each of the payments was made with a distinct and separate purpose, then there are separate bribes. On the other hand, if the evidence does not convince you beyond a reasonable doubt that the payments were made with different purposes, then such payments constitute one bribe.

Defendants argue the seven payments were in furtherance of a single criminal objective and therefore constituted a single episode. HN23[] Determining the existence of a single offense or multiple offenses is a question of intent to be determined by the particular facts and circumstances of each case. State v. Kimbel, 620 P.2d 515, 518 (Utah 1980). Although the overall scheme was to maintain defendants' exclusive contract [37] with UP & L, there was evidence to support the jury's finding a separate purpose for each bribe, i.e., Fletcher's hiring of defendants' company before execution of a contract, his recommendations to UP & L management, and his refusal to consider other bids. The fact the jury convicted defendants on only five of the seven bribery counts indicates they considered the facts and circumstances of each payment individually and made a determination as to each. As there is evidence to support the jury's findings, we will not disturb them on appeal. Garcia, 744 P.2d at 1030.

Defendants' convictions of violations of the RICE Act are affirmed.

Miscellaneous Issues

Defendants also argue their bribery convictions should be reversed because the trial court erred in not instructing the jury that an illegal bribe must be paid with criminal intent. The trial court instructed the jury as follows:

> [*818] Before you can convict any defendant for bribery you must find beyond a reasonable doubt each and every one of the following elements:
> (1) That the defendant or defendants in Salt Lake County, State of Utah;
> (2) On or about the date or dates alleged in the Information;
>
> (3) That the defendant or defendants [38] conferred, offered or agreed to confer upon L. Brent Fletcher a benefit;
> (4) That this benefit was conferred or offered with the purpose of influencing the conduct of Mr. Fletcher in relating to the affairs of Utah Power and Light contrary to the interests of Utah Power and Light and without its consent;
> (5) That the defendant or defendants offered or conferred or agreed to confer the benefits, if any, knowingly, intentionally or willfully as those terms are defined in these instructions.

We believe the instruction sufficiently advised the jury on the law. Both the statute and the instruction implicitly require a criminal intent by requiring a showing of conduct contrary to the interests of and without the consent of the employer or principal. See State v. O'Neill, 103 Wash.2d 853, 700 P.2d 711 (1985). Defendants' convictions of bribery are affirmed.

Defendants next argue the trial court made prejudicial errors in the admission of certain evidence. Even assuming the trial court did err, defendants have failed to show the challenged evidence had a substantial influence in bringing about the verdict. Therefore, the errors, if any, were not prejudicial. Utah R. Evid. 103; State [39] 734 P.2d 440, 448 (Utah 1986).

Finally, defendants argue the trial court erred in not granting a mistrial after two witnesses mentioned the Fletcher trial and one juror told the court she had read of Fletcher's conviction in the newspaper during the trial. HN24[] With regard to motions for mistrial, the Utah Supreme Court has stated:

> The critical inquiry should be whether there is a reasonable likelihood that the incident so prejudiced the jury that in its absence there might have been a different result. Due to his advantaged position and consistent with his responsibilities as the authority in charge of the trial, the inquiry is necessarily addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court. He should view such an episode in the light of the total proceeding, and if he thinks that there has been such prejudice that there is a reasonable probability that the defendant cannot have a fair and impartial determination of his guilt or innocence, he should of course grant a mistrial. But inasmuch as this is his primary responsibility, when he has given due consideration and ruled upon the matter, this court on review should not upset his ruling unless it clearly appears that [40] he has abused his discretion.

State v. Hodges, 30 Utah 2d 367, 517 P.2d 1322, 1324 (Utah 1974) (footnote omitted).

Defendants have failed to show any clear abuse of the trial court's discretion. The trial court and counsel both questioned the juror. The juror indicated the fact of Fletcher's conviction had no impact on her deliberations and was not discussed with the other jury members. Furthermore, the trial court adequately instructed the jury to only consider the evidence introduced at trial. The denial of defendants' motion for a mistrial is affirmed.

The jury verdict on all counts is affirmed.

I CONCUR: Richard C. Davidson, Judge.

Dissent by: ORME (In Part)

Dissent

ORME, Judge: (Dissenting in part)

While I otherwise fully concur in the majority opinion, I disagree with the result reached and portions of the analysis in the section entitled "Antitrust and 'Group Boycott'."

As the majority states, there are three elements of the antitrust offense as charged in this case: (1) a contract, combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade; (2) in the form of a group boycott; and (3) with specific intent to eliminate competition. I simply do not believe that these elements have been met. My disagreement [41] [*819] with my colleagues is quite complete. I believe defendants' conduct constituted simple commercial bribery. I believe their conduct can in no way be properly characterized as a group boycott. I believe the evidence shows defendants' intent was strictly to line their own pockets and not, in any sense, to eliminate competition.

COMMERCIAL BRIBERY

I do not view Utah's antitrust statute as the appropriate vehicle for bringing commercial bribery charges. In addressing this issue, the trial court properly recognized the Robinson-Patman Act as the vehicle under which federal commercial bribery charges are typically brought. [1] The court interpreted the Legislature's failure to incorporate a Robinson-Patman Act as evidencing an intent to make Utah's antitrust statute the appropriate vehicle for charging commercial bribery. I believe the fairer interpretation is that the Legislature deliberately failed to incorporate the Robinson-Patman-type act into our antitrust statute because it recognized that Utah already has a specific vehicle for prosecuting commercial bribery, namely the commercial bribery statute. Utah Code Ann. § 76-6-508 (1978).

[42] Even assuming that commercial bribery is properly charged under the Utah antitrust statute, the majority concedes the bribery must be coupled with other acts intended to restrain trade in order to establish a violation.

---

[1] Section 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.A. § 13(c) (1973), expressly makes accepting a "commission" without performing real work in connection with a sale of goods illegal under federal law.

While the majority recognizes the principle that commercial bribery, without more, does not violate the antitrust laws, it only offers Fletcher's unilateral refusal to accept proposals from other security companies as the "more" which is necessary to turn an otherwise garden-variety bribe into an antitrust violation. However, any agreement to deal exclusively with one party necessarily involves a refusal to deal with other parties. See, e.g., Construction Aggregate Trans. v. Florida Rock Ind. Inc., 710 F.2d 752, 776 (11th Cir. 1983) (every exclusive dealing arrangement necessarily involves the exclusion of an entity which operates on the same market level). At least absent evidence of other illegal conduct, the defendants' payment of bribes did not constitute a contract, combination, or conspiracy in violation of the antitrust statute. Fletcher's refusal to engage the services of defendants' competitors was merely the bargained for object of the bribes in question. Under [43] the majority's view -- notwithstanding the claim that more than a typical commercial bribe is required -- essentially every commercial bribe would be an antitrust violation if only the payee performed his or her end of the bargain.

GROUP BOYCOTT

As the majority observes, under § 76-10-920 of the Utah Antitrust Act, only four specific antitrust violations, "clearly labeled as per se violations of the Sherman Act," are criminal offenses in Utah. Defendants in this case were charged with having committed only one such violation, namely a group boycott. As the majority states, the Legislature intended that federal interpretations be considered in construing the Utah statute where appropriate. However, unlike the Sherman Act, the Utah statute was designed to unambiguously define antitrust violations which will give rise to criminal sanctions in this state. See Dibble & Jardine, The Utah Antitrust Act of 1979: Getting Into the State Antitrust Business, 1980 Utah L. Rev. 73, 83. The majority concedes that the agreement between defendants and Fletcher did not constitute a classic group boycott under the federal definition and that "unless defendants' conduct was in the form [44] of a group boycott, it was not criminal under Utah law."

Notwithstanding the specific language of the statute dictating the use of federal interpretations and the objective of clearly delineating proscribed conduct, the majority suggests that the Utah statute rejects the traditional federal definition of the [*820] term "group boycott" in favor of the "general definition of boycott." [2] This concept, according to the majority, refers to "a method of pressuring a party with whom one has a dispute by withholding, or enlisting others to withhold, patronage or services from the target." [3] Even under this definition, it is difficult to imagine how the behavior of these defendants constitutes any kind of boycott with antitrust implications. Fletcher accepted bribes from the defendants in this case so that they would receive the UP & L security contracts. There was no dispute, no pressure, no enlistment of others to withhold services, and no target for elimination. It is clear to me that even if the Legislature meant to have the term "group boycott" construed in a less rigid way than might characterize the traditional federal view, it nonetheless intended to have the term mean something reasonably [45] concrete. Minimally, the behavior sought to be proscribed by the statute is behavior which can fairly be described as a group boycott.

In my view, what defendants did cannot [46] be characterized as a group boycott in any sense. Defendants' excursion into the realm of antitrust was, at most, in the form of an exclusive dealing arrangement. An exclusive dealing arrangement is a contract which involves a commitment by a buyer to deal only with a particular seller. L. Sullivan, Handbook of the Law of Antitrust 471 (1977). However, such an arrangement does not constitute a per se violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, see, e.g., Twin City Sportservice, Inc. v. Charles O. Finley & Co., 676

---

[2] The majority relies on federal cases rejecting the "numerosity" requirement of group boycott for the view that something less is now needed to constitute a group boycott. While it is true that these cases have dropped the "numerosity" requirement, i.e., concern about the number of conspirators in a horizontal relationship, they nonetheless still require the other elements of a group boycott: concerted refusal to deal, enlistment of others, and a target. See, e.g., Com-Tel, Inc. v. DuKane Corp., 669 F.2d 404, 414 (6th Cir. 1982).

[3] The majority suggests that a boycott under their "general definition" differs from the term group boycott as it evolved under the per se doctrine. Ironically, their definition was taken from one of the landmark cases defining a per se illegal group boycott. The definition extracted from the Supreme Court's opinion was one which the Court offered to explain the term "boycott" in common parlance. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Barry, 438 U.S. 531, 545-46, 57 L. Ed. 2d 932, 98 S. Ct. 2923 (1978).

F.2d 1291, 1304 n.9 (9th Cir. 1982) (explaining Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 81 S. Ct. 623, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1961)), nor does it constitute a violation of § 76-10-920 of the Utah Antitrust Act.

The trial court accurately categorized the arrangement between Fletcher and the defendants in this case as one of "exclusive dealing," while at the same time stating that application of "rule of reason" analysis [4] [47] "would result in an unconstitutional deprivation of defendant's rights to due process of law." [5] The majority likewise [*821] admits that "the rule of reason has no part in the criminal provisions of the Utah Antitrust Act."

[48] The majority, however, largely avoids the implications of this conclusion by minimizing the nature of defendants' behavior and instead emphasizing their perceived state of mind in doing what they did. According to the majority, "the intent of the contract, combination or conspiracy is the deciding element" of criminality. Under this reasoning, even a purely vertical exclusive dealing contract -- which both the majority and the trial court acknowledge is not a "group boycott" in the usual sense -- can be miraculously converted into a group boycott, at least of the Utah variety, by proof of an anticompetitive intent. That is, as the trial court held, "an otherwise legal business decision can become an unlawful group boycott under the Utah Antitrust Act."

The effect of this approach is to render totally ineffectual the Legislature's effort to particularize but four familiar, per se antitrust violations as unlawful under § 76-10-920, so that "both the prosecutor and the community at large" will clearly know "what conduct is criminally proscribed." Dibble & Jardine, The Utah Antitrust Act of 1979: Getting Into the State Antitrust Business, 1980 Utah L. Rev. 73, 83 (emphasis [49] added).

But why else, the logic goes, would the Legislature inject a specific intent requirement into an offense which has historically been though so bad that criminal intent can simply be presumed? It is obvious to me that by coupling an anticompetitive specific intent requirement with the group boycott aspect of § 76-10-920, the Legislature did not mean to obscure the issue of what kinds of behavior were proscribed. Rather, the Legislature meant to avoid the "confusion over the illegality of group boycotts and the governing standards," id., by requiring that a readily identifiable group boycott be accompanied by an actual intent to eliminate competition. See id. The specific intent requirement was added to eliminate "the potentially problematic situation where a group boycott exists but an anticompetitive motive does not." Id. The requirement was not added to allow for a criminal conviction whenever there is an anticompetitive motive regardless of whether there is really a group boycott. I believe by adding a specific intent requirement the Legislature meant to narrow, not expand, the scope of the group boycott crime in this state.

SPECIFIC INTENT

---

[4] Whereas group boycotts are subject to a per se rule of illegality, exclusive dealing arrangements are tested by a "rule of reason" standard. Twin City Sportservice, Inc. v. Charles O. Finley & Co., 676 F.2d at 1302. The focus of this test is to first find a relevant market and then assess whether competition has been foreclosed in a substantial share of the relevant market. Antitrust liability is not imposed without proof of actual harm to competition. The purpose of this test is to determine the anticompetitive "effects" of the exclusive contract, id., rather than the anticompetitive "intent" as required by the Utah statute.

[5] The memorandum decision is reprinted at Note, Criminal Antitrust Action in Utah: State v. Fletcher, 1 B.Y.U. J. Pub. L. 229, 251-55 (1986). The decision was written in the context of a denial of a motion to dismiss. While the decision simply permitted the state to proceed to try its case before a jury, the trial court shared the majority's view that intent is the controlling element of a "group boycott" charge.

> The theme of the cases cited by both parties is that the mere existence of an exclusive vertical contract is not a "group boycott" prohibited by the antitrust laws. However, the State has alleged and should be allowed to prove that the defendants had specific anticompetitive intent. This can not be inferred from the mere existence of an exclusive vertical deal, but by anticompetitive, illegal behavior an otherwise legal business decision can become an unlawful group boycott under the Utah Antitrust Act. The State should have the opportunity to establish that the defendants had a specific intent to eliminate access to the security guard market as the goal of their exclusive dealing and that no legitimate business purpose or result was intended.

Id. at 254-55.

Even if the defendants [50] engaged in conduct which might arguably constitute a group boycott in some broad sense, I do not believe they did so with the specific intent to eliminate competition as required by the statute nor do I agree with the majority that such intent can be inferred from the evidence.

According to the majority, anticompetitive intent "may be inferred from the defendant's conduct and circumstances." The majority points to the fact that the contracts between UP & L and defendants were not competitively bid as is the usual practice in selecting security companies. This leads my colleagues to the conclusion that the intent of these defendants was none other than to eliminate "competition."

If one looks at what defendants did and considers the market in which they did it, [6] it is obvious they had no intent to eliminate competition. The trial court, in instructing the jury, narrowly defined the relevant market in this case as "among vendors of security guard services to Utah Power and Light," notwithstanding the fact that other security guard companies competing for [*822] the UP & L contract were also competing for contracts throughout the state, or even worldwide. However, there was no evidence that the [51] security needs of UP & L were somehow so unique that guard service vendors competing for UP & L's business were necessarily different -- and fewer -- than guard service vendors generally, who of course are able to provide security services for everything from large utilities to retail stores, apartments, warehouses, churches, banks, and so on. Nor was there evidence to show that UP & L was such a major purchaser in the local security service market that failure to secure that contract would necessarily imperil any of defendants' competitors.

While it can perhaps be inferred that the defendants intended [52] to eliminate other security companies from competition for the UP & L contract, it simply cannot be inferred that they intended to eliminate these companies from competition in any meaningful marketplace, which is what the antitrust laws are designed to prevent. "The Sherman Act was enacted to protect competition in the marketplace. It was not designed, and has never been interpreted, to reach all business practices, unfair or otherwise, damaging to individual companies." Cascade Cabinet Co. v. Western Cabinet & Millwork, 710 F.2d 1366, 1374 (9th Cir. 1983). Other security companies were not hindered by defendants in competing for security guard contracts. They were merely deprived of the UP & L contract. While this conduct is certainly not commendable, [7] "the use of unfair means resulting in the substitution of one competitor for another without more does not violate the antitrust laws." Manufacturing Research Corp. v. Greenlee Tool Co., 693 F.2d 1037, 1043 (11th Cir. 1982).

[53] CONCLUSION

Commercial bribery does not criminally violate the Utah antitrust laws. Defendants' conduct does not constitute a group boycott. Even if defendants' conduct can somehow be shoehorned into the "group boycott" pigeonhole, there was no evidence to prove a specific intent to eliminate competition, and the fair inferences point the other way. I would reverse the antitrust convictions and remand for resentencing on the other crimes for which defendants were properly convicted.

---

[6] "An antitrust policy divorced from market considerations would lack any objective benchmarks." Continental T.V. Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 53 n.21, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 (1977). Contrary to the majority's characterization, I have not urged full-blown market analysis of the sort typical when applying the rule of reason. Such analysis is indeed unnecessary where an antitrust violation of the per se variety is at issue. However, I think a cursory peek at the relevant market is instructive in evaluating the likelihood that defendants had as their intent the elimination of competition.

[7] Fortunately, such objectionable conduct is readily punished under our commercial bribery statute. Where the conduct is especially egregious, it can also, as in this case, be reached under the racketeering statute. Defendants did a bad thing and they should suffer the consequences. Their punishment, however, should be for the crimes they committed, not those they might have committed had the Legislature chosen a different approach to antitrust criminality.

LexisNexis®

United States Football League v. National Football League

United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit

June 22, 1987, Argued ; March 10, 1988, Decided

Docket Nos. 87-7137, 87-7271

Reporter

842 F.2d 1335 *; 1988 U.S. App. LEXIS 19313 ; 1988-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,930

UNITED STATES FOOTBALL LEAGUE, ARIZONA OUTLAWS, BALTIMORE STARS FOOTBALL ASSOCIATES, BIRMINGHAM STALLIONS, LTD., CHICAGO USFL LIMITED PARTNERSHIP, CHICAGO FOOTBALL FRANCHISE LIMITED PARTNERSHIP, DENVER GOLD SPORTS, INC., HOUSTON GAMBLERS LTD., IMI EXPRESS, INC., JAX PROFESSIONALS, INC., LAEFC, LTD., MEMPHIS SHOWBOATS, LTD., FOOTBALL GENERALS, INC., BAY AREA FOOTBALL PARTNERS LTD., BREAKERS LIMITED PARTNERSHIP, SOUTH TEXAS SPORTS, INC., and ORLANDO FOOTBALL PARTNERS, INC., Plaintiffs-Appellants, Cross-Appellees, v. NATIONAL FOOTBALL LEAGUE, THE FIVE SMITHS, INC., INDIANAPOLIS COLTS, INC., BUFFALO BILLS, INC., CHICAGO BEARS FOOTBALL CLUB, INC., CINCINNATI BENGALS, INC., CLEVELAND BROWNS, INC., DALLAS COWBOYS FOOTBALL CLUB, INC., ROCKY MOUNTAIN EMPIRE SPORTS, INC., THE DETROIT LIONS, INC., GREEN BAY PACKERS, INC., HOUSTON OILERS INC., LOS ANGELES RAMS FOOTBALL COMPANY, MINNESOTA VIKINGS FOOTBALL CLUB, INC., NEW ENGLAND PATRIOTS FOOTBALL CLUB, INC., NEW ORLEANS SAINTS LOUISIANA PARTNERSHIP, NEW YORK FOOTBALL GIANTS, INC., NEW YORK JETS FOOTBALL CLUB INC., THE PHILADELPHIA EAGLES FOOTBALL CLUB, PITTSBURGH STEELERS SPORTS, INC., ST. LOUIS FOOTBALL CARDINALS CO., CHARGERS FOOTBALL COMPANY, SAN FRANCISCO FORTY-NINERS, LTD., TAMPA BAY AREA NFL FOOTBALL, INC., PRO-FOOTBALL INC., KANSAS CITY CHIEFS FOOTBALL CLUB, INC., MIAMI DOLPHINS, LTD., SEATTLE PROFESSIONAL FOOTBALL and ALVIN R. ROZELLE, individually and as Commissioner of the National Football League, Defendants-Appellees, Cross-Appellants

Subsequent History: [1] March 28, 1988, Amended

Prior History: Appeal from a judgment of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York (Peter K. Leisure, Judge), entered after a jury trial, finding that defendants had unlawfully monopolized major-league professional football in the United States and awarding plaintiffs $ 1.00 in damages to be trebled; from an order denying plaintiffs' motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict on their other antitrust claims, and for a new trial on damages on the monopolization of professional football claim, or in the alternative for a new trial; and from a judgment denying plaintiffs' request for injunctive relief. Defendants have filed a conditional cross-appeal.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

network, television, league, broadcasting, teams, submarket, games, rights, contracts, professional football, damages, antitrust, merger, season, football, monopolization, franchise, players, district court, dilution, Sports, spring, monopoly power, competitors, markets, instructions, unambiguous, cable, relevant market, anti trust law

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > Football

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Communications Law > Federal Acts > Sports Broadcasting Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > Sports Broadcasting Act

HN1[] Sports, Football

See the Sports Broadcasting Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1291.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > Football

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Communications Law > Federal Acts > Sports Broadcasting Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > Sports Broadcasting Act

HN2[] Sports, Football

The statutory language of the Sports Broadcasting Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1291, neither states nor implies that the antitrust exemption limits a football league to a contract with only one network.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN3[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Monopolization is the willful acquisition or maintenance of monopoly power. The willfulness element certainly requires proof of intent. Proof of effect is required by definition alone to satisfy the acquisition or maintenance requirement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN4[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Unlike a per se price-fixing case, a rule-of-reason case requires the fact finder to balance the procompetitive and anticompetitive effects of any restraint.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN5[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

An anticompetitive effect must be shown to make out a rule-of-reason violation under § 1 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN6[] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

A firm with lawful monopoly power has no general duty to help its competitors, whether by holding a price umbrella over their heads or by otherwise pulling its competitive punches. A monopolist may not, of course, use its market power, whether obtained lawfully or not, to prevent or impede competition in the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN7[] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Setting a high price may be a use of monopoly power, but it is not in itself anticompetitive.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Jury Instructions > General Overview

HN8[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

An unambiguous evidence instruction regarding the power to control prices or to exclude competition is appropriate where market share data for the relevant market is lacking. Absent market share data, definite evidence of monopoly power is needed lest profitability alone provide a basis for antitrust liability.

Civil Procedure > Attorneys > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Jury Instructions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Jury Instructions > Objections

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions > Preservation for Review

HN9[] Civil Procedure, Attorneys

Counsel must state to a district court distinctly the matter objected to in a jury instruction and the grounds of objection.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions > Preservation for Review

HN10[] Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions, Preservation for Review

A party's failure to bring alleged inconsistencies in the verdict sheet to the court's attention before the jury has been discharged waives the right to have the alleged inconsistencies remedied by a new trial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN11[] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

An inquiry into consumer preference is obviously relevant to a determination of whether a monopolist has engaged in predatory conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Jury Instructions > General Overview

HN12[] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

The requirement that the defendant control access to the facility is established in the caselaw and is necessary because an essential-facilities claim must be brought against the party that can provide access to the facility.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

HN13[] Price Discrimination, Defenses

A plaintiff's own anticompetitive conduct generally cannot be raised as a defense to liability in an antitrust action. The defense may be available, however, when the plaintiff was present at the creation and had a complete and continuing involvement in the monopolization scheme.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Jurors > Misconduct

Evidence > ... > Competency > Jurors > General Overview

Evidence > Admissibility > Procedural Matters > Rulings on Evidence

HN14[] Jurors, Misconduct

Fed. R. Evid. 606(b) prohibits the use of extrajudicial statements by jurors to impeach a verdict.

Evidence > Admissibility > Conduct Evidence > Prior Acts, Crimes & Wrongs

HN15[] Conduct Evidence, Prior Acts, Crimes & Wrongs

Evidence of a prior antitrust judgment is irrelevant unless plaintiff introduces evidence that the practices complained of in the prior case had an injurious effect upon the plaintiff.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > General Overview

Evidence > Admissibility > Conduct Evidence > Habit & Routine Practices

HN16[] Regulated Industries, Sports

Under Fed. R. Evid. 406, testimony as to three or four episodes over a 20-year period is hardly sufficient to conclude that a pattern of behavior exists with respect to conduct at issue.

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Examination > General Overview

HN17[] Testimony, Examination

There is no abuse of discretion in refusing to permit the cross-examination of a witness that would lead to a mini-trial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Education Law > Faculty & Staff > Freedom of Speech > Freedom to Petition

HN18[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Legislative lobbying efforts cannot of course be the basis of antitrust liability.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN19[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Efforts to persuade government officials simply by appealing to their political interests have Noerr-Pennington protection.

Evidence > Relevance > Exclusion of Relevant Evidence > Confusion, Prejudice & Waste of Time

Evidence > Types of Evidence > Documentary Evidence > Completeness

HN20[] Exclusion of Relevant Evidence, Confusion, Prejudice & Waste of Time

The doctrine of completeness, under Fed. R. Evid. 106, does not compel admission of otherwise inadmissible hearsay evidence.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Jury Instructions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

HN21[] Clayton Act, Claims

To recover treble damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, an antitrust plaintiff must prove that its injury was, in fact, caused by the defendant's violation of the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Torts > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > General Overview

HN22[] Private Actions, Remedies

Once proof of injury causation has been established, courts have allowed antitrust plaintiffs considerable latitude in proving the amount of damages. Proof of the amount of damages thus need not conform to a particular theory or model. An antitrust plaintiff must thus provide only sufficient evidence to support a just and reasonable estimate of damages.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN23[] Private Actions, Remedies

Where damages have been shown to be attributable to the defendant's wrongful conduct, but are uncertain in amount, the defendant bears the risk of those uncertainties.

Counsel: Harvey D. Myerson, New York, New York (Lloyd S. Clareman, Arthur H. Ruegger, Mark E. Segall, Daniel J. Cooper, Douglas R. Pappas, Finley, Kumble, Wagner, Heine, Underberg, Manley, Myerson & Casey, New York, New York, of Counsel), for Plaintiffs-Appellants, Cross-Appellees.

Frank Rothman, Los Angeles, California, and Robert B. Fiske, Jr., New York, New York (William H. Mulligan, Barry H. Garfinkel, Shepard Goldfein, Douglas B. Adler, Seth B. Schafler, Michael [2] H. Roffer, Deborah A. Garza, Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom, New York, New York, L. Gordon Harriss, Robert M. Buschmann, Davis Polk & Wardwell, New York, New York, John Vanderstar, Paul J. Tagliabue, L. Jeffrey Pash, Covington & Burling, Washington, District of Columbia, of Counsel), for Defendants-Appellees, Cross-Appellants.

Judges: Cardamone, Pierce and Winter, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: WINTER

Opinion

[*1340] WINTER, Circuit Judge:

This appeal follows a highly publicized trial and jury verdict of $ 1.00. The plaintiff is a now-defunct professional football league that began play in this decade; the defendant is a football league founded nearly seventy years ago. The older of the two leagues, the National Football League, is a highly successful entertainment product. So many Americans watched NFL games between 1982 and 1986 that its twenty-eight teams shared $ 2.1 billion in rights fees from the three major television networks, and perhaps as much as $ 1 billion in gate receipts. The newer league, the United States Football League, began play in March 1983 with twelve teams and network and cable television contracts with the American Broadcasting Company ("ABC") and [3] the Entertainment and Sports Programming Network ("ESPN"). After three seasons and losses in the neighborhood of $ 200 million, the USFL played its last game in July 1985. Meanwhile, in October, 1984, blaming its older competitor for its difficulties, the USFL instituted this litigation. Plans to play in the fall of 1986 were abandoned after the jury's verdict that is the principal subject of this appeal.

The USFL and certain of its member clubs [1] [4] brought this suit in the Southern District of New York against the NFL, its [*1341] commissioner, Alvin R. "Pete" Rozelle, and twenty-seven of its twenty-eight member clubs. [2] Seeking damages of $ 1.701 billion [3] and appropriate injunctive relief, the USFL alleged that the NFL violated Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2 (1982), and the common law. Forty-eight days of trial before Judge Leisure produced a trial transcript of nearly 7100 pages and thousands of additional pages in exhibits.

After five days of deliberations, the jury found that the NFL had willfully acquired or maintained monopoly power in a market consisting of major-league professional football in the United States. The jury also found that the NFL's unlawful monopolization of professional football had injured the USFL. [4] The jury awarded the USFL only $ 1.00 in damages, however, an amount that, even when trebled, was no consolation for the USFL.

[5] The jury rejected the remainder of the USFL's claims. It found that the NFL had neither monopolized a relevant television submarket nor attempted to do so; that the NFL did not commit any overt act in furtherance of a conspiracy to monopolize; that the NFL did not engage in a conspiracy in restraint of trade; that the NFL's television contracts were not unreasonable restraints of trade; that the NFL did not control access to the three major television networks; and that the NFL did not interfere either with the USFL's ability to obtain a fall television contract or with its spring television contracts. The USFL's common law claims were also rejected.

Judge Leisure denied the USFL's motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict on its claims of monopolization of the television submarket, attempted monopolization, unreasonable restraint of trade by means of the network television contracts and essential facilities, and for a new trial on damages on the monopolization of professional football claim, or in the alternative for a new trial. United States Football League v. National Football League, 644 F. Supp. 1040 (S.D.N.Y. 1986) ("Opinion No. 16 "). The [6] district court also denied the USFL's request for injunctive relief.

On this appeal, the USFL claims that a "litany of erroneous opinions, rulings and instructions" by Judge Leisure resulted in a "verdict of confusion" that "sent one of the most egregious violators in the history of the federal antitrust laws on its way with a pat on the back." USFL Br. at 3-4. Specifically, the USFL contends that the NFL could not legally enter into a pooled-rights agreement with all three networks; that Judge Leisure's jury instructions "destroyed" the effectiveness of the USFL's proof of its television claims and set improperly high standards of liability; that he improperly allowed the NFL to introduce evidence that the USFL was mismanaged; that he

---

[1] The Tampa Bay franchise withdrew as a plaintiff at the time of the filing of the First Amended Complaint. The Arizona Outlaws have withdrawn their appeal.

[2] The Los Angeles Raiders, Ltd., were not named as defendants in this action.

[3] The complaint requested that "the Court award the plaintiffs threefold the amount of actual damages, not less than $ 440,000,000 in the aggregate ($ 1,320,000,000 when trebled)"; in the joint pretrial order, plaintiffs sought "threefold the amount of actual damages in excess of $ 567,000,000 in the aggregate (in excess of $ 1,700,000,000 when trebled)."

[4] NFL Commissioner Rozelle was not found personally liable on the USFL's monopolization claim.

excluded other evidence critical to establishing the USFL's claims; and that his incorrect rulings and instructions on damages prevented the USFL from receiving appropriate relief. We affirm.

SUMMARY

We briefly summarize our principal rulings. The jury's finding of illegal monopolization of a market of major-league professional football was based upon evidence of NFL attempts to co-opt USFL owners, an NFL Supplemental Draft of USFL players, [7] an NFL roster increase, and NFL conduct directed at particular USFL franchises. These activities, however, were hardly of sufficient impact to support a large damages verdict or to justify sweeping injunctive relief. For that reason, the USFL candidly admits that "at the heart of this case" are its claims that the NFL, by contracting [*1342] with the three major networks and by acting coercively toward them, prevented the USFL from acquiring a network television contract indispensable to its survival. The jury expressly rejected the television claims.

The jury was clearly entitled by the evidence to find that the NFL's fall contracts with the three networks were not an anticompetitive barrier to the USFL's bidding against the NFL to acquire a network contract. Moreover, there was ample evidence that the USFL failed because it did not make the painstaking investment and patient efforts that bring credibility, stability and public recognition to a sports league. In particular, there was evidence that the USFL abandoned its original strategy of patiently building up fan loyalty and public recognition by playing in the spring. The original plan to contain costs by adherence to [8] team salary guidelines was discarded from the start. Faced with rising costs and some new team owners impatient for immediate parity with the NFL, the idea of spring play itself was abandoned even though network and cable contracts were available. Plans for a fall season were therefore announced, thereby making 1985 spring play a "lame-duck" season. These actions were taken in the hope of forcing a merger with the NFL through the threat of competition and this litigation. The merger strategy, however, required that USFL franchises move out of large television markets and into likely NFL expansion cities. Because these moves further eroded fan loyalty and reduced the value of USFL games to television, the USFL thereby ended by its own hand any chance of a network contract.

Notwithstanding the jury's evident conclusions that the USFL's product was not appealing largely for reasons of the USFL's own doing and that the networks chose freely not to purchase it, the USFL asks us to grant sweeping injunctive relief that will reward its impatience and self-destructive conduct with a fall network contract. It thus seeks through court decree the success it failed to achieve among football [9] fans. Absent a showing of some unlawful harm to competition, we cannot prevent a network from showing NFL games, in the hope that the network and fans will turn to the USFL. The Sherman Act does not outlaw an industry structure simply because it prevents competitors from achieving immediate parity. This is particularly so in the case of major-league professional football because Congress authorized a merger of the two leagues existing in 1966 and thus created the industry structure in question.

THE TRIAL

1. The Parties' Contentions

The USFL contended at trial that the NFL maintained a monopoly in the market for major league professional football and in a submarket for the network broadcasting rights to such football by the following allegedly predatory tactics:

a. Signing multiyear contracts with the three major television networks;

b. Pressuring the major networks to abstain from televising USFL games in the spring or fall, and successfully preventing any network telecasts of the USFL in the fall, by threatening not to renew NFL contracts or by assigning unattractive NFL games under existing contracts;

c. Establishing contracts with the networks for artifically [10] high rights fees that, because of the so-called "dilution effect" on demand for advertising during NFL games, precluded network broadcasts of the USFL;

d. Seeking to prevent any of the three major networks from signing a contract for the USFL's initial 1983 spring playing season;

e. Rotating the Super Bowl among the three networks and not submitting the Super Bowl, playoff and even regular-season television rights to competitive bidding;

f. Pursuing a strategy outlined in the so-called "Porter Presentation" to "conquer" and bankrupt the USFL, including: co-opting powerful USFL owners, such as Donald Trump and Alfred Taubman, by offering them [*1343] NFL franchises; encouraging ABC not to continue USFL broadcasts; pressuring ABC by giving it an unattractive schedule for its Monday Night Football program in 1984; targeting important USFL players for signing with the NFL through means such as the NFL's Supplemental Draft and expanded roster; and attempting to bankrupt the weakest USFL teams by driving up USFL player salaries in order to diminish the USFL's size and credibility;

g. Collaborating with the City of Oakland to destroy the Oakland Invaders of the USFL in [11] order to hurt the credibility and image of the Invaders and the entire USFL;

h. Threatening to move an existing NFL franchise or to create a new NFL franchise solely to injure the USFL franchise in Oakland; and

i. Attempting to preclude the USFL's New Jersey Generals from moving to New York City.

The NFL contended that the relevant television submarket included entertainment broadcasting generally and that it had not monopolized either the market for major league professional football or the television submarket because:

a. Its contracts with the three major networks were not exclusionary;

b. The USFL's failure to secure a fall network contract was the result of the independent judgment of each network that the USFL was an inferior product, and of the USFL's self-destructive strategy of forcing a merger with the NFL;

c. It never pressured a network by threatening non-renewal or by assigning a schedule of unattractive games;

d. It never undertook the strategy outlined in the Porter Presentation;

e. It never sought to injure the USFL's Oakland franchise or to preclude the New Jersey Generals from playing in New York City; and

f. The losses suffered [12] by the USFL were due to its own mismanagement.

2. The History of Major-League Professional Football

The NFL is an unincorporated association presently consisting of twenty-eight independent, for-profit football clubs. It was founded in 1920 in a Canton, Ohio Hupmobile showroom under the name American Professional Football Association. In 1922, it changed its name to the National Football League. The original teams were the Akron Pros, the Canton Bulldogs, the Cleveland Indians, the Dayton Triangles, the Decatur Staleys, the Hammond Pros, the Massillon Tigers, the Muncie Flyers, the Rock Island Independents and the Rochester Jeffersons, although Massillon and Muncie never played any games. By 1926, the NFL had grown to twenty-two franchises. By 1931, it had shrunk back to ten. The first championship game was not played until 1933. The first NFL draft of college players took place in 1935. All NFL teams played the same number of games for the first time in 1936. As late as 1952, NFL teams encountered bankruptcy. Indeed, NFL Commissioner Rozelle once testified that "41 franchises failed in the first 41 years of the League's existence." Transcript of Proceedings [13] at 55, United States v. National Football League, No. 12808 (E.D. Pa. July 27, 1961).

A competing league, the All-America Football Conference ("AAFC"), was organized in 1945 and operated for four seasons with teams in Brooklyn, Buffalo, Chicago, Cleveland, Los Angeles, Miami, New York and San Francisco. American Football League v. National Football League, 205 F. Supp. 60, 65 (D. Md. 1962) ("AFL v. NFL"), aff'd, 323 F.2d 124 (4th Cir. 1963). Baltimore replaced Miami in 1947, and after the 1948 season, the Brooklyn team merged with the New York team. Id. The AAFC ceased operations in 1949 when the Baltimore, Cleveland and San Francisco teams were absorbed by the NFL, raising the number of its teams to thirteen. Id. Shortly thereafter, that number was reduced to twelve, where it remained until 1960. Id. The NFL's twelve teams were [*1344] the Baltimore Colts, Chicago Bears, Chicago (later St. Louis) Cardinals, Cleveland Browns, Detroit Lions, Green Bay Packers, Los Angeles Rams, New York Giants, Philadelphia Eagles, Pittsburgh Steelers, San Francisco Forty-Niners and Washington Redskins. Id. at 62. [14] The Dallas Cowboys, Minnesota Vikings, Atlanta Falcons and

New Orleans Saints were added as expansion teams in 1960, 1961, 1966 and 1967, respectively. Joint Pretrial Order at 14, para. 28.

The American Football League ("AFL") was founded in late 1959 by Lamar Hunt, a scion of a Texas oil family, and began play in the fall of 1960. The demand for professional football was then sufficiently great to enable the AFL to obtain a contract with ABC for the years 1960-63. The new league was fueled in part by the NFL's cautious approach toward expansion; many of the AFL's original owners had unsuccessfully sought NFL franchises, and the majority of the AFL teams were located in cities without an NFL team. See generally AFL v. NFL, 205 F. Supp. at 66-75. The original eight teams were the Boston Patriots, Buffalo Bills, Dallas Texans, Denver Broncos, Houston Oilers, Los Angeles (San Diego after the 1960 season) Chargers, New York Titans, and Oakland Raiders. Id. at 62. The Miami Dolphins joined the AFL in 1960, the Cincinnati Bengals in 1968. Joint Pretrial Order at 14, para. 28. The AFL brought an unsuccessful antitrust suit against the NFL in 1962. [15] See AFL v. NFL, 323 F.2d 124 (4th Cir. 1963), aff'g 205 F. Supp. 60.

In 1966, the NFL and the AFL agreed to merge, largely because the competition for players had sharply increased salaries. Congress exempted this merger from the antitrust laws by legislation discussed infra. The merger became fully effective when a twenty-six-team NFL began play in 1970 with two conferences, the National Football Conference and American Football Conference. The NFL reached its present size of twenty-eight teams when expansion teams began play in Seattle and Tampa in 1976.

In 1974, the World Football League ("WFL") was founded. The WFL lasted for one-and-one-half seasons before disbanding. Its teams were underfinanced and played in mostly smaller markets. The WFL never obtained a television contract with a major network, although its games were televised by a syndicated network. At least one of the league's teams tried unsuccessfully to enter the NFL through litigation. See Mid-South Grizzlies v. National Football League, 720 F.2d 772 (3d Cir. 1983) (rejecting antitrust claim by WFL team denied admission to NFL).

The USFL was founded [16] in May 1982 by David Dixon as a league that would play spring football. The league began play in March 1983 with teams in Birmingham, Boston, Chicago, Denver, Los Angeles, Michigan, New Jersey, Oakland, Philadelphia, Phoenix, Tampa and Washington. In part because of the location of its teams in major television markets, the USFL was able to obtain multimillion dollar network and cable television contracts with ABC and ESPN. Nevertheless, for reasons explored in detail infra, the USFL demonstrated little stability. Over its three seasons of spring football (one of which was a "lame-duck" season commenced after an announced decision to shift to fall play), the USFL clubs played in twenty-two cities, [5] [17] [*1345] and had thirty-nine principal

[5] The USFL teams played in the following cities/states:

1986

1983

1984

1985

(proposed)

Birmingham

Birmingham

Baltimore

Baltimore

Boston

Chicago

Birmingham

owners. [6] None of the majority owners of an original USFL team was a majority owner by 1986 when a planned fall

---

Birmingham

Chicago

Denver

Denver

Jacksonville

Denver

Houston

Houston

Memphis

Los Angeles

Jacksonville

Jacksonville

New Jersey

Michigan

Los Angeles

Los Angeles

Orlando

New Jersey

Memphis

Memphis

Phoenix

Oakland

Michigan

New Jersey

Tampa

Philadelphia

New Jersey

Oakland

Phoenix

New Orleans

Orlando

Tampa

Philadelphia

Phoenix

Washington, D.C.

Phoenix

Portland

schedule was aborted by the $ 1.00 verdict.

Pittsburgh

San Antonio

San Antonio

Tampa

Tampa

Tulsa

Washington, D.C.

[6] The principal owners of USFL teams during 1983-85 were as follows:

Team

1983

1984

1985

Arizona

Jim Joseph

Edward Diethrich

William Tatham, Sr.

Bill Harris

George Allen

[18] [*1346] 3. The NFL's Television Contracts

Baltimore

NA

NA

Myles Tanenbaum

Birmingham

Marvin Warner

Marvin Warner

Marvin Warner *

Boston

George Matthews

NA

NA

Randy Vataha

Chicago

Edward Diethrich

James Hoffman **

Eddie Einhorn

Bill Harris

George Allen

Denver

Ron Blanding

Doug Spedding

Doug Spedding

Houston

NA

Jerry Argovitz

Jerry Argovitz

Jay Lerner

Alvin Lubetkin

Alvin Lubetkin

Jay Roulier

Jay Roulier ***

Jacksonville

NA

Fred Bullard

Fred Bullard

The growth of the NFL was closely related to the growth of television. Beginning in 1951, the Dumont network

---

Los Angeles

Bill Daniels

William Oldenburg ****

Alan Harmon

Memphis

NA

Logan Young

William Dunavent

William Dunavent

Michigan

Alfred Taubman

Alfred Taubman

NA

Max Fisher

Max Fisher

Peter Spivak

New Jersey

J. Walter

Donald Trump

Donald Trump

Duncan

New Orleans

NA

Joseph Canizaro

NA

Oakland

Tad Taube

Tad Taube

Alfred Taubman

Tad Taube

Oklahoma

NA

William Tatham, Sr.

NA

Orlando

NA

NA

televised five regular season games (twelve by 1954), as well as the championship game each year. In the mid-

---

Donald Dizney

Jim English

John Day

Phila.

Myles

Myles Tanenbaum

NA

Tanenbaum

Pittsburgh

NA

Edward J.

NA

DeBartolo, Sr.

Portland

NA

NA

Joseph Canizaro

San Antonio

NA

Clinton Manges

Clinton Manges

Tampa Bay

John Bassett

John Bassett

John Bassett

Steve Arky

Steve Arky

Steve Arky

Washington

Berl Bernhard

Berl Bernhard

NA

Bob Linowes

Bob Linowes

1950's, the Columbia Broadcasting System ("CBS") began broadcasting certain NFL regular season games for $ 1.8 million per year, and the National Broadcasting Company ("NBC") acquired the right to televise the NFL championship game. The broadcast rights to games were controlled by individual teams during the 1950's, however.

* Mr. Warner surrendered his interest in the Birmingham franchise in April, 1985.

In 1961, the NFL teams agreed to sell their collective television rights as a single package and to share broadcast revenues equally among all franchises. This decision was in response to arguments by Commissioner Rozelle that the league's competitive balance on the field would eventually be destroyed if teams in major television markets continued to sell their broadcast rights individually. In the long run, he believed, great differentials in television revenues among teams would lead to a competitive imbalance that would diminish the overall attractiveness of the NFL's product. See [19] Transcript of Proceedings at 67-68, United States v. National Football League, No. 12808 (E.D. Pa. July 27, 1961) (testimony of Commissioner Rozelle); see also United States Football League v. National Football League, 634 F. Supp. 1155, 1161 & n.2 (S.D.N.Y. 1986) ("Opinion No. 2"). Rozelle's arguments were bolstered by the policy of the recently organized AFL to pool television rights and revenues in its first broadcast contract with ABC.

Before the NFL could enter a pooled-rights television contract, however, it had to overcome several legal obstacles. An earlier attempt by the NFL to control the sale of television rights by its teams had been deemed a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act in United States v. National Football League, 116 F. Supp. 319 (E.D. Pa. 1953). In that case, the government sought to enjoin the enforcement of Article X of the NFL's by-laws, which regulated the broadcast of distant games into the home territories of other teams. [7] Applying Rule-of-Reason analysis, Judge Grim held that the restriction on the broadcast of outside games when home teams were playing away was an impermissible restraint of trade. [20] Id. at 327. The Final Judgment provided that:

> The defendants are jointly and severally . . . enjoined . . . from directly or indirectly entering into . . . any contract, agreement or understanding with the league defendant or any member club of the league defendant, . . . having the purpose or effect of restricting the areas within which broadcasts or telecasts of games . . . may be made.

United States v. National Football League, No. 12808, Final Judgment § V (E.D. Pa. Dec. 28, 1953), quoted in Opinion No. 2, 634 F. Supp. at 1159.

[21] In 1961, the NFL brought a pooled-rights agreement with CBS before Judge Grim for a determination as to whether the [*1347] agreement violated the 1953 Final Judgment. This contract provided that CBS would have the "right to determine, entirely within its own discretion . . . which games shall be televised and where such games be televised." United States v. National Football League, 196 F. Supp. 445, 447 (E.D. Pa. 1961). Judge Grim held that CBS's authority to determine when and where games would be broadcast violated Section V of the Final Judgment. Id. A subsequent motion by the NFL for a modification or suspension of the Final Judgment was denied. Judge Grim accordingly enjoined the execution and performance of the pooled-rights contract between the NFL and CBS, and further enjoined the NFL from entering into "any other contract and agreement having similar purpose or

---

 Dr. Hoffman surrendered his interest in the Chicago franchise in January, 1984. Thereafter, it was operated by a corporation, CPHFC, Inc., until July 2, 1984, when a new franchise for Chicago was granted to Edjer Corp.

 Mr. Roulier became a principal owner in June, 1984, replacing Mr. Lerner.

* Mr. Oldenburg surrendered his interest in the Los Angeles franchise in June, 1984. The franchise was operated by a USFL corporation for the balance of the 1984 season. In November, 1984, a new franchise for the Los Angeles area was acquired by LAEFC, Ltd., a Colorado limited partnership. From November 1984 until January 30, 1985, Jay Roulier owned the stock of Express Football Club, Inc., the general partner of LAEFC, Ltd. As of January 30, 1985, the stock of Express Football Club, Inc. was acquired by USFL Holdings, Inc., the stock of which is wholly owned by the USFL.

[7] Article X provided that "no club shall cause or permit a game in which it is engaged, to be telecast or broadcast into any area included within the home territory of any other club, without the consent of such other club" on a day on which the other club was either playing or broadcasting one of its games at home. 116 F. Supp. at 329. The government contended that this provision restricted competition among clubs in the sale of broadcast rights.

effect." United States v. National Football League, No. 12808 (E.D. Pa. July 28, 1961) (order construing 1953 Final Judgment).

Specifically intending to alter Judge Grim's order, see S. Rep. No. 1087, 87th Cong., 1st Sess. 1, reprinted in 1961 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. [22] News 3042, 3042, Congress enacted the Sports Broadcasting Act of 1961, which exempted from the antitrust laws pooled-rights agreements entered into by professional sports leagues. Pub. L. No. 87-331, § 1, 1961 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 822, 75 Stat. 732 (codified as amended at 15 U.S.C. § 1291) (Supp. IV 1986). In order to protect college games from competition with pro football telecasts, the exemption did not apply to the broadcast of professional football games on Friday nights and Saturdays during the college football season. Id. § 2 (codified as amended at 15 U.S.C. § 1293 (1982)).

The first NFL pooled-rights contract was with CBS. For the 1962 and 1963 seasons, CBS was the only network permitted to bid for this contract because it had individual rights contracts running through 1963 with nine teams. The NFL received $ 4,650,000 per season from CBS during these two seasons. For the 1964-65 NFL contract, CBS outbid NBC and ABC with an offer of $ 14,100,000 per season. In 1964, the AFL, which had had a contract with ABC, entered into a five-year, $ 36 million contract with NBC.

In 1966, Congress amended the Sports [23] Broadcasting Act specifically to confer antitrust immunity on the NFL-AFL merger. Pub. L. No. 89-800, § 6(b)(1), 80 Stat. 1515 (codified as amended at 15 U.S.C. § 1291). At the same time, the restriction on Friday night and Saturday telecasts was expanded to include protection for high school football. Id. § 6(b)(3). In passing this legislation, Congress was plainly informed that, upon consolidation of the two leagues, the NFL would have broadcast contracts with at least two networks. Professional Football League Merger: Hearings on S. 3817 Before Antitrust Subcomm. (Subcomm. No. 5) of the House Comm. on the Judiciary, 89th Cong., 2d Sess. 64, 66, 119 (1966).

In 1970, the NFL entered into a contract with ABC to televise a game nationally on Monday nights. Since then, all three major television networks have broadcast NFL games, [8] and the NFL's annual revenues from television have increased by more than 800 percent. The NFL teams received approximately $ 186 million for the 1970-73 seasons; $ 268 million for the 1974-77 seasons; $ 646 million for the 1978-81 seasons; and $ 2.1 billion over the five-year period 1982-86.

[24] The ABC, CBS and NBC contracts from 1970 onward have given each network rights of first negotiation and first refusal [*1348] to decide whether to continue its NFL contract for subsequent years. The NFL's 1982-86 contracts were nonexclusive and did not forbid a network from televising another football league's games at any time when it was not broadcasting NFL games. NBC was thus legally free to televise to a particular city another league's games on Sunday afternoons directly opposite NFL games on CBS when there was no NFL game scheduled for NBC to be televised to that city. CBS had a similar option. ABC was legally free to televise another league's games all afternoon each Sunday. All three networks were legally free to telecast another league's games in prime time. Because the NFL was forbidden by its network contracts to televise games on cable, cable television contracts were open to a competing league, although such contracts are less lucrative than network contracts. When the NFL's network contracts expired in 1981 and 1986, the networks were free to contract with a competing league's games for all time slots.

The NFL's three-network "tie-up" was a central issue [25] at trial. The USFL claimed that the NFL intentionally set out to tie up the three networks as a means of excluding competitors. In support of its theory, the USFL introduced

---

[8] ABC now televises Monday night games and certain prime-time games. CBS televises National Football Conference ("NFC") games throughout the season, on Thanksgiving Day, and on Saturdays in December. NBC televises American Football Conference ("AFC") games throughout the season, Thanksgiving Day, and on Saturdays in December. Interconference games are televised by the network with the rights to the conference of the visiting team. CBS televises NFC playoff games, and NBC televises AFC playoff games. The first Super Bowl, held in 1967, was broadcast by both CBS and NBC. Since 1967, CBS and NBC have alternated telecasts of the Super Bowl, except that pursuant to its 1982-86 contract with the NFL, ABC televised the Super Bowl played in January 1985. Broadcasting rights to Super Bowl games are not bid for separately but are rotated among the networks.

a memorandum from NFL general counsel Jay Moyer written during the NFL's 1973 network contract negotiations stating that "an open network may well be an open invitation to formation of a new league." Commissioner Rozelle testified, however, that in 1970, before contacting ABC and signing the Monday night football contract with it, he unsuccessfully approached CBS and NBC, both of which already televised NFL games, about their interest in prime-time football. The USFL also emphasized at trial a June 1984 CBS business study suggesting that the fall broadcast of USFL games on Sundays would reduce the network's advertising revenues from NFL games by $ 49 million to $ 53 million over three years. This "dilution effect," the USFL argued, created a $ 50 million barrier to entry by a new league.

The USFL also sought to show that the NFL had placed unlawful pressure on the networks to prevent the broadcast of USFL games. Much of this evidence consisted of statements by USFL representatives and hearsay and speculation [26] by third parties. [9] [27] Officials from the three networks and one cable network testified that the NFL had not exerted any pressure on them regarding the broadcast of USFL games. [10] Several network officials did testify, however, that they feared that televising the USFL in the fall might jeopardize their NFL relationships [11] -- a fear somewhat at odds with the USFL claim that the NFL needed three network contracts to produce the "dilution effect." Executives from all three major networks also testified that by 1986, after the USFL had left several large television markets and was encountering financial and other difficulties, the USFL was not an attractive entertainment product. [12]

[*1349] 4. "Conquering the USFL": Predatory Tactics

[28] The USFL also sought to prove monopolization by the NFL through predatory tactics unrelated to television. It thus introduced a memorandum prepared by NFL labor negotiator Jack Donlan entitled "Spending the USFL dollar," which urged NFL owners to bid for USFL players to drive up USFL costs. The USFL's proof of predatory behavior, however, consisted primarily of allegations concerning the recommendations of the so-called "Porter Presentation," and of the so-called Oakland and New York "conspiracies."

The Porter Presentation was a two-and-one-half hour presentation, entitled USFL v. NFL, by Harvard Business School Professor Michael Porter to sixty-five NFL executives attending a multiday seminar on labor negotiations. Porter's presentation, which was not previewed by anyone in the NFL, set out a strategy for the NFL to "conquer the USFL."

The USFL claimed that the NFL implemented a recommendation of the Porter Presentation by attempting to "co-opt" USFL owners with promises of an NFL franchise. Donald Trump, owner of the USFL's New Jersey Generals, testified that he was offered an NFL franchise by Commissioner Rozelle in exchange for his blocking the USFL's proposed move [29] to the fall and his preventing the league from filing the instant action. Rozelle denied that he

---

[9] USFL Commissioner Harry Usher testified that he was told by Roone Arledge, the president of ABC Sports, that Arledge "had had negative reaction from the NFL for putting the USFL on initially." ABC sportscaster Howard Cosell testified that he was told by Arledge that Commissioner Rozelle was "all over" Arledge because ABC was televising the USFL in the spring. (Arledge testified unequivocally that he had never made such a statement to Cosell.) Jim Spence, a senior vice-president at ABC, testified that he believed that the NFL was "less than enamoured" of the network's dealings with the USFL, although he did not recall that any NFL official had directly expressed any displeasure to him.

[10] For example, Jim Spence, former senior vice-president of ABC Sports; Frederick Pierce, former president of ABC; Roone Arledge, group president of ABC News and Sports, former president of ABC Sports; Neil Pilson, president CBS Sports, executive vice-president of CBS, former president of CBS Sports; Arthur Watson, president of NBC Sports; William Grimes, president of ESPN.

[11] For example, CBS Sports President Neil Pilson testified that he would consider televising the USFL in the fall only if another network was involved. This double exposure would increase the USFL's value and also not leave CBS in a position that would induce the NFL to give the other networks better treatment, including a better schedule of games.

[12] NBC Sports President Watson testified that his network did not conduct a business study concerning the feasibility of broadcasting USFL games on Saturday in the fall because of the network's commitments to other sporting events, including baseball, college basketball, golf, and thoroughbred racing.

made such an offer to Trump. In addition, hearsay testimony by Al Davis, owner of the NFL's Los Angeles Raiders, a team not sued by the USFL, indicated an attempt to co-opt Alfred Taubman of the Michigan Panthers. Taubman, however, denied that he was offered an NFL team.

The USFL also claimed that the NFL followed Professor Porter's recommendation to "dissuade" ABC from continuing its USFL contract. Supporting evidence consisted largely of hearsay introduced to show the state of mind of the networks. The declarants denied making any such statements. Jim Spence of ABC did testify, however, that the NFL informed him that the NFL owners were "not enamored" with the network's USFL contract. Nevertheless, ABC subsequently offered the USFL a four-year, $ 175 million contract for spring football beginning in 1986. The USFL also claimed that the NFL used a method recommended by Porter to pressure ABC by offering it unattractive Monday night games that would and did earn low ratings in 1984. In response, NFL officials testified that the 1984 Monday Night Football schedule was settled [30] before the Porter Presentation, that "weak" teams such as Buffalo and Cincinnati appeared on that schedule fewer times than in prior years, and that any change in ABC's ratings was due to economic conditions that affected the entire sports television marketplace.

Finally, the USFL claimed that the NFL followed Porter's recommendations for competing for players. This evidence consisted of the NFL's decision to conduct a supplemental draft of players still under USFL contract in March 1984, an increase in NFL roster size from forty-five to forty-nine, conversations between the Dallas Cowboys and USFL star Herschel Walker, and NFL salary offers to relatively unknown USFL players such as Todd Fowler.

The USFL also contended that the NFL and the City of Oakland conspired to destroy the USFL's Oakland Invaders in return for an NFL promise that Oakland would receive an NFL team. This so-called "Oakland conspiracy" was based on the testimony of Al Davis that he "sensed" that the NFL wanted to "destroy" the Invaders and on Commissioner Rozelle's public statement that Oakland, having lost the Raiders, would be considered for an NFL expansion franchise.

The "New York conspiracy" involved [31] a claim that the NFL and the NFL's New York Jets conspired to mislead New York City and State officials into believing that the Jets were willing to return from New [*1350] Jersey to New York. The purpose of this conspiracy was to block the USFL's New Jersey team from moving to a new domed stadium in New York. Proof of this conspiracy consisted of testimony by Senator Alphonse D'Amato and Vincent Tese, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of the New York State Urban Development Corporation, that Leon Hess, owner of the Jets, had promised to return his team to New York. In addition, Al Davis testified that there was an "understanding" reached at a 1983 NFL owners' meeting to keep a USFL team out of New York. Other participants in this meeting denied any such understanding or agreement.

5. Damages

The USFL's evidence of damages consisted of the testimony of economist Nina Cornell, who sought to estimate the league's losses by two methods. Method A was based on the assumption that the gate and television revenues of an unhindered USFL could be estimated by using the gate receipts and television revenues of the old AFL. Dr. Cornell estimated the USFL's damages under [32] this method at $ 565 million. Method B was based on the June 1984 CBS business study examining the fall broadcast of USFL games. She estimated the USFL's damages under this method at $ 301 million.

Dr. Cornell's damage calculations rested on several other assumptions. First, of course, she assumed that illegal NFL conduct was the cause of the USFL's failure to obtain a network contract. Second, Dr. Cornell assumed that the NFL could lawfully contract with only one network. Third, her calculations attributed the USFL's damages entirely to illegal NFL conduct and not at all to the USFL's own mismanagement.

Finally, she assumed that there would be no increased player costs to the USFL resulting from the shift to fall play and that salaries would remain stable from 1986 to 1992. Tension existed between her assumption of stable salaries and her projections of large increases in USFL revenues as a result of playing in the fall during the 1986 to 1992 seasons. Player salaries had already increased dramatically because of the two leagues' competition for players, even when they were playing in different seasons. No reason was given to expect a stabilization of wages when the leagues [33] would play in the same season and the USFL would have substantially greater revenues to compete for players. Moreover, a cornerstone of the USFL's television claim was that a network contract was essential so that it could compete for quality players, a position that is hardly consistent with stability in player salaries.

6. Management of the USFL

The USFL was conceived and organized in 1981 to play in the spring rather than the fall. Its founders believed that public demand for football was not satisfied by the NFL's and the colleges' fall seasons; that cable television, which could not televise NFL games under the existing NFL-network contracts, would offer unique opportunities for television revenues and exposure; that a spring football league would face limited competition; that there was a sufficient supply of football players for two leagues; and that a spring league could draft college players and put them on the field even before the NFL draft.

The USFL's founders placed a high priority on the fans' perception of the quality of play. They intended to use major stadiums [13] and to hire well-known coaches. [14] [*1351] At the same time, they wanted the league [34] to control costs. For its first season, therefore, the USFL established budget guidelines for player salaries of between $ 1.3 and $ 1.5 million per team.

[35] The USFL's founders did not seek to obtain a television contract for fall play. Before fielding a team, however, the USFL received bids for a spring television contract from ABC and NBC and from two cable networks, ESPN and the Turner Broadcasting System. The league entered a four-year contract with ABC, and a two-year contract with ESPN. The ABC agreement provided for ABC to pay the USFL $ 18 million for the 1983 and 1984 seasons, with options exercisable by ABC at $ 14 million for 1985 and at $ 18 million for 1986. [15] ESPN contracted to televise USFL games for two years at rights fees of $ 4 million for 1983 and $ 7 million for 1984. The USFL began with eight of its twelve teams in the nation's top ten television markets. The ABC contract required the USFL to field teams in the three largest television markets (New York, Los Angeles and Chicago) and in at least four of the five other top-ten television markets in which teams were originally located (Philadelphia, Boston, Detroit, San Francisco/Oakland and Washington).

[36] The USFL's first year of play, 1983, was a mixed success. The league received extensive media exposure when it signed Heisman Trophy winner Herschel Walker to a three-year, $ 3,250,000 contract. The Nielsen television rating for the first week of games was 14.2, a figure comparable to NFL ratings. As the season went on, however, the USFL's television ratings declined; average television ratings for the year were 6.23 on ABC and 3.28 on ESPN. Average attendance for the year was approximately 25,000. Nevertheless, these figures were consistent with the league's and networks' preseason projections.

On the financial side, the picture was not as bright. The USFL lost a total of almost $ 40 million, or an average of $ 3.3 million per team. The league had projected losses of only about $ 2 million per year for each team over the first three years. The unanticipated financial losses were chiefly the result of the failure to stay within the original salary guidelines. Indeed, in a November 1983 letter to other owners, Tad Taube of the Oakland team warned that: "If we are not successful in establishing player [salary] caps I can guarantee you that there will not be a USFL

---

[13] Included were such prominent NFL stadiums as Soldier Field in Chicago (capacity 65,793); the New Orleans Superdome (72,675); Giants Stadium in New Jersey (76,891); the Houston Astrodome (47,965); the Silverdome in metropolitan Detroit (72,675); and RFK Stadium in Washington, D.C. (54,794). Before trial, Judge Leisure granted summary judgment in favor of the NFL on the USFL's stadium-related claims on Noerr-Pennington grounds. United States Football League v. National Football League, 634 F. Supp. 1155, 1179-80 (S.D.N.Y. 1986) ("Opinion No. 4"). This ruling has not been appealed.

[14] A number of the USFL's coaches had coached in the NFL: George Allen (Redskins and Rams); Chuck Fairbanks (Patriots); Frank Kush (Colts); Walt Michaels (Jets); Red Miller (Broncos); and John Ralston (Bills). Several had been successful NFL players: John Hadl, Craig Morton, Jack Pardee and Steve Spurrier.

[15] The ABC agreement provided for additional payments for the telecast of more than twenty USFL games per season as well as for the shifting of daytime telecasts into prime time.

within [37] three years, irrespective of improved revenue [from] television. . . . We have sighted the enemy and they are us!"

The USFL's second year was marked by change. Four teams shifted locations. For example, the owner of the Chicago franchise exchanged that franchise for the Phoenix franchise, taking his winning Chicago coach and players while the original Phoenix team moved to Chicago under a new owner. The league, over the objection of some owners, expanded from twelve teams to eighteen. Five of the original owners left the league. Some of the new owners, notably Donald Trump of the New Jersey Generals, believed that the USFL ought to play in the fall. Thereafter, the issue of when to play became divisive, and several owners came to believe that Trump was trying to bring about a merger with the NFL that would include only some USFL teams. [16]

[38] The NFL introduced extensive evidence designed to prove that the USFL followed Trump's merger strategy, and that this strategy ultimately caused the USFL's downfall. The merger strategy, the NFL argued, involved escalating financial competition for players as a means of putting pressure on NFL expenses, playing in the fall to impair NFL television revenues, shifting USFL franchises out of cities [*1352] where NFL teams played into cities thought to be logical expansion (through merger) cities for the NFL, and, finally, bringing the antitrust litigation now before us.

Throughout the second half of 1983 and early 1984, several USFL owners escalated spending on player salaries. USFL teams, for example, signed established NFL players such as running back Joe Cribbs and defensive back Gary Barbaro. Trump, in particular, signed a number of players who were still under contract with the NFL to future contracts, including superstar Lawrence Taylor of the New York Giants. USFL owners also signed many top players coming out of college, for example, wide receiver Anthony Carter and quarterback Jim Kelly. The USFL's spending on players greatly outpaced its revenues. The owner of [39] the Los Angeles team, for example, committed the team to $ 13.1 million in salaries and bonuses for just one season. He even entered into a multiyear, $ 40 million contract with just one player, Steve Young of Brigham Young University.

By the end of the 1984 season, USFL franchises in two of the top three television markets, Chicago and Los Angeles, had failed, and only four of the original owners remained in the league. The league was not a failure as entertainment, however. Despite a decline in the USFL's television ratings to 5.7 on ABC and 2.8 on ESPN, ABC exercised its option to carry the USFL in the spring of 1985 at $ 14 million and offered a new contract worth $ 175 million for four years in the spring beginning in 1986. ESPN offered a contract worth $ 70 million over three years.

Nevertheless, during an August 1984 owners' meeting, the USFL decided to move to the fall in 1986. This decision was made despite: (i) ABC's warning that such a move would breach its contract for the spring of 1985 and 1986; (ii) the contrary recommendations of a management consulting firm, McKinsey & Company, which the USFL had retained for $ 600,000 to consider the advisability of a fall [40] season; and (iii) the contrary recommendations of the USFL's directors of operations and marketing.

Moreover, Eddie Einhorn, a USFL owner who was to represent the USFL in negotiations to secure a network contract for the fall, warned that moving from large television markets to "merger" cities too quickly might preclude the securing of a network contract. Nevertheless, in the ensuing months, the USFL withdrew from Chicago, Detroit, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Washington, D.C. -- each a large television market with an NFL team -- and moved into Baltimore (which had lost its NFL team in 1984) and Orlando (which had no NFL team). Through mergers, the USFL bolstered franchises in Oakland (which had lost the NFL Raiders to Los Angeles) and Phoenix (which had been discussed as a possible NFL expansion city). The decision to move to the fall damaged the USFL's relations with ABC and ESPN. The former withheld a significant portion of the USFL's rights fees for the 1985 season, while the latter demanded a renegotiation of its proposed 1985-87 USFL contract. The following table reflects the USFL's movement from the top television markets:

---

[16] After a January 1984 USFL owners' meeting, Myles Tanenbaum of the Philadelphia franchise complained that the "'Original' franchise owners" had become outnumbered, and expressed his outrage that "one of the group believes it would be fair or appropriate to simply 'pay off' others in the event there is a potential big hit by way of merger or whatever."

1983	1984	1985	1986 (Proposed)
New York	New York	New York	New York
Los Angeles	Los Angeles	Los Angeles
Chicago	Chicago	San Francisco/ Oakland
Philadelphia	Philadelphia
San Francisco/ Oakland	San Francisco/ Oakland
Boston	Detroit
Detroit	Washington
Washington

[41] In October 1984, the instant litigation was begun. The USFL's 1985 "lame-duck" spring season appears to have been affected adversely by the now publicly announced move to the fall. The league's television ratings declined to 4.1 on ABC and 2.0 on ESPN. By the end of the season, several owners had withdrawn financial support for their teams, and a number of clubs were no longer meeting their payrolls and other bills. The USFL scheduled eight teams for its fall 1986 season, which was ultimately cancelled after the verdict in this case. Only one team (New Jersey), was in a top-ten television market. One other team (Tampa Bay), was in a top-twenty [*1353] market. Three teams were located in Florida (Jacksonville, Orlando and Tampa Bay) but only one was west of the Mississippi River (Phoenix). In three years, USFL teams had left fourteen of the twenty-two cities in which they had played.

7. The Verdict

The jury found the NFL liable on the USFL's claim of actual monopolization, concluding that the older league had willfully acquired or maintained monopoly power in a market consisting of major league professional football in the United States (Question No. 4). The [42] jury also found that the NFL's unlawful monopolization had caused injury to the USFL (Question No. 5). In ruling on the NFL's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict with respect to these findings, the district court held that sufficient evidence existed that the NFL had engaged in predatory conduct. This evidence related to: (1) NFL efforts to co-opt USFL owners and potential owners; (2) the NFL Supplemental Draft of USFL players; (3) the NFL's move to a forty-nine-man roster; and (4) the NFL's activity directed at specific USFL franchises such as the Oakland Invaders. Opinion No. 16, 644 F. Supp. at 1058.

